Boxing.

LUCKNOW BOXING TOURNAMENT.

THE programme for the Lucknow Boxing Tournament, which came to a close on Thursday night, the 22nd November, was not a very formidable one, the bouts being got through on two evenings, but the fighting was of a high standard. The Durham Light Infantry were fortunate in securing two of the three competitions, Bandsmann McGill winning the middle weights and Private Smith the feather weights. The light weights was won by Corporal Strath, Royal Dragoons. Major-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, who takes a keen interest in boxing, officiated as Referee The Judges were Lieutenant R. R. Forbes, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and Mr. D. J. Daly. Lieutenant P. K. Wise, Wiltshire Regiment, was time-keeper, and Sergeant-Major Jones, Gymnastic Staff, was responsible for the arrangements. The following is the result of the night's fighting :—

FEATHER WEIGHTS.

Semi-Finals.—Pte. Smith, 1st Durham L. I. vs. Lce.-Corpl. Deamley, 1st Oxford L. I.—Smith early in the first round got in a smashing left on the jaw, which floored his opponent. Deamley was up in six seconds, but came in for severe punishment and was all but beaten when time was called. In the second round Deamley tried rushing tactics, but Smith was too good for him, and he had to give in before the round closed.

Lce.-Corpl. Yufa, 2nd East Surrey Regiment, vs. Lce.-Corpl. Sheppard, 1st Oxfordshire L. I.—There was any amount of hard hitting in the first round, Sheppard, although quite a novice putting up a splendid fight. In the second round Yufa punished him so severely that he had to retire.

Final.—Smith vs. Yufa.—Smith led for jaw, but Yufa guarded very cleverly. The men clinched, and after the break away some hard hitting followed, Smith finishing up with a damaging blow on the other's jaw. After a minute's fighting in the second round, during which Smith went for his man hammer and tongs, Yufa gave up. Smith was declared the winner.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS.

Semi-finals.—Lce.-Corpl. Church, Royal Scots Fusiliers, vs. Pte. Marshall, Durham L. I.—Marshall was knocked out in the first minute with a hard hit on the body.

Corpl. Strath, Royal Dragoons, vs. Pte. Payne, Somerset L. I.—Strath had the best of the opening round, but in the second both were level. Strath got in more blows than his opponent in the third round, and was given the verdict on points.

Final.—Strath vs. Church.—Church did the leading, but Strath showed a good deal of science in avoiding the blows, and the round ended level. Both men got in some telling blows in the second round. The third round was in Strath's favour, who was declared the winner.

MIDDLE WEIGHTS.

Final.—Bandsman McGill, Durham L. I. vs. Lce.-Corpl. Sunderland, Shropshire L. I.—In the first round McGill was leading on points. He continued to punish his man in the second round, and Sunderland had to retire.

SPECIAL CONTEST.

Pte. Smith, 1st Oxfordshire L. I. vs. Pte. Swires, King's Royal Rifle Corps. Smith won after a very game contest, in which Swires made a good show.

The Story Teller.

COACHING "DOWN UNDER."

RABY WARREN was the driver of the Wee Waa mail coach. Raby was a character out back in the Far West, and his fame had penetrated even unto Sydney. Raby Warren had driven the Wee Waa mail even since the township became important enough to have a delivery on its own account. He was a little man, brimful of determination, and accustomed to have his own way. His face was red and weather-beaten, and his fierce moustache curled and twisted in divers directions, being utterly independent of its owner's control. Not many men could handle a team of horses better than Raby Warren. He drove the team in his own particular way, two horses behind three in front, and he managed them admirably. Raby's horses knew him upon short acquaintance. When he had a fresh horse in his team Raby interviewed it, and explained to the animal that there was only one boss on the road, and that was Raby Warren.

The mail coaches out West are not the most comfortable vehicles of locomotion in existence. They do not possess springs, and consequently the jolting is of a high order, infinitely superior to the mere oscillation of the common or ordinary carriage. Raby Warren, having been jolted about on the box seat of his mail coach for a number of years, felt uneasy when he reached ground. He missed the vibration and the sudden electric shocks caused by the wheels passing over logs and cannoning against stumps. Consequently, when on land he walked with a springy, jerky motion, and had a roll somewhat similar to a sailor. Raby's hands and his pockets were very much attached to each other, and seldom parted company, and there would have been something wanting about his mouth had his old short stumpy pipe not been stuck in one corner and elevated towards his eye. Raby's adventures during the time he was driving the Wee Waa mail were numerous, and he was nothing loth to relate them. A silent man on the box seat of the Wee Waa coach constituted an offence in Raby's eyes. The Wee Waa driver was a conversationalist, and hated silent folk worse than mosquitoes.

Commercial travellers are seldom quiet men, but a certain Jonas Pilkington had earned the undying ill-will of Raby Warren by his persistency in selecting the box seat, and his obstinacy in refusing to converse. Jonas Pilkington had frequent business at Wee Waa, and Raby Warren determined to have his revenge.

"Morning," said Raby as Jones Pilkington settled himself next the driver. "You are the only passenger?"

A grunt from Pilkington sealed his fate. Had he even returned Raby's salutation the driver of the Wee Waa mail would have hoped for better things, and forgiven him.

It had been raining hard, and the track was in bad condition, and the creeks were swollen, and favourable to Raby's plans.

"Bad travelling," said Raby; "a heap of water in the creeks."

"No danger I hope," mumbled Jonas, "you have no business to run the coach if there is any danger."

"I don't run the coach," said Raby. "Them 'osses run it. They fairly revel in running this coach, and I wouldn't offend 'em on any account."

Raby gathered up the reins and proceeded to send his team along. Jonas Pilkington commenced to think either Raby Warren was not sober, or the coach had gone wrong. Every run in the track, every stray log or standing stump the coach appeared to bound over in a marvellous manner. Jonas held his peace, and he also held on to the coach with a firm grip. From time to time Raby took a look at the traveller and smiled as he saw a pained expression upon his face, as though he were having a tooth extracted.

"Anything wrong with the coach," ejaculated Jonas, the words coming separately at decent intervals after each jolt.

"Near hind wheels, and off fore wheel a bit loose," said Raby; "two fresh young horses in, and the old mare's in a nasty temper. Hold hard on Mr. Pilkington and don't attempt to jump off if you feel we're going over. It is much safer to sit still and go with the coach."

"This is abominable," said Jonas, who seemed to have found his tongue, and inclined to use it.

"Wonder they don't put down a blue metal road to Wee Waa," said Raby.

"I mean it is abominable running a coach in this unsafe condition," gassed Jonas.

Raby saw a beautiful jagged stump ahead and made for it. The jolt was terrific. Jonas Pilkington bounded into the air, came down with a dull thud on to the seat again, rolled violently against the iron rail, grasped Raby's arm, and felt stiff, sore, and out of breath.

"Baggage gone," said Baby looking over his shoulder.

Jonas Pilkington saw the leather cases containing his samples deposited in the mire some distance from the coach.

"Sorry I can't leave the 'osses," said Raby, "or I'd get down for it."

"Do you mean to say I must pick these things up myself?" said Jonas.

"That's what it amounts to" said the imperturbable Raby; "I'll give you a hand with them when you get 'em on the wheel."

Jonas Pilkington scrambled down looking black as thunder. As his foot touched the wheel Raby gave the reins a sly jerk, and the horses tugged at the traces. Jonas Pilkington slipped and fell into the soft ground spattering the mud around him.

"You blaguard, you did that on purpose," roared Jonas.

"Speak up," said Raby. "It's a good distance up here," and he proceeded to light his pipe.

Boiling over with rage, Jonas Pilkington picked himself up, and then did likewise to his baggage.

"The other side," said Raby, when Jonas had the heaviest case on the wheel. "I can't reach 'em there."

There was nothing for it but to drag the cases round to the other side of the coach.

"Now then," said Raby as he pulled at the handle, "heave up."

Jonas heaved, then he slipped in the mud, and gave way, and Raby, with an eye to the advantages of the situation, let go his hold.

"That's your fault," he said as he leaned over the side of the coach, and saw Jonas struggling out from under his baggage.

When the baggage was all on the coach again Jonas Pilkington was almost too exhausted to scramble into his seat. He was wet, dirty, and miserable, and in a towering passion. He showered his abuse upon Raby in an eloquent manner.

"Dashed if I thought he had it in him," said Raby admiringly, deciding at the same time to carry on his experiments still further.

He touched up the horses, and they went along at a hand gallop, the coach swaying sideways, and bumping in a most outrageous manner.

"The brutes are running away," groaned Jonas.

"Not all of 'em," said Raby. "That fellow's got the bit between his teeth," he added, pointing to the near side leader with his whip; "and the old mare's beyond control; but if Providence befriends us the other three will check 'em before we've gone many miles."

Jonas Pilkington wished himself safe in Sydney. He was cold and wet, and his teeth chattered, and he felt he was in great danger. The calm look on Raby's face exasperated him.

"You take it coolly," he said.

"Used to it," said Raby. "These 'osses do it often. They're not fairly going yet. Wait another ten minutes."

"There's water ahead," said Jonas Pilkington hoarsely.

"And a flood on," said Raby. "Like as not we'll be upset. Can you swim?"

"No," groand the miserable man.

"That's bad," said Raby. "You see I've got the mails aboard. I'm responsible to Government for 'em, and I'm bound to save them first. When I've picked out the mail bags I'll fish about for you Try and hold on to the coach."

"This is terrible," said Jonas.

"Hold hard," yelled Raby as the horses dashed into the creek.

Jonas Pilkington felt the water splashed all over him, and clung to his seat like a drowning man. The coach lurched, and every part of it creaked and strained. The horses snorted, plunged, and stamped, and Raby shouted at the top of his voice. The roar of the waters through the coach wheels sounded to poor Jonas like the death knell of all his hopes. A final strain and tug, a grating sound, and the coach safely landed on the other side.

"Over Jordan," laughed Raby; and, by way of consolation, added, "Only one of your packages gone."

Jonas Pilkington was too far gone to resent his remark. He merely said in a doleful voice, "Are we safe?"

"There's a chance for us yet," said Raby, "if we can manage to get across Oakey Swamp."

Now the reputation of Oakey Swamp was as great as that of Raby Warren. Many a good horse had been done to death in Oakey Swamp.

"Don't go that way," said Jonas, terrified.

"Must," said Raby. "It's a short cut, and I'm bound to get the mails in to time if I can."

Jonas consigned the mails to a place where stamps and sealing wax are unknown, and gasped out, "I'll give you a note if you'll go round the other way."

"More than my place is worth," said Raby.

"I'll give you two notes," said Jonas.

"Make it three, and I'll chance it," said Raby.

"I will! I will!" said Jonas eagerly.

"Money down," said Raby, who knew his man.

Jonas groaned, and with trembling fingers fumbled in his pocket. He produced three one-pound notes, and handed them to Raby.

"Keep it dark," said Raby as he pocketed the notes. "If the Government knew I had gone round the other way I'd lose my place."

On went the Wee Waa coach carrying the bruised and battered form of Jonas Pilkington, commercial traveller of Sydney, minus one package and his wealth diminished by three pound notes. Wee Waa was reached at last, and Raby Warren pulled up the reeking horses at the door of the Nugget Inn.

"You don't look well, Mr. Pilkington," said the landlord, as he helped him down. Then, as he caught sight of Raby Warren's face, Bob Hare had much ado to keep from laughing. He grasped the situation at once, and, as he looked at the dilapidated form of Jonas Pilkington, he fancied he knew the sort of ride that gentleman had gone through.

"We've had a good trip," said Raby, descending from the box. "One or two narrow escapes, but considering the state of the track we've done very well. Mr. Pilkington has done a heap of talking to-day. Never knew him so friendly before," went on Raby, with a wink at Bob Hare.

"That man's a fiend," said Jonas to the landlord, and he commenced a recital of his grievances to Bob Hare, who had never enjoyed a story so much for weeks.

That night in the snug bar of the Nugget, Raby Warren gave an account of "How I made Jonas talk," to an admiring crowd of Wee Waaites.

Jonas Pilkington, sitting in the next room, heard the bulk of the story, and shook his fist in the direction of the speaker.

"I'll be even with Raby Warren for this," said Jonas to the landlord as he bid him good-night.

"Take my advice and leave Raby alone," said Bob Hare. "There's no telling how far he'll go."

"Will you ask him to be careful on the return trip," said Jonas.

"Yes," said Bob Hare, "but I'd advise you to talk to him."

Jonas Pilkington has never forgotten that drive on the Wee Waa coach, and Raby Warren propounds the opinion that "It's wonderful how a man will talk after he's been shook up a bit."

MAMMOTH STAKES.

"THERE are signs," wrote the racing authority of the London Sportsman a few weeks back, "that their day is nearly over;" and he is frankly of opinion that the Ten Thousand Pound stakes are of little benefit to racing and that their abolition would be productive of no harm. The writer does not give definite reasons for the faith that is in him, but we can find perhaps satisfactory reasons for objection to these great prizes. The Eclipse Stakes, established in 1886, was the first and has been the most successful: in some few years the field has run into double figures as in 1886, 1888, and 1901, while on occasion there has been no race at all; such was the case in 1887 and in 1890; in other years the field has fallen to four, five or six horses; but on such occasions it is only fair to admit that quality atoned for paucity of numbers. This by the way: the conditions of the Eclipse Stakes have no doubt much to do with the greater success it has enjoyed over the two Newmarket "Ten Thousand Pounders." The distance is a mile and a quarter, whereas that of the Princess of Wales' Stakes is a mile and a half, while that of the Jockey Club Stakes is a mile and three-quarters. The system of sub-cription to the Eclipse, moreover, allows the owner, who decides in time not to run his horse, to forfeit on very easy terms. We are inclined to think that the distance 1 mile 2 furlongs, is the great attraction; Mr. Charles Richardson, one of the most capable and discriminating of Turf authorities, has remarked that "when a really high class four-year-old has been entered for the Eclipse or for the Princess of Wales' Stakes he is not, as a rule, trained for the Ascot Cup. There are exceptions to the rule: Isinglass and Persimmon won both these races; but these are exceptions such as prove the rule, and the reason is not far to seek. The Gold Cup is a two and a half miles race and it is only a real stayer that can hope to win it; therefore when the owner has to decide what his horses can run for with the best chances of success he reserves the non-stayer for the shorter race. Thus it happens that very many of the horses which have filled a foremost place in the public eye during the three seasons of their active career, and it is not often that a first class horse is seen on a race course after his five-year-old season, he goes to the stud without having proved his ability to stay over a distance which, as things go nowadays, is quite a severe test of an animal's staying power.

The idea that distance has something to do with the popularity or reverse of a Mammoth Stake receives some colour from the change in the Princess of Wales': this race, established at the same time as the Jockey Club, in 1894, is the longest of the three, being 1½ mile against the 1¼ mile of the Eclipse and Jockey Club Stakes, and the longest has been the first race to show signs of weakness, the value of the Princess of Wales' Stakes having been reduced from £10,000 to £6,000 or the same nominal value as the Derby. We must not, of course, lose sight of the dates upon which the two Newmarket races are run: the Princess of Wales' Stakes is run on the third day of the First July meeting, the height of the racing season, while the Jockey Club Stakes is the big event of the First October meeting, when there are fewer races of sufficient importance to compete with it in the consideration of owners. Still we cannot get away from the question of distance, which would seem to be paramount. It will be within the recollection of our readers that the enterprising management of Sandown Park founded its second mammoth prize in the Century Stakes six years ago. The first and only race was run in 1900 (won by Osbech): there were eight runners: the value of the stake worked out at £8,950—a sufficiently handsome prize one might suppose to tempt owners in April; but the race was not repeated. Should we be wrong in conjecturing that it was not repeated because it was a two-mile race and as such failed to attract owners? We find difficulty in suggesting any other reason.

It is much to be deplored; but we fear there is no getting away from the conviction that long new races cannot be made sufficiently attractive; that it is not worth while trying to win a large stake if the horse be asked to travel over ten furlongs to do it. The Gold Cup at Ascot has the glamour of fashion to attract, or long, we imagine, might its, comparatively, modest trophy be set in the sight of owners; the Derby with its mile and a half—is the Derby; and the St. Leger for all its 1 mile 6 furlongs will, we hope, remain the St. Leger and a race of great desire till, let us say, Puritan faddism has made an end of all racing. Money it would seem, however, will not produce support for a new race unless it be a short one: the feeling of the time is dead against long races whether because horses are too unsound to stand the training for a sustained effort or because it takes too much out of them or because in a word it pays better to train and run for short races, we cannot take upon ourselves to say.

It is much to be regretted, for the great want on the British Turf of the present day is races of a length which provide test of stamina. Practically speaking, the only long races that now exist are those of Ascot where tradition reigns supreme unvexed by questions of gate money, public support or other sordid considerations. If the Mammoth Stake movement had brought about a change in the direction most to be desired; had it succeeded in re-establishing long races by sheer "weight of metal" there would be every reason to desire their increase and multiplication, but experience seems to prove that £10,000 more or less is no sufficient inducement: a circumstance which says much for the wealth behind English racing if it say little for the soundness and stamina of the horses. This being so there does not appear much ground for their threatened disappearance from the programmes altogether.

Inasmuch, however, as horses are always forthcoming for the Ascot Cup and other long races at the Royal Meeting: and these horses could run two miles or more on another course as well as at Ascot, we are tempted to wonder what stake, if any, would be big enough to successfully establish a two miles or two and a half miles race at Sandown or anywhere else. £10,000 will not, as the Century Stakes showed, bring entries for a two-mile event. Would £15,000 do it? or £20,000? We doubt it much. Money is not the most potent factor in English racing, partly because many of its votaries are men rich enough to count their winnings lightly, partly because the traditional importance attached to certain events is so strong. Royal encouragement might contribute to make long races popular, but we confess our inability to see how it is to be applied. "Ten thousand pounds in a lump," as somebody has put it, will not make a long race acceptable, and this being the case we fail to see that the decay of the Mammoth Stake affords food for any regret: it serves no particular purpose that is left unserved by £5,000, £3,000 or any other sum we care to name.

THE CALCUTTA KENNEL CLUB CHAMPIONSHIP SHOW.

THE well got up schedule of the newly formed Calcutta Kennel Club in which they announce their first Show—a "Championship" Show be it noted—is deserving of a special word of praise. It is a pattern of what a dog show prospectus should be, states distinctly the rules and regulations under which the show is held, displays the classes clearly, gives an extract from the rules of the Northern India Kennel Association to which the Calcutta Kennal Club is affiliated, and encloses an entry form which is a model of what such a form should be. And this reminds us to say that all entry forms, when sent in, must be accompanied by an application for registration on forms obtainable from the Honorary Secretary, vide Rules 2, 3 and 4, to which we invite the particular attention of all prospective exhibitors.

There are no less than one hundred and twenty-one classes figured on the list, and as these cover no less than forty-one distinct breeds it is obvious that the promoters of the show are desirous of encouraging everybody and his or her dog, and so keeping well before them the main object for which the Club exists. We have in previous issues referred to the judging which will be entrusted chiefly to one of the acknowledged canine authorities now in the country and one whose experience of judging at Indian dog shows is quite extensive; we will just point out once more that the show will be held in connection with Lady Minto's Fancy Fête on the 6th February and that entries close on the 15th proximo. The rules and regulations tell us other things which it will be as well to bear in mind—one is that "no exhibit will be allowed to be taken away before the show closes, without the sanction of the Committee;" it is to be hoped that unsuccessful exhibitors will cheerfully assist the executive by close observance of this very necessary rule.

Sporting Notes.

DURING the past week some considerable changes have taken place in the betting lists for the big races. For the Viceroy's Cup Fitzgrafton is nominal favourite, being quoted at a shade shorter odds than last year's winner. The appearance of Mallard's name among the second entries for the Trials has perhaps suggested the idea that Mr. Apcar's new horse will be reserved for the longer race, but hitherto he has not shown any very remarkable form on the track. When the horse first arrived in India it was stated that his heart was not quite in the right place and lack of courage is now freely suggested. Munderah has dropped out of the list altogether, but still continues to work on the course in spite of his seeming infirmities. Sinister rumours had been afloat since Saturday last about Signorina and the news now comes of her scratching for the big race, a sad disappointment to her connections. On the other hand Cherson, said to have broken down hopelessly a few weeks ago, is now climbing the lists again. If the horse is as well as he looks, his present quotation for the Trials seems a very fair one. The Master, Saloon, and Sacristan were seen out on Saturday last, as also was Rosanule, in the December Plate. The Master and the last-named had an exercise gallop and gave no indication of Cup form. Mr. Dartmoor's horse, however, put up a fine race with Saloon, although he could not have been ready to run so hard a race. The little country-bred, in receipt of three stone, beat him by a short head, but after the race the chestnut was quickly installed favourite for the Trials, in which event with the advantage of the weights, he should have no difficulty in turning the tables on his opponent. Steinhager, the Irish crack, does not please the critics on the course, but he seems to be going on steadily and cannot as yet be altogether overlooked. Long Tom did not appear at the Second Extra Meeting and is still reported lame, but Ferguson continues to rub the work into him. Sacristan has been backed for the Cup, but his chance in the shorter race seems so bright that he will surely be specially prepared to run the mile. In the uncertainty about Signorina, Blitzen would appear to be his most serious opponent.

The Second Extra Meeting proved a day out for backers, as the favourites rolled home in uninterrupted succession. For the Hurdle Race most of the cracks declined, but a big field faced the starter. Kingpin, ridden by Johnson, was taken out in front at a great pace and driven right on until he compounded at the last hurdle. Advisor, ridden with discretion, then came up and won with considerable ease from Rustler, both of these horses being well backed. In the Pony Race Claribell was a piping hot favourite and won very comfortably. Matin Bell, who ran second, is a beautifully shaped mare and may yet compensate the Maharajah for his recent misfortunes with Bells and Coin II.

After a long wait for the Viceregal party the field for the December Plate went to the post. A number of Cup horses appeared, but Long Tom and Signorina were both absentees. Clear Artist and Rosanule were both somewhat disappointing in appearance, but, on the other hand, Footprint, the Ceylon horse, found many friends. Saloon and Sacristan, however, attracted most attention. The chestnut looked well, but distinctly on the big side. Seeing him in the paddock the public could rely on having a run for their money so that there was plenty of support in the Ring for Mr. Dartmoor's bright little horse. Saloon looked better than ever, but was known to be practically untried since his victories last year. A great race resulted and the lustre of Saloon's win was only dimmed by the general sympathy for Sacristan, who is one of the most popular horses on the course.

Psalm added yet another laurel to the new crown she is weaving for herself this year by winning the Bentinck Plate with consummate ease, and in the Maiden Horse Plate Mr. Apcar's Dea justified public confidence by another easy victory. Carnival, somewhat unexpectedly ran second, while the third place was very much filled. Four or five horses passed the post abreast and the gentleman who was taking the third and fourth horses in the Judges' Box was given a very hard task. Mr. Deakins's green jacket had been prominent all up the straight and Meadow Saffron's nomination was obviously necessary. It is a great pity that the Judges were not content with this, for a most unfortunate contretemps occurred. With a blue jacket in his mind's eye and a programme in his hand, the gentleman concerned named Craigendarrie and up went his number. Robinson, his jockey, was duly weighed out, when some interested parties suggested to the Judges that the prominent blue jacket had really been carried by Santa Maria, and on consideration the Judges consented and ordered Craigendarrie's number to be taken down. This they were fully entitled to do under Rule 118 of the Rules of Racing. But by that time, the bookies, and it is said the totalizator, had begun to pay place dividends, and, further, it transpired that Santa Maria's jockey, although presenting himself under Rule 131, had not been weighed in under Rule 133. This on the reading of the Rules of Racing, was an absolute bar to the placing of the mare. Rule 134 gives the Stewards discretion in certain cases, but none in the event of a jockey not being weighed in, and the ordinary mortal seemed justified in believing that the third place thus belonged to Meadow Saffron alone. The Stewards, however, held a meeting to decide the question and at the end of the day declared Santa Maria entitled to a half share of place money. This decision has been commented upon as establishing a "dangerous precedence." This is a very mild and tender criticism. Owners and the public put down their money in the belief that the Rules of Racing will be enforced strictly and interpreted with competent care and they expect that the discretion of the Stewards will not be exercised blindly, that is to say directly in the face and in contravention of those rules. This is perhaps a matter of small importance, but many a big storm has arisen, one at least is historically recorded, out of a cloud no bigger than a man's hand.

In the Corinthian Plate Ballark started an odds on favourite and punters' money was never in doubt. Mr. Apcar's horse won in great style and will have to be remembered later on in the big handicaps, such as the Macpherson and Cooch Behar Cups.

The agitation about the Stands is slowly simmering down. It might have done so ere this had it not been for ill-advised letters purporting to support the Turf Club, which have appeared in the Press. As a matter of fact a closer consideration seems to disclose the wisdom of the Stewards' arrangements. The Members' lawn, which has been shut off by a barrier, is so narrow and small that its opening up would only result in a most unpleasant crush round the Judges' box and the impeding of the work of the officials themselves, without affording any appreciable relief to the general pressure of a Cup Day crowd. The one serious grievance, the détour required to reach the paddock, has been relieved by the opening of a passage along the rails. The only persons now incommoded in this way by the barrier are the members of the Turf Club themselves who must make a long détour to reach the boxes and betting ring. The jibes launched at the Club by writers with socialistic tendencies fall very flat when it is remembered and observed that elections to the club must obviously be governed by the test question of whether the nominee is a racing man and a straight one withal, rather than whether and where his name appears on the Government House list.

There is one trouble, however, which seems a very real one, and that is the lack of an enclosure or rather reserved seats for European ladies in the outer Stand. If some of the Stewards will watch the happenings in that part of the stand during Saturday's races, they will marvel that they have not yet observed what a crying need this is.

We have a small suggestion to make. When there is a band could not the programme of the music be printed on the race card?

The paperchasing country is still heavy, as the crops are late this year, but the opening meet is expected to take place to-morrow week, somewhere in the six-milestone country, which is generally the first to dry up.

The programme of the Lucknow Spring Meeting of 1907 is published in our issue of date: the dates, as already announced, are the 2nd, 4th and 6th February, and entries close 15th December, 1st and 15th January.

Intending exhibitors at the forthcoming show of the Calcutta Kennel Club might do worse than turn their attention to one of the dog-owners' sheet anchors—"Benbow's Mixture." It is marvellous stuff for getting dogs into running or show condition, it has admittedly helped over thirty Waterloo Cup winners and runners up to their proud positions. Administered just now, in this ideal weather, while brushing, hand-rubbing and exercise (not forgetting) are efficiently and regularly carried out, the dog improves literally by leaps and bounds. One of Benbow's latest testimonials we observed on a bottle we were using the other day. it is from the trainer of Mr. S. S. Death, whose "Dividend Deferred" ran up for this year's Waterloo Cup: it is as follows:—

Kennels, Nine Ashes Farm, Hunsdon, Ware, Herts.

23rd March 1906.

Dear Sirs,

I am never without your "Benbow," as I find it the finest tonic out for dogs in training. "Dividend Deferred" had a course of it while in training for Waterloo Cup, for which he "ran up," and I can safely recommend it for dogs while down with distemper.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. C. Parsons,
Trainer to S. S. Death, Esq.

It seems a pity, especially after the extra trouble taken over the Calcutta polo ground, that the prospects of the Tournament fixed for Christmas should be marred by the decision to have a big tournament at Agra, chiefly for the amusement, one supposes, of that particularly non-sporting person the Amir of Kabul. It can't be helped we presume, but it is hard lines on the Calcutta Polo Club and on the Calcutta public all the same.

The Dehra Dun Polo Tournament was concluded on the 1st instant when the Rifle Brigade and the Imperial Cadet Corps met in the final; the former won by 3 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal an 1 subsidiary.

Those of our readers who go forth to slay the tiger in—or out of—his lair and turn their thoughts in the direction of the Government reward may find matter of interest in the letter of "High Velocity," which appears in our Correspondence columns to-day.

In the last issue of P.T.O. are given some interesting details concerning the notorious Lord Kennedy, a member of the house of Cassils, and son of the twelfth Earl, who did some extraordinary feats in the first half of the nineteenth century. He was one of the finest game shots and pigeon shots of his day. His feats with the gun were marvellous. On one occasion he backed himself for one thousand guineas to shoot forty brace of grouse and ride from his shooting quarters at Feloar, in Perthshire, to his house, Dunottur, near Stonehaven in Aberdeenshire, and back to Feloar, a distance of eighty miles, in one day. He started soon after daybreak, and was back at 8 P. M., having shot forty brace of grouse and ridden 160 miles in less than fifteen hours, and was not in the least knocked up by the feat. He backed himself once, after a dinner party at Black Hall, in Kincardineshire, for £2,500, to walk Sir Andrew Leith-Hay to Inverness. They started at nine o'clock at night in evening dress, with their shoes and silk stockings, each attended by an umpire. Lord Kennedy, with Captain Ross in attendance, struck right across the Grampians. Amid pouring rain he walked all that night, all the next day and the following night, reaching Inverness at 6 A. M. on the third day. Sir Andrew Leith-Hay, who had chosen the longer, but easier route, did not arrive till four hours later. At Doncaster, once, Lord Kennedy won eight mains at hazard in succession, and it was as much as the friend at his side could do to stuff the banknotes into his Lordship's pockets. But he soon ran through the £10,000 a year which came to him through his wife, Miss Allardice, and the £5,000 a year which he inherited from his mother, with £100,000 in ready money besides. His death was characteristic of him. He was under strict medical treatment, and was one day expecting a visit from his doctor. The appointed hour came, but no doctor. His Lordship was in an irritable mood. "I'm damned if I'll wait in for all the doctors in the world if they don't keep time; I'm off fishing," said he. When the doctor arrived and heard what had happened he exclaimed, "Then if he's in the water he is a dead man." Lord Kennedy was in the water up to his middle, and, despite the doctor's warnings, he continued to fish for several hours. The next day he had a chill, and within a week he was dead.

The Rangoon Horse Show has been fixed for the 11th and 12th January.

The Rangoon race Stewards have referred to the C.T.C. the case of a native jockey named Eusoof, who struck Elliott with his whip during a race, in order to prevent his passing him; the little beast is suspended pending the C.T.C. decision.

The South India Infantry Polo Tournament was concluded at Secunderabad on the 10th instant. The 1st Manchesters and the 2nd Royal Fusiliers were the only teams entered and the game resulted in a win for the Fusiliers by 4 goals 7 subsidiaries to 2 goals.

The Polo Tournament for the Tradesmen's Cup was held at Rawalpindi last week. Five teams entered—11th Lancers, 23rd Cavalry, two teams from the 10th Hussars and the Hammerkops. In the first round the 10th Hussars "A" team beat the Subalterns' team from the same regiment and in the second round they defeated the Hammerkops by 3 goals to 1. The other match was between the 11th Lancers and the 23rd Cavalry, the former winning by 8 goals to 2. The finals provided an exciting game, the Lancers beating the Hussars "A" team by 6 goals to 3 goals 3 subsidiaries. The 11th were represented by Mr. A. F. Hartley, 1; Captain T. R. C. Price, 2; Captain R. H. Anderson, 3; Mr. A. deC. Rennick, back.

We are requested to draw attention to the change of address of Messrs. Coutts, who are now at Spence's Hotel, Calcutta.

The Bombay Hunt opened its season last week with a meet at the Jackal Club. The Master had twenty odd couple out and began by drawing the scrub near Parla. A jack was soon viewed away and scent improving as they got well on the line a rattling good burst took them in the direction of Shahar Hill viâ Bamanwadi, thence to the Andheri Road and Chuckla Woods. After a check or two the jack got into a garden from which he was routed out after some delay and then followed a good gallop towards Goregaon. But scent failed and hounds were called off among the Jegeshwari Caves, after a couple of miles of it, a forty-five minutes' run with capital work shown by the new pack.

That real good sportsman and smart G. R., Lieutenant-Colonel C. H. Stisted, has succeeded to the command of the 1st Somersetshire Light Infantry, a matter for congratulation to himself and his popular regiment.

Herr Schiller, chief keeper of the Berlin Zoo, was recently the victim of a murderous attack by "Harry," a famous Indian elephant. His injuries are said to be fatal. On entering the pen the keeper had to pass the elephant's mate, who will shortly give birth to a calf. Apparently fearing that Schiller intended some harm to the female, Harry, who had been eyeing him viciously, advanced and pinioned him violently against the bars of the pen with the crushing weight of his gigantic forehead. Schiller was able to shout for help, and the first to appear was a young Sikh named Sukko, who trained Harry in India and brought him to Europe. A single word from Sukko caused the elephant to release Schiller, but the keeper swooned from agonising internal pains. Harry is one of the largest elephants in Europe. Only twenty-six years old, he is the particular pet of Berlin children ; but, as he has committed three previous attacks on Schiller, he will now probably be sentenced to death.

With the near approach of the New Year Messrs. Traill and Co., of Calcutta, notify the publication of their invaluable "Indian Diaries," adjuncts to the outfit of office or private dwelling which Anglo-Indians have long been used to and the annual reappearance of which is generally welcomed. For no less than twenty-one consecutive years these diaries have laid claim to the notice of the public and they have steadily kept pace with the demand for an accurate reference book and handy repository of all that one wishes recorded. We possess a copy of their first issue and have before us a copy of their latest—the improvement in every respect is striking. Traill's Indian Diaries appear to us to be as perfect as such compilations can hope to be made, they are useful to everybody, absolutely necessary to most of us and they range in price from six annas—and you really cannot get a good diary for less—up to six rupees.

"It is not considered 'good form' observes 'Ranger' in the I. S. and D. N. for the disciples of Nimrod, ramrod, or fishing-rod to publicly discuss the £ s. d. aspect of their various sports. But why? It seems to me to be quite a legitimate subject for discussion, especially amongst those keen 'hunters' of fur, feather and fin whose resources are much smaller than their love of the chase. There is no cheap sport nowadays ; cheap and nasty are synonymous terms in this connection. I have just been foregathering with a man who took the back-end fishing on a Northern river. He had good sport, until the heavy rains came and flooded him out. Asked what the total cost worked out at, per head of salmon taken, he confessed that they cost him £5 apiece, exclusive of personal expenses. There is cheaper salmon fishing to be had, by those who can spare the time to try a holiday in Iceland or Finland—the latter for preference. Norway has become as costly as Scotland, thanks to the prodigality of those Englishmen who make sport prohibitive to people of limited means. A London member of the Sea Angling Club has just been giving his brother anglers a tempting description of what tarpon fishing is like in the Gulf of Mexico. He put the cost of his six weeks' trip down at £150 ; but this sport is very uncertain, and it is quite as easy to waste your time and money at this game as it is to do ditto on the banks of a salmon river. And be it remembered that tarpon are useless for food purposes. They are towed ashore, and allowed to rot for manure."

As the result of a lengthy correspondence and inquiry, a very interesting Parliamentary Blue Book has just been published on the preservation of big game in Africa. In 1900, it will be remembered, a convention was signed by Great Britain, Germany Spain, France, Portugal, Italy and the Congo State, by which the export of tusks of less than five kilogrammes weight was prohibited, and thus all incentive to the killing of young animals was withdrawn. By this convention, also, a system of reserves was established, the destruction of females was to a certain extent prohibited, and precautions were taken to prevent interference during the breeding season with those animals which it was desirable to preserve. At the conference of the Powers, Sir Harry Johnston submitted a report on the elephant, and said he had come to the conclusion that, provided the Brussels Act was enforced, and guns and gunpowder were kept from the natives, especially from the Arabs, and Europeans only allowed to shoot elephants by taking out a licence, the elephant was likely to exist for all time, and yet supply a sufficiency of ivory for the trade. The bulk of the elephant-killing should be left to those natives who kill the elephant with trap and spear, as they do not cause anything like the same destruction as the natives armed with guns, who indiscriminately shoot every elephant they come across. On the contrary, the natives who use only the spear naturally select bull elephants with good ivory, as it is almost as dangerous to attack a cow with small tusks, or with none at all, as to attack the biggest bull elephant. For the same reason, they do not kill the young elephants.

As regards traps and pitfalls, they were not very effective, and were generally so constructed that a young elephant might succeed in passing where a large and heavy beast would fall in. There are certain marshy districts of vast extent, such as those which surrounded the south end of Lake Mweru, where the elephant would appear to have found a naturally guarded preserve—a refuge where only the white man would have the pluck to follow him. To these preserves, there is no doubt, the female elephant retires when about to give birth to its young. Consequently, if the white hunter is kept under control, and gunpowder is kept from the natives, there might be a chance of the elephant's existence being prolonged indefinitely. Existing regulations might be made more stringent, and it might be made a penal matter to shoot cow elephants or young elephants with tusks under a certain weight and size. As to whether the African elephant could be tamed, he hesitated to pronounce an opinion. Young elephants in captivity invariably die, because it is usually impossible to procure enough milk to rear them. Even, however, if one reached maturity, Sir Harry thinks the disposition of the African elephant is too capricious and naturally savage to make him a reliable beast of burden.

Sir Harry Johnston is severe on the hippopotamus, and considers him a great pest. He is extremely dangerous to boats and canoes, and maliciously attacks without the least excuse. He commits great ravages amongst the crops. His tusks are moderately valuable, and his hide very valuable. The extermination of the hippo is recommended, but Sir Harry says this is easier said than done, as there are many parts of the country where the hippopotamus, like the elephant, finds natural preserves into which it is almost impossible to follow him, and as the hippopotamus breeds at a quicker rate than the elephant, he can keep pace with the attacks made on him. Local settlers object to the preservation of big game also, because the ravages of the tsetse fly amongst herds of cattle are very serious, and the planters state that these insects are harboured by the larger wild animals. The Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire has urged on the Colonial Office that should not be accepted till inquiry has been made as to whether there are not other means of destroying the tsetse fly than by the butchery of the wild animals. Since the convention was signed, the Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire has pressed the Colonial Secretary for greater stringency in the enforcement of the regulations. This summer a new ordinance was promulgated for Southern Rhodesia, embodying very strict regulations. In a final dispatch, Lord Elgin instructs Commissioner Sir A. Sharpe, of the British Central Africa Protectorate, to prohibit the sale of elephant tusks under 25lbs., and to permit no shooting in a reserve.

The Madras Polo Tournament for the Novice's Cup began on Monday when the 13th Hussars met and defeated Rajah Venugopal's team by two goals to a subsidiary after an even and fairly fast game.

Six teams have entered for the Connell Cup Polo Tournament at Allahabad, and on Monday play began with the tie between the 14th Cavalry "B" and the 24th Punjabis, the latter emerging victorious by 6 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 1 subsidiary. The Oxfordshire L. I. beat the Allahabad Gymkhana in the second game by 7 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 5 goals and 1 subsidiary.

Athletic Notes.

THE Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association will hold its next meeting in March, as announced in our last issue. This is unavoidable, the Calcutta Cricket Club having a match fixed for the last Saturday in February—the 23rd. After all as regards the weather there is not much difference in the heat conditions between the last day or two of February and the 2nd of March : but whatever they may have in the shape of weather we hope they will escape a repetition of last year's deluge, which, up to within eighteen hours of the meeting, threatened to wreck the whole show.

Local Amateur runners, we think, will welcome the change of the Half Mile from a handicap to a scratch event. For some years those who fancied themselves at this distance have grumbled at the handicap and not without reason. True the race has nearly always drawn a good field, but it has seldom provided a good race, for the simple reason that many starters merely run a few yards and leave the track at the opening near the dressing tents, leaving two or three to finish. This does not make for sport, the public certainly do not look on approvingly at this sort of thing and the speculative athlete who enters in handicaps chiefly in the hope of being "chucked in" by some lucky fluke on a long mark and who declines to run and show what he really can do is not of the class the B. P. A. A. A. ought to encourage. We hope the race, under the new conditions, will fill (and there is no reason why it should not, when we begin to jot down likely entrants even at this stage) because if the experiment proves a success it is quite possible the Association may in 1908 make it a championship, in which case the sprinter, the middle distance and long distance man will all be provided with Championships to compete for.

The decision to offer money instead of pewter pots to the winners of the British Army Tug-of-War is sound. "Mr. Atkins," we should say, would infinitely prefer the Rs. 200 now liberally offered, than the half dozen "bloomin' mugs" hitherto bestowed on the winners. It was felt that the absence of a money prize caused certain teams to fight shy of the event—indeed this was the general opinion of the officers and men to whom the falling through of the event last year was a disappointment and as a matter of fact the money prize suggestion came from them. Let us hope to see at least half a dozen brawny teams entering next March.

The Kincaid Smith cricket cup has been won by the 1st Battery R. F. A. who beat "H." Coy. Royal Fusiliers in the final at Secunderabad on the 28th ultimo by an innings and 19 runs.

The following will represent the Bombay Gymkhana on their cricket tour to Calcutta during Xmas week :—Capt. J. G. Greig, Major C. Wigram, Major Deas, Capt. Bradfield, Capt. Rutter, Mr. R. H. Spooner, Mr. L. Cookson, Mr. J. O. Airy, Mr. S. T. Crump, Mr. C. T. Beaumont, Mr. F. P. West, and Mr. R. E. A. Elliott.

The Motor Union of Western India announce the postponement of their trials, but have not yet notified the altered date.

Mr. W. Beach Thomas, in Outlook 9th (November) :—"It is very necessary to call attention to the shameless approval of unsportsmanlike dodges which begin to delight the crowds of all classes that now flock to professional games. . . . I have played not once or twice on village football grounds with professional players, and found them even on these small occasions, when playing with men of infinitely inferior capacity, to use knee and foot and elbow in 'foul,' that is illegal, and in very dangerous fashion—and generally boast of it afterwards. Intensely strict refereeing prevents very frequent abuses in more exalted matches, but the tendency of the game, is to encourage in actual and vicarious athletes a gladiatorial delight in trickery. In America the game is much more brutal, if the percentage of serious and fatal accidents is reckoned. . . . But if more brutal the American is less unfair. He at least fights an unscientific game with self-sacrificing courage—devotion is hardly too strong a word. Moreover, the game is likely soon to be mended or ended ; and very many Americans would be glad to see introduced an alternative such as Rugby football, which has the long record and natural growth on which the proper spirit of a game seems wholly to depend. The spirit has never been properly developed in Association football, a game which is at present a social curse to the country and as it seems to me many recent excesses—not least the unlovely squabble between the Football Association and some of the Old Boy clubs—make it necessary that all amateurs should play under their own Association and their own rules as to what is fair and what is foul. At present they are ruled by financiers, dragooned into distasteful regulation, and subject to aspersions not consistent with proper dignity."

Since writing upon the subject of alcohol for driving motors, some statistics have come to hand of considerable interest to wheelmen ; besides encouraging landholders to cultivate those items from which the spirit can be economically distilled, thus bringing down the price and getting rid of the objections preferred against the former. The internal tax in America, hitherto levied upon alcohol for the arts and sciences (not for the saloon bars), is to be abolished from the 1st January next ; it being computed this will reduce the cost of the spirit to between 6 and 7 annas of Indian currency per gallon. The reduction of the excise in Germany has jumped up the outturn to 3½ million gallons, so considering the numerous bases from which alcohol is derivable in India, we ought to get our requirements for 4 annas at most. The forthcoming pamphlet upon this subject will be published at the beginning of the year by the American Department of Agriculture and should be in the hands of all planters, zemindars and those interested in the matter. Potatoes are perhaps too valuable to be devoted to the purpose, but among the numerous bye-products and other things hitherto reckoned of no account, we learn that eka and other grass roots can be made to furnish their quota, together with fruits, edible and the reverse, maize and other stalks, those of the sunflower, cactus, prickly pear, the cherry of the coffee pods now thrown away, and in lesser degree, sawdust ; but a complete list would fill a column.

Some years since, in another place, we penned a recommendation for the more extensive farming of pigs, which a number of our contemporaries deemed it worth while to reproduce. Our remarks were then dictated by gastronomic considerations. In returning to the subject we learn that piggy or his umbles (not chitlings) is destined to play an important part in the concoction of the "cereal rubber" introduced by a Mr. W. T. Carr, who, by the way, affirms his preparation is not a substitute but genuine caoutchouc. The main basis is wheat or "some other cereal," hence the name, but the pepsin, or whatever the solvent is called, exists to a greater extent in the "innards" of swine than in many other known creatures. The compound is turned out in six varieties, but we are only concerned with the two which affect tyres and golf balls. The inventor asserts that the "cereal" can be supplied at very much less than the present article, but as both grain and pork are hardly equal to the demands for the usual purposes, we shall await with interest the development of Mr. Carr's enterprise.

Those artistically minded amongst la monde qui s'amuse of which, if report speaks true, there is, at present, no lack in our gay metropolis, have during the current week been enabled to feast the eye on a charming collection of early English prints, facsimiles of the originals, exquisitely hand tinted. For this treat, the picture-loving section of the public are indebted to Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., of this city, London and Simla, who have on view in their spacious premises opposite Government House, exact reproductions of some of the most celebrated of the works of Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Raeburn and others, also a few domestic and sporting subjects by other celebrated artists. The majority have never been exhibited in Calcutta before, and the plates—limited in number—having been destroyed, there is no possibility of any further exhibition at any future time. "Maternal Care," a very beautiful Romney, with which are associated some of the most romantic incidents in the painter's [illegible]er ; a portrait of the beautiful Mrs. Robinson, the [illegible]ginal of the "Sweet Glass of Richmond Hill," by [illegible] same, and one of the best examples of Romney's [illegible]rt ; the celebrated Gainsborough, "The Duchess of Cumberland," the original of which is in the Royal Collection at Windsor Castle ; the famous portrait of Helen Le Brun painted by herself ; and "The Sisters" by John Hoppner are only a few amongst a collection of famous pictures. To those to whom these early English masters are familiar, it is a revival of old associations to see them so faithfully reproduced, while to those as yet unacquainted with the originals in the various museums, public galleries, and private collections of Europe, a visit to the specimens now on view is in itself an education.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—Entries for the South Indian Reliability Motor Trials are coming in fairly well. Particulars as to the competition have already been sent you, but it may be added that in view of the postponement of the Bombay Motor Trials, the Committee of the South Indian Motor Union have decided to extend the date on which entries close to the 15th instant.

Colonel Anderson and the officers of the 2nd (Q.O.) Sappers and Miners, were "At Home" to a huge gathering of their friends on the afternoon of the 8th instant, when the final events of their annual sports were decided. These sports occupy three days each year and the competitions being largely technical, full details would scarcely interest your readers. But there are several events and general points which deserve touching upon. The tug-of-war was especially good and tremendous interest attached itself to the pull off for second place between No. 14 Company and No. 12 Company, because the fate of the championship shield practically hung on the result. No. 14 Company at this point were three points ahead, but No. 12 Company pulled them over and tied for the shield. No. 14 had one more chance, as if they had got second place in the water polo they would have won, but they were again beaten, and the shield will be held for six months by each Company.

The water polo, which is a sport seldom seen in India, was very clever, and one of the two goals obtained by No. 12 Company, who won the final, was distinctly good. The attacking man got to the ball a tenth of a second before the goal-keeper who promptly soused him under water, but instead of resisting, the ducked Sapper dived with the ball still deeper, and coming up behind the baffled goal-keeper, threw the ball through the goal. The marvellous escalading of the Sappers also deserved special remark. The men had to run about 100 yards, surmount a palisade 15 feet high and fire a stated number of rounds and the winning team did the business in one minute nineteen seconds, or eight seconds better than the time in which another of their teams won at the late assault-at-arms. The speed with which these military "handy men," made a pyramid, ascended, swarmed up the rope and dropped on the other side must have been seen to be believed. A mule jump race created much amusement, most of the mules prefering to push the low hurdles over, or going round them to jumping them, although one or two were quite good "leppers." A well-known "G. R." ran third in the handicap race for officers, but having left my glasses at home I could not "read" the race accurately. Mrs. Scallon presented the shield and the officers' prizes and a very pleasant evening closed.

The Rangoon Boat Club regatta will be held on Saturday. The programme consists of—Senior and Junior Sculls, Skiff Race, Mixed Doubles, Ladies' Doubles, Challenge Fours, Dongola Race and Scratch Fours, assuredly a big enough bill to get through in an afternoon. All the crews have been hard at work, including the ladies. Four crews are in for the Challenge Fours—Bullochs, the Military, the Volunteers and the Public Schools, the latter instead of the German Club crew who have not entered after all. The first-named are hot favourites ; "they swing very well together," writes our correspondent, "get plenty of work on and keep it long. The volunteers are inclined to be short and lack beginning. They want to hold their slides longer ; the Public Schools are well together both in time and swing, but they too are short, though they get a fair amount of work on at the beginning and a good leg drive. In the Military crew bow and 2 are very short indeed and the bulk of the work at present is done by 3 and stroke, both of whom row clean and with plenty of length. The crew are all very slow away with their hands and the boat stops between each stroke."

Sam Newman will fight Phil Pickering on Boxing Day. The contest is to be one of fifteen rounds for a purse of Rs. 1,000 and the Middle Weight Championship of India.

The International Rugby match between England and the South Africans, played on the 8th instant, resulted in a draw—a try each.

The Poona Royal Connaught Boat Club will hold its thirty-ninth annual regatta on the 14th and 16th February. There are twelve races, including the Challenge Fours, the Service Fours, Regimental Fours, Regimental Eights, Senior, Junior and Double Sculls. The race for the Challenge Fours was instituted in 1869 ; it has been won thirteen itmes by Poona, five times by Bombay and once by Calcutta, Madras and Karachi. Pity Calcutta cannot send representatives this time, but one of the desiderata for rowing is a stretch of water and this the C.R.C. are at present without.

The victims of the motor-car catastrophe on the Shalimar Road last Sunday week are, we are glad to hear, making some progress towards recovery. How they managed to escape death is remarkable. We cycled down that road on the morning of the day the accident occurred and returned the same way in the evening: there was nothing to show the road was up either at the Shalimar or the Botanical Garden end—not even a bamboo across the road. When we passed the chasm at 5 P.M. there were two or three light bamboos tied to ricketty posts, near the edge and on the south side (from which the car approached) there was a bamboo only a part of the way across and the end, instead of being lashed to a post was lying on the ground. With no barrier at either end of the road, no lights around this excavation and (as we left it) practically no protection or warning to the public the place was a veritable death trap and that it did not prove to be one was due to circumstances hardly short of miraculous. Should legal proceedings result we should be glad to give evidence (if needed) and so doubtless would the friend who was cycling with us.

At the invitation of the Heinz Company—famous in both hemispheres for their pure food products—we last week assisted, in the capacity of a delighted and astonished guest, at a practical demonstration of their specialities charmingly, and we may say most convincingly, put before us by their representative Miss McQueen McLeod, of Boston, United States America. This "fairy lunch" with its dainties and delicacies served in alluring little dishes, its relishes and sweets, each in tiny plat, its toothsome novelties, its ambrosial surprises, all designed per amusare la bocca or fulfil those twen' cent dietetic conditions which insist on the best food in the most palatable and concentrated form came as a revelation. For the Heinz Company introduce many things with which we Ditchers have been strangely unfamiliar up to now, but which, with the assistance of Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Company and their Agents, we ought to be soon well acquainted. We shall not attempt to describe what we tasted or what we learned; that would be rather trespassing on the Company's ground, for their chief method of advertising their goods is to give these practical demonstrations and explain their system, from cultivation (which by the way, is entirely done by themselves on the enormous areas owned by them in Canada and elsewhere) through manufacture to that time when their products reach the hands of the consumer, elegantly canned or bottled and guaranteed pure food of the highest quality. We can only suggest to all who have not yet responded to the Company's invitation not to neglect the opportunity of learning something new and useful. It is the duty of every one who evolves the commissariat schemes of a household, runs a Chummery or a Club, to sample what Messrs. Heinz and Company offer them and acquire the information so felicitously imparted by the fair lecturer.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 23rd November 1906.

MONDAY saw a less formal procession of royalties but one quite as much appreciated as the city visit of last week. The King and Queen and Princess Victoria with King Haakon and Queen Maud came up to Buckingham Palace from Windsor. The hero of the occasion was H. R. H. Prince Olaf, aged three. The guard-of-honour appealed to his fancy and he insisted on standing on the carriage seat throughout the drive from Paddington and drew the attention of his grandmother, mother and aunt to everything that pleased his fancy in the streets with an exuberance and candour unusual in royalty. London was delighted with him.

For some time past it has been freely stated at the clubs that Mr. Haldane is unable to bring the Army Council round to the way of thinking which would content the dictators of C. B.'s Government. It seemed a very probable thing that he was at issue with the Council: and when on Wednesday he announced that he should not be able to bring forward his Army Reorganisation scheme as a whole this session, the statement was regarded as confirmation of the rumours. It is averred that what he will say this session refers to the auxiliary forces, thus bearing out the average professional soldier's idea that he "can do what he likes with the Militia and Volunteers." By the way, though Piershill Barracks are to be given up as insanitary, the cavalry now quartered there will be quartered again in Scotland as soon as we can afford to build the necessary barracks somewhere else.

Meantime Mr. Haldane has appointed a consultative committee to initiate measures for the effective training of selected officers to qualify them for the higher appointments of the Administrative Staff of the Army. The members are Sir Hugh Bell, Sir F. Harrison, Manager of the L. and N.-W. Railway, General H. D. Hutchinson, General H. S. G. Miles, Sir Felix Schuster, Mr. Sidney Webb, and Mr. Macknider, three leading lights of the London school of economics, and Sir Edward Ward. The scheme is admittedly an excellent one: the only objection to it is that by the time these trained officers are ready to administer the affairs of the Army we shall probably have no Army left. It all depends upon the strength or weakness of the "anti-militarism" party in Parliament. If it can dictate to C. B. and Co., it naturally will be obeyed.

The politicians have been striving to make some more capital out of the Chinese Labour question. The "slavery" lie having been exhausted an endeavour is being made to rouse the country by enlarging on Chinese immorality, his Right Reverence of Hereford, of course, leading the van. It were too much to expect that the great B. P. should glance at the difference between Eastern and Western standards of morality, or at the wild improbability that Chinese example is likely to corrupt Europeans, who regard them as inferior beings. The new cry is too obviously political to carry much weight; a greater difficulty confronts the Bishop and his allies in the deep-rooted objection of his countrymen to admit any discussion of the immoralities against which he would have them war.

The precincts of the Houses of Parliament have been specially approved by the suffragists as the most suitable scene for those disturbances which, their spokeswomen tell us, are to be a conspicuous feature of their campaign. A few of them got up a little scene in Old Palace Yard on Tuesday, but the police put a summary stop to the speeches, and there was the usual police-court sequel; a refusal to pay half a sovereign and choice of seven days "martyrdom." The most indulgent now recognise that the suffragist campaign is objectionable: where suffragists essay to speak there mobs of idlers, vagabonds and ruffians gather together in hopes of a row. There is some hope that the fact that a Woman's Suffrage Bill is to be introduced next session may have some effect in procuring us a rest from these troublesome follies.

I do not suppose that "suffragism" has anything to do with the feelings of the clergy of Gloucester Cathedral, but if women want a grievance their attitude in the matter of Miss Beale's burial would furnish it. This lady had for many years been recognised as a real "force" in educational matters and enjoyed a measure of esteem rarely accorded to women other than public characters. When Miss Beale died the Dean offered a place of sepulture in Gloucester Cathedral and thereby raised a storm among his clergy, who were scandalised at the idea of burying a woman in the Cathedral! Their point of view to my mind is both novel and entertaining: I should dearly like to hear one of these persons argue his case against the proceeding.

Miss Alexandra Dagmar, known in private life as Mrs. De Celle, has obtained £250 damages against the editor and proprietor of the Encore, a weekly paper devoted to the affairs of the music hall. The libel consisted of a translation from a Berlin paper called Das Programm with comments. The German journal asserted that Miss Dagmar was associated with a Mr. George Harland in taking a troupe to Calcutta and in leaving them stranded there. Also that she imposed impossible tasks and unjust fines on the members, and when compelled to resign obtained by misleading statements £700 from Cook's; which £700 had been deposited for the purpose of bringing the troupe home. The Encore reproduced these charges ostensibly to give Miss Dagmar an opportunity of refuting them. The leading defendant pleading that he wrote the article "to prevent foreigners from besmirching the plaintiff's name." Mr. Justice Grantham's summing up was all in favour of the plaintiff and the jury did not take long to arrive at their verdict.

A very sound and sensible article on the situation of young natives of India in London appeared in the Times of Monday. All who know anything about the matter are agreed that residence in London does the plastic baboo no good. Turned loose to find his own friends and his own level he naturally drifts into the society of a class which takes him at his own valuation and returns home objectionable alike to his own people and to Europeans, who will not associate in this country with the people whose tone the Londonised baboo so successfully catches. An appeal is made to those who wish well to the relations of East and West to extend a hand to the young baboo adrift in England. It would be a good work: but I think the difficulty could be better overcome by appointing such an official as the judicious Siamese court appointed, to wit an "Inspector of Students," to whom all youngsters from Siam are consigned. He finds or approves quarters for them during their stay in town, officiates as guide, philosopher and friend, and only stops short indeed of administering deputy paternal correction of which youth, East and West alike, so often stands in need.

"The Doctor's Dilemma" grew out of the war between his heart and his professional duty. When Mrs. Dubedat came to him, Sir Colenso Ridgeon, the great consumption specialist, and implored him to save her husband, the artist Louis Dubedat, Sir Colenso assented out of the wealth of his regard for Mrs. Dubedat: but he at once found himself in a dilemma, the saving of Dubedat, who was a very clever artist but a wholly bad man, could only be compassed by turning away one of the forty patients who occupied the forty beds in Sir Colenso's hospital. Sir Colenso, when he comes to know Louis better, decides that he will not take the responsibility of saving him and hands the case over to Sir Bloomfield Bonnington, under whose care Louis dies: leaving his widow to accept Sir Colenso if she pleases. She does not so please and marries somebody else, but whom we are not told. After the death scene I felt that I did not want to know.

The impression left on one's mind up to the death scene is that of Bernard Shaw among the Doctors, as the de'il among the tailors. There are six doctors; the physicians sneer at the surgeons, and the surgeons sneer at the physicians, while each expert makes it clear that he has no opinion whatever of any of the other five. The man I liked best was poor old Blenkinsop, the struggling general practitioner, who takes the opportunity in consultations, to beg the great men for their discarded frock-coats. Medical and surgical discussion relieved by Shavian irony and wit really form the backbone of the play: like other Shavian plays it is more a discussion than a play, and it is much to the playwright's credit that he contrives to make it so amusing. The death scene, to which I have referred, marked a distinct turning point in the friendly feeling with which the play had been received. Dubedat gasping his life out in his wife's arms, dies jibing at all things in terms as void of taste as the whole scene. There may not have been in the audience anyone who was shocked at Dubedat's creed—"I believe in Michael Angelo—Vellasquez and—the Message—of Art;" but everyone supposed his or her neighbour must be, and the scene was received in the stoniest silence. If one could imagine it true to life, there would be some extenuation: one can't, and the cheap, shoddy cynicism only offended. The piece was acted as admirably as the Court plays always are.

"Richard II" was revived at His Majesty's on Monday. It is to run for three weeks, until Mr. Tree is ready to revive "Antony and Cleopatra." I do not know that there is much to say about the play; Mr. Tree's "Richard II" is one of his best Shakespearian personations and it is as good as ever. Miss Viola Tree is the Queen: she acts with intelligence and charm and looks the part: but it seemed to me that there is more in Shakespeare's Queen than the lady found herself able to put into the part. We are well used to jugglings with Shakespeare's text, but the propriety of taking lines from one character, the Welsh Captain in this case, to give them to another, the Queen in this revival, seems open to much criticism. Mr. G. W. Anson as the Gardener was inimitable.

"The Yeomen of the Guard" is to be the opening piece of the Gilbert and Sullivan series at the Savoy, on 8th December; the series is to run for five weeks. I shall be very curious to see how the modern theatre-goer regards these operas after a surfeit of musical comedy. Mrs. Brown Potter vanished from the London stage proper and has t acting in suburban theatres. Her latest appearan is at Fulham, where she takes the title rôle "Charlotte Corday." The patrons of the Fulham theatre are surely less profoundly ignorant than the management assumes. The programme kindly assures us that the piece is "founded on facts!"

Lord Kilmorey appeals to the public for support in organising a concert next May as a tribute to

Mr. Charles Santley, who made his appearance as a vocalist over 49 years ago. Lord Kilmorey reminds the world, quite truly, that Mr. Santley "never disappointed his public" and has probably been the most popular public singer of his age. Mr. Santley ought to be in comfortable circumstances measuring the possibility by the success of his career, but I suppose the case is otherwise.

Miss Vivien Chartres, the violin prodigy, appears to be making a royal progress of her tour in Italy. At Genoa the city fathers invited her to play on Paganini's violin, which is kept with all the precautions of regalia: and the Queen has invited her to stay at the Royal Castle at Stupinigi.

It looks as though we were going to see a real wave of reform in affairs municipal. The latest is that the Local Government Board is going to hold an enquiry into allegations of extravagance against the Hammersmith guardians in respect of the "Wormwood Scrubbs Place" as their new workhouse is called. It is stated that a minority of guardians were so disgusted with the recklessness of their fellows that they ceased to attend meetings. Having regard to the class from which the majority of our workhouse population is drawn, the irreclaimable loafer, feeling runs high on the subject. There has been one definite result of the Poplar enquiry: two of the guardians have been committed for trial on a charge of misappropriating the ratepayers' money: in legal language for "conspiring to obtain by false pretences from the guardians the sum of £1-6-0."

A mysterious public benefactor has been meandering about central London: the Strand and that region is his favourite hunting ground, and he has been known to visit Covent Garden. The man is supposed to be mad or at least eccentric and certainly his curious habit of presenting bank notes to total strangers gives much colour to the rumour. I heard some days ago of a elderly bank clerk to whom this ministering angel presented a £20 note: then of a well-to-do shop-keeper who had a similar sum given him. Of course the matter "got into the papers and yesterday a market porter informed the Commission which is enquiring into the Police and their Ways that he had had a £100 note given him.

ONLOOKER.

Shikar.

A MIDNIGHT WATCH.

A SWELTERING day in the latter part of June was drawing to its close, as I reached the spot, some two miles from my camp, where I was to spend the night in a machan in the hopes of getting a shot at a tiger.

It was a likely spot indeed that had been chosen for the tie—a sandy nullah meandering amid dense jungle through which even the rays of an Indian sun could scarcely pierce, and where the tiger could obtain shelter from the fierce midday heat. Close to the tree in which my machan was built, was a pool of water, one of the very few pools within many miles

The previous night there had been a kill at this spot, and the men whom I had sent out in the morning had found the tiger lying in the cool sand by the pool. Rudely disturbed in his morning slumbers he had sprung up the steep bank of the nullah, but, heavy with buffalo meat, had missed his footing and rolled back into the nullah! A second spring was more successful, and on the bank he had turned to stare coolly at the intruders before trotting slowly off to seek the shelter of some shady nook.

The buffalo had been found half eaten some 30 yards from where it had been tied. The jungle here was too dense to afford any chance of a shot after dark; I therefore had the carcase removed and a fresh buffalo tied up some ten yards from the foot of the tree in which my machan was built.

I had no one with me in the machan: a native is almost certain to move or cough at the critical moment, besides not being a very pleasant companion in such a confined space. My orderly and several village men were ordered to remain within call until about 8 o'clock, and then if they heard no shot to return to the village.

The hour of sunset soon drew near, that magic hour when the denizens of the jungle approach the pool with cautious steps to slake their thirst, and when beasts that prowl by night begin to come forth, rejoicing at the approach of darkness. I had hoped that in such a favourable position the tiger might have returned early to his kill, but the short Indian twilight soon merged into night and there was no sign of his approach.

The moon would not rise until 10 o'clock and I resigned myself to an all-night watch.

It was perhaps an hour after dark when I heard a loud sniff and recognised with a beating heart that the tiger was smelling at the spot where he had left the half eaten buffalo. He was only 30 yards from the freshly picketted buffalo, and I expected every moment to hear the rush of the tiger as he sprang on his victim. It was a moment of intense excitement as I gazed, my eye glued to the loophole and every nerve on the alert, peering out into the gloom where the form of the poor little buffalo was dimly discernible. It seemed hours that I thus gazed, when suddenly, far down the nullah, rang out the alarmed bark of a spotted deer: the tiger had gone off as quietly as he had come and was now in search of fresh prey.

Another hour passed when I heard a growl and another and another. The tiger was returning along the nullah, disappointed evidently of deer as well as of buffalo and in no sweet frame of mind

The growls came nearer and nearer, but the buffalo lay still and gave no sign. Suddenly the growls ceased and it was clear that the tragedy was approaching. When the tiger was within a few yards the buffalo stood up; then came a rush and a heavy fall, and then a ghastly silence, broken only by the heavy breathing of the tiger as he drained the life blood of his victim.

It was still an hour to moonrise, and though the dark form of the buffalo was dimly discensible, the tawny hide of the tiger was quite invisible and a shot in the dark was foredoomed to failure.

There was nothing for it but to wait.

Presently the tiger left the body of the buffalo and went to the pool where I could hear him lapping deeply of the water.

Then there was silence. The moon arose and crept higher and higher up the heavens but the tiger did not return: the night passed wearily and the dawn approached, but still there was no sign. And so the daylight came and I descended from my machan weary and disheartened to pass another burning day. Evening again saw me in position in the machan, but this time with no great hopes of success. The tiger had evidently become suspicious or he would not have left his kill untouched the previous night.

Darkness fell without the tiger turning up and I had to reconcile myself to another night in the jungle. About 9 o'clock the spotted deer began barking some distance down the nullah and I knew that the tiger was on the prowl.

Some time after this the tiger's roar echoed through the silence of the night. The brute was then only a few hundred yards away and there he lay roaring for a full half hour.

The moon, now a week past the full, rose shortly before 11 o'clock, and as there was no sign of the tiger's approach, I began to fear that he had become too suspicious to come up to his kill.

The night passed wearily enough. There was not a breath of air stirring; it was the most sultry part of the year, the week that precedes the bursting of the rains, and even in the midst of the jungle the heat was intense.

About 3 A.M. it began to rain and I now gave up all hopes of getting a shot. I put up my umbrella, got into my waterproof coat, and made myself as comfortable as possible for the remainder of the night. I was just dozing off to sleep when suddenly I heard an unmistakable tug at the buffalo, and peering from the loophole could dimly discern the form of the tiger standing by his kill. He seemed to find something suspicious in the rope that prevented him from dragging the carcase away, and suddenly turned and sneaked off In a minute or two he was back again, and after vainly tugging at the buffalo several times, he lay down and started feeding. It was now a matter of some difficulty to get into a position to shoot; however, with great care I succeeded in closing the umbrella and getting out of my overcoat without alarming the tiger. The moon was still clouded over and it was too dark to shoot, though the tiger was not 15 yards from the muzzle of my rifle. Half an hour passed and the moon was just coming out from behind the clouds when the tiger got up and walked to the pool to quench his thirst.

As he passed my machan the moon shone out and every stripe showed out distinctly on his huge form.

Presently he returned, but as I was preparing to fire, he turned off into the jungle and disappeared in the gloomy undergrowth. I began to be afraid that he had again escaped me. However in a short time he was back again tugging at the body of the buffalo. The moon was now shining clearly on the tiger and his victim: my rifle was levelled and the white cardboard night sight showed up distinctly. I felt certain of my spot.

As the rifle rang out the tiger disappeared from my view. Had the bullet missed? I seemed to hear a muffled groan, but I could not be sure: even the bicycle lamp which I now lighted failed to reveal the striped form which I longed to see. It was but an hour to dawn, but this hour seemed the longest of all the night.

At last the day broke and the first dim light discovered the form of the tiger lying in his tracks by the body of his victim.

While he was standing, he was clearly visible but when he had fallen his tawny hide so matched the sandy bed of the nullah that he could no longer be distinguished.

The bullet had struck him in the base of the neck and, passing through the spinal column, had dropped him without a groan.

In his death agony the tiger had bitten clean through his own forearm. It was a noble prize that I had earned by the night watch; though not very long, the tiger was very massive in all his proportions.

What though the exposure in the jungles brought on a severe attack of malaria which laid me low for nearly a month! The fever passed away, but the striped skin remains to conjure up pleasant memories when the land of tigers shall be far away.

Fishing.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

IX.

THE size of flies most suitable for mahseer fishing varies considerably in different rivers, and also in lakes. I have generally found that in big rivers large flies should be used, and in small rivers smaller flies, while in lakes the flies should be considerably smaller than in rivers. There are so many different scales of sizes for hooks, and for different sorts of hooks, that it might be misleading to quote from any scale, and perhaps the best way of indicating approximately the sizes you require, when ordering your flies from a tackle shop, would be to mention large salmon, small salmon, lake, and large trout sizes, it being understood that by lake size you mean those used for British lakes (I will mention the flies and sizes suitable for Indian lakes later on). This may hardly seem a satisfactory way of getting the sizes you want, but it is about as near as you can get, especially if ordering from a shop in India. Flies used at and after dusk may with advantage be rather larger than those used in the daytime I notice that in a book on angling by that well-known writer and expert, Francis Francis, he mentions the confusion caused by the various methods of numbering sizes of hooks, and he goes so far as to say that "it often happens that makers are not true even to their own sizes." Mr. Thomas in the "Rod in India" endeavours to elucidate matters by giving one or two scales of sizes, but perhaps you or your tackle shop in India may not happen to possess his book, so for want of a more definite guide I can only suggest approximate sizes in a general way, as I have done above. On large rivers I have found mahseer down to 1½ or 2lbs. take a large salmon fly. In the smaller submontane rivers and streams which feed the larger rivers, and in which a fly is perhaps more successful than anywhere else, I have taken mahseer up to 3 or 4lbs. on flies of trout size, but in all I have found the four flies mentioned in my last article, to be the most killing. This may possibly be because I have used them far more than any others owing to my having been successful with them when I first tried fly-fishing for mahseer, many years ago, so you need not necessarily pin your faith on these, to the exclusion of others which may have been recommended to you. The Jock Scott has the drawback of being about the most expensive fly obtainable. I have paid two rupees eight annas each for those of large salmon size, and the Silver Doctor is almost as expensive. These, however, were purchased from a tackle shop whose proprietor seems to consider every fisherman a millionaire, but I see that Little, of 63, Haymarket, charges two shillings each for these two flies, on No. 4/0 hooks, (scale at page 40 of this price list of this year) which is the size I use in big rivers, so in this particular item the Indian shop abovementioned is perhaps not so very expensive.

For fly-fishing you require a slightly stiffer rod than for spinning, because though you do not require to actually strike your fish, still he may reject the fly when he finds it is a spurious article, and you must therefore raise your top a little as soon as you see your fish take the fly, and the first downward movement of a very flexible top, thus caused, with its subsequent rebound, means a loss of time and the risk of a sudden and dangerous jerk on your line just as the fish is turning to go off with the fly. You will find it very hard at first, in the excitement of the moment, to avoid striking when you see the swirl of the take,—especially if you have been accustomed to trout fishing,—and this is the moment when most breakages occur, therefore remember to keep your fingers off the line; let the strain when it comes fall directly upon the reel, rod, and free running line, without the check which would be imposed by the pressure of a finger on the latter. If you have no slack line between your rod top and your fly—as of course you will take care not to have—the fish will not have time to reject the fly after taking it, once in fifty times, before he is hooked, but if you strike at all violently you will probably break your gut cast about forty-eight times in fifty, if you are into a decent fish. It may seem strange to you, but it is a fact all the same, that with practice you can throw a fly further than you can a spoon, while the runs which you would ordinarily fish with a fly seldom require you to cover so much water as when spinning, so that if you habitually use a sixteen foot rod for spinning, you may use a fifteen, or even fourteen and a half foot rod, for fly fishing. And now we come to the manner of working the fly upon the water. There are two ways of doing this, and good fishermen frequently differ as to which of these is the better way. One is, to cast the fly out straight opposite you, and allow it to travel steadily and smoothly down stream until it is time to make a fresh cast; the other is, to cast the fly out in the same way, and to work it with a slight "sink and draw" movement, as it travels down stream. Mr. Thomas, in "The Rod in India," recommends the former method. I hope I may not be considered presumptuous if I differ from him and prefer the latter. After all, he practically admits that he is not in favour of fly fishing for mahseer at all, and that his experience in this respect is somewhat limited. On the other hand, ever since I discovered that mahseer were to be taken on a fly I have taken advantage of every favourable opportunity to use one. I have given both methods fair and honest trial and I believe I have taken quite five fish by the "sink and draw" method, to one by the other style, but it must not be overdone. If you can follow the fly plainly with your eye, you will see that with a straight line out, a very slight movement of your rod top causes a considerable movement of the fly, as the latter is travelling down stream all the time, and is considerably more affected than it would be if you were working it in still water, and you should never let the movement amount to a succession of jerks. I find the best way is to cause your rod tip to sway very gently up and down, as though it were distantly bowing to the fly on its journey down the stream. This can be effected by a slow, gentle, and regular up and down movement of the right hand; three or four inches is sufficient. The swifter the stream, the more gentle should be the movement. It is impossible to say why a mahseer should take a fly, since the latter is made in imitation of no winged insect in existence, but this is a matter which has also puzzled salmon fishermen at home for many generations, and we must just accept the fact that they do take it, and be thankful. At the risk of being written down an ass, or if you are charitably disposed, as nothing worse than a harmless enthusiast, I unblushingly admit that I would sooner take a fish from 4lbs. and upwards, on a fly, than one double the size on any other bait. To me the pleasure of following the fly with your eye—(or the gut cast, as close to the fly as possible)—of seeing the swirl of a rising fish and perhaps getting a glimpse of shoulder or fin or gleaming belly, and of seeing and feeling the line tightening, is infinitely superior to the sharp shock caused by the taking of an unseen spinning bait far below the surface, while apart from this, the possibilities seem so much greater. The pleasant memories of taking, as I have done, a dozen mahseer running from one to five pound in a clear stream, in a couple of hours, with a single-handed ten foot trout rod, and a fly of large trout size, when a spoon would have been almost useless, are just as valued and as lasting as those of the taking of heavy fish on a spoon or natural bait, working at a depth of six to twelve feet, or even more, under water.

Flies for Indian fishing should always be tied on eyed hooks. There should be no exception to this, at any rate as regards mahseer fishing. Flies tied on gut, obtained from the very best makers, will draw sooner or later, generally sooner, in an Indian climate. The eyes may be either turned up or turned down. Personally, I prefer them turned down, but whichever you prefer always mention the sort when sending an order to a tackle shop. Flies of the very smallest sizes, suitable for taking the small species of fish running from five to eight inches in length, which abound in almost every small river and stream, and which are greedy fly takers, must perforce be tied on gut, owing to their diminutive size.

CARD QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shall be very much obliged if you or any of your readers will, through the columns of your valuable paper, enlighten me as to the following points of "Draw Poker." When a "Jack Pot" is opened can it be "raised" by another player, i.e, can the amount to come in be increased by a player even if he has not got the necessary "openers"?

Is a dealer obliged to declare what cards he draws to a hand when he deals them to himself, or may he wait until asked how many he has taken?

If the player on the left of the "ante" straddles, and all the other players decline to come in, who bets first, the "ante" or the "straddler"?

POONA, 7th December 1906. NAIA JANI.

[1. When a Jack Pot is opened the last to come in can be raised by any of the other players, no matter the strength of the hand; the raise can go on until equalized.

2. Dealer is not bound to declare how many cards he draws unless specially asked.

3. The age never passes although ante be straddled. In all cases the age or ante always bets last.—ED.]

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following incident may be of interest to those sportsmen who are accustomed to receive the usual rewards offered by Government for the destruction of tigers and other dangerous animals. Last July I was fortunate enough to shoot a tiger in one of the Madras districts, and sent in a claim for the reward to the Collector. After some delay I received the following letter from him:—

District Magistrate's Office.

Dated 13th August 1906.

SIR—In reply to your letter on the subject of a reward for shooting a tiger I have the honour to say that I do not think a reward is called for in your case. Rewards are primarily intended to encourage native shikaris. It is assumed that English sportsmen kill wild beasts for sport and not for rewards.

I have the honour, etc., etc.

* * * *

For District Magistrate.

This letter, with its peculiar sentiments and insinuations was just a little too much for my patience. The idea of native shikaris requiring encouragement while they are exterminating the game everywhere, and English sportsmen accumulating wealth by shooting tigers and getting rewards from the Government, must appear absolutely farcical to any one who knows anything about shikar. I knew also that no civilian I had met had the slightest hesitation about paying the rewards to Europeans, or in drawing them for himself. Fortified with this knowledge I forwarded a petition to the Board of Revenue and in course of time I received their reply.

Resolution 1 to 3 * * * *

The petitioner is referred to the Collector of—for orders.

Hoping that resolutions 1 to 3 were Mack Stingers, I wrote as directed to the Collector once more.

Dated 10th November 1906.

SIR,—With reference to your petition to the Board praying for a reward for shooting a tiger, I have the honour to inform you that the Board considers that you are entitled to a reward. The amount awarded in your case is Rs. 25/; from this must be deducted the value of the skin at Rs. 2-8-0 a foot. The tiger measured 8ft. 6in.—You are therefore entitled to a net reward of Rs. 3-12 0. From this, one anna, (money order commission) must be deducted. I have therefore the pleasure of sending you Rs. 3-11-0, which I request you to be good enough to acknowledge.

I have the honour, etc., etc.

For Collector.

I am rejoiced naturally in these days of bank failures to receive anything, and that the pleasure of both giver and receiver seems to be mutual. I am however perplexed—what position would I have been in had my tiger been 10 ft. 6in. I should then have had a reward of minus Re. 1-4-0, and one anna (money order commission) would have been deducted. English sportsmen out of employment are strongly recommended to adopt the lucrative profession of shooting wild beasts for rewards in this district.—

HIGH VELOCITY.

THE CALCUTTA RACECOURSE IMPROVEMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I, and scores of old residents who see eye to eye with me in the matter, have been much amused at the rumpus occasioned by the new arrangements on the Calcutta course. I am glad to find your paper has not joined in voicing the alleged general discontent; to us it appears that the discontent is confined to the few who have an axe to grind, a grudge to pay off, or some equally petty object to serve, and to a few of the ladies—God bless 'em—who, as the poet said years ago, are ever "uncertain, coy and hard to please." I cannot for the life of me see what the public finds to grumble at, except in respect of a few petty matters which (if they do not speedily right themselves) may be ignored or put up with.

It is admitted that the C.T. C. have not by any means completed the extensions they have begun; why not wait till they have written finis to their work ere we begin to pick holes? There will be ample room for everybody when the third stand is erected—surely we ought to be sportsmen enough to endure a trifling discomfort for a couple of meetings in view of the ultimate benefits we shall assuredly enjoy. But I am strongly of opinion that the outcry against want of accommodation is quite a mistake. The public have the best part of the old and original stand, which will hold several hundred, they have "down below" on the C.T. C. stand accommodation for several hundred more while on "top side" at least five hundred people can see the races in absolute comfort. In the name of common sense how many people do the grumblers expect to patronise these two stands on Cup Day? I have facts and figures up my sleeve wherewith to meet anyone who cares to discuss questions of "gate." Have any of those who complain even an approximate idea of the number of people who can be accommodated on the present space? With a bit of a squeeze some hundreds more could be provided for; and a little pressure on Cup Day would be only natural; it is the same on the big days at most meetings all over the world; nothing much to grumble at in this, one would think. I notice the public seem to be shy of trying the top tier; they don't know what they miss; it is without doubt the very best place to see the races from, and is moreover much cooler than lower down.

The C.T. C. have certainly taken a large slice of the stand this season; but I should not be surprised to find the space well filled later on by the members and their friends. Calcutta is comparatively empty just now, the big up-country contingent, the Xmas holiday makers, the globe trotters et hoc have not yet arrived, these will want a good deal of room in the C.T. C. reserve.

Of course that execrable BARRIER is the chief casus belli. We have all read about the peacocks and the goats, the sheep, the masters, the good enoughs and not quite enoughs, and we all know that the very sight of a barrier arouses in many breasts a spirit of opposition, especially among those of republican tastes; but after all said and done the growlers have been shut out of a very few yards of the lawn and if their feelings are wounded they might pause to reflect that the purpose that brought them into the enclosure should be to promote or witness sport and not to study the List of Precedence or render themselves miserable or angry by giving way to envy and childish anger. Besides it does not seem to have occurred to many that in order to permit of the Judges, Stewards, and other officials carrying out their duties efficiently and in comfort, and in order to permit of the fairly numerous staff which works the semaphore, the telegraph board, and other essential apparatus an unobstructed area between paddock, stand and rails is needful. This is practically all the C.T.C. have taken as far as my observation goes!

When I looked across the course last Saturday and saw the old Monsoon Stand memory carried me back to just thirty-three years ago when I landed in Calcutta, and when that trivial erection and its kutcha surroundings was all we could boast of. I have never missed a Calcutta race meeting during all those years and a rapid review of what has been done in that time conclusively proves that the C.T.C. has done a tremendous lot for racing, for owners and all connected with the business of the turf as well as for the public. This year they have erected two stands that challenge comparison with the best on both sides of Suez or "down under" and they have made many minor improvements. They are by no means through with it yet; when all is accomplished some of us may perhaps feel ashamed of the sentiments we now harbour.

Thirty-three years of attending the races entitles me to claim experience at least and I for one do not hesitate to say that so far from being inconvenienced by or being irritated at the innovations I never attended the Calcutta races in such comfort as I did last Saturday and I doubt if I ever had a pleasanter afternoon on the old course.

As to the refreshments, there is really no word loud enough in praise of the new order of things. At least, so say my wife and daughters, who declare that they have never enjoyed the races in such coolth and tea in such comfort. "How very much better," says the former, "to have one maximum tariff, and be one's wants what they may from a cup of tea or coffee and plate of sandwiches up to an ice and fondants, have them supplied in quiet and comfort at a dainty tea table for the modest sum of one rupee, than the usual rush, scuffle and final haggle, in the course of which a hard pressed and confused khitmutgar has been known in his agitation to upset a cup of hot tea over smart race toilette."

THE ANNUAL QUESTION—WHAT SHALL I GIVE TO—?

It is a great satisfaction to most people to single out an article of real and lasting utility that one can choose as a Christmas present for a relative or friend, young or old.

Giving is a compliment to the recipient. Selecting an article the recognised best of its kind is a greater compliment. And combining useful, lasting and attractive qualities in your gift will be regarded as a compliment to your thought and taste.

It occurs to us that among the things which may be said to compass these three compliments the "Swan" Fountain Pen stands about top on the list. It has great claims to consideration; it is durable, has perfect action, is convenient, costs a very reasonable sum and is suitable for man, woman, youth or age in every walk of life.

The "Swan" Fountain Pen is a gift which will not be merely admired on Christmas day and then put away and scarcely ever looked at again: on the contrary it will be placed in the pocket, or on the desk, and its first use will probably be the dashing off of grateful thanks to friends for their kind remembrances. The convenience of this valuable pen will grow daily more apparent and indispensable and as it is good for years of writing, the recipient will often regard it as a mark of the donor's regard Mabie, Todd and Bard's goods are famous for their quality. A fully illustrated catalogue of pens, ranging from Rs. 8 upwards, will be sent post free on application to 79 and 80, High Holborn, London, W. C.

We direct our readers' attention to the "Swan" Fountain Pen advertisement on the back cover of to-day's issue.

Saturday, 8th December 1906.

THE six races on the card this afternoon provided us with excellent sport. Backers did well, for favourites rolled home in all but the first event—The Hurdle Race—won by Adviser, who started at tens. The Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar scored two wins, Ballark finishing first in the Corinthian Plate and Dea in the Maiden Horse Plate. There was rather a mix up in connection with this race. Craigendarrie was placed third—by the Judge dead-heat with Meadow Saffron. It was then pointed out to him that Craigendarrie finished in the ruck and Santa Maria had passed the post level with Meadow Saffron. Accordingly the decision was reversed and Santa Maria given third place. Meanwhile the all right bell had been rung and the bookmakers and totalisator were paying out on Craigendarrie. Further Santa Maria's jockey had presented himself but had not been weighed in. Nevertheless the Stewards presumed his weight was correct and directed the bookmakers and totalisator to pay out over Santa Maria. Further comments anent this subject and details of the racing will be found in our Sporting Notes. Results:—

THE BANGALORE GYMKHANA RACES.

Saturday, 8th December 1906.

THERE was a lot of fun to-day, including two good finishes. In several instances fields were quite good and there were four or five "G. R.'s" distinctly above the average. One of these was Mr. Burmester, a young officer who has not been much heard of in this line hitherto. But he rode an uncommonly well-judged race on Boris, and will probably make his mark by and bye. Colonel O'Brien and the officers of the 14th Hussars were "At Home," and Colonel Jones, Colonel Brereton, Major Stephen, Mr. Pidgeon and Mr. Gwyer assisted very kindly in the offices of Starter, Time-keeper, Judge, Clerk of the Scales, and Honorary Secretary. LANG'S

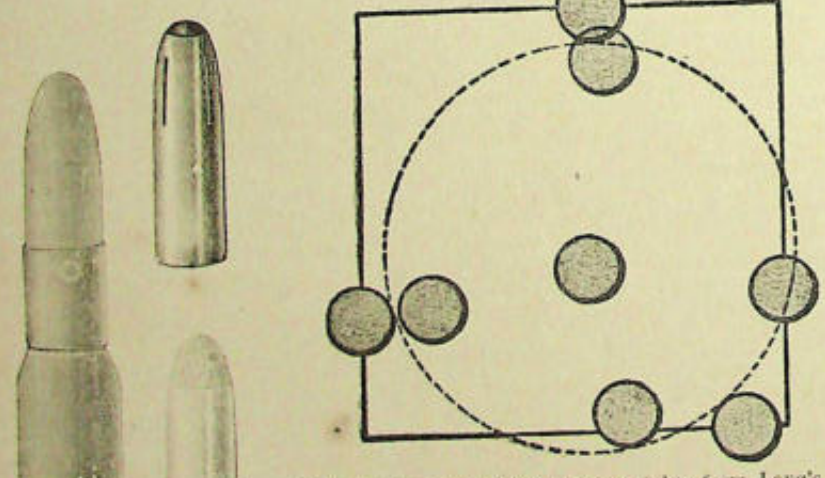
No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE



An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A rifle produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

MADE BY the Editor of the "Field."

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

"... about the rifle I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it."

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

THE great question for Manchester of rain or no rain was answered yesterday in the negative, to the satisfaction of an enormous attendance at Castle Irwell, which, despite a bit of a mist, saw the racing under very favourable conditions for the back-end meeting. The welcome change was of incalculable value to the executive, as the going, rapidly recovering from the dose of wet, was getting better every hour, and by the time racing was over might be termed capital, and should the change, foretold by a brilliant sunset, continue, that its luster will gild the finish of the flat racing season is a consummation devoutly to be wished. It was a day of hurry and scurry on the part of all who took a working part in the programme, as plethoric fields kept the officials at top pressure, and in affording backers and layers such a varied choice, the executive can temporarily rest on their laurels.

With the weather more like May than November, things were very pleasant at Manchester to-day. Big fields were again the order of the day, eighteen doing duty in the Ellesmere Handicap, in which Longcroft repeated his victory of yesterday. A score went to the post for the Ordsall Nursery, and backers failed to solve the puzzle satisfactorily. John Gilpin, figuring at the bottom of the handicap, won quite cleverly from Sheeroe colt. FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

The elements seriously interferred with the enjoyment of the game on Saturday, but a big programme was duly gone through, and there were very few surprises. Taking the three leading leagues, the home clubs had a large share of the spoils, seven in the Southern League and a similar number in the First and Second Divisions of the League proving successful. An examination of the figures in the two divisions of the Football League reveals one of the most extraordinary series of coincidences that football has probably ever furnished, and this will best be shown by the subjoined table:—

	League I.	League II.
Total goals ...	... 30 ...	... 30
Home team wins	... 7 ...	... 7
Home teams defeated	... 3 ...	... 3
Drawn games ...	... 0 ...	... 0
Goals scored by winners	... 24 ...	... 24
Teams failed to score	... 6 ...	... 6

In the Southern League the ten games produced 34 goals, thus giving in the three leagues a grand total of 94, as compared with 67 the preceding Saturday. Only one home club went under in the Southern League and two games were drawn. The goals scored by winning teams numbered 27 and by the losing sides 7, the four teams taking part in the drawn games being unable to find the net. Altogether eight of the twenty clubs were baffled by the opposing defence.

Southern League.

On Saturday the champions were at home at Fulham to Watford, unquestionably the most improved team in the League. Last season both games between these teams resulted in a draw, and this was also the result of the struggle last week-end. Each team has consequently been endeavouring in vain for four and a half hours to penetrate the opposing defence. The division of the points on Saturday was a fair reflex of the game because neither team deserved more or less than they obtained. It is worth pointing out that the defence of Watford is a great factor in the success of the team to date, only 11 goals having been given away in 13 matches. Notwithstanding the terrible under-foot conditions, there was a desperate struggle at Tottenham, and the result was in doubt until close on time. The Argyle played their best game of the season, although they had to admit defeat at the close, but during the first half they had to cope with a sparking line of forward who meant to obtain goals, and they did so. The two points which went to the Spurs are all the more appreciated because the Argyle bagged the quartette last season. Brighton and Hove, another team on the up-grade, and who had been beaten only twice in away matches, visited Upton Park, where last season they were defeated by two clear goals. On this occasion they returned with a point in their possession and strenuously as they worked for this they were a trifle fortunate to obtain it, the home team failing to win through the feeble work of their forwards in the neighbourhood of goal. Queen's Park Rangers, who had not won a match since 22nd September when they beat Millwall at Park Royal by the odd goal in three gave a glimpse of their old-time form against Northampton, the visitors being outplayed in every department of the game. The Rangers scored five goals without response, and this welcome win removes them from the twentieth to the eighteenth place in the table. Crystal Palace suited themselves admirably to the conditions at home against Millwall and were always the better team. It was a capital performance to beat the Dockers by three clear goals and this win will act as a much needed stimulant to the Palace.

It was quite in accordance with expectations that Southampton should repeat their last year's victory over Reading at the Dell. The visitors, however, did not go under without a stern struggle. The forwards worked well in the open, but their shooting left much to be desired, otherwise there would have been a division of the honours. Taking the game as a whole, Southampton deserved to win, but no one would have been surprised had they failed to capture both points. The game at Luton between the home club and Leyton was curiously unequal. Playing against the wind the home side put on four goals in the first half without response, while in the concluding forty-five Leyton popped on three goals as against won by the Lutonians, who deservedly won, 5—3. Brentford again found Bristol Rovers too good for them at Bristol, the Rovers winning without unduly distressing themselves, but there was a hard fight at Swindon, where New Brompton furnished the opposition. The visitors failed to profit in the first half by the advantage given them by the wind, and when they made their effort in the second half they were safely held by the railway men, who made assurance doubly sure by popping on a second goal, and as a consequence occupy a place in the first half of the table. The sensation of the afternoon was the defeat of Norwich City at home by Portsmouth. Previously only Fulham and Swindon had returned from East Anglia with a point this season, and the Citizens thus experienced their first home defeat in the present campaign. There was no fluke about Portsmouth's success, the points going to the better team.

It will be observed from the subjoined table that, while Fulham and Tottenham Hotspur are respectively first and second, Portsmouth are relatively in the best position:—

League I.

Woolwich Arsenal had played five home games prior to meeting Stoke on Saturday, and had not once tasted defeat. Looking at the position occupied in the League table by the two clubs, there was nothing to suggest that Stoke, who last season prevailed by 2—1, would be the first to compel the Gunners to eat humble pie before their own supporters. The Potters had not won a match on foreign soil, but they had shown considerable improvement, and this, coupled with the fact that the Arsenal had scarcely of late maintained the high standard of the first two months, caused a little misgiving. As events shaped themselves there was no warrant for this. It is true, that the home team won by only the odd goal in three, but the score does not by any means indicate how the game went, Stoke having to play second fiddle, except towards the close of the game, when they rallied in fine style. Contrary to expectations, Sands was in his usual place at half, and played a capital game.

Newcastle United did not allow Liverpool to repeat their last season's performance at St. James' Park, and the Novocastrians were all the more delighted with their success because in seven previous visits Liverpool had only twice had to submit to defeat. Birmingham showed good form against Sunderland, and Preston North End were too good for Bristol City. Manchester City have a wretched home record this season, Aston Villa being the only club beaten at Hyde-road, and on Saturday Sheffield United went away with the points, their two goals victory being a capital performance. On 22nd September Aston Villa beat Everton at Goodison Park 2—1, but since then they had consistently lost away from home, nor was there any good ground for supposing they would be the first team to beat Derby County this season at the Baseball Grounds. Only one goal was scored in Saturday's game, and this went to the credit of the Villa. Everton did what was expected of them in defeating Blackburn Rovers, and Sheffield Wednesday romped round Manchester United at Owlerton. Sheffield therefore humiliated Manchester in both capitals. Middlesbrough obtained their second success, and their first home win, of the season, Notts County being well beaten at Ayresome Park, and Bolton Wanderers immensely pleased their supporters by defeating Bury at Gigg-lane, this being the third success of the Wanderers away from home this season.

This table to date is appended:—

LEAGUE II.

Chelsea went to West Bromwich on 22nd September, and won a great game by the odd goal in three. Since then they have lost at Nottingham, Burton, and Burslem, and their supporters had good cause for anxiety as to the outcome of their visit on Saturday to Leeds, notwithstanding that the City team have a poor home record. The Londoners were, however, out to win, and they took command of the game from start to finish. They were better in every department, and should have finished up with a bigger lead than the solitary goal scored in the first half. Chelsea gain a point as compared with last season, when the result was a goal-less draw. At Burslem Clapton Orient did not play with their usual vigour and dash and were defeated by the odd goal in five, Barnsley having a similar experience at Chesterfield. Stockport County surprised Burton, and probably themselves, by winning at the brewing centre, and Hull City returned to winning vein at Lincoln, the home team being beaten by the only goal scored. Wolverhampton Wanderers were well beaten at Burnley, and Blackpool went under heavily at Leicester. Nottingham Forest won in not too convincing a style against Glossop, but West Bromwich cantered home against Bradford. Gainsborough did well to beat Grimsby, and Chesterfield obtained the two points by obtaining three of the five goals scored in their match with Barnsley.

Chelsea are now well in the running, as they are only a couple of points behind the leaders with a match in hand :—

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH v. SCOTLAND.—National events, whether political, social, or sporting, lend themselves not infrequently to the unlimited use of exaggerated language. Thus it is that we are tempted to dignify the great Test matches, in which the South Africans will be engaged for the next four weeks, and the first of which was decided at Glasgow on Saturday, to a position of eminence and importance hitherto unequalled in the history of the game. Extraordinary interest was, no doubt, taken in the Scotch engagement—an interest which may be said to have penetrated every centre devoted to Rugby football. Fortunately the match was carried through in as favourable conditions as could be expected considering the previous 48 hours' deluge, the ground being quite soft. The attendance was put down at 25,000 which is considerably in excess of anything hitherto witnessed at a Rugby match in Scotland.

A loud cheer greeted the South Africans as they emerged from the private enclosure, and an equally cordial recognition awaited the Scots. There was little or no wind. The Scots defended the west goal. It was early seen that the game would be largely taken up with forward play. Neither side seemed inclined to speculate much at the beginning; indeed, in this respect the display was featureless all through, and possibly the closeness of movement was due to the respect in which both regarded each other's worth. Munro began with a mark, which was repeated, almost immediately after, Macleod kicking to the visitors "25." Pulled up for a penalty, Scotland were driven back somewhat, but by quick rush play the ground lost was regained, and for a time there was some pretty lively work in the Colonials' "25." A neat movement by the strangers took them to mid-ground. Here Greig pounced on the ball, and what with drops by Macleod and Walter, the Africans were again and again in a tight corner.

On one occasion Munro, instead of "marking" in a position from which Macleod might have placed a goal, went away on his own and made a feeble attempt at dropping. Incident after incident now ensued, and for a time the fiercest excitement reigned. A penalty was given against Scotland, but Carolin did not make the most of the kick and Scoular had time to put in a return. The Africans at this stage were having a look-in, the forwards doing some excellent pushing, but soon Sloan, with a kick into touch, transferred play to mid ground. This was the only time the strangers were really dangerous in the first half and yet they could get no further than the Scots' "25."

Brink retired at this stage suffering from an injury to one of his limbs, but he reappeared ten minutes later and threw himself into the fray as if nothing had happened. Greig was given offside immediately play was resumed, but nothing resulted from the kick again taken by Carolin. Every inch was strenuously debated and play, which at no time was brightened up with passing work, became rather monotonous; yet for all that it held the spectators spell bound.

Still keeping the Africans in their "25," the Scots made desperate efforts to get over the line, but if the attack at this point was brilliant, the defence was impenetrable. Walter was now on the run, and seemed to have the goal within dropping reach, but he passed to Macleod, who, although making some little ground, was driven into touch. The pressure was now increased, if that were possible, and Loubser was just in time to touch down, Purvis following up very smartly.

The Africans, who had been without Brink, were now at full strength, and on his return it was noticeable that there were five three-quarters. From a mark Macleod narrowly missed scoring a goal; the ball being so well directed that many thought he had succeeded. The Africans appeared to be holding their own a little better, Carolin and Dobbin putting in several tricky runs. Half-time :—

Scott opened the second half, and without any ceremony both sides were again busily engaged, the scrummages sometimes being of a severe order. First Walter missed, then Scoular, and had the Africans been up there might have been a score. As it was, it took Scotland all her time to recover, and thanks largely to Sivright, the home players were again attacking vigorously. There was some open play on the part of the Scots, Greig giving Walter a chance and the London three-quarter with a cross-kick, enabled Macleod to get the first try amid sustained cheering. McCullum was entrusted with the place, which, however, was too difficult to convert.

Stegmann showed his paces in a pretty effort, but he was brought down in time and later Loubser put in the biggest run of the day from his own "25" to that of the Scots, but Scoular was a bar to his aspirations. In regard to tactics and movements the first half was almost a duplicate of the second, with this exception that Sivright with five minutes to go, scored a second try, which, like the first, was not improved.

It is only fair to state that prior to this Marsburg met with an accident which was afterwards discovered to be more serious than was generally believed at the time. All was practically over now, and the whistle blew, leaving Scotland winners of a memorable struggle with the score :—

MATCH v. NORTH OF SCOTLAND.—The South Africans concluded their Scottish tour at Aberdeen on Wednesday, when they met a representative team of the North of Scotland. A heavy night's rainfall was followed by a day of bright sunshine, and the ground, although soft in places, was in good order. Carolin, owing to a cold stood down from the African side, and Dobbin played in his stead.

The Scottish forwards were brilliant, but the "threes" were much too slow for their speedy opponents. The South African pack were strong all round, and so also were the three-quarters, of whom Joubert was by far the best. Marsburg was superb at back. There was a large and enthusiastic crowd present.

The South Africans won the toss, and during the first half had the wind and sun in their favour. Right from the kick-off the Northern men came away in dashing style, the forwards being almost over the line in the first few minutes. Marsburg stopped a determined breakaway by the Scots. The Colonials could make no headway, so persistent were the North forwards in their headlong rushes. The home players had apparently taken their cue from the Scottish side last Saturday, for they would not allow the visitors to settle down.

Finally a nice punt by Joubert brought the play towards the Scottish twenty-five, and eight minutes after the start Marsburg got behind, after some clever passing by Dobbin, Morkel and Hirsch. The kick was taken by Joubert, who failed to bring the full points. The Scottish pack forced the pace capitally, but there was too much individual work, while the three-quarters played a purely defensive game.

Following a round of brilliant passing with Joubert greatly in evidence, the South Africans got through a second time. Melker getting behind. Morkel kicked an easy goal, and the tourists were now leading by eight points to nil. Before half-time Millar got over again for the Africans, but Morkel failed at the place kick. Half-time score :—

The Colonials opened the second half in brisk fashion. Marsburg had a brilliant run, but was brought down within a yard of the line. A minute later Jackson got away, and ran right through the North defence, but got winded just as he grounded the ball. He was soon brought round, however. Morkel failed to kick a goal.

Then the first passing movement was witnessed on the part of the Scottish three-quarters. Williamson ended the combined run by sprinting along the touchline, but was tackled by Burmeister a few yards from the goal line. Pope rushed up, however, and picked the ball from between Williamson and Burmeister and ran behind. Watson failed at the place kick.

From this stage onwards, however, there was only one team in it. The South African three-quarters monopolised the play, their speed and combination being brilliant. Burdett, De Melker, Hirsch, and Marsburg all scoring tries, two of which were converted by Joubert.

A final effort by the Scots brought no result, this being mainly due to fine work by Marsburg, who saved by kicking dead. Final result :—

North of Scotland (1 try)	3

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—A fairly interesting game resulted from the visit of the Irishmen to Oxford on the 19th instant. At the outset the visitors rushed the ball on to the Oxford line, but the advantage was short-lived, and the game had not been in progress long before Batchelor, intercepting a pass got clear away and scored a try, which, however, he failed to convert.

Oxford played finely afterwards, both forwards and backs being seen to advantage. A capital piece of work in which Vessall and Flemmer figured enabled Steinthal to get in, and Batchelor to add the extra points. Then Vassall went over after some capital passing, and just before ends were changed Batchelor went through and planted the ball underneath the uprights. Howe-Browne converted, and at half-time Oxford led by 16 points to nothing.

On changing ends Oxford had to play without Butterworth, who was disabled, and the Irishmen, taking advantage of his absence, at once assumed the aggressive. Following a fine dribble, Stewart at length obtained a try, which was not improved on. Thrift was conspicuous in a fine run, and the forwards following up the advantage, Quinlan scored another try, to which Aston added the extra points. Dublin pressed again, but without success, and Oxford thus won by 2 goals 2 tries (16 points) to a goal and a try (8 points).

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. WEST OF SCOTLAND.—The Light Blues showed greatly improved form all round in their match with the West of Scotland on the 19th instant, when they were successful by six placed goals to one penalty goal. Koop played the best game of his University career. He was always conspicuous, and was grandly backed up by Macleod (whose place kicking was excellent).

The Cambridge team on the whole are coming on fast, and should develop into a fine side. Pitt, who was still playing three-quarter, several times used his pace to considerable advantage. Young showed improvement, getting rid of the ball a little quicker than usual.

Throughout the afternoon the passing of the Light Blues was excellent; in fact, they seemed to do nothing wrong. They also backed up remarkably well.

Although Cambridge won by the large margin of 27 points, the game was not so one-sided as would appear from the score. All the tries were scored after fine dribbling runs. Macleod gained four and Koop two, but Koop, had he not passed to the International, would probably himself have scored two of those that fell to Macleod, but he wisely chanced nothing.

All the tries were obtained in the region of the posts, and Macleod had no difficulty in converting them. It was just before half-time that the Scotsmen obtained their points, Harper dropping a penalty goal. Result :—Cambridge University, 6 goals (30 points); West of Scotland, 1 penalty goal (3 points).

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—At Honor Oak Park, on Thursday, the ground was in a bad condition from the recent heavy rains. Guy's Hospital were at full strength, but Dublin were, unfortunately, rather weak behind the scrum owing to Parkes absence and O'Rorke having to come into the three-quarter line.

Almost immediately after the commencement, a brilliant round of passing on the part of the home quarters sent E. Morgan in with a try in the corner, Saunders failing to convert from the awkward angle. Afterwards the University settled down to hard footwork, and kept Guy's continually defending. Harper, Garstin, and Stuart worked manfully, but the defence was very sound. Thrift tried one or two runs, but E. Morgan kept his efforts well in check. Smart got his three-quarters going, but accurate passing was out of the question. Just before half-time, Garstin got over from a line out, thrift converting. The scores at half-time stood 5—3 in favour of the University.

On resuming, Guy's gradually overcame their opponents, and pressed strongly. Saunders put in one splendid dribble, and almost scored from it. Next Stringer had hard lines in not getting over, twice in succession being pushed into touch close up. The Hospital forwards were playing grandly, and gave their backs many opportunities. Jones fed Digby, and that player scored a clever try, for Saunders to convert.

Again and again the Hospital attacked, Mullins once getting over, but a try was not allowed. However, almost immediately afterwards, Monaghan and Jones got going, and the latter running finely, was tackled by Thrift close up. Morgan, however, backed up, and being as usual, in the right place, picked up and ran behind the posts. Archer's place kick struck the upright.

The closing stages were well contested. The Irish came again with a tremendous rush, and Harper touched down. The kick was unsuccessful. Guy's next pressed. Alcock, Pinching, and Mullins being most prominent. McEvedy also deserves special mention. Result :—Guy's Hospital, 1 goal 2 tries (11 points); Dublin University, 1 goal 1 try (8 points).

THE NOVICES' COMPETITIONS.

There was a good company present in the gymnasium on Wednesday night to witness the novices' competitions, which, owing to the length of the programme, were not concluded until a little before twelve, so that those present had plenty of value for their money. The boxing was probably the best that has been witnessed since the novice competitions have been established. Gartside showed promising form in the bantams, while the final of the feathers between Barlas and Middleton produced the best set-to of the evening. The Exeter man used both hands well, and was generally the aggressor. Perks beat Fenwick in the light-weights after a hard struggle. The latter shaped in much the better style, but Perks proved himself a glutton for punishment, and never did any defensive work at all. The middles were well won by Freeland, although Langley also shaped well, and in the heavies Hoerule was far and away the best.

LEAGUE II.

Chelsea went to West Bromwich on 22nd September, and won a great game by the odd goal in three. Since then they have lost at Nottingham, Burton, and Burslem, and their supporters had good cause for anxiety as to the outcome of their visit on Saturday to Leeds, notwithstanding that the City team have a poor home record. The Londoners were, however, out to win, and they took command of the game from start to finish. They were better in every department, and should have finished up with a bigger lead than the solitary goal scored in the first half. Chelsea gain a point as compared with last season, when the result was a goal-less draw. At Burslem Clapton Orient did not play with their usual vigour and dash and were defeated by the odd goal in five, Barnsley having a similar experience at Chesterfield. Stockport County surprised Burton, and probably themselves, by winning at the brewing centre, and Hull City returned to winning vein at Lincoln, the home team being beaten by the only goal scored. Wolverhampton Wanderers were well beaten at Burnley, and Blackpool went under heavily at Leicester. Nottingham Forest won in not too convincing a style against Glossop, but West Bromwich cantered home against Bradford. Gainsborough did well to beat Grimsby, and Chesterfield obtained the two points by obtaining three of the five goals scored in their match with Barnsley.

Chelsea are now well in the running, as they are only a couple of points behind the leaders with a match in hand :—

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. SCOTLAND.—National events, whether political, social, or sporting, lend themselves not infrequently to the unlimited use of exaggerated language. Thus it is that we are tempted to dignify the great Test matches, in which the South Africans will be engaged for the next four weeks, and the first of which was decided at Glasgow on Saturday, to a position of eminence and importance hitherto unequalled in the history of the game. Extraordinary interest was, no doubt, taken in the Scotch engagement—an interest which may be said to have penetrated every centre devoted to Rugby football. Fortunately the match was carried through in as favourable conditions as could be expected considering the previous 48 hours' deluge, the ground being quite soft. The attendance was put down at 25,000 which is considerably in excess of anything hitherto witnessed at a Rugby match in Scotland.

A loud cheer greeted the South Africans as they emerged from the private enclosure, and an equally cordial recognition awaited the Scots. There was little or no wind. The Scots defended the west goal. It was early seen that the game would be largely taken up with forward play. Neither side seemed inclined to speculate much at the beginning; indeed, in this respect the display was featureless all through, and possibly the closeness of movement was due to the respect in which both regarded each other's worth. Munro began with a mark, which was repeated, almost immediately after, Macleod kicking to the visitors "25." Pulled up for a penalty, Scotland were driven back somewhat, but by quick rush play the ground lost was regained, and for a time there was some pretty lively work in the Colonials' "25." A neat movement by the strangers took them to mid-ground. Here Greig pounced on the ball, and what with drops by Macleod and Walter, the Africans were again and again in a tight corner.

On one occasion Munro, instead of "marking" in a position from which Macleod might have placed a goal, went away on his own and made a feeble attempt at dropping. Incident after incident now ensued, and for a time the fiercest excitement reigned. A penalty was given against Scotland, but Carolin did not make the most of the kick and Scoular had time to put in a return. The Africans at this stage were having a look-in, the forwards doing some excellent pushing, but soon Sloan, with a kick into touch, transferred play to mid ground. This was the only time the strangers were really dangerous in the first half and yet they could get no further than the Scots' "25."

Brink retired at this stage suffering from an injury to one of his limbs, but he reappeared ten minutes later and threw himself into the fray as if nothing had happened. Greig was given offside immediately play was resumed, but nothing resulted from the kick again taken by Carolin. Every inch was strenuously debated and play, which at no time was brightened up with passing work, became rather monotonous; yet for all that it held the spectators spell bound.

Still keeping the Africans in their "25," the Scots made desperate efforts to get over the line, but if the attack at this point was brilliant, the defence was impenetrable. Walter was now on the run, and seemed to have the goal within dropping reach, but he passed to Macleod, who, although making some little ground, was driven into touch. The pressure was now increased, if that were possible, and Loubser was just in time to touch down, Purvis following up very smartly.

The Africans, who had been without Brink, were now at full strength, and on his return it was noticeable that there were five three-quarters. From a mark Macleod narrowly missed scoring a goal; the ball being so well directed that many thought he had succeeded. The Africans appeared to be holding their own a little better, Carolin and Dobbin putting in several tricky runs. Half-time :—

Scott opened the second half, and without any ceremony both sides were again busily engaged, the scrummages sometimes being of a severe order. First Walter missed, then Scoular, and had the Africans been up there might have been a score. As it was, it took Scotland all her time to recover, and thanks largely to Sivright, the home players were again attacking vigorously. There was some open play on the part of the Scots, Greig giving Walter a chance and the London three-quarter with a cross-kick, enabled Macleod to get the first try amid sustained cheering. McCullum was entrusted with the place, which, however, was too difficult to convert.

Stegmann showed his paces in a pretty effort, but he was brought down in time and later Loubser put in the biggest run of the day from his own "25" to that of the Scots, but Scoular was a bar to his aspirations. In regard to tactics and movements the first half was almost a duplicate of the second, with this exception that Sivright with five minutes to go, scored a second try, which, like the first, was not improved.

It is only fair to state that prior to this Marsburg met with an accident which was afterwards discovered to be more serious than was generally believed at the time. All was practically over now, and the whistle blew, leaving Scotland winners of a memorable struggle with the score :—

MATCH vs. NORTH OF SCOTLAND.—The South Africans concluded their Scottish tour at Aberdeen on Wednesday, when they met a representative team of the North of Scotland. A heavy night's rainfall was followed by a day of bright sunshine, and the ground, although soft in places, was in good order. Carolin, owing to a cold stood down from the African side, and Dobbin played in his stead.

The Scottish forwards were brilliant, but the "threes" were much too slow for their speedy opponents. The South African pack were strong all round, and so also were the three-quarters, of whom Joubert was by far the best. Marsburg was superb at back. There was a large and enthusiastic crowd present.

The South Africans won the toss, and during the first half had the wind and sun in their favour. Right from the kick-off the Northern men came away in dashing style, the forwards being almost over the line in the first few minutes. Marsburg stopped a determined breakaway by the Scots. The Colonials could make no headway, so persistent were the North forwards in their headlong rushes. The home players had apparently taken their cue from the Scottish side last Saturday, for they would not allow the visitors to settle down.

Finally a nice punt by Joubert brought the play towards the Scottish twenty-five, and eight minutes after the start Marsburg got behind, after some clever passing by Dobbin, Morkel and Hirsch. The kick was taken by Joubert, who failed to bring the full points. The Scottish pack forced the pace capitally, but there was too much individual work, while the three-quarters played a purely defensive game.

Following a round of brilliant passing with Joubert greatly in evidence, the South Africans got through a second time, Melker getting behind. Morkel kicked an easy goal, and the tourists were now leading by eight points to nil. Before half-time Millar got over again for the Africans, but Morkel failed at the place kick. Half-time score :—

South Africans (1 goal 2 tries)	8

The Colonials opened the second half in brisk fashion. Marsburg had a brilliant run, but was brought down within a yard of the line. A minute later Jackson got away, and ran right through the North defence, but got winded just as he grounded the ball. He was soon brought round, however. Morkel failed to kick a goal.

Then the first passing movement was witnessed on the part of the Scottish three-quarters. Williamson ended the combined run by sprinting along the touchline, but was tackled by Burmeister a few yards from the goal line. Pope rushed up, however, and picked the ball from between Williamson and Burmeister and ran behind. Watson failed at the place kick.

From this stage onwards, however, there was only one team in it. The South African three-quarters monopolised the play, their speed and combination being brilliant. Burdett, De Melker, Hirsch, and Marsburg all scoring tries, two of which were converted by Joubert.

A final effort by the Scots brought no result, this being mainly due to fine work by Marsburg, who saved by kicking dead. Final result :—

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—A fairly interesting game resulted from the visit of the Irishmen to Oxford on the 19th instant. At the outset the visitors rushed the ball on to the Oxford line, but the advantage was short-lived, and the game had not been in progress long before Batchelor, intercepting a pass got clear away and scored a try, which, however, he failed to convert.

Oxford played finely afterwards, both forwards and backs being seen to advantage. A capital piece of work in which Vessall and Flemmer figured enabled Steinthal to get in, and Batchelor to add the extra points. Then Vassall went over after some capital passing, and just before ends were changed Batchelor went through and planted the ball underneath the uprights. Howe-Browne converted, and at half-time Oxford led by 16 points to nothing.

On changing ends Oxford had to play without Butterworth, who was disabled, and the Irishmen, taking advantage of his absence, at once assumed the aggressive. Following a fine dribble, Stewart at length obtained a try, which was not improved on. Thrift was conspicuous in a fine run, and the forwards following up the advantage, Quinlan scored another try, to which Aston added the extra points. Dublin pressed again, but without success, and Oxford thus won by 2 goals 2 tries (16 points) to a goal and a try (8 points).

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. WEST OF SCOTLAND.—The Light Blues showed greatly improved form all round in their match with the West of Scotland on the 19th instant, when they were successful by six placed goals to one penalty goal. Koop played the best game of his University career. He was always conspicuous, and was grandly backed up by Macleod (whose place kicking was excellent).

The Cambridge team on the whole are coming on fast, and should develop into a fine side. Pitt, who was still playing three-quarter, several times used his pace to considerable advantage. Young showed improvement, getting rid of the ball a little quicker than usual.

Throughout the afternoon the passing of the Light Blues was excellent; in fact, they seemed to do nothing wrong. They also backed up remarkably well.

Although Cambridge won by the large margin of 27 points, the game was not so one-sided as would appear from the score. All the tries were scored after fine dribbling runs. Macleod gained four and Koop two, but Koop, had he not passed to the International, would probably himself have scored two of those that fell to Macleod, but he wisely chanced nothing.

All the tries were obtained in the region of the posts, and Macleod had no difficulty in converting them. It was just before half-time that the Scotsmen obtained their points, Harper dropping a penalty goal. Result :—Cambridge University, 6 goals (30 points); West of Scotland, 1 penalty goal (3 points).

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—At Honor Oak Park, on Thursday, the ground was in a bad condition from the recent heavy rains. Guy's Hospital were at full strength, but Dublin were, unfortunately, rather weak behind the scrum owing to Parkes absence and O'Rorke having to come into the three-quarter line.

Smartt got his three-quarters going, but accurate passing was out of the question. Just before half-time, Garstin got over from a line out, thrift converting. The scores at half-time stood 5—3 in favour of the University.

On resuming, Guy's gradually overcame their opponents, and pressed strongly. Saunders put in one splendid dribble, and almost scored from it. Next Stringer had hard lines in not getting over, twice in succession being pushed into touch close up. The Hospital forwards were playing grandly, and gave their backs many opportunities. Jones fed Digby, and that player scored a clever try, for Saunders to convert.

Again and again the Hospital attacked, Mullins once getting over, but a try was not allowed. However, almost immediately afterwards, Monaghan and Jones got going, and the latter running finely, was tackled by Thrift close up. Morgan, however, backed up, and being as usual, in the right place, picked up and ran behind the posts. Archer's place kick struck the upright.

The closing stages were well contested. The Irish came again with a tremendous rush, and Harper touched down. The kick was unsuccessful. Guy's next pressed, Alcock, Pinching, and Mullins being most prominent. McEvedy also deserves special mention. Result :—Guy's Hospital, 1 goal 2 tries (11 points); Dublin University, 1 goal 1 try (8 points).

Again yesterday grand weather prevailed at Cambridge. Parker (No. 3 in Lewis' crew) was back at his old seat yesterday, Fraser returning to bow to the exclusion of B. M. Arnold (Jesus.)

After all the candidates had received tubbing advice, the ships were launched and pulled in long stages of paddling, interspersed with bursts of rowing to Baitsbite. On the return journey they both rowed from the Little Bridge to the Railway Bridge, at an average stroke of 30, showing a decided improvement in form. Hoare, the freshman steering Lewi's crew, took a remarkably fine Grassy corner. The crews were coached by Messrs. B. J. Johnstone and H. M. Goldsmith, and were accompanied by the Rev. H. Sanger and Mr. L. H. K. Bushe-Fox. Latest weights :—

BILLIARDS.

When Dawson defeated Stevenson at Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall recently there were those who sought to belittle Dawson's triumph owing to the fact that he had had a week's "practice" on the table immediately preceding his match with Stevenson. All were agreed that the latter was severely handicapped on that occasion in meeting his great rival under the somewhat unusual conditions ; hence it was that their second match of the season, at Hanley, was looked forward to with unusual interest. Here the conditions were as equitable as it was possible to make them, for both were operating on a table that neither had seen before. The first day's proceedings added point to the justifiable excuses advanced on behalf of Stevenson on the former occasion, for, starting with a superb break of 435—which also proved to be the highest of the match—Stevenson travelled at such a pace that at the close of the day's play he had established the substantial lead of 839. "What did I tell you?" or "I told you so," were the remarks of those wiseacres who probably for the moment forgot the fact that Dawson's equilibrium is never upset by a little matter of this kind. And I am quite sure Stevenson himself retained no false ideas on this score.

Ever a slow beginner, Dawson went after his man in his usual dogged manner on Tuesday, and while Stevenson at times responded brilliantly, his rival had cut down the lead considerably at the end of the day. On Wednesday, it was a case of "diamond-cut-diamond"—the one determined to hold on to his advantage by all legitimate means, and the other equally so to get in front. As a matter of fact, Dawson did forge ahead during the evening, only to find his rival flashing out in brilliant style and going once more to the head of affairs. Although there was not a penny at stake there was what was perhaps of infinitely greater value—viz., the question of supremancy for the time being. Keen and determind were the exchanges up to this period, and, never a robust man, this probably had some effect on Stevenson, who subsequently did not put the same heart into his work as previously. On the other hand, Dawson fairly revels in a "battle," and once more catching his opponent on Thursday, he never afterwards looked back, and gradually increased his lead until it stood at over 1,200 on Friday evening.

Stevenson played gamely on Saturday under physical difficulties, but he was engaged in a hopeless task, and although outpointing Dawson throughout the day, he could do little more than lessen the severity of his defeat. And so ended the second battle between the giants of the billiard arena—a result which proves Dawson still capable of being spoken of in the same breath as Stevenson. What player other than Dawson could have emerged so triumphantly over such as Stevenson after that electrifying first day's work by the latter!

The re-entry of the famous Mancunian, E. Diggle, into the lists of money match players has not been a success from his point of view, as apart from the financial side of the matter, he has somewhat marred his reputation by a remarkable uneven and poor display. However, he has erred in good company, as the successful players against the "Twickenham terrier" in a money match can be counted on the fingers of one hand. True, the circle of players, he has fixed up money matches with is a somewhat narrow one, but the fact remains he has generally come out on top. The match just ended at Thursten's was strenous enough, but presented few features of interest from a public standpoint. Neither players approached anything near the form we know him capable of, and this in face of the fact that Inman three times exceeded the third century. The match attracted excellent "houses" throughout, a tribute to the personality of the players engaged. We shall probably see both to better advantage later on, and it may be they will give us something more worthy of their reputation when they meet in the tournament next week.

It will be good news to his numerous admirers in the South to know that we are likely to be favoured with at least one visit from Tom Aiken, the Scottish champion, this season. He is out with a bold challenge to play Harverson, Weiss, Inman, and Reece on level terms, and that he fancies his chance against either of them may be gathered from the fact that he is willing to stake £50 on the result. As will be seen from another part of this issue, Fred Weiss has not allowed the challenge to go a-begging long. Whether any of the others intend to take it up has not been heard, but as Weiss is the first to make a response, I presume Aiken will, in his usual characteristic manner, give the Australian champion the first chance. Aiken's wonderfully fine play in the tournament last season is well remembered, and should he and Weiss manage to fit in with dates, the match is bound to prove one of the attractions of the Metropolitan season.

The preliminary arrangements regarding a second-class professional championship, first suggested in the Sporting Life, are well under way. The players—W. Cook, W. Osborne, J. Chapman, and G. Nelson—who have given their adhesion to the scheme, have done me the honour of asking me to draw up rules and regulations for their guidance, including "Articles of Agreement" which all may sign. Needless to say, I shall gladly undertake the commission, and hope to formulate regulations which will meet with the approval of all the parties interested.

Hunting.

THE KARACHI HUNT.

THE season opened on 29th November when the hounds met at The Bunnia's Crossing at 7 A.M. Mr. Graham had ten couple out, and they looked very fit and well after their summering at Quetta. A fairly good field turned out, including Mr. Lucas, Colonel Travers, Captain Lawrence and others. The fair sex were represented by Mrs. Graham and Mrs. Travers.

The Master commenced by drawing Alli's Khet and the Guavas. The morning was singularly hot and dry and it was evident from the first that scent was bad. The hounds hunted well—and made the most of a catchy scent. Our jack ran towards the Ruined Cottage, where we lost him.

Drawing the Small Bund, we got on to the line of another, and ran slowly towards the hills, where the hounds were whipped off. On our way home, we picked up a line and ran smartly to Graham's Spinney—whence three jacks had been viewed away. But it was getting late—and scent had gone from bad to worse, so the hounds were whipped off homewards.

On 2nd December the meet was fixed for The Chokidar's Khete, at 7-15 A.M. Only a very small field turned out, but they were rewarded for their early rise by a capital morning's sport. We found towards the far end of the Chokidar's Khet and the hounds ran, with a crash of music, across the open towards the Pinjrapol.—Turning sharp left handed, the hounds ran strongly through Pinjrapol fields, and on, through the long grass until they ran out of scent on the rocky hills beyond. A wide cast to the left put the hounds right again, and they ran, hunting nicely and with lots of music, towards Oomer Dosal's Khet. They rattled our jack through this, but the bare ground beyond gave him his chance, and we followed him slowly towards the river bed. This he had crossed, setting his mask for Maggar Pir Hills. A fine gallop took us within a mile of the hills, but it was getting very hot, and the hounds were badly in want of water, and were feeling the heat, so the master whipped off, and watered near a village. Hearing that the jack was close in front he quickly pushed on, and regaining the line, the hounds ran keenly, and it looked as if the fate of the rover was sealed, but the respite he had received, when the hounds were watered—short though it was—was sufficient to enable him to save his brush. The hounds were whipped off about 9, after a run lasting in all 1 hour 20 minutes, 10 miles from kennels. The morning was cold to start with, but it soon became very hot and scent was none too good.

SINDHI.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

WE had a fine cool morning on Sunday last, the 2nd instant when the meet was fixed to take place at St. Thomas' Mount. There was capital sport also, the only fault that could be found with the day being that there were too many jacks about! The Master trotted from the meet to Sheepshead Covert and hounds flashed on a line on the maidan, evidently that of a jack who was returning to covert from the cantonment. In the covert they soon had him moving and after a little delay he broke towards the river and ran parallel with the bank in the direction of Pallavaram for half a mile or so. Then he turned sharp in a clump of jungle and went back to Sheepshead Covert. He had evidently not thought of staying there, however, for hounds carried his line right through the covert and away across the open for Scavenger. Across the maidan they were going at racing speed and the field, who had been delayed in getting round the covert, were well left. In Scavenger the pace slackened, but hounds ran their jack at a good, holding pace, the length of the covert and across the Poonamallee Road near Nantambakam Bridge. The pace continued good as far as the Porakapillais on the edge of the Butts plain, but here the jack turned short back and made again for Scavenger. Unfortunately a single hound got ahead of the line and the rest of the pack could only hunt slowly through Scavenger to the Mount end! Here there were at least two jacks afoot, but after some delay hounds carried the line across the river and slowly on towards Poonamallee, till at last they threw up. A wide cast recovered the line and for a while hounds ran well again, but the jack was too far ahead and had eventually to be abandoned.

Then there was a short halt after which the Master moved on to a betel tope, where a cat caused some riot for a time. Hounds were then taken on to the Porakapillais tope on the left bank of the Adyar river, where they almost immediately found again. The hunt which followed is very difficult to describe, as the jack made no point, but ran several rings in the open, returning twice to the covert where he was found. A sugar-cane garden in which he took refuge in one of his excursions proved very trying to hounds, but they eventually forced him to break, although, despite the willing, if misplaced, assistance of some native ryots, who tried to cut him off, he made good his point for his original haunt, where for a time he succeeded in eluding the pack. The Master now made an attempt to call hounds off, as the morning was getting hot. He was unsuccesful, however, for they stuck to their jack and got him away again, eventually marking him to ground in a hole among some prickly pear bushes. It was now half-past eight, and as there did not seem to be much chance of getting him out, hounds were taken home.

Wednesday, the 5th instant, was wet and there had been very heavy rain during the night. We met on the Kodambaukam Road at six on a dirty, monsoonish morning, with a light rain still falling and the field was only a small one, a good many horses being at the meet whose owners failed to arrive. Sport, however, was excellent and the few riders who did brave the miserable weather were rewarded by a very merry gallop. A noteworthy feature of the meet was the number of ladies who turned out. There were five present and if we leave out of account the Master and whips the male element scarcely outnumbered them. The morning was darkened by the heavy clouds and we had to wait until it was light enough to see. As soon as there was enough light the Master moved off into the gardens south of the road and from there on to the Camel Lines Covert and back through a veritable maze of well-fenced topes and gardens, all without so much as a single whimper. Crossing to the north side of the road, the Master drew more gardens with no more success than at first.

The outlying casuarina covert was the next draw. This is a covert which seldom fails us and which has often more than one tenant. On this occasion it came nobly to the rescue, holding no fewer than three jacks. Two of these slipped away soon after hounds opened, but they had settled to the line of a third and declined to change in spite of holloas in two directions. After hounds had bustled him two or three times round the covert, the jack broke at the north-west corner and they got away on excellent terms with him.

The pace was as good as need be wished and the ground deep after the previous night's rain, gave horses as much as they could do in order to live with the pack. Keeping to the open, and, on the whole, selecting the best of the going, the jack kept bending slightly right handed till he was going almost in a straight line for Madras. He was never more than a few hundred yards ahead, but the crops in the fields prevented hounds from viewing him till he took to a tank bund, where the going was sound. Here they got a view and finally bowled him over in a bush after a quarter of an hour of the very best.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

Y.M.C.A. vs. Caledonians.—This match was played on the Y.M.C.A. ground, and the home team succeeded in beating their opponents by four wickets. Going in first the Caledonians began in disastrous fashion. Smith, Rogers, Elliot, and Beer all being quickly disposed of. Rogers was beautifully caught left hand high up at third man by Dyer who had the sun in his eyes. On Christensen coming to the wickets a stand was made, his partner, Wade, keeping up his wicket pluckily Christensen, who enjoyed his usual luck, slogged merrily for 53, scoring his 50 in 13 minutes. Wade and Dimsdale made 17 and 12 not out, respectively, the former playing very nice cricket. Reynolds secured 6 wickets for 62, and although he bowled with much judgment, he was helped slightly by the ground which kicked slightly at his end. The Y.M.C.A. innings was noticeable for a beautiful innings of 44 by Reynolds. It was delightful to watch his off driving, and his powers of defence were amply tested by Rogers, who throughout bowled splendidly. Time found the home team with 101 for 8, but the winning hit was made just after the fall of the sixth wicket. It was really a one man victory for the Y.M.C.A., and Reynolds once more proved himself one of the finest "all rounders" in Calcutta.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

23rd November.

AGAIN has the serene calm of the golfing sea been agitated and convulsed by an all-important event. It will be remembered how at the conclusion of the great "News of the World" Tournament in the beginning of October, when Sandy Herd carried off premier honours, and what was perhaps of minor importance, the big stake, defeating in the finals young, Mayo of Chipsteads two young professional, "presumed" to challenge any other pair of golfers to mortal combat, and to make the challenge worthy of acceptance "The World of Golf" (this is a weekly pennyworth of news from the green) most generously came forward and offered a large sum of money as a reward to the victors. Then did those two old veterans, Braid and Vardon, determine to combine against the presumptuous youngsters, whose combined ages makes only 45 years ; a 72 holes match was arranged ; 36 holes at Walton Heath and 36 holes at Timperley, for the convenience of the enormous crowds which it was confidently expected would "spectate" the match ; "The World of Golf" chartered one of the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway's fastest and most express specials, which laden with upwards of 500 golfing enthusiasts steamed laboriously out of Charing Cross Station on Tuesday morning, 20th November. Those who know Walton Heath can fully appreciate the joy these travellers must have experienced when the Heath, flooded with glorious autumn sunshine, came in sight, but so great was the crowd that an imposing and authoritative number of amateur policemen, aided by the local constabulary, the typical stoical Police! could not quite control their movements, and once (at the 17th hole) a sliced ball of Mayo's struck the coat an onlooker was carrying and rebounded into a bunker. In the second round the rope was abandoned ; it needs too much to keep more than 4,000 men and women in its rear, but we must talk of the game or our available space will be used up.

* * * * *

The great feature of the play was the splendid long game of the junior pair, not that they outshone their formidable opponents in this department, but they fully equalled them ; seeing that one was "Big Jamie" this is no small tribute to the driving and brasseying powers of the "young 'uns." The style of these two is strikingly different. Duncan has the reputation of being the quickest player of all the "Pros" ; he is extraordinarily brilliant, with dash and dare devilness which all admire, whilst Mayo's deliberation and steadiness act as a splendid tempering foil and is just what is required in a foursome ; but they had during this 32 holes match three unfortunate incidents to contend with ; the first happened at the 9th hole in the first round when Duncan sliced three or four yards off the course and his ball was lost in the thick secretive bracken. At the 14th again a spectator through sheer carelessness diverted a slightly sliced ball into a bunker, and at the 17th, as before narrated, when they had a chance of squaring the match, the coat and the man conspired against the challengers. Then after an indifferent attempt by Duncan to get out of the bunker Mayo made the sensational stroke of the day ; those quite near by declared that tears of desperation stood in the Chipstead man's eyes, as he made his magnificent effort and with a cleek and through the blinding mist of tears (this sounds more poetical than golphical, but must be pardoned for "on dit" that it is true) he made a wonderful recovery ; but even this did not help to win the hole. Is it meet that I should describe the strokes from start to finish: 36 holes as played alternately by the four great golfers? or shall these remarks deal more with the generalities of the day, and leave the items to the dailies? Of course Brandi's intimate knowledge of the course must have stood him in good stead and the veteran's lead of 4 holes up will want a lot of pulling down even when Duncan is on his own familiar green at Timperley.

* * * * *

In the crowd one heard remarks of all sorts, most amusing some of them were, but the generally prevalent opinion seemed to be that Vardon looked ill and was not playing his usual game. One cannot help feeling really sorry for this "pro of pros," but he has this consolation that should illness overtake him again, he has made himself such a name that while Golf endureth it will never die. Among the crowd were many and many a famous player, the referee was "H. L." (Mr. Henry Leach), Mr. Horace Hutchinson and Mr. Harold Hilton acted as fore-caddies, Lieut. Cecil Hutchison and Sir Thos. Parkyns were umpires, and the home club left no pains unspared to ensure the success of the day, whilst truly glorious weather certainly did more than anything else to contribute to the enjoyment of all. Walton Heath is a very long course, the total distance measuring 6,322 yards ; it is one of the finest in the kingdom ; the greens are large and very true, the lies throughout are good, and the course has been laid out according to the now prevalent idea of how a course should be. With pot bunkers to catch the undesirable slice or pull and to succeed in making a good score on Walton Heath one must play real good golf. Anyhow here we must leave the foursome with Braid and Vardon 4 holes up and with their young opponents determined to do or die nobly at Timperley to-day.

Before the great Professional foursome took place golfers were by no means idle, despite the truly anti-golf weather which has been prevalent over the British Isles. Prominent among interesting events was the match between the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society and the Sunningdale Club, an annual excitement which is productive of keen enjoyment among the 12 a-side participators. On 10th November the rival teams met at Sunningdale, each being strongly represented as the subjoined tables show. :—

As was to be expected when both sides were composed of such well-known players, there was no great discrepancy in the result, and most of the matches were concluded not far from the home green ; Mr. Horace Castle very much at home, however, gave that strong player, Mr. Beveridge, no chance whatever and won in a canter 6 holes from home, he next biggest win being that of Mr. Ross over Mr. Falk ; but all this can be seen on the above tablets, and so as space is limited a few words must be said concerning another extremely interesting contest proceeding at Woking between that club and Oxford University ; in this the scoring was by holes and not by matches, which made all the difference in the result of the match, which was as below :—

WOKING CLUB.		OXFORD UNIVERSITY.
Mr. F. H. Mitchell	5	Hon. C. N. Bruce	0
Mr. T. M. Hunter	0	Mr. J. A. Robertson-Durham	2

Any reader inclined to dive deep into figures will see as the result of his investigation, that had the match been counted by the result of contests the visiting team would have scored a win, but as it was by holes the home team emerged victorious ; it is not for me to give my humble unsolicited opinion on the advantage of either method and so the matter ends.

The London Press Golfing Society, although of only two years' standing, is going very strong ; it comprises very nearly 100 members, which, considering the qualification necessary, is very good. On 3rd December the Society have been invited by Mr. Riddell on behalf of the Walton Heath Club to compete for prizes generously given by himself in foursomes against Bogey. Mr. Riddell has recently been elected Captain of this Society in succession to Mr. Emsley Carr, who has held office for two years. Mr. Riddell is a well-known figure at Walton Heath and is one of the staunchest supporters of a worthy cause. Really it matters not during which season of the year one is recording events of interest ; the supply of details worthy of comment is now lacking and it requires no small amount of discrimination to select what one thinks will be of interest to readers. Mr. C. S. Grace has resigned the Secretaryship of the Rules of Golf Committee, a very important much-in-request body, and his mantle has fallen on Mr. Thomas Law, Secretary of the Royal and Ancient Club, who, it is confidently expected, will carry out his new duties in a manner worthy of all praise.

SKITTLE GYMKHANA AT BANGALORE.

BANGALORE, 8th December.

OWING in a great measure to the efforts of Mr. A. G. Gwyer of the Carabiniers, who is at present the Gymkhana Honorary Secretary, we have had quite a sporting week. The Gymkhana races were preceded on Tuesday by a Skittle Gymkhana which much transcended the general run of such things, there being more "Gymkhana" and less "Skittle" about the events. There are a good many new faces at present in Bangalore so I cannot give a tithe of the names of those present, but the attendance was excellent and the fact that no less than nine ladies—Miss Goodrich, Mrs. Dredge, Mrs. Heycock, Mrs. Forster, Miss White, Mrs. Stephen, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Nethersole and Mrs. Muspratt were competing, shows that there was plenty of keenness. There was a tenth "lady," but "she" proved to be a gallant subaltern of the 14th Hussars, who made, it must be confessed, an uncommonly pretty girl, and the deception was excellent. But "Miss Cuddle" had evidently not practised the feminine art of tilting at the ring with a walking stick.

The various events are noticed briefly in their places, but Mr. Neave, of the Essex Regiment, put up a great performance in winning both the mule and pony races. It does not seem to matter much to this young gentleman what he rides and I should suggest trying him with a pig, were it not that wholesome pigs in this country are scarce. A really good polo player in Major Barnard, of the 30th Lancers, appropriately won the polo ball race, and it may be doubted if Bangalore has seen a better all-round man than this officer for some years. Details :—

POLO BALL RACE.—Competitors to hit a polo ball round a given course, and finish with a goal. Major Barnard, 30th Lancers, 1st ; Captain the Hon'ble H. E. Joicey, 14th Hussars, 2nd. Also entered :—Captains Heyland, Forster and Evans, Majors Hayes and Stephens, and Messrs. Napper, Hills, Spinks, Leslie, Boyd and Maydwell. Won very easily.

LADIES' BENDING RACE.—Between flags, 8 to 10 feet apart. Mrs. Stephen, 1st ; Mrs. Thomas, 2nd. Also entered :—Miss Goodrich, Miss White and Mrs. Nethersole. The two prize-winners came together in the final heat and Mrs. Thomas was actually in first, but unfortunately knocked down a flag.

MULE RACE—No Whips Allowed.—Mr. Neave, Essex Regiment, 1st ; Mr. Strickland, Essex Regiment, 2nd. Won by a length.

PIG STICKING.—First Heat. Mr. Hill (Royal Fusiliers). (Also started :—Mr. Maydwell, Captain the Hon'ble H. E. Joicey and Mr. Leslie). Second Heat. Mr. Gibbs (A. V. C). (Also started :—Captains Heyland, Forster and Mr. Napper), Third Heat. Mr. Spinks (R. A.). (Also started :—Major Barnard, Mr. Boyd and Mr. Raymond). Final Heat. Mr. Hill (Royal Fusiliers), 1st ; Mr. Spinks, R. A., 0 ; Mr. Gibbs, A. V. C., 0.

AFFINITY STAKES.—Lady to tilt at a ring—gentleman to take a peg with a lance, on horse or pony ; marks for style and pace. Major and Mrs. Stephen, 1st ; Mrs. Thomas and Mr. Cornes, 2nd.

SCURRY-BAREBACKED.—For ponies that have never won Rs. 50. Mr. Neave, Essex Regiment, 1st ; Major Barnard, 30th Lancers, 2nd. Also started :—Captain the Hon'ble H. E. Joicey, Mr. Hewitt, Mr. Mason, Mr. Hill, Mr. Leslie and Mr. Featherstonhaugh. Won fairly easily.

SADDLE-UP AND CIGAR RACE.—Competitors will start with their saddles on the ground and an unlighted cigar—to finish properly saddled up (two girths) and cigar alight. Mr. Spinks, R.A., 1st ; Mr. Raymond, Essex Regiment, 2nd. About a dozen starters, although several of those entered, scratched.

Mrs. Scallon presented the prizes and a real good evening's fun ended.

The Veterinarian.

PARALYSIS IN ANIMALS.

PROBABLY to the majority of non-professional readers paralysis in the lower animals will suggest an immediate ending of all trouble by slaughter. The professional attendant, even though anxious to do the best he can for his patient, may regard the arrival of the knacker's cart with a sense of relief as saving his client further useless expenditure. Paralysis is, doubtless, in all instances a serious matter, but many cases of paralysis, in bovines end in recovery under favourable conditions, and it is possible that paralysed animals are too often condemned where the cause is evanescent or the disease capable of amelioration. With regard to domestic animals other than the ox, there is very little difficulty in diagnosis, but the skill of the expert is often severely taxed to distinguish between pure obstinacy and paralysis. There is not an experienced drover who cannot narrate cases of obstinacy, where driven bullocks will go down and absolutely refuse to move, whether the suaviter in modo or fortiter in re be resorted to. Cases have been known of cattle remaining on the ground for a week at a time, regardless of the appearance of dogs, which, at other times, would cause intense excitement. It may, of course, be suggested that there is some physical cause for what appears to be only pure stubbornness ; but all the means available to the modern veterinarian may fail to lead to its detection, and when the animal gets up again no sign may be present of stiffness, lameness or derangement of any kind.

Where one of a herd of cattle lies down, does not rise and follow the rest in their movements, it may generally be assumed that there is some cause other than temper, and a consideration of age, sex and condition of the animal may assist in a correct diagnosis. In very wet rather than in very cold seasons in England the greater number of cases occur. In the winter now passing away, a continuance of wet weather and a high temperature appears to have had the effect of washing out much of the natural grease and skin débris, while the coat, in many instances, has not grown to the length it attains in colder seasons, and those cases of paralysed animals which have been observed have shown particularly clean white skins on parting the hair. The majority of the subjects have been cows, late calved, and more or less bare, but the well-conditioned are not by no means immune. While the greater number of cases occur among animals that lie out all the winter, the stall-fed do not always escape.

The symptoms, as already indicated, are obscure, but it will generally be observed that the afflicted animal will make efforts to rise, using the fore-legs effectively, but failing to bring into use the muscles of the loins, while the sulky simulating paralysed one makes no effort to kneel or otherwise respond to inducements to rise. After a few ineffectual attempts, the genuinely-afflicted will behave in like manner, and submit to cuffs and blows. It is essential, therefore, to ascertain from the attendant if such efforts have been made, and so avoid needlessly distressing an animal which would gladly get up if it could. To determine whether the will or the actual disease is the cause of the inaction, Professor Simonds, with his unequalled experience of cattle diseases, used to recommend the dog test, even in parturient paralysis.

Among the causes of bovine paralysis may be mentioned external violence from their fellows—the master bullock being the victim when a rival has displaced him or her, since there is a master cow in every herd—unluckily falls, getting into ditches, exposure to continuous wet, rheumatism, sprain of the muscles of the loins, particularly of those underneath (the psoæ muscles) ; constipation and pressure upon the great nerve trunks supplying the hind extremities, pressure of the fœtus acting in the same way.

Of preparturient paralysis there are many cases due, not to spinal trouble, but to the turning over of the calf and temporary pressure interrupting the nerve current in the hind limbs. External manipulation of the abdomen will often enable the experienced hand to feel the head of the fœtus, which, in the last week or ten days of gestation, appears to turn a somersault, and during its movements—or its arrested movements we should rather say—such results as partial paralysis, loss of cud, fear, and excitement are not uncommon, but pass off with the completion of the colf's movements, or as a result of unloading the intestines by aperients. In weakly animals, particularly old cows which have wintered on short commons, a preparturient paralysis confined to the hinder part of the body may compel them to remain down for many days, and even weeks, without other symtoms, and if pretty well fed, may calve in a recumbent posture and regain their feet afterwards, the lightening of their load and maternal solicitude, both probably contributing to restoration.

Besides the paralysis of parturient apoplexy, commonly, but erroneously, named milk fever, there is an extremely fatal disease, a form of paralysis in which the subject remains in possession of its faculties, the temperature continues normal, the appetite and digestion leave no cause of complaint, and, if sufficient trouble is taken to obtain it, the milk supply is not far short of what might be expected in a healthy cow on its feet. In some districts this form of paralysis is known as the "drop," differing, however, from the "fatal drop" of so-called milk fever. The period of its duration varies from two or three days to as many weeks, and in the great majority of cases results in complete restoration, although sores, from lying down so long, may have disfigured the animal on the more prominent points, or the loins have been rendered raw by all sorts of heroic remedies, some of which merit the attention of the R. S. P. C. A.

TREATMENT.—As paralysis arises from several causes, it is obvious that different remedies will be required. The treatment of what may be called sulks is usually adopted by drovers, generally without reference to the animal's feelings, but of that class of cases occurring among animals exposed to climatic vicissitudes, and specially to continued wet weather, an anti-rheumatic treatment is most promising. The primary difficulty is to get the bullock under cover. The ancient method of rolling the patient on to a gate still commends itself to many practical men ; a gate can nearly always be obtained and is readily unshipped, and harnessing a horse to it is but the work of a few minutes. The process will sometimes lead to the detection of a malingerer, who finds it by no means a pleasant conveyance. If the distance from the homested or absense of some means of transit make it impossible to remove the animal a temporary shelter should be erected. It is worse than useless to cover a sick beast up with sacks, as they are soon thrown off, and the patient is worse rather than better for the treatment. There are so many ways of erecting a covering which will occur to the practical stockman that it is only necessary to name the easiest of all, and that is, where hurdles exist, to get four of them, and fixing one in the ground at each end of the patient, to lay the other two on the top and spread over a rickcloth that shall fall to the ground on the windward side. Under such protection two or three doses of ½oz. of salicylate of soda and stimulating the loins with a liniment that will bear frequent repetition, such as soap liniment, is to be recommended. The best results have accrued from this treatment when rheumatism of the lumbar muscles has been the cause.

The paralysis of cows approaching the period of parturition, if traceable to movements of the fœtus, may often be relieved by exercise, an aperient dose, and a restricted diet. Of the aperients to be chosen at such a time the simplest will commend themselves to our use, treacle, linseed oil, and Epsom salts being as safe and efficacious as anything we can suggest, and if the loss of motive power continues and is associated with excitability rather than resignation to the situation, a dose or two of bromide of potassium, or an ounce of laudanum, may be advised.

In some of the cases of prolonged lying down which follow on parturition, there is a temptation to try the effect of slings, but they rarely serve any good purpose. The natural obstinacy of cattle has the usual effect of making the subject rest heavily in them. In a recent case of the kind, where it was evident that the animal could stand if she liked, the men in charge of the pully were ordered to give the cow a sudden drop, but not to let her actually come to the ground ; the effect was excellent, for feeling herself going, she put out her feet to save herself for the moment until, remembering the rôle she was playing, she again appeared perfectly helpless. The slings were at once removed, and next day the cow was found on her feet, and able to go round the box in either direction as quickly as any healthy beast.—The Field

The Story Teller.

SPOILING THE SHIP.

WE were a merry party on the night of Troutbeck's Leger, and the best that one of Yorkshire's most famous hostelries could produce had been circulating pretty freely.

One of our party had helped himself in no stinted fashion to the long price that the bookies had tendered against the "boy in yellow," and was jubilant in consequence of having had the courage of his convictions.

The usual pros and cons of the exciting struggle had been discussed ad lib., some declaring one thing, others another, but Archie Fairburn stuck to his idea that nothing short of an earthquake would have prevented his favourite winning.

"You've got the best of the argument, Archie," said the senior of our party, Chuff Barton, an old racing hand and thorough sportsman, "you've pouched your winnings."

"Yes," mused Archie, as he blew out a big cloud of smoke, "the hand that backs the winner draws the oof. I'm much obliged to our friends the enemy for laying such a nice price. Here's to their health."

He emptied his glass, an example which we were not slow in following, but as Chuff Barton put his down on the table he shook his head thoughtfully.

"When you've had as much experience of the game as I've had, Archie, my boy, you'll know what it means to go against the market."

"But it came off all right."

"For once in a way."

"Well, it was much the same with the favourite. What made you back it? She looked to me like a 'stiff' un all through."

The old man laughed.

"A fair hit, Archie, but she looked like the genuine article at the finish, and the older we get at the game the nearer we get to the favourite you know."

"Well, something had to win, and it isn't the first time by a long chalk that the bookies have made a bloomer."

"Right you are, my boy ; you just happened to strike lucky. It reminds me of a certain Cesarewitch a good many years back, when horses were backed for as many pounds as they are shillings nowadays."

"A story, a story," we exclaimed, delighted to get the old man to spin us a yarn out of his varied repertory ; glasses were refilled, and Chuff, after a preliminary drink and a final pull at his briar-root, proceeded with his narrative:—

"About the time I am talking of, longer ago than some of you boys will remember, there was a certain owner noted for giving the layers some pretty hard knocks, and taking it all round I think I can safely say that Jack Brownson played the game as straight as most men. He was not above throwing a bit of dust in the handicappers' eyes at times, but owners have to live like other people, and Brownson had a fairly large string of horses. He trained privately, and the stable secrets were well kept, though old Jack often launched out after his money was on and put his friends on the good thing.

"I don't quite know how it happened, but in the course of his travels Brownson got pally with a chap named Howie, and after a time they became almost inseparable. None of us ever liked the chap, nor could we make out what old Jack found in him, for he was one of the strangest-looking devils you ever clapped eyes on. We come across some odd-looking characters on a racecourse, but I must say I never saw anybody like Howie before or since ; he had a pair of eyes that seemed to go right through you, and I, for one, always felt uncomfortable in his company.

"However, Brownson and he appeared to get along all right, and things went on in pretty much the same sort of way for some time, until the summer of the year I am speaking about. Then the stable did not seem to be able to do right, their good things coming undone with the most exasperating regularity.

"'Having a bad time, Mr. Brownson?' I remarked, as we travelled back to town from Newmarket after the First October Meeting.

"He laughed in his cheery way.

"'It'll all come right in the end, my lad ; they'll not shout so loud by the time the next meeting is over.'

"It was useless to question him further, but I knew if I left him alone he would give me the tip sooner or later.

"'Left your friend Howie behind?' I asked. 'You don't seem to have had much luck since you met him.'

"'No, he hasn't been exactly a mascot,' laughed old Jack.

"'Funny chap,' I remarked. 'He always makes me feel as if I want to clear out of his way when he looks at me with those eyes of his.'

"'Ah! you've noticed that too, have you? Master Chuff ; he has got an uncomfortable way of looking at you. Something like the cat and the mouse business'

"'Exactly,' I said, and as Brownson didn't appear anxious to continue the conversation, we relapsed into silence.

"The next time I spoke to him was on the Saturday before the Cesarewitch, when he accosted me in the paddock and pulled me on one side.

"'Chuff,' he said, quietly, 'I want you to get me a monkey on mine for the Cesarewitch at anything over twenties. Can you do it?'

"'Easy as kiss your hand,' I replied. 'It's Barmeston you mean?'

"'Yes, the other one's no good ; you can help yourself to this, don't talk about it, that's all.'

"After a bit of dodging about I succeeded in getting old Jack's monkey on, and a hundred for myself, at an average of 'twenty-two's,' and having every confidence in Brownson's judgment, I reckoned myself on a fairly good thing.

"However, after becoming as good a favourite as anything else in the race, I had the mortification of seeing the bookies make a dead-set against Barmeston on Monday afternoon, and long twenties were on offer in the Ring at Newmarket on Tuesday morning.

"As soon as I caught sight of Jack Brownson I tackled him about the opposition to his horse.

"'He's as fit as hands can make him, my boy ; if you want to get rid of your little bit I'll take it of you. My advice is stick to it, and have a bit more on at this price.'

"I had a bit of luck during the day, and though I didn't half like the look of things, I followed Jack's advice, after seeing him book a big bet, and had a bit more on Barmeston.

"Well, to make a long story short, the more he was backed the worse they peppered him' but as the horses went down to the post the situation changed like magic. Everybody was in a hurry to get on Barmeston, and before the flag dropped he was absolute favourite.

"He simply lobbed home, five lengths ahead of everything, and I was one of the first to congratulate old Jack.

"'Nearly missed the good thing, eh, Chuff?' he laughed, but I sought in vain for a smile on the face of his pal Howie. He looked as if he'd struck a rock, while the layers had faces as long as kites. Jack Brownson had netted close on a hundred thousand over the race."

"What was the meaning of it all, Chuff?" asked Archie Fairburn, as the old man took a pull at his glass.

"Wait a bit ; I'm coming to that. There was a lot of nasty feeling about the way Barmeston had travelled in the market and old Jack got very sore about it. He said he'd got a good thing and had backed it like one. The stewards could see his betting book if they liked, and be hanged to 'em. It wasn't until settling day that I got to the bottom of the business. I called at Brownson's house to square up with him about six o'clock, and found him in a rare state of excitement.

"He said nothing until we had finished our little bit of business ; then quite abruptly he remarked—

"'I had a letter from Weatherby's this morning, asking me to call.'

"'The deuce you did. What did they want? Stewards got ratty?'

"'No ; directly I got there they showed me an order signed by myself to scratch Barmeston for the Cesarewitch, dated Tuesday night.'

"'A forgery, of course?'

"'Devil a bit ; it was my own signature right enough ; but, thank goodness, some careless beggar of a postman had jammed it between the sides of the letter-box, and they only received it on Saturday, one of the clerks happening to spy it. Of course I had to tell 'em it was a forgery, or there might have been trouble.'

"'You don't mean to say you actually intended to scratch the horse?

"Why, certainly not. Listen to what I'm going to tell you, and don't look at me as if I was a madman. I told that infernal scoundrel Howie the full strength of Barmeston's trial over dinner on Sunday night, and advised him to do himself a bit of good. What happened after that I don't exactly remember. I have a hazy idea that we went into my sitting-room, as Howie said he wanted to write a letter. I seemed to be acting under some influence that I was incapable of shaking off.

"'He hypnotised you,' I suggested.

"That's about what did happen, for when I came back to my right senses he was sitting quietly smoking, looking into the fire. During the interval I must have written that letter at his dictation. As soon as it was handed to me to-day I seemed to have some dim recollection of it.'

"'You're sure it was Howie's doing?'

"'Absolutely. As the letter had been delayed Weatherby's had saved the envelope, which was in that scoundrel's handwriting.'

"'Extraordinary,' I remarked. 'Never heard of anything like it in my life before.'

"'Nor I, and to think that if he had registered that letter I should have lost a fortune makes my flesh fairly creep.'

"'By George, that was spoiling the ship for a ha'p'orth of tar, if you like,' I remarked as I bade the old chap good-bye."

"What happened to Howie?" we asked in chorus, as Chuff relit his pipe.

"Nothing. Jack Brownson let the thing drop. But a few months later Howie got seven years for trying to get a big cheque signed on the same racket."

LAWN TENNIS POLITICS.

THE differences of opinion between the Lawn Tennis Association and the All England Lawn Tennis Club at Wimbledon have been settled, at all events for a time. The Annual General Meeting of the Lawn Tennis Association furnished opportunity for discussing the points at issue and of that opportunity due advantage was taken: but in a fashion which resulted rather in debate than in definite result. The main points of disagreement between the governing body and the premier club were two: the first was a strong feeling: that the Association ought to have a voice in the management of the Championship Meetings; to which proposition the All England Lawn Tennis Club, which heretofore has organised and controlled these meetings, demurred. The second was of a somewhat delicate nature. There has for some few years past been a growing sense that the secretary of the All England Lawn Tennis Club should not be a man intimately connected with the trade in implements of the game: and this resolution was moved on the 14th November by Mr. Macfie. "That no person engaged in business as a manufacturer or retailer of lawn tennis requisites, either as employer or employee shall be eligible to act as referee, handicapper, secretary or manager of any prize meeting promoted by the Lawn Tennis Association or by any affiliated association or club: nor shall such person nor any referee, handicapper, secretary or manager, in receipt of monetary remuneration for services rendered to any such prize meeting, be eligible to serve as an officer or member of the council. All questions as to eligibility shall be decided "by the council." There was no secret whatever concerning the purpose of this proposition and the mover made none. It would have been foolish if he had done so in view of the universal knowledge that it was aimed direct at the position of Mr. Aschdale Palmer, who, since the year 1902, has combined the office of Secretary to the All England Lawn Tennis Club with that of Manager to Messrs. Slazenger, the well-known maker and seller of lawn tennis racquets, balls and other implements for the game However well Mr. Palmer may have discharged the duties with which the Lawn Tennis world has concern—those pertaining to the office of secretary to the principal club in England—and his assiduity and capacity have never been called in question, we cannot get away from the fact that such a combination of occupation is wholly undesirable. Mr. Palmer in his vigorous speech at the meeting defended his dual position with great spirit and candour. He stated, what everyone knows, that since 1902 Messrs. Slazenger had supplied the balls for the Championship Meetings, but that he had not attempted to influence his committee in their choice of balls; that he had scrupulously refrained from being present in the committee room while this question was under discussion and had never since he became manager to Messrs. Slazenger exercised the vote to which he is entitled. It is, we imagine, a matter of common knowledge among tennis players who follow the course of events bearing on the management of the game at Home that Mr. Palmer tendered his resignation of the secretaryship at the beginning of the year 1905, when the agitation against his position assumed definite shape: that he was desired to retain his office and did so, controlling the International Championship Meeting of that year and the Championships of the year now closing. Mr. Macfie's resolution was lost and Mr. Palmer retains his dual position; it should be added that a considerable majority voted in favour of the resolution when it was put to the meeting shorn of the second clause ("nor shall any such person" to "an officer or member of the Council" inclusive). Fifty-three votes were cast in favour of the resolution and thirty-five against; but the majority, falling short of the requisite two-thirds, was defeated by what the French courts-martial call "the minority of favour."

Frankly we regret the fate of the resolution, the innocuous nature of the practice as represented by Mr. Palmer's discharge of two conflicting duties may be conceded, but the objectionable nature of the principle remains. Practice may be more easily corrected than a principle can be set right; and the Lawn Tennis Association by a minority of favour have given their adhesion to the principle that a person closely identified with the trade may hold an important office in the governing organisation of the game on which that trade depends. Mr. Palmer has the firmness of character, the integrity and the loyalty to keep the interest of his business employers and those of the game rigorously apart; but we hold it a misfortune that the success which attends practice in this case should be allowed to regulate principle. The objections may become more clearly obvious—the practical objections—when Mr. Palmer is succeeded by a man who possesses his organising talent and knowledge of the game without firmness of character and the integrity which enable him to discharge a very delicate combination of duties. The L. T. A., in our judgment, have fallen into the generous mistake of legislating with an eye on the individual instead of on the interests of the game. The choice of implements for the Championships would perhaps be a small matter were it confined to those series of matches and went no further: but nobody who has an elementary understanding of these matters needs be told that it goes much further. Championship players in all parts of the country must, in their own interests, insist upon it that the clubs to which they belong shall supply balls identical with those with which they will be called upon to play at Wimbledon: no player of any pretentions to good style will, if he can help it, play with balls of one make to-day and of another make to-morrow. Variations of resilience, density, weight and texture of covering may be small matters to those of us who belong to the rank and file; but to the expert they are details of real importance and make no small difference in his game. Hence the necessity for fidelity to one make of ball and that the make selected for the Championships. Then it must be conceded that the best players in any club are those who have sway on its committee: their preferences guide the lesser lights; thus their choice of ball decides the clubs' purchases: and thus the privilege of supplying the balls for the Championship matches becomes a very valuable monopoly to the makers who succeed in obtaining it. It were surely well that the choice of the All England Lawn Tennis Club should be above the faintest breath of suspicion; and it cannot be so under the conditions which the L. T. A. in general meeting assembled have by its minority of favour confirmed: this body now consists of 37 associations, 50 tournament committees and 365 clubs directly affiliated; and we must assume that the votes of the delegates represent the sense of those bodies.

We have left ourselves little space to deal with the other principal matter before the meeting. The fact that the Lawn Tennis Association has no voice in the control or management of the Championships has long been felt an anomaly: it is as though the M. C. C. should be without a voice in the arrangement of the county championship. The A. T. C. is a younger body than the club at Wimbledon, and it has suffered for its youth as youth always suffers up to a certain point when the tables begin to be turned on growing decrepitude. When the Association was founded the All England Club surrended its copy right interest in the rules of the game with the very important stipulation that its Championship Meeting should not be interfered with. It is difficult to maintain that the spirit of this pact is observed in the resolution, duly carried, that the council of the Association shall have power for the future "to appoint not more than two of its number to act on the committee of management of any advertised open meeting in Great Britain." This proposition was admittedly most impalatable to the Wimbledon Club: but the feeling that the Association must be the supreme body has been made so manifest latterly that acceptance of the change or severance from the Association were the only alternative. The club accepted the situation with a good grace as becomes men of the world: and we conceive that the matter might have been settled with less heartburning had irresponsible critics said and written less concerning the anxiety of the L. T. A. to share in the supposed great pecuniary profits of the championships to the All England Club.

Sporting Notes.

LAST Saturday's racing in Calcutta had very little effect on the betting market beyond improving the position of Saloon, whom some apparently fancy even for the Viceroy's Cup. Fitzgrafton remains favourite on the strength of his work on the track, where he is the best observed horse that leaves the rubbing down sheds, and Mallard's defeat last Saturday has decreased the number of those who believe him to be the better of Mr. Apcar's pair. This horse has always been a slow beginner, but he surely beat all the previous performances in this respect last Saturday. Beyond the six furlong post he still lay absolutely last and was in consequence greatly delayed in threading his way through the field, far ahead of which Saloon was gaily careering to victory. In the Cup, very different tactics may be expected, and a different result. His public gallop must have brought him on considerably and at the time of writing it is impossible to desert such a courageous and proven stayer as Mallard in favour of a new comer like Fitzgrafton, grand mover though he has shown himself to be on the training track. On the other hand the deposit of stable money is a very convincing argument and if Fitzgrafton is selected by his own connections on the day of the big race few will venture to back their second string. At the present stage, however, Mallard seems to offer the better investment.

Dealing next with the outsiders, both Sacristan and Saloon have been backed. The latter will be asked to do something much bigger than he has ever tackled hitherto, and at the difference in the weights will have all his work cut out to beat Mr. Dartmoor's chestnut without considering the big striding favourites, Long Tom, Fitzgrafton, and Mallard. All may go well with the smaller fry until the final turn for home, but how often have we not seen the field telescope at the Zeerut Bridge opening to let through the horses, whose class and staying power will not be denied. Munderah, whose chance was a great one, has disappeared from the list, Cherson gave so disappointing a display last Saturday that he can scarcely be considered except as a possible place-filler and The Master's recent performances seem to place him in the same category.

Amplify, also figures in the recent lists and is undoubtedly a grand mare, but she has not yet shown her capacity to run the full Cup distance and at the present stage can only be warmly recommended to the attention of backers. As in the case of Watson's pair the state of the betting will, on the day of the race, indicate the stable opinion as to the relative capabilities of this mare and Saloon, and he is a brave man who disregards the settled opinion of any well-managed stable. One horse, perhaps the best of all, does not figure in the list at all. On Steinhager's English form he ought to be right in the middle of the final tussle in the straight, but the intentions and expectations of his connections have been carefully veiled. The horse does not look cherry ripe, it is true, and the general opinion as to his unpreparedness is probably tolerably accurate, but the cautious tipster cannot forget that in Pringle's stable stands a sound healthy young horse, who may very well be able to come out and run rings round all the present favourites for the Viceroy's Cup. What is going to beat this Irishman if he shows his English form? But without attempting to answer this question it is perhaps best to rely on the improbability of a freshly landed horse defeating a good-class field such as we are promised this Xmas. The detractors of Long Tom have never ceased their cries since his arrival from Bangalore. "No work, no gallops, no clockings" they say; how is it possible that this big horse will be ready to race on Wednesday next? But Ferguson brought him to Calcutta much farther forward than he was last year, and to-day he seems to have none of that gross appearance which was remarked by the critics shortly before his surprising victory. Moreover it is remarkable that those shrewd judges, the bookmakers decline to loosen his price and stand waiting grimly for the rush of backers who will pour in next Saturday afternoon if the old horse stands his preliminary gallop in the Trials without mishap. This, we believe, he will do, but we have to take the risk of a breakdown when selecting him at this stage to enhance our prophetic reputation. LONG TOM, MALLARD, and FITZGRAFTON should finish in that order unless STEINHAGER finds his English form, in which case he should beat the lot.

The Trials is a still more open race even after the departure of Signorina. Amplify, Blitzen, Contest, Annamulloch, Cherson, and Prince Lyon are all backed in addition to the Cup contingent, Mallard, Fitzgrafton, Sacristan, and Saloon. Of all the outsiders, Blitzen seems to stand pre-eminent. The mare was looking splendid if a little gross, last Saturday, and when her performances are considered it seems certain that she will be in the thick of it at the finish of this race. Unless Fitzgrafton is reserved for the Cup he should run well over this distance, but we cannot fancy Mallard in the first three.

There may be a difficulty about Melsom's riding Saloon, and until this is finally settled, the country-bred can only be tipped with a proviso attached. In any event Sacristan will probably turn the tables on him and anything that beats Sacristan will assuredly win this race. Writing three days before the race we place them.

and of the outsiders Prince Lyon might prove a profitable investment.

The new rule reducing the status of maiden horses was unanimously passed at the preliminary meeting in Theatre Road last week. Twelve Members were present, many of them officials and mostly, if not all, interested chiefly in first-class racing. There seems, however, to be no organized opposition to the change.

Two paperchases have been arranged before the Tollygunge Steeplechases to give everyone a chance to qualify their horses. Both are billed to take place in the sixth mile-stone country, where the galloping is open and the courses easy.

The card for the Calcutta Third Extra Meeting did not promise very exciting racing and the afternoon's sport proved somewhat dull. In the Pony Hurdle Race Olga and Footlight could make rings round the rest of the party and after suffering Mistlebird, fencing beautifully, to lead to the bend came away together and made a match of it. Olga seemed to win very comfortably. In the Peel Plate only two ponies remained to compete with Psalm, who was considered an absolute certainty by crowds of eager speculators in the ring. For some reason or other her jockey reversed the ordinary tactics adopted by the topweights in long distance handicaps and set the pace from the fall of the flag. In the straight the old mare tired and Robinson brought Silphoe cleverly home by half a length. The Stewards thought it necessary to enquire into Psalm's running, but were satisfied on finding that the mare had cut herself with a twisted plate and pulled up very lame.

The Wellesley Plate was interesting in that so many of the leading lights were exhibited. Blitzen made her first appearance this season and was looking very bonny. Her day of trial has not yet come although the gallop last Saturday will no doubt have served its turn in her preparation. The Master ran better and finished well forward, but Cherson both looked and ran disappointedly. One of the nicest horses in the paddock was The Cingalee, a very handsome chestnut mare. She has won a couple of good races in England and is worth keeping an eye upon in the January handicaps. Mallard and Saloon attracted much attention and most of the money. For all his hard work on the track, Mr. Apcar's horse was by no means fine-drawn and this race has done much to bring him forward. He began very slowly, lay last until half the distance was covered and lost much ground in threading his way through the strung out field between himself and Saloon. Melsom took the little country-bred to the front, as usual, and made the pace a good deal hotter than on the preceding Saturday, when he was so nearly caught by Sacristan II. Mallard failed to get within challenging distance and Saloon's admirers aver that Sacristan was more easily beaten than most of the spectators believed, or rather that he was lucky to catch the little horse at all, as the race was run on the preceding Saturday.

In the Fort Plate Airloch, another Lochiel mare, was made favourite and justified public confidence by winning handsomely from Manlock and Killeevan. The disappointment of this race was Lady Metal, whom her connections greatly fancied. They backed her down to three to one and failed to save even their place money. Their chagrin was intensified by the unexpected victory of Bundook in the Cornwallis Plate. This race must be marked down as a very decided success obtained by the new handicappers. Their compilation evoked any amount of betting and a great deal of money was poured on to Ballark, while Refuge Bay, Lord Boyne, and Jolly Roger were all fancied. The favourite was beat by a short head and the finish between the first five or six horses was as close a thing as we have seen for some time. In the last race Mr. Galstaun's pair realised expectations and there seems to be nothing much between Claribell and the Civil Service Cup except a breakdown or other accident. Rosanule fell and gave Mr. Bell-Irving a bad shaking, in addition to returning very lame to the paddock.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—On Saturday was held the first of the fourteen extra meetings arranged by the W.I.T.C. and, in regard to the success of punters, it must be a record. Six events figured on the card and the favourite in each came home a pretty easy winner, despite the fact that the majority filled remarkably well. For such an auspicious occasion as the opening of a racing season the attendance was very meagre.

It was a regular day out for Byramji, the trainer, as four of his charges came home; of these F. Williams, who arrived in Bombay on the day of the races, rode three. European jockeys who attend the early extras in the hopes of getting a monopoly are nowadays likely to be disappointed as those now here are Williams, Ames, Teddy O'Neill, Fisher, Reyes, Trahan, Robertson, Coomber, Bond, Brown, and Donald Greenhalgh who has once more taken to the saddle, and we saw a new lad in Mirza, whereas all the best native lads are starting at the beginning.

The day opened with the Pony Plate in which five came under the starter's orders and, after finding all the money, Comeback completed the cake-walk he had started in the Paddock. Recovery was thought to have a great chance but, when it was seen the race-card had made a bloomer of 10lbs., most of the cash for him was for a shop. Comeback came out again three races later for the December Plate, and once more spread-eagled his field. A pot of money went on Epitome, and her stable could not have had a worse run for their money. Leach, her trainer, rode, and I think lost any chance he had by riding the mare all the way to keep with the leaders. It was that disappointing horse, Baritone, that troubled the winner, but he continues to zig-zag his way down the straight in his endeavours to get on the rails on the left, and lost a deal of ground by finishing under the Judge's box.

That champion Arab, Bay Middleton, got into the Arab Pony Plate about a stone less than he would have, had Mr. Cursetjee had a finger in the pie, and won cantering by himself.

The Novice Plate provided a hot finish for places, Antica and Shabib dead-heating, but Mudlool came again when challenged and brought home the money in the fast time of 1min. 8⅕secs. Dublin won the Arab Plate equally easily after having the pace made for him by the two-year-old Gallopin, a pony that may do some good in half mile sprints.

Last on the list was the Old Year Plate with quite a classy lot of sprinters. It was known to be a moral for Sherali if he got away with the rest—he did and the race was over.

Following the death of old Dumbell, that great old racer and hunter whose best days were over, comes the news of a loss to Bleach and Mr. Avasia. Testwood did nothing much of late, but he had many a race left in him.

The racing community will be sorry to hear of the critical condition in which poor Tommy Tingey is from dysentery. He has been ailing for some time, but it is to be hoped he will soon pick up.

Lieut.-Col. G. H. Bull, I.M.S., and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Russell have been appointed Trustees of the Western India Turf Club.

The list of winning owners on the English turf during the recent season, shows that eight owners won upwards of £10,000. The list is headed by the Earl of Derby, £33,000; then Major Eustace Loder, £17,000. The list of winning jockeys is headed by Higgs, with 681 mounts, 149 wins, 109 second place, 87 third, and 36 unplaced. Madden comes next on the list, with 104 wins; then Maher with 103 wins.

The list of successful trainers is headed by George Lambton, who sent out 122 winners of races, aggregating £34,000 in value. The premier place in the list of winning sires is secured by His Majesty's horse Persimmon, sixteen of whose stock won 31 races, aggregating £21,000. Lord Rosebery's first Derby winner, Ladas, sires 11 winners of £20,000. We shall deal with these matters editorially in our next issue.

Too late for insertion in our last issue we received news of the appointment of Mr. R. Hood Wright as one of the judges of the forthcoming Calcutta Kennel Club Dog Show to be held at Lady Minto's Fête. Mr. Hood Wright, who is now living in Ceylon, is known the world over as the breeder of the famous Selwood strain of Deerhounds and as a judge—especially of the larger breeds—he has a big reputation. With him, as we said before, will be associated the Rev. H. W. Bush, of Jullundur. Mr. Bush is considered to be one of the best "all round" judges of dogs in India, especially of terriers and the smaller breeds. He is the Editor of The Indian Kennel Gazette and also Honorary Secretary of the Northern Indian Kennel Association. He has devoted a very considerable amount of his spare time for years to the furthering of canine interests in India and the East, and his services as a judge are greatly sought after.

We draw special attention to the announcement made by the Secretary of the Tollygunge Horse Show, which appears among the advertisements in our sporting columns.

First entries for the Lucknow Spring Meeting are published to-day.

We are very glad to hear that there is every prospect of a record entry for the Horse Show to be held at the Tollygunge Club on the 24th December. The entries are larger than last year and taken all round the horses and ponies promise to be, perhaps, of a better class. In the jumping competition for horses there are 30 entries and for ponies 22 entries. In the polo pony class also there is the large entry of 35 ponies—Walers—English, Arabs, being represented. H.E. the Viceroy has entered about 15 horses in the different classes. One of the features of the Show will be the hackney carriage class for which handsome prizes have been presented by well-known Calcutta sportsmen.

Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto have accepted the Club's invitation to luncheon. They will arrive on the ground at 2 o'clock and at 4-30 Lady Minto will present the prizes. A special word of praise should be given to Mr. Jamieson, the Secretary, who is entirely responsible for the arrangements and who has worked most diligently to make the show a great success.

At the general meeting of the Calcutta Kennel Club last Monday evening the officials were elected, the voting giving the following results:—

PRESIDENT:—Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, C.S.I.

VICE-PRESIDENTS:—Messrs. J. D. West, J. M. G. Prophit, G. A. Ormiston, and W. K. Dodds.

COMMITTEE:—Messrs. W. S. Burke, F. S. Kerr, H. Tremearne, J. G. Tredaway, D. R. Wallace, W. A. Ferguson, Warwick H. Smith, H. Bradley Birt, L. Watson, G. F. Greenhill, and two others to be elected hereafter.

HONORARY SECRETARY:—Mr. E. A. Lyon.

The rules of the Club were adopted, the prospectus of the forthcoming show passed, and some minor items of business transacted. His Excellency the Viceroy has been approached with a view to securing his patronage for the Club.

With reference to the recently issued official papers on the preservation of wild animals in Africa, Major von Weissman gives as his opinion that the main blame rests with Europeans. "I have," he states, "too often seen how every European who possesses a gun on board a Congo steamer fires in the most reckless fashion, especially at hippopotami, without having any regard as to whether or no he can possess himself of the animal when killed. I have seen so much big game killed or mortally wounded in this wanton fashion, and, indeed, only by Europeans." On the other hand, Mr. F. C. Selous states that 997 of every 1,000 elephants whose tusks come to the London market are killed by African natives. He advocated a close season for every species, and that certain areas should be reserved. In his view the white rhinoceros had been exterminated in Northern and North-Eastern Matebeleland entirely by native hunters. Professor E. Ray Lankester states that the blaubok was exterminated more than a century ago by the Cape Dutch; that the true quagga, which was extirpated in the seventies, might have been saved by protection; that the only hope of saving the white rhinoceros in Upper Mashonaland was by the most stringent protection. Then, in addition, the white-tailed gnu, bontebok, Hangal stag, and Guezeza guenon were threatened with extinction. The white-tailed gnu existed in 1900 only on a single farm in the Orange Free State.

Whilst on a tour in America, Mr. Alfred Butt discovered what will possibly prove one of the most extraordinary equine curiosities that has yet been seen. It is a horse that is capable of thinking, independent of any collusion in which the trainer might assist. Princess Trixie made her first appearance at the Palace before an audience composed of the Press, zoologists, and those interested in the science of animal education. The horse spells words suggested by the audience, makes simple additions and subtractions, and picks out from a heap of pieces of silk any colour asked for by those who care to test. Mr. W. H. Barnes, the trainer of the horse, claims that he has used the same education to which young children are accustomed, namely, by signs, and afterwards by an elementary system of Kindergarten.

The Evening News to hand this mail dresses up a very old chesnut of the betting subaltern in a nice drawing room garb and unloads it thus:—

"When Brown was transferred to another regiment his Adjutant wrote to the Adjutant of the new regiment, saying, 'We are sending you Brown. He is a nice boy, but he has a shocking bad habit of betting on every conceivable subject. Try and choke him off.' Brown arrived. At mess on the first night he sat next the Colonel, and, turning the conversation on Bermuda, made the astounding assertion that every white man who went there developed a curious green patch between the shoulder-blades. This rubbish annoyed the Colonel. He said that he had soldiered in Bermuda himself, and certainly had no green patch on his back. Brown, with all deference, offered to bet him £10 that he had. The bet was accepted by the indignant officer, and in the ante-room afterwards he pulled off his shirt. There was no patch. Brown apologised and paid up. Next day the Adjutant wrote to Brown's former regiment:—'Brown turned up. . . . I think we have choked him off betting a bit. Last night he bet the Colonel, etc., etc., ... and lost.' The reply came:—'Thanks for yours. Before Brown left here he bet us £10 a piece all round the mess that he would make the Colonel take off his shirt in the ante-room on the first night he arrived.'"

We remember this was one of the stories that confronted us shortly after we had tackled and thrown Mavor's Spelling, say forty years ago; but, if we remember, it was not a green patch on the shoulder-blades they looked for, eh what?

Several sportsmen have asked me questions about tracking, says a writer in Baily's Magazine. Some of the questions have been intelligent, and proved that the art has attracted more than ordinary interest. It must be distinctly understood that I do not pretend to be a Sherlook Holmes, but simply an amateur disciple of Oriental hunters in whom the art of tracing the movements of men, and beasts is almost inborn.

My greatest triumph in tracking occurred when in the company of Lieutenant P., R.A., after an immense amount of walking we found four bison on a high plateau. One was a fine bull, the others were cows which we had no intention of killing. The cows persistently got in the way of the bull; but we were patient, and at last I saw an open shot at 200 yards. P. asked me to fire, and I did so, hitting the bull behind the shoulder. The cows fled in one direction and the bull in another, leaving a fine trail of blood for 500 yards, after which it ceased to be found on the ground. I proceeded leisurely with P. behind me and never left the tracks. With no ground blood to guide me, and no black tracker to assist, I sauntered along, pointing out to P. the turned pebbles, the bruised grass, and the drops of blood on bamboos and leaves, which were my sole guides. After two miles we found the bison's droppings, eight inches high, and I knew I was going the right way.

Suddenly I confronted the bison standing on sheet rock. He was below a high bank, and I fired again, smashing his spine. My first bullet had not caused a mortal wound, and even then, though the bison lay helpless on sheet rock, he looked the incarnation of malice. He snorted at us, but attempted in vain to rise, and we therefore had an opportunity of approaching him closely before P. killed him. I have seen the same impotent rage in a paralysed tiger, but there is no doubt which is the more majestic beast in his death throes.

I will give one more instance of simple tracking which occurred to me near Delhi in 1892. I was hunting a rather uncommon black buck, one of whose horns was extremely long, while the other ram-like, described a circle and a half. The animal was very shy, and it was after midday when I had my first chance of getting a shot. Neither the buck nor the long shot is to the point; suffice it to say I hit the animal and wounded him severely. He travelled far, and I had but his slots and a drop of blood at long intervals to guide me. After tracking him for over three miles I found myself beside a small lake surrounded by reeds. No one was there except a solitary villager smoking a hookah on a mound. I asked him if he had seen the buck, and he replied in the negative. I went round the pond carefully and noted that at one place the earth bore a damp appearance, while it also seemed that some heavy animal had been dragged over the spot towards the water. I examined the place still more carefully, and found male antelope's hairs, both white and black, on the ground. There was no blood that I could discern, but with one other clue I instantly realised the situation.

I ran back to the native and seized him by the arm, and said, "Bring that kala hern (black buck) out of the water at once, or take the consequences."

The would-be thief did as I demanded without demur. The buck had been shot in the bowels and dropped by the pond. There the native had stoned the remaining life out of the beast and hidden the carcase in a pool. The absence of blood baffled me a little, but the trail of a single horn pencilled on the sand was what finally convinced me that my quarry was near at hand, and under water.

Appended was the state of the betting market on the Trials and Cup yesterday.

THE forthcoming Golf Championship of India, of which the qualifying rounds are due to be played on the 29th instant, promises this year to be more than usually interesting. The number of entries, as will be seen, is well above the average and all or nearly all of the best Indian players are among the competitors.

This year for the first time the number of those qualifying for match play has been increased to 16, a change which has met with universal approval. The tournament will be played over the full 18-hole course (for the first time) which also tends to lend additional interest and variety. It is too early yet to form an opinion as to who the new champion is likely to be. Many of our local players are at present playing exceedingly well and of these Messrs. Drimmie, Sinclair, and Mitchell Innes are perhaps the most likely to come out near the top. We are pleased to notice that Lieutenant Campbell has been able to come and defend his title, and if he can but produce the form which won him last year's Championship he should be very hard to beat. The entries are:—

Angus B. Crole.	R. L. Morgan.
J. H. Beaves.	A. E. Todd.
R. McLean.	H. Danks.
A. R. MacAllan.	H. C. Begg.

Mr. A. E. Todd, the Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Golf Club, has been transferred to Shanghai and will leave Calcutta next month: he will be much missed by many.

The following will probably represent the Behar Wanderers during their cricket tour at Xmas:—Messrs. W. J. Marsham, F. M. Luce, A. W. Bentinck, P. Hudson, T. Macnamara, E. C. Danby, C. G. Danby, Gordon, Brett, Lang, Pickford, and Sharling.

A remarkable scene occurred at Omaha, Nebraska, when "Kid" Wedge, the champion light-weight boxer of Arkansas, declined to take part in a boxing contest on the ground that he had been converted, and that it was wrong to fight, save in self-defence.

Wedge entered the ring, says the New York correspondent of the Express, in the presence of two thousand people, and astounded everybody by handing his opponent a tract, with the wish that he would read it carefully.

The amazed boxer seemed to regard this as a personal insult, and he promptly smote the "Kid" on the nose. Wedge then said: "We are told to turn the other cheek." He did so, and was rewarded with a terrific blow which sent him against the ropes.

"I have not been told what to do next," said Wedge, "but I guess I can pound you to a pulp without interfering with my conscience."

The fight which followed was much livelier than the one advertised. Both pugilists were badly disfigured, but the victory was given to Wedge, who promised to pray for his opponent. He has retired permanently from the prize ring.

The annual regatta of the Madras Boat Club will be held on the 26th proximo. The following is the programme of events:—

By way of practice for the coming Association Football Tournament at the Minto Fête a game was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday between the Calcutta F. C. and the Northumberland Fusiliers. The home team had a very scratch eleven out and were beaten by a goal to nil.

Messrs. Simpson and Platnauer, of Calcutta, have on view at their Chowringhee Show-rooms the gold medals destined for the winners and runners up in the forthcoming Football Tournament to be held in connection with Lady Minto's Fête. These little trophies are all they should be, artistic, appropriate, and valuable.

Harmston's Circus and Menagerie of performing wild animals—beloved of young and old for so many years in Calcutta—is with us once again, having opened last Wednesday on the maidan. It seemed hardly credible that the show billed to open on that day, would really do so, when on Tuesday one viewed a hopeless looking mass of wood and matting and canvas, with John Chinaman presiding over the chaos, on the Monday previous—but there, like Alladin's fairy palace, apparently rai-ed by magic during the night, was "Harmston's" ready on the Wednesday, right enough! The opening night was a record one, and in spite of swadeshi and other counter attractions, Harmston's continues, as it ever has done, to hold its own. The genial and ubiquitous Colonel Bob Love and Mrs. Harmston-Love have, in addition to other novelties, been fortunate enough to secure the services of the talented Frantz family, a troupe of acrobats, lately performing in London, of European and American reputation, who, in their own specialties, are second to none, and who are really worth a visit to the Circus, on their own account alone. But they are by no means the sole attraction. Many old favourites, after an absence of some time, are back with fresh turns. Amongst these may be mentioned the Wheelers, really marvellous in their clever manipulation of the bicycle; little Jennie Harmston-Love, now blossomed out into the tiniest circus jockey in the world, who does a very pretty horseback turn with her sister Nellie; and the enterprising Diavolo, whose "looping the loop" seems as popular as ever, though run hard by the comic wheeler who does "hooping the hoop" accompanied by shouts of laughter. So many and varied are the turns put on, the circus bill (barring its elephant and wild animal acts) embraces many charming items of the genuine "variety" type, and those who have not already patronised "Harmston's," are reminded that they will certainly get their money's worth, when they do. In addition to the three tigers already performing, two others will shortly make their début, and the whole programme will constantly be changed. The first matinée on Saturday drew a crowded house, literally packed with smiling rosy youngsters—happy small people to whom the clown's oldest and best worn jokes will ever be new, the sight of whose bright faces and sound of whose merry laughter are, to some of us, almost as entertaining as Harmston's itself.

As far as athletics are concerned, Bombay, writes our correspondent, is dead, though hockey and cricket will start soon after the next month. The team the Bombay Gymkhana is sending to Calcutta is practically made up definitely; Captain J. G. Greig will, after all, skipper the team and others are Major Deas, Captain Rutter, Captain Bradfield, Lieutenants J. O. Airey and P. Beaumont, Messrs. R. H. Spooner, L. Cookson, S. T. Crump, R. E A. Elliott and F. P. West. Leaving next Saturday, they play Ballygunge on the 25th and 26th, Behar Wanderers on 27th and 28th and Calcutta 31st and 1st and 2nd January. It is on paper an excellent batting side, but as far as I can see, they have a very poor attack to follow Major Deas.

At the same time as the hockey season starts we are to have a junior Football League to wind up, after two months, with a junior tournament. Mr. F. Hogan, the popular Honorary Secretary, is back again after a trip Home and tells me teams as far away as Calcutta and Madras have expressed their intention of entering. It is an excellent move to encourage the game as well as to coach the youngsters up for the Senior League; the same might, with advantage, be done for hockey.

The Northumberland Fusiliers brought off a very successful gymkhana on the Ellenborough course on Tuesday evening. Colonel James, Major and Mrs. Enderby and the officers of the regiment were "At Home," and there was a big gathering, including Lady Minto, Lady Fraser and a party from Government House. The Circus race was won by Mr. Kitson, the Polo Stick and Ball race by Captain Salkeld from 14 competitors. Mrs. Paris and Major Fishbourne were declared winners of the Royal Academy Stakes which was run off in four heats. The Needle and Pincushion race went to Captain Mackenzie nominated by Lady Eileen Elliot, Mrs. Stuart won the Egg and Spoon race and the last event, the Bridge Hand race, was won by Lady Ruby Elliot and Captain Rennie.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 30th November 1906.

THE agreeable task of compiling this weekly letter, dear Editor, like some other agreeable tasks has, I begin to find, a somewhat demoralising effect upon me. I detect a feeling of personal resentment against the calm and peaceful flow of life: regarding as one must the week merely as a reservoir whence to draw material for these columns, such uneventful calm as has distinguished these last few days, savours of aridity and waste. In this hour am I one with the harassed slave of necessity who racks his brain to provide the Contents Bill for the evening paper. Like him have I acquired a morbid taste for scandal, murder, and sudden death: unlike him I have no use for Battle, for Reuter steals the thunder, and enow battle there is none without the purlieus of Westminster. There rages battle and to spare after the manner approved of washerwomen, seasoning little labour with much talk.

Truly the way of your correspondent this week is hard. You know that the Christmas season has broken, Christmas numbers and all, with its accustomed severity, because it is the recognised habit of the Christmas season to begin early and get itself well over by the 26th December. You know that the martyrs of Holloway, the shining band of suffragists, have been unexpectedly released, half their sentences having been remitted. I am inclined to think that the month's imprisonment—such as it was—may have done them some good. They have had visitors at the rate of three and one-third per day, including Mr. Keir Hardie, who brought chocolates; perhaps it was because Mr. Keir Hardie thus brought healing on his wings or in his pockets that not one of the band protested against being turned out. Martyrdom tempered by chocolate creams has not the ring of true martyrdom. Anyway, one of the martyrs so far forgot herself, or her part, as to tell a sympathetic reporter she was very glad to be out again.

The Report of the Commons Committee on Income-tax has been published; it is not a very illuminating work and differs from the usual Report in so far as it guardedly mentions certain measures as "practicable" but refrains from making recommendations. It would be practicable to extend the present system of abatements to incomes of £1,000, or even more. It would be practicable to introduce a "super tax" on incomes over £5,000. It would be practicable to differentiate between earned and unearned incomes, especially as regards incomes not exceeding £3,000: and the Committee thinks a "compulsory personal declaration" of income would go far to prevent evasion. The Committee recognises the difficulties which surround the whole question; in fact as one reads one gathers that its recognition has been so complete, the Committee prefers to say as little as it decently can on the whole subject.

The sentence of five years' penal servitude passed by the Portsmouth court-martial on the ringleader of the mutinous stokers, of course gave some of the champions of "freedom" an opportunity to heckle the Secretary to the Admiralty about the order "On the knee!" and also to challenge the propriety of courts-martial altogether. Where oh where, would discipline be, with the unmitigated radical as top dog? The sentence was admittedly a heavy one, and Mr. Robertson's statement that it was open to revision quite satisfied the great majority. Ten stokers in all were tried and the sentences of the nine seem lenient enough. Mr. Collard, the officer who gave the order that made all the pother, will I suppose get into trouble: it seems that he said "go down on your knee, you dog," to a fractious stoker, an indiscretion likely to cost him dear. The wont of the whole business was the apathy shown by the petty officers.

The new Lord Mayor has lost little time in organising a scheme which, as many people have known for long past, has been uppermost in his mind for some years. To wit, the establishment of an Institution, preferably somewhere on the coast, for the reception and technical eduction of crippled children. For several Christmases we have been familiar with Alderman Treloar's Hamper scheme, which involves the employment of dozens of huge furniture vans: this has been his method of expressing his practical sympathy with the cripples. Now he appeals for £60,000 to start the Home of his ambition, and I have no doubt he will

The publication of the "attack" made by certain of the electors of Thanet on Mr. H. Marks, gave rise to a somewhat sensational scene in the House on Monday when Mr. Redsdale brought it up as a point of privilege. The attack consists of a review of the libel cases wherein Mr. Marks figured not very successfully as regards clearance of his character as a financier and a private individual: and a vigorous objection to him as representative of the division. Mr. Marks, looking very pale, rose to say that he had been re-elected by a large majority, thus proving the confidence of the electors, and that he intended to take steps "consistent with his honour." So it is to be inferred that the old charges will be thrashed out again: you would remember the Financial News case and subsequent proceedings, no doubt.

Vigorous endeavours have been made for some weeks past to work up a scare in connection with St. Paul's and the new L. C. C. drainage works. The Cathedral, it was stated, had shown in its fabric, signs of injury resulting from the driving of a main sewer; subsidence, the alarmists affirmed, had actually been observed by competent men. Either the Cathedral or the competent men were a little premature, as it now transpires that the sewer has not, so far, come within two miles of St. Paul's. When it is completed it will pass 35 or 40 feet in a horizontal line from the building, and 40 feet below the level of its foundations. The soil here consists of London clay and gravel, and the architects and engineers regard the proposal with undisturbed equanimity.

Captain R. W. Gillespie, formerly of the Rifle Brigade, has had to pay dearly for an indiscretion. The affair has been a good deal canvassed at the clubs, and the upshot of the business would not much surprise those who knew the facts. The vicar of the parish wherein Captain Gillespie lives (Appleshaw, Hants) thought it necessary to scold two of that gentleman's maids for giggling in church: the girls were frightened and the incident was made known to their employer, who forthwith wrote a foolish letter to the Rev. A. Lefroy, wherein he suggested insanity or intoxication as the excuse for the Vicar's proceeding; told him he was not "a fit person to have anything to do with a respectable girl" and made not obscure reference to the prospect of a thrashing should it occur again. Result, criminal action for libel, defendant bound over in £200 to come up for judgment if called upon. 'Tis parlous work acting on the testimony of affrighted and untruthful handmaids.

The two Poplar Guardians who were tried at the Old Bailey for conspiring to defraud the Union were acquitted on Tuesday. One can only conclude that the charge was badly drawn, for it is hard to know how to describe the proceedings of Messrs. Smith and Gibbs' if not as swindling. A brougham was hired for them to go 26 miles to Leatherhead (where they "inspected" one pauper) and charged the Union for cab fares to stations and railway fares in addition! The defence was that their bill showed not what they actually spent but what they thought they were entitled to charge. There lies the kernel of the business. The trial has been as useful as the Poplar enquiry in that it brings into glaring light the reckless extravagance with which these people squander the rate-payers' money in "doing themselves well," their counsel's phrase. What a miserably rotten sham is that priceless blessing local Self-Government, or elective Government at all!

If "Julie Bonbon" produced at the Waldorf on Monday is a sample of the successful American play one can only take refuge in the general statement that there is no accounting for tastes. It is a four-act musical comedy without any music; and without music I confess that the love of John Schuyler Van Brimb for the milliner of the play's title, the manœuvres of John's ambitious mamma who wants to stop their philandering, and the drunken vagaries of Julie's appalling papa did not appeal to me. The piece owed any attraction it has to the powers exhibited by Miss Clara Lipman as Julie, who is also author of the play: she could do finer work than she has set herself here. The American accent and atmosphere helped the performance not a little, so much so indeed that I caught myself wondering how the audience would have received it had the American accent been wanting. Miss Lipman can act but she has hazy ideas of writing a play; now sentimentality prevails, now pure farce, anon sheer melodrama. The humour is thin and I am afraid we missed many jokes we ought to have detected.

There are many changes in "The New Aladdin" at the Gaiety, more than one usually sees or expects in the first few weeks of such a piece, but the alterations are decidedly for the better. Act I has been cut down and Act II has been much modified; more important is the fact that Miss Gertie Millar now plays Aladdin, a part that suits her admirably. There are new songs and dances, Miss Millar being particularly considered by the authors in the matter of songs: her duet with "Professor Teddy Payne "Down where the vegetables grow," wherein she appears as a "coster gal" and he as the male complement, was immensely popular. "Bed Time at the Zoo" caught the fancy of the house also, the words being more humerous than those of most such songs. Mr. Alfred Lester continues to play the poet Policeman in the London of the genie's contriving and has worked up the possibilities of a good part until it is really exceedingly comical.

"The Yeomen of the Guard," to be revived at the Savoy on Saturday week does not include a single member of the original cast of 1888. This is unusual; any given Gilbert and Sullivan opera recalls the name of one or more of the actors who had part in it—generally more—and we look for their reappearance as adding additional interest to a revival.

By the way I see that Mr. George Alexander is going to stand as a candidate for the London County Council in March (I think the elections are in March). There can be little doubt but that he will get in. He seeks election as the champion of the theatrical interests which have suffered so much at the hands of Bumble of Spring Gardens.

Woolfries, the young man who passed himself off as the brother of the Misses Dare and in that character libelled Miss Plyllis Dare and Mr. Seymour Hicks in the foulest fashion was tried at the Liverpool Assizes on Wednesday. He pleaded guilty and escaped cheaply enough with eight months' hard labour. The best defence counsel could offer was that Woolfries fabricated his lies in order to gain notoriety: the motive strikes one as an aggravation of the offence.

There is a new performing horse—mare this time—at the Palace. Princess Trixie is a grey, almost white, by reason, I suppose, of her eleven years, and is American by birth. Whether she is educated or performs her tricks under covert direction of the trainer it is impossible to say, but accepting the performance at its face value, she is a very clever mare indeed. She spells simple words (sometimes wrong) by picking out blocks with letters on them: picks out from a number of coloured handkerchiefs that of the hue she is told, gave the correct change for two American dollars and added up short sums. She is a good-looking mare with, I suspect, some Arab blood in her: and her gentleness and friendly ways made quite an impression on those who went on the stage to improve acquaintance with her.

Would I were young enough to enjoy again the Covent Garden Fancy Dress Balls, alas, I shall soon be old enough to sail a toy yacht all by myself on the Round Pond: become, perchance, member of a Model Yacht Club, warn ragamuffins and nursemaids to 'stand back' and revere "our Commodore"! Some there be who are never young: others who are never too old to revel in a little harmless frivolity in the small hours. One of these latter—I should never have respected His Sedateness of "Covent Gardening" in motley—tells me that last Friday's ball was the liveliest and best attended he has been at for a long time. There were some remarkably clever dresses, the one that most appealed to my informant's fancy being "The Golden Pheasant," though his sportsmans' instincts were outraged by part of the design which insinuated that the golden pheasant is shot like any mere torquatus. To correct Ingoldsby "it was four in the morning before they broke up."

Review.

AN ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MODERN SPORTING FIREARMS AND GUNNERY.*

MANY books relating to the use and abuse of firearms have, during the past few years, found a place in the library of the modern sportsman. During the present times unless a volume on this vastly written upon subject contains information quite apart from the stereotyped matter that such works usually contain, that particular work will inevitably go to the wall. It was with great pleasure we anticipated another sporting volume from the able and versatile pen of Mr. Henry Sharp. We have no hesitation in saying that "Modern Sporting Gunnery" has exceeded in a very marked degree even our most sanguine expectations. We consider that for many years to come this book will be recognised by sportsmen in every corner of our globe as being the standard work on the modern sporting firearm, both rifled and non-rifled. In our opinion it is the best book of its type that has appeared this century.

The work opens with an interesting retrospect of the history of the firearm from its infancy. The first 160 pages of the volume deal most exhaustively with the intricacies of the modern shot-gun and its many descriptions of ammunition. In these chapters will be found information of a nature that is the outcome of several years of high scientific research. The reader, however, need have no fear that the contents are of such a mathematical or ultra-teennical cast as to render the perusal more of a bore than a pleasure. The explanations are lucid and easily understandable by the veriest novice, and fully and clearly exemplified by excellent plates and diagrams. Space prevents us from attempting to touch upon one tithe of the matter that is contained within the covers of "Modern Sporting Gunnery," though that matter will furnish the twentieth century sportsman with much food for thought and discussion. The respective advantages and disadvantages of the Tumbler and Trigger Safety bolts probably form a subject that the ordinary gunner has never even paused to consider, yet the question is an important one as affecting the safety and lives of those who spend their leisure hours in the pursuit of fur and feather. The experiments quoted should prove conclusively that reliance only should be placed on the automatic trigger safety bolt. We cannot do better than to repeat the wholesome advice tendered by the author:—

> "Sportsmen will therefore be well advised to sink personal habits and tastes and adopt an automatic trigger safety bolt as the only means of preventing those exceptional accidents which may arise even when the utmost care is used."

The ejector mechanism has long since been recognised in Home circles as being indispensable. There are, of course, many types of ejectors on the market, all of which are discussed; the advantages of the gun-lock and sear ejector over that of the two-limb system is forcibly explained. In dealing with the one-trigger mechanism much attention is given to the subject of "release." Many a gunner, even in these advanced times, still harbours the idea that the single-trigger mechanism is a gim-crack. This notion is, of course, quite erroneous. This attitude no doubt arose through a misunderstanding as to the true merits of the single trigger system when compared with the old-established double trigger plan. It is a generally accepted statement in this connection that the advantage consists in the one-trigger giving the same length of stock for both barrels, whereas with the two-trigger a different length of stock obtains for each barrel. Mr. Sharp aptly proves the extreme fallacy of this notion.

The evolution of the shot-gun is treated thoroughly and the reproductions of types of modern English, Belgian and French gun engravings show to what a wonderful pitch of excellence this art has attained.

The subject of recoil, pattern and penetration etc., is discoursed upon in an eminently practical manner, and the results of many trials are given in extenso. Passing on to the question of "gun-headaches" we think the author has, in many cases at any rate, more especially out in the East, effectively solved the problem when he suggests that this malady more frequently arises through the medium of the visual than the acoustic organs. The strain on the eyes on a bright day at Home during a series of drives, when the gaze has to be constantly fixed skywards has only to be experienced once to be realised. In this peninsula the glare from a dusty road, or the glint off a stretch of water, frequently affects the brain seriously, and headache is contracted purely through strain on the eyes. The next 160 pages of this volume are devoted to the study of the modern sporting rifle and its numerous accessories. We may safely say that every description of rifled weapon employed for sporting purposes both East and West of Suez is duly commented upon. We are glad to notice that such an expert on matters pertaining to rifles, as Mr. Sharp has proved himself to be, thoroughly endorses the opinions that we have always maintained namely, the undoubted supremacy of the D.-B. rifle over the magazine in the pursuit of game. The arguments set forth in detail pro and con should suffice to convince even the most biassed upholder of the magazine arm. We can especially recommend our readers to take stock of the contents of Chapter IX, dealing with the new accelerated express rifles and axite powder. That marvellous production of modern ingenuity the ·375/303 Westley Richards' Axite rifle, propelling a bullet weighing 260 grs. at a velocity of 2726 per ft. second has undoubtedly surpassed all previous inventions in the matter of rifled firearms. The ·318 bore weapon by the same firm of gunmakers is yet another step forward in the same direction.

Ball and Shot Guns are carefully described and those sportsmen who show a partiality to this form of weapon will find much that will appeal to them in the performances of the "Explora" and the "Fauneta Express Ball and Shot Gun." Much instructive reading will be obtained from the pages set apart for the discussion of the sightings of rifles and trajectories, and the chapter on sporting bullets is one to be studied minutely.

The importance to the nation of having a considerable portion of the civilian element of Great Britain trained to the accurate use of the rifle is patent to every thinking man. Owing to the efforts of the late Marquis of Salisbury and the persistent and praiseworthy manner in which Earl Roberts has kept this matter before the eyes of the public the practice of miniature rifle shooting has now been steadily advanced. It is not possible for the majority of Britishers at Home to accustom themselves to the use of the service weapon, for the opportunities are not open to all. To those, however, who care to make themselves proficient in the handling of rifles (the art is the same for miniature as for full charged weapons) Chapter XIII will afford a mine of information, and we would draw the particular attention of our readers to the facts quoted in connection with the Westley Richards' Sherwood Rifle.

Much has been written àpropos of gun-fitting, and the use of try-guns. Mr. Sharp has, however, evidently entered very thoroughly into this all-important question, and his remarks will assuredly carry with them their due weight. Having instructed us as efficiently as would seem humanly possible concerning the implements with which the gunner circumvents his quarry, the author proceeds to describe the habits, etc., of the game encountered in the British Isles. It is a well-known and most regrettable fact that as the years roll by the "Blackcock" and his partner the "Greyhen" are steadily diminishing in numbers. This is a condition of affairs that would seem to call for intervention. We trust that such intervention will be put into effect before it is proved too late. The reasons for this decrease are not far to seek. We fully endorse the sentiments expresed by the author which we reproduce :—"Personally," says Mr. Sharp "I am of the opinion that it would be well if black game were not shot before the 1st of September. This both in the interests of sport and the proper preservation of the indigenous avifauna of Great Britain. In August the young birds have not properly matured; they are deficient as regards size, muscle, and feather. Consequently they then present an easy mark which only the veriest tyro or arrant duffer should miss.

In dealing with the red grouse Mr. Sharp broaches the intricate problem of a suitable size of shot. The object of the gunner should always be to kill, and kill outright, failing that a clean miss is far preferable to a "plastered" bird. In grouse driving when the birds are coming down with a strong wind behind them, No. 5's frequently fail to kill, and the loss of pattern entailed by using No. 4's is also a distinct disadvantage. Mr. Sharp has introduced a new size of pellet which it would seem will be called "Celerita." Briefly this shot will correspond to 4½ size, i.e., it will be heavier than No. 5's but lighter than No. 4's. The former, be it known, contains 245 pellets to the charge, the latter 193 and "Celerita" 125. We think this size will prove itself most reliable—with it pattern will not be sacrificed for penetration. Choke bores versus cylinders—this knotty problem as discussed by the author, we feel sure will interest the sportsman.

A chapter is devoted to wild fowl shooting in Great Britain. The new duck gun invented by Messrs. Westley Richards for Mr. Sharp would indicate that a truly marvellous development in the 12-bore has been attained. Mr. Sharp says :—

> "I am convinced that on several occasions birds must have been brought down from a height of close on 180 feet."

We all know that distances at which birds are dropped, like tigers, are liable to become elongated, but with such an experienced sportsman as Mr. Sharp we are fully satisfied that the information he gives us is free from exaggeration. This weapon should prove a very valuable asset to the batteries of many sportsman in the East whose tastes incline towards "wild fowling." Armed with this shot gun we should now be able to hurl pellets with a sure knowledge of their fatal-producing effects where before we could hurl nothing but invectives.

A book on modern gunnery could by no means be considered complete unless some reference were made to the British sportswoman. In "Modern Sporting Gunnery" two chapters are given over to our sporting sisterhood. The first chapter has been compiled by the author and the second comes from the pen of one of our leading sportswomen, Her Grace the Duchess of Bedford.

There are many people who consider that the gentler sex has overstepped its bounds when its members take up a position behind the butts. There are others who object to the female gunner in the field on the score of the "voluminous chatter" (as the author aptly terms it) thereby produced. It is always a pleasure to see the line of guns composed of both sexes, provided the sportswomen present are fully cognisant with the laws of safety and deportment. The problem of a suitable description of shot-gun is often a puzzle to father and husband; we cannot give better advice to those placed in such difficulties than to refer to the volume under review.

There are many sportswomen, who in "their heart of hearts, are only too eager to be included in the ranks (literally speaking) of gunners, but through want of seasonable advice are reluctant to do so. To all such we recommend a reference to the chapter in "Modern Sporting Gunnery" written by Her Grace. The advice preferred on "dress" is eminently sound. We could imagine nothing more uncomfortable than a wet skirt clinging round the ankles; under such circumstances accurate shooting must be impracticable. The man, or perhaps zealous daughter of Eve who will look askance at a skirt reaching only 8 inches below the knee must per force be narrow minded and as such can, without loss, be ignored. Comfortable clothing both for man and woman, in the field is the first consideration; there is no reason to suppose that comfort need preclude neatness. The costume adopted by Her Grace embraces both, and is at the same time thoroughly workmanlike. Fourteen maxims for the benefit of the sportswoman are tabulated. These include the golden rules of gunnery. They should be learnt by heart, and constantly borne in mind. As practice makes perfect they will become a matter of instinct; the sportswoman when practice has given confidence, should never make this an excuse for a breach of these rules.

This manual of practical information closes with an alphabetical list of the sport-affording countries of the world the game abounding in these localities and other useful points concerning duties on importation of firearms, etc. In the sections devoted to both British India and Malay Peninsula we notice that under the heading "Fur and Game" the mungoose in one instance has been placed alongside the antelope, markhor and ibex, in the other it has been given an entry immediately after the tiger and leopard. Such information might lead the blood-thirsty Nimrod to lay himself open to much unwished for chaff.

The value of the work has been materially enhanced by the addition of a copious and exceptionally handy index.

Shikar.

MY FIRST BARA SINGH.

EARLY in October, last year, I arrived in Kashmir, and after a few days spent in Srinagar buying stores, etc., I went up the river a couple of marches in a boat to Awuntipur, and from there started to march to a nullah where my shikari said he had seen a stag a week ago. I had previously sent on a man to engage five baggage ponies; and so on landing I went for a stroll round the village while they were loading up. When I returned I found the ponies ready to start, but instead of five there were eight ponies loaded, and the drivers assured me that there was enough luggage for nine. I had, however, had plenty of experience in the three days I had been in the country of the lying capabilities of the Kashmiri; and so had weighed all my kit before leaving Srinagar, so I had the three smallest ponies unloaded, and made them distribute the luggage among the other five. We were then ready to start, and the lumbadar came up and demanded bakshish for collecting the ponies. He was paid and we began our march. But we had only gone a short way when another man came up and said that he was the lumbadar and wanted his bakshish. Explanations followed, and we found that the second man was the real lumbadar, while the first had been lying. His luck was out, however, as we caught him, and as, of course, he had not got the money on him, we took enough luggage off the ponies to make him a very heavy load and forced him to carry it a couple of marches. He had a very poor time of it, as the servants and shikaris who were carrying nothing kept chaffing him all the time; calling him the lumbadar sahib, and asking him if he were tired. We marched to Tral at the foot of the hills, and there camped for the night. There my Kashmiri servant came and informed me that my cash box had been broken open and 15 rupees stolen. When I told him, however, that it did not matter to me, but that it was hard luck on him as, of course, it meant that he would get no pay for the first month, he very quickly found it again. I also found that all my kerosine oil had been stolen, so I cut the price of a new tin off the servant. After this I never had anything else stolen. The native of India, though never honest is a perfect saint compared with the Kashmiri, a more cowardly, mean, lying brute I never met before, and this is the same everywhere one goes and with all classes. If ever the line of the hymn "Where every prospect pleases and only man is vile" applied to any country it certainly does to Kashmir.

The next day I arrived at the nullah I was making for on the right bank of the Liddar; but found that another sportsman had got khubber of the same place, and by marching all night had got there first. We decided to go to the Lidroo nullah on the left bank, and were just starting off when word was brought in that another sahib had just passed along the road on his way to the Lidroo. He, however, was walking so I soon caught him up on a pony and got there first. I then sent the shikari and his coolies up the nullah to look for tracks and sat down to eat my lunch.

What a lovely place Kashmir is, after the plains of India, and what a relief are the refreshing greens of its woods and fields to the eyes tired by the everlasting brown of sand and bushes that seem to dance with the heat of the hot weather sun. A tiny brook that babbled at my feet between banks of the greenest grass carried my thoughts homewards. And indeed the spot where I was sitting might well have been in the Western Highlands. Fir trees stood all around, the grass sprang from a carpet of pine needles, just below me I could see the brilliant green of a field through the trees, and far away the other side of the Liddar the pine clad hills rose high their green sides seamed by the dark shadows of the nullahs. Above these nearer hills there rose from behind them a grey rocky peak crowned with snow. It was a restful scene, and with my back against a log I was dozing off, when I was awakened by the shouts of the drivers as they urged their ponies up the hill. I soon had my camp pitched and trenches dug to prevent my tent being flooded by the rain, then putting my rifle on my shoulder I went out for a look round. The Lidroo nullah, which by right of being first man there I occupy, is a valley running some six miles up into the hills. On the side facing north are dense pine forests stretching right up to the open ground below the snow, with only a narrow intervening band of birch just below the grass level. On the other side the ground faces west, and is more open with fir forests alternating with open grass stretches; the forests on the north facing and the grass on the south facing slopes. This is the arrangement of the woods all over Kashmir. During the day the deer are resting in the cool woods, and morning and evening come out to feed on the grassy slopes. In my nullah there was a small hill standing apart from the main range, and on this several bears were said to live, coming down every night to raid the fields near the village. I went down and was shown the fresh marks of the bears in the Indian corn, so told the lumbadar to have coolies ready the next day to beat the small hill.

The next morning the shikaris came in and reported no signs of bara singh above, so I had my beat for bear. We had four beats, the last one ending at the top of the small hill. I was completely done by the stiff climb when I got to the top and sat down for the last beat. A musk deer came and stood a few yards off and looked at me, and then raced off with its curious jumping gallop. When the beaters were getting near I heard a great crashing behind me, and before I could get over the crest a bear who had been sleeping under an old pine had got clear away. We returned to camp very tired, but on arrival there my shikari's father came in to say that he had seen a big stag in a small nullah some ten miles off. He also said that another sahib was on his way there. So off we rushed, and getting a pony from the village went at our best pace to the place. The pony had a foal running with it on whose neck were the fresh marks of a leopard's teeth. It had been seized by a leopard a few days before, but the mare had driven off the beast, and the foal had escaped. As a result, however, she was extremely nervous, shied at every shadow in the road, and kicked at anyone who came near her. When we got to the nullah we found that the other sahib had not yet arrived; so we lighted a fire, rolled ourselves up in blankets, and went to sleep.

The next day I took a servant's tent with me, and after making arrangements to have my food sent up daily, I climbed to the head of the nullah and pitched my tent in a bit of thick jungle under a big rock, where it could not be seen by any wandering deer. For the next three days I was at the top of the hill before light, and stayed there till after dark. I could not have a light in the tent for fear of frightening game, so had to eat my meals in the dark. It was curious trying to find out what one was eating by taste only; and I was amused afterwards to find out that on two occasions I had mistaken duck for chicken! During these three days I did not hear or see anything, but found the fresh tracks of a stag and several hinds on one of the lower hills where they had been out on the grass to feed. On the morning of the fourth day I saw a small stag and three hinds walk across the top of a hill a mile or so away. I went up there in the evening, but they did not come out. Just as I was coming down a weird sound came up from a small bit of wood near which we had seen the marks of stag. It was something between a moan and a bellow. My shikari became wildly excited, and told me it was a stag calling; but that he was lying down at present, this moaning call always being given by a stag lying down when he is about to get up. We sat down and listened; and soon another louder call came up, like a steam siren in distress. The stag had now risen and was calling properly. It was quite dark before he called again, still in the same place; so we went down to our tent. The hill was very steep here, and the soil crumbly, so it was a case of two steps and a slip and a slide of a yard or two till one caught hold of a bush, all the way down.

The next morning before light I was sitting at the top of a grassy slope on the far side of which was the bit of wood in which the stag had called the night before. He called once in the early grey of the morning, but did not come out. We sat still all day in the shadow of a tree. In the evening, when our side of the nullah had passed into shadow, I heard a stick break in the jungle opposite about three hundred yards off. I put up my glasses but the trees were too thick to see anything. Then about ten minutes after there came the loud whistling call, so near did it seem that I instinctively turned and picked up my rifle. Another pause followed, and then we could hear the boughs crashing and breaking as he forced his way through the thick jungle. Twice more he called, and the crashing seemed to be getting nearer. Then I saw a bush shake, and putting up the glasses caught my first sight of him. His head and horns alone were visible above the low jungle; and when I saw what a magnificent head he carried my heart started beating so wildly, and my hands trembled so with excitement, that for a short time I could not hold the glasses steady enough to count his points. When I did I made him out to be a ten pointer with very massive well spread horns. While I was looking at him, he threw back his head and called. It was a grand sight he was only some 250 yards distant and with my powerful glasses I could see his eyes and nostrils and the very expression on his face as clearly as if he had been only twenty yards away.

After standing in this low jungle for a few minutes, calling at intervals, he began to move again; and lifting the branches out of his way with his horns, disappeared in a belt of higher jungle that intervened between the low bushes he had been standing in before and the open grassy slope at the top of which I was sitting. I could hear him breaking the boughs in this as he came towards me. So as the wind was right I very cautiously climbed down a bit nearer him, and sat waiting for him to come out. At last he came out into the grass, and stood for a few minutes looking round while I watched him with the glasses. Again he called, and then began to walk across the grass. When he got directly below me, and was only about a hundred yards off, I raised my rifle, and aiming low as he was so far below, fired. There was a thud as the heavy ·450 bullet struck, but he continued to walk slowly on. I thought I had missed him, and quickly fired again as he disappeared round the shoulder of the hill.

I shall never forget the awful disappointment of that moment, the sinking feeling in the heart after the wild excitement before, and the utter sense of desolation. I turned to the shikari and asked him if the beast was hit. 'No, sahib" he said in a voice of utter misery at having all his visions of bakshish thus rudely shattered. By this time I had reloaded my rifle; and more to give vent to my feelings than with any hope of seeing the stag again, I started running along the hill. But when I got over the shoulder, what a leap my heart gave when I saw the beast standing just below me, evidently hard hit, with his legs all stuck out in the way an animal hit in the belly often stands. I fired again and he started to walk slowly forward. I rushed along the steep hill side, several times slipping and falling, firing as quickly as I could get the cartridges into my rifle. The sixth shot knocked him over, and he began to roll down the hill. Faster and faster he rolled, till at last he was going in big bounds like a stone would, and then he went crashing into the jungle below. I could hear him going for some distance, and then there was an extra loud crash, and he had fetched up some half a mile below.

The shikari, by this time, was a hundred yards down the hill, running like mad over the steepest places. I followed as fast as I could, but the hill was very bad going, and I fell every few yards. How the shikari did not break his neck was a marvel; and I know I deserved to have broken mine two or three times over. He was soon out of sight in the trees below, but, of course, I could not keep up with him and was left far behind. I was certain that the stag must have broken his horns in his fall, and was dreadfully afraid that the head would be worthless. So I raced down as fast as I could. At last I could see the shikari standing below me, uttering the most piercing yells and waving his bloody knife above his head like a madman. I shouted to him, and heard to my great relief that the head was not damaged, and that it was an eleven pointer.

I soon got down to him, and sat down to admire my prize. It was a lovely head, very massive, an eleven pointer, and the tape showed it to be 39 inches with a tip to tip measurement of 39 inches. My first shot had hit him in the belly; and of the other five shots, most of them snaps, four had hit him, one in the lungs, another in the belly, another in the face smashing the lower jaw to bits and reducing the bones of the head up to the level of the eyes to pulp, and my last bullet had passed through his heart. So he had been hit by three bullets at least either of which if it had been the first to hit him would probably have proved instantly fatal.

I have noticed this repeatedly with these high velocity cordite rifles. The first shot, if placed well forward or in the neck, invariably drops an animal stone dead, when a low velocity bullet would not necessarily have done so. Apparently this is partly due to the greater shock given to the system by the high velocity bullet; as I have seen a case where an animal dropped dead to a shot in the neck, which on subsequent dissection was found to have passed close to, though without actually injuring, any structure which would prove instantly fatal. Once, however, the animal has been struck by a high velocity bullet which has not proved fatal, any subsequent similar bullets which strike him seem to lose this shock giving power So he may, as in this case, receive several wounds, any one of which if it had been the first, would have killed him. The low velocity bullet, however,t hough it has not such shock-giving qualities when it strikes an unwounded animal yet seems to knock down a wounded beast better than the high velocity bullet. It is this, I believe, which is the reason of the failure of the high velocity bullet to stop a charging beast of which one sometimes hears.

I found, when I reached the fallen stag that I had lost my topi, my glasses, and my sight protector in my hurried descent. So telling the shikari to look for them in the morning, I went down to my big tent in the valley below and enjoyed a bath and a hot meal immensely. Late at night the shikari and his coolies came in with the head and the meat. He was not really a shikari at all, but a villager with a great poaching reputation whom I had engaged as being more likely to try his best than the ordinary "big shikari." The latter are awful rascals, their only aim and object is to extract as much money out of their sahib as possible, and by long practice they have become perfect adepts at this, their trickery and lies being exceedingly difficult to spot Sport is quite a secondary matter in their eyes, the villager whom they engage in whatever nullah one is in, is responsible for that. He does all the work, and if the sahib gets any sport it is entirely due to the local man. But it is the "big shikari" who gets all the reward. His idea of a successful shoot is an easy loaf for himself and his satellites for three parts of the sahib's leave. Then he will condescend to take him somewhere where there is a chance of sport, and will tell the local man that he must find something. If the latter succeeds, and the sahib kills something just before his leave is up, the shikari is certain that he will forget the previous blank weeks, and when he leaves will give him good bakshish and a chit. The chit he will use as a bait for some other sahib on whom he will play the same tricks. My man, however, was only the local man, and I had promised him that if he showed me good sport I would try and get him made into a "big shikari." So now that I had got a stag he was delighted, and he and his friends sat talking round the fire all night of the grand times ahead for them when sahibs fresh from England—the Kashmiri shikari's richest prize—would pour money into their hands, while he sat and loafed with his "big shikari's" license in his pocket. By the morning his head had swelled to such an extent that I found it necessary to be very sharp with him. I told him I did not consider one stag good sport, and that if he could not do much better than that he would never become a big shikari. He talked it over with his friends; and I suppose decided that I was a very "hard sahib," but that as he had not got his license yet he must try and please me.

A short time after the man who had been to look for the topi, etc., dropped yesterday came in to say that a big black bear had gone into a little bit of jungle just above the village. So we went down to the village, and collected about thirty coolies for a beat. The jungle in which the bear was said to be, consisted of a few clumps of big fir trees scattered over the side of a small hill covered with low scrub about as high as a man. In one place was a thick patch of young fir some hundred yards each way, but not much higher than the scrub around. I took up my position on the hill opposite the jungle, which was all open grass, on a rock some fifty yards from the edge of the jungle. From here I could see any animal breaking on the side of the hill. We posted coolies all along the top of the hill, and sent the beaters round with orders to beat straight along the hillside towards me. I was thus between the bear and the thick forests higher up the nullah, to which he would presumably go when disturbed.

The coolies soon got round and the beat began with the usual yelling and banging of sticks. They were only about four hundred yards away, and I could see them coming through the more open parts of the jungle. I did not really believe that there was a bear there at all, as the cover seemed too scanty and the place too near the village. So I sat on my rock enjoying the warm sun, and wondering what a wild bear would look like—I had never seen one yet. Suddenly there were three loud roars, followed by a perfect pandemonium of yells from the coolies, and then a sound like a stick hitting a bag of corn twice. My shikari said that the bear had charged and got hold of a man. But presently the yelling subsided, and we heard that the bear had broken back; one man having been upset, though not hurt, and another had hit the bear with his stick.

After a great deal of shouting and promises of bakshish, we got the coolies to go back and begin the beat afresh. The bear had not gone far, and soon another outburst of yells told us that he had been put up again. The men on the top of the hill now began to shout that he was going upwards, so I left my post and moved a couple of hundred yards higher up. The beaters had arrived at the edge of the patch of young fir, but would not go into it; so I sent a couple of my own men to strengthen the line there. While they were going round the men on the crest were rolling great boulders down into the firs. I could see these go crashing and bounding through the jungle to the bottom of the hill. But the bear would not move. At last my men got round, and the line began to advance. When they were in the middle of the thick bit, we heard two more roars and out came the bear, bounding over the low bushes like an enormous black pig, the beaters flying from him in all directions. He had again broken back, but did not go far, the men on top signalling that he was in the bit of cover from which he had originally been roused. A large number of villagers had come out to see the fun on hearing that a bear was on foot. So after some time we got the line reformed, putting a dozen more men opposite the place where the bear was. The excitement was intense, everyone was shouting at the top of his voice, my shikari, who was with me, yelling out directions to all. I was accustomed to beats down country for tiger and panther, where the slightest sound from the neighbourhood of the guns is sufficient to make the game break back in the face of any number of yelling coolies. So I told my shikari to keep quiet, but he said that a bear did not care what noise there was ahead, and that if he wanted to come this way he would come in spite of any shouting. I did not know anything about bear so let him have his way.

When the beaters got near the bear he stole quietly away evidently finding that breaking back did him no good. The beaters shouted that he was going down hill so I went down at my best pace to intercept him Before, however, I had gone far he broke cover far below, and began to cross the open grass slope on which I was standing. I saw that I could not get any nearer him, and as he was making for a large thick jungle higher up out of which I could not drive him I decided to fire. It was merely an off chance as he was going fast and it was a very long shot. I put up the 300 yards sight and lying down rested my rifle on a rock. I took a full sight on the front of his chest and fired. It seemed quite a long time after I fired before the loud thud of the bullet striking told me I had hit something solid. Even then I did not realise that I had hit the bear, and I was immensely astonished when it stopped and began to roll down the hill. It rolled a short way and was then stopped by some bushes. I ran down and found that it was dead, my bullet, by great luck, having hit it exactly in the right place and passed through the heart. The coolies were all standing round it, heaping abuse on it and now and then one would hit it a blow with his stick at which all the others shrieked with laughter. I made them stand back and examined it. It was a female bear 5 feet 6 inches measured between stricks stuck in fore and aft, the bear having been rolled away from between the sticks before measuring. We soon had its skin off and I returned to my tent, and sent off both stag's head and bear's skin to Srinagar together, and sat down to clean my rifle, well pleased with my luck for the last two days.

HANGUL.

TO MY BROKEN FLY-ROD.

POOR old rod! You are broken beyond repair at last! No more chance of patching up those splintered fibres to withstand the hardship of another season's angling. And now I can only lay you aside with regret, in your wooden form and cloth bag to adorn some unpretentious corner of my den. Nay! I will not part with you, for have you not been a trusty companion on many an eventful occasion by lake and river, and around you shines a halo of incident and event which may only fade when the great change claims your owner.

Well do I remember the day, three years ago, when you came into my charge, resplendent in your shining coat of varnish, your silvery ferrules, your red silk bindings, and polished corrugated grip. How quickly I changed your character. Off came the little loose hanging line guides, and in their places went the good old standing snake rings. Your tip did not suit me, for I wanted you for bait fishing and the handling of heavy fish. So, little by little, your slender six-sided tip was cut away, until but a third of it was left. Only then, when a sensible turned down ring which would not hinder the free rendering of the line was mounted at your point, did I doubtfully pronounce you fit for action. Then you were straight and true and ready to pit yourself against any fish that swam the waters of river or lake. But now! After a short life of three seasons what are you?—a wreck.

But what a life it has been! What neglect you have suffered at my hands! Year in and year out you have hung under the eaves of my porch, ever ready to be taken to the water-side. No wonder you are broken backed and broken butted; yet when the last great trial came you died a noble death. Let us glance into the old angling register, and seek there the record of your triumphs and defeats. Yes! It is all there; but to tell the tale would require more space than our editor could spare us in many of issues. You cost me little; yet the pleasure you have given me cannot be computed in coin. Let us hark back to your early days and view in retrospect some few of the trials which led to your undoing a few days ago.

One evening in April I took you to Lake Alden to give you your first test. Minnows were plentiful and a score or so were soon captured and stowed in the bailer of the old punt. Out among the patches of grass which stud this shallow lake I poled and anchored in about three feet of water. A lively minnow impaled on a No. 6 hook mounted on a fine gut leader had barely touched the water when you were playing your first bass. Only a little one of a pound or thereabouts, but it was your first blood, and only a drop in the pail which has long since run over with the blood of your captures. The bass bit well, as, indeed, they always do in that lake, though they average but a pound in weight, and in less than an hour the minnows were all gone and fifteen bass were flopping in the sack which hung over the punt's side.

Out on the Marshall lake one windy morning I had tried in vain to keep my boat to her anchorage, so allowed it to drift across and bring up against the fringe of grass which—except at the one small landing—until the lake attains a depth of nine to ten feet, forms a living barrier to the shore. For a long time I angled without success; then, as I drew in my bait preparatory to starting for home, a slight boil in the water and the loss of the shiner I was baiting with caused me to pause. I had thrown away all my live bait, except one perch of nearly half a pound weight which I intended to eat myself; but for curiosity I hooked it on and dropped it overboard How well you, my old rod, behaved at this your first real trial! No sooner did the bait strike water than it was taken, with a mighty swirl. No time for thought as the reel screeched out its song and the line burnt a red weal in my fingers as I tried to check the fish's mad career. There were fifty yards of line on the reel, and a glance at it showed but a few coils left on the drum. Now or never, little rod. Your tip comes down until level with my hand, you vibrate and tremble under the great strain. You are too good to break; I will spare you; so a turn of the wrist and the tension is turned to the reel alone, the stout gut leader parts and all is over. But the rod is dearer to me now than it was before.

Again, on the Marshall lake one sweltering August noon—not a breath of wind to ripple the surface of the lake and temper the burning heat of the Florida sun. Yet the fish are feeding, as they have done all through the morning, and hither and yon, all over the lake, the water is breaking to the frantic leaping of small fry in their efforts to elude the hungry maw of the ravaging bass. Eight fat bass have already been safely netted, none under two pounds, and two of them close on five pounds each. But what is the matter now? Slowly the float goes down. I strike, and feel a dead resistance. Impossible that I have hooked the bottom of the lake, for out there it is sixteen feet in depth; there are no snags, and my bait was floating but four feet from the surface. After a few seconds, during which I exert all the pressure I dare put upon the tackle, the thing moves, sinks to the bottom, and slowly comes toward the boat. Still reeling in with the pliant rod almost bending double I peer into the watery depths below me. Dimly I discern a great shape which stops below the boat. A cavernous mouth, quite as large as the head of a nail keg, opens, my line flies high in the air, and the thing passes on out of sight. Twice since have I had exactly the same experience when fishing in the same place; have seen the shadowy shape ten feet below me, the great mouth open, and wondered.

At Prevat lake, the lake of big bass, in early June: The boat was on the other side of the lake, so I was forced to fish from the shore or walk two miles to get it. In the shallow, weedy water close to the banks are a few clear spaces where it is possible to drop a bait, and this I do, though with but little hope of success. Fortune smiles upon me, however, for after a few casts there comes a rush, a splash, and the taut line hisses as it cuts through the water. The lake here is but little over a foot in depth and studded thickly with lilies, bunches of grass, and gall-berry bushes. Nothing but the most extreme of measures will prevail in such a situation, and I fight hard for every inch of line that I am forced to give. Such is the tension that the good gut leader cuts through the tough lilly stems and grasses as if it were a scythe, and they leap up and lie in a floating mass in the fish's wake. But the bass turns and heads for shore, and I take my only chance of landing him, and run back up the shore, exerting the utmost pressure constantly. So great is the fish's impetus that before he can check himself, he rushes into water too shallow to turn in; and I wade in and carry out my spoil. Good rod! That was a short but most severe struggle, and that bass—which weighed 7¼ pounds—tried your mettle as none heretofore; and you suffered somewhat, for since then I have noticed that you gave more easily and did not recover yourself so quickly.

Down on the good old Rock Spring creek what have you done? Truly you have shown yourself worthy of esteem when pitted against the finny denizens of that picturesque river. Which of your many exploits there shall we tell of? They are so many and varied as to be bewildering.

It was in the first week of October I took you to the river on what was destined to be your last trip. Down stream I rowed for a couple of miles and fastened to an overhanging bush to fish the pool at Hunter's Camp. Over goes the bait—a perch of some three or four ounces—and the steady current carries it down until it floats directly below the overhanging limb of the water-oak, which spans the stream at this most picturesque bend. Here it is stopped and allowed to work at its will. Not for long, however, for there is something moving in that quiet stretch of water. Down goes the float with vicious pop. Only a mudfish of six or seven pounds; but he puts up a good fight and time and again the song of the reel disturbs the quiet of the swamp—and awakens an old owl who, from somewhere in the leafy recesses of the big oak, inquires in guttural tones, "Who-are you, who-are-you?"—before the gaff is finally driven home and the struggle ended. Three more fish follow and succumb as did the first two small bass and another mudfish; then comes the closing scene in your history.

I have replaced the usual single gut leader with one of double gut. The bait again floats down to where I check it under the natural arch, and the current plays with it for awhile and drives it upward until it floats upon the surface. I lay down the rod to refill my pipe and inadvertently allow a coil of loose line to fall over the handle of the reel. A broad blue back appears above water a yard from my floating bait. There is a rush, a great turmoil of waters, and the old fly-rod is almost torn from my grip as I snatch it up. The line is twisted around the handle of the reel and will not run. Your time has come, old friend. Your supple being describes a circle, there is a rending and splintering of bamboo fibres, a fierce tug, and the tested double gut is unequal to the strain, and breaks.

Well! well! It is over now, but I would have liked to land that catfish, for he might have weighed fifteen pounds, or he might have weighed thirty pounds; though from what I saw of him I judged his weight to be about twenty pounds.

But the poor old wrecked fly-rod! To you I can only say farewell, and add my sincere thanks for your years of trusty service. True it is that I have seldom used you as a fly-rod. It is with the live bait that the big fish are almost invariably taken, and with the live bait have I proved you.

Once again, old warrior and captor of big fishes, my thanks and—farewell.—Shooting and Fishing.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I trust "High Velocity" will not let the matter of his reward for shooting a tiger drop. I have been off and on distributing the rewards for wild animals, in Bengal, for thirty years. I have never known a European refuse the reward. Over and over again I have known big shoots in which Commissioner and Collector took part, send in their tale of game for rewards, and I know that even the individual, Commissioner or Board of Revenue man, does not neglect to put in for the reward. Now it comes to this, either the letters were written WITHOUT the Magistrate's knowledge, or the Magistrate is one of those dog-in-the-manger individuals who cannot bear to see another have a piece of luck. If the Magistrate was aware of the letters, the sooner his name is made public the better. It would be no libel. He is a public man and the matter is one of his public duties. So name, please, name. The Magistrate, however, may not have known of either of the letters, and it is quite possible, I strongly suspect, that no reference was made to him before the second letter was sent. No charge is made for the skin at all. The skin is the property of the shikari, BUT the Bengal rules say: The head with the skin on must be destroyed in the presence of the distributing officer, and he has to certify to this, or that it has been so disposed of as to never again be produced for the reward. More than once or twice, when I have wanted to secure a skin for a non-sporting friend, it has happened that my Magistrate hearing of it, demanded the skin, and on my declining to sell it for what I b ught it for from the shikari, has ordered me to cut off the skin of the head. In the case of Europeans of known straightforwardness, the cutting off of the skin of the head and the smashing up of the skull is never insisted on, except by such a specimen as I have just mentioned. I doubt very very much if the rules in Madras are different to those in Bengal, except that there appears to be more often a higher reward given, probably because man-eaters are more numerous. The Bengal rewards are Rs. 25 for full-grown tiger or tigress, anything over eight feet counting; half the reward for a half grown, one quarter for a mere cub. For a full-grown leopard Rs. 5, half grown half, and no one has a right to deduct anything. Now it may be that the officer who signed "for" the Collector is a native, who does not know the rules, and has just signed whatever his amla chose to write; do not I myself sign some hundreds of orders a day, and is it possible that I can read all? That the amla will make money out of it appears probable, and if not for this purpose then his aim is clear and that is to worry the European as much as possible. It is the same in ALL Government offices nowadays. They always worry a European whenever he can be worried without danger. Now either Mr. Collector has known and does approve of those two letters, or he does not. If he does ad leones with him, give up his name. But if on the other hand he is innocent, then let "High Velocity" and his friends push him (and see to it that it is done) to severely punish his amla and the officer who drafted the letter. I feel sure a further reference to the Board will get him his reward in full. "High Velocity" must not think his a single small matter; it is not. The attitude of the higher officials to all others, and especially towards small-fry officers in respect of sport, is a matter to be fought out and no longer submitted to.

Saturday, 15th December 1906.

GOOD sport was witnessed this afternoon, the most important item being the race for the Wellesley Plate in which six of the Cup horses faced the starter. The result was a comfortable victory for Saloon, Mallard, who carried 3 stone more, finishing second. The pony races brought out poor fields—three in the Peel Plate, five in the Harrison Plate, and six in the Hurdle Race. On the other hand the horse events showed well filled cards. A splendid finish was served up in the Cornwallis Plate when Bundook provided a big surprise by beating the favourite, Ballark, by a short head: a similar distance dividing second and third. Favourites rolled home in four of the events, the only other public fancy to go down being Psalm. Details in our Sporting Notes. Results:—

ZEERUT PLATE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A Handicap Hurdle Race for Arabs and C-B.'s 14-2, and other ponies 14-1 and under. R. C. and a distance over seven flights of hurdles.

OLDEST CERTIFICATED OPTICIANS IN INDIA.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

Many Children suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The Great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

Our Opthalmic Department is in charge of a London Eyesight Specialist holding the Diploma of the British Optical Association.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For some years past Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India has been looked upon as the most convenient and helpful Map of the Indian Empire extant. It possesses many points of superiority and convenience ; the information is exhaustive, every name mentioned in the Government Survey being included. The great convenience of the Index of 10,000 names has always been keenly appreciated ; it has, therefore, been a source of great regret to the proprietors that they have been forced to allow the Map to remain out of print for a considerable time on account of political changes in the internal provinces of India. The moment the new boundaries of Bengal were settled, fresh plates were put in hand, and the publishers are now pleased to announce the third edition of this important Map as ready for sale.

Size of plate, 38" × 34". Scale, 70 miles = 1 inch.
Mounted on Linen and folded, in cloth case, with Index of 10,000 names Rs. 5-8-0
Mounted on Linen and Rollers, Varnished, with Index in book-form ... " 6-8-0
On sheet, unmounted, with Index in book-form ... ... " 4-0-0

MANCHESTER.

IF only by reason of the glorious weather, marvellous for Manchester, the wind-up of the season will be memorable, and the more so for the extraordinarily high pressure at which the game was played throughout. Big fields look well on paper, and kept the executive rattling along each day. For the third time in succession the sun was as beniguant as in July, the temperature wonderfully mild, and par consequence the attendance enormous in every department. The executive have indeed every cause to be thankful, as the course was simply splendid, and sounder and more suitable going could not have been furnished anywhere. From start to finish, proceedings went with a vim, very little breathing time being allowed, but as was the case all round, backers met with persistent ill, fortune, and went all to pieces on the big race, in which no favourite has got home for the past sixteen years.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

In the first and second divisions of the League the scoring was moderate on Saturday, but it was again very poor in the Southern League, and the latter has now a heavy deficit when compared with the other tourneys. The total to the credit of the twenty S. L. clubs on Saturday was only 24. In this competition home teams did not have what is popularly described as a rosy time. Only two of the ten managed to earn the brace of points, three were defeated, and five had the reduced pleasure of sharing the honours with their opponents. The five winning teams scored a dozen goals, but the five losing sides did not muster a goal between them. There were a dozen in the five drawn games, the only match of the afternoon in which there was no score being that between Millwall and Brentford, but there were altogether seven teams who failed to beat the opposing defence.

In the first division of the League the home teams met with qualified success, four gaining the full points, four dividing them with visiting elevens, and two being defeated. The ten games resulted in 31 goals being scored, of which 17 were credited to the six winning teams, eight to the losers, and there were six in the drawn games. Only three teams failed to score, and this unenviable distinction was the experience of a similar number of clubs in the second division. All the games here had definite results, and the home teams had a glorious time, nine winning and only one losing. Of the total of 36 goals scored, 27 were obtained by the winners and nine by the losers.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

When Fulham visited Northampton last season they won by three goals to one, but on Saturday they improved on this, and won by four clear goals. The West Londoners were easily the better team, and scoring twice in each half ran out easy winners. This is the second successive win away from home, and their biggest S.L. victory of the season, the three clear goals win at the Crystal Palace on 15th September standing next in order of merit. While Fulham were tightening their grip on the topmost rung of the ladder, their great rivals from North London were being pegged back by Brighton at the sea coast town. Last season in the corresponding game the verdict was a 2—0 win for the Albion, and they repeated this performance, a goal coming in each half as the result of bustling tactics. The 'Spurs played lovely football, but it did not prevail against the vigorous Brighton defence. Millwall and Brentford have started in a manner suggestive of a repetition of last season's results, when both games were drawn, as neither side was able to score on Saturday, and both sets of forwards were disappointing. Leyton were far below full strength in their game with Crystal Palace, at Leyton, and the latter also suffered from absentees, though not to so large an extent. The Palace forwards played a very masterful game, and it was largely owing to their robust skill that the home team went under by four goals. This is the first away win of the Palace in the League, and it is also their biggest S. L. win to date. At Park Royal the Rangers dropped a point against Bristol Rovers as compared with last season, but the Fates were not kind to them. It is most gratifying that the recent improved form of the Royalists is not a mere flash in the pan.

West Ham United went to Reading with memories of a 6—1 defeat last season, and with the further memory of a loss of a couple of points when Reading went to Upton Park. Remember ingthe form Reading have recently shown, it was a meritorious performance for the United to bring away a point on Saturday, and this is their fourth successive draw in the tourney. The fact that Southampton are returning to their old form was again demonstrated, for they played Watford to a draw at Cassio-road, and thus followed the example of Tottenham, Bristol Rovers, and Plymouth, each of whom shared the points with Watford, but the latter have not tasted defeat at home, and they last gave away two points on foreign soil at New Brompton on 29th September. Luton are to be congratulated on running Portsmouth to a goal at Fratton Park, but Norwich City accomplished a more noteworthy performance in scoring the only goal of the match against New Brompton, at Gillingham, this being the third successive loss of the Kent team on their own ground. Visiting elevens find that it is not quite so difficult to pick up a point at Plymouth this season as formerly, and Swindon did not have a fruitless journey, the Argyle being compelled to divide the points with them. It is now nearly two months since Plymouth won an S. L. match on their own ground, while Swindon had previously gained only one point away from home.

LEAGUE I.

Saturday's games in the first division of the League were not particularly happy experiences for the leading clubs, the Arsenal being the only team in the first seven to obtain a couple of points, and all the more credit is due to them because they captured these at Blackburn, where last season they were beaten by a couple of goals. It is always encouraging to win away from home; it is doubly pleasurable to do so when other leading clubs fall by the way. Looking at the curiously constituted forward line the Arsenal played, there did not appear much hope of victory, but Satterthwaite made an efficient deputy on the right, and Freeman at inside left proved that he has fully deserved the many nice things recently written about him. At times on Saturday the Arsenal defence was sorely pressed, but it responded in splendid style to the heavy demands made upon it, and once more Ashcroft proved himself a great keeper. The backs were solid, the halves untiring, and the forwards did well, as a line, notwithstanding a few spells of ineffective play. Woolwich are now equal in points with the leaders, Everton retaining premier position because of their better goal average.

It was indeed a dramatic afternoon for leading clubs. Everton were defeated at Sunderland, by a similar margin to that of last season; Sheffield Wednesday were not able to do more than draw at Stoke, Newcastle United had defeat inflicted upon them at Bristol by the City, Bolton Wanderers were held in check at Burneden Park by Manchester City (who halved the points), Sheffield United had to be content with a draw at Bramall-lane against Middlesbrough, and Aston Villa went down heavily at Liverpool. It must be a long time since such a small measure of success attended the efforts of the first seven teams in the table—one win, three defeats and three drawn games. Bury scored their first away win this season at Manchester, at the expense of the United, the latter having now lost two home games, and drawn three, but until Saturday no team had scored more than two goals at Clayton. Notts County played another drawn game, this being the sixth out of seven League matches at Trent Bridge, and as the County have also figured in a couple away from home, they have divided the points in eight of the 14 fixtures in the tournament, while Saturday's was the fifth game in which they have failed to score. There is no need for argument as to where the weakness lies. Birmingham continued their sequence of home wins at the expense of Derby County, but they did not have anything to spare.

LEAGUE II.

Chelsea won their seventh consecutive home victory on Saturday, but they almost paid a very dear price for over-confidence against Barnsley. When some fifteen minutes from the close the home team, who had had by far the best of matters, eased up with a two goals lead, the visitors seized the unexpected opportunity, popped on a goal, and looked uncommonly like equalising. They were, however, kept out, and Chelsea, by annexing the two points are still well in the running, as they are only two points behind the Albion and Nottingham Forest with a match in hand. Burnley were provided with a surprise at Homerton, Clapton Orient, with depleted forces winning by the odd goal in three, and the Orientals are now in a respectable position in the table. Stockport County are rapidly forging ahead, and they completely outplayed Grimsby, the 3—0 defeat inflicted on the fishermen being their most severe defeat of the season. Nottingham Forest scored their sixth successive win by obtaining two of the three goals furnished by the Blackpool game, and the significance of this win is found in the fact that a fortnight earlier West Bromwich lost on the same ground, while at the beginning of the season Chelsea could do no better than share the points. On Saturday the Throstles found easy victims in Chesterfield, but Leicester Fosse were well beaten at Bradford, and they drop to fourth place in consequence. Glossop scraped home against Lincoln City. Hull had no difficulty in routing Burton United, and Gainsborough were full value for their win over Burslem Port Vale. Leeds City made a game struggle at the Molineux Grounds against Wolverhampton Wanderers, and the home team obtained their full deserts in scoring the odd goal in five.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH v. IRELAND.—Splendid weather prevailed in the northern capital of Ireland on Saturday morning; indeed, the day was reminiscent more of midsummer than winter, the sun shining forth in all its splendour. With this condition of affairs prevailing for many days past, the playing pitch at Balmoral had dried up to a remarkable extent, and was in ideal order for a fast, open game.

When the teams arrived on the field both met with a very hearty reception from the 14,000 spectators. The play opened somewhat inauspiciously for Ireland, as three minutes after starting the home team was penalised, and Jackson landed a goal. The impetuous head-long charges of the Irishmen were all through the piece characteristic of their game as played at home, and time and again the visitors were non-plussed with the mighty avalanche of humanity dashing upon them. Even when the large total of points was being scored against them in the first half, the men of Ireland yielded not an inch, and the match, if it established one thing more than another, showed how well justified we were in considering the fine chance Ireland stood of conquering the South Africans.

It would be unfair to deny the visitors every credit for their splendid win; but, reviewing the match calmly and dispassionately, it must be said that Ireland was unlucky to lose. In the first place Heneberry cannot be said to have entirely justified his selection, and indeed more than once he threw away some brilliant chances, while his kicking left much to be desired. Then McIldowie was rather overcome by nervousness in the earlier stages of the game, but, in justice to him, it is only right to mention that he performed a great deal better than had been expected. To criticise each member of the Irish and South African teams would occupy too much space, but in a word it can be said that Maclear, Tedford, Parke, and Sugars were the bright particular stars of the Irish XV., while Loubser, Stegmann, Morkel, and Joubert, of the visitors, came in for very favourable comment.

The South African jersey being of the same colour as that of Ireland—green—the former had provided themselves with new white jerseys. The Irish captain having put the visitors to face a stiffish breeze, Carolin kicked off against the wind, and Coffey replied. Play settled down well inside the Irish lines, and the first item of note was a penalty kick taken by Jackson, who, with the game only a few minutes in progress, landed a goal.

With the ball again set in motion, Robinson was badly at fault, and lost some ground for Ireland, but a brilliant Irish rush generalled by Sugars and Coffey relieved the pressure, and the Irish forwards, following up, swept down on the South Africans' line. Amidst terrific cheering the ball went dead. A minute later Ireland again swamped the opposition, and making no mistake on this occasion, Sugars, from a scramble, dashed over at the corner for a try. Parke took the kick, but failed to add the major points.

From the drop out, Allen, Coffey, and Tedford kept the Africanders defending; but Loubser obtaining play was brought back to midway. The scene of strife remained here only for a very brief period, and Allen once more carried the war into the Colonials' territory. Robinson had a chance, but the referee was very smart in whistling back for an infringement. The game was now anything but interesting, and Stegmann infused some life into it by a huge kick, which, while bringing welcome relief, effected but little good. McIldowie, who up to now had not been very prominent, burst away with a splendid dribble, and all but gained the visitors' lines. Loubser put his side on the attack, and kicked to Heneberry. The full-back was grassed, and with H. Caddell offside, Roos made a splendid effort to land a penalty. Hirsch and Stegmann cleared on the left wing, and a further score looked imminent. Heneberry, however, was there, and took his man in splendid fashion. A cross movement saw Loubser beating the Irishman, and he got over at the corner. Joubert was powerless to land the goal against the wind.

The re-start saw the ball once again in the hands of the Colonials, and Loubser crossed the Irishmen's lines for a further try, Joubert again failing at goal. The Irish were now going badly, and Krige further increased the visitors' score with a try, which Morkel failed to improve upon. With twelve points to their credit the visitors were soon busy inside the home half, and a complete change overtook the game, Ireland, from being the aggressors, being busily engaged in checking the all-conquering South Africans. Half-time:—

South Africans (1 penalty goal, 3 tries)	12

After a brief interval, play was resumed, and Caddell was prominent with a dodging run, but his effort availed but little. Daneel and Marthèze dribbled right to the other end, and had even passed Heneberry, and all seemed over, when Gotto appeared on the scene and cleared—a splendid performance. Following, the Irish full-back was again at fault with a rather easy kick, which mistake was the means of letting Loubser all but in, Maclear this time coming to the rescue, grassing the Colonial within a yard of the line.

Taking their courage in both hands, Ireland's forwards made a combined movement to the centre, where Maclear smothered up Morkel, who attempted to pick up and punt. White and Tedford now indulged in a splendid piece of combination, and the battle was fiercely waged at the South Africans' "25." Here South Africa was penalised, and Parke, from outside the "25," brought off a magnificent goal against a high head wind.

Emboldened by this piece of good fortune, Ireland recovered, and Joubert only kept them out. A second later the last-named was forced into touch, and then Maclear made a fine effort right through the centre of the opposition, being only pulled down by sheer weight of numbers. Off-side at the centre saw Tedford finding touch well inside the opposing "25" and Ireland time and again seemed to hold the key to the situation, but somehow could not get "right there." With play on the very line, Joubert made a wonderful kick to near the centre.

After this Heneberry disappointed badly with a kick, which went into touch almost at right angles. This allowed the visitors to once more become the attacking party, but Thrift was more than once responsible for the safety of the Irish line.

Then followed the greatest feature of the match. With play at the Irish "25," Maclear getting the ball fairly romped away from Loubser and Joubert, and evading all opposition scored a memorable try, the most remarkable, perhaps, in the history of Rugby football. Parke failed with the kick.

Holding the South Africans as nought, Ireland was again right on top, and Maclear was just over when he was collared, and then from a rush Sugars scored, and equalised the points, Parke making another futile effort to place the goal.

With the scores equal, and only a few minutes from time, the excitement was beyond all bounds, and both sides strove hard to gain another point. The winning score occurred to the South Africans, per Stegmann, which Morkel did not convert. Ireland was sorely pressed on the left wing, and then came the end of a great game, in which South Africa was a lucky winner. Result:—

MATCH v. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—Fresh from their triumph over Ireland at Belfast last Saturday, the South Africans engaged on Monday a not particularly strong team, but the best available, of Dublin University, at Lansdown Road, the scene of so many historic encounters. The climatic conditions, left little to be desired, and with the atmosphere beautifully fine and mild, resembled more an afternoon in August than a mid-winter's day. The pitch, which yesterday was in excellent heart, played somewhat on the soft side, owing to some heavy rain in the small hours of the morning.

The Trinity team suffered a couple of defections, Young coming on in place of O'Rorke at back, and Purser for Huggard at left wing three-quarters. The encounter clearly demonstrated which was the better team, and save for a brief incursion made by Trinity into the visitors' territory, the South Africans had almost the whole play. From nearly every scrum the Colonial backs got possession, and the ball was flying from one wing to the other, and very probably their winning margin would have been large, but for the outsiders, Hirsch and Marsburg, dropping some of their passes.

Sharp to time, the South Africans, wearing green jerseys, took the field, the reception accorded them being enthusiastic in the extreme, while Trinity also received a hearty welcome. The home team won the toss, and took the advantage of the wind and sun. Carolin kicked off, but the ball went behind, and Young touched down. The first item of note was the getting in motion of the visiting backs, and a fine bout of passing ensued; but, with Young equal to the demands made on him, the attack was repulsed. Smartt gained some ground from a scrum formed here, and then made his mark from Jackson's kick, and play was at mid-field. The 'Varsity forwards were showing up well, and the home three-quarters getting on the move, Thrift was at fault in failing to hold a difficult pass from some scrummaging. Quinlan was hurt, and was forced to retire, but, although reduced to seven, the Irish pack fairly beat the opposition on this occasion, and swept down on Joubert. The latter extricated himself skilfully, and a moment later the Colonials were away headed by Marthèze; but the attack was short-lived.

With Quinlan resuming, the game returned to half-way, where a knock-on by De Villiers checked the visitors. This respite was only temporary, and, half a dozen breaking away on the right wing, Carolin transferred to Marthèze, who scored an easy try. Joubert failed to convert.

From the kick out Trinity got away, and Harpur made a good run, which brought hostilities to the Colonials' line. Excitement ran high as the 'Varsity swarmed on the line, and Parke was almost over, when D. Morkel held him up. Repulsing the Irishmen, Marsburg raced away in possession, and eluding Purser, reached half-way before kicking, and from this another round of passing led up to a score by Marsburg at the right-hand corner. D. Morkel failed to convert.

The next item was a grand run by Hirsch, and a few minutes later Young only saved by touching down. There was a further stoppage now, owing to an injury to Parke, but the Trinity captain was quickly himself again. A fine run and feint by De Villiers had almost the desired effect, but Marsburg missed his pass when on the line. The score was only delayed for a brief period, as the next instant Carolin dived across for a try, Joubert failing to convert. Half-time:—

Sugars resumed for Trinity, and the restart was sensational, for within a few minutes Smartt gave to Thrift at the "25," and the sprinter, putting in a dashing effort, swerved past Joubert and scored a try right under the posts. Parke made a bold bid to add the major points.

To counterbalance this the visiting three-quarters set going, and some delightfully accurate passing was witnessed. After De Villiers had run and thrown to Hirsch, the latter passed inwards when tackled by Young, and De Villiers got over for a try. The kick at goal by Joubert was unavailing.

Jackson having transferred play once more to Trinity's lines, Morphy and Sugars put in some strong defensive work. Play having ranged somewhat evenly, the visiting forwards were away in the loose, but Thrift saved finely, and Joubert, receiving from his kick, made a good attempt at goal. This play was succeeded by a very anxious period for the Irishmen, whose line was only kept intact by very resolute work by Smartt, Purser, Thrift, Parke, and Young. The last-named was called on a minute later, but his kick curled into touch, and another attack by the visiting forwards, by means of a loose rush, yielded a further score, Marthezе steadying the ball for a try after Purser and Parke had both failed to kick dead.

From this point to the end the Colonials were all over Trinity, and in quick succession Jackson went over on the right-hand corner, Joubert once more failing with the kick. Scarcely had the game been resumed when D. Morkel raced in, and Carolin converted, and, after Trinity had in vain endeavoured to stay the scoring of points, Marthezе from a pass by De Villiers scored, and Joubert converted. Millar, about half-way through the second half, was knocked out, his foot being hurt, but he resumed. Result :—

SOUTH vs. NORTH.—The English Rugby Union are taking every possible step to discover a team worthy of upholding the honour of England when the South Africans are opposed at the Crystal Palace on 8th December. By the manner in which the South disposed of the North at Blackheath on Saturday their task has been made a very light one. The most ardent Northerner must have been considerably impressed with the display of the winners, for they were undoubtedly the superior at all points. Of course, against a team performing as did the North on Saturday there is just the possibility of a winning team's prospects appearing much brighter than they really are, but we are strongly of opinion that the predominant partner has this year some excellent material with which to build up a strong team.

Very early in the game Shewring, Birkett, and Brooks showed ability to offer and accept passes in awkward places, and the last-named went in for Cartwright to majorise. Simpson made a clever attempt only for Jackett to stay his progress, and from a scrummage Wedge secured, and crossed the Northerners' line without conversion following. The South forwards generally carried the scrum, and with Stoop at hand to carry on the movement he gave Shewring a chance which ended in an unconverted try. Northern prospects improved when Simpson again led the way past Jackett. Birkett, however, came up in the nick of time, and dropped on the ball. Shortly afterwards Shaw picked up, and handed to Birkett, but on being approached the Harlequin passed to Brooke, who ran in. This time Cartwright converted, and at the interval South led by 16 points to 0.

Re-starting, the North pressed for a short period, and in their opponents' lines Jackett was grassed. A free kick to them should have been utilised, but from an easy position Sanderson failed. It was to the leaders that the next score came, as Shewring kicking across left Brooks with a clear course, and he ran in, the kick failing. In quick succession Shewring and Birkett added tries, and then came the North's only score. Pain headed a long dribble, and touched down by the posts, but Sanderson again missed. From this point South were continually pressing and with Birkett scoring a couple of tries, without their being converted, the South won by 3 goals and 6 tries (33 points) to 1 try (3 points).

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—At Cambridge on Saturday the Light Blues played well up to form, but were always well beaten. Munro, the old Oxford Blue, was irresistible, and obtained three of the tries, the London Scottish winning by 2 goals and 4 tries (22 points) to 1 goal, 2 tries (11 points). The visitors rushed up at the outset, and in the first minute Walter obtained a try, and Geddes converted; but after pressing for some time the 'Varsity scored through Pitt, who slipped away and out-paced his opponents. Macleod's kick just went wide. Within a few minutes Munro obtained a couple of unconverted tries. Four minutes before the interval Pitt punted across the field, and Koop and Macleod rushed down, and the latter, crossing the line, kicked a splendid goal. Immediately after the kick-off the visitors' three-quarters got together and Orr grounded over at the corner. Again Geddes failed, but his side were leading by eight points.

The Light Blues lost Koop after the interval, the Blue twisting his right knee. The game continued to be very hard throughout this half, and Simpson and Munro got in for the Scottish, but the tries were not improved upon. The match had an exciting finish, Pitt, Evans, and Macleod breaking away just on time, the latter grounding over. His place-kick failed, and the final score was :—London Scottish, 22 points; Cambridge University, 11 points.

RICHMOND vs. BLACKHEATH.—At Richmond on Saturday the first incident of note was a good run by Wilson, followed by some useful kicks by Gotley and Sykes. The Richmond forwards, headed by Dakeyne, made an incursion into the Blackheath territory, only to be beaten back, Richmond touching down. Re-starting in some loose play in the Richmond half, Hill picked up, threw to Tuckett, who, after an excellent run, scored a try, which Robson converted. Shortly after Wright made an excellent run, which he finished by a drop at goal. From a scrum directly afterwards Gotley made a dash and scored, Robson again converting. On resuming Tuckett and Robson were all but in, the tension being relieved by a good kick by Wilson, and with a fine Blackheath forward rush, which was splendidly saved by Ereant, half-time arrived.

The start of the second period saw Wilson put in smart work, and then Wright made an opening for Robson to score and convert. Having resumed, despite a good kick by Odgers, Blackheath worked up to Richmond "25" and here Upson, getting possession close to the touch-line, worked his way through the whole Richmond team and scored. Subsequently, for an offside penalty, Odgers nearly dropped a goal. From this point Richmond held the upper hand. The forwards got the ball in the scrum, and Wilson, after a great run, was nearly in. A little later Sykes passed to Wilson, who handed on to Ereant, and this player gained a very fine try, which Wilson converted. The game ended with Blackheath, 4 goals (20 points); Richmond, 1 goal (5 points.)

HARLEQUINS vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—Rosslyn Park paid their annual visit to Wandsworth Common on Saturday, and had the advantage over the Harlequins, inasmuch as they were fully represented, whereas their hosts' team was very much re-arranged. Luckily for the home combination, Lambert, who was reserve for the Trial, turned out soon after the kick-off, and his display was the one redeeming feature of the game, as far as the defeated side was concerned.

The opening was tame. The visitors forced play in the neighbourhood of their opponents' "25" line. King-Stephens being prominent, with little spurts and good length kicks into touch. The Harlequins' forwards, led by the Wards, made a determined rush into the visitors' side of the centre, but Rosslyn Park retaliated, the movement ending in touch near the corner flag. A moment later, W. R. Glover scored the first try which was not converted. After resuming, the home custodian only feebly responded to a free kick taken by King-Stephens and Shelton very nippily got over, but King-Stephens failed to convert. In subsequent play, Lambert roused the home enthusiasm by his individual efforts, but the Park defence was equal to its attack. Half-time arrived with Rosslyn Park leading by 2 tries to nil.

On the resumption, Ward's effort to get away was well checked, and the visitors carried play to the home line, which Shelton again crossed. King-Stephens for the third time failed to negotiate the goal. Smart footwork by the Harlequins' forwards gained them ground, which the backs improved, and Baxter got over, but no goal resulted. Result :—Rosslyn Park, 3 tries (9 points); Harlequins, 1 try (3 points).

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—Favourable weather attended this match at Oxford on Saturday, and there was a large attendance. Butterworth, Wix, and Hodges stood out of the Oxford side, and Vassall, Latham, and Thomson filled the vacancies. A very good game was witnessed, and at the outset it was very evident Oxford were not to have matters their own way, as within five minutes of the start Rogers made a capital run, and passing to Wragg, the latter obtained a try, which was not improved on. After a while Oxford played much better, Cozens Hardy leading a rush which threatened danger to the Nomads' line. Rogers checked, and a little later another good effort was frustrated by the sound defence of the visitors. But Oxford were soon attacking again, and ultimately, after a fine run, Batchelor transferred to Vassall, and from the try which resulted the former kicked a goal. Mitchell made a fine effort to whip off the deficit, but without success, and, Williamson running through from a scrum, Oxford led at half-time by a goal and a try to a try.

On crossing over there was some good forward work on either side, but a smart bit of play by the Oxford backs soon gave them the advantage again, and Milton got in near the corner, Batchelor kicking a splendid goal. Then Rogers passed to Wragg, who, after a capital run, obtained a try for the Nomads, which was not improved. The remainder of the game was rather in favour of the 'Varsity, and after Flemmer had worked through, Howe Browne scored another try just before the whistle blew. Neither was converted, and Oxford won by 2 goals 3 tries (19 points) to 2 tries (6 points).

ATHLETICS.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. L.A.C.—Although the match between the University and the L.A.C. at Oxford on Saturday hardly excited the amount of interest one would have expected, the sport was of a really creditable character. Unfortunately for the chances of the Dark Blues they were deprived of the services of two of their first strings through illness, Hussey being an absentee from the hurdles and Schute from the half-mile, and their absence undoubtedly paved the way for London's success by six events to four. One hardly expects to see men at the top of their form in the middle of November, and yet some really excellent performances were recorded, the most gratifying from an Oxford point of view being that of N. G. Chavasse in the quarter. Most of the other events resulted in accordance with anticipations, except, perhaps, the long jump in which Young went down before the Old Blue, L. J. Cornish, who entirely, without practice, cleared 22ft. 4in. Sheepshanks ran with excellent judgment in the half-mile, which he credited to the L.A.C. in 2mins. ⅘secs., and thanks to his fine finishing powers, Tremeer just succeeded in beating his club mate in the hundred.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE TRIAL EIGHTS.

After one of the finest exhibitions of rowing remembered in this race for a number of years, W. A. Simpson's crew yesterday defeated P. J. Lewis' over the famous Queen Adelaide course below Ely. Almost ideal surroundings prevailed, and there was, of course a large attendance. There was a strong breeze blowing down stream, and, as in former years under similar conditions, the course was shortened to about two and a half miles.

With one or two exceptions the men rowed remarkably well, and specially may be mentioned Hudson, Burn, Thomson, and Simpson, of the winning boat; and Fraser, Bland, Bartram, Masefield, and Lewis, of the losing combination. A strong array of famous Blues and coaches were present, including Messrs. S. D. Muttlebury, F. J. Escombe, B. C. Johnstone, H. M. Goldsmith, D. C. R. Stuart, S. M. Bruce, C. W. Powell, G. D. Coachrane, L. H. K. Rushe Fox, Dr. Michael, &c.

In all 72 candidates received trials, the men being divided amongst the chief colleges as follows:—Jesus and Lady Margaret, 7 each; First Trinity and Trinity Hall, 6; Third Trinity, 5; and Cains, Emmanuel, and Christ's, 4. All the clubs, except St. Catharine's and Fitzwilliam Hall were represented. Only three of the Jesus men failed to find places. This year, for the first time, the President has been experimenting with an untrained coxswain (Hoare), and although at Cambridge he took some really remarkable corners, up to the present he has not been altogether a success, and steered very badly yesterday.

A notable feature was the absence of Eton representatives, the famous rowing school having fewer "Caps" than for five years. This, and other things, point to the probable downfall of Third Trinity next May. They have carried everything before them for the past five years, but Trinity Hall, First Trinity, and Jesus will all be strong aspirants to the "Headship" next year. A change will do Cambridge rowing a wonderful lot of good. Four old Trial Eight "Caps" were in residence—O. Shimwell, M. C. Allright, R. R. Evison, and A. P. Methuen—but they did not take part in the race.

Undoubtedly there are prospects of a good 'Varsity crew being turned out next term. Quite a respectable eight could be picked from the Trials, but in addition four Blues are certain to be "up." B. C. Johnstone, H. M. Goldsmith, D. C. R. Stuart, and E. W. Powell. J. H. F. Benham may come into residence, while G. D. Cochrane and Sir W. B. Savory can row if required. Also the authorities have A. B. Close-Brooks and H. G. Baynes—who rowed against Harvard—whom they have not called upon to take part in these Trials. With such an array of talent as this, and with a reasonable amount of luck, Cambridge should have a really fine eight.

Lewis won the toss, and naturally selected the Ely side, receiving some shelter from the wind for a greater part of the course. However, what he gained by this he lost through bad steering, and it is calculated that the cox lost him the best part of a length.

The crews got a good start, but Simpson dashed away in a surprising manner, and after pulling 36 strokes in the first minute, was almost a length ahead. At the end of the first half mile there was half a length's daylight between the boats. It was then that Lewis called for a spurt, and being well backed up by his crew, he began to reduce the gap, and was almost level at the mile. It then looked as if the Johnian was going to stroke for a third time a winning crew and so create a record; but he got short and his opponents went ahead again, and were three-quarters of a length to the good at Day's Farm.

Once in the straight, a great struggle was anticipated. Lewis made several attempts at getting on equal terms, but Simpson had the advantage of being able to watch his antagonist, and answered spurt for spurt and, keeping his stroke long, continued to gain. He was then rowing at 33, but as he drew near the finishing post he quickened up, and, pulling 9 strokes in the last 15secs., won by a length and a quarter. A word of praise must be said for the splended way in which Lewis' crew rowed a losing race. The official time was 14mins. 5secs. The following are the crews:—

OXFORD TRIAL EIGHTS.

The Trials concluded their practice on the home water yesterday afternoon, and at its conclusion the boats were despatched to Moulsford, where the crews are rowing this afternoon. Cudmore was sufficiently recovered from his indisposition to resume his place at No. 2 in the second boat, and Stanhope retired. The president and secretary shared the coaching, and only a limited amount of tubbing was done.

The work in the eight was accomplished in one piece, and having paddled to Iffley, they rowed up to the Freewater Stone and back to the Lasher. There the boat was put about, and on the home journey a bit of hard rowing was indulged in from the Bridges to the Red Post. Names and weight :—

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

As anticipated, the bout between "Tiger" Smith (late 10th Hussars) and Seaman Kelly (H.M.S. Jupiter) proved to be of a sharp and decisive character. Although lasting less than a round, or, to be more exact, 2mins. 42secs., some very heavy exchanges took place during that period. From the sound of the gong the pair went in for "keeps," and it was a case of who would crack first, the ex-soldier's superior knowledge of the business soon began to assert itself, and after once getting his man into trouble he never left him, and brought about the sailor's downfall in a most pronounced manner. The pair, who had received a thorough preparation, looked very confident when they entered the ring. The men, it may be mentioned, had been matched to box for £100 a-side and a purse at 12st. Earlier in the day Kelly went 11st. 9lbs. and the soldier a pound heavier.

When the lights were turned up the theatre was well filled, in fact, there was not a vacant chair to be had. Proceedings opened with a ten rounds contest between Darkey Haley (Leytonstone) and Wally Pickard (Newmarket). The pair, it will be remembered, met some time ago, when Haley received the award. The Newmarket lad—a brother of the renowned brothers Pickard, whose wrestling and boxing exhibitions were in great request a few years ago—boxed in a most resolute manner, but Haley met the majority of his rushes in excellent form, and at times used his left very cleverly. Round after round was contested in most vigorous fashion, and at the close a draw was declared.

This led up to the chief encounter, and this being disposed of another couple of heavy-weights made their appearance, the Army and Navy again being in opposition when Seaman Broadbent (H.M.S Jupiter) met Trooper Oldman (Royal Horse Guards). This proved another spirited bout of short duration, the sailor triumphing midway through the second round.

The last contest of the evening was between those well known feather-weights, Young Lilly (Deptford) and Tom Danaher (Bethnal Green), who were matched to box fifteen rounds. This resulted in a most protracted encounter, and after the full number of rounds had been contested Lilly received the award.

OFFICIALS :—Referee, Mr. J. H. Douglas; timekeeper, Mr. E. Zerega; M. C., Mr. A. F. Bettinson. Details :—

TIGER SMITH BEAT SEAMAN KELLY.

When the pair faced each other the sailor looked some pounds the heavier, in addition to being the taller. Smith, who stood right foot first, walked straight up to his man and thumped him very hard on the head, while Kelly immediately afterwards dashed out the left on the mouth. Smith at once delivered three heavy right-hand blows on the jaw, which sent the sailor up against the ropes. Before the latter could pull himself together the ex-Hussar drove the left on the ribs, which caused the sailor to drop all of a heap. Kelly managed to rise, but was very unsteady, and to a right-handed punch Kelly again went down. Taking almost the stipulated time before rising, the sailor was in a very sorry plight, and Smith, seeing his opportunity, drove the left well home on the mark and doubled up the sailor, the referee thereupon declaring Smith the winner.

Smith was seconded by Staff-Sergeant. Kain, Arthur Gutteridge, and Bill Whatley; while Kelly was looked after by Seaman Brittain, Seaman Baker, and Bill Baxter.

WONDERLAND.

For the first special night of the season at the popular East London fistic academy in Whitechapel Road a high-class entertainment was submitted last evening. Every part of the big building was well filled by a representative company, which evidenced its satisfaction by frequent and unstinted applause.

For the main attraction—a fifteen rounds contest between Cockney Cohen and Driver Himpfen—it was considered that Mr. H. Jacobs had made a capital selection, for both contestants besides having good followings, looked upon as being quite in the front rank of the feather-weight class. Cohen has possibly the superior claim to notice in consequence of a victory over the once redoubtable "Pedlar" Palmer, but Himpfen has had a long and successful association with the ring, and claims distinction by defeating Harry Ware, who wrested from the little Canning Town phenomenon the title of bantam champion. For these reasons alone a match between Cohen and Himpfen had all the appearances of being an evenly balanced affair, and when they contested a six rounds draw some time since, a keen rivalry sprang up between the respective sides. Ultimately articles for the match under notice were drawn up office, and both lads went into strict training, the ex-soldier selecting the Crooked Billet, Chingford Road, under the care of Harry Blake, while Cohen repaired to Mr. Gus Brewer's, the White Hart, Barnes, under the care of Bill Natty.

On appearing last night they gave undeniable signs of having taken plenty of pains in order to befit themselves for the important task, and the fact that old and shrewd judges figured respectively behind the lads testified to the high opinion entertained of their merits as performers who would try in the most determined manner to achieve success. From the moment the timekeeper gave the signal for the commencement of hostilities the lads set off in earnest, and without shirking their work, hammered away in such a manner as to make the onlookers hold out expectations of a merry bout. Cohen was the cleverer, and had the better of the opening exchanges. The Walthamstow youth lost his head to some extent, and rushing in twice he swung his arms around his rival's legs. This led up to annoyance on the opposite side, and the bout degenerated into a scramble. Cohen hit much the harder, and once had his rival on the floor dazed. Himpfen on rising threw both arms around his adversary's neck, and dragged the latter to the boards. Immediately afterwards the Essex lad made a frivolous claim for being hit low, and this he repeated in the fifth round. By this time it was evident that Himpfen was anxious to shirk further punishment, and the ex-soldier going down, the referee declared Cohen the winner.

The evening's card was of its customary huge proportions, and the bouts provided were all boxed in such a manner as never to allow a dull moment to exist during the three solid hours required to carry the programme through. For the smaller attractions Mr. Dave Jacobs was referee and timekeeper; and for the Cohen and Himpfen contest Mr. E. A. Humphreys acted as referee, the times being taken by Mr. D. Jacobs. Mr. G. Harris officiated as M. C., and the general arrangements were in the hands of the promoter.

The Leeds youth was seconded by Joe Jacobs, Patsy Donovan (South Africa), Bill Natty, and Charley Smith; while Himpfen had for his attendants H. Grenhill, H. Blake (his trainer), Jack Farley, and Tom Ireland.

JACK O'BRIEN vs. TOMMY BURNS.

The quiet little watering-place of Los Angeles, on the east coast of South California, was the scene on Wednesday evening of a great fistic encounter for the American heavy-weight championship. The principals were Jack O'Brien, of Philadelphia, and Tommy Burns, Detroit—two of the greatest boxers in the States. The match excited wide spread interest, and long before the men were timed to appear in the ring, the Pacific Athletic Club had to close its doors, as the huge building was filled in every part. The men were articled to box for 25,000 dollars and a percentage of gate receipts, of which O'Brien received the largest portion. The fight lasted the full twenty rounds, and at the conclusion both men were on their legs, and a draw was announced.

The fight was interesting as it served a very useful purpose in giving American sportsmen an idea of O'Brien's form, and his chances of victory against England's champion, Gunner Moir. Before the fight began, O'Brien was a red-hot favourite, and odds against Burns at 3 and 4 to 1 could be easily obtained.

Immediately the gong sounded, O'Brien sailed in, and at once mixed matters. He forced the exchanges, and Burns contented himself with acting on the defensive. The next three rounds were much in favour of O'Brien, but in the seventh and eighth Burns surprised his supporters by assuming aggressive tactics. There was little in the fight when the tenth round was reached. In the next three rounds O'Brien hammered his adversary all over the ring, and it seemed as if the Detroit representative would drop. Getting home a hard punch on the head in the fourteenth meeting, O'Brien was badly shaken, but his condition served him in good stead. The honours in the remaining rounds were very even, and when the gong sounded the conclusion of the twentieth round, the referee announced a draw. The verdict met with a mixed reception for the bulk of the spectators were of opinion that O'Brien had won, as he was practically the aggressor all through.

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

THERE was no meet of the Madras Hounds on Sunday last, owing to the very heavy rain of the previous week, and on Wednesday, owing to the flood in the Adyar River, the meet had to be changed to the south side of the river, as it was still too wide to cross at the usual Dhoby's Pool.

Messrs. Oakes and Company's Cigar Factory therefore, became the place of meeting and a fairly numerous field turned out. After a short wait, to give late comers a chance to turn up, the Master made a move across the fields to the east end of the Saidapet Coverts and hounds, fresh and keen after a week's rest, were almost at once on a line in the first covert drawn. Unluckily, the jack was not a traveller and from find to kill we never left the stretch of coverts between the place where he was found to the Butts Plain. Circumscribed as these limits were, he managed to give hounds plenty to do within them and very well they did it, sticking to him in the most determined manner. At one time he looked like breaking in the direction of the mount, but, being headed by people working in the fields, he doubled back right through the pack in some high crops and had a very narrow escape. Shortly afterwards five couples changed on to a fresh jack, who broke across the Butts Plain, and for a time ran him very well. They were eventually brought back, however, and rejoined the body of the pack, which, with the Master and only one other follower, stuck to their original quarry, and, would but for their diminished numbers, have killed sooner. This reinforcement, however, proved too much for the jack and after a few more turns he was bowled over. He was an unusually fine and large dog jack and had stood before hounds for an hour and fifty minutes. As a hunt it was a good one, but there was not very much fun in it for the hard riding contingent, as it took place almost entirely in thick country.

Polo.

POLO IN MADRAS.

THIS week a great deal of interest has been taken in the Polo Tournament for the Novices' Cup, which has been unusually well contested this year. Teams from the 30th Lancers (Gordon's Horse), the 13th Hussars, the R. A. and R. E. from Bangalore, a team captained by Rajah Venugopaul Bahadur and another composed of members of His Excellency the Governor's Staff have competed and some of the matches have been exceptionally well contested. Owing to the wet weather the Island ground in Madras, where the Tournaments are usually held, was unfit for play, and, by permission of His Excellency the Governor, the matches took place on the Government House ground at Guindy.

The first match took place on Monday, the 10th instant, between the 13th Hussars and Rajah Venugopaul's team. The latter, after making all the running in the first chukker, were gradually beaten back, but it was some considerable time before the Hussars could get ahead. The Hussars were, however, the better team and finally won a hard-fought match by two goals to a single subsidiary.

Two matches were played on Thursday, the 13th instant, the 30th Lancers beating the 13th Hussars and Government House defeating the R. A. and R. E (Bangalore) team. The former was an excellent game in every way. The Lancers played with splendid dash all through, but the Hussars were almost their match and it was not until the last chukker that the result of the match could be foretold. Bayley and Merchant for the losers played a very plucky game, while Major Barnard and one of the native players did most of the work in the Lancers' team. The second match was not nearly so interesting, Government House scoring no fewer than four goals in the first chukker and keeping a good lead all through without very much difficulty. In this match Duff and Popham carried off most of the honours the former scoring a big percentage of the Government House goals.

The weather on Thursday was very threatening and after the matches there was a wild rainstorm, which must have been very unpleasant for the spectators who had to drive back to Madras. Their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley were present, but the attendance of spectators was not great.

The final, between Government House and the 30th Lancers, was to have been played on Saturday last, and His Excellency the Governor was to have been "At Home" on the ground, but the weather on Thursday night and Friday was so bad that the game had to be put off to Monday, the 17th instant.

The final match was played at Government House, Guindy, on the 18th instant the ground was soft after the recent heavy rain and the match was slow and uninteresting all through. The teams were 30th Lancers and Government House and the former won easily being quicker on the ball and hitting better than their opponents who were slow to turn and never looked like winning. The final score was: Lancers 9 goals, 4 subsidiaries, Government House 1 goal, 1 subsidiary Lady Lawley presented the cup to the winning team.

CONNELL CUP TOURNAMENT.

FIRST TIES.

24TH PUNJABIS vs. 4TH CAVALRY "B."—The tournament opened to Allahabad on the 10th instant with this game which ended in an easy win for the Punjabis, who were better mounted than the Cavalry. The game was a slow one throughout. In the first period neither team scored: in the second the 24th hit 2 goals and a minor point, the Cavalry one goal: the Punjabis added a goal and 2 subsidiaries in the third chukker, the Cavalry scoring a goal. The Punjabis put on 3 goals and a subsidiary in the next period and put on two minor points in the fifth, the Cavalry scoring a subsidiary. The last chukker was devoid of score and the Punjabis thus won by 6 goals 6 subsidiaries to 2 goals 1 subsidiary. Teams :—

OXFORD L. I. vs. ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA.—Also played on the 10th instant, an interesting game was witnessed. The Oxford were expected to have a very easy thing, but the Gymkhana, who were got together at the last moment and had not played as a team before, gave them a hard game and were only beaten by a small margin. The first two chukkers brought the Oxfords 4 goals and a subsidiary and it was not till the third period that the Gymkhana opened their scoring—a goal. The Oxfords put on two more goals in this period but they did not score again till the close of the fifth chukker; meanwhile the Gymkhana were playing brilliantly and added a goal and a minor to their score. The fifth chukker was hotly contested and the Gymkhana had rather the best of it, they registered 3 goals to the Oxfords' goal and a subsidiary. Neither team scored in the last period, the Oxford L. I. thus winning by 7 goals 2 subsidiaries to 5 goals 1 subsidiary. Teams :—

SEMI FINALS.

4TH CAVALRY "A" vs. OXFORD L. I.—This game was played on the 12th instant, the Cavalry winning easily. Their shooting however, was erratic and they might have had a bigger score.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed and hit 2 subsidiaries which they followed up with a goal.

Second Chukker.—Continuing the attack the Cavalry scored a minor.

Third Chukker.—A miss by Johnston let the Oxfords in, but Bayley's shot went wide. The ball was taken to the Oxfords' territory where Johnston hit a goal. Shots by Harene and Morland were unsuccessful.

Fourth Chukker.—The Cavalry attacked, Johnston scoring 2 subsidiaries and Farran a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The 4th hit a subsidiary, Johnston and Williams adding a goal each.

Sixth Chukker.—The Oxfords got away but the ball went behind and a nice combined run by the Cavalry ended in Williams scoring a goal. Final score: 4th Cavalry, 6 goals 6 subsidiaries; Oxford L. I., nil. Teams :—

24TH PUNJABIS vs. ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS.—Played on the 12th instant, the Punjabis winning by superior combination.

First Chukker.—Climo scored a goal for the Punjabis, the Fusiliers attacking for the rest of the chukker.

Second and Third Chukkers.—Up and down play; no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Even play for a spell. Edwards got on and scored a goal for the Punjabis, then followed a minor point and Skipwith hit another goal. The Scots attacked next and Buchanan scored a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Punjabis pressed but the Scots got away and Fairlie hit a goal. Up and down play and, then another goal was signalled for the Punjabis.

Sixth Chukker.—Two minutes were left and neither team scoring, the Punjabis thus won by 4 goals 1 subsidiary to 2 goals. Teams :—

FINAL.

4TH CAVALRY vs. 24TH PUNJAB INFANTRY.—The final tie was played at Allahabad on the 14th instant. There was a large gathering, including H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir John and Lady Stanley. The 4th Cavalry, who had three successive victories in the tournament to their credit, were firm favourites and made no mistakes. They had the best of a fast and interesting game and ran out winners by 8 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Farran and Johnston were most conspicuous of the winning team, Climo playing an excellent game for the Punjabis. The Cup was handed to the Cavalry team by Lady Stanley, and Sir James LaTouche congratulated both teams

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C.C. vs. HORNETS.—Played on the Calcutta ground, this two days' match ended in a draw. The home team batted first and at the close of the first day's play had scored 227 for 5 wickets, Guise (58), Ballantyne (33), Bartholomew (28) and Eddis (69 not out) were the chief contributors. The next day Beachcroft and Eddis scored rapidly and the latter carried his total to 102 before he was caught. Manders scored 28. Beachcroft made 44 not out and the innings was declared closed with 343 for 9 wickets. The Hornets then went in but, with the exception of Boo and Rosser, made a poor show. These batsmen, however, were in excellent form. Rosser made 58 and Boo just missed his century by a single run. Time was up when the visitors had compiled 218 for the loss of eight wickets. Score :—

BALLYGUNGE vs. Y.M.C.A.—This match was played at Ballygunge on Saturday. The home team batted first and Shallow gave a faultless display, compiling 56 in brilliant style. A. M. Price bowled well for the Y.M.C.A., for whom Reynolds and Knowles were in good form. Maclean and Pooler gave a lively but unorthodox exhibition of batting and there was quite an exciting finish. When the last over was called the Y.M.C.A. wanted 6 to win and 3 wickets to go, they got three off Gould's second ball, but he bowled Maclean with the next, and the last man to come in could not touch one of the three remaining balls.

CALEDONIANS vs. RANGERS.—This match was played on the Caledonian's ground and resulted in a draw, considerably in favour of the home team. Going in first, the Caledonians knocked up the respectable total of 132 for six wickets. Rogers and Fox both played excellent cricket for 60 not out and 47 respectively, the latter making some beautiful off drives. With such a hitter in and against them as Templeton, the home team could not declare until close on 4 o'clock, leaving the Rangers a little over an hour to bat; but their performance was not up to the standard they have shown this season and they lost 7 wickets for 87 runs. Templeton was thrown out by Rogers after hitting that bowler out of the ground for 6, and the only stand of any note was that between Hodges and G. Nugent, both of whom played good cricket. Rogers kept a good length and secured 4 wickets for 46. The fielding on both sides was poor, the Caledonians being the most to blame.

BALLYGUNGE vs. CALEDONIANS.—Ballygunge beat the Caledonians by three wickets, after a pleasant and at one time exciting match. The Caledonians, going in first, secured 115, Stimson 29 and Rogers 36 being the principal subscribers. Gould secured 6 wickets for 69 runs and he and Whitely seemed to puzzle the visitors considerably. Ballygunge lost 7 wickets for a little over 60 runs and things looked black for them, but on Bayley being joined by Tatam a plucky stand was made and the runs knocked off, Bayley playing good cricket for 27 not out and Tatam slogging merrily for 31. But by far the finest innings on either side was Shallow's 24, his cricket was charming to watch. Rogers bowled very well and was rewarded with 6 wickets for 49 runs. There were catches missed on both sides, but the fielding on the whole was good.

CANINE EDUCATION.

NO. III.

SOME of the authorities on the subject of training maintain that the puppy's education should begin when he is very young. In theory, it is very plausible. The teacher thus takes the puppy when its mind is unformed, and then stuffs it with knowledge before anything else has an opportunity to be implanted in it. Thus the puppy is trained from youth in the proper manner, free from the objectionable traits which are supposed to be acquired if he is given too much liberty, or if his schooling begins when he has reached maturity. Furthermore, his mind then being more receptive and his character being in the formative stage, he grows into his education, as it were.

This is all very pretty in theory. In practice, it is all very wrong. What is called the training of the dog—that is, his training as it refers to working to the gun for his master's pleasure or profit—is really but a small fragment of the dog's education. He in the main acquires his own education, partially from his own observation and partially from the schooling which he derives from everyday association with man. In such matters as prove profitable and therefore pleasurable to him, he quickly learns from his own observation which methods prove most successful, and those he adopts. He quite as readily learns what acts produce pain, and those he avoids. For instance, if he is whipped for invading the pantry or chasing chickens, he associates the acts with pain and avoids them. He quickly learns to detect the signs which indicate punishment: thus the change in his master's voice caused by irritation, or the change from the same cause in his facial expression, detected instantly if it has previously been associated with punishment, and the pain he suffers through fear and disapproval deters him from committing the objectionable acts.

In the household, unconsciously, the dog is receiving his schooling constantly, and in time he learns to fit into the domestic life of the family, unobtrusively, accurately and intelligently. He understands what is permitted to him and what is not, and as there is but very little allotted to him, he recognizes it and keeps within the limits. He sleeps where he can be the most comfortable and yet the least in the way; he waits wistfully and deferentially for his meals; he trots quietly about, giving every one the right of way; in short, he learns to be a part of the domestic life of a family without any particular individual distinctiveness of his own. He learns that strangers are distinct from the family, and towards them he feels secure in showing hostility.

If he be a country dog, he learns to hunt vermin or rabbits; at first he may consider chickens, sheep, etc., as being lawful prey, but being punished for chasing them, and thus from associating pain with their pursuit he confines his pursuit to such animals as prove profitable and pleasurable.

To develop his mental and physical capabilities he must have experience in a natural way. When the puppy is playing with other puppies or with children, such is not idle effort, or positive harm as some men seem to think it. On the contrary, it is the best of schooling. It is a wholesome development by nature's own method. The puppy at play is acquiring a training of all his senses, besides acquring a knowledge of outside matters. His energies are aroused. He becomes self-reliant, active and skilful. The training at play is the school which fits the puppy for serious work. It is therefore better to leave him largely to his own freedom and resources, within proper limits, till he is eight or ten or twelve months old, accordingly as he is mentally and physically developed. He then learns ways and means of his own, becomes waywise and secures a general fund of valuable knowledge. Of course, he can be broken of any bad habits, such as chasing sheep or killing chickens; but the special education should be left entirely in abeyance. However, the trainer should permit the puppy to associate with him as much as possibly, so that the puppy will recognize him as his master, become fond of him, and develop naturally from the opportuities afforded when accompanying the trainer in his walks through the fields and roads. At the same time the trainer learns the peculiarities and capabilities of the puppy, and can then accurately determine the best method to apply in his training.

As to the training itself, it may be divided into two parts, the yard training and field training.

The yard training consists in teaching the dog such commands as are useful in managing him to the purposes of the gun, such as dropping to order, or to shot, or signal of the hand; coming in or going out to order, retrieving and the commands associated with it, and the obedience which comes from discipline, all of which will be fully treated in due place.

The field training consists in giving the dog opportunity to apply his instinctive desires to hunt birds, and then so checking or preserving them in their application as to be of service to the shooter's requirements.

It is commonly supposed that the trainer teaches the dog to hunt birds. He does not do so. Domesticated dogs, wild dogs and other carnivora learn to hunt without any teaching. The true trainer is he who can take advantage of the dog's efforts, force him to abandon such methods as are detrimental to the interests of the gun, confine him to such methods as he excels in and which are the most useful to the shooter, and encourage him to work as a team with his trainer; that is, to adjust his effort so as to play to the gun's interest. In this, too, strictly speaking, there is nothing taught. The dog learns it himself from experience, and that too, without any trainer. For instance greyhounds learn to run cunning, one hound adjusting his efforts intelligently to the efforts of the other, and entirely using different methods from what one hound uses when in pursuit alone.

The field training of a dog is largely a system of suppression. He is punished for doing undesirable acts, and such desirable ones as he has are preserved. If he is deficient in any natural qualities, the trainer cannot remedy the defect.

The commonest error is that the amateur in his effort to suppress some desirable trait may suppress several desirable ones or all, for that matter, as when the trainer endeavours to break the dog of chasing rabbits or birds or breaking shot, and he does it so thoroughly that he breaks the dog from seeking at all. He may punish the dog for mouthing a bird, and thereafter the dog may be afraid to take a bird in his mouth; so that the trainer has suppressed the whole of the accomplishment. The trainer whose skill is such that he can suppress the undesirable traits, and at the same time preserve the desirable ones, is the best of trainers. He must be patient, intelligent and good-tempered, besides having the necessary knowledge of dogs and dog character.

The dog will hunt rabbits or sheep with as great a zest as he will hunt birds, in fact, he will hunt them with greater zest and fierceness. Punishment will break him of chasing them, and after a time by habit he will become indifferent to them. But the punishment which breaks the dog from chasing rabbits will also break him from hunting birds, hence it is a common occurrence that when the amateur punishes his dog for breaking shot or chasing birds, he breaks him from hunting them.

For these reasons, two systems of training have had their advocates, one being founded on the theory of no punishment at all, the other on punishment intelligently applied. The true theory is the combination of kindness and punishment which will humanely and most thoroughly accomplish the desired purpose.

The Horse.

THE KAISER'S STABLE.

KAISER William has the most luxurious stable in the world. Fritz Morris graphically describes the Kaiser's stables in the Illustrated Sporting News as follows :—

One of the most architecturally perfect buildings, in which is fast becoming the architectural centre of Europe, is the new imperial stables of the Kaiser in Berlin. The stables stand vis-a-vis to the Schloss the royal residence, and is an imposing edifice with a long facade toward the Spree and a main driveway directly in front of the palace. Of His Majesty's 360 horses, about 300 are stabled in Berlin, and with the carriages, sleighs, harness, saddles, and other equine paraphernalia, form one of the most interesting show places in the German capital, and a museum second to none in the world. The obtaining of a "pass" card from the office of Count Wedel, the Kaiser's master of the horse, is an "open sesame" for the favoured stranger, while a small fee, toward a fund for the attendants, gains admission for the general public.

After passing through the main gateway, where on gala and fête days two porters stand in their brightest liveries, a large glass covered court is reached, which may be considered the real business and service centre of the entire group of stable buildings. Some sections of this glass roof are arranged to open. To the right can be seen the coach houses, in which are carriages for the daily use of the Imperial family and their attendants; on the opposite side of the court are located the spaces with drain floors, where the carriages are washed and cleaned immediately after their arrival from every drive. A door in the rear leads to the driving court, where all the hitching and unhitching is done, and to the left another door opens into the powerful electric elevator, used for carrying the seldom-used vehicles, the gala coaches, to and from the rooms in the second and third stories.

Entering the stable, which lies out toward the Spree, to the right and left of the central passage-way are the individual horse stalls, separated from one another by wooden partitions and occupied, almost without exception, by brown and black horses; here stand the horses used regularly for driving by the Kaiser and Kaiserin. Here are the Trakhener stallions, Hungarians, Arabs, English thoroughbreds, American trotters and the famous East Prussians. No horse show ever brings together such animals as are to be found in the Kaiser's stalls. Here are the wonderful ponies presented by the Shah of Persia—one brown, the other bay—small, but perfectly formed animals, with tails which touch the floor. The horses used by the Imperial family stand by themselves; they are four pairs of blacks for the Kaiserin, sixteen pure white Hungarians for the Kaiser, and three cobs that he alone rides.

The second section of this stable, continuing the first one in a straight line, leads to an opening circular riding track, used daily by the Kaiser and his family, when the time schedule permits and when the Kaiser is in Berlin. An incline leads from the court to the height of the first story, where the other half of the horse stable is located, which is also divided into two sections, and here are housed the saddle and carriage horses of the court attendants, the favourite saddle horses of the Kaiserin and the older princes; the ponies of the younger princes and of the little princess stand in the second section. A door leads from the middle of the stable passage-way to the large winter riding hall, located on the ground floor, and this hall is ornamented with mirrors and artistically wrought iron balustrades. The hall is square and very high, and, like the rooms in these magnificent and monumental stables, is decorated simply in white for the dignity of the architectural scheme and the enormous dimensions of the room require no ornamentation. The stable for the Kaiser's favourite saddle horses is fitted with special box stalls like those used for race horses, and here stand the horses used for the various functions. They are, almost without exception, big, powerful animals, for the Kaiser requires of his horse a good and sure gait, the ability to endure a fast pace for a considerabe length of time, and perfect training. Among the horses on exhibition out in the stable corridor, the old light brown Taurus, now a pensioned veteran, is still shown; he was born in 1876, and was the last saddle horse of Kaiser William I., who rode him as late as 1885.

Up one flight are the large rooms where the carriages not used daily are stored. Military order, and discipline is the rule in these rooms as elsewhere, and the light coming through the large windows is dimmed by red curtains. Here are the sleighs, hunting wagons, coupes and the Victorias without drivers' boxes, whose four horses are guided a la Daumont from the saddles. A special section is dedicated to history. There are the sleighs from the time of Frederick I. of Prussia, peculiar gilt vehicles, with rich figure ornamentation; there, also, is the large sleigh in which the Grosse Kurfurst, at the head of his troops, undertook to cross the frozen surface of the Fischer Haff, in order to attack and disperse the Swedes who had entered Eastern Prusia. Here stand the little carriages, with low, wide iron wheels, in which the gout-troubled Frederick William I. took his park drives. Here, in an enormous glass case, stands, stuffed and mounted, "Zaide," the favourite horse of Frederick the Great, who rode this gray in the "Seven Years' War." Opposite stands "Sadowa," ridden by Kaiser William I. at the battle of Konigratz. At right angles to the carriage room in another, encircled by a gallery, and in this room, below, are the gala carriages, the so-called state gala vehicles, with the big drivers' boxes, whose gold and silver embroidered cloths are veritable works of wonder in themselves. These carriages are used by the Kaiser and Kaiserin only for special occasions and then they are drawn by eight horses hitched in pairs. In the middle of the gala carriage room stands the all-gold coronation carriage, a really royal equipage. The last occasion on which it was driven through "Under den Linden" was when the present Kaiserin, as a bride, made her entry into Berlin.

The third story of the building is devoted to the harness room, where the harness for ordinary use for the Kaiser's manœuvrrides, and for the gala rides, is kept. Every bit of harness is provided with more or less heavy silver mountings, and is carefully hung in glass cases; in other glass cases are the silvered metal crowns for the tops of the gala carriages, the thick chenille tassels and the tufts for the horses of the gala carriages, as well as the so-called mane covers, which are part of the harness. There are also in this apartment old velvet saddle cover cloths, embroidered in gold and silver, golden, diamond-studded, saddles and various caparisons, which foreign rulers have presented to the Kaiser and Kaiserin. Brilliant splendor and aristocratic elegance and simplicity are characters of the harness rooms. The new harness made, but not yet used, for the coronation carriage, is peculiarly magnificent and original. Unique in workmanship is a set of harness bought of the Vatican in 1851. An Oriental saddle, and a set of head harness, a gift from the Sultan of Turkey to the Kaiser, show the skill of the far Eastern worker. Always on hand, and ready for use, is a special set of harness for every purpose, for every vehicle, set up in large glass cases, and each awaiting its occasion to be used. It certainly requires a great mass of material to fill all these cases, but for every occasion the harness room must be ready to furnish the proper set of harness. Thus, for instance, should King Edward visit Berlin, the harness, the panes of the coach in which he rides, the box cloths, all bear the British coat-of-arms, and so for the Czar, the King of Italy, and every other visiting monarch. When a state carriage is sent to bring a foreign ambassador on official business, or representing his sovereign, it also bears the insignia of the country from which he comes. Numerous other presents, like the one already mentioned from the Sultan, find a place in this great museum. There is a rare Troika harness from the Czar, and a gorgeous caparison from the time of King Frederick William II. lays claim to historic interest. The "great eagle" harness used in Konigsberg at the old Kaiser's coronation is reminiscent of Emperor William I., and is in strange contrast to the more modern "little eagle" harness which the grizzled old soldier gave to his grandson as a wedding present.

One of the cases resembles the silver show window in some great silversmith's store, so great is the mass of silver-mounted harness, and many contain jockey saddles for vehicles intended to be drawn by horses with outriders, reins, wigs, whips, silver stirrups, bits and hundreds of other necessary requisites. From one of the carriage rooms a stairway ascends to a gallery, from which a view is had down upon the immense riding course often used by the royal family. To return to the ground floor, the visitor uses one of the huge elevators which has ample room for two carriages, or for more than twenty passengers. The stairways throughout the stables are broad, roomy, airy, light and like everything else, scrupulously clean. The lighting system throughout is worthy of remark. Incandescent lamps are burning in globes of milk-glass in the stable corridor ceiling, and these globes, which guarantee absolute safety from fire, are to be found in the other rooms, on the walls as well as on the ceilings.

The Kaiser's stables—to sum them up—are probably the best equipped and the most elaborate in all Europe, if not in the world, and well reflect the love for horses in the past of the German Emperor of the present day as well as his predecessors on the throne.

EXHIBITS.

Mr. H. S. Symons exhibited a snare which was used by the natives for snaring quail. It was obtained at Aligaum near Poona.

Lieutenant P. Beaumont (South Lancashire Regiment) exhibited an exceptionally fine chital or spotted deer head which was greatly admired. The horns measured 38½ inches in length, 30½ widest span (outside) and 25¾ from tip to tip. The stag was obtained in April last by Mr. Beaumont in the Central Province jungles.

LIGHT-GIVING ANIMALS.

A LARGE NUMBER of animals belonging to different groups of the animal kingdom appear to be capable of giving out light, which is, at any rate, often due to the fact that they can secrete some material which is usually spoken of as phosphorescent. Every one has seen the seashore when the waves are breaking or the crests of little waves shining with a bright light at night, which is due to the presence of enormous numbers of minute animalculæ, which can, when in any way disturbed or irritated, emit a phosphorescent fluid. The fire-flies of the tropics or the glow-worms of the colder countries, such as England, are well known. What the exact use of the light is to these animals is unknown, but perhaps it may help them in finding one another. Darwin found that the adult fire-fly in Brazil emitted drops of adhesive material which gave out light, but that when the insect was decapitated the light still remained, though not quite so bright as before—in fact it was present twenty-four hours after death—so that probably for the most part the emission of light is involuntary in the adult fly. But, on the other hand, he found that the grub-like larva of the same insect, which in general appearance is much like the English glow-worm though it gave out a feebler light than its parent, the fly, acted very differently from the fly, as on the slightest touch the light was obliterated, and it feigned death. Irritation would not, as in the case of the fly, cause the light to appear, and so in the grub it is evidently under the animal's control. In England there are two or three forms of phosphorescent centipedes, and a Swedish captain, as quoted by the great naturalist Linnæus, describes, how one of these dropped from the air on to his ship when he was sailing in the Indian Ocean, a hundred miles from land.

At the present time, there may sometimes be seen at night little specks of light on the ground, perhaps on the surface of recently disturbed soil, or even in the crevices between the blocks of stone forming the gutters by the roadside. If examined, these little lights will be found to be given out by a very small earthworm, but of what use this light can be it is hard to imagine, and so far as is known, none of our larger worms are phosphorescent. On the other hand, there are a curious set of fishes living in the abysmal depths of the ocean, where the light from outside cannot possibly penetrate, and where everything would be absolutely dark if it were not for the fact that some of them have developed series of what are sometimes called electric organs along their bodies and on their heads. Just as many of the fishes have developed luminous organs, so others have abnormally-enlarged eyes, the object of which is apparently to gather in as many rays of light as possible. One special form, which in general appearance is much like the well-known angler fish, has one of the most curious contrivances known amongst animals. The ordinary angler is a fish which, with its frilled appendages, looks like the seaweed amongst which it lies. From the top of its head a long filament, with a little leaf-like end, hangs over its huge mouth. This filament it plays with as if the lappet at the end were a bait, and when other fish come up to see what it is they are simply engulfed by the angler opening its enormous mouth. The angler fish of the deep sea has the little lappet transformed into a luminous organ, and when any fish swimming about in the dead darkness sees this one speck of light it not unnaturally swims up, only to find itself at once seized upon.

STRAY NOTES.

THE use of that formidable-looking weapon, the "saw" of the saw-fish, is discussed by P. Pappenheim in a German natural history periodical. The author points out that the few observers who have seen the animal living have not, apparently, noticed the real use of the saw. A study of the contents of the stomach of the saw-fish, and the peculiar articulation of the skull with the vertebral column, lead to the conclusion that the saw is used primarily for rapid grubbing and burrowing in the mud and gravel. A secondary use may be protective, but there is no evidence that the saw is used as a weapon for ramming. Albert Gunther, in an article on the rays, to which group the saw-fish belongs, says, "The saw is a most formidable weapon of offence, by means of which the fish tears pieces of flesh off the body of its victim, or rips open its abdomen, to feed on the protruding intestines." "Saws" six feet long and one foot broad at the base, are of common occurrence.

Amphibious fishes are to be found in various quarters of the globe. Beginning in Europe, there is the blenny, which, when kept in aquariums, has been proved to require at least an hour's pure air out of water to preserve it in good health and spirits. In the tropics is found the periophthalmas which is singularly amphibious, and hops over the muddy flats in search of food, notably the crabs and molluscs left stranded by the retreating tide. The fish is so active on land that it is difficult to catch, and various specimens brought from Mauritius were secured by means of a shot-gun—truly a unique method of killing fish. This fish is also found at Ceylon, and it is noticeable that when chased they prepare to escape by land rather than by water; they really seem to appreciate the sport.

As all young creatures show a tendency to resemble remote ancestors, both in external form and mental attributes, wild traits will be found very marked in them.

A young foal is a case in point. With his enormous legs he can gallop, when only a few days old, as fast as he ever can in after life. Never far from his dam, he takes his nourishment in small doses, avoiding a full meal, which would impede swift escape from his foes. When he lies down, he makes no attempt at concealment, and when he stands his head is held high and he looks boldly about him. These habits are all wild traits, which show that his early ancestors have left the forests for wide, open plains, where only wolves could overtake them, and these enemies acted as agents in improving the speed and endurance of the wild horse.

The calf is different in his habits. A poor traveller, he fills himself with milk, and can then be concealed by his mother whilst she, in a wild state, travels to some distant glade where food is abundant, and does not return for some time, during which her milk is collecting. Hence the importance of a large "bag" in the cow, and also the need of the power of retaining her milk—wild traits which man has not failed to turn to his own advantage, as he has also the swiftness and staying power of the horse.

It is to be noted that the calf, like its mother, holds the head low in order to look under the branches of the forest, for everything about cattle points to an ancestral home in a moist and wooded country.

Among living things the larva of caterpillars eat most in proportion to their size. Thus for example: The larva of the privet-hawk moth grows in thirty-two days to 11,312 times its original size, that of the goat-moth at the end of three weeks weighs 72,000 times more than it did at first. Speaking of the amount consumed by a certain spider in twenty-four hours, Sir J. Lubbock says that to equal this in proportion a man would have to eat during the twenty-four hours, two steers, two bullocks, eight sheep, four hogs, and two barrels of fish. The food taken by a single silkworm in fifty-six days equals in weight 86,000 times the original weight of the worm, which thus during the experiment eats daily food weighing more than 1,500 times its original weight.

Captain T. C. S. Speedy, who writes in Harper's Magazine on "Life and Sport in Nubia," narrates the following almost incredible example of the sagacity of the elephant in protecting himself from the attacks of man :—

"It was related to me (says the captain) by an old hunter on whom I could thoroughly rely. He told me that some years before there had been a well-known old bull elephant with a pair of magnificent tusks which had been long and earnestly coveted by every hunter in that part of the country. Their wise old owner, however, knew that he was hunted, and had hitherto frustrated all efforts to capture him. With a view to his safety he made it a rule never to wander from the rest of the herd; but, on the contrary, always kept as much as possible in the midst of them, and it had been ascertained that he never slept without having posted sentries all round him. On the occasion of which the hunter was then telling me he said that he had climbed up into a tree, a dom-palm, to view the herd from a safe position, hoping to find the bull by chance unguarded. It was noontide, and the veteran required his nap. The scene that followed was unique. The old tusker went quietly round from one to another of his followers, and drove them out into the places they were to occupy, making them stand in a large circle, several yards from each other with their heads outwards, so that they would be sure to hear or see any approaching foe. Most of them were evidently well tutored to their work, and, understanding what they had to do, quietly obeyed, and took up the posts assigned them; but one young male turned refractory and ran off. The old tusker ran after him, and, heading him, pushed him back, lashing him with his trunk till he had got him into position again. No sooner, however, was he placed than he broke loose a second time, and was again pursued, but this time the punishment was increased by a sound prodding.

"After screaming with pain and trumpeting with rage, the unruly one was brought to obedience, and then a pretty scene took place. Two full-grown females—we may suppose the mother and aunt or two sisters of the rebel—went up to console and comfort him. They stroked him gently with their trunks, rubbed their heads against him and evidently advised him to be a good boy, and remain where he was. The veteran being confident that at last all was satisfactory, placed himself in the open space in the centre of the circle, and standing, as elephants invariably do while sleeping, took his midday rest, and the hunter saw that any attempt to get at him on that occasion was, as usual, hopeless.

"This sagacious old animal managed to preserve his life to a very advanced age, but when infirm and feeble he was expelled by a young rival from the herd, and wandered off to Abyssinia, where he was ultimately shot. Had the Nubians possessed firearms at the period when he was in his prime, this fate would doubtless have been his many years previously."

The Story Teller.

THE STORY OF A SENSITIVE HORSE.

CANDOUR is one of the most delighful characteristics of any man, however big a liar he may be in a general way; and my friend the Gentleman Rider possesses a lively imagination. It does not need much stimulus. Start him to talk about the races he has won and lost—especially about those he might have won if the price had suited, and which he despised because it didn't—and if you are an all-night sitter he will pour out a flood of conversation for that period. He has no idea when he is beaten.

How many of his statements may one believe? I didn't believe many. His fancy, unlike his horses' runs away with him. It is of no use for a man to put his hands down if he cannot keep his tongue still. A beautiful seat in the saddle, without that restraining delicacy of sentiment, will never make a hero.

Yet in this connection I do not wish to be misunderstood. Explanation is so difficult when one does not exactly know what one means. The Gentleman Rider is not an accomplished tergiversator. He requires a substratum of fact to work upon, an actual incident to keep him in countenance; and that is why, if I were called upon to handicap him without being pecuniarily interested, I should not give him top-weight as a raconteur. He jumps off the mark quickly, but does not stay. No retailer of fiction gets into his stride sooner, or puffs more diligently after doing so, but when it comes to finishing he is often down the course. What he likes is a slow-run race, with the others waiting to hear him gasp in the last hundred yards.

There is no doubt, however, that a few years ago the Gentleman Rider had a sensitive horse, of which he was immensely proud. This was a good class, useful, all-round animal that could win in his turn both on the flat and over a country, and that might be taken to the races with a certainty of getting something. He was so lazy that he would have made a race with a donkey—his jockey had little difficulty in placing him at either end of the procession. Sometimes one end paid best, sometimes the other. It was foolish to bet without being "in the know."

One day, as the russet tints of autumn began to show a wither ing effect on the landscape, and there was a taste of winter in the air, my friend and I were going to the races—his mood was loquacious. He shifted on his seat and looked out of the carriage window.

Then he looked at me and sighed. I was not at all surprised at his doing so.

"You remember old Gumboil?" he said, and averted his gaze as if with relief. My cold morning tints are rather trying to even robust people who have not become familiar with them.

"Gumboil?" I repeated, with lack-lustre eye—"old Gumboil—good old Gumboil! Why, of course, I remember him now—the sensitive horse. He did not care to be tickled about. I must have often backed him when he was't spin—that is, when I did not know you so well."

After I had given expression to this lugubrious reminiscence—and it is not pleasant to think that you might as well have chucked your money in the gutter when you expected to win enough to be festive for a short time—the Gentleman Rider only laughed. He does not seem to sympathise with me in the morning but at night—late at night—when we have clinked the cannikin—ah! how different.

He pursued his story reflectively, puffing at a long cigar with quiet deliberation. "People," he said, "never knew what a champion old Gumboil was. He was a lovely lepper, with a turn of speed. He was often jumping the Aintree country when running over an ordinary regulation course. He did not care whether he went three miles or two; he had always a bit to finish with, and could generally 'get there' when wanted."

"When wanted?" I said, and, winking to myself, looked another way.

"Well, you know what I mean," replied my companion, ingenuously. "In those days we had to get our living, and could not afford to be too ladylike. We were obliged to play the game as other people played it. If we had failed to do so, if we had not gone with the stream and grasped a little flotsam in our turn, we should have quickly retired from the rank of the players. And Gumboil kept me for several successive winters. I could do with another such an one.

"It was like this, you see"—Here the speaker put his cigar down for a moment, if his object were to get his second wind. "We used to let the old horse do nearly all his galloping on the course: it irritated me to see him do any fast work at home for nothing. What is the use of sending a horse two miles at top speed for the birds to look at when, by the same exertion, he might be winning a lot of money for his owner on the course? So, when Gumboil galloped, he generally galloped for a prize, or for what his owner could get in other ways."

It might have been a wink that came then from the opposite end of the carriage. If it were not one, it looked like one, and I shall never believe it was merely my optical delusion. I do not see things that are not there now. When the Gentleman Rider winks he scores, as a rule, and nothing will convince me that he missed fire on this occasion.

"I had won several handicap steeplechases" he continued, "with Gumboil, right off the reel, the consequence being that the handicappers had placed him on a mark that rendered his future success problematical. We did not care to bet on probablities, only on certainties; therefore, we set to work with great earnestness of purpose to get weight off. We knew that we should not be likely to accomplish this by keeping him in the stable. We had to get him repeatedly beaten; you have no idea what hard work that sometimes was. Why, I have found more than once, when riding him that the others were stone-cold after going about half way, we did not know before starting what 'perishers' they were to beat, or how could we have backed ours then instead of having to dodge him about so as to get him on what we considered the right mark.

"The handicappers dropped him very slowly, a pound or two at a time. They appeared to have an idea that our bonâfides required to be proved, and that if there were no stain upon our character it was not our fault. But we did not lose heart or money. Gumboil was constantly from home, and was always getting a bit here and there. Sometimes I was paid for starting him to make a market for something else when it did not seem to me that he could possibly win at the weights. Sometimes I was subsidized to make running for a horse that wanted a strong pace all the way, and the point at which I was to retire was specified to me before the cash was placed in my hand. We were always ready to perform on suitable terms."

"There is no use in having a champion," I remarked, oracularly, "unless you have him on the spot. How did you get on with yours at last?"

My friend wrung his hands, and if I had not removed mine to a place of safety he would have wrung those. "Poor Gumboil!" he moaned; "he was too sensitive. His spirit was so haughty that, while running to get weight off, and being continually beaten, he seemed to pine away, and went off his feed. He was so bad that he might have been suffering from unrequited love, only we knew there was no lady in the case. Gumboil was indifferent to the attractions of the opposite sex, for a reason that will be appreciated by experienced amorists.

"His extreme sensitiveness"—so my friend continued—"led to our temporary undoing. It was at one of the big meetings. I had just ridden him in a three mile steeplechase for which a large number of good horses competed, and I did not fancy mine at the weights. But he wanted a gallop over the country. I thought he might just as well have it in public, with plenty of good company all the way, as at home. The cost was little more, the journey was pleasant." It had happened in this race that when I went up to the leaders about a quarter of a mile from home, just to get a feeler at them, I found that they could go no faster; and, Lord love us everyone! how I wished then I'd a small fortune on mine. But it was not to be; we retired gracefully into a less conspicuous position sticking our feet out. The old horse shook his head; he was, as I have mentioned, far too sensitive.

After the race I went to look at him in the paddock, and asked his lad—who, being of Irish origin, was entirely devoted to him—how Gumboil was after his recent entertaining struggle. The horse was hanging his head down, and wore a very dejected appearance.

"'Ow is he?' replied the boy, in a loud tone. 'Why, shure, and he's cryin' sor, waping bitterly,—and—and you know why. The ould biler wants to win agen afore 'e dies.' 'This unfortunate remark was heard by a handicapper who chanced to be standing by; and as men of experience are aware, it is difficult to get weight off while suspicion is in the air. Gumboil figured at the top in future, and never won another race.'"

TO DAN.

I.

What though they called you jaded hack,
And laughingly declared your back
Resembled (as it did) a rack
For toast?
I'll never join in such attack,
Because, old horse, I owe to you
So much that's wonderful and new.

II.

What though beneath your coat of roan
You had your complement of bone
And sharp projections all your own?
No less,
You taught me riding, you alone;
And Cheiron ne'er with all his wit
Toiled more to make a pupil fit.

III.

When I remember how, at school,
The masters chid me for a fool
At any trip in fact or rule,
And then
Compare your method, patient, cool—
Why, this the upshot is, old Dan,
I can't admire scholastic man.

IV.

My mounting, howsoe'er I'd try,
At first was gauche, I don't deny;
The stirrup always hung away
And you.
You towered embarrassingly high.
And hence each morning for a while.
The stable lads came out to smile.

V.

And when the hour was "up," and we Regained the stable cautiously,
They grinned again. In part at me,
In part.
At your re-juvenility—
"To think of Dan as saddle" orse—

VI.

At first you'd often twist your head,
And fill me with a trembling dread
That e'en a worn-out partial-bred
Will turn,
And eye me with a glance that said—
A look as plain as words that sting—
"What load is this I'm carrying?"

VII.

But afterwards you changed your mind,
O'erjoyed, as I suppose, to find
Relief from wheels that dragged behind;
And once
You cantered (somewhat) like the wind.
I liked you when you cantered best;
Your trot was such sustained unrest.

VIII.

For, fumbling the elusive rein,
And clutching at your ragged mane,
I rose, and fell, and rose again.
Ah me!
Ours was community of pain.—
The sufferings you underwent,
Bade you return the compliment.

IX.

I wonder where to-day you are
At rest perhaps; or skyward far
You amble harnessed to a star
'Twas time!
For here the men drive the motor-car,
Not I. I would not be so mean
As forfeit you to paraffin.

ROTHERAU HURST.—in the County Gentleman.

Solution to Problem No. 18.

THE king of hearts is evidently with A, and thus Z can win four tricks in hearts and four in spades without any difficulty. He requires a ninth trick to go game, however, and should set about making a club or diamond good before parting with his cards of entry. At trick 2, he should lead the 9 of clubs. If A covers with the queen or knave, Y puts on the king, and must make a club trick on the third round. If A cover with the ace, Y's king is good, and YZ cannot fail to go game. If A passes the 9 of clubs, so does Y, letting B win the trick. B will probably lead diamonds. If he leads a low one, Z puts on one of his honors, and is almost certain to make the other on the third round. Z can always get in twice to lead through A's king of hearts.

Problem No. 19.

Y's hand (Dummy).

Hearts, A, K, Diamonds, Q, 10, 5, 4. Clubs, J, 9, 8, 3. Spades. J, 3, 2.

B's hand (Third player).

Hearts, Q, 10, 3, 2. Diamonds, A, K, J, 3. Clubs, A, K. Spades, A, K, Q.

The play of the first two tricks is as follows:—

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0. Tricks: A B 2, Y Z 0.

WINNING SIRES OF 1906.

WE can never read the voluminous articles on "Winning sires of the season" which form a standing dish in the Home sporting press at the end of the year, without being impressed by the small number of stallions upon which the English turf is dependent for its good horses. The past season's list of stallions whose immediate progeny have won among them over £12,000 are ten in number, while the full list of sires whose sons and daughters have won anything at all during the season includes upwards of 260 names, among them those of a few stallions now dead. When we consider the amount of racing there is at home, and the amount of money there is to be won, we realise very strongly the truth of the commonplace that in any department of life "there is plenty of room at the top."

The most notable horse of the season, though not the leader of this array of talent, is Gallinule, his progeny have won over £16,000 giving him as for several years past a high place among the winning stallions. Gallinule is a good example of the horse who gets much better runners than himself: his record, when he retired from active service of the turf was by no means brilliant; on the contrary he was regarded as a striking example of the indifferent horse that may be foaled to distinguished parents: by Isonomy out of Moorhen who was got by Hermit, Gallinule at one period of his career stood for "great expectations;" these were never fulfilled and the horse was sent to the stud in Ireland without a character. Had he remained in England he would probably have been used to get hunters or anything but race horses. In Ireland, however, his looks were liked and he was given his chance: with the result that he has proved himself a begetter of stock second to none in the kingdom. His progeny won only a few sovereigns less than the top horse (St. Frusquin) in 1903; he was a long way the first in 1904—with over £30,000 to his credit as against St. Frusquin's (the second) £17,000; he was an excellent second to Isinglass in 1905, and this season he comes within measurable distance of the leader's total.

Persimmon leads the way with 16 winners of 31 races worth £21,737, much more than half of which total (£12,837) was won by Keystone II. Plum Tree with three races worth a little over £3,000 and gourd with two, worth under £2,000 are the other two contributors of over £1,000 in Persimmon's list. Passing over Ladas, who stands second, for the moment, we glance at Gallinule's record: third on the list, he appears this year as the sire of 14 winners of 31 races (the same number as Persimmon) worth £16,211; but there is more evenness about the merit of Gallinule's progeny if the value of the races won by them be any criterion; Persimmon owes his place to Keystone II.; without her he would be down among the ruck of the 260 stallions. Gallinule's progeny have a different record; six of the fourteen have won money running into four figures; namely, Gala Meath (£1,095), Hammerkop (£1,405), Poussin (£1,160), Pretty Polly (£1,955), Rocketter (£2,744) and Slieve Gallion (£4,090. From a strictly figure point of view we regard Gallinule's record as a much better one than Persimmon's. Ladas, sire of 11 winners of 31½ races, like Persimmon owes his position very largely to one good son in the shape of Troutbeck, who with nine races at his credit contributes nearly £11,000 of Ladas' total (£19,860): he owes £4,822 to Gorgos and £1,075 to Hexagon. Carbine's record for the season shows a marked advance on that of any of the three preceding years. Last season his progeny won £5,401, while in 1903 and 1904, their successes did not reach £5,000 in either year. This year he figures fourth on the list with 13 winners of 22 races worth £16,048. Spearmint is, of course, the trump card in his pack: and to the Derby he owes £6,450 of his total: he has, however, four other children, winners of over £1,000, in Foresight, Gingal (£3,023) Ramrod and Tui.

Ayrshire has a good record in 16 winners of 31 races worth £14,620. The two-year-old Traquair who won four races worth over £8,000 is Ayrshire's mainstay eliminate Traquair and Ayrshire would make an indifferent show, for the only other one of his get whose successes produced four figures is the four-year-old King Duncan, winner of four events worth £1,429. Love Wisely obtains promotion through the merit of Bridge of Canny, who credits him with £10,255 out of his total of £14,450. The two-year-old Earlston contributes £1, 161, the proceeds of three races, but none of the eight remaining winners contribute as much as £1,000. Isinglass, who comes next, shows a great falling off from last year's total, which stood at £24,642: his eighteen winners have 31½ races to their credit and these were worth £13,521. He has, however, five winners of over £1000 and his place cannot be attributed to the exceptional merit of one of his progeny: like those of Gallioule, there is more of evenness about their performances than we find in other lists. Marco makes a great stride forward as a stallion, regarding him by the light of figures, which as we have shown tend to flatter the reputation: he has 14 winners of 23½ races worth £13,486: but £8,440 of this is contributed by the three-year-old Beppo: none of Marco's other children have won £1,000 on stakes during the year. Dinna Forget worms his way in the first ten by the merit of Dinneford: he has seven winners of eleven races worth in the aggregate £12,346; and of this total Dinneford with three brackets contributes no less than £10,017. This is the first really good horse Dinna Forget has got: his progeny left his name nowhere in previous years: in 1903 there was not a shilling at the credit of his progeny. Cyllene, the tenth on the list, has fallen from the high estate he held last year. Fourteen winners of 26½ races produced £12,118, which compares badly with the £21,555 of 1905; but then the best of sires cannot hope to beget a Derby winner every year and Cicero as a four-year-old contributes only £699, the value of a single race.

Florizel II, who for the third year in succession takes a fair place, if not so good as in 1904 and 1905, furnishes an example of the value of family connections. Own brother to Persimmon (St. Simon—Perdita II) his achievements when he carried silk were certainly not of a character to justify hopes of a successful career at the stud, though he was an undoubted stayer, a fact which of itself ought to have gained him patronage. What he did get he owed very largely to the fame of his brother; but when his progeny, Volodyovski, Doricles, Floriform and Mackintosh, first season horses, all made their début, Florizel II's subscription list filled up as rapidly as did Gallinule's when the merit of his progeny was discerned.

We are tempted to wonder how many sires who could have produced really good horses have been neglected, simply because they came of unfashionable blood or because they failed to achieve conspicuous success on the racecourse. It is an unprofitable, an impossible quest; but when we regard the places taken by Gallinule, Love Wisely and others at the stud, and consider their antecedents and the mere accident which secured them to perpetuate their kind, the impossible seems at least pardonable. Love Wisely is a most eloquent example of the happy accident; his late owner bought both his sire, Wisdom, and his dam, Enigma, paying under 100 guineas for the two. Wisdom never won a race in his life, and Enigma had no record at all from a turf point of view: yet the mating of these two was singularly successful as regards the female line: Florence won the Cambridgeshire of 1884, carrying 9st. 1lb. Tact threw Amiable, winner of the Oaks of 1894: and Gravity threw William the Third. Not a bad record for sire and dam, whose combined value measured by the only practical test was under £105! The simple explanation was that neither was of fashionable descent; but we may, in equine matters at all events, adopt the Chinese fashion and ennoble the ancestors in recognition of the services of the son. Love Wisely has made his mark at the stud and his subscription list fills at 250 guineas: a fact which, as we remarked before, tempts speculation as the number of good stallions the followers of fashion in breeding have neglected.

Sporting Notes.

THE result of the Trials was a complete triumph for those who maintained that Saloon in his preliminary tussle with Sacristan had suffered the chestnut to catch him in the straight. In the big race the country-bred was not permitted to steal so long a lead of his field as both Contest and Prince Lyon pursued him hot foot to the Hospital corner. Here the pace killed the two big horses and they fell away to let up Sacristan and Mr. Apcar's well-trained pair of Cup horses, Saloon meanwhile sailed gaily along in front and won with astonishing ease in equally astonishing time, cutting down Dalkeith's record of 1905. Mallard and Fitzgrafton had a bit of a set to, but the former had all the better of it and was at once made favourite for the Cup. The only other horse that attracted attention was the dark Steinhager, whose appearance in the paddock put a decided query to the statement that the Irish colt was hopelessly unfit to run over a distance. He finished in the ruck, but was going well and strong throughout the race so that a number of small investors were glad to take tens about him during the afternoon.

Saloon's victory brought plenty of money into the Ring for Wednesday's race and the market for the first time assumed a healthy aspect. The big race will be over before these notes appear in print, so that it would be idle to speculate on the change in the general view since Thursday last. On Saturday morning it was authoritatively stated that Long Tom had broken down and would not start for the Cup. At that time the report was incorrect, and the horse's connections expected to see him run, but his condition was sufficiently precarious to send him out in the betting to tens, and few, if any, takers.

When it was given out that Melsom would be available to ride Saloon in the Trials and Cup, and by Monday the price had shortened to 3½ or 4 to 1, the little horse's supporters began to come into the Ring. The big race eclipsed all other events on Saturday, but the hurdle race might have been very interesting but for the accidents to Hoop Iron, Olynthus and Santa Maria, the ultimate winner's most serious opponents.

The crush at the first flight was certain to produce an accident if any of the leading quartette made a mistake. Santa Maria pecked heavily and would probably have fallen, even had not Olynthus jumped right into her and completed the disaster, toppling over himself after a gallant effort to recover. When Hoop Iron fell the race was over as the mighty Decoration was quite unready to throw down the gage of battle even to his improving stable companion, Loch Lochie. Kipling won with his head in his chest and began the series of big victories which fell to Mr. J. D. Scott's stable during the afternoon.

Pony racing is apparently dying surely enough in Calcutta, and indeed the present division of classes was bound to make its effect felt before long. The Maiden Pony Plate produced a field of five, of which Matin Bell was the first to catch the judge's eye, although many in the stand would have it that the short head verdict should have been given in favour of Plover. The four thousand-rupee International Pony Plate was a gift for Lady Avon, the only opponent backed to beat her being poor old Psalm. Next came the Trials and after that the Ellenborough Plate in which a field of twenty-one horses streamed out of the starting gate. Mr. Deakin's green jacket came home alone this time and the handicappers were justified by the defeat of Dea, a very hot favourite and the placing of two outsiders, Jack Sheppard and Clynder, on which the tote paid heavy dividends.

The Paddock Plate, an R. C. Handicap, was the good thing it looked for Ballark, although a strong up-country contingent cheerfully accepted two to one about Mother Goose. But the supporters of the grey jacket had overrated the filly's ability and indeed Calcutta race-goers are only slowly realizing what a good horse Ballark is. He is much the same class as Mallard and might very well be competing in the open races. Bon Bon ran well, but Lord Boyne failed to get a place, although well backed. In these big fields on the Calcutta course backing is very precarious work.

The outcry about the "Barrier" still continues to supply letters to the local daily press and this although the "sacred" enclosure has been thrown open for the big meeting to all holders of paddock tickets, irrespective of that social position on which the letter writers so persistently and irrelevantly insist. The barrier now serves only to prevent the decided crush below the Viceroy's Box and the Club Stand, which we all remember of old, which would be intensified by the narrowness of the present Lawn opposite the Big Stand. On English courses, ordinary racegoers who wish to stare at "the quality" are obliged to do so from a very considerable distance, in Calcutta they are much more generously treated in this respect and yet this cry of "snob," "snob" is raised when a railing is erected to break the crowd and so prevent a crush around the Judge's box, Stewards' stand and the higher-priced reserved seats. The Turf Club and reserved seats were fully occupied on Saturday, so that there is no question of increasing the seating accommodation for the public. The objections, which we commented upon in a recent issue, have been fully met by the Stewards, and there does not seem to be much reason in the prolonged clamour.

The Burdwan Cup usually affords a good line for the Grand National, but this year it seems to be an easier task than ever for Kipling. Decoration was striding out grandly at the finish last Saturday, but is painfully short of condition and it is difficult to see how he is to stay over the three miles, leaping all the way. Olynthus will be seen out again next Saturday, but Kipling apparently is not engaged in the Grand Annual, so it will be difficult to get any line to indicate the chances of Mr. Pugh's horse. The course is in fine order this year and the pity is that we cannot get more than two afternoons' chasing yearly on this very pleasant course.

The first Calcutta paperchase brought out all the horses qualifying for the hunters' steeplechases at the Tollygunge Meeting, but accidents have thinned the ranks considerably this year. Captain Holder's Lord Harry is going better than ever and seems to have the open steeplechase on New Year's Day at his mercy, the only difficulty has been to find enough candidates to fill the race. Pretender is resuscitated and has done a good school in addition to a steady gallop round the paperchase course at the opening meet. Lady Gold is the only other serious competitor at level weights, though Cain, Orphan Boy, and Fairy are all entered and may have a dart for the place money; the opportunity seems rather a tempting one. Mr. Pugh has entered his new mare, but she can hardly be fit to go this distance yet.

The ponies are hardly more numerous, but nine have entered for the steeplechase on New Year's Day. Good Chap will have to deal with Pathfinder, who is a rattling good pony, Energy and Mistlebird. The turn-out at the first chase was, on the whole, very disappointing as regards "quality."

Full reports of the Rawalpindi December Meeting appear among our Turf news to-day. The sport was of all-round excellence, so high class was it and so complete the arrangements of the executive that it will be matter for surprise if the prospects of racing in the N.-W. are not materially affected for good by it.

All who shoot in India will read with interest the letter of Messrs. Westley Richards and Company regarding their new ·318 bore rifle.

A bullet that hits the mark but does not kill has just been invented by Dr. Deirliers, of Paris. The details of its construction are not mentioned, but it is said to be hollow, and can be used several times. In a test for duel practice pistols were used with steel guards resembling a sword hilt because, although the bullet does not penetrate the clothing, it will wound naked flesh. Both men wore goggles. Out of 272 shots, 202 struck some part of the bodies of the duellists.

The trend of the day, in every department of shooting, is toward abolishing the nuisance and the uncomfortableness of heavy recoil. What a lot of heroic sufferers we have been, all these days, is brought to our attention by the interesting statistics of the recoil of the famous weapons of the day and the contrast which they show alongside of some of the latest arms. The spirit of physical ease which puts rubber tires on our carriages and shock-absorbers on our automobiles and air cushions on our camp beds, seems to have been at work on our firearms.

Take, for instance, the interesting table of recoils which has recently come on the market, and it will be found that there is the most astonishing difference between the new high-powered rifles and the old. The new self-loading ·35 calibre weapon is shown to have just about one-eighth of the recoil that is characteristic of the old ·45-90, and about one-tenth of the average recoil of the 12-gauge shot-gun using the usual load. If there was anything needed to confirm the future of the much discussed self-loading weapons of this day it would be found in these facts.

Fourteen teams have entered for the Agra Polo Tournament, which looks as if it is going to provide polo of high class.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Though punters were not fortunate enough to pick every winner, as was the case the previous Saturday, they nevertheless had an excellent day's racing The attendance was distinctly better and some close finishes, with good entries, were more enjoyable than the easy wins of the First Extra. The opening event saw Ames have a very narrow escape and he is fortunate in getting off with a somewhat lumpy face, a brace of black eyes and a crocked thigh. He was on the favourite Gaucho and though he certainly would not have won, was third in a hard finish. As they reached the stand, in full view of the onlookers, Gaucho stumbled and fell, fortunately shooting Ames some distance ahead as in his struggles the pony was within an ace of rolling over him. Robertson was on his heels on Adham, who swerved so suddenly to avoid the fallen one that he unseated his rider, who fell luckily. A poor field of five followed for the Selling Plate and after being made an odds on favourite, Court Martial had his field set on coming into the straight where Lomond, till then, held pride of place.

Precious was one of the two "good things" of the day and started at the prohibitive price of 5 to 2 on. On nearing the bend he drew up with the two pace-makers Dublin and Royal and won in the same brilliant manner with ears cocked, as he did in Poona. The other "cert" was Bay Middleton in the last race, the Small Arab Plate, a Rs. 500 race for which there was only one other starter, the Rs. 100 for third place actually going begging. Hermit was the second starter, but never looked dangerous from start to finish, the champion doing the 5 furlongs in 1min. 7secs., well in hand. They tell me Little Joker was the one Byramji intended to bring from Poona instead of Hermit, but even with the grey in at a galloping weight I feel sure the result would have been just as much of a foregone conclusion.

The best betting race the books have had in the two days was the Winter Plate. Once more punters tried to forestall owners and paid the penalty, as after Posco had gone to evens he extended to fours and the stable came at Comeback and sent him out favourite at evens. Balayeuse was most consistently backed, but her owner never saw her anywhere but in the ruck. Vocalist followed by Baritone cut out the pace at a tremendous bat ; all was over bar the shouting, however, when Heeroo brought Comeback along to win as he liked. His stable companion Posco put in a late run that threatened Baritone's second place and had her crouching native jock had a finish in him she would have troubled the winner. This Padlock mare, half sister to Key West, will show she is more than worth her feed before long. Comeback's time for the 6 furlongs was 1 min. 15secs.

The worst upset of the day was when Vedas went out at odds on for the Holiday Plate. Ames took him in front immediately and had Sherali set at the bend. Here, though, Heeroo came on Mudlool and, after a tremendous finish with whips out all the way down the straight, won by a bare neck. Ames must have still felt the effects of his nasty spill as his finish was not too strong and he decidedly made too much use of the favourite, an easy by the bend might have won him the race.

The Bombay hounds out at Santa Cruz have as many followers as ever and the new batch of hounds are meeting with the most complimentary remarks for their work on anything but good scenting days. Jacks are plentiful and a find almost immediately follows the cast. The first kill of the season, in public, was on Thursday when a very large field included H. E. the Governor. Mrs. Meyer, Mrs. Donald Graham, Miss Turner and Miss Croft are very regularly out. A fine run was the one in question, the jack making towards Jack Symon's Hill, thence to the Backwater, across the Andheri Road to the Marole Caves. Here in the paddy fields, in full view of the field, he was rolled over.

The weather has been all that could be desired for the Saturday races at the Royal Bombay Yacht Club and the entries on Saturday were much better than has been the case for the first few occasions. There was a moderate N.-W. wind and an exciting race for A class. Eileen immediately drew ahead, did the first round excellently and seemed certain of a win. The wind, however, increased and this suiting Sapphire she sailed beautifully and just scraped home on her allowance. For B class, Sayonara was given 8mins. 30secs by her three opponents and actually led round the Buoy the first time round. Pixie and then Trixie overhauled her, but she hung on sailing finely in the light wind and won very handsomely, well handled.

A race full of incident was the Tomtit and Small Boat class, Midget being the first one to get into difficulties and, fouling the Buoy, retired. Tomtit early took the lead. but this she lost when a steamer got in her way and Meg went to the front. Tomtit continued to sail well and passed Lapwing, but could not get up to Meg, Coralie winning the handicap prize by six seconds from Clutha

Once again is the Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar to be heartily congratulated, for his grand horse Fitzgrafton won the Viceroy's Cup yesterday : indeed he is doubly "pedestaled in praise" in that he also ran second with Mallard. To take a slight liberty with Milton "Sport hath her victories no less renowned than war" and this fresh triumph will assuredly evoke congratulations from racing men in every part of India. The Master was third. Details will be found in our report further on.

With the return of Christmas once more it becomes our pleasant duty to acknowledge the receipt of numerous Almanacs, Catalogues and other seasonable manifestations from many business friends. To Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey we are indebted for a copy of their elegantly turned out catalogue and price list, an illustrated record of things costly, beautiful, useful and rare. Messrs. Elkington and Company, Limited, through their Agents, Messrs. Walter Locke and Company, Limited, excite envy and admiration with a copy of their special list of choice and artistic silverware. The Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, from their branch office in Dalhousie Square, Calcutta, issue a well coloured wall calendar for next year, with a charming view of the old Cathedral thrown in. Messrs. Cutler Palmer and Company's greeting this year takes the form of a very striking almanac on which we have types of the Indian Army and nicely coloured views of popular spots—the Taj, Lahore Gardens, Delhi and Udaipur to wit. Messrs. James Murray present us with strawberries and "Dates"; the Agents of the Harrison Line of Steamers have not forgotten us in their neatly printed desk calendar; the Commercial Union Fire, Life, Marine and Accident Assurance Company have also weighed in with a useful calendar.

Messrs. Federico Peliti present us with a very chaste and delicately tinted wall calendar and accentuate their good wishes with a gift of "sugared sweetness" for which we thank them.

Harmston's Circus increases in popularity. The mammoth tent is filled to overflowing every night—indeed people have been turned away from the doors on one or two occasions—while the matinées are attended by crowds of the younger generation for whom "Harmston's" has had such attractions for so many years. In a programme replete with star turns it is difficult to know where to begin. But if we may be permitted to show any preference we should plump for the performance of the Frantz troupe. This clever family have earned a name for themselves on the Continent and in America, and it is certain that as acrobats, tumblers and gymnasts we have never seen their match east of Suez. A refined, finished and astonishing performance in every sense of the word, their strength, grace and agility earn for them a warm reception every night. Our old friends, the Wheelers, have added a number of new tricks to their repertoire and the grotesque yet extremely difficult and clever specialities of the tramp cyclist and his companion's graceful and daring turns continue to amuse and amaze us. Nellie, Jennie, and Willie Harmston-Love astonish us by their progress every year. The two young ladies, besides being accomplished equestriennes, give a very graceful exhibition of wire walking, while their brother is an acrobat of no mean calibre. The performing animals introduced by John Paul Rougal show careful training and perfect condition, and this up-to-date act is unattended by the usual shouting and whip cracking on the part of the trainer and growling, snarling, and ill temper by the animals. The performing ponies and ring acts are as good as ever, and Frank Eldered's riding and balancing feats are extremely clever. Last, but not least, we must mention the Collin's Princess Quartette whose coon songs and dainty dancing are much appreciated.

There have been changes of programme since last we had the pleasure of noticing the bill, and, of course, for Christmas week the management has catered very specially, and the artists have individually and collectively given us of their very best. There was a matinée on Monday in addition to the show at night; on Christmas Day there was a special matinée, there was another yesterday and one is billed for to-day plus the usual night performance. On Monday there was a capital high jumping contest for a handsome prize: these competitions are always popular with the public and with those for whose special benefit they are got up, often some fine performances are witnessed and always much interest is evoked in local horsey circles.

To-morrow night another monster bill will be presented and among the "Extras" will be the presentation of souvenirs to the trainer and winning jockey in the Viceroy's Cup race.

The Columbia Rink, in spite of counter-attractions, still draws enthusiastic crowds, both performers and spectators, and the first fancy dress carnival for children held last week was a great success. A happy crowd of small people in costumes of every nationality under the sun enjoyed themselves and their surroundings immensely, a lucky bag and a Punch and Judy show being well patronised. Every little visitor received a present of some description, not one being permitted to go away empty handed. Some handsome prizes are being offered by the genial Proprietor to the best racer on roller skates to-night, and the big carnival billed to take place on New Year's eve will, it is anticipated, be a huge success.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 7th December 1906.

RAGING gales with rain, hail and sleet or snow for a change have been blowing over these islands at short intervals since I wrote last. There was a gale on Saturday, another on Wednesday, and another yesterday. Wednesday's storm found out one of the weak spots in wireless telegraphy, as the steel tower, 450 feet high, at Machrihanish (place beloved of Western Scottish golfers) snapped in three pieces and fell with a terrific crash. Nobody was injured fortunately. The tale of wreck rolls up slowly and surely. We have not heard the last of it by any means I imagine.

Naval artillery practice does not much move the average citizen, and naturally enough, as he can never obtain a chance of seeing the interesting business. The performance of H. M. S. Drake in the gun-laying tests of this year do not therefore receive so much attention as they deserve. At a range of four miles her big guns made 105 hits out of 133 rounds, or 79 per cent. This is the record performance in the annals of naval battle practice for the navies of the world: one would like to know more about the conditions under which such amazingly good shooting was done.

Of course it does not take much to rouse the ire of soldiers against C. B. and Co., and the feeling displayed in the clubs about the removal of the Scots Greys from Piershill and Glasgow was only to be expected. Both Edinburgh and Glasgow are popular with soldiers, particularly in winter, and the closing of barracks whence a man gets as much hunting, shooting and social amusement as he wants in winter, to say nothing of yachting and fishing in summer, is properly regarded as an outrage. C. B. and Co. could bear the anathema of clubdom with fortitude: but when the godlike masses, with the Lord Provosts of Edinburgh and Glasgow and Lord Rosebery at their head, in meeting assemble and denounce the Liberal ministry wherein they trusted with bell, book and candle, the matter takes another colour. Mr. Haldane had attributed the withdrawal of cavalry from Piershill to the insanitary barracks: but as the barracks are now to be occupied by artillery, people naturally want to know what he means by it. We know Mr. Haldane wants to reduce the artillery, but is it quite fair to effect reductions by keeping them in unwholesome barracks? The fat is in the fire and they who tend the flames mean to keep them going. On such minor threads does the fate of ministers hang.

Mr. Collard's trial by court-martial, arising out of the stokers' row at Portsmouth, ended in the criminal being reprimanded for having committed an act, to the prejudice of good order and discipline, on 24th November, when he ordered stoker Acton to go on the knee in order to reprove him. The proceedings occupied two days, and to my unenlightened intelligence their most conspicuous quality was the amazing triviality of the evidence. Mr. Collard denied having called any stoker "a dog" clean or dirty: it never crossed his mind that there was any humiliation in the order "on the knee!" and he attributed the trouble to the operations of agitators who enlisted the sympathies of the ha'penny papers to work up grievances. So the matter fizzles out, and I hope Mr. Collard is no penny the worse of the pother.

It was a pleasant but, I am told, rather moving ceremony that took place in Upper School last Friday when Lord Elgin, on behalf of old Etonians, presented Dr. Warre with the portrait of himself by Sargent. For forty-five years the Doctor has been at Eton as Assistant and Head, and his acquaintance with ten or a dozen generations of Eton boys has been of the happiest. The testimonials offered him, included a cheque for £1,450, in a silver box, this representing the balance of the subscription for the portrait. Lord Elgin's speech was singularly happy in both substance and tone. Dr. Warre was visibly moved; his reply, brief, halting and delivered in a low tone amid perfect hush, gave witness to the feeling with which he bore part in the final scene of his severance with Eton.

Sir Edward Reed's death on Friday recalls the old dispute about rigged turret-ships, which brought about Sir Edward's resignation of his office as Naval Constructor to the Admiralty in 1870. Mr Reed, as he then was, strongly objected to the plan of the turret-ship which was all in favour at Whitehall then and refused to countenance it. It was only a month or two after his resignation that the ironclad turret-ship Captain capsized, as if to bear out the accuracy of the Naval Constructor's views. A self-made man, he had reason to be proud of his career: of nothing was he prouder than the talent for caricature displayed by his son so regularly in Punch.

The Albert Hall on Saturday was not so crowded as I have sometimes seen it, but Madame Patti had no cause to complain of empty benches. The farewell programme, appropriately, included the songs most nearly associated with her name: Tosti's Serenata, Il Bacio, Robin Adair and Comin' through the Rye. Some of us hoped for the Three Fishers, but it was not forthcoming. It is astonishing how Madame Patti's voice remains to her! Twenty years ago I sat within a few yards of her while she sang and thought the effort with which she seemed to draw breath implied the early failure of her powers: there was no evidence of this on Saturday: her every note was clear and liquid as ever. It is to be hoped that this is not really the last time she will sing: there was no reason discoverable on Saturday why she should not give a series of farewell concerts to extend over many years.

There is little to say about the theatres this week: we have reached the lull before the pantomimes and no new thing of mark is to be noticed. Mr. Jerome K. Jerome has dramatised his novel "Tommy & Co." and the result produced at a suburban house, the Camden, is on the whole well spoken of as "strong, deep and sincere," gripping the emotions in certain parts. The unkindest cut of all is "the humour is flat," every dog has his day: and the humour of Jerome was submerged by the flood of imitation. it had its vogue, but it was a short one. I shall wait till "Tommy" reaches one of the un-suburban houses to go and see it.

The revival of a "Midsummer Night's Dream" on Saturday at the Adelphi does not call for much remark: it is as wonderfully staged and as admirably played as it was a year ago: the excellence of the play was to be expected as the cast is, with a few exceptions, the same. The most prominent newcomers are Miss Rose Hersee, who plays Hermia: I think her part as Alice in Wonderland suited her better than the Shakespearian rôle, but she was a little nervous on Monday. Miss Thyrza Norman takes Miss Barlow's place as Titania and is well suited therein: she looks exceedingly pretty as the fairy. It struck me that the clowns rather overdo their part: it is a thankless task to try and improve on Shakespeare. Puck (Miss Nita Faydon) like Snout and Starveling went in too generously for "business."

"Peter's Mother" at Wyndham's has been honoured by a command to appear at Sandringham on Saturday.

I often wondered why the enterprise of Leicester Square never rose to biograph pictures of the mine compounds in South Africa when the idiotic "Chinese Slavery" agitation was at its height: it seemed an opportunity lost. Now the Palace has produced a remarkably good and vivid series, showing the downtrodden Chinee as he appears in his off-time. The pictures show the coolies in their tubs; amusing themselves with athletics and theatricals, the best scenes are those showing them at cards and dominoes: the faces of the Celestials have all the intentness of absorption and never an eye is cast on the machine which is "taking" them. It is a very good series, which produced earlier might have done some practical good.

The Hippodrome has recovered possession of Chung Ling Soo, the Chinese conjurer, who was performing there a year or two ago. He is certainly the cleverest magician I remember to have seen, if only because of the success whereby he produces articles out of others infinitely too small to contain them: one of the best things he produced from his own apparently limitless interior was a billiard cue: and his achievement with a girl in a glass case was also most baffling. Another new turn is that of Maz Marzella's performing birds, toucans and cockatoos, which do "skirt dances" in their own fashion under coloured limelight, very attractive and giving evidence of clever training. The only complaint I had to make was that the artistes talked too much when not performing: it was suggested that they were criticising the bird who was dancing.

The Canterbury has secured its license after all. The alterations and limitations of audience in gallery and balcony having been agreed to by the management, there was no reason to withhold it. A new music-hall was in contemplation at Finsbury Park, some in the north of London, but the inhabitants, or some of them, opposed the scheme: they feared, they said, the lowering of their moral tone—or the moral tone of each other. Their moral tone is safe for the present as the license was refused.

Think you not, Editorjee, that 12*s.* 6*d.* is rather much for a table d'hôte dinner? This is their charge at the Ritz for mere nobodies whose names are not worth putting in next day's paper. I cannot say I like the Ritz twelve and sixpenny dinner: they give you ten or a dozen courses and the helpings of each are simply massive. None but an interior of perfectly Lambertian dimensions could hold half of it. This is not what one expects at a place like the Ritz, where quality and daintiness should rule instead of quantity. How dining resorts change! Fifteen or twenty years ago the Continental was the place to take a woman (eligible for presentation) to dine: now the place is almost empty until the theatres are out, and then—well, you would rather not take your wife or sister there.

By the way, the Lyceum is to be offered for sale at Tokenhouse-Yard next Thursday: the theatre is a big one, seating 2,750 people.

Mr. Lewis Waller's motor-car collision near Coventry one day last October attracted much more attention than the matter intrinsically demanded. The case was heard on Friday and Mr. Waller was fined £5 and costs for travelling at dangerous speed: Mr. Waller contemplated appealing, but I have not heard that he has done so yet.

While I respect profoundly Miss Blower's regard for her dog I cannot think that she was wise in adopting the vocation of hospital nurse, in view of the almost insuperable difficulty of reconciling duty to one's dog with duty to one's patients. Miss Blower applied for, and was appointed to, the post of Infirmary nurse at Strood, Rochester, and when about to take up the appointment intimated her intention to bring her dog with her. The Guardians objected: Miss Blower protested: the Guardians were firm: Miss Blower then wrote calmly and pathetically that she could not part from the dog which had been her companion for so long. The Guardians bore the lady's defection with fortitude, dismissed a suggestion to sue for a month's salary and engaged a nurse who had no canine ties.

There has been marked decrease during the last few weeks in the amount of pauperism in London. During the week ended 24th November the number of persons relieved was 6,606 less than in the same week of 1905, the decline is the more noteworthy because this is the season when, usually, the number of applicants rises. We must I think look beyond figures in this case: the falling off synchronises with the West Ham Guardian scandals and the Poplar Enquiry. Is it too wild a supposition that excessive relief for dishonest political purposes is falling into discredit under the light of publicity? We know what followed the abolition of "labour tests:" now our pockets are to be relieved again to some extent. At Wandsworth Workhouse a revolt is threatened: destitution came in such crowds for the week end that the Guardians have made the Sunday dinner much less tempting: and even the old patrons of the workhouse, long resident therein, are threatening to go out.

The case of Pearce vs. Day, which was decided last Friday, adds another to the array to quote in support of the view that one may be insane and yet sane enough to make a will. Mrs. Day's relatives were hardly to be criticised for opposing probate. The lady suffered from delusions and illusions, patronised spiritualistic mediums and, unable to draw a straight line in her normal moments, drew sketches which Dr. White described as "recognised symptoms of insanity" when under some mysterious influence. Her relatives very reasonably considered that when she left property away from them who had always been on good terms with her, she was acting under the "evil influences" which, Mrs. Day maintained, pervaded the house where she lived: but the special jury held otherwise and found for the will.

ONLOOKER.

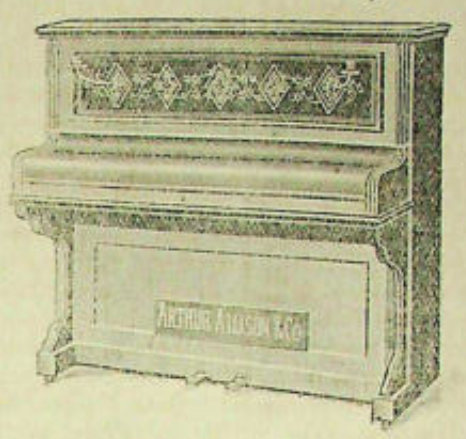
THE JOURNAL OF THE BOMBAY NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

VOL. XVII, NO. 2.

THE present number consists of nearly 300 pages of printed matter, four coloured plates, another illustration, and numerous woodcuts. Altogether it makes a most valuable addition to the naturalist's library. The number of coloured plates exceeds that of most journals of this description. The frontispiece is by H. Grönwold and depicts the common teal (Nettium crecca) and is in continuation of the series of plates in connection with Mr. Stuart Baker's paper "India's Ducks and their allies." It shows the duck and the drake in full plumage. The next coloured plate of the Dhaman or Indian Rat Snake (Lamenis mucosus) is by J. Green, illustrating Captain Wall's article "A popular treatise of the common Indian Snakes." The following one depicts four varieties of the eggs of the Indian Cuckoo (Cuculus Micropterus), five of Hodgson's Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx Nisicolor) three of the large Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx sparverioides), four of the Indian Plaintive Cuckoo (Cacomantis Passerinus) and of the common Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx Varius). This beautiful plate is by Mr. Stuart Baker to illustrate his paper "The Oology of Indian Parasitic Cuckoos." The last plate is by Horace Knight and shows the following butterflies:—Hypolimnus bolina, male and female, Hypolimnus misippus male and female, and Vanessa cardui. This plate is given with Mr. L. C. H. Young's popular article on "The Common Butterflies of the Plains of India." We can find no fault with any of the plates, the names of the artists are a sufficient guarantee of the merit of the work.

There is much interesting and useful matter to be culled by a perusal of the various papers by the different authors. Insects take the lead with seven articles, then birds with four, snakes with three and Botany and Mammals each account for one and besides these articles there are thirty-nine miscellaneous notes.

The first paper in this number is Capt. Wall's on the Common Indian Snakes. In it he deals with the Common Rat Snake, or Dhaman (Lamenis mucosus). This is a very well known species, being probably the commonest snake we have. The greatest length recorded in this species is eleven and three quarter feet, but they usually measure between five and a half and six and a half feet. Some of our Aryan brethren are said to use this snake as food and according to Capt. Wall the Tamils relish it and say it is like chicken. There is no reason why it should not be as palatable as any batrachian and the latter in the form of the edible frog (Rana esculens) is a well-known dish in France. Again the Burmese and Karens are not particular as to what species of snake they eat. We are given several well-known legends in regard to this species; one being its peculiarity of sucking cows and we have also heard tell of its occasionally acting similarly towards women. Another legend is that it mates with the cobra. Of course there is not a vestige of truth in either of these suppositions. Its principal food is frogs and not rats as one would be supposed to believe from its name. The plate which illustrates the paper is excellent and depicts views of the side and top of head and neck and also chin, throat, and sections from the body and near the vent. Capt. Wall gives us two other papers on snakes, one is part II. of "The Poisonous Snakes of India and how to recognise them." This one deals with the Cobra (Naia tripudians), the Hamadryad (Naia bungarus) five species of Coral snakes:—Bibron's Coral snake (Callophis bibronii) Maclelland's Coral snake (Callophis Maccle'landi), the slender Coral snake (Callophis trimaculatus), the small spotted coral snake (Callophis maculiceps) and the common Indian Coral snake (Hemibungarus ingrassens); the pit vipers, consisting of two species of Ancistrodon: the common Himalayan viper (A. Hmalayanus). A. hypnale; ten of Lachasis; the large scaled viper (L. Macrolepis): the Horse-shoe viper (L. Strigatus), the large spotted viper (L. monticola), Cantor's Viper (L. cantoris), Gray's Viper (L. purpurcomaculatus), the Formosan viper (L. Mucrosquamatus), Jerdon's viper (L. Jerdonii), the common Bamboo snake (L. gramineus), the green tic (L. trigonocepha us) and the Anamalley Viper (L. anamalleusis) and the pitless vipers, viz:—The Little Indian viper (Echis carinata), McMahon's viper (Eristocophis McMahonii), Russells' viper (Vipera Russellii) Vipera lebetina, and Azemiops feae. Of these the best known are the Cobra, the Hamadryad or King Cobra, the common Bamboo snake, the little Indian Viper, or Phoorsa, and Russel's Viper or Deboia. Keys are given for the identification of the species, which should be of great use to those who are interested in these reptiles. Nothing seems to be known about any of the poisons of the coral snakes, this is I suppose to be accounted for on account of the rarity of most of the species. The poisons of the cobra and Hamadryad, are of course deadly, but this is not the case with the pit vipers; as regards the pitless vipers the venoms of this species the little Indian Viper (Echis carinate) and Russell's viper (Vipera russellii) are known to be deadly to man but nothing seems to be known of the other species, but we presume it is also deadly and would hardly advise any one whose ambition is to live to a ripe old age to indulge in handling them.



The last paper of Captain Wall is on "The snake and its natural foes." These are legion, in fact they comprise almost the whole animal creation from man downwards. Amongst Baggrave Hall, Leicester, 13th November 1881.

TO DOBSON & SON, LEICESTER.

SIRS,—In reply to your enquiry as to whether I have derived satisfaction from your Alterative Horse Powders, I beg to say I should not have sent for other lots had I not found them beneficial for their intended purpose. I don't approve of physicing horses, but these Powders seem to possess a harmless and special virtue. The object of your enquiry being to use my reply as a testimonial, you are at liberty to do so for what anybody may think my opinion worth.

I am, yours faithfully,
E. S. BURNABY.

mammals the following orders are mentioned as being some of its enemies:—Primates, Carnivorae, Viverridae, Canidae, Mustelidae, Rodentia and Ungulata.

Amongst birds are the following orders:—Passeres, Anisodactyli, Striges, Accipitres, Rotitae, Gallinae, Grallae, Limicolae Herodiones, Ocnidae and Ardeidae. Amongst reptiles the order Squamata is given and besides them there are also batrachians, fishes and insects, the following orders being mentioned: Ecaudata, Arachnida, Selacheidei and Hymenoptera, even with this long list of foes snakes seem to flourish like the green bay tree.

Other popular articles in this number are "The Common Butterflies of the plains of India," Part II, by Mr. L. C. H. Young and "Insect life in India and how to study it" Chapter VII., Part IV., by Mr. E. P. Stebbing. Let us turn to the first of these. The present part deals with the genera Hypolimnas and Vanessa. The first genus is most interesting on account of the peculiar form of sexual dimorphism they display. Anybody not versed in entomology could never believe that the males and females of Hypolimnas bolina, Hypolimnas misippus belonged to the same species. This is especially the case in the latter species, the upper side of the male being glossy brownish black and that of the female rich chestnut. The only species of Vanessa described is the well-known Painted Lady (Vanessa cardui) which occurs over the whole temperate and tropical regions of the world. How many memories of one's boyhood does that species recall.

Mr. Stebbing's article deals with Coleoptera. These are one of the worst pests there are, both larvæ and mature insects causing damage. There are 160,000 known species which shows what a huge order this is, some species or other are common everywhere so this is a most important group. The larvæ of these insects are most repulsive-looking creatures. The present paper deals with the following familiar ones:—Passalidae, which live in decayed wood; Lucanidae (Stagbeetles) Scarabaeidae (chafers). The following subfamilies are under discussion, Coprides or Dung beetles, Melolonthides or Cockchafers, Dynastides and Cetoniides or Rose chafers. Amongst the Coprides are the Scarabaeini, which are known to everyone on account of their connection with Egyptian mythology. Those beetles act as scavengers by burying the dung of animals. It also appears that different species are found in the droppings of different animals. A peculiarity in this species is that the female doesn't die after laying her eggs, which is the case with other insects. This family is, we should say, one of the useful coleoptera, in fact the only useful kind mentioned in this paper. No mention is made of how to prevent the great destruction done by these insects both in their larval and mature state; but we presume this is because no means are as yet known to science which could be done on any large scale.

Let us now turn to the ornithological papers, the most important of which is Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's on "The Oology of Indian Parasitic Cuckoos." The present number is Part II and deals with the following species: The small Cuckoo (Cuculus poliocephalus); the Indian Cuckoo (Cuculus micropterus); the large Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx sparveroides); the common Hawk-Cuckoo (Hierococcyx varius); Hodgson's Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx nisicolor); the small Hawk-Cuckoo (Hierococcyx nanus); the Indian Plaintive Cuckoo (Cacomantis passerinus). Absolutely authentic eggs of all these Cuckoos, with the exception of the Indian Cuckoo (Cuculus micropterus), and the small Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx nanus) have been taken. Absolutely nothing is known of the identification of the latter bird, but it is practically certain that Colonel Rattray has taken eggs of the former. He found a nest of the Himalayan Streaked Laughing Thrush (Trochalopterum lineatum) on the 24th May 1899, at Murree, which contained three eggs undoubtedly belonging to the latter bird. Three days later he saw only two eggs in the nest and two broken eggs outside and a lot of blue-grey feathers on the bush. One of the two remaining eggs was different from the Laughing Thrush's eggs, being of a paler blue and thinner and clearer in shell. Mr. Baker shows that the feathers on the bush could only belong to Cuculus canorus, C. saturatus, C. poliocephalus, C. micropterus, Hierococcyx sparveroides, H. nisicolor or H. nanus. H. nanus not being found there, and Mr. Buller shows that all the Hawk Cuckoo's and Cuculus saturatus and Cuculus poliocephalus lay eggs different to the one under discussion and also no authentic blue egg of Cuculus canorus has been taken and so this leaves only Cuculus micropterus; besides Cuculus micropterus is a very common species at Murree.

The first species dealt with in this paper is the small Cuckoo (Cuculus poliocephalus). Authentic eggs of this Cuckoo have been taken by several collectors and the specimens vary from white through pale pinkish chocolate to darkish reddish brown. There is absolutely no doubt as to the authenticity of both the white and coloured eggs as both have been secured from the oviduct of the female, by Mr. B. B. Ormaston and Colonel Rattray. Next to the Cuckoo comes the Indian Cuckoo (Cuculus micropterus) which has already been dealt with and next the Hawk Cuckoos so called on account of their likeness to those birds of prey, and especially that of the Brain Fever Bird (Hierococcyx varius) to the Shikra (Astur badius). The best known of these Cuckoos is the common Hawk Cuckoo or Brain Bever Bird (Hierococcyx varius). There is no doubt as to the authenticity of this bird's eggs as oviduct eggs have been taken by Messrs Irvine and Inglis and Colonel Bingham. They are all blue eggs, some paler and others darker. Colonel Rattray is the only man who has taken an oviduct egg of the large Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx sparveroides). This egg was blue like that of the common Myna (Acridotheres tristis), but larger. Besides these blue eggs Messrs Baker and Coltart have eggs of a deep chocolate brown colour which they consider to belong to this species but it is so far a case of non-proven. An oviduct egg of Hodgson's Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx) was taken by the late Mr. L. Mandelli and was olive brown in colour with a darker indistinct zone of the same colour round the thick end. Messrs. Baker, & Coltart have taken a number of eggs of this species and the colour varies from deep olive brown, through bright olive green, speckled, to dull olive grey, also speckled. Passing over the Small Hawk Cuckoo (Hierococcyx nanus) of which the Oology is unknown we come to the Indian Plaintive Cuckoo (Cacomantis passerinus). Miss Cockburn has taken an oviduct egg of this bird which was blue spotted with reddish brown, another is like the last but with a white ground instead of blue.

Other bird papers of importance are, first and foremost, Mr. B. B. Osmaston's "Notes on Andaman Birds," Colonel A. E. Ward's "Birds of Kashmir" and Mr. Macdonald's "Birds of Myingyan."

The greater proportion of the miscellaneous notes is devoted to ornithology and are mostly of great importance. Amongst them we note Mr. Whymper's note on the breeding of Ibis-bill (Ibidorhynchus struthersi). He is, we believe, the first European, who has ever taken these eggs. He found his a month earlier than Lieutenant F. M. Bailey did in Tibet. Mr. Stuart Baker's reply to Mr. Oates' criticism of his identification of the Pink-footed goose (Anser brachyrhynchus) is most interesting. Now that further light has been thrown on the subject he only considers one of the geese he got to be the pink-footed variety and the other Anser middendorfi. We await remarks on further specimens before we can give our decision as to whether we consider the Pink-footed goose ought to hold a place on our list or not. Mr. Baker asks Mr. Oates to give us a key to the Bean goose and we quite endorse this wish.

"In the words of the dying Goethe," shouted the Radical orator, "what we want is light—more light."

"And, with all your blooming gas," growled the Tory objector, "it oughter be easy for you to get it."

YARNS OF AN OLD FOGEY.

A PERSISTENT TIGER.

W. S. T.'s tiger shooting stories in The Indian Field some time ago reminded me of an episode which occurred many years ago to me when a tiger "rashly importunate came to his death," to adopt a line of Hood's. Khubber was brought to me one morning of a kill within a mile of the village I was camped at, after chota hazri I went out, inspected the place and found the cow had hardly been touched, in fact, as far as I can remember now, barring the claw and fang marks she had not a scratch on her at all. The jungle was particularly thick scrub, five years' regrowth from temporary cultivation, and there was only one possible tree anywhere near for a machan. This was a pollarded Phyllanthus emblica, which, after having had all its top branches lopped off at the time of original felling, had sent out a fresh crop of strong healthy shoots. The most suitable place for the machan was only about 8 feet off the ground and in this we built a substantial one, well hidden by the aforesaid shoots. The kill lay only 15 yards off, but the jungle was so thick that we had to cut a regular path 6 feet broad from the tree to it, and also clear a space round it. This cutting, together with the tying down of the carcase, made me have a very poor opinion of my chances, however, as the weather was perfect and the moon full, I determined to sit up. Even if nothing turns up a night spent in the solitude of Indian forests has always had a deep charm for me, with its strange noises, many of them never heard in the day, and the pleasure in watching, say, a herd of cheetal graze slowly past, or a lordly stag sambhur walking along with his head thrown back and swaying slightly from side to side, for all the world as if he was admiring the shadow of his horns in the moonlight.

I got in my machan then about 5 P.M. and sent my men away, telling them to talk as they went. I had a D. B. ·577 express and a bottle of cold tea with me. The only mistake I could find about my machan was that it was too comfortable. Gradually night fell and noise ceased, except for the occasionally strident call of a peafowl perched up in some high tree or the last crow of a belated jungle cock. My idea of a tiger's chief hours of visiting a kill are 5 to 6 P.M., 9 to 10 P.M., 2 A.M. and again at daylight, say about 5-30 A.M. or thereabouts. I kept my vigil then till about 7, and then gently lay down, intending to rest and not to sleep. The night was delightfully cool and I gradually dropped off in a sound sleep to wake up with a start half an hour or so later. I rose silently to a sitting position and kept watch and ward for at least 2 hours more. The kill was repeatedly visited by jackals, who, however, would not actually touch it for some time. They evidently did not like the look of the cut stuff round it, until at last one particularly fine old chap deliberately went up to a fallen piece of brushwood, caught it in his teeth and dragged it back jumping back with a spring when he had got it as far as he could. Then he watched developments. As nothing developed he and two or three of his congeners went in and started gnawing and worrying at the belly of the kill. They were very suspicious, however, and every now and then would jump away a few yards and stand, and listen and then fall to again. This made me pretty sure the tiger was nowhere very near, so once more I laid down and, again not intending to sleep, slept. This time I must have dozed for an hour at least and in my sleep either cleared my throat or coughed; all I know is that I was startled to death, or rather very much to life, by the loud "waugh!" of a tiger as he bounded away from the kill on which he had evidently commenced operations. As he bounded off he must have almost jumped on to one of my old friends the jacks, who squeaked like a very terrified dog and then gave out that blood-curdling and much discussed cry of the jackal,—the pheaw,—almost simultaneously Mr. Stripes commenced to roar badly. He walked right round me and the kill, about 30 or 40 yards off, in the thick scrub, roared three times, and then again all was still. For a quarter of an hour or so I sat with every nerve alert, not a sound of any sort; the whole forest seemed to have been terrified into deep silence by the Pandemonium just broken loose. I gave it up and again very gently lay back in my machan. My head had hardly touched my pillow when, without a premonitory sound, I heard the rasping purr "rrr," "rrr," "rrr," of a tiger right under me. I lay dead still, not knowing exactly what to do, but eventually determined to lay until he got to the kill. I thought I must hear him walk from under me along the path to the kill, when I would then gently raise myself and fire.

I need hardly say that all these thoughts flashed through my mind in a very very short space of time, during which his lordship continued to purr right under me. There was suddenly a dead silence and before I could get up I heard a wrenching and tearing and just rose in time to see the whole carcase disappearing into the thick scrub to the left of me. I could not make out the tiger, he must have had his body covered by the carcase, carrying or rather dragging it in his mouth, and it hanging on his left side. He only dragged it about 30 yards and then laid himself out to feed. I listened to him worrying and gnawing the flesh for a few minutes and then elected to go down after him. I was without boots or shoes, so, gently placing my rifle on the edge of the machan, I slipped myself down to the first projection on the trunk, only about 3 feet off the ground reached up and took my rifle off the machan, slipped and came down with a thud. Instantaneously out bounded my friend, the enemy, with two short grunting roars and stood apparently looking directly at me, 10 or 12 yards off, chest on. I hate this shot with all game, my bullets were hollow fronted, and I—well, I suppose I funked it. I stood dead still behind my tree and he remained for about half a minute looking hard in my direction and then apparently satisfied slunk back and again started dragging his kill. This woke me up, and still determined not to be beaten, and hoping the noise he was making would cover any made by me, I pattered off after him as fast and as noiselessly as I could. Strangely enough this time he stopped in a small open glade and there I saw, about 30 yards off, a confused mass lying dead still, but whether cow and tiger or cow alone, I could not tell. The flickering shadows beat me. What happened apparently was that his lordship was making certain that all was safe this time before he continued his feed. After about a full minute (and what a long time this seems when you are face to face with any dangerous game) he started feeding again. After much peering and tip-toeing closer, up to about 20 yards, moving an inch at a time, I made out that he was lying head away from me stretched out half-and-half off the kill. I was on a very slight eminence, and I determined to take him between the shoulders which I did. As far as I know he never even twitched after the shot. I stood and waited for four or five minutes and so back to my machan and slept the sleep of the just until the morning. He turned out to be a very full-fed fine specimen 9 feet 3 inches in length. What made him so infernally persistent I do not know. I had messed the whole show and nothing but the brute's persistency gave me one of my finest trophies and most exciting recollections.

Fishing.

A BAD START.

A WIRE had brought me as fast as train and boat could carry me from the east of England to the far west of Ireland. "Fish running, come;" it had said, and I had done so, and now was getting near the end of my journey. It was the end of June; but up till now the fates had been unkind to me, and I had not yet wetted a line that season. How anxiously I waited for the first view of the river, which I knew I should get from the train window a short time before I arrived. It was with great relief that I saw in the few seconds the train took to cross the bridge, that the water, though a little high, looked fairly clear. In a few minutes the train ran into the station, and the sight of M's gillie on the platform with two salmon done up in green reeds which he was sending away by the train, drove away my last doubts and assured me that the fish were still running. The gillie told me that M. had got these two fish in the morning, and was still fishing.

What an all powerful madness it is that seizes on the fisherman who has not yet caught a fish that season, but expects to do so shortly. He can think and speak of nothing else but fish and fishing; all his spare moments are spent in overhauling rods and tackle. Again and again the old fly-book is brought out, and all the old favourites reviewed. What shall he put on to-morrow? and one fly after another is taken out, smoothed, examined, and replaced. Each as he handles it takes his memory back to some success or failure in seasons past. It was on just such a golden gashawk that he lost that big springer lower down the river last year. Confound the gillie, he must have known that that rock was there. An old and tattered black dog reminds him of a far-off Norway stream; where a black dog did yeoman service, until it hit a rock behind him and broke off its point. Yes, by Jove, this fly has no point; how did it get back into his book? It must be the same old fly. And so on until it is time to go to bed, and dream of the morrow's sport.

My reverie was interrupted by the entrance of M., his cap and the lapels of his coat stuck full of flies, with another fish, a grilse of about 6 pounds. He had had a rare good week, averaging three fish a day, the best 14 pounds. "The river is full of fish," he said, "the big spate brought thousands past the nets. The best of it is over though, they were not rising so freely to-day and the river is falling." "That is only natural," I said "if I come to a river, all sport in that river stops immediately until I leave; and the day after I leave is generally the record day of the year. I have noticed it now for years." I was very disappointed, but on talking it over I found that things were really not so bad. All the pools in our stretch of the river, some 4 miles in length, were well stocked with fish, and the first shower would probably start them rising again.

M. told me the flies that were killing; and I got out my fly tying box, and spent the rest of the evening tying up blue and black goshawks, which had been the especial favourities up to date. How tying one's own flies does increase the pleasure of fishing. One feels that one has defeated the fish entirely on one's own. How proud one feels if one of one's own patterns begins to kill really well, especially if others fishing with the regulation flies are doing nothing. We fishermen are really selfish brutes, though we like to pretend that we are not; and if we would own up, we should be bound to admit that the pleasure of making a good basket is greatly increased when we see the disconsolate faces of our friends and hear that they have had a blank day. There were three rods, including myself, on this stretch of river; and the other, C, who had been fishing the upper beat and had been right up to the top of the water. came in late with a grilse. We tossed for beats for the next day, and I got the upper ; and was soon in bed.

Breakfast next morning had no interest for me, I had got the fishing fever badly, and was dying to be off C. and I drove up to the lower end of the upper beat, and he started to fish down while I went up. This river is my ideal of a salmon river. All the water can be reached from the bank or by wading ; a long cast from the bank in most places just reaching beyond the middle The water runs fairly quickly, but there is a pool worth trying at least every 300 yards, and in many places every yard of the water is worth a cast for hundreds of yards. On the lower beat a boat is kept, but it is more to enable one to cross over than to fish from, though one or two pools are sometimes fished from it. Last, but not least, the fish are generally plentiful, and in the spring run up to 20 pounds.

I did not take long in getting to work ; and mounting a small blue goshawk tied the day before, began to fish a small blue goshawk tied the day before, began to fish a smooth glide with here and there a swirl caused by a sunken rock The deep water was under the opposite bank, while my bank was a gravelly shallow, so I had to cast a long line There was a very gentle breeze which occasionally caused a slight ripple on the water, but not enough to give me much help in getting out my line. The latter would not go out straight, when I tried to reach the rocks in midstream. It did not worry me much ; it was my first day, and I had got rusty since last year. The first swirl I drew blank ; but in the second, at the first cast, a particularly bad one, there was the plunge of a good fish, I caught a momentary glimpse of a silver side, a pluck at my fly, and I knew that my bad cast had lost me a good fish. Slowly and sadly I reeled up and examined my fly, it was all right ; I had no excuse, it was just that bad cast that had done it.

The gillie suggested that perhaps it would come again, it I gave it a rest ; I knew it would not, but my back was aching with trying to reach so far, so I sat down. Ten minutes I gave him by the watch, and then I waded out into the water a bit—I had no waders but I wanted that fish badly,—and tried him again. I could get my fly out fairly straight now I had not got to cast so far ; but the fish had felt the steel, and would have none of that or of several other flies I tried.

I fished on down, covering several more likely spots nicely with the shorter line, but could not rise another. The gillie said there was not enough wind and the day was too bright. Presently the water began to get uncomfortably deep, and I had to return to dry land to fish the tail of the pool.

Just as I landed I heard the splash of a rising fish, and the gillie pointed out the spreading rings near the further of two rocks a short way below. I had to cross a small stream to get there, and was hurrying on when the gillie grasped my arm, "Ye'll fish the near rock first, it's a grand spot." I was now on a high bank, and the near rock was right under my feet, and in the clear water it seemed absurd to fish it. But I flicked my fly over beyond the rock and drew it towards me. I could see the fly distinctly, and was just thinking that the yellow of the topping wing was a bit too bright for the clear water, when like a flash of lightning a nice fish rose at the fly, missed it, and was gone. It all happened so suddenly that I had no time to move, I now sat down and gave him five minutes rest. Then I cautiously cast the fly beyond the rock again and anxiously watched it as it crossed on the same track as before. But the fish was not to be fooled a second time. So after a bit I gave it up ; and getting out more line began to try and reach the other rock, where the fish had risen before. It was not really a very long cast, but it was my first day, and it took me quite a dozen casts before a lucky puff of wind caught my fly and deposited it in exactly the right place behind the rock. The fish came at it like a tiger, a fresh run grilse I could see he was, but again I only felt a pluck and the line came back. The last part of the line and the cast had fallen in a semicircle, so what could one expect. I gave the Gillie the rod sat down and lighted a pipe and swore strange oaths. I ought to have had a salmon and a grilse on the bank and I had nil, my back was aching and I felt, to put it mildly, annoyed.

When I had had a rest I started off up stream, refusing to listen to the entreaties of the gillie to "fish it down once more." I told him I was only going to fish where I could do so with a short line, as I could not get out a long line yet. The next pool was the best on the beat. There was a fairly heavy stream at the head of it, and below this a series of rocks just showed above the water in midstream, a long cast from either bank All these were worth trying ; but the best spot in the pool was just below the last rock, a big flat topped one that looked like a paving stone. This rock, when the water was the right height, ought to be some three inches under water. It was somewhat further off from my bank, but was an almost certain find for a fish. As we passed the pool, the gillie drew my attention to the fact that just three inches or so of water covered the flat rock. "T'would be a sin not to fish it" he remarked. I was tempted, I looked at the flat rock, and as I looked a fish rose in the swirl just my side of the rock. "You could reach that," said the Gillie. "It is on this side the rock." I yielded to temptation ; and going up to the head of the pool, I began to fish it down. Three fish I moved before I reached the flat topped rock, but none of them meant business. A slight breeze from behind me had now sprung up, which helped my casting considerably ; and when I got to the spot where the good fish had risen, I covered him with a nice straight cast. I had just begun to move the fly, when I got that magic thrill—than which I know no pleasanter in this life—of a salmon hooked. The pluck one feels when a salmon touches one's fly and escapes, sends a thrill through one it is true, but one realises at the same second that the fish is lost. When the fish is hooked though, especially if he has taken the fly under water, and so one has seen nothing to give one warning that a fish is there, it is the suddenness of the whole thing that to my mind makes that thrill so powerful. One second one is mechanically working one's fly in, as one has done perhaps for days without a touch, one's back is aching, and one is brooding over a fish, one lost before ; the next, that magic thrill, and one is in the salmon fisher's paradise, one's heart is beating fast, gone is the back-ache, gone are those vain regrets, one has hooked a fish. I have drawn a bead on noble beasts that I had stalked and climbed after for weeks, but I do not think that even the pleasure of that moment can come up to that of hooking a salmon.

This fish the instant he felt the hook, raced off like a thing possessed some thirty yards and then flung himself into the air—a beauty he was, ten pounds at least, and fresh run—and then the fly came away, and I was plunged from heaven into the other place. I sat down and expressed my views on the situation in a few short manly words. The gillie took the rod and kept a discreet silence. Then he brought the lunch basket.

After lunch I felt better, though my back felt like breaking from the unwonted exercise I went up stream fishing as I went. My luck was really horrible, but I had no intention of going back empty-handed. I was fishing a stream nearly at the top of the water, having fished every pool on the way up without a rise, when I saw a fish move a long way out in the broken water I had now got my hand in again ; and my fly went out straight and true as I let out more and more line, till I covered him. He came at it, and was hooked well and duly landed, a grisle of three pounds. I fished hard till dark but the rise was over and no more fish did I move. If only all those fish I rose in the morning had risen in the afternoon instead, after I had got my hand fairly in, I ought to have had several beauties to show on my return instead of only one small grisle. When I got back M. had one grisle five pounds, C. had nil ; but they had not wasted the opportunities I had as fish had, not been rising on the lower beats.

A NOVEL USE FOR GOATS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On a farm in the Western Highlands goats are used for the novel purpose of preventing the sheep from frequenting dangerous ground. The farm in question is situated between Lochs Long and Goil, and the farmer has grazing rights over a rocky hill on the shores of the latter loch. It was found that every year a few sheep lost their lives by wandering into dangerous ground, and falling over precipices. The farmer therefore turned out some Scotch goats, which soon became to all intents and purposes wild. The Scotch goat is a feral race and soon reverts to the wild condition. These goats have increased in numbers, and there are now two distinct herds, each containing sixteen or eighteen individuals. These goats haunt the precipices of the hill, and eat all the grass in the dangerous places, so that there is now no temptation for the sheep to go into bad ground. The old he goats have fine horns. A few are shot every year, and their fleeces used for making sporrans from. The hill is of large extent, and the goats seem to cling to it, never apparently wandering away far.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

THE NEW ·318 BORE RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I left Burma before your issue of 25th October reached there and only saw the "Information wanted" signed by "Old Indian Shikari" last week. I bought the ·303/·375 rifle he asks about from Westley Richards and Company, Limited, in November 1905, which was before the new regulations came in. As the chamber is ·375 Government ammunition cannot be used in this rifle.

With regard to the full description asked for, I cannot do better than refer to Messrs. Westley Richards' advertisement which appeared in The Indian Field on 2nd November 1905, page IV.

If "Old Indian Shikari" is thinking of going in for a rifle of this class, surely he cannot do better than get Westley Richards' later rifle—the ·318 accelerated express. This rifle is advertised on page IV, Indian Field and is, I should say, an improvement even on the ·303/·375. It is only, say ½lb., heavier and its striking energy is 500lbs. greater. It has also two advantages—it can be loaded by a clip and has detachable barrels. I hope to be in England next May and shall certainly buy one, but I shall get the top sight made a fixed one. As they are now it is so easy to forget to put one up on leaving camp or even having put one up it might so easily get closed on the march. In the thick jungles of the Upper Chindwin when you come so suddenly on your game and usually, at fairly close quarters, you would loss half your chances if you had to stop and fiddle about with your sights.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With regard to the new Government regulation prohibiting absolutely the ·450 and ·303 bores in whatever guise, permit us to express our agreement with the tenour of your leading article of the 15th November.

The Government has deliberately adopted a policy which they must have good grounds for believing is essential to public safety and are therefore not likely to recede from their position or to modify their order.

It would be more satisfactory both to sportsmen and gunmakers if the gun trade were admitted to the confidence of the Government and could be shown justification for a step which we are told is inevitable. In the absence of this assurance, gunmakers and sportsmen view with alarm this interference with legitimate trade and its accompanying monetary loss, wondering how far this principle of interference is to be extended in the future ; for unless it is based upon vital political necessity, it would deserve and should receive vigorous protest and condemnation. In the meantime, assuming that it is a thoroughly considered and necessary regulation and not a well intentioned official blunder, we agree that it behoves gunmakers to apply their minds to devising satisfactory substitutes for the annihilated ·450 and ·303 sporting rifles.

The ·450 rifle is deservedly popular, and its accuracy and tremendous smashing power render it a most formidable weapon even against rhino and elephant. But the ·500 High Velocity is far superior, and it is strange indeed that the tide of sporting taste has never set in this direction.

The ·500 bore shoots a bullet of 570 grains with a muzzle velocity of 2,100 f.s. This gives a muzzle energy of 5,570 ft lbs.

The condemned ·450 shoots a bullet of 480 grains with a muzzle velocity of 2,150 f.s. and a muzzle energy of 4,922 ft. lbs. A difference in striking energy in favour of the ·500 bore of 655 ft. lbs. and coupled with this advantage possessed by the ·500 bore, there is no practical drawback in regard to the comparative weight. For instance, the weights of the ·450 bore are as follows :—

Single Rifles	...	... 8½ to 9lbs.
Double Rifles	...	... 10½lbs.

The ·500 bore rifles in single and double patterns weigh ½lb. or so heavier, a trifling addition to a weapon of such build and power. Therefore, those sportsmen who are wedded to the larger bores need not be too distressed at the departure of the ·450, however great a favourite

The superior ·500 bore is ready to hand, and will upon trial far exceed the performances and reputation of its rival. Those sportsmen owning ·450 bore rifles can, in many instances, have fitted to their present stocks a new pair of 500 bore barrels, instead of being compelled to scrap the whole weapon.

This will not apply in all makes and patterns of double ·450 bore rifles, but with little trouble and cost owners of such rifles could easily consult gunmakers as to the advisability of the cost and the price.

Single ·450 bore rifles of High Velocity pattern lend themselves even more readily to the adaptation of ·500 bore barrels in place of the prohibited ·450 bore.

In the case of our own particular Single Under Lever Rifle H/V ·450 bore, models are suitable for ·500 bore barrels. Other makers will, of course, speak for themselves, but sportsmen will always be able to obtain advice upon the question.

Other sportsmen there are who rely upon the smaller bores of military type for a variety of game including dangerous animals. It has been pointed out that the aims of the military authorities, and of the sporting gunmaker, are divergent. The military arm was principally designed to wound, while to secure killing with immediate effect and not to wound, is the province of the sporting weapon.

Experience of the small bores in sport on the whole has not been favourable to them, and the fact has long been patent that in spite of flat trajectory and high velocity, the projectiles are too light, of insufficient striking area and have too great a degree of penetration for shooting conditions.

Notwithstanding certain successful efforts with these small calibre arms, the need for improvement in this direction is admitted on all sides.

Such improvement has been attempted by bullets constructed solely in accordance with sporting requirements ; the copper-capped bullet in the ordinary ·303 and the Accelerated Express Rifle ·375/303, having abundantly proved their superior capacity for producing almost instantaneously fatal effects at big and dangerous game and so have in large measure removed the grievance as to the smaller calibres.

But the latest development of the small bore, besides shooting a bullet expressly designed for sport, as opposed to military uses, is of larger calibre, thus shooting a bullet of greater striking area and weight yet, nevertheless, propelled by a velocity higher than attained by any other small bore of purely military patterns, with a correspondingly flatter trajectory.

This is attained by our new ·318-bore rifle for rimless cartridge, clip-loader, for Magazine Rifles ; and is also made as a single loader and double drop-down pattern.

This weapon it will be seen forms a good substitute for the heavier bores when used with the copper-capped bullet, and although it may not stand as the last word on small bores, it is difficult to imagine how further improvements in calibre and weight of bullet can be effected without unduly increasing the weight of the rifle, and in short, of returning to the class of large bore high velocity rifles already so well known.

The weight of the ·318 rifles, be it remembered, in any model is practically the same as the ordinary ·256, ·275 and ·303 rifles.

You mention that the 360 and ·375 rifles might prove effective substitutes for the prohibited ·450 bore if used with the copper-capped bullet, and you ask whether the bullet cannot be made in these calibres. It may interest your readers to know that the ·350 and ·375 bores and copper-capped bullet are made and have been largely used in Africa for the past few years with success.

Mauser ·275 copper-capped.
W. R. ·303 and ·375/303 Copper-capped.
·400, 450, ·500, ·577 medium and heavy, nickel capped.

Honorary Secretary:—CAPTAIN E. CAMPION.

First Day, Thursday, 13th December 1906.

THE Rawalpindi December Meeting opened to-day. An attractive card was provided and several ponies came up from Karachi and Quetta, and though meeting such well-known ponies as The Butler and Pasha, gave a good account of themselves. Racing was of a high order and the attendance good. Captain Campion, our popular Honorary Secretary, had everything working like clock-work and owners might go further afield and fare worse than by paying Rawalpindi a visit at the next meeting. In the Desert Plate, in a capital field of ten, the Army Cup runner, Pasha, was much fancied, but Captain Winter's Whirlwind, who was in grand, trim just managed to beat him, though in fairness to Pasha, it must be admitted that he was not looking anything like as fit as when he ran at Lucknow. The Butler had it all his own way and added another bracket to his long series of wins. The Munster Fusiliers were "At Home" to all their friends every one was glad to see Teddey Bernard on his legs again after his unfortunate carriage accident at Karachi and he hoped soon to be able to discard his crutches. Steeden was kept pretty busy in the second enclosure, and was giving excellent odds. Details:—

A MATCH.—For Rs 500 aside between Mr. Chaplin's ch cb m Lady Virginia and Mr. Kennedy's b cb g Adalina at even weights over half a mile brought a very good day's racing to a close. Unfortunately it was run in the dark and no time could be taken. Lady Virginia forced the pace, but was caught at the two furlongs post by Adalina, who then came away and won as he liked.

Second Day, Saturday, 15th December, 1906

Another capital day's racing was witnessed under most enjoyable circumstances. The 10th Hussars dispensed hospitality and the Munster Fusiliers' magnificent band played an excellent programme. Captain Campion's excellent arrangements left nothing to be desired and the course was in excellent order. The Sohan Plate with a field of eight was the race of the day and representatives from as far afield as Quetta and Karachi faced the flag. After a grand race the sporting owner of Pasha just managed to get home half a length in front of Moonib Pasha. That well-known country-bred pony The Butler again justified the confidence placed on him by his supporters and won a good race from the English pony Maranta who has been brought all the way from Quetta by Captain Arthur Toogood of the Warwicks. There is every promise of good sport here all through the cold weather, as Captain Campion is sure to provide attractive programmes at the fortnightly gymkhanas, Details.—

Hunting.

THE KARACHI HUNT.

9th December.—The hounds met at the New Jail. Only a small field turned out, but the ladies were, as usual, well represented—Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Travers, and Mrs. Northen being out. The Master commenced by drawing the orchards to the north of the Jail. Here the hounds picked up a line, and worked it out slowly to the river bed, where they checked. A cast on the far bank put them right, and picking up an improving scent they ran a tremendous pace towards Rai Singh's well—and we had to go fast to keep with them. Hunting nicely through the Pinjrapol fields along the road side—they suddenly swung over to the left, in the direction of The Bunnia's Crossing. The Master, thinking that our jack had got back into the orchards, tried to whip off, but the hounds were running too s rongly,—and they finally rolled their quarry over in the open after a ringing run. One or two wide casts were then made to try and pick up the line of a "traveller" who had been viewed away by some shepherds, but scent failed us entirely.

13th December.—The hounds met at 7-15 A.M. at Rai Singh's Well, when a small field, including Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Northen, and Mrs. Wren turned out. It was the first cold morning we have had, and the hounds looked keen and well. Finding in the rough scrub on the north side of the road, the hounds burst away, with a crash of music, and ran at a great pace over the Bund country and on towards the Ruined Cottage. A momentry check and they were on again, and running from scent to view rolled their jack over near the river, after a capital gallop of 17 minutes. We watered at the Long Bund. and then drew Graham's Spinny, where we got on to the line of a real stout jack, who set his mask for the hills. The hounds hunted grandly over very difficult, bare and open country and had finally to be whipped off at the top of Maggar Pir Hills after a run lasting 35 minutes. From start to finish, it was a capital morning's sport and the hounds hunted better than we have ever seen them.

16th December.—The hounds met at Landhi Station, at 7-30, when a small and select field turned out. It was the Master's intention to draw the Alladad Cover, but before we got half way there, We were galloping with the hounds streaming away in front of us, with lots of music, towards the sea. The going was splendid, and the short turf held the scent well. The hounds were never at fault, and finally ran into their quarry, a fine big dog jack, after a run lasting 25 minutes in which we covered about 5 miles of fine country. After watering at the Masjid the Master drew down wind, towards the Subadar's Khet. Twice the hounds picked up a line, the first time the scent was fouled by a herd of cattle, who crossed the line, and on the second occasion, we ran out of scent on some bare open ground. It was getting very hot, so the hounds were whipped off homewards at 9-45, and we repaired to the Dâk Bungalow to do ample justice to a capital breakfast, which that keen sportsman and rider, Mr. Lucas, had so kindly provided.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

FROM about twelve o'clock till one last Friday rain was playing a tattoo on the covered ways at Kempton, and early visitors kept in shelter, but matters fortunately mended with the first race, and though dull and chilly, the afternoon proved seasonable for November, with a capital light. We have seen more people, but the unpromising weather doubtless accounted for a moderate muster. On the other hand, plenty of horses were on the spot, and with the course in grand order visitors enjoyed excellent sport, not devoid of casualties, which hitherto have been very slight.

In pleasant contrast to Friday, a crisp, sunshiny day, with seasonably keen wind and a touch of frost, which made the roads fine travelling, brought a greatly increased attendance to Kempton on Saturday. Good fields were again the rule, but it was not a backers' day, as falls more frequent than usual included several much-fancied candidates.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

The conditions for football on Saturday were ideal, the weather being brilliant, with enough cold snap in the air to suggest that we had entered upon the last month of the year. The outstanding feature in the big leagues was the comparative lack of success of the forwards in the majority of the matches. In the Southern League, so reduced to impotence were the attacking portions of the teams that the total crop of goals in the ten games was only 15! It is many moons back when there was so insignificant a total. Not a team in the League managed to score more than two goals, and nine of the twenty engaged failed to legitimately net the ball. There were five home wins, two home losses, and three drawn games. The winning clubs claimed 11 of the 15 goals, there were 4 in the drawn games, and each of the losing elevens drew a blank. There were disappointed spectators at many grounds on Saturday, because it is goals they like to see scored, and preferably by the team which usually has their patronage.

There were more goals about in the First Division of the League, the ten games furnishing a crop of 29. The home clubs have very little to complain of, seven gaining the two points at stake, only two were beaten before their own supporters, and one game was drawn. Twenty-two goals went to the credit of the nine winning teams, and seven to the losers, the drawn game being goalless. Seven teams failed to score, and of the twenty-nine goals obtained a dozen were registered in two of the games.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

There were some remarkable results in the Southern League on Saturday. The champions had an apparently easy task at home, their opponents being Queen's Park Rangers, who had won only one match—against Northampton at home—since 22nd September. They had, however, shown marked improvement during November, two of their games being lost by only one goal, and on the 21th ultimo they drew at home with Bristol Rovers. They followed this up by compelling Fulham to yield up a point on Saturday, this being the third the champions have had taken from them at Craven Cottage this season. The Rangers gain a point on the corresponding game last season. Tottenham had no difficulty in repeating their last year's success over Reading, a two-clear goals victory by no means emphasising superiority of the winners in a game which was the reverse of thrilling. This win, coupled with Portsmouth's downfall, enabled the 'Spurs to resume second place in the table, Prior to Saturday Portsmouth had not lost a game since 20th October, when Southampton beat them 2—0 at the Dell. In tackling Crystal Palace at Sydenham they were confronted with a difficult task. There was plenty of vigour and brilliance in the game, and so stubbornly was it contested that it was not until well in the second half that Woodger scored the only goal of the match, and gave the Palace the victory. Brentford not only retained their unbeaten home certificate, but they placed a win to their account at the expense of Leyton, who showed plenty of pluck, skill, and determination, but were two goals down at the finish. They have not won an S. L. game since 13th October, when they beat Southampton 3—2 at Leyton.

The greatest surprise of the afternoon was furnished by New Brompton, who were regarded as easy victims for Luton, especially as the latter had the advantage of ground. The Lutonians gave a disappointing display, and New Brompton, scoring in each half, won by a couple of goals to love. The visitors thus tasted the sweets of victory for the first time since 13th October. Plymouth Argyle beat Reading, at Home Park, on 29th September, and November came to a close without another victory coming their way. They started December by scoring their first win away from home, and Norwich were their victims, this being the second successive adverse verdict for the East Anglians on the Newmarket-road ground. In their last four matches Norwich have picked up three points away, and dropped four at home. Football provides many puzzles. Northampton deserve hearty congratulations on running Southampton to a goal, at the Dell, for last season they went under in the corresponding game 9—1. Swindon and Brighton, two of the most improved teams in the League, met at Swindon, and their goalless draw was in accordance with anticipations. West Ham had to face doughty opponents at Boleyn Castle, Watford being their opponents, and the United were not able to improve on last year's draw. At Bristol, the Rovers again got the better of Millwall, who have recently been showing in and out form.

LEAGUE I.

The Arsenal caused most serious disappointment to their supporters by allowing Sunderland to take away both points from Plumstead. It is true that the home team was not at full strength, the most notable absentee being Coleman, who was given a well-earned rest, but it was generally anticipated that the Gunners would prevent the visitors creating a record by scoring their first League victory at Woolwich. The Arsenal had in their previous seven home engagements obtained 13 points, Bolton being the only side to take 1 away, and a further consideration to favour the view that Woolwich would win was the fact that Sunderland had been successful away from home only once this season, and that was so far back as 15th September, when Liverpool were beaten 2—1. Only one goal was scored on Saturday, and this went to Sunderland's credit, Bridgett banging the ball past Ashcroft after the latter had saved at full length. The honours went to the side which deserved them, the home forwards not working harmoniously together, nor were their individual efforts convincing. Coleman's absence made all the difference to the attack, for he is invariably a great factor in both initiating movements, and forcing them home. The goal-keeping and second line of defence were excellent, but the halves were much below concert pitch, and this seriously handicapped the forwards, who were not plied with the ball as they should have been. A proper estimate of Sunderland is that the side is hard-working and well balanced. Saturday was the first occasion on which the Arsenal had failed to score at home this season.

The Arsenal were the only team of the leading half dozen to lose both points, and their lack of success caused them to drop from second to fourth place in the tables. Probably the most startling game on Saturday was that at Newcastle between the United and Notts County. The Midlanders did not score a goal in November, and in only one match in October did they beat the opposing defence, their tally of goals in nine successive matches from 29th September to 24th November inclusive, being the couple obtained against Sheffield Wednesday, at Nottingham, on 27th October. And this team on Saturday scored three goals against Newcastle at St. James's Park, as against the four put on by the Novocastrians, who were a trifle fortunate to win. As in the last five games at Newcastle visiting teams have only twice captured the home goal, the significance of the County's performance will be understood. Everton had an easy win at the expense of Birmingham, but Aston Villa had to work hard to defeat Bristol City, who went under by only the odd goal in five. Sheffield United, who went through November without a defeat, had a check administered to them at Preston, 2—1 being the verdict against them at the close. Enormous interest centred in the meeting of the two Manchester clubs at Hyde Road, but play was most disappointing on the part of the United, who were a beaten side practically from the start. Sheffield Wednesday got home in good style against Blackburn Rovers, and Bury helped Stoke further down the ladder by defeating them by two clear goals at Gigg-lane. Middlesbrough could not do better than draw at home with Bolton, and Derby County had mortifying luck in losing both points against Liverpool on the Baseball Ground.

LEAGUE II.

A very fierce struggle is in progress in the Second Division, quarter neither being asked nor given by the leading clubs. The dramatic event of Saturday was the defeat of West Bromwich by Leicester Fosse by the convincing score of 3—0, this being the first time this season that the Albion have had their defence pierced on three occasions. Nottingham Forest, who won their seventh match in succession, are now at the head of affairs with a two points lead over the Throstles, and Chelsea considerably improved their prospects by halving the points at Chesterfield, as they are close on the heels of the Albion, and have a match in hand. Clapton Orient made a capital effort at Leeds, and with the least shade of luck they would have drawn level in the closing stages. Burslem Port Vale put up their record score of the season against Stockport County, and Hull City surprised Grimsby by defeating them, before their own supporters, by 3—1. This was the first time that a visiting eleven had scored more than one goal. Burnley did not have anything to spare against Gainsborough, Blackpool scraped through against Lincoln, and Wolverhampton Wanderers did well to beat Barnsley in the Yorkshire town. Glossop, who had lost every away match, startled the critics by obtaining two points at Burton, this being the United's fourth home defeat.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH v. WALES.—The third great national test of the South African team's prowes took place at St. Helen's famous ground, Swansea, on Saturday. Interest in the match even excelled that of the famous game played at Cardiff last season, when the Cymri triumphed over the New Zealanders. Half an hour before the kick-off the ground was packed by a crowd estimated as over 40,000. Captain Colquhoun, the Chief of Police, then ordered all gates to be closed, and in consequence thousands were unable to obtain admission.

On Saturday morning rain fell in showers, but with the exception of a patch in front of the grand stand, which was soft, the sandy soil gave really excellent foothold.

Wales never shaped like a winning team, and, although every man was game to the end, they were beaten clearly by a greater team. Wales were beaten forward, and in consequence the Colonials did not see the Welsh back play at its best.

Wales lost the toss, and Joseph started the game. After Krige had returned J. L. Williams found touch. De Villiers dashed through, and attempted to beat the defence by a short punt over the Welsh captain's head. With wonderful smartness Nicholls made a mark, and thus ended a well-intentioned tactic. The Colonial forwards carried the next few scrimmages, and got well into the Welsh ground. Krige lost the ball, and the Welsh forwards going off with a rush sent the ball past Marsburg, but the African back got back in a manner that caused loud applause, and saved right on his line. His kick was charged down, and Nicholls in gathering knocked on before he placed the ball over. Brink, Roos, and Daneel, with some fine footwork at once removed the pressure to well over the half-way line.

At this stage Roos temporarily brought out W. S. Morkel to assist his backs. From a long punt by Gabe the ball rolled over the line, and Marsburg conceded a minor. From almost every scrimmage the Colonial forwards for some time obtained possession, and had there not been a desperate defence by the Welsh three-quarters scoring would have resulted. Loubser once looked three-quarter scoring would have resulted. Loubser once looked try-getter, when Teddy Morgan with great speed cut him off, and earthed him. From the succeeding scrimmage Loubser was off again ; his short punt was fielded by Dyke, but the Welsh custodian's kick was charged down. Excitement rose at the expected score, but Nicholls and Williams dashed back and saved the situation. Dai Jones tackled Joubert yards offside, and was properly penalised. Joubert's attempt for goal only deserved the minor it received.

Try as they would, the Welsh could not become the attackers. Nicholls getting a pass feinted and made a strong dash, but Krige tackled him strongly. Whilst the Welsh captain was on the ground Brink's foot came in contact with him. After a moment or two Nicholls resumed, and soon proved by a determined run and kick that he was not suffering much hurt.

The Africans had up to date had decidedly the better of play, and had come near scoring on several occasions. The Welsh forwards had been routed in the tight, and four out of every five times the ball came out on the African side. Wales, it was now seen, were practically a beaten side, and the only wonder was that they had been lucky enough to prevent their line being crossed before this. Dobbin sent out smartly to Krige, and the latter sent on to Joubert viâ De Villiers. Joubert this time made no error, but went over at a tremendous pace. The try was a grand one, but the kick for goal was a failure.

Wales showed more energy after the drop-out, and paid a short visit as far as the African twenty-five. A high kick by Krige and fleet following up by his forwards resulted in the ball being kicked across to Loubser, who ran over in the corner with a fine try. Jackson failed to convert.

A couple of penalty kicks to Wales were the only other incidents up to the interval, Half-time :—

With J. C. Jenkins and Harding at their head, the Welsh forwards rushed ahead in spirited style, but Krige cut in and setn to touch. Scrimmaging took place ten yards from the Welsh line, and the ball came out to Owen, who kicked up to Marsburg. The back found touch near the Welsh twenty-five. Then the South Africans had hard lines, as Loubser looked all over a certain scorer, when Mr. Jones called him back as Krige's pass was a trifle forward.

From a short kick by Raaff Owen made his mark, and punted up to Marsburg, who ran finely, and kicked to centre touch. Shortly after, the same player again received the ball from a kick by Nicholls. This time Marsburg sent play to the Welsh twenty-five. From the succeeding scrimmage Bush tried to do some "blind" side work, but Dublin was too watchful, and away went the African forwards with the ball at their toes. Owen checked them, and passed to Gwyn Nicholls, who threw the ball back, with no Welshman there to receive it. Teddy Morgan tried hard to get it, but Brink dashed in, picked up the ball, and transferred cleverly to Raaff when within a few feet of the Welsh line. Joubert added the extra points.

The Welshmen restarted in great spirit, and the forwards rallying, a fine bit of combined play ended in J. L. Williams being well tackled by Marsburg only five yards from the line. Chiefly through the African forwards, and a useful kick by Dobbin, play was removed to the Welsh twenty-five. The African half-back shortly after lost a certain try by passing forward to Krige, after the defence had been really beaten.

R. M. Owen was injured, and A. E. Harding was brought out of the pack to take his place. From the next scrum the Welsh "seven" were badly beaten, and Joubert, securing the ball, kicked to the Welsh line. Dyke saved in grand style. Owen then returned to the field. Marsburg was at fault, and Dr. Morgan tackled him with the ball in the Africans' twenty-five. Owen gave Nicholls the ball when a couple of the visitors' backs were out of position, but J. L. Williams was unable to take Gabe's pass. This stimulated the Welshmen, but another fine opportunity was lost by George Travers passing forward when Gabe and Williams were unmarked.

Just afterwards Gabe ran up to Villiers and Krige, and passed to Gwyn Nicholls. The veteran, who has lost a lot of his speed, was overtaken, and brought down ten yards from the Colonials' line. Then followed an African rush, and after that a passing bout which really deserved a try. It was a grand attacking movement, and all the backs handled except Marsburg. A repass from Krige to De Villiers was just forward. Immediately afterwards the Welsh backs got possession, Gabe gave J. L. Williams a difficult pass, which he took. Marsburg just managed to collar him five yards from the goal.

Play fluctuated, and then Margan tried hard to score. The superior physique of the South Africans then told its tale, and the Welshmen were sent back. A free-kick to the Principality resulted in Nicholls kicking up to Marsburg, and for once in a way, the full-back misfielded the ball. Villiers came to the rescue, and kicked to touch.

Shortly after Marsburg was bowled over by the Welsh forwards and appeared to be injured, but he kept on the field, and the Africans pulled Brink out the scrum as an extra back. Gwyn Nicholls put in a high punt, and following it up he got the ball on the rebound, but knocked it on. The Welshmen made another strong attack ; but the visitors' tackling was perfect. Result :—

ENGLAND v. THE REST.—This International trial match at Coventry on Saturday resulted in the defeat of England by 13 points to 9. Play had not been in progress more than a few minutes when England obtained a free, which afforded them only slight advantage. The Rest gradually worked their way into opposition quarters, where England were penalised for offside. This afforded the Rest a chance of taking a shot for goal, but this was not turned to account, Jackett touching down. At length the English backs opened out the game, only for Brooks to neutralise a good movement by missing a pass. Still showing plenty of energy, England were quickly aggressive again, and another invasion caused the opposing defence to be well tested, and proving reliable. The Rest were put on the attack, and a vigorous burst made matters lively in the opposing twenty-five. England, however, were well served by Jackett. Again England were prominent, and the Rest being penalised some distance out, V. H. Cartwright gave England a three points' lead.

Encouraged by this success, England played up with renewed energy, and Lillycrap had to retire upon the goal-line. The Rest during pressure were unlucky in being penalised, which had the effect of putting England on the attack. Smart half-back play by Stoop and Hulme helped the backs greatly, England's third line being much more dangerous in the combined movements than the Rest's three-quarters. Hulme picked up smartly, and cleverly evading the opposition ran in a try behind the posts. Cartwright took the place kick, and sent the ball against one of the uprights, and it came back into play. At length the efforts of the Rest were rewarded, as Hill getting possessing from a scrum, went over for a try, which Lillycrap's kick left unconverted. Interval score :—England, 1 penalty goal, 1 try ; Rest of England, 1 try.

After the concluding half was entered upon, England found themselves hard pressed near the goal line, Brooks bringing down Lambert finely. Jackett afterwards got in a smart kick when danger threatened, and on the Rest's side Oldham was seen to advantage in some safe collaring. About seven minutes from the restart capital play by Brooks culminated in a try. Again the shot for goal failed. Some fast and eventful play by the English backs was an outstanding feature of subsequent play, but the Rest forwards were still playing a most effective game and more than holding their own. cooper picked up, and made a good run, handing off Brooks and getting past Jackett, but the former recovered himself and brought his man down finely.

Keeping up the attack, the Rest worked their way into a favourable position, where an unsuccessful shot for goal preceded an effort by their opponent, in which Sanderson showed up in defence. The Rest were breaking away when Jackett saved by sending into touch, and by a rapid movement England completely changed the venue, scrums being formed close to the corner flag. Neat passing by the English three-quarter line was succeeded by clever work on the part of Pindar, who dribbled along finely. Lambert followed up well, and grounded the ball between the posts. Lillycrap brought England's lead to one point only.

As the outcome of further effective play by the Rest, Kirk went over for a try, which Lillycrap once more improved upon, and put his side in front. After this England improved, and Brooks was all but in from a pass by Hulme. A free to England, taken by Cartwright, missed, and the concluding minute or so provided further exciting work without any additional scording. Result :—Rest of England, 2 goals, 1 try (13 points) ; England, 1 penalty goal, 2 tries (9 points).

England.—E. J. Jackett (Cornwall), back ; F. G. Brooks (Bedford), H. E. Shewring (Somerset), J. G. G. Birkett (Surrey), and F. S. Scott (Devon), three-quarter backs ; A. D.

OLDEST CERTIFICATED OPTICIANS IN INDIA.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

Many Children suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The Great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses.

Our Ophthalmic Department is in charge of a London Eyesight Specialist holding the Diploma of the British Optical Association.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For some years past Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India has been looked upon as the most convenient and helpful Map of the Indian Empire extant. It possesses many points of superiority and convenience; the information is exhaustive, every name mentioned in the Government Survey being included. The great convenience of the Index of 10,000 names has always been keenly appreciated; it has, therefore, been a source of great regret to the proprietors that they have been forced to allow the Map to remain out of print for a considerable time on account of political changes in the internal provinces of India. The moment the new boundaries of Bengal were settled, fresh plates were put in hand, and the publishers are now pleased to announce the third edition of this important Map as ready for sale.

The following are brief particulars—
Size of plate, 38" × 34". Scale, 70 miles = 1 inch.

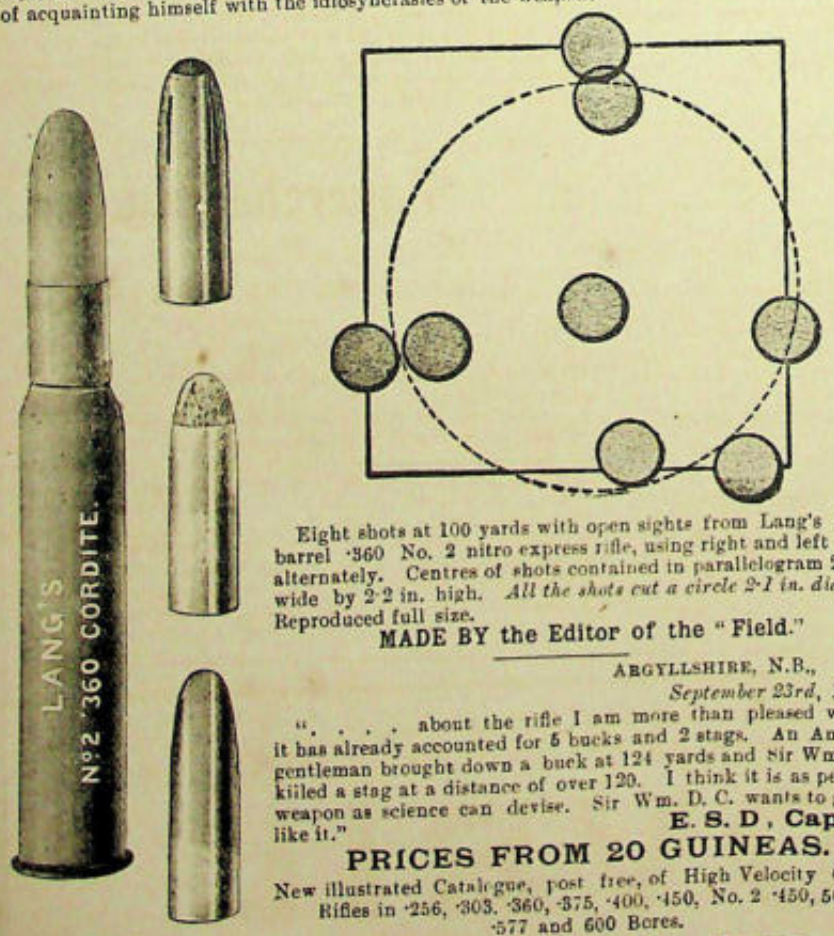
No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE



An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang's double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in. wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in. diameter. Reproduced full size.

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

". . . . about the rifle I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it."

ROSSLYN PARK vs. OLD ALLEYNIANS.—At the Old Deer Park, on Saturday, fairly representative teams of these clubs played a very evenly contested game, the margin of two points in favour of the Old Alleynians not exaggerating their superiority. Owing to the greater attraction on the contiguous ground, the spectators were not numerous, but were deeply interested. All the scoring took place in the initial half, Morris registering the Park's unconverted try. Isherwood, who, though held, being yet free enough to touch the ball down, was rightly awarded a try by Mr. Sloper, and Manvell placed the goal for the Old Alleynians.

In the second portion Rosslyn Park appeared to press considerably, but their attack lacked method, with the result that the defence easily prevailed. The football seldom rose above the kick-and-rush order, and both teams have been seen to better advantage on previous occasions this season. Rosslyn Park will have to improve very much upon this to avert a rout on Manday, when they entertain the Dublin Wanderers. Result:—Old Alleynians (1 goal), 5 points; Rosslyn Park (1 try), 3 points.

OLD LEYSIANS vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—Two points stood out at Burnt wood-lane, Wandsworth Common, on Saturday. The first was the try scored by the Scottish in the opening half. Simson got the ball close on his own line, and after a remarkable run, threw wide out to Thomson, who ran right along the line and scored a try, which Geddes failed to convert. This was all that was registered up to half-time, although the score might have been even if Beecroft, who had got clear away, had not unaccountably dropped the ball, thus throwing away a certain try.

The second notable phase of the game was the opening ten minutes of the second half. The Scottish were hotly attacking all the time. Every moment the ball was loose and either Munro, Simson, Purves, Walters, Cunningham, or Thomson were making tracks for the line. But the Leysian defenders rose above themselves. The Scottish score, when it did come, was rather soft. Two or three men were hurt in a scramble; the game seemed to have been stopped, but the whistle had not gone, and, the ball being kicked across to Munro, the latter went across in the corner unopposed. Grischotti failed to convert. Before the end Oulton nearly kicked a penalty goal for the Leysians, and then Beecroft, from a movement started by Lee, scored an unconverted try. The Scottish won a fast, exciting game by 6 points to 3.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. BLACKHEATH.—Blackheath, at Oxford, on Saturday, were poorly represented, and it was not surprising to find them beaten by a substantial margin. Soon after the start, Marsden made a brilliant run, and although Vassall failed to take his pass, from the ensuing scrum Williamson secured and dashed through, but the try was not improved upon. At length Friday passed out to Stokes, who worked his way past Davies and scored a try, which he failed to convert. Some clever foot-work amongst the 'Varsity forwards gave Oxford the advantage again, and just before half-time, combination between Steinthal, Batchelor, and Vassall ended in the latter getting in, but no goal resulted.

On changing ends, Blackheath at once assumed the offensive, but the advantage was of short duration, Marsden taking the ball well into Blackheath territory. He spoilt a good run with a reckless pass, but a few minutes later there was another good bout of passing between the Oxford backs, and Batchelor ran in, but failed to convert, the ball striking the upright. A brilliant rush by the visiting forwards carried play into the Oxford twenty-five, and from a line out Tuckett dropped a fine goal. Following this, exciting scrums were fought close to the Black-heath goal, but the danger was averted by Gotley. Steinthal making a fine opening for Vassall, he dashed in. This was uncoverted, but directly afterwards Cozens Hardy kicked a goal from a try scored by Batchelor. Oxford now pressed almost continuously, and following a really brilliant effort of Williamson's, Steinthal secured and ran in. Cozens-Hardy converted, and Oxford won by 2 goals and 4 tries to a dropped goal and a try.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—Cambridge University beat the Old Merchant Taylors at the Old Deer Park, Richmond, on Saturday, by a dropped goal and 2 tries (10 points) to 0. Play was of a scrambling and uninteresting character throughout. In the tight work and also in the open the Taylors' forwards were equally as clever as the Cambridge pack. From a Cambridge point of view the football can only be classed as disappointing. Play started timidly. It was, indeed, but a forecast of what we were to see throughout, and after several more or less nursery exchanges in the region of midfield, Hosken got over for the Cantabs, this being the only score in the first half.

After change of ends, the 'Varsity pack settled down to much better work, heeling out smarter and being faster in the loose. Ascroft eventually got in, but the place-kick failed. After some rather poor work in midfield Wright got possession, and dropped a neat goal. Nothing further was scored, the final score being as given above.

LONDON IRISH vs. HARLEQUINS.—With several of their prominent players away, Harlequins were below strength at Blackhorse lane, Walthamstow, on Saturday. They, however, proved too good for the London Irish, and defeated them by a goal and two tries (11 points) to a goal and one try (8 points). After fifteen minutes from a mid-field scrum, Sibree found an opening for his three-quarters, and Baxter, receiving from Lyon, ran over far out. Lyon failed to convert. Immediately after Longhurst secured, and, cleverly evading all opposition, added a further try, which Lyon majorised. Before the interval the resolute play of the Irish forwards was rewarded, J. N. Walsh scoring a splendid try, which Watson converted. Half-time arrived with Harlequins leading by 8 points to 5.

On crossing over, Irish again attacked, and within ten minutes McGowan equalised the points with an unconverted try. Harlequins took play into their opponents' twenty-five, but were kept out until the last ten minutes, when Sibree, picking up, scored far out, Lyon failing to convert. Although Irish were attacking towards the close, they failed to draw level, and in the end Harlequins won a good game by 11 points to 8.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

Although not what might be termed a big night at headquarters last evening, the various bouts furnished some excellent sport, and were keenly appreciated by the large company of members present. One of the principal events was between Tom Sharkey (Notting Hill) and Jem Goddard (West Indies, who were matched to box ten rounds at 9st. 8lbs. for £10 a side and the club purse. Upon attending at the club earlier in the day the former was found to be 1½lb. inside the prescribed poundage, and Goddard turned the scale at 10st. Of course, through not complying with the conditions, the coloured man forfeited the side stake, and the pair boxed for the purse. It will be remembered that the men met a couple of months ago, when Sharkey won inside four rounds.

Last night's encounter proved more decisive, the Notting Hill representative proving victorious in two rounds. During the meeting the exchanges were of a spirited character, and although Sharkey several times hit rather low, he did not transgress the rules to an extent as to be disqualified, and he had his man beaten before the expiration of the second round. Jack Turner (Glasgow) made his debut in a six rounds contest with George Cook (Deptford), but the latter failed to extend the Scot, who won in the second round. Bill Pearce (Bermondsey) and George West (Ashford) contested the whole of their six rounds, the Londoner winning by a narrow majority of points. Alf Vango (Bethnal Green) beat Bill Palmer in a contest of similar duration.

After the interval Tom Jamieson (Wandsworth) and Oswald Stapleton (Hammersmith) entered the ring for a ten rounds contest, which resulted in a win for the Wandsworth representative. The closing bout of the evening was the final of the competition. C. Dixon (Lambeth) defeating Bill Willis (Southwark) after a good bout.

CAMBRIDGE NOVICES AND FRESHMEN'S TRIALS.

Three hours' entertainment was provided at the Cambridge Corn Exchange on Friday evening, when the annual Novices' and Freshmen's boxing and fencing trials were decided before a medium attendance. On the whole very fair form was shown, but none of the competitors displayed more than an ordinary amount of science.

Through the instrumentality of Mr. Greenwood, the Epee de Combat has been introduced into Cambridge fencing, and it is to be hoped that it will be well taken up, as it deserves. An exhibition match was fought between Mr. J. Greenwood (Downing) and Mr. A. C. Meimarachi (Christ's). Details:—

FRESHMEN'S MIDDLE-WEIGHTS.

First Round.

M. P. Fitzgerald (Trinity) beat H. S. Ruttinger (King's).—The first round was painfully slow, but Ruttinger led off in the second round, and matters improved. In the final meeting Ruttinger continued to lead, but Fitzgerald sent home some very fine left handers, and was awarded the victory.

G. W. Cole (Trinity Hall) beat C. Hardy (Trinity).—Owing to Hardy's reach Cole had some difficulty in getting home his blows, but he boxed well, and although he was behind on the first two rounds, he had matters all his own way afterwards, and proved an easy winner.

D. Portway (Downing) sparred a bye with H. G. Rice (St John's).

Second Round.

Portway beat Fitzgerald.—The men were very evenly matched, and it was a good set-to. In the last round the men closed on a number of occasions, but Portway used his left well and won on points.

Cole sparred a bye with instructor Fordham.

Final.

Portway beat Cole.—The men were a good pair, but lacked science, and relied too much on heavy hitting. In the opening round Portway received a nasty blow on the nose, but it was a very even round. Coming up for a second time, the men continued to slog hard, but Cole wasted a considerable amount of energy by erratic hitting, missing his man time after time. When they met for the third round they were fairly fresh, considering the nature of the two previous rounds, but Portway was always the better boxer, and won with points to spare.

FRESHMAN'S LIGHT-WEIGHTS.

First Round.

E. L. Dobson (King's) beat K. Mackay (Trinity).—Mackay was both taller and heavier than the King's man, and throughout the three rounds he did all the leading. Dobson, although exhibiting a fair amount of defence, was not quick at following up. Both got home some good blows later, the King's man having the best of it, and he gained the day.

H. O. Hill (Trinity) beat P. P. Mounsey (Corpus).—This was probably the best bout of the evening, some good boxing being witnessed. Both were smart with their hands, and exhibited good all-round form. Mounsey did most of the leading, but was beaten after a close contest.

Final.

Hill beat Dobson.—Dobson, although a plucky boxer, gave several inches away, and was severely handicapped. He was practically unable to reach his opponent's face, and was knocked out in about two and a half minutes.

FRESHMEN'S FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

Final.

A. W. Fisher (Clare) beat A. W. D. Bentinck (Trinity).—Bentinck adopted a slightly crouching attitude, and after two rounds of even sparring, was ahead on points. In the final period the Clare man improved wonderfully, and after a hard, close contest for the first couple of minutes he got home several winning hits, afterwards carrying all before him.

NOVICES' FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

Final.

D. R. Steven (Pembroke) beat T. A. W. McGowan (Jesus).—The Jesus man had a very extraordinary style, at times holding both hands close up to his face and completely exposing his wind, although his opponent did not take advantage of the fact. Steven boxed very coolly, and in addition to using some science, had a dangerous right under-cut, which was a great help to him in the second and third rounds. He also used his left to advantage, and received the verdict.

FENCING.

Freshmen's Sabres.—V. C. M. Reeves (Magdalene) beat Grant Watson (Trinity) by 5 hits to 4.

Foils.—Owing to the big programme the foils, for which there was a fair entry, and which were decided on the pool system, were fenced at the Club Rooms during the afternoon, when the novices' event was won by A. C. Meimarachi (Christ's) and the Freshmen's by Reeves.

Officials:—Boxing: Referee, Mr. F. J. N. Hopley (Pembroke); timekeeper, Mr. H. Van-der-Byl (Pembroke); judges, Messrs. A. H. Pearson (Queens'), J. D. Young (Pembroke), and H. S. Gething (Trinity). Fencing: Judges, Messrs. A. R. B. Wallis (Downing), R. Pilter (Emmanuel), J. Greenwood (Peterhouse), A. C. Meimarachi (Christ's), and Instructor Fordham; seconds, Fordham and Con Griffiths.

ROWING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY TRIAL EIGHTS.

The most inveterate grambler could hardly have found much fault with the weather that prevailed at Moulsford on Saturday, and if perhaps there were fewer Old Blues present than usual, there was quite a good muster of the general public on the towingpath, and they had the satisfaction of witnessing an intensely exciting finish. Notwithstanding anything that may have been said as to the decadence of Oxford rowing, the fact remains that the Dark Blue president had got together a couple of promising crews.

The men left Oxford by the 11-35 train, and proceeded to the Miller of Mansfield, where luncheon was awaiting them. Afterwards they changed and made a move up to Cleeve Lock, where Tom Tims was in waiting with two boats. They soon got afloat and moved up-stream at a stroke of 30, with the Ariadne in attendance, having on board the President, L. E. Jones (Balliol), the Secretary, H. C. Bucknall (Merton), the Treasurer, Rev. W. E. Sherwood (Christ Church), H. M. Evans (Radley), G. M. Graham (New), E. P. Evans (University), Prof. Bourne (New), Rev. H. Legge (Trinity) R. P. P. Rowe (Magdalen), R. C. Brocklebank (Trinity), C. K. Phillips (New), Captain Willis (of the Leander), W. Bloodgate (B.N.C.), etc.

A steady paddle at 30 took them to the railway where they swung round and made ready.

The President despatched them by word of mouth to an even start, and they rowed 37 or so for the first half-minute. Culme Seymour then slowed down considerably, and his opponent secured a slight lead, which at the Betal and Wedge amounted to about the length of the canvas. In the next two furlongs there was very little between them, and by now both were rowing 34. Chadwyck Healy's crew was still leading as they came round the last bend, but profiting by the full flow of the stream, Culme Seymour put in a fine sprint which took him a few feet ahead. From this point the struggle was most exciting, and it was anybody's race right up to the winning post. Every now and again No. 2 looked like going up, but Culme Seymour always proved equal to the occasion, and just holding his own to the end, he won by a bare quarter of a length, both crews being completely rowed out. The time was 10mins. 33secs., as against 11mins. 29secs. last year, when, however, there was no stream or wind to assist them as on the present occasion.

Both stokes deserve every credit for their plucky rowing, and they were well backed up. Southwall doing splendid work at No. 7 in the losing crew, while Peat and Cudmore, of the new hands, were also seen to advantage. Dewar worked as befitted a Blue, and the same may be said of Kirby in the winning crew, although he was suffering from a touch of influenza. Gillan also did well. Names and weights:

Both the coxswains are Etonians. Donkin is a freshman, and steered the Eton eight for the last two years, but he is several pounds heavier than either of the Cambridge coxswains in their recent Trial Eights. Kekewich (the grandson of the Judge, the Right Hon'ble Sir Arthur Kekewich, P. C.) is about a stone lighter than Donkin and steered with skill his college Torpid and Eight this year, and with the latter was in the final of the Ladies' Plate at Henley. He also steered scratch crews for Leander last August, on the tidal water at Putney during the practices for the Cambridge and Harvard race.

CALCUTTA PAPERCHASES.

No. 1.

The opening meet was held as usual in the sixth milestone country, in which Mr. Turner had provided a nice galloping course interrupted only by a long lane leading from west to east of the main road. The going was holding in a few places, but on the whole fairly good. The turn out seemed smaller than usual for a first chase and there was little competition for places either among horses or ponies. Amongst those out were Mrs. Paris, Mrs. Forsyth, Mrs. Morgan, Mrs Myers, Mrs. Patterson, Miss Lukis, Mrs. Collin, Mrs. Lamond Walker with her arm in a sling the result of a carriage accident, Captains Holden, Keighley, Brooke, Learmouth, Messrs. Halliday, Bell Irving, Kenneth Hamilton, Morshead, Myers, Winkworth, Beadel, Bayley, Dring, Collen, etc., etc.

By Royal Warrant to His Majesty The King.

BOVRIL

is guaranteed the product of the finest Ox Beef.

A small quantity of BOVRIL added to Soups, Curries, Stews, &c. increases their nutritive value and improves their flavour.

Grief was plentiful, Mr. Rees on Turk being the first to pull up and shortly after a boy on a grey horse had a disastrous encounter with a tree. Later on Mr. Robertson broke a collar-bone and going on towards the rising sun Captains Learmouth and Rennie as well as Mr. Dring were unhorsed. They finished in single file and the official order was given as follows :—

1. Mr. Evers on Cain.
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy.
3. Capt. V. Brooke on Gaiety Girl.
4. Capt. Holden on Lord Harry.
5. Mr. Halliday on Ruddigore.
6. Dr. Hossack on Lady Gold.

In the Pony Chase Messrs. Curtis Hayward, Tanner and Pugh were unaccounted for and Mr. Hamilton made the pace so hot that the field was strung out over half a mile. The first six finished at long intervals.

1. Mr. Kenneth Hamilton on Good Chap.
2. Capt Holden on Pathfinder.
3. Mr. Thomason Waratah.
4. Mr. Hadow on Hempie.
5. Mr. Macdonell on Zig Zag.
6. Mrs. Paris on Tonglu.

Rowing.

RANGOON BOAT CLUB REGATTA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PRELIMINARY heats were rowed off on the 12th, 13th and 14th instant with the following results.

JUNIOR SCULLS.

W. E. Smith (Southern Station) beat C. R. Goss. The former led from start to finish and opposite Scandal Point two clear lengths separated the boats, when each crossed to the other's course. After getting straight again Goss spurted but could not catch Smith who won by a length.

Captain Windsor (Southern Station) beat J. C. Anderson. Steering a good course Windsor held his man as far as Scandal Point, where he was leading by nearly three lengths, Anderson's course being very erratic. Opposite the steps the latter was unfortunately fouled by a soldier's boat and stopped, though in any case it would have taken a big effort to have got level with Windsor again who paddled past the winning post.

E. Hicks (Northern Station) beat W. E. Smith. Hicks went off at a smart pace and kept his boat lively till after passing Scandal Point, where he was leading by nearly three lengths. Smith was sculling in very pretty style with plenty of length and though Hicks slowed down towards the finish the former could not catch him and Hicks passed the winning post first by about two lengths. Both men steered a very good course.

A. W. Turner scratched to Captain Windsor.

SKIFF RACE

G. J. Van Hoolwerff (Southern Station) beat E. C. K. Money. Money got well away at the start and kept the lead till the steps at Scandal Point were passed, when he was a clear length ahead. Van Hoolwerff then quickened his stroke and overhauling his opponent won by about two lengths. Both steered a good course.

C. B. Goss (Northern Station) beat W. E. Robinson. The latter steering erratically never had a look in and Goss won easily by several lengths.

BULLOCH'S.		ARMY.
Bow—G. Scoones.		Bow—Capt. Radcliffe.
2. W. H. Anderson.		2. Capt. Browne.
3. T. Hudson.	beat	3. Lieut. Cloete.
Str.—E. A. Martin.		Str.—Lieut. Paske.
Cox—A. Hunter.		Cox—Lieut. Scaife.

Bulloch's led from start to finish and rowing well together with plenty of length were leading at the steps by two and a half lengths. This distance was increased another length when the winning post was passed.

MOUNTED CO.		PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
Bow—J. B. Harman.		Bow—P. Henstock.
2 J. C. Anderson		2. O. Travers.
3 A. B. Ritchie.	beat	3. Lieut. Dunsterville.
Str.—H. R. Pilcher.		Str.—Capt. Windsor.
Cox—H. Smiles.		Cox—G. Miller.

The Public Schools jumped away at the start gaining a quarter length but the Volunteers, drawing level before the Island was passed, steadily increased their advantage. A clear length separated the boats at the Point steps. After passing this point the leaders quickened and won comfortably by two lengths.

In justice to both the losing crews it must be mentioned that they only started practising at the beginning of the month, whereas the Mounted Company have been rowing together for nearly five weeks and Bulloch's still longer.

MIXED DOUBLES

Bow—W. H. Gillespie.		Bow—W. A. Grocock.
Str.—Miss Pedley.	beat	Str.—Miss Woolcock.
Cox—Mrs. Gillespie.		Cox—Mr. Hodge.

Mrs. Gillespie's boat took the lead at once and at the steps was several lengths ahead. Miss Pedley sculled in very good style, swinging well and keeping her stroke long from start to finish, and it was therefore not surprising to see her boat win easily.

V. D. Couchman and Miss McMahon scratched to Major Hale and Miss Lamb.

Finals.

Saturday, 15th December.

Glorious weather attended the finals on Saturday, there being a pleasant northerly breeze to temper the warmth, and the lawn near the winning post was well filled with spectators, while several of the latter elected to watch the races from punts, canoes and pleasure boats.

JUNIOR SCULLS.—Distance about 800 yards.

E. Hicks (Southern Station) beat Captain Windsor. The two boats kept well together till near the winning post, Windsor having a slight lead. Both men sculled at a smart pace, Windsor's style being perhaps more finished than that of his rival. Towards the finish, however, youth and wind began to assert themselves, and making a splendid spurt Hicks passed the winning post first by quarter of a length. Time—3mins. 17secs.

SENIOR SCULLS.—Distance about 1,000 yards.

S. C. Gould (Southern Station) beat T. Hudson. Gould held his man all the way down though Hudson was rowing cleaner and with greater length. At the steps two lengths separated the boats and increasing his lead Gould won comfortably by three lengths. Time—3mins. 16secs.

SKIFF RACE.

G. J. Van Hoolwerff vs. C. R. Goss. Owing to the late arrival of Goss his opponent merely rowed over.

MIXED DOUBLES.

Bow—Major Hale.		Bow—W. H. Gillespie.
Str.—Miss Lamb.	beat	Str.—Miss Pedley.
Cox—H. Smiles.		Cox—Mrs. Gillespie.

Both pairs rowed splendidly, particularly the respective strokes. Miss Pedley set a nice long stroke with plenty of length, while Miss Lamb's though shorter had plenty of work on at the beginning. The latter boat had a slight lead at the steps, after passing which both pairs spurted and a magnificent race ended in a close finish, the Army couple winning by quarter of a length. Both ladies are to be congratulated on their excellent style and the plucky way in which they picked it up after a sharp struggle over a long course.

CHALLENGE FOURS.—Distance about 1,000 yards.

Mounted Company (Northern Station) beat Bulloch's. The crew's were as in the Preliminary heats. A good deal of interest was attached to this event as both crews have been working hard four or five nights a week for more than a month. The Volunteers had some difficulty at the outset in finding a how, but eventually Harman filled the place very successfully as he has come on a lot since he rowed in the Club Fours last July. During the practice period Bulloch's have always been well together, with plenty of swing and good length, which, until the last ten days, the Volunteers sadly lacked. Latterly, however, under the combined efforts of Captain Windsor and Mr. B. Stepheson, they made marked improvement so that a close finish was expected between the two crews with possibly Bulloch's just ahead at the winning post. From the start the Volunteers gained a slight lead but the others soon made good what they had lost and both boats went at it dingdong until half way between the Island and the steps when the Volunteers were called on for half-a-dozen, to which they responded, and drew slightly ahead of their opponents, so that about quarter of a length separated the boats at the steps. The Volunteers then quickened again and rapidly leaving Bulloch's behind won by one and a half lengths. Time—3mins. 19secs.

LADIES' DOUBLES.

Bow—Mrs. Windsor.		Bow—Miss Sexton.
Str.—Miss Lamb.	beat	Str.—Miss Pedley.
Cox—H. Smiles.		Cox—G. Miller.

This race afforded the closest finish of the Regatta and was well contested throughout. From the start Miss Pedley soon gained a lead of two lengths as Miss Lamb's boat made a bad start. The former then settled down to her work with a good swing and is to be congratulated on her style and length. Miss Lamb, however, getting plenty of work on at the beginning of her stroke gradually crept up to the leaders and a most exciting finish resulted in the former snatching the victory on the post. It was only through a supreme effort on Miss Lamb's part that her boat won and it is doubtful whether such a plucky spurt at the end of a hard struggle has been witnessed for many years on these waters. Both crews are to be heartily congratulated on the way in which they stuck to it from start to finish, and perhaps the respective strokes deserve special mention having rowed themselves out in the Mixed Doubles only a short time before.

SCRATCH FOURS.

No. 3 Station.		No. 1 Station.
Bow—S. C. Gould.		Bow—Capt. Radcliffe.
2. W. P. Whitehouse.		2. P. Henstock.
3. G. C. Dunsterville.	(1)	3. A. B. Ritchie. (2)
Str.—Capt. Windsor.		Str.—J. Wilson.
Cox—G. Miller.		Cox—J. Weston.
No 2 Station.		No. 4 Station.
Bow—Capt. Robb.		Bow—J. F. Kane.
2. J. C. Anderson.		2. C. D. Cloete.
3. W. E. Laming.	(3)	3. N. H. Warren. (4)
Str.—H. R. Pilcher.		Str.—O. A. Travers.
Cox—H. Smiles.		Cox—T. Hudson.

Nos. 1 and 3 got ahead at the start with No. 2 in close attendance, and the event soon settled into a race between Windsor's and Wilson's crews, both men setting a lively stroke, the former getting perhaps more help from his men. Towards the finish Wilson made a grand effort to get on even terms but Windsor's lot won by half a length, Pilcher's boat being a bad third one length behind Wilson. Travers' crew brought up the rear.

The prizes were then kindly given away to the sucessful crews by Lady White, after which Mr. J. Wilson proposed three cheers for her, which were heartily responded to and followed by one more. This brought to a close one of the most successful regattas the Boat Club have held for some years, owing, in a great measure, to the promptness of the races and the close finishes afforded by three of the events, viz., Junior Sculls, Mixed and Ladies, Doubles. The grounds were tastefully lit up by Chinese lanterns after dusk and the Devons' Band generously continued to play for some time after sunset.

BALLYGUNGE vs. MAHARAJAH OF NATTORE'S TEAM.—Played at Ballygunge on Saturday, ending in a draw. The home team batted first and made 221, mainly due to the fine batting of Eddis who made 83, and Stafford who marked his reappearance with a well-played 59. The Nattore team, which included three cricketers who have represented the Hindu Gymkhana at Bombay made 149 for the loss of four wickets. Parsatam played a fine innings of 72, Mehta 30 and Razak 26 also batting well. Scores :—

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES

7th December 1906.

THE younger professionals do not appear to be particularly busy just now and are evidently fired with ambition to achieve a great reputation and make as brave a fight as Duncan and Mayo with two other well-known brother Pros., but to Rowland Jones and J. B. Battley's challenge, Braid, Vardon, Taylor and Herd turned a deaf ear and the challenge given one day was withdrawn the next; however a gauntlet is thrown down by Allan Gow, professional to the Gog-Magog Club, who challenges C. H. Mayo to play a 72-hole match for £20 a side. Whether the challenged will pick up the gage remains to be seen. Interesting as Pros. are, we must leave them now with our best Christmas wishes, and go down the golfing social hill to the amateur, who, although the days are now so short that unless he makes a very early start he can scarcely manage his two rounds, still finds enjoyment in the game, dispite mud, despite rain, despite lack of daylight! A very interesting article appears in this week's Golfing from the facile pen of "Jigger," describing the futile attempts to play a clean shot off the muddy, spongy quagmire to which most inland greens are now reduced; but notwithstanding difficulties and wormy impediments the London Press Golfing Society have at last finished the competition for their Challenge Cup. In the finals an interesting fight ensued between Mr. E. D. Allen and Mr. A. S. Galtrey, the former is a very young and rapidly improving player who was eligible, according to the rules (so protracted has this competition been), to play from a handicap 8 stroker better than his present one would be on the 36 holes!) With this advantage which permitted him to receive strokes from his opponent, instead of as he otherwise would have had to do on his present handicap, playing him level, Mr. Allen with a lead of seven holes in the first 18 holes ultimately won by 7 and 5 at Mitcham on Friday, 30th November. People, and by this comprehensive word I naturally mean golfers are still talking about the foursome which is now dead a fortnight the final was distinctly disappointing, and the majority considered the course of Timperley unfitted for a game of this description, perhaps so, but I venture to think that nothing short of a miracle, a snow storm (in which case poor Vardon would probably have been forbidden to play) would have altered the ultimate issue of events, for the two veterans showed undoubted superior skill and fully deserved their handsome victory, the junior pair probably are quite satisfied in accomplishing one of their aims, that of notoriety and will of course be heard of in the near future.

For the next two weeks family golfers, by this is meant chiefly paterfamilias will, except on lawful holidays (Saturdays and Sundays) be occupied with domestic matters and by a great display of paternal and husbandly affections and solicitude and the purchase of suitable and lavish Christmas gifts quite earn his holiday at some seaside resort untrammelled with household liabilities and unencumbered with near relations, his conscience will be "void of offence," or at all events he will try to cajole himself into a fond belief that it is and so his Christmas will be spent as a Golfing Christmas should be—the Links by day, the Bridge by night, two indissoluble necessities which make the sum total of happiness, and promote that good will towards men which we are led to believe is a beatific and natural attitude at the close of every year.

There is a larger exodus than ever this year to greens on the Continent, the golf is not all that a Scotsman of the old school might approve of, but even he inured to mists, dampness and "soft mornings" would be bound to confess that the delightful climatic conditions abroad far outweigh the quite secondary questions of the green, and at all events he need not be transformed into a 'muddled oaf" before he has played 9 holes as one invariably is on Inland Courses in this country. Here and there and everywhere we will leave the golfer to his golf, and will wish him wherever he may be a very Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year, and more especially on the excellent and popular paper in which these lines appear does M. E. S. invoke prosperity !!

M. E. S.

As white as blanc-mange, and trembling the same, the new footman dashed into the dining room.

"A drop o' brandy, for heaven's sake!" he dared to exclaim.

Taken by surprise, his master and mistress hastened to oblige him.

"Whatever has happended, my man?"

"Too terrible!" he gasped, after the ancient cognac had been gulped down. "I've broken your old Sevres vase!"

Schoolmaster, asking the meaning of "the quick and the dead," small urchin says: "Please, sir, the man as gets out of the way of the motor-car is quick, and 'im as doesn't is dead."

Tuesday, 26th December 1906.

This time-honored athletic meeting was brought off in the Botanic Gardens to-day with complete success. There was, as usual, a big gathering of general holiday makers, and picnickers apart from those directly interested in the discussion of the programme, so that a big gallery surrounded the course and watched with interest and amusement the progress of events. Messrs. J. Chaplin and L. Prike, the Joint-Honorary Secretaries, had everything in apple-pie order, there was enough and to spare of keenness among competitors and it is satisfactory to note that the handicapping worked out well. Many guests availed themselves of the kind invitation to tiffin issued by Lieutenant and Mrs. A. W. Slater and a most enjoyable day was spent by all. Appended are details :—

CANINE EDUCATION.

AS these instructions are written mostly for the benefit of the novice, it is necessary to give a list and definition of the commands in common use in handling the dog. Of course any one can train his dog to obey any commands he chooses to adopt, as there is no inherent potency in one word as compared with another when used as a command; but when one buys or sells a dog for field work it is well to know and use such commands as have received the sanction of usage. In any case it is desirable, for the sake of convenience, that each command consists of not more than one or two words, and these should be distinctly different from those used in any other command. Nearly all the commands have corresponding signals, so that the shooter may be able to handle his dog silently when working near game, or, for that matter, when working at all; but they are specially useful when there is any probability that the shooter's voice would alarm the birds. The signals also serve to assist in handling the dog when the shooter's voice cannot be readily heard, as when the dog is working far away, or when he was upwind from the shooter. The following are sufficient for the requirements of field work :—

"Come in" is the order which denotes that the dog is forthwith to come to the trainer. A few prolonged blasts on the whistle have the same significance.

"Heel" is the order given to the dog when he is to get behind, and follow behind the trainer. A motion of the hand to the rear is the corresponding signal.

"High on," some years ago, was considered the most elegant command to use in ordering a dog to begin ranging.

"Go on," or "Get away," is the command now commonly used for that purpose. A wave of the hand forward, or a wave of the hand accompanied with a snap of the finger or a simple click of the tongue has the same significance

"Drop" is the command commonly given when the dog is required to lie down. The orders more in use some years ago are "Charge," and "Down Charge," but they are now almost obsolete.

The right or left hand raised a little higher than the level of the head is the signal for the dog to drop.

"Hold up" signifies that the dog is to rise to his feet, and therefore it is given to him when he is dropped or lying down. A slight beckon with the hand or forefinger has the same significance. As the dog is rarely in the position required by the drop except when obedient to that command, the signal to rise is in accord with his inclination, hence is soon learned and eagerly watched for. A click of the tongue also serves the same purpose.

The dog can also be trained to obey orders given by the whistle, each order having a distinct note or notes which are used invariably with it. This, however, is an unnecessary refinement and of but little practical use in actual work. They are, moreover, rather difficult to teach to any dogs other than the most intelligent ones.

The foregoing are the commands which are used the most and they are of constant service, whether the dog is idling about the house or working in the field.

"Fetch" is the command used in ordering the dog to retrieve. "Find" denotes that the dog is to seek for a dead or wounded bird. "Seek" and "Seek dead" are sometimes used for this purpose, but less so now than formerly.

Obedience to "Toho" was formerly considered an essential in a dog's education. It is the order which denotes that the dog is to stop and stand still. The trainer was supposed to derive great assistance from it in teaching the dog to point, for in times past it was commonly supposed that the trainer taught the dog to point. As "Toho" was very plausible in theory, and served well to stuff a part of a book on instruction, it did a graceful service in that respect. It is one of the most difficult orders to enforce, and the discipline required to make the dog reliably obedient is, in most instances, a hundred times more difficult to establish than it is to teach the dog to point. After the trainer had taught it by much pains, he had little opportunity to use it; for, inexplicable as it is, few, if any, considered the fact that out of the total opportunities for the dog to point birds, the trainer would not know the correct time and place wherein to order the dog to make his stand, he not knowing where the birds were, or indeed whether there were any at all. If by any chance the trainer did know where the birds were he could seldom get the dog into the right position to fit the order—for it did follow as a sequence that if the trainer saw the birds the dog could scent them—and the attempt to get him in the right place with the bawling out of "Toho" at the same time seldom failed to flush the birds. Again, if the dog by chance did stop to the order without having a scent of the birds it was a meaningless act, and if he really got a scent of them, he in his excitement paid no more attention to the order than he paid to the murmur of the breezes. He might be delightfully obedient in the yard, or even in the field when game was not present, and absolutely unmanageable when on game. A further absurdity is that the dog learns to point from experience, some taking to it quite readily and naturally almost from the beginning. To force a dog to stop and stand still when he is roading does not constitute a point. Nevertheless, a few of the old school will maintain that they taught their dogs to point in that manner, when in fact the dog learned to point in spite of it. The arm extended at a little less than a right angle from the body was supposed to be the signal which denoted "Toho." Most dogs which were obedient to it were good for little else.

Long commands, such as "Come here to me, I tell you! or "Dead bird, hunt it up!" or "Hie, there! What are you about?" should be avoided if the trainer can possibly do so, but if he must talk or perish, it is better then to use plenty of words.

"Hie!" or any other exclamation consisting of a single word, may be used to command the dog to desist from undesirable acts or to attract his attention to a signal. One word serves the purpose better than more, particularly if the more are epithets.

Whatever words or notes of the whistle or signal are used to denote the command, they should be used alike invariably, so that they will always have a fixed and definite meaning to the dog. Sometimes the beginner, when the dog, birds and himself are excited, will deliver a continued discourse to the dog, which for any beneficial effect might better be delivered to the trees.

Teaching the dog obedience to the foregoing commands, and giving him the necessary discipline to make obedience habitual can be done in what is called his yard training.

The implements commonly used in training are the whip, whistle, check cord and spike-collar, the latter being heartily denounced by many sportsmen, as being an instrument of unnecessary cruelty. Again, others object to the whip for much the same reason. Whether they are cruel or not depends entirely on the manner in which the trainer uses them. If he loses his temper and then beats and checks the dog to gratify it, the whip or collar are used cruelly, but so would any other article under the same circumstances. The fault then lies with the trainer and not with the instrument. If he cannot use the whip or collar as useful adjunct to the training, it is then much better not to use them at all, and the use of his boots or the first club at hand is not permissible at any time. Indeed if he finds that his temper is beyond his control and that he cannot refrain from punishing his dog unnecessarily consequence, it is better to give up the attempt at training. Anger and violence unfit the trainer to teach and the pupil to learn. But cruelty being inflicted the trainer should blame himself and not the instruments used.

The whip is commonly used to punish the dog for any misbehaviour, though some trainers use it to assist in forcing the dog to retrieve. The whips most in favour are those which are flexible and, therefore, easily stowed in the pocket. The ones heavily loaded with iron or lead at the butt should never be used as there should be no intention to kill the dog at any time as part of his training, and the whistle in the end of a whip is also a very useless article. The trainer should select one which tapers nicely to a point which ends in a linen or silk cracker, as the crack of the whip will, at times, serve the purpose quite as well as its direct use.

The spike-collar should be both of good material and simple in construction. Its purpose should be solely to inflict pain without any accompanying physical injury, hence the points should not be long and capable of piercing the skin when ordinary force is applied. Though commonly called a spike-collar, it is a combination of spike-collar and choke-collar. It has been claimed that the choke collar without any spike serves all purposes for which a collar is needed in training the dog. However, it is far more cruel than a spike collar. It requires more force to make it effective, and the consequent choking and shocking injures the whole organism, differing thus from the local harmless hurting done by the spikes. The correct use of the collar will in due time be fully treated in connection with the subject of retrieving

As to the material and construction of the collar, a brief description will suffice. The material should be the best medium weight harness leather, free from sponginess or flaws. For convenience in using it the collar is made in two pieces. The longer part should be about 22 or 24 inches in length by 1¼ inch in width. The strap when looped should play through a square or more properly an iron parallelogram, for if a ring be used instead the collar when in use will roll and twist and thereby impair its efficiency. The inside dimensions of the iron parallelogram must be governed by the width of the strap and the thickness of the leather used. The shorter strap, 2 or 3 inches in length, has a square buckle in one end and a ring in the other. The spikes, screwed through a steel plate on one side of the leather strap and secured by nuts on the other, should project about ¼ inch or ⅜ inch and the points should have a very short bevel so as to hurt the dog without injuring him or inflicting unnecessary mutilation. It should always be kept in mind that mutilation or real injury is neither desired nor intended, and also that the least possible punishment which will accomplish the purpose is all that is necessary or desirable.

Shows.

THE TOLLYGUNGE HORSE SHOW.

THE twelfth annual horse show was fully up to its predecessors in the number and quality of exhibits, the harness classes being particularly well filled. Mr. F. Palmer was as successful as ever, taking away four red ribbons, while the Government House entry steered by Lady Violet Elliott also took their fair share of favours. A welcome innovation were the competitions for Ticca Gharries. The first-class phaetons made a very good show indeed, but perhaps the nicest turn-out in the ring was the rubber-tyred office jaun drawn by a pair of dun ponies which took the sixty rupees prize among the second class gharries. This type of ticca is just the thing for all-round work in Calcutta, and the wonder is that they have not already been substituted for the shocking rattle-boxes annually licensed by a complaisant corporation.

The jumping, both of horses and ponies, was a little disappointing. The four fences were awkwardly placed and the trappy little water jump brought to grief several of the best and boldest leapers in the ring, notably Lord Harry and Lady Fox. The winner jumped in great form, but Young Poetess was very nicely ridden by her owner and fully deserved her ribbons, while Mrs. Patterson's paperchaser was perhaps the most showy jumper on view.

The Polo Ponies made by no means so goodly a show as that of 1905, owing to the annoying breakdown of the Calcutta Polo Tournament. The judging was very carefully done, both in the Polo Pony and Hack and Hunter classes. There was little competition among the Heavy Weights, and Mrs. Paris' handsome grey secured three red ribbons, including the Viceroy's prize for the best Hunter in the Show. Nevermore had a fortunate victory in the Light Weight Hacks class and for some reason or other the Judges passed over Mr. Birkmyre's handsome English mare Lady Fox, which many thought by far the best looking and nicest mannered horse in the whole show. There was a fair show of Remounts and Capt. Holden's good looking Craig, albeit more a race horse than a charger, took the red ribbon in the officers' class.

The very large entry for the Ladies' Hacks must have considerably puzzled the Judges, but greys were in favour for once and Mrs. Forsyth's showy paperchaser was eventually triumphant. The roan cob ridden by the Lady Elliott was fancied by many.

The arrangements of the show were well ordered and everything seemed to go off without a hitch. Some eight hundred people lunched in the grounds and although a few grumblers were to be found the general consensus of opinion was that the catering this year was a distinct success. Appended is the list of prize winners.

The Naturalist.

TWO-HEADED SNAKES AND TURTLES.

CASES of monstrosity in reptiles have, it appears, been recorded from time to time ever since the days of Aristotle; and stories were formerly current as to the existence of races of two-headed snakes. Although such stories are, of course, absurd, there is no doubt that such two-headed monsters are occasionally observed; and an American writer, Mr. W. S. Blatchley, has recently taken up the subject seriously, so far at least as the United States, and more especially Indiana are concerned. So far back as the early part of last century Dr. S. L. Mitchell described and figured three monstrous specimens of young black snakes (Bascanion constrictor) from Genesei County, New York, one of which had two complete heads, while the second had a double head with three eyes, and the third a double body and a double skull, furnished however, with only three eyes and a single lower jaw.

In the same paper reference is made to records of two-headed snakes from Great Britain, Italy, and some of the West Indian and Polynesian islands. At a later date, according to our author, Professor J. Wyman recorded a specimen of an American water-snake (Tropidonotur sipedon) with two heads and two bodies. Still later, in 1878, mention was made in the (American naturalist) to a two-headed chain-snake (Ophibolus getulus), from Maryland, in the collection of the Smithsonian Institution; mention being also made in the same volume of another two-headed snake, of undetermined species in the collection of Williams College, Massachusetes. Even this, however, does not exhaust the list of previous records, for in 1882 reference was made to a double-headed milk snake (Ophibolus doliatus) in the Museum of Michigan University.

Concerning two-headed Chelonians Mr. Blakeley states that he can find but a single mention, namely, of a two-headed tortoise of the genus Testudo, which is reported to have "lived to acquire a considerable size, by having taken food at both mouths."

As regards his own investigations, Mr. Blatchley states that he has received trustworthy information with regard to five two-headed snakes and one double-headed turtle; and that he has personally seen two out of the five.

One of these snakes, a specimen of the spreading viper (Heterodon platyrhinus) from Indiana, had two perfect heads standing out nearly at right angles to the middle line of the body.

Since only a portion of the author's paper has at present reached this country, we are unable to give his views with regard to the reason for deformities of this nature among reptiles. Although double-headed monsters are far from uncommon among domesticated mammals and birds, among wild members of those groups they are either excessively rare or altogether unknown.

R. LYDEKKER.

INTELLIGENCE IN PLANTS.

IN the Monthly Review S Leonard Bastin, who is evidently a wanderer in what may be termed the by-ways of biological research and speculation, raises the question whether the beginnings of intelligence may not be traced in plants as well as in animals. "It is now," he says, "an established fact that plants can feel, in so far as the phenomenon of sensation is understood to be a response to external influence; this being so, there is," he contends, "nothing unreasonable should we go still further, and seek for evidence of something approximating to a discerning power in the vegetable world." The purpose of his paper is to set forth instances which seem to suggest the existence of such a power. They are, he tells us, in all cases either the outcome of personal observation or gathered from the records of indisputable authorities.

Among the strange plants which have developed carnivorous habits are the Droseraceæ or Sun Dew group. Indigenous species are found both in England and in America. "The leaves of all the members of the family are densely covered with clubbed hairs, and a fly settling amongst the tentacles is immediately enclosed by these organs; meanwhile, a peptic (i.e., digestive) fluid is exuded from the glands of the leaf. An interesting experiment may be conducted with the Sun Dew, proving that the little plant has a certain discriminating power. Place a tiny pebble amongst the tentacles; these at once close in, it is true; but not the least attempt is made to put out the digestive liquid. How does the Sun Dew know the difference between the fly and the pebble?" A few years ago Mrs. Treat, an American lady, proved that the leaves of the American Sun Dew were actually conscious of the proximity of flies without any direct contact. She pinned a living insect at a distance of half an inch from a healthy leaf. In about a couple of hours the leaf had moved near enough to secure its prey by means of its tentacles.

The Venus Fly Trap (Dionæa Muscipula) of South Carolina belongs to the same natural order as the Sun Dews Its leaf consists of two bristle fringed lobes hinged together. On the upper surface of each lobe are three sensitive hairs. When any object touches one of them the lobes snap together, and the catch is imprisoned. The leaf will enclose anything, a small piece of cinder, for example, but it does not take it long to find out if its capture is inedible, and in that event it soon opens to release it. A fly or a bit of raw beef, on the other hand, is tightly clenched, until after an interval of several days it is drained by the plant of the desired nitrogenous food. How, asks Mr. Bastin, can you explain the behaviour of the Dionæa without admitting the presence of some discerning power? Even roots are cited as illustrations. The aerial roots of tropical Lianes, growing under artificial conditions, have sent out their organs to a tank 25 feet beneath, "evidently," says Mr. Bastin, "with the knowledge that they would find water at the end of their journey."

A most remarkable example of the relations established sometimes between plants and insects is supplied by a central American acacia (the Spherocephala). "This tree grows in districts where leaf-cutter ants abound, and where the ravages of these insects are so dreadful that whole areas of country are at times denuded of foliage in a few hours. The acacia has, however, hit upon a unique way of protecting itself against the assaults of these enemies. At the end of some of its leaves it produces small yellowish sausage-shaped masses, known as 'food bodies.' Now these seem to be prepared especially for the benefit of certain black ants, which eat the material greedily, and on this account it is no matter for surprise that these insects (which are very warlike in habit) should make their homes in the acacia, boring out holes in the thorns of the tree to live in. At the approach of an army of leaf-cutting ants the hordes of black ants emerge, fired with the enthusiasm which the defence of a home is bound to inspire, with the result that the attacking enemy is repulsed and the tree escapes unscathed."

A Texas judge was robbed of a horse not long ago, and the thief, being arrested, was brought before him for trial. The judge eyed the prisoner with deep satisfaction for a minute or so and then delivered himself of the following:—"Owing to a personal prejudice the Court will not hear this case. It will be tried by the bailiff who will find a verdict in accordance with the facts. In the meantime," he added impressively, "the Court will go outside and find a rope and pick out a good tree."

Said a foreigner of distinction the other day: "I can't comprehend how it is that you people of London complain of the dearness of meat. For me, when I want dinner, there are always merchants of the street, who vend of meat the most ravishing, on skewers, at one halfpenny the two slices. These, with one of your delicious white rolls—my faith! What could you wish more?"

The Story Teller.

A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE.

FATE has a peculiar fondness for playing practical jokes upon us poor mortals, but she never perpetrated a more ludicrous one than when she permitted Mr. Frank Hodder to become an aspirant for Turf honours.

In his own line of business Mr. Hodder had amassed a big fortune—in brewing beer for the consumption of the great British Public—and he was about as 'cute and business-like an individual as it is possible to come across in the proverbial day's march.

As an owner of a string of a more or less moderate specimens of the thoroughbred racer, Mr. Hodder's usual canny methods gave way to a unsuspecting disposition sufficiently rare at the sport of kings to give rise to a certain amount of comment and —whisper it softly—contempt.

Perhaps it would be putting it a little too strongly to say that he was an aspirant for fame on the Turf, as his colours were only seen in the North, and chiefly at the meetings held in the county of broad acres, where he first saw the light.

"Old Frank Hodder," as he was familiarly called, had an almost pathetic faith in his trainer, one Tom Stocker by name, and in all the long years they were associated this sublime faith never wavered—but once. It mattered nothing to Mr. Hodder that the successes of his colours were very few and far between, nor that when the "red and green halved" did score he was not on; these facts he regarded as he caprices of Fate, and the losses on his betting account were looked upon as all part of the game.

Like a great many other persons in whom unbounded trust is reposed, it behoves the veracious historian to set forth that Tom Stocker was far from being worthy of the high opinion his chief patron held of his genuineness and straightforwardness. Good-natured friends were not wanting who ever and anon suggested to Mr. Hodder that his trainer was playing fast and loose with him, but all to no purpose; the genial brewer's faith in his trainer was of the kind that is popularly supposed to move mountains.

People at last got tired of asking Hodder if he was "on" when one of his horses won, and, as he was quite proof against the chaffing he got, certain suspicious persons came to the conclusion that, after all, he might be in the swim.

"Yours going to win, Frank?" was usually answered by "Ask Stocker, my lad; he knows most about 'em."

Nevertheless, continual dropping will hollow away the hardest of stones, and a time came when all the latent suspicion in Frank Hodder's genial nature was aroused. Not that he had grown tired of his trainer's constant explanations that the class was too high, or the horse is not ready, or that he could not understand how the animal came to win; he had become too hardened to both unexpected victory, and equally unexpected defeat, to mind either.

The occasion was at the summer meeting at Pontefract, a venue that old Frank patronised pretty freely, his home not being very far from the course. His colours had been twice successful on the first day, and the old man was jubilant, although he had been a heavy loser on both races through backing something his trainer had told him was sure to beat "theirs."

"How's Nimbus for the big race to-day, Tom?" he asked of Stocker.

"Fit as a fiddle, Mr. Hodder," replied his trainer, with the usual cast-iron expression on his weather-beaten face; "he ought to win hands down. Shall you back him?"

"I'll stop him if I do, sure as eggs; but I'd like to break that record of mine if I could, and win over one of my own horses for once in a way."

He laughed heartily as his trainer hurried away to saddle one of his charges for the next race. This had only just been decided when Hodder collided with a man he knew as he was going through the paddock gate. They stood talking for a few minutes, the individual in question holding in his hand a telegram, which Hodder saw at a glance was signed by his trainer. There was a horse's name upon it, and a sudden access of curiosity assailed the worthy brewer to learn the contents of the wire.

"I see you've got a wire to send off," he said, with well-assumed indifference. "That reminds me, I want to send one, too."

It was quite a flash of Hodder's old-time business diplomacy, and before he left the Telegraph Office he had succeeded in catching a glimpse of Stocker's message, which read, "Fifty each way Ram Jam."

Ram Jam was in the big race, which his trainer had told him was good for his own horse, Nimbus, and this fact set old Frank thinking. If Stocker was speaking the truth, what was his object in backing another horse in the race, and for a good big stake? All the numerous hints and suggestions regarding his trainer's crookedness that he had ever heard recurred to Hodder's mind, and he resolved to spoil Stocker's little game by getting the cream of the market about Ram Jam for himself, and leaving the dregs for his trainer at starting price.

Accordingly, he had a regular dash on Ram Jam when the betting opened, and, to the surprise of the connections of that well-kept good thing, he rapidly developed into very hot goods.

"Who is backing him, Tom?" asked one of Stocker's cronies. "It's none of our lot; all our stuff has gone away to the offices."

"Hanged if I know! Some fool has been opening his mouth too wide, I expect, But I'll soon get a few hundreds on ours, and that'll send Ram Jam out again. We can't stop him now all our money has gone away. It'll be all right. I'll advise the old chap to have an extra splash on Nimbus; that'll square the deal."

Stocker hurried off to find Mr. Hodder, who, betting book in hand, was cheerfully contemplating a seductive row of wagers he had got about Ram Jam, and quietly chuckling to himself at the manner in which he was going to dish his trainer and the gang that was working with him.

"Ah! there you are, Sir," said Stocker, breathless and perspiring. "This is the best thing of the meeting; you must have something extra on it."

"What?" queried his patron, innocently.

"Why, Nimbus, of course. Never was better; and I see they are offering 'tens.'"

"So I hear. They can offer it till they're black in the face. I shan't have a penny on."

"You mean to say you're not going to back your own horse?" said Stocker, aghast. "Look at him, Sir; he's going in grand style."

The horses were just cantering down to the post, and Nimbus really went in taking fashion; but this fact, which at any other time would have aroused Mr. Hodder's enthusiasm, left him absolutely cold.

"No Nimbus for me to-day, Tom," he said, determinedly. "I'm having a gamble on Ram Jam."

He looked hard at his trainer as he said this, but Stocker's cast-iron expression was absolutely impenetrable; not a muscle of his face moved.

"Good gracious, Mr. Hodder, you're making the biggest mistake in your life," he replied—"the best chance you ever had of breaking the record you were speaking of just now."

"We shall see, Stocker," was old Frank's rejoinder. "I've got a rare fancy for the horse."

"He may get a place," said Stocker making a final effort to induce Mr. Hodder to back his own. "A wilful man must have his way, I suppose. It's a great pity, all the same, to throw away a chance like this."

Old Frank was obdurate, however, and, as if to close further argument, took out his glasses and began to watch the horses as they lined up at the barrier.

They were off after a short delay, and, as they came along at a good pace, Nimbus was seen to be holding a good position close to Ram Jam, who had finished up a warm favourite in the ring. As they reached the distance Ram Jam came out full of running to win his race, and a great shout went up to herald the favourite's victory. Almost before it was uttered, however, Nimbus had followed suit, and a great race between the pair ensued. First one, then the other, had his head in front, until, by dint of superior stamina, Nimbus ran the other out of it, and the red and green flashed past the post a gallant winner by half a length.

It was a question which looked the more disappointed—the owner of the winner or his trainer; but the latter had the solatium of winning his place bets, while Mr. Hodder, in missing the opportunity of backing his own horse, realised all that is contained in the old adage, "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

Tom Stocker still trains for "old Frank," who since the above affair trusts him more implicitly than ever, though he has yet to break the record and back a winner in his own colours.

Solution to Problem No. 19.

IT is important for B to establish his hearts before Z establishes his clubs. From his discard of the 7, A could not have held more than three clubs originally, and, consequently, he must hold at least two trumps. This being so, B can safely lead a heart before playing for the ruff, as whatever Y leads he will get in again at once. He can give A his ruff, and the latter will lead him a heart, clearing his suit, whereas had he led the losing diamond earlier a club would probably have been returned. In this way A and B make the most out of the hand. It is very unlikely that Z has passed the declaration with no hearts.

POLO PONY MEASUREMENT.

WE are never surprised when we see the Polo Pony Height question cropping up at home; it is become almost a "hardy annual" but usually unfolds its blooms for a brief hour in the columns of some sporting journal and fades away modestly without having attracted more than the most perfunctory attention. It is, therefore, somewhat disturbing to find it brought forward with all the necessary formality of notice given before the Council of the Polo and Riding Pony Association: still more so when the moving spirit is a gentleman recognised as an authority on the game, one indeed who has written a very sound and excellent book upon it. The point was not raised as a proposed alteration in the height rule, it could not obviously have been so raised since it does not lie with the Council of the Society to touch those rules. It was brought forward as a change in the regulations which govern admission of names to the society's Stud Book in these terms: "That no limit of height be imposed in the case of a pony whose sire or dam is registered in the Stud Book: that in all other cases the pony submitted for registration shall not exceed 15 hands, and that the present inspection conditions remain unaltered."

There is, as all polo players know, a certain amount of dissatisfaction prevailing in England in connection with the height question or, more accurately with the system of measuring. There is a lack of uniformity. This is nothing new; it has been a source of difficulty ever since the question of height assumed a place in the politics of the game. Granting the existence of this difficulty, we confess our inability to see how the proposed change in the rules of the Stud Book would serve to meet it. The primary purpose of the society and its Stud Book was to foster the breeding of ponies for the game: and to say that its first object was to ensure, or do its utmost to ensure, the production of ponies of the required height is to state an obvious truism. It was not an easy thing to arrange a Stud Book on the lines required to meet the case: the aim was from the breeder's standpoint to evolve the Order of a breed from the chaos of mixed breeds or no breeds at all: and the scheme adopted was perhaps as good a one as practical ingenuity could devise. The "ante-room" system, if we may so call it, took into an outer fold the produce of sires and dams thought likely to give pony stock which would not grow beyond the 14-2 limit of height; if an animal grew beyond that limit he was turned out of the ante-room: if he reach full growth without exceeding it, he is admitted to the honour of membership in the Stud Book proper. We should be much at a loss to devise a scheme fairer on the one hand to the breeder whose interests are the care of the Society, or better calculated on the other to meet the needs of the polo world.

Let us take the motion in its two parts: first "that no limit of height be imposed in the case of a pony whose sire or dam is registered." This presupposes that the produce of any mating from

Stud Book parents will not exceed the regulation height: a sanguine view which practical breeders could not possibly share. It seems to involve the assumption that the Society in the few years of its useful existence has succeeded in evolving a new breed whose salient characteristic is physical inability to exceed a specified stature, a characteristic which has never distinguished any breed of domestic animal yet and in all human probability never will. The effect of such a change would be, so far as our limited vision indicates, to render the whole Stud Book absolutely worthless for polo purposes: it would simply open a gulf between the breeder and the player to the great detriment of both and to the advantage of none. It is, of course, permissible to argue that polo is not the sole aim and end of pony breeding and that it would be no disadvantage to any one to recognise as a "pony" an animal of 15 hands or more for hacking or driving. That may be conceded: but surely it would be equally allowable to urge that inasmuch as all thoroughbreds are not used for racing purposes, horses of impure breeding might therefore be admitted to the sacred pages of the general Stud Book. We find ourselves at a loss to discern the advantage which might be expected from adoption of either clause of the motion, the second of which ran "that in all other cases the pony submitted for registration shall not exceed 15 hands." Passing over the rather obvious objection that an equine of 15 hands is far more than a pony we come to the mover's explanation. Nothing, he said, was further from his mind than a wish to increase the height of polo ponies—an announcement which his motion had certainly not prepared. This object was to relieve the Society of the responsibility entailed by the task of measurement and to throw it on the Hurlingham Committee. That is a position intelligible enough; but if it be acknowledged that the question of height is not one for the Society we can only say that the raison d'etre of the Society is gone and that it may as well put up the shutters. It was started with a definite purpose and that definite purpose has been kept resolutely in view, and to alter its purpose in a manner which would alienate its work from the game which provides its principal market would be nothing short of deliberate suicide. This being so, and we cannot think that it is open to denial, the mover of this proposed change must be considered fortunate to have found a number of the P. and R. P. Society's Council to second his motion. The rest of the Council were frankly and outspokenly averse from it. Mr. Tresham Gilbey voiced the view of all practical men when he said that the Society "must keep in touch with Hurlingham." That is the whole point in a few words: an industrial enterprise which ignores the needs of its market is foredoomed to failure: success is only to be won by careful study of requirements and assiduous endeavour to meet them: and polo ponies as articles of commerce are not exempt from the laws governing these matters.

The abortive motion however proved fruitful in spite of itself: it served to press upon the notice of the Council the necessity for endeavour to do away with the independent measurement system it has been obliged to adopt and make advances in the direction of uniformity. Mr. Charles Miller, manager of the Roehampton Club, and Mr. Howard Taylor had no difficulty in finding the right solution of the measuring problem. Their proposal was to approach the Hurlingham Committee and Mr. Sheather, the official measurers with the proposition that provincial measuring centres be established whither owners might send their ponies to be measured by Mr. Sheather on behalf of the Polo and Riding Pony Society. It is to be hoped that the Hurlingham Committee may be able to agree to this proposal: the duties of the official measurer when the polo season is approaching and during its course, may forbid him to be absent from head-quarters: but there are many months of the year when he might visit the provincial centres, as suggested, on dates named in advance. The adoption of this mutual standard of measurement should go far to allay the difficulties which have surrounded the question. It would be well worth adoption if only because it would remove all possible uncertainty concerning the eligibility of ponies entered in the Stud Book to play in the great tournaments and games under Hurlingham rules.

Sporting Notes.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to all our friends, supporters and well wishers: may 1907 bring them and us good luck.

Viceroy's Cup Day has hurried past us with its surprises and disappointments, and the year of grace, 1906, will long be memorable among racing men in India for the crushing of one of the hottest favourites that have ever started for the big race in Calcutta, that splendid little country-bred pony, Saloon. The breakdown of poor old Long Tom was very pitiful, and it is difficult to understand how his connections came to start an obviously lame horse! unless they were influenced by the desire to give his backers a run for their money. Some heavy bets were booked many weeks ago on last year's winner, but as events have turned out, it would have been wiser to have scratched him early in December. For once the followers of track form were triumphant, and there can be no doubt that the three best trained horses secured the coveted places.

Perhaps the most surprising success of the big meeting was that of Paddy's Darling, the little English filly landed in the autumn with a great reputation as a sprinter. She was first sent along in earnest, being freely backed at level money, in the rich Chowringhee Plate over seven furlongs. Here she cantered away from a moderate field, but her lack of form over a longer distance procured her lenient treatment by the handicappers in the Cooch Behar Cup, for which her connections again backed her freely down to threes. She was only asked to give five pounds to Clynder and received a soupcon, even from little Saloon, whom she smothered for speed from the moment the gate went up. Fitzgrafton had a cut at her, but the pursuit was hopeless and the mare won very comfortably by two lengths. The disappointment of this race was Sacristan II., whose jockey seemed to adopt entirely new tactics, lying last until the turn for home regardless of the fine sprinters stealing away in front of the field. The horse never got within speaking distance even of Saloon who finished third.

The Lawn Plate on the second day of the First Meeting furnished a remarkably pretty race and the first four horses finished with their heads locked together, giving the two new judges a real hot bit of work. The public had found the winner in Killeevan, on whom Robinson rode one of the beautifully timed finishes to which he has treated the Stands this season, and the placed horses were also well backed, particularly the curiously marked grey Jolly Abbott who has shown himself a real game customer, running perhaps in a class rather better than he can cope with.

The Selling Race on this day brought about some interesting bidding and both Lipscombe, the winner, and Rustile, the second horse, changed hands, the owners of both doing nicely out of the transaction. The winner was hotly backed, Rustile being the only other horse supported in the Ring, which discounts somewhat from the value of the handicap.

The Hurdle Race was the reverse of exciting. The public realized that the handicap was the softest of soft things for Thomond and backed him till the bookies grew tired. Olynthus carted round 11st. 3lbs. and poor little Lord D. also toiled in the rear under the respectable burden of 10st. 7lbs. The two likeliest looking ones by the card, Nak Our and Loch Lochie, fell, and this allowed the popular grey and scarlet jacket to roll home alone.

Another popular victory was that of the cerise and black cap, when Colonel Beaver's Jolly Roger fairly ran away with the handsome Gunny Meah Cup. Baichan rode the pony very nicely and repeated his success on Monday by winning a mile handicap in capital style. He also rode Saloon in the Cooch Behar Cup and is slowly but surely making his reputation as one of the very finest light-weight jockeys in India. Messrs. Wood and Badger's fine sprinter Sermon, brought home his backers' money in the Sandown Park Plate, which is a three thousand five hundred rupee stake nowadays, but he was upset on the third day by the speedy Amyas, who broke Mr. Dartmoor's spell of bad luck.

The Macpherson Cup promised to be a fiasco as all Mr. Apcar's horses were scratched and only eight accepted, of which one seemed to have an astonishing advantage in the weights on his running in the Viceroy's Cup. The public were not slow to realize this fact and Lamrock was backed down to odds on very soon after operations in the Ring commenced. The Master and Steinhager ran true to their Cup form, but the handicappers were in some measure vindicated by the victory of the despised Dirty Boy, who came on the outside of the course and beat the "good thing" by the shortest of heads.

Claribell has shown herself the best pony in Calcutta but succumbed to the improving Matin Bell on Monday when asked to concede over 3st. in a mile race. Flo obligingly started and received two hundred rupees as third money, there being no other applicants: to such a pass is pony racing reduced on this side of India!

Robinson scored a clever win in the New Year Plate, not having allowed himself to be misled by the pace set by the well-meaning rider of Seamander. Old Bundook made a gallant effort to win this race, but Our State successfully stalled him off and put yet another win to the credit of Robinson's lucky stable.

The new stands have now been well tried and the present accommodation seems to be sufficient for all purposes. The relic of the old stand still swallows up a considerable number of spectators, and the third stand to be built this summer will no doubt be used by them next year, but it seems rather like building an Atlantic liner to bring herrings to Yarmouth. However, perhaps, we shall grow into it which is an inspirating thought. The topmost tiers of seats in the Club stand were not overcrowded at the 'Xmas Meeting and the reserved enclosures were at no time crowded to excess in spite of a record gate. When the surging throng beneath the old Viceroy's box after each race returns to memory, the improvement appears in its most attractive light. As to seating accommodation it is a mistake to believe that every race-goer wants a seat. Many never leave the betting ring except to see the number go up, hundreds never dream of leaving the market place until the starter's bell has rung.

The Lahore and Meean Mir Dog Show on the 27th and 28th ultimo was a big success, a full report will appear in our next issue. The Indian Field special gold medal was won by Mr. Roe's Dachshund Caviare.

Owing to a stupid printers' error in our report of the Second Day of the Calcutta first meeting the winner of the Pony Hurdle Handicap was given as "Whit." Lucretia won, as our detailed description of the race shows, while Whitefoot (not "Whit") fell and broke his neck. A rather different thing to winning. We apologise to our readers, printers do this sort of thing about Christmas time we find.

His Excellency the Viceroy has consented to become patron of the Calcutta Kennel Club.

The Polo Tournament for the Venugopaul Cup, played in Madras, ended in the Golconda team beating the Gordon's Horse team, as will be seen from our report. This is the third victory of the Golcondas who, under the conditions, now keep the Cup for good. Rajah Venugopaul has come forward with the offer of another Challenge Cup which will probably be accepted.

We remind all dog owners that entries for the Calcutta Kennel Club Championship Show close on the 15th instant. Applications for rules, entry and registration forms should be made to the Honorary Secretary (7-1, Lyon's Range) early.

Chatterjee, India's foremost florist, is fitting up a flower stall and placing at the disposal of the Ladies' Committee a supply of flowers for sale, in the interest of the Charities, throughout the Fête. The Quetta Hunt Point to Point Races for the Military Challenge Cup was run off on the 20th ultimo. They met between the Civil Jail and Woodcock Spinney and there was a big field and lots of people to look on.

The conditions were for ponies 14-2 and under, the bonâ-fide property of officers of regiments re-entering, owners and riders to belong to the regiment, teams of not more than four and the ponies to be bonâ-fide hunters with Quetta Hunt during the present season. Ponies to be marked in the order in which they finish, the first in to get the same number of marks as starters, the second one less and so on. The team getting the highest points to win the Cup. Aggregate weight of each team—46st. or over ; no pony to carry less than 10st. 7lbs.

The course was round four points, starting from the Civil Jail to Woodcock Spinney, then towards Khar Mahommed, from there for about a mile towards Takatu, then turning South and finishing at a point near the road between the Civil Jail and Woodcock Spinney. Distance about 4 miles.

The teams competing were R. A., R. E., Royal Warwickshire Regiment, York and Lancaster Regiment (two teams), 127th (P. W. O.) Baluch L. I. (two teams), 128th Pioneers and Captain Chenevix Trench who represented the Political Department by himself.

The R. A. won the Cup with 89 points, the 127th P. W. O. Baluchis were second with 76 points, and the Royal Warwickshire third with 68 points. Appended is the order in which they finished :—

The Gorakhpur Spring Meeting has been fixed for the 13th and 15th February ; entries close on the 15th and 31st January and 10th February respectively.

Owing to the "Christmas rush," and the inevitable vagaries of the Post Office, a few matters had to be held over from last issue ; we publish them now.

Shikaris, not only in the United Provinces, but all over India, will read with interest what "U. P." has to say in his long letter published in our Correspondence Columns to-day. Several letters anent these rules have already been printed by us, but none of them have dealt with these rules in such a comprehensive manner. It is sad but true that the general public, especially our military officers, are frequently curiously ignorant of these rules and the way they are worked. The present rules are but the thin end of the wedge and if they are allowed to stand in the "U. P." will be followed by similar ones all over India ; so we emphasise the fact that "U. P.'s" criticisms are of vital interest to those who shoot all over India, not only in the provinces to which he refers. These observations, we should say, ought to remove many erroneous impressions now prevailing among military men and non-officials that the civilians are responsible for the past working of the rules. They clearly show how utterly rotten the rules are. We earnestly hope "U. P.'s" letter will be followed by many others until such an agitation is aroused as will compel Government to alter them.

It will be recollected that the wild boars in Windsor Forest were destroyed because they were considered dangerous ; but we see that Mr. Walter Winans, in a letter to the Morning Leader, suggests the introduction of wild boars into Scottish deer forests. He says: "Many forests have woods in the bottom of the glens which would be just the place for turning down wild boar ,and then, when one cannot go out stalking—and how many days this happens, because the wind is wrong or because there is too much mist on the hill—one could have a boar drive, or combined boar and roe drive. The wild boar is very prolific, and increases five or six times as fast as the red or roe deer. In fact, boars could be hand-reared, like pheasants, and thus any quantity might be bred each year. They would be easier than deer to keep out of the crofters' crops, as they do not jump fences. There are rough mountain tracks where deer are seldom seen, and which are no use for anything, which could be made into wild boar preserves. Here, by hand-rearing, big bags could be shot, and I do not think this would be more, if as expensive, as having an equal head of pheasants."

An ingenious method of conveying poached salmon, which is said to have been carried out for years by a man who had a small sheep croft, is related by a writer in the Edinburgh Dispatch. The plan was never suspected till he told some cronies before leaving for Canada. There were a couple of burns forming the marches of his farm, a wild, outlandish place, over ten miles from any town. The whole district was absolutely bare ; and as he had a perfect right to be on the banks of the burns at all times and seasons, there was little chance of his being caught in the act of killing fish. The difficult business was to dispose of his spoil to advantage. His own story was that he killed a sheep and skinned it, leaving, however, the head and feet attached to the skin. The head was cured, and glass eyes inserted, and the body was formed with hoops under the skin. When he had a sufficient number of fresh or kippered fish, these were put in the "hold" and the belly laced up. The blood of a rabbit would be sprinkled about the throat and nostrils, and the head wetted to give it a fresh appearance. With the carcase lying carelessly in the bottom of his cart, he would drive to the shop of a small butcher who was in league with him in disposing of the fish.

The head official of the United States Treasury recently had the stomach of a dog sent him, with the following letter :—"Dear Sir,—I send under separate cover stomach of my dog Fritz. I was playing with him to-day, holding a twenty-dollar bill up for him to jump at, when he suddenly leaped higher than I anticipated, grabbed the bill between his teeth, ran under the house, where he chewed the money up and swallowed it. I thought more of the twenty dollars than I did of Fritz—he was always chasing chickens—so I shot him and cut out his stomach. Please see if you can't paste the bill together and redeem it." "The unique feature of this case," said Mr. Schreiner (the official), "is that we found the bill, slightly chewed up, but sufficiently whole to identify and redeem, and the man has duly received a cheque for twenty dollars."

One of the most successful recent shoots at Home was that of Lord Ellesmere who in three days at Worsley Hall, near Manchester, with seven guns, killed over three thousand seven hundred head of game. The bag included over eighteen hundred pheasants and eight woodcock.

Concerning the treatment of tiger and panther bites in camp. "Poor Jim" writes as follows to the Madras Mail :—

In hospital practice these would come under the term of "poisoned wounds," and the treatment while in the jungle would be to wash the wounds with a stream of water, or squeeze the sides of the wounds and suck them and allow a little blood and serum to flow. Then apply freely some pure or liquefied carbolic acid to the wounds by means of a swab, which is merely a roll of absorbent cotton at one end of a stick. The excess of carbolic acid may be removed by washing with a little absolute alcohol. Iodoform may then be dusted over the wounds and cotton wool applied by means of a bandage. A grain of opium may be given and repeated every three or four hours till pain is relieved. Care must be taken not to apply too much pure carbolic acid to the fingers or toes, lest these become gangrenous, although the pure acid is less easily absorbed than the dilute acid, and the excess acid washed away with the alcohol. A couple of ounces of each will be sufficient, and the cost of both will be about a rupee.

The above is intended for slight and limited wounds only, and not for extensive lacerations, crunching of the bones, severe hæmorrhage, etc., which, of course, require different treatment.

The dates of the fifth, sixth and seventh Calcutta Extra Meetings have been fixed for the 9th, 16th and 23rd February.

The last meet of the Lahore Hunt at Shalimar provided a most enjoyable day, there being nearly fifty people out. Finding quickly they soon had a good jack going and after a zig zag course he eventually broke back and got into a cotton-field from which he was dislodged with considerable difficulty owing mainly to the curious tactics of several of the field. But patience on the part of the Master had its reward and hounds were after a long check on to him again. He led them towards Harbanspura and was ultimately rolled over in a nullah. A second jack was put up but unfortunately chopped in covert.

As we have had occasion to remark more than once recently the extinction of pony racing in Calcutta seems to be within measurable distance. In this connection we are glad to see the Indian Planters Gazette coming forward with a suggestion that has much to recommend it. Our contemporary writes :—

"The exceptionally fine form shown by that marvellous country-bred Saloon warrants our suggesting that Government should wake up to the necessity of encouraging breeders by giving plates at racing centres situated where or near where the industry is chiefly carried on. General Sir E. Locke Elliot, who is interesting himself in the matter, is doing his best to urge upon the authorities what good results such action would have in stimulating the production of blood stock as well as the sale of them, for be it remembered there are now some three hundred blood sires at the various studs. Purchasers will flock in as soon as they find there are prizes worth winning for the class at up-country meetings. No better way exists to work up the market. About Rs. 30,000 would be ample. The decadence of pony racing in Calcutta is so evident that within a very few years events for this class will be entirely eliminated from the programmes ; by that time Viceroy's and King's Plates given up-country should have brought fairly big fields ; in which case it may be taken for granted that the C. T. C. will gladly give big purses as further encouragement. Patiala has already shown us what can be done, so has Mysore. Sir Pertab Singh will gladly follow the lead, so will Ulwar and many other States. No one knows better than His Excellency the Viceroy what Government encouragement did for horse-breeding in Canada, and we feel sure if the suggestion is brought before him, he will at once give it strong support. Young stock might be leased out to responsible racing men to be returned within a certain term. Other ideas may strike some of our readers and we invite correspondence on our suggestion."

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—Attendances at Mahaluxmi seem gradually to be increasing, the actual racing too is improving, and with very fair entries last Saturday, the races were open as a whole and the day proved a most interesting one.

The day opened with the Sydney Plate for which Russley Rose certainly seemed "chucked in" and, despite the mare's poor exhibition in Poona, she went out a hot 2 to 1 on favourite with the second string Koko backed by many who were doubtful which the stable expected. That marvellously improved black mare, Gun Metal, a credit to Fowler's training, carried a good deal of place money with little or none to win despite "Tod's" confidence. Ames took her straight to the front, commanded a substantial lead, and came in easily. Russley Rose came very late and just beat her stable companion.

With only 1, 2 to pay out on places, the pencil brigade found the Desert Plate a good betting race ; Rose at 7 to 4 and Vedas 5 to 2 with Little Joker and Zurriff supported. Vedas, of course, made the running, though Ames never took too much out of him and rode a far better race than this pony is usually asked to run. Rose, though, was very fit and with his turn of speed held Vedas safe in the run in when Ames eased the chestnut and let Zurriff up, on whom Kamad did not go the shortest way round. A supposed "good thing" in Mudlool went down in the Midget Plate when Shanwar came beautifully at the bend and had the race in safe keeping.

The Mistletoe Plate for horses followed and punters were in a quandary as, though a steady flow came for Gumbara and Balayeuse, Adelaide suddenly fell from tens to twos and Baritone, whose stable are rumoured to have put the stuff on in the morning, lengthened from threes to fives with the rumour freely spread about that his "gammy" leg had had a jar on the track. As the race panned out, Fisher early took Baritone out and, taking the corner far better than we have been told the black could ever hope to do, won anyhow with a fifth of a second tacked on to Comeback's time with the "gammy" one all out. This is indeed training on, and if he continues to do so will want watching. Williams held second place to the bend and that he was interfered with is ridiculous.

Prior to the Colaba Plate, Mr. Toolsidas Tejpal apparently thought, Antica would thus early get back the purchase money. The gallops of Gladiator, however, were on the tongues of every stable boy and this promisingly built grey went out an equal favourite. Ames took him straight out and went away by six lengths and when Antica did begin to come up the task was hopeless. Caractacus was a long shot tried by many and he and Sabah had a tremendous race for a place and the latter just got up in time to dead-heat.

Lastly came the Auction Plate won by Court Martial. Solicitor will have to be reckoned with in future as in this race he came at a tremendous pace and pipped Turn of Luck for place money.

Mr. Apcar's good fortune was crowned on New Year's Day by the victory of Seclusion in the Indian Grand National. The chestnut was in splendid fettle and Hoyt rode her with capital judgment, with his weather eye fixed on the favourite Kipling, his only serious opponent. The surprise of the race was Olynthus, who ran a great horse, leading most of the time and eventually dead-heating with Kipling for second place owing to Sheldrake's easing of the favourite a little too soon a mistake costing Rs. 500. Mr. Pugh's horse is evidently a hard puller and more or less ran himself out before the real struggle came.

Grief was unfortunately very plentiful, beginning with the break up of Olga (Hoyt) over the last fence and continuing with Energy (Mr. Turner) and Good Chap (Mr. Hamilton) in the Pony Hunters' Chase. The Trial Chase brought down Kingpin, Craig, and Coronet, and Howie broke a collarborne while Murphy had to be carried away with a serious concussion. In the National Look Out fell at the last fence and Greenstone on the far side, so that it was a relief when the Hunters got the course without an accident, other than Posey's refusal to face the open ditch. The chief cause of so much disaster was want of schooling, but there is little doubt ; that the new fangled matting run along the far side of the hedges had a good deal to do with it. This matting was laid along the fence to thicken the lower part of the thin cold weather hedges and was supposed to fall down when touched. Unfortunately it merely sagged in some instances and thus succeeded in turning the unlucky horses clean over. Olga was the most notable instance of this form of accident and much the same befell Good Chap, Kingpin, Coronet and Look Out. This whilom hunter was going very well when he fell and it will be a great pity if his injuries turn out to be serious.

Athletic Notes.

THE Honorary Secretaries of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association have got out the programme for their next Sports Meeting betimes, and we believe it has found its way to every Officers' and Sergeants' Mess, Club, and Institute in India. There are already some indications of athletic activity, especially among the military, who are expected to swell the entries more than ever this year. The offer of the big money prize for the tug of war has been very favourably regarded by the soldier teams ; and it is hoped that a big entry for this particular event will be the direct result of the Association's liberality.

Concerning Indian cricket, Lord Harris remarked in a recent interview:—"It has improved, undoubtedly, since I was out there. It has been taken up far more in schools and colleges than it was ten or fifteen years ago, for it is now generally recognised that it is better for boys in their leisure to be in evidence, as in cricket, than idling or misspending their time. Indians have a good eye and rather long arms, but do not possess the patience and resolution of the Anglo-Saxon. They are very easily excited, and what always militates against sending their best team over here is caste custom, caste prejudice, and racial prejudice."

It is proposed to bring the Murray Football Tournament off during the cold weather, and the semi-finals and final will, it is expected, be played in Lucknow between the middle and end of February next. Lieutenant-General Sir E. Locke Elliot, Commanding 8th Division, has kindly undertaken to form a Committee of Management. Last year there were twenty entries for this Tournament, and it is now looked upon in the Army as the "blue riband" of Indian Football. Certainly it is the most popular. This year there is every reason to believe the number of Regiments entering teams will prove a record. Entries for the Tournament may be sent to Murray and Co., Ld., Lucknow.

The Calcutta Y. M. C. A. annual athletic sports meeting will be held on Saturday, the 26th instant. There are two open handicaps for amateurs only—100 yards and 440 yards. Entries close on the 19th instant.

Last Saturday the Calcutta Football Club sent out a team to play a team from the flagship Hermes now in port. For an off season game it was not half bad ; it was tolerably even up to half time, "lemon time" arriving with Calcutta leading by a goal. In the second half the landsmen's superior condition and science told and the sailors had to play mostly on the defensive and left the field beaten by five goals to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA F. C.—Dods, goal ; V. Cooper and Badham, backs ; Ansell, Winckworth, and Crawford half-backs ; Binning, H. M. Sherman, McConnell, V. Sherman, and McDonald Smith, forwards.

H. M. S. "HERMES."—Ruffles, goal ; Arnott and Mr. Thomas, backs ; Dobb, Ronaldson and Pearse, half-backs ; Griffin, Johnson, Oates, Johnson and Lister, forwards.

Punjab-Bengal Football Tournament.—The 2nd Battalion, the Black Watch, and 2nd Battalion, the Gordon Highlanders, met in the first round of this tournament at Peshawar on the 26th December After the start the play was chiefly in mid-field, but a beautiful centre from the right wing by Smith, of the Gordon Highlanders, was converted into a goal by Galletty, two minutes before half-time. Up to half-time both teams played an excellent game, and there was not much to choose between them. On resuming play the Gordon Highlanders had the best of the game, and ten minutes from time Graham scored the second goal for them. The Black Watch played up well at the finish, but failed to score, thus leaving the Gordon Highlanders winners by two goals to nil.

The boxing contest between Newman and Pickering at the Opera House, Calcutta, on the 26th ultimo, lasted thirteen rounds and the award went to Newman on a foul. Pickering had rather the best of the first five rounds and then the American pulled himself together and fighting vigorously soon had his opponent in trouble. Pickering was brought down in the thirteenth round, he rose before the count was concluded but dropped to his knee again without being hit, the fight being given to Newman in consequence. Among the side events were a couple of exhibition bouts by Blue Jackets from the Hermes, Rozario fought four rounds with Ranken, and there was a display of wrestling by two natives.

The following account of one of those disgusting and demoralising endurance contests reads more like a description of a bit of the infernal regions than the report of a cycle race :—

"Another serious accident occurred on 13th December in the six-day bicycle race in America. Two riders collided and fell, and nine others, pedalling madly close behind, had no time to avoid them, and tumbled in a heap over them. Two sustained such serious injuries that they are out of the race. Hollister, the Salt Lake City representative, has a fractured hip and broken ribbs, and Vanoni, the Italian, is badly cut. News of the accident, and the eager expectation of seeing a repetition of it, brought such thousands of spectators that the enormous building was unable to accommodate them. It is not a lovely spectacle that the Madison Square garden presents. The sight of the weary, haggard-eyed competitors, monotonously trailing round and round, hour after hour, does not appeal to any genuine sporting interest, and only the hope of seeing serious, possibly fatal, accidents brings most of the spectators, who, as a result, are a collection of brutal and depraved persons, compared with whom the scum of the racecourse and the prize-ring are elegant society. The police authorities have declined to permit the services of their officers, so constant is the violence, robbery, and ruffianism of every description. The spectators are showing equal endurance with the riders. Thousands of them have not left the building since the contest began at midnight on Sunday, sleeping and eating on their seats. The hall is overheated and unventilated lest the riders should catch a chill, so that the atmosphere is reeking of tobacco and sour beer. The fumes and exhalation from the crowd are offensive beyond description. A knife was thrown at Vanoni on the fourth day, presumably by a man betting against him. Women, drinking champagne, remained in a box through the night at intervals, handing dollar bills to the riders as they passed, and otherwise varying the monotony by fighting. Boys and youths are resorting to robbery in order to get money for admission. One was killed by endeavouring to scale the exterior wall and enter by the window. He fell and was impaled upon spiked railings."

Harmston's Circus continues to hold first place in public regard of all the shows located on the Calcutta maidan; at least, so we are led to believe when we see the crowded houses which gather round the arena at the nightly presentations and numerous matinees—of which, by the way, there have been no less than three so far this week. Of the remarkably clever Frantz Troupe we have written before; they are prime favourites and deservedly so; for we cannot remember to have seen anything better than their turn in an exile of thirty years of Calcutta, our experience dating back to the palmy dates of John Wilson, Cook, Chiarini and others. The items in which the wild and domesticated animals take part are all good—the tigers and bears, the trick ponies the steady going old plodders on whom the Sylphs of the ring, the bounding jockeys and others disport themselves with such grace and daring, and the jumping and diving dogs. The latter give a pleasing exhibition and exhibit training and docility in their highest form; the hound is really a marvellous high jumper, and the little stodgy "Dawg," of no particular class, who climbs up a perpendicular ladder to the very top of the tent and dives from a platform into a net held below is all pluck, good temper, and cleverness. The dancing quartette have put on some new things, notably their "Buck Dance" which is loudly applauded every time it is rendered. The Wheelers pursue their devious and amazing gyrations, the clowns "get in their laughs" from audiences who seem oblivious when under this mammoth canvas of such irritating realities as Congresses and Swadeshi ebullitions. The lithe and supple J. Roberts is an equilibrist of more than average merit; he is seen at his best, perhaps, in the "Stair Case Act" after seeing which we are confirmed in the opinion that he is as much at home walking on his hand as on his feet. Frank Eldred on the Globe roulante or a horse is distinctly original and undoubtedly clever.

The first high jumping contest for local ponies will be held this evening—a handsome trophy being offered. There will be further changes of programme during the week and to-morrow night will be the benefit performance of the Frantz Troupe. The total takings at the performance in aid of the Minto Fête were Rs. 3,289; Rs. 718 by booking and Rs. 2,571 at the ticket office. As the Fête were to receive half, their share works out at Rs. 1,644-8, but Madame Harmston-Love has generously decided to hand over Rs. 2,000 to the fund.

The Indian Golf Championship was decided on Tuesday when Lieutenant McAllen beat Mr. McCormack in the final (36 holes) by 8 up and 7 to play. Details elsewhere.

A medical man was wandering through an asylum's wards one day, says the Liverpool Post. He came upon a man who sat in a brown study on a bench. "How do you do, sir" said the doctor. What is your name may I ask?" "My name!" said the other frowning fiercely. "Why, Tsar Nicholas, of course." "Indeed!" said the doctor. "Yet the last time I was here you were the Emperor of Germany" "Yes, of course," said the other, quickly; "but that was by my first wife.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 14th December 1906.

THE Smithfield Show was opened on Monday at the Agricultural Hall. The Prince of Wales was at the Hall early and went round the stalls, where he was no doubt gratified to find himself a prize-winner. He afterwards lunched with Sir Walter Gilbey, who is President of the Agricultural Hall Company. The King came later, and with His Majesty the Princess of Wales, to receive the usual ovation. The King looked well in spite of the cold, which was greater in Norfolk on Monday than in town. In parts of that country and Suffolk they had ten inches of snow, and it was also lying deep on the Yorkshire wolds. We have had sharp frosts at night lately, but it does not last. London is given over to weeping skies and mud by day.

Well, the Lords have made certain amendments in the Education Bill to make its terms correspond with Ministerial professions of purpose and the Commons have decided to reject the Lords' amendments en bloc, without considering them. So here have we the bone for a first class fight. Few people care a straw about the precious bill; but good as we are and civilised, we like a fight; and we like the prospect of this one much since the Lords are bound to win. The Nonconformists are threatening awful things if C. B. and Co. climb down by a single rung. I suppose the fun will not begin in earnest till after Christmas, ere when the Lords will no doubt have completed the enormity of licking the Trades Dispute Bill into some sort of reasonable shape.

As Christmas draws nearer the storm of appeals in aid of charity grows heavier: it has been more voluminous than ever this year, and the quantity of circulars which inundate one's letter box defeat their own end. Somebody with more leisure than the majority has been urging recipients of these appeals at least to answer them if they don't respond with a donation. I do not see the good of doing so myself: letters, not of allotment but regret, would only single out the indulgent writer as vulnerable to more direct application; and when you receive, as I have received, an average of four appeals per day for a week, budget increasing, you must be as fond of letter-writing as Mr. Micawber if they don't go into the waste paper basket.

Mr. Haldane's assertion that only 67 per cent. of the Scots Greys are Scotsmen has drawn a prompt rejoinder from General Russell, Honorary Colonel of the Royals, to which regiment the Scots Greys are affiliated: he says that of 382 men enlisted from June 1904 to June 1906, 348 were Scotsmen enlisted in Scotland, 21 were English, 10 Irish and 3 Colonials; and he hopes Mr. Haldane is better informed concerning other details of the Army. Lord Rosebery and his eldest son, by the way, offered the War Office land for cavalry barracks at Dalmeny, free of all cost. It was a generous offer and a politic; but Mr. Haldane declined it on the score of unsuitability of the nature of the ground. He said it was too much on a slope.

The new tube will open to-morrow for traffic. Starting at Hammersmith, it comes close to Earls' Court, Gloucester Road and South Kensington stations, then turns north a little from the underground to have a station opposite Mudie's in the Brompton Road, another half way between Tattersalls and the top of Sloane Street, another in the terrace facing the Park, close to St. George's Hospital, another in Down Street, another in Dover Street, and another in Piccadilly Circus. Whereafter it meanders away past Cicester Square, Russell Square and Holborn into unknown desert regions such as Caledonian Road, Holloway and Finsbury Park. It will be a vast convenience to this side of Piccadilly Circus, though doubtless we shall complain that the stations are too close together.

The theatrical event of the week, of course, was the revival of the Gilbert and Sullivan opera series with "The Yeomen of the Guard" on Saturday. The late Sir A. Sullivan regarded the music he composed for this piece the best light operatic work he had done, and this may be the reason why it was chosen to lead the way. There was the anticipated rush for seats: enthusiastic pittites or galleryites were shivering on the Savoy doorstep for hours before the doors opened. It seemed to me that the audience did not quite catch the Gilbert and Sullivan atmosphere at once: it was interested rather than sympathetic: and Gilbertian "points" provoked isolated laughter which seemed to puzzle the laugher's surroundings. This unresponsive atmosphere held the house until Jack Point (admirably acted by Mr. C. H. Workman) delivered the "hands off" speech. Then the house got on terms with the author: "I have a song to sing, O" completed what the speech had begun and thenceforward you could feel that the house was in touch with the Gilbertian spirit. It seems ridiculous to say so, but so potent is the obscure influence of a crowd that I caught myself wondering whether Gilbertian humour was no humour after all; whether the play that delighted 15 years ago or more had had its day: and whether after all the Savoy operas were to be relegated to the dustheap with the heaps of musical comedy trash which tickles and dies. It made one feel old and unhappy, and the emphatic encore accorded "I have a song to sing, O" came as a positive relief.

There is not in the cast a single player who acted in the piece when it first appeared; which, having regard to the lapse of time, is not wonderful, perhaps. The new hands have been well chosen; of Jack Point I have spoken; to him largely went the honours of the evening. Mr. John Chelow was Wilfred Shadbolt, Head Jailor and Assistant Tormentor, and was as lugubriously complexioned an Assistant Tormentor as could be desired. Miss Lillian Coomber was the Elsie Maynard; she played and sang well, but she did not, to my mind, catch the archaic atmosphere as did Miss Geraldine Ulmar, the original Elsie: the same remarks apply to the Phœbe of Miss Jessie Rose You would remember Miss Jessie Bond's Phœbe. Mr. W. G. Gilbert was in the house on Saturday and accepted a "call" which was repeated with real fervour by a delighted audience which I left shouting.

"The Vicar of Wakefield" has been turned into a "New, Light, Romantic Opera," with Lyrics by Mr. Lawrence Housman and music by Miss Liza Lehmann; it was produced at the Prince of Wales' on Wednesday, with Mr. David Bispham as the Vicar and Miss Isabel Joy as Olivia. Mr. Lawrence Housman was under the necessity of enlisting the aid of some other writers to complete the work, but gracefully acknowledges on the programme "additional lyrics by Oliver Goldsmith, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, etc." (I like that, "etc.") It is doubtful taste of course, but I found myself comparing the "additional" with the original lyrics, somewhat to the advantage of the former. Miss Lehmann's music is simple, melodious and admirably harmonises with the subject. The main points of the novel have been retained and the adaptation has been accomplished with a skill and discretion beyond the promise of the programme. Such songs as "Drink to me only" or "Come lasses and lads," though they had not the advantage of being penned by Mr. Housman, fall very naturally into such an opera as this. Mr. Bispham is capital as Dr. Primrose: he looks the part and is at home in it. Mrs. Theodore Wright as Mrs. Primrose is more than satisfactory, and Miss Isabel Joy is as fresh and attractive as Olivia ought to be. Mr. Walter Hyde as Squire Thornhill is well supplied with songs that suited his very agreeable tenor voice. The piece was very cordially received.

Mr. Bourchier gave "Macbeth" on Tuesday afternoon in aid of charity. The critics say that the Macbeth of Shakespeare's creation has never been seen in our time, but Mr. Bourchier's conception of the part should satisfy most; an unpolished soldier, weak of will but with honourable feelings, does not perhaps represent all the true Macbeth, but 'twill serve. Miss Violet Vanburgh was Lady Macbeth, nervous, ambitious, and overstrained after the deed was done. Miss Vanbur h has grasped the feelings of Lady Macbeth and she played splendidly: she often suffers from inability to make her voice heard as she did on Tuesday. The piece was excellently staged, as it would be at the Garrick. By the way, why does Lady Macbeth see the ghost after she has dismissed her guests? He sees it; but is there any necessity for the innovation that makes her see it also.

Not since the "Golden Light" fizzled out in unextinguishable laughter have I seen a play which so hopelessly missed the mark as Mr. Kingston's three—act production, "The Websters," produced at Terry's. It seemed like an attempt to reduce melodrama of the most melodramatic to serious comedy: and the result was roaring farce. The plot was as old as the stage itself, the characters were conventional to a degree, the speeches were long and grandiloquent. The players played it with artless seriousness and the audience looked on at first with puzzlement, then with passing impatience. Then at some more outrageous piece of "penny gaffery" than usual somebody laughed: and thenceforward by consent the house took "The Websters" as farce and laughed consumedly. It succeeded out of pure failure for the nonce: but I doubt its reappearance.

There is a decided boom in Living Statuary at the music halls. La Milo, to whom Mr. W. T. Stead gave so valuable an advertisement in the shape of his approval, has gone from the Pavilion, but a new living statue "turn" is given by four Germans, one girl and three young men. The lady poses alone, and the others with or without her form groups after well known pictures or statuary. All four were sculptors' models in Germany and no doubt the fact explains the astonishing rigidity with which they pose even as their remarkably good physique explains why they became models. There is no gauze curtain to aid illusion; the groups are shown under the merciless limelight and the effect is really extraordinary. Living statues is not a new thing, but "the Seldoms" won the reception that is usually reserved for a successful novelty.

The dramatic profession has furnished one Mr. Armiger Barclay with the subject for a violent tirade, somewhat after the style of the famous attack by the late Mr. Clement Scott which ended so disastrously for that able critic. Mr. Barclay, who would not appear to be intimate with many actors, affirms that "domesticity is a state of which actors have no experience," among other things; and his general opinion of the stage and all that walk thereon is of the lowest. I don't know who Mr. Barclay is nor does "Who's Who;" and I do not suppose the theatrical profession will be any the worse for his assault. It is a curious thing though that there should be a public always agape for abuse of actors and actresses, and a pretty wide public too. One is reminded of the poor heathen who worships his idols by night and pummels them by day.

The student of human nature finds something to interest him in the case of Mrs. Pomeroy (Ltd.) vs. Mrs. J. S. Scalé. "Mrs. Pomeroy" was the name taken by Mrs. Scalé when she started her business as a complexion specialist in 1895. Eventually she sold that business to a company and started another; and the company sought to restrain her from using the name "Pomeroy" in connection with her new venture. The evidence given by Mrs. Scalé was suggestive. With some lack of discretion, pardonable in an American, she set up her beauty business in Chancery Lane; those who most do congregate in Chancery Lane proved blind to the opportunities offered them and Mrs. Scalé removed to Bond Street; and when she sold the business a few months ago the turnover was £21,000 a year in London, and there were branches in Glasgow, Dublin, Birmingham and Liverpool; there were 50,000 customers, clients or patrons on the books, and Mrs. Scalé employed eighty young women whom she herself had trained in the complexion business. The legal aspects of the case, I apprehend, would not be of interest: the evidence is not without interest. 'Tis a great thing to discover the weak side of one's fellow creatures, dear Editor.

The Lyceum Theatre was sold yesterday under an order in Chancery. The auctioner said he considered the property worth about £200,000, but after the bidding had risen from £100,000 to £119,500 he opened the sealed instructions of the Court and declared the Theatre and all pertaining thereto, sold. The buyer's name has not yet transpired.

Lord Goschen and various authors, including Miss Mary Cholmondeley, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Mr. E. V. Lucas and Mr. Hall Caine, met together a month ago to try and bring the Times and Publishers dispute to an end. The leading principles of the proposed basis of agreement is to treat books as new till they are five months old, save novels which it is proposed to treat as second hand when four months old The Authors' Society is not prepared to "fetter the discretion of authors" and the Times is willing to "ignore the discourtesy" with which the publishers have treated it and resume the negociations from the point reached on 9th May last. Last Monday the Times devoted an entire page to the names of Baronets, Knights, Colonels, Majors, Captains, Misters and Mrs. and Misses, led by a real live Earl who signed Mr. Henniker Heaton's memorial of support to the Book Club. I doubt if the end of the tedious quarrel is in sight.

Last night at dinner there was a warm discussion arising out of the Lansdown Burglary case. The point raised was this:—If a burglar enter a lady's bedroom at night, and agree to go away on condition that the lady meets him next day and gives him five pounds, is the lady justified, when she keeps the assignation by deputy or in person, in having policemen concealed in the background with the object of capturing the said burglar? The ladies opined that Miss Fox, of the Royal School for Officers' Daughters, was not justified in this proceeding. The men thought that if the burglar, Wilson, was such an ass as to keep the assignation he himself suggested, he deserved to be caught; and they declined to consider the moral aspect of the lady's conduct at all. We left the case at that. So did the burglar: he escaped from custody without making any assignation and though handcuffed, his recapture has not yet been reported.

Mr. Hugh Watt, Radical ex-M. P., was released from Parkhurst prison on Sunday and lost no time in marrying once more Lady Violet Beauchamp, who had some time ago taken his name by deed poll. He was interviewed of course; but the interview produced nothing of greater moment than Mr. Watt's opinion that our prison system is not quite what it should be. Extraordinary the unanimity of opinion there is on this point by experts! Bill Sykes says just the same thing. One can't help feeling that life in prison has some disagreables after all.

It is not so long since the prospect of further investigation into the poor law administration of West Ham led a guardian to commit suicide. An unsuccesful attempt to shoot himself was made by another West Ham guardian on Wednesday. You would remember that a police court enquiry is proceeding connected with coal contracts.

A LYNX HUNT.

IT was a warm still night in the middle of August, we had just finished supper at the ranch. Mike was at the back of the house with the only lantern that was in working order, washing up the plates and cups, and I was smoking my pipe on the gallery steps. It was so dark that every now and then I had to blow the smoke through my nose to make sure that my pipe was alight.

Four or five hounds were lying about, occasionally giving notice of their presence by groaning as they turned over to rest the other side, or thumping on the gallery fl or as they went for an unusually energetic flea.

The silence was intense; now and then a screech owl wailed in the distance, or a frog in the little creek started to clear his throat, but as a rule even the crickets were too lazy to chirp, and the fireflies only flashed their tiny lamps at long intervals.

One could just make out the dark outlines of the steep brush covered hills that enclosed our narrow valley, and the black mass of the thicket below the small field that faced the house—a thicket of shin oak and black haw, and almost every other kind of brush that is hard to get through—a tangle of briars and vines so dense, that in the descriptive language of the country "you couldn't" stick a butcher knife into it.

Suddenly the silence was broken. From somewhere in the centre of the thicket rose the long, lonesome cry of a hound that has discoverd something intere ting, and needs assistance. I recognize old Brenda's voice, and before the echoes have died away down the valley the hounds on the gallery are falling over each other down the steps. They scamper across the little field crash through the old rail fence at the lower end of it and for a few seconds there is silence. Then old Brenda uplifts her mournful voice again; Bachelor's deep roar trembles through the woods; Rummager, Sultan and Duchess own to the line; Mike comes running out with the lantern, and we stand listening eagerly as one musical voice after the other takes up the chorus, while the hounds crash about through the tangled brush.

Presently we hear little Duchess, halfway up the hillside. The others are with her in a moment; the loose rocks rattle down as they work their way to the top, and in another instant the whole pack in full cry is tearing away to the eastward.

It is no use to think of following them across so rough a country on a dark night like this, so all we can do is to stand listening intently and praying that they may "tree" whatever they are after within hearing distance of the house. They would stay half the night at the tree, and the moon will be up in an hour or so; surely nothing that can climb will stay on the ground in front of them for long at the pace they are going.

Away they race for about half a mile and turn slightly to the north, the music dying to a low murmur as they sink into each of the numerous steep gullies, that run into the north branch of the creek, and rising louder and clearer as they drive across the higher ground.

We go through the house and sit on the fence at the back. Although we can see nothing we know just where they are and what they are doing.

Little Duchess, the fastest hound in the pack, is sweeping along about fifty yards in the lead; then come Bachelor, Rummager and Sultan pretty well together, while the ancient Brenda toils along in the rear making more noise than any of them.

Now they are over a mile away, among the post oaks on the Divide, and we can only just hear them; if they cross the ridge it is doubtful if we shall see them again before morning. Fainter and fainter their voices fade away in the distance, and at last we hear them no more.

Mike, who has been intensely excited, utters a terse monosyllable expressive of disgust, and we light up fresh pipes and speculate as to what they can be after. If it is a wolf they are as likely as not to leave the country; it can't be a deer, because old Brenda is much too knowing to run one twenty yards unless it is a cripple and she is told to do so.

Listen! Yes, there is Duchess again, and presently we hear the others. They have gone right round the head of the creek and are coming back toward us on the other side of it.

Nearer and nearer they come, and now something is evidently coming down the steep hillside on the west of the house. We can even hear it panting and the slight rattle it makes as it gets through the fence. The hounds are not far behind, and come tearing down the hill and across the field, and directly that they are all at fault for a moment in the same thicket that they started from.

We are on the gallery again now, and expect every moment to hear the fierce baying that proclaims that the "varmint," whatever it is, has climbed a tree.

But the end is not yet; the hounds are evidently unable to find out which way their chase has gone and crash noisily about through the thicket, giving tongue now and again in an undecided sort of way. At last old Brenda, using the experience gained in many a long run, works out the line, and in another moment they are off again, clambering up the hill in exactly the same place where they climbed it when they first started.

Once on top they race along with a burst of melody for 100 yards or so and then wheel around and come tearing back again, down the hill and on to a little, open, flat close to the house, covered with a dence growth of broom weed. Here they scatter and circle for an instant, and then there is a loud roar followed by a yell of distress from Bachelor, and then all five of the hounds are baying furiously.

Mike bustles out with the lantern and I stop to grab the carbine from its corner and hurry after him, losing both my worn-out slippers on the way.

"What have they got Mike?"

"Sure it's a calf I think, sor," says Mike, who is nevertheless standing at a very respectable distance from the little group that is surging about among the weeds.

I take the lantern from him and this is what I see: Standing with his back arched and his head low, facing first this way and then that, and sometimes making three or four springs at the nearest of his foes, is a large bobtailed cat or lynx. With his ears tucked back close to his skull and every hair on his body erect, his wicked eyes shining green in the light of the lantern, he is an awkward looking customer enough and is really about the size of a small calf.

Whoo hoop! At the well-known cheer the hounds all dash in on him at once. He fights grimly and grandly and perfectly silently; with every move he makes he scores one of the dogs with tooth or claw. Three times he breaks loose from them all, but they are not to be denied, and at last they get him over on his back and with the claws of both forefeet firmly fixed in poor Rummager's nose, and a big piece of one of Sultan's long ears in his mouth, he gives up the battle. The hounds are too tired to worry and quarrel over his remains, but panting and exhausted they lie down by his side and the fun is over.

Fishing.

A BAD START.

THE next day was cloudy and windy, it was my turn for one of the lower beats, so I got to work early. The first five or six pools I fished blank, and did not see any fish moving. The gillie brought the boat up with us; and when I had fished each pool off the bank, I got into the boat and fished the far side from it. I was casting all right now, but it was of no avail, as the fish were not taking. About twelve we got to a deep slow-flowing pool where a large stream joins the river. This stream is about half the size of the river itself, and the pool at the junction has the reputation for holding the biggest fish on the beat. The wind had now got very strong, and the only way to fish this pool was from the boat; so very quietly the boat was taken round the shallow side of the pool to the spit of land between the two streams. I mounted a larger fly, a golden gashawk; and standing up in the stern of the boat began to carefully fish the pool, while the gillie slowly let the boat down. The fish in this pool all lie right against the left bank; as owing to the fact that the river here makes a sharp turn to the right, the main current of the stream impinges on the left bank which is here rocky. Numberless rocks have been broken off this bank by former floods, and now the swirls in the racing water show where they lie below the surface. Some three yards from the bank the current is less swift, and the river deepens rapidly. An ideal place for a good fish.

So it looked that day, as the strong breeze meeting the current made quite a sea. I fished it every inch, dropping my fly an inch or two from the rock and wooking it round into the deep water.

About half way down I got a head and tail rise from a grand fish, who showed me his broad side as he rose, and when hooked went slowly and irresistibly up stream. He was well hooked I felt sure from the way he rose. He had gone some thirty yards up stream at the same slow pace, when there was a shock and I was knocked over backwards into the bottom of the boat, my rod nearly being jerked out of my hand. The fool of a gillie, in his hurry to land me, had run the nose of the boat into the bank at full speed; with the natural result that as I was standing up, he knocked me over. The fish, of course, was gone, the cast had snapped, for one cannot expect single gut to stand a strain like that. My remarks to the gillie are unprintable, but I think he understood that it would be useless to ask me for a tip when I left.

I landed, and gave the pool and my temper half an hour's rest, and then began again. I moved three more fish, one of which I touched; but when evening came I had got nothing to show for my trouble. When I got back to the hotel I found C and M. admiring M.'s catch. He had had the upper beat, the one I had had the day before, and had got four nice fish, the best 13 pounds, which he had hooked in the same swirl in which I had risen and lost the fish through casting badly. He had in fact caught the fish which I should have caught the day before, if I had been able to cast a decent line in the morning. C. had also got a couple of grilse.

The next day at breakfast news came in that the river had risen a foot; and the wise men of the place informed us that if it did not rise enough to bring a fresh run of fish in from the sea we should have no more sport, as all the fish that the previous spate had brought up into our water would now run up to the higher waters. This was cheering; but I was determined to stick to it till my luck changed, so started off as usual. C. did not go out, so I took the upper beat, and was soon putting my rod together opposite the flat rock where the fish had got off before by jumping. There was a nice breeze and alternate clouds and sun, so despite the rising river I hoped I might do something. How different the pool seemed from the last time I had fished it. Then it was with the greatest difficulty that I could reach the rocks in midstream; now I was fishing the far side of them with ease. What an enormous difference a couple of days, practice makes to one's casting. My meditations were interrupted, as my fly swung over where the flat rock used to show, by a boil in the water and a heavy pluck at the fly. The fish was well hooked, and I had mounted a fly on a much larger hook because of the dirty water, so I gave him the butt. I wanted to land him as quickly as possible; as I could see that the river was becoming more and more dirty, so all chance of another fish would soon be gone. He was a nice little fresh run salmon and on my 14-foot rod gave me plenty to do. At last the gaff went home, and I weighed him, seven pounds, a clean run fish, so he must have come straight up to-day since the river rose.

I left the big black gashawk on and fished the pool down again, and then ran down to fish the pool below. Here from the same swirl as before a good fish rose short. I changed the fly to a Jock Scott, and again he came and had a look at it. Another rest and a Ranger came swinging over him. He came at it with a huge splash but missed it. I fished down a little further and then gave it up and went home, as the water had got really thick. The others had got nothing and seen nothing, but Billy M.'s Gillie came in with one he had caught with worm for the table. Billy is a noted chacter round these parts, and a desperate poacher. Last year he was engaged as gillie by the man who rented the water above ours. This gentleman used to send any fish he did not require for himself or his friends to a fishmonger in Dublin, who sent him a cheque every month. One month when he got his cheque, he found that it was for a much larger amount than it should have been, and on looking at it again he discovered that it was made out to Billy. Billy had been fishing with his master during the day, and poaching on his own account at night, and sending his fish to the same fishmonger in Dublin that his master did. Unfortunately for Billy the fishmonger when sending off his monthly cheques had made a mistake, and put Billy's cheque in his master's envelope and vice versa. So Billy had got the sack, and had been taken on by M. on the understanding that whatever poaching he did was done above our water. Whether he kept to his agreement I do not know, but he was a rare good Gillie.

The next morning Billy reported to our great astonishment that the river was fishable though slightly coloured. The general opinion however seemed to be that the fish already in the river had run up, while there had not been enough water to bring up a fresh run from the sea. This did not discourage us, and we all went out. I had to cast all day in the teeth of a furious gale, so strong at times that it was all I could do to get my fly into the water at all. I did not see a fish all day, but M. and C. got a small grilse apiece. The next day I had the upper beat and the water was in the pink of condition if one can apply the term to a river. There was a nice breeze and cloudy sky so if the fish were only there I thought I should do well.

I started by fishing the swirl where M. got the 13 pounder. I had on a big Jock Scott, and fished it deep and slow over the swirl. There was a jerk and a scream from the reel; and before I had time to wink a fresh run grilse had risen, hooked himself, and jumped twice. He was one of the liveliest fish I ever saw, and for the first minute spent more time in the air than in the water. One of his most nerve-racking performances being to allow me to reel him in till he was under the point of my rod, and then to go right across the pool in a series of leaps, each leaps drawing line off the reel with the shrillest of screams. These acrobatic performances however are tiring, and he was soon on the bank, a fresh run grilse 7lbs. This grilse's wild play was rendered still more exciting by the fact that at the moment of hooking him I had begun to sink in the mud, and by the time he was gaffed was in up to my knees in it. So, of course, I was unable to step back, as one does when a fish turns towards one, and had to depend entirely on quick winding to keep a tight line on him.

I was quite pleased with this for a beginning, when I had hardly dared to hope for anything; so fished on up stream with a fresh keenness. I went up about a mile, rising two fish on the way who both came short. I then reached a place where the cattle used to go down to the river to drink. There were two rocks here some way out, the swirl below which was a favourite lie for a fish. These could be reached by wading out up to one's knees and casting a long line. The fly dropped nicely just beyond the swirl, and as it began to swing round there was the vicious pull and rush of a good fish. But there was no answering scream from the reel, something had jammed, and the point of the rod was pulled down and the rod nearly jerked out of my hand. I looked at the reel and saw that the line had got twisted right round the reel. Something had to be done to relieve the tension. The fish was lashing the surface of the water into foam and I knew that my cast would not stand such rough treatment long. So into the deep water I rushed towards the fish, making desperate efforts to free the line. Just as I began to feel I could go on further without starting on a swim down the river, a smothered scream from the reel, which was by this time in the water, told me I had succeeded, and the fish was mine; for he must be very firmly hooked indeed to have stood the skull dragging he had had. I just managed to get back to shallow water, and giving the fish the butt unmercifully soon had him lying on his back. A flash of the gaff as the Gillie struck, and the fish was mine; eight pounds the scale showed him to be. The sun was nice and warm, so I sat and ate my lunch, contented, though soaked through. A little higher up the river a nice grilse rose to the same fly in a still deep pool, and was hooked at the third attempt and duly landed. I had broken my luck indeed, and ate my dinner that night with that feeling of glorious content which only the successful fisherman knows.

M. and C. had likewise done well, so the local wise men had been wrong after all, and the little spate had brought up a fresh lot of fish from the sea. After this my good luck continued, and I had excellent sport; but that three days, run of bad luck will never be forgotten.

AMBERITE AND SMOKELESS DIAMOND IN 2½in. CASES.

FOLLOWING up the idea of repeating previous experiments with variations in the powder used, cartridges were prepared in which Amberite and Smokeless Diamond were used as alternatives for Schultze and E. C. powders respectively. The assumption that the powder charge and shot combinations found to be appropriate for one member of a group of nitros would be equally applicable for other members of the same group, made it unnecessary to repeat the previous experiments for arriving at the charge capable of imparting the right amount of velocity to a given quantity of shot. The preliminary test under laboratory loading conditions cannot of course be dispensed with, since it is always advisable to know beforehand how a powder is behaving under known conditions. The results obtained were as follows:—

AMBERITE, 42grs. and 1⅛oz. No. 6 shot.		SMOKELESS DIAMOND, 33grs. and 1 1/16oz. No. 6.
Distance of Recoil Movement.	Velocity over 20 yards.	Recoil Movement.	Velocity over 20 yards.
1. 10·82 in.	1087 f.s.	1. 9·62 in.	1055
2. 11·00 „	1137 „	2. 9·38 „	1003
3. 11·00 „	1087 „	3. 9·62 „	1040
Av. 10·94 „	Av. 1104 „	Av. 9·54 „	Av. 1033

The Amberite result implies a standard rate of recoil for a 7lb. 4oz. gun.

Smokeless Diamond result implies a standard rate of recoil for a 6lb. 5oz. gun.

The above results show the sample of Amberite to be behaving somewhat on the active side, whereas with Smokeless Diamond, on the other hand, the results are a fraction under par; but in both cases the arithmetical average of the three shots seems less typical of the general behaviour of the two samples of powder used than is the case with the two shots which bear most resemblance to one another. That is to say, the two rounds with Amberite at 1087f.s. velocity, and the two with Diamond at 1055f.s. and 1040f.s. respectively, fully justify the acceptance of these powders for the programme of tests to be undertaken. Three rounds were then loaded with each powder in 2½in. pigeon cases, the charges being those previously ascertained as most suitable in the tests already reported. The system of wadding and charge adopted are here specified in detail:

Amberite 47grs., 1/16in. card, 1/16in. best felt, 1/16in. card, 1⅛oz. No. 4 shot (237 pellets), and 1/16in. card over shot.

Smokeless Diamond, 40grs. 1/16in. card, ⅛in. best felt, 1/16in. card, 1 5/16oz, No. 4 shot (226 pellets), 1/16in. card over shot.

Three shots were fired with each powder from the pigeon-proof barrel, and records for pressure and velocity were duly taken. This gun is not fitted up for the simultaneous registration of recoil, this being a department of wildfowl charge experiments which must be undertaken as a separate investigation. The following records were obtained:—

AMBERITE, 2½in. case, 47grs. and 1⅛oz. No. 4.			SMOKELESS DIAMOND, 2½in. case, 40grs. and 1 1/16oz.
Pressure in tons per sq. in.		Velocity over 20 yds in feet per sec.	Pressure in ton per sq. in.		Velocity over 20 yds in feet per sec.
At 1in.	At 6in.		At 1in.	At 6in.
1. 2·64	1·89	1025	1. 3·50	2·01	1047
2. 3·63	1·95	1070	2. 3·63	1·74	1035
3. 3·50	2·01	1062	3. 2·95	1·74	1035
Av. 3·26	1·95	1052	Av. 3·36	1·83	1039

Here there is every justification for accepting the charge combination arrived at in previous experiments as quite applicable to the powders now under consideration. Considering that the requirements of the wildfowler are so different from those of the pigeon shot, tied down as the latter is by rules and regulations, it seems curious that recognition has never previously been accorded to the clearly superior combinations which are here dealt with. A presure of four tons being permissible in pigeon guns, the records of pressure obtained may be pronounced quite moderate. The velocity is all that the shooter need ask for, bearing in mind the fact that large size pellets of shot will invariably be employed. The standard of velocity laid down, whilst insuring a sufficiency of hitting power at all distances where the charge can be expected to hold together well enough to give a proper pattern is still such that far better patterns can be looked for than would be possible in the presence of an unduly enhanced velocity. The importance of the inter-relation of penetration and pattern is shown in the many inquiries received from sportsmen asking for a test of cartridges which have failed to give satisfactory results in the field. It frequently happens that the shooter who complains of deficient penetration sends along cartridges which give very high striking velocity and proportionately bad pattern, whilst others, who think that the pattern must be bad, are evidently using cartridges which smother their birds with pellets, travelling, however, with a velocity which would be quite suitable for butterfly shooting, but hardly the thing for driven partridges hastened in their flight by a favourable wind. A velocity standardised at 1050f.s., on the basis of a measurement over the first 20 yards of flight, seems to give the best available harmony between pattern and penetration. Intelligently conceived variations, such as reduced charges of shot fired from suitably choked barrels at a sufficiently higher velocity to correct the close-shooting tendency of the gun, give great satisfaction to the user; but such cartridges cannot, on general principles, be recommended for everyday use. The gun must be just right, and a few shots at the plate would be necessary to determine the right conditions of load. Even then special experience is desirable to interpret what patterns may be accepted as right, and what must be regarded as unduly suffering from the enhanced velocity imparted to the shot. Till gun and cartridge testing is carried out much more extensively than at present, the standard conditions derived from the old black powder must continue to guide general practice.

Adopting the above results with No. 4 shot, and recognising that with a suitable pattern this size of pellet will give good results at any distance up to 45 or 50 yards, the shooter must recognise that he has carried the ranging power of a pigeon gun a long way beyond that of the ordinary game gun, in which 1¼oz. is a maximum charge for comfortable shooting, with a medium weight of from 6¾lb. to 7lb. The pigeon gun, with its 7¼lb. of weight to take up the recoil, can be used with 1⅝oz. charges by a man of good physique. An extra half pound of weight would be better; but in justification of the lighter weight is the circumstance that the English pigeons-hooting rules make 7½lb. a maximum value, and shooters must make the best of what they already possess, knowing all the while that the number of high-power cartridges fired in a day will be less than the total used under ordinary game-shooting conditions. For a lighter recoil 40grs. of a 33-grain powder and 1⅛oz. of shot is ready to hand. The following pattern results show how the two compare on the plate:

* Deleted from record for inconsistency with rest of series.

It will be seen that two guns which have figured in the previous tests have now been replaced with the right and left barrels of a Cogswell and Harrison gun. The Lang pigeon gun previously used gave very nice results. The continuity and comparative value of the experiments is sufficiently safeguarded by the use of the Field experimental barrel. That the latter does not introduce abnormal conditions is best shown by shooting in comparison with it a succession of gun makers' guns of which the Lang and the Cogswell and Harrison are meritorious examples. A curious incident arose when the last-named gun was borrowed. In discussing the exceptionally consistent and regular patterns which had been reported in previous tests, Messrs. Cogswell and Harrison expressed the opinion that the Field would be doing useful service if it could convince the sportsman that the patterns recorded were in reality samples of good behaviour and not bad behaviour as the sportman would be sure to assume were the results laid before him as a sample of his own gun's performances. Patterns can, of course, be idealised by careful loading of the cartridges to produce the kind of result demanded. The gun, again can be humoured in the boring to favour pattern at the expense of velocity, but in the interests of real progress it is desirable that the sportsman should not be educated to expect a standard of regularity beyond the limits of practical possibility. In instrumental tests the records show variations in pressure, recoil, and velocity which on paper seem absurdly great to the uninitiated. Considerable experience is necessary to interpret the frequently hidden meaning of the figures obtained, but the golden rule is to consider only the round-number meaning of the figures set forth—in fact, to ignore units and to think only in tens and hundreds.

The following digest of the pattern results already quoted will sufficiently explain their general significance:

	Amberite (226 pellets)	Diamond (226 pellets.)

Av.	159	Av. 134
Percentage equivalents	67 %	..... 64 %
Table value for full-choke results ...	177	 160

These results compare favourably with those previously obtained with other powders. Whether regarded from the point of view of the percentages or actual pellets, it will be seen that the usual result of a pattern lying about midway between half-choke and full-choke has been obtained. The patterns themselves were uniformly well distributed and of good circular form, a merit which is particularly noticeable from the circumstance that every part of the circle seemed approximately as well covered as the other parts, also that the pellets around the circle formed a fairly uniform band, this implying that a 40in. circle would show a nearly similar allowance of pellets for so many square inches.

During the short days now ruling the allowance of time is very short for extending the number of combinations of load to be tried. This must excuse the omission to make any detailed tests in the present connection for determining the relative behaviour of the above charges with a variety of the larger sizes of shot. The time available only allowed for firing five rounds each from the Field barrel, using Amberite and Smokeless Diamond with shot size B, running 80 to the ounce. The same wadding was used as before, and the results can be set out in the following form:

Amberite		Smokeless Diamond.
47grs. and 1¼oz. B size of shot, 110 pellets.		40grs. and 1⅛oz. of B size of shot, 105 pellets.
1. 82 pellets in 30in. circle.		1. 76 pellets in 30in. circle.

5. 72 " "		5. 68 " "
Av. 74 " "		Av. 70 " "
Percentage equivalents	67 %	.....	67 %
Table value for full-choke results	88	.....	79

In each instance the average patterns obtained were nine pellets short of the true full-choke result. With the next show size smaller than B, viz., No. 1, running 100 pellets per ounce exactly full-choke results were scored, using E. C. as propellent. In the present instance this high standard was not attained; but the substantial repetition of the percentages obtained with No. 4 shot indicates that pattern values are uninfluenced by the size of shot used. The E. C. tests suggested that a slight rise of pattern accompanied the use of the larger sizes of pellet. Summing up the two experiences, it seems that the original assumption that a gun shoots true to its boring, whatever the size of shot used in the cartridge, is true within the limits of accidental variations. In conclusion, it may be interesting to refer to an important aspect of the present series of trials. They are being carried out at a time of year corresponding with the season at which wildfowl are usually shot. Results obtained in July and August would not be nearly so useful to the shore shooter, because what gives correct results in the summer might be inappropriate for the damp, cold months of early and middle winter. Moreover, the lighter cartridges being dealt with first, each load is tested at or about the period of its greatest usefulness.—The Field.

BILLIARD QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—What is to be done when the two white balls are touching each other at billiards and the red ball is on the table?

Ought the object ball to be spotted on the centre spot midway between the two centre pockets and the red ball on the billiard spot and the player to play for hand?

[Please consult Rule 36 of the Championship Rules of Billiards which reads as follow: "When the striker's ball touches either or both the object balls, the red must be placed on the billiard spot and the object ball on the spot between the middle pocket and the striker goes on from hand." This rule entirely meets the case. ED.]

REWARDS FOR SHOOTING TIGERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have read "To Quae's" letter in this week's Indian Field but have not been able to reply to it until to-day. The Officer referred to is Mr. R. Shipley, Collector of Coimbatore.

The second letter from him was signed by the Assistant-Collector and I believe that the Collector was aware of the contents of both letters, and that they were sent with his approval.

HIGH VELOCITY.

P. S. My own name is H. C. B. Stone, Chaplain, Waltair.

THE UNITED PROVINCES SHOOTING RULES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I propose to give a brief history of the rules, as they stood, from the time of the passing of Act VII of 1878, (Forest Act) up to the date of the existing rules, with a criticism of the rules as they now stand, and to discuss them (firstly) and more particularly from the point of view of the general public, and (secondly) from the point of view of the hitherto exempted official, as it seems to me desirable that the public generally should be not made aware of the very important changes that have taken place and should be in a position to judge for themselves whether or not their interests have been injuriously affected thereby, and whether the rules, as they stand, do not needlessly restrict and hamper sport for every one except the Gazetted Forest Officer. It may be thought, and I believe the opinion is prevalent, that the interests of the district official and of the private person and of the Military officer run entirely counter to one another, but I shall endeavour to show that such is not really the case. There should, in my opinion, be no insuperable difficulty in the way of framing rules, which would give one and all a fair and reasonable chance of obtaining sport, without unduly favouring any person or class of persons, but granted that their interests do conflict, and assuming that a case had thus been made out for the revision of the rules as they stood up to 1905. I still maintain that that is very different from an admission that the existing rules have provided any remedy at all for the inequalities which previously existed. If anything it was an argument for framing the new rules in such a way as to give one and all fair facilities for sport, instead of (as I contend they do) rendering it next to impossible to be obtained in Government Forests, except at a most prohibitive cost, either by private persons, Military men, district officials, or by other officials, and absolutely preventing it in the case of those who are not in a position to afford the heavy expense now involved, or who, by force of circumstances, are only able to casually visit the Forest, for a day or two at a time. Still less should the rules have been framed, as I hope to be able to show they have been framed, in a such a manner as to practically reserve the Forests for Gazetted Forests Officers, thereby depriving the public generally of the facilities for sport which they have hitherto enjoyed.

After the passing of the Forest Act VII of 1878, apparently the first orders issued by Government dealing with shooting, etc., in reserved forests, were framed under section 25 (1) of the Act and published on the 28th February 1880. They provided that with the previous sanction of the Local Government, the Conservator of Forests might declare any reserved forest or part thereof closed against hunting, shooting and fishing for such period as might be deemed necessary, but subject to the above restrictions, hunting, shooting and fishing were permitted to the public free of cost.

In 1890, the hunting and shooting of tigers and carnivora, during the fire protected season, was provided for on the payment of small fees, and on the 15th March 1895, in supersession of all previous rules, the revised rules came into force. These rules (Rule 11) again recognised the right of the public generally to shoot in Government Forests without payment of any fees, in the season when the forests were not closed for fire protection purposes, but carnivora during the latter period only on payment of small fees. None of the above rules exempted any persons and it was practically left entirely in the power of the Conservator of the Circle in which any particular Forest was situate, to exclude or admit whomsoever he pleased. As a result attempts were made, in 1894-95 to exclude district officials even in the non-fire protected season, and on representations being made rules were framed and certain district officials were declared to be exempt from the prohibitions contained in Rule 2. These rules remained in force without, so far as is known, a single complaint till 1900, when apparently, owing to some informality in them, a revised set of rules, based on those then in force in the Central Provinces, was issued on the 9th July 1900. These latter rules continued the exemptions previously granted to certain officials and even extended them, the reason given being that this was done for the convenience of officers employed in the districts in which forests were situated or whose duties took them to the neighbourhood of forests. A slight and immaterial modification was made in the rules on the 9th April 1901, and previously on the 14th July 1900,—(vide Gazette of the 21st July 1900) officers of the Opium Department had been added to the list of exempted officers.

The above rules remained in force until the 28th June 1905. No serious objections, so far as I am aware, had ever publicly or privately been taken to them and up to that time the public generally could shoot, etc., in Government Forests, in the non-fire protected season, without the payment of any fees, though, in the case of non-exempted persons, a formal permit had to be obtained even for that period. No time-limit was, however prescribed, by the rules and a permit was avaliable for the whole of the Forests of the district, and the number of such permits was practically unrestricted, it being left to sportsmen themselves so to mutually arrange as not to interfere with one another. So far as the fire protected season was concerned the public generally could obtain in passes on the payment of fees and as I have already said certain officials were exempted. The 1905 rules introduced considerable changes, more especially as regards payment by non-exempted persons, official or non-official, for ordinary permits, in the non-fire protected season, and for special permits, in the fire protected season, but made no alterations as regards exempted officials. What the reasons for these changes were I am not aware and as far as I know none have ever been published. The only result was that while leaving the exempted official alone, they restricted the privileges previously enjoyed by the public for years without any serious complaint from any one, and naturally gave rise to the feeling that the Exempted Officer was being still further favoured, and it is by no means improbable that this fact has given rise to the idea which seems to prevail, that it was the District Officer who was the real moving spirit in the matter and who desired to curtail the privileges of the public so as to have the forests entirely to himself. Whether this is the origin of the prevalent idea or not or whether the idea has been ingeniously fostered by others for their own ends, it's an entirely mistaken one as the District Officer never has had any control whatever over the issue of permits, ordinary or special, for Government Reserved Forests, nor has he ever been informed of what permits were applied for, refused or issued, nor of the reasons for refusal, nor of the periods or places for which they were issued, and the entire control and responsibility for the equitable working of the rules as they stood or stand, rested and rests in the hands of the Forest Officer alone, subject under the old rules to the one small check provided (viz. appeal to the Commissioner in the case of cold weather permits only) and which slight check has now been removed by the present rules!

The 1905 rules themselves raised a good deal of discussion and comment, the rules which were specially objected to being Rule 7 (11), concerning the charge for fodder for elephants, and Rule 13 (4), forbidding shooting on foot. The shooting on foot rule existed in the rules prior to 1905, the apparent object being to protect the forests from fire, though I fail to see that the danger was greater or as great from shooting on foot as from shtooning off elephants. Generally the complaint was that shooting was made virtually impossible except for rich men by reason of the expense involved, and by reason of enseless prohibitions, and that the rules were tactlessly and unfairly worked, and above all as I have already said, the feeling was accentuated that inqualities, previously existing, had been made still more pronounced. the whole odium thereof being laid on the exempted District Officials. That the 1905 rules urgently called for revision no fair-minded person would for a moment dispute, and accordingly a Committee was called and held at Naini Tal in May 1906, and the present rules are the result. Whether they have remedied any or all of the evils complained of by the public, or the reverse, I shall when criticising them in detail attempt to show. My view of them (and I know my views are acceptable to some at least of the members of all classes of the community) are that both the 1905 and 1906 rules were unnecessary and uncalled for; that the rules in force up to 1905 had, generally speaking, worked smoothly and without friction, and that granting that exemptions had been too freely given in the past, to the detriment of the public interests, it was quite possible so to alter them in those respects wherein they were shown to be unfair, without altering the main principles and that it is no remedy for existing inequalities to provide fresh and general restrictions of such a nature as to render the Reserved Forests practically closed to all but Gazetted Forest officers and the other few who have the fortune to be exempt under the Rules. Still less, in my opinion, was it desirable to issue rules which must cause friction between the various classes of the community and leave a feeling of soreness and unfairness among all. What the reasons were which rendered it necessary to hamper and restrict the public to the extent they have been, by these rules have not, so far as I know, ever seen the light of day and it is impossible therefore to say whether they were in any respect founded on anything solid or not, and it is, therefore, all the more to be regretted that the facts or reasons on which the Committee based these drastic changes have not been published. I am informed, and believe there is truth in it, that the Forest Dept: made a regular effort to show that game was being exterminated by permit holders or those exempt, which was in my opinion quite untrue. On the whole game is not decreasing at all in Govt: Forests and if it is any particular place the sole reason is collusion between the poacher and the subordinate forest staff. I am confident that I shall be borne out in this opinion by many sportsmen of knowledge and experience both in this and other Provinces.

* * * *

I will now proceed to criticise the Rules themselves from the public point of view.

Rule 2 (4).

This rule, I take it, is intended to prevent any sportsman (who is skilful enough to be able to do so) from spearing "chital" or "parha" from horseback. There are but, few places where such a form of sport is possible, but why it should be considered more objectionable to allow a man to speer a "chital" stag or "parha" stag, by fair riding, than to allow him to approach and shoot one from within a few yards from off an elephant, which is quite possible and common in those forests in which elephants are wild and deer are consequently not afraid of them, I cannot imagine! To my mind the spearing from horseback of "chital" and "parha" is a much higher form of sport, and less cruel, (as fewer wounded animals escape) than shooting them in a beat or from off an elephant, and the restriction appears altogether uncalled for, especially as no one but a good rider and genuine sportsman is ever likely to attempt it and still less to be successful.

Rule 4.

This rule lays down that the Conservator, may, with the previous sanction of Government, prescribe sanctuaries to be kept closed for a number of years. Granted that there is a necessity for providing sanctuaries for herbivorous animals, there can be no such necessity in the case of dangerous animals and carnivora. To preserve them is contrary to a policy frequently expressed and the rule, as it stands, is simply calculated to close considerable areas to the public, against shooting of any kind, though other and ample provisions exist in the rules for the protection of herbivorous animals. In any case the District Officer and residents also might, with advantage, be consulted before sanctuaries are prescribed, as they certainly know, or ought to know, quite as well as any Forest Officer, whether the establishment of sanctuaries is a necessity or not, or is merely suggested with a view to restrict sport.

Rule 5.

In this rule again the power of the Conservator is too absolute and insufficiently defined. As the rule stands Gazetted Forest Officers, being exempt, might in a comparatively short time, shoot the full number of species allowed to be shot. What then would be left for the outside public who would be excluded on the grounds that a sufficient number of particular species had already been shot? Moreover, if there is to be a limit, let there be the same limit for one and all, exempted or otherwise. If I am rightly informed, at present a particular number of animals is allowed in one permit for the same shooting area, and a different number in another permit, for different people and there is apparently no limit for exempted officers. Let the total number of heads to be killed in any particular shooting area during the season be calculated beforehand and published for general information, and let the number of passes or exempted persons able to shoot also be calculated, which can easily be done, and let the total be divided among the lot on a fairly liberal scale, as it frequently happens that some are unable or else do not care to shoot up to the limit of herbivorous animals allowed. Lastly let it be made clear that the Conservator has no power whatever to restrict the number of carnivora and dangerous animals to be shot, for, as the rule stands, he undoubtedly can by so doing, very much restrict sport.

Rule 6.

In this rule, four classes of permits have been provided for. Permit A is for 15 days or less, and apparently includes hunting, shooting and fishing of all kinds allowed by the rules, but I am credibly informed that it has been ruled by a Forest Officer that even when a person takes out a permit under form A, for 15 days, if he wishes to shoot birds also, he must take out a further permit in Form C and pay the fees thereon. Surely this was never intended by the rules, and the greater includes the less; but if this ruling is correct instead of 10 Rs. for a 15 days' permit per gun Rs. 10—Rs. 5 would have to be paid for the same period. an altogether unnecessary and excessive addition to the already heavy fees.

Rule 7 (4 and 5.)

In these rules again too much power is, in my opinion, given to Forest Officers. We have had instances recently published in the papers, in which if the facts stated were true, and they were never contradicted, the Forest Officers concerned, to say the least, exceeded their powers and yet under rule 7 (5), on the mere opinion of the Forest Officer, and so far as the rules say, it may only amount to a suspicion a sportsman, who has been put to considerable trouble and expense, is liable to be turned out at a moment's notice without the slightest hope of redress, by way of appeal, to any superior and independent Officer.

Rule 7 (8).

The wording of this rule seems to be faulty. As it stands the Forest Officer when issuing a permit has to include every species of animal or bird allowed to be shot at. Surely the simple way is to rule that the permit holder shall not shoot or allow to be shot at any animal or bird the killing of which is expressly prohibited by the terms of the permit!

Rule 7 (9).

As I have shown under Rule 5, and the remarks equally apply to this rule, the Forest Officer can restrict the number of carnivora and dangerous animals allowed to be shot. Doubtless the rule is intended specially to apply to deer antelope and even particular species of birds which it may be desirable to preserve, but it should be made clear that it is only so intended.

Rule 7 (10).

Here again, in my opinion, too much power is given to the Forest Officer. If a man is prepared to pay for the elephants he wishes to take into a forest, up to a reasonable number, and the question of what is reasonable depends on circumstances which vary for particular jungles of which the Forest Officer is by no means always the best judge, why should he not be allowed to do so? The fees are more than sufficiently heavy and he is not likely to take in one more than is absolutely necessary to procure sport for himself and party, but still it is left to the Forest Officer to decide the matter for him! Without a reasonable number of elephants in certain jungles, no expectation of sport is possible, and if the Forest Officer is to be allowed to limit the number as he likes, he can effectually keep the sportsman away. The same remarks apply to retainers and followers. I presume "shikaris" and beaters would come under those heads and I have heard of a permit being issued under which all followers were prohibited! If this be taken literally even a private servant could not be taken into the forests, but if it be only intended to apply to "shikaris" and beaters even then it is an unfair restriction. What would be an unreasonable number of elephants or beaters or "shikaris" for one jungle would be quite a reasonable number for another jungle. It altogether depends on circumstances, but it does not seem desirable to allow a Forest Officer to have the uncontrolled decision of the matter on behalf of the sportsman. Surely the sportsman in his application might be directed to state the number of "shikaris" and beaters he wished to take with him when applying for a permit, and if the Forest Officer had any objections thereto he could state them in writing, and allow the person concerned an opportunity of stating his side of the case and a settlement might be arrived at before the period for shooting commenced.

In my opinion this charge is altogether excessive and calculated to make shooting, especially of carnivora, next to impossible.

Under the ordinary grazing rules, if elephants are grazed in the forests for a whole year, one pays Rs. 60 or about Re. 1 annas 6 a week, or say 3 annas a day; if for a month Rs. 7 are charged or about annas 4 a day, if for a day 8 annas. Why on earth when they are taken in for purposes of sport and when a heavy charge is already made for the permit itself, are they charged for at such high rates? In almost every district in these provinces, more especially in the Terai, where there is heavy grass, the shooting of carnivora at least, without a large number of elephants, is a practical impossibility. The cost of elephants—of "shikaris"—of animal to tie up—of beaters—added to numerous other incidental expenses, makes the shooting of carnivora or other animals, for one and all of us, quite sufficiently expensive as it is. With this rate in force and no elephants allowed free under an ordinary permit in Form A, it will be more so. In fact to the majority it will be almost an impossibility. In other words the public will be unfairly restricted thereby in opportunities for shooting, and the Forest Officer will have the jungles more than ever to himself!

Again in the second part of this rule it is laid down that the charge for elephants and the permit fee shall be paid in advance. This rule seems to me to be altogether unnecessary, especially in the case of officials and civil and military residents of a district, who are well known to the Forest Officer, and who are not likely to, and could not if they wished, evade payment. It is next to impossible for any official to determaine with certainty three months beforehand if he will be able to shoot on a particular date or not. Even if he is able to get a permit at all he will have to pay heavy fees in advance and at the last moment his official engagements may prevent him going. He is not under the rules allowed to transfer his permit and no provision whatever has been made for refunds, and he would thus be heavily fined for no fault of his own. Supposing too he had to leave the jungle after a few days. Nevertheless he would have had to pay the full fees in advance and would have no redress. The fees for elephants at least, should only be levied for the actual number of days they are used, and if used for a less number of days than originally intended the difference should be refunded. I know as a fact that under the 1905 rules, a permit was obtained and the Forest Officer held that the person concerned must pay the full fees for 15 days for himself and the elephants he desired to take with him, even though he was only able to shoot for five days instead of 15. As a matter of grace this rule was not in the particular instance enforced but it may be in future with the only possible result of restricting sport.

This rule, as it stands, is not as clear as it should be. As I read it originally every person who accompanied a permit holder had to pay a fee of Rs. 10 and such indeed has been ruled to be the case. Under the old rules a "free" limit of three friends accompanying a permit holder was prescribed. To allow at least one or possibly two friends "free" to a permit holder is reasonable and fair, as few of us derive any pleasure from shooting alone, but now that each and every friend has to be paid for the expense in every way is far greater than ever and shooting is thereby automatically restricted.

Again the part of this rule which lays down that a period of 15 days shall elapse between the grant of two successive permits, in the same area, seems objectionable. My first impressions were that this period of grace would apply to all, whether exempted officials or not, and that it was devised either in the interests of game preservation, or to restrict the public, or both. In any case, I was and still am of opinion, it is quite unnecessary, as the Forest Officer has already more than enough power for preservation purposes, and it is not desirable to increase his powers of restriction. It seemed to me also to be contrary to the policy of Government openly expressed, as it would tend to protect carnivora and dangerous animals, and that with the power already given the Conservator of dividing forests into shooting areas, which were sure to be divided according to the features of each particular district in such a way as to restrict sport, the possibility of obtaining sport would be still further unnecessarity reduced. I find, however, that I was wrong in my surmises and that the real object was to provide a period for the Gazetted Forest Officer, and exempted officers, and those taking out a Rs. 100 permit, wherein to shoot, without disturbance. I can find nothing in the construction of the original rules which gives the Rs. 100 permit holder and the exempted officer this right, and I doubt if the public are aware of it, but so it has been ruled. Now what will the effect be? everyone knows that in average districts there are only three or four jungles worth shooting in at all, especially for carnivora. In the district, I am at present in, the whole forest area has been divided into three blocks, one and all of them far larger than is necessary. Whereas in some districts the areas have been made too small. They extend, at least as regards two of them, over many miles. Two only of them are of any use at all. There will be practically no demand for the worthless one, as there are but few animals in it and the chance of getting tigers and panthers of any animals therein, is exceedingly small, and many of us care only for the pursuit of Carnivora and dangerous animals. There will thus be virtually only two areas available. The shooting period nominally commences from the 15th October. As a matter of fact it is dangerous to health to enter the forests before the middle of November—in many places December—and useless to do so, as the jungle is too thick for sport. The forests are automatically closed by the 30th June, by which time the rains have ordinarily commenced, and no one shoots them There is thus a period, say from the 15th November to 30th June, available for shooting, or seven and a half months (225 days roughly), and it will only be possible for the public to shoot on 112 days, or for seven periods of 15 days and one short period of seven days. Not more than eight permit holders can therefore visit each of these two desirable jungles or 16 in all, and for the rest of the time the Gazetted Forest Officer and Exempted Officer and Rs. 100 permit holder (if any) will have them to themselves. Again the 15 day periods must either be (1) periods of grace or (2) permit periods. There is nothing, so far as I read the rules, to prevent a Forest Officer taking the jungles during a "Permit period." As a fact I know it has been done. The result is that the Forest Officer can shoot for any period of 15 days, and for the subsequent 15 and preceding days, and no outsider could thus get into the forests for 45 days! What could be done for one area could be done for all and where then will the public come in? If there periods of grace are intended for Rs. 100 permit holders and exempted officers they should be restricted to them otherwise they can keep everyone else out. Again Government has held in the case of Exempted Officers forest or otherwise as follows.

"Residents of a district in which Government forests are situate who take out an annual permit on a fee of Rs. 100 Rule 11, and Gazetted Forest Officers within their charges exempted under Rule 12 (1), from payment of fees, may apply for permission to hunt, shoot and fish in a shooting area for a period not exceeding 15 days, limiting themselves to two elephants. These requests will be dealt with along with the requests for a permit in Form

A in order of priority of application. If holders of a permit under Rule 11, or officers exempted under 12 Rule (1), wish to take in any friends intending to hunt, shoot or fish or more than two elephants, they must, as laid down in Rule 11 (2) apply for a permit in Form A, paying for the persons accompanying them the fees laid down in Rule 9 and for each elephant in excess of two the charge laid down in Rule 7 (11)."

Now it seems to me that this gives Rs. 100 permit holders and Exempted Officers the right to apply for a permit, in a permit period and also the right to shoot in a period of grace, and it seems obvious that the Forest Officer being the person who grants the permits can always insure his application being the first received. This order must apply to such permit periods as it has already been held that Rs. 100 permit holders and Exempted Officers can shoot in periods of grace, and they, except as specified in the rule quoted above, require no permits for such periods and are exempt from fees. Such being the case it could easily be so arranged by Exempted Officers and Rs. 100 permit holders to exclude the public! Again another difficulty arises. Rule 9 distinctly lays down that not more than one permit in Form A shall be granted for the same period in the same shooting area, and fifteen days shall elapse between the grant of two successive permits in the same area. It seems to me, therefore, that if an exempted officer or Rs. 100 permit holder takes a jungle during a period of grace, for 15 days, and wishes to take a friend or friends with him, that as he will have to obtain a permit in Form A, either the rule that two successive permits on the same area are not permissible will be broken or the Forest Officer will be forced to rule that the Exempted Officer and Rs. 100 permit holder must shoot alone for that period, which is absurd! Again I am aware of an instance in which the Forest Officer has taken a shooting area for himself in a "pass period" and yet has himself broken the rule that not more than one permit shall be granted for the same period in the same area, by allowing another person to shoot in the same area under a permit in Form A. I argue that as the Forest Officer is not shooting in a period of grace, he must be shooting in a permit period, under a permit granted by himself to himself. How then can he allow under the rule anyone else to shoot in the same area? Still further I am aware that he offered another portion of his shooting area on a permit in Form A., to a third person not exempted. If the offer had been accepted there would have been certainly two permits in Form A. in force at one and the same time, in the same shooting area, not to mention that taken out by himself. Surely this, if it shows anything, shows the absurdity of the rule and also the way in which the rules framed by Government can be and are worked by the Forest Officer who is responsible for their administration! Again if the area as the Forest Officer evidently thinks it is, is large enough for three parties to be shooting in, at one and the same time, how comes it that when forming the shooting areas he made the whole of this area into one? Is it not desirable that before shooting areas are constituted the District officials and the public should be in some way or other consulted on the subject, and do not the other facts set forth provided an irrefutable argument for a right of appeal from the Forest Officer's decision to some independent officer? Lastly it should be made clear how many areas Forest Officers can take for themselves at the same time. I have known of cases in which practically the whole of two Divisions has been reserved by them. What with 15 day periods of grace if only two Forest Officers, the Conservator, and Deputy Conservator, take each one or more areas simultaneously or for successive periods of 15 days, they really close practically the whole of the Division to the public. For the shooting of carnivora March is too early in most places in these provinces; June is too late with the result that for the only time worth anything the public can be entirely excluded.

Rule 11.

In my opinion this rule is also objectionable. It is apparently framed for the benefit of the Rs. 100 pass holder and if the conclusions I have come to above are correct, he certainly does seem to have got in some ways more than is desirable and in otheas less. As regards the non-official resident if the view I have taken is correct he is unduly favoured. As regards the official resident no district officer or official, whatever the opinion may be to the contrary, can afford the time to be constantly in the forests or to be always shooting. At the most he could ordinarily expect to get to them for ten days, two or three times a year. Under the annual permit he would pay Rs. 100 and get two elephants free. For three special permits he would pay $3 \times 10 + 1$ rupee per day for his elephants or say two elephants for ten days = Rs. 50. Total Rs. 90. Obviously, therefore, he would lose Rs. 10 by taking out a Rs. 100 permit and moreover as two elephants are of no real use for shooting purposes in most jungles, he would have to pay for the extra ones and also for friends with him and therefore he can derive no advantage from an annual permit! The conclusion is that the fee demanded is excessive, but that annual permit holders should be restricted to periods of grace so as not to prevent the general public from obtaining permits in Form A, during the permit periods. Under the old rules in force prior to 1905, even with the numerous exemptions then existing, the number of non-exempted persons shooting in this district, as can easily be proved, in the non fire protected season, was very largely in excess of what it can ever be under existing rules, which have so restricted the areas and periods for the public, and yet a portion of the public is apparently still under the delusion that 1906 rules have benefited them, because exemptions have been done away with!! Again look at the note to Rule 11. Apparently this note is intended to enable the Forest Officer to prevent a Rs. 100 permit holder from sendidg in a "shikari" on a pad elephant in a period of grace, or in an untaken up forest, unless he is there himself, e. g., suppose the Superintendent of Police or Joint Magistrate takes out a Rs. 100 permit and is in camp ten miles away, and wants to send a "shikari" to look for tracks and tie up he is debarred from doing so, which seems to be an altogether unnecessary restriction Rule 1, of the rules, prevents any ordinary permit holder, from sending in "shikaris" before his period begins, but why should the Rs. 100 permit holder's facilities for sport be limited to those very days when he can himself be present. He may desire to shoot in the forests during a period of grace and it may suit his work to camp some way off them, and to take an odd day in them, when he gets any reliable information, but under this rule unless he is present himself all the time in the Forests, he may not send a tracker to get him that information!!

Rule 12 (1).

Under this rule, and since the rules were originally published Government has ruled, by G. O. No. 548—XIV—31 of the 18th September 1906, that Collector and Deputy Commissioners of districts in which Forests are situate, as well as the Superintendent of the Dun, are Gazetted Forest Officers within the meaning of the Rules. Apparently this conclusion has been based on the fact that many Gazetted Forest Officers are subordinate in so far as the working of some of the rules under the Forest Act is concerned, to District Officers in Forest Districts, and possibly also to the fact that such District Officers as are concerned with the working of the Forest Rules (as all of them are) are forest officers of gazetted rank, within the meaning of the definition of "Forest Officer" in Act VII of 1878, and it was therefore thought undesirable to exclude them and at the same time to exempt their subordinates, though as I have already explained so far as the wording of the Forest shooting and fishing rules is concerned Forest Officers never have been in the least subject to the control in any shape or way of the Collector or Deputy Commissioner, whatever the prevailing idea may be. In concluding this portion of my criticism it may not be out of place to give the public an idea of the advantages (!!) they have gained under these rules. I give below a table comparing the different rules as applied e. g., to a party of three guns and 12 elephants on a Christmas shoot in reserved forests for ten days.

	Under the rules in force up to 1905, which were never objected to by anyone.	Under the 1905 Rules.	Under the 1906 Rules now in force.
Cost of permit.	Nil.	Rs 10 (or possibly Rs. 30 as the Rule is not clear).	Rupees Thirty.
Elephant fees.	Nil.	Re. 1 per elephant per day. Rs. 120.	Re. 1 per elephant per day. Rs. 120.
Period for which permit could be obtained.	Whole cold weather.	One month.	Fifteen days. Subject to the 15 day periods of grace. One permit blocks any area for 45 days.
Area for which permit could be obtained.	Whole Forest Division.	Whole Forest Division excepting sanctuaries (if any).	One area fixed by the Conservator—large or small as he chooses.
Appellate authority.	Divisional Commissioner.	Divisional Commissioner.	Conservator.
Number of heads.	Unlimited.	Restricted (if necessary).	Restricted (1) by the area limit, (2) by the Forest Officer in the permit, apparently just as he chooses and on no fixed and known scale.

The net result is that you pay certainly not less, if not more, than under the 1905 Rules, concerning which such an outcry was raised on the score of excessive fees, for a shorter period and for a much smaller area, not to mention the other disabilities pointed out!! To but few amongst us is the question of fees a matter of indifference. I have examined, so far as I could obtain them, the shooting, etc. rules existing for every province in India, and for Native States, and in not one single case can I find an instance of the fees being anything approaching so high or the restrictions so numerous as in these rules. To the private person, subaltern and poorer officials whose means are limited, more especially in the case of the hard worked Police Department and miserably paid officers of the Opium Department, these rules are tantamount to the almost entire suppression of big game shooting. In the case of a Railway, Canal or Public Works Engineer whose duties may take him throughout the cold weather at intervals near Government Forests the same will be the result. Under the old rules, i.e., prior to 1905, he could get a free permit for the whole division for the whole cold weather. Now if he wants to shoot for one day he has to try and take out a 15 day permit (which, if obtained, also blocks the same area to the public for 145 days), and then very probably will not get it! If it be argued that the rules have been framed in the interests of sportsmen is general, and for the protection of game, I would reply that though I admit the principle, the way in which it has here carried out, will not effect that object, and that many of the restrictions are uncalled for and unnecessary. It is, in my opinion, nonsense to say that sportsmen, and so far as my experience goes there are few who are not sportsmen in the real sense of the word, injure shooting or can shoot out the vast Government forests. On the contrary they tend by keeping down vermin such as wild dogs, hyænas, cats, etc. and also by shooting panthers and tigers, to do far more good than harm, to herbivorous animals and feathered game. The real "poachers" are the above mentioned animals, whose chances of running riot have been materially enhanced by these rules, and the low caste native, who, unmolested by subordinate forest officials, may often with their active connivance and assistance shoots in the forests, over water holes and salt licks, and in the rainy season, and who generally speaking, leaves no trick untried to shoot, trap or somehow kill animals at all times and seasons—of all ages and sexes—mature or immature—in or out of breeding seasons in all places, and who alone can be repressed by the active assistance of the district officials, whose interests in game preservation in the Government forests has to a very great extent, if not entirely so, been destroyed by the recent rules.

* * * *

I will now endeavour to put forward very briefly the case of the hitherto Exempted Officer whose privileges have been taken away by these rules. I do not wish to unduly dwell on the subject or to give it a greater prominence than it deserves, as I am convinced that the rules as they stand unfairly restrict sport for the public, and are open to grave abuses and cannot succeed in practice. But as a matter of common fairness the hitherto exempted official has a right to be heard, even though it be granted that his interests (which I do not for one moment admit) really conflict with those of the military man and non-official. The main object of my note is to invite criticism of the rules from any persons interested in them, whether official or otherwise—civilian or military—hitherto exempted or not, but it may be as well to state at this point that I personally being one of those falling within the definition of "Gazetted Forest Officer" have "no axe of my own to grind" and seek only, for the public benefit, to have removed all that I consider to be an unnecessary restriction on sport. The first exemptions, of which I am aware, were made by Government in 1895 on the grounds that the rules were needlessly exclusive, and included.

(a) Commissioners of Divisions and superior officers of the Revenue Department.
(b) The Conservator of the Circle.
(c) The Magistrate and Collector of the District.
(d) Assistants to the Collector, including Deputy Collectors.
(e) District Superintendents of Police.

In 1899 the exemptions were extended to officers of the Imperial and Provincial Civil Service, Forest officers, and Gazetted Officers of the Public Works, Police, Medical and Survey Departments, and the rule distinctly laid down that they were made for the convenience of officers employed in the districts, in which the forests are situated, or whose duties took them to the neighbourhood of forests. In 1900 officers of the Opium Department were added to the list and when the rules were revised in 1905, no changes were made in this respect, and so far as I am aware, all during these 11 years, no public complaints were ever made that the exemptions were excessive, or that they had resulted in the exclusion of others less fortunate. The principle of exemption has been recognised in every province in India, and even extended from time to time by the Government of these provinces, which it hardly would have been had Government any reason to believe that by so doing it was acting unjustly to others. It was not till after the 1905 Rules came into force that we heard anything on the subject and even then only privately, and I cannot imagine what happened between the issuing of the 1905 Rules and those of 1906, to render a complete reversal of policy necessary, so much so that only Gazetted Forest Officers and the British Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers of a particular Gurkha Regiment were declared exempt! It is true that Government has since been pleased to hold that Collectors and Deputy Commissioners of certain districts are Gazetted Forest Officers within the meaning of the Rules, but the original intention was to exclude them also. If the reasons which were held formerly to be adequate for granting and extending these privileges, both in this province and other provinces have ceased to exist surely the officers affected or the public might have been informed fo them, but, so far as I am aware, they have not been and it remains only a matter of conjecture what the real reasons, if any, are. Possibly the idea may have prevailed that these privileged officers had abused their privlleges, but if so, at least in common fairness, they might have been informed of the grounds for this belief, and been given a chance of refuting them, for, as I have already said, whatever may be the opinion to the contrary, neither the District officer nor any single person of these excempted (except Forest Officers themselves and at one time the Commissioner so far as appeals to him were concerned) had anything what-ever to do with the working of the rules or the issuing or the refusing of permits, or were ever even consulted or kept informed on the subject and if the rules were worked unfairly in their favor those responsible for their working are alone to blame. No exempted official desires to have a monopoly of the Government Forests, but surely it is going to the opposite extreme, after they have enjoyed the privilege for years, to exclude them altogether, for now many of them, who can only be for a day or two at a time, passing through the forests, in the course of their duties, are debarred from shooting even a single peafowl or partridge, because of the heavy expense involved or because of periods of grace in which only Exempted Officers and Rs. 100 permit holders can shoot, or because permits is Form A, or some other form, have already been issued for areas far larger than are necessary for one person's sport at least in the non-fire protected season. Again these District Officials whose duties take them constantly into the neighbourhood of the forests, are perhaps, if possible in still worse plight. For any shooting they can get I have shown that a Rs. 100 payment is far too heavy. They cannot afford it and it would not be worth it if they could, with the result that they are altogether deprived of an innocent, nay rather of what has been recognised by Government itself as a very useful pursuit. The result is that a very great feeling of discontent and soreness is certain to be caused among these officials, and it is by no means improbable that it will result is friction between the various classes of the community which cannot be to the public advantage. Surely as these officers have an indirect if not a direct interest in the forests, as part of their administrations some provision on somewhat favourable terms a least, might have been made for them, whereas they are in my opinion, worse off on the whole than if they had never been exempted at all!

The District Official's lot, (I refer solely to the subordinate officials as the District Magistrate and Collector being a Gazetted Forest Officer within the meaning of the rules, is not affected) is not always a happy one and the tale of his work and the enormous nature of his duties tends ever to increase and if one of the few recreations, useful, not only as a means of recruiting his health, but also in acquiring a knowledge of his district and of the people and their language, and of getting himself known by them, all of which are valuable assets from an administrative point of view, is taken away from him or rendered almost impossible to obtain, the effect will, I imagine, be detrimental to the services as a whole in more ways than one.

It is laid down in the Forest Manual that all distinctions and all practices calculated to convey the impression that Civil and Police Officers have no concern with Government work in the Forest Department should be discouraged, but the present rules, so far as those officials are concerned, hardly appear to be in accordance with those principles. Lastly has it never occurred to the public that the only persons who can possibly prevent poaching or do anything really effectual towards the preservation of game whether in Reserved Forests or elswhere are the District Officer, the Superintendent of Police and their subordinate officials? All the Forest Officers and all the shooting rules in existence are powerless to prevent poaching or to really protect game without their active assistance. It is a matter of common knowledge to all who have any real experience of forests, that poaching even in those districts in which the district officials take the greatest interest in preservation, so far as their duty to Government, and the public, allows them, goes on with the active connivance of the low paid subordinate Forest Officials, who derive considerable profit therefrom. Personally I have on numerous occasions been so informed by superior Forest Officers themselves and I have had proofs of it. A female "chital" in this district is worth for skin and flesh Rs. 3—at stag from Rs. 3 to Rs. 5 as horns are a valuable commodity—a "sambar" hind is worthRs 6 to Rs. 8 and a "sambar' stag Rs. 10 to Rs. 12 and an average pig Rs. 6 or Rs. 7. These figures are not imaginary, but have been ascertained by enquiry from time to time from professional shikaris and those holding licenses under Form XI of the Arms Acts. The temptation to shoot in the Government Forests is therefore great. The risk, especially when the forest subordinates are acting in connivance, is not at any time very great and it will be absolutely nil unless you have a District Officer and Superintendent of Police and other District Officials fairly frequently in the neighbourhood of the forests and bent on preserving game so far as it is desirable it should be preserved. Let them but once show they are indifferent to preservation or let them but give the slightest hint they no longer take any interest in its preservation in Government Forests and in a short time the rules for sanctuaries, for restricting the number of heads shot by genuine sportsmen (not by pot-hunters), etc, etc., will be absolutely ineffectual and game instead of increasing will diminish. Granted even that these rules have been framed solely with the laudable object of giving the public greater facilities for sport and to protect game for that purpose, they will themselves defeat this very object by alienating the sympathies of all those now placed in such a position that a reasonable hope of getting sport for themselves and their friends at a reasonable cost has entirely disappeared.

TOLLYGUNGE STEEPLECHASES.

First Day, Tuesday, 1st January 1907.

THE proceedings were more remarkable to-day for the number of accidents than for the quality of the sport, though in the Pony Hurdles we saw a good finish between Mistlebird and Lady George and a dead-heat for second place between Kipling and Olynthus in the Grand National which was won comfortably by Mr. A. A. Apcar's Seclusion. We allude to the racing among our Sporting Notes and append herewith the results:—

THE PONY STEEPLECHASE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A handicap for Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-2, and other ponies 14-1 and under. About 2½ miles.

At the home turn Mistlebird began to improve his position and Energy fell. Mistlebird led them over the water the second time and there Lady George got up to him and a change of places down the far side found her leading with Zig Zag, Good Chap, Bellis and Mistlebird next in order; Envious clean out of it. Time—5mins. 36⅕secs.

THE TRIAL CHASE PLATE.—Rs. 1,500 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A steeplechase for horses which have not won a steeplechase value Rs. 2,000 or upwards since 31st March 1904. W. A. and C. raised 21lbs. About 2½ miles.

At the bush fence on the far side Coronet came a cropper and brought down Craig Senator was in front coming round the turn for home but Loch Lochie had him safe and won easily, Wales running into second place 100 yards from the post. Won by six lengths; twenty lengths between second and third. Time—5min. 19⅖secs.

The start was twenty minutes behind scheduled time, owing, we presume, to the late arrival of the Viceregal party. They were despatched in straggling order, Thomond and Olynthus showing the way; the two were abreast on the far side, with Kipling and Baron II next. They came at the water with lots of pace on Olynthus, Thomond, Kipling, Baron II., and Seclusion taking it in the order named. Aberfoyle was pulled up opposite the stand. There was not much incident till Greenstone fell at the six furlongs, and Look Out fell shortly afterwards. Olynthus and Kipling were ahead as they got into the straight; but Seclusion soon passed them and won by a length and a half; Olynthus and Kipling dead heating for second shop, twenty lengths between them and Thomond the rest filtering in at long intervals. OLDEST CERTIFICATED OPTICIANS IN INDIA.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

Many Children suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The Great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Our Ophthalmic Department is in charge of a London Eyesight Specialist holding the Diploma of the British Optical Association.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For some years past Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India has been looked upon as the most convenient and helpful Map of the Indian Empire extant. It possesses many points of superiority and convenience; the information is exhaustive, every name mentioned in the Government Survey being included. The great convenience of the Index of 10,000 names has always been keenly appreciated; it has, therefore, been a source of great regret to the proprietors that they have been forced to allow the Map to remain out of print for a considerable time on account of political changes in the internal provinces of India. The moment the new boundaries of Bengal were settled, fresh plates were put in hand, and the publishers are now pleased to announce the third edition of this important Map as ready for sale.

The following are brief particulars—

Size of plate, 38" × 34". Scale, 70 miles = 1 inch.
Mounted on Linen and folded, in cloth case, with Index of 10,000 names	Rs. 5-8-0
Mounted on Linen and Rollers, Varnished, with Index in book-form ...	,, 6-8-0

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 14th December 1906.

SANDOWN.

A HOME week so far as the majority of sportsmen were concerned wound up fitly enough for the Metropolitan brigade, as from Gatwick to Sandown is not a far cry, though the change of line spoils the chance of a spell at the seaside, and if the National Hunt wished for a vote of thanks they might more opportunely link Lingfield with Gatwick, while Kempton, Sandown, and Hurst Park would form a nice handy week. The executive are to be congratulated on a capital meeting, the attendance, for the time of year, being a particularly good one. The going, a bit hard on the surface, was soft enough for anything, fields ruled well, and with the success of five out of the six favourites, backers came very near sweeping the board, while falls were fortunately few and far between.

The clearer atmosphere at Sandown on Saturday morning was an improvement on the first day's murky atmosphere, but owing to a variety of changes the second half of the short winter day proved the antithesis of the first, the sky darkening and a cold rain making the afternoon decidedly moist and unpleasant, while the wind was a bit searching. Doubtless the Crystal Palace attraction accounted for the somewhat poor attendance, while the going got a bit greasy, and fields for some reason or other were not quite up to the Sandown standard. However, backers had no cause to complain.

SANDOWN HANDICAP STEEPLE CHASE—Of 200 sovs; second receives 15 sovs; about three miles and a half.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

The twenty-four games played in the big leagues on Saturday furnished only a moderate total of goals, the Southern League teams finding it particularly difficult to net the ball. Seventeen goals in seven games, though better than the previous week, is not satisfactory, and compares unfavourably with the 32 scored in the ten First Division games, and favourably with the 18 in seven contests in the Second Division. In the S. L. only two home sides obtained two points, two visiting teams won, and three games were drawn. The winning elevens claimed 10 goals, the losers 3, there were 4 in the drawn games, and a half-dozen of the fourteen teams engaged failed to score. In the First Division of the League seven home teams won and there were three drawn games. Twenty-three goals were obtained by winning teams, 5 by the defeated sides, 4 in the drawn games, and four teams did not score. In the Second Division of the League six home teams won and one went down before their own supporters. The winning teams scored 15 goals and the losers 3, only four teams being unsuccessful in their endeavours to locate the net.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

There were some Southern League surprises, Norwich City providing the chief one of the afternoon by going to Brighton and defeating the home team by two clear goals. As the East Anglians lost last season by the odd goal in three in the corresponding game they have gained a couple of points. This is their second successive away win, and the long arm of coincidence is shown in the fact that they have lost their last two home engagements. This is Brighton's second reverse this season on their own ground, Watford having defeated them 3—0 on 13th October. Southampton find Park Royal a happy hunting ground. Last year they easily beat the Rangers, and on Saturday they repeated their win, although only by the odd goal in three. Thus have Queen's Park falsified the hopes raised by their recent improved form, while Southampton enjoyed the felicity of placing to their credit their second away win. To the supporters of the Rangers the game was disappointing, and the result most depressing. One of the best performances of the afternoon stands to the credit of Brentford, who picked up their second away point at Fratton Park, greatly to the confusion of the prophets, who foretold their defeat. Seven teams had previously visited Portsmouth, and of these only the champions brought away a point, a fact which emphasises the excellence of Brentford's latest exploit. Another good performance is that of Luton, who converted a two clear goals defeat of last season at Plymouth into a goalless draw, this being the more remarkable because it followed on the loss at home against New Brompton.

There is no doubt as to the earnestness of Fulham. They had not been too convincing against Watford and the Rangers at home, but sandwiched between these was their record score of the season against Northampton, and on Saturday they chose Bristol Rovers as the side against which to register their most pronounced win in the present tournament at Craven Cottage. Up to a certain point the Rovers did fairly well, but when the champions had taken their measure the visitors were thoroughly outplayed. There is no shadow of doubt as to Fulham's superiority, and the score of 3—0 does not flatter them in the slightest degree. There were more goals at Leyton, and as the home team claimed three of the five, Millwall, who have not had Dame Fortune on their side to date, went away empty-handed. As this was Leyton's first win at home since 13th October, it was very welcome, but Millwall would not have had more than their deserts if they had halved the points. At New Brompton, West Ham. did well to share the honours with the home side, who are a much better team than is suggested by their place in the table. Of their last six matches away from home West Ham have drawn five, and only twice have they failed to score on opponents' grounds.

Fulham, who have played more matches than any other club, have now a strong lead, and the other noteworthy leature about the subjoined table is the manner in which Southampton are advancing :—

LEAGUE I.

December has so far been a most unfortunate month for the Arsenal. They began inauspiciously by losing their first home match, and they next have the worst away defeat of the season inflicted upon them. Birmingham, who had won six home matches off the reel, were a long way ahead of their rivals so far as forward play was concerned. The virility in the attack was combined with an excellent understanding among the whole front line, and their efforts being able seconded by the halves, the Arsenal defence had its most uncomfortable experience of the past three months. It gave way under the severe pressure, and at half time Birmingham were assured of victory, for they were three goals in hand. The visitors made gallant efforts to retrieve their position, but the individual work of the forwards was of no avail against the rock-like defence of the home team, and at the finish the Gunners were in a minority of four goals. The winners were the better team, and it is well to frankly admit it instead of seeking for excuses to explain away defeat.

The home clubs in the First Division of the League had a right royal time. Not a visiting club succeeded in taking away a couple of points, but three shared them. I presume that nobody was surprised Notts County drew another match at Trent Bridge. They have played eight on their own ground this season, seven of which have been drawn and the other lost. On Saturday they scored a goal, this being the third match in which they have done so before their own supporters, and as they have also scored in three away games, matters are evened up by them. Newcastle should be well satisfied with their point at Bramall Lane, and Sheffield Wednesday are elated at having captured half the spoils at Sunderland. Manchester United were, however, the most gratified team of the afternoon, for they scored their third home victory, Middlesbrough being the victims, and 3—0 win is their heaviest score of the season. Blackburn Rovers routed Bury at Ewood Park, and Stoke surprised their friends and the football world by defeating Manchester City by three clear goals. Derby County put up a good fight at Everton, but were no match for the cup-holders, and the champions were beaten by the Second League champions in great style at Bristol. Bolton Wanderers, after their recent indifferent performances, could scarcely expect to win at Preston, and the adverse verdict of 3—1 was in accordance with anticipations. This is the second away defeat of the Wanderers.

The League table to date shows that Everton's tenure of the topmost place is seriously threatened by both Sheffield Wednesday and Newcastle:—

LEAGUE II.

A thrilling struggle is in progress in the Second Division, and interest in the doing of the leading clubs is at fever heat. Taking the first nine teams in the table, only five points separated the two extremes, while the first four do not vary more than a point. There were some dramatic games on Saturday, particularly that at the Hawthorns between West Bromwich and Nottingham Forest. If they had won they would have had a commanding lead, but the Throstles went on the field determined to peg back the aspiring Foresters, and they achieved their object. Incidentally, too, they now go to the head of affairs because of a better goal average than the Forest, whose defeat was their first since 13th October. The most noteworthy performance of the afternoon goes to the credit of Chelsea, who won at Wolverhampton because of their happy blend of science and dash. It is the best thing they have done away from home since they defeated the Throstles on 22nd September by two goals to one. Hull City, Leicester Fossse, and Stockport County also obtained the two points in their respective games, and Bradford City inflicted an emphatic defeat on Lincoln City, whose form has been very disappointing. Leeds City have not borne out the glowing predictions made concerning them earlier on, but they were defeated at Gainsborough only by the solitary goal scored.

The table for the Second Division of the League to date is subjoined :—

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. ENGLAND.—A rousing cheer greeted Roos as he led his men into the arena shortly after 2-30 p.m. Cartwright and his colleagues followed a few moments later, and needless to say the Englishmen, attired in all white, with the red rose on the breast, looked a more imposing body of men. Little time was wasted, and before the spectators had time to realise their position, the game was in progress, Cartwright kicking off on behalf of England, as their opponents had won the spin of the coin. There was a slight adverse breeze, and a touch of dampness was in the air, the outlook being none too inviting. Cartwright cross-kicked towards the pavilion, but his initial effort did not find touch, and fielding the ball well, Marsburg had little difficulty in getting in a good return. The oval hovered about the centre line for a few moments, but the English pack, keeping the ball well under foot control, forced their way further afield, chiefly by the aid of a dribble on the part of Mills. A smart pick-up by Loubser spoiled the movement, and the ball was passed right along the three-quarter line eventually coming into Marsburg's possession. The latter got in a timely kick, and once again the play was in close proximity to the home 25. At a most unlikely moment Dobbin wriggled his way through a bunch of opponents, and so slippery did he prove himself that it seemed odds on the Colonial getting very near the brink of the English goal-line. Dobbin was grassed a few yards from the line, but making a marvellous leap from his knees, he seemed to have succeeded in his desired object. The attempt to score was a meritorious one, and needless to say a sigh of relief was felt in the English camp, when no score had taken place. The ball was punted up by Jackett to midfield, but offside against the English forwards enabled the South Africans to get a penalty kick. Douglas Morkel was entrusted with the attempt, the place being just past the 25 flag, at a very difficult angle. A greasy ball, combined with a bad position, did not enhance the prospects of a score, and the leather fell much short of the desired haven. Slow to follow up their opportunities, the South African forwards gave Jackett plenty of space to clear, and the Cornwall back, getting home a lengthy punt, found touch midway between the 25 and centre flags. Fumbling a pass after the throw in, Birkett somewhat recovered himself, and punting overhead, the oval was again sent out at the English 25 mark.

The Colonials were only momentarily kept at bay, for soon they zigzagged their way to the far off corner flag, and a score seemed imminent. Packing themselves like one human vice, the English side more than held their own in the tight, and the ball being sent out on the blind side of the scrum, Jago seized it at once. The little Devon half earned the plaudits of the assemblage for his plucky effort, and the Colonials were rather unexpectedly beaten back. When in a favourable position for getting away, the English pack worked slovenly, and the South African "threes" were able to clear and once again get on the move. De Villiers darted away at a most unlikely moment, and, slipping opponent after opponent, he was only brought to book by the referee's whistle sounding for a throw-forward.

Getting plenty of distance into his punt, Birkett completely changed the venue of play, and the cheering was tremendous as the English brigade followed up this advantage in a manner reminiscent of their palmy days. The English invasion, in which Cartwright, Mills, and Hill were prominent, was but short-lived, for Loubser and Melker, racing away together, were instrumental in the complete transformation of the game.

The tackling of England all over up to this point left little to be desired, and try all they could the South Africans could not score. The greasy ball made its handing difficult, with the result that the finer points of the game were not apparent. A series of scrambling mauls well within home territory proved advantageous to England, for they wheeled the scrums splendidly, and were always faster on the ball after the break up had occurred. Cartwright led his men on splendidly, and with a fine dribble he reached the visitors' 25 before being checked. Marsburg, who so far was the conspicuous light of the South African side, did a smart piece of work, and even after being tackled he got in his kick which found touch inside the English 25 line. On the break up of the subsequent maul, Jago was observed slipping away on the blind side, when he appeared to be palpably off-side, but the referee did not bring him to book. The little Devon half careered away at his leisure, the Colonials seemingly being of opinion that the whistle would come to their assistance. As matters turned out, Jago did not travel very far, for Joubert crossed over and put an end to any aspirations of the Englishman.

For the second time in the match, Joubert came under notice. Darting in at the right moment, he took the ball from Jago, and with a lofty kick he placed his men "on side" not many yards short of the coveted line. The Colonials followed up this advantage magnificently, and packing themselves well together, they scrumbled the oval to the very edge of England's goal-line. The position became graver and graver for England, as from each successive line-out the Colonials gained yards of ground.

England had got themselves out of as tight a corner earlier in the game, and it seemed as if they would again get rid of the leather. Jackett, however, made a terrible blunder, and twice fumbling, he let his side down, for Marsburg simply dived on the ball and secured the touch. In the rush Jackett was slightly hurt, and a cheer rent the air as Roos would not allow Joubert to proceed with the attempt until the Cornwall back was able to resume. Joubert's attempt was a very feeble one indeed, and did not enhance his reputation by any means. Having at last scored, the South Africans charged down the drop-out, but Birkett, Shewring, and Simpson all in succession came to the assistance of England, and save their lines from further downfall. The ball was barely a few yards from the English goal-line when the interval whistle sounded, the score at this point reading:—

	Pts.
South Africans (1 try)	... 3
England	... 0

After a rather lengthy interval the match was resumed in a very heavy drizzling rain. The pitch had become heavy, and there was no carry whatever in the ball. The Colonials were down on the home lines at once, but some clever foot work by Shewring sent them back pointless. The home pack was slow to move and just when the visitors became dangerous Cartwright nipped in and kicked the ball into touch. The following moment Jago, when absolutely tackled, got in a short punt, which also found touch, and brought relief to his side. The heavy nature of the going told on both sides, and the fine condition of the Englishmen was freely commented upon. The game had now resolved itself into a match between the English forwards and the Colonial defence, in which the balance was slightly in favour of England. The opposition began to seriously realise their arduous task, and Roos kept his men working with a will. Magnificent play by Birkett seemed likely to bring about a score for his side, but the Colonials saved their lines from peril on many occasions. There was a lull in the game for a little, and it appeared as if the South Africans were contented with their lead, for they leisurely disputed the issue in the vicinity of the centre flag.

At a most unlikely moment Birkett got in a rousing kick, and off he raced with his men following in hot pursuit. On and on he swung and cheers rent the air as the Surrey three-quarter brushed aside all opposition. Finally Marsburg and De Villiers brought him down when within a few feet of the coveted line, but before the referee allowed the game to proceed further a move was made to Douglas Morkel, who lay helpless on the ground. The Colonial had ricked his back badly, and had to be carried off the field in a dazed condition.

After an interval of over seven minutes the battle was resumed. Marsburg superseded Joubert at full-back and the latter was placed left wing three-quarter—the same formation as against Wales the previous week. Though short-handed the Colonials resumed with renewed vigour, but the overwhelming force of England instantly told its tale. The ball was sent well over the South African line and the shouting was deafening as the giant Raaff, Cartwright, Birkett, Brooks, Marsburg and De Villiers all endeavoured to secure the touch. After a desperate struggle Brooks secured the touch amid a scene of excitement that has rarely been equalled, and certainly not excelled, at a Rugby international. The place was at a very difficult angle—in fact, it was practically the same position at which the South Africans scored—and Cartwright did not put sufficient strength behind his kick to send the ball even the length of the uprights. The excitement was intense when the drop-out was taken. England did not spare their opponents, but though at a disadvantage, the visitors held their own fairly well. Back came the representatives of the Roos in irresistible fashion, and Birkett's tall figure was once more seen at the head of affairs. To the chagrin of the home following South Africa proved equal to the task, and by dint of clever footwork the oval was dribbled into home ground. Here the battle was fought for a little, and at a critical moment Jackett almost let his side down by failing to gather a rather easy pass from one of his three-quarters. A sequence of marks helped England considerably, but South Africa were quickly at the other end, only to be sent back pointless.

Jackett displayed his worth by making a splendid mark, but he made a shockingly bad kick, which was held by Raaff just about midfield, he also marking. The big Colonial attempted a goal, and a brilliant effort only missed the intended mark by a few yards. This was a rather lucky escape for England, for had the ball been dry a score would most certainly have taken place. In a subsequent rally in the vicinity of the visitors' goal, Loubser fielded the ball badly, and the English forwards were down on him in a bunch. The ball was finally sent over the South Africans' goal-line, and so hard was Marsburg pressed that he had to concede a minor. A little later the same player had to kick beyond the dead-ball line to save disaster to his side. After a short spell of very exacting play at midfield Birkett created quite a sensation by bursting clean through the opposition, and finding his way almost to the South African line. Stoop followed in the chase, and it looked as if England were to win a sensational match. However, victory was denied her, for although the closing stages were much in favour of the home nation, nothing further was done in the way of scoring. A sensational match, marred to a very slight extent by the unpleasant weather, ended in a draw of one try each. Result :—

MATCH v. LANCASHIRE.—Against possibly the weakest team that the South Africans have put in the field during their visit, Lancashire succumbed on Tuesday by the small margin of three points, at Fallowfield, Manchester. From the side originally chosen, the South Africans substituted Jackson for Dobbin in the half-back line, while P. A. Le Roux at left wing three-quarter was replaced by Hirsch. The home County made one change, F. P. Cox (Liverpool) superseding the Kersal man, Fish. The weather was of a miserable description in the morning, but happily rain only fell in the last half-hour of the game. It was estimated there were about 14,000 people present.

As regards the match, on the character of the play a draw would have been a more fitting conclusion. The South Africans, depleted in strength as they were, seemed certainly to be feeling the effects of their tour. The repeated dribbles on the part of the Lancastrian forwards were a most disconcerting feature to the visitors. C. E. Allen, the Lancashire captain, headed the greater part of these movements, and, without undue adulation, it may be said he was one of the best men on the field. Next to him in order of merit were Slocock, Leather, Pinder, and Hunter. At fullback Kennard played a very fine game for the losers, while in the three-quarter line J. M. Allen and Pollock were conspicuous.

Forward, the South Africans were by no means seen to advantage. Several times Carolin and Jackson, who were superior to their vis-a-vis, picked up the ball at great risk and saved their side from danger time after time. A feature of the visitors' display was their brilliant all-round high kicking, while the wing three-quarters (Loubser in particular) distinguished themselves, both in attack and defence.

Lancashire who faced the wind in the first half, showed excellent defence. For fully five minutes play was confined to the centre. Here, when there seemed a probability of the home forwards dribbling away. Jackson, with consummate coolness, picked up and punted into touch well in the home quarters. De Villers checked a dribble by the Palatine representatives, and then J. M. Allen kicked into touch at the centre at an opportune moment.

A dribble by Lancashire seemed likely to result in a score, but De Melker at great risk fell on the ball and sustained a slight injury to his head. Roos next broke through but the home full back, Kennard, cleared finely into touch at the centre. Although play for the most part took place in Lancashire territory the home county set up an excellent defence. In heeling out, the Colonials showed superiority and a fine passing movement between Carolin, De Villers and De Melker ended in Loubser running over—this twenty eight minutes from the start. Carolin kicked a grand goal.

Kennard and J. Allen repelled the further advances of the Africans and the score at the interval was:

	Pts.
South Africans (1 goal 1 try) ...	... 8
Lancashire	... 0

There were a couple of pelting showers in the second half, and the visitors, not being at all suited by the conditions, were in the last twenty minutes overplayed. The Red Rose side recommenced hostilities in vigorous style as following a splendid individual effort on the part of Carolin, which Kennard foiled, the Lancashire forwards, headed by C. E. Allen, dribbled to within a few yards of the opposing line. Here J. M. Allen whipped through, and his brother, C. E. Allen, gaining possession, scored. The former player took the place kick, and landed a goal.

Only three minutes had elapsed from the restart, and with Lancashire but a meagre three points behind, the ultimate issue seemed doubtful. Subsequently the South Africans pressed, and Roos, who appeared to knock on over the line, was awarded a try. Carolin failed to add the extra points. A mistake by Hirsch nearly let in Lancashire, who from this point had by far the better of the play. The Manchester forwards Whitehead and Pinder were responsible for an onslaught on the visitors' lines, and Hirsch failing to gather, Slocock dashed up and scored, J. Allen made a poor attempt at conversion.

Loubser was very speedy for the Africans, and the right-winger, in full sail for the line, was splendidly tackled by Kennard, and such was the impact that both players were incapacitated for a few minutes. Lancashire were predominant to the finish, but the Colonials sustained their small winning advantage by repeatedly kicking into touch. Result :—

OXFORD v. CAMBRIDGE.—Oxford University defeated Cambridge University at Queen's Club on Tuesday by 4 tries (12 points) to 1 goal 1 try (8 points). About 6,000 spectators were present when Cozens Hardy, the Oxford captain, kicked off. A slight rain had begun to fall, but the sky fortunately soon cleared, and the weather remained fine to the end. There was only a very light breeze, which scarcely made its presence felt. From the opening kick play was taken into the Cambridge quarters, and following a scrum Penny made some ground, but the ball eventually went out. The line-out was succeeded by a fresh scrum, and the ball was returned to the Cambridge half where Scoular failed to gather properly. He succeeded, however, in getting in his kick before being tackled. Then Williamson, who was working the Oxford scrum, took the ball smartly and a neat pass set Steinthal going. When tackled the latter gave to Vassall who in turn transferred to Milton. A good tackle by Scoular just prevented a score.

Oxford, scrummaging in the Cambridge 25, were penalised for an irregularity. The subsequent kick relieved the Cambridge tension, and then Williamson was hurt. Play was still confined to the Cambridge half, but Scoular, who was keeping an excellent length, cleared his lines in great style with a good punt. Fumbling on the part of Steinthal from a pass by Batchelor let in the Cambridge "threes," and only the timely intervention of Davies rescued his side from the threatened danger. Later Steinthal made amends for his former lapse by a swerving run and good kick, which made much ground. A moment after a forward pass by Penny spoilt an otherwise excellent movement on the part of the Cantab three-quarters. Then MacLeod, who was too well marked to have many chances, got going. He passed to Penny, who in turn transferred to Hearson. The latter was tackled and from the scrum Oxford carried the war into the enemy's camp.

So far the play had been mostly confined to the Cambridge half, and the Oxford forwards, fulfilling all that was expected of them, carried the scrum nine times out of ten, wheeling and breaking away in excellent fashion. Young, who was developing a tendency for offside, was next penalised for getting round the scrum. Hearson returned the kick, and the first scrum was formed in Oxford's twenty-five. The Dark Blue pack continued to heel out excellently, and Williamson showed remarkle aptitude for getting at the ball. The Cambridge halves were slow, and even on that rare occasion when the forwards heeled the ball Williamson was very much upon Godby before he could pass out to his "three's." Indeed, the Oxonian seemed to know sooner than the Cantab just what the latter intended to do.

Wix now missed a good chance of scoring, for, following smart work by the Oxford forwards, he overran the ball when a try appeared certain. Following a run by Steinthal, who passed in to Vassall, the latter making over to Milton, Scoular made his mark, and play was transferred to the Oxford territory. Some give and take play followed, Davies once saving grandly, taking the ball from the toes of the Cambridge forwards and relieving with a splendid kick. Then the Oxford forwards came away but Scoular, who was coolness personified, cleared well. The excitement of the moment caused both Steinthal and Bachelor to over-run the ball when in an excellent position and from the scrum which followed Scoular punted down, and McLeod was conspicuous for a good run.

To change the monotony, the Cambridge forwards actually began to get somewhat the better of the scrums, but even so the Oxonians were always upon their men before any concerted movement could either be devised or carried out. Both sides were now playing better football, and from a forward rush Oxford scored the first try. This was credited to Wix, who grassed the ball in the left-hand corner. Batchelor took the kick, but the angle was a difficult one, and the maximum points were not added. This was at the end of actually twenty-five minutes.

From the kick-off Davies returned, finding touch in the Cambridge twenty-five, and then Scoular was found dashing in amongst his own forwards, helping them. Batchelor initiated and carried through an excellent run. He crossed over, but was brought down near the line. He had previously, however, passed to Milton, who had little difficulty in registering the try. Cozens Hardy's attempt at goal was a failure. Twenty-nine minutes had now elapsed.

Two minutes later, and Oxford were again away at racing pace, this resulting from capital work by Williamson. The ball came out from the scrum, and in a twinkling he was upon it, and feinting got clear away. A pass out to Milton followed. The latter passed in again. Williamson returned the compliment, leaving Milton to score a pretty as well as a clever try. It was admirably worked for, and justly earned. Thus with only half an hour having passed Oxford led by 9 points to nil.

Playing behind a beaten pack, the Light Blue backs had few chances, and MacLeod was starved. Yet he did useful work in defence, and proved a tower of strength. A good chance was lost by Godby, who, instead of passing, elected to go on himself and as a result he was grassed. Following a good kick into touch by Penny, Cantab forwards came away, B. G. Harris being conspicuous. Pitt got possession, and a timely pass to MacLeod enabled the latter to score in a favourable position. Taking the kick himself, he added the major points with a pretty effort. Half-time was immediately afterwards sounded, the score being: —

	Pts.
Oxford (3 tries)	9
Cambridge (1 goal)	5

Restarting, the Dark Blues missed a certain score through the selfishness of Vassall, who, as once or twice previously, refused to pass, and was tackled, the ball going behind. Batchelor relieved from the ensuing kick, and Steinthal made his mark. No help, however, was thereby afforded. A charming effort, in which all the Oxonian three-quarters had a share, resulted in the downfall of the Cantabs for a fourth time. Williamson, as usual, was responsible for the initiatory effort. On the ball, swift as a hawk, he made a lightning pass to Steinthal, who, making good ground, passed to Vassall, the latter easily getting over. Batchelor's kick failed.

Oxford now led by 12 points to 5, and as the Cambridge pack looked completely done, it was an engine to a needle on a Dark Blue victory. Seven minutes from the restart, this. It was now getting dusk, and smoke coming across the field made things worse. The play was difficult to follow, as most of it took place in that part of the field most remote from the Press box. Young was again pulled up for off-side, but the Oxonian gained no advantage. Steinthal, hereabouts, was playing excellently, making good use of his weight. He brought Hearson to the ground when the latter looked dangerous, and then Scoular was again conspicuous for good length touch-finding punts. Oxford had a narrow shave from a run by Godby, who was tackled just on the line. Keeping up the pressure, the Cantabs made things warm for the Dark Blue defence, and Pitt, getting possession, was grassed just on the line, but he had parted to Hearson, who registered the try. MacLeod's subsequent kick failed.

Immediately afterwards, Batchelor, when in a favourable position, failed to gather a well-directed kick by Williamson, and a good chance was lost to the Oxonians. From now to the end of the game the Oxford pack carried all before them, and play was mostly confined to the Cambridge "25." The Cantabs seemed disheartened, and Hearson, with a fine opportunity for a run up the line, kicked feebly into touch.

Then ensued the best tackle of the day, Vassall securing Hearson, when travelling at a rapid pace, round the ankle, bringing him down. Then Vassall pursued his selfish tactics, holding on to the ball when a pass to Milton, who was altogether unmarked, could have only resulted in a certain score. Following this, Hearson, too unselfish, passed out to Pitt, when a run through for himself was a right thing to do. Then the Cantabs got their second wind, as it were, and came away with a swoop, and Davies had all his work cut out to clear. Oxford appeared content to sit on their lead, and were repeatedly finding touch until "no side" sounded, with the score :—

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

The Entente Cordiale Cup, given by "Les Sports," brought together representatives of the Highgate Harriers, the Societe Athletique de Montrouge, Le Stade Français, the Club Athletique Sportif de Saint Mande, the Equipe Nationale Belge, and the Racing Club de France, in the cross-country running race, near Paris, on Sunday. Thanks to the brilliant running of their representatives, the Highgate Harriers have made this trophy their own. The contest was organized by the Racing Club de France, which was established in 1882, and is said to be the most wealthy club of its kind extant. Doubtless the unsettled state of the weather deterred many from going to see the race. As however, the event had aroused widespread interest, it was surprising to find only a crowd of moderate dimension present, and considerable disappointment was occasioned by the absence of the British Ambassador who, it had been freely stated, was certain to attend.

Enghein Racecourse, where the contest took place, is some fifteen minutes by train from Paris. It reminds one very much of our own Lingfield Park. Rain in the morning was followed by brilliant sunshine at mid-day, but shortly before the race there was a severe hailstorm, which necessarily rendered the going heavy. The start and finish took place on the enclosed part of the course, and on the opposite side stretched the long wood through which the runners had to make their way. Then a good bit of road had to be traversed, and on returning to the racecourse the runners had to negotiate the bush obstacles used in horse racing. This course had to be covered twice, the distance being computed at about 6¼ miles. Some of the runners, who numbered sixty in all, were too anxious at the start, but, eventually all were got away together. Pearce was the first to show in front when the men had settled down into their running. Ragueneau, however, deprived him of the lead on reaching the wood, 500 yards away, and greatly assisted no doubt by his knowledge of the course, he soon established a commanding lead. Meanwhile the other runners were fighting their way through the brambles in single file, and when they emerged from the wood it was noticeable that most of the Englishmen had sustained a good many scratches. Then the road was struck, and when the runners came into sight again, which would be at about half the distance, Ragueneau led, passing the judges in 16mins. 9secs. Next came Pearce and Brooks (Highgate H.) together in 16mins. 27secs., and the order of the others was :—Johnston and Horne (Highgate H.), together, 16mins. 37secs.; B. Thomas (Montrouge), 16mins. 43secs.; Guesnon (It. Mande), 16mins. 50secs.; Landroit (St. Mande), 16mins. 52secs.; Hollandre (Montrouge), 16mins. 57secs.; and Woolley (Highgate H.), 17mins.

BOXING.

BILL CLARKE vs. YOUNG DICK BURGE.—There was a very large attendance at the Badminton Club, Cardiff, on Saturday evening, when Bill Clarke (Bristol) and Young Dick Burge (Cwmcarn) decided their long pending match. The men had signed articles so far back as 8th October to box twenty two-minute rounds at catch-weights for £25 a side and the best purse. Neither man has any record out of his own locality. Burge had a good pull in weight and reach. Both had undergone a searching preparation—Clarke in the vicinity of Clifton Downs, under the care of H. Dollings, while Burge trained at Cwmcarn, having for his mentor his brother Bill. Burge weighed 9st., and Clarke 8st. 12lbs., but there appeared to be a greater difference between them.

From the outset the Bristolian was a very warm favourite, and at the start appeared as if the bout would not be of very long duration, Clarke for half a dozen rounds simply doing as he liked with his antagonist. After this Burge improved, and at one period appeared as if he would turn the tables upon his rival. However, Clarke knew far more about the business, and at the close had well won on points. Mr. J. T. Hulls officiated as referee, and Mr. Ralph Lyle as timekeeper. Details:—

The Bristolian was seconded by Bill Shepherd, J. Clarke, and his trainer, H. Dollings, while Burge was attended by Jimmy Driscoll, Charlie Jones, and his brother Bill. Upon facing each other there appeared to be a vast amount of difference between them, Burge being quite a couple of inches the taller in addition to being much the heavier. Upon being ordered to begin Clarke at once opened up hostilities by dashing the left out on the face with great force, which operation he repeated without a return. Following his man up, the Bristol lad continued to score very fast, and at the end of the opening round 3 to 1 on was freely offered about his chance. After a somewhat lengthly spar in the second meeting Clarke, after trying for an opening, drove the left hard on the mouth, to which the Cwmcarn man attempted to retaliate on the head. However, Clarke neatly slipped the delivery and wound up the round by banging both hands home on the mouth.

The succeeding meeting again saw Clarke the aggressor, and his repeated visitations on his rival's face began to leave their mark. Burge proved very slow, but took his punishment unflinchingly. In the fourth round the Bristol man let up somewhat, but although boxing on the defensive, he continued to score the faster.

Early in the fifth round Burge led off by sending the left well home on the body, which steadied his adversary. Clarke quickly shook off the effects of this, and concluded the meeting by scoring a succession of left-handed jabs on the face. The ensuing meeting was hotly contested, several very smart rallies occurring, in which Burge did some good work. Encouraged by his success in the previous meeting, Burge again began in resolute fashion, and for a while he raised the hopes of his partisans. Each exhibited signs of distress when they took the centre for the eighth round. The Bristolian began by using his left to excellent advantage, while eventually Burge got to close quarters, and fought hard for the body. Each in turn tried the dexter hand, but in each instance they were out of distance.

The ninth and tenth meetings were decidedly in favour of Clarke, who entered upon the second portion of the contest with a large majority of points in his favour. Acting upon the advice of his seconds, the lad from Bristol took a "breather" in the eleventh meeting, while Burge was somewhat loth to mix matters. In the following set-to great excitement prevailed, Clarke, as usual, being the first to renew hostilities. Burge, after receiving a couple of left handed punches, set about his task in determined fashion, and quickly had the little man on the retreat. Mid-way through the meeting Clarke slipped down, and his antagonist stood dangerously near while he rose.

In the following meeting Burge again forced the proceedings, and twice sent his man down. The Bristolian, although very tired, made the most of the ring until the welcome sound of the gong was heard. During the temporary respite Clarke recuperated, and joined in a hot passage of arms, although Burge's superior weight began to tell. The Cwmcarn representative failed to follow up his advantage, and allowed his rival to again do all the leading, and at the end of the seventeenth round, bar an unlucky blow, Clarke could not possibly lose.

The concluding meeting were stubbornly contested, but Clarke's cleverness prevailed, and he continued to add to his lead. Burge, on the other hand, kept pegging away and at the close Clarke was proclaimed the winner, which decision was unanimously received.

A Sunday-school teacher out Hampstead way, after relating the story of the expulsion from the Garden of Eden, asked his class: "What do you suppose were Adam's reflections when he thought of what he had done?" The son of a local trainer promptly replied, "I expect he thought what a chump he was for not stickin' to watermelons!"

She: I can't afford to pay your bill, doctor. It's too exorbitant; besides, I'm no better. Doctor: Then, madam, you haven't taken my advice. She: No, I haven't; therefore I don't owe you for it!

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

THERE was very little chance of sport on Sunday, the 16th December, when the meet was at St. Thomas's Mount. There had been over six inches of rain in the previous week and this had left very little sound going, except, perhaps, on the road, and there are not often any jacks there. Sheepshead Covert was, as usual, the first draw and maintained its reputation of always holding a jack. There were at least three jacks in it and hounds were soon busy. As bad luck would have it, the one whose line they settled to had a preference for his headquarters and was loath to leave. He broke no fewer than three times towards Pallavaram and each time returned after a run of about half a mile or so, each time going back to Sheepshead. In the meantime, two other jacks went away, one of them taking the same line across the Maidan for Scavenger Covert as was taken a fortnight before, probably by the same jack. Only a couple of hounds, however, were on his line, so these were stopped and rejoined the pack, which was hunting its original selection. For the fourth time this rather faint-hearted customer broke towards Pallavaram and for a mile or more hounds drove him along nicely, keeping parallel with the river bank. Eventually, rather than face a rather long stretch of paddy, the jack took to the river, which was in high flood, and crossed, and hounds checking on the bank, were called off.

We had not to wait very long before a hound opened in some scrub, but the line was cold and doubtful at first; a couple of hounds, however, carried it forward, so the Master lifted the rest of the pack on to them and they soon got on terms. The going in this second run was terribly bad; hock deep in places and very treacherous in others. It was hard on both hounds and horses, and luckily for the latter, it did not last long. The jack kept bending to the right and after about a mile and a half, was run into and killed on the river bank. It was not yet eight o'clock, but, by the time we had waded and floundered our way back to firmer ground near the Chingleput Road, it was too hot to draw again, so a move was made for the hounds' van.

The same description of the country would apply equally well to what we had to endure on Wednesday, the 19th December, when hounds met at Kadambakam. The rain of the past week had filled every paddy field to overflowing and had transformed what was usually dry ground into the semblance of a quagmire. One must, indeed, be an enthusiast to enjoy hunting under such conditions. But the Master rightly thinks that there is no good in having a pack and keeping them in kennels, so they had to do their best. The start was to the north of the road, but here the topes and gardens yielded nothing. Near the casuarina tope, where on the last occasion on which we had been that way hounds had found three jacks, they spoke doubtfully to a line and carried it forward towards the tope. This looked like a find, but there was nothing at home and after a further draw through some gardens and scrub we crossed the road and tried the Camel Lines Covert.

Here there was no more success than at first and things began to look blank. We had nearly given up all hope and were making up our minds for an uneventful day before anything was done. Then at last a hound opened on the edge of the paddy and other hounds taking up the line, the pack was soon moving. After running the very thickest part of this terribly thick country, the jack headed almost for the Long Tank, crossed the Railway line and the Kadambakam-Saida pet Road, and swinging left-handed, always through fearfully blind country, recrossed the road and the Railway close to the Kodambakam Station. Here hounds were very close to him but, unfortunately, were stopped by the iron railings of the Railway and the field had to gallop round a long way to the gate. Hounds could only crawl through the railings in single file and when the leaders were caught up there were only two or three couple on the scent. Nevertheless they stuck to it and others came up by degrees, until seven couple were together. Continuing his left-handed ring, the jack circled back to the Camel Lines Covert, went straight through it and then away across the paddy beyond. Eventually he was lost near a village only a quarter of a mile from the bank of the Adyar River.

This was a very dirty run and comprised a ring of about five miles. The missing half of the pack was recovered by the Hunt servants and brought back to the road. Dry weather is now badly needed to improve the chances of sport.

CALCUTTA PAPERCHASES.

No. 2.

THE Xmas Chase was held over the usual course, finishing with a six furlong scurry on the Tollygunge Steeplechase Course and Chota Haziri in the paddock. The secretaries had laid a very long course and erected no less than fourteen fences to vary the monotony of bunds and raised roadways in the Six Mile-stone country. A large field turned up, but whether through the cold or superabundance of Christmas gaiety, little desire was evinced to proceed beyond a riding school canter except by the leading party of three who finished all by themselves. After an interval came a splendid procession of fresh horses and tired riders, with a sprinkling of hard riding sportsmen out for an airing on borrowed nags. Perhaps if Chota Haziri were provided at the start a little more enthusiasm might be engendered.

Mr. Evers, who is now well en route for the Average Cup, led the party round the circle in the open country and reached the lane closely attended by Mr. Ballantyne and Mr. Rees. In the straight Fairy disposed of Turk's pretensions after a bit of a dust up, but her stable companion rejoicing in his feather-weight was not to be gainsaid. The order was as follows :—

1. Mr. Evers on Cain.
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy.
3. Mr. Rees on Turk.
4. Mr. Halliday on Ruddigore.
5. Mr. Pritchard on Young Poetess.
6. Mr. Antram on Myrene.

Mr. Evers and Mr. Bell-Irving, who had assisted Mr. Turner to lay the paper, then went back to the start and on their arrival the pony chase was started. These gave a somewhat better show, and although a gallant sportsman on a roan was lost to the company at an early stage of the gallop, most of the small field hove into sight about the same time. Mr. Evers was again the first to appear and had no difficulty in distancing Irish Boy, who struggled home in front of Mr. Bell-Irving, taking life easily and third place.

The official order was :—

1. Mr. Evers on Minstrel Boy.
2. Mr. Pauntley on Irish Boy.
3. Mr. Bell-Irving on Sama.
4. Mr. K. Robertson on a brown.
5. Mr. Ritson on Geebung.
6. Mr. Barrow on Puck.

Very few ladies were riding, but amongst those out were Mrs. Paris, Mrs. Forsyth, and Mrs. Collin. The next chase is to be run in the Salt Lake country, which is very forward this year.

THE I. P. A. CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT AT CALCUTTA.

OWING to the Agra tournament, the Calcutta fixture was robbed of practically all interest and resolved itself into a contest between but four teams. A beginning was made with the tie between the 12th Royal Lancers and Calcutta's "Z" team, when a rattling good game, full of brilliant play, fast galloping, individual and collective science and dash, ended in a win for the Lancers by just one subsidiary, the closing score being: 12th Royal Lancers, 5 goals and 2 subsidiaries; Calcutta "Z," 5 gols and 1 subsidiary. Details.—

First Chukker.—Calcutta at once attacked the Lancers's flags and hit a goal in 27 seconds and on the change of ends Calcutta again pressed, but the ball went out wide of the Lancers' flags. Then the Lancers kept the ball in the Calcutta ground for a time, but play was fairly level till near the close of the chukker, when Calcutta once more pressed and were able to get a goal. Score: Calcutta, 2 goals to love.

Second Chukker.—Calcutta had the best of this for a prolonged space, but Major Hobson's defence of his flags prevented any scoring; then later an offside was given against Calcutta and though nothing came of the penalty exacted, the venue of the game was changed and the ball was held in the Calcutta ground till it went out at the side. There was no score.

Third Chukker.—This was fairly level the ball travelled freely up and down the ground, and the Lancers more than once threatened the Calcutta flags, and at length scored a goal. On two occasions they looked like scoring again, but the goal was saved. Score: Calcutta, 2 goals; 12th Lancers, 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers had quite the best of this chukker, and were on the offensive in the Calcutta ground most of the time, and were able to put up 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Score: Calcutta, 2 goals; 12th Lancers, 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chukker.—There was very equal play all through, Calcutta pressed home and hit a goal. The Lancers kept the ball in the Calcutta end for the rest of the chukker but their final shot at the flags was wide. Score: Calcutta, 3 goals; 12th Lancers, 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—For the whole of this chukker the Calcutta team were on the defensive and as often as the ball was hit away from dangerous proximity to the flags as often was it returned and any score was warded off till at the close of the full chukker the Lancers hit a goal. Score: 12th Lancers, 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries; Calcutta, 3 goals and 1 subsidiary.

Seventh Chukker.—The Lancers scored first then Calcutta were able to obtain 2 goals at long intervals and with only one subsidiary left in favour of the Lancers, the two teams in their efforts to bring the matter to an issue played a desperate game without any further change, till the call of time, the Lancers winning by 5 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 5 goals and 1 subsidiary. Umpires:—Colonel Forbes and Captain Livingstone Learmouth.

The second game was between the Mysore Durbar and Calcutta Polo Club "A" team. A very large concourse of people turned out to watch it and Calcutta after a brilliant exhibition, won with a small credit balance of 3 subsidiaries, the final score being 4 goals and 5 subsidiaries to 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Appended are details:—

First Chukker.—This was an excellent chukker. For the first half the Mysoreans had the ball in their opponents' ground and had two shots at their flags, which only scored subsidiaries, and later H. H. the Juvaraj hit a goal. After this, Calcutta played up stoutly and held the ball in the Mysoreans' grounds, where after a prolonged bout, Calcutta hit a goal. Score: Mysore, 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries; Calcutta, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—The Mysoreans began brilliantly, the Maharajah getting a goal by a long clear shot, and H. H. the Juvaraj got another soon after. Play then was very level, and the goals were well protected. Score: Mysore, 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries, to Calcutta's 1 goal.

Third Chukker.—Out of a very good game, Calcutta through the fine forward play of Ismay and the Maharaj Kumar with Learmouth's support, kept the Mysoreans very lively, and scored 1 goal and 1 subsidiary, and at the close of time they looked like scoring again, but they were fouled and the resultant penalty exacted no score. Score: Mysore, 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries; Calcutta, 2 goals and 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—The Calcutta team again took the offensive, Learmouth doing grand service as back and stemming the Mysore efforts to get the ball away. Ere half the period Calcutta had put up 2 subsidiaries and a goal. Then Mysore put on a spurt, and Bunny Singh hit a goal on the close of time. Score: Mysore, 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries; Calcutta, 3 goals and 3 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chukker.—The Calcutta team played up well all through, and were afforded two shots at the flag, which elicited minor points only. Uneventful play all over the ground followed, without results, till near the close of time an off-side was given against Mysore when near the Calcutta flags, and the goal Bunny Singh shot was disallowed. Score: Calcutta, 4 goals and 5 subsidiaries; Mysore, 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—Though this chukker afforded some keen and exciting play, it was barren of results, both goals being well protected. The Calcutta team won by 4 goals and 5 subsidiaries, to Mysore's 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Teams:—

POLO IN MADRAS.

A COUPLE of fine days made all the difference to the Polo ground at Government House, Guindy, Madras, and the two matches played on Thursday, the 20th instant, in the Venugopaul Cup Tournament, were both fast and interesting; much more so than any of the previous games. In the first match, which was between the 30th Lancers (Gordon's Horse) and the Bangalore Gymkhana, there was a great deal of really first-rate play by the Lancers, who won easily. They had more dash, followed the ball better and hit cleaner than their opponents, who but for Major Hayes who was a tower of strength at back and saved his goal many times, were a weak team. For the Lancers, Major Barnard and Duffadar Nathu Singh (back) were the most prominent players and these two between them were responsible for nearly all the scoring. The final result was a win for the Lancers by 10 goals and 7 subsidiaries to nil.

The second match was between the Fatteh Maidan team, from Hyderabad, and the Madras Gymkhana. The latter were unlucky in losing the services of Captain Duff—he did so well for Government House in the Novices' Tournament—who sprained his wrist and was unable to play in the match. His place was taken by Mr. Rajagopaul, a young native player of great promise, who did a great deal to help his side to victory. The visitors were not quite so well mounted as their opponents, but their team included some very well-known Hyderabad players and they were expected to win. The game was most exciting all through, neither side at first being able to keep the lead. The Hyderabad men were first to score, but Madras equalised and again when Fatteh Maidan got ahead they drew level. Then the pace of their ponies began to tell in their favour and they scored three goals in quick succession. Fatteh Maidan did their best to reduce this lead but could only score one goal, and the match ended in a win for Madras after a splendid game, by 6 goals to 4, not a single subsidiary being scored in the whole match.

The semi-final round was played on Saturday, the 22nd ultimo, at Government House Guindy. Both matches were very one-sided, especially that in which the Golcondas met the Mysore Imperial Service Lancers; in this the Golcondas scored as they liked, running up an enormous score.

The final match was played on Monday, the 24th ultimo, at Guindy, between the Golcondas and Gordon's Horse. The match was fast all through, the Gordon's Horse team making a very plucky fight, but being completely out-classed. The Golcondas were seen at their best and gave a splendid Exhibition of polo. The match was watched with great interest by a large number of spectators, including Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, Lord Wenlock, Colonel the Hon'ble R. T. Lawley. The final score was Golcondas, 14 goals and 7 subsidiaries; Gordon's Horse 5 goals and 1 subsidiary.

Lady Lawley presented the magnificent cup, to the winners, and H.E. the Governor, in a short speech, said the cup, which had been presented by Rajah Venagopaul in 1899 had now, been won three times by the Golcondas and so became their property; the Rajah had, however, promised another cup.

At dinner she had a doctor on either hand, one of whom remarked that they were well served, since they had a duck between them. "Yes," she broke in—her wit is of that sort that comes in flashes—"and I am between two quacks." Then silence fell.

Husband: "You'll have to discharge Jane and do the cooking yourself."

Wife: "Good gracious! Why? Are you losing your money?"

Husband: "No, but I'm losing my health."

Wife: "Oh, I see."

Husband: "Yes. The doctor says I eat too much."

RED-LETTER DAYS OF THE WORLD'S TURF CALENDAR.

IN nearly every country where horseracing is carried on some particular event may be said to stand out by itself, to be looked on as the feature of the racing season in which the greatest interest is taken, not only by what may be termed the initiated, those more or less acquainted with the details of racing, but by the general public, whose familiarity with the sport is perfunctory. In many respects the character of the attendance at such gatherings differs materially from that to be seen at ordinary meetings, as, although the ostensible object of those present is to see a horserace, there is usually a number of other reasons which induce an extraordinary assemblage at these particular events. The dictate of that imperious arbiter, Fashion, is to some extent responsible for the extra attendance; it is the correct thing to be seen at the big race; it is something to be done, a function not to be missed. The mere fact that there is certain to be a big crowd present almost invariably acts an inducement to swell its proportions, for many go as much to see others and be seen themselves as for the interest taken by them in the race itself. At these gatherings, where the atmosphere is nearly always national, and often cosmopolitan, the regular racegoer finds himself in a decided minority. He is crowded out for the nonce by the thousands intent, to use an expressive phrase, on having a good time, and to whom it is perhaps the one day in all the year when they will go racing. On these red-letter days of the turf the searcher after colour will find material more abundant than on ordinary occasions, for the racecourse habitué all the world over differs but little in type. The familiarity with things which breeds seeming indifference is his, and an intimate acquaintance with the glorious uncertainty of the turf has dampened his enthusiasm, if it has not deadened his interest. The zest with which a big holiday crowd enters into its enjoyment of the sport and its complete surrender to the spirit of the occasion, together with its enthusiasm and appreciation, are features be side which the actual happenings of the day often pale into insignificance. It is the turmoil and gaiety of the big crowd which makes these special racing days the spectacles that they are.

The day on which the greatest two-year-old race in the world, the Futurity, is decided may be considered the day of days on the American turf, though in some respects it falls short in the distinctive features which mark such gatherings as the English Derby, the Grand Prix of Paris, and the Melbourne Cup of Australia. In fact, a race which in character more closely resembled those world-famed meetings was the American Derby, run at Washington Park, Chicago, before political strife, more than the wishes of the people, served to bring about the cessation of racing in the metropolis of the Middle West. Coming as it does after a period of four weeks in the height of the season, during which there has been no racing in the vicinity of the city of New York, the Futurity attracts a very large attendance, though in this respect there is no marked difference from the number present at the Suburban Handicap, or perhaps the Metropolitan, run at Belmont Park. The American Derby, on the other hand, drew an attendance which may be best described as abnormal. It was the one day on which Chicago society decreed that it was right and proper to attend the races, and it turned out in full force, with the result that Derby Day presented a spectacle which was nowhere more appreciated. Between 50,000 and 60,000 people were estimated to be present at Washington Park, when under ordinary conditions one-fourth of that number was considered a big crowd. By the nature of its conditions the Futurity is a race which makes universal appeal to lovers of the thoroughbred throughout the length and breadth of the land; it is justly entitled by its value as a stake, and the class of the competitors, to rank as the feature race of the country, but the nature and distance of the course—straight six furlongs—does not appeal to the general public. Some day, possibly at beautiful Belmont, a three-year-old stake over a distance of ground will be established which will be a fitting rival to the English Derby and French Grand Prix. The success which attended the American Derby teaches a lesson in this connection.

So long as England remains the home of the thoroughbred, so long will the English Derby take precedence among the big horseraces of the world. While breeders from continental Europe, from North and South America, and from Australia and New Zealand, continue to seek Englishbred stallions for the improvement of their stock, the great three-year-old race of that country must possess an absorbing international interest and it is likely that for many years to come the Flying Foxes, Florizels, and Rock Sands of England will be in demand abroad. There is no race in England which in the slightest way approaches the Derby in popularity. Ascot, with its blaze of fashion and Goodwood, in its ultra exclusiveness and beautiful surroundings, appeal to certain classes; the Derby excites an interest, that is universal from King to coster. Of the half a million of people who on Derby Day turn the low hillsides of Epsom Downs into human ant heaps, not more than 20 per cent. pay any fee to witness the great contest. On the night prior to the race thousands sleep on the downs, while through those suburbs of London on the roads to Epsom may be heard the steady tramp of other thousands wending their way to the common goal. The facilities for travel by rail have been much improved in recent years, but the journey by road is still popular, especially in anything like favourable weather. Every species of vehicle is pressed into service for the occasion, and four-in-hands mingle democratically with costermongers' carts and furniture vans, filled with hilarious racegoers. The scenes and incidents on the road to the Derby furnish endless subjects both for pen pictures and the painter's brush. The steel engravings of Frith's of immortal painting "The Derby Day," are familiar to many who have not seen the original work which portrays with admirable fidelity many incidents of the great gathering. It is claimed, with a good deal of truth, that the journey to the Derby by road has in recent years lost many of its picturesque surroundings, certainly the horse-play which was thirty years ago a feature of the return journey is much more subdued, but there still is left an abundance of happenings sufficient to mark the great English classic with an individuality that makes it absolutely unique among horseraces. The vast crowd is a good humored one, bent on enjoying itself and intent on making the most of its opportunity. To the racing itself prior to the event of the day it pays but scant attention, but immediately before the start for the great race a singular stillness falls upon the multitude. The side-show men cease their shouting, the booths are emptied of their never-ending stream of thirsty patrons, and even the importunate gipsy beggars cease from troubling. A murmur of expectancy only is audible, until, as if communicated by electricity, the fact is made known to the countless thousands unable to see the actual start that the struggle for the blue ribbon of the turf has begun. As the race progresses it is followed by a babel of noise which culminates in a mighty roar of sound as the winner sweeps past the post. A feature of last year's Derby was the fact that Spearmint was the first winner in many years who had been sold at auction as a yearling. As a rule the race is won by a horse which has never been offered in the sale ring but has been retained by his breeder with a view to winning the Derby, the goal of the ambition of every British turfite.

The Grand Prix de Paris attracts the most cosmopolitan gathering of racing people in the world. Paris is the Mecca of the nationalities of eastern Europe and of Latin Americans who are attracted by the life and gaiety of the French capital. The American colony in Paris is always well represented at the big race, and there is invariably a large invasion of English racing men, for as a rule one or two horses from that country take part in the contest. Spearmint, after winning the English Derby, crossed the Channel this year and won the Grand Prix. His victory was the first gained by an English horse for twenty years, when Spearmint's maternal grandsire, Minting, won. In the Grand Prix the three-year-olds are asked to go a little farther than the regulation mile and a half of the Derby course, the French Derby, which plays a secondary part to the great race at Longchamps, being decided at Chantilly two weeks prior to the Grand Prix. The race is run at the height of the Parisian social season, of which it marks the approaching close, and one week after the French Grand National, run at Auteuil, the other racecourse situated in the Bois de Boulogne. The value of the stake to the winner is generally in the neighbourhood of $40,000, and with the exception of the Grand Prix du Conseil Municipal won this year by Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt's champion colt Maintenon, it is the only race of any consequence on the flat which is open to horses bred in other countries than France. The Grand Prix possesses an individuality that is all its own among the great equine contests of the world. Although not in great outpouring of the people as is the English Derby, it is immensely popular with the Parisians, and in the stands and enclosure may be counted many of the notabilities of Europe. The fact that there is no free in field, as is the case with the big English race, accounts to some extent for a smaller attendance, but the Grand Prix possesses many of the characteristics of Ascot and Goodwood, combined with some of the Derby features. The best dressed women in the world are to be seen in the paddock at the Grand Prix, and at no other assemblage of a similar nature is there to be heard such a diversity of tongue. In striking contrast with the big English race is the quietude which prevails on the French course, due to the elimination from it of the brazen-throated bookmakers, who, on an English course, fill the air with their vociferous offers to lay the odds. All betting is conducted in France by means of the machine, on the parimutuel system. The holiday spirit of Grand Prix day is carried on far into the night, and the visitor to Paris is lucky to obtain a seat in any of the principal restaurants or places of amusement on the evening following the race of the year.

For a country with a very limited population Australia is a great land for horseracing, and the attendance at the Melbourne Cup, the big event of the spring meeting of the Victoria Racing Club, held at its Flemington track, is utterly out of proportion to the population of the city of Melbourne, which numbers about 500,000. On an average 100,000 people gather from all parts of Australia to see the great spring handicap for three-year-olds and upwards run. For weeks beforehand the prospects of the different horses in the big race are eagerly discussed in the larger towns of neighboring States and away back in remote townships on the verge of civilization. The event is one in which the whole of the island continent takes the deepest interest. Governors of other States foregather in Melbourne for the occasion, the naval squadron finds it opportune to be in those waters, and the sheep raisers and miners from the country with singular unanimity discover an excuse to be present. The period is one of festivity and gaiety, and the resources of the city in the way of accommodation are taxed to the utmost. The distance of the Cup race is two miles, and the big field of horses which starts, usually about thirty, affords a magnificent spectacle. The Flemington track is by nature admirably adapted as a racecourse, and from every portion of the grandstands a perfect view of every part of the race can be obtained. "Cup Day" is declared a public holiday, and as under the terms of the lease by which the racing club holds the land, the infield is always free to the public, about one-fourth of those present avail themselves of this privilege. The best horse which ever won the Melbourne Cup was Carbine, sire of Spearmint, winner of this year's English Derby and Grand Prix. He carried 10st. 4lbs., and ran the race in record time.

A great English race which in many ways possesses an individuality of its own is the St. Leger, run in September, the third of the three great three-year-old contests, the winning of all of which constitutes the "triple crown" of the British turf, the preceding two being the Two Thousand Guineas and the Derby. The St. Leger attracts an enormous crowd, not a tithe of which finds accommodation in the little village of Doncaster, famous, in addition to the fact that the great race is held on its town Moor, for its butter-scotch, a species of candy, and the assemblage, as far as the local people are concerned, differs a great deal from the crowd which gathers to see the Derby. Between the people of the north and south of England there is a considerable variation in type. There is none better versed in horse lore than the average Yorkshireman; his is a horse-breeding and horse-loving county and the thoroughbred occupies first place in his affections. Not to know all the points in a yearling colt and not to be conversant with the breeding and pedigree of previous winners of the "Sellinger," as the name of the famous race is pronounced, is ignorance unpardonable in the eyes of a typical Yorkshireman. The last clerical owner of a race horse was a Yorkshire parson, the Rev. C. S. King, who bred and raced, under the nom-de-course of "Mr. Lanade," the famous mare, Apology, a winner of the St. Leger. It is an enthusiastic and appreciative crowd which assembles to see the great racing event of the north country. The distance of the race is one mile and three-quarters and 132 yards and the dead level galloping ground of the St. Leger course affords a sharp contrast to the uphill and down dale nature of the Epsom track over which the Derby is run. This, in the opinion of English racing men, makes it a very tiring course, and winning the St. Leger is regarded as satisfactory proof of the staying powers of a three-year-old.

The French Grand National is the principal cross-country event in that country, and run as it is on the Sunday before that on which the Grand Prix is decided, it draws an immense attendance. Jumping races have attained great popularity with the Parisians as well as with the Parisiennes, the enclosure at Auteuil being regarded by the fashionable set with even greater favor than the paddock at Longchamps. The jumps at Auteuil, the headquarters of the body which may be termed the French National Hunt Committee, cannot be regarded as formidable in their nature; on the contrary, they are comparatively easy for a horse to negotiate. As a consequence races are run at a much stronger pace than similar events are in England. Except in the character of the racing there is little difference in the general features of the two great French races. More distinctive in some respects is the Trouville fortnight of racing, held in August at the fashionable seaside resort in Normandy, at which the principal event is the Deauville Cup. A counterpart of this meeting may in many respects be found in Saratoga, though the existence of the French resort is even more dependent on its racing season than is that of the famous American Spa. The two big hotels of Trouville are noted alike for their excellence and high tariff of charges; their season is limited and they make the most of the opportunity. Racing during the Trouville fortnight takes place every other day, the intervening days being given up to pigeon shooting, polo, and kindred sports.

The class of horses that run in the Deauville Cups is of the highest quality, such powerful stables as Mons. E. Blanc's being always well represented. The conventions are somewhat relaxed at Trouville in the typically French assemblage, the world jostles elbows with the half world and society folk mingle with those on the fringe of society. After the day's racing the gambling rooms offer attraction to the votaries of chance unsatisfied by the opportunities afforded them during the day and it is late in the night before the lights are out in the Casino. Gaiety and excitement prevail during every hour of the twenty-four.

"Waiter! Call this lamb cutlet, do you? It's so hard I can't finish it."

"You don't surprise me sir. I, for one, could never ha' begun it!"

She: "Did you enjoy yourself in Italy?"
He: "Rather."
She: "Go to Venice!
He: "Yes."
She: "See the Lion of St. Mark's?"
He: "Oh, yes—grand beast—saw him feed.'

THE GAME OF WRESTLING.

WERE we to judge of the excellence of our sports by the extent to which artificial rules prevail over natural ones, there can be no question but that the title of the very best game in the world would have to be awarded to the Japanese game of ju-jitsu. For the very first thing one learns in this exercise is to resist the instinctive temptation to use strength, to strain every muscle in the contest, and to keep those muscles taut. The man who obeys this natural impulse is verily at the mercy of even a child who has the slightest knowledge of the principles of ju-jitsu, for he is furnishing the force that is to compass his own downfall. Strange though it may seem, it is absolutely true that in this strange game your object is to apply against your opponent any force which he exerts, and to use the minimum of your own strength, because the more force you exert, the more effective is the weapon you thereby give to your opponent. You must try to make your opponent use force, while exerting yourself as little as possible.

At first, of course, it seems as though this were too paradoxical a game to be practicable. The uninitiated scoffer might say: "Well, suppose I refrain absolutely from using any force. Suppose I stand perfectly motionless, awaiting developments. What then?" Well, the value of this question can be tested by any one who chooses to try the methods it suggests. Suppose that you decide to stand absolutely motionless before a Japanese ju-jitsu player? You doubtless flatter yourself that you are exerting no force; but therein you err. The very effort of standing motionless calls for the exercise of much more force than you are aware of. You exert force to maintain your balance; the Japanese knows in what direction you are exerting that force, and pushes you ever so slightly in the opposite direction. You feel that you are losing your balance, exert force to recover it, and behold! your slight opponent has you at once. He avails himself of that force you are exerting—not by resisting it, but, with the lightest of deft pulls and pushes, by over-developing it. Thus, let us say, to recover your balance you have to exert a force of 10lbs. in a certain direction. The Japanese does not endeavour to check that force. Instead of that, he augments it. You thought to exert 10lbs. of force; his push, or pull, makes that ten into twenty or thirty or forty, and then over you topple, and lie on the ground with your little opponent industriously tying you into uncomfortable knots.

The inference to be gathered from this is that all stiffness of pose, all bracing to resist a shock, must be eliminated. The standing work, at the beginning of the bout, is almost entirely based on balance, and it must be your part to act as a jelly to pressure. The body must be limp, and the muscles slack, ready for exertion or resistance in any direction, not braced for either in the particular direction in which you anticipate it. Otherwise, you will be overthrown at once.

Not that the under man on the ground has the worst of it. Indeed, a prostrate man, with his legs between himself and his opponent, is in a master position. For in ju-jitsu the contest is not decided by a fall. The victor is he who has manœuvred his opponent into a position from which he cannot escape without breaking a limb, and a Japanese on his back on the ground is frequently far more dangerous than when on his feet.

To watch the game is certainly a fine spectacle. At the ju-jitsu school in Oxford-street, on springy matting, the wrestlers show how this wonderful science develops every muscle of the body. The game begins with what looks very much like a sort of complicated waltz. The wrestlers, of course, are barefooted, or in soft wrestling shoes, and they stand facing each other, each grasping the lapels of the other's loose jacket. Then they begin, with a light, swinging step, dancing at times as if to music up and down the room. In reality the Japanese, whose head is scarcely higher than his pupil's midriff, is imperceptibly guiding the bigger man here and there at will, the pupil being too wise to attempt to resist the gentle movement. Then, as the Japanese is changing his poise from one foot to another, the pupil deftly strikes him, with incredible quickness, on the tendon of the leg momentarily supporting his weight. That was neatly done, and would have thrown a less expert man at once. Instead of trying to regain his balance, however, the Japanese lets himself go, one leg this way and one that, doing the "splits" as easily as a ballet girl, and is on his feet again before his opponent knows it. In a flash he treats his opponent as his opponent has just treated him—but successfully. Perhaps the young Englishman cannot do the "splits." At all events, he falls limply and with a resounding slap, as he has been taught to fall. Then they are on the ground together, a wonderful muddle of intertwining arms and legs. They look like the little Japanese carvings of monkeys rolled and twisted up together in a ball. First you get a glimpse of the Japanese on top, one leg round his opponent's neck and the other locking the Englishman's knees, his arms clasping those of the other man, and his face wreathed in pleasant smiles. Then there is a twist, and the bigger man is on top, with the Japanese curled up like a ball under him. One would think that the little man must be crushed, but suddenly his feet shoot out, flinging the pupil clean into the air; and as he falls the Japanese pounces on him, and effects an irresistible lock—one that will break his opponent's wrist if the latter struggles at all. That decides the contest.

Such are the impressions given by the sight of two good ju-jitsu wrestlers at work. The art is strenuous enough in its way, though never roughly forceful; and, though not productive of knotty muscles, makes its advocates enormously strong, with a lithe, sinewy strength. It so developes the muscles of the neck and throat, for instance, that a Japanese expert can hang suspended by a rope round his neck without inconvenience. Moreover, it gives an excellent practical knowledge of anatomy, and besides being a delightful and healthe pastime, is a capital means of self-defence.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA vs. BEHAR WANDERERS.—This match on the C.C.C. ground opened on Monday the 24th ultimo. The visitors taking first knock. A. P. Danby was top scorer with 31, Luce made 24, and Bentinck 20, Hudson and Gordon being the only others to reach double figures. The innings closed for 118. The home team batted well and at the close of the day's play had made 235 for 5 wickets, but the next day the remaining batsmen could only contribute 15 runs, the total being 250. Of this B. E. G. Eddis had made 101 (his second century this season) in great style, Beachcroft put up 39, Bartholomew 25, and Stockley 20. On going in a second time the Planters showed improved form. Bentinck (101 not out), Danby, (30), Luce (47) and Sharling (22) all batted well, Bentinck's century being the result of sound cricket. The innings produced 250, the same as Calcutta's first venture. This left the home team 119 to make to win. The runs were speedily knocked off for the loss of two wickets and Calcutta won by 8 wickets. There was a big attendance, it was a perfect wicket and the weather could not have been better. Scores :—

THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF INDIA.

ON the Tollygunge Club links last Saturday the opening and qualifying stage of this competition was brought to a conclusion. The 36 holes course was in really excellent condition, thanks to the untiring efforts of the Honorary Secretary of the Tollygunge Club, himself an enthusiastic player. The sixteen left in to try conclusions in the first and second rounds were headed by Mr. A. Mann whose score was 160, as will be seen by the following results.

QUALIFYING ROUND.

FIRST ROUND.

H. W. Dick beat R. B. Dunlop by 5 and 3.
D. C. Scroggie beat Major Hedley by 1 up (21st hole).
Lieut. A. R. MacAllen beat A. B. Crole by 2 up.
A. Brebner beat T. Drimmie by 2 up and 1.
N. Mitchell-Innes beat B. Sinclair by 1 up (20th hole).
Lieut. Campbell beat R. McLean by 2 up and 1.
Major Wolfe-Murray beat E. H. Townend by 2 up.
A. McCormack beat A. Mann by 2 up.

SECOND ROUND.

H. W. Dick beat D. C. Scroggie by 3 and 1.
Lieut. A. R. MacAllen beat A. Brebner by 1 up.
Lieut. Campbell beat N. Mitchell-Innes by 2 and 1.
A. McCormack beat Major Wolfe Murray by 1 up (20th hole).

THIRD ROUND.

MacAllen beat Dick by 4 up and 3 to play.
Cormack beat Campbell by 1 up.

The semi-finals were played on Tuesday. Mr. Cormack defeated Mr. Campbell by one up after a great game. The latter player seemed to be scarcely showing his form, Mr. Cormack took the lead at the punch bowl hole where the match started and never afterwards let it slip. Three up and six to go seemed too big a lead to be wiped off, yet his opponent made a great effort. Winning the 14th Mr. Cormack was unplayable from the tee, he halved the next, won the sixteenth in a perfect three. Here Mr. Cormack's lead now only stood at one. The latter, however, by the aid of a fine four yard put at the 17th secured a half and became dormy one and a half in six at the last hole put him in the final. Lieutenant McAllen proved too strong for Mr. Dick winning by 4 and 3.

THE FINAL.

The final match of 36 holes between Lieutenant McAllen and Mr. Cormack resulted in an overwhelming defeat for the former. For the first ten holes the match was a good one to follow, Cormack only having a lead of one hole up to that point. From here, however, to the finish of the first round he fell to pieces and at the eighteenth hole stood 5 down. The final result of 8 up and 7 to play was after this a foregone conclusion and the match lost much of its interest. Mr. Cormack, without being startlingly brilliant, made few mistakes, and the game ended as stated.

THE ASIAN CUP.—This was played for at Barrackpore and ended on Friday, the 27th ultimo in a well deserved win for Mr. Archy Birkmyre. Lieut. MacAllen's scratch score of 79, which placed him second, was the outcome of brilliant golf. The scores are:—

HEAVY-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

JACK O'BRIEN vs. TOMMY BURNS.—American exchanges to hand give details of the great contest between "Philadelphia" Jack O'Brien and Tommy Burns (Los Angeles), which took place at Los Angeles, California, on 28th November. The pair fought what are described as twenty terrific rounds at the Pacific A.C., and when the end came the men were in the centre of the ring engaged in a fierce struggle.

When Jeffries (the referee) held up the glove of both fighters a shout of disapproval went up from Burns' admirers, who believed their man had won. Burns, who fought like a bull from the beginning to the end, was always on the aggressive, crowding his opponent to the ropes, and frequently rushing him about the ring almost in fight. The fighting, practically from the first round to the last, was terrific and interesting. Burns landed undoubtedly many more blows than his opponent, and they seemed to show greater force. O'Brien's footwork, however, was clever, and his ducking saved him time and again from severe punishment. Burns, however, landed many stiff blows on O'Brien's face. Burns, too, was severely punished about the face. The men showed evidence of bitterness towards each other throughout the fight. It looked about the middle of the fight as though Burns would win easily. O'Brien was almost groggy at different stages, and a knockout seemed not improbable. Details:—

ROUND 1.—O'Brien clinched, after a left lead, and protested when Burns kept both hands working during the clinch. O'Brien staggered Burns which a left hook, and they clinched. O'Brien rushes with a right hook, which was blocked, and the round closed, with little advantage to either man.

ROUND 2.—Burns landed a left to the ribs, and O'Brien put two lefts on the jaw. O'Brien introduced two stiff uppercuts and left and right to the side of the head, Burns holding on fast. Burns seemed to lose his head, and went into a clinch. The round was strongly O'Brien's, who appeared to have the measure of his opponent, and seemed very confident.

ROUND 5.—Burns landed right and left on the body, and O'Brien missing a right swing, they clinched. He danced away, but returned to plant a straight left to the jaw. They exchanged right leads to the jaw, and O'Brien received a stiff left to the mouth. Burns put a right and left to the face, but O'Brien countered with a right, without damage. Burns took three stiff straight rights to the jaw, while O'Brien landed a right hook as the gong sounded.

ROUND 6.—Burns continued to follow his man round the ring, and O'Brien missed a straight left and clinched. Burns taunted O'Brien, asking him to stand and fight, but O'Brien kept away, and Burns repeated the operation. O'Brien trotted circles about his opponent, occasionally leading, while Burns planted his left three times to the head as the gong sounded.

ROUND 7.—Burns attacked strongly, landing rights and lefts that did no damage. O'Brien landed a right and left hook evidently with some power. Burns showed ability to duck O'Brien's left leads, and Burns again invited O'Brien to fight. He landed a straight left to the chest and a right to the neck, and they went into a clinch. Burns landed several light kidney blows. O'Brien introduced a left hook to the jaw. O'Brien appeared much more worried than his opponent, and the round was largely in Burns' favour.

ROUND 8.—Burns put left to the head and a right to the jaw in a manner that swept O'Brien off his feet. Burns chased his man around, the ring attempting to win in a rush. O'Brien put a short right jab to the chest, and a right uppercut to the chin. Burns stood still and waited for O'Brien to come into range, and was always the aggressor, O'Brien making a poor show.

ROUND 9.—Burns, with right for the ribs, was short, but immediately afterward landed a stiff right to the head. He got a right on O'Brien's face, and tried hard for a knockout. O'Brien put right hook to the chin, and Burns, after blocking a left uppercut, received to light hooks on the left side of the head. The round was certainly Burns' and his opponent appeared somewhat distressed at its finish.

ROUND 10.—Burns continued his rushing tactics and O'Brien slipped in vicious swings. Burns hit hard. O'Brien seemed to be leading groggily on Burns' shoulder, but he straightened his man with a right uppercut. Just afterwards he for the first time used a lead that has always been his style of battle.

ROUND 12.—Burns pursued O'Brien over the ring, and landed a left on the face. Burns' glove in a clinch was locked under O'Brien, and he protested. Burns landed a left to the ribs and a right to the face. Burns hooked a light left to the heart. Burns ducked a left and chased his man around the ring. O'Brien rallied, lashing two uppercuts to Burns' chin. Burns was compelled to do by far the most leading, and as they separated from a clinch Burns swung O'Brien from him.

ROUND 13.—Burns appeared eager to come to close quarters, but O'Brien evaded and suffered punishment in a clinch. O'Brien took two damaging lefts, and appeared unwilling to come to close quarters, and used his right to upper cut with advantage twice in rapid succession. Burns put a right to the ear, and O'Brien countered as they clinched. Burns slipped over a straight left, and the round ended with little advantage to either man, except that O'Brien seemed a little bolder.

ROUND 17.—O'Brien got in a stiff right upper cut and escaped a rush by Burns into a neutral corner. O'Brien put a left hook to the body and followed with two straight lefts to the face, both appearing effective. O'Brien landed a straight left to the eye, and then they clinched holding until separated. Burns managed to reach O'Brien with a light left hook, and missed a savage right swing a moment later. O'Brien put home a stiff jab to chin and received, a left to the body.

Solution to Problem No. 20.

B HAS no more clubs, and, consequently, the 10 guards the suit, Z can win six tricks in diamonds if the suit is divided favourably, but before parting with dummy's cards of entry he must endeavour to clear his hearts. He should accordingly lead the queen of hearts, and put on dummy's king, so as to leave the lead in the right hand in case the ace is held up. If the king of hearts is allowed to make, he should lead the 10 of spades from dummy, and finesse it up to A. If this finesse comes off, he can then win the game independently of dummy's long suit, but if it fails he must fall back on diamonds. Should the diamonds go right he will still win the game unless, in the meantime, A and B have played out all their winning cards to save it.

Problem No. 21.

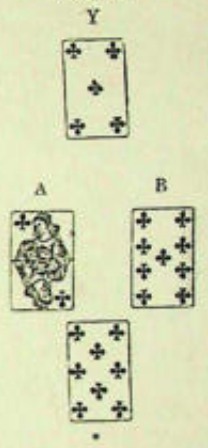
Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and declares no-trumps. A's (the original leader's) and Y's (dummy's) hands are as follows:—

Y's HAND (DUMMY).

Hearts: K, 2. Diamonds, A, J, 10, 9, 3. Clubs, J, 5, 4. Spades, Q, 10, 6.

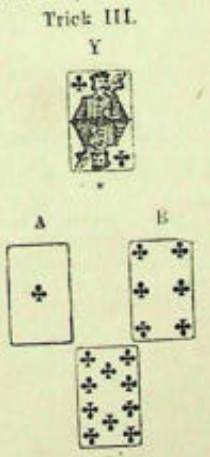
A's HAND (LEADER).

Hearts: Q, 10, 8, 3. Diamonds, K. Clubs, A, Q, 3, 2. Spades K, 9, 7, 5.



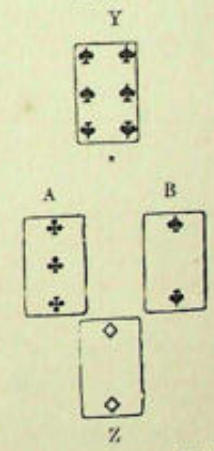
The first four tricks are as follow:—

Trick I.



Tricks: A B, 1; Y Z, 0.

Trick II.



Tricks: A B, 2; Y Z, 0.

Trick III.

Tricks: A B, 3; Y, Z 0.

Trick IV.

Tricks: A B, 4; Y Z, 0.

NATURAL HISTORY IN 1906.

THE following notes on Natural History progress during the year just ended relate in the main only to vertebrate animals, and more especially the larger mammals, as being those likely to interest the majority of our readers. Even in this comparatively narrow sense no pretence is, however, made to give anything approaching a complete record of zoological progress; only such items being mentioned as appear to be of more than ordinary interest.

We may perhaps assign the first place in the year's work, regarded from this point of view, to Colonel C. D. Durnford's investigations regarding the nature of the flight of flying fishes. Dominated for years by the views of Professor Möbius, of Berlin, naturalists generally have given their adherence to what may be called the äeroplane theory, according to which the initial impetus of the flight is due to the screw-like action of the tail while the fish is still in the water, the wings acting merely as parachutes during the flight through the air, although it is admitted that they may vibrate to a certain extent at the commencement. Reading between the lines it will, however, be apparent that several observers have had a strong suspicion that active wing-action is an important factor in the flight, although they seem to have hesitated in setting themselves up as direct opponents of the äeroplane theory, on account of its "official" acceptance.

Colonel Durnford, whose two papers on the subject appeared in the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, bases his opposition to the generally accepted theory on mathematical grounds. According to his demonstration the äeroplane theory of the flight is a physical impossibility, owing to the relatively small wing-superficies, and consequently progression through the air must be due to intensely rapid wing-vibration, aided in certain circumstances by movements of the tail which in all cases give rise to the initial impetus. Under average conditions, the chief features of the flight appear, according to the new theory, to be as follows:—(1) the tail-impelled, visibly wing-assisted jump from the water to a height where the wings can work visibly; (2) the flight continued by an intensely rapid and laboured wing-movement, generally mistaken for a condition of rest, and, if seen at all, visible only as a blur; (3) short periods of slowing-down of wing-movement, when the vibrations again become perceptible; (4) either sudden cessation of wing-movement, followed by a sudden drop into the water, or a short slow-down into visibility immediately preceding the immersion. The result of dissection has been to demonstrate that flying-fish possess much greater development of the pectoral and caudal muscles than non-volant pelagic fishes of similar proportions; thus affording further support to Colonel Durnford's explanation. It may be added that the flying-gurnards, whose flight is less rapid and prolonged than that of the true flying-fishes, certainly make use of their wings when in the air; this, again, being to a certain extent a confirmation of the new theory. Those of our readers who may have the good fortune to be homeward bound may like to beguile some of their time on the voyage by endeavouring to detect the wing-movements of flying-fish ; although the most favourable opportunities of doing this are afforded by small sailing boats.

Coming to big game animals, the year will be remarkable for the number of new species or races of African antelopes which have been described. The most interesting of these is Vaughan's kob (Cobus vaughani), from the southern Bahr-el-Ghazal, a species nearly allied to the white-eared kob (C. leucotis), but in which the old bucks are foxy red instead of chocolate-brown. The eland of British East Africa has been separated as a distinct race (Taurotragus oryx Pattersonianus), on account of the presence of an incomplete white chevron below the eyes ;—a feature occasionally seen in elands south of the Zambesi. Of smaller antelopes, the yellow backed dinkerbok of N.-W. Rhodesia has been distinguished as lephalophus coxi ; while a dinker from Portuguese East Africa has been named C. Robertsi, and one from Nyasaland (C. Walkeri). Whether the so-called Gazella salmi of the Fashoda district is really entitled to rank as a new species, remains to be proved. Be this as it may, considerable interest attaches to a small antelope from the Semliki Forest, which, with a previously known species from the Cameroons, is referred to the new genus Hylarnus ; this genus being intermediate between the royal antelope Neotragus of Guinea and the same antelopes (Nerotragus) inhabiting two small islands near Zanzibar and the mainland of South-Eastern Africa.

The revision of the local races of the Asiatic ibex (Capra sibirica) by Dr. Lorenz von Liburnau has already formed the subject of a special leading article in this journal, and may accordingly be passed over without further notice. Much interest attaches to the photograph of a young takin obtained by Mr. Claude White in northern Bhutan, and reproduced in our English namesake. This, however, is not the only photograph of a takin calf that has been taken, a second one having recently come under our notice. Adult takin have also been shot by Europeans ; we have a couple of fine heads in our possesion which we shall be glad to show to any interested readers.

Mr. Claude White has likewise contributed important information regarding the geographical range of the shou, or Sikkim stags. According to this information, the shou, as Jerdon originally considered to be the case, inhabits the upper part of the Chumbi Valley as well as the adjacent districts of Bhutan. More important still is the evidence acquired by Colonel Iggulden, during the Tibet expedition, to the effect that this fine deer is found north of the Sanpu in the neighbourhood of Lhasa. In Colonel Iggulden's opinion, shou are able in summer to cross the high range separating the Chumbi Valley and Bhutan from Tibet ; and if this prove to be the case, there is no valid reason why the Lhasa animal should be even racially different from the one inhabiting Chumbi and Bhutan. This, however, is a point on which further evidence is required, and the attention of sportsmen may therefore be directed to the subject.

Our knowledge of the okapi—and more especially the question whether there is more than one race or species—will probably be increased as the result of the year's collecting, since the Gosling—Alexander expedition in Nigeria procured one skin, while Major Powell-Cotton has sent home the skin and skeleton of an adult male and the body-skin of a calf from the Ituri Forest. Definite information with regard to the creature's habits is, however, still wanting. The wild pigs of the Malay area, which have long been a stumbling-block to Naturalists, have received attention at the hands of the well-known American Zoologist, Mr. G. S. Miller, who has been able to put matters on a much more satisfactory footing than before, especially as regards the long-snouted Sus ōi of Eastern Sumatra. Since Mr. O. Thomas described in 1904 the forest-hog (Hylochœrus meinertzhageni), of the mountain forests of east equatorial Africa, much literature has been published concerning these animals, of which three species have been named. In his description of the typical species, from Mount Kenya and the Nandi Forest, near the Victoria Nyanza, published in the Proceedings of the Zoological Society, Mr. Thomas figured the skull and teeth, the portions of skin being too incomplete to allow the portrait of the animal being given. Specimens from the Nandi Forest have, however, enabled Baron Maurice de Rothschild and Mr. H. Neuville to give such pictures. About two months prior to the appearance of their paper Mr. Thomas was able to confirm the existence of a forest-hog in West Africa ; the evidence being a skull from the Cameroons. Owing to differences in the teeth from those of the eastern animal, the Cameroon forest-hog has been named H. rimator. Another addition to our knowledge of the forest-hogs is supplied by Professor Matschie, of Berlin, who, in the Annales of the Congo Museum, describes specimens from the Ituri Forest, with illustrations of the adults and young. This Ituri forest-hog is named H. ituriensis. The differences distinguishing this species occur in the form and proportions of the skull and teeth and details of colouring. These hogs are stated to be forest animals, seldom coming into the open, and rarely seen by Europeans. Their ferocity renders them dreaded by the natives. In the Nandi district they were numerous up to 1891, when they were almost exterminated by rinderpest.

With the mention of an apparently new type of Zebra from East Africa described by the Hon'ble Walter Rothschild, and the record by Mr J. Noack of a dwarf race of elephant from the Congo, we must dismiss big game animals in favour of other groups.

Apart from the okapi referred to above the animals secured by Major Powell-Cotton in the Ituri Forest comprised fewer novelties than might, perhaps, have been expected. Mr. Lydekker has, however, described from this collection a sooty-coloured cat, which appears to be a dark forest race of the species typified by the red tiger-cat (Felis carysothrix) of West Africa. An earlier collection sent home by the same collector included a wholly black ratel, or honey-badger, which Mr. Lydekker has appropriately named Mellivora cottoni.

Turning to Asia, a feature of some interest is the identification by Mr. Thomas of a race of the brown bear from the Shan States, on the Burmese frontier of Siam ; this being by for the most southern extension of the range of the species in Eastern Asia. Almost the opposite of this is the discovery that a race of the Malay bear (named by Mr. Lydekker Ursus arctus Wardi) inhabits Eastern Tibet or Sze-chuan. This is analogous to the case of the Sze-chuan sambar.

Among the work done by the officers of the Indian Museum, reference may be made to Mr. Nelson Annandale's discovery that the lorises (Nycticebus and Loris) possess four teats in place of, as previously supposed, only two. They are thereby brought more into line with their West African representatives the pottos. This, however, does not represent all the work done on this group, as an American Naturalist, Mr. M. W. Lyon, has ascertained that the slow lorises (Nycticebus) inhabiting Borneo and Banka differ markedly in the characters of their skulls and teeth from all the other members of the group, unless it be the imperfectly known one found in Java.

Considerable interest attaches to Mr. Annandale's observations on the habits of the dugong. Unlike the manatee, these animals do not seem to feed by lateral movements of the two halves of the upper lip, which are less developed than in the latter, while the shortness of their flippers must apparently prevent the use of these organs in pushing food into the mouth. A single offspring may be seen with the female at any time of year ; but on no occasion were the two observed with their heads raised vertically out of the water after the conventional mermaid-fashion.

In America the great anteater inhabiting the central division of the continent has been found to differ markedly from the typical (Myrmecophaga jubata or tridœtyla) of Brazil ; while it is now ascertained that there are quite a number of local representatives of the little spotted skunk (Spilogale), instead of only one.

In Australia the most interesting piece of work is that of Miss Sweet on the eye of the marsupial mole (Notoryctes). Despite the fact that the creature spends much of its time on or near the surface, its eyes are much more degenerate than those of the mole ; the optic nerve having completely disappeared. This degeneration may be attributed to the irritating influence of the grains of the hot sand in which the animal burrows. To compensate for the total loss of vision, the glandular structures of the eye and nose have undergone a special development, and doubtless act in some manner as sense-organs.

As previously noticed in our columns, the creature seen by Messrs. Nicoll and Waldo, off Parà, has revived interest in the sea-serpent ; and naturalists are now less inclined than formerly to scoff at the idea of the existence of some unknown sea-monster. It would be well worth the while of some leisured and wealthy amateur to spend two or three months cruising off the coast of Tonkin, where the mysterious monster seems more prone than elsewhere to reveal itself. Possibly the suggestion may appeal to the well-known and enterprising American yachtsman and collector Dr. Abbott.

Sea-serpents lead naturally on to flying-snakes, which, according to Mr. B. Shelford, actually exist in Borneo. Three different species of tree-snakes from that island are reported to have the power of rendering the under surface of the body concave ; and when falling to the ground they invariably do so with the body held stiff and rigid. In Mr. Shelford's opinion, it is probable that the hollow lower surface of the snake helps to break the fall ; since it has been determined by experiment that a split bamboo made to fall with the concave surface downwards descends much more slowly than a cylindrical rod of the same weight and dimensions. If the account be trustworthy, these snakes are evidently up-to-date creatures.

A still more wonderful phenomenon has been recorded by Mr. W. Strickland in the case of certain spiders from Java. These, it is stated, have the power of slowly changing the color of the single pair of large glaring eyes on the head from brown to grass-green, and back again from green to brown ; the process being repeated at intervals for a considerable time, sometimes in one and sometimes in both eyes. What may be the use and purpose of this wonderful Kaleidoscopic power in these attis spiders (as they are called), remains for future observation to demonstrate ; but it is an altogether unique phenomenon. Lastly while passing over for lack of space many other observations and papers well worthy of mention, reference must be made to the issue of the first volume on Indian beetles (Coleoptera), by Mr. C. J. Gahan of the British Museum, in the Fauna of British India.

THE CALCUTTA KENNEL CLUB SHOW.

AGAIN we direct attention to the closing date for entries to the Calcutta Kennel Club Show—next Tuesday, the 15th January. When last we had the pleasure of a chat with the Honorary Secretary, we found him despondent over the paucity of entries ; but as a very large number of registration certificates have been applied for we have no doubt he will be kept exceedingly busy in a day or two and that about 6 o'clock on Tuesday next his job will be no sinecure, judging from our own experience of the penchant for rushing in entries at the last moment.

To those owners who have not yet made up their minds about entering their dogs we would say that the prize list is a very handsome one, the total value being about two thousand rupees. Then the fact of this show being held under Kennel Club Rules and two of the best judges of dogs in the East making the awards must appeal to everyone. To enable the executive to complete the numerous minor arrangements inseparable from a dog show entries at ordinary fees must close on the 15th instant ; late entries, which will be taken up to the 22nd instant, incur a penalty of one rupee.

The dogs will be benched in a huge shamiana close to the Ochterlony Monument and they will be on view to the general public from 4 to 7 P.M. and from 8 P.M. onwards, the judging being got through early in the day. Exhibitors, we understand, will pay a rupee to admit them to the grounds of the Fête and will receive passes enabling them to re-enter, should it be necessary to leave the show and return to it later on. They will, of course, have free entry to the show itself. The public will pay a rupee to get into the dog show and the souvenir catalogues will be a rupee each. A very special effort is being put forth in connection with this catalogue. It is to be printed on art paper, is to be copiously illustrated with photographic reproductions of type specimens of the principal classes from English champions, under which will be the English Kennel Club descriptions and scale of points, while on the opposite pages will be the entries for the show under each class. The catalogue will in reality be a valuable dog book and well worth the price asked for it.

We understand that the Kennel Club has offered to pay into the Minto Fête funds the balance of the donations, entries, gate money and amount realised by sale of catalogues, after deducting the expenses of the show ; this is a very liberal offer we consider, for the amount should run well into four figures. Considering the Club has been formed but three months this is doing the thing handsomely and doubtless such will be the opinion of those running the Minto Fête.

The C. K. C. held a Committee meeting last Monday, the Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar, C. S. I., in the chair. Matters connected with the approaching show were discussed, and to the Committee were added the names of Colonel Harwood, Messrs. J. G. Dickson and R. C. Mawdsley.

Sporting Notes.

THERE is again a strong movement on foot to remodel the Tollygunge course, and the time seems to be really ripe for some such step to be taken. That the present style of hedges is a failure can hardly be disputed, but this question has so often been discussed that it would be idle to harp on it further. Yet a remodelling of the Tollygunge course might very well embrace a scheme for a good flat racecourse and perhaps a training track in addition. On such a course as would then be available a dozen big meetings might be held in the cold weather alone. The fetish that racing is only possible on Saturday afternoons is dying hard, but whether it come now or a few years hence, it is quite certain that we shall see mid-week meetings on a suburban course in Calcutta inter-larding the maidan races. With fifty and sixty entries in the smaller handicaps such as we see at present there is little, in fact no doubt but that the Turf Club could fill the programmes of such meetings without interfering with their main prospectus. The financial aspect of the project is really the first and most important question for consideration in contemplating such a scheme. There may be some doubts on this subject, but there are not a few persons in Calcutta who would be ready to back it, should necessity arise, with solid money. Steeplechasing would become a minor consideration, but would nevertheless obtain a real opportunity of entering upon a new and prosperous lease of life.

The second day's steeplechasing at Tollygunge was much more entertaining than the first, in spite of the many accidents on New Year's Day, which considerably reduced the very limited number of chasers in training in Calcutta. Only four accepted the handicap for the Tollygunge Plate and of these Senator was pulled up after the open ditch, over which he made a very clumsy jump. The three left going, Kipling, Seclusion and Olynthus, must have made a fine race of it but for two unfortunate mishaps. Seclusion dropped a leg in the water and never got galloping again, having evidently strained himself somewhat seriously. A little further on Olynthus over-reached and cut his tendon very badly. He struggled gamely home in the wake of Kipling, but pulled up dead lame and had to be taken away in the ambulance. These accidents prevented a fair test of the handicap which had been freely criticised before the race. The accident to Olynthus is most serious ; there is little or no chance of saving the horse, a very heavy loss indeed to his sporting owners and a most regrettable one to all interested in the welfare of local jump racing.

That good paperchaser, Lord Harry, headed the handicap in the Suburban Plate, but was reserved for his engagement with the Hunters. Strathspey and Wales were heavily backed to win this event, and the former looked a winner all the way round the course, but Mr. Reynolds' Coronet, who fell on New Year's Day, kept plugging away in front, and gaining considerably at every fence, he reached the straight full of running and fairly wore down Mr. Apcar's horse. This was the prettiest race of the whole meeting, as the five starters kept well together until the last two fences, Craig and Wales having a tremendous tussle for third place.

Only three ponies faced the music in the Open Handicap, and of these Footlight was made favourite, but Bull's Eye, a very well measured pony with a feather-weight, was also well backed. Hoyt rode a good race on the light weight, having quite recovered from his nasty fall off Olga on the first day, and eventually outstayed Footlight, who looked all over a winner on entering the straight. Four pony Hunters joined issue in the last chase of the day. Mistlebird, in spite of her crushing weight, was made favourite, and Mr. Evers on Zig Zag was followed as usual by a large number of backers. He fully justified their confidence by pushing the pony along from the fall of the flag, and without being headed won handsomely from Mistlebird. Energy, ran third. Good Chap was unable to compete, but we hope that he and his hard riding owner will be back in Calcutta again in time for the hurdle race and the Paperchase Cup.

The Hunters' Handicap was regarded as a good thing for Lord Harry, in spite of his 13 stone burden and he was fully backed at level money from the commencement of operations. His backers had an anxious time, however, as the old horse seemed anchored during the early part of the journey and a mile from home was still toiling far in the rear of the other trio. After the open ditch Capt. Holden took out his whip and answering with great gameness the favorite set to work and slowly closed with his field, reaching them as they entered the straight. Once in that position he was master of the situation as none of the other horses were celebrated for resolution, and Lady Gold was running all over the course. Capt. Holden rode a patient quiet race and is to be congratulated on owning such a perfect fencer and staunch racehorse as his old favourite, Lord Harry

Not a single fall occurred throughout the day, a fact which lends colour to the view that the matting to which we referred last week and which had been removed before Saturday, was the cause of the plethora of grief on the first day. Probably it had something to do with it, but want of schooling perhaps accounted for quite as large a share of the grief. Besides this is not the first time that nearly all the accidents have happened on one or other of the two days of the Tollygunge Meeting.

A huge boar was stuck on the 6th instant by Mr. M. Ferguson, the well-known hog hunter of Berhampore. Measured between spears from shoulder to heel he was a shade over 39 inches, and being too heavy for coolies, had to be brought in on a hackery : when weighed he was found to be just 3 maunds 19 seers. This is larger than any measurement recorded in The Indian Field Shikar Book.

We have to thank Messrs. T. E. Bevan for one of their very pretty wall calendars for 1907 devoted to extending the business of Messrs. Collard and Collard for whom Messrs. T. E. Bevan and Company are the agents : the coloured medallion is one of the best we have seen this year.

The final match for the Hyderabad Contingent Polo Cup was played at Secunderabad on the 31st ultimo between the 30th Lancers and the 20th Deccan Horse, the former winning by 5 goals 1 subsidiary to 2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Advancing years seem to help His Majesty King Edward VII to shoot straighter and make bigger bags than ever. We read that the King and a large house party were staying at Chatsworth last week. Two thousand head of game fell to eight guns in one day. His Majesty, who is in excellent health, was never known to shoot with such precision. All previous shooting records were broken.

Full details of the Bhamo Races are published among our Turf news to-day : the sport was uniformly good and the general arrangements reflected great credit on the executive.

We thank the Secretary of the London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Company for copies of their wall Calendar for this year.

Second entries for the Lucknow Spring Meeting are published to-day : we remind those interested that final entries close on the 15th instant.

Too late for inclusion in last issue the report of the final in the I. P. A. Championship tournament reached us and the match having been in progress while we were going to press. Calcutta "A" played brilliantly and beat the 12th Royal Lancers by 6 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries. Details will be found in the usual place.

Many Indian racing men will remember that grand and gallant bay Australian mare Cinder Ellen owned by Messrs. Verschoyle and Paris. She won the Merchants' Plate in January 1898, was a good second to the Maharajah of Patiala's fine mare Virago in the December Stakes.—Virago, as our readers know, won the Trials in 1897 and was fourth in the Cup the same year. Cinder Ellen ran third to Leonidas and Courallie in the Cooch Behar Cup, was fourth to Spray in the Chowringhee Plate and Metropolitan, was second to Bucephalus in the Farewell Stakes. In 1898 she ran fourth to Vanitas in the Viceroy's Cup and third to Vidette in the Keddlestone Stakes the following year. She was sent home to the stud and one of her daughters, Cinders by Florizel II., has recently been attracting a good deal of attention. A writer in the Sporting Life says :—"Cinders, is a mare by Florizel II. out of Cinder Ellen, and as a two-year-old she twice carried Mr. J. Daly's well-known brown jacket and red cap, on the first occasion being beaten by the smart Aspendale, but at her second attempt she won the Greer Plate at Phœnix Park. The latter place was also the scene of her next triumph, at the end of her four-year-old career, when she carried off the Canal Plate from a fair field, not having been stripped as a three-year-old. Cinders made her first appearance over a country in the New Century Steeplechase at Hurst Park last spring, when she fell, but since then her education has evidently been perfected, and she is now one of the quickest fencers we have seen, reminding one of the flying Desert Chief. Speaking of the last-named reminds me to mention that I am not including the aged son of Spahi in my list, for the reason that he is certain to be given plenty of weight by our handicappers, and there is no knowing whether his two Atlantic journeys may have affected him, as he proved somewhat of a failure in America. Reverting to Cinders, she scored her first victory over fences at Cork Park, when easily winning the Duckey Handicap Steeplechase last May, and a week later ran away with the Directors' Handicap at Mullingar. Forming one of the team Mr. J. J. Maher brought over to Cheshire, she was next seen out for the Haydock Park Handicap Steeplechase, on the first day of this month. She scored in ridiculously easy fashion, and three days later gave a similar performance for the Birmingham Handicap Steeplechase. By her run-away win yesterday—her fifth successive victory—Cinders has demonstrated that she is not only a flyer over fences, but can stay fairly well, so that if not a very big one, she should certainly pay for following."

Writing a day or two later the same scribe remarked :—"Cinders gave another electrifying exhibition of speed and jumping in the Midland Steeplechase, and certainly exploded the idea that because she is phenomenally fast she lacks stamina, for she finished faster and fresher than any of her rivals. Aunt May had done so well when giving lumps of weight to Ross at Kempton, and her conqueror had followed up his success by carrying his penalty at Sandown, that she was made a hot favourite, while only Cinders and Extravagance commended themselves to backers among her rivals. These two were inseparable in the market, but Cinders left Extravagance and everything else hopelessly in the rear before half a mile had been covered, and the farther she went the more easily she beat them. It will be interesting to see what penalty will stop her."

In the Court of Session, Edinburgh, last month, Lord Ardwal had before him a divorce suit at the instance of Sir John Alexander Miller, Bart., of Barneyhill, East Lothian, and Heywood Westbury, Wiltshire, against his wife, Ada Walker, or Miller. Sir John Miller, who, as our readers know, is a well-known sportsman and racing man, in his evidence, said he was thirty-nine years of age, and was married at the registry office in the Strand by license in July 1901. There were no children of the marriage. He and his wife lived happily until recently, when trouble arose owing to an acquaintance with Mr. Maximilian de Bathe, who used to call at the house, and had also stayed at his residence at Westbury. Witness remonstrated with his wife about this gentleman's attentions, but she went on receiving them just the same. Lady Miller being ill, it was arranged that she should go to Nice in March, and the witness went with her. While there he ascertained that De Bathe had followed them, and that he was calling upon Lady Miller. He asked her to give up this man, and she said she would think it over. Witness identified photographs of Lady Miller and Mr. de Bathe.

Walter Wells, manager at the Whitehall Hotel, Hampton Court, said that on the evening of May 24 of this year a lady and gentleman came to the hotel and stayed till July 9, when they left together. They gave the names of Capt. and Mrs. de Bathe, and when they went away the gentleman paid the account made out in the name of De Bathe.

Ada Race, who was chambermaid at the Whitehall Hotel in the period indicated, corroborated Mr. Wells's evidence. The lady's clothes were marked "A. M.," and she thought they were a newly married couple.

After other evidence to the same effect, his Lordship granted decree of divorce with expenses to neither party.

A French paper devoted to country life makes the unexpected protest that so far from the French being a nation of frog-eaters, as the English used to say in the unregenerate days before the entente cordiale, this excellent source of nourishment is not nearly enough utilised. The directions given for catching the famed batrachian with the esculent thighs are of an entertaining character; they appear, to judge by the particularity with which the French writer describes them to his countrymen, not to be universally known in France, though they have been described before now for readers elsewhere. A long, stiff rod is needed, and a supply of some bait chosen chiefly for its brightness of colour—a flower, or, still better, a scrap of red flannel, is a very taking lure. It is better to use no hook, as it is a trouble to disengage it when gorged, and the frog's obstinacy leads it to keep a tight hold on the bait and line once it has closed its jaws upon them. As soon as it lays hold, all that the angler does is to jerk it backwards over his head clear of the marsh or pool, and to slip it into the bag or basket with a valve-like aperture which he keeps for the purpose.

At the annual meeting of the members of the Birmingham Gunmakers' Association, held last month, the chairman (Mr. Hughes) said that the representations to the Home Office with reference to the Pistols Act had not met with very satisfactory results, and he did not at present see much hope of the Association obtaining any relief. The same thing applied to representations made to the India Office relative to the India Arms Act. There was, apparently, no hope of getting the prohibition of ·450 and ·303 rifles from importation into India removed. To his mind the reasons given by the Government for maintaining that prohibition were miserably poor. One was that the rifles were liable to be stolen and get into undesirable hands. That, said Mr. Hughes, would apply to any rifle.

News has been received from Major Powell Cotton's expedition, which left England two years ago on a journey from the Nile to the Zambesi. On October 18 the explorer, who, with his wife, had previously spent several months in the Great Forest, had reached a point south of Lake Albert Edward. While on the banks of the Sassa Major Cotton had a hairbreadth escape from a lion which he had wounded. An hour and a half after the beast had been shot, when it was thought that the lion was too disabled to move, the party approached the animal, which, however, suddenly sprang out and seized Major Cotton, fastening its claws in his flesh and endeavouring to get at his head. With remarkable courage, two Waganda natives rushed up to the lion, and while one beat it with a heavy stick, the other slashed it with a hippo hide whip. This drew the lion away from his victim, and at that moment another native shot it through the heart. Major Cotton was carefully tended by Captain Bastein, chief of the Congo Frontier Survey, and had recovered when the last news left. He and Mrs. Cotton were continuing their journey.

A Blue Book, dealing with the extermination of wild animals in Africa, has just been issued, and may be obtained from the King's printers. I commend it to the notice of everyone who feels an interest in the survival of big game in the wilds of British Central Africa. England claims and holds this vast extent of territory by right of conquest or otherwise, and ownership brings with it responsibilities in this connection, which the past and present Government show their desire to fulfil. But the task is by no means easy, as this Blue Book proves, because it is not alone the white men who are waging war upon big game. According to the testimony of a travelling commissioner, who reports to the Government, one native village of 2,000 Kaffirs had no fewer than 200 men who did nothing but hunt and kill elephants. No doubt the late war has left behind it a lot of white men who have gone in for hide and ivory hunting. None of the suggestions contained in this book will strike the man in the street as being of any practical value. One authority says, "prohibit the importation of gunpowder for five years." Another suggests the prohibition of elephant tusks of less weight than 25lbs. being exported. Put a gun tax on the nigger, says a third; but no one who knows him believes that he would pay it. The enclosure of reserved "sanctuaries for wild animals," looks well on paper, but it would require an area many hundreds of miles in extent if the elephant is to be thus protected. That something will have to be done and done quickly if the big game of Africa is to be saved from extermination, no one will doubt after reading this Blue Book.

An interesting relic, said to have belonged to Izaak Walton, was sold at Christie's, last month. This was a tankard made of lava. It was a sideboard ornament, and mounted with silver-gilt cover, handle, neck-mount, and foot, engraved with fruit in festoon and strapwork borders, it made a pretty show. Some German in the sixteenth century made it, and it is 5½ inches high. It was sold for £44 to a Mr. Brain.

Through inadvertence in our leading article two issues ago on "The Winning Sires of 1906," we gave the dam of Love Wisely as Enigma; this should have been Lovelorn. As one of Mr. Hamer Bass' numerous unnamed ones Love Wisely ran for some time as the Lovelorn colt.

We have received from the publishers a copy of Thacker's Calcutta Directory for the current year. This useful compilation has now passed the experimental stage and we are glad to hear the intention is to make it an annual volume of reference. It is complete, convenient, accurate and well printed as we are taught to expect of anything turned out by Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., and a word of special commendation is due in respect of the maps which accompany the book, the coloured one in particular.

We do not suppose that the prospecting party who have accepted the Bhutan Chief's offer to prospect N.-E. of Dewangiri will break ground much before March next, on account of the snow on the densely wooded mountain tract of the outer Himalayas. As to reach their goal they will have to traverse this forest for nigh 100 miles good sport should be met with—bear, both black and brown, methna, the huge mountain sambhur and other big deer, the wild dog and hill fox. There is a plethora of bird life from base to summit, actual game birds being plentiful on the lower slopes, while higher up the common and golden eagle show up. No European who has penetrated along the plateau of this cliff line has left any record of his journey. Hooker and Campbell had to stick to the right bank of the Mandas ravine and, as a matter of fact, we believe but three people have ever attempted to penetrate this fastness. The altered conditions however upon which we now stand with the Bhutias will throw open a hitherto untrodden track—at least so far as Europeans are concerned—and from what little we know of it, it will be found of equal interest to the naturalist, botanist or mere tourist in search of grand and diversified scenery. It is very sparsely populated however, so that coolies would have to be engaged for the full jaunt.

Should nothing occur to prevent it, the big shoot to be organised by His Highness the Maharajah of Cooch Behar in the N.-W. corner of Assam a month hence should prove a record one; for well stocked as the Maharajah's own preserves are the enforcement of close time and reservation of the Bâjni forest as an asylum for the past two seasons, must have resulted in a marked increase of game. It is to be hoped that the Viceregal visit to the frontier province will result in the relaxation of the over strict rules regarding elephant conservation, for as the cold weather advances those mischievous beasts are once more in evidence to the danger of life and property.

Some time back we reported the occurrence of one of those brutal assaults by native villagers on European shikaris which are getting almost common now-a-days. The case last week came up before the Collector of Poona who held a preliminary enquiry and postponed it till to-day when it will be resumed at Dhond.

Lieutenant Ramsay, East Lancashires, in evidence said that on the 27th November he, Lieutenant Whyte, Connaught Rangers, and Captain Webster, R.A.M.C., went out after buck. They complained to one villager that women had purposely frightened the buck away, spoiling their sport. The man replied insolently and threatened to strike witness, who took hold of him and told him to behave properly, whereupon the man tried to catch Lieutenant Ramsay by the throat, at the same time shouting out. A big crowd soon came on the scene. Lieutenant Ramsay was alone at the time and tried to explain, but the villagers were very excited. Lieutenant Whyte then came up and both attempted to go away. Then the villagers set upon them with sticks and stones, knocked them down several times, and beat them. On gaining his feet Lieutenant Ramsay was cut across the nose by a nailed shoe. Both officers were bleeding badly and were covered with bruises. Their guns, which were loaded, were taken away from them. The villagers at first insisted on their going to Saswad to see the magistrate, but when they consented the villagers declined to go. Subsequently the village patel appeared and persuaded the villagers to let the officers go and to return their guns, which was done on the officers promising to pay Rs. 2. Mr. Green, District Superintendent of Police, instituted enquiries and caused some villagers to be arrested. Witness added that when the villagers found they were officers they were very civil and at once let them go.

Lieutenant Whyte gave corroborative evidence, and Captain Webster also gave evidence as to what he saw.

Lieutenant Ramsay, cross-examined, said that he had been in India off and on three and half years. He was beaten by about twenty-five villagers. He did not make a report till the following day. He never said that a woman assaulted him. He saw the chief constable on the 3rd December, and he took him to Mr. Green, District Superintendent. He identified seven accused by their faces, nothing else. The scuffle lasted five minutes.

Lieutenant Whyte, cross-examined, said he had been in India nearly three years. He did not speak Marathi. Lieutenant Ramsay did. Witness had never been in the place before; he saw his assailants for the first time. The affray lasted half an hour. They all sat on the road because they both refused to go further. The villagers had possession of the guns. He may have told the commandant that it was very hard to identify the men. On the 3rd December he went to Pipli village. The police told them they had the men who had committed the assault. About fifty were present when the accused were identified. He identified three, but he was not quite sure about one.

Several other witnesses were cross-examined, including the chief constable of Saswad, who effected the arrests.

We notice that Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Company have been entrusted with all the catering for Lady Minto's Fête. The Committee desire to point out the advantage of the early booking of tables for dinner; for many of the dates we hear the booking is almost full already, such is Calcutta's partiality for a new thing.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—A very large number turned out for the Fourth Extra, which provided a card of seven Arab events, and the way in which the race for newly-imported animals filled made up for what would have been a short card by being split into three. The racing cannot be said to have been of a very high order and it was surprising that, with three which absolutely stuck out, punters only succeeded in getting home twice with their favourites—and one of these at very short odds in a field of three. Still further is it surprising to see the way in which the public comes up again hot and strong to attempt what they should have learnt from past experiences is an almost impossible task with ponies we have never seen run before. It serves them right, and only goes further to prove how the public is ready to follow a lead without any notion whatever about form.

So strong is the inclination to take an exalted view of a horse who has won on the previous occasion that punters went strong for Court Martial in the opening event. Imagine the chestnut beating Sabig, whose form in Poona was sufficient, at a difference of 6lbs.! It is true the former is very fit and the black, au contraire, was sweating profusely but had no difficulty whatever in winning with Ames looking back. His own stable had, I believe, a bit of a plunge on Turn of Luck, but it is gratifying to note the general public did not fall into this bit of gross misjudgment and German Gold was the only one of the quartette he could beat.

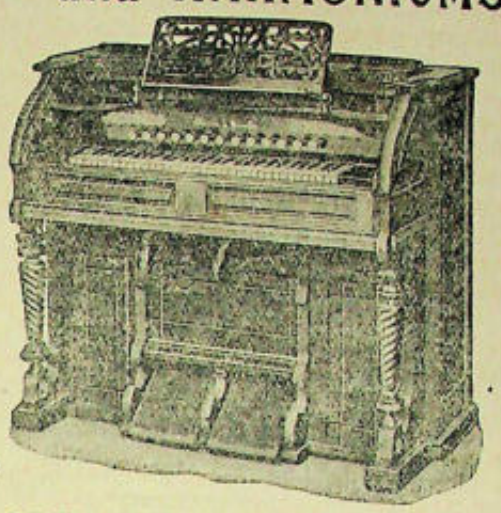
Leaving out the new ponies for the present, we come to the next case, in which one was pitchforked in, and that Hermit, in the Midget Handicap when, with Byramji scratching four of his stable, only three went out. Hermit, 9-13, made the running from Zurriff, 7-12! It is extraordinary how our jockeys have got hold of the idea that a good thing should be ridden out from start to finish and win pulling up and looking back. Williams took this fine looking bay, perhaps the best all-round Arab we have in the country, in front and had his opponents beat at the distance. So confident however was he that a game effort by Zurriff under the whip for over a furlong made him drive the favourite hard to win.

We were met with a bit of a puzzler in the Marine Lines Plate, for which Nooman went out favourite and plenty of money for King Cobweb, which form the stable rightly thought was good enough for a plunge. Bond made far too little use of him however, and his turn of speed was insufficient when it came to a finish. The race was fought out by "two tens and longer odds" candidates in Skylark and Shella, and a desperate finish it was.

The third race worth going nap on and the second instance of a pony being rushed away for a hollow win was the Bedouin Plate. His finish with Mudlool, a neck and neck race for two furlongs, should be sufficient proof and it is about time he was given a trial as a racehorse, held well in hand for the first part, and not as a squib. He took a six length lead and won anyhow. Darby, in giving chase to open up the way for Shanwar, was done with and his stable companion would have been much nearer had he been asked earlier. On this running Antica is a far better pony than supposed.

Turning to the new Arabs, there are several likely to do well though, peculiarly enough, these did not show up in the races. The first of these was the poorest looking lot, and the best of them were Lailan and Lucky Prince, who finished 1-2 with the latter a warm favourite. It was the second which saw the winner in front of not a few who will soon reverse this. To start with, the favourite, Rackhan, came up with such a tremendous dash at the bend that not only had he, in my opinion, the race won, but flew out on to the tan and consequently lost it. Two of the best were Commander and Shah Line, who both got away very badly, but the former showed something of his form in getting into third place, and it will take a big price to change his ownership. Third provided a great finish, ending in a fine win by Little Sanaya, after making all the running from Squire.

Amongst the numbers present all were delighted to see Lady Jenkins again after the long absence which followed her sad bereavement.



There were three races sailed on Saturday at the Yacht Club in only a slight wind. The "A" Class Handicap proved a very easy win for Eileen against two others, Sapphire and Melody, who got well over the line. On the heat up to the schooner, Eileen, bar accidents, had her race won and came in an easy winner, increasing her advantage on the return journey.

The Small Boat Race was a fine one in which six started, and Meg led throughout. After the first heat Lapwing sailed very well and kept Tomtit well in hand on time with Meg and Midget very near her. Finally Lapwing won by the narrow margin of a second from Midget, who just beat Tomtit on time and Meg won the class prize easily.

Though Yellow Peril sailed well and led handsomely throughout she could not save her time. Sayonara held her well and won fairly comfortably with Pixie beating Yellow Peril by a margin of nineteen seconds.

One of the best runs of the season was secured by the Bombay Hounds when last out; there were two, the first ending in a kill before very long. After passing Bomanwadi and through the Railway gardens hounds ran their jack into a compound bounded by a thick cactus hedge and rolled him over before he could find a way out. The second was one which lasted quite an hour during which hounds hunted grandly and a very large number were left over the rough and rocky going. From Shar Village, after an erratic run and a temporary check, hounds hunted the dense wood on Hog's Back Hill, from which they fortunately chased their quarry into the open across Horse Shoe Valley and he took to the hill on the opposite side. It was a grand sight to see the jack tear down the hill again with the pack close up, but he then ran into some thick undergrowth where he was left, having saved his brush after a great fight and after outdistancing the major part of the field, about thirty, which met the Master that morning.

Athletic Notes.

SOME observations on training for Athletics in India, diet and kindred matters, will be found in our issue of to-day.

A full account of the recent Southern India Reliability Trials appears among our motoring news: our Special Correspondent took part in the run, which, all things considered, was a success.

The Bombay Billiard Championship is advertised elsewhere. It will be played for in February and will, doubtless, be as big a success as it was last year when Mr. E. W. Pyrke won the Cup.

The Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Rowing Club has been fixed for Thursday, the 24th instant, and will be held, as usual, at the Strand Road boat-house at 6-30 P.M.

The Britishers gave the French footballers a good beating when they played them under Rugby rules at Richmond last Saturday. The verdict was 41 points to 13, the winners being "all over" their opponents in the second half.

"Talking of caddies, observes the Rawalpindi Correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette, I hear that caddies on some links are in the habit of gambling in pies by betting on the result of each match. As the player addresses his ball, the lips of one caddy may be seen to move in earnest prayer to his particular deity to strengthen the arms, and straighten the eye, while the other caddy invokes the god of foozles, and chuckles indignantly when the ball is bunkered. Apart from such abuses, the game of golf, as played by Englishmen, is an education in morals to the native, possibly also in bad language. A police orderly acting as caddy the other day, expressed his astonishment at the way the sahibs play golf. On being asked why, he said 'because they don't cheat.' No doubt while I was hacking away in the bunker, his detective eye had been fixed on me from behind the friendly shelter of some distant tree; and then for the sahib to be such a fool as to lose this opportunity of under calculating his score was indeed most astonishing."

At the conclusion of the annual meeting of the Stewards of Henley Regatta the "foreign entry" question was dealt with and the result was embodied in the following resolution:—

At a special general meeting of the Stewards of Henley Royal Regatta, held at the Town Hall, Henley, on 15th December, it was unanimously resolved that no entry shall be accepted of any crew or sculler out of the United Kingdom unless such crew or sculler belongs to a club which is affiliated to a union or federation having an agreement with the Committee of Management of Henley Regatta, and the rules of the regatta were altered so as to give effect to this resolution.

Miss Piggott, now well known in Calcutta legal and commercial circles as an enterprising typist and lithographer, and the pioneer of independent lady typists in this city, sends us a neat and plainly printed calendar for 1907.

Many people will read the announcement of "benefits" at Harmston's Circus with regret, for such notices are the forerunners of the day, now close at hand, when these popular entertainers will fold up their tents and hie them to Allahabad, Jubbulpore, Bombay and other distant spots. Throughout the week under review they have been "playing to big business," as they say in the profession, and they need to, we should say, in order to cover their expenses, which must be enormous. Night and day performances have been put before full and appreciative audiences, and at the matinées the pleasure of the juveniles has been expressed in a manner little short of boisterous. The Frantz troupe are good enough for anything on the carpet; they are almost better on the rings. Several novelties they exhibited were witnessed with the pleased and genuine astonishment that a really superb effort seldom fails to evoke—and some of their "upstarts," "dislocations," "planks" and what not were truly marvellous. All the rest of the Company, whose turns we have noticed already, maintain the high standard of merit with which they led off, the clowns have some new funniments, the animals remain fixed in favour. The four miniature ponies, whose feats we had somehow missed up to last Saturday, were in great fettle at the matinée: in our box they excited a flagrant breach of the tenth commandment among the juveniles, and looking around the arena the same covetous gaze was seen on nine-tenths of the juvenile seat-holders. Last week's jumping contest found our old friend "Creamy" of Tollygunge Horse Show fame a prize winner; ridden by Mr. Reg. Powell this clever pony put up a creditable performance and the rider pouched a nice gold watch. There were five entries, namely, Mr Steve Margrett's "Singola," Mr. Ted Kerr's "Sea Spray," Mr. Steve Margrett's "Trier," Mr. R. Powell's "Creamy," and Mr. Ted Kerr's "Rocket." An extra item on Thursday was the presentation of handsome souvenirs to C. Hoyt and Watson, the rider and trainer of Seclusion, who won the Indian Grand National Steeplechase on New Year's Day. John Welby Cooke, an old favourite, is again on the bills astonishing us with his daring jockey acts and barebacked riding.

To-morrow night we may look for an extra special effort by the Company for the occasion is the benefit of that leviathan entrepreneur Colonel Bob Love—"one of the great triple events of the Calcutta season" vide advertisement. The Colonel deserves a bumper house if any one does, and it is Lombard Street to a China orange that he gets it. Among the items we see there is to be a high jumping contest. A handsome trophy presented by the Shippers and Dealers to the Colonel will be given by him to the winner. Another special turn will be that of John Welby Cooke in his great personation of John-John. The premier Augoste of the Orient, Wally Banvard, late of Harmston's Circus, will appear on this occasion only. Thomas Elliot, the well-known baritone, will contribute a song and the bill will be altogether of the "monster" order.

We invite attention to the advertisement of Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son's Library appearing in this issue. The firm has probably the largest number of surplus books withdrawn from library circulation and important "remainders" of popular works extant, and these, as our readers will see, are now being offered at greatly reduced rates. This Library is established in connection with W. H. Smith and Son's numerous Railway Bookstal's and Bookshops which are opened in all the principal towns throughout England and Wales. It embraces all the most important works of History, Biography and Memoir, Travel, Sport, Fiction, Poetry, Science, Theology, and Miscellaneous Literature, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews. The list of books now offered at reduced prices is very large and gives a wide selection to Indian readers who, by sending a post-card, as invited in the advertisement, may "hear of something to their advantage" as the lawyers say.

The entries are now coming in for the Highland Gathering to be held in connection with Lady Minto's Fête. Everything points to the gathering being a success. The Highland Brigade are holding their annual games this week and the successful competitors are coming down for the Calcutta gathering, with the result that the piping and dancing will be of a very high order. A raised platform, 24 ft. by 24 ft., is being made so as to give spectators a full view of the intricate steps of the "Reel o' Tulloch" and "Gillie Callum" (Sword Dance).

The tug-of-war will be very keenly contested and a great struggle will be seen in the final. The European policemen in Calcutta are sending in a team and it is expected that H. M.'s "Perseus" will also send in a very strong lot.

The Piper Society of Scotland have very generously presented a gold medal for competition in the piping events, and the Committee have decided to award it to the most successful piper at the gathering. The Highland Society of London have also presented three very nice silver medals for Marches and Strathspeys. As the events are all open it is hoped that a large entry will be received from local athletes. Entry forms and further particulars may be had from the Honorary Secretary, Mr. Malcolm G. Stuart, Bank of Bengal.

As will be seen from the programme of events (advertised elsewhere) the prize money amounts to Rs. 1,500 and it is expected that the local expenses will amount to over Rs. 2,000.

The Committee appeal to the large number of influential Scotchmen in Calcutta for subscriptions to defray the expenses of the gathering, so that the total drawings may be handed over to Her Excellency without any deduction for preliminary expenses. The Committee confidently hope that this appeal may not be in vain.

"CLANN NA GAIDHEAL AN GUAILIBH A CHEILLE."

Subscriptions will be gladly received by the Honorary Secretary.

The South African Football team concluded their English tour on New Year's Day when they met Cardiff. The ground was a swamp and the Springboks suffered their second defeat, Cardiff beating them by 17 points to nil. Two days later at Auteuil the South Africans beat France by 55 points to 6. Appended are complete results of the tour.

The first local match in connection with the Minto Fête Football Tournament was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. There was a fair attendance, H. E. the Viceroy being among those present. The competing teams were Mohan Bagan and the Calcutta F. C. After a hard game in which Calcutta had the best of matters, Mohan Bagan got away in the last minute and B. Bhaduri scored the only goal of the match. Teams:—

MOHAN BAGAN—Mookerjee, goal; Charterjee and A. Dass, backs; Roy, B. Dass, and Palit, half-backs; B. Bhadhuri, Sing, Sircar, Dessu and Abdul, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; Gahan and V. Cooper, backs; Crawford, McConnell and Ansell, half-backs; Ferrier, Forster, Fyfe, Sherman and Binning, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Wilder.

The following teams have already entered for the Murray Football Tournament:—1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry, The Royal Irish Rifles, The Black Watch, "N" Battery, R.H.A., IV Brigade, R.F.A. 2nd Rifle Brigade, 12th Lancers, 2nd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 60th Rifles, 2nd South Staffordshire Regiment, The Carabiniers, 2nd Royal Berkshire Regiment, The Northamptonshire Regiment, The Royal Scots Fusiliers, The Cameronians, 1st Durham Light Infantry, The Somersetshire Light Infantry, 1st Gloucestershire Regiment, The Royal Dragoons, "O" Battery, R.H.A.

The Marquis of Hastings' prejudice against Hermit cost him dear. To Mr. Chaplin alone he lost £104,750, and when the astute backer gave the impetuous nobleman a little friendly advice to cover some of the money—which would have been easy, as Mr. Chaplin had taken a much shorter price than the horse was then quoted at—his good counsel was received with jeers and an offer of still longer odds.

Despite this insult, Chaplin behaved in a very generous manner, and when the Marquis was unable to come up to time on the following Monday morning, the winner did not press his claim. Seldom however, did the youthful plunger miss a chance of annoying his creditor, and at a sale of Her Majesty's yearlings he persisted in bidding over Mr. Chaplin, until the latter, stung by the peer's unmanly conduct, asked him to settle the outstanding account.

Not until Ascot had passed was the Marquis able to pay his debts, but at this meeting he more than recovered his Epsom losses. John Day's stable seemed irresistible. With Vauban they won the Prince of Wales's Stakes and secured the Triennial; in the Biennial, Europa started at a long price, and landed them a heavy sum; Lecturer's double event of the Gold Cup and Alexandra Plate caused many bookies to look serious; while the flying Lady Elizabeth carried nearly £10 000 of the Marquis's money when she romped home for the New Stakes

London Week by Week.

Thursday, 20th December 1906.

THE Post Office this Christmas has extended a specially protecting hand over letters for the foreign mails, hitherto liable to be flooded out of their proper course by the Christmas card traffic. We are enjoined not to put our letters for abroad into the Post Office box as from to-day until after the 25th; but to "hand them over the counter" we would ensure their proper dispatch. Meantime we are resolutely enjoying ourselves as our indomitable national spirit is; we have not seen the sun this week, a heavy over-head fog having lain over London like a pall. Resignation to the inconveniences of the season became acute last year, and there are symptoms of revolt. Some of the large shops are flying notices that their shutters will be up ONLY ON THE 25TH AND 26TH I have seen none of the liberal placards that announce closing as from Friday night to Thursday morning; whence it may be inferred that the Christmas Holiday movement has undergone something of an eclipse: due possibly to the increasing numbers of people who go abroad for ten days or a fortnight to lands where Christmas is less inconveniently observed.

The old fashioned Christmas card with snow and robin, which smelt at the top of its voice, seems to be dying out altogether. One rarely sees them nowadays: the specially printed card with the sender's name and good wishes; the picture post-card with a view of the sender's house, or some of his (or her) family has taken the place of the old card which the economically minded used to put away for dispatch next Christmas. I am inclined to approve of the modern card: it has the personal note which seems the essence of a reminder that you have not forgotten the recipient or are not forgotten of the sender. Some of us maintain touch with people we haven't seen for twenty years and never correspond with, by means of the Christmas card. Long life to it in its sensible shapes.

Well, the fat is in the fire now with a vengeance, if only there is any real "feeling" in this country in favour of Mr. Birrell's much be-talked measure: which I doubt. The Lords have "insisted" on acceptance of their amendments to the Education Bill and thus throw the onus of killing the Bill on the Commons who will no doubt do the slaughtering quickly and kick the corpse out of the ring to clear it for a fight. "What fun we might have" said a hard riding gentleman whose name has not been recorded for an admiring posterity "if it were not these d—d hounds." The present atmosphere at Westminster recalls the saying "What fun we might have if it were not for these d—d bills." Now the principal corpus vile is disposed of the way is clear for that attack on the Upper House so dear to the radical mind. They put a grave face upon it in public: but the inner sanctuary of radicalism is aglow with delight: and after Christmas the fight will begin in earnest. "Down with the Lords" is a capital cry; and it will be the means of distracting attention from practical mischief, while it does no harm to anybody.

The grants of the King's Hospital Fund for the year have been made. £110,000 or £10,000 more than in 1905 has been distributed among about a hundred hospitals.

The Hampstead General Hospital gets the largest helping, to wit £5,000, this being given to enable the institution to take advantage of a conditional offer of £20,000 from a private quarter. The distribution committee continues to keep a vigilant eye upon the financial management of hospitals whose extravagance in some cases had become almost notorious; and its donations are regulated by the care displayed by those who administer the funds. The Prince of Wales announced at the meeting on Monday that a short act of Parliament had been applied for, in order to place the King's Fund on a strictly legal basis. When obtained this may lead to reconstitution of the council and committees and measures to define clearly their duties and responsibilities.

The Admiralty has dealt with officers concerned in the Portsmouth stokers' riots and with the sentences on the stokers. Commodore Stopford is removed from his command of the barracks as having failed to deal with the disturbances with "sufficient firmness and resource." The impression gained from the reports was that he displayed great patience and tact as well as firmness, but evidently that impression was wrong. Commodore Drury Lowe is superseded for "having failed in his duties as executive officer;" and Commander Mitchell suffiers for having "allowed a drill order to be used for other than drill purposes:" though how he could be responsible for Mr. Collard's action in ordering stokers "on the knee" when he was not on the spot is more than the mere outsider can understand. Mr. Collard, having been tried by court-martial, escapes with a caution to use more judgment in future. As for the stokers who incited the riot, Moady's sentence of five years is reduced to three, and Day's eighteen months is reduced to twelve. From which we must infer that incitement to mutiny is really not such a grave offence as naval officers, who are responsible for discipline, suppose it to be. The Admiralty has directed that the order "on the knee" is not to be used for other than drill purposes.

The Education Committee of the L.C.C. means to try and check the practice of cigarette smoking by small boys, but I do not think the means it is proposed to adopt will be very effective. One result of smoking appears in the shaky handwriting of the smoker and the idea is to enlarge some of these examples and hang them up in schoolrooms as awful examples. Boys must have changed much since my time if this has any effect: better, far better, a good strong cheroot smoked to the bitter end over a bucket.

I had not realised till the other evening how cheaply His Majesty's faithful Commons can "do themselves" in the dining room at Westminster. The honourable member gets for one shilling a really excellent dinner very much better than that you pay five shillings for in a dozen restaurants of my occasional acquaintance. Then, the House being a Royal Palace, spirits and wine enter there duty free and are retailed practically at cost price. You can pay more than a shilling for your dinner if you like, of course, but the meal furnished at that figure should do something to discourage extravagance.

There was another suffragist row at Westminster on Monday evening. It began about nine o'clock in the usual way, attempts to make speeches in the central lobby. The police were content to lead the orators forth into the chilly fog but the orators had come to be arrested and were not to be denied. As fast as the police conveyed them out they rushed in again and within an hour the crown of martyrdom had been won by eleven screaming females before a crowd that blocked the streets. The eleven included none of those who were released from Holloway some days ago. Twenty shillings or fourteen days as first class misdemeanants was the sentence. A brute of a brother paid one woman's fine and she was denied the privilege of imprisonment. The public is growing a little tired of suffragism and the paragraphs relating thereto are comparatively brief.

"Peter Pan" began his third season on Tuesday night at the Duke of York's. The principal change in the cast is that Miss Pauline Chase plays the name part in place of Miss Nina Boucicault. Not everyone is satisfied with the change, but it seemed to me that Miss Chase was singularly successful in creating the eerie atmosphere of Mr. Barrie's peculiar fairyland and thereby strengthened the illusion of it. There are few changes in the play itself: the only one worth noticing is that at the end of Act III, where the gull does not wait for Peter to drive her off that amazing nest, but leaves it of her own will transferring her eggs to another nest in order that he may launch the original nest as a raft. Mr. Gerald du Maurier is the pirate captain as of yore, but Mr. Mank Allen takes the part of Mr. Darling which Mr. du Maurier doubled with that of Joe Hook in previous productions.

The Westminster Play—The "Phormis" of Terence—was followed by a Latin pantomime which displayed a nice appreciation of topical opportunity and fearful talent for puns. Sophrona, a nurse, who has a very dirty boy to wash opens fire with remarks on Soap trusts: Nausistrata then appears as a suffragist, Phormio comes on attended by a Chinese slave who does not want to be repatriated. Next we have a publisher bent on making a corner in books: and a scene involving criticism of tinned meat. The new spelling favoured by Mr. Roosevelt is reviewed and this paves the way for an Education Bill which has been so mangled in "another place" that nobody recognises it. Then more suffragism from Nausistrata: and so curtain after a flood of puns which would stump all but the best latinist.

"Alice in Wonderland" is to be revived this evening at the Prince of Wales': there was a dress rehearsal yesterday to which thirty nurses from each hospital in London were invited. The Vedrenne Barker management have decided to open the doors of the Court and Theatre an hour before curtain rise during the winter in order that the patrons of unreserved seats may not have to wait in the pavement outside. The Savoy went one better on the afternoon of the 8th, the first day of the Gilbert and Sullivan revival: the pit and gallery people were admitted early and supplied with tea.

It was decided at a meeting of actors and actresses, held in the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday, that the Irving Memorial should be a statue erected on some central site in Town, at a cost of £3,000. The only voice raised not wholly in harmony with the project was that of Miss Ellen Terry. She did not oppose the scheme, but thought that help from the outside public should not be refused; in fact that it should be invited. Miss Terry, it must be added, has a scheme of her own in view and is supported by many prominent men in the church, art, literature and politics. This embraces erection of a museum, library and picture gallery as a public memorial to Sir Henry Irving.

Colonel Von Donop has made his report on the Grantham Railway Accident of 20th September. Why the signals against the train were disregarded by the engine driver remains a mystery. The levers of the engine were so bent and damaged that no conclusions could be drawn from the fact that their position indicated endeavour to cut off steam; and there is nothing to show that the brake mechanism failed. The possible explanation of the disaster is that the driver, Fleetwood, drunk or was taken suddenly ill and that the fireman, Talbot, did not realise it in time to take control of the engine. Fleetwood had been absent from duty three times since February owing to illness and once was suddenly taken ill while driving. The Company is admonished that the nature of the unfortunate man's illness ought to have been ascertained before he was allowed to resume his place in the engine cab.

A case of great importance has been decided by a police magistrate this week. By this decision it appears that if Arry kiss Arriet in the street an action for assault cannot be upheld—unless Arriet object to being kissed. If Arriet run away objection is not held proven, running away being regarded by the law as a possible incitement to Arry to repeat the kiss. It is reassuring to discover among the Metropolitan police a man endued with a sense of propriety so lofty that he arrests Arry for committing a kiss under these circumstances: but having regard to the frequency of the crime and to the other matters, perhaps of graver consequence, which demand the vigilance of the force it is just as well that the legal status of kissing should be clearly defined.

It has been decided in the Court of King's Bench that a barrister must put a penny stamp on his brief when acknowledging his fee if it exceed the statutory £2. The claim of the Revenue authorities was opposed by the General Council of the Bar.

The King's Labour Tents in King's Way were opened for the winter on Tuesday by Princess Louise. This is their third winter: since first opened to 31st March 1906, there have been 239,470 admissions.

Mr. Justice Warrington has refused the petition of the Cyclists Touring Club to be allowed to amend its constitution so as to admit all classes of tourists especially motorists. Since motoring became so general the membership of the C.T.C. has fallen from over 60,000 to 32,500 and the governing body fears for the club's prosperity. On the other hand a large minority strongly objected.

The Health reports say nothing of the prevalence of influenza in London, but there seems to be a great deal of it, though not of a serious form. Three people out of five one meets either have just had it or have it in their houses, and the doctors and chemists are as busy as they care to be. There has been a regular epidemic at Oxford, denials by authority notwithstanding.

The Marylebone Electric Light plant failed last evening and the result was that the shops on the north side of Oxford Street suddenly found themselves in the dark. The street lights went out too, and for fifteen or twenty minutes chaos reigned among the crowds of christmas shoppers. The shoplifting fraternity seized their opportunity and considerable losses are reported from many of the large shops.

DACCA ANCIENT AND MODERN.*

MR. F. B. BRADLEY BIRT, whose former works on "Chota Nagpur" and "An Indian Upland" were so much appreciaed, has favoured us with a more important volume in his "Romance of an Eastern Capital." It is in fact the history of the revived city of Dacca, together with its predecessors at the head of the confluence of the great rivers of Eastern Bengal, once forming the ancient Hindu Kingdom of Vikrampur, whose rulers were Buddhists holdings way for many centuries, while across the big river the rajahs of Sonargoan flourished; perhaps earlier. Ere plunging into his subject Mr. Birt treats us in pages 7 and 8 to some admirable word painting on the scenes witnessed from the river steamers that now penetrate from end to end of the new province; justly lauding the advantages of that means of travelling over the rush, discomfort and unprofitableness of dashing through a country by rail. Legends and myths, though not altogether discarded, are not relied on; only such as bear some resemblance to probability being quoted. The story of these two ancient states occupies 50 of the 300 odd pages. Eastern Bengal, as we know it, dates from 1400 A.D. from which time down to 1758, when John Company became firmly established in Dacca, and the history of the satrapy is one long tale of intrigue, rebellions of the Subadars, invasions of neighbouring states; while, at the same time, the province had to be defended against Arracanese, Mughs, and in the 16th century Portuguese buccaneers.

To those acquainted with that part of the country it will be strange to read the Viceregal forces comprised cavalry by the thousand, though that large fleets were entertained will excite no surprise; in fact the gun boats of Bruce in Upper Assam which patrolled the river down to 1824 were the last of the nawara of Dacca.

Of the English officials who subsequently ruled Eastern Bengal there are some famous names. The short memoir of the first W. M. Thackery is to be found on page 227. His proceedings in Sylhet are not given in detail, but they would furnish instructive reading; as would also those of Hugh Lindsay who came after him in the then frontier province. Though eminently a political work "The Romance" will interest many of the general reading public. Books such as these dealing with the less known provinces of the Empire cannot but prove of benefit to the people, the tourist and the sportsman and we hope both Mrs. Bradley Birt and others will not only continue their efforts in this line, but incite others to follow their example.

SHOOTING NEAR BUDAON.

THERE are some excellent jheels within easy reach of this town. The nearest railway station is Aonla, about an hour's run from Chandausi. There is a good road from Aonla to Budaon, and there are several small marshes on the way which are quite worth a visit. Some of these little swamps lie from a mile to a mile and a half to the left of the road, going towards Budaon, and about six miles from that town. In the cold weather one can rely on finding some teal and snipe. One morning in November I got five couple of snipe and a teal. Another day a snipe, four teal, a shoveller, and six pigeons. I also shot a black buck near the road, but antelope are not very numerous in the Budaon district, and their horns run small.

Near Kakora, on the Ganges, where the great fair is periodically held, are two splendid jheels. I went out in a punt on Nurpur jheel one November afternoon, and brought back eighteen duck and teal. There were six different varieties of duck in the bag, viz white-eyed pochard, red-crested pochard, gadwall, wigeon, pintail, and spot-bill. This jheel is a deep one covered with high reeds, so that duck not actually killed outright, are generally lost. There are snipe and quail round the edges of the marsh, the latter often being found in wet grass, in which they probably take refuge, when disturbed by natives working in the drier ground higher up.

Referring to my notes I find that I shot nine brace of grey quail and a couple of snipe, between four and six one evening round the edges of Nurpur jheel. The other swamp is the Bahadur Ganj jheel. I heard that this was excellent for duck, but had no time to exploit it myself. My investigations only extended to the snipe ground near it where I had a day's shooting. My bag was twelve couple of snipe, a brace of grey quail, four teal, and a pigeon. The big Kakora jheels require systematic working to do them justice; I only paid the district a flying visit, and had therefore no time to find out the best way of working them. The water is too deep for coolies to walk through in line, as they do in the celebrated Sind jheels, near Shadipally.

Kakora is a good place for black partridges, and there are also hog-deer to be had. Black buck, as I mentioned above, are not numerous, but some herds can always be found between Kakora and Budaon, if one leaves the road and rides across country.

I saw some geese on the Kakora jheels, and also a great many stock pigeons (Palumbana eversmanni) which come down to the edges of the marsh in the mornings. These are smaller, lighter coloured birds than the common blue rock, averaging only 7½ ounces instead of 10; while the rump is whitish and not ashy as in the case of Columba intermedia. Stock pigeons also are quite different to blue rocks in their habits, resting in the middle of the day and not feeding. Then too they do not return to their roosting place, till late in the evening, and roost in trees, not ruins and wells. Although one can get black partridges on foot round Kakora, yet the cover being high it is better, if possible, to borrow an elephant. I saw a Collector near Aonla shooting snipe from an elephant, but that was the conduct of a sybarite. If one cannot procure an elephant for the black partridges, the best plan is to beat out the patches of sugarcane with a few coolies.

Besides the small game enumerated above, there are hares and grey partridges, also, no doubt, sand grouse, but during my short stay I saw none of these last.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

NOTES ON SOUTH AFRICAN GAME.

BIG game is far to seek. The huge elephant, the ponderous hippo and rhino, the terrible lion, the savage buffalo, the graceful cameleopard, the bigger species of buck—these constitute a large and costly order. But South Africa abounds in feathered game, of numerous varieties, from the ostrich to the quail, from the bustard to the snipe. All these are more or less accessible to the sportsman who visits comparatively civilised and inhabited regions; the majority more than less.

The domesticated and "cultivated" ostrich is, so to speak, an article of commerce. One no more thinks of shooting this valuable bird at the Cape than one does the farmyard goose or duck at home. But for the sportsman, there are still wild ostriches left. They are to be found in portions of the Kalahari (the hunter's paradise), south of Lake Nagami, and in the hinterland of Damaraland and Namaqualand. In the wild state birds are extremely shy and wary, and their flight, when at full speed, is more rapid than that of any mammal. But the ostriches, usually in small packs or large herds, run in wide circles, so that sportsmen on horseback can pretty readily cut them off and shoot them.

Passing the ostrich, as not every man's quarry, we come to the bustards. Of these there are a dozen varieties in South Africa. The best known are the paauw (the wild turkey of the sportsmen of the Old Colony) and the khoorhaan. The Stanley bustard is found in the Karoo, in Griqualand West, and in the Garden Colony. The kori bustard is the largest and noblest game bird in existence. A fine specimen, in good condition, might weight anything from 20lbs. to 50lbs. Usually encountered in pairs, this bird inhabits certain acacia-clad veld in the Karoo region; certain parts of the top end of Cape Colony, Natal, and the Orange River Colony; and particularly Damaraland and Bechuanaland up to the Zambesi. Straight powder being used, the "Ghaam paauw" is an easy mark for the rifle, but as the kori feed on open flats it is not easily approached. The best way to get within range is to ride round it in ever narrowing circles.

The black khoorhaan is very much smaller than the foregoing, being about the size of an English cock pheasant. The commonest, not only of the bustard family, but also of all the game birds in South Africa, it is to be met with practically everywhere, from the Cape to the Orange River. Other varieties of khoorhaan, some larger and some smaller than the foregoing, are found in the Karoo, and here and there in various parts of South Africa which are not too near town or too much cultivated. The habitat of the Vaal khoorhaan is, as its name implies, in the Transvaal, but it is also found to the westward, so far as Damaraland, but not to the northward so far as the Zambesi, where there is the black-bellied khoorhaan. This is a very graceful bird, somewhat suggestive of a peacock.

Pretty common throughout South Africa are at least three varieties of guinea-fowl—"Printado;" "Tarantal" of the Dutch; the "Galeny" of British farmyards. The crowned or common wild guinea-fowl is still preserved in some parts of Cape Colony, Natal, and the Orange River Colony. It is plentiful upwards to the Zambesi. It is abundant in the vicinities of the rivers Botletle, Crocodile, Notwani, and Chobe. In various districts pot-hunters have woefully shrunk this bird, by shooting into the brown when the birds are roosting, and by feasting on the livers and discarding the delicate flesh of the bodies of the slain guinea-fowl.

The more accessible and frequented parts of South Africa are fairly rich in Columbidæ—pigeons, doves, and turtles. There are Vinago, the common turtle, peristera, and the "Cape pigeon," which is a sea-gull.

There are at least three other interesting species. There is the rock-dove, the origin of domestic varieties. There is the Cape turtle—a pretty bird, measuring only 6in., but looking large, owing to the great length of its tail. And there is the carunculated ground-pigeon (Geophilus carunculatus), which is a native of South Africa. It is a thick and round bird, about equal in size to the common turtle.

South African wildfowl include numerous varieties of geese, duck, teal, pochard, etc. There is also the dikkop, or thick-knee, which is higher and larger than the great snipe. There are at least three varieties of snipe—the black-quilled, the painted, and the great. The black-quilled is the common snipe of the country. It is met with more plentifully in the Cape Colony and the Transvaal than elsewhere, and frequents the muddy vleis. Woodcock are unknown.

South Africa is a land of pleasing topsy-turveydom. There, the giraffe is a camel (kameel); the hyena is a tiger (teegre voolf); the unclean feeding hare is an ass (haas); the guinea-fowl is a peacock (paauw); and so no. Similarly, the Dutch term for all ground-roosting francolins and sand-grouse is partridge (patraise), and for tree-roosting francolins, pheasants (phaysaants).

The francolin, or Cape redwing, may be found all over South Africa. An allied species, also called the "redwing," inhabits the neighbourhood of the Orange River, as its scientific name (Francolinus gariepensis) implies. Many other francolins there are, including the Natal francolin, commonly known as the "Namaqua pheasant."

Quail, too, are generally distributed, including the common quail, which is more plentiful in the lower divisions of Cape Colony, the Transvaal, and Natal than farther north. Their annual arrival usually commences towards spring—about August—but depends largely upon the rainfall. In wet seasons they are to be encountered and flushed in countless numbers, particularly when good dogs are employed.

The sand-grouse, ori "partridge," is very commonly distributed throughout the Karoo and in Little Namaqualand. One has to seek the rarer varieties further up-country, particularly in Rhodesia.

It must be borne in mind that free shooting is almost as rare in South Africa as in Britain. Owners and occupiers of soil preserve and reserve the game on their lands, though they are usually very hospitable towards the immigrant sportsman of the right type.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

X

SO far I have confined myself to writing only about fishing for mahseer in rivers. To write up to the title of these articles, there still remain to be mentioned mahseer fishing in lakes, and the taking of fish other than mahseer, wherever they may be found. I propose to take the former subject first and finish it before discussing the varied fishing to be obtained throughout India.

The principal lake fishing to be obtained in India is in Kumaon. A book on "Angling in the Kumaon Lakes" was published several years ago by Dr. Walker, and at once took place among the few standard works on Indian angling, but this book was written when Dr. Walker was about to retire from the Government service, after seventeen years' experience of these lakes. He was far too astute to publish this very attractive work while he still retained a personal interest in the sport to be obtained in them, and it is much to be regretted that want of proper supervision, and the incessant poaching committed by natives, in the way of taking undersized fish, has vastly altered the character of the fishing for the worse, in the last few years. There is, however, still a certain amount of sport to be had.

The four lakes in which fishing is obtainable are Bhim Tal, Sath Tal, Naukuchia Tal, and Malwa Tal. Naini Tal has been spoilt by boating and is next to useless for fishing purposes, though it contains monsters which refuse to take any kind of bait. Bhim Tal has rapidly deteriorated owing to excessive ground bait fishing by natives, both with and without licenses, and the taking of undersized fish which goes on for eight months in the year. Three years ago I mentioned this deterioration in the columns of the Pioneer, and at the same time suggested remedial measures which might be adopted, but it does not come within the sphere of the present article to discuss this question here. In the time that has elapsed since these lakes were stocked with mahseer, they have killed off all other fish running to any size in all these lakes. I hear that efforts have been made to improve the fishing in Bhim Tal recently, but three years ago it was very poor, and it will probably take some years to effect an appreciable improvement.

Sath Tal is a lovely lake, or rather two lakes with a connecting channel, until the draining of its waters for irrigating purposes severs the connection between the two. This occurs just before the rainy season, and the fishing distinctly falls off for a month or so at this time. The mahseer take a fly fairly well here. The lake has the advantage of being within easy reach—(four short miles)—of the hotel and the private boarding house at Bhim Tal, either of which can arrange for food for a day's outing. There are also two or three little cottages to let at Sath Tal.

Naukuchia is also four miles from Bhim Tal. There is a small furnished house on the edge of the lake for which a charge of one rupee per diem per room is made. This lake with its surroundings is exceedingly beautiful, but the water is unusually clear and the tackle used must be of the finest sort, and even then the fish taken run small.

Malwa Tal is perhaps the best fishing lake of the lot, and the least frequented. It has a furnished bungalow close to the lake. It is nine miles from Bhim Tal, and a thousand feet lower, and is therefore hotter than the other three lakes which are from four thousand to four thousand four hundred feet above sea level. Supplies should be taken from Bhim Tal.

The best and in fact almost the only way to fish these lakes is from boats of which there are three or four on hire at Bhim Tal. When necessary a boat must be carried across to the other lakes by coolies. The hire is Re. 1 per diem per boat, with eight to twelve annas for the boatman in addition. In these lakes the most successful bait is a fly. Bottom feeding fish are taken on paste and natural bait, but the fly takes a far larger number, while a spoon only takes an occasional fish, and that not of any size. The boatmen know their work well, and take the fisherman slowly and quietly round the lake at a distance of a fairly long cast from the shore. The fly should be thrown so as to drop within a yard of the bank or a fringe of weeds where there is one, and drawn slowly away. Where there are no weeds, as successful a cast as any is to drop the fly just on the shore and then draw it gently into the water. It will, as a rule, be taken, if taken at all, within a couple of yards of the bank, and the boat should then be quietly moved out towards the middle of the lake to avoid frightening other fish, until the one on the hook has been netted. A hand net is therefore essential.

Casting over a rising fish in other parts of the lake is also frequently successful.

Dr. Walker in his book on Angling in the Kumaon Lakes mentions the Jock Scott, Silver Doctor, Claret Fly, and Yellow Spider, as the best for these lakes, and these still remain the best as far as fishing by daylight is concerned, but unfortunately as sport has deteriorated the difficulty of taking fish, except at dusk, has increased. In 1903 when I was fishing these lakes for two and a half months, so few fish were taken by daylight that many anglers thought it useless to attempt fishing except from just before dusk till an hour after dark. At this time the fish can be heard rising freely all over the lake, though their manner of taking varies considerably. On some nights they rise short, and though you will feel them "knock" your fly at every cast, you may perhaps only take one or two small fish; at other times they take hold greedily, and you may get a dozen or more, of which perhaps half will run from a pound to 3lbs.,—(very few of the latter though)—and the remainder under a pound. At this time, a white fly is the correct article to use. In spite of Dr. Walker's condemnation of a rough fly manufactured from the tag of a towel, a fly so made will take more fish than the most skillfully tied white moth. In fact, a very successful fly, and one which can be made by any one, however incapable he may be of tieing a proper fly, is made from a reel of cotton of average thickness, by doubling and redoubling the thread until you get 32 strands. These are tied on half the upper length of the hook towards the eye, to make the body and then doubled back and tied with a few turns of thread to form the head of the fly. The ends of the threads should then be cut off level with the bend of the hook, which should be a small one, the whole fly being from half to five-eighths of an inch in length.

In the day time two, or even three, flies may be used on a cast, but if the fish are taking shyly it is better to use only one, while at night the difficulties of fishing without being able to see exactly what is happening, render it necessary to confine oneself to a single fly. How the boatmen manage to keep the boat moving at the proper distance from the shore at this time, has always been a constant wonder to me. It is, however, not so necessary to cast only towards the bank, at night, as it is by daylight, as the fish are rising freely everywhere, and an occasional cast over the rise of a good fish further out in the lake is often successful. There are two conditions under which fish will not take at night: one is when there are lowlying clouds, and the other is when the moon shines on the water. There are shops at Naini Tal which stock flies of the standard patterns and sizes above mentioned. Of these I should recommend the Yellow Spider for Bhim Tal and Naukuchia Tal, the Claret Fly and Yellow Spider for Sath Tal, and the Jock Scott for Malwa Tal, with an occasional change to the Silver Doctor if the other three are not taking well. The tackle used should be fine, and anyone who can make a long clean cast will take many more fish than a beginner. At night, however, slightly stouter gut may be used. I know nothing that will teach a fisherman how to throw a fly skilfully more than constant practice on the Kumaon Lakes, and the man who is an expert here, could hold his own among the best fly fishermen at home.

By far the best rods for this work are those made from the bamboos obtainable at Bhim Tal. There is a small native shop close to the lake where these are stocked in the rough. You can go and pick your own rod, and in 48 hours it will be delivered to you quite straight,—(however crooked it may have been when you saw it two days previously)—and with a few rings tied on, but no winch fittings. You must tie your reel on. The price of one of these rods when ready for use is from Re. 1-8 to Rs. 2! They are very much lighter than English rods, and are admirably suited for their work. One 12 foot and one 14 foot rod of this sort will see you through a season's fishing and will, with ordinary care, be in serviceable condition at the end of it.

THE WILKINSON SHOT GUNS.

THE firm of Wilkinson, the Wilkinson Sword Company of London, is to be numbered amongst the oldest of the London gunmakers.

The house was founded by Henry Nock, the contemporary of Egg and the two Mantons, Joseph and John. Nock was known to fame in the days of the flint and percussion muzzle-loaders as the inventor of the "patent breech," or more properly "breeching." On his death he was succeeded by his son-in-law, Mr. Wilkinson. In after years the reputation of the Wilkinson firm as sword cutlers perhaps to some extent overshadowed their old celebrity as gunmakers, but, as well in England as abroad, they have always kept abreast of all developments in the manufacture of sporting firearms.

One winter morning recently, in the extensive show rooms of the company in Pall Mall, a very wide range of shot guns suitable for all purposes was submitted for the consideration of the representative of The Indian Field. Naturally the pick of the bunch was the "Best" gun. One rightly expects a good deal from a London "Best" gun, and the Wilkinson production will adequately fulfil exacting requirements. The side lock plates are closely fitted to the woodwork, the springs of lock and ejector work smartly and smoothly, and are set without effort on the opening of the gun. The weapon is well balanced, handles nicely, and shows every evidence, internally and externally, of perfect finish. The ejector of the two-piece hammerless side-lock tumblers are cocked by the falling barrels, the fences are well, but not too ornately carved, and throughout is distinctly good.

Then a gun with body-lock instead of side-lock, A. and D. ejector, and doll's head top extension, listed at 27 guineas is a weapon of really good appearance, with mechanism of sound construction made on absolutely reliable principles. This is a gun that looks well and may be depended on to work well. Another model, with screw-grip top fastening instead of doll's head, at prices ranging from 20 guineas, may also be mentioned. Of course the screw-grip is an absolutely reliable fastening. It, like the doll's head, is used in conjunction with double under-snap bolts, and either will be found perfectly satisfactory.

In "Colonial Quality," three models were submitted for examination. The first was a body-lock gun, well finished and engraved, with sear-detained ejector. It has steel barrels, as nearly all the Wilkinson guns have, and at a price of 21 guineas, is a production well worth consideration. A plainer quality, with the same system of body-lock and ejector, is listed at 18 guineas. This is really a very cheap ejector, embodying everything that is necessary for efficiency, but with a minimum of external adornment. Without ejectors, a body-lock hammerless gun of plain quality is offered at 10 guineas. It handles nicely, and as it has a good pair of well-bored steel barrels it should shoot well.

In rifles, Wilkinson's showed a large selection of sporting patterns of various bores. One, "in the white" (the unfinished state), which had just been made for India was examined with interest. It is a double ·450-400, a ·400 bore chambered for the powerful ·450-400 bottle-necked cordite cartridge. It has 24-inch barrels, and handles despite of its weight like a shot-gun. The flats of the action are wide, so that the barrels bedded on them take a firm bearing all over, and the under-lumps are broad and substantial. There is a doll's head top connection, and altogether the user of this rifle will have a very satisfactory sense of security, when he comes to fire from it cordite cartridges in the hot weather.

A Wilkinson-Webley ·455 self-extracting revolver, with special stock, laterally adjustable back-sight and a special form of cylinder cam, was another special weapon glanced at, and a re-examination of the sub-target gun, that very clever machine for rifle practice without ammunition, occupied the remainder of an interesting morning.

THE OLD-TIME BLUNDERBUSS.

THE fire-arms of early times when contrasted with modern weapons, form an interesting link between the past and present. No more curious or serviceable arms were ever designed than the old-time blunderbuss. Its very name is suggestive of its appearance, although that is a corruption of the original, for "thunderburst"—or "thunderbust," as it was more often called—is the name by which it was first known. These arms were clumsy and heavy, as the name might imply, and they were fashioned in many forms, both in the type of gun and pistol. A blunderbuss may be generally defined as a short, heavy gun or a long, heavy pistol, although there are many exceptions to this definition. Its barrel was its distinguishing characteristic, which terminated at the muzzle like a bell, either round or elliptical, and, like other fire-arms, was of brass steel.

The blunderbuss, however, is not always a bell-mouthed weapon. Its earliest form was a straight barrel "streubuchse." It was intended to be used at short range, was consequently without sights, and from the shape of the muzzle was supposed to produce great scattering force upon discharge. The blunderbuss in its usual form has a bore at the muzzle of from an inch and a-half to three inches although rare specimens are found where this is increased to five inches, while at the breech it is a half-inch to an inch.

In the coaching days in old England every "machine," as these coaches were often designated, carried a pair of blunderbusses on the box to protect the mails and the passengers from the attacks of highwaymen. The barrel was of steel, and a most formidable weapon it was when its black mouth was thrust in the highwayman's face. And it was necessary in those days that the coach went "guarded and lighted," for the traveller over the old Bath road in the latter part of the seventeenth century, thus describes a certain trip. "Long before the flying machine had cleared the Metropolis—the Metropolis which knew Chelsea as a quiet country village with 1,000 inhabitants, and Marylebone as a place where cattle fed and sportsmen wandered—the six inside passengers had been twice nearly upset and shaken out of their seven senses; and it had scarcely begun its creeping passage over Hounslow's Heath when it was stopped abruptly, and the six inside passengers had their six purses taken away. When their eyesight, temporarily obscured by agitation, returned to them, they recognised the French page of the Duke of Richmond as the author of this graceful feat, and, having spoken strange words to the guard for having neglected the fleeting opportunity presented to him for the discharge of his blunderbuss (which was rather wild of them, the said blunderbuss being a mere vehicle for the release of coach guards who were weary of their lives, and perfectly well known as such), they jolted forward on their way to Bath, pale and penniless."

This very blunderbuss may have had a part in such an exciting episode; it is certain, at any rate, that no knowledge exists of of its ever having taken human life. The French page of the Duke of Richmond was none other than the notorious gallant Claude Duval, the greatest highwayman of that time, and of whom the epitaph was written, beginning:

Here lies Du Vall: Reader, if male thou art,
Look to thy purse; if female, to thy heart.

And Hounslow Heath was the favourite stamping-ground for all these notorious knights of the road. Of this same district 'tis written:

Dick Turpin vunst on 'Onslow's 'eath
His black mare Bess bestrode, sir;

Whilst there he spied the bishop s coach
A-coming up the road, sir.

He rode right up to the bishop's coach
And put his head within, sir:

Says the bishop, "Sure as eggs is eggs,
This ,ere's the bold Turpin, sir.

Here also plied their calling Augustine King, educated at Cambridge hanged at Colchester: William Nevison, whose name still haunts the hamlets of the north moors, hanged at York; and a host of others of their ilk whose careers ended with the noose, and whose memories have been perpetuated in countless editions of the "penny dreadfuls."

No wonder blunderbusses bristled on the coach-box, and the post rider carried a pair of these pistols on his saddle! A traveller in those days had all such things in mind when he picked out his conveyance for a coaching trip. One such passenger has left us the recollection of his efforts in this direction. He was intending to take the coach out of London over the Exeter road, anxious, too, for one well protected and that did not carry luggage on the top, and inquired of the landlord of the "White Lion" where he had "put up" if such a coath would not presently be due, whereupon the following dialogue ensued: "Oh, yes!" says the landlord, "we shall have one here to-night that is not allowed to carry a bandbox on the roof—the Quicksilver Mail, sir; one of the best out of London—Jack White and Tom Brown—Picked coachmen over this ground; Jack White down to-night." "Guarded and lighted?" "Both, sir; blunderbusses and pistols in the sword-case, a lamp each side of the coach and one under the footboard—see to pick up a pin the darkest night of the year."

The shoulder blunderbuss and the blunderbuss pistol were often used on shipboard. A pair of the former usually hung in the captain's cabin, and a pair of the pistols were in a case readily to hand in case of emergency. Ship's pistols and blunderbusses were usually with brass barrels, as they were less liable to be affected by the salt air than those with barrels of steel. Vessels trading with foreign countries where the people were of the troublous, uncivilised kind, were supplied with many such weapons, and a most effective arm it was against attack from the natives. In case of mutiny on shipboard, a blunderbuss in the hands of the captain commanded the entire deck. In England these arms were formerly used for home defence, especially on the heaths and in unfrequented parts of the country. Miss Tabitha Bramble, Smollett's interesting piece of female illiteracy in a letter to the housekeeper of Brambleton Hall, gives certain directions as to the conduct of the establishment during the absence of the family, and says, "the gardnir and the hind may lie below in the landry to partake the houses with the blunderbuss and the great dog." Most anything in the way of a missile could be used in a blunderbuss—nails, bullets, shot, pieces of old iron, and even stones and bits of broken glass—and the discharge of one of these arms with hostile intent, naturally resulted in terrible havoc.

The old dags of the seventeenth century, with their flat butts like the gun-stock, were often blunderbuss pieces. The stocks of a pair in the author's collection are inlaid with engraving brass, while the smaller one is ornamented with engraved silver trimmings; the barrels are inlaid with gold and silver; all have a hook for attaching to the sash or belt. Doubtless, they once graced the persons of distinguished gentlemen of old Spain in years long ago. The blunderbuss pistol probably formed one of a pair, and was formerly owned by an English sea captain. It is a most beautiful specimen of the gunsmith's art, and has what is most unusual in arms of so early a period, a brass lock-plate and brass priming-pan. In some cases all these types of arms have a bayonet attached as an additional means of offence or defence, after the weapon has been discharged. There is always the folding bayonet, which, when a catch is released, aided by a powerful spring, flies into position and locks firmly it a the end of the muzzle. Various forms of attaching this device were used; sometimes they are found folded beneath the barrel; some are on top and some at the side.

A short blunderbuss pistol with with gun-stock and pistol grip, belonging to the author, is a fine specimen of seventeenth century Spanish workmanship and came from Morocco. Attached to an arm on the side is a large brass ring for hooking on to a camel saddle; the metal work on the arm is heavily carved and engraved, and its barrel is inlaid with gold. The woodwork is worn so smooth by years of handing that the heavy carvings originally upon it are nearly effaced. Another form of the blunderbuss was the wall piece for mounting on the walls of castles or fortifications. These had swivels attached by which they could be swung around to command any position; they were much longer and heavier than the hand arms of this character. All these illustrated and referred to are of the flint-lock type of guns in use long before the percussion cap was invented. There are, however, blunderbusses with the percussion cap lock, one of the most formidable of its kind being displayed in the Museum of Fine Arts at Boston; this has a brass barrel with bell muzzle five inches in diameter.

The days of the blunderbuss have passed; they are only found now and then in some old curiosity shop, or treasured in the family of the old-time owner. They had their day and use when it was not uncommon to have engraved upon their spreading muzzles, "Happy is he who escapeth me." It would be idle to claim for these old arms anything approaching accuracy, as the term is now understood; the principle of boring precluded that. Where not wholly lacking, the sights were crude and of assistance only in aligning the barrel towards a small target, rather than directly upon it. Yet at short range the blunderbuss was an arm to be feared, and has, doubtless, accounted for many men. Its period of use was when the fighting was chiefly hand to hand, when the gentry wore swords for the settlement of their private quarrels and thugs and housebreakers wielded bludgeons over their victims. In warfare, when engaging forces mingled in mêlée, or when battling ships lay with lashed yardarms, and the cry was "All hands to repel boarders," the blunderbuss, with its handful of slugs could be depended upon, shot for shot, to work more damage to the enemy than any rifled arm of modern times. Though capable of killing game where sufficiently plentiful and easy of approach, it never won distinction as a sporting arm, for the sufficient reason that it passed out of common use long before the pursuit of sport only had become a recognised and universally popular recreation.

THE INDIAN CRICKET BALL RECORD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you tell me what is the Indian record for throwing the cricket ball.

W. B. N.

[The record is held by Mr. P. E. Plunkett, who, at the Dehra Dun Forest School Sports in 1895, threw 116 yards. Lance-Corporal Aldridge, of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry at Bellaryr, on 31st December 1895, threw at 115 yards 1 feet 1¼ inch. Othe, good performances are those of Mr. J. Buchanan, Rangoon 112 yards 1 feet 6 inches, and A. P. Young, of the Bombay Gymkhana, 110 yards, Private Calveley, of the Somersetshire Light Infantry, threw 109 yards 1 foot at the Regimental Sports held at Mian Mir on the 10th March 1897.—ED.]

IDENTIFICATION OF SPECIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I enclose a butterfly I caught the other day and would be much obliged if you can tell me what it is and if it is rare or not.

Papun (BURMA), 30th November 1906.

[It is a male of Cheritra jaffra (Butler) and may be found figured on plate XIX, Vol. III, of De Niceville's Butterflies of India and described in all its forms, on pp. 410 to 412. It is found in Southern India, Ceylon, the Malay Peninsula, and is not rare.—ED.]

REDUCED CHARGES FOR THE ·350 RIGBY-MAUSER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Will any of your correspondents help me in finding a suitable reduced charge for the ·350 Rigby-Mauser cordite rifle?

The normal cartridge for this rifle is very powerful, being loaded with 43 grains cordite and 310 grains nickelcoated bullet. What I require is a suitable reduced charge for shooting the smaller animals, as buck, chinkara, etc.

The only apparently suitable bullet I can find listed is that for the new 35 calebre Winchester Automatic rifle—weight (180) grains nickel, coated, soft nose. Powder charge not stated. The M. V. of this cartridge is stated as 1,400 f.s. This should make a very useful reduced charge for the ·350 Rigby-Mauser.

I feel certain that "B." or "Fleur-de Lys" could tell me how to load my reduced charge cartridges. I want to load up old fired cases of the 43-310 type. and would much like to know where I can get reloading tools; how to clean the cases; what charge of what smokeless powder should be used; how it should be loaded (loose, or with cotton-wool pad) and whether the fact that the short reduced charge bullet would not lie properly in the chamber, but would have to "jump" into the "lead," is likely to spoil the shooting. Any other "tips" would be most gratefully received.

A TSINE CALF.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I am just returning to Rangoon after a four days' unsuccessful go after tsine and bison; but I saw a calf tsine, not properly but indistinctly in young bamboo shoots and grass, I do not know if anyone else has had the same experience. It happened as follows:—Unfortunately I only had one man with me (owing to the number and inquisitiveness of elephants hereabouts I had had to shift my camp to get any piece of work done). We were making our way through light tsine jungle towards bison jungle, when we heard a tsine snort, the Karen shikari and myself ducked and stared hard, but saw nothing. I moved along to the left past an ant heap in time to see a couple of cow tsine pass broadside on, at a walk going from right to left, I beckoned to my man and we both started in pursuit of the herd, we had only gone a few paces, when another big tsine came out of the grass and bamboo shoots from right to left and turned and faced us about 60 feet off, I knelt down and the shikari also went down, we could not tell against the light back ground whether it was a bull's head or not, it kept on looking to its left into the bamboo shoots, after a bit I also saw a small dun and white object move behind a thin bamboo clump into the more or less open and disappear in grass in the direction of the cow as I then concluded, it was about the size of the ordinary quite young calf, but I was unable to watch it very closely as by that time I had begun to be afraid I should have to shoot the mother, as she looked like charging; every minute or so she put her head down, snuffed and then advanced a few paces, looked to the left then at us and repeated the process, I got tired of kneeling and lay down, watching the cow at last I said to the shikari, "she will not go away, she has a calf beside her;" still she came on, when about 20 paces off (she was in the open and we had some trees a dozen paces to our left, I had a magnum double ·450 cordite and did not want to shoot, as I could not have helped absolutely knocking her out of time), when she was about 20 feet off, I said to the shikari, "I am going to jump up and run, she will not go" so we both jumped straight up together, the cow snorted, I ran back to her calf and we got behind the trees out of sight and followed up the herd,

I had a shot through bamboos and long grass at a very old bull by his colour, I could not see his head, the bamboo I found deflected the bullet, though when I came out I was going to where the herd had been, I said to the shikari, "I have got one," as the bull I can swear dropped to the shot, and I could hear the kick of his hind legs going like an animal in extremis, but the grass was long, there was no blood and we could not tell which way the herd or the bull went as the herd went away in four different directions, after casting about for some time, I was so fed up, I returned to camp, if I had not hit him badly the first time, I could easily have had another shot, as the cows did not go the shikari tells me for some little time (he was some way off and I had stalked the herd) while I was reloading and getting out into the open from the bamboo and long grass I was in, I walked out to kill him as I supposed I could not believe he was not somewhere in the long grass, however I had the place searched again to-day without any luck, so it must have been only a slight concussion which made him roll out of sight down off a little mound he was on and the click of heels I heard was him recovering himself, However owing to the dead leaves, etc., it was the only chance I got, one can hear the bison cracking the bamboos a mile off, but they can hear the leaves crackling under you 100 feet off and that is enough to defeat me I came across no fresh rhino tracks. Where I was is the Pegu Yomahs a very famous haunt of big game.

To have found a cricketer with a keener sense of humour than Tom Emmett would not have been an easy task. A good worker, his chief failing was that he occasionally underrated the value of the opposition, and this once brought him to grief.

F. Townsend was bowling curly underhand slows, the match being Gloucestershire v. England; and Emmett, rather than run the risk of hitting into cover-point's hands, allowed several that were about a foot off the wicket to pass. The bowler, however, persisted in sending them up, and Tom, to show his contempt for the bowling, shouldered his bat and smiled as the balls passed him. Eventually Townsend managed to get more break on one ball than usual, and, standing with uplifted bat, the contemptuous cricketer had the mortification of seeing the leather curl in and hit the off stump.

"A little over-confident, Tom, were you not?" a friend remarked; but he left the wicket without replying.

"What's the matter, Tom?" somebody else asked, when he at length reached the pavilion.

"Don't Tom me!" he rather angrily remarked.

"Well, Emmett, then," his well-wisher suggested.

"Don't Emmett me!" again requested the "outed" one.

"Then what would you like to be called?" demanded the persistent believer in "Tom."

"Look you," answered Emmett, turning to the anxious inquirer, "call me a——fool, for I feel like one!"

Then he retired into the pavilion.

LONDON, Friday, 21st December 1906.

NEWBURY.

THE general muster of sportsmen on Tuesday was a capital one, whilst the proceedings were conducted well up to the advanced standard set by the management from the first. Fields did not work out quite as well as expected, although some very good class animals were seen out, including Dafila, who has earned the reputation of being our smartest young hurdler. It is not generally known that this brilliant performer was until recently owned by Mr. David Faber, who also allowed the best flat racer in England, i. e., Polymelus, to go out of his possession.

Considering the gloomy outlook in town, it was surprising that so many sportsmen undertook the journey to Newbury on Wednesday—a fact that once more demonstrates the wonderful hold the meeting has on the public's affections. Nor were they disappointed, so far as the racing went, capital fields and pulsating finishes being for the most part the order of the day throughout. Several lots of bloodstock were sold by Mr. A. Stevens during the intervals of racing, and Newbury is gaining some sort of standing as a favourable auction mart with owners.

OLDEST CERTIFICATED OPTICIANS IN INDIA

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

Many Children suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The Great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Our Ophthalmic Department is in charge of a London Eyesight Specialist holding the Diploma of the British Optical Association.

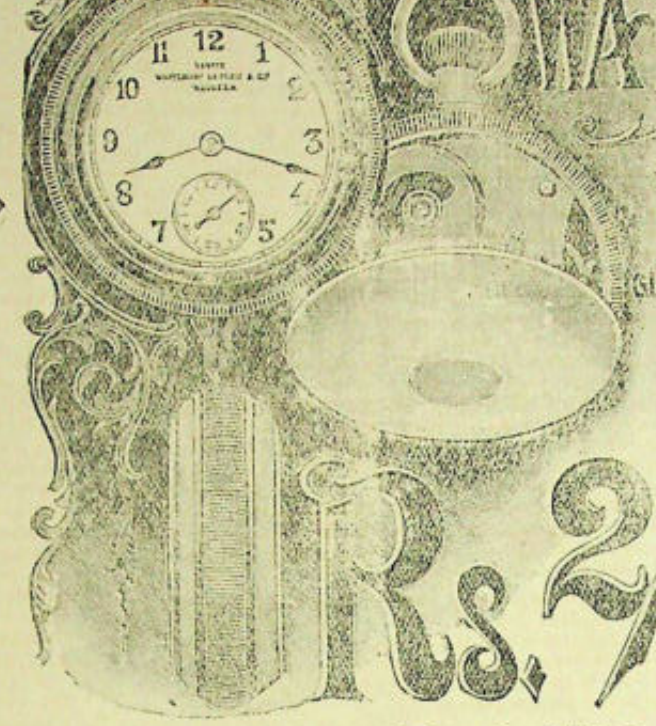
IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For some years past Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India has been looked upon as the most convenient and helpful Map of the Indian Empire extant. It possesses many points of superiority and convenience; the information is exhaustive, every name mentioned in the Government Survey being included. The great convenience of the Index of 10,000 names has always been keenly appreciated; it has, therefore, been a source of great regret to the proprietors that they have been forced to allow the Map to remain out of print for a considerable time on account of political changes in the internal provinces of India. The moment the new boundaries of Bengal were settled, fresh plates were put in hand, and the publishers are now pleased to announce the third edition of this important Map as ready for sale.

The following are brief particulars—



Size of plate, 38" × 34". Scale, 70 miles = 1 inch.

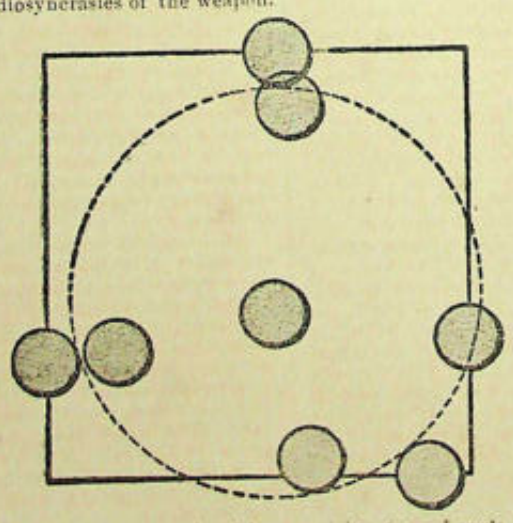
LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.



VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang's double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in. wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in. diameter. Reproduced full size.

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

". . . . about the rifle I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it." E. S. D., Capt.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

The forwards in the big Leagues had their scoring boots on last week-end, and the bag of goals was the heaviest for some time past. In the Southern League, excluding an abandoned game, nine matches produced 81 goals; in the ten First Division League contests the total reached 36, while the Second League struggles, also ten in number, furnished 37. In the Southern League the home clubs did not sweep the board. Five of them won, but three lost, and there was one drawn game. The eight winning teams claimed 25 goals, and the losing sides only a half-dozen. There were not any goals in the drawn game, and altogether six teams failed to legitimately find the net. The home clubs in the League did remarkably well, seven winning their games in the Premier Division and nine in the Second Division. There was a drawn match in each section, and two visiting teams in the upper circle captured the full points. The losing teams had a poor time, the nine in the two division scoring only 5 and 8 goals respectively, as compared with the 21 and 29 obtained by the winners. There were not any goals in the drawn games, and the teams who failed to score numbered seven in League I, and four in League II.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

Fulham must be well satisfied with the result of their visit to Southampton, for they reversed last year's verdict, and thus gained a couple of points. Prior to the game the chances were certainly against the West Londoners, for Southampton had escaped defeat in their previous seven home engagements, while the last five they had won by a goal score of 13 against 2. Saturday's game was a test of strength under excellent conditions, and both clubs were well represented. When just before half-time the Sotonians assumed the lead, there was considerable rejoicing, but Fulham played a strong game in the second half, and Freeman and Hamilton both scoring, the Cottagers registered a fine win. It was a hard, stubbornly contested game, the issue remaining in doubt until the close, as Southampton, when they found themselves a goal behind, played with desperate energy and determination, but the Fulham defence held out to the end. This is the fourth win the West Londoners have scored away from home in the present tourney, on five other occasions they have haived the points, and only once have they lost, Tottenham administering a severe drubbing to them on 24th September. As showing the remarkable strength of the Fulham defence, it may be pointed out that in their last seven games they have given away only two goals.

The football public of North London came to the conclusion that Northampton would not provide an exciting struggle at White Hart Lane, hence a comparatively small attendance for the 'Spurs' grounds. The Cobblers were a beaten team from the start, and in each half their defence was thrice defeated. The score of 6—0 is the heaviest defeat they have had inflicted on them this season, Reading and Queen's Park Rangers each contenting themselves with a five to nil victory. Tottenham are now easily at the head with regard to the total number of goals scored, but as they have given away three more than Fulham they have a decimally worse average. The game at Millwall was of considerable importance to Portsmouth, as their failure would have seriously discounted their chances for the championship, their supporters being confident that they will attain to this giddy height during the current season. Millwall entered upon the game with confidence, for no team had taken a couple of points from North Greenwich this season, and they relied upon the same side as that which defeated the Arsenal the previous Monday. Portsmouth, however, were out to win, and having obtained a goal about which there was an element of good fortune, they retained their advantage to the end, and won by the narrow margin of a goal to love. The home team at least deserved to draw.

There were some surprises in the Southern League, in addition to that at Millwall, and the most startling was at the Palace, where Plymouth Argyle, who had won only one match since the first month of the season, beat Crystal Palace by 2 clear goals, both being obtained in a failing light. This is the third defeat on their own ground this season, and it was totally unexpected after successive wins at the expense of Millwall and Portsmouth. Another dramatic result was the defeat of Bristol Rovers at Leyton by 4 goals to 2. It is prodigious. The Rovers had met the strongest teams in the League, but it was left to Leyton, who have admittedly been most inconsistent of late, to be the first side to capture the Rovers' goal four times in an afternoon. It was an unexpected happening, but the run of the play was in accordance with the score, and Leyton thoroughly deserved every one of the goals that make up their heaviest S. L. score of the season. Brentford, who win at home just as regularly as they fail to do so away, had to work hard for their success against New Brompton, but the visitors had some vulnerable points, and the home team scoring thrice without response, brought their goal record at Griffin Park to 19 against 5. Queen's Park Rangers have good cause to complain of the scurvy trick played them on Saturday by the fog, as they were leading West Ham. at Boleyn Castle when the game was abandoned six minutes from time. The whole game will have to be replayed, presumably on cup-tie terms. Hard lines for the Rangers. Norwich City had no difficulty in beating Reading, Luton played a bright, incisive game against Brighton, and Watford did no better than was anticipated in sharing the points in a goal-less game at Swindon.

The S. L. table shows Fulham in a very strong position, and their neighbours, Queen's Park Rangers, uncomfortably near the bottom.

LEAGUE I.

A draw did not content the gunners at Everton. They won, and won handsomely, emphasising their victory by scoring three goals at Plumstead for the first time this season in a League game. Rarely have the Arsenal, either home or away, shown greater dash, brilliance, and determination in the early stages of a match than on Saturday. Metaphorically speaking, Everton were rushed off their feet, and before they were allowed to settle down the game had been lost and won. The Reds were all animated by the desire to wipe out last year's defeat, and after the first few minutes none of the onlookers doubted they would accomplish their object. In the mist, which more or less shrouded the play and players, the home team went to work with a skill and dash which the powerful defence of the Cupholders could not roll back. Not only did the Arsenal put up their biggest home score of the season, but incidentally in defeating Scott three times, they have taken more goals from Everton than any other team in the tournament now in progress. It was a thrilling win, gained by merit, and the spectators left the field doubly happy.

There were strange happenings in the League on Saturday, Sheffield Wednesday, who had an unbeaten certificate at Owlerton, were actually defeated by Birmingham, who had not previously won a game away from home. This was the Wednesday's first reverse since they lost to Newcastle at St James's Park on 29th September, and it has brought them down to third place in the table. It was a poor day for Sheffield, as the United were routed at Aston by the Villa by 5—1, but this is not the most severe drubbing the Bramall-lane brigade have had to submit to, their first away game of the season at Bolton finishing with a five goals margin against them. Sunderland followed up their success at Woolwich by scoring the odd goal in five at Bury, the Shakers having now been humbled three times before their own supporters. Manchester City and Blackburn Rovers halved the points at Hyde-road last season, and history repeated itself on Saturday, but the other Manchester team returned empty-handed from Preston, the Arsenal being the only club who have succeeded at Deepdale. Notts County had their heaviest score chalked up against them at Anfield-road by Liverpool, and the county are now in desperate straits, especially in view of Middlesbrough's sensational win of 5—0 over Stoke. In their previous six games the Ironopolis team had totalled 4 goals, and to come along with a quintette in one afternoon is to do something which almost borders on the miraculous. Newcastle United had no difficulty in making Bolton Wanderers play second fiddle at St. James's Park, and the Novocastrians are the only team who have obtained every possible point in home matches. Congratulations to Bristol on their splendid win over Derby County.

It will be observed from the subjoined table that Everton retain pride of place only because of goal average, and that the Arsenal are once more well in the running, Middlesbrough have now double figures in the last column, and more unlikely things may happen than for them to speedily get away from the lowly position they at present occupy.

LEAGUE II.

The happenings of the last few weeks in the Second Division of the League have wonderfully improved Chelsea's chances of promotion. The Pensioners have not lost a match since 3rd November, whereas Nottingham Forest have been once beaten, West Bromwich three times, and Leicester Fosse twice in the same period. Chelsea, however, have been cutting things rather fine, and recently they have not been scoring enough goals to satisfy their well-wishers. On Saturday, when they met Clapton Orient, they had not anything to spare at the finish, the odd goal in three giving them the points. The Orient fought well, and their dashing and bustling methods kept the score against them down to very narrow limits. There was no doubt as to which was the more scientific team of the two, and Chelsea certainly deserved to win, but the Orient left the field with a much enhanced reputation. Nottingham Forest were also hard pushed by Leicester Fosse, the result of the game being similar to that at Stamford Bridge. Lincoln City, who had won only one game since 6th October, found West Bromwich less formidable than usual, injuries keeping some cracks out of the Throstles' side, and on their own ground the City won 2—1. It was the surprise of the afternoon in this competition. Blackpool did uncommonly well to draw at Grimsby, and were the only visiting team to escape defeat. Burnley got well home against Hull City, but Wolverhampton had not anything to spare against Chesterfield, and Burton won by the only goal of the match in their engagement with Bradford. Barnsley, Leeds, and Burslem were in a goal-scoring vein against Gainsborough, Stockport, and Glossop respectively, the winners in these games totalling 16 goals to 2.

The table below shows that there are several clubs with distinctly good chances of finishing in the first two places, and the leaders cannot afford to make a single slip.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. CUMBERLAND.—The crowd of about 7,000 assembled on the Devonshire Park Ground at Carlisle on Saturday were treated to a capital game, it being fast, exciting, and vigorous, without a semblance of roughness. Cumberland had a good deal more of the game than would appear from the score. For long periods together they fought with great tenacity in close proximity to the South African line, and it was only a defence of the impregnable order and a modicum of hard luck which prevented them from scoring.

Whenever the South African backs got a chance, however, their superior class was clearly demonstrated. Their scoring bursts were grandly executed, and completely baffled the Cumberland defence. Their victory was a fitting reward of a skilful exhibition and a quickness to profit from their advantages.

W. Nanson started for Cumberland, and the Colonials carried the first scrummage, but Coade stopped their progress, and a forward pass to A. Morkel prevented a subsequent passing movement amongst the South African backs from materialising. Jackson sprinted finely for Cumberland, but off-side play lost Cumberland the advantage gained, and D. Morkel had a shot at goal, the ball going dead. A good kick by W. Nanson took Cumberland to the centre again, but the South Africans indulged in a fine bout of passing, the ball passing right along the three-quarter line. Another rush by the Cumberland forwards was stopped by Daneel, and Le Roux made a fine burst on the right wing, being just pulled down in time.

A cross kick sent the ball near the Cumberland line, but De Villiers passed forward. Once more the Cumberland forwards secured a firm footing in the South Africans' half. The ball was sent across to Jackson, and the Cumberland three-quarter made tracks for the line, but was floored by J. Le Roux. Davidson gained further ground for Cumberland with a well-judged kick to touch, but a passing bout amongst the South Africans changed the venue, Coade coming eventually to the rescue of Cumberland. Carolin made a clever opening for Hirsch, who, on nearing the line, gave to J. Le Roux, and that player completed a very pretty try, from which D. Morkel landed a goal.

The home forwards carried hostilities to within a few feet of the South African line, and after Fleming had been almost over, J. Davidson forced his way across, but the referee ordered a scrummage outside. For a time, Cumberland clung tenaciously to this position, and once more the ball was rushed by their forwards over the line, but again no score resulted, and play had drifted to the centre again, when the interval was reached with the score :—

Carolin restarted, and Jackson made a good return. Burdett marked at the centre, but D. Morkel failed in his effort to score, and S. H. Osborne led the Cumberland forwards into the South African half. The Cumbrian front rank, who were playing a great game, carried several scrummages in fine style, and the way in which they repeatedly brushed the Colonial eight aside called forth loud cheers, but the defence of the Colonial backs was superb, and repeatedly checked their progress. Marthoze headed a rush of the South African front rank, and the half-backs passed out to J. Le Roux, who, on starting the second half, changed wings with A. Morkel. Jackson got Cumberland out of a dangerous situation, and Fleming further improved the Cumbrians' position, but the advantage gained was neutralised by Wilson getting offside. The latter soon made amends by a capital dribble, and continuing the movement, the Cumberland forwards went over the Colonials' line again in a body, but a Colonial touched down. Later Carolin sent along to A. Morkel, and the later put in a judicious cross kick, from which Hirsch got possession. Splendidly dodging the Cumberland backs, he raced round behind the posts for a fine try, from which Roos landed a goal.

In stopping a rush of the South African front rank, Jackson, the centre three-quarter, was injured, and though he resumed he never seemed himself again. Nanson, failing to take the ball from a high kick in front of his own posts, the Cumberland line was again in danger, but Black saved the situation. A mull by Hirsch gave Horsfall an opportunity to slip away for Cumberland, but again the defence of the Colonials prevailed. Then T. Davidson marked for Cumberland, and W. Nanson had a shot at goal which nearly came off, the visitors touching down. After Hirsch had been checked by Black, the ball was sent across to Morkel. Black bowled him into touch, but he parted to Hirsch as he was going, and the latter dropped over at the corner for another try, which D. Morkel almost converted from the touch-line.

J. Davidson was repeatedly applauded for excellent work on behalf of Cumberland, who had the misfortune to lose Valentine through an injury. Dobbin getting away from a scrummage put A. Morkel in possession. The latter cross-kicked, and Hirsch gave J. Le Roux a fine opening, from which he raced over the line, and grounded the ball. D. Morkel landed another fine goal from the place.

The Colonial three-quarter line were soon on the move again, and J. Le Roux tricked finely between his opponents for another great try, which D. Morkel this time failed to convert.

Cumberland just on time sent over the South African line. Horsfall following up smartly got his hand on the ball just as Burmeister touched down—another narrow escape for the Colonials. Result :—

MATCH v. SURREY.—The South Africans made their last appearance in the Metropolis on Wednesday afternoon, when they met the Surrey XV. on the Richmond Athletic Ground, in the presence of some 7,000 spectators. In their previous engagements with Kent and Middlesex the Colonials had been successful, the former being beaten at Blackheath by 21 points to 0, and the latter at Richmond by only 2 to 0 ; and as Surrey were yesterday defeated by 33 points to love, the South Africans have not had a point scored against them in the Metropolis except when they played England at the Crystal Palace, in the memorable game that resulted in honours being divided. It was a thousand pities that J. G. G. Birkett, one of the best three-quarters in the country, was unable to turn out for Surrey, he not having sufficiently recovered from the severe ankle-sprain he met with in the international ; and there were also other eleventh-hour changes. B. F. Mitchell, of Marlborough Nomads, was brought in to fill the vacancy caused by Birkett's inability to turn out, and he played right wing three-quarter. W. L. Lapage going to the centre. There were two changes in the South African team, A. F. Marsburg appearing at full back vice S. Joubert, and W. A. Millar was played forward instead of H. C. Daneel. The turf was in splendid order, and the game was played under favourable conditions, as to the weather, the slight haze that hung over the ground not interfering with the view of onlookers.

Surrey kicked off a minute before the advertised time, and in the opening stages, thanks principally to their forwards, they more than held their own ; but they flattered only to deceive, for the Colonials forced them back, and from this point the tide of battle rolled against the home side, who were no match for their clever, dashing, determined opponents.

There were encouraging cheers when Surrey, following the kick-off, promptly got into the South African twenty-five, and these were renewed when Lepingwell, from a pass by Stoop, found touch near the cornerflag. The South African forwards went away in a loose rush, but were sent back by Lyon. The relief was only temporary, Carolin initiating a movement which was completed by Hirsch getting over, but a scrum was ordered almost on the Surrey line. The ball came out to Hirsch, who just failed in an attempt to drop a goal. The next incident of note was a neat pick up from a scrum by Stoop, and he succeeded in gaining a lot of ground before finding touch with a clever cross-kick. Some long kicking by the backs was brought to an end by de Villiers, and after a sharp bout of passing the ball came back to de Villiers, and he got over, D. Morkel failing to convert from a somewhat awkward angle. Immediately on resuming, Dobbin took a nice pass from Millar, and made a thrilling sinuous run, but Lepingwell dashed across and brought his man down when a try seemed almost a certainty. Further success, however, was not long delayed, Carolin dropping a magnificent goal, and the Colonials were leading by seven points to nil. The Surrey forwards made great efforts to put a different complexion on the game, but although they held their own in the scrums they were not able to make much headway with their loose work. Hirsch made his mark, and D. Morkel attempted to score from near the half-way line, but the effort was not a success, the ball travelling slightly wide. The play was now almost exclusively in the Surrey half, and a charming bout of passing between Dobbin, Carolin, and de Villiers completely beat the County defence, Loubser having no difficulty in registering a try. Carolin failed at the easy place kick, and the Colonials now led by ten points to nil. This did not satisfy them, and they were unceasing in their attempts to strengthen their position, and after Mitchell had made a capital single-handed run which Marsburg brought to a summary close, de Villiers once more drew the opposing defence, and then passed to Loubser, who trotted over, and grounded the ball beneath the posts. The place kick was taken by Morkel who obtained the major points, and two minutes later Hirsch, getting the ball from a scrum, made a cork-screw run, eluded the Surrey defence, and scored, D. Morkel again converting an easy place kick. At half-time the score was :—

The County started the second half in promising style, the three-quarters being prominent, but they were unable to break through the powerful defence opposed to them. Stoop worked untiringly, and Lepingwell and Lapage made plenty of ground at times, but their success stopped short of their ambitions as a result of the deadly tackling of their opponents. There was plenty of scrummaging, and in this Surrey did not suffer by comparison, but there was a lack of initiative among the threes, and this meant the difference between success and failure. The South Africans asserted themselves once more, and Le Roux making an opening, wormed his way over the line, and Morkel kicked a goal. A few minutes later Le Roux left the field, and after an absence of several minutes he returned, but he retired again almost immediately, and took no further part in the game. This was not the end of the misfortunes of the visitors, as ten minutes from the end Martheze received a nasty cut over the eye, and he also had to leave the field, the Colonials finishing with thirteen men. After Le Roux had left there was a passing movement by the Surrey threes, and Mitchell and Lapage had only Marsburg to beat, but the full back once more dashed the hopes of the County to the ground by a grand bit of tackling. Back came the Colonials, and Lyon attempting to clear with opponents close upon him, had his kick charged down by Carolin, and Dobbin picking up the ball, scored a try, Morkel adding the two points from the place kick. Surrey, although 30 points to the bad, continued to struggle hard against their more skilful opponents, but to no purpose, as Morkel scored near the cornerflag, but failed with the place kick. There was no further scoring, and the game ended :—

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Rain fell throughout this game on the Dublin University ground on Saturday. Cambridge at the outset attacked, but the assault on the home line was short-lived. Following a loose Trinity rush, Purser knocked on when near the line. Trinity kept up the pressure, and the Cantabs had to touch down. Smartt heeled a free for Trinity, but the kick brought nothing in its wake, and half-time arrived with a blank sheet.

In the second half Cambridge were prominent, but they lost several chances of scoring. Trinity, after a period of inactivity, took command, and Parke wound up a good movement by scoring a try, which he failed to improve upon. From this point Trinity always held the upper hand, and a combined run by Aston, Beckett, and Parke culminated in the last-named scoring, and this time he added the extra points. Result :—Dublin University, 1 goal 1 try (8 points) ; Cambridge University, 0.

BLACKHEATH vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—It was a difficult matter to distinguish the players who took part in this match at the Rectory Field, Blackheath, on Saturday, owing to a mist that overhung the field of play. With the ground showing the effect of the frost, the teams never appeared to take matters too seriously, and consequently the game suffered. On the whole, Blackheath had decidedly the better of matters, and deserved their victory of 8 points to 0.

Divided into two "twenties," the game during the first half found the Old Boys' three-quarters indulging in a clever passing movement, which came to nought owing to Stokes' smartness. Playing full back, the son of the old International fielded well and several times found touch nearly the length of the field. Heeling out smartly, the club forwards gave their backs plenty of chances, and so heavy became the pressure that the Old Boys had to touch down thrice within a short time. Tuckett, Priday, and Waterhouse took their passes cleanly, and only H. J. Holloway's well-judged collaring prevented a score. Eventually in a period of extreme pressure a "free" for offside against the visitors gave Blackheath a chance, and Hill scored. Just afterwards the interval came with Blackheath 8 points to the good.

The second half opened evenly, until a fine punt by the visiting back found touch near the flag. Here Blackheath had to concede a minor, so energetic did the Old Boys' attack become. Hosken was prominent but found Stokes ready for him. However Blackheath took up the aggressive again and several forward rushes caused their opponents trouble. Once it looked as if Tuckett would cross the line, but Holloway brought him down, and a succession of scrums ended in the visitors conceding a minor. Within a couple of minutes of the close Waterhouse went over on the left for Blackheath, and Hill converted Result :—Blackheath, 1 goal and 1 penalty goal (8 points); Old Leysians, 0.

HARLEQUINS vs. LENNOX.—At Wandsworth Common on Saturday Harlequins gained an easy victory over Lennox by 4 goals and 3 tries to 0. Play was of a scrambling nature, being chiefly remarkable for an amazing number of knocks on and dropped passes. In the first half Stoop secured a try from a pass by R. O. C. Ward, which Lyon converted, and, although Quins had most of the subsequent play, they failed, through wretched passing and the good defence of Galloway, the Lennox full back, to score again before the interval.

In the second half, however, Harlequins were more successful. After J. G. G. Birkett had dropped the ball with the line at his mercy, Ismay got over in a forward scramble with an unconverted try. Eventually R. O. C. Ward forced his way over near the posts, and Lyon again failed to convert. A moment later the ball was dribbled over the line, and Birkett scored in a good position for R. O. C. Ward to convert. Stoop was the next to get away, sending in Oliver behind the uprights. Ward was again successful with the kick A few minutes later Stoop scored, and Ward goaled. Just on time, amid the gathering darkness, Stoop gathered smartly at the centre, ran clear, and after a sprint half the length of the field, grounded the ball under the uprights. Ward's kick, however, failed, Harlequins winning a somewhat uninteresting match by 26 points to 0.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—The Scottish in this match, at Richmond, on Saturday, were never really extended. The forwards in the first half were constantly in possession of the game, but neither they nor their backs gave of their best. To see the Scottish at their best one wants to see them in a match where they are being pressed. The Nomads kicked off and after Nasmith had made a good run, Simpson picked up and passed to Purvis, who handed to Walter to score, with the match five minutes old, Geddes kicking the goal. On restarting, from a good mark by H. West, Geddes failed. Following this, a free was given for a bad offside by E. D. Simpson, but nothing came of the kick. Walter, after a good run, tried a drop at goal, and then a combined run of Walter, Simpson, and Purvis ended in the latter scoring, and Geddes kicking the goal.

Thus, with 10 points to their credit, London Scottish crossed over, and were soon scoring again First Simpson passed to Purvis, but no goal resulted. Then Walter made the run of the match from inside his own twenty-five right through the whole Nomad XV., scoring a try, which Geddes converted. A good run by Rogers and Mitchell ensued, and Hector Munro gained a try, off which Geddes kicked a goal. Scott and Young both scored tries, but neither were converted, and the game finished up with two good but ineffective runs by Mitchell. Result :—London Scottish, 4 goals and 3 tries ; Marlborough Nomads, 0.

LONDON WELSH vs. UNITED SERVICES.—The United Services returned the London Welsh visit at Leyton on Saturday. The visitors mustered a strong combination that fully sustained the splendid reputation which the club has made for itself this season. The Welsh at once began to press. Rowlands, Rees, and Harding being prominent. Gradually the visitors pushed their way into the Welsh half, the kicking of the backs being very effective. After a short repulse a good run by one of the centres enabled Biggs to score a try in the corner. Brown failed to convert. The Welsh on resuming put plenty of dash in their play, and a run by Maddocks was nullified by a knock-on from his final pass when in a favourable position for equalising. Good Welsh forward play, gained much ground, but the Services' backs again got going, and almost scored. From the relieving kick on the line Lyon received near midfield and dropped a goal.

Immediately on starting the second half each line was threatened, the Welsh conceding a minor, and then retaliating with a rush that ended in Jenkins scoring a try, which was not converted by Watts. The visitors were penned on their own line for the most part. Brilliant bouts of passing were repeatedly indulged in between Rowlands, Watts and Maddocks. On one occasion it appeared that Maddocks' opportunity had at last come, but he passed, and the scene was quickly transferred to the Welsh twenty-five, where Jones was collared, and Biggs scored, a goal resulting. Towards the close Lieutenant Watson had the misfortune of straining the ligament of his knee, and had to be carried off the field. Result :—United Services, 1 goal, 1 dropped goal, and 1 try (12 points) ; London Welsh, 1 try (3 points).

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The 27th annual cross-country race between the representatives of Cambridge and Oxford Universities at Roehampton on Saturday, will be noted by the historian as perhaps the most interesting of the long series. Critics had singled out the Light Blues to win, but though expectations were realised in that respect, no one expected the Dark Blues to make such a close fight of it as to be beaten by only 1 point. The Cambridge team is undoubtedly one of the strongest of late years, and it speaks volumes for the form of the sister Varsity's runners that they should have made such a pluckly fight.

They were handicapped, to begin with by the inability of S. H. Carnelly (fourth last year) to run, owing to an attack of dysentry, and bearing in mind Inman's collapse, Oxford would have assuredly won with the assistance of Carnelly At the same time, the first reserve for the Dark Blues, E. M. Swift, performed fairly well. The Oxford men had greatly benefitted by their sojourn at Bushey, where they had finished their preperation. Every credit must be given to Edwards for what was, under the circumstances, a brilliant win, as he beat A. R. Churchill's record for the course by 20secs., and this despite the treacherous nature of the going. Pearson's performance in 1905 did not constitute a record, as the course was shorter than usual. That honour now belongs to Edwards, who, on Saturday, ran the race of his life. The weather was far from being inviting, but the number of spectators was considerably larger than last year Among the officials one missed Mr. J. E. Fowler-Dixon, who is just recovering from illness. This is the first Varsity race he has not seen for a number of years past.

The country for miles around was partly snowbound, and the previous night's frost had rendered the going by no means easy. The course differed from that used last year, which was not the full distance. On this occasion it measured as nearly as possible 7¼ miles, and was exactly the same as that over which A. R. Churchill made his record of 42mins. 17secs. in 1904. Shortly the course was from near the Old King's Head, up the road for about half a mile, across the Heath to Kingston Vale, and through Beverley Brook. Then the plough (said to afford pretty good going) was struck, and the journey continued over Coombe fields and near the wood, down Coombe Hill, into the neighbourhood of Molden, skirting Raynes Park. Later the Crooked Billet at Cottenham Hill was passed, and the further portion of the return journey made by way of the Windmill on the Common, finishing hard by the Well House, Roehampton.

The trail layers were as follows:—E. Slack, G. I. Brassey, A. R. Churchill, A. P. Foord, E. H. D. Markham, C. C Turner, H. Cloudesley, and G. Barker ; while officiating as pioneers for the race were A. R. Welsh, A. S. D. Smith, G B Tatham, H. W. Pearson, J. P. Foote, H. Kenyon, J. L. Cloudesley, and St. J. Neville.

It was after the advertised time when the start took place. After going half a mile the runners were practically all together, but Edwards, Webber, Mais, and Pearson were cutting out the pace. When they struck the common, where trail had been laid between the bushes, Edwards made an effort to get away. He was promptly challenged, however, and soon afterwards Weber (the captain of the Light Blues, now in his fourth year) shot to the front and led to the Dismal Swamp, about two miles away. Hereabouts Edwards deprived him of the lead At the same time Mais went up into second place, followed closely by Pearson. Having established a commanding lead at Malden, where Pearson was second, Edwards continued to draw away and eventually won, apparently strong and certainly full of running, by 38secs., or 200 yards Displaying excellent judgment, Mais passed Pearson half a mile from home. Inman, the Sedburgh "fresher," who was expected to show up prominently finished last in great distress.

BOXING.

THE 8ST. CHAMPIONSHIP.

DIGGER STANLEY vs. IKE BRADLEY.—Few provincial theatres gained more fame in bygone days than the Adelphi in Christian street, Liverpool, but like many another in this era of sumptuous equipment, its memory has been almost effaced. Quite recently the vast structure was acquired by the Gymnastic Club and it was here on Thursday evening last the long looked for match between "Digger" Stanley (London) and Ike Bradley (Liverpool) for the 8st. Championship and £50 a side was decided. The reputations of the contestants were enough in themselves to draw sportsmen from distant parts, and long before the proceedings commenced every available seat in the building was occupied.

In some respects the contest was a trifle disappointing, as for the first dozen rounds Bradley, who is at all times a slow starter, did scarcely anything but defend. By adopting such tactics he played completely into the hands of the Londoner, whose skill was of a high standard, and so well timed were his deliveries that he completely outpointed the little Liverpool exponent. There were occasions during this period when Bradley's chance of staying the stipulated distance seemed improbable, and to a less plucky lad the overwhelming lead established by his opponent would have had a deterrent effect. He fully realised the situation, and coming up for the thirteenth round made a bold effort to neutralise the Londoner's cleverness by working himself to close quarters. While so engaged his superior strength was an important factor, and it then became evident that all hope of success was not entirely extinguished.

Stanley, likewise, was doing well, and, aided by a severe upper cut, he managed to more than keep his rival in check during the next two meetings. Bradley came up much refreshed for sixteenth round, and fighting with increased vigour he made gallant attempt to turn the tide in his favour. Stanley showed visible signs of tiring under his early exertions, and so we he become from the heavy body punishment he received during the eighteenth stage that the sound of the gong alone saved him. Under the existing circumstances the Londoner battled on with splendid judgment, and did all that was needed by staying the full distance to win by a goodly margin of points.

The later stages of the contest were of such a stirring character that excitement naturally ruled high, and every move was watched with the keenest possible interest. To Stanley the honour of victory was a crowning reward, but too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the loser for the determined stand he made when the odds were so much against him. His defeat was admittedly, due to slowness at the start and the defensive tactics which were adopted until so late in the struggle is the only fault that can be advanced against him.

Of any speculation which took place Stanley was favourite, but this is not surprising considering his long record of successes, which include victories over Owen Moran and Jimmy Walsh, of Newton, Mass. The few reverses sustained have been brought about after closely-fought tussles with the last-mentioned in America quite recently, and the redoubtable Pedlar Palmer.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

As is customary on the concluding night of the Old Year, the entertainment at headquarters is set apart for the complimentary benefit to the club manager, Mr. A. F. Bettinson, and the large crowd that assembled in the handsome theatre last evening fully testified to the popularity of the beneficiaire. The programme arranged was of a very formidable character, those talented feather-weights, Johnny Summers (Canning Town) and Spike Robson (Newcastle) forming the chief attraction. It will be remembered that the pair met about ten months ago in the same ring, when the Londoner was returned the winner on points after a determined struggle lasting twenty rounds. Since then the Novocastrian has made a trip to the States, where he met with a considerable amount of success, and his victory over Tommy Murphy enabled him on his return to this country to find financial backing to the tune of £200 for a return match with his previous conqueror.

Summers' partisans immediately signified their intention of giving Robson a chance of retrieving his lost laurels, and the pair were thereupon matched to box twenty rounds for £200 a side and a purse of similar amount and the Feather-weight Championship. The encounter should have taken place a month ago, but owing to the Newcastle representative contracting a chill, the East-ender's supporters, rather than claim forfeit, agreed to have the match postponed. During this adjournment Robson shook off the effects of his illness, and under the care of Boyo Driscoll at Bridlington, succeeded in getting into excellent fettle. Yesterday, when he appeared to weight, he just scaled the necessary 9st. Summers had prepared from Mr. Gus Brewer's hostelry, the White Hart, Barnes, under the guidance of Steve Smith, and was found to be just a quarter of a pound lighter than his opponent. At the weighing ceremony there was no attempt at wagering, both parties preferring to wait until the evening before investing their money.

It was twenty minutes past ten when the combatants for the championship made their appearance, and Summers was at once installed a good favourite. The condition of each reflected great credit upon their respective mentors, and everything being in readiness, the men were ordered to begin. It was soon apparent that neither intended the bout to be of a very lengthy duration. Not a minute was wasted in sparring, and the exchange were of a very heavy character. The second round was contested even more heavily than the previous one, and the Londoner established a slight lead. In the succeeding meeting Summers used both hands with fine effect, and when they went to their corners both wore a somewhat flushed appearance. Continuing for the fourth time, Summers soon began to assert his superiority; and half way through the meeting worked his man into a neutral corner, and driving the right well home, sent Robson through the ropes. Instead of retreating to allow his rival to straighten himself, Summers also put his head through the ropes to deliver the finishing blow. While he was doing so Robson slipped to his knee, and evidently Summers did not observe this, for he continued to mete out punishment until the referee ordered him to desist, and very properly disqualified him for violating the rules. This proved a somewhat unfortunate ending to an interesting battle.

This is the second time that Summers has had to pay the penalty, for it will be remembered that the East-ender did almost exactly the same thing when he met Jim Driscoll (Cardiff), to whom he lost on a foul in the second round, in the same ring, a couple of seasons ago.

A bout which evoked great interest was that between Albert Cocksedge (Leicester) and Charlie Dew (Paddington). This was also a return match, the lads being articled to box fifteen rounds at 7st. 6lbs. for stakes and purse amounting to £125.

This was the concluding bout of the evening, and the lads gave a fine display. The Leicester man, who was quite a couple of pounds the heavier, hit much harder than his adversary and in the earlier part of the bout established a slight lead. However, Dew disputed every inch of the way and it was not until the full number of rounds had been contested that the fiat went in favour of Cocksedge.

The programme was further supplemented by exhibition bouts in which amateur champions opposed the pick of the professional ranks.

During the evening the beneficiaire returned thanks to the members for their liberal support, and intimated that for the New Year he had several interesting matches all but ratified. He was sanguine that the year of 1907 would be even more successful than the one just ended.

FEATHER-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

Summers was the first to take the ring, having for his attendants Chris. Clarke, Billy Plimmer, Arthur Gutteridge, and his trainer, Steve Smith. Robson quietly followed, being esquired by Harry James, Dai Dollings, and his trainer, Boyo Driscoll. Upon the gloves being adjusted and the men introduced they faced each other for ROUND 1.—After a brief spar Robson, who assumed a crouching position attempted to lead, but was short and was neatly countered on the face by Summers. Continuing to weave in, the Northerner scored twice lightly on the face. Working his man into a neutral corner, Robson tried his right but the East-ender easily avoided danger. Robson continued to keep at close quarters, and just before the termination of the round he was ordered to break away by the ruling official.

ROUND 2.—They left their respective corners with alacrity for the second round, Summers being the first to lead with a half-arm punch on the body. This brought about some spirited exchanges at close range, in which the Londoner was seen to advantage. At the break-away the Novocastrian twice delivered half-arm jolts on the side of the head and Summers jabbed the left home on the face just as the gong sounded.

ROUND 3.—The third round opened in determined fashion, the pair being quickly engaged at close quarters when Robson slipped down in a rally. He was quickly up again but a little later the Londoner dropped his adversary with a right-hand punch on the jaw. This had very little effect upon "Spike," who quickly returned to the fray, and some fine exchanges terminated the meeting.

ROUND 4.—Robson, in attempting to lead in the fourth round, was met with a fine straight righthanded punch on the mouth. Just afterwards Summers succeeded in getting home right and left on the head, and sent his man through the ropes. Instead of allowing Robson to recover, Summers kept banging away, and Robson dropped on his knees. Summers had evidently lost his head, for he twice hit his opponent while he was in this position, and, of course, the referee had no other alternative than to disqualify the Londoner and return Robson the winner.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

A BETTER day's sport than that of Sunday, the 23rd December, could not have been wished for. There was plenty of work for hounds and blood was plentiful, no less than a batch of jacks being accounted for. The meet was at the Lattice Bridge and a start was made along the old road as far as the Eastern Corner of Fox Hill. By doing this the Master avoided all the wet ground and after drawing for some distance a brace of jacks were found in a thick tope near a village. Settling to the line of one of these, hounds pushed him out of the tope and ran into him in a couple of hundred yards. This was disappointing, but the other jack had been viewed away, so, leaving the first jack unhonoured by any obsequies, the Master laid hounds on to the line of the second.

This they soon picked up and, quickly getting on good terms, they punted it briskly through the scrub and casuarinas till the jack took to the open and ran straight to the Canal bank. The Canal was big and looked very wet, so it was a great relief to the field to find that the jack had declined it and sought refuge in a clump of prickly pear on the bank. Out of this the hounds soon pulled her—it was a vixen—and she was killed and broken up. Neither of these jacks was a good one and they were quite unable to hold their own against hounds. After a short breathing space, hounds were taken back to the coverts and were not in there long before they were busy again, this time on a rather cold scent, apparently that of a jack which had moved out. Picking it out beautifully, however, they very soon began to run in earnest, the pace improving every minute. There was evidently a splendid scent and hounds quickly made it so hot for this jack that he abandoned his point, whatever it was, and swinging round retraced his steps towards the Lattice Bridge end of Fox Hill. Hounds were now running very fast and nearly straight, and it was perfectly clear that the pace must be too much for any jack before long. As bad luck would have it, a fresh jack intervened and half the pack went after him. The Master and most of the field were with these, but the rest stuck to the hunted jack, and smartly handled by the First Whip, pulled him down after a splendid run of nearly half an hour. After hounds had been got together again a move was made for home. It was a busy and enjoyable morning and hounds were fully compensated for their disappointing run on the previous Wednesday.

A GALLOPING course in the Salt Lake country attracted a smaller field, but a larger proportion of "equitators" than heretofore. The start lay to the right of the Monsoon Ride and after a sweep across the open returned by way of Screw Pine Gully to finish on the left of the road as you go from Johnpore Station. The distance was about three miles and some twelve fences were erected for negotiation. Amongst those out were Mrs. Lamond Walker on Detective, Mrs. and Miss Collin, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Stokes, Mrs. Paris, Mrs. Forsyth, Miss Bletsoe, Sir K. Muir, Captain Holden, Messrs Antram, Bell-Irving, Dring, Barley Pugh, Thomas, etc. In the Horse Chase Mr. Evers led all the way on Cain, although he nearly came a cropper at the first wall. Turk, Ruddigore, Lady Fox and Fairy chased him across the open, and on nearing the jungle Detective was pushed up in front. They finished in the following order :—

1. Mr. Evers on Cain.
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy.
3. Mr. Rees on Turk.
4. Mr. Halliday on Ruddigore.
5. Mrs. Walker on Detective.
6. Mr. Pauntley on Lady Fox.

Captain Pritchard on Young Poetess was next at hand, followed by Messrs. Morshead, Antram and Pierson and Miss Bletsoe.

INDIAN POLO ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE FINAL.

CALCUTTA POLO CLUB "A" TEAM vs. THE 12TH ROYAL LANCERS.—The gathering on the Calcutta ground when these doughty teams met in the final on Wednesday, the 2nd instant, was phenomenally large and ultra fashionable too. Viceroyalty, distinguished visitors from many parts of the globe, the native nobility and their suites, polo experts and enthusiasts, and a big muster of mere spectators (but none the less interested) were there to see a good game and on the whole they saw it. Calcutta, who won, were in exceptionally fine form, their tactics were sound, their pace undeniable and their hitting hard and accurate, Messrs. Ismay and the Maharaj Kumar of Cooch Behar being particularly brilliant at short intervals. The Lancers played up well, but in their want of good combination lay their weakness and their shooting was not good at times. Messrs. Wood and Badger played a hard and plucky game and were often doing a good deal of the attack, but in the end the Lancers had to admit defeat, at the hands of a really first class team, by 6 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries. Details :—

First Chukker.—For a prolonged space Calcutta held the ball in the Lancers' ground and scored a goal. Then a minor foul was given against Calcutta who had to hit out from behind their line and the play was then confined to the Calcutta ground where the Lancers got a minor point and then Calcutta began to press again and their final shot went out wide of the flags. Score: Calcutta, 1 goal; 12th Lancers, 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers brought the ball into play, and running it to the opposite end, attacked the flags, but the attack was repelled and a hot tustle raged about mid-ground for a long space, till Ismay getting a run to the Lancers' ground, a long space, till Ismay getting a run to the Lancers' ground, a long space, till Ismay getting a run to the Lancers' ground, committed—that of drinking a large quantity of cold water at once, as this does not relieve the parched throat. The feeling of thirst is mainly in the windpipe and the throat close handy. The water, if taken hurriedly, overloads the stomach after giving relief to the gullet, but the windpipe gets no relief until the body absorbs some of the moisture through the system; so, in spite of the desire to drink a quantity of liquid—of which one of the finest is toast-water or oatmeal-water—take it slowly, drop by drop, as it were, and the result will be much more satisfactory, as the stomach will not be overloaded and no unpleasant feeling be engendered.

Sprains, strains of muscles, bruises, etc., often occur while in training. The most rapid and complete cure may be obtained by the use of St. Jacob's Oil, which, according to the testimony of Hanlan, Beech, Ross, and others is the best liniment offered to the public.

One of the great objects of training is to develop muscle and muscular power; at the same time to reduce excess of fat, which has the reputation of hindering muscular action by its presence in and around the muscles.

The chief place for fatty deposits is under the skin and close to it. By pinching up a roll of the skin the fat comes with it, and its thickness can be easily discovered. There is, however, no fear of fatty degeneration if the fat does not exist in excess under the skin. Fat also deposits itself in quantity among the intestines and around the vital organs of the body, and although its presence in small quantities is essential to the well-being of the body, when in bulk it obstructs their functions, and is liable to enter into the very organs themselves, and thus produce what is known as "fatty degeneration"—a very dangerous disease, especially of the heart.

By comparing chemically the composition of human muscle with other substances, will be found that the flesh of the bullock more closely, indeed quite, resembles it in the smallest detail; hence reason will tell us that, as muscular action destroys the substance of the muscles exerted, and that its rebuilding, or replenishing, must take place through the food we devour, being digested in the stomach and passing into the blood for the purpose, the most appropriate food for the requirements of training will be a certain amount of bullock meat known as rump-steak, or beef; and as this is easier to digest when uncooked rather than when cooked, it were better eaten raw; but the requirements of civilisation teach us that raw meat is not strictly in accordance with our early teachings, and savours of cannibalism, wherefore we turn our back against a habit which we term revolting, and fall back upon the happy medium of eating it when underdone.

On no account bathe upon a full stomach, and do not take violent exercise within two hours after eating a substantial meat meal. There is no need here to warn the athlete against over-eating, as common sense teaches us that we should leave off eating before we are in such a state that the sight of food is distasteful.

In reducing fat, do not, except in extreme cases, muffle up and sweat down the overplus; let good, fair exercise be the means, assisted by a Turkish bath.

Now as to wind, a most necessary part of the training for athletic exercises. One of the most essential requirements of an athlete is a good wind. To secure this, the first thing is to get into condition, and to do this, care should be taken not to do too much at first. Let the athlete practise with the dumb-bells and Indian-clubs for five minutes, then ten, and so on, increasing the time from day to day. Then, to expand the chest and so give room for the extra lung-power, let him take a brisk walk with a portion of a stick stretched across his back, keeping the elbows well to his sides; the military exercise of swinging round the arms, backwards and forwards, upwards and downwards; and a see-saw kind of action of the arms, such as we teach children at school when we set them to imitate the cobbler mending his shoes. At first these exercises will cause pain to the heart and distress the would-be athlete, but after a little practice the distress will wear off, and a few days will cause it to disappear altogether. This proves the proverb. "All things come to him who waits." A man cannot get into condition in a day, any more than Rome could be built in one. The more time we allow ourselves to train in, the more perfect we shall become.

A man must not expect too great things from his delicate lungs until they are properly under control. In activity they are called upon to act rapidly, for it is by their action that the waste caused by exercise is to a large extent thrown off in the shape of carbonic acid gas. Men talk of second wind; there is no such thing. It is simply this—the lungs get into more activity, and after a time this becomes their regular rate of working-speed, and one perceives a sense of relief. Well-trained men get this relief quicker than those who are poorly trained as the latter's troubles only increase as they continue to keep up the speed.

"Early to bed and early to rise make a man healthy, wealthy, and wise." This is a most important factor in the training profession. Ten o'clock should be the time for retiring, and eight hours the proper allowance of sleep.

When first you awake, get out of bed at once and have a sponge bath, rubbing yourself thoroughly with a rough towel until the skin glows under the operation. Cold-salt-and-water for the feet may be used while in the sponge-bath, as this will tend to prevent the feet becoming blistered, and it is advisable to rub a little Vaseline on the soles of the feet, as this is a fine preventive of blisters and soreness.

A few years ago Mr. Norman G. Pritchard, India's Champion Sprinter and who also distinguished himself on the running path in England and France, wrote an illustrated article for The Empress on the subject of training for athletics in India, with acknowledgments to our contemporary we extract the following:—

Sprint Training—First Week.

Having done a fair amount of moderate and hard walking for a fortnight or so the first week's trials are as follows:—Rise at 7, a short walk of, say, two miles before breakfast—light dumb-bells and punching ball for fifteen or twenty minutes on return. A sharp rub down with a soft towel, not hand gloves—cool for ten minutes. Then a tepid bath and breakfast. After office hours walk down briskly to the training track. Half a dozen or more starts with a pistol with sprints of 40 to 50 yards followed by a stride through the 100 yards and another over 200 to 300 yards with plenty of leg work is all that need be done for a beginning. Provided you do not live out at Tollygunge or Dum-Dum, a walk home is a nice wind-up for the day. Dinner comes with roast or boiled mutton, a potato or two boiled in their skins, with again stale bread or toast. A couple of glasses of claret—small glasses—instead of beer may be taken for dinner if the pedestrian fancies it rather than the malt beverage. A game of billiards may be indulged in before retiring. Smoking ought to have been given up gradually before entering upon this course of training, though a cigarette will do no harm after dinner.

Second Week.

My usual plan was to have a few starts every evening, and run about thirty or forty yards at top speed and ease up gently and not as one sees some men often do here—very suddenly and within about 10 or 12 yards. It will be found that sprints of about 40 to 50 yards are the best training for any distance up to a quarter. This at all events is my experience. After the above it would be well to run through a 100 at top speed, say, on Tuesdays and Fridays—not against the clock. You may expect to do 10⅘ seconds or even faster time, and feel a bit down in the mouth when your friend tells you the time is 11 seconds or perhaps worse. If you are training for the quarter, run about 200 yards at a fair pace and stride through the remainder of the distance but don't on any account do a fast 100 and a fast 200 or 3 0 the same evening. It does not pay in Calcutta in the middle of February. It certainly didn't suit me, and as I have been in India all my life this advice might be found useful. The walks, etc., should be the same in this week as in the first, except perhaps that longer spins of about 3 to 4 miles may be taken. Try and take a different route each day. Round the Fort one morning—Ballygunge, and plenty of Ballygunge, other mornings—Dalhousie Square way—Chowringhee, Esplanade, Eden Gardens, etc., etc. There is nothing like a change from the monotonous sameness of roads and houses. During the second week the rubbing down should be done with hand gloves and applied particularly strongly on the back of the thigh, calf and shoulders, in fact everywhere, but especially where you feel you want it most. The bath ought to be colder this week.

Third and Last Week.

If a man "has his heart in his work," and there is nothing in training like keeping a man's mind happy, he ought now to be feeling fairly fit. If he sits down after his meals to twiddle his thumbs the chances are very much in favour of him letting his fancies play with all sorts of unprofitable subjects. As a closing up of what ought to have been a pleasant fortnight's training, I will set down each evening's exercise briefly as follows:—

Monday.—Four or five starts with pistol with sprints of 30 to 40 yards. Rest for a minute or two and have your time taken for the 100. If you are not satisfied with your performance, retire to the dressing room and after a rub down, have another go and I will warrant that this time, be the clocking what it may, you will run better by the end of the week, we will say on Saturday, when you run your race. If you are training for the quarter or a shorter distance, run through it at half speed.

Tuesday.—Six or eight starts with pistol and sprints of 30 to 40 yards, run through the 100 once at half speed and do nothing more unless you are also training for a quarter when it would be wise to go over this distance at half speed, sprinting in the last 50 yards.

Wednesday.—The same as on Monday, with the exception that the second 100 be omitted. Run a fast 300 if training for the quarter.

Thursday.—Six or more starts after which run 130 yards, half speed for a 100 yards and top speed the remainder of the distance.

Friday.—Three or four starts with a couple of spins of from 30 to 50 yards should be all the work.

The day of the Race.—Rise when you feel inclined to, we will say at 7-30 and take a quick walk about a mile. Do no dumb-bell or punching ball exercise. Rub down and tub, the bath ought, for this last week, to be cold unless the athlete strongly objects to the water in this state. For breakfast loin chops with cabbage, stale bread or toast and a small glass of claret should suffice, provided you feel you have had enough to eat. At mid-day should be taken an egg beaten up with sherry or port.

Two hours before the race is run, supposing it takes place at three o'clock, the runner had better have a light luncheon of boiled fowl, toast and some light wine. No beer should be drunk at all upon this day. If the grounds at which the meeting is to be held—for instance, the Eden Gardens—are within a mile or so of your office, walk there if the sun is not too hot. This gentle stroll will help to keep the muscles from rusting and you ought to feel perfectly at ease mentally and bodily after a rub down, and confident at least of running your best. When going down to the starting post, make it a point of getting there punctually, if anything get there before the starter does. Try a start and a short burst of, say, 20 yards. Don't let the sight of another fellow dancing about on his toes, apparently very merry, upset you—he is probably quite as nervous as you are. When settled on your mark keep your eyes fixed on the tape ahead of you, never mind the men on your right and left, think of yourself only and that bit of worsted—leave your mark sharply and make for the tape as if your life depended upon your getting there—for the rest—trust the judges.

DIET.

As a general rule a healthy man in training may eat practically most things that go to make up one's dietary scale in India. What he MUST avoid are:—Sweets, pastry, confectionery, pies, pork, greasy, or stodgy, side-dishes, pickles, spices and spiced foods and condiments; and he should "go very slow" on bacon, ham, prawns, crabs, curry of any sort. Cucumbers, artichokes, assparagus, most "savouries," nuts and deserts.

But he may eat most other things. For instance for breakfast he may make choice of any of the following:—Porridge, Quaker oats, fish cooked in any way, eggs done in a dozen ways, from plain boiled to omlette au fin herbes. In the matter of meat there are chops, steaks cutlets, kidneys, liver and bacon, brains, sausages (occasionally), cold meat of any sort, stews, grilled fowl, and mince. Salad (tamato the best of all), green food such as spring lettuce, celery, onions, radishes, potatoes, and any green vegetables. Bread, butter, a little marmalade perhaps and fruit.

For tiffin cold meat and salad, something "made up" and light, a little plain milk pudding—rice, tapioca, sago, vermicelli, bread, fried plantains, stewed fruit and custards, a little bread and cheese.

For dinner any sort of soup or broth; fish of any description being careful to exercise discretion rich in respect of tinned sorts and sauces; any plain wholesome side-dish; all joints, both meat and poultry (except pork); all green vegetables such as cabbage, peas, beans, cauliflower, spinach (most excellent) and tomatoes, while pumpkin, turnips, onions, brinjals, may be taken in extreme moderation. Potatoes, of course, are admissable, and these can be served in at least a dozen ways; those prone to adipose tissue should, however, avoid them and their bread should always be cut thin and toasted. All second courses, and savouries should be strenuously shunned. In respect of puddings we recommend those we enumerate for tiffin. Fruit is best left alone at night and for ourselves we should not allow dessert if we were training anyone.

In regard to liquids, drink as little as possible, and it is curious to note how little one can do on (in the cold weather specially) when will power and moral fortitude are brought to bear on the subject. Beer or stout are good, but in great moderation they are full of sugar and are very fattening; claret is the next best thing to drink with meals; spirits, aërated waters, liqueurs, sweet wines are absolutely tabooed; a very occasional glass of port after dinner may do no harm if one feels a bit fagged. Do drinking between meals, no short drinks before meals, no highly iced beverages, should be the rule, and tea and coffee should not be taken too strong or too often. Cocoa is, for most people, better as a training beverage than tea or coffee.

Motoring.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

NOT all the cars and bicycles which were entered for the above trials started, but nevertheless there was a goodly gathering at the new Queen's Statue, when Mr. F. P. Rannie, I.C.S., First Assistsnt Resident, sent us off this morning in the absence of the British Resident in Calcutta. The cars left in the following order:—Mr. E. E. Bryant's 6 H.-P. DeDion, Mr. H. C. Jeddere Fisher's 6 H.-P. DeDion, Mr. F. E. C. Carr's 8 H.-P. Darracq, Mrs. Goodall's 8 H.-P. DeDion, Messrs. Simpson and Co.'s 8 H.-P. Darracq, Mr. R. Jefferson's 8 H.-P. Rover, Mr. J. H. Blake's 9 to 11 H.-P. Swift, Mr. J. H. Barker's 10 H.-P. Cardillac, Mr. H. E. Ormerod's 10 to 12 H.-P. I. C. G., Mr. T. C. Durrell's 12 to 16 H.-P. F. I. A. T., Lieutenant A. G. Gwyer's 15 to 20 H.-P. Napier, Mr. G. V. Scovell's 15 to 20 H.-P. DeDion, Mr. F. E. Stewart's 20 H. P. Brown, H. H. The Maharaja of Vizianagram's 24 H.-P. Napier, and Captain Walker's 25 H.-P. Peugeot. (The list of the motor-bicycles will be included in to-morrow's diary).

To begin with the day promised fairly, everyone got off well, and no one supposed that the day's run to Kolar and back (120 miles) was going to prove such a veritable test of reliability. But so it turned out. We had hardly been running for half an hour when a Scotch mist struck in our faces which speedily developed into real rain. But it was wonderful how the motor-bicycles kept ahead of the cars. There had only been a minute's interval between the departure of the motor-bicycles and two minutes interval between the cars. Certainly this meant a long start from the last three or four cars off the mark (in one of which was contained your correspondent), but still it did seem to me that the "motor bikes" made wonderful way. Still there is nothing that calls for very special remark on the outward journey. Tyre troubles did not count, oil stoppages were a matter of a few seconds, but a car which should have done a fair non-stop run in each direction had the worst of luck by breaking a chain about 13 miles short of Kolar. This is an accident for which nobody is really accountable, and it was the only stop the car made on the double journey. And even then it only took 7 minutes 30 seconds to put on a new chain. However these are details. We had an excellent run, considering the weather, to Kolar and an excellent tiffin at that station, from which we returned to Bangalore. But on the way a nasty accident took place to Mr. J. H. Barker's car, which for some reason or another turned over in Hookote Town, and although the European occupants got clear, the native chauffeur was somewhat seriously injured. With two days proceedings yet to go, I dare not write any more at present.

On our second day's run, from Bangalore to Katpadi (130 miles), only eleven cars out of seventeen, faced the starter. These all got into Mulbagal, (60 miles and tiffin) although there were sundry minor troubles on the way; and ten reached Katpadi, the finish of the day's run. Of these Messrs. Simpson and Co.'s 10-12 H.-P. Darracq, continues to possess a clean sheet, and the same remark applies to Captain Walker's Peugeot (25 H.-P. and Mr. F. C. O. Durrell's 12-16 H.-P. F. I. A. T. Others cars that have run conspicuously well are Mr. Hannay's 10-12 H.-P. Humber, Mr. H. C. Jeddere Fisher's 6 H.-P. DeDion. Mr. G. V. Scovell's 15-20 H.-P. DeDion, and Mr. F. E. Stewart's 20-22 H.-P. Brown. The last named gentleman is, however, hopelessly out of the trials through a piece of bad luck or carelessness, as you choose to look at it. He had a non-stop run on the opening day, and got within a few miles of Katpadi on the second day under the same conditions. But he had inadvertently left his petrol tap open, he expended two gallons in running three miles (!) and the result was that he had to beg petrol to get him into Katpadi when almost in sight of port. It was most unfortunate, for the car had made a splendid run up to this point.

As regards the motor-bicycles, I am in the dark as I write at Katpadi as to what is going to be decided and even as to what has become of a couple of the competitors. Eight started from Bangalore on the opening day, four tailed off yesterday, and only Messrs. Stewart, Rigold, Narasimham and Henderson left Kolar for Katpadi on the 28th December. Of these, only Stewart and Rigold arrived at Katpadi, and even these two had a terrible time of it. The mud was inches deep and the cycles could hardly get through it. When they increased their speed they skidded, and when running fast through this stuff the riders may veritably be said to have taken their lives in their hands. However, by hook or crook these two plucky riders pushed their way over roads which are a disgrace to the authorities of the taluq, into Katpadi, and their arrival was hailed with cheers from over thirty motorists who were dining at the Katpadi Railway Station. (A jolly good dinner we got for our money too—all honour to Messrs. G. V. Scovell and Benson, the latter of the Madras Railway.) Various toasts were proposed and freely honoured, but as these do not concern the trials they need only be mentioned. "The King" was proposed by Mr. G. V. Scovell, who, handicapped by many things (the sudden absence of his brother Secretary, Mr. F. E. Hooper, and absolutely frightful weather may be quoted), has worked his hardest to make satisfactory arrangements. Mr. G. F. Brierley proposed Mr. Scovell's health, and subsequent toasts were "the ladies," "absent friends" and Mr. Benson of the Madras Railway, another gentleman who has taken so much trouble. Subsequently all except unfortunate journalists retired to bed in the S. I. M. U. special train, and slept the sleep of the just—or otherwise.

Coming to the third day, only 10 cars and a single cyclist (Stewart) started from Katpadi on the 90 miles run to Madras. For the few miles the roads were bad, with numerous villages and sharp corners and any amount of mud. After passing through Vellore, however, they improved, and the Wenlock causeway over the Palar River was reached. There had been much anxiety as to whether the water on this would be low enough to permit of passage, but fortunately there were only about 8 or 10 inches and with the assistance of dozens of yelling natives, the cars were all got safely across. From the further bank the Maharaja of Vizianagram's 24 H.-P. Napier got away with a long start of the other cars (the motor-cyclist had punctured four miles after starting.) Gradually the roads improved and when approaching Conjeveram, which was left some miles to the right, they became really first rate and we fizzed along at a steady average of about 24 miles per hour. The 12 H.-P. Napier continued to lead by a long way until about 15 miles from home, when a tyre went and a long stop was the result. A second puncture a few miles further on, necessitaed a dead slow progress upon a flattened tyre by this car, and she was actually the last that finished. They reached Madras in the following order:—

Mr. G. V. Scovell's 15 H.-P. DeDion, The Maharaja of Vizianagram's 12-16 H.-P. F. I. A. T., Messrs. Simpson & Co.'s 8 H.-P. Darracq, Mr. C. L. Hannay's 12 H.-P. Humber, Captain Walker's 25 H.-P. Peugeot, Messrs. Simpson & Co.'s 10-12 H.-P. Darracq. Mr. Stewart's 22 H.-P. Brown, and H. H. the Maharaja of Vizianagram's 24 H.-P. Napier. After luncheon, photographs were taken of the cars with their drivers and observers, and the large number of guests assembled, and then all those who had finished, ran to Government House, Guindy, where the prizes were presented by H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley, Governor of Madras.

"A" Class:—Captain Walker's 25 H.-P. Peugeot, driven by H. W. Simpson.

"B" Class (1) (None arrived).

"B" Class (2) H. H. the Maharaja of Vizianagram's 12-16 H.-P. F. I. A T.,driven by Mr. Durrell.

"B" Class (3) Mr. G. V. Scovell's 15-20 H.-P. DeDion.

No motor bikes have arrived as I write, and the result of the hill climb has not yet been ascertained. His Excellency in presenting the prize winners, congratulated them heartily, and made a short, but humourous speech, in the course of which he proposed a vote of censure on the clerk of the weather, and a vote of thanks to Mr. Justice Boddam. He drew attention to the great interest taken by Mr. G. V. Scovell in the encouragement of the motor movement, and congratulated him heartily upon winning the beautiful Cup presented by H. H. the Maharaja of Vizianagram.

Cheers for the prize winners and for His Excellency brought the trials to a conclusion, and there is no doubt that they have been considering the terribly abnormal climate conditions, a signal success.

Four Ladies came through to-day, Mesdames Scovell, Durrell, Giffard and Hannay. No doubt there have been little complaints and minor dissatisfactions, but so far as I can gather, the competitors almost universally recognised the difficulties which had attended the trials, and considered that these had been met so far as possible.

Cricket.

CKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C.C. vs. MILITARY.—Played on the 5th instant, the C.C.C. winning by 5 wickets. The match produced some tall scoring. Lieutenant Walker was run out after making 129 for the Military—he batted well but gave three chances. Williams, Temperley, and Thirkell White also played attractive cricket and the innings closed for 354. Calcutta sent in Guise and Eddis and runs began to come fast. The century was signalled without a separation, but at 124 Eddis was given leg before after a well played 77. Beachcroft joined Guise and batting freely they took the score to 230 before Beachcroft was caught, and Nicholls came in. Eleven runs were added and then Guise's wicket fell when he was three runs short of his century, Nicholls made 56, and Pope 22. Bartholomew and Quin hitting off the remaining runs. Scores:—

Golf.

21st December 1906.

PERHAPS to the golfer of whatever social grade or sex the most important item in the fortnightly budget is the alteration in the rules and regulations for the Open Championship. For some time past there has been considerable discussion on the subject, for everyone concerned or unconcerned recognized that change was necessary in order to cope with the rapidly increasing entry, and the five clubs which govern the Championship have at last arrived through their delegates at the following decision which will at all events be put into practice in the immediate future. The Managing Clubs are The Royal and Ancient Club, the Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers, the Prestwick Club, the Royal Liverpool Club, and the Royal St. George's Club. It will be observed that while three of the five are Scotch and the remaining two English, Ireland is not allowed a "look in," the game being of comparatively recent introduction in the Emerald Isle. The following official statement has been issued :—

"At a meeting of delegates from the Managing Clubs held in Edinburgh on Saturday, 15th December, it was resolved that the Open Championship in June next, to be held at Hoylake, should be played under the following conditions :—

"On Tuesday and Wednesday in the championship week entrants will qualify to play for the championship by two rounds on each day ; one half of the entrants to be drawn to play on the Tuesday, and the remainder on the Wednesday. The 30 players returning the lowest scores on each day, including all who may tie, will be qualified to play.

"On Thursday and Friday the championship will be played for by such entrants as may have qualified, under the rules at present governing it."

* * * * *

That some sort of qualifying round must be instituted has for the last few years been obvious, but golf is an fond a very conservative game, and to reconstitute so old an institution as the Open Championship required courage—and much consideration as to how. But the last straw was placed on the camel's back at Muirfield this year (1906) when there were 183 entries for the Championship and it was only possible to play one round in each of the first two days, and even then play was continued without intermission from 9 o'clock A.M. till very nearly 8 o'clock at night. So then by the new regulations the Open Championship will remain a purely Stroke Competition from start to finish and the two qualifying rounds will take place on the Royal Liverpool Club's Course at Hoylake on 18th and 9th June, respectively, and the first 30 players in each of these 36 holes qualifying stroke competitions (including any players who may tie for 30 th. place) will be eligible to take part in the 72 holes Stroke Competition for the Actual Championship on 20th and 21st June. This is quite clear, there will necessarily be much criticism, adverse and otherwise, but the Rules of the five Governing Clubs must, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, be unalterable until these same five clubs see fit to amend them further should necessity arise.

Not1 very much interest is evoked by the challenge which A. G. Gow, of the Gog-Magog Club, issued to Mayo of Chipstead for £20. The golfing public are satiated with professional matches, and much prefer, unless under very exceptional circumstances, to gang their own gait and follow their own ball round a course when the chance presents itself, but still, of course, there will be a good many onlookers in this match, Gow vs. Mayo, the first half of which is to take place at Bridgworth on 3rd January and the second half at Brancaster a week later. Gow is full of "Gs."—A. G. Gow of the Gog-Magog Club bristles with the seventh letter in the alphabet, and he also comes from Gol'ang—but so far he has not distinguished himself greatly or conspicuously in big events ; he is young though and his day will assuredly come as it comes to every dog—I mean "Gow' fer."

Inattention to, and ignorance of rules entailing disqualification seems to be more prevalent among men than women—there may be more than one reason for this, the man or the man's partner may speak up, the woman or her's may through ignorance or what is popularly supposed to be woman's failing, a desire to conceal, let her little elusions and infringements of rules lie perdu, but a curious case of disqualification, when no less than four players were recently put off the running, occurred in the same competition on Saturday, 15th instant, in a club not very far from London. The facts are these : two of the four thought it wise to shelter during a heavy shower, another failed to record (or allowed his marker to omit) a something intended for a stroke, but which took the form of a mere heeltap ; and the fourth, beginning his medal round with a stroke to point, sent his caddy to recover the ball nesting nearly in the club house, and started all over again sans penalty ! In justice to golfers who regularly take part in stroke competitions one should remark that similar breaches of the Royal and Ancient Laws such as I have just recounted are rare, and although the world of golf quite recently was pleased to make more than insinuations as to the probity and honesty of ladies on the Links, with many years of experience of lady golfers I must make an emphatic refutation of H. L.'s charges on their behalf.

The silk wound "Pneumatic" ball seems a wonderful invention, and according to "Alec Smith," who has achieved unparalleled feats with it in America there is no ball in the market to touch it for endurance, elasticity and all other endearing attributes of a golf ball ! These can be obtained 3s. each ! from the makers, Vulcan Works, St. Thomas Street, London, S.E. A great deal of discussion arose consequent on "gate money" being charged in the great foursome at Timperley last month, but the actual result was that the Club have been enabled to distribute the sum of £40 to local charities. A very interesting course of lectures on Golf delivered by Mr. Maitland-Brown, at Elgin, have just come to an end. The subject of the lectures embraced everything connected with the game, and were very largely attended and greatly appreciated. Mr. Brown is headmaster of the Elgin High School, and is himself a very good player, with a wonderfully easy graceful style and has besides considerable knowledge of the history of the game through all the ages in which it has been in existence, and now to 1906 we must make our adieus to Links and Golfers, and wish them and all their kind a continuance of prosperity in 1907 and a health to "Gowfers a'" from

THE TENTH LAHORE DOG SHOW.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE above Show took place on the 27th and 28th December in an enclosed space in the Government Gardens. The entries were better than last year, and the quality of some of the exhibits of a high order. The classes were divided between Lieut. H. W. Bush and Major Williamson, while Mr. S. Brandreth came in on the second day to assist in the awarding of the specials. In spite of the various other attractions of the Christmas week the gate was good. We were pleased to notice on the first day walking round the benches and taking an interest in the judging, His Honour The Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Charles Rivaz, while Lady Rivaz graced the Show with her presence on the second day. It is pleasing to the promoters of Shows that those who are great ones in the land honour them by coming and showing a kindly interest. There are rumours afloat that the management of the Show may shortly change hands, and be given over to the N.I.K.A. entirely, for up to now, that is since Mr. Lionel Jacob left Lahore some years ago, the life of the Show has practically depended upon one man, namely, Mr. Bush, and though this is a thing that nearly always happens in India yet it is not desirable. There was none in Murree this year to start things, so there was no Show. However, all this is by the way, for nothing has yet been settled nor even discussed we understand between the two Committees. Let us therefore turn to our real subject. Major Williamson started to work on Greyhounds in one ring, while Mr. Bush occupied the other with Dachshunds, and both were kept busy till 2 o'clock by which time the former had finished his classes, while after lunch Mr. Bush continued till 3-30 before he could say "enough." This left only the specials for the next day.

There were altogether 44 classes, all more or less well filled, in all 221 entries. GREYHOUNDS were a very fair lot, but not so good as we have seen them, the Maharaja of Jind's Summerstone Lady was first, a nice bitch of some quality, with a good shoulder and general outlook, second Mr. Spencer's Stirrup Cup, a bigger dog, but rather straight in shoulder, followed by Fine Glooe, reserve, Joyous Flirt, V. H. C., and Fearless H. C. In the Limit Class the first prize went to Stirrup Cup, and the second to Joyous Flirt owned by Mr. Ames. In the Puppy Class the competition was small, only two faced the judge, Mr. Spencer's Sabre, a fair pup won. In the Bulldog Class there was only one entry, Mr. Penn Gaskell's Nuthurst Dick, son of the celebrated Nuthurst Dick, a good dog, a bit wanting in lay-back, but well worthy of the prize that was awarded. RETRIEVERS were not particularly good, being small in size, the winner was Glanbrane Rock, in the Limit Jind Nip came out top, both were owned by the Maharaja of Jind. The Open Class for SCOTTISH TERRIERS was a good one, the winner, Martian Thistle, being now well-known, a very nice terrier in many ways, but is one that misses being a flyer. Second Captain Hesketh's Gleambor Robin who is now getting a bit thick in skull, but legs and feet still good. Glendale Dirk, reserve, while Kim, a winner at Lahore a couple of years ago, had to be content with V. H. C. In the Limit Glendale Dirk won, followed by Major Jacque's Peter Quinine, a nice dog, a bit long in body and lacking in expression. Only two in the Puppy Class, Martian Model being first. The AIREDALE TERRIER Classes were the strongest that we have seen at Lahore for several years, the Open Class was headed by Maharaja of Jind's Jind Marquis, a good headed dog, rather inclined to be heavy all round, excellent bone. Second Mr. Inglis' Bob, good in bone, feet and expression, but not a nice coat. Major Paling's Reyt

Mystery, reserve, scores in body, coat and body points, but loses in head. Elrae Royalist, V. H. C. would take much beating if it was better in head.

IRISH TERRIERS, in the Open Class Captain Martin's Rampant Royalist had it all his own way, a high class terrier with the right kind of coat. Second, Martian Moonah, a nice puppy spoilt by a dark muzzle, and open feet, should furnish well. Mr. Toppin's Rathmore Paddy, reserve, is on the big side. Mr. Power's Terrible Turk, V. H. C., a good terrier spoilt by terribly bad feet covered with corns. Limit saw Martian Moonah first followed by Terrible Turk. Puppy Class Martian Moonah first. This ended Major Williamson's classes.

Turning to those which Mr. Bush had to judge, he commenced on DACHSHUNDS, in which the most notable thing was the large size of some of the exhibits. Pilgrim, who was put up to be raffled some time ago, withdrawn after many tickest were taken, and who is now the property of the Maharaja of Jind, was first, a nice chocolate wanting a bit in bone or his size, not too large. Second, Mr. Bickley Roe's Caviare, a large dog with immense bone, and depth of chest, looked almost like a Basset hound. Two quite nice bitches, Mr. Roe's Kader Dinah and Mr. James' Marie, V. H. C. Limit, saw Pilgrim eliminated, so Caviare went up first followed by Kader Dinah. Puppy Class, Mr. Roe's Cocum, not a bad headed pup is Second, Mr. Howell's Don Carlos, very good outlook with elbows all out which spoilt its chances. COCKER SPANIELS, a good class headed by General Des Voeux' Lady of the Lake, a recent importation, a really good bitch. Second, Maharaja of Jind's Jind Sporting Fred, a nice dog but weak in head. Limit, Mistress Elizabeth belonging to the Maharaja of Jind first, Second General Des Voeux' Samana Prince, bad in head and too big. Puppy Class, about the worst class in the Show, Mr. O'Hara's Erin Emperor first, a poor foul-marked pup which will never be much. BULL TERRIERS—First Captain Quin's Ch Houghton Ladylove, a very good bitch spoilt by a light eye, and a slackness of gait. V. H. C. the same owner's Illixem Wild, bad in head and coarse in stern. Limit—First Maharaja of Jind's Borleagh Young Kaffir, a nice active pup, good in head and bone, he also won the Puppy Class prize.

SMOOTH FOX TERRIER DOGS, OPEN.—The best class in the Show and hotly contested.—First Major Impey's Induna, Mr. Arden Close's Cruiser taking second and losing to the winner only in feet and condition. Third Maharaja of Jind's Dampierre, a grand terrier that is on the wane, but has wonderful bone, and showed well. V. H. C. Captain Lance's Speculation, Maharaja of Jind's Ch. Raby Huntsman. Major Impey's Iqbal, Indian Lad. H. C. Mr. Close's Canto and Captain Jackson's Trickster. Limit, Major Impey's Indian Lad first, a nice pup showed well, but will have a coarse head. Second Trickster, a very showy dog, good in bone, head and feet, but just too big. Junior, saw Induna first and Cruiser second. Puppy Class. First Indian Lad, second Trickster, reserve Canto, SMOOTH FOX TERRIER, BITCHES.—A good class but not so hot a one as the open dogs. First came Major Impey's Infanta, an all-round very fair bitch with no bad or particularly prominent bad points. Second the Maharaja of Jind's Delberta, a really high class bitch absolutely ruined by bad treatment, and prominent muscles on the forelegs from constantly being on chain. Third the same owner's Donno Phillipa, a taking all-white bitch, a good shower, a little high on the leg. Reserve, Mr. Arden Close's Cerise, a beautiful pup that should be heard of again before long. Limit, Donna Phillipa first, Cerise second. Third Captain Lance's Lucky Coup, a showy pup, but with a short head. Junior, first Infanta, second Captain Roe Price's Genteel Poverty, a nice bitch which misses being a flyer. Third Cerise. Puppy Class, first Genteel Poverty, second Cerise, reserve, Indian May. WIRE FOX TERRIER DOGS, OPEN.—One dog only, Jind Don't Hit Hard, nice head and size, poor on his legs. Puppy Class, also only one, Mr. Reid's The Devil, nice body, high rather, but the head was poor. WIRE FOX TERRIER BITCHES, OPEN.—First, Maharaja of Jind's Jind Glory, a really smart little bitch, which beat her dam, the celebrated Ch. Dufky Gleaner, who was second V. H. C. Mrs. James, Iriss, Captain Paterson's Sweet Dixie, Major Impey's Indian Rose.

Jind Glory also won first in Limit and Junior. Puppy Class, 1st Indian Rose a good headed light-made bitch. Variety Class, produced a schipperke, Peter Peshawar, owned by Miss Hawkins, who won, also a springer spaniel with crooked legs, and a very indifferent pomeranian. EASTERN BREEDS, OPEN, Miss Sorby's Pekinese, Chin Chin, 1st, a beautiful specimen, also competed Captain Martin's Afghan hound, Fatima, shown very light in condition and Mrs. Hibbert's Lhasa, a Tibetan Spaniel, which won in the Limit Class. The Naturalist.

A NATURALIST IN THE N.-W. HIMALAYAS.

PART X.

SOME months have gone since I had the pleasure of writing to you regarding the birds and small mammals of these hills. Information is slowly gathered, but at last a certain amount of progress is being made. The collectors again visited Ladak and worked at Shushal, along the shores of the Pengong Lake, from thence back to Nubra, and by short stages into the Lidoas Valley in Kashmir

BIRDS AND EGGS.

I do not intend to inflict on the readers of the Indian Field a list of all the birds and eggs secured, and will only make mention of those to which special interest is attached.

A clutch of four eggs and the parent birds of Phylloscopus indicus the Olivaceous willow warbler were found, also the eggs of Phylloscopus neglectus the plain willow warbler, at Dras, on the Ladak Road on 28th May and on other dates.

A hard set clutch of the eggs of Montifringilla adamsi was taken on 5th June on the Fotu-la (Ladak Road) this mountain finch lays white eggs and apparently breeds early in the summer. On a previous occasion a single egg was obtained in the same locality. Eggs of Otocorys longirostris with the parent birds were got at Tsal-Tak at upwards of 15,000 feet altitude on 17th June, this is the first occasion on which I have got the eggs of this lark; but Otocorys elwesi, Elwes' horned lark, is easier secured, birds and eggs were found on 22nd and 27th June at Tankse and at Shushal, at that place were also obtained the eggs of the redshank.

Acanthis brevirostris breeds on the Khardong and between these and the Nubra Valley clutches of this Twite's eggs were taken late in July.

Severtzoff's rose finch can nearly always be shot near Tankse and on the shores of the Pangong Lake during July when this fine bird breeds.

Can anyone throw any light on the habits of Brandt's mountain finch? Again the collectors have failed to secure the eggs, although several specimens of males were shot. Regarding the Genus saxicola I have not much to record. The Siberian chat (Saxicola pleschanka) was building at Kargil on 28th May S. deserti must, I fancy, lay its eggs early in the summer, judging by the young birds which were collected.

A cock of Saxicola picata was got at Kargil on 2nd September. The Indian redstart and eggs are frequently to be collected. The only other bird worth mentioning is Leptopoecile sophiæ Stoliczka's warbler tit, this rather rare specimen was secured in the Nubra Valley.

In Kashmir proper not much was done, possibly the best find was the young of the Ibi-bill, these were caught on an island in the Liddas Valley at an altitude of about 7,000 feet, they were small fluffy little creatures, grey in colour, slightly tinged with yellow, they were very active and great adepts at hiding. These young birds were evidently hatched out under a log, under which in a depression was a little birch bark. As the birds were caught on 3rd June and were very young the eggs must have been laid about the second week in May. Mr. S. Whymper tells me he got hard set eggs of the Ibis-bill when in the Kumaon hills, during the past summer. On being released the young birds were speedily joined by the parents.

MAMMALS

In Leh a Pallas' cat was purchased, although caught when quite young the little beast is as vicious as any animal can well be. This cat (Felis manul) is described on page 83, Fauna of India-Mammals. The colour of my specimen has varied greatly since the cold season set in formerly the general colouring was buffish brown with indistinct transverse bars across the back and on the limbs, the tail was and is, marked with black rings and has a deep black tip; now the general colouring is silvery grey, the body marks have become very indistinct. Two broad almost black stripes along the cheeks are very striking, the feet have remained buffish brown in colour; the whole of the fur is very dense and long and is slaty brown at the base, the head is spotted with brown. I should be very sorry to try and measure the animal, but the body must be small, the dense fur giving a misleading idea of size and in weight an English domestic puss would probably exceed this specimen of Pallas' cat.

Amongst the rodents a fair amount of success attended the expedition. Evidently Mus-otis, the large eared mouse-hare is, the common species near Leh and on the Khardong, this animal is mentioned on page 457, Fauna of India. Ochotona auritus so far as we can at present ascertain is only found within a limited area near the Pangong Lake, in habits it differs from Mus-otis, being often found in sandy burrows and amongst scrub jungle, whilst Mus-otis is found in barren spots and amongst stones I see in my notes that Ochotona curzoniæ has much the same habits as Auritus, but this mouse hare I have as yet only secured near Hanle which is many a long march from the Pangong.

The little grey hamster was secured near Khardong Village on the far side of the Pass, and also at Shushal, in each occasion at over 13,000 feet.

Of the mice there is nothing new to write about, Mr. Bonhote is kindly dealing with these perplexing rodents, but I am afraid to go thoroughly into the subject will take some time.

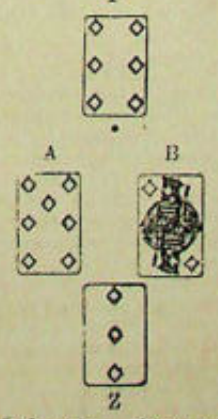
Solution to Problem No. 21.

TO justify his declaration with the score at love-all, Z should hold ace, knave of hearts, ace, knave of spades and queen of diamonds, and in that case A would lose the game by leading a heart or a spade. His best lead, therefore, is the king of diamonds, which in any case must fall to the ace, since this enables him to keep his hearts and spades guarded. He cannot make absolutely certain of saving the game, however, because the dealer may play out all Y's diamonds, leaving himself with the ace of spades and ace, knave and another in hearts. The fifth diamond lead forces A to unguard hearts or spades, and then the dealer might make the last four tricks without finessing. It is a thousand chances to one, however, that he finesses in hearts or spades up to A. He cannot hold six diamonds in his own hand in addition to the one discarded, because with seven in suit he would have made diamonds trumps.



Problem No. 22.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and declares hearts. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).
Hearts—Q J 6.
Diamonds—6.
Clubs—A K 8 7 6.

Z's Hand (Dealer).
Hearts—10 9 8 7 4.
Diamonds—Q 5 3.
Clubs—2.
Spades—A K 8 2.

Trick I.

B now leads the 7 of spades. How ought the dealer to play, and why? Forecast the play of the next few tricks.

"ON THE RAILS"

TO everyone who has run or ridden a horse the three words we have written above possess a certain comforting significance. The inside place on the racecourse is the place, and short of the winning post itself is the goal of the rider's ambition. On the circular course or on that which lies round portion of a circle, the superiority of the place on the rails is not, of course, to be questioned ; other things being equal, the place on the rails is the shortest way home.

We are by no means sure that the superiority of the inside berth is not somewhat overrated on occasion : a few lengths of deep, sticky or broken ground often nullifies the advantage conferred by the inside place and the horse which has good sound turf under his hoofs a yard or two off the rails is really better placed than the horse which has the other combined with a patch or patches of bad ground. Probably every man who rides or has ridden in races will admit the correctness of this theory ; but only the minority can be relied upon to accept the practice even though they are at the trouble to walk round the course before the races begin. That perambulation by the way is a part of the jockey's business which he is too prone to omit : he knows the course so well ; has ridden a score of times over it during the last few years ; it cannot have undergone any change in the interval. Probably it has not, particularly if it has been well cared for ; but any ground undergoes changes in process of time from causes manifest or obscure ; and a boggy bit which has developed itself during the last monsoon may well make the difference of a length : which may make all the difference between first money, or second, or none at all.

But we were considering the importance of the inside berth, a subject to which Lord Downe drew attention in a speech humorous but wise at the Gimcrack Dinner on 30th November. Reckless riding, not to use a stronger term, has been much on the increase of late in England and recently the Stewards of the Jockey Club had up the leading jockeys and talked to them. "From enquiries we made we found that not only jockeys but owners had an extraordinary belief that if they were on the rails their horse acquired marvellous powers which invariably made him win.....Certain owners issue orders to their jockeys 'Get off as fast as you can. As soon as possible get on to the rails : if you can, do it fairly ; but if not, get there.'" Now there can be no doubt that this is a true presentment of the case : the inside berth has acquired the glamour of sanctity as it were and those interested do not trouble to ask themselves whether it has all the virtue tradition ascribes to it. We must all have seen even in a scurry run on a course, straight or almost perfectly straight, the curious tendency of the field to work toward the rails though commonsense indicates that a straight line from the extreme outside berth to intersect at right angles an imaginary line drawn between the winning post and the Judge's box is the shortest way home. On a course with turns in it, there is, as we have said, advantage attaching to the place on the rails, other things being equal ; but the very common tendency, almost unconscious it would seem in many cases, to make for the inside berth on a straight course is a curious example of unthinking obedience to tradition. On some courses the inside place is actually the worst; if the rails run not in a perfect straight line but with a "bulge" outward, the horse which is made to hug them goes farther than that the one whose rider steers a straight line. Some riders maintain that the propinquity of the rails does actually confer some obscure but tangible advantage in the same fashion as a straight path along a racecourse confers an advantage. There is, or was such, a path on one of the famous English courses, but we cannot depend on memory to say which it is: it ran the length of the straight, a bit off the rails and was considered the place in the breadth of the course, affording in some mysterious way assistance to the horse that secured it. If it be an advantage to have a horse running on one side only instead of on both, then there is an advantage accruing to the inside berth: but is it any advantage? The chances of interference are reduced by half, it is true, but interference is less frequent on our courses than it is at home; and the traditional virtue of the inside berth is quite as strong in this country as it is in England. Practical men will remind us that on a right hand course the place on the rails is open to the objection that the rider may not be able to use his whip with effect at the critical moment: on a left hand course the presence of the rails has this certain advantage that the horse cannot swerve away from the whip hand at work; though if the whip cord be properly used there should be no swerving to the near side.

Though some men are prepared to give definite reasons for their anxiety to obtain the inside berth and stick to it, the majority we think are content to account for their preference with the insufficient answer "because it is the inside birth," proclaiming their blind acceptance of a tradition which indicates advantage. This should not be: all our greatest jockeys—all men who have achieved success for themselves in any walk of life—have been men who thought out things for themselves, based their opinions on sound premises, and have had the courage to act upon them. Very many of us have less confidence in ourselves, or shall we say so much confidence in traditions and accepted theories, that we do not venture to think for ourselves, shrink from striking out a line of our own even though we may have convinced ourselves that our own line is the best one and at least deserves a trial. How often do we not meet with the bridge player who explains his omission to do this or that "because it is not in the book." It is a parallel case with blind acceptance of the tradition we have been discussing: it is not to be expected of the young professional jockey, more especially him who is still in enjoyment of his apprentice allowance, that he should ignore definite orders and exercise his own judgment, if he has any. Should he do so he would quickly be brought to his bearings with the reminder that if he wants to ride he had better ride to orders. There is "red tape" on the Turf as elsewhere, and thoughtful men in official life, who hate red tape with a deep and deadly hate, have often assured us that they are obliged to admit that the abhorred thing is really a necessary thing, so uncommon it is to find a subordinate who can be trusted to use his own judgment. But it goes without saying that he who holds him bound by what is "in the book," who blindly accepts traditional methods binding as the commandments, who accepts the bonds of red tape forged for the unthinking animal, is never likely to do much good in any walk of life.

At a dissenting chapel recently the minister, not having plate, sent round his hat. When it was returned he found there was not a farthing in it. "Ah!" said he, cheerfully, "things are not so bad. I am thankful that I have got my hat back again from this congregation."

Employer of labour: "Job? Why, I've more men now than I've work for?"

Hunter after work: "Well, but the little I should do wouldn't make much difference."

Barber—"Shall I take a little o'the ends of your hair, sir?" Customer: "Yes, I think you had better take it off at the ends' unless you can get it out o' the middle."

Who is that lady in the Rembrandt hat in that box opposite?" "Rembrandt? you mean remant."

Sporting Notes.

THE latest addition to the Hon'ble Mr. Apcar's dominating string of winners is an English three-year-old named Auber, by Islington—Umbrosa, purchased at the Newmarket sales for 2,000 guineas. This is a stiffish figure for a gelding and it is said that he will be trained on in England next season to meet a heavy list of engagements which runs right on to the autumn. Incidentally we hear that Great Scot is to be kept in work for yet another season, no doubt in the hope of advertising him for his future duties at the Stud.

Those who rushed away from Calcutta to join the throng of sight seers at Agra missed an interesting race on Saturday. Great Scot was reckoned a slashing mover, but as a spectacle his galloping pales before the beautiful clockwork stride of Fitzgrafton. In winning the King's Plate, carrying 9st. 10lbs., he proved himself a great horse and confirmed the general opinion that he was well able to give away the weight allotted by the handicappers. He finished in grand style and Mallard alone survived to hunt him home at the respectful interval of three and a half lengths. Sacristan II. and Saloon both began their season a trifle too early to expect to continue in form until the second meeting. The former has been a great disappointment to his connections, but was undoubtedly unlucky in meeting Saloon at the very top of his morning out.

It would have been very interesting to see how Kipling fared from the seven stone four mark in this handicap, but he was wisely sent out to gather in the Rs. 3,000, which lay at his mercy in the Tally Ho Stakes. He was asked to give Thomond but three pounds and answered the question cantering. What a fine chaser Seclusion must be if the Grand National running is a true indicator. There is nothing surprising in it on the chestnut's colonial form and in the Tollygunge Chase on the second day the race was all over barring accidents, according to his rider, at the time the accident befell him. Olynthus, his supporters thought, would also have beaten Kipling had he not cut his tendon all to pieces six furlongs and more from home, but this is a far more doubtful supposition. Messrs. Jones and Pugh's horse is unfortunately hopelessly injured, but better luck next time, and Kipling's success is an example of the great possibilities before a really first class jumper on this side of India. Despite all that may be said about the decline of chasing, it still affords the best and most likely opening for a budding owner of limited means. What steeplechasing wants is an increase in the number of meetings so as to make it worth people's while to buy and train horses specially to run at them. At present we get very little of the real article and most of the few horses running at Tollygunge nowadays are mere derelicts from the maidan training track. The argument that two meetings should be well filled before an attempt is made to hold three or four or even five is an attempt to arrive at a conclusion based upon a false premiss.

Messrs. Wood and Badger came home with a run in the seven thousand rupee Metropolitan Stakes and the favourite, Paddy's Darling, finished in the ruck. Small wonder when she is expected to race over every sort of distance on Saturdays and to gallop against the clock on the training track as well. However, her failure on this occasion resulted in a very popular victory as everyone was glad to see Sermon's owners getting back some of the English gelding's price. This horse looks as though he might develop into something of a stayer and doubtless he will be given an opportunity in this line later on.

Ballark's defeat of the well backed Killeevan makes him out a good horse and quite fast enough to merit a place near the top of the bigger handicaps. The objection very rightly taken by the owner of the second horse, who carried a great deal of money, was upheld after a long enquiry and should be a lesson to all and sundry of those jockeys whose exaggerated forward seats are a grave danger on this awkward circular course.

Everyone had forgotten Honest Lady in their admiration for Mr. Myers' hard working grey, but the little mare made no doubt of the matter and won comfortably by two lengths. The grey has been very unlucky and all these punishing defeats are bound to tell on him unless he has the heart of a lion. It must be terribly dispiriting to a horse to race his hardest and never to find his head in front. The pony race was a surprise all round as neither of the dead-heaters were fancied. In the run off the English pony won easily and must have long since repaid his purchase price.

The Second Meeting closed on Tuesday with an excellent afternoon's racing. The big race, the Prince of Wales' Plate, was won by that improving mare, Annamulloch, and it was pleasant to see the famous blue and silver braid jacket first past the post in an important race. On paper Contest looked a good thing for this race; he was well backed, finishing up equal favourite with Dulcimer. In the race itself Saloon ran well to the distance, but was worn down in the straight by Mr. Holmes' mare and Sacristan II., who ran very gamely, only to be beaten once again by the weight. There seems no end to Mr. Dartmoor's run of misfortune. In the St. George's Plate Lady Metal was ousted by Rustile, the verdict being a neck. In this race Dunsinane was backed down to 6 to 4, but could get no nearer than fourth, while Warstripe, another well-backed one, was lost in the crowd.

Mr. Apcar's succession of wins was carried on by Martinique, who very easily defeated a small field in the Howrah Plate, including the well-backed Killeevan, who headed the handicap.

Mr. Galstaun's English mare is in fine form just now and was brought out again in the last race, for which she was again backed down to level money, but the hard tussle with Martinique had its effect, and Scamander at 6-12 won fairly easily. The chestnut mare's connections have waited a long time since buying her in at such heavy cost in last year's Selling Race, but probably were well repaid by the result of Tuesday's race. Robinson left his effort of Killeevan until very late, but even if this were a mistake no other tactics could have altered the result so far as Scamander was concerned. Mr. Myers at last scored a win with Black Duke, which started favourite, and Duplex II. unexpectedly won the Clyde Plate for Mr. Scott.

The sale of race-horses last week was not very exciting and the steeplechasers, Decoration and Loch Lochie, did not change hands. Ping Pong was sold and also Watchfire, a grey belonging to Mr. Pugh that won a good hurdle race last Monsoon. Mr. Pugh is going home very shortly, but will probably be out again in time to continue his proverbial good fortune at the autumn meetings.

Racing interest now shifts to Lucknow, whither a noble army of backers has already departed. There is still enough attraction left in the balance of the Calcutta season to fetch the bulk of them back again, nevertheless there will be little fear of overcrowding in the New Stand!

A day or two ago it looked as if the entries for the Calcutta Kennel Club Show were going to be rather poor. But the usual rush towards the evening of the originally advertised closing date has brought in many till, we believe we are right in saying, the number has approached two hundred and seeing that the closing date has been extended to the 21st instant it is more than likely that number will be reached. All the Terrier classes had up to Tuesday attracted a good many entries, the Bassets and Dachshunds, Greyhound and Kangaroo hounds were fairly well represented, Great Danes should be a fine class judging by the quality coming, and the Bulldogs were fairly numerous. The Toy and Fancy breeds were not so well filled and the same may be said of the Sporting Dog sections; but there is time between this and next Monday to improve on this

We congratulate our contemporary The Empress on the most excellent photographs of the Calcutta race stands and enclosures in its last issue; they are among its best pictorial efforts.

To our mofussil readers, those who go out in camp, shikaris and all dwellers in the more remote parts where communication is primitive and the cost of carrying goods a heavy item, we commend the perusal of a few words about the Sirdar Carbonic Gas Company's little sodawater plant which appear after "Correspondence" in to-day's paper.

By a curious coincidence we had hardly opened "Q's" letter regarding totalisator dividends, which will be found among "Correspondence" to-day, when, in an Australian exchange, we came across the following particulars about sensational returns made by the machines in the Colonies:—

The year 1906 will be strongly committed to memory by New Zealand tuifites by reason of the fact that no less than three dividends, with a highly sensational ring, have been declared. In May last, at Takapuna, two lucky individuals divided the whole of the pool invested on the Empire and Royal Handicaps in the double event machine, when Waipuna and Ben Blair brought off their respective victories, the dividend in each case being £513 18s. At Riccarton last month the Takapuna record was cast completely into the shade when Star Rose and Captain Shannon got home first, which successes brought the nice little windfall of £2,061 to the one successful ticket-holder. Once again backers were brought face to face with a surprise when the Black and Gold—Apologue combination for the Stanley and Spring Handicap came off last week at Takapuna, a dividend of £932 attaching thereto, which represented the whole of the money in the machine. Another sensational dividend having been recorded my readers will no doubt be racking their brains as to the amount of the previous best on record. The following little list which I have compiled will furnish them with the information:—

We are indebted to the courtesy of the Superintendent of the P. and O. Company, Calcutta, for a copy of their annual Diary and Almanac which, with its numerous coloured maps and tabulated information, is an accessory every traveller to the East should possess.

With deep regret we announce the sudden death of Mr. Martyn Wells, Managing Agent of the Calcutta Tramways Co., Ld. His untimely removal from among us at the age of 45 will cause hosts of friends to mourn. A smart and enterprising business man, a charming personality—for he was the soul of ready good nature and geniality—a high and respected freemason and always a dear good fellow, his remains were followed to the grave last Sunday by a very large gathering of sorrowing survivors. We lose an old friend: many a kindness received at his hands, comes to mind in our sadness, much practical sympathy and generous support he extended to us at a time when we needed help. Sad it is to think we shall never again listen to his deep, rich voice trolling out the songs few could render so well, or hear his generous and delighted "bravo" from the front row at the performances of the A. D. S. of which for years he was the popular president. He died suddenly at his residence, 16, Loudon street, of heart failure following internal hemmorrhage and the publication of the news in the Sunday papers naturally came as a great shock to all who knew him.

The case in which several villagers of Pimpri committed a dastardly assault on two British officers who were out shooting has been disposed of by the Collector of Poona. Accused number four having proved an alibi from documentary and other evidence was acquitted. One other accused, number nine, against whom there appeared to be no evidence of identification was also acquitted. The Jeja woman, whom the officers declared threw stones at them, was fined Rs. 10. Number eight, whom Lieutenant Ramsay had sworn hit him over the face with a nailed shoe, was given eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment. Accused number ten, who caught Lieutenant Whyte by the throat, was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. All the other accused were given six months' rigorous imprisonment. We observe a contemporary calling these "severe sentences;" not nearly severe enough in our opinion. Of course the cowardly ruffians have appealed: every conviction of this kind has this sequel nowadays.

The Bangalore correspondent of our evening contemporary wires:—"During his visit to Mysore the Prince of Wales expressed a desire to have a complete skeleton of an elephant and its hide for presentation to the British Museum. The other day a record tusker and old rogue of magnificent proportions was noticed to be limping about looking very sick and was shadowed till he dropped dead in the jungle on the frontier between Mysore and Coorg. The State shikari being communicated with, it was found that the poor beast had been wounded in the left hind leg by somebody and that it had died of gangrene. It measures over ten feet in height (? ED.) and has four feet of unblemished tusks showing. The carcase is being carefully watched from a distance so that the hide may not be injured or the tusks stolen. The taxidermist cannot yet approach the body, which must be allowed to lie where it is until complete decomposition has taken place, when the hide will remain uninjured and the skeleton can be packed up."

At the annual meeting of the Indian Polo Association at Meerut during the first week in March, the business will include the following:—Election of honorary secretary in place of Major Lecky, who is taking six months' leave, and discussing the desirability of allotting some portion of the credit balance of about Rs. 7,000 to the improvement of the polo ground. Major Lecky will also ask the meeting to consider the fact that the championship tournament has again filled badly this year, which he regards as a strong proof that the tournament is not needed and should be discontinued. Major Leslie, of Kirkee, will bring forward a motion that the height of polo ponies should be raised to 14-2½ or even 14-3.

The Infantry Polo tournament is fixed to begin at Meerut on the 18th proximo.

Our shikari readers will read with much interest the article in our Shooting columns on the new ·476 bore which may be regarded as a satisfactory substitute for the favourite ·450. There is no doubt a large section of rifle shooters, ourselves among them, who will still prefer to employ a large calibre rifle however good may be the points possessed by the improved Accelerated Express small bores. Some may take the ·500, others will consider it too large and two heavy for their purpose, and to meet the objection Messrs. Westley Richards have introduced a new bore of rifle which is ·476, and, therefore, comes, between the ·450 and the ·500. The weight of the bullet is 520 grains and is made both solid and upon the capped principle. This rifle is now in course of manufacture and will be ready to be offered to the public in about a month or two. It is the first rifle of this bore introduced. It avoids the prohibition in a legitimate way without imposing disadvantages upon the shooter as compared with the ·450. Therefore, the advocates of the improved small bore and of the larger calibres have an equal choice, and in many cases the latter may have their ·450 prohibited rifles fitted with new barrels of the new ·476 bore.

Messrs. Murray and Company, Limited, of Lucknow, Karachi, Naini Tal and Cawnpore have presented us with a copy of their "Record" Notebook for 1907 for which we thank them.

It is said that millionaire W. G. Rockfeller has decided to give up his stables and stock of thoroughbred horses, and replace them with automobiles. Early in the year he spent a considerable amount in remodelling his stables. Now he has sent his horses to New York, with, it is presumed, the object of selling them.

The latest accounts of big game in Somaliland are, writes Ranger in the I. S. and D. News, when one remembers what a happy hunting-ground for pursuers of big game this used to be, only a few years since, very deplorable. Twenty years ago this was one of the finest shooting countries in the world; now, according to General Swayne's report, published in a parliamentary Blue-book last month, nearly all game animals have been enormously reduced. In 1891, General Swayne, entering the rolling western Somali plains at an altitude of 5,000 or 6,000 feet, saw with his brother upon a track of open grass country, a thousand square miles in area, a wonderful sight. "The whole ground was covered with immense herds of hartebeest, oryx, and Sœmmering's and Speke's gazelles, and troops of ostriches loomed up and disappeared in the folds of the prairie. I counted 400 oryx in one herd, and I estimated that the total number of animals I then saw could not have been less than ten thousand. In the midst of the veldt we shot two out of three lions. They were lying out on the short grass in full view, and had been clearly seen by us when yet two miles off." This is a wonderful picture. Unfortunately, all is now changed, and from the ravages of rinderpest, and still more of over-shooting by Europeans, game in Somaliland is now comparatively scarce. During the various recent expeditions in the country the slaughter of game by men and officers has been lamentably great, and the animals have had no chance of recuperating after the ravages of disease. Hyænas, jackals, baboons, Sœmmering's and Speke's gazelles, and the tiny dik-dik antelopes seem to be the most numerous species. Lions and leopards and wild asses are fairly plentiful. Elephants are almost extinct in the Protectorate, and all the large antelopes are sadly in need of rest and protection.

The Major, said that while fishing in the Lee, not far from Macrown, he saw a fine fish rise under the opposite bank. He immediately drew out his line so as to enable him, by a cast, to reach the exact spot. He had previously put on two large flies, such as are commonly used for salmon in high water. He drew back the line, which would extend 30 or 40 yards, behind him. On endeavouring to make his cast, he found he had, as fishermen call it, "hitched behind him." At this moment the salmon rose again in the same spot, and, in his eagerness to cover him, he gave a strenuous jerk, with the intent of breaking one fly and covering the salmon with the other. Splash into the river went something heavy, which immediately took to swimming towards the opposite bank, close to the spot where the salmon had risen. The action of the animal so effectually played the other fly before the salmon that he forthwith seized it, and both were well hooked. The Major continued to relate that hereupon commenced a hard struggle. Sometimes the salmon was on the surface, and sometimes the other was drawn under water, till, by judicious management, both were safely landed, and proved to be a fine hare hooked by the leg, and a salmon 20lb. weight! "I made them both a present to my worthy host," added the Major, "and it's myself that ate part of both." "I'll bear witness to the eating at any rate," said one. "And it's I'll bear witness to the catching," said the Major, "and who'll deny it?" Nobody denied it; it was in the days when pistols and coffee before breakfast were fashionable.

Owned by Frank Fraunfelter, of Easton, Pa., is a mare sired by a Percheron horse, and out of a Canadian mare that is not only a freak in appearance, but is also proving a most profitable investment for her owner. She is a four-year-old and called Blue Bell, being known as the hairless wonder, her dam having belonged to a wealthy farmer's widow living near Greensburg, Pa. Upon the death of the latter, the mare was thrown on the market and came into the possession of Robert Rumbough, of Greensburg, who disposed of her to her present owner for $4,000. Fraunfelter exhibited her at the county fairs during the past fall and is now making a tour of the big cities with her, where she is proving a splendid attraction, from two to five thousand people paying admissions daily. It is said that $12,000 was refused for this equine freak. The following is the story that goes with the mare:—

One day during the period of gestation, her dam was driven to town to see a circus that was to exhibit at Greensburg, and was tied along the street. When the elephants came along, she became so badly frightened that she tore loose and ran away. At the termination of the period of gestation, Blue Bell was foaled. She is a perfectly formed animal in every respect, with the exception of not having any hair, not even any eyelashes. She weighs 1,410 pounds, is 16 hands high, and is broken to harness. Her skin on the neck and sides is thin and tender like a horse's but on the hips and flanks is tough and coarse like an elephant's. Another characteristic of the elephant is her tail, which is absolutely hairless. The color of her hide resembles an elephant's very much. When out in the sunlight she presents a reddish cast.

Scientific tests in substituting molasses for oats and other cereals in feeding horses have yielded surprising results. Observes an American paper. It is now definitely established that as a horse diet there is magic in molasses. With this syrup on his bill of fare the horse rapidly takes on solid weight, develops prodigiously in muscular energy, grows a glossy coat and enjoys uninterrupted health. For these animals, therefore, molasses is declared to be both a tonic and health food. In addition to the many desirable results, a molasses diet reduces the cost of horse maintenance 25 per cent.

For scientific experimentation two abject and unthrifty animals were selected. One weighed 900 pounds and the other 940 pounds. No preparation was made for the sudden change of diet, but in place of the usual allowance of hay and oats the horses were given three times a day one quart of molasses diluted with three quarts of water and mixed with five pounds of cut hay. A marvellous improvement in the animals resulted. In two weeks one gained 40 pounds in weight and the other 45. In four weeks from the beginning of the molasses diet horse No. 1 gained 95 pounds and horse No. 2 102 pounds.

Both of these horses were shedding their coats, and after six weeks of molasses regimé their new coats were glossy and luxuriant. Horse No. 1 at the end of that period weighed 1,075 pounds and No. 2, 1,086 pounds. All symptoms of decrepitude disappeared. At the termination of the six weeks' experiment the animals could not be recognized as the forlorn creatures with which the tests had been begun. In place of those jaded specimens there were led forth from the stables two fine horses, the scientists describing them to be "full of play, life and energy." The animals were afterwards employed profitably for city work.

These and such like tests are extending the use of molasses as a food for horses. Firms employing many horses in the hardest kind of contract and truck work are discovering that the animals will perform more service and remain in better condition on a diet of molasses than when fed the choicest and most liberal allowance of cereals. In the United States Artillery Corps there are enthusiastic champions of molasses as a horse diet, and horses in the armies of France, Germany and Austria are being fed on molasses with very satisfactory results.

Quite recently tests have been conducted to determine what efficiency molasses might have in restoring invalid horses to health. A gelding greatly reduced as the result of a severe accident, and a lame and ailing truck horse were selected. At the beginning of the experiments the gelding weighed 1,250 pounds and the truck horse 1,140 pounds. Fed on a diet chiefly consisting of molasses, the invalid horses improved with marked rapidity. In fifteen days the gelding weighed 1,320 pounds, having gained 70 pounds. In that same period the sick truck horse gained 60 pounds. The total gain of the gelding in one month was 200 pounds and of the truck horse 110 pounds.

The conclusion that eminent specialists have arrived at is that good molasses is not only a fattening and energy-producing diet for horses, but that in many cases it will restore ailing animals to health.

In the final of the Punjab Frontier Force Polo Tournament at Peshawar the 53rd Sikhs and the 23rd Cavalry met. The Cavalry men began sensationally with 4 goals to nil to their credit in the first round, then the Sikhs held them for a space, but the 23rd got going again and in the end won by 7 goals and 5 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 1 subsidiary.

The Mysore Game and Fish Preservation Regulation of 1901 has been amended as follows:—The killing or capture of birds with bright coloured plumage, of peafowl and of antelope is prohibited for a further period ending with 15th June 1908. A district magistrate may, on the application of a holder of a game license, grant written permission to such holders to shoot not more than two buck with horns not less than fifteen inches in the case of black buck and not less than five in the case of chinkara.

Mr. J. Hobday, Assistant Conservator of Forests, Bhandara, was shot dead by his orderly Londia—presumably murdered, according to the meagre details which are available up to time of going to press. One account says:—Mr. Hobday was out in camp with his wife and two sons in the Sakoli Tehsil, and went out for a shoot on the morning of the 8th. At about 11 A.M. the party adjourned for some refreshments, and while partaking of these Londia shot Mr. Hobday in the back from behind a tree. Death was instantaneous, the bullet penetrating the heart. There seems no doubt that it was not a case of accident. Londia is said to have taken up his master's gun, loaded it with a cartridge, and shot him deliberately. It appears that Londia was recently reproved by Mr. Hobday for neglect of duty and Mr. Hobday ordered his transfer. He seems to have taken this to heart. Mr. Hobday's remains were brought into Bhandara on the morning of the 10th, and after the usual post mortem examination by Dr. Mindross, the Civil Surgeon, they were interred in the local cemetery. Great sympathy is felt for Mrs. Hobday and her two sons. Londia has been arrested and awaits trial.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Not only was the card the biggest, and the attendance likewise, but on Saturday we had the best day's racing we have so far had this season. Without taking the events in their proper order, the January Plate, for horses, commanded most attention and, as usual, attracted most speculation. The scale of weights was raised a trifle and not unnaturally Posco was top-weight giving his stable companion Gumbara two pounds and Baritone four and was withdrawn for her beating by half a length when she was said to have been shut in, though this did not appear very much against her. Gumbara met Baritone on 5lbs. better terms. The race itself was an absolute vindication of my last week's remarks. Adelaide cut out the pace very closely followed by Gumbara—a similar case to the one when Hermit with top-weight was sent away in front—and naturally enough we saw little of the favourite on reaching the bend. Fisher on Baritone was on their heels and, with the native on Adelaide riding a most erratic race, pounced in on the rails and taking the bend beautifully led his field into the straight. Here Robertson came with a rush on Freelance and got within half a length, but Fisher giving his mount his head kept his place fairly comfortably. After being passed by the first two the odds-on favourite gave way to Adelaide and Balayeuse.

CHRISTOPHER'S HIGH-CLASS WINES and SPIRITS

Are daily increasing in popularity amongst CONNOISSEURS.

Second in interest was perhaps the Veterans' Plate, for which Byramji's stable was very reasonably thought to have the winner in either Mint or Little Joker and they soon showed their intentions for the former. After allowing Mint and then Mooreed to chase Vedas, he came up at the bend and, going clean through, won a good race.

The mile race, the Prongs Plate, was a good one for punters, as after a fast finish behind Skylark and Sheila the previous time Nooman was made a warm favourite. He made an appearance at the bend, after Gladiator had made the running with the lead and had his field settled; Williams winning in a manner he apparently so dearly loves.

A poor sort of a race was the Small Consolation in which Solicitor, at sixes, romped over the favourites Dhaman and Shabib, the former being made far too much use of.

We now come to the races for the newly-landed, and first of these was the first division of the Hopeful Plate, for which, after their performances on the first occasion, Rajput and Toy were fancied. An easy first in 55⅕secs. was apparently more than five pounds better than a poor third in 55secs., and Rajput, well up all through, landed the money which made him a favourite at threes. The second division of this race provided the best finish of the day when Squire and Purvey, the favourites, left the field to finish out the race on their own. Heeroo on Squire held a length lead on entering the straight, but such a strong race did Oomerkhan ride that Purvey gradually worked his way up till at the finish the judge only was able to tell for certain and returned Squire by a head.

The second one for new ones was the divided Strangers' Plate, and in the first of these the time, 1min. 11secs., was the same as the older ponies in the Consolation Plate. Lailan naturally was in demand after his solid win the time before, but Commander was backed and went out equal favourite at threes. Abdoola took C. B. Mahomed's place on Lailan, presumably to get a better price, but after getting off badly never showed up. Commander made all his own running and not intending to cut it fine Oomerkhan landed him by a substantial margin. Another reported gallop had the effect of sending Yaffa out a warm favourite for the second division, but he never looked a winner. Tabriz was always to the fore and when Rakhan in blinkers again ran very near the left hand rails, Tabriz had the race well in hand. Madras too was always prominent and he just stayed Rakhan out. The time, 1min. 9⅗secs., shows the winner to be rather exceptional and it is probable that some of these fresh ones will turn out exceptionally well.

At the Yacht Club there were four races which filled well, but it is still a bit early for motor-boats, though I believe there will shortly be ample entries for races such as the one that fell through on Friday. The "A" Class handicap with four starters was a good one for the first round, but Eileen then sailed beautifully and eventually won comfortably from scratch with Sapphire, who led during the first round, an easy second.

The "B" Class was also easily won, in fact was a procession of three, in which Sayonara won by nearly eight minutes.

A fine race, however, followed for "D" Class in which Gracie was badly left at the line. Ranzo led Swin till at South Karanja when Swale caught the leader. On the run home Swin sailed splendidly and after a good race came in first with the Swale close up to Ranzo and beating her for second place on time.

For the Small Boat Class six started and Tomtit and Meg were always in front in a good race in which the scratch boat Tomtit won the handicap from Lapwing, who only beat Maud by three seconds whereas Meg won the class prize from scratch.

The Bombay Hounds have been having some rare runs of late and with large fields out on Sunday last we were glad to see a thorough sportswoman like Lady Jenkins presented with the brush after the second kill that morning. First was a short run, as after getting away close behind a jack that broke away from the woods near Sahar, the hounds ran him down just after crossing the Pipe. The second was a far better run over country abounding with good jumps over the favourite old run to the Backwater and Jackal Hill. When close on him hounds were fortunate in his veering away from the railway line and shortly after he hid in a thick bush only to be run down after slight hesitation as to his whereabouts on the hounds' part.

The run on Thursday was a most unfortunate one which resulted in the death of three of the best hounds in the pack. From Parla another very large field followed over the railway and it was here the pack crossed as a train passed. Bellman was amongst those who suffered, a fine dog always well up, but the loss was not discovered till later. Wildfire, another good one, had a very lucky escape as one of his feet was run over; bu the may be out again soon.

Athletic Notes.

IT is satisfactory to note that the prospects of the forthcoming annual meeting of the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association are distinctly good. Several entries have come in already and enquiries from no less than ten regiments which have not hitherto been represented at these sports seem to indicate that a good deal of new talent will be seen on the 2nd March in the British Army Championships. We may mention that the Colonel and Officers of the Northumberland Fusiliers have kindly lent their band and a picket for that afternoon and the catering has been entrusted to Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co.

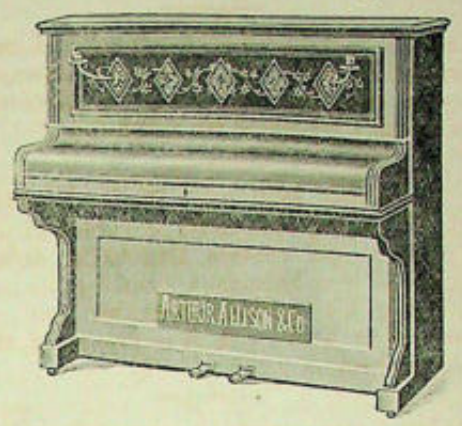
The International Rugby Football Match between Wales and England resulted in the defeat of the latter by 22 points to nil.

The Mohan Bagan Football Club is once more in trouble. In their recent match against Calcutta in the preliminary round of the Minto Fête Tournament they played certain men who were not qualified to take the field and on the lodging of a protest the Club has very properly been disqualified and prevented from taking further part in the competition. We hope it will be a lesson to them and to other native teams where in the standard of athletic morality is not all that could be wished.

The Calcutta Swimming Bath, as a notice elsewhere tells us, will be closed for about a fortnight for the usual annual repairs and overhauling, and the cleaning of the huge settling tanks and filtering beds outside. This is a sign that the hot weather is not very far off and a reminder that ere long this popular and health-giving resort will once more be in full swing. The bath is one of the best ordered of its kind, its water has been proved on analysis to be as pure as the Calcutta filtered water supplied for drinking, it gives opportunities for all who can swim to indulge in a fascinating and invigorating pastime and offers to all who cannot the chance of learning: and, be it noted, the subscription is very small. We hope to hear of a large number of new members this year, and while we think of it we may mention that the bath is reserved for ladies from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. four days in the week, while for the small fee of Rs. 3 it can be reserved by members two days a week during the same hours. Water parties used to be popular a few years ago, why not revive them?

Another swimming record is credited to C. M. Daniels, who, at the New York A. C. Carnival, swam 25 yards in 11⅗secs., thus beating the record by ⅗sec.

Indian cricketers will be sorry to hear that Captain Wynyard broke a tendon of his leg playing against Wellington (N. Z.) on Boxing Day and had to be carried home.



We have no hesitation in saying that every shikari who desires to bring his library or his sporting accessories quite up to date must provide himself with a copy of Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India, and preferably in the neat and handy book form edition. It is an accurate reduction of the Ordnance Survey Map of India to the scale of 69 miles to an inch and is so complete that a critical search in various provinces with which we are fairly well acquainted has so far failed to disclose a single omission, even villages of sufficient importance to boast a post office are shown, and all the leading features of the General Survey Sheets are given with a minuteness of detail that is as welcome and useful as it is surprising. There are inset produce maps, tea district maps, sketch maps of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, and an accurate index. And all this for Rs. 5-8! In our opinion no one who moves about the districts, whether on public service, commercial enterprise, sport or pleasure bent, can afford to be without this perfect and inexpensive example of high class cartography.

Harmston's Circus had a great house last Friday when Colonel Bob Love took his annual benefit : it was so densely packed that the management experienced the rather dubious pleasure of turning money away from the doors, though this often really happens at Harmston's we believe. The great John Welby Cook was quite at his best in his funny equestrian scene "John, John, John." Banvard, a former member of the Company and a top-notch dummy clown materially assisting. Another "extra" was the vocal item supplied by Tom Eliot, a pleasing baritone and erstwhile in one of Bandmann's numerous troupes. It goes without saying that all the Company were going at a pressure of at least 100lbs. to the square inch and as a result the performance was in every way worthy of the occasion and the Colonel was both flattered and gratified. He said so in the short speech in which he responded to the ovation he received.

The high jumping competition that night drew six entries :—Mr. McGrath's Florence, Mr. Powell's Creamy, Mr. Davis' Kapunda, Mr. Drew's Narwanah, Mr. Powell's Little Cliff, Mr. Ted Kerr's Garry Owen. Little Cliff, Creamy and Narwanah acquitted themselves well, but after 4 feet 8 inches the two first-named were left to fight it out and first honours went to Little Cliff who cleared 5 feet 11 inches and Mr. Reg. Powell bore away a fine silver tea set to remind him of the evening's doings.

There were big houses at matinée and night performance on Saturday and throughout the week the tent has been well filled.

To-morrow night those graceful disciples of Terpsichore, the Collins Quartette take their benefit, and a silver tea set and a bicycle will be given away to some lucky ticket holders as souvenirs of the occasion. Also will appear Gus Burns with his clever performing dogs. On Saturday there will be a souvenir matinée—gold and silver watches this time—at night the final show, and then au revoir and all good luck to those who have catered so well for our amusement this cold weather.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 28th December 1906.

NARROWLY we missed what the papers with misguided enthusiasm called a "real old-fashioned Christmas." It started snowing in the small hours of the 26th and when we got up in the morning there was four inches of snow on the ground. As soon as the main streets and pavements had been cleared by the unemployed, it began to thaw : and as soon as it had thawed enough the frost played its fine old practical joke swooping down to sheet the pavements with ice. From various parts of England comes news of heavy snowfalls : fourteen inches fell in parts of Norfolk and nearly as much in favoured regions of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. Some cases of people losing their way or sinking through exhaustion have occurred, due largely I imagine to the suddeness of the fall for we had had little warning of it. Hunting has been stopped practically all over the kingdom for the time being.

Everything is in a seasonable condition of suspense, except the amusements under cover : the papers make the most of defaulting benefit club secretaries, of elopements with cabs by young gentlemen in a state of inebriation and kindred matters. Happy the Times which has Mr. Henniker Heaton's memorial up its sleeve ! Twice during a barren week has it been able to fill a lordly page with the names of people who will support the book club at the expense of the publishers, not to mention a few columns of letters on the same subject daily. When you remember that the Times pays £5 per column for contributions and that there are ordinarily sex columns to a page, you feel the value of the service Mr. Henniker Heaton and the letter writers render the Times and wonder how that service will be requited. Not all the letters are flattering of course. One graceless being has had the audacity to promise withdrawal of his subscription because the Times asks us not to order books from the boycotted publishers. I have not withdrawn my subscription. The Times promised to lend me any book I might want, and when I want a book I order it without reference to the identity of the publisher : and I get it. If I did not get it, I should ask and go on asking till I did get it : but a wise Times does not put me to this trouble.

I suppose we are on the eve of another outburst of Passive Resistance. Dr. Clifford and other leading lights have set their names to a manifesto couched in a spirit of combative piety which might almost be mistaken for political animosity. In this manifesto the faithful are enjoined to gird up their loins and passively resist payment of rates, cheering themselves with the knowledge that though resistance will cost them six times as much as the rate, they will thus vindicate a great and glorious principle. Christmas is notoriously a bad season for political agitation which suggests a train of curious reflection concerning human preference for amusement over vital principles, and the radical thunders against the Lords are suspended. I fear that in denouncing Christmas last week I quite overlooked the Political Peace on Earth it brings with it for a fortnight or thereabout.

Olympia opened on Monday with a show and a programme calculated to appeal to those who appreciate twelve hours of undiluted amusement "brought slap bang up to date," (vide programme). In the "Mammoth Fun City" you may enjoy yourself with abandon if you go in the right spirit—best exemplified perhaps by the customary exchange of hats by 'Arry and 'Arriet. Here is the razzle-dazzle : the merry-go-round with Romping Rollicking Roosters, (vide programme) for horses : the Aunt Sally : the cocoa—pardon cokernut shy. Here is Hackenschmidt ; the much described wire walker : the Richardson's penny gaff : with all the fine old crusted side shows, as a white negress and performing animals, beside such modernites as the Hippodrome's discarded pygmies, snake charmers, etc., etc. You pay sixpence to go in : after two hours of deafening din you would gladly pay another to get out if need be, and come home to recover from a racking headache in a dark room. The place is crammed daily.

The infinite possibilities of Sindbad are once more illustrated at Drury Lane this year. Mr. Sindbad (Mr. Walter Passmore) is a middle-aged gentleman who largely exercises the inventive facility to satisfy Mrs. Sindbad (Mr. Arthur Conquest) that he has been away at sea, though material evidence points to his sojourn at various publichouses. When he does go to sea it is in quest of a mysterious diamondiferous island, with his family disguised as members of the crew. The voyage is one of adventure : mutiny broke out owing to the indiscreet order "on the knee" and the Old Man of the Sea (Mr. Edw. Morgan) contrives to wreck the vessel, which affords an accommodating whale opportunity to place its services at the disposal of the ship's company. Next act or part takes up the adventures of one Hindbad (Miss Queenie Laughton) who also is in search of diamonds with the only reliable chart ; and despite the Old Man of the Sea and a fearsome dragon (who subsequently dissolves into a bevy of dancing fairies) reaches the Valley of Diamonds, a spectacle dazzling even beyond Drury Lane standards. From this in the next act we are landed in Sahara of which Mr. Fred. Emmery is the very clever and amusing Empress : naturally amid the desert surrounding the court has much to say of the Book squabble and other topical matters. I could not quite follow the connection of Sindbad and Company with the motor bus on which interest next centres : the bus stands still and the revolving stage comes into play to make would-be passengers run for it. There is an imposing "Durbar" scene which excuses a nautch as understanded in Drury Lane. Wild, irresponsible, incoherent the production may be : but the riotous fun is well maintained and the genuine humour, to say nothing of the wonderful beauty of certain scenes would win atonement for more incoherency than there is.

"Red Riding Hood" at Terry's is a spirited pantomime but it suffers, so far, from want of rehearsal. Mr. Newman Maurice has stirred in Robin Hood to perform prodigies of valour in saving Red Riding Hood from the wolf (Mr. Guy Williams) who sings in very unwolf like fashion. Mr. Phil Smith is very delightful as the grandmother : and the villain Baron Badlot (Mrs. Gus Oxley) is as wicked as an amateur villain can be and he must be an amateur. No professional villain dare look so cheery and commits crimes so genially. There are some charming dances by little girls ; and some awful puns. There is also a harlequinade, but not of the sealed pattern. A harlequinade without sausages is as an egg without salt.

It is proof of the amazing elasticity of musical comedy that it can be transformed into pantomime without difficulty. The "Belle of Mayfair" is become a pantomime out of deference to the season, a harlequinade having been added to the piece : and really the addition is not more out of harmony with the main theme (or what remains of it) than the many alterations which have been imported since I saw the play. The scene of the harlequinade is before the windows of the "Times Goose Club," and of course the dialogue is quite up to date in allusion. The only point I have to make against the new addition is the introduction of a Bishop who administers a sleeping draught. Dignitaries of the church are out of place in musical comedy, and a doctor would have done equally well.

Alice in Wonderland forms the bell at the Prince of Wales's : both the Alice books are laid under contribution the Looking Glass serving for Act II. Mr. Saville Clark has gone outside the books to make up his play, but the shade of Mr. Dodgson will not complain, though the White Rabbit's long story about a man with a bald head runs distinctly off the rails. Miss Marie Studholme in the Alice : a very twentieth century Alice with no suspicion of the Victorian age about her. Miss Rita Leggerio is the White Rabbit and played that animal admirably : the Dormouse of little Ivy Sawyer was also very excellent. If the new Alice is not the Alice of our early days, it is only fair to say the new one is as dainty and free from suspicion of low comedy as could be wished. Mr. I. C. Buckstone plays the Gryphon and the Tweedledee, and in the latter is particularly humorous. Alice as managed by Mr. Seymour Hicks, who takes no part in it, is a lesson in child drill and training, never have I seen a piece run more smoothly or heard lines more clearly spoken. I have, however, one complaint to make. Why that Gollywog, that latter hideosity of doll land ? Away with that Gollywog. Suppress him ! Cut off his whiskers (if he has any) ! As the irate queen say of the offending Dormouse.

To turn for a moment to other than pantomimes, His "House in Order" has passed its 400th night ; the longest run on record for a comedy I understand, since Our Boys.

The Hippodrome has not yet used up the water which did such good service in the flood and the earthquake. "The Treasure Ship in Fairy Seas" entails much water, but the spectacle is distinctly a new one. The spectacular business begins when the treasure ship is sunk : thence forward the situation is sub-marine, with divers warring against sea monsters, with dances of sea nymphs. The Flying Ballet—a continental importation, and eventually the grand coral cave where the sirens dwell. Miss Kellerman, the Australian swimmer, is appropriately provided with the part of a mermaid. It is very cleverly stage managed and interesting even the scribe who has been "doing" Christmas shows at the rate of two a day, with an Xmas day respite, for nearly a week.

The variety halls have put on new turns for Christmas week as usual. At the Tivoli Arthur Roberts is appearing in a burlesque sketch called "The Maid of the Mill 'ard by" disguised as a lady apprentice in a millinery establishment and looking very fair and youthful considering his years. At the Alhambra has a very funny new sketch called "The Awakening of the Toys" wherein wooden soldiers, dolls and animals perform wooden antics designed to please children but, to judge from its reception, not less gratifying to grown ups. By the way the Danish thought readers the Zancigs who have created such a sensation by their extraordinary performances at the Empire were commanded to Sandringham on Wednesday to give a demonstration before the King and Queen.

I regard the Crystal Palace as beyond the scope of my dramatic purview, but am indebted to an unauthorised agent who went to see his aunt at Sydenham yesterday for a fervid if ill spelt appreciation of (1) the pantomime, which is Aladdin (2) of the circus, which is Sanger's and includes a clown who must be an uncommonly clever acrobat, a performing pony, elephants and dogs, and (3) side-shows of much variety.

There is, it appears, some danger of the Crystal Palace ceasing to be. Lord Brassey, when distributing the prizes at the Crystal Palace School of Practical Engineering last Friday, said that the institution, meaning the Palace, could not go on without a grant from the public funds. I confess my own purblindness to the claims of the Palace on the Treasury : it is a place of public amusement, neither more nor less, and if it is wanted the public shillings will maintain it. If the public prefers the Hippodrome, the Empire, and the Alhambra, the public will go to one of those resorts, and the Crystal Palace has no more claim on the Treasury than the late lamented Lyceum or Coliseum. I take it that the School of Practical Engineering can be divorced from the place of entertainment at Sydenham and if required can be maintained by those who want it.

Motor vehicles in London do their full share of damage to the population. Without a census of vehicles which should show how many self-driven and how many horse-drawn conveyances of all kinds are plying in the streets, Mr. Gladstone's figures do not shed full light on the iniquities of the former: but it appears that of 1859 street accidents in October and November 666, or more than one-third, were caused by motors, tramcars being the worst offenders. Mention of tramcars reminds me that some dissatisfied person, without much to do I presume, has been counting the passengers who use the L. C. C.'s recently opened tram service on the Embankment: these amount to an average of about three per car. An ungrateful public evidently prefers the underground or the tube.

It is a sufficiently harmless freak of imbecility to give the patients at an Animals' Hospital or Home of Rest a Christmas dinner, though one may be permitted to doubt whether, horses, donkeys, cats, parrots, and other tame fowl enter into the spirit of the thing. Rather an undesirable turn was given to one of these entertainments at the hospital in Hugh Street on Wednesday where Archdeacon Wilberforce is reported to have "said grace" before the donkeys, rabbits, etc., were fed!

Some enquiring mind has collected curious figures relating to the price of first editions of Mr. Kipling's works. A copy of "Schoolboy Lyrics" published at Lahore in 1881 was sold by auction in 1899 for £135. You might suppose that this was the beginning of a boom; but no: Schoolboy Lyrics for some occult reason ceased to appeal to book collectors; the price came down with a run, and in 1900 the work was worth £3-10-0 and no more. The first edition of "Departmental Ditties" published 1886 went for £20-15-0 in 1897; in 1900 holders of Departmental Ditty stock were unloading at £4. These variations, of course, have no bearing on the author's popularity; they merely illustrate the vagaries of the book collector. Thus R. L. Stevenson's "Not I and other Poems" (four leaves only) sold in 1899 for £22; in 1905 for £2-19-0. Nought is stable in the book market but first folios of the late Mr. W. Shakespeare. I doubt if you would get more than its published price for a Romance of Two Worlds, even!

A friend of whom I had thought better, got up at some unearthly hour on Christmas morning to be present at the swimming race in the Serpentine. Twenty-nine heroes dived in and swam a beautiful race in two degrees of frost, among the competitors was an athlete of 75 years who really is, I suggest, old enough to know better though one cannot help admiring his venerable hardihood.

The authorities are making a hideous mess of the old elms in Kensington Gardens: many of them certainly wanted cutting as they are mere shells; but a vast deal of perfectly sound wood has been cut and a depressing array of fat scaffolding poles is the result. You might imagine that the London County Council had been at work. [Reminds us of the Vandalism seen in Church Lane and Dalhousie Square, Calcutta.—ED.]

MARKHOR IN THE KAJI NAG.

NEARLY every visitor to Kashmir knows by sight the range of mountains which they pass on the opposite side of the Jhelum near Uri, but very few ever come to know them better or to visit the delightful valleys which lie hidden from view in those rather bare looking hills, dotted here and there with rocks and precipices. But among those lofty mountains is found the Pir Punjal Markhor, which is the most difficult animal to bag and carries the finest trophies of any animal to be found in the vicinity of the valley, with perhaps the one exception of the Barasingh or Kashmir Stag. In July 1903 I returned from a successful shooting trip to Ladakh and having still a little more than a month of my leave remaining, I decided to try for Markhor in this range. My wife and I started off from Bara Mullah and marched along the north bank of the Jhelum, but at our first camp we heard that the nullah we were making for had been taken; so had to content ourselves with another small one which at that time of year was not likely to hold anything else than females and kids. The only sport which I got was with a small back bear which I saw lying on a rock sunning itself in the early morning. I got to within fifty yards of it, without being detected, but as it only presented a very small mark whilst lying down I waited patiently for it to get up, when a bullet through the shoulder sent it rolling down the steep slope to the valley where my tents were pitched. Shortly afterwards I saw a fine little gooral, but could not get close enough for a shot owing to the impossible nature of the ground. Higher up we saw, as the shikaries had foretold, numbers of females and kids, but not a single shootable head. The following day the good news was brought that Gooja Nullah had been vacated, so we at once prepared to move on. Early the next morning we were on the move, and by evening had reached the mouth of the nullah. Another short march brought us to our camping ground, where two minor nullahs met under a bridge of snow, which still remained unmelted of the immense mass which had been piled across the main nullah at this point by the spring avalanches. The shikaries and pony having found shelter under rocks and our tents pitched on the only flat piece of ground, we had time to look round.

The scenery was grand, precipitous rocky cliffs dotted with trees towered up on all sides to the open snow covered slopes of the highest peaks in the range, while below was the steep thickly wooded gorge down which the torrent rushed, swollen by the recent rains and the fast melting snow. It seemed a very likely place and we made up our minds to stay until at least one good head had been obtained.

In the evening we amused ourselves examining every bit of open ground with the glasses, but nothing was to be seen.

Long before daybreak on the following morning I started up the western nullah and we reached the ridge just after sunrise, but beyond one little beast and the fairly fresh tracks of a big one, we saw nothing.

Until 10 o'clock we toiled on and upwards searching every bit of ground below and opposite, but nothing appeared. As the Markhor usually lie up about this time it was useless going on, so we took a rest, eat tiffin and then slept until 3 o'clock, when the shikari woke me and said it was time to be moving again. We continued moving along the ridge, but for some hours we had no better luck than in the morning. At last we spotted a female standing on a point of rock and evidently a sentry to a herd, but since at that time of year the males have separated from the females it was not very encouraging. Fortunately our road to camp lay in that direction, so I decided to go a little out of my way and have a look into that little side nullah. In spite of the watchful female we arrived undetected, and leaving the chota shikari and tiffin coolie behind, my shikari and I crawled carefully up to a corner from which we could see most of the nullah. Just as I got into position suddenly round the next rocky spur of the hill a grand old beast with long curling horns came bounding down from rock to rock until he reached some bushes on which he commenced to bronse, his long black and white beard waving in the evening breeze which was now blowing down the nullah. Carefully and slowly we drew back and to make sure of him with a shot at about a hundred yards we started off up hill to a point which I had marked as being level with and just opposite the place where he was feeding. We reached our destination without accident, but being a little blown I stopped for a minute to look for a suitable spot from which I could look into the next nullah and to give me time to take breath after our sharp climb. The most suitable place seemed an overhanging rock with bushes on the open side under which I crawled with my rifle and glasses, and no noise having been made I felt safe from detection whilst I took my shot. But was he still there? Slowly I raised my head and looked round the corner of the rock and there he was not eighty yards away still feeding. I put up the glasses and had a good look at him as being partly concealed by bushes there might be some mistake, the rifle was then pushed forward and I waited for him to expose his shoulder. I had already felt several sharp pulls at my foot which was the shikari's method of reminding me that the time had come to shoot and just then the Markhor stepped out on to an open space in the bushes. The bead was on his shoulder as I fired and down he fell, rolling over and over until caught by a projecting rock in the small nullah below. As I leant over the hedge watching my first markhor falling, another good head, which we had not previously seen, rushed up, past us, and then stopped to look for the cause of the disturbance. He could not make me out owing to the bushes and it would have been an easy matter to have bagged him, but he seemed slightly smaller than the one I had shot, so I let him go. Then another appeared which seemed about the same size, but as I hoped to get an even better head, I did not fire at first, and he moved off. My shikari seemed very disgusted and seemed to think him to be such a fine head, that I stood up to see if I could view him again. At last I saw him and put up the rifle to fire, but this caused my foot to slip on the steep wet ground, and the bullet went nowhere near him. He did not wait for another but went off at his best pace up the hill and very disgusted my shikari looked. We then went down to where the first one lay dead and proceeded to measure his horns. They were nearly six spans in length and very thick, so a very fine head indeed. [What is a "span"? We can span 9¼in., our Sub Editor 9¾in, and a Shikri of our acquintance covers 10in. ED.] It was now getting late and we had some distance to go, so the shikaries and tiffin coolie got to work with their knives and in a short time the head and skin were removed and off we started for camp. On my part I felt very content with the first day's work, but I rather suppose that my men would have been better pleased if the other big one had been bagged and one or the other had its throat cut as being good Mahomedans the flesh was wasted. On reaching camp the tape showed the head to be fifty inches and twelve inches round the base.

A peg, then dinner, and a smoke in the moonlight completed the day's proceedings. The shikaries had orders for an early start again the following morning, but it was not to be, as when I woke, I heard the soft drumming sound of rain falling on the canvas of the tent and the whole landscape being blotted out by a thick mist, the only thing to be done was to remain in camp and wait for a better day. But day after day passed and still there was no improvement in the weather, so we stayed in the tents, read every particle of literature over and over again and discussed the rumours which reached us of floods in Srinagar and of the bridges over the Jhelum being swept away. Then a little excitement was caused by the arrival of a messenger from Srinagar who came to tell my shikari that H.E. the Viceroy was coming up to Kashmir and that his services would be required to arrange a markhor shoot, so off he went leaving his son, who was chota shikari to act in his stead.

At last one morning there was a break in the clouds and by 2 o'clock the sky was fairly clear and the wind steady, so we started out again to look round another portion of the nullah.

The best ground being cut off by the rushing torrents which united just below the camp we wended our way up the hill behind the tents. In about an hour's time we reached a ridge whence we could inspect a likely bit of country. We soon spotted some females on the opposite side of a small nullah and then a little further on my glass showed me a fine old beast lying on a rock enjoying the sun and drying his coat after the days of heavy ceaseless rain. He looked well worth getting, but the question was how to approach him without being seen, as between us lay an open grass slope over which we must pass in full view of him. My shikari was for retiring, but I was for trying the stalk and trusting to finding some way of crossing the maidan unobserved. We crept forward under cover of trees and bushes as far as possible and then we got to a part which was without cover of any sort and we were stuck. Then, when we were nearly giving up in despair, I noticed a cloud coming up the valley and saw that in a few minutes it would envelope the markhor and females and hide the maidan from their view for some time, during which we could safely cross, and passing above the females get to a good position above the old billy on the rock above where he was lying.

All went well and we arrived at the selected spot while the mist was still covering our prey, when it rolled away he was nowhere to be seen, as we found that bushes obstructed the view of the rocks. We then began to move down to where we had last seen him, searching each nook and corner with the glasses as we went, but still without success. At last whilst I was looking round one side of a rock the shikari spotted him quite close by and of course lost his head, and in his hurry in coming round to me trod on a stick which broke with a crack and alarmed the markhor. When I came round the animal was standing up in our direction, but even then I might have got a shot, but the shikari pushed a bush to one side to show me the beast and before I could get my rifle up he was gone in one bound. When next he appeared, still bounding from rock to rock, the distance was nearly two hundred yards and so a clean miss was the result of a snapshot I took at him He gave me no further chance, and we watched him climb the ridge and pass into the next nullah, when we turned homewards sadly depressed by our bad luck, but I managed to pass the time with a few appropriate remarks on the capabilities of my shikaries to act as such. The bad luck for the day did not finish there as my wife met me with the news that one of my spaniels was missing, that they had gone out as usual to meet me and only one had returned. We never found him, but the pugs of a panther next day gave us some idea of his fate. So ended a very unsuccessful day.

I stayed on some five or six days more in Gooja Nullah but, beyond shooting a red bear, which I met early one morning on my way to the markhor ground, without success. It either rained, or when we went out, we saw nothing worth shooting, as I think the nullah had been disturbed by the panther. Then we found a corner of the nullah high up which seemed to be full of animals, many of them measuring forty inches and over, but not quite good enough. I wanted something over fifty. At last the day arrived when I had made up my mind that if we saw nothing we would move our camp to where we heard that panther and bears were killing cattle on the northern side of the range.

We saw nothing up to midday and then I made out a very fine head and white coat and beard accompanied by two smaller beasts with red coats. The stalk was an easy one and we arrived at the place we had marked for the shot, but they had moved into some bushes. We made out, as we thought, my white friend, so when I got a spot at his shoulder I fired and down he fell and off went the rest, but to our astonishment there were three and they included the one I had set my heart on getting. My disgust can well be imagined when I found that I had shot another old light coloured beast but with only a fair head.

G. H. D.

A morning paper devotes considerable space to "The language of sealing-wax." Chocolate colour denotes invitation to dinner, green is used by hopeful young lovers, and so on. Any colour, we may add, dropped nice and hot on the fingers produces language of the most eloquent description.

Kind Lady: "Poor man Wouldn't you like a nice chop?" The man (suspiciously): "What kind of a chop, lady—lamb or wood?"

Black (to Brown): "For goodness sake be careful with that gun. You just missed me that time." Brown: "Did I, old chap? I'm awfully sorry!"

Teacher: "What are marsupials?" Boy: "Animals which havel pouches in their stomachs." Teacher: "What do they have pouches for?" Boy: "To crawl into and conceal themselves in when they are pursued."

First Mother: "I don't believe in the faith cures brought about by the laying on of hands." Second Mother: "Well, I do. I cured my little boy of the cigarette habit in that way."

Fishing.

AUTUMN CODLING IN A WEST HIGHLAND LOCH.

THE sea lochs which run far in amid the Argyllshire hills are full of interest to the fisherman. The shoals of porpoises and occasional whales which visit these inland stretching arms of the sea are clear proof that the waters teem with life; for the great marine mammals would never come so far unless they found good hunting.

Lochs Long and Goil are noted for the suddeness with which furious squals sweep down upon them from the surrounding mountains. Sailers of small boats have to be ever ready and watchful, for the blast striking the water, as it often does, at a descending angle, may come utterly without warning. That advancing line of darker colour which marks the coming squall elsewhere, is frequently absent in these fiords of Western Scotland. Down rushes the wind, and in a moment lashes the water far from shore into foam, while nearer in all is calm.

Though so distant from sea and so shut in by land, Loch Goil is yet often too rough for small boats. As I look now out of the windows of the house in Carrick Castle, where I am staying, I see the loch lashed into short angry waves by a bitter northerly gale. The trees are bending to the wintry blast while the mountains are shrouded in rain mist.

But the storms on these lochs are soon over, and to-morrow perhaps the wind will have veered round to the west, and the waters may be calm and smiling in the autumn sunshine. Carrick Castle is a charming village about half way up Loch Goil; it is called after a grim old ruin, once in the days of the Bruce a royal castle, and subsequently held by the Campbells. These latter at the end of the seventeenth century had the castle burnt over their heads by the men of Atholl. Since that day the building has remained a ruin.

All the western sea lochs hold saythe and lythe, or coal-fish and pollack as they are called in the South: these will take either a white fly or spinner and give excellent sport. Neither, however, are very desirable for the table, so that the fisherman who likes the proceeds of his angling to be appreciated, naturally turns his attention to the codling and whiting. Both these latter fish are most satisfactory to catch and also to eat afterwards; moreover, there are plenty of them in the sea lochs of the Western Highlands if only their haunts can be located. To do this one must consult the local fishermen, and by means of soft words persuade them to tell their favourite grounds. Whiting often only bite well just before dusk and stop feeding directly it gets dark. Codling are more complaisant and take in the day. Some of them run to five or six pounds, but the majority are of course much smaller. The angler who uses a light cane sea rod, Nottingham reel, and running line of moderate thickness is enabled to fish with finer tackle and lighter leads than the local fishermen, who still employ the time-honoured handline. Cod are looked on as somewhat voracious feeders, easy to hook with any sort of tackle, but I have found that in Western Scotland, at any rate, when one's bait is the easily stolen mussel, that it is very easy to miss bites if the strike is not made at the right moment; and I feel convinced that the handliner fails to hook at least half the fish which take his bait. An important item is the hook which should be fine in the wire, not too big and very sharp I have lately obtained most excellent sea hooks from a local tackle maker in Brighton. They are Limerick bend with turndown eye, and are astonishingly cheap considering their first-rate qualities. By fininig down the tackle I find it possible to hold the button with a two ounce sinker when the tide is running, and with so light a lead one can detect the slightest bite. There is rather an art in opening mussels, they should be got out of the shells whole, so as to keep the leathery part round the edges. The dark portion, known as the tongue, is tougher than the rest of the bait and it is a good plan after passing the hook twice though the middle to finish up by inserting the point though the mussel's tongue. Thus the bait holds on better. Soaking in salt water toughens mussels. These shell fish can be kept for a week by putting them in a dry bucket, without any water in it, and covering the top to exclude the light. The mussels do not require water; the closed shells contain enough fluid to keep the fish going for several days. When fishing off Carrick Castle a few days ago I got a dog fish among my codling. I hear that these troublesome brutes are usually very rare in Loch Goil, but this year numbers of them have come up. When a dog fish is hooked it should be got to the surface and netted as soon as possible for their teeth are so sharp that they will soon cut the thickest gut if not dealt with promptly.

Another annoying fish is the little gildee, which troubles the whiting fisher greatly by sucking off his bait. When the angler uses a rod he often hooks these small fish, and tso turns the tables. They are easy enough to catch if one goes to the trouble of putting small hooks on the paternoster.

On some whiting grounds gildees are in such numbers that the handliners do not attempt to fish until dusk; for when the whiting come on the feed the gildees leave the bait alone.

Whiting sometimes only take for about half an hour, and it then behoves the angler to make the most of the fleeting moments. Having found a really good place the fisherman should be most painstaking in remembering the marks exactly, so that he may be able to go again and anchor at precisely the same spot. Local professional fishermen, who ought to know better, are sometimes careless about marks; by missing the exact spot one may easily lose half the sport, which a little more care would have ensured.

Sea trout will often take a minnow in salt water: a blue and silver phantom is a good bait. There are also plenty of mackerel in the western sea lochs. The great secret is to let out plenty of line when spinning a minnow behind a boat; the water is usually very clear and fish will not take a spinner when they see it close to the boat.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

Shooting.

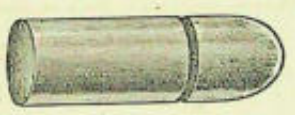
WESTLEY RICHARDS NEW CORDITE EXPRESS RIFLE ·476 BORE.

WE suggested in the article on "Restrictions of Sporting Rifles," which appeared in our issue of the 15th November, that the difficulty arising from the recent prohibition would be solved by the ingenuity of the gunmaker in this case as in other past instances.

There is more than one path out of the wood; and the ·318 Accelerated Express Rifle—which has already received notice in our columns—in conjunction with the Copper Capped Expanding Bullet seems to afford a way of an easy and practical character, which many sportsmen will prefer to take.

Another solution is the suggestion made by certain correspondents that the ·500 bore rifle should be adopted in place of the ·450 High Velocity Nitro Express Rifle; and perhaps this on the whole would be the simplest plan, possessing as it does the strong recommendation of employing a calibre of rifle and cartridge of proved reliablity and holding a high place in the modern category of Sporting Nitro rifles; and, therefore, entails no addition to the list of sporting bores and cartridges which should be avoided wherever possible.

The slight increase in the weight of the ·500 bore rifle and of the cartridge is an objection to some sportsmen, and to such the only other way out, is to take an entirely new bore standing midway between the ·500 Cordite Rifle and the prohibited ·450.



Messrs. Westley Richards and Company are introducing a new rifle on these lines. Its bore is ·476 and it shoots a bullet of 520 grains weight, with an approximate muzzle velocity of 2,150 feet second. The weight of the ·450 prohibited bullet is 480 grains, and the increase of 40 grains in the 476 bullet will be appreciated by the advocates of the heavier and larger bores of weapons.

The new ·476 Cordite Express Rifle gives a muzzle energy of from 5,000 to 5,250 feet lbs. as compared with the 4922 feet lbs. given by the prohibited ·450 bore.

The weight of the rifle will be:—

Single Rifles ... 8½ to 9lbs.
Double Rifle ... 10½lbs.

which are the same as the ·450 bore.

We give an illustration of the new ·476 cartridge. It shoots both the solid and the Capped Expanding Bullet. This powerful rifle would doubtless prove very effective, especially at big game, and it is anticipated will be regarded by all those sportsmen who pin their faith to the larger calibres as opposed to the new improved small bores, as being one of the best of its type, and as meeting in a satisfactory way the difficulty produced by the recent prohibition.

MIXED SPORT.

THERE are, doubtless, quite a number of shooters to whom the term "mixed sport," carries no meaning. We live and move now in days of feverish haste and excitement; everything is done at top speed or not at all. The humble shooter who tries to dispose of a gun excellent in all respects fails to do so simply because it is not an ejector, and some other fellow cannot let his estate because it does not produce a certain total of a certain kind of game. Somebody else is out of it in respect of some other detail which does not happen to be up to the high-pressure standard of twentieth century requirements and there you are.

In this way we see the older style of shooting (usually called mixed or general sport) rapidly leaving us, and its place taken by some one special feature or detail in which one or, at most, two sorts of game alone figure. Thus grouse and hares, or, to put it more correctly, grouse alone, from the quarry of the August gunner; partridges go by themselves in September: phea-ants mainly by themselves in October or November or whenever the owner of the coverts elects to start shooting. So far so good; far be it from me to say anything against it all; but there is no harm, I presume, in making a few comparisons as between things as we now know them and as they used to be before anything was done as such breakneck speed. At a modern shoot, then, be it at grouse, partridges, or pheasants, the shooter would by himself have but a poor time of it He could scarcely manipulate a pair of guns—hammerless ejectors though they be—by himself, and so the services of a loader are requisitioned. I quite agree with all this, too, and am not saying a single word against it. If it be grouse-shooting then the "pick up" will be partridges, and if pheasants, why, pheasants will compose the bag, with a possible trifling exception or two, which, among a total of fifteen hundred slain, or thereabouts, need hardly be noticed at all. The game, be it what it may; falling to each shooter is shot where he stands; he moves not out of his allotted place, merely going to the next position when told to do so by his host or the head-keeper. His cartridges contain the same load all through, and the same size shot; there is no variation of anything, and, possibly, during the entire day he has not set eyes on anything in the way of fur or feather save the particular bird or beast he is out to slay. And here, again, let me say I am merely mentioning this for the purpose of comparison, and am not to be considered as condemning it. I hope by this time my readers know "the Doctor" well enough to look upon him as a sportsman, and not a critic or journalist of the Daily Mail type.

Mixed sport, however, on the other hand presupposes much in the way of variety and change, and can anyone be blamed for having a leaning towards it on this account! The man with the cartridge belt strapped round his middle containing cartridges with Nos. 4, 6, 8, or even No. 10 shot, under his very hand and ready to be slipped into the chambers of his gun at any moment, is seldom seen now. But at the time he flourished, a few years back, such an equipment was necessary. For going over rough ground on mixed shooting intent, he could never tell whether a cock pheasant or a jack snipe would next present itself. A charge of No. 10, or even of No. 8, is only fired at a pheasant, hare, or rabbit by a novice or cruel-hearted shooter or poacher; never by a sportsman or a gentleman. Nos. 4, 5, or even 6 are never intentionally used on snipe or (as regards the first two numbers) on woodcock, because such sizes are too big for such small birds, and No. 7 or 8 does better. Naturally, then, each style of shooting calls to a great extent for its own special charge and size of shot, and a mixed assortment, therefore, was always found in the belt or in the pockets of the seeker after mixed sport as we knew him a few years ago. A rough piece of common land beaten out for rabbits or partridges would, perhaps, end abruptly at a bag probably holding lots of snipe of both varieties. Here a change of shot would be necessary if many of the nibble "long-bills" were to be shot. A comparison may here be struck as between the older gunner and the newer one; for the latter, if suddenly called away from killing tall pheasants with an ounce of No. 5, would make a sorry show at snipe unless he had more suitable ammunition, and this I say with the utmost respect for all the crack shots going. Theoretically, our best crack shots manage to shoot snipe with their ordinary game charges and No. 5 shot; in practice they generally manage to fail—at least, such of them that I ever saw make the attempt.

Finally, the seeker after mixed sport got more exercise out of the pastime than does the modern shooter out of his way of doing things, and this counts for something. Starting in the morning, he, possibly, would not be over the same land twice, and would have fresh ground before him all day. His bag would not be a big one. I admit, nor would there be the same amount of skill necessary in making it. Driven game is much more difficult to shoot than walked-up or game shot over dogs; but that is not the point I am discussing. I am only trying to show that the "mixed sport" shooter is rapidly passing; but for saying so I respectfully plead that I may not be jumped on by any of his present-day successors.—The Shooting Times.

QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to the mauling of Colonel Hutchinson, 2nd Gurkhas, on 22nd December, it would be interesting to known what bore rifle he was using, and whether a single or double. Also what weapon the orderly had.

MORNING GLORY.

A GOOD BEAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I enclose a couple of photos of a lucky two days' black bear shoot I had about two months ago. The large beast was measured before skinning but 22 hours after death. Length five feet five inches. Skin over seven feet. I have not the other measurements by me at present, but will give details if you are interested.

MORNING GLORY.

RAMPUR-BANIAR, 7th January 1907.

BIG TOTALISATOR DIVIDENDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you tell me what is the biggest dividend ever paid by the totalisator on ten rupee tickets at the Calcutta Races—monsoon or cold weather; and if you could mention a few other big ones, I should be very much obliged.

Q.

[We think we are right in quoting the Rs. 1,593 paid over Nirvana's win in the Entally Plate at the Fourth Monsoon Meeting last year as the record. We have not time to wade through eighteen volumes of the Calcutta Turf Club Calendar, but here are a few good "fat" returns:—Rs. 702 on Kapo in the August Stakes, Calcutta Second Monsoon Meeting, 1897; Rs. 590 and Rs. 445 on Meadow Saffron and Clynder for places in the Ellenborough Plate, First Day First Calcutta Meeting this season; Rs. 513 on Spring, International Pony Stakes, First Calcutta Meeting, 1892; Rs. 436 on Stowaway, New Year Plate, some years ago; a big dividend was paid on one of the late Lord William Beresford's horses in 1890 (we think) but we cannot remember details, and the Calcutta Turf Club Calendar in those days did not publish totalisator dividends.—ED.]

SHIKAR FROM BALLOONS!

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Some months since a contemp rary suggested that the forest clad islands of the Sunderbunds admitted of being surveyed from balloons, and now that the expassion of Frasergunge is on the tapis, the idea will probably assume definite form. Employment of the airship is not without interest to sportsmen, especially since the recent adoption of hot air for inflation in lieu of the usual gas obviates all danger from using fire arms in proximity to the latter. Where water carriage in our big game districts (such as the said Sunderbunds and the eastern rivers and bheels) is available, there would be no difficulty in conveying the balloon and simple apparatus for generating hot air and as animals, unless in hilly parts, seldom look upwards there would be less possibility of scare than in beating or tracking. A good sweep of country can be taken in from even 500 feet elevation, so at any rate the haunts of animals could be located and subsequent operations carried out in perfectly legitimate and sporting manner.

AERO-SHOT.

POOL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Will you decide the following: In a game of pool A and B respectively bet each other a rupee that the other won't win. A loses his chance of winning when B and C only besides himself are in, C having caused the misfortune by taking his last life. The proprietor of the table asks B and C to toss up who shall have the pool as it is late, and this they do, B winning the toss. Had they continued playing C would probably have won and the aforementioned bet be consequently settled. But B claims the rupee from A. A contends that B has not won the game, as C might have beaten him, in the same way as he beat himself (A), and the bet was made having regard to the number of players (six.) Whose argument is right?

LALL GOLEY.

A DOMESTIC SODAWATER MACHINE.

WE had an opportunity last week of inspecting, among others, a small "Domestic" machine for manufacturing sodawater, lemonade, etc., by the simplest process imaginable at one's own home. The carbonic acid gas is compressed in a liquified state in a drawn steel cylinder of tremendous resistance, each cylinder containing sufficient gas to make 300 dozen of waters. The machine itself occupies a space of about one square foot, can be placed and worked on any table and is connected with the gas by copper tubing. This ingenious patent is the property of the Sirdar Carbonic Gas Company, Limited, of Bombay, and is most suitable for tea garden bungalows and mofussil residences far from rail or river communication. The cost of manufacturing sodawater is one anna a dozen and sweet waters a trifle over three annas, and the "Domestic" machine with the slowest working turns out two to three dozens per hour. A similarly constructed machine called the "Club" makes three instead of one bottle at a time and is chiefly in demand for clubs hotels and restaurants. The machine, however, which most appealed to us was the "Shikari" pattern and consisted of a strongly made teakwood case containing a "Domestic" machine and an "E" cylinder of gas capable of turning out 70 dozen sodawater, with a rack for one dozen bottles and a drawer for syrups to make lemonade, etc. The case measures about 2ft. 3in. by 2ft. by 1ft. 3in. and is eminently suitable for volunteer or field service, shikar parties, race meets and pigsticking camps. The price of this wonderful combination is Rs. 286.

The Company recharge all their cylinders in India at a small cost, the "A" Cylinder containing gas for 300 dozen being refilled for Rs. 16, and the small cylinders proportionately. The price of the "Domestic" machine is within the reach of most, being Rs. 227 for machine and one "A" cylinder (300 dozen) and Rs. 297 for machine and two "A" cylinders, allowing for one empty cylinder to be sent for refilling whilst the other is retained for use. The "Club" machine (making three bottles at a time) costs Rs. 301 with one "A" cylinder and Rs. 371 with two.

Another novelty we saw was a Berkefield one candle filter worked by a brass semi-rotary pump giving 5 to 7 gallons of filtered water per hour and costing only Rs. 85, a three candle pattern giving 30 to 35 gallons an hour was priced at Rs. 115.

The Company manufacture machines of much greater capacity suitable for regimental factories, and have lent a plant with a No. 2 service machine to the Dining Committee of the Minto Fête; this is capable of turning out 40 dozen per hour. Any of our readers may see these machines for themselves and obtain information by applying to the representative, Mr B. Scott, residing at 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and may meet him by appointment at the Minto Fête, when he will be pleased to show visitors the machines actually at work. We can commend this matter with confidence to tea planters, sportmen, mofussilites and others, to them these machines should prove a boon, a blessing and a saving of time and money.

THE TURF.

WINDSOR.

IT was bitterly cold at Windsor on the 21st instant, there being a very keen wind, but this had the effect of making the going decidedly good, whilst the fog had disappeared, and it was possible to see everything that was taking place in each race. All things considered, and especially when it is borne in mind that we are on the eve of the Christmas holidays, there was a capital attandance, and those present were rewarded by some very fair sport. Judging from collateral running, Scotch Mine ought to have beaten Eastern Glory for the Christmas Maiden Hurdle Race with which proceedings begun. When Mr. Stedall's filly met Dafila and Tipperary, in the Wimbledon Three Year Old Hurdle Plate at Kempton Park, she finished third, whereas a little later, Eastern Glory, in receipt of 10lbs. from the same pair, was only fourth. However, Scotch Mine did not travel at all well in the market, as after opening at 5 to 1, she gradually beat a retreat, and finally twice those odds, or even more, might have been obtained about her, whilst she cut an inglorious figure in the race, and eventually finished last of those who completed the course. I am inclined to think that Frowkins would have won had he not fallen at the last flight of hurdles, for, being a son of St. Frusquin, he naturally possesses more than the ordinary turn of speed, and would scarcely have been caught on the flat. Old St. Moritz ran in curious fashion in the Friday Selling Hurdle Race, for, in the early part of the contest, he apparently refused to gallop, and was soon last of the half-dozen. When he at last took hold of his bit, however, he was quickly on terms with the rest of the field, but had apparently had enough of it in the run in, as he was performing in very shifty fashion, and would probably have been beaten had there been very little further to go. Nauclee, who cut out the work at a strong pace, had thus won the race at almost every point except the right one, and her owner was unlucky to catch St. Moritz in a fairly amiable mood. Details :—

OLDEST CERTIFICATED OPTICIANS IN INDIA

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

Many Children suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupic are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The Great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Our Ophthalmic Department is in charge of a London Eyesight Specialist holding the Diploma of the British Optical Association.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For some years past Thacker's Reduced Survey Map of India has been looked upon as the most convenient and helpful Map of the Indian Empire extant. It possesses many points of superiority and convenience; the information is exhaustive, every name mentioned in the Government Survey being included. The great convenience of the Index of 10,000 names has always been keenly appreciated; it has, therefore, been a source of great regret to the proprietors that they have been forced to allow the Map to remain out of print for a considerable time on account of political changes in the internal provinces of India. The moment the new boundaries of Bengal were settled, fresh plates were put in hand, and the publishers are now pleased to announce the third edition of this important Map as ready for sale.

The following are brief particulars—

HEAVY SNOW—MEETINGS ABANDONED.—The heavy snow-storm in the early hours of the 26th instant played havoc with the various Boxing Day race meetings, and only in a single instance—that of Limerick—was a programme carried through. An attampt will, however, be made to decide some of them later in the week. Following are the reports received from the different courses :—

KEMPTON PARK.

An early inspection of the course at Kemption Park yesterday morning made it apparent that racing was quite out of the question, as snow lay to a depth of three inches on the race track, and it was promptly decided by the Stewards to postpone the first day's card till to day and abandon the second afternoon's programme.

A telegram from Mr. Walter Hyde, the Secretary, late last night, says:—"Racing to-morrow most doubtful. Earliest information will be telegraphed from Kemption in the morning."

WOLVERHAMPTON.

There was a heavy fall of snow in the Wolverhampton district during yesterday morning, and racing at Dunstall Park was impracticable. It was therefore decided to abandon the second day's programme, and make an attempt to carry through the first day's programme this afternoon.

A telegram from Mr. Sheldon, the clerk of the course, last night, states that the track is covered with snow to the depth of six inches, and consequently the outlook for to-day is far from promising, especially at the time of telegraphing it was freezing hard. A meeting of the stewards will, however, be held at noon to-day when it is anticipated they will formally abandon the meeting.

A still letter telegram from Mr. Sheldon says :—"With six inches of snow on the course, and a severe frost to-night, racing is impossible to-morrow. The stewards willmeet at 12 noon, and abandon the meeting."

HOOTON PARK.

Late on Tuesday evening a heavy snowstorm swept the Liverpool district, covering the ground to the extent of nine inches. Naturally, racing at Hooton Park was out of the question, and the officials formally abandoned the meeting.

LEOPARDSTOWN.

A heavy fall of snow yesterday morning left the course in such a state that racing was impossible, and the acting stewards, Sir Ernest Cochrane and Mr Arnott, decided to postpone the meeting untill Saturday next

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

By way of a change, the Southern Leaguers on Saturday easily out-distanced their rivals in the matter of goal-scoring. The ten S.L games yielded 43 goals, as compared with 28 in the First Division of the League, and 28 in the second. In the S.L. games, home clubs were victorious in seven instances, one game was drawn, and two visiting teams were successful. The successful elevens claimed 32 of the 43 goals. The home clubs in League I. won outright on only four grounds, an equal number of "foreigners" won, and the remaining two games saw honours even. The eight winners scored 20 of the 28 goals. Of Second Division clubs, six home teams each captured two points, two were defeated, and one shared the spoils. Of the 23 goals, the nine winning teams scored 17. Taking gains and losses as compared with last season, in the Southern League Fulham, Watford, and Mill wall each dropped two points, and Plymouth, Tottenham, and Luton one. Two prints were gained by Norwich, West Ham, and New Brompton, and one point each by Brentford, Queen's Park Rangers, and Reading. In the First Division of the League, the clubs dropping points were Bolton Wanderers, Liverpool, Bury, and Stoke, two each; and Derby County, Middlesbrough, and Sunderland, one each. Two each were gained by Aston Villa, Sheffield United, Birmingham, and Preston N. E., and one each by the Arsenal, Blackburn Rovers, and Manchester City. In the Second Division, two points were lost by Grimsby and Blackpool, and one each by Chelsea, Leeds City, and Burnley. The corresponding winners of points were Bradford and Burslem, two each; and Gainsborough, Hull, and Glossop, one each.

We have not had to wait untilthe holidays were actually upon, us for startling surprises. The Southern League furnished them on Saturday with a vengeance. The most sensational was that at Fulham, where the champions were routed by West Ham United who were in a riotous mood. Football form is one of the most curious puzzles that ever troubled mankind. Here is a team that has not met with success on foreign soil since 1st September opposed to a side that has not been defeated on its own ground this season. The common-sense prediction on a comparison of these facts is an easy triumph for the eleven playing before their own supporters. West Ham simply demonstrated the truth of the oft-repeated statement as to the uncertainty of the game. They cared naught for form, but put on their heaviest total in an away match besmirched the escutcheon of the champions and incidentally scored four times as many goals as any other team at Craven Cottage, and just equalled the aggregate of the previous nine clubs who had sought to gain points at the riverside ground. It is astonishing inexplicable. Hats off to West Ham whose dramatic triumph is a happy augury for their holiday programme.

Watford also lost their unbeaten home certificate on Saturday Norwich City scoring a couple of goals on the Cassio-road ground without response. Watford had previously played eight games before their own followers, Tottenham, Portsmouth, Bristol Rovers, and Southampton being among those who had endeavoured in vain to capture a couple of points, but Norwich succeeded where they failed. This is the third consecutive match the East Anglians have won away from home, and their fourth during the campaign, a record equalled only by Fulham. Another startling happening was at Park Royal, where Queen's Park Rangers proved that they have plenty of good football in them by defeating the famous, Spurs by three goals to one. Here again collateral form was completely upset, but nobody will begrudge Tottenham are much too good sportsmen to do so—the much-needed win to the Royalists, who have only to maintain their all-round excellence of Saturday to steadily ascend the table.

There was heavy scoring in a couple of the games, the Reading vs. Luton encounter producing nine goals, seven of which went to the credit of Reading, the Strawplaiters having to be content with a couple. The significance of this result is to be found in the fact that Reading, had previously taken part in 16 games, and only 17 goals had rewarded their efforts, In their preceding six games, they had a beggarly array of five goals as their aggregate, and now they come along with seven in one afternoon! The Bristol Rovers contributed their share towards the strange happenings of the afternoon by beating Southampton in the western city by five clear goals. In no previous game this season had the Rovers scored more than a trio of goals, and only once had Southampton had so many as three chalked up against them, this being on the occasion of their visit to Leyton on 13th October when they lost by the odd goal in five. On 8th September last. Northampton scored a home win against Brentford, but since then they had not, either on their own ground or away, improved their record by a win. It was fitting that, with so many other startling events occurring, they should once more come out on top, and they sent Swindon away empty-handed. As the railway men had not lost a game since 10th November Northampton are to be congratulated on their performance.

The remaining fixtures in the Southern League were of the normal order, except that defeat of 5—0 inflicted on Leyton by Portsmouth, at Fratton Park, was more emphatic than was anticipated. Portsmouth have not been beaten at home this season, and the only other clubs who have not been defeated on their own ground are Swindown and Brentford. Brighton and Hove are showing fairly consistent form, and their win against Crystal Palace was not unexpected. So well, however, did the visitors play that only a goal separated the teams at the finish, and lack of ability to accept chances prevented the Palace sharing the honours. Millwall have performed disappointingly when away from home, with the memorable exception of their Plymouth success and their visit to New Brompton resulted in a loss of a couple of points as compared with last season's corresponding game. Brentford have more reason to be satisfied with their long jaunt to Plymouth, for they converted a last season's defeat into a draw, their third in succession in away games, prior to which they had lost six off the reel.

THE S. L. TABLE.

Fulham are still easily at the head of the table, but their tenure of this position is not so secure as it was, Portsmouthit with three games in hand, and a better goal average, being only four points behind. It is noteworthy that the clubs occupying the three last places each scored a win on Saturday, and that two of the first three were defeated.

Woolwich Arsenal did not win at Derby on Saturday, but they did the next best thing—they prevented the home team obtaining more than one point. They did not deserve more, but they would have had less than their deserts had they not shared the points. It was a hard, bustling game all through, but the defence was stronger than the attack. Each side netted the ball once, but on both occasions the off-side rule had been obviously infringed, and the referee had to disallow the goals. When the Gunners went to Derby last season they had a crushing defeat, and it must have given them immense satisfaction on Saterday to be able to prove to the Midland folk that they had made rapid strides since then. It would have been much more satisfactory to place an unqualified success to their credit, but single points obtained on foreign soil are priceless, and it speaks volumes for the grit of the Reds that ten games away from home have added ten points to their total, a record equalled only by Newcastle United.

Visiting elevens did exceedingly well on Saturday in the First Division of the League. Aston Villa found Bolton Wanderers in a complacent mood at Burnden Park, and helped themselves to a couple of points, while Newcastle United proved much too clever for Manchester United at Clayton, all the spoils going to the Novocastrians. Bristol City helped Notts County down the ladder by scoring three of the five goals obtained at Trent Bridge, this being the second home reverse of the County, the other seven games being drawn. This is a unique record, and one that a club can well afford not to possess. Stoke, who appear to be doomed to find the bottom of the table at no distant date, were not able to prevent Preston North End returning to the proud town with the points, and Sunderland had to devide the honours with Manchester City at Roker Park. There is no doubt that the City are an improving team, and they will yet occupy a respectable place in the table. Everton repeated their last season's victory over Sheffield Wednesday, at Goodison Park, but Sheffield has a set-off in the victory of the United over Liverpool, at Bramall-lane, the Liverpudlians dropping two points, as compared with last year's result. Middlesbrough gave one of those disappointing displays at Blackburn to which we have become accustomed from the Tees-siders, and had to pay the penalty, while at Birmingham the ex-Heathens took ample revenge for their humiliation by Bury last season, the Shakers on Saturday suffering a 3—1 defeat. This was Birmingham's eighth consecutive home win.

LEAGUE I. TABLE.

Everton and Newcastle United are now level on points, but the former retain pride of place because of a better goal average. They have, however, played one more game than Newcastle, and a closer analysis reveals that Everton have played 11 home matches and 8 away, while Newcastle have played 10 away and only 8 at home. SCOTTISH NOTES.

The weather in Scotland on Saturday was all right for football but the gates all over were very poor. This was accounted for by the fact that although all the league clubs were engaged there was really no outstanding match.

The surprise of the day was the defeat of 3rd Lanark by Falkirk at Cathkin Park, and the victory of the country club was due to good, sound football, the Third never getting a chance. Falkirk have the best team this year they have had since they entered the League, and in Simpson Davidson, and McTavish they have three grand forwards, the last-named being considered one of the best inside rights in the country. Walter Arnott considers him a second Bobby Walker, and the Falkirk player could wish for no higher certificate.

Celtic still retain their position at the head of the League table, and they are going so strong and have such a fine reserve pack, that there seems little chance of them being anywhere else at the finish. Against Port Glasgow they were never really extended, but the feature of the game was the fine play of Bauchop, one of their reserves at outside left. He has good height, a nice turn of speed and tackles well.

Queen's Park did their friends a good turn by getting the better of Partick Thistle and if they repeat their display on New Year's Day the Corinthians have a hard task before them. Prophets, however, are at a discount where Queen's Park are concerned, for they generally play their worst when least expected. However, Saturday's points will do no harm.

It is hard to say what Rangers would do without the veteran Alec Smith as the Aberdeen forwards could do nothing with him, and he had a hand in the Rangers' three goals. Along with his partner Kyle the couple form one of the strongest left wings playing in Scotland just now. Newbigging the Ibrox team's goalkeeper also enhanced his reputation.

The Motherwell-Hamilton Academical match was a local "Derby," and although, to every body's surprise, Motherwell beat the Rangers only a week ago at Ibrox, they were fairly outplayed on Saturday. The breezy start made by the Hamilton men upset them, and they never got into their stride. It was a game with no little feeling in it, and half a minute before time a player on each side was ordered to the pavilion.

Dundee have no liking for Greenock, and although they got full points against Morton, they were lucky. The Northern club players have a touch of "swelled head" at present, and the ornamental work they indulged in was not only overdone, but unless. Hearts got the better of St. Mirren after a scrambling game, while Hibernians, thanks to Rennie, got a couple of points at Clyde's expense. Clyde made a fine show in the first half, and had most of the game, but in the second portion they were never in the hunt.

RUGBY RULES.

CORNWALL vs. SOUTH AFRICANS.—The conditions on Saturday at Redruth were ideal, the weather being cold, but bright and fine, with not a breath of wind, and the turf firm and springy. The attendance was close upon 8,000. Cornwall were at full strength, whilst the Colonials, with one or two notable exceptions, were represented by the side which achieved such conspicuous success against Wales

Cornwall won the toss, and Roos started the game. Early in the match Cornwall were penalisad, and Morkel only just failed in kicking a goal. An exchange of kicks ended in favour of the Colonials, but J. Jackett cleverly cleared by finding touch well up the field. Dean got through cleverly, and when pressed, punted, and Carbis tackled Marsburg before he could return. South Africa worked down cleverly, but were sent back again by a strong kick by Solomon. Cornwall attempted to open out the game, but the visitors' steadly tackling prevented much ground being gained. At length Dean evaded De Villiers and passed to Bennetts, who, panting at the right moment, enabled Carbis to reach Burmeister before that player could clear, and R. Jackett dashing up, scored a try, which Milton failed to convert.

The Colonials improved in subsequent play, and a beautiful bout of passing between the backs ended in Hirsch scoring, no goal following. In easing play, Marsburg got away cleverly, but before he became actually dangerous his career was checked by Solomon, and from the scrum which followed Richards gained ground by finding touch at midfield. The Africans initiating passing, and the ball going to Hirsch, that player ran thirty yards before he was tackled by J. Jackett, the International bringing him down finely. The visitors came again, and a moment later Marsburg outpaced all opposition and scored near the corner flag. Morkel failed to add the extra points,

The Colonials continued to press to some purpose, and only deadly tackling prevented the score rising. Hirsch and De Villiers made splendid bursts for the goal line, but were held up just outside. Brink at length got through from a forward dribble. Morkel again failing to add the extra points. The county were kept strictly on the defenc, Dobbin and Jackson giving their three-quarters repeated opportunities but the interval arrived with the score:—

South Africans (3 tries)	9
Cornwall (1 try)	3

Cornwall improved on resuming, a strong forward rush almost ending in a score, but Burmeister saved the situation and punted out of danger. Cornwall returned to the attack, and after Bennetts had nearly scored by clever following up, the Colonials saved. The County continued to attack hotly, the forwards showing magnificent form which prevented the visitors from opening out the game. A free kick awarded them proved of little consequence, as J. Jackett transferred the game to the visitors' end by finding touch well down the field.

The Visitors gradually forced play into the home territory, but were once more driven back through a fine run by Dean, who eluded a number of opponents before forced to part with the ball. Bennetts rushing up nearly beat Burmeister for possession, but the Colonial back succeeded in warding off danger. Cornwall were now showing the better play, and were testing the defence to such purpose that the visitors found it expedient to play a fifth three-quarter. Milton made a burst from the line out, and, backed up by Roskrow and Howe-Brown, gained considerable ground.

Wedge then smartly got the ball from the scrum when favourably placed, and gave Richards a good chance to cross the line, but the ball was brought back for an infringement. A series of scrums took place on the visitors' line, but relief was at length afforded by Burmeister, who found touch at the twenty-five. The County still pressed, their forwards showing superior form both in the scrum and loose. A free to South Africa brough much needed relief, but in the ensuing line out the advantage rested with the South Africans, and Milton making a mark, punted into Burmeister's hands, but that player returned the kick with interest.

Cornwall were momentarily pressed, but J. Jackett kicked out of danger, and thy come away with a magnificent rush which took play once more into the visitors' quarters. Marsburg recovered a portion of the ground lost by a clever run, but he was brought to earth by Carbis, and play once more raged around the visitors' line. Dobbin was penalised, and the ball was placed for J. Jackett, who, however, failed to land a goal, and the visitors saved. Cornwall continued to play aggressively, but Jackson at length passed to Marsburg, who, outpacing all but Jackett, elected to pass instead of going for the line, and Dean, intercepting, saved the situation by finding touch at the twenty-five.

The Colonials attempted passing, but Dean and Solomon smothered their transfers, and backed up by Bennetts came through with the ball at their toes. They covered 50 yards before they were checked by Burmeister. On the ball coming into play again, Milton rushed it over the line, but a five yards scrum was ordered. Jackson was penalised, but Milton failed to place a goal. South African pressed in the closing stages, but were unable to score, splendid efforts by De Melker and Marsburg being frustrated by J. Jackett, whose tackling was of a high order. Result :—

ROSSLYN PARK vs. OLD UPPINGHAMIANS.

This fixture, on the Old Deer Park at Richmond on Saturday, produced quite a good game. The Old Boys had a capital side, and Rosslyn Park, though they played the game out in an energetic and business-like manner, were quite outplayed at all points and well beaten. Much of the Park play was quite good, but the side opposed to them was a good deal too strong for them, and they consequently suffered in all respects by comparison. Though their forwards did much excellent work, the Old Boys' scrummagers nearly always got the ball, and in the loose the displayed much cleverness in their foot work. Behind them, their backs had plenty of opportunities, and they all played well together, and on each side the tacking generally was capital. Early in the game, after the Old Boys' forwards had clearly demonstrated their superiority, there was a very fine run by the whole of their three-quarter line and, the ball going out to Bower, that player forced his way over in the corner and with a beautifully judged kick, Hearson placed the goal. The Old Boys continued to do all the pressing and once Bell appeared certain to score, when Muirhead brought him down just outside in great style, but then following a long spell of exciting scrummaging dangerously near the goalposts, the Old Boys' three-quarters got going again and Bower gained another try for them, but it was not improved. Shortly before the interval Rosslyn Park, from a free-kick entered their rivals' "25" for the first time, and then, following some passing, Dixon took the ball from Devas and ran in, but Bingham failed at the place-kick. After changing ends with a balance of eight points to three against them the Roselyn Park men made a great effort to pull the game round. For a quarter of an hour they quite held their own, and all round they did much good work, but the Old Uppinghamians, however, held too much in hand. The efforts of Rosslyn Park had no chance of success against the Old Boys' resolute tackling and towards the end they were a well-beaten side. Bower scored another try for the visitors as the result of a lot of good foot work by his forwards, and Hearson kicked the goal. A few minutes later Bell got over, but Hearson's kick failed, the ball hitting one of the uprights, and shortly before the finish a long dribble by the Old Boys' forwards ended in the ball being rushed over and another try obtained, and as this was not converted, the game ended in a win for the Old Uppinghamians by two goals and three tries (19 points) to a try (3 points).

BEDFORD vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.

THE TAYLORS WELL BEATEN.

Owing to the match with the Old Bedfordians having to be abandoned, Bedford were fortunately able to fix up with the Old Merchant Taylors on Saturday, and a very interesting game took place. The home team was not quite the usual one, but still they played a splendid game, and eventually beat a strong team of the Taylors by three placed goals to nil. With regard to the refereeing a singular incident occurred. The game had been in progress some three minutes when it was discovered there was no referee. Mr. Dasent kindly gave his services until the arrival of Mr. Lincoln, who was about twenty minutes late. The visitors kicked off, and play was soon in the centre. From here Whaley got to the visitors' "25." Raphael gained possession, but in running across the field he was well tackled by Gilliland. Taylors got to the other end, but Gilliland and Atkinson quickly returned over the centre. The Taylors, however, were not to be denied, and got close on the Bedford line. Atkinson was next conspicuous with a very fine punt and finding touch at the visitors' "25." Bedford were penalised for picking out of the "scrum" and Taylors gained ground. From near the centre Poynder passed to Atkinson, and the latter cleverly passed to Franklin, and, receiving, Ward scored a brilliant try, which Read converted. Resuming, Gilliland made a magnificent run and scored, Atkinson converting. Changing over, Bedford were leading by ten points to nil. For some time after the restart play was very even until at length from near the centre Poynder broke away, and racing along the line, gave to S. R. Wells, and, receiving from the latter, Atkinson transferred to Ward, who again crossed over, and Read was successful with the kick. The Taylors got close, but Bedford gradually worked down, Manton taking Play over the centre. There was no further scoring, however, and Bedford won by three placed goals (15 points) to nil.

OLD ALLEYNIANS vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—The meeting between these clubs at Dulwich Common on Saturday was productive of an uneven game, the Nomads' form being a decided contrast to the extraordinary display by the Old Boys, who gained an easy victory by 5 goals and a try (28 points) to a try. At all points the Nomads were outplayed, particularly at three-quarters, where the brilliant work of the winners easily outmanœuvred the shaky defence of their opponents. W. V. Sherlock, the left wing three, was a prominent factor in his side's success, scoring three tries, and playing a Major part in the work that led up to the others. From the outset the Old Boys asserted their superiority, and working the scrum well, the scoring line was early dangerous, Sherlock twice crossing the Nomads' line, to witness F. G. Manvell kick the goals. A revival by the visitors was short-lived. Bishop, at full back, relieving with capital punts, and good tackling quickly neutralised any attempts at a score. Weakness by the Nomads' back was mainly responsible for the Alleynians increasing their advantage, and with L. S. Manvell and Sherlock securing converted tries, the home team were 20 points ahead at the interval.

Subsequently the leaders continued to have the best of matters, although brisk work in the loose by the Marlborough scrum, magers repeatedly threatened danger. Mitchell was the only unit of the visiting threes to show up to advantage, but Bishop proved safe. Inglis and Price-Edwards scored further tries for the Old Boys, and F. G. Manvell converted the first one, while just previous to the conclusion Mitchell gained a capital try for the losers, and the Nomads retired defeated.

SWIMMING.

THE SERPENTINE CHRISTMAS MORNING HANDICAP.—That winter swimming is increasing in popularity was fully demonstrated when it was published in the Sporting Life a few days ago that this historical event had closed with a record entry. Only so recently as 1898, the entrants numbered only 11, while this year no fewer than 59 swimmers sent in their names.

The weather was quite in keeping with the occasion, as at the time fixed for the start the thermometer registered two degrees of frost, while there was a slight north-easterly wind blowing, which certainly did not add to the comfort of the competitors, more especially after the race. However, the water was comparatively smooth and a magnificent race was witnessed Twenty-nine swimmers—more, in fact, than the new diving board could accommodate the scratch division having to line up on the bank—answered to their names and with such a large number starting in one heat great care had to be exercised both by the competitors and starter, All however, got away at their appointed time and when all were despatched on their journey, the sight was indeed a magnificent one. Every kind of stroke known to swimmers was used and as the men began to close up the excitement of the spectators knew no bounds, each urging on his own particular fancy. The judge had no easy task, as five feet would have covered the first half dozen.

Like many previous winners, Clears is a breaststroke swimmer, but at times uses a stroke between a side and a breast stroke. Up to the present he has not won any event of importance, but has been fairly successful in club events.

The second man, Searle, is another exponent of the old-fashioned breast stroke, and with a little more practice should show much improvement on the formhe exhibited yesterday.

Sydney Greenburg, who secured third prize, is a somewhat lucky swimmer, it being his happy lot to capture prizes when both himself and his friends think he has little or no chance of success.

H. L. Wetherley, the fourth man, and Tom Bradshaw, the fifth, represented the scratch and limit divisions, while the sixth swimmer was the veteran of the party, and although 75 years of age, was conceding starts to several younger men than himself.

The spectators were hardly so numerous as usual; still, sportsmen of all classes were present. Boxing was, as usual, well represented by Messrs. A. Venderhout, R. C. Warnes, R. K. Gunn (all winners of the amateur Boxing Association championships) whilst Mr. Joe Cohen (a big prop of the Lynn Boxing Club in its heyday). Mangle Hyams, Bill Watson, Arthur Stanley, and Lew Solomon were likewise in evidence. The majority of the above took a "dip." Mr. F. Clarke was, as usual, hapdicapper and starter, and Mr. Alf. Rowley judge.

At the conclusion of the race, Mr. D. J. Clears presented the prizes to the winners, the first being a sterling silver cup, the gift of Mr. J. M. Barrie. The next three received gold medals, while all who completed the distance received bronze medals.

Hunting.

KARACHI HUNT.

ON 3rd January the hounds met on the Sehwan Road, a mile beyond the New Jail. Mr. Graham commenced by drawing the rough scrub near the Pinjrapol Fields. We were not long kept in suspense. A whimper, nd then a crash of music, and the hounds were racing away in front of us towards Oomer Dosal's khete Hunting nicely together, they carried the scent through Oomer Dosal's khete, and on to the Stony Hills beyond. Here the jack turned sharp towards the river, and then back again towards the hills and then on towards Supura, but the hounds were never at fault and they finally ran into him in the open after a splendid run of 35 minutes, without a check of any kind, after rattling him through some rough scrub this side of Newman's Ruck. There was very little dew, and it was wonderful how well the hounds hunted and maintained the scent which, in places lay over the barest and most difficult of country. We were eleven miles from home, so the Master did not draw again. The meet on 6th January marked the commencement of regular hunting at Landhi.- Mrs Travers, who never misses a meet, was the only lady out. A start was made shortly after 7-30 A. M. by drawing the Bridge Wood. A jack broke away across the road from the big Banana Plantation, and gave us very pretty run across some difficult country along the Malric River. A big herd of cattle crossed the line, but the hounds never checked, and we finally lost in some thick covert opposite Thul Station at 25 minutes to nine. It was hard lines on the hounds not killing, as the jack was close in front of them when they lost. They must have passed over him in the thick grass. After several casts, we had to give him up, and then rode back towards the Corner Clump. Here two jacks were viewed away. We had a smart gallop after one—a fine dog jack—but he got into thick covert in the river bed, and we could not get him out. So the hounds were whipped off homewards at 10-30, and we repaired to the Hunt Camp to do ample justice to tub and breakfast.

SINDHI.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

THERE has been little or nothing to chronicle in the runs recently, last week's runs being very poor. On the 30th December there was no scent and the morning was close and muggy. Hounds met at the Lattia Bridge and the Master drew the casuarina coverts on Fox Hill, failing to find until nearly 8 o'clock. Then at last hounds got on to a line. This proved cold at first, but hounds puzzled it out and at one time were quite close to their jack. But even then they were never able to really run and after about half an hour's slow and unattractive hunting, they lost him. The first meet of this year was at Saidapet and was absolutely blank, being the second blank day of the season. On Sunday, the 6th instant, however, conditions were better and sport was good, in spite of the fact that scent was catching and hounds worked under difficulties. The meet was at St. Thomas's Mount and, as usual, the Master drew on to Sheepshead. The line of a jack was picked up almost immediately and after running a ring round the covert he broke at the Mount end and crossed the maidan straight for the Cantonment, where he went to ground under some rocks close to the Barracks. This was a cheerful gallop, but never at any time fast. The jack's stronghold proved impregnable, so we trotted back to Sheepshead, but discovered that this time it held nothing. The Master then drew on up the river bank and near the place where we killed the last time hounds were out in this direction we met a jack, which jumped up in the paddy not 20 yards in front of the hounds and dived down into a neighbouring patch of jungle. Hounds had not got a view of him and judging by the way they picked up the line, scent was indifferent. However they soon proved that they could hunt him and they did. At first he was determined to stick to the jungle, running short and twisting all over the place, but at last he broke towards Pallavaram and after running a wide ring he returned to covert. Again we bustled him round until he decided to quit and this time he set his mark straight for Pallavaram. Then followed a most enjoyable gallop. Crossing the Pallavaram Road near the first hill, he swung towards the Mount for some distance, then crossed the Railway and took a line across the Rifle range, over beautiful going along the foot of the hills. Eventually, he took to the hills and thus destroyed all chance of a kill. Fresh jacks were about, but hounds managed to hold the line for a long way over the hills, till they eventually lost him

It was a good hunt and if blood was wanting there was the satisfaction of knowing that a good jack lived to run another day and that we may meet him again this season. He was no doubt the same jack who took us much the same line six weeks ago. The cold weather this year seems to be a failure; there is no morning dew and so long as that remains the case scent is never likely to be good.
