REFORMING THE THOROUGHBRED.

THE experiment which Captain Park is organising under the patronage of the Board of Agriculture, but at his own charges, is one which will be watched with keen interest by all who have at heart the future of the horse. The experiment is to be conducted on "Mendelian principles;" in other words, on lines which practical breeders have long recognised as the only lines from which satisfactory results can be expected; and were applied to the horse at a period when Mendel was still in his cradle—and before he arrived there. Captain Park's exceedingly sound idea is that it is still possible to build up on a basis of thoroughbred blood a race of weight-carrying hunters; or let us say, a breed which shall possess all the desirable qualities of the weight-carrying hunter. He hopes to be able to erect a strain which may be relied on to breed true to type and be of such "fixed" character that it will prove dominant when crossed with other animals. The difficulty of the work lies in the forefront; for generations now, the average thoroughbred has been wanting in the very qualities it is sought to restore; he has been bred for speed and speed only; he has been developed into a tall and leggy animal lacking stamina and power to carry weight; early training has made him unsound and predisposed him to all the ills that equine flesh is heir to; and it is from this race that the enterprising [illegible]r of the experiment has to select his [illegible]ck. Then another grave obstacle [illegible]ential in his—let us call [illegible] jumping power. Now there [illegible] first rate thoroughbred chas[illegible]ows the majority of great st[illegible] geldings; whether those attained [illegible] because they were cut, or would have made their mark if left as Nature made them is an interesting point, but one we are not now concerned to discuss; we have to deal with the fact that "jumping blood" in thoroughbred circles is extremely scarce because horses of proved talent across country are unable, for the most part, to perpetuate their kind. Nevertheless inherent jumping power is to be found on the female side which, in this connection, we believe to be quite as important as the other; and given a stallion or two moderate of height, sound in constitution, and if possible, of limb, on the one side; and good mares with jumping power on the other, there is the best reason to suppose that Captain Park's plans will be crowned with success. It must of course be a matter of time; it is impossible to undo in three generations what has been assidnously cultivated for a dozen or more; but the promoter of the reformed thoroughbred scheme has this very potent factor on his side—he is working back to Nature whereas breeders of racehorses hitherto have been working against Nature.

After all we need not look so far back in horse history to find a breed which, if not exactly the breed which it is now sought to erect, performed just those functions which Captain Park properly thinks the useful horse ought to perform. In pre-Victorian days England had a genuine breed of weight-carrying hunters which bred true to type and could be relied upon to impress their qualities on a cross. These horses were the natural adjunct of foxhunting as followed by our ancestors in an age when fields were small and stallions were ridden to hounds as a matter of course. Inevitably the stallion that carried his rider conspicuously well to hounds was in demand as a sire; thus the qualities of jumping and carrying weight with the equally desirable ability to last through a long and hard day became inherent qualities of the breed.

How much or how little the racehorses of the time had to do with the creation of this now lost breed must remain a matter of conjecture; we know that horses which succeeded on the turf were put to "country mares" as they were called to distinguish them from "blood" mares, and there is good reason to think that the old, stout breed of hunter boasted a fairly strong infusion of thoroughbred blood—of "blood," as the phraseology of the time had it. But we must bear in mind that the racehorse of that period was a very different animal from his prototype of to-day; "improvement," as the turf understands improvement, had not yet begun; the Georgian racehorse was required to run over longer distances, and ofttimes under heaver weights than he has been for very many years past; moreover, he was frequently required to run two, three, or it might often happen, more heats in an afternoon. The gulf between the racehorse which could do that and the contemporary hunter was far less wide than the gulf between the racehorse and the hunter of our own day. Such crossing would give increased speed without impairing, without any sacrifice of, those qualities which made the old-time hunter the horse he was.

Now, in effect it is just such a horse as this old-time hunter that Captain Park seeks to develop on a basis of thoroughbred blood. We believe the thing can be done: he has already got together the nucleus of his stud and the student of Home racing affairs will recognise in the names those of animals which are associated with success on the steeplechase course. The material in a word, is there and it only remains to use it wisely; that the scheme is in very practical hands is proved by the intention to train and race. This intention indicates that only those animals which acquit themselves with credit in actual work will be selected to carry on the reformed breed. Men there be—the orthodox speak of them in undertones—who would cast all stud-books upon the fire and choose the parents of future generations of horseflesh by the light of performance, regarding parentage as a thing of naught. The new scheme obviously does not flout the virtues of parentage in this sense; but it applies, and we hope remorselessly, the science of Eugenics which ordains the use of the fittest and of the fittest only to perpetuate their kind; the fittest, let us repeat, as chosen by performance. The fact that the supply of suitable material is so small need not daunt; it means that progress must be slow but the fact also involves necessity for using the material with discretion. A few generations hence if things go on as at present and all our thoroughbreds will trace back to Eclipse, all other lines having died out, the scions of other lines of blood diminishing in number steadily. Thus it may happen that in the remote future the reformed thoroughbred will be traced back to, say, Perigord. There is much to encourage hope in the success which has followed endeavour to create the Polo pony breed; here we have a striking instance of the celerity with which an animal of desired type can be evolved by the judicious blending of different strains of blood. As a breed the Polo pony is a creation of yesterday; it is still in the making; but try it not too highly and it breeds true to type. It is permissible to conjecture that the reformed breed Captain Park aims at will gain constancy—by which we would be understood to mean power to impress unfailingly its likeness—sooner than a breed erected out of mixed foundation stock. Impressiveness, as we need hardly remark, comes with the age of a breed; put a thoroughbred to a light mare of no particular ancestry and the sire's influence on the progeny will be marked: put an Arab to a similar mare and the Arab type will be yet more strongly marked. It is the antiquity of the race that tells; the longer a breed has been kept pure the stronger its influence on the crossbred it begets. The antiquity of the British thoroughbred is as nothing compared with that of the pure Arab, but it is old enough to make itself strongly felt. Without expecting too great things of this experiment in our own time, it may prove of the very highest importance to posterity.

THE ENGLISH FOOTBALL CUP.

London, Wednesday, 24th April.

The final between West Bromwich Albion and Barnsley, which had ended in a draw, was replayed this afternoon at Sheffield when Barnsley were victorious by a goal to nil. West Bromwich were most prominent in the first half and on changing ends there was little to choose between the teams. Time arrived with a clean sheet but in the extra period after West Bromwich had missed a chance Barnsley got through and scored the only goal of the game:—

1871-2—Wanderers beat Royal Engineers (1—0).
1872-3—Wanderers beat Oxford University (2—0).
1873-4—Oxford University beat Royal Engineers (2—0).
1875-6—Wanderers beat Old Etonians (3—0) after a draw.
1876-7—Wanderers beat Oxford University (2—0) after an extra half-hour.

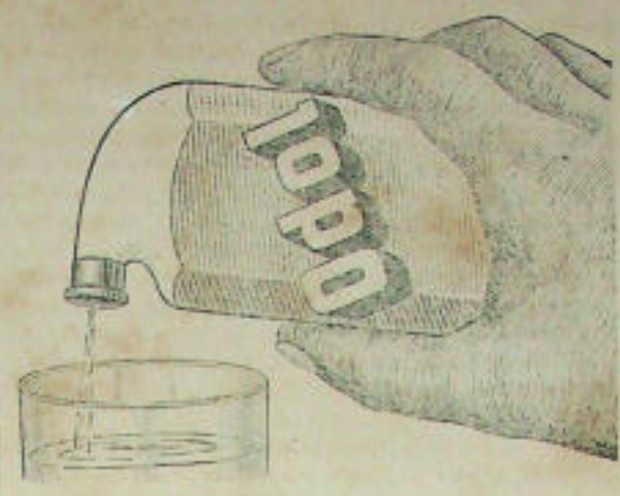
Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE followers of the favourite in the City and Suburban must, we fear, to-day be sadder and wiser men for Mushroom, who won this race last year, had been well backed all through the past fortnight though on the day before the race there was good money also for Ultimus, Moscato and Lonawand and the four of them were all within a few points of one another in the betting returns. Mushroom was quoted at sixes, Ultimus at 13 to 2, Moscato at 8 to 1 and Lonawand at 9 to 1 and of these, so far as we can tell at present from the information wired out by our correspondent, Moscato was as well backed as anything on the day as his final price is signalled as 6 to 1. Mr. R. Mills' four-year-old Chili II started at 24 to 1 and his last price quoted previous to that was 100 to 6, so that he went out on the day when the money came for the favourites and probably did not carry much more than the stable money, for there was not much inducement to the general public to back a not particularly well performed outsider. As a three-year-old Chilli II run thirteen times and won twice, his second victory being gained at the very back end of last season, the occasion being the Three-Year-Old Hurdle Race at Hurst Park in which he beat a useful little horse in Perisaint, at one time mentioned as a possible "for India;" Arctic Belle ran third and Warfare, Luiggi II, Field Mistress, etc., were amongst the other runners. Just previous to that he had run third in the one-mile Markeaton Plate at Derby to Beaurepaire and Rochester and there was a fairly good field behind the placed ones, including as it did horses like St. Mebruan, Sir Martin, Pietri, St. Felicien, St. Bruno, Bannockburn, Duke Michael, St. Nat, etc. He was fourth in the Peveril of the Peak Plate (1 mile) at Derby to that good colt Whisk Broom, Sun Spot and Mustapha from each of whom he was getting a big lump of weight and My Collar, Avernus, Sobieski, Endover were amongst those behind him. He was fifth in the Lewes Handicap to Forest Lassie, Anchora, Irish King and Lavonia and he was second in the Royal Handicap, 1 mile 60 yards, at Sandown to Eblis who was giving him 2lb. and beat him a short head only, Islington Green running third. Chilli II ran third in the London Cup, 1 mile 2 furlongs, to Merry Task 9st., Anchora 8st. 6lb., his own weight 7st. 11lb. close up and Protestant Boy, Donnez Moi, Abattis, Wise Mason, etc, were amongst those behind the placed ones. He won the Holiday Handicap, 1 mile, at Hurst Park with 6st. 8lb., beating Take Care 7st. 12lb. and Eblis 7st. 2lb. He started in the Derby Cup, finished down the course and was never near the front. Just prior to that he had run second in the Salisbury Cup, 1½ mile, with 6st. 12lb. to Jordon 7st. 7lb., Bachelor's Charm, Les Ormes, Victory, Specifical, and Accisia being the others, but his other performances last season were of no account. He was out a good many times as a two-year-old and was placed five times and won twice his victories being the Abergavenny Stakes at Lewis, beating Bustler and Mind the Step, and the Lewes Nursery Handicap which he won from Almond Rock and Lady Jones. He is a nicely bred one, as Chelys is by Chelandry and Ayrshire is by Hampton out of Atalanta by Galopin out of Feronia by Thormanby out of Woodbine by Stockwell.

MR. E. HULTON, who owns Lomond, the Derby colt, is the owner of Lonawand who ran second. He is a five-year-old by Cupbearer out of St. Flora and F. Wootton, who will ride Lomond in the Derby, had the ride on him in the City and Suburban. Last season Lonawand won the Durdans Plate, 1 mile 2 furlongs 66 yards, at Epsom with 8st. 3lb., beating Mustapha 9st. and St. Felicien 7st. and a good field of ten others and he was placed second in the Grosvenor Cup at Liverpool to Protestant Boy to whom he was conceding 16lb., Sir Martin being third. He won four races as a three-year-old, his principal success having been the Kingsclere Stakes, 1¼ mile, at Newbury, when he beat Rosedrop, Merry Jack and King of the Wavelets.



MR. W. M. G. SINGER'S Moscato by Marco out of Cellaret was, as already noted, much fancied for this contest earlier in the proceedings and they seem to have stuck very staunchly to him up to the last. Many people will remember him with not exactly blessings as the hot favourite that went down before Sponsor in the last Newbury Summer Cup, for which he started at 7 to 4 on well backed and was donkey-licked two furlongs from home by an 8 to 1 chance to whom he was only asked to give away a pound. Just prior to his defeat he had won the Royal Hunt Cup at Ascot, beating Long Set and Spanish Prince, the representatives of the all conquering tribe of Joel, Braxted, Eudorus, Mercutio, Lonawand, Brandimintime, St. Felicien, etc., etc., being amongst the good field he had behind him. As a four-year-old he did not win but he ran up to Ulster King in the Princess of Wales' Stakes in which race Admiral Hawke was third and he was also second in the Durdans Plate at Epsom when Southannan won and Electric was third, Phaleron, Temnos, etc. being amongst the also rans.

THERE is very little further news concerning the Derby (run 5th June) but private advices which we have received from Home say that Lomond and Wootton are considered to be good enough goods to stand on in spite of the smart gallop that White Star has put up at home. When Wootton went on board-ship in Bombay it was said that he was a good deal over 9st. 4lb. and after the easy time of it that he had in India we are not surprised, but it is said that on boardship he put in a lot of hard work and that when he arrived in London he was down to 8st. 7lbs. 1 If this is so Wootton must have been more fortunate than most persons during the enforced idleness that a long sea voyage entails and he must have hit upon some wonderful recipe for getting rid of the adipose from which he suffered when he was last seen riding in Calcutta and Bombay. He expects to be able to ride as light as ever he did, but no one who saw him performing in India expected anything of the kind as the distinguished youth was, not to put too fine a point on it, as fat as a pat of butter, and did not look like training off. It is now, however, we believe settled that he steers Lomond in his big engagement at Epsom next month and White Star presumably will be ridden by George Stern who piloted Sunstar to victory in last year's Derby.

THE only colt that Reuter wires as having been backed since last intimation was sent is Sir Ernest Cassell's Cylgad by Cyllene out of Gadfly, for although a list of a couple of dozen horses is wired to a weekly contemporary it is fair to presume that only about half of them have even been enquired about and that the returns are of the "every 'oss a figure" order! Cylgad was well thought of as a two-year-old, but he on more than one occasion gave unmistakeable signs of having a "pain in his temper" and was ticketted as unreliable. The rest he has had during the winter may possibly have caused an amelioration and helped him to forget his dislike of a race-course. If he is half as good as the three other Cyllenes, who have won the Derby he will do and he is bred on very similar lines to Lemberg. Cicero 1905 was the first of Cyllene's progeny to win a Derby. The next was His late Majesty's Minoru in 1909, and "Mr. Fairie's" Lemberg won in 1910. Cyllene is by Bonavista (Ben d' Or—Vista) out of Arcadia (Isonomy—' istant Shore). Distant Shore was by Hermit out of Land's End. Cylgad ran six times last season, winning once and being placed on four occasions. He won the Breeders' Foal Stakes, 6 furlongs, at Kempton Park, beating Donnithorne and Grey Laura. He was second in the Prendergast Stakes at the Newmarket 2nd October to Charmian; Kempion was third and Aiglon, Halberd, etc., amongst the also-rans. In the Dewhurst Plate he was third to White Star and Lorenzo the colt that is at present quoted at 25 to 1 for the Guineas run Wednesday, the 1st May.

SIR PETER WALKER'S six-year-old mare Accurate by Pericles out of Accuracy who won the Great Metropolitan at the Epsom Meeting only won twice last season and was unplaced upon six other occasions. Her victories were the Bromfield Hurdle Race (the jumpers by the way have so far made formidable incursions into the "legitimate" arena as this is the second hurdler to score in a big race inside of a very short period of time, Chili II, the City and Suburban winner, also being a recruit from the Lepping Division) at Ludlow in which she beat Bloodstone, the runner up in the Grand National and Santea: and the Lancashire Handicap, 1 mile 6 furlongs, at Liverpool in which she beat Subterranean and the Chimera gelding by Florizel II., Clannish, Apache, Papavero, Victory, etc., etc., being amongst the defeated, Accurate won twice on the flat as a four-year-old. The Alexandra Handicap, 1¼ mile, at "Allypally" beating Larkspur and Victory and the Salisbury Cup, 1¼ mile, beating Darriden and Himan. She ran third in the Derby Cup, 1 mile 6 furlongs, to Columbus and Merry Task and she also ran third in the Manchester November Handicap, 1½ mile, to The Valet and Anchora, a very good field indeed being behind the placed horses, including as it did Tweedledum, Admiral Togo III, Pillo, Apache, Sealed Orders, Atty, Toyshop, Demosthenes, etc. She is therefore a well-performed one and Sir Peter Walker probably had a good win as she was obviously backed, her S.P. having been 4 to 1.

Scrubbing the surface of the teeth with powders or pastes does not thoroughly cleanse them; it leaves their condition, and that of the mouth unimproved.

What the teeth and mouth need is Odol, which antiseptically purifies the mouth, and, being liquid, penetrates even the minutest cracks and crevices, cleansing every part of all the teeth, —not merely where they show.

at the moment is the only outlet for the sporting aspirations of the racing "knuts," would seem to be excellent. Lansdown took up Circus Girl from Calcutta last week for "Mr. Valentine," who has now a big string located in Mr. Galstaun's stables in Circular Road; R. Morrison has Portland and Lady Anne for Mr. P. C. Lall of Purneah; Charlotte, Mr. Shillingford's mare, is up there, so are Melody, Spec, Waterlily, Winning Ways, Nun Nicer, Rita, Lorgnette, Marco, Comedy, Flash and several others. Both Mr. Evers and Major Ormond Winter are probably going up to ride and a very cheery little gathering is anticipated—that is to say if ever one can gamble upon any race meeting being cheery for, as one knows, the racing "knuts" do not always, like little birds in their nests, agree and from what a certain bird whispers to us of the meeting at Lebong last Poojahs there was plenty of material for warfare! Lebong is never likely to be licensed as a racecourse as it is far too small and confined and the contests decided there can hardly be dignified by being called races! They nevertheless form a pleasing interlude in the monotony of a hill station existence and are therefore eagerly availed of by many. Gee, Morrison, Lansdown, Manley and various light weight native boys are to be found hard at it most mornings on the little soup plate of a course and during the past week there has been a good deal of galloping done. H.E. the Governor lunches with the Colonel and officers of the 2nd Middlesex Regiment on the 7th, the day upon which the Governor's Cup is run, and H.E. will, we hear, be present on the other days of the meeting also.

Mr. Kenworthy, who has been appointed Adjutant of H.E. the Governor's Bodyguard and who owns Sholto amongst other horses, has been riding a good many winners at the recent Wellington Meeting and on the third day on the 25th April he did the hat trick by winning three races. He owned the winner of the Ootacamund Cup and he was third in that race on his own horse Sholto who started favourite and was beaten by his own stable companion and also by H.H. the Maharajah of Mysore's Harebell. Captain Caryll Annesley also comes to this staff and he and Mr. Kenworthy ought to be very valuable additions to the ranks of the local Corinthians, as they are both above the average, and Mr. Kenworthy is very keen on riding over fences. He will have plenty of chances here.

Now that we are within measureable distance of the Calcutta Autumn Racing Season and shall next month begin to see things taking some shape with the opening of the Tollygunge Club Meetings, the light artillery of the more important engagements at the Monsoons, we venture to suggest that the moment is opportune for seeing whether Monsoon steeplechasing in a mild form might not be possible. We have good reasons for believing that if the Stewards of the C.T.C. approached the present Government of this Province with an application for permission to erect the few additional obstacles on the monsoon course that would suffice to give us a possible chase course, they would be accorded a most sympathetic hearing and at any rate we deem the experiment to be well worth trying. The cards for the Monsoon Meetings are now in the making and it would be an excellent beginning if a project that has long been under consideration and that has been frequently advocated in the press be given a trial if even one or two steeplechases could be arranged for. There is already the nucleus of a chase course in Calcutta and the very small additions now necessary would not be by any means difficult of arrangement. Once let it be seen that steeplechasing in Calcutta itself is a practical possibility and more than half the difficulty is overcome. Personally we are not prepared to admit that any such difficulty exists and we have a robust belief that if once it were practically demonstrated that a very good steeplechase course is obtainable, the affair would "walk." Whilst on the subject of jump-racing in the Monsoons we again desire to direct attention to the desirability of lengthening the distances of all the hurdle races and of slightly rearranging the course. At present the Monsoon hurdle races are far too short and it would be an immense improvement and would provide better racing were they made two-mile contests instead of races over a short one and a half mile. The run-in from the last obstacle and the approach to the first one are both too short. If the distances were sensibly lengthened both these existing disadvantages could be overcome without much difficulty and with solid advantage to the competitors. A minor matter, but still an important one, is the angle at which the wings on the various obstacles are placed. Last year there was one very bad accident, which resulted fatally to a horse, and there were other instances of horses running out at the hurdles. The reason for these occurrences is that the wings are not swung out sufficiently and are at a too acute angle to the alignment of the obstacles. The result is that a horse who holds a position close on the wing sees very little before him but a high white post as he gets the wing almost end on. If they were swung slightly more outwards this would not be the case and there would be no inducement to the average horse to try and cut "it" in the last few strides. Some of the best of jumpers will often try this on when they are either distressed or are beginning to feel the severity of the pace.

We observe some entertaining observations on the Grand National in The Weekly Telegraph in which the Aintree fences come in for a good deal of unskilled criticism. To begin with the writer in that paper attempts to compare Lottery's Grand National with the race of to-day. The course over which Lottery won, pace this commentator, was not the same as the course of to-day. Becher's Brook and Valentine's Brook are described as the "dreaded" obstacles "with a wide ditch in front of each towering hedge"! There are no ditches in front of either of these obstacles. The ditches, small 6ft. wide ones, are on the landing side and neither of these fences are as formidable as they were when Captain Becher first gave his name to the former of them. They are also by no means the most formidable obstacles on the course. Any of these "regulations" take far more doing, especially that called "The Chair" by reason of its being situated at the Old Distance Post where the Distance Judge's chair for heat races still stands. There is also no fence on the Aintree course as high as the hat of even a short man, because the highest fence in the programme is only 5ft. and a great number of the obstacles are under this height, so that unless the man were a pigmy he could be seen over them even without his hat on!! It is these well-meaning critics who have probably only seen Aintree through a pair of race-glasses who convey a totally erroneous idea of the famous course and its fences.

An international Horse Society is being formed in Cairo for preserving the pure bred Arab horse, which is so essential for improving and renovating the different breeds of the whole world.

The many changes that have taken place and are still going on in the lives and habits of the Bedouins of the Syrian and Arabian Deserts, are producing a fatal effect on the Arab horse which is gradually diminishing in numbers and deteriorating in quality.

Buyers of pure bred Arab horses, whether they be private individuals or representatives of Government studs, complain rightly of the yearly increasing difficulties :

(1) in getting first class Arab horses.

(2) of being certain of the purity of their origin. To meet this great demand, the Society intends arranging annual shows and auction sales at which they will be able to offer first class representatives of the Arab horse for the purity of which they will certify.

Consequently the aims of the Society are :—

(10) Starting a Stud Book of the Arab horse, containing two parts, the first to include only the pure bred or of desert origin horse, the second to be open to all Eastern horses, so called.

In Europe it is generally supposed that horses bred in Egypt, Syria, Asiatic Turkey, Algiers, etc., are all pure bred Arab, this however is a fallacy, for only a very small percentage of the above named breeds can claim that distinction, the remainder, which are called by "Eastern horses," having all, in a greater or lesser degree, an infusion of various alien breeds. The pure bred Arab is to be found only :

(a) among the different Bedouin tribes roaming over the Arabian and Syrian Deserts and Mesopotamia and in Nejd.

(b) in a few private studs of Egypt.

(c) in 3 or 4 studs in Europe.

(20) To establish annual shown and auction sales at Cairo for pure bred Arab horses and Eastern horses.

(30) To encourage Arab horse breeding in Egypt, the country which is the most adapted to that purpose, as it possesses all the essentials necessary to ensure success in rearing the Arab horse, viz., dry desert air and hard dry ground, a hot even climate, and practically speaking no rainfall. All these conditions make it possible to keep both mares and produce all the year round in the open, without shelter of any kind and thus ensure their retaining that hardiness of constitution, those clean strong legs and wonderfully sound lungs, which are the principal characteristics of the Arab horse

Egypt is also most favourably situated as a central rallying point for the Arab horse, being close to the Arabian peninsula and Syrian Desert, and at no great distance from Bombay, Koweit and Mosul, the two latter towns the principal markets and export ports of Arab horses to India. The Society intends sending in May a commission, to buy horses from the Bedouin tribes of the Syrian and Arabian Deserts ; it wishes also to enter into communication with the horse merchants of Koweit, Mosul and Bombay, to induce them to send to Cairo, for the show, some first class Arab stallions. It would be highly desirable at the same time to get the private and Government studs of Europe to send their pure bred Arab horses, so as to gather together as large a choice as possible for intending buyers.

Arab blood is essential for improving and renovating other breeds, but the thoroughbred Arab has neither the height nor the substance necessary for heavy weight riding horses nor for carriage horses. The best all round horse for riding, driving and military purposes is, undubitably, the Anglo-Arab, Arabs crossed with cart hoses have given the best of results as, i.e., the Boulonnais, the Percheron, and the Russian Orloff trotter, which latter is the descendant of an Arab stallion and a Danish mare.

To demonstrate at the show the utility of crossing pure bred Arabs with other breeds it is purposed to have classes for those breeds which trace back their origin to such crosses or have been periodically recrossed again with Arabs. Such are :—

1st. The Russian Strelets breed, the Cossak and the Rastopchine horses.

2nd. The French Anglo-Arabs.

3rd. The Hungarian horses.

These classes would prove how enduring the Arab blood is when used judicially, for, notwithstanding that, in some cases, many decades have past since this crossing was made, the descendants still retain the best characteristics of the Arab horses.

To demonstrate further the suitability of the Arab horse for military purposes it would be advisable to organise during the show long distance (80-100 kilometres) races with officer riders in full marching equipment. To these races ought to be invited light cavalry officers from all European countries, also Russian Cossacks, Australian and American Rough Riders.

It would further the new Society a great deal if it succeeded in obtaining the co-operation of Khedivial Sporting Club in Cairo and Heliopolis, the Committee of the International Horse Show at Olympia, the Societe du Cheval de Guerre in France, the Russian Societe des Concours Hippiques, and the Committee of the International Horse Show in Vienna.

On the 9th ultimo at Anerley there died John Charles Daley, a well-known jockey forty years ago. He rode Hermit to victory in the Derby of 1867. As long ago as 1859 Daley rode Maid of Kent first home in the Stewards' Cup at Goodwood. He won the Goodwood Stakes in 1861 on Lord Coventry's Elcho and again in the following year on Boabdil. In 1865 he won the Ascot Stakes on Baron Rothschild's Tomato, and it was two years later when he brought off the double event, the Derby and the Oaks. The race for the Blue Riband was one of the most sensational ever recorded. Vauban, owned by the Duke of Beaufort, was a hot favourite at 6 to 4, with Mr. Chaplin's Hermit quoted at 1,000 to 15 or 66 to 1. Before reaching the distance the finish seemed to be left to Vauban, Marksman and Van Amburgh, the latter going so well that loud shouts proclaimed his success. Within the half distance, however, Van Amburgh had shot his bolt and was displaced by Hermit. Less than a hundred yards from the post Daley challenged on Hermit who stride by stride gained on his opponents and won by a neck from Marksman, with Vauban placed third. Two days later Daley won the Oaks for Baron Rothschild on Hippia. Daley won many other races of importance including the Two Thousand Guineas in 1870 on Mr. Merry's Macgregor. For many years he trained at Hoppegarten, Berlin, with considerable success.

Much sympathy has been expressed in sporting circles with Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt on the destruction of his hopes of winning the English Derby with Montrose II. The horse looked well in the paddock at Maisons-Laffitte, says the Paris correspondent of the Sporting Life, when stripped for the Prix Legrange, in which he was beaten by Shannon, after running brilliantly for a mile.

After the race a veterinary examination revealed the fact that the horse was suffering in his respiratory organs, and later in the evening the operation of tracheotomy was performed on him. It is said, therefore, that there is little likelihood of his fulfilling any "classic" engagements, with the possible exception of the French Two Thousand Guineas, run on 19th May.

Messrs Jos Lee's prices on the Derby previous to the running of the 2,000 guineas were :—

2 to 1 White Star.
4 to 1 Lomond.
10 to 1 Hall Cross.
10 to 1 Sweeper.
10 to 1 Cylgad.
14 to 1 Aiglon.
14 to 1 Charmian.
14 to 1 Coriander.
14 to 1 Lom.
14 to 1 Jingling Geordie.
15 to 1 Lorenzo.
20 to 1 and longer odds the others.

All discussions as to why the 'Varsity Boat Race was re-rowed this year are settled by the official signed statement of the umpire, Mr. F. I. Pitman, in the Field. He says :—

The agreement under which the University Boat Race is rowed was embodied in a memorandum by Colonel F. Willan in 1889. The terms of the agreement are as follows :—

The race shall be rowed under the Laws of Boat Racing except as hereafter provided.

1. If before the crews reach the Bishop's Creek (now the top of the wall) any serious accident should happen in either boat which, in the opinion of the umpire, is not due to the fault of any individual member of the crew, the umpire shall have power to recall and restart the crews.

2. . . . (a clause dealing with outside obstructions now included in the revised rules of racing). ...

3. Appeals during the race to be made by the oarsman or crew concerned holding up his or their hands.

4. Both boats shall pass through the centre arches of Hammersmith and Barnes Bridges, the crew failing to comply with this rule shall be ipso facto disqualified.

As a good deal of discussion has arisen as to the facts of Saturday's race and my ruling, it may be of interest and save misunderstanding if I make a statement dealing with them.

Both crews started in very rough water, and by the time they had rowed a very few strokes had shipped a large amount of water. Cambridge sank just before Harrod's Wharf, Oxford did the same before reaching Chiswick Eyot.

Oxford having emptied their boat then started on to row to the finish. I consider that a position arose which is not exactly dealt with by the rules of racing.

I may say at once that, even if Oxford received extraneous assistance, this question did not enter my head, and my decision was not based on Rule XIV. I am of opinion that I had full power to act under Rule XVII.

I do not wish to lay down the law that under no circumstances is a crew who is swamped entitled to re-enter its boat, but in this case both crews had been waterlogged from the start, and had sunk through no fault of their own, and the race could not be decided by waiting to see which crew could scramble back into its boat and get to the winning post first. I do not think I should have been right in allowing Oxford to complete the course, and I had no alternative but to at once inform them, as I did at Chiswick, that I ruled that it was "No Race."

No one regrets the result more than I do, but I venture to think that my decision was in accordance with the best traditions of English rowing.

Among the passengers on the ill-fated Titanic was Charles Williams, the English Racket Champion, who was on his way to New York to meet George Standing in a match for the world's championship. The first rubber was to have been played on the 29th ultimo in New York and the second at Prince's Club, London, on 1st June. It has not yet been ascertained whether Williams was among those saved.

The dates of the Jubbulpore Autumn Meeting will be 17th and 19th October; the Simla Summer Races have been fixed for 1st, 5th and 8th June, and the Mussoorie Open Gymkhana for 9th and 11th May. The Mussoorie Polo tournament begins on the 10th instant.

It is extraordinary how vague is the knowledge of things Eastern among people at home. We note that P. L. Roy, the Bengalee boxer from St. Paul's, London, who recently won the Public Schools' Feather-weight Championship at Aldershot, has been branded as a Siamese by the leading London boxing weekly! It is all the same, we suppose, to the staff of the journal in question—Bengalee or Siamese, Tibetan or Malay!

Sam McVea and Sam Langford fought their return battle at the Sydney Stadium on the 8th April in the presence of 15,000 people and this time Langford won on points, thus reversing his defeat by McVea on Boxing Day. Langford having objected to "Snowy" Baker as referee, the bout was supervised by Mr. Arthur Scott and there were no judges. Betting at the start was 10 to 9 on McVea. The following brief details of the fight appear in a London exchange.

McVea opened with a left to the face, Langford retaliating with left and right. McVea replied with repeated lefts to the head and Langford got in a left to the body. The fighting throughout the opening round was at a great pace. McVea had the best of it.

Second Round—Langford landed three heavy rights to the body in a clinch which caused McVea to protest. McVea got in a left to the face, but Langford then attacked fiercely. Langford's round.

At this point the police barred the kidney punch in clinches.

Third Round.—McVea placed a left to the face, Langford replying with a right to the body and lefts to the jaw. Again Langford's round.

The betting now veered to 5 to 4 on Langford.

Fifth Round.—Langford got in heavy lefts to the mouth, bringing blood, while McVea landed a left and right to the body. Both men were hitting in the clinches, and the referee was busy separating them. Langford's round.

Sixth Round.—Langford placed a right to the kidneys, but overbalancing slipped to the floor. He rose slowly, but his opponent did not attack, and Langford appreciating the courtesy, shook hands with him. McVea got in a solid left to the jaw and had the best of the round.

Seventh Round.—Langford opened with a heavy left to the jaw, and McVea clinched. He was palpably shaken, and the referee was unable to separate them, Langford meanwhile desperately trying to fight his opponent off.

Eighth Round.—Langford put in a left to the body, rushed McVea to the ropes, and narrowly missed a right upper-cut. McVea replied with a right on the mouth, bringing blood. McVea again clinched, Langford hitting him again and again amid applause. Langford's round.

Ninth Round.—Honours even.

Honours were once more even in the eleventh round, McVea landing with the left to the head, and Langford with the left and right also to the head; and the 12th, 13th, and 14th rounds showed no distinct advantage for either man. There were occasional rallies in which Langford continued to be aggressive, and McVea boxed cleverly.

The 15th and 16th rounds were slightly in favour of McVea. Langford's right eyebrow showed signs of puffiness.

In the 17th round both feinted, awaiting an opening. McVea ducked cleverly, and the round, which ended in a clinch, was even.

The 18th and 19th rounds were uneventful, the fast pace of the early rounds telling upon their endurance.

In the 20th round both tried to get in an upper-cut with the right, and McVea tried for a knock-out blow, which Langford smilingly evaded.

On time being called the referee gave his decision in favour of Langford and the announcement was unanimously approved by the crowd.

The mail brings us news of the success of two South African boxers now in England. Fred Storbeck met Jim Johnson, the coloured heavy weight, at the Liverpool Stadium, a twenty-round contest ending in favour of Storbeck, on points. Jim. Johnson was handicapped by an injury to his thumb which was broken in his fight with Tom Cowler the week before. Geo. Rodel, a couple of nights later beat Jewey Smith, the Aldgate boxer and once an aspirant to heavy weight championship honours. It was a ten-round contest, the South African winning rather a tame affair.

Jim Sullivan, the holder of the Lonsdale Belt for the middle weight championship of Great Britain, has decided not to defend his title against Jack Harrison of Rushden, having made up his mind to retire from the ring for good. The Belt has been returned to the National Sporting Club and will be fought for by the winner of the Ellis-McEnroy match and Jack Harrison the challenger.

Young Josephs has met with yet another defeat. This time at the hands of Johnny Summers, who beat him on points in a twenty-round contest at the Liverpool Stadium.

Matt Wells, the English light-weight champion met Packey McFarland, the Chicago boy in a ten-round match at New York on the 27th ultimo, McFarland winning easily on points.

Tommy Burns, the ex-heavy-weight-world's champion is evidently sincere in his intention to get back into the fighting game, for he has posted a forfeit of $1,000 with a sporting editor of a newspaper at Alberta and issued a challenge to fight Jack Johnson for the heavy-weight championship of the world in a 20-round bout to take place on Labour Day at any place Johnson selects.

First entries for the Mysore and Bangalore Races close on the 1st May, and the sporting public are looking forward to them with unusual interest, in view of the restrictions placed on racing in Western India.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The "unfortunates" who have left to sweat in the station during the hot weather, are determined to have some sport on their own account, and Mr. Bates, of the 7th (Q. O.), has just issued a programme for an American Polo Tournament, to be played here from the 6th to 17th of May. Four teams have entered for it and they are composed as follows:—

The Beighton Cup Hockey Tournament was brought to a conclusion on Tuesday evening, when the Customs met the Medicals in the final and defeated them by 4 goals to nil. Details of the game will be found in the usual column. The Customs thus won the Beighton trophy and the Cup presented this year by Messrs. B. H. Smith and Co. They have also carried off the 1st Division League Cup. The League 2nd division has been won by the Port Commissioners' team.

No. 1 Cyclist Company, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, wound up their season with a Mess Dinner at the head-quarters on Thursday, the 25th ultimo. There was a big gathering of members and their friends who spent a most enjoyable evening. The catering was in the hands of the Palace Hotel, and after an excellent dinner and the loyal toast, the prizes won during the season were distributed by Colonel Binning. The list is as follows:—

A musical programme was then discussed. There was an abundance of talent present and many excellent items were contributed, while several of the guests helped in the harmony of the evening. No. 1 Cyclist Company have done especially good work this season, and in addition to their efficiency as Volunteers a feature of the corps is the good fellowship among its members. This is largely due to the cheery personality of their popular "skipper" who works so hard for the credit of the Company and the interests of its members.

The editorial dog is loud in his praise of this addition to his diet—if we may judge by the relish with which he disposed of the samples. The biscuits are well made and dog owners should give them a trial.

London Week by Week.

LONDON, Friday, 12th April 1912.

WHAT particular class of bandit is going to strike next? One hears that the railway men, the carters, the undertakers and gravediggers, and those arch ruffians the taxi-cab drivers are preparing their little schemes for giving us a comfortable summer. Meanwhile, on Easter Monday the coal strike was officially declared at an end by the Miners' Federation and the men were ordered to resume work at once. In most districts the news was received with keen satisfaction, and the majority of the miners are now at work.

In Yorkshire and parts of Scotland they still declare they will not return until all their demands are granted, and in several northern districts the position is doubtful. Thus the Federation, which avoided an immediate split by declaring for peace, has not yet escaped all danger of disintegration.

The situation is complicated in South Wales and Durham by the strike of surfacemen, who were ignored by the miners, and are now acting independently. Without the aid of the surfacemen the miners cannot re-enter the pits, and the resumption must be delayed.

The miners have now gained exactly what was promised to them by Mr. Asquith on the day the strike began. The mistaken tactics of the idiotic leaders who failed to lead, have prolonged the strike for thirty-eight days, have cost the miners more than £9,700,0000, have done incalculable harm to the industry of the country, and have brought misery and starvation to countless workers in other trades. In all, these thirty-eight days have cost the nation at least £30,000,000 in wages and trade, in addition to the toll of suffering, sickness, and death. Each day the outcry against the leaders grows louder, and now the brutes are rounding on each other like wolves: calling for the resignation of their leaders and prominent officials. What a good country this is to live out of!

SURE it was an ideal Easter we had. Sunshine all the time and everything that matters—the country, the trees, flowers and living things (mankind barred)—all at their best and most alluring. Dismal croakers last week pointed to the coal strike and the restricted train services and predicted a melancholy time for us poor Londoners. But behold to thousands of us it was an Easter of new delights, we discovered new joys in the motor 'bus, new possibilities were revealed to us and the loss of trains was not felt. Easter Monday was a Bank Holiday that for once in a while brought none of the accustomed train loads of cloth-capped trippers trooping from the northern termini. For the first time in the annals of the Bank Holiday Euston Road did not resound with the broad accents of the industrial north. Similarly at Charing Cross and Waterloo, Paddington and Victoria one looked in vain for the scenes of bustle and excitement amid which London's eager hordes set forth for the seaside and the green fields. Imports and exports of humanity were both practically at a stand-still, and London for once was a city of Londoners confronted with entirely new conditions of Bank Holiday amusement.

And yet London spent one of the happiest, jolliest, and most interesting Bank Holidays that has ever been known since Bank Holidays were first invented. For as if by a common inspiration Londoners seized upon the joys of motoring. The delights of swift travel that the motor-omnibus affords distinguished yesterday from all the Bank Holidays that have preceded it. As a means of getting to business and back the motor-omnibus is taken for granted, and the soaring values of the omnibus shares have been regarded as an index of utility.

It was not until Monday that the mass of the population of London realised the possibilities of the motor-omnibus as a pleasure vehicle. Family parties by hundreds of thousands, it seemed, got in omnibuses and went for motor rides. There was all the joy in it of travel in strange lands. There was the same embarrassing range of choice where to go as confronts the voyager who is meditating a Continental tour. From any point in London there was a motor-omnibus, or a series of motor-omnibuses, running to every other part of London that one could think of and to many parts of London that one had never visited or, perhaps, never even heard of.

THE Nobodies is the name of a new non-political club which it is proposed to establish in London for men and women of all races, nationalities, and professions.

It has been frequently pointed out by numerous writers and demonstrated in actual experience in countless cases that a human being may suffer more bitter isolation in a great populous centre where he happens to be a stranger than in the wilds or the desert. Let us suppose the case of a person from Japan, China, Siam, India, Peru, or any other land who has come to sojourn in this great cosmopolis, London, for purposes of business or study. Unless he has ample means and strong friends who can take him up and show a genuine interest in his welfare, the chances are in favour of such a person finding himself isolated—almost marooned—amid millions of fellow-creatures. Even his landlady will probably treat him as a guest "on sufferance," and with an undue amount of suspicion. His sensibilities and inmost desires are disregarded—and after a time he escapes, filled with impressions gained mostly from the outside and some bitter memories of his stay in wonderful London—the capital of civilisation.

Hitherto, there has been no institution that would cover such objects as the gathering together of these strangers within our gates and of those who would act towards them the part of friends and helpers. "The Nobodies" has been instituted to repair this deficiency in London, and it may become the model for similar undertakings in other populous centres. The subscription will be two guineas per annum, and the Honorary Secretary, at 26, South Molton Street, will be pleased to hear from all interested in the scheme.

THE man, if such a man there be, who regards artificial teeth as things essentially funny, will be immensely amused by "Billy," the new farce by George Cameron, produced at the Playhouse on Saturday night. History records all manner of odd humours, from that of the individual who always shook with laughter at the mention of a crumpet to the eccentricity of the Victorian baronet who sobbed at the sight of a boiled rabbit. So artificial teeth may be jokes for a select few. But to the rest of us they are merely useful, and sometimes necessary—intimacies that we do not even discuss.

The scheme of "Billy," therefore, is unattractive. Its development is childish and silly. A farce must have sort of basis of possibility, however wild and fantastic are its situations. There is nothing disgraceful in an international footballer losing four front teeth; there is no reason why he should blush to let the girl of his heart know that they had been replaced by the dentist's art; it is impossible to believe that any young woman, however foolish, would imagine that her young man's halting confessions about his teeth referred to other young women. Yet these are the circumstances of "Billy," and they are not made less dull by the fact that the action takes place on board a ship and that it is garnished with a moving back cloth and the inevitable references to sea-sickness.

Actors could do little with such a play, but Mr. John Harwood did succeed in making a fat, "quid" chewing sailor intermittently amusing, and Miss Maidie Hope played with perfectly heroic energy and intelligence. At the end, the audience booted gently and almost tearfully. The Easter puzzle remains—why did Mr. Cyril Maude produce "Billy"?

AT His Majesty's Theatre Sir Herbert Tree has added "Othello" to his Shakespearian repertory, and his production is, at least, an unqualified delight to the eye. It is contended that the habit at His Majesty's of playing Shakespeare in elaborate and gorgeous scenes kills the drama, and makes the dramatist play second fiddle. In many of Tree's revivals the exact opposite has been the fact, and the splendour and completeness of the production has distinctly helped one to realise the full meaning of the drama. But there is a danger of mistaking values, and it must be admitted that the success of "Othello" is more picturesque than dramatic.

Othello himself, in common with most of Shakespeare's heroes, is almost hopelessly puzzling. Fundamentally he is the straightforward fighting man, with little knowledge of women or of the subtleties of living, determined, easily moved to passion, ruthless for revenge. But he is much more. He soliloquises. He is introspective. He murders, but he moans. Just as Juliet demands an actress at once a girl in years and a woman of mature experience of the stage, so the ideal Othello would possess a robust presence, a mighty voice, and a consummate gift of imagination. Tree has the imagination, and that is the greatest quality that an actor can possess. He never plays a new part according to the traditions. He thinks for himself, and the consequence is that, if he is not always satisfying, he is always interesting. His Othello is a dreamer. With his dark skin and long hair he is the figure of an Eastern philosopher or poet. In the early scenes he was gently tender to Desdemona, with the little touch of half-paternal solicitude that comes quite naturally from a man in love with a young girl.

At the end his grief and horror were moving and sincere. But the mad fit of jealousy was less convincing. The "business" of the scenes with Iago was very clever and ingenious. But here the actor was acting. Tree is not elemental. He is essentially modern and complex, and the complex modern does not work himself into jealous frenzy on flimsy evidence. He showed what Othello might have done. But the actor's soul was not behind the actions and the words.

Far less gifted actors have played the red-seeing Othello more convincingly. But every man has the defects of his qualities, and though Tree does not tear a passion to tatters with a zest, his Othello is, as has been said, interesting always, and always dignified.

Mr. Laurence Irving Iago is original and nearly a triumph. He is young, impish, fidgety, amused. All the time he is laughing at Othello up his sleeve and despising him for being so easily deceived. He is distinctly Italian, suggesting the villainy of the days of the Borgias, absolutely relentless, sinning largely for sinning's sake. Now and again Mr. Irving is a little inaudible, and his performance would be stronger, if the fidgetiness were restrained. But, as it is, it is a fine achievement.

Miss Phyllis Neilson Terry is the very ideal Desdemona. Desdemona was a girl and Miss Neilson Terry is the girl of genius. Her pathos is exquisite, her delivery of the lines a sheer joy, and the beauty of her form and face fitly match the complete success of her acting.

Miss Alice Crawford's Emilia is unconvincing and over-shrill, and the Cassio of Mr. Philip Merivale is undistinctive. On the other hand, Mr. A. E. George as Brabantio is admirable.

Some House of Commons humorist is going to ask the Attorney-General whether he proposes to prosecute Mr. Rudyard Kipling for sedition in consequence of the sentiments expressed by the poet in his recent verses entitled "Ulster."

It would be contempt of the King's High Court of Parliament, at this time assembled, to anticipate the Attorney-General's reply, and, not being anxious to appear at the bar of the House and go to the Clock Tower during the Speaker's pleasure, I shall not risk it.

There is, however, no harm in remarking that one can read Mr. Kipling's poem from beginning to end without turning a hair and without understanding what he was trying to preach—certainly without discovering anything seditious in it.

Poets should never be held responsible for anything they write except atrocious rhymes, and if the Attorney-General started to prosecute all the minor poets there are in existence at the present moment for their offences in that direction the Government would have to build a new prison for their accommodation.

Besides which a poet who was permitted to go scotfree after calling cricketers "flannelled fools" and football players "muddied oafs" ought not to be pulled up for a venial offence like sedition.

PEEPS AT DELHI AND THE DURBAR.*

This is one of Messrs. A. and C. Black's excellent series of Little Travel Books for Young People, but the present volume is certainly calculated to interest the older generation as well. It is perhaps sufficient to indicate one of the attractions of the book, when it is said that it is illustrated by a dozen exquisite water colours by Mortimer Menpes. The illustrations alone especially those of warriors in Chain Mail, and "a Rajput gentleman," make the volume a valuable acquisition. Mr. John Finnemore, to whom the letterpress is due, has done his work well. In the first place he gives a short sketch of the story of Delhi, showing its importance in Indian history, and touching on a few chief events in its wonderful past. The second part gives an account of the great Durbar recently held by the King-Emperor. As the author says, "this ceremony was of great importance at the moment; it will certainly loom greater in the future, when it will be found how deep will be its results on native feeling in India." Certainly in this passage of his preface Mr. Finnemore has indicated the main significance of the great ceremonial at Delhi, now the capital of India. A perusal of the stirring story of this great city, on the walls of which broods the prestige of a thousand years of Empire, helps one to understand and to appreciate the motives that led to the re-establishment of Delhi as the seat of Government over the Empire of the Moguls. It is still true, as it was when the last descendant of the house of Timur occupied the palace of his ancestors, that he who holds Delhi, holds India.

The author of this volume gives a succinct and interesting sketch of Mogul rule in India, from its establishment by Babar to its zenith under Akbar, and its decline and fall under his successors. Then follows a description of the mutiny period, more complete as befits the place of Delhi in English history and in connection with the Durbar with a detailed account of the siege, storm, and capture of the city in 1857. The writer is somewhat dogmatic with regard to one point that is at least open to question; he says Hodson's statement that he shot the Princes whom he captured at Humayun's tomb for fear they would escape was a mere pretext "The real reason was the anger felt towards them. It was said that they had encouraged the murders and acts of cruelty which had marked the early days of the rebellion." The latter sentence is surely too apologetic; it was not merely said but known that the princes' hands were stained with crimes which will not bear thinking of. It is not likely that any reasonable person will have the slightest sympathy with these monsters in their well-merited fate.

Mr. Finnemore's account of the Durbar lacks nothing in effect and in picturesque detail. But surely he should not say that the King-Emperor "attended" but that he "held" the Durbar. The rest of the world "attended." In his account of the luxurious extravagance of the camps of civilians the contrast afforded by the comparative squalor of the military camps might well have been noticed. There is an occasional inaccuracy. The author says that when the Governor-General's carriage swept into the arena at the Durbar, "the whole vast assembly rose and stood in their honour" But, of course, it is excusable that he should not have observed that one person among all those hundreds of thousands, the Gaekwar of Baroda, remained seated. This peculiar behaviour on the part of an Indian petty chief probably escaped the notice of all but a few in his vicinity. On one point the author is certainly not correct—when he says that the Khyber Pass is the only path by which India can be or has been entered by invaders. There are many passes, and, to note two historic events, neither Alexander the Great nor Mahmud of Ghazni entered India by that route.

Shikar.

A DAY'S SHOOTING IN N.-W. RHODESIA.

"Don't waste those three soft-noses, unless you are sure of your buck," calls my partner, from his comfortable camp-bed, as I leave the tent. We are very short of ammunition, and as it is 120 miles from the railway it may be a long time before more can be obtained.

No meat in the camp and twenty savages to feed. This is the state of affairs that brings me out at this early hour of the morning. At 5 A.M. in July the cold appears to penetrate one's bones quite as much in the tropical Zambesi Valley as it does at a far lower temperature in Europe.

As we strike into the main track and drop downhill about thirty feet on to the river flats, my three natives shuffle along behind in a perfect ecstasy of cold and terror. The Zambesi native is desperately sensitive to cold, and is like a scared child in the dark. The waning moon is of little use, as this morning it only precedes the rising sun by a couple of hours.

Away to the right a hyæna wails like a lost soul, and I carry my ·303 with a cartridge in the breech in case the "king of beasts" may dispute our right to invade his nocturnal domain. Such an event, however, though my experience is very limited, I do not think at all probable. In the sleeping kraals the only sign of life is the fire on the elevated beacon-like structure in which sleeps the headman, whether to guard his cattle, keep watch and ward over his people, or to keep himself out of harm's way does not seem quite clear, but probably the latter. In a distant kraal a native is wailing over the death of one of his relations, and the sound is not unlike the voice of the melancholy hyæna. Surely it must be a daughter he is mourning for—one he might have sold for many goats. The loss of a grandmother could never and cause so much grief.

A month ago the path we are now traversing was impassable, but the swamps and blind rivers have dried up, and are being rapidly transformed into fields of maize and sweet potatoes, and the sandy river-beds are green with tobacco. This spot, where the mealies are three feet high, is an excellent duck swamp in April. But we are after bigger game than duck this morning, and as we leave the last kraals and cultivation patches behind, and the light begins to glow faintly in the east, I pocket my pipe, we move with more caution.

At the spot where it is necessary to leave the path we have to wait for a time, for it is still too dark to follow the ill-defined game-track through the scrub. One of the boys, whom I call Svengali (this being the nearest approach to his complicated Zambesi name that I can reach) touches my arm and whispers. "Baas! baas! munyama" (meat). This is all very fine and large, but we might be in a butcher's shop and the deuce a bit of meat could one see by this dim, religious glimmer. Svengali is quite right, for now the meat can be heard walking about and treading on sticks, and very close at hand at that but what particular variety of meat it may be it is impossible to say.

Svengali and Company are much disappointed that the white man does not loose off his gun, for surely such a complicated machine could find meat in the dark.

The light grows rapidly stronger: so, taking only Svengali, who carries the shot gun, I push cautiously forward. A stop is necessary every few yards to listen, and then again to disentangle oneself from the infernal hooked thorns, which seem to say, as they take hold of one's garments, "thus far and no further." These do not trouble Svengali, whose oily black hide and scanty raiment afford no grip for the paste. The hoarse grunting bark of an old man baboon breaks the silence with such startling effect on an old guinea-fowl rooster, dozing peacefully in one of the big trees, that he goes off like an alarum clock, and his warning note is answered in all directions by the remainder of the flock.

As we penetrate to a grass-covered opening in the forest, a duiker walks out of the bamboo grass, takes a look round and moves slowly off the scene. Many sounds dispel the silence, and the early birds quarrelling probably over the solitary worm raise a number of harsh and discordant cries, and use language which, luckily, I am unable to understand. Overhead a flight of screaming green parrots fairly hurtle through the atmosphere, and the forest is awake, without any doubt whatever.

Again comes the whispered "Munyama!" from Svengali, and after vainly straining my eyes in the endeavour to see the object he points at I realise, to my disgust, that he wants me to shoot at a troop of long-tailed monkeys who are disporting themselves in a green clump of trees to the left. To the Zambesi these are a delicacy.

A dig with the butt of my rifle, which (as we are both lying at full length on the ground) finds the top of his head, serves to admonish him, and once more we move forward to where the base of an enormous baobab tree promises cover from which to view the open space beyond. The sight of large game always throws Svengali into paroxysms of excitement, and, personally, I have had many grievous disappointments, attributable to want of judgment and hasty shooting. Shooting for meat and shooting for sport are two different things, and the steady hand and eye of the old hunter are not matters to be acquired in a day, and by many they can never be acquired at all. I sometimes fear I shall have to number myself among these failures.

But to return to our meat. Creeping with extreme care round the roots of the baobab, my optics come suddenly to bear on a huge sable antelope bull, feeding alone. His head is down, and his magnificent horns curve back into line with his forequarters. Beyond him, partly concealed by bush and long grass, the remainder of the herd are indistinctly visible. Barely 200 yards and broadside on. Could one wish for a better shot? But I reckon without Svengali. As I cautiously prepare to raise my rifle there is an agonised, starting whisper. "Ow, baas! baas! munyama mokulu!" (great meat), and a crack as in his frantic excitement he puts his huge paw on a rotten stick.

Up goes the sable's head, bang goes my rifle, and away goes the herd, plunging and crashing through the undergrowth. An alarmed wart-hog trots solemnly across the centre of the scene, and I waste another soft-nose on him, while from the opposite side a troop of impala, showing red in the rays of the rising sun, dash past in full view. In a last desperate hope of obtaining some "munyama," I speed the parting soft-nose number three with absolute futility.

Plunging after this stampeding menagerie with a bewildered notion of getting a fourth shot at something, I nearly fall over a splendid sable, shot through the neck, and kicking out the brief remainder of his existence in a futile effort to get on his legs and follow his retreating family. How he got here is a mystery, and I am not even certain that he is the animal I fired at.

In my exuberant joy and surprise I entirely forget to chastise Svengali.—Sporting Times.

A LEOPARD SHOOT.

The element of danger in the pursuit of big game does not only not deter sportsmen from running serious risks, but actually acts as an incentive and adds a thrilling interest to sport. And the much-despised panther in pursuit of which sportsmen frequently expose their lives turns now and then on his pursuers and inculcates the lesson that he is a force to be reckoned with. Before now many sportsmen have been mauled by wounded and infuriated panthers; and the head of the C. I. D., whose daring exploits among the wild beasts of India would fill tomes of interesting and thrilling matter can (unfortunately) bear testimony to the ferocious and tenacious proclivities of "Spots" when wounded. I know of two instances in which army officers have been mauled when riding down a panther discovered while out pigsticking and in one case the officer had to lose his leg, thus cutting short a promising military career.

A sporting gunner who has seen some shooting in Natal, where tigers and panthers are ringed round "kills" by elephants, tells me that he has known of no instance in which a tiger has charged through the ring of elephants, but that this is often done by panthers: shooting panthers on foot is rightly considered a dangerous game and is only to be indulged in by sportsmen of experience and with absolute reliance on their nerve and accuracy in shooting. My experience of the panther has been limited to arm-chair shooting from machans and in one instance only have I had to follow up a wounded beast.

One winter taking advantage of the Christmas holidays, I travelled to the Central Provinces and arranged a small "shoot" so that my daughter might see something of Indian jungle life. A bullock cart over a rough country road-track brought us to a small range of hills where I had previously bagged a sambur. The beat was over one of the hills and a mile long and I (the only gun) was placed on the slope down to the next depression or valley, my daughter sitting in a tree to my right. I was on the ground because I expected only sambur and I am convinced that in suitable attire and by remaining quite still, the sportsman is never spotted by animals. Well, the noisy beaters could be heard approaching in the distance, and as they came near, the sambur in the beat were heard to give several warning cries. This seemed unusual, but the cause for their alarm was soon made manifest to me by the appearance up the hill, about three hundred yards distant of a panther which was quietly walking down in my direction. I watched him move down the hill and waited patiently until he was not more than thirty yards away, and as he gave me a broad-side shot, I fired. The beast rolled over on his back with his legs in the air and I thought he was as good as bagged. But, alas! my recent bout of malaria fever and large doses of quinine had made my hand unsteady, and I had hit the panther far back, paralysing his hind quarters. He was up in a moment, and crawled down the hill in a line parallel to my position and in the long grass I fired and missed him. I waited until the beaters came up and helped my daughter down from the tree from where she had clearly seen the panther approach and shot. I then followed the direction the panther had taken and discovered that the beaters and "stops" had disappeared up the trees. I had some difficulty in inducing one or two of the men to come down and show me where the panther was hidden, as they had watched his movements from their elevated positions. After several ineffectual efforts on the part of the shaking and excited head coolie to show me the animal hiding in the long grass, I saw the panther move out and I fired and again missed him. My position was, indeed, an embarrassing one, as my frightened daughter clung to my coat tails and I could not also shake off the excited head coolie who clutched my right arm to emphasize his noisy chatter. As we followed the panther, he turned round and deliberately hid behind a tree. But I had fortunately seen this manœuvre in time and a few stones soon dislodged him from his position. As he crept away, I fired and hit him and he went a few paces and lay down under a tree. I could see that he was done for and went up close to him, and when I killed him with a last shot the beaters, who had plucked up courage and followed me, were ranged in a semi-circle, not ten yards away from the beast.

Fishing.

TROUT-FISHING IN EASTERN AND WESTERN CANADA.

The trips I look back upon with the greatest pleasure were in the October of 1907 (says "Grasshopper," a resident in Calgary, in Rod and Gun). I have noticed that during the fall the fish congregate in the holes of the smallest rivers before migrating into the larger ones, and, after carefully watching for several weeks, the fish began to bunch up. Now was my opportunity.

I kept the secret to myself for a day or two to make sure that I was on the right track. One morning I got up about 4 A. M., had breakfast, hitched up, and started, arriving at the pool about 6 o'clock. The bait had scarcely touched the water when there was a great commotion—they all wanted the one grasshopper, but a two-pounder got it, and I got him. He was a beauty. The others had to wait with patience while I got their breakfast ready, which was not long, as I was as anxious to feed them as they were to feed. I soon had a few more averaging 1½lb. each. The total for the morning was 60 fine trout. Then I hurried back to town in time for work.

The news soon got around the shop where I am employed that Fred had been fishing, and the fish did not last long. I had to promise some of the boys to take them out one at a time. When I took the first one we got 54 fish, 47 the second time, and the next time 64. It was during the next trip that the greatest excitement occurred. We had been having some excellent sport, when I hooked a trout about 6in. long, which a large trout took as I was landing it. I let him take it, thinking he might swallow it, hook and all. After giving him about two minutes I struck him, but it came out of his mouth. I tried him again, and he took it a second time, but after playing him for some minutes the hook broke. I thought I would give him one more chance, so I fixed up a 10in. trout on a Jardine snap-pike tackle. As soon as I made the cast he took it again. I felt sure he was mine this time, but no—the trace broke, and this was the last we saw of him. Moral—soak your traces before using. The total for that morning, however, was 88 fish.

Then came Thanksgiving Day, the last day of the season. I took two friends with me, to fulfil the remainder of the promises, but the trouble was to get the right bait (grasshoppers). We managed, however, to get about a dozen. I might say that my two friends were novices at wielding the rod, so I made the first cast to instruct them in the art of angling. The bait had scarcely touched the water when twang went the line—a sound which is music to the ear of an angler. A short struggle, and a fine trout lay on the bank, weighing 1½lb. I thought it was a very good start. Presently we had to stop fishing and go hunting grasshoppers, and we were fortunate enough to find in a few. When we got back to the river the fish were still there and still feeding, and for about an hour the sport was fast and furious. After lunch we fished again, but the fish were not feeding so fast. However, we got a few more, and our total catch amounted to 150 fish from 1lb. to 3lb., which is not a bad day's catch so near a city of 20,000 inhabitants and a large number of them anglers.

A neat little sketch of a trip to a wonderful lake near the head of Debert River, of which the writer was told by an Indian named John Paul, is equally interesting. He says:

"24th May found Jim and me at an old lumber camp on Debert Mountain. A raft was soon made, and we fished that lake most eagerly from end to end and from

Radiol

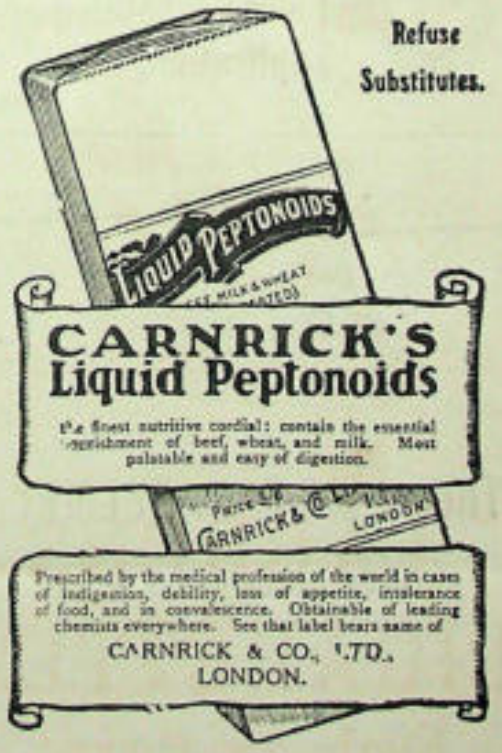
RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up
No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.



"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Kroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; W. Wilson, Rawal Pindi and Murree; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

side to side. I used all the flies I had, Jim tried them with minnows, and finally we came down to the lowly worm, but never a fin did we see.

"Next day I could get Jim no further than the river. I therefore left him fishing there, and went on to the lake alone. I worked hard fishing all over the lake, but without result. At 12 o'clock I went on shore to eat my lunch. As I lay thinking, my gaze rested on a point running out into the lake a short piece down the shore. The wind had died away, and the lake lay like a mirror. Suddenly, about two casts off from the point, there was a flash of silver, and as the ripples drifted shoreward the splash came echoing down the lake. In two jumps I was on the raft and bending the raft pole as I drove her down along the shore. As the raft drifted slowly out past the point I pulled out my line, cast after cast. Arms and rod seemed to work as one. The line straightened and fell just where I wanted it. Holding my breath, I slowly drew the flies toward me.

"Splash! Wollop! Tick-a-tick-a-tick-a-tick! I had him!

"Then the fun commenced. Down he went to the bottom. Then he came to the top and I saw him. He looked a yard long. Then he tried to trip around the raft, and finally came straight for me. My rod bent double, and as he turned away from the raft I gave a sigh of relief. At last I landed him, and as I looked at him curled up in my basket I felt good, real good. I calculated he would go 4lb. at least. The rest of the afternoon I spent there, but without any luck.

"Going out, I met Joe at the lower lake with his basket full of what he called trout. I looked them over; the best would not go ¾lb. I said nothing. After supper Jim started to divide his trout. I was sitting back in the bunk trying hard not to grin. He divided them on the table in two piles, and then reached down for my basket to put in my share. He picked it up, then dropped it back and opened it. I can see him standing there now, pipe in hand, mouth open, eyes staring. I said nothing. Then Jim found his tongue. 'By the bald-headed ghost of the great departed Izaak Walton' said he, 'where'd you get the whale?' 'Oh,' I replied, 'just a sample from the little lake!'"

Third Day, Saturday, 27th April 1912.

A pleasant day, bright with some cloudy intervals. The going, rather improved by a slight fall of rain the evening before, was still on the hard side. A start was made at 12-40 and when a fair attendance had already assembled. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Hammide arrived just before the second race after the luncheon interval : all Ooty was there and the lawn presented a very gay appearance. The two principal events—The Hobart Park Plate and the Hunters Cup were well fought out and full of interest throughout. Major Dennistoun must be congratulated on his success in the Hunters Cup.

THE EASTERN HANDICAP.—Rs. 300 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies, 14-1 and under. 1 mile.

LONDON, Friday, 12th April 1912.

KEMPTON PARK.

THE coal strike proved a blessing to Kempton, as, with few Londoners taking holiday out of town, the attendance proved enormous, larger than I have seen on a Jubilee day, the rings being crammed and a mighty concourse crowding the far side of the course. A dull, dusty March morning evolved a bright spring afternoon, thanks to the wind blowing best part of a gale, fortunately from the the back of the stands, while the going was good and fields strong. Results :—

MANCHESTER.

The action of the railway authorities in restricting their services to the usual sea-side resorts to a certain extent proved a boon to the Castle Irwell executives, unable to get away, holiday makers flocked to the race-course.

As a result, the cheaper priced enclosures were exceptionally well patronised, despite a rainy morning. In the principal ring, however, there was plenty of room, few visitors travelling from the South. Results :—

WINCHESTER

.22 Caliber Automatic Rifle.

This is the only automatic rifle using rimfire ammunition, and consequently it is inexpensive to shoot. It's rapidity of fire makes it a great game getter, and for shooting rabbits, birds and other small game, it has no equal. For running game it is particularly desirable, as a succession of rapid shots may be fired with accuracy while holding the rifle on the game. It holds ten strong shots, each of which is fired by simply pulling the trigger. Shoot one and you'll realize it's great effectiveness. It is strongly made and simple to shoot.

Winchester Rifles are Sold by All Dealers.

The folk were treated to a big variety of weather at Birmingham on Tuesday, and snow showers, as well as rain, were crammed in, while the wind which so largely interfered with the comfort of the spectators at Bromford Bridge on the opening afternoon, was again in evidence, although less forceful than previously. There were periods when the sun shone with summerlike brilliance, but in the shaded parts the wind was keen. Without reaching the same dimensions as on the Bank Holiday, the attendance was exceedingly good, and brisk sport, with fields of average strength, prevailed. Results:—

WARWICK.

The Great Western Railway's special to Warwick from Paddington on Wednesday morning found liberal support, the train being well filled. The Birmingham folk came over in force, and the county folk rallied in the members' enclosure, while the crowd on the course testified to local interest. Bright sunshine dominated the scene, and made bearable the bitter cold wind that prevailed throughout. The going was excellent, and fields panned out well. Results:—

The nipping and eager air from the north-west that has prevailed for some little time came keenly in the face of the stands at Warwick yesterday, enhancing the comfort of furs and greatcoats, but the drying wind had put the surface of the common in rare condition, and the going was first rate, while fields again ruled well. Another good muster, including several principal patrons of the national sport, saw the second day out and proceedings were brisk. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

At the second time of asking the semi-finals for the Association Cup have both been brought to a definite issue, with the result that West Bromwich Albion and Barnsley appear at the Crystal Palace next Saturday week in the concluding stage of the competition for the national trophy. Personally, I think, a meeting between Blackburn Rovers and Swindon in the Final Tie would have furnished a more attractive dish—the Rovers with their great Cup traditions now dating back thirty years on the one side and Swindon, new to the Final Tie and the last hope of the South, on the other. At the same time, if the Albion must be regarded as a little fortunate to have snatched a victory in the last minute of two hours' football with the Rovers at Sheffield, Barnsley at Nottingham showed themselves a distinctly more formidable side than Swindon—without Fleming. Barnsley, of course, are not strangers to the concluding stage of the Cup seeing that they met Newcastle United at the Crystal Palace two years ago, drawing on that enclosure at one goal all, but losing the replay at Liverpool by two goals to none.

SEVENTEEN years have elapsed since West Bromwich last qualified for the Final Tie, the occasion being the first of the great struggle being contested at the Crystal Palace. Aston Villa won that match by 1 to 0, scoring within a couple of minutes of the kick off, but three seasons previously when the Final was last played at Kennington Oval, with Aston Villa very hot favourites, the Albion gained a brilliant victory by 3 to 0. The West Bromwich team also effected a great surprise when they defeated Preston North End at the Oval in 1888. They had figured in the Final Tie in the two previous seasons, losing to the Villa in 1887 and to Blackburn Rovers in 1886, when, after a draw at the Oval, the Blackburn men pulled through at Derby by 2 to 0. In a way this match at Derby was one of the most remarkable in the long series of Final Ties, for the Albion kept the Rovers on the defensive practically all the time. On two occasions, however, Jimmy Brown, the Rovers' centre-forward, broke away unaided and each time finished a splendid piece of dribbling with a shot that scored.

Taking part up to Saturday in only two League engagements since the opening Saturday of March, Blackburn Rovers on Friday found themselves passed in the struggle for the championship by both Bolton Wanderers and Everton and equalled in the matter of points by Newcastle United. Not for long were the Rovers dispossessed of the leadership, seeing that yesterday, while they overcame Manchester City at Ewood Park, Bolton Wanderers went down at Middlesbrough and Everton at Sunderland. Newcastle United, avenging at Old Trafford a defeat inflicted upon them by Manchester United, at St. James's Park in December, succeeded, like Blackburn Rovers, in bringing their aggregate up to 41, but, possessed of the inferior goal average and having fulfilled three more engagements than the Blackburn men, Newcastle United stand clearly below the Rovers. Even in the event of their winning their four remaining fixtures, Newcastle cannot now secure more than 49 points, Everton more than 50, or Bolton Wanderers more than 46, whereas there exists the bare possibility of Blackburn bringing their aggregate up to 55 points. The Rovers, it is to be noted, have a formidable task before them to-morrow, when they try conclusions with Everton at Goodison Park.

While Blackburn Rovers must—for the moment—be regarded as by far the most likely team to carry off the League championship, it is not yet certain whether Liverpool or Manchester City will accompany Bury into the Second League next season. Preston North End are not quite out of the wood, but two points ahead and having a match in hand, the Preston team should not be in much danger of losing membership of the first division. There is every prospect of a desperately close struggle to escape between Manchester City and Liverpool, who have each played the same number of games and scored the same number of points. Each team, moreover, won on Friday and suffered defeat yesterday.

Arranging to play four League contests in five days during the Easter holidays, Tottenham Hotspur were unfortunate enough to have several of their players disabled at Manchester on Friday and thus could not place anything like a representative side on the field against Sheffield United at White Hart Lane next day; but for all that they managed to effect a draw. With Manchester City to meet to-morrow and Manchester United on Tuesday, Hotspur, in the circumstances, must experience some difficulty in getting together a team with reasonable prospects of success. Woolwich Arsenal succeeded in beating Manchester United on Friday, but going down badly before Sheffield Wednesday they have now failed to score in five of their last six engagements.

The prospects of Chelsea gaining promotion were considerably strengthened by the results of Saturday's matches among the more prominent clubs of the Second Division of the League. Gaining a splendid victory over Glossop after being a goal behind at half-time, they were the only one of the first three teams to win, for Barnsley suffered a crushing reverse at Birmingham, and Derby County, playing at home, could only draw with Wolverhampton Wanderers. In consequence of all this Chelsea, with two matches in hand over Burnley, are only four points below the Lancashire club, while with one more engagement fulfilled they lead Derby County by three points, their success at Glossop enabling them to get further ahead of Derby and closer to Burnley. To-morrow they visit Derby, and much will depend upon the result of the match there.

Following their defeat in the Cup, Swindon have scored only one point in two games this week-end, and, with Queen's Park Rangers gaining a victory yesterday after a draw on Good Friday, the chances are that the London team will wrest the Southern League championship from the holders. With several of their men injured Swindon went down badly at Bristol and the severe games with Barnsley seem to have ruined the team for the time being. Whether they can recover their form during the remaining three weeks is uncertain; and if at their best they would have a very arduous task in making up six points in these games, besides faring as well as the Rangers in the other four fixtures which each have to play.

RUGBY RULES.

England v. France.—To the great disappointment of the 26,000 spectators—a record attendance at the international Rugby match—on the 8th instant at the Parc des Princes England defeated France by 18 points (1 goal, 1 dropped goal, and 3 tries) to 8 points (1 goal and a try).

The Englishmen scored a try in the first three minutes of the game, Neale making a fine run and passing to Birkett, who got over, but the try was not converted.

A little later, after some excellent passing, in which Pym, Coverdale, Neale and Roberts all handled, the lastnamed scored, but Greenwood failed with the kick. Then, after a beautiful run by Coverdale, Edison secured a third try, but once again the kick at goal failed.

After a clever bout of passing from the left to the right wing, in which the ball eventually went back again to the left, Brougham scored behind the post, and Pillman converted.

The Englishmen had all the best of the first half, and the Frenchmen were not over the 25-line until after twenty-five minutes of play. However, they improved as time went on, and they were attacking when half-time was declared.

With the wind in their favour in the second half, France played with fine dash and great determination, and tested the English defence sorely.

Coverdale dropped a pretty goal, but otherwise the French had all the best of this half.

Gadas scored a try on the extreme right, and Boyau failed with a difficult place-kick. Later on, after some nice passing Falilot got over behind the posts, and this time Boyau converted. This ended the scoring in a most interesting match.

RACKETS.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

As E. M. Baerlein was unable to defend his title, B. S. Foster became Amateur Rackets Champion yesterday, when he defeated G. G. Kershaw at Queen's Club by three games to one (12—15, 17—14, 15—8, 15—1). It would have been very interesting to see Baerlein and Foster meet, for Foster is playing very well just now: Baerlein always does.

Both Foster and Kershaw seemed nervous at the beginning of the match. Kershaw, however, served the better of the two and took the first game at 15—12. In the second Foster led at 12—7: Kershaw then made a great effort and got to 12—7. Foster put him out with a most brilliant shot off a difficult return and got to 14 all. They set 3 and Foster won that game, though Kershaw had 4 blank hands after 14—12.

The third game was a real struggle, and, quite contrary to the general anticipation, Foster remained the fresher of the two. He began to find a good length service, too, while Kershaw was persistently serving outs on his first service, and was weak on his second. Foster won the third game 15—8, and the last very easily 15—1. In this game he played five rackets, Kershaw being decidedly off colour and hitting down a lot of sitters.

Kershaw made the better shots, but Foster had far the greater knowledge of the game. For a player of his ability and perfect style, however, it is a pity that he uses the reverse side work so frequently. He can play the proper game—the one at which his famous brother, H. K. excelled—so well, that it is rather a pity, from the onlookers' point of view, that he descends to "the-second-class-marker's-shot" so often. It pays, unquestionably, and it is absolutely fair and all in the game. Anyway, he has tried hard for some years to annex that championship, and he deserves every congratulation for bringing it off this time. With the Hon'ble Clarence Bruce he is holder in the doubles. They should retain their title, if Bruce is well enough to play at his best.

Kershaw is quite young and good enough and strong enough to win or have a fine chance of winning, as soon as E. M. Baerlein retires for good.

CRICKET AT OOTACAMUND.

OOTY vs. BANGALORE.—Played on the 24th and 26th instant. Bangalore batted first and made 193. Ooty then went in and scored 157 for four wickets when stumps were drawn. Continuing on Friday they made 328 for 8 wickets and declared. Bangalore's second venture produced 147 and Ooty were left with 13 to make to win and ten minutes to do it in. They hit off the required runs and won by 10 wickets. Score :—

THE BEIGHTON COMPETITION.

THE eighteenth annual Beighton competition terminated last Tuesday when the redoubtable Customs team won the trophy, this being their fourth win out of the six seasons they have entered for the tournament. The Customs have never taken part in the Allahabad competition, nor have they played at Bombay, but there is little doubt that hockey in Calcutta is of a far higher standard than is played in any other part of India. The Sibpur College and the Hornets were the only local teams that played at Allahabad, and although neither of these teams annexed the All-India Cup it was acknowledged that both Sibpur and the Hornets were the strongest combinations at Allahabad, but neither team was favoured by Dame Fortune. Local teams going on tour or taking part in a foreign competition are generally not representative, and this was the case with Sibpur and the Hornets when they went to Allahabad, and to add to this neither team was in condition, for during the cold weather there is no hockey played in Calcutta and prior to these teams leaving for the U. P. they only played a couple of practice games, and lack of condition was mainly attributed to their non-success. However both teams put up magnificent fights, and in spite of all the disadvantages they were only beaten by the best by the narrowest of margins. Had the Hornets and Sibpur had a little more practice there is no doubt that one of them would have annexed the All-India Cup. Now it is freely admitted by all good judges that the Customs' team of the last five years has been a stronger combination than any we have seen in Calcutta, and even the great Ranchi team, Rangers, Sibpur, Aligarh and other strong sides, have had to lower their colours to the Riversiders. In the seasons of 1908-09-10 the Customs appropriated the Beighton trophy, and that record stands unrivalled, for only Ranchi (captained by the Rev. Mr. Whiteley), the Naval Volunteers, and the Royal Irish Rifles have won the Cup two years each in succession. In the days when the Naval Volunteers won, viz., 1895-96 Hockey was in its infancy, and only a few teams entered, but the game since then has made great strides, the competition being keener, the entries much larger, while the Hockey is of a far superior class. Of course in the old days we had some great players, viz., W. K. Brown, R. Fisher, Ritsdale, N. Cadell, Rev. Mr. Whiteley. G. B. Deakin, A. J. Coxon, Sadhu, Templeton, Mercado, Maitland, Radcliffe of the old brigade, and later on such men as the brothers T. and D. O'Sullivan, H. Lawton, Ismay, Pike, Sharan, C. N. Wardeo, G. Cook, Ansell and later still the brothers Besser, Captain Gardner, LeFleming, Collins, H. M. Sherman, McCready, and a host of others. But in those days the combination was not nearly as strong as it has been during the last four or five years, and while the play of some of the men was brilliant the play of others was very moderate indeed. In 1901 and 1902, the two seasons the Royal Irish Rifles won the trophy, Sibpur and St. James certainly played the best hockey—they displayed better combination and the year the Hornets won their combination was also good, but since then combination has steadily improved, most teams playing better together than they did a few years back.

In the Customs' present team, and for that matter during the last four years, there is perhaps not a weak spot in the side, and their least prominent players would be considered most brilliant if they had played half a dozen years ago.

There is not the slightest doubt that they have been the strongest team during the last five years, and it is to be hoped that our champions will be represented at the All-India Tournament at Allahabad next January.

But now to the week's hockey. The last of the third round was between Customs and Dalhousie on the Dal's ground. The original venue was to be the Rangers' ground, but owing to a shower of rain half an hour before the match started, the Rangers' ground was in too bad condition to be played on. With the exception of Seth, the Customs regular goal-keeper, both teams were at full strength and a fairly interesting game resulted in a win for the Customs by two goals to nil. Hudson scored during the initial half, and McCready after ends had been changed. The old St. James' creek scored another goal which was disallowed. Dalhousie tried hard to reduce the margin. Webb, Hoskins and Carver in particular being prominent, but the Customs offered a magnificent defence, and the Dals were unable to gain their object.

The match of the season was the semi-final between the Customs and the Rangers which was played on the Calcutta ground last Friday. The attendance which numbered well over 7,000 was a record one for a local hockey match. The conditions were all that could be desired, and the spectators were treated to a contest which must live long in the memory of everyone who had the pleasure of being present. The Customs won after a great fight by a goal to nothing and there is no doubt that victory went to the better team. There is, to say the least, the keenest rivalry between the two clubs, and as the Rangers were fortunate in winning the cup last year from the Customs, and the latter had this season won their League engagement the greatest interest centred in the match. The match was a typical cup tie contest, the teams exhibiting greater facility in destroying than constructing, and on neither side could it be said that the attacking party mastered the opposing halves and backs. Really the defenders were the masters of the situation and it was the superior half-back line of the Customs that gave them the victory. Of a most brilliant half-back line Lynch was perhaps the best, and the amount of hard work he has got through this season is simply marvellous. All the Customs players at some time or another have been been out of form but this remark does not apply to the Riversiders' right half. McCready has also played brilliantly in the knock out tournament and his two best displays were against the Rangers on Friday and against the Medicals last Tuesday. As a line the Customs also held an advantage over the Rangers, and although there is no forward as brilliant and dangerous as Smart, McCready, Boileau and Galbraith in their respective positions are nearly as good as the Rangers' men.

The only goal of the match was netted by McCready or rather the goal awarded, as the Customs netted twice during the first half, but these were disallowed, although the first one might have been allowed.

In the Customs and Rangers match where all played wonderfully well—McCready, Boileau, Williamson, Lynch, Galbraith and Quiterio for the winners, and Smart, S. Lawton, Tripp, Cody, Rossetti and Keeling for the Rangers—were most in evidence.

The East Indian Railway vs. Medical match on Saturday—the second of the semi-finals—was one of the worst seen at so advanced a stage; while the final too was a tame affair, the Customs being far superior to the Medicals. The East Indian Railway lost by 3-0, but on the play the Medicals were all six goals the better side.

In the final the Medicals put up a splendid fight during the initial half when there was no score, but after ends had been changed there was also a complete change over the aspect of the game and the Customs who outclassed their opponents won by four goal to nothing. McCready (3) and E. Anderson scored. The latter displayed his best form in the final. After the match the Hon'ble Mr. Norman McLeod, the President of the Calcutta Football Club, congratulated the Customs on their brilliant performance. The Customs in addition to the Beighton Cup and the new cup received the League cup, while each of their players were presented with silver medals. The Medicals got no medals, but next year it is to be

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

THE Hornets A. C. and the Pioneer H. C. put up an excellent game on the 24th ultimo. There was litt'e to choose between the teams and the game was level throughout, but the Pioneers were surer in front of goal and scored three times, while their opponents were unable to put through. Shivram scored for the winners very soon after the start, Gampat put through just before the interval and the third point was registered by Shivram a few minutes before time was called. Thursday's game between the R. G. A. from Colaba and the Combined Poona H. C. was not a particularly interesting display, the Gunners being defeated by 2 goals to nil. On Friday the Bombay Gymkhana beat the Young Parsis from Poona by 2 goals to nil. The match on Saturday between the 14th Hussars and the Cheshire Regiment attracted a large number of spectators and a really good game was witnessed, the Cheshires winning by 3 goals to 2. The Cheshires attacked at the start and got a couple of corners. Then the Hussars cleared and ran down but failed in front of goal. The ball was taken back to their territory and the Cheshires scored easily. They continued to have the best of the game till shortly before the interval when the Hussars pressed. On changing ends the Cheshires again beat the Hussars back and registered another goal. The Hussars were next prominent and Allsop scored: keeping up the attack they made strenuous efforts to get on terms. The Cheshires' defence was kept busy and several penalties were given against them—a penalty bully almost in the goal mouth eventually enabling the Hussars to equalise. A few minutes remained, but the Cheshires made the most of the time and rushing down scored the winning goal.

The Warwicks met the Pioneers on Monday and another fast game was witnessed. The soldiers pressed at the start and scored the first goal, and though the Pioneers made great efforts they were still behind at the interval. On resuming the Warwicks attacked, but the Pioneers cleared and running down equalised with a fine shot. The Warwicks tried hard to get the lead again but without success and the game ended in a draw—one all. Extra time was played and during this period the Pioneers scored. The soldiers could not reply and were thus beaten 2—1.

On Tuesday the Poona Combined Team met the M. A. O. College, Aligarh. The Aligarh team were the first to score and soon followed it up with a second goal. Poona scored just before half time. Aligarh had all the best of the play in the second half and put on 3 goals, Poona scoring once, the final score being 5 to 2 in favour of the M. A. O. College.

CALCUTTA MERCHANTS' CUP.

THE annual competition for the Merchants' Cup was begun last week end when four teams played off their ties on the Barrackpore course. Messrs Gillanders Arbuthnot played Messrs James Finlay and the latter were beaten by 12 strokes. With the exception of Gatheral the team did not play up to form. The All-India champion, however, gave a fine display and his 73 is a record for the Barrackpore course as at present laid out. The scores were:—

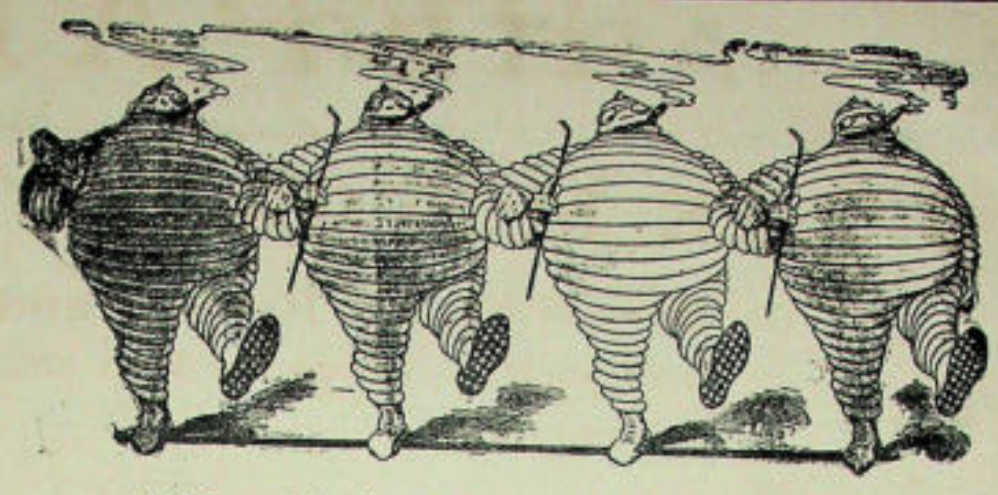
EXCURSIONS IN INDIAN BIRDLAND.

The White-breasted Kingfisher.

Like the bee eaters, thrashers, rollers, barbets and orioles, the Kingfishers are distinguished for their brilliant plumage. They are among our best-dressed feathered friends, exhibiting a great variety of costumes. The plumage in some species is remarkable, but it is never loud, which only shows that Nature can take liberties with colours, that man could not essay without producing results that would only be ridiculously inartistic. The Kingfishers have been honoured with the attentions of man in different parts of the world and from classic times. Aristotle, for instance, took a deep interest in their habits and modes of life, while in more recent times, they were the object of considerable attention on the part of Linnæus. They have since been closely and patiently studied in different parts of the Old and New Worlds, for, it must be mentioned, they are a family whose ramifications are to be met with in nearly all countries. The common Kingfisher of England, the sacred Kingfisher of the South Seas, the laughing jackass of Australia, the Martin-Pecheur of the French, the Uccello di Sancta Maria of the Italians and the Gemeine Eisvogen of the Germans are all so many members of the ancient and celebrated Kingfisher house, but when we come to the primary purpose of this article, viz., a description of the white-breasted Kingfisher of India, we shall see that there are branches of the family, which have departed in remarkable ways from the most cherished traditions of their earliest ancestors. To be sure, the Kingfishers do not furnish us with any instance of natural selection so amazing as that afforded by the now-celebrated sheep-killing parrot of Australia or the Adjutant bird of Northern India, which adopted the habits of the vulture no one knows when. Yet, in point of nesting, feeding and methods of seeking and obtaining food, there are species of Kingfishers which belie their surname and are scarcely a credit to their ancestors.

The ancients had strange beliefs and superstitions respecting the Kingfisher, whose nest, the halcyoneum, was supposed to be endowed with medical properties. In modern times, other superstitious beliefs have gathered round the bird. Thus, its dried body was said to preserve woollen cloth from the ravages of moths. In England, the stuffed bird used to be hung from the ceiling in cottages, in order to serve as a weathervane, the belief having been that the bill would always indicate the directions in which the wind was blowing. In some parts of England, there was a stranger belief that if suspended by the bill, the Kingfisher would turn its breast according to the ebb and flow of the tide. In the South Seas, the natives look upon a certain local species of Kingfisher as sacred and count it a sin to destroy the bird, whose skin, however, forms a suitable offering to the local deity. In Southern India, a local species of the bird enjoys among the natives some little reputation as a weather prophet, for when it is observed in a village tank some distance from natural water, the circumstance is held to be an indication of an approaching shower of rain.

The white-breasted kingfisher (Halcyon smyrnensis) is the species to which I propose devoting particular attention in this article. It is commonly met with in parts of Southern India, where I have had the best opportunities of coming into contact with it and observing its exceedingly interesting habits. A little fellow (11 inches), its chin, throat and the middle of the breast are white, the rest of the head, neck and lower plumage being a deep chestnut or chocolate brown, while the upper back and tail above are greenish blue, the wings greenish to dark blue and the quills black with a white bar.



In Malabar, which is truly an ornithologist's paradise, where this bird is plentiful, it haunts trees and bamboo clumps and is to be met on the banks of rivers, edges of tanks and near wet paddy fields, but is also often found away from water, in shady groves, gardens, open jungle and cultivation, perching upon trees, poles, walls, old buildings and such other situations. A friend of the present writer once observed a parent bird feeding its young ones on the top of a dwelling house.

The white-breasted kingfisher subsists chiefly on a diet of insects, small lizards, sometimes mice, little crabs and water insects and only occasionally catches fish, which it does by plunging. Near water, its food is chiefly fish, frogs, tadpoles and aquatic insects. Aristotle and other ancient observers notice that an African species of kingfisher went to no trouble to build a nest, preferring to occupy the abandoned nest of a water rat. To the credit of the white-breasted kingfisher of Southern India, it must be said that this bird is more industrious and has loftier conceptions of domestic comfort and responsibility, and builds a nest for itself in some hole in a bank, or in decaying trees, two or three round fleshy-white eggs being deposited in the nest. The bird has a strong, rapid flight and is by no means chicken-hearted, for there is an authentic instance of a white-breasted kingfisher attacking a crested goshawk, nearly half as large again as itself, and compelling the goshawk to beat a hasty and undignified retreat.

For the sake of the white-breasted kingfisher, all true lovers of birds must devoutly hope for the early passage of the Bill designed to protect wild birds and animals in this country from wanton destruction and slow extermination, for this is one of those many beautiful Indian birds, whose beauty, in Byron's phrase, is a fatal gift. The white-breasted kingfisher is snared and destroyed in order that its plumage may be sold to dealers in bird skins. In several parts of Southern India, the Koravars, who are a class of professional bird-snarers, capture this beautiful little bird with the aid of a tame and captive individual which is employed as a decoy. The latter is concealed in a covered cage, from which it emits a rattling noise peculiar to the species, and the wild bird, hearing the call, proceeds to enter the cage, never suspecting for a moment that it is going to its doom.

The kingfishers, as their family name implies, are essentially feeders on fish and other aquatic creatures, and hence, the white-breasted variety of the bird affords an instance of a species departing in a noticeable degree from the habits of the family. As in all such cases, the change to begin with must have been accidental and limited to the individual. Subsequently, it became stereotyped as the instinct of the species. Unhappily, in these degenerated days, the white-breasted kingfisher's violation of ancient family traditions has been attended with calamitous consequences to itself. An observer of birds of Malabar for about a quarter of a century, I am in a position to say that the white-breasted kingfisher, once fairly common, has now become comparatively rare. The schoolboy with his catapult, the snarer with his many time-honoured and wicked devises, the charlatanic sportsman to whom every feathered thing is game, even the ryot, who misuses his gun license to destroy birds useful for the protection of his crops against their hexapod enemies, all these have, without knowing it, combined to him pitifully the ranks of the white-breasted kingfishers, and only strict protective measures will check further harm to the beautiful and useful race.

BEAR HUNTING WITH THE SEMINOLES.

Hunting the black bear in Florida is a sport to which few are introduced. This bear is not fierce nor dangerous, still he is "big game," and a bear hunt is always full of incident and excitement. About ten miles from Kissimmee, is a cypress swamp—it is an aquatic jungle full of fallen trees, brush, vines and tangled undergrowth, all darkened by the dense shadows of the tall cypress trees, and full of moccasins and alligators. Running through the swamp is a chain of islands. Here is a field for sportsmen, and here live unmolested a whole colony of the bruin family. Hunters hear their growls and numerous fresh tracks show where the night marauders have entered the hammock, where they feast on wild honey, huckleberries, the cabbage of the plametto and the wild orange. They seldom come out to expose themselves during the day, hence they are rarely captured, and in consequence are on the increase. Settlers frequently report depredations on their hogs, and with a spirit of vengeance organize for bear hunts; but bruin is safe in his swamp home, for without dogs trained to hunting bear, even if he were surprised, he would quickly make his escape into the jungle.

Of all game, the forest bear meat is the favourite dish of the Florida Indians—squaws, piccaninnies and dogs revel in it. With this knowledge, it was an easy matter to secure a party of Seminole chiefs and their trained dogs for a bear hunt. The auspicious day arrived. This picturesque hunting party came striding into Kissimmee as unconscious and statuesque as bronze figures of Mercury.

If ever men deserved the name of Nimrods, it is these sons of the Everglades. Even Little Tiger, a boy of twelve, with his fine rifle, could put to shame many a skilled marksman. But on to the chase. The souls of the red men seemed to leap within them at the thought of the sport after bear, while the hounds barked gleefully, so with hasty preparations our hunting party started for the Reedy Creek jungle. At this point we will turn the story over to the "tenderfoot," that the reader may better follow the chase.

"As we reached the hammock, which has been for years a veritable elysium for the bears, the dogs seemed to become possessed of a very spirit of unrest; soon they struck a trail. Lo-co-see ojus' (bear plenty), exclaimed Captain Tom Tiger, as he observed the numerous cabbage palms with their buds freshly torn out, as well as the conduct of his dogs, and with a word of command to the hounds, he started. The rest of us followed, till we struck a marsh heavily timbered with cypress, which grew so close that the sun's rays could not reach the earth. It made a dark, damp and dangerous ground to enter. The dogs were now running with broad scent, heads well up and throats wide open. If ever there was a sound sweet to hunter's ears, it was the baying of five hounds close on bruin's trail. With nerves on a tension we rushed along, with gun carried at ready. On sweet the rest. The Indians yelled as only Indians can, and the tenderfoot brought up the rear. A hunt in a Florida jungle, pulling through soft mud, climbing over logs, pushing through vines, sprawling on hands and knees through the tangled, matted undergrowth expecting or fearing each step we would strike a moccasin, are the penalties paid for the romantic, adventurous hunt with a Seminole Indian. At last the supreme moment arrived; the leading dog had reached the bear, and soon the five dogs and the bear were having a vigorous rough and tumble fight. We were in good hearing distance, but travelling was very difficult and our progress was slow. The Indians' cry, 'Yo hoee hee! yo hoee hee!' to the hounds made them fight furiously, so much so that bruin broke from cover and started on the chase just before we reached shooting distance. Further into the wood the chase led. Soon the sound of the pursuing dogs ceased much to our surprise. We appealed to the nearest Indian for an explanation. 'Lo-co-see (bear) climb tree,' was the brief reply, and later, when we reached the dogs, they were running wildly around on the bank of a dark creek. We were again at a loss to comprehend the situation, until we were shown by the Indians a leaning tree, the top, of which reached to the further side of the creek, over which bruin had safely passed. 'Lo-co-see hirqua' (bear gone).

Three hours tramping through the swamp and hot sun had taken all of the enthusiasm out of us, and we were ready to play quits, but the stalwart red men had defiance in their faces as they said: 'Big Lo-co-see; fight heap; Indian kill Lo-co-see to-day.' Away to the left the brown legs of Little Tiger could be seen twinkling through the foliage; he had found some fresh tracks of a cub, and in his eagerness to capture a baby bear he proved a similar nature to his little pale-faced brother. But the stern hunters had no time for a cub, and soon started for old bruin, who by this time had crossed the marsh and gotten into a tree on the opposite bank, and by this trickery put the creek behind him. This did not daunt a Seminole Indian. Wading the shallow part of the creek, with water to the armpits, again cooled our ardour, but safely depended on not losing sight of the Indians, as we were miles in the swamp, and with no hope of finding our way out without the guidance of our red pilots. At last the bear was driven to a small island and surrounded, the island covered with tall grass and weeds hiding both dogs and bear. The dogs grew furious, and several times forced the bear to stand and fight, and such a battle as it was the dogs didn't hesitate to take hold of old bruin, and as a result were badly lacerated from the blows of her powerful paw. We closed in and our game was in a trap. The Indians were in their future heaven, but the tenderfoot was getting very shy of being hugged. Bruin, now finding herself cornered, made a break for the open, and as she emerged from the tall grass, with the dogs at her heels, she met the stalwart figure of Tom Tiger. Rising on her hind legs with open arms, she made one dash for him, when stepping back in a cool and deliberate manner, he pulled the trigger of his 'scatter' gun and emptied both barrels into the bear's side. This ended the chase, and a happier set of Indians the world never saw. Immediately they drew their knives and commenced skinning the bear. As the skin adheres very tenaciously it should be taken of at once, as it comes off much easier; besides, it is difficult to scrape away all the fatty tissue after it cools, and wherever any remains it rots the pelt.

"The Indians' method of educating their dogs for hunting bear is well worth knowing. They take the gall of the bear and thoroughly saturate the nostrils of the young dog. This is excruciating pain to the dogs, and they howl and whine for hours; but it makes 'bear dogs' out of them perfect on a trail, and this is the point with the Indian.

"The huge carcass of bruin was divided and each Indian carried a load to camp. A fire was soon built and a huge chunk of bear meat was thrown on the coals. All night long they cooked and ate, the tenderfoot getting into his hammock beneath the boughs of the oaks."

THE LAZO.

THE Lazo is of great antiquity. It is said to be depicted in the ruins of Nineveh. An early Persian manuscript, preserved in the Escorial, shows a sporteman (whom I suppose royal by his Olympian expression and careless seat) in the act of catching a wild ass with a nicely plaited lazo. The monarch bestrides a rather "stocky"-looking, dark-coloured horse, with four white feet and a white face. A bow, quivers, and a sabre are hung from his saddle, and a sort of housing half covers the horse. How the wild ass is to be restrained, even by the hand of a monarch, is not at first sight evident, for the lazo is neither fixed to the saddle after the fashion of the Gaucbos, nor is a half-turn taken round the pommel, in the style adopted by Vaqueros in Mexico and Texas. Apart from this detail, all is as realistically set forth as it would be to-day in a photograph. The horse bears away from the beast lazoed, and the king sits a little to one side, exactly as a Texan cowboy or an Argentine Gaucho sits under similar circumstances. Irises and narcissi spring up under the horse's feet, and an applauding group of angels peep out of a cloud, whilst in the middle distance another Persian Gaucho shoots an antelope with an arrow whilst galloping at full speed.

One could have wished that the lazo had been depicted nearer to the ass's head, for hanging as it does, just on the withers, the line of most resistance (so dear to monarchs) has evidently been adopted.

The Lapland'ers are said to lazo their reindeer, and the Tartars and modern Australians use a rudimentary lazo fixed to a long pole in order to catch wild or refractory horses. The Poles, Croatians, and Wallachians, with the Hungarians, seem to have used the lazo till about the beginning of the present century. A picture by the German artist, Richter, shows Polish remounts for the German cavalry being lazoed in the Zwinger at Dresden. The horses look as wild as a Texan "bronco" or an Argentine "bagual," and the attitude of men and animals and the way the ropes are coiled and thrown, are identical with those adopted in Spanish America to-day. The lazo appears to run through a ring in the pommel of the saddle.

It is, however, in Spanish America, where the art has been most developed. This is on account of the open country and the vast numbers of wild and semi-wild horses which, up to the middle of the present century, overspread its plains. The lazo may be said to have two great schools: one the style adopted in the Argentine Republic, and the other what may be called the school of Mexico. The Argentine Gaucho and the Brazilian of the province of Rio Grande use a raw-hide lazo, plaited generally in four till within about eight or ten feet of the end, where the plaiting is usually of six, eight, or ten strands, according to fancy. The lazo terminates in a strong iron ring, which is spliced into the hide so as to remain stiff, and stick out in a straight line from the lazo. At the end kept in the hand or attached to the saddle a Turk's head and plaited loop form the finishing. The thickness of the lazo is about that of the little finger, and the hide is kept soft and pliable by frequent applications of grease, for which purpose a piece of raw mutton fat is found to answer best. The Indians use mare's grease, but bacon, oil, or any salted grease is found to turn the hide. To make a lazo the hide of a cow is procured, denuded of hair, and the various strands are softened, either by beating with a mallet or being run through an iron ring, or worked between a piece of split wood (called a "Mordaça"). When properly softened, the inside of the hide is as white as flour, and, if well greased, will last soft for many years. The ordinary length of an Argentine lazo is about sixty-six feet, though exceptionally tall and powerful men sometimes use lazos of eighty and even ninety feet in length.

A skilful man on foot will catch a horse in a corral at the distance of ten or twelve yards, throwing at the neck. At ten yards he will secure the two fore feet, or a fore and a hind foot, or both hind feet, or, catching the animal round the neck will, by imparting a vibratory motion to the rope, place a half-hitch round the nose, thus forming what is called a "medio bozal," or half-halter. To catch the feet is called "pialar"—from pie, a foot. The effect of catching by the feet is to throw the creature violently to the ground. Catching round the neck chokes the animal to the ground, if enough force is used. In either case, the moment the lazo tightens, the lazoer throws himself back on the rope, like a seaman hauling in a sheet, and, digging his heels into the ground, bears heavily on the rope with his left hand, which he puts as far behind his back as possible. The strain is most severe, cutting the unaccustomed hand and destroying the clothes, so that in many cases a leather apron is worn to keep off the chafe. A strong colt of five years old will drag three or four men round a corral, if they try to stop him by sheer strength, and the lazo be not tightened high on the neck, near the ears; but a boy of sixteen, used to the work, by watching his opportunity, will easily stop the same animal.

To throw a long lazo, height is of great advantage, as, other things being equal, a tall man can throw a longer lazo than a man of low stature. The lazo is prepared for throwing by making a noose from two and a half to four yards in circumference at the ring end of the rope. The ring should be slipped down to about a third of the circumference of the noose. The remainder of the rope is coiled, and two or three coils taken into the right hand together with the noose; the rest of the coils are held in the left hand. Care must be observed not to leave too much slack rope between the coils in the right and left hands, as it is apt to get entangled when the lazo leaves the hand especially if on horseback. Swinging the noose as many times round the head as is required to give the sufficient momentum, taking and care that this noose flies open and with a slight upward inclination, it is then let go, rather than thrown, when the hand is just above the head on the right side, and slides through the air, uncoiling as it flies.

Like throwing a fly, putting screw on a ball at billiards, and taking a close counter of carte, it is an art not easily described, and best learnt by demonstration and practice.

To become a perfect lazoer (the Spanish word is enlazador) the lazo must have been familiar to the thrower from his youth. To be able to catch a horse in a corral round the neck with some certainty, can be learnt in about six months by a young and active man accustomed to athletics.

The lazo on horseback is a very different and far more dangerous affair. Accidents are frequent and often fatal, and the business should not be attempted by any one who has not learnt the art in youth. In all cattle districts, in both North and South America, men maimed, with the lazo—having lost either fingers, or a hand, or foot—are as common as "main-sheet men" used to be in seaport towns in the days of "windjammers."

The lazo on horseback can be used with far greater effect than on foot. From sixteen to eighteen yards is a fair distance at which to catch an animal when going at full speed. The faster the horse is going, the more easily is the rope thrown; and of course the danger increases in the same ratio. The method of casting on horseback is precisely similar to that used on foot. A larger loop or noose (called armada in Spanish) can be used, and care must be taken not to entangle the coils of the "slack" with the reins, or to catch the horse's hind legs, or head or his forefect, or to touch him anywhere with the rope unless he is an extremely tame and tractable animal. For this reason and less elevation must be given to the point of the noose, as it gyrates round the head, on horseback than on foot; that is to say, it should be swung almost level round the head before casting. The end of the lazo retained by the thrower is buttoned into a strong iron ring fixed behind the rider's right thigh to a piece of hide about three inches in length, which piece of hide is firmly sewn into the ring of the upper part of the strong hide surcingale which forms the girth of the Argentine saddle.

This saddle is called el recado; it is a modification of the old "Bur" saddle of the time of Charles V., and is known as albarda to the Spaniards and berda to the Moors. It is composed of several pieces, and surmounted by a rug or sheep-skin; the stirrups are hung long, from the middle of the saddle, and are so small as only to admit the toes. The Spaniards anciently called riding in this saddle "riding à la brida" as opposed to the short stirrups and high pommel and cantle of the Moorish saddle, which style of riding was called "à la gineta." The Mexican saddle has grown out of this latter style, the stirrups having been lengthened in order to facilitate mounting and sticking to a wild horse.

When the lazo has been thrown on horseback, and the animal caught round the neck or horns, the difficulty and danger begin. Should the "quarry" be a wild horse or mare, care has to be taken not to let it cross either in front or behind of the mounted horse. If it does so, there is great danger of a half-turn being taken in the rider's arm or leg, or even a whole turn round his body. The least that can happen is that the mounted horse gets entangled in the rope, becomes frightened, and an accident is almost certain.

In South America the inhabitants of the Brazilian province of Rio Grande do Sol hold first place for skill with the lazo. After them come the inhabitants of the Republic of Uruguay and the Gauchos of the province of Buenos Ayres.

The Chilians use a slightly different lazo, without a ring, and with a loop and button at both ends. It is twisted in three strands, and known as a "toreal." They are skilful, but, their country being more broken, are inferior to the men on the east side of the Andes.

The second school of lazoers, is that of Mexico. There the lazo is never made of hide, but of horsehair or ixtle, or of the fibre of the aloe. No iron ring is ever used, and the lazo is all one piece, not having an adcition spliced on at the end, as in South America.

Being of lighter material, the Mexican lazo cannot be thrown so far as that of the Pampas. It is more easily carried, however, requires no grease, closes more readily on the neck of the animal lazoed, and neither cuts a horse's legs nor a man's hands so severely as a raw-hide rope.

It is on horseback that the difference between the two schools is most manifest. The Mexican lazo is made fast to the saddle in front of the rider, and hence the difficulty of throwing to the off side is largely obviated; as it is easy to pass the lazo over the horse's head and keep the strain on the rope, and hence far fewer accidents occur in Mexico and Texas than in the Pampas. The Mexican system is, however, less effectual against the efforts of a heavy animal, as the lazo being fastened to the horn of the saddle when an animal is caught the rope grazes the body of the rider during the process of the struggle, and it appears improbable that the horse can throw as much weight on to the rope as he can under the Argentine system of fastening. It is usual in Mexico not to tie or make fast the end of the lazo to the saddle, but to take a half-hitch round the horse, and hold the end in the left hand. It is considered very dangerous to tie the lazo to the bow of the saddle and a man who does so is said to amarrar in muerte—that is, to tie a death-knot. Mexicans are very dexterous with the lazo on foot, as, owing to the lightness of their rope, it is very easily thrown. Texans, Kansans, and men of the North-West often use a common hemp rope without a ring or button, but merely tie a bowline on a bight, and pass the coil of the rope through the bight to form a noose. Texan cowboys are often extremely skilful, performing as many feats with the lazo as the Mexicans or Gauchos, but seldom equalling the Brazilians of Rio Grande, who are the smartest men with lazo or bolas, or on a wild horse, that the writer has encountered.

The lazo, with the bolas, the boomerang, the spear, and bow, in a few years will be but memories. Rifle and gun will have replaced or rendered them unnecessary, and the descendants of the wild riders who mounted "bagual" and "bronco" holding them by the ear, and getting to their seats as a bird lights upon a bough, will wait to catch the tramcar at the corner of the street. Therefore this short description may have its interest, being a sort of record of a dream, dreamed upon pampas and on prairies sleeping upon a saddle under the southern stars, or galloping across the plains in the hot sun, photographed in youth upon the writer's brain, and, when recalled, more vivid than affairs of State which happened yesterday.

THE GAMBLING SPIRIT.

BUT a cursory examination of Bankruptcy Court reports is needed to reveal the fact that insolvency is almost invariably due to some form of improvident speculation. The debtor always attributes his failure to losses incurred on the race-course, at the gaming table, or in the Stock Exchange, and although his extravagant mode of living is usually a contributory cause, yet it is seldom that, alone, which is responsible for his ruin.

A study of the proceedings before the President of Divorce discloses similar conditions in another form. The petitioner or respondent have gambled in love—they have married, perhaps, after only a fortnight's acquaintance ; they have married too young ; they have married a much older person for the sake of social advancement or pecuniary gain—in a word, they have speculated in matrimony, and lost.

And the Coroner, more often than otherwise, is faced with the same story. The suicide has gambled away his honour, his inheritance—or someone else's, and, unable to face the coming exposure, has sought escape.

With such facts staring out of the columns of every daily paper, it is undeniable that there is much to be said on the side of those benevolent Puritans, who agitate for the abolition of racing, and for the assistance of the mighty arm of the law in the suppression of gambling in every form.

It is, apparently, impossible to impress them with the infallibility of the ancient truism, that if one form of speculation is abolished another will at once be found to take its place, and so ad infinitum—of which truth a classic example is furnished by the time-honoured anecdote of the two prisoners-of-war who, for want of better recreation, wagered their evening meal on a race between two raindrops down the window pane. But a point, of which these well-meaning gentlemen are always oblivious, is that the proportion of people, who are ruined, or even temporarily embarrassed, in consequence of betting, is extraordinarily small in comparison with the enormous number, who derive only harmless amusement therefrom ; and, further, that in every single instance, in which gambling has led to ruin, the cause is to be found, not in the fact that the victim was seduced by the temptations of any particular form of speculation, but that he was cursed with that most fatal failing, to which mankind is subject—namely, the Gambling Spirit—a failing which would inevitably lead to embarrassment, were there no such place as a Racecourse, or a Casino, in existence. For there is always Lloyd's, or the Stock Exchange, or Gold Prospecting, or innumerable other media, the abolition of which the most rabid Anti-Gambler could hardly contemplate.

The fact that the abolition of Racing, or of Boxing, would remove one particular form of the temptation, is an insufficient excuse for depriving hundreds of thousands of innocent enjoyment, and tens of thousands of the means of livelihood. And if any sport is to be attacked, let a start be made with professional football, which is the cause of far heavier betting, and consequent hardship, among the lowest classes, who are least able to bear it, than all other sports combined.

The Gambling Spirit is a disease, just as dipsomania is a disease,—but does any sane man, except the few rabid cranks who may be placed on a par with the Anti-Gambling League, suggest that universal teetotalism should be enforced for the sake of a few maniacs.

The whole attraction of betting lies, of course, in the hope of getting something for nothing, of making money without having to work for it; and the most remarkable thing about it is the way in which ordinarily sensible people seem to lose their sense of proportion, and make bets without any consideration of the fairness or otherwise of the odds they accept.

A man, who will drive the closest bargain in a business transaction, will, though totally ignorant of the science of racing, cheerfully accept, say, four to one about a horse, of whose connections, antecedents, fitness, temperament or prospects he knows absolutely nothing, and against whom the real odds are, as likely as not, to be nearer forty than four,—and he invests perhaps ten pounds in this venture, to which he would not entrust ten pence, if submitted to him as a business proposition. Similarly during the Rubber Boom in 1910, thousands rushed to invest the savings of a lifetime in concerns, of whose very name they had been ignorant until recommended to them the previous night by some equally speculative friend. And the fact that many of the companies were known to be the merest gambles, and some actually fraudulent, was no deterrent to people who bought them only with the idea of selling out again in a week or so, and thus getting something for nothing.

The universally acknowledged fact, that no man, save the immortal and cunning Jaggers, ever made a profit at Monte Carlo in the long run, does not deter millions from trying their luck there year after year, and the subtle attraction of the game is witnessed by the circumstance that such a hard-headed man as the late Sam Lewis, the famous money-lender, himself confessed to losing ten thousand pounds annually at Trente et Quaranie. But Sam Lewis could well afford to lose £10,000, and he always left Monte Carlo directly he had lost it. And that is the great dividing line between harmless and pernicious gambling—the strength of will to cut the losses.

One man says:—"I'll go racing with a £10 note, and when I've lost it, I'll stop." His gamble is, morally and socially, quite innocuous.

Another says exactly the same, but when he has lost it, he wagers another tenner in the effort to regain the first. The gambling spirit—and the curse of the sport, for he is invariably put forward by its opponents as a typical product, and serves as the keynote of their chorus of reproach, whereas he is actually an infinitesimal minority.

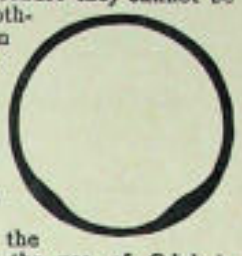
Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE result of the Two Thousand Guineas, 1912, has provided a surprise though the position of Mr. H. B. Duryea's Sweeper II is by no means unjustified by his two-year-old form, for he beat both Jaeger and White Star in his juvenile days, the one in the Triennial Stakes at Ascot and the other in the Middle Park Plate in which he finished second to Mr. J. B. Joel's Absurd, who beat him easily, White Star third, and it was said then that the favourite was very unlucky, that he was badly crossed at the start and took a long while to settle down; he finished a length and a half behind Sweeper II. Butalthough the position of Mr. Duryea's colt is discounted by the assertion that White Star had a bad passage in the Middle Park Plate, Sweeper II beat the speedy Jaeger in the Triennial Stakes at Ascot and at Goodwood in the Richmond Stakes he defeated Charmian a neck, Melody third and Absurd fourth. The two-year-old form is not always a reliable guide, but taking Jaeger as a line it would seem to indicate in this instance that Sweeper II had made a consistent improvement, for he has repeated that which he did in his juvenile days. We have yet, of course, to hear why it was that the well-tried and heavily backed White Star did not win. They tried him good enough to win any Two Thousand, so it was said, and immediately after that trial the stable came in and backed him. The colt had been at a short price for the Guineas for a fortnight before the race and during the few days preceding it the last offer against him was even money: so that it must have been deemed a very good thing for him and it is possible that he started at odds on. Sweeper II has evidently been backed all through and it is more than probable that the Stockbridge people had a very shrewd idea of what was likely to happen. He was quoted at 7 to 1 at the end of the week before last. On the day before the race Sweeper II came to 9 to 2, second favourite level with Hall Cross, but on the day of the race he went out 6 to 1 and evens a place and it is presumable that this was caused by money coming for both the favourite and Hall Cross, who appears to have been hotly supported at the close of the betting both ways, as he maintained his position of the previous day and they laid 6 to 4 on him for the situation. There was no doubt about the method of Sweeper II's win. He had White Star in trouble the moment he went up to him a quarter of a mile from home at which point Sweeper II came to the front and stalling off a hot challenge from Jaeger, who was admitted to be extremely fast as a two-year-old, won in good style by a length. Hall Cross only half a length behind Jaeger. The "heads" at home picked them with fair success even though a warm favourite was beaten and a 100 to 1 chance ran second, for both Sweeper II and Hall Cross were not allowed to run loose and the "Knuts" probably got out over the race. Danny Maher rode Sweeper II, and Wootton, who has not been having a great deal of success since his return to England, was on the favourite, though it is said that he rides Lomond in the Derby and that Stern will steer Mr. Joel's horse. Walter Griggs rode Jaeger, and Saxby, who was out here in the cold weather, had the ride on Hall Cross. Jaeger is owned by Mr. Neumann and Hall Cross by Mr. C. Bower Ismay who purchased him for 1,900 guineas at the Newmarket Yearling Sales. He was bred by Sir Tatton Sykes and Mr. A. Cholmondeley.

SWEEPER II, who is a chestnut colt by Broomstick out of Ravello II, is owned by Mr. H. B. Duryea, who trains with Mr. Atty Persse at Stockbridge. He was only out four times last year, winning twice and being placed on both the other occasions. He first ran at Ascot, where he won the Triennial Stakes, 6 furlongs, beating Jaeger and Corncob at level weights, 8st. 12lb., and seven others. Corncob started favourite at 5 to 2, Sweeper II 3 to 1 and he won by half a length in slow time on a fast course. His next appearance was at the Newmarket First July where he ran third in the July Stakes, 5 furlongs 140 yards, to White Star 9st., Melody 8st. 11lb., and his own weight was 9st. Melody started favourite and Sweeper II was second favourite, the winner at 10 to 1. White Star won a neck and Sweeper II was two lengths away third and it is recorded that he swerved badly at the finish and lost ground thereby. He next ran at Goodwood where he secured the Richmond Stakes, 6 furlongs, beating Charmian and Melody at 3lb., and Absurd, the subsequent winner of the Middle Park Plate, was fourth. Sweeper II won a neck only and started well-backed at 11 to 10 against. His last effort was in the Middle Park Plate, which Absurd won in a canter by eight lengths, White Star finishing third one and a half lengths behind Sweeper II and, as already mentioned, Mr. Joel's first string was stated to have had more of the luck of the race as something chopped across him at the gate and he never got on his legs, but there are often excuses made for a defeated favourite and White Star's two-year-old form was very uneven, so much so that some critics cast grave aspersions on his honesty and seemed to think that he on occasion did not put it all in. He was so highly tried for this recent engagement and he was so badly beaten that it lends some colour to these rumours. If White Star's trial was as good as it was stated to be, he would not have been beaten as early in the day as he was: for even allowing for improvement on the part of his rivals the gallop was still good enough to lead us to expect better things of him. Sweeper II must now hold a chance at Epsom, but we shall not get a really accurate Derby market until after the Newmarket Stakes is run on the 15th May. After we have seen things like Aiglon and England boomed nearly to the top of the Derby betting in the same way that Shetland and other horses were boomed last year it ought to give us pause. So far as things have shaped this year it does not look as if White Star were a Derby winner and we shall not, so it is said, be given an opportunity of seeing Mr. Hulton's Lomond out before the Newmarket Stakes, in which race it is stated he is a certain starter.

MR. L. NEUMANN'S Jaeger, who ran second, is a bay colt by Eager out of Mesange. None of the Eagers on past experience stay though they are most of them extremely fast over short distances and this colt was said to possess all the family characteristics as a two-year-old and to be able to be very brilliant. Eager is by Enthusiast (Sterling—Cherry Duchess) out of Greeba, who was by Melton out of Sunrise and although he has a tremendous lot of Stockwell in him none of his progeny have ever made much name for themselves over a distance of ground. Jaeger is one of Mr. Ludwig Neumann's own breeding and was foaled at Mr. Neumann's stud farm at Winborne, Dorset. Jaeger is trained by Gilpin and ran ten times as a two-year-old, winning on four occasions. His first effort was when he ran third in the Sandown Park Stud Produce Stakes to Wrack and Le Touquet; Jingling Geordie being amongst the defeated. As already noted above, he ran second in the Triennial Stakes at Ascot to Sweeper II and shortly after that he won the Stud Produce Stakes at Newmarket beating Limelight and Le Touquet, winning in a common canter but beating only a very moderate field. The next time he was out he defeated a very big field in the Reach Plate at the Newmarket Second July, thirty-five ran and Jaeger, who started favourite, won easily by three lengths from Jessica and Franconi. They were a moderate lot behind him. He secured another bracket the next time he was out and when in receipt of 11lbs. from Lomond in the Hurst Park Foal Stakes he beat Mr. Hulton's colt a length, Tonypandy third four lengths away. The distance was only five furlongs and Lomond was asked a good deal to give a quick beginner like Jaeger nearly a stone. His next success was the Cominal Produce Stakes of York in which giving Saracen 15lbs. he made a dead heat of it after a very fierce battle over the last half of the five-furlong journey. Both Jaeger and Saracen were well backed. When he next ran at Doncaster he was down the course in the Champagne Stakes to White Star, Melody and Jingling Geordie, and it is probable that he was feeling the effects of his recent battles. There was a long delay at the post owing to White Star bolting, but this involuntary excursion did not prevent Mr. Joel's colt winning a head from Melody, Jingling Geordie close up. Jaeger's next adventure was in the Triennial Produce Stakes at Newmarket, for which he started a hot favourite but succumbed by half a length to Saracen, to whom he was giving 6lbs. He also ran second in the Imperial Produce Plate, 6 furlongs, at Kempton and which race was won by Fruition 7st. 11lb., Jaeger 9st. 1lb., and Lorenzo was third. He finished the season by running fourth in the Moulton Stakes which was won by Alope.



MR. C. BOWER ISMAY'S Hall Cross, a brown colt by Desmond out of Altasse, ran five times as a two-year-old and won twice. His first appearance was at Epsom last year when he ran third to Quintanona and Bullfinch in the Great Surrey Foal Stakes and there was a moderate field behind the placed ones. At his next essay he won the British Dominion Two-year-old Plate at Sandown beating Gallon and the colt by Songcraft out of Simonsworth. He was unplaced in the National Breeders' Produce Stakes at Sandown Park, in which the filly by Spearmint out of Adula beat the favourite Jingling Geordie by half a length in a close finish: nineteen ran. Hall Cross then won the 5-furlong Produce Stakes at Liverpool last July beating Bullfinch, King Oswald and Newminster II, who were the only other runners, and he came home an easy winner by two lengths. His last appearance at the end of last season was in the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes at Derby, in which he ran second to Belleisle, to whom he was giving 3lbs., and Alope, the subsequent winner of the Moulton Stakes, was third. He ran very well in the Two Thousand Guineas and finished only half a length behind Jaeger, who himself was a length behind the winner.

VICTORY at Newmarket in the Two Thousand Guineas has not been followed in a very high percentage of cases by victory at Epsom and only twenty-three horses have won the double, the list being Smolensko, Cadlan, Bay Middleton, Cotherstone, West Australian, Macaroni, Gladiateur, Lord Lyon, Pretender, Shotover, Ormonde, Ayrshire, Donovan, Common, Isinglass, Ladas, Galtee More, Flying Fox, Diamond Jubilee, Rocksand, St. Amant, Minoru and Sunstar. We shall no doubt hear all about why it was White Star failed when the mail papers arrive, but if a horse has a "yellow streak" a severe course like the Rowley Mile may be calculated to find it out. And yet in spite of its severity "roarers" have won this race and won moreover in good form. The best known cases of "roarers" that have won this race are Bothwell in 1871, Prince Charlie in 1872 and Charibut in 1879. Prince Charlie, who it is recorded roared like a bull, won against a very good field and, thanks principally to John Osborne's fine finish, beat the speedy Cremorne a neck in a slashing finish. It has always been considered that although John Osborne holds the riding record with six wins, Tom Cannon knew this course as well as any jockey riding in his time and he rode times and again with great distinction in this race and when he had by no means the best ride. On Enthusiast, for instance, he fairly stole the race from Fred Barrett on Donovan in 1889 and twice he nearly sharped Fred Archer out of it, once in 1883 when

DANGEROUS OLD FASHIONS
Not to be followed.

Old habits are often better than new ones, but not always. For instance, the old-fashioned method of cleaning the teeth and mouth with tooth-powders and tooth-pastes is a complete mistake.

Brushing the teeth with tooth-powders and tooth-pastes can never safeguard them from tooth-destroying microbes; for the simple reason that the parts which are most liable to attack, the backs of the molars and the fissures and interstices of the teeth—the very parts where the microbes live and thrive—are not purified because they cannot be reached by tooth-powders and tooth-pastes. Only a liquid dentifrice can penetrate everywhere, and when it is antiseptic it destroys all the enemies which attack the teeth. Odol is such a dentifrice, and has such a practical antiseptic effect that it effectively arrests all bacterial inroads and fermentation processes.

The complete disinfection of the mouth and teeth resulting from the use of Odol is especially due to a remarkable property which this preparation possesses and which causes it to be absorbed by the surface of the mucous membrane and in the hollows of the teeth, so that it here deposits a store of antiseptic matter whose action continues for some hours. By regular cleansing with Odol healthy teeth are kept absolutely intact, and teeth already impaired are preserved from further destruction. For this reason Odol must certainly be regarded as the best of all known preparations for cleansing the mouth and teeth.

Galliard beat Goldfield a head and again two years later when by the same narrow margin he only just failed on Crafton to upset the odds of 3 to 1 on Paradox. It was a great relief to the plunging brigade when the latter's number went up, as no one would tell what had won excepting the man in the box. Probably the easiest win in the Two Thousand was Macgregor's in 1870 when he cantered home five lengths in front and it was impossible to say now much he had in hand. The Derby of that year was thereupon regarded as a gilt-edged certainty for him that odds of 9 to 4 were freely laid on him, but he broke down in the race and finished only fourth to Kingcraft, who had run third in the Guineas, for which race he started favourite. Surefoot's win in 1890 was also an easy one and curiously enough he was the property of Mr. A. W. Merry, son of the owner of Macgregor. Surefoot only won by a length and a half, and he was never asked to gallop: but he was badly beaten in the Derby of that year won by Sainfoin, and he proved to be totally unable to stay the Epsom one and a half mile.

The first two Tollygunge Club Gymkhana Meetings have been fixed for the 29th June and the 6th July and the prospectuses will be published very shortly. There will, we understand, be two more meetings in July to make up the customary number of four prior to the opening of the Monsoon Meetings in Calcutta in August.

H.E. the Governor will attend the last of the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings on the 14th September prior to his return to Darjeeling.

The Darjeeling Gymkhana Races opened on Saturday last, the 4th May, and were very well attended and run in fine weather, the recent rain obligingly clearing off and permitting of the proceedings being got through without the customary downpour that has been Darjeeling's portion during the past month or so. Their Excellencies and their staff arrived in time for the first race and stayed throughout the proceedings. The Colonel and officers of the 3rd Middlesex Regiment gave a big luncheon before the races and amongst those present who are well known in the racing world were Major Eustace Crawley, Major Hayes, Major Ormond Winter, Captain Liddell, Captain Hodgson, Mr. Evers, Mr. McCall, Captain Large, Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie, Mr. Barrow and all the stewards of the Meeting—Messrs. Lang, Grant Gordon, Little, Mackie, Piffard, Shillingford, Dalzell and Mackenzie. By kind permission of the Colonel and officers the band of the Middlesex Regiment played throughout the afternoon. Captain "Mickey" Hodgson officiated as Starter and performed his office with much precision, the occasions when ponies were left at the gate being in no way his fault. The racing was not of a very interesting order as fields were very small and in six out of the seven races the favourites won at odds on. There was only one firm of bookmakers present, Messrs. Ducasse and Co. of Calcutta, and they asserted that they had a thin time of it as there were plenty of people ready to lay the odds on and only one outsider came to the rescue of the fielders, "Mr. Roland's" Dandy, who won the Lhassa Plate, upsetting the hot favourite Kate, on whom odds of 4 to 1 on were freely laid. The winner's price was 4 to 1 against. Circus Girl won the Asian Cup very easily from her two opponents, Water Lily and Portland, from the former of whom she was getting 11lbs., and it made her chance in the Governor's Cup on the second day look very rosy. The telegraphic report of the second day's proceedings will be found in our turf columns.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes:—Through the courtesy of Mr. H. Donne, the Secretary, I had the privilege of looking over the first entries for the Bangalore and Mysore Races, respectively, which closed last night (Wednesday) before they were sent to the Press this morning, and I must say that taken all round the entries show a wonderful improvement over those of recent years. The entries for Bangalore are particularly good and include several new stables from Bombay and other parts of India; among these may be mentioned the names of H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala, the Nawab Zada of Bhopal, the Chief of Mahisal, Mr. Obaidulla Khan of Bhopal, Nawab Man Mahomed Mainuddin Khan Bahadur of Hyderabad, Messrs. Jones and Pugh, Gutschke, "Lion," "Alp," Garda, and one or two others. The young Zemindar of Sivagiri who has shown himself to be a very keen sportsman since he made his début on the turf last year, has come very prominently before the public in Southern India lately and he is supporting the Bangalore meeting very liberally. Raja Venugopal Bahadur, whose colours have not been seen in these parts lately, has again gone in for racing and made a few entries for the coming meeting here. Of the old stables that come down year after year the names may be mentioned of Sir A. A. Apear, Mr. B. P. Chowdhury, Mr. Man Mohan, Mr. A. N. Das, Mr. Garda, and a few others. A few new names are also to be seen among local owners, but the Stewards have been much disappointed in the entries from the 7th (Q.O.) Hussars, a regiment that came here with a big reputation for racing. Major Rankin is the only officer who has entered anything from this regiment so far and it is hoped that some of the others will follow his example. H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore has again given his very liberal support to the meeting both by donations and entries, while his no less sporting brother, the Yuvaraja, who has recently added to his string of horses, has supported the meeting largely. The only regrettable falling off seems to occur in the country-bred and pony classes, but there is a corresponding increase in the entries for horse races and Arab ponies. The whole of South India will be represented in the country-bred class by only four owners, viz., H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore, H. H. the Yuvaraja, Dr. Morris Travers and Mr. A. Hamed, while the north will be represented by the Kour Sahib of Patiala.

The Stewards are at some loss in finding a suitable handicapper for both the Bangalore and Mysore meetings. I understand that the C.T.C. and W.I.T.C. Handicappers are both going home for a few months' spell and Colonel Young, of the R.H.A. at Umballa, who was asked to undertake the duties has written saying that he will do so should he not be going home.

Comparing the entries for this year with those of the past year, I find that for the Macintire Plate, a six furlong race for horses which have not won a flat race of the value of Rs. 900 or over, since 31st March 1910, there are 24 entries against a total of 15 last year; the Pony Trials, a five-furlong sprint, for Arabs 14-1 and under, has attracted 17 entries as against only 8 last year, and for the Horse Trials there are 18 entries, the same number which entered in 1911. The Paddock Plate, for ponies 14-2 and under, which have not won a flat race of the value of Rs. 200 or over since 31st March 1911, has also drawn the same number as last year, when 8 entered, while there are 8 entries for the C.-B. Plate which attracted only 5 last year.

There should be some good racing on the second day, when H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore's Cup will be run for. The entries for this race are :—H. H. the Maharaja's Eustace, Sporran, Harebell and Mary B., H. H. the Yuvaraja's Miracle and Milford Lake, H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's Hamara, Sir A. A. Apcar's Royal Scotland the Nawab Zada's Parkhill, Mr. Man Mohan's Lady Spring, Mr. Gutschke's Wise Hawk, the Zemindar of Sivagiri's Barm and Black Douglas, Mr. Alps' Cellarer, Mr. Garda's Bombastic and Lady Erna, Colonel Desaraj Urs' Eva B., Mr. Das's Nuncio, Messrs. Heather and Jones' Santoinette, Mr. Sander's Rapin and Messrs. M. Goculdas and A. Nanjee's Cheeky, a 14-1 pony but a very fast goer ; the Eastern Plate, an Arab Pony Race which drew only 6 entries last year, has now attracted 20, and for the Horse Scurry there are 25 entries against a total of 18 last year. The entries for the Ulsoor Plate (17 against 15 last year) include H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore's new bay English gelding Kismet II. who, if he is anything like fit at the time, will take a lot of beating.

The Bangalore Cup Race will be run on the third day of the meeting and there are 24 entries for it, the same as last year ; probably second and final entries might raise the number slightly. Most of the horses entered for the Maharaja's Cup race are entered for this also with the addition of H. H. the Maharaja's Merry Bird, Mr. R. Craig McKerrow's Victo, Mr. L. Kantaraj Urs' Informer and Mr. W. Lauder's Kilmarnock. The Cambridgeshire, a six-furlong sprint race for ponies, has attracted 18 entries against 12 last season and the Leonidas Purse race has filled with no less than 28 names against 19 of last year, and second and final entries may yet swell the number. There has been no increase for the Grant Plate, a race for C.-B. horses for which 9 have entered.

The big race on the last day will be the All-Horse Handicap (Rs. 1,000 presented by the Stewards of the C.T.C.) for which there are at present 28 entries against 17 last year. The Cantonment Plate entries show an increase of 2 (14 against 12), and for the Ali Asker Plate there are 13 entries against only 5 last year. There is a decrease in the entries for the July Plate (18 against 26 in 1911) but when second and final entries come in there may be some more to add to this race. The Club Plate has attracted 9 against 7 and I notice that the distance of this race has been altered from 1¼ miles to 1 mile.

Mr. Donne, the Secretary, having to run both the Bangalore and Mysore meetings, told me that some of his correspondence has been mis-sent to Mysore and it is possible that when the same reaches him here to-night or to-morrow, there may be some further entries.

First Entries for the Mysore Races also closed last night and though they have quite come up to expectations, I think they might have been better. The fact that the meeting has been fixed for the end of June instead of early in the month may account for some owners not entering their horses. The public will be glad to know that Sir A. A. Apcar's name has again been added to the list of Stewards, as also that of Major Rankin of the 7th Hussars.

The entries for the Macintire Plate this year are 13 against 16, for the Karanji Plate 21 the same as last year, the Grant Plate for country-breds has drawn 10 against 7 and the Fort Plate 17 against only 5. There are 12 against 13 entries for the Pony Plate ; 15 against 21 for the Maharaja's Cup, the entrants being :—H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore's Mary B and Harebell, H. H. the Yuvaraja's Miracle and Milford Lake, H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's Mil and Hamara, Sir A. A. Apcar's Royal Scotland, the Zemindar of Sivagiri's Black Douglas, Mr. Garda's Bombastic and Lady Erna, Messrs. Goculdas and Nanji's Cheeky, Mr. W. Lauder's Kilmarnock, Messrs. Heather and Jones' Santoinette, Mr. Das' Nuncio, and Mr. Gutschke's Wise Hawk. Six candidates have entered for the Birthday Cup against 18 last year, but there are sure to be a few more before final entries close ; the Yuvaraja's Cup race has drawn 10 against 7 entries of last year and the Steward's Plate which has this year been made a race for Arab ponies 14-1 and under (instead of being a race for C.-B's. as last year) has attracted no less than 20 entries, only 8 having figured in the C.-B. class last year ; the distance has also been altered from 5 to 6 furlongs. The Palace Cup, which drew 23 entries in 1911, has this year attracted only 17, but this also is expected will be increased when final entries are in ; for the Mysore Plate there are 23 entries against 21 and for the Farm Plate 9 against 8, the Royal Purse has drawn 16 against 13 and the Chamundi Plate 14 against 5.

The new colours which will be sported at Mysore this year will be those of H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala, Captain Montgomery and Major Dyer, of the 7th Dragoons (Trimulgherry), Major Rankin, 7th Hussars, and most of the Bombay owners who have entered for the Bangalore meeting, as well as our old friend Colonel Logan Home.

Major C. Rankin, D.S.O., 7th (Q.O.) Hussars, has issued a prospectus for a Summer Gymkhana Race Meeting to be held on the 15th June. The programme provides for seven races, including a Steeplechase. The Stakes in each race will be Rs. 49 to the winner and Rs. 10 to the second horse.

A case of considerable interest to racing owners which has been pending here on the file of the Amildar Magistrate of the Bangalore Taluq since last September was disposed of this (Saturday) afternoon. The complainant is H. (Paddy) McQuade, the well-known trainer, and the accused are : (1) Rungaswamy, a son of Mr. Rungiah Gownden, a well-to-do carrying contractor and brewer, residing at Coonoor on the Nilgiris, and (2) his clerk, Thomas, a Native Christian. They were charged with an offence committed under Section 380 I.P.C. on the 16th September 1911. After examining eleven witnesses for the prosecution the Magistrate found that no case had been made out against the accused persons under Section 380, and they were charged under Section 279 as follows :—"That you accused (1) A. R. Rungaswamy and (2) N. K. Thomas, on the night of the 16th September, 1911, at Whitefield, removed dishonestly and against the consent of Mr. McQuade, complainant, five race horses valued at Rs. 20,000, which were in the said complainant's stables and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 379, I.P. Code and within the cognizance of this Court."

Both accused pleaded not guilty and filed a very lengthy written statement, in which they pleaded, inter alia :—That the accused and his father and the latter's other two sons are members of an undivided family of which Mr. Rungiah Gownden is the head, living at Coonoor and carrying on various businesses. Second accused is one of their clerks. The five race horses referred to by the complainant have been and are the property of the said family and have been and are in their possession. That at the suggestion of the complainant the said five and other race horses began to be kept and stabled at Whitefield, from June 1910. All the cost of the establishment in connection with the keeping and stabling of the horses was being borne by the first accused and his father. Complainant consented to be the trainer of the said horses and to otherwise manage them and the said establishment at a monthly salary of Rs. 90. The chief duties of complainant were to maintain the horses in thorough and fit condition for racing and to account for the money and other things entrusted to him in the course of such management. That for some months prior to last September, Rungiah Gownden and first accused had reason to suspect that the complainant neglected the horses and that the money and fodder entrusted to him were not properly spent and utilised ; therefore Rungiah Gownden decided to dispense with the services of complainant, break up the establishment at Whitefield and remove the horses to Coonoor. On the 19th August 1911, Rungiah Gownden wrote to McQuade informing him decisively that his services were dispensed with as he had been maintaining the horses in a shabby condition, worse than tonga horses, and that he was sending his son, first accused, to Whitefield to take the horses back to Coonoor. First and second accused were deputed by Rungiah Gownden to go to complainant at Whitefield with a letter about 7th September last and bring back the horses. Accused went to complainant on the 9th idem, with the letter and delivered it to him and complainant replied that the horses could be taken back but he must first be paid what he alleged was due to him under an alleged agreement. Again on the 15th September, the accused went to McQuade, accompanied by the Police and told complainant they would take the horses away the next day. The complainant gave them the same reply as before. On the evening of the 16th the accused went to Whitefield and again sent word to complainant that they would take the horses and other things belonging to Rungiah Gownden and they accordingly took them away. That as a matter of fact the horses in question were purchased in the name of the first accused and they were entered in his name in the various races they ran. That the first accused had, under these circumstances, a complete right to remove the animals, which though under the personal superintendence of complainant, were, in the eye of the law, in the possession and under the control of the first accused and his father ; and the complainant was no more than a servant of first accused and his father, and had no right to prevent the accused from removing the the horses. If any money was due to complainant he may establish his right in a Civil Court, but he has no lien or hold on the animals or things. That

STANLEY OAKES & CO.,
CALCUTTA.

Mr. Rungiah Gownden has filed a suit against McQuade for an account of his management and for the recovery of moneys payable by him. That the removal of the horses was bona fide in the exercise of the first accused's right and the act was in no sense dishonest. That the second accused merely acted under instructions from Rungiah Gownden and his act was in no sense criminal.

Three witnesses were examined for the defence. The Magistrate in the course of a very lengthy and lucid judgment held that all the contentions of the accused had been frustrated and that their guilt had been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. It only remained for him to consider what would be the most appropriate punishment which could be awarded under the circumstances: the accused persons the Magistrate says in his judgment, are men of respectability, especially the first accused, so that any sentence of imprisonment would be disastrous to their future career in life and was under the circumstances, uncalled for. Still the conduct of these accused persons cannot be viewed too lightly, as they have committed the offence with a great deal of high-handedness and premeditation. The evidence showed that the accused were at Whitefield at dusk and made all arrangements and removed the horses stealthily by night, having first won over the underlings of the complainant, and horse boxes having been previously arranged for with the Railway authorities. The animals were booked and despatched by the morning train to Coonoor. All this cannot be considered an act of straightforward persons asserting a right, or novices, for the first time being deputed to do any important duty. All these acts are such that they call for deterrent punishment especially taking into consideration the value of the property removed.

The accused were sentenced to a fine of Rs. 200 each, and in default to a month's rigorous imprisonment. Of the fines if recovered, the Magistrate directed Rs. 150 to be paid to McQuade as compensation.

A REFERENCE was made to the "All England Hockey Association in regard to the contretemps which occurred in the finals of the recent Bangalore Hockey Tournament when the Oxford and Bucks I. I. and the St. Joseph's College Cadets were opposed to each other. It was made by a well-known referee in the Bangalore Hockey field, who, if I mistake not is also an officer in the local volunteer corps. He put the case before the English authorities in the following terms :—"From the wording of rule No. 21, relating to umpires, some of us read it that each umpire has control of only his half of the field, except for the 'roll-in' on his side line. Others say that he can give general decisions, should the referee on the other half of the field not notice what he ought to. I enclose a sketch of the field with the positions, as near as possible, of the players and the two referees when the hitch in the game occurred. The centre forward of the red team having secured the ball passed the blue full back who in attempting to take the ball from him gave 'sticks.' Referee A (on that half of the field) did not notice it, or if he did, rightly did not blow his whistle (under last paragraph of same rule) but referee B (on the other half of the field) sounded his whistle which was not heard by many of those at the attacked goal, and the centre forward almost simultaneously shot the goal which the blue goalkeeper tried to stop but failed. Referee A awarded the goal and directed the ball to the centre line on which Referee B, unasked, went across the field, and drew A's attention to the fact that he had sounded his whistle when he noticed that the blue full back had given 'sticks,' on which Referee A changed his decision and gave the attacking team a free hit. The points that want clearing up now are :—(1) Has a Referee any right to take notice of faults outside his own half of the field, or offer any opinion if not consulted ; (2) If having done so, but the same not having been noticed by his co-Referee, or all the players in the vicinity, and a goal is scored, is it a goal or not?"

The reply received from the Secretary in London read as follows :—"I have just received your letter of 20th March. An Umpire has no right whatever to take any notice of anything outside his own half of the ground except (as specially stated in the rules ...) the roll in. In the case you mention, I should say that the goal was certainly scored, and the Umpire in whose half of the ground it was scored should never have altered his decision or allowed any notice to be taken of the fact that the other Umpire blew his whistle."

The above clearly settles the point at issue and it is hoped that in future tournaments only the most experienced Referees will be requisitioned. Referees all over India will do well to make a note of this important decision.

THE last English mail brings us news of the death in London on the 11th April of Major William Henry Fife Cookson (better known to the racing world as Major Fife). Born in 1845, and educated at Cheltenham and Magdalen College, Cambridge, he received a commission in the 9th Lancers in 1865. Always a keen hunting man, he also was successful in point-to-point races, having had the honour of winning the first contest of that kind organised by the 9th Lancers, and while in India, he acted as Master of the regimental pack of jackal hounds. It was however as a breeder of thoroughbreds that Major Fife was best known to the majority of sportsmen and his first effort in this line was when he started the Compton stud in 1884. At the outset, he only turned his attention to half-breds; the thoroughbred stallions which were located at the Compton stud were Crafton, Amphion and Avington, the latter standing there for two years before being purchased by Lord Hastings in 1898. The Compton stud after being in existence for 15 years was sold in 1899 and subsequently was in the possession of the late Mr. W. G. Stevens. Major Fife, however, kept on a breeding establishment at Langton Hall, near Northallerton, which he had succeeded to on the death of his uncle Mr. J. B. Fife, and the stallions which stood there may be enumerated in Hazelhatch, Queen's Counsel, St. Simonmimi, Bonarosa and Skiograph. Of the many winners bred by Major Fife, the most prominent was Airs and Graces, who won the Oaks in 1898 for the late Mr. W. T. Jones. Major Fife was a strong advocate of Army Remount Reform and was regarded as one of the most competent authorities on horses in England, and was employed as a purchase of horses for the Army during the war in South Africa, while he was a prominent member of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society.

A VETERINARIAN tells in the National Stockman and Farmer how to treat nail wounds in the hoof, that annoying and frequently-met injury, as follows :—

Whenever a horse steps on a nail or other substance which punctures the sole of the foot at sufficient depth to cause the blood to flow, there is only one safe course to pursue, and that is to make a good free opening for the escape of all blood. This means to cut a circular hole with a sharp knife fully as large as a ten-cent piece around the sole made by the nail. When neglected, the nature of the sole is such that it will close and shut in blood that should find egress from the wound, as well as germs which may be on the nail, piece of bone or whatever was stepped on.

When the blood remains in the wound, putrefaction soon follows and purulent matter burrows under the frog or sole, the connecting tissues are destroyed and the animal suffers excruciating pain and not infrequently lockjaw (tetanus) follows. As a rule, most horse owners are afraid to cut away any sole of the foot, fearing that they will expose sensitive parts and it will be weeks before new horn will grow, consequently when they cut away horn, they rarely if ever half do the work. They cut away a hole large enough on the surface, but don't extend it to the depth necessary to allow the pent-up blood to escape. The fear of over-cutting prevents their cutting sufficiently, and their fear of the hole not soon filling with healthy horn is groundless.

When the nail has been removed follow the puncture through the sole or frog to the soft tissues, then fill the cavity with a solution made of equal parts of gum camphor and carbolic acid and pack with cotton. This treatment should be repeated daily until recovery is complete. Where this treatment is promptly and properly carried out nail wounds in the foot of the horses rarely result in abscess and suppuration. Where abscess of the foot has occurred, remove all loose horn and dress with the solution given. The cotton should be held in place by a bandage around the foot.

Not one case in ten where a proper opening has been made soon after the injury will there ever be suppuration, the wound simply drying up and healing by first intention, as surgeons say.

MESSRS. FRY, FOSTER AND SHUTER have been appointed to select teams to play in the test matches. Fry has been elected Captain. The cricket season has begun in England and Reuter wires out that in the first match. The M.C.C. defeated Notts by an innings and 56 runs. Surrey has drawn with Northampton at the Oval. On Monday the Jam Sahib appeared at the practice nets at Lords and received an ovation. "Ranji" batted in his usual masterly style.

MR. GEORGE ALLSOP, manager of the South African cricket team, will, when in England, negociate with the Polytechnic Club regarding the sending out of an athletic and cycling team to South Africa in 1913. The Amateur Athletic Association has also had the matter of athletic teams going abroad under their consideration with a view to devising regulations governing touring parties, but the result of their deliberations is not yet known. It is thought in several quarters that the time has come to reciprocate the visits of athletic colonials to England. If the A. A. A. are unable to send out a team to South Africa next year, it is understood that the Polytechnic would undertake it, subject of course to permission being obtained from the governing body.

CHARLES WILLIAMS, the racquets champion of the world, who was on his way to New York on the Titanic to play the American champion, G. Standing, was among those saved from the wreck.

THE Aga Khan Hockey Tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 6th instant when the Cheshires beat the Pioneers by 4 goals to nil. The teams had met on Saturday when in spite of extra time the match had ended in a pointless draw but in the replay the Cheshires had the best of the struggle and won as stated. This being their third successive victory, they have now won the cup outright.

THE World's Tennis Championship was decided at Prince's Club, Knightsbridge, on the 4th instant, when Covey beat "Punch" Fairs by 7 sets to 3.

THE match for the sculling championship of the world between Richard Arnst and Ernest Barry has been fixed for the 29th July.

TOMMY BURNS' desire to get back into the fighting game once again is genuine enough. Sam Langford has been approached to meet the ex-champion at Alberta, Canada, in a 15-round battle, 35,000 dollars being put up and two round trip tickets and expenses provided for Langford and his manager. Langford has accepted by wire and the contract has already been signed by Burns, so it will not be long before they meet in the ring. Langford has also been approached to meet Jennette at Madison Square gardens, New York, at an early date but so far nothing definite has been decided.

CARL MORRIS, the whilom White Hope, has quit the Ring. He left the railway on 4th July 1910 with the avowed purpose to command the right to meet the coloured fighter for the championship. He looked promising at the outset of his ring career by his quick K.O.'s of Mike Shreeh and Marvin Hart, but when he was so badly whipped by Jim Flynn the majority of the fight fans declared he would never do.

THE battle between Bombardier Wells and Al Palzer, which was to have taken place at San Francisco on the 4th July, is apparently off. The Bombardier has put forward a modest request for £4,000 win, lose or draw with Palzer, plus two round tickets from London, plus training expenses! The Yanks have come to the conclusion that Wells put this request forward because he knew it would be refused and he would thus avoid the Palzer fight, for which they say in the States that the Bombardier has no desire. Whatever the reason, Wells' demand has of course been turned down and they are looking for a heavy weight to take the Englishman's place and it is probable that Tony Ross will be selected.

WE have just had a letter from "The Dixie Kid" erstwhile feather-weight boxing champion of India. Our readers may be interested to learn that he has reached Australia safely, though he had a very rough voyage out. On arriving in Melbourne, he immediately got into touch with the editor of a sporting newspaper and was given a "try out" with a 10st. 6lb. lad. Although just come off a long voyage, he managed to put up a very fair show and those interested have decided to match him with Taylor, the feather-weight champion of Western Australia. The fight was to take place very soon and the "Kid" was in heavy training when he wrote. We are sure the boxing world of Calcutta and "Dixie's" many friends will join us in wishing him a win in his first encounter and a successful career "down under."

The Madras Government have made a grant of Rs. 2,500 from provincial funds in aid of the funds of the Bombay Natural History Society and have accepted the Society's offer to supply the Madras Museum with duplicate mammals of the Madras Presidency including Mysore, Cochin, Travancore. As our readers are doubtless aware the Bombay Natural History Society is endeavouring to make a systematic survey of the mammals of India, Burma and Ceylon. The total amount so far obtained for this survey is Rs. 29,500 out of which sum Rs. 7,790 has been spent. Two collectors have been brought out to India. Messrs. G. C. Shortridge and C. A. Crump, and from experience gained, the Society thinks the work will take at least four or five years to complete.

An Anglo-Russian shooting expedition will leave Archangel for the Arctic regions in June. The cruise will extend from Nova Zembla westward along the whole coast of North Russia and Siberia, through the Behring Straits to Kamchatka, and finishing at Vladivostock—a distance of 14,000 to 15,000 miles. It will be winter ten months of the time, and it is proposed to lay up somewhere near the coast and use the collapsible house, which is part of the equipment, as headquarters for hunting expeditions ashore. The game likely to be met with includes polar bears, seals, walrus, whales, foxes, white, silver, blue, and black, many kinds of birds, and in Kamchatka the mountain ram. Mr. McIntosh Mitchell and Lieutenant Brussiloff of the Russian Navy, are the leaders of the expedition, the latter being in command of the famous old exploring ship Pandora, which is being fitted out for the cruise.

The Curator of the Bronx Park Zoological Gardens in New York has been trying the effects of colours on snakes, and has made the discovery that certain colours have a marked influence on the moods of the reptiles, and, even as a red rag will excite the bull, the snake can be worked up into a paroxysm of anger by the waving of a green rag. A red rag has a directly opposite effect on the snake, for when shown this colour, Mr. Ditmars' subjects evinced unmistakable delight. Light-blue produces pleasure, yellow contentment, navy-blue ecstasy, brown irritation, black indifference, and purple vanity. It is probable that animals, birds, and reptiles, like human beings, have preferences and dislikes for certain colours, but whether these prejudices are general to the species or varied, as in humans, it is difficult to state.

Although eagles are credited with living to a very great age, there is no evidence that they live for hundreds of years. There was consequently great excitement amongst ornithologists recently when it was announced that an eagle over 600 years old had been shot in the Balkans. It seems that a hunter named Ehr, seeing a large eagle flying from west to east at a height of 400 feet in the mountains, raised his rifle, and, being a good shot, killed the bird. He found on the left foot a metal ring engraved with the inscription, "Voliere de Rossillen, Germany, 1285," which seemed to indicate that a certain Rossillen bird-fancier was owner of the eagle in 1285. The news travelled round Central Europe, and created surprise and admiration everywhere to think of it. An eagle 627 years old! But alas! Baron von Klerst, who lives at Rossillen, a German village, near Courlande, declared that it was he who put on the ring in July last, so that, instead of a bird of six centuries, it was one of only seven months. The figures 1285 were not a date, but a number corresponding to the entry in his register. The flight, however, continues to interest ornithologists. The birds from Courlande migrate usually towards the west, crossing Germany, and going as far as Southern France. This one, reversing the usual habit, was travelling east.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 19th April 1912.

Well, we are safely over Easter and, taken all round, it was about as good a holiday as we've had for years. The weather was fine, the people seemed to get about as much as usual, coal strikes notwithstanding, and it is pleasing to be able to say that this Easter was unmarked by anything particularly serious in the way of fatality or accident, and this is saying a good deal, for in these days of wicked rush and scramble most of our public holidays are associated with sad and bitter memories for hundreds of people. Everything is being revolutionised by this insane speed craze, and our holidays probably suffer as much as other things. Which remark brings me to the consideration of the "randhabahts" at 'Appy' Ampstead on Easter Monday, for here one could not help thinking what a "revolutionary" being Man is. In childhood he plays at "Here we go round the mulberry bush"; in adolescence he spins round and round on an imitation horse as if he were a heavenly body full of Copernican possibilities. It must be a fascinating pastime, for the reluctance to dismount is only overcome by the admonitory effect of the disappearing tuppences. The young men and women go on revolving and paying, paying and revolving so long as they can afford the joy without detriment to the always clamant claims of whelks and gingerbeer. One damsel on Monday, encouraged thereto by a spendthrift fiancé, made 152 revolutions without dismounting. Opinion was divided as to whether she was in training for a Catherine wheel or for a Central American Republic.

The cost of living must be greatly exaggerated, for the food supplies on the Heath were cheap—if they were as filling as they looked, very cheap. The saucer of cockles you got for halfpenny would compare favourably with the quantity sold for the same sum at a Mayfair fishmonger's. And there were oysters at only 6d. a dozen. They were not advertised as "fine selected natives," but simply and unassumingly as "oyster." The penny slices of current cake, considering the unresting occupation they would give the digestive organs for at least three days, were "astonishing bargains," as the drapers say. When you can get two saucers of whelks (vinegar included, a large sandwich, a hunk of cake, two pieces of preserved pineapple, a piece of jam-roll, two ices, and a cocoanut for fivepence-halfpenny, it is nonsense to harp upon the terrifying character of the housekeeping bills.

While on the subject of food, what price the catastrophe at "Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese" last Monday! An unusually early leave man from Bombay did me the honour to join me at the dear old Fleet Street rendezvous on that particular day on the promise of sampling the world-famed pudding consisting of rump steak, kidneys, larks, mushrooms, and other good things. But a cruel fate overtook us. According to immemorial custom, "Ye famous pudding," weighing 60lbs., had been cooked for twenty hours, and about forty hungry visitors were waiting to participate in its nourishment.

Unfortunately the waiter, who is not a Sandow, but who has been entrusted with many similar duties before, stumbled on the last step of the stairs, and pudding and waiter got uncomfortably mixed up with the expectant guests. Most of the visitors come from across the Atlantic and there were two sharp set old Qui Hais, but the humour of the situation compensated us for the loss of our cherished feed.

It is thirty years ago since a similar catastrophe occurred, when the Cheese was controlled by Mr. Bowman Moore, and more than one visitor to Dr. Johnson's favourite old house can recall the incident.

The Rudyards have not yet ceased from Kipling! The Ulster demonstrations on the Home Rule question incited that five pound a line poet to break out into some characteristic "bilge" entitled "Ulster." Now strange as it may appear there are still to be found people who take Mr. Kipling seriously! So it came about that a certain Mr. Martin, Liberal Member for St. Pancras, East, wanted the rhymster prosecuted for sedition, and in the House of Commons this week he solemnly asked the Attorney-General if he intended to take action against the author of this precious piffle and whether he intended to prosecute the publishers of the stuff and the printers who set it up in type.

Captain Craig submitted, that when such a charge was made, the verses should be printed on the order paper. (Laughter.)

The Attorney-General said, the answer was in the negative.

Mr. W. Redmond: Is it not the general opinion that his doggerel cannot be called verse at all? (Laughter.)

"The Pink Lady" was put on at the Globe this week. It is quite a long time since we renewed acquaintance with the American form of musical comedy as represented by "The Belle of New York" and therefore the terrific bustle of the latest importation fairly carried us off our legs. Scarcely for a moment is there any peace and quietness on the stage; every second has its appointed action, and movement must follow movement with inflexible persistence.

It takes one a little time to grow accustomed to this incessant whirligig, this Yankee tangle; but once the mind has recovered its equilibrium and the eye can single out special objects with some degree of clearness, then "The Pink Lady" begins to exercise her powers of fascination. For undoubtedly there is a considerable amount that is very attractive in the new piece which, by the way, is founded on "Le Satyre," a French farce by MM. Barr and Guillemaud.

The first of the three acts scarcely foreshadows the fun that is to be evolved out of the other two, but it serves its purpose as an introductory chapter to the moral downfall of Mons. and Madame Dondidier, who from the sedate standard of respectability of well-to-do tradespeople of the Rue St. Honore become riotously wild in their behaviour and dance and frolic with all the ardour of irresponsible youth. These characters monopolise most of the attention and as they are in the hands of two capable comedians the audience is well content.

Mr. Frank Lalor is an unctuous actor with an India rubber face that can as easily express the most fatuous phases of joy as the most tearful exhibition of inane grief, and for the most part it is either in one or the other of these extremes that Mons. Dondidier continually finds himself. Miss Alice Hegeman is as characteristic as our own Connie Ediss, and nothing could be more eccentric than her performances in the last act.

On the vocal side the cast is not strong or perhaps I should say it has more strength than sweetness. Miss Hazel Dawn, who sustains the name part, Miss Alice Dovey and Miss Louise Kelley have been well cared for by the composer, who has given each some capital solos, while Miss Kelley takes part in a delightful concerted number "Donny Did. Donny Didn't," while the two former are associated in a captivating number in the "Beautiful Lady" duet.

It is long since Mr. Ivan Caryll has given us such bright and tuneful music, and it was a pleasure to see him conducting once again in an English orchestra.

Once more thanks to Messrs. Vedrenne and Eadie—and congratulations!

"The Odd Man Out," the new comedy by Harold Brighouse, produced by them on Tuesday at the Royalty, is clever, deft and decidedly amusing. It is not a great play. It is not strikingly original, but it contains one act of delightful comedy. The characters are excellently individualised. It is a refreshing and intelligent entertainment.

Jonas Enderby is a smug humbug, a Dickens' figure slightly modernised. His wife is rich and idiotic, and Jonas lives easily on her money. Her first husband, Daniel Weir, is supposed to have been dead for fifteen years. Jonas alone knows that he is really alive, and Jonas alone is not surprised when Daniel turns up from South America, anxious to see his daughter, but not in the least anxious to rob Jonas of his wife.

Daniel is an adventurer with the tramp's philosophy and a tramp's joy in living. Constance is dourly pious. He implores her when they meet again to stick to Jonas, and Jonas, anxious not to lose his income, adds his entreaties. This scene is fresh, genuine comedy.

Barbara has grown into a pretty prig under the tutelage of the ineffable Jonas, and she nearly marries his cubbish nephew. But a nice young man arrives on the scene, and her father talks commonsense to her, and we leave her quite happy with the nice young man and in a nice new dress. A Spanish wife claims Daniel. He has obtained a divorce in South America and married for the second time in a cathedral, and Jonas is left with his sad wife and his money bags, the cubbish nephew being the odd man out.

Burlesque, melodrama, farce, and comedy jostle each other in Mr. Brighouse's play, and he has not taken enough trouble with Barbara. Her metamorphosis is too sudden, and the very pretty love scene between her and her young man is too hurried to be convincing. But, with its faults, "The Odd Man Out" is far above the average of the other productions of its kind.

The acting is almost faultless. Few theatres anywhere have a more efficient company than that at the Royalty, and Mr. Eadie, Mr. Hubert Harben, Mr. Malcolm Cherry, Miss Gladys Cooper and their associates all as good as good could be.

Shakespeare's—or is it Lysander's?—is the theory that the course of true love never ran smoothly. No one in melodrama is the exception to this rule, and therefore when there is the love story of a queen to tell, the adversities are bound to be of a royally picturesque and thrilling character. All the right concomitants are to be found in "The Apple of Eden," written by Carlton Wallace and produced, with hearty approval of the audience, by the Melvilles at the New Princess Theatre last night. In its four acts there are such episodes or characters as plotting princes, sinister spies, court intrigues, fierce revolutionaries, the strife of armies, a mad king, duels, and so on.

The Queen of Slavonia (Miss Nora Kerin) flees from her palace to Ragusa, the Dream City of the Adriatic, and, incognita, lives at a hotel. Here she meets with Julian Hanbury (Mr. Henry Lonsdale), who is on the eve of being engaged to Winifred Cresson (Miss Alice Bowes). Hanbury, a tragic-looking and highly impressionable man, finds himself unable to think of anyone save the mysterious lady. So infatuated is he that he neglects Winifred, who, all along, has preferred his friend Bobby (Mr. Fred. Ingram). Julian protects the Queen from the unwelcome attentions of a stranger, and offers her his services if ever she be in danger. Enter the villain of the piece—Prince Nicola (Mr. Fred Morgan), who has fed the King's vices that he may marry the Queen and wear the crown, appears, with General Pavlos, and on behalf of the King demands that she shall return to her country.

The Queen refuses, the drunken King staggers in and strikes her, and would have struck her again but for Julian. Pavlos, who is secretly the Queen's man, learns of Julian's infatuation. Winfred and Bobby urge Pavlos to induce the Queen to elope with Julian so that they many get married, Pavlos persuaded the Queen to go away with Julian, and she confesses that she loves him.

Julian called by Pavlos, visits the Queen at night and in a passionate scene they declare their mutual love. The prince and the King try to force the door, and the lovers flee to the mountains, where they live an arcadian idyll. Prince Nicola and brigands arrive and Nicola tells Julian that his love is already married. The Queen confesses that this is so, and then follows a dramatic scene where Julian casts her off. In the end, however, after many exciting adventures the Queen and Julian come into their kingdom.

Miss Kerin was given a most enthusiastic reception and was called again and again to the curtain. She was at her best in the scene where she made seductive love to Julian and in the tragic moments of Nicola's pitiless exposure of her secret. Miss Kerin is a fascinating actress of undoubted dramatic power and words of praise, too, must be given to Mr. Lonsdale for the effective, quiet strength of his conception of the character of Julian.

The story of "Ben-Hur"—the drama revived at Drury Lane last night—is not inherently of much interest but only in so far as it provides opportunity for some of those spectacular effects for which Drury Lane is so justly renowned. This is a case, in fact, in which the illustrations are more interesting and more important than the text, which, indeed, is a curious jumble of the archaic and the colloquial.

The pick of the stage pictures are the representation of a Roman galley going into action with the slaves straining at the oars; the orchard of palms, in which there is more than a suggestion of the wonderful stillness of an Eastern night; and, of course, the great sensation of the play, its real raison d'être the chariot race between Ben-Hur, Messala (about the proper pronunciation of whose name the actors were divided), and an unknown "also-ran."

This scene, with its neck-and-neck struggle, culminating in the collapse of Messala's chariot and the narrow victory of Ben-Her over his scornful rival, is alone sufficient to make the fortunes of any play of the kind. Indeed, the last act, dealing with cleansing of Ben-Hur's mother and sister from leprosy, with its frequent references to "The Nazarene" and the indication of His presence by a shaft of light, comes as a tedious anti-climax, and should be very considerably curtailed. If we must have religion on the stage, it is even better to have it in the way of Mr. Zangwill in "The Next Religion" than in the way of Mr. William Young in "Ben-Hur."

The part of Ben-Hur, orginally played by Mr. Basil Gill, is now very successfully taken by Mr. Arthur Wontner. Mr. Reginald Owen is the handsome, scornful Messala to the life: the Egyptian siren, Iras, is played with seductive charm by Miss Ethel Warwick, to whose proud beauty the pathetic prettiness of Miss Jessie Winter, as the modest Esther, is in excellent contrast. Other prominent members of a long cast are Mr. Charles Rock as Simonides, Mr. Frederick Ross as the Sheik Ilderim, and Miss Kate Rorke as the mother of Ben-Hur.

BAGGING MY FIRST TIGER.

A Memsahib's Reminiscences.

The weather grew fiercely oppressive Each day the sun flamed in the heavens, and then sank quietly to rest in the blood-red trail on the western sky line; and at even, a thick, steamy vapour rose and scudded over the hill tops.

"We shall never get on at this rate," moaned the Sahib despairingly. "It would be impossible to find a 'pug' in this baked ground," and he dug his heel viciously into the offending earth.

For some months past the entire village had been thrown into a state of chaotic ferment over the advent of a tiger. For months, too the same monster had been systematically hunted by several willing "knights of the rifle," but alas! without any remarkable effect, till one bright day a lordly band of enterprising gentlemen, after a series of undaunted efforts only succeeded in driving "Stripes" from his lair on the British frontier almost right into our midst and then gave up in disgust. A NEW CASTING REEL.

I saw in Leeds a few days ago a casting reel of very novel construction exposed for sale. This new reel is called the Day Casting Reel, after its inventor. In construction it is extremely simple; it is a wooden Nottingham of ordinary pattern, save that the drum is tapered somewhat towards the front, so that it has a conical appearance. Then there is a nickel funnel just like the funnel one uses for pouring liquids into bottles. This funnel has strong wire legs projecting from its larger end, and the extremities of these legs fit round trunnions at the top and bottom of the reel drum. You can, therefore, by revolving the funnel through a quarter circle, on the trunnions, change it from a position like an extinguisher over the face of the reel drum to a position in prolongation of the rings on the rod. The funnel has an agate or porcelain ring inserted at the small end, through which the line runs practically without friction. When the funnel is placed in prolongation of the rod rings, it simply acts as an extra ring close to the reel. When, however, it is turned though a quarter circle, so that its axis coincides with the prolongation of the axis of the reel drum, a pull on the line will cause this latter to slip endways off the reel, without revolving it, just as in the case of the Malloch reel. Instead of moving the reel through a right angle, you have moved the lead of the line, which however has exactly the same affect. It is true that the line when being slipped off the drum in the process of casting is not led direct through the rod rings, but is taken to them, so to speak, round the corner, by passing through the agate ring: the smooth surface of the agate or porcelain, however, causes but little loss of freedom in thus changing the direction of the line. The drum of the Day reel is not reversible like that of the Malloch, for as the handle is fixed on the drum itself, just as in the ordinary Nottingham, there would have to be some elaborate arrangement for changing the handle from one face of the drum to the other. Besides this the drum is, as I have pointed out above, made conical in shape, so that the back part is of larger diameter than the front. In order to get rid of the kinking difficulty, there is a small projecting pin on the back slope of the drum. Having made some casts and finding the line is beginning to kink, one pulls off a few yards more line, and then having hitched the part where it comes off the reel round the projecting pin, winds in left handed. Even if a very long cast is made, so that all the left wound line is exhausted, no entanglement results. The drum does not move during the cast, and as the line merely slips off it endways, a change of direction in the wound line causes no hitch. In fact, casting on the Malloch plan, half the line used in the cast might be wound to the right, and half to the left, without any check to the bait resulting in mid air.

I have lately constructed a reel for casting from piers and rocks, which entirely gets rid of the kinking difficulty. The drum of the reel is fixed with its axis in prolongation of the axis of the rod. The drum does not revolve at all. Through its axis goes a spindle, with a handle at the back of the reel to turn it by. In front the spindle has a socket, into which fits a strong brass arm: the top end of this arm is bent over into the form of a hook. The loop of the hook comes opposite the middle of the line groove in the drum of the reel. When you want to cast, you pull the brass arm out of its socket, and the line slips off the fixed drum as in a Malloch. Having made the cast, the brass arm is put back in its socket and the line hooked into the loop at its upper end. On turning the handle behind the reel, instead of winding round the drum, you turn the brass arm, which goes round and round the reel drum, and as it does so, winds back the line on to it. As the line is wound back on to a fixed drum in exactly the reverse way to which it was pulled off, all the kinks put into the line in the cast are automatically removed during the winding in.

This reel is too slow in action for spinning, as the brass arm has to be replaced after each cast and the line hooked into it. It is, however, just the thing for paternostering from piers and rocks, and would likewise be useful for any kind of fishing where a slight delay between casting and being ready to wind in is no disadvantage. The reel moreover, could be made very cheaply, six or seven shillings, I think. After the cast has been made, the brass arm replaced and the line hooked into the winding loop, the reel is just as ready for the rush of a heavy fish as any ordinary winch. Instead, however, of the drum revolving the brass arm goes round and round and pays off line in the reverse way to that in which it takes it in.

In a reel of this sort the drum groove should be narrow and deep, so as to wind in the line satisfactorily; also the metal of the hook must be very smooth and polished so as to avoid undue wear on the line. A porcelain lining to the hook where the line works over it would be an advantage.

I forgot to state that the Day reel is only made in a size suitable for light work: it is cheap, twelve to seventeen shillings, according to finish. The more expensive pattern has an aluminium back and an agate ring to the funnel. I must confess that I can see no advantage whatever in this reel over the well-known Malloch, except in price. I might also add that there is little difficulty in getting a Malloch reel second-hand through the medium of the Exchange and Mart: I myself got one in this way for little more than half its original price. One has of course to make sure that one gets one of the latest patterns, with aluminium reversible drum and optional check.

SOME NEWMARKET ECHOES.

By P. LEO FAULKNER, F.R.G.S. (INDIAN POLICE).

OFTEN, as seated in a luxurious railway carriage I have been translated from the Metropolis to Newmarket, my thoughts have strayed back to those days when some centuries ago King James I. and his merry followers were making the same journey in a far less comfortable and rapid manner. For the racing enthusiast Newmarket has many charms and by no means the least of them are those in connection with its romantic rise from an insignificant hamlet to the proud position it now holds as headquarters of the English turf.

There is no certainty as to the derivation of the word Newmarket but Dr. Dibden was probably correct when he stated in the early part of last century that plague having broken out at the village of Exning in 1227 the market was removed to a site in the vicinity. This place was simply termed the Newmarket, an appellation which it has borne ever since and which accounts for the present designation. Now Exning was the chief town of the Iceni who will always be remembered as one of the tribes which, under the leadership of Boadicea, rose in revolt against the Romans. Some gold and silver coins belonging to these Iceni have been found of late years and it is interesting to note that on the reverse side they bear the image of a horse. It is thus but natural to assume that even at the time of the Roman occupation the horse played an important part in the lives of those who inhabit Newmarket Heath and the adjacent country.

To James I. does Newmarket owe much of its prestige during the Stuart epoch. In February, 1605, he paid his first visit there and after that date we continually find him in residence at the palace which he caused to be erected for his use. According to Mr. J. P. Hore it is very probable that during the early visits of James I. to Newmarket his court was held at the Griffin Inn which subsequently he purchased and employed as the site for the Royal palace. Newmarket knighthoods must have been a byword during his reign for no less than ninety-nine gentlemen were elevated to that rank by him while in residence there.

Previous to the visits of the Court to Newmarket the road thither from London must have been well high impassable for in relevant papers we constantly find references to sums allotted for the repairs of the thoroughfare. On one occasion at the time of the Royal progress an order was promulgated restricting the use of the road to a certain class of traffic and directing all those who lived in the vicinity forthwith to make all necessary repairs.

It would appear that on one occasion, at least, James I. had a very unpleasant experience at Newmarket for it is related that in March 1613 the foundations of the house in which he was asleep began suddenly to subside "so that the doors and windows flew open and they were fain to carry him out of his bed with all possible expedition; but the next day he removed to Thetford."

One cannot help coming to the conclusion that King James was fond of Newmarket not only for its hunting and hawking, foot running and horse-racing, but also on account of the distance it placed between him and those of his ministers whose difficult duty it was to manage the affairs of the country and frequently to replenish the Royal coffers. Nevertheless, there is no gainsaying the fact that it was King James who first placed the sport of kings on a really stable footing and laid the foundations of Newmarket as the great national centre of horse-racing. By inclination he was passionately fond of horses and that this fact was well known to friendly ruling princes of the period is evinced by the numerous occasions on which he received presents of valuable thoroughbreds. Again in 1617 we find that one George Rigby was deputed to proceed to Italy with the sole object of purchasing rare horses for the Royal stud while the Encyclopædia of Antiquities published in 1840 asserts that "public races began to have their present arrangements established in the reign of James I., and all the rules for carrying weights, physicking, etc., are the same very nearly as now."

With the progress of time, Newmarket soon became notorious not only throughout England but throughout Europe as a centre of all kinds of cheating and corruption. Where gallants were in the habit of winning (and losing?) money it was but natural that in those lawless days highwaymen should congregate and thus we find that for a very long time Newmarket Heath bore an unenviable reputation for insecurity.

Both Charles I. and Charles II. were associated with Newmarket. The former was kept a captive there for some little time and his irresponsible son, "The Merry Monarch," displayed a grim sense of humour when he rebuilt the very house and used it as the headquarters of his gay and dissolute court. All his favourites and boon companions—both male and female—were to be seen there and such celebrities as Buckingham, Rochester and Nell Gwynne were well known and familiar figures on the Heath.

Coming to actual dates of racing at Newmarket, Coke in a despatch dated 14th March, 1634, writes that Charles I. was remaining there to be present at "the general course for the gilden cup." Unfortunately papers are not available to shew whether or not the King had a horse then engaged. Yet of course it is almost certain that the royal colours must occasionally have been the first to catch the Judge's eye. Charles II., however, is known to have ridden in and won some valuable races at Newmarket in the spring of 1675 and he must be the only crowned head in the long roll of English kings to have performed such a feat.

As was only to be expected, the Government of Oliver Cromwell suppressed racing with a firm hand and even went so far as to disperse and sell the royal studs. Racing and hunting were prohibited in an edict promulgated in 1651 and repeated in 1654. These operations necessarily had a disturbing influence on the progress and popularity of Newmarket and accordingly for some years we find it looming far less prominently in the public records of the time.

The Merry Monarch, however, soon altered this unpleasant state of affairs and in 1665 framed the conditions of a race to be run at Newmarket each year on the second Thursday in October. The riders had to be gentlemen and each horse had to carry twelve stone. This latter fact in conjunction with the condition below quoted shews that race-horses were expected to do their full share of work in return for their corn:—"Those horses that after the running of the three heats shall run the four mile course, shall lead away, and start within an hour and a half, or else win no plate or prize."

Cockfighting was a favourite pastime at Newmarket during the reigns of the Stuart Sovereigns and notices of events at the more important cockpits were published in the London Gazette. Bowls, hawking and foot-races also occupied the time of the gay revellers attached to the Court and in the State papers there are several references to "great matches which were much diverting to the nobility and gentry."

King James II. took very little interest in Newmarket or the Royal studs and did not visit the Heath after his elevation to the throne, though his successor, William of Orange, was often present at the races. Macaulay in his great history of England refers to the part played by Newmarket during the reign of William III., and his remarks are well worth reproduction:—

"It was not unusual for the whole Court and Cabinet to go down to the meetings. Jewellers and milliners, players and fiddlers, venal wits and venal beauties, followed in crowds. The streets were made impassible by coaches and six. In the places of public resort, peers flirted with maids of honour: and officers of the Life Guards, all plumes and gold lace, jousted professors in teachers' caps and black gowns. For the neighbouring University of Cambridge always sent her highest functionaries with loyal addresses, and selected her ablest theologians to preach before the sovereign and his splendid retinue. In the wild days of the Restoration, indeed, the most learned and eloquent divine might fail to draw a fashionable audience, particularly if Buckingham announced his intention of holding forth: for sometimes His Grace would enliven the dulness of a Sunday morning by addressing to the levy of fine gentlemen and fine ladies a ribald exportation which he called a sermon. But the Court of William was more decent; and the Academic dignitaries were treated with marked respect. With lords and ladies from Saint James's and Soho, and with doctors from Trinity College and King's College were mingled the provincial aristocracy, fox-hunting squires and their rosy cheeked daughters, who had come in queer-looking family coaches drawn by cart horses from the remotest parishes of three or four counties to see their Sovereign. The Heath was fringed by a wild gipsy-like camp of vast extent."

What a different state of affairs now obtains when the King of England graciously visits Newmarket!

As a conclusion to this paper on a subject which lends itself to far greater detail than it is here possible to employ I would mention that from time to time Newmarket has been the scene of some curious bets and undertakings. Of them all perhaps none is more fantastic or original than that of a certain noble lord who in 1670 wagered fifty sovereigns that in a state of complete nudity he would walk five miles within sixty minutes. It is recorded that he carried out his intention but lost the bet by thirty seconds. That such an event could take place in public hardly speaks well for the vigilance maintained by the constabulary of that period!

.401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loading Rifle.

Besides being the most powerful recoil-operated rifle made, the Winchester .401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loader is the simplest, strongest, most easily operated and most rapid shooting of all rifles of this type. For hunting game, the self-loading type of rifle is ideal, providing it is reliable; and when you can get the power and the swiftness and ease of action of the .401 Winchester, you have a battery that prepares you to meet any game alive. Just look at these figures: velocity of bullet, 2142 foot seconds; energy, 2038 foot pounds. These figures show that the .401 is more powerful than the .303 British, and in addition you have the increased rapidity of fire. This is further augmented by the interchangeable magazine system, the simplest, quickest and most effective method of loading ever devised.

THESE RIFLES CAN BE SEEN AT ALL GUNMAKERS'.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

1. Course and Stable Fees will be charged according to Poona Course Regulations, 1912.

2. All entries must be accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of such entries or they will be declined.

(a) When a remittance is made to the Secretary without specifying the way in which it is to be applied the money will be credited to the races in order of the programme.

(b) Cheques and drafts must be made payable in Poona in favour of the Secretary, W. I. T. C., and not to any one by name.

(c) Entry must be made by the owner or by a person duly authorized by him, in writing, in accordance with Rule 64.

(d) Entry must be made on forms which will be supplied by the Secretary on application.

(e) With less than six entries in bond fide separate interests, the Stewards reserve the right to declare any race void. The Stewards reserve the right to divide the entries for any race into two or more divisions, and in the case of a Handicap to raise or reduce the Top weight in any division at their discretion and the others in proportion.

(f) The Stewards reserve the right to refuse or cancel any entry at any time without assigning a reason.

(g) The stewards reserve the right to abandon any race or meeting owing to wet.

3. In all races other than selling races and handicaps, and unless otherwise provided for, a landing allowance will be given to all horses and ponies landed in India direct from the country of foaling or from U. K. To Arabs landed on or after 1st July, 1911, 6lb. To other classes, if landed on or after 1st January, 1912, 3lb; if landed after 1st April, 1912, 6lb (not accumulative). The allowances to be reduced by 3lb. on a horse or pony winning one race and to cease on his winning two races, of any description, after arrival in India.

4. Unless otherwise specified starting declarations for each race must be in the declaration box for that race, not later than half an hour before the time advertised for such race. The declaration must be in writing on an official form which will be supplied by the Secretary, and must state the name of the race, the name of the horse and weight to be carried, and the name of the Jockey, and must be accompanied by the amount due for Starting Sweepstakes (if any), and for the Jockey's fee for a losing mount, if not already paid, and for any fees due.

Omissions or errors in the Starting Declaration will render the owner or person making it subject to a fine at the discretion of the Stewards.

5. Every person running a horse in colours other than those registered in his own or assumed name, without submitting, not later than two days before the race, a written declaration of the colours which will be issued, will be fined Rs. 20 in respect of each horse so run. A declaration may be made of colours which will be stet by the person making it throughout the meeting in which case no farther declaration will be required.

6. All telegrams to be confirmed by letter.

7. All communications to be addressed to—

THE SECRETARY, W. I. T. C.,
Race Course, Poona.

And not to any one by name.

NEWBURY.

ONE of the first effects of the coal strike to come home to racegoers, who have found easier travelling than the black outlook promised during a trying time, was the inability of the Great Western Railway Company to continue special fares for special trains in their splendid service to Newbury on Friday. The extra outlay, however, did not seem to matter much, as, though only two specials were advertised, the crush was so great that reliefs had to be requisitioned, a true test of the popularity of the meeting. The attendance did not seem to suffer much in any department. Considering that fields here are always of plethoric proportions, a bill of fare restricted to six events would be deemed perfectly adequate to the demands of the occasion, or if we must wade through seven events, an earlier start is to be emphatically recommended. Beautiful weather added to the pleasures of the afternoon, thanks to the dropping of the freezing wind which had made outdoor life a penance of late; while the course, thoroughly grassed and bushharrowed was in splendid order. WINCHESTER

.401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loading Rifle.

Besides being the most powerful recoil-operated rifle made, the Winchester .401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loader is the simplest, strongest, most easily operated and most rapid shooting of all rifles of this type. For hunting game, the self-loading type of rifle is ideal, providing it is reliable; and when you can get the power and the swiftness and ease of action of the .401 Winchester, you have a battery that prepares you to meet any game alive. Just look at these figures: velocity of bullet, 2142 foot seconds; energy, 2038 foot pounds. These figures show that the .401 is more powerful than the .303 British, and in addition you have the increased rapidity of fire. This is further augmented by the interchangeable magazine system, the simplest, quickest and most effective method of loading ever devised.

THESE RIFLES CAN BE SEEN AT ALL GUNMAKERS'.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

1. Course and Stable Fees will be charged according to Poona Course Regulations, 1912.

2. All entries must be accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of such entries or they will be declined.

(a) When a remittance is made to the Secretary without specifying the way in which it is to be applied the money will be credited to the races in order of the programme.

(b) Cheques and drafts must be made payable in Poona in favour of the Secretary, W. I. T. C., and not to any one by name.

(c) Entry must be made by the owner or by a person duly authorized by him, in writing, in accordance with Rule 54.

(d) Entry must be made on forms which will be supplied by the Secretary on application.

(e) With less than six entries in bond fide separate interests, the Stewards reserve the right to declare any race void. The Stewards reserve the right to divide the entries for any race into two or more divisions, and in the case of a Handicap to raise or reduce the Top weight in any division at their discretion and the others in proportion.

(f) The Stewards reserve the right to refuse or cancel any entry at any time without assigning a reason.

(g) The stewards reserve the right to abandon any race or meeting owing to wet.

3. In all races other than selling races and handicaps, and unless otherwise provided for, a landing allowance will be given to all horses and ponies landed in India direct from the country of foaling or from U. K. To Arabs landed on or after 1st July, 1911, 6lb. To other classes, if landed on or after 1st January, 1912, 3lb; if landed after 1st April, 1912, 6lb (not accumulative). The allowances to be reduced by 3lb. on a horse or pony winning one race and to cease on his winning two races, of any description, after arrival in India.

4. Unless otherwise specified starting declarations for each race must be in the declaration box for that race, not later than half an hour before the time advertised for such race. The declaration must be in writing on an official form which will be supplied by the Secretary, and must state the name of the race, the name of the horse and weight to be carried, and the name of the Jockey, and must be accompanied by the amount due for Starting Sweepstakes (if any), and for the Jockey's fee for a losing mount, if not already paid, and for any fees due.

Omissions or errors in the Starting Declaration will render the owner or person making it subject to a fine at the discretion of the Stewards.

5. Every person running a horse in colours other than those registered in his own or assumed name without submitting, not later than two days before the race, a written declaration of the colours which will be issued, will be fined Rs. 20 in respect of each horse so run. A declaration may be made of colours which will be stet by the person making it throughout the meeting in which case no further declaration will be required.

6. All telegrams to be confirmed by letter.

7. All communications to be addressed to—

Race Course, POONA.

And not to any one by name.

NEWBURY.

ONE of the first effects of the coal strike to come home to racegoers, who have found easier travelling than the black outlook promised during a trying time, was the inability of the Great Western Railway Company to continue special fares for special trains in their splendid service to Newbury on Friday. The extra outlay, however, did not seem to matter much, as, though only two specials were advertised, the crush was so great that reliefs had to be requisitioned, a true test of the popularity of the meeting. The attendance did not seem to suffer much in any department. Considering that fields here are always of plethoric proportions, a bill of fare restricted to six events would be deemed perfectly adequate to the demands of the occasion, or if we must wade through seven events, an earlier start is to be emphatically recommended. Beautiful weather added to the pleasures of the afternoon, thanks to the dropping of the freezing wind which had made outdoor life a penance of late; while the course, thoroughly grassed and bushharrowed was in splendid order. Results:—

If the lengthening of the card on each day to seven events was the outcome of an experiment, it has signally failed. Gentle and simple alike began to yawn and find time hanging drearily before the end, and had a special to Town been available after the Newbury Cup, many of the visitors would have gladly availed themselves of it. NEWMARKET.

Newmarket presented a more springlike aspect in the Craven Week than it has done for years past. The Great Eastern Railway which has come so nobly through the strike, did its duty to its patrons in a style that contrasted favourably with the rise in prices elsewhere, and the many special trains running on Tuesday, were very well patronised, the attendance, which, as usual, included many prominent patrons of the sport of kings, being a particularly good one for the opening of the season. The going was in excellent condition and sport was brisk. Results:—

THE "CONNAUGHT" HOCKEY BALL.

Used in the Ireland and Wales International Match at Dublin, 1911, with perfect satisfaction, and also by the Principal Clubs.

THE "CRENELL" (PATENT) HOCKEY STICK.

The principle upon which this Stick is designed affords the greatest obtainable resiliency. It drives with remarkable ease and is free from jarring and stinging. The handle is made up of two sections faced with rubber, working in grooves one within the other and the yielding of the sections is controlled to a nicety.

GOALS, GOAL-NETS, BOOTS, SHINGUARDS, GLOVES, AND EVERY REQUISITE FOR THE GAME.

Obtainable from all the large Sports Houses in CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS & ELSEWHERE.

Greatly to the satisfaction of Newmarket's embryo Galileos on Wednesday the cold mists of morning were dispersed before the sun was many hours above the horizon, and a blue sky allowed a clear view of the eclipse, which must, to some of us at least, have recalled the home-smoked glasses of boyhood's days in 1858. The dim religious light, which seemed to startle the starlings and dismay the dogs, brightened into a glorious afternoon with a blue sky and a rather keen wind. Evidently the interesting nature of the card appealed to a large coterie, as the attendance, which included many prominent patrons of the Turf, was again an excellent one for the opening week, the enclosures being well filled, and with beautiful spring weather, good going, and capital sport, the ball was kept merrily rolling from start to finish. FOOTBALL

ASSOCIATION RULES.

BEATING Wales at Cardiff on Saturday after being a goal behind at the interval, Ireland passed on the "wooden-spoon" of the international championship to the Principality and so disposed of an embarrassing possession which had been theirs for twelve months. This season the fight for first honours has proved less interesting than for several years past, Ireland and Wales each going down before England and Scotland, and the two latter countries playing a draw of one goal each at Glasgow three weeks ago. Thus England and Scotland jointly hold the championship, Ireland finishing third, and Wales, who secured first place in 1907, figuring at the bottom of the competition. Prior to drawing with Scotland, England defeated Ireland by 6 to 1 and Wales by 2 to 0. The Scotsmen experienced the greatest difficulty in overcoming the representatives of the Principality at Edinburgh, a goal snatched by the home side in the last minute of the game being the only score, but at Belfast a fortnight later Scotland defeated Ireland by 4 to 1. Until yesterday Wales had beaten Ireland on the last three occasions of meetings between the Principality and the Sister Isle and, fully represented, they would probably have added to their list of victories yesterday. Unfortunately at this late period of the season League points are so very important that several players employed by English clubs and chosen to appear for Wales, could not be given leave for the game at Cardiff. Appended is a table of this season's international championship:—

	P.	W.	L	D.	Goals For	Agst.	Pts.
England ...	3	2	0	1	9	2	5
Scotland ...	3	2	0	1	6	2	5

For their failure to qualify for the Final Tie of the Association Cup, Blackburn Rovers are going to have ample consolation in carrying off the League championship for the first time in the history of that famous club. The Rovers have taken part in the struggle for League honours ever since the institution of that competition in the season of 1888-89, but although finishing third in 1890 and again occupying that position two years ago, they have never secured a higher place. Their triumph is not yet absolutely certain inasmuch as in the event of defeat being the portion of the Blackburn team in everyone of their remaining engagements they might be passed by any one or all of three other clubs, but in anything like the ordinary run of events first place in the League is assured them. With five matches to play they already have 44 points to their credit and, of course, possess the chance of bringing up their total to 54. For the moment Newcastle United, Bolton Wanderers, and Everton press the Rovers very closely, but the possibilities of Newcastle and Everton are now limited to 47 points and those of Bolton Wanderers to 46 points. The Blackburn men entered upon last week in a position of some anxiety, seeing that their League engagements entailed meetings with Sheffield Wednesday at Owlerton and with Everton at Goodison Park. No great surprise could have been felt had the Rovers lost both those matches, but rising to the occasion in fine style the team drew at Sheffield on Monday and yesterday at Liverpool ran up, in the second half of the game, a score of 3 goals to 1 at the expense of Everton.

While Saturday's encounter at Goodison Park practically decided the League Championship in favour of Blackburn Rovers, the struggle to escape from reduction to the second division is still unsettled. Bury, of course, go down, but their companions in misfortune may be either Liverpool or Manchester City. Others clubs than these are not absolutely safe, but Oldham Athletic and Preston North End yesterday went a long way towards retaining membership of the First Division by beating Tottenham Hotspur and Aston Villa respectively, and Manchester United—last season's champions—if faring very badly just now, should be able to gather a few points from their four outstanding fixtures. Liverpool accomplished a creditable performance yesterday in drawing at Newcastle, but Manchester City, their desperately close rivals, fared much better, running up a score of 4 to 0 at the expense of Sheffield Wednesday. In apparently a hopeless position at the end of March, Manchester City have since played nine matches, winning six, drawing two, and losing only one, and thus deserve to escape the fate which has overtaken Bury.

THE struggle for promotion between the three leading clubs of the Second Division of the League has now reached a most interesting stage, and the remaining matches in which they take part will be watched very closely. Even with so little of the football season left, it is impossible to indicate how matters will go, but for the moment Burnley and Derby County have the brightest prospects of advancing. Burnley have played one more match than either Derby County or Chelsea, and they lead Derby by a point and Chelsea by two points. To-morrow Derby County have a stiff task before them, as they meet Fulham at Craven Cottage. If they come through that engagement successfully they should be certain of going up, and even a draw will place them ahead of Burnley on goal average. The clubs less fortunately situated at the other end of the table are also struggling hard to avoid one of the last two places. Gainsborough Trinity can scarcely avoid having to seek re-election, while only goal average gives Glossop the advantage over Leeds City.

SWINDON returned to something like their true form when they scored 3 goals to 2 at Luton, and now that the effects of their buffeting in the Cup ties with Barnsley have worn off, though some of the men remain incapacitated, they have yet time to catch up Queen's Park Rangers and retain the Championship of the Southern League. As the Rangers could do no better than draw at Coventry, while Northampton and Plymouth Argyle gained decisive victories, the chief honours of the competition may go to any one of these four teams. Swindon can scarcely afford to drop a point in their remaining five fixtures, but, of course, the amount required from them depends upon what their rivals do. At present they need only fear the Rangers, and, keeping in view the most arduous task, they may contrive to snatch a triumph. As the result of yesterday's reverse, Luton seem likely to go down to the Second Division with Leyton, who are now in a hopeless position.

WALES vs. IRELAND.

THE last International match of the season took place on the ground of the Cardiff City club at Ninian Park, Cardiff, on the 13th instant and after a capital struggle Ireland gained a victory by three goals to two. As both countries had already been beaten by England and Scotland, the only interest attaching to the result was which would finish at the bottom of the International tournament. Of the previous games between Wales and Ireland, Wales had won 15, Ireland 10—five being left drawn. Wales suffered from the fact that they were unable to place in the field anything like their best eleven, no fewer than five changes having to be made from the original selections. There were also two alterations in the Irish team. When the teams took the field the weather was dull and rain threatened, but a crowd of 8,000 spectators assembled. The opening stages were quiet, little advantage being gained by either side for some time. Jones, on the Welsh left wing, made one or two attempts to get through, but his efforts were easily checked by the Irish defence.

Later on a long kick by Brennan threatened danger for Wales, the position of the Irishmen being further improved when Houston gave Hannan a nice pass. Ultimately Houston shot, but Evans saved without much difficulty. The Irish forwards kept up the attack for some time, Houston being prominent with some very neat dribbling. On one occasion he got past Jones and slipped Russell very cleverly, but Llew Davies came across and saved in good style. Ireland were soon attacking again, but following a fruitless effort to break through on the right they were driven back and Wales began to press. They forced a corner kick which was well placed, but McConnell kicked clear as Williams was about to shoot. After that the play settled down in mid-field, and then the Irishmen got away on the left, but Hughes relieved and transferred the play to the other end, where, with one of his characteristic bursts, Meredith was nearly through. For the most part the ensuing play went in favour of Wales, Meredith being very prominent in several good runs. After half an hour Evans got away on the Welsh left, and in the ensuing attack Tinker Davies beat Hanna with a hard low shot. Wales were without the services of Meredith for some time, that player injuring his wrist and having to retire while it was bandaged up. A little later Russell collided with Hanna and he also left the field temporarily. Wales, however, continued to have the better of matters, the Irish defence being kept busy in checking a number of well-executed attacks. Towards half-time the game went in favour of Ireland, but the Welsh defence was extremely good, Russell doing a lot of fine work and Evans, in goal, saving three or four hard shots. Half-time.—

The play in the second half was excellent quality, and extremely exciting in character. Wales soon began to attack and in eight minutes D. W. Davies increased their lead, heading through from a centre by Meredith. So far as the result was concerned, Wales then seemed quite safe, but the Irishmen played up in most determined fashion, carrying on their attacks at a fine pace and with no little skill. The Irish backs, who had defended admirably, helped their forwards a lot with long, well-placed kicks. Within twenty minutes of the resumption the Irish forwards met with success as, following some clever play by Thompson, McDonnell scored with a good shot. They kept up the pressure and a little later drew level, a beautiful run ending in Brennan beating Evans with a clever shot. The Irish forwards gave the Welsh defence no opportunity to pull themselves together, maintaining a vigorous and presistent attack and then, with only five minutes to go, Thompson got through and scored. In the remaining time Wales made desperate efforts to draw level, but Hanna kept goal splendidly and the finish came with the score:—

GOLF.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.

FOR the second time in its history the inter-'Varsity golf match ended on Saturday the 13th instant in a tie. It was the thirty-fourth meeting of Oxford and Cambridge on the links, and it took place at the home of the Prince's Club at Sandwich. The only previous tie occurred at Wimbledon in 1896. At that time scoring was by "holes up," and each side had a total of 4 holes. On the present occasion each team won 4 matches. If the old system of scoring had been in force Oxford would perhaps have triumphed. At least, their two leaders, Mr. J. F. Macdonnell and Mr. E. W. Holderness, were going so strongly at the finish that they would probably have secured pocketfuls of holes.

Mr. C. Gardiner Hill was the only man on the Cambridge side who had a runaway success. No fewer than five of the eight matches went to the thirty-fifth or thirty-sixth green—a most unusual circumstance. The total records remain level, each university having won 16 times.

The finish was almost as exciting as at Rye last year, when Mr. H. R. Wakefield gave Oxford the victory on the last green in the last match. At the end of the morning round the Oxonians seemed likely to succeed. Two of their men, Mr. E. W. Holderness and Mr. A. R. Smith, were set for wins and three others were leading. Two more were each only 1 hole down, so that there was even a chance of a comparatively easy success for the Dark Blues. In the afternoon, however, the Cantabs played up excellently. True, their three leaders, Mr. F. M. M. Carlisle, Mr. A. C. P. Medrington, and Mr. H. Gardiner Hill were beaten by Mr. Macdonnell, Mr. Holderness, and Mr. Evans respectively, but the remainder of the side made a gallant effort to retrieve the situation—an effort that was nearly crowned with success.

Mr. H. M. Lloyd, who, after being 3 up at the sixth hole, had finished the first round 2 down, squared with Mr. G. D. Forrester at the second hole in the afternoon and finally won by 3 and 1. Then came Mr. R. H. Fowler with a 3-and-1 success over Mr. L. L. S. Dodsworth, gained in spite of the missing of several chances on the greens in the first nine holes. Mr. C. Gardiner Hill followed with an 8-and-6 victory over Mr. J. L. S. Vidler, and the score was 3-all.

The last two games were desperately close. Mr. M. Woosnam, the Cambridge "Soccer" blue, was 1 up at the turn in the morning on Mr. A. R. Smith, but the latter came home in 38 and stood 4 up on the round. Mr. Smith was 3 up at the turn in the afternoon, but Mr. Woosnam stuck to his task. He was 2 down at the sixteenth, but he won the seventeenth, a hole of 540 yards, in 4. At the last hole, however, he could only halve, and so he suffered defeat.

Oxford were now safe, and they had to secure the eighth game to win. Their representative, Mr. Mark Tennent, was 3 up with 10 to play, but Mr. B. P. Nevile captured the ninth, tenth, and thirteenth holes and took the lead at the fifteenth. He became dormy at the sixteenth. Mr. Tennent won the seventeenth, but Mr. Nevile played the last hole well and won it, thus making the contest a tie.

There was a curious incident in the match between Mr. Holderness and Mr. Medrington at the second hole in the afternoon. Mr. Medrington, playing one off two, hit his cleek shot into a bunker to the right. The ball was seen to drop into the hazard, but nowhere could it be found. Presumably it had burrowed its way into the sand, but although some excavation was attempted the ball could not be discovered, and Mr. Medrington therefore lost the hole. He was 4 down at the turn, and losing the next three holes he was beaten.

A Team of Ladies vs. Oxford and Cambridge.—As the result of a challenge by Oxford and Cambridge, the two University teams who met on Saturday, supplemented by the reserves, joined forces yesterday to oppose a team of ladies selected from those who have entered for the English Ladies' Championship. The contest was decided on the links of the Prince's Club, at Sandwich, and the men gave their opponents a half.

The Universities won all the nine foursomes. In the singles, the men secured nine matches to five, with four halved so that they won on the day's play by 18 to 5. The results were:—

RACKETS.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.

The Doubles.—As was expected, the Cambridge pair, Mr. H. W. Leatham (Charterhouse and Trinity) and Mr. F. A. Sampson (Rugby and Trinity), beat Oxford, represented by the Hon'ble J. N. Manners (Eton and Balliol) and Mr. V. Bulkeley Johnson (Eton and Balliol), at Queen's Club yesterday. They won by four games to one, but it was far closer than had been thought likely.

Oxford played up splendidly against a pair that they must have known were their superiors. Oxford were probably at the top of their form, and Cambridge (especially Mr. Leatham, when one remembers how good he really is) were below theirs. Mr. Leatham's game had not quite its usual fire or accuracy; both in rallies and service he was not playing as he can play, although, of course, he made many fine returns and many excellent strokes to finish a rally. Mr. Sampson at times played very well, but he, too, failed to find a length for his service, and he was sometimes a little clumsy in getting into position.

In the first half of the match Oxford played surprisingly well, and up to the end they showed pluck and determination. They both served well in the early games, and kept the ball going hard and fairly steadily, and Mr. Bulkeley Johnson was more accurate and placed the ball better than he usually does.

Until Cambridge had won the third game there really seemed a chance of a very close match. Cambridge won the first game at 15—11, Oxford the second at 15—5, the third was the turning point. After a long fight Cambridge won it at 15—10. This gave them confidence, and they won the next easily at 15—1, but Oxford made a good effort in the last, which they lost only at 15—12. Score:—

Public Schools Championship.—The semi-final ties of the Public Schools Rackets Championship were played at Queen's Club, West Kensington, yesterday.

Charterhouse, much the bigger pair, defeated Rugby in a love rubber despite plucky play by the latter. G. A. Wright, the Charterhouse first string, scored runs of 6 and 5, while W. H. Clarke made a sequence of 5 for the losers. Although Wellington were rather inconsistent in their play they beat Harrow with the loss of the first game. The highest sequences were 12 by E. G. Bartlett and 7 by W. H. Grenville Grey for the winners and 12 by G. L. Jackson for Harrow. Details:—

Public Schools Rackets Championship.—Semi-final round.—Charterhouse (G. A. Wright and C. B. Leatham) beat Rugby (holders) (W. H. Clarke and H. F. Williams) by 4 games to love and 60 aces to 32. Scores: 15—2, 15—8, 15—10, 15—12.

Wellington (E. G. Bartlett and W. H. Grenville Grey) beat Harrow (P. G. Mayer and G. L. Jackson) by 4 games to 1 and 64 aces to 40. Scores: 4—15, 15—10, 15—2, 15—3, 15—10.

Charterhouse and Wellington will meet in the final round to-day at 2-30.

ATHLETICS.

The London Athletic Club made a new departure in connection with the public schools championship this year, for instead of running them off at the usual spring meeting, as was the case last season, which was not a success, the entries not being satisfactory, an evening was devoted to the boys and the various events were decided at Stamford Bridge on the 17th. A large entry had been received from the leading schools and there were few absentees, all the races being well contested. Two boys succeeded in winning a couple of events each, S. H. G. Humphrey of Oakham, who took the high and long jumps, also disturbed the record in the first, this being the only case in which a previous best was beaten. He cleared 5ft. 5¾ins. very cleanly, while he also got within four inches of record in the Long Jump, his effort being much better than last year's champion. A feature of the meeting however was the fine running of F. R. Ashenden of Emanuel School, Wandsworth, who within a quarter of hour of winning a punishing mile turned out and won the steeplechase. A runner with a beautiful stride, he did not exhibit the best of judgment in the mile, for he tried to sprint the last 300 yards and though he just managed to last to the tape he was nearly beaten by D. N. Gaussen of Bekhamsted. The latter showed some remarkable running in the last 150 yards and finished down the straight like a sprinter. With more experience both boys are sure to develop into runners of the champion class. G. J. Paine from Sheffield who was second to Humphrey in the High Jump was far too strong for the field in the quarter mile and after making the pace easily shook off a couple of challengers. The hundred was won by C. J. Burkinshaw Smith of Owens School, the 120 yards hurdles by L. P. Marshall from Taunton and the Half mile by L. J. Limmer of the Haberdasher's school. There were also a few events for members of the L.A.C.

PIG-STICKING REMINISCENCES.

Scene: A grove of mango trees near a small hamlet in the Deccan, India; under them three tents. Time: 6 A.M. sunrise. Temperature. 80 in the shade. Dramatis personæ: One judge, one native cavalry captain, one junior civilian, dressed in khaki coats, flannel shirts, breeches, boots and spurs, drinking large cups of tea, munching toast and swallowing eggs; syces, servants, a band of forty odd beaters clothed in dirty-white loin-cloths, tattered red cotton turbans wisped round their heads, sticks, rattles, drums, horns, and fireworks in their hands, tobacco-smoke filtering out of their noses and mouths, squatting at a respectful distance from the tea-drinkers.

Bapu, the shikari, a black-skinned, flat-nosed, high-cheek-boned Bhil, has been gone two hours to locate the pig, of which we have had khubr overnight. He returns at seven with news of a sounder or small herd five miles out lying up in long grass. We start at once at a loping canter, for, there being little covert, we shall not want the beaters at first.

Arriving at the Champ-de-Mars, we soon come upon the pig, eight in number. We give them three hundred yards start, and the judge gives the word "Ride," We ride. The pig scatter. After three-quarters of a mile's gallop, the cavalryman, who has got off best, and is soon on the tail of the biggest, raises his spear and holds it up horizontally, a sign that his selection is a sow, and therefore immune from pursuit. The junior civilian, with all the guile of youth and a classical education, has made off after the second biggest, but this, too, is a sow, and we pull up and give vent to our disappointment in heaping execrations on the hard head of Bapu, who had sworn by his gods that there were two heavy boar in the sounder.

We wait for the beaters to meander up, and set off on a two-mile trek, our backs to our camp, to the breakfast rendezvous. It is now 9 o'clock, and the time when the sun's heat is more purgatorial than at any hour of the day, for we get it horizontally, full on our backs, and the dry-wind has not sprung up to mitigate its severity. We sit down under the scanty shade of a babbul, or acacia, and irrigate our throats with copious draughts of weak gin and soda, and fortify ourselves with more eggs, cold chicken, more tea, bread, and marmalade. Had we been blessed with the gift of prophecy, and known that this was to be our last glimpse of food and drink till 5 P.M., we should have made better use of our opportunity.

Breakfast finished, we make a fresh start at 10 o'clock. We follow the beaters, who have preceded us, to the next covert, five more miles from our camp.

The sun is now high in the heavens (if the Indian hot-weather sky deserves so cool a name), the thermometer is 107 in the shade, or would be if there were any. At 12 o'clock we come to a big jungle, a couple of miles square, a few stagnant pools in it, shaded by small trees, and plenty of prickly-pear bushes—a spiked cactus, the terror of every animal except our hardy friend the dukkar, as the pig is called in the Deccan. The sun has proved too much for the delicate brain-pan of the judge, and he wends his lovely way campwards, sick and dizzy.

To each of the beaters we have given a ticklis or ticket, consisting of a gun wad with a number written on it, to prevent outsiders chipping in at sunset and claiming a share of the largesse, which should be the portion only of those who,

"With aching hands and bleeding feet
Have borne the burden and the heat
Of the long day."

We take up our positions at the two far corners of the covert—stealing quietly round it, for the pig's suspicions are easily roused, and it is then no easy matter to induce him to face the open. The beaters plunge in medias res, beating tom-toms, blowing horns, yelling objecrations at one another and the pig, and firing blank cartridge and letting off crackers when he refuses to leave a dense piece of prickly pear. Occasionally there is a hush; then a crash and crackle of a heavy body forcing its way through under-growth; then an intensified din, in which we can distinguish the joyful cry of "ala ala" ("he has come" or "there he is"). Our ponies, which we have mounted, fret and sweat, keen to be at the game they know and like so well.

After three-quarters of an hour of alternating hope and despair, a boar breaks covert. He stops, looks round with a wily leer spots a fool of a beater who has shown himself in the open, and doubles back through the line of beaters. We say unrepeatable things, dismount, and light cigarettes, for unpreparedness sometimes brings a boar as an umbrella brings sunshine in England.

The beat goes on for half an hour more, and the beaters filter out to us. Things are looking hopeless, when an excited villager rushes up to say that a terrific boar, ten hands high, weighing six hundred pounds, with tusks eighteen inches long, has broken covert behind the beaters, and made his way over some fields to one side. We are up and off in a moment, and gallop hell-for-leather over two miles of perfect going, up a gentle slope, on which we think we saw a little moving cloud of dust. But we see nothing better. Coming to the top of the slope, we dismount, and talk of giving it up and going home to shade, and the blessedness of iced drinks, and never hunting hogs again. But the junior civilian's education does us a good turn. He gives a squeal of juvenile delight, and points to a bobbul, a quarter of a mile down the other side of the slope. Underneath it is Mr. Porker, who also thinks the day's sport is over, and is doing an al fresco rest, and thinking of water and sugar-cane.

We prick after him, our gallant Arabs keen as mustard. The boar (no sow this time) chivalrously gives us a run, and a mile further on, when the Beau Sabreur is on the point of spearing him, reaches an impenetrable thicket of prickly pear, two hundred yards by fifty. We dismount again, having ascertained that he has not run through and on, and trusting that his love of repose will keep him in the shade till the beaters assemble.

The scholar meanwhile goes out to reconnoitre, and finds, half a mile to the right, a freshly dug well with sloping earthen banks, and water almost to the brim. He returns to covert-side, and honourably mentions the well. The beat begins again, the scholar taking the right, the cavalier the left. The boar breaks to the right and makes for the well, the civilian on his heels.

At the well there is a goat-herd tending a herd of goats. The boar, by now a little worried and spiteful, makes for the luckless Corydon, gets his snout under what would have been the seat of his trousers had he worn such things, and scuttles him along for thirty yards—then leaves him yelling, and plunges into the well. The scholar comes up, sees him, and dismounts. The pig sees him, and tries to scramble out and punish him, but is met by a spear in the face. The spear breaks. The betting is now against the classical education, and the boar would have had the best of the fight had not the cavalryman's mounted orderly put in an opportune appearance with a fresh spear. Armed with this, the scholar repulses his adversary's tender advances till the cavalier gallops up, and the two succeed in putting an end to their quarry, who dies in the water, fighting gamely to the end as the true wild-bred Deccan boar always does.

It is now 3 P.M., and the thermometer nearly 110 degrees and we are done to a turn, so we decide to go back to camp. It is a long canter, and we get back to tea and gin and soda at five, our tongues literally cleaving to the roofs of our mouths. Our ponies, both high-caste Arabs, finish fresh as paint, and after a rub down, some thorn extraction, and a drink of water, are soon hard at their bran oats.

We hear that Corydon is by some lucky chance unhurt. As we sit down to dine at eight, changed and washed, in the cooling fragrant air, the moonlight filtering through the trees, the beaters and Bapu, now forgiven, come in with the pig. We measure him—32½ inches from heel to withers, with an eight-inch tusk—not quite the ogre of the excited villager, but worthy of his hire and our spears, and we drink his health in more gin and soda, and hope that his gallant soul is reposing in a paradise of cold, muddy water under a shady cactus-bush, munching sweet-potato and sugar-cane.—"TEPHOS" in Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

Football.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE fifteenth season of the Calcutta Football League competition begins on Saturday, and as the League is only open to European teams, Mohan Bagan's entry could not be accepted. However, a new League has started this year called the Calcutta Soccer League, and as Mohan Bagan is one of the competing team the I. F. A. Shield holders will have sufficient practice in order to get themselves in good condition for the more important tournament. In this newly-formed League there are no less than ten clubs, but it is a great mistake to play two matches instead of one. In Calcutta, especially for Indian teams, there are several cup tie and League competitions, and as nearly all the Mohan Bagan players belong to other clubs as well and will be taking part in the "Office League" and "Office knock out tournament" to say nothing of the Cooch Behar, Elliott, Bengal Gymkhana and other competitions exclusively for Indians, by the time the Shield matches come round the Mohan Bagan players will have gone stale to say little of the injuries these men are likely to receive in the various competitions, and it would be much wiser if the committee of their newly formed League would cancel all the return matches and run the tournament as we do the Hockey League.

Before going into details of the prospects of the different League teams, I may mention that there is a vacancy at Joint Honorary Secretary of the I. F. A. Mr. T. Davis, one of the Joint Honorary Secretaries, has gone to England on a holiday, and it is to be hoped the vacancy will be filled by a European gentleman and not an Indian. Mr. S. N. Bose, who has given every satisfaction, will probably be reinstated, and of the Europeans who are likely to give satisfaction, I may mention Messrs. Dunn, Medlycott, F. Hogan, T. Crawford, W. Cooper, C. Cody and Butcher.

In the first Division of the League there are nine teams taking part, and of these there are two new combinations. The vacancy caused by the departure of the Rifle Brigade has been filled by the Black Watch, while the Measurers who were at the bottom of the list last year have been supplanted by the E. I. R. Lillooah. The presence of the Scotch regiment will no doubt improve the standard of local football which has not been very good during the last three seasons. With the exception of three men, the Black Watch team will be the same that won the Simla tournament last October. During the last three years the Black Watch and Lancashire Fusiliers have been the two strongest combinations in India, and it is to be hoped that our European civilian teams will be stronger, and render better account of themselves than they have in recent years. To see a match in which one teams wins by four or five goals is no pleasure to any spectator. The Garrison Artillery who won the League Championship last year have got at all seasons men available, but it is doubtful if they will achieve the same success. Sergeant-Major Dorman, who trained the team last year, will be much missed, for Dorman has been transferred to Bombay. The Middlesex will have four changes in their team, but Sergeant Pigott, their fine goal-keeper, will again captain the side and the three military teams are likely to hold the leading positions on the table.

Of the civilian teams, Calcutta, who stood second last year on the table, are again likely to give the best display of the maidan clubs, although of last year's team not one of the defence remain. Lay, their goal-keeper, is playing for the Port Commissioners. Victor Sherman has gone to Nagpur and S. C. B. Lee, is at Home, and will not be back until October. In addition, Michie, the hard-working half-back, will also be an absentee. Calcutta, however, will have the services of O'Shea, who was not in town last season, and if the defence will not be quite as reliable as it was last year, the attacking line will be exceptionally strong.

Dalhousie will also have a few changes. Montgomery having gone Home, Davidson, who played exceptionally well at half, I much regret to say, died last November, Burnett has left India, Hurlston retired, and Davey, it is rumoured, will assist Calcutta. Wright is captain of the team, but if the selection committee will not constantly be changing the team, the old Trades Club should do very well indeed.

The Customs have only lost Fitzpatrick, their goal-keeper, and although J Anderson says he is not going to play, he is sure to turn out as the season starts. Anderson is quite a good back, and as he has been in fine condition during the hockey season he should be induced to play. McCready is captaining the team, but it is to be hoped the skipper of the Customs will play in one position and will not play one day at back, one day forward, and on another occasion at half just as he feels inclined. Christeneen is the new goal-keeper, and the Customs have a good forward in a man by the name of Hargraves, who is also a good half.

The Rangers, too, will have the same side that played last year, the only absentee being Mole their goalie, who is playing for the Port Commissioners. Fitzpatrick, late of the Customs, however, will defend the net. The Y.M.C.A. have lost six of last year's team, but as the Amateurs and the Central Branch have amalgamated, the team, although a light one, will be hard to beat on a hard and fast turf.

Lillooah, who were promoted from the Second Division, will not be seen to any advantage and they will probably be found at the bottom of the table at the end of the season.

CALCUTTA MERCHANTS' CUP COMPETITION.

THE competition was continued at Barrackpore last week end when three more matches were played off. Kilburn and Co. beat Duncan Brothers easily. Moran and Co. beat Shaw Wallace's, while the match between Birkmyre's and Mackenzie Lyall's is not yet completed. Birkmyre's returned 446 for five players—a good score, and they hope that the remaining player will do a round of less than 86 which will put them at the head of the competition. Thus far the scores stand as follows :—

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

THE first of the semi-finals was played on Wednesday, the 1st instant, when the Cheshires met the Bombay Gymkhana. It was an interesting and well-contested game and much closer than the score would lead one to believe. The soldiers opened their account soon after the start and before the interval they had put on another goal without response. Whitlow and Benson scored the goals. The Gymkhana gave a very good display, but could not get through and were two down at half time. In the second half the Gymkhana got away at the start and forced a corner from which May scored. The Gymkhana kept up a strong attack and looked like equalising on more than one occasion, several shots going out wide. The Gymkhana were playing with no goal-keeper and this cost them the match, for the second goal scored by the Cheshires and the two registered in the second half were shot into an empty goal. Benson and Whitlow managed to evade the backs and each scored. The Gymkhana despite desperate efforts were unsuccessful and retired beaten by 4 goals to 1.

On Thursday the Pioneers H. C. met the M. A. O. College from Aligarh and won a closely contested game by 2 goals to 1. The Aligarh team were a disappointment, for though they had the best of the play throughout they were very weak in front of goal and lost numerous opportunities. Each team scored a goal in the first half, the Pioneers opened the scoring through Ganpat and Assad equalising shortly before the interval. On resuming Aligarh were attacking vigorously and missed many chances of scoring. Then the Pioneers got away again and in a mêlée before the Aligarh goal the ball was put through again. The closing stages of the game were most exciting. Aligarh made great efforts to get on terms, but luck was against them, the Pioneers' goal had many narrow escapes, but Canteenwalla kept them out to the end and the Aligarh team were defeated by 2 to 1.

On Saturday the Cheshires met the Pioneers in the final, the result in spite of extra time being a pointless draw. The soldiers did all the attacking, but the Pioneers' defence was too strong. The match was replayed on Monday, when the enclosure was packed, the proceeds going to charity. The Cheshires this time won comfortably by 4 to nil as was suggested by the previous play. The left wing Hodgkin scored twice in the first half and Whitlow the inside right was responsible for the two goals after the interval. Colonel Pyke, P. M. O., made a congratulatory speech. Mrs. Pyke then gave away the prizes—the trophy with shield and gold medals to the winning team, also a cup for the captain of the team, silver medals and shield to the runners up. A special cup was given to Mr. Simm, Bombay Gymkhana, as captain of the civilian team which beat the military in Friday's charity match.

"By Throttle."

During the past week no less three motor accidents have occurred and in each case the driver has made off, without waiting to ascertain what damage has been done, or rendering any assistance to the victim. It is quite possible that readers are already tired of my harping on the same string almost every week, but so long as such conduct is indulged in, I, as a professional driver, will consider it my duty to take every opportunity of directing the attention of the authorities to those road hogs who are a disgrace to an honorable profession. Further, in every case which comes to my personal notice, I will have no hesitation in publishing full particulars, as well as submitting a report to the Commissioner of Police direct, and if others follow my example, the present state of affairs should soon cease, for by this means only can our streets be ridded of the fiends which now infest them. The old allusion to the beggar and the horse may now be very well paraphrased by another relating to the average Indian driver and a car. As I have before asserted, drastic punishment of all offenders and the raising of the intellectual status of drivers by making the examination for a license more searching, are the chief means by which safety for all road users may be obtained ultimately.

I recollect some years ago when in the United States a prominent paper asked "What makes a good chauffeur?" The majority of replies favoured either caution or nerve, but one correspondent stated an admirable case for imagination in such a way as to embody all the other requisites. Lack of imagination is a fine quality in a race driver, but a good driver must be able to imagine all sorts of things such as other motors or gharries meeting him at cross roads and streets or on a curve where the view is obstructed by buildings or hedges; to imagine women and children in a carriage at the mercy of an incompetent coachman who is almost certain to "cut" corners or wobble all over the street ending up by turning at the critical moment without signalling such intention or looking round. He must be able to imagine what may happen if a tyre bursts on a turn at whatever speed he is travelling, or if his car skids on a 'greasy' tram track in traffic, or if the tram which he is following along one of Calcutta's many narrow streets should break the overhead wire and let the loose end drop on to the car and its occupants. He must imagine native children dropping from the back of every office jaun he meets, and running under the very wheels of the car. He must have enough imagination to protect others from the results of their own thoughtlessness and never allow their carelessness to make him careless, whatever the circumstances or temptation; never to pass another vehicle on the wrong side; never to deviate from the simple rules of the road, or so far as lies in his power, allow others to do so.

In short he must drive his car always as though the rest of mankind is composed of the lame, the halt, the blind, the imbecile, and even the intending suicide.

By an intelligent use of his imagination a driver will appear to be familiar with roads he has never seen before, and to know in advance the sharpness of curves and the gradients of hills which are really new to him. The road has its signs, perfectly plain to a good driver, which are invisible to others. But accidents will happen and when they do, it is the duty of the driver to render all possible assistance, such as conveying anyone injured to hospital and notifying the Police of the section, supplying details of the occurrence, his name, license number, etc. In this connection I have just received a letter from a friend, as good a driver as ever held a wheel, who has met with a serious accident through too much imagination and relying too implicitly on road indications. He has a 60 H.P. Napier and likes to indulge in turn of speed when outside town limits. Recently, approaching a curve, which was "blinded" by a hedge, he judged its pitch by a glimpse obtained of the road further on, but this latter happened to be a totally different road altogether, although it looked like a continuation of the one on which he was driving. The truth was only discovered when the car had turned over and my friend had sustained a broken leg. The strongest leg is hardly sufficient to support a 6-cylinder 60 H.P. car even if it is only a two seater.

The friend mentioned above has a rule which he impresses on every one whom he teaches to drive, that is: "Don't drive only so that you know it is safe, but so that a nervous lady in the back seat, taking her first motor drive will enjoy it." This is an excellent rule and might be followed with advantage by everyone who drives a car whether he be professional or amateur.

The municipal authorities have lately had several roads and streets re-tarred so far: so good; but it is sincerely to be regretted that when "Gritting" is being carried out a much too coarse material is used. This should be as fine as possible, otherwise the damage to tyres is serious, especially during the wet weather we have lately experienced. Under similar circumstances in England the R. A. C. and A. A. were successful in obtaining an undertaking from the various local authorities that gritting material should not exceed a gauge of $\frac{1}{16}$ of an inch.

During a tour of the principal garages of Calcutta, it is surprising to notice the almost total absence of really first-class salesmen. In the majority of cases the demonstrators entirely miss the first principles of true salesmanship. The primary idea of the salesman should be, of course, the effecting of a sale, and so far as this is concerned, the point is appreciated. But it is to the methods adopted that exception may be taken. It is a far too common tactic to abuse all rivals irrespective of merit.

The real reason (probably is the complete ignorance of the salient points of the particular make handled, and mention of any other make by a prospective buyer at once calls forth a tirade more or less technical (?) and unintelligible, which may be summed up in the broad statement "No Good." A good sale was recently spoilt by one of the fraternity purely through this fault. The customer happened to be a gentleman on the look out for his fourth car so he knew something about the merits and demerits of most makes; his mind was practically made up, but on visiting the garage where his prospective purchase was represented, he was so disgusted by the tactics adopted, that he promptly went elsewhere and bought a car after a trial and demonstration lasting only twenty minutes. It was then that the above story was related.

Speaking of demonstrations reminds one of the very good story of the would-be demonstrator who took possession of a motor stand at Olympia Motor Show during the temporary absence of the regular attendant. Fortune smiled and along strolled a greenhorn who was promptly button-holed, to display his knowledge. The said green one sprung the only question he knew in relation to a car by asking, "Er-ah-what is the ignition magneto or accumulator? Like a flash the demonstrator grasped the situation and replied "Neither Sir." "Intermittent combustion of inflammable gas from the gear box on the back axle by heat from the exhaust." Then warming to his self-imposed task he continued, giving no opportunity for interruption "Notice this carburettor, a new idea of our own actuated by a cam shaft from the differential giving perfect alignment and doing away with the old annoyance of grinding sparking plugs. The clutch is a new dust to ashes type transmitting the power by a silent chain to the front radiator. Notice the live axle, fed every five miles from the automatic lubrication to keep it alive. Cylinders of the new Bridge type all made to take off and discard—from strength. Three brakes ordinary, emergency, and the other one, four speeds forward and a reverse with a double ratchet on a special pinion so that all five may be engaged at once for additional power on hills." "Now then, Sir, must you go so soon? No time to take a trial run? Very well, Sir; good morning. Call again? Thank you."

I am indebted to the New York Life for some of the following maxims :—

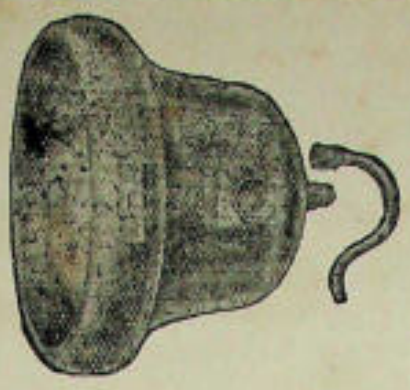
Still motors run cheap.
It's a wise driver who knows his own speed.
A garage is known by the cars it keeps for hire.
A car in hand is worth two in a ditch.
A good road is rather to be chosen than great ditches.
He who scorches and gets away may live to get caught another day.
A rut in the road may prove the power behind the thrown.
Little motors have big gears.
A good car needs no push.
Never judge a motor by the baggage on the roof.
Of two policemen choose the smaller.



Since the compilation of these notes I have had an application for an appointment from a European mechanic-driver. This man has first-class papers in both capacities, and should be useful to any garage, or up-country owner with a fleet of cars. Should any employer or group of owners in the mofussil desire it, I shall be very glad to place them in communication with this man.

MOTOR MEMS.

London, 19th April 1912.

In the early days of motoring drivers suffered from a sort of self-conscious pride in being in the possession of a motor vehicle. They had a feeling that they were the cynosure of all eyes. No doubt the speed of the vehicle and the great control of the driver did attract much public attention, and the drivers were inclined to accept this as a tribute to their wonderful skill and were vastly pleased thereby. Even still this feeling exists to a modified extent, more especially in the case of beginners. Such men seem to consider that everyone that passes is thinking what smart people they are, and the feeling encourages them to show off to a certain extent by whipping round corners, accelerating, stopping suddenly, and cutting vehicles close. They are, however, making a serious mistake. The public have become so used nowadays to motoring that no matter how well a car is driven the individual driver attracts but little attention, though from his general attitude it is apparent in many cases he does not realise the fact.

Motorists in general are apt to make strange use of this word "silence." The dictionary defines it thus:—"The condition prevailing when there is no noise." It is a common thing to hear a motorist describe an engine as "absolutely silent." It is incorrect and misleading. Any engine at work makes a noise, although there are degrees in such noise. There are conditions in which it is not heard, but that is where other noises preponderate. Thus we have seen, remarks the Motor News, a chauffeur commence to turn the starting handle of a car standing in the street, under the impression that the engine had stopped, whereas it was still running. A case like this is generally cited as an example of the wonderful "silence" of the car. Silence is a positive thing—there are no degrees. Either there is noise or there is not. An engine making noise is not "silent," although surrounding sounds may drown its beat. So that absolutely there is, we fancy, no perfectly silent car, and the word is used erroneously to express degrees of sound or noise.

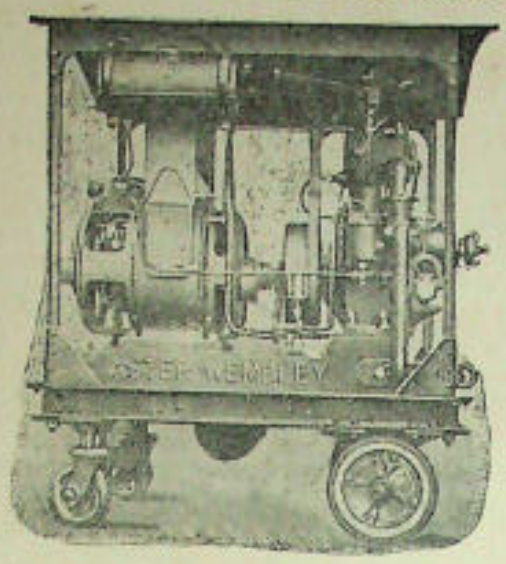
PROF. SCHMIDT prefers Gonosan (Kawa Santal Riedel) to any other preparation of Sandal wood oil. Although he has used the drug in many cases he has never observed any signs of Nausea, Flatulency, Nephritic pains, Pruritis or Skin Eruptions. The same is the opinion of other leading Specialists. Literature free on application to Holzmuller and Schmidt, Calcutta. Procurable at all chemists.



The first violent inflammatory symptoms quickly disappear after treatment with Riedel's Gonosan Capsules and leave no bad after-effects. No better preparation now in the market, prescribed and certified by the leading Specialists of the day. Try it—insist on Gonosan, refuse substitutes. Procurable at all stores and chemists.

Motor-cars from the day of their inception set out with the avowed object of eliminating all unnecessary physical labour on the part of those who drove them. As the evolution of the motor-car went on many excellent devices were brought out which undoubtedly had a great effect on reducing the effort required to drive a car to a minimum. The past few years, however, have been more fruitful in the production of these devices than any other period. The self-starter is, or very shortly will be, a standard fitting on most cars, and already the indications point to the fact that at the next Olympia Show few cars will be without them. The laborious task of inflating tyres has been practically removed and many automatic pumps now on the market have proved that effort on the part of the motorist in this direction is unnecessary. Another notable invention of recent years has been the automatic jack, worked by compressed air, and the various electric lighting outfits and detachable rims have all been instrumental in eliminating all the old efforts that were required.

Some of these improvements have been so drastic, and so far from anything that was expected, that it gives one pause to contemplate the car of the future. We are apt at times to think the present-day car, with the exception of a few minor alterations, has almost reached the point where further improvements cannot reach it, but that this is not so is apparent from the many developments which are constantly taking place. On the score of labour-saving devices, their number is still on the increase, and who can prophesy what the end will be? One can imagine that in the car of the future all physical effort, except that of driving, will be done away with, and the present work of gear-changing, operating the brakes, switching on, turning on the petrol, regulating the throttle and ignition, and opening and closing doors, etc. will all be done automatically. It is difficult to see at the present time how all this will be brought about, but possibly future development will show us the way.

So many motorists now use glass wind screens that some remarks anent them may not be without interest. One of the greatest troubles with these very convenient devices is the difficulty of seeing through them properly in rain. The splashing of rain down the screen makes driving an uncomfortable job, and often seriously interferes with the safety of the occupants. Where the glass screen is used with a very much enclosed hood—often with side curtains—the glass may become steamed due to the difference in atmosphere in front and behind the screen. A good remedy for both conditions, and also a preventive, is the rubbing on of glycerine mixed with a little whiskey. It may be applied with a felt pad or piece of velvet. It should be smeared evenly over the glass both sides. Only the smallest film of the mixture need be used—a few drops on the pad will be sufficient to effectually coat each side of the screen. But the screen must be quite dry. The best way to ensure this is to powder fine chalk on the screen and polish it with a dry duster, finally polishing with a piece of tissue paper. The chalk or whitening will absorb any moisture and the tissue paper makes the finest glass polisher available. Many shopkeepers use it for the polishing of plate glass windows and mirrors with excellent results. Next to it in effectiveness is a silk handkerchief, but if this is used the glass must be perfectly dry and clean. If the glycerine is applied sparingly, immediately after the polishing, it will form an even and unseen coating all over the glass which will prevent fogging or steaming through rain, etc., Each time the glass is cleaned the glycerine must be carefully and completely cleaned away. A soft rag moistened with petrol will be found best for this purpose. Wind screens made of transparent compounds such as celluloid should not be treated in this way; otherwise they will become dull and dirty. They are best cleaned with warm water and polished with a very soft cloth—not paper. Petrol or spirit of any kind should not be allowed on them.

Many motorists have found a difficulty with steel studded tyres on account of the studs coming out. This defect has been fully appreciated by the makers and considerable attention has been given to the matter. The result is that tyres are now made in steel studded treads in which the studs are so fixed that they form a really composite part of the tyre and the shedding of studs has become a much less common occurrence than it was a year or so ago. But even so there are users who are averse to using tyres with steel studs. One of the great drawbacks to these tyres arises when the car is not driven by the owner himself. The man who has to put his hand into his pocket when tyre replacements become necessary uses his tyres carefully. Steel studs, however well incorporated into the tyre tread, are not constructed to withstand sudden clutch engagements with the engine running fast. Neither are they capable of standing the great strain of suddenly applied brakes. Such usage, which comes invariably from the careless or incompetent driver, does harm to the mechanism of the car also, and both gears, engine, and tyres have to take their share of paying for the racket. When good steel studded covers are used they give the driver a sense of security on grease which is wonderfully comforting, but reasonably good results can be obtained with the use of the numerous rubber configurations in which the treads of modern tyres are manufactured, though it must be admitted that as these wear down the grip on the road is gradually reduced.

AFTER WILD FOWL.

He who makes his first attempt at wild fowl shooting with too much confidence is likely to have that confidence shaken, although he may be a fairly good wing shot in upland shooting. Such was the case with me. I am not sure it was not a good thing to have some of the conceit or over-confidence shattered somewhat, for it taught the lesson of careful calculation in holding; also to make an estimate of speed of flight and effect of wind on the charge of shot, so that the many misses made at old squaws the first morning served to act as a sting to a person's over-confidence. This lasted long enough to correct some erroneous ideas I had before entertained regarding the shooting of sea fowl.

There are so many points to be gathered concerning the shooting of fowl that I will not attempt to teach what I find I have yet to learn, but will try to relate simply what we did and what we tried to do. What we did successfully was through the efforts and kindness of Captain Gibson, who with his catboat and advice, secured me many good shots, which helped me very much, not only in teaching me to shoot better, but partially restoring confidence which had been lost on the old squaws the preceding morning.

Coots were not flying well, as the weather was too fine, but were bedded off shore well out of range. As they were not moving, there was little use in setting decoys in the estuaries. The boat was got under way, and we proceed to beat up to the windward of them, then bore down upon them with considerable headway. We could approach within fairly good range before they would rise; then, as they had to rise against the wind and come towards us, we could get in both barrels with good effect from the bow. The skipper advised us to wait until they turned to sheer off before firing as theywere coming towards us and beside the shot would penetrate better. We found No. 2 shot did the work well and would knock them down better than No. 4. In sailing one may not kill so many birds as when they are flying over a line of sandpits or boats, yet there is an exhilarating sensation about it which one who is not subject to sea sickness cannot fail to enjoy. The motion of the boat may be just a little troublesome at first, yet when running before the wind it is not so very difficult to hold to bring the bird down. I soon got the hang of it, and after a few shots had three dead ones. There were about a dozen in one bunch lying about a half mile off shore to the southward of the point, towards Wing's Neck light: wind south-west by west, and blowing a good stiff breeze.

Sailing down Red Brook harbour, and thence towards Scraggy Neck, we beat out into the bay. After we got into position we bore down on them in fine shape with a run like a racehorse, the boat steady as a clock. The birds sat upon the big waves and rode like so many corks, some of the time upon the crest, then out of sight in the deep hollows. On we went until seeming to be within very short range, but we were still eighty yards away when they took the alarm and started.

"Keep cool and shoot the highest ones first," said our skipper as he held the tiller in one hand and the main sheet with the other. The shots from one gun were followed immediately by the other two barrels, and two were seen to strike the water on their backs forty yards ahead. Another was hard hit and did its best to sail away with its wings set, but it, too, soon fell and was seen to ride on top of the waves.

Captain Gibson let go the main sheet, and we came about as soon as possible. As soon as she luffed we gathered in one bird from the leeward side, the writer getting nearly knocked overboard by the mainboom as it jibed. Then we came about and took in the second bird. Again the boat ran before the wind a short distance to pick up the coot which had sailed away from us so far.

"Well, boys," remarked Captain Gibson, "we have had some sport out of that lot of birds anyway. Shall we follow them round into the harbour and give them another broadside?" We were more than willing to go, for we felt quite jubilant over our success. We had a fair wind to drive into the harbour, where the birds had gone, and started at once that way; but soon we heard the old squaws, which we saw go into the water not more than a half mile to the south-east. The note of the old squaw is, I think, rather difficult to put into type, but our skipper said they kept calling, "Come tickle me, come tickle me."

"We'll tickle 'em if we can get near enough," he remarked; then changed his course to the southward and ran down inside the island, changed again and bore down on them. As we ran out from the lee of the shore the wind freshened, and the boat fairly leaped over the water. We felt sure of getting a shot if the boat could be kept steady. Captain Gibson knew his business well and kept her trimmed just right, so we had sailed within fifty yards before the birds jumped. Their white breasts and wings gave us good marks to hold on as they rose; then as they turned I fired right and left, and had the satisfaction of seeing two of them turn up their toes. I had satisfaction for once, and felt like one redeemed. In the meantime my friend had not been idle, but had one down and another hard hit. We did not recover it, however; it could not fly, but would swim and dive, so that Captain Gibson said there would be no use in making chase.

We had made no great bag, and had done no remarkable shooting, but had partly atoned, we thought, for the poor work done in the start, so that when we put in on the flood tide that night, we felt an inch or two taller than when we started out, and determined to visit the point the next morning at daylight and try for satisfaction with the long tails. Our skipper said he had as much sport as we.

"You haven't any smokeless tobacco, have you?" asked a smart young man, by way of making a joke. "Lots of it," said the man behind the counter, producing a tin of snuff. "How much do you want?"

Mrs. Willis: "She was married by the same preacher who married her father forty years ago." Mrs. Gillis: "Yes. And she has hired the same detectives to watch her husband as her mother did at that time."

"Seems to me we hear very little from the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises, these days. I wonder what's the reason?" "I don't know, unless it should be that they wish to demonstrate how consistent they can be."

When Alice Jones was eighteen she improved her name into E. Alysse Jones. When she went to enter a new school, she was asked her name by the head mistress. She replied, "E. Alysse Jones—A-l-y-s-s-e." "Yes," said the mistress, "and how are you spelling 'Jones' now?"

A young man had "popped the question," and anxiously awaited the answer that was to decide his fate. "Do you ever gamble at cards?" she asked. "No," he answered, "but if I did now would be the time." "Why?" she inquired. "Because," he answered "I hold such a beautiful hand!"

Mrs. Littletown: This magazine looks rather the worse for wear. Mrs. Neartown: Yes, it's the one I sometimes lend to the servant on Sundays. Mrs. Littletown: Doesn't she get tired of always reading the same one? Mrs. Neartown: Oh, no. You see, it's the same book, but it's always a different servant.

"A good wife is heaven's greatest gift to man and the nearest gem the earth holds," remarked Mr. Jarphly the other morning. "She is his joy, his inspiration, and his very soul. Through her he learns to reach the pure and true, and her loving hands lead him softly over the rough places. She is—" "Jeremiah," said Mrs. Jarphly, solemnly, "Jeremiah, what wickedness have you been up to now?"

MORE "PROTECTION" FOR ANIMALS.

THE angling fraternity at Home appeared to be exercised, and with reason over the probable results of the "Protection of Animals Act" which was placed upon the statute book last year. It is a modest little piece of legislation and attracted no very great notice in its passage through Parliament; but now the law has come into operation it is seen that its scope is much wider than was anticipated, and is likely to prove a formidable instrument in the hands of those excellent people who attribute to the brute creation all the mental as well as the physical sensibilities of highly strung humanity, and seek to extend to all and sundry the same measure of tenderness. The Act affects the angler by striking at the very root of his craft; we may leave it to the men of science and of law to decide the nice point whether worms and grubs are "reptiles" within the meaning of the Act; live bait undoubtedly comes within the definition, and they who go pike fishing in this wise will do well to go warily; it shall in future be no defence to wire the tempting frog with tenderness as though you loved him; the frog, or some watchful officer of that admirable Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, on the frog's behalf, may object and hale the angler before the Bench. And they who sit in judgment may or may not share the view of the hard-headed London magistrate who has opined that this Act is to be administered "with a strong dose of commonsense." It is not, however, with baits that we are concerned; that is only a very limited portion of the field covered by this new law; the question that touches the angler at large is this :—when does an animal—a fish being an animal in this sense—when does an animal become "captive" within the meaning of that Act? Now it needs no legal quibble to make clear the doubt on this head; a two sound trout on light tackle is a doubtful "captive;" whereas a two pound jack on a flight of hooks attached to a gimp trace calculated to hold a pike of 12 or 15lbs. is about as certainly "captive" as anything piscatorial can be. Let us consider the former case: the law says that no man shall subject domestic or captive animals to "mental suffering," so, at least it has been argued in the law-courts; now surely the angler who hooks a 2lb. trout on light tackle comes within the reach of this law when he sets to work to play his fish; the trout may or may not feel physical pain—our own opinion is that he feels no pain worth mention—but the hardiest fisherman will not deny that his quarry displays every symptom of fear, rage and the allied emotions. The thing cannot be denied. The fish that puts up the best fight; in other words, the fish that responds with the greatest activity to the promptings of his emotions is the most desirable fish from the sporting point of view; if trout or salmon suffered themselves to be drawn ashore like eels or flounders, the demand for fishings would speedily disappear. We cannot, if we would, deny that the quarry suffers "mental" pain to the extent of its mental ability; therefore if this precious law means anything at all, it applies clearly and directly to playing a fish. The angler who wishes to keep on the safe side of the law must in future use such tackle that he can drag out his quarry as soon as hooked with the same firmness as he would drag out a cumbering weed.

The use to which this piece of legislation has already been put, proves sufficiently that it will be a potent instrument in the hands of those notoriety-seekers and busybodies who harry their neighbours under the plea of "public duty." The R.S.P.C.A. has, we are not sorry to see, taken one bad fall over it already—bringing a case against a lion-tamer and losing it with costs (otherwise compensation for vexatious proceedings) of five guineas. We have no particular affection for the lion-taming exhibition; we have too much respect for the larger felidae to care to see them reduced to the condition of poodles; but we do not want to see the business put down on the ground that it causes "mental pain" to the lion; we regard with the gravest apprehension every new step in the direction of so-called humanitarianism; as that sturdy Briton Lord Newton said a few years ago in the House of Lords, there are people who would make it illegal to kill a cockroach without first calling a veterinary surgeon to give it chloroform. The fact that man is an animal and is likely to remain one is a fundamental fact which some are unable to realise and to which others resolutely close their eyes. The whole humanitarian machinery will go by the board—from Hague Courts of Arbitration to foolish acts of Parliament once one nation wants something badly enough to fight for it, once individual's liberty of action is curtailed against the public sense of what is reasonable. We are a patient people; it may be granted that we exhibit our patience most successfully when the interests of somebody else are at stake; but, recent events at Home notwithstanding, we confess to an abiding faith in the solid good sense of the masses and their preparedness to insist upon it that though foolish laws be passed by well-meaning but uninformed gentlemen at Westminster those laws shall not be interpreted to the detriment and spoliation of men who by legal ingenuities may be ensnared into technical offences which are no offences. A law cannot be effectually administered in the teeth of popular feeling; that is a fact which must be recognised in the continued existence of cockfighting; that ancient pastime has been illegal, in the practical sense of the word, for two generations; but every man who does not wilfully close his eyes to truth is well aware that cockfighting flourishes all over England and is probably all the more popular for that it is carried on with the precautions of expediency.

As regards the new act which that shining light Mr. G. G. Greenwood piloted through the legislature last year, we confess we have little anxiety. Zealous officers of the R.S.P.C.A. cannot patrol every stream in the Kingdom; and a few "test cases," if the Society are unwise enough to venture them, will we feel assured produce results that will discourage even those ardent seekers after subscription by advertisement. The great objection to such legislation is that it provides the meddlers and their instruments with means to vex and irritate people whose tastes and pursuits they neither share nor understand.

"I mean for information," said a member of the legislative body. "I am very glad to hear it," said a bystander, "for no man wants it more."

Joan: "As our engagement is to be a secret, I won't give you an engagement ring at present." Joan: "Oh I could wear it on my right hand."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said an eloquent K.C., "remember that the accused is stone-deaf, and therefore that the voice of conscience appeals to him in vain!"

Proprietor: "Now, sir, have you ever tasted anything like that Burgundy?" Diner: "Yes, the other day, when I put the wrong end of my pen in my mouth!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Newmarket Stakes, which was run on the 15th instant and won by Sir Ernest Cassel's bay colt Cylgad by Cyllene out of Gadfly, was first established in the year 1889 and there have been 22 races since that date, this event like some others having been abandoned in the year 1910 owing to the period of mourning for His Majesty the late King Edward VII., and out of these 22 races the following horses have subsequently won the Derby: Donovan in 1889, Isinglass in 1893, Ladas in 1894, Galtee More in 1897, Diamond Jubilee in 1900, Cicero in 1905, and Sunstar in 1911; but added to this long list of successes must be Ard Patrick's victory in 1902, when he lost the race on an objection for interfering with Fowling Piece: so that it works out that out of 22 races run nine of the runners have subsequently annexed the Derby. There are many other horses that have won this race that have subsequently won and also performed with much distinction at Epsom, notable amongst them the two mares Memoir (1890) and Mimi (1891), both of whom subsequently won the Oaks: William the Third, who ran second to Volodyovski in the Derby of 1901, Flotsam, who was third in the Derby of 1903 to Rock-sand and Vinicius, Louviers who was only beaten a short head by Minoru in the Derby of 1909.

So that we find that out of the 22 races run in 13 cases the horses that have won have run very prominently in one or other of the two Epsom classics, and even when they have not won outright which they have done in a very high percentage of cases, have finished close up and given a very good account of themselves indeed. If we could always depend upon the law of chances working out correctly where racing is concerned it is odds on a Newmarket Stakes winner being 1, 2 or 3 in the Derby. In the present year we do not see any just cause or impediment why history should not repeat itself, for Cylgad has not now shown form for the first time, and though he was ticketed "unreliable" as a two-year-old, he seems to have overcome his dislike to a race-course and to have so far this year run very honestly. He recently secured the Newmarket Biennial Stakes (R.M.) at the Craven Meeting beating it is true no particular form in Bexhill and Flanders; but in the Newmarket Stakes he put the One Thousand winner down very comfortably and it is desirable to bear in mind that Tagalie had just previously as easily defeated the supposedly best filly of the year Belleisle. Sir Ernest Cassel, who is the owner of Cylgad, has never yet won the Derby But many sound judges at Home said at the close of the flat racing season last winter that he might very easily achieve his darling ambition by the means of this very fine son of Cyllene and Gadfly. Both the winner and the runner-up are by Cyllene as Tagalie is by that sire out of Tagale. As a sire of classic winners, particularly of winners of the Derby, Cyllene, who is a descendant of the two great families of which Bend Or and Isonomy are the leading representatives and both of which descend from the common root of Stockwell, has had a great success in recent years. Cicero (1905) was Cyllene's first Derby winner and this was followed by Minoru (1909) in which year that horse also won the Two Thousand, and this was followed by Lemberg in 1910; and this great sire has started the present year well, as his descendants have already secured two important three-year-old races as well as a minor event at Newmarket as already mentioned.

Cylgad's victory in the Newmarket Stakes is all the more valuable by reason of the fact that behind the placed ones were two colts that have been boomed all through the winter and who up till quite recently were neck and neck for supremacy in the Derby betting. White Star collapsed badly in the Guineas and both he and White Star have now been put out of count and it looks very much as though both these recent popular idols have been merely brazen images with feet of clay! Certain is it that neither Lomond nor White Star have fulfilled the good promise of their salad days and both have failed to in any way realise the high expectations entertained concerning them. White Star was very highly tried for the Two Thousand and was stated to have answered the question satisfactorily: the accounts of Lomond's progress through the winter have been encouraging in the highest degree, but they have both ignominiously gone under when they have been asked the question in public and it at present, lacking first-hand information, does not look as though either Mr. Hulton or Mr. Joel were going to win the Derby of 1912. We shall have to look elsewhere for a winner or we are greatly mistaken, and the four horses that seem to be most likely to bulk in the public eye are Sweeper II.,

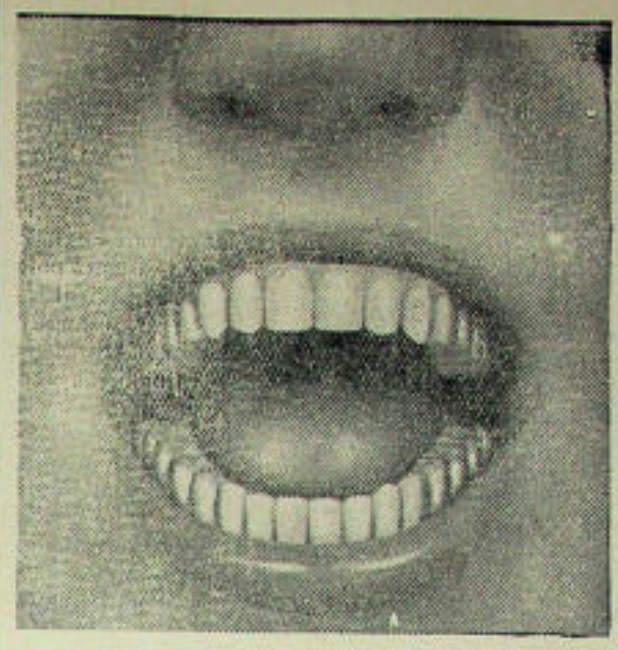
Cylgad, Tagalie and Hall Cross. We have had recent opportunities of judging the three-year-old form of three of them and Hall Cross has more or less "established" himself also by cantering home for the Berkshire Handicap of 7 furlongs on the 12th April.

HALL CROSS, who is owned by Mr. Bower Ismay, made hacks of his field and Saxby had never to move on him. They say of him that he is as fine a colt as has been seen out this year. A big upstanding bay by Desmond out of the flying Altesse. They say he favours the dam who was a renowned more for speed than for staying power and that there is just the chance that he may not himself prove to be a genuine long-distance customer. He will, however, be one of those that will be "considered" when the final weighing up of the chances at Epsom has to be undertaken. There are such a number of colts and fillies amongst this year's three-year-olds that can lay claim to sporting winning chances that the classics promise to supply us with more sensation than they have done for many years past. It is probable that as two-year-olds the fillies were slightly better than the colts and taking a line through Belleisle and Hall Cross at Derby when the former beat the latter by a length and a half in the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes it made Belleisle about the best of the two-year-olds. With Lomond and White Star she stood out as about top of the class: yet on her first important engagement this year she goes down badly before a not greatly fancied mare in Mr. Raphael's Tagalie, who went out at 20 to 1 for the One Thousand and won comfortably! That Tagalie's win in that race was no fluke is proven by the consistent running she has given us in the Newmarket Stakes. Each race so far has made confusion worse confounded and we are faced by a problem that will take a good deal of unraveling. It would not be surprising in a year like this to see a repetition of the surprises brought about by Signorinetta and Jeddah to quote only a couple of instances of rank outsiders that have won: Sir Hugo 40 to 1 was another notable case of a bolt from the blue for the blue riband, but there are, of course, numerous others.

CYLGAD, who was said to be too big for his age last year and was freely dubbed coarse and coachy, is said to have wintered extremely well. As a two-year-old he did not run his races generously and once or twice preferred a circuitous route to the straightest way home, but this year he has apparently given up these knavish tricks and so far as can be judged has come home straight enough in the races he has won this year. Cylgad's first effort as a two-year-old was when he ran third to Javelin and Lom in the Exeter Stakes at the Newmarket First July: he next was out in the Chesterfield Stakes at the Newmarket Second July when he again ran third, the winner being Belleisle and Charmian was second: he started second favourite but was badly beaten. The next time we was out was in the Gimcrack Stakes and he won but was deprived of the race for boring Lomond all across the course. He was getting 14lb. from Mr. Hulton's colt and only won a neck so that this form did not make him out a great horse even if all had gone well. He, however, capped this performance by securing the Breeders' Foal Stakes at Kempton, beating Donnithorne in a canter. Gay Laura being third. At the Newmarket Second October he was only beaten a neck in the Prendergast Stakes by Charmian, Kempton being third a head only away, and at the Houghton Meeting he ran third to White Star and Lorenzo in the Dewhurst Plate, Halberd fourth and Jingling Geordie who swerved badly at the start and never got to his horses. In this performance just before his success in the Newmarket Stakes, namely, when he won the Newmarket Biennial at the Craven Meeting his form was very favourably commented upon as he was presenting the well-tried Bexhill with 12lb. and beat the Kingsclere favourite all the way, winning very comfortably by two lengths. Before this recent performance in the Newmarket Stakes he was quoted variously at 10 to 1 and 100 to 8 for the Derby: his last quoted price is 6 to 1 agst.



MR. W. RAPHAEL'S Tagalie by Cyllene out of Tagale, the winner of the One Thousand at the forlorn odds of 20 to 1 only ran three times as a two-year-old. She is a grey filly and one of the few that are in training. She won the Boscawen Plate at Newmarket last September, beating Donnithorne and Serenader: she ran third in the Cheveley Park Stakes to Belleisle and Polkerris and she was unplaced in the Hook Two-Year-Old Maiden Plate at Sandown which race was won by Lance Chest from Paradise and Omnibus. She is only too obviously an improved one as is testified by her recent consistent form. She has beaten Belleisle, admittedly a very good filly, in her two-year-old year and she has capped this by finishing in front of both Lomond and White Star in the important race now under reference.

MR. LEONARD BRASSEY'S Catmint, who ran third in the Newmarket Stakes, is a bay colt by Spearmint out of Red Lily and only ran twice as a two-year-old. He started in a field of three for the Private Triennial Sweepstakes at Goodwood, the two who finished in front of him being Merry Maiden, who won easily by five lengths and Lavington. His other effort was in the Middle Park Plate in which he was unplaced. Absurd won from Sweeper II. and White Star.

SWEEPER II., who will now probably come into considerable prominence for the Derby, is American bred and is a chestnut colt by Broomstick out of Ravello II. and they say will be ridden by Danny Maher, who had the mount on him at Newmarket when he won the Guineas. He opened the ball successfully last season at Ascot when, with an unknown jockey on his back of the name of Reid, he beat Jaeger and eight others very comfortably and he also subsequently won, with George Stern up at Goodwood, coming home first in the Richmond Stakes, followed in order by Charmian, Melody and Absurd (then called the Absurdity colt) but on that occasion it is said that both the second and third ought to have defeated him, had either of them had the luck of the race which was not the case. There are many people who do not believe in the capacity of useful Yankee two-year-olds being able to reproduce their form and the breeding experts are not earnest on his pedigree about which they are sceptical! He may, however, prove to be the exception that proves the rule and he won the Guineas in such undeniable form that he would be a bold man who would deny the possibility of the victory at Epsom. Of other "possibles" Aiglon by Eager out of Chaffinch is said to be a really good looking colt and he had not an altogether unsuccessful two-year-old career. He was only out three times and won twice—a couple of maiden Two-Year-Old Plates at Newbury. Of White Star they now say that in spite of the gallop at Letcombe Regis which was supposed to have been so satisfactory and the details of which are more or less confirmed, it is doubtful whether Morton backed him at Newmarket and that, if all had been as it looked as if it were, this sound judge would not have let it go past him, for it is said that this astute judge of racing does not support his horses unless they have, figuratively speaking, won before they start. White Star is very undersized and has hardly grown at all since last season. The critics now show as great a disposition to slate the diminutive son of Sundridge and Doris, as before they were loud in his praises and they say that his two-year-old form when dissected does not make him out quite the little wonder that he was at one time supposed to be.

AMONGST visitors to Calcutta during the coming Monsoon racing season will be General Sir Bryan Mahon and Captain Barrett. It is not certain whether they will run any horses at the meetings, but Captain Barrett may have one or two with Mr. J. D. Scott's lot.

MR. CRAWFORD, the well-known Bombay vet, is at present in Ceylon with a few horses, amongst them Hunting Horn, Notion, Dilerjang and Sponsor, and he is much impressed with the excellence of the course and the arrangments. He says it is the best course in the East outside of Calcutta and he has drawn comparisons that are by no means favourable to Bombay. Mr. Crawford is a firm believer in the tote, but he is somewhat solitary in that belief so far as Indian racing men are concerned, for though he may have hopes as to its answering in Bombay, it has yet to be proved that it will. Mr. Crawford, we note, told his Ceylon interviewer that

The mouth should be opened on three occasions only.

1. When you have something clever or beautiful to say.

2. When you wish to eat, drink, or breathe something wholesome.

3. When you use Odol, the World's dentifrice.

the proper time to buy English horses was now! We should have personally thought that any time other than the middle of the English racing season would have been more economical! Many a useful sort "for India" can be picked up for a very moderate figure at the end of the racing season both in England and Ireland, but whilst the battle is at its height the English owner is a bit inclined to open his mouth, especially if he thinks the enquiry is from the supposedly opulent "Indian Naboh!" Mr. Crawford, we see, intends to have a fling for the Governor's Cup in Ceylon and he said to his interviewer that he would probably send Bachelor's Knot over for it. All this does not look as though Mr. Crawford were particularly enamoured of the racing prospects in Poona despite his asseverations to the contrary.

PRIVATE advices from Australia state that Alf. Hoyt, one of the leading jockeys of India, has met with an accident so serious that very slight hopes were entertained of his recovery. Hoyt was widely known in India, having been head jockey for some years to Mr. Mathuradas Goculdass of Bombay and his brilliant exposition of old style horsemanship on Soultline will still be fresh in the minds of all who witnessed it.

FOLLOWERS of racing may be interested to learn that H. H. Maharajah Sir Madho Rao Scindia of Gwalior, G.C.B., G.C.V.O., has turned his attention to the sport of kings.

Anyone passing through Gwalior can see from the train what progress has been made in preparing what promises to be one of the most up-to-date race courses in India.

The course is to be one mile and seven furlongs in circumference, with a straight gallop of seven furlongs. Inside the galloping track there is to be an ample training track. The whole course is railed in. The latest thing in Grand Stands in both enclosures is flanked by all the necessary buildings in the way of dressing rooms, weighing rooms, etc., appertaining to a first class racing centre, and as far as appointments go the Gwalior racecourse will out-shine most up country. I hear that the latest things in the way of starting gate, weighing platform, and clocks, have been ordered together with a totalizator in case I suppose of bookmakers being not allowed to land in India. (This, I hear, is the latest from Bombay.) Charles Harding and some of our other well-known metallicians are contemplating coming out in disguise this next cold weather.

These has been some talk of a Gwalior meeting being held in October or November next, but I fancy that there will be some difficulty about dates and do not think it will take place until the Spring of 1913.

Gwalior is exceptionally situated being on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway and within easy reach of Bhopal, Jhansi, Agra, Lucknow and Delhi.

And if suitable dates are fixed should have no difficulty in attracting a large number of entries both from upcountry owners as well as from stables on their way to or from Calcutta and Bombay. The course itself is situated only a few hundred yards from the railway station with ample stabling accommodation and already several trainers talk of making it their headquarters for the cold weather.

In addition to a racecourse at Gwalior H.H. the Maharajah has nearly completed a turf polo ground at his rains station of Sipri; and it is intended to hold a tournament there annually during the rainy season. The climate of Sipri is all that can be desired after the rains break and Sipri will be to Upper India very much what Poona is to the Deccan.

It is almost impossible to play polo anywhere upcountry after April and before October and Sipri will come as a boon to polo players who can't get away to England. There is a first class hotel there and any amount of accommodation for ponies and players. From Gwalior it is only a few hours run by the Gwalior State Railway.

The Beresford Polo Tournament began yesterday at Simla when the Remnants met Patiala Gymkhana B team and the Ancients met Patiala. The Viceroy's Staff A and B teams, the Commander-in Chief's Staff, the King's Dragoon Guards, Patiala Gymkhana A team and the Diehards have drawn byes. The second round will be played this afternoon, the third round next Monday, the semi-finals next Wednesday and the final on Friday, 31st instant. The following are the teams and handicaps :—

Viceroy's Staff A:—Capt. Nicholson, 3; Lieut.-Col. Maxwell, 5; Capt. Astor, 5; Capt. Tod, 8—total 21.

Viceroy's Staff B:—Capt. Muir, 2; Capt. the Hon. A. Forrester, 2; Major the Hon. H. Fraser, 2; Capt. Keighley, 4—total 10.

Commander-in-Chief's Staff:—Capt. Henderson, 4; Capt. Charrington, 3; Capt. Stephens, 3; Capt. Hogg, 5—total 15.

King's Dragoon Guards:—Capt. Renton, 3; Mr. A. Weinholt, 6; Mr. H. S. Hatfield, 3; Major Wickham, 7—total 19.

Ancients:—Capt. Mowbray, 3; Capt. Heele, 4; Major Harbord, 5; Major-General Rimington, 4—total 16.

Patiala:—Colonel Chanda Singh, 7; Thakur Singh, 5; Jagindar Singh, 3; Balwan Singh, 2—total 17.

Patiala Gymkhana A:—Jaswan Singh, 3; Maharaja of Patiala, 2; Maharaja of Kishengarh, 7; Buni Singh, 8—total 20.

Patiala Gymkhana B:—General Sarup Singh, 3; Rewat Singh, 5; Gunda Singh, 3; Ranjit Singh, 4—total 15.

Diehards:—Capt. Battine, 2; Major Souter, 4; Major Molyneux, 3; Major Talbot, 4—total 13.

Remnants:—Mr. S. Wilberforce, 2; Mr. J. Nethersole, 4; Major Lawrence, 2; Capt. Tyler, 8—total 16.

We have to thank the Proprietors of the Polo Monthly for a copy of their new publication "The International Polo Matches.—England vs. America." This little volume is beautifully got up, illustrated throughout from photographs and contains a full history of the matches played for the Cup from 1886 to 1911. It is the first complete record to be published on the subject and should find a place in every polo player's library.

A smaller attendance graced the proceedings at the second gymkhana of the Simla season at Annandale, but all the events brought out good entries and were keenly contested. The first event, in which gentlemen raced with a tennis ball on a racket, was won by Captain Sloggett, with Captain Charrington second. The Lloyd Lindsay event, which followed, was run in heats, and was finally won by Miss MacMahon and Captain Steele. The egg and spoon race, which was also run in heats fell to Miss Stewart-Wilson with Miss Nethersole second. An affinity race followed, in which the couples, after riding to a point, changed saddles and rode back, holding a handkerchief. It was a very exciting event and was won by Miss Impey and Captain Hogg. In the last event, in which ladies lighted their partners' cigars, Miss Nethersole and Captain Steele came in first and Mrs. Duyrell and Captain Charrington second. The next gymkhana will probably be held on 3rd June.

Prince Jai Singh Rao, eldest son of the Gaekwar of Baroda, was thrown from his horse during a run with the Ooty hounds on Saturday last. He was carried home unconscious and found to be badly injured about the head. He recovered consciousness on Sunday evening and latest reports pronounce him to be progressing favourably.

Reuter wires that 2,260 athletes have entered for the Olympic games at Stockholm exclusive of gymnasts, riflemen, etc. Britain has sent 267 and the Colonies 114. The Olympic Trial races were held at Stamford Bridge last Saturday.

The annual meeting of the Indian Football Association which was to have taken place at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on the 17th instant, was adjourned owing to an irregularity in the procedure followed in calling it. The notice of the meeting had not been accompanied by the agenda of business.

The first annual report of the Western India Football Association shows that the operations of the Association have been very successfully conducted during the past year, and now the Association is to turn its attention (as has already been announced), to the fostering of hockey. A trophy of the value of Rs. 400 has been offered by Mr. Buckley, a well-known sportsman of Bombay, to the Association to be devoted to any sport the Association may select. As every form of Association football is fully provided with trophies, the secretaries of the Association considered the question of introducing a Hockey League and with this in view, entered into correspondence with the Bombay Gymkhana, who at present control hockey in Bombay, and ascertained that they were not desirous of running a league themselves but would willingly co-operate with and assist the Western India Football Association should they form a league. The trust deeds are now complete, and are only awaiting the return of some of the trustees for complete signature.

The accounts of the Association show a profit on the League of Rs. 864, and on the Rovers' tournament of Rs. 733, but there was a loss on the junior tournament of Rs. 79, and an expenditure of Rs. 306 on the Union Jack Club charity match. During the 1910 season the profit on the League was Rs. 560; but there was a loss on the Rovers' tournament.

The Bombay Gymkhana Lawn Tennis handicap tournaments were brought to a conclusion last week. In the Singles Reid —40·3 beat Nicholson —15·3. The latter was no match for Reid who won in two sets 6—1, 6—4. The Doubles proved a very easy win for Sherston-Baker and McMillan (—3·6) who beat Williams Culbertson (—15) by 6—0, 6—2.

The last English mail brings us details of the finals of the Covered Court Lawn Tennis Championships. The Singles seems to have produced a magnificent match between Gobert and Wilding, the Frenchman eventually winning by three sets to 2. Gobert was brilliant and erratic by turns. At his best nothing could have surpassed his tennis. To a splendid service he combined great driving, admirable low and cross volleys and deadly smashing. Wilding was steadier if less brilliant than his rival. He volleyed capitall , and his return of a fast service was excellent while his backhand pass was often in evidence. He played an uphill game with persistence and coolness, and the manner in which he battled to pull the last set out of the fire stamped him as a great match player. The score at the finish was 3—6, 5—7, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4, in favour of Gobert. After a distinctly moderate standard of play throughout the preliminary rounds, the challenge round fell much below expectations. The play all round was often stodgy and monotonous and Gobert was most disappointing, quite failing to live up to his brilliant form of the previous day. A. F. Wilding and S. N. Doust (challengers) beat M. J. G. Ritchie and A. H. Gobert (holders) 6—1, 6—4, 10—12, 4—6, 6—2.

At the annual meeting of the M.C.C. an addition was made to Law 28 of the Laws of Cricket. The Law is as follows :—

"If in running, or at any other time, when the ball is in play he (either batsman) be out of his ground, and his wicket be struck down by the ball after touching any fieldsman, or by the hand or arm with ball in hand, of any fieldsman—'Run out.'"

The additional words, which were unanimously carried, are :—

"But the striker may not be given out thus, unless the ball has touched the bat or hand, when, in playing at a no-ball he is out of his ground and the wicket be put down by the wicket-keeper with the ball, or with hand or arm with ball in hand."

The addition was rendered necessary by the discussion that arose in 1910 through some umpires having given batsmen out stumped from a no-ball.

The following are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week :—

The Australians defeated Essex at Leyton by an innings and 132 runs.

M.C.C. defeated the South Africans by 108 runs at Lord's.

The matches between Yorkshire and Hampshire at Sheffield, and Surrey and Worcestershire at Dudley were drawn owing to rain, the first-named elevens leading on the first innings.

Hampshire to-day defeated Worcestershire by eight wickets at Worcester.

Yorkshire defeated Gloucestershire at Bristol by three wickets.

The match between the South Africans and Yorkshire at Huddersfield was drawn, the visitors leading on the first innings.

Kent defeated Somerset at Gravesend by an innings and nineteen runs.

The Australians beat Surrey at the Oval by seven wickets.

Lancashire beat Middlesex at Lord's by an innings and eight runs.

Northamptonshire beat Essex at Leyton by seven wickets.

Notts beat Leicester at Nottingham by an innings and twelve runs.

Cambridge University beat Sussex at Cambridge by ten wickets.

The English paper "Boxing" has the following details of the encounter between Matt Wells, the English Light-Weight Champion and the redoubtable Chicago boy, Packey McFarland, at Madison Square Gardens, New York, on the 26th April. As already reported McFarland had things all his own way throughout the ten rounds and won very easily. The opening exchanges were very even, as Packey was apparently anxious to thoroughly test his man's power before he let himself go. Matt too seemed to be disposed to caution, and contented himself more or less to feeling out his man. Packey had a shade the best of what little was done, and, though the pace was not particularly fast, the spectators settled down to thoroughly enjoy what they hoped would prove a really good bout. Packey, however, did not allow us to remain long in doubt as to his intentions. Straight from the second gong he proceeded to take full command of the situation. Matt led off with a left to the face, which McFarland avoided with ease, and then, as the Englishman rushed in to get to close quarters, stopped him with a neat left jab to the nose, followed swiftly by a right upper-cut to the body. Matt did not relish this treatment, and came in full of determination, but found it practically impossible to get past Packey's straight left which was being shot with unerring accuracy time and again home to the face. I very much doubt if Wells succeded in landing a single clean punch in this round, and he went back to his corner at the close a badly disgruntled man. He bounded out fiercely for the third essay, and charged furiously at Packey, only to find himself stopped with ease. His straight punches were either stopped or else avoided by a neat turn of the head, his hooks or swings were either ducked or side stepped, while whenever he did manage to get to close quarters, it was only to find his body blows blocked and himself practically powerless to hand over anything effective. And all the time Packey's stinging drives kept pinging away on Matt's nose, face and lips until these must have been as sore as if they had been scalded. Matt's face flushed up a brilliant crimson long before the bout had gone half way, while not only were his nose and lips bleeding freely but his left ear was also showing signs of the visitations it had received.

Matt tried to get home in every conceivable fashion. He came striding in. He stood up and tried to box on even terms; he tried fierce rushes and wild swings; he tried everything he knew, but never once was he able to ruffle Packey's equanimity. The Chicagoan was on top and supremely confident. He had his man sized up properly, and clearly never meant to allow him to get loose for a single instant. Wells got frantic, but it wasn't the slightest use. Do as he would he couldn't land any more than he could stop Packey landing. In all he succeeded in getting in about a dozen clean blows at most, while Packey scored them by the hundred.

Matt took all that was coming in game fashion and came up continually for more of the same, and it must be said that he never once appeared to be in any way shaken. But then Packey wasn't trying to put him out or at least did not appear to be painfully keen on doing so. In fact the sleep-producer seems to have been altogether cut out of the stock-yard boy's armoury these days. He may have lost his old power in this direction or it may be that with so many promoters willing to bid good prices for anything which looks like an attractive bout he has decided not to show too marked a superiority. He won as he liked and hit Wells often enough to have knocked out a dozen men, and yet except for his cut lips and slightly damaged ear and nose the Englishman left the ring with singularly few marks on his face and to all intents and purposes pretty nearly as fresh as when he started. He could easily have continued for another ten rounds or even longer on the punishment he had received.

Dan (Porky) Flynn met Jim Barry at the Sydney Stadium on the 27th ultimo and these two American heavy-weights put up a good battle, Flynn carrying too many guns for his opponent. Barry fought hard and determinedly ; and, always high-strung, threatened things every moment, but the better boxer beat him, which was as it should have been, for boxing is an art guaranteed to pull the more skilful man through, provided he is not giving away too much in physique and strength, attributes which were perhaps as near equal as could be with Flynn and Barry. Happenings all through were exciting enough, but as a rule there was an absence of effect which to some extent might be put down to the fact that both men were well seasoned and toughened by experience.

In the early part of the contest Barry did not do so well as on the previous occasion a few weeks ago, of his meeting the same man, but the latter half saw him battling away like a fury, and there were rounds when it looked as if his chance of success was better than good, but he tired a lot towards the finish, and, small wonder, for Nature had been very heavily drawn upon. Flynn won well on points.

Jim Sullivan, having resigned his title, the Middle-Weight Championship of England and the Lonsdale Belt were fought for at the National Sporting Club on the 20th instant, Jack Harrison defeating McEnroy on points in twenty rounds.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 3rd May 1912.

The Academy opens next week: I shall hope to say a few words about the outstanding pictures in my next letter. Meanwhile a few observations on "Varnishing-day," to go on with. A velvet jacket was once essential to the painter's art. Without it he could not hope to succeed. A paint-box was desirable, of course, but if he could not afford both it was better to buy the velvet jacket and let the paint-box go. How lamentably the present generation has fallen off from the legendary standard in this matter was only too plain at the Academy yesterday. It was easy to spend an hour in the galleries and never see a single velvet jacket, nor even a flowing tie. Instead, there were hundreds of men clothed so ordinarily that they might have been cabinet ministers, commercial magnates, or solicitors from Chancery Lane.

It is said that there are old exhibitors who can enter Burlington House on Varnishing-day without perceptible emotion of any kind. For the novice, however, every detail of the routine is thrilling. The names of exhibitors with the numbers of their pictures, are printed on sheets and pasted on a trestle table in the entrance hall. It is necessary to see that the name is printed in the form in which the budding artist intends it to become famous. A

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

Merits Every Good Word ever spoken in its praise.

To say a Fountain Pen is reliable, does not make it so. To say a Fountain Pen is the best, does not make it so. But when hundreds of thousands of people constantly affirm that a certain Fountain Pen is absolutely reliable, and is without a doubt the best, then one may be quite sure the pen possesses exceptional merit.

People started praising Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen twenty-six years ago. To-day, in its perfected form, Waterman's Ideal enjoys the whole-hearted support of millions of writers. No, it is no exaggeration—millions. Over a million Waterman's Ideals were sold last year—also the year before. Could you wish for stronger evidence of the quality of the Pen?

telling Christian name is sometimes a great help, and a hyphenated surname is even better. Many additions of this kind were made to the sheets yesterday, where the authorities, already conspiring against genius, had printed initials only. In the galleries, the busy artists—there are between thirteen and fourteen hundred exhibitors—were perched about on trestles, sponging and varnishing. One lady, when she could find absolutely nothing more to do to her picture, started sponging the frame.

There is an almost startling moderation in the statements of the organisers of this Health Week.

No one, for instance, could be called a faddist who urges that "you should wash yourself at least once a day," that you should "allow at least fifteen minutes for a meal," and that you "should not forget the weekly bath."

In Halifax has been published a most impressive account of the trial and condemnation of a fly. One of the witnesses stated that it was quite possible that a relative of the accused who had committed suicide in a basin of milk had just returned from a visit to a fever hospital.

The next to give evidence was a bacteriologist, who stated that on a house fly captured on a dining table he found 6,600,000 bacteria.

"'Look at the prisoner now," exclaimed the witness. All eyes, were turned to the dock. The fly was rubbing his legs together. 'That is one of the ways in which he deposits filth and germs,' explained the expert.

"The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, with the recommendation that every householder should appoint himself public executioner."

What arrant bosh it all is! Imagine for a moment what life in India would be if one paused to consider mosquitos, cockroaches, lizards, and all the ants and flies of sorts! Yet the average Anglo-Indian gets along pretty well and looks well enough on it. Indeed, take him all round, he is usually a healthier, better set up person than the average hysterical unhealthy living Londoner—at least that is my verdict when I compare my friends home on leave with the humanity among which my lot is now cast.

An official announcement was made on Monday by the directors that the London Evening Times had ceased publication. No editions were issued during the day. In Fleet Street a great deal of sympathy was expressed with the promoters, who after a hard fight, had found the huge weight of expense involved in attempting to establish a London evening paper too great to be borne.

For eighteen months the Evening Times lived, and its failure makes clear again to the public what a tremendously costly business it is to establish an evening paper in the metropolis. At the outset the Evening Times had the financial backing of several wealthy members of Parliament, but it is stated that nearly £80,000 was lost upon the venture.

A new development of golf has been made possible by the appearance on the Bushey links of a player clad in a complete suit of shining armour. The game has long been lacking in variety, especially as a theme of conversation, but this idea of costume golf bids fair to make it more attractive than ever. It may even lead to a new method of handicapping. A suit of mediaeval armour ought to bring a good player down to the level of a beginner; and anyone padded to represent Falstaff should be allowed a liberal advantage in the score. If this new game of personification becomes general, one must hope that sound judgment will be shown in the selection of the characters. It would have a bad effect, for instance, if anyone dressed himself up as a bishop, because the expletives of the golf links are not strictly canonical, and the free-and-easy terms of the golfer's commination service would not sound well dropping from episcopal lips. Kinglets in armour are well enough, and possibly a few Choctaw Indians, stage Macbeths, and raw Highlanders in kilts might be welcomed as picturesque aids to the game, but the real stroke of genius would be shown by the player who fell back upon the impersonal and boldly announced himself as a dam.

Sir George Frampton's Peter Pan statue in Kensington Gardens, by the Serpentine, was informally unveiled during Tuesday night.

To quote the poetic announcement of the prosaic Times:—

"There is a surprise in store for the children who go to Kensington Gardens to feed the ducks in the Serpentine this morning. Down by the little bay on the south-western side of the tail of the Serpentine they will find a May-day gift by Mr. J. M. Barrie, a figure of Peter Pan blowing his pipe on the stump of a tree, with fairies and mice and squirrels all around. It is the work of Sir George Frampton, and the bronze figure of the boy who would not grow up is delightfully conceived.

Men were engaged on Monday and Tuesday in placing the work of the sculptor in position behind drawn curtains. These will be removed during the night, and the children will just find Peter Pan there as if he had grown out of the turf on May morning. It was the wish of Mr. Barrie and of Sir George Frampton that there should be no formal unveiling, and the Office of Works fell in with a happy idea."

But there are other people with ideas about Peter Pan which are not quite so happy.

In the House of Commons next day Mr. France asked Mr. W. W. Benn, in view of the fact that consent had been given for the erection of a statue of Peter Pan in Kensington Gardens, if he were prepared to accept offers from other authors, actor-managers, or from business firms for the erection of statues to commemorate and to increase the fame of persons or wares in which they and the public were deeply interested.

Mr. Benn (whom every lover of Peter Pan would have confidently expected to wither the impious questioner) made this astonishing reply:—"The First Commissioner of Works has already promised not to authorise the erection of any more statues in the royal parks without consulting Parliament.

A sudden outburst of generosity which prompted a strangely-dressed young man, named Charlie Green, to throw handfuls of gold and silver to passers-by in the Strand and Fleet Street on Monday ended abruptly in his being marched to Bridewell, where he was charged with obstructing the traffic.

Newspaper boys near the Gaiety Theatre were the first to benefit from the young man's generosity. He was dressed completely in green, having gone to the length of putting on a pair of bright green spats. The valuable emerald pin which held his green tie was of course stolen by some one in the crowd which soon gathered round him.

He gave the newsboys outside the Gaiety Theatre a sovereign each, telling them that they were "Bright little fellows, and deserved presents."

The boys expressed boundless admiration for him, and naturally accompanied him when he walked towards the Law Courts.

After reaching Fleet Street the man's generosity completely mastered him, and extraordinary scenes were witnessed. He threw sovereigns and shillings into the air, and a large crowd fought and tore like wild beasts on the pavement and in the roadway to capture the coins.

In a few minutes traffic was completely suspended, and the man varied the proceedings by throwing money into private motor-cars, which were held up by the crowd of people round him.

Four or five policemen fought their way through the semi-demented people, and arrested the extraordinary individual who had brought such a rich harvest to the newspaper sellers.

The man, who spoke with an American accent, threw away at least £100 in gold before he was arrested and the street had to be cleared a number of times after he had gone, for crowds of people continued to hunt for stray coins in the gutter.

Mr. B. Macdonald Hastings is the Futurist of the English drama; the same spirit that moves the Italian Futurists to throw over all the conventions of painting moves Mr. Hastings to trample riotously on all the cherished conventions of the stage.

In "Love—and What Then?" produced at the Playhouse last Thursday night, he has the audacity to end his play where it should begun. That is a mere detail in the incredible topsy-turveydom of the night, for "Love—and What Then?" begins with pure comedy, develops suddenly very near to tragedy, then switches on to musical comedy, without the music, and ends up with roaring farce, where a bishop nurses a baby.

It is the most elusive and most perplexing play that London has seen for years. It has the airiness and brilliance of an Oscar Wilde comedy, the petticoat humours of a French farce, and a sentiment that belongs to Mr. Barrie.

The theme is simple—a wife who knows she is pretty and wants to be loved humanly, married to a vicar who only thinks of her soul. There are village theatricals, and she appears as a scarlet Pierrette in a skirt as short as Pavlova's.

A young lieutenant is in the party, and she lets him kiss her passionately. She explains, "I want to teach John how to kiss." There is a broad-minded bishop, the most broad-minded bishop that ever walked the stage, and he having discovered her in a clandestine meeting with the young lieutenant, thinks she should be removed from temptation. Therefore he gives the vicar a living in Chatham, quite oblivious of the fact that the young lieutenant is stationed at Chatham.

Is it to be taken seriously or not? The audience was perplexed, for Mr. Hastings, like a pierrot with a bladder, slapped every one on the back just when things were getting too serious. One laughed at every other line, at sheer wit and acrid humour, and especially at Mr. Cyril Maude as the delightful bishop who was firmly convinced that "beer tastes best out of a tankard."

Miss Margery Maude, too, was equally delightful as the wife who wants to be loved, and Miss Frances Ivor gave a perfect study of an elderly matron, the worldly wise mother of the vicar. Indeed, the whole play was excellently acted and mounted, and the audience went away perplexed, but happy.

General regret will be occasioned by the death of Miss Beryl Faber, the popular comedy actress which occurred on the 1st May in London. Miss Faber, who returned to London last Thursday, after nursing her mother through an illness, contracted a chill that quickly developed into pneumonia.

On the London stage Miss Faber had few equals in comedy where the part to be interpreted was that of a well-bred woman in Society. She had fine features, walked gracefully, had distinguished manners, a pleasant voice, and considerable fascination. She was an amateur before she became a professional actress eighteen years ago, and during her career won renown in many successful plays at the St. James's, His Majesty's, and other theatres. She was a woman of much more than average ability and attractive personality.

Her two ventures into theatre management were not successful, but little failures did not depress her. She collaborated with her husband, Mr. Cosmo Hamilton, the dramatist and novelist, in writing several plays, and was probably more interested in the literary than in the acting side of the theatre. She was the daughter of a doctor and the sister of Mr. C. Aubrey Smith, the actor.

Miss Faber's last appearance on the stage was in her husband's play "The Blindness of Virtue," which ended its run at the Little Theatre on 29th March.

THE PARADISE OF TIGERS.

II.

After securing our first tiger on the first day of our shooting in the Paradise of Tigers, we rested on our laurels for some days—not willingly, but curiously enough because no kills by tigers were reported for three whole days after our first day's shooting, and it would be useless to beat unless a kill had taken place.

We amused ourselves in camp by writing, reading, overhauling fishing tackle, thoroughly oiling guns and rifles and generally making ourselves very busy in a lazy kind of away. About eleven in the morning of the fourth day a real wild Bhil came into camp carrying an Urdu written letter in the cleft of a stick from Gurmukh Singh, one of our shikaries at a place called Piplia, some sixteen miles away. The news was good and filled us with a longing to be in saddle and gallop off post haste to Piplia. The oldest head in the party counselled slower but equally sure methods. From the letter we learnt that a tiger, tigress and one cub had been visiting the big nullah south of Piplia for some days and that early the evening before they had killed the buffalo calf tied up by Gurmukh Singh. Careful examination of all the exits by daylight this very morning, wrote Gurmukh Singh, disclosed the fact that the tigers had not left the nullah and were probably lying up in the vicinity of the kill. There was ample water and shade in the nullah and no cattle owners were camped in the locality and so the tiger were not likely to be disturbed by crowds of cattle invading the nullah for water.

The letter ended "but come quickly, your honours." We hardly needed this exhortation—the difficulty was to curb our impatience to be off and doing at once. A council of war was held and plans decided on. The wild Bhil who brought the news was feasted and refreshed—a drink of milk, a few whiffs from a hubble-bubble, and a couple of opium pills drawn from the recesses of his loin cloth and he declared himself ready to start back on a sixteen-mile march, solitary and alone through trackless jungles—armed only with a light wood axe—to carry sealed orders to Gurmukh Singh. He undertook to reach Piplia before the sun was so low, pointing half way down the stem of a neighbouring tree—which would indicate about 5 o'clock in the evening. Wonderful to say he did it too.

The sealed orders conveyed to Gurmukh Singh told him we would be at Piplia next morning by half-past eight in the morning at latest. That he was to tie up another buffalo calf that night in the nullah and to collect as many villagers as he could to act as beaters.

Next morning 5 o'clock saw us four in the saddle and starting for Piplia—rifles, cartridges, water bottles, lunch and the miscellaneous paraphernalia of a big game shoot had gone on by moonlight overnight in advance of us. Arriving at Piplia before scheduled time we had to wait till Gurmukh Singh returned from inspecting the buffalo calf and the surrounding jungle On his return to Piplia his beaming face told its own tale. The tigers had killed overnight, and had eaten every bit of the kill between them, and, best of all, no tell-tale tracks were visible at any of the exits to show that they had left the jungle. To make certainty more certain Gurmukh Singh and some coolies had spent the previous day in spreading fine sand along all the wild animal runs leading out of the nullah. With boisterous glee the old Sikh shikari chuckled aloud in his beard saying "Saheb, we've got them for a certainty—if"—he added the rider to save his name—"if you only shoot straight." We felt certain ourselves that one, two if not all three tigers would fall to our rifles—we were full of confidence in our shooting powers.

The "koh" or ravine in which the tigers were lying up was a narrow fissure in the earth's surface, some hundred and fifty yards across at its broadest place and at one end where the tiger were supposed to be lying up it narrowed to about twenty yards across and was bounded by precipitous cliffs about a hundred feet high. From the top of this cliff a stream fell over into space forming an infant waterfall, which lost itself in a pool—some twenty feet in diameter—of the clearest and coolest water to be found within miles around. The overflow from this limpid pool gently trickled away from the lower end forming a small stream threading its way through the centre of the ravine—pausing here and there to create a pool round whose edges evergreen clusters of willows grew and flourished, and again moving forward slowly over a rocky ledge into gravel where the stream lost itself to reappear yards lower down again as a stream of running water.

As the ravine broadened the rocky sides became lower and lower and gradually about a mile from the big pool and waterfall the ravine merged into flat and open land. The exits towards the head of the ravine, leading to the open grass lands above, were few and far between and so steep that a heavy animal would hardly select for choice unless badly brightened, and the tiger we felt sure would not of choice use them as they opened on to open grass lands where neither shade nor cover existed for many weary miles.

While we sat under a shady mango tree and demolished a breakfast for which our early morning ride had given us a splendid appetite, Gurmukh Singh took off the beaters to the head of the ravine, and having placed "stops"—or men over every possible exit from the ravine to the grass lands above—with orders to tap a couple of stones against one another should they see any tiger trying to escape by the exit over which they were placed—he left the remainder of the beaters at the head of the ravine.

Breakfast over we rode forward to a pre-arranged spot about three-quarters of a mile from the head of the ravine where Gurmukh Singh met us.

Leaving our ponies here in charge of our syces we went carefully on foot into the ravine with rifles loaded and every sense alert and tense. On the way to our moodes, or seats in trees from where we were to shoot, Gurmukh Singh pointed out with great pride, within a circle of stones he had himself placed round it, an enormous tiger pug most clearly imprinted in the soft sand of the footpath. This sign manual or note of paw of the tiger filled our hearts with eager longing to beg his pelt.

When we had climbed each into his appointed place and gazed along the line of rifles, it was apparent that the shooters were placed two along the bottom of the ravine and one on each of its slightly raised sides. The flank guns were some twenty-five to thirty feet above the level of the guns posted in the bottom of the valley.

Each gun had roughly some thirty yards space to right and left within which to shoot. It seemed impossible, if the flank stops but did their duty and prevented the tiger from breaking out at the exits, that we could not but bag the game whenever it was afoot. Gurmukh Singh cautioning silence and pointing out once again the direction from which the beaters would come, went off to start the beat.

Seated high above the ground one could see clearly for quite a long distance. No motion caught the eye except the flutter of a roving butterfly's wing and the occasional "tunk, tunk, tunk" of a busy coppersmith was the only sound heard above the soft soughing of a fugitive breeze that now and then blew gently through the tree-tops barely causing a rustle among the leaves. Gazing on that peaceful resting jungle no onlooker could have guessed that three tigers and numerous other animals and some two hundred and fifty human beings were gathered within a radius of a mile of him.

A long drawn wait, would Gurmukh Singh never start the beat. The sun grew hotter and fiercer. The waiting guns grew weary and sleepy. What could have happened? Could the tiger have seized our shikari as he wended his way back to the beaters?

Anxiety for Gurmukh Singh's fate and drowsiness fought each other—and drowsiness won the day.

Looking down the line four drowsy nodding heads might have been seen, rifles resting across laps, sun hats tilted well forward.

Hark! what's that!

Crash! Bang! Yell! Boomboom! Yell! Bang! Dub-a-dub! Dub-a-dub! Yell! Yell! Yell!

Four nodding mandarins sprang into wakeful sportsman in a moment, risking falling from dangerous seats and dropping loaded rifles in the transformation movements.

The beat had began, thank Heaven—now for action. A momentary hushed silence, deep as night, followed the first outburst of noise—as if expectently waiting a challenging roar from the denizens of the ravine.

Birdlife, easiest startled, took wing here and there rising from the dense foliage in whose shade they had been resting in peaceful siesta. Crows cawed hoarsely their challenge of enquiry as to what the uproar meant. Flocks of minahs rose, noisily chattering shrilly to each other, forgetting in a moment in the noise of their own chatter the cause of their awakening, subsided into deeper, cooler shade and sought again oblivion from heat and glare. A dozen vultures disturbed at some ghastly meal rise laboriously to some neighbouring tree tops where settling censoriously they screw their heads to right and left seeking to sight the disturbers of their peace, squinting horribly in the blazing sunlight. Down from the shady depths of the forest rose a startled sambhur's deep bell note—once and yet again. Then cries and noises rose in tumultuous profusion from the head of the ravine. Huge rocks and boulders rolled thundering down, human voices raccoons and shrill joined the general chorus of sound—tom-toms added their deep-toned boom boom and hand drums their rapid rattling dub-a-dub, dub-a-dub, dub-a-dub to the increasing medley of sound, anon a clarion noted trumpet blared out the "charge" or the "cease fire" or a blank cartridge or two fired into some deeper cover crackled forth sharp and definite for a second upon the air above the general hubbub. A thousand devils of noise and uproar had indeed been let lose upon the peaceful resting jungle in the slumbering quiet of its noonday siesta.

The guns alert and watchful since the first crash of noise eagerly scanned each pathway leading towards them and stared carefully and persistently into the depths of every bush to their front lest it should shelter some skulking tiger taking cover before making a final dash for liberty.

Suddenly a rushing scuttle through the undergrowth near the second gun and all eyes turned to the noise. A sounder of pig, some eight or nine squeakers and a heavy old sow broke cover and rush away for safety in rear of the guns. A minute later an enormous boar trotted out quietly from cover following the line taken by the sow and squeakers and disappeared leisurely to the rear—grumpy and angry, grunting his disapproval at being disturbed in his midday sleep—by no means a sweet tempered stranger to meet on a narrow pathway.

The fourth gun on the left suddenly raised his rifle to his shoulder—the glint of the sun on the barrels seemed to catch each watching eye and three heads turned sharply to the left. Down came the rifle as smartly as it went up, but disappointment was plainly visible in the attitude of the sportsman. A peacock taking wing and deserting the jungle's shade for the higher open land explained the cause. Three sambhur does nervously advancing towards the line of guns suddenly spotted a flank gun seated in a tree, hesitated motionless a moment, then rushed off obliquely to find themselves under the other flank gun, who unable to resist a "whist-whist" as they passed under his tree, added wings of terror to their flight as they crashed through the bush and undergrowth. The old stag who had been following warily in their wake, scenting danger ahead, broke back and rushed up one of the steeper side exits to the comparative safety of the open grass lands undeterred by the stone beating of the stop, who in his excitement forgot his instructions, which were only to try and stop a breaking tiger and nothing else. The presence of the pig and sambhur seemed to indicate an absence of tiger, as neither of these wary beasts are fond of sharing quarters with tiger in the same jungle, but our hopes lay in the reliability of our shikari, and the fact that no other water was to be found for miles around. The beaters were tiring, the heat becoming intense, and the beat was advancing more leisurely and less noisily than at first.

A piercing yell as of one in mortal terror and agony rent the air. A hushed silence, the beaters were seen hurriedly climbing trees. A volley of blank from the armed shikaris, a few tomtoms and drums suddenly waking to their job boomed and rolled out. Terrified yells and frenzied cries rose from the beaters of "mardala" "mardala" (he's killed) we knew some accident had happened, but what, we could not tell and we must possess ourselves in patience. Then we could hear Gurmukh Singh rallying his scattered forces and presently the beat commenced again. Then bang! bang! from the left centre gun and almost immediately bang! from the right flank gun. Redoubled yells and shouts from the beaters' drums and tom-toms rivalled one another in a sudden frantic outburst of noise, then silence, and the beaters again took to the trees. The centre left gun whistled five minutes later to let the beaters know all was safe and the right flank gun also to the same effect.

Down came the beaters from their tree tops, sliding, slipping, falling to the ground in their haste, and the whole crowd came rushing pell-mell yelling towards the guns, informing us in the same breath that a man had been mauled, that he was bound to die, that the sahebs would give much buksish as a tiger had been killed.

The wounded man was brought up by five men carrying him on an improvised stretcher. His wounds—which were not severe—scratches on one shoulder and back—were promptly dressed in strong carbolic acid which made the unfortunate man yell blue murder—but which saved his life as in ten days he was passed out from our camp hospital as absolutely cured. The wounded man attended to, we went to see the bag.

Almost under the tree of the centre left gun lay two beautiful striped tigers or, rather, to be correct a tigress and her cub—both stone dead to a shot apiece.

Well done centre left gun—a right and left at tiger is a rare chance to get and to bag them both was lucky and good shooting.

The right flank gun showed a blood trail leading away to the rear of his position, showing the tiger—an enormous one he said—to have been badly hit.

An hour later we four with Gurmukh Singh and four Bhil trackers took up the blood trail, having allowed the wounded tiger to get cold and stiff from his wound, and within three hundred yards we came across the tiger stone dead.

The tiger measured 9ft. 6ins., the tigress 8ft. 4ins. and the cub was just five inches under seven foot.

The tigers were with difficulty placed in two village bullock carts, but the fun began when the bullocks were led up to be yoked to the cart. The smell of the tigers was too much for them. They struggled and refused to approach the carts from whence the terrifying smell emanated, though they saw nothing as the carcases were covered in green leaves. Finally breaking their nose ropes they fled terror-stricken with tails erect back to the village from whence they belonged. With great difficulty two teams of buffalo bulls were procured and eventually the procession headed for our camp sixteen miles away, arriving there in the small hours of the next morning where the carcases were handed over to the care of the moochee we had brought with us for the purpose of skinning our killed game.

As soon as the tigers were safely started on the homeward journey we mounted our ponies and cantered off in the cool of the evening for our camp.

Thus ended the second day of our shooting in the paradise of tigers and we were jolly well pleased with ourselves and our good luck.

ANABIL.

WILDFOWL SHOOTING IN TIBET.

BETWEEN Gyangtse and the frontier of India there are two large lakes, and these are covered at certain seasons with countless duck and geese, which are obliged to leave them when the water freezes in winter. At the southern edge of the further, higher and larger of these lakes (the Rham Tso), and at a distance of about 75 miles from Gyangtse, is a marsh some 30 square miles in extent; and it was with the object of shooting here that my companion and I started from our headquarters one morning in the middle of October.

Our first march of 43 miles was to the village of Samoda, the scene of a skirmish in 1904. Here we put up in the dak bungalow, near which lies a small patch of marshy ground, where we bagged a few of the large Himalayan solitary snipe and a couple of ducks; but, wearied with our long-ride on small ponies, we were not sufficiently enthusiastic to work for a larger bag. Next morning we made an early start, as we had to cover 27 miles into Dochen. After riding 14 miles we reached Kala, where we breakfasted in the bungalow, and from here we could see the nearer, lower, and smaller of the two lakes (the Kala Tso), but we could not afford the time to shoot round it. The road from Kala to Dochen runs at first beside the stream which flows down from the Rham Tso into the Kala Tso. After travelling along this road for about three miles, up the defile between the two lakes, we came to the plain on which the larger lake lies, and from this point we followed its shore into Dochen. The first view of the Rham Tso, when arriving from the direction of Kala, is very striking—a long range of snowy peaks, with glaciers below them and terminating in Chumolhari (24,000 feet), being reflected from its surface.

At this time of year the margin of the lake was black with ducks of many varieties, and large flocks of barheaded geese were also to be seen. These geese nest here in great numbers, and in the breeding season are quite tame. In spite of the short time at our disposal, we managed, while riding along the shore of the lake, to secure fifteen teal, nine ducks, and four geese. The next morning we rode the few miles which separated us from the point at which we were to commence shooting on the large marsh. Here we were joined by our third gun, who had come from Tuna (the next stage toward India), and brought with him a Tibetan gazelle which he had shot on the road. We dismounted, and, first leaving our ponies to graze at the edge of the marsh, we started. The first plunge required some courage, as, even at this time of year (at an altitude of 14,700 feet), the surface was covered by a thin film of ice, which, however, melted later in the day, when the sun became stronger.

We had frequently shot over this ground before, and our experience had taught us that, to make a good mixed bag, it was best for the guns to take different directions. When walking in line we would kill more snipe, but our chances for ducks or geese would be less. Each gun was accompanied by two Tibetans, carrying on their backs bamboo baskets, in which the game was placed. The first shot was greeted by a noise which it would be impossible to describe—caused by hundreds of thousands (dare I say millions?) of geese and ducks rising mostly from the shore of the lake and flying in alarm to settle down at a safe distance from the land. It was most exhilarating sport. Ducks of many kinds were flying all round; snipe frequently darted away, uttering their well-known harsh calls; while immense flocks of geese were to be seen in the distance. The snipe were curiously local. Sometimes a great many would be seen together, and then for an hour we seemed to be avoiding the ground they preferred. It was necessary to have eyes all around one, especially in the direction of the other two guns, as ducks which they had disturbed would frequently fly in my direction, and if I and my two game-carriers crouched soon enough I might get a shot. Presently all the remaining geese rose and flew in a line several hundred yards long, in the direction of the lake, and I crouched in the hope that some portion of the line would pass overhead, while the other guns (who had also seen them) hid themselves as much as possible. If we were fortunate, a long line like this might pass over all three guns and contribute materially to the bag.

Golden plover were also very plentiful; in fact, they were so numerous that we did not shoot them, as these birds are comparatively tame, and if we had done so our bag would have contained little else. Curlews, whimbrels, redshanks, avocets, and many other waders were also found here in great numbers, besides hawks and eagles. I once saw a hawk hunting a teal over a small pool on the marsh; each time that the hawk struck, the teal dived, and the birds were so occupied in this life-and-death contest that they allowed me to approach quite near to them. The large black-necked crane was also to be seen in considerable numbers. I have taken their eggs here in June. Foxes were not at all uncommon, but would not allow us to approach them; while in the distance, on the plain at the edge of the marsh, kyangs and gazelles could be seen grazing. In the midst of this marsh was a low island on which were some huts and tents, and around this, grazing on the marsh grasses, were many ponies. These were the property of Tibetan officials at Gyangtse, and had been sent here to fatten on the good grass, which in this dry country is very scarce.

It was on this island we converged about lunch-time, and for a few brief minutes rested and compared notes regarding the sport. After lunch we again separated and continued shooting till after sunset. In the evening it became very cold and a film of ice again formed on the water. A cold ride in wet clothes would have been most unpleasant, so we had ordered a tent to be pitched at the place where we had left our ponies in the morning. We made our way in that direction when it was becoming dark, and were glad enough to find an oil stove at which to warm ourselves, change our clothes, and prepare some hot tea. We then counted our bag, which proved to contain 17 geese, 29 ducks of five varieties, 28 teal, and 27 snipe—101 head in all. We rode back to the dak bungalow at Dochen in the dark, having to pick our way carefully as we skirted the edge of the marsh until we reached the main road, where the going was good.

The next morning we were to return to Kala, and, as we had the whole day in which to make the short march of 13 miles, we expected to get some sport on the way. We had with us a collapsible Berthon boat, to which one of our number, an expert sailor from Ireland, had rigged a sail. This we launched with some difficulty, but were so much hampered by the shallowness of the lake and the number of hidden mud-banks that we were obliged to give up the attempt to sail. We also had a low pony trap which was most useful, especially to carry game shot on the road. On this occasion we sometimes drove in the trap and sometimes rode, getting down whenever the chance for a shot offered itself, and, indeed, occasionally, while driving, flocks of ducks came over us, and, to the alarm of the pony, we killed some of them from the trap. At a distance of nine or ten miles from Kala we reached a bridge spanning the stream which joins the two lakes, and here we had excellent flight-shooting for a short time. After reaching Kala and taking tea, we went out to sit over some small ponds in the vicinity, and here again had some nice shooting until it became too dark to see. Our bag this day totalled 48 head, 32 of which were ducks of four varieties and teal.

From Kala we travelled back to Gyangtse in two days. Part of the way we traversed an open plain on which gazelles and kyangs were to be seen, while in the hills ovis ammon and burhel might be found, though we were not fortunate enough to see any of them on this occasion. The road for the last ten miles into Gyangtse passes several patches of thorny jungle, and, going through these, we managed to add seventeen partridges to our bag. While the best shooting was to be had by making an expedition such as that just described, still, very good duck and goose shooting could be obtained on the plain at Gyangtse itself, and it was only occasionally that we could spare the time to make such a long excursion as this one.—CAPTAIN F. M. BAILEY, in Sports Afield.

Fishing.

CONGERS AND CONGER-FISHING.

THE amateur fisherman who would challenge the redoubtable and agile sea eel must take his courage in both hands, for the slimy creature has rather an unenviable reputation. It is popularly saddled with all the crimes in the Decalogue, and to its culpability there would seem to be no bounds.

It is, in simple fact and apart from romance, rather an awkward customer to tackle. Its strength is quite extraordinary, and when pulled aboard with the gaff it is often disposed to be somewhat rude and aggressive in its behaviour. The larger specimens of the breed like to twine themselves round the legs of their captors, somewhat after the fashion of the serpents that made a dash at Laocoon and his sons. They are usually very noisy and demonstrative. They growl and snarl in no subdued key, and with fascinating twistings and convolutions contrive to insinuate themselves into every part of the boat, from mast-step to stern sheets. For all piscine tokens of undue familiarity a well-directed whack from a stout truncheon is an excellent corrective. The fisherman should always have such a weapon at his hand, and strike promptly and smartly as soon as the fish is shipped. Knock-out blows should be aimed especially at the head and a point near the tail.

The conger is the largest of the eel tribe and exclusively marine in its habits. It has the vertical fins continuous, the dorsal organs starting from the tip of the pectorals, and the anal from the middle of the body. It is devoid of all scales, and in hue is leaden-grey above and almost if not quite white below. Its shade of colour is generally regulated by that of its domicile, being darker among rocks and seaweed and lighter among sands. White spots are freely distributed along its lateral lines. It moves ments are rapid and impetuous in the extreme, and it can wheel round in a very small space. Its haunts are among the algae-covered rocks in deep water, and flatfish enter mainly into its bill of fare. All is grist, however, that comes to its mill, and it may be regarded as practically omnivorous, and it speedily reduces to chyme such stubborn substances as shells, bones, and even iron and steel hooks. It attains to a length of six or seven feet and a weight of well-nigh a hundredweight.

The tail of the sea-eel is prehensile, a circumstance which gives it a decided advantage over the various creatures which it delights to pursue and secure for its larder. It is capable of swimming backwards as well as forward—rather a reprehensible accomplishment, as many a poor lobster-fisher knows to his cost. The crafty fish often enters the creels or traps set for the large-clawed crustacean, abstracts the bait, and then escapes, tail foremost.

Many of the stories told of the conger's ferocity and combativeness are apocryphal, but a certain proportion of them are undoubtedly true. One writer declares that he was a witness to a fearful fight between a six-foot sea-eel and the man who had seized it. The fish is said to have raised itself half-erect and to have "actually knocked the fisherman down before he could secure it." In a case which came under the observation of a friend of mine in one of the Western Isles, a huge specimen, after being brought aboard, became very obstreperous and wrought much damage to the fittings of the boat—a skiff of 16 feet keel. It succeeded in wrenching one of the thwarts from its fastenings, and in smashing to splinters the small platform on which rested the feet of the occupants of the stern sheets. I used to know a West Highland fisherman who had three of his fingers bitten so badly by the sharp, obtrusive teeth of a conger that they had to be amputated. In the larval form the sea-eel is a curious, transparent object, absurdly small and unimposing.

The sea-angler need not, however, be disturbed by such high-flown narratives. It is not every day that a fish of outstanding size and pugnacity is encountered. One may visit the best-stocked "banks" and creeks for years and years without making the acquaintance of such an unwelcome vagabond. Personally, I have had considerable experience of congers of all ordinary sizes, and I never yet observed among them any indication of flagrant or exceptional truculence. Neither did I detect in any of them a predilection for entering the lists against its human captors. No one should, however, be stupid enough to place his hand in the expansive mouth of a sea-eel. Anyone doing so is likely to be called upon to pay the penalty of his folly.

Congers are abundant all along the West Highland coast, and afford good sport to the intrepid man who would circumvent them with the hand-line. In dealing with these members of the finny tribe, angling in the ordinary sense of the term cannot be attempted. The tackle must be of extra stoutness and strength. It usually consists of a light hemp cord, canned or dressed with a mixture of turpentine or paraffin and tar. The hooks must be very large and uncommonly strong in wire. On the snoodle between the hook and the spreader a very strong brass swivel should be placed. The snoodle should be of great tenacity, and of such texture as to resist the gnawing powers of the conger's grinders. The best baits for the voracious sea-eel are herring and mackerel—the latter for preference. I have occasionally seen small codlings used after being split up in two from the tail to a point near the pectoral fin. The hook is entered at the mouth of the divided creature, driven down the throat, and brought out somewhere below the gills. The body of the codling is then turned over and wrapped round the hook in such a way as to ensure that the inside alone is offered to the fish. Such a bait proves usually very sweet and enticing. I have often known a conger to take the lug-worm, but it only condescends to such vulgar refection when it has a particularly keen appetite and richer pabulum is unavailable. It is absolutely essential that the bait—no matter what its nature—be soft and fresh.

To hook the cunning conger requires no slight amount of cleverness and skill on the fisher's part, for in dealing with the bait, the creature is cautious and wary to a degree. To feel the fish on the line is one thing, while to catch it is quite a different affair. One may have several bites and be robbed of quite a large number of baits, and yet fail to effect a capture. Many a disappointed fisher is, indeed, forced to conclude that there is something almost uncanny in the consummate artfulness which enables the slippery rascal so often to evade the hook and yet regale itself on the dainty morsel with which it is dressed.

He who goes conger-fishing must also necessarily avail himself of the guidance of a local boatman who knows the marks of the best grounds. A few boat lengths on either side of the enchanted spot may mean all the difference between success and failure. Local knowledge is all the more indispensable because the conger is to be wooed under cover of darkness. In daylight the fish is shy and elusive, and can seldom be coaxed from its rocky lurking-place at the bottom of the briny. It is a confirmed night-feeder, and at night, therefore, one has the best chance of getting it on the gaff. It is useless, however, to sally forth in quest of the sea-eel when the water glows with phosphorescent pyrotechy, for the line would then stand out clear and distinct like a

The most accurate and reliable of cartridges may not always suffice to ensure good sport, but good sport is out of the question without them.

Eley Cartridges do all that the best cartridges can do in this direction, with a trustworthiness which has won for them a measure of success greater probably than any other cartridges in the world.

Two 'Eley Loaded' Cartridges:

Eley 'Acme'
A bright orange 2-inch deep-shell Cartridge, loaded with Eley (42-gr.) Smokeless Powder.

Eley 'Eloid'
A light maroon Cartridge. Loaded with Eley (33-gr.) Smokeless. Light recoil; absolutely waterproof.

The above, and other Eley Specialities, may be obtained from Gunmakers and Dealers in Ammunition, everywhere.

cord of fire. The warning thus given would not be lost on the sagacious conger.

Apart from the exciting sport which it provides, this fish is of no great value. For table purposes it is not held in high repute; nevertheless, some parts of it make good eating. That portion extending from the neck downwards for six or seven inches, when baked in a dish with veal stuffing is very palatable, and regarded by many people as a positive delicacy.—"A.H." in the Glasgow Daily Herald.

To the Editor of the "Indian Field."

Sir,—Can you or any of your readers give me the following information:—

What is the climate of Salem, South India, like? I am thinking of going to the Shevaroy Hills for a change and to explore and shoot. When do the rains break there? and is it a liveable place in the rains?

Write us to-day for our pattern-book, samples and prices.

REGARDING DURRIES

To the Memsahib with ambitions to achieve economical housekeeping a few minutes spent in inspecting ELGIN DURRIE samples will reveal ways and means of cheap and tasteful floor covering hitherto undreamt of.

ELGIN DURRIES

bear the stamp of quality and good taste, are made of the best possible materials and produced in colours, patterns and sizes to suit all rooms and fancies. An "ELGIN" DURRIE keeps its freshness better and lasts longer in hard service than any other make. The reason?—well, fifty years of manufacturing experience count for much! But judge for yourself.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

What looked like a freezingly cold spring day last Friday, was turned into a cheerful, sunny, bright afternoon at Sandown and once more promised rain-clouds passed innocuous, and the going was hard all round. We have seen bigger attendances here, but under the circumstances the executive have little to complain of. Results :—

The popularity of cross-country sport, which is dying hard, was evinced on Saturday when, as usual, the meeting concluded under National Hunt rules. Another cold, dark morning was succeeded by a pleasant, sunny afternoon that brought the Metropolitan brigade down in rare force, and without exaggeration the attendance may be termed enormous. The paddock, crowded by society, recalled memories of an Eclipse Stakes day, the muster being a thoroughly representative one, while Tattersall's and the cheaper enclosures were well patronised. In the absence of rain the going was quite hard enough for jumping, but fields turned out fairly strong, and we were treated to a very interesting afternoon's sport. Several falls occurred, but fortunately without much damage to man or horse. Results :—

NEWMARKET.

On Tuesday, Newmarket, which collectively has got to look upon the presence of Royalty as almost its prescriptive right, thanks to the consistent patronage accorded it by King Edward, was on good terms with itself for once with the assurance of the presence of King George, who motored down from London. The attendance all round was one of the heaviest we have seen here for some years. The going was on the hard side, of course, which may account in several cases for the paucity of the fields. Results:—

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS TRIAL SELLING PLATE—Of 200sovs. R. M. 1 mile.

Won by a head; a neck between second and third.

Though we had no bright particular stars in the first "classic" race of the season on Wednesday, the interest taken therein was immense, while tips were plentiful.

The continued absence of rain was, from a holiday point of view, a blessing, sunshine dominating the scene after a dull, cold morning. The town was pretty full of visitors overnight, and during the forenoon fresh arrivals gave to the High Street, the busy aspect it used to assume before the station was moved out of the town, so to speak, as handy specials gave holiday makers a chance of a stroll round before dashing off to the heath.

The recently enlarged stand had its capacities fully tested, as in every department the crowd was so large as to almost rival a Cesarewitch or Cambridgeshire day. Results:—

WILBRAHAM PLATE—Of 200sovs.; for two-year-old fillies. 4 furlongs.

Mr. W. Hall Walker's John Amendall ...	Earl	0
Mr. Fairie's Aleppo	Rickaby	0

BETTING: Evens White Star 9 to 2 agst. Hall Cross, 6 to 1 Sweeper II., 9 to 1 Jingling Geordie, 100 to 8 Cylgad, 25 to 1 each Absurd and Kempton, 40 to 1 Kosciusko, 50 to 1 each Lom, Oiseau Bleu and John Amendall, 100 to 1 each Aleppo, Orchestrion and Jaeger.

PLACE BETTING: 5 to 2 on White Star, 6 to 4 Hall Cross, evens Sweeper II., 2 to 1 agst. Jingling Geordie, 5 to 2 Cylgad, 4 to 1 Absurd, 6 to 1 Kempton, others in proportion.

Absurd in the centre, showed the way to Oiseau Bleu, White Star, Sweeper II., on the right, Kempton, Cylgad, Hall Cross, Jaeger, Lom, John Amendall, and Kosciusko, with Aleppo whipping in. These positions were unchanged until reaching the Bushes, when Oiseau Bleu was beaten, White Star being left second in front of Sweeper II., Jaeger, Hall Cross, and Cylgad. Halfway down the hill White Star was in difficulties, and Sweeper II. wrested the lead from Absurd, who was passed in Abingdon Bottom by Jaeger and Hall Cross. Neither of these, however, could get on terms with Sweeper II., who won by a length; half a length separated second and third. Aleppo was last. Time—1min. 38⅘sec.

BETTING: 2l to 20 on King William, who won by three lengths.

The wave of excitement that broke over the Two Thousand Guineas did not carry each an undertone as usual, and it was somewhat surprising to see such a strong company as were left on what is generally known as an off day. The weather yesterday was again adverse to the trainers and favourable to the holiday folk, who made a big show in the enclosures, while a representative muster greeted the King whose welcome presence was responsible for another good record. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

WHATEVER opinions may be entertained as to the general average of Association football during the winter of 1911-12, the interest in the various competitions has been wonderfully well maintained. Not until last Wednesday was the fight for possession of the Association Cup decided, Barnsley, after competing in no fewer than twelve ties—twice as many as there were rounds in the struggle—carrying off the trophy by a goal scored in the last minute or two of a game which had been extended to a couple of hours. The contest for the League Championship, although Blackburn Rovers for several weeks past have been strong favourites, was not definitely settled until last Thursday, the question of second honours standing over until yesterday, when that distinction fell to Everton. Of a much more exciting character, the fight for the two places in the second League, which carry promotion with them also remained open to yesterday, the issue of matches at Wolverhampton and Stamford Bridge then deciding that Chelsea should accompany Derby County in the First Division next season. The same afternoon also made it practically certain that Preston North End must join Bury in relegation to the Second Division, and ensured the championship of the Southern League to Queen's Park Rangers.

BLACKBURN ROVERS carry off the League championship for the first time in the history of that famous club. For twenty-four years they have regularly competed for that honour, but until now no higher position than third has rewarded their efforts. Everton, who finish second, secured the championship so far back as 1891, and on five other occasions previous to this year have figured as runners-up. Newcastle United, compelled to accept third place, although at the beginning of the year they possessed a splendid chance of first honours, have been champions three times in the last seven years. Winners last season, Manchester United have shown such a marked falling off that up to a week ago they found themselves in some danger of losing membership of the First Division. Bury go down after seventeen years' continuous membership of Division I. Preston North End, champions in the first two years of the existence of the League, dropped out in 1902, but got back again three years later. Up to yesterday Liverpool stood in greater danger of going down than Preston North End, and Notts County were by no means safe from relegation to the Second Division, but Liverpool, thanks to a single goal scored at Oldham, secured two invaluable points and Notts County obtained an astonishingly fine victory over Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead.

GREAT enthusiasm prevailed at Stamford Bridge when, Chelsea having beaten Bradford, it became known that Burnley had failed at Wolverhampton. The combined effect of these results meant Chelsea's promotion to the First Division, and followers of the West-End club, who came from all parts of London, will again have the opportunity of seeing all the leading provincial clubs on the most accessible and best ground in the metropolis. The promotion of Derby County and Chelsea will be universally popular, though sympathy will be felt for Burnley, who so long seemed sure of promotion and have been regarded as the soundest side in the competition.

QUEEN'S PARK RANGERS had to wait until to be sure of the Southern League championship, and they could only draw at Norwich in their last match. This one point enabled them to finish clear of Plymouth Argyle, who hold a superior goal average and would have carried off first honours had the London team suffered defeat. At the head of the League, or occupying second place to Swindon all through the season; the Rangers are worthy champions, and seeing that they dropped only two points in their first ten games it is strange that they should have been so hard pressed by a team that did not win a match until their seventh fixture. Plymouth Argyle were splendidly consistent after that and Northampton also did so well that Swindon stand fourth—a position mainly due to their disastrous struggle with Barnsley in the Cup semi-final. Luton and Leyton finish last and will next season be replaced by Portsmouth and Merthyr Town, the leading teams in the Second Division.

BARNSLEY won the cup by their splendid defence and the ability of Tufnell to take advantage of an opening that came a few minutes from the end of two hours' hard football. West Bromwich Albion played better than at the Crystal Palace, but the inside forwards usually failed to make rapid enough progress towards goal. Clever passing on the Bramall Lane ground left some fair chances for men to dribble through and shoot, but ability to beat an opponent and keep the ball close was almost always wanting. Tufnell got away unimpeded from midfield, because the ball came to him when his side had been pressing and he went through at top speed to shoot accurately at the correct moment. This incident that gave Barnsley the Cup after a struggle with West Bromwich Albion that lasted three hours and a half emphasised very strongly the bad type of forward play that is so common among professional teams. The ball is always kept on the move, often without making headway and usually to leave the wing man near the corner flag to put in a long centre—the easiest of all forms of attack to repulse. The Albion only got into the final through a momentary disorganisation of the Blackburn Rovers' defence when time had almost expired, and it seems clear that better methods in attack would have enabled a First Division club to carry off the highest honours of the season which have gone to a team moderately placed in the second division whose only recommendations were physical fitness and strong defence.

THE publication of the proceedings at the conference between the Football Association and the Amateur Football Association is particularly interesting, because it indicates clearly the good feeling that prevailed; and, though ineffectual, the attempt to bring all Association players together again may lead to a complete understanding and working arrangement in the near future. It seems perfectly reasonable that the amateurs should insist on retaining powers of expansion in the districts where they have already done much good in maintaining the love of the game among old players and spreading the true sporting spirit, which is the one essential that must exist among their teams. On the other hand the Football Association could not see their way to extend their proposals so far as desired, the troubles brought about by overlapping of the local associations and dual control being the reasons given for the negotiations coming to an end. Now, to "the man in the street" these difficulties appear far from insuperable. Since it is granted that the Amateur Football Association does good work in fostering the best interests of the game and is prepared to affiliate to the Football Association, which would be recognised by all as the national governing organisation, the small local differences would surely right themselves. The broad principles of the general good of the game and the full representation of England in all international matches should far outweigh all other matters that appear trivialities by comparison.

AMATEUR DOUBLES CHAMPIONSHIP.—The challenge round of the amateur doubles championship at Queen's Club, West Kensington, ended in the defeat of the holders, Hon'ble C. N. Bruce and Mr. Basil Foster, by the Old Carthusians Mr. H. A. Denison and Mr. H. W. Leatham.

For the first three games, the superiority of the challengers at all points was clearly demonstrated. Their service on both hands was better, and they hit harder and more accurately than their opponents. In the first game they established a lead of 10—love, and in the second game, a run of 8 aces, all but one being by service by Mr. Denison, helped them to an advantage of 10—2. The third game was remarkable for a series of fierce rallies, no one keeping possession of the service court long. Still, the challengers were always a bit the better, and their lead of 3 games to love was well deserved.

In the fourth game, Mr. Foster rose to the occasion, and chiefly by his many brilliant strokes in the court the holders were enabled to score their only success. In the last game Mr. Foster made a great effort to turn the match round, and the holders led at 5—2. A series of mistakes, however, by Mr. Bruce, who several times hit easy balls on to the board, destroyed their chances, and the Old Carthusians won after the game had been "set 5" at "13 all" Result :—

The Amateur Doubles Championship.—Challenge round: Mr. H. A. Denston (Charterhouse) and Mr. H. W. Latham (Charterhouse and Cambridge), challengers, beat Hon'ble. C. N. Bruce (Winchester and Oxford) and Mr. Basil S. Foster (Malvern), holders, by 4 games to 1; 72 aces to 51. Scores: 15—1, 15—11, 15—12, 9—15, and 18—15.

GOLF.

Vardon and Braid at St. Albans.—Harry Vardon (South Herts) twice defeated James Braid (Walton Heath) in matches at St. Albans on Saturday. The occasion was the opening of the extended course of the Verulam Club, St. Albans, which Braid laid out a couple of years ago. These two noted players, with the local professional, B. Wallace, and E. Penfold, of Mid-Herts, played a medal round in the morning, and the result was that the open champion won with 74, which score put up a new record for the course. Vardon played an extraordinarily fine long game, but although he ran down some useful ones he missed several holeable putts. His card read :—

A four-ball four-some was played in the afternoon in which Vardon was partnered by Penfold against Braid and Wallace. Vardon played magnificent golf and holed several very long putts. Out in 35 against 37, they stood 1 up, and playing good golf coming home they retained their lead and defeated Braid and Wallace by 1 hole. The best ball scores were : Vardon and Penfold, 71 : Braid and Wallace, 73.

WALKING.

Stock Exchange Walk.—Great interest was taken in the May Day walk from London to Brighton organised by the Stock Exchange Athletic Club. T. E. Hammond led all the way, reaching the top of Dale Hill, which is six and a half miles from Brighton, at 1-35. Shattock was in the second place, Calling, Rhodes, Nicholas, and Cain being the next four. Hammond arrived at Brighton first, having taken 5hrs. 44mins. 10secs., and failing by a long way to beat the Ross record. Shattock came in second half an hour later.

H. V. L. Ross walked the distance in September 1909 in 5hrs. 11mins. 14secs.

AMERICAN TOURNAMENT AT BANGALORE.

On Monday (13th) afternoon two more matches were played of in the American Tournament, which began on the 6th instant. The first one was between A and C Team and the next between B and D. The sides were as before ; Captain Paget-Tomlinson, 7th Hussars, umpired the first game and Colonel Poore, 7th Hussars, the other.

In the match between A and C Major Dalgety's team (C) drew first blood, Creagh opening the scoring for his side in the opening chukker. The second chukker was a very even one and keenly contested, resulting in no score accruing to either side. In the third round C team played a most determined game and after a few even exchanges Creagh got the ball through again, and before the game was much older the same player notched the third goal for his side. A team then took up the aggressive and after some close play Morison pulled the ball away and with the assistance of McCowan it was taken an within shooting distance the latter landing it safely. This fourth chukker opened with the score at 3—1 (C leading) and before many seconds had been played, Thornton raised the score for his side to 4. C kept A on their defence nearly all through the chukker and when the bell rang there was no change in the score, C winning by 4 goals to 1.

The two best teams playing in the tournament were opposed to each other in the fourth match, viz., B and D teams. They were very evenly matched, and the result was a draw. The first chukker produced no score ; B team got the better of their opponents in the next period and Ramsay succeeded in scoring ; this was the only goal recorded in the chukker, the rest of the play being of an undecided character. B opened hostilities in the third chukker and after a little skirmishing Ramsay got possession and passing the ball Paget-Tomlinson collared it and knocked it in (C 2-2)—D team woke up and played for all they were worth ; after giving opponents a warm few minutes, Watson got possession and sent the ball between the flags ; the chuckker ended with the score at 2—1B leading. The last chukker was the most interesting of the lot and it became very exciting as the minutes went by and there was no change in the score. D were playing now for a draw and obtained their second goal (Hutchison) after four minutes' play. The match ended in a draw a little later. Score—2 goals each.

The tournament was resumed on Wednesday, the 15th, and it was decided to play off the two remaining matches the same evening. A and D teams met in the first match and it proved to be a one sided affair. A team was outplayed at every point and scarcely had a look in at any stage of the game. D played up in fine style and scored fast. In the first chukker Watson put in 2 goals ; this score was doubled in the next, Watson and Hutchison dividing honours, and the latter added another goal in the third chukker. There was no score made in the last period and D team won by 5 goals to nil.

The sixth and last match was between B and C teams ; the former was undoubtedly the stronger of the two but granting they won the match (which they did eventually), they would only tie with D who had two matches to their credit and the result would have to be decided on the goals made during the tournament. The game was fast throughout and C gave their opponents a good run for their money. Scoring was opened only in the second chukker, Bell getting a lucky chance negotiated the ball between the uprights. The third chukker saw some more fast and even play and it concluded without any change in the score. The fourth period opened by B attacking and Mr. Calmont very soon raised the score to 2 goals for his side with a fine long shot. C played a desperate game after this and had their opponents once or twice, but failed to bring off any score, the match ultimately ending in a win for B by 2 goals to nil. The final result was a win on goals for D team (Captain Watson's) 10 to 6, each team having two matches to their credit. The sides were as on previous occasions and Colonel Poore umpired throughout the afternoon. The attendance on the last day was a slight improvement on previous occasions.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Black Watch are the attraction in local football and it is doubtful if any local team will take a point away from them in the League. In their match against Calcutta, the Fort regiment were not seen at their best, their shooting, especially, being poor, and their two to love margin was a somewhat lucky one. The Jocks had all the better of the game, and deserved to win by two goals, but the first was the result of a penalty kick. A long shot by Christie, the Black Watch centre half, went sailing along to Stewart, the Calcutta goalie, Gordon, the Military centre forward, was following up the ball, and Gaunt fouled the Black Watch man. The Calcutta custodian had cleared the ball, and even had Gaunt not fouled Stewart was in a safe position to clear, but the referee was quite right in penalising the Calcutta back. The second goal, however, was no goal at all. Watson, the Black Watch inner left, tried a long shot which hit the outside post and immediately rebounded into play, and Bhattacharji, the referee who was standing at about the centre of the field, gave it a goal. If there had been the slightest doubt, the referee should have consulted the linesmen. Indeed, when the ball rebounded, Lomas was just about to play it and it is astonishing how Bhattacharji could have given a goal. The referee, however, admitted his mistake after the match. In this match Calcutta did remarkably well during the initial half when there was no score, but after ends had been changed the "reds" were not in the picture. O'Shea is a brilliant defender, but he neglects his wing forwards dreadfully, his passes invariably going to the centre man. Calcutta are very weak in attack, but there is a rumour that in another week they will have the services of a fine player in the centre. They are also lacking a good left winger.

The Black Watch after the Calcutta match had scored eight goals for, and none against ; but on Saturday the Customs spoiled the Fort team's fine record by netting one against the Scotchmen. However the Black Watch themselves scored six. It was expected, by a few, that the Durand holders would probably equal the fine record held by the Royal Irish Rifles, but judging by their play, the Black Watch defence is not nearly as strong as was the Irishmen's.

The Middlesex beat the E. I. R. by only one goal to nil, but the Dum Dum team were not representative on this occasion. The Railway are at the bottom of the table which position they will keep to the end. As was the case in hockey so the same in football, the E. I. R. team being mostly composed of men stationed at Lillooah. For the I. F. A. Shield, however, it is to be hoped that the Railway team will be represented from all along the line and not have to pick men from one station only.

The Dalhousie and Rangers' match was a scrambling affair, and since the Bristol United has started the Old Trades Club has lost the services of some good men. Both Dalhousie and Rangers have very weak teams this year, the former lacking good forwards, while the Rangers are wanting halves and forwards. The match of the evening on Saturday was the meeting of the Customs and Black Watch on the formers' ground. The score was six to one and to any one who did not see the match the same would certainly indicate a very one-sided game. But this was not the case. The first half was very evenly contested when the official score was given as two to one, but after ends had been changed, the Black Watch, who possessed that most useful attribute—staying power,——, ran rings around their opponents and wound up by adding four goals. The Black Watch forwards played pretty football and deserved their points during this period. On the Customs side only Williamson and Hyland and Christison, their goal-keeper were seen to advantage during the second moiety. The last-named cleared many difficult shots in fine style, Williamson was prominent for good runs down the right, while Hyland, did good work at centre half. The play of the Black Watch forwards was much admired, this being far and away their best exhibition. Connor played uncommonly well on the left, and it was from beautiful passes by him that three out of the four goals were recorded during the second half.

The Calcutta and Dalhousie match on the former's ground on Saturday, was a tame affair. Calcutta, who were the better side, won by 3-1, but the first goal—a penalty—was a lucky item. The shooting of Dalhousie left much to be desired and but for this, they might have shared points. Chesterton 2, and Jenkins scored for Calcutta, while Wright netted for Dals.

On the Dalhousie ground the R.G.A. won their first match on Saturday by beating the E.I.R. by four to one. The gunners, I am glad to say, are to be strengthened during the return fixtures, as the men from Lebong are expected by the middle of next month.

The Rangers and Y.M.C.A. played a goalless draw, and on Saturday's shooting, if the two teams were to have played for a week, I doubt if there would have been any scoring.

On Monday, in the match between Calcutta and Middlesex, the first half was miserable, but after ends had been changed the Dum Dum team showed marked improvement, and during all the attacking during this period won on their merits by three goals to nil. The Middlesex have a stronger side than they had last year, Wall being the only weak spot in the forward line. Wootten and Aboy are two reliable halves, and when Daw and Adcock come into the team the Mids will want some beating. Walley, Bateman and Wootten scored.

For Calcutta, Sherman was the only forward who played up to expectations, but during the second half the Home players went all to bits. T. C. Crawford, however, did quite well in goal, bringing off some capital saves.

The Y. M. C. A. and R. G. A. match produced a very evenly contested game, but the shooting on both sides was poor. Manuel, the boy who played for La Martiniere so brilliantly at hack, is doing equally well for the Association at football, but this fine player is leaving for England early next month. The game was a win for the Artillery by a goal to nil.

"The time will come," thundered the suffragette orator, "when woman will get a man's wages!" "Yes," sadly muttered a man on the rear seat; "next Saturday night."

Positive Wife: "John, why do you talk in your sleep? Have you any idea?" Negative Husband: "So as not to forget how, I suppose. It's the only chance I get."

"Mr. Johnson," says Mr. Miggles, "I don't want to hurt your feelings, but that story you started to tell at my house last night was one no gentleman of refinement would have told in mixed company. I feel that it is my duty to express my disapproval of such conduct." "I'm quite sorry," says Mr. Johnson. "I should have thought before beginning it. Half-way through I realised what I was telling and, you remember, I did my best to end the thing at once." "Yes, I noticed it fell pretty flat, and everybody could see that you were terribly ashamed. Er—how does the story finish Johnson?"

PURGEN

"THE LAXATIVE OF THE FUTURE."

The POPE'S DOCTOR writes :—
"Having tried PURGEN on several occasions, I certify that in cases of obesity and chronic weakness of the bowels, this medicine has given me the most remarkable results. In testimony thereof, I sign personally."
Dr. GIUSEPPE LAPPONI.

PURGEN acts surely, gently and universally, without causing any irritation or pain, and its effect does not wear off by prolonged use. PURGEN is not absorbed by the system. It has no action on the liver or kidneys, and it does not produce flatulence, nausea, depression or other disagreeable symptoms usually associated with aperient medicines. PURGEN is an especially valuable medicine for the delicate, for invalids and for children. Made up in small tablets of agreeable flavour and sold in boxes only.

Sold in Three Strengths
"INFANT" (for young children); "ADULT" (for grown-ups); "STRONG" (for invalids and chronic constipation).

The Naturalist.

ENGLISH SNAKES.

THERE is no doubt that in the abnormally hot summer that we endured or enjoyed last year some of our native snakes and other reptiles appeared in no less abnormal size and numbers. As a yokel in the south of England told me, "Them adders be awful spiteful this year." There is little doubt that this is a true statement of fact. It is quite possible to conceive that the energies of a warmth-loving thing like a snake should be so intensified by the unusual and prolonged heat that many of its natural functions, including that of the secretion of poison in the poison glands, should be carried on with more than common vigour. There is evidence of this in the fact that we heard of one or two instances of dogs being killed by adders' bites during the hottest weeks of the summer. It is very seldom that the bite of an adder affects dogs fatally. In the island of Arran, where adders are numerous, it is still the fashion to shoot grouse over dogs, and while the pointers or setters are nosing about in the heather it very often happens that they stir up a basking adder, which retaliates by driving its poisoned fangs into the dog's head. The usual result is that the head swells to an enormous size, causing the dog much suffering for a few days, but that by the end of a week he is practically all right again. It is just as well that people should understand the dangerous nature of the bite of an adder, which is not a very uncommon snake in many parts of England. Camps of military and Territorials are often pitched on those open heaths which are the favourite homes of these snakes, and it is specially when collecting wood to light the camp fires that the soldiers run the risk of a bite. To a healthy man it is most unlikely that it will prove fatal provided the proper remedies are applied, but it is certain to make him very ill and entirely unfit for work for days or weeks. Knowledge of the whole subject has been darkened in the popular mind by a great cloud of legend. The yokel who informed me of the adders being so bad in the south, assured me further that "them little lizards is almost worse." It was to very little purpose that I tried to convince him that our lizards are absolutely harmless. The prejudice was far too inveterate in his mind to be weakened. Admirers of Christopher North may remember one of the most delightful of his "Noctes Ambrosianæ," in which the discussion turns principally on the surprising excellence of the Scottish climate. In course thereof the Shepherd remarks incidentally respecting lizards: "They say they are harmless, but I never liked them since we used to bash them with stanes, when we were callants." To which Tickler replies in his laconic manner: "A most poetical and Christian prejudice." There are certain lizards which are armed with poison fangs and poison glands, but their species, are very few, and fortunately for us they are not inhabitants of our islands but are restricted to the South-Western States of America and to the Mexican deserts, where they are known by the rather terrific name of the Gila monster. In our early Victorian childhood it was the common legend of the nursery that the harmless and familiar toad was capable of spitting a more or less deadly poison at its enemies. No doubt this was a salutary and humane tradition, sparing many a toad from our assaults. In later years we had learnt to discredit this faculty ascribed to the toad, and indeed regarded the whole story of the capacity of any poisonous reptiles to eject their venom to a distance as belonging to the Ben Trovato family of narratives, but it now appears that certain snakes undoubtedly do possess this missile power, and many an African traveller might be cited as witness to it. There is an African snake of the cobra family, the ringhals, of which ex-President Roosevelt writes in his "African Game Trails" as follows: "At this camp we killed five poisonous snakes—a light coloured tree-snake, two puff-adders, and two seven-foot cobras. One of the latter three times 'spat' or ejected its poison at us, the poison coming out from the fangs like white films, or threads, to a distance of several feet. A few years ago the singular powers of this snake, and perhaps of certain other African species, thus to eject the poison at the face of an assailant was denied by scientists; but it is now well known. Selous had already told me of an instance which came under his own observation, and Tarlton had once been struck in the eyes, and for a moment nearly blinded by the poison. He found that to wash the eyes with milk was of much relief." The exact purpose of this power of ejecting the poison is not quite obvious since it does not appear to be very deadly when so delivered. It is likely enough, however, that it may have far more severe effects upon some of the small creatures on which the snake subsists than it has on man. The fact that reptiles possess this faculty at all is evidence of the greater strangeness of truth than of fiction, and seems almost a justification for the wildest legends of the nursery maids.

The South Saxon rustic naturalist who gave me the information about the lizards had some interesting remarks to make about the adders also. He told me that of these there were two kinds, one the black adder and the other the red adder, which was better called the viper. The black adder, he further said, was that from which the adder's fat is obtained, which, according to him, is well known to be a very valuable cure in all cases of snake-bite. The viper, he said, was smaller and more active. It had the power of coiling itself up in a ring and sitting on its tail, and thence projecting itself to a great distance on the mechanical principle of a released spring. Having this opinion of its abilities, it is no wonder that my friend regarded the red viper as an extremely dangerous reptile. He had to admit, however, that though he had passed his life in a country where he believed them to be numerous, it had never yet been his personal fortune to see a specimen. This question of the red and black vipers is one that has vexed people who have perhaps paid it more earnest attention than my rustic friend, and there still seems to be some little difference of opinion amongst professed naturalists as to whether there are two distinct species of British viper; but the balance of evidence tends to show that there are but different individuals of one species, which always is singularly variable both in size and colour. This variation is a fact which it is well to bear in mind, for it indicates that no great reliance can be placed on such danger-signals as the zig-zag diamond down the back, or any other form of coloration to determine the viperine, and therefore venomous, species of the snake. The most common snake in England, the grass-snake, is absolutely harmless, and does much good in gardens by eating up insects which are the gardener's enemies. It is usually longer and more slender than the adder, and can generally be distinguished by a bright yellow dash on each cheek; but even this snake, too, is very variable in its coloring, and the safest rule to follow in regard to all these is to be very careful not to bring the hand or any other unprotected part of the body near the creature until it has been determined beyond all manner of doubt to be of one of the non-poisonous kinds—what is to say, either a grass-snake, or one of the similar, though not very closely allied slow-worms. Should the creature happen by a rare chance to be a specimen of the smooth snake, it will be so viperine of aspect, though absolutely harmless, that no one is likely to stretch a hand towards it. Ever since the halcyon days of the Garden of Eden, man has invested the serpent with more than natural qualities. In parts of the Highlands, the home of many superstitions, it is firmly believed that if a man is bitten by an adder and can get to the water and plunge in before the snake has done the same, he will be cured of his bite and the snake will burst before his eyes. On the other hand, if the snake should get to the water first, then the man will infallibly die, and the snake survive him. The belief suggests at all events a pleasant picture of the racers, the human and the serpentine, careering in emulous effort over the heather towards the nearest burn.

BADGERS AND THEIR FAMILIES.

ALWAYS shy, living as far apart from mankind as possible, coming out to feed at dusk or after dark, and laying up for winter far underground, the antediluvian badger, or brock, remains unknown to most people; indeed, he has become well-nigh forgotten since badger-baiting with terriers came to be illegalised by Parliament as one of the worst "spurious sports." Few badgers remain in the Scottish Highlands, where they were long trapped for their hair as a commercial commodity invaluable for sporrans and shaving-brushes; but they are certainly common in most counties of England, as hunting men, earth-stoppers, and gamekeepers appear to know, and have not the least fear that this species of plantigrade will ever become as extinct as his ancient contemporaries, the megatherium, elephant, bear, and hyena.

Like the bear, this biggest, heaviest, and strongest of our native wild beasts—red deer always excepted—ambles along on his whole foot, from heel to toe, bringing his belly so low as almost to brush the ground. The unmistakable peculiarity of his "slot"—or "slot-and-stink," as Yorkshire sportsmen say—betrays his ramblings frequently in sand, mud, or other plastic substance, albeit we have never yet detected it in snow; and this same slot shows the scorings of the heel and five powerful claws of the short forefeet, which more resemble the spoor of large game in tropical forests than the footmark of any other British animal. Definitely where his sete is situated, how far inward or how deep underground one can rarely tell without committing oneself to laborious digging operations. We have known it to be an elaborated rabbit-burrow containing a number of large chambers underlying an acre of ground. One hole in a borrans had by tradition been inhabited by badgers for centuries, the same being bored under rocks and tree roots for a distance hardly conceivable, its course being tortuous and branched, leading to three or four storey chambers and cross connections at a considerable depth under the hills. Here many a good terrier had gone to earth nevermore to return, and the sportive watchers could but conclude that he had failed to find his way out of the maze, only to be killed and devoured at last by the omnivorous big beast he had sought to expel. As a maker of excellent fox-earths in warrens, sand pits, spinneys, and in borrans where the ground is much harder to work, the badger is made welcome in many hunting countries, especially as his scavenging propensities have proved useful in checking the spread of mange in foxes.

The word "borrans," if I mistake not, is used by gipsy-folk for badger, and has, therefore, no association with "sporrans," which articles of wear should be made from badger-hair. In the mountain districts between Trent and Tweed a borrans appears to be a hill-slope or steep bank interspersed with bushes and rocks, especially where the surface stone have been cleared and piled up in a corner for wall-building or road-repairing. A typical borrans has holes such as might be resorted to by badgers, whose burrowings often dislodge a number of smaller stones which the action of the weather brings some time later to the top. Near the mound of soft soil, stones, and rubbish which usually half-chokes a badger's portal, may be seen something of his slot, and something smelt of his aura on a moist, misty evening. Always scrupulously clean, the beast has frequently been seen to scrape his feet at the threshold before entering in dirty weather. About the first week of April he commences his annual spring-cleaning operations in earnest, and when so engaged he removes every scrap of old bedding material, which consists of decayed bracken, grass, hay, leaves, etc.- At no time does he defile his habitation with ordure, like the fox or dog; his midden is situated in the open some distance off, and he buries everything that may offend. True, brock has for ages been specially marked for the conveyance of opprobrious comparisons and epithets. We often hear of "the stinking brock" and the creature which "stinks like a badger," but this is merely a reference to an unpleasant odour which, like the skunk, civet cat, polecat, and stoat, he can emit at will for the purpose, possibly, of disgusting an enemy on the trail. This foetid smell comes from a white substance secreted by a gland below the tail, and exuded through a narrow transverse pore. Certainly no clinging saint brushes off his hair, which is well dressed partly by himself and partly by his mate, or a friendly badger, these attentions being reciprocal. Parasites are conspicuous by their absence. If the fox were as cleanly an animal, educated to the enjoyment of the badger's sanitary conditions, we think it quite possible but he would escape bad humours and mange.

We once spied out the badger's ways from a convenient tree-top which commanded the entrance to his den. A great impression was made on our mind one still evening while a-perch by hearing an eerie sound as of grass being torn up, by the roots some 100 yards off. Presently the awkward plantigrade appeared with a push-ball of fresh-torn grass, which, while shuffling backwards he most comically scratched along with his front paws and tapered snout. This ball of herbage was evidently going in for bedding purposes. It required a good deal of manœuvring through the portal even by an ambidextrous beast, and we knew that it would need all his skill and patience to twist and bowl it along to its destination in the nuptial chamber or winter dormitory. This cavity, like the beast's adjoining store-room, is uncompromisingly gloomy; but it is at least dry, and the temperature high enough to get the name of "oven," the roof being, possibly, a deep-sunk rock or some far-penetrating tree-root which serves as a rib for the tunnel. All the bedding in the winter dormitory, consisting of bracken, grass, leaf-mould, etc., has to be rolled in for use and rolled out when discarded in the form of a ball. Some winter provender is likewise rolled into the store-room among it being commonly found hay and nuts. In view of winter the beast shuttles and bars his front door with sail, stones, and other handy material. As a partial hibernant he lies with his cranium flat on his leafy litter and body curled over it, giving one the impression who has seen brock in captivity that he habitually falls asleep whilst in the act of turning a somersault. We have seen it stated that he will never under any circumstances venture outdoors when snow lies on the ground, as he might then be tracked by his slot; and that he dare not come out in frosty or very cold weather because of the great danger of taking a chill on leaving his stifling "oven." The simple facts are that brock will sleep as long as he can do so compatibly with the demands of appetite. We knew a badger shyly emerge one mild December evening and, as it happened to be the eve of the hunt, he got stopped out by the earth-stopper and was seen next morning by two or three farm-labourers who, imagining that he was an escaped menagerie bear, ran away in great alarm.

While the fox barks at mating time, the otter whimes, and the badger yells and grunts. There are two litters in a year, and three, four, sometimes five, cubs to each. The periods of gestion remain a mystery, for whereas one sow badger has been known to produce young within 24 months, another in captivity has taken sixteen months. In the wild state a litter has generally arrived within a fortnight after preparations were made. We have seen cubs dug out of a burrow when the size of a cat. Perhaps nobody has ever seen the mother carry in food for her progeny. The fact is, directly the youngsters are weaned they follow their mother in quest of food, which consists of roots, grubs, etc. With all due precaution, father brock goes out first, as though to clear the way or scout round. Did space but allow, we might show that the beast's stomach is so very accommodating as almost to allow of his being classed with the omnivorous creatures.

Red-mantled vixen does not live in the bosom of her family very long. Grey-mantled Grizelda has a far less vicious family to control, and is a determined disciplinarian. From a tree in the borrans, occupied several times at dusk in May and even at midnight in June, we got the impression that Grizelda lurked a long time in the aperture in order to restrain the too eager youngsters after brock himself had departed on the nocturnal prowl. When deep shadow lay in the hollow she stood aside for them to rush out, which movement quite exhilarated us. On a very quiet evening at twilight we watched the youngsters play and chase each other in and out of their hole. It was a favourite trick to rear on their hind feet and rub their cheeks against a rock or tree-trunk, grunting meanwhile like sucking-pigs. They kicked up the soil in places a good deal, and frequently clawed and scratched at a trunk as high as they could reach, just as a cat might do; and once we saw them do the same thing on a log with deeply-furrowed bark. This habit certainly pertains to carnivorous animals. It may have had its origin in the process of claw cleaning or sharpening, without which, in the event of claw, and pad being tainted with carrion, a casual scratch inflicted upon a playfellow might lead to blood-poisoning.

Some absurdly queer tales have been told of encounters with badgers on dark nights. "Nightcrawlers" have been hugged by them, bear-fashion, on quiet country roads; the badger's thirty-eight teeth have been interlocked on their legs—in imagination. The ignoramus is still in our midst who will run away howling with terror from a badger, or club him to death for being a supposed sanguinary beast of the grizzly bear type. Not long ago a Gloucestershire farmer, failing to practise the precept, "Look before you leap," bounded one evening over a low hedge bordering a wood and landed in the middle of a family party. This was a two-sided surprise; and Grizelda, at other times shy was merrily defending her young when she came sideways to butt the intruder, with her hair bristling in anger and an ominous growl. After an absurd tussle this farmer and his dog killed the badger, likewise the three innocent youngsters.

We cannot accept the opinion of many earth-stoppers that a badger may have two, or even three, entrances to his cete, though there may be two or three badgers at times occupying one earth, each with its own entrance. One day a friend discovered a badger hole by the contributory marks of stench, slot, and claw-marks on a tree-trunk not far off. Being convinced that brock, or Grizelda, was doing away God's sunlight in the subterranean parlour, he made a big bundle of coarse, dry herbage, poked it into the aperture, fired it, and forced the smoke inwards so as to permeate all the cavities. He had no wish to asphyxiate the beast; indeed, he naturally supposed that brock would make hurried and ignominious escape through some other exit. Seemingly brock had no other exit, and he declined to be made the butt of a practical joke. As showing how resourceful brock could be on smelling fire about the premises, he just came far enough to scratch earth over the smouldering rubbish, quickly extinguishing it. Still disliking, with the smoke in his eyes, he spied my friend's intrusive figure, and scratched down more soil from the roof to fill up the aperture. Hardly could a human being have grasped the situation more clearly.

The best Headlight.

The C.A.V. Model "G" headlight is admittedly the best and most efficient on the market. It is immensely popular; the demand for it being ever on the ascendant. Its powerful beams brilliantly illuminate the darkest nights, while its fog-penetrating qualities are most marked. A user writes: "The light was magnificent through the dense fog on the Lammermuirs" A unique feature of this lamp is that it never dazzles.

MOTOR MEMS.

To every motorist must have fallen the lot, at one time or another, of emulating the Foolish Virgins of the parable by running out of oil and of suffering the consequences of this carelessness. As long as makers refuse to fit petrol supply gauges the wise motorist has perforce to carry an odd two-gallon tin, stowed away in the space required for the tools, or else lambskin, the rear portion of the car, and gradually chipping all the paint from off the panels. In America, where the consequences of running out of gasoline are likely to be more serious, since a place of supply may not be within a considerable distance the standard practice—well worthy of adoption by our own makers—is to provide the tank with a false bottom, or else with a special partition. This auxiliary storage space carries two or more gallons of fuel, and there is communication between this and the main tank, so that the two may be filled up together. When the car is run the main supply feeds the carburettor in the ordinary way till all has been used up. Then, by turning on a second tap, the driver can proceed to run on the reserve supply, which will usually carry him to a convenient place for replenishing the tanks again. It needs no argument to show the advantage of an emergency arrangement of this nature, and therefore one can but express the pious hope that some of our own makers will lead the the way in the adoption of what involves, in reality, only a very slightly increased cost of manufacture, but which is of great value to the user. Reserve petrol tank are like emergency brakes—when they are needed they are needed very badly indeed.

It is only within recent years that the motor car has begun to make the least claim to being a "thing of beauty," and there is yet a great deal of alteration to be made before the artistic automobile arrives—albeit the present-day flush-sided torpedo, with well-designed mudguards and inclined wind-screen, is vastly ahead of the production of a few years back. The desired end can only be attained by slow process of development—public taste will encourage the good designs, and sternly repress all retrograde tendencies. But there is one feature which is worthy of attention right away—both from the artistic and utilitarian point of view. The Cape cart hood is a necessary evil, necessary on account of the vagaries of our wonderful climate, and an evil because it is an unsightly excrescence, and a source of disturbing creaks and rattles, but at the same time there is no reason why every effort should not be made to improve its appearance, and to bring it into line with the better appearance of the present-day carriage. Several people have advanced the claims of darker hood material than the light fawn colour which is now almost universally employed; those who have tried a dark grey serge or one of the better class black leather materials, will agree that the resultant effect is a great improvement on the orthodox equipment. When the hood colour has thus been toned down, only a slight extra effort is needed to finish off the good work. The standard hood has a painful habit of blowing about when in the "down" position; the straps toss about, the folds of the material rustle, and the whole thing presents an extremely untidy appearance. By the simple provision of an envelope covering of waterproof material, which can easily be slipped off when the hood is required for use, all these minor objections are overcome, and the hood is toned down to a stage of respectability. Many American cars are thus equipped, and one cannot but agree that their smart appearance is largely on account of this minor fitment. While speaking of Cape hoods, a further point suggests itself. Usually hood straps of about an inch in width are provided for the purpose of anchoring the front end of the hood when this is up in position. These straps do not add to the appearance of the car, and in addition they are a slight obstruction to the driver's vision. By the use of round leather straps both of these objections are reduced to a minimum.

By "Throttle."

The local authorities have at last awakened to the fact that traffic regulation, so far as Calcutta is concerned, is an unknown art. The course now to be adopted can scarcely be commended for its wisdom or efficacy, rather some public protest is desirable to prevent what at best can only be a deplorable waste of rate-payers' money. It is proposed to send a police officer to London to study traffic regulating as there carried out. To try to teach anyone to control Calcutta Johns by a course of Home instruction is too absurd to cause laughter. The London policeman is famous throughout the world both for his tact and general ability, and the people he controls are equally famous for the implicit faith they have in his judgment and the unhesitating obedience which his signals are accorded. Transfer one of these blue-coated pillars of authority, from the shadow of "the lions" in the famous square, to, say, the intersection of Harrison Road and either Chitpore or Strand Roads and it is odds on his being reduced to a state of babbling imbecility in a very short time. "One swallow does not make a summer" nor can one man hope to instil brains and the habit of obedience into the average Calcutta driver. First let those concerned set the local "house in order" by not only re-organizing the Police force, but by altering the conditions of service also. At present, I believe, the Calcutta Police is used by men in the army, generally, as a means of obtaining their discharges in India, with a view to obtaining civil employment later. Should they not be successful in their quest in the latter direction they claim the passage Home or to Australia which their army service entitles them to. This is what is happening daily, and at the moment of writing a large number of the men in Lall Bazar, to use a colloquialism, "have their papers in." Make the Police a recognized source of permanent employment, instead of as at present merely a means to an end, and the real beginning is arrived at for the solution of half the existing traffic troubles: it will then be time to consider the remaining half.

Last week I gave my readers a few hints on the care of slide valve engines, in so far as they differ from the poppet valve type. Since then, in conversation with an owner of the former I was rather surprised to be told that poppet valves are out of date, things of the past, etc. Life is too short and the temperature too high to enter into an argument of this nature, even in the silly season of Improvement Scheme and other competitions. As a matter of fact each type has its particular sphere and the one can hardly be said to encroach on the other. As a pleasure car the slide valve type is easily first, but it is a significant fact that nearly all records for speed, fuel consumption, and general reliability in all classes are held by poppet valve fitted cars. So far no very high powered cars have been fitted with the new type. It is generally supposed that the slide valve engine is the more nearly silent of the two, but I do not think, nor have I found from experience, that any design yet turned out can beat the best of the six-cylindered poppet valve engines when properly adjusted and cared for. It is universally acknowledged that the six-cylinder engine most nearly approaches the ideal for pleasure cars both in point of silence and absence of vibration, and it is in this class that the laurels are not all with the slide valve. In smaller cars, with the exception of a few leading makes, the poppet valve engine cannot be said to compete with the slide valve in point of silence. It is asserted by engineers that valve noises are by no means the most difficult to get rid of, and it is now quite unnecessary to have one's nerves torn to pieces by the noises once so common in almost all types.

Another essential in an engine is that it should be so constructed as to be out of the power of the inexperienced driver to injure it. Experience has taught motor manufacturers that drivers of all colors delight in accelerating engines while the car is stationary. With some it is a chronic disease. The sound of an engine racing itself to death is music to the khaki-clad mechanics (?) who abound near the Grand Hotel. Personally, the noise thus set up is sufficient to reduce the writer to a state very nearly allied to homicidal mania. When a poppet valve engine is raced there is always a tendency on the part of the tappets actuating the valves to leave the face of the cams, this sets up a "chattering" which is generally a warning to desist, but in a slide valve engine there is no such warning, consequently it has been necessary to resort to strangulation of the engine by means of the carburetter, this results in an approximate loss of 20 per cent. of power at 1,000 revolutions per minute with a proportionate increase at higher speeds, as compared with the power given in a test with a free passage carburetter. So long as cars are driven by careless and incompetent drivers, so long must it be desirable to eliminate as far as possible the necessity for the constant attention to the working of the motor. The working of both types of engine is common in so far as it is dependent upon the lubrication of the crank shaft big end and little end bearings and of the piston blocks and cylinder walls, but in the sleeve type the working of the motor is also dependent on the effective lubrication of the sleeves. This is very important and is a danger from which poppet types are free. At worst a poppet valve stem may break and in such rare case a roadside change can readily be effected, but should lack of attention to lubrication lead to a seizure of the sleeve in the newer type, the garage is the only means of repair and then only by considerable loss of time and expense.

On Monday evening I was a witness of an apparently inexplicable accident in Chowringhee, but, as more will be heard of the matter through the Police Court, criticism will be deferred for the present.

The tendency in most 1912 models which have arrived in India has been to eliminate as far as possible various factors in engine control, leaving the driver nothing to attend to except steering and gear changing. The primary factors are carburation, throttle, and ignition variation and it is because there is so much diversity of opinion regarding them that it is of interest to deal with them here just now. The present day carburetter designer aims at turning out an article as far as possible automatic that is giving out a constant power or strength of mixture under every condition of running. The driver cannot, in most cases, alter the mixture while the car is running and consequently the terms "rich or weak" are terms only to him. With regard to the question of automatic carburation there is a general opinion that while this is entirely satisfactory from a novice's standpoint, it is not the correct practice for the experienced driver whose desire is to run his engine at the highest pitch of efficiency and obtain the highest possible return in mileage in return for a given petrol consumption. So long as driving conditions are so widely variable there is ample support for the contention that the mixture should be variable at the will of the driver. The alternative to this is to make the carburetter automatic in a wider sense than at present, in so much as it would produce a mixture of such proportions as would best suit the conditions of running at any given time. For instance during a period of light work or on a level, smooth stretch of road, with a rear wind the mixture would be weakened, and assuming that the throttle were kept at a position to ensure the cylinders taking in full feeds of mixture, this would make for the highest degree of fuel economy and engine efficiency from weak charges under full compression. When road conditions call for a maximum of power, as for hill climbing or adverse states of road or weather the mixture would revert to its full power of rich proportions and so with ample throttle range the driver could cope with any conditions arising. To carry out this idea in a thoroughly practicable form would be a very difficult and complicated matter, but speaking from my own experience I consider the best course is to revert to the old principle of mixture variation by means of a lever on the steering wheel which would now be much more effective in up-to-date carburetters than in the old crude types.

Following the lead of various contemporaries it is my intention, without apologies, to institute a series of competitions. In these, out of regard for the Government conscience gambling is barred. As an introduction a suitable reward will be given to anyone who can give (1) The taxi number, (2) driver's name, and (3) fare's name, who figured in the following incident. At 1 A.M. on Sunday morning an elevated jute wallah hired a taxi at Esplanade. After gracefully depositing himself therein, the driver as usual asked for instructions, to meet with a somnolent "Oh! go to Hades! Away went the taxi, and after a few minutes the fare, awaking to the fact that he was being whirled past the New Market, wrathfully asked "Where are you going? To be given the reply by the driver in the most matter-of-fact tone, "Well, sahib, you told me to go to H——and this is the nearest way I know."

THE COLLAPSE OF HUZOORI MUL.

"I HAVE only known one European able to get the better of a Marwari in business" said the Executive Engineer—homeward bound on furlough—to the smoke-room audience, "and he wasn't a Scotsman either Mr. Macallum, but just a poor Irishman like myself."

"Prodergious!" said the Chief Engineer, to whom this latter remark had been addressed. "I didna think, your bonichin country could hae turned oot a genius capable o' bestin' a Marwari."

Well, Michael Flanagan did, and every one who knew him was glad of it; for Michael is an honest man and Huzoori Mul was—well—a Marwari. Flanagan had been a sergeant of sappers and a stonemason by trade before he enlisted. He went to Roorkee from the army and passed out in the supervisor grade. After serving in the P.W.D. for some time—part of it under me—he left the service and took up contracts; and, being honest, capable and well liked by the officers in our department, he got plenty of work. As he had very little capital and had pretty extensive contracts all over the country he was obliged to borrow regularly from Huzoori Mul, a wealthy Marwari banker and head of the Jain community in Pandra Pindi where Flanagan lives.

Amongst other contracts he had agreed to supply all the bricks for the various buildings, culverts, etc., on the new strategical Dera Suleiman Shah Railway in the Punjab. Government has sometimes a nasty trick of going on with one of these frontier lines in a hurry and then for financial or other reasons suddenly stopping the work. To a big engineering concern this does not matter much, but to a poor struggling contractor like Flanagan it sometimes spells ruin; especially if he has prepared and collected a lot of material of which the greater part has not as yet been paid for by him. Huzoori Mul had succeeded in getting Flanagan to settle up his accounts to the end of the year—which left him practically penniless—and then suddenly intimated that he could not, or would not finance him any more; and refused to give a cause for this. In vain Flanagan pointed out to him that he had always been regular in his payments, that he was not only perfectly solvent but stood to be worth over fifty thousand rupees clear on the completion of his contracts: the Marwari obstinately refused to even see him on the subject, alleging that he was sick. The fact was a rumour had got about that Government was going to stop the work—for a time—on the Suleiman Shah Railway, and Huzoori was afraid that this would greatly embarrass—perhaps smash—Flanagan in business; and having got all Flanagan owed him he meant to keep on the safe side. Well, this sudden stoppage of his financial support meant something very like ruin to poor Michael, and it was with a heavy heart he went home to tell his wife of the failure of his last attempt to see the Jain.

"Ellen," he said "I'm afraid it's all up with us. I tried hard to see Huzoori but they pretend he's sick. It's hard lines when everything seemed so bright for us; and it's the children I'm thinking about as well as you." For they had a fine family of growing boys and girls.

"There must be some way out of it Michael," said Ellen:" take my advice and go over and see old Martin Brodie the apothecary. He is a cute and very long-headed man and has always been very friendly to us."

Flanagan agreed, and set out at once to see Brodie, who had retired on the honorary rank and pension of surgeon-captain. He was an old Mutiny veteran and was rumoured to possess fabulous treasures in looted jewellery. The apothecaries in the Mutiny time had charge of the medical comforts and it is said that a glass or two of rum often brought a valuable jewel from a thirsty Tommy. Be that as it may, Brodie was certainly very well off and lived in a large bungalow alone. He was a widower with no children. Flanagan soon made him acquainted with his troubles.

"It's black ruin starin' me in the face Martin" he said.

"Aye, it's a sad thing," said Brodie; "have ye heard that there have been three cases of hydrophoby in the bazar?"

"My God, Brodie, do you think I have nothing else to think of except hydrophobia?" said Michael.

"Or that the Deputy Commissioner's syce was bit this morning by a mad dog?"

"Damn the syce and the mad dogs."

"No, no Michael, for I think these mad dogs are going to be the greatest friends you have. Isn't there a Mussulman cookshop and eating house near your house?"

"There is" said Flanagan, "and a beastly nuisance it is. They throw the bones of sheep's heads and trotters and so on out on the road and all the pi dogs in the country assemble there on that account."

"And you're afraid that they may bite you or some of your family, especially as there's hydrophoby knockin' about. So you and I are just gan tae dander doon to the Deputy Commissioner's house and complain about it to him and tell him you want to shoot all the ownerless dogs about. You don't need his sanction, but it's as well to give a sort of official colouring to what you are about to do."

And so the Deputy Commissioner was visited and accorded his hearty sanction to the proposed destruction of stray bazar dogs. "I have long taken the municipality to task for this nuisance, but the Jain element is all powerful here and you know how opposed they are to the destruction of life even of the lowest creatures. But with this outbreak of hydrophobia I must do something and I would be very glad Mr. Flanagan if you would help to clear these pests out." So with this quasi official sanction Flanagan went to work and next morning the bazar resounded with the popping of B. B. cartridges and the dying howls of pariah dogs, to the astonishment and horror of the Jain community. What made matters worse was that the Pinjrapole cage on wheels which went about collecting stray dogs was broken down and could not be repaired within a week. Meanwhile Brodie got hold of Flanagan's Kayastha head clerk Nilaram and sent him round the bazar to spread a rumour that his master was shooting the dogs for revenge on Huzoori Mul because the latter had refused to continue to finance him. The Jains then got hold of Nilaram and got him—for a consideration—to convey a message to his master begging him to stop the slaughter.

"Sir," said that worthy, "the Jain gentlemen are in a melancholy state of perturbation at the awful and indiscriminate massacre of dogs which your honour has committed this morning and they beg of you to consider their feelings, as the souls of some of their ancestors may be and probably are contained in the bodies of some of these otherwise vile and filthy animals."

"Why should I consider their feelings? Did Huzoori Mul consider mine the other day when he refused to cash my drafts? And when I went round to the other Marwari bankers did they not one and all refuse? No, I shall shoot every stray dog I find in Pandra Pindi and for ten miles round it and when all the dogs are wiped out I will begin on the crows and kites."

So when this reply reached the Jains they descended in a body on the wretched Huzoori Mul and threatened him with all sorts of pains and penalties if he did not at once set matters right with Flanagan, even threatening personal violence if he failed. "Look," they said, "at the awful amount of sin we are incurring, and all your fault. Besides you are secretary of the Pinjrapole, why has the cart not been repaired and these dogs collected and sent out to the jungles as usual? You will have to pay heavily to expiate your—and our—sin in this. Better see Flanagan sahib at once and pacify him at any cost—your cost, not ours mind—or look out for yourself."

So at four o' clock, as Flanagan was preparing for a further raid, first Brodie turned up and shortly afterwards Huzoori Mul in an ekka.

"Mr. Flanagan" he whined "what is this? You have brought great disgrace on me. I am threatened with excommunication and even shoe beating. My wife has refused to eat in my house and it will cost me a lac of rupees to the priests at Aboo and Parasnath when I make pilgrimage; otherwise Sookhal and Shambal and all the rests of these pigs, my castemen, say they will kick me out."

"It was I" said Brodie "who advised Mr. Flanagan to kill off these dogs as they are a public danger and the Deputy Sahib highly approves of it."

"But for God's sake, Sir, have some pity on me. I was always your friend" said the wretched Jain.

"Yes, up till last Wednesday when you dishonoured my drafts and shamed me before every one. Now I have no reason to spare you and I won't; so you can go to Yama Loka (the Jain Hell) if you like I will have nothing more to do with you."

"Madame," howled Huzoori to Ellen, who had just entered, "please speak to your husband for me. I will be changed in my next life into a jackel or a frog on account of all this."

"Or into a leech: you blood-sucking owld parasite," said Ellen, "no, I won't interfere."

"Now look here Huzoori Mul," said Brodie "you know you have behaved disgracefully to Mr. Flanagan in your business arrangements; but I am willing to intercede for you with him to place you on your former footing provided you bind yourself to play no more tricks in money matters as you did the other day."

"I swear by Parasnath by the thirty and nine Tirthankars that he can have as much money as he likes at any time henceforth" said Huzoori.

"And at a lower rate of interest" said Brodie, who saw his chance and took advantage of it, "and you will have to enter into a bond now, and under heavy penalties to keep your agreement."

"I will do anything reasonable" said Huzoori, who knew he dared not face the members of his own community with his errand unaccomplished.

So there and then a vakil and the necessary stamps were sent for and an agreement drawn up to the effect that Huzoori Mul was to act as banian or financier to Mr. Flanagan contractor on stated terms and under certain penalties for three years. "Before then" said Flanagan aside to Brodie "I will have ceased to require his help."

"When Huzoori reported matters to the rest of the Jains he was received with derision and contempt for having been bested by a European."

"But," he said "it was not a proper European. It was that Scotch Broddee—may he be transmigrated into a tapeworm—who put Flanagan up to the whole thing; and these Scotchmen are Marwaris like ourselves. Thousands of years since when the Brahmans were persecuting us many of our religion fled from this country, and after long wandering they came to a cold miserable island in the Kalapani called Scotland, and having conquered the savages they found there—who were junglies and had tails and lived up trees, like those infernal thieving Hanuman monkeys which the Hindus worship they settled down and bred and flourished and sent their sons and their daughters as merchants and lady doctors all over the world. And this cursed Broddee—may Yama keep a hot corner for him—is one of them. And they are far cleverer than we, the original Marwaris. Is there not a Scotch Marwari merchant in Calcutta named David something before whom Burra Bagat trembles? So after all mere ek log it was only a Marwari after all who bested me. Then where is the shame?

ATHLETES AND OXYGEN.

A NEW and somewhat curious point has been raised by Sir E. Ray Lankester, the well-known naturalist, in relation to the stimulant or refreshment that may legitimately be taken by an athlete during a race :—" whether a competitor (in the Marathon race to be run this year at Stockholm) will be allowed to breathe, as he runs, oxygen gas from a bag carried by him." Sir Ray Lankester advances the question from the point of the man of science ; he says, it would be extremely interesting to see whether such " breathing " is of material assistance o the runner. It would no doubt be exceedingly nteresting ; but we imagine that the question is one which makes more practical appeal to American athletes than to our more conservative people. It is urged that oxygen, being a " natural article of consumption," might be taken as legitimately as water or soup ; we do not stop to inquire whether soup is as " natural " an article of sustenance as water ; and we consider the bearings of the Professor's suggestion, on the assumption that it is possible for a runner to carry about his person a supply of oxygen sufficient to be of use to him. We confess ourselves somewhat in the dark on this vital point, associating the use of oxygen with the sick-room and ponderous steel tubes weighing 25 or 30lbs. from which the gas is released by tap and tube into the patient's lungs. The value of oxygen in cases where breathing is difficult, and it becomes necessary to tide the patient over a crisis, is well established ; and we do not doubt that it would be of marked assistance to the exhausted runner whose blood needs more oxygenation than it can receive in the normal course of breathing. But would such extraneous aid be legitimate ? We quite concede that there is a case to be made out in favour of Sir Ray Lankester's proposition ; air is indispensable and oxygen is a constituent of atmosphere ; there the administration of oxygen has about it none of the taint of " doping." It is plausible but it does not satisfy us. To attempt to test the proposition by rule and regulation is hardly possible ; to do so would be to seek analogy to those cases, beloved of the legal profession, wherein the status of a bicycle as a

"carriage" or otherwise was sought to be determined by statutes framed long before bicycles were invented. The question is one to be decided by the light of sportsmanship and common sense; and in our judgment the answer must be "No, it would not be legitimate for a runner to refresh himself with oxygen from a bag carried by him." We are prepared to allow large latitude to competitors in these great tests of endurance. If a man think that it will enable him to get to the end of his journey first to sit down on reaching the twelfth milestone and eat a "quick lunch" or a lunch of any other kind, by all means let him do it; the proceeding is a natural one: we should not put our money on the daring athlete who did the thing; but that is beside the point. To assume a more reasonable case: we doubt the strict legitimacy of allowing another person to run alongside the competitor and administer soup or water, or to pour water over him; but we see no objection whatever to the runner stopping by the way to take a drink of water from a roadside stream; we would sanction a "soup station" at a given stage of the race where the runners might, if they pleased, stop and refresh themselves; but we have never been able quite to reconcile ourselves to the administration of soup en route by a second. We grant that the difference between the two actions is difficult to define; but we base our objection on the undeniable fact that it is not consonant with natural usages to take soup while in the act of running while it is natural to do so sitting down or standing. We can suggest a distant parallel to the oxygen plan; distant, but near enough perhaps to furnish ground on which to arrive at a fair opinion of the legitimacy of the idea. It is not considered lawful to administer stimulants to a runner; a tot of whiskey or brandy quickens the heart's action for the time being, and may enable the man to make that last supreme effort which would give him the race. It is properly considered an artificial stimulus and is therefore barred. Now, oxygen administered, as Sir Ray Lankester suggests (we write under correction from the medical faculty) is an artificial stimulus; its office is to purify the blood thickening under the prolonged exertion and flowing less freely than it does under normal conditions: it does through the lungs what the tot of spirits performs through another channel: therefore we maintain its administration would not be legitimate; it would create a temporarily artificial vigour disconsonant with our conception of sporting ethics; it may not be a "drug" in the accepted sense of the term, but it produces the effect of a drug: we therefore hold its use inadmissible. And when all is said and done would the use of oxygen tell science anything definite? Suppose the "oxygenated" runner to win could Sir Ray Lankester place his hand upon the oxygen bag and say "that did it?" We do not think he could; it is quite on the cards that the oxygenated one would have won without it. If it be desired to test the effect of oxygen on the running fraternity the way to set about it would be this:—engage a number of athletes, ten, fifteen or twenty, to run Marathon races once a week for as many weeks as there are runners; oxygenate a different member of the field each time and mark results: if the oxygenated man won his race and always "walked in with the crowd" on other occasions, when he did not enjoy the aid of the oxygen bag the case would be made out. To oxygenate the whole field would, we submit, answer no purpose from either a scientific or a sporting point of view; it would be the equivalent of giving all the horses in a race a 5lbs. allowance; to allow one to carry an oxygen bag would be to give him an unfair advantage.

We should be sorry to see the athletic field invaded by such devices as this, or anything of a similar kind. It is not so many years ago that the racecourse at Home saw the American invasion and English turfites were made acquainted with the practice of "doping" or drugging horses: the device found no acceptance in the old country; it was wholly antagonistic to our ideas of sport and was no more than a passing sensation. That was well; we want our sports to be kept clean and free from reproach, and the best way to keep them so is to set our faces firmly against innovation which come before us in the guise of scientific inquiry or in any other specious guise. The sportsman's object is not only to win but to win fairly; it is above all things desirable that the competitions held under the name of the Olympic Games, in which athletes of all nationalities meet, should be held under the highest and best standards of sportsmanship; and we trust that the day is far distant when these shall be made the arena of experiments which only serve to open the door to malpractice.

THE ENGLISH CLASSIC RACES.

The unexpected defeats of both Mr. J. B. Joel's colts, White Star and Absurd, in the Two Thousand Guineas, and the smirching of the hitherto unbeaten record of Lord Falmouth's beautiful filly Belleisle in the One Thousand has aroused tremendous interest in the Epsom classics, the Derby and Oaks, as previous to the Newmarket races, both races on Epsom's famous downs were regarded as one horse affairs.

Both White Star and Belleisle were hot favorites for their respective Guineas and each were entitled to that honor, for while the latter had beaten all the fillies and most of the colts of her age during her two-year-old days, White Star was regarded as being much in front of the colts, in spite of his fluky defeat by both his stable companion Absurd, and Sweeper II, in the Middle Park Plate, in which race he was crossed at the start.

Though the son of Sundridge, which famous sire he resembles very much, has not grown much during the winter, he is all quality. In size, however, he was handicapped considerably by nearly all his opponents of which three, Sweeper II, Jaeger, and Hall Cross, all succeeded in beating him. Sweeper II's success was thoroughly American, as the colt is not only American bred, but its owner, Mr. H. B. Duryea, and jockey, D. Maher, are citizens of the United States.

It is strange how important events turn upon comparatively small incidents. In 1909 Mr. Duryea sent his mare Ravello from America to be mated with Collar at the Cobham Stud, and with her was sent her foal by Broomstick, which is now known to us as Sweeper II. In recent years Mr. Duryea has maintained an important racing stable in France, and it was his intention that Ravello's foal should be raced in France. He had overlooked the fact that any horse foaled in France who is absent from French soil during the first six months of its career is disqualified from running in any race in that country. Thus it came about that Sweeper II was rendered perfectly useless for the purposes of Mr. Duryea's stable in France, but the mistake was remedied to some extent by entering him for various English races. Last summer the colt was sent to Mr. H. S. Persse's stables at Stockbridge and ran for the first time at Ascot. It is highly probable that if the error referred to had not been made in his foalhood days the son of Broomstick would have passed his racing career in the land of the Gaul and would never have been selected to compete in England. Thus he would not have had the opportunity of placing his name on the scroll of British classic winners.

It is a happy feature of the English classic races, which distinguishes them from the corresponding events in France, and obviously adds to their importance, that no nationality is debarred from the contests, and on the whole outside efforts to win them have been attended by small success. Until Sweeper II's victory only one American horse had won the Two Thousand Guineas before, and that was Mr. August Belmont's Norman III in 1908.

It was Maher's second success in the race, he having won in 1910 for Lord Rosebery on Neil Gow. Jaeger getting second place when starting on 100 to 1 recalled the surprise created by his stable companion Coriander when starting at the same odds at Sandown Park last year in the Great Sapling Plate, which he won.

By the way, Major Eustace Loder, or "Lucky" Loder as he is called by his friends, hoped to win the Derby with Coriander, but popular as would be the success of Pretty Polly's half brother in the yellow and dark blue sleeved jacket of the new Steward of the Jockey Club, we are afraid that the colt can have no chance at Epsom on its running in the Chester Vase, in which it finished absolutely last. What is more likely to carry off the Blue Riband is Lomond, owned by Mr. E. Hulton, the owner of several newspapers, and whose horses have all been running well this season.

The defeat of Belleisle in the One Thousand was almost as big a surprise as was that of White Star. The race well maintained its record for surprises for the winner turned up in Mr. W. Raphael's Tagalie, which was stones behind Lord Falmouth's filly in her juvenile days. The wagering was practically confined to Belleisle, Polkerris, and Charmian. It was a case of 20 to 1 bar three, nothing else being really inquired about. At one time Polkerris was favorite, but in the end Belleisle had a slight call over the Kingsclere filly. It may be said that the salient feature of the race, such as it was, was that Tagalie made the whole of the running.

For the greater part of the journey her nearest attendants were Belleisle, Polkerris, Charmian, and Alope, and at the finish the last named divided Tagalie and Belleisle. On the whole it was an astonishing result, though these things have happened before and will, no doubt, occur again.

Tagalie's success reminds us of the comparative scarcity of grey horses on the English Turf, and no doubt will prompt many to ask why they should be so few. It is well-known that grey horses were plentiful enough in the training stables of England at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Gradually they decreased in number, with the result that there are probably fewer than forty grey brood mares in the latest volume of the "General Stud Book." How is this falling off in numbers to be accounted for? It cannot be for any want of popularity, as a grey race-horse, like a hunter of the same color, is looked upon with a friendly eye by most people. Nor can it be for lack of merit, because greys in proportion to their number have held their own against horses of other colors as far as their performances on the race-course are concerned.

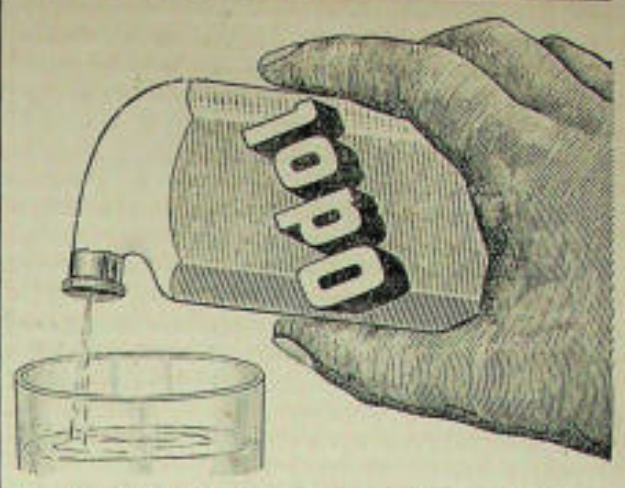
The true reason reveals some interesting facts. No grey horse is ever foaled unless either his sire or dam is grey. A bay sire may produce a foal of another color, but that foal will never in its turn produce a grey. Once the grey color fails to reproduce itself it is lost for ever. There is no throwing back. If you want a grey foal you must take a grey parent on one side; it will be of no avail to go to, say, a bay sire or mare who comes of a family of greys. You must breed from the actual color itself. There are exceptions to every rule, and perhaps one or two will be advanced to controvert this statement as to the breeding of greys, but such exceptions will be exceedingly rare, and they would have to be fully authenticated before scientists could be brought to accept them.



Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There is not much further news concerning the Derby, and all that the market quotations tell us is that Mr. Duryea's Sweeper II. is a steady favourite and has remained at from 3 to 1 to 5 to 2 ever since his victory in the Guineas, the result of the Newmarket Stakes not having greatly disturbed matters, and all that Cylgad's victory over Tagalie and Catmint has done and the crushing defeat of the two ex-favourites is to bring Sir Ernest Cassel's colt to sixes and Tagalie to tens. They still therefore think that the Guineas was the better Derby gallop of the two, though on all public form to date Cylgad's performance was quite as meritorious as that of the Yankee-bred colt. Taking a line through Belleisle Tagalie has proved herself a very consistent performer and her three-year-old running gives every encouragement to the belief that she has made very considerable improvement. Cylgad did not as a two-year-old always run as straight as the proverbial gun-barrel, but he seems to have given up his flighty ways, as in both his recent engagements, the Newmarket Biennial Stakes at the Craven Meeting and the Newmarket Stakes he has run very honestly and there can be no doubt as to his class. He was ticketed a smart colt at the end of last season and many very competent critics then said that he was a very promising Derby "probable." He was admittedly a little overgrown and a bit inclined to be gross and coachy, but his three-year-old performances seem to indicate that he is now well-set and very considerably improved. At the same time he would be a bold man who would prophesy the result of next Wednesday's great run with any show of confidence, for it looks, and it is, extremely open. That the prophets are all at sea has been apparent for a long time past and recent form has done no more than make confusion worse confounded. The only new introduction into the problem has been Mordred, a black or brown colt by Earla Mor out of Rose of Jeddah, who is owned by Mr. F. C. Stern and ran five times as a two-year-old, winning twice and was placed upon one other occasion. He won the Beckhampton Two-Year-Old Plate, 4 furlongs, at Newbury, beating Angel Clare and Mediator and thirty-three others; he finished second in the Mart Plate to the colt by Long Tom out of Bess Denedyke; he was unplaced in the Ascot Biennial which was won by Cataract and for which Mordred started favourite; he was also unplaced in the Devonshire Nursery Handicap at Derby won by Absurd and he finished the year by securing the Reading Nursery Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Newbury, beating Sister of Mercy and Grayling and eleven others. Earla Mor is by Desmond out of Weeping Ash; Desmond is by St. Simon out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre and Weeping Ash is by Ash Plant out of Commission, who is by Barcaldine out of Royal Letter by Queen's Messenger out of Algerie, who was by Flying Dutchman out of L'Aventurière. The dam Rose of Jeddah goes back to Jeddah and Rouge Rose; Jeddah was by Janissary, and was the hero of the 100 to 1 Derby in 1898, out of Janette, who was by Lord Clifden out of Chevissannce by Stockwell out of Paradigm and Rouge Rose was, it will be recalled, the dam of Bend, Or and was by Thormanby (Windhound—Alice Hawthorne out of Ellen Horne, the grand-daughter of Plenipotentiary). This Irish-bred one is therefore extremely "well connected" and he has probably won a race recently of which we have not yet received the record in India. Taking an average of the market quotations the following prices about represent the state of affairs at the time of going to press:—

At the moment Sweeper II. holds pride of place and he may start a warm favourite, but in a year like this who can possibly say what the happenings of a week may bring forth. To those who follow the favourites, however, it may be comforting news that fifty first favourites have won the Derby up to date, whereas only twenty rank outsiders have been successful. The list of first favourites that have won is as follows:—Diomed, Saltram, Serjeant, Sir Thomas, Skyscraper, Rhodamanthus, John Bull, Sir Harry, Champion, Eleanor, Election, Whalebone, Smolenski, Blucher, Tiresias, Gustavus, Emilius, Middleton, Priam, St. Giles, Plenipotentiary, Bay Middleton, Coronation, Cotherstone, Surplice, Flying Dutchman, Teddington, West Australian, Wild Dayrell, Musjid, Gladiateur, Lord Lyon, Pretender, Galopin, Bend 'Or, Melton, Ormonde, Ayrshire, Donovan, Common, Isinglass, Ladas, Galtee More, Flying Fox, Diamond Jubilee, Volodyovski, Rock Sand, Cicero, Lemberg, and Sunstar. The hottest favourites that have ever gone out for the Derby so far are Ladas 9 to 2 on, Ormonde 9 to 4 on, Surefoot 95 to 40 on, Isinglass 95 to 40 on, Galtee More 4 to 1 on, Flying Fox 5 to 2 on, and Cicero 11 to 4 on, and all these bar Surefoot came home, Surefoot being even beaten out of a place, as he ran fourth in the race of 1890 which was won by Sir James Miller's Sainfoin, who started at 100 to 15. Surefoot, however, is not the only odds on favourite that has been beaten, as the records tell us of many others, amongst them Johannay in 1793, The Wizard in 1809, Riddlesworth in 1831, Macgregor in 1870, The Baron in 1887 (Surefoot as already mentioned in 1890), St. Frusquin in 1896, Slieve Gallion in 1907. The list of "rank outsiders" is also a formidable one, and the two most recent cases that will be recalled are Jeddah's 100 to 1 victory in 1898 and Signorinetta's win at similar odds in 1908. There are, however, many other instances and the list includes:—Noble 30 to 1 in 1786, Cardinal Beaufort 20 to 1 in 1805, Pan 25 to 1 in 1808, Pope 20 to 1 in 1809, Azor 15 to 1 in 1817, Lapdog 50 to 1 in 1826, Frederick 40 to 1 in 1829, Spaniel 50 to 1 in 1831, Dangerous 30 to 1 in 1833, Phosphorus 40 to 1 in 1837, Amato 30 to 1 in 1838, Bloomsbury 25 to 1 in 1839, Little Wonder 50 to 1 in 1840, Daniel O'Rourke 25 to 1 in 1852, Caractacus 40 to 1 in 1862, Hermit 1,000 to 15 in 1866, Doncaster 45 to 1 in 1873, Sir Hugo 40 to 1 in 1892, and the two more recent cases above mentioned. In a year like the present the so-called "delightful uncertainty" would seem to be extremely possible, for although two horses have at the moment seemingly been ticketed as standing out no one can really be certain what may happen. Both the winter favourites have proved great disappointments and no one has attempted so far to find any reason for rehabilitating them: an unfashionably bred American colt has got home in the Guineas and a very well-bred English colt has won the Newmarket Stakes and there is the additional factor in the equation of Tagalie, who has won a good race, beating a filly supposed to be about top of the two-year-old form last season, and who has since that performance endorsed it by running up to the present second favourite for the Derby, Cylgad.

The problem therefore, it will be readily admitted, presents any amount of possibilities and we might very easily be faced by a totally unlooked for result on Wednesday next. It ought to be a very good race for the fielders in any case and may still further add to the list of successes which the present season has already brought them.

Our contemporary the Australasian has a long article upon racing in India with particular reference to the totalisator and recent legislation in Bombay. The writer in the Australasian prefaces his comments by stating that you cannot hope to stamp out betting by legislation and that in England this fact has been recognised. The "bucket shop" operators have been banished and no one greatly regrets the fact, but as soon as they are sent out of one country they bob up serenely in another, and as we know the S. P. turf commissioners work the game quite as merrily nowadays from Switzerland, as previously to that they did from Belgium and again previously to that from Scotland, after they had been interdicted in England. In France, although there are no bookmakers on the courses and the pari-mutuel is run as a Government concern more or less, there are thousands of operators off the course and so it is of not much avail to point to France as a shining example of the success of that particular form of betting. Conditions and environment must necessarily govern everything and it is impossible to draw a useful comparison between India and any European country.

In the course of the Australasian article it is remarked:—"You can never make a majority of the community think the worse of people who risk their own money by betting. Doubtless many weaklings ruin themselves by speculating beyond their means. If betting were not available to them as a means of scattering their money they would discover some other means of bringing about their own downfall. In India the Bombay Government proposes to limit racing and to do away with bookmakers, but the totalisator is to go on all the same. Bookmakers have been done away with in France, but the moral aspect of the question had nothing to do with their suppression. The Government there wants all the money to go through the totalisator, and pay tribute to the revenue, the charities, and the horse-breeding industry. Why should the bookmakers who take thousands out of the sport and put nothing back, be tolerated when a handsome revenue for desirable objects can be obtained from the totalisator? In Bombay betting is a small thing by comparison with what it is in France, Australia, and other places, but Sir George Sydenham Clarke, the Governor, is satisfied that it is an evil that is on the increase, and must be coped with. He has made up his mind that it must be decreased by legislation. That Bombay can lessen betting on horse-racing is beyond question. The racing fixtures are to be decreased from 42 to 17, and the bookmakers barred, as in New Zealand, Tasmania, and South Australia. The volume of betting will not be decreased by the abolition of the bookmaker. The totalisator will still be there, and we know from New Zealand figures that the absence of the bookmaker simply means that the money he held now goes into the machine. The decrease in the number of fixtures, however, must lessen the amount of betting on horse-racing in Bombay, but it may not decrease betting."

It is quite unnecessary to point out that Sir George Sydenham Clarke while he suppresses, or thinks he suppresses gambling, with one hand is legalising it with the other. Sir George Clarke is also legislating with small knowledge of Indian conditions. If Sir George had tackled a matter of which he has possibly more knowledge, gambling in cotton, no one would have had much to say! In his present Act, however, he has unduly interfered with a private club and has arrogated to himself the same powers as those possessed by the Stewards of the Jockey Club in England. We wonder if and when our Australian cousins fully realised the significance of the present Act they will contemplate such action. Supposing such an Act as this were brought before the Legislature in Australia (and on our contemporary's own showing there is even more reason to curtail racing in Australia than there is in India) how would it be received? It would be interesting to read the press comments on such a situation and the cold comfort now proffered to India could then perhaps be handed back.

To quote further from these interesting comments in the Melbourne paper:—"If there is no racing to bet on people who will have a wager may find something else to wager about, and if people are going to bet it is better they should bet on a horse or a greyhound than take risks where 'things that can talk' are concerned. The horse or the greyhound will do his best if allowed to do so, and in the case of a horse the jockey who prevents him doing his best is always taking the chance of being bowled out by the Stewards and deprived of his livelihood. The risk is not great perhaps, but there is a risk. In the case of cyclists, professional runners, fighting men, and, in fact, all the talking brigade, the dirty work can be done without much fear of detection. Many can remember football getting a great set-back owing to it being universally believed that an important match nearly 25 years ago was arranged. Pedestrianism was immensely popular in Australia 40 years ago, but the scandal over a certain match in Melbourne killed it for years, and it has never regained the place it once held. And is there any doubt about the decline in the popularity of the Austral Wheel Race being partly due to betting transactions in connection with more than one of the races? Years ago when England and Australia started playing cricket on even terms, there was heavy betting for a time and a few bookmakers came into the game. Directly they did there was a scandal, and although nothing came of it there is no doubt that two leading professionals were under suspicion of having been 'got at.' There has been no betting of any note on cricket since. In Australia there is so much racing that the most inveterate punter can find an outlet for his money without troubling about betting on men. The public will pay to see a fight or a good many other sports in which men are the performers, but they wisely confine their betting almost entirely to horses. Sir George Clarke, in addition to checking betting on horse-racing by limiting the amount of racing, is also going to wipe out 'bucket shops,' which he says he got to know a good deal about while in Melbourne. Apparently all the big betting shops in Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide have been forced out of existence by the law. That of course is so much gained. It obliges the men who will bet to go to the racecourse, and take some fresh air with their punting, instead of haunting a stuffy 'club' for the afternoon. The Bombay legislation will do good to the public, provided no other and more objectionable way of betting is not discovered by those who are to have their racing restricted. How the curtailment will affect those who get their living out of racing and trade generally remains to be seen. The racing man spends a deal of money in a place, and driving him away in the interests of weaklings who cannot restrain themselves when betting may not suit all round."

"Mr. Holmes'" mare Souvenir, by Galeazzo out of Tender and True (Royal Tender's dam) has, we hear, dropped a bay colt foal to Jackson, who is a grey and French-bred, being by French Fox out of Jacqueline. French Fox is by Flying Fox, who was by Orme out of Vampire by Galopin out of Irony by Rosebery out of Sarcasm by Breadalbane out of Jeu d'Esprit. Angelica, Orme's dam, was also by Galopin.

Colin Barrett, the well-known "Indian" jockey, has been having a bit of riding in public at home and won the Surrey Two-Year-Old Selling Plate at Lingfield on Mr. J. E. Wilson's Rather Bolder, Wise Best ridden by Robbins running second and Outwood ridden by Hewitt being third. Rather Bolder won in a hack canter after making all the running.

Mr. R. L. Kindersley, the well-known Southern Indian sportsman, has recovered sufficiently from his recent illness to sail for Home. His racing stable was sold by auction in Bangalore last Thursday, when a b e g Winklet was the only horse to realise a fair price. Colina, a br e m, met with an accident the previous day and had to be destroyed.

As is pretty generally known, it is the intention of the Duke of Westminster to take a polo team to America next year for a further attempt to recover the International Cup, and particular interest will therefore attach to the performances of the Eaton side at the clubs this season. In their first engagement this week, said the Morning Post in mail week, they quite outclassed a fairly strong quartette, captained by Lord Ashby St. Ledgers, who has an excellent stud of ponies. The full Eton team will comprise Mr. C. P. Nickalls, the Duke of Westminster, Captain R. G. Ritson, and the Earl of Rocksavage. Now that the latter has left the Army and can devote the whole of his time to polo, he will probably develop into one of the finest backs this country has produced. At all events, nobody will find fault with his selection if he is chosen to play in the next series of international contests. He and Captain Ritson should form an exceptionally powerful defence. The last named is undoubtedly a great player, with really wonderful wrist work—indeed, we have never seen his superior in that direction, even among the Americans who visited us in 1909. It is possible that Mr. C. Nickalls may work into quite his old form and in that case he will worthily fill the position of No. 1, in which he had no peer prior to his temporary absence from the game a few seasons ago. As to the exact composition of our next international team, however, nothing has yet been definitely settled, but the three players named will no doubt form the foundation of the side. Naturally the Duke of Westminster, who is fitting out the expedition at great cost, would like to have a hand himself in bringing back the cup to these shores and he is a much improved player, but he

Following closely on the death of Lieutenant Blakelock as the result of an accident while pig-sticking we learn that Captain Percy Russell, of the Army Remount Department, died at Saharanpur on the 21st instant as the result of an injury while pigsticking. A popular officer his death is mourned by a large circle of friends.

A reward of Rs. 100 is offered by the Deputy Commissioner of Nowgong for the destruction of a rogue elephant which lately killed a Mikir woman in a village in the Nowgong district. The elephant is a tusker and is about 10 feet high, colour natural and having marks of captivity on legs. Rs. 50 is also offered by the Deputy Commissioner, Khasia and Jaintia Hills, for the destruction of a rogue elephant which frequents the Sirdarship of Jirang in the Khasia Hills. The tusks will become the property of the person who kills the elephant. This elephant is about 8 feet high, the left tusk being a little shorter than the right. There is also another rogue elephant which frequents the village in the neighbourhood of Pamdkhar in the same district and Rs. 50 is also offered for his destruction. He is also a tusker, about 9½ feet high with 3 feet tusks and circumference of about 4½ feet.

The trout-breeding operations in the Punjab are still engaging much public attention and we now hear that the Government of India are sending Home for the consideration and sanction of the Secretary of State the proposals of the Punjab Government for the creation of a temporary appointment for three years of a Director of Fisheries for the Punjab.

The first cultivators of trout were the Chinese, whose food consists largely of fish found in fresh water. The Romans during the decadence of the empire also practised fish culture, but it is really to the monks of the Middle Ages, who had an eye to appetizing food during Lent (when they were forbidden flesh), that we owe the beginning of an industry now much improved upon in Germany, England, and France. Nevertheless, in no country has it been carried to so high a degree as in New Zealand, where trout may be obtained weighing from fifteen to twenty pounds apiece. In order to grow trout successfully, healthy spawn is essential, running water, protection against natural enemies, convenient food and after a certain time provision against the contingency that some of the trout may eat the others.

Before the eggs are hatched, usually in numbers of hundreds of thousands, they are collected in a series of incubator boxes through which runs a stream of water pure and reasonably cold. Great care must be taken that rats or other animals that devour eggs be not allowed to enter. The process of development covers a period of from five to seven weeks. The first change is to be observed in the elongation of the egg, and then two dark spots, which are the future eyes, appear. Another red mark begins to show where the heart will be. This changing form begins to move. If at this time the little egg is taken hold of the heat of the hand will soon loosen the shell. But it is best not to precipitate events. Scarcely have the fish left the eggs when they begin to resemble somewhat the spawn of frogs. They carry in the abdomen a transparent sac in which is contained food enough for several weeks. After a few weeks this sac disappears and the fish begin to move slowly, looking for food.

The incubators must always be scrupulously clean; they should be entirely gone over every two days at least, and the time the little fishes lose their abdominal sacs it is a good thing to sweeten the running water. Even with the greatest care possible, out of thousands of eggs it has been found possible to raise only two or three dozen trout; and the dead must be at once removed from the incubator. Of course, if equally convenient in all cases, a pond is about fifty times more serviceable than an incubator, but the water in the pond must be in some way renewed, preferably by zinc pipes. Best of all is a brook of sufficient depth, but so arranged as to keep the fish in constant view either by an iron partition or a board which will prevent the fish from slipping under.

If the place where the fish are being kept is near the sea so much the better, because then it is an easy matter to obtain the little molluscs and other small animals of an aquatic nature for the necessary food.

The trout-growing industry is not a mere pastime, but a very lucrative business if well managed. Large business is done with city markets and with those deputed by the authorities to repopulate rivers with fish. In the latter case, if the fish have been kept hitherto in ponds, temporary change to tanks may be desirable. Then the water to which they have been accustomed should be gradually diluted with water from the river so as to prepare them for the destined change.

The bulletless gun, which shoots a gas that temporarily blinds and chokes the victims, is a German invention, which some time ago caused some police-court proceedings in England. The cartridge used contains ingredients which, when exploded, combine to form a peculiar suffocating vapour. The gun itself in appearance and mechanism closely resembles an ordinary double-action revolver holding five cartridges. The appearance of the weapon, the report, and the flare of the powder combine to convince the victim that he has been shot at with an ordinary firearm. His eyes and mouth open with surprise, and the gases generated by the combination of the chemicals envelop his head completely, penetrating his eyes and affecting his sight. For several minutes he is practically blind. Simultaneously the mucous membranes of the nose and throat are irritated, the victim sneezes and chokes, and for a minute or two he finds it almost impossible to breathe. The gun is intended principally for the protection of tourists, automobilists, bank officials, mail-carriers, watchmen and policemen. This invention is intended to temporarily disable rather than kill, and we understand the United States Secret Service has decided to adopt this weapon for use. The trouble is that evil-doers might find the same weapon very useful and far less risky than an ordinary revolver. An ordinary cartridge case is used, and the charge consists of a small quantity of coarse-grained powder, on the top of which is a dose of red pepper mixed with lycopodium and a little saltpetre.

An automatic electric recording target has been invented by which the exact spot on the target hit is shown at the firing-point. A roll of paper is fixed vertically on a revolving metal cylinder on the right-hand side of the target. On the left-hand side is a similar cylinder. The paper is unwound from one cylinder to the other, and the space between the cylinders represents the target. As the paper travels across, it meets with a row of metal fingers which drop into any bullet-hole made, thus setting up electrical contact and showing, by means of a pointer at the firing-point, the exact position where the hole has been made. The invention is not at present quite complete, but its inventor sufficiently demonstrated a few days ago that the target fulfilled all claims made for it as a precise indicator of all shots put on a target. Of course, the services of a marker are dispensed with, which alone is a strong recommendation for the invention.

The game prospects of the East Africa Protectorate are dealt with in the Empire Review. The number of sportsmen's licenses last year were 124, compared with 117 in the previous year; residents' licenses were 191, compared with 140. The increase of revenue from this source was nearly £2,000.

There are two game reserves, one lying to the south of the Uganda Railway, between Tsavo and Nairobi, and extending to the Southern Uaso Nyoro and the Anglo-German boundary; the other including the country to the north of the Northern Uaso Nyoro. The stock of game in the Southern Reverse is very satisfactory, and there has been little or no disease this year.

An attempt will be made to acclimatise the wild water-melon of the Kalahari Desert in this area. It is regarded as excellent food for game and cattle and, if grown successfully, will do away with much of the trouble experienced in obtaining food and water for the Masai cattle and the game during the droughts. A certain number of dams will also be made in suitable places in the Reserve. There is a splendid stock of ostriches in the Reserve at present, and if the hyænas, which are very numerous, are killed off with poison, the ostriches should increase rapidly, and stock the surrounding country, to the great advantage of ostrich farmers.

The Athi Plains district is mainly visited by sportsmen for lion-hunting. In spite of this, and the fact that the local settlers kill every lion they can, these animals appear to be as numerous as ever, and more troublesome. With the exception of wildebeest and rhinoceros, the usual game of the plains is still abundant in the district.

On the whole, the game prospects are most satisfactory. There has been much less disease, and the rains which fell early in 1911, will produce abundance of food and lead to a rapid increase in stock. Eland and buffalo are showing in larger numbers all over the country and wildebeest are also becoming more numerous. Ostriches have increased considerably in the southern parts of the Protectorate. The rhinoceros is decreasing fast, as is inevitable with so slow a breeder. Regarding elephants, the herds of cows and young appear to be holding their own, but the larger bulls are

G. F. Covey, professional to the Hon. Neville Lytton, the present amateur champion, has won the Tennis Championship of the World. He beat "Punch" Fairs by 7 sets to 3, 54 games to 42. Four sets were decided on the 29th April, Covey winning 2 of these at 6—4, 6—5, 5—6, 3—6. On the 1st instant four more sets were played, Covey winning them all 6—3, 6—4, 6—2, 6—5. The match being the best of 13 sets Covey was left to capture one more set of the remaining 5 to take the Championship. Fairs won the 9th set at 6-4, but was beaten in the 10th 1—6, and thus lost the title. "Punch" Fairs won the Championship from Peter Latham in 1905 and retained it in 1906. In 1907 Latham got it back, but the following year Fairs annexed it once more and held it till his defeat this year.

It is announced that at the international Horse Show at Olympia next month there will be a parade of representative types of English and Continental breeds of horses. It is proposed to hold a parade at each of the performances, and as no effort is being spared in securing famous as well as representative horses the parade should be instructive as well as entertaining.

A new 15-mile running record has been established. A. E. Wood, formerly a member of the Essex Beagles, and holder of the Southern Cross Country Championship, won a 15-mile race at Celtic Park, New York, on the 6th instant, defeating several other well-known runners, including Alfred Shrubb. His time was 1hour. 18mins. 41secs. The previous best for the distance being 1 hour 20mins. 42secs. by F. Appleby at Stamford Bridge on 21st July 1902.

Georges Carpentier, the famous French boxer, continues on his victorious career. In Paris on the 23rd instant he defeated Willie Lewis, the American welter-weight champion, on points in twenty rounds.

Another new American "White Hope" has been discovered—one Luther McCarty. McCarty met Carl Morris at Springfield, Mass. early this month, and knocked him out in the sixth round with a terrific right punch, after an extremely fast and vigorous bout.

Ad Wolgast, light weight champion of the world, has been matched with Leach Cross, another well-known American boxer, and the fight was to have taken place in Madison Square Gardens, New York, last night.

After his victory over Jim Barry in Sydney Dan (Porky) Flynn was matched with Sam Langford. The fight took place at Melbourne on the 28th instant and lasted fourteen rounds, when it was stopped by the referee in favour of Langford.

Appended are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week :—

The match between Kent and Yorkshire, at Leeds, was drawn, Kent leading on the first innings.

The Australians beat the M.C.C. at Lord by five wickets.

The match between Oxford University and the South Africans at Oxford was drawn, the University leading on the first innings.

The match between Derbyshire and Lancashire at Chesterfield was abandoned, neither side scoring points.

Lancashire beat Leicestershire at Manchester by an innings and 273.

Sussex beat Derbyshire and Brighton by eight wickets.

The Australians beat Oxford University at Oxford by ten wickets.

Warwickshire beat Sussex at Birmingham by six wickets.

Surrey beat Gloucester at the Oval by an innings and 87 runs.

Middlesex beat Sussex at Lord's by an innings and 48.

Yorkshire beat Lancashire at Bradford by ten wickets.

The first of the triangular contests was begun on Monday when Australia met South Africa. The Australians batted first and put together 448, to which Bardsley contributed 121 and Kelleway 114. The South Africans had made 16 for one wicket when stumps were drawn. Continuing on Tuesday they completed their first innings for 265, of which Faulkner made 122 not out. They then followed on and were all out in their second venture for 95. The Australians thus won by an innings and 88 runs. Matthews for Australia did the hat trick in both innings.

It is proposed that there should be an annual Hindu-Presidency match at Poona. It has not been found possible to arrange such a match this year, but as an experiment there is to be a two days' match in the ensuing season between the combined Hindus and an eleven of European players captained by Major Greig.

The Golf Championship of Southern India at Ootacamund was won on the 22nd instant by Major Chalmers for the second year in succession. The runner-up was Mr. Lee, who on the first round in the afternoon stood 2 up, but Chalmers wiped this off and was 3 up at the turn for the second round, eventually winning by 3 up and 2 to play.

At the Simla Lawn Tennis Championships now in progress at Simla the singles were won by Kunwar Maharaj Singh, last year's winner. In the final he defeated Dr. Gray comfortably and thus annexed both the Plomer Challenge Cup and H. E. the Viceroy's Cup. Dr. Gray as runner-up took the Hon'ble Mr. Gillan's Cup. The other tournaments are still being carried through and will not conclude till Monday next. In addition to the Mixed Doubles and Men's Doubles the following special matches have been arranged :—Indian Civil Service vs. Military, which will be three matches Men's Doubles and will be played off after the Mixed Doubles Finals on Friday, 31st May; Simla vs. Outstations, which will be three matches Mixed Doubles which will be played off after the finals of the Men's Doubles on Monday, 3rd June.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 10th May 1912.

The Academy opened its doors to the hoi polloi on Monday and the unanimous verdict of the vulgar herd is "a gloomy show," unrelieved by any thing that will be remembered twelve months hence. But aren't we getting rather used to dreary Academies; is it not a fact that we expect to find and do find a dull and undistinguished collection which we inspect just because it is considered the right sort of thing to do?

There are 816 oil paintings in this year's show supposed to mark the highest standard of modern British art, and out of these 816 there are, perhaps, fifty that really matter.

The 1912 Exhibition will stand out as one of the most depressing exhibitions that ever drew our shillings. There is not one picture that uplifts or exalts; an air of dull respectability broods over the galleries.

The depression seems to communicate itself to the visitors. The rooms are crowded with people with familiar faces walking to and fro with an air of heavy boredom. Few spend more than an hour in the place, for all that is worth seeing can be comfortably seen in that time.

The Prince of Wales' Investiture picture is very disturbing. The figures are in brilliant scarlet robes, they stand as if they are cut out of cardboard on a brilliant green daïs, and the sky is a poster blue. It makes you blink.

There are certain R.A's. who never disappoint those who come up expecting to find something startlingly original. They continue, year after year, in the same old groove, painting their sea-scapes or their classical pictures with apparently the golden rule in mind that they will reproduce well in colours for the Christmas and summer numbers.

It is, therefore, to the credit of Mr. James Sant that he shows a picture which reflects the modern spirit of progress. It is called "Past and Present." A youth and an old man are walking across a field. The youth is pointing upwards, and, high in the sky, almost merging with the clouds, the faint form of a monoplane is seen.

A picture which has the distinction of not being hung on the line, is Miss Lucy Kemp-Welch's vigorous picture of a team of frightened horses in a field. It is called "The Passing Train," and you see the track curving away in the distance and the steam of the express that has swept by leaving the horses straining at the plough in fear.

Out of the rut of mediocrity certain pictures capture the eye. There are Mr. J. S. Sargent's three paintings, all of them studies of the effect of sun and shadow on white. "Breakfast on the Loggia" is brilliant with the sun streaming through the archways of a white Italian balcony.

"The Shower" is characteristic of Mr. Charles Sims, all nymphs and cupids and apple blossom, with the spirit of an April day. "The Picnic," by Mr. George Henry, is another of the best in the Academy, with its suggestion of cool shade under the trees and the sunlight glinting across the picture.

The picture that is one of the most striking in the Academy is Mr. William Strang's "Bank Holiday." It shows a young man and woman in their best clothes sitting at a table in the open air, with the waiter hovering by for an order from the wine list which the young man is studying.

There are perhaps a score or so more that might be mentioned, but for the rest they remain on the walls mute witnesses to their own inadequacy, neither great nor little, but just undistinguished.

The Whitney has had such a full measure of the slings and arrows of outrageous Fortune that one would have readily welcomed the prospect of better things in store. But it must be frankly confessed that "The Jew of Prague," by Alfred Wilson-Barrett, produced last night, is hardly a likely medium for a revival of good times. Described as a romantic drama, it is full-bodied melodrama of the type so successfully exploited by the Melville brothers. But the trouble is that it has not the saving grace of well-knit interest or of grip. Often discursive, the thread of things is occasionally blurred over, and there is a lack of cohesiveness, taking the four acts and seven scenes as a whole. But it must not be inferred that the play has not many good moments; it has several, and the very most of them was made by a uniformly excellent cast. Indeed, Mr. Wilson-Barrett is greatly indebted to his interpreters, chief among whom must be mentioned Mr. Ben Webster. He was very ably seconded by Mr. Oscar Adye, a rascally humorous lawyer, Mr. Edward O'Neill, Mr. Arthur Phillips, and others in a long cast. Miss Viva Birkett was a restrained and sympathetic heroine. The play is very admirably produced, the carnival scenes being in exquisite taste, with prettily conceived colour scheme.

It would have been a disgrace to artistic London, and not only to artistic, but to playgoing London, if Mr. Macdonald Hastings' remarkable play "The New Sin" had been shelved and forgotten, after the dozen or so matinée performances given at the Royalty Theatre, London.

Fortunately Messrs. Vedrenne and Eadie have been able to lease the Criterion, where "The New Sin" was presented last Monday night, and where it should enjoy a long life if genuine merit be any criterion of popular success. "The New Sin" is a little masterpiece—witty, intensely dramatic, packed with ideas attractively presented, and fearlessly outspoken, with one of the most grimly ironic climaxes ever put to any play.

Yet this is not to say that the play is beyond criticism. One might seriously question, for instance, whether, in the circumstances, the criminally eccentric will of the millionnire draper could not have been upset, and Hilary Cutts saved from expiating what he called "the new sin" of living to the pauperisation of his brothers and sisters by taking on himself another's crime.

Good plays dealing with real people and vital subjects not only provide opportunities for good acting, but make good actors seem almost great. "The New Sin" is a typical case. It is perfectly acted by Messrs. C. M. Hallard, Malcolm Cherry, Guy Rathbone, A. G. Poulton, H. Lane Bayliff, Arthur Bowyer, and O. P. Heggie. To mention any one without the others would be unfair; but perhaps the greatest compliment one can pay to "The New Sin" is simply this: it is so engrossing that it does not strike one until it is all over that there is not a single woman in the cast.

"The Five Frankforters" at the Lyric are five wealthy bankers, the four sons of Frau Naomi, Michael, Joseph, Samuel, and Ernest, and her grandson, the handsome David. They come together from the chief capital cities in Europe, at Samuel's bidding, solemnly to hear the great tidings which Samuel has for them. They meet in the family house in Jews' Alley, where Frau Naomi still lives with her faithful servant, Rose. She is a dear, distinguished, old lady, who is proud of her sons, but not in the least in awe of their tremendous prosperity, which strongly resembles that of an historic family. She is not much impressed by Samuel's great news, which is that they have all been created barons, and she herself a baroness, by the Emperor of Austria; and she actively resents the little plan he announces of taking over the debts of the reigning Duke of Taunus, and marrying him to his daughter, Rachel. David, too, has his own reasons for objecting to the scheme. His reasons grow stronger as the hours pass. He has not seen his cousin since she was a baby. And now that he does, to see her is, for him at any rate, instantly to love her. Brother Samuel, however, is not easily daunted. He proceeds with his plan, gains the young Duke's acquiescence when the brothers visit the castle, and hands his daughter to the Duke when he returns the visit. But the wilful girl refuses courteously and point-blank, and tells her father she has decided to marry David. "It is the custom of the family for children to obey their parents," he angrily exclaims; and his mother speaks out: "Then, son, obey your mother.' Which he does with as good a grace as possible, and Jews' Alley is turned to Lovers' Lane, as Frau Naomi prettily puts it.

The story is one of the slightest that has ever taken three acts to tell: but it is quite prettily amusing, and the dexterous mingling of lucre and love was last night enormously appreciated. Bankers are having their day now; certainly these five inspire more confidence than young Mr. Jelf, though their manner of conducting business is to say the least of it. picturesque; as picturesque, in fact, as the delightful clothes which the fashion of 1822 allowed them to wear. The setting, too, was most picturesque. First you see the prim room of Frau Naomi, and then the castle grounds of the reigning Duke, with the noblest, highest hedges of box or privet we have ever been privileged to see. The contrast was capital, and brought out the extreme unsuitability of the match. We never believed in that match. Who could, indeed, when Mr. Henry Ainley was playing David, called Little David by the faithful Rose and his Grannie? Mr. Ainley is too convincing as Prince Charming to leave room for any doubt.

Captain Basil Hood has a magnificent cast to support him in his adaptation of Carl Rossler's play. Mr. Louis Calvert was immense in the rich humors of the part of homely genial Brother Michael. Mr. C. M. Lowne, Mr. C. W. Somerset, Mr. Clarence Blakiston, Miss Carlotta Addison, Mr. Dawson Milward and Mr. Rudge Harding all played parts which such skilled players had no difficulty whatever in playing just as well as they could be played. Mr. Leon Quartermaine, too, played the rejected Duke with great neatness, and spoke all the pretty speeches with delightful freshness. The best part in the play, however, was that of Frau Naomi, and Miss Henrietta Watson played it quite beautifully. She made the old lady sweet and strong, and gave her a touch of rare distinction, which was uncommonly pleasant to feel.

Earl's Court is no longer Earl's Court. It is Shakespeare's England. The transformation is complete, from the outside gables and ships' masts can be seen. Inside all is change and improvement. There are copies of Elizabethan houses and beautiful old buildings, churches that stood in Shakespeare's day, and copies of Ledbury Hall and Exeter Town Hall, Dixter Hall, and Ann Hathaway's Cottage, and a long row of houses copied from the Elizabethan.

This gathering of the best of the period, making up Shakespeare's England, has an "Atmosphere" as genuine and as venerable as that of Bruges or Ghent. Electric lights are carefully concealed in old-fashioned lanterns; pathways are paved so as to be conformably (if not comfortably) Tudor; and it is only the very curious who discover that all is not old that looks old.

In the midst of it all the Globe Theatre has been built

The Globe is as round as can be expected for an Elizabethan building, and it has an open space where the roof ought to be, an open stage, and a nicely sanded pit. There has been long and careful research to get the "real thing" at the Globe. The sanded floor of the pit is a survival, so the Shakespeare experts say, of the old bear pit. And the frequenter of the pit will be accommodated for a small sum with a three-legged stool and an Elizabethan pipe.

The L.C.C. authorities are responsible for "exit" notices, and also for the electric torches with which the theatre is lighted.

Shakespeare is produced as he was written, and the scenery is of a primitive kind. It is quite clear that the Globe is going to be something of novelty to modern England.

Among the other artistic triumphs is a reproduction of Sir Francis Drake's famous warship, the Revenge, riding amidst a very nautical setting of Plymouth Harbour.

The extraordinary difficulty now being experienced in finding good Army horses should help to emphasise the wasteful and yet inadequate expenditure in which the Government is about to indulge.

Some 80,000 Territorials who will presently begin their fortnightly training for the year are without a horse to their equipment. They are going to be supplied by hiring horses at a cost of some £150,000, for which there will be nothing whatever to show when the training is over.

Some of these horses are hired and re-hired and hired again, so that Government may pay in hiring fees within the year more than the total value of the horse. By this ludicrous arrangement the minimum of horses is trained. The men get no chance of learning the ways of a horse or the art of horsemanship except during the fortnight, and troops are left without a horse at their disposal. Even in the annals of the British Army was never a more wasteful and inefficient system. The facts that Italy has half-denuded Ireland of horses—1,500 were sent away recently in one consignment—and that the reserve of omnibus horses has disappeared make the system the more dangerous.

It has recently been demonstrated by those concerned with the Master of Hounds Military Horse Breeding System that £150,000 could be effectively used to ensure a supply of horses in each locality and finally to establish a real equipment. The Board of Agriculture and War Office officials have approved the gist of the system, but the other absurd method is still preferred, because no one will take the trouble to substitute a permanent for a temporary and temporising plan, and so the expensive muddle remains.

It is probable that many an old horse, worth some £15, will earn this summer, in passing from one camp to another, a whole succession of five-pound fees. At the end the horses used by Territorials will be added together as if no item had been repeated, and someone will get up in Parliament to demonstrate how large the supply of horses is.

Scavengers.

A couple of days later I was taking it easy after a long morning spent in unsuccessful attempts to get a shot at a lesser kudu when news came in, about 3 P.M., that a leopard had just killed a goat about three miles away. I hurried off to the spot and found that a shelter of branches had been constructed for me against the side of a rock and the kill disposed twenty yards below on the hillside. The chances were that the leopard would return before dark if he came at all. I was well concealed and the arrangements were all very nice, but I did not like the "kill" having been moved, as had been done, some forty yards from where the leopard had left it. The skin also had been removed by the owner of the goat before my men arrived on the scene. These may or may not have been the reasons why, but the leopard failed to put in an appearance. However I spent an interesting afternoon watching the scavengers who soon found out the "kill." First, of course, came the crows—a kind like a small raven but with a dark brown head. Then vultures of no less than six different species, the two who ruled the roost being a big bird with a smooth brown neck and a whitish ruff, and a great turkey-buzzard like the West Indian "John Crow:" then there was a bright tawny vulture with black points as big as the other two but with less force of character, besides three smaller kinds. A kite, darker and heavier than the Indian pariah kite, managed to collar a tit-bit and clear off with it, but was at once charged by a small light-coloured eagle—you should have heard the whack as they met in mid-air; the kite was knocked endways, but clung manfully to his prize, and, recovering himself, dodged a second swoop and got clear away. As sunset approached the vultures disappeared and only a couple of crows remained. Then a mongoose appeared round a corner and went for one of the crows who beat a retreat, but immediately returned to the attack and regained possession. This happened half a dozen times, the crow evidently having as wholesome a respect for the mongoose's sharp teeth as the latter had for his powerful bill. The mongoose was a handsome fellow, greyer and darker than the common Indian species, with a black tip to his tail and a black nose instead of a pink one.

My First Kudu.

I spent most of the four days I stayed at M——trying for kudu—lesser kudu in the Sanseveira jungle which they love at the foot of the hills, greater kudu on the hills themselves. I shall have more to say about the former later on; at this time I did not get a shot at all, good heads were scarce and very wild owing to the hunting of Midgans (a low-caste Somali tribe). With greater kudu I was more fortunate. No signs of any having been reported from the nearer hills, I started out with the three shikaris at about 6 A.M. one morning to investigate a big hill beyond. After an hour's ride and an hour and a half's steady climb we got over the top of the big hill on to a sort of hilly plateau at an elevation of something over 5,000 feet. The climb had been steep enough and hard work but not difficult. Elmi, my head shikari, pointed out a depression between two hills as the most likely place to hold kudu if there were any about; so we started operations by a sort of beat here, which proved blank. There were two recently arrived Somali karias close by, a fact which did not promise well for the proximity of kudu. It was now after 11 o'clock, so I sat down to wait for the tiffin-basket, then breakfast and a rest, while two shikaris went over to another hill to prospect. They came back about 1-30 P.M. to say they had found nothing but stale tracks, so we started off in the one remaining direction that seemed of any use. We had only gone half a mile when we met a shepherd who said he had seen a big kudu bull only a few minutes before. This was much more cheering and we were soon on his tracks, but the ground was hard and stony and we could not keep them for more than a short distance at a time. For an hour or more we searched for him, until at last Kabarah, my second shikari, spotted him not 100 yards away. He was off again at once, making back towards the old feeding grounds that we had tried in the morning. Here the going was a little better and the shikaris managed to keep on his tracks, and for the next two hours stuck to his trail grandly, for the tracking was frequently very difficult, and though we must often have been very close to him he was an old hand and would not stop. At last we were afraid it was no good, it was 5 30 P.M. and the sun would set in less than half an hour, when as we came round a corner on the side of a hill Elmi grabbed my arm and pointed —there about eighty yards down the hillside I saw the head and shoulders of the great antelope as he stood for a moment among some bushes, horns thrown back, looking up at us. It did not take five seconds to throw up the Mannlicher, aim behind the shoulder and fire. Away he crashed down the hill out of sight, but I knew I had him, and sure enough forty yards farther on we found him lying at his last gasp: a grand beast as big as a large sambar stag, with a short mane and bearded throat and a really good head. The little split bullet had found his heart. It was a great finish to a hard day's work. During the four hours we had been on this trail I had not had a glimpse of him the whole time and but for the excellent tracking of my men should never have got him. We were three hours' journey from camp, so left Kabarah to take off the head and skin and keep them in an adjacent "karia" until the morning, while Elmi and I started to find our way down to our steeds. I was unquestionably fortunate in obtaining a big kudu at the first attempt: the horn measured just 50 inches on the curve and had a fine wide spread. It was my one regret that it had been too dark to photograph him as he lay. Standing 14 to 15 hands at the shoulder, his magnificent spiral horns set on a graceful frame, the greater kudu is king among the antelopes: none of the other great African species, whether Eland or Sable, Gemsbok or Waterbuck is quite his peer.

In the Haud.

Having attained the principal object of my stay at M——I pushed on south towards the Haud—a great waterless plateau where I hoped to meet with lion. It took me four days to reach the great open plain of Toyo, marching through country which varied from comparatively bare stony ground to open bush country and thick "khansa"* jungle. There was not much game to be seen; an occasional plateau "dhero" (Speke's gazelle). subsequently a few gerenuk and oryx, of the two first of which I obtained specimens, and once tracks of lesser kudu. But I had one piece of luck or bad luck in shooting a three-quarters grown chita. We came across a mother and cub unexpectedly one afternoon but I only saw the latter and did not know there were two. Moreover at the first glimpse I took it for a leopard, it was a hundred yards away and only partly visible, while with his longer limbs it stood as high as a full-grown leopard. It was only after firing that I saw the bigger one making off and recognised my mistake, in which Elmi had shared. There is little real likeness between the two species: the small round head; the longer limbs; the "tucked up" appearance of the hind quarters, built for speed; the only partially retractile claws; and absence of a rosette pattern in the arrangement of its spots; all these distinguish the chita from his bolder and fiercer cousin.

At the edge of the Haud—a vast waterless plateau covered in the main with short grass, patches of high "durr" grass and thorn-bushes, often fairly open but sometimes thick and "jungly" that I first began seriously to think about lions. The "Karias" which had been pasturing in this part of the Haud had all gone or were just going north for water, but we heard from the last of these that there were certainly lions in the neighbourhood. The method which Elmi adopted was to send out at daylight eight men in couples in four different directions to search for the fresh tracks of any lions that might have been in the neighbourhood during the night. I had to remain in camp in the mornings ready to start out if news came in from any of the trackers. These were usually back in camp about 11 or 12 o'clock. If they had had no luck I used to go out in the afternoon after antelope. Then at night a donkey was tied up outside a loophole in case of a nocturnal visit. And as such a visit was to be desired it became advisable to send out an invitation to any lion there might be within reasonable distance. One reads in books of African travel of fires being lighted at night to keep off wild beasts. We went on a different principle; and used to light at sunset a bonfire to attract the lions. The lion seeing the smoke or scenting the fire in the distance pricks up his ears and thinks to himself "That means menfolk and an encampment, which signifies animals, camels, sheep, etc. Which again means meat! Nearly a week since I have had a decent dinner, that is obviously the place for me!" Anyway that is how he ought to reason if he does not—to your stay-at-home naturalist I suppose it is heresy to use the word "reason" in connection with a "dumb beast"! To supplement the effect of the bonfire, Elmi would go out at dusk and lift up his voice: "Lion! Oh Lion! Great Lion! where art thou? the feast is spread for thy Greatness!"

For three or four days there was no khubber except of stale tracks, nor any sign of the expected visitor. Then one morning they told me that a lion had been heard roaring to the eastward at about 2 A.M., so we started off to try and pick up his trail. By 8-30 A.M. we had failed to find it and Elmi was not hopeful when suddenly we sighted a small party of "Dibatag" (Clarke's gazelle). Now the dibatag is an antelope that is found only in the Haud and has not been shot by many people, therefore decidedly a prize. It has, moreover, the reputation of being shy and difficult to shoot. So I declined to let the chance go as the buck was standing broadside on looking at me. Not an easy shot as he was 200 yards away and owing to the long grass I had to take the shot standing. He gave a bound into the air as I heard the bullet tell, and disappeared. I had dropped my foresight a trifle and had him low, so we had to follow him up and might have been a long time before bringing him to bay, as an antelope wounded in the stomach will travel far if not pressed to full speed, but for some unexpected assistance. This was afforded by a jackal whose quick nose had detected the bloods taint as the wounded buck passed the grass where he lay, and who took up the chase in front of us! He soon became aware of us and retired but he had forced the dibatag to a sprint by which it was quickly exhausted, and I soon had an oppportunity of bringing it down. I hope to describe the dibatag later, enough for the present that this was a good head and I was very pleased.

While this buck was being skinned a messenger turned up with news of fresh lion tracks on the far side of camp. We at once made our way back, had a hurried breakfast and started out again.

It was then 11-30 A.M. and it took us an hour to get on to the trail. There were a pair, lion and lioness, but after a time they separated and we followed the male. It was exciting enough as the bush was decidedly thick in places. We progressed at the average rate of about 2½ miles an hour which on that ground was good tracking, and at about 3 o'clock Elmi caught a glimpse of him on the move and the next moment I saw him trot across an open space a hundred yards ahead. He looked a big fellow, with a fine dark mane, but I had no chance of a shot and we never got a sight of him again. He had had his morning's sleep and it was not hot, so he saw no reason to wait for us, and it was not open enough to try and ride him down. We followed him until nearly dark and then had to give up. It was bad luck that what was probably a different lion's roar in the night had taken me out in the morning and made me so late in getting on his trail: if we could have come up with him before he had had his sleep out and while the sun was high we should probably have had him. However it was something to have seen the King of Beasts in his native jungle and I still hoped for a closer acquaintance.

Fishing.

A FISH YARN FROM MICHIGAN.

Although there are scores of court attachés in the Municipal Building in Detroit, Judge Phelan and Police Justice Stein, the latter more popularly known as Chris Stein, are the only fishermen. Clerk John Gorgan, of the Recorder's Court, was once an applicant for membership in this club, but he was blackballed when the members learned John formerly believed that a ship's log was used to catch fish. John did not tell of this failing when he put in his application. He volunteered to tell a whopper of a fish story, but certain of the members refused his proffered narrative. They insisted that his tale probably would be a "phony" one. And all such are barred.

"Dj'yuh ever hear of a fish that didn't feed itself?" began Chris. "Now, listen, this isn't a comic section," he continued, with an injured expression. "I hear enough wild yarns every day without mixing with them myself. I'm not trying to hand you anything. I just merely asked if you ever heard of a fish that didn't feed itself."

"No, we never did; and furthermore, you will have to tell that sort of thing in a most convincing manner if you hope to be believed," inserted Bob Palmer, captain of detectives.

"Never fear," assured Chris. "Once upon a time—"

"Now, that's not the proper way to start out a fish story; that's the way they begin fairy tales," objected Judge Phelan.

"I stand corrected," meekly replied Chris. "But don't interrupt me. The experience occurred years ago, when Delray was a village and River Rouge a swale. We used to live in Springwells, in the western part of the city and near my father's home was an immense millpond.

"With my boy friends I often went there fishing, but the only thing we ever caught was a cold. However, there was a legend (I guess that's what you call it) connected with the pond, to the effect that an immense sturgeon lived there. The story ran that the sturgeon came into the pond through an underground stream, and then couldn't find its way out. While that may be, it was always the purpose of the gang to catch a glimpse of the mysterious fish.

"One day I was paddling a raft across the pond, when I saw a commotion in front of me, and the homely snout of an immense fish parted the waters. I was amazed; I was frightened. And I was just going to swim for it, when the fish opened its mouth and a swarm of bees emerged therefrom. The bees circled about the head of the fish for a moment, then set off for shore. And the next second the fish slipped under the water. I couldn't believe my eyes, so I determined to stay on that raft until something else happened.

"I lingered there until the late afternoon, when a murmur attracted my attention. A swarm of bees was going over my head, and, paddling feverishly, I set after it. I didn't have far to go, for again the snout of the sturgeon parted the waters, and as the immense fish opened its mouth the bees slowly settled into it.

"Three months afterwards my father caught the sturgeon in a net, and on opening it he found twenty-four pounds of honey inside. That fish had lived while the bees worked."—American Field.

Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up
No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; W. Wilson, Rawal Pindi and Murree; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

Racegoers retired on Thursday night in a more satisfied state, as it had commenced to rain, and visions of a refreshed country, clean roads, and a velvet carpet on the Heath raised bright hopes for the One Thousand on Friday. The shower, however, was only transitory, and the morning's sun soon drank up the surface moisture. The attendance was proportionately on a par with the Two Thousand Guineas day, and though backers had a facer in the big race, and by no means the best of the deal in the others, they had a good day's sport for their money. Results :—

ALEXANDRA PARK.

The long-threatened rain that spared the parched heath of Newmarket was reserved for that essentially holiday meeting, Alexandra Park. We English people are credited with taking our pleasures sadly, but the accusation was refuted by the general good humour that prevailed under raining skies on Saturday, which reduced race cards almost to a pulp and drove everybody to shelter.

Always a popular meeting, the May fixture put a premium on greatcoats and umbrellas, but did not daunt the ardour of the characteristic London sportsmen, who, by road and rail, came down in force. The course, despite its sprinkling, was still hard, but fields assumed most satisfactory proportions, and generally public opinion was vindicated in the results, as with the exception of the first race, all the events were secured by well-fancied animals. CHESTER.

Chester is such a comfortable meeting all round, with convenient accommodation in close proximity to the course, and a splendid view of the track, that it is a pity the fixture comes only once a year. However, the executive with such powerful patronage as is accorded by the Duke of Westminster, backed by a coterie of sporting patrons, could fearlessly launch out into an expenditure in improvement which has brought its return. As a racing course the Roodee compares unfavourably with such stretches as Newmarket and a Newbury; but with the details of each race brought within ken without the use of glasses no more appropriate meeting could charm a holiday crowd. For the first time for two years the rain had come to the rescue sufficiently to refresh the course, but we could have done with a heavier downpour. Results:—

CESTRIAN SELLING WELTER HANDICAP—Of 200sovs. 5 furlongs.

The countryside, which takes as much interest in the Cup as Yorkshire does in the St. Leger, was so strongly represented on Wednesday that the city, within gates and outside, was early crammed by a good-natered crowd, that filled the roadways and pavements. On Tuesday the crowd was almost a record; on Wednesday there could be little doubt about the patronage accorded the Cup, the walls and round embattlements simply swarming with people, while the county stand presented a charming picture filled as it was by the rank, wealth, beauty, and fashion of the county, strengthened by visitors from afar, and including many prominent patrons of the National sport. The green space of the Roodee was taken up by one of the largest assemblages its rails have ever enclosed, and it was evident that the Cup still retains its power to charm. We had a little rain in the morning, just enough to lay the dust and keep the Roodee green, but the going was again on the hard side. Results.—

AUSTRALIANS v. NOTTS.—The Australians came a bad cropper in their opening match, losing to Notts by 6 wickets. This does not seem very good form in face of the heavy defeat sustained by the Midlanders at the hands of the M.C.C. last week. Score:—

ENGLAND vs. THE REST.—England won the trial match at the Oval easily enough by an innings and 13 runs, but the third day's play scarcely showed the winners to especial advantage. At a time when a very early finish looked probable Humphreys and Sharp made the bowling opposed to them look rather ordinary in quality; and, had their example been followed by the men who immediately succeeded them, the chances are that the weaker side might just have saved the match. Confidence and determination were noticeable while these two men were at the wickets, but subsequently less definite tactics were favoured without success. Of the six bowlers tried Barnes was easily the best, though W. Brearley at times did well. F. R. Foster was not in his usual form. Score :—

ROWING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—After a spell of more than a month's continuous fine weather the much-needed rain has made its appearance. Most of the crews have been in practice a fortnight and last Saturday afternoon several were indulged with a day's rest preparatory to going into strict training. The races have been fixed to commence on 23rd May.

New College promise to have a very hot combination, although during the last few days they have been without the services of the, Varsity seven, C. W. B Littlejohn. If the latter comes into the boat again they will have four old Blues with the ex-president, R. C. Bourne, A. F. Wiggins, and F. A. Pitman and their trial eightsmen in Sir W. Parker, B. Burdekin, and J A. Fison, as well as R. P. Hankinson, who rowed third last year. T. C. Gillespie has been doing duty at two during the absence of Littlejohn, whose seat at seven has been filled by Fison.

Magdalen has only three of last year's crew in residence—viz., E. R. Burgess, the reserve man, the President, L. G. Wormald, and C. L. Baillieu. E. D. Horsefall, who got his Blue last term, is, however, a valuable acquisition at the stroke thwart, and the vacancies are filled by A. C. Hobson, M. K Johnson, A. T. A. Ritchie, and G. H. Leigh. They are now in charge of J. L. Johnston. C. E. Tinne has been coaching University, who have three other members of last year's eight available—viz., J. Cory Wright, A. L. S. Cope, and W. A. Donald. Christchurch had H. E. L. Southwell as mentor during the early part of the week, but he has now handed them over to J. D Pidgeon. N. M Bruce, the bow of the losing trial, is stroking them, with the captain, J. J. Leaibetter at seven, the only other member of last year's crew being A. F. B. Broadhurst.

P. C. Underhill, the Old Blue, has been coaching Brasenose, who, however, will now be taken in hand by Dr. A. P. Parker, the old Magdalen Blue. The ex-President, R. C. Bourne, is coaching Trinity. Balliol are being advised by F. A. Pitman, New College. Mr. Walker, of Radley, has been coaching Wadham, but the latter will be taken on by the Rev. E. Sherwood at the commencement of the week, and the former will devote his energies to the development of Pembroke, who are quite a promising combination. Radley is also providing coaches for Queen's and Corpus, the Rev. A. P. Titherington being in charge of the former, whilst A. H. Hales is looking after the interests of his old college. Sir W. Parker, New College, is advising Lincoln. C. L. Baillieu is coaching Keble. Oriel are being looked after by another Magdalen oarsman, E. R Burgess; and E. D. Horsfall is advising Merton.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—For the Magdalen pairs, commencing on Thursday, six couples, a larger number than expected, are likely to compete. The brothers S. E. and A. A. Swann row their craft in taking style, while R. W. M. Arbuthnot and T. H. Naylor should do well. The First Trinity pair, D. C. Collins and C. F. Burnand, row too heavy and their boat fails to run well. Two Pembroke pairs are going—A. P. Dickinson and C. C. Cooke, and the Bagger pair, J. G. Madden and G. C. Barton; while R. S. Shove is partnering J. H. Goldsmith.

The Summer eights are gradually settling down and the majority of Blues are now rowing. Burnand and Shove are rowing five and six respectively. In the head boat, First Trinity, D. C. Collins, is absent from the stroke seat owing to a slight strain. Heyland, the Blue, is rowing seven in the Pembroke eight, and Goldsmith has re-appeared in the Jesus boat. In the Third Trinity crew the president, Le Blanc Smith, is rowing six, and Lloyd, the Blue, seven, with Captain J. H. Gibbon, the, 'Varsity coach, at stroke.

GOLF.

THE ARMY MEETING.—The Army golf meeting was brought to a conclusion on the links of the Royal Liverpool Club at Hoylake on the 5th instant, when the second half of the final round (over 36 holes) for the Inter-Regimental Challenge Cup was decided between the Black Watch and the 24th Brigade Royal Field Artillery. As a result of the first half of the match on the previous day, the Black Watch obtained a lead of 10 holes to 6. They ultimately proved successful by 21 holes to 1.

The feature of yesterday's play was the magnificent form of Captain Skene (Black Watch) against Captain Boyd. The latter started with a lead of 6 up on the first half of the contest. His putting, which had been his strong point, was very weak yesterday, and Captain Skene, playing brilliant golf, won the 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 8th holes. The match was square at this point. Captain Skene also won the 9th, and was one up at the turn. His score up to this point was 37, and his opponent's 46. Captain Skene became 2 up at the 10th, but weak putting brought him back to "all square" at the 13th. Captain Boyd was dormy at the 16th. He lost the next hole, but a half at the 18th gave him the victory in a most exciting match by 1 hole. Captain Skene went round in 78 strokes, while Captain Boyd took 85. The Black Watch have now won the Inter-Regimental Cup five times. The results were :—

BLACK WATCH.	Holes.	24TH BRIGADE, R.F.A.	Holes.
Captain Skene	0	Captain Boyd	1
Captain Green	3	Lieutenant Maxwell	0
Captain Grant-Suttie	6	Lieutenant Studd	0

TENNIS.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—At Prince's Club, Knightsbridge, on Saturday, the match between C. "Punch" Fairs (holder) and G. F. Covey (challenger) for the world's tennis championship and a stake of £250 a side, ended in the challenger winning by 7 sets to 3.

The match was the best of 13 sets, and Covey when the final day's play was entered upon led by 6 sets to 2. He thus only had to win one more set to secure the rubber.

On Saturday Fairs showed the better form at the start, and won the first set at 6—4 after leading by 5—2. He also took the first game in the second set. Fairs met with no further success, however, Covey, who played admirably on the floor and showed wonderful skill in scoring through winning openings, securing the next six games straight away.

The full scores in favour of Covey were : 6—4, 6—5, 5—6, 3—6, 6—3, 6—4, 6—2, 6—5, 4—6, 6—1 The challenger won 54 games to his opponent's 42.

THE MOST POWERFUL REPEATER MADE.

In the confidence that comes from knowing that one is equipped to meet the largest or most dangerous prowler of the jungle is often found success. The .405 Winchester is the most powerful repeating rifle made. Its 300-grain, soft-point bullet has sufficient shocking power to stop any game alive. Note the tremendous velocity and energy shown by the following figures: velocity, 2204 foot seconds; energy, 3236 foot pounds. The rifle holds five cartridges, which can be fired in rapid succession, each shot delivering a ton and a half of energy. Simple of operation, reliable in action and accurate in shooting, it is used by famous big-game hunters in all parts of the world.

THE BERESFORD TOURNAMENT.

THE tournament opened on Thursday last when three games were played in the presence of a large and fashionable gathering. The first game between the Viceroy's Staff "B" and the Commander-in-Chief's Staff was interesting in spite of the large margin by which the C.-in-C.'s team won. The Viceroy's Staff started with +4 on the handicap. Play was mostly in the Viceroy's Staff territory at the start and their opponents scored twice. The Chief's Staff were kept on the defensive throughout the second period and there was no score. In the third the Chief's Staff got away and Henderson scored, then Forrester hit a goal for his side. Both goals were visited in turn without success. The fourth chukker was all in favour of the Chief's Staff who registered no fewer than four goals and led by 7 goals to 5. The fifth period found them attacking once more and three more goals were added. A goal to each team accrued in the last round and the C.-in-C's Staff thus won by 11 goals to 6. Teams :—

Viceroy's Staff "B" Team.			Commander-in-Chief's Staff.
Capt. Muir	...	1	Capt. Henderson	...	1
Hon. A. Weld-Forrester	...	2	Capt. Charrington	...	2
Major the Hon. H. Fraser	...	3	Capt. Stephens	...	3
Capt. Keighley	(back)		Capt. Hogg	(back)

Umpires :—General Cookson and Captain Tod.

The second game between the Remnants and Patiala Gymkhana "B" team was a very poor affair, Patiala winning by 5 goals to 2. The Remnants had +2 on the handicap. Patiala drew level in the first period and scored a goal in the second and another in the third chukker. The fourth and fifth were without score but they put on another point in the last bout and won as stated. Teams :—

Patiala Gymkhana "B" Team.			Remnants.
General Sarup Singh	...	1	Major Lawrence, 14th Hussars	...	1
Sunder Singh	...	2	Mr. Nethersole, 23rd Cavalry		2

Umpires :—Maharaja of Kishengarh and Captain Conway-Gordon.

The third game was between the Ancients and Patiala and though the latter won by 9 goals to 3, the Ancients put up quite a good game. They started with +3 goals. After a long spell of defence the Ancients got away and nearly scored. The effort was fruitless and the chukker ended pointless. In the second period Patiala hit a goal. They followed this up with a second goal in the third period. Up and down play ended in the Ancients attacking once more but they could not score and Patiala rushing down had equalised before half time. The fourth chukker brought them two more goals—one from a free hit—and pressing for the rest of the game they put on 4 more goals and thus won as stated by 9 goals to 3. Teams :—

"Ancients."			Patiala.
Major Battine, 21st Cavalry		1	Capt. Balvant Singh	...	1
Major Souter, 14th Lancers		2	Major Jagindar Singh	...	2
Major Molyneux, 12th Cavalry	...	3	Capt. Makar Singh	...	3
Major Talbot, 37th Lancers	(back)		Col. Chanda Singh	(back).

Umpires :—General Cookson and Major Wickham.

Three games in the second round were played off on Monday before another large assembly of spectators. The weather was sultry and the dust interfered with the play. In the opening game the King's Dragoon Guards met the R. H. M. S. Club. Each team scored four goals, but the Dragoons receiving a goal won by 5 to 4. Captain Worgan played in place of General Rimington in the R. H. M. S. team.

First Chukker.—The K. D. G's attacked but the ball was driven back and Harbord drew first blood. Up and down play till Weinholt equalised. The Dragoons kept up the attack but could not get through. Mowbray's pony fell and broke a leg and had to be destroyed.

Second Chukker.—The Dragoons pressed but without success and the game being transferred Mowbray put through. Midfield play—a foul against the Dragoons closing the period.

Third Chukker.—The penalty was not turned to account and the Dragoons attacked once more, Hatfield putting through. Up and down play till another foul was given against the K. D. G's. The penalty was again unsuccessful.

Fourth Chukker.—The Dragoons got on and Renton scored.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play all over the ground—no score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Dragoons pressed and at length Weinholt scored. Midfield play followed and the King's Dragoons were again penalised for foul. This time Worgan's shot was effective and shortly after this player shot another goal. Every subsequent effort by the R. H. M. S. was fruitless and the final score was 5 to 4 in favour of the King's Dragoons who thus won on their handicap. Teams :—

Mr. Hatfield	...	3	Major Harbord, 30th Lancers		3
Major Wickham	(back).		Capt. Worgan, 20th Deccan Horse	(back).

The second game was between the Viceroy's Staff "A" and Patiala Gymkhana "B" team. The Patiala team had a handicap of +6 and only scored one goal, whereas their opponents displaying splendid combination put on 8 goals.

First Chukker.—The Staff pressed throughout the first chukker and scored twice—Astor and Maxwell being responsible.

Second Chukker.—The Staff continued to attack and Maxwell scored again. Thereafter play was in midfield.

Third Chukker.—The Staff were again on the offensive and Astor and Todd scored a goal each.

Fourth Chukker.—Patiala were aggressive and Sarup Singh registered their only point with a fine shot. Maxwell then got away and took the ball down for Todd to score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Staff rushed down and put the ball through in a scrimmage—this putting them on terms. Patiala were then prominent but were forced back and Astor hit a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The score remained unchanged in this period and the Staff thus won by 8 goals to 7. Teams :—

Viceroy's Staff "A"			Patiala Gymkhana "B"
Capt. Nicholson	...	1	Genl. Sarup Singh	...	1

Umpires :—Maharaja of Kishengarh and General Cookson.

The third game was between Patalia 1st team and the Patiala Gymkhana "A" team and proved a very interesting display. The Patiala 1st team received 2 goals, but it was thought that the Gymkhana would win comfortably. The Maharajah of Kishengarh and Bunni Singh were, however, not playing up to their best form and they were ultimately beaten by 12 goals to 6.

First Chukker.—Fast play all over the ground—both teams showing fine form. Jagindu Singh scored for Patiala and Kishengarh for the Gymkhana.

Second Chukker.—Midfield play till Patiala got on and scored. They continued to press for the rest of the period without success.

Third Chukker.—Patiala attacked and got another goal. Balwant Singh adding yet another shortly after. Then the Gymkhana got away and scored in a melee. Patiala also adding to their score.

Fourth Chukker.—Patiala scored and the Gymkhana also hit a goal. Thereafter Patiala pressed and registered two more goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gymkhana rushed away and the Maharaja of Patiala hit a goal. Desultory play till a long shot gave Patiala another goal. Chanda Singh followed this up by scoring another point and Patiala were pressing at the close of the period.

Sixth Chukker.—Kishengarh scored for the Gymkhana and H. H. of Patiala put on another point. The Gymkhana continued to press throughout the rest of the game but could not score. Final score: Patiala 12 goals, Gymkhana 6 goals. Teams :—

Athletics.

ENGLISH ATHLETES AT THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

IN view of a fairly general impression at Home that English athletes are likely to receive a pretty severe defeat in the fifth Olympic Games at Stockholm, a special correspondent of the Standard discusses the causes of this poor prospect, and lays the blame upon the Amateur Athletic Association.

It is scarcely useful, he writes, to issue a forecast of the probable placings at Stockholm, though, as far as our representatives are concerned, a keen follower of contemporary athletics would not be inaccurate if he said that England (let us leave Scotland, Ireland, and the Colonies out of the discussion) had not only no certainty in any event, but not even a fighting chance in many. What the standard demanded by the Amateur Athletic Association of the aspirants for selection will be has not yet been stated by that body, but in the opinion of those who know anything of foreign performances, it will be a waste of funds to enter representatives in several events. We can confidently say that a weight putter of 40 feet, a high jumper of 6 feet, a standing high jumper of 5 feet, a standing long jumper of 10 feet 6 inches, a pole-jumper of 11 feet—to take a few salient deficiencies—would be a pleasant surprise.

Are English athletes physically inferior to foreigners? is a humiliating, but practically essential, question to answer. A few years ago, when foreigners began to cast longing eyes upon our championships, one might have reversed that question into the form, is there any reason why a foreigner should not be as good as an Englishman? The writer recollects that during the Athenian Olympic games of 1906 he predicted great all-round successes for Sweden in the quite near future, but he hardly expected two years later to see the first four places in the 800 metres in London taken by an American, an Italian, a German, and a Hungarian respectively, though it was no surprise to any moderately far-sighted follower of athletics, when at the A. A. A. championships last year the same German won the half-mile; another German carried off the Harvey Cup for a marvellous display of all-round jumping, which nobody in the world could have surpassed; a Finn won the four miles, and it was thought by many that a Frenchman won the hurdles. Incidentally, an American won the 100 and 220 yards, but we have always tamely submitted to that as if it came from above.

No, our athletes are not physically inferior to any—in point of fact, we have the finest material in the world—nor is there any fear of degeneracy—the average is as high as it has ever been. It is true we have no world-beater at this moment, but such giants are the delight of Nature, who may place them in any country, as those wonderful visitors of ours last year well proved to us, and as we shall certainly see confirmed at Stockholm.

The fact is, the rising tide of world athletes has submerged us. Numbers have told against us. America, with her large resources to draw upon, has realised that the sure way to produce champions is to reach a high average, and to effect that end it is essential to adopt such methods as will ensure an athlete getting the very best out of himself. In England that is called somewhat reproachfully "specialising." It really means that a man finds his forte, adheres to it, and uses his mind to develop it. We do that in England when we put a speedy, longlimbed man into the three-quarter line instead of among the forwards, or a heavy-weight oarsman at five instead of bow. By judicious training, America developed her weak point, long distance running, and the result was that J. T. Jones, holder of the world's amateur record for a mile, was not long in appearing. We may take it as an athletic maxim that a transcending average means a champion sooner or later.

Continental athletes followed America's lead. They studied, specialised, and received coaching. They were unhampered by traditions and hopelessly inadequate methods as we are, and instead of creeping up to us, they have reached and passed us with a rush, as a motor car overtakes a pedestrain.

Now to consider our own position and to lay the blame if blame there be. What have the A. A. A. done for athletics? They have legislated plentifully, it is true; they have defined amateurism strictly; have interpreted their own definition in and out and round about; and every now and again have "deamateurised" some offender. But can it be said that anything has been contributed by them to the improvement of athletes in the last ten years, or that they took practical notice of the lesson foreign athletes administered in the Stadium in 1906? There was more legislation and a quarrel with the N. C. U., and that is all. The task of developing athletics is left to the clubs. There are perhaps five hundred clubs, each playing for its own hand. A club secretary's business is to run a successful meeting. He wants a crowd, and to secure this he advertises and procures a meeting of champions, offering mammoth prizes, and often outraging both the spirit and the letter of amateurism. The kind of event that may accrue to the benefit of national athletics is frequently ignored, with the excuse that "it won't take with the crowd." Until last year a long jumper in London got perhaps three chances of competition in a season, and it is not so long since a discus or javelin throwing or a standing jump contest was about as likely to be seen at a meeting as a clog dance at a funeral.

The A. A. A. must acknowledge that athletics will have to be fostered. It is behind the times, and is not representative of the opinion of the active athletes whom it should ask for views and whose co-operation it should seek. The whole practical system is wrong from head to foot: the meetings, the events, the prizes, and the lack of coaching. It is commerce, but not business. And the athletes themselves must see that they get reform. They are the men who uphold the honour of their country, and who will feel the humiliation of defeat, simply because their methods are hopelessly inadequate; and they are the men who will be taunted with degeneracy by the ignorant or the old-timer whose contemporaries "could beat the world without new-fangled notions and without making a business of it." Athletics are for the athlete, and not for the prosperity of the prize vendor or to give a little brief authority and the chance of hobnobbing with a local magnate to a club official, often more at home in the tent than in the field, and a better judge of whisky than of weight putting. The task of recuperation is big, but can be accomplished if we start at once.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

YEARLY, small and uninteresting competitions are increasing in Calcutta, and this year, although so early in the season, four new League competitions have been inaugurated. For every one of these trophies have been offered, for had there been no prize attached to a tournament, our local junior football clubs—would never enter for such a competition. Last year there were in all—League and knock out—over 70 competitions recorded, and in the greater number of these competitions scratch teams entered, and hardly one among these tournaments was conducted on satisfactory lines. Really, football in Calcutta, in recent years, has not been played for the sake of sport and how can it be played for the love of sport when such a lot of "pot hunting" is allowed. Last year, some of the junior European and Indian teams entered for no less than twenty competitions, and I have known several young men who played in either League or knock-out tournaments every evening of the week, even occasionally on Sundays, from the beginning of May until the first week of October. Three of these were Indians who assisted four different clubs. The strain was so severe, that one out of this number is yet, practically, confined to his bed, being now an absolute wreck. It is to be hoped that the I. F. A. will do something to prevent affiliated clubs from taking part in so many trash competitions.

But now to the week's sport. Owing to heavy rain two League matches had to be abandoned, but as the Middlesex and E. G. A. match was played to a finish, the Rangers and Customs, and Dalhousie and E. I. R. games should also have been played out. The football during the week has not been of a high standard, but the Customs, Rangers and Y.M.C.A. have rendered good accounts of themselves, the Riversiders achieving a good performance by beating Calcutta by three goals to nil, while the Rangers did equally well when they shared points with the Middlesex, and the Y. M. C. A's. victory over Dalhousie on the latter's ground was also a creditable performance. Calcutta, Black Watch, and Dalhousie on the other hand, have not been seen to advantage, the play of the Fort team, against the Rangers, on Monday being very moderate indeed, and on that evening's play Mohun Bagan would have beaten the holders of the Durand cup. Calcutta gave a miserable account of themselves in their match against the Customs and O'Shea's absence was much felt. Dalhousie are sadly in want of a goalkeeper.

In the Second Division of the League, the Black Watch "B" team has showed brilliantly consistent form and on their showing against the E. B. S. R. whom they beat on Monday by five goals to one, the second string of the Black Watch could beat most of the teams engaged in the Senior Division.

In the Middlesex—E. G. A. match played on the Calcutta ground, the first half was well contested, but after ends had been changed, the Dum Dum team, although facing a strong wind and heavy rain, had more of the play, and wound up by scoring twice, Bateman and Walley netting the goals. The game was played in a good sporting spirit. For the last two seasons spectators have enjoyed watching a game between two military teams more than they have done one played by any two civilian teams. This season I have not seen a single soldier adopt any shady tricks, the same remark, unfortunately, I cannot apply to some of the civilian players, especially some of them who are engaged in junior football.

The match between the Rangers and Customs was abandoned after the first half had been concluded, nothing being scored up to half time.

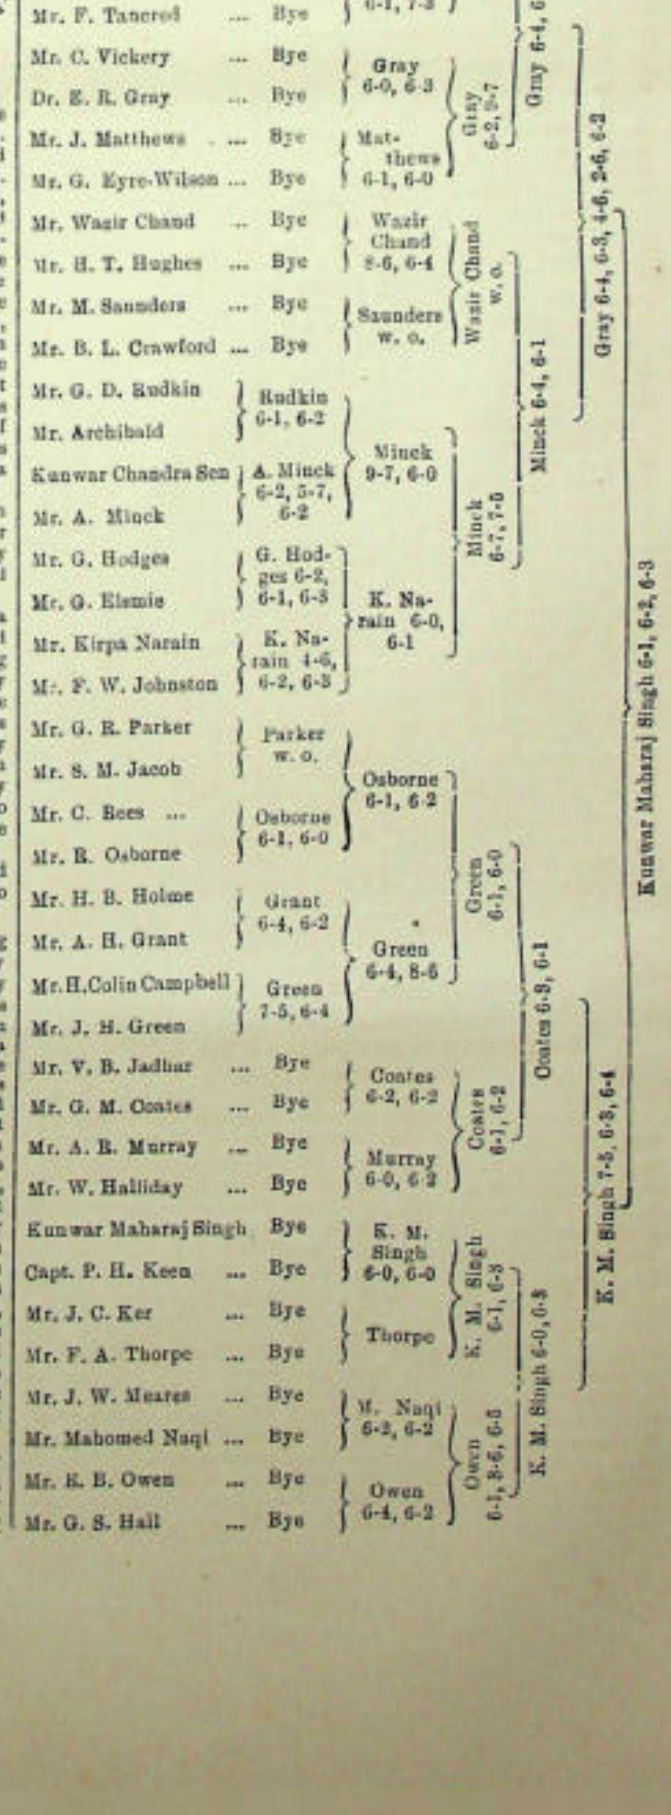
In the Dalhousie and E.I.R. match the Dals were leading by a goal to nothing at half time, and after five minutes' play during the second moiety the game was stopped. The display given by the E. I. R. men has been miserable, and next year it is to be hoped that only eight teams will be allowed to take part in Senior League. Saturday's matches did not produce football of a high order, but as there were two surprises, the results were very pleasing to the supporters of these clubs. The Customs playing at home beat Calcutta by three goals to nil and although the Riversiders invariably beat the "Reds" in the first League encounter and the tables are reversed in the return matches, nobody expected that the Customs would win by this big margin. It is true that Calcutta were not at full strength, O'Shea and Hugh Sherman being the notable absentees, but the absence of two men should be no excuse for the poor display given by Calcutta. The goals that Scott let in were by no means soft and it is doubtful if any goalie could have saved any one out of the three. Joe Anderson's re-appearance for the Customs strengthens the defence, and he, with Hargraves, could not be beaten. The only forward on the Calcutta side who played up to form was Kerr; Chesterton and Jenkins being on this occasion completely off colour. During the initial half Galbraith and Alexander scored, while after the interval Hyland netted the third and last goal, the ball being headed in nicely from the result of a corner.

The Rangers and Middlesex match which ended in a draw of one all produced a hard game, but the Dum Dum team played much below expectations and exhibited nothing like the form they had shown against Calcutta early in the week. The shooting of Smart has lost the Rangers many a goal, but he, like Williamson, is very dangerous on a slushy turf and a heavy ball. On a good ground, and with a light ball, both these players send the leather (nine times out of ten) yards over the bar. Both kick very hard, but they cannot keep the ball low. Bateman scored during the initial half, while Smart after sending the ball, on four occasions, over the net was at last successful in putting through, Pigott having no chance at saving. The Dalhousie and E. G. A. match on Saturday was one of lost opportunities, the shooting of both sets of forward, being of a wild and uncertain character. Both teams obtained several corners, but not one of these proved fruitful. The only goal of the match, that by which Dalhousie won was netted by Wright from a pass by Reynolds, ten minutes before the close.

The Y. M. C. A. beat the E. I. R. the same evening by two goals to nil, the goals being netted by Jahans. This youngster, who is in the Customs, has the making of a fine athlete and next year Jahans will probably play for the Riversiders in the Belghton Tournament.

Although the Black Watch beat the Rangers on the latter's ground on Monday by two goals to nil, the play of the Fort team was much below any of their previous displays. The shooting of their forwards during the initial half left much to be desired, the play of the halves was poor, and Parker, as left full-back, kicked very feebly. Connor, the left winger, was the best forward, but his several beautiful centres went abegging. The Rangers played with lots of dash, but Cody, Taylor, Lawton and Durant were at times inclined to be very rough. The soldiers played a very clean game and had some of the Jocks been vindictive referee Clayton would have had a lively time. The soldiers paid more attention to the ball than to the man, while on the Rangers' side two of their men in particular looked after the man more than the ball. However, there were only a few fouls that called for attention, and on the whole there was nothing of a serious character. The game, although fairly evenly contested, was a poor one, but there is little doubt that the Black Watch were the better team and deserve their two to nil victory. Both sets of forwards lost many fine opportunities of scoring—most of the players or rather the forwards being under the impression they were playing Rugby. Gordon, whose shooting was very erratic during the first half, netted both the goals after ends had been changed.

Calcutta had no difficulty with a scratch side in beating the E. I. R. by three goals to nil and on the amount of pressing the Reds were all six goals better. For the losers only Rose and Derry showed some sort of form. Jenkins 2 and Bisseker scored. The latter played a nice game, as did Kerr.



The Y. M. C. A. beat Dalhousie the same evening by a goal to nil and on the evening's play the Young Men were entitled to their victory. For the winners Manuel in particular played a great game at back.

KING JAMES THE HUNTER.

No king of England has had a greater passion for hunting in all its legitimate forms than King James I. Called as he was the British Solomon by those who wished to flatter him, a more fitting title would have been that of the British Nimrod. In spite of this, his knowledge of things other than those connected with sport was amazing, the more so when we consider the time he gave to venery from his early youth. His counsellors were often seriously inconvenienced by it, and not a little troubled; but if anyone "greatly daring" mentioned the matter delicately to him, James had a good and logical excuse ready which reduced the speaker to silence. "My health," would say the king, "is necessary to the State, the chase is necessary for my health; ergo, it is doing the public a service if I hunt."

"The King is hunting at Newmarket, and the Queen at Greenwich practising for a new masque," wrote John Chamberlain to his friend Sir Dudley Carleton in 1611; in those few words summing up the ruling passions of the then ruler of England and his consort. James hunted in his own Royal parks as a rule, but he was not at all averse to hunting in those of his nobles, who were naturally only too well pleased to avail themselves of such an easy way of establishing themselves in his favour. As for his counsellors, an they wished for a conversation of five minutes on affairs of State, they had first to follow at his Majesty's heels for five hours when he was hunting. James' favourite mount was a pure-blooded iron-grey, and one can well imagine him riding through some valley, across the river bed, and up the hill, until there came the distant winding of the horn which told the quarry was "at soil," and coming eventually to view some noble stag making his last stand in a shallow pool. When the deer was broken up, the king, acting on the advice of his chief physician, unbooted, and plunged his limbs into the smoking entrails, which, said the chirurgeon, was "the sovereign'st thing on earth" for that gout and rheumatism of which the Stuarts knew more than they wished.

James was deeply disgusted if anyone differed from him in their estimation of sport. King Christian of Denmark, his brother-in-law, visited England in 1606, and spoke in somewhat slighting terms of hunting in general adding that it seemed to him that more horses were killed in this country in the pursuit of sport than in the Low-country wars. To which James, after a few resounding oaths, replied that he knew not what sport the old Danish gods, Thor and Woden, might partake of in their Scandinavian heaven, but flesh and blood could show no better than he had done." The king often cut short debates of great importance by rising with a yawn and remarking that, as he had worked long enough, he would now away hawking. "His Majesty," wrote one of his counsellors, "having broken up the council, rides straight to Royston with all his hunting crew, a small train of forty persons."

The king had an appropriate nick-name for most of those who surrounded him, and to Cecil he gave the title of "my little beagle," for Cecil hunted not only the wild beasts of the chase, but also, and with equal vim, conspiracies

Important Announcement.

The Manufacturers of the Autostrop Safety Razor beg to announce that Autostrop blades are now treated by a process which prevents rusting in tropical climates. The undernoted dealers are empowered to exchange free of charge any unused Autostrop blades for those of the latest manufacture, and have received a license to retail at the following lowest protected price.

against the Crown of England. Cecil was the only one of his ministers of whom James was at all fond, albeit the former frequently grumbled at his Majesty's expensive tastes. On one occasion when Cecil lay ill, King James paid him a visit, prior to going on a hunting tour. "I am very sensible of thy sickness," he said, as he was about to leave him, "and thou must have a care for thy well-doing; for should aught untoward occur to thee, my little beagle, there were no more safe hunting for the King of England."

The Stuart king maintained seven or more hunting establishments—at Windsor, Newmarket, Hinchinbrooke, Royston, Nonsuch, and Hampton Court, while he hunted also in the large woods about Newington and in St. John's Wood, which last two suburbs were in those days covered with leafy brakes, and were the haunts of stags and fallow-deer, pheasants, and other game, carefully protected by a band of keepers and foresters. James' son, Charles I., on one occasion unharboured a buck from a quiet dell at Newington, where the day before some wretched Puritans had taken shelter from the persecution of Laud. "We took," writes the archbishop, "another conventicle of separatists in Newington Woods, in the very brake where the king's stag was to be lodged for his hunting next morning."

James had many breeds of hound for his diverse sports. It appears that he had distinct packs of hounds for hunting the wolf, hare, otter, red deer, fox, roe-buck, and stag, not to mention a team of spaniels to accompany him on his hawking expeditions. Naturally, he maintained a vast horde of "hunt servants"—masters of game, yeoman and children of the leash, sergeants of stag-hounds, lumbermen of buck-hounds, and many others, among them small pages who held hounds in leash at the head of the forest rides, called "toils." Lord Stafford, writing from Rufford, where the Court was then assembled, tells an anecdote of the hunt: "The loss of a stag and the hounds hunting foxes instead of deer put the king into a marvellous chafe, accompanied by those ordinary symptoms (oaths) better known to you courtiers than to us rural swains. In the height whereof comes a clown galloping in, and, staring full in his face, 'Mass!' quoth the intruder, 'am I come forty miles to see a fellow?'—and presently turns about his horse, and away he goes faster than he came; the oddness whereof caused his Majesty and all the company to burst out into a vehement laugh, and so the fume was for that time happily dispersed." But James took occasion on that self-same day to create a new office, which he termed "marshal of the field," whose duty it was to see that the king was not annoyed by any idle sight-seers or attended by any save his own following.

Albeit he almost lived in the saddle, King James was a poor horseman, by all accounts, and many were the precautions taken to endeavour to save him from the dangerous falls which on several occasions nearly proved fatal. The high sheriffs sent forth orders that pigs were not to wander about unringed, "and root holes, etc., to the endangering of his Majesty and the prince in hawking and hunting," nor was arable land to be ploughed in narrow ridges, nor were lofty hedges or other fences "between lands" to be kept in such condition as to render difficult a passage for the king.

King James had quite two hundred couple of hounds, and was never satisfied unless his hounds were the best of their kind, wherefore he gave summary orders that every dog of renown should be seized for his own use! If a good hound died or was killed he was furiously wroth, yet there is a pleasant story which shows that the Nimrod King was not lacking in good feeling. When shooting at a deer with her crossbow, by accident the queen slew Jewell, James' "most principal hound," to whom he was greatly attached. Although much upset, "after he knew who did it he was soon pacified, and with much kindness wished her not to be troubled with it, for he should love her never the worse, and the next day he sent her a Jewell worth £2,000, "as a legacy from his dead dog."—Shooting Times.

SIMLA HORSE SHOW.

Saturday, 25th May 1912.

THE annual Horse Show was held at Annandale to-day in fine weather and was a big success. There was a large attendance. The personal staff, of the Commander-in-Chief entertained a large company of distinguished guests at luncheon. The arrangements of the show under the able direction of Captain Astor, the Honorary Secretary, were all that could be desired, entries were numerous, and the class of horses and ponies above the average. The prizes were given away by Lady Hardinge. Results:—

Country bred Ponies, 14-2 and under.—Lieutenant-Colonel A. Young's Sea Shell, 1; Lieutenant-Colonel F. A. Maxwell's Malikani, 2; Mrs. Dundas's Marcot, 3.

Harks, English and Colonial, 14-2 and under.—Captain J. C. Russell's Kittiwake, 1; Miss Turner's Neptune, 2; Major H. F. Wickham's Duchesse, 3.

All Horses over 14-2.—H. E. the Viceroy's Fitzgerald, 1; Lieutenant-Colonel Sullivan's Bog Oak, 2; Mrs. Buck's Chorister, 3.

Ponies, English and Colonial.—Captain C Steele's American Girl, 1; Major Wickham's Duchesse, 2; Captain A. A. Tod's Venture, 3.

Ladies' Hacks, over 14-2.—To be ridden by ladies. Mrs Sullivan's Bog Oak, 1; Mrs. Wilberforce's Napier, 2; Mrs. Buck's Chorister, 3.

All Arabs.—Major H. N. Holden's Manak, 1; Lieutenant-Colonel F. A. Maxwell's Sheen, 2; Captain F. W. Barrett's Corncob, 3.

Ladies' Hacks, 14-2 and under.—To be ridden by ladies. Miss Turner's Neptune, 1; Miss Headlam's Tuppence, 2; Mrs. Rimington's M. Thetis, 3.

Polo Ponies, Arab and Country-bred.—H. H. the Maharaja of Patiala's White Chief, 1; H. H. the Maharaja of Kishengarh's Plebeian, 2; the Maharaja of Kishengarh's Peacock, 3.

Children's Ponies, all breds.—Master Edgar Dawson's Chartier Brandy, 1; Miss Bridget Barrett's Dilkusha, 2; Master Peter Atkinson's Wee Willie Winkie, 3.

Jumping competition for horses.—Lieutenant-Colonel F. A. Maxwell's Garland 1; Brigadier-General Peyton's Tommy 2; Major-General Rimington's Bannady, 3.

Jumping competition for ponies, 14-2 and under.—H. H. the Maharaja of Kishengarh's Mary Jane, 1; Captain V. Yeat Brown's Wild Waif, 2; Brigadier-General Mercer's King Pippin, 3.

English and Colonial Ponies, 14-2 and under that have never won a first prize at a horse show.—Miss Turner's Neptune, 1; Major S. F. Wickham's Bonny, 2; Major F. B. Lawrence's Birthday, 3.

Arab and Country-bred ponies, 14-2 and under that have not won a first prize at a horse show.—Major Holden's Manak, 1; H. E. the Viceroy's Mahout, 2; Lieutenant-Colonel F. A. Maxwell's Viceroy, 3.

Special prizes for the best horses in the show.—H. E. the Viceroy's Fitzgerald, 1; Captain C. Steele's American Girl, 1; Major H. N. Holden's Manak, 3.

Motoring.

(BY "THROTTLE.")

WHY did Hari Singh? Because he saw the Sergeant Byrne. But anyone springing this in the Police compound does so at his own risk.

IN view of the fact that a notorious ring gambler and book-maker has outdone all his previous brushes with the Police by kidnapping and assaulting one of the force, it is high time that some instruction should be given with regard to the actuating levers, brakes, switches, etc., on a car, so that the performance cannot be emulated by drivers in general. A little knowledge in this direction would probably have saved Sergeant Byrne from his recent humiliating experience.

A MOST ingenious and effective automatic car lighting outfit has recently been placed on the market. Many devices have been invented to light lamps automatically, but they have had many drawbacks, generally they have been mechanical complications requiring a special accumulator to be carried with numerous control levers and wires, which must be carefully detached to remove the lamps, moreover the presence of any mechanical device inside the lamp interferes with the accessibility for internal cleaning. In the system under notice such defects are done away with entirely. The upper section of the generator as usual contains water and the lower calcium phosphide. A central tube is fitted holding a plunger, the lower end of which is hollowed to hold about a teaspoonful of water. To light the lamps, all that is necessary is to open the main acetylene generator cock and after a lapse of a few seconds to allow of the pipes being cleared of air by the generated gas, the plunger is depressed, this allows the small quantity of water to come in contact with the calcium phosphide with which a neutralizing agent is mixed. By this means phosphide of hydrogen and another gas are given off, which are introduced into the main feed pipe through an ordinary "T" joint. As soon as the acetylene and the mixed gases come in contact with the air in the lamp, that is, at the burner vent spontaneous combustion takes place. An important point, which goes to prove the safety of the device, is that no combustion can take place until the combined gases from the lighter and the acetylene, are projected into the air.

THE driver who was responsible for the accident mentioned in these notes last week was a few days later fined Rs. 25. Under the circumstances this was not by any means a severe punishment, as a more reckless case has never before come to my notice. Without warning of any kind, and at an excessive speed, the car was swung round in Chowringhee, just at the time (7-30 P.M.) when traffic is heaviest, the result was that the driver lost his head and consequently control of the car; failing to complete the turn, although the motor had a good "lock," a violent collision with a carriage resulted and it is extremely fortunate for the occupants of both vehicles that the accident was not more serious. When will conviction for such offences automatically cancel the licenses of the culprits?

THE Taxi Cab Company must have had a good time during the recent trouble with the Tramway employés. The motor car as a means of locomotion has worthily upheld its already high reputation during labour troubles throughout the world and the day does not seem far distant when coal as a prime factor will be replaced by petrol or electricity.

THE American invasion of the European motor market proceeds apace. The latest representative, the K. R. I. T., of which specifications are just to hand certainly appears to be an advance on its predecessors. Hitherto American manufactures in the motor line have an almost monotonous sameness of design, but the car under review while retaining the smart body lines of the best American makes has several distinctive features in the engine and transmission. This is readily understood when one finds that the home of the K. I. R. T. is Detroit, Michigan, that centre of engineering initiative. The engine is a 4-cylinder nominal 15-20 H.P. (R.A.C. 22·4) with the cylinders cast en bloc. The nuts holding the cylinders to the crank case are particularly accessible, a feature that will appeal to anyone who has had experience in detaching the cylinders of most engines. The crank shaft runs on ball bearings and the same are used wherever possible throughout the car. The base chamber, besides being easily removed to allow of inspection of bearings, is so designed as to ensure a maximum of lubrication to vital points with a minimum expenditure of lubricant.

THE valves are all set on one side and are interchangeable, on the same side also are the carburettor (Stromberg) and the magneto (Bosch H. T.) but so placed as to be easily accessible and without giving that crowded appearance, so common when this method of placing is adopted. By the use of the drop frame, the centre of gravity is brought so low as to minimise the risk of skids and this combined with the long wheel base and large wheels go to make a touring car which should give the greatest possible comfort on any road surface. Taking everything together this appears to be a car eminently suitable for India and the listed price (complete with double extension waterproof hood, side screens, folding adjustable glass screen, side and tail lamps, acetylene head lights, pump, jack tools, etc., ready for the road) guineas 200 places it within reach of everyone. The specifications which I have I shall be pleased to pass on to anyone requiring them. The home firm handling the K. I. R. T. is F. W. Berwick and Co., Ld., 18, Berkeley Street, Piccadilly.

A SMALL car which is rapidly making its presence felt and placing itself in the forefront of its class in England is La Licorne.

TRAILL & CO., Ld., 20, British Indian Street, Calcutta.

This is a 4-cylinder 12-14 H.P. (75 by 120 m.m.) engine of a very neat and business-like design, cast en bloc as is usual in most modern makes. The exhaust valve stems and tappets, though enclosed are easily got at and the inlet valves which are held in sleeves and set in the cylinder heads are enclosed by a cover kept in position by two studs. The inlet valves are operated by tappet rods from the cam shaft and rocking tappets carried in lugs from the inside of the cylinder cover. Both exhaust and inlet tappets bear upon the cams through friction rollers, the tappets being also provided with springs to give a dash-pot effect, so as far as possible eradicating noise. The lubricating oil is fed to the crank shaft bearings by gravity from an oil tank set upon the forward face of the dashboard and within which is a pump operated from an eccentric on the end of the cam shaft. The cooling is by the popular thermo-syphon system, the inlet, exhaust and water leads being all formed in the casting. A conspicuous feature is the ample volume of the water jackets particularly round the combustion chambers where the necessity for cooling is greatest. An exceptionally large overhang tank is fitted to the radiator which with short connections of wide diameter provide a large volume of water. The carburettor is the well-known Zenith and the ignition is provided by a Bosch H. T. magneto which is accessibly placed on the left of the engine and being gear-driven lends itself readily to the most delicate adjustment. The transmission of power is through an internally coned, leather faced clutch, entirely enclosed and with a detachable flexible coupling between it and the gear box. This latter is cylindrical in form with a sector change giving three speeds and is so constructed that the whole of the gearing can be withdrawn and laid bare for inspection. The primary shaft is squared and the secondary castellated, both rotating in ball bearings. Immediately in rear of the gear box is a break drum of considerable width and diameter, giving a maximum brake power, the shoes being of the internally expanding type operated by a pedal in the usual way. The propeller shaft has a forward end universal joint and at the back end a plunging joint. The back axle is made up of the two halves of the differential gear case, and the axle casings which contain the road wheel driving shafts and carry the road wheels on ball bearings. The axle is strengthened by adjustable tension rods and the bevel driving gear is readily adjusted externally. The special features of the La Licorne chassis design are the methods of compensating the back wheel brakes, the length between the bearings of the brake cam spindles and the installation of the tubular torque member, which is clipped to the top of the differential gear case on the left side and rocks on a substantial steel bracket pivot bolted to the centre cross member of the frame. The wheel base and track are respectively 9ft. 2ins. and 4ft. 1½ins. with wheels of 800 m.m. by 85 m.m. The chassis price with tyres being £230, which for one of this type cannot by any means be accounted exorbitant when one takes into consideration the reputation which the car has already built up and to which it is daily adding. The firm mentioned above in connection with the K. R. I. T. are also concessionaires for La Licorne and in these two have lines which are quick sellers capable of giving every satisfaction.

With regard to last week's competition no award has yet been made, the matter being still under consideration, but the prize I fancy will go to the party who claims to have been the hero of the incident. He deserves it for his courage.

On Monday last the Chief Presidency Magistrate fined two taxi drivers Rs. 5 each for having driven on the wrong side of Chowringhee Road. A few days ago, for having driven a car emitting only a slight smoke from the exhaust a driver was fined Rs. 7. Comparisons are odious (and unnecessary).

A small and select dinner party, for gentlemen only, was given recently in a well-known Calcutta club. Bridge followed, and in the small hours, the obliging steward assisted half a dozen semi-comatose diners into one taxi and give the driver an address in Ballygunge The drive completed the work already begun, and by the time the party arrived in the Garden Suburb Morpheus reigned supreme. The task of rousing his fares proved too much for the chauffeur, although the noise brought a lightly attired "better half" on the scene, to her the driver appealed "Please mem-sahib pick out your one and take delivery, as I must get on with the remainder."

MOTOR MEMS.

LONDON, 10th May 1912.

"What would you have done?" is the title of an interesting article which appears in the American Motor, and which describes some very ingenious makeshifts for getting over difficulties. For example, a burst cover resulted in the destruction of the motorist's last spare tube. He got over the difficulty by inserting oats through the hole in the cover till he could get no more in. He then poured hot water on the oats, and placed an outer sleeve over the burst in the cover. In a very short time the oats had swelled sufficiently to completely fill the cover.

On another occasion he used a strand from a wire fence, wrapped round with cloth and tyre tape, to take the place of a high tension cable which refused to work.

He was on his way home late one night when the petrol tank came adrift and all the spirit was lost. He had a spare tin, and got home by emptying the lubricant out of his oil can, filling up with petrol, and squirting the spirit into the end of the feed tube. If he had possessed a length of rubber tubing, a better method would have been to have placed the petrol tin on the floor board, put one end of the tube in the tin, start the petrol to flow by suction, and slip the other end of the tube over the petrol pipe. This, however, could only be worked satisfactorily if a passenger was present to hold the tin on his knees and the rubber pipe in position.

With over twenty miles to go, the writer of the article found himself with less than a gallon of petrol in the tank, and there was none to be got in the only village en route.

He added two gallons of kerosene to the petrol in the tank and mixed it with one quart of ether, obtained from the village drug store.

The "American Invasion," if we are to believe some people, is beginning to worry a few English manufacturers and concessionaries." To my mind, writes a well-known motor-noter, one of the most striking developments of the past twelve month has been the enormous increase in the number of Transatlantic cars that are to be seen on the roads in England, and particularly in the London district. It is no use shutting our eyes to patent facts—the American car is here, and it is not here only for show purposes, for it is selling in quantities. Some of the more optimistic of our traders profess to believe that the invasion will eventuate like the much-quoted attempt to introduce the American bicycle, but, personally, I do not take that view at all. The two things are not comparable, because at the time of the cycle boom the Americans did not know how to make a decent bicycle—indeed, I don't think they do now—but, make no mistake, they do know how to build a low-priced car. Of course, there are few Yankee cars over here at the moment which can begin to compare with the best of those turned out in our own and Continental factories, but the points to be remembered are that they do their work, and do it satisfactorily, and that they cost far less than a car of similar rating produced on this side of the Atlantic. If our own manufacterers are not to be left in the race for the medium-priced market, they will have to examine their methods of production and selling."

It is of very vital importance to use good oil for engine lubrication, but it is even more important that the oil should be exactly suitable for the particular engine in which it is to be used, as we have found from personal experience. In fact, a second quality oil might give better results than a high grade, provided the one suited the engine and the other did not, though, speaking generally, it is the cheapest in the end to get a high-grade oil which suits the engine. As a rule, the makers of the car are the best people to consult on the subject, although their advice is not by any means infallible. A writer in the Field deals with the advisability of motorists experimenting for themselves. He tells how he purchased a sample gallon of a cheap engine oil of a quality graded for the power of the car. At first he was much pleased with the result; the engine gained in power and the petrol consumption fell. He noticed also, however, that the engine ran somewhat hot, which may have accounted to some extent for the gain in power. On testing for oil consumption, however, he found that it was about double what he had previously consumed when using a more expensive brand of lubricant. After studying the question he found that the new oil was thinner, and although it suited the high powered engine which he used, it worked past the piston rings, and inside 500 miles he found that the piston heads had become fouled and trouble with the plugs became frequent. In fact, the oil was too thin

As to the advice about the private owner personally experimenting, we think it should be received with some reserve. Few men have the aptitude or will take the trouble to carefully study the different results given by various brands of oil. If the engine ran a little better most motorists would be under the impression that the oil was exactly right, and possibly would overlook to check the consumption, or might not realise that the trouble from carbonisation was due to the oil being unsuitable. Except in the case of the really expert amateur mechanic, it is best to follow the advice of the manufacturers of the car. If the results are unfavourable as regards the consumption and carbonisation, it would be time enough to try a different brand, but if this is done the owner should take every precaution to check the results.

The poor old War Office has always received what was once known in the Navy as the powder-monkey's allowance, "more kicks than ha'pence," and it is now in process of receiving more of the same allowance, because of its almost unaccountable refusal to take advantage of the offers of patriotic motor-cyclists to place their services at its disposal. A good deal has been done privately to organise the motor-cyclists into some semblance of effective military units, but it is quite obvious that this is not a work which can be carried to its logical conclusion without the active assistance of the military authorities. It would seem, also, that the latter are thoroughly agreed upon the immense potentialities for usefulness of the motor-cyclist who has been reasonably well-trained in the duties which would be expected of him in time of war, and the question, therefore, which immediately suggests itself is, Then why do they not move in the right direction? There is nothing against such a movement—the motor-cyclist is only too willing to enrol himself among the defenders of these realms; those who will have to use him in the day of wrath recognise his value—so why delay? That is the puzzle which presents itself to the lay mind. But, in reality, it is not so much of a puzzle when we pause to consider how our beautiful governmental system works. We have our Admiralty, our War Office, our Home and Local Government departments, who all exercise executive functions and each of whom, so the man in the street fondly imagines, has the freest of free hands to do its work within the limits of its yearly appropriations. But over all broods the shadow of the Treasury and it is here that the shoe pinches. It is not enough that a certain sum has been voted for certain services. Even when Parliament has had its say, there still remains the Treasury to haggle with and to render nugatory all the schemes for expansion and reform in any of the services. This, there is every reason to believe, is the difficulty which stands in the way of properly organising those who desire to place themselves at the country's disposal against a time of war and it is the Treasury that should be kicked for the neglect which is laid at the door of the War Office.

Naturally, these reflections are the outcome of the highly successful experiment in mobilisation—that is hardly the word, but there seems to be nothing better to describe it—at Daventry on the 5th May. It was intended to be an object-lesson in the rapidity with which motor-cyclists could foregather from the uttermost ends of the country in response to a given signal and, it needs not saying, this quality was demonstrated to the full. The call given was responded to by a round hundred riders, who arrived at the rendezvous from any distant parts of the country after having averaged a speed of some thirty miles an hour. As an exhibition of what the capably ridden motor-cycle can do it was wonderful. But what else did it do? Major-General Thorneycroft said nice things to the assembled riders, but it is quite manifest from his speech that the assembly had taught him nothing more than he already knew or than, for the matter of ha, is grasped by every practical soldier. It was not the soldiers who require to be impressed, but the Treasury clerks, and it is only public opinion in the mass that will do that. This demonstration was valuable chiefly for the effect it may have produced on the public mind, and it may be that after a long course of such test "mobilisations" and the preaching of much good gospel that the necessary pressure will eventuate to make the Treasury "get a move on."

DOCTOR BOSS STRASSBURG introduced Gonosan in the treatment of the most painful of diseases to which mankind is liable. It is better and safer and more effective than other preparations of Copaiba, Cubeb, or plain Santal wood oil. The same is the verdict of other Specialists who have patiently tried it. It is the latest Scientific Remedy and has never known to fail. At all Chemists and dealers.

GONOSAN is safe and reliable, does not affect the digestive organs. An ideal antiseptic treatment recommended by Specialists. Never fails. It is readily taken, and leaves no bad after effects. Bottle of 40 Capsules. Procurable at all Chemists and patent medicine dealers. Demand Gonosan, accept nothing else.

Wood-Milne

The Tyre that is Built to Last !

THIS is the tyre that gives the utmost measure of service and satisfaction. Built on stouter and stronger lines than other tyres, the WOOD-MILNE stands an extraordinary amount of wear and tear, and shows an average mileage cost comparatively nominal.

Every detail makes for lasting strength The casing of the WOOD-MILNE is the strongest made. An exceptionally strong canvas is used, specially woven from the finest Egyptian cotton—supercombed Johannovitch—the toughest and yet most flexible to be obtained. There is also in the WOOD-MILNE one more layer of canvas than is usual. The casing is so built up that, when fitted, the weight of the car is evenly distributed over the walls of the tyre and there is no extra strain at the sides of the tread to cause deterioration.

No defective tyres are ever sent out. Everything possible is done to prevent defects during manufacture. The best British workmen are employed, together with up-to-date appliances and some ingenious WOOD-MILNE inventions. The result is a tyre that is as nearly as possible perfect. Beyond this every WOOD-MILNE tyre is vigilantly examined by experts before being placed on the market as a standard WOOD-MILNE. Should the slightest defect be apparent the tyre is immediately rejected. Such are the methods adopted to ensure the satisfaction invariably afforded by the use of WOOD-MILNES.

In Steelrubber is offered for the first time (and after long experiment) a perfect amalgamation of Steel and Rubber—so perfect as to combine the durability and road-grip of the metal with the full resilience of pure rubber. WOOD MILNE Steelrubber has a double function. Besides adding considerably to the life of the tyre, it ensures steadiness in driving over slippery roads. Steel rubber is in itself a very powerful non-skid.

The Wood-Milne "Griprib" pattern The grip of the WOOD-MILNE Tyre is further improved by the special "Griprib" pattern as shown in the illustration. The alternating crossbars effectively prevent catching in tramlines or hard ruts, and at the same time afford an extra powerful lateral grip and a forward pull when hill-climbing, especially if the road surface is uneven.

To meet special preferences the WOOD-MILNE is also made in Grooved pattern and with Steel Studs.

Over 12,000 miles without a puncture. The all-round excellence of WOOD-MILNE tyres is receiving confirmation daily. H. L. writes :—"Your Steelrubber tyres which are fitted to the rear wheels of my car have more than satisfied me, as I have now covered over 12,000 miles on them without having a single puncture. I use my car considerably and have toured all over Great Britain and Ireland and on the worst of roads."

A practical trial of this WOOD-MILNE Steelrubber tyre we finally suggest will both convince and repay you.

"SOME INDIAN VERMIN."

An article on the above subject, appearing in the Indian Field of 18th April 1912, brings to mind the old adage "give a dog a bad name and hang him," and in our zeal, to kill off as fast as possible, all animals and birds, which prey upon other birds and animals, and constitute "vermin" the writer of the above article rightly points out that it behoves one to "enquire into the question as to whether their misdeeds in regard to the destruction of game are counter-balanced by any benefits they may confer in other directions."

The cases for the felidae and others having been discussed on their merits, he winds up by saying "If to this list we add the egg-stealing crows, the various birds of prey—such as the eagles and hawks—our list of the game-destroying vermin of India will be complete," so the wretched eagles and hawks have no say in the matter at all, and there is seemingly nothing on the credit side of their account whatsoever?

Now there are some 70 odd species of birds which come under the category of "eagles and hawks" and are all these to be considered as vermin and to be shot at sight?

The writer of the above, has not gone very deeply into his subject if that is his intention, and it will not need a very careful insight into their habits to prove to him, that "benefits conferred by them in other directions" more than counter-balance their misdeeds, and in slaying off some of the eagles, "vermin killers" would be slaying some of the greatest friends a sportsman has.

To take the most predatory of all eagles, and one who certainly does do some damage among pheasants, and even the fawns of the Himalayan sheep and goats, the Golden Eagle (A. chrysaetus).

I don't know if the writer of the above, has ever taken a nest of the Golden Eagle, and, if so, whether he has taken the trouble to examine the rubbish lying at the foot of it? I have taken four, and seen and examined some others, after the youngsters have flown, and have found that crows' beaks and legs predominate to a very large extent, then come bits of flying-squirrels. On one occasion I found the remains of a fairly freshly killed fox, and that they would "take" a pine marten or cat, should they come across one, I am convinced, from the behaviour of a tame one I had on seeing a pine-marten rushing up a hill before me.

Against the crows and fox, I have only once found the remains of a pheasant (the leg of a monal), and once, a full-grown musk-deer which I found some two hundred yards from the nest, but whether it had been killed by the eagles and found too heavy to carry up to the nest, or the victim of some poacher, gone off wounded to die where I found him, I of course cannot say, but there is no doubt that a Golden Eagle would kill a musk-deer if he got the chance.

Now to take the pheasants (N. W. Himalayan) one by one, and see how far the Golden Eagle is able to destroy them.

The Koklass can be eliminated from the list at once, as an eagle has not the least chance of catching one, at least, not one that is in possession of its full powers of flight.

The Tragopan and the Kalij for the most part frequent "cover," and if the latter should occasionally be found out in the open, it will never be far from trees or brushwood into which he can scuttle at the first appearance of danger, and a Golden Eagle is not a hunter among trees, and will never follow its prey into cover, although he might be frequently seen driving the quarry out of a solitary bush on a bare hill side.

This leaves the Monal, the Cheer and the Snow-cock. The former may frequently be met with on the open Alpine pastures digging in pieces, where sheep and goats have spent some days, but they, too, are not very far from trees or the stunted rhododendron into which they can go for shelter, as the Monal seldom gets above the limit of vegetation.

The Cheer is safe in his long grass, and I don't suppose an eagle accounts for one in a year, so the snow-cock alone would seem to bear the brunt of an eagle's depredations, yet does he?

It is only in the late autumn that a Golden Eagle will be found up in the haunts of the snow-cock, though, of course, the latter come down to him in the winter, but I have more than once seen a covey of them feeding, when a pair of eagles arrived on the scene, and it would have taken a better eye than even an eagle's to have spotted them, as they lay among the rocks, while the eagles soared over-head.

Twice I has flushed one or two out of a covey by firing a shot when the eagles appeared above, and on both occasions the eagles gave chase and each time a snow-cock was killed, but had there been no one to flush them, the eagles would never have known of their existence.

In the Kishenganga Valley, in Kashmir, villagers told me that they lost a number of tame fowls through Golden Eagles in the winter, and as I shot four specimens within a week, and all near villages, I can well believe it, but the ordinary domestic "moorghi" affords an easy catch and an eagle that has once caught one would naturally very soon try "and make a hobby of it," but this is digressing, as a "moorghi" can hardly come under "game."

Shepherds tell of lambs and kids being carried off by Golden Eagles, and, if so, the lambs and kids of wild sheep and wild goats would not be any more difficult to catch than those of tame ones, and that even full-grown tahr are sometimes taken I can vouch for, as I saw one being sent flying over a cliff near Gungotrie in Tehri Garhwal, but this form of sport, is, I fancy, very seldom indulged in, and food must have been very scarce just then, for it appears to be against the principles of all the birds of prey to kill anything that they cannot carry away in their wild state.

As for the kids and lambs, those of domestic goats and sheep are born in the autumn, and that is just the time that the Golden Eagle is up among the Alpine pastures, and high altitudes generally, a good deal, and at that time of the year, there are three and sometimes, though very rarely, four, of a family to be fed. Far above the limit of trees, the youngster is taken up to be initiated into the mysteries of stooping, and a lamb or kid would not be despised on such occasions, if strayed from the flock.

Wild sheep and goats do not breed in the autumn, but in the spring and early summer, and at that time of the year, the Golden Eagle is very seldom to be found high up.

The eyass leaves the parents, when he is well able to look after himself, any time between November and January, and does not attempt to even accompany them much before August, and often later, and from the time the birds begin to think about nesting, in March and April, till the youngster is strong enough on the wing to follow the parents, they are seldom found at elevations over 9 or 10,000 feet at most.

Between March and August, their chief diet appears to be crows and flying-squirrels, judging from the contents found round about the eyrie, though how he gets a hold of such crepuscular rodents I do not know.

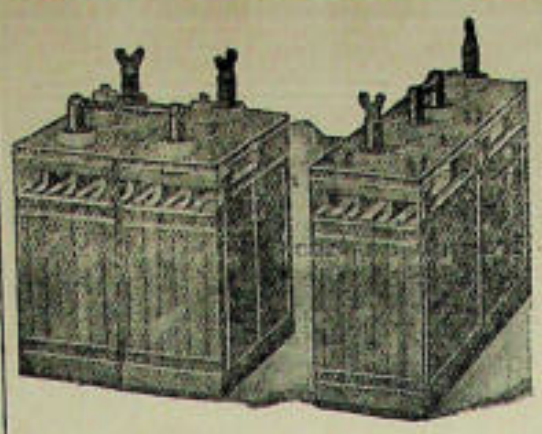
Certainly not in the early mornings as the eagles are not very early hunters.

Now crows are noted "vermin" and anything that makes a general set at them is a true friend of all sportsmen, and every marten, cat or fox, is so much to his credit.

Coming down to other birds of prey, I think, one could safely sum up all the "vermin" in the one term, and almost one genus, "Hawk-eagles" and that genus is "Spizaetus." The goshawks (Astor) also do a good deal of damage among the pheasants, but not so much as the "Spizaeti."

The "Spizaeti" are all "true hawks" in their habits, and do all their hunting among trees, sitting in wait by the hour on the branch of some thickly foliaged tree, whence they can keep a good look out up and down the nullah, without themselves being seen, and pouncing suddenly down on the first luckless pheasant that feeds up in that direction.

The nest of a Hodgson's hawk-eagle tells a very different tale from that of a Golden Eagle, and the feathers and bones on the ground, below the nest will show that pheasants form its staple diet, and the short-winged hawk-eagles are much greater "vermin" than any of the true eagles, or the long-winged hawk-eagles, such as the Bonelli's eagle or the Booted eagle, though the former takes toll from a covey of chikor very frequently, and from partridges and hares in the plains, but to make up for that, he is also a great crow killer.



"Astor palumbarius" the Goshawk, lives pretty considerably on Kalij pheasants and chikor, and these are about the only kinds that can be looked upon as being destructive to "game," as though the Peregrine falcon almost lives entirely on dock; is only with us for six months in the year and during that time, it accounts for a good many crows as well as anybody can see for himself, by visiting a crow colony just before sun-set when the crows are going to roost in myriads, in one of their regular haunts on the banks of any of the Punjab rivers, near any of the railway bridges, where a paternal Government has erected bunds and planted trees for their special benefit.

The Shahin falcon breeds in India and makes raids among chikor, partridges and pigeons, though its chief diet is doves and pigeons, and the Laggar, though killing partridges occasionally restricts its depredations for the most part, to humbler fry, such as mynahs, rats, bats and lizards, etc., and the same might apply to the saker, in its wild state, and the latter is only found in India from October to April.

It has been conceded of some of the eagles, notably the Spotted Eagle, that he is given to thieving nests, but the occasions on which an eagle, or in fact any of the birds of prey attack a nest, must be very rare, and with the exception of the Hawk Eagles and the Goshawk, and to a lesser extent, the Bonelli's Eagles and the Shahin, the birds of prey do not do anything like the damage among game birds that they receive the credit for doing, of course I refer to "game" birds.

L'UN QUI BAISE.

By "Chipkali."

It was the last dance of the season before the feminine and frivolous portion of the English population of Diwanipur took their annual flight to the hills to avoid the scorching heat of a summer in the hottest part of the Punjab. It had been an exceptionally gay and successful season to which this, its last big function, made a fitting climax. The officers of the——th Punjabis, who were giving the dance, had determined that it should be an affair to be remembered for all time in Diwanipur. The club ball-room was hung with flags and bright with flowers. The ordinary wall lamps that always lit the room were discarded as prosaic and ugly. Candles innumerable with pretty pink shades were sent for from Bombay, and all the tall standard lamps in the station were pressed into service, and provided with pink silk shades to match the candles. Particular care was bestowed on the arranging of alluring kala-juggas; the younger, unmarried men seeming to consider this their chief responsibility. Durzees were busy for days before hand, renovating dresses now rather the worse for wear. Two or three ladies, with reckless extravagance, launched forth into new frocks in honour of the occasion. Amongst these latter, was Eve Branscombe, whose clothes were the envy and admiration of the other ladies of the station. "But then, my dear, she has money" they would say as an apology for their own last year's gowns. Eve kept house for her father, Major Branscombe, R.A., and was spasmodically chaperoned by an elderly aunt, who took her responsibilities so little to heart that she felt herself in no way tied down to Diwanipur, and was to be frequently met, careering about India, sight-seeing by herself, her favorite form of amusement. She had accidentally returned in time to escort her niece to the——th Punjabis' dance, and her brother relinquished the duty to her with a sigh of relief. He was getting too old for dances, he said, and had blustered and grumbled before consenting to go to this.

Miss Branscombe and Eve were just preparing to step into their victoria when a smart dog-cart rattled up the drive, and a slim young man threw down the reins, and sprang to the ground.

"I borrowed West's trap, and flew round to see if you would let me drive you down to the club," he said breathlessly, addressing himself to Eve. She hesitated a moment on the verandah steps, enveloped, so it seemed to the infatuated boy's eyes, in a cloud of mist, through which her face glimmered, palely attractive.

"Very well," she said, "aunt, you won't mind driving to the club alone?" Without waiting for a reply, she climbed into the high dog-cart, which swerved on one wheel through the gate, to the accompaniment of a little shriek from Miss Branscombe, and whirled down the moonlit-Mall, driven by an ecstatic subaltern, who was vividly conscious that the night air blowing against his face was stirring the laces and draperies of the only woman in the world, who was sitting by his side.

"I say, Miss Branscombe," he began awkwardly, "may I have a dance?" Eve laughed. The lilt of a waltz the band was playing rose on the air intoxicating her. "You are too late," she said. "'First come' you know?" The disappointment on Cathal McLaughlin's face touched her, and she pulled out her programme. "Look here," she added kindly, "you can have 12 and 15. I shall have to cut those two dances, but they are not wildly interesting men, and, after all, you are in dad's company, and we are such old friends." He stammered his gratitude, incoherent with delight as they drew up and mingled with the gay crowd in the porch.

Cathal hung about the ball-room and verandahs until it was time to claim his first dance with Eve, which she insisted on dancing through to the end. They were both excellent dancers, but to Cathal, it was sheer waste of time, and he besought her to sit out her next and last with him. Eve Branscombe had had vast experience of the ways of men and boys, and knew the symptoms of a proposal. Cathal seemed determined to have his say, and her white shoulders rippled in a shrug of resignation, as she followed him into a palm-screened corner of the verandah. She flung herself into a cane chair, her hands, one holding her fan, lying lightly on the long arms.

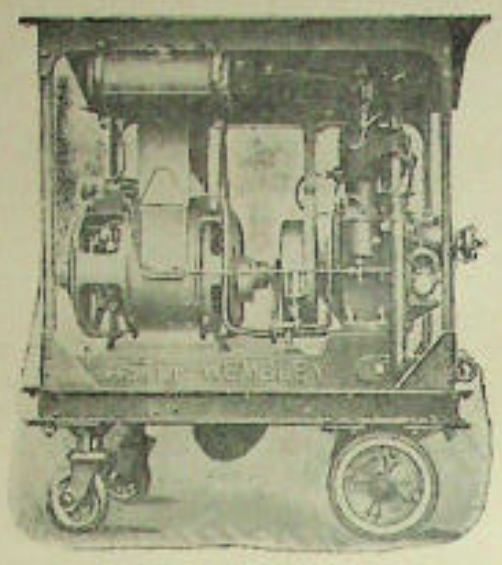
"Well, begin, if you must propose."

"Why, however could you guess?" She smiled slightly, the question was so familiar to her. "Never mind; but tell me why you want to marry me. For my money, or my looks—or because you hope for influence by marrying your major's daughter?"

"I don't care a damn for your position or your money," said Cathal huskily," though I'm glad for your sake you've got them, as I couldn't offer you much yet, or buy you all the little luxuries you are used to; but—but, it's only that I love you very dearly."

Eve raised herself on her arm, and looked curiously at him. "Why, Cathal dear, I believe you mean it." "Mean it," he exclaimed. She warded him off with her fan. "Tell me," she said, "how do you reconcile this with your pride? You say you have nothing to offer me; does it not look suspiciously like fortune-hunting?"

He flushed, and bent forward eagerly. "Yes, I admit it does, as I've only £100 a year besides my pay, but my uncle, Lord Hardworth, intends to make me his heir if I get on in the army, and keep fairly straight, and all that; and if he does decide to leave me his money, he will probably give me an allowance in a year or so, as soon as he has seen me well started in the Service."



GONOSAN CAPSULES contain only the purest East Indian Sandal wood oil and Kawa. The first dose quickly relieves violent inflammatory symptoms and a permanent cure is effected in a short time. The girl leant back again in her chair, and there was silence.

"Eve." The faint intonation, only noticeable when he was excited, crept into his voice. "Eve, is there no hope for me?" The charm of his personality captivated her, and she caught his hand caressingly. "Ah, you dear thing. I never could resist an Irishman; but, to be serious, I cannot answer you yet. At present I could almost say 'yes', and be done with it, but I am rather fickle, you know, and impressionable, and not a little mercenary. Give me a few days to make up my mind." "But you are leaving for Simla to-morrow," objected Cathal. She smiled, well pleased at the accuracy of his memory as regards the things that concerned her. "Yes, so I am," she replied thoughtfully, "and if I do not see you again there is an end of it. I could certainly never accept anyone by letter. Couldn't you manage to come up for the Bachelors' Ball next week, and I could give you your answer then?"

"Rather," said Cathal, "and do you think you could possibly—?"

A man in mess dress peered round the palm screen, and Eve rose to join her partner, giving her hand to Cathal. "I shouldn't really be surprised" she said softly, her eyes shining with a vague promise. "Do not forget." Cathal gulped down the delirious joy that was choking him, murmured a polite reply, and fled out into the club compound which was teeming with the thousand scents of an Indian night. The faint interminable thrum of a tom-tom sounded from the servants' quarters at regular intervals, like the heart-beat of the drowsy garden. The evening breeze had long since died away, and the stillness was emphasised by the brilliant moonlight which showed up every motionless twig and leaf with the clear-cut intensity of a photograph.

The band was playing very softly as Cathal woke an astonished syce, and told him to harness the pony. There was nothing to be gained by his staying on now—he had had his two dances, and it would only madden him to see Eve dancing the rest of the evening with other men. He cursed his luck that he should have to turn up at parade instead of going down to the station to see her off in the morning. As he drove home, he thought over the prospects of his being able to get leave. It would be impossible to go up to Simla, go to the ball, and get back again in anything under three days. The ball was on Tuesday night. Monday and Tuesday were exceptionally busy days in Diwanipur, and there was a review on Wednesday.

"Do not forget. I am rather fickle, you know. I could certainly never accept any one by letter!" Detached sentences of hers rang in his ears. He frowned a little as he realised that that they were only too true. "She is bound to meet heaps of decent chaps up there, and she will be married in no time. If I don't go she will think I am not keen. Not keen! Good Lord!" His thoughts wandered off the track a bit, and then returned. "Any way, my only chance is to move heaven and earth, and go up whatever happens, and insist upon her marrying me." His plan of campaign having been slowly, but irrevocably formed in his mind, he drew up a panting pony outside his quarters, undressed hurriedly, and tumbled into bed.

On Monday morning a very cool, self-possessed Cathal appeared at parade. Later he strolled into the mess for breakfast, and soon after ten presented himself at the Orderly-room.

"I want to know, sir, if I could possibly have any leave?" he asked Major Branscome in a level voice that masked his riotous excitement.

"Eh, What!" said the Major fussily. "Let me see, aren't you orderly officer this week?" "No, sir. If you remember, you gave me leave to change with West." "Yes, yes so I did. This is such a busy time, what with the General's coming down, and the review. You can have Thursday off for a day's shooting if you like, but you can't have more than a day for at least another three weeks."

Cathal's heart sank. Three weeks! Eve would most likely be engaged to some other fellow by that time.

"I'm afraid that would be no use to me, Sir," he said, keeping his voice steady with an effort. "You see, I wanted to go to-day and get back by Wednesday night, or Thursday morning."

"To-day—Thursday morning. Well, I'm damned!" spluttered the Major. "You know we are rehearsing a ceremonial parade for Wednesday. Leave—now!

"Why, it's unheard of. You must be mad, McLaughlin."

Cathal shrugged his shoulders and drummed with his fingers on the table. "It's very important, Sir," he said in a low voice. "Important! Nonsense! where d'you want to go to?" "Simla" "Why!" There was silence. It was on the tip of Cathal's tongue to say. "To go to the Bachelor's Ball." But a suppressed giggle from West and the Major's lowering face checked him, and he laughed internally as a picture of their stupefied astonishment at such a reply rose in his mind. He raised his shoulders in another shrug and apologized for his silence. "You see, it's rather private." Major Branscome shot a keen glance at him from under his grizzled eyebrows. "Some girl!" he snorted in a vicious undertone. West, who heard the words, rose hurriedly and hung his head out of the window to hide his mirth. He drew it in again to listen to Cathal. "Then I am to understand that you do not give me leave." He was saying clearly and slowly with the air of one making a decision. "No! Impossible!" "Do you need me here just now, Sir?" "No!" The Major's words were snapped out like pistol shots.

"Thank you, Sir." With a punctiliously polite salute, Cathal withdrew.

The Bachelors' Ball, the first of the Simla Season, was in full swing. Towards the middle of the ninth dance, several flirtatiously-inclined couples were disturbed by the apparition of a slim youth in a rather crushed dress suit, who eagerly scanned their faces in the dim light of their kala jug gas, shook his head disappointedly, and hurried on with a muttered apology. His appearance was, in some cases, greeted with derision, in others it gave rise to considerable annoyance. Poor elderly, nerve-wrecked Miss Branscome, who was placidly sitting out with a harmless old civilian, was exceedingly alarmed when she became aware of a rustling in the palms behind her chair. Her agitation was increased by glimpses of a white shirt-front. At last she said in an awed whisper, "Don't move Mr. Judkins, but do you know, I am very much afraid we are being stalked!" Mr. Judkins so far neglected her warning as to shoot out of his chair, saying, "Bless my soul! My dear lady, you don't say so!" He fumbled for his glasses, which he polished and balanced on his nose, and peered into the confused mass of pots and plants, whereupon an apologetic boy emerged from the shadows.

"I'm awfully sorry to disturb you," he said with a helpless little gurgle of laughter, the idea of anyone's stalking Miss Branscome and the mild civilian struck him as irresistibly comic. "Fact is, I was looking for your niece, Miss Branscome. I can't find her anywhere."

Miss Branscome looked at him rather severely. "I thought you were down in Diwanipur" she said. "I believe I saw Eve go into the garden with Captain Charleton about ten minutes ago."

Cathal scarcely stopped to thank her, but was off down the sloping hillside garden, almost sliding down the steep paths in his haste, pursuing a flutter of white. Eve and a tall young man were pacing along a level path below the slope, he talking in low excited tones, she listening with the pretty little air of half-feigned indifference so familiar to Cathal. He cleared six steps at a breathless bound and dropped on the path in front of them. "Our dance, I think, Miss Branscome! sorry to be so late, but I was looking for you everywhere." There was an exultant ring in his voice, and the Irish intonation was distinctly noticeable. Captain Charleton glared at him. "There must be some mistake!" he said, addressing himself pointedly to Eve. She was silent for a moment, glancing from one to the other; then she stepped forward and slipped her hand through Cathal's arm. "Yes, there was a mistake," she agreed sweetly, "but I fear it was mine. I quite forgot that I was engaged to Mr. McLaughlin for this dance. I hope you will forgive me." Cathal waited until Charleton was out of earshot and gave way to a suppressed yell of joy. "By Jove. This is good!" he said. "Did you really mean it when you gave that chap the go-by?" She nodded. "I was so pleased to see you" she said. "I never thought you would come. Did you have any trouble about getting leave?" "I did," he said; "but this is worth it." "You know me well," laughed Eve. "If you had not turned up, I should have become engaged to Captain Charleton."

"I imagined something of the sort" said Cathal. "I must go back to-morrow. I only came up to make sure of you to claim you as my own." He stood, and faced her. "Tyrant!" she murmured. He came nearer. "Eve, do you love me?" She nodded, an inscrutable gleam in her eyes. Cathal looked at her anxiously. A sudden sombre shadow had fallen across his face, dimming the spirited hopefulness of it. "Are you sure?" he persisted. "Could anything change you? Could anything I did make any difference to you? Are you quite, quite sure?" "Quite, quite sure!" she replied, mockingly. She leaned nearer, smiling up at him, "at least, just now." Cathal was silent, but he caught her in his arms, and, with a boyish mixture of reverence and passion, kissed the smooth fragrant cheek upturned to him.

Eve was sitting disconsolately in the verandah of the little hill bungalow in which she and Miss Branscome had installed themselves. The postman had just been and several unopened letters lay in her lap. "I can't think why Cathal McLaughlin hasn't written to me. It's three weeks since he went back to Diwanipur, and he hasn't sent me either letter, post-card, or wire. I call it disgraceful." Miss Branscome looked up absently from her knitting. "You hear daily from so many young men that I should not have thought that one's falling off could possibly matter, particularly an impecunious subaltern."

Eve smiled demurely. "Cathal will be a most eligible party one of these days if he keeps in his uncle's good books." Miss Branscome, who was counting stitches, only grunted a reply and there was silence for a while in the sunny verandah. Eve looked out across the wild garden, bright with flowers, to the green-clad hills with the eternal snows as their backs. The afternoon sun was beginning to flush the white cones of the far mountains and a wreath of mist lay in the valley. "Its awfully hard on a girl to be engaged to a man in the plains right away at the beginning of a Simla season" she hinted darkly, "especially when he treats her so much as his own peculiar chattel that he doesn't even bother to write to her." Her aunt looked up "what nonsense you are talking, child" she said. "Read your letters, and don't rave," and picking up her work, she went into the house. At the door she turned and glanced down towards the gate. "There's one of your many young men to see you" she said over her shoulder. Eve sprang to her feet, scattering her letters round her, and leaned over the balcony. "Why, Cathal!" she cried, "it's you! at last! Why didn't you come before, or write, or anything? Cathal, have you been ill, dear? You look ready."

"I came as soon as I could." he said simply in answer to her first question. "My God, Eve. It's too good to be true! I hoped to find you unchanged, but I scarcely dared to make sure." Eve laughed lightly. "I'm hardly as fickle as all that" she said, "though your three weeks' silence annoyed me enormously. Were you so sure of me that you couldn't bother to write? Explain! We will here hold a Court of Enquiry."

Cathal winced. "Do you mean to say you don't know?" he said dully. "Know? What should I know?" she cried with an impatient twist of the shoulder. "Really, Cathal, the air is charged with mystery! What have you been doing with yourself to come up here looking ten years older and the picture of misery?"

Cathal looked dumbly away from her. The slanting light shone full in his grey eyes, which were blinded with the overwhelming pain of the young when their world falls to pieces in their hands.

"I thought you knew" he said. "Doesn't your father write to you?" She regarded him uncomprehendingly. "Yes, a curt weekly note of barely two sides. His last is there, I haven't opened it yet." "Read it!" said Cathal. She picked it up and turned it over in her hands. Cathal's attitude alarmed her and she tore open the envelope with a little shudder of excitement. She read the short note through twice before the sense of it dawned on her.

"I forgot to tell you," wrote Major Branscome in his casual way. "Your young friend, McLaughlin, was court-martialled, and removed from the Service for absence without leave."

Her cheeks blazed crimson. She tore the sheet of paper convulsively across, and across leaned forward, and flung the fragments in the boy's face. "And you dare to come back to me?" she cried in incredulous anger. "You—a deserter! An honourable thing it is to return to a girl after you have been dismissed the Service and expect her to marry you—an outcast—a disgrace!" "You said you loved me," said Cathal, white-faced under her scorn, "would you have married me if this had never happened?" "I refuse to be catechised" flashed the girl. "Love—You sicken me! So this is why you didn't write. You were under arrest, I suppose. Why did you desert?"

"The Major could not give me leave to come to the Bachelors' Ball, so I took it—knowing that it was my only chance."

"More Love!" sneered Eve, unsoftened. "Bah, you're a fool or a knave, or both. Did you imagine, poor fool, that I wouldn't mind, that I would be only too pleased for you to live on my money?"

"I have already explained to you," said Cathal patiently, though his temper was rapidly rising under her insults "that I supposed you to be in love with me. I believed you when you said nothing would make any difference to you. Then—Eve, are you quite heartless? Don't you remember that night in the garden, and I kissed you, and we were engaged?" "We were not!" lied Eve. "The word was never mentioned, and, as for loving you—" she laughed. "Il y a toujours un qui baise, et un qui tend la joue,' you know!"

Cathal stood for one breathless pregnant moment, and, as he looked at her, all the youth seemed to die out of his face, leaving it stern and grey. The fury in his eyes cowed her and she shrank back.

"Where are you going, Cathal? What will you do?" she asked quiveringly. "I also refuse to be catechised," he answered fiercely. "What I do now has nothing to do with you." He stopped a moment then. "I trusted you" he said slowly, "and you have ruined my life." He stared at her; again she quailed under his intent eyes and he turned and went steadily down the path. At the gate he stopped, and some ironical spirit of mockery prompted him to drop two of his visiting cards into the "Not At Home" box that hung on the gay white palings, then he passed down the road and the group of trees hid him from sight.

He had forgotten to shut the gate which swung on its hinges with a melancholy creak. The girl, her arms on the rail of the balcony, her chin resting on her hands, watched it, fascinated.

Miss Branscome came out into the verandah brandishing a skein of green wool. "Will you hold this for me to wind?" she asked. "What has become of your visitor?"

Eve gave her gay little laugh. "He has gone" she said. "It was young Mr. McLaughlin, who used to be in dad's Company. He has been turned out of the army, you know, and apparently came up here to say good-bye. Quaint idea isn't it. I fancy he left his cards in the box. By the way, aunt, Captain Charleton is coming to dinner to-night and I asked that funny old Judkins for you."

One day a minister, on going home from a meeting met one of his elders "very fou." "Dear me, John," he exclaimed, "how did you get in this state?" "Oh! minister," replied John, "it's a' due to thae Communion-cards." "What!" cried the minister; "you don't mean to say you have been delivering your cards in that state?" "Oh, no," said John; "but the folks were a' that kind in offering me a drop that I was dune for afore I kent where I was." "But surely every one did not offer you drink?" continued the preacher. "Are there no teetotallers in your district?" "Oh, ay," answered the elder, "plenty of them; but I send theirs by post!"

In the dusky twilight His Majesty sat at his front door fanning himself when a stranger approached as though in a hurry. "Can I get accommodation here?" he inquired briskly. Satan peered at the visitor for a moment. "Aren't you Colonel Roosevelt?" he inquired. "O course." "Well you can't be accommodated here," exclaimed his Satanic Nibs, jumping up and slamming the door. "I've got things running in fairly good shape, considering the crowd on hand, but if you got in you'd be introducing some new order of other, and I'd never have another minute's peace again. Beat it Colonel." And Satan waved his hand outward towards the Eternal Elsewhere.

THE BREEDING OF ELEPHANTS.

THE birth of a male Indian elephant calf on April 6th, 1912, in the Zoological Gardens in Copenhagen serves to remind us of the extreme rarity of such an event, alike in Europe, and among elephants living in captivity in India. In Europe only three such births appear to have been recorded, namely, one in London in 1903 and two in Copenhagen, respectively in 1907 and 1912. So far as India is concerned, we have have been unable to come across any records at all of the birth of elephant calves in captivity, although it can scarcely be doubted that such events have occurred from time to time.

Their extreme rarity—alike in India and in Europe—testifies, however, to the enormous effect confinement and domestication produce on the temperament and organisation of the Indian elephant; the effects extending probably to both sexes. According, however, to Dr. Blanford, breeding is much less uncommon among elephants kept in captivity in Burma and Siam, although it is difficult to see why this should be the case. Possibly some information on the subject may be found in Major Evans' recent book on elephants, which, unfortunately, we have not at hand at the time of writing.

That it would be a great economical advantage if elephants could be induced to breed with comparative frequence in confinement, does not, of course, admit of argument. In the first place, a vast amount of expense and trouble in the matter of constructing kheddas and driving in and taming herds of wild elephants would be saved. Then, again, there is little doubt that elephants bred in captivity would be more amenable to discipline and would display, through inheritance greater intelligence than jungle-bred animals. Moreover, if the breeding of domesticated elephants could be regularly and permanently established, it would remove all fears with regard to the eventual extermination of the species in India. For many years at any rate, the domesticated stock could be strengthened from time to time by an infusion of wild blood.

All this savours, however, somewhat of an attempt to cook your hares before you have caught them. And the thing to be done first is for Government to institute an enquiry as to whether different methods of treatment—especially when first captured—might not result in inducing elephants to breed in captivity. The fact that they will do so occasionally, both in India and Europe, is quite sufficient to indicate that satisfactory results might accrue if a start was made.

The births in Copenhagen have done something towards settling the question of the duration of pregnancy in the Indian species. Before referring to this point it may, however, be mentioned that the calf born in England in 1903 was the offspring of a female elephant in Sanger's travelling menagerie, which was offered hospitality in the Zoological Gardens. Unfortunately this calf died soon after birth and its mounted skin is now exhibited in the Natural History branch of the British Museum. Nothing appears to have been ascertained with regard to the duration of prepancy in this instance. In addition to a number of black bristles in the region of the back and head the skin of this calf is remarkable for carrying a relatively thick coat of soft woolly hair, recalling that borne at all ages by its extinct relative the mammoth.

Both the Copenhagen calves were the offspring of the same two parents, the male being now 42 and the female 19 years of age, the first calf is now a fine healthy young bull rising five years old. The new arrival weighed 180lbs. shortly after birth and stood about a yard in height. In both specimens the upper part of the body—but more especially the backs and head—is clothed with black bristles, which in the case of the elder have grown to a considerable length, and thus give it an appearance very different to that of its absolutely hairless parents. No mention is made of any woolly coat in either of their calves; neither can we find any information as to whether jungle-born calves normally exhibit either the bristles or the woolly coat, or both together.

In the case of the first of the two Copenhagen calves the length of the period of gestation was 23 months, but the second calf sprang a surprise on the authorities at the gardens by making its appearance in the world after a gestation of only 21 months.

Dr. Blanford, quoting from papers by Mr. Heysham in the Zoological Society's Proceedings for 1865 (p. 731) and 1880 (p. 23), stated that the length of the period of gestation is about 19 months, although said to range between 18 and 22 months. The Copenhagen evidence seems, however, to indicate that it is generally somewhat longer.

It may be added that elephant calves in India are generally born, according to Dr. Blanford, in the autumn and winter, during the months of September, October and November; but it is noteworthy that both the Copenhagen calves made their appearance in the spring. The fact that a period of five years elapsed between the two births may indicate that this is about the normal interval between the appearance of two successive calves. Some clue to this might have been afforded if we had been told the length of time the Copenhagen calves suckled their dams.

Further information with regard to this and other points connected with the breeding of the Indian elephant is eminently desirable.

PERFORMANCES OF THE WINNER.

Tagalie, grey filly, by Cyllene—Tagalie, bred by her owner, had three outings as a two-year-old. At Newmarket First October she won the Boscawen Stakes, beating Donnithorne, Serenader, and Marforio. In the Cheveley Park Stakes, Second October Meeting, she was beaten a neck and four lengths by Bellelsle and Polkerris, and at Sandown Autumn was unplaced to Lance Chest, Paradise, and Omnibus for the Hook Two-Year-Old Plate. The filly ran her first three-year-old race on the 3rd ultimo, appropriating the One Thousand Guineas, she also appeared in the Newmarket Stakes in which she ran second to Cylgad.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

By the time that these notes are in print the Derby result will have arrived to us and will be found in our telegraphic columns; but as our wire does not arrive until after this portion of the paper has gone to press the opportunity for comment does not present itself and we are therefore compelled to discuss matters anterior. Nothing save the scratching of Cylgad, has happened to disturb the status quo ante during the past week and there has been little or no alteration in the betting, save the introduction of one or two more horses at long odds, such as Pintadeau, His Majesty's colt at 14 to 1, Lorenzo 25 to 1, Javelin 33 to 1, Tracery 50 to 1, Farman 50 to 1, Farrier 50 to 1, and St. Neots 50 to 1, and there have been one or two unimportant changes in the prices of some of the others. Tagalie, for instance, who was quoted at tens last week, is not mentioned in recent reports; White Star, who was at 15 to 1, has shortened to 7 to 1, Mordred, who was at 10 to 1, is last mentioned at 100 to 9, Pintadeau has shortened from 14 to 1 to 100 to 7, Jingling Geordie has gone from 12 to 1 to 25 to 1, Lomond is about the same, being returned at 14 to 1 against 15 to 1 his last quotation. The two favourites remain about the same: Sweeper II.'s price being about 7 to 2 against 5 to 2 and in some quarters he is quoted at 100 to 30. The following may be taken to be about the average market prices before the actual day of the race:—

7	to	2	agst.	Sweeper II.
100	,,	12	,,	White Star.
10	,,	1	,,	Mordred.
10	,,	1	,,	Tagalie.
12	,,	1	,,	Jaeger.
14	,,	1	,,	Pintadeau.

The wire giving the actual composition of the field so far as it is possible to know it will arrive after these notes have been written and all that the above list claims to be as a record of the last returned prices of horses that have been mentioned in the "probable" list during the past week. Last year, as will doubtless be remembered, a number of owners were made substantial monetary offers to start and not a few of these offers were from India from backers who had a substantial interest in their doing so, but this year these interests may not be so large and we may not therefore find every outsider that is quoted being given a run for the benefit of some outside the stable. Last year twenty-six ran and we shall probably see something like a field of twenty start this year if the recent betting may be taken as any fair indication.

As to the horses that have been not until now been mentioned Pintadeau, His Majesty's chestnut colt by Florizel II., out of Guinea Hen, recently won at Newmarket, the occasion being the Mildenhall Stakes, 1½ mile, in which race he dead-heated with Tidal Wave, who is owned by Mr. P. Ralli, Wedgwood finishing four lengths away. Pintadeau also won the Wood Ditton Stakes at Newbury, beating Orchestrion and Kosciusko, the other runners being Jewel, Sysonby, Adelante, Winstanley, Reclame, Veryan and Samura. As a two-year-old Pintadeau won once only, the Fitzwilliam Stakes, at Doncaster in which Svetoe ran second and Eiderduck was third. A Royal victory during the present reign would be as popular as it was during that of our beloved Sovereign's sire, and if this descendant of St. Simon is to repeat the triumphs of the other Royal horses from the same great stock—Persimmon and Diamond Jubilee—the popular enthusiasm would be as great as it was upon those two occasions and also when Minoru (by Cyllene) won in 1909. Pintadeau, however, has not so far given any warrantable indication of being as good class as the other three horses that have brought the Royal colours home in front in the big classic. It is hardly necessary for us to say, however, that if the estimate in which this colt has been so far held is proved to be below his real value, the national satisfaction will be enormous. His Majesty King George V. has gained a place in the affections of his subjects equal to that occupied by his Royal father, and no section of the nation is more loyal to the Throne than the racing and sporting fraternity the world over. They recognised a right Royal sportsman in King Edward VII. and they recognise in the son of that distinguished monarch one who is treading in the self-same paths that lead to universal popularity. A Royal victory at Epsom this year is perhaps more than we dare hope for, but the hope still exists. His Majesty's keen interest in the sport of kings is evidenced in many directions, and in India we have cause to know that the present King of England is anxious to help and support racing in any way that lies within his power. At a period when crank legislators and ante-sport fanatics are doing their best to spoil sport and unduly interfere with the liberty and enjoyment of the subject a Royal success upon the turf would be exceptionally gratifying and even if it is not to come this year we can but express the fervent hope that the day is not far distant when we shall have cause to join in the general congratulations which such an event will bring forth.

MORDRED, whose early performances last and this season were referred to in this column last week, recently secured the March Stakes, 1½ miles, at Newmarket, beating The Story, 6yrs. and Oliver Goldsmith, 4yrs., at weight-for-age; amongst the other runners being Mushroom, 4yrs., Succour, aged, and Outram 3yrs.

ENGLAND, who is by William the Third out of Golden Hope, won the Union Jack Stakes, 1 mile, at Liverpool, beating St. Pat III. and Seapiece. He is owned by Mr. C. E. Howard and he only won once as a two-year-old, the occasion being a 6-furlong Plate at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting in which Juggernaut ran second and Sangaree was third and there were three other runners.

HALL CROSS by Desmond out of Altesse, owned by Mr. C. Bower Ismay, has already been referred to in the course of these notes at various times, but it may be recalled that he was first seriously noticed in connection with this year's Derby after he won the Berkshire Three-Year-Old Handicap, 7 furlongs, beating Cuthbert and Sandwort anyhow. After that victory he was considerably fancied in some quarters for the Guineas, and it is recorded that his owner took 10 to 1 about him for the Derby. He is admitted to be one of the fastest of them, but they are doubtful as to whether he can stay over a distance of ground, as he favours the speedy Altesse rather than his sire who descends from a long line of stayers.

How to Conquer the Mosquito.

The only weapon you need is a drop of Odol. Place this drop on a piece of wadding or a handkerchief, and apply it to the part that has been bitten, and all pain will quickly disappear. The spot will be soothed, cleansed and comforted. Odol is equally efficacious for insect bites and stings of all kinds. Every home in a hot climate should be provided with Odol, which, as everyone knows, is the World's Dentifrice. Being also a sure remedy for bites and stings it is doubly valuable.

AIGLON, by Eager out of Chaffinch, is owned by Lord Saville and has been particularly well thought of in connection with the longer of the first two classics, but they gave him a sporting chance in the Two Thousand. The descendants of Eager are renowned more for brilliancy than capacity to stay, but this colt is said to be full of substance and quality and last season he "called it right" two out of three. He won two maiden plates at Newbury, one in October and one last November.

LORENZO, by St. Frusquin out of Pie Powder, is owned by Mr. Leopold de Rothschild and ran forward on each of the two occasions upon which he was out as a two-year-old, being placed third to Fruition and Jaeger in the Imperial Produce Plate at Kempton and he ran second to White Star in the Dewhurst Plate last October, Cylgad being third and Halberd fourth.

JINGLING GEORDIE by Santry out of Merange is owned by Mr. J. Buchanan and has won twice this year, his first victory being the Greenham Plate at Newbury in which he beat Serenader and Maiden Erlegh and a more recent and more important victory was the Craven Stakes at Newmarket in which he was followed home by Apprentice and Hector. They kept him very busy as a two-year-old and he won them three out of his ten engagements, the occasions being the Caterham Plate at Epsom, the Levant Stakes at Goodwood, and the International Two-Year-Old Plate at Kempton in which he beat Absurd and Kosciusko. He has been backed on and off for the Derby, but his most recent quotation does not indicate any great degree of confidence upon the part of the great whisky magnate.

JAVELIN, by Spearmint out of Full Cry, carries the Duke of Devonshire's straw jacket, but it would require something with a better two-year-old certificate than this one, under ordinary conditions to win the word's greatest classic. He is by one of the best horses that has won a Derby and by a very fast one to boot. Spearmint is by Carbine and besides winning the Derby he secured the Grand Prix of 1906.

TRACERY is a brown colt by Rock Sand out of Topiary and is owned by Mr. August Belmont and he did not run in England last year. Farman by Velocity out of Fascination is owned by Mr. Arthur James and was at one time much thought of, but if the Hon. George Lambton is to train a Derby winner he will probably want something of better quality than this. The "heads" gave this colt no chance whatever and his quotation has never been shorter than 50 to 1.

ST. NEOTS is by Isinglass out of St. Neophyte and is one of Sir John Robinson's breeding. His recent record is not encouraging, being represented by a virtual blank and he did not manage to strike "ile" as a two-year-old and out of his four essays he was only placed twice, the occasion being second in the Rous Plate at Doncaster to Outram, Buckshank third and second in the Maiden Two-Year-Old Race at Newmarket, 6 furlongs, to Tidal Wave, Mirska being third, and amongst the other runners were Glinska, Early Hope, Paradise, etc., etc.

Cylgad, winner of the Newmarket Stakes and one of the fancied candidates for yesterday's big race, had recently been stopped in his work owing to some trouble. But he was sent out again and on Saturday pulled up lame after a gallop at Newmarket, which resulted in his being scratched the same day.

Mr. R. S. Sievier is still hard at work condemning the standing start and the starting gate and is a hot advocate for the abolition of the one and if possible of the second also; but certainly of the first. In the first contention we are with him, for it is undoubtedly a wrong principle for a horse to be asked to jump off his tail into full gallop: it also, as Mr. Sievier says, is apt to and does cause a good deal of foul riding and bumping. In a more or less recent article in the Winning Post in which he condemns the gate and deplores the scarcity of good starters in England, Mr. Sievier wrote:—

"It needs no remarking that a horse on the move must get away quicker than the one in official pose. Apart from these results there is considerable crowding and hanging together at the tapes, and frequently a jockey has his knee covering another's, which means that the man behind cannot do justice to his mount at the start until their knees are unlocked. Moreover, consider the foul riding that can occur at this point. It does take place. It is common knowledge. Another vicious result is the kicking of horses at the gate. Hardly a single start ever takes place without a horse lashing out, and it is a miracle more are not permanently injured. Many are harmed sufficiently to ruin their chance for the race, but these cases seldom come to the knowledge of the Press or the public. A trainer looks ahead, and is reticent about saying his charge could have won but for being kicked at the gate. It has been made amply manifest that the standstill start is a failure if it is not cruelty, and it behoves all concerned to remedy the present evils if only for the sake of common humanity."

When Lord Durham was in India in the cold weather he remarked upon the all-round excellence of the starting at Calcutta and paid Mr. R. G. Bates, the ex-official starter to the C.T.C., a very high compliment upon the excellent results achieved, comparing the starting here more than favourably with that at home. It is presumable, therefore, and practice in Australia has shown it to be so, that good starting is possible. It is said, however, that taking them as a whole Australian thorough-breds are more tractable than their English brethren and that bad accidents from kickers at the starts of their races are few and far between. Be this as it may it does not help matters when starting is concerned in England and we must accept it that it is on the whole very bad and that some reform in the method of using the gate is desirable. A mechanical contrivance enabling a walk-up start to be obtained is surely not beyond the powers of inventors? As a matter of fact we believe that many years ago in America such a contrivance was in use, but it was not brought to a state of any great perfection and we heard no more of it. An improvement upon this original idea would meet the present difficulty, though even there if the human element be bad it will not be possible to avert bad starts. After all is said and done it is the men behind the lever who counts!

The Stewards of the C.T.C. are to be congratulated upon having secured the services of Mr. C. H. Holder as handicapper for the Monsoon Meetings and we predict that the experiment, if it can be so called, will be successful. Mr. Holder is a keen follower of form, has had a practical experience of racing both as a G. R., an owner, and a private trainer and no better appointment could have been made. The C.T.C. are still hunting about for a second handicapper to replace Mr. S. Griffiths and we should not be surprised if they have not in Mr. Charlie Holder found the very man they want. It is an appointment which demands something besides an expert appreciation of form, though that is no doubt the principal thing, but Mr. Holder is well known and well liked amongst racing folk in India and we have no doubt that his selection will prove to be a very popular one.

Mr. Hilliard, A.V.D., will come down to ride Captain Barrett's horses in their jumping engagements at the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings and will also have one or two of his own. The joint string will, so we hear, number about half a dozen and Captain Barret goes to Lucknow after he returns from the Simla Meeting to have a look at them and see how they are doing.

A couple of issues ago we published a paragraph, stating that the well-known jockey Alf. Hoyt had met with a serious accident in Australia. It has been pointed out to us that this is a mistake; we learn that Alf. Hoyt is quite well, but that it is his brother Ralph who was injured. The correspondent who supplied us with the news evidently got mixed with the names Alf. and Ralph—a pardonable mistake. We, however, regret that our paragraph has caused much uneasiness among A. Hoyt's many friends, some of whom, tell us that they have been put to much expense in regard to telegrams to Australia and all over India to get correct information on the subject.

We regret to learn that Mr. Steel Perkins, one of our prominent local G. R's., came by an accident on the race-course on Saturday morning. While schooling one of Mr. Gutschke's ponies over jumps the animal refused and Mr. Perkins somehow broke his arm near the wrist. He was conveyed to the Presidency General Hospital, where he is at present in the Woodburn Ward. We are glad to know that he is progressing favourably and we wish him a speedy recovery.

The first entries for the Army and Civil Service Cups at Lucknow are as follows:—

May a twelve-year-old dun-coloured cob standing 14-2 hands, was driven with a governess car 100 miles in 13hrs. 27mins., completing the journey in good condition.

The owner and driver, Mr. Thomas Davies, of Field House Farm, near Eccleshall, Staffordshire, has been in the habit of driving the horse long distances and has learned that he is a good stayer. The road was good and on the whole flat. Mr. Davies left Eccleshall at 6-3 A.M. and reached Wolverhampton (twenty-three miles) at about 8-40. He baited for thirty minutes, returned, reaching Eccleshall at 11-40, and at once drove eight miles (four out and four in) on the road to Stone. After an hour's rest a second journey to Wolverhampton was begun at 1-20 P.M. At Wolverhampton there was twenty-five minutes' baiting, and Eccleshall was reached on the final return journey at 7-30.

The pace throughout was between eight and nine miles an hour, except on the short journey at mid-day, part of which was taken at twelve miles. The driver had no whip and drove almost all the day with a slack rein, allowing the horse to make his own pace. At the end, we are told, the animal showed no signs of fatigue.

THE topic which at present engrosses all polo enthusiasts in England is the attitude of the Army Council towards military polo in London. It may turn out, however, that the conclusions which are being drawn fly wide of the central facts, and they certainly appear to miss the probabilities of the situation.

Alarm and despondency undoubtedly prevail, born of a letter circulated by the commander of a Cavalry brigade. The terms of the letter are so unexpected that it seems reasonable to assume a serious misapprehension somewhere. Briefly, the letter amounts to this: that unless all practice in London by officers either as a team or individually, is abandoned, the Inter-Regimental Tournament will be abolished by the authorities. Such a drastic and complete reversal of a thoroughly defined attitude on the eve of the polo season, when programmes have long been completed and published and all arrangements made, would be too unreasonable to be practicable; and it is probably safe to assume that the wishes of the authorities have been misinterpreted.

It may not be out of place to recall the salient facts in the history of the Inter-Regimental Tournament which bear upon the present situation. In March 1906, Lord Haldane consented to the formation of an Army Polo Committee, the members of which were selected by name, and not (as had previously been the case with unsatisfactory results) by virtue of an appointment. Thus the interests and regulation of Army polo are now in the hands of a committee of officers in close touch with the authorities; and their object is so to keep down the expenses of the game as to make it possible for the greatest number of officers to take part in it. As they thoroughly understand the conditions which affect this issue, it may be taken for granted that they will not connive at or fail to thwart any enterprise which they may judge to be detrimental to the objects in view.

Polo has in the past been made the scapegoat for what is known as the "cost of living in the Army," whereas it is merely a proof that the natural instinct of an officer lead him to spend his private means in a recreation which cultivates every quality demanded of him on service. There is no official limit to the number of motor-cars which he may own; but, having regard to the probable terrain of the battle-field, it is more desirable that he should be a horsemaster and horseman than a mechanic; and he should be encouraged in this view. To deny the right of an officer to spend his spare time and money on polo is to drive him to other pursuits which, if they are not harmful, make neither for esprit de corps nor for efficiency. It is high time that the cant about the expense of polo was exposed. In regard to the immediate issue, it is all the more unpardonable because it is well known that, owing to the facilities available, an officer secures much better value for his money both in the quantity and quality of the practice he can obtain in London than is the case in the provinces. However, there is no reason to suppose that Lord Haldane, the Chief of the General Staff, and the Adjutant-General are not perfectly intimate with these facts, or to fear that they have suddenly decided to reverse a policy of which sensible soldiers and civilians approve.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Pioneer from Rangoon:—Mr. G. Fell, Honorary Secretary, Burma Polo Association, has issued a circular letter to polo clubs in Burma on the height of ponies regarding which there has been much discussion since the recent Maymyo tournament. The general consensus of opinion is that the game is not so flourishing as it ought to be, that no Burma-breds can compete with a certain number of high-class Walers, measuring 12-3, that the former have deteriorated sadly in the past seven years and that the high prices of Walers have put the game out of reach of men of ordinary means. There is not room for two classes of polo, so to revive the game Mr. Fell considers two alternatives for mounting players on the same class of pony:—

(1) Reverting to Burma-bred polo and eliminating the Waler.

(2) Raising the height which will have the effect of eliminating the Burma-bred pony.

Several objections are put forward to reverting to Burma-bred polo, namely, their scarcity and the preposterous price of good ponies owing to the demand for likely animals for racing. Only men with exceptional facilities for doing so can purchase decent ponies at reasonable price, so new-comers and soldiers have either to stop playing or buy small Walers. The game is languishing in consequence, and not only were entries wretched for the recent tournament, but for the next Polo Association Championship it has been proposed to reduce the tournament to four chukkers. Efforts for the past fifteen years to bolster up Burma-bred polo have not succeeded and the other alternative is to raise the height. The objection to importing more 12-3 Walers is that they are not bred in large numbers in Australia and are consequently dear, and other things being equal they do not make such satisfactary hacks and trappers as the larger animals. Mr. Fell proposed 13-2 or 13-3 as the best height for the following reasons which he examines at length:—

(a) The height is common in Australia and the class could be landed in batches here comparatively cheaply. Those unsuitable for polo could be disposed of easily as hacks.

(b) When the Indian height was raised there was a glut of Arab ponies of this height in the market and probably a considerable number of these could be obtained from Bombay.

(c) It is a common height of Indian country-breds.

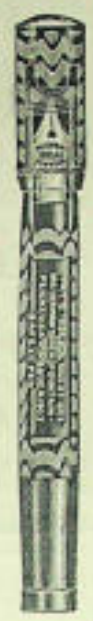
(d) It is important not to fix the Burma height near the Indian height; otherwise there would be competition in the market and they had no wish to compete with buyers there.

The main objection raised hitherto to the elimination of the Burma-bred pony has been that station polo which depends solely on military police ponies would die out in most places, but Colonel Perkins, Inspector-General of Police, has assured Mr. Fell that he will allow each military police battalion at a polo station, other than Rangoon, to buy up to a limit of twelve Walers 13-2 or 13-3 for use as native officers' chargers and these may be used for polo. It would, moreover, be a healthier state of affairs if, as in India, players bought their own ponies and did not rely on military police mounts. Another objection raised was that raising the height would prevent district officials playing the ponies that they ride in the jungle. But Mr. Fell's answer is that very few such officials do play. Secondly there is no reason why they could not use 13-2 or 13-3 Walers for their district work as many others do. He asks players for their views and the number of ponies they would want if the scheme of raising the height were carried. He remarks that it may be possible to play the championship tournament of 1913 on a higher pony.

THE polo tournament opened at Pachmarhi on the 25th ultimo, when a scratch team from Saugor, calling themselves the Blue Canaries, played the 22nd Punjabis from Jubbulpore, the game ending, after extra time had been played, in a win for the Saugor combination by two goals to one. The teams were:—

Blue Canaries.—1, Mr. Davison, 2nd Lancers; 2, Mr. Fleming, K. D. G.'s; 3, Captain Gould, 2nd Lancers; back, Captain Grimshaw, Poona Horse.

22nd Punjabis.—1, Mr. Johnson; 2, Mr. Webb; 3, Captain Clifford; back, Major Furney.



THE Beresford Polo tournament at Simla was brought to a conclusion last Friday, when the final match between Patiala State and the King's Dragoon Guards produced a most exciting game. The tournament this year was on handicap terms and Patiala started with plus one goal on the handicap and eventually won by this margin. The score was 5 all in the last period and the winning goal was not scored till the last few moments of the game.

THE final match for the Whitney Polo Cup was played in London on the 1st instant when the Argentines beat Eaton by 21 goals to 11.

A GYMKHANA was held at Annandale on the King's Brithday and only brought together a small attendance, owing to the counter-attraction of the Tennis Tournaments. The first event—a Trotting Race for Pairs—was won by Miss Macmahon and Captain Bruce. Then came an affinity event in which ladies threw a polo ball to their partners as they galloped past, the ball being subsequently thrown into a bucket: this was won by Major Harbord and Miss Muir. The third item, a word race, was won by Miss Macmahon. This was followed by another affinity event in which ladies rode up to their partners who stood on chairs; the ladies dismounted, and their partners mounted in to the ladies' saddles and raced home—won by Captain and Mrs. Barrett. In the last event ladies hit a polo ball round a given course: this was easily won by Mrs. Barrett.

In the English Amateur Golf Championship, now in progress at Westward Ho! Crabb Watt of Singapore beat Robert Harris of Acton in the second round by 6 up and 4 to play. Harris had been much fancied and was expected to get into the final. Yesterday Watt was beaten by Elwes (Royal Devon). Herreshoff, the crack American player, was beaten by D. Brown (Isle of Wight), who usually plays in the Straits.

Two new athletic records were established at New York last week end, when Gardner of Yale jumped 13ft. 1in. in the pole jump and Kiviat, who will be one of the American representatives at the Olympic games, ran 1,500 metres in 3mins. 56⅘secs.

The contest for the World's Feather-weight Championship and a purse of £1,200 was brought off at the National Sporting Club on the night of the King's Birthday, when Jim Driscoll knocked out Jean Poesy in the twelfth round. Poesy had been looked upon as a very tough opponent, but Driscoll evidently showed that though no longer in his first youth he has lost none of his old cunning. The Frenchman's record may be of interest to our boxing readers. He was born at Marseilles in 1889 and started boxing as an amateur. His first professional engagement was against Eudeline in 1909 whom he beats on points in 6 rounds. Two contests with Audouy followed, the first ending in a draw, the other in favour of Poesy. He next beat Gouvenaux and Forest and in 1910 came forward as a boxer of promise, when he beat in turn Gurit, Forest, Mark Barrett, Marcel Denis, Christian, Tom Hart, Jamain and Bill Bennett, and drew with Bill Lewis, De Ponthieu and Jack Foy. He was only twice beaten—once by Jack Foy and by Paul Til—both on points. In 1911 he was beaten by the Argentine champion Willie Gould, but soon after he was victorious over young Brooks. De Ponthieu beat him again over 15 rounds and then he began a remarkable series of triumphs, beating Joey Smith, Jack Roberts, and Paul Til, who was considered unbeatable in France. He also recently defeated the English champion Digger Stanley.

At Leicester three weeks ago Harry Lewis, the well-known American middle-weight, was beaten by Private Palmers, the N. and A. Middle-weight champion in a twenty-round bout. It was a splendid contest and bar an incident that happened in the fifth round when Palmer was hit low and appealed for a foul, the work was of the cleanest. What surprised everyone present was the manner in which the Private accomplished his great feat. Lewis is known to be simply terrible at close quarters, but Palmer had him beaten to a frazzle at this game. The army man won on his merits and beat his opponent at his own game—infighting.

Joe Jeannette, who is eager to meet Jack Johnson once again, and who is very confident that he can beat the champion, has been unable to coax or force Johnson into the ring and is now paying a visit to England. He was to meet Young Johnson at Glasgow the week the last English mail left, while Kid Johnson, Bob Scanlon, P. O. Curran and Fred Storbeck are all spoken of as possible opponents for him.

Somerset beat Gloucestershire, at Taunton, by three wickets.

Warwickshire beat Worcestershire by 189 runs.

Northants beat Leicester, at Northampton, by nine wickets.

Hampshire drew with Kent, at Southampton, but led on the first innings.

Essex beat Derbyshire, at Leyton, by an innings and 27 runs.

Notts beat Surrey, at Nottingham, by nine wickets.

Hampshire and Derbyshire drew at Southampton.

Warwickshire and Australians drew at Birmingham.

Yorkshire and Somerset drew at Dewsbury.

Essex and Middlesex drew at Leyton.

South Africans and Northants drew at Northampton.

Lancashire beat Kent, at Manchester, by an innings and 27 runs.

Surrey beat Sussex, at the Oval, by three wickets.

Oxford University beat Worcestershire, at Oxford, by 14 runs.

Notts beat Leicester, at Leicester, by 10 wickets.

The Open Championship Lawn Tennis Tournament just concluded at Simla was most successful in every way and the honorary secretaries, Mr. Sheen and Dr. Gray are to be congratulated on the excellence of their management. The earlier date of the tournament was a big factor in increase of entries and this year no fewer than 94 entered for the various competitions and there were representatives from Lahore, Calcutta, Lucknow, Delhi, Umballa, Jhansi, Fyzabad, Peshawar, and elsewhere. The venue being changed from Bleasington to the Kennedy House courts was also a great improvement. As announced last week the singles were won by Kunwar Maharaj Singh for the second year in succession. He showed excellent form throughout and easily beat Dr. Gray in the final. Dr. Gray played rather disappointingly in this match, but won the men's doubles partnered by Coates. The mixed doubles fell for the second year in succession to Kunwar Maharaj Singh and his sister Bibi Amrit Kuar. In addition to the championships some special contests were arranged and took place on the last three days. On Friday the Civil Service played the Military with the following results :—

Messrs. Gamble and Johnston beat Colonels Reid and Elsmie 7—5, 8—6. Messrs. Holme and Mant beat Major Sproule and Etlinger 6—3, 5—7, 6—1. Major Sproule and Mr. Etlinger beat Messrs. Ker and Rudkin 7—5, 6—1. Messrs. Mant and Holme beat Colonels Reid and Elsmie 6—1, 6—4.

On Saturday Simla played Outstations, honours being easy, each winning two matches. The Simla representatives were Mrs. Harrison, Miss Farrant, and Messrs. Holme and Ker, and the Outstation couples Misses Stoney and Binning and Messrs. Kaye and Vickery.

On Monday in the Simla vs. Outstation game Simla were worsted in two out of the three matches played. The Simla representatives were Miss Farrant, Bibi Amrit Kuar, and Messrs. Johnston and Maharaj Singh, while the Outstation players were Miss Gracey, Miss Binning, Capt. Moss, and Mr. Gamble.

The Olympic Games Covered Court Lawn Tennis Championships came to an end at Stockholm on the 12th instant, the King of Sweden presenting the medals at the close. The final of the Men's Singles between A. H. Gobert and C. P. Dixon attracted unprecedented interest. Both men volleyed superbly, and at the beginning the Englishman, who had defeated A. F. Wilding in the semi-final, had rather the better of the strenuous battle at the net. He led at 3—1 in the first set, but afterwards Gobert was the more accurate and was eventually victorious by 8—6, 6—4, 6—4. In the Men's Doubles A. H. Gobert and M. Germot (France) beat G. Setterwall and C. Kempe (Sweden) in the final 4—6, 14—12, 6—2, 6—4. Both the Ladies' Singles and the Mixed Doubles were won by England. Mrs. Hannam beat Frkn. S. Castenschiold (Denmark) 6—4, 6—3 in the Singles, and with C. P. Dixon beat H. Roper Barrett and Miss F. H. Aitchison in the final of the Doubles by 6—4, 6—3, 6—2.

At the London Sportsman offices on the 16th ultimo, Arnst and Barry signed articles to race for the World's Sculling Championship. The New Zealander, who has sculled for and won the title five times, is matched to row Ernest Barry on 29th July at 1-30 P.M. for £500 aside over the Championship course. Some discussion had been anticipated, but the only thing that was argued over was the date of the match, and this was finally settled for the 29th July.

Our readers will have read the article we published last week on Athletics and Oxygen. In this connection it is interesting to note that great indignation has been aroused throughout America at the revival in connection with the Olympic games of the controversy regarding the use of oxygen gas as a stimulant. The contention is that oxygen used for the purpose in question should be classed as a "stimulating drug," and therefore made inadmissible. Experiments made in England three or four years ago showed that athletes under the influence of pure oxygen were capable of displaying extraordinary energy for a short period, said that many records might be lowered by the inhalation of this gas at suitable times in or before a race. American sportsmen insist that oxygen shall not be included in the term "refreshments." They further maintain that any proposal that the use of oxygen may be allowed is as unsportsmanlike as unscientific.

Reverting to "long shots," a writer in our American contemporary, Sports Afield, expresses the opinion that the manufacturers of astounding statements in this line belong to the same class as the big-fish-that-got-away fishermen. He says that he once carefully tested by actual measurement with a 50-foot tape and the assistance of a steady setter the results of a series of shots at birds. The maximum distance he found was 25 yards, the minimum 12, and the average 18 yards. His conclusion is that few birds are killed outside 40 yards, and the so-called long shots are pure chance. One of the most difficult things taught in the Army is the estimation of distance, and accurate observation can only be obtained with practice. The average individual almost always over-estimates, and fully 95 per cent. of sighting shots fired at unknown distances over-shoot the mark. Shooting over water is still more deceptive.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 17th May 1912.

For many years the third Sunday in May has been observed at Hampton Court as "Chestnut Sunday." King Edward made it his practice to visit Hampton Court during the afternoon of the day, driving through the avenue and visiting also the Palace gardens. This year, owing to the unusual drought, the trees blossomed earlier, so that last Sunday was observed as Chestnut Sunday. The sight always attracts crowds, but the officials of the parks and gardens agree that never before has there been such a concourse of visitors as during the past week-end. This was no doubt due in part to the increased facilities for reaching Hampton Court this year, for besides a frequent service of trains and a three-minute tramway service there were five lines of motor-omnibuses running at frequent intervals from different parts of London. The scene indeed both on Saturday and Sunday resembled a bank holiday. There were thousands of motor-cars and carriages, and as most of the occupants alighted to walk through the Palace gardens the police found it exceedingly difficult to regulate the traffic. In addition to the chestnuts the remarkable display of spring flowers in the gardens aroused general admiration.

Charged with inciting soldiers to mutiny, Tom Mann, the Labour leader, described as an engineer, aged fifty-five, was found guilty at Manchester last week on three indictments and sentenced to six months imprisonment in the second division. Thank God! Though indeed the renegade has escaped very lightly. This person seems to imagine himself a martyr in the cause of free speech, just as Keir Hardie imagines that soldiers can be called upon to shoot men because they are strikers. What both have to learn is that it is the elementary duty of any Government to preserve order, as much from the rioter who disturbs it as from the burglar or murderer who breaks the law. Tom Mann, who has already made himself odious in more ostensibly democratic parts of the Empire, clearly incited troops to mutiny. His promptings were vile and dangerous and he has richly deserved his punishment. He and men like him are the worst enemies of their dupes. What we now want to hear is that he has been joined in jail by Keir Hardie, then many of us will begin to think that the air is becoming purer to breathe.

A discussion, the mere outline of which must send a wave of bitter resentment through a thousand boarding-schools, was allowed to go to outrageous lengths in the council chamber of the Guildhall last Monday.

If Smith Tertius had strayed that morning into the gallery of the historic hall he would have looked down on the unnerving spectacle of 250 demented men and women applauding such infamous proposal as the total abolition to tuck shops, the confiscation of smuggled savouries, and the compulsory consumption of porridge.

All this was under the guise of what is called a "Conference on Diet in Public, Secondary, and Private Schools." Headmasters, callously humorous; housemasters, heartlessly flippant; schoolmistresses and women doctors all contributed their quota to this new programme of persecution. Everyone in the scholastic system was represented—except Smith Tertius.

The schoolboy must face the facts. The tuck shop is going, the smuggled sausage roll and the secret pickle bottle are threatened. But there is worse to reveal. At Monday's conference there arose the ridiculous Dr. Hutchinson, who calmly proposed that parents should be enjoined to give their children more simple fare at home, in order that in term time they would not rebel against dinners of mutton and jamless teas.

"Schoolboys," said this fellow Hutchinson, "eat practically what they ask for at home nowadays, and the consequence is that when they return to school they are always hankering for tins of ham and tongue and spicy pressed beef. If we wish to get at the root of the problem of diet in schools we must modify and improve the methods of feeding the schoolboy at home."

The only consolation for Smith Tertius is that his young sister at the girls' school is also marked down as a victim. One of the speakers was Miss de la Mare, the headmistress of a Folkestone school. A hundred hockey teams will hear her words and tremble.

"I object," she said, "to my girls eating chocolates between meals, and if a girl has a box sent by her parents it is the rule that they must be eaten at table, and divided."

Another shock for Smith Tertius. Dr. Clement Dukes referred to the parental hamper as "a mediæval and barbarous arrangement."

After this it came as no surprise that a headmaster should propose that schoolboys should lay their own tables. He was Dr. Upcott, the head of Christ's Hospital, and he told the conference that in his school 820 boys sat down to dinner in one room.

"The boys do their own waiting," he said, "lay their own tables and clear them away. I think all headmasters should gradually get their pupils into that practice, for it is excellent discipline."

Dr. Upcott, however, appears to have been the only delegate to respect the schoolboys' opinion. He invited three of his boys to tea, and asked them what they objected to most in the school menu. "They told me 'baked mince.'" said the doctor, "but I found on cross-examination that it was really the presence of gristle which they disliked.

"I can sympathise with them there. I abhorred gristle as a boy and I abhor it as a man. I have no doubt we shall find some means of keeping it out of the baked mince at Christ's Hospital."

But seriously, granted that it is a hysterical age, could banality go further than this "Conference on Diet?"

Magnificent stage pictures, music melodious, richly flowing and haunting, and Mr. George Grave—these will assuredly bring a very large measure of success to "Princess Caprice," which was produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Saturday night. To do him full justice we should have placed Mr. George Graves first amongst the attractions of the new play; for it is his amusing presence which chiefly makes amends for a thin book, not in itself particularly amusing. But the scene presents a finely designed scheme of colouring, and the ladies' dresses are superb; the spectacle, indeed, is always as richly elaborate as it is artistic; while Hern Le Fall's music—running greatly to waltz rhythms—will soon be familiar all over London. Miss Clara Evelyn was beautiful and bright as Helen, Miss Marie Blanche, a newcomer, was fresh and pretty and dainty as Anna; Mr Courtice Pounds, with too little to do—he should certainly be provided with more songs—made the most of a pleasant part; Mr. Harry Welchman sang and acted agreeably as the romantic music master; and Miss Cicely Courtneidge, Mr. Fred Leslie and Mr. George Hestor, among others, contibuted to the triumph of a production which delights by its brightness and charms by its tunefulness and prettiness.

M. Brieux is, of course, a master of the dramatic pamphlet—that unconvincing hybrid form. In "La Robe Rouge" at the Little Theatre, he shows what a clumsy, harmful thing the Law may be; how it debases the lawyers and all connected with it, by making them callous to human suffering, and how, quite apart from the question of punishing criminals, it may ruin the lives of perfectly innocent people. An old fellow has been murdered in a lonely house. A Basque peasant, Etchepare, is arrested. Mouzon, the examining judge, catches him up lying out of fear; and he is put on his trial. He is acquitted, but in the course of the trial he learns that his wife, with whom he has lived ten years, was convicted of theft and loose conduct when she was a girl; and, horrified at this, he throws her off. Yanetta has nothing to live on or for, and mad with anger at the examining judge who betrayed her secret, she stabs him. There is much in the play that is terrible and powerful; but it leaves you unconvinced, because it is so obviously a prepared case. In fact, you come away thinking there is a great deal more to be said for the law and its method than you had previously imagined. The pamphlet-drama always fails both as pamphlet and as drama. Mlle. Myriam-Deroxe played Yanetta with real power and sincerity of emotion, but the effect of her performance, which was a fine one, was considerably weakened by the fact that she was feebly supported. The rest of the company almost without exception were insufficiently rehearsed and not at all up to her standard, though M. Jacques Landier played Etchepare with tremendous fire.

"The Bias of the World," a translated puppet play in three scenes by Jacinto Benavente was put on by the Stage Society last Sunday. It was a quaint idea to introduce a famous Spanish author with a play of a wholly un-Iberian nature. For in thought and form this puppet-farce belongs to the humours of the Netherlands. Those who have seen the universal exhibitions of Antwerp in the 'nineties and of Brussels in 1910 will remember that one of the the chief side attractions was the so-called "Poesjenellen-kelder"—the Cave of the Punchinelloes, where terrible and gory melodramas and screaming extravaganzas were introduced by marionettes handled and voiced by experienced players. In Flanders the puppet-play, survival of older centuries, still flourishes as a popular entertainment, and its dramatic humour, its pungent satire, its uncomprising flagellation of man and manners and the law appeal to the nature of the simple and happy folk whose life has changed little since the days of David Teniers.

"The Bias of the World," which seems an able translation from the Spanish, is nothing more than a Flemish Poesjenellen play, written by a graceful and refined pen. It should really be acted by lay figures instead of living players. For the actors, the English actors at any rate, spoilt the spirit of the thing; they have not sufficient imagination nor the peculiar lightness of touch with which the Latin races can create a make-belief. The plot is a little Koepenick affair. A couple of impostors, the one a hidalgo the other a Mascarille, arrive penniless in the mediæval town, and, by the valet's stratagem, they raise the wind as well as a reputation of great wealth. Naturally, the hidalgo is much in request for matrimonial purposes and he succeeds in winning the heart of the daughter of the richest man in the town. But somehow it becomes bruited about that these two strangers have a bad record; the law is put in motion; the creditors—eager to recover their money now that the bubble has burst—threaten brimstone and hellfire; but the learned man of the bar put all right "provided always that" he be paid as well as his mistress, the law. This scene—which is the raison d'etre of the play—is rather amusing, as it satirises the cupidity of man as well as the caprices of Justitia and her henchmen. But it is really not much more than a superior act of Continental operetta.

In the interpretation the main and irreparable fault was the Crispin, the servant as conceived by Mr. W. G. Fay. He would not have extracted a single laugh from the audience but for the natural attractiveness of his Irish accent—an accident which saved the play from a severe fall. For Crispin is the play. He is its main character; its spirit; in a sense its chorus, for it contains all the comments and reflections which the author wishes us to enjoy in the vein of ridicule. It is a part which seems proof against failure, and an actor like Mr. James Welch would have made it a great personal success as well as a topic. Miss Mary Barton played the Leandro with a certain charm. By the author's special instructions the hero is impersonated by a woman. There may be a reason for it in Spain. In England there is no gain in such travesty, and a fervent love scene between two women loses all the charm of contrast.

A Raeburn portrait fetched a record price at Christie's yesterday, and this, the latest example of the lengths to which wealth will go in the quest of those art treasures most admired by the connoisseur, is a disturbing fact. Time after time we see treasures taken from this country in exchange for great sums of money, and the loss is irrevocable. Great paintings, rare books, noble statuary—these things have a value which cannot be appraised in pounds, shillings, and pence, and their value is only complete when they can serve the fullest purposes of artistic achievement on the walls of a public gallery, either permanently or in a loan collection. The true art lover is comparatively rare, and in most cases his genuine passion for great work must go largely unrequited. But it is a well-recognised symptom of modern manners that riches should be incomplete without homage paid to art. Thus the masterpieces of the past have attained an entirely fictitious value, and we are in constant danger of losing what we ought to hold. It would be absurd to blame those who let the masterpieces go to other lands. They are in most cases those whom the new Radical finance has specially singled out for oppressive taxation, and the temptations are so great as to be almost irresistible. Even so, however, here is on general principles a case for State intervention. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is a past master of the super-tax and the tax on unearned increment. The Government of the day is always ready to propose or support grandmotherly legislation which interferes with irritating and often disastrous effect in the private life of persons. But no effort can be made to save for the nation, on just and reasonable lines, treasures which have a national worth, which are held as personal property indeed, but with a distinct moral obligation to regard possession as a trusteeship. We shall lock the stable door when all the horses are gone.

Fishing.

I.

A boredom with things Oriental, combined with a temporary distaste for my coloured brother led me on several occasions during the year to get out an atlas and search for a country where the local colour would be different.

Fishing there must be, that was a sine qua non, the climate must be good, that for the memsahib, and the whole must be within a radius of three and a half months.

Something between tarpon and tiddle brats were the limits of our ambition, and eventually the decision fell on Tasmania.

The publications issued by the Tourist Bureau left us picturing gardens of Eden and the lakes of Killarney rolled into one, and crossed by heavenly Devonshire streams packed with voracious salmon and trout asking to be caught.

If the would-be tourist bears in mind that these pamphlets are for the express purpose of attracting visitors and that they, in consequence, somewhat naturally paint everything in the most roseate tints, he will make due allowances, and having thus arrived at a just proportion should not be disappointed.

I may say at once that Tasmanian scenery is on the whole pretty, and having said that, I have nothing further to add. I have heard people call it magnificent, stupendous, glorious, and can only conclude they have never seen landscapes to which such adjectives are applicable.

The climate is really good and invigorating, one feels one's old home energy returning day by day, leaving India with hardly enough go to kick a small dog, before I had been a fortnight in the country, I could and did fish and row a boat from after early breakfast to dark.

It struck me as strange that Tasmanians generally, both in their conversation and writings, expatiated freely and to any length on their scenery which is, as I have shown in my opinion, of the common or garden description, whereas of their climate and air which I thought divine they said very little or merely replied "Oh yer, it's not bad."

The reason may lie in the fact that every inhabitant of Australia is accustomed to a good climate, whereas we poor Anglo-Indians are not; on the other hand he is used to the deadly monotony of the bush with its everlasting gum trees, while most of us have seen at some period of our service in India, the Himalayas or the Burmese mountains which contain some of the most magnificent scenery in the world.

I do not propose to mention the voyage, they are all the same in their deadly monotony: some half a dozen lines of steamers are open to choice, all much the same as to cost and with little difference as to comfort or discomfort, whichever term you like to use.

Christmas day saw us steaming out of Colombo harbour, and after eight days exactly we dropped anchor at Freemantle, six days more saw us in Melbourne, from where an eighteen hour run in a fast turbine ferry boat landed us at our destination—Launceston.

I have no intention of boring any one with a minute detail of our experiences and an account of each fish killed, all fishermen's exploits are more or less on similar lines and where they are not their imagination can no doubt step in and fill the gaps.

My desire is more to open up a very delightful trip to my brother anglers in India and to give them a few hints which I guarantee are correct and up to date, and which boiled down with their own particular knowledge of fishing generally and by their personal fads and fancies will land them in Tasmania properly equipped and ought to save them many of the unnecessary sovereigns I wasted.

The first thing an angler will want to know is what fish there are to be caught.

This is easily answered, rainbow and brown trout: should anyone desire it there is fine bream fishing on certain of the estuaries all along the East Coast. It is I heard good fun, but it is bait fishing and therefore not in my line, but they are fine sporting fish averaging about three pounds, requiring no skill to hook and to any one content to loaf by the sea they form an additional attraction.

After fifty years of endeavours to acclimatise salmo salar it is sad to chronicle the complete failure of all these sporting efforts, no reason can be assigned as several of the rivers are apparently ideal for salmon.

They do well until the first migration to the sea takes place and then they disappear and never return. Some hold that the reason lies with the predaceous fishes which abound in these waters, but the majority consider, and I think rightly so, that when man attempts to place fish in a new and altogether different environment that nature steps in and frustrates their efforts.

I understand similar results have followed New Zealand efforts to acclimatise salmo salar, and it is now a sadly recognised fact that the experiment has failed throughout Australasian waters.

The use of the word salmon by many Tasmanian anglers and writers is misleading, the fish which they call by that name is a sea fish which comes into the tidal estuaries at certain times of the year and is known to naturalists as Arripis Salar or Arripis Truttaceous.

Frustrated in their attempts with salmo salar the fishery authorities are now gallantly endeavouring to acclimatise Salmo Sebago or the non-seagoing sebago salmon in the Great Lake.

This fish hails from the Sebago Lake in the State of Maine, U.S.A., where it runs to some 15 or 20lbs. Twenty thousand ova were successfully imported, of which 77 per cent. hatched out, some 4,000 yearlings were turned out at various parts of the Great Lake about a year ago. It is, of course, too early to know anything as to the results of this experiment which if successful will add enormously to the pleasures of fishing in that magnificent sheet of water.

The best rainbow trout fishing at present in Tasmania is undoubtedly at Lake Leake, an artificial reservoir of fifteen hundred acres, situated 2,100 feet above the sea.

Originally stocked in 1904 this one lake is sufficient attraction to warrant a visit to the island.

I fished it for fourteen days and my bag for that time was seventy-nine fish averaging 3lbs. two ounces, in addition to which I lost several dozen, this is a result that ought to satisfy the veriest glutton.

It may be of interest to note that my best rainbow was 6lbs., while the record is a fish of 10½lbs taken shortly after the lake was opened for fishing.

The first view of Lake Leake is rather striking: when the lake was originally made no attempt was made to remove the trees; when the lake filled these trees gradually died and now along the edge and in certain places stretching far out in to the centre those gaunt withered stumps stand, in places so close together that there is only room to row and frequently little enough to caste.

The fish seem to particularly affect the more heavily timbered parts, so little imagination is required to conjure up a fairly lively scene in which the dramatis personæ consist of a lively 5lbs. rainbow trout and a boat in a stiff breeze surrounded by dozens of withered gum trees standing up out of the water.

Heavy stocking with rainbows has been going on in the Arthur Lakes for some years and these will, I was told, be opened to public fishing on 1st February 1913. The watchers report thousands of fine trout on the spawning grounds each year, so high hopes are entertained that these lakes will at least equal Lake Leake. As they are larger sheets of water with better streams for spawning there seems no reason why they should not even excel it.

In the whole of this island of lakes the Great Lake, of course, stands out pre-eminently as the home of the leviathan brown trout, the record standing at 25½lbs.

I regret to say, however, it has fallen on evil days, although I hope and believe them to be but temporary.

In the first place the water of the lake has changed in colour : originally of a gin-like clearness, during the last few years it has assumed a milky opacity.

That a sheet of water fourteen miles long with a width varying up to 5 miles and covering some 28,000 acres should do this is I believe unique, and scientists are at fault to discover the reason. Analysis of the water discloses no adequate reason ; no known volcanic disturbance has taken place yet the bottom is invisible at a depth of twelve inches.

About three years ago fungus disease visited the lake and thousands of dead trout, some running up to 30lbs. were seen on the shores.

Little wonder is it then that the fishing is now very indifferent; fortunately, however, the fishery authorities are keenly awake to the situation and have built a hatchery from which they last year turned out 80,000 yearling rainbows and intend doing the same yearly.

These rainbows in conjunction with the sebago salmon experiment ought to make this lake one of the finest fishing grounds in the world, always provided there is no repetition of the dread fungus disease and that the discoloration of the water has no far-reaching evil effect.

During the ten days I put in here my best brown trout was an ugly brute of 9lbs., which gave little or no play ; indeed my experience of all the Great Lake brown trout was that they were hardly worth catching. I got mine on a 12-foot steel centre split cane rod and I gaffed him within three minutes, a fact which speaks for itself ; a 1lb. rainbow at Lake Leake would have given me double the sport.

I would advise no one to go to the Great Lake before making careful enquiries as to prospects of sport at the time ; getting there necessitates a forty-eight mile drive from the railway station, through dismal bush of endless gum trees.

I believe I am right in saying that there is not a single lake in the island which is not stocked and heavily so with brown trout. In the country west of the Great Lake are many lakes known only to stock riders and shepherds which would well repay the fisherman.

A lady could hardly go, neither could a cart drawn by horses, but a cart with a team of oxen or pack horses could do it.

On such a trip a collapsible boat would be necessary.

Most people prefer more beaten tracks, but from enquiries I made I feel convinced it would well repay any one keen enough to stand the roughing.

The lakes and streams are practically unfished and virgin waters, the country round is absolutely uninhabited and no roads exist, a few flocks of sheep with their attendants, kangaroos, opossums, and a few deer are the only living things for many miles.

A more delightful trip for a couple of congenial spirits I cannot imagine, the average altitude is 3,000 feet and the air is like champagne, while the rain during the fishing season may be disregarded.

CARE OF THE RIFLE.

As the bore of the rifle is manufactured with great care in order that a high degree of accuracy may be obtained, it should be carefully cared for. The residuum from smokeless powder tends to corrode the bore, and should therefore be removed as soon after firing as practicable. The following method has been practised at the Springfield Armoury for a number of years with good results :—

Use the cleaning rod and small patches of cloth soaked in a saturated solution of soda and water. Then thoroughly dry the bore and remove the soda solution by the use of dry patches, and finally oil the bore with patches soaked in cosmic oil. Twenty-four hours after this first cleaning the bore should be again cleaned as described above, as it has been found that the powder gases are probably forced into the texture of the steel, and will, if the second cleaning is not resorted to, cause rusting, no matter how thoroughly the bore may have been cleaned at first. If, however, a cleaning rod is not at hand, the barrel should be cleaned as thoroughly as possible by means of the thong brush and rags, and oiled as above. To clean or oil the bore with rags the thong brush is unscrewed, the rag placed in the rag slot of the thong tip, and drawn from the muzzle toward the breech.

If gas escapes at the base of the cartridge, it will probably enter the well of the bolt through the striker hole. In this case the bolt mechanism must be dismounted and the parts and well of the bolt thoroughly cleaned. Before assembling the bolt mechanism, the firing pin, the barrel of the sleeve, the body of striker, the well of bolt, and all cams should be lightly oiled. Many of the parts can generally be cleaned with dry rags. All parts after cleaning should be wiped with an oiled rag.

The best method of applying oil is to rub with a piece of cotton cloth upon which a few drops of oil have been placed, thereby avoiding the use of an unnecessary amount of oil : this method will, even in the absence of the oiler, serve for the cams and bearings, which should be kept continually oiled. Any part that may appear to move hard can generally be freed by the use of a little oil. The stock and hand-guard may be coated with raw linseed oil and polished by rubbing with the hand. Sperm oil should only be used for lubricating metallic bearing and contact surfaces. For the chamber and bore, only cosmoline or cosmic should be used. This should also be applied to all metallic surfaces, to prevent rusting when arms are stored or when not used for an appreciable length of time.

It has been found that a deposit of metallic fouling is left in the bore of the rifle when ball cartridges, calibre ·30, model of 1906, of earlier manufacture, are used, and a solution for the removal of metallic fouling from the bores of small arms has therefore been issued by the Ordnance Department to all post ordnance officers for reissue to organisations.

It consists of one ounce of ammonium persulphate, 200 grains ammonium carbonate, 6 ounces ammonia (28 per centum), and 4 ounces water, making a sufficient quantity to clean 20 rifles. If no scales are available for weighing the ingredients, they may be measured, and the equivalents are as follow :—

One ounce of ammonium persulphate equals two medium heaping spoonfuls. Two hundred grains ammonium carbonate equal one medium heaping spoonful. Six ounces ammonia, 28 per centum pure, equal three-eighths of a pint. Four ounces water equal one-fourth of a pint. The spoon referred to above is the spoon issued by the Ordnance Department for the mess outfit.

The solution is made as follows :—The carbonate and persulphate should first be pulverised and mixed together, and the ammonia and water added, after which the mixture should be thoroughly stirred. The solution should stand for half an hour before using. The bore of the rifle should be plugged with a cork or wooden plug at the breech end just below the metallic fouling. The bore should then be filled with the solution and the muzzle corked or plugged. The solution should remain in the bore for about two hours, or long enough to cut the metallic fouling, after which it should be removed and canton flannel or other soft material run back and forth through the bore to remove the residue. Great care must be taken to remove the solution from all metallic parts, as it may start rusting in a very short time.

Special care should be used in removing it from the breech mechanism. The solution should be used in removing it from the breech mechanism. The solution may be used several times, but after it has been once used it should be placed in a bottle and not mixed with any unused solution. This solvent is expensive, and should be used economically.—Arms and the Man.

—essential to good sport.

The most accurate and reliable of cartridges may not always suffice to ensure good sport, but good sport is out of the question without them.

Eley Cartridges do all that the best cartridges can do in this direction, with a trustworthiness which has won for them a measure of success greater probably than any other cartridges in the world.

Two 'Eley Loaded' Cartridges:

Eley 'Acme' — A bright orange 2-inch deep-shell Cartridge, loaded with Eley (42-gr.) Smokeless Powder.

Eley 'Elold' — A light maroon Cartridge. Loaded with Eley (33-gr.) Smokeless. Light recoil; absolutely waterproof.

LONDON, Friday, 24th May 1912.

CHESTER.

THE appellation "off" could hardly be applied to the last day at Chester, it usually presenting several features of interest to the student of form. What looked like being a small attendance was in half an hour converted into a monster muster, sportsmen coming in by swarms and filling the enclosures again to overflow on to the course. A slight rain fell during the night to liven up the course, which is beautifully green under constant watering, and so pleased was everybody with the meeting that it is to be hoped some day a second fixture may be granted in the autumn. Results :—

KEMPTON.

At Kempton on Friday the clouds lay so low and the temperature was so "hothousey," that no one would have been surprised by a storm ; but though the sun had no chance we got through the afternoon without the aid of umbrellas. Recent rains have freshened up the grass, but the executive have such artificial means of helping nature with their luckily discovered well, that the going is generally good, and was excellent on Friday. Thanks to a handy service of trains, everybody was suited as to departure, the last starting after one o'clock, and the attendance was a particularly good one all round. The members' enclosure in which as usual the fair sex was well represented, was well filled. Results :—

NEWMARKET.

The Newmarket Second Spring Meeting does not appeal to a big sporting public, and the comparative quietude was all the more acceptable to a company mostly recruited from the regular habitues of the Turf and the patrons of the members' stand, who mustered strongly on Tuesday. The improvements on the stands are being carried out, and by the time of the autumn meetings a more spacious enclosure will be at the disposal of the silver ringers, whose comfort was never considered at all in olden days, but who form a substantial item in the attendance on big handicap days. Although only five took part in the Newmarket Stakes, the race was invested with additional interest by the antagonism of Lomond and White Star. Mr. Hulton's colt, who was saddled quietly in a stable-corner in the further Birdcage, has grown and furnished into a commanding colt, a fine specimen of the thoroughbred. He had been treated on the off-hind coronet for a small boil. Otherwise he was bright and fit, and looked like carrying the rest.

White Star was finer than on the Two Thousand day, and Tagalie was as tough as pin-wire, while Catmint, a rare bred one, very high on the leg, was evidently a bit short of work, owing to the hard ground. Cylgad, a powerful colt, with a strong middle-piece, had evidently done well since the last meeting, but few thought of him in the light of a winner. Odds were laid on Lomond, and it looked odds on, too, while White Star's backers were not daunted, and the One Thousand winner, Tagalie, had plenty of friends. Going down the course from the Birdcage, White Star tried to bolt with the bit in his teeth, but Stern, quickly getting the mastery over him, pulled him up just near the end of the stand, by the carriage enclosure, and patting his neck got him completely settled into his stride.

Glasses had not been very long focussed on the starting-post, across which a light mist had risen, when away they came to a capital start, Catmint heading the line, with Tagalie, in the centre, just last. They ran three furlongs before Cylgad, on the left, headed Catmint, near whom lay White Star and Lomond abreast, just clear of the One Thousand winner. A terrific shout, "The favourite's beaten," went up when, at the Bushes, Wootton was seen hard at work on Lomond. His backers thought perhaps the colt wanted rousing, but hoped against hope; for, in fact, he was distressed and hung a bit on Tagalie, whose chance he did not improve. White Star pegged away till the Dip, where he was done with, and then shouts were raised for Tagalie, who from Tattersall's looked to be leading, an idea that was strengthened by Hewitt, who seemed to be riding a winning race.

As a matter of fact, the filly never got on terms with Cylgad, who, full of running, stayed on, and breasting the hill well turned the Two Thousand Guineas tables on White Star, who was not any better suited by the extra two furlongs,, and so emphatically reversed the Champagne Stakes running with Lomond as to prove what improvement he had made since Doncaster. Tagalie seemed to hang fire out of the Dip. Perhaps she does not stay, but these two displays of hers, all the same, will gain her many friends for either Derby or Oaks.

Catmint's big frame—he must stand some 17 hands—is capable of greater improvement, while White Star's second failure suggests a soft spot. Lomond's failure must have been a great disappointment to his owner and trainer.

If sensation he sought, the occasion furnished plenty of it, for the downfall of the favourites—and especially Lomond—in the Newmarket Stakes was a tremendous blow. He finished most gingerly at the rearguard of the field, and possibly something may have affected him.

After the race Lomond's near fore pastern was tinged with blood, and the horse seemed to nurse it, though he walked sound enough across the paddock. The result of the race shows that our three-year-olds are rather a moderate lot, and will tend to immensely increase the interest in the Derby, which remains of more open character than ever. What with the result of the Payne Stakes, yesterday, on top of the Newmarket Stakes, and Farman's easy win on Wednesday, the solution of the Derby puzzle becomes more difficult still. Over a mile and a half, the Payne Stakes is a fair test of stamina. Hall Cross, who did not get too well away in the Two Thousand Guineas, and was running on at the finish, had plenty of friends now, and Mr. Bower Ismay's colt started a good favourite at 7 to 4. St. Neots, who represented Darling's stable, had in his only previous race this year just failed to give 11lb. to that sterling colt, Mediator and in receipt of 10lb. from the favourite, was well backed, sharing second favouritism with Lom, while Pintadeau, the dead-heater with Tidal Wave in the Middlenall Plate, who had missed his engagement in the Newmarket Stakes in view of this race, was allowed to start at 7 to 1. What a good general and judge of form the veteran "Dick" Marsh is was shown by the result.

Making use of his advantage in the weights, Higgs kept St. Neots in the front rank, with Saucy Vixen and Pintadeau just behind. Then came Hall Cross and Lom. Saucy Vixen was beaten half-way, when St. Neots, going well, went to the front, with Pintadeau on the upper ground, and Hall Cross and Lom next. Hall Cross dropped out of the fighting line two furlongs from home, and from the Bushes the race was reduced to a match. Pintadeau responded to every effort of Lord Lonsdale's colt, and in perhaps the best Derby gallop that we have seen in public won in the gamest fashion by a neck. From sire and dam he gets speed and stamina, and looking him over in the Birdcage one must admit that he comes from hardy stock, as he finished clean and well. The result of the race has raised hopes of another Royal victory on Epsom Downs, for Pintadeau now comes well into the reckoning. Results:—

CRICKET.

SOUTH AFRICANS v. SURREY.—The second match of the South Africans' four, and their first in London, was played at Kennington Oval during the last three days of the week, and provided a thoroughly interesting game from start to finish. The visitors nearly always had slightly the better of the play. For instance, they scored 250 themselves, and got three of Surrey's wickets down for 51 at the end of the first stage, while at the close on Friday, having put Surrey in to get 250, the county had lost a couple of wickets in making 80 runs. As it happened, this proved just beyond the home team's capabilities, and in roughly two hours, the remaining batsmen got out for 153 runs, with the result that just before luncheon, the South Africans had won by 52. Hayward and Harrison played finely, in widely contrasted styles, for the losers, the former scoring 67 in an hour and three-quarters out of 130, and the latter batting about the same time for a cautious 38. ATHLETICS.

LONDON ATHLETIC CLUB SPRING MEETING.—The chief feature of the meeting, held at Stamford Bridge on the 11th instant, was the fine form shown by G. R. L. Anderson (Oxford University) in the 120 yards hurdles, which he won in 15-1/5secs., beating the holder, K. Powell, by two yards. This time is the best ever accomplished by a British athlete in the 120 yards hurdles, and ranks second to the world's "record" of 15secs. for 110 metres (120 29 yards) by the American, F. C. Smithson, at the Olympic Games at the Shepherd's-bush Stadium on 25th July 1908. The chief results were:—

100 YARDS CHALLENGE CUP RACE.—W. A. Stewart (holder), 1; H. E. H. Blakeney, 2; S. S. Abrahams, 3. Won by a yard. Time—10-2/5secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES CHALLENGE CUP.—G. R. L. Anderson, 1; K. Powell (holder), 2; H. E. H. Blackeney, 3. Won by two yards; four yards between second and third. Time—15-1/5secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES HANDICAP (Open).—K. Powell (L.A.C.), owes 16 yards, 1; C. R. Dugmore (L.A.C.), owes 5 yards, 2. Won by nearly two yards. Time—17-2/5secs.

440 YARDS CHALLENGE CUP RACE.—C. N. Seedhouse (holder), 1; E. B. Greer, 2; E. H. Ryle, 3. Won by five yards. Time—50-2/5secs.

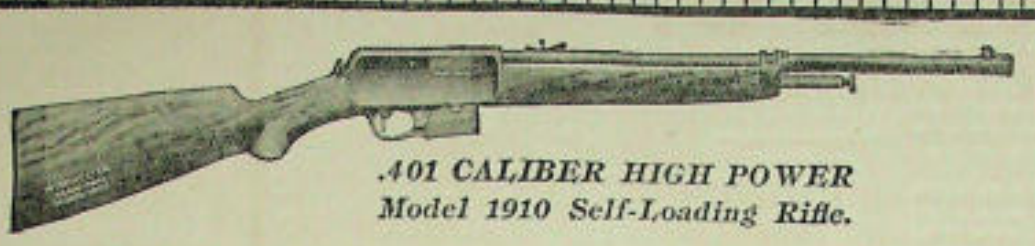
ONE MILE CHALLENGE CUP.—R. F. C. Yorke, 1; H. Shelton, 2; R. T. Thompson, 3. Won by 15 yards. Time—4mins. 28-3/5secs.

3,000 METRES LEVEL RACE (Open).—G. W. Hutson (Surrey A.C.) and A. L. Treble (Polytechnic Harriers) ran a dead heat; G. F. Jennings (Cambridge Harriers) was third. Time—8mins. 55-4/5secs.

LONG JUMP (Open).—P. Kingsford (St. Mark's College), 23ft. 12in., 1; S. S. Abrahams (L.A.C.), 21ft. 11½in., 2; C. R. Dugmore (L.A.C.), 20ft. 10in., 3.

THROWING THE JAVELIN (Open) (as at Olympic Games).—H. Hanson (S.L.H.), 144ft. 10in., 1; O. Piron (L.A.C.), 130ft. 4in., 2; F. G. Kitching (L.A.C.), 122ft. 10in., 3.

TENNIS.



THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—In the challenge round of the Amateur Tennis Championship at Queen's Club, on the 11th instant, the challenger, E. M. Baerlein, gained a decisive victory over the Hon'ble N. S. Lytton, the holder. Baerlein, who won by three sets to love, played a great game. His return was wonderful; he kept an excellent length, and he dealt with his opponent's "railroad" service in admirable style. He displayed great skill in placing the ball and finished it in the grille corner or under the winning gallery time after time. Lytton, playing finely on the floor, made a good fight in the second set and after leading at 5—3 was within a stroke of winning at 6—5. Subsequently his play lost much of its effectiveness and Baerlein won the last set in eighteen minutes. Details:—

Amateur Challenge Championship—Challenge Round: E. M. Baerlein (challenger) beat Hon'ble N. S. Lytton (holder) by 3 sets to love. Score: 6—3, 6—5, 6—1.

In the first set Baerlein won the first game after "deuce," and Lytton took the second and third. The challenger then won four games off the reel. In three of these Lytton scored only four points, but in the other game "deuce" was called four times. Lytton won the eighth game to love, which made his score 3 to 5, but his opponent winning a love game in his turn took the set at 6—3.

Baerlein won the first and second games in the second set—both after "deuce"—and Lytton then went to 3—2, and after 3 all the holder gained a lead of 5—3, winning the eighth game to love, Baerlein winning the ninth game to 30 and the next to love drew level. In the decisive game Baerlein got to 40—30. Subsequently it was vantage to Lytton but in the end the challenger took the game and the set.

Model 1910 Self-Loading Rifle.

This rifle looks small and compact, yet it is the most powerful recoil-operated rifle made. It has even more power than the .303 British service rifle. This great force, coupled with its rapidity of fire, makes it effective against any animal alive. Its action is simple, strong and reliable; and it is in every respect the ideal rifle for hunters of big game.

This Rifle May Be Examined At Gunmakers' Everywhere.

Baerlein easily won the first two games in the third set but lost the next after "deuce." Lytton scored few points afterwards, his opponent winning the fourth and fifth games each to 30, the sixth to love, and the seventh and last to 15.

ROWING.

THE MAGDALENE PAIRS.—The final heat of Magdalene pairs was decided on the 11th instant in blustery weather, the wind being against the contestants up Long Reach. The brothers Swann, the favourites, defeated the two First Trinity Blues after a good race by a fairly good margin. The race was judged by Mr. R. Le Blanc Smith. Details:—

First Station—Trinity Hall.—A. A. Swann (bow), 11st. 12lb.; S. E. Swann (stroke), 11st. 4lb.—1.

Second Station—First Trinity—D. C. Collins (bow), 11st. 13lb.; C. F. Burnand (stroke), 12st. 12lb.—2.

The Hall pair secured their advantage between the First Post Corner and the Red Grind, and ultimately won by a length and a half. Time 4mins. 38-1/5secs.

GOLF.

LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP MEETING.—The two remaining matches in the International team contest for the Miller Trophy were decided on the Turnberry links on Saturday. England defeated Scotland by six games to three, and thus won the trophy for the second year in succession. Ireland, who beat Wales by eight to one, were second with two victories to their credit. Scotland, with one win, were third, and Wales, who were defeated in all three games, fourth.

Both Miss Cecil Leitch and Miss May Leitch were beaten in the match against Scotland. Miss Cecil Leitch, who led the English team, was down to Miss Teacher, nearly all the way, and lost by 3 holes down and 2 to play. Miss May Leitch, was 1 down at the turn to Miss Maitland, who ultimately won by 2 and 1. The only other Scottish success was that of Miss Jenkins, who beat Mrs. Sumpter by 5 and 4. In the Ireland and Wales match Miss B. Duncan was the only successful player for Wales. She was 1 up at the turn against Mrs. Ross (who, as Miss May Hezlet, won the championship on three occasions) and gained the victory by 1 hole. The results were as follows:—

A TOTTENHAM magistrate experienced great difficulty in convincing a prisoner that he might ask a witness questions but not make statements. The Magistrate (in despair):—"Ask witness 'Was I drunk?'" Prisoner "Was his worship drunk?"

"My dear," said Mr. Clarkson, "I don't want you to think I have any desire to criticise you for the way you manage, but really, we must try to live within our income." "Within our income? Good-ness! And be regarded by everybody in your set as eccentric!"

ONE Case, Anyhow.—"Did you ever know a doctor take his own medicine?" "Did I? Well, rather. Last time I crossed the Atlantic old Dr. Gilteady prescribed champagne as a cure for my seasickness, and whenever it was time for a dose he'd come round and join me."

"Now," said the great magician rolling up his sleeve to show that he had no concealed mechanism to deceive the eye, "I shall attempt my never-failing experiment." Taking from his pocket a half-crown he said "I shall cause this coin to disappear utterly." So saying he lent it to a friend.

THE BERESFORD TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S STAFF vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—Played on the 29th ultimo a good game ending in a win for the K. D. G's. by 11 goals to 5. Play was fast throughout, but the Dragoons were at the top of their form and did most of the attacking. The Staff started with a handicap of plus 1.

First Chukker.—The Dragoons pressed and Hatfield opened their account. Renton followed this up with another and a third was scored in a scrimmage shortly after.

Second Chukker.—After two abortive attempts the Dragoons scored a goal. The Staff then had a spell of attacking but their efforts were unsuccessful and play being transferred to their end Weinholt scored a goal. Renton put on another on changing ends.

Third Chukker.—The Staff pressed, but were unable to do anything and the ball was taken back to their end where Hatfield put it through.

Fourth Chukker.—Charrington rushed the ball down and scored for the Staff who did most of the attacking in this period.

Fifth Chukker.—Weinholt got on and scored. Level play till shortly before the close of the period Weinholt hit a goal with a long shot.

Sixth Chukker.—Charrington got away and passed to Henderson who scored. The Dragoons then attacked and after one unsuccessful effort the ball was put through. Final score: Dragoons, 11 goals; Commander-in-Chief Staff, 5 goals. Teams:—

Umpires:—Colonel Tilney and Captain Keighley.

VICEROY'S STAFF "A" vs. PATIALA.—The second of the semi-finals was a strenuous game and ended in a win for the Patiala team who had a handicap of plus three goals.

First Chukker.—Patiala attacked and drew first blood. They continued the pressure and Jagindar Singh and Balwant Singh each scored a goal.

Second Chukker.—The Staff got away and scored in a mêlée: up and down play. Patiala were awarded a penalty hit, but could not turn it to account and the Staff getting possession Tod scored.

Third Chukker.—The Staff were again prominent and Maxwell was nearly through. Then Patiala took up the attack but nothing accrued. Fast up and down play the chukker ending without score.

Fourth Chukker.—Patiala pressed and Balwant Singh scored. Another point was added in a scrimmage and before the period closed Chanda Singh put on another goal.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast and level play all over the field, Chanda Singh scored with a clever shot. On changing ends the Staff showed up and before the close had put on two more goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play, Patiala scoring a goal. Final Score: Patiala, 11 goals; Staff, 4 goals. Teams:—

THE FINAL.

The King's Dragoon Guards met Patiala State in the final of the tournament on Friday, the 31st. ultimo in the presence of a large gathering which included Lord and Lady Hardinge, the Commander-in-Chief and Lady Creagh, Field-Marshall Sir W. Nicholson, Sir Louis and Lady Dane, and all Society. The game was a good one, Patiala who started with plus one goal eventually winning by 6 goals to 5. Play was fast and there was plenty of hard hitting and galloping. The Cup was given away at the conclusion of the game by Lady Hardinge.

First Chukker.—Patiala got away and Jagindar Singh drew first blood. A run by the Dragoons was abortive and then Jagindar Singh got through again and scored. Midfield play till Weinholt put in a good run and hit a goal.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. Then Patiala pressed but missed several opportunities of putting through, the King's Dragoon Guards at length relieved and Renton took the ball down for Hatfield to send it through.

Third Chukker.—Hatfield got away and passed to Weinholt who scored and made it 3 all. Patiala then attacked but could not get through and the Dragoons transferring play scored through Renton.

Fourth Chukker.—Patiala worked the ball down and Thakur Singh equalised. Up and down play followed, Renton eventually coming away to score another point. A penalty hit for a foul against Patiala was not turned to account.

Fifth Chukker.—Play was fast and hotly contested in this period, the ball travelling up and down the field. Neither team could score, however, and the chukker ended pointless.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast up and down play, Patiala ultimately equalising with a long shot. On changing ends Patiala pressed once more and hit another goal just before time. The King's Dragoon Guards were unable to respond and were thus beaten by 6 goals to 5. Teams as before.

Umpires:—General Cookson and Colonel Tilney.

Football.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE match of the week was the one between Dalhousie and the Black Watch on Saturday, and it was a pleasure to see the old Trades Club once more put out a representative side. Hurlston's reappearance on the left wing give the Dalhousie supporters much confidence, and with Pearce and O'Brien playing on the other wing, the Dals rendered a brilliant account of themselves, albeit they were beaten by a two-goal margin, the score being 3—1. Before going into details of the week's matches, I may state that the E. I. R. team have withdrawn from the League and their absence from senior football will not be felt, for it was a great mistake in ever accepting them in the First Division. Five civilian teams is more than a sufficient number to include in senior football, and these clubs find it difficult to get representative sides, and it is absurd to promote to the first Division a team who has stood a bad second or third to the second strings of military teams, in the Second Division. As the Measurers were at the bottom of the First Division of the League last year, and the E. I. R. Lillooah men a bad second to the "B" team of the Rifle Brigade, the latter should have never been promoted, and only eight teams should have been invited to play.

The match between the Black Watch and the Artillery was played in a sporting spirit, and the only two fouls in the game were against the gunners. Indeed not one of the Black Watch players has been pulled up, so far, for any unfair tactics, and although no military team has ever been a favourite with the Bengalee spectators the Scotch regiment, now at Fort William, have already won the hearts of many an Indian football enthusiast, and it is a pity that some of the civilian players do not adopt the same sporting principles. O'Donnell, the Bandmaster, played for the Black Watch, this being his first match in Calcutta, but the Fort regiment are still without Robertson, who is acknowledged to be the finest forward in the team. Robertson, who is a junior Scotch International, has been in hospital, but will probably play in the shield matches. The Black Watch and Artillery match was well contested the game being fast and the exchanges fairly even. Watson scored the first goal a couple of minutes before half time, while O'Donnell got the second goal midways through the second moiety. For the Artillery, Hollerin played a great game, and the Black Watch goalie on four or five occasions saved from this man. Hollerin would be seen to still better advantage if he had better support.

In the Customs and Middlesex match which resulted in a draw of one all, the Riversiders had the hardest of luck in not winning. During the initial half Galbraith got away beautifully, and just when on the point of scoring Southall, one of the Middlesex backs, attempted to trip the Customs man, Galbraith managed to keep his feet, however, and wound up by scoring a magnificent goal. The referee, who had blown his whistle for a "foul" just prior to the netting of the goal, disallowed the point, but awarded the Customs a penalty kick instead. This was hard lines, but worse luck followed, for McCready, who took the penalty, sent yards over the net. Ten minutes from the close, however, Vaillant scored for the Customs, but in the last minute of the game the Dum Dum team were awarded a penalty kick, and Wally being successful, the Middlesex were able to draw with one all.

The postponed match between the Rangers and Customs on the former's ground last Friday, produced a very even struggle, but owing to wild shooting on both sides there was no score. Fitzpatrick and Christison, the rival custodians, had a few shots to negotiate, but they were generally from long range.

The E. I. R. having withdrawn from the League, there were only three matches played on Saturday, and of these the game on the Dalhousie ground against the Black Watch not only attracted the largest number of spectators, but produced the best football. Both teams had out their best sides available, Turnbull playing for the first time for the military in Calcutta this season. This player has represented the Black Watch at Simla in previous years, and on Saturday he justified his selection in the team by playing at the top of his form. Watson, the inner left, also played a great game and netted all three goals for the Black Watch. For Dalhousie, Quayle was brilliant, and but for his marvellous kicking the Trades Club would have been rather badly beaten. But Dalhousie also had their share of attacking, and Brown, the military goal-keeper, was not kept idle. The game was a very fast one, and Dalhousie's goal was netted by Wright.

The Calcutta and R. G. A. match on the former's ground was rather tame, but on the evening's play Calcutta was the better side and deserved their two-goal to nil victory. The gunners on the amount of attacking during the initial half, should have scored, but the shots sent in were of a feeble character. Kerr scored for Calcutta a few minutes before the interval and the second goal was netted by Jenkins after this player had sent wide on four occasions.

The Customs, playing at home, beat the Y.M.C.A. by a goal to nil, but had the shooting of the home forwards not been of so wild a character, the margin of victory would have been larger. For the Association Manuel played a fine game, and on the winning side Galbraith, Hyland, and Williamson played best.

The Y.M.C.A. and Middlesex match on Monday, was a win for the Dum Dum team, by 4 goals to nil. Daw, the centre forward of the regimental team arrived from Dinapore the same morning, and this player, who greatly distinguished himself in the shield matches last year, got two out of the four goals. Bateman and Boddy netted one each. Now that the Middlesex have got their full team together they should render a better account of themselves in future matches.

In the Second Division of the League the Black Watch continue to forge ahead, and they are sure to go through the competition without losing a single point. On Tuesday they beat the Post Commissioners by 3—0, and but for Mole's fine goal-keeping the military would have won by a larger margin.

The succeeding rounds were played off with the following result :—

First Round.

Mr Greig beat Mr. B. Clerk.
Capt. Cruickshank, I.M.S., beat Mr. P. M. Morris Davies.
Mr. Lee beat Mr. Haig Anderson.
Major Chalmers, I.M.S., beat Capt. Campbell Ross.

Second Round.

Mr. Lee beat Mr. Greig.
Major Chalmers beat Capt. Cruickshank.

Final.

Major Chalmers beat Mr. Lee by 3 up and 2 to play.

In the morning round Mr. Lee led off by winning the first three holes, and continuing was 6 up on the first 8 holes. On the return journey Major Chalmers considerably reduced his opponent's lead but Mr. Lee finished up 3 up on the first round. In the afternoon Major Chalmers won the first two holes and thus made the match all square. The third was halved, Chalmers won the fourth, the fifth was halved. The sixth and seventh went to Chalmers, and the eighth was halved. Chalmers took the next and was 3 up at the turn. Coming home Lee won the tenth, Chalmers the eleventh, the twelfth was halved, Chalmers took the thirteenth where he was 3 up with 5 to play. The fourteenth was halved, but Chalmers won the fifteenth the match and the Championship—his second successive victory.

THE ANCIENT GAME OF TENNIS.

Most people when they speak of "tennis" refer to lawn tennis, and not to the far more ancient game which was the forefather of the modern adaptation writes the Globe. Tennis proper is perhaps the eldest of all existing ball-games. It is also one of the most difficult games to learn, on account of the number and intricacy of its rules which, however, when once learnt, make it one of the most interesting, because of the variety of its combinations and the difficulty of quickly solving the complex problems presented to the player. It has an additional interest, also, owing to its historical associations. Tennis first made its appearance in Europe in the Middle Ages when it was played in open courts and in the parks belonging to the feudal castles of France and Italy. At first kings and nobles were the only players, but later on it became popular with all classes. The game is mentioned in Arthurian Romance, but it was certainly unknown in England in the time of King Arthur.

The name of tennis is suggested to have sprung from the exclamation "Tenez," which was used by early French players when serving the ball. In France the game is called "Jeu de Paume." It would seem from this that originally the ball was struck with the palm of the hand only, as in the game of fives. Afterwards the players wore a glove, as they do still in the Basque country. Strings and cross-strings were next stretched upon the glove to give a greater impulse to the ball, and from this to the addition of a short handle was an easy transition.

The game was much improved by the building of closed-in tennis courts, at first with walls only, then with both roof and walls. In France they still play it, sometimes in the open, and in Italy a rough version of it, called "Pallone," can still be seen. In England there are twenty-seven courts, and there is one in Dublin.

It would be impossible to give a comprehensible account of the game in a few words, for the court alone is most intricate. It is rectangular in shape, and an inner way runs round three sides to the back of the building from which a sloping roof stretches. The pent-house reaching to the outer wall. The surrounding passage thus enclosed between the two walls is seven feet wide. Opposite the long pent-house is the wall, from which there is at one point a protection called the tambour, which deflects the ball across the court. In the inner wall below the pent-house, there are several openings, the one at the end on the service side being called the "dedans," the others the "galleries." At the further end of the court is the "grille," a square opening adjacent to the main wall. The game may be played by two, three, or four players, one against one, one against two, or two against two. At the beginning of the game the players "spin" rackets as in ordinary tennis, to decide who shall be the server.

In tennis the duties of the marker are no sinecure, for, apart, from the myriad rules which it is his duty to enforce, he has to keep the court clear of odd balls, and "keep the ball-troughs constantly replenished both in the dedans and the last gallery."

Lawn tennis, in some form or other, has been played for many centuries out of doors. The present variety of the game was introduced about the year 1874, but in a form which was quickly shown to be impracticable. It was then taken up by the All-England Club at Wimbledon, who remodelled the size and shape of the court and the rules, while altering the system of scoring of the parent game. In its present form it is too recent an innovation to smack greatly of historic lore, nevertheless in days gone by the game is held to have been responsible for several more or less noteworthy episodes, which have found their way into history. Macaulay speaks of a personage of rank who was renowned for "his easy bow, his good stories, and his style of dancing and playing tennis. . . ." It has been said, although the source of information is not to be greatly relied upon that Henry VIII when mediating upon the decapitation one of of his unfortunate wives, was wont to bid him to the playing-field to play a game of tennis with some favourite courtier. If the courtier won the "set," he put off the decapitation but as his adversary probably took care to lose, for fear of being beheaded himself, this novel way of asking the Fates to decide was not of much use! But, on the face of it, the story seems absurd, for Henry VIII. was, not to put too fine a point upon it, a fat man, nor was he wont to leave things to chance.

Lawn tennis has never been more popular than it is to-day, when, indeed, there are so many good players that the unfortunate individual who can only be described, as "medium" is not infrequently somewhat diffident about playing. Nowadays, also, a great many young girls are enthusiastic tennis players, a fact which not so very many years ago would have been made the mammas of the period lift their hands in horror. Indeed, we have been told the story of the young lady of strong suffragistic tendencies, who declared to her partner who happened to be seated in high places, "Anyhow" if I can't have the vote, I can beat you at tennis!—Globe.

THE PUSA AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH COLLEGE.

The Agricultural Research Institute and College, Pusa, owes its inception to the generosity of an American gentleman, Mr. Henry Phipps, who in 1903 placed at the disposal of Lord Curzon, then Viceroy and Governor-General of India, a donation of £20,000 (which he afterwards raised to £30,000) with the request that it might be devoted to some object of public utility in India, preferably in the direction of scientific research. Part of this donation was devoted to the construction of a Pasteur Institute at Coonoor in Southern India, and it was decided that the balance should be utilized in erecting a laboratory of agricultural research which, it was hoped, would form a centre of economic science in connection with that occupation on which the people of India mainly depend. This conception was subsequently enlarged; and the Government of India have now constructed a college and research institution to which a farm of some 1,300 acres is attached for purposes of experimental cultivation and demonstration.

In 1903 when the research station was sanctioned, it was intended to combine it with a college which should give a general agricultural education and should serve as a model for the few agricultural colleges and schools of very unequal merit which then existed in India. Recently, however, this conception of the functions of the Pusa College has undergone a material change. It is now recognised that first and most essential condition of any permanent improvement in the agricultural methods of this country is the widest possible diffusion of an organised knowledge of scientific and practical agriculture and at the same time it is desired to make the country as far as possible self-supporting in the matter of development of agricultural training and research. A comprehensive scheme for the promotion of agricultural education throughout India has accordingly been drawn up, as the result of which it is hoped that every important province will soon be provided with a fully equipped college where students will for three years receive practical and scientific education in agriculture. The position which the Pusa College is intended to occupy in relation to this general scheme is that of a higher teaching institution. Its main object is to enable students who have passed with distinction through a course of a provincial college by means of post graduate course in one of the specialised branches of agricultural science, to qualify for the higher branches of agricultural work.

The Pusa Estate consists of 1,300 acres, of which 400 are arable, 400 are pasture, nearly all the field crops of the plains can be grown there. The farm buildings are up-to-date and herds of breedings and milch cattle are maintained. There are complete arrangements for the manufacture of indigo and the curing of tobacco. Poultry breeding is being carried on; there is a large and well laid out orchard and botanical garden. Every facility for the practical teaching of agriculture and agricultural subjects has been provided. The students' laboratories are extensive, well lighted and equipped; there is a library for the use of students.

The students' hostel is complete, and here is ample accommodation for 70 students. Waini, on the Bengal and North-Western Railway, is the nearest railway station. It is six miles from the college by a good road. There is a telegraph and post office within the estates.

The college is under the general supervision and control of the Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India and Director of the Pusa Research Institute, and has a very competent staff.

The ordinary course extends over two years and the student will be trained in one or other of the following sections of agricultural science, no students being trained in more than one section at a time. In the absence of experience of the class of student likely to be received, it is impossible to lay down a permanent syllabus of the training in each subject. But in each case care has been taken to see that time will not be wasted in taking students over ground that is already familiar to them: (1) (Agricultural Chemistry. (2) Economic Botany, (3) Economic Entomology (one year only), (4) Mycology, (5) Agricultural Bacteriology, (6) Agriculture.

Summer Terms:—From 1st June to commencement of the Doorga Puja holidays.

Winter Terms:—From close of the Doorga Puja holidays to 31st March.

Vacation:—From 1st April to 31st May.

Students will get in addition all the usual Gazetted holidays.

The terms of the students in the Botanical section is from 1st October to 30th April, but students will get the usual Christmas holidays if they can be taken without detriment to the work.

For the present it has been decided not to hold periodical and final examinations, but certificates signed by the head of the section and countersigned by the Principal, will be presented to students who have passed through the college course with credit. The total number of students that can ordinarily be admitted in each of the following sections every year is as follows:—

Agriculture	8
Agricultural Chemistry	8
Mycology	8
Entomology	8
Botany	8
Agricultural Bacteriology	4
Total ...	44

The number of studentships to be allotted each year to the respective provinces as well as the number of nominations, if any, to be made by the Principal will be decided by the Principal before the 1st April after consultation with the provincial authorities as to their requirements and communicated to the Local Governments and Administrations concerned.

There will be three classes of students:—

(i) Students nominated by a Local Government or Administration.

(ii) Students deputed by a Native State on the nomination of the Inspector-General of Agriculture in India.

(iii) Private students.

Students nominated by a Local Government or Administration should ordinarily be men who have passed with credit through a Provincial Agricultural College, or are graduates of an Indian University, or possess a degree or diploma of approximately the same standard granted by any other educational institution.

Students deputed by a Native State may be admitted on the application of the State concerned, provided that accommodation is available. Applications should be addressed, in the first instance, to the Agricultural Adviser to the Government of India, Pusa, Bengal, and should reach him before the 15th March. Students of this class will be required to pass a satisfactory test to be applied by the chief of the section concerned at Pusa.

Private students may be admitted by the Principal provided that accommodation is available. Candidates for admission should be not less than 19 years of age, and should submit their applications to the Principal before the 1st April in each year. Ordinarily only candidates will be admitted who have the same qualifications as are prescribed for students nominated by the Local Government or Administration and such candidates may also be required to pass the test which those deputed by a Native State may have to pass.

A private student must attach to his application (a) a certificate of age, (b) a health certificate signed by a civil surgeon testifying to the candidate's physical fitness for such outdoor work as is required to be done in the Agricultural Department, (c) a certificate of good moral character from the Principal of the Agricultural College from which he graduated or from any one else of influential position. The certificates (b) and (c) must bear a date within 6 months of the date of application for admission into the college. Any of these conditions, however, may be relaxed by the Principal.

The names of those private students who succeed in obtaining the college certificate will be entered by the Principal in a register to be kept for the purpose, and will be communicated to the Directors of Agriculture in the various provinces so that those private students may be offered employment if their services are required. The name will also be published in the Gazette of India and in Provincial Government Gazettes.

It will be at the discretion of the Principal, with the advice of the Scientific Officer in charge of the section, to declare at any time the unfitness of a student for training and to require his removal from the college.

The expenses of a student at the college will in addition to the Rs. 50 he will be requested to deposit as ration money, it is estimated, not to exceed Rs. 25 per mensem. But the following sum will approximately be required for the purchase of books:—Agricultural Chemistry Rs. 15, Economic Botany Rs 15, Entomology Rs. 22, Mycology Rs. 25, Agricultural Bacteriology Rs. 15, Agriculture Rs. 15.—Behar.

Motoring.

By Throttle.

Motorists the world over were at one on Monday in wishing His Majesty King George V. Many Happy Returns of his Birthday. Our King-Emperor has always shown the keenest interest in everything pertaining to motors, and that this interest is also extended to drivers was proved by the reception of the petition on behalf of Chauffeurs at the time of His Majesty's Coronation. The desire expressed by King George to undertake an aerial voyage on the occasion of the recent manœuvres is only one of many instances of his inclination to keep abreast of the times in everything connected with locomotion by means of the internal combustion engine. His Majesty's enthusiasm is shared by all our Royal Family and H.R.H. The Prince of Wales is at the present time evincing marked ability in the study of Aviation.

The controversy with regard to the relative merits of various engine designs waxes daily hotter. At present with poppet, sleeve piston and rotary valves all finding partisans the subject is a particularly open one, and it seems more than likely that all systems will retain their adherents, just as in steam engines where widely different types of valves give equal satisfaction. It is interesting, however, to see an old question cropping up again in the position of valves! For some years it has been customary with most manufacturers to fit all the valves on one side, and one had come to look on this as standard practice, but lately many designers have reverted to the old system. Opposite valves entail greater complication, as they necessitate two cam-shafts with their drives and they also increase the area of the combustion chambers, but the main reason of their re-adoption is to permit the use of larger diameter valves, rendered essential by the higher modern piston speeds. The surface area of the combustion chamber and valve pockets is generally held to have an important bearing on efficiency and while some designers increase the surface by the use of "pockets" on either side others reduce it by inclining the valves to the vertical. A few makers have refrained from enclosing the valves and adhere to this policy in their latest models, not considering the advantages sufficient to warrant the fitting of cover entailing the reduction of accessibility and curtailment of cooling. In any case with the up-to-date fibre-headed tappets and the minute stem clearances and spring tappet buffers now common, valves are responsible for very little engine noise, the air intake of the carburetter being indeed the principal source of noise in most modern engines.

With regard to clutches also, a reversion appears to have set in, and although this question is also a very open one, the multiple disc clutch in recent years promised to entirely supersede the old type leather-faced cone. Now the large diameter correctly angled leather clutch is again the most popular type for cars of both high and low power. There is also a rival to the multiple disc in the single loose plate type which is now adopted on a variety of cars. One of the principal problems of clutch design has been the varying grip produced by the presence of oil in the case of leather and by too much or too little in the case of metal-to-metal clutches. One designer has made his clutch proof against oil by running it in an oil bath, while others have made plate clutches independent of lubricant by using inset studs or rings of various materials such as Ferodo and running them dry.

Transmission is also undergoing a change and provides many different features as, for instance, the jointing of the Cardan shaft, some manufacturers providing a joint at the forward end only, while others favor one at each end. Then, again there is a diversity of opinion as to whether the sliding joint should be at the front or back end. Axle types differ greatly and it is not definitely decided whether the wheels should be carried on the casing or mounted on the driving shafts. The former is, of course, the usual method adopted by English firms, but there are several of the best known foreign makers who still adhere to the latter practice, and give excellent results. The modern axle of this type, however, is widely different from its predecessors which gave so much trouble by sagging. The method of connecting the axle to the frame is carried out in a variety of ways. Some chassis we find on examination to contain a veritable network of torque and radius rods while others rely solely on the road springs to take driving and other stresses. Personally I consider the latter type a distinct error in design and only obtains simplicity at the expense of efficiency for spring shackles cannot be made strong enough to stand the ever recurring strains in every direction. It is of vital importance in this connection to use common centres for Cardan shaft and radius rods, otherwise the sliding joint is always in action, and as the surfaces of this are necessarily small there is loss of efficiency through undue wear. By centring all connections the sliding joint has a minimum of movement and hence the pivoted shaft casing or torque tube is the best system as it takes all stresses to a common point on the central cross member and also gives a very neat appearance. While on the subject of torque rods the practice may be mentioned of fitting these out of the straight. It is obvious that a diagonal rod must produce a tendency for the axle to force round the chassis and in resisting this tendency the springs are subjected to undue strain.

The motoring industry is well represented in a case which at the time of writing has occupied the attention of the Calcutta High Court for some days. All concerned are more or less ardent motorists, his Lordship not being by any means the least keen in the popular pastime. The array of witnesses expert—and expert (?)—being particularly formidable and feeling consequently running high his Lordship's summing up of this portion of the evidence should be extremely interesting and I for one would be very sorry to miss it. Judgment will be given shortly and I hope to deal fully with it in the next issue or, at any rate in one of the near future.

A car which is attracting considerable interest locally is a big touring Daimler on which an American lady is engaged on a tour of the world. This car is quite the best equipped for its work that I have seen, and behaves in the creditable manner which one expects from this popular make. Far from being deterred by the prevailing heat the fair tourist has unearthed some very interesting runs in the vicinity of Calcutta and now possesses a far greater knowledge of the roads around the deposed capital than many who have spent the major portion of their lives here. The car is driven by a professional, Mr. E. L. Carter, who on a previous stay in India was mechanic-driver to a member of the firm of Messrs. Ralli Brothers. The temporary return of this driver is a welcome acquisition to the local ranks, stocked as he is with an illimitable fund of anecdotes, personal and otherwise, which he retains in real "Barry Pain" style.

From an advertisement in the daily press I learn that "the launch of Swan Motor Car will take place on the 8th instant at Alipore." The meaning of this is rather obscure but apparently applies to a monstrosity in body design imported a couple of years ago, commenting on which the Autocar said "It is indeed a pity that such a fine engine should be cumbered by such an absurd body." If circumstances permit I will treat my readers to a description of the proceedings next week.

DAN'S DERBY.

Jos Biggs told me all about it, so I can vouch for its truth. I was at his place one day and had been round the stables with him, when he was called away for a few minutes, and I strolled round to the back by myself, when my attention was attracted to a diminutive man prowling about the adjoining paddock. He was a queer wizened little specimen of humanity, who kept his eyes fixed on the ground, as he shambled about, walking in small circles, till he would suddenly stop, slowly seat himself on the ground, furtively glancing round apparently to see whether he was watched; then he would get up, walk round the spot where he had seated himself, increasing his circle each gyration he made till he reached a corner of the field where he disappeared into the hedge, in a few minutes reappearing and going through the same performance.

"What on earth is that man doing?" I said to Biggs as he joined me.

"That's old Cobbles, as they call him," said Biggs, "is name by right's being Regan."

"But what is he doing?"

"Pickin' up stones."

"His mode of procedure seems to me to be very extraordinary and to entail a great waste of time and energy."

"'E's daft poor lad," said Joe.

"Not much of the lad about him is there, Joe!"

"Somethin' under fifty, I reckon," said Joe.

"Why does he pick up stones?"

"That lad" said Joe, "was one of the first jockeys in the kingdom, and look at 'im now, chershay lar fem, as the scholards say, tho' it's no use chershaying 'er, for she ain't to be got at. 'E thinks them stones is diamonds, and as he can't get a job nowhere's else I let 'im pick 'em up, as it don't do to have loose stones in that there paddick where I trains the colts, but don't stop 'ere, for if 'e see us awatchin' 'im 'e'll do a bunk" said Joe, as we walked back to the house.

"How does he manage to exist" I asked.

"I give my foreman instructions to buy one of them stones from 'im every week for a few shillin' and a rare bargainin' they do 'ave at times, so I am told. It's a quare tale, and it's wunnerful what hidess the 'uman mind do take on."

And so Joe told me all about it, and this is what he told me. Rory O'Donnell was a well-known Irish trainer in the seventies and eighties, and ran two training establishments, one in Ireland and the other near Lewes. He was noted for his clever handling of raw material, both human and animal. Many a screw had he converted into a classic winner, and many an unknown stable lad under his tuition had developed into a fashionable jockey. Rory trained for but few well-known sportsmen, for although his success was undeniable his methods were doubtful. His principal triumphs came from his Irish stables, from which horses, belonging to obscure owners, came over to England as rank outsiders, and pulled off events of considerable importance.

Dan Regan, or "Cobbles" as he is nicknamed, was an apprentice to Rory at his Irish stables, and in the early eighties was going through the iron training of Rory O'Donnell.

One fine afternoon in the early part of the flat race season Dan stood leaning against the lintel of the stable door, his hands thrust deep in the flap pockets of his riding breeches, a straw in his mouth, that he shifted from one side to the other with monotonous precision, and his eyes fixed vacantly on the shrubs on the farther side of the yard, deep in meditation. Presently a voice within the stable called out.

"What be ye afther doing, Dan?"

Dan vouchsafed no reply, but removing the straw from his mouth, spat contemplatively, and accurately, in the direction of the stable cat at the same time hitching his cap over his eyes, and slowly scratched the back of his head.

"Arrah now, is it deaf ye are, ye screwed up son of a truss?" said the voice, which was followed by a loose-limbed, gawky, redhaired freckled-faced lad.

"Gosh man what's the matter wid ye?" said "Spots," so called on account of the magnitude of his freckles. Dan took not the slightest notice, but again thrust his hands deep in his pockets.

Spots contemplated him for a moment or two, then shrugging his shoulders returned to his recent occupation muttering to himself "That was easy to see that the poor spalpeen was took wid the divil."

Presently Dan roused himself and turning into the stable said quietly—

"Did the Guv'nor tell ye when he was afther returning?"

"Ye've waked then" said Spots looking up from his work.

Dan, who was a little clean-shaved, dark-eyed, black-haired boy, just out of his apprenticeship, about one-third the size of Spots, went up to him and looking at him fiercely said—

"Did ye hear me?

"Faith I heard ye, it's the seeing av ye that's throublin' me."

Dan intimated that if Spots did not keep a civil tongue in his head he would be thankful to be able to see anything.

"Is it, Misther O'Donnell, that ud be confiding in me at all, or axing me advise when he should be afther returning?" said Spots.

"Oh! go to hell wid ye" said Dan savagely.

"But," continued Spots complacently, "if Misther O'Donnell should be spaking to Misther Flanagan, an' I should be so to spake, in aisy hearin'."

"Well," said Dan impatiently.

"Aisy now, aisy," said Spots, "it's only supposin' I am, if so I say Misther O'Donnell were speakin' to Misther Flanagan, an' he sez, sez he to Mr. Flanagan, "Flanagan me bhoy, I'm just rememberin' that it's a dale of time since I was last—" Spots broke off to gaze at the retreating figure of Dan.

"Faith," he muttered, "there's ingratitude" then placing his hands to his mouth, he shouted after Dan "He's gone abroad to Lewes."

Three miles away from the stables stood a fine old Country house, the property of O'Donnell, where his family lived, or, to be correct the womenfolk, his wife and two daughters, lived, his son being away two-thirds of the year at an English public school. Mrs. O'Donnell was a charming, motherly Irish lady, and no higher estimate of her qualities could be given to her. Her elder girl, Molly, was a pretty, dark blue-eyed lass of 17, with a delicate complexion, which may have enhanced her beauty, but gave her mother much anxiety. The younger girl was a wild Irish Miss of 13 years in age and 50 in precocity. Dan, when he was taken to Knocknagh by his father for the final settlement of his articles of apprenticeship, saw Molly for a few minutes only in the hall, and his soul fell down and worshipped. Dan's body was very small, but his heart and soul were gigantic, and he felt, even at the age of 16, that his heart would never change, or that it was possible that there could be another girl in the universe so absolutely beautiful and desirable. After that memorable day Molly never ceased to be in Dan's thoughts, and everything he did was done with the secret hope that if she knew of it it would meet with her approbation. At first he saw little of her, occasionally she came to the stables with her father, and when her brother, Dennis, was at home for the holidays more often. Dennis took a great fancy to Dan, and Dan spared no pains to please the brother of his beloved. The greatest grief that Dan, who was a sensitive lad, especially when his abilities in horsemanship were concerned, ever suffered up to the time of this story, was caused, when he was thrown by a vicious half-trained colt. No other man or boy in the yard could mount the animal, and Dan was one day taking it round the paddock, being more than a little proud of his prowess, and perhaps a little inclined to show off, for from the corner of his eye he saw O'Donnell and his pretty daughter Molly watching him. Spitfire, which was the name of the colt, was in an extra wicked mood that morning and had tried every conceivable trick to throw his rider, but Dan kept him well in hand, never for a moment loosing his temper or nerve, but answering every vicious attempt on the part of Spitfire with soothing words and iron grip. Spitfire, however, was not to be soothed, and, failing in his ordinary methods, he suddenly and apparently relinquished the fight, and cantered quietly round the paddock, but not for long; waiting only till he felt the slightest relaxation in Dan's grip on the saddle, he made a spring and dashed forward, racing straight for a high fence. Dan, who had been over the fence many times before, had no fear of the jump, but Spitfire as he gathered himself together for the leap, instead of taking the fence, swerved completely round on his haunches, as if he had been on a pivot, and he and poor Dan parted company, and Dan had to be ignominiously, as he thought, carried off the field. His shame and misery at being thus thrown before his Master and Molly, especially as he anticipated doing great things with Spitfire, knew no bounds and were out of all proportion to such an ordinary occurrence. A little note brought surreptitiously by Dennis helped to heal his wound, but he could never dispel what he thought to be the shame of his fall. Dan was an absolutely fearless rider and his hand and seat were faultless. The astute O'Donnell soon saw that he had a lad in his stable out of the common run, and though he never relaxed the Spartan discipline of his establishment with Dan, he showed his appreciation of his capabilities by giving him mounts at many of the Irish Meetings and at this time his name was established as a jockey in Ireland. Dan, although a quiet unassuming lad, possessed phenomenal perseverance, an exceptional characteristic in an Irish boy, and had no small opinion of his powers. He had a quiet assurance that not only supported himself but gave others confidence in him, and there was no task on the course that he would have accepted with misgivings. Dan had made up his mind to win Molly O'Donnell for his own, and that was the one set purpose of his life. He carried the thought with him day and night, and though he could only look at her from, as he thought, an immeasurable distance, she was ever before him and he meant to reach his goal. At times, perhaps, after a success on the course he would take his ambitious love and hold it before his mental vision, as he lay awake at night, and he would try and measure the progress he had made and weigh up his chances. Every race he won, he rode and won for Molly as one step nearer to her. He saw more of Molly now, but never, for a moment, would he allow himself to believe that she ever looked kindly at him, or that the many questions she asked of him, and the constant enquiries she made with regard to the horses he rode, were on account of any interest in him personally. He wondered why, when she made him unusually shy by teasing him, but of which he had no suspicion, she would suddenly leave him, with a toss of her pretty head and a flash in her eyes, as if he had angered her. He wondered why, too, when he shewed her his pets, after saying that she heard that they were the finest in Ireland, she would speak of hers as so much finer.

"Faith," she would say, "do you call those Belgium hares, you should come and see mine." And when he replied that hers must, of course, be better than his, she would look at him quizically and say—"Is it Scotch you are Dan?"

One day he was crossing the fields, and, to his surprise and delight, he met Molly. Such an opportunity had often been longed for by him when he lay awake at night thinking of her, and he would rehearse to himself the bold things he would say to her and how she would eventually give him the chance of telling her of his love, but alas! when he met her, though his heart bounded, his tongue refused to work, and he could only touch his forelock.

"I think," said Molly, "I like the English custom of raising the cap when a gentleman meets his lady friends."

"Shure, Miss."

"And I'm thinking Mr. Regan that now you are a gentleman of importance it would be more becoming to address me as Miss Molly."

Dan looked dismayed but answered quietly—"To be shure, Miss Molly." Dan tried hard to find something to say. His cap still clutched in his hand he thought of a dozen things, but all of them seemed too foolish for utterance.

"It's in a hurry you are, so I'll be saying good afternoon Mr. Regan." "Good afternoon Miss Molly," said Dan lamely and Molly and his often longed-for chance were gone.

Dan felt like kicking himself as he went on his way, but one thing comforted him, for Molly had never called him Mr. Regan before, and the prefix gave him food for thought. It gave him a feeling of importance not only within himself, but that Molly should think he was entitled to it. That night he took out his secret again, and blew the bubble of his imagination to breaking point, and when he put it away again, he felt, at last, as if he had stowed away a tangible thing, not just a mist that he had been trying to pierce. For five nights he gave the matter his entire attention and thoughts, and the night before he figures here he had practically made up his mind what to do. He did not want to play a mean part, but O'Donnell was a person who could not be ignored, and Dan was clever enough to know that the long-headed trainer would look considerably higher than himself for a husband for his daughter, whose beauty already made her a celebrity in the neighbourhood. He therefore thought that if O'Donnell had any suspicions that he, Regan, entertained an affection for his daughter he would not hesitate to turn him out of his stables, and probably do his best to ruin him afterwards. On the other hand Dan's confidence in himself led him to believe that a time would come when he would be a jockey of note and position, and he would have acquired sufficient means to make him a suitor to be considered. His natural caution told him to wait, but Molly's beauty, and the class of men that visited Knockagh raised a torment of anxiety in his mind, for he feared that she might be led, or induced, to marry someone else before he had time to storm and carry her affections, which he felt by the very strength of his own he must and could possess. Anxiety, tinged with jealousy, woe, and he started across the fields to see Molly, and open his campaign, even if it were only to see how the land lay, and to seize the opportunity for a preliminary skirmish, that the absence of O'Donnell gave him. For some time he debated whether he should go straight to the front door, or skirt round by the stables and orchard and reconnoitre. He felt that it would be more manly and straightforward to approach the house in the ordinary way, but for the life of him he could think of no excuse for his call or what to say when he was received. He had crossed a field at the back of the house, and, resting on the orchard style, was cogitating this weighty subject when he suddenly heard a rippling laugh, Molly's laugh, for there was none like it.

"Faith, Mr. Regan, you look as if you bore the troubles of a kingdom" Dan raised his cap in approved English style, acquired after much practise, in the hay loft.

"By your lave, Miss Molly, I'd be just stepping over the style."

"Do you think you can do it," she said, as Dan with his hand on the top rail vaulted lightly over.

"I've been thinking a dale of those Belgian hares Miss Molly, could I be seeing them."

"Indeed," said Molly, giving him a sidelong glance, with a slightly heightened colour; "it's a little late I'm afraid you are, for they are not here now."

Dan for a moment wondered if they had ever been there, but discarded the thought as disloyal.

"It's to see them I've come on purpose," said Dan brazenly.

"And when did you think you would first like to see them Mr. Regan." Dan said that he had always wanted to, but feared he might not be welcome.

"My father and mother, I am sure, would always be pleased to see you Mr. Regan."

"I hoped that I might be seeing you too, Miss Molly," said Dan in an endeavour to introduce a personal note.

"Shure now, that's very kind of you, and as there are no Belgium hares I'll be doing as a makeshift."

"Och Miss Molly it's entirely miserable you'll be making me."

They had been strolling across the orchard and, strange to say, the direction they took instead of taking them to the house or the stables led them to a little summer house at the far end of the orchard, the favourite retreat of Molly on hot summer days.

"I fear it is going to rain, perhaps we'd better step inside" said Molly, looking up into the cloudless sky, and entering as she spoke, followed humbly by Dan.

"So it's miserable I make you, is it Mr. Regan."

"Indeed and you do Miss."

"Miss Molly, if you please," she said seating herself in a rustic chair. "I seem to be unfortunate," she continued half-mischievously half-pensively gazing at Dan. I have had a lovely present, and I was told that if I did not accept it I should make the donor miserable too. To-day is my birthday Mr. Regan."

"Your birthday! Miss Molly If I had only known."

"Would you like to see my present?"

"Shure and I would."

Molly drew from her pocket a little red morroco case, and, opening it, displayed a pendant, with a large diamond in the centre, surrounded by turquoise.

"Isn't it lovely?" she said, her eyes sparkling.

"It is that," said Dan without enthusiasm.

"Ar'nt you wanting to know who gave it to me?" asked Molly mischievously.

"No," said Dan abruptly.

Dan was torn between jealousy and passion. What chance had he when she knew men that were able to give her presents like that and she accepted them? Yes, that was the worst of it. She accepted them. For a moment he felt as if he could have killed her. The intensity of his rage and passion surged up in him, sweeping all caution and discretion to the winds, he snatched the trinket from her hands, and flung it far across the orchard, the next moment he had Molly, unresisting, in his arms. His intended reconnaisance ended like many another in history, in a battle fought and won.

It might have been moments, it might have been years, Dan could not tell. His Elysium was destroyed by a raucous voice, thundering in his ear. "By all that's holy what's the meaning of this," and to find himself confronted by the astonished and infuriated O'Donnell.

Dan stood his ground manfully, and would have taken the blow from the threatening hunting crop, had not Molly, with a cry of fury, almost equal to her father's wrenched the whip from his hands. Many words followed, and Dan's, in spite of his inequality in size and physical weight, did not tend to sooth the frenzied father.

"Back! Back, to ye kennel ye dog. Do ye dare to be havering afther me daughter," roared O'Donnell as he again advanced with uplifted arm.

"An why not sor," said Dan boldly, "If uts Miss Molly as don't say no who's to say ut."

"By all the saints ye imp of darkness, I'll flay ye where ye stand, if ut's not off ye are this minute," roared O'Donnell.

"I'll be going Sor, but its back I'll be coming too. I've me future before me and I'm on the right course. I ride Determination Sor, out of Love by Ambition and if I don't get home first its not Regan that my name is.

"Avast there ye crowing sparrow. Bekas ye 've won a selling plate and that against a dead field, ye think ye'r past the Derby post. Win that and may be I'll listen to ye crowing" said O'Donnell contemptously, as he led Molly away.

"I'll be taking ye at ye word Mister O'Donnell, I'll win me Derby and keep me Molly" shouted Dan to him as he disappeared down the orchard.

CHAPTER II.

Dan walked back to the Knockagh training stables, with a feeling of exhileration that he had never experienced before. He was no love sick stable lad, but a small Field Marshall at the head of his army, burning with enthusiasm, determination and love for his cause. He walked with the knowledge that he had great things to do, and that he would do them. He looked fearlessly across the fair course of time, there were stiff fences to be topped and wide ditches to be leapt, but his seat was firm and his mount sure. What did he care for obstacles, nothing could stop him now, for was not Molly at the winning post, calling on him to hasten. Spots greeted him at the stables with a grin.

"Is it a fortune ye've won Dan?" he asked as he looked at Dan's glowing face.

"Ten thousand fortunes" said Dan and went to his work whistling. O'Donnell left for England that night taking Molly with him, but Dan was not aware of this and his serenity was undisturbed until he was settling himself to sleep and fond dreams of his Molly, when he suddenly remembered his frenzied act of hurling away Molly's pendant. A hot waive of shame swept over him as he thought of his mad act. There was only one thing to do, he must at once find the trinket, and return it to his love and beseech forgiveness for his wickedness. He hastily rose, and dressing, made his way to the orchard of Knockagh. Going straight to the summerhouse he stood upon the threshold, where he and Molly had parted. He peered inside and with almost reverential awe removed his cap. Then it occurred to him that he had no recollection of the direction that he threw the trinket, moreover for the first time he realised that it was far too dark to make an effectual search and that he must wait for the dawn. He turned again to the summerhouse but he could not bring himself to enter it. This was no common wooden structure, but a palace of gold peopled with the ghosts of sacred memories. Sitting on the lintel step he let his mind revel on the scene of that afternoon, and so he sat till a soft light swept across the sky, and a little rustle in the trees proclaimed the coming of another day. A lark sprang up to spread the message on high, and on the three clear notes of a thrush the day had come. Dan bestirred himself and tried to remember the position in which he stood when he threw the trinket, then he took a small stone about the weight of the jewel in its case, and threw it away with all his strength in the direction that he decided on, and as he watched it fall the rays of the rising sun edged the pebble with a golden rim. For over two hours did Dan tramp round and round in circles, vainly trying to find the lost pendant, until he was compelled to give up his search for fear of being detected, for they were early risers at Knockagh. Night after night Dan rose an hour before the dawn, and made his way to the Orchard, but without success. The want of sleep, added to the hard life of training, was beginning to tell upon him. After a few of the weary nights of fruitless search, Spots, who watched Dan closely, noticed his fagged appearance.

"Is ut ye ten thousand fortunes that ye've lost Dan!" he asked one day.

"What do ye mane!" asked Dan snappishly.

"Ye'll not be troubling the Stewards at the weights Dan" was all Spots vouchsafed.

That night Dan, making his usual excursion to the Orchard, decided to turn his attention to the hedges and trees, thinking that the jewel might have lodged in one of their branches, and as he made his way across the fields a long lean figure might have been seen following him at a safe distance, but instead of taking the direct path across the open field, making a detour under the protecting shade of the hedges. Dan Spent his two hours without success, having made a careful examination of the hedge on the left, leaving the right for the next night's work. Had he however looked behind the right hand hedge he might have found the long lean figure crouching behind it, and watching his movements with a considerable amount of interest and bewilderment.

When Dan gave up the search, Spots, for it was he, sat on the bank under the hedge and gave vent to his astonishment in disjointed muttering. Removing his cap from his head he mopped the perspiration from his forehead which his excitement had caused, and scarcely had he done so than he scrambled to his feet with a cry of alarm, for something had struck his head with a sharp rap.

"May the Saints protect me!" he said looking first into the tree above him, and then on the ground at his feet, his eyes alighting on a small red morroco case. It was the lost pendant that had been caught up in a tree as Dan surmised it might have done, and which had fallen on Spots the very moment that Dan gave up his search for that day.

"Glory, Glory, I've found Dan's fortune, and straight from heaven." He said as he again looked up into the tree.

Now Spots looked upon his find, as he said, as a gift straight from heaven, and he was not the person to doubt or question such dispensation of providence. Caution stepped at once to the fore, and he hastily thrust the trinket back into its case, and deposited it safely in his pocket. "Holy Mother, What'll I be doing with ut?" He said as he piously crossed himself.

He had no qualms as to his keeping it, and he had no doubts as to its being valuable, but he was quite in earnest when he sought aid as to its disposal. On his walk back to the stables he decided that he would do well to await developments, and rest content with the fact of acquisition only.

For nine more nights Dan continued his search to the delight of Spots, who continued to keep his own counsel and then O'Donnell returned. O'Donnell sent at once for Dan. He scrutinised him closely not failing to notice his tired and dejected appearance and, a half sarcastic, half kindly grin, brushed across the trainer's hard features.

"Its not well ye looking Regan. Its change your after wanting."

"I'm well enough, Sor" said Dan, as a frightened look crept into his eyes.

"I tell ye your not. I return to Lewes to-night. You come too."

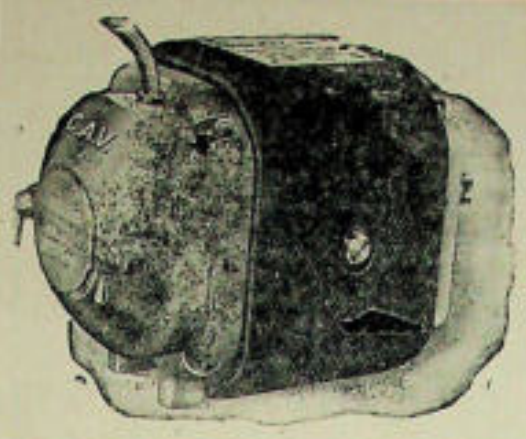
"To-night Sor!"

"Didn't I say so? I'm after taking Colleen, the Cat, Rake and Spitfire I've entered the last for next year's. Derby and—well there's no knowing—get to work. Ye'll be bringing Keeble and Spots with ye and ye'll take charge of Spitfire and mind ye never lave him." So saying O'Donnell left Dan to carry out his instructions.

Dan had not been in England many months before he found himself a person of some importance. He signed on with O'Donnell and during the year 188—he rode exclusively for him. He won several minor events on Colleen, a filly that already attracted some attention in connection with the next year's Oaks. The Cat and Rake had also done well. Spitfire went to the post, in a race for two year olds and Dan looked upon a win as a certainty, but the colt was so restive at the gate and displayed such temper that he failed to gain even a place. His running, however, in no way disturbed O'Donnell's equanimity: he had given a good deal of attention to Spitfire for some days before the race, and had handed him over to Spots on the ground that Dan had his time too much occupied to give sufficient attention to the colt.

Spots, who still had the pendant safely stowed away, spent much time in an endeavour to work out a plan for its safe disposal. His native secretiveness and suspicion of others prevented him from making a confidant of any of his English confreres and although he planned many schemes he had wit enough to know that he had not yet arrived at a safe solution, moreover, the possession of the pendant gave him a feeling of hold over Dan whose growing importance had aroused a corresponding jeousy and hatred. Since he took over the charge of Spitfire his attitude towards Dan became significantly offensive and he loved to imply, by hints and insendo that O'Donnell could not trust Dan, and had therefore made the change. He felt aggrieved, too, that Dan should be riding for the stable, and gaining all the applause while he, he asserted, in fits of anger had to work in the background, but did for more per and was more trusted by O'Donnell than ever Dan was or would be, but that a time would come, etc.

It was true that Spots had gained his master's confidence, and did much to swell the coffers of O'Donnell and the little coterie of bookmakers who followed him, and Spots was well aware that he could give very good reasons why Spitfire did not win his maiden race.



The prices had for some time been quoted for the Derby of 188—but up to a few days before the race Spitfire was not even mentioned in the betting. One sporting paper referred to a rumour that he had been backed to win £20,000 at 40 to 1, and touched lightly on the old saying of "Fools and their money," etc., but omitted to say which was the fool, the layer or the backer.

Spitfire's training was completed at Lewes and his temper improved with his condition. A secret trial was evidently to the satisfaction of O'Donnell, and although the time he recorded showed a very pure performance and Dan was at a loss to reconcile the result of the trial as given out by O'Donnell, and his own judgment of the pace that he knew he had gone. In all innocence Dan concluded that O'Donnell had mistaken the distance. The day of the Two Thousand arrived and Spitfire was again left at the post and becoming quite unmanagable, finally bolting off the course.

On returning to the stable Spots, on taking over his charge, greeted Dan with a malicious grin, and Dan gave up all hope of the Derby.

The day before the Derby, Dan received a message, instructing him to call upon his master at the latter's flat in South Kensington. Dan presented himself and was received by O'Donnell with a kindly greeting, if such a word can be used with regard to a man of O'Donnell's rough and ready methods.

"Dan, me bhoy, it's hopes I have that in to-morrow's race ye'll be doing well." Dan looked at the trainer moodily.

Dynamo Car Lighting.

The first to introduce electric lamps for cars we are again the first to introduce a system of dynamo car lighting which is at once the most thoroughly practical and economical proposition yet placed on the market.

The bugbears of previous systems are conspicuous by their absence. The important improvements have been the means of attaining a considerable increase in efficiency and reliability. A striking feature that compels admiration is the extreme simplicity that dominates the whole system.

Altogether the system is a triumph of British Engineering skill and workmanship.

"Shure it's good to have hopes, Sor."

"And I'm not after spaking without the rason for ut" said O'Donnell.

"Faith, it's a power of rason ye'll be wanting", answered Dan unconvinced.

"I've been giving Spitfire a dale of attintion Dan, and I'm thinking that I've got to the bottom av him."

"I'll be plased if I'll be kaping to the top av him to-morrow," retured Dan.

"You'll be nigh wid him," continued O'Donnell, who was excited and therefore broader in his brogue than usual. "Kape him off av the rails, kape him clear even if you lose a bit at the corner. Coax him and slather him with your tongue till ye get him round the corner. In the straight coax him and slather him but don't forget both whip and spur."

"I'll do ut," said Dan brightening as he noted his master's enthusiasm and earnestness.

"Two horses you'll be watching," continued O'Donnell, the rest you can lave alone, but kape clear av them. The Morman manes to win, and can do ut; the stable have their shirt on Cariolanus, and he stands well to win.

I've been after talking to Davis, who is up on Cariolanus and he takes the race as won. Watch both and kape clear, kape clear I say. If the field see ye going strong they'll hedge ye in, for there is pots of money on them two, and its jealous they are av ye Dan. Ye see, kape clear."

"I see," said Dan, his eyes sparkling. "If Spitfire goes the Divil himself won't jockey me out of ut."

"Good lad," said O'Donnell, laying a hand on Dan's shoulder and turning to his bureau "Ye see that little drawer."

"Yes," said Dan.

"There's five thousand av the best in there that goes to the jockey that pilots Spitfire first past the post to-morrow."

Five thousand pounds! If O'Donnell offered five thousand pounds it meant that he must stand to win a huge amount of money. Dan saw his chance and seized it.

Removing his eyes from the bureau he looked at O'Donnell solmenly shaking his head.

"Not enough, Sor."

"What's that he say!"

"Not enough, Sor," repeated Dan quietly.

The big trainer stood over Dan livid with rage and amazement.

"By all the saints in heaven if this were to-morrow night I'd break ivery bone in ye body."

"I know ut, Sor, but it ain't to-morrow," answered Dan boldly.

"In the name of the Virgin what is ut ye're after wanting."

"Molly" said Dan tersely.

O'Donnell collapsed into a chair.

"Molly, Molly," he repeated softly.

Dan said nothing for a few minutes, then as O'Donnell neither spoke nor moved turning towards the door said;

"It must be Molly, Sor, for then I must win."

"Molly" again repeated O'Donnell, then raising bloodshot eyes to Dan he pointed to the bureau draw, saying:

"Ye'd better be after having those, they are certain."

"It must be Molly," said Dan, again shaking his head.

O'Donnell rose and taking Dan's hand said:

"Ye're a good lad Regan, have ye way." And added, when he had closed the door on the boy, "If it's not too late"

The door was scarcely closed when Dan returned.

"I'm wishful to be saying something to ye, Sor."

"What is ut."

Dan fidgeted.

"The day ye found us in the Orchard, Miss Molly had a jewel given to her.

"Yes," said O'Donnell "shure 'twas her birthday."

"I don't know who give ut to her, but it made me mad, and I threw ut away in the orchard."

"Well," queried O'Donnell as Dan paused.

"Every night till ye took me away I was after looking for ut, but I never found ut."

"Ye'd better look again to-morrow night said O'Donnell not unkindly.

"I was thinking ye ought to know, that's all" said Dan and took his leave.

Spots had made a discovery. He had taken the pendant out of its case in order to have its value appraised by a jeweler and with the idea of removing the name of the jeweler from whom it was purchased which was printed in gilt letters on the inside of the cover; he took out the silk pad on the inside of the lid and underneath he found a card, upon which was written "For my Molly on her 18th birthday from her loving father." After much reflection Spots came to the conclusion that he now held in his hand a weapon that would enable him to satisfy his jealousy and hatred of Dan to the utmost and to which end he he was quite prepared to sacrifice any monetary gain he would make by its sale.

With much satisfaction he left the stables, and journeyed to O'Donnell's flat in South Kensington, where he arrived a few minutes after Dan's departure.

He was shown into the study and found O'Donnell seated by the table with an open letter in his hand and a look upon his face that he had never seen there before.

"What's it ye're wanting, Spots."

Spots was surprised at the quite tone of his master's greeting, for he expected vehement and emphatic expostulation at his leaving his post.

"It's important busines that's bringing me here yer Honor, an, it's two av the best lads that I've left with Spitfire with the Divil himself to take them if they lave him till I'm returning."

"What are ye after" asked O'Donnell sternly.

"It's a mighty quare bisness yer Honor that I'm after. I've always heard your Honor say, that a man must be clane and clare if he's after doing his work well." Spots paused and O'Donnell stared at him scowling." And if a man wants a power of money he'd not be the jockey your Honor would be choosing."

O'Donnell knew his countryman's roundabout way of getting to a point so held his tongue just nodding assent.

"Dan's been confiding in me a dale of late yer Honor."

"About," queried O'Donnell.

"Money, yer Honor."

"And" again queried O'Donnell.

"I've a great respect for Mister Dan Regan, yer Honor; he's a fine jockey and I'd be after doing all I could to help him yer Honor."

"Yes."

"There's a little bit of jalry he's got yer Honor an'me being his friend shure he's wishing me to dispose av ut for him."

"Ah!" said O'Donnell eyeing Spots coldly." Where's the jewelry."

"I have ut here" said Spots, and pulling out the case handed it to O'Donnell.

"By all that's holy it's my girl's this is."

"You don't mane" said Spots with well, assumed astonishment.

"Where did you find it you blackguard," demanded O'Donnell. Nothing daunted Spots answered.

"Havn't I been telling yer Honor." Then as if he had suddenly realised that he had got his friend into trouble, said:

"Oh! Holy Mother what have I done! Ye'll forgive him yer Honor, ye'll forgive him Ochone, Ochone an'he'll never ride to-morrow now."

Much to Spots' surprise his wailings were scarce out of his mouth before he felt himself seized by the nape of his neck in a grip of iron and a voice thundering at him.

"Ye lying murthering thief. I'll teach ye, I'll teach ye."

Spots sank to his knees imploring mercy, but O'Donnell thoroughly roused seized a riding crop from off the wall and rained blow after blow on his writhing body, finally picking him up and throwing him into a corner of the room.

"And now" said O'Donnell panting from his exertions, "I'll ring for me man to fetch an officer and give ye in charge for theft."

"Yer Honor stay, stay for the mercy av heaven stay."

"Why should I be staying ye scoundrel!"

"Yer Honor I've worked for ye, worked hard, yer honor; up all night yer Honor with Spitfire and who's to be able to look after him as I'll be doing! Shure yer honor isn't it all, that I am after knowing about him yer Honor."

There was something about the tone of Spots that attracted O'Donnell's attention and did much to cool his wrath.

"And if I let ye go."

"Shure I've no memry at all, at all," and Spots looked up into his master's face with a tear.

O'Donnell opened wide the door. "Go" he said and Spots left a sadder, if not a wiser man.

Dan went home that night much relieved in mind. The loss of the pendant had been a continous nightmare to him and he had never ceased to worry about it. After the orchard incident Molly had been packed off to England, where she stayed for a time with relations, after which she went to America with her mother and brother and had wintered on the advice of a physician at Davos Platz. O'Donnell never mentioned this to Dan, whose ambition and determination to win Molly never for a moment wavered, and who decided not to mention her again to her father until he was in a position to do so. One little note he had from her through her brother. A few lines only that said nothing would change her and that she would wait her life for him, and if necessary, after that. Dan treasured this little note with his most precious possession, i.e., his racing certificate, under lock an key.

Dan's Derby arrived at last.

The weather was perfect. The ground perhaps a trifle hard, but which, if anything, gave Spitfire an advantage over horses of the heavier build of the Morman and Cariolanus. Dan was riding in three races, the first, the Derby and the last on the Cat. In the ring Spitfire's name was scarcely mentioned, an occasional offer of 100 to 1 being made more in jest than in earnest. The numbers were up when a leading Bookmaker was seen to receive a telegram and to show some excitement on reading it. He was also seen to give his clerk some hasty instruction, and further to send off two messengers post haste. In less than a minute the outside bookmaker on the hill were hastily rubbing off "40 to 1 Spitfire" and writing in 8 to 1, 7 to 1, 6 to 1 and down to 3 to 1. What was the meaning of it? Prices opened 5 to 4 Morman, 5 to 2 Cariolanus, 10 to 1 bar two. What was the meaning of it? A glance at the telegram would have told the tale. It came from Flushing and read thus. "Traced Spitfire stands to win one hundred and fifty thousand. Stable heavily involved." Faster than the telephone or telegraph the tick tack of some knowing one, told the tale to every bookie on the course. O'Donnell chuckled, and watched the fun without making a bet. The outside bookies blessed him and wished him luck for the name of Spitfire was almost entirely absent from their books, but the inner ring cursed in Capital letters, for they could not tell what was in store for them at their offices and from the clubs. Dan preserved his usual calm and nonchalance, remaining in the stable with Spitfire after the first race, and was pleasantly surprised to find him restful and quiet, almost too quiet he thought.

Dan was the last to leave the stables and the paddock, and took no part in the parade. The gate—an ever hateful thing to Spitfire—was the cause of a bad start, and Dan was sorely tried not to make better running from the first. He followed his instructions however and kept clear of the field, so much so, that although he was seventh when he entered the straight, no one seemed to notice him. The Morman had taken up the running, and easily overhauled, Confederate, who was leading on the rails. Cariolanus was third and Davis commencing to ride challenged The Morman, and as they reached the stand shouts of "Cariolanus wins, Cariolanus wins" were raised on all sides But the little chestnut with Dan lying flat, far on the outside, shot up like a flash, and while ten thousand throats were shouting "Cariolanus wins," by the stretch of a chestnut neck Dan had passed the post. A dead silence followed. All eyes and glasses were turned towards the winning board. Presently the names and numbers were up:—

Morman	3

A wavering cheer supported by the raucus, but gleeful shouts, of the outside bookies was all that greeted O'Donnell as he led in his horse.

A few enthusiastic friends tried to seize Dan's hands, but though he kept his seat, he heard and saw nothing, but repeatedly muttered to himself:

"Molly wins, Molly wins."

Dan rode in the last race. The Cat started odds on, but finished nowhere. Hastily Dan dressed and went in search of O'Donnell

"May I go Sor."

O'Donnell shook his hand and then waived him away but said nothing. Dan arrived at the village station, two miles away from Knokagh, on a bright May morning, and springing into the car awaiting him, told Pat, the driver, to go as if the Devil himself were after him. What a morning! What joy! What life was in the air. How good and pure and fresh the world looked clothed in her shimmering morning robe. The slanting rays of the rising sun seemed to dance across the meadows. The birds vied with each other to sing their praise the sweetest, and flowers gladdened as they turned their starry eyes to the rays of light and warmth. Could any one help but rejoice on such a morn as this. Even the old mare, whose follies had not exceeded a jog trot for many years, thought of the days when she had galloped with the best and almost increased her usual pace of eight miles an hour.

Dan's soul, however was filled with a strange foreboding. A nameless anxiety stirred him. He tried to shake it off, but the strain of his training, the excitement of the last few days, the continuous, never relaxing grind up the ladder of success, had drawn deeply on Dan's store of strength, and, do what he would, he could not shake off that clinging indefinable horror of a coming calamity. He had scarcely alighted from the car when the front door was opened and he was silently greeted by Mrs. O'Donnell. He felt vaguely surprised at finding her up so early. As he entered the hall she took his hand tenderly and led him into the morning room.

"Dan, my poor boy, you look done up."

"Oh its splendid I am," said Dan trying to be cheerful, but looking at Mrs. O'Donnell with frightened questioning eyes."

"I have had a wire from my husband, you may read it" and she handed Dan a telegram.

Dan read "Dan arriving early to-morrow, if advisable let him see Molly. I don't understand" said Dan wearily.

"Dan my boy," said Mrs O'Donnell, "Molly is very ill, she has been ill for a long time."

"Ill!" said Dan, "I never heard of ut."

"She is much worse than she has been" continued Mrs. O'Donnell.

"Can I see her!"

"If you wish it."

"I do."

She led him upstairs. Stopping at a door with her hand on the handle she laid her other on his arms and whispered:

"Be brave, for her sake."

Dan entered feeling dazed with apprehension and fear. As he entered he noticed, opposite him an open window, through which the fresh morning breeze was blowing in the curtains, and a nurse was standing at the foot of a bed. He turned his eyes towards the bed and there saw a figure lying. He glanced with a look of enquiry at her mother, who silently beckoned him to the bedside.

A little sunken face, with closed eyes, lay amid a mass of dark brown hair.

Dan touched the wasted fingers that lay upon the coverlet and slowly two dark blue eyes opened and fixed themselves upon him. He bent towards her.

"Molly dear, I've won my Derby."

A faint smile stole across her face. Presently her lips moved. Dan bent his head.

"I too have won my Derby." The smile passed and the eyes closed again. Dan still held the thin white hand in his. The nurse turned away from the bed and gently drew down the blind.

Molly had passed the post.

"They found him a few days afterwards searching abart in the orchid clean off his chump," said Joe, "O'Donnell took on almost as much as he did, and in some ways a site more. They did what they could for 'im, but Lor love ye, they could never keep 'im under what they call control, 'e was allus out looking and searching, looking and searching."

"How did you come across him," I asked.

"Well, you see, 'aving a turn for queer things I heard tell abart 'im and made a few enquiries and" Joe added "E's 'appy 'ere and don't do no 'arm and—well that's all."

THURSDAY, 13th June 1912.

THE RESCUE OF THE ARAB.

Our attention has been drawn to a somewhat original scheme which has been set on foot by a Russian admirer of the Arab, Prince Alexander Scherbatoff, in the interests of the "Desert born." The originality of the scheme lies in the fact that never before, to our knowledge at all events, has it been attempted to seek the salvation of one specific breed of horse through the instrumentality of the horse show.

That such should be attempted argues faith in the horse show as an institution; which faith we cordially hope may be justified in the case under notice. The prince states that, by reason of changes in the life-habits of the Bedouin of the Arabian deserts, more especially of Nejd, of Syria and Mesopotamia, the regions where most of the best Arabs heretofore have been bred, the whole industry is in danger of decay. He says that the changes to which he refers are bringing about "a fatal effect on the Arab horse which is gradually diminishing in numbers and deteriorating in quality:" it is to check this diminution and deterioration that he has promulgated the scheme for which he seeks public support. To briefly outline the plan, Prince Alexander Scherbatoff suggests holding annually at Cairo, a show devoted to Arabs both pure and nominal: it goes without saying that a large proportion of so-called Arabs have pedigrees which would not bear investigation; it were better to say that pedigree is not claimed for them at all. The buyer of the "gulf" or the Syrian Arab does not expect to get a pedigree with him. We call these horses Arabs; they have much Arab blood in them and many of the inestimable qualities associated with the name; but purity of descent is not their strong point. Nevertheless they form a class which is well worth preserving and deserve to be included in the scheme. The real object in view, however, is to create a new breeding ground and mart for Arabs of pure breeding; first, by establishing the annual show and, secondly, by founding in Egypt an Arab breeding stud; the show is to be followed by a sale after the manner of the Breed Societies' Show at

THE RESCUE OF THE ARAB.

Our attention has been drawn to a somewhat original scheme which has been set on foot by a Russian admirer of the Arab, Prince Alexander Scherbatoff, in the interests of the "Desert born." The originality of the scheme lies in the fact that never before, to our knowledge at all events, has it been attempted to seek the salvation of one specific breed of horse through the instrumentality of the horse show.

That such should be attempted argues faith in the horse show as an institution; which faith we cordially hope may be justified in the case under notice. The prince states that, by reason of changes in the life-habits of the Bedouin of the Arabian deserts, more especially of Nejd, of Syria and Mesopotamia, the regions where most of the best Arabs heretofore have been bred, the whole industry is in danger of decay. He says that the changes to which he refers are bringing about "a fatal effect on the Arab horse which is gradually diminishing in numbers and deteriorating in quality:" it is to check this diminution and detorioration that he has promulgated the scheme for which he seeks public support. To briefly outline the plan, Prince Alexander Scherbatoff suggests holding annually at Cairo, a show devoted to Arabs both pure and nominal: it goes without saying that a large proportion of so-called Arabs have pedigrees which would not bear investigation; it were better to say that pedigree is not claimed for them at all. The buyer of the "gulf" or the Syrian Arab does not expect to get a pedigree with him. We call these horses Arabs; they have much Arab blood in them and many of the inestimable qualities associated with the name; but purity of descent is not their strong point. Nevertheless they form a class which is well worth preserving and deserve to be included in the scheme. The real object in view, however, is to create a new breeding ground and mart for Arabs of pure breeding; first, by establishing the annual show and, secondly, by founding in Egypt an Arab breeding stud; the show is to be followed by a sale after the manner of the Breed Societies' Show at Home: and by way of additional attraction, it is proposed to organise "long distance races" open to soldiers of all nations which use Arabs for military purposes. We confess ourselves not greatly enamoured of the last feature; long distance races serve no particularly useful purpose, are liable to abuse, and make no strong appeal to the general public; but let that pass. Support for the show is to be sought among the large Arab horse-dealers of the East; the shippers of Mosul and Koweit are suggested and the big dealers of Bombay; and it is hoped that those European Governments which maintain studs and use Arab stallions may be prevailed upon to send representative animals. While wishing every success to any project which has for its object the promotion of the breeding of the finest horse in the world we must admit that this plan does not look very hopeful. The dealer in high class Arabs rarely has to wait long for his price when he has a good one to dispose of in Bombay; and, as a business man, he is not likely to ship it to Egypt on the chance of a prize and sale when he can sell profitably without incurring further risk. As regards the hoped for support from Continental studs, we imagine that such must depend upon the season of the year when the show is held; no doubt that will be in the cold weather when the wealthy seek sunshine in Egypt; and if that be so, perhaps the show executive may hope for the assistance desired—once. We doubt much whether the most open-handed of governments will send its best horses regularly to Cairo merely to "encourage the others." They may be interested in the continuance of the breed to which their light horses owe so much; and would doubtless be at pains to support a well considered movement for the preservation of the Arab; but we do not feel quite sure that a case has been made out for their support of the projected show. Moreover Russia, Turkey, France and Austria to cite the nations which owe most to the Arab, or most depend upon Arab blood, are in possession of enough animals to supply their own wants, whether for crossing purposes or for breeding the pure article.

Then as regards the proposed breeding stud, Prince Alexander Scherbatoff states that a commission was to start in May for the breeding area of Arabic and Syria to purchase stock. From which it would appear that the International Society for the Preservation of the Arab has the main requisite for the prosecution of its scheme—to wit, money. There can be no question concerning the advantages of Egypt as the site of the proposed stud; dry, rainless and hot, it is just such a climate as that in which the Arab has been bred in its perfection. There are already a few private Arab studs in the country, that belonging to Mr. Scawen Blunt being the best known to Englishmen. Then, the country is central; lying as it does between the markets of East and West, it is most favourably placed as a source of distribution; also of the indigenous sources of supply when fresh blood is wanted. Remains the vital question of demand for the stock which the International Society will produce.

Is there, to put it plainly, such demand for Arabs in Europe and Asia that such a stud can hope to pay its way? The Turkish and Russian buyers are those upon whom, we think, the projected stud must chiefly depend; and both Russia and Turkey have access to the native breeding grounds whence they draw their own supplies. From other European countries the demand for Arabs, whether by public haras or private individual, is very small; it is a pity it should be so, but there is no getting over the hard fact. The peoples of Algeria, Tunisia and other parts of Northern Africa breed what are commonly called Barbs in quantity sufficient for their needs; they are not the highest class of Arab stock but they are sound, hardy, have stamina and can live where another horse would starve; money is not plentiful among these tribes, and we doubt whether they will furnish much support as purchasers in Egypt where Arabs of the highest class and therefore of the highest price are to be bred. While we wish the projected stud all the success excellent motives deserve we feel no inclination to apply for shares in it.

A point that hangs in our mind, as doubtless it hangs in the minds of our readers, is this: What are the changes in the life-habits of the Bedouin, horse breeders since the beginning, we might say, which are leading to neglect of horse-breeding? We are inclined to doubt whether such changes can be proved; whether they exist. It has never been an easy matter for the stranger to secure Arabs of the best blood; the owners will not part with them at any price, and those who do sell make it a favour. Is it not far more probable that the decrease in the demand for Arabs—for what we will call "Market Arabs"—has brought about a certain decline in the industry? The laws of supply and demand are as well understanded of the Bedouin as they are of more advanced races of mankind, and it is only reasonable that if they find Arabs of the second and third class bring prices less satisfactory than they did in past days they should cease to breed for sale. For really good ones there will always be a market in this country but the really good ones the Bedouins keep for themselves. We take it that the increasing difficulty of getting Arab stock which has prompted the inauguration of Prince Alex. Scherbatoff's Society is due, not to changes in the lives and habits of the historic breeders, but to absence of demand. The point is one of the first importance to the Society; it can create supply but can it create demand? The hope that the show at Cairo with its corollaries will open the eyes of the nations to the merits of the breed is one that we cannot share, much as we should like to share it. Students of horse history know how vast is the debt which the light breeds of horse in every country of the world owes to the Arab; it may fairly be said that he is the corner-stone of every light breed from the Orloff trotter to the English thoroughbred. But the Arab has done his work in the great scheme of things—so far as the horse breeding of most nations is concerned. Perhaps the situation is best summed up by quoting the verdict of Colonel Horvath formerly the officer in charge of the Crown stud at Mezobeyges in Hungary. Asked if he hoped to establish half-bred races which should breed to type he replied:—"The families of Majestosa (Lippieza blood) of Gidran and Sehagya (Arab blood) are already constant." The Lippizienne horses we may remind our readers are a cross between Arab and Italian blood, the latter containing much Spanish, which is Arab, blood. There we have it. The Arab has given of his blood to make horses of the size and conformation required by man: these now breed true to type; and the Arab is no longer required in his purity by the nations. Nevertheless we trust that the day is far distant when we shall speak of him as of the past.

THE ENGLISH AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP.

LONDON, Friday, 7th June 1912.

THE Championship ended at Westward Ho! to-day when Messrs. John Ball and Mitchell met in the final. In the penultimate round Ball had beaten Hambro by 3 up and 2 to play, and Mitchell had beaten Macfarlan by 5 up and 3. The final was well contested, and in spite of the bad weather there was a very large crowd of spectators. Mitchell finished the first round 3 up, having given an exhibition of splendid driving. Ball recovered in the afternoon and squared the match at the 23rd. From here it was a ding dong struggle. Mitchell was 1 up at the turn and held the same advantage at the 35th. Ball once more made it all square at the 36th, the 37th was halved, but the 38th and the Championship went to Ball. Mitchell is a chauffeur in the service of Sir Abe Bailey and played a sporting match throughout.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

LIKE many another result that has not been tipped and like many another in the future that will not be considered probable, the victory of Tagalie in the Derby of 1912 has been plainly indicated ever since her win in the One Thousand and still more strongly since the break—down of Cylgad, to whom she ran up in the Newmarket Stakes. As so often has happened before, however, the public got tied to the tail of a favourite and with virtually only one good three-year-old performance over a mile course—a severe mile it is true—they blindly plumped for him to win over a very difficult one and a half mile course. Sweeper II. is not the first Two-Thousand Guinea winner to be defeated by the trying gradients at Epsom: he is not the first warm favourite to go down: he is not the first horse that has been over-rated by an over-confident public—and he most certainly will not be the last. Sweeper II. has been hotly championed on many sides and those who have cast his bar sinister up against him have been practically told that they are prejudiced idiots and that, although on the dam's side there is a mare far back whose lineage cannot be directly traced, it is too far back to matter and that he is otherwise so full of the bluest blood as to demand recognition. The horse that wins over the Rowley Mile as Sweeper II. did is as a rule the one that they plump for for the Derby, even if he has nothing beyond this and a good two-year-old record behind him. But it has times and again been proved to be a dangerous practice, for there is many an undoubtedly good one over the mile at Newmarket that is little better than a hack over half a mile further at Epsom and a remarkably bad horse over three-quarters of a mile farther at Doncaster. The fact of their being a tache in Sweeper II.'s pedigree is not necessarily a bar to his success in a classic, though no half-bred has won the Derby: but there have been many good ones that have won good races against whose names the fateful letters h. b. are placed. Caiman was one and to instance a line about which we in India know were the descendants of that fine horse Holbrook, whose pedigree is not accepted by the English Stud Book, but who has sired many a good winner—Neith amongst them. As to favourites that have won the Derby the preponderance of success is considerably in their favour as against the success of outsiders, not that this year's winner can be classed in the latter category. Fifty first favourities, whereas only twenty rank outsiders have been successful, and the list of the former is as follows:—Diomed, Saltram, Serjeant, Sir Thomas, Skyscraper, Rodhamanthus, John Bull, Sir Harry, Champion, Eleanor, Election, Whalebone, Smolensko, Blucher, Tiresias, Gustavus, Emilius, Middleton, Priam, St. Giles, Plenipotentiary, Bay Middleton, Coronation, Cotherstone, Surplice, The Flying Dutchman, Teddington, West Australian, Wild Dayrell, Musjid, Gladiateur, Lord Lyon, Pretender, Galopin, Ben d' Or, Melton, Ormonde, Ayrshire, Donovan, Common, Isinglass, Ladas, Galtee More, Flying Fox, Diamond Jubilee, Volodyovski, Rocksand, Cicero, Lemberg and Sunstar. And equally some extremely hot favourites have gone down and been a "cause of weeping to many good men:" the principal and most notable Derby failure having been: Johannay, who ran second in 1793, The Wizard second in 1808, Riddlesworth second in 1831, Macgregor fourth in 1870, The Baron second in 1887, Surefoot fourth in 1890, St. Frusquin second in 1890, Slieve Gallcon third in 1907, and there have been many other sore disappointments, even though they have not gone out at the short odds that these horses did. There have been as every racing man knows many horses that have after winning the Guineas followed their success up at Epsom, but equally there have been many who have just missed it and the list of Two Thousand winners who have run second in the Derby is a fairly long one. It is as follows: The Wizard 1809, Nectar 1816, Reginald 1821, Riddlesworth 1831, Sir Tatton Sykes 1846, Pitsford 1850, The Wizard 1860, The Marquis 1862, General Peel 1864, Gang Forward 1873, Peregrine 1881, Paradox 1885, St. Frusquin 1896, and Slieve Gallcon, who won the Guineas in 1907, ran third in the Derby of that year behind Orby and Woolwinder, the latter subsequently winning the Leger. So that figures prove to us that it is not always a sound thing to plump for the winner of the Guineas unless his victory looks to be so absolutely assured that there is nothing else likely to come and upset him.

IN the present year when favourite after favourite came to grief the support for Sweeper II. seemed to be more than usually justified, especially as his own connections were apparently so confident, for he was well backed right up to the bitter end and his closing quotation was 5 to 2. He was trained in a stable that does not as a rule make mistakes (Mr. Atty Persse's at Stockbridge) and he was known to be well, both on public form and private performances. Like two other public idols before him, however, Lomond and White Star, he has been proved to be unable to stay and has failed ignominiously in the hour of trial. Rarely have so many horses that have been accredited with winning chances come hopelessly brought to grief as in the present. Lomond was a strong winter favourite: then just before the Guineas and after the smashing trial that Morton was reported to have given White Star, the latter came up and displaced Mr. Hulton's colt: White Star, whose trial must have been false-run or deceptive, was badly beaten in the Guineas and Sweeper II. was then installed second favourite, Lomond having regained his position at the head of the poll. Mr. Hulton's colt started a hot favourite at odds of 6 to 5 on for the Newmarket Stakes, which it was considered impossible for him to lose, but entirely failed to stay and in company with White Star finished hopelessly beaten well down the course. Sweeper II. then for the first time was made a pronounced public favourite for the Derby at 2 to 1, with Cylgad, the Newmarket Stakes winner, at 5 to 1 and Tagalie, the runner-up in that race, at 8 to 1, White Star going out to tens and Lomond being returned at 20 to 1, which did not adequately represent the absolute hopelessness of his chance. With very little alteration this state of affairs prevailed till towards the end of May when White Star, who was as greatly discredited as Lomond, began to make a slight recovery, and on the 24th of that month he had come in from tens to 100 to 12 and on the 31st he was quoted at 8 to 1 and was a better favourite for money than Cylgad. On the 4th of June White Star was second favourite at 7 to 1, this in consequence of Cylgad's breakdown and subsequent scratching so that seemingly in spite of his repeated failures his connections and the public still stood to him and were not prepared to let him run loose. With Cylgad out of the way and the doubt as to whether Sweeper II. would connect at Epsom, which Morton must undoubtedly have had, this rehabilitation of a fallen idol was possibly more than justified, but like a good many other people he omitted to take cognizance of the consistent performances and support for Mr. W. Raphael's flying filly Tagalie or to sufficiently weigh up the significance of Cylgad's disappearance from the problem so far as her chances were concerned. Then we come to the Derby and the Oaks on the first of which Tagalie scored what was a run away victory and in the latter of which she failed to even get into the first three.

IN such a year the most far-seeing prophet might well be led astray. Sweeper II. and White Star both finished down the course and Tagalie, Jaeger and the 6 to 1 chance Tracery came home in front of Pintadeau, whose forward running was not quite a surprise fourth, Jingling Geordie, a 100 to 7 chance, next and the rest well beaten. The tragedy of the year is Cylgad, for, after what happened at Epsom on the 5th, it would seem as though in all human probability he must have beaten Tagalie and thus placed his first classic to the credit of the popular owner Sir Ernest Cassel. In the Newmarket Stakes Cylgad practically won all the way and had no difficulty whatever in beating off Tagalie, who had just prior to that won the One Thousand in equally bloodless fashion and beating the supposely best filly of the year—Belleisle—a mare that many sound critics placed at the top of the whole of the two-year-old form. Tagalie's performances at Newmarket were further strengthened by the recent victory of the three-year-old Donnithorne in the Manchester Cup, in which Lord Derby's colt beat Bronzino, Mushroom, Lycaon, All Gold, Moscato and a lot of other good horses. So that with a colt that had beaten Tagalie pointless in a 1½ mile race a few weeks before the Epsom event Sir Ernest Cassel seemed to have had an absolute certainty in his stable. The rough fortunes of war, however, stepped in and Cylgad had to be struck out a few days before the race, having broken down in a gallop on the 31st. The same wire that told us of Cylgad's break—down announced that Tagalie was a doubtful starter, but this information cannot have been from a very reliable source, as the passage of Mr. Raphael's mare in the betting plainly indicated that they meant to go and that they further more greatly fancied her chance.

WHEN she went out for the One Thousand Tagalie was not even thought of: she started at 20 to 1, she had an unfashionable jockey, Hewitt, the stable light weight, up and she ran away with the race, winning as she liked from Baron Springer's Alope and Lord Falmouth's Belleisle, who started well backed, and amongst the others were Polkerris, who was much fancied. Bill and Co., who has subsequently earned renown in the Oaks, Charmian, whose two-year-old form was good, Lolette, etc., etc., When Tagalie went out for the Newmarket Stakes they evidently had a shrewd idea that she would not be last, for her S. P. was returned at 6 to 1, and as already noted she beat everything excepting Cylgad, finishing two lengths behind that colt and half a length in front of Catmint, who is owned by Mr. Leonard Brassey and who had not a very convincing two-year-old record. But it was Tagalie's career in the betting market after this race that ought to have given us pause, for on all public form she was fully entitled to be accounted one of four and a simple process of elimination left us Sweeper II., Cylgad, Tagalie and Jaeger, the latter of whom had run second in the Two Thousand and had since then been consistently supported for his Epsom engagement. Newmarket Stakes Tagalie went to 8 to 1 for the Derby, third favourite to Sweeper II. 2 to 1, and Cylgad 5 to 1. Two days after that she went back to 100 to 6 in consequence presumably of support for Cylgad, Jaeger and the discredited Lomond, who was quoted at 10 to 1, his price on the 15th, the evening of the Newmarket Stakes, having been twenties (if correctly reported). Three or four days later Tagalie came up to 10 to 1, Sweeper II. and Cylgad still first favourites and White Star and Lomond at 15 to 1, Jaeger at twelves. Then (on the 24th May) came the incident of the recovery of White Star, who was backed at 100 to 12 and Tagalie on that day was not quoted. On the 31st White Star was still being boomed and the betting returns were, according to Reuter, 3 to 1 Sweeper II., 100 to 12 White Star and Cylgad, 9 to 1 Tagalie, 100 to 7 Jaeger and Pintadeau, 20 to 1 Jingling Geordie. Then Cylgad went out and there was more money for both Sweeper II. and White Star the next return, dated 3rd June, being 5 to 2 Sweeper II., 7 to 1 White Star, 8 to 1 Tagalie. 100 to 8 Jaeger and Pintadeau. On the 4th of June things were very much the same, Sweeper II. standing at 5 to 2, White Star 7 to 1, Tagalie 100 to 12 and Jaeger 10 to 1, the remainder as already quoted. On the day of the race Sweeper II. was still a strong favourite and his connections still stood to White Star, but Tagalie went back to 100 to 8 and the rest we know! She jumped off in front, was never headed and won from end to end.

This year's Derby winner has not followed in the footsteps of Eleanor 1801, Blink Bonny 1857, and Signorinetta 1908, all three of whom won both the Derby and the Oaks, but it might easily happen in a year like the present that she might eventually enjoy the proud distinction of being a triple crown winner and annex the Leger. Formosa dead heated for the Two Thousand with Moslem, won the One Thousand, the Oaks and the Leger in 1868, Hannah (1871), won the One Thousand, the Oaks and the Leger, Shotover (1882) won the Two Thousand and the Derby; La Flèche (1892) won the One Thousand, the Oaks and the Leger; Sceptre (1902) won the Two Thousand, the One Thousand, the Oaks and the Leger, and many people thought she ought to have won the Derby and criticised Mr. Sievier's methods of training her, as she was recorded to have had a gallop too close on to the first of these races: Pretty Polly 1904 won the One Thousand, the Oaks and the Leger, St. Amant annexing the odd two classics and Signorinetta's brilliant performance in 1908 (Derby and Oaks) has already been referred to. The first filly to run in the Derby was Mr. O'Kelley's Scota in 1786. She was a daughter of Eclipse and started favourite but finished down the course. Eleanor, a double eventer already mentioned, was the first filly to win the Derby and in that year, 1801, Remnant, another filly and a daughter of Trumpeter, was third.

Tagalie's tabulated pedigree was published in our last issue, but it may be noted with respect to it how tremendously strong in jument base it is and it would, we opine, find especial favour with our Gallic cousins, for the names of the grand dames of the Stud Book are plastered all over it. Ellen Horne occurs on the sire's side through Rouge Rose, one of the great grand dams of Cyllene and twice on the dams side she gets Alice Hawthorn, twice she gets Seclusion dam of Hermit, etc. etc.: she gets Pocahontas (Marpessa) three times, twice through Stockwell and once through Isola Bella: by Stockwell she gets Beeswing twice (through Newminster) as well as many other distinguished matrons. When, however, we look at the back line of any thing that is what is called fashionably bred there is a remarkable similarity about the pedigrees and they all more or less read the same when you get back far enough. On Bruce Lowis figures Tagalie is a No. 20 as Jenny Diver her great great grand dam goes back to Meeanee, the line being Jenny Diver out of Fairy out of Leila (by Melbourne) out of Meeanee, 20.

The result of the Oaks must have come as a staggering surprise to everyone who had seen the grey filly win on the Wednesday and how good a thing it was considered for Tagalie is indicated by the shortness of the price at which she went out. It looked all the odds on her winning the double, for she had not had a hard race on Wednesday and on form there was nothing that she had to fear, for Belleisle seemed to be the only danger. In the One Thousand, however, Tagalie had made a hack of Lord Falmouth's smart filly and it naturally looked as good as gold so far as the rest of the field were concerned. They are kittle cattle, however, at this time of the year, and it is not everyone of them that will come out and race every day that they are asked in the spring. This time, however, it did look good goods and the astonishing surprise brought about by Mirska, the almost unknown filly by St. Frusquin out of Musa, owned by Mr. J. Pratt and trained in Jennings' stable, must have caused a good deal of the red gold gathered in over the Derby to pass back into the satchels of the fielders. What a season it has so far been for the bookmakers and what a trade it is!! Two 33 to 1 chances borne in front and the third one on offer at tens, while the only one really backed finished down the course! Mirska, so far as any records have come to India, has done nothing this season: she did not run in the One Thousand and she was only out twice last year, but she was placed on both occasions, once when she ran third in the Clearwell Stakes to Absurd and Khedive III. and once when she ran third in the Maiden Two-Year-Old Race at Newmarket to Tidal Wave and St. Neots. This was no form upon which to pick her to beat probably the best three-year-old of the season.

A Bangalore correspondent writes:—The Mysore and Bangalore races have been augmented by a few more additional entries drawn from the strings of H.H. the Maharaja, the Yuvaraja, Colonel A. A. Jones, the Zemindar of Sivagiri and Messrs. Lauder, Ahmed Sait and A. R. Rangaswamy. The entrances constitute all local stables except Mr. Rangaswamy, who hails from Coonoor with Lady's Maid and Mignonette, both of whom fared remarkably well at the recent Wellington and Ootacamund races. From all accounts both meetings augur well for good sport, and so far as can be gathered, 1912 is going to be a record year in the annals of horse racing at these places.

Since the bookmakers have been eliminated from Poona, a large number have applied to the Secretary for permission to lay the odds at Mysore, and among the many who will stand up is chirripy Charlie (Harding) an old and familiar friend this side, who will be heartily welcomed after such a long absence from the land of beans. James O'Brien, another premier Turf accountant on the western side, is coming himself and there is every probability of Bill Jackson, Pell and Simpson going to form the brigade. So that the betting public who will muster in a strong contingent will meet with ample scope of getting their money on with the above-mentioned men, whom I am confident never refuse solid bets. A large crowd from Bombay, Calcutta and Northern India have already made arrangements for accommodation at Mysore, and all the available bungalows that can be had have been engaged ; the two hotels not being able to meet the demand.

I LEARN the new stabling for sixty horses and the cottages for jockeys and trainers are almost under completion and will be ready for habitation by the end of next week. The stables are erected to the west of the Grand Stand in the form of a square, allowing the grounds in the centre to be utilized for the exercise of horses. This is as it should have been when racing was resuscitated again in Mysore after the death of the late Maharaja, but South India cannot be beaten for slowness and to fall into new ideas. However, it has been accomplised at last and will be appreciated.

BENCH arrived here on Monday, the 3rd instant, from Poona with six of H. H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala's horses and three belonging to Nawabzada Obaidulla Khan of Bhopal. Mil, Hamara, Chestnut Park, Malmsey and the two county-breds Vigour and Conqueror will represent the Patiala string, while Parkhill and the Arabs Aga and Hachal will carry the colours of Bhopal. All of them look in the pink of condition, and if I am not too premature to predict, H. H, the Kour Sahib's colours are sure to figure prominently at the meetings, so also Bhopal's, RAMSHAW left for Bombay last Thursday, the 6th, to meet a boat that is bringing some fresh cattle to his string. Two are for the Z-mindar of Sivagiri and I believe one is for Mr. Whittingham, the owner of the famous Fizz.

AMONG the new arrivals are Willie Southall, Alt Hoyt and the two Kuhn brothers, the three last named having come in by the last boat from Australia. Southall rides for the Kour Sahib, Hoyt for Penton's string and Kuhn, senior, for Thomas. There is a rumour that Kuhn's brother will take his place in Sir Apcar's stables. The others working are Melsom, Fischer, Randall and Dawes, and a full complement of them are expected shortly, amongst them being "Jimmy" from home,

THE rains having kept off till the beginning of the month, the working of horses have been delayed, and it was only from last Tuesday, the 4th, all the candidates entered for Mysore were asked to stretch a bit. Last Saturday there was a fair amount of bustling on the course and most of the horses were sent along a little faster and this week when the grass will be open for special gallopps, some good timing will be registered. The morning was beautiful and the going light, but the trainers were late in making a start, especially "Ikkey." Saturday's work from the different stables are as follows :—

Watson.—Royal Scotland galloped round the course twice slowly. Sophocles went seven furlongs in 1min. 48secs. at three-quarter speed, pulling up strong. Bachelor's Heart and Lady Lucretia moved at half speed from the six furlongs and covered the last half mile in 58secs.

Bence.—Conqueror (Southall) and Vigour slipped along at a fair pace from the five furlongs, the former holding Vigour safe throughout the journey. Malmsey left six furlongs behind in the quick time of 1min 28secs. Chestnut Park and Parkhill spurted five furlongs brilliantly. The Arab Aga went bowling along over seven furlongs, while Hachal came great guns from the half mile. The two Cup candidates Mil and Hamara did a nice working gallop over a mile running it in 1min. 48secs. A good performance and the regulars looked at each other blankly as the horses passed a post and eagerly questioned each other, each disbelieving his own watch ; but before many minutes had elapsed, and other horses had galloped, the impression was that the track was lightning fast. Still I maintain it is a "hot 'un."

Penton.—Lord Carlyon rattled over the six furlongs in three over going easy. Cheeky, a 14-1 pony, galloped eight furlongs in 2mins. 9secs., doing the last half mile in two over. Evening Herald spurted from the half mile in even time. Mandeville got over three furlongs in 42 seconds and was eased after covering that distance. Arnica and Crown Prince did useful work over six furlongs, the latter looking as fit as ever. Asfundier moved like a deer from the four-furlong post, while Pantry Girl was hacked about inside the course. Not Know did a nice spurt from the half mile in even time.

Thomas.—Nuncio came sixteen annas from the six furlongs in 1min. 28secs. and pulled up as fresh as ever. Lucullus, The Witch, Harene and Whin did a fair gallop over five furlongs. Kilmarnock and Santoinette moved in excellent style from the mile, both pulling hard in 2mins. 4secs. The others were not observed.

Dignum.—Roling Passion and another new pony spurted half mile in even time, the former looking well. Devereux worked twice round at quarter speed, coming home the last two furlongs a bit sharper. Picturesque and Huka also did medium work.

Ramshaw.—Black Douglas, Sholto, Sperry, Lady Spring, Reeba and the Arabs Silver King and Zahaf did work at half speed and they are as fit as hands can make them.

Mahomed Ibrahim.—Token ran five furlongs in a little over 1min. 17secs. Vitulos came from the five furlongs doing the half mile in 59secs. Pearl moved usefully over five furlongs in 1min. 19secs. Wavehill, who looks sore, galloped half mile in one over. Premoa shaped well over the five furlongs and Nyria was fully stretched the four furlongs. Sporran, Eva B., Morning Star and Jassus who are trained by Mr. R. Puttannah worked from the five furlongs, all of them going strong and covering them in good time.

Safety Pin is the only representative from Wishart's stable and is moving well. Among the country-breds from Colonel A. A. Jones' string, Sahana, a four-year-old, is about the best and is a taking mare.

THE polo match for the splendid cup, valued Rs. 1,000 presented by H.H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala, was played between Simla and Patiala on the 4th instant. There was a big attendance at Annandale and the Viceregal party was amongst those present. It was an excellent game throughout, both teams giving good exhibitions. At the start play was up and down but though the Patiala team made a couple of bids for goal, they were repulsed and the opening chukker ended without score. In the second period Simla did most of the pressing : they drew first blood, scoring in a scrum and later Melvill crowned a fine run with a goal. The third period found Patiala attacking and at length Jaginder Singh scored with a long shot. Simla got in a run but Tod's shot went out wide. After a couple of runs by Simla in the fourth chukker Patiala worked the ball down and scored in a melee, making the score two all. The Patiala team had all the best of the next chukker. Thakore Singh put them ahead and on changing ends Chanda Singh put through from a free hit.

In the sixth, Patiala were on the defensive, nothing came of a free hit for a foul against them but another foul by which Barrett was brought down enabled Simla to score from the penalty hit. Melvill subsequently put in a good run but failed to score. Fast up and down play was the feature of the penultimate period, Patiala scoring just on time In the last chukker, save for one abortive run by Thakore Singh, the Patiala team were kept on the defensive, but all the efforts of the Simla team were unavailing and they had to retire beaten by 5 goals to 3. The Kour Sahib's Cup was presented to the winners by Lady Hardinge and they also received individual silver cups and the runners up a silver cup, these latter prizes being presented by Their Highnesses of Patiala and Kishengarh. Teams were : Simla.—H. H. the Maharajah of Kishengarh, Captains Melvill, 17th Lancers, Barrett, 15th Hussars, and Tod, A.D.C. (back).

Patiala.—Captain Jaginder Singh, Thakore Singh, Bani Singh and Chander Singh (back). Umpires, General Cookson and Captain Keighley.

A POLO tournament on American lines is now in progress in Simla. Five teams have entered and two matches were played on Friday afternoon last with the following results :—C. team (Captains Muir, Tyler, Henderson and Tod, back) beat E. team (Captain Mowbray, Mr. Nethersole, Major Laurence, and Captain Stephens, back) by 4 goals to 1. D. team (Mr. Wilkinson, Captain Nickson, Colonel Molyneux and Captain Hogg, back) beat A. team (Captain Battine, Major Talbot, Mr. Reynolds and Major Harbord, back) by 4 goals to 2.

THE Ranikhet week at Naini Tal opened in splendid weather on the 3rd instant when the cricket match was begun. Ranikhet batted first and made 234, Bostock scoring 138 and Cowley 38. Naini had made 103 without loss when stumps were drawn. Continuing the next day they put up 415 before all were out. Alexander made 115, Twiss 77, Uzielli 72, Morgan 45 and Manners Smith 33. Ranikhet went in again and made 107 all out, Bostock making a not out 44. Naini thus won by an innings and 75 runs. The Handicap polo tournament began on the 3rd when the 17th Cavalry Subalterns beat the Inniskillings by 7 goals to 3, the Worcesters beat the King's Own Scottish Borderers (+3) by 11 goals to 7, the Wanderers beat Ramnagar (+7) by 13 to 10, and the Protestant Boys beat the Gnomes (+8) by 14 to 12. The semi-finals were played on the 4th when the Subalterns 17th

Cavalry beat the Worcesters (+1) by 12 goals to 6 and the Protestant Boys defeated the Wanderers (+2) by 7 goals to 5. In the final on the 6th instant the Subalterns 17th Cavalry (+3) defeated the Protestant Boys by 9 goals to 8 after extra time had been played with widened goals. Teams were:—17th Cavalry: Messrs. Atkinson, Yeats Brown and Skipwith; Protestant Boys: Messrs. Wise, Brooke and Hudson. At hockey Naini beat Ranikhet by 3 goals to 2.

As will be seen from our special telegram, the Amateur Golf Championship at Home has been won by that wonderful veteran golfer Mr. John Ball. This is the eighth occasion on which he has won the title. As far back as 1887, when 24 years of age, Mr. Ball was runner up in the competition to Mr. H. G. Hutchinson, who beat him by 1 hole. The next year he was the winner and repeated his success in 1890, 1892, 1894, 1899, 1907, 1910 and again this year. In 1895 he tied for first place with Mr. L. M. B. Melville, but in the play off was beaten by 1 hole. Mr. Ball also won the Open Championship at Prestwick in 1894; secured the Irish Open Amateur Championship in 1893, 1894 and 1899; and carried off the St. George's cups 4 years in succession from 1888 to 1891.

The American athlete, Kiviat, who made a record for the 1,500 metres race last week has improved upon his figures. At the trials for the Olympic games at Harvard and Evanston (Illinois) on the 8th instant he ran the distance in 3mins. 55⅘secs., his previous best being 3mins. 56⅗secs. Gardner's pole jump record of 13 feet 1 inch made at New York last week was beaten by Wright who cleared 13 feet 2¼ inches, while Creamer set up a new record for the 10,000 metres which he covered in 31mins. 43⅗secs.

Notts defeated Sussex, at Nottingham, by an innings and four runs.

Kent beat Leicester, at Leicester, by eight wickets.

Derbyshire drew with Somerset, at Bath, Derby leading on the first innings.

Yorkshire drew with Essex, at Huddersfield, but led on the first innings.

Northants and Warwick drew at Northampton, the home county leading on the first innings.

The following matches were abandoned owing to bad weather: Middlesex and Australians, at Lords; Yorkshire and Surrey, at Sheffield; Lancs and Essex, at Manchester; Derbyshire and Sussex, at Derby; Notts and Kent, at Nottingham; Surrey and the South Africans, at the Oval; and Cambridge and the Australians, at Cambridge.

Those between Middlesex and Hampshire, at Lords, and Lancashire and Worcester, at Worcester, were also abandoned, neither side scoring points.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—Teams from the following have entered for the Mysore Birthday Polo Tournament, which will commence at Mysore on the 24th instant:—29th Lancers; 26th K. G. O. Light Cavalry; 20th Deccan Horse; 7th Hussars "A" Team; 7th Hussars "B" Team; Queen's Own Sappers; 7th Dragoon Guards; Golconda Team; Mysore Imperial Service Lancers; and Mysore Local Service Regiment.

The Pachmarhi Polo Tournament was continued on the 27th ultimo when the Saugor team met and easily defeated the Pachmarhi Gymkhana and Bhopal beat the Civilians. The final was put through on the 29th and a good game was witnessed, Bhopal defeating the Saugor team by 4 goals to 1. The winners were the best mounted team and their certainty on the ball, combined play and straight hitting, gave them the advantage.

The Hewett Cricket Challenge Shield Tournament at Naini Tal has been won by the Magnus Club from Delhi, who beat the Government High School, Meerut, in the final.

Mr. R. Duncan, captain of the Calcutta Golf Club, has presented a prize to be played for over the New Course during June and July, open to "A" and "B" Members. Entries close on 15th June. Conditions are posted on the Club Notice Board.

Their Majesties the King and Queen have graciously consented to honour the Henley Royal Regatta by their presence on the 6th proximo. As far as existing records show this will be the first time the reigning King and Queen have been present at the regatta, though in 1851 the Prince Consort became patron, after which it became known as Henley Royal Regatta and in Jubilee Year 1887, the Prince and Princess of Wales and many of the foreign royalty and princes were present on the third day.

The Football Association Committee have selected the following amateur players to represent England in the Olympic Games at Stockholm:—R. G. Brebner (Northern Nomads) and H. P. Bailey (Birmingham), goal; T. C. Burn (London Caledonians), A. E. Knight (Portsmouth) and W. W. Martin (Ilford), backs; H. C. Littlewort (Glossop), E. T. Hanney (Reading), D. McWhiter (Brownley), J. Dines (Ilford) and H. Stamper (Stockton), halves; S. C. Sanders (Muirhead), V. J. Woodward (Chelsea), H. A. Walden (Bradford City), W. G. Bailey (Reading), G. R. Hoare (Glossop), E. G. D. Wright (Hull City) and I. G. A. Sharpe (Derby County), forwards.

A satisfactory arrangement has been arrived at regarding the use of the Ross rifle at Bisley, so that the Canadian team will now be present at the annual gathering. This settlement of the question of the backsight was adjusted at a conference held at Ottawa between Colonels J. Barlow and C. R. Crosse, representing the Canadian team, and the National Rifle Association respectively. A new sight, based on the Parker sight, and the Sutherland sight, are both approved as official sights, as the sight in dispute may not be ready for use at Bisley.

The Pachmarhi Horse Show was held this year on the 31st ultimo. The entries on the whole were good, although perhaps not quite up to last year's. The results of the judging of the various classes were as follows:—

Class 1.—Imported Horses over 14-2. Mr. W. H. Todd's Discussion 1.

Class 2.—Imported Horses 14-2 and under. Mr. H. Fleming's Calm 1.

Class 3.—Country-breds. Colonel G. W. P. Denny's The Writ 1.

Class 4.—Arabs. Mr. W. H. Todd's Jung Bahadur 1.

Class 5 (a).—Arab Polo Ponies. Major J. Furney's Reuter 1.

Class 5 (b).—Australian and English Polo Ponies. Captain Webb's Caress 1.

Class 6.—Ladies' Hacks. Mrs. Slocock's Joan of Arc 1.

Class 7.—Children's Ponies. Miss Thomas' Brownie 1.

Class 8.—Single Harness. Miss Dennys' Midnight 1.

Class 9 (a).—Horse jumping. Mr. W. H. Todd's Curse of Cromwell (Owner) 1.

Class 9 (b).—Pony jumping. Mr. W. H. Todd's Robin (Owner) 2.

Class 10.—Best animal in the Show. Mr. W. H. Todd's Jung Bahadur 1.

About September next will visit India the Commission appointed by the Board of Agriculture some time ago to enquire into the prevalence of foot and mouth disease in this country. The Commission will be a small one consisting of a couple of specialists who will have associated with them in their work out here Major Holmes, Director of the Imperial Bacteriological Laboratory at Mukhtesar. They will investigate the condition and extent of the disease, among cattle in India, working for some time at the laboratory. It is hoped that the knowledge gained out here by the Commission will be valuable to the Board in their measures for combating the disease among cattle at home, where its periodical recurrence is causing much anxiety to the authorities. It is expected that the work in India will occupy about six months.

A famous old Indian sportsman, Colonel F. G Steuart of Woodsbock, Surbiton, has recently joined the majority. The Colonel, who was 83, belonged to the ancient family of Steuarts of Dalguise in Perthshire. He was gazetted in 1846 to the 9th Bombay Native Infantry, and for nearly thirty years served in India, taking part in several campaigns and throughout the Mutiny. The Colonel was a very keen sportsman, and amongst other big game which fell to his gun were, it is said, 137 full-grown tigers. Of course, this was in the Old Company's days, when tigers and opportunities for hunting them were numerous.

The mail brings us details of the match between Willie Lewis, the American, and Georges Carpentier, the idol of Paris. The two were matched at 11st. 6lb. and great interest was centred in the meeting which came off at the Cirque de Paris on the 22nd ultimo. As already reported in these columns Carpentier got the verdict, but it was a narrow shave for the French lad, a victory snatched in a last desperate effort. The fortunes of the men fluctuated during the 20 rounds. Lewis was too experienced to fall a victim to any of the French lad's devices. The lightning straight left nearly always fell short, and the circling right-handers were spent in void or found their mark too late. Carpentier set himself to knock Willie out and did not trouble about the fine arts. The game was simple to the seasoned American as played by the Frenchman and at no period of the battle did the former appear in the slightest difficulty. But where the American excelled throughout was in the better use of his left. Carpentier's executive was more rapid. If he never placed Lewis in the danger zone he surprised him with his speed and forced him to be wary. The American dare not take a liberty and could force no advantage home. The first round was of a tame description. Carpentier was first to become aggressive and scored the faster of the pair with his left hand, but he received a right swing to the chin in round 7, from which he took some time to recover. He was, however, the faster of the pair and held a lead at the end of thirteen rounds. Lewis fought very gamely and improved from here and there was little in it on points with only one round to go. Carpentier made a big effort in the final and outpointing his man received the decision. There was a deal of clinching throughout and Lewis was repeatedly warned for holding and striking after the call of "break away."

The second Test match opened at Lord's on Monday. The South Africans went in first, and were all dismissed for 58. Foster taking 5 wickets for 16 runs, and Barnes 5 for 25.

At the close of play England had made 122 for one wicket, of which Spooner scored 67 not out. On resuming on Tuesday England completed the is first innings for 337, Spooner scoring 119 and Woolley 73. Pegler took seven wickets for 65 runs, securing six of them after lunch for seven runs.

South Africa going in again had made 114 for four wickets when stumps were drawn, Llewellyn compiling sixty not out. The innings closed for 217, England thus winning by an innings and 62 runs. Llewellyn made 75.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 24th May 1912.

Here we are with Whitsun a few hours off and with every prospect pleasing. With their coal yards refilled and the public in a holiday mood fostered by a long period of fine weather, the railway companies have made much more elaborate preparations for meeting the convenience of those who would now go away for a change than was possible at Easter. Excursions into the Home Counties, both far and near, are abundantly provided for, this being a development of the holiday spirit excellent from every point of view. For those who have more time at their disposal, or are desirous of extended travel, tours to all sorts of pleasant places on the Continent have been arranged, while the sea trip, pure and simple, appears to be gaining in popularity, a result, no doubt, chiefly due to the fact that the class of boats engaged in the service are to-day much superior to the vessels of a few years ago. Yes everything promises well for this second big holiday of the year—the weather we are told is to be of the best and as for the country it would be hard to imagine it looking more beautiful.

The Royal Naval and Military Tournament at Olympia, which the King will open to-day presents an unusual number of novel features which are sure to appeal to the general public and stir up patriotic feeling.

An historical episode, entitled "The Call to Arms," which will be enacted in two tableaux, will give one a vivid impression of the "spacious times" of Queen Elizabeth. The first scene, which is copied from Seymour Lucas' picture, shows the famous game of bowls that was being played on Plymouth Hoe when the news was brought of the approach of the Spanish Armada.

In the second scene, Elizabeth, who will be impersonated by the Hon'ble Mrs. Henniker-Heaton, mounted on a charger and escorted by a stately pageantry of nobles, arrives at Tilbury Camp to exhort her subjects to victory.

In designing the tableaux special attention has been paid to accuracy of detail, and the music—composed by Dr. Regan—which will accompany the entry of the Queen is woven round old-world motives. Some 518 men have been mustered to represent the halberdiers, arquebusiers, musketeers, pikemen, etc.

Among the many deeds of prowess which will be watched with bated breath by the spectators are the jumping exercises. The 18th Hussars will execute a most remarkable feat of cross-jumping, in which eight horsemen from either end of the arena will simultaneously clear a fence in the centre. Any swerving from the straight in this case would have serious results, as the riders meet over the fence practically knee to knee.

A ship which stands at one end of the arena will nightly be in distress, and fire rockets, when coastguards will hasten to her assistance, and it is to be hoped save a woman and child supposed to be drowning.

The musical rides, which are always a popular feature of the tournament, will include an historical ride, in which the arms, dress, and accoutrements of the 3rd Hussars will be represented in eight different periods from 1685 to the present day.

There is a dreadful uncertainty as to whether eggs are "perishable articles" under the new Shops

Act which is proving such a nuisance. A morning contemporary decides that they are not, because they would not deteriorate appreciably in one afternoon The argument is not sound. It is the last straw that breaks the camel's back, and the last afternoon may complete the changing of an egg into the concentrated essence of political effluvium. The process of decomposition is, doubtless, gradual, in an egg—even Rome was not built in a day—but there is always a moment when the great work is completed, when the coping stone is put on, and perishableness is no longer an arguable question. If there is anyone who still ventures to contest the point, convincing olfactory evidence is easily obtainable.

At the Guildhall conference on the hygienic feeding of school boys, on which I made some remarks in my last letter, Mr. Phillips, of Ramsgate, spoke of the importance of diet in the preservation of the teeth. In this connection he mentioned a cannibal tribe that when pressed by hunger ate its own women and children and had superb teeth. It is not quite clear if Mr. Phillips put this case forward as an illustration of cause and effect, or if he meant to recommend anthropophagy in the interest of sound teeth. It seems to us an extravagant method of dental precaution; as extravagant as Ho Ti's custom of burning down a habitation whenever he wanted roast pig. Surely there are more scientific ways of preserving the teeth than an unfilial consumption of mother-in-law. It was also said at the conference that when Charles Kean was playing a murderer he ate beef and when he was playing a lover he ate mutton. That does not convey a very definite lesson. People have been known to live on beef without showing murderous tendencies, and a diet of mutton does not always cause a man to cast sheep's eyes at his inamorata. And why mutton for lovers? Would not the tender passion be better nourished on lambs' hearts.

"The Pool" is the prettiest thing the variety stage has given us since "The Dryad." The colour is beautiful, the action swift (on the whole) various and clear, and the performance very creditable. Somewhere in the Middle Ages (say, about a century before The Miracle happened) there was a castle, with a drawbridge, and outside it a peasant's cottage and a convent. All were the colour of mellow brick-dust, and the Gothesque towers of the castle gate pointed into a deep blue sky. Below the castle walls lay a pool; and the nymphs used to come out every night (their green weeds and white limbs gleaming against the brick-dust walls) and dance. And one night Melisande, garlanded up in flowers, fell asleep by the convent church, and never woke till she was discovered by the old peasant. Ho, ho! thought the old peasant in evil glee, but his harshfaced wife, all swaddled up in clothes, soon cut him free from this hussy from nowhere. She tried to teach her to spin, and the hussy only played with this new toy and laughed. Then came nuns from the convent; and then two priests, an elderly monk, and a young novice who was the King's brother. And the novice fell in love with the nymph; but the old priest conspired with the nuns and the peasant's wife. They tried to teach Melisande to pray; and she only looked more lovely and more soulless as she demurely folded her hands. They dressed her in a nun's habit; and she put roses over the coif and tucked up her skirts and danced till the young priest's heart ached within him. Then the drawbridge was let down, and the King came—the King in his crown. And he dressed the nymph in gorgeous robes (what fun she had trying to manage the train!) and led her away into his castle. And thence, that evening, she escaped, stepping, a weeded nymph once more, down the great iron drawbridge, to where the novice, now a novice no longer, but a renegade, awaited her. But she was not for him—not for any man. Her own life, unconfined in clothes or rules or love, in the pool again! Her sisters were ready to welcome her, and the novice flung himself in despair on the brink.

Miss Muriel Ridley, the nymph, is no dancer, but she is young, graceful, and full of life and fun: and her movements are a joy to watch. Mr. Rocholl de Randt as the novice is the only one of the company who appears to have any technical knowledge of the art of mimodrama; but, amateurish and not always well "produced" though they are, Mr. Edmund Gurney as the old monk, Mr. Eric Mayne as the King, Mr. Fred Rolph as the peasant, and Miss Bella Wallis as his wife, all express what they have to express.

Sir Herbert Tree began his Shakespeare Festival at His Majesty's last Monday night with an exceedingly interesting revival of "The Merchant of Venice," the novelty of which was the appearance of Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry as Portia, the character associated with the greatest triumphs of her aunt, Miss Ellen Terry.

Miss Neilson-Terry's Portia is charming—deliciously maidenly and young. In the earlier scenes she played with dainty grace, and if in the trial she played with dainty grace, and if in the trial scene she hardly suggests a lawyer, she speaks the great lines with a full sense of their splendid beauty, and plays with keen intelligence and that almost eerie technical skill which is so surprising and characteristic of so young a player.

It is not a great—a complete—performance, but it is very delightful for all that.

Sir Herbert Tree's Shylock is always interesting and he plays the part better than ever. His conception is complete and consistent. He acts with power, and yet with restraint. He is the fierce wolf, but a wolf with humour.

Perhaps the cleverest moment of a singularly clever personation is the sudden withering and aging of the man when Portia has proclaimed his sentence.

Mr. Basil Gill is the Bassanio, Mr. Phillip Merivale the Antonio, Mr. Otho Stuart the Gratiano, and Miss Alice Crawford the Jessica, and the mounting and production are excellent and familiar. The festival has begun well.

Mr. Winston Churchill, M.P., the First Lord of the Admiralty, brought a libel action in Mr. Justice Darling's court this week against Messrs. Blackwood and Sons, the proprietors of "Blackwood's Magazine," in which the above satirical verses were published.

They were part of a poem called "A Lost Letter of Ancient Rome," which was supposed to be a satire on prominent members of the Government.

Mr. F. E. Smith, K.C., M.P., who appeared for Mr. Churchill, contended that one of the characters in this poem, a "warrior" named "Clodius," was intended to represent the First Lord of the Admiralty, and that the verses echoed the oft-repeated and baseless accusation that he broke his parole when he escaped as a prisoner of war from Pretoria in December 1899.

A full and complete apology was offered by Messrs. Blackwood, and all insinuations were withdrawn. When this was done the case ended in twenty minutes, an agreed sum having been paid by Messrs. Blackwood for Mr. Churchill's costs.

Allah be praised some of the suffragette head pieces are getting a bit of their desserts and the public are getting back a bit of their own. As the result of the prosecutions arising out of the recent window smashing campaign those shrieking women, Pethick Lawrence and Pankhurst mere, have just been given nine months at the Old Bailey for conspiracy and incitement to commit damage. The miserable husband of the Pethick Lawrence woman got nine months too and he and Pankhurst were ordered to pay the cost of the prosecution which has had among other things a six days hearing in court. So far so good; but five years would have been better than nine months. The rather senile jury recommended the wretches to mercy, if you please!

The Attorney-General (Sir Rufus Isaacs), in his closing speech for the prosecution was frequently interrupted by the woman Pankhurst, who once or twice made excited protests.

Sir Rufus Isaacs uttered the warning that although the Government might not be able to stop this "campaign of wreckage," they were determined to show that that sort of thing could not be done with impunity and that private property was not to be injured to call attention to these people's grievances.

At the Sleaford hiring fair last week there were very few milkmaids on offer. They are fast dying out. Girls prefer any sort of yoke (even the matrimonial) to the milkmaid's. "Where are you going to, my pretty maid?" will soon be an archaic expression in need of interpretation. It is sad to see the gradual decay of all our once-cherished Old English ways and customs. The maypole has gone, so have the Morris-dancers, and the lord of misrule, and the street acrobats, and the milkmaids. Milkmen do the work formerly done by the last named, but the time cannot be far distant when cows will be milked by machinery. Meanwhile, let us weep over the departed milkmaid—bright-eyed, buxom, and red and blowsy. No more shall we see her, her big feet and stout ankles encased in hob-nailed boots, trudging through the dewy grass to fill her morning pails. No more will her joyous voice ring out its matins of "Coom on, then, wult?; dang thee, stand steady." No more will exquisite City gents in white spats and lavender gloves salute her rosy lips with the adoring touch of a perfumed moustache. Alas, she is a thing of the past—like the great auk, or the dodo, or the mastodon. The museum authorities ought to capture at least one specimen of her, and preserve it in spirits so that future ages may know what the milkmaid of the poets was really like.

ODD DAYS IN SOMALILAND.

Another Blank Day.

During the next three days I shot a gerenuk after losing a wounded oryx but there were no signs of lion. Then one morning the tracks of a lion and lioness appeared just outside our zariba, and we found that one of them had lain down during the night only a few feet from the fence, but on the opposite side from that where the donkey was tied up. They had not made a circuit of the zariba as they often do, and apparently had not seen him. We took up the trail at 6-30 A.M. and, as before, the lion soon separated from his mate. For eight hours we followed him without success. My luck was out in two respects. To begin with, the lion would in the ordinary course have lain up in a shady spot before the sun began to get hot and we should, with any luck have come up with him by midday at latest. But unfortunately it was a cloudy cool day with practically no sun at all until 1 o'clock; so the lion, who had not dined, had kept on, and we had to keep on too. He probably would not have gone so far, cool as it was, except that he remembered (as it turned out) a place where he had killed an oryx 3 or 4 days earlier, and thought he might as well go on and see if there were any fragments from that meal remaining. About 2 P.M. we came upon the signs of the tragedy; also unfortunately found that two lions had visited the spot the day before; there were consequently quite a number of lions' "pugs" fresh and stale about the spot. The result was a check of nearly half an hour before the shikaris had disentangled the puzzle and taken up our friend's tracks going away from the place. Herein lay the second piece of bad luck. As soon as our lion had satisfied himself that there were no scraps left he had betaken himself to the nearest shady thorn-tree to put in a late siesta, as there was no point in going any further. The tree he chose, as fate would have it, was only some 80 yards away from where our tracking had been checked at the scene of the old "kill." If we had been able to go straight on we should probably have come upon him before he was awake, but during 20 minutes or so of moving about and, inevitably, a certain amount of talking close to him, he no doubt became restless, half awake and then scented us. So when we found the tree growing out of an ant-hill beneath which he had been sleeping, he had moved, now on the look out for us as he had not been before. That he had only awaked just in time was proved by the fact that we caught a glimpse of him only five minutes later—a tawny mane this time. But he was on the alert and it was not hot enough to make him lazy, so that at 4 P.M., when he was clearly on the run, we left him and started back to camp where we arrived soon after seven, having walked about 22 miles and ridden 15. Never was mulligatawny soup so comforting! I had only eaten 3 biscuits since "chota hazari" of poached eggs and cocoa at 6 A.M. I don't think there is anything to beat mulligatawny after a long day of this sort, a fact which the old servant who was with me on this trip duly kept in mind.

The wonderful "bump of locality," as distinguished from a mere "eye for country," which uncivilised man in general seems to possess—in common with the domestic cat—has always been a marvel to me, but I have never seen it so developed as among these Somalis. The Haud, for instance, is absolutely flat and only varies according as long grass or thorn bushes predominate, stretching for miles and miles in every direction without any sort of distinguishing land mark whatever. Yet on this occasion when we had tramped more than 20 miles in anything but a straight line after that tireless brute of a lion, and asked where our camp was, Elmi pointed without hesitation; he was not quite sure about the distance, guessing 16 miles (it proved to be about 13) but he had no doubt whatever as to the direction and rode straight back on to the zariba which was perhaps 30 or 40 yards in diameter. When I say he guessed 16 miles, I mean that he said 5 hours; they reckon distance, like the Arabs, by time, the calculation I found being based on a marching pace of about 3 miles an hour, or a shade more. When however, as sometimes occurs, a Somali's estimate has no apparent basis whatever this method is apt to be exasperating to our ridiculous desire for comparative accuracy.

The following night I lost one of my two donkeys in an unexpected fashion. One was tethered as usual just outside the zariba, the other and a sheep were tied up at likely spots a couple of miles away, in the case of the latter animal with a man in a tree above to scare off hyenas. This precaution did not seem necessary in the case of the donkey, so I was correspondingly disgusted in the morning to find the poor beast had been killed and devoured by hyenas, having apparently been attacked by three at once. The spotted hyena is a big powerful brute, but Elmi said he had never known of such a case before.

Bullets and Missed Billets.

Three or four days more in the Haud and the time had come to retrace our steps without having seen or heard of any more traces of lions. I got another dibatag and the morning before starting on our backward march expended quite a lot of cartridges. I had a shot at a gerenuk with a fine head at about 150 yards, missed him, then sat down to it and had a misfire. Tried again, missed! The buck tossed his head and came about 10 spaces nearer to investigate. I had two more steady sitting shots and missed again—the gerenuk still interested! Before I could miss him for the fifth time however, he remembered an engagement elsewhere and said Ta! Ta! with a wave of his tail. I looked at Elmi. Elmi said "Never mind Sahib!" I did mind, for there seemed no excuse. And what made it worse was that I did not know why I had missed, for I had not misjudged the distance and my hand had seemed steady enough.

The explanation came a day or two later on the plain of T. Here I put in some more bad shooting among the aoul, of which there were two or three scattered herds. After a couple of misses I hit a good buck in the hind leg at 200 yards, having aimed at his shoulder. He went off on three legs and I mounted and started to ride him. Unfortunately he got in among the rest of the herd which had begun to crowd together and I could not single him out, so just rode straight at them. Off they went and I had a grand gallop. I expected them to go right away from me but I quickly got up to within 20 yards of them and stayed there, although they seemed to be going their hardest and my pony though a good little beast was no particular flier. The herd ran together in a regular phalanx, about 150 in number, and certainly crowded each other a good deal, but for all that the aoul must be considerably inferior to most of the gazelles in speed. For over a mile I raced them and then the wounded buck fell out on one side and lay down. It was wonderful how he stood the pace for so long. I dismounted and gave him the coup de grâce, then waited for Elmi to come up with the mule. When he arrived I thought I would photograph him skinning the buck and went to take my kodak from the saddle. But Brian, the pony, suddenly broke away and strolled off, the mule after him, and stop they wouldn't. As I followed I noticed three aoul that had not gone off which the main herd standing watching not far off. One of them struck as having a particularly good head, so I left the steeds to their own devices and presently had a shot at the big buck; miss again! a second shot was a misfire which did not improve matters; the buck moved on a bit but soon stood again. Once more I got to within 200—perhaps 170 yards—sat down and took a steady pot shot behind the shoulder with my usual sighting, taking particular care that the sights were upright as I thought I might possibly have sinned in that respect before. I saw the bullet strike the ground some four feet short and a little to the right of his hind legs! I had begun to suspect that the hand and eye behind the gun were not altogether to blame for my erratic shooting: that shot to my mind proved it conclusively. I put in a cartridge from a fresh clip, fired again with the same aim and sighting as before and the buck bounded forward and fell on his head, shot though the heart. Why? I'd have sworn the previous shot was equally steady and the aim as accurate. It seemed obvious that there was something wrong with some of the cartridges!

They say a bad workman blames his tools, but there is no gainsaying the fact that tools occasionally do go wrong! And the worst workman is he who fails to recognise the fact when it occurs. It was significant that the two or three misfires I had had, all occurred at times when the bullets where not going straight; which looked as if an individual clip of cartridge here and there had gone wrong, and this is what one might expect if the ammunition had been for too long exposed to a hot climate. Subsequently I found out that these cartridges, which I had obtained from a firm in Calcutta, so far from being fresh had been in that place for two hot seasons. This being so, it was almost a foregone conclusion that some of the cartridges, loaded with a smokeless explosive should have been adversely affected by the heat.

To go back to our second aoul. He was dead enough this time and proved to have an exceptionally fine head, horns symmetrical and measuring 19¾ inches. The aoul is a large handsome gazelle about the same size, though a trifle stouter in build than the Indian black-buck which it resembles in its habits. The strongly annulated horns incline outwards and then at the tip take a sharp turn inwards which is distinctive of this species. A conspicuous white patch on the rump would seem to indicate that the aoul was originally a bush-loving animal, but now-a-days though frequently found in open bush country it is essentially an antelope of the open plains were only is it ever seen in large herds. Meanwhile Brian and the mule were continuing their evening stroll, and we had to tramp another three miles before they were captured.

Leopard and Hyena.

We were on the march in the Khansa bush one day when soon after daybreak we crossed the trail of a leopard's "kill." We followed it for a couple of miles to a bush where the "kill" (a kid) had been devoured and practically nothing left: there were two leopards, apparently a mother and a nearly full-grown cub. We tracked them on again for an hour or so, the soil being unusually favourable, and marked them down at length in a thicket of thorn bushes. Then I sent on a messenger to the caravan to halt for the day, having decided to sit up and try and draw the leopards with a goat in the afternoon. To that end I gave them from 3 till 5 P.M. with no result, which was disappointing, for I had the kotok carefully fixed up in the tree beside me in the hope of an opportunity for a "snap" before bringing the rifle into use! Then with the nine men that were all I could raise we started a beat. It was pretty certain that the line a leopard would take on breaking cover would be towards another big thicket a quarter of a mile away, towards which they could go under cover all the way except for an open patch not 15 yards across. So I took up my position behind a bush commanding this, about 10 yards to one side. As it was bound to be a case of quick snap shooting at close range, if anything, and neither of the beasts was a big one I decided that the 12 bore with buckshot was the best weapon to use. After a certain amount of uproar the cub broke, spotted me and tried to get back but was rolled over just in time, a female about three-quarters grown. Soon after the mother came but saw me before she was clear of the thicket, and my snap-shot as she bolted back was too late. After that no thing could move her; the thorn bush would not burn and was impenetrable to anything less than half an hour's work with axes. The sun was going down and we had to give her up.

Meanwhile, for the last 15 minutes another leopard had been making its voice heard not far off, presumably the male calling his mate. He did not seem to be more than two or three hundred yards away, so I thought it might be worth while tying up the goat for him in the dusk. To think was to do and I went back to the old tree. I had not been ready more than three or four minutes when a "waraba" (spotted hyena) appeared and after a minute's reconnoitring went for the goat. I threw a cartridge at the brute but he took no notice and seized the goat in the middle of the back. The only remedy left, I let go with my ·500 and he staggered and disappeared. I sat tight as the shot did not appear to have worried the leopard who was talking again. Ten minutes passed and it was getting too dark when there was a rush of a different kind and it was the leopard this time that had the goat by the throat. There was just light enough to see him dimly. "At last!" I thought and was trying to make sure which end of the leopard was head and which was tail, when the vague forms of two big hyenas a few feet to one side caught the corner of my eye. They caught the leopard's eye too and to my amazement he turned tail and slipped away into the thicket behind my tree for all the world like a cat caught stealing the cream, while the "warabas" went in to dispose of his dinner! I was never more disgusted in my life. Big powerful brute though the spotted hyena is, and with immensely powerful jaws, he is essentially a coward, and I would never have believed that even a pair of them would venture to attack a good-sized leopard, as this one appeard to be, with his double armoury of tooth and claw, and his agility so superior to their own: and these two had not so far as I saw made any motion to attack. On the other hand the "waraba" in Somaliland seems to be undoubtedly a more aggressive animal than hyenas elsewhere and if he did make up his mind to attack a leopard I am not so sure that he would always come off second best. His hide is tough and would afford very considerable protection against the leopard's claws while a single bite from those terrible jaws might suffice to disable the leopard effectually. On the present occasion the leopard, who is a remarkable compound of daring and caution, had probably seen more than was possible to me, and knew that the numbers against him were overwhelming, for hardly a minute had elapsed before there were either six or seven hyenas fighting and tearing at the still warm corpse of the unfortunate goat.

A ghastly orgie! I held my hand until it was quite too dark to see the leopard if he did return (there was no moon) and then opened fire, aiming after a fashion by ear instead of eye. I fired 7 shots but they did not seem to mind much though one dropped and I hit another. Then I called up the shikaris and came down. I found that the dead hyena had already been more or less torn to bits by his brethren, and the head (the skull was the only part of him I wanted) had disappeared. There was no more to be done, but to go back to camp to dinner and cogitate on the good luck of Somali leopards in general.

A WILD BULL HUNT.

While living with a settler in a wild district of the North Island of New Zealand we were frequently annoyed by the incursions of a bull amongst our cattle.

The station, a small one in a wood district, was not ring-fenced, and during the winter months our cattle strayed into the bush, where they fed and grew fat on the browse. To be rid of this bull was our one aim and object, for he was a wild "scrub" animal, a descendant of beasts which had taken to the bush and there evaded capture by their rightful owners. The New Zealand woods harbour many wild cattle, and the settlers, fond of sport as well as wishing to rid their districts of such useless brutes, make periodical hunts for them.

We had more than once caught a glimpse of the bull while out shepherding, and when scouring the bush in quest of wild pigs. Once we got a snap-shot at him as he crashed down the side of a steep gully, but the bullet flew wild and he went on. As winter drew near and our cattle were beginning to think of leaving the open country for the bush, we determined to make a systematic effort to secure the troublesome beast.

We started one morning with a companion and rode some five miles to where the open fern country joined the standing bush. With us we took two useful cattle dogs named Don and Laddie. The bull was practically white in colour, and showed up plainly at a distance, but though there were several light-coloured beasts within range of our field glasses they none of them appeared to be what we wanted. We rode slowly over a large extent of country, but beyond a wild boar, which the dogs tackled but could not hold, we neither saw nor heard anything of our quarry. Gradually we circled round to where we could enter the woods at the rear of our station, and having reached this point a fresh track in some soft ground caught our companion's eye. We could not tell from the track whether it was the imprint of our quarry, but it sufficed to let us know that at least one beast was in the neighbourhood. Tying up the ponies we took our rifles and, followed by the dogs, entered the bush.

Our plan was to follow the trail for some distance, our companion circling around at intervals, while we followed on the track, keeping the two dogs at heel. By doing this it was more than likely that one or other of us would get a shot at the bull, should he prove to be the track-maker. The tracks were easily followed, for the ground was quite soft in places, and we kept our eyes skinned for a glimpse of a white hide as we slowly crept along. As we crossed the head of a steep gully, a shot rang out ahead of us, and a distant crashing of brush and general uproar warned us that our quarry was afoot at last. We had a fairly clear view of the little flat below the gully, and, cocking the Winchester 38-55, we waited in readiness. Suddenly a flash of white shot into the flat, and we glimpsed the bull going like a deer. Wild cattle are extremely fast and handy on their legs, and the bull was no exception to the rule. Rata vines and pine trees somewhat obscured our view, but we held ahead of the fast-disappearing quarry and pulled as he passed an opening in the timber. A heave of his hind-quarters answered the shot, but he went on without reducing his speed in the least. The two dogs were well under weigh on the bull's line ere we cheered them on with a wild yell, and, dashing down the gully, we joined our comrade on the lower ground. In answer to our breathless queries, he replied that the bull had scented him before he could get an open shot, and had crashed off without offering anything but a parting glimpse of his white hide. Both Laddie and Don were keen cattle-dogs, and we knew they would eventually bail-up the bull after he had run some distance, so we followed the trail, plainly indicated by down-trodden ferns and splayed-out hoof-prints where our quarry had slid down the steep gully-side.

The trail led towards the fern country, and as we were within easy reach of the ponies we secured them, and, climbing into our saddles, once more set off in pursuit. Leaving the bush for the open ground, we could hear the dogs barking in the distance, and, riding in the direction of the sounds, we finally located them on a flat where the manuka scrub grew in patches. The bull was warding off the attacks of the dogs, and did not see us, so we rode down behind a sheltering hillock until we debouched on to the flat. It was then the bull saw us, and, charging through the dogs, he made off as hard as he could go for the bush. The ground was bad for riding, but we sent the ponies along in pursuit, firing several shots from our saddles as we galloped. There was a danger of hitting the dogs, and as the ground finally became unrideable at a fast pace we had the disappointment of seeing our quarry disappear in the standing timber. The two dogs were hard at his heels, however, and we trusted to them to finally wear out the bull and bring him to a standstill. On reaching the edge of the bush we tied up the ponies and proceeded on foot. The distant barking of the dogs sounded somewhere ahead of us, so, guided by the sounds, we hurried on as fast as we could. It was evident that the bull was constantly changing his position, yet the dogs seemed to be keeping him pretty well in hand. Gradually we worked our way nearer to the scene of battle, and finally we caught a glimpse of the combatants. On a flat amongst the tree ferns the bull was warding off the rushes of the dogs, but from his appearance he seemed to have had about enough. His heels were bleeding from the teeth of the dogs, and a red streak on one hind-quarter showed plainly where our bullet had creased him without disabling him. He was a wild, active brute, so we took advantage of the cover afforded by several large pine-trees to get in to close quarters with him. As we reached the last bit of cover we each stepped out to one side, and the reports of the two rifles rang out almost as one. The bull staggered, ran a few steps forward, then collapsed in a heap, while the dogs "piled into" his carcase like furies. Both bullets had entered behind the shoulder, most effectually putting our quarry out of business. We gralloched the dead beast, skinned him, and cut him up, hanging the meat in convenient branches until such time as we could bring pack-horses to get it out to the station.

That day's hunt was one of our earlier experiences with the wild cattle, but later we had many an exciting chase, both on horseback and afoot.—R. C. in Shooting Times.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

To the Editor of the "Indian Field."

Sir,—To decide an argument will you kindly, in your correspondence columns, let us know how many times Fullerton won the Waterloo Cup?

Long Span.

A RACING QUERY.

To the Editor of the "Indian Field."

Sir,—I would be greatly obliged if you would answer the following question in your valuable paper to decide a bet:—

If two ponies are entered for a race, one an English-bred pony and the other an Australian, will the former have to allow the latter any weight for breeding or for any other reason? Please understand that neither of the ponies have won a race of any description, but are being entered in a race for the first time; both are 13-2 in height.

Sowar.

[No, unless the conditions of the race give any allowance.—Ed.]

THE ORIGIN OF A NAME.

A Curious Fact in Natural History.

One of our contemporaries brought, a few days ago, a notice of a very interesting kind in his columns as to how names are discovered. In consequence of more exact information which we were fortunate enough to obtain from a most reliable source in London, we are able to declare that the name Odol is not derived from the formation of the craters in the moon, but has been seen for the first time on the skin of a tiger in the jungles of British India.

An eminent naturalist has drawn attention to this very peculiar feature in the markings upon the tiger's fur which affords another remarkable evidence of the proverb that there is "nothing new under the sun." While scientists were busy with the important investigations which resulted in the discovery of the famous dentifrice, Odol, and centuries before the name was thought of, it would appear that tigers were roaming the jungles of India bearing upon their coats the impress of the very word. That this powerful and beautiful habitant of tropical forests—perhaps the animal of all others with the best dental equipment—should be as it were, the actual forerunner of Odol is one of those coincidences which are nothing short of marvellous. It provides food for thought, and Odol is fairly entitled to whatever advantage may accrue from the discovery of the coincidence.

Old Maid.—"But why should a great strong man like you be found begging?" Wayfarer—"Dear lady it is the only profession I know in which a gentleman can address a beautiful woman without an introduction."

Echoes of the Strike.—Passenger:—"Why are we so late?" Guard:—"Well sir, the train in front was behind, and this train was behind before besides."

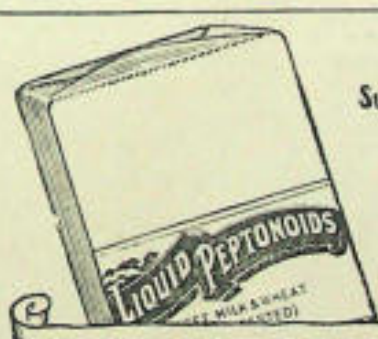
Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up
No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.



An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—
"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Ernest & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghrasky, Cairo; W. Wilson, Rawal Pindi and Murree; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

6. Except in Handicaps the correct weight of any horse or pony (whether it is intended to run or not) must be notified in writing to the Honorary Secretary not later than 12 noon the

RIFLE AND PISTOL CARTRIDGES.

To do justice to your skill, you should use good ammunition no less than an accurate rifle or pistol. The arm is often blamed when the ammunition is at fault. To insure your getting cartridges that are uniform in size and shooting strength, and sure-fire and accurate, ask for Winchester cartridges—the Red W Brand. These cartridges are made and loaded in the most complete plant in the world by automatic machinery and are always just the same.

THE TURF.

GATWICK.

THE result of the Ashdown Selling Handicap came as a great surprise, as Goldwin, on his Newbury running, had not been handicapped out of the race, and was expected to win; while Buoy and Gull, though disappointing on Saturday, had a chance on his Warwick second. The Aske spots are not so often seen on winners as in the good old days; but Skeldon, a neglected quantity at 100 to 8, who had run nowhere in three previous essays, virtually made hacks of his opponents all through, and the favourite was beaten six lengths by the son of Ayrshire, on whom Foy was casually looking round as he came home at the head of affairs up the straight. Well bred—by Ayrshire out of Florida—the winner is a handsome chestnut, with many good points about him, and that sound judge, Mr. Persse, did the fund a good turn, as he gave 500sovs. more for the winner than the entered selling price of 50sovs. Results:—

ASHDOWN SELLING HANDICAP.—Of £100. 1¼ miles.

Won by three lengths; four lengths divided second and third.

On Monday, considering the possibilities of the Prince's Handicap, the field was of somewhat disappointing proportions, and it was a close thing between Renown, Scotney, and Eaton Lad in the wagering. Florizel's Pride, a nice horse to lead work, made the most of his advantage in the weights to steel away, but was joined a mile from home by Renown, who then began to show signs of having had enough of it, and Scotney, who had run a grand public trial with Charles O'Malley, to whom he was trying to give 11lb., at Kempton, came to the front, and testified to the stoutness of Uncle Mac as a sire by an easy victory. Florizel's Pride will do better anon. Results:—

LEONARD'S SELLING PLATE.—Of £100, for two-year-old. 5 furlongs.

Mr. A. Barton's Tosson, by Mackintosh—Amora, 9st.	A. Sharples	1

A sunny day brought the horse-loving Yorkshiremen out in strong force last Tuesday to see the Great Northern Handicap, which, despite recent scratchings, panned out fairly well. That opinions were divided as to the merits of the competitors was shown by the wagering. Protestant starting favourite, while late deals in favour of Oliver Goldsmith brought him into almost as much request, and Paravid came closely on their heels. The field though falling off in numbers, had quality enough, and the race, though not full of incident, supplied an exciting finish. Results:—

MELROSE HANDICAP.—Of 250sovs. 5 furlongs.

OLYMPIC GAMES TRIALS.

THE trials arranged by the Amateur Athletic Association with a view to selecting men to represent Great Britain and Ireland in the Olympic Games at Stockholm next July were held at Stamford Bridge Grounds on the 17th instant. Although dull and threatening, fine weather prevailed, and a crowd of between 10,000 and 12,000 persons watched the proceedings. Excellent entries were received for the different events and several fine performances were accomplished. Results :—

100 Metres (109·36 yards).—Final Heat: W. R. Applegarth, Poytechnic H., 1; W. A. Stewart, L.A.C., 2; H. M. Macintosh, C.U.A.C., 3. A great race; less than a foot separated the three. Time—11secs.

200 Metres (218·72 yards).—Final Heat: E. W. Haley, Herne Hill H., 1; D. H. Jacobs, Herne Hill H., 2; R. G. Rice, Reading A.C., 3. A splendid race, Haley winning by inches; a good half-yard separated second and third. Time—22-3/5secs.

400 Metres Race (437·44 yards).—Final Heat: C. N. Seedhouse, Blackheath H., 1; G. Nicol, Polytechnic H., 2; S. Usher, Surrey A.C., 3. Nicol led until half way round, when Seedhouse went by, and running strongly to the end, won by five yards; two yards separated next two. Time—49-1/5secs.

1,500 Metres Race (1,640·4 yards).—Final Heat: W. Cottrill, Hallamshire H., 1; D. F. McNicol, Polytechnic H., 2; C. H. Ruffell, Highgate H., and A. Hare, Herne Hill H., dead-heat 3. E. W. Hebbs, Highgate H., cut out the pace and led until entering the last lap, when Cottrill went by. Half way round Ruffell and McNicol challenged but Cottrill finished strongly and won by a yard; three yards separated McNicol and the dead-heaters. Time—4mins. 8-4/5secs.

BOXING.

HARRISON VS. MCENROY.—The twenty-round contest, for £400, the Middleweight Championship of Great Britain, and the Lonsdale Belt, between Jack Harrison, of Rushden, and Private McEnroy, of the Irish Guards, was decided at the National Sporting Club last Saturday night. The result was a victory for Harrison on points.

Harrison is Jim Driscoll's pet pupil and has been taught to crouch slightly, leaning forward so as to get leg-drive into his hitting. This is the foundation for an effective style, and it was clear from last night's contest that Harrison, although he has to develop a defence and rather more variety in attack, even now possesses the chief assets of a first-rate boxer, namely, a good punch in either hand and the faculty of applying it either to the head or to the body of his opponent. He was meeting in McEnroy a dangerous two-handed fighter, with little skill but a capacity for taking punishment, whose rushing and smashing have often bewildered much more finished boxers. Harrison had his teacher in his corner, and the best possible plan of campaign was naturally devised and carried into execution with a consistency which does credit to a young and inexperienced pugilist. In addition to his other gifts Driscoll is one of the best seconds living. So Harrison took the fight to McEnroy throughout, and the latter, who never shines at "milling on the retreat," was unable to find scope for his own game.

In the first ten rounds Harrison obtained a very long lead on points; at times his opponent was pounded shockingly, being unable to think of a way of evading a storm of straight lefts and rights in swift succession. In the 12th round, however, Harrison tired and became slower, and for some time McEnroy more than held his own, occasionally getting in a right upper-cut or a rather weird back-handed blow with the left which he uses when a right swing would not reach his man's head. The last two rounds were Harrison's, and there could be no doubt he had won well at the end.

It was a clean and sportsmanlike contest, a credit to victor and vanquished alike. The referee was Mr. J. H. Douglas.

GOLF.

THE LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP.—Both Championship Semi-finals were close. In her match against Miss Ravenscroft, Miss Leitch was bunkered from her second shot and the Bromborough player missed a yard and a half putt for the hole. The latter secured the lead at the third, but Miss Leitch squared at the fourth and but for her putting she might have taken the lead at the fifth. Getting down a three yard put for a three at the sixth, Miss Ravenscroft again secured the lead, only to be robbed of it at the seventh, where Miss Leitch holed a three yard putt for a three. Finding an almost unplayable lie from a pulled drive going to the ninth, Miss Leitch took 3 to reach the green and again became one down. She looked like being sure of a half at the eleventh where after pitching out of the rough to within seven yards of the pin, she holed her putt for a 4. Miss Ravenscroft, however, ran down a six yard putt for a 3 and become 2 up. Miss Leitch was now begining to feel the strain She played the twelvth hole nervously, lost it and became three down. She won the short thirteenth, but Miss Ravenscroft again became three up at the fourteenth. Miss Leitch made a great fight of it. Her putting when the situation was desperate was remarkable, and it won her the fifteenth and sixteenth holes. She was only one down. She topped her drive going to the seventeenth and played one more all the way. Miss Ravenscroft, however, was not up with a four foot putt and the hole was halved. A half at the home hole gave the Bromborough player the match by 1 up.

Miss Temple and Miss Heming Johnson had a ding dong match for the first six holes. Miss Temple became 1 up at the seventh and turned with a lead of 2 up. Miss Heming Johnson won the tenth in 3 and the eleventh in 5 and thus squared the match. Miss Temple regained the lead at the thirteenth. This was probably the turning point of the match. Miss Heming Johnson had a putt for 2 while her opponent was not even on the green. The latter however pitched up and holed out in three. Miss Johnson took three putts. She squared with a four at the fourteenth but became 1 down again at the sixteenth. The next hole was halved and a win for Miss Temple at the eighteenth gave the Westward Ho! player her place in the final. Fifteen thousand spectators witnessed the final of the Ladies' championship between Miss Temple (Westward Ho) and Miss G. Ravenscroft (Bromborough) at Turnberry on the 17th instant. The result of the match was a great victory for Miss Ravenscroft by 3 up and 2 to play. In the semi-final in the morning Miss Ravenscroft had had a desperately hard match with Miss Cecil Leitch, whom she had defeated, by one hole. Miss Temple in the same round beat Miss Heming Johnson by 2 holes. As in her match against Miss Leitch, Miss Ravenscroft played a splendid game with her wooden clubs in the final. Perhaps the great feature of her play, however, was her iron approaches on to the green. At the start the Bromborough player seemed to be feeling the effects of hard fighting in the morning. Miss Temple, on the other hand played with the greatest confidence and when, after losing the first hole through weak putting, she won both the second and third, it looked as though the favourite might be beaten. Subsequently Miss Ravenscroft recovered her form. She squared at the fourth, where she played two grand wooden club shots on to the edge of the green. She left herself with a three yard putt for a half in three at the short sixth hole, but she managed to effect a division and took the lead for the first time at the seventh. The Westward Ho! lady played the eighth badly. She went over the wall beyond the green with her recovery from a bunkered third shot and was subsequently bunkered again. She picked up and became 2 down. Miss Ravenscroft had a two hole lead at the turn. Weak putting lost the Westward Ho! player the tenth hole, but she got back a point at the eleventh, where Miss Ravenscroft was against the fence at the back of the green from her second shot. Miss Ravenscroft become 3 up at the thirteenth where she holed an eight foot putt. Miss Temple missing one of a similar distance. Miss Temple played the 16th hole, which measures 460 yards in splendid style. She was up on the green in 3 and holed an 12 yards putt in 4 against 5. The sixteenth brought the match to an sensational finish. Miss Ravenscroft failed to carry the wall with her drive. She missed her brassie shot and had to play her third from a spot within 2ft. of the Dyke. She hit a beauty with her niblick and laid her ball within ten yards of the pin. Miss Temple had to play the odd and then Miss Ravenscroft ran down her putt for a 4. Scores.—Miss Ravenscroft Out—4 6 6 5 4 3 4 5 4—41 Home—4 6 6 3 5 5 4—33. Total 74 for 16. Pigsticking.

HOW I WON FAME.

IT was my great good luck to start my Indian career in Behar It was in the good old days when the blue dye industry was flourishing. Money was plentiful and money means pleasure. We used to race in those days and lotteries were spirited. The meets had a go about them, which even the most jaded could not resist.

Those were the days when prosaic golf was unknown and polo, cricket, lawn tennis flourished—and also alas! pigsticking.

I say "alas"! pigsticking" feelingly. Like many a youngster out from home, I had never put a foot across a horse in the old country. Well do I remember the agonies I suffered during my first few weeks as an assistant Indigo planter. My boss said to me: "There is a horse for you to ride, my boy! Not much to look at, is he? but he will be all right, as soon as you get into it a bit." Not much to look at? I thought there was a great deal too much to look at. He stood 15 hands high, was lean and bony and possessed a most evil eye. In that first month he bolted with me 20 times and pipped me at least ten. That was bad enough, but worse was to come.

My boss was a mighty hunter of the boar and he gave me a terrible start, when one morning he said to me: "I am giving a pigstick next week—you must be blooded. Not got a spear? That doesn't matter I will lend you one of mine."

It was a case of hookeow Ari and there was no getting out of it.

Imagine me at my first pigstick on a horse I could no more manage than fly and with a strange weapon in my hand, which I found as difficult to manage as my steed. My mount was fast much too fast for me. He soon had taken command and I was soon careering along at a furious pace, with the point of my spear pointing alternately to all the four points of the compass.

The others were all busily employed in keeping out of my way! My boss was seriously annoyed with my performance, in fact he even went so far as to say I had spoilt the stick!

He gave me a few hints and said I had to persevere. It was a good season for pig and I had practice enough, but I never improved.

I remember on one occasion hearing a conversation between two men.

"Are you going to Smith's stick?"

"Yes."

"Who is going to be there?"

Many names were mentioned and amongst others mine.

"My God! that chap's going—is he?

Well, I am off! I don't mind being killed by the wily boar, but I draw the line at being stuck by a human idiot!"

An increase of pay enticed me away from Behar, where everything was so delightful—except the pigsticking. I was charmed with my new district. It abounded in game of all sorts and, just where I was the jungle was so thick it was impossible to ride a pig. Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise.

I had just purchased a horse called Grey Lad which had some pretensions to racing. In fact my idea was to sweep the board at the local race-meeting. He was as gentle as a lamb to hack about alone, but a very devil in company.

I was dining at the bungalow of one of my new friends one night when the bomb exploded.

A man from the north of the district was there and thus he addressed me:—

"So you are from Behar! By jove, you fellows up there are great pigstickers. I suppose you have accounted for a good few."

I fell into the trap. With a superior air I replied: "Yes! we do get some fine stickings up there. Grand sport pigsticking! I suppose you fellows have never had the opportunity of trying it."

Imagine my horror when my friend said:—"Round about here there is no sticking to be had, but up my way we get some pretty good sport. The country is more open and there are some fine plains there, when we can run a pig for miles.

"By the by I am giving a stick in a few days and you must come to it, though I am afraid we want have much of a look in against a Behar boy."

Under my somewhat sun-tanned skin I am sure I turned a sickly green.

I thought of the hopeless condition I would be in when Grey Lad found half a dozen other horses thundering alongside of him. However I had given the show away, so, assuming as much light-heartedness as I could call up, I accepted my friend's invitation.

Behold me, some days afterwards, seated on Grey Lad amongst half a dozen other horsemen outside a jungle and praying to God it contained no pig? but my prayers were in vain. A real hoary old veteran soon broke cover and dashed away. We went helter-skelter after him. Grey Lad had the legs of the others and soon had a clear lead, but I became uncomfortably aware of the fact that, if I didn't do something drastic, he would soon be completely out of hand.

With a desperate effort I pulled him up and promptly dismounted and it was not till the hunt was well out of sight, that I again mounted and leisurely followed. I came across them again—all gathered about a narrow kind of nullah, densely covered with jungle.

I was greeted by—"Hallo! What happened?" I cursed my luck and told the usual lie about a faulty stirrup leather. They told me the pig was a magnificent one, had received two good spears and had gone to ground in the nullah and they were waiting for the elephants to come out and drive him out again. Oh! those pestilential elephants! Nothing in the world would induce them to face that jungle. Immediately they came to a certain spot where evidently the pig was lying up—they backed most obstinately.

A council of war was held and then X—made the most brainless and idiotic suggestion that a man ever made in his life. He said: "If P.—" (that's me) "will come with me, I'll get that pig to break." At first I looked at him aghast; then I thought to myself: "Oh! he's only trying to pull my leg—testing the Behar boy—he really doesn't mean it—I'll score off him"—so saying "alright, old man! I'm on." I jumped off my horse. Hang it all! he jumped off his too and grasping his spear, proceeded to enter the jungle.

I have often thought since that, at that moment, I must have felt like a soldier who is ordered to take some steep height from which a hail of bullets is pouring down on him. He may be frightened out of his life, but he can't help himself—he must go. And I had to go. X pitched on me because I was the lightest of the party. Let me however describe him. He was without exception the thinnest and most gaunt-looking man I ever saw in my life. One could easily span his biceps with one hand and, as for his calves, they were merely pipe-stems. A nice kind of man to have at your side when you enter on foot a thick jungle to stir up a wounded boar! However, physically unpromising as X was, I must say he was a grand sportsman, a magnificent shot and with nerves of iron.

I must confess I kept very close to him, and I was all on the qui vive, if the pig moved, to put X between me and the pig. We crawled along cautiously to the spot where the elephants had indicated the pig was. I glanced through a small opening in some bushes to my right. What is that? my God! the pig! my heart stopped beating—my knees shook—I was presque evanoui. But only for a moment and then a heavenly smile overspread my countenance, no living pig ever lay like that. The whole attitude signified death. I whispered in X's ear "I see him—follow me close" and dashing through the opening, I ran my spear in some eighteen inches in the neighbourhood of the heart of the dead and harmless brute.

X followed me up closely, tripped and came down on his nose. When he reached me, he found me standing triumphantly with the pig pinned down under my spear and I assured him by saying: "Nothing to be afraid of, old man! He is as dead as a door nail. I got him through the heart before he could move."

As we were imbibing liquid refreshment, I suppose I was the proudest man in Asia, as X told not only one fellow pigsticker, but also mahouts, beaters, and all how I had singlehanded and on foot slain the enormous boar lying before us.

After I had left that District, I returned once for a meet. As I entered the club, I saw a crowd of young of men staring at me and whispering together. That stare was a look of unqualified admiration and I knew they were saying: "That is the man who singlehanded and on foot and in the middle of a thick jungle killed a 36 inch wounded boar."

It is a pity to let out a secret now, for the men of that district are born sportsmen and are bound to read The Indian Field,—but to have played the hero for some 20 years, when it has been so thoroughly unmerited, is a bit of luck which most men don't meet with, and I am thoroughly satisfied at the length of time the deception has been kept up.

DOCTOR BOSS STRASSBURG introduced Gonosan in the treatment of the most painful of diseases to which mankind is liable. It is better and safer and more effective than other preparations of Copaiba, Cubeb, or plain Santal wood oil. The same is the verdict of other Specialists who have patiently tried it. It is the latest Scientific Remedy and has never known to fail. At all Chemists and dealers.

GONOSAN (CAPSULES) unlike other preparations of Sandal wood oil do not affect the kidneys or disturb the stomach and are well tolerated by patients even after prolonged treatment. When prescribing insist on "Gonosan." It gives best results. Trials by the medical profession solicited to whom samples and literature, will be sent free on application to Holzmüller and Schmidt, Calcutta.

STEELRUBBER TYRES

These tyres have casings of enormous strength, built of canvas specially woven from extra tough, though finely flexible Egyptian Cotton.

A layer of canvas over and above the usual number —all equal in tension and strength—a new process of vulcanising which obviates the "nipping" so frequently the cause of bursts in a half-worn tyre—these are features that make the Wood-Milne casing absolutely the strongest in existence. Add thorough examination by experts of every completed tyre, and you have full assurance that the Wood-Milne is without a weak spot.

The beaded edge of the tyre is reinforced at point of contact with the rim. It is remarkably easy to manipulate, and never stretches, loosens, or breaks.

The Steelrubber Tread.

The invention of Steelrubber—a resilient combination of pure Para rubber with tangled strands of steel—marked a revolution in pneumatic tyres. Steelrubber is almost impenetrable, and stands an enormous amount of wear and tear.

Wood-Milne Steelrubber Tyres are the most economical on the market. The "GRIPRIB" pattern, shown in the illustration, with its alternating cross-bars and short-section flanges, is a triumph in scientific non-skids. "Wood-Milnes" are also made in Grooved pattern and with steel studs.

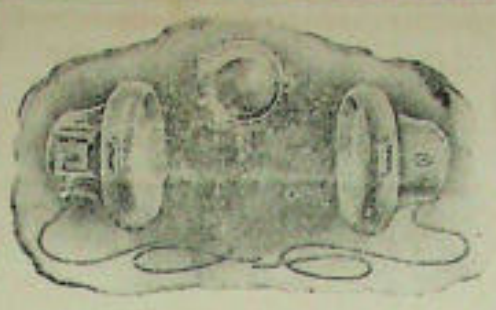
BY THROTTLE.

THE Second Presidency Magistrate has been praiseworthily busy among taxi-cab drivers during the week. A fine of Rs. 100 was inflicted on one of these for causing an accident by colliding with the office jaun of Mr. Harvey of Ballygunge at the corner of Short and Wood Streets. This is a particularly dangerous corner and there are many more of the same kind in that vicinity. That part of Calcutta which is bounded by Park Street, Chowringhee, and Lower Circular Road simply abounds in dangerous corners and it would be a good thing if the authorities enforced the cutting of hedges and other growing impediments to the view, where they exist, and where the obstruction is caused by a wall, the fitting of mirrors might be tried. This latter is the system adopted with success throughout Australia.

ANOTHER case during the week was that of a taxi-driver who was sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment for driving his cab in a rash and negligent manner in Chowringhee. The evidence went to show that this man had two fares in the car and deliberately drove in front of an approaching tram car. An accident was only averted by the tram driver promptly applying his electric brake. When questioned by the Magistrate, the accused said in explanation that he tried to cross in front of the tram as he thought he could clear it. Personally I look on this simply as an error of judgment on the part of the accused with regard to the speed of the tram, dangerous certainly but still one that might occur to any driver; moreover, when one remembers that for using the same excuse in the High Court on the same day, in an action over a similar accident an owner-driver obtained substantial damages, the punishment does seem rather severe. No one is more keen than I am to see the Calcutta streets purged of the recklessness which is at present rampant, but I trust that my feelings in the matter have not obscured my sense of justice nor rendered me incapable of recognizing cases in which the crime and its punishment are not in the proper ratio.

CALCUTTA is threatened with a strike of taxi-cab drivers. There is nothing like being abreast of the times and strikes are now the fashion. The drivers will be well advised to let the strike alone and pay more attention to attaining a greater proficiency in driving and a wider knowledge of the rules of the road; by these means the wrongs now complained of will be automatically redressed. The taxi has not yet come to be looked on as indispensable in Calcutta, so that a strike will only harm the men themselves. The employers must win, as there are hundreds of license-holders (I nearly wrote drivers) walking about Calcutta, who will be only too glad of the chance of getting their Rs. 15 per month again. The Taxi Cab Company have taught many drivers and all are not in private employ. In India there are no Trades' Unions, and owing to race prejudice and the various grades in every trade or profession there is no cohesion of units consequently there can never be any organized concerted action on the part of the working classes against employers and so strikes in India are usually a pathetic fizzle.

ON Saturday last some 300 persons accepted the hospitality of Mr. R. N. Matthewson, of Swan Park, Alipore, to witness the launch of his "Swan" motor car. Socially the event was a decided success, Wit and Beauty were happily blended and the catering by Messrs. Castellazzi Bros. left nothing to be desired. The christening ceremony was performed in the way usual with ships, by Mrs. McCabe. Simultaneously with the breaking of the bottle of champagne and the delivery of the stereotyped speech, Mr. Reynolds let in the clutch of the weirdest structure ever put on a chassis. On being brought to a standstill at the foot of the slip way, one had an opportunity of inspecting the engine and the internal fittings of the body. Let me start with the engine. When one looks at this with an eye for it only and ignoring the surroundings one sees a really fine little 6-cylinder 16 H.P. Brookes of the 1910 type, not silent certainly but still a really good serviceable engine of an extremely neat appearance, in spite of the number of pipes, levers and wires that have been fitted since leaving the makers' hands. On inspecting the dashboard one is dazed by its congested appearance, switches, control levers of all sorts, dial indicators and other mechanism seem to be simply jumbled up in glorious chaos. In fact the whole car reminds nothing so much as a "Heath Robinson" nightmare rendered partially practicable. From the outside the car presents rather a graceful appearance shaped as it is in imitation of its namesake, and it is only on closer inspection that the futility of such an enormous outlay, both financial and mental is apparent. The body is built of solid teakwood panels, hand moulded, painted white and ornamented by an elaborate floral design in gold. Thirty-four electric lights controlled by twelve switches provide illumination, and pandemonium is obtained by the fitting of cut-outs, musical horns, whistles, etc., to the number of eight. The rearmost portion of the body is fitted with an ice-chest and tanks provided with taps, while in the foot boards are constructed stoves and grills for use on the road. The construction of these footboards is unique and they are the only things on the car which I consider are worthy of copying, being far ahead of the old flat type covered with matting. The wheels, Rudge-Whitworth detachable, are shod with three-ribbed Palmer cord tyres, and they are needed as the weight they support is over four tons. Just fancy it, four tons, on an engine of this type. The strain on the power unit and transmission gear is enormous, add to this the fact that the engine, owing to the frontal body design, has practically no ventilation and you are faced with the conviction that the whole thing is nothing more than an expensive and ludicrous impracticability. In its present condition it will not and never can stand work. The designer claims to be by virtue of this body the originator of the now popular Torpedo. I have no desire to enter into any controversy on this subject, but both English and Continental authorities give the credit for this type and improvements on it to Captain Theo Masin, well known at home as the concessionaire for Germain cars.



AS some of the experts in a recent High Court case seemed to be rather hazy on the functions of torque bars and radius rods it may not be out of place here to indulge in a dissertation on them. To arrive at a clear understanding it is necessary first of all to be thoroughly conversant with the duties of the live axle, these are generally conceded to be five, viz.: (1) To support part of the weight of the chassis. (2) To carry the differential gear, differential shafts and the brake drums, etc. (3) To transmit the tractive power of the engine to the road wheels. (4) To transmit to the chassis the reaction, due to the tractive effort at the point of contact of the wheels with the road. (5) To transmit to the chassis the breaking or retarding effort.

Now so far as concerns the first two of these functions the imposed loads may be considered as static loads, and in order to calculate for them the axle casing must be treated as a girder. The last three cases, however, are entirely different, as not only are bending stresses induced, but there are also torsional stresses to be taken into account. Besides these there are what are termed inertia stresses, but it is sufficient for the purposes of this article to deal only with the torsional stresses induced by functions 3, 4, and 5 and I will assume that the general design of the axle and its casing leave no cause for complaint. Taking force as the basis, let me remind readers, that according to one of the first principles in mechanics, for every force there is an equal and opposite reaction. Now the tractive force applied through the differential shafts of a live axle is limited by the co-efficient of adhesion between the tyres and the road, and the reaction as mentioned above must be transmitted through the axle casing to one or more stable members of the main frame. If there were no positive connection between the frame and the axle casing, the latter would be driven round the differential shafts instead of the reverse taking place. This tendency for the casing to rotate must be restrained and for that purpose it is usual for builders to fit torque bars, tubes, or triangles, all of which are intended to anchor, so far as the rotatary motion induced by function 3 is concerned, the axle casing to the frame of the chassis.

The fourth of the functions, that of transmitting the propulsive effort of the road wheels to the chassis, or in other words pushing the chassis along is often performed by radius rods which positively hinge the axle to the frame, the forward ends of such rods being hinged on a transverse axis which is coincident with the front universal joint of the cardan shaft or as near so as the construction of the chassis will permit. From time to time many combinations of torque bars and radius rods have been exploited and one of the most interesting is that in which the cardan shaft is enclosed within a tubular housing, which housing serves the dual purpose of torque tube and radius rod. In this type the forward end generally terminates in a forked or spherical construction embracing the universal joint. The absorption of the braking effort is transmitted to the frame through the medium of the axle casing, the reaction being divided into two components that are taken respectively by the radius rods and torque bar.

MOTORISTS in general and professionals in particular have reasons to be proud of Mitchell the runner-up in the Golf Championship (Amateur) just played at the famous Westward Ho Links. Mitchell, we are told, played in a most amicable and sporting manner throughout, but what can be said of the snobbishness of the "aristocratic spectators" who could not conceal their resentment at the presence of a chauffeur in the final. So much for the vaunted "fair play" and sportmanship. How often does one see in the home papers that sport has once more proved a social leveller, so it does, but generally when the working class succumbs with good grace to one of the aristocracy. The element of snobbishness was not confined to the spectators; however, a leading golf daily could not resist the temptation to make a neat line of the fact that a chauffeur had got into the final; had he in addition been an American, Mitchell could scarcely have met with such scant recognition.

RIEDELS' GONOSAN (the best combination of Kawa Kawa and Sandal wood oil) tends to simplify prognosis and treatment, and obviates complications. This is the verdict of leading Specialists of Europe and America, after prolonged and patient study. At all dealers and hamists.

Assuredly the best.

Ever since the inception of electric lighting for cars, the famous C.A.V. head, side and tail lamps have been recognised as the standard by which to judge other makes. Potential motorists fit only C.A.V. lamps; others are not nearly good enough when the most efficient lighting equipment is required to complete a car's luxuriousness. Therefore, specify C.A.V. if you wish to know the real meaning of lamp satisfaction.

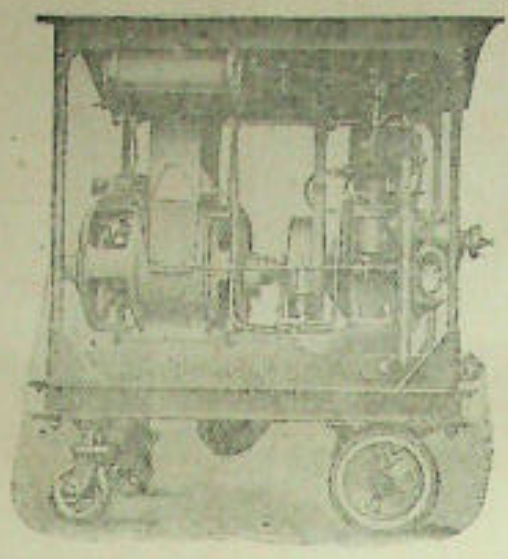
THE LEICESTERS' TOURNAMENT.

"A" Company, vs. "B" Company.—The final match in the above tournament was played on the Island on Tuesday afternoon the 4th instant, in the presence of a very large number of spectators. The match ended in a draw, neither side having scored. Of the two teams "A" Company were certainly the cleverer with their feet, and their combination was excellent but they frequently wasted far too much time when they had the ball, before they began to move. Their defence was perfect and on the afternoon's play they were the better team. "B" Company's passing was fair but they were quicker to get the ball up the field and never hesitated to shoot when there seemed to be a chance of scoring.

There was a very large crowd of spectators on the Island to witness the replayed tie on Wednesday.

Play was fast and clever all through and though "A" Company obtained their goal early in the match interest was sustained to the end, indeed in the last few minutes it seemed certain that "B" Company would equalise matters, but they got no chance of so doing. The "A" Company forwards have brought their game up to a very high standard indeed. Their passing was splendid and everyone played with judgment. They were wonderfully quick on the ball and this day there was none of the delay in getting on the move when starting a run that was witnessed the previous day. The backs and goal keeper were in fine form all through. The defence of both teams was very fine and altogether two stronger combinations have seldom been seen in this tournament.



Winning the toss and with the wind in their favour "A" Company opened a very good attack on the left, Honeywell making a fine dash. Steele getting the ball from Honeywell dribbled through very finely and Chambers received the ball and passed it to Sutherland, who after a few minutes' play scored. As soon as the ball was in play again Steele dribbled through from Chambers' pass to Honeywell who with a pretty run up sent in a very good shot from a difficult position, and just missed the goal. Play was fast and very close for a short time, after which "B" Company was dangerous and they were charging at "A" Company's goal with great force, and they put Dooley and Mason to a great deal of trouble. "A" Company made a fine run for B's goal, Wardle and Simpson passing the ball to each other but Fenning getting the ball sent it to A's territory. Then Taylor made a run up the field in fine style and shot at goal which was sent back by Ashborne. No sooner was the ball set in motion than Wardle got and passed to Cooper from whom Sutherland secured it and kicked it out. When the ball was in motion, Chambers was fouled by Wardle and a free kick was awarded. Fenning took the free kick and sent the ball straight into A's territory again. Dooley attempted to clear the ball from danger but Honeywell, who was close by got the ball and rushed for A's goal, and he was again and again stopped by Dooley, Simpson making a fine run assisted by Wardle. Ashborne seeing the approach of danger ran out and cleared it. A penalty was awarded against "B" Company, Wardle took the free kick sent a lightning shot into the net. Shortly after clever combination enabled "A" to become dangerous. Bees kicked the ball towards goal. Fenning tipped it giving a corner. Bees receiving the ball attempted to score. A scrimmage took place in front of B's goal. Bees got the ball again and shot a fine goal, when half time arrived. "A" Company leading by 2 goals to 1.

"B" Company opened the second half with a tremendous attack. Play grew very exciting now, "A's" territory being bombarded with shots for some time. "A" Company broke away and playing their hardest relieved the pressure. Up to the end of time "B" Company worked hard in the hope of augmenting their score but their opponents maintained a good defence and the whistle sounded and there was no alteration in the score sheet. The match ended in a win for the "A" Company by 2 goals to 1.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The first half of the League programme terminated at the middle of last week, and on Saturday the return matches started; and never have I known the competition to be so uninteresting as has been the case this year. The Middlesex and Calcutta were expected to render very good accounts of themselves, but the display given by these two teams has been of a most inconsistent nature. While the Black Watch, in eight games, have scored 16 points, the Middlesex in a similar number of games only registered 9 points; and this in itself goes to show what interest can be derived from so one-sided a competition. The Scotch regiment were, of course, expected to carry all before them, but it was also expected that the Middlesex and Calcutta teams would run the Black Watch very close as regards points. The Dum Dum team, although beaten by the F it regiment, have given of their best, but it has been against the other weak civilian clubs that the Middlesex have played poorly and have only drawn with Customs, Rangers, and Dalhousie. Against the Riversiders, the Middlesex were really fortunate in sharing points, for the Customs netted three goals, but were awarded only one, while the goal obtained by the Military was from a penalty—and that a very lucky item. The Customs, Rangers and Dalhousie, however, have shown marked improvement in recent matches, but the Riversiders make a great mistake in always changing their forward line. The Customs gave a brilliant account of themselves on Monday when they beat the Garrison Artillery by three goals to nil, and they should retain that evening's team which is certainly the best they possess.

The Rangers and Calcutta match produced a very even game; but what would have been an interesting match was spoiled by lenient refereeing. McCready was too lenient, with the result that some of the men frequently infringed the rules foul charges, and tripping, being witnessed on more than one occasion. The Rangers were lucky to win by a goal to nil, for Lindsay, who scored the goal, appeared to be yards off side. Both teams with one or two exceptions were representative, and prior to the starting of the match a victory for Calcutta was anticipated. The "Reds" had the larger share of attacking, and on the evening's play should have won, but when their forwards came near goal the attacks fizzled out tamely. The shooting of the Rangers' forwards, too, left much to be desired, and the forward play all round was of a poor description.

The Dalhousie and Middlesex match on the former's ground, produced no score, and when the Trades Club were awarded a penalty kick they failed to score; a hard shot by Quayle being beautifully warded off by Piggot, who has served in the football during the three seasons he has played here, no fewer than fourteen penalties. The game was a well contested one, and the defence on both sides proved superior to the attacks.

The Black Watch put out a four team against the Y.M.C.A. whom they beat by a goal to nil.

On Saturday, the second half of the League programme opened, and of the four matches on the card, the match between the Black Watch and the Middlesex produced one of the finest games witnessed this season. The football was of a high class, and the game which was full of interest, was played in a sporting spirit. The Black Watch were expected to win, and this impression proved correct, but they had to fight very hard to win by a goal to nil. With the exception of Worley, the Middlesex were at full strength and on the Black Watch side there was also one change. Both goal-keepers were kept busy, but Piggot had more to do than his vis-a-vis Brown. The Dum Dum custodian, who is undoubtedly the best goalie we have seen in Calcutta brought off some marvellous saves, and but for him the Mids would have been beaten by more than a solitary goal. The only goal of the match was netted by O'Donnell about two or three minutes from the close, and as the head master appeared to be off side, Piggot made no attempt to ward off the shot.

Dalhousie met Customs on the latter's ground, and the home team's defeat by one goal to love must be said to be owing to the miserable display of D'Silva, their outside left. This player twice had absolutely open nets, but he shot yards wide of the mark. There was nothing to choose between the two teams, but still Dalhousie were entitled to rank hard earned victory.

Calcutta beat the Y.M.C.A. by three goals to nil, Jenkins, Sherman and Hodgetts scoring, but the game was not so one-sided as the score would indicate. The Association, who have a speedy set of forwards, often broke away by individual efforts, but their final efforts were weak in the extreme.

The Rangers and R.G.A. match on the former's ground on Saturday resulted in a draw of one all after a fast and even game.

As the East Indian Railway had withdrawn from the competition there was only one League game on Monday, that between the Customs and the Artillery. As the Gunners had only on the Saturday previous drawn with the Rangers and the Customs had also shared points with the "green shirts" the match between the Riversiders and the Gunners was expected to produce an even contest. However, the R.G.A. played much below form, and were well beaten by three goals to nil—a result that came as a surprise.

The Customs won quite on their merits, however, and great credit must be given to the civilian team for some very smart play forward, and it is no exaggeration to say that their front line never played this season as well as they did against the Artillery on this occasion. Pte. Irish of the East Yorks was referee, and had he not been so strict, probably the game might have been a bit rough. As it was, however, he kept the men in order from the very start with the result that foul and dirty play was conspicuous by its absence. The Customs were by far the superior team and Hyland, their centre half, played a most magnificent game. During the initial half the Customs netted twice, Williamson and Galbraith scoring, while after the interval the latter scores the third goal.

THE DUKE OF ORLEANS AT WOOD NORTON.

For some years past the inhabitants of the little Worcestershire town of Evesham have come to consider that the Duke of Orleans had settled among them as a permanent resident on his princely estate at Wood Norton. A few days before the penning of this article they, in common with Englishmen generally, were, however, startled to learn that Wood Norton had been sold, and that H. R. H. the Duke was about to take up his residence as near to the French frontier as circumstances would permit.

What did it all mean, was, of course, the question in everybody's mouth, more especially as rumours were current that Prince Victor, the heir and hope of the Napoleons, was likewise on the qui vive, and seeking a new residence as near as possible to France, from which country both the Prince and the Duke have been excluded for many years.

The natural inference is, of course, that the French Republic has suddenly become unstable, and that royalists and imperialists are on the look out for a legitimate revival. Whether or no this is really the case, time alone will show; but in the present critical and tremulous condition of European politics no thinking person could be surprised at anything that may happen. Son altesse royale, le Duc Louis Philippe d'Orleans, to give him his full French title is the present head of the Bourbon-Orleans House, being the eldest son of the late Comte de Paris and nephew of the Duc de Chartres. Some time after his exile from France in 1886 the Duke received a commission in the 60th Rifles, and he served in India—we believe on the Viceregal staff—during 1888 and 1889.

It was doubtless during his sojourn in India that the Duke acquired that love of big game shooting and natural history which has since been one of his most distinguishing traits, and that led to the establishment of a most beautifully equipped and striking museum on the Wood Norton estate, albeit one housed in a building of unpretentious character. It was the establishment of this museum that served, no doubt, to strengthen the impression as to the permanency of the Duke's tenure of his Worcestershire estate.

Among the contents of this wonderful museum is a scene representing animal life in the Arctic Regions, which includes beautifully mounted specimens of the polar bear, walrus, and crested and other seals; some of these being far superior to the representatives of the same species in the Natural History Branch of the British Museum at South Kensington. The Duke's sporting trips were, however, by no means restricted to India and the Arctic, for H. R. H. visited Somaliland and the White Nile, and we believe, other parts of Eastern Africa. Among the Somali trophies is a mounted head of the elephant of that country, which is probably the only example of its kind in England, if not, indeed, in the whole of Europe, and which has been made the type of a local race of the African species, appropriately named in honour of the Duke himself.

That such a bulky collection will be transported entire to a new and perhaps temporary residence near the French frontier, is in the highest degree unlikely, and it is therefore a practical certainty that the museum at Wood Norton will be broken up and its contents dispersed.

This opens up a very important question with regard to the ultimate fate of private collections of natural history which contain what naturalists are pleased to call type specimens. Among such collections is the one at Wood Norton; that of Sir Edmund Loder's at Leonard's Lea, Horsham; and that of Major Powell Cotton at Quex Park, near Birchington. The museum at Tring—the private property of the Hon'ble Walter Rothschild—stands, however, on a different basis in this respect, as its ultimate disposition has, we believe, been arranged in a manner worthy of its importance and value.

The man in the street is naturally quite unaware of the extreme importance attached by naturalists to the aforesaid "type specimens," but a little reflection will serve to indicate how important such specimens really are, for it is to them, and to them alone, that appeal has to be made in testing the value of the species or races they respectively represent: and if they are lost this becomes impossible. It will be obvious, therefore, that all such specimens as exist in English collections ought eventually to find a permanent home in the Natural Museum at South Kensington, where they will always be accessible to scientific naturalists for the purposes of study. And it is sincerely to be hoped that this may be the case with the unique Somali elephant head at Wood Norton.

For the future it would, however, be well if naturalists, before they undertake the description of new species or races based on specimens in private collections, should insist that such specimens should be bequeathed at the death of their present owners to the British Museums, and that steps are taken to ensure such bequests being placed on a secure and inalienable basis.

Whatever may be the upshot of his future career, the Duke of Orleans will most assuredly carry with him to his new home the hearty good wishes not only of his quondam neighbours at Wood Norton, but likewise of Englishmen in general.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

LORD DERBY'S Stedfast, 4yrs., by Chaucer out of Be Sure, was one of the best of the three-year-olds of last season and his victory in the Coronation Cup, 1m. 4furs., at Epsom, evidences the fact that the promise of his juvenile years bids fair to be realised. Chaucer, his sire, who is by St. Simon out of Canterbury Pilgrim, was a very consistent horse. He ran for five seasons starting thirty-five times only and winning seven races, his victories including two Liverpool Cups, the Doncaster Spring Handicap, the Gimcrack Stakes and the Boscawen Stakes besides numerous placed performances against all the best form of the day. As a three-year-old Stedfast ran eleven times and put up a great record as he won eight races straight off the reel and was placed on each of the other three occasions. His record is as follows:—He ran third in the Union Jack Stakes at Liverpool; he was second in the Two Thousand to Sunstar; he was second in the Derby also to Sunstar (Royal Tender third), but after this he never suffered defeat and his list of wins reads:—Prince of Wales Stakes, 1m. 5furs., at Ascot, beating All Gold and Helicon; the St. James' Palace Stakes, 1m., at Ascot; the Atlantic Stakes, 1m. 2furs., at Liverpool, St. Nat being unable to make him gallop; the Sussex Stakes, 1m., at Goodwood; the Great Yorkshire Stakes, 1m. 4furs., at York, beating Pietri and Athelstan: W. O. Doncaster Stakes: won the Jockey Club Stakes at the Newmarket first October beating Lemberg and Hair Trigger II., and the Kingsclere Stakes, 1m. 2furs., at Newbury, beating Prince Palatine and Narenta, and Prince Palatine had then just won the Leger and it was a thousand pities that Lord Derby had not Stedfast entered in that race, for it is as certain as mundane affairs can be certain, that he would have won that event, especially with his most dangerous opponent Sunstar on the shelf.

PREFERMENT, the winner of the Newbury Summer Cup, is a three-year-old and is owned by the Duke of Devonshire. She is a bay filly by Velocity out of Simons, and as a two-year-old was only successful once out of four attempts, her solitary win being the Milverton Mile Nursery Handicap at Warwick, beating War Mint and Kodak. By defeating two such good horses as Chili II and Moscato this mare places a quite different complexion on her form. Mr. R. Mills' Chili II recently won the City and Suburban, in which race Lonawand finished second and Moscato, well beaten, third. Chili II was not expected for the race under mention and until then had not done a great deal to make a name for himself. His performances were recently published in the Indian Field (May 2nd) as also those of Mr. W. M. G. Singer's Moscato. Chili II only won twice as a three-year-old and one of his victories was at the back end of last season, a Three-year-old Hurdle Race at Hurst Park. They apparently expected him at Newbury as we note that he went out at 5 to 1 and was on about the same level as Moscato whose S.P. is returned at 100 to 15.

IN view of an incident which happened at the Calcutta Monsoon Races last year, when half the field broke away in a false start and ran the race right out and then were compelled to go back and run it over again, and with further reference to those commentators who said that the decision compelling these horses to go back was a correct one, it may interest some of our readers to peruse the following note upon a more or less recent occurrence at Newmarket:—When twenty-eight youngsters turned up for the Maiden event we grew enthusiastic about the sun's illumination of an attractive colour scheme. When, however, we saw fifteen racing home for all they were worth and the other thirteen in various stationary attitudes still at the post, enthusiasm promptly gave way to consternation and confusion. "False start!" was shouted, but those in the galloping brigade were in dead earnest right through, and to a mixture of cheers and jeers, Chirpaway—who had been backed freely at 7 to 1 and was at a liberal enough price on the book—beat Rockfast comfortably by three lengths, with the Publish colt another two lengths away. Confusion became worse when the numbers of these placed horses appeared in the frame and stayed up for a while. That it was no race was pretty obvious, however, before confirmation of the fact came along, and it transpired that the starter had telephoned through immediately to that effect. It appears that one half of the tapes went up and the other didn't; that the majority went sailing away under the impression that the start was in order, and that the recall flag either was not raised in time for them to see it or was missed by the riders. Several of those who stayed behind got hung up in the tapes and the ultimate winner, Thistleton, was cannoned into. The flag was never actually lowered, so, of course, it was really just one of those unfortunate happenings we are always liable to. Under any circumstances I do not think Chirpaway would have beaten the favourite, who won in astonishingly easy fashion; in fact, just as easily as the market hinted. Two other of the well-fancied brigade, in Razorbank and Melton Abbey, were among those who stayed at the post, and, of the fifteen who ran the useless race, only the Cistus colt returned to battle again. Still all must be considered as starters. Quill did not run, but, through Razorbank, would not have beaten Wootton's representative who has evidently come on streets since well beaten by Loch Lochy, who gave him 7lbs. at Derby.

By Royal Warrant to the KING.

We have italicised that portion which we think may be of special interest to some people in Calcutta and which has particular bearing upon the case which occurred here. It will be further remembered that certain of the jockeys and one G.R. who rode the horses that broke away were fined! Under the C.T.C.'s own rules the horses that broke away ought not to have been compelled to return to the post and run it over again, but we at the same time admit that the C.T.C. Rules are not in this as in many other instances as explicit as they might be.

Major Ormond Winter will be amongst those who will be with us during the Monsoon Meetings and will probably have about ten horses and ponies, not all his own, but the property of various owners. Major Winter will be a very valuable addition to the G.R. ranks as he can go to scale at about the same weight as Mr. Evers, 8st. 4lb., and he is one of the best gentlemen jockeys on the flat in all India. Major Winter always trains his own and his latest both in and out of the stable are too well known to need any particular comment. Major Winter was largely responsible for Devon's success in the last Civil Service Cup.

With Oakley's, Captain Barrett's, Mr. J. D. Scott's and Beedham's strings all signalled as probables, as well as a small contingent from Darjeeling under command of Gee, we ought to have a fairly good outside support for our Autumn Meetings. Oakley has Fidelis, the heavily-topped horse that never did much good for himself during the cold weather; Make Haste III, the hot-headed little mare that nearly got into the Secretary's office upon one occasion when she was going out for a race last cold weather; Pyers Mostyn, a horse that might be useful in the mud; First Bell, Eileen, Tod, Coin II; and for the jump races, Blue Light, a new Australian said to be a very clever fencer, Lady Jenkins' wayward brown, The Priory II, who has been taken over by Mr. L. Pugh on racing terms for the season, and our old friend Frank, who is also Mr. L. Pugh's. If The Priory II can be induced to give up his vagaries and go straight over obstacles, he ought to be a useful little horse, but the only time he has been out in a race he showed a good deal of temper and declined to leave the post or face the starting gate. Out paperchasing also he has not shown that he is particularly fond of jumping, but he is just the cut of horse for the closed races if they can get him right. Captain Barrett has also several jumpers and Mr. Hilliard, A.V.D., has also a new horse or two. Mr. Evers will as usual we presume be well to the fore both as a trainer, owner and jockey to his own stable, and "Mr. Valentine," whose big string is presided over by Bloss, will be the most powerful opponent that the rest of them will have to meet. "Mr. Valentine," if rumour lies not, may next cold weather be well represented in the first class events of the Calcutta turf, as he is said to be contemplating reinforcing his present string.

A recent case cropped up with reference to claiming horses out of selling races and Mr. Bob Sievier discusses the circumstances and the conduct of a certain sportsman in the following very terse note:—

"Mr. Hall, who claimed Bill Bang at Sandown Park, has attempted the old game, 'Heads I win, tails you lose.' Mr. George Edwardes also claimed Bill Bang on behalf of the owner, Mr. Alfred Spalding. When there is more than one claim made in a selling race by neither the second nor third, all such claims possess no preference, and lots have to be drawn as to whose claim shall stand, and when there are not more than two claimants, it is invariably settled by the spin of the coin. On this occasion Mr. George Edwardes could not be found, and after a period the Stewards agreed that Mr. Goodgames, who trains Bill Bang, could toss for him, the claim being what is known as a friendly one. The respective trainers, Wootton and Goodgames, without demur then contested the toss, and the latter won. Here it might be thought the matter ended in a sporting manner, but no; Mr. H. J. Hall, whose association with commerce exceeds his sporting instincts, protests that Goodgames is not the authorised agent of Mr. George Edwardes, and this should render the toss null and void. Why did not this owner of one or two nags object before the coin was spun? Having lost, it is a pity he cannot take this slight defeat in the spirit of a sportsman and a gentleman. He must have been ill-advised to make the protest, for the decision of the local Stewards deputing Goodgames to act as he did cannot be over-ridden, wilfully or technically."

Mr. R. Craig McKerrow's two new ones, Ute and Little Slave, are, so we understand, likely to arrive soon and will be sent at once to Bangalore to join Victo, etc., with Ramshaw. Ute, the bay mare by Lactantius out of Utica, is a six-year-old and was trained in Moreton's stable last season, and out of eleven attempts managed to win once only, the occasion being the 1 mile Apprentices' Handicap at Brighton on the 2nd August, beating Master, Miss Edgar, Lace, and Clannish; she was placed third in the 1 mile Leamington Welter Plate at Warwick to Full Pay and Diamond Stud; she was third in the September Welter Handicap, 1 mile 150 yards, at Blackpool, to Red Shah and Farinaceous; she ran third at the Curragh in the 1 mile 2 furlongs. Apprentices' Plate to MacSherry and Adversary; and she was second in the Bentinck Apprentice Plate, 1 mile 2 furlongs, at Nottingham, to the filly by William the Third out of Gadfly. She is spoken of as being a very useful miler, and Mr. McKerrow may be trusted not to have bought a bad one. Little Slave is a four-year-old by Littleton out of Slave Lass and also won once last year, but was several times placed. He is a bay colt and was in East's stable last season. He scored his win in the Debdale Three-Year-Old Selling Handicap, 1 mile, from Our Bird and Manciller. At Newbury earlier in the year Little Slave ran second to Sister Mac in the Berks Selling Handicap, 7 furlongs, Makura being third; second in the Aston Selling Handicap, 1 mile, at Birmingham; he was also second in the Manor Maiden Plate, 1 mile, at Windsor; and he was again second in the Clock Tower Handicap, 1 mile, to Abelard III. Miss Edgar was third and there was a big field behind the placed ones. They both seem to be useful sort of horses, and as there are plenty of races for this class at the Calcutta meetings Mr. McKerrow will probably manage to so contrive matters that neither of them owe him much at the end of the season. There is undoubtedly more money in the cheap horse than in the long-priced one so far as India is concerned, for the added money in the big races is small and does not as a rule cover initial outlay, whereas there are any number of these smaller races of about £100 with good place money that are within reach of the cheap horse and very soon enable an owner to cover expenses and do a bit more. There is also, of course, always the chance of the cheap horse picking up a really good race, even the Viceroy's Cup itself, as we have so frequently seen cheap horses do!

The outside portion of the course proper was available to trainers throughout the week and some solid work was driven into all the horses who are going down to Mysore. Saturday saw the last of fast work here and several trainers took advantage of the privilege of using the inside grass, which was beautiful and spring going and some smart performances were timed. Appended is the work done by the stables here on Saturday :—

Watson.—Lady Lucretia and Bachelor's Art have summered well and done more or less three-quarter speed throughout the week from the seven and six furlongs. So also Sophocles who looks much better than he did last year. Bachelor's Art and Sophocles did slow work this morning, while Lady Lucretia was extended over six furlongs at three-quarter speed. Royal Scotland has been absent from the course for the past week and it is reported that he has gone wrong and will not be able to represent Sir A. Apcar's string in the Blue Ribband at Mysore.

Dignam.—Devereux did a working gallop round the course with Kuhn up, going half-speed throughout the journey and pulling up as fresh as ever. Picturesque spurted indifferently from the five furlongs, but went off at a rare speed from the ½ mile in 57secs. Huka went "gammy" about the leg after doing a sprint from the ½ mile last Tuesday (11th). Ruling Passion was not noticed but has done fast work on the other working days.

Ramshaw.—Black Douglas, who is not looking up to the mark, did slow work. Alchemist slipped along the ½ mile on the sand in 1min. 5secs. Wise Hawk (Fischer) and Lady Spring (Melsom) moved away from the ⅞ mile post and ran it in 1min. 25secs., Wise Hawk coming away easily from Lady Spring, a couple of lengths in front. Sperry and Reeba spurted from the four furlongs, running it in 1min. 55secs. Randall brought Sholto at half speed from the seven furlongs. Warsail and Cellarer moved well from the mile in 2mins. 4secs. Sugar Loaf, Bonny Boy and another spurted from the three furlongs coming at rattling speed in 40secs. The two former are running in the Gymkhana this afternoon and I would not be surprised to see Sugar Loaf win it. Barm galloped poorly from the ½ mile. Rolling Stone and another new one did a useful gallop from the five furlongs. The Arabs, Zahaf and Silver King were fully stretched on the outside of the grass from the seven furlongs, clocking the distance in 1min. 46secs. The others were not observed.

Thomas.—Kilmarnock and Santoinette went uncommonly well from the six furlongs in 1min. 20secs., the former going very strong. Nuncio bowled along on the sand from the seven furlongs in one under ; pulling hard all the way. Three-quarter speed was Harene's work from the five. Rapin and Lucullus spurted in the centre of the grass for four furlongs in 58secs. ; so also did Witch running it easily in 57secs. Annahean and Whin did moderate work.

Penton.—Evening Herald (Hoyt A.) and Pantry Girl (Melsom) were the first to work on the course and they set 53secs. for four furlongs, finishing the other furlong pulling up. The Arabs Crown Prince and Mexico dashed over six furlongs, the clock showing 1min. 27secs., the former going much stronger. Asfundier and Arnica sported at a hot pace over half a mile in 3 under ; Arnica jumping off two seconds in front and both finished together, Asfundier being the fresher of the two. T. M. S. moved in excellent style over four furlongs. Mandeville did a fine run from the ½ mile in five under. Lord Carlyon was let off with an easy-run ¾ mile in 1min. 30secs. Cheeky stripped in beautiful fashion from the nine furlongs, covering the mile in 1min. 55secs. ; the last half a mile in even time.

Jr. Bence.—Hamara (Southall) and Mil (Native) were extended from the mile, both going remarkably well in 1min. 52secs. ; the last half a mile timed 58secs. Bull's Run and Malmsey galloped from the mile to the three furlongs in smart timing of 1min. 6secs. The country-bred Vigor worked a mile at three-quarter speed. Aga and Hachal spurted the half-a-mile in even time, Aga being very strong at the finish. The others did not work.

Mahomed Ibrahim.—All the horses in this trainer's stable did slow work this morning but the following is Thursday's work on the sand. Wavehill moved well from the five furlongs in even time ; Vitulos the same distance in a second better ; Premoa also from the five came along in even time. Pearl, the country-bred, spurted brilliantly over five furlongs in 1min. 14secs. and finished strong.

Omer Khan.—Zari trotted round slowly and came the last furlong at a good speed. Cowslip and Sahana, who are in great buckle, went well for six furlongs in 1min. 24secs.

Mr. Puttanah.—Sporan galloped the whole course on the grass, moving well and looking as fit as can be. Eva B. spurted five furlongs and Morning Star also came from the same distance in fair time. James and Pauline are doing work at Mysore.

There were several gallops of horses belonging to officers garrisoned here and entered for Mysore, but they are not of much consequence since they possess neither quality nor shape with the class they are asked to run with. In my next I will give a few hints as to how the horses from here should fare at the meeting.

Ramshaw, who had been to Bombay, returned last Wednesday, the 12th, with four new 'uns landed the other day from England. Billy O'Neil is another arrival and a number of people from the north have come in and the course is quite lively of a morning.

Kuhn (Sr.) has been engaged by the G. K.'s stable and his brother has taken his place in the Apcar string.

The horse special leaves for Mysore on the 19th morning barring Mr. Hajee Ismail Sait's string the others will send their animals by it. The Bombay stables are expected on the 18th morning.

Wet weather had caused an interruption to the American Polo Tournament now in progress at Simla. On the 13th instant, however, it had sufficiently cleared to enable two games to be played off. In the first game, "B" team (Major Souter, Captain Charrington, Captain the Hon'ble A. Weld-Forester and Colonel F. Maxwell) beat "D" team (Mr. Wilkinson, Captain Nicolson, Major Molyneux and Captain Hogg) by 5 goals to 1. The umpire was Captain Henderson.

The second game was between "A" team (Major Battine, Major Talbot, Captain Reynolds and Major Harbord) and "E" team (Captain Mowbray, Mr. Nethersole, Major Lawrence and Captain Stephens). The umpire was Major Souter. This ended in a draw of three goals all. On the 15th instant, "D" team and "C" team drew one goal all, and "B" team drew with "A" team 3 goals all. On Monday "B" team beat "C" by 7 goals to one and "D" team beat "E" team by 2 goals to one. The two remaining games "A" vs. "C," and "B" vs. "E" were played last evening.

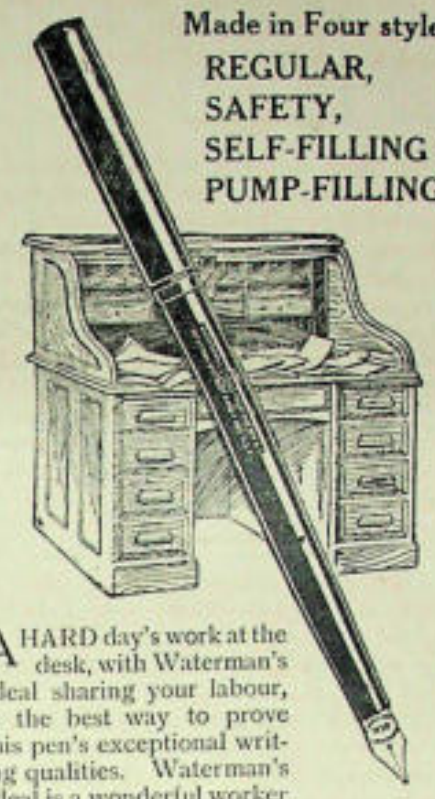
We have received from the proprietors a copy of the "Polo Players' Diary" for 1912. No effort has been spared to keep this well-known publication up to the standard of previous years, and those interested in polo will find in it that every item of information and reference concerning the game in all parts of the globe has been carefully compiled and placed before readers in the most handy and concise manner possible. As a standard work of reference it is invaluable.

The following notice was put up on the land of a Missouri farmer:—"Notis.—Trespaser will be persekuted to the full exten of 2 mean mungrel dogs wich ain't never ben overly soshibil with strangers an' 1 dubbelp barl shot gun wich ain't loaded with no sofy piliers dam if I ain't tire of this hel-raisin' on my property."

Sir Francis Younghusband, who was seriously injured by being run over by a motor car at Spa, has been awarded 35,000 francs damages against the owner of the car, while the chauffeur has been fined and given a term of imprisonment.

The annual cricket match between H. H. The Maharajah of Kashmir's team and the European visitors had this year to be abandoned owing to rain. The game was played on the 10th and 11th instant at Srinagar.

In the match for the Patriotic Cup at Hurlingham on the 15th instant the English polo team, composed of the Duke of Westminster, Captain L. Cheape, Mr. Edwards and Captain Ritson, beat Ireland by 10 goals to 4.



The International Association Football match between teams representing England and Scotland will be played on the Calcutta Football Club ground on Saturday next. Seats will be charged for and the proceeds are to be devoted to charity. The I.F.A. Challenge Shield competition is fixed to begin on the 10th July, entries closing on the 1st proximo. The Trades Challenge Cup tournament also begins on the 10th July, entries closing on the 1st.

Galileo, the new horse imported by Mr. E. L. F. deSoysa for the Civil Service Cup, was landed in Colombo last week.

Frank Wootton was in trouble at the Hurst Park meeting on the 27th ultimo. He won the Ferry Selling Plate on Mr. C. Sykes's Retrenchment but after the race Mr. Coventry lodged a complaint against Wootton for not keeping his place at the start when told to. The Stewards having heard evidence, suspended him from riding from the Middlesex Plate to the end of the meeting.

The first test match between England and Australia begins at Lord's on the 24th instant.

The following have been invited to play for England :—Messrs. Fry, Spooner, Warner and F. R. Foster, Hobbs, Rhodes, Barnes, E. J. Smith (Warwick), Wooley and Dean.

The following are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week :—The matches between Yorkshire and the Australians at Bradford, and Leicester and Worcester, at Stourbridge, were drawn. Northamptonshire beat essex by an innings and 137 runs.

Sussex beat Gloucester, at Bristol, by 5 wickets.

Leicestershire beat Warwickshire at Nuneaton by 3 runs.

Middlesex beat Yorkshire at Lord's by 4 wickets.

Lancashire beat the Australians at Manchester by 24 runs.

Surrey beat Essex at Leyton by 287 runs.

Hampshire beat Derbyshire at Derby by 45 runs.

The match between Sussex and Kent, at Brighton, was drawn, Sussex leading on the first innings.

The match between Notts and the South Africans was also drawn. The eleventh place being filled by either Jessop or W. W. Hearne.

The Plate Diving Competition held by the Calcutta Swimming Club last Friday attracted only a small entry, but some good performances were put up. V. F. Collier was first with 17 points and F. V. Vandyke second with 16. Appended are the best scores.

Collier seven in 39 seconds and ten in 48 seconds.

Vandyke 8 in 50 seconds and 8 in 62 seconds.

F. Stowell six and nine, in 34 and 57 seconds respectively.

W. Govan 14 in 32 and 27 seconds.

C. Young twelve in 44 and 37 seconds.

Three others competed.

The Amateur Golf Championship of Ceylon has been won by Mr. J. G. Melrose, a well-known Calcutta golfer. The competition attracted 21 entrants and a beginning was made on the 3rd instant. The results of the various rounds are as follows :—

First round—

G. W. Johnson beat C. T. Young by 3 up and 2.
J. G. Melrose beat F. de Saram on the last green.
A. R. Aitken w. o. C. B. Elliott scratched.
E. R. de Saram w. o. C. W. Mackie scratched

Second round—

G. Hazelrigg beat beat J. G. Sinclair 7 up and 6.
R. J. Elliott beat C. G. Newton by 1 up.
G. W. Johnson beat D. H. Brand 2 up and 1.
Ian Munro beat F. J. Fowkes 5 up and 4.
R. G. Waterhouse beat D. W. Watson 4 up and 2.
Capt. G. H. Stevenson beat J. S. MacEachran 4 up and 2.
J. G. Melrose beat E. R. de Saram 3 up and 2.
R. de Saram beat A. R. Aitken 3 up and 2.

Third Round—

G. Hazelrigg beat R. J. Elliott 5 up and 3.
Ian Munro beat R. de Saram 3 up and 2.
R. G. Waterhouse beat Captain Stevenson 7 up and 6.
J. G. Melrose beat G. W. Johnson 1 up.

Semi-final—

J. G. Melrose beat G. Hazelrigg 2 up and 1.
Ian Munro beat R. G. Waterhouse 4 up and 3.

Final—

J. G. Melrose beat Ian Munro.

Melrose beat F. de Saram in the first round after an exciting match, the game being taken to the last green ; he then accounted for E. R. de Saram by 3 up and 2. In the third round he met G. W. Johnson and a fine struggle was witnessed, Melrose winning on the 18th green by a hole. Hazelrigg also gave him a good game in the semi-final. A. R. Aitken, who was runner up last year, had been expected to give a good display and his defeat by R. de Saram came as something of a surprise. Aitken holds the best record in the competition, having played for Scotland against England in 1906, 1907, and 1908, and got into the semi-finals of the Amateur Championship in 1905 at Prestwick and in the last eight of the Championship in 1901. In 1908 he won the Championship of the South of Ireland and annexed the English Medal in 1902, 1905, and 1909. In 1901 he won the St. Andrew's Cross, and beside this many other prizes at important meets. The last occasion on which he competed in the British Amateur Championship was in 1910, when he got into the third round and was beaten by Captain Prideaux-Burne at the 20th hole. Ian Munro, the runner-up this year, is another player with a good home reputation. He played in the English Amateur Championship last year at Prestwick, and two years ago won the North of Scotland Championship at Lossiemouth.

Joe Jeannette, the well-known coloured heavy weight boxer, met Joe Rodel, the South African, at Plymouth the week before the last mail left. Rodel was expected to put up a good show and he came right up to expectations for Jeannette had to go all out before he could win. The South African had a shade on the first two rounds. In the third session Jeannette floored his opponent who took the count till 8 and was then up and finished the round briskly. There was little to chose between them in the fourth and fifth, Rodel having, if anything, the better of a very warm affair. In the 6th and 7th Jeannette did all he could, but Rodel's display was capital and he looked like lasting out the 15 rounds. He showed even improved form in the 8th meeting and many thought he might win. Then Jeannette realised he had to do his best and fighting at the top of his form, he began to wear down his opponent who nevertheless continued to join in the exchanges during the 9th and 10th round. Rodel went to the boards twice in the 11th round and was eventually counted out in 12th bout.

The match between Jim Flynn and Jack Johnson has been definitely fixed to take place at East Las Vegas, New Mexico, on the 4th July. Flynn thinks he will whip the coloured man but the general opinion seems to be that Flynn will have to be at his very best and Johnson will have to be far below his previous form for Flynn to annex the Championship.

Bombardier Wells has arrived in the States and has made a very favourable impression there. There is talk of a match with Al. Palzer and several other good men are willing to give him a trial, so the trip should be a profitable one but the Ganks seem to think that a match between Johnson and Wells is out of the question.

Fred Welsh, erstwhile light weight champion of England, has just beaten a very fair class man in John Duffy in the States. It is said that Welsh will go back to England in the course of the summer to fix up a match with Matt Wells and try to regain the Lonsdale Belt.

The English Welter Weight Championship and Lord Lonsdale's Belt have just been won by Johnny Summers. At the National Sporting Club on Monday night he met Arthur Evernden and knocked him out in the thirteenth round.

Some interesting figures regarding the quantity of food consumed by the animals at the Zoo are given in the Society's report. A full-grown elephant eats about a couple of hundredweight of hay and straw per day. The fish account for the year includes 16,965lb. of herrings, 61,584lb. of whiting, and 1,585 pints of shrimps. The shrimps are mostly for the flamingoes. The herrings and whitings are mainly for the seals and sea-lions, the cormorants, gulls, and other fish-eating birds. The king penguin devours twelve, eighteen, or twenty herrings in a day, and the elephant-seal in a single day disposes of fifty pounds of fish, or 18,000lb. of fish in a year. In 1910 the Society paid £72 for fresh-water fish and £373 for sea-fish; and in 1911, with more otters to feed, the fresh-water fish came to £118, and the sea-fish, chiefly because of the elephant-seal, to £494. The Zoo paid last year for horses £491, as compared with £301 in 1910; goats cost £106. The rise in the horse bill was due to "the motors and Germany." Horses are getting scarcer, and the Germans want all they can get for sausages and beef products. Fowl-heads for the foxes cost last year £105, which purchased 50,544—that is, about a halfpenny each. The fruit bill comes to £523, and includes 11,982 oranges, which are mostly eaten by birds; 424 lemons, to make lemonade for the apes; 252lb. of currants, mostly for monkeys; and 96lb. of figs for small mammals like kinkajous. Three melons went to the insect house and 56lb. of pears for the serows. The largest entry of all is 113,829 bananas, and of these 300 per week go to the monkey-house alone.

Fifteen couples of hounds from Wilton's kennels at Hamwell arrived in the S.S. Olympia on Monday, 10th instant. They were met by the master, Colonel Logan-Home, who took them straight up to Poona. In spite of being delayed for ten days, owing to strikes at home, and of a hot passage through the Red Sea they landed in splendid condition and are now located at Wanowrie together with the 12½ couples purchased from the Bombay hunt at the end of the season. The latter are also looking very well indeed having been under the watchful eye of Lieutenant T. Whaley (Royal Warwickshires) during the hot weather, assisted by Private Wars (L. N. Lancs) who is doing duty as kennel Huntsman. If the weather conditions are favourable there will probably be some bye days towards the end of this month and at the beginning of July. The opening meet will be held at Ganeshkhind on Thursday, 11th July. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Clarke will be "At Home" to subscribers to the hunt, at breakfast afterwards. The Hon'ble Mr. G. S. Curtis, C.S.I., I.C.S., is President, Colonel Logan-Home, 26th Light Cavalry, will again carry the horn and has the assistance of Lieutenant T. Whaley (Royal Warwickshires), Lieutenant H. A. B. Johnson (26th Light Cavalry), and Captain Cassim Shah, A.-D.-C., as whips, while the duties of Honorary Secretary are being undertaken by Captain T. C. Lucas, R.A.M.C.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—"Since the Gymkhana cricket ground was closed to all and every other form of outdoor sport several years ago, the general public of the station have been deprived the privilege of witnessing any of the Skittle Gymkhanas which have been held occasionally in recent years, owing to the ground on which the sports were held being so far away from the more central parts of the town. The sports advertised for Tuesday (11th instant) were to have been held in another outlandish locality, but at the last moment it was decided to have them on the parade maidan and, as might have been expected, there was a great crowd out to witness the tamasha. Members of the Gymkhana with their families attended in large numbers and 'rank outsiders' came in strong force. The weather was responsible, perhaps, for keeping away a few people, as shortly before the hour fixed for the opening of the programme the wind began to blow big guns and a heavy drizzle lasting for nearly half an hour drove all the ladies under canvas for the time being ; but this did not interfere with the programme being carried through successfully, a matter on which Captain Heathcote, 2nd Q.O. Cameron Highlanders, who steered the show, is to be warmly congratulated. Major Marshall, R.E., made an eminently satisfactory judge and Mrs. Marshall had the honour of presenting the prizes to the successful competitors at the close of the programme.

"There were some very novel and interesting events on the card and some of them of a highly amusing kind too, which raised the spirits of everybody on the ground. Entries were unusually large and, as usual, there were a good many scratchings too ; but there was a brave show of competitors in each event.

"The first item was a Pigsticking event, in which a mounted man went around towing a bladder, which represented the pig, and competitors armed with spears, went for the imaginary pig. After three heats the following were left in : Captain Watson and Paget Tomlinson, 7th (Q.O.) Hussars, and Mr. J. C. Wickham, R.E. In the final Wickham got first spear, Paget Tomlinson came next and Watson third. Next came a Sketching Competition for which quite two dozen couples entered. Ladies had to draw on a blackboard an object mentioned in a sealed cover which was given them by their partners ; the men had to imagine and write down a name for the object the sketch was supposed to represent, ride round a course of about 100 yards and hand in results to judge. If he had not got quite the right names, he could ride back to the board (which many of them did) guess again, do the circular course over and hand in his second effort to the judge. The fair artists were fairly amazed at the task set them, which was to draw a scorpion, an onion, or a lump of coal ; while it was no easy task for the men to imagine and reduce to writing what the sketches were intended for. For instance, how could he think of a scorpion when something like a lobster was staring at him from the board, or yet imagine that his partner had really drawn a fine turnip instead of a spring onion ; or still more puzzling was it to differentiate between a cube, a square or an elongated oval and a 'lump' of coal. However, the competitors and all those who got near enough to see the efforts of both artists in each case had their fill of fun. The most creditable drawings were from the chalk of Mrs. F. D. Irvine, her companion, Mr. Wickham, R.E., giving them the proper names which secured for them the judge's verdict.

"A Walking Race (mounted) followed, in which the penalty for a horse or pony breaking into a trot, was to be stopped, turned once round completely and then allowed to continue and finish. Colonel Poore, 7th Hussars, won this easily, his mount making no blunders ; Mr. Ramsay, R.H.A., second and Mr. Gordon, R.F.A., third.

"Tilting at the ring, from carriages, gentlemen to drive and ladies to take rings en route, competitors allowing their horses to walk, disqualified. Ties had to be run off and Colonel and Lady Flora Poore came out winners, Mr. Wickham and Mrs. McEwen getting second place. In the Flag Race, competitors had to ride over four flights of hurdles and pick up flags stuck in the ground half way between hurdles ; first past post with all the flags to win. Three heats were run off and the finals gave following results :—(1) Captain T. H. Lumsden, Cameron Highlanders ; (2) Mr. D. V. Creagh, 7th (Q.O.) Hussars ; (3) Mr. J. C. Wickham, R.E. The last competition was a Lime and Bucket Race ; ladies stood in a line, each with a supply of a dozen limes which they threw, singly, at their gentlemen partners as they rode past, the riders had to catch the limes and going on a distance dropped them into buckets. This performance required some skill on the part of both the lady and gentleman and proved a most exciting event ; the winners ultimately turned up in Mrs. Eddowes and Mr. Guthrie.

"The Coronation Football Tournament was brought to a successful close on Monday afternoon, when the final match was played between the Mars Eleven and the Champion "B" team, the former winning by 2 goals to nil. There will be a public presentation of the challenge trophy and medals later on."

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 31st May 1912.

We are now beginning to look back on our Whitsun holiday as one of those it would be impossible to beat, and though we are back again in harness we are still revelling in the gay weather which was vouchsafed for the occasion ; it has followed us holiday-makers to the limit of our flight—and beyond. Those of us who, like myself, went far afield, came home reluctantly : it is hard in these not over cheerful isles to come home to work while the sun is still ready to play with us ; a gentle rain should weep sympathetically when the hour comes to pack and go.

On Whit Monday Londoners flocked to the sea and the country in thousands, and those who took their pleasure nearer home made for the parks or took advantage of the lengthy tram and motor-omnibus rides to the outskirts of the metropolis. Golfers were a feature of every rural landscape, and cyclists sped far and fast along the roads.

The attractions of the two exhibitions—the Latin-British at the White City and Shakespeare's England at Earl's Court—drew large crowds. Hampton Court, with its park and gardens, was visited by 150,000 people, and the river was studded with craft all day. Kew Gardens attracted 167,000 visitors and the Aexandra Palace 35,000.

Railway companies report heavy traffic to the seaside and country resorts. Epping Forest bookings by the Great Eastern Railway accounted for 63,893 holiday-makers, while up to 2 P.M. seventeen special trains left Liverpool Street for Southend. The Tilbury and allied lines took 49,500 passengers to the same popular resort.

Trains to the east and south coasts were also well filled, and many holiday-makers spent the day on the bracing Surrey hills.

So many people visited Cleethorpes that an ice-cream famine set in early in the afternoon.

Just as we were starting on our holiday the ha'penny rags announced a national strike of transport workers, with prospects of idle docks, no trains and no food for us on our return. Those loathsome creatures Ben Tillett and Gosling were supposed to be on the verge of holding up the British nation. It appears to me that this will have to be recorded as "The Strike that failed," for what with train loads of imported non-union workers and an army of police to protect them, and the uncompromising front taken up by the employers who are actually being supported by Government, at the moment of going to post with these notes, it would seem that the "great conspiracy" is likely to be swiftly ended.

The wild threats of the egregious Tillett and Gosling were mere bombast. They swore to hold up food and to hold up the Government. They could do neither one nor the other. The men have got no strike pay and their unions have no money. The talk of national and international strikes is moonshine. With proper protection by police and soldiers, if need be, the peace can be kept and the necessary work of the Port can be carried on, despite the impudent claims of would-be dictators and violent agitators. This strike was a colossal blunder by the idiots who hoped thus to advance the ruinous cause of syndicalism. It has been a fiasco.

So far as the public are concerned there has never been the least sympathy with the strike. Unquestionably the men have certain just grievances, which were admitted in Sir Edward Clarke's thoroughly impartial report. But the agreement wantonly broken by this strike made precise arrangements for the settlement of such grievances, and the reference to the Board of Trade, which Tillett and Gosling wilfully ignored, was designed to meet these cases. The only result of the strike will be to drive the employers into an inflexible attitude and to make worse in all ways the case of the men.

Quite the greatest event of last week was the epicures' banquet at the Hotel Cecil, where fraises Sarah Bernhardt were tasted for the first time. The eminent divine who once said that doubtless God could have made a better fruit than the strawberry, but that doubtless God never did, lived in a simple age, before Escoffier was born and the strawberry, to please the epicurean palate, had to have the taste of pine-apple and orange as well as its own flavour. Nature's efforts are crude and unsatisfactory beside those of the modern chef, who not only improves upon her sweetest flavours but also produces them with "sunset effects." In this way strawberries become "a sunset of cream and amber clouds, with the faint rose-colour of the fruit splashed across the horizon." It is gratifying to know that the London Press rose to the occasion. The spectacle of the reporters smacking their lips over these strawberry sunsets must have been worthy of a great painter. Words of rapturous appreciation flew into their paragraphs. They told of the "elusive minor note of tartness that was a counterpoint to the melodious sweetness of the dish." If a reporter can write thus poetically about strawberries and cream, what outburst of eloquence could he not indulge in over the fragrant steak and onions or the gelatinous cowheel? Tripe would stir him to a fine ecstasy, and pickled cockles would stimulate his muse to epic grandeur.

The Great White City at Shepherd's Bush, the fame of which has travelled the wide world over, has once more opened its doors, and it has much to commend it to the seeker of pleasure, of restful or exhilarating recreation, of mental stimulus or mental contemplation. It is another pronounced triumph for Mr. Imre Kiralfy, who has given in the Latin-British Exhibition, formally opened by H.R.H. Princess Alexander of Teck, further proof of his ability as an organiser and designer, and of his daring powers of conception. He accomplishes much because he thinks largely, and the verdict passed on Saturday upon the latest production of his conceptive genius was one of unqualified admiration.

The Latin-British Exhibition is unique in many respects, and it will be a surprise and reproach to the country, and particularly the teeming millions of the Metropolis, if it fails to attract daily, until the doors are closed in the late autumn, scores of thousands of visitors.

For the first time at such an exhibition singers and musicians have been brought from all the Latin countries, and they perform in each of the sections devoted to their respective countries. Thus in the Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese sections visitors have the pleasure of listening to typical songs and choruses rendered by some of the best available talent of those countries. The same plan, moreover, has been adopted with regard to the British section, and here England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales each have their representatives, not only in artistic productions but in music. Then, again, the musical programme arranged is of the most ambitious character. Twenty military bands, including the famous Grenadier Guards, under Lieutenant Williams, M.V.O., Mus. Doc, Oxon, have been engaged.

Much space would be required to deal adequately with the many excellencies of the various sections; the will must be taken for the deed.

Drury Lane without its autumn melodrama seems almost as great a revolution as a music-hall minus its low comedian.

Mr. Arthur Collins has, however, decided to make a bold experiment, and in place of the usual thrills provided by Messrs. Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, Drury Lane is to blossom forth with an autumn morality play with the title "Everywoman." "Everywoman" has run for a year in America with unwavering success.

The principal characters, in addition to Everywoman, are her friends and attendants, Youth, Beauty, Modesty, and Conscience, while the principal male character is Nobody. Wealth, Time, King Love, all assist in the working out of Everywoman's life story.

Although "Everywoman" is modelled after the fashion of the ancient morality plays of the fifteenth century, it is modern as regards characterisation, environment, and action.

The play was the life-work of Mr. Walter Browne, the son of Dr. George Browne, who was twice Lord Mayor of York. He spent years working out the theme, and more years showing it to managers who had not the courage to produce it.

At last he succeeded. It was accepted, and on the night of its production, the night its author had dreamed of for many years, Mr. Browne died a few moments before the curtain went up on his masterpiece.

The third performance of Sir Herbert Tree's Shakespearean Festival was "King Henry VIII.," which was given last Wednesday night, and was received with as much applause as either of its predecessors. Sir Herbert was assisted by Miss Violet Vanbrugh and Mr. Arthur Bourchier, who left "Proper Peter" to play the less proper King Harry. And one hastens immediately to mention what everyone will be anxious to know, that the loss of his fine natural beard in no way affected the vigor and excellence of Mr. Bourchier's performance. His rich comedy was as rich as ever in a false beard. Indeed, the whole production was as good as ever it was, bearing few signs, except an occasional lapse of memory, that it was one of a series of revivals—and for this much credit is due to the management of Sir Herbert Tree. "King Henry VIII." is, of course, one of the most gorgeous of his productions, and at the close of the first act, where the susceptible king woos Anne at the Cardinal's party one of the most festive. Last Wednesday night he enjoyed playing the great Cardinal as much as ever, fingering his orange as only a Cardinal could. Miss Laura Cowie, too, was the same sprightly Anne Bullen and Miss Violet Vanbrugh the dignified, sad Queen that everyone appreciated so highly before. Mr. Basil Gill spoke Buckingham's great scene at Traitors' Gate with much technical skill, but he somehow managed to suggest the manner of a tired curate rather than that of a great nobleman in the presence of death, and in consequence the pathos of the scene was considerably diminished.

Mr. George Edwardes has scored another enormous success with his latest production, "Autumn Manœuvres," which was given for the first time on Saturday evening. Directly those Twelfth Hussars came marching on, singing a swinging chorus, there was little doubt of it; and there was no doubt at all from the moment little Captain Withers marched his Territorials on and began vainly trying to get his men dismissed. Heaven only knows what he would have done without the help of that gruff Sergeant-Major Sykes! As it was, he got himself and his men wound up in a desperate tangle. The fact is, he was never meant for a soldier, and he would never have been a soldier, only Grandma "has a will of her own and I want to get into it." He confided all about Grandma and the grocery to the dashing officers of the Twelfth, who found his confidences vastly amusing, and made him recite "The Death of Desdemona," by William Shakespeare, which Mr. Huntley Wright did beautifully with a nice Lancashire accent, doubling the parts of Othello and Desdemona most effectively. The play amply deserves the huge success it will certainly gain, if only for providing, as it does, Mr. Huntley Wright with a perfect part. He is delicious as the dear little grocer in khaki, whether he is trying to drill his men or to shake hands with his brother-officer Captain Falconer, of those gorgeous Twelfth Hussars, or owning up his delinquency to the Major-General or dancing with Lady Larkins.

But there is more than Mr. Huntley Wright to make the play, though Captain Withers alone (or, at any rate, with Miss Gracie Leigh) is almost good enough to make the fortune of any play by himself, as at cricket a man like F. R. Foster can make a side. There is a capital story and many taking songs. For fortune quarters Captain Falconer, the officer in command of the Twelfth Hussars, at Ambermere, his old place, now in possession of Miss Alix Luttrell, to whom Captain Falconer was once betrothed. But the engagement was broken off by the parents, and he is now too proud to cross her threshold. His heart has been too deeply wounded. "But if you get me there, I'll stay" he scornfully says, "and dance with you and flirt." And Miss Alix, of course, succeeds in doing so, and, with the help of little Captain Withers and Miss June Pomeroy, wins him back to kindness. It is all very gallant and gay, and the last act is the gayest of the three, which speaks well for Mr. Henry Hamilton's adaptation.

Mr. Robert Evett played Captain Falconer in the most approved style. There is that about his personality which dares you not to be fascinated by the hero he is playing. He had some good songs to sing, and sang them with much feeling. Miss Daisy Elliston made a most engaging little June Pomeroy, and she sang the song in which June coaxes her cross military papa and the song in which she describes the kind of man she intends to marry very prettily and with plenty of spirit. Miss Phyllis Le Grand played Alix, the heroine. She affects that strange, cooing pronunciation of her vowels which is characteristic of the very best musical comedy, and which seems to express a slight disdain for those poor creatures who only speak in a natural voice. At any rate, it made one all the more thankful for direct, jolly Miss Gracie Leigh, with her captivating vitality and cleverness. It was disappointing that Miss Hilda Antony had so little to do. Remembering her delicious performance of Venus in the Offenbach opera, one would have liked to see her to better advantage. Mr. Lionel Mackinder, too, had no chance of showing the gaiety and life he put into his performance of Pluto. Both are far finer artists than they had any opportunity of proving on Saturday night. Still, Mr. Huntley Wright has never had such an admirable part, and the whole play, from start to finish, went with the swing and gusto that Mr. George Edwardes knows how to get into his productions better than any living manager.

A TIGER SHOOT.

There is no episode in the life of a sportsman of more thrilling adventure or which he recalls to memory with more vivid interest and pleasurable delight than the occasion when he bagged his first tiger: and if it happens that the wounded beast had been followed and killed, his cup of pride and happiness is indeed full. Previous to the great event in a generally monotonous life, when a tiger was lying dead at my feet, I had had glimpse of two tigers and heard one or two roars at night while encamped in the jungles. In the first instance, I sat over the kill of an old buffalo which a tiger had found straying about and slaughtered. The machan had been tied some distance from the soil-smelling carcase on a tree, which age and a stiff-back prevented me from climbing, and to suit me the machan was lowered. As the sun gradually sank on the horizon, tinting the hillsides and the clouds, which were reflected in the limpid river flowing close by, the nocturnal animals crept out one by one from their hiding places. I was amused by the antics of a hyena which approached the kill but would not touch it, suspicion and discretion triumphing over hunger and temptation. It was not until the shadows of evening had fallen over hill, nullah and river that I spied an animal with gleaming sides moving among the bushes near the kill.

In shifting my position to obtain a clear view of the tiger, my insecure machan swung round and bumped against the tree trunk. The tiger heard the sound, located it, sat on his haunches and looked up. I remained quite still hoping for a broad-side shot; as in the failing light shooting, or at least, hitting, was extremely problematical. But the tiger did not wait, and with a woof he was off. I railed at my luck and bad arrangements, but stayed on in the machan in the hope that the tiger might return. In a short time, I was made aware of some animal scrambling up the sloping trunk of the tree below me, the upright branch to which the machan was slung being about six feet from the trunk. I presently heard something scratching the webbling of my machan and hastily drew my feet up. The scratching ceased, and the crunching of leaves below told me of the retreat of some animal. What this animal was I have never been able to determine; but the close proximity of the tiger made the circumstance remarkably thrilling and interesting. As darkness had now set in, I signalled to my men and went regretfully back to camp.

The second instance in which I saw a tiger was when I sat over a live buffalo. The "buff" was tied in a sandy river bed which was fringed by a few trees one of which contained my machan and behind was a high bank practically over-looking the machan. The moon was not due to rise till after midnight, and though I heard some animal moving under the machan, I could see nothing and had to wait in all patience for the orb of night to illuminate the surroundings. Eventually when there was light enough, I noticed that the "buff" was lying down safe and well; and tired of my lonely vigil I was glad to look about me and view the river and jungle in the soft moonlight. I had been facing the "buff" and on turning round to gaze at the bank behind I spotted an animal sitting up and showing a white shirt front. Before I had quite made up my mind what the animal was, it moved and proved to be a tiger and was lost among the brushwood. It seemed to me peculiarly comical that the tiger, not liking my tied-up bait, had been leisurely watching me in the machan from the hill behind.

to return to my story. On a hot day in 1911 when I arrived at a shooting block had been reserved for me, I was informed that ight previous a tiger had killed three buffaloes had strayed in the jungle. On proceeding e spot, I found one "buff" with its neck en. The second was also dead, but the neck was broken, and the obtruding bone with flesh anging from it in a loop, indicated the ineffectual though ghastly efforts of the tiger to put its victim out of pain. This buffalo was found alive next morning, but it mercifully died during the course of the day. I am convinced that the theory set forth in Mr. Hick's valuable book on Shikar that the tiger breaks its victim's neck by throwing the animal heavily to the ground is the practical method by which the tiger kills his prey. The third buffalo was killed further away and being young and succulent was partially eaten. Out of pure wantonness or brute force the tiger had killed these three buffaloes and had partially devoured only one of them; and as the sequel will show, he did not return the following night to any of these kills. I had a machan tied up which commanded two of the untouched carcases and went back to camp.

Early in the afternoon, I left my tent and had covered only a couple out of the four miles to the machan, when I heard the growl of the tiger in the distance, indicating that he was coming in my direction and away from his "kills" of the previous night. Here was an unlooked for complication and had I reached the spot where I now came to a dead stop only fifteen minutes earlier than I actually did, I should have moved onwards and come face to face with the tiger on the top of a bank. A wide nullah now divided us and he must show himself if he came by the path to my bank. The country around consisted of low hills rising suddenly from the plains, with ridges running down to the river's edge and the intervening spaces were intersected by deep nullahs. I sat in the long grass and waited developments and eventually the tiger appeared on the opposite bank and walked slowly down the slope to the nullah. I could see him clearly, but he was out of practicable range of my gun. I was greatly relieved to find that the tiger was not coming in my direction and as I could not have stalked him without being seen, and having discovered where I could put my hand on him next day! I let him go for the time being and returned to my tent. As the moon made the night brilliantly bright, I decided to sit in a machan half a mile beyond my tent and hoped I might bag some animal straying down the path which my machan commanded; and it turned out to be a singular piece of luck that within a few hours, the tiger which I had refrained from firing at in the afternoon should eventually wander past my tent and appear near my machan!

I had no bait tied up and till 11 o'clock I saw nothing and only heard sambur moving in the jungle. Suddenly, the stillness was broken by a sambur's warning cry, which was repeated frequently, and was followed by the moan of a tiger, which seemed to be moving in my direction. These sounds came nearer and nearer and suddenly the tiger came into view round a bend of the path and I fired at once. Like a flash the tiger, which was on a lower level than the ground round me, sprang up the incline and was lying hidden in bushes not ten yards from me. Seeing something move, I fired again and there was an answering growl. I could hear the tiger dragging himself slowly through the jungle while monkeys chattered and sambur belled. Waiting an hour, I summoned my men and went to bed.

Next morning, I picked up the trail of blood and followed it some distance to rising ground and there lost it in grass and bushes. I left my coolies to search for tracks and returned to camp for a late breakfast. The coolies eventually came back stating that they could find no trace of the tiger and had searched the whole ground for over a mile. This later on proved to be a fabricated story, as a nullah in the vicinity had not been looked into and it was ascertained that the tiger had been lying there in a pool of blood. The ground in which the wounded tiger had taken refuge held no water and in whichever direction he travelled in search of water, he was bound to leave tracks behind him. For two days, no trace of the tiger could be found, but on the third day, pug marks, blood, and a dragging leg showed where the poor beast had returned in the direction of the nullah where I had first seen him and which held water. The tracks, however, were lost in grass and the search had to be abandoned for the day. Next morning, I made direct for the nullah and in the sandy bed found pugs and blood. One trail led down the nullah and another up a steep bank. As it seemed probable that the tiger would be found near water, I went cautiously down the nullah with a few coolies and sent some men to follow the other track. Not meeting the tiger in the nullah, I worked round the bank where the ones had gone. It appeared that while following the blood trail up the bank, these coolies had suddenly come upon the tiger lying in a small nullah. One man hastily climbed a tree, another dashed for safety into a thorny bush and the third ran to warn me. None of the coolies had watched the tiger's movements after he was disturbed and they could only indicate in a general way the direction the beast had taken. It was risky work to follow him through the brushwood and long grass, but the coolies said the animal was badly wounded and walked slowly, and believing that I could get in an easy shot, I followed in the tiger's wake accompanied by one courageous coolie. I moved on for about two hundred yards, until I came to an open space in the jungle where chattering monkeys had taken refuge in a tree and some frightened sambur were standing with eyes full of interest and alarm. I realised I had overwalked the tiger and must search for him by the way I had come. As my coolies had now turned up, we spread out in skirmishing order, retraced our steps and minutely examined the intersecting nullahs in front. We had not proceeded far in line when one of the men called me: I climbed to his place and he pointed to a bush in a small nullah. I spotted a brown body under the bush, not twenty yards away, and waited to identify the particular part of the beast's body showing. The tiger had evidently heard our voices and put his head out and looked at us: I killed him at once with a shot through the brain. I have felt thankful ever since that I had used in my ball and shot gun a solid spherical bullet which had enabled me to drill a hole in the tiger's skull; and sportsman cannot be too often reminded of the serious risks they run in shooting or following up wounded and dangerous animals with light, or hollow, or sectional bullets which give no penetration but "set-up" on touching a bone. I found the tiger quite dead, with head lying between his fore-paws and his limbs and muscles forced back by the blow which had killed him while he was still clinging to the sloping ground. The tiger was a fine specimen of over nine feet two inches. My first bullet must have caught him as he moved and broke a thigh, penetrating to the opposite leg and my second had grazed his back. The coolies were greatly excited over the dead beast and the tiger was taken in triumph to the camp.

FISHING IN TASMANIA.

II.

My first article was confined to Tasmanian Fishing generally and to its Lakes in particular. I now pass on to its rivers and streams.

I must confess to a slight feeling of disappointment when I look over my diary, at the same time I must admit that my experience of Tasmanian rivers after ten weeks spent in the country can only be of the bowing acquaintance description.

I fished in ten different rivers,—a glance at the map will show this is only a small percentage in this land of streams—at the same time I fished systematically and hard and perhaps as my bag of river trout runs into three figures I expected too much.

The river fishing is spoilt by three things, generally two and, sometimes, all three are present and existent at the same time.

They are, first, poaching carried on by every man, woman and child in the parish. Second, the introduction by pools (I can use no other term) into trout streams of coarse fish such as black fish and English perch. Third, the overgrown condition of the banks of most rivers.

Unfortunately each of these three are unpreventable and unalterable.

The Fisheries Association is a non-Government Department and can only bring weight to bear on Government by reason of the personal influence of the various members.

The Government of Tasmania, like all the Australasian Colonies, is essentially Labour; it is therefore easy to see that in the present trend of political opinion any wholesale attempt at putting down poaching or enforcing the taking out of licenses would be impossible.

Besides which the Association is not wealthy enough to employ a sufficiency of watchers. Near the villages every boy and girl worms the pools nearly every evening and there is none to say them nay, and I had myself on several occasions the pleasure of destroying night lines I came across.

Regarding coarse, predacious fish at the town of Longford I fished the South Esk, and while I rarely rose a trout, the perch were so troublesome that I nearly always had one or so rising at me; they averaged some three or four ounces so it will be easily what a nuisance they were and I eventually chucked it. Again the River Clyde near Bothwell I found infested with black fish to the utter driving out of trout, yet this river up to three years ago was, I was told, one of the best trout streams in the island.

In both cases these coarse fish had been introduced by men under the impression that they were improving the fishing.

Lastly my third reason, the condition of the banks; in all the ten rivers I fished and in several others I saw but did not fish, I only met one that was fishable from the banks, all the rest had to be waded and one or two had giant willows growing on either bank and nearly meeting overhead to such an extent as to almost prevent the casting of a fly even where wading.

—essential to good sport.
The most accurate and reliable of cartridges may not always suffice to ensure good sport, but good sport is out of the question without them.
Eley Cartridges do all that the best cartridges can do in this direction, with a trustworthiness which has won for them a measure of success greater probably than any other cartridges in the world.
Two 'Eley Loaded' Cartridges:
Eley 'Acme' A bright orange 2-inch deep-shell Cartridge, loaded with Eley (42-gr.) Smokeless Powder.
Eley 'Elold' A light maroon Cartridge. Loaded with Eley (33-gr.) Smokeless. Light recoil; absolutely waterproof.
The above, and other Eley Specialities, may be obtained from Gunmakers and Dealers in Ammunition, everywhere.

This state of things of course conduces to worm, grasshopper, and other poaching means of killing trout and I came to the conclusion that about 95 per cent. of the trout killed in Tasmanian streams by local fishermen—I cannot say sportsmen—are caught by lures other than the artificial fly.

In spite of all this I had much good fishing and many nice baskets, though of course the average weight did not approach that of the lakes.

I found the Tasmanian trout just as smart and wary as their home congenors, in fact they seemed to me if anything to come on and go off feeding even more capriciously, thus I can recall to mind on several occasions fishing for hours with no result when suddenly on they came and I would land several, then down they would go again and not a move for hours: were they really unsophisticated I think they would hardly follow the habits of their home ancestors so closely.

Some of the big rivers are very disappointing, take for instance the Derwent and the Huon in the south, more ideal rivers for salmon and large trout I have never seen anywhere, yet what is actually the case. I went to New Norfolk on the Derwent and found no boat available and the hotel proprietor said no trout had been killed for some years. The fishing in the Huon is so uncertain that it is almost waste of time for the tourist angler to go there, though some of its tributaries are, I heard, good.

It would be easy for me to give a list of the streams I found worth wetting a fly in, but as they vary so much from season to season I hardly think it would be of much value, I would merely advise the intending fisherman not to neglect Wattle Corner near Launceston, the Russell Falls river near Hobart and Brumby's Creek near Crecy, for the rest he had better depend on information obtained on the spot from the Tourist Association at the above two towns and also from Messrs. Allan and Slater, tackle sellers of Launceston, and Messrs. Brown and Company, tackle sellers of Hobart.

The heads of both these firms are practical anglers and the best of sportsmen and go out of their way to help one: they are in constant touch with fishermen throughout the island so their information is up to date.

This now brings me by a natural sequence to the subject of gear required.

I was so ignorant of what I was going to catch and partly led astray by the incorrect use of the word salmon in tourist pamphlets that I took not only all my kit for trout but also all my mahseer tackle.

I took a sixteen foot salmon fly rod and a powerful eleven foot Murdock spinning rod with reels and lines to match: all were so much useless lumber.

I also had an eleven and a twelve foot steel centre, split cane fly rod with short spinning tops, also a ten foot green heart fly rod, and these three filled the bill perfectly.

In addition I would advise a trout spinning rod, it would be perfect for spinning from a boat on the lakes where most of the fishing is done with a Devon or Natural minnow: I felt the want of one frequently in spite of the spinning tops to my fly rods.

Little comment is required on the subject of lines I found eighty yards ample.

Personal taste varies slightly more in the matter of reels. I am now very glad I got out one of Hardy's New Silex No 2 casting reels; a few years ago I bought one of his earlier patterns and did not care for it, but his No. 2 has been a revelation to me and also I fancy to a good many Tasmanian fishermen, who saw the work it is capable of.

I killed some seventy heavy trout from two to nine pounds with it so I think I may say I gave it a fair trial. The mem-sahib got into it within two days, although she had never used a casting reel in her life before. One can use them just as well for fly as for bait casting so I intend in future to keep no other and discard the old patterns. Tasmania does not boast of any particular fancy flies, the old time ones cannot be beaten, I found the following the most killing: Coch-a-Bonda Zulu, March Brown, Red Tag, Alexandra, Red Governor, with the Coachman for the evening, these several varieties are ample; size is more important than anything else. Sizes No 10 and 12 Limericks are right, bigger than that I do not recommend. Flies should have full hackles slightly more so than home ones, home fly-makers are a little wanting in this matter, but it probably only wants mentioning when ordering to be put right.

Waders are a necessity and both landing net and gaff should have handles sufficiently long to act as a third leg when wading.

As the trout in the lakes take artificial baits more freely than flies a supply of the former are necessary; black appears the favourite colour.

For great lake fishing where flies are absolutely useless, two and a quarter inch or two and a half inch Pioneer Devons are just the right weight for casting against the heavy winds that frequently prevail there.

Hardy's Aluminium Pennell Minnows, two inch long, I found perfect in weight for using when casting out of a boat, they did not strain my fly rods and they spin better than most on account of their large fins.

I killed many rainbow trout on Hardy's 1909 fly minnows two inch and two and a half inch. Some of these should be included.

The Tasmanian Sana eel spinner can be obtained locally at any tackle shop, it is no more killing than the ones I have mentioned and is much more expensive and fragile, indeed I may say here that any tackle bought locally comes very expensive.

I always have my phantoms mounted on wire, it lasts practically for ever and can give gut many points in these out-of-the-way places.

Except for fly fishing I never use gut, wire traces are much better for all spinning. They are considerably stronger, bulk for bulk, and one can in consequence use finer ones, they are thus much less visible. Gut will not keep over a single season in this country, whereas if you have half a dozen wire ones over from an expedition you can lay them aside for years and they will be just as good as ever.

Another point in favour of wire is that in the mounts on Devon minnows, etc, the hooks are soldered on whereas in gut mounts they are merely whipped on, the difference in results after lying by for a few months in this climate are too evident to further expatiate on.

I was surprised to notice that all Australasian anglers used gut and that few if any had ever heard of wire.

A few remarks on the expenses of a trip to Tasmania will, I think, be of interest.

All steamship companies running from Colombo to Australia issue a cheap seventy-five day ticket.

In my case a request to extend this to ninety days met with a ready acquiescence, and I expect others would be equally fortunate.

A trip to Tasmania is cheaper than one home. A dinner jacket and fishing clothes is almost all one requires, a wardrobe that would not carry one far in Great Britain.

The average hotel in Tasmania outside Hobart and Launceston charge six shillings a day: the visitor is not worried for tips. A railway porter thanks you for a threepenny piece, the hotel waitress accepts with a smile and thanks your florin or half crown, in many cases she is one of the family owning the hotel, when of course a tip is neither expected or given.

I found infinitely less looking for tips throughout the island than at home, the entire absence of all grasping spirit was delightful.

At most fishing and tourist resorts in the old country you have the feeling strongly borne in on you that you are tolerated for the amount they think you will bleed in good coin of the realm generally and in tips more particularly.

In Tasmania you have a sort of feeling that you are welcome because you are a sportsman in search of sport and because you are from the old country.

and when you leave they convey to you in some subtle way along with your bill that they regret your departure and also that the struggle for life necessitates the presentation by them of the little account.

Never once did I get a bill before I asked for it and never were we overcharged.

The food in Tasmanian country hotels is plain, wholesome and excellent, I have never tasted better mutton, milk and bread; that the fruit is top hole goes without saying; a fisherman is done as well and in many cases better than at hotels of a similar class at home.

The long drives to and from the lakes were a somewhat heavy item, but as one only wants to drive out at the commencement of the week or ten days stay and then the return journey at the end, it does not come so very breaking.

At most of the well-known fishing centres there are hotels, some of them erected by the Fisheries Association. The general accommodation compares very favourably with similar places in Great Britain and one meets many pleasant and interesting people. Also one meets with occasional surprises, as I did when I rolled up against a Tasmanian squatter whom I discovered knew as much about Indian and African big game shooting as I did myself, having made several trips to both countries. He was in addition a rifle enthusiast with an eight hundred yard range on his estate, so we found many points in common.

The tourist in Tasmania will be well advised to take no big boxes or trunks with him, as he may occasionally have to handle his baggage himself, also when coaching they are a terrible nuisance.

Rods with three joints are preferable to ones with two. A small tiffin basket with a spirit stove or a tea basket will be found invaluable, the independent colonial has no idea of getting up with the lark to give an Anglo-Indian Sybarite his early morning cup of tea or bring him his shaving water.

We made ourselves independent in this matter and derived much comfort thereby.

Boot polishing apparatus should also be included among one's kit: it is not always necessary but occasionally it comes in handy, particularly brown polish if the fisherman affects brown boots.

Laundry work is a bit of a trouble, in many out-of-the-way places you cannot get it done; whatever white garments are required a fairly good supply is necessary, but it is advisable to cut white things down to a minimum and trust to coloured ones as far as possible; charges are not exhorbitant, in fact much the same as at home.

The Tasmanian summer climate is much like a very good warm summer at home, and one requires a similar wardrobe.

The thermometer varies pretty considerably: in my ten weeks there I saw it register 94° in the shade at midday while a few days after under similar conditions it was down to 45°.

At both Melbourne and Launceston I was agreeably surprised to find no import duties levied on any of our kit or fishing implements, although of the latter I had pretty nearly enough to stock a small shop. They politely accepted my statement that we were only on a visit of a couple of months duration and let us and all our impedimenta pass without examination.

In conclusion I may say I have tried to give an absolutely fair and true description of fishing in Tasmania as it exists to-day.

In reply to the possible question of many who may read what I have written. Is the trip worth making? I reply yes, most certainly it is, whether regarded from the aspect of sport, climate, change or finance and in proof of my statements I say that I hope to repeat my visit at the earliest possible occasion.

The expenses compare favourably with three or four months poodle-faking in any of our fashionable hill stations while there is no comparison as to benefits derived to one's health generally.

The fishing season, lasting as it does from 1st September to 30th April, is hardly as convenient for us Anglo-Indians as it might be, for to many of us leave before the middle of February is difficult, yet if that even can be arranged the fishing will be good, as I was told by several that the last couple of months on the lakes was the best.

I should not forget to mention that the only licence necessary cost ten shillings for a man and five shillings for a lady and covers the whole season.

Shooting hardly comes within the confines of a fishing article, which has already exceeded the length originally intended.

I will therefore confine myself by saying that a gun for duck and quail shooting will add considerably both to one's pleasure and one's menu while a small rifle would possibly enable one to bring away a specimen or two of the Tasmanian deer.

MAHRATTA.

"I don't like the looks of that juror with the big ears and long, pointed chin," the defendant in the case whispered to his lawyer. "He has an ugly mug," said the lawyer; that's a fact." "It isn't altogether his looks, though," confided the client; "he's paying too particular attention to the evidence."

AN OBSERVANT YOUTH.—"If you are a good boy, Willie," said the clergyman, patting the youth on the head, "who knows but that some day you will be President of the United States." "Aah, go wan!" retorted the boy. "What'd I want to be President of the United States fer? I want a steady job when I grow up."

REFEREEING IN CALCUTTA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD.")

SIR,—I have no wish to enter into a controversy on the subject of refereeing at Football matches, but I trust you will have room for a few remarks I wish to make on the matter and which, I trust, your sporting readers will take to heart.

It is an acknowledged fact that refereeing is a most thankless task and were not one exceedingly fond of the game, I am sure we should get very few to undertake it. A remark made by one of the spectators at one of the big matches the other day was typical of the general feeling and this was "I would not be the referee of this match for a pension." At the present time, there are only 15 Europeans and Indians who have been passed by the Calcutta Referees' Association and it is not easy, therefore, to get all the men one wants.

One has seen of late years with what a different spirit the crowds at Home take the decisions of the referee. This spirit has been improving year after year with, I am convinced, a better knowledge of the game. The crowd in Calcutta make the remarks they do, I am sure, mainly through ignorance and, perhaps, in some cases because they have a little money on the result and "the wish is father to the thought" they give loud expression to. The greatest ignorance prevails on three points, namely, "Hands," "Off-side," and "Foul," and if I can make these points somewhat clearer to your sporting readers, I shall have achieved my end.

1. Hands must be intentional or, in the opinion of the referee, the side of the person who gives it must gain some material advantage. I have watched several of the big matches where the ball has struck a man's hand and the referee quite rightly has not given it. The crowd immediately jeer and shout out loud remarks such as "Cannot you see that, referee." "Play the game, referee" when all the time the referee has seen it and has purposely not given it.

2. Off-side—A rule which is not generally known and which causes much abuse of the referee is the following:—

The centre or other forward may be standing off-side and only the goal-keeper in front of him. The wing man takes the ball right down to the goal line and passes back to his centre forward, who shoots at the goal. A very large majority of the crowd think that because he was standing off-side before the referee should give it, whereas no player can be off-side from a back pass from one of his own side.

3. Foul.—One of the principal parts of the referee's business is to put a stop to any rough play. A charge made is very often fair and square, but the man charged is off his balance or on one foot, or perhaps a lighter man, and he falls over: the Calcutta crowd have got into the way of thinking that because he falls it must have been a foul and they generally demand that the referee should give it. I do not think a referee can be too strict when putting a stop to pushing, charging in the back or tripping or any other rough play, but, at the same time, we do not want football to degenerate into a farce. An honest charge is allowed and I have heard the complaint made by men, who ought to know and who have played a good deal at home, that no charging is allowed in Calcutta.

This is not a complaint in any way against the remarks of the teams or against the criticisms in the papers which are, as a rule, just, but against the very large crowd who watch football with great enthusiasm and if this enthusiasms would allow of them leaving matters more to the referee instead of making loud remarks and jeering, I am convinced that refereeing would be more popular than it is.—Yours, etc.,

C. ISMAY.

CRICKET.

AUSTRALIA vs. SOUTH AFRICA.—A most peculiar record was set up in this match at Manchester, when T. J. Matthews twice did the "hat trick" in the Test match. Probably such a performance will never be seen again. Matthews is one of the change bowlers of the Australian team. He is a slow medium leg breaker who has effective command of a fast ball, and he is also a very useful batsman. He will certainly have good reason to remember his first Test match. Put on for the second time when Faulkner looked extremely like saving the follow-on, he got rid of Beaumont, Pegler and Ward with successive deliveries, and so brought the innings to a dramatic end.

Later in the South African second innings, at a time when there promised to be a third day's play, Matthews did the hat trick a second time, his victims on this occasion being Taylor, Schwarz, and Ward. It was largely due to him that the Australians gained so easy a victory by an innings and 88 runs, and one on which they are to be warmly congratulated. From start to finish they were the better side. For the cricket played by the South Africans it would be idle to attempt to make excuses. The majority of them are new to England and to turf wickets. Still we had reason to expect them to do infinitely better than they have done. Score and analysis:—

M.C.C. AUSTRALIAN XI vs. REST OF ENGLAND.—This test trial match ended at Lords, on Saturday, in a popular win for the M.C.C. eleven by an innings and 10 runs. It was a very big victory which the touring team won, and it is not to be minimised by laying stress on the fact that they had the good fortune to bat first. They won because in all three departments of the game they proved themselves the better cricketers. Score:—

GONOSAN (in Capsules) is well tolerated by the digestive apparatus, no complications of any sort occur and its action is most favourable in Cystitis. Checks further development. Approved by the leading Specialists of the day after patient and exhaustive trials. At all dealers and chemists.

FRIEDLANDER testifies that Gonosan exerts a favourable influence in complications. More rapid and satisfactory results are obtained by it than by other preparations of Santal wood oil. Immediate relief and positive cure, sure and certain. At all chemists and dealers.

.405 CALIBER REPEATING RIFLE

THE DREADNOUGHT OF THE JUNGLE.

The .405 Winchester fears nothing alive. It is powerful enough to stop any animal, no matter how big or how dangerous. Its 300-grain, soft-point bullet has a ton and a half of energy, and when it strikes, it mushrooms and delivers the whole of this tremendous energy with terrible shocking effect. There is an immediate collapse—the animal drops as though struck by a thunderbolt. The rifle holds five of these cartridges, which can be fired in rapid succession. Its action is reliable and strong, and its shooting straight and true. As a big-game gun of exceptional power it has no peer.

ROWING.

THE OXFORD SUMMER EIGHTS.

THE summer eights were brought to a most successful termination at Oxford on the 29th instant when New College passed the post Head of the River for the second year in succession. A climbing crew, they should give a splendid account of themselves at Henley. They were never really pressed by Magdalen, who in turn were head and shoulders above any of the crews below them. No less than three crews made a bump each day, and some of them had not reached the end of their tether when the races finished. In fact, St. John's II. had never had to row through the Gut. The other two were Balliol II. and New College II.

In contrast to their second crew, the St. John's first did badly, and Trinity first looked like getting down to their second had time permitted. The disputed bump with Brasenose was given against St. John's by the committee, and Christ Church were robbed of a place, which they, however, recovered by securring St. John's last evening. This was another case of a second boat being almost as good as the first, as the House second got well into the first division. Lincoln did wonderfully well in finishing fifth with five bumps to their credit, a position they have never before attained. It was gratifying to find Oriel making good headway, as, devoting their energies to one crew, they succeeded in making five bumps, and are now well up in the second division. No less than nine bumps were recorded on Wednesday, which must be about a record for a last day.

The following is the order in which the boats started at the commencement of the races :—

First Division: New College, Magdalen, Christ Church, St. John's, University, Balliol, Trinity, Brasenose, Lincoln, and Christ Church II.

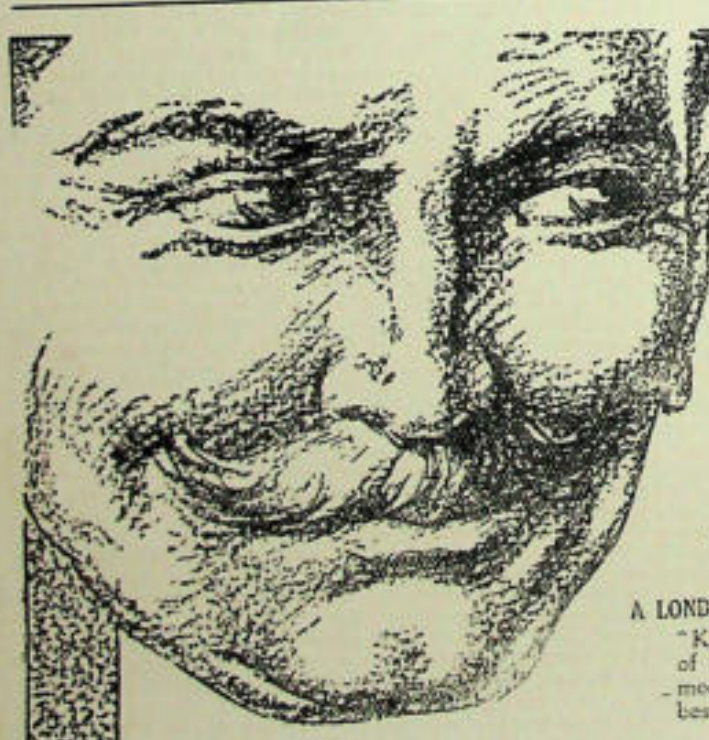
Second Division: Christ Church II., Corpus, Merton, Pembroke, Wadham, Exeter, Keble, New College II., Magdalen II., Oriel, Trinity II.

Third Division: Trinity II., Worcester Queen's, Hertford, Brasenose II., Jesus, University II., Balliol II., St. Edmund Hall, St. John's II., St. Catharine's.

The present order is as follows :—

First Division: New College, Magdalen, University, Christ Church, Lincoln, Balliol, Brasenose, Christ Church II., St. John's, Merton.

Second Division: Merton, Corpus, Magdalen II., Trinity, Oriel, Pembroke, Wadham, Keble, Trinity II., New College II., Exeter.



Third Division: Exeter, Balliol II., Worcester, St. John's II., Queen's, Brasenose II., Hereford, Jesus, St. Edmund Hall, University II., St. Catharine's.

The following are the names and weights of the New College (head of the river) crew: Sir W. L. Parker (bow), 11st. 6lb.; T. C. Gillespie, 12-2; F. A. H. Pitman, 11-12; B. Burdekin, 11-13½; R. P. Hankinson, 12-0½; A. F. R. Wiggins, 12-8½; C. W. R. Littlejohn, 12-8· R. C. Bourne (stroke), 11-0; J. D Walker (cox), 8-0½.

In the third division Balliol II. caught Worcester at the Gut; St. John's II., bumped Queen's at the Free Ferry: and St. Edmund Hall overhauled University II. at the University Boathouse.

In the second division Merton secured Corpus Christi at the Willows; Trinity fell to Magdalen II. along the Green Bank; Oriel bumped Pembroke at the Long Bridges; and New College II. were caught by Trinity II. at the Free Ferry.

In the first division New College rowed home more than their starting distance in front of Magdalen; Lincoln bumped Balliol at the Red Post; and Christ Church II. secured St. John's at the same place.

Ah!

You want to look healthy and well like me? Then do as I do—

Take PURGEN!

A LONDON DOCTOR writes :—

"Kindly send me by return of post 200 tablets of PURGEN for Infants and 100-Adult. The more I use this drug the more I like it. It is the best aperient I have so far come across."

PURGEN acts surely, gently and naturally, without causing any irritation or pain, and its effect does not wear off by prolonged use. PURGEN is not absorbed by the system. It has no action on the liver or kidneys, and it does not produce flatulence, nausea, depression or other disagreeable symptoms usually associated with aperient medicines. PURGEN is an especially valuable medicine for the delicate, for invalids and for children. Sold in boxes only, as per attached facsimile.

N.B.—Each genuine tablet is stamped "PURGEN" one side and "KIRBY" the other side.

Rowing.

THE OLYMPIC REGATTA.

THE coming rowing season will be one that is of more than ordinary interest, not only the oarsman, but more especially to the world at large on account of the many international contests which are promised, writes "Old Blue." Not only will the race between Ernest Barry, the English champion, and Richard Arnst, of New Zealand the champion of the world and holder of many other lesser titles, create an extraordinary amount of interest, more especially from the fact that the contest is to be rowed on the Thames, but the Olympic games, in which a regatta is included for the second time, will cause a great deal of excitement, and will give English oarsmen a chance of further exhibiting their superiority over their confrères from the other dominions and other nations.

It is, therefore, with no small feelings of pleasure that I am able to announce that there is every probability of the Old Country being very well represented, and that everything points to the representative crews doing as well as those which turned out at the regatta four years ago, which was held at Henley. It is impossible that they could do better in actual results, for in 1908 we swept the board. But that it is possible to demonstrate that English rowing is in a sounder condition than it was in those days is certain, for the crews that seem likely to be entered are far more representative of current rowing.

In 1908, but for a crew of veterans, most of whom, as oarsmen go, were past their prime, and had given up rowing, in many instances for several years, there is no doubt that our supremacy in eight-oared rowing would have left us, for our contemporary rowing was in a bad way, and the Cambridge University eight, which was chosen as one of the crews, for it had beaten Oxford decisively in the spring, was defeated in the semi-final round by the famous Belgian eight.

This year it is not deemed necessary to go back to the distant past to find worthy exponents of the traditional style of English oarsmanship, for the two clubs which have sent their names to the Amateur Rowing Association, the governing body of English amateur rowing, and are the most likely to be called upon to represent the country, are Leander and New College, Oxford. It is early as yet to say what the definite composition of these two eights will be, especially the first mentioned. Mr. A. G. Kirby, the old Magdalen Blue, who captained Leander two years ago, has been re-elected to the post and will have available the services of most, if not all, of the oarsmen who have contributed so largely to the success of the Magdalen crews of the past few years.

PRACTICE COMMENCED.

It is probable, in view of the success of their college, that the eight will be almost, if not quite entirely composed of Magdalen men. Practice has already been commenced on the tideway with the view of getting the older men into condition, and Mr. Kirby has been out with Mr. P. Fleming and Mr. Stanley Garton with some regularity in a four-oared boat, but a substitute has on most days had to be found for the fourth place. Mr. J. A. Gillan will shortly be home from the Soudan, and will be able to start practice very soon. At present there seems to be some doubt whether Mr. D. Mackinnon will be able to find the time to row, but it is to be hoped that he will make every effort to do so as his loss would be irreparable, and his place impossible to fill adequately. These five, if they can row, would, of course, take the five stern seats of the boat, and would sit in the same order as they sat in the Magdalen crew of last year, which, although owing to want of time it cannot be said to have been trained to its highest development did not find any great difficulty in winning the Grand Challenge Cup. For the remaining three positions, at present, I understand, nothing definite has been settled.

It is always better not to mix men who have gone down from the Universities with those who are still in residence, and rowing all through the year, because great difficulty is involved in getting the former into the pink of condition without running the risk of making the latter stale, for a man who has gone through a University training, and then rowed in his college eight, and perhaps the University Boating Club pairs, cannot stand the long work which those who have not rowed since the last Henley Regatta must go through. It should not be a difficult matter to find three Old Blues who have lately gone down who would fill the bow seats to advantage, and since it is settled that the crew shall race at Henley, which would be a still greater strain on men who are in residence, this will probably be done. At the same time, should any difficulty be found in getting older men to come forward there are two Blues in the present Magdalen crew and several other sound oars-men who could fill up the boat and add power to it.

NEW COLLEGE CREW.

The ultimate entry of New College, of course, somewhat depends upon the success of the crew in its contests in the Summer Eights and at Henley; but if it does go it will probably row in much the same order in which it is practising to-day for the former. When I saw them last they showed exceptional promise, and should turn out to be a much faster crew than they were then. Last year Mr. R. C. Bourne, the Oxford stroke, only had the assistance of one Blue, in Mr. Littlejohn, who has developed enormously since then. Mr. Wiggins, who then rowed six, has now been through University training, and, always a hardworking oar, has naturally gained a great deel in strength.

They have also a new recruit in Mr. F. A. H. Pitman, the Etonian freshman, who rowed bow at Putney last term; whilst Mr. Fison, who was unable to row last year owing to ill-health, will again be able to take an oar, so that with good average material for the other thwarts the crew is by no means badly found in men. That they are likely to have a fine turn of speed is owing to the extremely effective style in which they row. Every inch of their swing and slide is used to its utmost, whilst they do not waste one atom of their strength, because their blades are so quickly covered, and no energy is expended on flashy movements of the hands and bodies, which are, it seems, the ideal and the aim of so many coaches.

The crew, too, is entering for the Grand Challenge Cup at Henley, and the only question is whether it will be able to keep at the top of its form for so many races, for the rest between the Summer Eights and Henley will not be a very great one, though it is slightly longer this year than usual. They do not appear at present, however, to have any very serious rivals in the college races, and as they have a considerable advantage over the crews in starting head of the river, it will, perhaps, not be found necessary to bring them to their highest pitch of training by next week, so that there may be room for further development in their practice for the regattas. At the same time, the position of their college on the river is nearest to the hearts of all University oarsmen, and it is not likely that any risks will be run on this score.

THE FOUR-OARED RACE.

At present it seems likely that only one crew will be entered at Stockholm to represent England in the four-oared event, which is to be rowed with coxswains. This will undoubtedly be the famous Thames R.C. four, which consists of the veterans, Mr. Beresford, Mr. Vernon, Mr. Rough, and M. Bruce Logan. They have been in practice for some time, and are rowing in alternate weeks with and without a coxwain, in order that they may not imperil their chances for the Stewards' Cup at Henley which, of course, is rowed in a coxswainless boat.

Everyone will be glad to hear that Mr. McCulloch, the old Oxford Blue, who won the Diamonds in 1908, is again in training for that event. He has broadened out considerably since he last appeared, and is now rapidly getting fit and is training with Dick Arnst, the world's champion. It is probable that he will be chosen, with Mr. Kinnear, the Diamonds winner and amateur champion of the Thames of 1910, and 1911, to represent the country in the Sculls, for which there is certain to be a large entry of foreigners.

ENTRIES FROM THE DOMINIONS.

Greater Britain is also, it seems, to be well represented. Canada will most probably send a couple of crews, of whom the Argonauts will be one. A crew is already on its way from New South Wales, and will practise on the Isleway at Putney before going to Sweden. It is unfortunate that at present the Australian clubs are not affiliated to the Amateur Rowing Association, under whose rules Henley regatta is organised, and this fact, unless a special rule be passed, will prevent them from competing at our chief regatta. The Canadian clubs are, of course, affiliated, and their crew or crews will doubtless appear at Henley, and this fact will make it all the more regrettable if the Australians are debarred from entering, and it is to be hoped that some method will be found to surmount the difficulties in the way without creating an awkward precedent, by which the Henley authorities might find themselves bound in the future.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE recent form displayed by most of our civilian local teams has been of a much improved character, but the Black Watch and the Middlesex have not been seen to such advantage as they were earlier in the season. The Black Watch, it is true, have not lost a single point, but the Scotch team were most lucky in defeating the Middlesex, Calcutta and Customs. Against the Dum Dum team and the "Reds" the one goal victories were from palpably off side positions, while against the Customs the Black Watch were awarded two penalty kicks, the second penalty being a very doubtful decision indeed. The Customs themselves scored a most magnificent goal, and all these three games were pure and simple draws, and not wins for the Fort team. However, the referees are only but human, and, as such, must err.

Before going into the details of the week's matches I may say that the entries for the I. F. A. Shield and Trades' Cup will close on 1st July, and the tournaments are to begin on the 10th of the same month. Mr. S. H. Sutton has been elected as one of the Joint Honorary Secretaries in whose hands the senior competition will be run. The old C.F.C. player with his geniality and thoughtfulness is just the man to run an important tournament successfully, and it only requires large entries and good class football in order to have a most brilliant season.

The England and Scotland match which comes off next Saturday on the Calcutta ground should produce one of the finest contests ever witnessed. The teams are, with perhaps one or two exceptions, the strongest that could be got together, and if Victor Sherman's knee does not give way the representatives of the "Rose" should just about win. The English team will have a great advantage in goal, but it is to be hoped that Piggot has recovered from the injury sustained in the last match against Calcutta when the Middlesex man had the misfortune to hurt his wrist. A. N. Stewart, who has kept goal for Calcutta with much credit, will defend the Scotch citadel, and as he is leading the side he may be depended upon giving of his best. The teams are as follows:—England—Sergeant Piggot (Middlesex), goal; Quayle (Dals), and Victor Sherman (captain) (C. F. C.), backs; Wootton (Middlesex), Hyland (Customs), and Pooler (C. F. C.), half-backs; H. Sherman (C. F. C.), Bateman (Middlesex), Lomas (Black Watch), Fenn (C. F. C.) and Hurlston (Dals), forwards. Scotland—A. N. Stewart (captain) (C. F. C.), goal; McLaren (Dals) and Richmond (Black Watch), backs; Patterson (Black Watch), George (Bristol United) and Wright (Dals), half-backs; Egerton (Black Watch), Kerr (C.F.C.), Gorion, Watson and Connor (Black Watch), forwards. Mr. A. Crawford is to supervise the game, and as Mr. H. E. Medlycott, the hard-working Honorary Secretary, is doing all he can, this match should prove a decided success.

The Civil and Military match which comes off on the Saturday following will be even more interesting from a spectator's point of view, as the Indians would like the civilians to win, while the military too will have a large number of backers.

The Trades' Cup, which is to be run by M. Ganguli of the National Club, will secure probably a record entry, but it is a pity that the entrance fee has not been raised from rupees five to rupees ten. For the last few years some very scraggy teams have taken part in this competition, and had the fees been raised, fewer entries, but better class football would be witnessed. This tournament is also allowed to hang on for a considerable time owing to several of the competing teams being permitted postponements, while I have known several matches being abandoned, as some of the teams have absolutely refused to play on grounds that have been slightly slushy. Now this, to my personal knowledge, has been the fault of the Indian referees who have been deputed to supervise these games, these men giving in to the teams. It is to be hoped that no such thing will be permitted this year, and that more European referees will take charge of these games. This tournament, the Cooch Behar, and the Elliott competitions give more trouble than any other that are governed by the I.F.A. They are or rather have been almost as bad as some of the two and three-rupee illegitimate tournaments.

The match between Calcutta and the Black Watch was one of lost opportunities, and rarely in a game of this character have chances been so flagrantly wasted. Both goals were frequently in danger, and it seemed every moment that both teams would score, but throughout the fifty minutes the ball never found the net, except on one solitary occasion,—and that from a palpably offside position. The military had the larger share of attacking, especially during the second half, but though their forwards combined well, and had any number of fine openings, their shooting was wild, and Stewart had only on rare occasions to handle. Brown, the Black Watch goalie, also had little to do, the forwards on both sides finishing up very tamely. Victor Sherman, who has returned to Calcutta and will stay here for the football season, played a magnificent game at back, and this player, and Connor, the Black Watch left winger, were far and away the two most prominent players on the field. The only goal of the match was netted by Watson almost immediately after ends had been changed, but both the scorer, and Gordon the Black Watch centre forward, were laying off side when they received the ball from their centre half.

The Dalhousie and Rangers match proved a very evenly contested game, but Fitzpatrick, the Rangers keeper, had more to do than Hoskins. The game resulted in a draw of one all, but on the evening's play Dalhousie were unfortunate in not winning. The matches on Saturday drew large crowds, the game on the Customs between the Riversiders and the Black Watch being the largest attended. The Customs, who have shown much improvement, lost by 2 goals to 1, but the Black Watch cannot be congratulated on their victory, as goals were scored from penalty kicks. The first hands against Alexander—was a correct decision, but the second penalty against the Customs nobody could understand, not even the soldiers. The Customs' goal by Galbraith was the result of some fine play on the part of Hyland, Williamson and Galbraith. The Customs would no doubt go one better if they were to try Echlin in place of McCready. Echlin is a hard and accurate shot, is very speedy, but at present lacks practice. The game was of a very even and exciting character, and on the play the civilian team were at least entitled to a draw.

The Dalhousie and Calcutta match also produced an even struggle, but as Calcutta were without the brothers Sherman, the side did remarkably well in drawing. Indeed, with a little luck Calcutta should have won. The score was two all, but the second goal netted by the Trades Club was owing to a misunderstanding on the part of O'Shea and Stewart. Fenn and Bisseker for Calcutta, and Hurlston and Wright for Dals were the goal getters. The Rangers beat the Y.M.C.A. by 3-0, but the game was not so one-sided as the score would indicate. Lindsay, Smart and Little scored.

On Monday Calcutta gave a splendid account of themselves when playing the Middlesex, and but for Piggot's brilliant goal-keeping Calcutta must have won. The civilian forwards played clever football, and Fenn is one of the finest forwards we have now in Calcutta. The game ended in a draw—pointless; but the "Reds" were undoubtedly the superior side.

The same evening the Y.M.C.A. beat the Gunners from the Fort by 2 goals to 1.

THE MURREE TOURNAMENT.

The Murree Football Tournament opened on the 11th instant, when after an hour's delay owing to rain two matches were put through. In the first of these the 17th Lancers met the Lancashire Fusiliers. The Lancers had rather the best of the first half and scoring shortly after the start were one up at the interval; but on changing ends the Fusiliers completely outclassed their opponents, winning eventually by 4 goals to 1. Simpson, the Lancer's goalkeeper, preventing defeat by a larger margin. The other game between the Royal Artillery from Khanspur and the Yorkshire Regiment was very evenly contested, the Gunners ultimately acknowledging defeat by 3 goals to 2. Two more games were played on the 12th instant. The Royal Sussex played the King's Royal Rifles, a well-contested match ending in a pointless draw. An extra twenty minutes' play failed to bring about a definite result, but in the replay the next day the Rifles quite outclassed the Sussex and beat them by 3 goals to nil. The fourth match was between the Rifle Brigade and the 12th Brigade R.H.A. The first half was unproductive, but after the interval the Riflemen scored twice and won by 2 goals to nil.

The second round began on Thursday last, when the 10th Hussars met the 7th Brigade R.F.A., and the Lancashire Fusiliers met the R.G.A. from Barian. The first game was exciting: the Hussars asserted themselves during the opening moiety and led at the interval by a goal to nil, but in the second half the Gunners equalised and scoring 2 more goals won by 3 to 1. The second match was very one-sided. The Fusiliers opened the scoring and the Gunners equalised: thereafter the Fusiliers had things all their own way and eventually won by 6 goals to 1. Two games on Friday completed the second round. The King's Royal Rifles and the Rifle Brigade put up a splendid struggle, victory resting with the K.R.R.'s by 2 goals to 1. The Durhams played the Yorkshire Regiment, the latter winning by 2 goals to nil, both points scored in the second half. The semi-finals took place on Saturday. The Lancashire Fusiliers met the R.F.A. 7th Brigade. Play was very fair, but the Fusiliers were the better team and ran out winners by 3 to nil. The other match was between the K.R.R. and the Yorkshire Regiment. The Rifles drew first blood, but the Yorkshires were not long in equalising, the score being one all at half time. On changing ends, however, the Rifles had the best of it and putting on three more goals won by 4 to 1. The final between the Lancashire Fusiliers and the King's Royal Rifles was played on Monday last.

THE BOMBAY HARWOOD LEAGUE.

The League opened on Saturday last, when the Royal Warwicks met the R.G.A. on the Cooperage. The play was very disappointing, the players were not in form, the ground was very hard, there was a strong wind blowing across the field throughout and the heat was intense. The Warwickshires had the better of the game and the Gunners were lucky to divide the points. The R.G.A. were first to score, but the equalising goal was not long delayed. Shortly before the interval aided by the wind the Artillery were able to again take the lead and were 2 to 1 at the interval. In the second half the Warwicks did most of the attacking. They got a good number of unproductive corners and many chances were let slip till at length in a melee while attempting to clear the Gunners' custodian put through his own goal. With the score 2 all the Warwicks kept up the pressure, but in spite of all their efforts were unable to score again.

AZOTURIA, ITS CAUSE AND TREATMENT.

There is a peculiar disease well known to horse owners which is rightly called azoturia but more commonly called "black water," and which perhaps is as much, if not more, dreaded than any other disease to which the horse family is heir to. It comes like a thief in the night and pounces upon its victim with scarcely any perceivable warning and is liable to leave a permanent reminder of its visit both on the subject attacked and on the memory of the anxious owner or whoever watches over the stricken animal.

Azoturia has been laid to the door of the liver by some writers and to the kidneys by others, while the common idea is that it is a disease of the urinary organs. The exact cause of this disease is as yet unknown, but it has been generally attributed to an increase of nitrogenous substances in the blood, with a marked increase of urea in the urine.

We do know, however, that azoturia is commonly brought about by high feeding, particularly upon food rich in nitrogenous matter, without sufficient exercise or work to cause the different organs of the system to take up and carry off the rich waste matter that necessarily is the result of these conditions.

Perhaps if the urine of the horse were looked upon as a means of diagnosis with half as much favour as is the case in the human family, much more rapid progress would be made in finding a suitable specific for the treatment of this disease; or, what would be better, a method of preventative treatment in the earlier stages that would ward off the now dreaded, serious attacks with their corresponding after-effects.

Different sections of the country, according to different reports, appear to be freer from attacks of this disease than others; perhaps, from the fact that horses are fed differently in the different sections. The Western and Southern States where oats form the greater part of the ration for horses, have frequent outbreaks of the disease in which it appears in an enzootic form, while in the Northern and Eastern States the cases seem scattered, and rarely ever is a community attacked with the disease in an epidemic form.

It is said that while cases of azoturia are common in Canada few horses die of the disease in that country; probably because it appears in a milder form and less heroic treatment is needed to bring about a speedy recovery. In former years it was supposed to appear more frequently in mares than in geldings or stallions but veterinarians who have had much experience in treating azoturia claim that this is not so, although breeding stallions are said to be seldom subjected to it, and the cases found among pregnant mares are also rare.

The first noticeable symptoms in the less serious attacks are profuse sweating, with heaving flanks and a desire to stop short if being worked or exercised. The muscles of the loins become rigid and sensitive to the touch and rapid breathing is early noticed, while the animal will nearly always turn its head towards the side on which the severe muscular twitching is noticeable. Lameness in one limb, usually a hind one, which rapidly becomes severe, is one of the first symptoms presented to the driver of the animal which has probably gone but a short part of its journey when attacked.

If the driver has been unfortunate enough to have already had experience with horses stricken this way, he will be sure to make an early retreat to his stable, or if too far removed from his own quarters he will make shelter somewhere as soon as possible. And this is an essential factor in the successful treatment of the disease, as the horse that has been gotten under cover quickly and early treatment begun has a great deal better chance of getting off with a light attack than one that has been allowed to stand or urged to travel until dropping from the paralysis which ensues.

While race horses during their racing season are less liable to be stricken than during their period of rest in winter, because of the fact that they are exercised regularly, the worst case that I ever saw of this kind happened on a race track as the horse was about to be stepped a mile in its training. Horses that are allowed to stay in their stalls all day Sunday without a reduction in the amount of grain fed and without being led out for a short exercising walk during the day, are the ones we find suffering on Monday morning, and the disease has been called by some, the "Monday morning disease" for this reason. Idleness for short periods of time, without attention to the feed, is no doubt the real cause of this malady, but it is an established fact that horses which remain idle for very long periods are rarely ever subjected to it, which proves that the food fed during these times of rest is the all-important cause, as animals left in stalls for weeks or months are most always fed accordingly.

Although the symptoms before mentioned are always present, no great rise of temperature is found in most cases which greatly assists in making an early diagnosis, but the pulse is always accelerated and the excessive sweating that takes place is not characteristic of any other disease.

The urine, if any is voluntarily passed, is a dark, coffee colour, or even black, and contains many casts, but retention of urine is most always the case. On post-mortem examination, we find congested lungs, with the heart containing many blood clots; the muscles of the loins and croup are degenerated and are divided into layers, and the bladder is found highly coloured.. Examining the muscles with the naked eye, we find that they have entirely lost their consistency and colour and are stringy or ropy in appearance.

Immediately upon getting the animal to his stable, treatment should be applied to rid the blood and urine of the toxins that are rapidly produced. The older methods of treatment consisted of copious bleeding, while the bladder was emptied of any urine it might contain by means of catheter or through the rectum by pressure, and these still seem to be in favour with the veterinary practitioners of the present. Hot packs or fomentations over the loins and back are used to stimulate the work of the kidneys, and if the patient shows signs of being unable to support itself it should be placed in slings.

The common habit of piling two or three heavy blankets over the back and loins is not productive of the most good, but one or two light wool blankets, or the so-called coolers, placed over a good-sized square piece of any good, heavy cloth that has been well-soaked in hot water to which a little salt has been added, are very useful and well tolerated by the animal.

If the malady threatens to take on a serious aspect, no time should be lost in calling a veterinarian, but there are times when a veterinarian is not at hand, or he is too far away to be easily reached, when, of course, something must me done to relieve the sufferer. Of the drugs that can be safely used, sweet spirits of nitre will no doubt be of most use, as it has the power of stimulating the kidneys, while nitrate of potash (saltpetre) in one-half ounce doses, are both used as diuretics. One-half to one ounce doses of aloes in a bolus (ball) can be administered when purgation is desired.

A veterinarian would use drugs that would combat the different symptoms as they arise, but you can do much to promote a quick return to a normal condition with the hot steamers or blankets before mentioned, and by stimulating the action of the skin with any good hot wash, preferably the salt and water, and with the use of the nitre and saltpetre.

Upon the return of the animal to work, care must be used in the manner of feeding, bran mashes and hay alone being fed for some time, with little of any oats. A quick return to exercise is most advantageous, paralysis or atrophy of the muscles being less apt to result where the animal is given exercise or returned to light work soon after recovery.

In the shrinking or atrophy of the muscles that sometimes follows, a course of tonics is beneficial, with massaging and hand-rubbing of the parts afflicted, and when once a horse has had azoturia he should never be allowed to remain indoors a whole day without exercise.

Motoring.

By Throttle.

I am indebted to the Honorary Secretary of The Automobile Association of Bengal for information to the effect that repairs have been commenced on the 2nd mile of Bistopore Road, which is to the east of Dum Dum Cantonments, that this road will not be fit for motor traffic for about a month. The Garia Hat Road is under repair just beyond Ballygunge, being laid with loose metal for the whole width. When this, the best evening run, near Calcutta, will be available for motorists does not appear to be certain at present.

During the past week an effort has been made to regulate the traffic at the intersection of Old Court House and Waterloo streets on the Home system. But why is it necessary to duplicate the usual Police post at this point? Some three years ago there were several sergeants in the Calcutta Police whose work at this identical point under similar conditions was carried out quite satisfactorily, though only assisted by the usual jarawallah. That was when the Police Force offered sufficient inducement to its members to remain in the service long enough to learn their work. At the present time the force is considerably under strength and all the "old hands" are either on the High Court staff or are Crown sergeants doing inspection duty only. Ask any sergeant to-day of the condition of the Calcutta Police and he will tell you in characteristic language that it is "a wash-out."

At last the motor cyclist has attracted the attention of the Police and one of the genus was fined Rs. 20 during the week. Taxis are bad, but what can be said of the fiends who, at all hours of the day as well as a good portion of the night, race about the streets, usually with an exhaust full open. I have no hesitation in affirming that it is exceptional to see a motor cycle travelling within five miles of the speed limit. From their construction these vehicles are more dangerous than any motor car not being nearly so fully under control and having only two wheels with the weight unevenly distributed they are far more liable to skid and get out of hand. That more prosecutions are not instituted is saying a great deal for the forbearance of the Police. That is not putting too fine a point on it. Professionals are not employed to drive cycles.

Two sahibs were fined respectively Rs. 20 and Rs. 10 during the week for driving their cars or causing them to be driven in a rash and negligent manner. It is interesting to compare these punishments with those mentioned in this column last week as having been inflicted on professionals drawing Rs. 15 per month.

An accident, which has not yet been reported in print, occurred a few days ago due entirely to neglect of proper care of the steering gear of a motor car. To ensure efficient lubrication of the ball joints or connections of the steering arms, they should be covered by leather casings filled with grease. This case keeps out dirt and grit and keeps the moving parts well lubricated, only needing occasional inspection and replenishment. All joints and pins which are not so protected should be examined and oiled frequently, care being taken to see that no lock nuts are loose or split pins missing. These connections are subjected to considerable vibration and strain from road shocks, consequently they wear rapidly. Such defects should be at once remedied. In the event of an accident occurring, the steering gear is the part that should be first examined, as everything depends on the stability of these few levers and connecting rods and when they give way the best driver in the world is helpless.

With the approach of the rains the care of hoods becomes a question of importance, especially as the ordinary Cape Hood is, so far as my experience goes, absolutely useless as a protection against a monsoon downpour. Any car owner can make his hood rainproof and give it the appearance of leather by the following means. First be sure that the canvas is thoroughly stretched and freed from dust; it is not necessary to detach the hood; to do this, in fact it is preferable not to. Then use 2lbs. of drop black in turpe, to which has been added a ½ pint of gold size, a little linseed oil and a small quantity of black japan. This latter gives an even surface. One-eighth of a pint of clear varnish may also be added with advantage. Four coats of this composition are necessary, time being allowed between each application for the previous one to dry. Apply quickly and do not attempt to re touch. When the last coat is dry two coats of clear varnish with a little black added, allowing each to dry. When these operations are complete allow about 24 hours to elapse for final hardening and then sponge over with water. In place of drop black, oil black may be used in which case the linseed oil and black japan may be omitted. The cost of procuring a really waterproof hood by this method is under Rs. 15. Another dressing, equally effective, but not of such good appearance, is one pound of ordinary rubber solution to half a gallon of rock naphtha, applied several times, allowing each coat to dry before applying the next.

The burning question among designers of forthcoming models is the adoption of the silent chain for camshaft drives. The original objections to high speed chain transmissions were based upon the centrifugal force tending to make the chain ride up on the pinions and upon the same force throwing off lubricating oil. The riding up defect did not appear so long as the chains were new, but was very apparent directly appreciable wear or stretching took place. In the inverted tooth chains of the type used for camshaft drives the conditions are considerably modified. Stretching and its attended troubles are almost eradicated by the adoption of chains of ample width, presenting a considerable wearing surface in proportion to the work to be done. The trouble of lubricating oil being thrown off is completely overcome by enclosing the gear in an oil-bath as is done with the ordinary spur gear of the camshaft. The principal objections now to the chain drive is the difficulty of providing adjustment, the amount of room taken up, and the extra weight. As already stated, to be immune from stretching and wear, the chains must be of ample width, it is also necessary to provide much more clearance than in the case of spur gearing, consequently the dimensions of the crank case containing the drive are increased to a large extent. The difference in efficiency between chain and spur gear drives is not sufficient to influence the decision very greatly where the small power absorbed by the camshaft is concerned, but any balance that does exist certainly appears to be in favour of the chain. The commonest reason for condemning the chain does not appear to me to be well substantiated. With the back-lash of the bicycle chain in mind critics aver that the back-lash of a chain transmission must seriously affect the timing of the valves and still more the firing time of the magneto. Personally I consider that it is questionable whether the back-lash is really greater with a chain than with spur gears. Where only a single pair of wheels are in mesh, the advantage is probably with the spur gear, but one rarely finds a camshaft driven by a single pair of wheels. Generally the distance between centres render an intermediate pinion necessary, otherwise that on the camshaft would be out of proportion. Then if as is often the case the magneto is driven off the camshaft with the fitting of still another intermediate pinion, the total back-lash in all probability would greatly exceed that of a direct chain transmission from magneto to camshaft. So far, however, no very conclusive argument either for or against the chain has been adduced, the chief point in its favour being its silence. The average high grade engine with spur gearing gives little ground for complaint in this direction, after it has reached the motoring public, but before that there is endless difficulty in the workshops to find a set of gears that will run inaudibly. It is not uncommon for one particular engine to prove noisy with a certain set of gears, while the same set transferred to an apparently identical engine will run perfectly sweetly. The adoption of the chain should do away with troubles and delays of this nature. The main fault with spur gears arises from the case-hardening. This process tends to warp the pinions and prevent their meshing along their true pitch lines, and it is to the back lash thus set up that chattering and noise is due. Chain gearing can easily be made silent, spur gearing can only be made silent with difficulty, whether one system will entirely eliminate the other or not remains to be seen. I have simply tried to place before my readers the arguments for and against each as they occur to me. Personally I incline to the chain system, but these few remarks may be useful in putting buyers in the way of selecting a firstrate model for their 1913 car.

There are no more destructive agencies with regard to tyres than heat and damp consequently a few words in conclusion at this season may not be misplaced. It is essential to the avoidance of trouble that the valve caps and covers should invariably be kept on and well screwed down. Tyres should always be kept pumped up to the pressure indicated in the makers' lists, they are then less liable to puncture and there is not so great a tendency to "creep" or slip on the rims. Keep all security bolts well tightened up to prevent "nips" and also to prevent water penetrating through the holes in the rim. Be careful to remove all water from the beading after each run, as corrosion at this point is fatal to the life of the cover.

GONOSAN provokes neither discomfort, complications, nor nausea. It is the happiest scientific combination of best Indian Sandal wood oil and Kawa Kawa. Has never been known to fail. The Stomach and Kidneys remain absolutely unaffected. Insist on having Gonosan.

MOTOR MEMS.

London Friday, 24th May 1912.

A writer in the Manchester Guardian has lately been pointing out how different a vocabulary is used by Americans to that employed in England, although English is the language of both countries. The New York Motor World has also been devoting some space to the subject, but in a somewhat impartial way. Under the heading "English as it comes from England," it remarks that "They are great on 'oddments' in England," and proceeds to quote a number of English motoring terms to show how odd we are. Our contemporary has, however, failed to strike home, for the very words which it has selected to ridicule have no vogue over here—whatever the Americans may think. It mentions a "get-about," meaning, we presume "run-about"—a word which we have borrowed from the States; "vibration absorber" for "shock absorber" "step board" for "running board," "antiskid," which we usually term "non-skid." Thus it will be seen that the actual words selected as samples of our "oddments" are not usual or customary on this side at all.

We could retaliate by enumerating many Americanisms which to us appear slangy and inefficient. "Gasoline" is a misnomer, and while descriptive is not as correct as petrol. The abbreviation "auto" is senseless without its completion—"mobile," meaning merely "self," whilst our own abbreviation, "motor," a word which the dictionary defines as "that which gives motion—a mover," is a far better term, although only a compromise. Many other examples of the difference in British and American motor terms may be mentioned. For instance, motorists on the other side of the Herring Pond refer to the "hood" of a car engine while we speak of a "bonnet." The mudguard in the United States is a fender. Our change speed "lever" becomes the "gear shift lever," while the "Cape cart Hood" is known as the "top." No doubt the Americans will continue to prefer their own motor terms just as Britishers will continue to prefer theirs.

It is impossible to reiterate too often the danger of bringing a naked light near a car, particularly in a garage. In dealing with this question in the Irish Times, a reader who signs himself "An Old Motorist," expresses some curious opinions on the subject. He mentions having seen a young man filling up a tank with petrol while smoking his cigarette, and adds that if he had done this in a closed motor house the fumes would undoubtedly have ignited and blown his head off. It so happens that one can safely plunge the end of a lighted cigarette into petrol without igniting same, and the only possible way in which a conflagration could occur when smoking a cigarette is in case by some means or other the paper of the cigarette should blaze. Whether this is within the bounds of possibility I do not know, but if it did occur in the presence of petrol fumes it would undoubtedly cause a conflagration.

As to blowing the operator's head off, the idea is absurd. No doubt an explosion might occur in a closed building, but as a rule the petrol simply ignites. If there is none splashed about the car, and the chauffeur keeps his head (explosion or no explosion), nothing serious is likely to occur. The petrol will burn from the can orifice just like a lamp, and will go out if a cap or handkerchief is put over the orifice. Above all things, the chauffeur should not throw the can out of his hands, for then the petrol will spill about and a conflagration will occur which will be difficult to extinguish. Although I have pointed out that there is little danger from a cigarette, still the practice of smoking when handling petrol should not be indulged in. It is just possible that in the case of a man who smokes rapidly a minute flame might be produced, and this might cause the vapour to ignite.

A peculiar motor accident is reported in a New Zealand paper. Mr. Athol Stewart and C. Dean, his chauffeur, were crossing from Dulce's Vale when Mr. Stewart noticed that one of the tyres was unduly inflated. Dean got down to investigate and was in the act of unscrewing the valve to release some of the air when the tyre burst. The force of the explosion hurled him several yards and rendered him temporarily unconscious. The concussion blew the top of Mr. Steward's hat clean out. Dean was subsequently found to be totally blind in one eye, and to have sustained injuries to his face and head.

In the course of one's motoring experience, writes Mr. H. Waymouth Prance, in the Motor Car Journal one cannot help noticing several errors committed by others which are in some instances so regularly made as to lead the uninitiated to suppose that they are not errors at all—in fact, by sheer custom many such errors have established themselves firmly in the minds of those committing them to the extent that they will indignantly deny there is anything wrong in their behaviour. To the thinking motorist these remarks do not perhaps so strongly apply—the man who carefully reasons everything out will have found out for himself the fallacy of many things which to others would not have seemed unreasonable; but, in the hope of drawing attention to some few regularly-committed motoring errors, I propose to enumerate the most conspicuous of them.

As an instance of a common error I would first mention that of driving against the brakes—that is to say, slowing up the car when necessary by the application of the brakes without releasing the clutch or slowing down the engine. Such a barbarous method of driving does exist, and there are even drivers who will tell you, and firmly believe so themselves, that this is the proper method of varying the speed of the car. To rational people the idea of pulling the car forward by the engine and holding it back by the brakes will at once appear ridiculous, and such drivers as commit this error would do well to try the principle when cycling, and when wishing to slow up, continue pedalling hard, while at the same applying the brakes. This common error is one which, of course, does considerable harm to the car on which it is committed—it obviously cannot be good for the chassis to be submitted to a tendency to be pulled in half—by the engine pulling it forward and the brakes holding it back. Therefore never apply the brakes without first slowing down the engine so that the latter itself is holding back the car, or else first withdrawing the clutch.

Whilst on the subject of brakes mention may be made of their excessive use. As an example of such an abuse of the brakes one may quote the driver who, seeing a block in the traffic some distance ahead, rushes up to the same without slowing speed and stops dead by means of the brakes. By doing so he saves no time, as, were he to commence slowing down by means of the throttle immediately he saw the block, he would arrive at the obstruction in time to move on with the mass of traffic—a much preferable way to rushing up to the block and waiting stationary and then moving on. The really good driver will get through the worst London traffic with hardly more than the lightest occasional application of his brakes, with a consequent great saving in the wear and tear of the mechanism and tyres.

How many motorists, I wonder, who are very careful with their carburettor adjustments, and give great consideration to their miles per gallon of petrol, consider the question of starting as affecting this mileage? I have oftentimes noticed a motorist before proceeding to start up his engine vigorously shake the needle valve of the float chamber and flood the carburettor until some quarter of a pint of petrol has been wasted. The same motorist will repeat this procedure every time he starts, and in a run necessitating many engine stops he will probably use half as much petrol on starting alone as he does on running. Flooding of the carburettor is very often nothing more than a habit of the driver, as in many instances I have found that the engine would start when once warmed equally well without flooding at all, with a consequent great saving of petrol. With the modern carburettor this is very generally so, and yet many motorists continue to vigorously flood their carburettor on every occasion when they wish to start the engine. Therefore I suggest to those who have been committing this error, find out whether your engine will not start readily without flooding the carburettor; if it will, considerable fuel will be saved. Another point worthy of mention is the apparent indifference with which certain drivers regard the continuance of knocking in their engines. Those who understand the mechanism of their motors will know that such knocking must be bad for the parts; they will also know that there must be a cause for the knocking, and a cause which is generally easily removable, sometimes involving no more effort than the retarding of the ignition lever.

So much for common errors committed in driving; there are certain frequent errors committed concerning adjustments and repairs. Chief among these I would mention the use of the cold chisel and hammer for the tightening or releasing of nuts, a trick only too common with many garage mechanics. There are spanners available for the reaching of nuts in inaccessible places, and their use is to be recommended in preference to the barbarous method of the cold chisel and hammer, which cause the nuts on which it is inflicted to get in such a state that they are often absolutely irremovable when they are required to be taken off in an emergency on the roadside. Whilst on this subject it would perhaps be well to mention that type of mechanic or motorist who is far too greatly given to the habit of using brute force, generally in the form of a hammer, when dismounting or assembling the car's mechanism. If, for instance, a bolt will not pass through the hole for which it is intended there is generally some good reason for it, such as a piece of grit having got into the hole or the bolt become bent, and the correct way is to find out the trouble and not to force the bolt through by a heavy hammer. Therefore, do not yourselves, let others, use brute force when dismounting or your engine or chassis.

THE TRUTH ABOUT UNICORN SHEEP.

In an issue of 18th January we published a leader relating to Mr. Lydekker's theory that so-called unicorn rams of Nepal are really artificial monstrosities produced by human agency. That opinion which was based on a suggestion of Her Grace the Duchess of Bedford, was originally published in The (London) Field of 30th December 1911; and at the conclusion of the article, the author stated that he was writing to the British Resident in Nepal in the hope of obtaining definite and authentic information on the subject, thereby clearly indicating that his investigation was incomplete.

This being so, the matter should have been treated in the same manner as a legal case while still sub judice. Nevertheless, another writer thought proper to intervene, and in our English name sake for January expressed the opinion that Mr. Lydekker was completely in the wrong, and that the evidence by which he supported his view was practically worthless.

Everything comes, however, to him who knows how to wait and stay his pen till the proper time arrives, as arrive it did in this case in due course. For Mr. Lydekker has recently received a letter from Colonel Manners-Smith, the British Resident in Nepal, which confirms in a curiously close manner his original conclusions. The Resident states in this communication that the necessary enquiries were kindly instituted by His Excellency the Prime Minister of Nepal in the districts, on the Tibetan frontier of the country, from whence these mysterious unicorn rams have long been known to come.

Here it should be mentioned that as stated in our former article, it was suggested by Mr. Lydekker that unicorn rams are black-headed individuals of the well-known barwal or fighting breed of Nepal; and that the modus operandi is probably by binding together the horns of lambs of this type so as to cause them to unite together and grow in a backward direction instead of spreading outwards.

The first portion of this conjecture is proved by Colonel Manners-Smith's letter to accord exactly with the facts, barwal rams of two or three months old being selected as the objects for manipulation. In these unfortunate animals the budding horns are seared with a hot iron, and the wound then treated with a mixture of oil and soot. When the injury heals, the horns grow in the desired manner, apparently without bandaging or further manipulation of any kind.

The object of producing these curious malformed rams is, it appears, that they may be sold at high prices to rich natives who consider that such freaks will add to the interest and attractions of their estates. Probably the practice is a very ancient one especially as it has parallels in Africa, and quite likely in other parts of the world. By splitting and searing the budding horns of the lambs of one of their indigenous breeds of sheep, the Oinkas of the Central Sudan are, for instance, in the habit of artificially producing four-horned rams. On the other hand, the Kafirs of South Africa are known to produce unicorn cattle by treating the horns of young calves in much the same way as the Nepalese manipulate those of barwal lambs, bandaging being, however, employed subsequently. Indeed, there is no end to the devices of this nature adopted by certain African tribes, some of whom were formerly in the habit of making the horns of their cattle grow in such a manner as to make them resemble those of kudus, hartebeests, or pallas.

Although directly the subject was taken into serious consideration it was practically self-evident from the very first that the Nepalese unicorns were artificial freaks—the fact that they would not breed true when mated with ewes of other breeds, and the absence of all mention of them in Brian Hodgson's articles on the tame sheep of Tibet and the Himalaya being to all intents and purposes conclusive—it is highly satisfactory that the question has at length been definitely settled by direct local testimony. And all who have taken part in the enquiry are to be heartily congratulated on having brought their labours to such a successful conclusion.

The Story Teller.

DECLINING YEARS.

Major and Mrs. Rambler were at breakfast in the tiny dining room of their Yorkshire cottage. It was a momentous morning. An appointment which the Major had held for some years after retiring, was about to come to an end. There was now nothing more for him to do in the way of service to his country: so the time to make a permanent home somewhere for his wife and himself, was at hand. A nice cottage in a decent climate, with a few pleasant people around. "A garden where we can grow vegetables and flowers, and room for a few fowls. Must be a cheap place to suit our small income." These were about the requirements they had formulated during their frequent talks, on the all-important subject of where to spend their declining years.

This June morning, whereon the Ramblers had come to the conclusion that it was time to do something definite, was thoroughly characteristic of early English summer; the air was intensely still, with that breathless damp feeling, which reminds one so strongly of an Indian monsoon day. The sky was thick with a dark blanket of threatening clouds. Nature seemed dumbly expectant of something. The birds were still; the grass of the lawn looked damp and spongy, the roses hung their dripping heads dejectedly.

A wet and miserable spring, following upon a bitterly cold winter, had most thoroughly disgusted the Major and his wife with the climate of their Motherland.

They were by no means a cranky invalidish old couple, be it understood. Mrs Rambler, on the contrary, looked a most dainty little person, in her becoming blouse. Her clear face had that deliciously clean fresh look, which is a special heritage of the ever-bathing Englishwoman. Her brown eyes were softly brilliant, and her age. . . Ah! well, she was at all events a girl still to the big devoted husband, who sat opposite to her.

"Well, Mollie, it is all very well my talking about declining years, but they don't associate themselves with you yet. Why you look a regular child still. I don't believe I could find the tiniest wrinkle in your face, even if I examined it with a microscope in the full glare of an Indian day."

"Well, Freddy, I can return the compliment. I suppose it's golf in your case, which has worked the charm: certainly you don't look a bit like an old Major, about to retire to your country farm."

"At all events," answered her husband, "retiring to a bucolic life, is an immediate reality, and the burning question is, Where are we to go? As for this Yorkshire climate, I am sure we are both agreed that we could never stand another winter like the last one. First rain and sleet, then snow and frost, with south-westerly gales as pleasing interludes. Burst pipes, with the consequent lack of hot water for days at a time. By Jove a country where even your tub is periodically taken away from you, is certainly not worth living in."

"Well, Freddy, I am the compliant wife ready to go and live anywhere in reason that you choose. As far as I am concerned, old England, with all its drawbacks, is good enough. I like the shops, the theatres, the daily papers, the easy means of getting about: the civilization in fact. The climate is, however, I admit, beastly, and I only wish we were well enough off to winter abroad, and just come Home for the best of the summer each year. As we are not, I suppose the wisest plan will be to settle in some place where there is a reasonably decent climate all the year round."

"All right then, Mollie, let us get to business. We will review all the possible places, and try to arrive at a definite decision to-day. We know Kashmir, and have arrived long ago at its merits and demerits. Suppose we begin by putting Kashmir to the vote." "For my part, I love Kashmir," said Mollie reflectively. "I think with a good house-boat, well fitted up, the life would be delightful for a good part of the year. The winter though would be awful: it is just as cold there in the winter as in England; and if we can't stand the cold in our warm cosy little house here, just fancy what it would be like on a boat. To enjoy Kashmir, we should have to have a bungalow in the plains, to spend the winters in, and that I fear would cost more than we could afford. There is another objection to Kashmir, and that is the smells, and the utter lack of sanitation. We might at any time get cholera, through our cook using Jhelum water, to save himself trouble. No dear, I don't think we can possibly make our home in Kashmir."

"Well, then, New Zealand is the second proposition" said Major Rambler with a smile.

Mollie put her pretty head on one side, with an air of deep consideration. "The New Zealand climate, especially in the North Island, is perfect. Whether we should at first quite like the society is not an important matter, for I think we may say that we are both eminently adaptable. Unfortunately I have two objections to New Zealand from mine, the woman's point of view. The servants are impossible: bad as they are here nowadays, they are a thousand times worse out there. Their enormous wages and peculiar views of equality would not suit me at all. Fancy me with a socialistic cook, to tackle every morning after breakfast: I simply couldn't do it. Then there are earthquakes—I can't stand earthquakes, and in the North Island I hear they have one every day regularly. No Freddy dear, much as I love you, I could not possibly go with you to New Zealand. If you go there you will have to go alone. I know the trout fishing and deer stalking are superb, and that your soul simply hankers after the country, but I simply could not stand it, and you mustn't be selfish you know."

Her husband laughed good naturedly. "I have never set my heart on New Zealand anyway Mollie, and I am not such a beast as to want to take you anywhere where you would not be happy. How about Italy next?" "Oh! Italy is out of it altogether" answered Mollie. "I know the sort of English society you get in Italy too well. It is made up of old maids with a little money hunting for Italian husbands, when they have got too far on in years to get English ones. There are two thousand old maids in Florence alone. I'm not cosmopolitan enough to Italianise myself, nor are you, old boy. Besides you, who are so fond of live creatures, could not possibly live in a country where one never sees a wild bird. The Italians shoot and eat them all: down to robins and swallows even."

"Well then the Neilgherries," said the Major's blue eyes lit up, as he spoke the name of the Blue Mountains of Southern India.

Mollie looked across very kindly at her husband's eager face, to which the very name of Neilgherries had brought back all the boyhood's fire. "Ah! yes Freddy, of course the Neilgherries it is. That cottage in the Neilgherries has always been the ultimate goal throughout our wanderings. There you will have your garden and your fowls. The geraniums will not die every winter, as they do here. We will have hedges of heliotrope, and carpets of violets. The bungalow shall be smothered with roses, and we will have peach trees, and I will turn the fruit into jam. Our bazar murghies, at seven for the rupee, shall be fattened into regular spring chickens. You shall wander through your beloved sholas after jungle fowl and Imperial pigeons. You will even get your golf, and in a few years more, trout fishing as well.

I shall have Madras servants, and housekeeping will be a happy dream. There will be plenty of pleasant people at Ootacamund, and I will be able to have the tea and tennis, which I consider indispensable wherever we go.

There will be brilliant sunshine for nine months out of the twelve, and we will sit after dinner round a fire of blue-gum logs.

There will be a good library and decent shops. Ootacamund, dear boy, is carried."

THE INDIAN CENSUS.

THE Journal of the Royal Society of Arts of 29th March contains the report of a very interesting lecture delivered before the Society by Mr. E. A. Gait, the Census Commissioner, on the census of the population of India taken on 10th March 1911. With the lapse of only a year from the date of enumeration it is not, of course, to be expected that anything more than a sketchy summary of some of the leading features of the results could be attempted; and when the enormous extent of the figures to be handled is borne in mind, it is little short of marvellous that it was possible for the lecturer to accomplish that much.

At the commencement of his discourse, Mr. Gait reminded his hearers that the first attempt to take a complete census of the Indian population was made in the year 1867 to 1872; but the enumeration was not made everywhere at the same time, and the methods adopted in the different provinces were by no means uniform.

The first synchronous census on a uniform plan was taken in 1881, and a second in 1891, while the fourth is the one now under consideration.

An interesting, and in some respects an amusing, account is given of the arrangements made for taking the census, and the many difficulties the enumerators had to encounter and overcome. One difficulty is due to the widespread illiteracy of the population, in consequence of which the schedules are filled in, with a few exceptions, by the enumerators instead of by the householders. And in the case of these exceptions, it is noticeable that serious errors were made by some of the more educated classes; a High Court Judge, for instance, having included in his schedule a relative who was absent for a few days, and who was in consequence scheduled twice.

Among the other difficulties attendant on Indian census-taking, may be mentioned the long lines of railway, the big river on which boats often travel for days without touching bank, the forests to which wood-cutters resort, often for weeks at a time, and the numerous sacred places dotted over the country, which, on occasion, attract many thousands of pilgrims. To describe the ingenious means by which these and other difficulties were overcome was beyond the scope of the lecture; and Mr. Gait contented himself with quoting one particular instance. Thus he told his audience that "all persons travelling by rail who took tickets after 7 P.M. on the night of the census were enumerated on the platform, if there was time, and, if not, in their train. Those alighting at any station during the night were enumerated there unless they could produce a pass showing that they had already been counted. All trains were stopped and every carriage visited about 6 A.M. on the following morning, in order to include any travellers who up till then had escaped notice. At one large junction alone sixty special enumerators were engaged for the census of travellers by rail." The following are some of the most striking and interesting results of the census, so far as they are at present available:—

The total population of the country is, in round numbers, 315 millions; three-fourths of these being resident in territory directly under the Government of India, and the remainder in Native States. The mean density of the population is 175 persons to the square mile; but there are great local variations in this respect, ranging from 900 or more in certain parts of Bengal to less than 50 in Burma, Kashmir, the western districts of Rajputana, and Baluchistan. The last-named State seems indeed to hold the record in respect of poverty of population, the number of persons to the square mile averaging only half a dozen.

"Apart from past political conditions, the rainfall is the main factor in determining these variations, but the configuration of the surface and the nature of the soil are also of importance. The density is greatest in the Gangetic plain, where the rainfall is ordinarily ample and the soil is a level alluvium, practically every inch of which is cultivable except where it is covered with water. The next most thickly inhabited tracts are two narrow strips along the coast on each side of the peninsula. Gujrat, though it has been called the 'garden of India,' supports barely a quarter of the number of persons per square mile found in the delta of Bengal. Its rainfall is more scanty and less regular than that of Bengal, the surface is somewhat undulating, and the soil more sandy. The low density in Burma is due to historical reasons; with the advent of a settled government, the population is rapidly increasing. In the elevated tract in the centre of the peninsula, not only is the rainfall comparatively light and uncertain, but the surface is broken and irregular, and the soil is often thin and stony. In western Rajputana, Sind, the south-west of the Punjab, and Baluchistan, the rainfall is so scanty that very little cultivation is possible without the aid of irrigation. That the soil itself is fertile enough is shown by the large yield of wheat in the canal colonies of the Punjab."

Since 1872 the population has increased by no less than 53 per cent.; but it has to be borne in mind that the greater part of this vast augmentation has to be attributed on the one hand to the inclusion of a greater extent of territory, and on the other to the nearer approach to accurracy in the enumeration; and the real net increase, so far as it can be determined, appears to be 19·3 per cent.

The fluctuations observable locally when the decennial returns are compared with one another, reflect the intimate correlation which exists in a mainly agricultural country between the harvests and the growth of the population. In the first of these periods a series of bad seasons, culminating in the great famine of 1876-78, kept the population of India in a practically stationary condition; and between 1891 and 1901 there were two widespread and destructive periods of dearth, which led not only to a heavy fall in the birth-rate, but likewise to an abnormal mortality, especially in Native States, of something like five millions. Plague, too, during the last ten years has claimed victims to the extent of between six and seven millions in British territory alone. Nevertheless, the population has shown on the whole great recuperative power.

It has been assumed by some that the great increase in population which occurred during the decade ending in 1891 represents the normal rate of augmentation. This is, however, by no means the case, for that decade, like the one which has just come to a close, followed a period of famine, when the birth-rate was diminished and the mortality abnormally great. But as this abnormal mortality chiefly affected the very old and the very young, leaving those in the prime of life comparatively unharmed, there was of course a great potential capacity for augmented birth-rate per centum of the population; and this is what actually occurred when normal conditions were restored.

Taken as a whole, the net increase during the last decade was 5·5 per cent. in British territory, and 13 per cent. in Native States; some of the latter having suffered severely from famine, and thus shewing the above mentioned high birth-rate. While in some districts, there is ample room—in certain cases by the aid of irrigation—for increase in the population, others seem approaching the limit of density. Nevertheless, Dacca, with 952 persons to the square mile in 1901, added 11 per cent. to its population during the decade under review.

Unlike most parts of Europe, where the females largely outnumber the males, in India the advantage is considerably on the side of the male sex. This is, however, not due to a disparity in the proportions of one sex to the other at birth—for in both areas more boys than girls are born—but to the circumstance that the wastage of males, alike in infancy and in mature life, is much less in India than in Europe.

THE AMATEUR ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIPS.

LONDON, Saturday, 22nd June 1912.

THE Championships were held at Stamford Bridge to-day. There was a huge attendance, record sport and magnificent weather. Some exceptionally fine performances were put up, the most notable being the lowering of the record for the 100 yards by G. H. Patching, the South African, who was clocked at 9⅗secs. for the distance. The only champions to retain their titles were P. L. Kirwan, the Irishman, who took the Long Jump for the third successive year, clearing 23 feet 2½ inches—3 inches less than his winning jump of last year, and H. Braun, of Munich, the half mile Olympic Champion who won the half in 1min. 58⅕secs.—1⅘secs. better time than he did last year, but not so good as his time when he first won in 1909 when he was credited with 1min. 57⅗secs. Braun's half was the only foreign victory of the day. Applegarth won the 220 in level time, equal to the best put up since the race was added to the programme in 1902. Seedhouse's quarter in 49⅘secs. was a good performance, while Anderson won the hurdles in 15⅗secs.—⅕secs. outside Kraenzlein's best time record in 1900, and equal to the American's time in 1901. E. Owen got back his title in the mile which he had won in 1909. Hutson won the four miles, Bridge took the walk, and Frost had an easy win in the steeplechase. In the field events Horgan once more won the Weight event—his thirteenth success. Nicholson, the record holder, took the hammer with a throw of 162 feet 2½ inches. Baker won the high jump at 5 feet 7 inches, and Conquest jumped over in the pole jump. Results:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Ascot meeting, which opened on the 18th, will be over by the time that these notes are in print, and although the present year could hardly hope to vie in brilliance with last year when by reason of His Majesty's Coronation Royal Ascot was even more royal than usual, the racing seems to have been as good as ever and of considerable interest. The bald telegraphic announcement of results do not always convey a very complete impression, but given fine weather Ascot 1912 must have been as enjoyable a social and sporting function as ever it has been. On the first day of the meeting there are several important races, the oldest of them and the oldest handicap at the meeting being the Ascot Stakes, 2 miles, which has this year been won by Mr. Barnard's The Policeman, a chestnut rig by Silver Fox out of True Blue, and to whose last season's performances a more detailed reference is made lower down in these notes. In addition to this big 2 mile handicap there are two other 2 mile contests in the first day's card at Ascot, the Gold Vase, the result of which arrived too late to us to permit

MELOX AND MELOX MARVELS.

THE PREMIER DOG FOODS.

MELOX gets Dogs into condition and keeps them fit. Is readily eaten when all other Foods are refused. It improves and strengthens the digestive organs

MELOX MARVELS, the miniature Dog Biscuits, contain many of the essential principles of MELOX and a large proportion of meat and its juices. Possess great nourishment and form a dainty change of diet.

For Hot Climates these Foods are unique, as they are essentially Bone and Muscle makers. Bitches raise healthy Litters, while bad doers and weekly puppies thrive upon it in a remarkable manner.

of our commenting upon it in our last issue and which race was won by Mr. P. Ralli's Tidal Wave ridden by Whalley, who is well-known in India, and the four-year-old Triennial. The Ascot Stakes dates back to 1839 and is the oldest handicap at the meeting. It was won in that year by Mr. Forth's Marchioness, a filly by Merchant out of Turquoise and who was thrown in at a "feather" and it was said that the actual weight she carried was about 4st., but as it was not necessary for her jockey to weigh out or in no one ever actually knew. An incident is recorded in connection with this first Ascot Stakes in which Her late Majesty Queen Victoria was concerned. Marchioness was ridden by a little boy named Bell and he got the mare home very cleverly at the end of the 2½ miles as it then was and Her Majesty was so pleased that she had the boy brought up before her and gave him a "tenner"! Her Majesty then asked him what his weight was, but here the lad's stable training came in and he said Master had told him that he was not to tell, so that even Royalty itself was unable to discover what was the actual weight that this first winner carried. The Royal tenner had no effect and stable discipline withstood even the wiles of a charming Queen. In addition to Marchioness the following horses have carried less than 6st. in this race and won :—1840, Darkness, 5st. 4lb.; 1842, Vibration, 5st. 13lb.; 1846, Petitioner, 5st. 7lb.; 1852, Lucio, 5st., 7lb.; 1856, Redemption, 5st. 12lb.; 1857, Claude Lorraine, 5st. 3lb.; 1858, Pensioner, 5st. 7lb.; 1859, Rouble, 5st., ridden by Jem Adams who, we believe, is still alive; 1869, Bete Noir, 5st. 8lb. Of these horses Vibration put up 3lb., Redemption 2lb. and Bete Noir 1lb. over-weight. Musket won this race in 1870 and they say that his victory hit the ring very hard as some of the fielders "opened their shoulders" at him on the appearance of the weights, not believing that this good horse could win at 8st. 12lb.

Mr. Barnard's winner Policeman is more correctly and more recently described as a rig and is by Silver Fox (by Satiety out of Silver Sea) out of True Blue (by Oxford out of Smilax) by Windhound out of Castaside and he won five times last season as a three-year-old, his record of successes being :—The Moderate Plate, 1m. 5furs. 110yds., at Alexandra Park; the St. Helens Plate, 1m. 3furs. at Haydock Park; the Welton Handicap, 2 miles, at Hurst Park; the Durham Handicap, 1m. 5furs., at Yarmouth; and the Rutland Handicap, 1½m., at Newmarket. The runner-up in this race by the same token is out of a mare that was at one time well known in India, Mr. E. H. Gregory's Rot, as Rot's Pride is by Wavelets Pride out of that mare. Rot is also the dam of Yentoi by Santoi. She was a small brown mare by Sainfoin out of Chimera who was by Sheen out of Distant Shore. She was very closely inbred to Stockwell.

The Ascot Gold Vase, which has been won by Mr. P. Ralli's Tidal Wave, is also as already noted a 2 mile contest and this year's winner, starting probably favourite as his price is returned as 4 to 1, is a three-year-old by Wavelet's Pride out of Tolbooth. He was ridden by our friend Whalley, a success upon which this determined jockey's many friends in India will no doubt be only too pleased to congratulate him. Tidal Wave was only out three times as a two-year-old, winning twice and securing place honours. He ran second in the Home-bred Two-year-old Plate at Gatwick to Scion, Feu de Joie being third, and his two wins were The Maiden Two-year-old Race, 6 furlongs, at Newmarket beating St. Neots and Mirska (Oaks winner) and the Daventry Two-year-old Plate at Warwick, beating Ask Papa and Equitable and seven others. The Gold Vase has in days past fallen to many good horses such as Alice Hawthorn, Sweetmeat, The Hero, Grimston, Rataplan, Fisherman (the founder of a line of winners in Australia) Parmeson, Tim Whiffler, Adventurer, Elland, Blinkboolie, Albert Victor, Thorn, Organist, Marie Stuart, Thunder, Skylark, Verneuil, Isonomy, Chippendale, Tristan, Border Minstrel, St. Gatien, Martagon, Florizel II, Pride, Zinfandel, Bachelor's Button (twice), The White Knight and Charles O'Malley to mention a list that will no doubt bring back memories to most turfites. The race has once failed to fill, namely, in 1899.

The Royal Hunt Cup, the distance of which is 7f furlongs 166 yards, was won by Mr. H. P. Nickall's Eton Boy, by Littleton out of Felstead, who started level favourite at 100 to 12 with Mr. Dermot McCalmont's Bachelor's Hope, who failed to get into the first three, and a big field went for it. The day before the race Whisk Broom, Mr. Whitney's America-bred five-year-old, displaced Eton Boy at the head of the betting, but Mr. Nickall's four-year-old has been thought well of in connection with this race all through the piece and has never been very far off the head of the poll and he has justified the confidence of his supporters by winning comfortably. Eton Boy secured three brackets as a three-year-old and was several times placed, but he never won a race of outstanding consequence and his present success is his best performance. His last season's victories were the Wood Ditton Stakes at the Newmarket Craven Meeting, Harestones being second and Pearl Diver third and there were ten other runners. The distance was a mile and Eton Boy starting favourite won cleverly by a length. He won the Sunningdale Park Plate, 1½ mile, at Kempton and the Homebred Three-Year-Old Cup, 1¼ mile, at Gatwick, in which Bridge of Allan and News were the only other two runners. Long Set, Mr. Solly Joel's five-year-old, who ran second in the Royal Hunt Cup, will be best remembered as the winner of last year's Cambridgeshire. The Royal Hunt Cup was established in 1843 and has always been a popular run with both owners and spectators, the record field for it is thirty-five in 1859, the only time in which a dead-heat has been run for it. The dead-heaters were General Pearson's King at Arms and William Day's Schism. They were both outsiders, Schism being at 33 to 1, and it was said the bookmakers were never asked to write King at Arms' name down at all. In the run off King at Arms won comfortably by two lengths, the betting being even money each of two. Several fine performances have been accomplished in this race, but the record of Collingwood, who carried 9st. 7lb. when he won in 1849, still stands out, the nearest approach to it being 8st. 11lb. with which weight Satyr won in 1868 and Clorane in 1895. The lowest weighted winner was Hesperithusa whose burden was 5st. 6lb. in 1858. It is a curious fact that no horse has won this race twice.

By winning the Gold Cup (2 miles 4 furlongs) Prince Palatine (Persimmon—Lady Lightfoot), who is owned by Mr. T. Pilkington, has set the seal upon his excellent three-year-old form, the most outstanding feature of which, of course, was his fine performance in the Leger of 1911. He has now earned the full right to be considered of the company of the stayers, even if his Leger achievement did not fully entitle him to it. He is beautifully bred to stay, as Persimmon is St. Simon—Perdita II. and Lady Lightfoot is by Isinglass out of Glare, who is by Ayrshire out of Footlight by Cremorne out of Paraffin by Blair Athol out of Paradigm by Paragone out of Ellen Horne, who was by Redshank out of Delhi and the Bruce Lowe number is No. 1 family, which numbers amongst its members such notable stayers as Spearmint, Cicero, Ladas, Robert le Diable, Fowling Piece, Fitzgrafton, etc., etc. In the Leger Mr. Jack Joel's Lycaon ran second and Lord Derby's King William was third. Just before winning the Leger he won the 1½ mile Gordon Stakes at Goodwood, Phryxus running second and Persephone third. We shall never unfortunately know whether, had all gone well with Sunstar, Prince Palatine would have equally easily won the Leger (six lengths pulling up) for Mr. Joel's good horse will never, we presume, be sound enough to race again, but he had not a bad one behind him in Lycaon, whom he beat absolutely pointless.

The Gold Cup has always been a coveted prize and dates back to the year 1807 and has produced some of the most stirring battles in turf history. It is very rarely that a big field goes out for it and the record is Bayardo's win against a dozen others. Derby winners that have secured it are not so plentiful as might be supposed and number only seven, namely: Teddington (1853), Thormanby (1861), Gladiateur (1866), Blue Gown (1868), Cremorne (1873), Doncaster (1875), St. Gatien (1874). The last named only divided the Derby after a dead-heat with Harvester, and of the rest named Blue Gown alone scored in the year of his Derby triumph. He was a post entry, which very properly is not allowed now-a-days. The race has produced a dead-heat five times, which is rather a curious fact to note, the first occasion being in 1808 when a horse named Brighton beat Epsom in the run-off, it being curious that the two names should correspond with those of the only meetings controlled by Dr. H. M. Darling. The next deat-heat was between Carmarine and Rowton in 1832, when the former won the decider, while in 1853 Buckstone beat Jim Whiffler in the run-off: Ely defeated General Peel in the run-off in 1865, but in 1907, when there was another dead-heat, there was no question of any run-off, for no sooner had the jockeys of The White Knight and Eider returned to scale than the latter was objected to for bumping and the objection was upheld. This is not the only instance of a disqualification giving the victory to the objector, for in 1811 Small Holes was put out in favour of Jannette, his owner having omitted to "make stakes" as it was called in those days. Another case was in 1823, when the jockey of Marcellus objected to Netherfold on the ground of a cross and the objection was upheld. Dual winners of this race have been Bizarre 1824 and 1825, Touchstone 1836 and 1837, The Emperor 1844 and 1845, The Hero 1847 and 1848, Fisherman 1858 and 1859, Isonomy 1878 and 1879, and The White Knight 1907 and 1908. There has been one w. o., namely, in 1821, when Banker was not opposed.

Previous to the race for the Derby this year a misunderstanding arose with respect to the claim on F. Wootton's services. In the event of Mr. E. Hulton (who has first call on Wootton's services) not wanting him for Lomond, Mr. Stern claimed him for Mordred and Mr. J. Buchanan for Jingling Geordie, both regarding Wootton as being under engagement to them. The matter was considered by the Stewards of the Jockey Club, to whom it had been referred for arbitration, and they decided that Mr. Darling's claim should take precedence of Mr. Stern's. At the same time they expressed their strong disapproval of the way Wootton behaved in making his engagements. In accordance with the ruling Wootton rode Jingling Geordie in the big race.

From a Bangalore correspondent:—There is very little to chronicle from the city of Beans regards track work, as most of the stables left during the beginning of last week for Mysore. I promised in my last notes to give a line of the condition and the likelihood of the candidates taking part at the races and who will run prominently, but since these notes will get into print after the first day is over, I leave it alone, except my selections for the Maharajah's Cup. The Maharaja has four representatives, viz., Sporran, Mary B., and two C.-B.'s, Harebell and Merry Bird, both of whom I eliminate as no class; the same opinion I attribute to Mary B, but Sporron, although with a bad leg, is a winner of the last Bangalore Cup, the Byculla Club Cup, Bombay, and many other races, who must be reckoned to have a show with a light weight, specially since he is going great guns just now; I fully believe should he not break down he will be amongst the first four. The Yuvaraja has Miracle and Milford Lake; the former has been rightly named and annexed the Cup last year, but I have no other alternative to say that it was a miracle and I would discuss it except that he does not appear to have a ghost of a chance this year. Milford Lake hails from the Emerald Isle and has won a couple of sprint races in Ireland amongst a moderate class and I doubt whether he could go the distance. Unfortunately Sir A. A. Apcar's colours will not figure in the race, as his candidate Royal Scotland is off colour, which is regretted by all sportsmen. Black Douglas will represent the Zemindar of Sivagiri and to be candid I leave him out of my calculations, unless he comes on with last week's work. Lady Spring, Mr. Mon Mohan's candidate, looks as well as can be and should make a good bid for victory. Mr. M. G. is in with Cheeky and she also is in the pink of condition and with a feather-weight will run prominently. Devereaux is Mr. G. K's representative and his chances are not very rosy, as he still appears to be a bit big. The Kour Sahib of Patiala's candidates are Hamara and Mill, of whom I give the former the best of chances of annexing the Blue Ribands. I presume Willie Southall has the mount and I feel somewhat confident he will repeat the win when he rode Haloya home some years ago from Wishart's string. Messrs. Lauder, Heather, and Jones, and Dass and Paris have Kilmarnock, Santoinette, and Nuncio respectively, and there is doubt that the first two will be there or thereabouts; Nuncio should he run will be a dangerous horse, but I fancy his distances are from 5 to 7 furlongs. Mr. Garda has entered two, Lady Erna and Bombastic, the former of course, as far as I hear, will accept, and since her performances on the Bombay side have been very fair, she will make a good bid for victory. Mr. Gutschke's Wise Hawk has summered well and he is bound to run the winner close. To summarize the candidates in a nutshell, I predict the following: (1) Hamara, (2) Santoinette or Kilmarnock, (3) Wise Hawk. As an outside chance Sporran might upset the prediction.

A boat from Australia touched Madras and brought in some horses for Wishart and Watson's string. I learn Gunboat is here also and was brought across by Tom Scott and is for sale. This horse started favourite for the last Sydney Cup, which was annexed by Saxonite and he will be a valuable asset to any sportsman who wishes to augment his string with a Viceroy's Cup horse. After his defeat in the Cup, the Maori candidate won a mile and a half race the next day in a trot in 1min. 35secs.

A very large contingent of sporting men from all parts of India have passed through on their way to Mysore and the meeting is sure to be a huge success.

At the Olympia Horse Show on the 22nd instant the Canadian Sefton made a jump record, clearing 7 feet 3½ inches.

At the Horse Show on Tuesday, King George presented the King Edward Gold Cup to the Russian officers for jumping, and congratulated the recipients on their magnificent performance. France was second, and England third.

The Mysore Polo Tournament opened on Monday when the 20th Deccan Horse, holders of the Cup, met and defeated the 29th Lancers easily by 6 goals to 1. Captain Campbell Ross scored 5 goals for the winners.

Dick Arnst, Sculling Champion of the world, has been challenged by Jas. Wray, the Harvard University coach. Wray has written enquiring what expenses the champion would allow him for a race on the Thames in August next. Arnst is not prepared to allow any expenses, but if he succeeds against Barry he will scull Wray on the Thames for the world's championship and £500 aside, the steam boat receipts to be divided, or if Wray desires a private match he can have one for £300 aside. Wray, well known in England, was born at Sydney and first came to England to assist Stansbury in his race against Harding and later was beaten in the English Championship sweepstakes by Bill Barry. In 1900 he rowed Towns for the English Championship and was well beaten. Since then he has not competed in any event of importance and for some years has coached Harvard University.

The Australian crew, who were training at Cookham in readiness for the Olympic Regatta, at Stockholm, were waiting to know their fate as regards Henley. Although no actual agreement existed between the Australian Association and the Henley committee, detailed information concerning the crew had been furnished to the committee, and it is extremely gratifying to learn that the Sydney eight will be allowed to compete at Henley.

The Argonaut R. C. are also renewing acquaintance with the Henley course, and they, too, will be seen at Stockholm. Thus the competition for the Grand Challenge Cup will be invested with extraordinary interest, despite the absence of our friends the Belgians.

A foreign entry for the Thames Cup, although unusual, is not without precedent, and singularly enough, it was a French crew which competed previously.

The full list of foreign entries is as follows :—

Grand Challenge Cup.—Argonaut Rowing Club, Toronto, Canada ; Sydney Rowing Club, New South Wales.

Thames Challenge Cup.—Rowing Club de Paris.

Diamond Challenge Sculls.—Everard B. Butler, Argonaut R.C., Toronto, Canada ; Horodynski, Cercle Nautique de France ; M. J. Kusik, St. Petersburgh R.C., Russia ; Cecil McVilly, Derwent R.C., Tasmania ; Giuseppe Sinigaglia, Lario R.C., Como, Italy ; Polydore Veirman, Royal Club Nautique de Gand, Belgium ; Wrobel, Cercle Nautique de France.

The eleventh annual dinner of past and present members of the Bombay Hunt was successfully held at the Café Royal in London on Derby Night, 5th June. Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop, the present Master, presided over a very pleasant gathering numbering thirty-six in all and was supported by Lord Harris and Mr. James Graham, both of whom had hunted with the Bombay Hounds during the past season. The menu was a work of art being designed by Mr. F. C. Macrae and included in addition to a likeness of the M. F. H. several typical hunting scenes in the Salsette country, and after full justice had been done to a very excellent repast, most skilfully and generously arranged by Honorary Secretary Mr. L. B. Ker, the evening was given over to speech and song.

The Chairman proposed the Bombay Hunt, a toast which was replied to by Lord Harris in a very happy speech during the course of which he referred to the many enjoyable gallops which Lady Harris and himself had ridden with the Bombay Hounds and the very hospitable manner in which they had been received on their recent visit to Bombay after many years' absence.

The toast of the Past Masters of the Hunt was proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Bull and replied to by Mr. James Graham on behalf of himself and Mr. Donald Graham, the other past Master present.

The health of the Master was proposed by Mr. James Graham and drunk with musical honours and Mr. Burney's spirited rendering of the Bombay Hunt song was received with well-merited applause.

A most enjoyable evening was brought to a close at a late hour and amongst those present in addition to the members already mentioned were a Naval contingent consisting of Captain Lumsden, C.V.O., and Messrs. W. P. Koe, A. V. Courage and Livingston (the three latter all late of the Indian Defence Squadron), and Mr. W. L. Cameron, C.S.I., and Colonels Bull, Channer and Jameson and Major Bertie Clay, R.A. (all also well-known members of the Poona Hunt), Messrs. W. L. Graham, A. K. Graham and H. C. Wright, Sir W. Bisset, Messrs. R. Gilbert, W. Holland, Beaufort, Dick, Chalmers, W. E. Crum, W. Priestley, R. W. Harter, Macnaghten, H. D. Ash (1st Whip), A. E. Lord, R. A. Spence, D. Wilson, G. C. Stilemar and G. Phillips.

The two remaining games in the American Polo tournament at Simla were played off on the 19th instant in the presence of the Viceregal party and several other interested spectators. In the game "C" team (Captain Muir, General Remington, Captain Nicolson and Captain Tod (back)) beat "A" team (Major Battine, Major Talbot, Captain Reynolds and Captain Harbord (back)) by 6 goals to nil. In the other game "B" team (Major Souter, Captain Charrington, Captain the Hon. A. Weld Forester and Colonel F. Maxwell (back)) beat "E" team (Captain Mowbray, Major Lawrence, Captain Hartley and Mr. Nethersole (back)) by 5 goals to nil.

The total scores of the various teams through the tournament were :—

"A" team, 8 goals. "B" team, 20 goals. "C" 14 goals. "D" 10 goals. "E" 5 goals. "B" team thus won the tournament and received the four handsome cups presented by Messrs. Hamilton and Co.

The Lawn Tennis Handicap tournament at Barnes Court, Simla, was delayed in its later stages owing to bad weather, and the final, which should have been played five days before, was not brought off till the 18th instant. In the semi-finals Mr. and Miss Gamble, handicap —15, were beaten, after three close sets, by Captain and Mrs. Carroll, handicap +15, while Captain Gordon and Mrs. Stanborough, handicap —⅓ 15, Captain and Mrs. Price handicap —15. In the finals Captain and Mrs. Carroll beat Captain Gordon and Mrs. Stanborough fairly easily by two sets to love and won the tournament. Lady Dane presented the prizes to the winning pair.

The two lengths handicap of the Calcutta Swimming Club was held at the Baths on Friday last with the following result :—

First Heat.—E. M. Koch, 6secs. start, net time 46⅘secs., 1 ; F. R. Vandyke, 3secs. start, net time 47⅖, 2.

Second Heat.—H. M. Hamsworth, 1sec. start, net time 43secs., 1 ; G. S. Young, 3secs. start, net time 45⅘secs., 2.

Final.—Koch, net time 46-2secs., 1 ; Young, net time 45⅘secs., 2.

The Murree football tournament ended in a win for the Lancashire Fusiliers, who beat the 4th King's Royal Rifles in the final on the 17th instant by 2 goals to 1 and thus took the cup for the second year in succession.

The concluding day of the qualifying rounds in the Open Golf Championship at Muirfield was one of records. Tom Ball returned a card of 68, which is a record. His total for two rounds was 144.

Macfarlane, with 74, created an amateur record. Hitherto no amateur had qualified, but to-day Macfarlane, Gairdner and Maxwell are among the leaders.

The following are the principal scores in the first round :—Ray 144, Vardon 147, Braid 148, Duncan 149, Thomson 150, Taylor and Massy 151, Mayo and Fortheringham 153.

Appended are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week :—

Middlesex beat Notts, at Lord's, by five wickets.

Kent beat Sussex, at Tonbridge, by seven wickets.

Leicester beat Hampshire, at Leicester, by 152 runs.

The match between Lancashire and Warwickshire was drawn, Lancashire leading on the first innings.

Surrey beat the Australians, at the Oval, by 21 runs.

The match between Somerset and the South Africans, at Bath, was drawn.

The Australians beat Somerset, at Bath, by 10 wickets.

Sussex beat Cambridge University, at Brighton, by 240 runs.

Northamptonshire beat Kent, at Tonbridge, by four wickets.

Yorkshire beat Nottingham, at Nottingham, by five wickets.

Derbyshire beat Leicestershire, at Ashby-de-La-Zouche, by 83 runs.

Middlesex beat Essex, at Lord's, by seven wickets.

South Africans beat South Wales, at Swansea, by 230 runs.

Gloucester beat Worcester, at Worcester, by 229 runs.

The matches between Warwick and Hampshire at Coventry and Surrey and Lancashire at the Oval, were drawn, the first mentioned team leading on the first innings.

The third of the Triangular Test Matches between England and Australia opened at Lord's on Tuesday in the presence of a huge crowd of spectators. It was a wet day and the rain interfered with play. England went in first and had scored 211 for 4 wickets when play ceased, Rhodes made 59 and Hobbs 107. Only 20 minutes' play was possible on Wednesday owing to rain, but in this time England ran their score to 24, without further loss.

In our epitome of English sport published to-day will be found details of the Epsom racing carnival and the match for the feather-weight championship of the world in which Driscoll beat Poesy. The Frenchman it appears was not altogether satisfied with the result of the match and it may be that he and Driscoll will clash again in the near future—probably in Paris.

Owing to misunderstandings between Al Palzer and Tom O'Rourke, his manager, it looks as if Bombardier Wells will have some difficulty in arranging his much talked of battle with the Iowa farmer. But there are others and it is said that if the Palzer-Wells battle falls through Wells will be matched with Hugh McGann, a new protege of Sam Fitzpatrick's and looked upon as a likely man.

Billy Papke, the American boxer and erstwhile middle weight champion of the world, has gone to France to meet Carpentier, but will fight Marcel Moreau as a preliminary on the 29th instant.

By defeating P. Gaillard in the eleventh round of a contest scheduled for twenty in Paris on the 1st instant, H. Ledoux retained his claim to be France's premier bantam weight in no doubtful manner. The lads fought with rare spirit and dash and right up to the conclusion the interest never flagged. Ledoux met "Digger" Stanley at Dieppe on Sunday last for the Bantam Weight Championship of Europe, the Frenchman knocking his opponent out in the seventh round after a fine fight. This pair had tried conclusions in a previous match recently when the "Digger" won on points.

At Philadelphia on the 1st instant Ad. Wolgast was beaten in a six-round contest by young Jack O'Brien. Wolgast was more the aggressor, but his infighting was very poor, whereas O'Brien showed both dash and science.

The International Boxing Festival opened at Dieppe on Monday night.

In the welter-weight contest between the Frenchman Bernard and the Englishman Evernden the latter was disqualified in the second round for striking the referee. Gendarmes cleared the ring.

In the contest for the middle-weight championship of the world between the American Klaus and the Frenchman Carpentier the latter was disqualified in the nineteenth round.

Ivory nuts, which furnish what is known as vegetable ivory, are a curious Peruvian product, found also in Equador and along the Pacific coast of Colombia. They grow on the tagua palm, and it is the seeds which are utilised commercially in the manufacture of buttons, poker chips, umbrella handles, and other articles which can be made from this vegetable ivory substitute for the elephant tusk. The ivory nut weighs up to ten kilogrammes, growing as large as a fully developed cocoanut with the husk on, and each nut contains half a dozen or more of the useful seeds, each the size of a small potato. The annual production runs well over 30,000 tons.

The novice who is about to use the knife on a newly shot stag should be reminded that he must press one horn into the ground and hold the other firmly with the left hand. Animals considered stone dead have often shown that they had a "kick" in them, and that they could use their heads and legs to some purpose. A wound from the antler of a stag may prove very troublesome and take a long time to heal. A slight scratch or abrasion of the skin, if only blood is drawn, may cost a man a few nights' sleep before cicatrisation is completed. Being well aware of the risk entailed, all foresters and stalkers are thoroughly on their guard, and it is not often that a serious case occurs. We often hear of dogs being badly injured, and it is only in very rare instances that complete recovery follows. The hapless creatures die not infrequently of mortification or gangrene; and even when the wounds heal quite satisfactorily, so far as can be casually judged, the canine patients are never quite themselves again. It is not unusual for them to suffer for the rest of their lives from epilepsy, local paralysis, or some other disabling malady. We have known at least half a dozen dogs of various breeds which had come into too intimate contact with the pointed tines of stags, and of these only one made anything like a complete recovery. Let the stags be dead or alive, their horns are always dangerous. The poisonous properties of antlers seem to have been well known to hillsmen three hundred years ago, and are referred to in a work entitled "Venerie, or the Hunting of the Buck," published in London in 1622.

We would draw the attention of our readers to the letter appearing in our correspondence columns and would invite sportsmen to send in their views.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 7th June 1912.

When your eye falls on my miserable contribution this week you will doubtless conclude that your Vagrant has joined the "National Strike." My notes do not hold out promise of much more than what I think printers call a "few sticks of matter." It has been the dullest sort of week; practically nothing doing by any one save that ancient rascal Aquarius who has sent down the entire contents of every waterpot in his establishment. London is washed clean, but we are left without news to chronicle.

Perhaps it may interest some of your readers to learn that the humorous enterprise known as the tailors' strike has collapsed, and that those who inhabit the West End can once again indulge in the luxury of new suits. When I characterise the strike as "humorous" I mean from the standpoint of the looker on. As my pseudonym indicates, I am unaccustomed to constant changes of raiment, so I have extracted a deal of amusement from the columns and columns that have been written of the doings of the "snips," nine of whom make a man you know, while the comic cartoonists and the sketch artists at the halls have served up matter which has teemed with quiet fun. All the same, this idiotic strike has cost London master tailors £80,000 and the employees more than £30,000 in wages. On Tuesday, at a mass meeting of the London Tailors' Society, held in the London Pavilion, a resolution to go back to work on the old terms was carried by a large majority.

This means that the failure of the strike has been complete. A vast loss has been inflicted on the trade, the workers have suffered the loss of wages, and nothing whatever has been achieved in the way of improving their conditions of work. The masters who have stood firm throughout the strike, will now consider the men's grievances—which they refused to do while the workers persisted in so unreasonable an attitude.

Nineteen coaches at the meeting of the Coaching Club in Hyde Park last Saturday is a sure indication of that revival in four-in-hand driving which has been noted since the International Horse Show drew attention to the pastime by its important competitions. This most satisfactory meet took place an hour afternoon at the old rendezvous by the Powder Magazine, and it was also notable for the large attendance of the general public in motor cars and on foot. The steady muster of the coaches—the teams fresh and splendidly turned out, the members of the club wearing their blue coats with gold buttons, and the ladies in smart gowns and headdress—is always a most interesting sight, and on this occasion with the weather fine it was as keenly enjoyed as ever.

Och Shure! there's the Derby; that may give me a paragraph. What a remarkable race it was! And though most of the unusual incidents occurred before the race, the issue itself provided something noteworthy in that the "grey mare was the better horse" for once. Tagalie was the fifth filly to win the Derby, the others having been Eleanor, Blink Bonny, Shot Over and Signorinetta.

The last grey which figured at all prominently in the chief classic was the French-bred Holocauste, which, after being regarded as possessing an excellent chance of victory, broke its leg when coming round Tattenham Corner. Followers of racing have a decided prejudice against greys and not since 1821 has an animal of this colour—but not a mare—been successful in the most important race in the world. This was Gustavus.

This year's Derby was not a great race either in the time done or the closeness of the struggle, or in the class of the horses engaged. But it was the Derby, the great democratic national holiday, and the sun shone on it, while the King's horse was by no means disgraced.

But ah me! how the times change, and how practically all that relates to the Derby changes with them. Petrol has turned a picnic into a procession. The road to the Derby—the subject of so many pens and pencils—is now but a shadow of its former self. It is not now necessary to rise with the lark in order to reach Epsom, and ten years of taxicabs have completely changed the look of the roads on Derby Day.

The procession from London no longer begins at breakfast-time. It reaches its climax nearer the lunch hour. Until eleven or twelve the men on point duty in Epsom's quaint old main street had little to do except to direct pedestrians, who poured out of the two stations within a stone's throw of the centre of the town. The four-in-hands came later, given a long start by the powerful motors racing behind, and carrying City men from the Stock Exchange.

The revival of coaching was reflected in the number of fashionable equipages drawn by splendid horses, which clattered by to the music of the posthorn, bearing to the course members of the Coaching Club and their friends. Nor is the donkey quite extinct. The fastest donkey of the morning was drawing a cart with two young costers perched on the front, and the manner in which the costers raced by some of the slower vehicles evoked shouts of delight from spectators on the side walks. But in front, behind and through it all was the stink of the petrol and the abominable hooting and braying of the cars.

It is announced that seven hundred "leading" actors and actresses will take part in the theatrical garden party at the Botanic Gardens. In view of the number, one is tempted to inquire what is a leading actor? The American army is believed to consist entirely of generals, and it would seem that the English stage must be peopled only by actors and actresses of leading position. One may be quite sure that none of the seven hundred will demur to the distinction; they will one and all recognise the propriety of their selection. What is to be feared is that there are at least another seven hundred leading actors and actresses who have been inadvertently left out. The really well-known prominent and popular representatives of the profession—its acknowledged leaders—cannot be fewer than fourteen hundred.

In "Gipsy Love," produced by Mr. George Edwards at Daly's Theatre on Saturday night the music is decidedly the thing. Herr Franz Lehar, the composer of "The Merry Widow," is in this new work both very Viennese and very ambitious and musicianly. His score is full of daintily orchestrated after-dinner melodies, but it has, too, breadth and dignity and imagination. "Gipsy Love" is indeed a light opera of real distinction.

The scene is laid in Hungary, and it is probable that Captain Basil Hood found it necessary to bowdlerise as well as anglicise the story. Ilona, the daughter of Dragotin, a Roumanian noble, is fascinated by the handsome gipsy Jozsi, on the day of her betrothal to the most desirable but rather tame Jonel. She bolts with the gipsy, and is soon disillusioned. He is unstable and fickle as the wind and her rescue is effected by the resourceful Englishwoman, Lady Babby, who sets up a counter irritant. She starts a flirtation with Jozsi, as well equipped with experience as he himself, and Ilona returns home wiser and sadder.

With two of the motives of the drama Herr Lehar succeeds superbly. The passion and sorrow of the child Ilona are expressed with fine feeling, and the gipsy themes sung by Jozsi and in a wild duet by Jozsi and Lady Babby have a riot of colour that is exciting and stimulating. Miss Sari Petrass, a young Hungarian singer, scored a complete success on Saturday as Ilona. Here is an artist who can sing and can act, and has none of the tricks of musical comedy. She was evidently and naturally very nervous, but she overcame the difficulties of playing in a foreign language in a perfectly surprising manner, and her charm and sincerity were delightful. Mr. Robert Michaelis as the gipsy sang splendidly, and acted with a real sense of character. Nambypambyism would have killed the part and the play, but Mr. Michaelis work with a zest. Mr. Harry Dearth in the character of an innkeeper added distinction to the production with his resonant bass voice and his artistic method. His drinking song is one of Herr Lehar's best numbers, and it could not have been sung better. Another of the moments of "Gipsy Love" is the trio, "A Little Maiden,' and this again was really sung (not spoken in tune) by Miss Petrass, Mr. Michaelis, and Mr. Dearth.

Miss Gertie Millar as Lady Babby was delicious. The music does not, of course, suit her tiny winsome method like the carefully prepared musical comedy ditties that have made her famous, but she is always humorous, always attractive, always intelligent—and she dances well.

Mr. W. H. Berry is an established favourite at Daly's, but he has never been so funny as he was on Saturday as Dragotin. His gags were clever and something new, and who can ask more? Pretty little Miss Mabel Russell made her reappearance after a long absence from the stage, and is as fascinating as ever: and clever little Mr. Lauri de Frece got every ounce of fun out of a difficult part.

Symbolism is the latest thing to strive for in Arts. A school has arisen, tired of "the tyrannies of Nature," and demanding "a glimpse of the soul behind all things." So, at least, Mr. Wyndham Lewis has informed a contemporary. He has "evolved" a school of Symbolism, and in order that the esoteric public may know what Symbolism is, he told a story about a savage who, having sketched a man in a long coat and top hat to represent a missionary, realised that something was wanting. The missionary's coat had two long rows of buttons, which greatly impressed our savage; but instead of drawing them on the coat he encircled the entire sketch with a double row of buttons. That is Symbolism. Why a wretched missionary should wear a top hat and two rows of buttons in a South Sea island is not very plain; but there the buttons were, and they enabled the savage to get (presumably) a glimpse of the missionary's soul. Surely after that Symbolism ought to become a vogue. If instead of painting things as they are the artist merely records his impressions, a dab of blue or a streak of red will serve to symbolise scenes and emotions that in the conventional, old-fashioned, silly way, would have been represented with much realistic detail. You can nearly always render the soul behind things with a vague, indefinite splash. For that splash, Symbolism is just as good a name as any other.

Lesser Kudu and Gerenuk.

On the way back to Manders I shot a klipspringer, the first I had seen, on the Jerato Pass—a quaint little animal with short straight horns and a greenish coat that is composed not of hair or fur but regular bristles rather loosely put in.

At M.—I had a last try for lesser kudu, taking out half-a-dozen men to drive as a last resort if necessary. I seemed to be in luck, for it was not long before we came across a bull with a fair head about 80 yards away; he was in the thick bush and I could see nothing but the tips of his horns, but he had seen us, so thinking he would be off the next moment I risked a shot at where I judged his shoulder ought to be. But his shoulder was not there, or else the bullet was turned, and he went away untouched, with the wonderful graceful bounds of his kind, then as a last chance I sent the men round to make a detour and try a beat. As on the ground my view was too limited, I looked for a good tree and climed up, only to beat a hasty retreat ingloriously driven out by a vicious colony of red ants. The white ants were less disobliging and presently one of their loftly edifices provided me with a fairly secure perch and a good view. After half an hour the beat began and I soon gathered from the cries that kudu were afoot. At length a bull appeared walking quietly, and as soon as I could get a moderately clear shot I fired as he passed at about 60 yards: at the shot he staggered and gave a bound, then walked slowly towards me, not knowing whence the sudden shock had come. He stood at about 40 yards and a bullet in the throat brought him down. My first bullet had hit him a little too high.

The following day I bagged my best gerenuk (14-inch horns). The gerenuk is an animal deserving of special notice. Reckoned among the gazelles it is very distinct from any of them, noticeably in respect of the extraordinary length of neck which enables it, standing on its hind legs, to browse off branches six feet or more from the ground. Hence the name occasionally given it of "giraffe-gazelle." Though sometimes found in fairly open country the gerenuk is more of a bush lover than the typical gazelles from which it differs further in that the females possess no horns. And its invariable gait when alarmed, a trot with long neck extended horizontally to the front and head low, is far from elegant and very unlike the graceful bounds of the dhero. One of the commonest antelopes of Somaliland, the gerenuk is generally looked upon as one of the most difficult to shoot. The buck's horns are not long and are difficult to make out as he stands staring at you with head thrown back, usually against a bad background of tree or bush, and by the time you have made up your mind that his head is worth having, he has moved on. If he stand, again there is much the same difficulty of picking him out from the family which almost always accompanies him. If you can decide as to the quality of the buck's head when you first sight him, well and good; but many's the gerenuk that I have followed and never fired at. On the other hand gerenuk when alarmed have a habit of trotting in a circle instead of going right away, and as antelopes go are, I think, decidedly stupid, so that sometimes approaching them is the simplest thing possible.

One morning one of the camel men said he had seen a leopard go and lie down under a thick bush. Pity there was none to mark my circumspect approach. Paradox in hand, backed up by a shikari with a second rifle; then at a glimpse of part of the outline of a round head in the shadow—bang; and I had slain a grey wild cat!

That night my tied-up goat was killed by a hyena that made an unusually sudden and determined attack and could not be stopped. Then there was pandemonium: two or three hyenas wanted their share, while I sat watching to take vengeance on any of the foul brood. But whenever one approached the kill, another would chase him away to the accompaniment of weird screams alternating with peals of that demoniac yet horrible human laughter which heard at such close quarters one could not fail to "appreciate." When at length something did approach the kill to receive a charge of S. S. G., it was only a jackal of the handsome black-backed species. Though he was not responsible for that crime there were sure to have been others at his door, for this particular jackal often destroys lambs and kids and I have twice known one attack a full-grown goat.

The Kiso.

The only water available had been very bad so I was glad when on the 7th August we reached a spot called K.—where were several pools of clear water in a clump of trees on the edge of an open plain. It was a charming camping place and I determined to make it my base of operations for a week or two.

That night as I was sitting up in a small zariba outside the camp, my goat was attacked by what I thought was a large leopard. Overmindful of my experience at M., I fired in too much of hurry at the face of the beast which was all I could see; with the result that I did not make sure of my foresight, and shot just over its head, possibly grazing it, but did no damage and the marauder was gone. The pugs in the morning showed it to have been no leopard but a lioness.

It was a bad "let off" though an extremely easy thing to do. But consolation was in store. At day break an old man turned up with an interesting bit of news: a lion had invaded his zariba early in the night, knocked down (without hurting her) a woman milking a goat, and jumped the zariba fence taking a sheep with him. We started at once for the "karia" which was only a mile and a half away and inspected the spot where the lion had jumped the zariba fence with the sheep. I could not discover exactly where or how he had entered the zariba, though the Somalis said he had jumped in; but it was perfectly clear that he had jumped out carrying the sheep, at a spot where the thorn fence was from 4½ feet to 5 feet high and had not merely forced a way through a week point in the fence. This was interesting in view of the fact that more than one authority has stated that a lion never jumps a zariba fence. He may not do so in other parts of Africa; but in Somali-land, where for centuries the lion has known the thorn zariba as the universal obstacle between him and the native's flocks, it is beyond question that he does so frequently.

It was about 7 A.M. when we started from the karia on the trail, that of an adult male lion. It was plain sailing to the spot, about a thousand yards away, where he had finished off the sheep; then the real work began. We knew that our quarry had dined well, he had demolished the whole sheep, and we hoped in consequence that he had not gone far. Great as is the weight of a big lion, he remains a cat, and his walking tread is marvellously light; this time, moreover, there was but a single animal, and the tracking was correspondingly difficult: a great deal of the ground too which we traversed was a clay soil with a sun-baked wind-swept surface which rarely retained any impression at all. And the tracks went on as though our lion had eaten nothing for a week. So on we had to go with frequent checks when the spoor was temporarily lost or to examine likely bits of cover. At length we came to more and more open country; trees but hardly any grass or bush at all. We began to be afraid that he was lying under a single tree and would detect us in the distance and be off, so Abdilleh put a man up on the pony ready to ride and try and round him up if necessary. However he was not required: bush and high grass began to appear again, and at 2 P.M. after seven hours' tracking we came to a patch of durr grass, growing round a couple of thorn trees, that looked really promising, though from its shape not a very easy one for a single gun to attack. After walking all round it studying the ground I took position behind a thorn-bush at the apex of the irregular triangle formed by the cover. Here I commanded the two most probable lines of the enemy's advance, myself more or less concealed. Abdilleh placed the ·400 ready cocked, leaning up against the bush beside me and then went off to instruct Hendaleh and Elmi whereto fire the grass first. We did not yet know for certain that the lion was there, so it was with a sudden thrill that I shall never forget that, barely a minute after Abdilleh's departure, I saw the top of a great shaggy head and neck come silently into view over the grass and stand, about 12 yards to my right front. We had to deal with an old hand this time; he had evidently been wide awake, and had heard the shikaris on the other side. He had no notion of waiting to have his mane singed; and having, on principle, a dislike to the presence of human beings unless in the occasional necessary rôle of commissariat suppliers, he was looking to see if the coast was clear before moving on. That did not suit me, and I fired, aiming for his partly exposed neck, none of the body being visible. He ought to have dropped on the spot, but, as it turned out, I had not made sufficient allowance for the thickness of his mane, and the bullet passed through the muscles at the back of his neck, just missing the spinal cord it should have found, and doing no real damage. As the shot he dashed back into cover with a rumbling growl, then, changing his mind, swung round and came out past me at a gallop at only four paces distance. He did not know where the shot had come from and, close as he was, did not see me at all. I let him get well past and then gave him the second barrel behind the shoulder at eight yards. He dropped in his tracks. I snatched up the ·400 to "mak siccar," but there was no need. The Paradox had scored again and the King of Beasts lay at my feet: a great beast with fine mane, nearly all black. His length was 9 feet 3½ inches as he lay, and the weight of his fore arms had to be felt to be realised. That day's tracking, especially on the part of Elmi, was, I think, the finest I have ever seen.

For a week or so I explored the country within a 20-mile radius of K.—but there were too many karias about and there was little game, even dik-dik were scarce. On the Kotunwein Plain itself I shot an oryx and could always get an soul when I wanted meat, though that sometimes involved the expenditure of several cartridges on account of the continuous strong winds that swept the plain and rendered a steady rifle an impossibility, while 250 yards was as close a range as the soul would permit. One evening we met a Somali with a little gerenuk fawn about four days old. No doubt he was going to eat it, though most Somalis profess to look upon gerenuk flesh as unlawful—why they have no very definite idea. I ransomed the poor little thing, but it did not take kindly to goat's milk and only lived two days. It was a disappointment, as I had ideas of trying to send it Home; I believe no specimen of the gerenuk has ever reached Europe alive. This was a dear wee thing, much more dainty and elegant than a baby soul which I should have mentioned we had found a few days before. The latter made no difficulty about adopting a foster-mother and was quite at home in the camp.

HARD TIMES IN JOURA WHEN AFTER IBEX.

As there are two islands of Joura (or Gioura) on the map of Greece I had better begin by saying that I do not refer to the ancient Gyaros, near Delos, but to that once known as Gerontia, which lies to the extreme north east of the modern kingdom of Greece—the furthest of any size in that direction belonging to that State.

I had had difficulties in the beginning of the year 1897 to get a permit to shoot on this island at all. This pointed, in my opinion, to the fact that the ibex were carefully preserved, but, as will be seen hereafter, the permit was a farce. Anybody and everybody shoots at Joura. The pity was that I had not gone to the island before the war, as since that period everybody has a Gras rifle, and all game is ruthlessly destroyed.

Flushed with the moderate success we had obtained at Antimilo, where I had had the satisfaction of knowing that if the two bucks I had killed were not extra fine specimens they were, at any rate, the largest then on the island, we made our way by the Piræus, and inside the island of Euboea, to Volo, and from Volo to Scopelos. It was a decidedly leisurely voyage—a day and night at Syra, a day at Pirmus, a day at Volo, a night at anchor near Thermopylæ (there being no lights in these waters), and several hours at Chalcis, waiting for the favourable turning tide to negotiate the narrow passage of the Negropont, extended it to no less than six days. It was rough nearly all the time, and rough weather on Greek steamboats, and especially with Greek fellow-passengers, is not an enviable experience.

However, it was over at last, and at Skopelos, where we arrived on 18th December, Mr. Gialeraki's relative, Mr. Stergios Stergion, whom we had advised of our arrival, met us, and carried us off to his house. Here we found an American citizen, a native of Skopelos, who was able to interpret for us. We were obliged to go to his house also, and to that of the local doctor—a great Nimrod, who had a stuffed seal to exhibit, which he said he had shot. He was very anxious to go with us to Joura, and presented V. with a silver cartouche-box in the hope of gaining his end; but our dragoman persuaded him that we had no room in our tent, which was true enough. It did not take us long to come to terms with the skipper of a cutter, whom Mr. Stergios had in waiting, and also with a ruffian who was foisted on to us as a shikari, but who could do nothing but eat. We arranged to start early next morning. Of course, there were endless delays, but at last we did get away, and sailed for Joura. Perhaps I should rather have written "rowed," for the day, though lovely, was one of dead calm, and most of our progress was due to the sweeps which the "Evangelist" carried. Our course lay close along the shores of a chain of small islands, the names of which I have forgotten. Towards night the captain wished to anchor, but we insisted on being at Joura in time to shoot the next day. When we had put up our camp-beds in the hold, on the shingle which served as ballast, a little breeze sprung up, and we arrived at our destination soon after daylight.

There is no landing place of any kind at Joura, as far as I saw. The place where we disembarked was all steep rocks, on which we had to jump, watching our opportunity. The landing of baggage is a great difficulty.

The following description of Joura, from the pen of Professor Knotek, who collected there for the Bosnian Museum, and shot a buck, doe and kid, appeared in 1896 in the Osterreichische Forst und Jagd-Zeitung:

"Joura, the most northerly of the Sporades, with the exception of the small, flat, volcanic islet of Psathoura, is roughly of the shape of an isosceles triangle, whose height is thrice the length of the base.* This latter, with a small bay in it, is to the south. It is of limestone formation. The southern and western, which are also the most accessible, sides run down in a steep slope, cut up by valleys of varying size, to the sea, whereas a sheer fall of from three to four hundred metres runs along the whole east coast. Fearful precipices and cliffs one to two hundred metres high, descending in terraces to the sea, countless ravines and clefts, give the whole a wildly romantic appearance. Two parallel ridges, dividing in the centre of the island, shut in a narrow valley running in a north-westerly direction, whilst the main ridge and the more northerly of those above mentioned two, enclose a hollow heaped with masses of rock, amongst which a wretched grove of holm-oaks grows. The other grove on the western slopes has been mostly felled. A few valleys running down to the sea give the only, and that a dangerous, means of access to the main ridge, and the numerous and great cliffs, with tracks hardly giving room for the feet, make it impossible for anyone not an intrepid, experienced mountaineer to ascend, even with difficulty. How many native sportsmen must have paid for their passion with death here! †

"The almost inaccessible parts of the east coast are the regular dwelling places of these ibex, where they shelter from the oppressive heat of the day under rocks in the numerous hollows, or in the shadow of a leafy bush (Acer creticum) or holm-oak. True nocturnal animals, they climb the precipices at sunset, and go into the valleys for their food. Many, however, remain among the precipices, and seek their living on the grassy terraces and slopes. The bushes before referred to, that grow on the precipices, are eaten off as high as the ibex can reach, showing that they are favourite food with these animals. In one spot alone, about in the middle of the east coast, a blue slate crops out, and in this, close to the sea, a little spring, round which a rock basin has been built, rises.‡ The number of deeply-worn game-paths leading to it shows how the goats use the only fresh water accessible to them.

"Although their flight over the stone heaps and less-broken ground is a rapid one, it is not so mad as that of the chamois under similar conditions, nor do they cover so much ground at a single bound. A herd, when going along undisturbed, has, if seen from a distance, an extraordinary resemblance both in colour and movement to a herd of chamois in summer coat, especially when there are no old buck ibex in the herd, so much so that one must ask oneself whether they are really wild goat or chamois.

"Although the dislike of the ibex for the domestic goat (there are now seven of the latter on the island) is so strong, and the places used by the latter are so carefully avoided by the former, there are certainly some crossbred goats, and these can be recognised by their light colour. No doubt these are the descendants of escaped tame goats of an earlier day. Only a few years ago there were six to eight hundred ibex on the island, and now there are perhaps two hundred to two hundred and fifty. Although a good many are shot every year, they multiply rapidly in this mild climate and the time when this species also ceases to exist should be far distant.

* I compared it to the left hand, palm upwards, the bay (our landing place) being between thumb fore-finger, and several promontories to the westward the fingers.

† This is somewhat poetical, and in my opinion the writer exaggerated the danger. It is, however, the fact that Pulios, then shepherd at Joura and Knotek's guide, had a fall not long after this visit, and his gun going off wounded him in the chest. He got over this, but only to be imprisoned shortly afterwards for systematic smuggling.

‡ I must confess I saw nothing of this. A pool in the centre of the island, mostly frozen over during our stay, was obviously of such a nature as to be dry in summer.

The ELGIN MILLS COMPANY, Ltd., CAWNPORE.

"Although the Government prohibits the shooting of these animals, the islet is so remote and unwatched that the inhabitants of the adjoining island of Chelidromia can satisfy their longing for ibex meat without meeting with any opposition. On certain days of the year great drives takes place, in which almost the whole male population of Chelidromia takes part. A part of them cover the passes on the northern ridge, the rest in a long-armed line of beaters drive the game up to the north of the island. If the goats turn back from the guns it is to be greeted with volleys from the beaters and driven on again till they succeed in breaking out. It is lucky for the ibex that the weapons and flint-lock guns and muzzle-loaders are as bad as possible. Besides man, these goats suffer from the eagles, a pair of whom breed every year in an inaccessible eyrie in the cliffs."

Leaving our people to pitch the camp, and the cutter to depart to the neighbouring island of Pelagonisi, where there is a sheltered anchorage (Fiedler, writing in 1834 says of Joura that it had a good harbour; but it certainly no longer exists), we started with our rifles. Twenty minutes took us to the abandoned monastery which, however, we found inhabited for the time by a woman and her family in charge of the sheep on the island. We found, too, the evidence of the existence of ibex on the island in the shape of the skins and horns of three small bucks hanging on the verendah of the chapel. Encouraged by this sight we proceeded, and half a mile further on we divided forces, I to skirt the west coast and my companion to try his luck further east.

If there was one thing I did not expect to find in Joura it was roads; but that was just what I did find—miles on miles of bridle-paths, carefully constructed, and with good gradients, leading to almost all parts of the island. So little have labour and trouble been grudged that in many places they are actually supported on timbers driven into the face of the cliff.

For centuries charcoal-burning has been carried on here, and still is, though now only a few scattered trees remain; and the roads have been constructed by the charcoal-burners for the double purpose of collecting their wood and removing their charcoal.

On this beautiful morning I was only too thankful for them, and walked pleasantly along enjoying the scene. In the deep blue sea all around me lay islands, those we had passed on the previous day to my left, and backed by a chain of hills covered with snow, those of Euboea. Straight ahead, over the low islet of Psathoura and its lighthouse, rose a glittering white cone, Mount Athos. On the left, behind some mere rocky islets, was the outline of the large Turkish island of Lemnos.

Unfortunately for my purpose, my frequent spyings with the glass, likely though the ground was, were vain. I crossed a big ravine (the foot of the valley described by Professor Knotek), down which the path was most skilfully traced, and at the bottom of which a pair of doe-horns were lying, and then made my way up the opposite face, where this path ended. I calculated I had followed it eight miles, but this was probably an over-estimate, though it winds much. I now turned to my right, and followed a sheep-track to the eastern side of the island. Here the seaward cliffs are sheer and the ground more promising; but nothing did I see till, coming on my partner's tracks, I realised I was wasting my time, and made for camp, which I found pitched in a hollow, perhaps a quarter of a mile above our landing place.

My companion's luck had been as mine, and we were both somewhat despondent, especially when the shepherding family came into camp at night and said they had not seen any goats for a month, and that the charcoal-burners from Skopelos, being armed with breech-loading Gras rifles, had killed them nearly all. Nevertheless they were confident they could show us some next day.

So, with renewed hopes, we started before eight o'clock on the following morning, taking my path of the day before. Our party consisted of V. and myself, Dimitri, the eldest shepherd-boy, and an individual we had brought from Skopelos to make himself useful, but whose forte turned out to be eating and sleeping.

Shortly after crossing the big ravine Dimitri dropped like a setter on topping a ridge. We were soon beside him, and saw our first Joura goats—a doe with her kid*. The sheep in the ravine staring at us had alarmed her, but not much, so she made her way slowly up the opposite face. The Joura does are very game-looking, and have much of the gazelle about them. Their colour is uniform—chocolate brown, with black stripe on shoulder and back. After having watched them some time we pursued our way. When we reached the last ridge I had attained the day before, where the path ends, Dimitri left us, and went on in front to look out. Presently we heard a great rattling of stones and the boy returned in much exitement, pointing down to seaward. Glasses were out at once, but my partner saw them first. "It's only a doe and a kid!" "Oh, no, it's a herd! "There's a good buck!" were his successive exclamations. By this time I had picked them up also. There were eleven in all, and two of them were bucks with the wide-sweeping divergent horns characteristic of these ibex, but they struck me as more blue-grey than those of Antimilo. Never shall I forget them, and never, alas! did I see them better. They were fully alarmed and at gaze. We decided that a stalk was impossible, and that all we could do was to attempt a drive. We sent the lads to the left to make a circuit and come upon them from behind, and crept forwards ourselves towards the beasts. Being on the sunny side of the valley I must have been very conspicuous, for the herd worked away uneasily from me over the skyline. Here, however, they were met face to face by our beaters, and reappeared, but only to dash at a tremendous pace down to the sea and round the corner, never having been much, if at all, within half a mile of us. I have always felt since that our laziness was to blame for this discomfiture, for if one of us had gone with the men he would probably have had a chance at the shortest of ranges, for the lads came out right among the herd.

We now sent the "individual" back with a characteristic 24in. head which I had picked up, and followed the same line as on the previous day. When we reached the eastern cliffs my partner shirked, and left me to go on alone.

Even here, at the foot of the cliffs, were excellent paths, and when I got nearly to the end of these the lad made a good spy of two bucks in the sheer face of cliff above us. Neither was as good as those of the morning, one being one of the light coloured ones referred to by Prof. Knotek, but the other was a shootable beast.

Dimitri, in pantomime, suggested a circuit and an approach up one of two or three aiguilles of rock in front of us. I accepted his suggestion, not without rather a dismal foreboding of what was to follow; and I was right.

At first the way lay over a succession of moraines consisting mostly of enormous blocks; but then we had to tackle the sheer rock. I may give some idea of what it was by saying that twice I climbed trees and swung myself out of their upper branches on to the ledges above in preference to following my guide. Imagine my disgust at finding, when we finally emerged in a saddle between two points of rock, that we were still a fair rifle-shot from the bottom of the cliff and the goats were four or five hundred feet above us. Dimitri signed that the shot should be taken, as it would drive the goats downwards; so I put up the last sight and let drive. It had not the desired effect, however, and the bucks soon came to a stand again, looking downwards to see where the danger lay. I fired once more, and at the shot they went on upwards—the best one, at which I had aimed, very awkwardly; but this I attributed to the bad ground. Indeed, from below the cliffs looked almost absolutely sheer.

As we went home through the still evening to camp, the lad drew my attention to a distant sound—the clash of horned heads meeting in conflict. The bucks must have been nearly, if not quite, a mile away, but the noise echoed clearly amongst the hill-tops.

On our return to camp (and our interpreter) Dimitri insisted that I had broken the leg of the buck which I had fired.. This, if true, was a record for me, for the range must have been nearer five hundred yards than four. I could only regret not having used my glass.

*According to Dr. Lorenz, Liberman, the kids of the Joura ibex are born in November, the Antimilo ones in January, the Cretan in May.

The morning of the 22nd was dull and threatening. Nevertheless, we started early—V. to the place where we had seen the big herd, and I, with the boy Dimitri, to that where we had heard the bucks fighting the evening before, which was on the southern side of the big ravine. I had not gone very far before the boy's mother and a small brother, perhaps seven or eight years old, joined us.—SNAFFLE in Shooting Times.

THE BEST GAME.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It may, perhaps, be of great interest to your readers, and to the sporting public in general, if a debate were to be started, in the columns of your valuable paper, as to which of the outdoor games is the best.

By best, I mean the one which approaches nearest to an ideal.

An ideal game, in my opinion, is one in which (1) there is no element of chance, i.e., it is purely skill throughout; (2) which requires the greatest amount of accomplishment, i.e., mental and muscular education in acquiring proficiency; (3) which calls for the greatest amount of exercise of mind and body; (4) in which there is every scope for the keenest contention, both mental and physical, and (5) in which the risks of permanent bodily injury are smallest.

Of course enthusiasts in each of the outdoor games will each claim the palm for their particular fancy. Personally I should like very much to know which is the best outdoor game. But I shall also want to know why it is the best. We can only arrive at a decision, by having different views, and I look forward with interest to a contest which I hope you will institute and further in your columns, and that it will awaken the combativeness and enthusiasm of all your readers, and influence them to air their views.

SEE THAT TIN?

It contains a Wonderful Treatment for Horses!

CURES LAMENESS IN HORSES

A.G.—2.

NO MORE LAME HORSES!

Nothing short of miraculous are the Cures which are daily being effected by users of "EQUINOINT"—the Scientific Remedy which entirely dispenses with Firing. Horses given up by the Vet. as hopeless are made sound and well again without any scar or blemish. It makes a Tendon like a Rod of Steel. Its popularity is rapidly becoming world-wide. Do you wonder at it when you know that "EQUINOINT" will CURE the worst possible case of SPRUNG TENDON, CURBS, SPLINTS, BOG SPAVIN, THOROPIN, WIND-GALLS, SPRUNG HOCK, or any other cause of Lameness?

REMEMBER—"EQUINOINT"
CAUSES NO PAIN and LEAVES NO BLEMISH.
CURES BY ABSORPTION, and IS EASILY APPLIED. ALLOWS YOU TO WORK THE HORSE DURING TREATMENT.
IS BACKED UP BY ALL THE PROMINENT HORSE-OWNERS IN ENGLAND AND ON THE CONTINENT.

MANCHESTER.

THE proceedings last Friday were most interesting and in the big race of the day a rattling finish resulted in a half length verdict for Donnithorne. Mushroom made a good race of it and finished third, evidence that he has not lost his capacity, as was beginning to be suspected. Ten started. It by no means follows that a horse is unlucky because he is barely beaten, but Bronzino has at any rate been very close up for some valuable stakes. He lost the St. Leger by no more than a head—the Derby Cup last autumn—in which he really may be described as having been unfortunate—by half a length, and this valuable prize by the same distance. Mr. Fairie's King Mida, at least beat Mr. J. B. Joel's Lycaon and Mr. H. P. Whitney's All Gold, both of whom had adherents. Results:—

THE FRIDAY SELLING HANDICAP.—Of 150sovs. 5 furlongs straight.

Mr. M. Hale's ch f Powder and Paint, by Long Tom—Morland, 3yrs., 7st. 7lb. (car. 7st. 8lb.) ... ... J. H. Martin 1
Capt. Bewicke's Golden City, 4yrs., 6st. 12lb. ... ... J. Doyle 2
Mr. J. K. Miller's Charis, 4yrs., 6st. 11lb.... A. Duller 3

Eight ran.

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Powder and Paint, 7 to 2 Golden City.

Won by a length; a length and a half between second and third.

THE CITY PLATE.—Of 200sovs. 5 furlongs, straight.

Mr. E. Hulton's b c Thistleton, by Soliman—Fair Jean, 9st. 7lb. ... ... F. Wootton 1
His Majesty's Averse, 8st. 7lb. ... H. Jones 2
Mr. L. de Rothschild's Kanran, 8st. 10lb.... H. Watts 3

Five ran.

BETTING: 5 to 2 on Thistleton, 3 to 1 agst. Averse, 100 to 6 Kanran.

Won by three lengths; five lengths separated second and third.

WINCHESTER

.22 Caliber Automatic Rifle.

This is the only automatic rifle using rimfire ammunition, and consequently it is inexpensive to shoot. It's rapidity of fire makes it a great game getter, and for shooting rabbits, birds and other small game, it has no equal. For running game it is particularly desirable, as a succession of rapid shots may be fired with accuracy while holding the rifle on the game. It holds ten strong shots, each of which is fired by simply pulling the trigger. Shoot one and you'll realize it's great effectiveness. It is strongly made and simple to shoot.

Winchester Rifles are Sold by All Dealers.

BETTING: 13 to 8 on Nesta, 5 to 1 agst. Tom Drake.

Won by three lengths; two lengths divided second and third.

With the exception of the Salford Borough Handicap, no item of particular importance helped to fill the bill at Manchester on Saturday. However, backers could afford to glance appreciatively at the returns, as favourite after favourite came to their rescue, and sent visitors home on good terms with themselves. The executive, too, have reason to congratulate themselves on a most successful meeting. Results:—

Nine ran.

BETTING: 5 to 2 on Proud Scot, 6 to 1 Atty, 8 to 1 Equitable 100 to 8 the others.

Dead heat; three lengths between second and third. Stakes divided.

Sensational as were the incidents leading up to the Derby, the great contest had a very prosaic ending, as Mr. W. Raphael's grey filly, Tagalie, led from start to finish, and won very easily from Mr. Ludwig Neumann's Jaeger, with the latter several lengths ahead of Mr. August Belmont's Tracery. The royal candidate Pintadeau lost third place by a very narrow margin.

Mr. Buchanan's Jingling Geordie and Farman finished next, in front of the favourite, Sweeper II., and then straggled in other knots comprising the remainder of the twenty competitors. The afternoon was bright and breezy, and the clouds which swept over the picturesque downs withheld the showers generally anticipated. Results:—

CATERHAM PLATE—Of 200sovs.; for two-year-olds. 5 furlongs.

Mr. F. Cripps's Wisemac	Trigg	0

(Winner trained by D. Waugh, Newmarket.)

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Sweeper II., 8 to 1 Jaeger, 10 to 1 White Star, 100 to 8 each Pintadeau and Tagalie, 100 to 7 each Mordred and Catmint, 20 to 1 each Jingling Geordie and Javelin 33 to 1 Lorenzo, 50 to 1 each Hall Cross, Kosciusko and Farman, 66 to 1 Orchestrion, 100 to 1 Tracery, 100 to 1 the others.

Place betting in proportion.

Draw for places.—No. 1 (inside on the rails) Javelin, 2 Catmint, 3 Tracery, 4 White Star, 5 Royal Mail, 6 Sweeper II., 7 Orchestrion, 8 Wise Mac, 9 Mordred, 10 Kosciusko, 11 Aleppo, 12 Pintadeau, 13 Chill October, 14 Tagalie, 15 Hall Cross, 16 Cylba, 17 Farman, 18 Jingling Geordie, 19 Lorenzo, 20 Jaeger.

Jaeger, Cylba, and Mordred dwelt, but soon joined the field. Tagalie, in the centre, made play from Orchestrion, Pintadeau, Jaeger, Jingling Geordie, Hall Cross, Javelin, Royal Mail, Kosciusko, Mordred, Sweeper II., Lorenzo, White Star, Tracery, Catmint, and Aleppo, with Wisemac and Farman bringing up the rear for a quarter of a mile, when Tagalie was clear of Orchestrion, White Star, Jaeger, Jingling Geordie, Mordred, Sweeper II., Lorenzo, Hall Cross, Catmint, Tracery, Pintadeau, Farman, Javelin, and Kosciusko the last of all now being Wiesmse. These positions underwent little change till another two furlongs had been covered, when Orchestrion lost his place and Jaeger and Mordred passed White Star, Jingling Geordie being next in front of Farman, Lorenza, Sweeper II., Hall Cross, Catmint, Tracery, Pintadeau, and Kosciusko, with Cylba tailed off. Descending the hill to Tattenham Corner, Mordred was beaten, Tagalie being pursued by Jaeger, Lorenzo, White Star, Jingling Geordie, Sweeper II., Pintadeau, Farman, Catmint, and Tracery. Entering the straight, White Star and Lorenzo were done with, as also was Sweeper II. a quarter of a mile from home, whereupon Tracery and Pintadeau began to close with Jaeger, but none of these could make the slightest impression on Tagalie, who made the whole of the running, and won in a canter by four lengths, two lengths separating second and third. Time—2mins. 38 4/5secs.
