Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

ENGLAND'S FINE FOOTBALL RECORD.

ENGLAND has had a great Soccer year. Not only has the International championship been won; it has been won without the loss of a single goal, this being a new experience for the wearers of the Rose. The final game in the tournament was played on 3rd April at the Crystal Palace, with Scotland as England's antagonists, and contrary to expectations, England won by two clear goals, both of which points were obtained in the first quarter of an hour.

A pleasing feature of the match was that it was patronised by Royalty. The Prince of Wales had previously shown sympathy with the sports of the people by attending two of the Services Rugby matches and the annual battle under the handling code between England and Scotland at Richmond. On the occasion under notice he made an acquaintance with the Soccer game, for, it is understood, the first time; and as events proved, he could not have selected a better encounter for becoming acquainted with the most entrancing movements of the dribbling code.

One most agreeable preliminary to the game has to be noticed. The wild and irresponsible talk of a "strike" by the English players on the eve of this National contest, or a refusal to try their best—talk largely fomented by that class of newspaper which makes accuracy of news subservient to sensationalism—was strongly resented by those players, and before the kick-off the following declaration was handed to the Press for publication:—

We, the members of the English International team, desire to declare that, notwithstanding what has appeared in the Press, there was never the slightest doubt as to our determination to play our hardest and do our best to accomplish a victory for England against Scotland, and we consider any suggestion to the contrary an insult to us individually and as a team.

This was signed by the whole of the team and the reserves. Such a declaration is just what one would expect from a body of English sportsmen. F... the professional football player is as much a ...n as any of his contemporaries, and to ...t the team would throw over their ... biggest contest of the year is, as ...lt. The rebuke which they have ... who maligned them was well ...

...land pointless, England con... clu... ...ional campaign with a very fine record ... ...wing table of results shows:—

	P.	W.	D.	L.	For	Agst.	Pts.
England ...	3	3	0	0	8	0	6
Wales	3	2	0	1	6	6	4
Scotland... ...	3	1	0	2	7	5	2
Ireland	3	0	0	3	2	12	0

Of the 32 matches played, Scotland have won 16, England 12, and 10 have been drawn. Scotland have scorded 78 goals and England 71. Thus England have still some leeway to make up, though their superiority in the current season's campaign is unmistakable.

There were critics of the Scottish team before the match was entered upon, the positions to which the criticism was most directed being full back and half back. Those responsible for it were able to plume themselves upon their judgment after the match, for Scotland's weakness at full back and at half unquestionably had much to do with their defeat. To see the way in which the English forwards burst through these line in the first half hour was enough to make the patriotic Scotsman gasp. Except perhaps McWilliam, no one seemed able to hold the English forwards at this period once they got the ball among them, and the wonder is not that England scored two goals in a quarter of an hour, but that the team were not half-a-dozen goals up before the change of ends.

It certainly was no credit to the Scottish backs that they were not; lack of accuracy in shooting and some wonderfully fine goal-keeping by Brownlie kept the England score down to two goals, and this total certainly did not represent England's share in the attack up to the interval.

It is with the second period of the game that Scotch enthusiasts had most reason to be satisfied, and concerning this part they can be excused if they think their side had not the best of luck. They certainly ought to have scored from a penalty—awarded, by the way, for what did not appear to be a flagrant case of "hands" by Pennington, and an incident moreover that occurred a little outside and not within the penalty area, so the players strongly contended—but Stark, who did not want to take the kick, made quite a feeble effort to utilise it. One header by Quinn, too, was desperately near the mark; only a save of remarkable brilliance by Hardy prevented it taking effect. Yet whereas Scotland undoubtedly did the greater share of the pressing in the second half, there was so much difference in the methods of the two sets of forwards that England, with fewer chances, were much the more dangerous nearer goal, and Brownlie even in this period had a busier time than Hardy.

The Scotch forwards attempted the close passing game too much; the Englishmen always tried to forge ahead, conveying the idea that the goal was their one and only objective. It was a contrast in methods, and the English won.

Mr. Pelissier, the leader of the troupe so well known as "The Follies," is telling the following story:—A small boy was instructed that the breast of a turkey was called the white meat and the legs the dark meat. Soon after he went to spend the afternoon with his Sunday-school teacher, a young lady of whom he was very fond. Upon returning home he was full of the good time he had had. "And what did you do at Miss A.'s?" asked his father. "Oh?" said the child, "I sat on her dark meat, and leaned my head against her white meat, and she told me lovely stories."

"You can always tell a Yorkshireman."
"Yes, but you can't tell him much!"

During the encampment of several regiments of soldiers in a certain district near London the wood and turf used for cooking purposes were carted by the neighbouring farmers. One day a donkey-cart full of turf was brought in, the driver being a country lad. As a regimental band was playing, he stood in front of the donkey and held the animal tightly by the head. Some of the "smart ones" gathered round, highly pleased, and the wit of the party asked why he "held his brother so tightly." The reply was crushing: "I'm afraid he might enlist."

Scene: First tee on golf links; distance to hole about one hundred and seventy yards.

The friend pointed out the red flag, and told him to keep his eye on the ball.

The novice took a furious swing; away went the ball, straight on the pin, ran up to the hole, and dropped in.

The beginner turned to his partner, with inexpressible relief. "Heavens!" he said, "I thought I'd missed it!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The race for the One Thousand Guineas on Friday last provided yet another big upset. His Majesty's filly, Princesse de Galles, was most fancied, but was beaten a length by Mr. L. Neumann's Electra. The winner is a bay filly by Eager—Sirenia. She ran on eight occasions last year, finishing first in four races and second in four. She won the Sandown Park Stud Produce Stakes of £1,028-10s. over five furlongs carrying 7st. 12lb. in April; the Spring T.Y.O. Stakes over the same distance at Newmarket in May carrying 9st. 2lb.; the Acorn Stakes, £930, 5 furlongs, at Epsom in June carrying 9st. 2lb.; and the Breeder's Foal Plate, £896, 6 furlongs, at Kempton Park, in September carrying 9st. She was second to Braxfield in the maiden T.Y.O. race, 4 furlongs, at Newmarket in May carrying 7lb. more: second to Duke Michael in the Great Lancashire Breeder's Produce Stakes, £1,614, 5 furlongs, at Liverpool, in July carrying 12lb. more. Second to Perola (whom she beat on Saturday) in the Rous Memorial Stakes, £1,185, 6 furlongs, both carrying 8st. 12lb.; and second to Mother-in-Law in the Autumn Breeders' Foal Plate and 1 over 5 furlongs at Manchester in September carrying 7lb. more. The One Thousand Guineas is her first appearance this year.

Mr. J. G. Dickson has been appointed a Steward of the Calcutta Turf Club during the absence of Mr. J. D. West.

The Kadur Summer Meeting, advertised to be held on the 12th and 14th May 1909, has been cancelled.

Mr. S. Griffiths, the newly appointed joint handicapper of the Calcutta Turf Club, arrived in Calcutta on Sunday. Mr. Griffiths comes from Victoria where he has a big reputation as a handicapper and is regarded as a sound judge of racing on which subject he has written many articles.

The horses purchased in Australia for Indian owners by Mr. R. G. Baldock are reported to be doing well. Peru, now the property of Mr. M. Goculdas, is well, and is expected to make a great bid for the next Viceroy's Cup. Mooltan also owned by Mr. Goculdas is now with H. Rayner who is training him in Sydney. Apoloque, who is at Poona, is to be put into work again. He has been in the vet's hands for some time and it is doubtless whether he will be fit to race again.

The first entries for the Bangalore races are very promising, the races have filled well and have attracted a better class of horse than has been seen at this meeting for many years. Calcutta and Western India are well represented and local owners are giving the meeting support. The Cup entrants are:—Retort, Mystic Circle, Clear Artist, Balayeuse, Mity, Dick, Squire Alfred, Rapier, Fitz. Gerard, and Lachlan.

For the Mysore races there are a good many new names, including two more for the Maharaja's Cup which makes ten now for that race.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar has purchased the ch aus mare Neith, who will probably represent him in the Trials and Viceroy's Cup at the end of the year. Neith is a four-year-old by Holbrook—Cleopatra, and has good performances to her credit in Australia. In November 1907 she won the Farm Stakes, 6 furlongs, at Warwick Farm, carrying 7st. 4lb. The following month at the A. J. C. Meeting she won the High-weight Handicap over a mile carrying 9st. 5lb. in 1min. 41½secs. The Christmas Handicap at the same meeting was also won by her. Carrying 9st. 8lb. she won by two lengths in 1min. 41secs. At Randwick, in January 1908, she was just beaten a head by Belfry in the Welter Handicap 1 mile. Neith carried 10st. 7lb. and Belfry 9st. 3lb. and the time for the race was 1min. 40½secs. Last December carrying 8st. Neith won the Grand Stand Stakes, 1 mile 1 furlong, at the A. J. C. meeting: won by four lengths in 1min. 55secs. She followed this up by winning the Pace Welter, 1 mile, at Sydney Tatts meeting She cantered in a length and a half in front carrying 11st. 4lb., 19lb. more than any other candidate in the race: the time was 1min. 40¾secs. In January last Neith won the Challenge Stakes, 6 furlongs, at the A. J. C. meeting, carrying 10st. 2lb., a stone heavier than any other in the race. She won by a neck in 1min. 14¼secs.

The May week at Darjeeling promises to be the usual big success. An excellent programme of amusements has been framed and besides the three days' racing there will be tennis, badminton and croquet tournaments, polo, rifle shooting matches, theatricals, dances and a flower show. The Gymkhana Club tennis tournaments were concluded last week and resulted as follows:—

Mixed Doubles.—Won by Mrs. McMillan and Mr. A. J. Shillingford, owe 30, who beat Miss Collinson and Captain Nicolay in the last round with + 4/6 of 15.

Men's Singles.—Won by Mr. R. E. Bradley +4/6 of 15, beat Colonel Pike in the last round with + 5/6 of 15.

Men's Doubles.—Won by Messrs. R. C. Hodgson and Halford + 2/6 of 15, beat Messrs. Bradley and Barker in the last round with + 3/6 of 15.

The Customs Hockey Club have won the Beighton Hockey Cup competition for the second year in succession. On Monday they played the Calcutta F.C. who also met them in the final last year, and beat them by 3 goals to 1 after an interesting game. The Customs are the hockey champions of Calcutta this year, for besides winning the Beighton Cup they annexed the senior League Trophy and have gone through the season without a defeat recorded against them.

Mr. Oswald Fynney, the resident Magistrate at Ubombo, Zululand, had the good fortune the other day to bag three lions. The Times of Natal prints a private letter to Sir Charles Saunders, in which he describes the hunt.

Two of the lions—a lioness and her mate—were fighting in Mr. Fynney's presence, and were shot without much difficulty, although the lioness charged him savagely. Regarding the third and largest lion he writes: The race was quite exciting. The lion had 200 yards to go, and I about 400 to reach the gap he was evidently making for. He didn't seem to be going hard, but I don't think I gained a foot, and he was just about to prove an easy winner by 200 yards, when, with a despairing shout, I pulled up to take my one remaining chance. To my joy, he stood and turned his crest towards me, apparently in response to my exhortation, which, I fear, was of an uncomplimentary nature.

My shot struck him on the left, at the base of his neck, and swinging round with a growl, he bolted into a thicket on his right. The dogs ran forward at the shot, and getting on the scent, they took it to the edge of the bush, where they waited for me to come up. On my doing so the plucky little beasts went in without any hesitation, and I followed, feeling quite assured that the dogs would give me due warning of the lion's presence.

The undergrowth was so thick that I could see nothing till there was a sharp bark from Nibs, a rush to my left, and I caught a glimpse of one of the dogs; so, thinking that the lion was making for the "gaku" again, I charged out of the bush (it was only about twenty yards in diameter), hoping to get a shot as he crossed the intervening space, and came on to the two terriers.

The dog went in again immediately, and as I followed him the little bitch dashed past me straight on to the lion. There was a growl, a yelp, and the little bitch landed back at my feet quite dead. Simultaneously the lion showed himself about eight paces to my left. I had him covered, and fired before he had time to do anything more than growl and look very unpleasant.

My shot struck him just about the left eye, and he went down. I reloaded my right barrel, and was ready for him as he got up. This time he tried to come on in a noisy sort of way, but my bullet went through the corner of his left eye, and, as I found afterwards, shattered the left side of his brain-box.

I followed the two others for some distance, but the scrub got so thick that it became impossible to proceed, except on hands and knees, so I gave them best. The lion was a full-grown male, with fine mane and coat; and though I did not measure him, he struck me as being of extraordinary length.

The Mysore Maharajah's birthday polo tournament will begin on Wednesday, the 16th June, and the number of ponies is limited to 18 per team. Only ponies which are the bona fide property of a player in the team, or of a member of the regiment, battery, depot, gymkhana, or club to which such player belongs, can be played. Duration of time will be six chukkers of 7½ minutes each, all in. Entries close on the 30th May. Unless four teams enter, the challenge cup will not be competed for, but only the four small cups will be given to the players of the winning team. But if any team win it three years in succession the cup is won outright and becomes that team's property. In addition to the challenge cup a small cup will be given to each player of the winning team. The tournament is open to teams from any regiment, depot, battery, or batteries, quartered in one station and to teams composed of bona fide residents who are members of any single recognised gymkhana or club.

The players of each team entering for the tournament will be considered as guests of His Highness the Maharajah on their arrival at Mysore and until the end of the tournament. Teams requiring stabling should intimate, at the time of entering, to the Honorary Secretary the number of ponies they are bringing with them.

A contemporary of John Milton is supposed to have passed away in Methuselah, the senior giant tortoise of the London Zoo. Unfortunately Methuselah was not of an observant nature, and his reminiscences, even if they could be written, would have little popular interest, notwithstanding the fact that he has lived under nine English sovereigns. We say this oldest inhabitant is "supposed" to be dead, when last advices reached us the matter had not been placed quite beyond doubt. He had shown no sign of awakening from his winter sleep; but while some authorities averred he had ceased to exist, others considered his demise was not absolutely established and there was a suggestion that he be left a few months longer. By the end of the summer, perhaps, his condition will remove all doubt, that is if the advise of the cautious party be adopted.

English Motoring journals still discuss the demerits of the unpopular hooter, but at the same time they feel bound to admit that it is necessary to the public safety.

I do not love your voice. I cannot say
That it recalls a prima donna's best
But rather the wild goose who wings his way
Towards the glories of the crimsoned west.
It is not as a melody that cloys,
But, to be frank, a simply beastly noise.

A raucous honking tells of your approach,
Ah! how unlike the cheerful, varied strain
That heralded the coming of the coach
By which we travelled in an earlier reign—
The bright tantivy, smacking of the chase,
Blown by a guard of round, empurpled face.

And yet I know you mean extremely well
In warning me of that which is to come,
And I admit that if it once befel
That you should overtake me, swift but dumb,
I should exclaim in tones of rage and scorn,
"Hi! Why the dickens don't you sound your horn?"

Idiotic not to say wicked prizes are often offered at Athletic Sports in England; but surely the limit was reached this month at Epping where one of the prizes in a Marathon race was "free bread for three weeks!"

R. E. He will make his tour under the auspices of the South African Association.

It is announced that Mr. Jay Gould, the tennis champion, will not go to London this year to defend his title. He recently won the Tennis Championship at Boston.

When the late Mr. George Hamnett, C.I.E., was Chairman of the Municipal Council some six or seven years ago he inaugurated a Ladies' Rifle Shooting Competition and yearly offered a Cup. This year the Ladies' Rifle Shooting has been resuscitated by the offer of a Cup to any lady who makes the best scores at any two meetings. No lady is to win more than one Cup during the season.

Unprecedented rain such as we have not had since the beginning of this year necessitated the postponement of the first day's races from Tuesday to Wednesday forenoon. It is still raining hard. Invitations to Sir Arthur Lawley's race. Lunch were well responded to. The Race Ball at Government House takes place on Thursday the 6th. Consequent to the course being unfit for racing owing to the heavy rain on Tuesday the meeting has been again postponed, the new dates being the 6th, 8th and 10th instant.

A successful boxing display was given at Barrackpore last Saturday night. Three contests were put through. Gunner Brown, R.F.A., beat Private Doyle, R.W.K., Gunner Studden, R.F.A., beat Private McCulloch, R.F.A., after an excellent fight, and Paddy Gill, who claims to be Feather-weight Champion of India, fought a draw with Private Page of the Royal West Kents. Paddy Gill is open to fight any one at 9st. for Rs. 500.

Many of our readers will read with regret that Colonel "Bob" Love, who for so many years has brought up an excellent show to Calcutta for the winter season, has been attacked by small-pox at Manila. The Manila "Cable News" of the 6th says :—Colonel "Bob" Love, the popular manager of Harmston's Circus, now in Manila, was taken to San Lazaro Hospital yesterday morning suffering from an attack of small-pox. Colonel Love was stricken with the dread disease during the night, and as soon as its nature was ascertained was immediately taken to San Lazaro. At a late hour last night he was resting easily but it will be several days before it is definitely known whether the attack is a virulent one or simply superficial. Colonel Love was recently successfully vaccinated, and this will be of material assistance to him in his fight against the malady which has laid him low. His many friends sympathize with him and all eagerly await the news of his speedy recovery.

The remains of the mammoth discovered at Selsey recently were uncovered by the action of the tide on the shingle beach. The skeleton, which is not complete, is that of a young mammoth about the size of a small Indian elephant. The stratum in which the fossil was found is a black clay of the Pleistocene period, and contains a great deal of vegetable and other matter characteristic of an estuarine bed. Although there have been many finds of mammoth remains in England, only two cases are recorded of the discovery of a complete specimen, one of these being found in a brickfield at Ilford. The skull, with complete tusks 10ft. 6in. in length, was secured for the Natural History Museum. The remaining portion of the skeleton had been dug up and sold to a local rag and bone dealer before the nature of the bones was recognised.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 16th April 1909.

Holiday makers and all Londoners who rested from their labours this Easter had no reason to complain of their weather, "the finest ever known in the history of Eastertide" according to those who produce the statistics. No clouds were seen throughout, indeed this exceptional and wholly comforting radiance lasted eleven full days. Never was there such an Easter and never was it taken such advantage of. The exodus was tremendous; but there seemed millions left behind and these crowded every pleasure resort and open space. After the beastly, dreary winter one felt as if a miracle had been wrought: the trees were not quite green enough perhaps, but under them walked people in the lightest of summer clothes, girls in diaphanous gowns of delicate pale colours, men in serges and flannels and straw hats. Everything was bathed in sunshine of an August intensity. The sky was of the peculiar tint, characteristic but indescribable, that it possesses during the dog-days. It was genuine summer on Sunday, as I discovered after an afternoon on the river which left me with a sixteen anna Calcutta thirst.

The weather was ideal for the stupendous amount of sport that was crowded into the four days. I could not fail to be struck by the ever increasing army of golfers about. There are dozens of links around London now and on the Underground Railway and in the Tube a set of clubs is getting almost as common an impediment as the traditional handbag. References to the game reminds me that "indisposition prevented Mr. Balfour playing golf on Saturday, but is not serious enough to interfere with his engagements in the House of Commons during this week." When one sees a golfer not well enough to play golf and yet not too ill to attend to the destinies of his native land, one can begin to believe that the nation actually is roused.

It is equally encouraging to notice that so loth were the faithful Commons to go upon their holiday that they continued prior to their departure to sit until 5-40 in the morning. It goes without saying that the subject they were discussing all the time was of sublime unimportance.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has made a stimulating speech in which he urges upon the country the advisability of advertising itself a little more. We have got into a ridiculous habit of crying stinking fish, and the sooner we induce Mr. John Hassall to design us a poster proclaiming our many merits the better.

Talking of fish reminds one that a step is being made in the right direction. An intellectually powerful body of men, entitling themselves the National Sea Fisheries Protection Association, have decided to institute a propaganda and to endeavour by means of advertisements, lectures, and the spread of knowledge generally to turn us into a nation of fish-eaters. It seems that, although fish is the very finest form of diet, we only eat twelve million hundred-weight of it per annum, and merely spend a meagre £7,000,000 upon it. Its time we woke up! But it will be almost an impossibility to wean the Britisher from his "little bit of steak" and his "little drop of beer." He sees the foreign competitor beating him in the struggle for existence, you may preach till all's blue about the cheaper victualling of the German, or Italian, or French workman and his being able to accept lower wages in consequence, but at the end of the profanity which is usually evoked when this subject in broached always comes the stubborn, unreasonable, reckless decision to stick to beef and beer. There are literally dozens of fine, wholesome, nourishing and cheap staples of diet to which our poor might profitably turn their attention, but insular prejudice breaks down all attempts at food reform among our grossly wasteful, improvident and abyssmally ignorant masses.

The Indian "leave season" has begun. Already have I been cheered by the handshakes and hearty greetings of some of the advanced guard, and noted their surprise at the gigantic changes and extensions "since we were home only two years ago." The West End continues to alter. A few months absence finds one marvelling at some demolition or erection and it is by no means the returned traveller who notices this, it strikes the resident Londoner almost as forcibly, so rapid and incessant are these transformations. For example, there is the present building activity on the south side of Piccadilly. For weeks past the observant passer-by has seen an extensive clearance taking place to the west and Duke Street, and very much more recently a large board has announced the fact that in due course there will be shops, chambers, and offices to be let in the Piccadilly Arcade, as the avenue is to be called. But few have any idea as to the magnitude of the scheme, or that it will give to the motropolis by far the most important architectural addition of its class that has been made to it since the Burlington Arcade, which is nearly opposite, was opened in 1819.

A number of old buildings have been demolished in order to effect the necessary clearance, the most important of these being the Brunswick Hotel, in which Louis Napoleon sought a haven as Count d'Ahrenberg after his escape in 1846 from the Fortress of Ham. Of the famous artistic memories of Jermyn Street the records are wellnigh endless, and such names as those of Sir Isaac Newton, who from it carried on his great controversies with Flamsteed and Leibnitz; Mrs. Siddons, and half the wits and celebrities of the Georgian period are connected with it. To-day, in spite of the attractions of the huge modern caravanserais, there is still a very distinguished circle who come to its little semi-private hotels.

With the arrival of Easter we look for increased activity in the theatre world, and we have not looked quite in vain this year, for though I cannot report an actual glut of new productions there are several promising things to hand.

First in the field came Mr. Arthur Law with "Artful Miss Dearing" put on at Terry's last Saturday, an ingenious story though a rather unconvincing play: it is billed as a satirical comedy, but might with more reason have been called a farce, for certainly its best moments were to be found in its farcial scenes.

Mr. Palgravage Dawley and his wife, Lady Gertrude Dawley, needy aristocrats, have a daughter, whom they allow young Judson Blew to pay attention to in order that they may borrow money from him. They also have a cousin, the Hon'ble Alaric Dawley, heir to a marquisate, whom they would like to see married if possible to their girl. The Hon'ble Alaric had, it appears, a penchant for forgery, and he has just been released from a three years' term of imprisonment when the story opens. As later events, however, show, the gentleman who turns up as the Hon'ble Alaric is not the Hon'ble Alaric at all, yet, curiously enough, none of the family discovers the deception. The only person who sees through it is Miss Dearing, the governess, and as she is willing to hold her tongue for a consideration the secret is kept. The gentleman so remarkably like Alaric examples that for the sum of £5,000, which he banked, he took the other's place in the dock and stood the punishment, only to find when he was released from gaol that the other had, with a forged cheque, withdrawn the £5,000 and disappeared. In the last act of the play Miss Dearing discovers that the "double" was really the son of a secret marriage contracted by the old marquis, that he is, therefore, the heir, and as a reward for her wit she marries the "double," now become Lord Bewdley.

It will be seen by this short account that improbability has not been neglected. Mr. Paul Arthur played the part of the "double" with a great deal of spirit, and Miss Annie Hughes did well as Miss Dearing.

A bright and bustling entertainment, full of obvious topical skits, prettily staged, and accompanied by cheerful music, the Empire's new revue "Come Inside," written by Mr. George Grossmith, junior, with lyrics by Mr. C. H. Bovill and music by Mr. Cuthbert Clarke, has met with a very cordial reception.

The revue is largely a skit on present day advertisement, and is arranged in three scenes. First is shown the Beauty Room at Pelfridge's, where is introduced Treemour, the Matinee Idol, whose fate it is to marry the girl who polls the most votes for his hand in the "Daily Blithers" competition. Carrie Carnation wins the prize, and this caricature of the notorious bar-smasher gives all and sundry a decidedly lively time until she is operated upon by the beauty doctors and emerges a beautiful young girl. The second scene is chiefly given over to an advertisement song—prettily rendered by Miss Lulu Valli—with a tableaux reproducing well-known posters, and finally there is the Universal Arena, wherein the classical dance craze is amusingly burlesqued. Mr. Arthur Playfair appears as Wilkie Bard with ingenious tongue tripping choruses, and Mr. Stanley Brett rushes on and off the stage as Mr. Winston Churchill, Lord Charles Beresford, and Mr. Bottomley.

The hypnotised danseuse is the latest thing in fair Terpsichoreans. The Palace management have been so fortunate as to secure in Madame Magdeleine a performer whose dancing while in the hypnotic state will assuredly lead to a wide discussion, cause much controversy of opinion, produce a little protest, and induce some eminent men of medicine to write letters to the papers.

Madame Magdeleine (who is a sort of dancing Trilby), it seems, in her normal condition shows no talent for dancing or for dramatic expression. But, once hypotised by Professor Magnin (after the manner of Svengali) the sounds of music influence her strangely, and she becomes a dancer of grace, remarkable posings, and compelling abandonment; while the sound of dramatic poetry transforms her into an actress of passion and power.

On Easter Monday Madame Magdeleine was put to some severe tests before a specially invited audience. First of all, in order to prove that she was really in a hypnotic state, Dr. Bernard Hollander, the president of the Ethnological Society, and an acknowledged authority on hypnotism, made a thorough examination of her state, and was emphatic in his declaration that she was actually hypnotised.

Then came the tests. Selections of music were played with which Madame Magdeleine was said to have had no previous acquaintance, and she straightway interpreted its time and moods in the most approved style of the classical dancers. Songs were sung, poems were recited, and with gestures and facial expression she interpreted their meaning. A young poet came forward, and delivered some unpublished verses of his own, and she was worked into a state bordering on frenzy by them.

Now, were Madame Magdeleine going through her performance in a normal state, there would be nothing very remarkable contained in her performance. But if one can only be induced to believe that she is giving expression to gifts in a dream-existence, gifts which she is not capable of displaying in her waking life, her performance is given a touch of mystery, and introduces that fascination which the eerie and uncanny can produce so strongly.

I THINK I told you of the Marie Dressler fiasco at the "Waldorf," how that very large yet smart Yankee Comedienne came an imperial cropper when she tried her hand at management and left her unfortunate company stranded after a week's run of "Dorothy." The London press were not too gentle with the lady—some ridiculed, others attacked with bludgeons—and she is displeased with us all round. From the seclusion of a Chicago hotel she has been telling the English people what she thinks about them. Here is a sample:—"As an individual an American may make as much of a hit as one wishes, but as a star in an American play they hate us. They hate Americanisms. I knew they needed and felt they wanted a funny show. Heaven knows they haven't got in all England three funny people outside of Parliament and that is a continuous laugh. That is the reason I produced there. When I did produce they laughed from the time the curtain went up until it fell. Despite all that, my show had no more chance to live than England has for a future. Any people that are so narrow, so prejudiced, jealous, and vain must cease to be a nation. The educated people over there are the Suffragettes. How different in God's country." Not too bad, methinks, for the gigantic Marie; there can be no doubt of it, she's quite cross.

EVERY now and then we are afforded an example of how London is gradually placing her citizens in possession of some of the privileges and comforts which those of Continental cities have always enjoyed. The latest sign of progress is the "Ring Tea House" in Hyde Park—it is now possible to obtain a few creature comforts amid elegant surroundings within this pleasant demene: it is be hoped the experiment will be quickly and widely extended. The "Ring Tea House" is not intended to rival its famous predecessor, the old "Cake House," as a resort of rank and fashion. The new creation is a frankly popular institution where all and sundry who find themselves in the Park may seek rest and refreshment under the most agreeable conditions. Happily there is no taint of incongruity about the appearance of the building. Its greatest offence is its spick and span newness; but time and the weather will remedy that in due course, and the mellowing process will doubtless be fairly speedy. The structure is Georgian in style, and the old-fashioned dovecote crowning its red-tiled roof gives it a rustic air in harmony with the sylvan character of the surroundings. From the balcony, supported by white Doric columns of graceful proportions, a delightful view is obtainable of wide stretches of undulating turf and the noble trees of the park, as well as the waters of the Sepentine.

WE are never left long without some game craze. Pigs in clover, pingpong, diavolo have had their evil day! the latest banality is jig-saw. I have successfuly avoided coming into contact with it so far, but it is described by some poor fellow who has fallen under its spell as "the most fascinating pastime for an idle hour that has ever been conceived." Briefly it is modelled upon the old-fashioned children's puzzle picture. A jig-saw consists of a hundred or more quaintly shaped and painted pieces of thin wood. Turned haphazard out of their box it is the task of the player to fit them all together until they form an artistic portrait or scene. There is no pattern picture to help the player; he has to try and try again until he fits the pieces together. A jig-saw library has been started in Bond Street, subscriptions from one to five guineas. Of course there will ere long be a movement for the formation of an Association and a Championship! When we have tired of jig-saw we may perchance revert to those elevating and absorbing diversions "squales" or even "spillikins." Who shall say we take our pleasures sadly?

EUCLID is doomed. A Board of Education White Paper has branded him as a waste of time, dull and pointless, artificial and unreal. I confess that I am inclined to be at one with the White Paper, but I cannot help feeling a twinge of internal resentment when I think of the rising generation being freed one by one of the horrible annoyances to which I was subjected during the course of my education.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE, poet and dramatist, died rather suddenly on the 10th instant of pneumonia. He had but two days before completed his seventy-second birthday and it was only about three weeks ago I passed him taking his customary six miles' walk over Wimbledon Common. Eton and Balliol claimed him—though he left without taking a degree, he is generally regarded as the last of our great poets and was always a striking personality whatever one's opinion may have been of his work, which was never popular in the sense that Tennyson's was popular. His fame, therefore, did not bring him wealth; it is said that his income was only about £1,000 a year. A remarkable trait in his character was his independence of criticism. He never altered a line of his writings. In this respect the contrast between him and Tennyson was striking, for the latter was constantly revising his work. Mr. Swinburne's figure was a familiar one on Wimbledon Common. He never used an overcoat or umbrella, and preferred to be alone. People would sometimes attempt to speak to him, but they usually met with a reception which damped their ardour. On one occasion a journalist sought to interview him at the Rose and Crown, where he always paused for refreshment. But the poet remarked in the blandest way, "I see you are talking, but you really must excuse me—I am stone deaf."

IN my last letter I told you of the serious illness of Mr. F. Marion Crawford, in this I have to regretfully record his death, at Sorrento, on Good Friday. His early connection with Indian journalism and his "Mr. Isaacs" will find for him many genuine mourners in your peninsula, but his loss will be deplored by novel readers in every quarter of the globe I should say.

I HAVE to record another death, that of Mrs. Kendall, wife of Surgeon-Major Benard Kendall (retired) and another of the 240 heroines of the sige of Lucknow. Their story is it not graven deep in the hearts of the older generation of Anglo-Indians? They and their children suffered terrible privations in Lucknow, and nearly one-third of the children died, including Mrs. Kendall's infant child. The women behaved in a truly heroic manner, many nursing the sick and wounded in the hospitals, others performing the menial drudgery put upon them by the desertion of the servants, all displaying a wonderful calmness, which the horrors of the siege could not disturb. Needless for me to remind you that the bravery of the women at Lucknow is one of the brightest spots in the history of the Indian Mutiny.

A TRIP TO MEXICO.*

To most of us Mexico is little more than a name, it may be associated with dollars, or with the far-famed Plains of Caxamarca, but still mainly a name and not a reality with which we are familiar either from personal experience or from literature. It is therefore distinctly advantageous to have a first-hand account of the country, its people, its animals, and its products from the pen of an observant and accomplished naturalist who has recently made an extended trip—or rather two trips—through much of its wilder portions. Dr. Gadow, accompanied by his wife, spent the greater part of two vacations in wandering through South Mexico; and although the late summer seems scarcely the best season in which to travel in the tropics of the northern hemisphere, the fact that little inconvenience seems to have been experienced from the heat speaks volume for the climate. But then we must remember that Mexico City is situated on a high plateau, the elevation of the city itself being 7,400 feet above sea-level—practically the same as that of Simla—while the neighbouring Sierra de Ajusco rises to more than 10,000; the nights are therefore never hot.

Dr. Gadow travelled apparently unarmed, being informed that you do not want weapons in Mexico, or if you do, that you want them very badly indeed and at once! With the exception that it is situated on a plateau instead of at the bottom of a valley, Mexico City must apparently present a considerable resemblance to Srinagar, Kashmir, as it is built on the margin of a lake, with several other lakes in the neighbourhood. As regards the main lake, it is difficult to determine where its boundary is now situated, as it has silted up to a great extent at the end nearest to the city, the lower portion of which occupy much of the original lake-basin.

The neighbouring lakes have "floating-gardens," or chinampas, very similar to those of the Dal Lake in Kashmir. These so-called floating-gardens consist of hundreds of islands of different sizes separated from one another by numerous narrow canals. As in Kashmir, the term floating-gardens has been objected to by the purists for the reason that the islands do not now float, and there is do evidence that they ever did so in former days; but the objection is trivial.

"The fact is," writes the author, "that new islets may still be watched in the process of formation; floating masses of peat, rushes, and grass all tangled together, which sometimes forms clumps of only a few yards square, are caught, combined, and anchored by means of stakes, or long willow and poplar saplings, which are driven into the muddy bottom, where they soon take root. The fertile mud is then ladled up from the bottom, and heaped up upon the floating mass, which in course of time is thus converted into an island proper, a patch of garden-land being eventually produced on which are cultivated masses of flowers, melons, pumpkins, gourds, and other kinds of vegetables. The larger islands, some of them several acres in size, are mostly surrounded by tall poplars planted in rows along the edges, the trees thus forming a firm boundary."

All this would serve, almost word for word, for Kashmir. The Mexican lake possesses, however, a unique zoological treasure in the shape of a large newt to which the Aztecs gave the name of axolotl,—pronounced akolotl, or ajolotl, or, in the Spanish plural, ajolotes. This black, fish-like creature superficially resembles a loach, but is furnished with three pairs of delicately branched, feather-like external gills, four limbs, and a long tail developed into a fin above and below. Axolotls are deemed a great delicacy by the Mexicans, and are sold regularly in the market; they are eaten either fried in oil, or simply seasoned with vinegar and chillies. Every one to his taste; but the luscious oyster is good enough for us!

It was long ago suspected that the axolotl was the tadpole, or larva, of a gill-less land newt or salamander; but the fact was not proved till some specimens were taken alive to Paris in 1863.

There duly bred and produced young like unto themselves, when it was hastily concluded that the theory of the axolotl being a larval form was wrong. In due course, however, the second, or European, generation propagated and produced typical axolotls; but, to the surprise of every one, some of these latter gradually developed yellow spots on their dark skins and lost their tail fins, and also their gills; finally climbing out of the water as full blown land-salamanders. Why the axolotl remains permanently in the water in Mexico, instead of developing into a land-salamander, as it does in other parts of North America is a mystery. Possibly because it is too well off in its native lake where it has abundance of food; although one naturalist actually suggested that it was want of food that prevented its changing! The puzzle is rendered more difficult of solution by the fact that in a lake only a few miles distant there exists another kind of axolotl which regularly develops into a gill-less salamander. Strange to say, however, the latter continue to live in the water, although apparently less well adapted for an aquatic existence than is the gilled larval form.

Although a fine country for the naturalist, Mexico, like tropical America generally, presents few attractions for the sportsman and more especially the big game hunter. There are indeed two kinds of deer, but both are small, and one has practically no antlers. This latter is the black-faced brocket,—the temazatl of the Aztecs, which stands only twenty inches at the withers, and seems to be restricted to the lowlands of the Atlantic States, from Vera Cruz southwards. The second species is the small Mexican representative of the white-tail (Mazama toltecca), which ranges all over the southern part of the country, while in the north it is replaced by or merges into the Texan race of white-tail. It is the Mazame or Mazatl of the Aztecs and the venado (literally "chased" or "hunted") of the Spanish population. Despite the fact that it furnishes the chief meat-supply of the country, this deer is still very numerous, although it is apparently never found in herds, but is always solitary, and prefers hilly districts, its vertical distribution extending from the coast to the snow-line. The antlers are clean from velvet by the middle of September, so that the pairing season apparently takes place in October: the young are born in July, and there are frequently twins. This deer displays considerable variation both in the matter of size and in the form of the antlers; the maximum shoulder height being about 36 inches.

The other most common game are the two species of wild pig, or peccary, one of which is solitary, while the other associates in droves. These, of course, could be obtained in plenty, but the author was unable to procure a specimen of the tapir. The latter animals inhabit the "tierra caliente" of the tropical lowlands and in some localities to judge from their tracks, must be quite numerous. Of the time of Dr. Gadow's visits it was, however, impossible to get at them in the swampy forest; and the time to hunt them appears to be the dry season, when these marsh-dwelling creatures collect at the permanent lagoons instead of roaming far through the forest.

Of jaguars and pumas the author had no experience, although on one occasion he observed an ocelot carefully watching the members of the party as they rode by at only a few yards distance from its lair.

One of the attractions to the naturalist is the gorgeously plumaged birds of the country; but it may come as a surprise to many stay-at-home readers to learn that these brilliant tints do not render their possessors conspicuous, but rather tend to make them invisible in their native haunts, as is made evident in the course of the following extract:—

"A guacamayo, the Aztec name of the macaw Ara militaris," writes the author, "announced the arrival of one party to his mate by a stentorian note, several times repeated, and this was answered afar off. Later, when the pair had united, they emitted different notes, and then watched us, sitting side by side, not at all conspicuous in spite of, or, rather, because of, their gorgeous dress. These birds are more at home in the temperate forests of the mountains than in the sweltering low-lands, and at the rainy season they feed chiefly on the seeds of the big pine-cones, which they easily open with their powerful beaks. Whether they are stationary during the 'pine-season' is doubtful; they do not breed in the higher, but only in the tropical regions, but they fly so amazingly well that they can easily ascend for their meals, and return to their sleeping places in the huge hollow trees"

Dr. Gadow has much to say about the blood-sucking vampire-bats, which in some districts render the lives of both horses and mules a perfect misery, always settling where they cannot be reached by the tails of the wretched animals. One of the most curious things about these attacks (which no trustworthy European has hitherto witnessed) is the prolonged bleeding which results from a comparatively insignificant bite.

With this we take leave of a very charming book, which may be commended to the best attention of all interested in natural history and travel.

A RHINOCEROS HUNT IN BRITISH EAST AFRICA.

Africa is the home of the big game, and many sportsmen look forward to a hunting trip in that continent as the fulfilment of their greatest earthly joy. Although not an especially keen sportsman, when in the course of a business trip I found myself stationed for some two years in the very midst of the greatest hunting ground in Africa, I could not help catching the buck fever, and perhaps a story of one of my day's sport would be interesting to your readers.

Our camp was situated on the Mau Plateau in the very centre of Africa, at an elevation of 8,000 feet above sea level, 470 miles from the Indian Ocean and about 100 miles from Lake Victoria Nyanza, on the Uganda Railroad. Our party included twenty white men and one hundred and fifty negroes, engaged in erecting bridges. The work kept us engaged during the week, but on Sundays we were free, and, of course, as there were no churches to attend other ways of putting in time were employed. My friend D— and I decided on a rhinoceros hunt.

The porters were tired and many of them footsore, so that they did not enjoy the idea of going shooting, but after considerable persuasion and promises of meat we finally got together a dozen men, and about 4 o'clock Sunday morning started for the plains, three miles away.

To get to the plains we had to pass through dense forests where I had a path cut some days previous, but as we struggled along in the early morning light we found that a herd of elephants had also passed that way, totally obliterating the track, so that we became lost and were a couple of hours hunting the path again. When at last we came down on the plain we saw large herds of zebra, congoni, and other antelope, but as we were after more exciting game we left these animals alone. Our expectations were speedily fulfilled. D— had separated from me about 1,000 yards when one of my boys called my attention to a monstrous rhino directly in front of me and only a couple of hundred yards away. I immediately crouched down and scribbled a note to D— asking him to hurry around and back me up in my shot at the beast; then after seeing that the guns were loaded properly and D— had his camera in good working order, we crept forward, sometimes on all fours, sometimes down on our stomachs, wriggling along and taking advantage of every bunch of grass and bush on the way.

The old rhino seemed suspicious, as he stood there with his head up, his great horn jauntily uptilted, his little pig's eyes shining, and his general massive outlines giving him a sort of supercilious, pugnacious expression. I had warned D— of the great liability of the beast charging us, if we did not kill him at the first shot, or if he managed to scent us, and D— seemed fully aware of the danger of our sport. We got up to within 60 yards of the beast and then could get no closer on account of lack of cover, so I decided to try a long-range shot. All advices I had received were to shoot for the heart, so taking careful aim, I fired, but immediately saw that I had shot high, and waiting until the animal had half turned, I put in a second shot. The rhino staggered, and, luckily for us, now went off at right angles, disappearing in the brush. Not hearing anything of D—, I turned around in a not very good humour and found him sitting on the ground behind me with his camera in his hands and a general aggrieved and angry expression on his face. "What the deuce is the matter with you? Why didn't you shoot?" I said "Shoot! Why I thought you said the beast would charge us, and I wanted to get a picture of a rhino charging," was the answer he gave me, in a not over sweet tone of voice.

We had a little more strenuous talk regarding how much of a fool he was, and then started to look for the wounded beast. Beyond finding considerable blood for a distance, until the tracks became obscure in the hard soil, we never saw a trace of this beast again. We again separated, but found no more rhino for some time. Thinking to keep our promise of meat for the porters, D— took a detour to one side and bowled over a fine zebra stallion as he went galloping along. The bullet struck the animal full in the side of the head, just back of the eye, and the stallion turned as pretty a somersault as an acrobat, as he dropped dead.

We detailed four or five men to cut up the beast and carry what parts they wished into camp, while we continued our hunt. About noon, as we were passing through a growth of mimosa, we caught sight of another rhino running through the trees. She ran along until she evidently caught our scent and then stopped. We worked closer and discovered it was a magnificent old female carrying the best horn I had ever seen on a live animal, but with a young one at her side. As the laws are quite strict about shooting females with young, we did not try to get closer, but started off in the opposite direction. The old lady, though, had evidently smelled us and was in an angry mood, so we were compelled to get behind trees and play 'possum while she charged back and forth through the mimosa, looking for us. It would have been laughable, had it not been so dangerous, to see the great lumbering beast go crashing around with the little copy of herself trotting at her side. For so large a beast she moved with great rapidity. Once she was bearing right down on us; our porters took to the trees and we looked well to our rifles. Though we had a great respect for the British Government laws, we were not going to let any old rhino kill a couple of good American citizens just because there was a baby rhino in the case. Luckily she stopped in time for us to keep the law.

At last she went off through the woods at a swift trot and we continued our hunt. Coming out on the opposite side of the mimosa we soon caught sight of our old lady friend and her baby about half a mile to our right, and the next instant saw another rhino about the same distance to our left. To approach the second beast we would have to pass to the windward side of the old lady and her young, and you may guess I impressed upon D— the fact that I didn't like pictures of charging females.

However, in spite of our uneasiness, she left us severely alone. The other beast was out in the open plain, away from all cover, so we had to approach in plain sight. We were able, by crouching, to get within 60 yards and again I essayed the shoulder shot. Although I aimed low, my bullets both went high and the beast started to gallop away. I quickly loaded again; the beast meanwhile had galloped a hundred yards or so away and then came charging back and stopped for an instant about 80 yards off.

This time I vowed I would not shoot high, so, aiming low, fired for the half-breast shot. The bullet struck fair into the breast, and, as we afterwards found, passed near the apex of the heart. The beast was now sorely wounded, and after struggling along a few yards, stopped and seemed unable to go forward, but continued to turn round and round with its four feet bunched as if upon a pivot. To test the power of my Savage ·303 rifle (I had been shooting with a 577 English express of Army and Navy make), I approached to within 40 yards, tried a shot at the beast's brain with a solid bullet, and was able to drop the animal at the second shot.

As it was now late in the afternoon and I wished to save the skin, horn, and feet I sent a messenger to camp for more men, had the remainder start cutting up the beast, and then started back to camp, fully eight miles away. We arrived at camp about 8 o'clock, meeting many porters on the way out to bring in the rhinoceros.

I have been tired many times in my life, but the memories of the physical exhaustion after one of these trips, and that long, dismal, stumbling walk through the dark woods full of wild animals and wilder savages, followed by a bracing and square meal, after which a quiet talk over the day's sport, before the fire—for it is cold at night in Central Africa, 8,000 feet above the sea level—and then the pleasure as one stretches his frame on his blankets, closes his eyes, and awakes to hear the cry of a leopard in the woods, or perhaps your boy's question, "Will master have coffee this morning?" combine to remind me of a time when it was more than good to live.—A. Fishing.

ORCA GLADIATOR.

(KILLER WHALES.)

We have all of us read, and some of us seen, how various animals and birds, such as the otter and cormorant, have been trained by man to catch fish for him; but I think you will agree with me, it is a far more wonderful occurrence for fish to train themselves to kill other fish for the benefit of man, either by themselves or with his co-operation; yet this is what the killer whales have done.

It is now some twenty or thirty years since a school of these killers established themselves in Twofold Bay at Eden on the coast of New South Wales. This was only after the place had been made a whaling station they were not there before that. Neither do they even now make it their permanent headquarters, but only come for the whaling season. This is the more remarkable, as whaling there is not what it once was, the number of whales visiting that vicinity having of late years greatly decreased. Nowadays but very few do so, yet, despite this fact, the same killers have returned year after year, bringing with them an occasional new chum, which, after its first visit, also continues to return there, and this has been going on for many years; so many, that the residents of Twofold Bay have not only learned to distinguish one killer from another, but have actually named several of their favourites and cheered them on by name, or shouted warning orders to one or other of them during the running fight, such as a whale hunt—if one may be allowed the expression—presents. I have frequently seen articles in the Sydney Morning Herald anent these killers and their proceedings; and to prevent my being charged with having any connection with the Ananias family, I herewith enclose two cuttings from the above newspaper, which appeared in it during last September. I may add that my son, who was for some time close to Eden, has heard numerous stories from many eyewitnesses of their deeds about these killers, and I myself have had one or two told me by reliable men, who have been whaling at Twofold Bay. These stories are not generally told, and are generally of the same nature; the killers are so well known, and the pride and boast of the Twofold Bay people that there can be no doubt as to the general truth of these stories. Not the least curious part of the procedure of these killers is, that they deliberately draw the attention of the people at the whaling station to the advent of whales in the neighbourhood; this it is said they never do when after other large fish; if a whale may be called a fish, which it is not, as most people know. Now why do they do this? They must have reasoned out the matter in some way to have discovered that man wants only the whale, thus showing that they possess a degree of intelligence previously undreamed of by us. What has caused them to thus ally themselves to man? Self-interest in the first instant no doubt, though it is difficult to see what advantage they gain by helping man. Their prey may be made a little more certain to them; but then again they get less of it when killed. Again when the industry was in a flourishing condition and whales plentiful, large numbers of boats were kept up, and the numbers of whales killed may have allowed sufficient food to satisfy their enormous appetites, for they are always allowed, and are given, what the whalers reject; but now, when there are but a couple kept on the station and a whale killed but once in a blue moon, what ties them to the place? Is it gratitude, that virtue which man assumes he is the sole possessor of; but which, as a rule, is most conspicously absent in him. Is it practical business sense, and do they gain more than we know? It can be only one or the other—kindly feeling or practical gain, and whichever it is, we must either give these fish credit for goodwill almost, if not quite human, or with an amount of reasoning power second to none but man. The dog, the horse, the elephant and others have all been in the first instance trapped and trained by man and their ancestors for ages have been trained by him. Here, however, is a case of spontaneous self-training of a wild free creature; and the question is, can it not be further developed by man for his own benefit? Here is a unique opportunity for experiment and one which in my opinion should not be let slip.

As I have said, there is a small whaling station at Twofold Bay, where a somewhat perfunctory lookout is kept during the season. I am told that next to Twofold Bay and separated from it only by the South Heads is another small bay known as Leather Jacket. This the killers have made their headquarters and some fifteen or twenty of these large fish are generally to be seen basking in it. There is Big Joe and Little Joe, Bill and Jim and Charlie, worthies known for many a long year, and other newer recruits. Presumably they must send out scouts, for as a rule they know of the advent of whales in the vicinity long before the lookout. It is possible to suppose from the intelligence displayed by them when in view, that they go in roving band far out to sea, and on finding their quarry, so manœuvre without a direct attack (for whales are in mortal terror of them, the merest suspicion that killers are in their vicinity being enough to put them to terrified flight) as to drive them towards Twofold Bay. Herding them as collies do sheep, though not so successfully, for as far as I can learn, they have never managed to drive in more than three at a time out of large schools. Anyway, when in sight they have been seen to do this over and over again. Who can tell from what distance, even to hundreds of miles the drive began.

While yet to the lookout the whales are but barely discernable, some of the killers rush ahead and rouse any of their brethren who may be in "Leather Jacket." Several then rush up Twofold Bay and deliberately do all they can to attract attention by breaching and other unusual commotion until a boat is put out. They then lie quiet, following the boat, as I have heard said, like a pack of hounds their huntsman. In the meantime the whale or whalers are being driven into the bay. Every effort to escape being skilfully headed off by various detachments of killers and at last the huge mammals are safely in.

This done the killers form line from head to head of the bay; securely bottling them up. All this time the killers in the bay are perfectly quiet. If no boat has put out, one or two will cruise round in as shallow water as they dare, and do all they can to attract attention without frightening the quarry. If a boat has put out they follow quietly, some distance behind it, waiting till the harpoon is fast in the whale. Never do they attack before this, but the moment this has been effected, they glide forward, past the boat with extreme velocity, like a pack of hounds in full cry and attack with an amount of savagery unsurpassed by the most ravening animal. Mark, however, the cordon across the mouth of the bay is never relaxed. Every effort of the whale to regain the open sea is frustrated and repulsed with the most consummate skill. If I may use the simile the half-backs and goal-keepers do their work splendidly and are on to their game like a flash when it nears the line, but otherwise until victory is sure they do not join the melée. On the occasion referred to in cutting No. 1 from the Sydney Morning Herald, I hear that the steamer Lecain had a narrow shave of sustaining serious damages, for the whale in its agony going for all it was worth, was making straight for that vessel when one of the boatmen is said to have sung out to two killers by name, cheering them on to head the whale. Whether they heard and understood, or whether they instinctively divined the vessel's danger without understanding the shouts, it is said to be a fact, that two well known killers, who were perhaps resting after their first onslaught while their chums carried on the fight, suddenly dashed past the boats and headed the whale off the steamer. This may be an exaggeration, your genial colonial is by no means averse to brightening up his experiences with a splash of gaudy colours. One can almost believe it seeing what these fish have been in the habit of doing for years. It may be that it was a mere coincidence, that the shouts and the action taken by the killers occurred simultaneously; for it must not be forgotten that the whale's lips are the point of attack and to get at them the killer has to dash ahead of his prey. Another curious point is, that though a most voracious fish, much more so than the ordinary shark, they have never been known to attack man. Boats have many times been upset and smashed and men thrown into the water under their very jaws; yet never a man has been harmed by them. I believe there is an authentic story of a disabled boatman some years ago being actually helped by one of these fish by its remaining near the surface and allowing him to throw his sound arm across it until human assistance arrived to the rescue. Be this as it may, certain it is that these killers have endeared themselves greatly to the residents of Twofold Bay, who regard them with much affection, and there must be some cause for it, for in practise the colonial motto is "nothing for nothing" and "precious little for a halfpenny" as Punch once said. A naturalist once went down to Eden, a son of Belial, who for the sake of scientific investigation shot one of these killers, he had to run for his life. Men, women and children turned out and hunted him. He was fired at several times, and had he been caught he would have been "lynched" on the spot. Everything possible was done for the wounded killer, but it died.

In one of contributions to the Indian Field I think I have mentioned an experience of mine on the Chittagong coast, where fish ten or fifteen feet long with large dorsal fin came to the call of a native fisherman who had been in the water attending to his nets, though dozens of these fish were about. This man when I cautioned him replied. "Oh no saheb they are very good creatures, they won't even touch our bodies if as sometimes happens one of us gets tangled in the nets and is drowned." Saying this, the old fellow knocked the side of his small dugout calling "ao, ao," and soon a dark form nearly twice the length of his canoe, glided up to it, followed by others. Some refuse bits of fish were thrown them, but my heart was in my mouth, for any one of these monsters could have upset the canoe and made short work of the old man. I never found out what fish these really were. Someone said "Bottle-nosed whales," but it is possible they might have been killers, and if so, it goes to show that the killer whale wants to be friendly with man, that not only the ones of Twofold Bay show intelligence but they all do wherever found. Fish like some birds are very regular in their migrations, and no doubt the same fish are to be found between December and June at the mouth of the Songao river and a little to the south down the coast. I wonder if any of your readers could inform me if it is likely that "killers" are found on the Chittagong coast. The inventor of the locomotive was laughed to scorn when he said it was possible to propel a coach at the rate of twenty miles an hour. Jules Verne's conceptions were astonishing yet some of them have been and are being carried out. The fact is most new ideas are startling, but because startling by no means on that account impossible. Why should not fish that have shown so much cleverness be trained to be of use both in war as well as peace. How priceless, even if they were only taught to carry messages at command to the castaway, the derelict. Imagine a school of killers towing out a line of submarine mines directly into an enemy's fleet. Of course I shall be laughed at, so I suppose was the man who first proposed to ride an elephant; but I maintain that such fish could be trained. That long ago we could, had we tried, have had squadrons of seals pearling, fishing, life saving for us all the wide world over. Why won't some millionaire like the Prince of Monaco set apart a sum of money for such development.

CALCUTTA HOCKEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—May I request the favour of your publishing in your valuable journal the following facts anent the unpleasantness which occurred on Monday, the 26th ult. between the City Athletic Club and Messrs. Studd (C.F.C.) and A. B. Rosser (B.H.A.)

The Customs' ground was secured from the Secretary of the Customs Club in the name of the City A.C. (to play a game in the second round of Bengal Challenge Shield, "Junior Hockey," with the E.I.R.) on Saturday last for Monday, the 26th, by Mr. N. R. Bhattyacharyya, the Honorary Secretary of Bengal Hockey Association, and this was duly advertised both in the Statesman and Indian Daily News (without any objection from anyone). The game was started with Messrs. Unger (Customs) and Oliver (Rangers) as referees and played for some 10 minutes. At this stage Messrs. Studd (C.F.C.) and A. B. Rosser (B.H.A.) came and asked the referees to stop the game, saying that it is in the power of B.H.A. to take any one of the following grounds whenever required, viz., Calcutta, Dalhousie, Rangers and Customs. And as Calcutta had to play Dhanbaid, and as the Rangers' ground, which was fixed for the game, was under water, so they must have the Customs ground. The E. I. Ry. and C.A.C. men were thus compelled to leave the ground.

In this respect may I ask Messrs. Studd and A. B. Rosser and also the B.H.A. the following questions:—

1. Was the game C.A.C. vs. E. I. R. not a cup tie match also?
2. Are the ties of the tournament Beighton not equal to the Bengal Challenge Shield? (only difference of Senior and Junior.)
3. Is it sportsmanlike to stop any tie match when it is nearly half finished, and when the contesting teams possess the ground legally?
4. Can a team insult any team (may be a junior) in this way before the public?
5. Can the C.A.C. bring trespass and defamation charge?

I must thank the Secretary and members of C.A.C. that though they got the ground, they obeyed their seniors and did not try to insult them, leaving the ground silently. I hope a letter from the Secretary of City A.C. will be sent to the Secretary of the B.H.A., and I trust he will publish it with whatever answers the B.H.A. may have to give in this respect.

Faithfully yours.
M. ISHAQUE.

MAGNIFYING SIGHTS FOR SPORTING RIFLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—A suitable telescopic sight is of immense assistance in aiming a rifle accurately at a stationary target: the magnification of the object to two or three times the diameter it would appear to the naked eye, renders the direction of the sights on the exact spot required very much easier; in fact a telescope sight with good illumination will often actually define an animal clearly, in situations where to the unaided vision, it appears but a blurred mass without detail, and scarcely distinguishable from its surroundings.

There are, unfortunately, several serious objections to the telescope; it is expensive, adds to the bulk and weight of the rifle, and is very liable to damage. The sportsman can, however, fit to his rifle, at trifling expense magnifying sights of a different character, which will be found to possess most of the advantages of the telescope without its drawbacks.

Those who have visited Bisley, and watched the match rifle competitions, must be familiar with Dr. Common's sight. It consists of a simple convex spectacle lens, set in a ring of suitable diameter, and mounted as a foresight. The focal length of the lens is usually about double the length of the distance between the foresight and rear peep-sight. Suppose then that the length of the sight radius is 30 inches, and the foresight lens has a focal length of 60 inches, then the image of the object as viewed through the sights, will appear twice the natural size. As, however, the image is intercepted half way between the object glass and its focus, the definition will be bad. The small peep hole of the rear sight, to a large extent gets rid of the blur, clears the object sufficiently to make this simplest of all kinds of magnifying sights quite practical. Looking through a Common sight at an animal it will appear twice its natural size, but the amount of detail seen will be no more than with the naked eye: in fact the object will be just like a photographic enlargement; you will get increase of size, but no more detail than in the original small picture. This mere increasing the size of the object is of great assistance as regards aim; moreover a small dot can be placed on the fore lens, to serve as a foresight, and as there is one lens only this dot on the glass will not be magnified, and will be seen in sharp focus against the object aimed at. After careful trial, I consider the Common sight a very good one up to a certain point. It is decidedly superior to the Lyman, as regards facility of aim at small objects; and having in regard the great merits of Lyman sights, the admission of so much is very high praise indeed.

There is, however, a further arrangement of lens sights, which will be found even better yet. Still using a convex spectacle lens as a foresight we add a concave glass in the rear peep-sight. We have then the components of the ordinary field glass, and can obtain magnification of the object together with sharp definition, and great illumination. In this case however, the image is formed in the eye of the observer, so that there is no point between the sights, which is in sharp focus. Consequently a small dot on the fore lens will not be seen at all, and a different form of foresight is necessary. I have found that a fairly thick ring marked on the front lens, serves extremely well as a sight. When aiming at an object the ring is placed round the spot it is desired to hit. The thickness and diameter of the ring are matters for individual taste: it is well to mark them temporarily in paint at first, until the size and breadth which suit one best are arrived at. With the above form of two lens sights, a magnification of about three diameters will be found a useful standard. The rule for getting the definition clear is that the length of the sight radius should be equal to the difference between the focal lengths of the two lens.

With the help of a friend I have lately fitted a ·25-25 American rifle with two lens magnifying sights. The back-sight is made from the old tangent sight and bed of an Enfield rifle. On the sliding bar is attached a brass hood with peep hole and wind-guage arrangement. Round the peep hole is cut a small rectangular recess, into which can be dropped a little piece of concave lens cut to fit the recess closely. The fore lens is ¾ inch in diameter, and is fitted into the hinge of a Lyman foresight, so that it can be turned down flat on the barrel in exactly the same way as the familiar little Lyman combination foresight. When the lens is turned flat a little loop, with a fine pin-head inside it, comes up in place of the lens. When you do not want to use the magnifying sights, it is only necessary to turn down the fore lens, and take out the little bit of rectangular glass in the rear slight, when the sighting is at once changed into an ordinary rear peep with pin-head foresight. The foresight is made exactly the same height as the centre of the fore lens, so that whichever sights are used, the elevations for the various ranges remain the same.

This is a very necessary precaution, for magnifying sights are quite useless in rainy weather, or even when the atmosphere is damp and misty. It is a sine quâ non that if there is glass in one's sights, there must be an alternative method of sighting available at a moment's notice, which can be used instead when weather conditions render the lenses cloudy.

There are one or two important points to be remembered regarding the lenses: it is hardly possible to get the optical centre exactly in the middle of the lens, and therefore when the sights have once been adjusted for elevation and direction, a small mark should be made on the edge of the glass, so that when taken out for cleaning or any other purpose, it may be replaced in exactly the same way. If this precaution is not observed, the owner of the rifle may find one day to his dismay, that his weapon no longer shoots true to its sighting.

I regard a windguage attachment as being quit indispensable to a rifle fitted with any from of magnifying sights. Aiming off the object is much less satisfactory than putting on a wind allowance, and holding on.

Magnifying sights, be it noted, are quite useless for shooting at a moving object: the field is nececessarily small, and the animal is out of it before one can align the sights the necessary distance ahead. Magnifying sights also necessitate the shooter being in a very steady position, i.e., sitting, kneeling, or lying.

The two-lens form which I have described, gives such excellent illumination, that an animal can be picked out and defined, when standing or lying in the shade of trees, where the naked eye can barely make out which end is which. These sights would be invaluable for shooting gharials and magars: those who have shikkarred these reptiles know well how hard it is sometimes, to make them out distinctly against the sand or mud, with the unassisted eye. The three-power magnification would make it easy to place the fore lens circle round the exact spot desired, at any resonable range.

I hope later to send photographs of my own sights, for the benefit or any readers of the INDIAN FIELD who may be interested in the method of sighting which I have endeavoured to describe.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"They will give it you back if you go round afterwards," said Brown to Jones who had put half-a-soverign in the box instead of a sixpence.

"No," he said, "I've given sixpence to heaven, the change can go to hell."

Songs in Esperanto are now being sung in public. Even the songs in English sound like Esperanto in the mouths of some singers.

The country parson was condoling with the bereft widow.

"Alas!" he continued earnestly: "I cannot tell you how pained I was to learn that your husband had gone to heaven. We were bosom friends, but we shall never meet again."

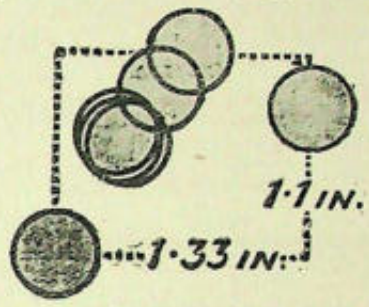
LANG

NEW ·470 BORE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore



VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridge as originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments extending over three weeks, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

THE BEST DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

7 Shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle

KEMPTON PARK.

SOME idea of what the attendance was going to be at Kempton on Easter Monday was afforded by the scene at Waterloo, where the crush couldn't have been greater, and people had to fight for their tickets in a packed station. The South-Western, after sending 30 trains to Hampton Court, found enough rolling stock for 31 specials to Kempton Park. With attractions elsewhere, the members' and Tattersall's enclosures afforded elbow-room, but never was such a muster of holiday-makers, who swarmed over the park and packed the far side up to the distance, reminding one of the Leger and Grand National attendances. The few showers that fell helped to lay the dust, while for the most part bright sunshine favoured the holiday-makers. Results :—

TROPICAL DEBILITY.
HOW TO FIGHT IT.

Of all the evils which the inhabitant of the torrid zone is called upon to endure, the greatest are, perhaps, the deadly debility and nervous depression which are the forerunners of the more serious ills so rife in warmer latitudes. Physical fitness should be the constant watchword; healthy nerve force must be the subject of the most earnest consideration. Happiness, nay life itself, hangs in the balance.

When exhausted Nature fails readily to respond to the extraordinary demands made upon the system by the exigencies of climate, Science once more comes forward with precisely the needed remedy. Sanatogen, the tonic food, is the means discovered whereby impaired vitality may be safely and rapidly restored.

Sanatogen has a singular effectiveness. It is not as a tonic only that it stands unrivalled; it is, besides, a perfect food, extremely rich in just those properties necessary to the perfect nourishment of the depleted system. The basis of Sanatogen is the casein or "curd," the nitrogenous principle of milk. Nitrogenous foods are our bodybuilding ones. They are demanded constantly by the body for the formation, and for the repair of its tissues. United with the casein, we find glycero-phosphoric acid, which is an all-important constituent of the brain and nervous system. This is the reason then, why Sanatogen has obtained its high reputation. It repairs the wear and tear of the most vital parts of our frames, and above all it gives to brain and nerve their essential food in precisely the form in which they are capable of readily receiving and assimilating it.

Doctors in India have not been slow to see the wonderful advantages in the use of Sanatogen among their patients, and a great many of them have written setting out the success that has attended the use of this preparation. They have used it with the greatest success in Malaria, Dysentery, Enteric Fever, cases of Plague and Cholera, as well as amongst those who are suffering from ailments due to disordered liver, spleen or digestive system. One or two of their opinions are worth considering.

Thus Dr. H. H. W. HART, Hapur Remount Depot, Babugarh, United Provinces, India, writes:—

"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of Malaria, Enteric Fever, Dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I have used it regularly now in my practice for the past two years, and in no single instance have I been disappointed with its results. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen. I could quote numerous cases where the administration of Sanatogen was followed by immediate and marked amelioration of the symptoms. I cannot speak too highly of its value, and I certainly consider it the best of artificial foods."

Whilst Dr. C. R. NAYLOR, Bangalore, South India, writes:—

"It was through my influence that your excellent medium of nutrition—Sanatogen—was introduced into South India, and I have reason to be proud of my success in doing so, for I consider that I have thereby conferred a benefit upon suffering humanity. I have found it unequalled by any other food when the internal arrangements of the body (whether in children or adults) are in want of a stimulating nutrient. When milk, diluted to any degree, cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. In many almost hopeless cases of plague, where heart failure has been threatening, I have found Sanatogen helpful in getting the patient to turn the critical corner, and it has admirably aided my treatment of this fell disease. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

And Dr. R. F. BOWERS, Bhaptiahi, P.O., Bengal and N.-W. Railway, N. Bhagulpore, India, writes:—

"I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic Cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrated. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

A physician has written a remarkable treatise entitled "How to Keep Well in India," a copy of which will be forwarded, post free, to all who apply to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen can be obtained from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, and of all chemists, etc., in India.

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

NEWMARKET.

Society has hardly started the season in earnest, and, in the absence of the King, the company in the Birdcage was not a very full one on Wednesday, but then the Craven Meeting is always the quietest of the year, although none the more enjoyable to the veteran Turfite on that account. Rain has fallen pretty plentifully of late here to the delight of the trainers, for the ground was getting a bit harder under belated March winds, but no fault could be found with the going. There was plenty of elbow room in the enclosures, and but a sprinking outside of the local element, though the morning, bright with a brisk north-west wind, was tempting enough to invite everybody abroad. Details:—

It was somewhat dull and threatening at Newmarket on the concluding afternoon of the Craven Meeting, and the attendance was a small one, but the fields, on the other hand, ruled large. As usual on the last day, an earlier start was arranged for, the proceedings being resumed with the Selling Plate, which attracted to the post all the fourteen entered for it overnight. Of these, the Beckhampton-trained Miss Ellen, which got badly away when unplaced to 33 at Warwick, was throughout favourite, but never flattered the race falling to Red Mullet. Esperanto, favourite for the Three-Years-Old Handicap, was beaten by the 20 to 1 chance, Humorist. Whilst taking part in the race Galoche fell down dead. Glaggerion, favourite for the Craven Stakes, failed to get placed. Howick winning easily. Details:—

BIRMINGHAM.

Judging by the capital attendance at the Bromford Bridge enclosure on Monday, there can be little doubt that but for the unpromising change in the weather the attendance would have been a record one. Enough rain did not fall to have any effect upon the firm going, but the overcast sky always threatened. Despite the big attendance the chief public enclosure was only sparsely patronised, and in consequence the maket proved a weak one. Details:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALL the international matches having been decided and only the Final Tie remaining to be contested in the struggle for the Association Cup, there is—outside the great match at the Crystal Palace at the end of the next week—little left in the present football season beyond the fight for promotion from the Second to the First League. Newcastle United are practically assured of the championship of League I., and Everton of second place in that competition, while first honours in the Southern League cannot very well escape Northampton. Moreover, in League I. it is almost certain that Bradford City and Leicester Fosse, who emerged from the Second League at the end of last season will have to return to that body. In League II., however, a most interesting struggle for the two places which carry promotion with them is in progress between West Bromwich Albion, Bolton Wanderers, and Tottenham Hotspur. Even this important question should be settled as a result of the heavy Easter programme, which comprises nearly ninety matches in the three important leagues. Players, however, with four strenuous games to contest in the course of five days, will scarcely approach the summerlike conditions with the same enthusiasm as prevails with onlookers.

Sunderland last Saturday at Roker Park had their revenge upon Newcastle United for the defeat inflicted upon them on the same ground in the Association Cup. They were a goal behind at the interval but pulled through at the end by 3 to 1. The Wearsiders, although finishing the season very strongly, have not much chance of securing anything more than third place in the First League, but they will be able to look back upon their League encounters with Newcastle United with pronounced satisfaction. Early in December at St. James's Park, Newcastle, they scored 9 goals to 1, so that their two fixtures with the Newcastle men have yielded them 12 goals to 2. On Saturday they were a goal down within five minutes of the start, Shepherd running right through their defence, but directly after the resumption Brown not only equalised but put Sunderland ahead, a further goal from a penalty completing the discomfiture of Newcastle. Until this Newcastle had not lost a single League match this year, winning ten games out of twelve and drawing the other two. Their position at the head of affairs is so strong that they can regard the reverse at Roker Park with comparative equanimity.

Outside the game at Sunderland, the First League contest bringing together the most prominent clubs was that at Manchester between Manchester United and Everton, the former leading by 2 to 1 at the interval, but Everton, in the end halving the points. Everton consequently cannot bring their aggregate for the season beyond 50 points, whereas Newcastle, despite their defeat, have a possibiltiy of finishing with 59 points. Bristol City as well as Manchester United, drew. Curiously enough, these teams, who have qualified for the Final Tie, had not come together until Friday, when Bristol City got home by a solitary goal, but they engage in their return match to-morrow at Bristol. Thus, with the Final Tie set for Saturday week, they meet three times in the course of sixteen days. In great danger of finishing in one of the two last places, Bradford City scored a couple of points at the expense of Leicester Fosse—their companions in misfortune. Unhappily for any hopes of escape Bradford might be cherishing, the same afternoon saw Woolwich Arsenal, Chelsea, and Bury—the three clubs immediately above them—also successful. The only real chance for Bradford now is for Bury to come to complete grief in their three remaining engagements.

Despite the set-back they received on Good Friday when, on their own ground, they went down before Clapton Orient, Tottenham Hotspur on the 10th instant gained a capital victory over Fulham, and so once more improved their chances of promotion. While this was happening at Tottenham, West Bromwich Albion and Bolton Wanderers, both playing away from home, could only draw with Chesterfield and Oldham Athletic respectively. The position, therefore, is that the Albion and Bolton are level on points, and Tottenham Hotspur one point below them, all three clubs having played an equal number of games. To-morrow's matches will be of absorbing interest, for West Bromwich and Bolton meet at West Bromwich, while Tottenham are at Homerton for their return game with Clapton Orient. If the Hotspurs can win, the outlook for them will be very bright, for with a definite result in the other struggle the London club would then be second.

CHELSEA vs. NOTTS COUNTY.—Chelsea went far towards assuring themselves another term in the First Division of the League by a well-earned success at Stamford Bridge over Notts County. They won by three goals to two, after a strenuous and exciting game, in which the tropical heat did not deter the men from giving a very spirited display. About 30,000 people saw the match. Chelsea substituted Cartwright for Walton and Notts County Dodd for Flint. Two minutes from the start Bourne, when hard pressed by Dodd, passed the ball back to Whitley and the home crowd were considerably chagrined to see the keeper let the ball roll through his hands. Windridge missed a chance of equalising from Humphreys' centre, but after half an hour Warren shot the equaliser, after a corner kick by Brown. Later Iremonger made a great clearance from a scrimmage in goalmouth. Two minutes after the interval Notts took the lead, Matthews profiting by a blunder by Cartwright and scoring. Chelsea again equalised some minutes later, Hilsdon converting a penalty-kick for an alleged case of hands against Morley. Iremonger made a great attempt to get the ball away, but could not hold it. This was during the temporary absence of Dodd, who was injured. Later, from a centre by Freeman, Humphreys got the winning goal and Chelsea held the lead to the end. Chelsea, 3; Notts County, 2.

BLACKBURN ROVERS vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—Brilliant sunshine at Ewood Park, Blackburn favoured the return engagement between Blackburn Rovers and Woolwich Arsenal and the spectators numbered about 10,000. Robert Crompton resumed his place in the home team and Cowell superseded Suttie. The Arsenal had Lee as centre forward in place of Beney. Play ruled fairly quiet for some time, but at length Lee overcame the Rovers' defence and gave the Plumstead club the lead. Later on Raybould secured a further point, and the home side making no effective reply, the game at half time stood: Woolwich Arsenal, 2; Blackburn Rovers, 0. On resuming Woolwich Arsenal continued to show the superior form. Outmanœuvring Crompton, Neave centred to Lewis, who put on the Arsenal's third goal. Latheron then got through for the Rovers, whose play all through left much to be desired. Woolwich Arsenal were undoubtedly the better team, and before the finish they should have obtained another goal. Woolwich Arsenal, 3; Blackburn Rovers, 1.

HOTSPUR vs. FULHAM.—The Hotspurs did much better against Fulham at Tottenham than they did against Clapton Orient on Good Friday, and quite deserved their victory. The score—a goal to nothing—by no means represents the superiority of the Tottenham men. After an exciting start, in which Couquet nearly put through his own goal and gave Fulham the lead, the Hotspurs settled down to play excellent football. There were some changes in the team from that which was beaten by the Orient, Macfarlane replacing Walton at outside right, and Wilkes playing at back for Burton, who displaced a cartilege in his knee on Good Friday. Following the good start by Fulham, the Hotspur half-backs dominated the play and gradually the forwards got into their swing. Skene made one fine save from a header by Vivian Woodward and Steel and Minter both missed capital openings. Just before the interval a big burst by the Tottenham left wing drew the defence. Skene had to run out to check Middlemiss, and the ball went across to Woodward, who only had to tap it through the goal. In the second half Tottenham pressed almost incessantly, but Skene kept goal grandly, saving all sorts of shots, several at the expense of corner kicks. For long periods Fulham were rarely over the half-way line, but once they nearly scored when Wilkes miskicked in front of the Tottenham goal. There was no further scoring, however, and Tottenham won a hard game. Tottenham Hotspur, 1; Fulham,

CLAPTON ORIENT vs. WOLVERHAMPTON WANDERERS.—The recent successes of Clapton Orient have greatly increased public interest in their doings, and 14,000 spectators assembled at Homerton to see their return League game with Wolverhampton Wanderers. The English Cupholders had the assistance of K. R. G. Hunt, the international amateur, while Clapton played the same team that beat Tottenham Hotspur on Good Friday. The result of a fine, fast game, in beautiful weather, was a well-deserved victory for the visitors by three goals to one. The Orient made a good fight in the first half, and scarcely deserved to be a goal behind at the interval, but afterwards there was no mistake about the superiority of the Wolves, and at the close Clapton Orient were a well-beaten side. Fine play by the Orient halves gave the home team a slight advantage at the start, and when Collins handled near goal Clapton were awarded a penalty, which Reason kicked wildly behind. Five minutes later, however, the Orient inside forwards finished a fine movement by scoring through Scott. The Wolves responded with a fierce forward rush, and Blunt rushed an equalising goal after Harrison had shot. Just on the interval Harrison finished a fine run by sending over to Radford, who scored with a brilliant shot. The visitors' lead was never endangered in the second half, and they were always the more aggressive side. After Harrison had hit the Orient crossbar Shelton took a pass from the left and shot a capital third goal. Although McLean and Liddell, of Clapton, went off injured before the close, and the former did not return, the issue had already been decided. Wolverhampton Wanderers, 3; Clapton Orient, 1.

SCOTTISH CUP—FINAL TIE.

CELTIC vs. GLASGOW RANGERS.—Played at Hampden Park Glasgow, the final tie in the competition for the Scottish Cup drew together fully 70,000 people. Dodds took the place of Loney in the Celtic eleven, and Campbell was at centre for the Rangers. During the opening half the play generally was of a rather scrambling order. Thanks in large measure to their halves Celtic were superior in midfield, and after eighteen minutes Quinn headed through for them. The Rangers were unable to respond, and Celtic crossed over with a lead of one goal to none. In the second half the Glasgow Rangers played brilliantly in midfield, but their forwards shot miserably. They made some changes in their front line, with the result that Gilchrist and Bennett each put on a goal. Bennett scored after a fine individual effort. Then the game was evenly contested, and the Rangers looked like winning, but just before the close Rennie, in saving from Dobbs, swung the ball through his goal, and thus the Celtic equalised. The replay will take place next Saturday at Hampden Park. Celtic, 2; Glasgow Rangers, 2.

LONDON AMATEUR CUP—FINAL TIE.

CLAPTON vs. NUNHEAD.—After an even game, at Herne Hill, victory rested with Clapton, who scored the only goal. Generally play was poor, the forwards on each side showing little combination, so that the halves and backs had matters much their own way. Considering the great heat a smart pace was maintained, but the hard turf told against accurate play, and the ball was constantly in the air. Except for a couple of hard shots by Purnell, scarcely a good effort was made in the first half, but Clapton scored their goal rather luckily just before the interval. Collis, the Nunhead goalkeeper, caught a long centre by Attwood, but was charged by Rance and lost the ball, which went over his shoulder into the net. Play continued fast in the second half, with the forwards doing a little better. Very rarely did either goalkeeper find himself seriously troubled, though Jackson, of Clapton, fumbled a long shot by Love before getting the ball away. About 4,000 people witnessed the game. Clapton, 1; Nunhead, 0.

IRISH CUP—FINAL TIE.

CLIFTONVILLE vs. BOHEMIANS.—At Doublin Cliftonville won the Irish Cup by beating the Bohemians (the holders) by 2 goals to 1. Cliftonville fully deserved their victory, for during the greater part of the second half they had to play without Reilly, one of their backs. They scored once in the first half through M'Caulay, and in the second half added a second goal through McComb. Near the end W. Hooper got through for the Bohemians. Cliftonville, 2; Bohemians, 1.

ARMY CUP FINAL.—The final of the Army Association Cup, played on Monday afternoon on the Army Athletic Ground, Aldershot, was productive of a very fine game, in which the 2nd Battalion Royal Irish Rifles won the trophy for Ireland for the first time since its institution in 1888, by defeating the Royal Artillery from Shoeburyness by the only goal scored in the match.

The play was throughout very much in favour of the Rifles, who played a sound defensive game in the opening fifteen minutes, during which the Artillery were in their most dangerous form. Houston and Luke, the wing men of the Rifles' team, once they got going quite outplayed the Artillery halves and gave the Artillery defence a most uncomfortable time all through the match. Once in the first half the Artillery goal had a wonderful escape, the ball rolling about in front of it without a forward up to put it in or a back to clear, the keeper being too undecided to leave his charge.

On crossing over, with the wind in their favour, the Rifles were very dangerous. After Houston had struck the crossbar with a splendid header, Smith scored the one and only goal of the game. Taking a long pass from Edmondson and slipping in between the backs, he raced into goal and scored with a low cross shot.

MOTORING.

BROOKLANDS EASTER MEETING.

WITH the glorious weather tempting many motorists to make Easter tours, the opening day's racing of the Brooklands Automobile Racing Club's first meeting of season was as well supported by spectators as could have been expected. The programme of five events included two motor cycle races, the entries for both of which were large and non-starters few.

A noticeable and pleasing feature was the strong support accorded by amateur competitors. The racing was interesting and, altogether, track racing for the year had an auspicious start. There were two scratch races, one for motorcycles limited to 500 c.c., won by Mr. W. H. Bashall on a 3½ h.-p. Triumph, and one for cars of 37 h.-p. or under (R.A.C. rating), won by Mr. H. G. Nalder's 35-7 Berliot Grayling. The highest speed attained was 87 miles per hour, accomplished by Mr. A. W. Tate's 59-6 h.-p. Mercedes, which won the Easter Private Competitors' Senior Handicap from scratch. During the interval between the fourth and fifth races a series of hill climbing trials was held up the new test hill. Results:

THE EASTER JUNIOR HANDICAP—Of about 3 miles.
Mr. L. R. L. Squire's 18-8 h.-p. Straker Squire, 5sec. ... ... Boy Fedden 1
Mr. C. J. Ratcliff's 24-8 Humber, 3sec. ... A. Griffiths 2
Mr. R. Selz's 21-4 Vauxhall, scratch ... Owner 3
Squire won by a quarter of a mile, and 100 yards separated second and third. The average speed of the winner was 59½ miles per hour.

THE SPRING MOTOR CYCLE HANDICAP—Distance about 5½ miles.
Mr. H. H. Bowen's 3½ h.-p. Trump, 1min. 20sec. ... ... Owner 1
Mr. G. A. Crundall's 3½ Humber, 1min. 25sec. ... ... J. F. Crundall 2
Mr. J. C. Smith's 3½ Rex, 1min. 30sec. Owner 3
H. Shanks, jun., 2½ h.-p. Chater Lea, fell when leading at the far banking. It was at first thought that his leg was badly injured, but it turned out to be no worse than a flesh wound. Some little excitement was also caused by a machine taking fire, but it was successfully extinguished.

THE WEYBRIDGE CUP—Distance about 3 miles.
Mr. H. G. Nalder's 35-7 Berliet "Grayling" Owner 1
Mr. P. D. Stirling's 35 7 Berliet ... Owner 2
Mr. O. S. Thompson's 36-1 Austin "Pobble" S. Green 3
Won by thirty yards. Mr. Sterling's Berliet overtook Mr. Thompson's Austin "Pobble" just before entering the home straight and beat it by fifty yards. Average speed, 62 miles per hour.

THE EASTER MOTOR-CYCLE PLATE.—Distance about 5 miles.
Mr. W. H. Bashall's 3½ h.-p. Triumph ... Owner 1
Mr. H. E. Fenn's 3½ h.-p. Triumph ... Owner 2
Mr. H. H. Bowen's 3½ h.-p. Triumph "Jap" Owner 3
Won by 80 yards; 200 yards between second and third. Bashall's average speed was 58½ miles per hour.

THE EASTER PRIVATE COMPETITORS' SENIOR HANDICAP—Distance about 5½ miles.
Mr. W. A. Tate's 59-6 h.-p Mercedes, scratch Owner 1
Mr. O. S. Thompson's 36-1 h.-p. Austin "Pobble," 1min. 12sec. ... ... S. Green 2
Mr. W. B. R. Moorhouse's 58-1 h.-p. Fiat "Linda," 1min. ... ... Owner 3
Won by 80 yards, with the Fiat another 60 yards away. Speed, 87 miles per hour.

The attendance at Brooklands on East Monday for the second and concluding day of the Easter meeting was about twice as large as on Saturday. Mr. A. W. Tate, on his Grand Prix Mercedes, again put in a brilliant price of driving, and although put 10sec. behind scratch on account of his win on Saturday, drove in the same dashing style, gathering pace as he went, and proved a very popular winner of the Easter Senior Handicap at a speed of 88 miles an hour—the fastest of the day, and 1 mile an hour faster than he accomplished on Saturday, despite the fact that on Monday the track was wet from a recent shower.—Results:

SURREY MOTOR CYCLE HANDICAP PLATE.—About 5½ miles.

GOLF.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE vs. FORMBY.—The Formby Club had been organised a strong side to meet the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society, in the first match of the latter's tour, at Formby on Tuesday. The singles resulted in a tie, each side winning 6 and halving 2 games, but the Society players were seen to advantage in the foursomes, of which they secured 4 and lost 3. Thus, on the day's play, the Oxford and Cambridge Society proved successful by 10 matches to 9.

Mr. John Ball, the ex-champion, let the Formby team, and met Mr. A. C. M. Croome. The latter took the lead at the second hole, and was 1 up at the sixth, but Mr. Ball squared at the eighth, and gained the lead at the ninth. Coming home, he played a strong game, and eventually won by 5 and 3. The golf was fairly steady, the figures being:

Mr. Hilton was dormy at the seventeenth, and halving the home hole, he won the match. Mr. A. G. Barry, the amateur champion of 1905, was outplayed by Mr. A. T. Dixon, who gained a victory by 5 and 4.

Rain fell heavily in the afternoon. The leading foursome produced a close game, Mr. Ball and Mr. Hannay beating Mr. Croome and Mr. Barry by one hole. Mr. Hilton and Mr. Clegg defeated Mr. Hoffmann and Mr. Allen by 3 and 2. Details:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CHAMPIONSHIP. Six matches were arranged for decision in the first round of the public schools championship at Queen's Club, West Kensington, on the 13th instant, but owing to the retirement of Rossall and Cheltenham the programme was reduced. The best form was shown by Eton, their first string, J. C. Cragie, serving admirably and hitting hard in the rallies. The results were.—Details:

Malvern (holders) (N. J. A. Foster and C. H. L. Cramer-Roberts) beat Wellington (T. N. C. Garfit and W. G. C. Chichester) by 4 games to 1 (15—1, 15—7, 12—15, 15—9, 15—2).

Eton (J. C. Cragie and W. T. Bulkeley-Johnson) beat Marlborough (C. A. Saville and L. D. Womersley) by 4 games to love (15—7, 15—11, 17—14, 15—3).

Clifton (W. M. Brownlee and C. Rissik) beat Westminster (C. L. Circuitt and H. G. Hills) by 4 games to love (15—5, 15—12, 15—5, 15—5).

Charterhouse (H. W. Leatham and H. A. Denison) beat Tonbridge (A. G. Warren and F. H. Nott) by 4 games to love (15—12, 15—7, 15—1, 15—2).

Harrow (A. H. Lang and C. E. V. Crutchley) w.o., Cheltenham scratched.

Rugby (C. F. B. Simpson and F. A. Sampson), a bye.

Four matches were played in the second round on the 14th instant, and furnished some of the most exciting few minutes known for years. Details:

Malvern (holders; N. J. A. Foster and C. H. L. Cramer Roberts) beat Winchester (A. Freeland and L. C. Tollemache) by 4 games to love (15—7, 15—6, 15—2, and 15—12).

WINCHESTER®

RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

THE BEIGHTON CUP COMPETITION.

Third Round.

RANGERS vs. SIBPUR.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Thursday. The Sibpur team attacked at the start but Margrett cleared and level play followed till Skempton ran down and transferred to Smart, who opened the scoring for the Rangers. Further onslaughts on the Sibpur goal were all cleared. On changing ends Oliver and Smart were conspicuous for individual runs. Sibpur obtained a corner, which they failed to improve upon. Then their opponents got away and Skempton scored. Up and down play till the Rangers rushed down once more and Smart registered a third goal just before time. Sibpur were unable to score and were thus beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams :

RANGERS.—Gasper, goal; Margrett and Postence, backs; Berkely, Burgess, and Warden, halves; Davis, Oliver, Smart, Skempton and Cody, forwards.

SIBPUR.—Brown, goal; Fox and Patterson, backs; Paine, Baptist and Murphy, halves; Scott, Durnell, Batterbury, Dadel and Duncan, forwards.

Referees.—Messrs. N. R. Bhattacharjee and A. B. Rosser.

CUSTOMS vs. E. I. RAILWAY.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday last. The Customs took up the attack and Fischer scored eight minutes from the start. Both goals were subsequently visited in turn, but it was not till a few minutes before the interval that Bennett equalised. On crossing over the Customs pressed. L. A. Smith scored the second goal, the result of a good combined run. Fischer and Smith registered two more points and in spite of good work by the Railway team they failed to add to their score and were beaten by 4 goals to 1. Teams :

CUSTOMS.—Seth, goal; Anderson and Quiterio, backs; Cadell, L. H. Smith, and Barlow, halves; Alexander, L. A. Smith, Fischer, McCready, and Fitzpatrick, forwards.

E. I. RAILWAY.—Llewellyn, goal; Smith and Palmer, backs; Ginger, Hunter, and Jones, halves; J. Smith, Young, Bennett, W. Smith, and Peddy, forwards.

Referees.—Messrs. Yackchee and Manuel.

Semi Finals.

CALCUTTA vs. MEDICALS.—This game on the Rangers ground on Friday ended in an unexpected win for Calcutta by 4 goals to nil. From the start Calcutta pressed and a nice piece of combined work between Studd, Sherman and Robertson ended in the last named putting through. This stimulated the Medicals to greater efforts but they could not break the Calcutta defence and the Redshirts once again invaded the Medicals' territory and Mann was called upon to save. Offside against Boileau spoiled a good run by the Medicals and Slater getting possession rushed down and passed to Sherman, who scored the second goal. After half-time rain fell and made the ground very slippery. Nevertheless the teams did not abate their efforts and Calcutta keeping up the attack Sherman scored again. They continued to have the best of the game and Sherman adding a fourth goal Calcutta won as stated. Teams :

CALCUTTA.—Thomas, goal; Bocquet and McCaw, backs; Oliver, Studd, and Badham, halves; Dixon, Lieutenant Mortimer, Sherman, Robertson and Lieutenant Slater, forwards.

MEDICALS.—Mann, goal; Handricks and Asquith, backs; Lynch, Elkins, and Rego, halves; Boileau, D'Arcy, Heppolette, Rowley and Parkins, forwards.

Referees.—Mr. A. B. Rosser and Subadar Omrao Singh.

CUSTOMS vs. RANGERS.—The second game in the semi-finals brought together the Customs and the Rangers on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. It was an interesting game throughout and extra time had to be played to arrive at a decision. The game was marred by rough play by the Customs backs at one stage of the proceedings, the conduct of one of them in hitting Cody with his hockey stick meriting instant dismissal from the field. But the havildar did not exert his power, and let this ugly incident pass unnoticed The Customs went away at the start but the Rangers cleared and play settled down. Both goals were visited, but Seth and Gasper held their charges safe. Smith, McCready and Fischer were prominent among the Customs forwards, while Lawton, Cody and Smart did good work for the Rangers. A foul against Quiterio soon after the start of the second half looked like letting the Rangers in, but Smith cleared. The Rangers attacked for a spell and lost several chances and then play was taken to the other end, time being called with the Customs pressing and the score sheet blank. During the extra period the Riversiders scored through Smith off a bully in the Rangers' circle. All the Rangers efforts to get on terms were unsuccessful and they retired beaten by a goal to nil. Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Seth, goal; Anderson and Quiterio, backs; Cadell, L. H. Smith, and Barlow, halves; Fitzpatrick, McCready, Fischer, L. A. Smith, and Galbreith, forwards.

RANGERS.—Gasper, goal; Margrett and Postence, backs; Lawton, Burgess, and Warden, halves; Davis, Oliver, Smart, Skempton, and Cody, forwards.

Referees.—Mr. A. B. Rosser and Havildar Omrao Singh.

Final.

CUSTOMS vs. CALCUTTA.—The final in the tournament brought together the above teams for the second year in succession, the Customs again proving victorious. Calcutta played below the form they displayed against the Medicals, their efforts in front of goal lacking vigour. Sherman, Roberts, McCaw and Studd were prominent for good work. The Customs were seen at their best and they gave us a real good exhibition of hockey. The two Smiths, Galbreith, Cadell and the two backs being most conspicuous. Shortly after the start Sherman got away and just missed the net. Then play settled down both teams attacking in turn till Fischer and L. A. Smith got away and the former netted the first goal. Calcutta pressed on resuming but were stopped, and Galbreith put in some good runs. Calcutta next obtained a corner, but McCready cleared and the ball was taken to the other end, where Galbreith notched the second goal for the Riversiders. Level play followed till the interval. On changing ends the Customs pressed but offside against McCready broke up the attack and Calcutta rushed down but were held up for stick. A free hit against Oliver near the circle enabled McCready to score a third goal. Up and down play followed but neither team gained any material advantage till sticks was given against Cooper in the circle. Studed cleared and Sherman getting possession put in a pretty run and scored. Time arrived with Calcutta pressing. Final score: Customs, 3 goals; Calcutta, 1. There was a big crowd of spectators and the Cup was presented to the winners by Mrs. Beadel, who also gave away the two League trophies. Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Seth, goal; Anderson and Quiterio, backs; Cadell, L. H. Smith, and Barlow, half-backs; Fitzpatrick, McCready, Fischer, L. A. Smith, and Galbreith, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Cooper, goal; McCaw and Bocquet backs; Badham, Studd, and Oliver, half-backs; Lieutenant Slater, Robertson, Sherman, Lieutenant Mortimer and Dickson, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. A. B. Rosser and Yackchee.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE.—Having had a walk over owing to the scratching of the Casuals the Bombay Gymkhana made their first appearance in the tournament on the 27th ultimo when they beat the Elphinstone College by 5 goals to nil. They had the best of the play during the first half and Cole (2), Troupe and Christie scored goals. But on crossing over the students improved and had quite as much of the game as their opponents. Antia scored for the students and it was not till the closing stages of the game that the Gymkhana obtained another point. Teams :—

ELPHINSTONE.—Kanga, goal; Kapadia and Setna, backs; Motafram, Burges and Sabawala, half-backs; Bilimoria, Antia, Rickwood, Bhapu and Indavala, forwards.

GYMKHANA.—Collingwood, goal; Gillet and Airy, backs; Christie, Elliott and Bean, half-backs; Hearson, Cole, Troupe, Montgomery and Moir, forwards.

CHESHIRES vs. QUEEN'S REGIMENT.—Played on the 28th ultimo. At the start play was very level and the Queens put in some good runs. Then the ball was transferred to their territory where the Cheshires scored 4 goals in succession. Hayes opened the scoring, Hance and Russell added points and Hayes scored again. The Queens got away just before half time and Lawrence put through. On resuming the Cheshires maintained their advantage. Hance scored, chances were missed, and twice the ball was netted but the points were disallowed for offside. But they continued to press and Simmonds and Hayes scored, giving the Cheshires the victory by 7 goals to 1. Teams :—

CHESHIRES.—Wakefield, goal; Price and Harris, backs; Cartwright, Russell and Simmonds, half-backs; Truemann, Hayes, Hance, Charlesworth and Pickering, forwards.

QUEEN'S.—Ivatts, goal; Silver and Arundell, backs; Grainger, Stemp and Barnshaw, half-backs; Oates, Gilbank, Lawrence, Davidson and Matthews, forwards.

NORTHAMPTONS vs. UNION H. C.—An interesting game between these teams on the 28th ultimo ended in a win for the military team by 3 goals to nil. Had it not been for the excellent defence of the Union backs the margin would have been larger. The Northamptons did most of the attacking in the first half but the only score was a goal by Parrott, the Union goalkeeper and backs giving a good account of themselves. In the second half the soldiers maintained the attack throughout but could only score twice, Lieutenant Robinson being credited with both points. Teams :—

NORTHAMPTONS.—Millard, goal; Taylor and Roberts, (captain), backs; Albion, Hall and Booth, half-backs; Hennings, Robinson, Hitchcocks, Parrott and Towers, forwards.

UNION H. C.—Eagle, goal; Whitcomb and Rodrigues (captain), backs; Powell, Baker and Alimo, half-backs; Braganza, Regnaud, Smith, Paul and James, forwards.

Y. M. C. A. vs. 14TH HUSSARS.—Played last Thursday, well contested throughout but marred by rough play. The Y. M. C. A. pressed at the start and Kelly scored. Then the Hussars attacked and obtained an abortive corner. Even play followed and half time arrived with the Young Men pressing. On resuming the Y. M. C. A. continued the attack and Kelly scored again. Some good runs by the Hussars were unsuccessful and then a splendid combined movement by the Young Men ended in Spilling netting the third. Level play to the close of the game: the Hussars failing to score were thus defeated by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

Y. M. C. A.—Flynn, goal; N. Essai and R. Roberts, backs; V. Hildreth, C. M. Ward and L. Dowling, half-backs; H. Templeton, C. Kelly, A. Spilling, N. George and A. McMullen, forwards.

14TH HUSSARS.—Izard, goal; Powell and Lewis, backs; Smith, Rasell and Bartlett, half-backs; Baker, Terrill, Edwards, Hatherall and Hallard, forwards.

PIONEERS' "A" vs. SECUNDERABAD COMBINED TEAM.—These teams met on the 29th ultimo, the Pioneers having matters all their own way. They scored 6 goals in the first half and 3 in the second; the score might have been even greater but for the Secunderabad custodian who did excellent work. Teams :—

PIONEERS' "A."—Dick, goal; V. Palvanker (captain) and Karanjea, backs; Surveyor, Devacha and Nugpurwalla half-backs; J. Driver, S. Palvanker, D. Driver, G. Palvanker and Choksey, forwards.

EDUCATION SOCIETY OLD BOYS vs. PRESIDENCY H. C.—Played on Friday last. The Old Boys were too strong for their opponents and had them beat at every point. They scored 3 goals in the first half and added two more after the interval, winning by 5 goals to nil. This score would have been larger had they taken advantage of the many opportunities afforded them of scoring. Teams :—

GRANT MEDICALS vs. GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—These teams met on Friday last and a good game resulted, the Medicals eventually winning by 4 goals to nil. The teams were very evenly matched and neither could score in the first half and it was not till midway in the second period that Wilson scored the only goal of the game and gave the Gloucesters the victory. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Seymour, goal; Bennett and Burrows, backs; Brown, Hart, Smith, halves; Stait, Harris, Hodson Wilson (capt.), Cavanagh, forwards.

A SHORT COLLECTING TRIP ON THE SINGALILA RANGE AND IN PART OF SIKKIM.

8th August.—It was fine when I woke up about half-past six, but misty, and no view could be seen. I dressed but couldn't wash, there being no soap or towel as my things hadn't turned up. One coolie arrived at 7-30 A.M. but the others didn't put in an appearance till after nine, so besides going without breakfast and dinner I had to do without chota hazri as well. When they did arrive I had a cup of tea made sharp and got my breakfast at eleven. It began raining and I stayed in the bungalow and skinned yesterday's birds. The Phalut bungalow is the nicest I have been in and has durries and purdahs; it has also a glass verandah like that at Sundakphu. The shikari came back about three in the afternoon with three measly birds, viz., Hodgson's Yellow-headed Wagtail (Motacilla citreoloides) ♂ ♀ and one Hodgson's Pipit (Anthus rosaceus) ♂ I kicked up a row and he went out again and returned at dusk with two more Hodgson's Pipits (A. rosaceus) and two dark Rose finches (Procarduelis nepalensis); the pipits and rose finches were all males and only the latter showed signs of breeding. In the evening, it having cleared up, I went out for a stroll with the gun, but saw nothing worth shooting. It was exceedingly pleasant, there being a cold breeze blowing, which was most exhilarating.

9th August.—It was again fine when I got up and dressed, and I had a fine view of the snows. I started to make a sketch of them, but by the time I got out my pencil and notebook the mist came up and quite obliterated the view. After chota hazri I shot a pair of Red-headed Bullfinches (Pyrrhula erythrocephala) near the bungalow and then went out. It was fine when we started but rained about half-past ten. I went through the pine and rhododendron forests, but saw very few birds indeed. The following were got :—The Sikkim Cole-tit (Lyophophanes beavani) ♂; Stoliczka's Tree-creeper (Certhia stoliczkae) ♀; the Fire-tailed Yellow-backed Sunbird (Anthopyga ignicauda) two ♂; the Spotted Bush-warbler (Tribura thoracica), a pair of Rufous-capped Bush Warblers (Horeites brunnifrons), also a pair of Rufous-bellied Pied Woodpeckers (Hypopicus hyperythrus). I also saw a pair of White collared Ouzels (Merula albicincta) but couldn't find their nest. Both the Bullfinches and Rosefinches are evidently breeding, but so far we haven't been able to spot any nests. I got back at about half-past eleven. A good many coletits and sunbirds were seen during the morning and we lost a thrush of sorts. After breakfast it rained steadily till the evening and no shooting was done. The shikari amused himself filling half charges and I was kept busy at the birds till after seven.

10th August.—There was no rain during the night. When I got up at five-thirty the weather was misty and there was an extremely strong breeze blowing. I waited till 6 A.M. for my tea, and it not having been brought, I went to the cookroom and found everybody sound asleep, except the sweeper; however a little mild persuasion awoke my boy and he soon had it ready. I didn't get out till after seven and the breeze was still strong and bitterly cold. I liked it, even though my hands got chapped, but the shikari, syce and coolies were shivering the whole time. We went some four miles along the road to Sundakphu but scarcely saw a bird worth shooting. It started drizzling shortly after we started and kept on the whole time with now and then a rather heavy shower. Many Hodgson's Pipits. (Anthus rosaceus) were seen and a few Fire tailed Yellow-backed Sunbirds (Anthopyga ignicauda) a male of which was shot; a few Dark Rosefinches (Procarduelis nepalensis) were also seen near some thorny bushes and a male shot. I hunted a long time amongst these bushes in the hope of finding a nest but was quite unsuccessful. Near the 41st mile-post a young White-capped Redstart (Chimanhornis leucocephalus) ♂ was shot and a little further on we went into some dense rhododendron jungle but saw nothing, although there were numerous marks of the scratching of Tragopans. On the way home I came across a bird which I didn't recognize but couldn't get a shot at it; nearer home we saw two more of the same and missed one. I was awfully wild at missing as I knew it was new to my collection. We got home at noon and I felt very fit but the others were very miserable. On examining the young Redstart (Chimara leucocephalus) I noticed some chestnut feathers in their sheaths on the lower breast, so evidently the change of plumage from young to adult is by moult. I skinned the birds after breakfast and then got out the whole lot we had collected and found we had got 66 in all.

It cleared up at about 3-30 P.M. but very soon started to drizzle again and the breeze kept up all day. The shikari went out and brought in a Scaly-breasted Wren (Pnoepyga squamata) ♂, a Fire-tailed Yellow-backed Sunbird. (A. ignicauda) ♀ and a White-collared Ouzel (Merula albicincta) ♂

11th August.—I got up at five and found the breeze if anything stronger than it was yesterday and it had also started to rain. I sent the shikari out not wanting to go out myself seeing there didn't seem much chance of its clearing up. I however shot a Dark Rosefinch (Procard. nepalensis) ♂ before sending him off. I had the pleasure of a warm tub this afternoon and it was a real treat. The Scaly-breasted Wren (Pnoe squamata) was a female though it was in the plumage of the male. It had the chin and throat white. There was no doubt about the sex as the oviduct contained minute eggs. The shikari came back at about half-past ten with the following birds :—The Fire-tailed Yellow-backed Sunbird (A. ignicauda) four ♂; the Plain-backed Mountain Thrush (Oreocincla mollissima) ♀—this bird was found at a much higher elevation than mentioned by Oates in his Fauna of British India, a golden Bush Robin (Tarsiger chrysaeus) ♂, a greenish Willow-warbler (Acanthopneuste viridanus) ♂ and a Crimson-horned Pheasant (Tragopan satyra) ♀. He only saw the one Tragopan which he shot with No. 6. It was a very fine bird and most beautifully marked. About breakfast time Mr. St. E. A. Crowley, the chief of the Kinchinjunga Expedition, put in an appearance and latter on Messrs. Guillarmond, Pache and Raymond of the same party turned up. They had walked from Sandakphu. Mr. Crowley showed me a pair of reindeer boots with the hair outside which he would use for glacier work. As all the members of the party couldn't speak English, the conversation took place in French. They were a very nice lot of men, especially the leader Mr. Crowley and Mr. Pache; the latter poor fellow was afterward on the 1st September killed by an avalanche along with three coolies at an elevation of some 20,200 feet in Kinchinjunga. Mr. Right, the remaining member of the expedition, who arrived later on, and Dr. Guillarmond had a very narrow escape as they were roped to Mr. Pache when the accident took place. The party had with them, counting coolies and servants, about a hundred men: the former were, I believe, paid Rs. 20 a month plus rations. Mr. Crowley seemed to have travelled a lot and done a deal of climbing in different parts of the world.

In the afternoon the shikari brought in a Sikkim Cole-tit (Leph. beavani) ♀; a Fire-tailed Yellow-backed Sunbird (A. ignicauda) ♂ and a White-capped Redstart (Chimara leucocephalus) ♂. It cleared up in the evening, and we could see the Pandim glacier with glasses, and also the houses in Darjeeling. We all shared our dinners; they supplied some "Calarit" veal, which was excellent stuff, cooks itself by simply piercing the tin, and also some nice scones, and I gave the Tragopan and some jelly; the pheasant was really excellent and enjoyed by everbody. After dinner I showed them my paintings of birds' heads and which Pache seemed rather interested in and they brought out their cameras, which were made of gunmetal and could stand any weather or climate. All except Mr. Crowley had these cameras, and I was informed that they cost £20 each. They hoped to get some shooting such as yak, snow leopard and wild sheep, but I believe they got none. Later in the evening Mr. Crowley played the doctor at chess, the former playing with his back to the board; how he could remember the positions of all the men was more than I could understand.

12th August.—We were up by five and I skinned a few birds before Chota hazri. The morning was much the same as yesterday. I partook of the expeditions things at chota hazri, having sent on my own to Sendakphur. The party had got all their things packed nice, and handy in canvas covered baskets containing in each sufficient food, tobacco, etc., for the five of them for a period of three days. They tried to bargain for some sheep from a local shepherd, but the prices were too exorbitant, such as Rs. 12 for a large ewe and Rs. 5 or Rs. 6 for quite a small sheep. Pache seemed very keen on shooting and went off to try to pick up a Tragopan but was unsuccessful. Crowley most kindly asked if I was short of anything; if so, he said he could let me have anything I wanted in the way of flour, etc. I wished them good-by and good luck and started for Sandakphu. I walked most of the way and picked up the following birds :—The Himalayan Nutcracker (Nucifraga hemispila) ♀; this turned out to be the bird I didn't recognize on the 10th and which I missed; it was feeding amongst some dried cow dung; the Rufous-bellied Pied-Woodpecker (Hypo. hyperythrus) ♂, this seemed fairly common between Phalut and Sandakphu; Edward's Rosefinch (Propasser Edwardsii) ♀, the eggs in the oviduct were very small.

A Red-headed Bullfinch (Pyrrhula erythrocephala) ♀; the latter was by itself and has a rather monotonous but not unpleasant note; six Fulvous-fronted crow Tits (Suthora fulvifrons), only three however were retrieved, the other three being lost in the dense bamboo jungle in which they were shot; the three we got were two males and one female. They are merry little birds, always on the move and very tame, and were it not for the denseness of the jungle one could, should one care to do so, and I don't think anybody could have the heart to do it, they seem so happy, wipe out the whole flock or rather party. A pair of White-spotted Laughing Thrushes (Ianthocincla ocellata) were got at about eight miles from Phalut and were part of a party of about half a dozen which we discovered by hearing their loud and pleasant notes. Nearer Sandakphu four Black-faced Laughing Thrushes (Trochalopteron affine) were shot but only one, a ♂, was got, the other three sticking up in an unscalable tree. Two Warblers were shot and they also stuck up in a tree and so we were altogether rather unlucky. A couple more Himalayan Nutcrackers (Nucifraga hemispila) were seen and one missed. I found them very wary birds. Besides those another White-spotted Laughing Thrush (Ianthocincla ocellata) and a Tree-creeper were also missed. It cleared up wonderfully at about midday and we even caught glimpse of the sun, but this was not for very long and it rained again pretty heavily before we reached Sandakphu. As we had taken it very easily and were detained a long time hunting for the crow-tits and trying to dislodge the bird that had stuck in the trees we didn't arrive at Sandakphu till after 3 P.M. The coolies arrived before, as likewise two men from Darjeeling with balance of my stores and letters. I skinned some birds before dinner and went to bed early.

13th August.—The morning turned out a bit better than yesterday, but was misty with a slight drizzle. I went down the hillside to the place where I got the Woodcock (Scolopax rusticula) eggs last year, in the hope of flushing a bird but saw none. We went a good distance down the khud, and I was very fagged after climbing up again and reached the bungalow at 10 o'clock. I had told the coolies to try to snare some bullfinches (Pyrrhula erythrocephalus) which I had seen near the stables before starting out and found they had managed to get a cock bird. The following birds were got in the morning :—Two Orange-gorgeted Flycatchers (Siphia strophiata) ♀ ♂, a Himalayan Nutcracker (Nucifraga hemispila), Hodgson's Tree-creeper (Certhia hodgsoni) ♀, an Orange-headed Willow Warbler (Phylloscopus pulcher) ♂, and a Red-headed Bullfinch (Pyrrhula erythrocephalus) ♀. A tragopan was heard calling in some rhododendrons but we couldn't flush it. The coolies caught nine more Bullfinches (P. erythrocephalus) in the afternoon and I had a cage made for them as I wanted to try to bring them alive to Darjeeling; one of the females which died had a large soft egg in the oviduct. I offered big rewards for any nests, but the coolies seemed too lazy or indifferent to money to search for them. I had got up till to-day 99 specimens.

YACHTING PROSPECTS.

THE English Sporting season which has just commenced with the "opening of the flat," bids fair to be exceptionally brilliant. What with the American invasion of the Turf, the visits of several noted teams of Foreign Polo players, and the Australian cricketers, a real good time is in store for sportsmen in the old country.

The yachting season also promises to be the best experienced for a good many years, for now that the new international rating rule has emerged successfully from the ordeal of a season's racing, there is likely to be a general revival of interest in the sport. Under the guidance of the Yacht Racing Association, the fixture list has been systematically arranged with due regard to the geographical position of the ports at which the big regattas are held, and, although there will be no undue waste of valuable time, ample margin has been allowed for the necessary passage making.

To have found clear dates for all the clubs that give races for the touring fleet between 14th May and 28th August, is no mean performance. The absence of Brynhild and Nyria from the ranks of the big cutters, will be sadly felt, as the racing of the class must now resolve itself into a series of duels between Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock and Mr. Myles B. Kennedy's White Heather.

The withdrawal of Brynhild is only of a temporary nature, as Sir James Pender will fit out the Nicholson cutter again in 1910; but Nyria will be seen no more on regatta courses. Mr. Robert Young's yacht was hopelessly outclassed last summer, and as the time allowance allotted to her as a vessel built under the old rating rule proved to be quite inadequate, she fared very badly in the season's record. It is not, therefore, altogether surprising that her owner should haul down his fighting flag and embrace the cruising side of the sport, for which his vessel is admirably fitted. Except in dead light weather, White Heather is a very good match for Shamrock, and the sailing of the two great cutters should be full of interest, particularly as the former is having some alterations effected which may materially increase her speed. The feature of the season will be the racing of the 15-metre class, which promises to be of quite an international character.

Approximating in size to the old forty tonners of the early seventies, they are capable of affording sport of the very highest order. Of the yachts that comprised the class in 1908, Mariska, Shimna, and Ma'oona will make their reappearance, while no fewer than eight new vessels have been built in the United Kingdom and on the Continent. Mr. W. P. Burton's famous Britomart, which last season ceded to Mariska the championship she held for two years, has now been superannuated, and her owner's colours during the coming season will fly from the truck of Ostara, a new yacht built from the design of Mr. Mylne, who was responsible for the lines of her predecessor.

At the Fairlie yard, at which Mr. Fife is the presiding genius, two more yachts of this rating have been built, one being for the Duke de Medinaceli and the other for an American yachtsman, whose identity has not yet been revealed. The recruit most likely to command public attention, however, is Hispania, which has been built in Spain for King Alfonso from the design of Mr. Fife. A third Spanish yacht of this rating has been designed by the French Naval Architect, M. Guedon for the Marquis de Cuba. To these must be added the French cutter Anemone, recently built at Cannes from the design of M. Chevreux, and two German boats building to plans prepared by Herr Max Oertz and Herr Barz respectively.

at the end of May, if she can be got ready in time, it may be taken for granted that the yacht will go round the coast with the class and the other Spanish owners are sure to follow suit.

The American-owned vessel also being a certain starter in the class numerical strength of the fleet will total at least eight yachts, for the great part of the season, whilst at Cowes it is quite likely to run into double figures. Last summer the Commodore of the Royal London Yacht Club provided a challenge cup of the value of £250 for competition between 15-metre yachts of all nations, and in the absence of any foreign opposition it was won by Britomart.

In this year's races the fleet may consist of four British yachts, three Spanish, two German, one French, and one American, in which case the contest would be one of the best international yachting events that has ever taken place in British waters.

From a purely spectacular point of view the A. class for schooners, yawls, and ketches exceeding 23 metres rating, will be unrivalled. Yawls and ketch-rigged vessels have of late fallen out of favour for racing purposes, and the unlimited class now-a-days consists of nothing but schooners. They are vessels of great size, and, when well-heeled under a cloud of canvas, nothing more picturesque sails the seas.

The racing of the class will be particularly interesting this year on account of the appearance of a new schooner built for the German Emperor, from the design of Herr Max Oertz, to supersede the big Meteor that is now outclassed. The brilliant debut of Germania at Cowes last August, will not be readily forgotten by those who had the good fortune to witness it, and if the Kaiser's new vessel can beat her, she will be a flyer indeed.

The Mussoorie Races, fixed for the 13th and 15th instant, have been abandoned owing to insufficient entries. Two open gymkhanas will, however, be held on the 15th and 22nd instant.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar's new Australian purchase, Neith, whose record we published last week, won another race over two miles at Sydney on the 14th ultimo. There were but three starters, Neith, Trafalgar and Lord Nolan. Trafalgar, who had won the Sydney Cup, being most fancied. Lord Nolan, a previous winner of the Melbourne Cup, beat Neith on the post by a neck but was subsequently disqualified for interfering and the race awarded to Neith. Time—3mins. 34-1/5secs.

The importation of the two Australian racers, Sir Tatten and The Leaner, has been reported. Sir Tatten is a three-year-old chetnut colt by Gluten—Admiration and has no big performances to his credit. The Leaner is a five-year-old bay gelding by Holbrook—Miss Grafton. He ran twice unplaced as a two-year-old. He did not appear again till November 1907, when he was unplaced in the Superinter's Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Epsom. Won the Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, at the Kyneton District R.C. meeting; was second in the Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, and second in the Welter Purse, 6 furlongs, at Epsom. In 1908 he ran on twenty-two occasions and scored seven wins:—The Flying Handicap, 6 furlongs, and Rock Handicap Plate, 5 furlongs, at Hanging Rock; The Flying Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Kilmore; The Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Williamstown; The Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Aspendale Park; The Welter Plate, 6 furlongs, at Kyneton; and the Flying Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Yarra Glen. In January this year he fulfilled eight engagements and won five of them:—The Flying Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Hanging Rock; The Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Sandown Park; The Publican's Purse, 5 furlongs, at Avenel; The Trial Handicap, 5 furlongs, at Epsom; and the Flying Handicap, 5 furlongs, at the Kilmore T. The Olympia Horse Show, for which the first arrivals have already started, will include a battle of many of the picked armies of the world. Last year it was felt as something of a disgrace that English officers were completely outclassed by foreign officers; there was, in truth, no comparison. This year the competition is to be a good deal keener, and the King, who is giving a £500 gold cup, has stirred the emulation not only of the Continental but of American armies to meet these competitors.

Our officers are for the first time making real preparation. The strange and formidable jumps invented by Continental ingenuity—guns, tree trunks, railway lines, dummy soldiers, and the rest—have been rigged up in the riding schools, and a number of picked men and horses have been practising daily.

Can we face the competition and rival the immovable seat of the Italians with whom jumping in the ring is a national game, or the fire of the Spanish, or the long training of the Argentine officers? Whatever be the verdict on 8th June, the prime object with which Lord Lonsdale started this international contest will be realised for the first time. Ring-riding has taken its place as a national army game.

The show has given the greatest stimulus known in its annals to the horse industry in Ireland. It is the favourite Continental boast that their competitors ride only Irish horses, and if that reputation were fully exploited it might mean a million of money to the country. There is no doubt that the soil and climate of Ireland produce more "resilience" both in men and horses than any spot in the world. Nearly all the best two-legged and four-legged jumpers hail from Ireland.

Some vast schemes are on foot to make a great permanent arena for the new national game, and as the horse show is backed by an inner cabinet of millionaires some such scheme is likely to go through.

Riding a fresh horse on his estate at West Hill Park, Sherborne, Dorset, on the 19th ultimo, Mr. Norman McLean, the famous Oxford coach and oarsman, met with a serious accident. His head struck the branch of a tree. Though badly injured, the victim was seen to rise and place a handkerchief to his head. Then he lost consciousness, and his doctor afterwards summoned Sir Victor Horsley from London to perform an operation and removed portions of the skull. When the mail left hopes were entertained that Mr. McLean might recover.

THE "Half-crown Dog" joke gave Londoner's something to smile at for one day last month. In the Daily Mail on the 15th April the National Canine Defence League announced its readiness to pay half a crown a week towards the keep of a homeless dog in a good home, defraying also the cost of the license. One dog be it noted.

No appeal was ever made to the benevolence of the public which had a prompter or more gratifying response. No one had ever imagined that the love of dogs was so strong a trait in the London character. When the secretary and staff of the league reached the office next morning there were people waiting on the stairs beaming with benevolent desire to provide a dog with a delightful home at half a crown a week. The telephone bell was violently ringing, and when the secretary placed the receiver to his ear a soft, sympathetic voice told of a happy fireside circle into which a dog with half a crown a week would be received as one of the family.

As soon as the secretary had replaced the receiver the bell began to ring again. While the first callers were being attended to more were tramping up the stairs. They all were prepared to guarantee a life that should be one continual round of pleasure to a dog at the moderate charge of half a crown a week. Some were passionately devoted to dogs. Some in their eagerness confused their ideas, and asked: "Is that right about the half a crown a week?"

It was at a very very early stage of the morning that the secretary realised that the weekly endowment of half a crown was leading to misunderstanding, and after the first half-dozen philanthropists had been interrogated he commenced negotiations by making it clear that there were dogs to be had, but no half-crowns. A certain proportion of the callers pursued the subject no further, but a large number of kindhearted people proved quite willing to take a dog for nothing.

By ten o'clock twenty-four people had called and the telephone had been continuously in use. By lunch-time there had been fifty or sixty callers, and the procession on the stairs was swelled by postmen. By tea-time about a hundred letters had been received, about as many callers had been interviewed, and the secretary had lost count of the telephone inquiries.

The letters were unanimous in the expression of a great passion for dogs, and almost unanimous in the use of some such phrase as "at the price you mention" or "on the terms as stated." Many explained that they wanted a dog "to chase away stray cats," or "to protect a few fowls," which is much the same thing. Since the league interests itself in cats as well as dogs the explanation was no recommendation.

Telephone inquiries came from Leicester and other distant towns. Not only at the office of the league but at the house of its principal supporter shoals of officers were received. "There is no more popular breed of dogs than the half-crown dog," the secretary declared.

But it should be clearly understood that the half-crown offer did not hold good. All the fifty or so dogs under the league's care would be provided with homes by kindly people without charge. But the "half-crown" dog as a breed or as a "paying guest" is extinct.

ONE of the most serious football riots on record broke out at Hampden Park, Glasgow, on Saturday, the 7th ultimo, entailing injuries to over a hundred persons, including many policemen, and the destruction of property to the value of close upon £1,000.

About 60,000 people had gathered at the grounds to witness the Scottish Cup final between the Celtic and the Rangers. The match between the teams a week ago had ended in a draw, and when at the close of time on Saturday the score was one goal each, the crowd grew disorderly and there were loud cries of "Play on!"

As no arrangements had been made by the authorities, the teams retired from the field.

This was the signal for the outbreak of the riot. A few hundred men and youths jumped the barricades and invaded the pitch, and they were soon followed by thousands of others.

The force of police available was very small, and they were utterly unable to resist the onward rush of the crowd. Drawing their truncheons they vigorously attacked the aggressors. So threatening did the situation become that the mounted police were ordered to enter the enclosure.

This action so incensed the mob that all restraint was put aside. Stones and bottles began to be thrown, the goal posts were torn up and broken, and the nets destroyed. A gang of youths seized the roller and did considerable damage to the pitch.

Several times the mounted police charged the crowd, but they even met with a shower of missiles, and were practically powerless to quell the rioters.

To add to the seriousness of the situation a number of the rioters broke up the barricading, poured whisky over the debris, and set fire to it, creating a huge bonfire on the track and turf. They next seized the pay-boxes and added them to the flames, creating a blaze of alarming proportions.

The fire brigade was summoned, but for over half an hour the men were unable to get to work. The infuriated mob defied the firemen, who then turned the hose on the rioters. Nothing daunted, the mob rushed at the firemen, and with stones and missiles soon got the upper hand. They also rushed at the hose pipes, jumped on them, and cut them in several places, the while the police were stoned and the mob severely batoned. Eventually a large additional force of police were drafted in from the city, and the field was gradually cleared of the crowd, the riot having lasted for over two hours.

THE fight for the heavy-weight championship between Gunner Moir and William Hague, reported in our London Sporting Letter to-day, lasted just 2mins. 47secs. Moir was knocked out by the terrific Yorkshire pitman in the easiest fashion imaginable. Hague immediately afterwards signed articles to fight Sam Langford on Derby Day at the National Sporting Club for a purse of £1,400 and £200 aside. The contest should be interesting. Langford was originally matched to meet Jack Johnson on the date mentioned, but the latter has stated that he will not fulfil the engagement. Langford is a black man, and is lighter than the Yorkshireman. He has been carrying all before him in America, is a very hard hitter, and can take a wonderful amount of punishment.

While the quick victory of "Iron" Hague is still fresh in the memory, it is interesting to chronicle some of the events which came to an end almost before the men had really begun. It is also curious to note that the four events in which Jem Roche, Pedlar Palmer, Gunner Moir, and Tiger Smith were disposed of in less than a round were title contests, and that the Tiger lasted 2secs. longer against Moir than the Gunner himself survived "Iron" Hague's sledge-hammer blows in the same ring. For purposes of comparison we reproduce what may be termed the long and the short of some important boxing events:—

AMONG the many sportsmen who visit Mussoorie, there must be some who are keen brothers of the angle, and who will be interested in hearing that there is a certain amount of mahseer fishing to be obtained within a fairly easy day's walk of the station. There may also be some who are going across to Chakrata by stages, and who would be glad of the opportunity to wet a line en route. It is for the benefit of these that the following brief notes are written, says the Mussoorie Echo.

The Jumna river is 12½ miles from Mussoorie by mileposts on the first stage out towards Chakrata, from which at least a mile may be taken off for those living at the Charleville Hotel and in its vicinity. The march is an easy one, being all down hill at varying gradients, with the exception of a short ascent on approaching Sainji bungalow, which is visible from the corner where the road passes above the Kampti falls, and another mild ascent for a short distance, a little beyond Sainji. From the milestone at this corner a short cut runs down to the bridge over the Kampti stream, which saves nearly two miles of winding road; but he who attempts this path must be surefooted and supple of joint. Another short cut between the 11th and 12th milestones brings the wayfarer on to the road again at a hut with a small patch of sloping ground, just above the river, where there is room for a small tent, and from which a track down the hillside brings him to the head of the Jumna bridge in a couple of minutes. The journey can be done by a fairly active man in three hours, from the junction of the Simla road with the Mall, to the water's edge.

There are five pools within easy reach of the bridge, viz., one immediately under it, two higher up stream, and two lower down. During prolonged dry weather the river is very fine and clear, while during the rains it becomes a muddy torrent; at both of these periods the fishing is at its worst, but in dry weather an occasional fish may be taken on fine tackle between 6 and 8 A.M., or from 5 P.M. until dusk, i.e., before the sun gets strong on the water, and when it disappears behind the western hills. The writer of these notes, who put in a day on these pools on the 8th instant, when for want of rain the river was probably as low and clear as it ever is, took one fish of 7lb. in the morning, and one of 3½lb. in the evening, but when the river is clearing after rain, sport should be better both as regards numbers and size. A trip worth trying would be to go to Lakhwar dak bungalow (where there is a most obliging khansama who can knock up a decent meal at short notice), in the evening—2½ miles—sleep there, and start fishing back to the bridge in the early morning. The river runs under the road for this distance, and mental notes can be made of likely places, on the way up. This, however, is only an undertaking for an active man, willing to work for his sport, as it involves a steep drop down to the river by hillside tracks in the first instance, and a good deal of climbing off and on, subsequently. The river bed is hot, as is the camping ground above the bridge, and at the latter the flies are troublesome, but these are drawbacks which attend most fishing expeditions. The mahseer take a small spoon fairly well, and would doubtless take natural bait equally well, perhaps better. Very large fish, such as one would hope to get at Raiwala, must not be expected; perhaps one of 10lb. would be the largest taken during three or four days' fishing; but for anyone requiring a change from station life, an excursion for a day or two at a suitable time would be worth trying.

AN interesting experiment in breeding wolf and dog hybrids is, we hear, to be tried at the London Zoo. Blanca, the great timber wolf, has recently given birth to ten young ones, five of which have been preserved. One of the litter has been left with the wolf, and the other four have been given to the care of a collie bitch, who will bring them up in company with one of her own offspring. There have been several instances of wolf and dog hybrids, and in 1872 the King (then Prince of Wales) presented a specimen to the Gardens.

The Oxford and Cambridge cricket outlook appears remarkably rosy this year. Both Universities boast a goodly nucleus of Blues and senior men, and the "Frasshers" look like turning out an above-average lot. In Messrs. R. O. Lagden (Marlborough), H. S. Altham, R. Sale (Repton), G. H. Cartwright (Eton), A. J. Evans and A. C. Huson (Winchester), J. B. Brooks (Marlborough), T. T. Waddington (Dulwich), and R. W. Poulton (Rugby), the O.U.C.C. have some capital batting recruits. Lagden shares with H. E. W. Prest (who has gone to Cambridge) the honour of being the best 1908 Public School batsman of the year. His double-century vs. Liverpool will not readily be forgotten. He averaged over 52, and is a rare field into the bargain. Altham and Sale averaged over 40, and Cartwright, Evans, Huson, Waddington, and Brooks well over 30. Others likely to get immediate trial include Messrs. J. P. Sargent (St. Paul's), J. W. Horan (Australia), son of the ever famous "Cornstalk," G. G. Read (Westminster), G. W. Cattley (Eton), A. N. Hutt (Wellington), R. Honey (a Rhodes scholar from South Africa), and G. B. Gilroy (Winchester), the last-named a wicket-keeper right above the public school average.

The C.U.C.C. boasts such sterling recruits as Messrs. H. E. W. Prest (Malvern), the best public school bat of his year, J. W. Nason (who has already won his spurs for Sussex), F. G. Turner (Westminster), A. P. Wilson, and H. N. Atkinson (Charterhouse), C. Pinkham (Leys), the "Soccer" Blue, J. M. de Freitas (Haileybury), C. E. Squire (Repton), also a "Soccer" Blue, F. N. Carlisle (Harrow), A. E. F. Wood (Westminster), D. O. Light (Cheltenham), C. K. Knight (Tonbridge), cum multis aliis—far too numerous to mention today. In batting, at least, both 'Varsities appear well reinforced.

In attack, too, the outlook is fairly rosy both ways. Cartwright, the Etonian, is an express bowler of uncommon merit, and rarely tires—a great feature. A. J. Evans (Winchester), a son of the old Oxford Blue, seems to inherit his pater's aptitude for attack, and a good deal is expected from his slow-to-medium deliveries. Other Oxford bowling recruits include Sargent, the St. Paul's crack, who took fifty-three wickets last season, and has a big future before him, presumably; K. C. Raikes (Shrewsbury); F. N. Tuff (Malvern), the "Soccer" Blue, R. O. Lagden (who has already represented his 'Varsity at racquets vs. Cambridge; A. D. Wommersley (Marlborough), and many others.

At Cambridge, the best bowlers appear to be Messrs. C. Marzetti (Tonbridge) and G. B. Sleigh (Rossall), both fast trundlers. Marzetti captured sixty-three wickets last year and Sleigh thirty-four. The Old Rossallian has a very fine swerve, hence must be labelled dangerous on most wickets. Others "good at need" include Messrs. S. H. Habershon (Winchester), H. N. Atkinson (Charterhouse), Wood (the old Westminster), whom many good judges tip to come off more than most, A. V. Markant (Harrow), etc. On present prospects, therefore, this season's cricket at Oxford and Cambridge ought to be of a distinctly high standard.

The first of the Gymkhanas at Simla was held at Annandale on Saturday last. Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto were among those present, but the attendance was small. The programme opened with tent pegging over a hurdle for gentlemen. This was won by Captain Plant, with Captain Black second. The second event, a trotting, galloping and walking race for ladies, was won by Miss Mahon with Miss Dyer second and Lady Eileen Elliot third. The affinity wand race was won by Lady Eileen Elliot and Lord Francis Scott, Miss Mahon and Mr. Williams second. Musical chairs for ladies on horseback went to Miss Dyer, with Mrs. Hadow second, and Lady Eileen Elliot and Captain Jelf won the affinity hat trimming stakes.

At the meeting of the Annandale Gymkhana Club on Friday evening the following committees were appointed for the current season :—Gymkhana: Colonel Birdwood, Captain J. Mackenzie, Captain Shore. Cricket : Lord Francis Scott, Major Bateman-Champain, Captain Rickets. Horse Show : Major-General Mahon, Captain Learmouth and Captain Shore. Polo : Captain Learmouth and Captain Todd.

A gymkhana race meeting will probably be held on the 22nd May.

The Bill which Sir William Anson has introduced into Parliament will make any person who has in his possession, for the purpose of sale or exchange, the plumage or skin of any dead wild bird mentioned in a schedule imported or brought into the United Kingdom, unless exempted from the operation of the Act, guilty of an offence punishable by a penalty of £5, and for every subsequent offence £25. The clauses of the Bill provide power to the Board of Trade to issue licences for the purpose of supplying specimens to natural history or other museums, for the purpose of scientific research or the manufacture of flies for the capture of fish. The birds scheduled are birds of paradise, the heron tribe, owls, ibeses and spoonbills, the stork tribe, chatterers, crowned pigeons, argas and Impeyan pheasants, tregons, lyre birds, terns, rheas, and any birds protected by legislation in India, any British dominions beyond the seas, or in foreign countries.

Mr. C. G. Longland, of Allawatta, Monaragala, Ceylon, was biking in the direction of Buttala when he was chased by a wild elephant. When he saw that the beast meant business he increased his rate of speed somewhat. The elephant, too, was quite game for a run ; and thus the most novel race that was perhaps ever run took place, says the Ceylon Observer, on the lonely Monaragala Road. For two miles the race continued until Mr. Longland—and the elephant—came within sight of the Hospital. This glimpse of civilisation was too much for the elephant, which stopped, looked regretfully at Mr. Longland, and turned away.

The motmot, or barber bird, which is one of the latest arrivals at the Zoo, has a resemblance to a bird of paradise, but it has a curious habit of nipping off portions of its tail-feathers, so as to form wire-like shafts. As soon as the tail is full grown the birds commence operations about an inch from the tip of the two longest feathers, and cut away the webs from both sides of the shafts with their serrated bills, making a gap about two inches long. Both male and female treat their tales in this fashion, which gives them a remarkable appearance. One explanation of this curious trait that found a good deal of favour in the seventeenth century was that the birds were bad sitters, and after remaining a few minutes quietly on the eggs, turned themselves round and round, and so by the constant repetition of these movements in a circle quite spoiled and wore away the tail-feathers, but the helpful Waterton was able to suggest an explanation from the birds' point of view. He remarked that while we considered this pattern of tail a blemish, were the motmot to come among us it would probably consider our heads, cropped and bald, in no better light.

Owing to the belief that a number of bison had perished in the Nilgiris from the recent outbreak of rinderpest a proposal was laid before the Nilgiri Game and Fish Preservation Association to close the shooting of bison for two years. At a recent meeting of this body the proposal was rejected. It was shown that rinderpest did not prevail in the forests where bison abound. Still more to the point was the fact that but half a dozen bison fall to the sportsman's gun in the season, and that the closure would, therefore, afford protection only to that extent, which was not worth while considering.

Certain villages in Manza Mayong in the district of Nowgong have been harassed recently by a rogue elephant. It is said to be a solitary tusker, in poor condition, and standing about 8½ feet high and a reward of Rs. 50 has been offered for his destruction.

A correspondent writes from Palanpur :—H. H. the Maharaja Sahib of Bikanir recently made a four days' halt at the Dharmata camp and was immensely pleased with the excellent camping arrangements and shooting bundobust and the splendid hospitality he received at the hands of the popular and gifted heir-apparent, Sahibzadah Taley-Muhammed Khan Sahib. The shooting excursion did not, however, prove as successful as was expected.

On the first day khubber was received of the sudden disappearance of the two tigers which had been marked down. However H. H. the Maharaja accompanied by the Sahibzadah sat over a "kill" for a panther, which quickly made its appearance and fell to the gun of His Highness who is a very fine shot.

On the second day the Sahibzadah, in company with Sir Philip Egerton, went to Hathidra after a panther and sat over kill as the day before, but "Spots" did not turn up.

On the third day at noon a general beat commenced for a tiger, H. H. the Maharaja Sahib, and party having taken seats on a rock. Here they received the unpleasant attentions of a swarm of large jungle bees.

The Sahibzadah protected his guest with a safa (turban) and shouted for assistance. Help was quickly at hand and servants arriving on the scene assisted him in extricating the Maharaja, who subsequently rewarded them. His Highness escaped with slight hurt but the Sahibzadah was badly stung.

Meanwhile the Sahibzadah Yamar Hussein Khan met with another sort of encounter, coming face to face with a tiger at a distance of twenty yards. The animal bolted and came out a few minutes later in the beat but was not bagged.

This unsuccessful termination of the shooting excursion was a great disappointment to the Sahibzadah who had reckoned on showing His Highness some real good sport.

A heavy thunderstorm accompanied by rain and lightening spoiled the sport on the fourth day and the Maharaja was unable to prolong his stay for a day or two more for he was due to attend the festivities celebrating the Rathoo family's first settlement in Bikanir, and accompanied by Sir P. Egerton and staff His Highness left by special train for Bikanir on Wednesday evening.

The correspondence regarding the degeneration of tigers in the Central Provinces, which is taking place in the columns of the Indian Forester, has produced an interesting letter from Colonel G. F. Pearson, formerly Conservator of Forests, Central Provinces. As it will probably interest many of our readers we reproduce it hereunder with acknowledgements to our contemporary :—

Sir,—I have read the letters in the Indian Forester by Mr. Dunbar Brander and Mr. Witt on this subject, and as a good many years ago I had some practical acquaintance with tigers both in Nimar and Hoshangabad and Betul, I should like with your permission to add a few words about them.

The system of measurement in vogue in those days was not quite the same as that adopted by Mr. Brander, as the tape was taken from the nose along the back to the tip of the tail, and therefore gave probably 3 or 4 inches more than Mr. Brander's plan. Most of my tigers, 46 in all, were shot east of Harda, but I can locate in my memory eight or nine shot either in Nimar or across the Nerbudda in the Barwani State, and looking at the figures given both by Mr. Brander and Mr. Witt, the former being females except one, and the latter all males, I should say they represent very fairly the size of most of those that I shot nearly 50 years ago. I have no record of measurements, but I remember quite well details of this sort, and I can say positively that with very few exceptions all males ranged between 8 feet 9 inches and 9 feet 10 inches by Brander's measure, while the females were just 12 inches shorter or from 7 feet 9 inches to 8 feet 10 inches. But tigers differ in the length of their tails, and I consider the finest tiger I ever shot was one killed by me not far from Shahpur, in Betul, which, though of enormous proportions, had a short stumpy tail, and did not measure more than 9 feet 6 inches or thereabouts, under Mr. Brander's system.

The longest tiger I ever shot was the Rajaburari man-eater, of which I gave some account at page 387 of the Indian Forester of 1903. This tiger, as I measured it, was 10 feet 3 inches but reduced to the Brander standard, would have been well under 10 feet long. He was a poor brute, and not a fine tiger at all, and I do not think ever had been.

The biggest skin I ever saw was that of a tiger shot at Tikri, about 10 miles S. W. from Akbarpur on the Nerbudda, on the Mhow and Dhulia Road. It was shot by two young officers from Mhow, who I think had never shot a tiger before. The largest skin I had would lie well inside it, with several inches to spare all round, and it measured when stretched, 13 feet in length, and I have never seen any skin like it. Unfortunately, it was not measured at all before the skin was taken off the animal.

I believe then that Mr. Witt is absolutely correct in his conclusions that if the tigers shot now-a-days are lighter and smaller than those of past years, it is only because fewer tigers are permitted to live to what may be called "a good mature age." I do not believe there is any real difference, at least I can see none in the measurements given in those letters by Mr. Brander and Mr. Witt.

No doubt 50 years ago tigers were very numerous in the Nerbudda Valley. When I was with my Regiment at Mhow, 1850—1854, Dr. Strover, the Civil Surgeon at Mandlesar, then the Head-quarters of the Nimar District, shot over 30 tigers in four years, and I think he never went into camp at all after them. They were all shot, so to speak, from home. I remember he shot three large tigers one morning in a piece of "Jhau Jungle" in the Nerbudda, just below Mahesar (named the "Sarsidara") and came back to breakfast.

Mr. John Ker, the Engineer on the railway works near Asirgarh, and Mr. Knowles who built the railway bridge over the Chota Tawa river, near Harsud, West of Harda, both shot a large number of tigers when employed on the works of the G.I.P. Railway. Mr. Knowles, I think, shot 26 tigers in two years while on the construction of the above bridge. He was severely mauled by the last tiger, having incautiously gone up to it with an unloaded gun before it was quite dead. I myself saw four full grown tigers on foot at once. It was late one evening at the end of May, when water was very scarce, and they were all lying together under a rock by a pool of water in the River Machna, about 8 miles below Shahpur. I was out with one or two men tying up 'Garas' and looking for tracks of tigers in the dry bed of the river.

Once again the Suffragettes! This time they were merely amusing in their demonstration, but the quaint conceit was brought off in perfect weather last Saturday afternoon and a great multitude assembled to gaze on "Joan of Arc, new style." The occasion was the release from Holloway Jail of that tiresome person, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, to celebrate which the Women's Social and Political Union held a grand march between the Marble Arch and the Aldwych Theatre. And I was there to see, happening on the weird spectacle as I emerged from a restaurant in the West End. At three o'clock the procession, which was duly arranged in marching order by Miss Kenny, the chief marshal, started on its way for the Aldwych Theatre. Miss Daisy Dugdale, bearing the colours of the Union, green, purple, and white, led the way, and was followed by a band of thirty musicians playing the "Marseillaise." Next came a large banner emblazoned with the figure of a pelican feeding its young, and underneath appeared the motto, "Strong souls live, like fire hearted suns, to spend their strength." Next came the committee of organisers, who were followed by the chief spectacular item of the procession, Miss Elsie Howey, as Joan of Arc! This rather plain young person was mounted on a greyish white charger, and wearing a coat of white armour, and greaves to match and if she felt as uncomfortable as she looked she was truly a martyr to the cause. Behind her came local branches of the organisation with bands of musicians playing a Sousa march, and next came about a dozen horsewomen forming a bodyguard to Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, who rode in triumph in an open carriage with a banner bearing the words, "To Victory." And then they got to Aldwych where a meeting was held, there was, of course, slight disorder and much "chin music," but this I did not stop to hear.

Evidently the House at last intends taking these disorderly women "just whar de hairs' short," as Uncle Remus used to say. The second reading of the Houses of Parliament Bill makes this position clear. The Bill provides that persons guilty of disorderly conduct in Parliament shall be liable to six months' imprisonment or a fine of £100, which is a few cuts above the few shillings or fourteen days' farce of recent times. I doubt if many of these women will now be quite so ready to advertise their "cause" and push the campaign of which the public are so heartily sick. It provides a swift and appropriate remedy for the disgraceful exhibitions of last year ; it remains to be seen if the systematic nuisance will be further persisted in.

The usual signs of a busy London social season are being manifested, and the prospects are said to be extremely good. It is stated that more houses have been let for the summer months than has been the case for some time past. This, of course, means a better time for the West End tradespeople, and it would also suggest the fact that there will be more hostesses in town ready to entertain than there were last year or the year before. The dances arranged for May are increasing in number every day, but it is not at all likely that any royal functions will take place until June. Concert givers are going to be particularly active. Garden parties are to be more numerous and distinguished than ever, the Opera promises to be unusually attractive from the fact that three or four operas are to be heard for the first time in this country. Racing and Sports meetings are to be brilliant, important and pleasant as the case may be, and charity entertainments galore are already booked.

I AM of those who from the outset regarded the extraordinary outburst of hysterical patriotism over "An Englishman's Home" with gloom and suspicion; consequently I make no pretence of trying to conceal my satisfaction at the reception it got in Berlin, where it was hissed off the stage ek dum. This drama may be an excellent thing for home consumption and Territorial recruiting purposes, but to try this little sensation on the poor old Teuton is about the limit of absurdity. It is bad enough to have our inefficiency, national foibles, and nerve-racked dread of the German visualised for us by our panic-mongers at home: but it is a sorry business to exhibit our fears before the man of whom we are most afraid, in his own city. One way or another, events conspire to display Old England in a pitiably craven habit of mind. If we go on telling the German how we wobble under the waistcoat about him, the nation will have no excuse for falling upon us and hammering the country into the position of the bottom dog. If we must believe our home critics, the only reasons why the German shouldn't set about us is one of contemptuous pity. He will begin to feel such a big dog that it will be almost undignified on his part to bite at an abject little dawg, such as we are represented to be. A cheap press is rapidly cheapening a fine old quality we used to call "British pluck."

WRITING of German soldiers reminds me that some of them are not best pleased with Baden Powell and his ridiculous little boy scouts—a small contingent of whom have been sent over to the Continent presumably to advertise "B. P." and give the poor little creatures a much needed holiday after their incessant trotting about roads and streets with barge pole and haversack. Certain of the German papers are distinctly annoyed at the way in which these grotesquely clad English hobbledehoys are being received in the Fatherland. One can quite sympathise with this attitude, for to make a whole regiment execute field manœuvres for the benefit of eight foreign schoolboys may be good natured, but it is hardly dignified. One has only to put oneself in the place of the soldiers in order to see that.

A LADY all night in a bachelor's flat, and the many misunderstandings arising therefrom. That is the foundation of Mr. R. C. Carton's new three-act farce, "Mr. Preedy and the Countess," with which Mr. Weedon Grossmith began a season at the Criterion Theatre last week-end, and, although the author has relied upon rather familiar complications to provide his situations, his construction is so neat, his character-drawing so sure, and his lines so sparkling, that the piece was carried into popularity to an accompaniment of laughter. Roars of delighted merriment broke out with the regularity of minute guns, and there were chuckles in plenty between them.

The bachelor is Hamilton Preedy, newly appointed junior partner in the Bounsall Emporium, and he is very much dismayed when John Bounsall, the head of the firm, arrives at his flat at midnight accompanied by Joanna, Countess of Rushmere. Bounsall explains. The pair are "bolting" together, but it is a very respectable "bolt." The Countess is to be hidden away with a strictly proper aunt of his until such time as she has divorced her husband, who has skipped off to Egypt with a notorious dancer. In the meantime they will take food and rest at Preedy's flat, hotels being impossible; but a telegram calls Bounsall away to the deathbed of a relative from whom he has expectations, and the Countess is left on Preedy's hands for the night.

Preedy gives up his bedroom to his titled guest, and stays at an hotel till the morning, and then the consequences begin. Preedy has just become engaged, and in turn he has to try to hide the Countess from his future father-in-law and from a rival in love. His manservant is scandalised at "the goings on," the cook, her moral principles outraged, leaves without notice, the Countess's nephew and her husband's father visit the flat, and little Preedy is put to all sorts of shifts in his endeavour to screen his partner. In the end, of course, explanations are made all round, Lady Rushmere and her husband are reconciled, and Preedy is quite the hero of the hour.

The pace of the fun falls off a great deal in the last act, when, in order that her relations may understand the position, the Countess has to tell the whole story that is already known to the audience; but Mr. Carton is not dependent upon his situations for his laughs, and his dialogue is full of verbal gems.

Nothing more deliciously comic could be asked for than Mr. Grossmith's acting as Preedy—a nervous little man with pluck beyond his inches. Mr. Grossmith's staggering under the weight of the Countess's trunk, Mr. Grossmith kicking his rival out of the flat, Mr. Grossmith lying to all and sundry—in all sorts of straits and worries he is perfect. Miss Compton was as delightfully cool as ever as the Countess—a compelling personality always, and other excellent work was done by Mr. Fred Lewis as Bounsall, Mr. A. Vane Tempest, Mr. G. Davy Burnaby, and Mr. George E. Bellamy. The reception was enthusiastic.

SIGNS are not wanting that the play of ideas, the play which boldly discusses questions of current interest, is winning for itself a place in London's play-houses. Following close upon the success of "Strife" comes the prduction of "The Earth" at the Kingsway, and here again is considered with sincerity and power, social matters that greatly affect our lives to-day.

The new play, which is by Mr. James Bernard Fagan, is largely occupied with the bludgeoning of a section of the cheap Press, but its action concerns a duel between the interests of capital and the interests of labour. It is a case of materialism opposed to idealism.

On the one side is Sir Felix Jenion, the millionaire proprietor of "The Earth," a popular daily with an enormous circulation, and a number of other influential journals. He tells his readers only what he wants them to believe; it is his boast that what he thinks to-day England thinks to-morrow. On the other side is the Right Hon'ble Denzil Trevena, M.P., Cabinet Minister, and the promoter of a Wages Bill which is designed to lighten the burden of the masses. It is over this Bill that the duel is fought. Jenion sincerely believes that if the measure becomes law it will produce a state of financial chaos, and he brings all the power of his many newspapers to bear against it, even before it has been introduced into the House.

Trevena defies him. Who would have triumphed with the fight carried on legitimately we do not know, for an unexpected weapon is put into Jenion's hands when he discovers that the Cabinet Minister and Lady Killone, the wife of a drunken Irish Peer, are lovers. The power of the Press slips out of the question, and a woman enters instead. Jenion declares that he will make Lord Killone acquainted with his wife's unfaithfulness unless the Wages Bill is withdrawn. To save the good name of the woman he loves Trevena consents to the withdrawal; but when Lady Killone learns that the Bill is to be sacrificed for her sake she declares that the cause is worth more than one woman's happiness, and urges Trevena to remain true to his duty and his principles. She threatens to go straight to a News Agency and have circulated the whole story of Jenion's spying and threats—his whole ignoble conduct—and the newspaper proprietor, beaten at the game, merely stipulates that he shall be the first to contradict in his evening papers the statement published that morning in "The Earth," that the Wages Bill was to be withdrawn. So Trevena and Lady Killone are left to carry on their guilty intrigue, and "The Earth's" fight against the passing of the Wages Bill is still to be developed. Thus the play ends almost where it began; but while it must be confessed that the piece drops into conventional drama after the second act, it is always strong, always bold and pointed in its attack. And there is much in the opening acts to cause one furiously to think. Thus it succeeds in its purpose; and whether it wins a popular success or not, can be regarded as a valuable addition to contemporary drama.

The honours of the acting were carried off by Mr. Norman McKinnel as Jenion, one of those strong iron characters he portrays to perfection; by Mr. Allan Aynesworth, polished and sympathetic, as Trevena; by Mr. Dennis Eadie in the very small part of the drunken Irish Peer; and by Miss Florence Haydon in the equally small part of Miss Jenion, another of her dear old ladies. Miss Lena Ashwell played with her usual intelligence, but she made Lady Killone unnecessarily hard, and often shouted her lines without any reason.

"THE DEVIL" is in London. He arrived last Saturday and has taken up his quarters at the Adelphi Theatre; but I don't think he will stay long, he is so misplaced, ill chosen and badly cast. The up-to-date Devil of Mr. Lyn Harding is a tour de force and the part of the fair enchantress entirely beyond the range of Miss Alexandra Carlisle; she has one moment of emotion in the second act, but whatever else Miss Carlisle does is in the wrong key or colourless. Mr. Harding in his tour de force almost achieves the incredible. He tries to force his powerful personality into lightness and airiness, and sometimes he succeeds, but as he is before all a dramatic actor, he cannot manage the transition and becomes preachy in the more serious passages. The other actors of parts that matter can remain undiscussed; they are all doing their best under adverse circumstances.

As for the play, despite the dulcifying salve applied by Mr. Hamilton, who also changed the locale from Austria to France with efforts of unconscious humour, it is so sordid that one turns in wonderment to the Censor—who banned "Monna Vanna" for the spirit of a line—and passes the same thing vulgarised in "The Devil." The plot can be crystallised into a single sentence. An artist loved a woman six years ago; she married; they meet again and the devil helps him to pervert her against the artist's will and better instinct. The thing is not only shockingly unpleasant—it is shockingly inartistic.

IF we may judge by the illustrations of many years of Christmas numbers there are obstinate sentimentalists who find that the disappearance of the highwayman has made life duller for them. To such people the omnibus conductor armed with nothing more stimulating than a shining ticket-punch is a poor substitute for the mail-coach guard with his brass blunderbuss and his horse pistols. But even the omnibus will afford you the old thrills if you take it further afield than Shepherd's Bush. At Kieff, for example, an omnibus has been pulled up by a whole syndicate of highwaymen, and after the brisk skirmish which followed their first "Stand and deliver," four wounded and six killed were counted. We question whether the annals of Hounslow Heath give a better record. For us henceforward the omnibus has gained its place in the romance of the road.

THE shipping world in the chief Indian seaports is probably more than most people concerned at the death of Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G., the famous shipowner and philanthropist. But his name will live for some time in cricketing circles, for we must not overlook the fact he was the donor of the Currie Cup which proved the means of greatly increasing the popularity of the game in South Africa. He entrusted the Cup to the care of Major Warton, who took the first English team to South Africa, in 1888-89, and who was commissioned to present it to the centre or Province which played the best cricket against them. The distinction fell to Kimberley, whose XVIII. beat the Englishmen by ten wickets in the first match and drew in the return. Since then several interesting Tournaments have been played between the chief cricket centres in South Africa for the possession of the Cup.

A SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE.

IN THE SATPURA HILLS.

THE unfrequented places of the earth are becoming yearly more and more scarce as man penetrates deeper into remote fastnesses, and brings roads and railways in his train. In India the ever-increasing spread of the net-work of railways is not only rendering more accessible many jungles, but is cutting up the forests and wastelands, and so causing a diminution in the numbers of their wild denizens. Moreover, the increasing population demands an increased spread of cultivation, and fertile fields, and crops of corn, millet, and cotton now occupy the places which formerly afforded sanctuary to the beasts of the field. With peace and prosperity the cultivated areas are spreading up the fertile valleys, amid the jungle-clad hills; the forest has been cut down, and the wild animals are driven to remoter fastnesses where there may still remain sufficient cover for their wanderings.

But although the extent of forest has diminished in some places, it has elsewhere been preserved in the Government Reserves, of which there are large areas on the Satpura Hills. Many years ago I was stationed at a cantonment some thirty miles by road from one of these great forests, among the splendid mountains which rose over 3,000 feet above the level of the sea, and more than 2,000 above the plains below. Here was game in abundance. There were herds of mighty bison, and although tigers were not very numerous, there was a fair number of those finest beasts that the world contains. There were panthers, bears, wild dogs, sambur and other deer, blue bull, and four-horned antelope. Whilst of feathered game there was an abundance of pea-fowl and jungle-fowl. In the rivers were crocodiles, and many varieties of fish It was indeed a sportsman's paradise.

In the rainy season and in the cold weather the jungle was so thick that one could seldom see more than a few yards, while the long grass, in places over one's head, was wet with rain or with the dews of night, and frequently rendered the forest almost impassable. But in April the burning rays of the sun soon thinned down the dank undergrowth and dried up the leaves of the trees; so that by the end of that month the forest is in few places sufficiently dense to afford concealment even to the smaller animals. Moreover, the water in many places being dried up, the wild beasts congregate in the vicinity of the comparatively few pools that remain, or on the banks of perennial streams. Then is the season for the sportsman. In the hot weather, however, the stags have cast their antlers, and they must therefore be sought for in the cold weather from October to April. This applies to the sambur and barking deer; the spotted deer shed their horns earlier, and retain them in the hot weather.

The game was not the only attraction. The surroundings amid which it was sought rendered the pursuit doubly pleasurable. There were rugged mountains, on whose summits stretched broad plateaux covered with tall prairie grass and giant teak trees, and on the hill-side the feathery bamboos rustled in the breeze. And between the hills the rushing mountain torrents of countless ages had worn deep ravines where the game and its pursuer find rest, and shade and water during the burning hours of the day. To these cool glens the herds of bison would resort after feeding on the heights above. Here too the stags belled loudly at break of day, and the kakur barked in alarm as the tiger slunk homewards on the shady side of the ravine after his night-long prowl. The bears, nocturnal animals too, seemed to prefer lying up in the scanty shade of the bamboos, perhaps to catch the fugitive breeze which stirred the foliage above, and where their concealment was assisted by the great back boulders that strewed the mountain side, and from which the hairy animals could with difficulty be distinguished.

Although game was so plentiful, the extent of forest was so great that one might wander for many miles without seeing any animal, but perseverance was sure to bring success.

My first visit to the forest was for a few days at Christmas time, when the foliage was so dense that it was difficult to see anything, although from time to time a crashing noise announced the passage of some beast through the jungle; I was, however, fortunate enough to get a sambur stag with a snap shot.

In the following March I visited the forest with the district officer. On the second day of our outing a tigress killed a buffalo about a mile from camp, and my companion watched over the carcase in the evening. Just when the sun was setting, the beast came back to feed, and received a bullet on the point of the shoulder. Next morning we went to look for the stricken animal, taking with us a small elephant. We soon found blood, and at the foot of a tree, which the wounded animal had gnawed in her agony, a piece of bone lay in a pool of blood. The trail led into a small bush covered nullah, and as it was dangerous to follow any further on foot, we sent the elephant round the tracks, with two men on its back. The men threw stones into the bushes, and at the first discharge the tigress rushed out with a roar, and sprang on to the elephant's head. As she had a broken shoulder, the elephant soon shook her off, and, trumpeting loudly, bolted for camp. The tigress rushed roaring after, and sprang on to the elephant's hindquarters, but being kicked of, she fell sprawling on the ground, when my companion put in a shot which sent her back to cover. I now followed and found her still alive in the nullah, and another bullet finished off this game tigress. The elephant, although not badly hurt, did not stop until she reached camp a mile or more distant.

Some days later I started at dawn, and, after wandering until the afternoon over a great extent of forest, came suddenly upon a herd of bison. The animals were already on the move, and as I watched them nineteen cows filed past me within fifty yards. Looking round in another direction, I saw two enormous bulls, but failed to get a shot. At the next camping ground I put up a couple of bears, but they escaped unhurt. Thus terminated a somewhat unsuccessful expedition, when, with more experience, bison and bears would probably have both been added to the bag.

In May of the following year I again obtained a fortnight's leave, and visited the great forest, riding thirty miles to camp the first day, and shooting on the way a barking deer, a four-horned antelope, and some peafowl. A few days later, having had but little sport, I sent my camp by road to a place some sixteen miles off, and, starting some hours before daybreak, made a detour through the jungle. It was still quite dark, and I was riding my pony along a narrow forest path, when suddenly there was a rustling made by a heavy animal among the dead leaves and bushes by the wayside, and a big black bear rushed out with a growl and charged straight at me. I slipped off my pony and seized my rifle from one of my followers, but the beast turned tail and fled back into the shadows of the night before I could get a shot.

A long search for bison followed, but it proved fruitless, although there were plenty of fresh tracks. Some time after midday we emerged into the forest road, and came up with the procession of carts with my baggage. These were a little way ahead, when suddenly one of my men pointed out a panther sitting up under a tree about eighty yards off. The beast sat up on its haunches, perhaps aroused by the cries of the goats accompanying my carts. Jumping off my pony, I made a lucky shot, and the panther subsided with a bullet through the head. It was a very small but full-grown animal; the stomach contained the remains of a monkey.

It was very hot that night, and my bed was placed out in the open, not far from a well and a trough full of water. It was bright moonlight, when my orderly aroused me, saying that there was a panther at the trough, but it made off before I saw it, or could get ready for a shot. Later on a bear came down to drink, and as he made off into the shade of the trees I followed him bare-footed, but failed to get a shot, as he kept to the shadows. Just at day break next morning I was walking along the forest road, when I saw a bison standing by the roadside; I walked towards it, and it stood facing me, and I shot it in the chest, and finished it with another bullet behind the shoulder. This appeared to be a solitary bull, but at my shots a whole herd broke from the shadows of the trees, and thundered past. As they made off I dropped a bull with a shot just under the tail, and then found to my disappointment that the first one was an old cow.

That night I sat up in a tree near the road over the carcase of one of my goats which had been killed by the panther that visited my camp. It was moonlight, but a total eclipse of the moon came on, and as I could see nothing I went to sleep. However, I slept too soundly, for in the morning it was found that the panther had dined off the carcase again while I slumbered peacefully above. Next morning was my last at this camping ground, and I visited the carcases of the bison to see if any beasts of prey had been feeding on them. Some vultures and adjutant birds, loathsome and gorged with flesh, hopped heavily away from the remains, and a few jackals slunk off. A little farther on I heard monkeys chattering in the trees overhead, and found that they were swearing at an enormous bear which was ascending the hill side. I at one put a bullet into him, and he turned and fled. I ran to cut him off, but even then he would show no fight, and turned to bolt again, when a bullet knocked him over, and he gave up the ghost after giving utterance to a series of unearthly squeals.

The remainder of the bag on this expedition consisted of a wild dog, about a dozen small deer, and some feathered game. On my way through the jungle on the return journey I came upon the remains of a cow-bison that had been killed by a tiger a considerable time before. The ground had been wet and soft when the tragedy took place, and had since hardened, and it was interesting to read the story in the book of Nature which lay open to the hunter. There were the tracks of the tiger, overlying those of the herd which had stampeded before his attack. After killing his victim, the beast had been down to the now dry pool to drink, and had left the imprint of his great paws on the margin. Close by were the remains of a vulture, which must have ventured too near before the lurking tiger had finished with his prey, and had been killed by a stroke of the mighty paw—a victim to his greediness and temerity. All these things were written on this page of Nature's book.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2.282 feet per second).

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

First Day, Tuesday, 4th May 1909.

THE meeting opened in the best of weather and there was a fairly large gathering in the stand, and a very large assemblage of natives on the grounds. Everything went off well, and the results of the two "big" races were according to public fancy. Only one pony came from the Doars, and with Mr. Price having disposed of his little lot previous to going home, fields ruled on the small side, and it was with obvious padding that at least a couple of races did not fall through. Mr. Mackenzie skippered the meeting in his usual tactful method, and nothing was wanted that was left undone for the comfort of the public and racing contingent. The following were the results :—

STEWARDS' PLATE.—For a Cup Rs. 49. For all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 200 or over. 14-1 to carry 11st. 7lb. W. I. Allowances—C.-B.'s and Arabs 24lb. 2 laps.

Second Day, Thursday, 6th May 1909.

WE had another fine day for the meeting and the racing was conducted under the best of conditions. There was again a large attendance, which witnessed capital sport. Favourites were well on the mark, but Kestrel badly disappointed his owner in the Regimental Plate, which was won by the staunch Red Lad after a desperate tussle with Melody. Primrose achieved a fine performance in winning the Club Cup of 1½ miles, carrying the crushing impost of 12st. 7lb. The following are the particulars of to-day's racing :—

Melody and Gozo were quickest out of the slips, Kestrel next and then Red Lad. At the second lap Melody was still in front going strong. Red Lad in attempting to go up bumped Kestrel, which seemed to disconcert the latter and he would not try any further. Red Lad full of running went after the leaders and beating Gozo down the straight caught Melody near the post, and in a great set to be just put his nose in front at the right moment.

This order was maintained till the third lap, when Melody shot her bolt and dropped back, Fairyland going to the front followed by Primrose. Turning into the straight Primrose went up to the leader, but Fairyland was unequal to the challenge, and the former going on won fairly easily by three-quarters of a length.

Third Day, Saturday, 8th May 1909.

IDEAL weather again favoured the third day and there was another good attendance, including H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Baker. Although the fields were small racing was splendid and quite exciting, most of the issues being open till nearly the end of the race. Not one first favourite got home, and Messrs. Russell and Company, the bookmakers here, must have done well and got over their losses of the first two days with something to spare. Mr. Galstaun has again headed the riding statistics with Mr. Francis a good second. Everything throughout the Meeting has gone merrily, and all the arrangements have been in Mr. Mackenzie's usual thoughtful manner. The following are the particulars of to-day :—

(N.B.—Second entries close 1st June 1909.)

A STORY has been told to the "Alice (Cape Colony) Times" concerning the smallness of the Alice Railway Station. A local farmer, expecting a chicken-house to arrive, sent one of his native hands, a newcomer, to fetch it. On arriving there the man saw the house, loaded it on his waggon, and started for home. On the way back he met a man in uniform, with the word "Stationmaster" on his cap. "Hold on!" cried that official. "What have you got on that waggon?" "Master's chicken-house," was the reply "Chicken-house be blowed!" exclaimed the official; "that's the station."

"I WANTER give notice, mum!" blurted Mary Ann one morning. Mrs. Skinniflint looked pained and surprised. "May I ask why, Ann?" she inquired. "Well, mum, if you wanter know the truth, I'm engaged to be married." "Indeed! I am surprised! said Mrs. Skinniflint, freezingly. "But let me warn you against these frivolous, marriage-seeking young men! You would do better to stay with us, if you have not given the matter the most serious consideration!" "Yes, mum, but I have," answered the domestic. "I've been to two fortunetellers, and a clairvoyant, and looked in a sign-book, and dreamt on a lock of his hair, and visited an astrologer and a palmist, and they all say, 'Go ahead, Mary Ann, go ahead!' Oh, no mum, I ain't a one to marry reckless-like!"

THE CRUSADE AGAINST DYSENTERY.

Wise Words by a Physician.

Among the pernicious diseases incident to life in India dysentery takes an important place. The reasons for this are many and varied. It is, however, unnecessary to enumerate them here. The great fact which every resident in the country, and therefore every possible sufferer, has to keep prominently in mind is how to avoid this dread complaint in the first place, and, in the next, how to take steps to cure it should he be unfortunate enough to contract it.

Speaking broadly, no tropical disease is more pestilential than dysentery, for it undermines the health, depresses the nervous system, reduces the tone and vigour of the whole body, diminishes the mental energy, and, generally, interferes with the individual's physical power of resistance against disease. The result is that, unlike what happens in most other diseases, one attack does not act as a preventive, but rather predisposes to another, thus rendering the weakened system liable to still further inroads, until the condition of the sufferor is deplorable indeed, for he may be attacked by many after-effects, like abscess of the liver, dropsy, scurvy, and nervous affections of various sorts.

Bad as all this is, the patient's case is rendered still worse by consideration of the fact that the general nutrition of the body is lowered by life in hot climates, that the digestive system is therefore depressed as well as the vitality, so that he not only starts heavily handicapped in favour of the disease, but also heavily handicapped against the conditions which make for recovery.

In these respects dysentery may be said to resemble typhoid fever on the one hand, and malaria on the other, and the danger of both is too well known to need more than passing notice. As typhoid is due to ulceration of the small intestine, so dysentery is due to a similar condition of the large or lower bowel, while malaria and dysentery are believed to often have a close relation, the former predisposing to attacks of the latter.

The treatment of dysentery, like that of typhoid, and, in great measure, that of malaria, is admittedly one of diet. Milk, the blandest of foods, was, until a comparatively short time ago, the sheet anchor of the physician. In the very acute stages of the disease many doctors are, however, opposed to its use, and many patients are not able to digest it, so that they grow steadily worse.

Happily, science has discovered a food-tonic which, as one physician has written, "possesses virtues of a very high order," and is practically a specific in the modern treatment of dysentery. This is Sanatogen. Its composition is well known, for it has been widely stated to consist of 95 per cent. of pure casein of milk, the substance to which that food owes its nutritive value, in chemical combination—not merely mixed—with 5 per cent. of Glycero-Phosphate of Sodium, the chief vital constituent of the nervous system. These two substances, in the combination in which they exist in Sanatogen, are so digestible that the preparation puts no strain on the most enfeebled digestive organs. All of it is absorbed or assimilated by the body, so that there is no residue to irritate the ulcers which are formed in the course of the disease and prohibit the giving of solid food.

Sanatogen is, therefore, universally prescribed even in the acutest stages of the severest cases, for it prevents deterioration in nutrition, and maintains the patient's power of resistance at a high level, thereby giving him a better chance of recovering quickly and without complications. More than that, cases which get worse under ordinary conditions rapidly improve when Sanatogen is added to the diet. One of the supremest values of Sanatogen is that it is not limited to restoring the health during or after dysentery. It is actually a preventive of the disease by strengthening the system so that it can withstand exposure to the infection.

Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists. To meet the special needs of the Indian population, a booklet, "How to keep well in India," has been written by a physician, who has practised for many years in the country, and it will be sent free to all who write for it mentioning The Indian Field to Messrs Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, who are also able to supply Sanatogen.

Wednesday was the 60th anniversary of the City and Suburban, and the handicapper had every reason to congratulate himself on the result, with the two top-weights first and second in inverse ratio. The public dearly love a good horse, and Dean Swift, who holds the extraordinary record of having taken part in the race on six occasions, on two of which he had won and been second twice, was as popular an idol as was Victor Wild in his day. The "Dean" has many sympathisers amongst all classes, and though, of course, opinions greatly varied, as witness the range of the betting, no sportsman would have grumbled had his fancy succumbed to the old warrior. That a horse can come up fresh and well so often for a race of this description is a marvel to American trainers, whose charges, under more vigorous pressure, are worked out much earlier. Everybody longed to see the veteran achieve a third victory, and the wagering pointed to more than a hope that he would do so; but the pitcher had gone too often to the well, and though beaten, he was not disgraced in trying to give 9lbs. to a horse in the zenith of his powers. Results:—

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALTHOUGH the football season comes to an end in less than a week, there are several important matters still to be decided. Newcastle United, it is true, have secured the championship of the First League, but Bradford City are not yet absolutely certain to go down into the Second League in company with Leicester Fosse, and the closest of struggles continues between Tottenham Hotspur and Bolton Wanderers as to which of these two clubs shall, together with West Bromwich Albion, gain admission to the First League. Leicester Fosse, who only secured promotion twelve months ago, are now doomed to return to Division II., and in all probability, a similar experience awaits Bradford City. Over the latter team some thousands of pounds have been spent since the opening of the present season, in order to retain membership of the First Division, but it would appear as if all the outlay had been made in vain. Beaten last Saturday at Plumstead, Bradford City, with no more than three fixtures left to fulfil, have only 29 points to their credit. Unhappily for the Yorkshire team, Chelsea, enjoying the destruction of overcoming the champions at Newcastle, brought their aggregate up to 33, Burv and Liverpool—both dangerously near the bottom of the list—drew at Liverpool, and so raised their totals to 34, and Nottingham Forest halved the points with Preston North End. Indeed, after what occurred, the one real possibility of escape for Bradford would seem to be that the Forest in their remaining engagements should go down before Middlesbrough and Leicester Fosse, and as these matches take place at Nottingham, the chance is remote in the extreme.

WITH the first three clubs in the Second Division of the League all winning, the question of promotion is still as open as before. West Bromwich Albion lead the other two by two points, and they, of course, possess by far the best chance of going up. Between Tottenham Hotspur and Bolton Wanderers there is practically nothing to choose, only a slight superiority in goal average enabling the London club to take precedence over their rivals. To-morrow, however, may decide matters. Curiously enough, both teams will be playing in London, and while Tottenham Hotspur enjoy the advantage of ground—being at home to Bradford—Bolton Wanderers are opposed to Clapton Orient at Homerton. If the Orient show anything like the form they produced against Tottenham Hotspur in their two holiday matches, the Bolton men may easily go down. Form suggests that Tottenham will beat Bradford, so that they appear to have a fine opportunity of establishing a clear lead on points. One very singular feature of the situation is that all the three clubs who are fighting for promotion conclude their programmes with a match against Derby County. West Bromwich Albion and Tottenham Hotspur meet them at Derby, while Bolton Wanderers play the Derby team at Bolton.

CLAPTON must be regarded as the strongest amateur team remaining with the Football Association. On consecutive Saturdays they have won five ties, their latest success in the competition open to the whole country following a hard-earned victory in the London Cup. In the second of these matches, when they might have expected a particularly hard fight, they had matters much their own way, and naturally played better football than when having nothing to spare. Northern football as played by amateurs must have degenerated greatly or else Eston United were very luucky in qualifying for this final tie at Ilford. In no respect did the Eston team show good form, and they marred their work by infringements of the rules so flagrant that one of their half-backs was ordered off the field. The game certainly did not represent amateur football as played under the auspices of the Football Association in a very pleasant light. Clapton themselves were often punished for doubtful methods, but perhaps the referee's strictures became necessary because of the malpractices of the Northern team. This is the fourth year in succession that the trophy has been carried off by a Southern team, and Clapton in regaining possession after the lapse of a year deserve high praise. They carried on their game at a fast pace with considerable precision. Their halves largely controlled the play by their sure tackling and kicking, but the work of the whole side was made somewhat easy by their adversaries' lack of skill.

MORE interesting to the general public than anything in connection with League football is the Final Tie, which in all probability will not, after the present season, be decided at the Crystal Palace, despite the fact that there exists no enclosure from which a crowd—however large—can disperse with anything like the same comfort and absence from danger. Whether a meeting between Manchester United and Bristol City will prove particularly attractive to followers of the game in London may be open to doubt, but arrangements to attend the Final are made in the North and Midlands so many months beforehand that the presence of many thousands from the provinces is always assured. While, however Bristol City are to be heartily congratulated upon having qualified for the concluding stage of the great competition there can be little question that Manchester United vs. Newcastle United—especially after the latter club's three appearances in the Final Tie during the past four years—would have aroused more general enthusiasm.

THAT Manchester United will carry off the trophy there seems every reason to expect except for the fact that—so often in the Final Tie—the better fancied team fail to do themselves justice. The Manchester club did not begin their Cup career in especially promising manner, Brighton and Hove Albion running them to a goal on the Clapton enclosure, but in subsequent stages they knocked out Everton, Blackburn Rovers (by 6 to 1), Burnley—the conquerors of Tottenham Hotspur—and, three weeks ago, Newcastle United at Sheffield. Bristol City cannot look back upon quite the same kind of achievement, but they beat both Southampton and Bury away from home—after draws at Bristol—and then disposed of Norwich City and Glossop before their meeting with Derby County at Chelsea in the semi-final round. In this game, it will be recalled, they only escaped defeat through a penalty goal in the last minute, but they pulled through in capital style on the replay at Birmingham. Up to the present Manchester United have scored 12 goals to 3 and Bristol 12 goals to 6.

BRISTOL CITY so far have enjoyed a big advantage in playing, with scarcely an exception, the same eleven in every Cup tie, and it is particularly unfortunate that just at this especially important period they should lose the services of Rippon, the centre forward. Of late Manchester United have not been placing their full strength in the field, but they should command the services of their best eleven to-morrow. In that event the Bristol defence—ably as it is led by Wedlock—must be subjected to severe pressure, for a forward line composed of Meredith, Halse, J. Turnbull, A. Turnbull, and Halse will be as formidable as any in the country. United, too, will scarcely be at any disadvantage at half, and if they have no such capable back as Cottle, Stacey and Hayes made a capital pair against Newcastle at Bramall Lane.

ARSENAL vs. BRADFORD CITY.—Woolwich Arsenal made their position in the League secure at the expense of Bradford City, who were beaten by the only goal scored at Plumstead. The game was played in summerlike weather and before 14,000 people. The ground was hard and a lively ball often got beyond the control of the players. The play was full of keenness and dash and it was interesting from beginning to end. Both sides were at full strength. Whittingham was wrongly penalised for offside when going hard for goal, and at the end of fourteen minutes a miskick by Robinson let Lee through to score a good goal. Mellors was left helpless. Subsequently Bradford had just the better of the play, and Whittingham sent one great ball just wide. Save for a big burst at the beginning of the second half, when Mellors twice cleared, the City were always the more forceful side. The game was hotly contested, and the brilliant shooting of Whittingham gave the home defence no end of anxiety. His aim was just a little wide, which was fortunate for the Arsenal. McDonald tipped a header from Logan over the bar, and then cleared a desperate situation when O'Rourke looked like scoring. The Arsenal defence was fine, but once Whittingham hit the bar with McDonald beaten. Towards the end the Arsenal made a spurt, but Fitchie shot wide. The Arsenal were lucky to win. Arsenal, 1; Bradford City, 0.

NEWCASTLE UNITED vs. CHELSEA.—Twenty thousand people watched this match at Newcastle, where the ground was in good order. Chelsea showed plenty of dash and enterprise in the early stages of the game. The Newcastle backs were not very steady, and after four minutes' play the home defence was beaten, Humphreys scoring a fine goal from a centre by Brawn. Newcastle retaliated strongly, and Rutherford narrowly missed equalising, but the Chelsea defence proved too sound for the home forwards. Veitch missed from a penalty, and at the interval Chelsea were still leading by one goal to none. Chelsea started the second half with plenty of vigour and aggressiveness. Hilsdon, who had been very conspicuous, scored their second goal, and shortly afterwards the same player got a third from a penalty-kick. Wilson then scored for Newcastle from a centre by Rutherford. Newcastle play was clever but they showed less dash than their opponents, and Chelsea beat them on their merits. Chelsea, 3; Newcastle United 1.

FULHAM vs. HULL CITY.—After playing very poor football against Hull City at Craven Cottage, Fulham were beaten by 3—0, and with a little luck Hull might easily have doubled the score. There were many changes in the Fulham team, Charlton, Mouncher, Harrison, and Millington being replaced by Lindsay, Littlewort, Wyllie, and Bradshaw, and certainly the changes did not benefit the team. Hull tried a centre forward named Toward, their regular man, Temple, going to right full back in place of Stephenson. The Red Indians and cowboys from Earl's Court occupied seats on the stand, and enlivened the proceedings with war-whoops and other manifestations of delight. Fulham had to face a cross wind in the first half, but started very well indeed, and for a time Hull were penned in their lines while three corner kicks were taken against them. None of these proved effective, and the game opened out. Both goals were frequently threatened but Hull were always the more dangerous in front of goal. Profiting by hesitancy on the part of Sharp, Toward scored a fine goal for Hull, and before half time nearly headed another. For the first half hour of the second half Hull completely outplayed Fulham, and attacking all along the line scored twice more through Toward and Jack Smith. At the other end A. Browell handled in front of goal, but Lindsay, who took the penalty kick, sent the ball straight at Roughley. Right up to the end Hull were the better side and thoroughly deserved their fine victory. Hull City, 3; Fulham, 0.

BURNLEY vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—From Tottenham's point of view, great importance attached to this match at Burnley, owing to the struggle for promotion going on in the Second Division of the League, but there were not more than 7,000 spectators present. The ground was inches deep in mud. Tottenham were at full strength, but Burnley were without Cretney and Ogden, their places being taken by McLaughlin and Mayson. Play was vigorously contested in the first half, the exchanges being exciting, and Woodward scored twice for the visitors from centres by Macfarlane. At the interval Tottenham were leading by two goals to none. Immediately after the re-start, Mayson scored for Burnley, who did most of the attacking in the second half. On several occasions the visitors' goal narrowly escaped, but nothing further was scored. Tottenham Hotspur, 2; Burnley, 1.

OLDHAM ATHLETIC vs. CLAPTON ORIENT.—The meeting of these sides at Oldham did not arouse much interest, and only about 2,000 people witnessed the game. Though facing the wind, Oldham did most of the attacking in the first half, but the only shot that took effect was one by Fay. After change of ends Clapton pressed, and Mathews, while on the ground, fisted out from Oliver. The heavy state of the turf rendered scientific football almost impossible, the players finding it difficult to keep their feet. Just before the finish the home side increased their lead. Oldham Athletic, 2; Clapton Orient, 0.

SCOTTISH CUP FINAL.

GLASGOW RANGERS vs. CELTIC.—With fine weather favouring the replayed final tie in the Scottish Cup between Glasgow Rangers and Celtic, a crowd of about 70,000 spectators visited Hampden Park, Glasgow. Both teams were at full strength, the Rangers introducing Reid, late of Portsmouth, at centre. The first half showed the Rangers to advantage, Good scoring for them twenty minutes after the start. Immediately following this Adams was again beaten by Stark, but the point was disallowed. Young, a Celtic player was injured in a collision with Gelt, and had to retire. Play continued to be exciting, but nothing more was scored in the first half. The Celtic players began the second half in great style, and some characteristic play by Quinn ended in the International centre-forward scoring a goal, and so equalising matters. From that point the game was fought out with greater keenness than ever. Both goals had narrow escapes, the forwards on each side shooting at every opportunity and trying their hardest to get the lead. There was no further scoring, however, and the match was left drawn.

There was an extraordinary scene at the close of the game. The larger portion of the huge crowd thought that extra time should have been played, but the players and referee retired. The crowd then broke in on the ground and tore down the goal-posts and nets. The police had to draw and use their batons freely, while after further reinforcements had been sent for the police again used their batons freely. Glasgow Rangers, 1; Celtic, 1.

ISTHMIAN LEAGUE.

LONDON CALEDONIANS vs. LEYTONSTONE.—Visiting the London Caledonians at Tufnell Park Leytonstone scored a very decisive victory by 6 goals to 3. Considering the run of the play during the opening stages, this result came as something of a surprise, as the Caledonians had all the better of the opening exchanges. There were one or two clever dashes on the part of the visiting forwards, but on the whole the greater part of the play was in the Leytonstone quarters. W. Porter and H. Melhuish were, as usual, very clever, and it was from a centre from the latter that Dexle opened the home team's score. This reverse seemed to improve Leytonstone's aggressiveness, and before long H. J. Pearce had equalised, and in another five minutes G. Seaton gave them the lead. Dexle, with a fine shot, brought the scores level again, but after the interval the run of the play was entirely in favour of Leytonstone. The second half opened fairly even, but Leytonstone soon started forcing the game, and after about a quarter of an hour A. J. Seaton put them ahead. G. A. Sutherland responded for the home team, but with the defence steadily weakening the Leytonstone team came along in greatly improved style. In a melee in front of the Caledonian goal G. Seaton snatched a shot which put his side once more ahead, and within a few minutes W. Scorey and H. J. Pearce had each added to the score. Leytonstone, 6; London Caledonians, 3.

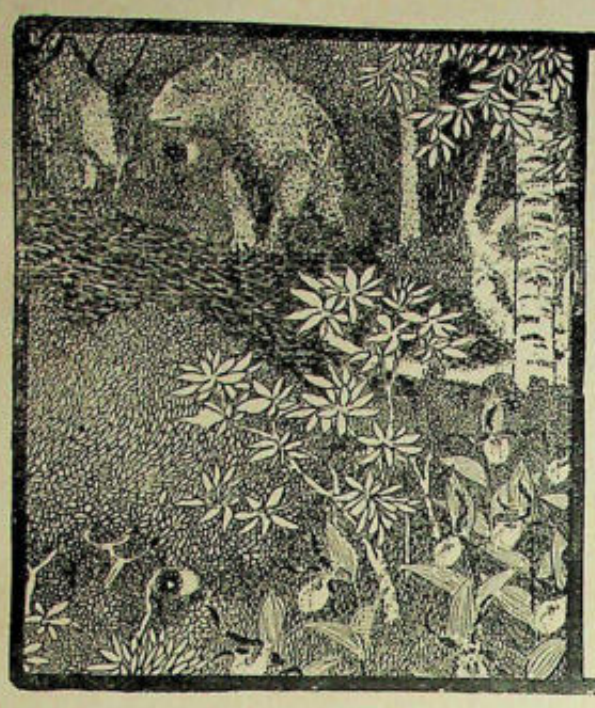
SOUTHERN COUNTIES AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP FINAL.

NORFOLK vs. DEVON.—Played by arrangement on the Tottenham Hotspur ground before about 2,000 persons. Neither team was able to place its best side in the field. The Westerners' forwards were the livelier at the start and after Raymond (Argyle) had struck the post, Barrett (Royal Navy) scored from the rebound. Later from a corner kick Sparso put through his own goal and equalised the scores and then Green (Yarmouth) put his side ahead with a swerving shot, and Norfolk led 2—1 at the interval. On crossing over Norfolk did well at the start, but then Devon for half an hour did everything but score. Norfolk rallied and looked to have the match well in hand and the Devonians well beaten when Kessinger (Argyle) raced through and, tipping the ball to Barrett, the latter drew level with a fine shot. There were but a few minutes remaining and in these both sides were near scoring. The game ended in a draw and the cup was subsequently presented to Devon to hold for six months, afterwards to go to Norfolk for a like period. Norfolk, 2; Devon, 2.

AMATEUR CUP FINAL.

CLAPTON vs. ESTON UNITED.—In a one-sided game at Ilford Clapton scored 6 goals to nil and won the Football Association's Amateur Cup. It was a well-deserved victory, Clapton having the better of the game all through, and maintaining their form although troubled a good deal by the foul methods of their opponents. The referee had anything but a light task, and in the second half, after a warning he sent Callaghan, the Eston United left half-back, off the field for foul play. This incident took all the interest out of the game, for, leading by 4 goals, Clapton, of course, had nothing to fear from ten opponents. On a beautiful afternoon, some 5,000 people were attracted to the match, the London team naturally being strong favourites, though Eston United brought a few supporters with them. On hard turf Clapton set a fast pace, and, the heavier set of men, they were soon able to force home some attacks. Eston United were not sure in defence, and a long shot by Attwood, the outside right, gave Clapton the first goal, while Purnell soon added another from a pass by Attwood, following clever work by Tull. In this way Clapton practically had the game in hand a quarter of an hour from the start. They were clearly the better side, and with a little more steadiness near goal might well have increased their advantage before half-time. With the wind helping them after change of ends Clapton soon took control of the game again, and after a shot by Purnell had been intercepted Rance scored smartly. In a rush the same player put the ball through, and then Callaghan was sent off. Play slackened for a time, but Rance taking a pass from Tull, dribbled skilfully and scored his third goal, while equally smart work by Purnell produced the last goal. Clapton, 6; Eston United, 0.



RACKETS.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS FINAL.—The final of the Public Schools championship aroused the usual enthusiasm in the packed gallery at Queen's on Friday the 16th instant. As was anticipated, the steady length service and the capital understanding between Leatham and Denison, the Charterhouse pair, whose returns always appeared to have an object, were responsible for the fairly easy win they gained over Eton. Possibly the best feature of their play throughout the competition was their marked ability in that important part of the game—the taking of service.

The losers are to be congratulated on showing such splendid pluck. Both the Eton pair possess the ideal temperament for match players.

The winning pair were very evenly matched. Denison, although first string last year, was second string to Leatham on this occasion, the improvement made by the last-named being altogether out of the common. Both will be at Charterhouse another year. They had a very severe draw, but were possibly a little fortunate in defeating the redoubtable Rugby pair in their memorable match on the previous Wednesday.

One cannot help remarking on the fact that no more Fosters of the present generation will appear in these competitions. It is just twenty years since "A. K." and "W. L." first appeared as small boys for Malvern, which school has been represented by one of the family ever since except on two occasions. Five of the seven brothers were cup winners—a wonderful record, and one which is never likely to be challenged.

Charterhouse (H. W. Leatham and H. A. Denison) beat Eton (J. C. Craigie and V. T. Bulkeley Johnson) by 4 games to 1. Scores: 15—8, 15—8, 1—15, 15—2, 18—17.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The 'Varsity doubles proved disappointing, the play being below the usual standard of rackets associated with these games.

Oxford were represented by H. Brougham (Wellington and Brasenose) and R. O. Lagden (Marlborough and Oriel), and Cambridge by C. C. T. Watson (Rugby and King's) and L. C. Crockford (Rugby and Clare).

Neither of the four players enhanced his reputation, a remark which especially applies to the first strings.

Oxford all through appeared to have the upper hand, though Brougham did not really get going until the last two games. Watson's service was ineffective, and his clumsy style told against him, especially at the beginning of the match. His rally play was creditable. Crockford showed vast improvement on last year's display, especially in volleying Brougham's service. Lagden's strong overhand service gained many aces, and his returns, though not always well directed, were usually "kill" strokes.

Oxford won by 4 games to 1, with scores of 15—3, 14—17, 15—6, 15—6, and 15—10.

BOXING.

THE HEAVY-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.—In less than one round Ian Hague beat Gunner Moir at the National Sporting Club on the 19th instant in a contest for the heavy-weight championship of England and £1,300. The Gunner certainly looked the more fit of the two men, Hague carrying more loose flesh than one expects to see on a well-trained boxer.

ROUND FIRST AND LAST.—After a rather brief spar Hague dashed out the left, which landed squarely on the head. This blow he followed up with a hard body blow with the right, which compelled Moir to clinch. Upon shaking off his opponent, Hague, after making a futile attempt with the right, was more successful upon the second occasion, and scoring hard upon the body, dropped the Gunner. The latter soon rose, but instead of breaking ground, went in to mix matters, and during some half-arm work received a clip on the jaw and again went down. When on his feet again Moir appeared all at sea, and while making a feeble attempt to lead, left himself open. Hague took full advantage of the opportunity, and sent his opponent down in his own corner. Moir rose to a stooping position, and appeared waiting for the count; but the timekeeper called second after second, and the Gunner not rising in ten seconds, was counted out. Hague was hailed the winner, the duration of the contest being 2mins. 47secs.

ATHLETICS.

TWO A. A. A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE SEVEN MILES WALK.—For the Seven Miles Walking Championship of the Amateur Athletic Association, at Stamford Bridge, on the 17th instant, there was a falling-off in the number of entries, only 27 (as against 44 last year) being received; but for the Ten Miles Running Championship of the same body, which event was decided after the walk had finished, the excellent entry of 39 was received yesterday, as against 40 last year. The holders of the two championships were E. J. Webb in the walk (his winning time last year being 53mins. 2-3/5secs.) and A. E. Duncan (who beat J. E. Deakin by three yards only last year in 53mins. 40-2/5secs.). It was stated during the week, however, that Duncan would not defend his title in this race. The weather was a great improvement on the wintry conditions that prevailed on Easter Sunday twelve months ago, the sun shining throughout the afternoon, accompanied by a refreshing breeze. There was a capital attendance when the competitors for the walking event were sent on their journey—shortly after three o'clock. The only absentee was the Salford Harrier, W. G. Yates. E. J. Webb, the holder, at once set a strong pace, and, increasing his lead at every mile, the amateur champion finally won a fine race by quite 500 yards, in the fast time of 52mins. 37secs. F. T. Carter, the amateur ex-champion, and A. H. Pateman, a well-known vegetarian athlete, also walked splendidly. Details:—

Starck, United and Southend H. (last). Time—66mins. 23secs.

THE TEN MILES RUN.—The twenty-nine starters went away at a good pace, and for more than eight miles a good race between the two most fancied competitors—A. E. Wood, the Southern Counties and International Cross-Country champion, and E. R. Voight, the four miles and Olympic five miles champion—was witnessed. Just before the completion of eight and a half miles, however, Voight, who was running, and had been throughout, at Wood's shoulder, suddenly stopped and retired, leaving Wood to finish an easy winner by nearly a quarter-mile in the capital time of 52mins. 40secs. E. Roberts, Elstree A.C., cut out the pace and led for the first lap, but was shortly afterwards passed by G. W. Scott, A. J. Robertson, and E. R. Voight, the order at the mile being Robertson, Voight, and W. H. Brooks. Time.—4mins. 56-4/5secs. J. Murphy, Hallamshire H., and Scott then took turns with the lead. At two miles (time.—10mins. 5-4/5secs.), Wood led with Voight second and Scott third. On the completion of the third mile (time.—15mins. 22secs.), J. Murphy, the National cross-country champion, showed the way from Voight and Scott. Wood now commenced to force the pace, and, at four miles, led by a yard from Voight, with Murphy, Scott, B. C. Long, and A. J. Robertson retired and Wood and Voight drew away. The pair, running together, reached the half distance in 25mins. 51secs., about forty yards ahead of Murphy and Long. Six miles were covered with Wood leading Voight by a yard in 31mins. 13-1/5secs.; seven miles, in 36mins. 39-3/5secs., and eight miles, in 42mins. 3secs. At that point Scott was third, fully 200 yards behind, and Long fourth, another forty yards behind. Just before the completion of the next half mile, Voight, who it was noticed had gone short in his stride, suddenly stopped and retired, leaving Wood with a lead of nearly three hundred yards.

Running very strongly and in fine form, Wood completed nine miles in 47mins. 23secs., and finished an easy winner by 430 yards from Scott in 52mins. 40secs.

COMBINED 'VARSITIES vs. ROYAL ST. GEORGE'S CLUB.—Owing to several causes, the Royal St. George's Club were by no means at full strength for their match against a side representing the combined Universities at Sandwich on Saturday, the 17th instant. Mr. Vivian A. Pollock, Lord Maidstone, Mr. E. Martin Smith, Mr. O. Martin Smith, and Lord Winchilsea were among the prominent golfers who were unable to take part in the contest. The Singles were won by the 'Varsities by the narrow margin of 6 to 5. They also won the Foursomes by 3 to 2, and thus gained the victory on the day's play by 9 to 7. Results:—

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE G. S. vs. WALLASEY CLUB.—The Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society concluded their tour in the North with a match against the Wallasey Club, at Wallasey. The singles resulted in a tie, each side scoring 5 games, but the Society won the foursomes by 2 to 1, and so proved successful on the day by 7 to 6. Details:—

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—On the links of the Royal St. George's Club, at Sandwich, the thirty-first annual inter-University match resulted in an easy victory for the Dark Blues by 6 points to 2. Although Oxford were generally expected to win, it was not thought that they would prove successful quite so easily as was the case. The top Cambridge men, however, played very disappointingly. The Light Blue captain, Mr. B. Hammond-Chambers, was no match for Mr. J. A. Robertson-Durham. The latter won the first six holes, and from that point it was only a question of by how much the Oxonian would gain the victory. He never looked like losing his long lead, and eventually won by 9 and 8.

ROWING.

THE £100 SCULLING HANDICAP.—This handicap, promoted by the Sportsman, was concluded at Putney on the 21st instant, and resulted in the victory of a very promising young sculler from Eton, in George Yeomans Pocock, who, after a desperate race in the final heat, beat Albert Bowton, of Hackney, by two seconds. The conditions were not at all good for rowing on the flood tide, but the ebb went down quickly, and the scullers had a following wind all the way. Tremendous interest was taken in the event, and right the way from Chiswick to Putney the towing-path was lined with spectators. In the first heat of the second round, Wag Harding, the champion of England for 1895 and 1896, won very easily from a much-fancied candidate in Dodds, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who just beat Hardee for second place by about 2 ft.

In Heat 2 William Coles, of Erith, the man who did such fast time on the previous day beat the present English champion, Ernest Barry, by ten lengths, in the fast time of 16mins. 9secs., and victories for Albert Bowton, of Hackney, and G. Y. Pocock followed. Harding, Coles, Bowton and Pocock were thus left to contest the final, which commenced at Chiswick Steps shortly after five o'clock. In this, Harding gained upon his men down to Hammersmith, but from there the veteran made little headway. Bowton maintained his handicap advantage right up to the Craven Steps, with Pocock and Coles having a desperate race for second place. Pocock eventually passed Coles, and opposite the Leander Boat Club got on terms with Bowton. From there the struggle was a very keen one, but Pocock lasted the better, and won by half a length, with Coles three lengths further behind, and Harding a bad fourth.

Final Heat.—No. 3 Middlesex station, George Yeomans Pocock (Eton), 70secs. start, 1; Middlesex station, Albert Bowton (Hackney), 73secs. start, 2; Surrey station, William Coles (Erith), 66secs. start, 3; No. 2 Surrey station, Charles R. Wag Harding, 30secs. start, 4. Time.—15mins. 3secs. Won by half a length; three lengths between second and third, with Harding a bad fourth.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 27th April.—The opening meet of the season was held at Lake End at 6 A.M. After the heavy rain of Saturday and Sunday the going was excellent. Drew over Municipal Hill to Long Swamp. Hounds hit off a line at the top of the swamp and carried it to just below Dreick but were unable to make nothing more of it. The Master then drew Jackal when a jungle sheep jumped up and crossed over into Monkey. Outside Rallywood hounds owned to a line, but it was too stale for them to carry on. Then followed a long draw over Newmarket and Lawley's Course to the Pykara Road. Captain Vesey viewed a jack in Dartmoor Vale, which led hounds a merry chase to Pirate and Bracken. In the latter covert the pack divided, one half taking a line to Kengadu when they turned left handed to Road Shola, through it to the Yemakal Valley and down to the stream and swung right handed back to Chemmund, when they lost him.

Thursday, 29th April.—Sandy Nullah Toll Bar at 6-30 A.M. A very small field turned up to meet the Master this morning, these early meets are not as popular as they should be! In spite of the good going after heavy rain the morning was a disappointing one. The Master drew across the downs to below Gibbs without a sign of a jack; some second horsemen, however, said they had viewed a jack and hounds were at once laid on; they owned to a line which they carried by Pamela's crossing to Barber's Shop and on towards Briar, just then Captain Vesey viewed a jack below Hero Shola, hounds ran him into Wapshares Hare in which several jack were afoot, the pack divided about six couple hunting their jack through Bacon Wood and down the Yemakal Valley, but were stopped on One Tree Hill. The rest of the pack had split up and gone off in all directions. The remainder of the morning was spent in looking for them; some being recovered near the Pykara Bungalow. About seven couples returning to kennels in the afternoon.

Monday, 1st May.—Umbrella Tree at 6 A.M. It was a delightful cool morning with heavy dew on the grass, this, however, dried up as soon as the sun got up. Again the field was a small one. A punctual move was made across the Connemara Road to the swamp on the left. Hounds threw their tongues at the bottom end and streamed up the shoulder of the hill below Hanging Shola, here the jack doubled back into Hanging Shola. Breaking cover on the far side he took a line for Brookhampton where he made good his escape. Hanging Shola held a brace of jack; a couple and a half of hounds hunting their jack down to Black Bridge and up to Toda Cathedral and on into Cathedral Shola. It was close on an hour before the rest of the pack were got out of Brookhampton. The Master decided to draw Brooklands but before that place was reached a jack jumped up in front of hounds; they ran him hard back to the Umorella Tree and down the ghauts where they lost him. On the way back to kennels another jack was found near Brooklands: after a short run hounds ran into and killed him, drawing their first blood. By this time the sun was very hot and scent nil, so hounds returned to kennels.

RANGERS vs. CALEDONIANS.—Played on the Rangers' ground on the 8th instant. The Rangers early asserted their superiority and pressing throughout ran out victorious by 5 goals to nil. They scored their first goal from a scrimmage in front of the visitors' posts. Brewin next found the net and Cowie was beaten a third time before the interval, Smart putting through. On resuming Postence scored, and after a rush by the Caledonians had been stopped the home team pressed once more and Brewin headed the ball in and the Caledonians were thus beaten as stated. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Berkley and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Lawton, and Cody, halves; Davis, Postence, Brewin, Smart and M'Kay, forwards.

CALEDONIANS.—Cowie, goal; Helu and Hayhurst, backs; Haylebrook, Boilard and Stoddart, halves; Harding, Durant, Allan, Apear and Laing, forwards.

DALHOUSIE vs. CUSTOMS.—This match on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday ended in a win for the Trades Club by 2 goals to nil. They rushed down at the start and Prike scored. A couple of runs by the Customs were stopped and then a foul against the Customs in the penalty area enabled Prike to score once more. The Customs showed up better after half time, and shots by Fisher and Galbraith were unsuccessful. Play ruled up and down the field; both custodians were called upon to clear but there was no further score. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Henry, goal; Clarke and Stevenson, backs; Wilson, Lees and Montgomery, halves; Prike, Whysall, Darling, Hurlston and Wright, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Goldsmith and Vears, backs; Marsden, L. A. Smith and Seth, halves; Bowers, Galbraith, Smith, Fisher and Silver, forwards.

Referee.—Sergt. Hounsell.

CUSTOMS vs. CALEDONIANS.—These teams met on the Caledonian ground on Tuesday, a poor game resulting in a win for the visitors by 3 goals to 1. They had the best of the exchanges all through and the three points were scored by the brothers Smith. Behrend was credited with the only goal scored by the home team—the result of a fine individual run down the field. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Vears and Seth, backs; Fisher, Smith and Vandpall, halves; Echlin, Galbraith, Smith, McCready and deSilva, forwards.

CALEDONIANS.—Goodwin, goal; Stoddart and Hayhurst backs; Boilard, Currie and Harding, halves; Laing, Allen, Behrend, Coldwell and Harvey, forwards.

Referee.—Sergt. Curley.

"B" DIVISION.

ST. XAVIERS vs. WANDERERS.—Played on St. Xavier's ground on Monday, the visitors winning by 3 goals to 2. M. Jones, Peters and Hamilton scored for the Wanderers. Pybus and Ford for St. Xaviers.

GORDONS "B" vs. R. G. A.—Played on the Gunners' ground on Monday, the home team winning by a goal to nil.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE League matches commenced on Saturday last and though none of the games were productive of good play, each and all were fought out in the proper spirit and when the men settle down in their positions, better exhibitions may be looked for.

The weather was scarcely conducive to good football and the wonder was that the players lasted so well. After the recent rains the grounds were in better trim than is usual during the first half of the League, but new men just out from home found them very puzzling.

The man who takes most quickly to the conditions prevailing out here is the Tommy and probably for that reason the game between the Gordons and the Shropshires was the best of Saturday's lot and drew the biggest crowd. It was a good ding-dong struggle and while the Gordons were worth a win they were probably lucky to score 2 goals in the first 5 minutes. The Salops had the better of the exchanges afterwards but failed lamentably in front of goal. Their centre half, a formidable gent, standing about 6½ feet in his socks, seemed their best man, albeit his ideas of feeding his forwards were rather elementary. Both sides went in for the kick and rush game, however, and the Aberdonians being the faster lot were the more dangerous when they got near goal.

The Gordons will play all their matches this season on the maidan and we understand will share the Caledonian ground.

Dalhousie have the makings of a very useful side and their front rank is greatly strengthened by the return of Prike. Whysal seems the weak spot in their team. The backs are both new and evidently suffer slightly from Anno Domini. Lees at centre half was as good as ever and the outside right shaped well. Customs were without Anderson and MacReady but are not the side at soccer that they are at hockey. Rangers fairly outplayed the Caledonians who are strong favourites for the wooden spoon this year. The score 5—1 in the Rangers favour about represents their superiority.

Calcutta as usual trounced the Y. M. C. A. The former were weakly represented, only four of last year's team playing, but were much too good for the "Christians" who, however, showed quite good form at times. Reynolds had a lot to do and did it well, and their outside left, Rosetti, showed promise of turning out useful. Sherman, O'Shea and Lee played best for Calcutta and in Longbottom they have found a very capable outside left, a position that always seems to give difficulty in filling to civilian clubs, this year Calcutta will have very few men to chose a side from which for a Club of its numerical strength is rather strange. It seems to be the case now-a-days that men coming out from home do not show the keenness of former years and while perfectly happy to play in a "B" team game will not summon up the energy for a league tussle.

V. Cooper, the C. F. C. full back, joined the ranks of the Benedicks on Saturday and exchanged the pludits of football enthusiasts for the jingling of wedding bells. It is doubtful if he will play again but after the honeymoon he may perhaps be persuaded to once again don the red shirt.

The League Committee have been busy altering their rules and after several attempts have got them ship shape and a meeting was to have been held yesterday to pass them. An important addition is that all Clubs in the League must be affiliated to the Calcutta Referees' Association which is as it should be.

"Jimmy" Reid, the late Association Secretary of the C. F. C., is now in Yokohama where, we understand, he utilizes his spare moments in teaching the young Japanese idea, how to shoot—at goal. "Jimmy" has become an adept at Ju Jitsu and this combined with his weight and caber tossing powers has made him a man to be avoided in a Rugby game. Advices from Yokohama relate that after a Rugger match there recently a round robin was sent to the Club Secretary earnestly requesting that for humane considerations "Jimmy's" services might in future be confined to refereeing or acting as linesman.

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

THIRD ROUND.

EDUCATION SOCIETY OLD BOYS vs. MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Played on the 3rd instant, an interesting game ending in a win for the Medicals. The first half was very even, the Medicals gaining a slight advantage by being awarded a corner on one occasion, but they failed to improve upon it and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the Old Boys obtained a penalty corner but nothing resulted, and then the Medicals settled down to the attack. Repeated onslaughts on the Old Boys' goal were repulsed, but Swingler was at length beaten by Steinhoff, who scored the only goal of the game. Teams:—

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—J. Canteenwalla, goal; W. George and H. Easdon, backs; G. Cowper, Absborne and G. Garthwaite, halves; R. Hayter, S. Steinhoff, A. Hanson, W. Quanbrough and W. Hallums, forwards.

OLD BOYS.—G. Swingler, goal; E. Millard and O. Murray, backs; S. Wood, C. Dudley and P. Holtham, halves; V. Murray, I. Gilder, Major C. Millard and Mr. Harrison, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. PIONEERS' "A."—A great game was expected between these teams on the 4th instant, nor were the spectators disappointed for it was an exciting game throughout, extra time having to be played to arrive at a decision. The Pioneers were prominent at the start and Palvankar made a splendid run down the field, slipped the opposing backs, and scored. The Pioneers continued to press and forced four corners in succession: none were converted, and then the Y.M.C.A. attacked. Ward equalised, and fast play ensued till the interval. Play in the second half was very level, both goals were visited in turn and both teams had opportunities of adding to their score, but these were not taken advantage of and time was called with the score one all. A further five minutes each way was agreed upon, and in the second extra period Spilling netted the ball, and the cup holders being unable to respond were defeated by 2 goals to 1. Teams:—

Y.M.C.A.—Flynn, goal; Essai and Roberts, backs; V. Hildreth, Ward and Dowling, halves; Templeton, Kelly, Spilling, George and McMullan, forwards.

PIONEERS' "A."—Dick, goal; V. Palvankar and Karangia, backs; Surveyor, Nagpurwalla and Divecha, halves; J. Driver, Palvankar, D. Driver, G. Palvankar and Chocksey, forwards.

GYMKHANA vs. CHESHIRES.—These teams met on the 5th instant, the game ending, in spite of extra time, in a draw of 3 goals all. The Gymkhana led at the interval by 2 to 1 and shortly after resuming increased their lead to 3—1, but the Cheshires played up, and Whitlow scoring twice put them on terms. The match was replayed on Saturday last and once more ended in a draw. The Cheshires scored in the first half and the Gymkhana after the interval. Teams:—

GYMKHANA.—Collingwood, goal; Cole and Gillett, backs; Blair, Eberhardie and Bean, halves; Hearson, Caroll, Troupe, Sharpe and Moir, forwards.

CHESHIRES.—Wakefield, goal; Price and Harris, backs; Cartwright, Russell and Simmonds, halves; Truemann, Whitlow, Hayes, Hance and Pickering, forwards.

NORTHAMPTONS vs. GLOUCESTERS.—This game on the 6th instant was a one-sided affair, the Northamptons having the best of the exchanges all through. They scored 3 goals in the first half, and weakness in front of goal prevented them adding to their score after the interval. They did all the attacking and poor shooting lost them many chances. Teams:—

GLOUCESTER REGIMENT.—Seymour, goal; Bennett and Burrow, backs; Hart, Sherwood and Smith, halves; Stait, Harris, Hodgson, Wilson and Cavanagh, forwards.

NORTHAMPTON REGIMENT.—Millard, goal; Taylor and Lieut. Roberts, backs; Booth, Hall and Albon, halves; Lieut. Robertson, Hemmings, Hitchcock, Parrot and Towers forwards.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Departmen for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

RACING REFORM.

It seems after all that the hope and fear prevalent in various quarters that the Liberal Government will introduce a wide Anti-Gambling measure during the present British Parliamentary session will be disappointed.

There is excellent authority for saying that the Bill now being drafted at the Home Office is aimed only at certain minor public nuisances, such as lotteries and newspaper competitions. When the Government Bill is introduced there will be nothing we gather to prevent turf reformers from proposing new clauses or other amendments extending certain of its provisions to betting; but as this would probably mean the wrecking of the Bill, such amendments are not likely to be accepted.

The Home Office is anxious, and indeed, pledged to stop newspaper-coupon competitions, which, after helping to pass two or three summer holidays pleasantly enough, have now become a pest; and the measure is not likely to be loaded with any dangerous top-hamper.

That racing in England needs reforming there can be no denying and we agree with the writer in the Saturday Review who asserts that there are people very high up in authority on the British turf to-day who would not be at all displeased, if they had a little State assistance in setting their house in order, and were told imperatively that they must either continue the work themselves, or expect the outside world to come in and carry it through in wholesale and indiscriminate fashion.

It is in view especially, perhaps, of the large invasion of the English turf by America this season that sincere friends of English racing would welcome some sort of reform. The licensing of new or revived racecourses during the past few years is a serious error of judgment on the part of a body of men who must long ago have realised that there is, to put it mildly, quite enough racing in the country, and that their control of existing racecourses is inadequate; while any Steward who remembers the American invasion of fifteen years ago, would, we imagine, be extremely grateful to find his hands tied in the matter of granting courtesies to the scum of New York who are now asking for them, and will ask in yet greater numbers next season.

There is so much foolish talk about roguery "ramps" and vague thrilling dishonesty in connection with modern racing that the average writer on the subject is apt to lose sight of the fact that nine-tenths of the racing world are decent, holiday-making folk, who would simply stay away if they seriously suspected dishonesty as a permanent feature of race meetings. Dishonesty to them is not even amusing. The Newgate Calendar is to their mind the dreariest collection of volumes ever written. A man who proposes to earn his living by forgery, burglary, illicit coining or embezzlement may be an immense success or an egregious failure in his trade, but he is, first and above all things, a gigantic bore. On the Turf such a person is going to halve the attendance at race meetings, and to introduce the class of person who has made the race meetings of New York and Buenos Ayres the bright and shining social success which they are at present. It would be simpler and more lucrative at once to engage the services of the proprietor-managers of the Ostend Casino who, in the intervals of being in prison, could at least make the thing pay.

It is a pleasing fact, however seriously it may reflect on English intelligence, that on the English turf dishonesty does not pay. A stable may once in a way "rush" a horse into position of favorite for the purpose of laying against it, but we require an interval of ten years and the reported death of every owner, trainer and bookmaker connected with the business, before such a feat can be accomplished again.

A jockey may once "pull" a horse and be forgiven by the Jockey Club with their usual bland politeness towards such persons; but the public, in expressive American parlance, is "not taking any" of this gentleman's skilful betting coups in future. To be brief, if the British Jockey Club would kindly follow public opinion in racing matters instead of trying to lead it; and would refuse licenses to every suspected jockey and trainer, all would be well. As matters stand at present, public opinion requires representation on the turf, as it does elsewhere.

It is to be feared that certain signs of the times point to the fact that the Jockey Club is losing influence in England as fast, and indeed in exact proportion, as it is losing the great names which once guaranteed its position. Nor is it at all likely, as we say, that it will recover its influence with American help. The once familiar argument that the breed of horses must be maintained has become merely a bad joke in these days of motor-cars and airships; and the turf must now be recognised as an amusement pure and simple. Horse-racing with its essential accompaniment of betting, has therefore come to the level of newspaper-coupon competitions in Radical and Socialist eyes, and its future is not altogether secure. It would be well not to give the enemy needless cause to blaspheme.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE nor'-westers that we have experienced during the last few days have been of great assistance in keeping the ground soft for schooling purposes and there is quite a crowd of enthusiasts out at Milton Park on Tuesdays and Fridays. W. Alford is, of course, to the fore and nearly always has five or six aspiring jumpers to educate in the gentle art of getting over them. Mataura is one of the latest recruits. Ridden by J. Bearley she has gone round Milton Park once or twice in company with Pallas. She does not go badly but takes a terrible hold and is a little bit inclined to chance her fences. Bridge Knight was out again on Friday, jumping in much improved style, and as he is looking particularly well we expect to see him to the front in some of the Hurdle Races at the Monsoons. Mr. Holmes' pair, Mercedes and Blueflame, were both out on Tuesday. The black mare would not go at all well in the cage, as she was very nervous but afterwards Alford rode her over a couple in company with Electric Light ridden by Mr. Wallace Jones, and though she hit the second one pretty hard she went nice and straight at them and showed that she probably would make a good hurdler in time. Another pair to go was Mrs. Lamond Walker's new little paperchase horse Tom, again with Alford up, with Fingall ridden by Mr. Tanner to give him a lead. Tom, however, fenced like an experienced performer and judging from the way he hopped over them he could be trusted anywhere.

WE do not hear of many local deals in horse flesh of late. While in Darjeeling Mr. Galstaun sold Flower Girl to Mr. Daunt, the well-known Dooars planter, for racing in the local meetings, and we learn that Mr Wallace Jones has bought a useful chestnut called Au Revoir, who is at present in Alford's hands to be trained for the Amateur Hurdle Races during the coming Monsoons.

We notice that Mr. Jones' last season's horse, Matsumata who was something of a failure in Calcutta, must have improved a great deal in the climate of Ootacamund, as he won a 1¼ mile race in the excellent time of 2mins 14secs., beating fair animals like Bobaway, Lord Boyne, etc. His form must have been a considerable surprise even to his present connections, as we notice from the prices that he was practically unbacked and started at 20 to 1.

DINAPORE has a reputation as a perfect place for horses. Steinbager, Ynyslas, Branga, Myolene, Reha, Queen of Hearts, Meprise and Emerald are summering with Mrs. Holmes in the station and are all doing very well. Mr. Evers is also sending out a horse from England to Mrs. Holmes. The animal is expected to arrive in a few days and will be in Dinapore till October.

TWO new Australian time records were established on the 14th April at Randwick. Mr. W. C. Barnes' b. h. Montcalm won the All Aged Stakes, one mile, covering the distance in 1min. 37¾secs., which is ¼sec. inside the previous record for a mile established by Charles Stuart when he won the corresponding race at Randwick in 1908. The mile and five furlongs record of 2mins. 49secs. standing jointly to the credit of Jack Smith and Sport Royal was also lowered on the same day, Lord Wallace cutting out the distance in 2mins. 48¾secs. when he won the City Handicap by a neck.

THE following notice appears in the last number of the Calcutta Racing Calendar:—Reference an enquiry by the Rangoon Stewards into an objection lodged by Mr. A. G. DuBern against the classification as Burma-breds of the ponies "Sawlon" and "Tsain" and the withdrawal of the said classifications, Mr. Ah Khee, the owner of the two ponies, is warned off the Calcutta Course and other places where the Calcutta Rules are in force.

REUTER announces the purchase for India of the four race horses Chobham, Lavicrep, Lumination and The Loaf. They are all sprinters and have no extraordinary performances to their credit. Chobham, a bay three-year-old colt by Common—Heather Fire, ran seven times as a two-year-old, won the Two-year-Old Selling Plate of £100, 5 furlongs, at the Newmarket October Meeting last year, was twice placed third and ran four times unplaced. Lavicrep, a four-year-old bay colt by Wolf's Crag—Florenzo, ran four times unplaced as a two-year-old, and of the six occasions on which he has since appeared he has scored two wins—the Elswick Selling Handicap, £100, 6 furlongs, at Newcastle, in April 1907, and the Ascot Selling Plate, £100, 6 furlongs, at Newcastle in June last, was twice placed second, once third, and failed to come in the other time. Lumination, a four-year-old bay filly by Matchmaker—Agnes Lowther, ran eight times as a three-year-old, was twice placed second, once third. The Loaf, a five-year-old bay gelding by The Baker—Onyx, appeared eight times as a two-year-old and scored three wins—the Tyro Selling Stakes, £140 ½ mile, at Liverpool, carrying 8st. 10lbs.: the Juvenile Selling Plate, £192, 4 furlongs at Sandown Park, carrying 8st. 10lb, the November Nursery Plate Handicap, £265, 5 furlongs, at Birmingham, carrying 8st. 4lb., and was twice placed third. As a three-year-old of eleven engagements he won three—the Wilton Handicap, £243, 5 furlongs and the Downton Handicap, £100, 6 furlongs, at the Bibury Club Meeting, and the Earlsfield Welter Handicap, £100, 6 furlongs, at Hurst Park, was placed second on three occasions and third once. Last year he started eight times, his best performances being two seconds.

THE English Steeplechase mare Countenance, by Bumptious—Lament, imported for Mr. Vincent Clifford, is reported to have arrived safely in Bombay.

WE regret to report the death, on the 13th instant, of Lieutenant N. Patterson, D.S.O. E. Batty Royal Horse Artillery, the result of a fall while pigsticking near Bareilly.

THE second Simla gymkhana was held at Annandale on Saturday in showery weather, the programme having to be curtailed owing to the rain. The Polo Ball race for men opened the proceedings and was won by Lord Francis Scott. The Kadir Stakes for ladies was run in three heats, which were won respectively by Miss Dane, Miss Dyer and Mrs. Hadow, Miss Dane eventually winning the final. The Affinity Stakes resulted in a win for Lady Eileen Elliot and Lord Francis Scott, with Captain and Miss Black second, and the programme terminated with a trotting race for ladies, won by Miss Mahon, with Miss Dyer second.

ONLY four teams entered for the Mahableshwar polo tournament and it was decided to play it off on the American system—each team playing the others. The first match was between the 26th Light Cavalry (Johnson 1, Chaytor 2, Mowatt 3, and Mul Singh back); and the R.F.A. Kirkee (Symons 1, Wallace 2, Purser 3, Major Lithgow back). This ended in a win for the Cavalry by 9 goals to nil, but the score does not represent the run of the play, the Gunners being unfortunate in not scoring on several occasions. In the next game General Alderson's team (General Alderson 1, Mason, 14th Hussars, 2, B. H. Alderson, 34th Poona Horse, 3, Major Martin back) met the 127th Baluchis (Harvey-Kelly 1, McCudden 2, Bell 3, and Auret back). A very evenly contested game, the General's team eventually winning by 3 goals to one.

The match between General Alderson's team and the R.F.A. resulted in favour of the General's team by two goals to one, after a well-fought struggle, and the Cavalry beat the Baluchis by 4 goals to one. The Gunners were defeated by the Baluchis by 3 goals to nil, and the last game between the 26th Cavalry and General Alderson's team ended in a win for the Cavalry by 3 goals to 2. The Cavalry thus won the cup with three wins to their credit: the General's team won two games, the Gunners one, and the Baluchis nil.

PROSPECTS for the Beresford Polo Tournament at Simla next month are looking bright. The 12th and 17th Lancers, King's Dragoon Guards, and 10th Royal Hussars are sending in teams. The Viceregal and Commander-in-Chief's Staffs will be represented and entries are expected from Patiala State, the 2nd Gurkhas and an Indian Cavalry team.

A VERY enjoyable bumble-puppy gymkhana was held at Karachi on the 11th instant. There were big entries, an excellent card of six events, and a large gathering of spectators. Sport opened with Tent-pegging with swords, which was won by Mr. Brookes, 30th Battery R.F.A. The Bridge Stakes was won easily by Mrs. Gibbs and Mr. Griffen, and Mrs. Gibbs scored a very comfortable win in the Egg and Spoon Race for ladies. Her horse galloped all the way, but she managed to keep the eggs in the spoon till the winning post was passed, Titling at the Ring and Tent-pegging was won by Mrs. Graham and Mr. O. Gough, with Mrs. Anderson and Mr. Eliot.

While the Surgical Stakes was also won by Mrs. Graham and Mr. O. Gough. Gentleman to ride to his partner with the name of a wound or fracture written on a piece of paper. Lady to bandage the injury named and gentleman to return to starting point. Mr. Gough was first in and his bandages for a scalp wound were adjudged the best arranged. The Lloyd Lindsay Competition was run off in heats and the following contested the final:—Mrs. Sangster and Mr. Griffen, Miss W. Cumming and Mr. Mahon, Mrs. Gibbs and Mr. Eliot. It was an exciting finish. Mrs. Gibbs and her partner just beating Mrs. Sangster and Mr. Griffen.

The success attending this first Gymkhana will it is hoped lead to its being followed by several others.

published on the 29th ultimo. The day at Newmarket will long be remembered by visitors, for perfect conditions prevailed, the race was won in record time, while the enthusiasm that greeted the King's win has probably never been equalled at headquarters, according to our London correspondent. Minoru won in a canter, and there is no longer any doubt about his having made tremendous improvement during the winter. He is a beautifully-made colt, without a scrap of lumber about him, and showing splendid quality. Like Cicero, Lord Rosebery's third Derby winner, he is by Cyllene; but the two colts are as unlike each other as two thoroughbreds could well be. Whereas Cicero had a big body on short legs, Minoru is somewhat light of frame. The British turfite has now greater cause than ever to regret the expatriation of Cyllene. He was bought last spring, it will be remembered, for £25,000 and left for the Argentine in July to take the place of the defunct Pietermaritzburg at the Ojo de Agua Stud.

A MOFUSSIL correspondent asks for advice as to the treatment of a Great Dane who suffers from fits, the sequelæ to a bad go of distemper. Presumably it is epileptic fits which are meant. When attacked, the victim cries pitifully, is seized with severe convulsions, and then becomes unconscious for a brief interval. As he recovers he is completely dazed at first, and unless put under restraint he may run away. He is dangerous to handle at this time, for he may bite his best friend without knowing what he is doing. At times one fit succeeds another with but a short period of time in between. In the case of the Great Dane he seems to be growing worse. Six months elapsed between the first and the second, but now he has had four or five at intervals of a day. Obviously, there is necessity for prompt treatment, of a prolonged and not temporary nature. Immediately he recovers from a fit he should be given twenty grains each of hydrated chloral and bromide of potassium in two tablespoonsful of water. As this information may be useful to others, it is worth mentioning that the dose ranges from three grains of each drug in two teaspoonsful of water to the quantities mentioned, this being regulated by the size of the dog. This, however, is only an immediate palliative, and in the hope of effecting a permanent cure our correspondent should get made up the following prescription: Solution of bromated arsenic, one drachm; potassium bromide, half an ounce; water, 12oz. One tablespoonful (one-twenty-fourth part) should be mixed with a little water, and added to the food morning and evening for a week. Next once a day for a fortnight, then once every other day for a fortnight, and if no fits occur after that let it be given every third day. Should the fits recur give it every day again. After the second month, if the treatment has been successful, it may be discontinued. If sickness, puffiness of the eyelids, or diarrhœa be produced stop the physic or reduce the quantity. Concurrently with this for a few weeks pour into each ear a little of the following mixture twice a week: Oil of stavesacre, one drachm; sulphuric ether, two drachms; almond oil to one ounce. Before applying the ears should be washed out with a little warm, soapy water and cottonwool. In all probability this treatment will be effectual, provided it is pursued as directed.

A SCOTTISH laird was telling at the dinner of a fine fish he had caught. "How heavy was the fish I took last week?" he asked, turning to his servant. "Weel," replied Sandy, "it was twal pund at breakfast, it had gotten tae achteen at dinner time, and it was sax and-twenty when ye sat down to supper wi' the captain." Then, after a pause, he added: "I've been telling lees a' my life to please the shooters, but I'm no going to tell lees noo in my old age to please fushers!"

ALFRED SHRUBB had no difficulty whatever in defeating Henri St. Yves in a fifteen-mile race in New York on the 24th ultimo. The contest, in one way, was unique, for it took place in the open-air after nine o'clock at the American League Baseball park. The grounds were beautifully illuminated by huge acetylene lamps, and the quaint spectacle was thoroughly enjoyed by 10,000 spectators. Shrubb gained two laps in the first five miles, and ran superbly all through. St. Yves ran well, too, but the pace was too heartbreaking. The Englishman's time was 1hr. 26mins. 12secs. This is some seconds faster than has been done in England, but six minutes behind the world's record.

R. E. WALKER, the young South African sprinter, in the athletic sports held at Durban on the 24th ultimo, established world's records of 14⅕secs. and 17⅘secs. for 150 yards and 180 yards respectively.

THE Aga Khan Hockey tournament was concluded at Bombay on the 15th instant when the Y.M.C.A. beat the Grant Medical College by two goals to one in the final game. Details further on.

UNDER the powers of the Wild Animals and Birds Protection Enactment, 1904, the Residents of the Federated Malay States, with the consent of the Resident-General, have made the following new rules:—(1) The close season for Sambhur deer shall be from 1st August to 31st December in each year; (2) the close season for whistling teal shall be from 1st October in each year to 28th February following; (3) the close season for peafowl, jungle-fowl, bustard quail, and blue-breasted quail shall be from 1st December in each year to 15th March following. The Residents have also substituted the following lists of birds for those already contained in the fourth, fifth, and sixth schedules to the above-mentioned enactment:—Fourth schedule.—Peafowl, argus pheasants, mountain argus pheasant, peacock pheasant, mountain peacock pheasant, fireback pheasant, rufous-tailed fireback, jungle-fowl, long-billed partridge, black partridge, red-legged hill partridge, Campbell's hill partridge, ferruginous wood-partridge, bustard quail, blue-breasted quail, crested wood-quail, water cock, water-rail, whistling teal, cotton teal, white-winged wood duck, Imperial pigeon (all species), pied fruit pigeon, green pigeon (all species), long-tailed chestnut dove (all species), hornbills (all species), and painted snipe. Fifth schedule.—Bronze-winged dove, little Malay ground dove, Malay turtle-dove, yellow-crowned bulbul, red-vented bulbul, mynah, parroquet, and love-bird. Sixth schedule.—Nightjars, all plovers and waders, except European snipe and painted snipe.

IN many of the South Sea islands fish poisoning is a regular custom, and is carried out with much ceremony. Certain sections of the lagoon are set apart for this purpose, and the fish which haunt the pools, and shelter in the deep fissures of the seamy coral rocks are strictly taboo until the appointed day, which is fixed upon by the elders of the village, writes C. F. Maxwell in the Honolulu Pacific Weekly.

A day is chosen when the tide is high at 9 A.M., or thereabouts, and the whole of the inhabitants of the village assemble at the seashore, bringing with them many baskets of the fruit of the "keito" tree, a berry about the size of a marble, which is the substance used to stupify the fish.

A line of men armed with long poles wade out to the outer reef and encircle the area which they intend to poison. Standing waist deep, they beat the water with their poles to prevent the fish from breaking back to the ocean. There they remain until the tide has half ebbed. In the meantime others have been busy pounding the keito berry with large pestles in holes in the rocks. These natural mortars are worn quite smooth with long service. When the preparations are completed, the crushed berries are placed in baskets and shaken up and down in the sea water which immediately turns a bright crimson, something like Condy's fluid in colour.

Then the fun begins. Men, women and children, wearing nothing except a pareu or loincloth around their brown bodies, and armed with spears, bows and arrows, and small nets, swarm into the ensanguined water, and amid the greatest excitement, screams, and laughter, shoot or spear the half stupefied fish as they rise to the surface to breathe.

The most expert bowmen choose a post of vantage on some projecting coral head, and transfix with their arrows every fish within range, with unerring accuracy.

The women and girls use small nets, and dive into the deep pools to secure the fish which have sunk to the bottom.

The poison used does not appear to be injurious to human beings, neither does it render the fish unwholesome for food. It is fatal, however, to all forms of sea life in a very short time.

As the juice of the poisonous berry darkens the water and renders it difficult to see the fish, a weak infusion only is used, which stupefies the fish without killing them at once.

The finny harvest is plentiful, and of amazing variety. Queer shaped fishes, glowing with the most beautiful colours, emerge from the recesses of the coral rocks to be speared and thrown gasping on the reef. Huge octopi, hideous as a nightmare, and of a ghastly livid red and blue colour, crawl out of the poisoned water, and are promptly seized by the women, who struggle for possession of the prize.

Yonder an old dame is battling with a great eel, a fearsome looking beast spotted like a tiger. It is as tenacious of life as a cat, for after the old lady has clubbed it into inertness, and rushes off to look for more, the huge eel comes to life again, and crawling out of her basket slides back into the lagoon to be captured later by someone else, while the merry crowd laugh at the old woman's discomfiture!

A boy seizes an odd-looking fish as large as a bucket, and round as a cannon ball. He places it upon a rock where it solemnly pumps water out of holes in its sides, like a steamboat, until it is reduced to a third of its former size.

Some fish have poisonous spines, and too eager, or incautious fishers sometimes get their hands severely stung while groping in the holes in the coral.

The natives do not like strangers, especially papalagis, or Europeans, to be present while they are poisoning the water, as there are heathen rites in connection therewith and the presence of strangers is unlucky.

When the poisoning is completed, everyone is welcomed, and presents of fish are made to their haole friends.

The red tinge in the water remains for days, and sharks come around to eat the dead fish which have escaped the natives.

THE equipment of arms and ammunition for the Roosevelt-Smithsonian African Expedition embraces guns suitable for shooting all kinds of game, from birds and small animals to the big and dangerous armour-skinned rhino. For hunting the latter, the party will rely on Winchester ·405 caliber repeaters, known as the Model 1895, which are the most powerful repeating rifles made. They will shoot a steel-patched bullet through about 50 inches of pine wood, or a half-inch steel plate, and no animal living can withstand a shot from one of these guns. For less dangerous game, rifles of the same make and model, but handling ·30 Government Model 1903 cartridges, will be used. For small animals, the party is provided with Winchester ·22 caliber Automatic rifles. These guns are reloaded by their re-coil, it being only necessary to pull the trigger for each shot. For birds, Winchester Repeating Shotguns, 12 gauge, shooting 6 shots, will be used. These repeaters are calculated to stand rough, hard use, as they bear the stamp of approval of the U.S. Ordnance Board for strength, safety and reliability. A big assortment of Winchester ammunition of various kinds and sizes was, of course, provided for the different guns, making the equipment complete in every detail.

As mentioned some time ago, the Hungarian Central Bureau of Ornithology at Budapest has for some time adopted a system of marking birds for the purpose of tracing their migrations, and the results so far have been most interesting and instructive. From Palestine the Rev. Ernest Schmitz, Director of the German Catholic Hospice at Jerusalem, has reported the capture of a marked stork near that city on 5th April. A flock of more than 2,000 storks alighted to rest by one of the lakes near Jerusalem, five being caught, including the marked bird, which was hatched at Egri, in Hungary, in 1908, and duly marked with a stork-ring on 8th July. The flock from which this bird was captured were on their homeward journey, probably from South Africa, and it shows that these birds do not pass over the Mediterranean Sea but follow the longer route over the land. The migration of storks has been known since the time of Jeremiah, and the late Canon Tristram described the vast flocks that appeared in the spring, travelling northwards and leaving large detachments here and there and disappearing early in May.

WHAT is admittedly the finest cinematograph fight picture ever produced is, we hear, shortly to be exhibited in Calcutta. This is the film of the memorable fight between Jack Johnson and Tommy Burns at Sydney last December. The picture has been received with enthusiasm wherever exhibited, and the sole rights for exhibition in India have been obtained by an influential syndicate. Full particulars will shortly appear in one advertisement columns.

THE Boxing Club of "O." Battery, R. H. A., gave an interesting evening's entertainment at the Regimental Gymnasium on the 12th instant. There was a large attendance and some good bouts were witnessed. In a four-round contest Driver Smith beat Driver Whittie and the five six-round contests resulted as follows—Gunner McArthur beat Bombardier Fletcher; Driver Rideout beat Shoeing Smith Cator; Bombardier Allen beat Bombardier Lee; Gunner Barber beat Bombardier Wilkes; and Gunner Bagge beat Corporal Edwards. There were two contest for natives and a tournament for novices, eventually won by Gunner McArthur.

THE 1st Battalion Gloucestershire Regiment organised a boxing tournament at Colaba last week. Preliminary rounds were put through on Thursday and the contests brought to a close on Saturday. There was a big attendance on both nights and the tournament was voted a great success. Three of the contests brought together representatives of the rival services in the final, the soldier winning in each case. In the feather-weights Pte. Sissons of the Glosters beat Sig. Knifton, H.M.S. Proserpine. Sissons was also awarded a special prize for the most scientific boxer at the tournament. In the light-weights, Pte. Hayward, 1st Glosters, beat Seaman Williams, H.M.S. Proserpine, on points. In the middle-weights Pte. Lewis of the Glosters beat Stoker Heal, H.M.S. Proserpine, on points. Heal was awarded a special prize as the best loser. The heavy-weights brought together Ptes. Newman and Harrington of the Glosters, Newman after having the fight well in hand having to give up in the second round owing to a dislocated thumb. A four-round challenge contest between Pte. Taylor and Seaman Gentry brought the programme to a close, Taylor winning on points.

IAN HAGUE, who recently won the English heavy-weight boxing championship so easily from Gunner Moir, has been matched to fight Sam Langford at the National Sporting Club on Monday next, and a stiff fight is expected. It is probable that Hague will give Moir a return match in the near future, but should he defeat Langford, a match with Johnson is likely to follow. The much-talked of meeting between Jem Jeffries and Jack Johnson is still in the air and no definite promise has yet been extracted from the big boilermaker to whom the white people at present look to wrest the championship back from the black man.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—A general meeting of the Dacca Amusement Club, Limited, was held in the Dacca Club, on the 15th instant. A new committee was elected, the members of which, it is hoped, will aid in reviving Dacca sport. It is composed as follows:—Mr. P. Leo Faulkner, Indian Police, Mr. R. S. Lockhart, Mr. Nelson, I. C. S., Mr. H. A. Reily, Indian Police, Mr. Rennie, P. W. D., Major Rushton, R. E., Mr. H. Salkeld, I.C.S., Mr. Sitwell (Bank of Bengal), Mr. Stuart (Narainganj), Mr. F. H. Tucker, Indian Police.

Mr. Rennie is to be in charge of polo, Mr. Faulkner in charge of racing and gymkhanas, and Mr. Nelson in charge of golf.

A Gymkhana Meeting will probably be held in June, which, it is hoped, will be the precursor of many others.

Pretty Polly II., who will be remembered as having run at the last Monsoon Races in Calcutta, has been sold to a Dacca owner.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 29th April 1909.

WHAT a perfect April we have had! London is beginning to put on the appearance that makes one almost forget the blasts of winter and the horrors of the modern English Christmas. And the country—but I refrain from rhapsodies, those of my readers who are either home on on their way don't want to be told about it and those who are left behind don't want it rubbed in. A hurried visit to Paris—where I had a sample of the worst weather the Continent can provide at this time of year—made my home coming through dear old Sussex and Kent very delightful.

The soothing sensations that steal over the homing Briton are not due to anything ultra-Britannic, anti-foreign, or insular in one's nature, and when one comes to analyse them one is rather inclined to think that they are occasioned more especially by the fact that in this country we have pepper-pots, and are not doomed to scoop the enlivening condiment out of a pepper-cellar with a knife!

And, after all, this little island is a very big place. Everything is done on such a gigantic scale that one is at times well-nigh paralysed by the magnitude of things in general. And there seems to be no limit to it. On the very evening of my arrival in London I read in a daily paper that we are preparing to import a radish from Japan, called the Sakurjina, which measures three feet in circumference and weighs thirty pounds. If this sort of thing goes on we shall be obliged to revise all our old-established views of life.

THE memories of two famous men have been honoured in a half-hearted manner this week. A few Shakespeare statues in London were garlanded and down at Stratford-on-Avon there was a mild and inexpensive demonstration of the wreath, flag and speech order. Lord Beaconsfield's statue was made gay with the simple primrose on the day allotted for that purpose; though why this particular flower should be associated with the great statesman I cannot conceive. I could understand the statue of a man of Dizzy's tastes being smothered in Camelias, or rare exotics, but primroses! Bosh. I can't believe he ever thought about the poor, cheap dowdy little blooms. But all the same I believe on this Primrose Day the demand for them was considerably greater than in former years. The founder of Primrose Day, curiously enough, is not a Conservative. Sir George Christopher Birdwood, inventor of the popular anniversary, is an old Bombay Office official, 75 years of age, living in retirement at Ealing after a strenuous career. A great admirer of Lord Beaconsfield's policy, it occurred to him that it would be an excellent thing if the statesman could be commemorated in some way, and the old myth about Disraeli and the primrose was trotted out. Shortly before the first anniversary of his death, in 1882, Sir George, with the aid of a few friends, bought up all the primroses obtainable in and around London. These were distributed for sale among innumerable shops and an army of flower girls. When London awoke on the morning of 19th April, 1882, it was smothered, so to speak, in primroses.

YOUR late Viceroy, Lord Curzon, has not been very prominently before the reading public of late; he has made amends in his Principles and Methods of University Reform, just published. The courageous Oxford Chancellor has come forward with some ultra-revolutionary suggestions in his role as a champion of reform—the word will make some of you smile as recollections arise of some of his Indian "reforms"! With the object of bringing Oxford up to date, Lord Curzon has written a concise and masterly summary of the different proposals that are exercising the minds of the members of the University and those outside it for making it more efficient in the education of the nation, and a dispassionate commentary on these proposals. But in some cases the Chancellor has voiced his own views not uncertainly. Particularly is this the case in the matter of degrees for women and the emancipation of the theological degrees from attachment to the clergy of the Church of England alone. He argues that women ought to be given the visible sign of their now permitted success in the shape of a degree, and that theological honours should not be withheld from a layman or a Nonconformist, who "may well be the highest living authority on Hebrew, or Church history, or Biblical criticism."

To some this book will appear as a plea for reform of an old institution on lines astonishingly democratic and revolutionary; to others, it will only represent the views already current in what has long ceased to be the "home of dead languages and undying prejudices."

Two of the chief characters in "A Persian Princess"—produced at the Queen's Theatre last Wednesday night after a short postponement—have as part of their names Omar and Khayyam. Such cognomens called to one's mind that delicious relic of the buried East, the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, with exotic quatrains telling of the fragrance of the winds, the flowers, the everything of the Orient of long ago. But such things are not for the modern musical play, with its jingles, its topical songs, its utterly inconsequent references to general elections. And yet for once in a way there is a story, even though it was found impossible to entirely banish Dreadnoughts and similar questions.

Briefly, it is a question of amalgamating kingdoms ruled by King Khayyam and King Khafilah. Necessarily, one king has a son—or, rather, sons, the other possesses a daughter. Ergo, the princess must marry one of the sons—parented in this instance by King Khayyam. Prince Omar is the chosen of the people; Prince Hassan thinks he should have been. Therefore Hassan is not pleased; he had the throne in his own mind. So he weaves plots. Meanwhile Princess Yolane has to go through the old, old performance of losing herself for the purpose of visiting King Khayyam's palace incognito, and finding out what sort of a Prince she was to be joined to. Naturally, all sorts of complications arise. Yolane is actually made a slave, and remains so until the author's end has been achieved, when she is the "ownest own" of Prince Omar. What becomes of Hassan does not matter.

Such is "A Persian Princess," and really it was an agreeable dish. There was the always delightful Miss Ruth Vincent to sing herself into the graces of the audience as Princess Yolane; there was the usual handsome lover in the person of Mr. Noel Fleming to work out Prince Omar's salvation; there was Mr. Clarence Blackiston to picture the saturnine and cruel Prince Hassan; there was Miss Carrie Moore as Zingarie—a clove gatherer—to look really Persian and sing and act really well; there was Miss Lily Iris as an absurdly young but very charming royal housekeeper; and last, but no means least, there was Mr. George Graves as King Khayyam, and Mr. Horace Mills as Swaak, to provide most of the fun—and they were funny; indeed, King Khayyam had everybody roaring with laughter every second he was on. As for Swaak, he was keeper of the Royal camel—the real thing.

The presentation of the Budget Statement may, perhaps, have a certain interest for some of your readers. Mr. Lloyd George made a great speech on the occasion and he had a literally packed house to hear him. The Budget, in brief, amounts to this—

Pauper disqualification to be removed next year.

Government considering the question of industrial insurance, are agreed that any scheme must be compulsory, self-contributory, and State-aided.

Provision to be made for insurance against unemployment. Labour exchanges to be a feature.

Scheme to be introduced to improve motor traffic.

£200,000 for Afforestation and Agriculture.

Brunt of expenses for road improvement to fall first on motorists.

£100,000 for labour exchange buildings this year.

Total amount to be found, £16,000,000.

Amount placed to Sinking Fund to be reduced by £3,000,000.

And the proposed new taxation as follows:—

Proposed to tax motors in Ireland. New scale for whole kingdom based on power and weight.

Doctors' cars to be charged half rates. £1 tax on motor cycles.

Motor petrol to be taxed twopence a gallon.

Income-tax raised from 1s. to 1s. 2d. of incomes over £3,000.

Special abatement on incomes under £500.

Special abatement of £10 per child for all children under sixteen.

No alteration on earned incomes below £3,000.

Super tax of 6d. in the pound on incomes over £5,000.

There is sure to be an outcry from the motorists and motor cyclists; there was a rumour that ordinary bicycles were to be taxed, but this is a hardy annual to which we have become used, methinks it would be an unusually bold Chancellor of the Exchequer who would propose such a measure nowadays.

The almost unanimous condemnation by the critics of certain features of the Adelphi production of "The Devil," seems to have given the Censor a bad quarter of an hour, for it is stated that the management received a telegram on Monday from Mr. Redford stating that as he can only form judgment on the dialogue and stage directions, they were entirely responsible for the representation, and he recommended careful revision and modification in future performances. Without entering into the merits of the particular case, it may be pointed out that Mr. Redford's action illustrates the essential futility of the Censorship as it exists at present. Mr. Redford's verdict is given on a reading of the text, but then there is all the difference in the world between the play as it is read and the play as it is acted. The line or phrase which is comparatively harmless on paper may, and does, take a very different and unpleasant complexion in the hands of any actor who is skilled in the use of equivoque; while on the other hand a situation in a play of serious intent that would shock Mrs. Grundy in the reading, may be lifted by the genius of stage interpretation out of the possibility of gross suggestion. Mr. Redford's telegram, indeed, indicates that if his Censorship is to be really effective, his duty is but half done when he has passed the text of the play, and that he should attend the final rehearsal in any case where there is even the potentiality of riskiness. Possibly as such attendance would doubtless carry an additional fee, the idea might appeal to him.

A farcical idea treated as comedy usually means failure. But although Mr. A. E. W. Mason depends upon a farcical foundation for the story and situations of "Colonel Smith," which was produced last Friday night at St. James's Theatre, he has toned it all down to comedy with brilliant results.

Analysed, the story does not amount to much. It is just this. Celia Faraday, not to mince matters, is "on the shelf." To save her position she invents a sweetheart. She calls him Smith, she places him in South Africa, she writes love letters to him to keep up appearances, and she does the business so thoroughly that when he has served his turn she kills him off through the columns of the Times, and goes into black. But there happens to be a real Colonel Smith, and the real Smith receives the love letters, and the real Smith turns up at Celia's home prepared to keep up the joke. Result—some complications, and a happy ending.

Mr. George Alexander plays the real Colonel Smith, and Miss Irene Vanbrugh plays Celia. Each plays a character entirely different from the characters that they have recently been cast for at the St. James's. This time Mr. Alexander has no need to shake his hair, to wave his hands, or to speak in a voice hoarse with passion. He plays a bright, pleasant gentleman brightly and pleasantly.

Miss Irene Vanbrugh also has no need to agitate herself. She is simply cast for an ordinary miss. She is merely made to fall in love. And she does it all very pleasantly. Others in a strong cast are Mr. William Farren, Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm, and Mr. Reginald Owen, and they all do their little well. Each contributes to the success of a very neatly written play—a play without any depth, without any purpose, but a play full of delightful moments, a play that is altogether a delightful entertainment.

It says much for the art of Miss Rose Stahl that the production of "The Chorus Lady" at the Vaudeville was received with a great deal of heartiness.

Those who enjoy sentiment in chunks and desire to see nothing better than villainy defeated and virtue triumphant will enjoy "The Chorus Girl" for its own sake. The more discerning playgoer will enjoy it for the acting of Miss Stahl. Until recently, Miss Stahl had only been seen in England in Vaudeville. She is an artist to her fingertips. There is nothing distinguished about Patricia O'Brien, chorus lady, as drawn by the author, except for a fund of slang and a talent for biting repartee. But in the hands of Miss Stahl she becomes human and lovable, and delightfully quaint. Patricia is a country girl, engaged to the simple, honest owner of some racing stables. She is as straight as a die, but exceedingly "wide."

A very different character is her sister, Nora. Vain, weak, she quickly falls into the power of the wicked rich man, Dick Crawford. He advances her money, and even induces her to forge her father's name on a bill. And when she goes late at night to Crawford's rooms, to induce him to return the bill, Patricia follows her, to see to her safety, and is discovered in very compromising circumstances by her mother and her sweetheart, who at once think the worst, and conclude that she is Crawford's mistress. Nora, the cause of all the trouble, is hidden in an inner room, but loyal Patricia sacrifices everything for her sake, and looks like losing her sweetheart for ever, until a chance word by Nora in the last act puts matters straight.

The scene in Crawford's apartments, where the girls play hide and seek with an irate mother and an irate lover, is an excellent piece of stage trickery, and the interest is well sustained. The scene in the chorus room of a theatre, which forms the second act, is amusing for its quaint chaff and repartee. The chorus girls, indeed, are the only live characters in the play. There has not often been a more shadowy villain than Dick Crawford, who seldom has a word to say for himself, and Nora is simply shown as an empty-headed little cat without an atom of feeling. But Miss Stahl proved all-sufficient. She received her best support from Miss Alice Leigh and Mr. Giles Shine, as the poor but honest parents, and from Mr. Wilford Lucas as her rugged sweetheart.

"Our Indian Empire"—Hagenbeck's Exhibition at the Crystal Palace—provides a diversified programme, which has set all London talking.

Hindoos and Mohamedans from all parts have been brought together, and daily display before the amazed spectators astonishing feats of magic and prowess. The fact that these wonders are performed in the open air, without the aid of elaborate stagecraft, adds greatly to their effectiveness. Tumblers and acrobats, nautch girls, trained elephants, wrestling bears, sword swallowers, and snake charmers appear in rapid succession at the al fresco theatre near the North Tower. The dear old moss-grown basket trick is remarkably well done. The snake-charmer, with his four cobras, gives the Cockney onlooker many a thrill, the climax being reached when he seizes the hat of some person standing by and throws it to the ground, when it is seen to be alive with snakes. All the "properties" in Mr. Hagenbeck's Exhibition are Indian, and the musical accompaniment is of the barbaric order produced by the shrill native flute and the deafening native drum. Indian skilled trades are represented by a potter busy at his wheel, a wood carver, a gold and silver embroiderer, a worker in bronze, and several others. It is an almost complete show, the only outstanding omission from the show is our old friend the monkey and goat man.

Mr. Lewis Waller has produced "The Conquest" at the Lyric and conquered very few I should think: it is a tolerably pleasant play, but wholly unconvincing, unemotional and uninteresting for the most part. The clever novelist who writes as "George Fleming" has considerably altered Balzac's story for the purpose of her three-act play. Among other things she makes the Duchess of Langeais a widow instead of a wife, which causes the passion of Colonel Armand de Montriveau to be much more respectable. Mr. Lewis Waller,, plays the Colonel, and even his many lady admirers in the pit must have found difficulty in recognising him in side-whiskers. The Duchess begins by trying to captivate him for her sport, and to win a bet with a friend. Anon she learns to love him, but in the meantime Montriveau has discovered how he has been tricked, and refuses to believe in her passionate protestations of love. Heartbroken, she retires to a convent.

The last act shows the Duchess, three years later, a beautiful picture in her white robes. The scene is the interior of a chapel at Neuilly, and the Duchess is about to take the veil. Montriveau arrives, and is told by the Lady Superior that the Duchess is dead. Dead to the world is her real meaning, but Montriveau is shown her, apparently in her last sleep, on a bed on trestles. Mad with grief, he declares he cannot live, and drawing a pistol, is about to shoot himself. At that moment the white figure on the bed rises with a cry and flings her arms about his neck. That is the end, and a very unexpected and thrilling end it proved.

Mr. Lewis Waller has not this time any fighting, swashbuckling or shouting to do, but he has plenty of chances to play the perfect lover, and he does it passibly well. Distinction given to the production by the engagement of Miss Maxine Elliott, whose beauty and charm of personality were admirably suited by the part of the Duchess, while Mr. A. B. George, Mr. Shiel Barry, Miss Rosina Filippi, and Miss Frances Dillon were also prominent in a strong cast.

A good deal of booing came from the gallery at the end and Mr. Waller failed to get quiet enough in which to make his explanations heard.

Judging by the fuss now being made over the "disappearing cabman" one would think that ere long we shall have to look for specimens of that human curiosity in our museums and failing that be content to recall him through the medium of "old prints." Lord Rosebery, on behalf of cabmen now said to be suffering by reason of the rapid introduction of motor vehicles, has appealed to the public and of course the Daily Mail or the Evening News (or one of the many ha'penny rags) has opened a subscription and statemen, sportsmen, actors and the B.P. are said tc be almost jostling in the rush to contribute to the fund, M'yes. Personally I have suffered too much at the hands of cabby to raise any sympathy on this head; the virulent, extortonate variety it has been my almost invariable ill-luck to encounter and I, for one, watch his progress towards extinction quite unmoved. There are thousands in London who, like myself, would walk miles or suffer the discomforts of the tube or the tortures of the motor 'bus rather than put a sixpence in the way of these blatant bandits. The London cabman has too long been a blot on the City, the sooner he is wiped out the better.

This week England lost its most famous hairdresser and the West End of London one of its most remarkable celebrities. Mr. Henry P. Truefitt has died at Barnes after a short illness. With a shock a crowd of society patrons learnt the news when the black shutters appeared outside the famous saloon in Bond Street.

As far back as 1880 Truefitts went the way of most successful commercial concerns and came under the management of a company. But Mr. Truefitt continued to give his famous consultafions until the Easter holiday week, and would often give advice to a hundred aristocratic clients in a day. His time was so precious that he was able to command half a guinea for consultation—a testimony to his eminence in a business which in his case was elevated to the rank of a "profession."

To the tall, kindly faced, clean-shaven old gentleman who received at 14, Bond Street were revealed tragedies in hair unsuspected by all the world save the sufferers' own respective valets or ladies' maids. One of his sons was in Calcutta several years ago and distinguished himself on the amateur dramatic stage and the football field I believe. He is now one of the—burra sahebs in Schweppes of gaseous renown.

A DAY WITH A RUSSIAN LEGAVY.

"What on earth is a legavy?" I can hear the reader exclaim, and probably very few have even heard of the beast. It is not a bird, nor a fish, nor yet does it belong to any category of game, being simply a peculiar breed of dog. The legavy has a class to himself on the benches of the St. Petersburg and Moscow dog shows, and often comes off with high honours in field trials, though what his exact points are I have up to now failed to discover. He is of all sizes and shapes, sometimes almost as silky-coated as a setter, at others hardly distinguishable from a clean bred pointer. I believe the real trait which marks him from other sporting dogs is his method of drawing on birds by wriggling along on his belly for incredible distances, hence his name, derived from the verb "to lie down." As the Germans have a "vorsteh huhner hund," or "stand before hen dog," so the legavy is a "lie down dog." When he is getting close to his game he ceases to resemble a dog, and steals along with a peculiar crouch, as if ready to spring, for all the world like a panther. As a rule, he possesses a very heavy head, with massive jaws and pendulous lips, with immense bone and muscle, which irresistibly leads to the conclusion of an original cross with a bloodhound. My own legavy, Mars, who accompanies me to-day, looks almost as fit to hunt negroes as blackcock; but, with all his ferocious appearance, he is the gentlest, quietest animal one could wish to shoot over.

We are in a perfectly wild, unknown country, miles and miles away from railways and towns, with boundless tracts of forest, which have not known the axe for a hundred years or more, and desolate stretches of moss bog before us, where we can walk for a week and never see more than a cottage or two here and there. I have a peasant with me to prevent me from losing my way, and he declares that there is game in plenty, but on such ground one may sometimes look a long time before finding any, and there is no friendly keeper here to point out the likely spots. It is a question for Mars and his long legs and unfailing nose, and he starts gaily on his quest, going generally at a long striding trot, which covers the ground almost as fast as the gallop of a smaller pointer. At first we follow a bridle path through a big pine wood for a mile or so, and just as we are emerging he comes to a point. But his tail is wagging, and he does not look very serious. That means a woodcock. For some reason or other Mars does not hold woodcock in high esteem, and only sets them in a perfunctory sort of manner. As soon as I am alongside he runs ahead for twenty on thirty yards and stops again. Here the brush is getting thick, and I hurry up, but only just in time to see him peg ahead and make a third point, and then off goes the bird in such a dense patch of scrub that I have no chance; no luck, and on we go. In another half hour we are passing through a low spinney, when Mars points again from the patch, and, taking up the scent, leads right away to a part where the trees grow more densely, and where there is lots of undergrowth. Still his tail wags at intervals, and I am fully sure of woodcock again. After taking me some distance he comes to a dead standstill, and I have just glimpse of two cock disappearing through the tree tops. The snappiest of snap shots brings down one amidst a shower of leaves and twigs, and the day's duck's egg is broken. Soon after this we meet a brother sportsman, a peasant with a lurcher, who has seen nothing, but who describes to my follower a place where he says we may find blackcock. We make for it at once, and soon plunge into such a tangle of old decaying trunks, low bushes, and young trees that it is difficult to force our way along. Game there may be, but to anyone unaccustomed to Russian shooting, it would look a hopeless task to find, or when found to kill it in such a labyrinth. Mars, however, is not at all discouraged, and, though most spaniels would shortly come to heel and refuse to face the thick bush, he goes bounding and creeping over and through every obstacle, crossing our front every minute or two, and working the wood in a most business-like manner. In places like this I have a habit of keeping up a low whistle at short intervals to let the dog know the direction I am taking, and he takes a hundred yards or so on both sides. After a good spell of walking, I miss Mars, and, instead of the low whistle, give him a shrill "Come back." Still no Mars. He has found game at last, and we must look for him. In a few minutes I spy his white and chocolate coat, and hasten to join him. His eyes are blood hot, and the water is dripping from his jaws. As I come up to him and pat him, he lies down for a moment, and then wriggles like a snake for ten or twelve yards further, and lies down again, trembling all over with excitement. I know the birds must be very near; but it is desperately thick. I urge him to move further, but he simply turns his head to right and left snorting with intense glee at what is in store. At last he rises very slowly, and gathers himself up like a cat, then makes a prodigious bound, and up get three capercaillie. A shot like this seldom if ever falls to the lot of the Scotch sportsman, who has his capercaillie driven, and words fail me to describe the glorious whirr of these noble birds bursting through the trees. One had been almost under the dog's nose, and the others to his right and left. He had not known which to go for, poor beast, and was half mad with emotion. We gather the pair which have come toppling down, and Mars starts again. In less than a couple of minutes he is on a trail again. This time it is body scent, and, with his nose in the air, he picks his way in the most extraordinary manner, never breaking a twig, and leads straight away at a pace I can hardly keep up with till he comes to an extra dense clump. Here he lies down, and a third capercaillie joins the first couple. We beat on for another hour or two, and pick up a couple of blackcock, and as it is near noon, and the walking has been severe, especially on the dog, I agree to the peasant's proposal to go to his cottage for a rest. His home stands in a clearing, surrounded by fields of corn and barley, and here we see where the bears have been stealing the night before, and spoiling more than they ate. No fires or scarecrows are of any avail, and Bruin simple chooses a quiet moment and a quiet spot for his evening's supper. If there were a moon I would lie out for him, but the nights are too dark, and I can only look at his footprints in the soft soil, and regret that I have no chance. I make a good meal off honey and cream, and wild strawberries and raspberries, and Mars polishes off a pail of black bread and milk; we wait for a couple of hours, and then set out for the moss bog. Of all horrible going, a moss bog is perhaps the worst. It is not holding, but so soft and unresisting, that one sinks almost up to the knees in the silky moss and water, and stumbles every other step against a hummock, till it becomes a misery to know where to put the foot down. Add to this treacherous snags and rotten decaying giants of the forest, whose remains are strewn over the bog, and you have a very disagreeable carpet to walk upon. This particular bog was some twenty miles long by ten or twelve broad; not all bog, but with patches of birch and pinecopse here and there, and sprinkled with wild sage and cranberry and bilberry, making splendid feeding ground for all wood game. My man assures me that there are plenty of white partridges, i.e., willow grouse, in the bog if we can find them, and we determine to try. Most birds will probably be lying in the scrub on the edges of the marsh and forest, and we skim along the border, hoping every moment to see Mars stiffen out. At length he gives signs, and after little snuffling settles down to work, just outside a tongue of trees. I fancy the grouse are in this piece, and am astonished to see the dog, after diving into the thicket, come out again, and, with uplifted nose, go forward into the bog. It is possible, of course, that they are lying out, but he is not going as if the birds were near. On he goes with the utmost confidence for fully 300 yards up to another piece of thick wood, and plunges in. I follow, wondering, and make sure he will soon be on the birds as he begins to slow down and wriggle. But not a bit of it. Ever onward for at least another hundred yards. Can it be possible that any dog can scent at such a distance? Then he gets very excited. I stand by to shoot, but after a minute or two he rises, wags his tail, looks rather puzzled, abandons his trailing attitude, and gallops back full speed to the marsh again. As he seldom makes a mistake I resolve to wait, and see him again coming back on the old trail, till within about thirty yards, when he makes a caste to the right and settles down steadily. This time he evidently has his birds safe, and in another minute or two he is lying down. Looking ahead of him I see a lovely sight. On a fallen tree trunk sits an old willow grouse, and on the ground the covey of nine or ten. In a second they see us, and, with a beating of white wings, all save two are off. The shot was a pretty one, but the work of Mars had been prettier. I have seen many a good piece of roading in field trials and on the turnips, but never anything to compare to the way in which that dog led up to those grouse the last 120 yards through a thick copse.

We pursue those birds, judging merely by the direction they took, and soon come up to them again. I pick up three more, each one beautifully found, and lose a fourth from its getting up over the dog's nose, and instantly hiding its flight between the pines. With these I am content, though with patience I believe I could have found and killed every one. The bag is not a big one—eleven in all—but I am just as pleased as if I had killed fifty brace, for every bird has been honestly hunted up in its wild home, and the pictures of the capercaillie flustering up, and of the willow grouse peaceably reposing in the moss, will remain in my memory for many a long day.

Fishing.

THE LURE OF THE TROUT POOLS.

Fly-fishing for the speckled brook trout possesses a hold upon its votaries that no other sport has for its followers. The interest of your simon-pure fly-fisherman in his pastime is more than a matter of the open season; it is lasting and ever-present. He is a crank on the subject and proud of the title. If you disagree with him as to the status of the sport, he will decline to argue the question with you. Ignorance so colossal as yours is not to be met with arguments. He is simply sorry for you. A supercilious and silent smile is the only reward of your eloquence. And yet you cannot but envy him. The reasons for this supreme contentment and enviable absorption are, however, although of the very best, somewhat difficult of explantion to the uninitiated.

Of course, one cannot describe the typical trout stream. It is not a large stream; rather a big brook or little river. Its banks are pleasantly wooded, with here and there a small clearing where one time some logging job extended to the water's edge. Alternately there are hurrying, turbulent rapids or shallow, clear, swift-running riffles, and deep opaque pools whose surfaces reflect the pine trees, and in whose depths the aldermen of the river repose in dignified inertia. Occasionally there are falls where the stream foams down many feet in a graceful, white, out-bending ribbon. And again there are long, still reaches where the current is scarcely perceptible and where, if you would land a trout, you must indeed cast "fine and far off." But no word-picture of the characteristics of the trout stream portrays in the slightest degree the characteristics of that same stream from the fly-fisherman's point of view. While he is fully aware of the natural beauties of the stream the angler is more apt to regard it more or less technically.

And in this technicality of view-point, difficult in itself to define, lies the still greater difficulty of explaining the true relation of the stream to the stream-fisherman.

One can also describe the tackle ; the graceful, resilient split-bamboo ; the delicate yet, when well selected, steel-strong lines and leaders ; and the various flies, each having its special connotation for the experienced fly-caster. But these things comprise merely the mechanical part of the game. The operation of casting the fly may also be explained, but this, too, is purely mechanical. However, in the skillful handling of fine tackle lies a large part of the angler's enjoyment.

I am inclined to believe that fly-fishing has its chief and most easily defined excuse in the existence of a certain fish—Salvelinus fontinalis, the speckled brook trout. Here indeed, is something tangible ; a thing which may be taken in the hand—first catch your fish—and looked upon. No one seeing a freshly caught brook trout, would say that it was other than a thing of beauty. Its delicate, vari-colored resplendency is not equalled by any living thing. The tarpón—the "Silver King" of southern waters—the Atlantic and Pacific salmons, the ouananiche or land-locked salmon, and the grayling, comprise practically all the other fishes, excepting the various forms of brook trout, which may be said to possess both beauty of form and coloration. It cannot be denied that these fish are justifiably praised ; but it is generally conceded that the red-spotted brook trout has nothing to fear from their competition. Of the western rainbows, cut-throats and steel-heads, the rainbow is the eastern brook trout's nearest competitor, and that is praise enough for the rainbow. So here is one good reason at least why fly-fishing for trout is considered by many the best of all sports.

But, after all, the lure of the trout pools is a thing intangible, elusive, which cannot be crystallized into so many words, or geometrically demonstrated. And if you would understand its mysteries, would truly fathom the fascination of "the reek of the split-bamboo," you needs must hit the trail to a good trout stream and there your desire will find its fulfillment—if you are the right sort ; otherwise, otherwise. Also your outfit as to tackle and its accessories must, within certain bounds, be of an extremely specialized kind, or your day on the stream will be a matter of regret rather than of pleasant recollection.

The literature of fly-fishing is so voluminous, so scattered, and, in many cases, so ill-advised, that it is almost impossible for one to obtain much practical knowledge from it without a long process of selection. In no regard is there more confusion and classical misinformation than in the matter of tackle. Fishing tackle, especially fly tackle, has changed much since the days of Walton and Cotton. Not all of us have access to the writings of men who have written things that are really so about trout and trout fishing. Consequently most of us who have more or less "arrived" have done so through patience, adversity, and a natural disinclination to quit. In view of this perhaps an attempt to enumerate in a connected manner, in the most humble spirit imaginable and with due deference to the opinions of others much better qualified than the writer, the principal necessities for a trout fishing trip on an average trout stream may be of advantage.

In the first place, you must get rid of the idea that fly-fishing is anything like a "gentle art" in the generally accepted meaning of the word gentle. It's a pretty strenuous game, as you will be ready to acknowledge after you have tried it a few times. From early morning until overcome you wade a river in which the water flows very fast and in which are many round, smooth and extremely slippery rocks. When not wading you are making the best of your way through thick brush or over fallen logs or other obstructions. Trout streams as a rule do not flow through peaceful meadow lands. Also, if you would catch many or, indeed, any trout, you must work. It is an angling axiom that the man who has his flies most upon the water has the best "luck." So your clothes should be calculated to withstand rough work. Nothing is better than the ordinary canvas hunting suit. The many pockets of the coat will hold your fly-book, leader-box, lunch, and the other things necessary and unnecessary, and there will still be room for more. And you will find that although various other rigs are recommended, common rubber hip-boots are for general purposes the best waders. Late in the season, if you are permanently located near the stream, wear old shoes and canvas leggings. Cut small slits in the shoes to allow the water to run out.

In the tackle stores and among anglers you will hear a lot of talk about light tackle, especially light fly-rods. They will tell you how this man landed a six-pound square-tail on a three-ounce rod in Canadian waters ; or how that man killed an equally ponderous brown trout on tackle equally light in Pennsylvania. Very good ; but the thing for you to do, unless you expect to own a battery of rods, is to get a rod not an inch shorter than nine and a-half or ten feet, and weighing six ounces. With this rod you can, without too much difficulty, lay out a fair length of line under the most adverse conditions of wind and weather. It is not too large for a small brook and large enough for a big river. It is neither a light nor a heavy rod, but a good medium rod for moderately small and moderately large fish. Do not get a lancewood rod. Do not get a bethabara rod. Do not get any other rod than a split-bamboo. You want a rod primarily for fly-casting. Split-bamboo is emphatically the proper material. But good split-bamboo rods are expensive, and for the reason that cheap rods of this material are strictly worthless, you must make up your mind to spend a little money. The reel-seat must be below the grip. The best grip is made of solid cork. You will find snake guides the most satisfactory.

You cannot do good work without the proper line. For a rod such as the above an enameled line, size F, is about right. Do not make the mistake of attempting to economize in this particular, and don't worry about level and taper lines. Leave that to the tournament casters. As to leaders, the size should be that known as "medium trout." In the trade leaders come in lengths of three, six and nine feet. Of these the six-foot length is the most practical. You can learn to tie your own leaders in exactly five minutes. Then you can make them any length you care to ; also you can tie the loops for the dropper flies at distances to suit your personal requirements. In this there is more than appears at first glance. Some men can succesfully watch two flies four feet apart and instantly hook a fish that rises to either of them. Others would miss three out of four rises under the same conditions.

There are many kinds of reels, but only one of them is suitable for fly-fishing. This kind is the single-action click-reel. German silver and rubber is the right material, and the size should be that known as "eighty yard," although the reel will hold only about thirty-five yards of the line abovementioned. Experienced fly-fishermen do not use the reel in playing a fish ; the line is held in the left hand, between the reel and the first guide, and when it is necessary to shorten the line it is simply stripped in by hand, taking care to reel up the resulting loop before it gets beyond control. For this reason you do not require a multiplying reel as in bass and other fishing. Also, single-action reels are so constructed that the line will not catch on the handle when there is any slack between the reel and the first guide ; a fact which is not true of multiplying reels, as has been duly attested, by the lurid remarks of many men who have attempted to use them in fly-casting. The position of the reel upon the rod is underneath, with the handle, if you are right-handed, to the right.

The matter of flies, involving as it does practically the whole philosophy of fly-fishing, except the mechanical details of tackle and casting cannot be adequately treated in an article of this character. The habits of the brook trout, various conditions of the wind, weather and water, time of day and year—whether early or late in the season—all these factors are intimately connected with the choice of flies. And yet these are matters for the expert to worry about rather than the novice. They are also things to be learned by experience and not by textbooks. However, to learn by experience you must fish, and to fish you must have flies. Tell the tackle man you want one dozen coachmen and one dozen cowdungs. Also one-half dozen of each of the following : grizzly king, seth green, cahill, beaverkill, brown hackle and silver doctor. They should be tied on number eight and ten Sproat hooks. For reasons of economy do not buy cheap flies. The number of flies advised is, of course, many more than you will need for a mere day's fishing. They will form a good working basis to which you will add at times, and from which you will constantly be substracting. Artificial flies, even the best, are equally ephemeral with the natural. The coachman is credited with being the most universally successful fly. The cowdung is also a good fly in most all waters. Use these two flies for your regular cast and vary them, when unsuccessful, to suit the occasion. The golden rule of fly-fishing is "Dark flies for light days ; light flies for dark days." Bearing this in mind, if you properly fish the flies mentioned, you will be moderately successful almost from the start. As you add to your experience you will add to your list of flies and to your skill in using them. And yet, at the risk of discouraging you, I feel compelled to say that the more you learn about fly-fishing the more you will find there is to learn ; and after a time you will come to the conclusion that you are only a humble "dub" fisherman like the rest of us.

Other minor but necessary tools of the fly-caster are the fly-book, leader-box and creel. Get a good fly-book with plenty of pockets. Leaders must be well soaked before using them and for this the regular leader-box as furnished by the tackle dealers is satisfactory. A nine-pound creel is large enough. If you catch a trout too large to be crowded into a basket of this size you will be justified in going to the nearest telephone and ordering a larger one. You might also tell them to send along a brass band and some red-fire.

Where the fish run rather heavy you will need a landing net. The most practical form for trout fishing is made with a short handle, to which an elastic cord is attached which may be thrown over the shoulder ; they have a folding and detachable metal frame. A landing-net is a first-class nuisance on the ordinary woodland or wilderness trout stream. It is continually catching in the brush, and you will throw away two or three before you come to the conclusion that, although an evil, it is a very necessary one.

Attempts to teach fly-casting by written description have been and always will be, through the inherent difficulties of the medium, dismal failures. You must inflict yourself upon some old fly-fisherman and keep your eyes open. It is not hard to acquire reasonable proficiency. Anglers are born. If you have innate "fish-sense" your days upon the streams will not be unremunerative. Knowledge of the habits of the brook trout and what is fishable water are the greatest factors in making a full creel. If you fish for trout where trout are not, the result is "no luck." In nearly every stream there are stretches of water which for various causes are not inhabited by fontinalis. I have many times seen irate gentlemen hammering away at such places. An experienced angler would have passed them by at a glance. Go quietly. Keep out of sight of the fish. See that your shadow does not fall across the water. Kill your fish before putting it in your basket.

Striking a trout that has risen to the fly is a matter of quick eye, steady nerve and constant watchfulness. When the cast of flies is on the water they must be closely watched, but when you are not engaged in actual casting you should watch for rising trout or likely looking places for a cast. A fly cast over a trout that has just risen is pretty sure to bring results. Although you may have fished a certain stream many times, you are almost certain to find new places that are promising—if you look for them. Every year a trout stream changes, sometimes more, sometimes less, in accordance with the force of the spring freshet. On your first day out you will find that pools which you thought were favourable have been filled in and practically ruined ; and you will find that other pools have been made. Rapids have been shallowed to riffles, and riffles deepened to strong rapids. Overhanging trees have fallen into the stream. New lurking places for trout have been hollowed out underneath the banks. Every year you must learn the stream again.

In conclusion, it may be well to mention some of the books that will prove most helpful to you. I shall name only such as are practical and accurately informative. They are : "Salmon and Trout," by Dean Sage and William C. Harris ; "Fly-Rods and Fly-Tackle," by H. P. Wells ; "Favourite Flies," edited by Mary Orvis Marbury ; "Familiar Fish and How to Catch Them," by Eugene McCarthy, and a book more general in nature and written more from the view-point of the icthyologist, but in some directions the most valuable of all, "American Food and Game Fishes," by David Starr Jordan and Barton W. Evermann.—Recreation.

SHARP POINTED PROJECTILES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The dominant feature of the gunnery of to-day is the projectile. A short time back, powder, cartridge case, and bullet seemed to claim about equal attention from the experts. Now all that is changed, and the shape of the projectile's head is the all absorbing factor. In old days, a point struck to a curve of three diameters was looked upon as sharp : now a usual radius is seven or eight diameters. For instance the length of point of the service Lee Enfield bullet is ·6 of an inch, while the "Swift" bullet introduced with success by Captain Hardcastle, has a point ·85 of an inch long.

The long easy curves of the fore part of modern bullets exercise an extraordinary influence on the trajectory. Velocity is parted with very much more slowly, so that the curve of flight is greatly flattened at all ranges. The reason for this is disclosed to us, when we examine shadow photographs, or skiagrams, taken of variously shaped bullets in flight. A service Lee Enfield bullet travelling at a velocity of about 2,000 feet per second shows a considerable disturbance in front of the point : this disturbance showing in the photograph as a number of broken wavy lines extending from in front of the nose ahead, in the direction the bullet is travelling.

If on the other hand we look at a skiagram of a long sharp pointed bullet, rushing through the air at even higher velocities, viz., 2,600 to 2,800 feet a second, we see absolutely no signs in the photograph of any disturbance whatever ahead of the projectile, though the whirl of the jostling molecules of air in the wake eddy, is clearly indicated by a trail of dots extending away behind the base of the bullet. Here then lies the whole secret of the new type of bullet. With its long sharp point and easy curves it glides smoothly and easily through the air which not being disturbed and broken up ahead, offers nothing like the amount of resistance to it, that it does to bluffer shaped projectiles.

The significance of the new type is patent enough to us all, when we think only of Military Small Arms, and Sporting Rifles. We realise that the breadth of fire swept zones in the battle field will be increased, that the intense phase of fire by Infantry, may be extended to longer ranges than have heretofore been the rule. For the hunting rifle the new bullet increases sporting ranges, otherwise the distance at which a steady shot is practically certain of his game.

But what of heavy ordnance? Does the ordinary man, not the expert or experimentalist, but just the average intelligent Englishman, realise what extraordinary extra power, altering the shape of their projectiles to the modern long pointed form, will confer on heavy Artillery. We are now only at the mere fringe of the matter, and alterations in the ammunition of big guns, is a matter of time. In the long sharp point, however, we can surely see a factor, which will make ranges thought long now appear short in the future. A factor destined soon to exercise an enormous influence on Naval Gunnery. The All Big Gun Ship will, if provided with accurate enough range finders, and fought by a Captain who has thoroughly grasped the enormous potentialities of the terrific machine at his command, put a less ably handled foe out of action, at untold distances, without being touched herself.

There will be thick days, when ships will blunder upon each other, and fight, as in Nelson's times, at the shortest ranges ; but there will be other calm clear days, when one can see to the horizon ; and then it is that we shall see astonishing things done by those men who have mastered the art of hitting with the twelve-inch gun, and hitting often, no matter what the range.

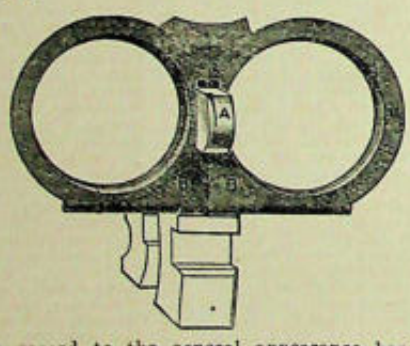
Shooting.

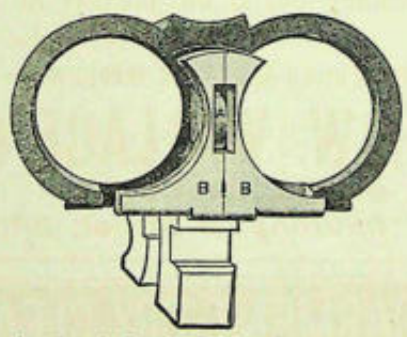
HOLLAND AND HOLLAND'S ROYAL DETACHABLE LOCK GUN.

VERY early in the history of practicable sporting guns, devices began to be introduced for the purpose of making the locks readily detachable. In 1808, for example, that once well-known London gunmaker Durs Egg patented a lock that could be dismounted without removing any screws: "Which" he remarked "must be a great advantage, as the persons who take the locks to pieces very seldom put them together right." Shortly after this date, the Mantons, the Eggs, the Nocks and the other gunmakers famous at that time began to be plagued by detonating locks. They were kept busy a long while proving that this new-fangled idea had no advantage over flint ignition. Afterwards they were even more busy in improving upon the new-fangled idea and applying it to their own guns. Then the percussion cap was evolved and another era of activity set in. These larger interests, for the time being, overshadowed minor details of improvement. The question whether a lock could be easily detached or not, ceased to attract particular attention, and it is only within the past few years that detachability has received the attention it undoubtedly merits.

With side-lock guns—the old form which has survived through all the changes from the flint muzzle-loader to the modern breech-loading hammerless ejector-detachability has always been within reach. To take out the pins holding on the lock plates is not a difficult task. As a rule it only means turning out a couple of screws from each plate, but it is just as true now as it was in 1803 that the turning out of pins gives considerable trouble to those not used to the operation. Scratches on the engraved plates, and disfigurement of the screw heads the gunmakers finish up so beautifully, are apt to result even if the locks are "put together right."

Messrs. Holland and Holland have submitted for inspection an example of the new "Royal Detachable Lock Gun" introduced at the beginning of the present year. In it the side locks are made detachable without the use of any tool. The plates of ordinary side lock guns are usually secured in place by means of two pins, one in the metal just behind the face of the breech action and the other through the wood in the head of the stock. In the new locks these fastenings are retained, but the front screw has substituted for it a plain unthreaded projection, while the second screw is fitted with a small handle instead of the ordinary head. The general details of the arrangement will readily be gathered from the illustration.





At the forward end, where the lock plates fit into the body, the plates at the edges are bevelled, so that when placed in position they engage with the body, and must be slanted off slightly at the opposite end before they can be removed. On the inner surface of the lock plate, where ordinarily a pin goes through, there is formed a small projecting nib, which fits snugly into a recess prepared for it in the solid metal of the body. Thus when placed in position in the gun the plates are gripped by the bevelled end at their forward extremity, and positioned by means of the nibs engaging with the body, but are free to drop out if tapped. To hold them on, the threaded bolt, fitted with a handle at its head, is used. This goes through both plates, first through that of the left lock, then through a hole in the wood of the stock, and finally enters a tapped hole in the right lock plate. By twisting the handle round and round the threaded end of the bolt is screwed through the tapped recess in the right lock plate The two plates, being thus drawn together, each secures the other in position and the removal of the one bolt frees both locks. It will be realised that, as the internal projections, or nibs, in combination with the bevelled edges of the front extremity of the lock plates, act as positioning guides, the function of the cross pin is limited to the fixing on of the locks. They cannot move away from their engagement with the solid metal of the breech body even should the wood of the stock, through which the bolt passes shrink or wear. In the gun under consideration the lock plates are very slightly set off, so that the turning of the handle of the bolt while drawing them inwards at one end draws them outwards at the other, engaging the bevelled edges tightly.

The whole device is, of course, simple in the extreme, and everyone is inclined to wonder that it has not been used before.

The little finger piece or handle on the left lock plate is certainly no disfigurement to the gun, and is rather ornamental than otherwise. Also it is entirely out of the way, being placed in such a position that in loading or shooting the hands would never be near it. Messrs. Holland and Holland also provide with the gun fitted with this new device, a threaded bolt with ordinary flush head, so that if desired the locks can be dismounted by removing with a turnscrew one pin, instead of the usual number, or the bolt with handle can be used, when no turnscrew at all is required. This choice of alternatives may on occasion be advantageous, for while it is very useful to be able to get at the firing mechanism easily, one might not want every person to whom a costly gun would be given for cleaning, to take out the locks. When the locks have been detached it is necessary, in replacing them, to see that the cocking rods are in their proper position. This is done by lightly pressing on the projecting ends of the rods which show through the knuckle of the body when the fore-end is off.

Another improvement, which, although it has no direct connection with detachable locks, may here be referred to, is the extra grip Messrs. Holland and Holland are now fitting. It is used with their high velocity Cordite rifles, and also with shotguns that are likely to be subjected to the strain of firing heavy charges, either intentionally or through the use of such violent nitro compounds as sometimes are met with, particularly in places where the available supplies of ammunition are not sufficiently extensive to allow of choice. The extra grip takes the form of a top extension, but it is placed between the barrels, instead of in line with the rib, and enters a recess in the face of the action instead of being fitted in a slot at the top. It is a concealed grip, for it is entirely out of sight, and does not require any opening into which dirt or wet may be introduced, and it is also a real grip, for there is a bolt working from the top lever, which comes over it when the gun is closed, so bolting the barrels down. Further, the extension is actually a part of the barrels and is not brazed on or otherwise fitted to them, so that it cannot possibly become loose. It will be understood that the extractor is hollowed centrally to allow the extension to pass through. When the gun is open and the extractors protude they lie flush with the head of the extension, so that the extension is not in the way when loading, or removing spent shells. This feature, and also the general arrangement of the extra grip, which completes the fastenings of a "treble grip" gun or rifle, is clearly shown in the two illustrations in which A is the extension and B. B. the extractors.

In regard to the general appearance handling and shooting qualities of the Royal Detachable Lock Gun, to which the extra grip can, of course, be fitted if desired, it suffices to say that a best quality Holland gun is here in evidence and that the boon of detachability is provided without sacrifice of any of the excellencies that term implies.

TESTIMONIAL FROM IR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Third Day, Saturday, 15th May 1909.

THE three days' meeting was carried through with very great success, and our thanks are due to Captain Hon'ble Annesley and to Captain Hardy, the General Superintendent of the Gymkhana Club, who carried out all the details.

The attendance this evening was very good. Pretty frocks to be seen in every direction. The Governor accompanied by Lady Lawley and their daughters drove down in State. The Native Princes who are now enjoying the climate of the Queen of Hill stations were all present. The only fault we find was that no music was provided on any one of the three days. We have two excellent bands in the station at present and surely something could have been done to enliven the proceedings.

The afternoon looked threatening. Heavy clouds gathered about noon but they did not break till about 3-30 P.M. when the third race was about to be run. It was a pretty heavy shower and we had to take refuge under cover. The rain rendered the ground somewhat heavy and, with a bright sun soon after the other events were run off in happy style.

It was pleasing to old residents, and there are many of us still here, to see Mr. Henry Irwin I.C.S., who undertook the duties of Honorary Secretary for many years, on the course. As a matter of fact Mr. Irwin inaugurated the Ooty races and took the most active part in forming the course and extending it, with each Lake reclaimation to its present size.

THE STAND PLATE.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second and Rs. 50 to the third. For ponies. Weights—handicap. 1 mile.

COLONEL SIR DAVID BRUCE, C.B., F.R.S.,
writing from the Sleeping Sickness Commission in Uganda, says:—

"I found Bovril of great use on several occasions. It is excellent stuff.....I think it ought to take the place as a stimulant, in many cases, of the whiskies and sodas which are run to on every occasion of fatigue in tropical climates."

It is said that since the introduction of human playmates for the anthropoid apes at the Copenhagen Zoo the animals have been able to give a more than passable imitation of a fashionable "At Home."

"Papa," asked a little boy, "a man who steals a loaf of bread is a thief, isn't he?"
"Yes, a dastardly thief."
"Is a man who steals £10,000 a thief too?"
"Well, no, my boy, scarcely. Defaulter, I think, is the more appropriate word."
"And what is he called when he steals £1,000,000?"
"There is no such thing as stealing £1,000,000, my son. It is termed 'diverting.' When a gentleman diverts £1,000,000 he is spoken of as a financier."

Mother: "And when he proposed, did you tell him to see me."
Daughter: "Yes, mamma; and he said he'd seen you several times, but he wanted to marry me just the same."

Collar-studs are now made of compressed milk. In spite of the progress of science, however, they continue to roll under the chest of drawers when dropped.

Mark Twain was once staying with friends whom he knew only slightly. The family believed in cremation, and all over the house, in the most unexpected places, stood vases which contained the ashes of deceased relatives. In the morning Mark came down rather late to breakfast, and ate for some time in unwonted silence. Presently he said thoughtfully—
"By-the-bye, that's rather strange tooth powder you've got in the bathroom.
"Tooth powder?" they said.
"Yes, in that silver canister with the screw top."
"Oh, did you use that for tooth powder?" they said, "that was Aunt Susan."

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia."

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

NEWMARKET.

As a stepping-stone to the Derby, the Two Thousand Guineas never can hope to attain the popularity of the Epsom event, the distance of Newmarket from town being one of the drawbacks to a monster attendance, such as works from all parts of the world to Epsom Downs ; but, nevertheless, the first classic struggle of the season has its particular charm for the regular Turfite. Tuesday's rain had done an immense amount of good to grass and vegetation, and keenly as blew the bracing nor'-wester, it could not raise a swirl of dust, while the sun shone brightly, casting swiftly chasing shadows of cloud along the course. Considerable addition had been made to the ranks of temporary residents, and under the welcome patronage of the Prince of Wales the attendance, a rattling good one all round, was worthy of the occasion, each enclosure, especially the Jockey Club, being well filled, and including, as usual, most of the prominent patrons of the Turf. More than usual interest was manifested in the One Thousand Guineas this year, owing to the fact that all the best-class fillies were engaged in the race, and, what was more important, put in an appearace. An international character was given to the contest by the presence of M. Edmond Blanc's filly Messaouda in the field. During the last day or two she had been off her feed, and therefore was running at a big disadvantage.

The chief attraction, however, was the King's filly, Princesse de Galles, whom it was fondly hoped would emulate the victory of her stable companion Minoru, and place both the spring classics to the credit of the Royal stable.

Unfortunately affairs of State prevented the Prince of Wales from seeing the meeting through, and after the close of yesterday's racing his Royal Highness motored back to town.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

To Manchester United have fallen the highest honours of the Association football world. Last season, in their second year as members of the First League, they carried off the League championship, and yesterday they succeeded in winning the Association Cup. Their victory in the struggle for the national trophy had been generally anticipated, and on the whole it was well deserved, yet it cannot be said that they display football of anything approaching the high standard of which the side are capable. For a team, however, to play below form is rather the rule than the exception in the Final Tie, and if the Manchester men disappointed the high expectations entertained by their supporters, they were only following in the steps of many famous clubs who have figured in the concluding stage of the struggle for the Cup. Indeed, considering that they were strong favourites, in winning, even by the narrowest of margins, they accomplished more than several greater sides—notably, Newcastle United, who qualified for the Final Tie three times in the last four years and yet have still to secure possession of the Cup.

While the large majority of a crowd of about 70,000 who witnessed the encounter were probably prepared for rather moderate football, the opening half raised great hopes of a memorable struggle. Facing a strong breeze up to the interval, Bristol City naturally had to work mainly on the defensive, yet not only did they keep the scoring down to one goal, but when they broke away showed combination of a high order. In the circumstances it seemed more than doubtful whether Manchester United had made sufficient use of their advantages to ensure success, and the supporters of Bristol were fully confident that the West-country team—when their turn came to play with the wind behind them—would certainly equalise and very possibly put on a winning score. Directly after the resumption only a lucky if clever save by Moger prevented Bristol getting on terms, and everything promised plenty of excitement before the struggle came to an end, but somehow the game fell off. Manchester—much the heavier set of men—played roughly, to use no stronger term, and Bristol, with a fair number of chances failed to utilise them, the contest, in consequence of these missed opportunities and the many stoppages for fouls, losing its hold on the spectators.

The results of last Saturday's matches among the three leading Second Leage clubs have left the question of promotion as open as before. Tottenham Hotspur and Bolton Wanderers both won the former improving their goal average by beating Bradford 8—0, while Bolton only scored twice against Clapton Orient; and to complicate matters further, West Bromwich Albion could only draw with Stockport County. The West Bromwich club now lead the other two by one point, and defeat at the hands of Derby County may mean at least another year for them in the Second Division, if Tottenham Hotspur and Bolton Wanderers can overcome the Derby team. Bolton Wanderers certainly have the best chance, for while they will be opposed to Derby County at Burnden Park, both West Bromwich Albion and Tottenham Hotspur have to play the county at Derby. It is nothing in favour of the Albion that they will meet Derby County before the other two, and so they are by no means safe. Not for many years has the situation been so interesting, and it is strange that Derby County should practically hold the destinies of three clubs in their hands by having to meet all of them in the concluding matches of their programme.

THE CUP FINAL.

BRISTOL C. v. MANCHESTER U.—There was the usual animated scene at the Crystal Palace on the 23rd instant, many thousands from all parts of the country visiting Sydenham to see the final tie. From early hours in the morning the exodus from town began, and by eleven o'clock trains from all the London termini were packed full. Many of the visitors from the provinces put in an hour or so at sight-seeing in town, but the majority, remembering past disappointments, made an early pilgrimage and took up good positions hours before the time advertised for the match to commence. The weather in the morning was all that could be desired, and when the teams took the field there must have been nearly 80,000 present. When Lord Charles Beresford arrived at the pavilion, twenty minutes before the start, there was a big cheer, and the band immediately struck up "Hearts of Oak," and later on "God Save the King," the crowd joining in both song and anthem and cheering heartily. Lord Rosebery was unable to come at the last minute, but there were many other notable personages present, including Lord Carnarvon, Earl Howe, Lord Derby and party, the Hon F. G. Curzon, Dr T. J. Macnamara, Mr. W. Hayes Fisher, Count d'Outhemont (Belgian F. A.), etc. There was a blusterous wind blowing straight down the ground from the waterfall end, which promised to help both sides in turn. The teams turned out exactly as advertised, Alec Turnbull after all being able to play for Manchester. Bristol were the first on the scene in royal blue and white knickers. Manchester were in all white, with thin red stripes in the form of a V, with a red rose on the left breast and red cuffs. The line boys wore red jerseys in honour of both teams. Wedlock and Roberts tossed for choice of end, and Roberts won and chose the southern end, so that the United played in the first half with the wind behind them.

The kick off took place four minutes in front of time. Hanlin got his wing in going order at once, and Bristol were soon attacking. Cottle and Annan, the Bristol backs, both cleared smartly from attacks by the Manchester forwards and a free kick to Bristol helped them to make further ground. A free kick to Manchester close in came to nothing, and several kicks by the Manchester halves were too hard with the wind behind the ball, and the Bristol defence had no anxiety with movements which began promisingly enough. Then a lovely bit of work by the Bristol right wing sent Staniforth speeding towards the Manchester goal. He got in a capital centre, and Gilligan meeting the ball screwed it wide of the post. It was a capital effort, and got all the cheers it deserved. Manchester then took up the running, and after A. Turnbull had got offside when nicely placed, Wall got the ball from J. Turnbull, and drove in a fast shot, which Clay was rather lucky to beat out, Wedlock kicking clear. The Bristol captain cleared again a minute later from a centre by Wall, the Bristol goal at this period undergoing a pretty stiff pressure. Play, although pretty good, was rather slow, Manchester being the nippier lot, and Bristol the more methodical. A faulty clearance by Clay from a shot by Meredith looked certain to end in a goal. He fisted the ball, but only half hit it, and it fell a yard in front of the goal and also of Alec Turnbull. Annan, however, just nipped in and kicked clear. Meredith then forced a corner, but it came to nothing. Weak play by Cottle led up to another corner to Manchester, from which Roberts headed wide. Bristol broke away, but Stacey stopped Hilton smartly, and the ball being returned a shot from Halse was turned aside at the expense of a corner by Cottle. This led up to an exciting mêlée in front of the Bristol goal, the ball being returned a shot from Halse was turned, Spear finally kicking clear. Play was now all the time in front of the Bristol goal, and from another corner Duckworth went inches wide of the post with a terrific drive. Corner after corner followed one another, but Bristol were lucky, and, finally, a break away by the forwards in a line left Hardy in position. He steadied himself and sent in a great shot from which Moger made a brilliant clearance. Manchester were at the other end in a trice, and Halse hit the bar with a fast shot, it rebounded to Sandy Turnbull, who shook the net with a fierce shot, and scored a goal for Manchester just twenty-two minutes from the start. This bucked Bristol up, and Hardy sent a long shot into the top net Burton was fouled close in, but the free kick did not avail Bristol much, Moger getting the ball and punting three parts of the length of the field. Meredith was hurt in a collision with Cottle, but soon recovered and the next incident was a fine centre from the great Welshman which threatened danger to the Bristol goal, before Annan got the ball away. Bristol made another determined attack on the Manchester goal, Burton doing some clever work, but Milton's shot went yards wide of the mark. Meredith was fouled close in, but the ball was again scrambled away, and from another corner nicely placed by Wall, A. Turnbull headed just over the bar. Bristol came again and Staniforth shot wide from a pass by Wedlock, the wind curling the ball round the post. Play was now in the Manchester lines, the wind not being so strong, and the Bristol forwards, showing capital combination, frequently threatened danger without, however, making much impression on the Manchester backs, of whom Stacey played in grand form. Roberts was also a rare stumbling block to the Western forwards. Another lovely centre by Wall was turned goalwards by J. Turnbull, and Sandy just shot wide, and was given offside. Hayes badly fouled Gilligan, when he looked like going right through, and Wedlock, who took the kick, skied the ball high over the bar. Another free kick to Bristol came to nothing, but they were now playing determinedly, and Manchester were also determined and not too scrupulous. Half time came a moment later with the scores standing:—

Bristol had the wind in the second half, but were not quick to take advantage of it, the first incident being a shot by Meredith which went just wide. Then Bristol came with a wet sail and Moger made an exceedingly lucky save on the ground from Gilligan. Wall and Meredith both made good runs just after, and Clay had to save from J. Turnbull from Meredith's pass. Hayes was hurt, and had to leave the field, and a free kick for hands was awarded Bristol just outside the penalty line. Several free kicks for trivial technicalities followed, but none threatened danger to either goal. Hilton broke clean through the defence, but shot high over the bar. Halse came back to the middle line, and Duckworth filled Hayes's place at back. Meredith was more prominent now than at any time during the match, and in the second of a couple of sparkling runs he forced a corner. Hayes returned and went to inside right in Halse's place. By hanging on the ball Burton missed a nice chance of equalising for Bristol, but Roberts nipped in and cleared when the Western forwards looked like going through in a body. Play was now much faster, both ends being visited in turn. Burton got a nasty jab in the chest, but was soon able to resume. There was an interlude when Wedlock and J. Turnbull got at loggerheads, but it was soon straightened out, the referee giving a free kick against Turnbull. Gilligan ran clean through the defence, but Moger ran out and, by throwing himself full length, just managed to turn the ball away from Gilligan's foot when the Bristol centre seemed certain to score. It was more luck for Manchester, nothing seeming to come off for the Bristol men. The huge kicks of the Bristol backs kept play for the most part in the Manchester territory, but now and again Manchester broke away, and once James and Alec Turnbull got clean through, the first-named skying the ball over the bar. Bristol were soon back again, but Duckworth and Stacey were playing so well that they never got a good opening. Still, Bristol were having so much the best of the game that an equalising goal seemed certain to come. Hilton once had an open goal close in and shot wildly wide of the post. Turnbull lost his temper, and after being penalised several times, was cautioned by the referee. Meredith was bowled over heavily by Cottle in a perfectly fair charge and hurt his shoulder. A corner fell to Bristol, but came to nothing, and just after, a fast shot by Gilligan grazed the cross-bar. Play was by this time wild and ragged, Bristol doing most of the attacking, and Manchester defending in very stubborn manner. Now and again the northern forwards swept down the field, and in one of these dashes J. Turnbull had an open goal, but shot high over the bar. As time drew near Bristol seemed to relax their efforts—their luckless efforts having a dispiriting effect on the forwards. Roberts fouled Gilligan and gave the western side another chance, but Gilligan handled the ball, and the opportunity was lost. Play in the last ten minutes was very tame with Bristol doing a lot of aimless attacking and rarely or never getting a shot in. On the other hand, when Mancnester did break through, they went straight for goal and generally had a pot. Two shots by J. Turnbull went just wide, and Bristol put in a last despairing spurt before the final whistle went with Manchester still leading by a goal to nothing. It had been a hard fight, but a very poor game, even as finals go, and the winners were certainly the better side. Still Bristol had so many chances in the second half that they certainly should have scored at least one goal. But hesitency in front of goal cost them the match and with it the chance of bringing the Cup to the south for yet another year. The players who did well in the match were Meredith who played a great game from start to finish in spite of many heavy charges from Spear and Cottle, who both watched the Welsh international very closely. Halse was another clever Manchester forward and Wall did many fine things particularly in the first half, when Manchester were playing with the wind. Roberts was a splendid half, and Duckworth was almost as good, and made scarcely a mistake when he went to full back after Hayes's injury. Moger made some fine saves and one very lucky one. Stacey was the best back all through. For Bristol Hardy was the only forward to do anything much, and had there been another as good, Bristol would have won. Little Wedlock was splendid, and held the Turnbulls up time and again. Spear also played well. Annan and Cottle have never played a better game for their side, and Clay, although beaten once, was not to blame for the defeat. It was just the luck of the game, and the luck went to Manchester, perhaps because they were a rather better side than the Southerners. At the close there was the usual scene outside the pavilion rails as Lord Charles Beresford presented the cup and medals to the winners.

BLACKBURN ROVERS v. NEWCASTLE UNITED.—The last of the season's matches at Blackburn took place in wet weather before 7,000 spectators. The Rovers had a weak team, Crompton, Bradshaw, Garbutt and Latheron being absent, but they were the first to score, Davies heading the ball through at the end of fifteen minutes. Rutherford equalised, his shot first striking the upright. The same player put the visitors ahead, and the interval was reached with Newcastle leading by 2 goals to 1. Soon after the resumption Allan, receiving a well-placed pass from Rutherford, put on a third goal for Newcastle. Then from a penalty kick Davies reduced the visitors' lead after missing a fine opening. However, the United so one added a fourth goal through Rutherford, who throughout had played splendidly. How to Conquer the Mosquito.

The only weapon you need is a drop of Odol. Place this drop on a piece of wadding or a handkerchief, and apply it to the part that has been bitten, and all pain will quickly disappear. The spot will be soothed, cleansed and comforted. Odol is equally efficacious for insect bites and stings of all kinds. Every home in a hot climate should be provided with Odol, which, as everyone knows, is the World's Dentifrice. Being also a sure remedy for bites and stings it is doubly valuable.

HOTSPUR vs. BRADFORD.—With important promotion issues at stake this match at Tottenham was attended by fully 25,000 spectators, the crowd including many trippers from Bradford, who had availed themselves of the Cup-tie excursions. Although in the early stages Tottenham were obviously unnerved by their responsibility, and played much below form and miskicked badly, they eventually won well by 3 goals to love, all the scoring taking place in the second half. The home team with unqualified success tried a new man named Curtis, late of Gainsborough Trinity, at outside right. Somewhat neglected in the first half, the new-comer was afforded numerous opportunities to show off his paces subsequently, and he succeeded thoroughly, his centres being admirably timed. Otherwise the team was as against Burnley, whilst Bradford had Donaldson for Miles at right half, owing to the latter's injury.

In the early stages Bradford played good football, passing well and keeping the ball low. On the other hand, Tottenham, who faced the wind, were very uneven, there being numerous miskicks in defence, whilst their forwards failed to hustle sufficiently at close quarters. Cooper was very unsteady, and after thirty-five minutes' play he was entrusted with a penalty kick—given against Parker for handling—which he sent wide. It was early in the second half when Minter, who received from Middlemiss, scored Tottenham's first goal. The second goal followed a throw in, and was scored by Curtis, who deceived Green with a long shot after outwitting Dixon. Bradford fell away badly after these reverses, and their forwards seldom crossed the half-way line. Tottenham practically monopolised the play, and in the last minute Woodward added their third goal as the outcome of a corner. Although beaten by 3 goals, Bradford presented a strong defence throughout. Tottenham Hotspur, 3; Bradford, 0.

CLAPTON ORIENT vs. BOLTON WANDERERS. By a thoroughly deserved victory by two goals clear Bolton Wanderers kept themselves well in the running for promotion to the First Division. About 14,000 spectators, among whom was Mr. H. Bottomley, M.P., saw a hard and fairly evenly contested game, but Bolton Wanderers were always the more dangerous near goal, and near the close there was no mistaking the superiority of the visitors. Clapton Orient were at full strength again, including several of their regular team who were unable to play the previous week. Owing to the indisposition of Robinson Bolton had to play Greenhalgh centre half, Owen left half, and Marsh on the left wing as partner to Hunter, late of Millwall. For some time the play rather favoured the Orient, whose forwards, however, shot very poorly, and the bursts by the Bolton forwards were really more dangerous, as was proved twenty minutes after the start, when Hughes caught a long centre from Stokes, and with a clever hook shot scored a good goal for the visitors. From Parker's centre Scott nearly scored for the Orient, but at half time Bolton still led. Bolton were more prominent after the interval, but despite some accurate shooting the forwards could not get through the Clapton defence. From a corner Hind should have equalised for Clapton, but Louch touched the ball on its passage to the net and was given off-side. Scott shortly afterwards got a hard drive well stopped by Edmondson. Then Bolton took the game in hand, and eighteen minutes from the end a centre by Stoke was prettily headed into the net by Hughes, and Bolton ran out good winners. Bolton Wanderers, 2; Clapton Orient, 0.

Last week's riot at Hampden Park has, so far as interest is concerned, brought the Scottish season to a premature close, and this was seen at Saturday's League games, when the crowds all over were poor, the best of the day being 11,000 at the 3rd Lanark-Rangers game. The fight for the championship continues, and to win it Celtic have to get six points out of the four games they play before Friday—but the task is by no means an easy one, as three of the matches are from home. In any case, Dundee have made certain of second position, Rangers having lost all chance by their defeats at Edinburgh from Hibernians and on Saturday against 3rd Lanark, where a penalty kick brought the Cathkin team the only goal of the game. Rangers, however, were without four of their usual team.

The hardest struggle of the day was at Celtic Park, where the home club met Airdrieonians, and a division of the points on the run of the play was hardly fair to Celtic. The second half was a series of melees round the Airdrie goal, and in one of them Duncan, the Airdrie goalkeeper, was injured.

Queen's Park, although they included R. S. McColl, had several reserves against Dundee, but all through the game had an end-of-season look, the play on both sides lacking spirit. The Northern men, however, had no difficulty in getting the points.

Few teams have shown such a great deterioration in play as St. Mirren, and on Saturday they went down before Port Glasgow, this making their third defeat in seven days. Falkirk's defeat of Hearts was even more decisive than the score indicates, Brown and McTavish having two goals each.

RACKETS.

PROFESSIONAL HANDICAP.—The final of the Professional Racquets Handicap, which has been in progress at Queen's Club, West Kensington, during the week, was decided on the 23rd instant. T. Jennings, the professional at Aldershot, was opposed by A. J. Crosby, sen., who is engaged at Marlborough, and both played excellent racquets. Jennings, however, was quite at the top of his form, and won a love rubber. Hands were small and barren in the first game until Crosby, getting in at 5—6, made a run of four. Jennings followed with five, and after more small innings, the game was "set five" at "13 all." Then nine more hands were taken before Jennings ran out with three. The second game was equally closely contested. After fourteen innings, Jennings went from 7—8 to 15—8, but the score was eventually called "14 all." Then Crosby was put out, and after a single to each, Jennings won. From this point Jennings' superiority was more marked. He led at 9—1 in the third game, and went out with four. Crosby gained a lead of 6—5 in the fourth game, but he only made a couple afterwards, Jennings ending the rubber with a sequence of seven aces. Score: T. Jennings (rec. 4 aces) beat A. J. Crosby, sen. (rec. 5 aces), by 4 games to love (18—16, 17—15, 5—3, 15—8).

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—The final round of the Amateur Championship at Queen's Club, West Kensington, brought together Mr. H. Brougham (Wellington and Oxford) and Mr. J. de la Rue (Eton and Oxford). Mr. de la Rue hit hard in the rallies, but generally he was clearly over-matched, and Mr. Brougham won without the loss of a game. The Old Etonian failed at his opening hand, and Mr. Brougham ran up six and eventually led at 11—2. Mr. de la Rue then put on six, but did nothing afterwards. In the second game Mr. de la Rue got in at 4 all and made six. He did little while Mr. Brougham reached "game ball," but the game was eventually "set three," Mr. Brougham going out with three aces. Continuing his hand in the third game, Mr. Brougham added three, and after his opponent had scored a couple added half a dozen. Small and unproductive hands followed until Mr. Brougham made the winning ace. Score:

Mr. H. Brougham beat Mr. J. de la Rue by 3 games to love (15—8, 17—16, 15—10).

The winner will be called upon to play Mr. E. M. Baerlein, the holder, for the championship.

R.E. vs. R.A.—At Chatham the racquet matches between the Engineers and Artillery resulted as follows:—

Doubles.—Capt. H. S. Bond and Mr. Waddell Dudley (R.A.) beat Major Jones and Capt. Walker (R.E.) by games to 1. Score: 12—15, 15—9, 15—3, 15—8, 15—5.

Singles.—Capt. Bond (R.A.) beat Major Jones (R.E.) by 3 games to love. Score: 15—10, 15—0, 15—5.

Mr. Waddell Dudley (R.A.) beat Capt. Walker (R.E.) by 3 games to 2. Score: 15—7, 15—7, 13—17, 15—17, 15—10.

AMATEUR DOUBLES CHAMPIONSHIP.—As last year's winners, Mr. F. Dames Longworth and Mr. Vane Pennell, are not defending their title, the final round of the doubles at Queen's Club, yesterday, decided the championship. The competing pairs were Mr. E. M. Baerlein and Mr. Percy Ashworth and Mr. C. Browning and Mr. O. S. Fleischmann, the result being an easy win for the former couple, by 4 games to love. Mr. Baerlein was by far the best of the four, serving with effect and showing great facility for killing the ball. The next best player was Mr. Browning, who did a lot of excellent work in the rallies. Details:

Mr. E. M. Baerlein (Eton and Cambridge) and Mr. P. Ashworth (Harrow and Cambridge) beat Mr. C. Browning (Harrow and Oxford) and Mr. O. S. Fleischmann (Rugby and Oxford) by 4 games to love, 60 aces to 32. Score: 15—1, 15—12, 15—13, 15—6.

The only score in the first seven hands was a single to Mr. Browning. Mr. Baerlein then got in and ran up 13 aces—8 by service—Mr. Ashworth, as second hand, reaching "game" with a couple. In the second game Mr. Ashworth went from 2—6 to 11—6, with a sequence of 9. Mr. Browning equalised, but after an ace to Mr. Fleischmann, Mr. Ashworth went out with 4. In the third game seven hands were taken before Mr. Baerlein obtained possession, and made 5. Later, Mr. Fleischmann went from 6—11 to 10—11 with 4. Mr. Ashworth attained "game ball," and after a single to Mr. Browning and a couple to his partner, Mr. Baerlein scored the necessary ace. In the fourth game Mr. Baerlein went from love—3 to 5—3. Subsequently he got in at 9—5, and added 4, and at his next innings won the game and the rubber with a couple.

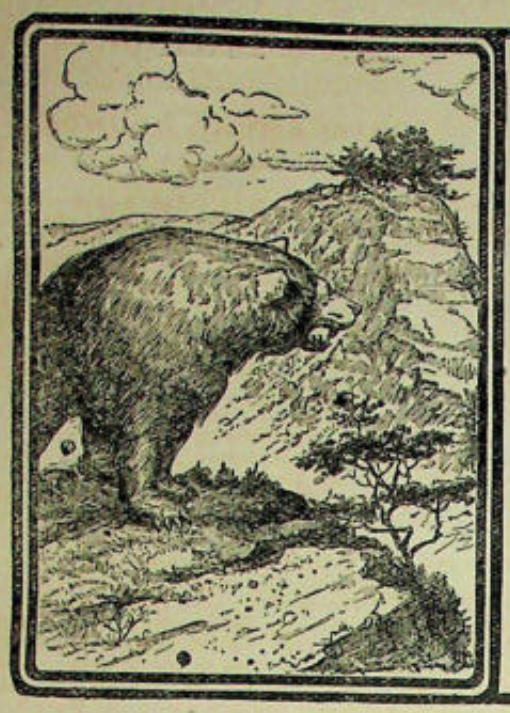
OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Monday, 3rd May.—Sheffield Corner 6 A.M. This meant a very early start for most of us, and the field was quite a large one including H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley and the Misses Lawley, H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore, Miss Barrow, "Mrs. Smith," Mr. Wyndham Quin, Mr. Leatham, Captain Bate, Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Sam Browne, Miss Morgan, Mrs. Bates, Mrs. Fraser, Mr. Wynch, Mr. Score Smyth, Mr. Stewart Browne, Mr. Studdy, Major Johnstone, and about a dozen others who arrived late. A move was made to the head of the Parson's Valley; the bog and Dantes Spinny did not hold, but on crossing the bog to the right hounds got on the line of a jack. They started at a fair pace and gradually warming to it were soon running hard up the valley, leaving Bilanjikod Mund Shola on their right, they crossed the small stream. They ran up through Middle Bit Shola and checked on the outskirts at the top. The Master made a cast on the hill above, where they recovered the line and carried it across a large bog on the north side of Ammakkoral Mund and over the hill to Pennant and checked again in a small shola below Pennant. The Master then took them over the Parson's Valley Stream, where they got on the line of a fresh jack which led them up Leatham's Nullah to the corner of Lancer Shola; here they doubled back leaving Irwin on their right and ran past Liebenrood to the Parson's Valley Stream with a brace of jack ahead of them, one going to ground below Bilanjikod Mund, and the other with the main body of the pack continued his flight to the big bog between the Twin Sisters and Bilanjikod where they were stopped and brought back to the earth where the first jack had gone to ground. The terriers were put in but failed to bolt him. As we moved up the valley towards Pichal Mund a jack was viewed making for covert on the opposite side; as soon as hounds got on his line, he crossed Heseltine's Nullah and made his way up the steep hill of Perungudy Mund. Short of the summit he doubled back down the hill to the Toda Burning ground and into Pichal Mund Shola. Scent failing, hounds were unable to account for him and were taken back to Kennels. The morning was close and warm, masses of clouds hanging about. Although there was a heavy dew on the grass the ground was fairly hard and dry. More rain will be welcomed.

Thursday, 6th May—A howling wet morning, with rain coming down in buckets. A few hardy ones turned up at the Meet, amongst them one lady. I am unfortunately unable to give you a full account of the run, as I was not there. I am told sport was not so bad as was to be expected under the weather conditions. There was a short run and a kill in the open.

Saturday, 8th May.—Briar Shola at 7 A.M. A rough, cold, morning—there was half a gale blowing from the south-east and squalls of driving rain swept over the downs. The rain, however, cleared off later, though a thick mist was rather troublesome in the Yemakal Valley. A jack had been viewed in the swamp above Pamela's Crossing by some one on the way to the Meet. Too much time had elapsed, so the scent was quite cold when hounds arrived on the spot. So back we came to Briar. As soon as the hounds got into covert a jack was proclaimed; keeping below the Pykara Road, he eventually broke covert at the far corner, crossed Windy Saddle with a point for Wapshare's Hare, but swung to the left through the corner of Hero Shola into Bacon Wood and on to Briar. Short of this he was run into by two couple of the leading hounds and dispatched. After the obsequies we moved on to Hero, where hounds at once got on to a line, they carried it down to the head of the swamp to the right of Windy Gap and then on into Wapshare's Hare. The jack led them round about the covert for some time before he made up his mind to quit, finally slinking away over the ridge to Piggott's Crossing and Briar. A view Holla soon brought hounds racing on his tracks. He did not dwell long in this covert, but made straight through it over the top of Herbert Plantation and along the ridge as if for Staircase, but bent to the right down Back Staircase to the Devil's Dyke, and on up the ravine to below Bamboo Shola; leaving this on his left he rose the hill above Yemakal Shola and tumbled down the other side hard pressed by hounds. Leaving Little Yemakal on the right he ran straight on for half a mile before crossing Kabbalkod Stream to the right of Irwin's Clump. Then turning left handed along No Man's Land he ran up the valley to Kaitharka Mund. At this point the mist came down so thick that it was quite impossible to see, and the roar of the wind drowned all sound. The Master and his two whips had some difficulty in getting hounds together again in this wild tract of country.



Monday, 10th May.—Avalanche Finger Post at 12 noon. Hounds found at once in Finger Post Shola, they ran over some cultivation and rose a steep hill, then came tumbling down again and crossed the swamp to the left and climbed up the hill for Hardbake Hanger; here they were stopped by the Master as the country beyond is very wild. We moved on to Gartree Hill: a jack was viewed in the Emerald Valley, but he almost at once popped into an earth, the terriers were put in, but after waiting a considerably long time in the hopes he would bolt, we were obliged to leave him. A long toil up brought us to Parsons' Valley, where a more sporting jack was found which gave us a run to the top of Staircase.

Wednesday, 12th May.—Lascelles Cover at 7 A.M. This meet was very well attended, the morning was clear and bright and got quite hot about 8 A.M. Lascelles and Bingham were drawn blank—The Master crossed the Municipal Stream to Fife's Cover and along the Blackmore Vale, just beyond Point to Point Cover, the pack touched a line and shortly after a jack was viewed. The pace increased as hounds gained on their quarry and they were soon streaming up the hill to the Potato Field which held several jack, the hunted one taking a line through Ballywood, crossed the Krurmund Road and swung down past Monkey to Owl Crossing, then to the right up through Swamyar Bluegums and went to ground under some rocks at the corner of Tiger Shola. The pack had split up, a few couple running their jack to Porlock and Bluegums and some four couple with Captain Duff went off down the Nanjanad Valley and were last seen running hard in the direction of Fuz Pits. The Master next drew Porlock and Bluegums: hounds found on the far side of Bluegums, and ran down to the bottom and back round the hill to Porlock and Bluegums; in the latter they lost their jack. By this time the sun was very hot, so hounds were taken back to kennels.

PYKARA.

DR. WALTER C. SMITH, the popular Scotch poet-preacher, on one occasion tried to explain to an old lady the meaning of the scriptural expression, "Take up thy bed and walk," by saying that the bed was simply a mat or rug easily taken up and carried away. "No, no," replied the lady. "I canna believe that. The bed was a regular four-poster. There would be no miracle in walking away wi' a bit o' mat or rug on your back."

DR. MACLEOD was once sent for to visit a sick man. On arriving at the house, he inquired, "What church do you attend?" "Barry Kirk," replied the invalid. "Why, then, did you not send for your own minister?" "Na, na," replied the sick man, "we would not risk him. Do you no ken it's a dangerous case of typhoid"

WINCHESTER

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.

When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION "A."

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—These teams met on the Rangers' ground on the 12th instant, a very level game ending in a pointless draw.

CALCUTTA vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on the 12th instant ending in a win for the military team by a goal to nil. The home team attacked at the start but could not score and a rush by the Gordons brought the ball to the Calcutta goal, where the home team were penalised for a foul, Montgomery scoring from the penalty kick. The ball travelled up and down the field for the remainder of the first half, but there was no further scote. On resuming the Gordons had the bigger share of the game, but lost opportunities of adding to their score through faulty shooting. Teams :—

C. F. C.—Keays, goal; Wright and Stuart, backs; Pooler, O'Shea and Wood, halves; H. Sherman, V. Sherman, Heskell, Kingcome and Longbottom, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. A. R. C. Miller.

SHROPSHIRE L. I. vs. CALEDONIA.—This game on the Customs ground on Saturday ended in a win for the soldiers by two goals to nil. The Shropshires early showed their superiority and scored both points in the first half, Hockenhall and Sanderson being responsible. On changing ends the military team continued to have the best of the game and had it not been for Goodwin and Stoddart would have added to their score. Teams :—

K. S. L. I.—Robinson, goal; Busby and Humphreys, backs; Howells, Roberts and Haley, halves; Poole, Onions, Hockenhall, Sanderson, and Birch, forwards.

CALEDONIA.—Goodwin, goal; Stoddart and Coles, backs; Boilard, Currie and Laing, halves; Coldwell, Harding, Behrend, Allen and Capper, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. A. R. C. Miller.

Y.M.C.A. vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Y.M.C.A ground on Saturday, a fair game ending in favour of the visitors. They scored twice in the first half through Brewin and McKay and led by this margin at the interval. On resuming the Young Men played up and Gay put through. Even play followed. The home team lost chances and could not add to their score, being thus defeated by two goals to one. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Allen and Postence, backs; Cornish, Lawton and Cody, halves; Berkley, Smart, Berryhill, Brewin and McKay, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Richards, goal; Reynolds and Mold, backs; Collingwood, McKay and Gay, halves; Beck, McLearn, Brown, Rouston and Rosetti, forwards.

Referee :—M. Chandler.

CUSTOMS vs. GORDONS.—These teams met on the Caledonian ground on Saturday, the Customs scoring a somewhat unexpected victory by two goals to one after an interesting game. They kept up a continuous attack all through the first half and L. H. Smith and Galbrieth scored a goal each. The Gordons attacked during the second period but lost many chances. At length a penalty for hands enabled Montgomery to put through, but though they pressed during most of the remaining play they were unable to get level and were beaten as stated. Play was rough in the second half, players were warned and Mongomery ordered off the field for fouling. Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; E. Vears and H. Vears, backs; Fischer, Smith and Marsden, halves; Echlin, Galbrieth, Smith, McCready and D'Silva forwards.

Referee :—Mr. R. P. Claridge.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALCUTTA.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Saturday, a poor game ending in a win for Dalhousie by a goal to nil. The visitors had the better of the game all through but were weak in front of goal, a fault shared by their opponents. Calcutta kept up a sustained attack during the early stages of the game but could not get through. Then the Dals got away from a free kick for a foul throw by Pooler, and after Keays had saved from Stuart, Whyshall got possession and netted. The Dals' custodian was next called upon to save twice and Prike almost added to the visitors' score. In the second half Calcutta were kept on the defensive almost all through. The Dals forced many corners but could not improve upon them. H. Sherman got in a couple of good runs and looked like equalising, but there was no further scoring, the game closing with Calcutta attacking after having forced a corner. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Stevens and Clarke, backs; Montgomery, Lees, and Wilson, halves; Bennett, Dalling, Prike, Whyshall, and Haulston, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Keays, goal; Wright and Stuart, backs; Pooler, O'Shea, and Wood, halves; Longbottom, V. Sherman, Kingcome, Heskell, and H. Sherman, forwards.

Referee :—Sergeant Curley.

Y.M.C.A vs. CALEDONIA.—Played on the Caledonia ground on Tuesday, the visitors winning by a goal to nil after a level game. Gay was responsible for the score in the second half. Teams :—

Y.M.C.A.—Gray, goal; Kneelden and Reynolds, backs; Collingwood, Gay and Pettit, halves; Beck, Maclaren, Brown, Parker and Rouston, forwards.

CALEDONIA.—Herley, goal; Stoddart and Capper, backs; Ready, Boilard and Laing, halves; Apcar, Allen, Currie, Harding and Quickly, forwards.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THERE was a great tamasha on the C.F.C. ground on Wednesday evening, the 12th instant, when the home team entertained the Gordons. Ten minutes before the game commenced there strode on to the field the splendid Pipe Band of the regiment and after a mighty roll from the drums the skirl of the Piebroch silenced the wondering Ki Hoichis of the Babu log and drove the Scotch spectators into an ecstasy of delight. They are a fine body of men the pipers of the Gordons and the figure and bearing of the Drum-Major was the envy and admiration of many a Calcutta beau. The game was a fairly good one and but for the high wind that blew down the pitch would have been much better. The Gordons scored the only goal of the match from a penalty after 15 minutes' play, which up till half time was mostly in favour of Calcutta. During the interval there was a rousing display by the pipers whose performance was appreciated not a whit less than the game itself. The second half was all in favour of the Gordons, but execrable shooting prevented their adding to their score and the game ended one nil in their favour.

OF their last year's team only four turned out and they were the pick of the side, Montgomery, now that Cooper of the C.F.C. has retired, is probably the best full back playing in Calcutta and McKay is a dashing and hard-working centre forward. The outside left is a useful man until he finds it necessary to shoot for goal, when his efforts are almost ludicrous.

Spence, their old skipper, will be greatly missed this season, as quite apart from his skill in the field he was an excellent leader and his presence always infused lots of "go" into a game.

CALCUTTA are but a shadow of the team that played three seasons ago. O'Shea at centre half is their best man with H. Sherman and Longbottom the best of the forwards. V. Sherman shows glimpses of his old form and when he finds his knee will stand the strain will probably astonish the halves who at present appear to hold him cheap. Kingcome goes off more each game he plays, while Haskell is painfully slow and hopeless in front of goal.

AGAINST Dalhousie on Saturday the same team that faced the Gordons turned out and once more were beaten by one goal. The game was value for a draw, and although only one goal was scored there might have been a dozen with reasonable steadiness and good shooting. Kingcome and Whysall were the worst offenders, but it is always easier to talk of shooting goals from the enclosure than to get them on the field of play, and the best football shots are always comfortably seated round the touchline and not on the playing field.

THE backs on both sides were better than the forwards with perhaps the exception of Stevens of Dalhousie, whose one and only idea of play seems to be to get the ball as high into the air as possible and trust to luck that it will drop in front of and not behind him. Stuart and Wright played very soundly, and if the latter were a trifle surer of his kick would compare favourably with any couple in the League.

DALHOUSIE and Rangers head the League table with five points each out of a possible six, a fairly rare event in the history of both of them. Dalhousie have two good men in Evans and Holley to fall back on in case of emergency and when they find a reliable full back in place of Stevens will take some beating.

RANGERS are a better team than they have been for a number of years, and, as most of their players are young and enthusiastic can look forward to the hard games in front of them with perfect equanimity.

CALEDONIA even at this early stage of the proceedings seem destined for the wooden spoon and one can only sympathise with them in the loss of Wilson and Candler. The practice of playing for one club one season and another the next is much to be deprecated, and although a man is at liberty to play for whatever team will have him, it is rather rough on the club that gave him his first opportunity. Caledonia have always been fortunate in their goalkeeper and this season their good luck in this respect has not deserted them, but they will need it all before the season closes.

CUSTOMS have done what no other team in Calcutta has ; they licked the Gordons by 2—1 and deserved to do so too. They are evidently going to be the surprise packet of the League, though if they always play as well as they did on Saturdy the surprise will be to find them beaten. Montgomery of the Gordons was ordered off the field presumably for rough play and his case will be heard by the League Committee shortly.

THE Shropshires are a side of great possibilities and with more practice will be found very near the top of the table when the League is finished.

A LOT is heard now-a-days of the decadence in every branch of sports and the other morning a contemprary was bewailing the apparent dearth of good football players in Calcutta at the present time and the poor games that are seen. It is not so much the case that the class of play has deteriorated rather the reverse, but it is the case that spectators in Calcutta expect just a little too much. In the "good old days" nearly everyone played and gave little or no thought to the "class" of football served up, while at present it is a well-known fact that team secretaries find it hard enough at times to get a full side. Most people prefer to sit and watch a game to playing in it and criticism of the play has become more acute. All clubs have their good and their bad years, but taking all in all the class of play at the present day in Calcutta is a bit better than it was six years ago.

THERE have been several very interesting encounters on the C.F.C. ground during the past fortnight. Calcutta "B" is the designation given indiscriminately to each of several teams and when number two or three of these take the field there is no lack of excitement for spectators and players alike. It is not so much that the standard of play is particularly high in these matches. To say that it is would be a terminological inexactitude of the most barefaced order. It is the earnestness and determination to win of each player that raises these games above the ordinary every-day league match. No time or energy is wasted in the science and finer points of the game of football. Each man marks out an opponent as his own special and private property and for fifty minutes makes it his one and only aim and object to give that opponent the time of his life! They are hard fought and spirited encounters these and to the bilious burra sahib no better prescription could be given than to saunter to the C.F.C. ground of an evening when the "B" team is engaged.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

Third Round.

CHESHIRE REGIMENT vs. BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—These teams having played two drawn games met for the third time on the 10th instant before a large crowd of spectators. The Gymkhana were off colour during the first half and the soldiers managed to score two goals. Truemann scored the first point from a long shot and Hayes was responsible for the second. After the interval the Gymkhana rallied and their backs put up an excellent fight. A determined assault on the Cheshires' goal gave Carroll an opportunity of scoring, but he missed his chance and the Gymkhana territory was next invaded. The soldiers could not pass the backs, however, and once more the Gymkhana ran down, Moir losing a chance of scoring. They continued to press and from a penalty bully close to the goal Cole scored a goal. Time was then called with the score: Gymkhana, 1 goal; Cheshire Regiment, 2 goals. Teams :—

CHESHIRES.—Wakefield, goal; Price and Harris, backs; Cartwright, Rossell and Simmonds, halves; Truemann, Whitlow, Hayes, Hance and Pickering, forwards.

GYMKHANA.—Collingwood, goal; Cole and Gillett, backs; Blair, Elliott and Bean, halves; Hearson, Carroll, Troupe, Sharpe and Moir, forwards.

Semi-Finals.

NORTHAMPTONS vs. GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—These teams met in the semi-finals on the 11th instant and a drawn game was the result, each team scoring a goal in the second half. Replaying last Thursday the Medicals won by a goal to nil. The soldiers, who are a strong combination, go to pieces in front of goal. Both goals were visited in turn at the start and then the Medicals rushed down. Steinhoff sent in a high shot which Millard stopped with his hand, but as the ball fell, Quanborough shot it into the net. Thereafter the soldiers made determined attacks on the Medicals' citadel but could not get through. The second half was very evenly contested, but there was no further scoring though both goals had narrow escapes. The Medicals thus qualified for the final. Teams :—

NORTHAMPTON REGIMENT.—Millard, goal; Taylor and Roberts, backs; Booth, Hall and Albon, halves; Robinson, Hemmings, Hitchcock, Parrott and Towers, forwards.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—J. Canteenwalla, goal; W. George and H. Easdon, backs; G. Cowper, Osborne and G. Garthwaite, halves; R. Hayter, S. Steinhoff, A. Hanson, W. Quanborough and W. Hallums, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. CHESHIRE REGIMENT.—This match on the 12th brought together a huge crowd and produced a splendid game. Play during the first half was very even; neither side had any perceptible advantage, and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends after an unsuccessful rush by the Young Men the soldiers took up the attack and play remained in their opponents' territory for some considerable time. All their attempts to score, however, were frustrated and at length Kelly got the ball away and after a fine run transferred to McMillan who registered the first goal of the game. The soldiers pressed on resuming and lost chances through bad shooting. Hildreth next ran down for the Y.M.C.A. and passing to McMillan the latter scored again. During the remaining few minutes of the game the soldiers made desperate efforts to reduce the margin but without success, retiring beaten by 2 goals to nil. Teams :—

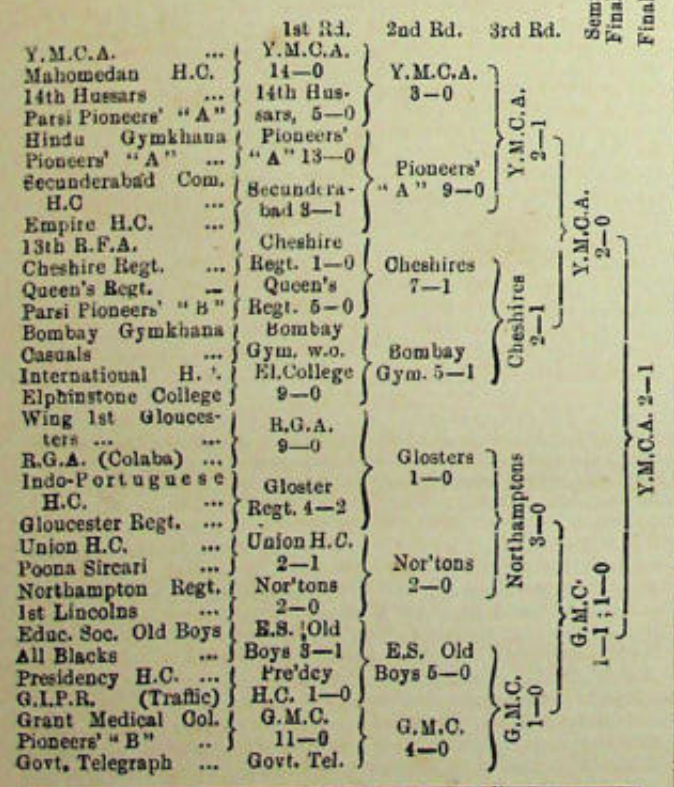
The Final.

Y.M.C.A. vs. GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—A record crowd assembled to witness the final game in the Tournament on Saturday. It was well contested throughout, the Young Men eventually winning by 2 goals to 1. The Young Men kept up a determined attack at the start and the Medicals' goal had many narrow escapes ; at length Spilling drew first blood. On resuming the ball was again brought to the Medicals' territory where George and Canteenwalla both went after it and in the fumbling which ensued Spilling again got possesion and netted a second point. The Medicals then had a spell of attacking but without success, and half time arrived with the Young Men again pressing. The College showed improved form after the interval and made onslaughts on their opponents' goal, Hanson at length getting through and scoring. They then forced a corner which was cleared ; vigorous play till the conclusion of the game but no addition in the score was made. Prior to the presentation of the prizes Colonel Davidson, Acting Commandant, Bombay Brigade, congratulated the winners and said he was informed that Mr. Tyler, in memory of the late Mr. E. D. Smith, who had done so much for hockey in Bombay, had given a challenge shield for the runners-up in the Tournament and also a special cup for the captain of the winning team.



Mrs. Davidson then presented the Aga Khan Cup and the special cup to Ward, the captain of the Y.M.C.A. team, the challenge shield to the captain of the Grant Medical College team and medals to all the players of both teams, after which hearty cheers were given for Mrs. Davidson and the finalists.

The teams were as follows :—

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—J. Canteenwalla, goal ; W. George and H. Easdon, backs ; G. G. Garthwaite, Osborne and Cowper, halves ; R. Hayter, S. Steinholf, A. Hanson, W. Quanborough and W. Hallums, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Flynn, goal ; Essai and Roberts, backs ; V. Hildreth, Ward and Dowling, halves ; Templeton, Kelly, Spilling, McMullen and George, forwards.

"Oh, no ; he's not here ; that's Wollowby, who claims he used to go to school with Jollyboy!"

THE BLOOD HOUND IN AMERICA.

FOR some reason or other, American breeders have hitherto prefixed the word "English" to the blood-hound when speaking of this variety, but we may safely acquit the president of the American Bloodhound Club of any discourtesy when he proposed that in future the adjective "English" shall be dropped. It is true that the bloodhound, as he is known in America to-day, comes from this country, but there is only one variety, and that not English. No doubt the modern stock is descended from the St. Huberts, originating in the Ardennes, brought across the Channel by William the Conqueror. The hound of to-day is certainly much handsomer than his progenitors, and, fortunately the increase in beauty has not impaired his working qualities, by which, of course, any hound must ultimately be judged. He has, however, suffered a good deal in constitution owing to persistent in-breeding for the purpose of preserving and fixing type. Distemper plays havoc with the whelps and breaks the hearts of owners. Although there is no vallid reason why bloodhounds in America should be known as English, we may, at any rate, claim to have preserved the breed from extinction. Some forty or fifty years ago the continuance of the race depended upon the caprice of a few wealthy people, and the much-abused dog shows may, at least, take the credit of having made the bloodhound fairly popular, and saved him from decay. The United States have drawn freely upon us for their breeding stock, and English blood may be found in the pedigrees of their best hounds.

THE bloodhound as an auxiliary to the police is quite common in America, and the following is a specimen of a type of advertisement common to many papers : "Trained bloodhounds are often the only means of capturing a criminal. A man may commit a crime, and a short start enables him to reach localities where a hundred men could not find him unless directed by man-hunting bloodhounds. If your house has been robbed, tell no one but an officer ; in no case touch or remove goods the thief has handled, and keep everyone away from the criminals' tracks at the starting-point. Don't wait until everyone has given it up, but send for the bloodhounds first, and then go on with the investigation, getting all the facts you can before the bloodhounds arrive. Terms are moderate." The satisfactory part about it is that these men are usually able to perform what they certify can be accomplished by their sagacious hounds.

A FAVOURITE sport in the United States is 'Coon hunting. To give him his full name, the Raccoon is a nocturnal carnivore allied to the bear tribe, but of course, considerably smaller. A graphic description of the sport in "Field and Fancy" makes one wish to take part in it. Says the writer : "There are many reasons why the 'Coon hunt is fast becoming one of the most popular of the manly sports. The 'Coon is found in nearly every section of the United States. Other game is becoming very scarce. The wealthy business man, the man of affairs, who is tied to his desk six days out of the week, can own a 'Coon hound, and in the stilly hours of the night, after the day's turmoil of business, can enjoy a few hours of the most strenuous sport now left to us, and witness a battle-royal between his faithful hound and the monarch of the forest, the wily 'Coon. Nothing that I can contemplate is more exhilarating or more soothing to the nerves than the excitement of the 'Coon hunt. From the first long-drawn note when the trail is struck until the hounds victorious cry at the tree, it is one round of excitement and anticipation. . . A sure-enough Coon hound is about as scarce a thing as can be thought of. There are plenty of dogs that will occasionally run across a 'Coon and tree it, but the man lucky enough to own a real artistic 'Cooner is in a small class to himself. A real 'Coon hound is born, and not made. But being born is not sufficient ; he must be made. In other words, he must be possessor of all the qualities and intelligence that go to make a 'Coon hound, and then these qualities must be drawn out and developed through painstaking care and patient training."

NOR without reason has the 'Coon been dubbed wily. He is as full of tricks as the proverbial wagon-load of monkeys. A favourite method of throwing the hound off the line is for the pursued animal to "top the tree." In other words, he will jump from tree to tree until forced to take the ground. A young or inexpert hound will bay the first tree, which the hunters proceed to fell, only to find that the quarry has vanished. The wise old hound is not to be fooled in this way. When he reaches the tree, he casts around until he strikes the line further on, a procedure which he repeats until he is satisfied that Mr. 'Coon has reached his limit. The tree comes down, and with it the little animal, which puts up a most plucky fight, despite the fact that his canine antagonist is more than double his weight. In fact, he is such a nasty customer that a young untried hound will frequently tuck his tail between his legs and make a bee-line for home. If the 'Coon gets in deep water, it is quite possible for the hound to be drowned.

THIS is not a drawing-room sport, for it means hard work tramping through swamps, wading creeks, forcing a way through scrub, with the prospect of losing one's way, and spending a night in the open. To the true sportsman, best of good fellows, whether a son of Uncle Sam or John Bull, difficulties are ever welcome. Many of us would find life dull indeed without the friendship of hound or gun-dog.

The Naturalist.

TADPOLES AND FROGS.

SIR RAY LANKESTER continues in the Daily Telegraph his interesting popular natural history papers. His latest contribution to "Science from an Easy Chair" is on the above subject. He writes :—

Now is the season of tadpoles, not a season recognised by housekeepers and gourmets (except in France, where frogs are eaten in April), but one dear to schoolboys and all lovers of Nature. The ponds on heaths and in the corners of meadows now show great masses of soft jelly-like balls of the size of a marble, huddled together and marked each by a little black spot at its centre, as big as a rape-seed. This is the "spawn" of our common frogs and toads. The little black body is precisely the same thing as the yellow part of a hen's egg, and the jelly around it corresponds to the "white" of the bird's egg ; but there is nothing to represent the shell. The little black spheres elongate from day to day in the warm spring weather, and at last the minute tadpoles break loose from the jelly, hanging on to its surface by aid of a tiny sucker, and feeding on the minute green vegetable growths which have appeared all over the jelly-like mass. Their rate of growth depends very much on the temperature, and is much more rapid in Italy and the South of France than in England. At first they are so small that it is difficult to distinguish, except with a pocket-lens the little black plume-like gills on each side of the head, and it is only as they grow bigger and lose these little plumes that the young things assume the characteristic shape of a rounded head—really head and body—with a long flattened tail which strikes vigorously to the right and left, and enables the tadpole to swim like a fish.

I SUPPOSE that everyone, or nearly everyone, knows that these swarming little black tadpoles are the young of frogs and toads. As the season goes on they grow to as much as three-quarters of an inch in length and develop a number of golden metallic-looking spots in the skin, which give them a brownish hue. Both the fore and the hind limbs have now developed, but are hidden beneath the skin, and all this time the tadpole is breathing, like a fish, by means of gills, concealed from view by a fold of skin. Very early it acquires a pair of lungs, and by the time the legs break through the skin (the hind legs do so first) the lungs are inflated, and help in respiration. Now the head becomes modelled like that of a young frog, the tail ceases to grow, and the legs become strong and large. Soon the gills atrophy, and the young creature crawls out of the water and spends much of its time in the damp grass and herbage near its native pond, rapidly assuming the shape of a frog. An interesting fact is that all the time that it is a tadpole the little animal is a vegetarian, has horny lips, and a very long intestine, coiled like a watch-spring. But as soon as it leaves the water it becomes carnivorous, feeding on small insects and worms, and its intestine straightens out and becomes, relatively to the increased size of the body, quite short.

EVEN those who know frog-spawn when they see it and something of the history of the growth of the tadpole and its change into the young frog or toad (as the case may be) do not, as a rule, know about the laying of the eggs. In the early spring (end of March) the full-grown frogs and toads which have passed the winter buried in holes and cracks in the ground in a state of torpor wake up and make their way to neighbouring good-sized ponds. In these the eggs are deposited. They are, when "laid," covered with only a thin transparent layer of albumen (or white of egg), and it is only after a few hours that this imbibes water and swells up into a ball-like mass around each little black egg.

WE collected the spawning toads and frogs at Vienna in order to observe (in the laboratory of the celebrated microscopist, Professor Stricker, the most gifted of his day) the earliest changes in the little black egg, the size of a rape-seed, which follow upon fertilisation. Properly placed in a watch-glass full of water under a low power of the microscope one little egg could be watched for hours. If it had not been fertilised, nothing occurred. But if it had been, then there were strange movements of its surface and a puckering and sinking in along one definite line, coming and going, but at last becoming well marked like a deep furrow. Without actually splitting, the little sphere was divided by the cleft into two halves. Then, at right angles to the first cleft, a second began to form, and so on, until in the course of hours the sphere became divided on its surface like a blackberry. The separate pieces thus marked out are the first "cells," or units, of living protaplasm of the young tadpole. They continue to divide and to chemicall- convert the granular matter with which they are charged into living material whilst the mass slowly, in the course of days (taking up water for its increase in actual size) becomes elongated, and shows the rudiments of head, eyes, ears, spinal cord, and projecting tail. It is a fascinating task to watch this gradual development—and a difficult, but necessary, one, which has now been carried out in the minutest detail by -atient students—to harden with chemical solutions the growing embryos taken at successive stages, to embed them in wax or paraffin (as Stricker was the first to do), and to cut them into the finest slices, then to clarify these slices in balsam-varnish, examine them with the microscope, and record and draw every "cell," every constituent unit, as they increase in number and complication of arrangement. That wonderfully difficult feat has now been carried out not only in the case of the frog and toad, but in the case of hundreds of different kinds of animals of all sorts. Thus we know the history of the growth from the egg in its minutest details in every kind of animal.

The egg is always originally a single "cell"—that is to say, a minute corpuscle of slimy consistence., with a dense capsulated kernel or "nucleus" within it. The kernel or nucleus divides into two, and the cell itself divides; each of the daughter-cells again divides, and so the process continues, until thousands, and in larger animals millions, of cells are the result, as the mass of cells takes up nourishment and increases in volume. That is another and a long story; we must revert now to the tadpoles and their parents.

There is a tradition that Dr. Edwards, the father of Henri and grandfaher of Alphonse Milne-Edwards, directors of the Natural History Museum of Paris, kept some tadpoles in a sort of cage sunk in the Seine, so that they could not come to the surface to breathe air nor escape on to the land, and that they grew to be very big tadpoles, much larger than the size at which tadpoles usually change into frogs. I tried to repeat this experiment when I was a boy—without success—and I have never heard of anyone having succeeded with it. It is not cited or credited at the present day. But some thirty years ago it was discovered that something of this kind happens in the case of the Mexican salamander. The English "newts" and the so-called salamanders are creatures of lizard-like shape, which are closely related to frogs and toads. They lay eggs in the water, and the young are tadpoles, with beautiful large plume-like gills on each side of the head. The tadpole of the common English newt may either lose its gills and leave the water in the summer, if it was hatched early in the season, or may remain longer in the gilled condition, and grow to more than an inch in length, if it was hatched late. In certain lakes in Mexico there is a tadpole-like creature with gill-plumes, which grows to eight inches or more in length, and becomes adult and breeds when in that condition. It is known as the "Axolotl," and was considered to be a distinct kind of gill-bearing adult "tadpole." When, however, they were brought to Europe and kept in a cage with only a small provision of water, some of these axolotls were found to leave the water, lose their gills, change their colour and shape in several respects, and become, in fact, transformed into a terrestrial salamander, of a kind already known in North America. It was thus established that the axolotl of the Mexican lake is nothing more nor less than the tadpole of a species of salamander or newt, which has "given up" the habit of leaving the water, and actually grows to full size, and lays its eggs without becoming converted into a gill-less land-dwelling creature! The greatest interest was excited forty years ago, when the discovery was made that, by gradually drying up the water in which the axolotl is kept, it can be induced to resume its later transformation, and become changed into a salamander. Thus, the notion of converting the tadpoles of the common frog into very big tadpoles by preventing them from leaving the water, seems not to have been an unreasonable one.

There are some very big kinds of tadpoles, which are the young of toads of other kinds than our British species. In England we have only two kinds of frogs—the common frog and the edible frog—and two kinds of toads, the common toad and the natter-jack or crawling toad (distinguished by the pale line along the middle of his back). But on the Continent of Europe there are others besides those which we have. There is the beautiful little green tree-frog, and there are the fire-bellied toad, and the obstetric toad (the male of which carries the eggs after they are laid, coiled in a string around his hind legs); and then there is the little spur-heeled toad (Pelobates fuscus), which is remarkable for having a broad, horny claw on his heel. This toad is only about an inch and a half long when full grown, but its tadpole often exceeds two inches in length, so that it actually shrinks in size when it ceases to be a tadpole, and takes on the adult form. Many years ago I found some of these huge tadpoles in a pond near Antwerp, and thought they must be a realisation of Dr. Edwards's experiment. They were enormous, and it was only on bringing them home that I heard for the first time of the spur-heeled toad and its gigantic tadpoles.

Among frogs and toads from distant lands are some which bring forth their young alive, the female retaining the eggs in her body instead of laying them in water. The black and yellow salamander of Europe (which, like the common toad, has a highly poisonous secretion in the skin) lays its eggs in water, but the closely-allied black Alpine salamander is viviparous, the little tadpoles remaining inside their mother until they have lost their gills and have become like their parents—terrestrial, air-breathing animals. One of the most curious arrangements in regard to the young is seen in the Surinam toad, of which we had living specimens five or six years ago in the London Zoological Gardens. In this toad the skin of the female's back becomes very soft and plastic at the breeding season. As she lays the eggs the male takes them one by one and presses them into the soft skin of her back, into which they sink. The eggs are thus embedded separately to the number of fifty or sixty, each in a little pit in the mother's back. They slowly develop, each in its "pit," the orifice of which is closed by a sort of lid. When the young have grown to the condition of little toads, they push open the lids of the pits and swim out of their mother's back. Specimens of these toads, with the eggs and young, in various stages, embedded in their mother's back, are to be seen in most museums of natural history. Toads and frogs catch their prey by throwing forward the sticky tongue which is attached near the front of the lower jaw, and so lick up their victim with startling abruptness. The Cape frog of South Africa (Xenopus) stands alone in having no tongue and possessing hard, pointed ends to its toes. It rarely, if ever, leaves the water.

The works in question were also passed round for the information of the members.

The Honorary Secretary then placed before the Meeting, for the information of members, a sample of cork linoleum for mounting butterflies, moths, etc., on which he had obtained from Messrs. Arthur Butler and Co. of Mozufferpore. He also stated that the Bombay Natural History Society intend using the same material for their insect cabinets and advocated its adoption by collectors in Baluchistan. It was agreed that cork linoleum was very suitable for the purpose mentioned.

The next item of business being the election of new members, the Hon'ble President proposed and Major Goodwin seconded the following admissions :—

Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs, I.C.S., C.I.E.
Mrs. Dobbs.
Col. R. C. A. Howe.
Lieut.-Col. A. C. M., Waterfield, M.V. O

Lieut. W. H. Roberts, R.E.
Lieut. K. I. McIver, R.G.A.

The proposal was carried unanimously.

Members who had not already done so were then invited to join the Bombay Natural History Society, and the following gave in their names :—

Major L. F. O'Connor, C.I.E.
Doctor H. T. Holland.
Mr. A. Anderson and Lala Mulraj.

The Hon'ble President then closed the Proceedings with a few remarks. He expressed great pleasure at the large attendance at this Meeting, congratulated the Society on the value and beauty of many of the specimens collected during the past month, thanked the Members for their donations, expressed himself as very pleased at the interest taken in collecting by the rising generation, and especially thanked Mr. Flynn for the trouble and care taken and success attained by him in mounting the specimens presented by him. He also mentioned that the Honorary Secretary was anxious to start separate albums of paintings of (1) the Birds, (2) the Butterflies and Moths, and (3) the Wild Flowers of Baluchistan, which he thought an excellent idea. He considered that the first contribution made by Miss Butler towards this end, a most useful one and beautifully executed, and expressed the hope that others who were able would kindly come forward and assist in a similar way, anything in the way of paintings and drawings being of great value, especially paintings of birds as the colour of the beaks and legs of preserved specimens fade so very quickly.

The Hon'ble President also mentioned that he had heard that Mr. Chibbir, Assistant Professor of Botany, Agricultural College, Poona, had, unknown to him, visited Quetta and taken away a large collection of wild flowers of which he proposed to present a set to the Quetta Museum and expressed the hope that Members interested in the subject would assist in the Botanical collection. In conclusion the Hon'ble President congratulated the Society on the fact that Mrs. Dobbs had shown her interest in the Society by not only gracing the Meeting with her presence, but by consenting to become a Member.

J. W. N. Cumming,
Honorary Secretary.

You can't do any good in the world without offending somebody, and the man who makes no enemies is a man who does no good. Some men, but for this fear of making enemies, might accomplish something. This reminds one of the dying man who was too cautious even to make his peace with Providence.

"Do you renounce the devil and all his works?" the parson asked of this man.

The dying man replied, in a weak, hesitating voice: "Please don't ask me that, parson. I am going to a strange country, and I don't want to make enemies."

An actor who recently was "taken" while on the stage by a cinematograph, was greatly pleased with the result. Talking about it to a prominent dramatic critic, he said: "It was about the most extraordinary experience I ever went through—actually to see myself acting." "Now," replied the critic, "you will understand what we have to put up with."

They stood outside the Star and Garter—loafers both, blue-nosed and shivering. "Not much doin', matey," said the first. "Nothin'. Things is orful—simply orful!" "Couldn't be wusser. I ain't 'ad a job for near a year." "That's rocky"—in commiserating accents. "What's yer line?" "Me? Oh, I'm a Good Friday bun-maker." "Ah! I'm wuss than that." "Garn? What are you?" "I'm a Coronation programme-seller!"

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

THE COLOURING OF ANIMALS.

MR. R. J. POCOCK is undoubtedly making the best use of the unrivalled opportunities afforded by his position as Superintendent of the London Zoological Gardens to investigate the meaning of the colouring of the animals under his charge. His latest undertaking in this line is connected with the colouring of the Indian ratel (Mellivora), and such other members of the weasel tribe as present the peculiarity of having some part at least of the upper surface of the body white or light grey and the underparts dark brown or black. This has long been known as a feature of a large number of the members of the Mustelidæ, such as the American skunks, the zorilles (Ictonyx) and the Cape pole cat (Poecilogale) in Africa, and the grison and tayra (Galictis), as well as the striped weasel (Lyncodon) in South America.

In the case of the skunks it has long been recognised that the black and white colouring of the upper-parts come under the designation of warning colouration, that is to say, a conspicuous type of marking designed to proclaim to the world that the owner is a noxious animal, not good to eat, and not to be approached with impunity on account of the vile odour it exhales when irritated. Mr. Pocock goes, however, much further than this, and asserts that all animals with white, or partially white, backs and black bellies are examples of warning colouration. And he justifies the assertion by pointing out that as a dark back and a white belly are now definitely known to be developed for rendering the animals in which they occur inconspicuous or invisible, so the reverse of these conditions ought to be for the purpose of rendering the creatures in which they are developed as conspicuous as possible. The explanation is so simple and so convincing, that when we are once told of it, we cannot help wondering why we never thought of it before.

Mr. Pocock is, however, by no means content to leave the matter merely as unconfirmed theory. In the first place, he has satisfied himself that mammals displaying this type of colouring are conspicuous by night as well as by day; and likewise that none of them prey on active creatures whose capture is a matter of difficulty. It is also essential to the theory that such white-backed animals should be evil-smelling; and Mr. Pocock has ascertained that ratels, grisons, and tayras have the power of emitting an unpleasant odour when they so desire, and also that the teledu, or Javan badger (Mydaus)—a little dark brown animal with a broad white stripe down the back—is capable of stinking out a whole village.

In the case of the South African striped pole cat and the South American striped weasel it is, however, possible that their colouring may respectively imitate that of their larger relatives, the zorille and the grison.

Before leaving this part of our subject we are fain to recall that during the Boer War it was recommended by the writer of the present article that if it be desired to render field guns invisible the proper plan would be to paint the under side of both gun and carriage white and the upper surface dark khaki. No notice was taken of this communication by the military authorities either in India or at home; but now that the protective nature of "white bellies" has been incontestably demonstrated the subject may once more be commended to the best attention of the powers that be.

We may conclude this article by brief reference to a second scientific paper by Mr. Pocock, in which the four known races of tigers are severally distinguished.

First of all we have the typical Bengal tiger (Felis tigris typica) in which the pale areas on the head, body and limbs are pure white, sharply defined, and of considerable extent, while there is only a short fringe of hair on the cheeks, and practically none on the neck and throat. Another important feature is the absence of any marked lengthening in the winter coat. In many instances the development of the stripes is imperfect, but this cannot be regarded as a racial characteristic.

The Manchurian tiger (F. t. longipilis or mongolica) differs by the larger amount of white on the face, under-parts and the inner surface of the limbs, and likewise by the long, thick, and woolly winter. From both the above the Persian race (F. t. virgata) is distinguished by the presence of an abundant fringe of long hair on the cheeks, throat and under-parts; the bodily size being medium. This race takes its name from the very full development of the striping.

Lastly, we have the Sumatran tiger (F. t. sondaica), which is a small or medium-sized animal agreeing with the Persian race in the character of its striping, but distinguishable at a glance by the indistinctness and small extent of the white areas on the head and body, the absence of a fringe on the under-parts and the shorter hair on the cheeks and throat. In colour the white areas vary from dirty to buffish white; and they are also ill-defined.

The characteristics of Burmese and Malay tigers have yet to be described.

Heavy rain fell just before the race, but it cleared and they were sent away to an excellent start, Brooklands showing in front, attended in order by Louviers and Minoru to the mile, where Sir Martin joined them and Brooklands fell back. At Tattenham Corner Sir Martin was bumped and fell: and Louviers and Minoru entered the straight together, a magnificent struggle ending in a victory for Minoru by a head, amidst scenes of the wildest enthusiasm: half a length between second and third. Their Majesties and the Prince and Princess of Wales were present and His Majesty led the winner in.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

As will be seen from our Special Telegram the Derby was yesterday won by the favourite, Minoru, amidst scenes of enthusiasm such as have never before been displayed at Epsom. Minoru did nothing very brilliant as a two year old, scoring but one victory, the Great Surrey Foal Stakes, £934, 5 furlongs, 8·9, and running second twice: on the first occasion to Louviers in the Coventry Stakes and next to Battleaxe in the July Stakes. This year his form has been distinctly good, and he has maintained his position as firm favourite in the Derby betting. His victory in the Two Thousand Guineas won H. M. the King his first classic race since he ascended the throne, and his win at Epsom yesterday places a third win in the Derby to the credit of His Majesty. As Prince of Wales he won the Blue Ribbon on two occasions, with Persimmon in 1896, and with Diamond Jubilee, a horse who also won the Two Thousand in 1900. Previous to his win at Epsom the king had thus far won nearly £9000 in stakes, which, considering the season to be but two months old, is a remarkably good beginning, especially when compared with last years' winnings which ammounted to £5490. His Majesty's record years as a racehorse owner are £29000 in 1900, £15000 in 1897, £16000 in1869.

Mr. Griffiths, the new Handicapper, is staying at the Grand Hotel getting himself familiar with Calcutta ways and has been kind enough to give our representative some particulars of his career, from which it will be seen that he has had any amount of experience of racing of all kinds. His work up here will no doubt come very easy to him after his Australian duties, as down there at times they get 24 hours in which to allot weights to 150 horses' of which possibly 30 or 40 have arrived from outlying stations and have never been seen before by the unfortunate gentleman who has the job of bringing them together. Mr. Griffiths' racing career commenced some thirty years ago, when, at the early age of 16, he rode two or three winners in Riverina, New South Wales. At this time also he bought his first race horse. It was supposed to be broken down and he got it for the noble sum of £12, but the youthful sportsman managed to patch it up and won five or six races with it on the flat (owner up). He also started in a hurdle race, and as he only weighed about 7 stone in those days lead to make up the requisite amount ran short, and he eventually had to fill up the deficiency by means of a bag of sand tide in front of his saddle. This race, however, terminated the career of Stormberg, the young enthusiast's horse as he ran out at the second hurdle and getting mixed up with a wire fence put "paid" to his account. Before this time the winnings on this animal had enabled Griffiths to increase his string which numbered three or four and included a very useful mare called Fairy. When he was still under twenty Griffiths came back to Melbourne and joined the staff of the Sportsman for which he worked on and off for fifteen years. During the whole of this time he owned and trained horses with a fair amount of success. Among other useful animals that he ran were Umarrah, who won the V. A T. C. Balaclava Stakes beating two Caulfield cup favorites, Secombe, who won the A. R. R. City Handicap in 1893 and for whom Messrs. Krerouse and Madden unsuccessfully bid 800 guineas for shipment to India, Town Clock, winner of an Adelaide Cup, Trieste, winner of the V. R. C. Criterion, Deposed, Myrabolus, Major Pumice Stone, Comrade, Lord Rosebery, Sunray, Mascot, and many others. Alanna and Dudington another pair of his are well known now-a-days as sires. Perhaps one of Mr. Griffiths' most profitable horses was Buss, a grandson of Yattendon, which he bought for £40 and with which he won 22 races! Some of our readers may remember the horse called Sweep with which Captain Scott did very well in the steeplechasing world in India some fifteen or sixteen years ago: this animal was also one of our new Handicapper's string. In additon to his own horses Mr. Griffiths also trained a few for friends: of these the most notable were Mortlake, Investigator, and Wickham, the last obtaining the distinction of beating Australian Peer. During this period Mr. Griffiths made two or three trips to South Africa with race horses which he sold very well over there. In 1902 he severed his connection with the Sportsman and started the Melbourne Illustrated News which was immediately successful, but finding it growing too big for him he sold it after a year or two and accepted the invitation of some of the leading Victorian mofussil clubs to become their Official Handicapper and held this position for 35 clubs in all in that colony, at the same time working at different meetings as Stipendiary Steward. When the Calcutta Turf Club secured his services the Victorian people objected very strongly and went to the length of refusing Mr. Griffiths' resignation. On the matter being represented them, however, they granted him twelve months' leave so that in case Mr. Griffiths should find that the climate of Calcutta does not suit him he would be able to return to his old duties. However he does not anticipate that this will be the case and hopes to be able to establish himself here very comfortably, and "so say all of us."

Though it is now only a little over a fortnight till the first Tollygunge meeting there is not much activity in the racing world. Cyril, Blix, Blue Flame, and Mercedes have all been schooling up at Milton Park and are improving jumpers. Mr. Phillips' small pony Amiable went for a three-furlong gallop with Prince Harpist on Monday the pony getting much the best of it. We understand there is to be a 14-2 Open Race for ponies that have never won a race of Rs. 1,000 included in the first Gymkhana Meeting and Amiable is no doubt being prepared for that. Prince Harpist will probably be a starter in the Novice Stakes.

We hear it is Mr. Cowper's intention to school Jackeroo a little later on and if he takes to the game successfully he will be another formidable competitor in the Hurdle Race ranks during the Monsoons. Betrayer, who has been purchased by Mr. R. A. C. Pugh, is shortly coming to Calcutta and will be given to W. Alford to school and train. If this great big beast will only strike his old form there will be nothing here to come within lengths of him.

CAPTAIN. HUGHES is busy making improvements in the Hurdle and Flat Courses. The bad turn near the 1 mile post in the cold weather course is now being banked up, improving it greatly, and dhoob grass is being planted in several places. In the Monsoon Hurdle Racing, we are at last going to have a properly marked out course, well drained, banked up at the turns and with a good straight finish clearly defined by white ropes and terminating at a proper winning post. The hurdles are all being put at exact right angles to the course instead of being dumped down anyhow as heretofore and the start will be by means of gates instead of with the flags as formly. There is evidence too that there will be plenty of horses for the Hurdle Races, but with the prevailing trade depression and with Jack Scott, Dinnie Norton, and the two Marshalls away, it is uncertain whethere there will be as many animals for the flat as in former years. It is to be hoped, however, that they will turn up all right when wanted as if only we have a good supply of runners everything points to a most successful coming Monsoon season.

THE starting gates are being erected at Tollygunge and will be available for practice on Tuesday the 1st, and Friday the 4th proximo at 7 A.M.

DR. MCCABE, who trained Orby when he won the Epsom Derby, in reply to one of his critics on the doping question, said: "I defy him to name any drug that could possibly make a horse go faster with it than without it, the drug named to be submitted to the opinion of a fellow of the College of Veterinary Surgeons and a fellow of the College of Physicians. Their opinions will agree with mine, which is that drugs are useless for the purpose. Next, I refuse to believe that he can find in the whole of England a single trainer who honestly believes any drug has enabled him to win, except in so far as rogues are concerned in which case a stimulant, of which alcohol is the best may and sometimes does cause a horse a "put it in" who otherwise would refuse to try."

AN interesting point of racing laws has just been decided by the Stewards of the Western India Turf Club. The following case which occurred on the first day of the recent Karachi Spring Meeting was submitted to the W. I. T. C. for decision. Owing to bad action of the gate Woodcutter was left at the post in the Hyderabad Plate. The starter declared a false start after the remainder had completed the course, and protests were lodged against this. A consultation among the Stewards ended in an order to run the race again. In the second race Lochinvar, and P. D. Q. again finished first and second respectively, but Woodcutter displaced Platoon for third place. The owner of Platoon lodged an objection and the matter was put before the Western India Stewards.

The rule stands that if through any faulty action of the gate the Starter wishes to declare a false start, he may do so by means of a recall flag. There was no advance, or recall, flag, so that the contention is that under the circumstances a false start is impossible.

Originally the advance flag was introduced to cover any faulty action of the starting gate; without it the Starter is powerless to call back those who get away, and they consequently would have to run the race out on the off chance.

The W.I.T.C. Stewards decided that the rule relating to a start stipulates for a re-call flag and as there was none on that occasion the Starter was not in a position to declare a false start. The race therefore stands as originally run with Lochinvar first, P.D.Q. second and Platoon third and the second run is void.

WE regret to learn that Lieutenant W. McArthur of the 13th Hussars came by a bad fall while riding K.C.S.I. in the Consolation Race at the Wellington Sky meeting last Saturday. Mr. McArthur was thrown from his horse and picked up senseless.

THE Simla Open Gymkhana Race Meeting was held at Annandale on Saturday afternoon and provided excellent sport. There was a large attendance which included Lady Minto and Lady Violet Elliot, and the Viceroy's Band added to the afternoon's enjoyment. The programme opened with the race for the Hamilton Cup (½ mile), which was won by Mrs. Deane's Convent Girl with Captain Gibbs on Andalusian second. Captain Cautley's Sublime just beat Lord Francis Scott's Plebeian by a head for first place in the race for Arab ponies, which had not won a race of Rs. 500 or over since 31st March 1907. 6 furlongs.

The Arab Pony Scurry, ladies' nomination, was won by Captain Gibbs' Poniard nominated by Lady Eileen Elliot, Mr. Williams' Proudfoot nominated by Mrs. Appleton was second. The Open Polo Scurry was won by Mr. Williams' Sunbeam, Captain Liddell's Mabel second, and the Ladies' Hack Stakes, 2½ furlongs, fell to H. E. the Viceroy's Hypoongyi with Sunbeam second. A race for native horse dealers concluded the programme.

EIGHT teams have entered for the Beresford Polo Tournament at Simla:—Viceroy's Staff, Commander-in-Chief's Staff, King's Dragoon Guards, 10th Hussars, 12th Lancers, 17th Lancers, Patiala, and a Native Cavalry team. The 2nd Gurkhas who had entered a team, have scratched. Ties will be played as follows:—On Monday, 31st, the team from Patiala play the Commander-in-Chief's team; and the 10th Hussars meet the 17th Lancers. On 2nd June the Viceroy's Staff play the 12th Lancers, and the Native Cavalry team play the King's Dragoon Guards. The semi-finals will be played on the 4th and the final game takes place on 7th June.

IAN HAGUE, who recently won the English Heavy Weight Boxing Championship, beating Gunner Moir in one round, was defeated by Sam Langford, the coloured boxer, at the National Sporting Club on Monday last. Hague lasted four rounds. Langford has had a remarkable career. His introduction to the ring was accidental. He was hanging round a boxing booth in Boston, looking out for a meal, and as the promoter wanted a boxer to fill up a gap in his programme, Langford offered to do so for some food. He received 2½d., went off, filled himself up with as many doughnuts as he could get for the money, came back, put on a pair of boxing gloves for the first time, knocked his man out in a jiffy, and received a dollar for his pains. He thereupon went into the boxing game, and has worked his way right along on the line, taking on anybody, from feather-weight to the very heaviest men he could come across. He has lost only five battles altogether—the first, in his seventeenth year, to Danny Duane (a really smart New York feather); to Dave Holly (a black, to whom he was giving away a good lump of weight); to Larry Temple (a 12lbs. heavier man, whom he knocked out eight months later); to Jack Johnson, the Champion of the World (on points, after 15 rounds); and to young Peter Jackson (seven weeks after the Johnson fight and a very doubtful decision).

Never once has he been knocked out, even by such opponents as Jack Johnson, Joe Jeannette, Sandy Ferguson, Jim Barry, and John Wille, although he has fought and beaten most of them when only scaling welter-weight himself—roughly speaking, 10st. 2lb. A remarkable record surely. He is said to weigh only about 11st. 8lb. now and could easily get inside middle-weight, and has offered to meet any of the American middle-weights (white or black), they to be catch-weight, and himself willing to post forfeit not to weigh over 158lbs.

The great Jack Johnson only just managed to scrape a verdict over Langford. He won well at the finish no doubt, but many spectators were of the opinion that, had not the timekeeper's watch been too fast, Johnson would have been out. The champion was down, and the seconds were being counted when the bell came to his rescue. Joe Jeannette, who, if Johnson's opinion of McVea is correct, should come next to the champion himself, never had much of a chance with Langford, who won comfortably.

THE death is reported at Chailey, Sussex, on the 6th instant, of Mr. Herbert Whitfeld, formerly Captain of the Cambridge University and Sussex Country cricket elevens.

A SMALL party of Calcutta sportsmen and representatives of the local press were the guests of the management at the Opera House last evening at a private view of the unique bioscope picture representing the great fight for the Heavy weight championship of the world at the Stadium, Sydney, on Boxing Day last year. The film depicting the contest is indeed a wonderful series of photographs. Pictures of the two men in training, the rush to procure tickets, the huge crowd both outside and inside the Stadium are shown preliminary to the actual fight, which is dealt with round by round from the time the contestants stepped into the ring till the interference of the police and the handing over of the cheques. We cannot say the fight was particularly brilliant, for the boxers were in holds most of the time and when there was any open work Johnson always got in heavily. Some excellent pictures of the Oxford and Cambridge Boat race of 1909 were also projected on the screen.

An important meeting of the International Hockey Board was held at the First Avenue Hotel, Holborn, on Saturday 1st May. Mr. H. M. Tennent, occupying the chair. England was represented by Mr. H. M. Tennent, Mr. E. Fletcher, Mr. T. Burman, and Mr. P. Collins, whilst Mr. W. T. Graham and Mr. H. L. Murphy represented Ireland, Mr. J. A. Kirkwood and Mr. J. M. Rutherford Scotland, and Mr. J. Ralph Williams and Mr. H. V. Doughty Davies Wales.

Proceedings began with the reading of the minutes of the last meeting. The International Hockey Board Rules were finally approved and copies of the same will be sent to each country in due course. Alterations were made to the following rules, and others will be announced when their working has been considered by each member of the Board:

(a) A penalty was provided for simultaneous breaches of any rules.

(b) Penalty corners.—It was agreed that everyone except the two players participating must be beyond the 25 yards line and if the ball goes over the goal-line a goal must be given and if it goes over the back line or outside the circle a bully on the 25 yards line must be given.

(a) Penalty bully.—It was agreed that penalty corners must be taken on a point five yards from the nearest goal-post.

The Marathon race from Windsor to Shepherds Bush promoted by the Evening News was run on the 22nd instant and won by Gardener, an Englishman in 2hrs. 53mins. 3secs. Labry of France was second, and Morris of England third. Dorando's time over the same course last July was 2hrs. 54mins. 46⅗ secs; but Dorando, Hayes, Longboat, St. Ives, Siret and Maloney, have all run the course in faster time the last named holding the record for the distance 2hrs. 36mins. 2½ secs.

The Golfing Girl.

She is fair as a lovely Sultana,
  Though she's built on the masculine plan.
And the flash of her eye is sufficient to try
  All the flesh of an average man.
At the chase she is quite the Diana:
  While she shoots with éclat at the butts:
And her tennis is pretty, and yet (what a pity!)
  She can't golf for nuts.

She can aim well enough with the driver,
  And her style is a thing to recall,
But she runs up a score, as a rule, long before
  She has made much advance with the ball.
She breathes deep like a healthy young driver,
  As she takes number 10 (near the tee):
She's a mashie and brassey, but oh, the poor Lassie
  Is always at sea!

Shall I speak of the power of her putter
  And the sweep of her irons in the dale?
Shal I tell of the charm of her magical arm
  As her lofter careers o'er the dale?
Shall I sing of her heart in a flutter
  When she misses the easiest shot.
And the words that she uses?—nay, surely, ye Muses,
  I'd far better not!

Yet her golf, be it never so scrappy,
  Brings the blush to her cheek in the breeze:
And she captivates fame at a decenter game
  So she won't care a rap for the tease!
Though she sometimes gets fearfully snappy,
  When she's finished her round, you'll agree
That you never did meet with a girl who could eat
  Such a terrible tea!—Truth.

The ka-ka-po, or as it is variously called, the owl-parrot, ground parrot, or night-parrot, a specimen of which has arrived at the London Zoo, is one of the most remarkable of birds, and is the first of its kind to be seen at the Zoological Gardens for thirty years, although furnished with well-developed wings, the bird never uses them for fight, but merely as balancers when hurriedly walking or climbing. This disuse of the wings is thought to have been brought about by the fact that no indigenous predatory mammals existed in New Zealand—its native land. Now, however, since many animals that prey upon birds have been introduced into the Colony by man, the case is altered, and unless the ground-parrots learn to use their wings again they will, like other flightless birds of the country, be very soon exterminated.

There is a vast difference between the hunter who kills for pleasure and the hunter whose business it is to capture his quarry alive. Carl Hagenbeck, the famous animal dealer, has reduced his method of capturing wild beasts to a science. The method of securing live hippopotami is particularly interesting.

The so-called Hawati, or water hunters, of the Sudan, all of whom are excellent and daring swimmers, harpoon their victims at the noon hour, when they are sunk in deep slumber. Then, according to the Wide World Magazine, they pull them to the bank by means of a cord attached to the harpoon and make them fast.

The hunters use for this a special kind of harpoon made in such a way that it does not make a deep wound. Fully three-quarters of the hippopotami exhibited in Europe have been captured in this way.

Hippopotamus hunts are also conducted on land. There advantage is taken of the fact that the female hippopotamus makes her young walk in front of her. The reason for this is that the beast, being well protected in the rear by her abnormally thick skin, prefers to have her offspring in front, where she can guard them better against danger.

In spite of her affection for her children, the hippo has no particular desire to meet danger when it comes. So the hunters dig large pits in the forest, cover them over until they are fully concealed, and then lie in wait near by.

Presently a female hippopotamus comes along with her child trotting before her. Suddenly, without warning, the young hippo disappears before its mother's eyes. This is too much for the old animal. She dashes away leaving the little fellow at the mercy of its enemies.

In a Resolution just published in the United Provinces Gazette, some interesting details are given regarding the use of the Lauder Brunton lancets and permanganate of potash for the cure of snake-bite. The reports vary a good deal in character. In the Meerut district lancets were used in 235 cases, and success followed in 171 of these; but it is not certain that in all these cases the bites were those of poisonous snakes. In 22 cases the patients died.

In Barabanki four cases were successfully treated, and in two of them the snakes were seen to be cobras. Other districts report success in several cases, but returns are not very reliable, as it has not often been proved that the snakes were venomous. The Commissioner of Agra reports that the villagers are afraid of the lancet, and prefer their own methods of treatment; while one Magistrate says there is general complaint that the lancets are not sharp enough to make proper incisions where the skin is hard.

We are glad to learn that Col. Bob Love of Harmston's Circus, who was recently attacked by small-pox at Manila, is making a good recovery.

The visitor to the Royal Academy whose nature is sufficiently complex to harbour both a love of art and a love of sport will wander by many hundreds of yards of paint, and will scrutinise well over a thousand pictures, without receiving many moments of glowing pleasure in return. For the standard of achievement is generally lower than usual, this year and sporting subjects are distinctly scarcer.

It must always be a cause for wonderment that artists are not more often drawn towards sports as a medium for their talents. Everything that is most vigorous and graceful about the human form, everything that is most beautiful in nature, is inseparably bound up with sport: yet our painters busy their brushes on mermaids when they wish to depict ease of movement, and fall back on Vulcan for their muscles. There is, however, a measure of diplomacy in their policy. The successful painting of a sporting subject demands technical knowledge. It is not well to show a winning jockey with his hands held as no winning jockey would ever hold them: and the technical knowledge being lacking, the Roman gladiators, the old gods and syrens of the deep waters are safer victims.

Nevertheless, this does not alter the pity of the fact that a beautiful field is being ignored by art. And this year even hunting, generally well served by skilful brushes, has received scant attention. Search each room at Burlington House how you will, stretch the line almost to breaking point, include as a sporting picture the portrait of any gentleman who poses in hunting pink, and you are rewarded with a bag of only ten. Six portraits of men whose names or whose clothes have sporting associations, a couple of hunting pictures, a football scene in black and white, a quaint shooting group on a Yorkshire moor—that is the complete catalogue of the collection. And in no more than two instances have the artists produced work of any distinction.

Even Mr. John Charlton, who has shown so often in the past that he can paint horses and hounds with life and feeling, is wofully disappointing in "The Master's Daughter" (291). This is a large canvas, and it completely lacks that happy combination of art and realism which has distinguished so much of Mr. Charlton's work in the past. A lady, dressed for the chase, is seen standing on the steps of a great house; her horse, held by a figure in green, is impatiently pawing the gravel path, and some half-dozen hounds are baying a welcome. A cheerful, fresh-air subject, a subject of joyous, eager life, yet it is just life that the picture lacks. At his best Mr. Charlton paints hounds quivering with vitality, every muscle having meaning, yet in spite of all the elaborate detail, escaping photographic hardness. But the usual touch is absent from the new picture. There is a lack of animation. A raised paw looks as though it had been suddenly petrified, and the colouring—that always difficult white and red and blue—of the hounds is more than a little muddy.

The only other hunting picture in the exhibition, "The Edge of the Wood" (474), by Mr. Alfred J. Munnings, is less ambitious but more pleasing. It is a small work, but it is made noteworthy by the cunning of its colouring. A man in hunting costume, mounted on a chesnut horse, is emerging from a wood. The action of the horse is excellent, the wood is bright with the brown and golden tones of autumn, soft autumnal sunshine, lights the scene. Brown and gold and scarlet running up and down the scale, through a hundred tints—a fine piece of painting.

The lover of sport searching for a friendly face among the portraits, and finding only dull-looking gentlemen connected with politics or fashionably gowned ladies married to rich husbands—hence, seemingly, their presence "on the line"—is startled upon entering Room III. by the sight of two portraits of the Jam of Nawanagar—153 and 168, the former the work of Mr H. Weigall, the latter by Mr. Henry S. Tuke. And the shock is the greater because "Ranji's" figure differs so greatly in the two pictures. They remind one strongly of the familiar advertisement of a gentleman before and after dining at So-and-so's restaurant. In Mr. Weigall's painting, the Jam is depicted a great deal slimmer than when we saw him on cricket grounds last summer; he is more the "Ranji" of his Cambridge days. He is dressed in the robes of his order, but there is a simplicity about his loose white costume that seems to suggest lithe limbs and electric boundaries to leg. The figure is rather obviously posed and the expression is a little strained, but it is a good, clear-cut piece of work, handled with strength and decision. Totally different is Mr. Tuke's painting of the Jam, hung on the adjoining wall. There is nothing of the lithe athlete here. This "Ranji" is made to look far bulkier than he was last year. He appears at least ten years older. He does not look as if he could toddle up the pitch for a single, let alone run out a hit for two. And he is dressed in wonderful splendour. He is a glittering mass of precious stones. He is a dazzling composition of Eastern treasure. Emeralds big as filberts surround the Royal neck. Diamonds flash from his head-dress. Heavy rings adorn his fingers. He is so laden with gems that one pauses to wonder that he is not wearings rings on his nose, and one tears oneself away firm in the conviction that beneath the elegant shoes there are rings upon his toes. The Jam himself, as he leans against a golden chair, looks oppressed by the weight of it all. The portrait scarcely suggests "Ranji," and there is too much showy colour about the picture for it to have high claims as a work of art.

It is difficult to understand why Mr. George W. Lambert chose as a title "Mearbeck Moor, Yorkshire" (43). For the moor is decidedly out of it. Figures hide it from view, and a more appropriate name would have been "Mr. and Mrs. Anybody and their pony and little dogs." A stout gentleman is seated with some nondescript birds at his feet; a slim lady stands by a nondescript pony; two nondescript dogs squat in the corner. Presumably the party have been shooting. There is a certain boldness about the colouring that attracts the attention, but the figures are as hard as British oak and as stiff as British manners. The lady and gentleman have the rigid, uncomfortable, self-conscious appearance of a photographer's victims; the pony might well be stuffed with sawdust; the dogs, which may be intended to represent anything from toy Poms to French poodles, are inanimate masses of muddy paint.

"Over the Line" (1331), by Ernest Prater, is vivid in its suggested movement. A Rugby player has just scrambled full length over the line, with two opponents hanging on to him. The try has obviously followed a scrum, for the "pack" is shown in the act of breaking up a few yards away. That being so, it is hard to understand why half of one side should be standing in attitudes of surprise at the other side of the field. This technical error, however, does not detract from the artistic merit of the picture. All the figures are full of life They seem to move.

As depicting the one-time owner of a famous Derby winner, Mr. Arthur S. Cope's portrait of the Right Hon'ble Henry Chaplin, M.P. (16), comes into the category of sporting pictures. The honourable member is shown seated in a chair, with eye-glass erect and a keen look about his face as though he were preparing to champion Tariff Reform. And although the art critic of "The Tailor and Cutter" will assuredly take exception to the set of the coat, the portrait is vigorously drawn.

Other portraits are Evan Hanbury, Esq. (87), by Mr. William Carter, which shows the subject in hunting costume; Francis Villiers Forster, Esq., M.F.H. (731)—also in hunting costume—by Mr. Edward S. Harper; and "A Gentleman Rider" (689), by Mr. Percy Sturdel, none of which has much to distinguish it.

At the annual general meeting of the Zoological Society, it was resolved that the site of the present offices at 3, Hanover Square should be sold and the offices and library removed to the Zoological Gardens. The Duke of Bedford, who presided at the meeting, said the offer which the Society had received for the freehold would enable them to erect new offices, library, and meeting room at the Gardens on a site which cost them nothing. They could then proceed at once with the most important improvements in the Gardens, develop their vacant land, and still leave the Society unburdened by debt. The council were fully aware that the proposed new buildings would be built upon ground which was held at the pleasure of the Crown. Upon that point Dr. Chalmers Mitchell read a letter, in which Mr. Harcourt expressed his view that the security of tenure of the Society in Regent's Park depended, not upon the terms of the lease, but upon the approval of the public of the conduct by the Society of its collection. Lord Cromer, in support of the change, said that the council's recommendation to the Fellows was absolutely unanimous. Scientific interests would gain many compensating advantages. From 1911 onwards they would secure an annual surplus of £6,000 a year. They proposed that of this amount £2,000 a year should, until 1921, be devoted to a cumulative sinking fund, which, it was calculated, would at the end of that period amount to £25,000. Thus, £4,000 a year would at once—that was to say, from 1911 onwards— be available for general purposes, notably the improvement and increase of their scientific publications, the assistance of zoological exploration and collection, and the general development of the scientific work of the Gardens. After a long discussion the committee's proposal was agreed to by a large majority.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 7th May 1909.

The opening of the Academy on Monday marked the commencement of the London season proper. This year's exhibition contains fewer pictures than usual. In all 1,838 works of art are exposed to the eyes of visitors, who will pay something between £20,000 and £30,000 in shillings for the privilege of viewing the 1908 output of the nation's representative artists and sculptors. In the eleven galleries there are to be seen 749 oil paintings. Sculpture exhibits total 208, and water-colours, architectural drawings, miniatures, etchings, drawings, and engravings bring up the grand total to 1,828, of which the great majority will have little interest for the general public. But on the whole it is a good year.

Portraiture and landscape—the only two forms of art in which English painters really excel—are the conspicuous mainstay of this year's Academy. Of sacred art scarcely an example is to be discovered and allegory can boast of very few devotees. Even the President achieves his greatest success in portraiture. It is noteworthy that the veteran Academician, Mr. James Sant, completes an unbroken cycle of seventy years successive appearances on these walls with three charming pictures.

Mr. Sargent's pictures are, of course, surrounded by admiring crowds; his art is represented among the portraits of beautiful women by his "Mrs. Astor," a graceful and clever piece of work. But the master is greatest this year in "Cashmere," a procession of young girls, each clad in a white Cashmere shawl. The faces and figures are exquisitely done, and the picture will be one of the exhibition's chief attractions.

* * * * * *

Subject-pictures are numerous, but there is only one notable problem-picture, "The Eleventh Commandment," not by the Hon. John Collier of "The Cheat" fame, but by Mr. F. Howard Michael. There are three figures in the picture, and one is a woman. She has risen suddenly from the table at which she has been supping with a young man, who looks up at her in astonishment. Her features are distraught with terror. Behind her is a mirror in which she is reflected, and beyond her reflection is that of a grave elderly man (her husband?) who is standing in the doorway of the room.

The Hon. John Collier's main contribution this year is not a problem-picture, but a charming work called "The Land-Baby." A tiny girl with flaxen curls is coming over the sands from a cave to meet a mermaid, whose face expresses yearning and delight. The pearls of moisture on the mermaid's flesh are marvellously realistic.

Many people will doubtless admire Mr. Herbert Draper's "Ulysses and the Sirens" in Gallery IV. Ulysses stands bound to the mast, and one of his men is pulling hard at the rope wound several times round the chieftain's body, which, in his struggles, he has contrived to loosen. Four other men are rowing fiercely and unevenly. A mermaid leans on the bulwark in the fore-ground, and two human sirens are perched upon the stern of the vessel; all three are singing. Ulysses alone can hear the sirens song, which maddens him. The movement, form, and colouring, and especially the brilliant flesh tints, are superb.

Two portraits of "His Highness the Jam of Nawanagar," famous as "Ranji," are placed where they can be best compared; one is by Mr. Henry S. Tuke, the other by Mr. H. Weigall. For sheer gorgeousness nothing can beat Mr. Tuke's portrait; "Ranji" seems to have stepped straight out of the Arabian Nights into the gallery.

The pastime of roller skating continues unabated. the clink of the rink seems destined to be heard throughout the summer, and there can be no doubt it is a good game for the promoters, judging by figures published last week. Operating for an average of five months, rinks in all parts of the country in which £250,000 have been invested, paid dividends at the

THE budget and matters connected therewith continue to be the common talk and a gold mine for the papers hard up for "Copy." But our suspense is over, and the proposals are before us. Personally I am delighted to be able to say that I come out nearly quits. Not having a motor, I am subject to no new taxation though my baccy cost me a half-penny per ounce more than it did a week ago and spirits have gone up a penny a glass or six pence per bottle, but as I still stick to the beer drinking habit contracted in the East this troubles me not at all. The death duty on incomes exceeding £800,000 looked threatening at first sight, but after calm reflection I have decided that it will not materially affect either myself or posterity.

WE are looking forward to the opening, on the 20th instant, of the Imperial International Exhibition. The Duke of Argyll is to perform the ceremony and from all one can gather the spot whereon the White City of last year stands is likely to be again tramped flat by millions of visitors British and foreign. The show will present to the public a combination of beautiful gardens, charming music, exhibits which are both interesting and educational, including those from the various Government Departments, and a number of shows and attractions such as has never been previously placed before them; at least that is what the foreword leads one to infer. That this exhibition shall provide a display of exhibits from the whole civilized world and strengthen the friendship of nations is the great aim of the Kiralty family who are acting as Deputy Commissioners. Enormous sums are being expended in working up and forming new roads. Trams will run to all parts of the grounds. Ten acres have been added to the area of the exhibition grounds and now more than ever will such travelling be appreciated. There are to be twenty bands a day, a Garden Club, an exhibition of rare paintings, side shows of endless variety—educational, sensational, funny or weird—on the approved old Earls' Court lines, and once again we are to see the pick of the world's athletes competing in the Stadium events. But of all this more anon.

IN "The Arcadians" (a fantastic musical play, in three acts, by Mark Ambient and A. M. Thompson, lyrics by Arthur Wimperis, music by Lionel Monckton and Howard Talbot) there is little of a story, but in this, as in many other musical comedies, the songs, quips, cranks, and dresses are the thing, and these combined to make last Wednesday's production at the Shaftesbury a brilliant success. The attempt of Arcadians to convert England to the truth and the simple life provides the story, and from Arcady they drop to a racecourse, Askwood, where the running of a certain brute, The Deuce—of whom his jockey says: "Heads he bites me, tails he kicks me off"—gives the hero the opportunity of his life, and the uniting of Jack Meadows, the hero (Mr. H. E. Pearce), and Eileen Cavanagh (Miss Phyllis Dare) completes the happiness of the company. Mr. Dan Rolyat as James Smith and Simplicitas is a farce by himself, and he, with Mr. Alfred Lester as Peter Doody, the most mirth-provoking jockey who ever lost a race, made a humorous combination that kept the audience in a roar. Peter declared that all his mounts were too polite—they were eternally shouting to the other horses, "After you!" The Deuce was "a horse of blasted hopes," declared Peter. Of how he kept down his weight Peter was confidential and he declared with great emotion to Mrs. Smith after a cheerful talk about that lady's diet predilections "Good-bye, Maria; I am glad I met you, for this talk about grub is the nearest approach to a square meal that I have had for sixteen years." His lot, however, was not so hard as that of one of his friends, who had to bite his nails to make the proper weight.

Mr. H. E. Pearce sang in a rich voice, and exemplified the contention that "Pluck will pull you through." Miss Ada Blanche as Mrs. Smith was extremely clever; a sweet Arcadian was Miss May Kinder; and as Sombra, Miss Florence Smithson's every action and word was artistic. Miss Phyllis Dare scored one of the successes of her career as Eileen Cavanagh. She sang and danced delightfully. Mr. Nelson Keys and Sir George Paddock made capital racing men, the latter finding what the former declared:—

"There's many a slip between the tip
And the horse that wins the Cup."

MR. G. R. SIMS styles melodrama the beefsteak of the British theatre. And because Mr. Seymour Hicks believes so thoroughly that there is a big field for such fare he has begun a season with popular melodrama at the Aldwych. Judging by the way "One of the Best" was received last week, his judgment is sound. For the play which proved so popular at the Adelphi something like thirteen years ago held everyone's attention and was received with the gratest of enthusiasm.

"One of the Best," it must be confessed, strikes the eye and the ear as a little old-fashioned nowadays, but it retains all the old grip, life and "go." And the renewed success it made on Saturday was in no small measure due to the excellence of the cast. Where a finer hero than Mr. Henry Ainley? Both in voice and in bearing he was essentially "one of the best;" also, there was Mr. Henry Nicholls to play the "comic interlude." The rest of a strong cast made the most of their opportunities, and the revival was a complete success.

TWO distinct classes of people composed the great audience that assembled at Covent Garden for "La Traviata" and Mme. Tetrazzini's first appearance this season—those drawn there by the fame the diva won for herself last year and those who realised that it is this present season which will decide whether her London reputation is to become an unchallengeable one. Mme. Tetrazzini satisfied both. Nervous at the outset, she was inclined to sing sharp, and her voice seemed to lack something of freshness. But her brilliant rendering of "Ah, fors e lui" affected the house as it did on the occasion of her memorable début, and for the rest of the evening she revelled in the florid passages which reveal the full qualities of her voice.

A DOMESTIC OCCURRENCE which arrested my eye and raised a smile the other day. That the birth at the Palace, Durbhungah, of a son "to the Junior Maharani of the Hon'ble the Maharaja Bahadur" should be announced in the columns of the Times, beside births at Cricklewood and Muswell Hill, is certainly a sign of the kinship of all within the Empire. The wealthy, little, titled zemindar is, if I mistake not, the brother of the rotund founder of the raj, whose crest, appropriately chosen, is a hilsa fish; the same who in the days of Colonel Money's management, and the late Lord William Beresford's guidance, not only raced on a large scale, but was a liberal patron of the turf. It seems ages since I heard of a Durbhungah Cup or a few shekels from the Nergowna coffers for the sport so dear to all Beharis.

His three sons fought in the South African War, and one of them was subsequently killed by a leopard in Africa.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.

THE number of books on birds and bird-lore published during the past few years has been so great that it would have been thought that the subject had been practically worked out, at any rate for the present, and that it would have been impossible to produce a volume with sufficient original matter to justify its publication.

In the case of the Indian ducks, with the works of Jerdon, Hume and Marshall, and the fourth Volume of Birds in the "Fauna of British India" series, to mention only a few, it would have been thought that our knowledge was fairly up to date, and that but little fresh information could be added. Throughout the cold weather all over our Eastern Empire innumerable sportsmen are, and have been for more than a century past, out day after day gun in hand taking their toll from the thousands of water-fowl that throng our jheels. It would have seemed as if it must have been impossible for any new forms to be recorded, or fresh data to be put forward, at any rate of sufficient interest to warrant another work on the subject. The most cursory glance, however, through Mr. Stuart-Baker's new book shows at once how mistaken this idea has been, and how fully justified he was in bringing up-to-date an information concerning one of the most interesting classes of birds.

Probably no one in India at the present time—we might almost say or out of it either—is so well qualified to undertake the task as the author.

Mr. Stuart-Baker has been working on the Indian Birds—more particularly on those of the Assam side—for many years past, and his labours and discoveries have gained for him a well-deserved reputation, not only here but also in Europe and America. Furthermore, he is a sportsman, and no mere museum specialist, and is hence able to clothe the dry bones of scientific data in the garments of personal experience.

The various chapters first appeared in the Bombay Natural story Society's Journal, but many felt that it would be a great advantage to have them in a more compact form, and, yielding to the pressure of fellow ornithologists, the author undertook the task of re-editing and bringing his notes up to date, the result being the present volume.

As Mr. Stuart-Baker remarks in his preface:—"The present book aims at being a corrected, up-to-date edition of those papers, and incorporates, as far as possible, the additional information received since they were brought out."

A perusal of the leaves will show what a mass of comparatively recent information has been obtained concerning the Indian Ducks. Mr. Stuart-Baker happened to be stationed in a particularly interesting part of the Empire—from an ornithological point of view—as the Assam forms tend towards, or are closely allied to, those of China and the East, and much new matter was sure to be unearthed by anyone who took advantage of it. That Mr. Stuart-Baker did not let the grass grow under his feet is now well-known, and he has let in many a ray of light upon dark places in our knowledge of birds and their distribution.

Much still remains to be done, far more than the ordinary bird-lover is aware of. In India proper, he is certainly unlikely to unearth many new species, but some of those recorded are comparatively little known, and of a considerable number of details concerning their actual distribution, nidification, phases of plumage and other disiderata are incomplete.

Naturally those who live in the more remote stations, or on the frontier—whether it be on the Persian, Central Asian, or Chinese side—have greater opportunities.

It may interest naturalists and sportsmen generally to learn that our knowledge of the occurrence of the various species of geese and swans is still very limited. The former are well-known to most in the forms of the Grey-Lag (Anser ferus or rubrirostris) and the Bar-headed goose. (A. indicus). The latter is too distinct to be mistaken, but amongst the numerous grey-lags that fall to the gun it is probably that now and again some will turn out to be one or other of the nine other closely allied species given by Mr. Stuart-Baker in a "key." To quote the author:—"Any sportsman who may obtain a Bean-goose, i.e., a goose with a black nail to its bill, should at once forward the whole skin, if possible—if not the head and neck—to the Bombay Natural History Society for identification. He should note in detail the colourations of the bill and feet immediately he gets it: and if the colours of the former change after death he should note this also. The length of the wing should also be added."

A good look out should be kept for the two white-pointed geese, i.e., birds with a good deal of white on the forehead round the base of the bill. Such a bird with a wing over 15 inches will probably prove to be A. albifrons, and if under 15 inches A. erythropus.

Mr. Stuart-Baker seems to have been very fortunate with the geese. One of his collectors obtained a specimen of Anser brachyrhynchus, the Pink-footed goose, a bird which has only been found in India on some five or six occasions. He and Dr. Mundy both came across the Red-breasted goose (Rufibrenta ruficollis) on more than one occasion on the Brahmapootra. It is curious that this species should be first recorded from the eastern portion of the country: it occurs in Persia and Turkistan and might be expected to visit India through the west and north-west passes. Sushkin's goose (A. neglectus) and Middendorff's goose (A. Middendorffi) are also added to our Indian list, but unfortunately the author gives hardly any details as to their occurrence.

Turning to the ducks proper we find that the Eastern Grey Duck (Anas zonorhyncha) begins to take the place of our better known Spotbill (A. poecilorhyncha). Not apparently until 1899 was its presence definitely noted, when it was recorded by the Asian correspondent at Kentung. Messrs. Moore and Mundy got several specimens at Dibrugarh from 1902 onwards, and Mr. Stuart-Baker not only obtained a number of birds, but also took the eggs. It is not likely to occur very far to the westward, but for those who might possibly come across the species it should be noted that in the Eastern form the two red spots at the base of the bill are wanting, and the speculum is blue instead of green.

Another bird that has an Eastern form is the White-eye. The Eastern White-eye (Nyroca baeri) may be distinguished from the common bird by the head and neck of the male being almost black instead of chestnut. The females are more alike but in N. baeri the head and neck are more or less mixed with blackish. The bird is moreover somewhat larger than its western congener.

Birds are often apt to be overlooked by a sportsman, unless he happens at the same time to be a field naturalist. The Bronze-capped Teal (Eunetta falcata) had until recently only been recorded some eight or ten times, but Mr. Stuart-Baker's notes seem to imply that it should not prove to be so rare in those portions of the Empire which border on China, and as not long ago a bird was obtained in Sind, it is a possible, though not probable, find throughout Northern India.

The Marbled Teal (Marmaronetta angustirostris) used to be looked upon as very rare east of Sind. It certainly is not common, but I fancy it occurs much more frequently to the eastward than is commonly supposed. I have shot it on more than one occasion near Lucknow, and in the Ganges Kadir near Meerut, and in the latter locality I have seen others. On several occasions friends have sent me this duck to be identified.

Mr. Stuart-Baker seems to have had the luck to come across the Scaup (Fuligula marila), and the Golden-eye [Clangula glaucion] both northern forms that rarely visit our Indian Empire.

Another rare duck which has been more frequently recorded of late—due doubtless to better observation—is the White-headed or Stiff-tailed Duck (Eri-matura leucocephala). In addition to the instances recorded I may add that the Rev. J. Gompertz sent me a specimen from near Roorkee, and my friend Mr. Gale of the P. W. D. came across two or three, and shot one on the Mozuffarnagar jheel between Meerut and Saharanpur.

A great deal more might have been quoted from this new work, but sufficient has been taken to show the thoroughness with which the author has completed his task. Many of us, knowing his powers as a sportsman as well as a naturalist, may wish that Mr. Stuart-Baker had given us a few more personal reminiscences and experiences, but he has thought it better to restrict his letterpress to hard facts, and the result is a most interesting and illuminating volume. The whole get-up is first-class. One wishes it were possible to say the same for the plates, the quality of which is very mixed. Some—notably those by Lodge—are good, but others are hard and crude. The Eastern White-eye bears very little resemblance to the western bird, and moreover the scales in these two cases are so different that comparison is difficult. Touching the question of the scale of the illustrations it seems unfortunate that the various artists did not work on some definite plan. To take the case of the Pochards, the White-eye, Tufted Duck, and Red-crested Pochard are all depicted ½ full size while the Eastern White-eye is 2/5 and the Dun-bird ⅔. The Common Teal is drawn ½, while the Garganay and Andaman Teal are ½. Then again the scale at which the Pin-tail, and the Gadwall have been drawn makes it difficult to compare them with other ducks, the illustrations of both these birds in fact being smaller than those of the Garganay. Only one goose (A. albifrons) is shown. It would have been convenient to have had at least one of the Bean-geese for comparison.

In the case of the Swans the heads are reproduced, and it would have been most useful had the same been done with the geese. A few wood-cuts to illustrate local differences would have been helpful.

However, the "keys" given by the author are very clear, and, with their aid, the various species ought to be identified without much difficulty. Where any doubt exists, the Bombay Natural History Society, or the Indian Museum authorities, will be only too glad to render their assistance.

Stuart-Baker's "Indian Ducks" is a volume which every Indian ornithologist ought to possess: the style in which it is written is clear and interesting; the type and paper are good; and the whole get-up makes it an acquisition to any library. The author has our unstinted praise and deserves our sincerest congratulations. Let us hope that what he has done for the Indian Ducks he may be persuaded to do for the other water-fowl of our Eastern Empire.

Shikar.

MAINLY ABOUT PANTHERS

Much has been written and spoken on the subject of shooting over a kill, and there are many who decry this form of shikar as unsportsmanlike. Be that as it may, there can be fewer more fascinating sights than the cautious approach of the tiger to the kill, which he has half devoured, or the lightning-like spring of the panther as it seizes the unfortunate goat which has been tied as a bait.

As regards the question of whether this method of shooting is sportsmanlike, or the reverse, my own view is that this question can only be answered with reference to the person of the shikari. There is one type of sportsman, who, whether he shoots his quarry in a beat, or over a kill, never fairly earns his reward. This is the type of man, who having obtained the services of a clever shikari, leaves everything to him, and merely takes up his position when everything has been prepared. All that he does is to hold the rifle straight, or otherwise, at the critical moment. Is such a man a better sportsman, when he has a tiger driven up to him, by a crowd of unarmed beaters, than when he shoots it over a kill?

The other type of sportsman, is the man who is not content to leave all arrangements to his subordinates. He will personally choose the spot where the bait is to be tied, and when there is a kill, will himself go out to ring the tiger, and locate him in his lair if there is to be a beat, or will supervise the building of a machan if he decides to sit up for the beast on its return to the kill.

All this means very hard work, especially in the hot weather, but there are many compensations. The sportsman will acquire an intimate knowledge of the denizens of the jungles, and however he kills his tiger, whether in a beat or over a kill, or by one of those rare chances when the tiger is found and shot on the kill in the early morning, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that by the sweat of his forehead, he has fairly earned his trophy.

One drawback that is often urged against shooting from a machan, is the tediousness of the waiting. To a certain extent this is unavoidable, but in the case of panthers, provided the arrangements are good, it will seldom be necessary to wait for more than a couple of hours.

The position of the machan should be selected before the bait is tied, and it should be fairly close to cover in which the panther can lie up during the day. If the tie is in the open near a village, the panther can hardly be expected to return to its kill until after dark. A goat is, of course, the best bait for a panther, and it is advisable to tie a pair of them together. If only a single goat is tied, it will frequently happen that a panther will devour the whole of it in a single night. If a pair of goats are tied together, there will always be enough left to bring the panther back a second time; and unless disturbed, a panther almost invariably returns to its kill.

It is necessary to tie the goats securely, otherwise the panther will drag them off to some thick cover, where it may not be possible to find a satisfactory position for a machan.

Having seen the machan prepared a live goat should be picketted near the kill. The advantages of this plan are two-fold. In the first place the panther will be attracted by the bleating of the goat and will very likely turn up earlier than it otherwise would: in the second place the panther's whole attention will be taken up in stalking the goat, and it will be far less likely to spot the hidden sportsman. A panther approaching a kill, will constantly stop and look round to make sure that all is right. If there is a live goat tied up, the panther has eyes only for its victim.

In many cases the sportsman has no warning of the approach of the panther. A noiseless approach to within a few yards is followed by a lightning spring, and the goat is lying beneath the fangs of its destroyer. Occasionally, however, the proceedings are varied. I have seen a panther rush out at a goat, miss its spring and dash off as swiftly as it had come. In about a minute it was back again, and sitting down on its haunches, it surveyed the goat quietly from a distance of six or eight yards. Satisfied with the survey, the brute then proceeded to walk slowly up to its victim. The goat, which at the first rush, had retired to the full extent of the short rope by which it was secured, now advanced to meet the panther, poking out its nose towards it as if fascinated. All this time I had been sitting in my machan on the ground within five yards of the goat, but unable to make any movement lest the panther should spot me; and it was not until the brute was right opposite the loop-hole, that I was in a position to fire. As the rifle was thrust through the loop-hole, the panther and goat were standing with their noses almost touching. There was to be no spring upon the goat: the panther had realised the helpless condition of its victim, and was about to walk up to it and seize it in a most cool and blood-thirsty fashion. Before, however, the brute could achieve its purpose the sights had been brought to bear on it, and though it noticed the slight movement and looked round, it was not in time to escape the bullet which laid it low.

On another occasion, I have seen a panther rush out at a goat, check itself when in the act of springing, and stand quietly surveying its victim. It would seem that a panther takes a pleasure in gloating over the helpless condition of an animal which cannot escape, just as a cat will play with a mouse which it has caught, before killing it.

The method adopted by panthers in killing their prey is a subject of some interest. The tiger as a rule breaks the neck, while the panther frequently strangles its victim by retaining a firm grip of the throat until life is extinct. Blandford says, "I am disposed to believe that they frequently (leopards) either tear open the throat, or hold it in their jaws and strangle their victim.". Several instances of the latter method of killing have come to my notice. On one occasion I was sitting up over a half-grown kid in a machan about ten feet from the ground. The ground was perfectly clear, having been under cultivation, and as the kid was only five yards from the foot of my machan, everything that occurred was distinctly visible by the light of a moon that was within a day or two of being full. About 7 P.M., without any warning of its approach, the panther suddenly sprang on the kid, and seized it by the throat. The kid was not thrown down, but remained standing, while the panther, sitting in front of it, held it by the throat. They remained thus for about half a minute, and then the kid fell over, the panther retaining its hold. While this was taking place, I had brought my rifle to my shoulder, but under the shadow of the tree, it was not easy to find the foresight. As I moved the muzzle gently to and fro trying to catch one of the rays of moonlight which were flittering through the leaves, the panther suddenly caught the slight movement, and dashed off before I had time to fire, nor did it ever return. Altogether the panther had the kid's throat in its jaws for about three fourths of a minute or perhaps a little more. The kid lay as if dead, as I naturally supposed it to be, but after several minutes, rose into a kneeling position, and shortly after got on to its feet again. Next day it was quite well, and I was astonished to find that the panther's teeth had not penetrated through the skin, and had left merely slight superficial wounds. Two days later I was sitting up again for a panther. This time my machan was in a clump of bamboos on the ground, and the same kid, chosen because of its vocal powers, was tethered at a distance of five paces. Shortly after moonrise the panther appeared and sprang on the kid, when the same scene as before was enacted. On first springing on its victim, the panther had placed one of its paws on the neck of the kid, but only retained it thus till it had obtained a firm grip of the throat. As on the previous occasion, the kid remained standing, while the panther sat in front of it, holding it by the throat, and the pair were in this position when I fired. On this occasion the panther had the kid's throat in its jaws for about fifteen seconds, and as before there were very slight marks on the skin. The kid was none the worse for having been twice in the very jaws of death.

Perhaps even more extraordinary than these two incidents was the case of a panther beginning its meal on a goat before life was extinct. A goat had been tied up about a mile from my bungalow, and one morning a man came running up to say that he had found the goat partly eaten but alive. Of course it never struck him to put the poor brute out of pain.

On arriving at the spot, I found that the goat was now dead. The panther had only just commenced his meal when interrupted, and had taken one or two mouthfuls of flesh from the thighs. There were slight marks on the throat of the goat, and no other wounds, It was evident that the panther had seized and throttled the goat in the manner above described, and probably because he was in a hurry to begin his feed before daybreak, had not troubled to finish off his victim before commencing his meal.

Three recent experiences must bring this article to a close. The first has already been related in the journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, and the account there given may be quoted here.

I was sitting up over the carcase of a bullock which had been killed by a panther about one hundred yards from a village. Just as the last remnants of daylight were fading away, I saw three or four village buffaloes approach, and began grazing within twenty yards of the kill. As I was watching the buffaloes, I suddenly made out the form of the panther beside the dead bullock. Simultaneously one of the buffaloes spotted it, and snorting loudly, advanced towards it. The panther immediately decamped, and the buffalo thereupon went on grazing. In a minute or two the panther returned and lay down beside the carcase, in which position I could no longer make it out. Presently the buffalo grazed up to within five yards of the kill: as it took no notice of the panther, I concluded that the brute had sneaked off unnoticed by me. At this moment, however, I heard a crunch as the panther commenced to feed. The buffalo looked up and advanced a pace towards the kill. The panther continued its meal, and the buffalo, after a prolonged stare, went on grazing paying no more attention to the panther than if it were a pariah dog. It was actually grazing within five yards of the brute, and broadside on to it. For the next twenty minutes or so the buffalo remained grazing unconcernedly within fifty yards of the kill. The other buffaloes seemed to take no interest in the proceedings though I could hear them moving about in the vicinity. The buffalo's behaviour seems inexplicable: being so close to the panther, I should have expected it to show some signs of excitement and either charge or decamp. The absolute indifference which it exhibited was most extraordinary.

A few weeks after this incident, I had another unusual insight into the ways of the jungle folk. A panther having killed and half devoured a buffalo, I had sat up for it, but as the brute had not turned up by 8 o'clock, I had returned to camp, leaving another buffalo tied up beside the dead one. Next morning the second buffalo was found killed, with a little eaten off the neck. Four o'clock saw me once more in the machan, and this time I was prepared for an all night watch. All the conditions were favourable. It was the middle of April, and being camped in an elevated tract, the temperature was just right for a night in the jungle. The machan was built in a leafy tree and well concealed by the foliage: the ground round the kill was absolutely devoid of cover for a distance of fifteen paces: finally the moon was full, and there was not a cloud in the sky. Till 8 o'clock there was no sign of the panther's return. In the hills which surrounded me on all sides but one the peacocks were calling loudly from their perches, sometimes singly, more often in discordant chorus which echoed far in the silence of the night. From the more open jungle along the margin of the cultivated fields, came ever and anon the loud challenge of a cheetal stag.

Suddenly the bark of a sambhur rang out loud and clear, and continued in a manner that has only one meaning to the sportman's ear. The panther was on the prowl, but its approach was marked by great caution, and it was not till another half hour had passed that a low rumbling growl proclaimed its arrival. I lay perfectly still, waiting to hear the brute start feeding before I ventured to raise myself in the machan. After waiting for another half hour, my patience became exhausted, and I cautiously peered from the loophole. Some twenty paces away an object at once caught my eye. My field glasses were quickly focussed on it, and so greatly did they magnify it at that short distance, that at first I took it to be a tiger. The panther as it actually was, had probably been lying there for some time, but having had a meal the two previous nights, was in no hurry to start feeding. As I watched, the brute raised its head, and gazed for some seconds at the moon, now high in the heavens, as if admiring the silvery orb. At last it crept forward a few paces, lay down again, and then approached and stood beside the kill.

I had so placed the dead buffalo, that when the panther began to feed at the usual place, the belly between the hind legs, it would offer me a broadside shot. The panther's first move, however, upset this scheme: it seized the kill and dragged it round, so that when it started to feed, it was facing me, and half concealed behind the buffalo's body. Even with a full moon the shot thus offered was by no means an easy one, and as I was greatly interested in watching the panther through the glasses, I waited for a more favourable opportunity. It was most interesting to watch its method of eating The buffalo was lying on its side, and the panther put its head between the hind legs, and started gnawing at the belly, with the upper leg of the buffalo pressing on its head. After gnawing away the skin between the legs, the panther was able to force back the leg which was pressing its head, and holding it down with one paw, continued its meal in greater comfort.

After watching for about half an hour without seeing a more favourable opportunity for a shot, I determined to take the panther as it lay, and raised myself gently in the machan. Unfortunately a branch creaked, and in an instant the panther had ceased feeding, and was gazing intently at my tree. I remained perfectly quiet, but the brute's suspicions were aroused, and it suddenly turned and sneaked off.

This was bad. I knew, however, that the panther could not have seen me through the screen of the machan, and came to the conclusion that it was worth staying on in hopes of its return.

About 10 o'clock I was wakened from a light slumber by the sounds of some animal at the kill, and looking out, saw a hyena feeding where the panther had left off. I watched for a bit, and then dozed off again. The hyena continued steadily feeding, and at 11 o'clock there was still no sign of the panther's return. Had the machan been less comfortable or the night less perfect for watching, I should have been tempted to give the hyena a charge of slugs, and have something to show for my night watch. However I determined to see it out.

Another half hour passed, when I was suddenly awakened to full consciousness by hearing the hyena making a most extraordinary noise, a sort of prolonged "Hoo, hoo, hoo," rising and falling, and so astonishingly human, that on first hearing the sound in my sleepy condition, I thought it was the voice of a man. The hyena was running round and round uttering its weird cry, while the cause of alarm, the panther, was standing quietly surveying the scene from a distance of some 15 paces. I expected to see the panther drive away the intruder, and was amazed to see the hyena suddenly return to the kill, and proceed with its interrupted meal. The panther watched it for a few seconds, and then turned and walked off.

After some twenty minutes more, the hyena had apparently satisfied its hunger, and trotted off. A few minutes later I saw a form approaching, which the glasses showed to be the panther. It lay for a few moments under the shadow of a tree, and then came up to the kill and began to feed.

The shot was still rather an awkward one, the panther being partially concealed behind the buffalo, but it was obviously useless to wait for a better opportunity. A few drops of oil of phosphorous poured on the foresight made it show up distinctly, and it was not difficult to feel fairly certain of hitting the panther somewhere. At the shot, the brute rolled over, growling fiercely, but recovered and dashed off before a second shot could be fired.

My men were but half a mile away, and in a quarter of an hour, I was seated on my elephant, prepared for the novel experience of following up a wounded panther at 1 A.M., by the light of a full moon. The jungle was open and devoid of undergrowth, and a search of a few hundred yards along the line taken by the panther could do no harm, and might save a rearn to the spot at a later hour.

The elephant which I was riding, a fine tusker, was reported to be staunch, but of this I had my doubts, and the uncertainty as to how he would behave lent an additional excitement. I had fired at the panther with a ·500 High Velocity Rifle; but I now took in hand my 12-bore with slugs, as being a more suitable weapon for the task in hand: this weapon I could, if necessary, wield with one hand, leaving the other free to hold on to the pad ropes if the elephant misbehaved. A small dry water—course, less than 5 yards in width, ran in the direction taken by the panther. Along this the elephant was driven, while I examined the ground carefully with my glasses. After proceeding thus for about 100 yards, the panther was descried lying on the opposite bank of the nullah. The elephant approached and halted directly opposite, but the panther took no notice of us, though the heaving flanks showed that life was not yet extinct. A charge of slugs fired into its head extinguished the last sparks of life. The elephant had behaved splendidly, and he now raised no objection to having the panther padded on his back. Thus ended a most interesting night watch, and even the most inveterate opponent of this form of sport, cannot but admit that more is learnt of the inner life of the jungles in a single night such as I have described, than in a hundred beats.

Another panther experience is of interest as a typical instance of the boldness of which these brutes are sometimes capable, and also because an electric flash light was successfully used.

A panther had killed and partially devoured a foal close to the police lines in the village of K. The country for some distance round was almost entirely devoid of cover, but there was one patch of dense Lantana like bushes in which panthers used not infrequently to lie up.

The kill was about 20 paces from the nearest house at the corner of the lines, and lay on bare open ground, the panther having made no attempt to drag it away to cover.

Parallel with the lines was a row of young Silver Oaks, each protected by the usual wattle fence, some 4 feet in diameter and 3½ feet in height. One of these was taken up, and planted some ten yards nearer the kill: loopholes were cut in the wattle, some straw was strewn on the ground inside, and an ideal hiding place was the result.

A little after sunset I took up my position. In front of me, on an office stool, was a small but powerful electric lamp, on a level with one of the loop holes: by my side was a 12 bore loaded with slugs, a more suitable weapon than a rifle for this kind of work. Some ten paces away was the half-eaten carcase, while the same distance behind me was the first house in the lines, throughout the whole length of which an incessant chattering was kept up by the constables and their families.

I was quite prepared for a lengthy watch, and hardly expected that the panther would turn up before 10 o'clock: nevertheless it was but little after 7-30, when I heard a crunch, which announced that the panther had already returned and commenced his meal. It was quite dark, and though I could dimly make out the carcase of the foal, the panther was quite invisible.

This was an occasion on which a third hand would have been invaluable. As it was I had to manipulate the gun and the lamp simultaneously, the former with my right hand, the latter with my left. Aiming in the direction in which I judged the panther to be, I touched the screw on the lamp which completed the circuit. As the light flashed out, it disclosed the form of the panther, standing broadside on, gazing at what it probably took for an unusually long drawn out flash of lightning. Before he had made up his mind as to the true nature of the light, the trigger was pressed, and with a loud "Wough," "Wough," the stricken brute dashed off into the darkness.

The panther was left for the night, and next morning was discovered lying dead about 100 yards from where he had been shot. Unfortunately the jackals had discovered the body, and by some strange perversity had preferred to gnaw the skin, rather than gorge themselves on the half-eaten foal which lay so near.

THE SCIENTIFIC PUTTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The average golfer does not devote half as much pains to putting, as this very important part of the game deserves. One of the principal reasons for this is that the putter of commerce is such a poorly constructed club, that getting command of both direction and strength with it, is an exceedingly difficult matter. Some little time ago I began to get dissatisfied with my putter, which was one of the straight-faced, goose-necked kind, which are now so very generally used. To begin with, the straight face is of no use except on very perfect greens; any little inequality of the surface makes the ball deviate to one side. It is necessary to give the ball an under-spin, which will tend to make it keep to the line along which it is despatched; the spin acts gyroscopically upon the ball, so that it runs straight in spite of the inequalities of the green. Then it is necessary to have a line drawn on the top of the club exactly at right angles to the face. And now comes a very important point: one that the ordinary golf club maker knows absolutely nothing at all about: the line must meet the face just at the centre of percussion. The centre of percussion is easily found by tapping the club face against some object, until from the clear sound, and absence of all tendency to twist, one is obviously using the most efficient part of the face to tap with. The principle is just the same as with a sword: to make the most powerful blow possible, it is necessary that the edge should meet the object cut at, near the centre of percussion, which is marked on a blade with an engraved arrow.

Having then got a line marked on the upper surface of the club, at right angles to the face, and passing through the centre of percussion, one can make it permanent by letting in a piece of flattened brass wire. The way I have found best, is to make a fine cut with a tenon saw, and then widen, or under-cut it, at the bottom with a fret saw; so that the wire can be slid in a tight fit, and once in cannot come out, owing to its groove being narrower at the top than at the bottom.

This wire line is all important in giving true direction to the hole. When putting, the player stands over his club head, looking down on the flat upper surface: it is easy then to point the line straight at the hole; and having placed the club almost touching the ball, one then, having settled the direction satisfactorily, thinks no more of the hole, but concentrates the attention on the ball, and swings the putter the right amount, striking the centre of the ball with the point of the line. It is extraordinary what confidence one feels, when armed with a putter of the kind described. The four and five foot putts, which are such an anxiety with the ordinary putter, become certainties.

One can easily make one's own putter out of a bit of good old beech wood: nothing can be better for the purpose than an old jack plane; a short time ago I picked up a discarded jack plane in a second-hand shop, for nine pence, and out of it have made some beautiful putters. As to weight, this varies according to individual fancy, but the addition of eight to nine ounces of lead to the putter head, will make it weigh about three-quarters of a pound, which with four ounces for the shaft, makes the total weight of the finished club just about a pound. If this is found too much it is easy to take some of the lead out, with a gouge.

So many, otherwise fair golfers, spoil their rounds by poor putting, that I make no apology for my somewhat prolix explanation. With such a putter as described, an ordinary player can, after a little practice, be practically certain of always holing out in two, once he is on the green. It is hardly necessary to point out that the lofted face should be a true plane, and the line accurately at right angles to it. Useful dimensions for a beech wood putter, are 4½ inches long, 1⅞ to 2 inches broad, and 1¼ to 1½ inches deep. The shaft enters the club close up to one end, not nearly in the middle, as in the case of some of the aluminium putters made nowadays.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

THE WELLINGTON RACES.

First Day, Thursday, 20th May 1909.

In days gone by Wellington was looked upon as an important racing centre, but after the departure of Mr. C. B. Kindersley, the races were in a state of decline and now the meetings are nothing more than mere gymkhana races. One cause that good racers could not have been induced to compete for the different stakes was undoubtedly the poor prizes that were offered. At this time of the year when there are no races taking place anywhere if good prizes were offered no doubt the events would have attracted good racers from all stables. Wellington has a splendid mild climate and it has a good course, and as the meeting takes place after the Ooty and before the Mysore meetings, if the sporting fraternity of Wellington will contribute liberally towards the new fund, the Wellington races can be revived. The first day's meeting opened to-day in fine weather and in the presence of a larger gathering of the elite, including the Maharajah of Vizianagram. Mr. R. K. Walters did the judging, Mr. W. L. Edmiston acted as Starter, Mr. L. L. Porter as Clerk of the Scales, while Major Clements, R. A. M. C., filled with credit the duty of the secretary. There were two bookies, Mr. Dufferies and a Parsee from Bombay, while the totalizator was run by the Military. Towards evening the proceedings were enlivened by the Band of the 13th Hussars. It was a bad day for the bookies for in all the races the favourites won easily. The following are the details :—

Second Day, Saturday, 22nd May 1909.

The second and last day's racing came off last evening in fine weather and in the presence of a large and representative gathering including Their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, H. H. the Gaekwar of Baroda, H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore, Rajas of Vizianagram and Cochin, H. H. the Maharajah of Holkar and a fair number of the sporting fraternity. In almost all the races the favourites did not win, thus the bookies had a good time and made up of the loss they sustained at a previous day's meeting. The 13th Hussars and the Border Regimental Bands played at intervals and enlivened the proceedings. The card presented six races besides a match between two polo ponies. One event that went to mar the meeting was the unfortunate accident met to Lieut. E. W. McArthur, of the 13th Hussars, who was thrown from his mount, K.C.S.I. in the Consolation Race and sustained severe injuries and as I write this report, I am informed his condition has given grave it is anxiety to his friends. Now the Wellington Meeting has been able to secure the patronage of the Rajas, etc., to be hoped that they would all contribute to the funds, thus at next Special Meeting better prizes would be offered to induce other racers from the neighbouring stables. Won by half a length; Mister E. was a good third.

Between the second and third races a trotting match was brought off between Mr. Nixon's Beryl, Owner, and Mr. Jolliffe's Mary, Mr. George Leslie. This was won by Beryl.

On one of those bitter, chilly mornings that herald so aptly our English summer, Mr. Taswell turned over in bed and began to doze. It was four o'clock, and this was the first wink of sleep Taswell had as yet managed to snatch.

A violent banging on the front door, however, suddenly aroused him. He dashed over to the window and opened it.

"Is it fire?" he roared.

"I want Mr. Taswell?" came the answer.

"I am Mr. Taswell. What is it?"

"I have an important matter which concerns your good name, and must not let it reach other ears. Come down quickly."

In a moment Taswell, in his pyjamas was at the door. The winds whistled coldly.

"Well?" he gasped.

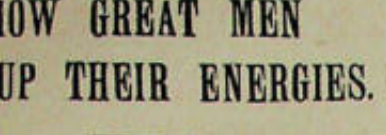
"Well," replied the disturber of Taswell's peace, don't you think your name would be as well without the "T"?"

Then he disappeared into the darkness and the comments of Taswell were not well at all.

HOW GREAT MEN RECOUP THEIR ENERGIES.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Eminent men are the authoritative exponents of a nation's thought. Their views, given with the sense of responsibility which rests upon those who mould public opinion, must command the most earnest attention. When the subject for consideration is the creation and preservation of those physical and mental attributes which so largely enter into the sum total of human success, then, surely, the opinions of those who have risen to the proud position of leaders of men will be all-convincing.

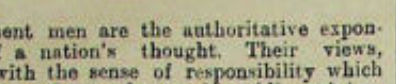


The unanimity with which the most distinguished personages proclaim Sanatogen to be the ideal tonic food remedy, affords striking evidence of the high esteem in which Sanatogen is held as a restorative and a tonic.

Sanatogen is proclaimed as being the most powerful restorative known for renewing and sustaining the vigour of health. When run down and in conditions of lassitude, nervousness, metal inertness, as well as debility, and all the ills foreshadowed by that danger signal depression, Sanatogen is unrivalled. It speedily and permanently restores that buoyancy and elasticity which are the very essence of well-being.

Sir Gilbert Parker, equally famous as a gifted author and an intrepid traveller, is full of enthusiastic praise:

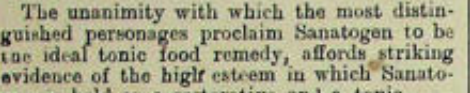
"20, Carlton House Terrace.



"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Sir John Hare gives us a peep into the means employed to sustain the wonderful vitality which is one of his distinguishing characteristics:

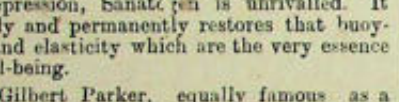
"Upper Berkeley Street.



"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

Lord Sutherland Gower, the creator of the noble Shakespearian memorial at Stratford-on-Avon, says of Sanatogen:

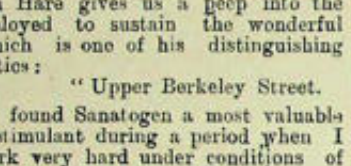
"Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.



"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate."

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair expresses his opinion as follows:

"The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral,
London, E.C.



"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

Madame Sarah Grand, the gifted authoress of "The Heavenly Twins," says she has found in Sanatogen renewed vigour of body and brain.

"Grove Hill.

"Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Conclusive proof is forthcoming also in the testimony of over 9,000 physicians as to the superlative merits of Sanatogen as the ideal tonic food remedy.

Amongst the many who have written in praise of Sanatogen, Dr. Andrew Wilson expresses golden opinions in that striking publication, "The Art of Living," a copy of which will be sent gratis and post free on forwarding name and address to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, etc., throughout India.

NEWMARKET.

With the excitement attendant on the first of the classics over, Newmarket was very quiet on Friday though the glories of a spring morning alone were sufficient to attract people to the Heath. "On the top of the ground" the going was excellent, and fields panning out pretty well, a capital afternoon's sport was participated in, but the thorough enjoyment of the card was marred by a storm of rain, which set in when the Peel Handicap was being run for, driving everybody to shelter and putting a wet ending to a bright beginning. A rude interruption to the halcyon decline of April came from Boreas on the last morning in the shape of snow, hail and sleet. Storms had evidently gathered round about, as now and again the sky to east and southwards would assume a funeral leaden hue ; but the afternoon for the most part was fine. The One Thousand was more select than numerous, as the last day's card held very little outside attraction beyond the fillies race. Details :—

More like June than May were the surroundings of the Chester Cup day, except for the delicate green of the forest trees and the bits of primrose yellow left by the early blossoms in the gardens. The attendance, though a good one, fell short of last year's, a fact, perhaps, attributable to the absence of the King and the Eaton Hall Party. Bright sunshine relieved the scene, and if the Roodee was not so well patronised as in former years the club enclosure and stands were so crowded as to suggest an extra wing being put on for the next meeting. Better going could not have been wished for, fields ruled well, and the day's sport, with Mr. Rothschild's victory thrown in, was a brilliant one. Results :—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

DRAMATIC FINISH OF THE SEASON.—League Football ended last Saturday. Seldom if ever have the last few days of the season been replete with such (of course fortuitous) dramatic success. Not until Wednesday was it decided that Tottenham Hotspur would go up from the Second Division of the Football League to the First. On Thursday, Bradford City (after consistently figuring in the last two since September) escaped relegation by the skin of their goal average. On Saturday Bolton Wanderers joined Tottenham Hotspur in promotion at the expense of West Bromwich Albion, and Liverpool by winning at Newcastle consigned Manchester City to a fate which contrasts oddly with the triumph of Manchester United last Saturday.

The important football events of this season may thus be classified.

F.A. Cup.—Transferred from Wolverhampton Wanderers to Manchester United.

First League.—Championship transferred from Manchester United to Newcastle United.

Second League.—Championship transferred from Bradford City to Bolton Wanderers.

Southern League.—Championship transferred from Queen's Park Rangers to Northampton.

Football League Inter-transposition.—Bolton Wanderers and Tottenham Hotspur of the Second Division change places with Leicester Fosse and Manchester City of the First.

International Championship.—England first and a record performance.

In gaining their third League championship in five years Newcastle have been consistently second or first throughout the season. Down to Christmas-time there was every likelihood of Everton remaining at the top, but after playing fourteen matches for eleven wins and three draws the Goodison Park club then won only five of the next twenty. Newcastle, on the other hand, only began to go to the front from the time of suffering a record home defeat from Sunderland by 9 goals to 1. Like Northampton, of the Southern League, they possess a record number of points, and, as was the case in three other of the last five years, they also made a bold bid for the Cup. In fact, Newcastle's record between 1904-09 makes up a striking chapter of qualified triumph.

Leicester Fosse's one year's experience of the First League has been disastrous. They held their own down to October, scoring ten points and occupying thirteenth place. In the last six months they added only fifteen points, and no fewer than 102 goals have been scored against them. They are the only League club who have been out-scored at home. In this connection it may be pointed out that Newcastle, Bolton, and Northampton have all won ten matches on their opponents' grounds. The only clubs of the sixty-one in the Leagues who have failed to win away from home are Barnsley and Blackpool, of the Second Division, and West Ham, of the Southern.

From the beginning of December, West Bromwich, Bolton, and Tottenham detached themselves from the rest of the Second League clubs. The fate of the Albion is a particularly hard one, but not more so than the experience of Manchester City, whose relegation is in the nature of a huge surprise, inasmuch as prior to this month they were never lower than thirteenth. Bradford City, however, deserve their escape, if only because though they have won only twelve matches of the thirty-eight, they have not lost more goals than they have made. Their score is symmetrical—27 to 20 at home, and 20 to 27 away.

One of the strangest records in the League tables is that of Blackburn Rovers, who, though no club among the sixty-one won fewer matches at home, are actually fourth in the First Division. They obtained five more points away than at Blackburn, and scored 32 goals to 24 away, as against 29 to 26 at home.

While London clubs have done singularly badly in the Southern League, not one of the six being in the first ten, and Brentford occupying last position, an unexpected recovery has been made in the First League by Woolwich Arsenal, who in the last month have jumped from sixteenth to sixth. Chelsea, too, have risen from eighteenth to eleventh. The First League clubs, however, were such a level lot (with the exception of Leicester Fosse) that only eight points separate No. 2 from No. 19. The ex-Southern League champions, the Queen's Park Rangers, have done even worse, falling to No. 15.

Swindon Town claim the record for the highest number of goals—96—and also for most goals at home—68. Northampton, however, possess the better goal average—90 to 45.

For the first time since 1901-02 Aston Villa have failed to reach 40 points.

CRICKET.

DERBYSHIRE v. YORKSHIRE.—Yorkshire won by an innings and 127 runs. The result was such a foregone conclusion, that yesterday's cricket at Derby could arouse no interest. With two wickets to fall, Derbyshire wanted 152 runs to avoid a single inning's defeat. Warren and Taylor made a few hits, but in less than half an hour the match was over, Yorkshire winning by an innings and 127 runs. Yorkshire's form all round was most encouraging. Score:—

OXFORD SENIORS' MATCH.—Mr. Brandt's side won by 133 runs. Declaring their second innings closed with four wickets down, Brandt's side gained a victory at Oxford yesterday by 133 runs. In the second innings of Hooman's side some good batting was seen, Seitz, an Australian, Tylden, a left-handed bat from Rugby, and Jesson all shaping well. Among the Seniors, Seitz is one of the most promising run-getters. Tylden, in scoring his 85, was at the wickets for two hours without giving a chance. Score:—

ATHLETICS.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CHAMPIONSHIP.—For the annual spring meeting held by the London Athletic Club, at Stamford Bridge, there were no fewer than seventeen events to be decided, including eight public school championships. In addition to a couple of challenge cup races, there were four events confined to members of lacrosse clubs. On the whole the weather was fine, and the attendance a fair one. The public school events were well contested, and some good racing was seen in several of the other events. In the long jump for the Public Schools' Challenge Cup, M. J. Susskind, captain of U.C.S., accomplished a fine performance by clearing 20 feet 11½ inches, against the previous best of 20 feet 0½ inches, by W. H. Dunnett, of Ipswich, in 1905. He also showed to advantage in one or two other events during the afternoon.

The contest for the points challenge cup resulted in a tie between Oundle and Abingdon Schools, each of which secured two wins and two seconds. In jumping on the tape in his heat of the open 100 Yards Handicap W. R. B. Thomas caught a foot against one of the iron uprights to which the strings are attached, and, falling heavily, fractured his shoulder. He was attended by Dr. E. B. Turner and the St. John's Ambulance men on the ground and was then removed to the hospital. Details:—

However, he did not retain it long, as just after the bell Taylor spurted, and coming right away he won a good race by 70 yards; 15 yards between second and third. Time—4mins. 49secs.

Long Jump Challenge Cup.—M. J. Susskind, University College School, 20 feet 7½ inches, 2; H. G. Shepherd, Abingdon, 19 feet, 3; A. F. Sheldon, King's College School, 17 feet 7 inches, 0.

London to Brighton Walk.—On Saturday, the 1st instant, in weather of a variable nature the Surrey Walking Club decided another of its periodical races from Westminster Bridge to the Brighton Aquarium (distance 52¼ miles) for the "Dithy" Challenge Cup, which was won on the previous occasion, in T. E. Hammond's absence, by H. E. Lang. Hammond competed on Saturday, and not only deprived Lang of possession of the cup, but accomplished a magnificent performance by beating all previous records for the journey. He won by fully four miles from E. V. Hollinsworth, and by rather more than that distance from Lang, in the fresh record time of 8hrs. 18mins. 18secs., of 5mins. 9secs. faster than the previous best, accomplished by J. Butler on 22nd September 1906.

Hammond walked splendidly throughout. He was closely pressed by Lang for the first twelve miles, but then got away. He reached Redhill (about 20½ miles from the start) in 3hrs. 4mins. 32secs. (Lang being then 5½mins. behind), and Bolney (just over 38½ miles) in 6hrs. 4mins. 18-1/5secs. Passing through Hickstead in fine style, Hammond reached the fortieth milestone in 6hrs. 22mins. 10secs.; and, walking as fast at the finish as at the start, beat the best on record. There were eleven competitors, and all finished, their positions and times being as follows:

GOLF.

The £200 Foursome.—The professional foursome for £100 a side, in which James Braid, Walton Heath, the open champion, and J. H. Taylor, Mid-Surrey, ex-champion, opposed C. H. Mayo, Burhill, and George Duncan, Hanger Hill, was concluded at Walton Heath, and resulted in a win for Braid and Taylor by 8 holes up and 7 to play. Mr. Horace G. Hutchinson acted as referee, and Mr. Garden G. Smith and Mr. Bernard Darwin as umpires.

Mayo and Duncan, as the result of the first 36 holes' play at Burhill, on Saturday, started yesterday with a deficit of five holes, but they had done such excellent rounds in practice at Walton Heath that a lot of interest was still left in the match. In the morning, however, they never once succeeded in drawing nearer to their opponents than the five holes difference, and after being 6 down at the turn Duncan and Mayo were as much as 8 down at the seventeenth, a win at the next hole leaving them 7 down with 18 to play. Neither Taylor nor Mayo was at his best in the first round, but Braid and Duncan were in good form. The last-named drove very well, and for the greater part of the time was considerably the stronger player of his side, but he appeared to become slack when he realised that his partner was off his game.

About 1,500 spectators were present when Taylor hit the first tee shot. The weather was changeable a slight breeze at the start freshening as the morning wore on. When the players were coming home in the morning a violent hailstorm prevailed for five minutes, and was succeeded by a steady downpour of rain. Mayo and Duncan just about held their own on the outward half in the afternoon, and were still 7 down at the turn. Mayo failed to hole a three yards putt to halve the tenth, where, in consequence, Braid and Taylor became dormy 8, a half at the next hole giving the older players the match. The scores were:—

Harry Vardon vs. Edward Ray.—Two of the leading representatives of the Jersey school of professionals—Harry Vardon and Edward Ray—met on the 4th instant in a match of 36 holes on the course of the Teeside Club, at Stockton. Vardon showed fine form, and won by 4 and 3. In the morning he stood 2 up at the seventh, but turned all square. He was 2 up at the twelfth, where he holed a long putt for a 2, but Ray squared at the seventeenth. Ray, however, played the last hole badly, and finished 1 down on the round. Vardon accomplished a score of 70, which beat the record for the green, standing to the credit of the local professional, A. W. Robertson, by one stroke. The figures were:

MOTOR CYCLING.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—In glorious weather, but before a small attendance, the first inter-'varsity motor-cycle match was held at Brooklands.

The events consisted of team races over approximately two and six miles, and half mile speed tests. The first man in each event scored four points for the university he presented; the second, three points; the third, two points; and the fourth, one point. The university with the highest aggregate points in a race won that event, and the university winning the most races won the match.

Oxford won the half-mile speed tests by six points to four, the two miles race by seven points to three, and lost the six miles race, scoring four points against six by Cambridge. Thus Oxford won the match by two events to one, and by seventeen points to thirteen.

RACQUETS.

Amateur Singles Championship.—At Queen's Club, Mr. E. M. Baerlein defeated Mr. H. Brougham in the challenge round of the amateur singles racquet championship, and retained the title. Serving well and showing great skill in his placing of the ball in the rallies, Mr. Baerlein won the first two games with little difficulty, despite his opponent's occasional brilliancy. With the Old Etonian leading at 7-2 in the third game, the end appeared to be in sight. At this stage Mr. Baerlein fell off somewhat in his play, and Mr. Brougham made excellent use of his opportunity, running out from 6-7 with a sequence of 9, his service being very effective. The Oxonian, increasing his sequence to 13, went to 4-love in the fourth game, but Mr. Baerlein won it in the end, and thus secured the rubber by 3 games to 1. Details:—

The Challenge Round.

Mr. E. M. Baerlein (Eton and Cambridge) (holder) beat Mr. H. Brougham (Wellington and Oxford) (challenger) by 3 games to 1—52 aces to 32. Score: 15—7, 15—1, 7—15, 15—9. Mr. Brougham won the spin, but failed, and Mr. Baerlein put on 5. Small and unproductive hands were then the order, until the holder got in at 10—7 and ran to "game." In the second game Mr. Baerlein added 3 aces, and his two innings following realised 2 and 7. The Oxonian then made a single—his only score in the game. Five hands later Mr. Baerlein went out with a couple. The Old Etonian scored 3 at the outset of the third game, and subsequently another 3 aces gave him a lead of 7—2. Each had a futile innings, and then the challenger, with 4, got to 6—7. Mr. Baerlein again failed, and Mr. Brougham attained "game" with 9. Continuing his hand in the fourth game, the Oxonian ran to 4—love, his full sequence thus amounting to 13, 8 of his aces being by service. Mr. Baerlein equalised, and, after a barren hand to his opponent, the Old Etonian went to 8—4. The only score in the next five hands was a single to each. Mr. Baerlein then added 3, and after Mr. Brougham had reached 9—12 with 4, the holder ran out.

Mr. Ivor de la Rue was referee.

BILLIARDS.

H. W. Stevenson Wins the Tournament.—Friday: Stevenson, 7,466; Inman (to play), 5,881.

After a somewhat disappointing game, the deciding heat in the Soho-square Tournament ended on Saturday night, the 1st instant, in a win for Stevenson by 1,901 points. The ..ull professional gave his opponent 2,000 in 9,000. With the result a foregone conclusion, the ordinary billiard enthusiast was not greatly concerned about the last day's play; but there was a big attendance in the evening, members of the Eccentric Club, of which Stevenson is a member, turning up in strong force for the presentation of prizes.

It cannot be said that play reached a consistently high standard at the penultimate session. Stevenson put up a couple of beautifully played centuries; Inman made similar impressions on the scoring board; but between these efforts were many disappointments. At the end of a long session Stevenson had aggregated 785 to 605, averaging 28 to 21·66.

Inman did nothing flattering at his first attempt; indeed, save that he recorded 127 at his fourth innings, he conveyed a very false impression of his real powers while playing a dozen hands. Stevenson, too, was very in and out. He showed incisive cueing in runs of 154 (36 off the red), and in lesser degree in items of 37 and 59, but the measure of success was not very great considering the opportunities that came his way. Subsequently there was appreciably more solidity about both players' cueing, although it was not often that maximum use was made of "leaves." Stevenson marked up 38, 119, 69, 47 (42 off the red), 72, 36, and 24 (unfinished), and Inman 39, 61, 113, 23, 49, and 64. With the balls frequently out of hand, both players had to depart very considerably from orthodox methods, Inman excelling in the direction of double-strength strokes, while Stevenson was particularly clever as regards screw shots. Interval scores:—

Stevenson (in play)	8,251

On resuming at night Stevenson improved his incomplete break to 130 ere miscueing at a screw cannon, and two innings later he was again seen to advantage while gathering 198. Both were pretty spot-end efforts, and the more important compilation contained a number of wonderful masse cannons. Against Stevenson's tally of over 300 points in three hands, Inman made very moderate response. He opened with two rank bad strokes, missing half-ball losers in the right middle pocket, and then notched a 52.

Stevenson was then right off his game for a space, adding only 32, 46, and 38 in seven innings, while Inman showed his real form in breaks of 64, 156, and 77. He also marked up 23 and 26. Dash was the keynote of these breaks. He rattled up the 156 in what must have been his record time. Then it was Stevenson's turn. He worked the balls in his best style; and always at the spot end. Before he retired he had advanced his score 155 points, and got within 135 of game. But the remaining points proved very troublesome to obtain. The balls would not help Stevenson at all, and he had to make six further visits to amass 25, 37, and finally reach game by means of 49. Inman's further contributions were 21, 71, and 64. Stevenson's aggregate was 750 and average 41·66, against which Inman returned 615, with an average of 36·11. Scores:—

Stevenson	9,000

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Friday, 14th May.—Rees' Corner at 7 A.M. The morning was cloudy, and rain was falling as we started for the Meet, but it cleared off. There had been a heavy thunderstorm the evening before which made the going soft. Jackal was drawn first, a jack going away at the bottom as soon as hounds got into covert. He ran left-handed into Rally Wood and then to the right of the Potato Field over the hill to Bluegums in which he led hounds round about to the bottom of the covert. Then breaking at the extreme corner to the right he rose the hill and made for Rawlin's Nullah. Here a fresh jack had crossed his line and hounds ran heel up to the Buffalo Wallow on Newmarket where they seemed at fault and scent fizzled out. On crossing the Sandy Nullah Stream hounds touched a line at the bottom of Staircase and went off at a great pace up the hill to the left at first but turning right handed in the covert, they ran over the ridge above Herbert Plantation and dashed down the hill to the left of Briar, crossed Back Staircase Road and ran through the corner of Lower Briar then headed for the Yemakal Valley. Just below One Tree Hill they swung to the left over the stream to Little Yemakal Shola, pushed him through and fairly raced along the left of Kubbalkod Valley to Nadunkod Mund. His Excellency who was the only one on anything like terms with them had a nasty fall close to the mund, his horse side slipping on the ride. With heaving sides and sobbing breath, our weary studs struggled on. Dismounting we scrambled up the precipitous ride of Hungerford Hill to the Mysore Ride, then on once more, over the Krurmund Path to the top of Leatham's Nullah where the Master was obliged to stop hounds. The pace had been fast and furious and the horses were quite used up. Only about six followers besides the Master and his whips saw the end of this good run. His Excellency was at the top of the hunt all the way.

Saturday, 15th May.—The kennels at 7 A.M. Another cloudy morning, nice and cool. Moved off across the Municipal Stream to Mill's Covert which held a small cub who promptly went to ground. The Master drew along the Blackmore Vale and Newmarket from thence over Gold Mine Crossing and Lawley's Course on to Dartmoor, where hounds feathered on a line near Portal's Crossing, but nothing came of it. They roused a jack in Wapshare's Hare. He led them over Windy Gap past Bacon Wood down the Yemakal Valley then turned right-handed up to Denny, from here to Dormer and back to Denny. This went on for some time with hounds close at him, so close that one of the leading hounds made a grab at him, but he jinked just in time. After they had been hunting him round and round these two coverts for half an hour, a fresh jack jumped up and went away from Denny, running down to the Pykara River and going to ground near the bank. On coming back to Denny, where some hounds had been left behind, it was found they had killed the hunted jack and eaten him up. The opening Meet of the season is to be held at Fern Hill on 18th May by kind permission of H.H. the Maharaja of Mysore.

Pykara.

An attendant of a circulating library recently overheard the following conversation between two young women, regular patrons of the place.

"How do you select stories" asked one.

"I have adopted a very simple method," said the other. "As I run over the latest things offered here, I glance at the last chapter. If I find the rain softly and sadly falling over two lonely graves, I know I don't want the story; but if the morning sun is glimmering over bridal robes of white satin, I know the novel's all right."

WINCHESTER

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

THEY SHOOT STRAIGHT, AND STRONG.

SCENES are not confined to our own Parliament. In the heat of a debate Congressman Johnson, of Indiana, called an Illinois representative a jackass. The expression was unparliamentary, and, in retraction, Johnson said:

"While I withdraw the unfortunate word, Mr. Speaker, I must insist that the gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

"How am I out of order?" yelled the man from Illinois.

"Probably a veterinary surgeon could tell you," answered Johnson, and that was parliamentary enough to stay on the record.

ISAAC (who has just recovered from typhoid): "Doctor, you have charged me for four week's calls; I vill pay for only three weeks!"

Doctor: "But I called on you every day for four weeks, Mr. Isaac!"

Isaac: "Vell, dere vas one week I was delirious, and I didn't see you come in!"

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION 1.

DALHOUSIE vs. SHROPSHIRE L.I.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on the 19th instant, ending in a pointless draw. The home team, who were without Prike and Wright, were kept on the defensive during a large part of the game, but their back division were equal to all emergencies, and the soldiers could not get through. Dalhousie got away on occasions but were unsuccessful in front of goal and the game ended as stated. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Stevens and Clarke, backs; Montgomery, Lees and Wilson, halves, Houlston, Whyshall, Quayl, Dalling and Bennett, forwards.

K.S.L.I.—Robinson, goal; Bushby and Humphreys, backs; Howells, Roberts and Halley, halves; Moald, Onions, Hockenhall, Henderson, and Birch, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Curley.

RANGERS vs. CUSTOMS.—After their victory over the Gordons the Customs were expected to beat the Rangers on the 18th instant, but they seemed to be out of form, and the Rangers, on their own ground, put another win to their credit. The Rangers were the first to attack, and Fischer being penalised for hands in the penalty area, Smart opened the scoring from the free kick. Both goals were visited in turn, and then Margrett was kept busy. He kept his charge intact, and the Rangers rushing down were pressing at the interval. On changing ends, after a run by the home team, the Customs again attacked but were unable to score and the ball was transferred to their territory where Cornish got possession and passed to Skempton, who scored the Rangers' second goal. The Customs attempts to score were successful and they were beaten by 2 goal to nil. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Minet and Allan, backs; Davis, Lawton and Cody, halves; Cornish, Skempton, Brewin, Smart and McCay, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; E. Vears and H. Vears, backs; Marsden, L. A. Smith and Fischer, halves; D'Silva, McCready, L. H. Smith, Galbreith and Echlin, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Hounsell.

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—These teams met on the Customs' ground on Saturday, the result of a fairly contested game being a win for Calcutta by 3 goals to nil. Both goals were visited at the start and the Customs obtained a corner but the kick was cleared, and V. Sherman rushing down scored the first goal, Fitzpatrick having come out too late. Shortly after Sherman sent in a shot which was cleared, but Kingcome was handy and netted off a rebound. The Riversiders then pressed but opportunities were missed, and Calcutta returning to the attack Ross scored. On changing ends play was very level but there was no further scoring, the C.F.C. winning as stated. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal; Stuart and Wright, backs; Ansell, O'Shea and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Kingcome, V. Sherman, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Goldsmith and Vears, backs; Fischer, Marsden and L. A. Smith, halves; D'Silva, Galbrieth, L. H. Smith, McCready and Pugh, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Curley.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALEDONIA.—Played on the Caledonia ground on Saturday, the Trades team winning by 2 goals to nil. The visitors had the best of the game in the first half and Dalling and Whyshall scored, but on changing ends the Caledonians pulled themselves together and gave a better display. They had chances of scoring but erratic shooting spoiled them, and in spite of every endeavour they were unable to reduce the margin. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clarke and Smith, backs; Wilson, Lees and Quayl, halves; Huddleston, Whyshall, Wright, Dalling and Burnett, forwards.

CALEDONIA.—Goodwin, goal; Capper and Coote, backs; Laine, Currie and Boilard, halves; Coldwell, Harding, Reynold, Allen and Apear, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Hounsell.

SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Saturday, the home team being defeated by 5 goals to 2. The military had the best of the game all through and led by 4 goals to 1 at half time. The Y.M.C.A. played better on resuming, but the Shropshires again assumed the upper hand and scored. Just before time the home team got through and netted through Gay. O'Connell (2), Roberts (2) and Birch scored for the soldiers, Brown and Gay for the Young Men. Teams:—

K.S.L.I.—Robinson, goal; Bushby and Howell, backs; O'Connell, Roberts and Bird, halves; Nain, Poole, Onions, Birch and Sanders forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Palmer, goal; Reynolds and Kendall, backs; Gray, McNay and Gay, halves; Rosetti, McLaren, Brown, Gillan and Beck, forwards.

GORDONS vs. RANGERS.—This match on the Rangers' ground last Saturday ended in the defeat of the home team by 2 goals to nil. After a spell of level play the Gordons took up the attack and the Rangers' backs were kept busy. Margrett did good work in goal and it was not till just before the whistle sounded half time that McKay managed to beat the Rangers' custodian. On crossing over play was very even and the ball travelled all over the field, both teams making great efforts to score. At length McKay got possession and passed to Foreman who netted the soldiers' second goal. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Findlay, Harper and Thomson, halves; McKinnon, McNaughton, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Chandler and Minet, backs; Davis, Lawton and Cody, halves; Cornish, Skempton, Allan, Smart and Postence, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Miller.

DALHOUSIE vs. Y.M.C.A.—These teams met on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Tuesday, Dalhousie winning by a goal to nil. The visitors had the larger share of the game but lost many chances owing to erratic shooting, while the excellent defence of Reynolds brought his side out of a difficult position time and again. The only goal of the game was scored by Wilson in the second half. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clark and Montgomery, backs; Wright Lees, and Wilson, halves; Burnett, Dalling, Halley, Whysel and Hurlestone, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Palmer, goal; Reynolds and Kendall, backs; Gay, M'Nay and Gray, halves; Rosetti, Frost, Brown, Rouston and Beck, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Miller.

CALCUTTA vs. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday, a well contested game ending in a win for the home team by a goal to nil. They did most of the attacking and at one time there was a regular bombardment of the military goal, but Robertson was equal to all shots and the teams changed ends without score. In the second half both goals were visited in turn. At length Kingcome got possession and crowned an excellent run by a successful shot at goal. The soldiers made a determined onslaught, but three fruitless corners were all the advantage they gained, and they had to retire beaten by a goal to nil. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal; Stuart and Wright, backs; Ansell, O'Shea and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Kingcome, V. Sherman, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

SHROPSHIRES.—Robertson, goal; Bushby and Humphreys, backs; Howell, Roberts and Bird, halves; Nain, Onions, Hockenhall, Birch and Saunders, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. A. B. Rosser.

MEASURERS vs. SIBPORE COLLEGE.—Played on the Measurers' ground on Saturday ending in a pointless draw.

R.G.A. vs. Y.M.C.A. (AM.).—Played on Saturday, the Gunners beating the Young Men by 2 goals to nil.

Y.M.C.A. (AM.) vs. SIBPORE.—Played on Tuesday, the Amateurs winning an interesting game by 3 goals to 2.

GORDONS "B. vs. MEASURERS."—Played on Tuesday, the military winning by 7 goals to 1.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LAST week's games and yesterday's match between Calcutta and the Shropshires give the League table quite an interesting aspect. Dalhousie heads the list with 10 points for 6 matches followed by the Rangers with an 7 points, one point better than Calcutta who have a similar lead over the Dum-Dum team. Calcutta won from the Shropshires on Tuesday evening in what was the best game this season. The Shropshires are a very popular team and since their opening match with the Gordons have been steadily improving in their play. The game on Tuesday evening was a particularly fast and well contested one. Calcutta's front rank at last appeared to have settled down and the inclusion of Ross has greatly strengthened it. The old London Caledonian player has not yet struck his best form but doubtless when he gets used to the ground will give a taste of his true quality. Kingcome, except for the goal that he scored, was rather poor, and is a very indifferent substitute for the Kingcome of two seasons ago. Hugh Sherman and Longbottom, the extreme men, were both excellent and their speed enabled them to outdistance the soldiers in a race for the ball. Pooler at half lies too far back and should follow up his forwards more, O'Shea and Ansell played well and fed their front rank nicely. Stuart and Wright at back were fairly sound though both are too inclined to tackle a bit wild. They met all demands made on them, however, and improve with every match. Roberts, the Shropshires' centre half, was not so good as we have previously seen him, probably due to the fact that Victor Sherman gave him very little time to think when he got the ball. The outside left is a good man and the backs were very sound. The goalkeeper had more to do than his vis-a-vis Morrison who, however, cleared well whenever tried. The Shropshires should do well in the League and we tip them to beat their Fort William rivals when the teams meet in the return engagement at Dum-Dum.

DALHOUSIE defeated Y. M. C. A. by a goal on Tuesday evening in a poor game. The latter team played hard but have too many men who are positively ignorant of the very rudiments of football. Dalhousie will have to play up if they mean to beat the Gordons on Saturday.

CALEDONIA still bring up the rear with only one goal scored by them in 6 matches, all of which they have lost.

RANGERS went down on Saturday before the Fort William team who have found a very capable back to take Montgomery's place. This latter player has been suspended for a month by the Council of the I.F.A. in connection with his play during the Customs-Gordons match.

CALCUTTA "B" team made their annual raid on Chinsurah last Saturday, and after the usual crop of adventures arrived safely at their distination one man short. It was a great day in Chinsurah and many and varied were the liquid concoctions produced at half time, up to which period Calcutta led by 2 to nil. The score at the finish was 2 all—at least the referee said it was and no one ventured to contradict him. He was a very large man, the referee, and the day was very hot and numerous cooling and otherwise drinks were awaiting consumption. Some uncharitable persons there were who said that several bridge parties were short of a fourth that night, but then the train from Naihatti was late and Chinsurah is an awkward place to leave as well as get to.

IT is interesting to observe the various shapes and sizes of the goal posts on the different grounds of the League Clubs. The great majority have the Cross Bar placed several inches below the top of the posts and sticking out a similar distance at each end. This might conceivably cost a team a match, as it is quite on the cards that the ball might strike either the top of the goal posts above the cross bar, or the ends of the cross bar which jutt out beyond the posts, rebound into play and be promptly netted. The only set of goal posts to which no objection could be taken to on this score are those of the C.F.C.

A VERY gratifying feature of this season's play has been the absence of that grumbling against referees' decisions which in previous seasons had been so marked. It seems to be the case that players and spectators alike now rightly perceive that the referee sees more of the game than most people and with increasing experience is able to interpret the rules with strict impartiality. The Calcutta Referees' Association now possesses the services of several very competent men, and, backed up as it is by the League, should progress still further in its aims.

It is astonishing to observe the number of free kicks that are given for incorrect throw—in from touch in the course of a game. The other week there were no fewer than eight in the Calcutta-Dalhousie match and seven in the Dalhousie-Shropshire game. Whether due to insufficient acquaintance with the rule relating to this particular point or to the excitement of the moment it is a breach of the law so easily to be avoided and so exasperating in its continued repetition that team captains should take offenders seriously to task.

The Dalhousie executive have rigged up a sort of sheep pen arrangement behind their goal nets, presumably to keep back the crowd from encroaching, which, while excellent for that purpose might conceivably put some of our cracks off their shooting!!! Corner flags, according to the laws of the game, should be five feet in height, but on most grounds three feet appears to be the fashion.

There are some entertaining games in prospection the C.F.C. ground. To-morrow the annual tussle between the Exchange Banks and the Bank of Bengal comes off, when the latter institution will be "At Home," while on 3rd June the deadly enmity between the Brokers of gunnies and jute will culminate in an encounter under the soccer code. The heavy men of all four teams are already we are told in strict training, which probably accounts for the fearful and wonderful performances given of late by some players in Calcutta "B" team games. Team Secretaries are advised not to miss these matches, as we are confidentially informed that several dark horses are to let themselves go and will be open for engagements in the league later on. Betting at present is 3 to 1 on the Exchange Banks and even money Gunny and Jute.

Monday and Wednesday, 17th and 19th May 1909.

The annual horse show held by the Ooty Gymkhana was this year again a big success, and Captain O. V. Edwards, the Honorary Secretary, is to be congratulated on the success of his efforts. The Story Teller.

SAINT HUGO.

"SAINT UGO SIR." Yus Sir, that dawg's worth his wight in gold to me Sir."

The speaker was a man a little under middle height, clean shaven with the exception of small closely cut side whiskers. His figure was spare and his face sharp, but about his small bird-like grey eyes, there was a mixture of earnestness and humour that invariably gained him an audience, when he chose to speak at length.

He was of the horse "hossy" dressed in a low stand-up collar, large red tie, from which glittered a horseshoe pin set in brilliants. His coat a Newmarket cutaway, tight under the arms and at the waist, his waistcoat outdoing Joseph's coat by its many colours, riding breeches with brown leggings, and boots to match completed his outfit.

Joe Biggs was a horse-dealer in fact, and a trainer of horses by profession and he was very touchy on this subject. He bought and sold many hundreds of animals in the course of the year, but he never bought one, save that the owner did not know where to keep it or some similar pretext, and he took it as a favour and he never sold one save under great stress of argument to oblige a friend.

My visit to his stables at Woking had been for the purpose of purchasing a smart looking cob for which I felt convinced that I had paid at least twice its value, although outwardly I have found myself thanking Joe for letting me have him at so light a figure and unhesitatingly accepted his statement that there was not another man in England that could have bought the cob at the price, and I think he was right substituting "would" for "could."

After the deal he invited me on to his house to have a "tiddly" before leaving which being the "sign, seal and deliver" of such a deal I felt compelled to accept. I had entered the Hall and was thrusting my riding crop into the stand when my eye caught a glass case containing a large and fat stuffed Bull Terrier, which appeared to be very moth eaten especially about the back. Perhaps what attracted my attention most was an elaborate brass plate fixed below the case, highly burnished and engraved with the following inscription:

"Saint Hugo"
Winner Derby 1892.

My host noting my interest then spoke as I have mentioned. "Indeed," I said, "he must have been a valuable dog. Was he an old favorite?"

"I knew that dawg one day Sir and one day only." "But how was it he was worth his weight in gold to you?" "Ah Sir," said Joe Biggs gazing with moistened eyes at the bulky remains of the Saint. "That's a rum 'un, that's a rum 'un."

"I don't think—but come in Sir, come in" and he led the way to a snug—what shall I call it—parlour, study and smoking room any or all.

Joe rang the bell, brought out a box of cigars from a smoking cabinet and after fingering several, selected one that met with his approval and handed it to me.

"Now my dear," he said to a buxom looking maid who answered the bell, "bring some glasses." "Will you 'ave it 'ot Sir? No? Well soda then. Mary, soda and glasses bustle up." "Its a pity," said Joe Biggs when we had started our cigars and were comfortably seated, "that I can't afford to let you 'ave that bay mare we was looking at casual like as we come in, its a pity, I know you could do with her, but I don't see my way clear nohow."

"But I don't require her, Biggs, I assure you" I protested.

"Oh that's wot you say, I know better than that."

"I really don't, Biggs, but tell me about that dog."

"Its a pity, Sir, a great pity," repeated Biggs eyeing me, and then as if pulling himself together he said lowering his voice, "about that dawg, well Sir, I don't know as rightly I should do so, but seeing as how I have given way to friendship in letting you have that cob, I might tell you about that dawg."

"Do," I said, "I am most interested."

Joe was silent for a few moments and then said "Do you reckleet 1892?"

"Yes," I said, "what about it."

"Who won the Derby" Joe asked solemnly.

"Sir Hugo" I replied.

"Sir Ugo." Joe nodded his head approvingly. "Right, Sir Ugo that there dawg" said Joe jerking his thumb towards the floor.

"Saint Ugo" I sat up and stared at Biggs who nodded at me and repeated "That there dawg won the Derby."

I knew that his love for animals was so great that it made him appear slightly eccentric to some people and that his belief in the intelligence of his dumb friends was so enormous that the tales he told of them taxed the belief of the most credulous, and that he looked upon them all, even down to the white mice kept by his ten-year-old stable boy as pals, but that he should make such a statement with apparent sincerity bordered on something more advanced than eccentricity.

"That there dog won the Derby" I gasped, falling into Joe's phraseology in my astonishment.

"Listen," said Joe, "and I'll tell you. On the morning of the 1st May 1889 I was standing outside the Angil, Islington, I had just popped my last bit of plate and I had five golden suvereigns in my pouch, I had my hand in my trousis pocket, aletting them slip through my fingers, accounting of them over and over again, fearing I might be one short, and half 'oping might be there was six of them. Well there I stood wondering wot I'd do next, my luck was dead out. Luck, well there aint no blamed words for the luck I'd 'ad, I couldn't do right: if I'd looked at a fivorite, winning by twenty lengths, he'd fall dead, stright, there weren't no blamed words for it. The laist week I'd met Pat Mullock wot was pals with me for years. I'd run for 'im and been took for 'im and squared beat after beat for 'im and I'd have put my last bob on 'im: I tole him my luck and he took me away quiet and give me twenty thickuns and tole me to put it on a hoss wot was a dead cert. for next day's programme and he says 'wite for starting prices' and goes off.

"I thought I knew a bit and went to half a dozen bookies and took the longest odds I could get and stood to win close on three 'undred. Next day I was at the Angil witing for the result when in walks Pat. 'Well' say he, 'did you do as I tole you?' 'Yus,' says I, 'only I put it all on yesterday so as to get longer prices.' 'You blamed fool' roars Pat. 'I tole you to wite for starting prices; the hoss' aint running. Scratched this morning and I knew it would.'

"As I say I was on my uppers with my last fiver in the world, I'd searched through every piper and I'd read all the prophets and blime me if I could mike my mind up for a winner and then on top of lot Polly Perkins she'd gone huffey, tole me I was an wyster to lose my money on horses and she took up with a collar and cuff bloke as went to the Angil Saloon Bar, till I could have bashed his ugly mug in. Well I was right down an' no mistike and was wondering whether I should go in and see Polly Perkins or go and have a No. 1 acrost the wiy when up comes Dan'l Isles.

'What cheer' he ses, grinning as usual.

'Rotten, I ses. 'Come and 'ave a drink' he ses moving to the Saloon Bar of the Angil. 'Not in there' I ses. 'Come acrost the wiy.' He laughs and ses 'What, like that is it Joe?' I ses 'I don't know what you mean but the Angils' beer's off" and he ses 'Of course.'

"Going to Derby to-morrow' ses Dan'l. 'No' I ses. 'Leastways, I dunno.'

'Doing anything to-day?' ses he.

'No' I ses again, 'leastways, I dunno.'

'You seem a bit off' ses he. 'Not like you to be so short but if you do want a bit of good I can do it.'

'Not 'alf' ses I, looking at him, fer, I knew Dan'l got some good information sometimes.

"Ere' ses he, catching me by the shoulder an'he whispers in my ear '3-30 to-day, I got it from his Lordship's valet who tole me he see'd the letter from his trainer and the telegram sent up this morning.'

"'Stright' ses I beginning to count my five thickuns again.

"'Stright I'm on all I know and I haint told a soul but yourself, I swore to Edwards I wouldn't and that's a fact.' I took out my news to see whether the hoss was quoted. None of the papers gave it.

"'Now' ses Dan'l, 'I'm going to start from Angil to-morrow at 9-30 and drive my old crock down to Epsom: if you'll come, I'll take you, be sharp' ses he and off he goes.

"Well that day I backed the hoss he gave me £2 to win, £1 place for a save and it came home at 10 to 1. 'That was a bit of luck for you' I interrupted. 'Yus in one way, but I remember I cussed my luck for not having put the whole fiver on to win, that would have done me a bit of good. I'd have had something to play with on the Derby. Well all that day I read and pondered what would win the Derby. I read up the form of every hoss in the race, o' course there was the Two Thousand winner and like as not he would win but what were the odds, 2 to 1 on or evens, not worth having, and then again I worked out a sum that if I backed my hoss in the rice on that day's prices, and liy the odds off kearful the next diy at starting prices, I could make abart 50 quid, but that wasn't no good to me, besides my being so down on my uppers I couldn't expect much trust in laying off: I did a Club and Pub crawl that night after I'd collected my pieces, but I couldn't get no imformation, leastways not to no purpose. I saw Dan'l Isles at the 'Beauford' but he was too full of his win that diy and too noisy as to what he knew to take much notice of him till the morning. Dan'l Isles was one of them chaps wot got oiled pretty easy but although his chin wagged a lot, and seemed to tell all he knew, you'd find in the morning that he never let on a word of what he really knew. Drink with 'im, Sir, was wot you might call a providential lock on the human understandin' as it were.

"Well when I turned in that night, I reckoned that I knew about as much about the runnin' as Mr. Hawke or the Lord Chief Justice with his robes on. I give it up that night and went to sleep: when I woke up next morning the first thing I done was to try and remember what I dreamed. 'What you dreamed?' I asked.

"Yus what I dreamed." I searched for an omen orisign.

"You don't believe in that sort of thing do you?" I questioned.

"Well, I dunno, I dunno," said Biggs, who appeared to be absorbed for a moment or so. Then he turned on me defiantly saying "I don't know what you believe and what more, I don't care a cuss, but what I tell you is gospel truth and that's a fact."

It has often struck me as being very curious that a certain class of man should so often back their assertions as gospel truth, when he has absolutely no belief in his referee.

Joe continued "I sat up and I reeklect my dream clear as daylight and I started laughing fit to bust myself. Up I got and fixed myself up a tidy buck me up, and started laughing again.

"What was the dream?" I asked.

"Half a mo I'm telling yer, what I dreamed was this:—I was astanding in the ring at Epsom, I had been shouting the odds and laying one thousand to one against the fivorite for the Derby: I had a pack of toffs round me a mile square yelling for tickets and shoving their pieces up, I was collaring the oof by the ton: I remember seeing Dan'l Isles grinning at me and whispering behin is" and to a pal. I couldn't rightly 'ear wot he said, but I kind of knew it. He was saying "There's old Joe Biggs doing a welsh.' Then I heard the cry of 'The're off, the're off' and I was standing on tip-toe trying to see. Then there was a silence wot you could a'most feel and I begin to sweat and wonder how I stood on my book. Presently there come up with the wind the roar of 100,000 throats. 'The fivourite wins, the fivourite wins" and there I stood staring at the riles, the hosses were coming down the stright, when wot do I see, there was the fivourite sure enough, half a length ahead of the second with something a bad third, but right in front of the lot was a fat Bull Terrier going like 'ell and flashing past the post an easy winner. Everyone took it as a matter o'course and I pouched my bits all serene. That Sir was my dream."

"And enough to make you laugh indeed" I said.

"well I dunno, I met Dan'l Isles at 9-30 sharp at the Angil and by 10 o'clock we made a start. We made one or two calls on the way down and we got a'most there. Dan'l said he was going to look in on old Teddy Bullock wot kep 'The Golden Keys.'

"So up we pulled. We had a drop or two with Teddy and just afore going out Dan'l ses to Teddy.

"'How's that Bull pup I give you last year."

"'Oh he's all right. But he's a bit like me, he's got too fat, come and have a look at 'im.'

So we went to the back yard and there was the bull dog chained up to his kennel.

"'Fat' ses Dan'l, 'I should think he is fat: why don't you exercise him. Its a blamed shame, a good dawg like that. If you'd kep him well you could hev showed him anywheres.'

'That's true' ses Teddy, 'but I don't get no time for walking exercise.'

"'Why don't you take him out with your trap?'

"'He's such a devil to fight' ses Teddy.

"'Chain him up under the axle' ses Dan'l.

"'So I ought, so I ought' ses Teddy.

"'Look 'ere ses Dan'l, 'hitch him up under my trap, its only the four mile on to the down and I'll give him a run.'

"'He's a sight too fat I guess for your crock' Dan'l' I ses.

"'Not he' says Dan'l. We've got plenty of time, we'll jog along slow: its a cruel pity to see a dawg like him killed for want of exercise.'

"So we chined him up and off we went. I shouted back to Teddy 'Wots his nime!'

"'Ugo' he shouts back.

"So I every now and then give a call of 'Cheer up Ugo good dawg.'

"After a little, we clean forgot about the dawg and Dan'l's old crock, who had got a bit cold standing outside Teddy's was, putting on the pace. Jist as we was going up the rise afore you get to the downs round that sharp corner, we saw a Copper standing, and as we were about to pass he 'olds out his hands and stops us.

"'Wots up now!' ses Dan'l.

"'What are you driving like 'ell for with a dead dawg chined to your axle!'

"'Jood Gawd' says Dan'l and me in one breath.

"Down I tumbles and there was poor old Ugo lying up back with eyes and tongue more 'n half out of his 'ead. 'Is he dead?' says Dan'l.

"I unhitched him and I carried him on to the grass. His poor back was awful.

"'Nice gime this' ses the Copper.

"'Go to the devil' ses I, 'you don't suppose this is our fun do you?'

"'Taint the dawg's" ses he getting out his note book. 'You'll have to give me your names and addresses.'

"There was a cottage close by and I took poor Ugo there and I got some 'ot water and I bithed him and tried to bring him round for 'e wasn't quite gone. Then I put some brandy from my flask dawn his throat. I'd been with him about fifteen minutes when Dan'l comes up and says 'Come on Joe, if we don't hurry, we shall miss the first rice."

"'Blimey Dan'l, we can't leave the dawg.'

"'Put him in the trap' he ses.

"'Not much' ses I, 'that would just finish him' and after some argument he went of in a huff and left me with the dawg.

"Well poor Ugo was a goner, and I felt I'd done murder: he was dying and all through my blimed Kearlessness and I felt fit to howl: and that poor dawg was griteful Sir, and that's wot pipped me, most griteful Sir, for that I was adoing for him, and while I kep the warm rags on is' back I suddently thought of his name. 'Ugo' the dawg in my dream and the outsider Sir Ugo, and I says suddenly 'By gosh I've got it' the Dawg give a grunt, licks my 'and five times, and then died. Five licks Sir, so help me, five slow deliberate licks, and while his poor old sad dying eyes looked up into mine as if he wished to say 'Count 'em old chap, they'll do yo' a bit of good and thank yo.'

Joe was silent for a bit and blowing his nose vigorously said "You'll excuse me, Sir, but when you come to think on 't, that dawg was an everlasting sermon to human nature. Talk about forgiveness of sins!"

"I see," I said, "and so that is why you call him Saint Hugo."

"Yus partly that" said Joe and "partly wot come after, for that dawg's was no ordinary kind of forgiveness like most 'uman sympathy, wot comes of a comfortable sense of feeling big an losing nothin'. No that dawg not only forgiv the injury I'd done 'im in my kearlessness but he was griteful for the little kear I give 'im and 'e mixed 'is gratitude with somethink solid as I 'll show you: well I carried the dawg kearful to the cottige.

"'You kent bring that thing in 'ere" says the old woman. "'Oh yus I can' ses I, 'and I ken bring somethink else with me' ses I laying poor Ugo down on a box in the corner of the room. 'Here's a thickun' I ses, and you kep that there blessed dawg till I get back this evening and don't you touch 'im else I'll 'ave that brass back, and the life of you as well,' and off I went.

"I got into the ring just after the second race had started on the way—I'd been thinking there was no manner of doubt that Sir Ugo would win the Derby, but as if I wanted any further sign, when I bought a rice card there was 'Sir Hugo's' name opposite number 5, five what the dawg tole me with 'is 5 licks. I laid all I 'ad on that 'oss: I wired away to every Bookie I knew the full limit.

"I borrowed from every pal I knew and laid it on 'Sir Hugo': I got 40, 50, 60 and in one case 100 to 1 agin 'im: I laid any odds aginst any other 'oss in the rice for ready, and put it on Ugo. I never looked at the rice: I knew all the time the winner. I was most skeared to look expecting to see the poor dawg instead of the 'oss, but bet me what you will Sir and argufy as long as you like, the big hoss may have run the rice, but it was the soul of the dawg that won it."

This was the end of the yarn as given by Mr. Biggs, but one of the reasons I remember it so well is that it had a very embarassing sequel for me. As I went through the Hall to leave the house that day, I raised my hand in salute to "Saint Ugo," as I passed.

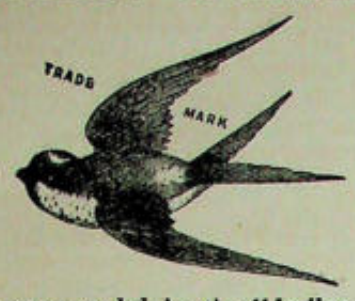
The next day I had a letter from Joe Biggs returning me the cheque I gave him for the cob, saying that when he bought the lot he had promised not to sell it, and that he could'nt rightly accept my cheque, but as he wanted to get rid of it would I be good enough to accept it as a present. As a matter of fact he bred the cob himself.

"REKABIOR."

McJigger: "Poor Dumley's in for it. He married a girl who stutters, you know."

Thingumbob: "Well, it shouldn't be hard to outtalk a woman like that."

McJigger: "Yes; but with all her stuttering she is very determined: if she ever starts to say anything she'll stutter through it if it takes all night."



PARVENU Host: "'Ow do you like this salmon? It cost six shillings a pound."

Cynical Guest: "And very good, too. I'll trouble you for another nine-penorth!"

THE Maid: "Do you think it brings bad luck if one is married on a Friday?"

The Man: "I don't think it makes any difference whether it is a Friday or not."

THE ZOO AND THE MUSEUM.

At the meeting of the Zoological Society, held on 28th April, the Duke of Bedford, the President, proposed a motion that the offices and library of the Society should be transferred from Hanover Square to the Gardens in the Regent's Park so soon as proper buildings for their reception could be prepared. Although an organised opposition to the proposal was raised, when certain members of the Humanitarian League seized the opportunity of hearing their own voices (for nobody else listened to them), the fellows supported the Council, and the motion was carried by a very considerable majority.

Steps will, we believe, be taken to commence the works in the Gardens as soon as possible; but we are informed that it will be something like two years before the new buildings are completed; and till then, we presume, the library will remain in Hanover Square.

It is not to be denied that a certain amount of inconvenience will be caused to many of the fellows who use it by this transference of the library to the Regent's Park; but it has to be remembered that the number of fellows who consult the library and attend the scientific meetings form but a very small proportion of the total roll of fellows; and the will of the minority must therefore give way to that of the majority. And after all a drive in a taxicab from Piccadilly to the Gardens does not cost much or take long, and on a fine day is a pleasant little trip.

We have been told that a short time ago negotiations were in progress for running a line of motor omnibusses or a "tube" (we are not sure which) to the Gardens, but that a very illustrious personage put down his foot and stated that no such intrusions on a royal park could be permitted.

The new buildings in the Gardens, as we are informed, are to be erected on the further side of the tunnel, probably on the site now occupied by the small-mammal house.

To those fellows who are desirous of studying the habits of the animals, it will certainly be a great convenience to have the library in the Gardens themselves.

Leaving the Zoological Society and its Menagerie, we pass on to the Natural History Branch of the British Museum, the administration of which has recently formed the subject of a good deal of discussion in the daily and weekly press from the Times downwards. In common with the headquarters at Bloomsbury, the Natural History Branch of the British Museum is administered by a body of Trustees. The Natural History Branch generally has a Director of its own (although this post at the present time is vacant), who administers the ordinary affairs of the Museum, but is subject to a certain amount of control from the Chief Librarian and Director at Bloomsbury, although it is practically impossible for the man-in-the-street to gain any idea as to the extent of this control.

The correspondence commenced by a letter to the Times from four well-known University professors in which it was urged that the Natural History Museum should be made entirely independent of the British Museum at Bloomsbury, and that its control should be confided to some other body than the present Trustees.

Possibly the separation from Bloomsbury might be advantageous; and there is also a possibility that some amendment in the constitution of the Board of Trustees might be for the well-being of the Natural History Museum. But to abolish the Trustees and put the Museum under the control of some Government Department would, in our opinion, be a grievous mistake; for there can be no question, to all reasonably minded persons that, the establishment in the Cromwell Road is doing its work thoroughly well under the existing régime.

Unfortunately, the man-in-the-street is only too likely to get the idea in his head, from the letter in the Times and other journals, that the reverse is the case, and that the British public are not getting full value for their money.

No greater mistake could possibly be made. So far as European establishments of a like nature are concerned, the Natural History Museum is the "greatest show on earth." Possibly some continental Museums may beat it in particular sections; but, taken as a whole—and that whole comprises not only natural history as commonly understood, but likewise palæontology, botany, and mineralogy—it is far ahead of all rivals. Moreover, in many sections of the display, as for instance the series of African antelopes or the collection of meteorites, it is not only immeasurably ahead of all other Museums in Europe, but it is absolutely unbeatable. How it compares with American Museums, we have not definite information at our disposal.

It is also important to mention that as regards the exhibition of animals a vast improvement, not only in the arrangement, but also in the mounting of the specimens have been effected; and old and badly mounted skins are being almost daily removed and replaced by others mounted in the best style of modern English taxidermy.

From the point of view of the general public, where direct interest is, of course, restricted to the exhibition galleries, the Museum is, therefore, almost all that it should be; so far as the funds at the disposal of the authorities will admit. If more money were available, those entrusted with the upkeep of the exhibition galleries would doubtless be able to spend it to advantage. But even in national Museums it is necessary to cut the coat according to the cloth.

As regards the scientific work of the Museum it is important to mention that this is in the main restricted to descriptive natural history (inclusive of palæontology, mineralogy and botany), and does not (and should not) include the cutting up of the bodies of animals into thin sections for microscopic examination, the study of bacteriä, or the phenomena or cross-breeding and heredity, all of which come within the province of the Zoological laboratories of our universities, etc.

With this reservation, the staff of the Museum is doing an enormous amount of splendid zoological work; indeed as regards mammals, it would probably be not too much to say that two-thirds of the total output of the work of the world in this department is accomplished at South Kensington.

THE ENGLISH POLO SEASON.

What promises to be the most brilliant polo season for many years in England is now in full swing. Already many fine matches have been played on the Hurlingham, Ranelagh, Roehampton and other grounds, and sufficient has been revealed to enable a fairly accurate judgment to be made as to the relative strength of the various teams.

But the subject of paramount importance in the polo world at the moment is the challenge for the American International Cup. It was on the eve of the season that the Hurlingham Club received an intimation from the American Polo Association that it was the desire of the Meadowbrook team to compete for the trophy, and the authorities at headquarters lost no time in accepting the challenge. This will therefore be the third attempt on the part of America to regain possession of the cup, which was won at Newport, Rhode Island, by a British team captained by the late Mr. John Watson, as far back as 1886.

By the year named polo in the United States had made considerable progress and became so popular that the Hurlingham Club was invited to send a team across the Atlantic to play against the best American sides, the principal matches being for the International Cup. The British players were: Mr. John Watson, Captain (now Colonel) Malcolm Little, Captain T. Hone, then of the 7th Hussars, but long since retired; Captain (now Colonel) the Hon'ble R. T. Lawley, with Mr. Shaw Safe as reserve man.

The series of matches fell through, as the British players defeated the best American teams that could be pitted against them in two consecutive encounters, and no further opposition could be provided.

At that time polo in America was lacking in system, and their ponies, it is stated, were mustangs and quite outclassed by the mounts taken over by the representatives of Great Britain. The American team consisted of Mr. T. Hitchcock, Mr. W. K. Thorn, Mr. R. Belmont, and Mr. Foxhall Keene. By the way, the latter is playing in London this season, but it is understood that he will not be included in the challenging team.

One of the conditions governing contests for the International Cup is that it shall be competed for under the rules in force in the country which for the time being holds the trophy. Hence the British team in 1886 played subject to the then existing American regulations, while in their effort to win back the Cup, the Americans have had to conform to the English code.

The chief point of difference between the respective sets of regulations is that there is no rule against off-side in America, whereas in England it is rigidly enforced. Whether the side that succeeded in gaining the holdership of the cup for England had practised under the American code before departing for the States we are unaware, but writers of the time have stated that the British victory was due to the system of combination they displayed and the vast superiority of their ponies. According to our preconceived notions of the game it is difficult to understand how polo can be carried on with anything like combination unless there is a rule against off-side play.

It was in 1900 that America made their first attempt to win back the cup. The four leading American players at that time in England challenged through the American Polo Association, but their representatives (Messrs. Walter and Lawrence McCreery, Mr. F. J. Mackey, and Mr. Foxhall Keene) were quite outplayed by the home team, which was constituted by Captain (now Major) the Hon'ble J. Beresford, a brother of Lord Decies; Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. W. S. Buckmaster, and Mr. John Watson, in the only match that took place.

Two years later—in 1902—there was another American "invasion" in quest of the cup. They sent the best available players in the States, to England, their team being selected from Mr. R. L. Agassiz. Mr. J. M. Cowdin, Mr. M. Waterbury, Mr. Foxhall Keene, and Mr. Larry Waterbury. The series of contests, of which there were three, aroused tremendous enthusiasm. America won the first, but only by two goals to one, and their star was naturally in the ascendant. However, even after their initial success keen judges of polo doubted that they would take back the cup to America, and they were correct in their estimation.

The several teams that met the Americans in 1902 were selected from the following players: Messrs, C. and P. W. Nickalls, Mr. G. A. Miller, Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. W. S. Buckmaster, and Mr. C. D. Miller. The latter and Mr. Freake each played in one match, the first and second respectively, Mr. G. A. Miller and Mr. P. Nickalls took part in two, while Mr. C. Nickalls and Mr. Buckmaster assisted their country throughout the series.

Several of these players are still available and there is no doubt that the team that will defend the cup against Messrs. H. P. Whitney, L. and M. Waterbury and Devereux Milburn, who represent the Meadowbrook team, will again be selected from among them.

The matches in connection with the trophy have been arranged for 23rd, 26th and 30th June.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

OUR special telegrams to-day give the results of the races for the Coronation Cup and the Oaks. In the first-named event we have Dean Swift defeating the favourite White Eagle by three lengths. Last year Mr. Joel's gelding ran second to the White Knight.

THE Oaks was won by Mr. W. Cooper's Perola, who put up a great performance, beating His Majesty's nominee by two lengths in 2mins. 39⅘secs. The winner is a chestnut filly by Persimmon—Edmee and has good performances to her credit as a two-year-old, winning four, finishing second once, third once and only once placed out of seven appearances. She won the Woodcote Stakes, £930, 6 furlongs, at Epsom last June, carrying 8st. 9lb., beating Buckwheat, 8st. 9lb., Prester Jack, 8st. 12lb., and Perdiccas, 9st. 5lb.

Ran third in the New Stakes, £1,817-10, 5 furlongs, at Ascot, carrying 9st. to Bayardo, 8st. 10lb., and Perdiccas, 8st. 10lb.

Won the Exeter Stakes, £671, 6 furlongs, at Newmarket, carrying 9st. 3lb. and beating Dissolute, 8st. 12lb., Caught, 8st. 9lb. Time—1min. 15⅕secs.

Won the Rous Memorial Stakes, £1,185, 6 furlongs, at Goodwood, carrying 8st. 12lb. and beating Electra, 8st. 12lb., Syce, 8st. 5lb. Time—1min. 15⅘secs.

Won the Hardwicke Stakes, £467, 5 furlongs, at Stockton, carrying 9st. 2lb. and beating Corinnus, 8st. 4lb., Tragedy Queen, 8st. 1lb. Time—61secs.

Ran unplaced in the Cheveley Park Stakes, £825 6 furlongs, at the Newmarket October Meeting, carrying 9st. 6lb. to Sceptre filly, 8st. 10lb., Sarfuch 8st. 10lb., and Janitza filly, 8st. 10lb.

Ran second in the Dewhurst Plate, £1,477, 7 furlongs, at Newmarket, carrying 9st. to Bayardo, 9st. 5lb., Lucina colt, 8st. 9lb., third. Time—1min. 29⅕secs.

THERE is still very little doing in the Calcutta racing world and the chief interest centres in the prospects of the Tollygunge Gymkhana Meeting on the 12th, for which there is a likelihood of having a fair number of starters, especially if we get some rain. Full details of the programme are as follows :—

THE NOVICE STAKES.—A Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 45 or over nor started in a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 550 or over. C. W. over 11st. 4 furlongs.

THE VISITORS' PLATE (open).—A Flat Race for Maiden Horses. C. W. over 10st. 4 furlongs.

THE JUNE STAKES.—A Flat Race for Maiden Ponies 14-2 and under. W. I. 14-2 to carry 12st. Allowances.—Arabs 40lbs., country-breds 21lbs. 4 furlongs.

THE CLUB STAKES.—A Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 500 or over. Penalties.—Winner of a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 450 or over, once 5lbs., twice 10lbs., oftener 14lbs. C. W. over 10st. 7lb. 4 furlongs.

OPEN PONY RACE.—A Flat Race for Ponies, 14-2 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 500 or over. W. I. 14-2 to carry 11st. Penalties—Winner of a race value Rs. 450 or over once 7lb., oftener 10lb. 5 furlongs.

THE BUGGY STAKES.—A Flat Race for Ponies 14-2 and under that have been regularly driven up to date and have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 45 or over. W. I. 14-2 to carry 12st. 3 furlongs.

WE call special attention to the fact that the Maiden Race is 4 furlongs as two Calcutta daily papers have printed it as 6 and this repeated compositor's error may have created a false impression in some quarters. The conditions of the race are as usual and G.R's. who have ridden four or more winners under any recognised rules of racing will have to declare a penalty of 5lb. in the closed events. The starting gates will be in use anyhow at the four and five furlong posts and it only requires a little rain to ensure a big success.

AMONG horses that are doing a certain amount of work and that are eligible to run, we notice that for the Novice Stakes Mr. Wallace Jones has Au Revoir and Electric Light, Mr. Kennedy has got a useful mare, Mr. R. A. C. Pugh's Delusion has just come down and is in Alford's hands, while Vanity and Bean are among other probable starters. For the open Maiden Race we shall probably see among others Lefterin, who is likely to take a lot of beating, Regina and Frank, a black colt that Alford is training. In the Club Race Maisonette, Spinnet, Prince Moorfield, Lord Chester, Fingall, and Peter are all possible starters. Among the ponies there are Piccaninny, Violet, Loch Lily, Ruling Passion, High Court, Gladsome, etc., etc. These are only a few names that occur to us off hand, but no doubt when the entries are published on Sunday morning we shall see a good many others that have been quietly working in the jungles.

THERE has been less schooling going on of late and the only interesting event in this department was Eruption's performance at Milton Park on Friday, Mr. Galstaun's big horse showing a great deal of improvement. Compromise was also taken over a few fences and jumped really well, very different from the way he went over the hurdles last Monsoons. We hear that he is for sale at a very low figure, as his present owner is not keen on racing and he should be a useful buy, as he showed us last year that he has a very fair amount of pace through the mud.

WE believe that the present pattern of hurdles will not be changed until after the Monsoons, as they could hardly get the new ones made quickly now to allow sufficient time for schooling before the first meeting on 31st July and we do not expect to see the new type in use till the coming cold weather.

We hear the internal arrangements of the Monsoon stand are to be altered so as to allow considerably more accommodation in the dressing rooms, and a bath, a necessity that was asked for in vain last summer, is to be provided, so that riders will have some chance for removing the portions of the course which they perforce accumulate on their persons on a wet monsoon day.

On the subject of horse-breeding in India a Poona contemporary writes : An interesting experiment in horse-breeding at Ahmednagar has been proceeding during the past four years. In July, 1905, the Government of India sanctioned the formation of a small stud at that station for the purpose of breeding by stallions on the lines recommended by the Royal Commission on horse-breeding in 1901. The original idea of the Commission was to foster the pure indigenous breeds of Indian horses, such as Marwaris, Kathiawaris, etc.; but on the representation of the Director-General, Army Remount Department, to the effect that the supply of first-class Arab stallions was not equal to the demand and was yearly decreasing, it was decided to try to breed pure Arabs also Accordingly, 30 desert-bred Arab mares were imported from Arabia and a number of the purest bred Marwari and Kathiawari mares were obtained, a stud being thus formed and the success gained has surpassed all expectations. The Indian breeds have produced a fine progeny, true to type, while the Arabs have given wonderful results. The stock show all the true Arab characteristics with great quality and much more power and bone than is seen in the Bombay market. Recently, Colonel Broome, Director-General of the Army Remount Department, had three of these young Arab horses sent to Simla for exhibition. They were selected from 14 Arab colts foaled in the first year of the stud's existence, and they are thus the first fruits of the experiment.

Competent judges of Arabs were all enthusiastic in praise of these horses and for three-year-olds they were certainly something out of the common. They stand 14-2 12 to 14-3 with fine quality short backs and great limbs. Their shank measurement average 7½ inches as compared with the bare 7 inches in the Arab market. They are great movers, and in the opinion of those who know the Bombay stables well similar specimens could not have been obtained there of late years.

The Pioneer says: If the Ahmednagar Stud can continue to turn out a stock such as these its future is assured, and as there is no doubt as to the financial success likely to be gained breeding will probably be carried out on extended lines."

AN Australian contemporary announces that J. Rowen has written to the A.J.C. asking that body to make further enquiry into the Rosette (late Parody) case before adopting his disqualification by the Calcutta T.C.

Neith, a three-year-old filly by Grafton from Monastery, a three-year-old gelding by Holbrook from a half-sister to Neith, and The Cockatoo, who was secured in New Zealand, and is meant for the jumping business.

THE Beresford Polo Tournament began on the Annandale ground, Simla, on Monday in the presence of a large gathering which included the Viceregal party, Lord Kitchener and the Lieutenant-Governor and party. Two matches were played, but the dust somewhat detracted from the interest in the games. In the first Patiala beat the Commander-in-Chief's Staff by five goals to two. The losers had the worst of luck and were further handicapped by the absence of Captain Bassett, who was ill and unable to take his place in the team. Commander-in-Chief's staff:—Captain Wylly, Colonel Birdwood, Captains Fitzgerald and Learmouth (back); Patiala: Colonel Sewa Singh, General Preetum Singh, Risaldar Thakur Singh, and Jemadar Ganda Singh (back); umpires: Captain Keighley and Mr. Leslie Cheap.

The second game was between the 10th Royal Hussars and the 17th Lancers and was a well-contested struggle. Time arrived with the score 4 all, but in the extra chukker with widened goals the Lancers scored the winning goal. Teams:—10th Royal Hussars: Captain the Hon. Meade, Messrs. De Tuyll and Palmer, and Major Sir John Milbanke (back); 17th Lancers: Mr. Willoughby, Captain Fisher, Mr. Nutting, and Major Barnes (back); umpires: Major Chaplin and Captain Ridgeway.

THE new Committee of the Dacca Amusement Club, Limited, are determined to revive sport in the capital of the new province and have just framed an excellent programme for a Gymkhana Race Meeting to be held on the 9th instant. Five events are figured on the card and a successful little meeting is anticipated.

THE polo tournament on the American system which had been in progress at Peshawar during May was concluded on the 23rd ultimo. Throughout it was most successful and good polo was witnessed. Appended are teams and results. The "Squeakers" and "Tally-ho" coming out on top with four wins each.

Altogether the "Jocks" in the course of the tournament won three matches, defeating the "Wanderers," the "Antelopes" and the "Hopefuls." The "Wanderers" lost every match. The "Squeakers" defeated the "Jocks," the "Wanderers," the "Hopefuls" and "Tally-ho"—4 wins. The "Antelopes" [illegible] and the "Squeakers" [illegible] having two wins to their credit. The "Hopefuls" had also two victories to record over the "Wanderers" and the "Antelopes," while "Tally-ho" won four matches against the "Jocks," the "Wanderers," the "Antelopes," and the "Hopefuls."

THE Mussoorie Polo Tournament ended on the 23rd ultimo. Seven teams had entered but three withdrew. In the first game the 2nd Gurkhas beat the King's Dragoon Guards by 6 goals to 4. In the second the 15th Hussars defeated the Imperial Cadet after an exciting game, in which extra time had to be played, by 6 goals to 5. The final was a runaway victory for the Gurkhas, who beat the 15th Hussars by 11 goals to 1.

THE third Simla Gymkhana was held at Annandale on Saturday last. There was a fair attendance and the Sikh Pioneer Band enlivened the proceedings. The first event for gentlemen, picking three discs off the ground with a hogspear, was won by Captain Cheape. The ladies' jumping competition, which followed, was run off in three heats and eventually won by Lady Eileen Elliot with Miss Mahon second. Affinity race: gentlemen stood on chairs at one end of the ground and ladies rode up to their partners and dismounted, the gentleman then mounting the lady's horse without getting off his chair. Won by Miss Mahon and Captain Norton. The ladies' mounted competition, carrying polo ball on tennis racket, was won by Miss Black with Miss Dane second. The missing word stakes brought the programme to an end, Miss Dunlop Smith and Captain Sargent being first in with their quotations complete.

A LONDON correspondent writes: The news that the Football Association has vetoed the proposed tour of Cambridge footballers to South America this summer has created a lot of indignation. Mr. V. G. Thew had got together a powerful combination of past and present Cantabs—mostly Blues—had practically arranged for some ten or a dozen matches to be played, and had fixed upon Buenos Ayres as the team's headquarters. They were to have started early in July, but now—well, the F.A. has arranged for Everton to go in their stead. The latter fact, quite as much as the upset of Mr. Thew's plans, seems to rankle in the minds of most people. Such procedure is hard to understand, by the way. The Argentine people asked for an "amateur" team, and, lo, the F.A. send them out a "professional" one—queer sort of tactics? Such action is only on a par with that of the Football Association in toto since the now historic split. All the same, I do not quite like the idea of such a purely sportsmanlike tour being knocked on the head simply on account of party feeling. It has been called "spoil-sport policy," an anti-amateur move," and all sorts of terrible things, and, in a measure, they all apply. It will perhaps be a good thing for the game when amateurs and professionals are governed exclusively by different bodies; at least, the present state of things has become almost intolerable.

A RECENT Marathom race at Seattle (England) was brought to an unfortunate conclusion by scores of spectators falling from a balcony on the top of the runners. The building had not been inspected according to law, but it was generally considered to have been unsafe. As to the runners, though not very badly hurt, they protested against being brought into such close touch with the public.

"MODERN GOLF," by P. A. Vaile, should appeal strongly to men who sometimes play badly—and they are numerous. It is very comforting after a series of disastrous shots to take up this volume. You turn to Chapter I, and read the first two lines "In my opinion the golf club of to-day is constructed on a defective principle." Who, after seeing his ball adopt all sorts of unwarrantable lines of flight, would deny this statement? Diving more deeply into the book you discover that nearly all the tuition you have had has been faulty. No wonder, then, you have so often made an indifferent stroke. You have never had a fair chance—there has been a downright conspiracy to make you one of the failures of the links. Clubs, instruction, everything has been wrong.

MR. VAILE is enterprising and he advances plenty of new points. He supports them by numerous examples and diagrams, and in many cases, he may be right. The diagrams are complete in every detail; they give representations by means of letters and other illustrative species of ball, feet, winds, hills grass, trees and many other familiar objects of the golf course. With the help of these and a light pen he sets out to prove some things that may be taken for granted, others that are well worth demonstrating, and a number which, perhaps, the leading players will not believe.

He has undoubtedly inquired very deeply into what he calls the mechanics of the game. Probably he is wise when he says that he would give instruction by beginning with putting, and working back to driving; but one doubts whether he would get anybody to submit to such an order. It is an original book, but one wonders whether golf would be worth playing if one had to remember hundreds of things of this kind: "The best position for putting is such a one as will bring the eye, the ball, and the hole into a triangle in a plane at an angle of 90 degrees to the horizon."

THE English Amateur Golf Championship was contested over the Muirfield course last week and ended in a win for Mr. Robert Maxwell, who beat Captain Hutchison in the final. This is Mr. Maxwell's second victory in the Championship, having previously won it in 1903, when the contest was last played at Muirfield, his opponent then being Mr. H. G. Hutchinson, whom he beat by 6 and 8. Mr. Maxwell is in good form this year and recently secured gold medals at North Berwick and Muirfield on successive days.

THE Sirhind Boxing Tournament opens at Simla on Monday next, the 7th instant, and good sport is expected. Owing to the new rule, whereby each regiment may enter not more than four men in each class, the entries are not so numerous as last year, but it is anticipated that the average standard of the boxing will be higher than in previous years. On the 3rd July three grand championship matches will take place in Calcutta, the competitors being chosen from prize winners at the Sirhind Tournament. Substantial purses will be guaranteed, and a strong committee has been formed.

THE management of the Johnson-Burns Fight Syndicate have, in deference to the wishes of a number of applicants, decided to open the pit and gallery at the Grand Opera House to the general public for future exhibitions. This will enable those who are not prepared to pay the higher charges to have an opportunity of witnessing one of the grandest pictures ever exhibited on the cinematograph, and we strongly advise such of our readers who have not yet visited the Opera House to take the opportunity thus afforded them.

THE South India Golf Championship was in progress last week at Ootacamund, twenty-five entered for the Championship. The scoring in the preliminary round was disappointing, the best players coming to grief at some point or another.

The eight best scratch scores were:—Greig, 173; Drayson, 178; Tait, 179; Partridge and Adair, 181; Morrison and Barstow, 182; Downing and Boyd tied for the last place at 183, and on playing off, Boyd won.

The prize for the best scratch score was won by Greig; the Handicap Prize for Class A went to Major Johnston, with 184–20=164. In Class B Worke won with 193–26=167.

In the first round Tait beat Morrison by 5 up and 3; Greig beat Partridge by 3 and 2; Boyd beat Barstow by 5 and 4; Adair beat Drayson at the 19th hole. In the semi-final Tait beat Greig by 4 up and 3; Adair beat Boyd by one hole.

The final brought together Tait of Bangalore and Captain Adair from Wellington, Adair winning by 5 up and 4 to play.

Four teams entered for the Team Cup—Bangalore, Madras, Wellington and Ooty Gymkhana. In the opening round Madras met Wellington, Morrison beat Drayson by 6 up; Greig lost to Wray by 7 down; Partridge beat Pollard by 8 up; Worke beat Bellamy by 7 up and Madras thus won by 14. Downing was unable to play and Worke was his substitute.

In the match, Bangalore vs. Ootacamund Gymkhana, Tait beat Adair by 2 up; Boyd beat Popham by 9 up; Barstow lost to Major Scott by 2. Colonel Aitken beat Bellscott by 7.

The final between Madras and Bangalore ended in the defeat of the Cup holders, Madras winning by the narrowest of margins. Madras, Morrison beat Tait (Bangalore) by 5 up; Greig lost to Boyd, 3 down; Partridge beat Colonel Aitken by one on the thirty-seventh brown; Downing lost to Barstow by one hole. The matches won on either side being equal, the result was in favour of Madras by two holes.

In the first stage of the Ladies' Championship the best eight scores were:—Mrs. Marjoribanks and Mrs. Huddleston, 77; Miss Gass, 84; Miss Hasted, 88; Mrs. Weir, 92; Mrs. Padday, 95. In the first round Mrs. Marjoribanks beat Mrs. Huddleston, and as the others have scratched, she met Miss Morgan in the final. Miss Morgan winning after a close game by 3 up and to 2 play, and thus retaining her title.

Mrs. Marjoribanks and Mrs. Huddleston tied for the Scratch prize, and the Handicap prizes went to Miss Gass, Mrs. Huddleston and Mrs. Gass.

PLAYING for the Parsee Institute against the Gymkhana at Karachi last week, N. M. Dinshaw, the Parsee crack cricketer, carried out his bat for 100—a good innings, marred but by a single chance and that towards the close.

THAT splendid all-round athletic and good sportsman Mr. C. Ismay of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway came by a severe fall while playing polo at Ballygunge on Saturday last. He was picked up unconscious and taken to the Presidency General Hospital, where it was ascertained that his injuries were not very serious and latest advices pronounce him to be doing well. We join his numerous friends in wishing him a speedy recovery.

News reaches us from Simla that Captain W. Stirling, Adjutant, Royal Horse Artillery, Meerut, has been mauled by a panther and his condition causes grave anxiety.

Statistics regarding the number of persons reported to have been killed by wild animals in the United Provinces during 1908 are to hand. These show that last year 194 succumbed, as compared with 159 in the previous year, and 280 in 1906. The increase was largely due to the number of persons killed by leopards in Kumaon, which rose from 6 to 35; and by wolves in the Fyzabad Division. There is a man-eating leopard in Almora district, on whose head a reward of no less than Rs. 500 has been placed. The reported mortality from snakebites decreased from 5,080 to 4,186 persons.

The number of cattle killed by wild animals is reported as 11,083, or nearly double what it was two years ago. Eight thousand of the cattle were killed by leopards alone.

A party of shikaris while out hunting in a jungle at Jessore chased a wild boar into a field in which a cultivator was at work ploughing. The boar charged the unfortunate agriculturist and ripped him severely. He has been brought down to the Medical College Hospital, Calcutta, for treatment, but his injuries threaten to terminate fatally.

The following are the results of the games played in Bombay last week in the All-India Chess Tournament:—Mr. Morbhat beat Mr. Joshi, Mr. Raja Babu beat Mr. Bland, Mr. Bland beat Mr. Waterfield, Mr. Pendurker beat Mr. Unwalla, Mr. Pendurker beat Mr. Bland, Mr. Gadre beat Mr. Raja Babu.

On Monday Mr. Joshi beat Mr. Karle, Mr. Joshi beat Mr. Pavri, and Mr. Unwalla beat Mr. Bland. On Tuesday evening Mr. Waterfield beat Mr. Karle, Mr. Gadre beat Mr. Unwalla, Mr. Raja Babu beat Mr. Pavri, and Mr. Gadre beat Mr. Waterfield. On Thursday evening Mr. Gadre beat Mr. Joshi, Mr. Waterfield drew with Mr. Pavri, and Mr. Morbhat drew with Mr. Bodas.

The first Test match between England and the Australians was played at Birmingham last week and resulted in a win for England. Heavy rain fell during the earlier part of the opening day and play was not started till 5 o'clock when the Cornstalks went in and had lost two wickets for 22 runs when stumps were drawn. Bardsley (2), Cotter (2), Armstrong (10) and Trumper (7), and 1 extra. On Friday Armstrong and Trumper, who were not out overnight, went out to bat, but the wicket was very treacherous and the Australians were all trundled out for 74. The scores being :—W. Bardsley, 2 ; A. Cotter, 2 ; W. W. Armstrong, 24 ; V. Trumper, 10 ; M. A. Noble, 15 ; S. C. Gregory, 0 ; V. S. Ransford, 1 ; C. E. Macartney, 10 ; H. Carter, 0 ; J. O'Connor, 8 ; W. J. Whitby, not out, 0 ; extras 2 ; total 74. Hirst took four wickets for 28 runs and Blythe 6 for 44. England then went in but did not score freely, being finally all out for 121. The scores being :—A. C. Maclaren, 5 ; J. B. Hobbs, 0 ; J. T. Tyldesley, 24 ; C. B. Fry, 0 ; A. C. Jones, 28 ; G. H. Hirst, 15 ; G. A. L. Jessop, 22 ; W. Rhodes, not out, 15 ; A. A. Lilli, 0 ; A. R. Thompson, 6 ; C. Blythe, 1 ; extras 5 ; total 121. Macartney took 2 wickets for 2 runs, O'Connor 1 for 23, and Armstrong 5 for 27.

Going in again the Australians scored 67 for two wickets, Noble 11, Macartney 1, Gregory not out 26 and Ransford not out 28, extra 1, but they could only add 84 to this total on Saturday and were all out for 151. Scores :—Bardsley 6, Cottar 15, Armstrong 0, Trumper 1, Noble 11, Gregory 43, Ransford 43, Macartney 1, Carter 1, O'Connor 13, Whitty, not out, 9, Extras 8, total 151. Blythe took 5 wickets for 58 runs and Hirst 5 for 58. With 105 to get to win, England went in again and knocked off the runs without losing a wicket. Hobbs scoring 62 not out, Fry 35 not out and 8 extras. England thus won by 10 wickets.

Kent beat Northamptonshire by an innings and 160 runs at Northampton.

Sussex beat Gloucestershire at Brighton by an inning and 48 runs.

Surrey beat Derbyshire at the Oval by 283 runs.

Kent beat Oxford University at Oxford by an innings and four runs.

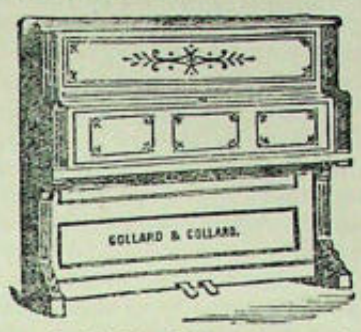
Lancashire beat Essex at Liverpool by an innings and 75 runs.

Cambridge University beat Yorkshire at Cambridge by six wickets.

Essex beat Derbyshire at Leyton by four wickets.

The valuable natural history collections of Lord Walsingham at Merton Hall, Norfolk, will be transferred to the British Museum early next year. In 1901 a large portion of the collection was made over to the British Museum by deed of gift, Lord Walsingham reserving the right to retain it as long as he wished. The collections of butterflies and moths which Lord Walsingham has devoted many years to obtaining are the finest in the world, and they are important not only on account of the great extent of their material, but also because of their scientific value. In addition to the collections he has himself made, Lord Walsingham has acquired and added others that are also of great interest and importance. He is now 66 years of age, and is a trustee of the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, in connection with which his happy suggestion of showing stuffed British birds "in their own homes as they live" was carried out. Besides being an enthusiastic entomologist, Lord Walsingham is a keen sportsman and holds the record for an enormous grouse bag to his own gun in one day's shooting.

The first shoeing of the colt is the most important of all, says a writer in the Horseshoers' Journal. Many a good horse has his speed injured by wrong judgment being used in doing the first job of shoeing. We have heard much on shoeing being an evil necessity, but the greatest of all evils comes when the shoeing of the colt has not been followed along sane lines. In the hands of a qualified trainer trouble rarely starts with the first shoeing, because experience tells the trainer what kind of a shoe should be used on the colt for the first time.



At the age of two years is not too young for the first shoes to be put on, but at this age when the breaking-in process has just been started the bones or muscles of the colt have not yet received their full portion of growth or strength, and in order to avoid breakage to the hoop and other damage to the foot it is advisable when colts are being worked at that age to apply hoof wear. The unfortunate thing about horseshoeing is that some people look to save expenses in shoeing by applying more weight on the feet than the animal is able to carry and do himself justice. A colt two years old that is a speed prospect should not be asked to carry more than three or four ounces, and it is not out of place to have the same weight attached to each hoof.

The proper gaiting of colts is best accomplished by them being driven barefooted, but where this is impossible the least of the evil necessity should be attached to him. As time goes on the weight of the shoes may be increased at each shoeing, but the wise trainer will adhere to the minimum rather than experimenting with other weights of an increased order. At four years of age, after being worked one or two years, the colt should be able to carry any weight that may be deemed necessary for him to wear during his lifetime. But how many times do we find after this period of his life has arrived that a horse is experimented with by a change of weights being applied to the hoof, also a change in the designs of shoe. A speed animal should have his shoeing career settled within one year after his working life starts, and if this is impossible, provided, of course, the trainer knows his business, then there is something radically wrong that will require something more than shoeing to correct.

Notwithstanding the fact that there are men in the horse business who are always willing to charge some form of incompetence or ignorance against the horseshoer, it is, nevertheless, a fact that the horseshoers of to-day understand their trade better than those of past history. The improvement can be credited for the most part to the close association which horseshoers have had with men who have given a lifetime of study to the gaiting of horses. Some of these, however, are not to be considered among the rank of those who understand all of the requirements of a horse in so far as his shoeing is concerned. Take, for instance, one who looks merely at the side of gait without considering the conformation of the animal. It is utterly impossible for such a man to give sound and safe advice to a shoer for the reason that he has not looked into the first requirements of the case, and that is conformation. A horse with a long toe and a low heel, either hind or front, does not possess true conformation, and what nature has denied the art of the shoer must be called into play to correct or remedy whatever defect the abnormal in conformation may have produced. In this particular a shoer will advise a method of shoeing that will bring the fall and ground tread of the foot as nearly as possible under the centre of the leg. I am speaking of the fore part. But in this connection if the hind feet are affected alike to those of the front the same process must be followed, that of centralizing the location of the ground tread with that of the leg.

And the same reasoning follows, if nature has denied truth in conformation to the animal in other respects. The toe-out foot, either hind or front, as a rule invites to the horse offishness in his gait and in many cases a destruction of a natural gait and speed. But in the hands of a competent trainer and shoer the remedy is applied by art and thus the two guides of the work act in concert in producing an improvement in the animal, which, as stated, has not been allotted by nature itself.

But to begin right with the shoeing of the colt and follow it up through the life of the horse, none of those troubles which are found located in the animal which has not been taken aright at the outstart are generally experienced, because the shoeing of the colt has been rightly directed and properly followed from the beginning.

We were pleased to observe that the Cruelty to Animals Bill which was practically the old Spurious Sports Bill revived, was on Friday last rejected by the House of Lords. Lord Newton, in a capital speech, summed up the objections to the Bill in terse sentences. He said it was a Bill not to prevent cruelty to animals but to brand what were called spurious sports and to draw a line between what was genuine and what was spurious. It was as difficult to define a genuine or a spurious sportsman as it was to draw the line between spurious sport and legitimate sport. All sport in this country was more or less artificial, and became more artificial and expensive every year, and it would not surprise him if the present Budget were to put an end to a large amount of legitimate sport. There were three so-called spurious sports aimed at. One of them was pigeon-shooting. Now, was there any essential difference between the production of pigeons for shooting purposes and the production of pheasants and partridges? A great instance of misplaced energy was the crusade directed against the so-called carted stag. The hunting of the carted stag was a meritorious and laudable amusement, and provided an enormous amount of enjoyment and caused a substantial amount of money to be spent in a useful way. Lord Ribblesdale had stated that the carted deer created much interest, that they were kept in the best of condition, given the best food, and there were instances of one of these much misrepresented animals actually coming back in a social and amicable way to his home accompanied by the hounds, which had been pursuing him all day. It was also represented that the deer fed out of the same trough as the dogs. It seemed that the charge of cruelty in connection with the hunting of the tame deer was akin to the charge he once heard made by a foreigner against fox-hunting in this country. "Fox-hunting is an extremely cruel amusement," said this foreign gentleman; "at the very first fence I jumped I spurred my unfortunate horse's eye out." He admitted rabbit-coursing was not only an undesirable form of sport, but was a great incentive to poaching. At the same time, he was disposed to think that the scenes of revolting cruelty said to take place at this sport were exaggerated, while the law, if enforced, was sufficiently powerful to check abuses. He doubted, moreover, whether the rabbits which were coursed by dogs suffered greater pain than those that were wounded in legitimate sport or the rabbits that were caught in steel traps. As the line of distinction to be drawn between the two kinds of sport appeared to him to be too narrow for legislation, for logic, or for common sense, he moved the rejection of the measure. The Bill was accordingly thrown out by a majority of 37.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 21st May 1909.

Throughout the week one has heard and read little beyond wild and whirling words anent the Budget. But whether Mr. Lloyd George is of the "orny-'ided rhino—ceros" order of individual or not, he seems to have stood up against the storm bravely enough and doesn't appear to have been seriously damaged by the fusilades of opprobrious epithets hurled at him.

* * * * * *

But while most people seem to have more or less lost their mental balance over the alleged iniquities of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, it is really comforting to find that we still number among us a few individuals who are capable of conducting a controversy in a calm, judicial spirit, using no violence, resorting to no recrimination. Here, par example, is an advertisement of a new work on "England under the Jews;" the stable-minded publisher words his attractive notice thus:—

"In language free from passion, exaggeration or abuse, this little book describes how the members of a foul Asiatic tribe, composed of thieves, swindlers, Anarchists, and Socialists, receivers, perjurers, forgers and usurers, sweaters, coolies, schnorrers, and blackmailers . . . . fraudulent bankrupts, white-slave traffickers, obscene-literature venders, and tax-dodging plutocrats, have captured and corrupted our Press, debased our politics, lessened our commercial fame, tainted our social life, filled our cities with vice, crime, and disease and in other ways played the ingrate and traitor to the people they batten on and the country they plague."

The italics are mine. For a bland, impartial mild way of presenting an argument isn't this distinctly precious? It reminds me so much of the present day Baboo oratory to be heard in sedition infected areas, or the chaste, unbridled style of the leader matter in certain examples of Anglo-Vernacular journelese which came under my notice some time ago.

Returning home the other evening from a second visit to the Academy this soul-stirring announcement met my gladdened gaze "The water-colour room at this year's Academy contains a picture of more than usual interest." Concluding that I had overlooked the work of some rising Brixton Botticelli or Tooting Titian or that some bright genius had arisen and founded a new school which would enable us to take our rightful place among the rival nations, I investigated. My deductions were soon shattered, for I discovered the picture was the work of a gentleman who, having had the misfortune to lose his arms, holds his brush in his teeth! It is not a tooth-brush he uses, at least not in this connection, I may add. But how soul stirring! The exciting tidings encourage us not to despair of our artistic future.

Already we are beginning to realise a few of the terrors incidental to the new Budget proposals should they eventually become law. Hotel prices have already shown a distinct upward tendency, tobacco and liquor, have become dearer on the very first blush of the dreadful news and I hear that smart folks are beginning to cast around for possible economies. For example, it is stated that some ingenious Society hostesses are declaring that they are afraid of entertaining for fear the pestiferous Suffragette may burst upon their festivities as they have on the deliberations of "our faithful Commons" and so all guests are now to bring their cards of invitation with them! This timidity should I think be regarded with gloomy suspicion—what?

Last Saturday afternoon that eagerly looked for fixture, the Sports Exhibition, was opened at the Agricultural Hall. The centre of the great building is occupied by a tan enclosure, where competitions and contests will be held. Around this arena, and in the galleries above, are displays of all manner of articles useful to the soldier on active service or the civilian in the enjoyment of a holiday. This portion was only partially completed on Saturday, but will, no doubt, fill up later on. A large captive balloon at the farther end of the hall indicated the interest taken at present in aeronautica.

There is to be divertissment enough and to spare, judging by the first week's programme which embraces cowboy horsemanship, gun drill, riding, bicycle polo, physical drill, jumping, tent-pitching, bridge building, bowling, rifle shooting, athletics, boxing, wrestling, clubswinging, gymkhanas, golf, net-ball, vigoro and cycle displays and many tournaments in the big arena. The Exhibition should be popular with Anglo-Indians at home on leave.

Lord Curzon's "National Indian Museum" proposal gains strong support I am glad to remark. With the object of seeking some assurance from his Majesty's Government that the Indian collection at the old South Kensington Museum will not be dispersed, and to make the important suggestion that the various Indian exhibits scattered through the museums of London should be collected under one roof worthy of the Empire, an influential deputation, headed by Lord Curzon of Kedleston, waited upon the President of the Board of Education.

Lord Curzon said that early in 1908 a departmental committee was appointed to draw up a comprehensive scheme for the rearrangement of the products of South Kensington Museum for the benefit of those engaged in trade and for the encouragement of art. The committee reported in favour of classification by material.

He was astonished to notice the slight and even perfunctory fashion in which the collection was referred to. So little was the Indian point of view apprehended that it was suggested that the Indian and Chinese woodwork should be placed together, though there was not the remotest resemblance between them. In 1879 an unfortunate break-up of the collection occurred, and the objects were distributed through the museums of London. They asked that the collection as a whole should not be broken up, as they considered that there should be in London some visible representation of the Indian Empire. They were apt to think of India as if it were an afterthought, an accident, and a casual accretion, instead of one of the foundation-stones of the Empire. What was wanted was not a jumbled anachronism, but a living thing—a building worthy of the Indian Empire, in which it might be possible to collect many of the objects dispersed thirty years ago.

The President of the Board of Education, in reply, said he could not agree with Lord Curzon that Indian art should be considered apart and as a separate thing. He was informed by the highest Indian authorities that Indian art and the art of the Renaissance were closely related. Their object was to bring together the artistic objects under their control so that they could be compared with those of other parts of the world. It might be true that to accurately represent Indian art and life objects peculiar to the country should be kept under one control, but the difficulty of the Board in fulfilment of that object was that they found they had no available site; no building worthy of a great collection of that kind. The deputation might rely upon it that the Government had no intention of doing anything which would cause misgiving among those who represented India in this country. The information which had been given him would be fully considered, and if he, for his part, could do anything to further the object of their representation—viz., that India, so far as possible, should be exhibited under one roof—he would do whatever lay in his power. So far as the larger scheme was concerned, he would be glad to bring it under the notice of his colleagues, Nothing would be done by his Department which was detrimental to the true interests of the Indian Empire ("Hiah, Hiah.")

Theatrical gup it at a premium this week: there is absolutely nothing to chronicle. But one hears of much activity in the near future, chiefly in the form of revivals I believe. Soon a quarter of London's theatres will be disinterring old plays, but I cannot see that this course makes for much public interest. Of course, it may not be possible to get new pieces, but if this is true, what chance have the repertory theatres (that Mr. Frohman and Mr. Trench are respectively about to establish) of obtaining enough plays to interest the public and change their bills three times a week? The theatres that will rely on revivals during a portion of the present season are His Majesty's, the Adelphi, Lyric, St. James's, Garrick, Court Aldwych, and Lyceum!

The opera, however, is going strong. The revival of Gluck's "Armide" was so full of delights, spectacular as well as musical that it is a matter for surprise that no performance of the opera had been given in London since 1906. There is a rich beauty about the music that cannot fail in its appeal, and this rendering was of a higher standard generally than that of any other opera given this season.

When "Armide" was last given at Covent Garden the title role was filled by Mlle. Breval, while M. Laffitte appeared as the kidnapped hero. Each of these scored something like a triumph three years ago, but while neither was in this cast, the respective characters could scarcely have found better interpreters than Mlle. Mary Beral and M. Fontaine. Mlle, Beral was making the first appearance of her career as Armide, and before the opening act was half over her success was assured. Her singing was particularly pure, she gave every possible expression to every passage, and acted also with feeling and a fine appreciation of the demands of the part. Scarcely less good was M. Fontaine as Renaud. He was in excellent voice, and acted very earnestly. Happily enough, Mme. Kirkby Lunn was present to repeat her previous success as La Haine—she gave, in fact, a great picture of "Hate" in fiery robes. M. Crabbe, Mme. Lejeune, Mlle. Miranda, M. Deru, M. D'Oisly, Mr. Moore, and Mr. Murray Davey, all met with success, and much praise is due to the chorus.

"Love watches" at the Haymarket is an attenuated though in parts of neat construction and not altogether wanting in wit. The chief impression left after a visit to the production is that Miss Billie Burke is "starred"—decidedly "starred." The popular ex-musical comedy actress is on the stage nearly all the time; she wears some wonderful gowns; she has to show herself suffering from all manner of emotions, from girlish hysteria to womanly tenderness. So far, well and good.

But the play chosen, is an entertainment of a far from satisfying kind. It is too long; it is overburdened with superfluous characters; it does not know its own mind. And although the laughter and applause it brings are plentiful enough, most of the former is derived from forced "smart" lines and well-known situations, while much of the applause may be regarded largely as being a tribute to the personal popularity of Miss Burke.

The piece is adapted by Gladys Unger from the French of Robert de Flers and Armand Caillavet, and the scene has been allowed to remain in Paris. The plot is of the slightest, but it follows tortuous paths, and wavers between wild farce and highly sweetened sentimental comedy.

Miss Billie Burke as Jacqueline sometimes suggests a schoolgirl and sometimes a full-grown woman. She is not consistent in her acting, but in all her changing moods she looks very nice, which is perhaps the main thing. Mr. Julian L'Estrange plays agreeably as Andre, and Mr. Ernest Lawford as Ernest gets some comic effects with an original sort of eccentricity, but no other member of the cast has an opportunity to act with any distinction.

Happening to be in the vicinity of Manchester last week end I was an amused and interested spectator of what was perhaps one of the greatest gatherings of cyclists known to history. It took place at the pretty village of Rostherne, Cheshire, about ten miles from Manchester. The occasion was a great protest demonstration against a recent action on the part of Lord Egerton of Tatton, a great landowner, who recently issued an edict forbidding his tenants in the district from catering for the requirements of visitors on pain of an immediate notice to quit, the object being to discourage visitors to what is one of nature's beauty spots. This action was strongly resented, and full prominence to the matter was given by the local press. As the nearest railway station is some three or four miles distant, pedestrians were comparatively few, and motorists for the most part ignored the meeting, but cyclists from all parts of Lancashire and Cheshire turned up in thousands—their numbers being estimated at fully 20,000, if not 30,000. Socialist organisations made the most of the opportunity, and made speeches of indignation and protest. A feature of this enormous gathering was the ringing of thousands and thousands of cycle bells in lieu of vocal applause when any telling point was made by the speakers.

THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS' BIG GAME SHOOTING.*

THERE can be in India at the present time no one with the extensive experience of big game shooting that is possessed by the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, who has now published an account of his experiences. For the best part of forty years he has spent a portion of his time annually in this pursuit, accompanied by parties from England and elsewhere who have been so fortunate as to experience his hospitality, and thus obtain opportunities of securing trophies of the great game of the Indian jungles. The bag during the period dealt with—from 1871 to 1907—amounted to 365 tigers, 311 leopards, 207 rhinoceros, 48 bison, 438 buffaloes, 133 bears, and nearly 600 sambar and swamp deer. Such a bag constitutes a most valuable record, particularly as the measurements of a selected number of the larger specimens are given in tabulated form at the end of the book.

The book itself does not contain a detailed account of the Maharajah's experiences; such a narrative would no doubt require many books of the size of the handsome volume before us. But His Highness has related a number of interesting incidents, although the record is not much more than its author describes it—a rough diary. Of large bags we find plenty of instances in these pages; perhaps the red letter day of all was that on which seven tigers were shot, when the present Viceroy formed one of the party. On another occasion 7 buffaloes, 5 rhinoceros, and a bison were killed in a couple of hours; and again 3 bulls and 8 cow bison were shot in a day. No doubt the shooting of cow bison is to be regretted; but presumably the sex of the beasts could not be distinguished in heavy jungle, such as that which characterises the country along the foot of the Himalayas.

In view of the correspondence in the Indian Forester, regarding the deterioration in the size of tigers, to which we referred in a recent issue, the measurements of those animals given by the Maharajah are valuable and interesting. Apparently no measurements were recorded prior to 1885, but in the last 23 years we find a carefully compiled list of 36 big tigers and 24 big tigresses shot. Of these big tigers 12 and of the tigresses 7 only have been shot in the last dozen years. So this record appears to support the theory of deterioration; nor is this surprising considering the enormous number killed during the period dealt with in this volume. For the consequence must be that in course of time most of the old animals are killed off, and large numbers of immature specimens are shot.

We have in the past heard much of eleven and twelve-foot tigers, but the believers in the existence of such monsters of the forest will find nothing here to support their views. Of all the tigers of which a list is here given, only fourteen exceeded ten feet in length, the longest being 10 feet 5 inches. As these were all apparently measured "sportsman" fashion, that is, round the curves of the body, one at the most would have attained ten feet between uprights, for such measurement involves a deduction of not less than five inches. In view of the large experience of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, we may perhaps take it that these records set at rest for ever the question of the length of tigers, and anything much over ten and a half feet, measured "sportsman" fashion, may in future be considered mythological. One tiger weighed 546 pounds, and we notice that one, and not the longest, was nearly 45 inches in height. There are some very large tigresses on the list; one of over 9 feet 5 inches must have been a monster. The record leopard we take to be one of 8 feet 4 inches, shot in 1885, whilst a fine bear measured 7 feet 1 inch, and another weighed 423 pounds. The biggest buffalo killed measured 18 hands, while one bison was just over 20 hands.

The book, which is very well illustrated by numerous photographs, is an excellent example of the work that can be turned out in India, being the production of the Times Press in Bombay. The paper, printing, and binding leave nothing to be desired, and are equal to anything that can be produced at home. The author is to be congratulated on the manner in which he has compiled this valuable sporting record, which will be of use both to sportsmen and naturalists. An excellent map of the country dealt with is to be found at the end of the book.

WITH THE BLACK BEARS OF SOUTHERN OREGON.

IN the vast, almost boundless, pine-clad district of Siskiyous of northern California and the Coast mountains of southern Oregon, the American black bears are still abundant. This is a region of towering peaks, tall crags, beds of lava, pine-whiskered ranges and grassy plateaus. Save for a few mining camps and settlements it is a great solitude—a solitude covering an area of over 4,000 square miles—an area as large as the entire state of Connecticut. Unlike most solitudes, this one teems with vegetation: and the bears and other wild things are almost the sole reapers of the harvests.

At the northern end of California the two great mountain ranges, the Sierra Nevada on the east, and the Coast range on the west, join, or are united by an interlocking chain. This chain is the Siskiyous, and its backbone is the Oregon-California divide. North of the Siskiyous the Coast range continues its zig-zag course along the western edge of Oregon. The Sierra Nevada range also extends northward from the Siskiyous, but in Oregon is called the Cascades. The Siskiyous backbone, though forming a considerable mountain wall, does not by any means reach the great height of the Sierra Nevada range, though there are peaks along the coast that rise 7,000 and 8,000 feet. The main portion of the Siskiyous and of the Coast range in Oregon lifts to a height of from 4,000 to 5,000 feet This to explain why the winters of the district are not severe. On the average altitudes zero weather is seldom known. So, although the snow lies deep in January and February, the bears hibernate but for short time. They are hunted mostly in winter, the fall hunting being seldom earlier than the first of December, and the spring hunting concluding by the first of May.

As most big game hunters know, the American black bear is not always black. The term "black bear" is general and covers the specis Ursus Americanus, which includes the brown and cinnamon. While all three colours are found in the Coast mountains, the black predominates, three of the latter being killed to one of the former. The fur of the Coast country black bear, particularly when taken in mid-winter, is soft and smooth and remarkably glossy. They attain a weight of from 400 to 500 pounds when full grown, though not infrequently "old timers" are killed that weigh as much as 800 pounds. The very big and the very old bears are ferocious, and never hesitate to attack hunter and dogs, and are almost, if not quite, as formidable as a grizzly when cornered. The writer knows of at least six instances in which hunters met death by hand-to-paw combats with the black bears in this district; but it should be added that nearly all these tragedies occurred before the days of the repeating rifle. As a general rule, however, the Coast mountains black bear of to-day is timid, and will dive quickly into the brush like a frightened wild hog when approached.

Though numerous trails lead up to the heights of the Siskiyous from both the Oregon and California sides, it is crossed by only two main high-ways—one being the railroad, with a wagon road following close beside, and the other the Grant's Pass-Crescent City stage road, which crosses the range on the Del Norte and Josephine County line. So if the hunter wishes to try his luck in the southern portion of the bear country, he can outfit at Medford or Grant's Pass and make a part of the journey, a good part in fact, by wagon road. It is a better plan, however, to transport by pack train the whole distance from the railroad. A good wagon road leads to the divide up Applegate river from Medford, on the Oregon side. It is but thirty-five miles from Medford to the summit of the Siskiyous, and the road follows an American Switzerland nearly all the way, taking the hunter at once into the wilderness. The other route to summit of the Siskiyous is by wagon road from Grant's Pass to Holland, on the Oregon side, and from Holland to the state divide by trail. Everywhere on the Oregon-California divide are great forests of spruce and pine.

Without doubt the best and likewise most popular bear hunting grounds in the southern Oregon Coast mountains are Grayback and Bear Camp. The former is a shoulder of the north slope of the Siskiyous on upper Applegate river, fifty-five miles by wagon road and trail from Grant's Pass; the latter is in the heart of the Coast mountains, on lower Rogue river the same distance from Grant's Pass, a little mountain town named in honour of General U. S. Grant, who, while on a tour of inspection of the military posts in southern Oregon, was the first to use the pass through which the railroad was later built, and at the extreme southern end of which the town is located.

If a choice were made between these two it would be in favour of Bear Camp. It is an actual fact that the black brown and cinnamon bears are encountered in this remote district by the drove. It is no trick for even the novice to kill four or five in as many days. This past season a number of them were shot from the camp dinner table or from the blankets, by sportsmen of Grant's Pass.

Though the first twenty miles of the trip to Bear Camp can be covered by wagon, it is best, as already suggested, to go all the way from Grant's Pass by pack pony or burro. The road winds here and there between canon walls, and leads out again over steep declivities. There are places where it rounds a point and literally hangs to the mountain wall. At these places the hunter can see the water of the Rogue boiling over the boulders 1,000 feet below, while not more than a stone's throw across is the opposite wall of the canon. At Galice, a sixty-year-old mining camp which has been many years asleep, the wagon road end; here the hunters take up the trail, camping at night by the river's brink.

But the wild country, the rough country, the "bear country" is still farther on, nearly three days' travel from the railroad. The Rogue, in its tortuous route through the Coast mountains, makes a wide detour to the right, so the hunter leaves it and strikes boldly into the forest. The second day he finds naught but an unbroken wilderness, and must keep to the ridges or become hopelessly lost. There are no roads, no trails, nothing but the backbones of the mountains to follow. On the crest of the highest of these the hunter may gaze in any direction and see naught but range after range of evergreen mountains piled in endless array till in the far distance the purplish-blue of the earth's distant border mingles with the lighter blue of the sky. The ranges are broken by gulches and canons, deep cut, irregular, and each with its little river singing in hollow monotone down in the depths. As he gazes off across the smoke-blue ridges, and surveys the wide world around him, the hunter feels lost in the midst of a great mountain sea. The glittering snow peaks that rise here and there above the mountain billows, are as whitecaps breaking the monotony of an ocean's endless blue. By noon of the third day, or by nightfall at latest, unless some mishap has occurred, the hunter reaches Bear Camp. There is no need of looking for this place on the map. It is one of the very biggest places in the west and yet it has no streets, no policemen and no barber-shops.

It was named by sundry men of the trail, and though as big as the city of New York, no man has yet attempted to establish its boundary lines. Out in those wilds, the beginning and the end of things are very much the same. But the big game hunter cares nothing for the isolation. Arriving at Bear Camp he unsaddles his ponies and dumps the pack, glad to know that he is in the heart of the best bear hunting grounds on the American continent. The grass grows tall and luxuriant, and the ponies, hobbled can browse and feed to their cayuse heart's content. If burros are used they need only to be turned loose with a rope round their necks; they will remain close by camp.

From the latter part of November till the close of December covers the "bear hunting season" out here, no one seeming to have time or inclination to hunt in spring. During that time the bears wax fat on huckleberries, blackberries and sweet acorns. Besides getting into fine condition as to meat, the fur also takes on a depth, gloss and richness not found at any other time The meat of our coast black bear is always savory, but during the hunting season is next best to venison. Bear Camp, or the lower Rogue river country, is particularly favoured by the bears because of the abundance of wild berries and sweet acorns. Entire mountains are covered with the bushes, and to these the bears come in droves from as far north as the Umpqua and as far south as the Klamath. Old time trappers declare that a black bear will drop a honey-dripping beehive for a feast of sweet acorns.

It is not necessary to "hunt" bears in the lower Rogue river wilderness. The hunter will come upon them at any and all hours of the day. They can be seen from a distance, numbering through the undergrowth or feeding in the bushes. They can be heard crashing and snorting through the timber at every turn of the trail. They come blundering into camp at most unexpected moments. As I have already said, many have been shot from the camp table.

From what has been said, both of the topography of the country and of the habits of the bears, it can be seen that hunting from the saddle, or using "b'ar dogs" is not practical in the Coast mountains. The timber and the undergrowth prevent both methods. The hunter must trust to his own legs and his own "scent." All he needs to do is thresh around in the brush awhile. He will certainly encounter Bruin, and it is then up to him to make good.

If the party are out after bears, however, and wish to make a fair and legitimate killing, it is well to follow a systematic plan. After camp is made, one day or possible two can be profitably used is locating the most favourable feeding grounds. These are easily detected. The bear is just like every other animal, human or otherwise; he will eat where the best feasts are spread for him. So wherever there are heavily-loaded berry and sweet acorn bushes, Bruin will come and bring his friends with him. The hunter needs only to take a stand on a prominent place near by, well concealed and with the wind in his favor, for the black bear has a scent fully as keen as that of a deer. As the bears come early to the feeding grounds, the stand must be taken before dawn.

To shoot from cover requires the hunter to be a good long-range shot. The old-timers out here remain steadfast to the ·45-70, a broadside from which will bring down an elephant; but the later guns of smaller bore are preferable. The writer uses a ·35, which has never failed to bring down the game with the first shot. A ·30-30 rifle of any standard make is amply large. A black bear is not difficult to bring down, provided he is hit in the right spot—just behind and below the shoulder. He usually makes a good target, particularly when taken from cover, as he stands on his haunches when he feeds. He takes the same attitude when wounded and forced to attack, thus giving the hunter his chance to put a bullet in the fatal spot. On our last trip into the Bear Camp country we used two days selecting favourable feeding grounds and then placed two men on each stand. We found it advisable to hunt in pairs, as each two could shoot in unison, greatly reducing the likelihood of a wounded bear getting away.

Shooting from a stand, while of course a good sure way of getting a bear, is not so sporty as still-hunting some particular bear. And although I have attained years of discretion, and have a wife and family at home, I admit a fondness for venturing in the still woods by my lonesome on the lookout for a certian whopping big black bear I know hangs around on the outskirts of Bear Camp. I have seen him but once, and that time under peculiar circumstances, not to say embarrassing. I had gone fishing but a hundred yards or so from camp, and hadn't a gun on me, when I suddenly found myself a rather unwilling, and yet highly amused spectator of a bit of serio-comic bear vaudeville. I was quietly and patiently watching my line, when suddenly there was a great commotion on the bank above me, and while my eyes nearly popped out of my head I stood open-mouthed and watched a bear fight that, for real, lively scrapping had all the dog fights and cat fights one might see in a life time beat a mile. They were a big, overgrown two-year-old cinnamon (which I shot the next morning) and I believe the middle-weight bear champion of all the coast country, a sleek, quick, powerful well-set-up fellow with a mealy nose and the worst temper I ever saw in the animal kingdom. He walloped his big yellow adversary pretty much as he liked for about five minutes, the latter meanwhile squalling bloody murder. When the cinnamon at last broke away, rolled down the bank and swam the creek, the black fellow stood looking at me for another five minutes, seeming all the time just about decided to also give me a dressing down. I have been looking for that bear ever since, and I am sure he stays in the Bear Camp country, because he has been seen several times and shot at twice. But he is no ordinary fool bear, and the hunter who takes his hide will earn it. I might add that he will have a mighty good hide, too—when he gets it.

This is a great country for the man who goes a cruising with a packsack. In the fall it rarely if ever rains, and one can sleep out in the mountains without other cover than a blanket and pack-cloth. And by going on foot a man can get into sections that are otherwise inaccessable. Of course, the pack-sack man does not go in for hides or heads, but confines his shooting to getting fresh meat when needed. He goes to get away from a desk, perhaps, and to do as he darned pleases for a change—an impossibility if travelling with pack animals. And, of course, there is always the change that a man may strike ore in the country, wherefore the pack-sack tripper carries his miniature pick and pan.

The best bear story I ever heard was told me by one of these amateur prospectors, whom I met in the Siskiyons on my last bear hunting trip. He was not the typical, rough-and-ready western man, wearing a pack made of a grain bag. He might have stepped out of a comic weekly except that no caricaturist could have equalled his equipment. He had made a, to me, rather astonishing trip, having penetrated the mountains far out the usual course of hunters and done it without the aid of map or compass, and with no other weapon than his nickel-plated miner's pick.

"Have you seen much game?" I asked.

"None at all," he replied, in his dry falsetto.

"No bear!" I exclaimed, knowing he had come right through Bear Camp.

"Oh, yes," he returned. "Quite so. Now that you mention it, I dare say that is what it was. Didn't occur to me, you know. I was so very angry, don't you see, I took no pains to identify the brute."

"Why, what did he do to you?"

"What did he do? Why, nothing, of course. You see, the little beggar ran and climbed up a stump. And he would't come down so I could obtain a decent photograph of him. Sat up there half a day, fifty feet from the ground. Then his legs got tired holding on, I imagine, for he started in to squaul. And, do you know, the brute must have given me away; for pretty soon his mother, I snppose it was, came hurrying up and I had to clear out. Four times as big as him, she was, and very angry, I assure you."

"Did you run?" I asked, laughing.

"Oh, not at all! Not at all," said he. "But still I thought it best not to remain." He paused and stroked his stubbly chin reflectively.

"By jove!" said he, finally. "How very interesting. I should have thought to photograph the old one—she looked quite savage, I assure you."

"Such a picture would have been unique, to say the least," I replied.

"Quite so," said he.—D. H. S. in Recreation.

ARE FISHERMEN REALLY LIARS?

MANY unworthy sayings have been uttered at one time and another, and by those who ought to have known much better, about anglers as a race. That threadbare old joke, attributed to Johnson, about a fishing rod having a worm at one end and a fool at another, has undoubtedly told against us as a race, whilst scarcely less hurtful was Byron's:—

> And angling, too, that solitary vice, > whatever Izaak Walton sings or says:
> The quaint old cruel coxcomb in his gullet
> Should have a hook and a small trout to pull it.
> —Don Juan.

—lines which made his acquaintance, Capt. Medwin, a keen angler, so cross that he felt constrained to observe in his "Angler in Wales," "he (Byron) was always straining at some paradox to startle with. I believe he never threw a fly in his life; nor, except at Newstead, in some dull pond, ever wetted a line nor used any other bait than a worm." Infinitely more frequent, however, than imputations of folly and of cruelty and vice against us anglers, are direct charges of untruthfulness. People who do not fish at all, as well as people who occasionally handle a rod, with the object apparently of either fastening their hooks into their own clothes, into those of their indiscreet companions by the river side, or in fact into any conveniently near object other than a fish's mouth, are very fond of asserting that all anglers are liars. They say that we exaggerate the weight of the fish we land, we hugely exaggerate the weight of those we hook but do not land; more, they say sometimes that we never really get anything at all save a mere fingerling, a stickleback, or a minnow. We might be able to very easily refute the statements and arguments of these traducers of our beloved craft were it not for the fact that we have treacherous folk within our own ranks. Anglers are traditionally and thoughtlessly fond of a good story; so much so, indeed, that, all others failing, they will often listen, to, and laugh heartily over, jokes at their own expense as a race. We say race because, though we have frequently known our friend Splitcane chuckle indecently at a tale which tells against Greenhart, Steelcentre, or the race of anglers as a whole, we have never known more than a sickly smile glimmer over his countenance at a tale which illustrates how he himself—Splitcane—grossly exaggerated the sport he had amongst the sockdolagers last may-fly season, or how overstated the weight of a particular trout he killed (or lost) by a matter of a couple of pounds. Is there any sportsman who completely relishes stories which show how he has been convicted of exaggeration? We have never met him.

It is only natural that when there are constantly to be found within their own ranks folk who love to tell stories, the invariable point of everyone of which is the little weakness of fishermen in regard to the size and number of the fish hooked, anglers should come to be regarded as, to say the least, prone to exaggeration. And then from an exaggeration to a lie is not a very far cry. Occasionally really good anglers tell these stories of one another, and of the whole race. More often they are spread about, sown in every quarter, especially the Press, by persistent, but fearfully unsuccessful members of the craft. An angler who has been out all day and taken nothing, and who, moreover, rarely, if ever, does hook anything sizable, is not always inclined to turn a charitable ear towards the stories his more fortunate companions in the angling line have to tell about the day's sport and the day's losses. Such a disappointed angler will, you may have noticed, not uncommonly suggest in a general way, without naming any particular person, that all anglers are liars; and, if opportunity offers, point his calumnious remarks by various stock anecdotes. Thus there is the well-known story about the fish that was so big that when it was for a moment lifted by the American angler from Lake Michigan, it caused the level of the water to perceptibly sink. Then we recollect some joke about a fish that Jones once hooked. The fish, as Jones pictured it to his friends, was an immense one; the fish, as Jones imagined it to be, was big enough in all conscience, but still not quite so gigantic; whilst the fish that Jones's friends really knew it to be was, of course, a sprat. These and many others, told and retold in and out of the angling inn, are for ever hammering fresh nails into what reputation for truth may still be left to a few anglers—it is but a shred of a reputation now amongst a large number of people who know nothing about angling, and whose one idea of a fisherman is that of a luckless individual sitting in a chair in a punt on a pouring wet day drinking Scotch whisky and watching a float.

Our own belief is that the average angler is quite as great a lover of truth as the average gunner—indeed, he is often a keen shot himself—the average golfist, or the average cyclist. "One says we are liars all," and it is certain that, if you are ready to accept the statement that all anglers are liars, you will be well on the way to the only more sweeping one that all men are. No, we feel certain that the assertion is a base libel. Anglers are not liars; they are persons with a little imagination, with a love of romance, of mystery. They are always hungering after big fish, some fish, they feel sure, which lurk in the dark, deep holes of their favourite stream and must ultimately come to their hook. Such fish when hooked and lost will, naturally properly, be depicted in glowing colours; and as for exactness in regard to weight, which decriers of our craft are so fond of saying, does not obtain amongst anglers, we would point out this—that in the course of our angling experiences, we never knew a fisherman describe his two pound trout as a one pound fifteen ounce one. Does not that fact speak in favour of the fisherman being tolerably accurate and truthful

Shooting.

LANCASTER'S NON-FOULING ·280 RIFLE.

THE phenominal behaviour of the ·280 cartridge at Bisley last year, was a matter of interest to all those interested in shooting, but while it has figured prominently on the rifle range its possibilities as a sporting cartridge have not been fully developed in a commercial sense, though the immense benefits accuring from the enormous flattening of trajectory, which is its chief feature, have been thoroughly proved. The high velocity attributes of the new cartridge as regards sporting rifles gives the shooter the immense advantage of making little or no allowance in his sighting for objects taken within a 500 yards range. Mr. Lancaster, the pioneer of this cartridge in sporting rifles, recently invited the attention of the Editor of the English Field to a double barrel hammerless ejector, with which some fine diagrams had been produced. The shooting experts of our London contemporary were also invited to make and witness special tests. Preliminary experiments to determine velocity were conducted with the following results:—

Velocity Tests from right barrel of Lancaster ·280 Rifle.

140 grains hollow-point bullet.

1. 2755 f.s. mean velocity over 60 yards.
2. 2777 ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
3. 2785 ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
4. 2785 ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
5. 2828 ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,

Av. 2786 f.s. Corresponding muzzle velocity, 2934 f.s.
Same powder charge and 145 grains sharp-pointed bullet. One round only: 2960 f.s. Corresponding muzzle velocity, 2990 f.s.

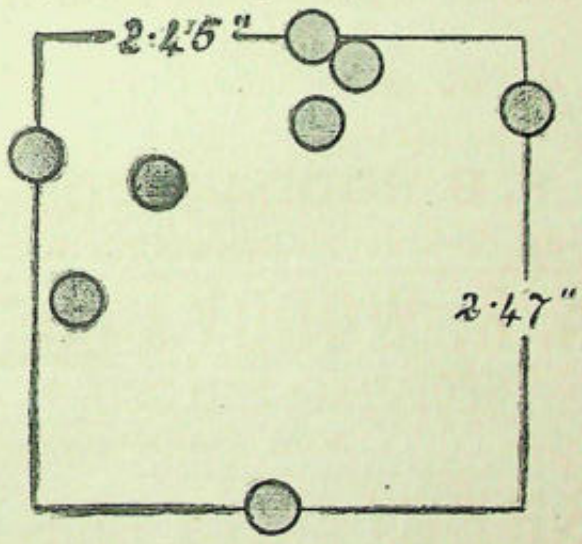
The above figures follow so closely those previously recorded for the same weight of bullet, that no special remark is called for. The chief test therefore, resolved itself into a trial of the shooting properties of the rifle, having special reference to the fact that it is the first double ·280 that has ever been brought before the public. Seven shots with the single rifle gave groups measuring on the average about 1½ inches square. Mr. Lancaster has set up with the rifle under notice, a new and phenomenal standard of shooting by double barrels, as judged by the groups here represented. Shooting was commenced immediately on arrival at the ground, the rifle being loaded in both barrels, the right and left triggers being fired in due order. The result of the first eight shots is shown in target No. 1 herewith. An attempt to make a better diagram was abandoned after three shots had been fired at the second target. The third target is here reproduced, and, like the other, is of extraordinary interest, as showing the remarkable agreement of the two barrels. The shooting expert was questioned as to whether he in any way favoured one barrel relatively with the other so as to bring their shooting into such close coincidence. The assurance having been given that no such allowance was made, an independent test was at once made by the Field, with the result shown in target No. 4 here reproduced. The series of eight shots at 100 yards, four from the right barrel and four from the left, were fired right off, without sighters or spotting any of the individual rounds. That the centres of the eight shots so fired fell inside a 2¼ inch square provided the necessary independent evidence that the two barrels had actually achieved the remarkable similarity of grouping which is displayed in the two previous targets.

One of the barrels has been sighted up to 1,000 yards, for what utility reason is not quite clear; but the fact remains that long-distance sight have been fitted in addition to the ordinary sporting set, and the target at 1000 yards has been found and held over a series of shots. Mr. Lancaster wishes it to be mentioned that the rifle is a double hammerless side-lock weapon, with a V mainspring for cocking the tumbler, and a two-piece roller ejector; also that the barrels which have achieved the results here shown, have been rifled on the non-fouling smooth oval bore spiral rifling system.



EXACT SIZE.

TARGET NO. 1.—ROUNDS 1 TO 8. Making eight shots at 100 yards from right and left barrels alternately of Lancaster's double-barrel ·280 rifle (with his celebrated non-fouling smooth oval bore spiral rifling).

EXACT SIZE.

TARGET NO. 3.—ROUNDS 12 TO 19. Making eight shots at 100 yards, same conditions as target No. 1, but a still better group.

EXACT SIZE.

TARGET NO. 4.—ROUNDS 20 TO 27. Made by the Field representatives, same conditions as other targets—not interesting as a feat of marksmanship, but valuable as a proof that the two barrels strike the same spot when the same aim is taken.

BIRD NOTES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD"

SIR,—The "rainy weather bird," the Pied Crested Cuckoo, is early this year. I saw the first specimen on the 18th instant. On the same day I saw a Greenshanks, an unusually late date for this bird.

COLOURING OF ANIMALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In the leader of your issue of 27th May, it is stated that Mr. Pocock is of opinion that "all animals with white or partially white backs and black bellies are examples of warning colouration," also that "these conditions ought to be for the purpose of rendering the creatures in which they are developed as conspicuous as possible."

Is not this conclusion absolutely at variance with the whole doctrine of evolution as generally accepted at the present day. By whatever name we call it, "Darwinism," "The survival of the fittest," or "Natural Selection," the basis of the doctrine is that nature tends to perpetuate the variety which gains the minutest advantage over its fellows in its fight for existence. Because of its advantage it survives and transmits to its progeny the advantage which enabled it to do so. Those without the advantage die. To have a "warning colouration" must be a disadvantage to an animal in obtaining its food, and according to "Natural Selection" those which tended to a more pronounced "warning coluration" would die and those which tended to less would live. Time would therefore tend to eliminate the "warning colouration" altogether, it is incompatible with the theory of evolution. Whatever the explanation of the colouring in question, it must be to the animal's own advantage or the advantage of its species, not to the advantage of its enemies.

Evolution has produced in the rabbit, a colour adapted to its surroundings, and which under ordinary circumstances does not attract attention to it, yet when it runs the white under its seat betrays it at once, and this especially in bad light when they are out feeding. No doubt the reason here is that all the other rabbits in the neighbourhood should at once be informed of the approach of danger.

With due deference to Mr. Pocock I represent that distinct stripes or markings of an animal when examined closely, do not necessarily make it more easy to see in its natural habit under the ordinary circumstances of its existence. The stripes of the tiger or even the zebra do not make it more conspicuous at a certain distance. One should look at an animal with two sets of eyes, those of the beasts it preys on, and those of the beasts which prey on it. Its colouring will be found such as to give it an advantage in the first case in stalking its prey, and in the second in avoiding its enemy. Thus it survives.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

SHILLONG SPRING MEETING.

STEWARDS:

N. Bonham Carter, Esq., I.C.S. | E. C. S. Baker, Esq.
J. T. Rankin, Esq., I.C.S. | Major A. Wilson, 8th Gurkha Rifles.
R. H. Henderson, Esq., C.I.E. | M. H. Chapman, Esq.
Honorary Secretary:—C. H. Holder, Esq.

The Shillong Races just concluded may be considered averagely successful from a local point of view, as the station ponies were successful in nine out of the ten races, but from a racing point of view both Mr. Holder and the Stewards would have preferred to have seen more outside competition. Mr. Holder issued an attractive card, and with one of the prettiest courses in India to race on, the paucity of entries must have come as a great disappointment, and outside people cannot understand why the Assam sportsmen do not largely patronize these meetings. Mr. Shillingford was the only outside sportsman to come to the meeting bringing three, in Gowan, Primrose and Fairyland, but he experienced no luck at all, winning only one race, on the first day, with Primrose. The only race of the meeting was in the "Dibrugarh Purse" on the first day when Primrose won by a nose after a desperate tussle with Ivy. The remaining nine races were merely runaway affairs, all the winners getting home with lots in hand. The handicaps on the second day appeared to be hugely appriciated by the public, for they touched the spot in each of the five races, and had the satisfaction of seeing their candidates coming away from their fields and winning in a canter every time. Magazine appears to be an uncommonly smart one and we should not be surprised to see her figuring at the Calcutta Monsoon Races. Mr. Deakin, by winning every race on the card on the second day, qualifies to enter into that select band of horsemen to whom this unique feat is a matter of pardonable pride. He had altogether seven wins in nine mounts in the two days. Messrs. Russell and Company were present, and as they appeared to offer very fair prices they must have been knocked about a bit by the finish of the meeting. The stand was quite full on both days and there was a very large attendance outside. All the arrangements of the meeting, and the hospitality dispensed, were of that order which has always been obtained under Mr. Holder's management. The following are the particulars:—

First Day, Wednsday, 26th May 1909.

The Tally-Ho Purse.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, Rs. 25 to the third. A hurdle race for ponies 14-1 and under. 1 mile over 6 flights of hurdles.

Betting: Evens Miss Mac, 2 to 1 Stockdale, 3 to 1 Ladybird. Ladybird took up the running from the start and led till the distance when Miss Mac commenced to close up. Nearing home Miss Mac joined issue but the other was done and the latter had no trouble in winning very easily by a length. Ladybird declared 6lb. overweight.

The Dibrugarh Purse.—Rs. 150 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, Rs. 25 to the third. For ponies 14-1 and under. 6 furlongs.

Mr. A. J. Shillongford's br aus m Primrose, 11st. 5lb. ... ... Bikram Singh 1

The Narayangunge Purse.—Rs. 150 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, Rs. 25 to the third. For ponies 14-0 and under. 3 furlongs.

Betting: 6 to 4 on Primrose, 3 to 1 each Magazine and Glenlea, 5 to 1 Ivy, 12 to 1 Fairyland.

To an uneven start in which Ivy was unfortunate, Magazine was the first to break the line, followed by Glenlea and then Primrose. This was the order up to the post, Magazine winning a nice race very easily, Primrose went up to Glenlea nearing home, but the latter running very gamely just secured second money by a head.

Second Day, Friday, 28th May 1909.

The Tezpur Handicap.—Rs. 150 to the winner, Rs. 50 to the second, Rs. 25 to the third. Handicap for ponies 14-1 and under. 7 furlongs.

CHESTER.

Begun, continued, and ended under the most pleasant conditions, the Chester Meeting of 1909, will long evoke pleasant memories, if only on account of the glorious weather that prevailed. Friday was the most summer-like of the three days, as, despite almost half a gale—enough to blow the skiffs off the river—the temperature in sheltered spots was warm enough for July, the only drawback to a perfect day being the whirlwinds of dust at the crossways and the meetings of the streets. The going was perfect. Results :—

The conditions for the [illegible] lengths between the second and third. were perfect, save, perhaps, for the [illegible] the spring foliage of the big elms and horse chestnuts in the park into billowy waves. The old adage this time was contravened, as doubtless the wind neither good for man nor beast was responsible for the continuation of the bright spring weather which has dominated the week, and but for the breeze the heat would have been almost unseasonable. The course was in good condition. Results :—

The Jubilee Handicap, instituted some twenty-two years ago, has established the fact that a good start is half the battle, as distinction was at once conferred on the race by the success of such high-class performers as Bendigo, Minting, and later on Victor Wild. Moreover, the race shows the capacity of real good horses to give weight away to worthy opponents on the Kempton course. This year the popular handicap idol was undoubtedly Dean Swift, and with a bit of pull on the City and Suburban weights it was thought and hoped that with White Eagle out of the way he would atone for his somewhat unlucky defeat at Epsom. The Americans also had a grand horse running in Fair Play II., while His Majesty, who had won this race with Imp, was thought to have a great chance with Perrier, and Rushcutter's friends were legion. The resuscitated Galvani, Ebor, and Succour helped to make it a more open and interesting affair. Details :—

LANG

NEW ·470 BORE.

VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridge as originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments extending over three weeks, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907 : ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

THE BEST DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

7 Shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle

positions occured till half a mile had been covered, when Succour and Ebor raced past Simonson, these being pursued by Fair Play II., Perrier, Galvani, Wise Mason, and Dean Swift. Entering the straight Ebor drew up and headed Bracelet with Succour and Glavani in close attendance, just clear of Dean Swift, Perrier, Simonson, and Wise Mason. A quarter of a mile from home Galvani, Perrier, and Simonson were beaten, as also was Bracelet in the next hundred yards, whereupon Dean Swift (on the out side) closed with Succour and obtained second place opposite Tattersall's enclosure, but gamely as he struggled, the "Dean" failed to get on terms with Ebor, who won by three parts of a length; a neck between the second and third. Primer crossed Hymettus at the start and the pair were knocked out of their stride. Time—2mins. 2⅘secs.

NEWMARKET.

On Tuesday morning the Heath was quite hard, and the tan carefully laid down, had lost its savour and was bleached by sun and wind. A step in the desired direction was made by a shift in the wind, but the sky was cloudless and steely grey as before, and rain seemed far off. The presence of the King, who arrived on the Heath before the first race, attended by Colonel Holford, ensured a representative attendance in the Jockey Club enclosure to welcome His Majesty, who was looking very fit and well. As several of Newmarket's principal patrons were entertaining house parties for the week, the Birdcage between whiles afforded a more animated spectacle than on the Two Thousand Guiness day, while Tattersall's and the further rings were well filled. Results:—

That we are not yet out of the realms of winter was proved by the killing frost that blackened the blossoms on Monday night. After a brilliant dawn, the sky became flecked, and finally a dull grey canopy shut out the blue, giving opportunity for wagers outside of racing as to how long the threatened rain would hold off—from two hours to the end of the meeting and sunset at a decreasing scale of odds. The going was, of course, on the hard side, and the attendance in the far enclosures by no means a big one, although the Newmarket Stakes occupied principal place on the card. Results:—

Rarely has the last day's racing of the Second Spring Meeting cut up so badly for lack of runners. When the west wind brought the much-longed-for rain on Wednesday night, with a steadiness that suggested a good spell, trainers, taking heart, gave the necessary stable orders for this or that candidate to be treated for the morrow's engagement, but the wind veering round again, brought another night's frost, and though the sun shone brightly a nipping and eager air made a great coat acceptable to the early birds. Newmarket had but few strangers within its gates till the arrival of the specials, and these brought anything but a full complement the bulk of the attendance coming from the club enclosure and Tattersall's ring, the holiday-makers being scantily represented. TROPICAL DEBILITY.
HOW TO FIGHT IT.

Of all the evils which the inhabitant of the torrid zone is called upon to endure, the greatest are, perhaps, the deadly debility and nervous depression which are the forerunners of the more serious ills so rife in warmer latitudes. Physical fitness should be the constant watchword; healthy nerve force must be the subject of the most earnest consideration. Happiness, nay life itself, hangs in the balance.

When exhausted Nature fails readily to respond to the extraordinary demands made upon the system by the exigencies of climate, Science once more comes forward with precisely the needed remedy. Sanatogen, the tonic food, is the means discovered whereby impaired vitality may be safely and rapidly restored.

Sanatogen has a singular effectiveness. It is not as a tonic only that it stands unrivalled; it is, besides, a perfect food, extremely rich in just those properties necessary to the perfect nourishment of the depleted system. The basis of Sanatogen is the casein or "curd," the nitrogenous principle of milk. Nitrogenous foods are our bodybuilding ones. They are demanded constantly by the body for the formation, and for the repair of its tissues. United with the casein, we find glycero-phosphoric acid, which is an all-important constituent of the brain and nervous system. This is the reason then, why Sanatogen has obtained its high reputation. It repairs the wear and tear of the most vital parts of our frames, and above all it gives to brain and nerve their essential food in precisely the form in which they are capable of readily receiving and assimilating it.

Doctors in India have not been slow to see the wonderful advantages in the use of Sanatogen among their patients, and a great many of them have written setting out the success that has attended the use of this preparation. They have used it with the greatest success in Malaria, Dysentery, Enteric Fever, cases of Plague and Cholera, as well as amongst those who are suffering from ailments due to disordered liver, spleen or digestive system. One or two of their opinions are worth considering.

Thus Dr. H. H. W. HART, Hapur Remount Depot, Babugarh, United Provinces, India, writes:—

I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of Malaria, Enteric Fever, Dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I have used it regularly now in my practice for the past two years, and in no single instance have I been disappointed with its results. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen. I could quote numerous cases where the administration of Sanatogen was followed by immediate and marked amelioration of the symptoms. I cannot speak too highly of its value, and I certainly consider it the best of artificial foods."

Whilst Dr. C. R. NAYLOR, Bangalore, South India, writes:—

"It was through my influence that your excellent medium of nutrition—Sanatogen—was introduced into South India, and I have reason to be proud of my success in doing so, for I consider that I have thereby conferred a benefit upon suffering humanity. I have found it unequalled by any other food when the internal arrangements of the body (whether in children or adults) are in want of a stimulating nutrient. When milk, diluted to any degree, cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. In many almost hopeless cases of plague, where heart failure has been threatening, I have found Sanatogen helpful in getting the patient to turn the critical corner, and it has admirably aided my treatment of this fell disease. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic Cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrated. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

A physician has written a remarkable treatise entitled "How to Keep Well in India," a copy of which will be forwarded, post free, to all who apply to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen can be obtained from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, and of all chemists, etc., in India.

ATHLETICS.

THE AMATEUR MARATHON.—Running in fine style, H. F. Barrett, of the Polytechnic Harriers, won the amateur Marathon race from Windsor to Stamford Bridge on Saturday, in 2hrs. 42mins. 31secs.

There were 12,000 spectators at Stamford Bridge for the annual Polytechnic sports. Athletic contests, the Marathon race, cycle events, boxing bouts, and a gymnastic display by the male and female members of the institute were occupying attention in the arena.

Among the principal events were the series of matches between the Polytechnic men and a team from the Stade Francaise. The former gave overwhelming defeat to the Frenchmen, easily winning three out of the four events. In the fourth—the mile—they supplied both second and third men, Quilboeuf being the only member of the "Stade" to distinguish himself. After a grand finish with McNicol, whom he overhauled thirty yards from the tape, he ran the mile in 4mins. 37-2/5secs.

The attack on Sid Thomas' twelve-mile record, made on 22nd October 1892, of 62mins. 43secs., was unsuccessful, although the onslaught was made by such fine runners as A. E. Wood, A. J. Robertson, J. E. Deakin, B. C. Long, and M. Breber, of the Metropolitan Club, Paris. Wood led from the second mile to the finish, putting in a splendid stride all the way, and winning by 120 yards from Robertson. His time for the twelve miles, however, was much short of the record—65mins. 23-1/5secs. The Frenchman, who was fourth, came in for a tremendous ovation from the crowd, as he completed the distance for two laps on his own.

The entries for the scratch races and the handicaps were distinctly of good quality as well as quantity. The 440 scratch went to A. Patterson, of the Salford Harriers, in 52-3/5secs.; the 880 yards handicap being won by A. W. Allan, of the Polytechnic H. (50), by a yard from W. A. Lines, Queen's Park Harriers (65), in 1min. 58-1/5secs. The two cycle handicaps at a quarter-mile and half-mile were won respectively by T. W. Evans, of the Polytechnic C.C. (38), in 33secs., and E. C. Piercy, of the same club (73), after a splendid race with R. H. Clarke, of the Belle Vue (65), in 1min. 8-4/5secs.

In the 9st. 8lbs. boxing tournament T. Tee (Lynn B.C.) defeated J. H. Lambert (Belgrave B.C.), the 9st. amateur champion.

Sixty-seven competitors passed the doctor at Windsor, and they were all sent off to a capital start at the pistol-fire by Lord Desborough. The course, 26 miles 385 yards, followed the Olympic Marathon route as far as Uxbridge, and thence lay through Southall, Ealing, Kew, Barnes, Putney, and Fulham to Stamford Bridge, where the runners made two circuits of the track before finishing the full distance.

P. Lizandier, of the Metropolitan Club, Paris, went off with a strong lead at the start, with J. C. Hayes, the Irish runner, second. The Frenchman ticked off the first mile in 5mins. 6secs., which was obviously much too warm a pace to last. At five miles Lizandier was still ahead in 27mins. 56secs., with Hayes still second.

About three miles further on R. Stilton, a Finchley Harrier, took the lead, but only temporarily. Lizandier then went on, with Hayes second, the Frenchman's time at ten miles being 56mins. 57secs.

Hayes soon after went to the front. Then F. Lord, Wibsey Park Harriers, Liverpool, and H. Green, Sutton Harriers, began to put in an appearance among the leaders, and at fifteen miles Green, who had been moving in splendid style, was at the head of affairs, in 1hr. 28mins. 4secs. Lord was close up to him, while Hayes and Lizandier were only twenty yards behind him. Seventeen miles saw Lord in command, but Green overtook him two miles further on, and a great tussle took place between the pair, of whom Lord had the lead again, passing the twentieth-mile point at 1hr. 58mins. 57secs.

Lord's pace, however, told its tale, and it was soon afterwards that H. F. Barrett, of the Polytechnic Harriers, began to forge his way to the front. He was travelling at a great, but sure, pace, and at Putney Bridge held a supreme lead. Running on to the finish with grand judgment, Barrett was first to enter the Stamford Bridge arena and receive the artillery fire of plaudits from the big crowd. He had completed one lap on the cinder track when Lord entered, Barrett's time for the full distance being 2hrs. 42mins. 31secs.

The positions of the first ten men and their times were :—

ROWING.

'VARSITY ROWING.—Oarsmen on Isis and Cam have had glorious weather for Eights' practice so far, albeit strong winds have made things unpleasant at times. Excellent progress is being made by the Oxford crews, and some most exciting racing is assured from the 20th to the 27th instant. The Christ Church-Magdalen fight for ahead of the River honours looks like being a desperate one. The latter have taken some time to settle down, but are now improving daily, with Mr. Somers-Smith again at stroke. The "House," however, are even more forward in their work, and, on latest form, will take a deal of catching. Other boats coming on fast are New College, St. John's, Balliol, Trinity, University, Brasenose, Oriel, Wadham (holders of the "Thames"), and several of the lower ones. They will row in three divisions for the first time this year, and the Australian cricketers—who are to be in Oxford from the 24th to the 27th—will get a good idea of college rowing. Yet another Old Blue has "solved the great mystery" since one's last in the person of Mr. A. G. P. Lewis (Chancellor of the Diocese of Llandaff and Stipendiary Magistrate for Pontypridd since 1905). He rowed for Oxford vs. Cambridge in 1870 and also placed the 'Varsity Pairs to his credit in 1871. It will be good news to many to hear that Mr. McLean—not the famous old Oxford Blue, as was so generally supposed—is now rapidly recovering from his recent bad accident. It will be remembered the two famous Oxford Blues of that name died years ago, "H." some time before "D. H.," who was, alas, killed in the Boer War. "Mays" practice at Cambridge is being carried on most vigorously just now, despite intervening C.U.B.C. events, which have interfered with the Jesus College work somewhat. Mr. Stuart cannot be persuaded to row for "Hall." It is said that those, however, who seem to think this means their losing premier position may yet find themselves badly mistaken. Directly they get thoroughly together in their proper racing order they will become formidable. Jesus have been changing about—like so many other crews—and have also yet to properly settle down. "First" (who have discarded swivel rowlocks), Lady Margaret, Pembroke (with Mr. Forster as mentor), "Third" (with the president and Mr. Arbuthnot included), Caius, Emmanuel, King's, and very many of the lower boats, are all beginning to get into form.

Unless something is done to revive interest in the C.U.B.C. Pairs and Lowe Double Sculls contests they are likely to become almost farcical for the future. The Pairs attracted three entries last year, and only two this; while the Lowe Double Sculls attracted three crews in 1908, and it is doubtful if more than two will dispute matters on Friday and Saturday next. What a falling-off in interest and excitement from the palmy days of the "eighties" and later! It is the greater pity, because, as everybody knows, watermanship is learned in small boats much better than in eights. Not so very long ago a distinguished "Diamonds" winner emphasised this point in a powerful article, and pleaded hard for the encouragement of sculls, pairs, and fours work on Isis and Cam in particular. The only remedy that I can see is to adopt Mr. "Steve" Fairbairn's suggestion, and bar mixed crews for these two events, i.e., do away with the present system of Blues from various colleges amalgamating for racing purposes. On all form, Messrs. G. E. Fairbairn and H. W. Swanston (Jesus), the Blues, should readily win the Lowe Double Sculls on Saturday next, in which case, the C.U.B.C. secretary will bring off his second successive triumph. Owing to the indisposition of Mr. Fairbairn (Jesus), who has injured his shoulder, the Magdelene Paris race has been postponed until a more convenient time. Messrs. Williams and Thomson could have rowed over, but, in the most sportsmanlike fashion, declined to do so.

TENNIS.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—By beating Mr. N. S. Lytton at Queen's Club, on Saturday, "that versatile crank" Mr. E. H. Miles gained the title of amateur tennis champion for the eighth time in eleven years. The match was rather disappointing. The score was called 2 all in the first set, but Mr. Lytton lost the fifth game after being 40—love, and in the end Mr. Miles won the set with little difficulty. Mr. Miles had matters very much his own way in the second set, Mr. Lytton taking only the sixth game. The latter made a good fight in the third set, but although he got to 5—4,, Mr. Miles won a love rubber, after little more than an hour's play. Mr. Lytton played admirably on the floor at times, and laid down a good many short chases, but his mistakes were very frequent. It was not often that he delivered his "railroad" service accurately, while he failed on a number of occasions to get Mr. Miles's service over the net. The winner, as usual, played very vigorous tennis. His facility for finding the grille was remarkable, but his play for the dedans lacked some of its customary accuracy. Mr. Miles gained the last two strokes of the match in a most lucky manner, the ball twice bouncing off the floor into the winning gallery. The scores were.—

Final Round :—Mr. E. H. Miles beat Hon'ble N. S. Lytton by 3 sets to love (6—2, 6—1, 6—5).

GOLF.

ST. ANDREWS OPEN TOURNAMENT.—The St. Andrews open tournament for prizes amounting to £110 began on Tuesday in fine weather. Play consisted of the 36 holes qualifying stroke competition, and a stiff north-westerly wind made low scoring difficult, especially in the early part of the day. Of the 48 entrants, George Pulford was the only notable absentee. The following qualified for the match-play stages.

Harry Vardon, South Herts ...	...	77	78—155
Alexander Herd, Huddersfield ...	...	78	80—158
Andrew Kirkaldy, St. Andrews ...	...	83	77—160

C. Ralph Smith, West Middlesex ...	...	86	82—168
W. Binnie, Kinghorn ...	...	81	87—168
Robert Thomson, North Berwick ...	...	90	79—169

As a result of the second day's play, Harry Vardon, Alexander Herd, W. E. Reid, and Robert Thomson qualified for the semi-final round. The weather had undergone an unpleasant change from the conditions which prevailed on the previous day. Rain fell in the morning and the greens were rendered dull and somewhat heavy.

The young Banstead Downs player showed consistently good form in both of his matches. In the morning he disposed of a formidable local player in W. Hutchison by 1 hole, and in the afternoon he disposed of C. R. Smith, the West Middlesex player, by 5 and 3.

Without doing anything strikingly brilliant, Vardon won both of his matches easily enough. He accounted for W. Binnie in the first round by 3 and 2, and in the afternoon he disposed of Andrew Kirkcaldy by a similar margin.

FIRST ROUND.

W. E. Reid beat W. Hutchison by 1 hole.
C. R. Smith beat Ben Sayers, sen., at the nineteenth hole.
Andrew Kirkcaldy beat David Kirkcaldy by 2 and 1.
Harry Vardon beat W. Binnie by 3 and 2.
Mr. F. W. Baldie beat Davie Grant by 3 and 2.
Alexander Herd beat James Kinnell by 4 and 2.
Lawrence Ayton beat P. J. Gaudin by 2 and 1.
Robert Thomson beat Ben Sayers, jun., by a3nd 2.

SECOND ROUND.

Reid beat Smith by 5 and 3.
Vardon beat Andrew Kirkcaldy by 3 and 2.
Herd beat Mr. Baldie by 1 hole.
Thomson beat Ayton by 7 and 6.

Yesterday Harry Vardon, of South Herts, won the first prize in the tournament. He played well all through the meeting, and in the semi-final and final rounds he defeated respectively W. E. Reid by 4 and 2 and Alexander Herd by 5 and 4. The weather was unsettled, and a stiff wind blew from the north-west, making golf difficult.

In the match between Vardon and Reid each player was on the first green in 2. Reid had the better run up, and he stymied his opponent, but lost a chance by missing a putt of 18 inches. The whole was halved in 5. Going to the second, both men were bunkered. After indifferent play, the hole was divided in 7, Vardon being weak on the green. Both second shots to the third hole were pulled, and they found the water in the bunker. Vardon tried to play the shot and failed; Reid lifted, and won the hole in 6 to 7. Vardon half-topped his second to the fourth hole, but effected a half in 5. Reid topped his second and third shots at the long hole, where Vardon drew level with a 6. Superior putting at the sixth again gave Reid the lead. To the high hole, Vardon's long second shot lay nearly dead. Reid was trapped, and he gave up the hole. A strong pitch looked like costing him the eighth, but the ex-champion was short, and a half in 4 resulted. Vardon had a very long drive to the ninth, but was weak with his run up. The hole was halved in 4, and the players turned all even.

Coming home, Vardon won the tenth in 4 to 5, Reid lipping the hole for a half, and the ex-champion secured the eleventh in 3, his opponent being over the Eden. The next two holes were divided in 4 each, and the fourteenth in 5. Reid pitched weakly to the fifteenth, and, after playing three more on to the green, picked up, leaving Vardon dormy. The latter hit a beautiful approach to the corner of the dyke, and securing the hole, finished the match.

Herd was one up on Thomson at the fourth, but the latter squared at the seventh, where Herd had a bad lie. The players were even at the turn. They were still level with three to play, but Herd lost the sixteenth, where he was in water in a bunker. The Huddersfield man, however, squared with a brilliant 4 at the seventeenth, and he won the home hole in 4, Thomson missing a short putt.

The first hole of the final was halved in 4, but Herd, putting very weakly, lost the second. At the third he made amends by holing a twenty yards putt for a 3, thus squaring. The fourth was halved in 5, but Herd took the lead with a 5 at the fifth, where Vardon was in the rough from his approach. He drew level at the sixth. After a half, Herd was bunkered at the eighth. He made a fine recovery, but Vardon secured the hole in 3, and regained the lead. Herd was again bunkered from his tee shot to the ninth, but Vardon made a weak run up, and yielded a half in 4. Vardon was thus one up at the turn.

At the tenth Vardon ran down a four yards putt, which enabled him to secure the hole in 4 to 5. At the short eleventh Herd was weak, and taking four strokes to Vardon's three, he was at this point three down. Following a half at the twelfth, Vardon won the thirteenth as a result of a good approach in 4 to 5. The next hole finished the match, for Vardon, by means of better putting than his opponent, won the hole, and with it the match. Large crowds followed the matches, and the results were :—

SEMI-FINAL.

Harry Vardon (South Herts) beat W. E. Reid (Banstead Downs) by 4 and 2.

Alexander Herd (Huddersfield) beat Robert Thomson (North Berwick) by 1 hole.

FINAL.

Vardon beat Herd by 5 and 4.

AT the close of the service an old lady waited to speak to the clergyman, and when opportunity offered, remarked that she always liked to come to church when he preached.

"I am delighted to hear it," answered the clergyman, his face beaming with pleasure.

"You see," added the old lady, "there is always such lots of room."

WINCHESTER

.351 CALIBER HIGH POWER.

Before deciding upon a rifle for your next hunting trip, don't fail to investigate the merits of this new Winchester, which is reloaded by the recoil of the exploded cartridge. There is nothing complicated, cumbersome or freakish about it. It is a reliable, handy gun from butt to muzzle. The .351 Caliber High Power Cartridge which it shoots represents the latest development in powder and cartridge manufacture. Although small in size it develops tremendous velocity and energy, making it powerful enough for the largest game. This most modern type of cartridge also possesses the added advantage of economy. Owing to the comparatively small amount of metal used in the shell it costs much less than old style cartridges no more powerful.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 20th May.—Windy Gap at 12 noon. After drawing Bungalow Shola blank, the Master drew down the Yemakal Valley. Just below One Tree Hill a jack was viewed by the first whip; this jack gave us a good run of 30 or 40 minutes and very few of the field saw the end of it. Taking a line over the hill he turned right handed down into the Kabbalkod Valley, crossed the stream and rose the hill past Irwin's Clump and on to No Man's Land, then swung to the south-west past Sevorkedu Mund to the Mekod River. On crossing this he made for the valley of the Kurutha Stream and ran parallel with it to just short of the Krurmund Bungalow, and must have gone to ground, but hounds were unable to mark him though the Master cast them all round the ravines and small sholas. As it was still early the Master drew down Nadunkod Valley; hounds touched a line a little way below the mund, which they carried up to the right of Yemakal Shola. Near the Mysore Ride the jack was seen close in front of hounds heading for Bamboo Shola, but leaving this on the right he ran along the ridge and dived down into the Devil's Dyke, coming out on the far side. He climbed up Back Staircase, then went to the left and dropped down into Briar. Hounds bustled him through this covert into Bacon Wood, and out at the bottom, raced him over the grass to the Yemakal Stream and over it, skirted the edge of Yemakal Shola and Little Yemakal, and finally ran him to earth close to the place where they had found him. This also was a good run, lasting over half an hour. It was a warm fine day and scent was excellent.

Friday, 21st May.—Brooklands at 7 A.M. On throwing hounds into this covert they picked up the line of a jack that had moved away some time before. Carrying the line over Toll Bar Hill, they sank the hill to Demon Valley Stream, which they crossed, and bent right handed up towards Toda Cathedral and on into Cathedral Shola, and running round the northern slopes of Muttanad Hill above Downham they crossed the Segur Ghat Road and lost their jack below the Umbrella Tree. The country in these parts is so wild and rugged that it is quite impossible to follow hounds. The Master then tried Hanging Shola, but scent had died out, and though hounds spoke in the covert they were unable to do more, so were taken back to kennels.

Monday, 24th May.—Sheffield Corner 7 A.M. Drew down the large swamp from Andy and on Dante's Spinney and down the Parson's Valley for a short distance before hounds found two outlying jack in the swamp. The jack went away together above Bilanjikod Mund, where they divided, one going to ground and the other with five couple of hounds took a line to the right of Walhampton Shola; crossed the bog below Middlebit Shola; swung round over the hill past Limerick and dropped down the spur above Kuruthugully where the hounds split up in all directions after a number of fresh jack lying up in the scent. They were, however, got together and brought back to the earth where the first jack was, with Kitty trying to persuade him to face the open again. Just then a jack was viewed in the swamp below. Hounds were at once taken over and on picking up the line they ran past Bilanjikod Mund, through Walhampton and over Vokal Hill to Matley Bog and on to Sambur Shola, where they lost him. So we returned to the earth and found Kitty had not succeeded in bolting the jack. The spade and pick were brought into action, the jack unearthed and broken up and hounds taken back to kennels.

Tuesday, 25th May.—Toda Coffee Shop at 12 noon. A hot bright day, the ground hard and dry. Drew along the ravine to the right of the Glenmorgan Road to Lord Roberts' Shola and the swamp just beyond where a jack was viewed in the rushes. He led hounds right handed as if for the Ghats, but changing his mind came back past Lord Roberts' Shola to the big wood near the Glenmorgan Tea Estate, where scent fizzled out. It was so hot that the Master decided to wait in the shade in the hopes it would get cooler or clouds come up. Later on a jack was found near the Toda Mund, and, after a short run past Lord Roberts' Shola, was run into below Kudakal Mund Drawing back a jack was viewed close by. Hounds ran him over the hill to Tuvalkundid Mund, then down the valley, then turned sharp to the right and pulled him down on the ridge above the Falls Road not far from Glenmorgan Estate. Drew back to Toda Coffee Shop, but it was too hot—hounds and horses had had enough.

Thursday, 27th May.—Double Crossing at 7 A.M. As hounds were about to draw Fife's Covert a jack was viewed on Newmarket. As soon as they got on his line they hunted him at a good pace along the slope to Rawlins' Nullah, where he went to ground in a deep underground watercourse. Leaving him undisturbed the Master drew towards Staircase and on crossing the Sandy Nullah Stream a jack was viewed close by. This jack set his mask at first for Bluegums, but short of it swung right handed through Governor's and on to Andy. Scent was poor in the scrub and the Master had to come to their assistance. They carried the line slowly along the Andy bridle path to Democrat Shola when they suddenly went off with a dash (very likely on a fresh jack), and crossing the ridges above Kuruthugully Village they dipped down into the Nanjanad Valley. Turning left handed they crossed the stream at Owl Crossing and went towards Baikie, but leaving this covert on their left, they swept round the hill above Milkavai Village to Porcupine and on to Ursula where the pack split up after a number of fresh jack, a few couple running one to Cairn Hill. We then drew back towards home viâ New Covert and Mills. A jack was viewed near Elmhurst Corner, but he had no inclination to be chased so dived into the nearest earth he could find.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

GORDONS vs CALEDONIANS.—Played on the Caledonia ground on the 26th ultimo the Gordons winning easily. They scored two goals in the first half through McNoughton and McKay and three more after the interval, Foreman, McKinnon and McKay being credited with the points. The game ended 5-0 in favour of the soldiers and their score might have been larger but for the excellent game played by Goodwin in goal. Teams:—

CALEDONIA.—Goodwin, goal; Stoddart and Coles, backs; Boilard, Currie and Laing, halves; Apcar, Watson, Capper, Harding and Coldwell, forwards.

Referee:—Sergt. White.

Y. M. C. A. vs. CUSTOMS.—These teams met on the Customs ground on Saturday last ending in a draw of one all. Frost scored for the visitors in the first half and Galbreith netted for the Customs from a pass by De Silva. Teams:—

RANGERS vs. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—The Rangers who were without three of their regular team were beaten on their own ground last Saturday by the Dum-Dum team. The soldiers did all the attacking but the Rangers backs offered a strong defence till the closing stages of the game when they went to pieces and three goals were scored by the Military. Roberts made the first from a penalty kick. Bird shot the second, and Poole scored the third from a melee in front of goal. The Rangers were unable to score. Teams:—

SHROPSHIRES.—Robinson, goal; Bushby and Humphreys, backs; Onions, Roberts and Atsby, halves; Nond, Poole, Birch, Sanderson and Bird, forwards.

The first half was without score though the visitors attacked most of the time, Goodwin in goal being seen at his best. On changing over Pooler and Longbottom both scored for Calcutta, who thus won by 2 goals to nil. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal; Oliver and Wright, backs; Macdonald Smith, O'Shea and Pooler, halves; Sherman, Kingcombe, Stranoch, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

GORDONS vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday a level game ending in a win for the Gordons by 2 goals to 1. The home team had rather the best of the play in the first half and Clarke scored a goal from a free kick shortly after the start. A penalty to the Gordons for a foul against the Dals enabled Foreman to equalise. Both teams tried for the lead but a corner to each was the only advantage gained till the interval. On crossing over, after a spell of level play Frike tested the Gordons' custodian but he cleared and the venue was changed. The soldiers attacked and hands against Stevens let them in, McKay scoring from the penalty kick. The efforts of both teams met with no further success and the game ended as stated. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Findlay Harper and Thompson, halves; McKinnon, McNoughton, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Stevens and Clark, backs; Montgomery, Lees and Wilson, halves; Hurlston, Frike, Wright, Dalling and Burnett, forwards.

Referee.—Sergt. Curley.

CUSTOMS vs. SHROPSHIRE L.I.—Played on the Customs' ground on Tuesday the home team serving up another surprise by defeating the Military team by 2 goals to 1. Though the Shropshires rushed away at the start the Customs soon settled down to the attack and Robinson was called on to save. He made no mistakes and Sanderson next put in a good run for the soldiers: his shot went behind and the interval arrived without score. On resuming a foul against Smith enabled McCready to score from the penalty kick. The Customs kept up the attack and L. H. Smith shot a second goal. A desperate onslaught by the soldiers was unsuccessful; then level play followed but the Shropshires returned to the attack and Bird scored just before time. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Goldsmith and McCready, backs; Curry, L. A. Smith and Fischer, halves; Vears, Pugh, L. H. Smith, Galbreith and De Silva, forwards.

SHROPSHIRES.—Robinson, goal; Bushly and Humphreys backs; Onions, Roberts and Atsby, halves; Nond, Poole Birch, Sanderson, and Bird, forwards.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SATURDAY'S games were productive of the expected results in every case but one—that one being the Customs-Y.M.C.A. match which resulted in a draw of one goal all. This must have been rather a set back for the Customs, as on form they appeared to be streets better than the Y.M.C.A. The latter have been playing in much improved form of late, however, and may yet turn the tables on one or two of the teams they went under to earlier in the season. They have a good centre forward, a useful outside left, a very good back in Reynolds and their goalkeeper is pretty safe. The remainder of the team are more or less weak and no amount of practice seems to do them any good.

CALEDONIA—whatever else they may be are consistent and lose their matches with never-failing regularity. They lost to Calcutta on Saturday by 2—nil though, had the latter exerted themselves, the score might easily have been half a dozen. The premier club were without three of their best men in Stuart, Ansell and Victor Sherman, but their substitutes were quite equal to Saturday's task. Calcutta have now got together a fairly useful team and should render a good account of themselves in the second half of the League which commences on Saturday. At present they are two points worse than the Gordons and the return engagement between these teams should settle the destination of the League Cup, unless the Shropshires defeat them both, in which case the Gordons would still top the list.

RANGERS went down before the Dum-Dum team to the tune of 3—nil and whatever hopes they may at one time have had of heading the League table must now have evaporated. The Shropshires were well worth their win, but in fairness to the Rangers it must be stated that they were minus three of their regular players.

DALHOUSIE'S record of no goals scored against them and no games lost both went by the board on Saturday when they met the Gordons. What made the defeat all the more bitter was the fact that both goals were scored from penalty kicks, the results of absurd mistakes by the backs. The Dals' left back is an ex-Gordon Highlander and the Fort men evidently knew his weak points. He, however, played quite a sound game compared with his partner Stevens, who was chiefly responsible for the defeat.

WHATEVER may be written of the Gordons in praise or blame they are triers all the time and are never beaten till the whistle blows for time. They also get just a bit more of the luck of the game than most teams, Saturday being the second occasion on which they have won by a penalty goal. This may not, strictly speaking, be luck in the real sense of the word, but it is near enough to it to make all the difference between winning and losing. Their centre forward is their most dangerous man as he is always on the backs and is a most prolific goal getter. His chief fault is a tendency to get offside due to keenness.

THE fault of civilian teams appears to be a tendency of the forwards to hang too far back instead of getting right up to the opposing full backs. This is very noticeable when they play military teams whose backs always have lots of time to get their kick in. There also seems to be a mistaken impression among many civilian forwards that a goalkeeper may not be rushed or charged or a foul is the result. If a goalkeeper is holding the ball he may be charged or rushed like any other player, and it must be very exasperating to a team's supporters to see time after time a goalkeeper catch the ball and take his time to kick it while their men stop and look at him.

THE Jute Mill assistants are endeavouring to get together a team to enter for the I.F.A. Shield, and judging from last year's match for the Campsie Fund between the mill men and the Calcutta League, they should be able to put a first rate team into the field with a little training. They were beaten last year more by superior stamina than play, and as they have lots of time to get fit before the competition commences, great things are expected of them.

CALCUTTA ground was en fete on Friday last when the Exchange Banks and the Bank of Bengal fought out their annual tussle, a large and fashionable crowd turning up to watch the game. The Exchange Banks were a bit too good for the Bengal men, although the score was only 1—nil in their favour. A wonderful exhibition of football was given and the spectators had no cause to complain of the "fare" provided either by the players or Messrs. Peliti's who ministered to the inner man.

TO-NIGHT another classic encounter takes place between the Jute and Gunny brokers. Excitement and partisanship have ruled high over this match and the referee has taken the precaution (the result it is said of attempts at bribery and corruption) of having his life insured and his will drawn up. He has also been seen at the Opera House carefully studying the pictures of the Burns-Johnson fight. We understand a careful watch is to be kept on the movements of the centre forward of the Gunny-men owing to rumours that he has found a "double" who is being kept in readiness to perform should the real "Simon Pure" get run off his legs.

The Naturalist.

THE BONE HUNTER.

WE know of the "big-game hunter" as the man who ventures far from civilization and often into unknown regions in his quest for such animals as elephants, lions, tigers, mountain sheep, and polar bears—beasts which may inhabit the midst of the jungle or forest, the slopes of high mountains, even the great icefields which for so many months in the year cover such a large area of the Arctic Ocean. But there is another hunter for big game who often endures as many hardships and braves as many perils as the one who follows the trail in the forest with rifle in hand. The work of the fossil-seeker in recent years has led him to spend months in the deserts of the Old and New Worlds, and go into regions not only uninhabited by human beings, but containing nothing in the way of food or even a drop of water to nourish him. Strange to say, his greatest discoveries are in places where the world has literally been dead for centuries. Bone Cabin Quarry, Wyoming, as it is known to scientists the world over, is by far the greatest hunting ground for these animals of the past that has yet been discovered, but it is only a small corner of the region where they lived. The story of the hill and valley, as read by the geologist, shows that this was once a fertile country, with its trees and grass and bushes nourished by rivers and lakes, so that it afforded abundant food for the biggest living things that inhabited the land. That they roamed over this part of the earth is shown by the finding of their gigantic skeletons many miles from the "quarry;" for, since it was first visited, the Bad Lands of America have been the gathering place for fossil-hunters from both the Old and the New World. The locality forms a vast graveyard for the monster lizards known as dinosaurs, as well as strange horses that lived in the old days, crocodiles older than any that ever floated in the Nile, and mammoth turtles.

GRAVEYARD OF DINOSAURS.

The way in which these hunters of extinct animals and reptiles find their mighty game is interesting. In searching for it they bring to their aid geology and natural history. Their weapons are chiefly the pick, shovel, and spade; but some of the places containing skeletons are so large that they use ploughs and scrapers drawn by horses to remove the earth covering. When the fossil hunter reaches a spot where he believes bones are to be found he examines the nature of the rock, if any; he looks carefully at the composition of the soil, and notices the direction and rise of the hills. Nature buried these animals in a curious way in certain layers of earth and rock. Sometimes a part of the layer lies close to the surface of the plain, or forms the jutting hillside; the other end of the layer may be thousands of feet below the top. It so happens that a part of the graveyard of the dinosaurs comes to the surface right at the Bone Cabin Quarry and in the Como Bluffs, which are also in the territory of the United States known as Wyoming. In fact, nearly all of the little valley lying near the Bow Head River in this part of Wyoming is in the graveyard; but the geologist says it is nearly 500ft. deep, and as yet the hunters have dug only a few feet down into it. So no one knows how many creatures of the past will be found as the hunt progresses. It is worth while to tell how this curious quarry came to be known as Bone Cabin. A party of fossil-seekers were travelling through what was known as the Bad Lands, when they chanced upon a little hut, once the home of a sheepherder, but long since abandoned. Their curiosity was aroused by this, the only sign of human habitation they had come across, and naturally they peered about it. One of the party noticed that the house did not rest directly upon the ground, but upon piles of what seemed to be dark-coloured stones. In this part of the Bad Lands one seldom sees even a pebble, and the stones aroused his interest. "I wonder where the fellow got those stones," the man remarked, as he called the attention of his companions to them. Pulling out one of the "stones" which had become loosened, he gave an exclamation of surprise. Looking at the dingy-coloured substance carefully, he said. "This is a tiny part of one of the greatest creatures known to man. It is a fragment of a brontosaurus." A messenger carried the news to the nearest town. Thence it was given to the world by the electric current, and fossil hunters throughout America and Europe received the intelligence. Fortunately Mr. Walter Granger, the scientist who made the discovery, is connected with the Museum of Natural History in New York. Realizing that the bones the sheep-herder had thrown together to support his home had probably been taken from the ground near by, he began digging up the earth. After a few hours' work his shovel struck against a hard substance which it could not penetrate. Working around it, he finally uncovered another piece—a single bone longer than a man of ordinary height. This was also a part of the skeleton of the brontosaurus.

TWENTY-FIVE TON LIZARD.

It seems strange that ancestors of the lizard so small as to be easily held in the palm of the hand at one time grew to such enormous size that no creature known to have existed on land has ever equalled them in dimensions. When the fossil hunters, after months of digging, revealed the other bones along with the one discovered by Mr. Granger, an idea of the immensity of the brontosaurus was gained. This skeleton was finally put together, and the great animal placed in the position which it had assumed in life. The single bone six feet in length may convey to the reader some conception of its proportions, but it actually measures a few inches less than 67ft. from the end of its nose to the tip of its tail. As it stands in the American Museum of Natural History it reaches nearly to the ceiling and from side to side of the room, for its height at what the naturalists call the hips is 15ft. above the floor. Its tail alone stretches out a distance of 31ft., while its neck makes that of a giraffe appear in comparison like a chicken's, being no less than 17ft. in length. If we were to weigh the thighbone apart from the rest it would tip the scales at nearly 600lbs., even before it was petrified. Various estimates have been given of the weight of these monsters, but naturalists believe that in life the one described must have weighed not far from 25 tons. The largest animals that now exist on land are the African elephants. Suppose we were to place three of them in line, one directly in front of the other, this ancient lizard would be longer than the three, while it would actually weigh about 10 tons more than the herd of them. But, despite its size, the brontosaurus could go from place to place quite rapidly, considering its bulk, forcing its way through the swamps, and uprooting trees which stood in its pathway by the mere pressure of its body. Large rivers were no bar to its progress, for it could wade in water 20ft. deep, and, it is believed, could swim short distances. It lived upon plants and the tender shoots and leaves of trees. Most of us have seen an elephant lifting up his trunk, and may have been amazed at the height to which he could stretch it. Imagine an animal which could put its head into a tree-top 50ft. high and browse!

BONES OF COLOSSAL ELEPHANTS.

The bonehunters, however, have learned that there were several different species. Though all are called dinosaur—a Greek term which, translated into English, means "terrible lizard"—the largest were almost as harmless as the tiny things that women once wore on their persons with gold chains, making pets of them. As they ate only plants and foliage of trees, their teeth were soft and could not be used to injure man or animal. Strange to say, a smaller dinosaur has been found in the Bad Lands of Wyoming which, it is believed, lived on flesh, for its teeth are very large and sharp. Though not half the size of the great brontosaurus, was a cannibal preying on the other, for tail-bones of the plant lizard have been found showing deep cuts that were evidently made ages ago. The teeth of the small dinosaur exactly fit into these wounds, leading palæontologists to believe that the flesh-eating or carnivorous lizards killed many of their big brothers, trying to get at the marrow and cartilage in their tails. The finding of such creatures as these can indeed be called the hunting of big game, and since the discovery at Bone Cabin Quarry numbers of investigators every year have been exploring this part of Wyoming that forms such a great burial ground for the monsters. Yet this is only one corner where mammoth remains are known to exist. On the other side of the world, in Africa, the bluffs of the famous Libyan Desert also cover huge skeletons, among them bones of the animals which were the ancestors of the elephant as we know him, but a beast more than twice the size of the one still found in the African forest, to which we have already referred. In places where the covering of the desert has been dug away so many fragments of these prehistoric creatures have been secured that within the past year they formed a large portion of the cargo of the steamship which brought them from Africa to New York.

STRANGE DISCOVERIES.

Bone Cabin Quarry itself is a revelation. After the cabin was torn down and the richness of the "find" revealed, the explorers determined to discover all that was to be discovered in this locality; so the ground was divided into spaces 12ft. square, and one after another was opened. It has taken over six years, working with the plough and shovel and spade, to turn up only about 7,500 square feet, or less than one-fifth of an acre of surface; yet this small space formed the resting place of parts of 73 different animals, of which 44 belonged to the family of dinosaurs. The explorers believe that on this spot fully 100 of these creatures have lain in the earth for 10 millions of years or more. The exploration of the Bad Lands has made western America a veritable treasure house for the fossil hunters; but before the discovery of the Bone Cabin Quarry they had been securing such "game as elephants, tigers, and camels, although none of these was alive when the lizard giants roamed in their marshes. We think of the camel in connection with the deserts of Africa and Asia; but beasts far larger than any which have ever formed the caravans of the Sahara wandered over south-western America, where their skeletons have been unearthed by the pick and shovel. Tigers bigger and more ferocious than the dreaded Indian maneater, with teeth as sharp as the sabre's edge, preyed upon the inhabitants of the South American forests; while there was a period in the history of the world when elephants came all the way from Africa to the western half of the globe, and there lived for thousands of years. Within a few miles of New York City itself the hunters have found them, although their big skeletons have also been dug up away to the southward in the State of Texas.

PATIENCE REWARDED.

When the prospector believes he has reached a part of his unique hunting ground he first looks carefully about for any object that may be lying on the top. Frequently he comes across bones of a sheep, sometimes of a hare, but recognises them at once by their whiteness and freshness. Anything that has a dull-brown appearance is closely studied, though it may not resemble a bone, for where a thing has existed millions of years time may have crumbled away. If the prospector finds nothing, the shovel comes into service. He digs here and there, making test-holes. Perhaps he may go on day after day in fruitless search, until the weeks have passed into months, and he has gone over miles of the region without making a find. Then, when he is about to give up in despair, and depart to some more likely place, the shovel may reach a deposit, the grave of perhaps a dozen animals, as in the case of the Bone Cabin discovery, in a day he has found a fortune in material for the scientist. Bone-hunting is much like gold-hunting; one may unearth a pocket or a nugget when least expected. The find made, the next step is to secure the bones. While some of the larger bones are unbroken, frequently the skeleton may be in a thousand pieces, some a hundred feet or so from the rest. To pick out the right ones and separate them from the others may mean weeks of patient toiling, day after day, in the burning sun. The hunter must also know how the bones were put together by nature. As fast as he identifies the parts he numbers each one, then packs it for its long journey. When the bone is fragile and cracked or broken he fills in the crevices with liquid plaster which hardens and thus cements the fragments together. Sometimes the surface of the bone is first covered with silk paper or thin cloth to protect it from the air. Then the whole piece is covered with plaster as a further protection before being placed in the box or crate in which it is to be sent to the museum. This part of the work requires not a little care, for some single pieces of skeletons are so large that they must be hoisted from their beds by a derrick. Still, in spite of their size, these bones must be uncovered very cautiously, though they have long since turned to stone. A single blow of pick or shovel may badly damage a specimen which otherwise is perfect.—Chambers's Journal.

The Story Teller.

HIS AUNT AURORA.

LIONEL was far too good-hearted a nephew to want his Aunt Aurora to die. And this was all the more creditable because he was the good lady's sole heir.

So when, as a last remedy for her asthma, the doctors had prescribed a prolonged sojourn in the purest mountain air, Lionel showed all proper zeal. He left Paris at once with his respected relative for Aix-les-Bains, where, with the aid of the funicular railway, he deposited her as a patient at the Sanatorium Revard, situated some twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea.

Aunt Aurora was delighted. Lionel installed her in a comfortable little chalet in the Sanatorium grounds, part of which was occupied by a retired Russian general, Count Pankratieff, a Plevna hero, formerly commanding the Cossacks of the Ukraine. He was an amiable old gentleman, and quite ready in the interval of his cardiac attacks to play bezique with Aunt Aurora.

All being thus nicely arranged, Lionel, after placing his aunt under the care of Doctor Casenave, the head of the Sanatorium, took an affectionate farewell of her, and returned to Paris.

Unfortunately, however, at the beginning of August, he was startled and dismayed to receive the following telegram:

"Aunt died suddenly to-night at the Sanatorium.

What do you wish done.—DOCTOR CASENAVE."

Poor Aunt Aurora! It was terribly sudden. Lionel wiped away a tear. Although, as already said, he was a good fellow, his grief was naturally mitigated by the recollection that he was her heir. Still, he was most anxious to do all that became an affectionate nephew, and—as first impulse was to jump into the train for Aix-les-Bains. Then he bethought himself his dear relation was dead, so what good could he do by a journey of fourteen hours in the dog days? Quite useless. So he telegraphed a remittance to the doctor, with the following message:

"Send the body to Paris, 37, Rue Ville-l'Eveque, and give details by letter. Arranging for funeral at Madeleine. —LIONEL."

Soon the doctor's letter arrived. The poor lady had not suffered much. She had been carried off by a sudden seizure, and had died blessing her dear nephew, Lionel, and leaving him her sole legatee. The fatal attack had been brought on partly by emotion at the sudden death of her neighbour, the old General, which had happened during their game of bezique. The doctor excused himself for not writing more fully owing to the difficulties which had attended the despatch of the General's body to St. Petersburg.

Lionel summoned all the distant relatives and friends of Aunt Aurora to the little house in the Rue Ville-l'Eveque, and then, before the coffin was removed to the church, he thought he would like to take a last look at the dear deceased. So, in the presence of the family lawyer, the coffin was opened, and Lionel leant over it, only to see a moustached and bearded face and a uniform of green and gold, bedizened with crosses and ribands!

The assembled company screamed with fright. What on earth could it mean?

Lionel, too, felt frightened for the moment. But he soon realised what had happened. "Why!" said he, it's General Pankratieff. Evidently a mistake has been made at the Sanatorium, and they've sent me the General's body instead of aunt. What a terrible blunder! It's very distressing!"

"Who knows?" suggested one of the cousins who had been left nothing. "Perhaps, after all, dear Aunt Aurora is still alive."

Lionel did not cherish any such hope. "No, no, the doctor's letter was too explicit; no doubt, a mistake had been made; but thank goodness"—he forgot himself so far as to say "thank goodness"—"it was only a mistake of identity, and one very easy to repair."

He hastened to the telegraph office near the Madeleine, which was close by the house, and sent off the following telegram:

"Doctor Casenave,"

Sanatorium Revard.

"Ought to have taken more care. Sent Paris body General Pankratieff, and not aunt. Most annoyed. Send aunt's body. Tell me what to do. General a nuisance in the drawing-room. LIONEL."

The same evening he received the folowing telegram:

"Thousand excuses; my secretary scatter-brained. Too young; just married, honeymoon. By mistake has sent your aunt St. Petersburg. Am telegraphing for immediate instructions about General, and to have your aunt returned without delay.—CASENAVE."

This reply threw Lionel into a state of consternation. So poor Aunt Aurora had been sent all that distance to the capital of All the Russias! Good heavens, what time it would take, what telegrams, what correspondence, official and diplomatic, before the poor dear old lady could be at last laid to rest on the bank of the Seine, in French soil, in the family vault at Pere-la-Chaise!

And all the while the body of General Pankratieff remained under the little catafalque, which had been constructed in the drawing-room, transformed for the time being into a chapelle ardente. It was impossible to have any guests there, and the house of the Rue de la Ville-l'Eveque remained, to all intents and purposes, a house of mourning. Lionel became more and more impatient. What could be delaying so simple an exchange, he wondered? The position was becoming every day more and more intolerable.

At last he received the following letter from Revard:

"MONSIEUR,—I have received from the French Embassy, at St. Petersburg, the inclosed letter, which I hasten to transmit you, begging you to act on it as your patriotism and goodness may suggest.

"Pray, accept, with my renewed excuses for this most unfortunate blunder, the assurance of my highest respect.

"DOCTOR CASENAVE."

And Lionel, more upset than ever, read the inclosure of the doctor's letter.

"French Embassy. St. Petersburg, Aug. 17th.

"(Secretary).

"Confidential.

"MONSIEUR LE DOCTEUR.—

"The matter is a serious one, and we must, in the circumstances, move with the greatest circumspection. The lady of whom you speak has been interred with great ceremony, and with full military honours. At much expense a Cossack regiment was brought from the Ukraine, and twenty thousand men were paraded to follow the hearse. You will realise the ridicule which will fall on the Russian War Office if it became known that all these troops, all these Generals, all these high dignitaries, have really followed not the body of General Pankratieff, but that of an old asthmatic foreigner.

"This, especially at the present time, would have a deplorable effect, and I feel sure your patriotism will induce you to leave matters as they are in making the best of what really now cannot be helped."

"Ah, well," cried Lionel, "there's no help for it. General Pankratieff must go into Aunt Aurora's vault."—London Opinion.

THEY had met casually, and he had fallen desperately in love with the girl, "Ah!" he cried. "I am poor, and you are rich; but true love levels all things, and—" "It cannot be!" she interrupted. "This, then, is my last resort!" he passionately exclaimed, drawing forth a gleaming pistol from his breast. The maiden glanced at the firearm. "Oh, yes!" she said, encouragingly. "You should be able to get five or six shillings on it!"

Two ladies who had just lately been introduced to each other became very friendly. The husband of one of the ladies had been captain of a ship for a good number of years, while the better-half of the other had just been promoted to that office. "And so I hear," cooed the former lady, "that your husband is a sailor, too, Mrs. Brown?" Mrs. B. drew herself up indignantly, and looked unutterable things of scorn. "Indeed, no; he's no sailor! He's a captain of a ship!"

FOREST FIRES.

To those resident in or near the hills it is an every day and every night occurrence, when the hot weather has firmly established itself, to watch an arc of smoke and flame slowly but surely creeping up some distant spur. Here an extra bright illumination indicates that a dry thicket or patch of grass has been enveloped. A gap in the advancing girdle of fire proclaims the spot where a marsh or moist hollow lies, but, though the thin red line has been broken, its severed portions still push boldly onwards and upwards, defying all obstacles, and eventually re-uniting into one solid phalanx, leaving in its train a blackened belt of ruin. Such a spectacle should afford considerable food for conjecture. More often than otherwise it merely helps to maintain the listless flow of postprandial conversation. Perchance, some one may hazard the question as to how the conflagration originated and the manners in which it will finally be extinguished. The heat precludes even the lightest of discussions, and one and all are too indolent to take more than a fleeting interest in the potentialities of the forest fire with perhaps one exception. We refer to the Deputy Conservator of Forests. To this official the period between the beginning of March and the end of May is one of much anxiety, and entails many a weary and dusty ride. But the forest officer and his subordinates are not the only individuals that suffer on this account. The sportsman, whose path of duty or pleasure has led him into the wooded aisles during the height of the hot weather, will assuredly at one time or another have encountered a jungle fire at unpleasantly close quarters. It is disconcerting, to say the least of it, to witness a compact wall of flame racing along in one's direction, entailing an ignominious retreat to some green oasis. It is most annoying to be forced, willy nilly, to hurriedly strike camp, and flee precipitately to some less dangerous zone. The hunter, not infrequently, however, hails a forest fire as a blessing in place of a dire evil. Should he be in pursuit of the larger carnivora an extensive conflagration will limit the area of cover available to shelter the cecidae and other animals which are preyed upon by the bigger members of the cat tribe. It follows as a natural consequence that the range of felis tigris and felis pardus will also be restricted. In the hot months these predatory creatures have no desire to wander further afield than is absolutely necessary in quest of daily food. The sportsman, whose aim and object is the slaughter of the lordly bison, and whose venue is the terai of some vast range of mountains, will also herald with joy the handiwork of some previous forest fire. What was formerly an impenetrable maze of dry grass, stems and reeds, ten to fifteen feet in height, will be converted into an open park, devoid of all undergrowth, and carpetted with a green expanse of young and succulent blades. Where the vision was confined to a few yards, perhaps feet, the passage of the fire will furnish an uninterrupted view of 100 yards or more. When the morning star is still glimmering in the east, the experienced hunter will be afoot. The first flush of coming dawn will see him stalking with stealthy foot-fall along the unburnt fringe of elephant grass. It is in such a vicinity that game will undoubtedly be found. The gaur requires many pounds of food to support his powerful frame. The sprouting shoots of grass are luscious, and offer an irresistible temptation to this giant ox, and afford a far greater attraction than the dessicated sprigs obtained in denser portions of the forest.

The same diet is equally appreciated by the sambur, the hog deer, the muntják, and also the wild boar. There is yet another advantage in skirting such a locality. Brute creation is never free from the fear of danger. It will, therefore, seldom desert the means of effecting escape from its numerous enemies. The fact that a safe sanctuary is within easy reach will tend to give quadrupeds greater confidence. It may in consequence be reasonably expected that game will frequent in considerable profusion the boundaries of a belt of woodland that has recently been ravaged by an extensive fire. Experience teaches us that in reality such is the case. The track of a forest fire in India is not without its tragedies. The blistered shell of a land tortoise tells its own tale. The charred remains of a sinuous form shews where some lethargic python has met its doom. And what a feast is provided for the feathered denizens of the forest. The whirling wreaths of smoke suffocate and drive forth the myriads of insects from their leafy lairs. Their freedom is short-lived with wings scorched by the leaping flames, they are sucked into the fiery vortex, or fall victims to the hovering foe who swoops down on its prey with out-stretched pinions.

The query might very well be put forward as to how in this peninsula a large fire is extinguished. In the hilly regions "fire-lines" are cut in fire-protected forests and a description of such should prove unnecessary. By means of these cross "rides," or to speak more accurately "paths,"—the extent of a conflagration is circumscribed, and it is unusual for a fire to spread beyond a "line" to any degree, provided such are cut along prominent ridges or spurs. In the plains such an arrangement is usually not feasible—hence a fire may only be arrested by the intervention of the broad bed of a river, or some equally insurmountable obstacle.

It is an open question as to what particular country on our globe suffers the heaviest damage from forest fires. In such circumstances comparison is a matter of great difficulty; we might almost say of impossibility, if anything approaching accuracy is aimed at. The lay mind cannot realize the enormous loss that is entailed by a forest conflagration of any magnitude. Such loss can be partially comprehended by the perusal of statistics, but the latter are not warranted to convey true impressions. Such a notice as—"estimated damage so much sterling"—may possibly give rise to conjecture. But the fact remains that the destruction of young trees cannot adequately be represented by a monetary scale. It is a matter of years not figures; for immature timber takes time, and often a very long time, to reproduce. The reports that reach us from time to time concerning the forest fires of Canada and the United States would lead us to suppose that their destructive effects are beyond reasonable calculation. We read of trains being held up for lengthy intervals by reason of a huge conflagration raging along the permanent way. Stories are told of the wholesale obliteration of farmsteads, and the utter ruin of entire families, whose scle wordly goods have been engulfed in the all-consuming flames.

We next pass on to the consideration as to which race of mankind, we should say civilized or semi-civilized mankind, is mostly imbued with the caution necessary in handling fire. Experience teaches us that the American and Colonial backwoods man has an ingrained instinct and a liberal education in the dangers accompanying the manipulation of fire. The town-bred man, the world-wide over, will collect and gape open-mouthed at some magnificent structure being gutted. From it he learns nothing useful. It helps to satisfy an idle craving for curiosity, and nothing more. From a half-penny daily he learns that the loss is fully covered by insurance, and the fatality is dismissed from his mind without any more compunction. Both in the Old World and the New World the holiday tripper is an unmitigated nuisance in originating forest conflagrations. The American sporting press, greatly through the medium of its most distinguished magazines, is constantly and continuously impressing on the minds of those enjoying an excursion to the woods the necessity of safeguarding against the outbreak of a fire. "Put out your fire before quitting camp" is an exhortation that is prominently forced to the front. The results are no doubt beneficial. Of all excursionists in our estimation, the British rambler ranks amongst the very worst of offenders in connection with forest fires. We cull, as an example, some extracts from the Standard of 13th April:—

"A large mountain conflagration has occurred in the Vale of Llangollen, and last night was still smouldering. At noon on Saturday the heather on the Berwyn range ignited, and extended for over two miles. Every particle of vegetation was consumed. No water was available at an altitude of 1,000 feet, but hundreds of beaters turned out, and prevented the fire from reaching extensive forests of timber. The outbreak is attributed to a carelessly thrown lighted match.

"The Military Police at Aldershot yesterday (Easter Monday) arrested a local youth on a charge of having set fire to the furze on Fox Hills, on Sunday. The flames extended over a tract of six miles, and great damage to furze and wood occurred. So serious was the outbreak that troops had to be utilized to quell it. Over 1,000 acres were burned."

In continuation of the above incident the Standard of 23rd April reports as follows:—

"At Farnham yesterday Percy Hawkins, living at Ash Vale, was summoned by the military authorities for setting fire to the Common at Ash Vale on Easter Sunday, when over 500 acres and 20,000 trees were destroyed in the neighbourhood of the Box Hill ranges. The defendant, who is really 16 years, of age was stated to be a pupil of the Farnham Grammar School. The principal evidence for the prosecution was a statement made by the lad himself to a police constable. I dropped a match and the grass blazed up. I did it just to see how it would burn, but I did not think it would go so far."

Here we have a youth who, according to his own statement, lights some grass just to see how it would burn. The question naturally arises as to what punishment should be meted out to a mischief-maker of this type. The damage occasioned by his gross stupidity will, in all probability, take years to repair. The retribution must be such as to have a lasting effect on the individual himself, and be of such severity as to act as a deterrent to others of his calibre. In our opinion there is only one course open—namely, the infliction of a sound flogging.

We furthermore hold to the feeling that for similar offences, the application of the "cat" for lads of under 18 years of age should invariably be made, and that the fact that such administration is liable, if not certain, should be proclaimed in public places. If this step were carried into effect we are sure that instances of forest fires originated through carelessness would very soon become few and far between.

Another destructive conflagration was personally witnessed by a correspondent at Holmwood near Dorking on Easter Sunday. This fire was similarly started by some one carelessly throwing down a lighted match. The damage which occurred was extensive—holly trees flared up like rockets, and one private mansion was in peril. In this case the aid of the Dorking fire brigade had to be requisitioned, but the conflagration had extended to far too great a frontage before the arrival of the engine to enable it to cause any perceptible diminution.

We think great benefit might accrue if school masters and mistresses endeavoured to inspire their pupils with the knowledge that the greatest precaution must be exercised when handling ignitable materials of any description. Boys will be boys is a time worn adage; but when boys go to the extent of causing thousands of pounds of damage, steps should be taken to show them that school-boy pranks can be overdone, and that certain ones must by hook or by crook be eradicated, even though this process of elimination savours beyond a doubt of physical force.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

If Mr. Clement's prediction will be kind enough to prove inaccurate so far as as the steady rainfall from 10th to 28th, we shall have a prospect of good racing at Tollygunge on Saturday next. Up to the time of writing, however, that gentleman has been so far exactly correct in his forecast, and we rather fear a wet day for Saturday. However it is no use meeting troubles half way and we must hope for the best.

The gate was to have been up for practice on Tuesday but the course was in such a shocking condition owing to heavy rains that the secretary had thought it advisable to keep it closed so as to give it a chance of being in order on Saturday. There was, however, a good deal of galloping of probable candidates out on the maidan. Kipper and High Court went together at a difference in weight of about 1 st. Then Gladsome and Coin II. did a spurt, the small pony going the better of the two. Bayleaf and Delusion, two of the Novice Stakes competitors ran along together for four furlongs on the sand and Dreadnought and Lord Chester sprinted across the maidan.

On paper the winners of most of the events seem to stick out a yard but until one sees the conditions of the horses and knows who is going to ride them, predictions for Tollygunge races are somewhat unsafe. The Novice Stakes looks one of the most open of the lot but we think the result will probably lie between Electric Light, who, we understand, is to be ridden by Mr. Wallace Jones and Delusion on which we are glad to say it is Mr. R. A. C. Pugh's present intention to make his reappearance in Calcutta G. R. ranks. Unless something happens to him or he is extraordinarily unfit we do not see how Sir Ulric can possibly lose the Club Stakes as his class is better than anything else in the race. If she goes in this Loch Lily might run close up, but she is more likely to go for the pony race in which case, if both fit, Dalgai and Prince Moorfield should have a good fight for second place.

Lefterin, Mr. Galstaun's mount, stands out nearly as far in the Maiden Race as Sir Ulric in the June Plate, especially as we hear that Regina is a very doubtful starter. There are three pony races on the card and the open race should be one of the best of the day. Coin II. will be a favourite but Skipping Girl is a dangerous outsider and unless going is heavy one of the big ponies might possibly come in and upset the pot.

The Buggy Stakes should be a tustle between Kipper and The Bug. The latter pony raced up in Darjeeling fifteen months ago under the name of Vanity Fair II. when her best performance was to run a bad second for Lady George at a difference of 2st. 2lb. in the five furlong race. When Kipper met Lady George over four furlongs she was receiving 2st. 11lb. and finished a length in front of the other pony which would make Kipper and The Bug very much the same class. Kipper will be ridden by Mr. Galstaun and The Bug by Mr. Holmes so that they will each have to declare a 5lb. penalty and we look forward to a good race between them with Mr. Morris's pony Watchful pretty close up.

There is only one in the Amateur Pony Race worth considering and we should be very much surprised if Loch Lily cannot win it with great comfort. Considering that the events in this meeting are all terms races and that it is the first of the season, the entries are undoubtedly good and give promise of capital meetings to come.

The innovation of making the Pony Race for horses that have never won Rs. 500 instead of for maidens as usual has proved a big success, producing a really good field. We believe it would be a good thing if the open Horse Race is made on something the same lines in future, and if a Maiden Horse Race is desired it might be better to keep it in the closed divisions in which there are if anything more maidens.

Two ponies came up for the measurement for the Tollygunge Races, Baddock who went 10-0½, The Bug who measured 10-0½.

The Monsoon Course from the 1½ miles crossing to the 1 mile crossing is now open every day when weather permits and anybody wanting to use it should send in a list of the horses which are to be worked to the Secretary, Calcutta Turf Club, before using the track.

We notice that the Jumping School has been receiving attention of late and has been very greatly improved by raising the level of the school in one or two places so that the moisture might be drained off. A new Jump of the pattern proposed to be used in the Tollygunge Steeplechase Course has been put up so that horses may get a chance to school over it in the cage.

We learn that Colin Barett who rode here with a very successful average last cold weather is coming out for the Monsoon Meetings. He is not accepting any retainer this time and will be open for any engagement either on the flat or over hurdles. As Barett can go to scale about 7-9 or 7-10 and did so well here he is likely to get lots of riding.

Mr. T. G. Evens, our leading G.R., arrived here by The Persia, on Sunday. He was out on the course riding work as usual on Tuesday morning and looking very fit and well.

The Manchester Cup, as will be seen from our Special Telegram, was won by an outsider, Cargill. Lord Howard de Walden's bay colt is by Carbine—Galinne and has the following performances to his credit. As a three-year-old he ran nine times, scoring four wins and a third. He won the Holiday Plate, £879, 1¼ miles, at Hurst Park carrying 8-2; the Maiden Three-Year-Old Plate, £100, 7 furlongs, at Lingfield, carrying 9-7; the Paddock Three-Year-Old Maiden Plate, £100, 6 furlongs, at Haydock Park, carrying 9-6; and the Autumn Handicap, £175, 1 mile, at Newmarket, carrying 7-12. Last year he ran on six occasions, won the Newmarket Handicap, £905, 1¼ miles, carrying 7-11; was beaten by a head in the Princess of Wales Stakes, £4,844, 1½ miles, by Queen's Advocate, 8-10, carrying 8-13; was second to Arranmore, 7-3, in the Great Tom Plate, £460, 7 furlongs, at Lincoln, carrying 9-0; and ran third in the Manchester November Handicap, £1,325, 1½ miles, carrying 8-0 to Old China, 7-11 and Simonson, 7-6.

It has been announced that Sir Thomas Lipton is selling his famous Cup challenger, Shamrock, for the price of scrap metal.

A polo tournament on the American system was concluded at Lahore on the 2nd instant with the final scores as follows:—

"C," 10 goals; "B," 6 goals; "D," 5 goals; "F," 4 goals; "E," 2 goals; and "A," 1 goal.

The teams were composed as follows:—

"A," Mr. Bickford, Capt. Macrae, Mr. Sutherland and Major Smith (back).

"B," Capt. Nutt, Mr. Danson, Capt. Dawson and Mr. Barrow (back)

"C," Capt. Douglas, Mr. Weir, Major Cruddas and Capt. Chrystine (back).

"D," Messrs. Burne, Withers, Lister and Major Melville (back).

"E," Mr. Stretton, Capt. Grant, Mr. Furnival and Capt. Herbert (back).

"F," Mr. Allsopp, Capt. Salt, Col. Johnson and Mr. Winter (back).

Some excellent games were witnessed and the tournament was a big success.

The final game in the Beresford Polo Tournament postponed from the 7th instant, owing to bad weather, was played on Tuesday under excellent conditions. There was a big attendance including the Viceregal and Lieutenant-Governor's parties, and after the finest game of the tournament the verdict went to the King's Dragoon Guards who beat Patiala by 3 goals to one. It was a source of disappointment that the railway accident near Dehra delayed the arrival of the ponies of the 2nd Gurkhas who had consequently to scratch. They were expected to give a good account of themselves.

H. E. the Viceroy entertained the members of the teams competing in the tournament to dinner at Viceregal Lodge on the 7th instant. The guests were:—Captain H. F. Wickham, Mr. L. St. C. Cheape, Mr. E. A. Wienholt, Mr. L. H. Hawkins, Major Sir John Milbanke, Captain the Hon. E. B. Meade, Major F. Wormald, Major E. Crawley, Mr. C. E. Bryant, Mr. B. G. Nicholas, Mr. P. G. Nicholas, Mr. P. G. Davidson, Lieut.-Col. N. T. Nickalls, Major R. W. R. Barnes, Captain B. D. Fisher, Mr. H. S. Nutting, Mr. M. G. P. Willoughby, Captain Lord Francis Scott, Captain R. G. Naini Tal has been en fete during the past week, the Ranikhet week providing its annual round of enjoyable sport. Proceedings opened with the polo tournament on the 31st ultimo, Chaubattia beating the Wanderers by 6 goals to 4, and the West Meath Exiles beating the Scarlet Runners by 10 goals to 5. In the semi-finals the next day the Leopards beat the Rifle Brigade by 6 goals to 4 and the West Meath Exiles beat Chaubattia by 11 goals to 6. The final was played on the 4th instant and proved a most exciting encounter. Time was called with the score 7 all: the goals were widened and play resumed but an unfortunate accident to Mr. Roland Hudson, whereby he sustained a fractured rib, necessitated the game to be continued with two aside, the Leopards eventually winning. The cricket match was won by Naini Tal by 7 wickets. Ranikhet batted first and scored 133 to which Naini Tal replied with 289. The Ranikhet second innings produced 359 runs, Mr. Riley playing brilliantly for 92. Naini hit off the required runs for the loss of three wickets. The Hockey match was also won by Naini Tal by 5 goals to love. In the tennis tournament Naini won the Men's Doubles by three sets to love; Ranikhet the mixed doubles by 2 sets to love, while in the Men's Singles Major Killery, Ranikhet, beat Mr. Dillon, Naini Tal, by 2 sets to love. Naini won the golf and the billiards ended in a draw: Mr. Casement (Naini) beating Mr. Riley (Ranikhet) and Col. Broadmead (Ranikhet) Capt. Stack (Naini). The final in the Sailing Race resulted as follows: The Wave, sailed by Col. Thompson, 1; The Violet, sailed by Mr. Rowcroft, 2; The Infant sailed by Capt. Stack, 3.

At Leyton in the third match of the tour the Australians gave overwhelming proof of their run-getting powers on hard wickets by making 609 for the loss of six wickets against Essex in five hours and fifty minutes. There was plenty of variety in the County's bowling, but, runs came at the rate of over a hundred an hour throughout. It was a bright, interesting, and very meritorious performance, the honours of which were carried off by two new-comers in the persons of Ransford and Bardsley. Although the Australians were naturally disappointed in failing to pull off the game, the success of the two young left-handers must have proved very welcome to the side. The retirement of Darling and the absence of Hill caused the present team to come over without a left-handed batsman who had proved his worth in England. Bardsley found his form in his first game, and Ransford, after a couple of disappointments, was seen at his best in an innings of 174. Prophecy in connection with cricket is a hazardous thing, but it appears probable that in the pair named Australia will find worthy successors to Hill and Darling.

Despite the hours of play—twelve to two, and 2·45 to six—desired by the Australians, as many as 525 runs were made on the first day of the match for six wickets. The fact is worthy of mention inasmuch as it is the largest number ever made by an Australian team in England in a single day. The previous highest score was 513, also for six wickets, against Hampshire at Southampton four years ago, when Gregory scored 134, Hill 115 and Noble 101.

The game will always be remembered on account of the magnificent stand of 355 for the third wicket by Bardsley and Ransford. The pair made the runs, with scarcely a mistake, in three hours and a quarter, and credited themselves with the largest partnership ever indulged in by two left-handers in a first-class match. When Ransford was caught at mid-on only thirteen more runs were needed to set up a fresh record for the third wicket—to surpass, in fact, the 367 put on by John and William Gunn for Notts against Leicestershire at Trent Bridge six years ago. So the "best on record" in that particular line is still credited to Englishmen.

Appended are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Yorkshire beat Lancashire at Manchester by 65 runs.

Somerset beat Gloucester at Taunton by 166 runs

Notts beat Surrey, at Nottingham, by an innings and 170 runs.

Surrey beat Worcester at the Oval by 159 runs.

Leicester beat Northampton, at Leicester, by five wickets.

Nottinghamshire beat Gloucestershire by two wickets.

Lancashire beat Warwickshire by an innings and 122 runs.

Middlesex beat Worcester by seven wickets.

The Australians beat Hamshire by six wickets.

The matches between Leicester and the Australians, Worcester and Warwickshire, Gloucester and Sussex, and Cambridge University and the Australians were drawn. The matches between Hampshire and Sussex and Middlesex and Kent, Middlesex and Hampshire, Lancashire and Kent, Notts and Essex, and Warwick and Yorks were abandoned.

The Murree Football Tournament began on the 1st instant. This year the following ten teams are taking part:—The 5th (Northumberland) Fusiliers, The P. W. O. (West Yorkshire) Regiment, 10th (P. W. O.) Royal Hussars, 12th Royal Lancers, The Royal Scots, The Black Watch (Royal Highlanders), The Royal Sussex Regiment, The Royal Garrison Artillery (Barian), 1st King's Dragoon Guards, and the Royal Irish Fusiliers.

The first match was between the 10th Hussars and the 12th Royal Lancers, ending in a draw—2 all. The Lancers were victorious in the replay. In the second game the West Yorkshire Regiment beat the 5th Fusiliers by 2 goals to 1. Both matches were played in bad weather. On the 3rd instant, the R. G. A. beat the Royal Sussex by a goal to nil and the Royal Irish Fusiliers beat the King's Dragoon Guards by 3 goals to nil. In the semi-finals on the 4th instant, the Royal Scots beat the 12th Lancers by a goal to nil and the R. I. Fusiliers beat the Gunners by 2 goals to one.

The All India Chess Tournament was concluded at Bombay on the 31st instant. In spite of being well advertised, outside entries were most disappointing, and save Raja Babu of Patiala and Mr. Bland of Bellary, the other competitors were all belonging to the Bombay Presidency. Eighteen in all entered for the second section, but the very exacting demands of serious chess play told on most of the players, and six of them retired from play before they had finished half a dozen and in some cases even two or three games. From the beginning Mr. Morbat, a professional player in the service of the Maharaja of Kolhapur, was looked upon as the probable winner, and throughout the tournament he displayed consistent brilliancy in all his games, eventually being declared champion. Mr. Justice Beamen, President of the Tournament Committee, gave away the prizes to the winners on the 2nd instant.

The World's Professional Sculling Championship between Webb and Arnst will be rowed on the Wanganui River on Wednesday, the 22nd instant.

The Committee of the Madras Boat Club have included in the programme of their August Regatta a four oar race on fixed seats for crews composed of members who have never rowed in a race on slides. This with a view to developing rowing among novices.

The Calcutta Rowing Club will hold its first regatta on the 3rd July. A programme of six events has been framed and judging by the activity on the canal of an evening, entries should be good. The Hoare Cup, ½ mile in fixed seat fours, for junior oarsmen, and the Junior Sculls, ½ mile in clinker skiffs, are the chief events: tub pairs, a ladies' dinghy race, water Quintain and the time honoured scratch fours filling out the programme. Two further regattas will be held this season, one in August when the class fours and novice sculling races will come off, and one in September which will include the senior fours and the senior sculls for the Power Cup.

The final in the Oudh District hockey tournament was played at Lucknow on the 3rd instant, when the Lucknow team, who are the cup-holders, was beaten by Faizabad by 3 goals to 1.

H. H. the Maharajah of Rewah shot a tiger and tigress at Amarkantal on the 2nd instant. These animals are supposed to be the man-eaters which had killed many people in the neighbourhood during the past year, and for the destruction of which the Central Provinces Government had offered rewards.

The following little incident, which ocurred at one of the Thames regattas last summer, is quite characteristic of the taciturn nature of many North Sea fishermen, and will at once appeal to those of our readers who have lived among these fine seamen. The individual in question is the steward of one of the up-river sailing clubs. At the time of the regretable incident he was walking up and down in front of the club, watching the regatta with a seaman's mild contempt for freshwater rowing. Then, without any warning, the amusement of the spectators was changed to terror, as one of the Canadian canoes upset and left its erstwhile occupant floundering in the water—evidently unable to swim. Our friend, the steward, stopped his walk and turned a cold and rather bored eye on the struggling man, whilst the crowd cried, 'Help, help! Fetch a boat,' etc. At last someone addressed the mariner directly: 'You've a boat there, can't you save him?' 'Oh, yes,' was the reply, 'I can save him right enough,' but no effort to move was apparent. Again urged to save the struggling man, before it was too late, he looked pityingly on the speaker and called out to the drowning man, 'Why don't you put your feet down and walk out, sir!' The drowning man was saved!"

A number of Canadian Rocky Mountain goats have been purchased for the London Zoo at a price of £30 each, and there is a further charge of £10 for export duty. Some twenty years ago the New York Zoo paid a considerable sum for one of these goats under the belief that the animals were practically extinct. At this time there were hundreds, if not thousands, roaming about in the unexplored and remote regions of the Rocky Horse Pass.

At the Dresden Photographic Exhibition a new process for recording movements too rapid to be seen by the human eye is shown. The ordinary kinematograph is not sufficiently rapid, although it records some 20 pictures per second. The practical value of the invention is in the clear way in which it shows defects in firearms and ammunition. For instance, it shows grains of powder which have escaped combustion issuing from the muzzle, and parts of the powder gases leaving the mouth of a gun before the shot. How rapidly the mechanism works is shown by the fact that 30 distinct pictures were taken of a hand moved as quickly as possible through the air before it had covered a distance of 1·9 centimetres. The apparatus may also be used for speed test purposes, and in other respects it will be very useful for gunmakers, powder manufacturers, and cartridge loaders.

The annual report of the Bengal Government relating to the mortality caused by wild animals and venomous snakes and the measures adopted in Bengal for their destruction during the year 1908, has just been issued. It states that the Nagpur division, as usual, showed the highest mortality from wild animals, viz., 312 deaths. The increase in the number of persons killed by wild animals, from 840 in 1907 to 1,034 in 1908, occurred chiefly in the Bhagalpur division. The depredations of a man-eating tiger in the district of Monghyr, for the destruction of which a special reward of Rs. 100 was given, account to some extent for this increase.

Six deaths caused by elephants occurred in the Muzaffarpur district and four in the Darjeeling district. A special reward of Rs. 200 has been sanctioned for the destruction of each of the three rogue elephants who are doing damage in the Kalimpong subdivision of the Darjeeling district. The number of deaths caused by tigers rose from 355 to 455, the increase being principally in the districts of Monghyr, Ranchi, Cuttack, the 24 Parganas, Angul and Purnea. The marked decrease from 40 in 1907 to 22 in 1908, in the number of persons killed by tigers in the district of Hazaribagh is attributed to the payment of a special reward of Rs. 500 for every tiger killed within a specified area known to be frequented by a man eater. Singhbhum and Khulna as usual showed a very high mortality. The number of deaths caused by wolves in the district of Hazaribagh increased from 47 to 75, notwithstanding the fact that a special reward of Rs. 20 for every wolf killed within the jurisdiction of certain thanas was offered. Deaths caused by leopards rose from 77 to 94.

The number of persons who died from snake-bite was 7,402 against 8,276 in 1907. The number of deaths from this cause decreased in every division except Burdwan where the number increased from 991 to 1,178.

It is reported that 18,272 head of cattle were killed by wild animals against 16,966 in 1907, the increase being chiefly noticeable in the Bhagalpur Division, where 2,667 head of cattle were killed against 1,588 in the preceding year. The decrease in the Tirhut Division from 200 in 1907 to 7 in 1908, is attributed to incomplete statistics.

The total number of wild animals reported to have been destroyed during the year under report was 1,683 against 1,604 in the preceding year. The number of wolves killed rose from 101 to 301. In the Gaya district alone the number of wolves killed is said to have risen from 21 in 1907 to 228 in 1908. The Collector of that district explains that most of the animals were killed in the adjoining districts of Palamau and Hazaribagh by hunters from Gaya who brought them to their native district to claim the reward.

Eighteen thousand six hundred and eight snakes are reported to have been destroyed, as against 20,499 in the preceding year; but it is doubtful whether much reliance can be placed on the accuracy of these figures. No poisonous snake was sent to the Plague Research Laboratory at Bombay during the year under report.

The amounts paid in rewards for the destruction of wild animals and snakes were Rs. 10,026-10 and Rs. 160-11 respectively, the corresponding figures for 1907 being Rs. 6,513-2 and Rs. 206-4-6.

The number of licenses for fire arms in Forms VIII. and XI. of the Indian Arms Act, which were in force during the year under report, was 33,055; of these 4,513 were fresh licenses.

The Budget continues to be the chief topic of conversation. Everything unpleasant that happens seems to be attributed to its larcenous proposals and Mr. Lloyd-George grows in unpopularity every minute. Spirits, tobacco, beef, and even cheese have gone up in price, hotel proprietors and licensed victuallers have raised their tariffs, and sellers and buyers of most food stuffs are complaining bitterly. Not to be out of the hunt theatrical managers have given tongue and several who have been constrained to withdraw obviously poor plays have put down their reverses entirely to the dastardly demands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It may be that the performance now going on in the House of Commons is proving a greater "draw!" The cyclists were congratulating themselves that they had again been passed by in the matter of the yearly recurring bicycle tax bogey; but they have now reason to fear that they are by no means out of the wood. The increase in license duties will result in an almost univeral raising of charges for food, sleeping and other accommodation in hotels, and that being so, many thousands of hotels and other establishments in the United Kingdom will have to break their contracts with that great body, the Cyclists' Touring Club, and the present discount system, which is one of the chief privileges of its membership of over thirty thousand wheelmen, will be jeopardised. Naturally the Club has lost no time is facing the position and a deputation to the Chancellor is the first move in the protection of those interests for which it exists.

But it is refreshing to find that amidst the encircling gloom the hardy Territorials can pluck up enough spirit to "demonstrate" and give us the assurance that though the cupboard of an Englishman's home may soon be as bare as that of old Mother Hubbard, it will never lack for brave "terriers" to defend it. Nine thousand Khaki-clad men (no less), representing the City of London Territorial forces, last Saturday marched through the City to the Mansion House, where they were received by the Lord Mayor. They really looked—to quote the moss-grown term heard at volunteer inspections—"a fine body of men," and in my opinion the cyclist section looked as good as anything in the show.

Our Generals, in these days of peace and—scarcity, must needs be doing something to remind the nation of their existence methinks. One invents a collapsible, folding pocket bicycle, another puts his men on their word of honour not to misbehave, a third evolves the Boy Scouts, and here is a fourth giving his men a lead in the straight and narrow path by signing the pledge for a year. Last week General Sir Ian Hamilton, presiding at the annual meeting of the Royal Army Temperance Association, held in Caxton Hall, and apparently affected by the atmosphere of this home of fantastic fads, announced his intention of adding to other decorations on his manly bosom the blue ribbon with which the professional abstainer advertises the fact that he is not as other men. Sir Ian said he did not stand before them as an apostle holding in his hand a shining light to guide their erring footsteps, but as a miner, in whose hand glimmered doubtfully a candle indicating repentance. When he reflected that in his thirty-seven years' service some 10,000 quarts of dutiable liquor had passed down the throat of him whom they had asked to be their chairman, his conscience pricked him.

It was one of the characteristics of the British Army that the officers did not say to their men: "Go on," but "Come on." He would be happy to put himself in the position to do so by taking the pledge. He would take it for one year, and the reason he fixed that period was that it was quite long enough for any man to look forward to—especially when he came to his age.

He would be uncomfortable; he knew he would. When he went abroad it would be incredibly difficult to explain to his German or Russian comrades in arms that he had taken an oath which prevented him drinking toasts. But, still, he had weighed the cost. He was prepared to pay the price, and his reason was simple enough. He was assured by some who ought to know that here and there some soldier lad, Regular or Territorial, in the Southern command, might be induced to follow his example. The next General to set a pious example will probably "Cut his gram" and take a twelve months' course of locusts and wild honey. To carry out this self-abnegation scheme to its logical conclusion we may ere long find some grizzled warrior, anxious to harden an effeminate and pampered soldiery, making the spartan resolve to leave off socks and eschew sugar.

Evidently the late Mr. Justice Day ("Hanging Day") was a judge, and a good judge too—of pictures. Last Saturday the sale of his collection was concluded at Messrs. Christie's rooms, the remarkable total of £94,946 being realised. Consisting of 123 oil-paintings and 166 water-colours, this fine collection of works by modern French, Dutch, and English masters was gathered together by the late judge for no more than £43,850, or less than half the sum realised.

Unlike the average collector, the late Mr. Justice Day was unaffected by the fashion or craze of the moment, only buying paintings and water-colours that would prove of permanent value, and as a consequence many of his most treasured canvases realised ten times and sometimes twenty times what he paid for them. His oil-paintings showed a profit of £37,600, while on the water-colours there was an equally satisfactory profit of £13,485.

Months ago I told you of the frauds on no less than eight branches of the London and South-Western Bank in one morning by an exceedingly clever young man who operated under the supremely audacious nom de guerre of "D. S. Windell." He got clean away with about £300, but he has been brought to bag in Spain and there is no disguising the fact that many thousands of Londoners are genuinely sorry; such admiration was evoked by the transcendant cheek of the thing. Not only has he been collared, but he has confessed, now the game is up, and declares that it was the devilment, the ingenuity and the humour together with the almost impossible success to crown it which urged him to commit the fraud. Certainly the thing was most cleverly worked; but such dexterity in a young fellow argues not only misspent youth, but suggests the possibility of even higher flights to follow, so that Mr. "D. S. Windell's" appearance at Bow Street is matter for joy rather than sorrow. It used to be said that the Englishman dearly loved a Lord, with, perhaps, still more truth it might be added that the twen cent Englishman dearly loves a clever rogue.

In these degenerate days pill and tabloid taking is a positive cult. Therefore the recent Chemist's Exhibition must have been a veritable paradise for the medicine lover, with whom it is the right note to have a liver and nerves, an impaired digestion and things of that sort. Of course some offensively healthy people prefer tobacco to a meal, while others, also in rude health, eat when they are hungry. Others, when in doubt, take medicine—it is much more impressive. The Horticultural Hall has been the rendezvous of the poor played-outs. How sweet it is to wander through avenues of gilded pills, how plaintively pleasant to be surrounded by powders and potions, how elevating and entrancing to survey the dainty bottles of extracts, energisers and elixirs of life. If there is an element of sadness in surveying this delicious medley of medicine, it is the cruel reflection that Time, the great trawler, will not give one sufficient years to enable one to take all the specialities on view.

Good people, look out for the visit of one J. Ramsay MacDonald, a labour M.P., who threatens a descent on your unfortunate country next cold weather. He goes out for a holiday and "to increase his knowlege of the administration of the British Empire." "I go," says he, "with no preconceived notions, barring two general and apparently contradictory principles—that government should be extended to the people as far as possible, yet that the genius of the East is quite different from that of the West, and will probably have an evolution on quite different lines." Your last visitor of this class was the impossible Mr. Keir Hardy, I think; if experientia docet you ought to know how to receive the MacDonald, if he proceeds on similar lines. In the days of Warren Hastings those who talked or published sedition were promptly deported; had we progressed on those lines it is not difficult to conceive that by this time persons of the Keir Hardy stamp would find themselves in a lethal chamber ere they had gone many steps beyond the Apollo Bunder. How we have progressed since those bad old days, my masters. Je ne pense pas.

Swami Abhadanada is here. He works miracles by breathing, he is a self-cure merchant, teacher of Eastern secrets, a philosopher and an expounder of those principles which you in India usually associate with a hairy, lanky, ash-bedaubed creature called a fakir—pronounced to rhyme with "baker" by all good Londoners. Follow the Swami and you attain self-control, peace and happiness, perfect bliss—in short join the jogi's classes (fees strictly in advance) and whatever result is desired, whether physical, psychical or spiritual, will come right along in about six months, that being the average period

LORD AND LADY ROBERTS celebrated their golden wedding last week and were the recipients of presents, congratulations, and good withes from every quarter and every class within the Empire. In the achievements which have reflected lustre upon their name, their partnership, as all who knew them are aware, has counted for much. It has been in a fine sense one of the assets of the State, and upon such an occasion we remembered equally the great soldier who has rendered historic service to the flag, and the wife worthy of him who for half a century has been his best supporter through life's campaign. We shall be a lighter people than we yet are, and shall have adopted a more frivolous philosophy than yet contents us, if the time ever comes when we forget that there was never solid national strength yet without household excellence and sound family character behind it. The popularity of "Bobs" is unabated, his appearances in public are always the signal for hearty and spontaneous demonstrations.

LORD AMPTHILL considers the time has arrived when India should have a distinctive flag and has said so in the Times. It seems strange, when one comes to think of it, this absence of an Indian flag from our pageantry of bunting. We may find something on a halyard to run up in honour of our humblest colony, but the land from which our King takes an Imperial title is without a symbol.

The reason is not far to seek—Indian lands are not without their own heraldic symbols, but India as a whole is something that British rule has changed from a geographical expression to an Empire. When a device is found for that great wedge of Asia let us see to it that no unimaginative herald is allowed to supply such an undignified collection of armorial trivialities as serves in more than one case for the sign of a great dominion of the Crown.

THE only theatrical item worth noting this week is the successful revival of "The Explorer" at the Lyric. It is a melodrama, peppered with wit and epigram typical of Mr. Maugham, and while its situations are artificial and its self-sacrificing hero a little irritating in his resolute purpose to make himself and the woman who loves him unhappy for the sake of a very fine piece of honour, "The Explorer" contains plenty of thrilling moments and an abundance of wholesome laughter. For the revival Mr. Maugham has re-written the fourth act, and Lucy Allerton is now left in ignorance of the true character of her blackguardly brother, but it cannot be said that an always weak ending has been strengthened.

The part of Alexander Mackenzie is scarcely an ideal Waller part; but his voice and his bearing are fitting to the strong, grave man of action. Miss Evelyn d'Alroy succeeds Miss Evelyn Millard as Lucy Allerton, and gives a charming portrayal of the rôle; Miss Fanny Brough in Miss Eva Moore's old part is exceedingly amusing as Mrs. Crowley, and as Richard Lomas, the mouthpiece of most of Mr. Maugham's epigrams, Mr. A. E. George fired off his lines with every point. The revival was received with a warmth that bordered on enthusiasm.

LAST week a distinguished soldier passed away in the person of General Sir Hugh Henry Gough, V.C., G.C.B., Keeper of the Crown Jewels in the Tower of London. Sir Henry was in his 76th year. Having entered the 3rd Bengal Cavalry fifty-six years ago, he served throughout the Indian Mutiny, and in the course of it won his great distinction by an act of remarkable bravery. When in command of a section of Hodson's Horse, near Alumbagh, he led a charge across a swamp and captured two guns that were held by the enemy in vastly superior force. For this feat he received the V.C. decoration. Still but a subaltern when the war ended, he had the satisfaction of reading his name in several despatches, of being thanked by the Governor-General in Council, of being noted for promotion, and receiving the medal with three clasps.

Then followed in 1868 the Abyssinian campaign, in which Sir Hugh Gough commanded the 12th Bengal Cavalry, and he was present with Lord Napier at the capture of Magdala. Ten years later, with the brevet rank of colonel, he took the field in the Afghan campaign in command of the cavalry of the Kurum force, and in this capacity was present at Sir Frederick (now Lord) Roberts' brilliant action at Peiwar Kotal. Raised to the rank of brigadier-general, he shared in the operations round Kabul and in the historic march on Kandahar, in which Sir Hugh commanded the cavalry brigade. Six times he was mentioned in despatches for services in this trying campaign, receiving the medal with four clasps, the bronze star, and the K.C.B.

Retiring in 1897, Sir Hugh a year later, in recognition of his long and meritorious service, was made Keeper of the Crown Jewels in the Tower. He was the author of "Old Memories," a volume of reminiscences.

GEORGE MEREDITH, our leading novelist of recent years, has died after a few days' illness. There was a strong suggestion for burial in Westminster Abbey, but it has been decided that this honour could not be done to this really great writer, so he was cremated yesterday. He will perhaps be best remembered in India by "Diana of the Crossways" and "The Ordeal of Richard Faveral."

THE VAGRANT.

Shikar.

AVENGER AVENGED.

THE Leopard has been called by some sporting writers a horrid nuisance, on account of his taste for game and liking for dogs in particular. I cannot say that I altogether agree with them. It is certainly most aggravating to find your pet smooth haired terrier, or perhaps your clumber spaniel missing, when you step outside your bungalow in the early morning. It appeared like adding insult to injury, in my case, when out shooting one day in the Himalayas, that I should chance to come across the collar of a dog of mine, that had been missing from home for two days, but I was not aware at the time, that he had been the sumptuous repast of a leopard. Nevertheless it was due to this little circumstance that I determined to have my revenge as soon as possible, and revenge is sweet. I sat down by the collar and calling the tiffin coolie, proceeded to discuss the contents of the basket, meanwhile meditating on a plan of campaign, for the destruction of the wily beast, whose lair was evidently somewhere in the vicinity.

I despatched my shikari to bring the headman of the village situated about three furlongs higher up the valley. He was not long in arriving, being under the impression that this was an excellent opportunity to get his palms well oiled with silver baksheesh. A bottle of soda with a large dash or two from my flask soon had the desired effect of making him open his mouth. He told me, that there were two leopards that nightly committed depredations in his village, and that the village folk were too frightened to even venture outside the village compound after dark, two women having been mauled by them.

"If the sahib will come and stay in the village for one night, when the moon is full," he said, "I will tie up a goat or two goats, and then there will be one for each of the cruel beasts. They are too cunning to be caught in traps." This seemed a satisfactory plan to me, and on examining my diary I found the moon would be full in three days, so telling him I would send my peon to him on the morning of the third day with full instructions as to my time of arrival I offered him a farewell appetiser. He said he would like to take a bottle of soda with some dwai (medicine) in it to his ghur (house), it made him feel so khushi (happy). I persuaded him to try another dose before going and with the help of a cigarette, he became more loquacious, if possible, than before. He merged from broken English into his native lingo. "On the far side of this hill," he said, "when the sun is setting, the ghoral come to feed and if the sahib is not too tired, in one half hour I will show them to him." I asked him if there were many, and he told me not less than ten. I was sceptical on this point of the number, and thought he was drawing the long bow, as I had never seen more than three or four together before, and moreover they are generally supposed to be not gregarious; but nevertheless, it turned out that he was correct. We started immediately for the peak of the hill by a circuitous route, the khud-climbing being anything but an easy matter, owing to the slippery nature of the rocks. However, having arrived at the crest I looked around me, the view was almost panoramic. The sun was sinking behind another distant knoll and the sky was composed of those various coloured hues which seem to be peculiar to the mountains of Northern Asia. Some two thousand feet below, the mountain stream was winding its way over its rocky bed to the plains.

About five hundred feet beneath me was an oasis. Pointing to this, my guide exclaimed "That is the place where the ghoral feed when the sun is low." I scanned this green patch with my telescope and at first could discern nothing moving. The shikari's vision was keener than mine. He had descried them and pointed them out to me. I counted them, nine in all, two buck and seven does as far as I could judge; some were lying down and some were grazing. On either side of the oasis were ravines, and as I have invariably found ghoral break upwards when disturbed, I sent four coolies down each ravine, with instructions to walk them slowly up to me from below. While they were carrying out the orders I had given them, my philosophical friend informed me, that in his godown he had a pair of horns that he had picked up in that very spot; they were as long as his hand; he thought the ghoral had been killed by one of the cheetahs. I was scrutinizing the ground from behind the rock where I had stationed myself when I heard a low whistle. The shikari was drawing my attention to something that I had not observed before. He whispered "cheetah." A moment afterwards I caught a glimpse of him. He was on the opposite side of the nullah, making his way upwards, and had evidently been roused from his afternoon siesta, by the coolies proceeding down to the valley below. I concluded, he had been hiding in hopes of a ghoral dinner. Stealthily he glided up the hill, without halting once, until he arrived on the crest, where he stood, broadside on to me, outlined against the horizon with the setting sun behind him. Truly a magnificent specimen of his tribe he was, as he appeared to be casting defiance at the coolies behind him and probably dreaming of his lost meal. Alas! he was too far from me to risk the drawing of a bead on him and reluctantly I let him go. Even if I had risked a lucky shot, I should have spoilt the chance I had of obtaining the ghoral I had already marked down as my own property. Over the hill he went towards where he was in the habit of devouring his nightly prey, and where I was later on to make, not only his acquaintance, but that of his spouse. The ghoral were sauntering nearer and nearer to me, the largest buck in the van. Up till this time there had not been a breath of wind but a puff now came behind them, a bane that sportsmen know too well and brought the scent of the coolies with it.

A doe gave the note of alarm, not dissimilar from the bark of the kakur, or the kakrell as he is called in the Pir Panjal and in India in general, jungli bukra. Immediately a stampede commenced, but fortunately brought them nearer to me. About eighty yards in front of me were two paths diverging to either side of the hill. Here they hesitated, the big buck appeared to be undecided as to which path he should take. This hesitation gave me the opportunity I had awaited so patiently. Crack went my ·360 rifle, that handy little weapon for hill shooting, and away went my buck. Had I missed him? It seemed impossible. Straight towards a precipice on my left, that I had not even noticed before, he was heading. Over he went, a sheer drop of full 90 feet. He appeared to me to land on his horns. In a second, he was on "all fours," trembled violently and then collapsed. I found the measurements were as follows:—Twenty-eight inches at the shoulder and length of horn 8¾ inches. The weight was 61½lbs. The other buck fell to me the following month, which was February, nearly in the same spot; the measurements were smaller, the horns being 7¼ inches, which is well above the average for ghoral. Well satisfied with my day's sport, I tossed a dib to my sporting friend, and returned to my camp, to sleep as a man can sleep after a hard day of khud-climbing.

On the third day I despatched the peon early in the morning to my friend's village, with a bottle of soda and the stimulating peg, that reaches a Pahari's heart. He carried with him full instructions as to the erection of a grass kraal, 3 feet high, 4 feet broad, and 7 feet long, which would admit of me either sitting or lying down. It was to be enclosed and covered with dead brushwood with the exception of a peep-hole a foot square, which would enable me to see enough for all purposes without my presence being discovered. This was built on the spur of the hill over which I had seen "spots" disappear. There was no human habitation within half a mile. At five in the evening I pegged a yelling hungry kutta down within ten yards of the kraal in front of the little window. Having touched the sights of my ·450 Holland and Holland, with a little luminous paint and placed a few pebbles in my pocket, which might be useful to keep the dog awake, I prepared for my long night vigil. At 10 o'clock the moon was shining gloriously, but by eleven she was completely hidden by ominous black clouds. I could not even discern the dog. Before long the rain fell in torrents, the lightning flashed vividly, the howling of the terrified dog was drowned in the roar of the incessant thunder claps. The water came through the flimsy roof like water-spouts, and as for me I was like unto the proverbial drowned rat. Shivering with the cold I took a double peg of neat whiskey, which might prevent an attack of fever and stop my teeth chattering. Shortly after this my head was bobbing, but how long I had been dozing I cannot say when I awoke with a start. The moon was shining in all her grandeur again. The puppy was straining and biting at his chain with all his might and main and making night hideous in his anguish: evidently some animal was on the prowl. I brought my Express to the "Ready," and as I did so, a leopard crossed the little window between the dog and myself, not more than striking distance from the dog. Curiously enough she only made a passing snap at him, and I fancy must have been suspicious of a trap for she disappeared down the khud. The terrified dog continued his extraordinary movements, and it was no surprise to me to see another leopard advancing. He was twenty yards away when I first saw him. Cautiously he sneaked closer and closer and every moment I expected him to spring on his prey, as a cheetah springs on a buck. Not a bit of it; he lay full length on the ground, his enormous brush was sweeping to and fro as he toyed, with his huge paws, at the dog, in the same way that a cat plays with a doomed mouse. This was intensely interesting to me, if not to the dog, but suddenly with a terrific blow, from a murderous paw, he broke his neck. In a trice his fangs were in his throat to bear him off. The silence of the night was now broken by the crack of my Express and the midnight marauder and slayer of a hundreds dogs, and goats, had paid the penalty of his depredations. In conclusion I must pay a tribute to the villagers. In the early morning they swarmed round me, the women cried with joy and the men kissed my feet with gratitude. They showered their blessings on me, for ridding them of this much hated pest, but exciting sport giver.

Fishing.

SALMON FISHING IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Fishing, like politics, makes strange bed-fellows, and a chance meeting on a boat from Halifax brought me as a room-mate an Englishman returning from a salmon trip who seemed to be a perfect type of the fisherman to whom the fish are supreme and everything else of no moment or else all wrong. He was of those of whom it was jocosely said that their first remark in the morning was: "It is a fine day; let us go out and kill something." But as an undoubted killer of salmon his fishing experiences were indeed remarkable. In a trip of two months he boasted that he and a friend caught 635 salmon, an average of ten and one-half a day, making no allowance for Sundays or stormy days when no fishing was done—not impossible truly, and quite satisfactory I imagine, to the fisherman whose object is not sport, but slaughter. A feat more remarkable was that of his friend while fishing in Lapland, where, as he stated, the fishing usually begins about ten o'clock at night and ends about two in the morning, who, in a single evening killed thirty-three salmon. This, I confess, overtaxed my credulity for allowing twenty minutes to cast for, hook and land each salmon, which I think all fishermen will regard a small allowance, he must have fished steadily eleven hours without a rest, a feat, it is safe to say, beyond the powers of human endurance. And what pleasure can the other charms of woods and waters be in experiences such as these?

Salmon fishing may be an expensive luxury, but it is worth all it costs—provided you get the salmon. Many who have incurred the initial cost, taken the long and expensive journey involved, spent long days of arduous labour in wielding an ordinarily heavy salmon-rod, and after paying for guide, boats and provisions returned empty-handed, will pronounce this a wise proviso. In these days the sport seems to be largely for the favoured few who are able to lease the best rivers, provide guardians at a large outlay, and meet the cost of tackle, guides, provisions, camp outfit, traveling and other incidental expenses. Were there no free waters the sport would be prohibited to the many, but even with free fishing the outlay and time involved is enough to place it out of the reach of the vast majority.

Having the privilege of fishing, however, much can be done with very little, as I gathered from a youthful fisherman, who gave me as nothing strange, while awaiting a train at a station in Newfoundland, the story of his skill. The tackle consisted of a three-jointed cane rod costing $1·10, reel ·50, line ·30, leader ·15, fly ·20, and with this he captured and landed a seven-pound salmon. Fine tackle is not always necessary and when salmon are disposed to take the fly, they will take it, however, crudely presented. One morning a guide in my employ found at the landing a rod of a fellow guide which, for the want of a leader, had the fly tied to the end of the line. This is contrary to all approved methods, but nevertheless, casting from a rock near the landing, an unlikely spot for salmon, he had a rise and landed a fish of eleven pounds. But where so much depends in landing the fish on the reliability of the tackle, no salmon angler would feel reasonably sure of the fish with anything except what is procurable only at a much greater cost. It is possible in Halifax, Nova Scotia, or St. John, Newfoundland, to purchase a rod and reel, two lines and a supply of leaders and flies at an outlay of about fifty dollars, sufficient for a trip of three weeks, and it is generally adequate, but a thoroughly reliable outfit usually involves in New York an expenditure of from eighty-five to one hundred dollars. Where large fish are to be handled the strain on rod, reel and leader, especially in cases of emergency, is so great that unless the angler can be confident of his tackle the penalty is often the loss of the handsome fish for which he may have been long hoping. Much of the fishing in Newfoundland is done by wading the rivers, and if the angler is unwilling to get wet, the cost of wading stockings, shoes and socks must be added.

A trip of a month, including tackle, wading stockings and shoes, camp outfit, supplies, guides, boats, travelling and incidental expenses of the journey will vary in cost considerably with the needs of the individual and his ability to do without comforts considered by many indispensable, but in most cases the average expense would be about three hundred dollars, although in the case of a party of three or four it might be considerably less.

Everyone who expects to hook and land his own salmon and not depend upon his guide to do the casting and hooking should look for nothing except the hardest kind of back-breaking work; for this is surely involved. Alas! many of the stories we hear of considerable numbers of salmon got or killed would, if the truth were known, be of guides who did most of the casting and hooked most of the fish and then handed the rod with the salmon attached to the would-be sportsman to have the pleasure of playing the fish until it was gaffed. But the angler who wishes no fish other than such as are trophies of his own skill will count many days of disappointment spent in casting his fly in vain, trying his patience as well as his physical powers to the utmost. If there be any form of bodily labour capable of producing such an ache between the shoulders and at times in the lumbar region as well, I have not experienced it. Working with a salmon rod and a heavy reel attached, casting about sixty feet of line straight out upon the waters, and after gently moving the line with an undulatory motion of the rod across the pool until it has travelled a quarter of the circle, withdrawing it with sufficient force to place the line behind in a manner which will admit of another cast, and repeating this process for an hour at a time, if the salmon do not rise to the fly in the meantime, will soon produce the back-ache to which I refer. But the ache after reaching its climax will begin to diminish as the work goes on, and when at some skilful cast the line suddenly straightens, a sharp resistance follows, and a noble salmon is hooked, the pain disappears as if by magic and, in the exhilaration and excitement of landing the fish, is forgotten.

There is an old saying: "No flies, no salmon." Not artificial flies by any means, but the real thing—black flies, sand flies or midgets, and last but not least the omnipresent mosquito. The black flies are your companions by day and sand flies and mosquitoes by night. And strange to say the latter are found of larger size and in greater abundance as you proceed northward, and give a fierce battle in Newfoundland, but fiercer still in Labrador and in the Arctic regions, if the stories are true. The face and hands must be bathed with malodorous lotions or the head protected by a head-net and the hands by gloves, and often resort should be had to both. Well furnished tents are equipped with a canopy of cheesecloth, the best of all materials on account of its fine mesh, to thwart the diminutive sand fly who greets the angler with his burning sting in the hours of the early morning. In the presence of this evil the angler also gratefully sits at meals or in camp in the smoke of a smudge, thankfully welcoming it if it will rid him of the pests. I do not mean to convey the idea that they are bad at all times, but they are very bad sometimes, and at all times preparation must be made for the worst.

As in almost all fishing, so in salmon fishing, the weather conditions play an important part. But it is difficult if not impossible to say when they are perfect. They never seem to be beyond criticism. There is always something to be desired. And fish seem to be, like mortals generally, creatures of whim and caprice, and on days you would least expect it there may be the best sport. I recall as an instance of this an experience when fishing the Rangely water for trout several years ago on a lowering day, when the clouds hung heavy above us and the prospects seemed fair. My objective point was Indian Rock opposite the club house of the Oquossoc Angling Association. On reaching the spot and just as I was about to fish the rain began to fall. As every angler knows, it is regarded as hopeless to fish with the fly in a rainstorm. I therefore remarked to my guide that we had better gain shelter.

"Up here," he replied, "we don't get no fish, unless we fish for 'em."

"Oh," I responded, if you think it well to fish, we'll fish."

With a feeling that I was a fool-fisherman, I donned my raincoat and began to cast carefully. I looked for no good result as the rain was descending heavily, when, of a sudden, there was a shock that made me almost fall backward, and the guide gave a start set the boat rocking. For an instant I was not quite sure that lightning had not struck, but my straightened line and bending rod revealed a goodly fish. "Got him?" asked the guide.

"Yes, indeed," I replied.

And then began the sulking of the fish for a time, then the mad rushes and leaps, and finally the landing net brought in a fine trout of four and three-quarter pounds. Every day will bring its study of the weather and the situation generally. The day will either be too bright or too dark, the wind will either be from the wrong direction or too much of it, or none at all, the water will be too high or too low, too clear or too muddy, and it will be impossible to say things are just right. But notwithstanding this there will be the good days that proved to be all wrong and the bad days that turned out to be all right. Of the times and seasons we are all truely ignorant.

The rivers, too, must be studied carefully. The season for salmon fishing varies from early June until the middle of September. Not all the rivers will be suitable during the entire period. Some rivers are early and some late. In some the season lasts longer than in others; two rivers may be within a short distance of each other and one may be early and the other late without any reason apparent except that the salmon make them so. Then again, there are rivers which seem to contain large salmon and almost no grilse (a salmon under five pounds), while in others there will be for a time the large salmon, followed by a run of grilse, when few large salmon will be taken. After studying these conditions, unless an appropriate river is chosen, disappointment will be in store. The home of the salmon, out of the sea, does not depend on the size of the river as governing the size of the fish, and large fish and those only are found in very small rivers. The Little Codroy, in Newfoundland, is a small river scarcely more than seventy-five feet wide, and often less, running through meadows of hay with little shade and for the greater part of little depth, but it holds large fish, sometimes of thirty pounds or more, and I saw taken from its water on a day the last of July three fish of 12, 19 and 23 pounds respectively. It is also surprising in what small pools at times large salmon lurk, for on one occasion in a very small pool of fast flowing and whirling water I dropped my fly and as it circled round I was rewarded with a rise and after a long struggle landed a twenty-pounder. They love the rapid current among the big boulders where the water is clearest and purest, generally lying head up stream at the head of the pool with nose resting on or near some large boulder, and sometimes when the water is calm and clear they can be seen in this position, looking like logs of wood. They appear to be at perfect rest and often are immovable by the most disturbing surroundings. Even when stones are thrown in near them and the water threshed by a heavy stick above, through it all they maintain their imperturbable calm. This is more often true of the fish which have been for some time in the river and have become lazy and sluggish in the fresh water, unlike the newcomers from the sea. The latter are usually on the move and active, and it is the fresh run of salmon for whom the angler is ever hoping. The old comers are not easily lured to the fly, contenting themselves with an occasional leap out of water only to vex the sportsman who may have cast long and wearily above the very spot from which a fish has risen, seemingly delighting in this form of mockery at the angler's efforts.

After exhausting energies by patient casting, changing flies from time to time, and wondering where the fish have gone, it requires in such circumstances considerable self-control to keep unspoken words which are not only better unuttered but entirely unsuited to lips not profane. Nevertheless it is worth a long journey even to see them rise majestically from the water, displaying their silvery forms glistening in the sun, and fall with a heavy splash into the depths below. Their disregard of what may be on the surface is surprising. They seem to have no fear of the canoe and frequently leap but a short distance from it and on one occasion a leap brought a fish against my canoe and but a little more would have landed him in it. It is useless to follow these leapers, for they seem to be unattractable by the fly, because disporting themselves in play.

The marvellous leaping of these fish appeared at its best at the Grand Falls of the upper Humber, in Newfoundland. The river is perhaps two hundred yards wide and rushes impetuously over a fall of sixteen feet. Below, it opens out into a long basin of swift water flowing between high bluffs on either side forested with spruce, fir and birch, and looking down from their heights the water is seen to be broken by intersecting ledges of rock only just submerged, about one hundred yards apart. Between the ledges are the fishing pools, although the entire basin, which extends nearly half a mile, may be said to be one large pool. On one of these bluffs our camp was located. From a point a short step up the river from our camp we could look directly down upon the falls and command a perfect view of their entire course across the river. Here I often stood watching the salmon in their attempts to leap the fall. Many of the leaps were futile. Some would be so straight upwards that the fish, after wriggling in midair, descended into the foaming torrent below; others would do better and almost succeed, only to be swept back by the falling water. Large fish, the lords of the river, would thrust up their heads and part of their bodies, for a look at their surroundings, and then retire to the depths below. Some of these fish undoubtedly succeeded in their attempts, because they evidently reached the edge of the falling water and I could not see that they were swept back. The leap of one fish whose effort was entirely successful, is worthy of being told. In size I should judge he was about ten or twelve pounds. He rose from the river at what seemed to be a perfect angle to take him above the fall and literally flew steadily onward through the air until he reached the water at least two feet above the edge of the fall, and most surely went on his way upstream. I carefully noted his leap and a fair estimate would be at least fifteen feet forward and eighteen feet high. I would have scarcely believed it had I not seen it.

What does the salmon feed on while in fresh water, or does he feed on anything? Does he rely for sustenance on his fat accumulated while in the sea, excepting such animalculae as he finds in the fresh water of the river? Their stomachs are always found empty of anything in the shape of visible food. They come from the sea sleek, fat and shining; they descend the river, dark, thin and worth little as food, only to return as before. But if they do not feed, why should they rise to the fly, or take at times a bait of angle-worms? The generally accepted idea is that the salmon does not feed while in the rivers and that taking the fly or baited hook must be ascribed to his evident disposition for play, or to the natural instinct of the fish to seize whatever appears to be a fly or other morsel floating on the water. However this may be, too much cannot be said in praise of the qualities of the fish just arrived from the sea. He shines like burnished silver; is sleek and well rounded, a model of piscatorial grace and comeliness. His flesh in color and texture is exquisite and its rich flavour is remarkably palatable. The contrast between it and that of the frozen salmon transported long distances to our market, and kept maybe for weeks, at last to find its way to our city tables, is very noticeable. I do not know whether the Newfoundland salmon are shipped to any extent to "the States," but I have no doubt his flovour would suffer if subjected to the freezing process and the long interval between catching and eating. I ventured shipping two fish to New York, which I captured the day before leaving the Grand Falls on my return. Their keeping qualities were subjected to a severe test, as they were sent unfrozen, packed in ice and sawdust, but they arrived in excellent condition and were eaten on ninth day after the catch.

Most of the rivers of Newfoundland can be satisfactorily fished only by wading. This, however, is not true of the upper Humber, where the fishing is done from canoe or boat. The other rivers are of a different character, very shallow, at times falling away into deep pools or "runs" extending a long distance. In such it is often necessary in covering the pool or run to wade into the stream. The use of canoe or boat is, in such rivers, impracticable, and the angler should be prepared with rubber "waders" reaching to the waist, the feet covered with woollen socks and hob-nailed shoes, and boldly take to the water. The frequent boulders, the rapid current and the occasional deep holes make the footing at times uncertain, but with discrimination and a proper exercise of discretion a "ducking" will be avoided. The excitement of the occasion is enhanced, after hooking the salmon, by the necessity of regaining the shore, which is not generally an easy matter without risking the loss of the fish. But the Newfoundland waters can be fished in no other way, that is, at least, the rivers of the West coast, such as Harrys brook, Robinsons, Fischels, the Grand and Little Codroy and the lower Humber.

There is a large variety of rivers open to the choice of the angler along the western coast of Newfoundland, reached by different modes of travel. The railroad from Port aux Basque in its circular route to St. John traverses the fishing district and runs for miles along the Grand Codroy and Harrys brook, both of them favourite resorts of the fisherman, yielding every year considerable numbers of large salmon. Rivers like the Little Codroy, Robinsons and Fischels are also in close proximity, and satisfactory accommodations are to be had at small boarding places close to the rivers, or if the angler prefers camp-life, he may pitch his tent near some promising pool.

A favourite mode of reaching the rivers near the sea is to charter a schooner, and, sailing along the coast, land at the mouths of the rivers emptying into the bays, and thus a number of them may be visited. Or the angler having some particular river on the coast as his destination, may take the steamboat which leaves Bay of Islands once a week and disembark as it reaches the mouth of his river. In this way, many visit the rivers of Boone bay, Hawke bay and other points.

The Humber is separated by Deer lake into two parts, the upper and the lower river. Its water is deep yellow in color and wonderfully limpid. The long journey to the Grand Falls, the strong water and its sometimes dangerous aspect, doubtless deter many from attempting the trip, but the dangers, quite likely, seem greater than they probably are, as is attested by the numbers who make it, among whom ladies are occasionally found. There is a certain weirdness and fascination about the river at the Grand Falls which I have never met elsewhere. Although supplied with literature for camp reading, the inclination for books seemed never to come; the hours when not fishing were passed swiftly in gazing upon the dark yellow water falling in a mass of seething foam and watching the salmon leap. Reclining on the edge of the bluff and looking constantly out upon the strong moving waters, the long streams of foam drawn out in forms at times grotesque and again so real to the fancy as to appear to be in versimilitude a canoe with persons paddling, and listening to the harmonies of rushing waters and wind-swept branches, one will weave with wide-open eyes dreams of the angler's fairyland or of the promised Paradise which seem in this enchanting spot to have almost found their realization. DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

BANGALORE SKY RACES.

STEWARDS :

LT.-COL. J. DESARAJ URS. | MAJOR R. C. STEPHEN.
COL. W. T. BRERETON. | LT.-COL. A. A. JONES.
CAPT. A. K. HEYLAND,

Secretary and Clerk of Course :—MR. H. DONNE.

Saturday, 5th June 1909.

A SMART shower of rain fell about half an hour before this afternoon's races which helped to lay the dust and make the evening pleasant. The attendance was good and included several sporting men who were now on their way to Mysore. The card of five events provided fairly good sport and with Salamat in the ring and two others in the second enclosure, punters had a lively time of it, especially in the first and last race.

The hurdle race was considered a dead certainty for Truculence and Advance was second favourite, but neither of these came up to expectations, Mr. Nicholson on Ugly winning a well-ridden race. Bobbery Jack spoiled his chances by coming down at the first hurdle. Hailfellow was backed to win the Fort Cup at even money and his price was subsequently quoted at 2 to 1 on. Thornlea, who had the service of Melsom was next in demand and sailed in an easy winner. There were six starters for the Bangalore Plate, Sir Trenton opening favourite at 6 to 4 against, and Philcourage and Sir Simon being offered and taken at 1½ and twos. A little later Philcourage was backed by Sir Trenton's owner after which his price shortened to even money, Sir Trenton's quotations expanding to two, when he was backed by his stable. Philcourage ran a game race and won from Sir Simon, Sir Trenton not being placed. Flaneur started hot favourite for the Loyal Cup and got home all right, but the result of the race might have been different if Vocalist had the services of a European jockey. In the last race, William Rufus was installed favourite and was freely backed at even money and 6 to 4 on, owing no doubt to his light weight as well as to the reputation of his rider. Plassy who started second favourite upset all calculations by overhauling the field and Non-plus got home with his place money much to the delight of his supporters. Following are details :—

THE HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 150, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 30, and the third Rs. 20. A hurdle race for bonâ fide chargers or ponies. W.A. and C. raised 1st. 7lb. 1½ miles.

LANDLADY : "I daresay the soup you have just had was prepared from a turtle more than one hundred years old!"

Lodger : "Yes, it does seem wonderful, and perhaps the chicken in the fricasse may have been a contemporary of the turtle."

It was one of those very hot days, and little Solly was very warm and thirsty. "Fader," he pleaded, as they passed a confectioner's, "do buy me an ice. I am so varm!"

Vait till we get home, mein sohn," answered the parent, kindly, "den I dells you a ghost story, und mages your plood run cold."

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 21st May 1909.

GATWICK.

As generally happens, better weather was in store southward of the Surrey Hills, than was suggested by the cold, cheerless morning in London, which no doubt kept many an intending visitor from chancing it last Friday. The outlook at Gatwick was by no means promising, as a regular South Down mist prevailed, strengthening into rain and sleet, but the watery phase only lasted long enough to lay the dust, and the cold spell was dispersed by a bright spring sun which helped to bring the muster well up to the average. The spring grass on the course kept the galloping from being as dead as it was at Newmarket, though horses were running on top of the ground. Results :—

Monday's rain was a blessing, as it freshened up the Knavesmire, but it hardly had time to take much effect on the clayey soil, which was cracked in places and rapidly drying up under a wind keen enough for winter. The going next day was undoubtedly on the hard side, a fact that will account for the absence of several horses expected to give a good account of themselves. Sport, however, was excellent throughout, fields panning out well; but the talent experienced some hard knocks. Results:—

Racegoers, however, care little about the trials and troubles of trainers, and so a glorious midsummerlike day, with a cloudless sky and a westerly wind, put everybody in the best of spirits, and conduced to the strength of a capital attendance which saw good sport. THE CRUSADE AGAINST DYSENTERY

Wise Words by a Physician.

Among the pernicious diseases incident to life in India dysentery takes an important place. The reasons for this are many and varied. It is, however, unnecessary to enumerate them here. The great fact which every resident in the country, and therefore every possible sufferer, has to keep prominently in mind is how to avoid this dread complaint in the first place, and, in the next, how to take steps to cure it should he be unfortunate enough to contract it.

Speaking broadly, no tropical disease is more pestilential than dysentery, for it undermines the health, depresses the nervous system, reduces the tone and vigour of the whole body, diminishes the mental energy, and, generally, interferes with the individual's physical power of resistance against disease. The result is that, unlike what happens in most other diseases, one attack does not act as a preventive, but rather predisposes to another, thus rendering the weakened system liable to still further inroads, until the condition of the sufferer is deplorable indeed, for he may be attacked by many after-effects, like abscess of the liver, dropsy, scurvy, and nervous affections of various sorts.

Bad as all this is, the patient's case is rendered still worse by consideration of the fact that the general nutrition of the body is lowered by life in hot climates, that the digestive system is therefore depressed as well as the vitality, so that he not only starts heavily handicapped in favour of the disease, but also heavily handicapped against the conditions which make for recovery.

In these respects dysentery may be said to resemble typhoid fever on the one hand, and malaria on the other, and the danger of both is too well known to need more than passing notice. As typhoid is due to ulceration of the small intestine, so dysentery is due to a similar condition of the large or lower bowel, while malaria and dysentery are believed to often have a close relation, the former predisposing to attacks of the latter.

The treatment of dysentery, like that of typhoid, and, in great measure, that of malaria, is admittedly one of diet. Milk, the blandest of foods, was, until a comparatively short time ago, the sheet anchor of the physician. In the very acute stages of the disease many doctors are, however, opposed to its use, and many patients are not able to digest it, so that they grow steadily worse.

Happily, science has discovered a food-tonic which, as one physician has written, "possesses virtues of a very high order," and is practically a specific in the modern treatment of dysentery. This is Sanatogen. Its composition is well known, for it has been widely stated to consist of 95 per cent. of pure casein of milk, the substance to which that food owes its nutritive value, in chemical combination—not merely mixed—with 5 per cent. of Glycero-Phosphate of Sodium, the chief vital constituent of the nervous system. These two substances, in the combination in which they exist in Sanatogen, are so digestible that the preparation puts no strain on the most enfeebled digestive organs. All of it is absorbed or assimilated by the body, so that there is no residue to irritate the ulcers which are formed in the course of the disease and prohibit the giving of solid food.

Sanatogen is, therefore, universally prescribed even in the acutest stages of the severest cases, for it prevents deterioration in nutrition, and maintains the patient's power of resistance at a high level, thereby giving him a better chance of recovering quickly and without complications. More than that, cases which get worse under ordinary conditions rapidly improve when Sanatogen is added to the diet. One of the supremest values of Sanatogen is that it is not limited to restoring the health during or after dysentery. It is actually a preventive of the disease by strengthening the system so that it can withstand exposure to the infection.

Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists. To meet the special needs of the Indian population, a booklet, "How to keep well in India," has been written by a physician, who has practised for many years in the country, and it will be sent free to all who write for it mentioning The Indian Field to Messrs Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, who are also able to supply Sanatogen.

ROWING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—A week's uninterrupted fine weather has done a lot for the eights, and there has been just enough wind to afford a good test of their watermanship, which, in many cases, was very shaky. All the hard work has been got through, and on Saturday most of the crews were doing a course, not a single boat going below locks. C. K. Phillips was coaching the head of the river, Christ Church, who have of late developed a decided bucket. The order has undergone no change, and the second boat has also pursued the even tenour of its way. The latter are distinctly fast, and in one or two spins with the first have well held their own. Magdalen have been trying sundry experiments, which ended in the order being as it was, Somers-Smith retaining possession of the stroke thwart. They have done a very fast course, but the stroke is inclined to get short. W. F. C. Holland has been coaching them, and he has also given his services to Brasenose, who made a change yesterday afternoon, Acott, their first torpid stroke who has been rowing in that position since practice commenced, changing seats with Pope at 2. The latter was asked to do a big thing to row a course at the first time of asking, but he accomplished the task with considerable success, as, they pulled through in 6mins. 43secs. The old Blues—A. C. Gladstone and C. M. Pithan—were present during the afternoon, the latter taking the measure of New, who now have R. C. Bourne back again at the stroke thwart; they are a very good crew, rowing with plenty of power and life. Trinity, who are being coached by the Rev. Legg, are one of the most taking crews on, and should render a good account of themselves. The Rev. J. W. Carey has been out regularly with Hertford, who appear better than for some time, and improvement is noticeable in Keble and Lincoln. Wadham have had to rearrange their crew, with the result that the idea of putting on second boat has had to be abandoned. The president (D. Mackinnon, Magdalen) is doing his best to bring Pembroke up to concert pitch. Exeter are being coached by R. C. Culmore, Magdalen; University by E. Majoliere, Christchurch; whilst yesterday A. P. Parker, Magdalen, was devoting his energies to Balliol. Not a single crew has been out during the week for the pairs. G. E. Hope, Christchurch, and R. Mitchison, Hertford, are, however, practising assiduously for the Sculls, the former being coached by Gramp Robinson, the Balliol waterman, whilst Jack Rough is looking after Mitchison, who is reserve man for the Hertford crew.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—The sixteenth race for the Lowe Double Sculls was decided on Saturday morning under pleasant conditions over the 'Varsity course. Only two pairs completed, O. Mansell Moullin and E. H. D. E. Bunser, Kings, and E. C. Henty and F. G. Hudson, Jesus. The King's pair, who had the first station, showed remarkable pace at the start and quickly secured a good lead, but owing to indifferent steering, they had lost several lengths of this by the time they reached Ditton corner. The Jesus couple, who rowed in attractive style, gradually reduced their opponents' lead and, spurting splendidly along the home stretch, eventually won by nearly forty yards. Time, 7mins. 45secs. Mr. Henslow was judge.

The summer eights have made very little progress. Trinity Hall have had five of their oarsmen indisposed, and have not practised since Tuesday. Jesus are still unsettled, but expect to commence serious work to-morrow, and First Trinity have made practically no advance. Several alterations have taken place in Lady Margaret's and J. Short is now setting the work. Caius are improving, while Corpus, who have the services of seven old colours, are displaying promising form. Pembroke and Downing are above the average.

POLO.

HURLINGHAM CLUB.—Play opened at Hurlingham, on Saturday, with a match between the Old Cantabs (Captain G. E. Bellville, Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. W. S. Buckmaster, and Mr. C. D. Miller, back) and Roehampton (Captain Herbert Wilson, Mr. R. Grenfell, Captain E. D. Miller, and the Duke of Roxburghe, back). Roehampton did all the scoring and won by five goals to love.

RANELAGH CLUB.—Three matches were decided at the Ranelagh Club on the 15th instant. The first game on the old ground was between the Ashby St. Ledgers' team (Viscount Castlereagh, Colonel R. Howse, Captain C. C. de Crespigny, and the Hon. Ivor Guest, M.P., back) and Ranelagh (Captain L. C. D. Tenner, Mr. F. Bellville, Mr. F. A. Gill, and Mr. H. Scott-Robson, back). The latter side just won by five goals to four. In the next match, the Penguins (Mr. R. P. Wilson, Mr. L. Avery, Major M. Archer-Shee, and Mr. T. B. Drybrough, back) opposed the Royal Artillery (Captain Hon. O. H. Stanley, Mr. A. P. Heneage, Captain F. L. Livingstone-Learmouth, and Captain J. C. Livingstone-Learmouth, back) the Penguins winning by five goals to four. On the Barnes ground, the Wild Horse Estancia (Mr. T. S. Dean-Pitt, Mr. H. L. Warwick Parker, Major T. T. Pitman and Mr. H. Schwind, back) defeated Ranelagh (Mr. W. H. Pearson, M.P., Captain H. Spender-Clay, Mr. F. E. Kinclsant, and Major the Hon. J. R. Browndon, back) by ten goals to five.

ROEHAMPTON CLUB.—Of the four matches decided at Roehampton, on Saturday the principal one was that in which the American Meadowbrook team made their first appearance. The visitors were, however, a man short, so Messrs. M. and L. Waterbury and Mr. H. P. Whitney were assisted by Mr. L. E. Stoddart, another American player. Their opponents were Beauchamp Hale—A. Rawlinson, Mr. F. J. Mackey, Captain M. L. Lakin and Major Neil Haig (back). The Americans, who are very well mounted, gave a brilliant display, and, after leading by 5 goals to love at half-time, ultimately won easily by 12 goals to 2. The three other matches resulted as follows: Rugby—Captain W. L. Naper, Mr. A. Grisar, Mr. W. J. Jones, and Mr. P. W. Nickalls (back), beat Roehampton—Lord Ingestre, Lord Shrewsbury, Sir Charles Lowther, and Mr. E. B. Sheppard (back) by 5 goals to 4. The 2nd Life Guards—Mr. A. M. Vandeleur, Captain the Hon. A. E. B. O'Neill, Mr. F. R. Penn, and Captain H. C. S. Ashton (back), beat Sealford Hall—Captain R. G. Howard-Vyse, Mr. A. W. Foster, Captain Lord R. Herbert, and Captain J. Fitzgerald (back) by 11 goals to 4: and Casuals—Messrs. T. Guy Paget, J. H. Weatherly, G. Pirie, and Captain J. T. Weatherly (back), defeated Roehampton—Messrs B. R. Glover, H. J. Teschemaker, F. J. Siltzer, and Major M. R. Courage (back) by 9 goals to 5.

LAWN TENNIS.

OXFORD U. vs. NORTH WARWICKSHIRE.—At Oxford, the Dark Blues experienced an easy task in defeating North Warwickshire, although Holland was not included in the side. There was a protracted struggle between the first Oxford pair and Hill and Oakes, but the latter eventually proved successful, and Oxford won by eight matches to one.

W. R. Reynell (Balliol) and V. Riley (Brasenose), Oxford, beat A. C. Hill and Catain Oakes, 12—10, 6—1, beat A. S. Gill and J. Jenkinson, 6—2, 6—2, beat A. W. Curtis and M. K. Pridmore, 8—8, 6—2.

GOLF.

THE LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE weather was fine but sultry at Birkdale this morning when the concluding stages of the Ladies' Championship were commenced.

In the semi-finals Miss F. Hezlet (Royal Portrush) was opposed by Miss K. Stuart (St. Rule), and they were the first pair to go out. Interest was chiefly centred in the meeting of Miss D. E. Chambers (Wirral) and Miss D. Campbell (Musselburgh), the Scottish champion.

A slight breeze rose soon after the start, and the conditions were excellent.

Miss Hezlet and Miss Stuart were both weak on the greens. Miss Hezlet won the first hole in a par four, but, after a half at the second, she was brought back to all square at the third, where she slicked her drive into the sand. Miss Stuart topped her drive into the rough and was never in sight of a half.

At the sixth the Scottish player was in the ditch from her second; she played two in the hazard, but, failing to get clear, she picked up, and lost the hole. Three halves followed, so that Miss Hezlet was two up at the turn.

Coming home, Miss Hezlet won the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth, but her lead was reduced by Miss Stuart winning the next two. Miss Hezlet, however, won the match by winning the longest hole in a par 4 to 5.

Miss Chambers won the first hole from Miss Campbell, the latter being too strong with her approach. The Scottish champion won the next two holes, and stood 1 up at the third, at which hole Miss Chambers was in the sand from her tee shot. Miss Chambers was bunkered going to the fourth, and became 2 down.

Going to the eighth Miss Chambers, after missing her second, picked up her ball, so that the Scottish champion became 3 up.

The ninth and tenth were halved, but Miss Campbell lost the eleventh in 3 to 4. She, however, holed her mashie pitch for 4 at the twelfth, which made her 3 up again. Miss Campbell eventually won by 5 up and 3 to play.

The results in the semi-final round were:—

Miss F. Hezlet (Royal Portrush) beat Miss K. Stuart (St. Rule), by 4 and 3.

Miss D. Campbell (Musselburgh) beat Miss D. E. Chambers (Wirral), by 5 and 3.

Nearly 1,000 people followed the play in the final. Miss Campbell won the first hole, Miss Hezlet missing her second shot after a half in 6. They squared at the third, Miss Campbell topping her drive. She, however, drew away from her opponent, who was playing indifferently, and won the next two holes. Three uneventful halves followed, and Miss Campbell winning the ninth, turned 3 up.

Miss Campbell continued to play well on the homeward journey, and won the match and the championship by 4 and 3.

THE FINALISTS.

Miss Dorothy Campbell, who was born in Edinburgh, was bronze-medallist in the British Ladies' Championship in 1904, 1905, and 1906, and runner-up to Miss Titterton, at St. Andrews, last year. Miss Campbell won the Scottish Ladies' Championship in 1905, 1906, and 1908, and was runner-up in 1907.

Miss Florence Hezlet is the youngest sister of Mrs. Ross (better known as Miss May Hezlet), thrice winner of the championship, and was runner-up to her sister in the English championship in 1907, and held a similar position in the Irish Ladies' Championship in 1905, 1906, and 1908. She has represented Ireland in the international matches for the past six years.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Monday, 31st May.—Lake End 7 A.M. Drew round Municipal hill, to the wattle and potato garden above Municipal Crossing, a jack went away from here and took a line over the Krurmund Road to Dudley but without touching this covert he ran over the hill into Monkey and up past Swamyar Bluegums and then turned down again to Dhama Tope, recrossed the stream and rose the slope to Sambur Shola, from here they slipped away from everyone and were afterwards found in Hardboke Hanger. We had another short run from Munjanad Village back to Sambur Shola. It was very hot and scent had almost died out by now so hounds returned to kennels.

Tuesday, 1st June.—Sultan Shola 12 noon. Moved off along the Krurmund Path, a jack was viewed in the bog below. He started off down the valley below Mekod Mund Shola and turned left-handed above the stream and joined another jack, the pack divided. One jack was run into and killed in a very short time. Without waiting to break him up the Master hurried on and united with the rest of the pack as they crossed the Mekod Stream. They crossed the Krurmund Path and ran over the first to the left then sharp back to the right on a line with the path to Sultan Sola, then turned down to Mekod Mund Shola up through it and down again to the stream which they crossed below Pennart Shola, and on through Dennistown as if for Pug Pits but went to the right and ran through Duff Shola. Near Kuratha Mund the jack went to ground in an underground water course: he, however, bolted from another opening with hounds close at him, ran a short distance and came back to the same earth popped in and out again and was run into in the open. Cyclops appeared with the first jack and after both had had the usual honours paid them we moved off towards the Mekod Stream and shortly afterwards hounds touched a line and went off across a big bog and headed for Emerald Valley, ran close past the tea estate and up a steep hill where they divided—one lot turning left-handed back to where we found and putting their jack to ground. The Master got the rest of the pack together and returned to this earth. Kitty bolted the jack but he went to ground almost at once. Again he was bolted only to find shelter for a short space before he was ejected. With hounds almost on top of him he tried another earth in which he was killed. After being unearthed he was broken up and the pack returned to kennels. It was a good hunting day, cloudy and somewhat close, very trying to horses, specially in that mountainous country.

Thursday, 3rd June.—Lascelle's Covert 7 A.M. The morning broke cloudy and wet, but cleared up about 6 A.M. Drew down to the right of the Golf course, over Treble Crossing to Mills' Covert. A little of half grown cubs was found here—two alas! were chopped in covert and two went to ground close by. Hounds feathered on a line on the ridge just above Mills' but nothing came of it. On crossing over the Blackmore Vale to Newmarket they hit off a line near Rawlin's Nullah and the jack was viewed making off along a path leading to Bluegums. Setting off at a good pace they ran over the hill above Bluegums to the Potato Field, turned down left-handed and coming out near Pearl Crossing, they headed straight up over Bagman and raced down to Treble Crossing and on to the Pykara Road where they paused a moment, picked up the line again near the fifth hole on Golf course and carried it above the road to Elmhurst Corner, crossed the stream a little higher up and leaving New Covert on the left they rose the hill and ran down over Pearl Crossing to Rallywood. Here unfortunately they got on to a fresh jack which led them on to Porlock, from thence to Bluegums in which he beat them. The next jack was found below Schmidt's Clump, leaving Staircase on his left he crossed the bog below Stoke's Shola, ran through this covert and Herbert Plantation, topped the ridge and sank the hill to Backstaircase Road, ran the road to the corner of Briar then swung left-handed along the Pykara Road to Baconwood, turned right-handed through the wood and coming out at the top dipped down to Hero Shola and made his escape. Scent was good throughout and we enjoyed two capital runs over the best part of the home downs.

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

NEED OF YOUNGER PLAYERS.

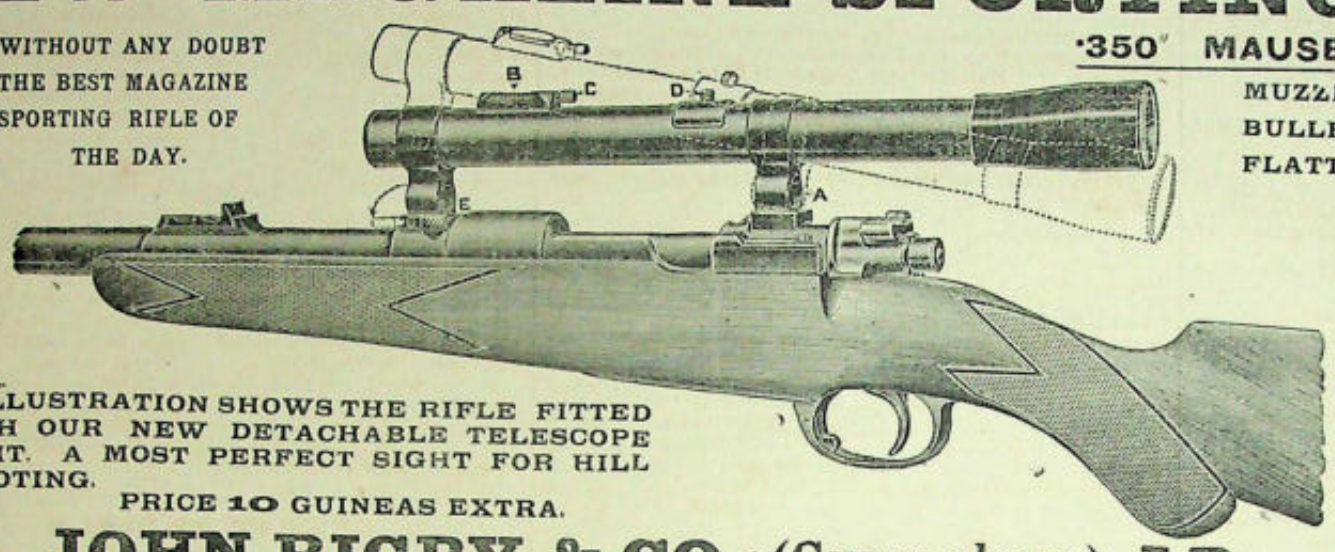
Has cricket come to a standstill in England? So asks Mr. W. G. Collins in the Daily Mail. Are we entering upon a path which will surely in the long run be found to have been leading us downhill? Or have we, as it were, merely paused to take breath prior to recommencing our journey upward. These questions are suggested by the position in which we find ourselves to-day.

Forty years ago, before Test matches were ever dreamt of, it could be safely claimed that in the matter of cricket we were several heads and shoulders in front of any possible rivals, that we not only possessed the much-talked-of "two power standard" and a goodly percentage of spare, but were prepared to lay long odds on our ability to "take on" any combination, possible or impossible, of the cricket talent of the rest of the inhabited world. But in these latter years a marked change has come over the scene. Two years ago, on our own grounds and under climatic conditions singularly unfavourable to our visitors, we barely managed to hold our own with the South Africans. And the present season finds us in a state of nervous trepidation as to the prospects of success in our forthcoming encounters with Australia.

In the imaginary lists of a representative English eleven supplied by gentlemen who have time to waste in this direction the same names occur over and over again with which the cricketing public has been familiar for at least a dozen years past, while the names of younger candidates for distinction have been rather hinted at than baldly suggested. Nor do we seem to reap much encouragement from studying the history of our last campaign in Australia, when our players were sent out to conquer and—left the "ashes" behind them. "They had abominably bad luck," someone will say. But good luck may almost be called an essential attribute of the successful cricketer as well as of the successful general. No matter how many chances a man may give in the course of a series of long innings—if he is in the habit of winning matches for his side he must be written down a good cricketer. Per contra, no matter how perfect the style of the man who continually fails to score—we cannot afford to keep him in the eleven in the bare hope that his luck will turn.

WINCHESTER

.405 Caliber, Big Bore High Power Rifles.



It's safer, when you are going after big game, to use a rifle whose power to kill you can always depend on. The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful made, a statement borne out by the following comparison: The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot by the .405 is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for many years was considered the most powerful rifle for big game hunting. The .405 is designed to use the Winchester .405 caliber cartridge, whose high velocity and 300-grain mushrooming bullet makes it particularly effective against all kinds of big game. Winchester rifles, with Winchester cartridges, each made for the other, are invaluable to all successful hunters.

Holding to the Veterans.

While the Australians are introducing to us several young players who are visiting England for the first time in their career, we seem likely to be reduced to the necessity of marshalling to oppose them the same old gang who have done yeoman service for many years past. Mr. MacLaren, Hayward to conjure with but we cannot really expect Mr. Fry, Hirst, Tyldesley—these are great names to conjure with them ad infinitum. Thirty years ago that prophet would have been laughed to scorn who ventured to suggest that a day would come when England would be represented in a Test match by an eleven whose ages averaged more than thirty years. To-day, on the other hand, Lord Hawke and his colleagues would be taken to task by every sporting authority if in their selection they presumed to ignore the claims of at least half a dozen, and indeed it may run to half a score, veterans—we must not call them emeriti exactly, as some of them have even thus early in the season proved their vitality—and to entrust the fortunes of English cricket to comparatively untried hands.

And yet—"if this be treason, make the most of it"—in fear and trepidation we make the confession that some of us are growing a little weary of watching the same old faces and —barring a little loss of elasticity—the same old figures in the cricket field. There must come an end to it some day. Mr. Fry, Hirst, Hayward and Co. are neither immortal nor even likely to be endowed with the gift of perennial juvenility. As batsmen doubtless still admirable; as a bowler "on his day," one of them still unsurpassable. Yet hardly so lissome in the field as those ideal fielding sides which in the early seventies we used to see representing the universities. It is the habit in the Army—a pernicious habit, we grant when too rigidly insisted upon—to shelve our colonels at an age when they may be said to have won their experience and yet to be capable of holding their own in a hard day's work.

"Why should they shunt a man like you?" we once asked a colonel who was unusually active for his years.

"Must make room for the young 'uns," was the laconic answer.

Sedate Games of To-day.

Is it because we are chary of giving offence to the public or to the individual that in cricket we pin all our confidence on the old stagers and call Crispinus to our rescue year after year? Or is it a fact that we really have no young cricketers who are even comparatively reliable? If the latter be the case, then we are in a bad way indeed. We have no desire to trespass within the province of the chosen triumvirs, who know a good deal more about cricket than either the public or ourselves are likely to be able to teach them. But at least we may plead guilty to a longing to see, in what may be called by comparison an "off-year," a Test match between English cricketers "under thirty and over thirty." If such a match were played, under the conditions under which cricket was originally meant to be played—i.e., in hot weather and on a boundless ground—we would lay our last dollar upon the "young 'uns." As first-class cricket is played to-day, soberly, sedately—we might use even stronger terms—with long pauses and frequent intervals, the older brigade would doubtless start hot favourites. Yet even so we might be put on the right track to discover what force in the way of rising talent we have in reserve for the not very far distant day when the claims of Anno Domini can no longer be ignored and the present kings of the game are relegated to a back seat.

Freely admitting that in this twentieth century cricket nerve is a more important attribute of the first-class player than agility, and steadiness than brilliancy, and fully recognising that the young cricketer requires to be tested in the cockpit before we can stamp him with the hall-mark and label him as worthy to represent the old country, we feel that at present we are in danger of being found taking the same old pitchers to the fountain too often, and, in our anxiety for present success, to be losing sight of future contingencies. The tradesman who continues to rely on his old customers only and never seeks to extend his business is hardly likely to make a fortune in these days of keen competition, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer who wins his balance by piling fresh loads upon the shoulders of that patient beast of burden the income-tax payer, and never goes afield to tap new sources of revenue can hardly be credited with success.

THE CALCUTTA FOOTBALL LEAGUE.

A. Division.

Rangers vs. Calcutta.—Played on the Rangers' ground on the 2nd instant ending in a draw. Calcutta started a man short and during his absence the Rangers forced a corner and from the kick Davis put the ball through. The visitors then took up the attack and the home backs were given a warm time. Margrett cleared several shots and an abortive corner was all the advantage the C. F. C. gained before the interval. On resuming Calcutta pressed almost throughout. Several corners were obtained, but the visitors were weak in front of goal. At length Longbottom receiving from V. Sherman beat Margrett and time was called shortly after. Teams:—

Rangers.—Margrett, goal; Chandler and Minet, backs; Cornish, Lawton and Allan, halves; McKay, Brewin, Cody, Smart and Davis, forwards.

Calcutta.—Morrison, goal; Stewart and Wright, backs; Ansell, O'Shea and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Kingcome, V. Sherman, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

Referee:—Sergt. Curley.

Customs vs. Dalhousie.—These teams met on the Customs' ground on Saturday. The home team attacked throughout the major part of the first half but Hendrie in goal gave a splendid exhibition and was well supported by the Dalhousie backs. All the efforts of the Riversiders were unsuccessful and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the Customs continued to press but all their shots were cleared and the Dals at length got away. After Prike had just missed scoring Hurlston got possession and ended a nice run by netting. They kept up the pressure for a spell, but the Customs relieved and coming away once more besieged the visitors' goal, Berkley eventually beating Hendrie. The score at the finish was one all. Teams:—

Dalhousie.—Hendrie, goal; Montgomery and Stevens, backs; Evans, Lees and Wilson, halves; Prike, Burnett, Wright, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

Customs.—Fitzpatrick, goal; McCready and Goldsmith, backs; Fischer, L. A. Smith and Currie, halves; D'Silva, Berkley, L. H. Smith, Galbreith and Vears, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. R. P. Claridge.

Rangers vs. Caledonia.—This match played on the Caledonia ground on Saturday resulted in an easy win for the visitors by three goals to one. They attacked all through the initial half and scored twice, McKay and Smart being responsible. The game was better contested in the second period and each team scored once. Lawton for the Rangers and Apcar for the home team.

Rangers.—Margrett, goal; Minet and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Lawton and Allan, halves; Davis, Skempton, Cody, Smart and McKay, forwards.

Caledonia.—Goodwin, goal; Durrant and A. N. Other, backs; Laing, Capper and Bollard, halves; Apcar, Reynolds, Harding and Codwell, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. A. B. Rosser.

Calcutta vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Saturday a very uninteresting game ending in a draw. Calcutta were the first to score Kingcome netting from a centre by Longbottom. Gray in goal saved several shots in good style thereafter and the Y.M.C.A. next rushed down and scored a soft goal. Morrison attempted to fist out and missed, the ball going through. Calcutta pressed throughout the second half but could not score, the game ending one all. Teams:—

Calcutta.—Morrison, goal; Stewart and Wright, backs; Badham, M. Smith and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Kingcome, V. Sherman, Ross and Longbottom, forward.

Y.M.C.A.—Dr. Gray, goal; Reynolds and Kendall, backs; MacLaren, McNey and Gay, halves; Grey, Rouston, Gillon, Parker and Rosetti, forwards.

Referee:—Sergt. White.

Customs vs. Caledonia.—Played on the Customs' ground on Tuesday. The visitors showed much improved form and were unlucky to lose a well contested game. They attacked at the start and were twice nearly through. Then the home team pressed and after Goodwin had disposed of several good shots ere he was at length beaten by L. A Smith. The Customs kept up the pressure, and a second goal was scored by the same player. Up to half time the Caledonians tried hard to score and on resuming besieged the Customs' goal, giving Fitzpatrick a warm time. He kept them out in good style till Reynolds put the ball past him. The visitors continued to press till off-side against them brought relief to the home team who then attacked but were unable to score, the game ending in a win for the Customs by two goals to one. Teams:—

Customs.—Fitzpatrick, goal; McCready and Goldsmith, backs; Fischer, L. Smith and Marsden, halves; D'Silva, Echlin, Galbreith, L. Smith and Vears, forwards.

Caledonia.—Goodwin, goal; Durrant and Stoddart, backs; Bollard, Capper and Watson, halves; Apcar, Currie, Reynolds, Laing and Codwell, forwards.

Referee:—Sergt. White.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Calcutta-Rangers match on Wednesday of last week was a very interesting affair, Calcutta started with ten men and the Rangers took full advantage of this opportunity, scoring their only goal before Longbottom turned up ten minutes late. This player made up for his remissness in this respect, however, by notching Calcutta's point near the end of the second half. As to which was the better team there could be no possible question. Calcutta pressed practically all the time and but for execrable shooting by their forwards and splendid goal keeping by Margrett, would have won by four or five goals. The play was very pretty to watch, the C.F.C. forwards taking the ball right up to the goal mouth in irrisistable style only however to drive straight at Margrett or put it past. Kingcome was the worst offender and has not this season played in anything like his old form, while O'Shea was also off his game. Longbottom and Ross make a splendid wing and with a good man in Kingcome's place the C.F.C. forward line would be easily the best in the League. Rumour states that Fyfe will be available for the Shield ties and may, in fact, play earlier now that the rains have broken. If he does he will infuse some much-needed "go" into the team and supply the missing goal getting quality.

THE Shropshires most unaccountably went down before the Customs by the odd goal in three, the latter club again asserting its capacity for serving up surprises.

THE form shown of late by some of the League Clubs has, to say the least, been more than wildly surprising. For instance

Calcutta beat Customs 3—1.
Customs drew with Y.M.C.A.
Y.M.C.A. drew with Calcutta.
Shropshires beat Y.M.C.A. 5—2.
Customs beat Shropshires 2—1.

THESE are but a few instances and it is impossible to give a satisfactory explanation of form like this, one can only put it down to the glorious uncertainty of football. It is, however, results like these that give a fillip to the game. Football would be a very tame business if one could always foretell the result of a match on form and during the second half of the League we shall probably see some most unexpected upsets.

SATURDAY'S matches were spoiled by the rain which after half time came down in torrents. The grounds were bad enough before that but their condition was hopeless during the second period of the matches. Rangers were the only winners, drubbing the Caledonians by 3—1. The game was most uninteresting and the result was never in doubt. Caledonia looked like establishing a record as no team in the existence of the League has gone right through the season without obtaining a point. Y.M.C.A. in 1906 went nearest to it. They played 14 matches won 0, lost 13, drew 1 and scored 1 goal.

THE Customs-Dalhousie match was a ding-dong struggle and the latter were a shade lucky in taking away one point. They were the first to score but Customs would not be denied and, keeping up a hot pressure, were ultimately rewarded, Fitzpatrick beating Hendrie who played excellently throughout.

IT was rather surprising that on such a wet day, with the ball in a slippery condition, out of 3 games only 8 goals were scored, and of these four were put through in one match. Goal-keeping is a difficult enough job at any time and is ten times more so on a wet ground with a slippery ball. It does not say much for the shooting abilities of the forwards in the remaining two games, especially that between Calcutta and Y.M.C.A. Calcutta started off in great style, scoring after five minutes' play, but fell away badly afterwards so far as goal-getting was concerned. Morrison sadly misjudged a soft ball headed in by the inside left from a corner kick twenty minutes from the commencement and the scores remained level until the call of time. Throughout the second half the C.F.C. forwards, halves and even the backs had innumerable tries at goal but each and all failed to beat Gray, who saved brilliantly. Kingcome netted from a free kick but evidently forgot that from the infringement for which it was given a goal could not be scored with one kick.

THIS second draw will greatly handicap Calcutta in the struggle for the League Leadership which now seems a good thing for the Gordons.

THE latter team did not play their return engagement with the Shropshires owing to some misunderstanding about the state of the ground at Dum-Dum. The match will be played on an off day this week if possible. It is a noticeable fact how well a goalkeeper will defend h's charge if he gets a lot to do early on in a game while his vis-a-vis at the other end having nothing to do for a long period will more often than not let through a soft goal the first, and it may be the only time he is called on to perform. Thus it was with Morrison on Saturday when he failed to stop the only ball that came his way.

RAIN rather spoiled the performance of the Jute and Gunny men on Thursday last but nothing could damp their enthusiasm not even the large doses of the maidan several of them were constrained to swallow—not as medicine and not willingly or wisely—but when a man is rather short of wind it is only natural to open the mouth and there is often not enough time to close it when caught unawares. The Jute men were the heavier lot but the Gunny forwards led by the redoubtable "Bob" were very nippy and it is a mystery how they failed to penetrate the opposing defence. "Arthur," their outside right, made some commendable efforts but was a bit uncertain as to which foot to centre with. His uncertainty as to this worried him a good deal but we do not think he adopted the correct solution when he attempted to use both at once. This left him so to speak without a leg to stand on. He was a trier all the time, however, and was very popular with the crowd. The Gunny goalkeeper had not much to do but after being sat on by the Jute centre forward who seemed tired for the moment and was looking for a dry spot to rest on, he lost heart and was beaten by two stray shots. The Referee after the second goal, wore a harrassed look and it is said failed to keep an engagement to dine with the Gunny Captain that night. This is carrying impartiality too far. There is now talk of a match between the Jute and Gunny Brokers and the Banks which, if it comes off, should be worth going some way to see.

Read letters from Messrs W. H. Roberts, R.E., and T. C. Raikes, conveying their thanks for electing them as Members.

A list of the donations made to the Museum since the last Meeting was then read out, the exhibits themselves being passed round for inspection. Of these the more important were :—

A Persian Nightingale from Quetta, presented by Master Walter Cumming.

A Red-necked Phalarope from Quetta, presented by Master Arthur Cumming.

Two Mottled Polo Cats from Quetta, presented by A. D. Marker, K.S.

A beautiful little Dormouse from Quetta, presented by Master P. Stranack.

A fine Lizard (Varanus griseus) from Quetta, presented by B. Partap Singh Sethi.

A rare Bug (Pyrrhocoris apterus) from Quetta, presented by Mr. A. A. Flynn.

The Persian Nightingale and the Dormouse which are the first specimens known to have been procured in Quetta attracted especial attention on account of their rarity.

Paintings of the Indian Blue-throat (2), European Bee-Eater (2), and Persian Nightingale (1) by Major T. H. Goodwin, R.A.M.C., and one of the common Wryneck by Mr. A. D. McDonough were also passed round, the Hon'ble President thanking both Major Goodwin and Mr. McDonough for their very valuable donations to the Museum Albums.

A large number of valuable Zoological and other Scientific Journals, kindly presented to the Museum by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon, were also placed on the table for the information of Members.

A surplus set of the Chrome Lithographic plates of Ducks appearing in Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's work on "Indian Ducks and their Allies" available for Members of the Bombay Natural History Society at Rs. 15 the set and for others at Rs. 25 the set, and a set of similar plates of Economic Insect Pests, presented to the Museum by Mr. H. Maxwell-Lefroy, M.A., F.E.S., F.Z.S., were next passed round for the inspection of Members.

The Hon'ble President then enquired if any of the new members wished to join the Bombay Natural History Society and Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs, I.C.S., C.I.E., and Captain Terence Keyes, I.A., gave in their names.

The election of new Members being the next item of business the Hon'ble President proposed the election of Miss M. Butler and General F. J. Aylmer, V.C., C.B.

These were seconded by Mr. A. M. Anscomb and Colonel D. O'Sullivan respectively, while Doctor D. P. Rai, I.M.S., was proposed by R. B. Dewan Jamiat Rai and seconded by Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozeshaw.

These proposals being put to the vote were unanimously carried.

There being no further business the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon reminded all present that the 10th instant made just two years since the Society was established and congratulated the Members on the good work done during that brief period. He remarked that zoological and other specimens had come in so rapidly that the Museum was already full and that proposals were being sent in for trebling the present accommodation. The Hon'ble President here circulated the plans of the proposed extensions and expressed the hope that the Revenue Commissioner would be able to find the necessary funds as the additions were necessary both on scientific and public grounds—on scientific grounds because Baluchistan by its geographical position holds an important place in the Fauna World, as it is visited by numerous birds of passage from Europe and India and produces among its own permanent fauna most interesting animals like the Mottled Polo Cat, Euphratic Viper, etc., which have been found nowhere else except in what is known as the Mediteranean area. The object of the Museum he said was to make an exhaustive and representative collection of the Fauna and Flora of Baluchistan which could be examined and studied later on by Experts when the necessary funds were forthcoming.

The proposed extensions were also necessary on public grounds because the general public who frequented the Central Hall, now used jointly as a Reading and Museum Room, complained of being inconvenienced by the stream of visitors to the Museum.

The Hon'ble President next read a notice issued by the Director of the Hungarian Central Bureau for Ornithology, Budapest, regarding the marking of young birds of passage with aluminium rings fastened round their legs which bear in each case the inscription "Budapest" followed by a number corresponding to the entry in the Register book of the Hungarian Central Bureau for Ornithology and requesting any one catching such a marked bird or hearing of the capture of such, to forward the ring with particulars as to locality, time and particulars of capture, to the Bureau in question. He hoped that anyone making such a find would promptly comply with the request of the Bureau.

In conclusion, Sir Henry mentioned that he was proceeding on the 2nd June to England on short leave. He requested the Vice-Presidents to take charge of the Society during his absence and expressed the hope that Members would do all in their power to add to the collections in the Museum, especially as regards obtaining further specimens of Dormice.

There being no further business, the Meeting adjourned.

A SHORT COLLECTING TRIP ON THE SINGALILA RANGE AND IN PART OF SIKKIM.

14th August.—A fine morning though misty. One of the bullfinches died during the night but a fresh cock was snared and took its place. We got the following birds in the morning after a deal of trudging :—Edward's Rose Finch (Propasser edwardsi) ♂♀; the Black-faced Laughing Thrush (Trochalopterum affine) ♀; the White-capped Redstart (Chimara leucocephalus) ♀; a Chestnut-bellied Rock Thrush (Petrophila erythrogastra) ♂; a Fire-tailed Yellow-backed Sunbird (Aethopyga ignicauda) ♂; a Nepal Tree Creeper (Certhia nepalensis) ♂, a Stoliczka's Tree Creeper (Certhia stoliczkae) ♂; and a Brown crested Tit (Lophophanes dichrous). Some more bullfinches (P. erythrocephalus) were snared. I had to make a new cage as I had twenty-seven males and eleven females alive. During the day eleven of these died. I was kept busy skinning and stuffing from 1 o'clock till 8 at night and we hadn't finished them as the lamplight was so bad we couldn't manage to finish all off. At about 4 P.M. a nutcracker (N. hemispila) ♀ was shot not far from the bungalow. The female Edwards' Rose Finch (Procarduelis edwardsii) had a large unshelled egg in the oviduct and so had several of the bullfinches (P. erythrocephalus). It was most unfortunate not getting even one with a shell and not being able to find any nests. The Black-faced Laughing Thrush (Trach. affine) was also breeding. It rained a good deal during the night.

15th August.—Fine but misty morning. All the bullfinches except seven died during the night and four new ones were snared making eleven alive. I hope some may live as they would be well worth sending to London and Calcutta Zoos, and would be nice for my own aviaries. We skinned some of them and finished stuffing yesterday's birds before starting for Tonglu. I walked a good bit of the way and as I had sent away my boy's pony when we reached Sendakphu he had to foot it all. It kept fairly fine all day with showers now and then, but it was always misty. We came along slowly collecting as we went along so didn't reach Tonglu till 3 P.M. We shot the following:—Nepalese Tree Creeper (Certhia nepalensis); a Yellow-bellied Flycatcher (Chelidorhynx hypoxanthum); three Yellow-billed Blue Magpies (Urocissa flavirostris) ♀; an Orange Gorgeted Flycatcher (Siphia strophiata) and a Darjeeling-pied Woodpecker (Dendrocopus darjilensis) ♂. A Slenderbilled Scimitar Babbler (Xiphorhamphus superciliaris) was shot in the dense bamboos some four or five miles from Tonglu, but unfortunately had its head blown to pieces and was useless. I was very sorry as I had never before come across this Scimitar Babbler and much wanted a specimen. There were a pair, but the other one managed to skulk away. On arriving at the bunglow I found five more of the bullfinches had died only leaving six alive. I saw all these eating and drinking so hope they may live. All the magpies shot were young birds and the bills hadn't assumed the yellow colour. It started raining pretty hard at about 7 P.M. We had now collected 151 specimens.

16th August.—A nasty wet morning and as there was a lot of skinning to do I stayed in and sent the shikari out at about 12 o'clock. Before this he shot a pair of Yellow-bellied Blue Magpies (Urocissa flavirostris) not far from the bungalow and one turned out an adult. Some more of the bullfinches died and left only two. I couldn't make out why they died as they ate well and seemed very chirpy and tame. The shikari brought in the following birds:—A Yellow-billed Blue Magpie (U flavirostris) ♂; two White spotted Laughing Thrushes (Ianthocincla ocellata) ♂; a White-collared Ouzel (Merula albicincta) ♂; a Hodgson's Tree Creeper (Certhia hodgsonii) ♀; a Gold-headed Black Finch (Pyrhoplectes epauletta) ♂; a Rufous-capped Bush Warbler (Horcites brunneifrons) ♂

17th August.—It was beautifully fine when I got up at 5 A.M. and I had a good view of Kinchinjunga. Only one bullfinch left alive, but he is exceedingly lively and in good condition. I went out collecting and got the following birds:—The White-spotted Laughing Thrush (Iantho. ocellata) ♂ ♀; the Rufous-necked Scimitar Babbler (Pomatorhinus ruficollis) ♂ ♀; and the Slender-billed Scimitar Babbler (Xiphorhamphus superciliaris) ♂ ♀. I was exceedingly pleased to get the pair of the latter birds as I thought I should have to leave Tonglu without adding this species to my collection; one was a fine specimen, but the other was a bit damaged about the bill, but with a little manipulation it turned out quite a decent skin; they were got in some thick bamboo jungle. Other birds we got were:—The Scaly-breasted Wren (Pnoepyga squamata) ♂, shot in some undergrowth; a pair of Yellow-winged Laughing Thrushes (Trochalopterum nigrimentum) were shot near the bungalow. It rained from 10 till 11, but cleared up beautifully later on; clear blue sky and a fine view of Kinchinjunga and other peaks and also of Darjeeling, St. Joseph's College standing out very clearly. In the afternoon we got a Chestnut-bellied Rock Thrush (Petrophila erythrogastra) ♀; jav.; the plain brown Tit Babbler (Proparus vinipectus) ♂ ♀; and the Darjeeling-pied Woodpecker (Dendrocopus darjilensis) ♂.

18th August.—To-day was a beautiful one with only one shower at about 4 in the afternoon. The last bullfinch died this morning and I can't understand why he should have pegged out. We got up at 5-30 as we had to march to-day to Jhorpokri. We got everything packed and off by 7 A.M. I collected a good deal on the way, walking the first six or seven miles. The first bird we got was the Brown Crow-Tit (Suthora unicolor). Between Tonglu and Simana Bustie we got the following:—The Stripe-throated Siva (Siva strigula) ♂ ♀; the Hoary Barwing (Ixops nepalensis) 2 ♂ and 1 ♀; the Black-browed Flycatcher Warbler (Cryptolopha burkii) ♂; the Indian Blue Chat (Larvidora brunnea) ♂; the Orange-gorgeted Flycatcher (Siphia strophiata) ♂; the Himalayan Green Finch (Hypacanthis spinoides) ♀; and the Rufous-fronted Tit (Argithaliscus cæchiztus) ♂

The latter was one of a small party which were hunting some small trees at about an elevation of 9,500 feet. I tried to get several out of the flock but stupidly made two misses and another shot I had didn't go off, I evidently or rather the shikari, having omitted to put any powder in the cartridge. They then cleared off and I didn't see any others. The irides in the one I got was yellow as given by Blanford and not as Jerdon gives it. We didn't reach the Simana Bustie till 11-30 A.M. and found all the coolies there indulging in grog. From here I rode till near Jhorpokri when I again got off and walked a bit. I saw many ripe red raspberries between the Simana Bustie and Jhorpokri. We got a squirrel near the Simana Bustie. The coolies didn't get in till nearly 3 in the afternoon. I then got a couple of cups of cocoa, having had nothing since 6 in the morning. It began to drizzle a bit about dinner time and I had hoped to have been able to get some moths for my friend Mr. Möller as I did during my last trip, but not a single one came near the lamp.

19th August.—It turned out a fine morning, though rather cloudy at 5-30 A.M. I did get a view of Kinchinjunga, Kabru and Jannu, but Pandim was hid by the mist and very soon it covered the lot. A Bar-tailed Cuckoo Dove (Macropygia tusalia) was calling close by and as I was busy at chota hazri I sent the shikari after it, but he didn't find it; however he brought in instead a Rufous-bellied Niltava (niltava sundara) ♀. While the shikari was eating his grub I made a sketch of various peaks that were visible, the mist having temporarily lifted. We then made our way to the jungle below the bungalow and below the road to Tonglu. Leeches and nettles were most plentiful, the former worse if possible then they were in my former year's visit to this place; literally they swarmed on one from head to foot. I was greatly surprised at not seeing a single Ashy Wood-Pigeon (Alsocomus pulchricollis) as the bird was rather common here last year; nor did we hear or see any Bar-tailed Cuckoo Doves (Macropygia tusalia) which was rather strange. We got the following species: The Nepalese Yellow-backed Sunbird (Æthopyga nepalensis) ♂ ♀; the Black browed Fly-cather Warbler (Cryptolopha burkii) 2 ♂ and 1 ♀; the Tailed Wren Urocichla caudata) ♂; the Slaty-bellied Short Wing (Tesia cyanidentris) ♂♀ I then returned to the bungalow and picked a heap of rep raspberries on the way. I left the shikari to try to collect a few more birds as I was just a few short of 200 specimens. He brought back a Nepalese Yellow-backed Sunbird (Æthopyga nepalensis ♀; a White-browed Short Wing (Drymochares cruralis) ♀; a White-tailed Nuthatch (Sitta himalayensis) ♂; an Orange-gorgeted Flycatcher (Siphia strophiata) ♂; a large Niltava (Niltava grandis) ♂; a Rufous-bellied Niltava (Niltava sundara) ♂; two Dull-green Willow-Warblers (Acanthopneuste lugubris) ♂ ♀; and a Red-eared Bay Woodpecker (Pyrhopicus pyrhotis) ♂. This just completed the 200. The latter bird brought back remembrances of Cachar as it was there at Roopacherra that I last shot this bird, though last year I saw it near Hum which is 12½ miles from Darjeeling. It was a beautiful day and was quite hot part of the afternoon and it was indeed hard lines the fine weather coming at the very end of the trip.

20th August.—We didn't get away till 8 A.M. as I had some of yesterday's birds to polish off. On the way down from the bungalow to Sukia Bazaar, we saw one or two pairs of Bar-tailed Cuckoo Doves (Macropygia tusalia), but it was so misty we couldn't tell where they settled and we only got one, a male which after a lot of trouble we dislodged from a tree in which he had stuck. No more birds were shot till we passed the Ghum Rock, where a pair of Red-eared Bay Woodpeckers (Pyrhopicus pyrhotis ♂ ♀ were killed at one shot on a tree quite close to the road. The only other bird we got was a White-tailed Blue Robin (Notodela leucura) ♀ I walked the whole way from Jhorpokri to Darjeeling, a distance of 13 miles, and got to Belombre at 12 o'clock, having taken 3½ to 4 hours over it. My feet were quite sore, every stone being felt through the thin soles. I had a good wash when I got in and remained at Belombre till the evening when I returned to the hotel thus finishing up my trip. At Jhorpokri when looking up the Short Wings, in Vol. II, Birds, Fauna of British India series, I came across this rather queer mistake under Hodgsonius: "The wing is round and the tarsus lengthened and much graduated" (the italics are mine); of course it is a misprint for tail, I wonder if this misprint has come to the notice of the publishers.

SPORT IN THE ROCKIES.

A SHORT account of the life and habits of some of the big game of N. W. T., Canada, and British Columbia may not be without interest. Let us begin with what we may call the king of the animals of these regions—the grizzly bear. This animal can be met with in different parts of the Rocky Mountains, but from experience I should recommend the northern region as the best hunting ground. He differs both in character and habits from the black bear and requires very careful hunting. Of all animals which inhabit the Rockies, the grizzly bear is unquestionably the most dreaded. Scores of Indians, personally known to me, look upon him with such superstitious terror that they refuse every inducement to go out specially against him.

The Grizzly Bear.

In the month of April this animal leaves its winter quarters and goes in search of food in the shape of herbs and young grass along the creek bottoms. This is the best season of the year to hunt him as the fur is prime, and the animal prowling about over patches of snow, still unthawed in the valleys, can be easily tracked; later on as the snow melts off the mountain sides and the grizzly becomes stronger, it is not uncommon to meet him at a considerable height wandering about in search of roots and decomposed meat. To kill the grizzly whilst he is feeding it is absolutely necessary to keep watch early and late along the open ridges where you know his diet is to be found, this can be done with good field glasses from a distance, as one never knows which way the wind is blowing, or going to blow, in the mountains. After you have seen Bruin come out of the timber and get thoroughly engaged at his morning or evening meal, commence your stalk. And let me advise those that have not shot grizzlies, to go above the animal, to get as close before you fire as will guarantee the cutting of your bullet in a vital part. When you hit him he will in all probability throw his arms round and savagely clutch the spot your bullet struck, and will then often commence spinning round on all fours as if trying to catch his tail; while he is doing this, you must lose no time but give it to him hot and heavy until he falls. If, on the other hand, the bear should charge as soon your first shot strikes home and is coming straight for you, do not forget yourself, but use your rifle to the best of your ability, and I have no doubt Mr. Bruin will drop before he reaches you. A friend of mine last winter was passing where grizzly bear had denned up. When the animal immediately rushed out of its hole and charged straight at him, my friend hd just time as the bear was about to claw him to fire one shot, which fortunately entered the eye and came out at the back of the skull, killing him instantly.

The size and power of his canine teeth, and the excessive length of his claws, makes him a more formidable opponent than the black bear. The hair is finer, longer, and more abundant, and has a grayish tint at the end; the eyes are smaller, in fact, are scarcely visible, being concealed by long hairs around them. The claws of the fore-feet measure about six inches, and the whole foot, exclusive of the claws, about thirteen inches in length and ten and a half in breadth. One remarkable circumstance about a grizzly bear, which in his habits affords a striking distinction between him and the black bear, is, that he never climbs. This I put down to the peculiar formation of his claws, which are evidently made more suitable for digging up the ground than for climbing. The largest grizzly I have seen dead would weigh about 900lbs. Yet they grow to a much larger weight than this. I read lately, and, if I remember aright, it was from the pen of an excellent authority (Mr. Clive Phillips Wooley), that a Mr. Tolman, Custom House Officer at Wrangal, Alaska, had killed a grizzly with a single shot from a Winchester rifle that weighed 1,655lbs., and measured 13 feet 6 inches from nose to anus, 13 inches from ear to ear, 18 inches length of hind foot, 12 inches breadth of fore foot, and 20 inches from poll to nose. Some of the Siwash and Iroquois Indians, who have killed grizzlies along the Fraser river, below where I have hunted them, and where salmon is the principal diet of the bear, say that they are much larger than towards the head of this river, where high waterfalls prevent the salmon from getting up. This story I quite believe, and hope to be able during the summer, by going further down the river, to find some of these larger specimens.

The Black Bear.

The black bear may be looked for in the recesses of the thickest forests, where he can enjoy a solitary life undisturbed by either man or animal, its colour is of a shining jet black, except on the face, where it is brownish, and gray on the sides of its mouth; the eyes of this animal are of little use, but its nose is a "holy terror." It possesses the faculty of climbing in a most extraordinary degree, if it be true from what Indians have told me about black bear climbing for honey, I would not hesitate to bet on them as against monkeys. A good place to hunt for this bear is round any lake or along any creek that is known to contain fish, as they are particularly fond of this food. They can swim with the greatest ease, the enormous quantity of fat lying between skin and flesh helping to buoy them up in the water. As their fur is of some value, the Indians kill great numbers annually, and on this account it is no easy triumph to add the killing of a black bear to one's list of big game in Canada.

The Moose and the Elk.

The moose is the largest of the Cervidæ tribe, and particularly characterised by the projection of its nostrils, the largeness of its ears, the shortness of the neck, and the ungainly length of its legs. The great difficulty this animal has in grazing acounts for it generally being found where it can browse on young poplars, willows, and other scrubs. If the weather is very warm and the "bull dogs" are biting freely, the moose will make for the nearest water and plunge right into it, remaining for hours in this position until hunger drives it back to feed. The cows may often be found in the thickest undergrowth, whilst the bulls do not seem to forget their awkward horns and prefer the brule. The rapidity with which a moose can go over fallen timber is astonishing. It is the shyest and most difficult of the deer family to approach, except in the rutting season, when the bulls become very brave. Its horns begin to grow about the end of March and drop off in December or January; they are at their best in November, the month most hunters follow them. A reliable Indian whom I have had in my employ lately told me that he killed no less than twenty-three moose in a stretch of country twenty-six miles long and about half as broad during the month of November, when the ground was mantled with about three inches of snow.

Out of this number only eight were bulls. This was his winter's supply of meat. No wonder this noble animal is becoming scarce when Indians are thus allowed to slaughter such numbers regardless of sex or size. The flesh of the moose is excellent either fresh or smoked, the tongue being considered a great delicacy. The weight of a bull moose can be put at from 700lbs. to 1,500lbs.

The wapiti, or elk, is another animal that requires very cautious hunting. No animal, to my mind, is of a more timid nature than the elk. I know a country some 300 miles from civilisation where elk are fairly plentiful, and seldom disturbed by hunters, yet as soon as camp is pitched and a start made after these animals, they seem aware of it and move off a considerable distance, giving the most energetic hunter all he can do to get within shooting range. The average sportsman more often runs across tracks innumerable and quite fresh, and may consider himself very fortunate if he secures a decent trophy after two weeks' very hard walking. In the summer season the elk usually resorts to where water is plentiful, and often, when badly bothered with flies, will remain for hours in some low swampy marsh, where the water is deep enough to cover his whole body. They are admirable swimmers. In the winter they retire to the more sheltered part of the forest, where they can browse on willows and poplars. The skin is convertible to many purposes, especially that of making moccasins for the Indians. The rutting season commences about the 1st of October, and the horns are generally shed in January. An elk is a long-lived animal, and from what Indians have told me do not attain their full growth until they are about fifteen years old. The male is much larger than the female.

Another species of the deer family to be coveted by all big game shooters is the caribou of British Columbia. To hunt this heavily-built beast successfully one has to get on or near "the great divide." Here it is the large tracts of open country present themselves, covered with the vegetation pleasant to the taste of this animal. Here and there a patch of snow high up on the bald mountain sides lies unthawed the whole summer, as if to protect this magnificent beast from the ever-tormenting flies. Down in the valleys thick belts of stunted spruce serve to hide the caribou from the different hunters looking for him, and if you are not lucky enough to pass at the time this animal is in the open feeding, or lying on the snow, it is little use trying to kill him in the timber. A keener scented animal hardly exists. I have watched a caribou arrive at my tracks, which were several hours old, and noticed how disturbed he seemed to be as he moved his head from side to side, looking, no doubt, for the maker of the tracks, and then trotting off a few paces, halting some seconds, and looking anxiously about again as if he had heard a report from a rifle and knew not from which quarter it came. Both male and female have antlers, the former, however, grow larger, and are generally better defined, having more times and a much better "push horn." The antlers are clear of "velvet" by September, just before the rut commences. The meat of this animal is exceptionally good, many lodges of Indians kill during the summer enough caribou meat (which they smoke and dry) to do them all winter.

Other Big Game.

Several other deer, such as the black tail and white tail, may be hunted in North-West Canada with good results, the former of those making an excellent trophy, provided one is fortunate enough to kill an old buck. Leaving the deer family I pass on to the grandest trophy the Rocky Mountains can give us. This I claim to be Ovis Montana. A big horn that will measure sixteen or eighteen inches in circumference at the base of the horn is an animal that every lover of big game should endeavour to adorn his walls with. It has often been said that Ovis Montana is a very difficult animal to hunt, as his haunts are generally on the most rugged and difficult parts of the mountain. This I cannot agree with; I have killed numbers of sheep, and can say without exaggeration I had not to leave the grassy slopes below the rocks to do so. The ewes are more wary than the rams, as it seems to be their function to keep watch over the valleys below. It is peculiarly characteristic of these animals never to apprehend danger in the rocks above them. Hence their look is always downwards. The big horn mates in December, and I should judge from the size of lambs I have seen in June, that they were born in the latter part of May or first half of June. The next animal we come to is the Rocky Mountain goat, a stupid, foolish, domesticated-looking animal that gives little sport to the hunter, so say some people. Yet, if all big game hunters will recall to mind the trouble they have sometimes had climbing and stalking the goat, I think they will agree with me that there is no animal which has made their hearts beat quicker than the goat. How often has one started up a mountain, thinking, "Oh, I'll just go up and have a pot at one of those goats," but before he has returned he finds "the pot" often requires some skilful mountaineering, some few delays, and remarks of this sort from your Indian, "Do you think we can manage it?" "You had better hand me your rifle." "Perhaps we had better go back." After you have shot the animal then comes the descent, when perhaps you have to carry your trophy in one hand and your rifle in the other, down precipitous rocks—no easy feat—but one in fact involving danger to life and limb. If this does not make the goat's head a trophy of some value and do away with the theory that goats are easily obtained and the most stupid animal the hunter has to do with, then I give it up.

From reliable Indians that live all the year in the mountains, I learn that the rutting season is in December; the young are born about May. A large billy-goat will weigh about one hundred pounds, and its horns will measure eleven inches. The track is squarer than that of the big horn, and the food it lives on might be rocks, from the places one often finds them.

The Story Teller.

THE GOSPEL OF GRUB STREET.

Taking the chair on behalf of the editor of this journal, I was propped up in that uneasy seat of the mighty, and open to be worried by all the strange personalities which float in and out of a newspaper office.

I had done my best with the dribbling stream, refused poetry, barked serial rights of epoch-making novels, and been really terse—as George Robey puts it—with the writers of short stories. I had almost fallen to a sweetly pretty girl, with melting eyes and a dove-like manner, who wished to unload on our readers her career as adventuress in two continents. But, that being one of my conscientious days, I was firm. Adam, in my mood that day, would have stood an even-money chance of resisting Eve and the fruitarian diet, and remaining in Eden.

They brought me in his card. It bore—neatly but insistently—the words, "Vincent Dowling." I liked the name, and I liked the card. "Vincent Dowling" suggested to my mind qualities such as invincible daring; and I expected a literary swashbuckler.

I liked the man. He was clean-cut, well set-up, neatly dressed. His face suggested power, self-control, knowledge, efficiency. He had that hefty look one finds in Englishmen busy making railways or running frontier wars a few months' march away from home. So I spoke him fair.

"Fact of the matter is," said Vincent, "I'm a journalist, and I want work. It is very difficult to get work as a journalist—perhaps you know. But I'm really first-class goods, and I can deliver the cargo in time every day."

"Yes; that is all right," I suggested. "What have you done?"

He looked at me, wearily. "If you asked me what I have not done journalistically, it would be easier for me to answer."

"As an instance?" I queried, with raised eyebrows.

"I do not wish to stay here all day," he answered; "but it would take a long time to tell you. You might look me up in 'Who's Who.' I come of a good family. I went through the public schools with distinction. My first two novels were the books of the year. I have travelled for six daily papers. I have seen war in three continents. In one way or another I have been all over the world, comparing nations, affairs, and men."

"You must be a genius!" I suggested.

"Well, not exactly that; but you can put me down as an interesting, capable craftsman."

He produced proofs—heaps of proofs. There was no doubt about him.

"I'm afraid your price would be a bit above us," I suggested.

"Look at me," he said. I looked. I noticed anxiety written large on his face, dark rims round his eyes, and a thin, long line on each side of his mouth.

"I'm suffering," he said. "I haven't had a square meal for a week. I want the money. Start me on any decent task—my price is ten-and-six a thousand."

Then I knew, as a self-respecting editor, that he had a secret; so I probed, incisively.

"Excuse me," I suggested, "but have you experience? For instance, do you know anything about crime?"

He shook his head.

"What! Haven't you committed forgery?"

"No," he answered, turning pale.

"Perhaps," I suggested hopefully, "you have run a building society and ruined its subscribers."

"I regret to say," he said, in tense, clear tones, "I have never ruined anyone. To the few friends I have made I have been honest."

I shook my head.

"At least," I urged, "you have been tried for murder."

He shook his head.

"I have never been tried for anything but merit," he answered.

"Have you ever won a prize fight, and made more than £2,000 a year at the noble game?" I asked. I wanted to give this man a chance.

"I have never played any game for money. I'm a journalist—not a professional sport."

I could not help it—I had to sigh. You see, I liked the man, and would have been glad to get him on the blind side of our cashier.

He looked more depressed than ever.

"I'm afraid your record is very bad; you seem to have done nothing."

Then I had a gleam of hope, and followed it.

"Have you ever been nearly hung, and recovered?"

"No; I have never been in the slightest danger of hanging. I'm sorry; but it is so."

"We pay big money to men who have been nearly hung," I urged.

He shook his head again.

There was an icy silence, broken by the clock ticking loudly and the whistle of the office boy, the sound of which entered flute-like, insistent, and vibrant.

I had to "give him the knock," and I felt like a heavy-weight boxer putting a beaten, groggy, used-up pugilist to sleep for the sake of the stakes.

Then I tempted him through the deeps of journalism.

"Couldn't you say something interesting about 'Famous Crimes'—Charles Peace, you know, and that sort of pulp."

He looked me in the eye.

"I am poor," he said, "I am also proud—and I am particular. I thought editors were literary critics and journalists men of taste and some attainment. The one race seems to have died out, and as a result the other is being reduced to starvation. Well—there is bricklaying, and perhaps I might find a solitary sixpence holding the decent head of an honest horse. Anyhow, you can keep your proprietors' money—I'll manage."

With that, he went down the steps.

An impossible person—a really impossible person. I told the editor how impossible he was, when he resumed the easy chair.

He sighed, and said nothing in reply.

"Bill!" he called to the adolescent servitor with the whistle, "hand me 'The Newgate Calendar.' As there are no interesting journalists in the public eye this week, we must dive into the sanguinary horrors of the past."

And as the boy moved, the Editor looked at me.

"One must live," he said, his eye wavering.

"Of course—why, yes, of course!" I said, surprised.—What's On.

(a) K 2 is a better square for the Bishop in this Opening.
(b) Very ingeniously conceived.
(c) It is quite clear that he cannot take the Rook, but this move strikes us as absurdly irrelevant.
(d) Again well played. After this, Black's game is hopelessly lost.

They had been engaged an hour. The shaded lamp shed a soft, warm glow. They had been for a long time silent. Their souls had been communing—whatever that is.

Suddenly he sighed. It was a different sort of sigh from those which had softly breathed forth at intervals for the last hour. She started slightly. Something seemed impending.

"Darling," he said in a low voice.

"Sweetheart," she answered, and trembled.

"May I ask something of you, my heart?" he whispered.

"What is it, love?" she asked, and her voice shook.

"It may involve sacrifice on your part, girlie, but, believe your own George, it is for the best."

She trembled in his strong arms.

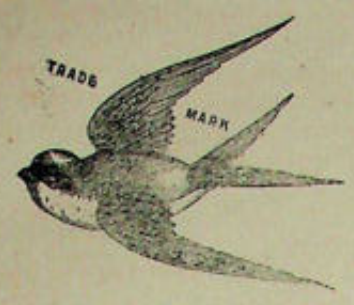
"Oh, what is it?" she panted.

"I have resisted, I have striven, but I can stand it no longer; circumstances over which I have no control compel me—it is not a hasty impulse—I must ask you!" he cried.

"Oh, my love, tell me!" she sobbed imploringly.

"It will not shake your faith in my love?" he begged.

"Oh, no! But tell me!" she gasped.



"Then—will you sit on the other knee a while—this one has gone to sleep," he said, and his heart was very glad, for he knew that through all trial and stress the fair being would prove brave and true.

To justify his repeated use of the same witticism, as noted in three of his plays, Mr. J. M. Barrie says: "We Scots abhor waste. Did you never hear of the aged Saunders Carlyle, who always drank off his whisky to the last drop the instant it was poured out for him? 'Why do you drink down your liquor in that quick, greedy way?' a stranger said to Saunders in a reproachful tone. 'I once had one knocked over,' the old man explained."

"What makes you so sure this new play will be such a success?"

"Hush, my boy! Even the leading lady blushed when she read it!"

THE KING'S DERBY.

SPORTSMEN the world over hailed with delight the King's victory in the Derby. The race was one of the most exciting struggles for the great event since Mr. J. Hammond's St. Gatien and Sir J. Willoughby's Harvester ran a dead heat twenty-five years ago. Not even the pouring rain which fell all day in steady streams could damp the popular enthusiasm, and the ovation given to the King when he led his horse back to weigh in was a striking proof of the deep affection with which His Majesty is regarded by his loyal subjects. The only cause for general regret was the misfortune to the American horse, Sir Martin. So much had it been fancied by its American admirers that it started first favourite in the race. What it might have accomplished will, however, never be known, as Mr. Winan's colt fell coming down the hill before reaching Tattenham Corner. This accident deprived the race of its international interest, but did not prevent it from being one of the most exciting and keenly fought in the history of the Derby, the short head between the winner and the second, and the half length between Louviers and the third horse, William IV., leaving the issue in doubt up to the last moment.

Sir Martin's fall during the race is taken philosophically by a number of the American papers; but some of the comments are bitter. For instance the New York Evening Globe says:—"It is a strange coincidence that in last year's Oaks another American horse, Rhodora, who, like Sir Martin, was a favourite fell. The new rule on the English turf, which was enacted after the recent American invasion, prohibiting the use of American plates, undoubtedly contributed to Sir Martin's fall. These plates permitted a ready hold on the slippery turf. The English horses, which have never used them, are not handicapped by the prohibition." It is satisfactory to find that "Skeets" Martin, the plucky American jockey who rode Sir Martin, admits frankly that the tumble was absolutely unavoidable, and the merest mischance, while J. E. Madden, who bred Sir Martin, cabled his congratulations to the King, and stated to an interviewer that he had no doubt the race was absolutely fair.

The King's success is noteworthy as being the first time in the history of the turf the King of England has won the greatest of all horse races. This is the third time His Majesty has won the classic prize. The first occasion was in 1896, when the Prince of Wales' Persimmon beat St. Frusquin by a neck, and four years later His Royal Highness' colours were carried to victory by Diamond Jubilee. It is interesting to recall that in 1788 the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., won the race with Sir Thomas, while his brother, the Duke of York, won it twice, with Prince Leopold in 1816, and in 1822 with Moses. Another occasion on which the Sovereign has been closely identified with the great Epsom celebration was in 1840, when Queen Victoria and Prince Albert attended the Derby, and Macdonald, the jockey who rode the winner, Little Wonder, was presented by the Prince Consort with a gold mounted whip in commemoration of the Royal visit.

The Derby was instituted in 1780, by the head of the great House of Stanley, and as the race grew in popularity and value it became a national institution. It is worthy of note that Disraeli first gave to the Derby the title of "the Blue Riband of the Turf." In his life of Lord George Bentinck he says that on the day after the Derby of 1848 had been won by Surplice, which had been recently sold along with the rest of his stud by Sir George in order that he might devote himself more exclusively to politics, he found that nobleman in the House of Commons poring over reports and blue books on Colonial matters. "He had nothing," says Disraeli, "to console him or to sustain him except his pride, and even that deserted him before the heart which he knew at least could give him sympathy. He gave a great stifled groan and murmured:—'All my life I have been trying for this, and for what have I sacrificed it?' It was in vain to offer him solace. 'You don't know what the Derby is' he moaned. 'Yes I do' I replied; 'it is the Blue Riband of the Turf,' and he slowly repeated to himself: 'It is the Blue Riband of the Turf,' and sitting down to the table he buried himself in a folio of satistics."

By his third success in the great race the King joins the select eleven who had previously won it three or more times. Their names with the dates of their victories deserve to be recorded:—Sir C. Bunbury, 1780, 1801, 1813. Duke of Bedford, 1789, 1791, 1797. Lord Grosvenor, 1790, 1792, 1794. Sir F. Standish, 1725, 1796, 1799. Duke of Grafton, 1802, 1809, 1810, 1815. Lord Egremont, 1804, 1805, 1807, 1826. Lord Jersey, 1825, 1827, 1836. Mr. Bowes, 1835, 1843, 1852, 1853. Sir J. Hawley, 1851, 1858, 1859, 1868. Duke of Westminster, 1882, 1886, 1899. Lord Rosebery, 1894, 1895, 1905. His Majesty's career as a keen supporter of the Turf is full of interest. It dates from 31st March 1871, when he was represented by a bay gelding, called Champion, in a hunters' challenge cup, at a meeting of the 10th Hussars, at Down Barns, near Hayes. The Prince entered by virtue of his position as colonel of the regiment and his representative was beaten ten lengths by Lord Valentia's Wellington. It was at Aldershot on 15th April 1880, that the Royal colours were first carried to victory, in a Military Hunt Steeplechase, which was won by Leonidas from nine opponents, to the great delight of the Prince and Princess and the large company present. Six years elapsed, however, before His Majesty registered his first success under Jockey Club rules. On 4th June 1886, Counterpane, a filly by Hermit, started favourite, and ridden by the late Fred Archer, won a Maiden Two-Year-Old Plate. Since then the King has experienced considerable fluctuations in his fortunes on the Turf. His most successful year was 1900 when he won £29,585. This season bids fair to beat even that of 1900, for Minoru's victory brought His Majesty's winnings up to nearly £15,000.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

On Saturday the Tollygunge Club opened the season's racing with their first gymkhana and we shall now go right on with hardly a break till the middle of next March and a very good thing too in the opinion of every sportsman here. Jupiter Pluvius rather upset matters on Saturday by indulging us in a heavy deluge beginning immediately after the second race and he was only so far kind as to ensure a good attendance by holding his hand till that time. The Stewards and Committee have done so much to try and make racing at Tollygunge pleasant that it is to be hoped that it will not be thought that we are playing the ungracious part of fault-finders if we make the suggestion that the shed in which the books operate should be improved and at least made water tight. Unfortunately there is every probability of more wet afternoons at Tollygunge before the end of the Club's short season and it is only right that the fielders and punters should be able to carry on their warfare under as pleasant conditions as possible and without the risk of leaking water obliterating traces of the wagers pencilled in the books. The fields were unusually good and we do not think we have ever seen quite so many horses go out for each race on the first day at Tollygunge, the totals being Visitors's Plate 5, June Stakes 11, Novice Stakes 10, Open Pony Race 5, Club Stakes 7 and Buggy Stakes 5. Possibly the enterprise of the Stewards in giving Rs. 30 for second when four or more start and Rs. 20 to the third for seven or more starters may have had something to do with this. As usual with a card of all terms races the favourites got home in most of the events with considerable ease and it was only in the last two races that there were upsets.

The day began with the Visitors' Plate Open and the 3 to 1 on chance, Lefterin simply cantered in the whole way and won very easily by three-quarters of a length from Mr. Milton's smart youngster Frank, who was out for his first race.

The June Stakes was an equally good thing for Loch Lily, but the surprise of the race lay with the placed horses. Ruling Passion, a Predominant pony, who has shown no form here yet and little Baddock ridden by his owner, ran second and third. The Gem was very slow at getting away or else he must have been better up and Lionel who was fourth did not respond at all to riding and was stopping very fast at the end.

The Novice Stakes was an easy thing for Electric Light, but Beaumaris, Mr. Pugh's grey, is not at all a bad horse and very nearly brought off a good thing for his connections who backed him at the useful odds of about 20 to 1 to win and 2 to 1 a place. Mr. Pugh rode the horse himself and every one was glad to see him up in a race again.

The Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Coin II gave Mr. Galstaun an easy winning ride in the Open Pony Race, and though Mr. Evers brought up Amazon very fast at the end he could make no impression on the winner. Gladsome, by a mistake of her rider, carried 7lb. too much, but this would not have affected the result as she was hopelessly beaten off.

The Club Stakes proved the first upset of the day. Sir Ulric was a 2 to 1 on favourite well backed by his stable and indeed on paper there should have been nothing to beat him, but he did not seem to like the mud at all and though leading the field 1½ furlongs from home he either could not or would not struggle on and he turned it up soon after Prince Moorfield, the second favourite got alongside and allowed the latter to win by two lengths.

The Buggy Stakes was again a bit against the fielders, as Kipper, who was a 5 to 2 on chance did not get away at all well and Mr. Morris, who jumped off a length or two to the good on Watchful, was able to get ahead and won comfortably by two lengths from Chas. K. Kipper get no better than a bad third.

The prospectus for the next meeting is now out and includes a Steeplechase for Horses that have never won Rs. 500, a Hurdle Race for ponies, three five-furlong races and a Jiu Jitsu Scurry. The terms of the latter have been framed somewhat different from usual as it now provides for any approved bonâ fide hack but does not define the same and we do not envy the stewards the difficult task of approving or disapproving the numerous alleged hacks that will be submitted to them.

Appended is the programme.

The Nullah Cup.—A Handicap Steeplechase for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 500 or over. About 1½ miles.

The Invitation Stakes (Open).—A Handicap Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Race value Rs. 500 or over. 5 furlongs.

The Jodepur Plate.—A Handicap Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase, value Rs. 45 or over. 5 furlongs.

The Kalighat Stakes.—A Handicap Hurdle Race for Ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 500 or over. 1 mile.

The Gurriah Cup (Open).—A Handicap Flat Race for ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 500 or over. 5 furlongs.

The Jiu Jitsu Scurry.—A Flat Race for approved bona fide hacks, C. W. over 11-7. G. R.'s. only who have never ridden a winner under any recognised rules of racing. 3 furlongs.

There was a bit of schooling over the new hurdles on Tuesday morning. The first pony out was Little Baddock, who was ridden slowly by his owner over the two pony hurdles, and jumped well considering the pace. Bridge Knight (Alford) and Chas. (Mr. Levetus) went for two runs over the same. The first time Chas. jumped right away from his companion who was slow, but at the second time the pony hit the first one hard and slipping on the tan on landing came over on his nose without damaging himself or rider Bridge Knight by himself at the second hurdle tried to stop and bucked over under the influence of the spurs rather than jumped it. Mr. Robertson's pony, Minstrel Boy, was then taken over the same two jumps by Alford and performed very neatly. The last school consisted of Pallas (W. Alford) and Mataura (Mr. Levetus), followed by Tommy ridden by his lady owner. Mataura tried to keep out of the jumps and took the wing of the first but went much better over the second. Pallas and Tommy both fenced well.

On Wednesday Betrayer had his first jump since his reappearance in Calcutta and his performance must have been very gratifying to his owner Mr. Pugh. Alford who is training him, was riding and Narwanah (Beasley) went as school master. They schooled over the two pony hurdles and the big horse stood away well, went very straight at the fences and cleared them in good style. Alford then gave Peter a jump and he performed well. Ruling Passion (Mr. Bletsoe) went by himself over a couple, he cleared the first well but went at both in a "peacocky" style and chancing the second all but "came" it, just saving himself at the last moment. Leading Lady (Mr. Dudley) then schooled dead slow, jumping cleanly and well considering the pace.

We regret to announce that Flo, who was taken ill after a gallop last week, died soon after her removal to Cook's yard.

We hear from Bombay that Peru, who was getting on well, has fallen in his box, damaging his knee and is to be either blistered or fired and Soultine, who was not doing well at first, has now picked up and is coming on nicely.

Betting for the Viceroy's Cup has already commenced. We hear that 30,000 to 10,000 has already been laid the double Tangaroa and Bantock and better than 25 to 1 cannot now be obtained. Fizz has been taken for the Cup in one or two doubles, though good as this horse may be we should hardly think he is Cup form and we would certainly sooner lay him than back him. Pelargonium II is also mentioned as likely to be well up amongst them on the big day. For the Trials right out books are offering 8 to 1 Tangaroa, but we do not fancy that there are any takers at this price six months before the race, and however big a certainty there may be on the day 15 to 1 or any how 10 to 1 is a reasonable figure at which backers could be expected to invest money with all the possibilities for evil that hang round a race horse during such a long time.

The Pachmarhi polo tournament recently played ended in a win for the Bhopal team. In the first round Bhopal "B" beat 60th Rifles by 9 goals to love first. Magpies beat 45th Brigade, R.F.A., by 5 goals to 4 after playing extra time. In the second round the Musketeers beat the Magpies by 2 goals to 1 after extra time had been played. In the final Bhopal beat the Musketeers by 6 goals to love.

Owing to heavy rain the Simla races, fixed to begin on Saturday, the 12th instant, were postponed till Monday. We publish results of the first day's sport further on.

Attempts to introduce the totalisator in England continue to meet with non-success. We see that the Racecourse Association decided at their annual meeting last month that they "could not countenance the presence of the totalisator on racecourses." Mr. Hwfa Williams presided, and representatives were present from numerous meetings.

Our London Sporting Letter gives full details of the Derby, the result of which we gave in our Special Telegram of the 26th ultimo. Minoru, who started at 7 to 2 against, was magnificently handled by Jones and, securing a head verdict, landed the King with his third Derby win. When Persimmon won in 1896 and Diamond Jubilee in 1900 the King was Prince of Wales. The latter two horses were bred at the Sandringham stud, but Minoru is only leased to the King by Colonel W. Hall Walker and was bred at the Tully Stud in Ireland.

It was the first time in the history of the great race that a reigning Sovereign has seen his colours carried in triumph past the post. So it was a new record which was made, and made amid a scene of enthusiasm which was absolutely indescribable. Epsom Downs have witnessed many stirring sights, but it must have been the unanimous opinion of those who were present yesterday that never before can there have been such a tempest of "universal shout" as was raised when it was seen that the King's horse was sure of victory. As the leaders flashed by to the winning post, tens of thousands of people, moved by one common impulse, swept into a compact mass before the grand stand, and cheered wildly and madly. Never has been witnessed a more popular victory. Losers forgot their losses, and winners their gains. The King's pleasure animated all that mighty multitude, and the success of Minoru was made the occasion for one of the most memorable outbursts of perfervid loyalty which even His Majesty, used as he is to such scenes, can ever have witnessed.

Sir Martin, an American bred crack, had no opportunity of showing whether he is up to classic form. He unfortunately fell, a mishap which recalled the accident to Rhodora in the Oaks last year. For Sir Martin Mr. L. Winans paid £15,000, and Mr. Madden, the breeder of the colt, threw in a horse called Edward. Mr. Winans had never owned a flat racer before, his racing interests being centred in jumpers. His first experience as the owner of a Derby horse has been peculiarly unfortunate. There was an extraordinary amount of American money for Sir Martin one hears, but one of the biggest surprises in connection with the race is the fact that the son of Ogden started favourite.

Evidently the struggle between Minoru and Louviers was intensely exciting, and right up to the last stride was the issue in doubt. H. Jones rode a splendidly judged race on the King's horse, and came at the right time. Stern, who rode Louviers, is the crack jockey in France. He was very confident that Louviers would win, and his enthusiasm for the chance of his mount resulted in many Frenchmen witnessing the race.

One should always speak as one finds, we know: therefore, if Sir Thomas Lipton, tea-dealer, provision-merchant, yachtsman and friend of royalty, was not overcome by a heavy meal when he made the following remarkable statement, his experience of Yankee "sportsmen" must be unique. Inflicting on his fellow-feeders of a big luncheon in London last month the usual "few well-chosen words," Sir Tummas is reported to have said that in his experience there were no better sportsmen in the world than in America!

During the last few years, when he had had the honour of competing for the America Cup, he had always found that if any mistake were made it was always made in favour of the visitors. If there be any others whose experience of American sports leads them to endorse the famous tea-dealer's opinion they must surely find themselves in a microscopic minority.

A wonderful record as a traveller has been achieved by Dash, the smooth-haired fox-terrier, which accompanied Dr. M. A. Stein, the archaeological explorer, throughout his great journey of 10,000 miles, undertaken on behalf of the Indian Government, through Central Asia into China and back.

Though the aggregate of the marches amounted roughly to 10,000 miles in two years and eight months, the actual distance covered by Dash, taking into account his canine habits of progression, may be estimated at well over 20,000 miles. Dash made that journey on foot practically the whole way, except when he went "pony back" for short distances at times of great heat. When in the Taklamakan desert, Dash, like the rest of the party, had his water allowance strictly limited. It came from the supply carried on camels in the form of ice.

Dash went over mountain passes as high as 18,000 feet above sea level. Throughout the journey the dog kept well, and his menu was made up of scraps from the camp larder. Each night he slept in Dr. Stein's tent, and on occasions proved himself a very useful watch-dog. The dog was bred in India from imported parents and is at present in London undergoing the quarantine torture imposed on all dogs from India.

CERTAIN interesting details regarding the English Amateur Golf Championship will be found among our London Sporting Letter to-day.

THE Madras Hockey Tournament will begin on the 26th July.

THE Open Golf Championship, played this year at Deal, has been won by J. H. Taylor, Mid Surrey Club. This is the fourth time Taylor has carried off the trophy. He first won it in 1894 at Sandwich and repeated his success the following year at St. Andrews: in 1896 he was beaten by Harry Vardon after tying with him. In 1900 he won at St. Andrews, and, was runner up in 1904, 1906, 1907. And last year he finished sixth but won the Open Championship of France and the Professional Golfers' Association Tournament News of the World prize. Vardon and Braid have also won the Open Championship four times each, the former in 1896, 1898, 1899 and 1903 and Braid in 1901, 1905, 1906 and 1908.

THE Murree Football Tournament was concluded on the 7th instant, when the Royal Scots and the Royal Irish Fusiliers met in the final. It was a great game. The Scots scored first but after the interval the Irish equalised. Again the Scots got the lead, but before time was called their opponents netted once more, and the score was two all at close of the game. An extra ten minutes was allowed but neither team scored and a further extra period was decided on. It was towards the end of this that the Scots got through and registered the goal that gave them the game and the Cup.

As will be seen by the details in our English Sporting Letter "Iron" Hague's weight, strength and terrific punch did not avail him against the science displayed by Sam Langford. But many experts foretell a big future for the Mexboro' man when he has had a little more experience and coaching. The fight at the National Sporting Club on the 24th ultimo was announced by Mr. Bettinson as for the World's championship, Jack Johnson by side stepping his engagement with Langford, having forfeited his title. Langford is, from all accounts, a marvel. Though he doesn't dance about and doesn't look so quick or so clever as Tommy Burns, his science is wonderful. He economises effort and just gets out of the way, a quarter of an inch, perhaps, but just the necessary quarter. The appended details regarding Hague and Langford will be of interest:—

	Langford.	Hague.
Age	23	24
Height	5 ft. 6 in.	5 ft. 11 in.

Thigh	22¾ in.	26½ in.

Hague's younger brother made his first public appearance the same evening, when he quite outclassed Tom Woodford of Hull, the referee stopping the bout. "Digger" Stanley and Walsh, the champion bantam weights of England and America, fought 15 rounds ending in a draw.

LANGFORD AND STANLEY KETCHELL have signed articles to fight at the Pacific Athletic Club, Los Angeles, California, during the week of 11th July, Ketchell to receive 10,000 dollars win, lose or draw and Langford a 5,000 dollars bonus. There will be no referee's decision rendered because a city ordinance forbids one, while the men will meet at catch-weights. Ketchell, it will be remembered, is to fight Jack Johnson later on. He recently met Philadelphia Jack O'Brien at the National A.C., New York, and felled him three times in a ten-round bout. When the referee, Tim Hurst, was tolling off the seconds the clang of the bell punctuated the count of six, and in ring history O'Brien escaped the knocked out mark, but the 3,000 spectators who followed the most sensational contest in New York since the days of the Horton law roared their approval of the demon-champion's power. A count of 100 would not have been enough to give O'Brien a chance to gain his feet.

THERE is no kinder or more instantaneous method of destroying animals as the best way of putting them out of their misery when old or injured than by shooting; but it may be mentioned that shooting in the head is sometimes better than behind the shoulder. The position of the heart, which is the organ most directly concerned under the latter method, is not the same in all animals, and a bungler might make a mess of it. Dogs, cats, and other animals of the smaller kind can be killed at once by a shot behind the ear directed towards the brain, but for larger animals—horses, cattle, etc.—the centre of the forehead, just above the point where the hair "joins" and makes a little tuft, is the best place to aim at. The effect of a shot here immediately destroys the whole of the brain, and, passing through, also breaks the spinal cord, so that all possibility of feeling is destroyed on the instant. An ordinary shot cartridge is much the best for shooting any animal at very close quarters, because the impact of a number of small pellets sets up a paralysing effect of much greater intensity and wider area than one solid substance like a bullet; and there is no danger of the projectile failing to do its work or of damaging anything beyond the creature intended to be killed. The shot of an ordinary cartridge seldom makes a point of exit, expending the whole of its energy upon the animal's brain. Its effect upon a great creature like a cart-horse is nothing short of marvellous, the animal dropping like a stone without so much as moving a muscle.

H. H. THE MAHARAJAH OF REWAH is reported to have shot a third man-eating tiger at Amarkamtak on the 6th instant, Human hair was found in the animal's stomach.

MAJOR H. H. HARRISON has just published in book form a number of the articles on the Birds of Burma, which he contributed to the Rangoon Gazette, with the desire that they might be a slight help to those who take an interest in the bird life of that province. The volume under review is well arranged and written in popular form, long technical description and names having been omitted. It does not deal with the game, and water birds, as many volumes have been devoted to them by others, but the author includes full description of the pigeons, as they seldom find a place in books on the game birds, and are often shot by sportsmen. There is an excellent list at the end of the book giving the distribution of the various species, and from this we are given a good idea of the numbers and varieties of the birds of Burma. The book is well turned out and should be a welcome addition to the library of all ornithologists.

A PAIR of tomtits, which have become friendly with a bush selector on the west coast of New Zealand, have their habits described by Mr. James Drummond, F.L.S., F.Z.S., in the Otago Witness:—"Early on the first morning I spent in the forest, Mr. Gates asked me to come out and be introduced to his pets. There were no birds in sight, but he began to call the tits in a loud voice, and to imitate their chirrup by drawing in the lips and making a soft labial sound. He had fossicked in the garden for grubs, and he now held several in the palm of his outstretched hand. By-and-bye there was a 'tweet-tweet' in the foliage of a large fine tree some distance away. A ball of fluffy feathers fluttered down to a small tree within 10ft. or 12 ft. of the house, then to a rail, and then, with a quick movement, on to Mr. Gates's hand, where it took two of the grubs and flew leisurely away with them. They take Mr. Gates's friends on trust, and are as friendly with them as they are with him. There is a good deal of jealousy in their little breasts. The male is not at all pleased when too much attention is shown to the female. Otherwise the sexes are on the best of terms, and their lives are marked by domestic felicity. Although the female takes in hand most of the work at the building of the nest, the male often helps her, and when the family is increased, which occurs regularly once a year, the male feeds both the mother and the youngsters when her duties tie her to the nest.

"The male, apparently, largely dominates the female. His supremacy seems to be tacitly acknowledged by her. The pair have been watched closely, and on no occasion has she been known to dispute his will. He displays a great deal of anxiety in regard to her welfare. When she goes down to receive the grubs he often sits on a branch some distance away, and, with a quick, intelligent air, watches the operation. Occasionally, he gives a sharp suppressed note of warning, and then, like a flash, she is away on the high branch of a tree. She has so much confidence in Mr. Gates's friendship that she has no hesitation in bringing her young ones to look for grubs near the house.

"Both parents do their duty to their family, while the little ones are helpless, but as soon as they become big birds, and are able to make their own way in the world, they are driven off and chased out of the district, to seek their fortunes in other parts of the forests. The young females seem to be grateful to both parents, but the young males are sometimes ungrateful enough to attack the old male and to deal out to him rather severe punishment. This conduct, apparently, is quite common amongst tits. On one occasion Mr. Gates had to step in and actually save the life of an old male tit which had been attacked by young males, presumably its own chicks.

"There is a great deal of trouble when one male invades the domain of another male, but it is child's play compared to the trouble that is caused when a female finds another of her own sex on her preserves. There is absolutely no quarter. The bitterest feeling is shown on both sides. The sharp little bills, cracking together, are used like rapiers with deadly effect, and not frequently the fight ends in the death of one of the combatants. It is believed that these most unnatural duels are brought about by the fact that one female has lost her mate and wishes to make the mate belonging to another female. At any rate, the presence of a strange female is not regarded as a friendly visit. It is presumed that she is after all no good. The proof of her honesty lies in the quickness with which she takes her leave.

"The male is a poor specimen of a bird when he is moulting. He is a dilapidated ragamuffin, and the loss of some of his tail feathers makes him very ridiculous in the eyes of everybody. When he is in this condition he seems to lose his self-respect and to keep out of sight as much as possible. With his new suit, he becomes sprightly again, and loves to display his plumage, which, if not gaudy, is neat and spruce."

MESSRS. THACKER, SPINK AND CO. have sent us a copy of their Catalogue of Books relating to the languages of India and the East. It is a very complete list and should be of special value to the Orientalist and Student of Eastern languages.

THE acclimatisation of English fishes and animals seems to be wonderfully successful in the Antipodes. Witness the trout and rabbit, and now we hear that Mr. Lionel Le Sœuf, who some two and a-half years ago placed a number of English perch, tench, and carp in Western Australian lakes between Perth and Yanchep, has been astonished at the result. Where the waters had receded, a couple of two-pound golden carp were recently found lying in a furrow, and the billabongs and creeks leading into the lakes, as well as the lakes themselves, are said to be simply swarming with fish. Dr. Haynes, a landowner in the vicinity, says they are so thick that it is easier to shoot them than to catch them with a rod and line. He has seen some weighing as much as 10lbs.

WE regret to record the death on the 11th instant of Mr. Warwick H. Smith of the Planters, Stores and Agency Company, Limited. He had been in hospital for some time with enteric and there had been every hope of recovery, but a relapse occurred and he passed away on Friday morning. A keen all-round sportsman, good at tennis, golf and hockey and a popular member of the Calcutta Light House, Mr. Warwick Smith had a large circle of friends in Calcutta, to whom the news of his death has come as a great shock.

THE following are the results of the important cricket matches, played in England during the past week:—

Sussex beat Cambridge University by eight runs.
Surrey beat Essex by eight wickets.
Kent beat Yorkshire by seven wickets.
Leicestershire beat Derby by 165 duns.
Leicester beat Notts at Leicester by ten wickets.
Gloucester beat Northampton at Gloucester by 25 runs.
Lancashire beat Sussex at Manchester by three wickets.
The Australians beat Somerset at Bath by two wickets.
Surrey beat Hampshire by ten wickets.
The match between Cambridge University and Mr. H. D. G. Leveson-Gower's eleven was drawn.
The matches between Middlesex and Yorkshire, Kent and Essex and Oxford and Marylebone were abandoned.

THE second test match began on Monday, when the following team represented England, Maclaren, Hobbs, Tyldesley, Jones, Hirst, Lilley, Hayward, King, George Gunn, Albert Relf and Haigh. The last five players have taken the place of Fry, Jessop, Rhodes, Blythe and Thompson. Play opened in fine weather. The Australians won the toss and elected to field. England made 269 in their first innings, the scores being as follows:—Hayward 16, Hobbs 19, George Gunn 1, Tyldesley 46, King 60, Maclaren 7, Hirst 31, Jones 8, Relf 17, Lilly 47, Haigh not out 1, total 269. The Australians went in and made 17 without loss when stumps were drawn. McLister not out 4 and Laver not out 13.

A good story is told of a game of cricket played in the grounds of some noble lord who loved the game. One innings had been worried through pretty fairly, but when the time came on to start the second innings, his lordship found he was a man short. Presently he caught sight of a reporter who could "play a little"—he knew the handle of the bat from the blade most of the time, but not always, so the noble captain asked him to fill the vacancy. "I would wish pleashure," was the frank reply, "but I did myself too good at the banquet board, and now I can shee three balls 'shtead er one." "Oh, that's easily fixed up," said his lordship; "all you have to do is to hit at the middle ball, and you'll be quite safe." "Right-oh," was the confident reply, and soon after our hero sailed in to "knock er bloomin' cover off the ball," as he loudly predicted. Of course, he came out at the first ball, and his captain cheerily said, "Hard luck, old man! I suppose you hit at the wrong ball, eh?" "Oh, no!" said the bibulous batsman. "I hit at er ri-right ball, but I hit at it wish er whong blanky bat!"

The Australian Inter-State Eight-oar race was rowed on the 15th ultimo, on Hamilton Reach, Brisbane River, the crews finishing as follows:—Tasmania 1; Victoria 2; New South Wales 3; Queensland 4; South Australia 5. The start was unfortunate for Victoria and Queensland, who got away badly. Tasmania set the pace strongly pulling a 44 stroke, Victoria 42, and the others 38. At the first mile Tasmania and N.S. Wales were level, both pulling strongly, with Victoria two lengths behind, and Queensland and South Australia fighting out a ding-dong battle a good length further back. From this point to the two miles Victoria reduced the lead of Tasmania, and N. S. Wales, apparently tiring, dropped back to third position. A fine race ensued from this to the finish. Victoria challenged the Tasmanian crew, which responded finely, and eventually won by a length from Victoria, with N.S. Wales a good length behind Queensland was fourth, three lengths away, and South Australia last. Times: One mile, 4min. 22sec.; two miles, 9 min. 55 sec.; full distance, 16min. 2sec.; of the thirty-three races that have been rowed Tasmania has won two; Victoria has twenty-five wins to her credit, seven times second, and once third; New South Wales has won five times and Queensland, once.

The big race was preceded by the Sculling Championship, rain commencing just after the start, which was an excellent one. Towns, rowing a steady stroke, thirty-three, early established a lead, with Dennis slightly ahead of Coverdale, and Richards last. Coverdale drew level with Towns, but the later spurted and took command again. At the mile the positions were unchanged, all pulling at thirty. Towns continued to increase his lead, and eventually won by a hundred yards. The final order being J. R. Towns (N.S.W.) 12-10, 1; A. F. Coverdale 11-0, 2; A. Dennis (Queensland) 3; A. Richards (Victoria) 11-0, 4. Times—17min.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 28th May 1909.

London has been ultra-imperial most of the week. Opening of the Imperial International Exhibition at the White City; much imperial display at Olympia levée held by the King at which many distinguished sons of the Empire from over-seas were present; Territorial Church-parading activity all last Sunday; Empire Day celebrations by the small fry last Monday. How's that for organised patriotism which is in time to help us "to think imperially?" I say "in time," and it will probably be a long time ere imperialism becomes inborn in us: it is at present rather an acquired taste than a natural gift I fear.

However, do not let us carp and cavil, the outward and visible signs were attractive enough and tending to kindle enthusiasm withal. There was any amount of varied demonstration and procession last Monday for example—"Children's Day" as the anniversary of the birth of Queen Victoria the Good is getting to be called. It is estimated that 15,000,000 children saluted the Union Jack and of this number 3,750,000 were to be found in Great Britain alone, and half this total must have been provided by London. The streets, squares, open spaces and halls literally swarmed with kiddies, noisily demonstrative over their momentary absolution from spelling and arithmetic; banners, "wavers" and garlands confronted the eye at every point of the compass. Music more or less tuneful (chiefly less) assailed the ear. Well perhaps it makes for good, and if the Imperial idea can be ingrafted by bunting, brass bands, bun—worries and addresses so much the better. But can it? I hae ma doots.

The Imperial International Exhibition opened its gates on Saturday and had a hearty send-off. The first impression conveyed to one on passing the turnstiles was that the long, dreary winter had been obliterated from the calendar and that the famous show had been running continuously ever since last October when it seemingly closed its doors.

That there had been any break in the White City's life was difficult to realise. The "Flip Flap" was still cautiously lifting its giant arms; gondolas, laden with holiday-makers, were plying along the canals just the same as ever; the trains on the Scenic Railway were ascending those apparently perilous heights and rushing down those steep declines; while the tumbling waters of the cascade in the Court of Honour seemed to never have been interrupted.

And yet one felt all the time that this was not the old White City. A few of its familiar features have disappeared, but many new ones have been added; while the delicate apple-green tint which some of the buildings now wear strikes a distinctly novel note in the colour scheme.

Among the displays that more particularly attract are the machinery, the Submarine Railway, the Dahomey Village and the strikingly realistic exhibition of the famous health and pleasure resorts of England and the Continent—really excellent panoramas and fine examples of the scenic artists' best efforts. In short the auguries for the success of the White City this year are as bright as the sunshine that heralded its opening. How the sun did shine to be sure! Certain holiday-making men from Calcutta whom I met on the "Wiggle-Woggle"—and off it—in paying their tribute to the heat convinced me that the taste for lurid description has not yet died out in the East.

And as if it were not stuffy and uncomfortable enough, the eternal Suffragette must needs be troubling afresh. And in this connection it is beginning to look rather as if our great Pro-Consuls were not, as a class, absolutely in sympathy with the female suffrage movement. The assumption may, of course, be wrong, but when one finds Lord Cromer describing the suffragettes as "Delilahs" and "Philistines," and Lord Curzon calling them "female howling dervishes" and saying "Get thee behind me,—," to them, one is entitled to draw some conclusion of the sort. Lord Curzon even goes on to say that if ever woman obtains the vote the best thing we can do is to write the word Ichabod over the gates of Whitehall. La famille Pankhurst will probably hasten to reply to this outburst of biblical castigation that the devil is known to be rather a dab at quoting Scripture.

Suffragettes suggest petticoats—but no, trousers surely? Anyhow, much discord has recently arisen, the Liberal Government is again in trouble and the storm has been raised by petticoats and furbelows. Mr. Asquith has apparently tolerated an entertainment in Downing Street, where the chief attraction was a costume display by an enterprising French professor of the mystic cult of frocks and frills. Now this sounds innocent enough, but there is quite a storm in a teacup as a result. The whole of the English drapery trade is up in arms and wants to know why the same kind of favour should not be extended to it. Either Mr. Asquith should not have tolerated the solitary exhibition, say the leading dressmakers and costumiers, or else he should throw open the house of many political memories in Downing Street to the creators of fashion in Bond, Regent, and Oxford Streets, and their competitors at the Sloane Street end of Brompton Road. It is a pretty point in public decorum and it leaves the British public, outside the business of politics and the higher walks of the drapery trade, smiling.

It doesn't take long to make a street full of Londoners gaze heavenwards, a lengthy stare at a distant house top will start it. But last Saturday we had some excuse for looking up, for it is not often we can see a dozen balloons travelling over the dome of St. Paul's in extended skirmishing order so to speak. Fifteen balloons, eleven British, three French and one German had an international race from Hurlingham to Billericay, about twenty-five miles distance.

It was the fourth annual point-to-point race, promoted by the Aëro Club of the United Kingdom and the conditions were ideal. A bright sun and a cloudless blue sky favoured the competitors, and the breeze was of sufficient strength to make an ascent interesting and free from danger. They certainly looked well enough sailing along and all but one landed more or less near the cross that marked the finish: this one fouled a tall chimney, rammed a cottage and made a wilted and withered sort of descent. The occupants of the car escaped unhurt, but the simple cottagers evidently concluded the day of judgment had arrived and leaving their all, started a sprint, and for all I know may be running still.

London is already receiving a great number of American visitors this season, and the theatres that specialise are getting a great deal of business out of them. The Gaiety, Daly's, and His Majesty's are the theatres that specialise—that is, almost everybody knows what class of entertainment he will get at each, and also that it will be of the best of its kind in London. That sort of reputation appeals to Americans who come here, and it means much money for the three theatres I have mentioned. It is rather surprising that more theatres do not specialise. Messrs. Smith and Carpenter are specialising with drama at the Lyceum Theatre, and if they are wise they will mix as little Shakespeare as possible with it. When the public knows that it is certain to get good strong melodrama there, with an uncompromising villain, a virtuous heroine, and a dashing young hero any time the curtain goes up, the Lyceum Theatre will be more than ever firmly established as a specialty house. The Gaiety Theatre has kept so strictly to certain lines that everybody who goes speaks of "going to the Gaiety," without ever thinking it necessary to mention the play. Daly's and His Majesty's have each a following as regular and as loyal. The Haymarket had it under the management of Messrs. Harrison and Maude, and the Court had it under Messrs. Vedrenne and Barker.

A play which sets out to tell the British public what fools they are would not at first sight appear to have much chance of success. But the run of "An Englishman's Home" has served to show that the British public rather enjoy having their shortcomings pointed out to them, and Mr. Arnold Bennett's play, produced at the New Royalty Theatre last night, has an abundance of wit and cleverness to make it a bright and enjoyable entertainment, apart from any moral it may be designed to point.

"What the Public wants" was first performed by the Incorporated Stage Society a few weeks ago, when Mr. Charles Hawtrey was so struck with it that he immediately arranged for its production. The piece is a satire upon the "Yellow Press." The author endeavours to show that the public are eagerly snapping up all the garbage, all the sensational scares and inventions that unscrupulous millionaire proprietors care to manufacture for their consumption.

The piece has little dramatic value. It does not lead to anywhere in particular; it has no "situations;" it is mostly talk. But the characters very seldom open their mouths without saying something that is well worth hearing; the dialogue is so good that you never notice that nothing much is actually happening.

There is room for very little story. Sir Charles Worgan's character and business methods minutely described really make the play. Sir Charles is the proprietor of numerous popular periodicals. His god is circulation; he is a purveyor of printed matter; he publishes only what he believes will tickle the public palate—which is very cheap and lurid and sensational stuff indeed. He goes through life with blinkers on, seeing nothing but his own small corner of things. His business instinct is sound, but in all other matters, outside the making of money he is shallow and ignorant. But he feels the want of culture; he is annoyed when people who are discussing philosophy or poetry or art immediately change the subject to motor cars at his approach. In search of culture he takes over an interest in a theatre whose policy is Art with a capital "A," and he falls in love with an actress who is also a woman of culture. Everything goes smoothly until Sir Charles's family—simple provincial folk—discover that he is running in one of his papers a series of articles called "Crimes of Passion," and that the next article to be published is to rake up an old and unsavoury scandal which affects his mother's oldest friend. Sir Charles refuses to alter his arrangements until his betrothed influences him, but she has discovered that she is engaged to a man of flabby moral character, and throws him over.

The character of Sir Charles is a Hawtrian part, but Mr. Charles Hawtrey's personality gave it life and humour. Mr. Louis Calvert acted brilliantly as a theatrical manager who cared nothing for box office receipts and everything for art, and as Sir Charles's brother Francis, a world wanderer and a philosopher, a foil to the mercenary Charles, Mr. Ben Webster played with distinction. Other parts were capitally played by Miss Margaret Halstan, Miss Mary Brough, and Mr. E. Holman Clark.

The fact that a week or ten days had passed without our hearing of the sayings or doings of Mr. Bernard Shaw inclined me to the most gloomy forebodings. But relief came yesterday. "B.S." has just had yet another play refused a license by the Censor and, as may be imagined by those familiar with Shavian methods, he is not taking it lying down. It was called "The Showing Up of Blanco Posnet," and its author has, of course, some vitriolic remarks to offer on the ubjects. He declares his intention to permit the play to be performed in America and throughout Europe, and he will publish it because he has "no following among vicious or thoughtless people." Those who take Mr. Shaw seriously are getting really anxious as to how it will all end; those who do not are already, as they say at public meetings, passing on to the consideration of the next subject.

The Royal Navy is mostly rejoicing, it is said, over the announcement of the approaching retirement of Admiral Sir John Fisher, First Lord of the Admiralty. He goes in October and is to be succeeded by Admiral Sir Arthur William Moore, who was Commander-in-Chief on the China Station till last year. Sir John's tenure of office has been a very stormy one and his sweeping reform and drastic changes have made him hosts of implacable enemies. Admiral Moore, who is sixty-two, entered the Navy in 1860 and saw much active service during the Egyptian war. He was one of the British representatives at the Anti-Slavery Congress at Brussels in 1889, and was also an aide-de-camp to Queen Victoria. During the latter part of the South African War he was Commander-in-Chief on the Cape Station.

It was a wet and sombre Derby, but there was no doubt about Epsom's welcome to the King or the frantic cheering, national anthem singing and hat throwing which followed the announcement that for the first time in its history the race had been won by a reigning monarch, for King Edward's Persimmon and Diamond Jubilee victories were gained before he succeeded to the guddee. His Majesty and Lord Rosebery have now won the Derby three times each, the Duke of Portland twice.

It rained on and off all the morning and far into the afternoon, and naturally all roads leading to the course were little better than rivers of mud; those who "footed it" were well splashed by the panting horses that dragged all sorts of vehicles, laden with all sorts of sporting men and women, to the scene. For a parallel one has to go back to the year that Ladas won for Lord Rosebery—although on that occasion the rain fell unceasingly, whereas this time it came intermittently in drenching showers that drove everyone outside the stands to such shelter as motor-cars, coaches, and charabancs afforded.

By those whose duty it is to be on the route it was estimated that, despite the inclement weather, as many people made the journey to Epsom by road as last year. For instance, in one hour—between ten and eleven o'clock—2,820 vehicles passed the Plough Hotel at Clapham on their way to the course. But I leave description and other details of the day's doings to your sporting scribe for your "Vagrant" must not be a poacher to boot.

It is an age of records; daily fresh surprises await. Consequently one need not be startled to hear that a record cab fare has just been paid—by an American of course. This wealthy and enterprising Yank the other day paid £40 to the driver of a London motor taxi-cab for taking him a tour round the South Coast and across to Ireland. Some of us who are in the habit of hailing our taxi for a humble journey of a couple of miles would look aghast at the prospect of a tour of some thousand miles or so undertaken on the spur of the moment in one of these handy little vehicles. The driver of this particular cab seems to have expressed no surprise when he was engaged in the Strand and told to drive to Southampton. After that he and his passenger visited Bournemouth, thence across to South Wales; they took the boat from Fishguard to Rosslare; Waterford, Cork and the Lakes of Killarney were visited, and finally the American "disencabbed" at Queenstown, where he caught the American liner.

The taxi-cabby brought his vehicle across to Liverpool, and thence by road to London, reaching home after an absence of 10 days with £40 as his earnings, and well earned too. This cab journey calls to mind the London messenger boy who went to America with a letter some years ago at a few minutes' notice: the boy's name was Jaggers, and he became a mild sort of celebrity in his way, being parodied in pantomimes, etc., and it became quite a custom to refer to the messenger boys as "jaggers," the word coming into our business phraseology quite as an usual expression to signify a messenger boy in uniform.

Bishop Thicknesse, of Northampton, would have no mumming if he had his way, Society Sabbath-breakers are his pet aversion, country home revels are an abomination to him. What he termed "the degradation of the Sabbath by people in society" was made the text for a strong denunciation by him in delivering his charge at his annual visitation at Northampton.

"What we have to deal with now," he said, "is open disregard of the worship of Almighty God by persons in the higher walks of life, their selfish profanities of the day of public worship by needless journeys, motor expeditions, dinner parties, and games, to the utter deprivation also of any needed Sunday rest and quiet to their ill—used servants and dependants.

"I know as a fact of a large 'fancy-dress' dinner party held on the first Sunday in Lent at a country house in a neighbouring county, where the so-called ladies shamelessly appeared dressed as men and the so-called gentlemen dressed as women. I mention it with profound shame, sorrow, and indignation almost ready to disown the term 'gentleman' for any manly man, if men with more money than manners, with more pretence than pedigree, have brought it to this and dragged it in the mire of their own corrupt habits." JUNGLE MEMORIES.

THE TIGER.

Most men of any experience will I think agree with me, that with the exception of pigisticking, tiger shooting is about the most exciting sport to be obtained in the East.

Even the old hands at the game will acknowledge that every time they have a beat for this splendid animal, they always feel the excited heart beat and tension of the nerves which invariably happens to me.

He is an elusive beggar, is the tiger, and time and time again does one draw a blank, when by all the rules of the game, one should be practically certain of obtaining a shot. On the other hand, when there hardly seems to be the slightest chance of bagging this big feline, one's efforts are now and then crowned with success. The last one I shot is a case in point.

My wife and I a couple of years ago went for a ten days' trip into the jungles during the Christmas holidays. I did not expect to do much in the way of sport, as I had been forestalled in my intention of going to a certain locality, by a forest officer who had got a shooting party of his own on my favourite ground. The fact, however, of getting away from cantonments and reaching the jungle once more was enough to raise our spirits. How well I remember our first morning, as we started for our next night's camp, and how we revelled in the fresh feeling of the cold weather air, which our ponies reciprocated as they seemed ready to jump out of their skins on the slighest occasion. As we turned a corner a few hundred yards from our last night's halting place, a glorious view met our eyes. The hills on either side were standing out of the mist, their tips blood coloured and gold as the rising sun first flashed on them.

All the birds were making a wild riot in turn, which our friend the bul-bul always begins, for he is even an earlier riser than the iniquitous and ubiquitous crow. The jungle in the cold weather is hard to beat. But I must get along to the tigress.

We moved camp every day as sport was not good, and eventually came to a place called Kurrambal, where there was a small P.W.D. bungalow, which it was lucky we had arrived at, as the weather had changed and turned misty and wet, the conditions indeed being more like those of the south-west monsoon than of Christmas. The buffalo calves were tied out as usual, and the next morning one of them was reported to have been killed about a mile and a half away.

It was pouring with rain, and the jungle, a good deal of which was evergreen, was a dense one: I therefore told Ithobar the shikari that it was not worth while beating in this sort of weather, so it was not much use collecting the coolies, and that he had better tie up another "buff" in the same place in the evening.

Ithobar, however, thought it would be advisable to get the beaters together on the off chance of the rain stopping by mid-day, so I consented; and towards 10 o'clock found about 60 men had arrived and were sitting shivering in their wet blankets under the trees.

The rain now began to lighten and in another hour had practically stopped, so we sallied for the scene of the tragedy in the hopes of interviewing "stripes." I had to leave my wife behind, as the clouds hung very low and I thought she would probably get a chill sitting on a wet ladder for most likely an hour and a half, if the rain again commenced. I did not feel too optimistic, but as I had plenty of firewood thought there might be a chance of a shot, but never dreamt I should get the most perfect one I ever had, but I am anticipating.

After half an hour's walk through the sodden jungle we arrived at the spot where my ladder was to be placed. I found this to be in the rocky bed of a small stream, which was now dry. The jungle took the shape of an hour glass, in the waist of which—here only a few yards broad—was my position, while behind and in front it broadened abruptly out again. It was a perfect spot should the tiger be beaten out, as to the right and left of me there were only small patches of low karvi stalks, and beyond these again grass land. As soon as the ladder was up and I was left to myself, a watery sun appeared and I much regretted that I had not brought my better half with me. Shortly after I heard the first faint far away shouts of the beaters, with the occasional bang of a cracker. The noise grew louder, and in about half an hour's time I heard the low tapping of one of the stops about a hundred and fifty yards away to my right front. This, of course, told me that the tiger was in the beat, of which I had not been previously sure, and I waited with joyful anticipation for the next move.

A few minutes more passed, when the low knocking was repeated in the same direction but nearer, as the next stop took it up, on the tiger again pressing forward to the edge of the forest. I had been told that the brute would either come up the nullah, or else by the edge of the jungle on my right, where to use my former simile the hour glass narrowed down to the waist. Owing to the foliage I could not see more than a short distance in front of me down the watercourse while the jungle edge where it joined the karvi was visible for thirty or forty yards. I had been keeping an eye on both lines of approach and after the last tapping, had been anxiously awaiting for a sight of the tiger from that direction. I had been gazing for some time, when I turned my head to look down the nullah, and as I did so, saw a great red foot steal out from behind a large tree-fern, and the next second not four yards away appeared a magnificent tigress.

She was a fine sight, as she stood in her lissom beauty, and turning her head looked away across the open ground to the left. She stood for some seconds watching and listening and then slowly began to pace forward, when she again stopped to look across the open grass. After another second or two, apparently satisfied that all was right she advanced once more. All this time I had not liked to raise my rifle which was lying across my knees, because as she was so close, I thought she would instantly spot the movement and bound back into the jungle amongst the beaters before I could get a shot. But she now began to pass me about a yard away, so pitching up my ·500 and covering her shoulder I pulled the trigger. As I moved she instantly stopped and looked up at me, but at the same moment she received her leaden welcome, and turning half round fell forward, rolling about with her fore paws flying round her head, at which I immediately fired the second barrel. To my astonishment on receiving this she gave a tremendous half backward, half sideways bound into the jungle she had come from. For a few minutes I heard her rolling and scrambling along, and then silence. The jungle looked thickish, so I rather expected a nasty follow up later on, but in the meantime stuck to my ladder and waited till Ithobar turned up, which I expected he would do as soon as he heard me fire. Shortly after I heard him call to me to know what had happened, which I told him, saying that the tigress was I thought lying down about a hundred yards away, as she was too badly hit to go far, and that he had better make a big detour and come to me by the open grass land. He turned up after a few minutes, and climbing up my ladder I explained what had occurred while we sat and listened.

Every now and then we could hear a faint cough, which soon ceased, and after waiting about twenty minutes, we got down to follow up, as we thought she had either rolled over finally, or moved on. We crept along the east edge of the jungle thinking we might catch sight of her inside, and when we had gone some little distance Ithobar stopped and pointing, said he could see her lying down, with her head up, looking at us ; but try as I would I failed to spot her. We went back therefore and crossing the little nullah went along the western side, and proceeding some 70 or 80 yards we saw her lying down about twenty yards away. Her flanks were slowly heaving and she seemed pretty bad. I could not fire from where I was owing to the intervening roots and creepers, which would have deflected the bullet, so crept quietly further in, until I could get a clear shot, when I gave her her quietus ; as I fired she gave a convulsive start and a low growl, her tail flying up at the same moment. Making sure she was dead, we called up the coolies, who all this time had been sitting perched up in the surrounding trees, and had her brought back to the bungalow, where as the rain still kept off I managed to get a couple of photos of her. She was a very thick-set and massive beast measuring 8 feet 4 inches. I found that the second bullet had penetrated her near fore, and not touched her head, which accounted for the way she had been able to bound off. One of her feet had intercepted the bullet when they were flying about after she was first hit. I have had no very thrilling adventures or hair breadth escapes when after tiger, but I have now and then had experiences which might have turned out nasty. I had one in particular in these same jungles some months before.

I had been out very early that morning on the chance of coming across a sambur, but it had turned out a complete frost. On my return to breakfast I found that the patel of the neighbouring village had arrived with the news that one of his buffaloes had been killed the evening before, so sending him off to collect the beaters, I had something to eat, and then sallied forth for the beat which was three miles off. On arrival I found a hot argument going on between the two rival shikaris, one saying that the tiger would be in the jungle near the hill, while the other said he had seen the tiger that morning, as he was going down to the stream to inspect his fish traps, on its way to another jungle.

I naturally concluded that the latter was right, as it was not very likely that there were two of them about, and that as it had been seen at 7 A.M. it would be scarcely coming back at that hour to the kill. Off we went therefore for another mile and a half.

I was rather sick about it, as I was told it was a three-gun jungle, very thick and required 24 stops ; so I did not expect much.

My ladder was placed in a little glade about ten yards wide, with the hill sloping towards me. After an hour's waiting I heard the beaters in the distance, and in another twenty minutes a slight cracking noise in front of me fell upon my straining ears. The faint cracking continued, and then close to the jungle's edge, and about twenty yards to my right front, I saw a striped skin ; but what part of the body it covered I was unable to guess. The next moment out came the tigress, for so it proved to be, and away she galloped across the open space. I immediately banged my right barrel at her, containing black powder and solid soft lead, the which I generally use for the first shot, so as to be in no doubt of the bullet lodging well in the body, and thereby effecting the smashing shock, of which one is not always sure will be the case if using a copper-tubed bullet. It apparently put her into a furious temper, for she went straight into the air with her arms and legs whirling, and then as she landed again on her feet turned sharp round and with head up and short coughing grunts charged straight at me. Waiting till she was a few yards away. I gave her a 360 grain cordite from the second barrel. This catching her in the neck she gave two complete somersaults and dropped stone dead not a foot from the bottom of the ladder. I was lucky to have floored her, as the ladder being rather a small one, my legs were only about seven feet from the ground, so she could have easily clawed me out of my perch. It was a grand sight while it lasted and one I shall not soon forget. On examining her I found that the soft lead had keyholed in some extraordinary way, and had made a hole as big as a duck's egg behind her shoulder. There was, however, no trace of the bullet when we cut the body up, and we found that the hole was not more than an inch deep. The bullet had, I am certain, not been deflected in any way, and the cause of the slight damage must only have been due to the powder going bad ; and I must confess that I had had these cartridges for three or four years. The smoke hanging, and probably some slight movement on my part would account for her attack, which in her very slightly wounded condition she was well able to make. There is no doubt that "experientia does it" and I shall certainly be more careful as to the state of my cartridges in future.

Some years ago when shooting on the Western Ghauts I had occasion to follow up a wounded tiger in some very thick cover. I was accompanied by my shikari and a plucky beater, the rest perching as usual in the trees. We had done about two hundred yards and were nearing the nullah in which the tiger was supposed to be lying up, when giving an ear-splitting roar he charged out. All I could see at the moment was the folige shaking ; but of the tiger I never caught a glimpse, as his heart probably failing him he slunk back again when he had got within a few yards of me. It was lucky he did so, as I found myself so caught up with thorns and creepers that I could hardly move hand or foot and had to wait till my two men—who had of course incontinently bolted—came back and released me. I had only given the tiger an hour to stiffen before tracking him up. So as he still seemed pretty lively I decided to give him another hour before again seeking a closer acquaintance. This interval soon passed : therefore retracing our steps we took up the tracks once more and came slowly to the water-hole in the nullah where he had been lying up, and from whence he had rushed out at us. As we thought he was still in the nullah, we did not go down into it but kept along the edge so as to spot him sooner. After proceeding about forty or fifty yards the coolie suddenly seizing my arm pointed across to the other side, where I saw the tiger just getting to his feet, and immediately knocked him over with a right and left. He struggled for a minute or two worrying his paw, which the poor brute I found afterwards had bitten through and through in his agony, and then lay still in death. He was a fine heavy beast measuring 9 feet 1 inch, which should have been more, as he had a very short tail.

It is seldom that the momentous fight for the Blue Riband of the Turf has, through spring running of the three-year-olds engaged, offered a more open or attractive puzzle to the student of Turf form than that which ended last Wednesday in a glorious victory for His Majesty. After Newbury we all said, "Here's the winner of the Derby," and the subsequent victory of Minoru in the Two Thousand Guineas would have consolidated that opinion but for the improvement claimed for several of the colts that finished behind him, and Sir Martin's smashing performance at Newmarket. Hence with several Richmonds in the field controversy ran high, and so far as being looked upon as a one-horse race, as has been the case on several previous occasions, the sporting community split into factions, and the wagering lists were eagerly scanned day by day.

Everybody was convinced that the struggle would be a momentous one, and everybody who could afford the time registered a vow to be there, and those who braved the elements and went down to Epsom will never forget the day as long as they live. The morning still grey, and sunless, suggested any sort of weather, and veiling his intentions the Clerk thereof sent such a pitiless downpour as suggested a repetition of the out-of-date sort of weather that prevailed when the two Rothschild horses, Sir Bevys and St. Amant, carried the blue and yellow to victory.

Such a scene of excitement has never been seen even when the Prince of Wales won with Persimmon and Diamond Jubilee. Losers and winners alike seemed to lose their heads. Hats were thrown recklessly skywards, the great crowd swarmed on to and filled the course, and everybody cheered till stopped by lack of breath. A vast sea of frantic people made a gigantic amphitheatre, the centre of which was the King's Box; and when His Majesty, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, came into the unsaddling paddock the uproar was deafening. How on earth His Majesty was to get near his horse was a problem few but the police could solve. He and the Prince stepped outside the gate and were swallowed up by a mob apparently anxious to eat them.

Such a victory as this of the King's—succeeding in what his sporting ancestors, George IV. and William IV., had failed to achieve, viz., the highest guerdon obtainable in the sport of kings—is unique in its history, and will do more to blend and harmonise the two great lines of pleasure and business than all the sermons thereanent can hope to destroy. Results:—

Brooklands, in the centre, showed the way to Louviers, on the right, Sir Martin, Diamond Stud, St. Ninian, Electric Boy, Bayardo, and Minoru on the inside, The Story and Valens, with William the Fourth whipping in, for a quarter of a mile, when Sir Martin dropped back, Diamond Stud then going on third in front of Electric Boy, Minoru, Phaleron, Valens, Bayardo, Strickland, and William the Fourth. Little change in these positions then occurred till commencing the descent to Tattenham Corner, where Strickland deprived Louviers of second place, Sir Martin being next, just clear of William the Fourth, Minoru, Phaleron, Diamond Stud, Bayardo, Valens, Electric Boy, and The Story. Half way down the hill Sir Martin fell, and nearly brought down ...lliam the Fourth, who, however, was quickly recovered, and when Brooklands and Strickland were beaten, William the Fourth followed Louviers and Minoru into the straight, with Valens, Bayardo, Electric Boy, and The Story most prominent of the others. A furlong from home Minoru, on the rails, drew level with Louviers, and obtaining a slight advantage in the next fifty yards the King's representative got the better of a sensational finish by a short head. Half a length away William the Fourth was third, and a further head away Valens was officially placed fourth. Time—2min. 42-2/5secs.

Society, getting ready for the almost State, tall-hatted function of the Oaks, was resting from its labours yesterday; the Royal Standard was again flying, but not over such a brilliant collection of Royalty as on Wednesday, and the King, refreshed from his previous hard day's task, came down with Prince Christian to take his racing as easily and comfortably as he does at Newmarket. Rain was spitting at intervals, and but few transient slices of sunshine cut across the Downs. The turf looked beautifully fresh and green, and Wednesday's plastic chalk had to a great extent dried up, the going and the downs generally feeling elastic to the tread. There was good sport of which I append results:—

BOXING.

THE ENGLISH CHAMPIONSHIP.—Sam Langford, "the spoiler of champions," wrested the laurels from another this week at the National Sporting Club, when he beat Ian Hague for the boxing championship of England in the fourth round. Incidentally, there was also a matter of £1,800 at stake. Mr. Eugene Corri was referee.

Langford is a negro, and in the ring he looked like a perfectly proportioned bronze statue. His weight was given as 11st. 4lbs., but to look at him it was difficult to believe it. His muscles stood out in relief on his arms and chest, and his legs seemed the very embodiment of strength and activity.

Hague, on the other hand, was a pound or two heavier than when he fought and beat Gunner Moir, but was still far from athletically fit. He carried a stomach which offered a fair and inviting target to the black, who played for it all the time, and finally won with a terrific righthand punch just above the belt.

The Yorkshireman went to the ground like a log, was counted out, and had to be carried to his corner by his seconds. All through the fight it was apparent that only a knock-out blow could avail Hague. The negro was always the cleverer, but Hague looked so strong and meted out enough punishment in the earlier stages to make the spectators hope that one of his heavy welts would tell.

When the men entered the ring the buzz of conversation died away. Lord Lonsdale shook hands with Langford, and the black man, with a broad grin, told the great English sportsman that he was "fit." Hague could not claim to be fit. It appeared, indeed, that he could not have fought twenty rounds with a punchingball, let alone a big man who could hit back.

BY APPOINTMENT TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

is ALL beef—prime beef in a readily digestible form.

That is why BOVRIL is so invigorating a beverage, so strengthening a food, why Cooks find it so useful, why Doctors and Nurses recommend it, why the sensible housewife will have nothing in place of it.

In the first round both men played for the body, but after Langford had planted his left on Hague's face, Hague landed his right twice on the black man's jaw. There was little in it at the end of the round.

Hague, after being twice hit in the face in the second round, got in a heavy right on Langford's face. "Good for Yorkshire," shouted someone in the gallery, but the applause was at once stopped. Many heavy blows were exchanged in the third round. Hague was, however, blowing and looking anxious at the end.

Langford upper-cut Hague at the start of the fourth round, and Hague cut the negro's lip with a counter. But less than two minutes had elapsed when Langford planted his deadly punch. "Oh!" escaped Hague as he fell to the floor, and the fight was over.

ATHLETICS.

Marathon Champion.—Fully 40,000 persons were at the Stadium on Saturday when, with Lord Lonsdale as referee, and other well-known sportsmen officiating in various capacities, the splendidly-managed professional athletic meeting, promoted by the Evening News, was brought to a successful issue.

Chief interest centred in the Marathon race, over the Olympic course from Windsor to the Stadium. A lap and about 250 yards of the track had to be covered by the competitors after entering the Stadium in order to complete the specified distance of twenty-six miles 586 yards.

The result of this race was a triumph for England, as (although J. Keywood, the most fancied Britisher, who finished third in last year's race, broke down at about fifteen miles, and the second favourite on the English side, in A. Crudgington, who last year finished fourth, trod on a stone, twisted his ankle, and had to retire) C. W. Gardiner, a member of a fine athletic family, several of his brothers being well-known amateur runners, came to the rescue, and, taking the lead soon after passing through Pinner, retained it to the end.

Upwards of twenty men completed the trying journey under three and a half hours. The names and times of the first six were as follows:—C. W. Gardiner (England), 2 hrs. 53mins. 23-1/5secs., 1; Hector Labry (France), 2 hrs. 56mins. 2secs., 2; F. Morris (England), 2 hrs. 58mins. 26-1/5secs., 3; A. Neveu (Belgium), 2 hrs. 58mins. 35secs., 4; J. Guntrip (England), 3hrs. 1min. 53-2/5secs., 5; Victor Snouck (France), 3hrs. 3mins. 53secs., 6; A. Johnson (England), 3hrs. 6mins. 10secs.

All the runners suffered from the oppressive heat and the dusty roads, but most of them finished in a fresher condition than might have been expected.

Most important of the events on the track was the fifteen miles race. This was won by F. Millot (France) in 1 hr. 32mins. 45-1/5secs. At ten miles, in 57mins. 15secs., A. Aldridge (England) led Millot by nearly a lap, but was shortly afterwards seized with sunstroke, and retired, leaving Millot to finish alone. E. Colas (Belgium) had given up after going about three and a half miles. The object of the race was to give the runners an opportunity of trying to beat J. Howitt's professional record of 1 hr. 22mins., established on 22nd March, 1852.

Other results were: One mile.—J. Stead (Woolwich), 65 yards start, 1; N. Duberdat (Paris), 10, 2. Won by 2 yards. Time—4mins. 27-1/5secs. 120 Yards Handicap.—T. Payne (Acton), 16 yards start, 1. Time—11-3/5secs. Quarter-Mile Obstacle Race.—S. Dyer, 1. Time—1min. 53secs. Tugs of War.—Heavy-weights, Woolwich Arsenal beat South Metropolitan Gas Company. Light weights, L.C.C. (New Cross) beat Maple and Co.

GOLF.

The Amateur International Match.—The annual match between teams of amateurs, which of late years has immediately preceded the championship, was played on the Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers' links at Muirfield. The result was another decisive victory for Scotland by 7 matches to 2. The contest was instituted in 1902, and Scotland have gained the victory in every one except that of 1903, when England proved successful by the odd game. Scores:—

Irish Amateur Championship.—The Irish amateur championship was concluded at Newcastle, county Down, when two young players, in Mr. E. F. Spiller, Malone, and Mr. H. Patterson, Dublin University, met in the final tie of thirty-six holes. At the end of eighteen holes Mr. Patterson, although he had played a better medal round than his opponent, stood 1 down. Mr. Spiller was round in 86 to Mr. Patterson's 84.

Play in the second round was again close. Mr. Patterson had secured a lead to 2 up at the turn, but the match was all square at the end of the round. Mr. Patterson, however, secured the next hole, and thus won at the 37th hole.

The Amateur Championship.—The weather was glorious at Muirfield on Monday, when play in the Amateur Golf Championship was begun. The forty-two matches in the first round were set for decision, and while Mr. E. A. Lassen, the holder, and Mr. C. A. There was a strong wind at Muirfield on Tuesday when play in the Amateur Golf Championship was resumed. The second and third rounds, consisting of ninety-six matches, were set for decision.

Of the earlier games that between Captain Cecil Hutchison and the Irish ex-champion, H. M. Cairnes, promised to be most interesting.

John Ball led Grant to the seventh, when the latter squared. Grant turned one up with 37 against 38. Ball was level again at the thirteenth, where his rival was bunkered. Ball was bunkered twice at the fourteenth, and Grant regained the lead with a 4. After a half in 3 at the fifteenth Ball again drew level at the sixteenth, where Grant was bunkered.

Grant won the seventeenth in 3, and the eighteenth being halved, Grant won the match by 1 up. Grant came home in 42 and Ball in 41.

Guy Campbell was considerably troubled by the wind, and at the sixth he was three down to G. Livingstone. Rain was now falling heavily, and the wind was blowing half a gale from the south.

Livingstone was putting better than Campbell, and stood 4 up at the turn. Livingstone lost the tenth, but won the eleventh, and he ultimately won by 5 and 3.

Cairnes did not play as well against the wind as Hutchison, who showed splendid form, and won by 5 and 4.

John Graham junior lost the first three holes to J. Patterson. The Hoylake crack was bunkered at the first and second, and he putted weakly at the third. His situation was now serious, but he secured the fourth in 5 and squared by winning the next two holes, at each of which Patterson was bunkered.

At the ninth hole Graham and Patterson were all square. They halved the tenth, but at the eleventh Patterson put two balls out of bounds and Graham took the lead.

Maxwell was one up on McGregor at the sixth. After this Maxwell went right away. He won the seventh by a long putt for a three, and secured the ninth by laying an approach two yards from the hole, and running down the putt for another three. Out in forty, Maxwell turned three up, and won the tenth, where McGregor was bunkered.

Maxwell played badly at the thirteenth and lost it, but secured the match by 4 and 3. Results:—

Mr. Taylor beat Mr. Crawford by 2 and 1.

Thirty-two players remained in the running when the tournament was resumed next day. The weather was bright, and there was scarcely a breath of wind. The heavy rain of the preceding day had improved the putting greens.

Hutchison was three up on Munn at the turn, the scores out being: Hutchison, 4 5 4 4 4 5 4 4 4—38; Munn, 3 6 5 4 4 5 4 5 5—41.

Hutchison was putting badly for the first four holes home, and was only two up at the thirteenth. He won the fifteenth, however, and secured the match by 3 and 2.

Graham was much better in his short game than Livingstone. He was five up at the seventh, but losing the next two holes was three up at the turn. At the tenth Graham was four up on Livingstone, but he lost two hoels, and was eventually dormy two, and finished the match on the next green.

The sixth and semi-final rounds of the Amateur Golf Championship were carried through at Muirfield, yesterday, and as the result Mr. Robert Maxwell, the champion of 1905, and Captain Cecil K. Hutchison, who has played for Scotland in the last half-dozen Internatoinal matches, are left to contest the final round of 36 holes to-day. The result will reach me too late for inclusion in these notes. It is worthy to note that this is the first time that a Scottish player has reached the last stage since Mr. James Robb won in 1906, and the first time that two Scotsmen have been in the final since the late Lieutenant F. G. Tait beat Mr. S. Mure Fergusson in 1898.

Rain was falling when play began, yesterday morning, [illegible] half an hour later it turned to a drenching downpour. It [illegible] a long time since the ante-penultimate round comprised e[illegible] such famous players as Mr. Robert Andrew Mr. Nor[illegible] Hunter, Captain Hutchison, Mr. Jack Graham, Mr. R[illegible] Maxwell, Mr. Leslie Balfour Melville, Mr. Bernard Da[illegible] and Mr. George Wilkie, and no fewer than three of the games went to the home hole, whilst that in which Maxwell beat Mr. Balfour Melville was only finished at sixteenth.

Sixth Round.

Captain C. K. Hutchison (Honourable Company) beat Mr. John Graham, junior (Royal Liverpool) by 1 up.

Mr. R. Andrew (Prestwick St. Nicholas) beat Mr. ... F. Hunter (Honourable Company) by 2 up.

Mr. Robert Maxwell (Tantallon) beat Mr. L. Balfour Melville (Royal and Ancient) by 3 and 2.

Mr. B. R. M. Darwin (Woking) beat Mr. George Wilkie (Leven Thistle) by 1 up.

Semi-Final.

Captain Hutchison beat Mr. R. Andrew by 3 and 2.
Mr. R. Maxwell beat Mr. Darwin by 3 and 2.

They were playing a game in which someone gives out the initial of some object in the room and the rest of them try to guess the object. So they tried to get the host's grey-haired father into it. But he held off.

"Sure," said he, "I'm a little bad in me spelling. I'd make no hand at such a game."

"Oh, come on," they pleaded; "you pick out some object, tell us the letter it begins with, and we'll guess it."

So the old man, cajoled, finally yielded.

"Well," said he, "then I will. The letter is 'F.'"

They tried and tried to guess what he meant. Knowing his weakness in spelling, his son picked "phonograph," thinking the old gentleman might imagine it began with an 'F"; but no, he was wrong.

Finally they all had to give it up, and appealed to him to tell the article.

He looked wise and said:

"Well, since you all give up what the thing is that begins with an 'F,' I tell yez. It's the fwhat-not!"

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so debilitating in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia."

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them increased from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., another patient, who was unable to take solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field"

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

THE BERESFORD TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS vs. PATIALA.—These teams put up the best game of the tournament when they met in the final on the 8th instant. The rain on Sunday and Monday laid the dust, and though the ground was somewhat heavy it was in better condition than during the earlier contests. The Commander-in-Chief's Staff were "At Home," and there was a big gathering of spectators, including the Viceregal and Lieutenant-Governor's parties. The game was hotly contested from start to finish, and those who expected Patiala to win must have been surprised at the brilliant play of the King's Dragoon Guards, the ultimate victors. Details :—

First Chukker.—The Dragoon Guards pressed at the start and registered a goal. On changing ends Patiala attacked but without success and up and down play closed the chukker.

Second Chukker.—The ball travelled all over the ground ; an excellent shot by Cheape was well stopped by Ganda Singh, who was kept busy defending.

Third Chukker.—The Dragoon Guards got away, but Hawkins' pony came down, causing play to be stopped : on resuming play was continued in the Patiala territory, but the Guards were unable to add to their score.

Fourth Chukker.—After a win by the Dragoons, Patiala got possession and Pretum Singh equalised. The Dragoon Guards rushed away on resuming and Hawkins, receiving from Cheape, put them ahead once more.

Fifth Chukker.—The Dragoon Guards pressed, but Patiala cleared and coming away put in several shots, all of which went wide. The Dragoons got possession and worked the ball down. Three unsuccessful shots were made and then Wickham scored.

Sixth Chukker.—Exciting play all over the field, Patiala in spite of desperate efforts were kept defending most of the time, but there was no futher score, and the game ended in a win for the King's Dragoon Guards by 3 goals to 1. Teams :—

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

CALCUTTA vs. GORDONS.—The second encounter between these teams attracted a large crowd of spectators to the Calcutta ground on the 9th instant. It was a good game, but both teams lost opportunities of scoring and the Gordons won by the only goal scored during the afternoon. Calcutta pressed at the start and forced a corner but Ross kicked over. Several shots were sent in subsequently but with no success and the Gordons getting possession rushed down and obtained a corner. Thomson took the kick and McKinnon headed the ball in. Play was rather slow till the interval, and no further advantage was gained. On resuming both goals were visited in turn but off-sides spoiled chances of scoring. Pooler and Longbottom gave Riach difficult shots to handle, but he cleared in good style. The game continued up and down till time was called, the Gordons winning as stated. Teams :—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal ; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs ; Finley, Harper, and Thomson, halves ; McKinnon, McNaughton, McKay, Foreman, and Gilchrist, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal ; Stuart and Wright, backs ; Pooler, O'Shea, and Ansell, halves ; Longbottom, Ross V. Sherman, Kingcome, and H. Sherman, forwards.

Referee :—Sergeant Curley.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—The return engagement between these teams was played on the Dalhousie ground on the 9th instant, the home team winning by a goal to nil. Play was fairly even in the first half, the visitors having, if anything, the better of the exchanges. The interval arrived without score, though opportunites had been missed by both sides. On crossing over, Skempton just failed to score by inches and then Margrett was called upon to save from Burnett and Montgomery and Prike. Later Montgomery got the ball and scored with a stinging shot. Play was well contested till the close, but there were no further scoring. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal ; Stevens and Quayl, backs ; Wright, Lees and Wilson, halves ; Prike, Burnett, Montgomery, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal ; Minet and Chandler, backs ; Cornish, Lawton and Allen, halves ; Davis, Skempton, Cody, Smart and McKay, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. H. C. Claridge.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALCUTTA.—The return match was played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday and ended in a draw. The rain before and during the game spoiled what would otherwise have been a very interesting struggle. The visitors had the best of the exchanges. They pressed hard at the start and H. Sherman scored a goal with a splendid shot. The Dals. then took up the attack and Stewart being penalised for hands in the penalty area Clark took the kick and equalised. The score at half time was one all. On changing ends the Calcutta forwards did most of the attacking, but their efforts in front of goal were weak and the home team's endeavours being equally unsuccessful the game ended in a draw as stated—one all. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal ; Clarke and Quaile, backs ; Wright, Lees and Wilson, halves ; Prike, Burnett, Montgomery, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

CALCUTTA F. C.—Morrison, goal ; Oliver and Stewart, backs ; Wright, O'Shea and Pooler, halves ; H. Sherman, Cowden, V. Sherman, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. P. Claridge.

CUSTOMS vs. GORDONS.—An exciting game was witnessed when these teams met on the Customs ground last Saturday. Play at the start was even, but the military settled down quickly and attacked hotly. Several shots were sent in but none met with any success till McKinnon got in a good run and centreing to McKay gave the latter his opportunity to score the first goal. The Gordons continued to have the bigger share of the game till the interval ; but on crossing over the Customs rallied and pressed vigorously, L. H. Smith equalising shortly after the start. The Gordons played all they knew to get the lead, but the Customs defence was sound and the game ended in a draw of one all. Teams :—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal ; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs ; Finlay, Harper and Thompson, halves ; McKinnon, McNaughton, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal ; McCready and Goldsmith, backs ; Fisher, L. A. Smith and Curry, halves ; D'Silva, Berkley, Galbrieth, L. H. Smith and Vears, forwards.

Referee :—Sergt. Curley.

RANGERS vs. Y.M.C.A.—These teams also played a draw of one all on the Rangers' ground on Saturday. The Young Men were the first to score, Haman putting through. The Rangers tried hard to get on terms, but the Y.M.C.A. backs played their usual steady game and there was no further score till the interval. On changing ends play continued very even till Lawton equalised. The Rangers looked like adding to their score but were unsuccessful and the game ended as stated. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal ; Minet and Chandler, backs ; Cornish, Cody and Allan, halves ; McKay, Skempton, Lawton, and Berkley, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Dr. Gray, goal ; Reynolds and Kendall, backs ; Gray, McNay and Maclaren, halves ; Rossetti, Haman, Gillan and Collingwood, forwards.

Referee :—Sergt. White.

K. S. L. I. vs. CALEDONIA.—Played on the Caledonia ground on Saturday the Dum Dum team winning by 4 goals to nil. Play was fairly level in the first half and the soldiers only scored once through Birch just before the interval. In the second period, however, the military had the best of the exchanges and Goodwin was three times beaten, twice by Birch and once by Bird. Teams :—

K. S. L.I.—Robertson, goal ; Busby and Humphreys, backs ; Hays, Roberts and Onion, halves ; Poole, Howell, Birch, Sanderson and Bird, forwards.

CALEDONIA.—Goodwin, goal ; Harding and Capper, backs ; Boilard, Currie and Laing, halves ; Apcar, Allen, Reynolds, Hudley and A. N. Other, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. H. C. Claridge.

GORDONS vs. K.S.L.I.—This postponed engagement was played at Dum Dum on Monday and very level game ending in a pointless draw. Both teams attacked in turn till the Shropshires forced a corner : Hayley headed the ball but it hit the crossbar and rebounding into play was secured by Gilchrist, who got away, and the Gordons took up the attack. Robinson saved shots from Gilchrist and McKay and then play was transferred, the Shropshires pressing till half time. The Gordons had slightly the better of the exchanges in the second period but neither team was able to score. Teams :—

K. S. L. I.—Robinson, goal ; Busby and Humphries backs ; Onions, Roberts, and Hayley, halves ; Poole, Howell, Birch, Bird, and Sanderson, forwards.

GORDONS.—Riach, goal ; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs ; Finlay, Harper, and Thompson, halves ; McKinnon, McDougal, McKay, Foreman, and Gilchrist, forwards.

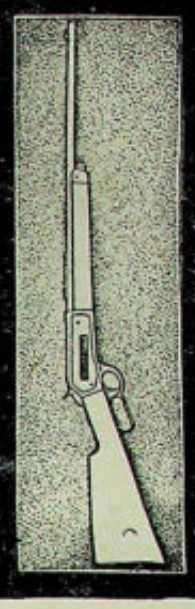
Referee :—Sergt. Curley (C. R. A.).



WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.

Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CALCUTTA lost whatever chance they may have had of coming out top of the League table when they went down before the Gordons last week. The winner's goal was an unsatisfactory sort, most people being of the opinion that the ball was through before the Gordons' right winger breasted it. At any rate the Referee made rather a faux pas of the affair. When the ball went over the line, prior to the goal incident, he first gave a goal kick, but seeing the linesman going through a flagwagging performance, changed his mind and gave a corner, from this corner the goal resulted and before pointing to the centre of the field the Referee distinctly pointed to the goal kick line. Thus there were four different decisions on two points. By giving a goal kick when the ball went out of play the Referee thereby showed that in his opinion that was the correct decision and when he altered that decision at the instance of the linesman and gave a corner kick he must have done so against his own conviction. It is the Referee's opinion that should have counted and not the linesman's and when this latter official is not neutral Referees should rely far more on their own judgment than they appear to do in Calcutta. We give this incident prominence as in several matches of late there has been undue reliance placed on linesmen by Referees and in the interest of the game it behoves these latter officials to follow the play as closely as possible and not leave important decisions such as corner kicks to their colleagues on the line.

A HUGE crowd turned out on Saturday despite the inclement weather to witness the Dalhousie-Calcutta return Leage match. Calcutta deserved to win and just of late have not been experiencing the best of luck. A very doubtful penalty kick enabled Dalhousie to share the points, which on play they should have lost. Cowden, a new C. F. C., recruit shaped well, although a bit slow, and Oliver played a sound game at back his kicking and head work being very good. The Calcutta forwards were more dangerous than the Dalhousie quintette and kept the Magpies defence very busy especially in the second half.

CUSTOMS came up to the scratch in great style and ran the Gordons to a draw, Fitzpatrick got a good deal of work in goal and during the last ten minutes had a very lively time fisting and kicking out. When they did get away the Customs forwards were always dangerous and have evidently discovered that it is easier to get goals by shooting hard and often than by fiddling about within ten yards of the goalkeeper in a vain endeavour to carry the ball into goal with them.

ON the next ground Caledonia were undergoing their usual drubbing, this time at the hands or rather feet of the Shropshires. After their display against the Customs last week the wooden-spoonist appeared to have evolved something like a team from the eleven men they turn out match after match but it was evidently merely a flash in the pan. Goodwin in goal had some excellent ball punching practise during the second half.

Y.M.C.A. are going strong and annexed another point on Saturday when they drew with the Rangers. There has been quite an epedemic of draws of late and the Young Men have participated in three no doubt with more satisfaction to themselves than to their opponents. The Rangers had quite an anxious time before making the scores level and it will behove several of our senior teams to gird up their loins when the Y.M.C.A. tackle them again.

ON Monday evening the Shropshires and Gordons played off the postponed league fixture at Dum-Dum the, result of the game being a draw no scoring. This match practically assures the league championship to the Gordons whose record however this season cannot compare with that of last year when they won every match they played. The remaining league games will not now possess much interest apart from the play itself although there are still several good matches to take place notably Calcutta-Customs, Calcutta-Shropshires, Gordons-Dalhousie and Dalhousie-Shropshires.

THE second position on the League table is still very open with Dalhousie first favourites and Calcutta, Rangers and Customs closely following them. The Calcutta-Customs match on Saturday will probably decide which of these two teams will remain in the running for second place.

THE Sarma, Minerva and Jubakusum Cup ties commence shortly and the various "B" teams are getting into form for the fray. Calcutta "B" will have a pretty strong team and have hopes of capturing at least one of the above trophies. There are any number of men to chose from and it is not at all improbable that the famous X. Y. Z. team of three seasons ago will be resuscitated, while the Rugby Ragsters may also toe the line.

TO-MORROW evening, we understand, the combined Jute and Gunny team will try conclusions with the Exchange Banks on the Calcutta ground when a skilful and finished struggle should be witnessed.

A FEATURE of the football season in South Africa and South America is the annual visit of some well known Home combination. The Corinthians have made several tours to these places and though there are doubtless difficulties in the way there is no reason why India should not receive a visit. The football season here commences just when the home season finishes and a little enterprise on the part of, say, the I.F.A. would make it possible for Indian enthusiasts to see a first rate home team like the Corinthians. There can be no question as to the popularity of such a visit and the filip it would give to the game out here would be tremendous.

MATCHES are supposed to commence at 5-30 P.M. but it is doubtful if even in one case this season the ball was kicked off sharp to time. It is usually 5-45 or in some cases 6 P.M. before the teams line up. One can of course quite understand the difficulty some men have in getting away from office, but probably if Referees were a bit stricter and refused to give more than five minutes grace to the laggards, teams for their own sakes would make every effort to be punctual. Habit has possibly not a little to do with the lax way in which the rule as to the time of the kick off is regarded.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. Y.M.C.A.—The Harwood League opened with this match on the Cooperage ground on Saturday. It was not a particularly brilliant game, The Young Men attacked throughout the first half but Holl in goal brought off some fine saves and the interval arrived with out score. On resuming the Y.M.C.A. continued to attack and scored twice, McMullen drawing first blood from a corner kick and Hotz netting the second goal. The Gymkhana were unable to get on terms and were thus beaten by two goals to nil

At the annual meeting of the League which was held at Green's Restaurant, Mr. Justice Russell was elected President the Hon. A. Hill-Trevor was elected Vice-President and Mr. F. Hogan was reappointed Honorary Secretary. The following clubs were selected to complete in the competition this season:—

The Bombay Gymkhana, the Commercial Gymkhana, the Parel Gymkhana, the Y.M.C.A., the Hornets, the Gloucesters, the Royal Artillery, the Rovers, and the Government Telegraphs.

Boxing.

THE SHIRHIND TOURNAMENT.

THE Fourth Annual Sirhind Boxing Tournament was held at Simla last week beginning on the 7th instant. No fewer than 41 corps entered this year as against 27 last year and the limitation of entries produced a superior standard of boxing. The Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who sent up a team from Shwebo, were rewarded for their sporting effort by carrying off the Regimental trophy. The team came with a big reputation which they gallantly upheld. They won the Bantam, Feather and Light Weights and representatives fought their way into the semi-finals of the heavy weights and boys' competition. The Royal Berkshires, who were runners up with 14 points, won the Middle Weight contest. The final in the Heavy Weights brought together Bombr. Wells of the 6th Mountain Battery and Pte. Clohessy of the Munster Fusiliers last year's winner. The latter, who was looked on as a winner, had the advantage of 33lb. in weight, but Wells was too quick for him and cleverly avoiding his opponents heavy right swings countered on his face and piling up the points won easily. He was awarded the prize, presented by H.E. the Viceroy, for the most scientific boxer in the tournament. The Officers Light Weight competition was won by Lieut. Murray of the Black Watch. Pte. Casey of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, who reached the semi-finals in the Light Weights but was disqualified for hitting his man when he was down, has challenged the winner of the Light Weights, Sergt. Stock, for Rs. 500 or any one in India at his weight for Rs. 1,000. The Sirhind Boxing Tournament have put down Rs. 100 for the fight should it come off. The following were the officials:—Referee: Major G. L. Hobbs, 1st Connaught Rangers. Judges: R. Sheephanks, Esq., I.C.S., Captain J. W. Ley. Superintendent of Gymnasia, N.A. Timkeeper: Captain T. Connell, R.H.A., and Honorary Secretary: Captain J. M. B. Wratislaw, 1st Connaught Rangers, to whom and to Qr-Mstr.-Sergt. Fryer and Sergt. Gaylor are due the undoubted success of the tournament. The prizes were distributed by General Kitson on Saturday evening. Details:—

The Story Teller.

RED SHALE.

JOHN STERNE had arrived at Rawalpindi, in the course of his long search for the man who had robbed his mother and sister.

On returning from a lengthy exploring and shooting expedition in East Africa, he had found the dear ones, left but two years before in prosperous circumstances in their pretty Sussex home, reduced to absolute beggary, and practically starving in a miserable London lodging. Patiently he had gathered the whole of the facts into a complete narrative; had learnt how that clever adventurer de Ruel had gradually established himself in Mrs. Sterne's confidence, until everything was in his hands, and then one day had vanished leaving the too trusting women utterly destitute.

The skilled and patient hunter of beasts had now turned his peculiar talents to the pursuit of man.

After a year devoted to the quest, he had at length marked down de Ruel into Ladak, that bleak land separated by high mountain ranges from the valley of Kashmir.

Here then was Sterne at Rawalpindi railway station, watching his two battered portmanteaus being strapped on to the tonga.

Though he had naturally taken pains to conceal his name, and cloak the object of his visit to Kashmir, yet the explorer's bold hawk face, keen grey eyes, and tall wiry figure made him a noticeable object.

While standing outside the station his habitual watchfulness caused him to note that a certain insignificant looking native clerk seemed to be much interested in both the portmanteaus and their owner.

"I shall not be unexpected," said Sterne to himself grimly "but no warnings will prevent my catching de Ruel now."

Baggage secure, he swung himself into the tonga, and away went the half broken ponies at a gallop, on the first stage of the long drive into Kashmir.

If you climb the hills above Maulbeck and look North, you will see vividly coloured shale slopes going up from the distant valleys.

Among the purples, blues, and yellows you will note a single patch of rose red, with near it a splodge of darker colour, the shadow of a grim precipice.

Here on a shelf, far above the valley, was an ancient Buddhist dwelling, which de Ruel had converted into a comfortable house.

There were four rooms, two built of bricks and beams on the ledge itself, and the two others hollowed out of the living rock.

The windows of these chambers looked out over the glen below, down which tinkled a clear stream, between rows of poplars and willows.

On either side the fields showed the delicate green of springing corn.

A path crossed the little river by a bridge of poplar poles, and led straight to a rock stair cut in the face of the cliff, the only means by which de Ruel's stronghold could be reached.

Drawn up to one of the rock windows, in the larger of the excavated rooms, was a camp bed, and on this the adventurer himself lay dying. An open telegram was in his wasted hand, and though from the terrible emaciation and grey tint of his face, it was evident that death must be very near, de Ruel was laughing over the contents of the wire with the keenest enjoyment.

"Come here Wanla" he giggled feebly to his daughter "See here is Sterne on my track at last, simply thirsting for my blood. The money is all gone, and he will find nothing but a worn out corpse to wreak his vengeance on. My exit from the world would be the crowning practical joke of my career."

And de Ruel's shrunken frame quivered in an extasy of mirth.

Wanla stood tall and slim, looking down at her father: this sneering cynical wreck, whose last moments were devoted to ribald hilarity over this his final coup; dying just a few days before the avenger could arrive. During de Ruel's last illness he had made no secret of his numerous iniquities, and nothing seemed to give him more pleasure than recalling the clever way in which he had robbed the widow and daughter, and then successfully dodged the pursuing son.

"As I told you" he went on to Wanla "There is no money now for Sterne to get back; so the only thing is for you to offer yourself to him when he arrives, as an equivalent for the lost cash. How many thousands was it? I'm sure I forget now: anyhow charming as you are, I fear he may think the exchange an exceedingly poor one."

And the light bed quivered again in response to his unnatural mirth.

"If you feel any delicacy over the matter, I might struggle to make a will, and bequeath you in due form to Sterne, as my sole and only possession.

Two days later, at sunrise de Ruel died, and as though to complete the irony of the situation, Sterne had crossed the bridge at noon the same day, and sat looking up at the house of his enemy from the back of his Zanskar pony.

News travel fast in the East, and so he knew of de Ruel's death before actually reaching the house of the Red Shale. So now all possibility of a just revenge being over, there remained but to see if any of the stolen money could be got back.

Sterne climbed the rocky stair, and met de Ruel's daughter on the platform at the top.

Sullen resentment at the fashion in which he had been foiled at the very last, had succeeded the cruel hunting ardour of the past days, and Sterne's determined face had an expression of such chained ferocity that Wanla, brave though she naturally was, became overcome with terror at the sight of him.

On Sterne, this pale shrinking child, with appeal plainly written in her frightened eyes, had an instantly quieting effect, shaming his savage mood into pity. He had come to seek a tiger in its lair, and had found a poor little terrified gazelle.

The change in his face gave Wanla a little courage. Confused miserable and overwrought, her whole mind was obsessed by her father's last devilish injunction. She must give herself to Sterne to do with her what he willed, as the one and only thing left in compensation for the robbed thousands.

"Will you come into this room: I have something I must tell you." Sterne followed her into the rock room, and saw there the camp bed still standing by the window. The angular outline of the body showed through a sheet, which had been drawn completely over it.

He stepped forward, and gently drawing back the covering from the dead face, looked down at the waxen features for a moment. Then he drew the sheet up again, and looking at Wanla, said quietly "So here ends our quarrel.

And then what the girl had been striving to say, suddenly burst forth in a torrent.

"Mr. Sterne, I want to tell you. There is no money left: it is all gone and there is only myself. I am worth very little, nothing compared to all that money he took from you. Oh but I want to pay you what I can. You can take me, make me your servant, your slave. Beat me or kill me if you want to. Oh" and rushing forward impulsively, she clung to his arm. "I will devote my whole life to atoning for this awful wrong. I can work very well, and cook and sew. I will do all your servants' work and save you the money for them."

She shuddered violently, and fell on her knees, still clinging to the sleeve of Sterne's jacket.

The sight of the dead man, and the daughter's abasement and despair had softened the hunter's bitter heart. very gently he raised Wanla to her feet, supporting her with his arm.

"My poor child, did you think I meant to visit your father's iniquities on your innocent head?"

The gentle tones, and kind eyes completely overcame desolate little Wanla; she broke into a passion of weeping, and as Sterne stroked her hair, and strove in his rough simple way to soothe her, the girl unconsciously clung to him, and sobbed her heart out against his coarse puttoo jacket.

Eventually Wanla was persuaded to drink a small nip of whiskey from his flask, and lie down.

Then Sterne took charge of the rock house, and the two frightened Ladaki servants, and had soon arranged for de Ruel's burial.

The body was rolled up in a blanket, and carried to a field about half a mile away, where Sterne's coolies had dug a fairly deep grave.

Here, after the hunter had said a short prayer, they buried de Ruel, and rolled a great agglomerate rock over the grave as a tombstone. Also Sterne had the rock room swept out and garnished, and so differently arranged, that when Wanla entered it the next morning there was nothing to remind her of the gloomy past.

Sterne took her down to breakfast in his tent, which he had had pitched in the valley below, and the appetising meal of tinned delicacies served under the raised fly of the 80lbs. tent, started a chain of new and pleasanter associations in the girl's mind.

"And now Miss de Ruel we have got to think of your future, and I believe the best thing will be for us to go together through all your father's papers, and see just how matters stand."

Wanla assented. In the rock house was a writing bureau with locked drawers, and having found the keys, all the papers were collected on to a table; nor did Sterne forget that a substantial piece of furniture like the one de Ruel had used, would probably possess a secret recess. This was soon found, and in it a fat packet tied up with tape.

A very short examination sufficed to show that not only were de Ruel's dying statements, that he was a pauper, a deliberate lie, but that he possessed even more money than the whole amount looted from Mrs. Sterne. Wanla was absolutely delighted; her pale face became tinged with colour, and her eyes sparkled.

"Oh Mr. Sterne cannot you imagine how thankful I am that it will be possible to return everything to your mother and sister, after all?" "But if you give it all back Miss de Ruel, you will be very poor." "Oh but they must take it back, every penny, and there ought to be interest as well for those three years. I am young and can work. Perhaps you will help me to find something I can do for a living. You cannot think how happy this discovery has made me. And the girl looked at him, with transfigured radiant face, and brilliant eyes.

And then all at once it came to the man's mind what a beautiful and desirable creature his enemy's daughter was. Her keen anxiety to atone for the wrong that had been done, showed a disposition as sweet and true as her face. Their isolation in this distant region; the scene of yesterday, and the magnitude of the offer which the girl had then made him; the certainty that she would pass out of his life directly they got back to Kashmir, and the extraordinarily keen regret that this should be so, which now obsessed him . . . . all these ideas crowded through his brain and heart in bewildering turmoil. The man's strong simple nature was being gripped by elemental feelings of surprising intensity.

"And what of me, Wanla? Yesterday you were to have been my companion and friend; to-day this money has deprived me of you for ever."

The girl gazed at him directly and fearlessly, but with amazement written in her dark eyes. "What do I matter to you? I am simply your enemy's daughter: but if you want me to serve you, I will not go back on my word. Besides the actual taking of the money, my father inflicted such misery on your mother and sister, that I will pay for it in any way you think just."

Sterne thought rapidly; he must have some plan to keep Wanla near him for a time. His mind was too confused by the intensity of these new feelings, this sudden sense of injury and loss at the thought of the offer of yesterday being withdrawn, to realsie what it all meant. It did not occur to him to ask himself if he really wanted the girl sufficiently, to choose the simple plan of marrying her.

There was just a big confused feeling in his heart that he could not possibly let her go away from him for a time.

Then came clearer thoughts of what to do. In any case they would have to march alone for many days, and trekking through Ladak with a man, was not calculated to do a young lady's reputation much good.

A good plan would be to keep off the beaten track as much as possible, and pass themselves off as an American and his sister.

At last he spoke.

"I want you to be my secretary, until I can find something better for you to take up. Say for six months. Also I would like very much to wander about a bit and see Kashmir, now I am here, instead of going straight back to India. As you have no chaperon would you mind my calling you my sister, and giving out that we are two Americans touring about the world. It will stop any people we may chance to come across from talking, for nobody knows who I am nor my real name." Wanla, as has been pointed out still felt in debt to this man, in spite of the fact that the actual money was to be paid back.

The cancelling of her obligation would, it seemed, be made easy and pleasant; for what girl who had been mewed up in a desert alone with a father like hers, would not welcome the thought of months of careless wandering through the loveliest country in the world?

Both eyes and lips together spoke a glad assent. "And now please Mr. Sterne," she added "will you be so kind as to tell me my name." "For the present" he answered laughing "you are Miss Wanla Hornaday, and I am Mr. John Hornaday, of Chicago, and we are going around to see the world."

Over a month had passed away. The scene is transferred from the grey bleakness of Ladak, to Alsa, on the shore of the Woolar lake, in Kashmir. The idyllic beauty of this fair land, and feelings for each other which neither worried to enquire into, made man and maid tranquilly content.

They were in the land of the lotus: life was a sunny dream, drifting as lazily along as the doonghas on the placid surface of the lake.

De Ruel buried in that far off glen, and the grim rock dwelling of the Red Shale, seemed thousands of years away in the dim past.

They landed at Alsa, and marched a few miles up to Nagmarg; and there in a glade of the sweet scented pine forest set up their tents. A great walnut tree stood apart in the open, and under this was pitched the canvas dining room; while a little apart, at the edge of the pines, stood the 80-pounder sleeping tents.

Two days after their arrival at Nagmarg, a man came in to say that in a glen, but a short mile off, an immense black bear had killed a cow. At once Sterne decided to sit up at the place that night, on the chance of the animal returning to the kill.

Wanla insisted on going too. So just before dark the two settled themselves on a bed of pine needles, a few yards from the carcase of the cow. Sterne sat rather to the front, and Wanla a little behind and on his left.

They had waited patiently for nearly two hours, and the faint moon had gone, when suddenly their ears caught a slight rustle among the needles, and then a great formless blackness seemed all at once to occupy the space in front of them, which had previously looked grey. Sterne felt for aim with his Paradox, and touched the trigger. A tongue of flame leapt out into the gloom, and the crash of the report burst the stillness of the silent forest.

A roar of pain, a tumultuous rush, and a mountain of coarse hair swept along Sterne's left shoulder. A thud and a sob came from behind, and the scuffling rush of the beast died swiftly away into the woods. "Wanla," he cried but there was no answer.

With trembling figures Sterne lit the lantern he had brought to light them home. In the faint circle of light lay a huddled mass of clothes, half-buried among the pine needles. Sterne gathered her up in a reclining position against him. Her face was white, and her eyes closed.

A passing blow from the iron-clad paw had carried half the front off her puttoo jacket: the white cotton blouse beneath was torn over the heart and red with blood.

Even now Sterne cannot recall without shuddering, those moments of agony, when he was seeking by the feeble light of the lamp the extent of Wanla's injuries.

Two long tears across the upper part of the chest, ugly as they looked made the man utter a deep "Thank God," of relief and gratitude. He was too old a hunter not to have a fair knowledge of rough surgery, and after a short examination he assured himself with untold relief, that the wounds were superficial ones, and the girl's insensibility proceeded from the shock and violence of the grazing blow.

Tenderly he arranged Wanla in a comfortable position on the bed of needles, and producing a flask, moistened her lips with a little whiskey. The girl came to herself with a sigh.

"Oh where am I? Where are you John? Don't leave me."

The man's heart leapt to think that her very first call on coming back from the void, was for himself.

"My own sweetheart, I am with you. I will never leave you any more my darling." He whispered to her passionately.

He made her take a big gulp of whiskey and water, and kissing her cheek, said "Now Wanla, I am going first to bathe your scratches, and make a pad to stop their bleeding, and then I am going to carry you home."

He wetted his handkerchief in a small runlet, which happened luckily to be hard by, and washed the blood, and dirt from the wounds: then he made a big wet compress from a napkin which had held their sandwiches, and fastened in position by tying her torn jacket over with string.

In most peoples' lives there have been moments of inexpressible sweetness which can never be forgotten.

During that slow walk down the hill to the tents, two human hearts touched the summit of earthly bliss.

Wanla nestled against the broad chest of her great simple hunter, her right arm curled round his neck, and her left hand holding the lantern to illumine the way. That night it had come to Sterne with startling suddenness, that the slender child he now carried against his heart, represented everything in existence for him.

Slowly he picked his way with that precious burden down the slope: once the track was so rough with pointed rocks, that he had to take step by step with extreme caution, then came a broad incline of smooth grass, right down to the camp fire which twinkled in the distance.

As they entered on the smooth, John stopped and moved Wanla in his arms until he could reach her lips with his own.

PRODGERS: "Look here, Dadger, I want to give you a bit of good advice."

Dadger: "Too late, old man, too late—I'm married!"

ONE of the stories told by Sir Frederick Bridge is in connection with the Wesleyan Hymn Book. It is a "hit" at the Editorial Committee. He says it was a very, "artful" Committee. They put before him a tune which they claimed to be of Handelian derivation. Sir Frederick thought otherwise. In fact, he sent it back with the caustic comment that Handel would turn in his grave every time it was sung. But the Committee would not be denied, for they submitted it once more, with the allurement that if he would only include it a pianissimo should be marked against it, so as not to disturb Handel."

AT a London music-hall is being exhibited a man made of wood and wax who can move his head and limbs and "carry on an intelligent conversation." Except for the fact that he can carry on an intelligent conversation, he does not seem any improvement on the ordinary "dancing man."

THE KING'S BODYGUARD.

"I AM very proud to see you here to-day, and I feel sure that this anniversary will serve to remind you all of the duty which you owe to your Sovereign and country, and which you and your predecessors have so conspicuously rendered in the past."

In these words His Majesty the King concluded a brief address at Buckingham Palace to the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, otherwise known as the King's Bodyguard, on the memorable occasion of the 400th anniversary of the raising of the Corps. The record of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, which, with the exception of the Yeomen of the Guard, is the oldest military organisation in England, is indeed a proud one and forms an inspiring chapter in the history of the country.

From the time of its raising by King Henry VIII. in 1509 the Corps has ever served Sovereign and country with loyalty and devotion, and in its long chronicles there occurs but one name with which the charge of treason is associated. The one exception is of importance. The Earl of Northumberland who was appointed to the captaincy of the Corps by James II., admitted a cousin, Thomas Percy, to the membership. Percy was prominent in the scheme for the assassination of James which afterwards developed into the Gunpowder Plot, and was in fact the tenant of the house from which the famous tunnel was dug beneath the houses of Parliament. Percy ultimately died sword in hand, at Holbech Manor, with Catesby, and others of his fellow conspirators. The wrath of the King fell on the Earl of Northumberland, who, as captain, was responsible that no traitors were numbered in the ranks of the Guard. Hailed before the Star Chamber, Northumberland was tried for permitting in its ranks a "Jesuitical and turbulent Papist," and was sentenced to be deprived of all his offices, to imprisonment for life, and to a fine of £30,000.

Henry VIII. styled his new bodyguard "Speres" or "Men of Arms," yet there is very little doubt that they bore the name of "Gentlemen Pensioners" from a very early period of their history. The name "Pensioners" suggests that Henry drew his inspiration from the French King's Court, where for the previous quarter of a century a similar well-born guard had attended the Sovereign's person. At its first enrolment Henry's Corps mustered fifty strong, and this continued to be its number, certainly until the reign of Charles II., one of whose last acts, by-the-by, was to review the Corps on Putney Heath on 1st October 1684. At the present time the Corps consists of forty, exclusive of the Captain, the Lieutenant, the Standard-Bearer, and the Clerk of the Cheque and Adjutant.

History tells us that this "Nearest Guard," as it has been termed, "in closest personal attendance upon the Sovereign," accompanied Henry VIII. in his French wars, in which it greatly distinguished itself, the Lieutenant, Sir John Peachey, being created a Knight-banneret for his gallantry at the Battle of the Spurs in 1515. They were present, too, at the Field of the Cloth of Gold. The Speres shewed their quality in the reign of Mary. Wyatt's sturdy Kentish yeomen serged through London, carrying all before them, even up to the walls of the Palace of Whitehall. The Speres were assembled within, in charge of the Royal Person, but they begged that the gates of the courtyard might be thrown open and that a sally might be made. After some hesitation on Mary's part, permission was granted, and, writes Colonel H. A. Fletcher, the present Clerk of the Cheque, and Adjutant of the Bodyguard, "with a joyous shout the band rushed forth, and sword in hand fell on the insurgents. The peasants of Kent were no match for fifty gentlemen trained to arms from their youth up and expert with their weapons, and all what our old friend Alan Breck would call 'bonnie fighters.' The precincts of the palace were rapidly cleared of the enemy, and the Speres marched to and fro in the open space before the walls, the Queen from the window above acknowledging their loyal salutes."

Robert Carey, a member of the Corps, had the distinction of conveying to James I. the news of his accession to the Throne. Carey was brother of Lady Scrope, lady in waiting to Queen Elizabeth, and of the Captain of the Speres. When good Queen Bess lay a-dying at Richmond all avenues from the Palace were strictly guarded by the Cecil faction; yet when all was over, Lady Scrope managed to convey the news to Carey, who stood concealed below the windows. Within a few minutes of the Queen's death Carey, we are told, was spurring hard up the North Road to Edinburgh where James was anxiously waiting. The way was long—400 miles—the roads were heavy with winter rains, and the post horses none of the best; but all through the day the gallant horseman galloped north and all through the night the sleepy echoes of the northern villages awoke to the thunder of his hoofs. The Queen died on the morning of 24th March; that night Carey was at Doncaster, 155 miles away, and on the afternoon of the 26th, he dropped on his knee before King James, hailed him King of England, and handed him a letter from his brother the Captain of the Speres, beseeching his favour for the Corps. It was a gallant ride and well the King appreciated it. The messenger galloped into Scotland plain Robert Carey. A few days later he crossed the border again in his new Sovereign's train Baron Carey of Lapington.

The Corps saw much fighting throughout the Civil War, and on one occasion secured the safety of King Charles I., though at the cost of the Royal Standard. When George III. came to the Throne the Corps was composed almost exclusively of civilians untrained in the use of arms. William IV., however, restored its purely, military character, so that henceforth only officers who had held commissions in the Army or Marines should be eligible for admission. This holds good at the present day. The last occasion when the Corps was called to arms was in 1848 when London was scared by the threatened march of the Chartists to Westminster. The Corps was then mustered, muskets were served out, and to it was entrusted the garrisoning of St. James's Palace. Since then the duties of the Gentlemen-at-Arms have been of a purely peaceful nature. Its members form the immediate personal bodyguard at the Sovereign on all State occasions. But peaceful as their duties are the present members of the Corps are distinguished soldiers. Everyone including the present Captain, Lord Denman, and that pathetic figure Captain E. B. B. Towse of the Gordon Highlanders—the brave man who nine years ago lost the sight of both eyes and won the Victoria Cross in a skirmish with the Boers at Thaba Mountain—has served as a commissioned officer in the ranks of the regular forces, all but two having held field rank. Everyone has seen active service in the field, and all wear at least four or five decorations.

THE FIRST TEST MATCH.

The first of the test matches between England and Australia, which was decided at Edgbaston, Birmingham, has resulted in a decisive win for the Mother Country, the margin in favour of England being ten wickets.

The game which owing to wet weather was practically confined to two days experienced some startling vicissitudes before the end was reached, and perhaps the most dramatic stage was on the last day of the match while the Colonials were at the wicket setting England its final task.

For instance, half an hour before noon on the final day the Cornstalks were fifty runs on with eight wickets still to fall. Gregory, the sturdy little batsmen, who had been in many a similar tight corner, had at this stage apparently played himself in, and appeared set along with Ransford, who also was showing good form; in fact, all likelihood of an easy victory for the home side had now melted away.

But what happened? The vagaries of the game showed themselves, and in the course of the next thirty minutes England was once again well on the road to victory. The turning point came thus: Gregory skied the ball, which Thompson, after a desperate dash from mid-on to short leg, succeeded in capturing.

This was one of the many brilliant pieces of fielding which characterized the field work of England. It was a cleverly negotiated catch—one of the smartest of the game, and it practically sealed the fate of the visitors. But even at this stage had the Australians displayed the enterprise expected from them, the end of the innings appeared a long way off, and there existed no great reason why the Australians should not, at any rate, have made themselves practically safe from defeat.

Fortunately, however, for England, the bowling of Blythe and Hirst was never collared. Had such a misfortune happened it would be hard to predict what would have taken place. What really did happen, however, was this: At 11-30 A.M. the score stood at 97 for 2 wickets; twenty-five minutes later seven men were out for 106, and by 12-30 the innings was finished off for 121, leaving England 105 to get to win.

How Hobbs and Fry—the Surrey batsman more particularly—obtained these runs without the loss of a wicket will be seen lower down.

In the first innings both these famous batsmen had been dismissed with their first balls. It was a daring experiment on the part of the England captain to send this couple of first failures in to start the innings, but Mr. McLaren, the prince of captains, is nothing if not venturesome, and the result justified his good judgment. Still, Fry could not conceal his nervous anxiety, more especially after several very narrow escapes early on. He was less enterprising and venturesome than his partner, who boldly faced the attacks from the very first over. The Surrey "pro" found his game straight away, and his crisp and neat batting fairly nonplussed the Australian bowlers. Throughout his innings Hobbs' cricket was masterly, standing out distinct and stylish, and though Fry scored the winning hit, England's easy victory came off the bat of Hobbs.

The result of the game must deal a damaging blow to the reputation of the Australians, who thus were beaten for the third time in four matches.

With the exception of Hobbs and Fry in their last effort, the batting on neither side reached the excellence expected, even taking into consideration the state of the wicket. The Australians' two innings only aggregated 225. They might be able to heap up runs on fast pitches, but their form at Egdbaston shows that on slow wickets they are much behind the English batsmen; while their bowling when the ground is soft leaves much to be desired. The result of the game rested primarily with the bowlers, and too much praise cannot be given to Blythe and Hirst, upon whom tremendous responsibility rested. Throughout they put plenty of virility into their work, while the result proves their skill.

They took the whole twenty wickets between them, their record in the second innings of the Australians being identical,—five for 58 runs; while altogether Blythe took eleven and Hirst nine, each man getting his wickets at an average of less than ten runs apiece.

The first of the test matches of 1909 will form a memorable chapter in the history of cricket. There are four others to play. England has started well. Unquestionably a good start is half the battle, and that being so the Mother Country has gone a long way to securing again a reversion of those "ashes."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE entries for the Tollygunge Gymkhana Races next Saturday are on the whole quite good, the only poor field being in the Steeplechase for which there are only likely to be three starters. The Invitation Stakes ought to be a particularly interesting race and it is to be hoped that most of them will accept the handicaps which we publish elsewhere.

THE new hurdles on the race course have already seen a good deal of schooling and it is interesting to note that though some consider them formidable there was not a single horse or pony touched one of them on Tuesday morning. Among those that went singly were Peter (Mr. Evers), Electric Light (Mr. Wallace Jones), Blazes (Mr. Evers), Boolara (Mr. Rothschild). Electric Light refused the first hurdle the first time of asking but was persuaded over it and by the time he got to the third obstacle was jumping in good style. Peter was not jumping quite so freely as at his last school and seems to need riding at his fences. Blazes put up a good performance and looks to have improved a good deal. Bridge Knight (W. Alford) and Narwannah (W. Bloss) went over three in company. Bridge Knight cleared all the fences but got right under them and jumped very clumsily losing a lot of ground. He seems a very uncertain sort of beast, jumping fairly well one day and really badly the next, but may possibly go much better in a race.

THERE was also some schooling going on over the Tollygunge Club hurdles on Tuesday. These latter are of much the same pattern as the new ones in Calcutta but considerably stiffer, being if anything a little higher and bound with stout bars of timber about 3 inches thick, a sort of obstacle which does not yield much when hit. Lionel, Ruling Passion, Mulison and Amazon were the animals out and the first named showed up well, taking his fences very cleanly.

THERE do not seem to be quite so many horses in training for the Monsoons this season as there were last year, but no doubt more will turn up when the time comes.

THE following list of present probable starters in the different classes will no doubt be of interest to our readers and we shall shortly be publishing complete lists of trainers' lots as usual. In the lists that follow the horses and ponies included in the Open Jump Class will no doubt also start for some of the flat races :—

OPEN FLAT RACES.—Horses—Elpis, Charles, Berthier, Silphoe, Lefterin, Jackeroo, Jack, Sheppard, Yulgibar, Merry Elsie, Dartmoor, Abet, Regina, Dunsinane, Comprimil, Amyas, Frank, Sir Ulric, Blix, Springlock, Good Friday, Camira, Colina, Sweet Marie, Northwood, Haloya, London, Jacchus, Harene, Pressy, Black Paint, Bundah, Ocean Bride, Morsel. Ponies—Primrose, Sweet Genevieve, High Court, Piccaninny, First Bell, Matin Bell, Fabiana, Coin II, Amiable, Gladsome, Dinghy.

OPEN HURDLE RACES,—Horses—Eruption, Foy, Mulison, Bridge Knight, Betrayer, Pallas, Mataura, Narwanah, Qeen of Gems, Mercedes, Ynyslas. Ponies—Pineal, Amazon, Solace, Moira, Branga. Amateur Class.—Horses—Boolara, Maisonette, Master John, Prince Moorfield, Lord Chester, Fingall, Moachim Myolene, Lily, Spinnet, Delusion, Beaumaris, Electric Light, Au Revoir, Peter, Leading Lady, Sir Ulric, Lefterin, Dalgai. Ponies—Baddock, Lionel, Legacy, Ziska, Emerald, Reha, Pink Un, Loch Lily, Chas, Minstrel Boy, Killarney, Blazes, Rulling Passion, Marconi, Violet, Daisy Girl, Satin Bean, Meprise and Ungava.

WE have included Sir Ulric and Lefterin both in the Amateur Class and the Open Flat Class, as they will probably start in the Amateur 6-furlong Flat Race on the first day and after that run in the open flat events, as we do not think either of them will be put over hurdles. Creel, who would have figured probably in the Open Hurdle Races, has been purchased by Mr. Holmes on behalf of a racing man in Colombo and has already been despatched to the Isle of Spices. It will be noticed that there are only five ponies in the Open Class for Hurdle Races and of these it is very doubful whether Pineal will stand jumping so that unless they are reinforced by some of the Amateur Class ponies the Open Pony Race at the third meeting is likely to fall through. A way out of the difficulty would be to alter the terms of the race and reduce the stakes to Rs. 500 and make it open to both G. R's or professionals, as was done last year: if the first prize remains Rs. 1,000 we are doubtful whether any of the amateur lot would run for fear that by winning they would be taken out of their class. A race for which both classes of ponies could run would be likely to fill very well and would probably be able to be divided as was done last year, which would greatly simplify the task of handicapping. It will also be noticed that the amateur class is pretty strong in numbers, there being no less than 19 horses and 18 ponies already "in sight" and no doubt more to come.

WE hear that there are no less than 95 horses in the Hymettus due here shortly, including lots brought by W. Griffifths, R. Bence among others. Several of the Australian jockeys are expected by her. W. Southall is the only arrival so far and he has been out riding work for Alford the last few mornings.

WE regret to learn that Mr. Claude Ismay has not yet recovered from the accident he sustained at polo recently. He is going home immediately to undergo an operation which, it is hoped, will effect a complete cure.

As will be seen from the report in our Turf columns the Maharaja's Cup at the Mysore meeting was won by Retort after a splendid finish with Squire Alfred. We offer our congratulations to Mr. Holmes, who has had none too good luck with the mare since she landed in India.

FRANK WOOTTON the young Australian jockey, who has met with such success in the saddle in England, was thrown and kicked in the head while riding Arranmore in the High Weight Handicap at Ascot on Friday. Later reports pronounce him to be making good progress, but it is probable that it will be some time before he is fit to ride again. This is a piece of ill luck, for he was an easy first in the riding averages when the last mail left, having won 47 times, his nearest competitors being Maher 24, C. Trigg 24 and G. McCall 21. Since these results were published he has ridden the winner of the Ascot Stakes and very likely some others.

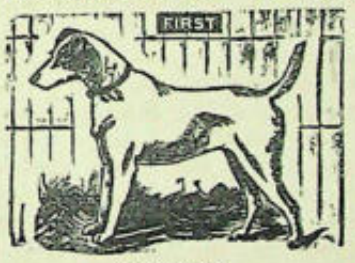
COMMENTING on the first test match (scores of which will be found in our weekly review of English sport) Cricket writes :—

The first Test match of 1909 has passed into history and has revealed two weaknesses on the part of the Australians—the inability of their bowlers to take full advantage of a wicket affected by the weather, and their lack of a batsman of the McDonnell type to force run-getting on a slow pitch. That their batsmen have still a great deal to learn when called upon to play under certain conditions is evident from the fact that on Friday the side lost eight wickets for 52 runs in an hour and a half and on the following day eight for 54 in a little over an hour.

Although they were dismissed in their first innings for 74, and were 47 runs behind when the game was half over, they did so well in the early part of the third morning that at one time they were actually 50 runs on with eight wickets in hand. At that point they had little the worst of the game: in fact a full afternoon's cricket and a good finish seemed in prospect. But a well-judged catch by Thompson running from mid-on, which got rid of Gregory, marked the commencement of a dramatic change in the fortunes of the game. The score had been taken to 99 with only two men out, but, despite some successful hitting at the close by O'Connor and Whitty, the innings closed for 151. The Englishmen certainly bowled and fielded admirably, but the collapse, which was complete, was due very largely indeed to weak batting.

Even then England were left with 105 to win. It was generally thought that the runs would be made for the loss of three or four, perhaps even five, wickets, but nobody could have been prepared for what took place. It is now a matter of history that Hobbs and Fry, each of whom had been dismissed first ball in the first innings, made the runs between them without being separated, winning the game for England by ten wickets.

Hobbs played confidently from the start, and carried out his bat for 62 when the match was won. It was a delightful display, free from fault, and worthy of the man and the occasion. Fry was uncomfortable at the commencement of his innings, but improved later, and by the time the end came had thoroughly settled down to a fine game. It was a great performance on the part of the pair, but each would be the first to admit that the victory was chiefly due to the splendid bowling of Blythe and Hirst.



"W.G." has before now contributed to the literature of cricket, and those who enjoyed his previous books, "W.G." and "Cricket," will welcome his latest, "W.G.'s Little Book," while any who have not made his acquaintance as a writer on the game can be recommended to do so at once. There are nine chapters, and the contents of the book are of a very varied description, ranging from precept and advice on the game to "Cricket Journalism," and "Cricket and Golf."

Fielding, of course, gets a good share of attention, and there are some interesting remarks regarding the standard of fielding at the present time as compared with that of the past. In one branch—throwing in—Dr. Grace thinks we have gone back. He attributes this largely to the reduced facilities for throwing at the present time, and to the fact that outfields do not know how to get so much practice as in the old days before there were boundaries. "Although all schools," he says, "include a throwing-the-Cricket-ball event in their sports, the Universities ignore such a useful competition at their annual meeting at Queen's and there is no such thing at the

On the score of possible utility in after life, there is not a thing to recommend the throwing-the-hammer event in preference to throwing the cricket ball. Rather the reverse. Ability at the latter athletic sport is of the utmost use in the national game, whereas the opportunities which any man has after leaving the 'Varsity of heaving a sixteen-pound weight at the end of a wire appear to me to be limited."

"Googlies" are also the subject of some interesting remarks, and at the end of the book there is a table of test match results arranged on a novel plain.

"'W.G.'s Little Book" is published by George Newnes, Limited, and the price is 1 shilling.

The second test match ended in an easy win for the Australians on an excellent wicket. On the second day the Cornstalks continued their first innings, McAlister and Laver the over-night not outs going to the wickets. Laver only added a single to the 13 he made the previous day, but McAlister took his score to 22 before he was dismissed, the other scores being :—Bardsley 46, Armstrong 12, Ransford 143 not out, Trumper 28, Noble 32, Gregory 14, Cotter 0, Macartney 5, Carter 7, and with 27 extras, the innings closed for 350, Ransford's unfinished contribution being a really brilliant innings. England then went in and lost 1 wicket for 16 runs. On the 16th instant England fell to pieces and were all out for 121. At lunch they had lost 8 wickets for 90 and the rest were dismissed for 31. Scores :—Hobbs 9, Hayward 6, Tyldesley 3, Gunn 0, King 4, Jones 26, Hirst 1, Maclaren 24, Lilly 25 not out, Relf 3, Haigh 5, 15 extras. With 41 runs to make to win the Australians then went in and hit them off for the loss of 1 wicket, McAlister 19 not out, Bardsley 0, Gregory 18 not out, and extras 4.

Appended are the results of other matches played in England during the past week.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Walter Lamont, principal of the firm of Walker and Sons, Engineers of Colombo. Mr. Lamont dropped down dead while playing golf at Helensburgh last Friday. A fatal accident at Football is reported from Kasauli, an artillery man colliding with the goal post during a game on the Depôt ground on the 18th instant and succumbing to his injuries.

The Royal Club Nautique de Gand, Belgium, whose crew were defeated by Leander by two lengths in the final of the eight-oared race at the Olympic Henley last year after a grand struggle, have entered for the Grand Challenge Cup at this year's Henley Regatta.

Germany will be represented in the Diamond Sculls by Rudolph Lucas, of the Mayence Rowing Club.

A South Missouri man recently was tried on the charge of assault. The prosecution brought into court as the weapons used by the accused a rail, an axe, a pair of tongs, a saw, and a rifle. The defendant's counsel exhibited as the other man's weapons a scythe blade, a pitchfork, a pistol, and a hoe. The jury's verdict is said to have been, "Resolved, that we, the jury, would have given one dollar to have seen the fight."

Man's humanity to animals grows with our civilisation. The correspondent of a London paper has been expressing the prettiest sympathy for the tiger. "The sight of him behind prison bars in Regent's Park," he writes, "is to me always one of the saddest," for "the tiger, wild in his native jungle, is one of the most beautiful of God's creatures." This correspondent, it seems, has often met the beautiful beast in all his wild happiness, and incidentally remarks that he and a fellow subaltern once killed as many as nine tigers in twelve days. This shows that we must sympathise with the Regent's Park tiger, not only for his loss of liberty, but for the dullness and uneventfulness of his life in a quarter where even the warm-hearted subaltern carries no more effective weapon than an umbrella.

J. H. Taylor has followed up his victory in the Open Championship by winning the Open Golf Championship of France, an honour he also secured last year.

Of all the legends connected with that curious bird, the cuckoo, none is much more quaint than that which is, one believes, more or less credited by a few of the country folk in the county of Sussex to this day. The story goes that an old woman goes over to France every spring and brings back with her the first cuckoo of the year in a covered basket, and the bird is liberated at Heathfield Fair, which takes place annually on April 14. From time immemorial this gathering, which, as fairs go in these days, is still an important one for the sale of sheep and cattle and other things, has been known as "Cuckoo Fair," because of the fable connected with it. It seems strange that anyone can still believe in such a story, but even more impossible ideas are still seriously entertained by rural dwellers. An old Hampshire villager, whom the writer has known for the past five-and-twenty years, still implicitly believes that the cuckoo and the hawk are one—cuckoo in summer, hawk in winter—and nothing will persuade him to the contrary. Although he has lived in the country all his life he declares that he has never seen a kestrel in the summer nor (as one can readily believe) a cuckoo in winter. Therefore, says he, they are one and the same! Of course, the idea of the cuckoo and the sparrow-hawk being identical is by no means new, but one fancies that the kestrel is playing a new role in acting the part of the cuckoo. Another fable about the cuckoo is that "it sucks little birds' eggs to keep its voice clear," as the words of the song have it, but there is no evidence, so far as one is aware, to substantiate the belief. That cuckoos have been seen with eggs in their bills no one will deny, but to many of those who have seen it, it possibly never occurred that the bird might be carrying her own egg in order to place it in a suitable nest. This habit of the cuckoo probably gave rise to the belief that cuckoos eat the eggs of other birds.

Friday, 4th June 1909.

This Whitsuntide will be memorable for its glorious sunshine, its altogether perfect conditions, the almost Indian sobriety of its millions of merry-makers and the practical absence of contretemps or fatality. It seemed to me that everybody had resolved to come out and play; restless humanity bubbled with good spirits, toilers and moilers put their daily rounds and common tasks aside, intent on making the most of the brief respite from the carking cares of twencent existence.

The crowds everywhere were enormous. They moved in continuous lines to the centres of varied amusement—quiet, sober, orderly, and well-behaved. In fact it was the behaviour of the people which was the distinctive feature of this Whitsun holiday. They seemed intent on making the best use of the day, unmarred by excess of any kind. And the manner in which they succeeded was a matter almost for national pride. It betokened a seriousness of purpose, a personal restraint, and a sobriety of thought such as are among the most valuable of a people's assets.

The roads to Richmond and Hampton Court, to Chingford and Epping Forest, to Finsbury, Wembley Park, Battersea, and the Crystal Palace were thronged for hours with endless streams of holiday-makers, chatting, laughing, eating, and merry-making. The cyclist enjoyed his "run," and his more aristocratic confrère proud owner of a motor-cycle was also much in evidence.

In the parks? Surely nowhere can a better idea be obtained than in them of London at play. From early morning till dusk tens of thousands of children romped and played, their ranks recruited by tens of thousands of grown-ups with the hearts of children. The up river people, the fishermen, the supporters of the suburban saddle flapping meetings, noisome motorists, the country picnickers, the Vere de Veres in their subdued approbation, the 'Arries and 'Arriets in their unrestrained transports were alike given over to the enjoyment of nature at her best. It was indeed a great and good holiday.

The parade of the Cart Horse Society in Regent's Park seemed more magnificent than ever this year. There were no less than 756 entries and the quality and condition were really marvellous. I was pleased to see my old friend "Prince" come up for his nineteenth first prize—it was in 1890 I saw him take his first red rosette and badge—his driver's whip was like a gladiolus, bright red badges decorating it literally from butt to thong. And what a fine beast he is! His annual appearance among the winners is cheered to the echo.

I noticed among the "distinguished visitors" in the vicinity of royalty and the judges, a small detachment of native Indian officers and non-coms. who have been detailed for duty in England as orderly officers to the King. They looked rather bored with the proceedings and seemed to take little interest in the procession of horses, to not the poorest of which could a rival be produced throughout the length and breadth of India. By the way there are several little bands of natives—chiefly of the pultan persuasion—being personally conducted about London just now. I am told they had been sent over here for educational purposes and with a hope that whatever accidental enlightenment they may manage to pick up may be turned to profitable account when they return to their jath bhais. It strikes me, from observation, that they will carry back with them very little more than a confused nightmare recollection of it all. Hardly anything is really explained to them, the pathetic little bands can be seen trudging solemnly and wearily around after some well nourished ex-sergeant sort of individual (whose place might equally well be taken by a messenger boy), an occasional yih dekkho or woh utcha chiz hai is thrown in and many enquiries are met with a hum nay junta. One of them said to me the other day. "We don't know what we've seen or where we've been, we are taken to so many places in a day, we understand so little of what passes or the meaning of things and next day we see so many new sights and tamashas we forget what we saw the day before and we are always very tired." He was one of a party presented to the King; asked what he thought of the mightiest of all sovereigns he answered languidly that he was a gracious budha saheb and passed on immediately to discuss the purchase of some liquid gold paint he desired to take back to India. He seemed more impressed with the possibilities of touching up some of his old possessions with this tawdry stuff than with all the royalty, reviews, and institutions, the pomp and circumstance with which we had been vainly endeavouring to teach him the extent and power of the British raj!

APROPOS of the noble animal there is the Olympia Horse Show which opens to-morrow and at which we are promised a review not only of the highest development of every variety of horse of the day, but of famous horses in history.

On the outside of each day's programme is a coloured picture of famous horses, taken from vases and pictures. The series of eighteen will illustrate horses of all ages and climes; and the knowing in horseflesh may deduce from them the changes in the build of the horse.

The series begins with Rameses II. driving forth a bay thoroughbred to war in B.C 1333. Assur-Bani-Pal, lion hunting in the ninth century B.C., rides a cob; and an Indian rajah looks very uncomfortable on a high-paced hackney. The Parthenon and Quirinal have yielded other pictures, and one of the most successful is a picture of the monument to General Colleoni, from Venice.

It is an example of the lavish expenditure on the smaller details that the illustration of the programmes has cost £500.

An extraordinary amount of time and labour has been expended on the decorative art at Olympia. An objection raised to the elaboration on the score that it was not in accord with the dignity of the horse has many answers. One is that no horse show has ever been held in which ladies will take so large a share. The evidence may partly be seen in Hyde Park; and both London and New York society will be well represented in the harness and appointment classes.

But ladies will take a much wider rôle than is offered by the showy hackney. To give the extremes, two ladies will be represented in the "Marathon" pageant of the coaches, which will be almost the most splendid event of the ten days' marvel; and a number of little girls will compete in the riding class for children's ponies.

PREPARATIONS for the opening of the Imperial Press Conference are complete. The efforts of the organisers have succeeded even beyond anticipation. There has probably not been yet held in any country so remarkable a parliament of the Fourth Estate, and general opinion in this country begins to understand that this great meeting, though not in the partisan sense political, will be of the highest public importance. Of the delegates from British territory throughout the world the larger number have already arrived. Including, I believe, Baboo Surendra Nath Bannerjee, Editor of the Bengalee. The inaugural function will be the banquet of welcome to-morrow when Lord Rosebery as the "public orator of the Empire" will propose the toast of the evening. This will be a brilliant prelude, and every day thereafter the delegates will be whirled through a programme of debate and sight-seeing, of luncheons and dinners, of receptions and excursions, such as has been rarely arranged, and never excelled. Everything that goodwill and enthusiasm could devise has been done to make the occasion enjoyable and memorable, and to convince our kinsmen, who have in their hands the moulding of public opinion throughout the outer Empire, that the Mother Country has never received a body of guests whom we were more delighted to honour. It will be interesting, perhaps, to read what Baboo S. N. Bannerjee thinks of it all and how he will address himself to the task of moulding Bengalee opinion on his return to Calcutta.

AFTER this week very few more plays will be produced this season, and in another four or five weeks the theatrical year of 1908-1909 will have come to an end. The silly phrase to the effect that "playgoers will be delighted to hear that a new play by Mr. So-and-so has been accepted by such-and-such a manager for early production," will be given a temporary rest, and if we could only get a guarantee that it will not be resurrected the theatres and the truth would suffer nothing. The public takes a keen interest in the theatres, in the events of the theatres, and in the players, but it does not care a row of pins whom a play is by so long as it entertains them. So to say that a promise of a new play by any particular author is good news is to state something that is not true, if it is meant that it is good news for the public. It is certainly good news very often for the author; one has to wait until the box-office speaks before it can be known to be good for the manager. W. S. Maugham and Hall Caine are about the only authors whose plays carry in advance a guarantee of profits for the manager who produces them.

UNDISMAYED by several rebuffs, Mr. Marc Klaw, with Miss Fannie Ward as his bright particular star, has again set out to try his fortune with a "reel Amurricun" play at a London theatre. It is just possible that the highly coloured thrills and the skilful stage trickery of the last act of "Eunice," which was produced at the Hicks Theatre last night, may this time bring him success; but in style and construction the new piece by Lee Arthur and Forrest Halsey is behind English times, and Miss Fannie Ward is not enabled to show herself at her best in the title-rôle. It is a pity that an actress whose personality and powers are essentially those of a comedienne should so frequently be expected to play parts that are essentially designed for a powerful emotional actress.

"The unwritten law" is the basis of "Eunice"—a sort of rehash of the unsavoury Thaw case. A broken-down ex-diplomat, Clyde Townley, allows the woman who has merely the shelter of his name, Eunice, to visit the family of a young rich New Yorker, Bruce Van Allen, as his daughter, in order that he may win money there at bridge.

The inevitable follows. The young man falls in love with her; Townley goes away, pleased that he has got rid of Eunice; Eunice marries Bruce; and finally Townley returns and makes demands on Eunice.

Eunice goes to him to his hotel, where later he is found murdered.

No one knows who the murderer is, and then Eunice dramatically tells her husband that it is she.

She is, however, saved from the electric chair by a bogus confession by Townley's valet, who had quarrelled with his master.

Crude, in places exasperatingly sentimental, mawkish, and illiterate in the sugar-candy fashion American audiences seem to appreciate, it has this merit, that its interest increases from scene to scene, the entanglement grows, the plot thickens, and, doubtful right up to the end, the dénouement is very deftly brought about. The last act is by far the best—which is rare. It is melodrama that is almost drama. And evidently the play has a moral—that love is stronger than blood, and honour than love.

In the lighter scenes—Miss Ward played with vivacity, and something of character; in the emotional scenes she worked exceedingly hard.

Mr. John W. Dean had few chances to show his undoubted abilities as Bruce Van Allen; Mr. H. Reeves-Smith's quiet, easy methods were telling in the part of Townley; and others standing out prominently in the cast were Mr. Charles Cartwright, Mr. Harry Cane, and Miss Granville.

WE were introduced to another American melodrama, "The Woman in the Case," by Clyde Fitch, at the Garrick Theatre, last Wednesday night. Briefly, it tells of a wife's fight for her husband's life, he being accused of murdering another man.

It is Claire Forster, an adventuress of a low type—the woman in the case—whom she has to fight, and there are certain incriminating letters written by her husband to this woman, who was the mistress of the dead man. Under an assumed name (the woman does not know who she is) she invites her to a flat, drinks with her, and acts just as vulgarly as she does. This is the best act in the play. The woman, under the influence of wine, tells of her relations with the two men, and in the hearing of concealed witnesses confesses that the other man was not murdered, but committed suicide. The wife, seizing her adversary by the throat, cries, "Free! Free!" and the curtain descends. The best compliment that one can think of for this act is that it should live to be potted by the Follies.

The part of Claire Forster is cleverly played by Miss Violet Vanbrugh. A fine regard for light and shade, it should rank as one of her best studies. Miss Grace Lane won sympathy as the wife Margaret Rolfe, playing with complete intelligence. Mr. Herbert Sleath was successful as the husband, Julian Rolfe, while Mr. Charles V. France was seen to advantage as Thompson, who so ably handled the Rolfes' affairs.

The annual Lucknow survivors banquet was held at the Holborn Restaurant on Tuesday last, Major General H. Cook, C.B., presiding. Yearly the survivors of the gallant garrison diminish, ere long only those born during the seige or who were infants—known as "Lucknow babies" now—will represent, perhaps, the grandest feat of British arms. Next year, I see, the surviving ladies of the garrison are to be invited to the dinner.

JUNGLE MEMORIES.

THE TIGER.

On one occasion in Burma a rather awkward incident happened to me; it could hardy be termed dangerous, but I know I thought it distinctly unpleasant at the time. A gaoli's cow had been killed by a tiger about a mile from the stockade I was in. The carcase was in a nullah, and as there were no handy trees I had a hole dug in the bank and roofed it over with branches on which rested a tarpaulin. Getting into this in the evening and being again covered in by some of the men, I was left to my own devices, and to wait as patiently as I could for the advent of the tiger. The moon rose about 8 P.M., but it was not till some three hours later that I heard his soft heavy footsteps approaching. The hill was still in deep shadow so I could see nothing, and could only wait hoping that the brute might show himself. The footsteps came nearer and then stopped about ten yards away. For some time I could hear nothing; five minutes passed, then ten, and at last I began to think that spotting something suspicious he had slunk quietly off again. But what was that slight crack behind me? Listening intently I heard a rustle and then the heavy breathing of some big animal close at hand. I began to feel a bit creepy, and the feeling was suddenly intensified as I distinctly heard the tiger, for it was he, sniffing under the tarpaulin, two or three feet away from me. It can be imagined with what breathless excitement I awaited his next move, and it was with quite a sense of relief that I heard a low growl and then a heavy crashing in the undergrowth as he bounded off. Waiting a few minutes to make certain he had gone I whistled up the men, who in a short time arrived and released me from my cramped quarters. Great was their astonishment and excitement, when I told them what had occurred: two of them immediately volunteering to take up my position for the remainder of the night, if the sahib would lend his rifle, but to this I would not consent; pointing out to them at the same time, that the tiger was hardly likely to return, once he had discovered the ambuscade. In this I proved correct, as the next morning the carcase was found untouched. All the same the Burman tiger is not so easily scared off as I found out later. He is a much bolder brute than his Indian brother, and is quite ready as a rule to vary his usual bill of fare with a human joint. In India I have never had the slightest hesitation in sleeping outside my tent in the hot weather, while in Burma I would never dream of doing so. The incident to which I refer happened one day, or rather night, in the cold weather of the next year. I had come across some fresh tsine droppings near a water hole in a nullah, and as my mokso told me it was a place where many animals drank, I decided to sit up for them that night, the ground being too hard for tracking, and the crackling leaves making a silent approach out of the question. The mokso refused point blank to remain, as he was afraid of being bagged by a tiger, but my orderly, a stalwart Pathan, had no such qualms, and expressed himself as quite ready to stay with me. The place selected was a small cliff jutting slightly out from the bank and about twenty feet above the stream bed. The jungle came right up to the river bank, but for about ten yards behind us the ground was bare, till it met some low grass and scrub. There was a glorious moon, which made the nullah, where not overshadowed by trees, almost as bright as day, so that should the tsine turn up, I was pretty sure of getting a splendid shot. In about an hour's time we heard a faint crackling, and then a pair of barking deer appeared, which, with due precaution, drank their fill and disappeared. Shortly after a sambhur hind came into view evidently very uneasy by the way she advanced and the frequent pauses she made, but thirst overcoming her discretion, she at last took her evening drink, bounding off as the long drawn out note of a tiger came faintly down the wind. He seemed a good distance off, so we still hoped that the tsine would put in an appearance, but hour after hour passed and still they came not. Eventually I must have fallen asleep, for I suddenly woke up with every sense on the alert, to find my orderly gripping my arm; he pointed to the jungle behind us, and turning quietly in that direction, I heard a slight crack repeated at intervals close at hand.

"Sher," whispered Futteh Din in my ear, and he went on to say that he had heard this going on for some time before he awoke me, but that he was now positive that there was a tiger moving about near us as he had heard him breathing. So giving up all thought of the tsine we turned and sat facing the scrub with our backs to the water. The moon had gone down, so that we could see nothing, and could only sit and listen to the faint cracks, and every now and then a low purring noise. A tiger had evidently found us, but apparently hesitated to come into the open and attack the silent sitting figures. I stood this for some time, but at last fired off my rifle to frighten him, and off he went with a couple of great crashing bounds. Congratulating ourselves on having got rid of him, as it was eerie work to sit and listen to his slow stealthy movements, we sat patiently waiting the dawn, neither of us caring to go to sleep again. After another hour, however, Futteh Din, who had keener hearing than I had, whispered that the brute was back once more, and sure enough I soon heard, now close at hand, now further off, the gentle rustle of the grass and the faint crackling of the dry twigs and leaves. Watching and listening for some minutes, I at last fired another shot, and once more he dashed off, this time with a "woof! woof!" so the bullet must have gone fairly close to him.

The rest of the night passed off quietly, and I for one was glad to see daylight. As soon as we could see, we examined the dew covered ground, and found by the tracks that the brute had been doing regular sentry-go over us.

No Indian tiger, unless a man-eater would have behaved in this way, and not even a man-eater if fired at, would I think be bold enough to return a second time after having once been alarmed.

I know of other instances of the daring way in which the Burman tiger will behave. One in particular happened at a small post on the Mogaung river. A Gurkha havildar, a married man, whose hut was outside and close to the stockade, finding the night a hot one slept on his charpoy, under a mosquito net, about two or three yards away from his quarters. In the middle of the night there was a great uproar, which was added to by the sentry on the quarter-guard firing off his rifle. Lights were soon lit, when it was found that a tiger had sprung through the netting and seriously mauled the unfortunate havildar, who was taken off in a dying state to the hospital. Meanwhile two Gurkhas putting a log of wood on the bed, and replacing the mosquito net, went into the wounded man's hut with their rifles, and after making loop holes waited to see if the brute would return. In about an hour's time after the commotion had died down, the tiger sneaked back again, and was shot by these two men as he was in the act of springing on to the apparently sleeping figure.

On another occasion a forest officer, who was in camp on the banks of the Upper Chindwin, was sitting reading in his tent, waiting for his dinner, which was being prepared not twenty yards away. All of a sudden he heard a wild cry, and the rush of some heavy beast in the darkness; and going out was informed by the yells of his servants, that a tiger had carried off the unfortunate cook, as he was in the act of crossing over to the tent with the soup in his hands.

The late Mr. B.—of the Burma Forests once told me of the following occurrence. He was returning to his camp one evening along a fire track with one of his forest guards, who happened to be working thirty or forty yards in front of him. Suddenly a tigress sprang from the jungle on to the Burman, and as they were falling, B.—managed to get in a snapshot with his Paradox, and broke her back. She was a small one, so that the man who was badly mauled, recovered. With a heavier brute he would have probably been killed on the instant. It was certainly the quickest and luckiest snapshot I have ever heard of.

The last time I was out after tiger I had very bad luck. Happening to be encamped on the banks of a small river, I had gone off in the early morning to a gorge about two miles off to try for mahseer. While in the act of putting my rod together my shikari trotted up to say that one of the "buffs" had been killed. Fishing was naturally out of the question, as this was the first kill I had had for a fortnight: so hurrying back to the camp I had my breakfast while the beaters were being collected. All being ready we started about 11 o'clock, and after a long and blazing hot walk I got settled into my ladder an hour later. This was placed in a deep nullah with a steep hillside on either hand, open on the left but densely bushed on the right. The beat soon began and after a few minutes I heard the tiger roaring at intervals. Later I was told he had been in a very bad temper at being disturbed, and had charged at the stops whenever he saw them. I had been sitting waiting for about twenty minutes when I heard something crashing towards me along the higher bank on my left, and the next moment out clattered the finest sambhur I have ever seen, with horns of well over 40 inches and standing I should think nearly 15 hands. Pulling up he stood within twenty yards of me, listening intently for about half a minute, and then dashed off again. As he did so I heard the tiger galloping up the nullah towards me making deep throaty cuss words as he came along.

As he was passing the open space below me, I let him have it behind the shoulder, rolling him over into some thick scrub, where unfortunately I could not see to give him the second barrel. Here he picked himself up and retraced his steps down the nullah. The stops soon informed the beaters what had occurred, and when they were safely out of harm's way my shikaris appeared. After putting in a couple of hours with the tiffin basket, and talking over matters, we began following the brute up; pugging him into one of the densest bits of cover I have ever been in, mostly consisting of a sort of screwpine, thorny canes and tree ferns, together with scattered bamboo clumps. By 5 o'clock, as there was very little blood we had only done about two hundred yards: we then came to a bit of jungle even more thick if possible than that through which we had already explored. Here one of the stops, who was close by, shouted out that he had heard the tiger go into it, but had not heard him go on, and that he thought the animal was still there. The shikaris refused to proceed, and not feeling very keen myself, we climbed out of the nullah on to a bit of open ground opposite the thicket, and sent a rocket into it. This was at once vociferously replied to, the trackers immediately making for the trees. I had a strong desire to emulate their climbing powers, but stood my ground. "Stripes," however, left the nullah on the side further away from me, and I never got a glimpse of him. After waiting a few minutes we crossed the nullah lower down and then worked back along the other bank till we picked up his tracks again. On examining the place where he had been lying up, we found he had not been ten yards away when we had climbed out into the open ground, and that he had disgorged most of his dinner, thus showing he had been hit too far back. On resuming the pursuit we traced him up the steep karvi-covered hillside, which was just as bad as the nullah, and pugging slowly on for about a hundred yards came to a solitary dead tree, up which I told one of the trackers to climb and try if he could see the tiger. The man was soon up at the top and after peering about for a little time, he suddenly called to me to come up quickly, as he could see the tiger lying down and looking at him quite close at hand. I therefore unloaded the Paradox and eventually managed to reach the tree top, which was about thirty feet from the ground. How I managed it I cannot say as it was nearly bare of branches, and I am a heavy man, and not as active as I used to be. As soon as I had arrived, the man began eagerly showing me where the brute was, but it was some minutes before I saw him, so well did his colouring blend with his surroundings. At last I managed to spot his white chest, as he lay with head up facing us about twenty yards away. Most of his body was behind a bush, and the rest of him was nearly concealed by the karvi stalks, so that he was not too easy to make out. I loaded up, but as I closed the breech, both cartridges falling to the bottom of the tree, caused further delay. Diving into my pockets for two more, I this time loaded more carefully, and then drew a bead on his chest. Just as I was going to fire, I remembered that the slender bough on which I was sitting was a most insecure perch, and that the recoil might send me over backwards, so I told the other shikari, who was hanging on below, to place his hand on my back to steady me. This being done I was again taking aim, when the tiger suddenly dashed off with a loud "woof! woof!" It was most tantalising as he had lain and watched us for quite ten minutes, and then bounded away just as I had hoped to give him his quietess. How I regretted not having taken the shot at once and risked the recoil.

He seemed to go off with unabated vigour, though it was now six hours since he had been hit. On descending the tree, I found on getting within fifteen feet of the ground, that owing to the way I was facing I could get no further, so had to wait till the ladder was brought from some little distance off, to help me down.

On reaching the ground, I paced from the tree to where he had been lying, and made it just twenty-three paces. I think this time if he had not been spotted, he had intended waiting for us, and what with a downhill impetus, and the thick karvi stems, which would have concealed him till within two or three feet of me, I fancy I should have been unable to stop him, so perhaps I was lucky in escaping so easily. By this time there was only about ten minutes of daylight left, and as the whole hillside was covered with karvi I thought it better to leave him till the next day. How I wished I had been using the old ·500 and not the Paradox. I had been accustomed to using the former all my life, and think I should have made better shooting with it, while I had never done very much with the latter.

The next day we started off again about 11 o'clock, though I had wanted to get off much earlier; the shikaris, however, would not hear of it, as they said that at that time the shadows would be too long, while at mid-day they would be much smaller so that the tiger would be easier spotted. I got hold of three or four village pies and brought my own fox-terrier and went off to where we had last seen "his Majesty." Slowly making our way we pugged him along the hillside and then downwards, all the time through thick karvi, to the place where he had lain down again where we found some more blood. From here we tracked him down to the nullah, where he had stopped to drink. The pie dogs when they came to the place where he had stopped during the night had immediately made themselves scarce, so that for the rest of the time we had to rely on my own dog, who did his work well, quartering the ground in every direction. We had at last to give it up, as the tracks led out of the nullah on to open grass land, and from there we could find no further trace of him. The blood had dried up, and the shikaris could not track on the short grass. It was with great reluctance I at last abandoned the pursuit, as apart from having so nearly got him, he was the biggest tiger I had ever seen, his head being about the size of a kitchen coal scuttle. As I write, incident after incident occurs to me, but tiger shooting is a well-worn topic and I must no longer trespass on the Editor's good nature.

"TAW QUEH."

LITTLE WILLIE was missed by his mother one day for some time, and when he reappeared she asked:

"Where have you been, my pet?"

"Playing postman," replied her "pet." "I gave a letter to all the houses in our road. Real letters, too."

"Where on earth did you get them?" questioned his mother, in amusement.

"They were those old ones in our wardrobe drawer, tied up with ribbon," was the innocent reply.

BIG FISH OFF CATALINA.

To the piscatorial sportsmen of the world, Avalon and the island of Santa Catalina need no introduction. Few are the angling centres which have not heard of the catches of fish made around the island. So worldwide have many of the records become that this particular spot has often been dubbed "The Fisherman's Paradise." The island's popularity as a pleasure resort is beyond question, for it is annually visited by nearly 100,000 persons.

Situated as it is within 25 miles from the mainland, and within 50 miles from Los Angeles, the island is easily accessible. The trip from Los Angeles is made to the island in less than three hours.

The town of Avalon is snugly harboured from all winds by Abalone Point on the south and by Sugar Loaf on the north. For days together the little crescent bay, formerly called "Bay of Moons," will be as smooth as glass and as tranquil as a millpond. Oftentimes a delicate veil of vapour that gives distance to lanscape, pervades the sky during the summer months, and occasionally deludes the stranger into the belief that it is going to rain, but such thoughts are hallucinations. During these atmospheric effects visitors have often been rendered speechless with surprise and admiration at the magnificent mirages. At all times of the year launches and small fishing craft may safely ride at their moorings in the little bay of Avalon. From a sportman's point of view Catalina possesses many good qualities. In the interior of the island several thousand goats run wild, and foxes, quail and other game can be killed if permission is obtained from the owners of the property. Tourists, among whom can be recognized politicians, doctors, lawyers, authors and "business men of every calling" are to be found hospitably housed at all times of the year, both at Avalon and at the Isthmus.

Unlike San Clemente, Santa Catalina has a lee of 15 miles, affording water as smooth as a lake in a number of bays and coves, which are accounted for by the rugged geological formations of the surrounding hills. The water is deep along shore, intensely blue, and the fishing is done mostly along the edge of the kelp. The boats used for pleasure fishing are widebeamed, natty, speedy and seaworthy, and are equipped with diminutive three or four-horse-power gasoline engines. So rapidly can these little crafts be controlled that few, if any, boating fatalities ever take place in the generally placid waters on the lee side of the island. In crossing the channel for San Clemente oftentime an exceedingly rough passage will be encountered. It is now unanimously believed by all the boatmen that "Tony, the Greek," was lost during the early part of the season while attempting to cross over this uncertain course. "Tony," among his fellow-craftsmen, was considered an experienced and skilful seaman. His natural apprehensiveness of danger was tempered by a strong instinct of what was possible in an emergency. Every certainty which boatmen could reasonably command in dealing with so fickle an element as the sea he possessed, but despite this he was "lost."

Fishing at Catalina is much like that of Florida, beginning with the Indian river, including Key West and the outer reef up to Cedar Keys. A warm current known as Kuroshiwo, which extends from the Arctic regions to the coast of Japan, is credited with the cause of the present fishing conditions. Upon the western coast of Australia this current has also been found to exist, and it is stated that the tuna which have been found upon that coast, really are the tuna which several years ago played such sad havoc with the rod-and reel experiments made around Catalina. Indeed, one writer suggested that the following advertisement be inserted at the expense of the Tuna Club in all the Australian sporting papers :—

"Lost, strayed or stolen, a school of tuna. May be recognized by piano wire leaders nearly all carry; thousand dollars will be paid and no questions asked for the return of the same in good biting humour."

Last year ex-Congressman C. G. Conn, who was successful in capturing a tuna weighing 94 pounds, outfitted a 75-foot craft for a three-months' cruise, and reports of his success—or otherwise—will come later.

Previous to the formation of the angling clubs at Catalina fish were caught around the island with but little advancement to the method used by the aboriginal tribes, namely, a hollowed-out abalone shell for a hook and a piece of kelp for a line. Twelve or fourteen years ago a large hook and a piece of rope constituted an angling outfit—and fish were captured "by the boatload." One murder made a villain, millions a hero. Disgusting in the extreme was it to witness from 15 to 30 tons of fish, averaging from 20 to 60 pounds each, steeped in their own gore and hanging from a hook—to give satisfaction to the angler who had captured them. Truly angling is but the survival of the fittest, even when fish are caught upon the lightest paraphernalia upon record. Nature has supplied all marine animals with some weapons or methods of defence; to the devilfish, inks; to the crustacean, a stout shell, and to the swordfish, a weapon by which it can protect itself from the most ferocious sharks or sea lions. The greater feed upon the lesser, and the lesser oftentimes devours the least, and so on ad infinitum. A "fish hog" reasons that he is justified in taking all that he may catch. But at Catalina to-day rods are used. Every fish has a chance for its life, and the tragedies of the sea are, from the anglers' standpoint, rapidly decreasing. "More sport—less fish." "Fairplay—and a square deal," are some of the mottoes which are now emphatically impressed upon all newcomers. It is hard for some people to believe what they do not see, and an occasional individual is met with who remains sceptical under optical demonstrations. But few are the great catches which now receive commendation after they are brought into port, and the fish hog is a discredited person.

The objects of the Tuna Club, the Catalina Three Six Club, and the Catalina Light Tackle Club are equally as important as the proposed Government fishing reservations, which at some future time may extend between the island of Catalina and San Clemente. The combined strength of the three angling clubs is gradually working toward the attainment of restrictive legislation. The Tuna Club and the Light Tackle Club were the first organizations of their kind in the world, but a greater plan was set at work at the commencement of the 1908 tournaments. A motion was made by the respective clubs that all fish not exceeding the anglers' previous records, if taken upon the regulation tackle, be again set at liberty. From the records kept by a large party who fished at San Clemente during the month of July, it is proven that over 1,000 fish were given their liberty after putting up a fight which lasted from 15 minutes to one hour and a half. To release the hook from the catch, the fish is held by the gills, no gaff being used. To carry on the fishing to the extent of past years the clubs found that it would be necessary to resort to artificial propagation, and hence necessity again proved the mother of invention. A strange fact in connection with all fish which are directly under the control of the Kuroshiwo current is that no ichthyologists have yet been able to trace the spawning grounds of any of the game fishes.

Hunting big game fish and finally landing them, is often strenuous sport, and not every sportsman is fond of it. So thrilling is an experience with a big fish that anglers, in their attemps to land their catches, have met with many exciting adventures. "Hold me! Hold me!" ejaculated a Portland (Or.) man last October, when he felt himself slipping off the edge of the launch in his frantic endeavours to land a monster albicore. But it was too late and he was precipitated into the briny deep and lost paraphernalia which had cost him $35, to say nothing of of the "world's record fish." Another laughable incident took place during the fore part of the tournaments, when a typical Englishman, who hailed from London, was endeavoring to unravel a tangle which had impeded his line. A yellowtail took the trolling bait. While making a lunge for his rod the angler lost his balance and fell overboard. As he fell the rod struck the side of the boat and the line passed around his neck. Pulling and tugging, the fish vainly tried to free itself from its tormentor. At each jerk the slender line passed rapidly across the angler's throat. "Cut the stringe ye landlubbers; d'ye want the rascal to saw me head off?" he howled, as his friends seized him with a gaff and finally dragged the angler and the fish back into the boat.

Oftentimes a fish will take out 800 feet of the slender nine-thread line before an angler will endeavour to stop it To "turn" a fish in one of these mad rushes means disastrous results, but gradually the fish is brought to the side of the boat like a "veritable phantasmagoric of many colors." Four to six such catches weighing about 25 pounds each will satisfy the most ardent angler. Yellowtial and albicore are so common that they are fished for in the Eastern fashion, with hand lines. A whole boatload could be taken in a few hours. This species are very sociable and oftentimes a handful of "chum" will bring them around the boat in uncountable numbers.

For the 1908 tournament, which lasted between the months of May and October, nearly $7,000 in prizes, consisting of trophies, medallions and fishing paraphernalia, were awarded by the respective fishing clubs to anglers, who complied with the clubs' regulations and also used the standard outfits specified.—Breeder and Sportsman.

CALCUTTA HOSPITAL NURSES' INSTITUTION.

Appeal to the Indian Community for Funds.

The Committee of the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institution in making this appeal desire to briefly explain the objects and work of the Institution and its claims on the support of the Indian Community.

The Institution undertakes the supply of Nurses and their support in the leading Calcutta Hospitals, also providing a few for private employment.

The income of the Institution is derived from—

(a) Subscriptions from the public, which amounted last year to about Rs. 40,000.

(b) A grant from the Government of Bengal of three times the amount subscribed subject to a maximum of Rs. 50,000 annually.

(c) Earnings of the Out-nurses, which totalled Rs. 19,596 last year.

(d) A Grant from the Hospital Port Dues Fund, which amounted to Rs. 11,550 for the past year.

(e) Interest on investments and deposits, which realised Rs. 5,480 last year.

The receipts from these sources are, however, insufficient to meet the present expenditure of the Institution, which has risen from about Rs. 90,000 in 1901 to over Rs. 1,40,000 in 1908. For the year 1907 a loss on working of Rs. 8,720 was sustained, and a still large deficit would have been experienced for the past year but for the receipt of a special donation of Rs. 15,500 from funds at the disposal of the former Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

Owing to the continued expansion and improvement of the two leading hospitals in Calcutta, viz., the Medical College Hospital with its connected Institutions and the Presidency General Hospital and the consequent necessity for a still larger and more efficient Nursing Staff a Special Committee was recently appointed by Sir Andrew Fraser to reconsider the whole question of the nursing arrangements. Definite schemes, with estimates of cost, were submmitted by the Principal of the Medical College and Surgeon Superintendent of the Presidency General Hospital and approved by this Committee, showing that an additional income of over Rs. 50,000 per annum would have to be provided in order to bring the nursing arrangements up to the requirements of the present day. The hospital themselves are maintained entirely by Government, which also contributes largely to the Hospital Nurses' Institution as already mentioned, and having regard to the fact that it is in the interests of the general public, both European and Indian, that the hospitals exist, it is only reasonable to expect that the public should contribute more generously towards the support of the nursing arrangemements, which constitute a most important factor in their successful working.

Hitherto the subcriptions received by the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institution from the Indian communities have been most inadequate as the following statement for the four years 1905 to 1908 discloses :—

Subscriptions received from	1905	1906.	1907.	1908.
	Rs. As P.	Rs. As. P.	Rs. As. P.	Rs As. P.
Europeans ...	37,000 3 7	38,299 1 9	34,728 7 7	38,451 7 1
Hindus ...	906 6 0	896 8 0	787 0 0	2,033 0 0

These figures show that of the total income received from subscriptions during the first three years mentioned only 3 per cent. was subscribed by Indians, although more than two thirds of the beds in the Medical College Hospital and half of those in the Eden Hospital are occupied by Indian patients.

The Institution at present supports about 140 nurses, who are distributed as per details given in margin, the cost of the 60 Nurses employed at the Medical College and Eden Hospitals for the past year amounting to Rs. 70,560.

Hospital Staff.
Presidency General Hospital	72
Medical College Hospital ...	46
Eden Hospital... ...	14
Total, ...	132
Out-nursing Staff.
Lady Canning Home. ...	8

Of these it is estimated that 38 are solely occupied in nursing Indian patients, at an annual charge of about Rs. 43,000 and as it will shortly be necessary to provide 25 additional nurses for the new Surgical Block at the Medical College Hospital this proportionate charge will soon be largely increased.

During the year 1908 the subscriptions from Indians show a small increase, chiefly owing to the receipt of an individual donation of Rs. 1,000 from Rajah Durga Prasad Singh of Manbhum, but there has been no general support. The Committee, however, believe that the leading members of the several Indian Communities will, on learning the facts herein disclosed, realise their responsibility in the matter and take steps to remove this reproach, and a Special Sub-Committee comprising many of the leading Indian noblemen and gentlemen in Calcutta has been appointed to canvass among their fellow-countrymen with this object.

In view of the great importance of the efficient nursing of the sick which is demanded by the most ordinary feelings of humanity the Committee confidently trust that the Indian noblemen and gentlemen to whom this appeal is addressed will not delay in coming forward to support this great work for the relief of their suffering fellow-countrymen.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).
