The kingfisher (Alcedo ispida) is another British bird whose legs are exceedingly small and not well adapted for walking, which, familiar as we are with the species, we never saw it attempt. In this it is singularly different from its fellow-fisher, the dipper (Cinclus aquaticus), which can not only trip along the edge of a rock, but can walk, as we have repeatedly witnessed, directly under water in shallow pools and slow-running streams, emerging to the surface at a considerable distance from the place where it had entered. The leg is feathered to the knee, and the claws are very strong and curved, the claws of the back toe being the strongest. Its curious habit of walking under water appears to have been first observed by Herbert, whose interesting narrative will be familiar to most naturalists.

The Laplanders call the loon (Colymbus glacialis) the lame bird, because it walks awkwardly, the legs, indeed, being so placed as to render it difficult to use them in walking. When one under observation quitted the water it shoved its body along upon the ground like a seal, by jerks, rubbing the breast against the ground, and returned again to the water in a similar manner.

The coot (Fulica atra), like the divers, has an aversion to take wing, and can seldom be sprung in its retreat at low water; yet, though it walks rather awkwardly, it contrives to skulk through the grass and reeds with considerable quickness, the compressed form of its body being peculiarly fitted for this purpose, and its progress has often been remarked by the top of the herbage on the edge of a lake moving as if it had been swept by a narrow current of wind. The same aversion to run rather than take wing may also be remarked in the rails (Rallidæ), some of which are land-birds, and amongst these may be mentioned the landrail or cornerake (Ortygometra crex), a bird that has been said never to take the water and keeps regularly upon the ground, taking flight but rarely, and never except when compelled thereto.

Travel and Adventure.

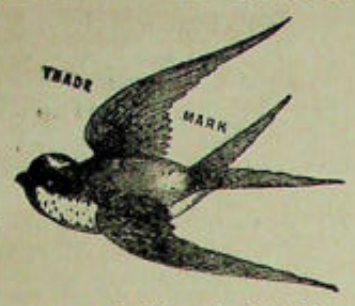
THE CENTRAL PAMPAS OF ARGENTINA.

IT sounds somewhat incredible to pronounce a desert, arid and apparently waste land as somewhere a fortune can be made in by agriculture and in methods agricultural, but such is the Central Pampas of Argentina. Similarly we might refer to the desert of Scinde and other desert, sandy wastes: Egypt for instance depending on its periodical overflowings of the Nile, periodical but regular, and there are the Scriptures to uphold the statement that there was corn in Egypt when the fertile lands of Canaan were in the throes of a famine. Scinde is placed on the same parallel, as cultivation depends on the overflow of the historic river Indus. There is no rainfall to speak of, but it is the silt carried by the overflowing waters that fertilize the soil. Again the Great Karoo of South Africa is yet another illustration. Now and again comes a flood not conveyed through the medium of a river, but down waterways from the mountains. They are destructive for the time being, but the farmer glories in his temporary loss as it is amply compensated by the results in his crops. It is a phenomenon and there is no explanation for it that ten inches of rain per annum is all a Karoo farmer prays for. It is ample and he reaps plenteous and abundant harvests; his cattle are provided for and fruit grows wild, so much so that there is no market for it. In like manner, therefore, and in keeping with this inexplicable phenomenon the Central Pampas possesses many millionaire farmers: not in gold or gilt edged securities, but in horses, cattle, sheep and agricultural produce.

The staple product is Alfalfa (Lucerne). It is a leguminous plant, indigenous to the soil and possesses many peculiarities. It does not need irrigation in congenial soil for its roots will penetrate deep down into the earth in search of nutriment—water—and there are examples on record of these roots penetrating to more than 100 feet: it returns four crops a year, and a field only needs resowing once in ten to fifteen years: being leguminous it is self-fertilising and therefore instead of extracting the virtue from the soil, each crop enriches the soil. There are hundreds of square miles of the Central Pampas given over to nothing else but the cultivation of alfalfa and so great is the demand for it that purchasers come hundreds of miles to offer terms to farmers for growing crops for export to Europe, South Africa and America. The Australian clover is said to be kindred to alfalfa, but it certainly is not so prolific or in such demand. Many farmers trash the hay and extract the seed which finds a ready market at steady prices. Yet this hay, pressed and bound, of the very best quality is delivered f. o. b. for about 22 shillings a ton at Buenos Ayres and realises on sale in Cape Town from six to eight pounds sterling a ton. In the Central Pampas cattle are not stabled, nor do they receive any other food than alfalfa. Cattle, horses and sheep are simply turned loose into fields to graze and brows, at their sweet will and pleasure.

I have said that hundreds of square miles of land is under alfalfa cultivation and there are many more hundreds waste since the population is only a few thousands of human beings, but there are primitive laws, unwritten ones that guide these people. Water is scarce and one might unguided easily lose himself in this vast tract of sand. Like all sandy tracts the sands are shifting and the wayfarer selecting a sand dune as a land mark on settling down for the night, awakes to find himself confronted with a vast plateau, smooth as your hand: the dune has disappeared during the night. To protect wayfarers, therefore, there is a law, never disregarded, that after sundown, any person can claim shelter at any farm, without payment and if it is necessary owing to lameness or otherwise his horse must be suitably exchanged. The principle is this that a shipwrecked mariner meeting a boat seeks it as a providential help, similarly in the desert a horse is compared to the boat. But what is an occasional horse in a country where they are so plentiful that half-a-crown will purchase one, and no mare is used at the plough or in harness. The poorest of the poor i.e., the peons (field labourers) on an estanchia (farm) own their own cattle and ride to their work. This seems a necessity, as often peons work from ten to twenty miles from the homesteads and for weeks together, sleeping on the scene of their day's labour, killing their own meat, (a sheep by the way is only valued at from 4½d. to 6d.) with gazettas (rusks) and matte for drink. They are simple, pastoral people, innocent of the machinations of our twentieth century civilised world, but every man carries a revolver and a couple of dirks in his waistband. Their costume is picturesque in the extreme and to spend a night at their fireside is an experience. They are born musicians and enliven the night with music such as no music hall can provide. They are genuine children of nature, fiery, untamed, ignorant, bigoted, yet honest, hospitable, chivalrous, generous and brave. Offer the meanest of them an insult and may God have mercy on your soul. A woman is sacred and should an adventuring woman traverse the Central Pampas, she would receive nothing but honour and respect, as much so as if she were in Ireland.

There is a railway, the "Central Argentine," that traverses the Pampas from Once (Eleven) in Buenos Ayres to Batia Blanca. 'Tis 6 feet 6 inches in gauge, the largest in the world, the carriages are corridor ones, and a perfect bazaar is conducted on board. Newspapers, cigars, cigarettes, fruit and wine are sold on the train throughout the journey by muchachos (boys) who are not a wit behind the London street Arab or the Paris gamin in precocity and devilment. Artesian well-boring has of recent years been adopted with great success but water is only found deep, deep down. Santa Rosa de Toay may be called the capital of the Pampas: it boasts a bank, an excellent hotel and a theatre. It is here that the cream of wealthy farmers and brokers do their business. Every detail is conducted in good humour and amid jokes and laughter, wine and cigarillos. The law of the Pampas is, as I have said, the unwritten law: there are no Courts and no Abrogados (lawyers) yet everything goes on smoothly.



The Puma (lion) and the Jaguar (tiger) are the only wild animals and they are really not to be feared as they are very puny in size. The Condor, that magnificent eagle of South America, may here be seen in all his majesty, soaring ahead over feeding flocks to swoop down on a lamb, which he can carry away with the greatest ease. Of snakes there are many kinds but death ensuing from snake bite is practically unheard. It is in the Central Pampas that all that remains of the old aboriginal Indian races are encountered: but they are not a pure breed any more and their features are anything but handsome, whereas the Argentines are a handsome race, and the women are really beautiful. They possess all the passion of Southern races and it is a serious matter to trifle with the affections of a woman. They are quick to avenge indignity or insult, but charming, cheerful, fresh and gay. Their picturesque costume enhances the dainty beauty with which nature has endowed them. Although the Argentines are primitive in their mode of life and customs, their methods of agriculture are very much up-to-date and only the latest agricultural machinery is employed and all of British manufacture. They trust a Britisher implicitly, while they would not handle a Yankee with a pitchfork. The reason is obvious: the whole of the capital invested in the development of Argentina is British; Railways, Docks, Tramways, Telephones, Gas, etc., while the Monro Doctrine of the United States is a thorn in the side of these powerful South American Republics. May they never come to blows for if so, the United States will have their eyes opened. These Republics will stand by each other and men, women and children will fight to the bitter end.

THE strong woman and the seedy-looking gentleman came on board. The seedy-looking gentleman retired to his cabin, and the strong woman tucked him up with shawls. Then she strode on deck and hailed the captain. "Well, mum?" asked the skipper. "My husband is particularly liable to sea-sickness, captain," said the strong woman. The skipper nodded sympathetically. "Could you tell him what to do in case of an attack?" asked the strong woman. The skipper touched his hat. "Tain't necessary, mum," he said. "He'll do it!"

MR. EDWARD BULWER LYTTON DICKENS, the youngest son of Charles Dickens, is a member of Parliament in Australia. Not long ago, in the course of a speech, he was frequently interrupted by a snappish member named Willis. "Mr. Speaker," said Mr. Dickens, turning to the chair, "it may be remembered by some present that my father coined an expression, which attained some popularity—'Barkis is willin'.' The circumstances to-day are such that I am strongly tempted to reverse the phrase and say, 'Willis is barkin'.'" The retort was effective.

THE INDIAN FIELD.

1, Hare Street, Calcutta.

100—NOT OUT.

On 15th July last a veteran of sport, Colonel John Bower of Studwell Lodge, Droxford, Hampshire, celebrated his 100th birthday, and in token of his valuable services to Hampshire fox-hunting for more than half a century the members of the Hambledon Hunt presented him with a handsome silver salver. It is interesting to recall that when the gallant Colonel first saw light George III. still had eleven years to reign, Napoleon had not then planned the invasion of Russia, and Englishmen were apprehensive of the little Corsican's designs upon their country. His 100th birthday found Colonel Bower in the happy possession of all his faculties, the only infirmity which troubled him being a slight deafness. His memory is wonderful, and his mind exceedingly active for one of so great an age. Altogether he is an extraordinary centenarian. Always devotedly attached to fox-hunting, he rode to hounds until he was well over 90, and when he could no longer ride he used to drive to the meet. He is not an abstainer, but has never made a practice of smoking.

Among the shoals of congratulatory telegrams received by Colonel Bower on his 100th birthday was one from Lord Wemyss, with whom he was associated in the days when both were concerned in the mounted rifle corps movement. To an interviewer Colonel Bower remarked: "I was sure of getting that telegram. Why," he proceeded, "Lord Wemyss is my oldest friend, and he is nearly as old as I am, but not quite though. I can give him nine years. Lord Wemyss," he added, "is like me in thinking the country is not improving. All the changes seem to be for the worst—political changes worst of all. But we still keep hunting going," he said, and at once displayed the keenest interest. It may be remarked parenthetically that Colonel Bower has been an old-fashioned Tory all his life. The Duke of Wellington was one of his political heroes, and afterwards Disraeli, and he has no opinion of the Radicals. Colonel Bower has been over fifty-five years on the pension list; he has lived under five Sovereigns, and served under four. He was born at Kilcaldrum, Forfarshire, and he vouches for the fact that on his natal day a swarm of bees pitched on the bed-room curtains, fairly hunting him into the world, and that the worthy nurse had no hesitation therefore in predicting. "This bairn will be industrious." The prediction has been amply fulfilled, for his life has been industrious in the way that the lives of many men who do their duty and take their pleasures in the open air are busy and useful, without filling a large place in the public eye. It is remarkable that we still have with us one who was riding to hounds in the year of the battle of Waterloo. Indeed, Colonel Bower saw his first fox killed within a few months of that event. At that time he was only six years old, and was having his first experience of fox-hunting with the Fife hounds. Just previously the father of Colonel Anstruther Thomson, one of the greatest figures of hunting in the nineteenth century, had finished his connection with the Fifeshire pack, while Mr. John Whyte Melville, the father of the famous sportsman and novelist, had not yet come to the mastership of that Hunt.

Colonel Bower was educated at St. Andrews, and sent out to India at the age of seventeen to join his regiment, the 28th Madras Native Infantry. With this he served six years, and was then for fifteen years on the Staff, remount duties and considerations of health taking him thrice to the Cape, where on the occasion of each visit he became Master of the Union Hounds. When in India Colonel Bower's sporting proclivities found vent in pigsticking or hog-hunting, as it was then more generally termed, and in 1830 the young subaltern of the 28th helped to form the Jaubnat Hunt. On his return to England from India Colonel Bower enjoyed good fox-hunting in several countries, the Tedworth and the Southdown among them. When on a visit to Hampshire in 1857 he was fortunate enough to find himself in a remarkably good gallop with the Hambledon Hounds. This so attracted him that he determined to settle in the country Riding home after the day's sport, he found that the lodge at Droxford was without an occupier, and he accordingly purchased it soon afterwards. The place had belonged to a friend of his, the late Admiral Sir Harry Keppel, and the story runs that the new owner was so pleased with the way in which the stables were planned and built that he named the place Studwell Lodge.

Colonel Bower hunted the Hambledon country for three seasons (1868-71), presided over the Hunt meetings for a great number of years, and still delights to hear of good sport. The fact that Colonel Bower should have celebrated his 100th birthday in the same week that another old M.F.H., Viscount Portman, entered upon his 81st year, is surely a reminder that the attraction for fox-hunting, once firmly formed, is rarely eradicated in the average sportsman. Instances of the enduring charm of the chase are numberless. In Lord Portman there is still on the active list of M.F.H.'s a sportsman who for more than half a century has been Field Master (in his father's time) and Master of the fine pack which bears his name.

Ireland is proud of the fact that in the coming hunting season Mr. W. de Salis Filgate will complete his jubilee as Master of the Louth Foxhounds, having held that office since 1860. In our time we have seen the late Mr. T. C. Garth complete fifty years in the Mastership of his Berkshire pack. In Ireland Mr. Robert Watson put up an even longer record, and in Wales Mr. John Lawrence also exceeded the half century in Mastership. We still have with us a Leicestershire veteran, Mr. W. W. Tailby, who is now in his 85th year, and looking forward to more gallops to hounds next season! May such men as these long be found to inspire young sportsmen to carry on the best traditions of the chase and to preserve its prosperity.

A young stockbroker of convivial habits fell in with an old school friend whom Fate had dumped into a country bank.

"Whenever you're in town come up and see me," he urged his friend as they separated. "No matter what time it is. If I'm not there just go ahead and make yourself at home. I'll be sure to turn up before daybreak."

Soon after this the bank clerk arrived in London about midnight, and, remembering his friend's invitation, sought out his boarding house. There was only a dim light flickering in the hall but he gave the bell a manful pull. Presently he found himself face to face with a landlady of grim and terrible aspect.

"Does Mr. Smith live here?" he faltered.

"He does," snapped the landlady. "Bring him in!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's racing in Calcutta was again full of interest and the results form a very fine answer to the various criticisms of the handicaps. The fact of the case is that Mr. Griffiths does not content himself with working only on the finishing order of the horses but also takes notes of various other important factors, such as the condition of the animal on arriving back in the paddock, the size of the shoes worn, etc. One horse may be ridden right out and finishes third or fourth while others behind have been eased because they had no chance of winning. This does not escape the eagle eye of the man at the wheel and in consequence horses that are ridden out are, as is only right, given every chance and we do not get as in former years unfortunate owners getting third and fourth week after week and something that ran nowhere the time before coming out to beat them in a canter. Of course there were mistakes as there always will be in this imperfect world, but we have certainly not had for a long time past such skilful handicaps nor such wide betting in race after race. This is perhaps the best criterion that the work has been well done, for there cannot be anything very far wrong with the allotment of weights when five or six horses are fairly well backed out of a field of perhaps eight to a dozen. The gentleman who wrote to one of the morning papers to complain that Wal had got a stone too much and Solace had been very badly treated must by this time have come to the conclusion that he knows very little about the subject, as the first named was only just beaten, and the latter won in a canter by five lengths and as a matter of fact in her case any error was distinctly on the side of leniency.

The Midget Handicap was the first race on the card, and all the eight left in started. Echo and First Bell were about equal favourites, the latter because Mr. Galstaun was riding as the stable frankly did not know which of their two, First Bell and Matin Bell was the better and it still remains an open question. The pair finished close together, First Bell fourth just in front of Matin Bell, but the latter had got badly interfered with in the race or would have been further up. Echo just managed to win from Wal, who was coming very fast at the finish and would probably have got home if there had been another furlong to go. Esmeralda, who was close up, ran third.

There were only five in the Open Pony hindle Handicap, Solace and Picaninny both well backed. It was interesting to see old Branga back again in the field and many hoped that he would run well for the sake of old recollections. However, he did not seem to be at all inclined to race, it took Mr. Evers all his time and patience to get him to face the gate and he was hopelessly beaten off when they began to gallop. The outsider of the party, Marconi, made all the pace and though Solace came past him at the end as if he were standing still he was able to stay it out well enough to beat Killarney for second place by half a length, and we give Mr. Glen great credit for his good judgment in forcing his pony along. Mr. Bletsoe on the winner had the race at his mercy at any time and when he began to move up, coming to the fifth hurdle, it was as good as ever.

Again nine out of the ten on the card went out for the Selling Race 1st Division. Souvenir and Silphoe were favourites and there was money forthcoming for everything except Abet, Eruption, and Jacchus. The race was an interesting one throughout and though Blix came away pretty easily at the finish, the result was in doubt till after they had passed the distance. Springlock declaring 5lb. was a good third and if he had been ridden at the handicap weight the finish would heve been even better.

From a variety of causes the field for the Amateur Hurdle Race dwindled down to four only. Fingall's schooling had not been good enough to make it possible to run him. Bonita was kept for the Selling Race. Spinnet came down to the ground and was found to have a swelling on his tendon. Electric Light had been sold to Mr. Tanner, who considered he was looking so tucked up and out of condition that he thought it was not advisable to run him and, most disappointing of all Leading Lady, who many thought had got long way the best of the handicap, was not run owing to a bereavement in her owner's family. Of the four that started Maisonette was favourite, Queen of Hearts next most backed. Mr. Evers made the pace on the light weight as hard as he could and just managed to stay all the way winning absolutely all out by six lengths from the favourite, who was overhauling her stride after stride. There is no doubt that Maisonette is a rare stayer but cannot be got to gallop early in the journey and a mile and a half is much too short for her. Queen of Heart's victory was popular as she is an honest old mare who has not had the best of luck up to now.

For the Selling Race--Divided Handicap II—Haut Fleur was the "great big boom" and in a very open race was backed to 2 to 1 though nobody was able to tell why. Yulgibar was second favourite at threes, Dowuland and Regina both very well backed, and a pretty fair commission brought Sir Ulric from tens down to sevens, one of our leading bookmakers, who stood the brunt of it, getting it "in the neck," Sir Ulric brought it off all right without giving his backers much anxiety, as despite a slight stumble at the crossing he came home a very easy winner by three and a half lengths from Yulgibar, who all out under the whip, only just managed to save second place from the outside Pressy.

For the Kidderpore Plate weight of money drove Sacristan down to 6 to 4 favourite, despite that Foy, Mercedes, Lasso and Manjess were all very well backed, and the good thing came off this time with a surprising lot in hand putting it beyond all doubt that but for his very bad luck at the start last week Sacristan would have defeated Morsel instead of the result going the other way. The horse at last seems to be returning to his old form and Butlin, who has been looking after him since Norton went away at the end of the cold weather, is to be congratulated on his success. Again the handicap was a bit spoilt by overweight declarations as Lasso, and Manjess, who finished third and fourth, each declared 7lb. This over seven furlongs made considerable difference and there would have been a magnificent finish if they had been ridden at their proper weights.

Despite her heavy burden of 10st. 7lb. Mr. Rodoconachi's handsome mare Good Friday was backed down to even money for the Entally Plate with nearly everything else in the race except Master John and Frank, pretty well backed. Even Peter who closed 10 to 1 carried a fair amount at long odds. The last named very nearly brought it off too, as getting quickly out of the gate he was leading at the crossing by some 6 or 7 lengths; here he stumbled and very nearly came over on his nose. He made a marvellous recovery, but of course all hope of the race was out of the question. Many think it would have been certainty for him but for the slip, but we are not so sure of this as at the time he was beginning to go back to his field very fast and would probably have died away to nothing before he had gone much further. After that there was a magnificent race between Lodge Worcester, Good Friday, Frank and Black Paint, the first named just managing to pull it off with the others all close up. Good Friday also had bad luck as she blundered once, thereby losing quite as much as she was beaten by Ynyslas was the great disappointment of the race as she never looked like galloping at any time and finished right in the ruck.

The various stumbles at the crossing were very annoying and it is very difficult to know what can be done to avoid the risk of them if we are to continue to get the incessant rain as the last couple of weeks. Captain Hughes has put down load after load of ashes and everything possible has been done, and the only thing remains to be to pray for a little fine weather.

It is very eloquent of how open was the racing that though three absolute favourites and two second favourites got home the totalisator dividends were pretty good in every case. The smallest paid being at the rate of Rs. 27 for a ten-rupee ticket on Solace and Queen of Hearts respectively, while the others were Rs. 32, 96, 86, 39 and 63, so that odds of nearly 3 to 1 were obtained from the machine even against Sacristan.

Among animals schooled on Monday and Tuesday this week are Badcock (Mr. Rasch), Gem (Mr. Taylor), Emerald (Mr. Tanner), Lola (Mr. Rasch), Scarboro (Mr. Robertson), Pardon (Mr. Evers), Killarney (Mr. Barrow), Meprise (Mr. Evers), Pink 'Un (Mr. Corbett), Carnegie (Mr. Levetus), Fingal (Mr. Levetus) and Ynyslas (Mr. Evers). Emerald and Scarboro's schools were much the best, the latter specially impressing people that he is a very much improved pony. Loch Lily went the full course, and jumped as well as ever, but she looks to be a little bit off colour and not quite the pony that she was when she won two weeks ago. Fingal, in Alford's capable hands, showed considerable improvement and jumped cleanly, though he ran down the first two or three. Carnegie has not been over fences for more than a year and did not shape well, stopping and bucking over. Ynyslas refused several times till he got a lead from Loch Lily when he went on in fair style. On Wednesday only one pair was out—Violet (Mr. Bletsoe) and Badcock (Mr. Rasch); they went the whole course, both jumping well.

The entries for the Saturday, which we publish elsewhere, are again uncommonly good and show that the management of racing matters here is giving much more satisfaction. The Oriental Plate for horses that have never won Rs 1,000 has been divided, which would make two very good races, and as it is said there is also going to be a match between Mr. Billikin to be ridden by Mr. Barrow and Pardon to be ridden by Mr. Evers, we shall get, if this is correct, a card of eight events in all, and have a very good afternoon's sport.

Seven teams have entered for the Poona Junior Polo Tournament which began on Monday, the 16th instant, when three games in the first round were played. In the first of these the Royal Engineers beat Government House by 3 goals to 1 after a fine game. In the next the "Pinchers," a team of visitors from up-country, beat the Poona Gymkhana "A" team by 3 goals to nil and in the other game the Gymkhana "B" team beat the Lincolnshires by 3 goals to 1 after an uninteresting display.

Four games were played on Tuesday. The Mounted Infantry beat the 127th Baluchis by 3 goals to 2. The 33rd Cavalry beat the 26th Cavalry by 7 goals to 2. The 34th Poona Horse beat the 29th Lancers by 5 goals to 2; and the 12th Pioneers beat the Royal Artillery by 5 goals to nil.

The Cawnpore Polo Tournament will begin on the 27th November.

The dates of two important athletic fixtures have just been arranged. Hackenschmidt and Lemm meet for the Wrestling Championship of the World on 4th September. Hackenschmidt, according to the agreement, is to receive £1,000 win or lose. Jim Jeffries, contrary to expectations, has finally decided to fight Jack Johnson for the Heavy weight Boxing Championship of the World, and they have signed articles to fight eight months hence. Jefferies is reported to be getting into good trim, while Johnson meanwhile has engagements with Ketchell and Kaufmann.

The last of the Test Matches between England and Australia ended in draw. The Cornstalks thus win the rubber, having won two matches to England's one. They opened the third day's play with 76 to their credit, scored by Bardsley and Gregory the previous evening. These two scored 180 for the first wicket. Bardsley made 130, his second century in the match, a feat which has not been previously accomplished in a Test Match. The other scores were: Gregory 74, Noble 55, Armstrong 10, Trumper 20, Ransford not out 36, Macartney not out 4, extras 10. With the score 339 for five wickets the Australians declared their innings closed. England then went in and made 104 for three wickets during the hour and a half left for play. Spooner 3, Rhodes 54, Hayes 9, Fry not out 35, Sharp not out 0, and extras 3. The match was thus drawn.

The following are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the last week:—

The match between Sussex and Kent was drawn.

Somerset beat Surrey at Taunton by 3 wickets.

Worcestershire beat Lancashire at Manchester by 7 wickets.

Surrey beat Gloucester by eight wickets.

Lancashire beat Middlesex at Sheffield by five wickets.

Hampshire beat Worcestershire at Worcester by 173 runs.

Lancashire beat Middlesex at Manchester by 243 runs.

Warwickshire beat Northamptonshire at Northampton by 56 runs.

The matches between Nottingham and Sussex, Somerset and Kent, and an England eleven and the Australians at Blackpool, were drawn.

The medical aspects of athleticism were discussed at the meeting of the British Medical Association at Belfast last month.

Dr. Anthony Traill, Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, said that he had been a tutor in the college for thirty-two years, and no fewer than 900 young men had passed through his hands. He could speak with the authority of experience as to the high moral value of athletics.

Sir James Barr said that the more hazardous the game the better the development of the character of the individual, and for that reason he preferred for youths boxing, fencing, wrestling, jumping, running, swimming, football, cycling, rowing, and cricket; while golf, bowls, and curling might be set apart for elderly gentlemen with not too much reserve energy. Regarding the formation of character, it was impossible not to note that it was only the last three games which seemed to be essentially associated with substantial oaths and Scotch whisky!

It seems hardly credible that Edward Payson Weston, the pedestrian who, in the early seventies, electrified England with his marvellous feats on road and track can still be capable of walking across America against time. Yet so it is, and the veteran, if he failed in his task of walking across the American continent in 100 days (Sundays excluded) accomplished a wonderful performance for a man of seventy in covering the 3,975 miles in 105 days and a few hours.

He left New York on 15th March and almost from the start met with bad roads and adverse weather conditions. In parts of Pennsylvania and Ohio the motor with his attendants was unable to keep going owing to the state of the roads, and for a week he was deprived of his own supplies and proper change of clothing. Better conditions were experienced in the prairie States, and his longest day's walk of 78 miles was made on 10th May.

In Wyoming, heat waves alternated with storms, and towns being far apart, food and water of good quality were almost impossible to obtain. In the final stages the snow-clad Sierra Nevada had to be traversed. When Weston handed the letter entrusted to him in New York to the San Francisco postmaster he said:—"It was a great walk, and but for unforeseen difficulties and hardships in the last three weeks of my journey I would have been here on the hundredth day; still, I am feeling fine, and could do it over again."

Weston's name was a household word in London when most of us were at school, and many old-time sportsmen will be interested to hear of the veteran's latest exploit. His great antagonist in those days was O'Leary. It used to be interesting and amusing to watch their utterly different styles of progression. The lean hollow-cheeked Weston used to shuffle along leaning well forward, and one hardly realised that the man was beating records and creating others that stand until this day; Dan O'Leary used to come along all arms and legs with his head thrown very far back and his abdominal muscles very much to the fore.

Athletes all over the world will read with the deepest regret the news that this year's A.A.A. champion weight-putter has met with a serious accident, and now lies in hospital at Cork. While standing in the street he was struck in the chest by the shaft of a jaunting car and knocked down, and when on the ground was kicked by the horse in the head and body, sustaining very serious injuries.

The genial Irish giant has been one of the features at our championships for something like 17 years. From 1893 to 1899 he was undefeated; again, in 1904 and 1905, he proved successful, and though it was rumoured that the last of him had been seen, he turned up last year to uphold the "ould counthry's" honour in the Olympic Games, and, incidentally, won the A.A.A. championship once again, repeating his victory four weeks ago. As a matter of fact, his only defeat in an A.A.A. competition was in 1900, when R. Sheldon, of the N.Y.A.C., put 45 feet 10½ inches to Horgan's 44 feet 6 inches. Denis had his revenge by winning the American championship, and setting up a record which stood for some time, and he has also won Canadian championships and 15 Irish championships.

The Australian Government has informed Mr. James Buckland that a Customs proclamation has been issued prohibiting the importation into the Commonwealth from the territory of Papua of bird of paradise, goura pigeons, and ospreys, "or of the skins, feathers, or plumage of any such bird."

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

A. F. SHERLEY & CO.,

Importation is allowed when the written consent of a principal Customs officer of Papua has been obtained, but consent is only given when the birds or plumage are for a museum or a purely scientific purpose.

MANY dog fanciers are often at a loss as to how to diagnose the symptoms of a sick dog. As a matter of fact, the dog is like his master, as most of his ailments came from indigestion. In a recent digest Dr. H. Clay Glover, the well-known veterinarian, wrote the following on this most important topic :—

"Eczema is also a frequent symptom, and let me state right here that I find more cases of eczematous eruptions arising from a disordered condition of the digestion than any other cause. Doubtless many who will read this will recognize the fact that at some time some certain dog has had some obstinate skin trouble, all kinds of which are by the layman diagnosed as 'mange,' and that, after trying various mange cures to which the trouble has not yielded, the blood has then been treated with no better results. Having so many cases of indigestion in my daily practice, and being so frequently consulted by letter, it became imperative that I should put a remedy in the market for this ailment which dog owners could avail themselves of without the necessity of consulting me. This I have done in the form of a pill.

To any who have or may have in the future indigestion cases, let me advise the following treatment : Feed rather sparingly three times a day on raw or scraped beef, this being the most readily accepted and most easily digested of all foods when the digestion is disordered, allowing no other diet, and giving immediately after each meal one of the digestive pills. Add to the drinking water lime water in the proportion of one to thirty.

By following this treatment as laid down many cases of eczema will disappear. Some probably may be accelerated by the use of a skin lotion in conjunction. Eczema in these instances is merely a symptom appearing in evidence of disordered digestion. Indigestion may be considered as a mild form of gastritis which, if not corrected, will be followed by true gastritis, the stomach being in such condition that nothing is retained, even water being returned immediately after drinking. This will be accompanied by fever, colic, emaciation and only too often followed by death."

ON Saturday, the 17th ultimo favoured with fine weather, John Mitchell, of the Clarence River, measured blades with Harry Pearce, junior, of Middle Harbour, for stakes of £100 aside, the William Beach Cup, and the Championship of Australia.

The race was rowed against a strong flood tide over the world-famed championship Parramatta course, from Ryde Bridge to Searle's Monument, a distance of 3 miles 330 yards.

Both scullers had been on the course for a previous fortnight. Mitchell trained from Towns' shed, and was paced by Thoroughgood ; while Pearce was quartered at Mortlake, and was paced by C. Messenger and trained by Peter Nelson.

The race was eagerly looked forward to by an enthusiastic crowd. Both contestants were confident, well wound up, and in the pink of condition. Pearce tipped the beam at 12st. 12lb., while Mitchell was nearly a stone lighter.

The race was not a good one, and the public were manifestly disappointed. Mitchell did not show up to the form shown in practice, and though he kept Pearce shoving the water away, he never got near enough to him after the first few hundred yards to place the title in jeopardy. Pearce at times showed excellent form, and steered a beautiful course. He rowed with sound judgment right through. Jack Mitchell time and again made herculean efforts to catch his rival, but failed after a very game stern chase, and was beaten by four lengths in 23mins. 43secs.

GUNNER MOIR'S day is apparently over. Following on his defeat by Ian Hague he has recently been knocked out in two rounds by Young Johnson, the colored American boxer. The fight took place on the 23rd ultimo at Kursaal, Southend, and was to be the best of twenty-three rounds for £25 a side and a percentage of the gate receipts.

There was a capital attendance, many Army and Navy representatives being present. Officials : Referee, Mr. G. T. Dunning ; time-keeper, Mr. Fred Sheppard ; seconds for Moir, Jack Walsh and Dave Moore ; seconds for Johnson, Digger Stanley, Jenkins and Fred Drummond. Both men were in good condition, Johnson was giving away weight, height and reach, but even with this handicap romped home an easy winner. Moir cut out a fast pace in the opening round, using left and right at head and body, but his rival covered up and retreated with judgment, and Moir was unable to find a vulnerable spot. Johson held on to his man once or twice and was cautioned by the referee. There was some fast fighting in the last minute, both pegging away at a furious rate, with no advantage to either.

Johnson adopted different tactics in the second round, as he assumed the aggressive at the call of time, and hitting with great force and precision soon had the Gunner down to his own weight. He jabbed with the left on the head and used a heavy right swing on the body, and this quickly told their tale. He followed up his advantage and finally floored Moir, who remained down for seven seconds. On rising he was evidently in Queer Street, and Johnson, seeing his condition, went hot-foot after him, and punching hard with both hands dropped him again this time for eight seconds. Resuming with great pluck, Moir tried hard to turn the tide in his favour, but it was no use, as he was clearly beaten, and Johnson, with a beautifully judged right hander on the point once more floored him, this time for the fatal ten seconds.

THE Poona Royal Connaught Boat Club will again visit Madras for the annual hot weather regatta of the Madras B.C. which has been fixed for the 28th instant. The Colombo Boat Club, who had accepted an invitation to send a representative crew, have since wired their inability to do so. Poona and Madras will therefore once again meet in the fours, pairs and single sculling events. The following are the crews which will represent the two boat clubs in the fours. Poona : Lieut. H. E. Hosking, I. A., bow ; Lieut. J. S. Graham, I. A., 2 ; Captain H. W. Atlay, R. A., 3 ; Lieut. R. C. Wilson, I. A., stroke ; and Lieut. H. S. Pearson, I. A., Cox. Madras : A. W. Ball, bow ; C. G. Barber, 2 ; H. C. N. Prance, 3 ; W. Simmons, stroke.

A DISGRACEFUL riot was witnessed on the ground of the Parsee Baronet Club at Bombay on the 15th instant. At the conclusion of a cricket match between the home team and the Hindu Gymkhana a Hindu empire was mobbed by a number of Parsee spectators, who resented his decision whereby one of the Parsee players had been declared out. This led to a free fight between Hindu and Parsee spectators. Sticks and umbrellas were freely used. Several on both sides were injured, but the police interfered, and stopped further fighting. No arrests were made. A similar incident it appears had occurred between these two clubs four years ago.

THE entries for the Durand Football Tournament this year constitute a record, no fewer than twenty-two teams having sent in their names. The complete list is as follows : (1) Wiltshire Regiment ; (2) North Staffordshire Regiment ; (3) Black Watch ; (4) Connaught Rangers ; (5) 1st Dragoon Guards ; (6) Mountain Artillery Sirhind Brigade ; (7) Durham Light Infantry ; (8) King's Regiment ; (9) 1st West Riding Regiment ; (10) 17th Lancers ; (11) Royal Berkshire Regiment ; (12) Royal Warwickshire Regiment ; (13) Highland Light Infantry ; (14) Bishop Cotton School Football Club ; (15) Royal Scots ; (16) Cameronians ; (17) East Yorkshire Regiment ; (18) Lancashire Fusiliers ; (19) 2nd Battalion, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles ; (20) Simla United Football Club, "A" Team ; (21) Simla United Football Club, "B" Team ; (22) 12th Royal Lancers.

The ties will be drawn on 3rd September, and two matches will be played each day from 13th to 23rd September. The final will take place on the 25th.

THE Poona Divisional Football Tournament ended on Monday, the 16th instant, when the Worcesters from Ahmednagar beat the Leicesters from Belgaum by a goal to nil in the final game.

THE Suburban Challenge Shield Football Tournament was won on the 13th instant by the Veterinary College, who beat the Calcutta F. C. Reserves by 2 goals to 1 in the final.

THE publication of a report recently by the Consultative Committee on attendance at Continuation Schools has aroused some discussion regarding the welfare of the golf caddie at home. In the words of one witness caddying was described as "a blind alley occupation for boys which was highly paid, but which did not lead to any skilled employment." Then, too, not only does the caddie, at popular courses at any rate, earn a good deal of money, but he earns it easily and spasmodically. He has considerable intervals in which he has no better employment than loafing aimlessly, playing pitch and toss, or perhaps putting into small holes of his own construction ; this is especially the case on those courses situated near business centres, where there is a great press of golf at the week end and rather desultory play throughout the week. A reasonably strong boy is certainly not under paid for carrying a bag of clubs over 18 holes at the rate of a shilling a round, to say nothing of luncheon money and perhaps foolishly generous tips. As a result of this comparatively easy going existence the boys may well be apt to acquire a lasting distaste to hard, solid work of any kind, mental or other. In some of the clubs names of caddies are registered upon their first coming to a club, their future employment decided upon and some instruction given them to equip them for it. At a certain age they are obliged to cease their caddy life and billets in other employment are found for them. It has been suggested that much can be done for the caddie by a trustworthy and suitable caddy master. This is the kind of man that would prove useful in the golf clubs of Calcutta. The caddie here and the caddie at home are very different, but the Calcutta caddie often is a decidedly demoralised boy. His constant begging appeals for service when little is doing, his indifference and impertinence when the demand for caddies is large, his affection for pitch and toss and other little matters need correction. A street disciplinarian in charge of him would no doubt much improve the Calcutta caddie.

THE wolf's cousins in the London zoological gardens are numerous, but somehow or other they have all, says a correspondent of the Times, come from the one common stock. It is roughly possible, he says, by the cranial structure to divide the whole dog family into two, what may be called respectively fox-like and wolf-like groups, but their evolution can only be conjectured, through it is certain that originally all alike wolves, jackals, hunting dogs, tame dogs, and foxes came from some member of the wild-dog-wolf-fox family. It is remarked that of all the miscellaneous dog things in the wolves' and foxes' dens in the London zoo "it is curious that the one in which the general public shows most interest is the common English fox. Beside the wolves and hunting dogs it looks a poor, scurrying little thing ; yet there are few questions more often asked of keepers in the gardens than : Can you tell me where I can find a fox?' The zoological gardens are educative in many unexpected ways ; and it is there that tens of thousands of Englishmen, and that not town-dwellers only, get the one opportunity of their lives to see a living fox." It is possible that to inhabitants of India the jackal is of interest in the zoo in somewhat the same way, being an animal whom all know of but seldom see. The jackal receives little complimentary notice. "Wild or tame the jackal is a jackal.

"Be you the lion to devour the prey
I am your jackal to provide for you."

and it is a fact, not literary fancy only, that the jackal lives largely on the leavings of others, whether it be on the rubbish and offal thrown away by man or on the meat of game killed (as in India by the tiger) by other and larger beasts. Of their own initiative it does not appear that jackals normally kill anything more formidable than hares or rabbits and ground-nesting birds, though wounded or ailing animals like deer or antelope and sick sheep and goats often fall a prey to them. Of all the dog family besides being most odoriferous, the jackal is also the most noisy, and those who have once heard the sudden clamour of a pack of jackals breaking upon the silence of an Indian night will never forget it. Kindly Bishop Heber, it is true, spoke of it as "sylvan revelry ;" but most Anglo-Indian writers are less generous : "the crash of a brass band bedevilled ; each throat a fiend's, every fiend double throated." In Holy Writ the word "fox" in the English version should in all probability be more often read as jackal. The "little foxes that spoil the vines" may refer to either fox or jackal, but the animal of which Samson caught three hundred and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put firebrands in the midst between the tails and when he had set the brands on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up both the shocks and the standing corn, and the vineyards and the olives "that animal was, as the Rev. J. G. Wood argued, almost surely a jackal, of which it was then, and would be still in that locality more easy to catch three hundred than to take thirty foxes."

Our Poona correspondent writes:—Punters must have had a really good time of it on Wednesday during the seven events of the Third Extra when only in the last race could the books have shown any profit worth speaking of. It was a dry, cool day with the course in almost perfect condition.

We started off with the first division of the Little Beginners' Plate, in which a field of nine very mediocre ones figured with Defence, Minerva and Little King fancied. Prince Charming, who is coming on well, cut out the pace from Minerva and Ejnah, Minerva soon making up ground lost at the start. Down the straight it looked as though the leader would hang on till Little King was seen coming through, and eventually got there by a neck after nice handling by Ames. Minerva got third from Ejnah, though the latter's late run would have been dangerous if better timed.

The second saw Young Achilles and Prime Minister the only two seriously backed, and the race lay between them. Brown undoubtedly made too much use of the former, though a pull at the bend enabled him to make a tight finish of it, Lahuk coming third and being fixed in the writer's mind now as one to watch.

The Telegaon Plate was also divided, and in one Great Power soon displaced Meerjan in the betting and justified it. We are accustomed to see him out in front, and Hoyt took a nice hold. Good Chance and Humayoon followed, and the latter of these gave backers of the favourite an anxious time, as Great Power only got there a neck, Sir Jamal once more finding a place.

In the second again the goods rolled home, Bay Middleton warming to shorter than Ashroff and Salanic. Salanic and Company made the pace, the latter falling away at the bend. In the home run Ashroff took the lead, but Robinson having a good hold of Bay Middleton landed this great little champion fairly easily.

There is little to say about the Medium Plate, Absentee naturally being practically wiped off with money for Apology a place. It was all Kaesen could do to pull the favourite up, Apology beating Flaneur.

Fifteen accepted for the Hopeful Plate, M. G.'s two, Jadir and Racer commanding the market. Jadir and King Henry headed the field and at the bend Namuk and Racer came up, Thaboor outside. Hoyt was in no hurry on Racer and came away at the right time to bent Thaboor and Hyder.

Lastly the Club Plate, with only four runners. Yuba, on recent up-country form, was 5 to 2 on, but after getting left made a poor show, though catching her field very fast at the turn. Chassepot passing White Heather at the bend won by over two lengths all out. This was the only real upset of the day.

In the Medium Plate Ralph Hoyt made his first appearance and made the running on Haymaker. His Australian reputation is a great one.

Another great day's racing on Saturday, the Fourth Extra, when entries were so good that a divided race made eight, all well filled and of a good class. There was no really bad upset this time and punters beat the books.

Seven out of eight went for the Tallyho Plate, Dirty Boy being out and Our State left in to go out a decided favourite from Pincher and Umutbee. Pincher and Our State made the running till Daroji came up to them at the mile and later Greenstone made up ground. Nearing the last lap, Our State just led, and in the home run stayed Greenstone out; Umutbee and Daroji dead-heating close up. It was a fairly easy win and shows Ferguson with a pretty strong hand.

The Novice Plate was the divided race, and naturally a poor class was out. In the first Afreed was better fancied than Orby, Porter and Corrector. This last one ran last all the way though well spoken of, and a seemingly dangerous one in Nishan went very wide—unfortunate for Ott's first ride. Porter made the pace, but Afreed and Orby passed him at the post in that order, without either being troubled much.

The other was very open, Minerva, Narsin and Mizhir Beg, all about three's. This time Minerva was well away, Narsin tackling him entering the straight. They ran locked together under the whip right up to the stand, where Narsin got in front, Steel and Thuvil dead-heating next.

Also open was the Welter Plate, Sabah, Gwalior and Hishan being shortest. Vedas and Gwalior made the early running till Plassy took it up, Sabah and Arabistan passing Gwalior. Vedas hung on, but Plassy won fairly comfortably nicely handled by Captain Hopwood.

One does not expect as classy a field in these Extras as we saw in the Monsoon Plate. Tangaroa first a hot favourite and then having to share that place with Soult Line. These were the only ones ever in it, out in front dead level till at the distance Robinson had to begin riding and Alf. Hoyt drew away comfortably on Soult Line. It was a great performance and every one admitted having seen the best sprinter in the country. Ebullition followed them all the way, beating Wise Bird a "shop."

The most open race and biggest field of the day was the mile Chinchwad Plate, Spearmint, Precious and Bendigo shortest. Chungiz and Precious, then Young Salanic made the pace till at the bend Urgent and Bendigo came up to them. From there Bendigo went away and with Evans keeping a bit in reserve, stayed out Darianoor and Precious, Second Thoughts coming with a rattle into fourth place.

Once again, one can only say Absentee won as he liked, the books at the finish refusing to quote a price. Not Yet made the running for a mile, but it was Flaneur and Hunting Horn who followed the favourite home.

Bay Middleton was in great demand for the Midget Handicap, Shanwar and Darby next—Grey Falcon expanding. Shanwar made all his own running, and Ferguson was taking no chances; a long gap at the post separating him from Gafur, Bay Middleton and Hishan in that order.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 30th July 1909.

Summer has again disappeared; she took flight about the same time as that daring Gallic aviator Bleriot flew across from Calais. The week has been a gloomy and wet one. "Glorious Goodwood" was very poorly patronised and no wonder when I tell you that the outstanding feature of the ducal meeting was torrential rain. On the opening day the conditions were such as I have many a time and oft experienced in Calcutta during a Monsoon meeting, and the following days were hardly more cheerful. Prospects for the holiday makers are decidedly depressing; they have been leaving London at the rate of something more than 100,000 a day. Since Tuesday, all mackintoshes, umbrellas and profanity, and your "Vagrant," who takes his own little "well-earned" next week, is not liking the outlook. But enough of weather diatribe—"bus," as you say in your picturesque and comprehensive vernacular.

* * * * * *

A week or two ago one heard of, read of, and saw nothing but Lieutenant Shackleton; he is now almost as big a back number as Miss Charlsworth, the Fleet, or Mr. D. S. Windell. To-day it is Bleriot and nothing but Bleriot; London is monoplane mad. He has accomplished much longer and better flights overland, but the twenty odd miles across the English Channel is considered to have eclipsed all that has gone before, goodness knows why. For my own part, were I to take to aviation, I think I should steer for the oily sea, where the falling is soft and on which the monoplane floats the while the merry aviator (in his inflated life saving rig out) smokes his cigarette till the tug-boat steams up alongside and takes him and his belongings aboard. But there it is, the public will have it that the Cross Channel feat is one of splendid audacity and one must leave it at that.

Bleriot came across in the early hours of Monday while yet the casual Latham was in his little bed, and henceforth he is famous. Frenchmen are quite good at crossing La Manche ahead of their competitors. It was a Frenchman, Blanchard, who first crossed the Channel from England to France in a balloon lighter than air; it is a Frenchman who, more than a century after, first crossed from France to England in a flying machine heavier than air.

Bleriot, judging the south-west wind favourable to his purpose, started from Les Baraques, near Calais. A French destroyer was on the watch to follow the flight, but the monoplane outflew the vessel and passed out of its sight. The vivid account taken from Bleriot's own lips, shows that for ten minutes in mid-Channel he had no knowledge of his whereabouts. Then he found himself near Deal. He could have landed on the beach, but he turned and beat up the coast towards Dover, his appointed objective. As he neared the famous cliffs, he was seriously troubled by deflected currents of wind, and had to stand out to sea again.

Then, steering for a gap in the cliffs, he made his way in, and was again in difficulties with adverse air-currents. As he came down to earth on a grassy mound near Dover Castle, the last part of the descent was an unmistakable fall, and the impact broke the propeller and front frames of his monoplane, and damaged the seat on which he sat. But the flight was accomplished, and the Channel crossed and the fame of the exploit will be enduring. He has been paraded in triumph, fed, addressed, mobbed, presented with prizes and gifts already aggregating £5,000; he has been interviewed, pursued, pestered, photographed, cartooned, represented and misrepresented: he has written autographs till his pencils have been worn to stumps and his fingers have ached; in short since he alighted on that little green patch at Dover, he has led the strenuous life. I may add that he seems to like it.

Poor Mr. Hubert Latham made a second unsuccessful attempt to fly across on Tuesday: this time he got within a couple of miles of Dover before he dived into the sea. His machine was extensively damaged and his face and head were severely cut about. He is a good plucked one, but he has no luck.

The Bisley meeting is over and Corporal H. G. Burr of the London Rifle Brigade, the Kings' prizeman, has been cheered and chaired as per time honoured custom. It has been a most successful meeting in almost every respect except one, namely, that incomprehensible thing, the Weather. The council of the National Rifle Association have justified their position and their high reputation as custodians and supporters of the art of rifle-shooting. Next year we may see closer ties established between them and the War Office, and, indeed, with all branches of His Majesty's fighting forces. Those who desire that English marksmanship should fulfil the promise and pledge of youth, when it was ever first with bow and arrow, will strengthen the hands of the National Rifle Association, that it may continue unfettered to develop the standard of shooting to the betterment of firearms and the increase of national skill in their use. The question of bull's-eye target versus other forms of training and competition may be discussed or ignored, but this is certain—there is no royal road to perfection in shooting except through practice combined with the exercise of clear vision, sound judgment, and good nerves. No system that has been or can be devised will supersede those excellent British qualities.

Meanwhile Lord Roberts has bobbed up serenely after his fall over the Compulsory Service bill and now we find him trying to enlist the aid of the girls—the best girls—in the scheme for making every young feller a Terrier and incidentally a rifle shot. I am not sure that I can endorse Lord Roberts' advice to girls not to dance or play tennis with young men until they join the Territorials. Such a course would leave so many bewitching damsels at the disposal of the Territorials for flirtation drill that military matters might stand in danger of neglect.

Madan Lál Dhingra, the murderer of Sir W. Curzon Wyllie and Dr. Lalcaca, suffers the extreme penalty the law provides at Pentonville prison on the 17th proximo. The man Horsley, printer of the Indian Sociologist, has got four months' imprisonment for his share of the crime. We await the next dastardly outrage of the sort, and in the opinion of those who ought to know, it will not be long coming; indeed such lamentable occurrences may be expected at any time till the British Government looks this Indian student and sedition question squarely in the face and—acts.

I may mention in this connection that in recognition of the long and excellent services rendered to the State by the late Sir Curzon Wyllie, and, in view of the circumstances in which he met his death, the Secretary of State has decided, with the unanimous approval of the Council of India to grant to Lady Wyllie a special pension of £500 a year for life. The pension has been granted from the Indian revenues, because Sir Curzon Wyllie served the whole of his life in India. And I may add that a general meeting of subscribers to the Curzon-Wyllie Memorial Fund was held last Tuesday with Sir William Lee Warner in the chair. On the motion of Sir Alfred Lyall, seconded by Colonel Sir Reginald Hennell, a general committee was constituted for the purpose of determining hereafter the form which the memorial is to take. Earl Roberts was elected chairman of the general committee, which included Viscount Morley, Lord George Hamilton, Lord Lamington, Lord Ampthill, Sir Alfred Lyall, Sir Felix Schuster, and others.

Frozen pigs from China form the latest addition to our food staples! The first consignment to London within the records of the port medical authority was this week unloaded from the S.S. Palermo in the Albert Docks. There were in all 1,463 frozen carcases. A thorough examination of the whole cargo will be made by inspectors before the pigs can be used for food, but sample carcases selected for examination have been found in good condition. The results of the experiment are being awaited with interest, for should profitable prices be realised further cargoes are likely to follow. I should say Chinese pork is not likely to commend itself to those who have lived in the East. If John Chinaman's pig picks up his provender after the manner of his brother the Indian village scavenger, the less we have to do with roast pork from Canton the better methinks!

Too few war horses is still the bitter cry of the Army Remount Department; Mr. Haldane's recent activities have again emphasised this. The experiment of the mobilisation of one of the four divisions of Regular troops at home, begun at Aldershot this week, has revealed a very serious shortage. The subsidised horses necessary to make the troops ready for war are for the most part already engaged by the Territorial Forces now under training, or about to proceed to camp, and are in consequence unavailable. It has been found impossible to fill their places except at an enormous cost, so an important part of the division has been cut out, this being the divisional transport and supply park in which is carried the reserve rations, ammunition, and stores. Every available horse in the Aldershot command with all those brought down by the Territorials and several train loads of omnibus horses from London, have been pressed into the service to turn out this one incomplete division, all of which indicates a serious position I should say.

Attacks by Indian native servants on masters who have been so ill-advised as to bring them to England grow in frequency. I gave you details of two cases not many weeks ago; a third has just occurred. Mr. Francis Boxwell, of the Indian Civil Service, now on leave, brought home with him a turbulent Mohamedun khitmutgar who last Monday attacked his master with a sword and would probably have murdered him had he not been promptly disarmed.

The study of a young girl who is an incurable liar might have been made interesting by Mr. Norreys Connell in book-form. It is not suited to the stage; at any rate, as he presented it in "Thalia's Teacup," produced on Saturday night at the Court before a very friendly audience that gave it kindly welcome.

For Thalia Twickenham, who promised to be entertaining in the first act, grew very tiresome long before the third was reached. A seventeen-year-old schoolgirl, she pretends she has lost her railway ticket when she has spent the money intended for it in other directions; she bamboozles a rising barrister, a clergyman, and an imperial yeoman; persuades some of them to hide in an ottoman, after taking out a quantity of lingerie, and finally pairs off with her cousin Frank, who has seen through her all along.

There is nothing but threadbare incident in all this; and the dialogue is unreal and generally commonplace, such witticisms as it contains being cheap and obvious. Mr. Connell has not done himself justice.

Miss Thyrza Norman was very good in the first act, with her hair down. After that, with her hair up, she was no longer a mischievous seventeen-year-old schoolgirl, but an objectionable young lady, which, we take it, was not the author's intention. Such well-known people as Miss Isabel Grey, Mr. Athol Stewart, Mr. Edmund Gurney, Mr. H. K. Hignett, and Mr. E. W. Tarver played in the piece, but mostly gave the impression that they were square pegs conscientiously trying to fit themselves into round holes.

AFTER ELEPHANT IN UGANDA.

The above country is not recognised as a happy hunting ground for the ordinary tourist sportsman. In the first place, British East Africa holds a far larger variety of big game generally; and in the second, the latter country, with its better climate and far more attractive conditions of sport, retains within its grasp at least 90 per cent. of the men who travel to the hinterland of Mombassa in search of sport.

In one respect, however, Uganda has a distinct advantage, and that is in regard to elephants. These can be located for an absolute certainty, besides which their teeth are famous for size and weight. A wise legislature restricts one to two on the £50 license, though but a short while ago an extra Rs. 250 would purchase the right of shooting a third. There are many parts of Uganda in which they are to be found at any season of the year, but undoubtedly Ungoro is the best centre. Before reaching this district at the tail end of a three months' shoot in Uganda itself, I had viewed a good many herds, particularly in the valley of the Semliki, bordering on the Congo, but had seen nothing better than about 50lbs. per tusk, so had left them alone. Upon arriving at Hoima, the administrative capital of Ungoro, and making enquiries as to localities, etc., I found that early this year (1909) when the grass was on the short side, the district had been greatly overrun by shooters, and that the various herds had got rather wild and distinctly crusty tempered. This had been due to the recent action of the Belgians, in withdrawing their outposts from the west bank of the Upper Nile, in consequence of which every man in the country with a rifle and spare time had hastened thither after ivory. The game did not last very long without interruption, for the Congo authorities soon had some up-country native officials on the spot turning all shooters (that they could catch) back, and confiscating their ivory and possessions; but in the early days of the rush a great many elephants met their death. Ungoro being exactly on this line of entering Congo territory, most of the sportsmen who had been across the border took out a Uganda licence and shot their two on the way down. A good many stories were current concerning this influx of unlicensed shooters into Belgian territory. One man, who was stripped of everything except the clothes he stood in, and put across the Nile into British dominions, waited where he was till all was quiet again, borrowed a rifle, recrossed the river, and in 14 days came back with £1,100 worth of ivory! Another got mixed up in a shooting match, the unfortunate result of which was that a native Askari bit the dust.

The ground where I formed my camp for the purpose of procuring my two was in the centre of an almost flat bit of scrub country, twenty odd miles square, not very much west of Lake Chioga. This is but one small portion of an immense district, very sparingly inhabited, all of which is crossed and recrossed by thousands of elephant tracks, both old and new. They are always on the move, making vast circles, and at any time of year some of the multitudes will probably be in the vicinity mentioned. In June the grass is rather long, but not so bad as it gets later, and there is no extreme difficulty in obtaining a view of a pair of tusks. Hunting elephant when you are limited to two, and when a heavy fine is inflicted if you kill a cow, is a very different affair from chasing the same animal with carte blanche.

Some men have been out several months without getting a favourable opportunity at what they consider good enough to let go at; others again have got their two in a week. I know one man who came to these parts, and the first day he went out saw a bull carrying nearly 300lbs. of ivory in the middle of a herd of 20 other bulls, none of which had tusks weighing under 70lbs. apiece. He spent the next two months trying to get this monster, and then, having to get back, was fain to be content with a pair of sixties.

Personally my very first day on this ground was successful enough. After finding a small herd of cows and calves, we very soon afterwards ran into a dozen bulls, all pretty good. There was a treacherous absence of breeze, and the first thing that happened was that they got our wind, and instead of their running away, it was the gunbearer and myself who did the bolting, for they charged en masse! I doubt if they actually saw us, and anyway we soon got clear a few hundred yards away. Luckily by the time we had recovered our breaths, a fairly steady movement of the air—it could hardly be called a breeze—commenced, so we at once returned towards the spot from which we had been so summarily ejected. We could still hear their thunderous internal rumblings, and knew that they were within about a quarter of a mile, but were very nearly suprised to find one of them within shot of us before we had advanced a hundred yards. There he stood, however, three quarter facing, at about 35 yards distance. I accordingly at once gave him a salute from the ·500 cordite at the point of the shoulder, whereat he went off through some thick stuff more or less down wind. Taking up the tracks we next observed him motionless in some high grass, about half a mile further on. We at once made a circle so as to come up wind to him and got within about 80 yards, but could not distinguish how he stood, owing to the length of the grass. After a moment or two it seemed to me that he was extraordinarily still, and being slightly taller than the natives with me, and consequently having a better view, it occurred to me that he was down after all. I lost no time in sending a man up a tree and then found that he had fallen dead—on his nose, with his legs more or less straggled, and the left tusk stuck into the ground. This latter tusk, as is so often the case, proved the better of the two, the right being considerably worn down. They turned the scales at 110lbs. and 90lbs. respectively, the length of the left being 8 feet 4 inches. We took an old bullet out of the extreme socket of one tusk, that must at times have occasioned the poor beast considerable pain. Also there were old bullet marks on the rump and aft foreleg. [I may say here that it is comparatively rare to shoot a respectable bull nowadays, without finding some old wound upon him].

About a week later I got my second at a fresh camp 18 miles away. Elephants seem very speedily to communicate with each other concerning the death of a comrade, and as often as not they will temporarily leave the jungle in which one has been shot in a body, perhaps not returning for some few weeks. The new ground that I selected was of similar character to the other, on the east side of the Kaju river, but according to native reports really heavy tuskers were seldom seen there. It was more the resort of large herds of cows and calves, with a few respectable bulls scattered about amongst them. I came up with one of these herds numbering anything from 60 to 100—it was impossible to count owing to the bush—but could make nothing of them. All the bulls in the herd seemed young and carried poorish tusks, but even had they been worth powder and shot they were far too much mixed up with their female and younger relatives to be get-at-able. Hovering about, however, on the outskirts of this herd, but never actually mingling with them, was an old tusker that was worth going for. The first time I saw him I remained so long examining his teeth with a Zeiss glass before I could make up my mind that he was good enough, that ere I got up to him he had moved off down wind and temporarily taken up rather an impregnable position. An hour or so later he moved out into more open ground, and I was able to bowl him over with two body shots and a finisher. One shot ought to have done the trick, as I was very close and had everything in my favour, but he upset my calculation by moving forward as I was pressing the trigger, and thus received the shot a foot too far back. These tusks at first sight appeared a poorish pair, from their comparative shortness, but I knew they were well on the thick side, and was not surprised to find their maximum girths 20½ and 20 inches respectively. The lengths when removed from the skull were 6 feet 8 inches and 6 feet, which is fairly stunted for these parts. Their weights were 75lbs. and 72lbs., so that without having had the good fortune to run against any of the giants, I had without much difficulty secured my two with an aggregate weight of 347lbs. As this contribution to the INDIAN FIELD is not intended to embrace any account of the pursuit of game other than elephant, I will close by merely stating that about 15 varieties of big game (in Uganda itself) in a three months' shoot (with plenty of hard marching) would be as much as anyone could expect.

TWO QUERIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I should be very much obliged if you or any of your readers could kindly reply to either of the following questions :—

(1) Is "Radiol" any good for a sprain of the suspensory ligament?

(2) Is there any cure for a horse that rears up when one approaches it, so badly as to frequently break loose though the animal practically never rears up when one is once mounted or even has one's foot in the stirrup?

THE AMATEUR HURDLE RACE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Monday evening's issue of the Empire contains the following in its report of the third Monsoon Race Meeting anent the Amateur Hurdle Race :—

"Maisonette, who started tailing off almost from the beginning, was brought along with a flourish when there was not the slightest hope of catching the leader and her rider could be anything but complimented on the poor show of judgment of pace he displayed."

It might be interesting to learn from the erudite scribe who penned the above very decisive assertions whether he has any advice to offer as to how a slow beginner can be got on his legs as quickly or, if possible, quicker than a sprinter—or, failing this, whether—always keeping the C. T. C. rules in mind—it would be advisable for the rider in a case like this, to go on in the early part of the race without the horse! and if he will oblige with his advice and opinion on these points in the same quaint and technical language in which his original criticism of the race is couched it will be the more interesting.

The racing accounts which have appeared during the last few weeks from his pen have caused much general entertainment and in the dull season at least deserve recognition and encouragement.

Yours faithfully,
I. D. B.

17th August 1909.

P.S.—Since writing above I see to-night's paper attempts an explanation of yesterday's criticism. We need go no further than the first five lines :—

"In better class the previous Saturday when the going was much heavier and when Spinnet and Leading Lady made the pace a cracker Maisonette was well up, &c, &c."

The class was not better. The going was not heavier. Spinnet and Leading Lady's race was won in 1min. 18secs. as against 1min. 17⅘secs. on the second occasion, and Maisonette was not well up—not so close as on Saturday last (until the finish) and so on.

So much for our scribes facts, and he is not even entertaining or amusing as he usually is. For once at least he is quite incorrect. Even my initial is put down incorrectly and has thereby failed to raise a smile. "I.B.D." has no meaning but "I.D.B." may be intelligible to many of my friends.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Third Day, Thursday, 12th August 1909.

THE rain on Wednesday made the course very heavy and showers this afternoon interfered with the sport which was only fair. Numerous scratchings were responsible for small fields throughout, five being the greatest number to face the starter. Pendred repeated his victory of last year in the Channer Stakes, Riverside II won the Ceylon Police Cup, and Mr. Torrington scored two wins—with The Lily in the Epsom Handicap and with Mint in the Stewards' Handicap, both ridden by Firth who also steered President to victory in the New Handicap. H. E. the Acting Governor and H. E. Rear Admiral Slade were present, the Navy were "at home," and the Band of the flagship and the Band of the 98th Infantry played at intervals. Results:—

THE AUCTION STAKES.—Rs. 650, of which Rs. 100 to the second pony, and Rs. 50 to the third pony. For Arab and Ceylon-bred ponies 14 hands and under. Ponies entered to be sold for Rs. 1,000 to carry 11st. Selling price to be declared at entry. 5 furlongs.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

RACING forces rejoined at Hurst Park on Saturday, the Liverpool contingent making an appreciable increase in the muster, while the Saturday half-holiday folk augmented the crowd of skirmishers on the Hurst. A high wind, sending clouds scudding, brought several drenching storms, rain and sunshine alternating throughout an April afternoon, but the brisk breeze soon dried the grass, and the going was again perfect. Results:—

A THREE-YEAR-OLD SELLING PLATE—Of 200sovs. 1 mile.

GOODWOOD.

Unfortunately for visitors to the ducal park on Tuesday, the overnight suggestion of bad weather proved correct, as the afternoon was not only moist and unpleasant, but one of the dirtiest ever experienced here. The company, headed by the King and Queen, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Victoria, had hardly settled down for the enjoyment of the programme when half a gale sent up the sea-fret, which, strengthening like spindrift from a roaring sea, fairly lashed across the hills, filling the air and blotting out the rain at intervals, and exacting a penalty of a thorough wetting for a five minutes exposure thereto. With business practically paralysed many of the drenched occupants of Tattersall's, whose occupation was gone for lack of customers, turned it up as a bad job. There was no respite, rain driving incessantly, and those hardy holiday souls who came to see the "fun" and the fashions, melted away drenched and dispirited.

As the day lengthened the storm strengthened, and right glad was a moderate attendance when the curtain fell. What would have been a brilliant company assembled to greet their Majesties, but everybody was driven to cover, and the delightful al fresco picnic associations of the meeting were ruthlessly shattered. The attendance on a "Plate" day is rarely so good as that on the occasion of the Stewards' Cup, and many choked off by Tuesday's experiences stopped away on Wednesday; but the muster was a good one, leading up, let us hope, to a culmination under most pleasant conditions on Cup Day. Better going could not have been desired, and for the most part fields panned out well. Results:—

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

RACING forces rejoined at Hurst Park on Saturday, the Liverpool contingent making an appreciable increase in the muster, while the Saturday half-holiday folk augmented the crowd of skirmishers on the Hurst. A high wind, sending clouds scudding, brought several drenching storms, rain and sunshine alternating throughout an April afternoon, but the brisk breeze soon dried the grass, and the going was again perfect. Results:—

GOODWOOD.

Unfortunately for visitors to the ducal park on Tuesday, the overnight suggestion of bad weather proved correct, as the afternoon was not only moist and unpleasant, but one of the dirtiest ever experienced here. The company, headed by the King and Queen, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Victoria, had hardly settled down for the enjoyment of the programme when half a gale sent up the sea-frei, which, strengthening like spindrift from a roaring sea, fairly lashed across the hills, filling the air and blotting out the rain at intervals, and exacting a penalty of a thorough wetting for a five minutes exposure thereto. With business practically paralysed many of the drenched occupants of Tattersall's, whose occupation was gone for lack of customers, turned it up as a bad job. There was no respite, rain driving incessantly, and those hardy holiday souls who came to see the "fun" and the fashions, melted away drenched and dispirited.

As the day lengthened the storm strengthened, and right glad was a moderate attendance when the curtain fell. What would have been a brilliant company assembled to greet their Majesties, but everybody was driven to cover, and the delightful al fresco picnic associations of the meeting were ruthlessly shattered. Results:—

The attendance on a "Plate" day is rarely so good as that on the occasion of the Stewards' Cup, and many choked off by Tuesday's experiences stopped away on Wednesday; but the muster was a good one, leading up, let us hope, to a culmination under most pleasant conditions on Cup Day. Better going could not have been desired, and for the most part fields panned out well. Results:—

That Cup day has not lost its old charm and prestige in the countryside was evident yesterday by the influx of holidaymakers who made a strong show on the far side of the course, and massed themselves on Trundale Hill in such numbers as recalled old times. The card, owing to paucity of runners, did not furnish such exciting afternoon's sport as might have been the case. We saw tip-top class out, 'tis true, but there was a lack of excitement throughout, and the afternoon's sport may be described as tame when judged by the standard of glorious Goodwood. Results:—

HALNAKER PLATE—Of 200sovs. 5 furlongs.

MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.

Striking energy,
2,899 ft. lbs.,

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

ESTABLISHED 1821.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Ercom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

ROWING.

THE WINGFIELD SCULLS.—A. A. Stuart, brother of D. C. R. Stuart, the Cambridge stroke, and of C. M. Stuart, the Kingston stroke, won the Wingfield Sculls on Friday afternoon, last and thereby became amateur champion of the Thames for the ensuing year. He is the first man who has ever won the Diamond Sculls, the London Cup, and the Wingfields in the same month, and the first Kingston man to be amateur champion since Gilbert Kennedy won in 1893.

The story of the race is a simple one, for the winner led all the way. Kinnear never stopped chasing him, and Thomson never stopped chasing both of them. Edye, who had strained his arm in the London Cup a few days ago, was compelled to stop in a mile, for the muscle, though strapped up, did not stand the strain of another race so soon.

Edye of Auriol, on the Surrey side, shown up by F. Lean, started at 29. Kinnear, of Kensington, in the second station, shown up by A. E. Yeman, contented himself with the same pace. Stuart, of Kingston, in the third station, shown up by his brother, D. C. R. Stuart, went away fast at 10, 17, and 33 for the full minute, which took him away from the rest at once. Thomson, of Trinity Hall, on the Middlesex shore, was steered by J. M. Heath, and put in 27 strokes in the first sixty seconds; but his work looked all wrong, and I do not think his boat suited the rough water of the tideway; for the weather was overcast and windy, with a breeze off the Surrey shore in Putney Reach, and very bad water at Chiswick. The men were started by Blackstaffe from the Timmy, which carried Gilbert Kennedy and a few other passenger. The rule is that the men shall go through the big span of Hammersmith Bridge, and any arch at Barnes, but no difficulties of any kind arose, as they were never close enough together.

The leader reached the mile in 4mins, 58secs, being kept rather too far out by Kinnear, who was sculling well and showing capital watermanship, as he did throughout. Soon afterwards Edye had retired, and Thomson went right across to the Surrey shore behind the leaders. At Hammersmith Bridge the watch showed 9mins, 8secs, with Stuart 6secs, ahead of Kinnear. It began to rain and blow badly soon afterwards, and all three scullers were only too glad to hug the Surrey shore as closely as possible for whatever shelter was to be got. Kinnear went very well through the rough stuff, and Thomson kept plugging along behind with his usual bulldog pertinacity. They passed Chiswick Steps in the same order, Stuart getting there in 15mins, 14secs, 19secs, ahead of Kinnear, and 41secs, ahead of Thomson, who made the best crossing to the Devonshire meadows, being wise enough to go for shelter under the grass bank as soon as he possible could after the Griffin Brewery. Both Kinnear and Stuart seemed to stay too long among the waves in the middle of the river, but nothing affected the result, and Stuart went under Barnes Bridge in 21mins, 27secs, with a longer lead than before.

From here to the finish it became a question whether Thomson would get up to Kinnear or not. But the Kensington man never let him come too near, and all three sculled the last quarter of a mile with remarkable determination considering the hard work that had gone before. Stuart won by many lengths in 26mins, 6secs, slow time which may be accounted for by the very slack tide, and the extremely bad conditions.

POLO.

THE CHAMPION CUP. FINAL TIE.

ROEHAMPTON BEAT 11TH HUSSARS by 11 goals to 2. For the ensuing year the championship of polo rests in good hands. In every respect Roehampton are worthy of the honours which fell to them on Saturday, and though one could not but lament the absence from the historic tournament of such teams as the Old Cantabs (holders) and Rugby, every one will agree that the winners are a brilliant side.

It is greatly to be regretted that there was a marked disparity in the ponies used by the rival teams—so marked, indeed, that it took all the interest out of the game after the first twenty minutes. Roehampton were superior individually to the soldiers, but it was the latter's weakness in mounts which let them down so terribly. One felt sorry for the gallant winners of the Inter-Regimental Tournament when the civilians literally rode round them on many occasions, and one was inclined to wonder what would have happened if the teams had changed ponies. For the losers Captain Lakin and Major Fitzgerald were best. Major Pitman played soundly and well at No. 1, but he found Captain Lloyd a tremendous handful. One did not envy Captain Sutton his task of tackling men like Captain Wilson and Mr. Grenfell, especially as they were both in form. As for the winners, it is difficult to individualise, as all did well. Perhaps the best display was Captain Lloyd's.

There was rather a dramatic beginning, as right from the throw-in Roehampton took the ball down, and catching the soldiers' defence at fault Mr. Grenfell scored. Afterwards the Hussars played spiritedly and well and they did quite as much of the work as their opponents did in this opening period. However, not until the second ten did they score the equalising goal, this being the effect of a splendid long drive by Captain Lakin. Soon afterwards Mr. Grenfell put his side ahead again, and from that point the game calls for no detailed description. Utterly outpaced and often outplayed, disaster followed on disaster for the military team, and after being 5 goals to the bad (6-1) at half-time, they succumbed as stated. Team:

ROEHAMPTON.—Mr. R. Grenfell, Captain H. Wilson Mr. N. Edwards, and Captain H. Lloyd (back).

11HT HUSSARS.—Major T. T. Pitman, Major P. Fitzgerald, Captain M. L. Lakin, and Captain F. H. Sutton (back).

Umpires: Captain E. D. Millar and Captain T. H. Hesketh

The cup was presented by Lady Howick.

Hunting.

THE POONA HUNT.

QUITE a number of Bombay people were out last Rye Day, mostly having remained over the week-end after racing on Saturday. It was therefore a fairly full meet at Kalas. First a move was made along the Alandi Road, and at the 7th mile-stone a jack was found who went away northward. He did not stand the pace very long, as after a run of about two miles he was killed.

A chinkara gave us a bit of a run back again to the Nasik Road, where we again got on to another jack. Making across the Alandi Road, he made good his escape after a run of about a mile. Again hounds had a run after a chinkara, but after a couple of checks they were called off and tracks were made for home.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 3rd August.—Andy Plantation 12 noon. A nice cloudy day, occasional gimpses of sunshine and light showers of rain. Mist was conspicuous by its absence. It was one of the best hunting days we have had for a long while: three of the fastest and best runs followed in quick succession. The first jack was found on the hill above Dante's Spinney; running him through this covert they drove him across to Lady Lawley's Shola and out at the top on to the Krurmund Bridle Path and raced him along it to just short of Sultan Shola. He turned down to the right and keeping to the left of the stream ran at a tremendous pace to below Little Yemakal, then on through the corner of the covert to the left and along the bottom of Yemakal to the Toda Munda; turned sharp back into a small clump of trees where he was run into and killed. Miss Lawley, who was at the top of the hunt with the Master, had a nasty toss, her horse falling backwards with her into a large hole full of water, but I am happy to say neither are any the worse. Mr. Horne also came to grief in a bad crossing but was not hurt. After the obsequies of this good jack had been observed the Master moved on to Chemmund. Hounds feathered on a faint line outside the covert; at the top near Khed they struck it fresher and carried it into the covert; with a joyful burst of music they streamed out again to the left and raced down to Road Shola; turned up over the ridge into Dormer, through this and Denny and down the hill to the Yemakal Stream which they crossed below Irwin's Clump; running right up to the top they suddenly dropped down the hill and headed as if for Little Yemakal Shola, but instead ran left handed round the base of One Tree Hill, recrossed the stream and rose the hill to Chemmund. The pack was considerably strung out by now, the leading hounds being a long way ahead of the others. The jack only skirted the edge of the covert and with a twist to the left ran down Chemmund Nullah and got to ground under a large rock, where hounds killed him. As the day was still young the Master drew up towards Windy Gap. At the head of Bungalow Shola hounds were off again on another chiney. Racing through Bungalow Shola and Bacon Wood they took a line to the right of Duff's Earth into Yemakal Shola, coming out at the far side ran up past Nadan Koa Mund, and killed their jack near Pillay Shola. This was another very fast run of 30 minutes.

Thursday, 5th August—Double Crossing 8 A.M. A delightfully fresh morning after the downpour of the previous day, a large number of followers turned up at the meet. Drew along Bagman to Bluegums before a jack was found, which gave us a fast and merry chivey of 20 minutes. A brace of jacks was on the move in Raby Bough; they crossed over into Bluegums and one of them was viewed away to the right above the Potato Field; hounds were quickly on his line and ran him through Rallywood over Brickkiln Crossing. Then followed a fast and furious gallop along the Blackmore Vale over the stream below Point to Point Covert and down the other side of Newmarket. Just short of the Sandy Nullah they swept round to the right and ran into their jack not far from Gold Mine Crossing. Few were in at the death and they had to ride hell for leather to keep on anything like terms with hounds; they fairly raced their jack from start to finish. A long draw brought us to the right of Dante's Spinney; drawing up the bog to the right hounds feathered on a line below Pulpit Shola and were soon running hard through the covert on the trail of a jack; turning to the left they ran down to the ravine and up through Climbank topped the hill and disappeared down the far side and on past Bog Head and Pillay to Gaglad, where they checked and after casting round they recovered it again in the bog below Democrat; ran up by the Krurmund Path and over the head of Lady Lawley's Shola and put their jack to ground near the summit of the hill above Pichal Mund. Kitty's efforts to make him quit were all in vain. A heavy storm of rain came on and we were forced to leave him to run another day and turned homewards; we were drenched to the skin in a very short time.

Saturday, 7th August.—Windy Gap 12 noon. A charming day but indifferent sport. We started with a long draw: Hero, Wapshare's and Khed were blank. Better luck awaited us in Paragon: hounds proclaimed a find at the bottom and running over the crossing turned up the hill lefthanded and checked above Malkod Mund. The Master made a cast forward towards the Gorse Belt, near Glyn's covert; they recovered it again on the outskirts of the covert and carried it through the edge to the left and then swung right handed over the hill to the right of Ampthill Wood; still bearing to the right through Diana's Dingle, rose the steep hill and dipped down the ghat below the Dunsandle Tea Estate. Turning to the right again and keeping below the cliffs hunted him up by Kengod Mund and marked him to ground in the stream below Malkod Mund: in a few minutes he bolted out of this and went away to the right to the Gorse Belt and lay down in the ditch. Hounds soon had him out again and ran him back to the earth in Malkod Mund; he slipped away from the bottom and running to the right of the bog crossed over into Paragon and away over the ridge into Coffee Shop Shola. He was then viewed going very slowly up the open between Coffee Shop and the Devil's Dance on to the Falls Road. Turning lefthanded up the road he made for the earth at the bottom of Road Shola and got to ground. As neither Cyclops nor Kitty were available, he was left there and the Master moved back to Ampthill Wood. In the bog at the bottom, to the right, hounds touched a line, but unfortunately a brace or more of jacks were on the move and the pack split up and it was close on 4 o'clock before they were got together again. A long jog brought us back to the earth below Road Shola and Kitty was put in but the jack had made himself scarce. Hounds returned to kennels. I regret to say General Sir Edmund Barrow had a serious fall; he was picked up insensible, but regained consciousness after a while and was taken home in his motor car. Captain Burgess was near at hand and did all that was necessary. I trust Sir Edmund is not seriously damaged and that we shall see him out again shortly.

Monday, 9th August.—Lake End 8 A.M. There was some delay in making a move, a thick white fog lay all around, but completely cleared off about 9 A.M. As soon as there were signs of its lifting, the Master drew across Long Swamp with the intention of trying New Covert. However, hounds feathered on a line on the hill close by and worked it over the top and started running at a fair pace towards Bagman, then swept down to the stream and ran along the western side of Newmarket to the bottom of Rallywood and bearing to the left continued the chase over the Krurmund Road to the bottom of Monkey, where they turned up through the edge of Baikie to the crossing; swung to the right over it and on into Dendron Belt and coming out at the bottom of Denmark they hunted their jack into the open. But he had set his mask for Fairlawns and certainly saved his brush thereby. Jacks were afoot everywhere: the coverts are so large and thick it is almost impossible to hear or see what hounds are doing. It was over an hour before the main body of the pack were got together and a fresh start was made. Hounds were drawing down to Brick—kiln Crossing when a brace of jack was viewed disappearing over the crest of the hill over Rawlins' Nullah. No time was lost in getting the pack on to the line of one; he ran the road from Bluegums to Sheffield Plantation in which hounds lost him. From here the Master drew homewards by Rallywood, Jackal and Baikie without result: in Dendron Belt they proclaimed a find at once and away they streamed once more by Dairymaid to Woodstock. I don't know what happened after as I was obliged to leave them.

Tuesday 10th August.—Avalanche Finger Post at 12 noon. A nice fine day, cloudy and cool. The going was in fair condition for this part of the country; and sport was not wanting either. A jack was viewed away from the top of Finger Post Shola; he led hounds across some fields to the top of Hookham Snivey: a fresh jack jumping up hounds divided. One lot hunting their jack down to the hill, but short of the bog they swung lefthanded and hunted him over some very rough country back to Finger Post Shola, where the Master stopped them and the pack was united again. Hookham Snivey was unsuccessfully visited and we moved on to Gartree Hill. Near the bottom on the far side a jack was viewed, but after a short run round to the right was run into and killed, and another jack was marked to ground a short distance off. Kitty was put into this earth but was unsuccessful in her attempts to make him quit. In the Emerald Valley a foolish jack ran almost right into the pack and promptly paid the penalty for a rash and negligent act. No sooner was he eaten up then another jack was viewed away to the right a little further on: the hunt ran up and round Gartree Bill, then crossed the bog and with a lefthanded turn down through a small covert rose the opposite hill, which was like climbing up the side of a house. The jack then passed by the place he was viewed into the Emerald Valley, crossed over to the far side of Ketoothorai Stream and got to ground. An hour was spent in mining operations but eventually had to be given up. A long journey took place to Motley Bog, on the far side of which a jack was viewed by Major Duff. He led hounds over the Dangar Ride and Egerton's Crossing through the Bluegums and with Bog Head on his left ran down the valley along the top of Kuruthugulli Shola to below Hecuba Cliff; turned down and ran over some fields into Kuruthugulli Shola in which were many jacks on the move and the pack split up. No more was done after this. I regret to say Mr. Horne had a serious mishap on a slippery-path; his mare came down and in trying to recover herself kicked him on the head and jaw, laying the latter open. I am glad to say he is progressing favourably.

ARE ENGLISH SPORTSMEN TOO CONSERVATIVE?

THIS is the question an "Old Blue" sets himself to reply to in an interesting article to a London contemporary. Any pretence of unconsciousness or indifference to recent events in the world of sport is the merest affectation, he observes. The Old Country has been badly hit in International competition generally, and every thoughtful sportman has to acknowledge the fact. Severe criticism has followed, and it is curious to note the various classes of critics. Those who still harp upon the "physical deterioration" strain are shallow talkers. One only mistrusts the state of mind which boldly makes the assumption. They remind one of the worthy person who confessed a great liking for Keats, adding, "By the way, what are Keats?" The jumpers-to-conclusions, of course, boldly predict for England the fate foretold for ancient Greece by Plato. But nonsense. It is not only words that such people must not press; they must not press ideas beyond what they can fairly carry. Where logic and stern fact are bankrupt, it is very human to fall back upon the resources of platitude and pessimism; and so in their case. They base their absurd argument on some fifty new fallacies never even dreamt of by twentieth century thinkers. As I said last week, others stoutly argue that the present apparent decline in English sport is little more than one of those passing fluctuations which are natural to all matters mundane. And they are right. The vicissitudes of nations

A TRIUMPH OF EFFICIENCY!

Use in Government Departments, Railway and Mercantile Officers all over India.

OVER 400,000 NOW IN USE.

Is suitable for Documents and Correspondence of every description.

All papers relating to any particular firm or business are filed together and are thus kept quite separate, and readily get-at-able.

No unnecessary room taken up as in the case of most files now in the market, the back being quite thin, and taking up no more space than the actual letters—a very important point where space is a consideration.

All papers can be instantly and conveniently referred to without any manipulation of springs which often means dislodging a number of papers in order to get at any particular document.

The covers are made in various sizes to take from 1—300 documents, in Octavo, Quarto or Foolscap.

Files are supplied in different colours: Blue, Red, Orange, Buff, Grey and Green. The idea of using Coloured Files provides an easy means of distinguishing at a glance the various distinctive branches of correspondence in a large business, such as referring to Agencies, Purchases, Sales, Finance, or for Town, Country, Continental and Colonial.

there was a lack of good combination among the Calcutta three-quarters, probably attributable to the greasy state of the ball. Siddons threw away a certain try on one occasion by passing to his wing man without attempting to himself draw the only man left to pass.

Oliver at back for the Services was exceedingly disappointing; he was much too slow in getting in his kicks and on two occasions was held with the ball in his possession when he ought to have got in his kick, while he missed two very easy tackles. When he did get his kick in he always made ground, but as a rule he took things much too easily.

DALHOUSIE only just scraped home against their neighbours the Rangers. The ground was so muddy that after the first ten minutes it was hard to recognise one "nigger boy" from another in a game which is best described as a muddy scramble.

Margaret profiting, no doubt, by his experience in goal, was one of the few who seemed able to hold the slippery globule.

THE East Yorks and the Customs were also out mud-larking: the men from Fyzabad winning a very even tussle by a goal and a try to nil.

THREE Junior League games were decided on Monday, Calcutta "B" defeating the Police after a fairly interesting game enlivened by some amusing irregularities on the part of the "Peelers," such as fisting the ball many yards forward in most goalkeeper-like fashion.

Their left half who was the pick of their team, played very well whilst their forwards look like shaping into a useful pack.

THE Customs "B" did well to lick the Measurers, St Xavier's on the other hand disappointed their supporters by losing badly to the men from Dum-Dum.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 9th instant, an interesting game ending in a win for the Gymkhana. They pressed at the start and after an unproductive corner Cole scored a goal. The Hornets' defence was kept busy during the rest of the half but the Gymkhana were unable to add to their score before the interval. On changing ends the Gymkhana continued to press and Bennett brought off some wonderful saves. After several unsuccessful attempts a goal was at length scored by Cole, and Abbott followed it up with another. The Hornets could not score and were thus beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams:—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Hotz, goal; Elliott and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Holl and Sim, halves; Murray, Hargreaves, Cole, Abbott and Moir, forwards.

HORNETS.—Bennett, goal; Millard and Topper, backs; Molyneux, Osborne and Brooks, halves; Dudley, Garrick, Peters, Vardon and Burrell, forwards.

ROVERS vs. GLOSTERS.—This game on the 10th instant was a very one-sided affair. The soldiers attacked throughout but were lamentably weak in front of goal. Their shooting was wretched and they could only score once, Harris putting through just before the interval. The Rovers could not score. Teams:—

ROVERS.—Lane, goal; Castle and Osborne, backs; Poyntz, Powell and Diamond, halves; Thomson, Oswald, Assett, Farrell and Black, forwards.

GLOSTERS.—Smith, goal; Ives and Ruck, backs; Cooper, Sherwood and Law, halves; Maton, Short, Harris, Lahy and Chidlow, forwards.

GLOSTERS vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 14th instant, a one-sided game ending in a win for the military by 6 goals to nil. They scored 3 goals in the first half, Ruck opening their account from a penalty kick, and Horris being responsible for the two other points. After the interval another penalty enabled Ruck to put through, Law and Horris adding to the score. Teams:—

GLOSTERS.—Smith goal; Ruck and Ible, backs; Cooper Sherwood and Barton, halves; Maton, Law, Horris, Leaky and Chidlow forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Fox, goal; Holtham, and Edwards, backs; Major Patterson and Pennock halves; S. Alcock, Sherren, W. Alcock, Watson and Furbisher, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ROVERS.—This match on Saturday last was a run-away victory for the Gymkhana who scored 7 goals to the Rovers' single point. The margin might have been even larger if the Gymkhana had taken advantage of the many opportunities which presented themselves. Price, Abbott (2) and Hargreaves scored in the first half; Abbot (2) and Price after the interval. Teams:—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal; Elliott and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Wenzl and Sim, halves; Murray, Hargreaves, Abbott, Price and Moir, forwards.

ROVERS.—Lane, goal; Castle and Osborne, backs; Black, Assett and Poyntz, halves; A. N. Otter, Petty, Farrell Oswald and Thomson, forwards.

POONA DIVISIONAL TOURNAMENT.

WORCESTERS "A" vs. NORTHAMPTONS.—This game opened the tournament on the 9th instant, an interesting struggle being witnessed. The Northamptons pressed hard at the start and the Worcesters were kept busy for some time. They cleared eventually and invaded the Northamptons' territory where good play on the part of the Northants' goal-keeper and backs prevented any score. Play settled down very level; both goals were visited in turn and neither team had scored at the interval. On resuming the Northamptons attacked vigorously and all but scored. Level play followed till the Worcesters worked the ball down and Sutton opened the scoring. The Northamptons next made a bid for goal but were unsuccessful and the Worcesters returned to the attack. Sutton missed his shot but Smith got possession and scored a second goal for the Worcesters. The closing stages were closely contested. A shot by the Northamptons struck the goal post and then "A" team got away and Greenway banged the ball into the net. The Worcesters thus won by 3 goals to nil.

WORCESTERS "B" TEAM vs. LEICESTERS.—These teams met on the 10th instant, a fast and even game resulting in a win for the Leicesters by 2 goals to 1. The Leicesters attacked at the start and after several efforts had been frustrated Hughes scored a goal. The Worcesters were kept hemmed in for a long spell but they kept the Leicesters out and eventually rushed the ball down to the other end, where three attempts to equalise met with no success. The Leicesters next assumed the offensive but could not add to the score. On resuming after half time the Leicesters continued to attack but could not break the Worcesters' defence. Both goals were visited and the Worcesters had a narrow escape. But they cleared and rushed the ball to the Leicesters' end. Three fruitless attempts were made to score and then Jones rushed the ball through and put the teams on terms. The score was unchanged when time was called and it was decided to play the extra allowance. The first period was pointless but on changing ends Wardle scored the winning goal for the Leicesters.

WORCESTERS "A" vs. LINCOLNS.—These teams met three times. Twice they retired without score and it was not till their third meeting on the 13th instant that a definite result was arrived at. The Worcesters went down at the start and worried the Lincolns' defence till Plant got through and drew first blood. The Lincolns nothing daunted made great efforts to get on terms but could not get past the Worcesters' backs. Up and down play followed and then the Worcesters rushed down once again, Harcourt kicking a second goal. The Lincolns had the best of the remaining play in the first half but could not score. On crossing over the game was slow, the Lincolns being most prominent but all their endeavours were unsuccessful and the game ended in a win for the Worcesters by 2 goals to nil.

LEICESTERS vs. R. A., Kirkee.—Played on Saturday last. An excellent game ending in a win for the Leicesters by a goal to nil.

Both teams played well from start to finish, the first half being very even. During this period play was very fast with some hard kicking. In the second half the Leicesters just managed to get an opening within a few minutes of time being piped, and scored the only goal of the evening. The R. A. backs defended their position gamely or the Leicesters might have won by a larger margin.

A Second Life

"If I only had another chance!"

How often does a man utter these despairing words when he feels his health undermined, his strength ebbing, his vital forces depressed—often as the result of his own errors or follies—and he realises the infinite possibilities which might lie in his grasp could he indeed receive, in Shakespeare's phrase, "A Second Life."

Happily, this other chance, this second life, is to be had for the asking by means of that which has been aptly described by a famous physician as "the last word science has spoken" on the subject of such remedial agents and to which, by virtue of its health-giving properties, the name of Sanatogen—meaning "The Health Producer"—has been given.

So potent is its force that it will not only restore the health and vitality which have been lost, but, if persevered in, will, in addition, impart the highest measure of nervous and physical vigour of which the individual is capable; for there is a maximum capacity of health for everyone, although he may not hitherto have had the fact impressed upon him. Doctors endorse this and daily prescribe Sanatogen in increasing quantities.

The constituents which give Sanatogen its power are known to every physician. What they are is described below in the plainest terms in the telling analysis of Sir Charles A. Cameron, the Chief Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst for Dublin.

Medical testimony of its value can be read in the statements of Dr. C. W. Saleeby and Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical authors. Over twenty five thousand doctors prescribe Sanatogen in their daily practice, while some ten thousand physicians have testified to its merits as

A Revitalising Force.

In Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever and other wasting diseases incidental to life in India it acts "like a miracle," to quote the words of a physician who has used it largely. It reconstitutes the blood, rebuilds the body, reinvigorates the health, reinforces the strength, restores the vitality, revivifies the waning powers and revitalises the nervous system, until the patient is as well as he was before his illness, while it safeguards him from further attacks.

The typical letters of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., and Miss Ellaline Terriss are selected from hundreds of communications of famous men and women who have of their own free will written of the debt they owe Sanatogen.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Medical Opinion

DR. C. W. SALEEBY, the well-known medical author:
"13, Greville Place, London, N.W.

"Sanatogen is a specially adapted food that has solved the problem of giving phosphorus in such a way that the nervous system can take hold of it. I would specially refer to its value in the feeding of invalids, whether during actual illness or during convalescence, and for nursing mothers."

C. W. Saleeby

DR. ANDREW WILSON, the distinguished scientist:
"110, Gilmore Place, Edinburgh.

"I have found the ideal tonic and restorative in Sanatogen. Recovering from influenza, and suffering from severe weakness, I gave Sanatogen a fair trial, and without the use of any other medicine or preparation I was restored to health."

Andrew Wilson

A Telling Analysis

SIR CHARLES A. CAMERON, C.B., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst, Dublin, etc.

"On analysis it proved to be composed of 9.5% moisture, and 90.5% of dry matter, including 7.37% of ash. It contained 83.13% of Albuminoids (nearly wholly made up of casein, but including a little Albumin), together with 2.2% of phosphoric acid, a small portion of which existed in the albuminoids, but by far the larger portion was in the form of Sodium glycero-phosphate.

"It is this organic phosphorus which, in my opinion, makes the substance of such value as a metabolic stimulant, and the means of increasing the amount of nitrogen assimilated in the food.

"I have arrived at the conclusion that Sanatogen is a substance of the highest nutritive value, containing as it does a large amount, relatively speaking, of organic phosphorus—that is, phosphorus which is offered to the tissues in exactly the form in which it can be easily absorbed. It is an excellent nerve food."

Typical Letters

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the popular novelist:
"20, Carlton House Terrace, S.W.

"I have used Sanatogen at intervals since last autumn with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Miss ELLALINE TERRISS, the favourite comedienne:
"Hicks' Theatre, London, W.

"I have every reason to be grateful to Sanatogen, for it has completely revitalised and restored me to perfect health."

Ellaline Terriss

in this connection, like those of clubs, are very like the throw of the dice-box, i.e., one season you have a plethora of all round talent, the next a positive dearth of it. That is it.

Sporting History Repeats Itself.

Sporting historians will tell you that no class of athletes has ever maintained an invariable level of excellence. Unsuccessful seasons have interposed themselves between seasons of prosperity, and so they will to the end of time. What is more, the records show that the very moment of apparently hopeless decline in matters sporting has in reality been the moment of revival! And are not these periods of sporting success and general reverse good for sport as a whole? People talk grandiloquently of the hereditary sporting instincts of Englishman; and so far, so good. Applied to the point at issue, however, it is besides the mark in argument, as heredity is really no more than any other circumstance. If we can defy one circumstance, we can defy another, and then what becomes of the fluctuating-period theory? Everybody knows we cannot control circumstances. I will go further and say that continued sporting supremacy is apt to pall equally with continued reverse. Even Damon is apt to become riled when all the luck goes to Pythias! And so with nations. I have no wish to dogmatise, but state plainly it is a good thing that England plays second fiddle in International sport from time to time. It implies keener competition generally later, greater equality in individuals, and, above all, a universal devotion to all manly sports and pastimes. There is no power so subtle or so strong as the belief in one's power to succeed, you know. "They can because they 'think' they can" is true of athletes all the world over. And it is well this is so. A monopoly in either case would be fatal to the true sporting spirit. All the same, Englishmen will do well to realise that International competition has become enormously keener, and act accordingly. This brings us to the important question: Are we going the right way to work to regain old-time supremacy in divers sports?

The 1909 Position.

"It was always yet the trick of the English nation," says Falstaff, "if they have a good thing to make it too common." And does not this scathing criticism apply to matters sporting in 1909? I mean, are we not too conservative in our methods, our ideas, our opinions of other nation's improvement? Take rowing, for instance. What is known as the orthodox British style has, in fact, attained the dangerous position of a pompous monopoly. Its exponents assume it to be infallible, hence class all other styles of rowing as either bad or ineffective. Both the Belgians and the Jesus College (Cambridge) men have demonstrated to the contrary often enough, if results be any criterion, yet this matters very little. The orthodox-style disciples will have their way, and so continue to pooh-pooh any other. They condemn the Belgians' style as revolutionary, whereas it is just the reverse. It is simply an imitation of the British style in vogue at Putney and on the Isis, at least, in the "eighties." Similarly, their rig—about which so much twaddle is talked—was common enough on the Thames some twenty years ago. Such formalism (so to speak), which invariably accompanies all sports enjoying a monopoly of power, is to be decried. If the traditional English style of rowing needs modification, as some insist, why not drop all prejudice on the matter and get about the task at once? Anyway, British sportsmen will be well advised to test all suggested improvements with an open mind. A continuance of the rigid prejudice still shown in divers quarters on this and other matters aquatic is bad for sport, bad for oarsmen themselves, and bad for future International fray. It is a good sign that certain Metropolitan clubs have escaped from the formalism in question, and are now quietly testing various styles of rowing, to manifest advantage. May their example be followed generally! It is not a wise thing to drive too much in ruts. It may become desirable that you shall suddenly quit them and delay in so doing oftener than not increases the danger.

The Noble Art.

Or take modern English boxing. Our erstwhile supremacy has been badly threatened of late years, owing mainly to the same cause, i.e., a slavish devotion to a certain style which compares unfavourably with that which kept British boxers at the top of the tree for so many years. In the phrase of Mr. A. F. Bettinson (National Sporting Club), "they have discarded their own style" with disastrous results. And what is worse—as in the case of foreign oarsmen—Americans and others have unconsciously absorbed and put into practice that very style and those very tactics which once made British boxers the superiors of the world. Such a transition is easily explained. Foreigners have sent their experts over here, and these have profited by the accumulated experience of generations. They learnt our latest tricks at lawn tennis, our latest theory of rigging a boat, our latest formations at football, etc, and wisely built upon that basis. Can we blame them? Not a bit of it; indeed, they set us a rare example in the way of "taking opportunity by the hand." Meanwhile, we nationally, have wrapped ourselves in a clock of grim reserve, as it were, and sillily refused to acknowledge either our mistake or our foes' enterprise. And the folly of all this is increased by the fact that, in reality, "there is only one style in boxing." It probably found its most perfect exponent in the person of Jem Mace, whom, by the way, one is glad to note has now been placed beyond the reach of want by sundry kind friends. Nor were these the only means whereby foreigners gained an intimate knowledge of our best British methods, styles, etc. They imported English coaches by the score, and these—amateur and professional alike—helped to propound the new doctrine. And the outcome? A practical illustration of the good fruit wrought has been shown at the National Sporting Club, Henley, Hurlingham and Lord's alone since Christmas last. Put another way, the sporting impetus which urged on our friends and rivals enabled them to beat us. And to this zeal was added the experience of ages—which they borrowed.

How Best to Counteract Matters.

It is always difficult to shake off ancient and rigid prejudices, I am aware. Englishmen have so long thought themselves invincible at all kinds of sport that the knowledge to the contrary has come like a bolt from the blue to many. Yet the fact remains. Nations which formerly "played at games"—in the immortal distinction of Square Osbaldeston—now play with real skill. Nations who were nowhere in the sporting environment years ago now figure prominently at the successive Olympic Games. It will, therefore, be very much to our credit if we can still preserve a generally recognised supremacy in all matters germane, if not absolute invincibility. The days when Britons were invincible are, one fears, long since past. And to assure even the alternative measure of success we must, I think, alter our tactics and drop a good deal of our sporting conservatism. As in every other walk or gallop of life, we must, to wit, be constantly examining our methods and constantly testing possible improvements. This in an express speed sort of age, and what were considered the best methods and the best styles a decade or two back may no longer boast that advantage. As I have said, however, it will be idle to so test any possible improvements unless we do so with a perfectly open mind. Above all, if we find other methods and styles efficient we must have no scruples in at once adopting them. To ordinary minds custom is always right "so long as it is on their side;" another phase of the views of Gulliver's friends, the Liliputians, by the way. British athletes who are chafing under recent reverses, however, will, I am sure, drop all such nonsense in their endeavour to rehabilitate themselves in future international fray. It is possible that a judicious blend of various styles of rowing for instance, might produce surprising results. Mr. E. G. Hemmerde, K.C., M.P., is strongly of that opinion, and so are several other famous oarsmen. Why not try the experiment? Anyway, only by borrowing some of our foreign friends' thoroughness in this direction can we expect to hold our own with them in the future.

The Old, Old Story.

A learned professor has publicly commended the Sporting Life's views on international competitive methods, I understand. He, too, thought our English methods, vastly superior to those in America, and laid especial stress on the "pleasurable" part of training referred to last week. He qualified his commendation, however, by asserting that "sport in this country has now assumed the dimensions of a national calamity," which frankly, is so much nonsense. That it is from no personal experience of his own I am aware; but he might, as an old Cambridge man, have remembered the long list of honoured names in almost every sphere of life intimately connected with athletics at his Alma Mater. I venture to give him a bit of advice in his connection, i.e., to substitute for some portion of the metaphysical curriculum which he so urgently upholds a slight modicum of sport. It may teach his pupils one or two things they do not apparently learn at present, and it will, at any rate, contribute to their manliness, self-dominion and modesty.

In reply to Mr. L. V. Grierson, 15,000 dollars is expended annually at least, in bringing together the Harvard and Yale crews at New London. It is estimated that 50,000 dollars does not meet the yearly expenses of the athletic clubs of these two universities. Add to this the cost of athletic sports at the smaller colleges, etc, and the total foots up to millions! It will thus be seen that a long purse is fully as essential to success in athletics over there as in England, if not more so.

BOMBAY TEAM'S KATHIAWAR TOUR.

Match vs. Jamnagar.—The team of Bombay cricketers captained by Mr. P. M. D. Sanderson began their tour in Kathiawar with a match against Jamnagar at Jamnagar on the 9th and 10th instant. The match was played on cocoaunt matting and ended in an easy win for Jamnagar. The visitors batted first, but after Brooke and Pope had been disposed of the side collapsed and were all out for 86. The Thakor Sahib, who is credited with being one of the fastest bowlers in India, took six wickets. Jamnagar then went in and at the end of the first day's play had scored 205 for the loss of six wickets; Ratilal (73) Foster (42) and Sims (22) being the chief contributors. The remaining wickets were taken for 28 runs on the second day and the innings closed for 233. The Bombay team went in again but did no better than in their first innings. They were all out for 83, the Thakor Sahib once more bowling with deadly effect. Jamnagar thus won by an innings and 64 runs. The Jam Sahib extended his usual lavish hospitality to the visitors. Match vs. Rajkot.—The second match of the tour was played at Rajkot and ended in a draw. Bombay batted first and made 189, Saunderson (43) and Brooke (49) being principal scorers. Rajkot had an hour and a halfs batting on the first day and Monteath and Cheetham put up 111 without being separated. But on resuming on Tuesday they were quickly disposed of and the innings closed for 189, Frederick took 7 wickets for 81. The visitors' second innings produced 155, 67 of which were contributed by Brooke. In the Rajkot second venture Monteath was bowled when he had scored 4, but Cheetham and Turner kept together till time was called with the score 64. The game thus ending in a draw. Score :—

Match vs. All Kathiawar.—This was the final match of the tour, and was played at Rajkot on the 13th and 14th instant. The visitors being defeated by an innings and ten runs. The match was played on cocoanut matting. Bombay batted first and were all out for 127. Pope contributed 65, and Reid (16) was the only other to reach double figures. Kathiawar then went in and when stumps were drawn on the first day had scored 286 for the loss of 4 wickets, Foster 92 and the Jam Sahib 76 making a lengthy stand. The next day Turner 33 and Simons 41 were the chief scorers, and the innings closed for 310. Bombay did better in their second venture but could not save the innings defeat. Score.—

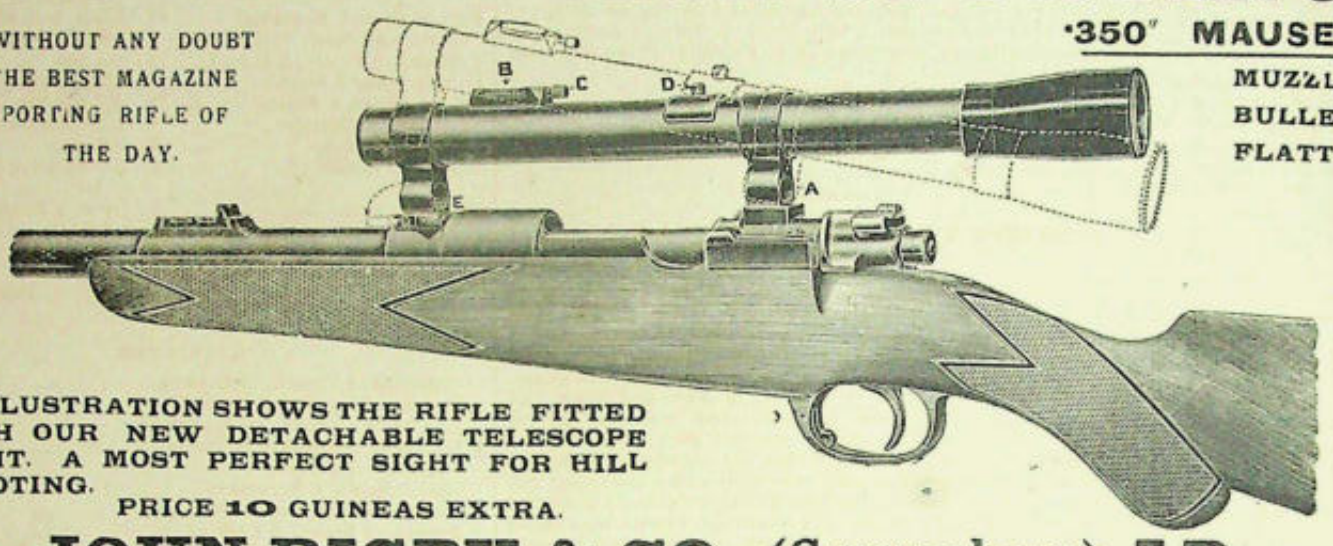
WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.



Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

CALCUTTA RUBGY LEAGUE.

EAST YORKS vs. CUSTOMS.—Played on the Customs ground on Saturday ; the wretched state of the turf after the rain interfered with the game. The military were better on the day's play and won an interesting game by 8 points to nil. Gibson got over with the first try, which was not converted, and just before time Mason crossed the line, Card adding the extra points. The East Yorks thus won by a goal and a try to nil. Teams :—

EAST YORKS :—Cressy, back ; Mason, Lieut. Crawford, Card and Brownlowe, three-quarters ; Rhodes and Gibson, halves ; Clarke, Miller, Underwood, Cooper, Affleck, Bladen, Furthend and Tose, forwards.

CUSTOMS :—Dempster, back ; Johnson, Cunliffe, Jackson and Williamson, three quarters ; Shave and Rowe, halves ; Cadell, Featherstone, Marsden, Macdonald, L. C. Smith, Fredricks, Thomson and Ferth, forwards.

Referee :— Mr. C. Reid (C. F. C.)

CALCUTTA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—The meeting of these teams on Saturday last produced the best game thus far in the season. The Services were kept on the defensive at the start and Reid Kay got over with a try, which Bennett failed to convert. Play followed in mid field for a spell and it was not till the closing stages of the initial half that Calcutta gained any advantage. Oliver, however, was always safe at back and there was no further score till half time. On changing ends the Services did not give such a good display and Calcutta crossed the visitors' line four times, Siddons (2), Arthur and Simon being responsible. None of the place kicks were successful and the game ended in a win for Calcutta by 5 tries (15 points) to nil.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, the home team winning by a try to nil. The Rangers had the better of the initial half and Dalhousie were forced to touch down in order to save more than once. On changing ends the Dals showed improved form. They lost an opportunity owing to offside and soon after Prike failed in an attempt to drop a goal. But they continued to attack and McLeod got over with a try. The place kick was unsuccessful. The Rangers made efforts to equalise but without success and were beaten as stated. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE :—Eden, back ; Prike, Smith, Allen and Holley three-quarters ; Bates and Evans halves ; Bevil, McLeod, Williams, Lewis, Grahamslaw, Sinclair, Sherries and Wilson forwards.

RANGERS :—Margrett, back ; Cody, Williams, Wheelock and Rosetti, three-quarters ; Davis and Fairley, halves ; Minet, MacDonald, Bennett, Nicol, McCullogh, Allen, White and G. Williams, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. E. Horncastle (C. F. C.)

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—The second half of the League was commenced on the 17th instant when these teams played their return fixture on the Customs ground. Neither side was at full strength, Arthur and Ward, Malcolm and Bryce being absent from the Calcutta team and the Customs being without Rowe. After level play at the start Williams got away and scored a try for the Customs—the first score registered against Calcutta this season. Johnson added the extra points. The visitors pulled themselves together and scored two penalty goals before the interval. The Customs showed up for a spell on changing ends but Calcutta soon asserted their superiority and scored three tries, Reid Kay (2) and Turnbull (1) ; none of these were improved upon and the game ended in a win for Calcutta by 2 penalty goals and 3 tries (15 points) to a goal (5 points). Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Strachan, back ; Turnbull, Kay, Siddons, and Burnett, three-quarters ; Wilson and A. N. Other, halves ; Kerr, Studd, Dick, Huffam, Collins, Westrup, Earp, and Simpson, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Anderson, back ; Williams, Johnson, Maitland and L. Smith, three-quarters ; Shave and Cunliffe, halves ; Cadell, Marsden, Featherstone, Carlton, Thomson, Fredricks, Macdonald and Fischer, forwards.

Referee :—Lieutenant R. N. Bocquet (N. S.).

EAST YORKS vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday the military having the best of the game throughout. The Rangers who played three men short were kept on the defensive all through the game and had their line crossed on five occasions. Mason (2), Clarke, Card and Rhodes being responsible. One of these was converted. Final score. East Yorks 1 goal and 4 tries (17 points) to nil. Teams :—

EAST YORKS.—Cressey, back ; Mason, Cord, Lieutenants Crawford and Brownlowe, three-quarters ; Gibson and Rhodes, halves ; Tose, Bladen, Cooper, Furthend, Affleck, Clarke, Miller and Underwood, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, back ; Rosetti, Minet, Wheelock and Cody, three-quarters ; Davis and Bennett halves ; White, Nicol, Bennett, Gilmour and Allen, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Murray.

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY LEAGUE.

UNITED SERVICES "B." vs. POLICE.—Played on the Caledonia ground on the 12th instant the Services winning easily by a goal and two tries (11 points) to nil.

KING'S SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. CUSTOMS' "B."—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on the 12th instant, the Shropshires winning by 16 points (two goals and two tries) to 3 (1 try). Statham and Grave crossed the Customs' line in the first half Fort converting Grave's try. Williams and Statham obtained tries on changing ends, Fort majorising the second of these. Fischer scored the Customs' try in the second half.

CALCUTTA "B" vs. LA MARTINIERE.—Played on the 13th instant. The boys played pluckily but were outclassed, Calcutta winning by 34 points (3 goals, one drop goal and five tries) to nil.

CUSTOMS' "B" vs. MEASURERS.—This match on the Customs' ground on Monday ended after a very evenly contested game in a win for the home team by 8 points (a goal and a try) to 5 points (a goal).

KING'S SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—This match on Monday ended in a win for the Military by 22 points (two goals and 4 tries), to nil.

CALCUTTA 'B' vs. POLICE.—On Monday these teams met on the Calcutta ground, the Police being defeated by 2 goals and 3 tries (19 points) to nil.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Rugby season is now in full swing, but alas, the standard of play has so far been very disappointing and far below what we were led to expect from that of last year. With the exception of Calcutta all the teams in the Senior League are weaker than last year, but they, on the other hand, are stronger both in, and outside the pack, with the result that they have, with one exception, won all their matches in the First Round in runaway fashion and have scored 165 points without having a point registered against them.

IN the Calcutta team there are many new faces, and Ward, who for many years played for West of Scotland, is a very useful addition at half back. In the scrum, Elderton who came down from Cambridge last year and who, we believe, represented the 'Varsity on several occasions, is the pick of the newcomers and is a forward with plenty of dash and little sympathy or mercy for the back who does not get off the ball, while Malcolm and Miller are both good forwards of the same hustling nature.

LEAVING Calcutta out of the question the other sides are much of a muchness, but on Saturday's form, the United Services might be placed as favourites for the second place. Our visitors, the East Yorks, should, however, with a little practice, give a good account of themselves; while the Customs for a young and inexperienced side show signs of promise in the future. Dalhousie have been disappointingly weak, but we understand are to be strengthened by the inclusion of Evans and some others of last year's team who up to Saturday had been unavailable.

TURNING to the Junior League we are glad to find affairs more evenly balanced with the prospect of a close and well contested competition. The Shropshires, Measurers and Police are all newcomers to Rugby in Calcutta. The first mentioned could probably have held their own with most of the teams in the Senior League ; but with becoming modesty were content with aspiring to junior honours, and at present look like carrying off the trophy. Calcutta, with the galaxy of talent at their disposal, can also put a strong "B" team in the field and although beaten by the Shropshires have won their other games with great ease. Of the others, little can be said at present though the Martinière boys deserve a word of encouragement for the plucky stand they made last week against Calcutta when hopelessly outclassed in weight.

DEALING with Saturday's games, Calcutta and United Services afforded quite the best football seen so far this season. The latter, much strengthened by the inclusion of Chase, the old Richmond player, and McMillan who at one time was Captain of Mill Hill, gave a very good account of themselves though they fell away in the second half owing to lack of training. The weather was fine, but the previous night's rain had left the ground in a very muddy condition, rendering accurate passing a matter of some difficulty and thus the game lost some of the interest it might otherwise have had.

In the first half, though Calcutta had most of the game, they were only able to cross the Services' line once, the outcome of a smart pick-up by Kay from a wild and somewhat speculative pass from the scrum. In the second half Services were at times in the Calcutta territory, but never managed to score while their opponents registered four tries to their credit. The first of these was a really clever effort by the Calcutta skipper who, getting the ball outside the twenty-five line, dodged his way through several of his opponents and scored between the posts. A few minutes later, Siddons obtained a try in the same fashion, which was followed by a rather lucky one by Simpson, and yet another by Siddons, none of which were converted.

The place kicking was exceedingly bad, as not one of the five tries were converted, Burnett, who has been kicking very well this season, missing two "sitters." The forwards were pretty evenly matched, Elderton, Bryce and Kerr playing well for Calcutta, while Chase, Cunningham and McMillan were best for the Services. Of the Home pack, Westrup and Simpson (two new-comers) showed up well in the loose, but we fear did not do much pushing in the scrum and the latter was often at fault by getting offside. Had the Calcutta forwards been quicker at getting the ball back in the scrum, the score would have been much larger. Time after time the ball hung at the back of the scrum, giving the opposing halves time to get round, and it would be to their advantage to pay attention to this in future.

Slater at half back played well for the Services and had he been backed up properly, they might have scored on more than one occasion. He was rather inclined to get offside and was twice penalised for this offence, Mr. Martelli treating him, I think, very leniently in this respect. Reid Kay was the best back on the field and both he and Siddons put in a lot of good work, but

GENTLEMEN RIDERS.

Of speculations on the origin of steeplechasing there is no end, but some think the first match over obstacles was brought off—appropriately enough—in Ireland, between Mr. O'Callaghan and Mr. Edward Blake, from Buttevant Church to St. Leger Church, or a four miles chase from one steeple to the other. As early as 1607 it is recorded that Lord Haddington went to Huntingdon "to a match of hunting against my Lord of Sheffield's horse." It is clear that "gentlemen riders" have ever preferred going across country to mere racing on the flat, and though nearly all the early steeplechases were matches, there was a race in 1792 which fairly started the more modern fashion. It was very properly in Leicestershire; and in a stiff eight miles from Barkby Holt to the Coplow and back, Charles Meynell (son of the famous Hugo) beat Lord Forester and Sir Gilbert Heathcote. They were the real forerunners of the great St. Albans era, which began in 1830, owing to the sporting proclivities of some officers in the Household Cavalry at the Turf Hotel, and was crystallised into an annual meeting by Thomas Coleman in the following year. The bright particular stars of this, the most brilliant epoch of the gentleman rider, are rightly chosen for the leading biographies in the chapters just written by Mr. John Maunsell Richardson and Mr. Finch Mason, and published by Messrs. Vinton and Company. They are as fascinating and delightful as the names of the joint authors could suggest; for they have had a wealth of magnificent material from which to make their book, and they have used it both with accuracy and skill.

Some idea may be given of the vivid interest of this work by suggesting a few of the names and topics that will spring to the eye of any sporting reader who turns over the pages so admirably illustrated. Not to many men is it given to bequeath their own name to a landmark that is almost as well known as Tattenham-corner to the world at large; but "Becher's Brook" is an appropriate memorial of one of the hardest and best riders who ever crossed a country. He practically lived in the saddle during the decade that began in 1829, but it was in 1834 that he first rode Vivian, with which his name is chiefly connected. In 1836 occurred what was perhaps the best-known incident in his career, the St. Albans Steeplechase, in which Mr. Powell, who could box as well as he could ride, took Laurestina ahead of the field after the first mile, only to be thrown, while the mare galloped off and left him with a dislocated shoulder. It was Captain Becher, on Grimaldi, who took the lead after that, and won a close race by three lengths in the last 200 yards. No sooner had he been pulled up than the old horse reared, fought with his fore-legs, and fell down dead, to the intense grief of the captain, who had ridden him in nearly all his races. One of Becher's most celebrated matches was against the Marquis of Waterford on Vivian, and the sketch given of "the wild Marquis" in these chapters is one of the best in the book. His most celebrated escapade was the abstraction of the Eton flogging-block, which still occupies a prominent position in the study at Curraghmore. One of the truest hearted gentlemen who ever drew breath, the Marquis died in the hunting-field that fatal March afternoon in 1859 when "Mayboy stumbled o'er the rotten wall."

A very different character, but thoroughly typical of his time was George Osbaldeston, who fought the famous duel with Lord George Bentinck. Both of them undoubtedly did things which we should consider outrageous nowadays, and many of "the Squire's" most celebrated feats have since been beaten. But it is impossible not to admire the undaunted spirit of the man which drove him to excel in so many different kinds of sport, and to lose no single chance of victory in the game on which for the moment he had set his heart. They seem to have been made of metal that is almost entirely lost to-day, those men of the early nineteenth century who lived as hard as they could, and let nothing stand in the way of their desires. As was sung of one of them:

"The Damsels' delight and the chaperones' fear,
He is voted a trump amongst men;
His father allows him £300 a year,
And he'll lay you a thousand to ten."

They certainly knew, too, how to support a strenuous existence with appropriate nourishment. The waiter at the Blue Posts, in Cork-street, once described the Earl of Winchilsea's dinner to that nobleman's son, and recorded the result in the following terms: "A dozen oysters, 'are soup, a rump steak, a snipe, and a marrer bone to foller—a bottle of Perry Jewey and a pint of stout." 'Good Gawd,' 'Enery,' says my lord, 'Why, my father'll live for ever!'"

One of the best examples of the all-round sportsman of these times has but just died, and left a memory that is as much revered on the river as it is "between the flags," and as well remembered on the running track (for he beat Sir John Astley in a sprint) as anywhere. Mr. E. L. Burton rode Cherry Angell's Bridegroom in the Grand National Hunt Steeplechase, run for the first time over the Market Harborough course in 1860, and won in a canter from a field of thirty-one. He won the next year, too, on another of Cherry Angell's horses, perhaps his best, Queensferry, and in that same season the similar race at Cheltenham was won by George Ede ("Mr. Edwards"), one of the finest horsemen of his own or any other time.

Sir John Astley's is another famous name, and few better examples can be quoted than "The Mate" of the sporting spirit that animates the "gentleman rider" at his best. His race on Drumhead against Mr. Alexander on Briglia will never be forgotten by any one who attended the July Meeting of 1879. Fortunately the breed is not dead yet, as may easily be seen from the many excellent examples of living riders chosen by the authors. Among them is Colonel Hall Walker, whose ownership of Black Arrow, Polar Star, and the rest, has rather obscured his personal excellence in the saddle in earlier days. From 1877 to 1890, for instance, he won 127 races out of 311, and in July 1888, he won no fewer than six events in a single day at the Southport Polo Club Meeting. Mr. Arthur Coventry, again, appointed official starter to the Jockey Club in 1890, and secretary to the Hurst Park Club at the present time, first sported silk in 1874, rode in three Grand Nationals, and won the National Hunt Steeplechase on Bellringer in a field of sixteen. It is almost impossible, still, to believe that Roddy Owen will ride no more, so brilliant, though so brief, was the riding career which began in a very modest way with a victory on Holland at Daintrey, when he was only 19. It was when he returned from India that his real chance came, and from 1895, when he started wanning at Wolverton, until 1892, when he steered Father O'Flynn to victory in the Grand National, his success was certainly extraordinary, for he won no fewer than 254 races out of 812. As soon as he had achieved the ambition of his life he applied for active service, but he was certainly disappointed at being in Cairo when the telegram was brought to Shepherd's Hotel in 1896, to say that Father O'Flynn had been beaten by The Soarer. He died of cholera at Ambigol Wells that same year.

Known as one of the hardest and best riders over Leicestershire, Colonel the Hon. William Lawson rode his first race as a subaltern of the Scots Guards in 1893. Heywood Lonsdale, of the Grenadiers, won over a fine line in the Pytchley country; Mr. Lawson, as he then was, came in second on Dundalk, a five-year-old grey horse, by Brown Prince bought from Macmahon, of Castleblayney; Lord Annaly, always a first-class man to hounds, came in third, after making all the running, and clearing what was supposed to be "an unjumpable bottom." On another occasion the same race, a point-to-point, in which the First Brigade of Guards sent six picked riders from each regiment, was held near Mr. Leopold de Rothschild's house in the Whaddon Chase country, in deep snow, and almost the only man who got over the brook was Mr. Lawson, only, however, to jump into a drift and fall three fences from home, leaving Captain Mildmay, of the Grenadiers, to win; but Mr. Lawson got up again, and finished fourth, behind Lord Annaly and Captain Bouverie. He won outright, after many attempts, when the same race was held at Barrough Hill, in the Quorn country, on Result, by Tamerlane, his dam by Marksman, riding 13st. 8lb. At that weight he could, of course, only ride in regimental races, but he owned such good winners as Hay Fever, St. Valentine, Traveller's Joy, and Kestrel, who won the Grand International at Sandown. A wonderful hunter of his was Arab King; and Dirkhampton, who was hunted by Mrs. Lawson as a four-year-old, won the Great Badger and the Leicestershire Hunt Steeplechases. On Result he won the Scots Guards' Regimental Steeplechase three times running, besides the Household Brigade Welter Steeplechase in 1897, and this was, no doubt, the best weight-carrier he has ever possessed.

Another first-rate military rider was Major J. A. Orr-Ewing, who fell in action during the Boer War. The 16th Lancers have always done well in the saddle, and their reputation was never better upheld than by the owner of Cloister, who made his début in the Subalterns' Cup at the Fairyhouse Meeting. Even when "The Weasel" lost both stirrup-irons on Fatherland, he was only beaten for the Grand Military Hunters' Steeplechase by a head, after a desperate race, by Roddy Owen. Ford of Fyne and Nelly Grey were two more of his best horses. Major-General Sir Hugh McCalmont was another Lancer who did almost as well across a country as in the field. In 1871, having exchanged into the 7th Hussars, he won the Conyngham Cup at Punchestown. His best and fastest mare was Mandoline, who was bought out of a threshing machine for £45. Captain George Paynter is a good example of the survival of the best traditions into the present day, for he won the Brigade of Guards' Point-to-Point in 1906, and was second the next two years.

Mr. J. M. Richardson himself most thoroughly deserves inclusion in the list of great riders whom he has so capitally described. In athletics, fencing, and racquets he was among the best at Harrow, and he played at Lord's both for his school and his university, where he won his first steeplechase (on classic ground) at Huntingdon as an undergraduate. In 1872 he won fifty-six races, and the next year he steered Disturbance to victory in the Grand National. The motto on the menu at the dinner, in which Sir John Astley took the chair, was "Disturbance, but no Row." In 1874 he won the great race again on Reugny, and with that splendid victory he closed his career upon the racecourse, taking over the management of the Brocklesby Hounds after the death of Lord Yarborough in the next year. As he rightly says in the introduction to this book, the element of danger, which is present to a greater extent than in almost any other sport, has proved the most abiding element of attraction ever since cross-country riding came into fashion, more than seventy years ago. There have been ups and downs in the game, as in every other, during that period, but the hard work and self-denial necessary in training, and the skill and courage essential to successful racing, are thing which will attract the best men while Englishmen retain the best of our racial characteristics. And while those qualities still rouse the admiration of the world, Mr. Richardson and Mr. Mason have done well to put on record the chief facts in this development, for they form no small part of the story of our national success.

The Kennel.

POLICE DOGS IN AND OUTSIDE OF ENGLAND.

[BY MAJOR E. H. RICHARDSON].

In spite of the efficiency of our police, crime becomes more easy to commit and the criminal finds increasing ease in escaping from justice. Modern conditions of transit and increasing numbers of inhabitants all confined in the comparatively small island in which we live, making identification exceedingly difficult, are two of the many causes for this state of matters. Every means, therefore, by which the policeman can be assisted in his arduous work should be adopted.

Ten years ago I began training dogs to track wounded soldiers on the battlefield. While our own army made no effort to adopt this additional means of saving life in war time, I was thankful that, owing to the request of the Dowager Empress of Russia that I should send some of my dogs to the war in Manchuria, I was able to prove that a large amount of valuable life can be saved by making use of the instinct of scent possessed by the dog. More recently I have adapted this instinct to police service, and in order to leave no stone unturned to study the special organization of police dog establishments abroad I lately visited Belgium, Germany and France, where for some years they have been using dogs to assist the policeman in his work.

Arriving in Brussels, I visited, through the courtesy of the Burgomaster, the police dogs at their kennels in the Bois de Cambre. Each dog was in a separate kennel, and was of the Gronendal, or black sheep dog breed. They are all exceedingly savage, and when on duty with the police at night are muzzled. As occasion arises, and they are required to pursue a criminal, the muzzles are slipped, when the results are disastrous to the pursued. In my own system of training it has always been my design merely to trace the culprit and leave his punishment to the law; and it was, therefore, surprising to me to find the view taken in Brussels—one which I do not think would be entertained in this country—that the evildoer deserves all he gets from the dog! There is this, however, to be noted with regard to the foreign criminal, and more especially those Apaches with which Brussels is haunted—that these gentry all carry fire-arms, and do not hesitate for an instant to fire on the policeman. Brussels is the dumping ground of ruffians of this description from many countries, the language, mode of life, food, extradition laws, etc., all suiting their requirements. Therefore, in this town the policeman's dog must really act as a night watchman and an additional means of defence, and as such must be of a savage and determined character. The dogs certainly acted up to their reputation. I saw them at their various exercises, seizing a man running away while firing a pistol, jumping over obstacles, etc., in all of which they excelled.

As, however, I have always made a special study of the tracking qualities in a dog, I was particularly anxious to see what they could do in this line; and I therefore proposed that we should go out to the suburbs, and that I should make a line. We did this, but I regret that, after three trials, the dogs were unable to find me; and in this branch of the work I found they were very far behind what I have been able to attain in my own kennels. Another day I visited the police dog kennels at Ghent, and here I found a splendid show of dogs, all of savage disposition, and invaluable for seizing a man running away. The Inspector here, however, made no secret of the fact that this was much more what they were useful for, and that for tracking purposes they were not much good. The kennel organization at Ghent is excellent. After this I went to Brunswick. I had heard many wonderful tales of the tracking powers of the Brunswick police dogs, and I was anxious not only to see the dogs, but also to verify these stories. The Police Inspector kindly gave me every information, and showed me the dogs, which are of the short-haired prick-eared German sheep-dog variety, very like wolves. They are also like the Belgium dogs—of the night watchdog type—but at the same time in Germany I found that they do, with characteristic thoroughness, endeavour to cultivate the tracking qualities of the dogs as well. Unfortunately the best of the tracking dogs had lately been sold to the Russian Government, so I was unable to test them on this point.

A story I had previously heard I was here told was true. It was the case of a girl murdered in a farmhouse. The dog was taken to the girl's room, where the crime took place. After it had scented about the blood-stained floor the farmhands were paraded. The dog rushed at one of them, growling savagely. The man was arrested, and on being examined his clothes were found to be stained with a spot of blood. He then confessed. Another case I found to be true was the innocence of a man being proved by a dog. A girl had been found drowned, and, as certain circumstances appeared suspicious, a man was arrested. The dog, on being taken to the girl's room, took up her trail and showed where she had walked down to the river. Her footsteps were single all the way, and this was taken as conclusive that it was a case of suicide, not murder. No other incriminating evidence having arisen, the man was released, and afterward a letter was found written by the girl announcing her intention to commit suicide.

My next visit was to Berlin, where I was most courteously received, and every assistance given me in my investigations. I find that in Berlin the work of dogs as aids to police is held in very high estimation by the authorities. Exaggeration in descriptions of dogs' intelligence and prowess is very easy, and I was anxious for chapter and verse of several of the stories I had heard. I had the privilege of seeing the official records, which never lie, and by these I was able to get at the facts, and to see that much that I had heard was perfectly true. In Germany the evidence as given by the dogs' work is accepted in trials, and during my stay in Berlin a murder trial was proceeding in which it was shown that the police dog had run a trail from the scene of the crime to the railway station, at which the prisoner had been noticed boarding a train.

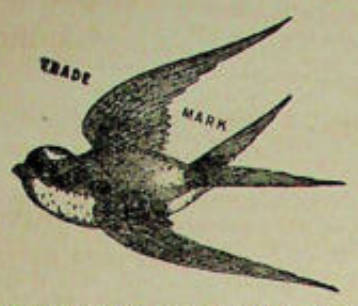
In Berlin they do not care to keep the dogs in an establishment together, but board them out separately with policemen, who receive 60 marks per annum for the keep of each dog. These dogs are sent to all parts of Germany to assist in criminal investigation. A wire to headquarters, and the dog starts in charge of a policeman without delay. In many cases the authorities do not even wait for a wire, but immediately on hearing of a crime dispatch the dog to the scene. I saw several of the dogs at their work.

They use German sheep dogs and Airedales, and have lately been trying a breed called Dobermann Pinscher, which is rather like a large Manchester terrier. The Berlin dogs are not so savage as those I had previously seen. They are not muzzled, and are under better control. They are used in the same way as the others—namely, as night watchmen with the policemen, and they can pursue and catch a criminal who is running away, but they do not attack him so savagely as do the Belgium dogs, although there is always the chance of his being well bitten. I saw them go through their exercises of catching a runner, jumping over obstacles, refusing food, etc. Men were also put out to hide in the field, and the dogs, by carefully quartering the ground, found them; but here again I regret to say I found deficiency in the tracking powers as shown by the average dog. There is not the least doubt that among the German sheep dogs there are those that have exceptional noses, and under certain conditions of ground and temperature can give remarkable results; but the average dog cannot give anything like the results to be obtained from one of our English bloodhounds that has received a police training.

I concluded my tour with a visit to Paris. M. Lepine's secretary recommended to me the establishment at Neuilly as the most typical of the Parisian police dog centres. I went there and found the kennels full of a somewhat heterogeneous collection, mostly of the Belgium sheep-dog type and of a ferocious disposition, capable of seizing and holding a culprit in sight. They have done much good work in Paris against the Apaches. As showing the dangerous nature of the Parisian policeman's work, I was shown a long list of deaths of policemen who had been knifed or shot by desperate ruffians.

To sum up the evidence of my tour, I would first show that the criminal abroad is of a different type from what we have in Britain. The foreign thief does not hold life worth a straw, and hesitates not an instant to use his knife or pistol on the policeman; and the latter therefore absolutely requires a savage dog as an additional means of defence and to assist in catching the culprit. In England this type of criminal is happily rare. The English criminal does not carry weapons, and he hesitates to take the policeman's life. I have seen here at Epsom, on the Derby night, a crowd of rowdies of the lowest description melt away as the constable's tread is heard at the end of the street. Therefore I say that this type of dog as used abroad is not necessary to our police. We want our criminals caught, but we do not want them mauled.

But what we do suffer from is the destruction and theft of valuable property. This is going on every night all over the country. Houses are burgled, fowls and sheep are stolen, corn yards fired, not to speak of the rare horrors of assault and murder, and in many cases the police are not informed until an hour or two after the event, when the criminal has had time to make his escape. A dog that can run a trail twelve hours or so after a crime has been committed is what we require in England. My experiments have shown me that this can be done by a bloodhound trained under certain conditions, but there is no other breed living that can do so with such average certainty. One of the objections to the use of dogs I have often had given me is that the criminal in this country always makes for the nearest railway station. But it is not always safe to jump to this conclusion, as the criminal knows that this is certain to be the first place watched. A case in point came under my notice. A burglary was committed, and the police immediately supposed that the thief had gone off by the first morning train, especially as a strange man was seen at the station. It was found afterward that he had done nothing of the sort, but had struck inland on foot. A dog brought to the scene would have given the right direction and saved much waste of time and expense.



The fact is, every borough of any size should have its trained police bloodhound, while the larger towns should have two. These would be enough for the town itself and for the country round about to a long distance. Large sums at present spent by the police on criminal investigation would be saved, not to speak of the value of the property which is annually lost or destroyed.—Breeder and Sportsman.

"Now remember, Mary," the teacher said just before the school exercises, "if you forget some of the words when you are singing your song, don't stop. Keep right on. Say tum-tum tummy tum or something like that, and the words will come back to you and nobody will know the difference. Now don't forget."

On prize day little Mary (what's in a name?) edified her audience with something like this:

". . . and she wears a wreath of roses Around her tummy tum-tum."

THE LORDS AND THE LAND.

THE home papers, if we except a week's issue devoted to the fleet in the Thames and the successful attempt to fly the Channel in an air-ship, are full of nothing but the "penal budget," and the attempt to force its unpalatable contents down the throats of the Opposition, and, it should be added, of a large and influential section of the old-fashioned Liberals, by an unstinted, and, in our opinion, totally unjustifiable use of the closure. Everybody except the ultra-Radicals and Socialists is indeed heartily sick and weary of the endless controversy; and were it not for the Socialist precedent that it would establish in the matter of Imperial finance, many of us would be willing to stretch a point and allow many sections of the Bill which do not command our approval to be passed into law for the sake of peace and quietness.

With the land changes it is, however, a totally different question, for everyone who has even the smallest stake in the country has now become thoroughly convinced that if the principle of taxing capital in the shape of land be once admitted, no investment of any kind is safe, and that if owners of undeveloped land are now attacked, it will next be the turn of the industrious and careful clerk, who has invested his hard-earned savings in the purchase of his villa residence, or of the small tradesman or artizan who has purchased a cottage or two as a sound and tangible investment. After these it will be the turn of the investor in railways, and then of the owner of home or colonial Government securities till finally, if the Radical-Socialist majority be allowed to work its wicked will unchecked, confidence will be utterly destroyed, and we shall be face to face, at a longer or shorter distance, with ultimate financial ruin and collapse.

For the worst of it is that all the Socialistic proposals in this hateful budget are not the thin edge of the wedge; and that while the Chancellor of the Exchequer talks glibly of owners of undeveloped land not grudging an annual tax of one half-penny per cent. on the capital value, everyone knows perfectly well that his followers are even now calculating how soon it will be possible, if the Bill passes, to raise the amount of the tax. Why on earth, unless it be from pure vindictiveness and the desire to crush political opponents—an idea which, we believe, the Chancellor has indignantly scouted—the owner of suburban property should be selected for special taxation because other people have come unasked and built houses and cottages round his own plot, passes comprehension. Throughout the country as a whole there must be thousands of owners who have either inherited or purchased small residential properties of from five to fifteen acres which have been built in by the expansion of the neighbouring village or town, their views of a pleasing landscape utterly ruined, and their country walks or rides destroyed. Ask anyone of these whether he would prefer his property to be amid its original or its present surroundings. He will tell you at once that he did not ask any of his neighbours to settle round him; and that he would infinitely prefer their room to their company. Any increment that may have taken place in the value of his property is of no advantage to him; while if his son hopes and expects to settle down and live on the paternal estate, it is a positive disadvantage, as it involves a large increase in the death-duties without a single compensating advantage.

And yet, forsooth, it is men of this class, who help so largely to form the staple backbone of the country, and who collectively employ a vast amount of labour,—both skilled and unskilled—who are selected for invidious and galling double taxation. For there is not only the annual site value tax, but the equally unfair increment value tax on change of ownership. And let us think for a moment how unjustly the latter will be appraised. If and when this iniquitous budget passes there will be a big fall in suburban values; and upon this fall the present site value of the property will be fixed. Then, in due course, the property will in all probability (unless further Socialistic legislation prevent it) slowly increase in value; when, in the event of a change of ownership, the Government will claim one-fifth of the increase in the value of a property which they themselves so largely depreciated!

It would be equally justifiable for Government to enact that the price of consols should be arbitrarily lowered to fifty, and that they should afterwards claim one-fifth of any subsequent increment.

But there are signs of a revolt, and what is more of a strong revolt against these unfair proposals. A short time ago, for instance, we happened to be conversing with a well-known Radical banker, who had previously scouted tariff reform as anathema, and were surprised to learn from his lips that he now infinitely preferred the proposals of Messrs. Chamberlain and Balfour to those of Mr. Lloyd George.

An Anti-Budget League has been formed and throughout the country meetings are being held to denounce the budget; while more significant still is the fact that at bye-elections in two admittedly Radical constituencies the previous Government majority has been enormously reduced.

But it is felt that such meetings of protest, although they may induce the Chancellor of the Exchequer to make some modifications in his proposals, will not lead to the defeat of the budget in the Commons; and hopes are therefore concentrated on drastic action by the Lords.

In a speech delivered a few days before this article was written (in England) Lord Lansdowne announced that he could not state what the action of the Peers as regards the budget might be; but he did say that their lordships would not hesitate to act in the manner which but commended itself to them. Now there is little doubt what are the views of the Upper House on this matter; and the Anti-Budget meetings will be of enormous importance in strengthening the hands of its noble members.

Further light is thrown on the matter by subsequent utterances of Mr. Winston Churchill; that gushing statesman having declared in his usual elegant and select diction that if the Lords make mincemeat of the Bill, they must either swallow their own mince when the Bill comes back to them, or face a general election.

The sooner the better say we, and more power to their lordships! And here we take the opportunity of earnestly impressing upon every Englishman in India the importance of doing what he can to help the opponents of the Penal Budget; for it cannot be too strongly insisted upon that if Socialistic legislation of this class be allowed to pass, sooner or later inroads will be made on the pension of every retired Indian Civil Servant, and on the savings of each and every merchant or banker who has spent the best years of his life in the East with the hope of finally securing for himself and his family a modest competency in his native land.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's racing in Calcutta brought the first series of the Monsoon Meetings to a conclusion with what every body is prepared to admit was a most excellent day's sport, even to the rather numerous proportion of punters whom we are afraid came out losers on the afternoon. The racing was exciting and interesting throughout, and except in the Jumpers' Flat Race large fields keenly contested each event.

The fruits of victory during this first half have been extraordinarily evenly divided as no less than thirty-six owners participate in the Rs. 37,950 stakes given in all by the Calcutta Turf Club. Biggest winner is Mr. L. Baring with Rs. 4,000, while Mr. Holmes comes next with Rs. 3,850, and so the list goes down by easy stages until at the other end come half a dozen or so with Rs. 200 each to their credit. Mr. Galstaun has been nothing like so fortunate as usual at this time of year, and so far has only got Rs. 1,300 standing against his name gained by one win and a couple of places.

In the riding the honours have also been fairly well distributed. Mr. Evers has the distinction of heading the list of both G. R's. and professionals up to date with five wins, and six placed rides out of a total of twenty-two. Amongst the professionals, Butters and Fraser have the best records with three wins each, while Murdison, Killorn and Barrett have each scored a couple. Of the G. R's. Mr. Bletsoe is the only other besides Mr. Evers to ride more than one winner, as he has to his credit two firsts and two placed mounts out of nine rides. Altogether 10 professionals and five G. R's. divide the 27 winning rides between them.

Among the trainers too it is a healthy sign, that success has also been very evenly distributed, no less than 18 having a bracket to their names and it is noticeable that a large number of owners have trained their own winners this year. The honour of heading the list is shared equally between a professional and an amateur, Messrs. Bloss and Bletsoe having each got their stables home four times. Mr. Bletsoe's success is chiefly due to the wonderful form shown by that grand mare Solace, who has won three times out of four starts, carrying 10-7, 12-2 and 10-8 respectively. She does her trainer every credit as she looks as fit as it is possible to make them, and has certainly never been better in her life than she is just now.

We have still four or possibly five meetings to go before the Monsoon season comes to an end, and, of course, there is plenty of time to have many changes in the position of affairs. It has truly been said that "that the first shall be last and the last shall be first," and in nothing this is more correct than racing and there is plenty of time yet for owners and jockeys on whom fortune has not smiled greatly so far to come up top side at the finish.

The first race on the card on Saturday, was the Amateur Jumpers' Flat Race. Highland Fling, who was considered a class above the rest, was made favourite at six to four, and Lord Chester, who was reported to have done a good gallop on Tuesday, was backed down from twelves to fives, the "fancy" being on him to a man. However he would not gallop a yard in the race, never going up to his bit at all and the favourite was able to come in a fairly comfortable winner by a length from Eureka Girl, the rest of the field being tailed off in a regular procession.

The Oriental Plate (Division I.) was a horrid upset to all the punters, and must have been a veritable gold mine for the book-makers as the only horse at all fancied, that got its place was Mystic Circle, who dead heated with the twenty to one outsider Blix for second. Lasso, who was favourite at threes and cheerfully backed for a place at odds on, was a head behind and Good Friday and Bridge Knight, who each carried a ton of money never showed up in the race at all. Golden Morn, who was also well backed, ran with them for about half way and then dropped out of it. The winner Sir Ulric was quite a surprise packet. He was, however, lucky to score, as Fraser on Lasso broke both his webs and the horse swerving on the outside lost him a good deal of ground. After passing the winning post he twisted round off the course giving his jockey a fall and a nasty shaking. Many of the punting brigade, probably sore because of losing their money, asseverated roundly that they were certain that Lasso had won and the Judge had missed him. It is really rather a ridiculous assertion for any man to make, as if one is standing at even a slight angle from the Judge's Box the positions of the horses look quite different from what they really are, and nobody is in a position to say which is the winner in a close finish except the Judge, and we have no doubt whatever that the official order is absolutely correct.

For the Amateur Pony Hurdles 13 started, but Chas, no doubt from superstitious motives, decided it would be a mistake to take part in the race and proceeded to rear up, slip over and unseat his rider. The pony was captured and remounted, but still determined that he would not start he fly jumped, and bounded in the air till he succeeded in breaking his girths, unseated his jockey for the second time and thus made it impossible for him to start. The rest of the field eventually got going well except Piccaninny, who was left a couple of lengths. Marconi cut out the pace the whole way, and though Killarney, who was his nearest attendant, made a great attempt to get on terms near the last hurdle she could never get up to him, and was beaten pretty decisively by a length and a half. Loch Lily lay some way out of her ground most of the way and was coming very fast at the end finishing third, half a length behind Killarney. Her performance with 11-5 up is a remarkably good one. Scarboro ran well, finishing a good fourth with Lola close up. Lionel came to the last hurdle very tired and pecking gave Mr. Hamilton a fall, doing no damage, however, beyond a few bruises.

Simontura, the newspapers' tip, was made favourite for the Ellenborough Hurdle Race, Mercedes, Betrayer and Cyril standing each at 5 to 1. There was a capital race between the four well-backed horses and Queen of Gems, all lying close together till the home turn. Here the favourite was beaten and from the last hurdle the race resolved itself into a duel beween Cyril and Mercedes, the former just getting home by a neck. Queen of Gems managed to beat Betrayer for third place. Betrayer walked off extremely lame after the race and one fears he may not able to go again.

Fourteen of them started for the Belvedere Plate, and at the beginning they were all backing Sacristan, Tana and Lady Teazle. Then a big rush came for Northwood, and he was driven down to second place in the betting standing equal with Tana at fours. Sacristan still remaining first favourite. Again, however, a bolt from the blue upset things as the 15 to 1 outsider Harene got away from the gate at a tremendous pace, and finding the comparatively dry goin to her liking came in an easy winner 2½ lengths ahead of the much-fancied Northwood, the time, 1 min. 5-1 5secs., being particularly good for the Monsoons.

Wal was considered a good thing for the Second Pony Handicap, and was backed to the foolish short price of five to two in a well handicapped field of 11. Solace was next in demand at fours, and there was a good deal of money for Echo and Matin Bell at fives and sixes. The race was a very pretty one. Wal was well with them until the straight when he began to tail off and then at the distance a shout went up for Solace, and it could be seen that the race was over as Mr. Field's good mare had them all safe, and won by three-quarters of a length from Echo.

One more very gorgeous upset wound up the day. Bonita had undoubtedly been well treated in the handicap, but every one was frightened to back her on account of her win, and the way she has been roaring of late and except for a small shot at long odds from the stable she went out almost friendless. The dry atmosphere, however, made all the difference to her and she was able to gallop in quite her old form, and beat the favourite St. Rule very decisively by three lengths. Wake Up, who ran a good honest mare, was third, and London, the second favourite, fourth, while Yulgibar, whom a fair stable commission had driven to a prominent place in the betting, found the pace much too hot for him and finished some three lengths behind them.

We are apparently going to have more jockeys, and fewer horses during the next part of the meetings, as J. D. Scott and S. Wishart had each gone away with their strings, while on the other hand Howie, M. Davies, and Trahan have arrived in Calcutta.

The late Mr. "Joe" Thompson's Australian interests have been valued for probate at £45,000, which, together with his English estate, brought the deceased's worth at the time of his death up to £68,000.

The following interesting notes anent the legalation of the totalisator in New South Wales, appear in the Sydney Referee :—

The legalisation of the Totalisator in this State is seemingly as far off as at any previous time. In the Legislative Assembly last week Mr. Peters' motion favourable to the machine was rejected by 31 to 15, and though Mr. Levien is now moving for the reintroduction of his much-interrupted Bill, I do not think there is any chance of the bookmakers being ousted from their present position. In last week's discussion in the House a couple of members were strong on the point that the machine conduced to gambling on the part of boys and girls, but, as with the Gaming Act, a clause could be inserted prohibiting betting on the part of individuals under the age of 21. Not that I seriously think you can prevent a youth from betting. If he has any inclination that way he will find means to indulge it, no matter what Acts to the contrary may be framed by our legislators. Still, I do not think there is any good reason for supposing the installation of the Totalisator would be at all likely to cause a sudden rush of the youthful element to our racecourses. As to the bad effect the Totalisator is alleged to have upon the thoroughbred industry, New Zealand continues to hold its end up, and in England of recent years nearly all the stallions sold at exceptionally high prices have been purchased for Totalisator countries.

The Chief Secretary expressed his belief that the country was against the Totalisator, but, putting the bookmakers aside, I am confident that fully 90 per cent. of those most concerned—that is to say, the race-going public, owners and trainers—favour it. Admitting the 10 per cent. reduction is heavy on investors, it must not be overlooked that a portion of it assists to increase prize-money, and that even when the rankest of outsiders is successful a certain amount goes into a proper channel, whereas, with bookmakers the only medium of speculation the victory of a little-fancied horse benefits neither public nor owners generally. The New Zealand Rules of Racing provide that no club shall give a less sum in stakes than the net amount derived by it from the use of the Totalisator during the previous year. This means the heavier the speculation the better it is for owners. But such is not the case in this State. In Sydney, for instance, the volume of betting has increased considerably since the present Gaming Act came into force, but that has not given the prize-money at suburban fixtures the upward tendency it would have done with the machine in vogue. In New South Wales comparatively few country clubs give even one £100 prize a year, but in New Zealand a different state of affairs exists. As for the metropolitan clubs over there, it is worthy of note that the Canterbury J.C. is distributing £30,240 during the coming season. A fair proportion of that amount will be returned in entry fees—the average cost to start being £1 3s. 2d. per cent—but were it not for the machine, a club in a city with a population of only about 70,000 would certainly not be in a position to be so liberal. Leaving out every other consideration, the Totalisator is desirable, because, in addition to enabling the public to make their own prices, it conduces to greatly-increased prize-money, thereby giving a helping hand to owners. A few owners object to it on the score that it places them in the position of having to put up with the same price about their horses as the general public, but they forget that, without it, they might often be racing for a £50 instead of a £100 prize. However, the influence against its introduction is so strong, that, notwithstanding the Totalisator would be welcomed by most supporters of racing in this State, it will probably be many years before it finds a place on our racecourses.

The will has just been proved of the notorious Mr. James Douglas Baird, of 168, West George Street, Glasgow, and of 10, Wellington Street, Ayr, a member of the Jockey Club and of the Royal Yacht Squadron, winner of the Oaks in 1899, of the Two Thousand Guineas in 1887 and 1889, and numerous other races, who died in February last, aged 52, left estate of the value of £124,317. Mr. Baird was the fourth son of the late Mr. Wm. Baird, of Elie, Ironmaster, formerly M.P. for the Falkirk Burghs, and cousin of the late Mr. Abington Baird.

Included in the inventory of his estate are six thorough-bred horses in training, twelve thorough-bred mares, seven thorough-bred yearlings, and one thorough-bred stallion, together valued at £22,850, and his steam yacht Hiawatha, valued at £3,500.

Letters of administration of his property have been granted to his brother, Mr. Wm. Baird, of Elie, Fife.

A Polo Tournament on the American system was concluded at Abbottabad on the 17th instant; four teams had entered and "B" team came out on top with 2 wins and a draw: "C" was next with 2 wins, "A" scored one win and "D" played one drawn game. On the first day "C" team beat "D" by 4 goals to 3; "B" team beat "A" by 3 goals to 1; "B" then drew with "D," and "C" beat "A" by 3 goals to nil. And in the two other games "B" beat "C" by 3 goals to 1, and "A" beat "D" by 1 goal to nil. Teams were as follows:—"A" team—Major de Saumarez, Captain Luke, Messrs. Rothwell and Edmond, all of the Royal Artillery. "B" team—Messrs. Gee, Chapman and Cole, R. A., with Mr. G. H. Chapman, 53rd Sikhs. "C" team—Mr. Lane, 5th G. R., with Captain Ransford, Mr. Hackett and Mr. Sparrow of the 6th G. R. "D" team—Messrs. Harrington, Heyland and Rolfe, 5th G. R., with Mr. King-Salter, 6th G. R., and Mr. Rennie, I. M. S.

The semi-final games in the Poona Junior Polo Tournament were played on Monday. The first was between the Pinchers and the Royal Engineers which ended, contrary to expectation, in a win for the R.E. by 7 goals to 1. The next game between the 34th Poona Horse and the 33rd Light Cavalry ended in favour of the latter by a goal to nil. A serious accident occurred during this game. Lieutenant H.A. Studdy of the Poona Horse came by a bad fall in the fourth chukker. His pony rolled over him and he was carried from the ground in an unconscious state. He was conveyed to the Sassoon Hospital, where he was found to have sustained internal injuries with concussion of the brain, and we regret to learn that he died on Tuesday morning without regaining consciousness.

The annual polo tournament for the Challenge Shield presented by the late Raja Sir Amar Singh, K.C.S.I., was recently played at Gulmarg. Only three teams entered. The first game was between the Freebooters and Tally-ho composed as follows:—

Freebooters: Mr. H. Gillies (Skinner's Horse), 1; Mr. C. R. B. Henderson (Black Watch), 2; Major G. M. Baldwin (The Guides), 3; Mr. E. H. Pott (Skinner's Horse), 4. Tally-ho: Mr. J. P. Thompson (35th Scinde Horse), 1; Mr. H. F. E. Childers (32nd Lancers), 2; Mr. F. Anderson (Seaforths), 3; Mr. J. F. Neilson (10th Hussars), 4. Umpires: Major Crawley and Mr. Reynolds.

The Freebooters won by five goals to two and met the 12th Lancers in the final. The 12th Lancers team were Mr. P. G. Davidson 1, Mr. C. E. Bryant 2, Major E. Crawley 3, and Captain A. B. Reynolds back. Umpires: Major Williams and Mr. Anderson.

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

It was a fast game throughout, but the Lancers were always the better team and eventually won by seven goals to one.

The third mud sports of the season were held at Bombay on Wednesday, the 18th instant, in splendid weather. There was a large attendance and an attractive programme of seven events : the last of these a pony scurry distance handicap, had to be abandoned owing to paucity of entries. Proceedings opened with individual tent pegging with swords (ponies) and this was won by Mr. L. Grayburn. The jumping came next, Messrs. W. Priestley, L. Grayburn and A. H. Byrt finishing first, second and third. This was followed by the Ladies' Observation Race : the competitors to ride round a course to a tray containing a motley collection of articles, inspect them as long as they liked without dismounting, and then ride back over the same course and make out a list of as many of the articles on the tray as they could remember. Four entered. Mrs. Westropp and Mrs. Wallace tied for first. The Spiral Race was won by Mr. H. Richmond with Mr. A. S. Westropp second, and Messrs. A. K. and W. Graham dead heating for third place. The Pre-Raphaelite Stakes Ladies' Nomination caused much merriment. Gentlemen to ride a given course and run to blackboards upon which their lady partners drew a specified object. Gentlemen then to run to a "bran pie" and extract some article closely connected with the subject of his partner's drawing and ride back with it over the same course. Mr. and Mrs. A. S Westropp came in first, Mr. W. Priestley and Mrs. Tennant second and Mr. H. Richmond and Mrs. Wallace third. The programme ended with musical chairs which was won by Mr. W. Graham with Mr. H. Richmond as rumer up.

The agitation in favour of resuscitating the old-time Public Schools' Challenge Cup race at Royal Henley seems to be increasing by leaps and bounds. Nor are the reasons far to seek. The fine form shown by Eaton and Radley this year and the sound work put in from time to time by oarsmen from Oundle, Shrewsbury, Westminster, St. Paul's, Bedford, Magdalen (Oxford), and numerous other schools, fully justifies any attempt to reinstate this once-popular contest. Whether the original trophy could be secured again is a moot point, but it is not thought that the present owners would raise any difficulty. It matters very little, however, as several gentlemen would speedily provide a fitting trophy, if necessary. Other difficulties are the length of the course, whether the race should be for eights or fours, and the probable supremacy of Eton. All these points are raised by correspondents, the majority of whom are in favour of a four-oared race and a shortened course. As regards the continued success of Eton, that, of course, is looking forward with a vengeance. Mr. H. L. Wyllie (Cheltenham) asks what chance any ordinary school crew would have against the Etonians, who, oftener than not, are good enough to contest the "Grand." One fears that not many crews at all would compete for the various Henley events if such a spirit of doubt constrained them. Anyway as there are any number of schools ready and willing to tackle Eton if the opportunity is only afforded them, the time has now come for the suggestion to be seriously considered by "the powers that be."

The Lawn Tennis Handicaps held at the Poona Gymkhana Club during August have resulted as follows :—Men's Singles (final)—Capt. T. C. Lucas —40 beat Mr. C. S. Campbell—15⅗. Men's Doubles (final)—Capt. W. F. Maxwell and Mr. M. N. Macleod —15⅗ beat Capts. T. C. and G. Lucas—40. Mixed Doubles (final)—Mrs. McGill and Capt. G. Lucas—40 beat Mrs. Bolton and Mrs. J. A. Field—⅗. Ladies' Doubles (final)—Miss Hitchins and Miss M. Hitchins scr. beat Mrs. McIver and Mrs. Wilson—⅗.

Writing in the August number of the Indian Forester, Mr. Roghubir Saran Mital, Range Officer of Deori, C. P., says :—On the 20th March 1909, a tame blue bull or nilgai (Portax pictus) died at the age of three years. On being cut up, eight dusty brown coloured balls were found in its stomach. These balls were brought to me as a curiosity. They were like cannon-balls in appearance and were so hard and stiff that they could not be broken or even flattened with a hammer. I then had one of them sawn in two, and found that it was composed of a compact mass of hair, probably human hair, surrounded by a leathery outer covering. It is surprising where the animal could have found so much hair, and the only explanation seems to be that, as it used to roam freely wherever it liked in the village, it used to lick up the human hair thrown away by barbers. In fact, some of the villagers afterwards stated that they had seen the animal doing this. Four of these balls were from 19 to 21 inches in circumference, and weighed 2 to 2½lbs., while the remaining four were 13 to 15 inches in circumference, and weighed over half a pound. The shikaris around here say they have never heard of any such instance before. It would appear that death was caused by this great accumulation of hair which the animal was unable to digest, but the wonder is that it lived long enough to accumulate such a mass.

Owing to a paucity of entries the second regatta of the Calcutta Rowing Club, fixed for 4th September, has been abandoned.

The Bareilly Polo Tournament this year drew four entries. On the 16th instant the Right Wing, 17th Cavalry beat the Gymkhana B team, and the Royal Artillery from Lucknow beat the Gymkhana A team by 3 goals to 2. The final was played on the 18th instant when the Gunners beat the 17th Cavalry by 3 goals to one.

The annual general meeting of the Nilgiri Game and Fish Preservation Association was held at Ootacamund on the 17th instant, the following members being present :—Mr. A. R. Cumming, I.C.S., President ; Mr. S. Cox, Honorary Secretary ; Mr. Gordon Hadfield, Mr. Edward Hadfield, Mr. W. L. Edmiston, Mr. W. Ward, Mr. J. H. Wapshare, Mr. A. S. Crum, Mr. J. Kenna, Mr. J. W. Cherry, Mr. A. M. Kinloch and Dr. Sheldon. After the annual report of the Committee had been adopted, Mr. Gordon Hadfield proposed that the Honorary Secretary bring before the Collector the desirability of keeping licensed cattle out of the sholas, on account of the destruction they cause to the undergrowth and the consequent destruction to cover for game. Mr. Edward Hadfield seconded this proposal which was carried unanimously.

On Mr. W. L. Edmiston taking his seat, in response to an enquiry, Mr. Gordon Hadfield remarked that he was not a member unless he took out a sporting licence. Mr. Edmiston remarked that he was one of the original members of the Association, and having paid his entrance fee he was under the impression that he was always a member. Mr. Cox remarked that the present rules were altogether unintelligible and that the rules were under revision by a Sub-Committee of the Association. Several members were of the opinion that a member of the Association need not necessarily be a licence-holder. In view of the revision of the rules, the sense of the meeting was that Mr. Edmiston should be held to be both a member and to have a vote.

The following Committee was elected for the next official year :—Messrs. H. P. Hodgson, J. Harding Pascoe, E. F. Barber, H. E. Browne, W. Ward, J. Fellowes Wilson, A. M. Kinloch, J. H. Wapshare, A. S. Crum, Edward Hadfield, Gordon Hadfield, J. Kenna and Dr. Sheldon. It was proposed by Mr. W. L. Edmiston, seconded by Mr. W. Ward, and carried, that the District Forest Officer, the District Superintendent of Police, the Divisional Officer, the Conservator of Fisheries, a delegate from the depôt at Wellington and a delegate from the British regiment stationed at Wellington be honorary members.

The Occult Review publishes the following letter from H. M. T., Edinburgh :—Dear Sir,—It would be very interesting to know, through your columns, if any of your readers have ever seen or heard of the phantom deer of Madura. My late father, who was a great sportsman, a crack shot, and traveller in Southern India, came across this herd one day while on an expedition from Madura to Madras. I quote from his writing, dated somewhere about 1856 : "On our way to Madras one evening, I saw a herd of very fine deer passing our path. I fired twice at them with very good aim ; indeed, I could hardly miss the fine bucks I had aimed at. They all escaped free. It was on sandy soil, and when we came to examine it there was not a footprint to be seen. A native told us we had seen and fired at the phantom deer, the spirits of the old kings of Madura, and they only showed themselves once in a hundred years ; that it was very bad luck to see them, and that those who attempted to injure them would never succeed in anything afterwards. Naturally I fired at them as I have done hundreds of times before in the cases of ordinary deer. These were of singular beauty and no one could have been more astonished than I was that neither of my shots took effect or at the absence of all traces of their footprints in the smooth sand. I saw them distinctly, or I never would have fired. This was the last of my marches under Tippu Sultan's trees, and, alas ! the beginning of misfortune."

An interesting communication by Mr. A. W. Granit to the Proceedings of the Finnish Botanical and Zoological Society proves that the badger is not averse to feeding on truffles. This animal has the reputation of being a very miscellaneous feeder, though perhaps living chiefly on roots and fruit. Truffles, however, have not hitherto been recognised as forming a part of its bill of fare. Over an area of some two acres in Finland the truffles were found to have been dug up and eaten. The footprints and droppings in the neighbourhood indicated that it had been done by badgers. Badgers are very fond of wasp grubs, and will calmly dig out the nests in spite of the angry demonstrations of the parent wasps. They also have a taste for young rabbits, game, eggs, beetles, and all kinds of young animals and birds, as well as certain roots. In fact, they are somewhat similar in their diet to bears. If they were more numerous in this country they might do a lot of harm, but they are so scarce that it would be a pity to still further decrease the numbers of such an interesting animal.

The Cadet Cup Association Football Tournament was concluded in Calcutta on Friday, when the Armenian College beat the Calcutta Boys' School by two goals to nil.

A novel club has recently been started in London known as the Pistol Club, formed to promote mimic duelling with pistols and revolvers. English duellists of a century and a half ago discarded the sword in favour of the pistol. Though to-day it is improbable that the pistol will ever enjoy such pre-eminence in the counterfeit of the duel it is, at all events, safe to predict for it a considerable degree of popularity. Mimic pistol duelling has become possible, thorough the invention by Dr. Devillers of wax bullets with cartridges to fit the modern French duelling pistol and the regulation army revolver. The cartridge is fitted with a cap which contains a sufficient charge to ensure accuracy of fire, and the projectile strikes the object at which it is aimed with considerable force. The combatants, however, wear wire masks with thick glass to protect the eyes, and they are attired in long loose coats for the protection of body and limbs. Affixed to the pistol in front of the trigger there is a steel shield for the hand. Pistol duelling is an interesting sport, in which physical fitness and self-discipline are essential to success. It is necessary to be a good shot and something more, for there is a considerable difference between taking a deliberate aim at a fixed target and shooting at an armed opponent at the word of command within a period of about a second and a half. In these mimic duels the ceremony of a "serious affair" is observed. There is a director of assaults, a judge to decide which of the competitors fired first, and four "markers" to judge the hits. The competitors are placed at 25 paces from each other—a distance of 22 yards. They stand with their pistols pointing downwards clear of the feet, the butt touching the thigh or knee. The director gives the word "fire," and while he counts one, two, three the combatants raise their weapons and fire. The interval between each of these commands is regulated by a metronome which is set to register from 80 to 100 beats a minute. If a competitor raises his pistol before the word of command, or if he fires after the word "three," the result of his shot is nullified. One point is given for a hit, and an additional quarter point is awarded to the competitor who fires first and hits his opponent.

It would not seem an easy matter to convert a yacht of any kind into a torpedo boat. The suggestion has, however, been made in order that yachtsmen may join in the naval defence of the country. But in some respects the yatchsmen might be of valuable assistance to the Navy at a time of war if he had received some necessary training beforehand. At a meeting recently held in London Captain Whitney of Australia suggested a scheme which he thought would enable yachtsmen to participate in naval defence. He said that in return for the time yachtsmen gave to become efficient in the several branches of naval defence it would be necessary for the Government to offer some encouragement and assistance. The Government should offer a rank and gazetted commission to those yachtsmen who made themselves thoroughly efficient by passing through drill and examinations in subjects laid down. The subjects he would propose were: (1) coastal navigation, together with the handling of small craft, such as a torpedo boat and a fore and aft sailing vessel; (2), the use of the commercial and Margatt's code and flash signals for night work; (3) the construction and working of motor-engines; (4) the handling and running of torpedoes; (5) the handling of small arms, quick-firing guns, and light field guns for landing parties; and (6) efficiency at rifle practice at moving targets. He also suggested that the yachts whose owners joined this scheme should be provided by the Government with two small, powerful motor-engines for each yacht, of sufficient power to attain the required speed, so that at any time, with 24 hours' notice, those yachts could be converted into 18 or 20-knot torpedo boats. The chairman thought that they had sufficient sporting men to build those craft if they were supported. All they wanted now was for the Admiralty to take an interest in the scheme.

A special meeting of the council of the I.F.A. was held last week with Mr. Reynolds in the chair.

The report of the referee in the semi-final match (Measurers vs. National) for the Trades Cup was considered and in view of the facts therein stated the council decided that the game be awarded to the Indian team.

The report of the referee against the Customs "B" team for rough play in this fixture with the Hurrish Sporting also in connection with the above cup was considered.

It was decided that Messrs. Pugh and Vears who were sent off the ground by the referee during the match be disqualified from playing for one year and that the authorities of the Customs Club be written to so as to prevent a recurrence of these scenes.

The Bombay Gymkhana Rugby Tournament, which begins on Saturday, promises to be a great success this year. Eight teams have entered and some really good games are looked forward to. The draw is as follows:—

Preliminary round. West Ridings play Poona, 28th August; Leicesters play Bombay Gymkhana, 30th August; Calcutta play Mhow, 31st August; Gloucesters play Madras, 1st September. Semi-finals: winners of first two ties meet 2nd September, winners of second two meet 3rd September. Final—4th September. The dates are subject to alteration.

Messrs. Hardy Brothers, the celebrated fishing rod manufacturers, whose angling specialities have won them a name for excellence second to none in all parts of the world, have recently been appointed Fishing Rod and Tackle Manufacturers to his Majesty the King of Spain. Their agents in Spain have informed them that the gut crop at present being gathered is one of the best of that they have seen, the heavy and extra heavy classes being more plentiful than has been the case for many years. The cost of raw gut in Spain remains about the same as last year with the exchange steady so that prices will remain as at present.

The Sind Point-to-Point Races were held on Saturday, the 14th instant, over practically the same course as last year. Five Teams entered for the big race, the I.C.S., R.F.A., East Lancs, Baluchis and Merchants, but of these only three faced the starter, the Civilians, East Lancs and Gunners. It was a good race, Grasshopper and Artlumber were in front all the way, the latter finishing first. A close tussle for first place ended in a win for the East Lancs by 29 points, the Gunners scoring 28 and the I.C.S. 21. The following was the order of finishing:—

1 Artlumber	Capt. Higgon	R.F.A.
2 Grasshopper	Mr. Porteous	E. Lancs.
3 Beauty	Col. King, D.S.O.	R.F.A.
4 Cecil	Mr. Cane	E. Lancs.
5 Mouse	Mr. Allardice	E. Lancs.
6 Grace	Mr. Beyts	I.C.S.
7 Chile	Mr. Crerar	I.C.S.
8 Suleiman	Mr. Gibson	I.C.S.
9 Artful	Mr. Ziegler	R.F.A.
10 Lady Grisoline	Mr. Baker	I.C.S.
11 Pilgrim's Progress	Capt. Forsyth	R.F.A.
12 Salome	Capt. Hill	E. Lancs.

The Horse Race over the same course brought out only two starters, and Mr. Calvocaressi's Rhoda refused the first jump, leaving Captain Higgon's Steelpen to run the course alone. Five entered for the Pony Steeplechase Cup which resulted as follows:—

Mr. Lane's Tamoose, Mr. Beyts	... 1
Mr. Gibson's Psyche, Owner ...	... 2
Mr. Griffin's pony Owner ...	... 3
Col. Beevor's Mischief II., Mr. Stewart	... 4
Mr. Calvocaressi's Raffles, Owner	... 0

The Indian Civil Service were "at home" during the afternoon and the prizes were given away at the conclusion of the sport by Mrs. Beyts.

There are many sportsmen who will be shocked to learn of the affliction which has befallen Mr. W. M. Vipan of Gungowlie Indigo Factory in the Durbhunga District. He has gone totally blind and will have to relinquish his post in October. He has a wife and three children, two of whom are at school in Darjeeling and it is generally felt that as he is not well off some provision should be made for Mr. Vipan and his family. The Behar Planters' Association have resolved to raise a fund which will enable Mrs. Vipan to start a boarding house in one of the hill stations, and subscriptions will be gladly received. All those who know the ever genial, open handed, and hard riding "Tosser" whose good humoured personality and hospitality have won him a host of friends will, we are sure, come forward to assist him in his affliction. Subscriptions may be sent to the Indian Planters Gazette or to the General Secretary, Behar Planters' Association.

The final game in the Trades Cup Association Football Tournament was played in Calcutta last Thursday evening when the Wanderers beat the Nationals by a goal to nil.

The following are the results of important cricket fixtures at Home during the past week:—

Lancashire beat Derbyshire at Chesterfield by 150 runs.

Kent beat Surrey at the Oval by 9 wickets.

The following matches were drawn owing to rain: Gloucestershire vs. Australians, Somerset vs. Hampshire, Leicestershire vs. Sussex, and Yorkshire vs. Middlesex.

Surrey beat Yorkshire at the Oval by 86 runs.

Sussex beat Essex at Brighton by nine wickets.

Northampton beat Derby at Derby, by eight wickets.

The following matches were drawn:—Kent vs. Australians, Gloucester vs. Worcester, Notts vs. Middlesex, Hampshire vs. Leicester, and Warwick vs. Lancashire.

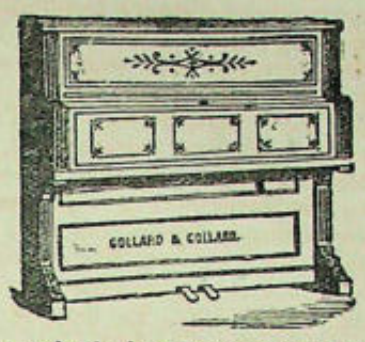
Our Coonoor correspondent writes:—The Depôt Boxing Tournament comes off at the Gymnasium, Wellington, on Thursday and Friday, 26th and 27th August, each night commencing at 8 P.M. The programme comprises several events, notable ones being the Light-weight competition open to N. C.O's and men of the Depôt, Feather-weight competition, a grand six-round contest between Private Howlett, Royal Fusiliers and Private McGouran, Border Regiment. Several prizes and medals have been offered by Messrs. Spencer and Co., Mr. E. Garside, and the Rose and Crown Brewery.



The American tennis tournament of the Coonoor Club has just terminated, and after a great many hard fights was won by Commander Hickman, R.I.M. and Miss Nessie Grove.

The hockey tournament for the Gymkhana Cup is now in full progress and the first two ties were played off yesterday when the Sherwood Foresters (Bangalore) beat the Cheshire "A" team of Secunderabad, and the Royal Fusiliers of Lebong beat the "B" team of the Cheshire Regiment.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—Seven races figured for the Fifth Extra on Wednesday, all but two having very large fields, and the public must have had distinctly the worst of the exchanges. With the approach of the Big Meeting things are beginning to look more ship-shape on the course and some of the classier animals are figuring. It was a day of good racing and exciting finishes, in only one case bar the jump race was there a length or more between the first two.

The Lilliput Novice Plate was first on the card and Orby was heavily backed with Minerva and Nagashi next. Prince Chestnut and Porter made the pace, but gave way to Waterloo, Orby and Minerva at the bend. Minerva was second at the distance, but then Lahuk and Nagashi passed them all, and the latter won by a neck after one of Southall's characteristic finishes. These ponies should have claimed the attention of any who had watched their previous running.

Next the Beginners' Steeplechase, three only being left in with Greenstone better than Ugly and Daroji. Greenstone made the running for the first mile, when Ugly went to the front and the other fell some way back. After crossing the road, however, Greenstone came up again into the lead and, just as he was being proclaimed the winner, fell at the jump opposite the half mile. From here Daroji went clean away and won pulling up by twelve lengths.

Ten faced the starter for the Summer Plate, Soult Line a non-starter. First Chivalry and Lord Carlyon commanded the market, then the latter expanded with Killua contracting. Bucolic led Picturesque for the first couple of furlongs when Chivalry suddenly flashed out to the front. At the distance though Killua was seen passing Bucolic and in a very pretty finish also passed Chivalry by half a length. This is quite his old form again, the race being run in 1min. 2secs.

Open betting left Arabistan a bit better fancied than The Munshi and Surkhab in the Service Plate and a fine race was seen. Express made the pace to the distance, where The Munshi took it from him. Later Arabistan came up, but liberal use of the whip enabled Captain Tomkinson to keep the lead by a head.

On his last win (9-12) did not seem too much for Tachreet in the Hadapsur Plate, and he was a strong favourite from Amood, Ashroff and Company. Sanjakdhar, Mumbra, Ashroff and Humayoon was the order all the way to the bend where Tachreet outside and Amood behind the bunch came up. It was a great race from there, Tachreet and Ashroff in front and Amood getting inside Mumbra on the rails. It was the old style now against the two crouching ones, and Southall got Amood home. His admirers say he could have got there on any one of the three; and I think them not bad judges!

Byramjee was thought to have the mile Moderate Plate in his hands, but Oakton expanding after the first tentative price put up and Lachlan never seriously considered, Ashanti Gold took pride of place with Admiral Crichton next. Oakton was clear in front from the first to the distance where Metal Boy, Not Yet and Yuba also fell out of the running, leaving it to Admiral Crichton, Ashanti Gold, Apology and Lachlan in a line in that order from the rails. Nearing the stand it was quite apparent that Lachlan was going best and he won fairly comfortably, Apology beating the others. Since he changed to Mysore ownership the winner has come on.

Finally the Arab Novice mile with Hyder II. the rage, Balmoral and Nulli Secundus next. Nulli Secundus got none the best of the run, but Balmoral looked very likely at the turn with Lapwing. Later on Hyder came through and the result was an open question, but the latter had slightly more in hand and won all out by a neck after being less lucky in the running.

There was quite a classy day's racing on Saturday for the Sixth Extra when the eight events carded did not spell a very good time for punters. A fair proof of this were the startling odds declared by the new Tote, working for the first time, on some winners.

We began with the two divisions of the Strangers' Plate, in the first of which Sharar stood out on form, though there was a doubt as to his staying six, there being always a fair price owing to money for Hachal and Prime Minister. In the race Sharar led Hachal and had him well set; Ebrahim Pasha passing the latter as did Prime Minister on the post.

Bombay form pointed to Winchester in the second, but there are several who have improved and solid money for Sunsun and Steel was justified. After First Class and Winchester had set the pace, Steel came away all over a winner, but Sunsun came through after the distance and after a hard race from there beat him half a length.

Nine in the Welter Plate gave us something to do, Wolferton eventually warming shorter than Squire Alfred and Peria Doray. Wolferton cut out the running, but was done at the bend, where Squire Alfred and Peria Doray led. A good race ended in Captain Meynell staying out on the former.

Two big divided fields contested the 1¼ miles Khandalla Plate, and Precious was made a firm favourite for the first, Bendigo and Swalior well backed. Famous and then Brutus was in front, Dhafer and Alma showing up for a time at the three, where Bendigo came very strong to shortly take the lead and escape the bunch, behind which Precious was to be seen looking for an opening. The old champion only got through near the stand and then came so fast that he only lost by a head, leaving Bendigo an undoubtedly lucky winner.

The other was very open, Moscow, Darianoor and Hazza commanding the market after Fruit Salt, No Trumps and Urgent led at various stages, Young Salanic coming into the lead with Little Gafil before the bend. Unlike recent runs, when he has failed to stay, Young Salanic went on to win comfortably with Little Gafil staying out Darianoor.

On his recent runs, and general form, Absentee certainly looked good for the August Plate; plenty of place money coming for Bantock. After Misty Morn had led Absentee entered the straight in the lead, but a furlong from home Bantock literally cantered past him.

The M. G. stable made a fine hash of things in the Sydney Plate, when they made Cheeky a second favourite to Comeback, ignoring Refresher and Pantry Girl. This last one was first away and was later passed by Naughty Boy and Comeback. Comeback led down the home run, but Pantry Girl coming again simply smothered him, as did Naughty Boy.

Lastly the Garrison Plate, money for Singleton making him equal favourite with Paul Pry. Haymaker and Admiral Crichton being done with Paul Pry took command and an exciting race was seen when Pincher and Singleton challenged. They were all out, and, after swerving across Singleton, Paul Pry got home. Pincher's owner lodged an objection, but, as he had not been interfered with, this was overruled.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 6th August 1909.

I was reminded last week end of the refrain of the old revivalist hymn "Oh what will the answer be!" when I questioned the glass, the weather prophets and others as to what the weather was going to be like on August Bank holiday. By 8 o'clock on Monday morning I had my answer—it was going to be of the "national calamity" order. Literally millions of excursionists were robbed of their brief vocation, for the day was grey, wet, windy and cold by turns and uniformly depressing and conducive to more than Israelitish murmuring from beginning to end. Of course, by way of "rubbing it in" the weather ever since has been ideal!

It is to this gyrating and corybantic country that the Czar of All the Russias has chosen to come and free himself for a while from the cares of state. He has assisted at the Cowes regatta and viewed the manœuvres of the Fleet under royal auspices. There exist among us certain cranks who do not seem to like his coming, but we can afford to smile at such objections. The efforts made to protect the unfortunate Czar afford curious reading. The precautions taken by order of the Kaiser for the safety of Nicholas while passing from Kiel through the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal on his way to England are reported to be of an extraordinary character. All craft which happen to be in the canal will be penned into the indentations made in the sides of the canal to admit of war ships passing while the banks will be lined throughout by soldiery. The latter is an ordinary precaution, but this time it is to be supplemented by a second patrol of cavalry moving at some distance inshore from the banks. The state of perpetual fear in which the Czar lives may be judged from the fact that one night recently, after deciding to sleep at Prince Heinrich's Castle, Hemmelmark, he suddenly changed his mind and went to sleep on board the royal yacht Standard. The most rigorous measures were taken that no stranger should come near that vessel. All boats in the bay were hauled up on shore and a fleet of torpedo destroyers kept watch and ward round the sleeping Czar. "What a life!" one is tempted to exclaim. "Is the power and the glory of the position sufficient compensation for days and nights of terror?"

A prolonged roar of cheering. A volume of sound that shook the theatre. Behind the falling curtain a pretty figure trembling with emotion and smiling through the tears that sparkled in her eyes. Such was the "Merry Widow's" exit last night at Daly's Theatre.

Never before surely has such a scene been witnessed in a theatre as that which marked the fall of the curtain on the 778th performance of "The Merry Widow." When the scene at Maxims, in the third act, came to an end and the company stood grouped behind a barrier of bouquets and baskets of flowers the whole house rose to its feet spontaneously. Down came the curtain and up it rose again and again to volleys of cheers from all parts of the house. The gallery launched forth one deep bay, in which could faintly be distinguished individual cries of "Joe!" and "Elsie," for, as everybody knows, Miss Lily Elsie is (or, alas! was) the Merry Widow and Mr. Joe Coyne her elusive lover, Prince Danilo. After the curtain had gone up a dozen times there was a pause while the stage was cleared of flowers. There was no pause, however, in the cheering. It continued unabated until the curtain went up again, and Mr. George Edwardes appeared alone on the stage. He tried to speak, but the cheering drowned his efforts. At length, during a period of comparative silence, he managed to make himself heard, he got through with it successfully and his final bow was the signal for a fresh outbreak of wild enthusiasm which was prolonged for nearly half an hour after the fall of the curtain.

Several companies will begin rehearsing new plays for the coming autumn season during the present week, and within six weeks quite a respectable number of fresh attractions will have taken their places at the West End playhouses.

Last Friday night James B. Fagan's clever play, "The Earth," finished its run at the Kingsway Theatre, and brought Mr. Otto Stuart and Miss Lena Ashwell's joint management—arranged only for that play—to an end. Miss Ashwell will accept a suitable tenant now for her pretty and convenient theatre, as she has to go to the Globe Theatre to play the lead in Alexander Bisson's "La Femme X," due on 1st September.

Another play that ended its London season on Friday night was the successful "King of Cadonia," at the Prince of Wales Theatre. Mr. Curzon will produce its successor, a musical comedy by Paul Rubens, with Denmark for its scene, early in the first week of September.

This evening the long run of the most successful comedy produced in London during the season that has just ended will come to an end at the Duke of York's Theatre. The play I refer to is, of course, J. M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows." We are told that Mr. Charles Frohman has made a profit of £20,000 on the London run of this play. He must have made yet more out of it in America. It is a lot of money to make out of the hard-headed Scots.

Mr. J. M. Barrie, novelist, dramatist, modest and self-respecting man, has declined the offer of knighthood made on the occasion of the recent shower of Birthday Honours. On this occasion, it will be remembered, Messrs. Beerbhom Tree and Pinero received Knighthoods—Mr. Barrie was content to give it a miss in baulk, and in my humble opinion he acted rightly. Why should he be knighted? He has written brilliantly and successfully, his books and his plays are popular, he has earned his living, done creditable work and swelled his banking account as thousands of others have done and are doing all round us; if this establishes a claim to knighthood how few can hope to escape. Really the way the honours scatter gun is fired off in Merry England reminds one of the indiscriminate handling of the same weapon in Sunny Ind, where one sees scores of worthy pay-drawing, daily round and common task doing people brought down by C.I.E's. even before they have qualified by pension or commercial good fortune to retire and take their decoration where it may not incite to ribald laughter. Was it not poor Abreigh Mackay who said that the man who could find nothing to laugh at in a C.I.E. was totally devoid of the sense of humour?

The Vagrant.

Father Healy told a capital story of a poor member of his congregation who had a very fine litter of half-bred Persian kittens, and, knowing the Protestant parson was very fond of cats, he took them to him and asked him to buy them. "You see what beauties they are, and they are rale Protestant kittens, you riverence." "Yes," replied the person, "and I would buy them, but we have already ten cats in the house, and my wife will have no more." A few days later Pat took them to Father Healy, begging him to buy them as "rale Catholic kittens." The father had dined with the parson the night before, who told him all about Pat's visit; so he said: "Be off with you, you sinner. You told the parson they were Protestant kittens, and now you came and tell me they are Catholic kittens." "Yes, I did, your riverence; but that was before their eyes were open."

Review.

FISHING AND FOSSIL-HUNTING.*

MR. AFLALO is too well known as a writer on popular natural history and sport to stand in any need of commendation on our part; but in the exquisitely illustrated volume entitled "Sunset Playgrounds" he has gone a good way towards surpassing his previous efforts. The work should be read with special interest by all lovers of the rod in India on account of the ease with which they could make the same trip as the author, with the prospect of enjoying as good sport. Sportsmen, it is observed, are often afraid that with only a month's holiday at their disposal, they would be quite unable to enjoy a fishing-trip to Canada, but this, according to Mr. Aflalo, is a mistake. He urges indeed that, "with their plans made beforehand under proper advice, they would get more fish and fishing in the remaining half of their freedom than in the whole month at home, while the cost of the journey would not exceed the rental of really first-class water in Scotland."

The volume before us is, however, by no means restricted to Canadian fishing; on the contrary, the first half is devoted to the author's experience in the West Indies and tropical America, and wonderful experiences they seem to have been. Among his best sport was that afforded by the so-called yellow-finned tunnies or "tunas" of Catalina, although this would have been greatly surpassed had the true blue tunnies been present at the time of his visits. These yellow-fins are, however, fine sporting fish, ranging in weight from 20lb. upwards. A striking feature of the Catalina fishing is the clearness and smoothness of the water, permitting of big fish being seen at a depth of 30 feet, and the proximity of deep water to the cliffs. With light tackle such splendid fish in such beautiful water afford almost unrivalled sport, flying-fish being the usual bait. One sportsman caught a yellow-tail of 48½lb., while a second about the same time took one of 60lb., which appears to have been the record specimen. The author was, however, specially successful with black bass.

"I only went out once after black sea-bass," he writes, "at Catalina, and was so lucky as to kill two in an hour. How great was my fortune will be gathered from the fact that the pioneer of Catalina fishing never in all these years succeeded in capturing one on the rod, though on the hand line formerly the approved method of fishing for them, he has killed scores." The kind bagged by the author scaled only just short of 300lb.

As regards Canadian lake-fishing, the author remarks that "the lakes of Canada are remarkable for both their number and the diversity of their character and contents. In Trout Lake, on the further side of the Rockies, I found a reed-fringed mere deep only in the middle, stocked by Nature with rainbow trout, and harbouring no other kind of fish. In Minnewauka, in the heart of that range, I fished in a crater-like basin, recalling Tahoe, though lacking much of its beauty with deep water fishing only for trout of great size. In the first of these it is admitted that the fly kills more than any other line; in the second all the trolling is with spoons."

In these and other spots Mr. Aflalo made some splendid bags but unfortunately some of the lakes have been ruined by certain unknown miscreants who introduced perch and pike. As a whole, the trip was a thorough success and the anglers who are unable to follow in the footsteps of the author, should try and console themselves for the loss by at once telling their booksellers to send them his volume.

In the "Life of a Fossil-Hunter" we have the autobiography of a distinguished member of a class of men of whom the world in general hears but little, as such, however, as comes from the results of their labours generally goes to the palæontologists by whom the specimens are described and named. Nevertheless, the men who follow this trade have to undergo as stirring adventures by field and flood as the big-game hunter; while in America, at any rate, the hardships they have to undergo are greater than those which fall to the lot of the majority of sportsmen, since some of their most precious prizes are to be found only in the heart of the most arid deserts, where thirst and heat do their best to render the land inaccessible to mankind. As Professor H. F. Cobern states in the Introduction he has contributed to the volume, the fossil-hunter in America "must be willing to undergo all kinds of hardships, to suffer cold in the early spring and the later autumn and early winter months, to suffer intense heat and the glare of the sun in the summer months, and he must be prepared to drink alkali-water, and in some regions to fight off the attack of the mosquito and other pests."

For more than thirty years Mr. C. H. Sternberg, the hero and author of the volume before us, has been collecting vertebrate fossils in the wilds of North America; and it is largely owing to his labours that the museums of his own country own the wondrous collections of strange beasts and giant reptiles that render them so-famous throughout the world. And it is also due to his exertions that men like Marsh and Cope were provided with the material for the palæontological works on which their reputation as men of science is so largely based.

One of the most interesting adventures of himself and his party relates to the acquisition in 1879 of the skull of a then new species of sabre-toothed tiger. This fossilised skull had weathered out of the sandstones and clays of the Bad Lands of the Far West, and in so doing had protected the rock below, which in consequence formed a columnal support for the treasure.

"The skull," writes the author, "topped a pinnacle, perhaps thirty or forty feet high, and tapering like the spire of a church. At the top it was only a foot diameter. We knew that it would not be strong enough to support the weight of a ladder, and it was too steep to scale. Moreover, if we blew it up with powder, the skull, whose rows of teeth seemed to grin at us defiantly, would be shattered to bits."

At length the author's companion, one Davis by name, threw a rope lasso-fashion round the spire, and let it settle down to a line where he thought the rock would be strong enough to bear his weight. He then climbed hand-over-hand to the loop, stood erect, picked the coveted skull from its place and got safely down. A jerk on the rope, and the entire column came down in a heap of fragments. The skull, which we believe is still unique, bears to this day a label recording Davis' brave ascent.

Many other adventures are recorded by the author in the same picturesque style; and the work is certainly of greater interest than the average big-game hunters' volumes, of which we now-a-days have so many. It is, moreover, illustrated by reproductions of Mr. Charles Knight's marvellous restorations of the giant extinct mammals and reptiles of America, so that readers who are desirous of gaining some information about these strange monsters can do so much more easily and pleasantly than by consulting a scientific text-book. We can, in fact, recommend the book as being one that strikes entirely new ground, far away from the beaten track.

BAD LUCK, AND GOOD.

IT is not often one's work and one's pleasure lie in the some direction, but this happened to the writer early one hot weather. The inhabitants of a particularly "jungly" part of the district having taken up cattle-lifting as a lucrative form of amusement until the rains should permit them to turn to agriculture again, military police patrols had been sent out to put a stop to the practice. It fell to my lot to superintend the working of these patrols, and as the country abounded in thamin I anticipated a good time in the intervals between work.

The country was a series of small cultivated valleys between ranges of low hills covered with jungle, with here and there an open grassy space, the common grazing grounds of the village cattle and the thamin. At the village I had selected as my headquarters there was a rest-house, and the villagers reported thamin in numbers, so that things looked promising.

But unfortunately it was slightly too early in the year for the jungle fires to have burnt up the dried undergrowth and dead leaves. The former obscured vision, and the latter, which covered the ground thickly, made anything like a silent approach impossible. This I soon discovered on the first occasion I went out, when I arrived on the ground after a start before dawn, and three-mile walk across dried up paddy fields.

Although it was not long before we sighted a herd, they had heard us long before we saw them and were very suspicious. They were moving very slowly, feeding as they went, always keeping out of shot, disappearing over one ridge as we crawled up the one they had just left. An hour or so of this sort of thing became a bit monotonous so I decided to try and work round, out of sight, to a position ahead of them on the line they were moving on, and then "humour" them towards me. So leaving one Burman to do the "humouring" part, I and the other turned down to the foot of the hills, and then moved along the valley at a sharp pace parallel to the main ridge along which the thamin were moving. About a mile and a half further on a spur ran down into the plain, and on its crest line were a few scattered trees and some antheaps which would give us good cover from view. On arriving there the only living thing in sight was the "humorous" Burman walking openly along the main ridge. His idea of "humouring" them was to walk straight at them directly we were out of sight, when of course they bolted.

It was no use trying to follow them up so we had to strike out in a new direction, and trust to luck again. At the end of another up and down hill walk of an hour or so, during which we had sighted a couple of stags disappearing among the trees well out of range, we came upon another herd luckily before they had sighted us. They were feeding in an open space, but between us and them was a narrow belt of rather open jungle from the further edge of which an easy shot could be obtained. This with a few ant hills would give fair cover during the stalk, but the ground under the tree being thickly covered with leaves of a large and particularly crackly kind, silence was out of the question. There was nothing for it but to try and to pick the places where the fallen leaves were fewer even if this necessitated a stalk in full view. Half way across a doe lifted her head to stare suspiciously, but resumed her feeding when she saw no movement and heard no sound. A little further, and two does looked up and began to shift about uneasily, thus infecting the whole herd. After staring for a while they decided it was better to move off so I had to take the chance such as it was, that was offered to me, the shot only changing their pace from a trot to a gallop.

After another hour, during which nothing turned up, it was clear that the only thing to do was to strike for home, as the village cattle and wood cutters were out all over the jungle, and the increasing heat of the sun would send the thamin into thick cover for the day.

An attempt in the late afternoon to find them in the thick jungle was no more successful. All that was visible was an occasional tail end darting through the trees. It was like shooting rabbits bolting through whins at home, though far more difficult.

Each day was a repetition of the above, diversified by varying forms of bad luck. On one occasion, while moving through a belt of jungle from one ground to another, the movement of what I had taken to be a bit of dry branch revealed a thamin standing at gaze about a hundred yards in front of me. He must have been in view for some little time, but so well did his colour harmonize with his surroundings that I did not see him till the slight motion of his horn (which I had taken for a dead branch) betrayed him. Having picked out one, it was easy to spot two more close to him, and like him standing at gaze partly concealed. But a shot was impossible for fear of hitting the Burman who was walking just in front of me. By the time he had stopped the thamin were crashing through the jungle.

Another morning two stags, whom we should otherwise have passed by, betrayed their presence by rising suddenly from some cover about two hundred yards away on our left. They were both standing with their hindquarters to us looking over their flanks ready to dash off at the slightest provocation. The only thing was to take the shot, to which one of them dropped, only to struggle up the next minute, and, with one hind leg swinging, follow his unwounded comrade. The two Burmans with me immediately dashed off in pursuit. From the top of a rise over which the thamin had disappeared they made violent signals to me as I was trying to pick up the blood trail. Thinking the beast had collapsed in the hollow beyond I hurried after them. Before I reached them they continued on, only to repeat the same performance from the top of another rise, and from yet again another, until when I did eventually catch them up there was no sign of thamin. They reported that they continually stopped to look behind and that the hind leg of one was broken and that they did not know where they had gone to. As they were unable to pick up the blood trail we had to give it up.

On the third and worst occasion we sighted a big herd grazing peacefully across our front about three-quarters of a mile away. The ground between being favourable for a stalk I was able to get up to a good position behind an antheap, within a hundred yards of the herd still grazing unsuspiciously. Picking out the stag with the biggest head I fired at him, and missed him clean. At the shot the whole herd, bewildered by the report, galloped straight towards me instead of away from me. They did not see me until they were within ten yards of me when the whole lot pulled up and stared. Of course my Manser bolt took this occasion to refuse to open, and we stared at each other for what seemed to me an age; they wondering what I was doing, and I wondering whether the bolt would open in time for me to get a shot. It did, and I was able to get a standing shot in at a range of ten yards. It would seem impossible to miss a thing like that, but I did it. Then as the herd made off at a gallop I pumped lead and language at them, the latter mostly directed at myself. It is on occasions such as this that the fisherman dances on his fishing rod, and the ecclesiastical golfer gets his caddy to "say it for him." But I had no fishing rod to dance on, and no caddy to say it for me, and my feelings were not relieved by the Burmans who were peering about and asking me what I had shot.

That was about the limit and there was nothing for it but home. That afternoon I saw from the verandah spirals of smoke rising from the jungle in different places. These soon increased in volume to great clouds of smoke rolling over the tree tops before the hot wind, and I knew the grass and undergrowth had started burning. At night a glare here and there in the jungle with sometimes a ring of twinkling fire at the edges of the forest showed that the fire had taken a good hold. The next time I went out there was absolutely nothing to be seen. The ground was black and strewn with ashes amongst which an old dry log still smouldered. The dried up grass being burnt there was no more fodder until the first showers should bring up the young green shoots, and the deer had moved off to more favoured parts.

So I was not sorry therefore when my duties called me off elsewhere, the trip which I had looked forward to with such hopes leaving me with nothing but a record of dismal failure. Moreover, if I had only had a license I must have had an elephant to compensate me for my non-success. We walked on to one feeding on some plantain trees one morning when we were going out. He was less than a hundred yards away, and by the dim light, half waning moon, half dawn, I could see he was a tusker. The Burmans with me left him severely alone and made a large chucker round. Apparently he was one of a herd that frequented these parts on occasions and were ugly customers when disturbed or worried. They had originally been in captivity in the time of King Theebaw, and had been turned loose in jungles after the latter's defeat. They had therefore not got the wild animals' dread of human beings and although not truculent when undisturbed, became distinctly dangerous when worried. They were a great trial to the villagers round about especially in the paddy season, when they would settle down on to the field, for when the villagers went out with gongs and torches to chase them away they themselves frequently became the chased instead of the chasers.

About a month after that, however, duty and pleasure combined again called me out to another part of the district. This time the undergrowth had all been burnt, and thunderstorms had brought up the first young green grass and filled the hollows with a little water. Thamin dearly love wallowing in the heat of the day so one could know fairly well where to find them when out grazing in the morning or evening. The village I was making for was well off the beaten track and the only road that led to it was a cart track that meandered from village to village. The result was that we lost our way and did not turn up at our destination, in charge of a guide picked up at a hamlet, until about 9 at night. In any other country settling into camp, with one's carts and baggage some few miles behind, would have been a lengthy and tedious business. But here in this most charming part of the Indian Empire things are quite different. While the guide led me to the best "zayat" outside the village stockade my orderly went in to warn the village headman. These "zayats" are built on stout teak uprights with a thatch roof and teak floor raised a foot or so from ground, and are built outside every village for the accommodation of travellers, only varying in size and design according to the size and wealth of the village. Soon a gong is being beaten in the village, and in a quarter of an hour about half the population seem to have turned out. Headed by the "thugyi," bearing an offering of plantains, some are carrying pots of water or firewood, others bamboo mats twine, and cotton curtains with which the "zayat" is soon converted into a two-roomed bungalow with a verandah, and by the time the carts arrive a fire is burning with a chicken ready to be despatched close by, so that dinner is soon ready. After dinner a consultation with the thugyi as to chances of sport. He assures us there are plenty of thamin with very big heads, and that no sahibs have been round to shoot for a whole year. He promises to supply us with the two best shikaris in the village at 4 next morning, and we part for the night the best of friends. There is no arguing or haggling over the price, for they know well that everything such as chickens, firewood, grain and forage for ponies will be paid for at the fixed Government rate, while the rest are offered quite freely. The shikari's services will be paid for too, in kind, according to the sport he shows you. If you get anything he will be given as much meat as you think fit; if you get nothing he gets nothing.

Next morning quite proved the thugyi's statements of the night before, that thamin were plentiful. They were all over the place and one really only had to pick one's head. But after 10 in the morning they would disappear into the thick jungles to lie up in the shade, or wallow in some muddy pool. It seemed as if the older stags were more given to wallowing than the smaller ones and the does. At a distance they looked quite black, and this one found on shooting them was not wholly due to their naturally darker colour, but in a great measure to the black mud which had caked on their coats and often had encrusted their horns. The country I had been shooting in before was much more parched up, and muddy pools were extremely rare, and there, although the stags were of a much darker colour, none of them had the appearance of being quite black when seen at a distance. A shallow muddy pool will always draw thamin for they seem to spend the heat of the day wallowing, as some I shot in the evening had the mud still wet upon them. They seemed to commence lying up about 10 in the morning because at about that hour I got one stag from a herd half of whose members were lying down asleep, and to come out of their retirement again as soon as the heat of the sun began to decrease, for I never met any grazing or moving about until 4 or half-past.

Most days were alike, some being more successful than others. I soon found that it was absolutely impossible to get near them on foot and a cart had to be used as a stalking horse. Besides the cart was useful to take one from place to place and when the thamin were sighted to carry one near when the final stalk could be completed on foot while the cart went off in another direction to attract their attention away from the stalker. Even then one had to be exceedingly cautious, dropping from the cart behind a bush while it was still in motion. Such a thing as a stoppage of the cart and the sight of a man getting out would have startled the whole herd into headlong flight. It also needed a certain amount of judgment on the part of the Burman driving the cart. He could only manœuvre on three sides of the herd, as if he had come to the side from which the stalker was approaching the chances were that the attention of the deer having been attracted to that side he would be spotted. If one was not able to get into position before the cart had to drive round the three sides the cartman would have driven away into the jungle, turn out of sight, and come back, when the deer would think it was a fresh start. While this was going on the stalker would have to remain perfectly still. As it was generally impossible to get a clear shot over a hundred yards owing to the view being obstructed by the number of trees on approach gave one lots of fun. One was pretty certain not to come back empty handed, sometimes perhaps with two nice heads, or a stray barking deer picked up on the way home.

One day stands out among all the rest. We were making towards home when we sighted a stag. He was coal black and his horns stood out on each side of his head like branches. He was quite solitary and had evidently spotted us for he was moving slowly along taking a mouthful here and there and every now and then taking a look at us. He would not let us get near him, neither would he clear out altogether. He just kept moving along at a safe distance ahead of us. Twice I had tried to stalk him, but with no success for he would take no notice of the cart beyond trotting on a bit faster, and leaving me hopelessly out of it. The third time he gave a chance, but a very long and risky one through trees. I took it and missed. This time he went away in earnest. But the Burman was not a bit disheartened, for he said that if we left him alone for a little while and then followed we should almost certainly come up with him again for it was about time for them to start lying up. We came up with him again in a mile or more. This time he had joined himself to a herd, some of them lying down in the shade, and the others, amongst which was the big fellow, moving around looking for a comfortable place. The stalk gave no difficulty for the animals were too intent on making themselves comfortable to take any notice. One shot through the shoulder bowled him over. On the report, thamin seemed to spring up from the grass all around. What I had first seen could have only been about half the herd, for a minute it seemed as if the whole place were alive with them as they stared in a kind of panic-stricken way. The next minute there was nothing left but ourselves and the big fellow lying stretched on the ground. He was a fine old fellow, with very massive and long horns, which when the tape was run over them proved to by fifty-six and a half inches. Most of the hair was rubbed off his body and the scars on him told of the many fights he had been through before he became head of the herd. He was soon loaded in the cart and we were heading for home well content with our morning's work.

His head now occupies the place of honour in the dining room bringing back pleasant memories of the past, conjuring up hopes for the future, and quite atoning for the previous failures.

"Sibbo."

A motorist going at rather more than legal speed the other day had the misfortune to knock down a lady. She was not much hurt, and the motorist turned to a gentleman who seemed to be in her company. "I hope," he said, "there will be no trouble about this. If a five pound note now——" "Certainly, sir," said the gentleman, "certainly there will be no more trouble." The five pound note was handed over, the motorist went on his way, and the recipient of the money, as he put the bank-note into his pocket, said to himself, "I wonder who the lady is?"

TRIALS WITH ·410 AND ·360 CHOKED GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—In a former letter I gave some account of the capabilities of the ·360 shot gun: since then my friend and I have succeeded in making a satisfactory ·410 barrel, and a comparative table showing the powers of the two guns may be of interest.

·410 Choke Bored Gun, with 25 inch Barrel.

Load.	Range.	Size of Circle.	Pellets in Circle.	Percentage.
19 grains No. 4 C. and H. Black 90, pellets of No. 7 chilled shot ...	10 yards.	6 inches in diameter	63	70 %
Same load, except that 9½ grains of Schultze was substituted for Black	10 yards.	6 inches.	63	70 %
19 grains Black and 100 pellets of No. 7 chilled shot ...	15 yards.	10 inches.	65	65 %
19 grains Black and 100 pellets No. 7 chilled shot ...	20 yards.	15 inches.	66	66 %
·410 Half Choked Gun, 25 inch Barrel.
19 grains Black and 100 pellets No. 7 chilled shot ...	20 yards.	15 inches.	57	57 %
·360 Full Choked Gun, 19 inch Barrel.
6½ grains Schultze, 120 pellets No. 9 chilled shot ...	10 yards.	6 inches.	95	79 %
7 grains Schultze, 68 pellets No. 7 chilled shot ...	15 yards.	10 inches.	47	69 %
Same load ...	20 yards.	15 inches.	47	69 %
5½ grains of Amberite, and 56 pellets No. 6 chilled shot	20 yards.	15 inches.	40	71 %

It will be observed that the ·410 falls a little short of what is laid down as the standard for a first class full choked gun. A full choke should place 70 per cent. of the pellets in its charge, within a 5½ inch circle, at ten yards. The ·360 with 79 per cent. in a 6 inch circle is up to the standard. In other respects the ·410 has turned out such a good little gun, that it was not thought advisable to risk spoiling it when endeavouring to increase the density of its patterns. Even as it stands, the shooting is almost too close, while with the still closer shooting ·360 it becomes very easy indeed to miss a small object altogether. It is in fact necessary to fit these guns with a sight in order to get the centre of the pattern on the object aimed at: I have got the ·360 in walking stick form, and have had to put on a sighting bead in order to get the patterns central, when targetting the gun.

The above table is the result of a great number of shots with both guns, the figures given being the averages of each series of rounds at the various ranges. The ·410 is good enough, with No. 7 shot, for a broadside rabbit, at 30 yards, while I think the ·360 would always kill a rabbit at twenty, and very often at twenty-five yards. It is, however, not for this kind of shooting that the little guns are intended; they are primarily collecting tools, and especially useful with small sized shot for shooting birds. Either the ·410 or the ·360 would also make a very useful companion, to take on a stroll, when one does not wish to be burdened with a gun of larger bore. For instance, I can conceive no better little tool to carry with one, while on a long scrambling walk in the Indian hills. The gun can be made into a stout walking stick, and so attracts no attention. It is on casual walks of this sort that a good stick gun may afford one an opportunity of bagging some rare specimen, never perhaps to be seen again.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 6th August 1909.

GOODWOOD.

THE ducal meeting forfeited its prefix "glorious" this year, as since Tib won the Stewards' Cup from the unlucky favourite, Bismarck, we have not suffered under such dismal weather conditions. Weather reduced the attendance to the smallest ebb, except on Cup Day, and the frown of the Clerk of the Weather proved more potent than the smiles of our King and Queen, who, with the Heir-Apparent and Princess Victoria, proved a lode star for society.

Friday morning looked as if the last day was going to be a full replica of the first. The winds whistled cold, while the forces of fog mustered thickly on the low country to the south-west, but though rain was hurled at the windows soon after racing commenced the gale proved our salvation, and gradually clearing the sky left fairly fine weather to finish up in. The attendance in the enclosures may be termed good for the winding-up day, as most of the company followed the Royal example and stayed till the curtain fell, but the holiday element so strongly represented on Cup Day was in a minority. But for the Chesterfield Cup, a race of almost more interest than the Stewards' Cup, produced a quiet afternoon's sport, in which first and second favourites' backers did not do so badly. Results :—

BOXING.

SUMMERS vs. BRITT.—Amid a scene of indescribable enthusiasm and riot Johnny Summers, of Canning Town, on Saturday defeated Jimmy Britt, of America, at the Memorial Grounds, West Ham. It was in the ninth round that the end came, and Britt had to strike his colours to a man who was undoubtedly his superior.

The finish came with dramatic suddenness, although not entirely unexpected. Britt was strong on his legs when he got up from his corner for the ninth meeting, and very little happened until nearly halfway through the round. Then Summers got home heavily with the right and left, and Britt endeavoured to clinch to avoid further punishment.

He was late, however, and was feeling the effects of the rough handling he had received. Summers stepped back and again brought both hands heavily on Britt's head. The crowd roared itself hoarse, and in the midst of the turmoil the Englishman once more got home with both left and right and sent Britt down.

This was the finish, but the end was not entirely satisfactory. Britt struggled to his feet after about six seconds, but those in charge of his corner entered the ring practically at the same time. Britt, dazed as he was, had sense enough left to grasp the significance of this move and he endeavoured to wave his seconds back. It was too late. The verdict had gone to Summers, and the long-debated question of superiority between the two men was settled, so far as winning the rubber may be considered to settle it.

There was nothing much in the first round, as both sparred some time for opening. It was pretty level, but Summers was the quicker on his feet and invariably led. The contest might easily have ended in the second round, for Britt caught a nasty one from Summers and went down. The Englishman was, perhaps, a trifle too wary, otherwise he might have gone in and ended it right away. Had he done so, there would have been very little value attached to the cinematrograph pictures, which now form a prominent part of every important contest.

The referee had plenty to do. The men were continually clinching, and Britt's shoulder work was not entirely to the liking of the crowd. His old fault of holding, too, was frequently in evidence, and he was spoken to more than once on this infringement of the rules.

Britt gained very little advantage from his holding, for Summers was wonderfully quick with his hands as the American cleared, and on several occasions he got in both hands without a return

Summers, of course, took a deal of punishment, but Britt's blows did not appear to have the strength of Summers'. Once the Englishman caught a nasty clip on the jaw, but his head moved only the slightest degree to one side. Britt has no mannerisms in the ring, but Summers was incessantly brushing back a piece of imaginary hair from his forehead.

Summers slipped in the fourth round and almost went through the ropes. Britt helped him to his feet, and a round later Summers had occasion to return the compliment. Britt thanked him, and the crowd cheered its approval.

The pace was very hot, and neither man flinched from the punishment. The fifth round was a fierce one, and it was a case of honours being fairly even. Both got home with the left and right, and Summers was fortunate in ducking out of the way of a vicious swing from his opponent.

Neither man showed signs of great punishment until the eighth round, which was all in favour of Summers. It was then that Britt's face showed signs of "colour," Summers getting the left well home on the left eye of his opponent. Britt will have reason to remember this punch for a few days to come.

It was an excellent contest, full of incident and excitement, as was only to be expected from a pair who knew each other's methods so well from previous meetings. Whether they will meet again remains to be seen. Britt is not satisfied, and he can, doubtless, find plenty of support for another bout. But it will always be good odds on Summers whenever they meet.

SWIMMING.

A TRICK SWIMMING FEAT.—The veteran professional swimmer, Jules Gautier, with hands and feet tied, and with an empty skiff in tow, yesterday swam the 4½-mile University Course, from Putney to Mortlake, in 1hr. 30mins. 12secs. Gautier wore a leather belt to which was tied one end of a rope, the other being attached to a pole that extended from the skiff, after the fashion of a bowsprit. The top of the pole was high out of the water, and at times the end was almost over Gautier's head. Occasionally the rope was taut, the whole apparatus reminding one of the teacher who uses belt and rope for holding up his pupils when instructing them.

Swimming with hands and feet tied together is, of course, of no practical use, nor for the matter of that, is Channel Swimming, plunging, or any of the other tricks, but it at least shows what it is possible to do in the water. It is not new, and Gautier has himself given several similar exhibitions. Last year he went from London Bridge to Richmond, a distance of 17 miles, in five hours, but on that occasion did no "towing." Yesterday he swam through on his right side, but manacled swimming, which has been popular with ornamental and trick swimmers for many years past, can also be done on the breast, and with the hands tied behind the back. In the breast method it is possible to use both hands and feet for propulsion, but when the hands are tied behind the back, only the legs can be used. Gautier's hands (which were in front) and legs were yesterday strapped by leather bandages, not iron manacles as some of the onlookers had anticipated. He adopted the side stroke method, and with every forward movement, the whole body, save the right elbow, was immersed. Such was the unattractive, if arduous, manner in which the swimmer, who, by the way, is an Englishman, made his way to Mortlake. The most admirable feature of the thing was the perfect manner in which Gautier breathed. Inspiration and expiration were so well performed that, although his head was completely under water for fully half the time, he took in very little.

If the skiff that he towed added to Gautier's work—and that is questionable—too much stress must not be placed upon the fact. With a swinging tide beneath it a boat will always travel from Putney to Mortlake—that is if it misses the bridges—without the least assistance. The barges that come up on the tide do all their own work, save the steering. If Gautier wishes to do some real towing he should take his skiff into still water. A mile with hands and feet tied and with a skiff properly in tow would be a great performance on the Serpentine. Compared with that his 4½ miles' work in the Thames yesterday was child's play. There is no desire to belittle the very interesting feat that this respected professional accomplished, but the fact must not be forgotten that in a tidal river the body is favoured by the motion of the water.

GOLF.

CALCUTTA CUP TOURNAMENT.—This tournament under handicap among the members of the Royal and Ancient opened on the 4th instant, over the new course at St. Andrews. The splendid entry of sixty-one was received, this being thirteen in advance of the previous year. The weather conditions in the morning were ideal, but as the players left in the afternoon rain fell heavily. Mr. Norman Hunter, the Scottish international player, who was the back-marker, displayed splendid form throughout the day. In the morning he gave thirteen strokes to Mr. Beattie and beat him by 8 and 1, while in the afternoon, giving twelve stroke to Mr. Le Maitre, he finished his match six holes from home.

The following were the winners at the end of the second round :—M. Kavanagh (8). Oliver Cultis (6), D. Lamb (3), John Fairlie (scratch), George McEwan (scratch), Ian Moir (2), H. Vickerman (6), George Gilroy (6), H. Richardson (1), J. Inglis jun. (2), Norman Hunter (minus 2), R. Park (scratch), J. Curran (6), Captain Anstruther (scratch), A. Sellars (8), James Whitelaw (6), J. Blackwell (scratch), J. Inglis, sen, (scratch).

The second day's play took place over the St. Andrews new course yesterday, when the third and fourth rounds were decided. The chief feature of the play was the splendid win by Park over Hunter, the latter being the back marker. Captain Anstruther displayed splendid form throughout, while the remainder of the results were as expected. Details :—

Third Round.

J. Inglis (scratch) beat M. Kavanagh (8), 2 and 1.
Oliver Curtis (6) beat D. Lamb (3) 5 and 4.
G. Macewan (scratch) beat John Fairlie (scratch) 2 and 1.
J. Moir (2) beat F. Vickerman (6) 3 and 2.
J. Inglis, jun (2) and Norman Hunter (owes 2) halved.
F. Richardson (1) beat George Gilroy (6) 3 and 2.
R. Park (scratch) and J. Curran (6) halved.
Captain Anstruther (scratch) beat A. Sellar (8) 4 and 3.
J. Blackwell (scratch) beat J. Whitelaw (6) 5 and 4.

Fourth Round.

Curtis beat Inglis 4 and 3.
Macewan beat Moir 1 hole.
Richardson beat Inglis 2 holes.
Park beat Hunter 2 and 1
Anstruther beat Curran 4 and 3.
Blackwell, a bye.

The weather at St. Andrews was again fine on Friday, when the final of the handicap tournament for the Calcutta Cup was entered upon.

The finalists were Captain R. A. Anstruther and Mr. O. S. Curtis. The latter started with an advantage of six strokes.

Result.—Captain Anstruther beat Mr. Curtis by 3 up and 2 to play.

A pulled drive cost Mr. Curtis the first hole, Captain Anstruther winning in 4. At the second Mr. Curtis got down in 4 and 5, and squared without the aid of his stroke allowance.

Captain Anstruther secured the third, and he became 2 up at the fourth, but lost the short fifth, where he had to give a stroke.

He again became 2 up at the sixth, where, with two splendid drives, he obtained a 4. Mr. Curtis, however, won the seventh and ninth, and the game turned all even.

Captain Anstruther was bunkered at the seventh; and he missed a putt at the ninth. With a capital 4 he regained the lead at the tenth, and, playing fine golf from that point, he won the cup by 3 and 2.

Hunting.

WITH THE POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS IN JULY.

A PACK of 25½ couple was imported towards the end of May and commenced hunting on 1st July. Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Bull is again Master and huntsman, his whippers-in being Messrs. Purser and Symons of the Royal Artillery stationed at Kirkee. The Hon'ble Mr. W. L Cameron is President with Mr. R E. Enthoven, I.C.S., again acting as Honorary Secretary.

1st July.—Hounds met at Kalas, about 6 miles from Poona, and had two runs with Deccani foxes when some good hound work was put in.

4th July.—We had another by-day meet at Kalas and were treated to a very fast 3½-mile gallop after a Jackal, killing in the open when crossing the Alandi Road north of the Sister Hills.

8th July.—The opening meet took place this morning at 7 o'clock. There had been an insufficiency of rain resulting in a dry, hard and bad scenting country. Mr. F. B. Stewart was busy with his camera for ten minutes and managed to get most of the field, which numbered probably 100, into his picture. From a hunting point of view the morning was unsatisfactory. A Jackal took hounds over a line of very stony nullahs before he was run into. Later another Jackal was found and lost.

11th July.—Met at the 7th mile stone on the Bombay Road. A Jackal from the gardens near the meet broke to the south, crossed the Bombay Road and Railway and went to ground near the Pawna river. Another Jackal gave a ringing run of 24 minutes over nice country and was lost. Still another Jackal was put up in a nullah, but hounds getting away close to him pulled him down after a fast 2-mile gallop.

13th July.—Hounds were at the Railway level crossing on the Sholapore Road. The morning was wet and the field a small one. Had a 20 minutes' run when hounds having changed on to deer, were stopped. Drew Sugar Khets near Mahomed Wari Village Found a fine Jackal and ran him for 40 minutes via Kastraj Tank to hills on the west of the road to Mahableshwar. The distance was 6 miles, much of the country was very holding for horses.

15th July.—Met at the 8th mile stone Nasik Road. A Jackal gave a good hunting run of 45 minutes to gardens near 11th mile stone, Alandi Road, where several fresh Jackals were put up and the hunted one escaped. A fast gallop of 18 minutes with a Deccani fox took us from near the Nasik Road to the Sister Hills.

18th July.—Dighi Village was the fixture at 7 A.M. The country was very wet from recent rain while the morning was dull and showery. Ran a Jackal very fast and killed after 13½ minutes over a holding country. Then ran a fox at an excellent pace for about 3 miles and lost him.

20th July.—Bhosari Village, 8½ miles out on the Nasik Road, was the fixture. Ran a fox for 20 minutes. Ran a Jackal due north for 3 miles and killed to the west of Mochi Village. Time—15 minutes.

22nd July.—Met again on the Bombay Road at the 7th mile stone. Drew the Gardens and found a brace of Jackals. One broke to the north and gave us a splendid gallop of 30 minutes, the first 17 minutes without a check, after running in a large ring over the country to the north he turned left handed, crossed the Bombay Road and Railway, shortly afterwards recrossed the Railway and holding a line along the embankment. Hounds were stopped owing to the danger of a passing train coming suddenly on them. A short uninteresting run to cactus near Bhosari Village followed

25th July.—Met at the 8th mile stone Nasik Road. An uninteresting day. Scent was bad. Had a very slow run in which hounds with difficulty hed a line for a couple of miles. Getting away close to a fox found in a Koppi hounds ran very fast for a mile and lost.

27th July.—The Village of Hovapsar on the Sholapore Road was the fixture. A slow hunting run of some 2½ miles to dense cactus near Urli Devachi found in Sugar Khet near Mahomed Wari. Ran south and lost amongst khets and nullahs after one mile hunt.

29th July.—Met at Harris Bridge this morning Sugar Khets near Bopkhel Village failed to hold. Later had 2 short runs and killed two Jackals. Heavy rain came on. Found a Chinkara stag north of Kalas. Ran a circle in the home country, then straight north for 31 minutes to near Indrayani River between Alondi and Mochi Villages, the distance was about 7 miles with but one slight pause after first 10 minutes,

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 12th August.—Briar Shola 12 noon. A poor day. The Master drew down the Yemakal and up the Pykara River and back to Chemmund without finding: in the latter, however, Lounds spoke to a line, carried it up to the top of the covert and on into Dormer, where they lost him. A great deal of country was drawn after this but without result.

Saturday, 14th August.—Pykara Bridge 12 noon. Drew up the western bank of the river, a jack was found below Ada Mund; he led up a steep hill and over some very rough country to the Gudolur Road when hounds were stopped and taken back to the other side of the river—the country was too wild and quite unridable, though it is not so bad near the river. The Master then drew down by the Plague Camp and river side to Jungle Shola: a jack found here afforded us a nice hunting run of over an hour. He stuck to the same country most of the time, dodging about from one covert to the next before he finally broke away over the Falls Road to Lord Roberts Shola and ran a left-handed circle round the hill, came back to this covert and got to ground, out of which he was bolted by Kitty and hounds killed him. It was a very pleasant hunt.

Monday, 16th August.—Rees' Corner. A pleasant morning, fairly cloudy and cool and a fair-sized field appeared at the meet. Twenty-two couple of the lady pack were out, including some of the last draft from England. The day began and ended fairly well, though there was a long draw in the middle. Jogging off towards Jackal hounds became very busy at the head of the arm of Long Swamp which runs up to the Krurmund Road. The jack had evidently been gone some time, and as they could not make much of it the Master turned towards Jackal. The jack, however, had waited outside the shola and hounds warming up to his line ran past the edge of Jackal, over the crossing at the bottom and swung lefthanded up over the top of the ridge above Rallywood, then down across the Krurmund Road into Monkey Shola. Right through this they hustled him at a great pace, and down to Owl Crossing, then swinging back lefthanded up into Rugby Shola, the jack saved his brush by getting into the big earth under the rocks inside the shola. The Master did not waste time trying to dislodge him, but moving back towards the downs after drawing Druid blank on the way, took hounds along the back of Bagman. Here a jack had evidently been afoot, and after worrying away at his line for some time, they gradually got on better terms. Crossing the Blackmore Vale just above Treble Crossing streamed up over the shoulder of Newmarket, crossed the stream and over Lawley's Course to Goldmine Crossing, then up towards Tin Hut, short of which, however, the jack was headed and hounds could not hit off his line again. Then drew Upper Briar, Hero, and Wapshare's without success. In the bog below Pirate hounds feathered on a very stale line, and there was some slow but pretty hunting, as they puzzled it out yard by yard for a mile or more into Paragon Shola and on nearly to Khed Shola, where scent fizzled out absolutely. Drawing Khed and down below Bungalow Shola through Bacon Wood and up over the ridge which joins Briar to Staircase, a jack was viewed near the bottom of Stakes Shola and hounds ran at a great pace past Schmidt's Clump, down Lawley's Course as if for Rocky, then swung back crossing the Pykara Road half a mile below the 7th milestone, over into Gibbs' Shola on through Upper Briar and the small shola which runs down to the Back Staircase Path half a mile beyond Briar, finally putting their jack to ground in a small shola in the Devil's Dyke just below the Back Staircase Path.

Tuesday, 19th August.—Hungerford Hill 12 noon. An almost blank day, covert after covert was drawn and every bog and likely place was tried in which every sort of wild beast was found except jacks. The day was close and oppressive and barely a breath of wind, heavy clouds banked up all along the kunahs denoted rain, a good downpour would have been welcomed as the ground is getting dry again. Just as we thought hounds would have to go home without even touching the line of a jack (it was then about 4 P.M.) one of the puppies was busy feathering in some low scrub opposite Bluegums and the rest of the pack coming over spoke to a line and were presently running down towards Schmidt's Bog. Crossing the Sandy Nullah stream to the left of the bog they rose straight up Staircase and right over the crest of it and marked their jack to ground in a small covert on the other side. Kitty was unable to bolt him and as night was closing in hounds went back to kennels, after a very poor day.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

R. E. vs. GOVERNMENT HOUSE.—The tournament opened on Monday, the 16th instant, with three games, the first of which was between the above teams and ended in a win for the Engineers, for whom Major Bremner played a brilliant game.

First Chukker.—The Engineers attacked immediately, Richardson scored a goal and Bremner added another shortly after. Play ruled up and down for the rest of the period.

Second Chukker.—Both goals were visited. Binney missed scoring by inches and a good run by Lucas was stopped and the ball hit out of danger by Richardson. Uneventful play till Watson got away and hit a goal for Government house His pony came down when he had scored but no damage was done.

Third Chukker.—Government House pressed throughout this chukker but could not get through, Bremner defending brilliantly.

Fourth Chukker.—This was another pointless period. A foul was given against Government House but they met the penalty hit and took the ball out of danger.

Fifth Chukker.—Lucas got away down the field but his shot at goal went wide. Bremner then got possession and ended a good run with a clean shot through the posts. The Engineers continued to press for the rest of the chukker but there was no further score. The Engineers thus won by 3 goals to one. Teams:—

With 200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Ereom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

POONA GYMKHANA "A" TEAM vs. THE PINCHERS.—These teams put up a rattling good game, the Pinchers winning by 3 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—The Pinchers got away, Scott put the ball through. They continued to press during the rest of the period but without success.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. Martin ran down but was stopped and the Pinchers coming away Rube missed a shot for goal. Cassim Shah was next conspicuous for a good run which was stopped by Scott nipping in and sending the ball to the centre of the field.

Third Chukker.—Rube and Houstan both had falls at the start of this period but neither was hurt. The Gymkhana were on the offensive for a spell; then the Pinchers got possession and rushing the ball down Rube scored.

Fourth Chukker.—Sticky play in midfield till the Pinchers rushed down and Tomkinson hit a goal. The Gymkhana tried hard to get through but all their attempts were frustrated and Tomkinson put in another good run before the close of the chukker.

Fifth Chukker.—The Pinchers ran down but were stopped by Graham, and Cassim Shah was next prominent for a good run. The Pinchers cleared and pressed for the remainder of the chukker but without success. Final score, Pinchers 3 goals, Gymkhana "A" nil. Teams:—

POONA GYMKHANA "B" TEAM vs. LINCOLNS.—This was a well contested game and the issue was in doubt till the last period when the Gymkhana scored twice and ran out victorious by 3 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Lincolns attacked during the major part of the initial period, and Barlow and Savory both had shots at goal which went wide. A similar fate met a long drive by Greig who got away for the Gymkhanas just before the close.

Second Chukker.—The Lincolns pressed but could not score, and the Gymkhanas coming away Sprouts drew first blood. Immediately after they had another shot at goal but failed to score.

Third Chukker.—Sticky play about midfield during most of the period. At the close Barker rushed down and equalised.

Fourth Chukker.—An uneventful chukker up and down play and no score.

Fifth Chukker.—Barlow ran the ball down but was stopped, and play transferred to the Lincolns' end where Greig put the Gymkhana ahead. A foul against the Lincolns followed and Greig scored another goal from the penalty hit. Final score, Gymkhana "B" 3 goals, Lincolns 1 goal. Teams:—

MOUNTED INFANTRY vs. 12TH BALUCH L. I.—This was the first of the games on the 17th instant and ended in a win for the Mounted Infantry by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Baluchis were the first to show up and McCudden hit a goal. A foul against the 127th then let the M. I. in, Woodhouse equalising from the penalty hit. The Baluchis rushed down soon after and Bell put them ahead once more.

Second Chukker.—The Baluchis did most of the attacking during this period but there was no score.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play and another pointless chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—The Baluchis tried hard to increase their score but two attempts went wide and then the Mounted Infantry took up the attack. Thompson missed by a narrow margin on two occasions, and after some up and down play Woodhouse put the teams on terms.

Fifth Chukker.—The M. I. rushed down to the Baluchis' end where a foul against the 127th gave their opponents a penalty hit. This was cleared and play transferred. Neither side could score and the teams had each two goals to its credit at the call of time.

The goals were then widened and play continued, the M. I. hitting the winning goal two minutes after resuming. Teams:—

26TH LIGHT CAVALRY vs. 33RD Q. O. LIGHT CAVALRY.—Played on the 17th instant, the 33rd Cavalry having little difficulty in disposing of their opponents who did not play up to their true form.

First Chukker.—The 26th kept their opponents hemmed in till Edwardes cleared and the ball was rushed down to the other end. Here Johnson got away from a scrum and the ball was brought back to the 33rd territory. No score.

Second Chukker.—The 33rd rushed down and Beatty opened the scoring. Johnson equalised on resuming but the 33rd were in scoring vein and registered two further points before the close of the Chukker.

Third Chukker.—Chaytor ran down but missed his final stroke the 33rd getting possession and taking the ball to the other end where Wise put it through. Chaytor was conspicuous for another good run before the end of the chukker his shot just missing the mark.

Fourth Chukker.—Arnold and Greenway made runs to the 33rd territory, all attempts to score were cleared and Collins returned the ball to the other end where Wise scored.

Fifth Chukker.—The 33rd got on and Wise scored. A run by the 26th followed Chaytor crowning it with a successful shot at goal. On resuming, Colonel Edwardes rushed down and added to the 33rd's total. The game ending with the score 33rd Cavalry 7 goals, 26th Cavalry 2 goals. Teams:—

34TH POONA HORSE vs. 29TH LANCERS.—Played on the 17th instant the Poona Horse who had won the cup previously, defeated the Lancers by 5 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—A rush by the Poona Horse opened the play Alderson missing by inches. The 29th next got away and Jackson scored. The Poona Horse were not long in equalising, Alderson putting through and they subsequently gained the lead with a good shot by Paterson.

Second Chukker.—Both goals were visited in turn but all attempts to score were fruitless.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers had the best of this period. They made repeated attacks on the 34th's citadel but could not score.

Fourth Chukker.—Fast up and down play till Studdy ran the ball down to the Lancer's end and Alderson put it through. A run by the 29th followed but Willis hit behind.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers made desperate efforts to get on terms, but all their endeavors were frustrated. Paterson cleared and Alderson getting possession, scored with a fine long drive. Paterson followed this up with another goal and the 34th thus won by 5 goals to 2. Teams:—

R. A. vs. 12TH PIONEERS.—This was the concluding game of the first round, and was played on the 17th instant, the Pioneers winning by 6 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Second Chukker.—Another pointless chukker Sticky play all over the field; the Pioneers missed two chances of scoring.

Third Chukker.—Play was rather slow. The Pioneers eventually worked the ball to the Gunners' end and Denton hit a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Pioneers kept the Artillery on the defensive throughout this period and scored two goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The Pioneers had the upperhand during the seven and a half minutes which remained. They scored three more goals, Cook (2) and Richardson being credited with the points. Teams:—

SECOND ROUND.

JUBBULPORE GYMKHANA vs. ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Jubbulpore who had drawn a bye met the Royal Engineers on the 18th instant. The visitors came with a big reputation and were looked upon as possible winners of the Cup, but they had to lower their colours to the Engineers, who won by 3 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Engineers attacked at the start and kept Jubbulpore busy till just on time the visitors got away and nearly scored.

Second Chukker.—Jubbulpore had the best of this period, but there was no score.

Third Chukker.—Todd got away and drew first blood. Up and down play followed, but the Royal Engineers could not get on terms, and the visitors were once again attacking when the bugle sounded the close of the chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—Bremner carried the ball to the Jubbulpore end, but it was cleared and returned to the Royal Engineers, territory. Back it went to the visitors' end and Boyd equalised. The Royal Engineers nipped in again and Boyd registered a second point shortly after.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast up and down play till Boyd got possession and hit another goal for the Royal Engineers, who pressed for the rest of the period and won as stated. Teams:—

POONA GYMKHANA "B" TEAM vs. PINCHERS.—This game played on the 18th instant was very one sided, the Pinchers having the best of it throughout and winning by 9 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—The Pinchers attacked and scored 3 goals. Tomkinson hitting two and Hodgson the other.

Second Chukker.—Continuing the pressure the Pinchers scored two more goals through Tomkinson.

Third Chukker.—The Pinchers attacked and Tomkinson and Rube scored a goal each. They continued to press till Greig relieved, but the ball was brought back and the Gymkhana kept on the defensive for the rest of the period.

Fourth Chukker.—The Pinchers were awarded a penalty hit for offside against the Gymkhana but Dickson intercepted the hit and play ruled up and down till the close of the chukker.

Fifth Chukker.—Greig ran down for the Gymkhana, but the Pinchers cleared and taking the ball down Rube scored, Scott adding another goal shortly after. Final score: Pinchers, 9 goals; Gymkhana, nil. Teams:—

33RD LIGHT CAVALRY vs. MOUNTED INFANTRY.—Played on Thursday afternoon. The Mounted Infantry played a good game and held the Cavalry till the fourth chukker when the 33rd went away and won by 7 goals to 3.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry were first away and Beatty scored. The Mounted Infantry immediately equalised through Woodhouse and pressed for the rest of the period.

Second Chukker.—Sticky play till the 33rd got away and a long shot by Wise went wide. Then the Mounted Infantry attacked and Woodhouse hit a goal.

Third Chukker.—Collins took the ball down and put the teams on terms. The Mounted Infantry made desperate efforts to secure the lead, but several attempts to score failed, and the Cavalry attacked for the rest of the chukker, their efforts being equally futile.

Fourth Chukker.—The Cavalry had the best of this period and notched 4 goals, Colonel Edwards being responsible for two, Board and Collins one each. Then the Mounted Infantry got on and Carr scored.

Fifth Chukker.—The Mounted Infantry rushed down and after Thompson had missed Wise cleared. A foul against the Cavalry gave the Mounted Infantry a penalty hit but it was met and the 33rd took the ball down to the other end, where from a penalty hit for a foul against the Mounted Infantry Beatty scored another goal. Final Score: 33rd, 7; M.I., 3. 34TH POONA HORSE vs. 12TH PIONEERS.—Played on the 19th instant. The Pioneers made the Cavalry team gallop to win and it was not till an extra period had been played that a decision was arrived at.

First Chukker.—The Poona Horse started a man short Studdy having taken a fall. During his absence the Pioneers scored a goal through Cook, but the Cavalry were not long in equalising, Paterson hitting a goal with a long range shot.

Second Chukker.—The Poona Horse attacked and Studdy hit a goal. The Pioneers replied by rushing down and Denton putting through.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry did most of the attacking during this period, but the Pioneers defended splendidly and there was no score.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play, Cook and Paterson missing shots at goal for their respective sides. No score.

Fifth Chukker.—This was another pointless period, the Pioneers having the best of the exchanges.

Extra Chukker.—With 2 goals each the goals were widened and play resumed. A foul against the Poona Horse was followed by an exciting mêlée in front of the Pioneers' goal, Colonel Richardson clearing. On resuming Paterson got away and scored the winning goal for the Poona Horse. Teams:—

LADIES vs. GENTLEMEN.—An interesting cricket match was played on the Wellington Gymkhana ground on Tuesday, 17th August, when a team of Ladies captained by Mrs. Rudkin opposed a team of Gentlemen in fancy dress captained by Commander Hickman, R.I.M. A large and fashionable gathering graced the field. Quite the feature of the day was the excellent innings of Mrs. Rudkins, the Ladies' Captain, who played a faultless innings for 46, hitting fearlessly all round the wicket : the highest score for the Gentlemen was made by Lieutenant Vibart, R.I.M., 22 not out. The ladies opened the ball and compiled 89. the gentlemen having to field and catch with the left hand : gentlemen followed and hitting left handed with reduced sized bats made 99, thus winning a closely contested match by 10 runs.

THE TRADES CUP COMPETITION.

FINAL.

WANDERERS vs. NATIONALS.—The final stage of the Trades Cup Competition brought together the Wanderers and the Nationals. The game was played on the Sova Bazar ground, Calcutta, on Thursday last, and was not a particularly brilliant display. The ground was in a wretched condition owing to the rain and considerably marred the game. After a rush by the Nationals play settled down very level. Then the Wanderers got going and looked like scoring on several occasions. But the native team kept them out and transferred play to the other end. Here Libenhalls was called upon to save and Ghose forced an unproductive corner. The Wanderers took up the attack once more before the interval and Patterson scored with a long shot. P. Dass miskicking. The Nationals played up well on changing ends but shooting was rather erratic and despite great efforts on the part of both teams there was no further score, the Wanderers thus winning by a goal to nil. Teams :—

WANDERERS.—Liebenhalls goal ; Stewart and Tunicliff, backs ; Jones, Wool and Jones, halves ; Rector, Patterson, Audrey, O'Neil, and Peters, forwards.

POONA DIVISIONAL TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

WORCESTERS "A" vs. LEICESTERS.—These teams met in the final tie of the tournament on Monday, the 16th instant, and a good game was witnessed. The Leicesters forced the play at the start but erratic shooting and a sound defence prevented them from getting through. The Worcesters attacked next and after a good combined run the ball was put through by Plant. Both teams were playing their hardest but an unproductive corner to the Leicesters was the only matter of importance till half time. Play was very fast on resuming, the Leicesters worked hard to get on terms but without success. They had two or three shots at goal which went wide of the mark and a corner against the Worcesters was not turned to account. The Worcesters played a great game and keeping their opponents won by the only goal scored during the match. At the conclusion of the game Mrs. Swann presented the cup to the winning team and General Swann made a short congratulatory speech. Teams :—

LEICESTERS.—Owen, goal ; Baily and Faulks, backs ; Pickering, Wale, and Whilmore, halves ; Shingler, Wardell, Barton, Butter, and French, forwards.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

UNITED SERVICES vs. DALHOUSIE.—This game on the Dalhousie ground on the 18th instant was a scrambling affair, both sides losing opportunities of scoring. Dalhousie were without half a dozen of their regular players and were kept on the defensive all through, save for an occasional individual effort. The Services, however, only crossed the home team's line once, Spiller getting over. The place kick failed and this try to the Services was the only score in the game.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—The return match between these teams was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday when the visitors were defeated by 22 points to nil. The early scrums were in favour of the Rangers till Siddons got away and transferred to Kay. The ball was thrown forward and a scrum followed from which Kay got over, Burnett adding the extra points. Play was in mid-field for a space, till Rosetti showed a fine turn of speed, but was stopped by Parton. The Rangers continued the attack till Siddons once more got possession and rushed down. When challenged by the Rangers' back he passed to Akler who got over with a try, an excellent attempt to goal by Burnett hitting the upright. Just before the interval Calcutta scored another try, Morrison getting over after a clever run. The place failed. On crossing over the Rangers played well and kept up a steady pressure at the start. Cody and Wheelock were nearly over but Kay relieved, and the home three-quarters rushing down Burnett scored a try. The extra points were not obtained but Calcutta had the best of the remainder of the play, and forward rushes ended in two further tries, Miller and Earp being responsible. One of these was converted by Burnett, and Calcutta thus won by 2 goals and 4 tries to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Parton, back ; Akler, Kay, Siddons and Burnett, three-quarters ; Wilson and Morrison, halves ; Kerr, Studd, Elderton, Miller, Malcolm, Bryce, Earp and Richmond, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, back ; Cody, Williams, Wheelock and Rosetti, three-quarters ; Fairly and Davis, halves ; Minet, Bennett, White, Nicol, Gilmour, Allen and Williams, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Martelli.

DALHOUSIE vs. EAST YORKS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, the military winning by a goal and a try (8 points) to nil. The visitors had the best of the exchanges during the initial half, but could only get over once. Rhodes obtained a try and Card added the extra points. On resuming the Dals gave a better exhibition and pressed for some time. Their efforts, however, met with little success, and the East Yorks once more took up the attack, but it was not till a few minutes before time that the soldiers registered their second try through Gibson. This remained unconverted and the game ended as stated. Teams :—

EAST YORKS.—Cressy, back ; Mason, Card, Lieutenant Crawford and Brownlow, three-quarters ; Gibson and Rhodes, halves ; Tose, Bladen, Cooper, Feather, Affleck, Clarke, Miller and Underwood, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Eden, back ; Berry, Whysall, Allen and Graham-slaw, three-quarters ; Evans and Shirres, halves ; Prevost, McLeod, Lewis, Williams, Wilson, Wardle, Brewer and Jones, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Simpson.

CUSTOMS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—An even game was witnessed when these teams met on the Customs ground on Saturday. The visitors scored twice, Lieutenant Bocquet getting over in the first half and Lieutenant Townend after the interval. Neither try was converted. The Customs failed to score and were thus beaten by two tries (6 points) to nil. Teams :—

UNITED SERVICES.—Spiller, back ; Oliver, Smith, Day and Townend, three-quarters ; Bocquet and Phelan, halves ; McMillan, Cargill, Trenchard, Fraser Private, Hands, Monckton, Jackson and Wheatly, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Cunliffe, back ; Smith, Williamson, Johnstone and Maitland, three-quarters ; Shave and Fetherstone, halves ; Marsden, Macdonald, Thomson, Fredericks, Devereaux and Cadell, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Carl Reid.

CALCUTTA vs. EAST YORKS.—Played on the 23rd instant on the Calcutta ground, the home team winning by 21 points to nil. They were the first to attack and very shortly after the start Miller crossed the line with a try, Burnett adding the major points. Then the military were on the offensive for a spell but all their efforts were frustrated, and Calcutta resumed the attack, the forwards putting in some good work. Then Akler got over with the second try, but Reid Kay's attempt to convert was unsuccessful. Early in the second half a "mark" by Strachan looked as if it would lead to a score, but the place kick failed Calcutta, however, kept up the pressure and Morrison and Reid Kay scored tries. The first was not improved upon but Burnett made no mistake with the other. The visitors then invaded the Calcutta 25 and a knock on against the home team looked promising. Nothing came of it and the military were forced back to their own territory where Akler ran over with the last try, to which Burnett added the extra points. Calcutta thus scored 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—F. N. Whiteley, back ; A. T. Akler, J. Reid Kay, G. R. Strachans and A. M. Burnett, three-quarters ; A. B Morrison and N. Wilson, halves ; F. S. Kerr, F. T. Collins, T. Elderton, E. Studd, N. Simpson, B. G. Westrup, C. C. Miller and A. Carroll, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Horncastle (C F.C.).

DALHOUSIE vs. CUSTOMS.—The return fixture between these teams was played on the Dalhousie ground on the 23rd instant and resulted in a pointless draw. It was evenly contested throughout but the defence on both sides was strong. The Dals made strenuous efforts during the closing stages but without success. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Quail, back ; Allen, Eden, Bevill and Sebright, three-quarters ; Wilson and Evans, halves ; Davy, McLeod, Hughes, Williams, Lewis, Wardell, Dixon and Brewer, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Vears, back ; Smith, Williamson, Maitland and Johnstone, three-quarters ; Featherstone and Dempster, halves ; Cadell, Marsden, Macdonald, Seth, Curry, Thomson, Pettey and Debrux, forwards.

Referee :—Lieutenant Bocquet (United Services).

UNITED SERVICES vs. RANGERS.—The Rangers turned out three men short for their match against the Services on Tuesday and were consequently kept on the defensive throughout. The ground was very greasy but the Services managed to pile on 19 points, scoring 2 goals and 3 tries to nil.

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY LEAGUE.

UNITED SERVICES "B" vs. LA MARTINIERE.—Played on the Caledonian ground on the 19th instant, the Services attacking throughout and scoring 20 points to nil. They crossed the line twice in the first half, but both tries remained unconverted, and in the second moiety they registered 4 tries, one of which was majorised.

CUSTOMS "B" vs. POLICE F.C.—Played on the 19th instant, a very level game ending in a win for the Customs by 2 goals (10 points) to a goal and a try (8 points).

SHROPSHIRES vs. MEASURERS.—These teams met on the Caledonian ground on Friday, the soldiers winning by 13 points to nil. Lucas got over with two tries in the first half, Statham adding the extra points to the first of these. In the second half Statham obtained a try and Shepley converted.

UNITED SERVICES "B" vs. ST. XAVIERS'.—Played on Monday, the Services winning by 2 tries (6 points) to nil.

SHROPSHIRES vs. LA MARTINIERE.—The Shropshires were all over the Martiniere boys on Monday, winning by 3 goals and 7 tries (36 points) to nil. They obtained two tries through Shepley and Dobbs in the first half and Statham added the extra points to the second of these. After the interval they crossed the Martinière line eight times, Twigger (2), Lucas (2), Garvey, Statham, Gardiner and Hockenhall being responsible. Statham majorised two of these tries and the military won as stated.

CALCUTTA POLICE vs. MEASURERS.—Played on Tuesday, the Force winning by 8 points to 6. Jewell opened the scoring for the Measurers and Hendrie equalised, neither try being improved upon. In the second half Butter got over and put the Police ahead, Goodwin adding the extra points. The Measurers played hard and Jewell again crossed the line but the place kick failed and they were beaten as stated.

The handiest, the Cheapest, the Best, for Private or Commercial use.

A TRIUMPH OF EFFICIENCY!

Use in Government Departments, Railway and Mercantile Officers all over India.

OVER 400,000 NOW IN USE.

Is suitable for Documents and Correspondence of every description.

All papers relating to any particular firm or business are filed together and are thus kept quite separate, and readily get-at-able.

No unnecessary room taken up as in the case of most files now in the market, the back being quite thin, and taking up no more space than the actual letters—a very important point where space is a consideration.

All papers can be instantly and conveniently referred to without any manipulation of springs which often means dislodging a number of papers in order to get at any particular document.

The covers are made in various sizes to take from 1—300 documents, in Octavo, Quarto or Foolscap.

Files are supplied in different colours: Blue, Red, Orange, Buff, Grey and Green. The idea of using Coloured Files provides an easy means of distinguishing at a glance the various distinctive branches of correspondence in a large business, such as referring to Agencies, Purchases, Sales, Finance, or for Town, Country, Continental and Colonial.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ON Tuesday Customs and Calcutta played their return match on the former's ground under ideal conditions. The home team were without Rowe, while Calcutta put a weak team in the field, playing without half a dozen of their best men, but this did not prevent them from emerging victors from a vigorously contested tussle by 15 points to 5.

From the start it was evident that the game was going to be of a fast description, but no person, Calcutta least of all, expected to find Customs leading by 5 points after a quarter of an hour's play. After this rebuff Calcutta bucked up and being awarded two free kicks with both of which Burnett was successful and they led by one point at half time. In the second half Calcutta scored through Kay (two) and Turnbull, but none of the kicks at goal were successful in securing full points.

THE forwards were fairly evenly matched, Earp and Kerr playing well for Calcutta, the former having a very nice run in the second half, but not being backed up he tried to kick over the Customs' back's head and lost the ball in the scramble, Calcutta thus losing an almost certain score. Calcutta were poor in the scrum, while their tackling was of the feeblest description—all showing a tendency to go for a man's neck instead of his legs.

Cadell for Customs was the best forward on the field and led his men in great style: his foot work was excellent and time and again his forwards made a lot of ground from rushes which he was instrumental in starting.

Calcutta were unfortunate to be without Arthur and Ward at half, for though Wilson played a plucky enough game Pearce was not a success and repeatedly kept his three-quarters from getting the ball.

UP till Tuesday the Calcutta three-quarters had only been called upon to attack which, as their record bears witness, they have done to some purpose, but here conditions were reversed and they had to stand up to some rousing forward rushes, their display being sadly disappointing in this respect. There was for too much fumbling and confusion—too much delay in getting in kicks with the result that they were often rushed down. Siddons being a particular offender in this respect.

In attack, Turnbull and Kay played well, the former gaining a nice try after a good run, while the latter took his side out of more than one tight corner by his timely kicks to touch.

Burnett should find touch with his kicks which he seldom does and he certainly threw away one try through not keeping his head. I refer to the time when Siddons was tackled on the line, and Burnett instead of kicking the ball out of Siddons' hands and then touching down as he could have quite easily done, picked it out of his hands thereby rightly incurring the interference of the referee.

SOME more games behind weak forwards and against off side backs would do the Calcutta line a vast amount of good with the result that they would not be found wanting (as is so liable to be the case with a line which has always had everything its own way) when opposed to the stronger sides in the Cup Tournament.

Johnston played a splendid game at three-quarter for the Customs and had some really fine runs which gave his opponents a lot of worry, but he was continually offside and was lucky not to be penalised. The habit of lying offside at a scrum in the hope of intercepting an opponent's pass ought to be put down strongly, the only way to do which is to award a free kick for each offence, and I hope Calcutta referees will make a point of doing so.

IN the other games, East Yorks proved too good for Rangers, who were badly handicapped owing to three of their players failing to put in an appearance. It seems strange that a club of the standing of the rangers should not be able to turn out a full complement of men—slackness somewhere are thinks! On Wednesday Dalhousie and United Services met, and although the latter won comfortably Dalhousie were at times dangerous. Prike got away twice and looked like scoring, but the first time he was brought down in beautiful style by Townend, while his second effort was wasted when after passing his other opponent he was too "down up" to attempt to pass the Services' full back and had to kick to touch instead.

ON Saturday Calcutta and Rangers met on the former's ground, and although the Rangers were beaten by two goals and four tries to nothing there was certainly not that difference between the teams.

On three occasions Rangers looked like scoring and it was due to inexperience that they were unable to do so: with a little more practice they will be able to give a good account of themselves in the future. Calcutta were without Turnbull, Arthur and Ward, and though their substitutes played fairly well, had Arthur and Ward been working the scrum the result would have been very different.

The Rangers' forwards showed up well against the Calcutta pack, Minet being particularly conspicuous, putting in a lot of hard work both in the scrum and in the open. For Calcutta Bryce, Miller and Earp played well, the latter both securing tries, while Bryce was always on the ball, his saving being specially good. The Calcutta forwards were good individually but as a pack were disappointing, each man showing a desire to go on his own. Miller, while playing a good game, was held more than once with the ball in his possession when, had he passed, a score would almost certainly have resulted.

Wilson and Morrison were not bad at half but the former was too slow in giving his three-quarters the ball and more than once rushed back in among the forwards instead of slinging the ball out to his "threes." The same may be said of Morrison, who was rather lucky to get his try, for instead of working his way through himself, he ought to have set his three-quarters going. Siddons was the best of the three-quarters and had two very pretty runs from the second of which Ackler was able to score. Reid Kay also played well but was too inclined to play for safety and kick to touch. This is sound policy against strong opposition, but in Saturday's game it would have been better had he given Siddons and Burnett more of the ball.

UNITED SERVICES proved too good for the Customs and won a hard-fought battle by two tries to nil. Customs were without the services of Rowe, but as Lieutenant Slater was not available for Services, matters were equalised. Townend played well for Services and scored one of their tries, while his tackling was particularly good.

Johnstone played a hard game for the Customs and it was not his fault that his side did not score, but he was too well looked after to become dangerous himself.

ON Monday Calcutta played their return match with the East Yorks and won a fairly interesting game by twenty-one points to nothing. The Civilian pack played up well in the loose and the line outs where Studd was always prominent, but their packing and heeling left much to be desired. The backs played well, though Burnett and Strachan each missed their man on one occasion. Reid Kay had a splendid run which ended in a score between the post and all through he played a fine defensive game, but carried his kicking to extremes. Continual kick, kick, kicking into touch becomes very monotonous and spoils the game from a spectator's point of view and such tactics might be dispensed with when one's side is leading by a substantial margin.

"CRITICAL CROCK."

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

Y.M.C.A. vs. R.G.A.—These teams put up a very level game on the 17th instant and could only make a draw—one all. The Y.M.C.A. were not playing in their usual form. The first half ended without score, both teams missing opportunities. On changing ends the Young Men ran down and Pack opened the scoring. Then the Gunners attacked and exciting play in front of the Y.M.C.A. goal followed, but all efforts to score were frustrated, till a foul against the Young Men enabled Watts to equalise from the penalty. Hildreth subsequently did good work in goal and then play was very evenly contested, but neither side could add to their score. Teams:—

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and C. Templeton, backs; Hotz, Ward and H. Templeton, halves; Brown, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Upton, forwards.

R.G.A.—McKeown, goal; Franklin and Watts, backs; Saben, Hunt and Bailey, halves; Hewes, Toole, Sothcote, Davy and Keating, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Played on the 18th instant. The Telegraphs had the best of the game throughout, and had it not been for the excellent defence of Elliott and Cooper the Tarwallahs would certainly have won by a bigger margin. Donohoe opened their account early in the game and Ryan notched a second point before the interval. The Gymkhana had opportunities of scoring but failed to take advantage of them. The Telegraphs continued the pressure on resuming and Ryan scored a third goal. Nothing further of note occurred and the game ended in a win for the Telegraphs by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal, Elliott and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Wengi, and Melhuish, halves; Murray, Collingwood, Abbott, Sim and Moir, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Taylor and Crutchley, backs; Woollen, A. N. Other and Redford, halves; Green, Donohoe, Ryan, Conquest and Holman, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 18th instant. The Gloucesters pressed throughout but their shooting was wretched and they could only score 3 goals, Maton scoring just before the interval, Short and Marsden in the second half. The Hornets were always on the defensive. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Teale and Ives, backs; Cooper, Sherwood and Barton, halves; Maton, Law, Short, Marsden, and Chidlow, forwards.

HORNETS.—A. N. Other, goal; Millard and Topper, backs; Phillips, Molyneux, and Deroux, halves; Dudley, Viegas, Garrick, Myers and Mendes, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on Thursday last, the Commercials winning by 3 goals to 1. The Hornets began well and netted a goal. Thereafter the Commercials attacked. Evans scored just before half time, and continuing the pressure in the second half two more goals were registered, Evans being responsible for both. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal; Millard and Topper, backs; Phillips, Molyneux and Deroux, halves; Dudley, Mendes, Garrick, Myers and A. N. Other, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Lay, goal; Harwood and Croles-Rees, backs; Bellamy, Osbourne and Johnson, halves; Evans, Fisher, Elliott, Wolley and Cook, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—Played on Saturday last, the Parel team winning by the odd goal in three. The first half was uninteresting and the Bombay Gymkhana lost chances of scoring. Parel attacked on changing ends and Roach was called upon to save on more than one occasion. A rush by the Bombay Gymkhana followed and Sharpe opened the scoring after four players had missed. Parel equalised almost immediately and continuing the attack they put in another point. Roach rushed out to meet a run by Sherren, missed the ball, and Sherren tapped it in. Teams :—

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Fox, goal; Holtham and Edwards, backs; Major. Patterson and Pennock, halves; S. Alcock, Sherren, W. Alcock, Watson and Furbisher, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Roach, goal; Collingwood and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Sim and Melhuish, halves; Sharpe, Thomson, Wengi, Hall and Moir, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. R.G.A.—These teams met on the Cooperage on Saturday, the Gloucesters winning a good game by 3 goals to nil. The Gunners pressed at the start but the Gloucesters kept them out, and taking up the attack scored through Scaife. They continued to press and Chidlow headed in a second goal. The Gunners rushed down just before half time but missed a good chance. The second half was evenly contested : both teams did good work, but whereas the Gunners failed to score the Gloucesters added to their account through Maton, thus winning as stated. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Ives and Ruck, backs; Cooper, Sherwood and Law, halves; Maton, Short, Scaife, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

R. G. A.—McKeown, goal; Wigget and Watts, backs; Columbell, Hunt and Gill Jones, halves; Hewes, Toole, Sothcott, Franklyn and Keating, forwards.

BROOKLANDS RACES.

THE first half of the holiday fixture at Brooklands last Saturday provided one of the best meetings ever seen at the track. With few exceptions the finishes were close, and there was a most exciting wind up to the meeting with the Relay Race, which Sir George Abercromby gained for his side, snatching the victory on the post by a half a length. Sir George Abercromby also proved successful in the Sprint Handicap for cars that have been timed to do a flying lap at over eighty miles per hour, and would probably have won the July Senior Handicap but for an ignition wire breaking. In the last-mentioned event, however, he was so well placed that he secured second position. Mr. W. H. Wells met with considerable success with his two Indian motor-bicycles. In the August Handicap they were both on scratch, and one finished first and the other fourth, the former being ridden by G. Lee Evans and the latter by E. C. Bennett. The distance was 5½ miles, which Lee Evans covered at 60½ miles per hour. It is remarkable that Lee Evans also won the Senior Handicap, over a distance of 8½ miles, at precisely the same speed. The weather was fine, and there was a fair attendance.

A COLD wind, overcast sky, and occasional showers exercised a very adverse influence on the attendance at Brooklands for the Bank Holiday meeting. Fortunately the threatened downpour held off, and the little rain which fell dried at once, leaving the track none the worse. Eight races were down on the card, and being mostly for short distances, the spectators were able to follow the fortunes of the competitors instead of, as when the distances are longer, losing interest from the start till the bell rings for the run up the straight.

With two exceptions the finishes were tame in the extreme, but those two amply made up for the lack of excitement in the earlier events. In the race for the O'Gorman Trophy, in which any kind of fuel and auxiliaries, such as compressed oxygen or acetylene, were allowed, the two Vauxhall cars driven by Kidner and Hancock took the lead during the first lap, and for twenty-five miles ran together at an average speed of over seventy miles an hour. Sometimes abreast, and sometimes one a foot or two in front of the other, they kept company till they reached the straight, when Hancock got home by less than a wheel.

THE other close finish was in the August Winners' Handicap, in which Lee Evans, on a twin-cylinder Indian motor-bicycle, had 1min. 46secs. start of Astley's 59·2 Napier in 5½ miles, with other cars starting at intermediate times. Gradually the car overhauled the cycle and the latter had only a yard or two of its lead in hand under the flags at the finishing point; a very slightly longer distance would have seen the placings reversed. Both heats and the final of the August 4, Senior Handicap afforded runaway wins to Mr. O. S. Thompson's Austin "Pobble" and Sir G. Abercromby's "Napier," while in the second Grand Prix race the interval between first and second was so great that the track was thrown open for people to cross in the interval.

ENGLISH VS. AUSTRALIAN CRICKET.

Australia have emerged victorious from the Test Matches with England. Of the five matches Australia won two, England one and the others were drawn. The Australian side are to be congratulated on their success, for it was undoubtedly well deserved. They excelled England in batting, bowling and fielding. They were beaten decisively at Birmingham. They won as decisively both at Lord's and at Leeds. In the two drawn matches at Manchester and the Oval no one can say they had the worst of the position when play ceased. They have not merely retained their possession of the "ashes," on the finished matches they would have re-won them. That these results are in no way fictitious or unrepresentative of the general run of play in the test games the following summary of the batting performances on both sides will show:—

	Completed innings.	Total runs.	Average per innings.
England...	... 7	1,251	178 81

There has been a disposition at home to criticise the English selection committee, and it must be admitted that they might have done their work better. The first blunder they made—and England never seemed to shake off its effects—was to break up the English team which won the first Test match so handsomely at Birmingham. There was no real failure in that match, and if the same eleven had gone into the field at Lord's they would have been supported by a degree of moral confidence which the reconstructed English team could not possibly possess. Fry, Jessop, Thomson, Rhodes and Blythe were all dropped, and while substitutes included two "outsiders" in King and G. Gunn the Committee further depleted the side by leaving out the selected fast bowler. Whether Jayes was at that moment the best fast bowler in England need not be discussed now, but having chosen him there was no excuse for not playing him. In the concluding match at the Oval this blunder was repeated. Buckenham was picked no doubt in the belief that he was the best man, and then, on a wicket on which a fast bowler must be considered a first necessity, they left him out. Whether these blunders account completely for England's failure no one can say finally, but undoubtedly they had a share in it.

On a general survey what must the Australian success be attributed to? First to their ability always to get a fair number of runs, and secondly to their unequalled keenness in the field. In the matter of bowling, even at their best, they never seemed quite at the high level attained by Barnes and Blythe, and at times Rhodes and Hirst were certainly the equals of the best Australian bowlers. But their bowling had this great merit—it was so varied that whatever the state of the pitch someone or other was always found to suit it perfectly, and at each crisis the right bowler was picked out with consummate judgment. At Manchester it was Laver who bowled England out; at Lord's it was Armstrong who won the match; at Leeds Macartney and Cotter bowled as men inspired. In batting, again, with the exception of the Birmingham match, two things have distinguished the Australian play—the occasional brilliance of some single player (Ransford, for example, at Lord's, and Bardsley in the final match), and the wonderful steadiness at a crisis of the older hands, Armstrong especially, who with Noble saved the side on the second day at Leeds. But the point in which they have been most superior to England is their fielding. No Australian team have ever done finer work in the field than this. They have changed fielding from a defensive into an aggressive branch of the game, and have made it a factor of the first importance.

Although England have on this occasion failed, and in some respects disappointed lovers of cricket, the failure is no matter for despondency. They still have great bowlers, and on the Australian side there is nothing quite to equal the accomplished play of Spooner, whom the Australians regard as the finest batsman they have met on this tour; while Hobbs, Sharpe and one or two others suffer nothing in comparison with Australia's best. One striking feature of the Australian team has been the stability of the older men. Armstrong stands out as the greatest living all-round cricketer of to-day; Trumper has played several delightful innings; Noble and Gregory have been of great service at times when experience and nerve were called for; while Laver has again proved one of the best bowlers. Among the men who have never visited England before are three conspicuous successes—Macartney, Ransford, and Bardsley. Macartney as bowler, batsman, and fielder has no equal of his years. Ransford, if he has yet to establish his claim to be the successor of Clement Hill, has proved himself a great batsman, equally good at run-getting and stone-walling as occasion required, while his work as an outfielder has been one of the best features in the Australian play. Still more striking has been the brilliant success of Bardsley as a batsman. His batting is distinguished by quite unusual virility and freedom. In temperament he belongs to the Trumper class—brilliant, vigorous, and irresistibly attractive, with a most striking style and variety of stroke. His many fine innings, concluding with his record performance of two centuries in the final Test match, have stamped him as the Prince of lefthanded batsmen. The tour began with the feeling that the Australians were a poor side. It ends with a conviction that, in grit and fighting quality, they are among the best.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

WITH no meeting here on Saturday last matters have been very dull in the real racing world during the last week, and most of the trainers have for the most part taken the opportunity of giving their charges a well-earned rest.

IN response to the wishes of a few, Captain Hughes had the course opened for galloping on Saturday morning and there was a fair amount of work done, but nothing of any very special interest. With three Hurdle Races on the card, one of which will have to be divided, there has naturally been a fair amount of schooling got through.

ON Saturday Skylark, who is entered for the Amateur Hurdle Race but has not started here as yet, ridden by Mr. Lance went with Night Out (Mr. Glen) and two other second class hunters also schooled, Dalgai (Mr. Evers), and Blue Bell II. (Mr. Morris), Dalgai going best. The most interesting school of the morning was that of Lefterin (Alford) and The Fog (Sullivan) Lefterin showed considerable improvement on her former performances, standing away and jumping in good from and The Fog, though, of course, not doing so well as his more experienced companion, showed remarkably good form for what is, we understand, his first appearance over jumps, and he certainly has plenty of pace as the mare was fairly well extended and he had no difficulty in keeping with her.

ON Tuesday morning Lord Chester (Mr. Levetus) was out at an early hour and jumped well over four flights but shifted about a good deal at the last. Badcock (Mr. Rasch), Minstrel Boy (Mr. Bletsoe) and Envious (Captain Steuart) also went over four. Envious was not moving any too freely and was pulled up after the second. The others jumped quite well and Minstrel Boy was going better than we have seen him yet, though naturally hard held to keep him back to his little companion. Merman (Capt. Steuart) and Vanity (Mr. Bletsoe) did a good school over four, but the last-named could barely pace it with his companion who is by no means a bad horse in his class.

MR. GRIFFITHS having completed the handicaps for next Saturday was off last night to Poona to take stock of the various animals running at the meeting there, most of which we shall probably see in Calcutta during the coming cold weather. Mr. Kindersley will officiate during the remaining three meetings of the Moonsoon Races.

SOULTLINE'S defeat of Tangaroa on the other side and Bantock's victory over Absentee have established the pair pretty fairly as favourites for the Trials and the Cup respectively. Soultline standing at fours for the Trials and Bantock at fives for the Cup, though not very much betting was done except chiefly in the way of doubles and trebles, the favourite combinations being Tangaroa and Bantock, and Soultline and Bantock. The latter has been laid two or three times at thirties and now no one is giving better than 20 to 1 the double. One of the largest wagers as regards the amount to be won that has been made in Calcutta for many a day was booked the other day for the Cup, when Messrs. Harris and Co. gave a well-known trainer Rs. 1,00,000 to Rs. 100 a win and Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 100 a place about Saloon. Naturally these prices are now no longer quoted.

ON Wednesday Chas (Mr. Levetus) went half pace over 3 flights, and Beaumaris (Sullivan) and Skylark (Mr. Barrow) schooled fairly fast over four. The grey had to be held back to Mr. Barrow's mount, who jumps really well, but did not show much pace on the flat. Beaumaris, on the other hand, hit a couple pretty hard but would probably go better faster.

THE Poona Junior Polo Tournament was concluded on the 26th ultimo when the 33rd Cavalry beat the Royal Engineers by 2 goals to nil. Details further on.

APPENDED are results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week.

Surrey beat Leicester at Leicester by 48 runs.

Middlesex beat Gloucester at Bristol by an innings and 31 runs.

The matches Gloucester vs. Essex, Worcester vs. Somerset, and Lancs vs. Derby were drawn.

The matches Middlesex vs. Australians, Kent vs. Yorks, and Sussex vs. Warwickshire have been abandoned owing to rain.

Hampshire beat Warwick at Bournemouth by an innings and 53 runs.

Lancashire beat Somerset at Manchester by 93 runs.

Notts beat Derby at Nottingham by an innings and 94 runs.

Kent beat Leicester at Dover by an innings and 10 runs.

Yorkshire beat Essex at Leyton by 151 runs.

The Australians beat Sussex at Brighton by one wicket.

Surrey beat Worcester by six wickets.

THE September Golf Meeting, under the auspices of the Ootacamund Gymkhana, will commence on the 13th September. The programme comprises :—

On the 13th the Ootacamund Championship, 36 holes, medal play. Best scratch score wins.

The Handicap.—The first eight in the Championship returning the best nett score (under handicap) will play 18 hole matches (final 36 holes) under handicap on the 14th and 15th September. On the 14th, 15th and 16th a Bogey sweep competition, under handicap, will be played.

The Ootacamund Medal will be played for on the 17th and 18th, 18 holes medal round under handicap.

The Ladies' Competitions comprise the Ladies' Championship, 15 holes, medal play, best scratch score to win, to be played on the 16th. On the 17th and 18th the Ladies' Handicap match will take place between players in the Championship returning the eight best scores under handicap play, 15 holes match play.

Arrangements are being made for Gentlemen's Foursomes and Mixed Foursomes, to be played on the 20th, 21st, 23rd and 24th September.

THE Sind Lawn Tennis Championships were concluded at Karachi on Saturday, 21st ultimo, with the following results in the finals :—

Men's Singles Championship—Mr. B. F. Jones beat Mr. F. R. Hawkes 8—6, 6—2. Men's Doubles Championship,—Messrs. B. F. Jones and J. McKenzie Davidson beat Messrs. A. T. Stowell and C. A. Tulloch by 6—1, 6—2. Mixed Doubles Championship—Mrs. Llewelyn and Mr. L. C. Ogbourne beat Mrs. Leake and Mr. R. H. Allen 6—2, 6—0.

X-RAY photography is finding a place in the equipment of veterinary workers, who can often make good use of it. The great drawback, so far, has been the unwillingness of the animal to keep still while the photograph is being taken. The electrical apparatus used is often somewhat noisy, and the strangeness of the whole proceedings is usually very disquieting to the animal being radiographed.

A new apparatus has just been brought to perfection in England by means of which X-ray photographs of horses' legs, etc., can be taken in one-tenth of a second. A slight movement of the animal would not seriously interfere with the result.

A FREAK Channel swim was attempted on the 7th instant by a nautical crank named Westlake who, on the strength of his having once had to cling to a plank when wrecked in the Atlantic, thought he would create a mild stir by attempting to cross from England to France in like manner. The start of the adventurous voyage was witnessed by a large number of people on Dover seafront. The plank was two feet wide, eighteen feet long, and two inches thick. It was fitted with a mast and sail, and the voyager also carried a pair of oars to assist his progress. A pair of empty oil drums were alongside the plank to give it buoyancy.

Westlake took his crazy-looking craft across the bay and out of the eastern entrance of the Naval Harbour. There was a strong tide going to the eastward, and he was soon drifting eastward, towards the Goodwins. Of course he failed and returned to Dover on his plank in the evening. He had been driven away by the tide and a breeze. He looked upon this idiotic voyage as a "trial trip" and will make another attempt later unless those whose business it is to keep watch and ward over lunatics interfere.

"WALKING is going out of fashion ; if something is not done it will soon become a lost exercise," declared a London physician who, supporting the Lancet's contention, affirms that the ill-effects arising from a lack of healthy exercise—due not to laziness but to the motor-car, tube, and other conveniences of travel nowadays—form one of the greatest problems of the moment as regards public health.

"Young men are forgetting how to walk," he added. "Yet walking is undoubtedly the exercise for city men. However busy they are they can find the short time daily which is the only demand this exercise makes. Its very simplicity makes some people discount it and turn to elaborate exercises. Yet it is Nature's exercise.

"But unless one walks in the right way half the benefit is lost. This is how one can describe good walking and bad :—

GOOD.	BAD.
Body erect. Arms swinging comfortably. Figure swaying at the waist. Chest nicely forward. Brisk, easy steps.	Body slouched. Arms held uncomfortably. Figure rigid at the waist. Chest cramped. Steps either too long or too short.

"One of the most striking discoveries of quite recent physiology is connected with the therapeutic effect of walking. The action of walking—not to use too technical terms—pumps energy through the frame as does no other means known to science. The walkers are the health-winners; and it may be said that walking has a moral effect not less distinct than its physical effect.

"A great employer of labour has said that all his foremen over a long succession of years were country-bred men; and he attributed their success solely to the fact that they walked to their work, with the result that they arrived beyond comparison more fit and vigorous, not to add more punctual than the 'trammers.'

"Bouts of a most praiseworthy zeal for exercises—Swedish exercises, Japanese exercises, American exercises—come over people; and these play their part. But they are rarely regularly practised, largely because they are dull, and at the best they are no proper substitute for the natural and, it is now discovered, the irreplaceable exercise of walking."

THE long-promised 12-mile match between Shrubb and Longboat came off on 31st July at Scarboro' Beach, Ontario. Shrubb had been trying to get Longboat out over this distance for some time, but it was a difficult matter to coax the Indian into the race at a distance where Shrubb might be expected to prove his conqueror. However, arrangements were at last fixed up for the race to be decided by artificial light on the evening of 31st July.

Shrubb soon showed that he was the top of his form, and ran away from Longboat in the first lap, and had a third of a lap advantage at 2 miles. At 5 miles he had nearly lapped the Indian, who made a desperate effort to keep clear; but at 6 miles Shrubb caught him. Longboat tried to get away, but in the third lap of the seventh mile Shrubb dashed off again, and Longboat went to pieces soon afterwards, retiring at 7¾ miles. Shrubb continued, but eased up a trifle towards the end of the race, covering, however, 10 miles in 53mins. 44⅘secs., and finishing 12 miles in 65mins. 25⅕secs.

Perusal of the intermediate times goes to show that Shrubb, fit and well, is still the finest distance runner in the world. Who else could cover his first mile in 4mins. 37⅘secs., and continue for an hour? The intermediate times are as follows:—

Miles.	Time. m. s.	Miles.	Time. m. s.
1 ...	... 4 37⅘	7 ...	... 36 56⅕
2 ...	... 9 41⅘	8	... 42 24
3 ...	... 14 48⅖	9	... 48 4
4 ...	... 20 10	10 ...	... 53 44⅘
5 ...	... 25 43⅘	11	... 59 38
6 ...	... 31 9	12 ...	... 65 25⅕

THE drawing of the fifth and last Test match at the Oval (vide details in our London sporting letter) after an interesting three days' play, leaves the Australian team in full possesion of the honours, or the "ashes," and very well do they deserve them. Their success is a striking instance of the value of encouragement. They came over a good, sound, average team, but certainly not a very brilliant side when compared with others in the past. It was only after they had defeated England in the second Test match that they really pulled themselves together. This victory solidified them. Their captain, Mr. Noble, a born leader of men, seized the opportunity, and from that moment did not look back.

Whether they would have won the last match if it had been played to a finish no one can say. England had a good side and gave a good performance, though it was strangely unwise not to include a fast bowler on so hard a wicket. The chances were about even. Many people would like to see all Test matches played out, even if they lasted a week. But that would kill cricket. It has that effect in Australia, where in an unlimited time match runs are scored at the rate of under 200 a day. Cricket has enough adverse influences to fight against in England already without adding this final disaster. Except in very unusual circumstances three days is quite enough.

AN interesting conclusion is arrived at by the Times with regard to American horses in England. It was supposed that as the American horses became acclimatized and used to their surroundings they would prosper; but they were successful on several occasions earlier in the season, and are not keeping it up. One thing in particular is to be observed with regard to them; it is said that not once has an American-bred horse taken a race over more than a mile, and very few have won even over this distance. The inference to be drawn strongly is that they do not stay. In their own country several of them have carried off important races over longer courses; when they have attempted to do so in England they have been hopelessly defeated. Joseph Cannon, the trainer of Mr. L. Winans's Sir Martin, one of the most competent and experienced men in his profession, believed that their colt would gallop the mile and a half of the Derby course; and it is impossible to say that he was wrong, Sir Martin's fall having prevented the demonstration. Fairplay II was rated as a really good horse in America, and that he was supposed to be able to stay the fact of his having been entered and started for the Goodwood Cup of two miles and a half sufficiently shows. The truth seems to be that it is only the produce of English mares who possess the requisite stamina to last over long courses. Some French-bred animals do so, but as a rule these seem to be horses whose dams had recently been exported from England. If this be so, it is gratifying as a special proof of the value of English blood.

THE Home papers of last mail having left on the 13th, contain little news of the sport obtained on the long awaited Twelfth, but are not lacking in news of the prospect of the happy mortals who were able to leave work and worry and live and shoot in the invigorating air of the Scotch moors. It is said that the grouse are in good condition and that there is an absence of disease this year. As one journal points out, it has been aptly remarked that the moors are to the Englishman what "les eaux" are to the Frenchman, or the Alps to an Italian. They possess a monopoly in attraction, a realisation of healthy exercise and pleasure which can be obtained nowhere else in the world, which is peculiarly their own.

> Better to hunt in fields for health unbought
> Than see the doctor for a nauseous draught.

The rents of the Scotch shootings are estimated at a yearly sum of two-fifths of a million pounds, but the rents alone are but a portion of the total sum that finds its way into circulation in the Highlands, benefiting all classes of the population. Until some inventive genius can change the face of the peat-bog and turn the barren flanks of the hill into productive pasture, the grouselands and their prosperity mean much to the dwellers in northern climes. To those who love the Highlands for themselves, for their own peculiar beauty and charm, the sport itself has a sentimental side that will never weaken in its appeal. It is said that not withstanding the fact Parliament is sitting so late, and that as a consequence a good many sportsmen are unable to go north, the demand for moors has been quite brisk, and there are but few good places unlet. The enquiry for deer forests has, however, been far less than usual, and there are a number of first-rate places still without tenants.

THE latest of the "Studies in the Zoological Gardens" appearing in the Times is upon elephants. Several tales are told evidencing how difficult it often is to see the great animal amongst the shadows of forest thickets. Speaking of the fact that he seldom lies down it is stated that the "elephants' legs are different from those of any other animals, straight and columnar, excellently adapted to support its weight, and their shape, coupled with the fact that elephants so seldom lie down, was doubtless responsible for the old belief that they could not bend their limbs. It is still doubted whether they ever lie down in a wild state." A herd has been known to keep moving and feeding throughout the twenty-four hours, and all authorities seem to agree that they sleep less and more lightly than any other animal. Another notable fact about the elephant is its longevity. There seems to be an authentic record of one living to be 130. The elephant presented by his Majesty when Prince of Wales after his visit to this country is now the mother of the gardens, being about 40 years of age and in the prime of life. The general opinion can hardly be that the elephant is stupid, but it is stated that the Government of India has officially pronounced him a "stupid animal;" the writer points out that it is worth remembering that in Hindu mythology it is Ganesha, the shrewd-witted god of worldliness, the patron of successful business undertakings, who wears the elephant's head and brain. The best story of the elephant given is that telling "how the standard bearing elephant of the Peishwa won a great victory for its Mahratta lord. At the moment when the elephant had been told to halt, its mahout was killed. The shock of battle closed round it and the Mahratta forces were borne back; but still the elephant stood and the standard which it carried still flew, so that the Peishwa's soldiers could not believe that they were indeed being overcome, and, rallying in their turn, drove the enemy backwards till the tide swept past the rooted elephant and left it towering colossal among the slain. The fight was over and won, and then they would have had the elephant move from the battle-field; but it waited still for the dead man's voice. For three days and nights it remained where it had been told to remain, and neither bribe nor threat would move it, till they sent to the village on the Nerbudda, a hundred miles away, and fetched the mahout's little son, a round-eyed lisping child—and then at last the hero of that victorious day, remembering how its master had often in brief absence delegated authority to the child, confessed its allegiance and with the shattered battle-harness clinging at each stately stride, swung slowly along the road behind the boy." Though petulant and subject to panic at times no animal is more noble and greatly simple minded than this great "survivor of an earlier age in the earth's history, of the days in which there were giants."

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

Our Poona correspondent writes :—The most open day's racing so far was the Seventh Extra, when fields in six out of the eight events were very big and classy and several owners in each were having a fling. Watson has arrived in readiness for the Big Meet next Saturday, Killorn, Fraser, L. C. Hoyt and Morrison also ; the first named however being unable to ride owing to his eyes.

We opened with the Little Arab Consolation, Zari the hot thing from Sir Jamal, Sabah and Rajput. The favourite was with Happy Land to the three, where he went away, to be caught by Sabah and Rajput entering the straight. Sir Jamal came late after getting a none too clear run, but in any case could not have beaten Rajput.

In his last easy win, Daroji was odds on for the Steeplechase, Nell Gwynne next from the other two, Lamrock and Chinese Labour. Daroji made all his own running full six lengths in front of Chinese Labour. Four fields from home Nell Gwynne was second and the order remained with ten lengths between each of the first three.

Form pointed to Nagashi in the first Season Maiden, though Corrector had a strong following and some fancied Ebrahim Pasha after his second to Sharar. Corrector made the early running, but once Nagashi came at him all was over. Waterloo and Steel next.

The other division saw Orby and Sunsun in prime demand and the race proved a very easy one for the latter as soon as he passed Orby, who gave way also to Sabuktakin and Lahuk.

A classy field of a dozen went out for the Midsummer Plate. Wise Bird, Crossbred, Tangaroa and Ebullition shortest in that order. Tangaroa cut out the running from Crossbred and Posco. Posco drawing up second collared the leader round the bend and Wise Bird began to come up. At the distance Crossbred came again and in a great finish got there by a neck.

Fourteen went for the first Arab Consolation with Soheil a steady favourite from Reefat, the public not having the strength of Pinkie, on whom the stable had a big gamble. Grey Rose, then Waziristan and Reefat made the running, Rubio coming later and Soheil and Pinkie showing up outside at the bend. It was a fine race down the straight when Major Tudor got his pony in front of Reefat almost on the post.

The other also saw a bit of a public upset, Colaba failing to keep in front after being heavily backed. Babil with Parliament on the rails were at him on entering the straight and the latter of these won comfortably. Lapwing's late run landed him level next with Babil.

On the scratching of Our State, Dirty Boy was made odds on for the mile and a half Mofussil Plate from Ashanti Gold. Dirty Boy had to make all his own running and was staying out a strong challenge by Flaneur, when Hill came on Ashanti Gold and in a nicely judged run won by a mere head. The Books on the whole had a good time.

An American contemporary gives the following picturesque forecast of street experiences ten years hence :—Chug-chug ! Br-r-r ! br-r-r ! Honk-konk! Gilligillug-gilligillug ! The pedestrian paused at the intersection of two busy cross-streets. He looked about. An automobile was rushing at him from one direction, a motor-cycle from another, an autotruck was coming from behind and a taxi-cab was speedily approaching. Zip-zip ! Zing-zing ! He looked up, and saw directly above him a runaway airship in rapid descent. There was one chance. He was standing upon a manhole cover. Quickly seizing it, he lifted the lid, and jumped into the hole just in time to be run over by a subway train !

Thakur, the native jockey attached to the stable of Mr. "J. B.," was thrown and killed when riding the racehorse Chivalry home from the Poona course on Monday.

J. Hendrie, J. Montgomery, E. Hurlston (Dalhousie), J. Anderson, A. McCready, H. Fischer, L. A. and L. H. Smith (Customs), E. Smart (Rangers), O'Shea (Calcutta), and Currey and G. Fitzpatrick of the Customs as the reserve men.

Reuter wires that an extraordinary crisis has arisen in League Football at home owing to the Football Association with drawing recognition from players ofthe Union which has endeavoured to obtain the right for players to appeal to ordinary Courts on questions of compensation and similar matters. Players of several Northern Clubs, which have adhered to the Union, have been suspended and two early League fixtures have been postponed. A noteworthy feature of the controversy is that the Amateur Association and Trades Union Federation are supporting the players. The great bulk of the Clubs are at present loyal to the Association.

We have been favoured with a copy of the annual report of the Natural History section of the Indian Museum which contains much of interest. We learn that considerable changes have been effected in some of the zoological galleries during the year. The bird gallery has been rearranged and improved and the rearrangement of the reptile and amphibian gallery is now complete. The fish gallery, which since the whole of the public collection was hastily evicted in 1908 has been a very unsatisfactory exhibition, has seen great improvements. Important additions have been made by the Bengal Fishery department and the collection received from the fishery steamer Golden Crown has rendered it possible to remedy a serious defect in the museum.

In the mammal gallery casts of four species of Indian Cetacea have been set up, and a complete skeleton of the Mishmi Takin (Budorcas taxicolor) has also been prepared for exhibition. It is probably the only complete skeleton of this rare animal in existence, and an excellent photo of this skeleton appears in the report.

The archæological collection has been enriched by a most important addition in the shape of a number of clay seals found by Dr. Bloch during his excavations at Basarh, the ancient Vaisali, in the Mozufferpore District of Tirhut. They appear to have been attached to letters, or other written documents, and were found inside a small square chamber of the ancient fort of Vaisali, now called "Raja Bisal ko Garh," at a depth of 7 to 10 feet below the surface. It looked as if this room formed some sort of a refuse chamber into which the seals had been thrown, after having been torn off the documents to which they originally belonged.

The date of this collection of clay seals may be safely put down as the 4th and 5th century A.D., partly for palæographic reasons, partly on account of the names of certain kings of the Imperial Gupta dynasty which are mentioned on some of the seals. A number of clay pieces bear the impressions of more than one seal. The total amounts to about 720 pieces with somewhat over 1,100 seal impressions on them ; among these are approximately 120 varieties.

The total number of visitors on the 238 days on which the Museum was open to the public was 577,406, as compared with 580,161 in 1907-08, giving a daily average of 2,426. On October 4th and 5th, during the Durga Puja holidays, the numbers were no less than 17,910 and 20,935.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 13th August 1909.

The hunt for topics for my letter this week brings little to bag : it is all "heat wave" and indolence just now. For ten days the joyous, blood-tingling sunshine has been impartial, the whole of the dwellers on these islands have revelled in it and made festival. The London parks have been entrancing beauty spots ; the seashore has been a dream of delight ; the countryside has had a fascination it had never seemed to possess before. There were, truly, new beauties everywhere. England, under the sun, became a great enchanted garden. The spell of the sun—such splendid, unstinted, reanimating sunshine—flooded the air. It made merry people bubble over with happiness. It changed melancholy folk into hopeful ones. It set the children skipping out of sheer joy. The call for cooling liquids was loud and incessant, the rush to bathe continuous, the consumption of fruit (lemons especially) simply prodigious. Those still holiday making at the seaside or in country retreats have had one of the times of their lives.

And the Thames—particularly in its upper reaches—has presented a scene of continuous charm. Last Sunday the lockkeeper at Boulter's, was kept as busy as he usually is on Ascot Sunday. Never in August have the Clivedon or the Quarry Woods shown greener foliage. Hardly a leaf has turned colour yet. The scent of roses and meadowsweet came from the gardens to the towing path.

Here and there lady boaters ventured on a brilliantly tinted Japanese parasol with the happiest results. Boats were not dear. Bitter experience has taught boatowners the mistake of overcharging in a bad year. Prices were low yesterday as a result, ranging from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 10*s.* for the day. At these rates a golden harvest was reaped and everyone was satisfied.

Very noteworthy is the growing absence of the steam launch on the river above Maidenhead. Its place is being taken by the motor-launch, of which some fine specimens were out. Many were prettily decorated with flowers at prow and stern.

Foreign visitors were in plenty, chiefly from France, and many spent an hour or two at Cookham Lock, one of the most delightful spots on the river where the pleasure traffic may be watched. The French visitors praised the beauty of the day and scene, so unlike anything they had imagined of England and the Thames.

People from your part of the globe home on leave just now will take back pleasant recollections of this merry spell of glorious, though belated, summer.

Many of your readers who remember Sir H. Babington Smith when he was private secretary to Lord Elgin, will be interested to hear that, at the request of His Majesty's Government, he has relinquished his billet as Secretary to the Post Office to take up the appointment of president of the National Bank of Turkey now in course of formation. He goes to Constantinople next month.

London is to have a new cancer hospital, built and endowed at a cost of £250,000, with which to carry on the fight against the dread disease.

You will remember that the late Mr. Harry Barnato left by will the splendid sum of £250,000 for the purpose of founding some charity in the nature of a hospital or kindred institution, in commemoration of his brother, Mr. Barney Barnato, and his nephew, Mr. Woolf Joel, both of whom died before him.

After full and careful consideration of the merits of the many schemes put before them the trustees, Mr. S. R. Joel, Mr. J. B Joel, and Mr. S. G. Asher, have now decided upon applying it to the building and endowment of an institution for the reception of cancer patients. With a view to increasing the potentialities of the bequest the new institution will be administered, except as regards its finance, in connection with the Middlesex Hospital, which has acquired so high a reputation for its treatment of patients afflicted with this disease, and the trustees have procured a suitable site in Nassau Street adjoining this hospital's special cancer wards.

More old buildings to be demolished ! Scotland Yard is now represented by two magnificent piles of buildings facing the Embankment at the Westminster Bridge end, and one sometimes forgets that nearer Charing Cross there still exists the original Great Scotland Yard, in which was established the office of the Police Force when it was instituted under Sir Robert Peel's Act of 1829. The buildings are old and not particularly picturesque, though they have associations which are decidedly interesting. They are now to be pulled down to make room for a recruiting depôt and other offices, and thus to enable the Office of Works to complete its improvement scheme for that side of Whitehall. Another group of buildings which is to come down within a few years is in Delahay Street, Westminster. The Board of Education is to be extended to a frontage on Birdcage Walk and a picturesque row of houses looking over St. James's Park is to be demolished to make way. One of these is the residence of Sir J. Wolfe Barry, the eminent engineer. The new Government offices will also include a site which has remained untenanted for many years, as a direct consequence of a somewhat grim ghost EMPTY playhouses in August give the necessary opportunities for rehearsals, which are in full swing at many London theatres in preparation for the coming autumn season. Among these new productions is Mr. J. B. Fagan's version of M. Brieux's drama, "La Foi," which Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree will present in a month's time at His Majesty's under the title of "False Gods." Great things are expected from this play, which is described as "one of the most remarkable of modern works." Mr. Justin H. McCarthy is also engaged upon a play for the same theatre, besides being responsible for "The Proud Prince," which will appear at the Lyceum. Mr. Sutro and Sir Arthur Pinero both provide new fare for theatre-lovers, the former having written "Making a Gentleman" for Mr. Bourchier while the latter's play, "Mid-Channel," will be produced by Mr. George Alexander at the St James's. Many other interesting features of the autumn season might be mentioned did space permit, but in musical comedy the "Dollar Princess" at Daly's, which promises well, will be followed later on by a new comic opera by Franz Lehar, the composer of "The Merry Widow," which is said to contain music at least as attractive as that of his previous gigantic success.

A CLEVER and witty comedy, by Mr. Frederick Lonsdale, and entitled "The Best People," was produced with much success at Wyndham's Theatre last week.

It is one of the cleverest, best comedies of the year. It plays with an old, old story—the story of a sensible wife who found her foolish young husband out in a ridiculously silly but fortunately quite innocent affair with a friend's equally silly young wife. He had invited the lady to supper at the flat. His wife, coming home from the country prematurely, found the scheme out by chance. To teach him a lesson, she gives secret orders that the supper should be laid for four, and invites the lady's husband, who is middle-aged, but almost as foolish as the others, and flatters himself that the invitation represents a conquest on his own part. So the sensible wife finds herself at the supper table faced with three laughably bewildered and shamefaced companions. The rest of the play shows how she makes her husband—who is nothing if not impressionable—fall in love with herself once again, and then just lets him know for a while what it is like to be out in the cold.

THE charming ballet, "Les Cloches de Corneville," which proved such a big success when produced at the Alhambra a year ago, was revived last Saturday night, and should again win widespread popularity. The ballet is, of course, adapted from Robert Planquette's well-known comic opera, with the original music arranged and supplemented by Mr. Geo. W. Byng. The music forms a delightful accompaniment to a beautiful spectacle, and it would be hard to imagine anything more brilliant or more artistic in the cunning blending of colours than the Baronial Hall in the Chateau—the final scene of all. Last night Mlle. Britta appeared for the first time as Germaine, and her various dances showed a delightful artiste at her best. Miss Elise Clerc, as Serpolette, was also new to the part, and both danced and mimed most effectively; while Miss Julia Seale, as Grenicheux, and Signor G. Rosi, as the miser, both repeated their former successes. The revival was very heartily received.

THE apparently inexhaustible store of Dickens' illustrations and relics has yielded sufficient material—and engrossingly interesting material—for the fitting-out of yet another extensive Dickens' exhibition, the third of its kind in as many years, at the New Dudley Galleries, in Piccadilly.

There are innumerable portraits, painted, drawn, and photographed, of the popular novelist; rare editions of his works; pictures and photographs of localities mentioned in his books; illustrations by Cruikshank, T. Onwhyn, H. K. Browne, K. Meadows, Crowquill, F. Barnard, and many others; and no end of manuscripts and autograph letters, including an original fragment of the "Pickwick" manuscript—four lines in Dickens' own handwriting, being part of the diverting account of Sam Weller's entertainment, by the Guild of Flunkeys, at the memorable "Leg o' Mutton Swarry."

Among the personal relics is a portion of Dickens' histrionic wardrobe, used by him in amateur theatricals in representations of "Every Man in his Humour," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "Love, Law, and Physic," and other plays.

SCENES of the greatest animation have been witnessed at the stations of the North-running lines during the past two days. Of rush to the moors in quest of the "bonny brown birds." Shooting men and women, with their families and servants, their dogs and motor-cars, seemed to render confusion worse confounded, but the organisation of the companies perfected by years of experience, evolved order out of seeming chaos and secure the punctuality of departure of the trains. The continued sitting of Parliament, however, kept a number in town, and many familiar faces were missing, while on Tuesday night a hundred beds fewer were made up at Euston as compared with the evening of 10th August last year. The effect of motor-cars on the railway traffic gave rise to the expression of diametrically opposed views on the part of responsible officials of the different lines. It was admitted that servants and children travelled as of yore by train, but the question was as to the present tendency of the grown-ups to go by road. One gentleman declared that men did not go by car, the only difference, he said, was that nowadays, instead of taking their horses and carriages by rail, they took their motor-cars, and he instanced the 6-50 P.M. special for horses and carriages from King's Cross which runs in front of the night expresses, and which carried a large percentage of motor-cars. "Oh no," said another man, "that is not my experience at all. To take a car to Aberdeen costs £13 10s., and then there are, say, three first-class tickets and a second for the chauffeur. If the people put up an hotel en route and you take into account the cost of petrol and oil and wear of tyres, is it not much cheaper, as well as infinitely more pleasant, to go by road? As a railway man I'm sorry, but isn't it the fact?

THE BIG-GAME RESOURCES OF THE EMPIRE.

THE continent of Africa, especially the British possessions and colonies in it, has been, during the last three decades, so pre-eminently the resort of the British big-game hunter that to a large number of those who had no direct connexion with the resources of other parts of the Empire, it has come to be identified with all that is most desirable in this form of sport. There is a very natural explanation of the prevalence of this idea, for Africa has held for many years, and still holds deservedly, the premier place in the estimation of those who can please themselves as to what continent shall be the scene of their hunting expeditions and adventures. A larger choice and a greater abundance of game animals, a wider field of action, and a sparser population are a combination of advantages admittedly to be found in Africa in greater perfection than anywhere else; and in consequence the home-bred Englishman, desirous of collecting his own trophies and enjoying a sport of which his countrymen have always been the pioneers and exemplars, commonly first turns his attention to one or other of the great game grounds of Africa.

But it is not to be overlooked that there are other territories under the Union Jack wherein the endurance and craft of the hunter are as highly tested and as splendidly, if not so profusely, rewarded as in any part of the British possessions in Africa. Long before the days of Cornwallis Harris, Gordon Cumming, Selous, and the other giants of South African hunting, India and Ceylon were yielding rich toll to English hunters; and, thanks to a less reckless devastation, are still affording sport far superior to any that can now be got south of the Limpopo in South Africa. In various parts of our North American colonies—Newfoundland, British Columbia, and the Canadian North-West—there are still hunting grounds which repay annually the skilful stalkers who visit them for the acquisition of heads and the enjoyment of this essentially arduous and open-air sport.

It is a widely spread belief that big-game shooting is a recreation only possible to those who possess very considerable wealth, but this is only partly the truth of the matter. It may be granted that for residents in this kingdom the leisure necessary to pursue any considerable scheme of big-game hunting is beyond the reach of the great majority. Those whose avocation, whether one of the services of the Crown, or their own private business, entails residence in distant countries which are the habitat or within reach of the habitat of wild game are less hampered by this consideration; indeed, the possibilities of sport have been very effective in times past in attracting to the services young men of enterprise and courage who could not otherwise afford to gratify their tastes in this direction. It may be granted, too, that the day has passed when a poor man could obtain a decent competence out of big-game shooting pure and simple. The regulations for the preservation of big-game adopted by the signatory Powers after the conclusion of the International Convention of 1900, have destroyed the career of the professional elephant hunter in Africa, and in fact of almost all professional big-game shooting strictly so-called, as opposed to the trapping or snaring of fur-bearing animals for their pelts and the guidance of amateurs. But while all this is to be admitted, it does not follow that big-game shooting is now the monopoly of the wealthy. Several of the most successful hunters in various parts of the world of quite recent years are men of strictly limited financial resources, though of course, an independent income large enough to enable

New Zealand.

In Britain itself the only form of big game which has survived the increase of population, is the Scottish red deer, and that, as all the world knows, is protected from extermination solely by the action of the large landowners on whose estates the sport of deer-stalking is obtainable. So far then as this country is concerned, the Scottish red-deer can be shot only by those whose means enable them to own or rent a deer forest, and by such friends as they chose to extend invitations to. Yet there is a part of the Empire where red-deer-stalking is free and open to all, and where the sport obtainable outstrips anything that can be got in the country of its origin. It is more than 40 years since deer of various breeds were imported into New Zealand, and turned loose on the extensive tracts of unoccupied land which are still unappropriated in that colony. Those introduced into the North Island were given by the late Prince Consort, and came from Windsor Park; they were of somewhat mixed ancestry, a European strain having been crossed with the indigenous species. These deer, like those of the South Island, have flourished and multiplied exceedingly, and their heads surpass anything that has ever been seen among their European progenitors. These heads have been in the past exceptionally heavy in the horn, but it would appear that in this respect there has lately been some deterioration. The deer of the Wairapa district have long been noted for their fine quality among those of the North Island.

However, it is certain that finer antlers are to be got in the South Island than are now found anywhere in the North. These deer are the descendants of a herd exported originally from Scotland by Lord Dalhousie to the Otago district. They have multiplied very greatly and in spite of certain adverse influences are still increasing in number. Like their relatives of the North Island, the antlers of these acclimatized red-deer are far finer than those of their progenitors. Heads of 26 and 28 points are not unknown, and several of this quality have been shot during 1908. In length and spread of horn also the Dalhousie deer surpasses those of the Windsor stock. Some idea of the splendid trophies that are to be obtained is given by the game laws which do not permit a stag of less than 10 points to be shot at all. For four such stags a licence costs £5, and four more in addition may be shot for an extra sum of £3. Unfortunately these laws are violated everywhere with impunity; only too many of those who go deer stalking shoot recklessly at every stag they see and discard all the heads except the best four or the best eight. Notwithstanding this condition of things, which is a disgrace to the colony, the herds are holding their own in the districts less easy of access; and in the remotest regions are undoubtely still increasing. One reason for this is probably the arrangement of the close season, which is on a different plan to that in vogue in Britain. Stags may be shot only between 1st April and 1st June corresponding to October-December of the Northern Hemisphere. Now 1st April is well into the rutting season, and May is often ruined by rain and snow from a hunters's point of view.

The sport of deer-stalking in New Zealand involves camping out, and the use of pack animals to transport the necessaries of camp life to the mountanious regions where the deer are found. The services of guides are also necessary, at least until the stalker has learnt to experience the ways of the deer, or is in company with old hands who will teach him the rudiments of the art. Good guides are very difficult to get, and are paid as a rule 10s. a day for their services; they are best negotiated through the Secretary of the Acclimatization Society, Dunedin. Pack horses cost from 7s. to 10s. a day each. It will thus be seen that stalking even for the ordinary Englishman is not really expensive; and a party of New Zealanders born who share camp and expenses can enjoy splendid sport on the most limited of monetary resources. It may be added that the local conditions require the most careful study; it is rare indeed for a hunter to get a first class head in his first season, and this in itself is evidence of the skill required and the fascination of the art to those who have once practised it.

India.

Elsewhere in the British Empire the fauna is entirely alien. In India, for example, there are several species of the deer tribe but the most desired of the big game are other families. The sportman's India is defined by Mr. Lydekker as the drainage basins of the Indus, Brahmaputra, and Irawadi rivers, together with the whole of India, Ceylon, the province of Tenasserim, and the Malay Peninsula. To the north-west the Hindu Kush and the Karakoram ranges enclose it, and eastwards of the latter the Tangla Mountains to the north of Lhasa, whence an arbitrary line is drawn to the eastern frontier of Burma. It will be seen that there are considerable tracts inclosed within these boundaries which are not parts of the British Empire, though there are none in which British influence is not predominant. The area thus limited contains an assemblage of game animals belonging to the great zoological provinces; for it is along the northern frontiers of India and Burma that two distinct faunas meet and merge. In a country as large as India, offering many and greatly varied conditions, of temperature rainfall altitude and climate in general, and of density of population, character of vegetation, and accessibility to Europeans, there will necessarily also be found wide differences in the original distribution and abundance of species and the extent to which they have been depredated by the attacks of man, European or Asiatic. There is room for and do actually exist, quite distinct varieties or sub-species of the same animal in different districts of this large territory.

Peninsular India properly so-called—that is, the area south of the Indus and Ganges—is the home of the true Indian fauna such as the sambur, nilgai, spotted deer tiger, wolf, elephant, and so on. The distribution of this fauna is not by any means uniform; and Ceylon, as might be expected, presents greater divergences than do the various provinces of peninsular India. In the trans-Indus districts of the Punjab and in Western Sindh Persian types replace those of India proper. The Indian lion belongs to this Persian fauna, though it has penetrated further into India than have some of the other members. In this region all traces of the Malayan and Indo Malayan fauna met with on the eastern side are absent such animals, for example, as the tapirs, rhinoceroses and Malayan bears. Mr. Lydekker inclines to regard the tiger itself as probably an immigrant from Central Asia rather than a true member of the Indian and Malayan groups.

The growth of population in India and the relatively long period during which Europeans with firearms have searched it for game, have reduced very considerably the opportunities of the twentieth century big game hunter The elephant, for example, but for legal protection, would be by this time practically extinct. The pursuit of this animal now seldom fails to the lot of the rifleman, the principal exceptions being when the necessity arises for the destruction of some "musth" or rogue animal which is doing damage to property. Elephant shooting is practised on foot, and is quite one of the most dangerous of Indian field sports. The other large pachyderm of India, the rhinoceros, has had its range greatly curtailed within historic times by man. Its principal habitat now is the jungles of Assam.

The tiger is, of course, par excellence the big game animal of India; and it is the ambition of every hunter to add the skin of this animal to his collection of trophies, tiger-shooting is carried out after several distinct fashion, by driving the jungle with beaters (or with elephants) towards the guns posted upon elephants or upon trees; by sitting up on a machan in a tree over a kill or a tethered animal; and by waking up the game on foot in the jungle. The latter is still much the most dangerous and exciting plan but the introduction of high velocity firearms of great precision and tremendous striking energy has rendered the practice distinctly less hazardous than formerly. Among the other game animals of India the most sought after include the leopards, bears, buffaloes, markhor, ovis poli, and several species of antelope, deer, and ibex. Speaking quite generally, the Englishman who thinks of going to India for the purpose of shooting big game should have a clear idea of what he wants and where to get it, derived from first hand sources of information; and he should have introduction to those in authority. Much of the finest shooting country is carefully preserved by native rulers, many of whom are extremely keen sportsmen in the true sense of the term. The friendship of one of these goes a long way towards making easy the bagging of royal game in India.

Canada.

For certain kinds of game, our North American Colonies are still a rich field. The bison, though nearly extinct, still survives in the remotest parts of the Canadian North-West; but he may be ruled on one side from the hunter's point of view. Bears are still, though daily becoming scarcer, not infrequently shot in the wooded districts not yet too much encroached on by civilization, both in British Columbia, the Rocky Mountains, and the Northern Territories. Of horned animals, the two most coveted as trophies are the moose and the caribou. The former, which is a bigger and larger antlered species of the elk of the Old World, was formerly common throughout the northern parts of the continent, both in the United States and Canada. But the opening up of the country has pushed it backwards, so that, with few exceptions, it now exists only in the more remote districts. In British Columbia the moose has been much hunted of late years, and it is thence that some of the most magnificent trophies ever secured by big game hunters have come. A bull moose of the largest size may bear antlers of seven or eight in span, and the massive palmated horns of such enormous beasts (they stand more than six feet high at the shoulder) are of great weight. The moose is also to be obtained on this side of the Rockies, in the North-West and Northland, wherever conditions are favourable. The caribou is fairly widely distributed throughout sub-Aretic Canada, though in very greatly disminished numbers. The region in which these fine animals are most numerous and most easily obtained is Newfoundland, which is really nearer to Great Britain than any other habitat of big game within the Empire. The possibilities of getting good shooting only about five days' voyage from England are being gradually appreciated in this country, and every year more hunters go after caribou in Newfoundland. The close seasons are from 1st February to 31st July and from 1st to 20th October, all inclusive, and non-residents pay $50 for a licence, which entitles them to three stags. There are other game animals in Canada, but their addition to the bag is more fortuitous than that of those already named: the muskox exists in the far Northland; wolves, cougars, and lynxes are among the most important of the flesh eaters.

Africa.

Lastly, but most prolific of all, come the British possessions in Africa. It is quite certain that up to the time of the Great Trek of the Boers from Cape Colony to the far side of the Orange River, roughly seventy years ago, the territories which are now the Transvaal Southern Rhodesia, and the Orange River Colony were more densely populated with wild game than any portion of the globe within historic times. The rapidity with which this magnificent game park was cleared is something almost unbelievable, especially considering the relatively crude weapons with which the immigrants were armed. Whole species became extinct within a few years, and others were saved only here and there by the protection extended in rare cases by individual landowners. Such destruction will fortunately never happen again and in the regions further north which came several decades later under the influence of the white man, a fauna as varied and almost as abundant will now be permanently preserved as a result of legislation. At the present day most of the shooting in South Africa is carefully preserved. There are, it is true, a good many districts, especially off the great central plateau of the Transvaal and Orange Colony, where blesbok and other small antelopes are fairly common; and in the Northern Transvaal larger game still is to be had. But those who travel to Africa for shooting go elsewhere. In Rhodesia there is really excellent shooting to be had, and many of the regions north of the Zambesi are still swarming with wild game, from elephant, lion, and buffalo downwards. Access to North-Western Rhodesia by the railway from Bulawayo viâ the Zambesi Falls to Broken Hill is so easy a matter that many hunters have availed themselves of this convenient means of access since the opening of the line four or five years ago; and North-Eastern Rhodesia, which is equally prolific, can also be reached by the same means, or viâ the Zambesi, the Shire, and Lake Nyassa, from Chinde on the East Coast.

Elephant and Buffalo.

In these provinces are still to be obtained elephants; two bulls is the limit allowed to each licensee per annum. The opinions of hunters as to the danger of attacking the African elephant, which is both larger and fiercer than its Indian relative, are not unanimous; some consider it the most dangerous of all the wild game of Africa, others hold it in less esteem than the lion, the buffalo, or the leopard. Such differences of opinion are probably to be explained by the varying surroundings in which the sport is pursued; in thick bush, elephant shooting is quite dangerous enough to satisfy the most exacting. The four animals named, with the rhinoceros and, to a lesser extent, the hippopotamus and the crocodile, are those whose chase is most hazardous, and they are all to be found in the two northern provinces of Rhodesia. There are few animals whose pursuit calls for greater skill and courage than does that of the African buffalo, cunning, ferocity, speed, and strength are combined in this beast with a nearer approach to human methods of reasoning than perhaps is displayed by any other wild animal; and the corresponding danger and difficulty of killing him add still greater value to the magnificent head and horns which he carries. Twenty years ago the buffalo abounded in many regions from Masailand to the Limpopo; but unfortunately the ravages of the rinderpest fell more severely upon the buffalo than upon other wild species, and nowadays, though the distribution remains nearly as wide as ever, the herds are few in number and extremely difficult to approach. Lions are steadily being killed out, as they are not protected by game laws; but though their extermination outside of the game reserves is only a question of time, they are so well able to take care of themselves that it will be long before this result is brought about. Even more does this apply to the leopard; an animal whose wariness and strictly nocturnal habits have enabled it to survive even in districts quite well populated. The vindictive ferocity of this animal far surpasses that of the lion which is seldom the aggressor in any conflict with man; and most big-game shooters would rather face a wounded lion than a leopard infuriated for a similar reason.

Besides these forms of what may be called dangerous game, the chief prizes are giraffe, zebra, and ostrich, and the numerous and magnificent antelopes. The award of the palm amongst the latter is somewhat a matter of opinion; the eland is the bulkiest, but he carries horns inferior in grace and length to those of the lordly kudu, the courageous sable and roan antelopes and the less gainly gemsbock. All these exist in Rhodesia in greater or less abundance, and a fine bull of any of them is a magnificent trophy indeed. Of antelopes not quite so large, the waterbuck is one of the most beautiful; this fine antelope is distributed through Africa more widely than any other, and is still comparatively abundant even in parts that were seriously devastated before the establishment of protective game laws. Various species of hartebeeste, wildebeeste, impala, puku, lechwe, tsessede, bushbuck, sitatungna, and many smaller kinds of antelope exist in greater or less profusion.

British East Africa.

In British East Africa, and to a slightly less extent in Uganda and the Sudan game is equally abundant; indeed the former is now the most renowned big-game ground of the world. Here the noble game includes all the animals mentioned already as existing in Rhodesia and many of them are more numerous in these Equatorial protectorates than in the south. Uganda, for example, contains more elephants, and better tuskers, than any other part of the British dominions; East Africa is celebrated above all for its lions; the Sudan was proved a year or two ago to support the white rhinoceros, believed until then to be quite extinct. These three provinces are, in fact, the happy hunting-ground of the twentieth century big-game shooter. There the novice can speedily acquire the experience of the veteran, so frequent are his opportunities; for it is literally true that over enormous tracts of country it is scarcely possible to walk a mile without seeing a herd of wild game. To reach the game grounds by rail is perfectly simple, and the efficient organization of an expedition can be done, at a price, through local agents. Nowhere else in the world does the hunter rely so little on the native inhabitants for information, food supplies, and guides; nowhere, consequently, is he so dependent for success upon his own initiative, endurance and general craftmanship and certainly nowhere is he so richly rewarded with trophies. There are of course other parts of our African dominions where good sport can be obtained: Somaliland, for example has been and still is a fine game country, and some of our West Coast possessions contain big game. But pride of place goes to East Africa, not only among the hunting grounds of the British Empire, but of the whole world.—Times.

Fishing.

GADIDAE.

To this family of the "Pisces" is the credit due of giving the ardent angler an opportunity of following his favourite sport during the winter months, when the bass and mackerel have deserted us for more congenial climes. Included in this class are the Cod (Gadus barbatus), Haddock (Gadus æglefinus), Hake (Merlucius vulgaris), Ling (Lota molva), Saithe (Merlangus carbonarius) Pollack (Merlangus pollachius), Whiting (Gadus merlangus), and many others of less importance. They are mostly found in the seas of cold and temperate regions and are known by the position of the ventral fin under the throat which is long and pointed. The principal baits employed for the capture of these fish are, squid, herrings, pilchards, hermit or soldier crabs, and all crustacea. In this article I will confine myself more or less to the capture of cod and codling.

The head of the Cod is compressed, the eyes being placed on the sides, close to one another, and covered with a transparent membrane which enables the fish to swim on the surface of the water in Islandic regions, in the midst of mountains of ice, or under banks covered with snow without being dazzled by the reflection of radiant light, which is cast off by a brilliant sun. The jaws are of unequal length and amidst the rows of teeth, with which they abound, many are mobile and can be hidden in their sockets or raised at the will of the masterpiece. There are two anal fins and three dorsal. The pectoral fins, or those behind the gills, are narrow and terminate in a point, the caudal or tail fin is slightly forked, colour is of an ashy grey sported with yellow on the back, the belly is white sometimes inclined to reddish. Cod are voracious fish and are endowed with extra large stomachs into which they will take almost any bait that can pass through their capacious jaws. The haunts of this fish are chiefly confined to northern oceans lying between the fortieth and sixty-sixth degrees of latitude. In the vast range thus frequented, the parts most concerning us in this article are the East and North-east coasts of Great Britain, the Orkney and Shetland Isles including the Dogger-bank and the West coast of Scotland for it is in these parts where the cod finds shoals of herrings to glut himself with as they make their way southward.

The captain of a fishing smack for a few shillings is always willing to take you, but you must be prepared to rough it as one does not experience the luxuries of a yachting cruise, they do not carry spring beds or eider down quilts, and for a pillow a coil of rope is considered soft. The modern fishing craft is clipper-built with a large well for carrying the fish alive. Ten to twelve men and lads is the crew complement. Nets and lines are taken. In Scotland the lines are a hundred yards long, each line is called a "taes." Eight of these lines are joined together and from them are suspended about 800 hooks equidistant apart. On the arrival of the smack at the selected fishing ground, a cork buoy is shot overboard, having on it a flagstaff about five or six feet high. This buoy is kept in its position by a rope called the "powend" to which is attached a grapnel which anchors it. To this "powend" the "taes" is fixed and as the boat moves, either by oars, or by means of its sails if the breeze is sufficiently strong, the line is paid out. For one hour or perhaps more the fishermen amuse themselves with hand lines or even a game of cards. Then the boat is brought back to the buoy. The "powend" is hauled up with the "taes" attached to it. The fish are secured all along the line and the hooks rebaited as soon as the fish are taken off ready for another cast. On a good fishing tide it is not uncommon to find that more than 33 per cent. of the hooks have been appropriated by the hungry gadidæ, chiefly cod. When they can be obtained "capelan" are chiefly used as bait. This is a little fish about the size of the sardine and presumably comes from the Arctic regions, in shoals like the herring. They are irresistable to the cod, as far as it is possible to ascertain the cod grows more slowly than the generality of fish ten ounces being about the maximum increase of weight per annum. Near the British Isles they are seldom caught above twenty pounds in weight and three to four pounds is about the best eating weight. Many years ago I made a fishing excursion to Cromer. I had good sport with the basse, but when October came they disappeared and I thought I would try my hand at a day's trolling for any kind of gadidæ which might happen to come my way. Having hired a fishing smack for 24 hours I started at 6 A.M. with high hopes of a great catch, the fishermen telling me we should be quite likely to run into a shoal of fish proceeding down the North Sea at this time of the year. Unfortunately the tide was wrong and there was not a capful of wind to belly out the sails so trolling was out of the question. For six hours we hung our hand lines over the gunwhales, baited with herrings and prawns: evidently the fish were sleeping, for ne'er a bite did we get. The tide had been running out, but with the change to the incoming tide which, by the way, was a neap tide, and every fisherman knows this is the best for sport, a strong breeze sprang up from the son'-west. Taking in our hand lines I got out my two-jointed 9-foot grilse rod, and to a hundred yard salmon line, attached a gimp trace with a flexible phantom. I had painted the bait to resemble a smelt, which I consider one of the most deadly attractions for sea fish. My first capture was a hake sometimes known as the sea-pike, weighing about four and a half pounds and it was fortunate that I had employed a gimp trace for the teeth of this particular fish are very sharp and large and will sever almost any ordinary trace. As the tide rose the fish came well on the feed and before very many minutes I had landed three or four more hake varying from three to five pounds. A short time afterwards I got a mighty tug that nearly wrenched the rod out of my hands and I knew I had hooked something out of the common. "For heaven's sake" I yelled, "Down mainsail and bring her head up to the wind." Meanwhile I was letting my fish have a little more line, for I was frightened that I might be snapped at any moment. First to port and then to starboard he dashed, shaking the bait as a terrier shakes a rat. I had no idea what this fish could be that I had hooked. Slowly reeling him up closer and closer, at last I raised his head out of the water, and to my astonishment found I had secured a large ling, one of those long and voracious fish, so often caught in the North Sea running to nearly five feet in length. This one was not far short of that length and weighed 17½ lbs.

The haddock is a fish that is plentiful on the East coasts of England and Scotland; he seldom exceeds three to four pounds in weight and gives very little sport when hooked For bait, slips of herrings or bloater are about the best that can be used. Of the pollack, it may be truly said that he is a first rate sport-giver but unfortunately he has little heart and after a few violent rushes up to the surface and occasionally jumping a foot or more out, in his endeavours to rid himself of the hook and then plunging down to the bottom again, he throws up the sponge and allows himself to be lifted out of the water without even a dying kick of his broad tail. From daybreak till sunset he generally feeds near the bottom, but at dusk he will take up a position behind a pile or any obstruction of a pier that will give him good cover. As the tide sweeps by bringing all kinds of small baits with it, these are brought into the vortex caused by the pile and the pollack dashes out and secures his victim before he is aware of the presence of an enemy. Pollack vary in size from two or three ounces to thirteen or fifteen pounds. The large ones are generally caught among rocks in deep water, and smaller ones, of one to four pounds in harbours and near piers. On the coast of Dorsetshire are two adjacent fishing villages named respectively Osmington and Lulworth. The former is principally notable for the abundance of shell fish, such as lobsters and crabs and the latter for the size of the fish caught in the Cove. Midway between these two villages about half a mile seaward is a submerged wreck. The fishermen know the exact place well, and for a day's sport with pollack I know of no better spot. They run to large size, certainly up to ten pounds, and when hooked immediately dash for shelter amid the embedded timber. If they do attain their object your cast will be assuredly snapped by the rough edges of the time-worn woodwork or corroded iron bolts. I have known a bolt with part of a beam attached hauled up by a fisherman, weighing not less than thirty pounds from which it will be seen that it is always advisable to use only the very best tackle. Moreover this is the hiding place of some very large conger and they have been captured here of not less than sixty pounds but that is a story for another time. The old pier at Weymouth is bounded on the one side by the harbour and on the other by the sandy bay. On the west side of the harbour is the Nothe breakwater. Both these structures are built on Portland quarry stone and all around the pollack abound, both small and large. Make arrangements to commence fishing about 5 P.M. on a rising tide. The months of August, September and October are the best in my humble opinion. For choice, try the mackerel skin bait on the top of the water or sunken a foot for an enticement to the pollack to come up from their rocky retreats. Within a few minutes you will observe if the fish are on the feed. From behind a pile you will see an olive brown object shoot out like a flash of lightning and then the silvery white of the belly as he turns and disappears into his hiding place again to await a fresh victim. I do not believe there is a pile of this pier that is not the home of a pollack at the proper season and extraordinary as it may seem, it is a fact, that no sooner is one taken from his home for good and all that another one will be in his place the following evening. As a rule when it becomes dark the pollack will not rise to the skin bait so the white moth must be resorted to and this sometimes proves an excellent lure especially when the moon is bright. Moths of all descriptions are sold by manufacturers of fishing tackle and I have given a good many a fair trial without much success. If my readers will only take the trouble to construct the imitation moth I am about to describe. I feel sure they will meet with the success they deserve. Cut a piece of cork two-thirds to three-quarters of an inch in length and one-sixth of an inch in diameter, wrap this round tightly and evenly with white lustrine (obtainable at any drapers) to represent the body of the moth: with half inch pins fix to bright scarlet beads to represent the eyes, passing the pins down the centre of the cork and taking care that the points do not protrude. Then fasten two small white ducks' feathers, one on either side of the body to represent the wings. The point of the hook should be passed at the back of the head through the neck and brought upwards in front of the mouth. Allow this bait to drop quite naturally with extended wings a little in front of the point of the rod and manœuvre it so that it will be drawn into the vortex of the water near the piles of the pier. The moment you see your white moth disappear under the surface of the water, strike with a slight upward motion of the wrist. If you strike too hard, you will in all probability pull the hook out of his mouth, which is very soft and you will find a piece of flesh adhering to the hook. If you do not succeed at one pile, move to another and nil desperandum. Between five and eight P.M. with this bait I have many times killed a score of fine pollack. If by any chance, a large basse is lurking about anywhere in the neighbourhood of your moth, he will not fail to make a bold bid to secure it and so in conclusion I would say always be ready for a tour de force.

VETERINARY QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shall be obliged if you will let me know, through the medium of your esteemed journal, the best cure for "Barsatee" in horses.

S. S. L.

KISSANGANJ, 21st August 1909.

·410 CHOKED SHOT GUNS—ADDITIONAL NOTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Since submitting my notes on ·410 and ·360 shot guns, one of the ·410 barrels has been slightly altered, by easing the slope into the choke, and very careful burnishing with a lead and emery lap. This has resulted in raising the shooting of the gun to the full choke standard, as evidenced by the following series of five shots.

Load—9½ grains of Schultze, and 48 pellets of No. 4 chilled shot.

Range—10 yards.

1. 66 % of pellets in charge in the 5½ inches circle.
2. 77 % " " " "
3. 66 % " " " "
4. 82 % " " " "
5. 66 % " " " "

$\frac{357}{5}$ or 71 % on an average, of the total number of pellets in the charge, placed in a 5½ inch circle at ten yards range. This is equivalent to a full choke standard.

I may add that the lead lap is a splendid way of making the bore absolutely true. A steel rod is inserted in the barrel from the breech end. And being held exactly in the centre of the bore, lead is poured into the barrel round it. Thus one has a rod with a lead plug on it just fitting the bore. The barrel is then placed in the lathe, and the lead plug being well smeared with oil and emery powder, the barrel is revolved at high speed, and the plug passed up and down inside it. In this way one gets a finely burnished interior, and absolute truth of bore. The lead lap if made of good length, with its top end fitting the choke, ensures the constricted portion of the barrel being exactly concentric with the main cylindrical part. Perhaps the choke of the ·410 may have been infinitesimally out of truth with the rest of the bore, or perhaps not absolutely cylindrical: the careful use of the lead lap would correct this, and very likely explains the improvement in the pattern.

NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM (PATENT.)

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.

Messrs. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

BRIGHTON.

THE concluding day at Brighton was favoured with the first genuine summer's day, straw hats and flannel suits being in universal demand. It is so long since the sun has shone from a cloudless blue sky from early morning until evening that another monster attendance was ensured. All the rings and enclosures were packed, and the fixture must have been a big success financially. Results:—

The Sussex fortnight, which closed in such halcyon weather on Saturday made its end a subject of regret, and under such conditions another week on the downs would have been looked forward to with delight. A glorious August day put everybody on good terms, London sent a strong contigent to meet the south coast division, and though the horses beat the chalky dust in clouds the going was not on the hard side. Fields again ruled well, and capital sport was enjoyed by a large and representative company. Results:—

NOTTINGHAM.

The wave of warm weather that set in on the South Coast flooded the Midlands, for it was very hot at Nottingham on Monday, while visitors missed the delightful breezes experienced at Lewes. It was a lovely day, notwithstanding, with scarcely a cloud in the sky, and hardly a capful of wind to raise a ripple on the stream of the Trent. The grass had been mowed to a nice length, and almost mathematically bush harrowed with lines of light and dark green ribbons, as the blades lay towards or from the sun, with pretty effect, while the going was excellent. Results:—

Thanks to a delightful breeze, the heat was not so stiflingly oppressive as on Monday, and a perfect day brought out the countryside in strength, but with most of the busy bees on more serious lines at mill or factory, the further enclosure was but sparsely filled. The members' stand was well patronised, while Tattersall's showed an increased attendance. On the both days the going has been excellent, and the executive deserve a word of praise for the capital state to which they have brought it. Results:—

KEMPTON PARK.

Members of society who helped to keep up the semblance of an attendance on the lawn at Kempton yesterday must have regretted not going a-yachting or a-shooting, as the open sea or the moors must have been preferable to Kempton Park, on which the sun beat so fiercely that even under cover the heat was almost overpowering, and hardly a suspicion of a breeze came to the rescue in the open all the afternoon. The attendance, as usual at this meeting, was chiefly confined to the business side of the sporting community, who would gladly have exchanged the sunny plateau of the stands for the umbrageous shelter of the wood or forest trees; but even here a Turkish bath-like temperature prevailed, and we whistled in vain for the South down breezes. The going was in grand order, and for the time of year fields panned out well. Results:—

CRICKET.

THE FINAL TEST MATCH.

THERE was not over much interest taken in this match at the Oval, particularly as on the last day there was little or no prospect of a definite finish. Luckily, however, from the spectators' point of view, Mr. Warren Bardsley elected to create new cricket history by scoring two centuries in a Test match, a feat never performed before.

As this match ended in a draw Australia secured the rubber, having won two matches at Lord's and Leeds, to England's one, at Birmingham, the other two at Manchester and the Oval being left drawn.

This result has come as a great surprise to everyone who saw the poor form displayed by the visitors at Birmingham. However, a victory at Lord's encouraged the team and improved them out of recognition, with the result that under Mr. Noble's able captaincy they have won the rubber, and won it deservedly. Score:—

LANG

(B.) FASTENER RAISED FOR REMOVING LOCK.

"FIELD," June 12, 1909:

". . . . a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumbnail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs. Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked. . . . . Congratulation may be permitted concerning the lively balance and neat finish of the gun submitted."

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

ATHLETICS.

CHAMPIONS IN SCOTLAND.—Several of this season's athletic champions competed at the sports of the Glasgow Rangers Football Club, at Ibrox Park, Glasgow, on Saturday, the 31st ultimo and the most noteworthy performance was accomplished by R. E. Walker, the South African sprinter.

Walker won the 100 yards Invitation Handicap from scratch in 9¾sec.—equalling British record—but the wind was blowing in his favour. R. C. Duncan (West of Scotland H.), 3 yards start, was second, a foot behind.

In the 120 Yards Hurdles Handicap V. Duncker (South Africa), the 1908 champion, was the winner from owe 22 yards, in 18⅘sec. T. J. Ahearne (Irish A.A.), the long-jumping champion, owes 17 yards, was second, beaten by 2 yards. A. H. Healey (Blackheath Harriers) was the last man home. N. J. Cartmell (Pennsylvania), the 220 yards champion, was at scratch in a handicap at that distance, but was beaten in his heat. J. Nicolson, of the Bellahouston H., won the final, with 23 yards start, in 23 sec.

A 500 Yards Invitation Handicap was easily gained by the half-mile ex-champion, A. Astley, 5 yards start, in the excellent time of 59½sec. Lieut. A. Patterson, the quarter-mile champion, was at scratch, and finished second, but made very little impression on the winner.

E. Owen, of the Broughton Harriers (the one mile amateur champion), ran splendidly in the Mile Handicap, which he won from scratch in the fast time of 4min. 20½sec. A. McPhee (Clydesdale H.), 45 yards start, was second, and J. McGough (Bellahouston), 15, third. A. J. Robertson (Birchfield H.), scratch, ran grandly against the winner for more than three-quarters of a mile, but retired about 80 yards from home.

Scottish records were beaten by the English champion, E. J. Webb, of the Herne-hill Harriers, in the Two Miles Walk. He completed the first mile, from scratch, in 6min. 44sec. and two miles in 13min. 57sec., but failed to get placed. B. West (Clydesdale H.), 420 yards start, beat A. E. M. Rowland (New Zealand), 80 yards start, by 10 yards for winning honours in 13 min. 35⅖sec.

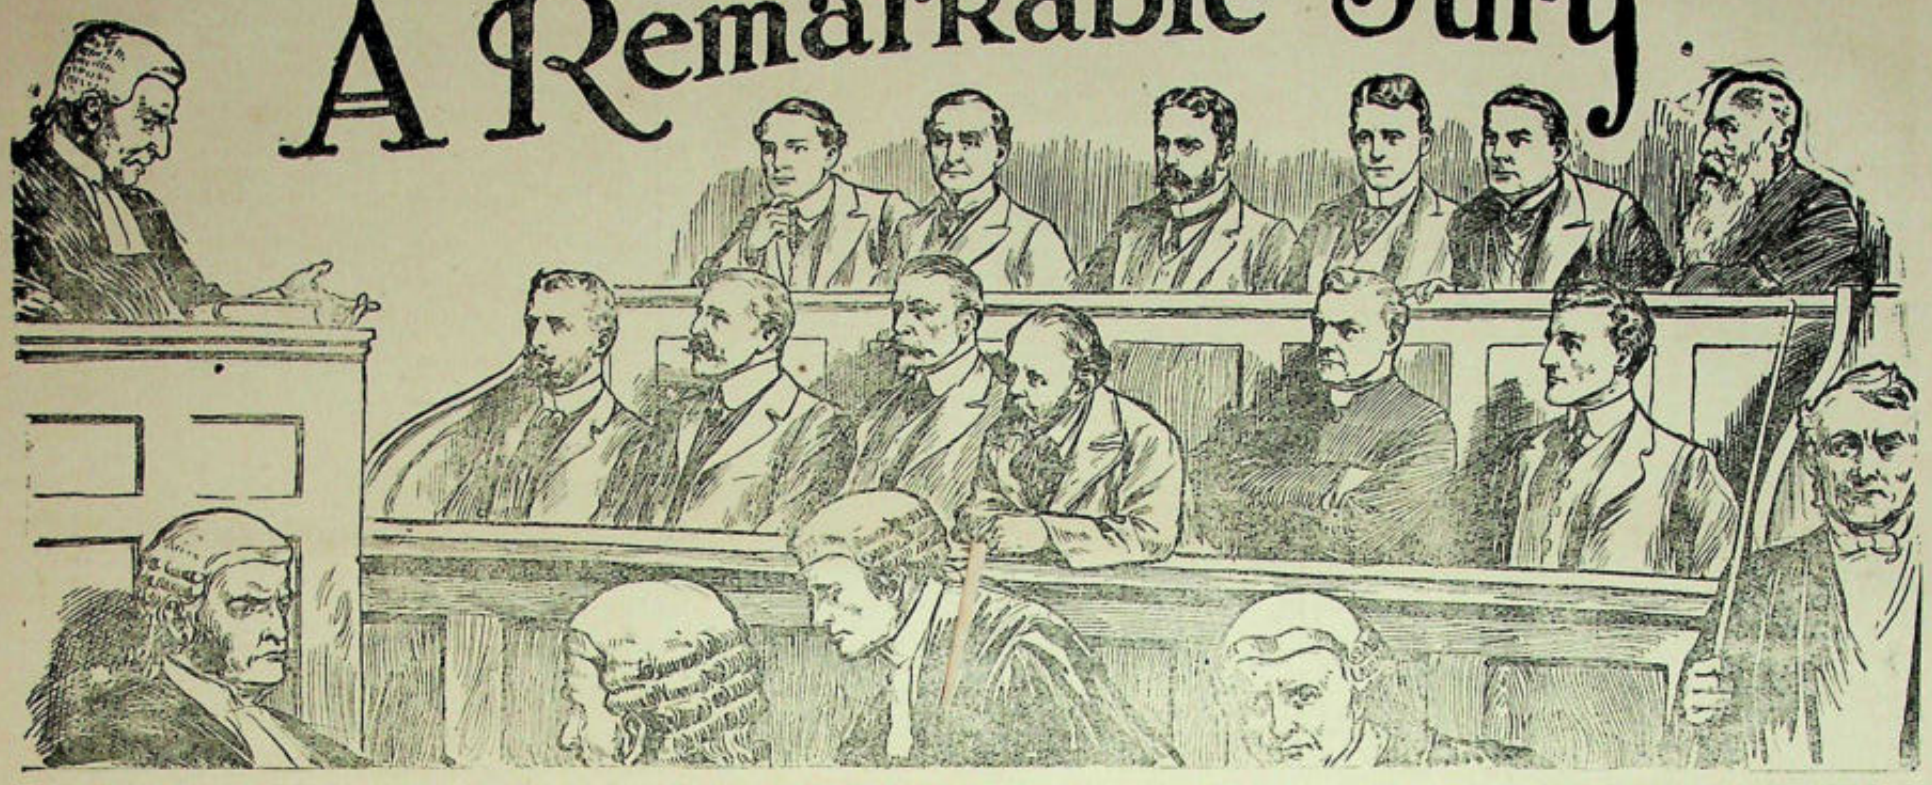
CYCLING.

TANDEM RECORD.—A splendid performance one of the best accomplished this season, has been put up by H. Bird and G. Nutt, both of the Southern C.C., who by riding from London to Dover and back in 7hr. 29min 38sec beat the unpaced tandem record for that distance by 37min. 17sec. The previous best was 8hr. 5min. 55sec. made by Cooper and Ivey, of the Spencer C.C., a fortnight since.

There was a heavy mist when the riders were sent on their way by Mr. W. L. Woolveridge, of the Southern Roads Record Association, the starting point being at Rainham. Half of the journey was covered in 3hr. 30min. 45sec., and Dover was reached in 5hr. 30min. Twenty-one miles was ridden in the last sixty-one minutes, and considering the switchback nature of the course, which measures 142 miles, the ride was a marvellous one. The riders were followed and checked by members of the University, New Brompton, Kentish, Wheelers, Imperial Wheelers, and Southern Cycling clubs.

Hunting.

THE POONA HUNT.



ON the last two days' hunting with the Poona and Kirkee Hounds there have been two kills and hounds have been doing excellent work. There has been a lull in the weather after the heavy rains of July and the Meets are always attended by a large field.

The sixth mile stone on the Ahmednagar Road was the venue on Thursday, the 19th, and we were not long in finding in this new bit of country and the jack went away over a none too regular line taking in a stony hill on the way. After a circular run of about two miles he was run into. Moving on to the next mile stone, one of the stiff-necked order was put up, hounds very close on his tracks. Keeping away from the open, he made for the river and ran along its banks for some time till branching off right-handed in Yerrowda direction. Within a short call of the Jail wall he was pulled down after a run of over half a mile—an interesting run medium enough of pace to allow of the field keeping well up.

The Bye-day Meet was again well attended, being at Dapuri Toll. The sugarcane plantation being blank did not delay matters very long as a find was effected in the adjoining field. Making for Bopkhel, hounds were very hot on his tracks and within a very short time had killed in a cactus hedge. A second was hunted out to the north and he did not last much longer as after a bit over a mile's run he went the way of the first one. Short runs after a chinkara and another jack without result ended another good morning's sport.

DICK BRAGG.

A Remarkable Jury.

WHAT a sensation would be created throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire could a jury be empanelled of such eminent men as the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Norwich; Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, artist and litterateur; Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., statesman and author; Sir William Bull, M.P., famous in the business world and well-known as a solicitor; Sir John Hare, one of the greatest actors living; the Venerable William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London; Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., M.P., one of the best known men at the bar; Mr. Walter Crane, as noted as a lecturer as he is an artist; Mr. Hall Caine, the famous novelist; Mr. Max Pemberton, one of the most popular writers of the day; Mr. C. B. Fry, whose name is known wherever athletics are practised; and Mr. Cyril Maude, one of the finest comedians on the London stage.

The newspapers would report the case they tried, word for word, while the demeanour of the jury would be scrutinised by the most competent descriptive writers, eager to catch every passing phase of expression on their faces as a hint to the verdict they might give.

In this picture, the gentlemen who constitute the jury are the distinguished ones whose names have been mentioned above. They have not only tried the case submitted to them, but they have actually given their verdict on evidence brought before them—by their own senses. In this way, there is no possibility of a miscarriage of justice, as there sometimes is when the evidence is laid before the jury by skilful advocates, trained to make the best of their cause. This jury's verdict, though unanimous, is expressed by each individual, so that the public may know exactly what he thinks.

The case which, without unduly pushing the metaphor, they tried was that of Sanatogen. The evidence on which their verdict was given was the effect of Sanatogen in revitalising the blood, reinforcing the strength after strain, restoring waning vitality, re-creating nervous energy, replenishing the jaded system, and generally stimulating and building up the natural forces after disease until they were once more as vigorous as they ever were, and the health was made as perfect as that of which the individual was capable.

The verdict of the jury was unanimously in favour of the power of Sanatogen—universally recognised as the greatest tonic-food science has given the world—to produce these results and even more than these. Here are the individual statements of the gentlemen empanelled in the Remarkable Jury:

THE VERDICT.

MR. HALL CAINE, the author and dramatist:
"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

MR. MARSHALL HALL, K.C.:
"I think it only right to say that I have tried Sanatogen, and I believe it to be a most excellent food."

Marshall Hall

MR. MAX PEMBERTON, the distinguished editor and author:
"I beg to say that I have been taking your Sanatogen since the beginning of the year, and would not be without under any circumstances whatever."

Max Pemberton

THE VEN. ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR:
"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

SIR JOHN HARE, the popular actor:
"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

MR. WALTER CRANE, the eminent authority on decorative art:
"In recovering from a rather sharp attack of influenza, I certainly found Sanatogen, prepared with milk, beneficial in its effects."

Walter Crane

MR. C. B. FRY, the famous cricketer:
"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, especially valuable in nervous exhaustion, to which men who undergo severe training are liable."

C. B. Fry

SIR WILLIAM BULL, M.P.:
"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

William Bull

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the author and traveller:
"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

MR. CYRIL MAUDE, the eminent comedian:
"I have found Sanatogen quite wonderful. I often take it now during the performance, when I feel rather done up."

Cyril Maude

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH says:
"Mrs. Sheepshanks is taking Sanatogen regularly, and deriving great benefit from it."

LORD RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER:
"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath or Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

Sanatogen produces the remarkable results to which these distinguished men attest by being at once a food and a tonic, each of which helps and reinforces the other. No secret has ever been made of its composition, which, on the contrary, has always been openly stated. It is made of milk proteid, the substance on which the food value of milk depends, and a special form of phosphorus, one of the most important constituents of the nervous system. Instead of being merely mixed together, however, these two substances are combined chemically. This alters their nature and makes the compound more easily assimilated by the body, thereby giving the necessary nourishment to nerve and muscle and improving the quality of the blood. For these reasons Sanatogen has become the sheet-anchor of the physician in India in treating Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever, and the after-effects of these and other devitalising complaints.

Besides these, some 10,000 physicians have voluntarily testified in writing to the excellent results they have obtained from the use of Sanatogen in the treatment of diseases depending on poor digestion and loss of nerve force, with their attendant train of depressing symptoms like sleeplessness, loss of memory, inability to stand fatigue or to sustain the ordinary duties of life.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which, by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

SANATOGEN

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 19th August.—Umbrella Tree, 8 A.M. There was some dew on the grass, but this soon dried up, though the morning was cloudy. Hounds opened on a line in the bog below the road, and at first it looked as if they were making for the ghat, but the jack had turned up to the left towards Hanging Shola—the line was a stale one and as scent was not particularly good the Master had to come to the assistance of the pack and though they just owned to the line in the covert it was evident the jack had moved on some time before. Jogging over to Brooklands hounds found at once and throwing their tongues merrily drove him out over the top to Bingham through it to the right over the bog on to the old Pykara Road, he ran up the road then turned to the left and entered Lascelle's with hounds close at his brush. Unfortunately there was a fresh jack afoot in this covert and the pack divided, the main body running their jack over Farrier's Crossing to Hanging Shola lost their jack below the Connemara Road. Three couples of hounds ran their jack to Aramby Plantation and it took some time to get them out of this enormous covert. The Master then trotted over to Mill's and New Covert but they were not holding. Dairy Maid, Denmark and Ursula were also tried without success. Coming back by Baikie hounds touched a line and carried it over into Jackal, presently a brace of jack went away from the covert. One of them led hounds across Long Swamp to Dreadnaught and running down the ravine turned up through Cicilia then to the left through the head of Ursula and swept round the hill into Porcupine. Hounds hunted round about the covert and then on by Rugby to the bottom of Leeds, but must have lost their jack in Porcupine and got on to the line of another which had moved off some time before.

Saturday, 21st August.—Briar Shola 12 noon. A couple of jacks had been viewed going into Gibbs and had moved away towards the Home Downs, some little while before the Master and the field arrived. So the Master drew down in the direction of Lawley's Course, hounds touched the line of one of these jacks and carried it up by Schmidt's Clumps, here the scent improved and they started running in earnest, crossing the Sandy Nullah stream they ran up Rawlin's Nullah and holding Bluegums on their right entered Rallywood. They then swung over the road into Monkey and with the jack close in front of them hunted him over Owl Crossing into Rugby Shola and rose Denmark Hill and ran on into Porcupine in which they dwelt for a space before going away at the bottom and heading for Dharma Tope and on towards Dangar Shola and ran their jack to ground in a very large earth in a ravine. Kitty was put in but failed to move him. A long draw followed up the Manjanad Valley across to Bluegums from thence to Stokes' Shola. Hounds spoke to a line in Mund Shola and after hunting round in the vicinity of Upper Briar and round about finally lost him on the Backstaircase Road.

Monday, 23rd August.—Rees' Corner, 8 A.M. The mist was still very thick as we moved off from the Meet, a jack having been viewed on Municipal Hill. Hounds spoke to his line in the Oat field and carried it down to the Municipal Crossing and up the hill above New Covert, but scent was poor and in Long Swamp they could do no more. Jackal was then tried but he was not there. Moving on to Rallywood hounds picked up a line near the lower end of the covert and carried it at first up the hill towards Bluegums, but swung back to the right and fairly raced down the whole length of Newmarket to Triple Crossing and on to the Pykara Road, then turning up over the Golf Course ran to the left of Lascelle's through Bingham and Brooklands to the Block Bridge on the Seegar Road. Turning to the right again they pointed for the Ghats, but still keeping right-handed below the Connemara Road they swung over the hill to Brookhampton and Aramby. They hunted through the lower edge of this covert and drove their jack out at the junction of the de Winton and Ampthill Road near Monte Rosa, the jack was viewed here running down the de Winton Road and crossing over into Mossy Bank. Unfortunately hounds got on to a fresh jack near the Ampthill Road and by the time they were got on to the line of the original jack scent had entirely died out, and though hounds owned to it once or twice they could do nothing more. The next jack was found in Denmark, he led hounds over by Dudley and Junglesheep into Baikie then though the corner of Porcupine back to Denmark; on coming out of this he crossed the open and pointed for Dairy Maid but before reaching it turned sharp back and went to ground in Denmark; Kitty was unable to dislodge him and hounds returned to kennels.

Tuesday, 24th August.—The Dangar Ride Sign Post, Matty, at 12 noon. The rain was coming down in a steady downpour all the morning, but cleared up for a short time when we got to the Meet. A poor day for sport and it was not till quite late in the afternoon that a jack was found which gave us a few minutes run before getting to ground below Temple Shola.

Thursday, 26th August.—Municipal Crossing, 8 A.M. A nice fine morning which was a pleasant change after the wet ones we have been having hitherto. A large number of followers turned up at the Meet. Hounds feathered on a line outside Mill's Covert and carried it over the stream by Elmhirst Corner, crossed to the Pykara Road on to the Golf Links. The jack was headed here so turned back over the stream to New Covert, rising the hill above he dipped down to Long Swamp where another jack was on the move and went off to Jackal. The original jack led hounds to the left over the top of Druid through Dreadnaught and Dairy Maid then on into Woodstalk, with the leading hounds close at him he just managed to take shelter in an earth below Fernhill. Leaving him there hounds went back to Jackal were jack No. 2 had waited and they were soon hunting him round the Covert, and pushed him out on to the Krurmund Road, he took a line through Monkey and Leeds to Swamgar Shola, keeping to the left below Hecuba Cliff he turned up to the right over the hill through Andy into Tiger Shola in which he dodged about for some time. He eventually went away from the top holding Andy on his left and raced down the hill straight to the Toda Mund at the corner of Governor's Shola and ran down the ravine at the bottom of Portock, then turned right-handed up through Bluegums over the hill and down the other side into the bottom of Rallywood and crossed over into Jackal. Hounds hunted him about for some time in this covert before he was viewed away on the eastern side running down towards Pearl Crossing. He had got a good lead of hounds when he was seen going down the bog, and scent which was never being good gave out entirely in the bog and hounds were unable to recover the line again.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL ENGINEERS vs. PINCHERS.—These teams met on the 23rd ultimo. It was generally expected that the Pinchers would win, but the Engineers gave a great display and beat them to the tune of 5 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Engineers were first away and Binney, receiving from Bremner, opened the scoring. Up and down play. Tomkinson was prominent for two good runs, but his final efforts were unsuccessful.

Second Chukker.—The Engineers rushed away and Binney scored. The Pinchers attacked for the rest of the period, making desperate yet futile efforts to score.

Third Chukker.—Bremner ran down and scored, and on resuming Binney added a second. The Pinchers then got possession and Hodgson scored a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play, till just before the close Bremner got on and scored.

Fifth Chukker.—Bremner ran the ball down and Binney put it through, fast up and down play ending the game. Final score: Royal Engineers, 6 goals; Pinchers 1 goal. Teams:—

Umpires:—Major Martin and Captain Lucas.

33RD LIGHT CAVALRY vs. 34TH POONA HORSE.—This game was marred by a serious accident which ended in the death of a good sportsman and a promising officer; Mr. Studdy, fell and was rolled on by his pony in the fourth chukker. Picked up unconscious he was conveyed to hospital where he was discovered to be very seriously injured. He never recovered consciousness and expired the next morning. The game had been pointless till the accident, when after a few minutes' stop it was decided to continue with three aside, Mr. Collins standing down from the 33rd Light Cavalry team. The fifth period was also unproductive, but in the extra play the 33rd scored the winning point.

First Chukker.—The 33rd were first to attack and had two unsuccessful shots at goal. Both goals were then visited in turn, but all attempts to score were frustrated.

Second Chukker.—Alderson rushed down, but was stopped by Edwardes and play transferred to the Poona Horse territory, where Paterson cleared. No score.

Third Chukker.—The 33rd pressed throughout this period but could not score.

Fourth Chukker.—Early in this period Mr. Studdy's pony came down and rolled on his rider, who had to be carried off the field in an unconscious state. After a slight stoppage play was resumed three aside, but again ended blank.

Fifth Chukker.—The 33rd pressed, but Alderson kept out all invaders. Paterson put in a good run, but the ball was brought back to the Poona Horse territory but no score resulted.

Extra Chukker.—The game was continued with widened goals, and after the Poona Horse had rushed down and missed, Edwardes put in a fine run and scored the only goal of the match, giving victory to the 33rd Cavalry. Teams:—

THE FINAL.

33RD CAVALRY vs. ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Played on the 26th ultimo before a small attendance. The game was a level one throughout and time was called with the scores level. In the extra period the Cavalry scored the winning goal.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed till near the close of the chukker when Bremner got away and hit a goal for the Engineers.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Third Chukker.—Fast and hard play all over the field. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—This was another pointless period. The Cavalry tried hard to get on terms but could not break the Engineers' defence.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play till the Cavalry got away and Beatty equalised.

Extra Chukker.—Play was resumed with widened goals. The Cavalry attacked and Beatty scored the winning goal. Final score: 33rd, 2 goals; Royal Engineers, 1 goal. Teams:—

MADRAS BOAT CLUB.

Saturday, 28th August 1909.

HOT WEATHER REGATTA.

PRELIMINARY heats having been rowed off during the week only the finals were contested to-day and a programme of six events was put through. There was a small gallery but the racing was keen and exciting throughout. Poona won the representative fours for the eighth time after a good race and were also victorious in the open pairs. The open sculls was won by Madras Madeley beating Graham. Tub fours, Double Tub sculls and Junior Sculls made up the rest of the programme. Mr. F. M. Robinson acted as Judge and Mr. M. G. Conchman as Umpire. The prizes were given away by Mrs. Couchman and the Boat Club entertained their visitors to dinner at the Adyar Club in the evening. Details:—

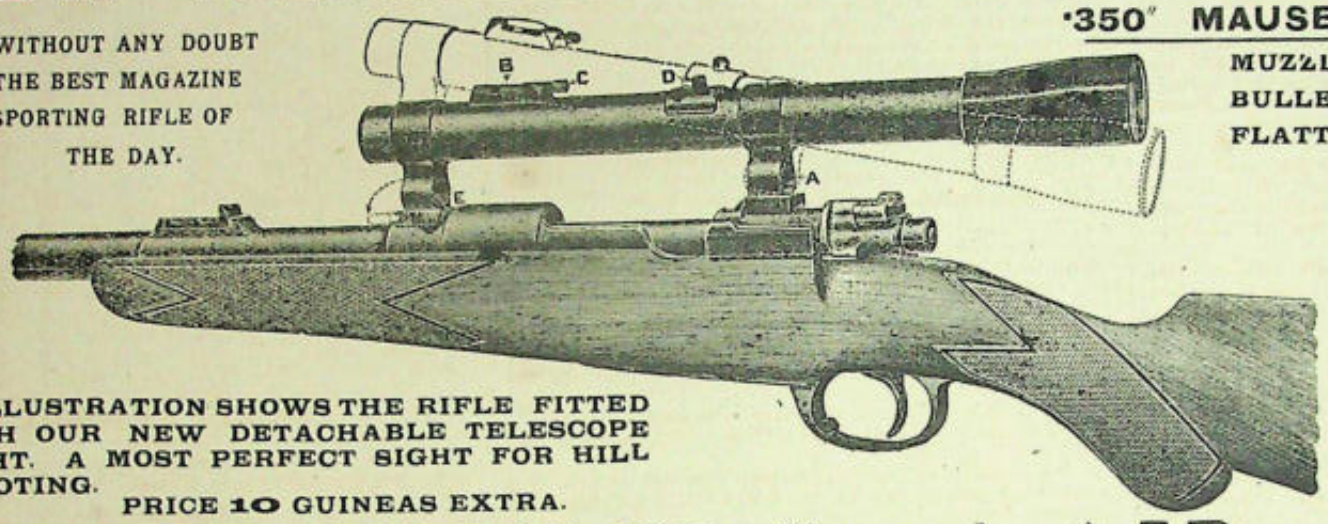
WINCHESTER CARTRIDGES SHOOT WHERE YOU HOLD

WINCHESTER



.22 Short and .22 Long Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges.

If you want to use .22 Caliber Cartridges that shoot when you want them to and where you point your gun, and strike a good, penetrating blow, buy the time-tried Winchester make, having the trade-mark "H" stamped on the head. They cost but a few pence more a box than the cheap, unreliable kind, and they are shillings better. Winchester .22 Caliber Cartridges are loaded with Black and Smokeless Powder. Those loaded with Smokeless Powder have the celebrated Winchester Greaseless Bullets, which make them cleaner to handle than any other .22 Caliber Cartridges. Special powder, made according to carefully determined and tested formulas, is used in loading all Winchester Cartridges, and every bullet is swaged by special machinery, which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. This modern method of manufacture, coupled with a rigid system of tests, makes Winchester Cartridges better than any other brand on the market. A trial will convince you.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

UNITED SERVICES vs. EAST YORKS.—Played on Friday last, the Services winning by a goal and a try to nil. It was a very level game throughout and the military had bad luck in not scoring. The Services got over with a try in the first half which was converted and crossed the line again shortly before the close of the game.

RANGERS vs. CUSTOMS.—These teams met on the Customs' ground on Saturday, the Rangers obtaining their first victory this season. The game during the first half was fairly level and there was no scoring, but on crossing over the Rangers kept up a strong attack and Williams got over with two tries, neither of which was converted. Then the Customs pressed and before time was called Smith crossed the Rangers' line, Seth adding the major points. The Customs, who were without Cadell and Johnson, were thus beaten by a single point—2 tries (6 points) to a goal (5 points.) Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Vears, back ; L H. Smith, Maitland, Williamson and Featherstone, three-quarters ; L. A. Smith and H. Shave, halves ; Marsden, Debrew, Thomson, Seth, Curry, Carlton and Jackson, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, back ; Apear, Cody, Williams and Rosetti, three-quarters ; Fairley and Davis, halves ; Minet, Macdonald, Gilmour, White, Foreman, Nicoll, Bennett and G. Williams, forwards.

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—With most of their players on the way to Bombay for the Western tournament, Calcutta turned out a scratch side against Dalhousie on Saturday. The Dalhousie ground was the venue and the visitors rushed down immediately after the start. The Dals kept them out for some time : then Siddons got a good run but was collared : a scrum ensued and from this Miller crossed the line : the place failed. Meldrum got over with another try shortly after and Kerr registered the third just before time but the attempt to majorise failed on both occasions. The Dals played better after changing ends and were nearly through more than once. Play was eventually transferred to their territory where Akler got over and just before the close of the game Cowden obtained a try. Neither score was converted and Calcutta won by 5 tries (15 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA F. C.—Whiteley, back ; Akler, Siddons, Strachan and Meldrum, three-quarters ; Ward and Morrison, halves ; Birch, Studd, Miller, Kerr, Phillips, Elderton, Carrol and Cowden, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Griffin-Chave, back ; Allen, Sinclair, Greenwood and Eden, three-quarters ; Bates and Evans, halves ; Prevost, McLeod, Bevill, Lewis, Williams, Wilson, Brewer and Shirres, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Carl Reid (C. F. C.).

EAST YORKS vs. RANGERS.—Played on the 31st ultimo. The Rangers, as usual, turned out without a full team, only twelve men taking the field. Nevertheless they put up a good game and were only beaten by a try to nil. The exchanges were fairly level in the first half and there was no score, but on changing ends the military had the best of the play. They only got through once however, a miskick by Minet letting Brownlow through. The try was not improved upon.

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA "B" vs. CUSTOMS "B"—Played on the 25th ultimo Calcutta winning by 4 tries (12 points) to try (3 points). Meldrum 3 and Candler scored for Calcutta, Smith for the Customs.

CALCUTTA "B" vs. MEASURERS.—Played on the Caledonian ground on Friday. Calcutta winning by 5 tries (15 points) to a goal and a try (8 points).

ST. XAVIER'S vs. CUSTOMS "B"—Playing four short on Saturday the Customs were beaten by St. Xaviers by a goal and a try (8 points) to a try (3 points).

ST. XAVIERS vs. MEASURERS.—Played on Tuesday, the St. Xavier's boys winning by 2 goals, 1 drop goal and 7 tries (33 points) to nil.

UNITED SERVICES "B" vs. K. S. L. I.—An evenly contested game between these teams on Tuesday ended in a pointless draw.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ON Tuesday evening Rangers and United Services met on the Dalhousie ground which was in a very soft and muddy condition. In the first half the Services were all over their opponents and scored 19 points to nothing, but in the second half there was little to choose between the two teams, no further scores being recorded. Minet played best for Rangers who were unfortunate in having to play with only 12 men, while Cunninghame, Fraser and McMillan were all good for the Services at forward but the backs under such adverse conditions did not get a chance to show up to advantage.

THE East Yorks and Services played their return match on Friday on the Calcutta ground and this brought forth a hard and exciting, if not scientific, tussle, the score (1 goal and 1 try to nil) being an accurate index to the superiority of the United Services.

The "Tykes" were on their mettle and played with dash almost amounting to ferocity, their attacking being hearty in the extreme, so much so, that two of their men in endeavouring to tackle the same opponent placed each other hors de combat !

Bocquet at half for the Services, though never brilliant, worked the scrum well getting the ball away to his three-quarters sharply. Trenchard, McMillan and Cunninghame were the best of the Services' forwards but though the East Yorks' pack played well they got little support from their backs, who were exceedingly weak.

ON Saturday Rangers had their revenge on Customs, winning an "anybody's" game by the narrow margin of 6 points to 5. Neither side was at full strength but the Customs, without Johnstone and Rowe, were worse off in this respect than their neighbours.

WHAT promised to be an interesting struggle, namely, Dalhousie and Calcutta in their return engagement on Saturday, proved rather a "wash out" mainly owing to the wretched condition of the ground and it seems a pity that with the Calcutta field in superb condition the game could not have been played there. It was expected that Calcutta with half their regular men away in Bombay would be hard put to it to win but in spite of this handicap they were victorious by the substantial margin of 5 tries or 15 points to nothing and this no doubt would have been increased on a drier ground.

The play which was confined almost entirely to the forwards was dull in the extreme, the spectators on only a couple of occasions being treated to anything like a decent display of passing. The game abounded with unpleasant instances, most of the referee's decisions being taken in anything like a sporting spirit. Refereeing in a game of this sort is no sinecure and where, as in this match, there is a strong tendency towards rough play it is necessary for the referee to keep a firm grip of the game with continual use of the whistle.

Both packs played hard but by no means well, the packing being ragged and the heeling far from clean. Behind the scrum Evans was unquestionably the best of the Dalhousie backs, he had a rough journey on Saturday but always came up smiling and ready for more. If everyone played the game in the same spirit as this player the referee's task would be much lightened and we should have none of the unpleasantness which was so much in evidence on Saturday.

Ward who made his reappearance at half for Calcutta gave rather a disappointing display and though he did a lot of sound work he failed at times to get the ball away from the scrum. Of the three-quarters Siddons and Meldrum were both good whilst Ackler had some fine runs, he was, however, often at fault by standing too far away from his centre in attack and in defence marking his opposing wing three-quarter when he ought to have been marking the centre. He should also go for the corner flag relying on his speed to take him round the full back instead of slowing up and trying to dodge inwards.

Whitely at back with one exception played well but his kicking was very weak throughout.

THE sodden condition of the ground has spoiled most of the junior games this week some of them being decided in a perfect sea of mud. Notwithstanding there have been some very evenly contested games and it is pleasing to note an all round improvement in the standard of play.

ON Tuesday the Measurers and Police met on the Caledonia ground where, after a very even game, the Police won by 8 points to 6. The Police goal was one of the finest efforts in place kicking it has ever been my fortune to see, the try was secured practically on the touch line and the ball after being taken unnecessarily far out, was placed in the midst of a small lake from whence a lovely goal was landed. Truly the kicker must be possessed of feet of the proverbial size !

CALCUTTA had a fairly strong "B" team out against the Measurers on Friday night and the latter did well to cross their opponents' line on two occasions and although they lost by 15 points to 8 they were by no means disgraced.

ST. XAVIERS AND CUSTOMS "B" had a very close game on the Police ground on Friday the former winning by the narrow margin of 5 points to 3 St. Xaviers deserved their victory though it is only fair to add that Customs had to play with only 12 men, three of their players failing to put in an appearance.

THE Cup Tournament which, I understand, begins about the middle of next week should provide some good matches. The West Ridings, King's Own and the H L I. are all practically certain to be seen whilst there is a possibility of the Glosters, Worcesters, and a civilian team from Behar also being present. There is also a slight chance of Bombay sending over a team and with such a large entry as this we may safely rely on having some interesting encounters.

THE Bombay Tournament is now in full swing and promises to be a great success. On Saturday the Bombay side were beaten by the Leicesters who in turn were vanquished by the West Ridings after a very close game. Calcutta met Mhow on Tuesday and won by 18 points to 3. They seem to have had things very much their own way judging by the score and taking into account that the ground was muddy and the ball wet and greasy. Calcutta now meet the winners of Madras and Glosters in the semi-final, probably on Friday and in the event of their winning will have a very tough job on to beat the redoubtable West Ridings in the final on the day following.

WEST RIDINGS vs. POONA GYMKHANA.—This was one of the games down for decision on Saturday last, but the Poona Gymkhana scratched, giving last year's winners a walk-over.

LEICESTERS vs. BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Great things were expected of the Bombay Gymkhana in their meeting with the Madras cup holders, but expectations were not realised, for the Gymkhana forwards were quite outclassed and their backs never got a chance. The Leicesters pressed from the start, Liddell being prominent for good play. The Bombay backs kept the military team out till a rush saw them over but they were brought back and a scrum on the line ensued. The ball was again taken over but another scrum was ordered. The Gymkhana backs were tackling splendidly and Ward and Baker stopped many a rush. At length a penalty against the Gym enabled Athbury to kick a goal. On crossing over the play was more open. The Gymkhana got away but were twice held up and play transferred to their territory, where Baker had to kick out. Ward was next conspicuous for a good run, Corbett losing a chance by failing to take pass. Howitt got in a good run for the military but was brought down and then Ward broke away. He was tackled by Hougham but got to his feet and just failed to score with a splendid drop kick. The Leicesters at length cleared their tries and returning to the attack Cooper got over with a try which was not improved upon. The Gymkhana played hard to get on terms, but all their attempts were frustrated and the Leicesters once more took the ball down for Brewin to score a try, Athbury adding the major points. Time was called shortly after with the score: Leicesters, 1 goal 1 try and a penalty goal (11 points) Bombay Gymkhana, nil. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Hougham, back; Cooper, Dooley, Captain Liddell, and Howitt, three-quarters; Gregory and Cooper, halves: Lieutenant Weir, Hadley, Norman, Brewin, Athbury, Martin, Webb, and Green, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—C. D. Baker, back; G. R. Corbett, C. M. Ward, H. F. Hearson and A. S. Hayne, three quarters; H. Blair and H. Primrose Wells, halves; A. S. Tresilian, G. R. Rowson, R. G. Wordsworth, J. H. Hardie, A. Geddis, F. S. Johnson, A. P. Caddell, and B S. Carter, forwards.

Referee:—Captain A. H. Moberley, R.G.A.

(By Telegraph.)

LEICESTERS vs. WEST RIDINGS.—Played on the 30th ultimo the West Ridings beating the Leicesters by a try to nil. The only point was obtained at the beginning of the game. The Leicesters were stronger forward but were beaten at half.

CALCUTTA vs. MHOW.—These teams met on Tuesday, a poor game resulting in a win for Calcutta by 18 points to 3. The ground was in a slippery condition or the Calcutta three-quarters might have scored oftener. Mhow were hemmed in at the start and Burnett got over with the first try which was not improved upon. Continuing to press Calcutta scored again, Kay crossing the line, the extra points being added. Just before the interval Mhow showed up and looked like getting through but Calcutta cleared with a long kick into touch. On resuming Calcutta kept up the pressure and Bocquet scored a try which was converted. Another rush by Mhow followed and this time they crossed the line with an unconverted try. The game returned to the Mhow 25 and the Calcutta forwards rushed over with another try which was majorised, the Central India team being thus defeated by three goals and a try to a try.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 23rd ultimo, the Telegraphs winning easily. They scored three goals shortly after the start through Taylor, Donohoe and Green, and Tipper notched a fourth before half time. They continued to have the upper hand on resuming, and Taylor, Green and Holman added to the score. Parel made one goal, Salcock putting through from a corner. Final score: Telegraphs 7 goals, Parel 1 goal Teams:—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Crutchley and Luce, backs; Woolen, A. Lewis and Redford, halves; Green, Tipper, Taylor, Donohoe, and Holman, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Fox, goal; Holtham and Edwards, backs; Major, Patterson and Pennock, halves; S. Alcock, Sherran, W. Alcock, Zinche, and La Touche, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. Y.M.C.A.—The Telegraphs avenged their defeat by the Y.M.C.A. in the first round by beating them by a goal to nil on the 24th ultimo. The Young Men were without Kelly. The opening exchanges were level and then the Telegraphs settled down to the attack Several shots were sent in but Hildreth disposed of them all and the ball was eventually transferred to the other end where the Young Men kept the Telegraph defence busy. A free kick for a foul against the defenders looked promising but Ward just missed scoring and the interval arrived with a clean sheet. On resuming the Telegraphs obtained two abortive corners. Both goals were then visited in turn and then Ryan put through. The Y.M.C.A. made great efforts for a spell but without success and they fell to pieces in the closing stages of the game when the Telegraphs had the best of the play. There was, however, no further score. Teams:—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Crutchley and Taylor, backs; Woolen, A. Lewis and Redford, halves; Green, Conquest, Ryan, Donohoe and Holman, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and C. Templeton, backs; Holtz, Ward and H. Templeton, halves; Brown, Dowling, Pack Upton and Whitcombe, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA vs. ROVERS.—These teams met last Saturday, the Commercials having the best of the game throughout. They scored twice in the first half through Evans and Woolley the last-named adding another goal after the interval. Many chances of scoring were missed or their victory might have been larger than 3 goals to nil. Teams:—

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Holmes, goal; Harwood and Lay, backs; Bellamy, Osborne and Elliot, halves; Fisher, Evans, Johnson, Woolley and Cook, forwards.

ROVERS.—Rose, goal; Castle and Osborne, backs; Poyntz, Fanell and Petty halves; Thomson, Lane, Asbett, Diamond and Black, forwards.

GULMARG HORSE SHOW.

20th and 21st August 1909.

THE show this year was a big success. Entries were good and the quality better than we have seen it at former shows here. The weather was perfect, the general arrangements could not have been improved upon, and altogether Captain A. C. Stewart, the Honorary Secretary, and his Committee are to be congratulated on the excellence of the show. The Gunners and the Cavalry dispensed hospitality on the two days. Appended is a list of the awards:—

CLASS I.—English and Colonial—14-2 and under: Major Crawley's Jack and Captain Reynolds' Dairy Maid.

CLASS II.—C.-B. Ponies—14-2 and under: Mr. Neilson's O'Garra, Mr. Bryant's Grey-leg, and Major Baldwin's Rhoda.

CLASS III.—Arab Ponies—14-2 and under: Mr. Neilson's Martinet, Major Crawley's Nijji, and Captain Reynolds' Rewah.

CLASS IV.—Polo Ponies—English and Colonial: Major Crawley's Gentleman, Mr. Neilson's Ivan, and Captain Reynolds' Dairy Maid.

CLASS V.—Polo Ponies—C.-B.: Did not fill.

CLASS VI.—Polo Ponies—Arab heavy weight to carry 13st. 7lb. and over. Mr. Neilson's Martinet Mr. Bryant's Curzon and Mr. Anderson's Enterprise.

CLASS VII.—Polo Ponies—Arab light weight, 13st. 7lb. and under: Major Crawley Nidji. In judging the polo ponies half marks were given for handiness.

CLASS VII.—Ladies' Hacks—Arabs: Major Crawley's Nijdi and Mrs. Johnson's Colonel.

CLASS IX.—Ladies' Hacks—Other than Arabs: Mr. Neilson's Ivan ridden by Mrs. Vores, Mr. Davidson's Vagrant ridden by Miss Hay, and Mrs. Sullivan's Baby ridden by owner.

CLASS X.—Ladies' Hacks—Owners up: Mrs. Sullivan's Baby, Mrs. Johnston's Colonel, and Miss. Robson's Starlight.

CLASS XI.—Children's Ponies: Miss Eileen Younghusband's Ginger.

CLASS XII.—Jumping—for ponies: Captain Reynolds' Dairy Maid, Mrs. Watson's Rohtas, and Miss Cameron's Electra.

CLASS XIII.—Jumping—for horses: Did not fill.

CLASS XIV.—Best Pony in the Show: Captain Reynolds' Dairy Maid.

CLASS XV.—Best Polo Pony in the Show: Mr. Neilson's Martinet.

The Story Teller.

THE HOT WEATHER MEM.—AN INDIAN SKETCH.

THE blistering sun beat down upon the compound and everything that was within it. The white roadway up to the thatched bungalow threw back the savage heat, until the seething air danced to and fro. The gate stood carelessly open, but the half starved cattle outside showed no desire to enter, for the soil within the compound wall was as burnt and devoid of all green stuff as the brown plain without.

On the ridge of the roof sat half a dozen depressed looking crows, their beaks half open as they gasped for air. Every now and then one or other of the little company would utter a weak caw.

In the verandah a very thin and black old cooly pulled feebly at the punkah rope, which came through a hole in the framework of the doorway. The whole of the entrance itself was closed by a large screen of kus-kus matting. The old cooly puffed and panted ostentatiously, though his clothing was scant to the verge of indecency, and his pulling at the rope so slow and gentle, that one could hardly have imagined that even a small child would have found the exertion excessive.

A huge earthenware basin full of water stood hard by, and at intervals of a quarter of an hour or so, a fifteen-year-old native boy, also in very scanty raiment, would appear from somewhere round the corner, and dipping a tin pot several times in succession into the great crock, would dash the water against the palm fibre matting. Thus the hot dry wind driving through the kus-kus would cause rapid evaporation, and so cool the atmosphere within.

Inside in the semi-darkness, and placed so that the cooled air from the tatties might play upon it, stood a low teak bedstead. In lieu of the wire of English made beds, there was a foundation of broad tapes stretched tightly on the frame, across and lengthwise, and interlaced with one another. Instead of a mattress to cover the tapes, there was a Chinese mat of closely woven grass.

On this matting, tossing restlessly to and fro, lay a slight girl. She was clad only in the thinnest of night-dresses, yet fevered with the heat, strove in vain to get a little sleep during those terrible midday hours. Crouched beside the bed was the cotton clad figure of the faithful old Ayah, who had given up her own noonday siesta, in the hope of being able to soothe her young mistress to sleep by her gentle and assiduous hair brushing. But the poor child, with her jangled nerves and throbbing head, was quite beyond the efficacy of this simple narcotic.

The boy husband had not yet returned, being kept beyond the usual hour by a court martial. The young wife ought of course to have been up in the Hills, where all the other ladies of the Regiment were already recruiting themselves in the life giving mountain breezes. But Alas! the young couple were too poor to be able to afford the expense; and so the little wife had had to stay down. She had now reached that stage, which old Indians know but too well, of being utterly unable to sleep. At night, while her lucky young husband, whom the heat seemed hardly to affect at all, lay sleeping quietly and soundly, the poor girl would toss and turn hopelessly. At last weary of lying down she used to get up, and walk up and down in the verandah, vainly hoping thus to induce sleepiness. What nightmares those lonely walks were. The compound ghostly and unfamiliar looking in the moonlight; the chattering cries of the family of little brown owls, which lived in a hollow mangoe tree near the gate. The bent form and white beard of the old chowkidar, parading round and round with a big stick to keep off possible thieves.

And now the girl's reflections over the wretchedness of her nightly walks were suddenly stopped by a feeling of absolute suffocation; the punkah had ceased to sway, and moreover hot instead of cool air was coming through the matting. The cooly outside had fallen asleep, punkah rope in hand, while the tattie boy had failed to give the periodical wetting to the kus-kus.

The ayah went close up to the matting and uttered a long piercing cry; in response the punkah began to wag vigourously, and a moment or two later the tattie boy was splashing deluges of water on to the mat.

Almost at the same moment the young wife caught the sound of a cantering pony; she sat up with a new light in her eyes.

A few seconds later a slim tall lad in khaki burst into the darkened room. "Nellie darling I've splendid news for you" he cried "the old Governor has sent me a fat cheque, and you can go to the Hills at once. You'll soon have your roses back in Mussoorie." And he picked the pale little creature up, and danced round the room with her in his arms.

Next day the little thatched bungalow looked forlorner than ever. The black punkah-walah and the fifteen-year-old boy were gone, and the verandah deserted. Doors and windows were shut; even the gate no longer stood open. The crows were still on the roof ridge, but looking more dismal than before, for the tiny household on the scraps of which they depended for their food, had been temporarily suspended. Nellie had started for the Hills, while her boy husband had shut up the bungalow, and gone to live in the Mess.

REFINEMENT IN AUTOMOBILE DRIVING.

WHEN starting his car a sensible automobile driver will avoid the fairly general but abominable practice of opening his exhaust cut-out. When putting in his gears, he will depress the clutch pedal completely and wait a few seconds to give his gear shafts sufficient time to stop revolving, when the gears will slide into mesh easily and without noise. There is no reason for having the engine running fast at that time. Then he will gradually raise his foot, at the same time slowly opening the throttle, and the car will glide off without the car-wrecking jump and noise attendant on a careless start. If the car is fitted with a four-speed gear, or if the engine is sufficiently powerful or flexible, it generally will be found that it will, under normal conditions, start on the second speed. This practice is to be commended, as it avoids a step in gear changing when the car is in motion, and saves the speeding of the engine which takes place on too low a gear. Starting on a higher gear can sometimes be achieved; it is a good demonstration of the possibilities of the car, but, like most similar demonstrations, it induces undesirable strains on the mechanism and should be avoided in ordinary practice.

Once under way, the autoist should keep in mind that he, and the people with him, are out for pleasure more than for looping-the-loop sensations, and when using his clutch or brakes—which are two things to leave alone as much as possible—he will avoid banging or jamming these remarkable shock producers. The running of an automobile, whatever the speed may be, is pleasant only in proportion to its steadiness and the absence of vibrations and jerks; in consequence, the driver should avoid adding any to the shocks unfortunately due to the nature of the road. A little attention paid to this point will soon work wonders and will become instinctive; in fact, a careful driver will often make the crudest car as pleasant to ride in as the most elaborate and costly six-cylinder car driven with only ordinary caution and intelligence.

One point to be kept in mind when travelling over merely passable or bad roads is that the driver has no other means than experience by which to estimate the discomfort suffered by the occupants of the rear seats. His position at the centre of the car is the most comfortable one, but his passengers generally are just above the rear axle and the road shocks are communicated to them with much greater intensity and amplitude than they are to him who sits at the dead axis of motion. This prompts a remark concerning the distance of the point on which the driver's eyes are fixed ahead of the car. It is notable that most persons, especially novices, watch the road altogether too close to the bonnet. At moderate speeds, such as are proper for pleasure riding, the road should be watched at least one hundred yards ahead of the car; this leaves plenty of time to prepare for emergencies and gives room for easy curves in rounding obstructions or bad spots. The novice will also find this practice a considerable help in keeping a straight course. When going up a hill or when approaching a turn, the proper point to watch is that at which the road disappears, as obstructions are likely to come in sight at any instant from this point.

When rounding a curve with a car of usual construction, that is to say, not too highly geared, it is not proper practice to declutch uselessly or to put the brakes on. The best way to operate is to regulate the speed of the car by the engine. This is especially easy if a pedal control of the throttle is fitted to the machine. When approaching the curve the throttle is gradually closed, which will considerably slacken the speed of the car. If partial closing is not sufficient, complete closing of the throttle will cause the engine to operate as a powerful but cushioned brake. The curve is then entered gradually without effort or jerk, and when the car is well in the curve it is safe to let her regain speed by re-opening the throttle. If the braking effect of the engine is not sufficient, by reason of the speed, a gentle and short application of the pedal brake will make up for it in practically every case, provided that the brake is not interconnected to withdraw the clutch when applied. Practice in this method will soon create a sense of balance which will permit of taking even sharp curves at a very fair speed, without discomfort to the occupants and without any ill effect on the car mechanism. The time taken in turning is never sufficient to warrant any change in the position of the spark advance lever. If the turning is especially abrupt and requires considerable slackening of the speed it is preferable to change to a lower gear before entering it, and then act as indicated in the foregoing. The object is to increase the braking effect of the motor and to facilitate its taking of the load when the throttle is re-opened. This is also often necessary with very heavy or with overgeared cars in which the engine might be stalled if the higher gear were kept in mesh.

Cutting close to the inner curb or the banking of the road facilitates the taking of a curve by increasing its radius; it is not good practice, however, in touring when a loss of a few seconds is immaterial, or when on blind turns where it may cause a collision.

In connection with the manipulation of the engine control levers, a great many modern cars are fitted with a single lever acting on the throttle. In this case its handling is obvious; it should, however, be noted that opening the throttle wider does not always mean a gain in speed on the level or in power on hills. In fact, the contrary very often is the case and a certain point generally exists, quite different from full opening at which the engine runs at its best under ordinary circumstances. This phenomenon is caused by disturbances in the formation of the gas mixture in the carbureter, which are somewhat obscure in character and beyond the scope of this writing.

The spark advance lever should always be set as far forward as the engine will stand without "knocking." This point is very much a question of feeling, although the rule is simple. In driving on level roads where the speed variations generally are of little duration, it is wise to leave the spark level in a constant position, not quite so far forward as the engine would take at the highest speed desired, and to drive with the throttle only. This is sufficient for all practical purposes and relieves the already busy mind of the none-too-skilled operator of one source of worry. Of course, when skill has become sufficient, driving to the maximum efficiency by means of the intelligently combined action of the two levers is extremely interesting. It is a question individual to every car and almost every driver, however, for which no hard and fast rule can be laid down. Its importance is greatest in connection with air-cooled cars.

In driving up grades it is a common practice with many drivers to stay in the highest gear as long as the engine will develop enough power to keep the car moving. This is a distinctly bad practice. A motor, when so taxed, runs by a succession of powerful blows; these impose strains on the whole car for which it was not designed, and they soon play havoc with the mechanism. Moreover, if the car is light in proportion to the engine power, it will progress by a succession of jerks corresponding to the motor blows. It is the experience of every skilled driver, including the best racing men, that timely changing of the gears is always an assistance in keeping up the speed average. This explains why, although overpowered for their weight, successful racing cars always carry a range of speed changes wider than seems necessary to the casual observer. The proper moment to change gears on a hill is not when the engine begins to labour, as many instructors claim—it is then too late. The proper time is when the speed has dropped below a rate at which a lower gear would drive the car with the engine running at its most favourable speed. This moment comes very much before that at which the engine will labour and is a matter of feeling. Experience will soon teach a driver what this speed is for his particular car, and he will then be able to tell it accurately by a glance at the speedometer or at the stationary objects along the road.

When changing gears on a hill the change is made from a high to a lower gear. This is the most difficult change for the beginner, that from a low to a higher gear being considerably easier. The reason for this lies in the fact that the primary shaft in the gear box (meaning the shaft directly connected to the clutch) runs at a lower speed than that which the secondary shaft (the shaft directly connected to the wheel-driving mechanism) tends to give it. This shows that to facilitate the gear change it will be necessary to keep the primary shaft revolving at the highest possible speed. For this purpose the engine should be speeded up by means of the throttle while the clutch is only slightly withdrawn and the gears pulled out of mesh, the three operations being practically simultaneous. The gears can then be slid to the lower speed with ease, and the clutch let in fully again, quickly although without jerk. The complete sequence of operations has to be gone through quite rapidly to be really successful, especially considering the fact that the car is going up on its own momentum and loses speed very quickly while the clutch is out of engagement.

In changing from a lower to a higher gear, as in starting or when resuming speed after a climb, the clutch should be withdrawn fully and the engine slowed down slightly, rather than speeded up; but very little difficulty, as a rule, will be encountered in this operation.

Experience is the best teacher in gear changing and there is no better way to learn than by reasoning out unsuccessful attempts. Gear changing often is a bugbear to the amateur, and even among otherwise good drivers not a few are deficient in this respect. Whatever may be the difficulty at the start, the question, like all others connected with driving, is merely one of practice and attention, and, especially in the case of the private owner, who always uses the same type of car, it soon becomes a purely reflex action.

Driving down hill is one of the surest tests of the discrimination of a driver. Do not try to avail yourself of the attraction of gravity to increase speed beyond your usual limit on the level; instead, keep it always a little lower. To limit speed under these circumstances, the engine is the best of brakes. With the ignition cut off or the spark lever fully retarded, the finest gradation of speed can generally be obtained by throttle manipulation with an occasional touch of the foot brake if a turn has to be negotiated. This will let the car glide down silently, with hardly any feeling of the powerful check put upon its speed, and still it will constantly be under perfect control. If the gradient is known to be particularly severe it is well to put a lower gear in mesh, as this will increase the resistance derived from the engine, owing to the necessarily higher rotative speed, but in no case should the change be attempted once the car has gained the least headway down the hill. This would be courting disaster. Withdrawing the clutch to make the change would release the car and let it dart off at such a speed that meshing of the gears would become an impossibility. If the engine resistance is not sufficient to overcome gravity the brakes should be used occasionally and alternately to avoid heating them. If the gradient is very long, the best way is to stop the car entirely by means of the brakes and the motor combined; then to make the change to a lower gear with the car at a standstill, and let the machine slide off by its own weight. Under these conditions the engine will provide the necessary resistance for all practical purposes.

Use of the brakes should be avoided whenever possible, this being the easiest way to preserve their adjustment and to keep their friction surfaces in good condition for an emergency.

When the car nears the bottom of a down grade, and the driver observes an ascent beyond, the temptation is sometimes very great to rush the car on the descent and avail oneself of the momentum thus gained. This practice is exceedingly dangerous, as it involves speeds for which the car, and more especially the steering gear, were not designed and to which the driver is not accustomed. It also mechanically fails to answer its purpose. When the car is thus rushed, the engine runs at a speed above its normal number of revolutions. This creates a disturbance in the operation of the carbureter, which does not have time to right itself when the car slows down and reaches the speed at which the engine could efficiently drive it. This, of course, makes a premature change of gear necessary and what little gain has been made during the mad rush is many times lost.

Besides the foregoing general advice, there is much that can be said relating to special circumstances. The method recommended in driving through city traffic is to use the foot accelerator only. The throttle lever is placed to correspond approximately to the speed of horses and ordinary traffic—say six to eight miles an hour—and the spark is fairly advanced to insure quick engine response. It will then be found that the accelerator will provide conveniently for all the variations in speed required, with a minimum of use of the clutch or the brakes. This method permits of quick acceleration with a moderately flexible engine and makes it possible to avail oneself of free passages and at the same time to be ready to join the line of traffic when needed without irksome labour of hands and feet over all the possible means of control. Moreover, by making the use of the clutch and brake exceptional, it considerably reduces the tendency to side-slip, which is one of the greatest dangers of traffic driving on "greasy" pavements.

If a throttle pedal is not fitted to the car, intelligent manipulation of the throttle lever on the steering wheel will answer the same purpose, provided that care is taken to return it often to the low speed point. The spark lever can well be left in a fixed position except in very exceptional cases.

In residential districts the main considerations should be quietness of operation and readiness to stop to avoid endangering children who are likely to run into the street unexpectedly.

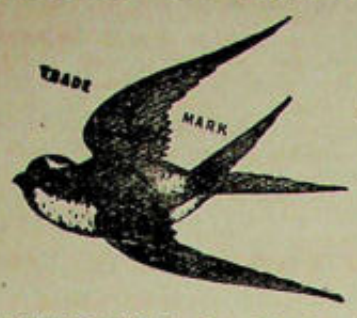
While all one's sympathies should be with the laws which are most drastic as regards punishment for damage caused by recklessness, there is no reason why the speed on the open highway should be lower than that at which the driver keeps perfect control of his machine, and no blame can intelligently be put on a man for the rapidity with which he covers a given distance. The only limit—and it cannot be defined in miles per hour—is fixed by the personal ability and fitness of the driver and by the comfort and safety of his passengers and of other users of the road.

Roads in and around villages and suburban residential towns cannot properly be considered as highways; in fact, they partake more of the nature of lanes and by-roads and their character makes speeding decidedly objectionable. They have numerous blind corners formed by buildings, walls and hedges, and they should be driven on carefully. Horses, often driven by women or children, are likely to be met frequently and under such circumstances the complete stoppage of the car may sometimes be more a strict duty than a mere condescension.

On private roads leading to dwellings or in private parks where visitors are permitted by courtesy of the owner, the respect of other people's property should be as great as the respect for their personal feelings. Several inches dug out of the gravel driveway by a showy start or handsome skid is not likely to increase the owner's or his gardener's friendly attitude toward visiting motorists.

It is not in his actual driving methods alone that the man at the wheel will make himself favorably considered or otherwise; it is also much in his attitude and appearance. Many young drivers affect an almost reclining position at the wheel, doubtless in emulation of the racing man who, because of the construction of his machine and to lessen the wind resistance, has to sit very low. The impression generally conveyed by such position in an ordinary machine is that of indolence and inexperience, while an up-right and alert attitude gives an impression of readiness that is conducive of much confidence in the minds of other users of the highway.

It is to be regretted that more care is not taken by automobile owners in selecting or altering the bodies of their cars to suit their own physical peculiarities. A short-legged man will always be at a disadvantage in the average machine, and although makers are beginning to supply cars with adjustable pedals and steering columns, much can be done in the way of improvement by suitable alterations of the seat cushions.



Considerable gain in the avoidance of noise in the operation of a car can be made by attention to a few simple points in the upkeep of the machine, and in the judicious avoidance of the use of certain attachments. Use of the muffler cut-out under all ordinary circumstances is of very doubtful appropriateness, but even this apparatus does not irritate the nerves so much as the constant rattling and hitting against the mud-guards of loosely fitting tire chains. Discrimination should be exercised in the use of the horn or siren; it is worthy of notice that the most skilled drivers find least need of a constant heralding of their presence. In fact, the use of these instruments, especially on otherwise silent cars, often merely causes confusion and loss of self-control on the part of a pedestrian who otherwise would go on his way undisturbed and in safety.

It now is generally admitted that an owner of an automobile should be able to drive and take care of his machine without constant assistance other than the washing and similar manual work that a general utility man can do. The remarkable refinements of construction embodied in the modern motor car make this possible at the expense of very little time, and the personal interest taken in the machine soon proves to be the source of considerable enjoyment.

With the conditions prevailing in cities where the cars generally are kept in public garages with a surrounding of professional chauffeurs and of hired men, the owner may not feel at ease to attend to any mechanical work, although there is no reason why he should deprive himself of the pleasure of driving. At the country home where the car can be kept in the barn or private garage, the conditions are much more favorable and tend toward a solution of the chauffeur problem.—H. G. in Recreation.

WHEN a certain Lancashire militia regiment was sent out to Gibraltar to garrison the rock during the Crimean War, Colonel Wilson Patton was in command, joining at Gibraltar and having no knowledge of his troops till after his arrival. The first morning after his landing he went out to investigate sentries' positions, and found a soldier lying on his stomach with his rifle thrown some feet away from him and his arm down a rabbit-hole. The Colonel gave him a kick and said, "Now, then, what are you doing there?" The sentry turned and looked at the Colonel, without apparently recognising his commanding officer. Very slowly he made use of the following remark: 'When I lived in Lancashire I once knew a man who made two thousand a year—one thousand a year by minding his own business and another thousand a year by letting other folk mind theirs.' And he went on with his rabbit hunting. The story goes that the Colonel was so struck by his remark that he omitted to punish him.

AERIAL FLIGHT.

We all talk æronautics now. M. Bleriot's successful flight across the English Channel has brought home to Englishmen the fact that they are no longer an island nation, and cannot depend upon the sea for protection. During a recent discussion of the question in the House of Commons Mr. Haldane explained that this year the Admiralty is spending £35,000 and the War Office over £36,000 upon æronautical appliances of various kinds. There is, therefore, no fear that a subject thus firmly planted on the estimates will be lost sight of. It appears from Mr. Haldane's statement that the rigid dirigibles department is handed over to the navy, the non-rigid dirigibles and the æroplanes to the army. It would seem that, according to official opinion, the rigid steerable balloon is the only flying ship that is at present of any warlike use. This is the Zeppelin airship, which has flown all over Germany and is probably capable of crossing the Channel five days out of six. It is to all intents and purposes a flying motor-car, and is capable of carrying a few passengers and some slight armament too.

The fact that the Admiralty has been made responsible for vessels of this type would seem to indicate that its chief utility, in the opinion of the Government, will be in naval warfare. The drawback to the type is its enormous size and expense—a Zeppelin airship is as long as a first-rate liner—and its defficient elevating power. On that account the British War Office has rather fancied the non-rigid type of airship. The non-rigid airship is lighter and therefore smaller and cheaper to construct; it is doubtless more difficult to steer and more liable to shipwreck, but on the other hand the lighter it is the more machines can be made at a given cost and the greater the use to which they can be put. The first attempts of the War Office were with the non-rigid type, and failed because the construction was too flimsy. It could presumably build a Zeppelin ship at any time; but it is trying to make a compromise type which shall combine the steerability of the Zeppelin balloon, with the cheapness and handiness of the non-rigid type. Mr. Haldane apparently does not think much of æroplane of the type which has crossed the Channel as a war machine. Until the æroplane can rise higher and carry more weight it can hardly be of much use in war. A revolver shot almost could bring it down. There is therefore a good deal of sound principle in the distribution of construction and research which Mr. Haldane announced.

By this time the War Office ought to have passed the experimental stage, and if one working ship had been built there would be a great deal more public confidence in the efforts of the Admiralty and the War Office. The Government is probably right in preferring for the present the non-rigid airship, and none of the existing types is so fixed as to justify any multiplication of ships. But if the Government is to have leisure to experiment in the various types, it would probably pay it to produce at least one that would work well even though it were not likely to be the type that would best deserve to survive. Mr. Haldane made no concealment of the fact that as matters now stand this country is decidedly behind France, Germany and the United States. Nor is any concealment of so obvious a truth possible. The names of the leaders in the movement are not those of Englishmen. Mr. Haldane spoke cheerfully as to the possibility of making up the leeway, pointing out that England had been similarly behindhand in respect of the submarine and the motor-car, but now led the world in regard to the former and feared no comparison in regard to the latter. This may be true, but it is also indisputable that millions of British money would have been invested in cars of British and not foreign origin if Great Britain country had been the pioneer of the motor industry, as it was of the cycle industry. It may very well prove impossible to keep for long any important secrets in the development of airships, but to count upon that fact, as Mr. Haldane seemed to do as a quasi-justification for being behindhand, is neither very dignified nor very creditable. England ought to aim to lead the world in airship construction, and a little more generosity on the part of the authorities towards inventors might work a remarkable change. Even if we make all allowance for the cranks who are the bane of many Departments of States, there must be some good reason why the complaints of the War Office's attitude towards inventors are so loud and so unanimous. However, Mr. Haldane's statement will remove a good many fears, though it certainly will not satisfy those who take extremely optimistic views as to the possibilities of æronautical developments, and those who demand that the sovereignty of the air, as well as of the sea, shall be immediately secured for Great Britain. But it shows, at any rate, that the authorities are fully alive to the necessity of making the most careful study of what is being done here and elsewhere, and that they are working on clear and definite lines.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The second series of the monsoon meetings began in Calcutta on Saturday, the division of both the Mediocre Handicap and the Amateur Pony Hurdle Handicap giving a bumper card of eight events and providing some excellent and attractive racing. The weather was considerate enough to keep fine throughout the whole afternoon, and in consequence there was an absolute record attendance for this time of year. Indeed it is interesting to note that though we have not on the whole been favoured with the best of weather, the numbers passing through the turnstiles for the five meetings have altogether eclipsed all former records, and as the numbers of entries and the sizes of the fields have also been greater it would appear that the Acting Secretary's policy of grudging no expense, in order to make things go pleasantly is justified, not only by the extra satisfaction to participators in "the sport of kings" but even from a pecuniary point of view. His latest improvement, by the way, is the substitution of white rails to the course for the old black ones that have hitherto sufficed. The new rails are already up along the straight, greatly adding to the brightness of the scene and apart from their aesthetic value they will be of considerable service when they have been put all the way round, as it is much easier to distinguish the different horses in running against the white than against the black rails.

To come back to Saturday's sport, the books did not have quite such a good day as of late, as though only two absolute favourites got home all the winners except Colina were pretty well backed, and what they did make on the day was in some instances somewhat depleted by their misplaced confidence in a gentleman who gave three different addresses and who was apparently betting on the "Heads I win, tails you don't" principle as he stands debtor for several thousand rupees with apparently no prospect of ever being able to pay.

The first item on the card was the Fifth Hurdle Race, for which the six left in all started. Queen of Gems and Cyril were made favourites at the beginning, but there was always money for Wake Up and she eventually finished at threes. She justified the confidence reposed in her as, lying in a nice position throughout, she was able to come away between the fourth and fifth jumps, and win in good style from Cyril. Queen of Gems went right through a couple of the flights, and was never able to make up the ground she lost. Mr. Griffiths' new importation The Fog ran a good race for the first mile when he tired and died away to nothing. As, however, he is fat and quite untrained having only landed in the country six weeks ago, this is not surprising. He was sold after the race to Mr. A. D. Gordon, the owner of Eureka Girl, and we shall expect to see him carry that gentleman's colours to victory in the Amateur Class pretty quickly, as he will stand out amongst what he has to meet there. Saturday's race is likely to have brought him on considerably. Ynyslas was running pretty well, but she began to tire coming to the last hurdle, and fell heavily at it giving Mr. Evers a nasty shaking, but luckily doing him no other damage.

Twelve out of thirteen left in started for the Mediocre Handicap, 1st Division. Northwood was considered a class above everything else and in spite of having 9st. 8lb., to carry was made a warm favourite at 6 to 4. At one time too he looked very likely to bring it off, as after Eruption had made the pace for about four furlongs Northwood took command of affairs only to be beaten by half a length by Colina who got up alongside him in the straight and raced it out well. The finish was a good testimonial to the handicapping as there were several of them close up in a bunch behind, and Lasso coming up very fast on the outside just managed to beat Blix out of third place.

The Third Amateur Hurdle Race was rather a tame show. Eight of the nine left in started, but the finish was nothing but a procession, Dalgai cantering in lengths ahead of the favourite Electric Light, Lord Chester next and the others all strung out in a line behind. The favourite was obviously short of work or Dalgai would not have been able to beat him with such absolute ease.

All nine left in started for the Mediocre Handicap, Division II. Highland Fling was favourite, and several others backed. London who has been showing steady improvement from week to week, absolutely came in on his own with apparently about 14lb. in hand. Wake Up, who had been well treated by the handicapper, had no difficulty in securing the second place despite that it was her second run of the day, and Pallas just managed to beat Golden Morn for the other shop with St. Rule and Highland Fling close behind.

Division I. of the Amateur Pony Hurdle Handicap was a bit of an upset, as Loch Lily, Marconi and Killarney were the three most backed, though there was a fair commission on Piccaninny at longish odds. This mare seemed to have struck a good day at last, as she both jumped and galloped like a different animal to her former races, her "lepping" specially showing marked improvement, and she was able to win comfortably from the honest little Scarboro, who has run consistently well. Killarney and Marconi came next. Loch Lily ran very disappointingly and was beaten right off at the finish. Chas again caused considerable delay at the gate and did his utmost to get rid of his rider. He was eventually left more than a field and was cantered round on his own. We understand that his owner has wisely decided to break the pony into harness, and get him thoroughly quietened down before he ever thinks of racing him again.

Division II. of the Pony Hurdle Handicap was a somewhat uninteresting race. Mr. Griffiths had made one of those errors to which even the greatest are liable, and had given Bandy Leg a weight which enabled him to win hard held from start to finish in the easiest of styles. Lola, who was also pretty well treated, was a very easy second, and the only semblance of a race was that between Violet II. and Meprise for the third place, which was secured by the former.

THREE of those on the card failed to put in an appearance for the September Plate, leaving a field of only seven. Tana was favourite, though we consider it very injudicious of her stable to back her for five furlongs, a distance which is far too short for her. Harene and Northwood were next most backed and most of the shrewder heads thought the race would lie absolutely between these two. The pair got out of the gate together, but Northwood sticking to his speedy companion for four furlongs, absolutely broke her up and she fell back from first almost to last place in a few strides. Blue Flame, who had been lying just behind all the time, made a very determined attempt to catch Northwood, who, however, was just able to win absolutely all out.

THE Plassey Plate with a field of nine wound up the afternoon's sport. Moira was favourite, Primrose, Cocky and Albatross the next three backed. Those of the public who had gone for recovery on the favourite were able to go home in comfort, as lying third till the bend Howie then took Moira to the front and never looked to be in danger, winning in good style from the gallant little Cocky, who beat High Court for the third place. This, by the way, is Howie's first ride since he came back to Calcutta and we congratulate him on it being a winner.

The entries for next Saturday are not quite so good as heretofore, but no doubt several of the horses are having a week's rest. The Autumn Plate has been divided giving a card of seven events, and the totals in each are as follows:—Fourth Amateur Hurdle Race 13, Pony Hurdle Handicap 14, Autumn Plate 21, Third Horse Selling Race 19, Assaye Plate 10, Lilliput Handicap 10.

THERE was a little schooling done on Wenesday morning. Lefterin (Alford) and Carnegie (Mr. Levetus) went over four flights, the former jumping well but not moving too freely. Carnegie showed no signs of improvement and stopped and bucked over each of them.

Mauser (Alford) and Badcock (Mr. Rasch) went over the whole of the pony course. The little fellow could not pace it with Mr. Scaramanga's big chestnut, who jumped well but had to be ridden into them.

Clipper (Alford) and Queen of Gems (T. Southall) schooled fast over three flights.

THERE has been a certain amount of betting for the Cup, and the Trials at the Albert Rooms, the most interesting item being a fair commission that has come on Peru for the Cup shortening his price to fives, equal favourites with Bantock. The latter has been also backed, and there is steady stream of small wagers on Soultline and Tangaroa for the Trials, nothing else being much fancied.

THE following are the third entries for the Army and Civil Service Cups closed on the 1st instant: Army Cup.—Captain E. Gibbs' Poniard, Mr. Rake's ch a h Egypt, Mr. W. H. H. Thompson's Sheikh Farid and The Monster, Captain G. D. Leake's Sirdar. Civil Service Cup.—Mr. A. Hameed's Fireaway, H. H. Kour Sahib of Patiala's Post Entry, and Mr. B. N. Burjorjee's Etna.

WE would draw the attention of our readers to the advertisement appearing further on, which gives the dates of the tour of the Official Measurer of the Calcutta Turf Club.

MAJOR EUSTACE LODER, the well-known English racehorse owner, has had the misfortune to lose the sire Laveno, who died on the 13th August at his stud in Ireland from an attack of colic. By Bend Or out of Napoli, Laveno was bred by Mr. J. H. Houldsworth in 1892. He did not run as a two year old, commencing his Turf career by running second to Kirkconnel in the Two Thousand Guineas. He then ran unplaced in the Derby won by Sir Visto, but subsequently won the Jockey Club Stakes of 10,000sovs. (beating None the Wiser, Ladas, Sir Visto, and a good field), and the Champion Stakes. In the following year he ran four times without success, being unplaced behind St. Frusquin and Persimmon in the Princess of Wales's Stakes of 10,000sovs.; second, giving 25lb. to Bellevin in the Prince Edward Handicap at Manchester; third to Persimmon and Sir Visto in the Jockey Club Stakes of 10,000sovs.; and unplaced behind Bay Ronald in the Limekiln Stakes. After three unsuccessful efforts in the following season, the best of which was a second to Diakka in the Duke of York Stakes, he retired from the racecourse.

Laveno's stud record is not a particularly brilliant one, for with two exceptions his stock have not shown form much above the ordinary. He was the sire of Uninsured, winner of the Lincolnshire Handicap in 1904, and several other winners. The two exceptions are Galvani, who has always been considered in the front rank, and Valens, who also appears likely to make a name for himself. It will be remembered that the latter was fourth in the Derby this year. Amongst Laveno's other winners, perhaps the best were Laveuse, Lady Honora, Nutwith, Rarer Sort, and Veneration II. Laveno was insured with the National Live Stock Insurance Company.

AN interesting occurrence is recorded in connection with the recent manœuvres of London Territorials at Okehampton. There was a big stampede of horses, about 300 of them breaking away and dashing wildly across the moors. For a time nothing broke their maddened gallop, but later a curious thing happened. From various parts of the camp bugles sounded "the feed." Its effect was magical. Horses who had evaded all attempts at capture instantly obeyed it. Checking their wild career, they trotted back to camp, and in due course all the stampeding horses—many of which had been captured—were again safely tethered.

THE Poona Open Polo Tournament begins to-day. Only six teams have entered this year and the draw in the first round is as follows:—Government House vs. Penguins, 33rd Light Cavalry vs. Inniskilling Dragoons; 13th Hussars and 26th Light Cavalry byes.

APPENDED are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the week:—

Kent beat Hampshire at Bournemouth by 9 wickets.

Middlesex beat Somerset at Taunton by 2 wickets.

The matches M.C.C. vs. Australians, Surrey vs. Leicestershire, and Sussex vs. Yorkshire were abandoned.

The match between Essex and the Australians was abandoned owing to rain, and the game at Scarborough between Yorks and the M.C.C. was drawn.

Kent heads the County Championship, having played 26 matches, won 16, lost 2 and drawn 8.

Lancashire is second, having played 24, won 14, lost 4 and drawn 6.

Yorkshire, which is third, played 26, won 12, lost 4 and drew 10.

THE London to Brighton Amateur Walk held on Saturday last was won by H. Ross of the Tooting A.C. who established new figures for the distance covering the 52¼ miles in 8hrs. 11mins. 14⅗secs.

THE Durand Football Tournament begins on Monday next at Simla the result of the drawing being as follows:—

Calcutta Volunteer Rifles vs. 12th Royal Lancers, 17th Lancers vs. Wiltshire Regiment, West Ridings Regiment vs. Highland Light Infantry, Lancashire Fusiliers (holders) vs. Royal Scots, Connaught Rangers vs. East Yorkshire Regiment, North Staffords vs. Durham Light Infantry.

The following teams who have drawn byes in the first round will meet in the second round as noted:—

Simla United Club "B" Team vs. Bishop Cotton School.

Royal Dragoon Guards vs. Warwickshire Regiment.

Mountain Artillery, Sirhind Brigade vs. Simla United "A" Team.

Black Watch vs. King's Regiment.

Royal Berkshire Regiment vs. Cameronians.

It is hoped to be able to play off the final on the 25th instant. The referee for all the matches will be Colour-Sergeant Knight of the Wiltshire Regiment.

The Royal Berkshires and the Warwickshire Regiment have scratched.

THE West Ridings won the Bombay Rugby Tournament beating Madras in the final by 7 points (a try and a dropped goal) to nil. Details further on.

THE results of the big swimming race through London, decided on the 14th August, are given in our English Sporting Letter. Seldom in the history of swimming has a contest taken place of such magnitude and importance. For the distance covered, and the number and qualifications of the competitors, it stands out unique in the sporting records of the world. Over a hundred swimmers of all nations sent in entries for the race, and many expressed themselves as being feverishly anxious to exhibit their prowess over the fifteen mile course from Richmond to Blackfriars. Of this hundred only thirty-four could be chosen to compete, and that number includes some of the most famous amateur swimmers, male and female, that Europe has produced.

A particular feature of the race in this connection is the number of lady swimmers coming forward as competitors. Most of these are girls in their teens, and all are experts in this most graceful and immensely important sport—if one may describe anything so vital as being a sport. The large entry

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered: it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

of these lady champions is not so much due to the fact of special prizes being offered for the first three finishing the unusually long course, but in the majority of instances to the desire to show how excellent a thing swimming is for women, and how splendidly they hold their own with the other sex as exponents of this particular branch of athletics.

Quite apart, however, from any ordinary sporting or athletic consideration, the great swim has an importance that cannot be too much insisted upon. It is a wonderful object lesson. It has focussed in such a way as never before the attention of the General British public on the possibilities of an art with which every man, woman, and child can become more or less familiar. Just now such a focussing of general attention is of the utmost value, specially in view of the fact that with the late heat wave in England and the consequent rush to bathe and paddle, scores of lamentable fatalities occurred. If this swim has done nothing else but called attention to swimming, it has not been carried out in vain.

Lord Rosebery recently opened a horticultural show and in the course of a speech expressed the opinion that the gardener by the nature of his occupation, is, or should be, physically, intellectually and morally the best of the rural population. He leads, from the physical point of view, a life which keeps him always in the open air; and he is daily and hourly face to face with the elevating mystery of nature. He has the closest intercourse with Mother Earth without the incessant labour of other workers in the soil. His task is to explore and to watch all her secrets. It is his duty to deal in turn with all the miracles of nature—the bud, the flower, and the fruit. He is the first to see the opening leaf and the first green spike that pierces the mould, and then, when the weather fails and when all is too inclement for other pursuits, he is able to devote himself to the preparation for another year in the sure and certain faith that the miracles of nature which he has witnessed in the current year will recur in orderly but miraculous rotation in the coming spring. No one can fail to see who appreciates the daily task and toil of the gardener that there is none that can or should raise the nature and the mind of man as completely as his. Many another gifted orator and writer has eulogised the fascinating pursuit of gardening. It is a pursuit which is not followed by so many as one might expect in Calcutta in spite of the great possibilities open to the horticulturist in this city. Several public gardens and recreation grounds in Calcutta now bear ample testimony to the fact that practically all the year round garden beds can be made to bloom with the beautiful blossoms of many and vari-coloured flowers. Another great man writing on this subject has said: "Gardening has been the inclination of kings, the choice of philosophers, the common favourite of public and private men; a pleasure of the greatest, and the care of the meanest; and indeed an employment and a possession for which no man is too high or too low."

The motorist at home is complaining more bitterly than ever of police persecution. The Royal Automobile Club are acquiring information about police traps with the object, it is understood, of laying it before Parliament and obtaining an inquiry into the working of the Motor Car Act. The whole question of general and special speed limits for motor cars appears to be in a state of legislative chaos. It is pointed out that the position is ridiculous, not only from the point of view of the law, but from a common-sense point of view also. For instance, while on comparatively deserted roads in the London parks a speed exceeding 10 miles an hour, less than that of an ordinary hansom, is punished very heavily, in the crowded streets, especially on the embankment between Charing Cross and Blackfriars the speed of motor carriages habitually exceeds 20 miles an hour, and very often 30 miles an hour. In the country the position is much the same. There are numerous villages and narrow spots where no special speed limit exists, and at cross roads or dangerous corners also the general speed limit of 20 miles an hour is still in force. On the other hand, in many places where there is really no adequate reason for restricting the speed, local demands for a speed limit not exceeding 10 miles an hour have been granted. The police are also said to abuse the law by setting their traps over short stretches of road approaching a hill where a motorist would have a natural tendency to gather speed to rush the hill. Complaints too are of course numerous of prosecutions against motorists who have slightly exceeded the limit on a broad open road where speed could not endanger anyone. Arguments of this nature have been plentiful ever since the passing of the Motor Car Act and from the motorist's point of view it does seem hard that he should be limited to a comparatively low speed on roads where the local conditions, the absence of traffic and a wide open road prevent high speed from causing danger to anyone.

At the same time it must be admitted that to the great non-motoring public there is another point of view. The average motorist in a civilized country would no doubt consider the welfare of other travellers on the road and not indulge in reckless driving even if there was no law at all on the subject, but the law has to include the reckless and non-reckless and but one law can be made for them all. An accident such as that which occurred a short time ago on Salisbury plain is one which will not do anything towards rousing popular sympathy for the motorist. Ninety-six men of the Royal Field Artillery were marching along the road when a motor car came up behind and ran through the whole column from end to end before either its presence was realized by the artillerymen or the presence of the men was perceived by the driver. Not more than 40 men out of the 96 escaped contact with the car or were knocked down in the general scramble that ensued. Ten were injured, five dangerously and one of them died. At the inquest the driver said that at the time of the accident he could see nothing beyond five or six yards in front of him owing to thick mist and that his speed was not more than 15 miles an hour. The jury returned a verdict of "death from misadventure," but added a censure to the driver for the great speed at which he must have been travelling at the time of the accident. To residents in the country who do not motor themselves the motor with its smell and dust must be a source of great annoyance. The most satisfactory method would seem to be to reserve certain roads as motor roads making new ones where necessary, at the expense of motorists themselves; on such roads they would be allowed to travel at any reasonable speed, while on the other roads they would be obliged to conform to a low speed.

The Bird Observatory at Rossitten has sent out circulars asking landed proprietors, foresters, and others to mark all young storks, in the hope of tracing migration routes. Dr. Thienemann, the director, asks that special attention be paid to storks marked in previous years that may return to breed. Hitherto most of the marking has been done in East Prussia, and the ringed birds have been captured in South-east Africa. Dr. Reichenow, of Berlin, has suggested that marking should also be undertaken west of the Weser, in the hope of discovering whether the storks from this region winter in North Africa and Senegambia, as is believed they do.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—There was a huge attendance in Poona for the first day of the Big Meeting, which was full of incident and brought out most of the blue blood of Indian racing. It was extremely bad luck on Mr. Galstaun that Our State should have to be shot, falling just when he looked sure to win and prove himself the best of the jumpers seen out this year.

This race, the Yerowda Plate, opened the card and Our State and The Loaf were equal favourites from Gerard and Clear Artist. The Loaf and Gerard took the lead with Our State always handy, when at the five furlongs The Loaf fell and at the half mile Lamrock and Gerard followed suit. Clear Artist led for home when Our State shot up inside and suddenly veering took the wing of the last jump and the rails, falling so badly that he had to be destroyed and T. Ferguson had to be carried in, fortunately only badly shaken.

For the Lilliputs the same trio as last year were out, Creditor, Mountain King and Bay Middleton; Scimitar, however, was favourite and got left. As then, Mountain King streaked away, followed by Bay Middleton. Southall kept a a nice hold of the leader, and when Bay Middleton began to draw on him was able to go away again. Rajput passed Prince Chestnut for a place, but Creditor is apparently not fit.

The only handicap was the New Plate and its success was evident when Koko, Lorraine and Wild Boy were practically equal favourites. Gun Metal was first away from Lorraine and Cracker, Koko badly away. Though the last named came up in the straight, the only change was in Cracker passing Lorraine for second place.

In the race of the day, the Trial Plate, Soult Line was at once installed favourite from Tangaroa, some money coming for Wise Bird, Crossbred and Wandin. As before, Tangaroa streaked away from the gate, followed by Wise Bird and Soult Line closely with Crossbred some way back. Turning for home, the last named had drawn up considerably and Soult Line caught the leader to pass him soon. Suddenly Crossbred was seen to draw on the favourite and held him safely, Wise Bird holding her place from Wandin. The mile was cut out in 1 min. 42 secs.

Thirteen second-raters went for the Maiden Plate, Amood, Sharar and Shanwar getting most money. Shanwar was first away from Sharar and Winchester, but at the distance it was evident Sharar could not stay and that Winchester had the measure of Shanwar. Farick putting in a late appearance beat Sharar for third place.

Lastly the Champion Plate, in which Peculiar was a better favourite than Precious, Jahangir, Sialkote and Colaba. Famous cut out the running till Sialkote took it up in front of Peculiar half a mile from home. At the bend Peculiar drew on the leader and went away well, but Precious was seen coming through followed by Jahangir, the former of these having Peculiar settled though only a neck separated them. The win of the old champion was well received, this being his first win over anything more than ten furlongs.

It is with deep regret we have to record the death at Ootacamund of Mr. R. E. Lawley, the only son of H.E. Sir Arthur Lawley, Governor of Madras. Mr. Lawley had come in from Secunderabad last Friday and was killed in the hunting field the following day: his mount came down at a small jump at Chemund Shola and Mr. Lawley was later discovered with his neck broken and the horse lying on top of him. The profoundest sorrow is felt for their Excellencies and all the members of the family.

The Presidency Parsee cricket match was concluded at Poona on Tuesday afternoon, ending in the utter rout of the Parsee combination, who gave a very poor display and were beaten by an innings and 71 runs. Scores will be found in our cricket column.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 26th August 1909.

At last the Indian summer weather has broken up somewhat and a few thunderstorms have perceptibly reduced the temperature. All this "glorious sunshine" is capital, but in this country, as you know, we make no provision for minimising heat in our houses, and we have yet to learn to manage as they do in France during hot-spells. But anyhow the splendid weather which has been experienced all over Great Britain has greatly increased the prospects of a harvest much above the average. The appearance of the crops in the great corn-growing districts of the East Midlands was phenomenal a fortnight ago. Much rain and wind between then and harvest would have meant widespread destruction. The one thing needed to change the somewhat unusual greenness of the wheatfields into the gold characteristic of August was strong sunshine. This came just when most necessary, and though the farmer is apt to praise the weather with much caution, he has little or nothing to complain of at present.

There have been fewer cooler or more refreshing spots during the hot-spell than the shady reaches and secluded backwaters of the upper Thames, to which the number of visitors has been quite abnormal.

Favourite spots have been besieged by picnic parties. Punting during the last fortnight was a delightful occupation, and many bands of ladies and children in the brightest of costumes were indulging in it, whilst the merry laughter and gay popping of corks from every quiet nook and sheltered copse spoke volumes for the pleasure and abandon of an al fresco lunch, with the thermometer hovering round about 80 in the shade.

One of the coolest places to be found in London was the interior of St. Paul's, which was visited by more than the usual number of American and provincial sight-seers. The ponderous oak doors of the Cathedral were thrown back to the level of the walls; and this happy innovation not only served to make the interior delightfully cool, but also exposed to the view of the great procession of tourists many of the Cathedral's hidden beauties. Here and there a party of visitors was conducted over the building in the orthodox style; but many of the Americans preferred to rest upon the wooden seats, thankful for that glorious rest and shelter from the heat and burden of the day.

And of course the season is as dead as mutton. A sign of desolation which marks the socially dead season in London is the closing of West End clubs, many of which are now given over entirely to ladders, dust-sheets, new paint and vacuum cleaners. Those that remain open, indeed, seem positively in a minority, so that one wonders how they can suffice to house members who are momentarily turned out of their customary clubs. Few people, however, visit their clubs in August and even those that are open look empty and deserted.

We are all immensely proud of the prowess of Lieutenant Shackleton, and we have given him dinners galore. It therefore comes as a shock to find that he is seriously out of pocket over his enterprise. But Government, one is glad to note, has come forward rather differently to the way it usually does when doling out ridiculously small contributions for good objects and has actually made a grant of £20,000 towards the explorer's expenses. Not too bad.

Madan Lal Dhingra, the murderer of Sir W. Curzon Wyllie and Dr. Lalcaca at the Imperial Institute on 1st July, was last Tuesday morning hanged within Pentonville Gaol. Little public interest was displayed in the execution, about 100 persons gathering outside the prison doors some time before the sentence of the law was carried out. Among these there was only one native of India, who has assumed the name of "Masters," and it was understood that he was a representative of a native newspaper. These English aliases are frequently adopted by Bengalies and other natives when in England, why I cannot understand. Dhingra met his doom with the stoical and sullen attitude so typical of the Oriental criminal and which he maintained throughout his incarceration. He was visited by only one Indian friend, for the purpose of arranging some small personal affairs, and by two white women to whom he was known, and who obtained permission to see him.

Fourteen theatres in the West End of London are getting ready to open for the autumn season within the next four or five weeks, and at twelve the companies are rehearsing daily. Eleven of these plays are new, the other a Shakespearean revival. On Wednesday Daly's Theatre put "The Dollar Princess" into rehearsal, and by the end of the month the American members of the company to appear in "The Great Divide," at the Adelphi Theatre, will have arrived in London.

The new season starts with a better promise than usual, for the first dramatist in France, M. Brieux, will have a new play at His Majesty's Theatre, and Sir Arthur Pinero, the first of our dramatists, will be represented at St. James's Theatre. Altogether there will be about sixteen new productions in the West End theatres between the end of August and the end of September. Quite £50,000 will be spent on mounting the plays now in preparation for the opening of the season.

Every stage in London is now in occupation all day, for in addition to the new plays now in preparation many important companies are rehearsing for autumn tours. The theatres of the West End that are closed are—behind their doors—as busy as beehives, with the stage managers coaching companies in the intricacies of new plays, morning, noon, and night.

Nothing if not courageous, Mr. Charles Manners has opened yet another season of opera in our midst at a time of the year when London is commonly reputed to be "empty." But, of course, London is nothing of the kind, and probably the promoter of the enterprise now started on its way at the Lyric Theatre is wise in coming to us at a period when there is no plethora of musical entertainments to contend against.

Apart from the general level of the performance itself, Mr. Manners may be congratulated on having been able to open his season with an opera so deservedly popular as "Carmen," for the reason that in previous years he had failed to secure permission to include that work in what, for want of a better term, must be called his "West-end" repertoire. Saturday's audience was clearly delighted with the manager's choice, and with the account given of Bizet's opera by those principally concerned. As regards its central feature the performance was familiar enough, for Madame Zélie de Lussan's embodiment of the heroine long ago won the favour of the music-loving public. Once again the artist made of the protagonist a picturesque figure, and, by a number of skilful, vivid touches, laid bare those temperamental qualities without which no Carmen could ever hope to be convincing. Throughout she acted, indeed, with an abundance of vitality, while her well-disciplined voice, as on so many occasions in the past, served her for the most part admirably. Although not quite in his best cue vocally, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, the Don Jose of the cast, again showed himself to be a valuable member of Mr. Manners's forces, and his singing, which was marked by not a little fervour and charm, would have proved even more effective had it been free from occasional lapses from perfect intonation. Mr. Charles Moorhouse, a new recruit to this organisation, bore himself with decided credit as Escamillo, and secured for the Toreador's song the customary demonstrations. For the rest, Miss Kate Anderson dealt prettily with Micaela's charming music, and useful aid was given, among others, by Miss Winifred Burns, Miss Bessie Weir, and Mr. G. King.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's four-act play, "The Fires of Fate," which has proved such a big success at the Lyric, was last night transferred to the Haymarket Theatre. Altogether the piece does not live up to the author's description of it as "a modern morality play," this is quite as well, for this is scarcely the weather for taking one's pleasure seriously.

So many changes have been made in the cast since its production that it is surprising that the play has not suffered in consequence. But although his numerous admirers will regret that Mr. Lewis Waller no longer appears in the part of Colonel Egerton, Mr. Ben Webster is a capital substitute. He gives rather a different interpretation of the character from that of Mr. Waller, but it is an interpretation equally good of its kind, and played with sincerity and deep feeling. The kindly old clergyman, who prevails upon Col. Egerton not to take his own life when he believes himself smitten with a mortal disease, is now portrayed by Mr. Beveridge, who gives a softer touch to the character than did Mr. A. E. George, which is a decided improvement. Mr. Lewis Carson has succeeded Mr. J. Fisher White as the doctor, and is altogether admirable, and Miss Auriol Lee is charming as the heroine, a part created at the Lyric by Miss Evelyn D'Alroy, Miss Agnes Thomas and Mr. Charles Maude in their original characters still give distinction to comparatively small parts.

Negotiations have been long drawn out, but at last Mr. C. H. Workman has set his signature to the deed which constitutes him the new lessee of the Savoy Theatre. Mr. Workman's aim will be worthily to maintain the traditions of the house, always to be associated with the names of Gilbert, Sullivan, and D'Oyly Carte. He brings to his task the knowledge and experience of many years, gained in the service of that famous trio. He brings, also, the natural gifts of a comedian and a singer, who in a very brief space has contrived firmly to establish himself in the favour of the London public. According to present intentions he will start his campaign on or about Wednesday, 29th September. His first production will be a piece belonging to the genre indicated, the author of which is Mr. Guy Morton Eden, the composer, Mr. Reginald Somerville. The piece is in two acts, the action of both being laid in Switzerland.

An announcement of even greater interest remains to be made. Sir William Gilbert has once more entered the field, and has in readiness a successor to that long line of delightful and witty operas written by him in conjunction with Sir Arthur Sullivan. The novelty has just been acquired by Mr. Workman, and will be his second venture at the Savoy. Mr. Edward German is responsible for the score. As in the case of "Iolanthe," Sir William Gilbert in his new work handles a fairy theme of a kind to afford ample scope for his fantastic humour. As usual, the lyrics are of his own composition, and said to be in his best and wittiest vein. It is easy to conceive the enthusiasm with which old and young patrons of the Savoy will look forward to a "first night" so heavily charged with pleasant possibilities.

The Vagrant.

As a gentleman was having his luncheon in the coffee-room of a Birmingham hotel he was much annoyed by another visitor, who during the whole of the meal stood with his back to the fire warming himself and watching him partake of his repast.

At length, unable to endure it any longer, he rang the bell and said:—

"Waiter, kindly turn that gentleman round; I think he is done on that side."

The slightly-nervous and newly appointed Brigade Major had remarked more than once, "I am—er—on the staff," when the dear old Colonel chipped in, "Dear me—dear me! 'ith a little belt round your middle on the end of a long chain?" It was unkind, but fitted like a glove.

BEAR AND ELK SHOOTING.

The number of bears I have shot is, I think, thirty-nine, besides several wounded which got away—probably to die a lingering death—a circumstance I very much regretted but had no power to prevent. Nine or ten of these animals were grizzlies, the remainder were of the common American species, which is sometimes black, often brown, and occasionally parti-coloured—black and brown. Nearly all these were killed with muzzle-loading percussion guns—the first before I was twenty years of age, and the last about twenty-five years later. They were nearly all bears that accidentally came in my way while I was rambling about the North American continent in search of Nature's beauties, and most of them fell during the early part of my career. During the last years of my travels very few bears were seen, and those were very shy, so rapidly did the peopling of the wildernesses destroy the wild animals or drive them to the shelter of inaccessible hiding places.

Concerning the difficulty and danger of bear-shooting I can say little with the authority of an expert in sport. It would not be wise for a weak-nerved man to attempt to kill a grizzly, because if he missed his aim or wounded the animal without disabling it the consequences might be very serious. American trappers were very loth to attack grizzlies single-handed. They usually went on bear-shooting excursions in parties, and attacked the animals from as many points as possible. The attention of the bear was thus diverted from any particular one of its enemies, and if, by chance, one of the men was so unfortunate as to fall into its clutches, he had many friends to help him out of his difficulties. Even thus aided, the man did not always escape—at any rate, without having what I have heard described as "Grip's ten commandments" left upon him.

It is the grip of a bear which is supposed to be fatal; but the claws plays no mean part in destroying a foe. I saw one trapper who had escaped from the clutches of a black bear, and the terrible marks he bore showed that he had experienced a narrow escape of having the animal's claws driven clean through the muscles of his sturdy back into his heart and lungs.

Bears, especially grizzlies, often bite, and then they crush the bones to splinters, leaving little hope of recovery to the miserable hunter, even if he is speedily rescued by his comrades.

The great object in shooting bears is to disable them with the first or second shot. If this is not done there is but little chance for the man; for the animal is on him before he can reload, even with a breechloader. Repeating rifles are not heavy enough to attack grizzlies with. Of course, if there is a party of men, the bear may be riddled, but this is not a sportsman-like way of killing game.

There are only two spots where it is immediately fatal to plant a bullet in a grizzly—the brain, and a shot straight in the chest from the front, so that the ball shall traverse down the body. If a side shot is taken, the object should be to smash the shoulder-blade. This cripples the bear to the extent of preventing it from coming up with the hunter, who may easily keep out of its way and destroy it at leisure. A bullet through the heart will not stop any bear, and they generally live for many hours after the infliction of a wound of this character.

Personally, I never experienced much danger in bear-shooting, though once or twice I had some exciting adventures. My first bear, for instance, caught me on ground from which I could not retreat, and was compelled to shoot it to escape. Bears, as a rule, do not attack man unless provoked or fearful that their retreat is imperilled, but on this occasion the animal was attracted by the scent of some freshly killed birds which hung at my belt. I do not hesitate to say that it was the desperation of fear that kept me cool. I suffered the bear to come very close before I fired, and I had the good fortune to kill it without difficulty.

Many years afterwards I had another surprise by a bear—a grizzly this time. It was behind some rocks, and I came upon it so suddenly that I nearly trod upon it. I think it must have been asleep, as it did not seem to either hear or sniff my approach. It rose with a savage growl, but one shot through the head (almost a snap-shot) killed it.

On another occasion, when I was armed with a shot-gun only, I surprised a grizzly (and myself most unpleasantly so) by walking round the corner of a rock almost into its arms. Providently, the shock was mutual, After staring at each other for what seemed to me the longest five minutes I had ever known, we both decided on a retreat. After I had retired some distance I looked behind to see if my friend were following. Bruin was sitting on his haunches looking after me, but the moment I turned he dropped on all fours and shuffled off with an ungainly haste that, at any other time, would have amused me greatly. I have always paid much respect to good examples, and I imitated this one to the letter. I never afterwards went bird-shooting in wild spots without carrying a good rifle slung to my back.

The true elk is the moose deer, but the former term is misapplied, by Americans, to the wapiti, one of the largest of the family, and a very noble animal.

When I first visited the Wild West, wapiti were so abundant that it was a not uncommon sight to see a herd of 500 or more; for wapiti were fond of congregating together, which moose are not. Moose form "yards," that is, family parties, generally consisting of one old bull, one or two younger males or bull calves, and five or six does, with a young one or two. Forty years ago 12 or 14 head were a good "yard" in Canada and the Northern States. Now, a yard of six or seven has to be searched for long and far. Yards are only formed in the winter, when there is snow on the ground, and they were death-traps to the animals until it was made illegal to kill yarded moose. At other times of the year bull moose were usually found singly, or fighting with an antagonist. To those who know how to go about the work, moose-slaying is not more exciting than ox-felling.

A yard is space of ground surrounded by the snow which the animals pile up by scraping. They cannot escape from it until the thaw sets in, and they exist by eating the leaves of the overhanging evergreens, etc.

It was otherwise with the wapiti, or elk. These timid creatures soon learned to scent man and to know that the "smell of Esau" meant death. As they inhabited open, plain country, it was often necessary to stalk a herd for many hours before a shot could be obtained. The firing at them often occasioned so much terror that I have known a herd run fifty miles at least before stopping, and if fired at on several successive days quite forsake a district and go no trapper could tell where.

Of course, these deer were easily killed with rifle fire. If the wound was not in a vital part they might run for miles before dropping, but if it was at all serious they invariably bled to death.

It was advisable not to immediately pursue a wounded wapiti or moose, because, if the stricken animal found itself in no pressing danger it was very likely to lie down. Then its fate was sealed; in a few minutes the wound stiffened, and the doomed creature could not rise. I remember on one occasion a wounded wapiti running a distance of about eight miles before it dropped, the whole way being marked by a line of blood, which shows the immense quantity these animals must have in their veins. In fact, both wapiti and moose are full of blood, but they are rarely furnished with a particle of fat; hence the meat is coarse, to say the best of it, and a few pounds of bear's flesh is worth the entire carcase of a moose or wapiti.

Bears are always fat, except just after a hibernation and about the end of autumn (the "fall," as Americans invariable call it) they become rolling butter-tubs—or, rather, perhaps I should say used to become; for in these latter days scarcity of food and incessant persecution have caused a marked deterioration of all the preying animals of North America, wolves and foxes excepted.

The excitement and pleasure of moose and wapiti shooting consisted entirely in the preliminary stalking of the animals, and the uncertainty of the hunter succeeding in getting within effective range of the cautious animals. The fright occasioned amongst them by the shooting of one of their number was so great that it was rarely possible for the hunter to follow them up and obtain a second shot.

Occasionally large parties of mounted men surrounded a herd of wapiti and so confused and harassed the unfortunate animals that they broke up into small parties, and then the slaughter was sometimes considerable.

At the present time there are many wapiti and moose in the Rocky Mountains at an elevation and in spots where there were none when I was traversing the region.—P. F. in Shooting Times.

THE PECULIARITIES OF SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Before I commenced my amateur attempts at boring shot gun barrels, it had always seemed strange to me that there should be so much individuality in fowling pieces. Rifles of the same calibre, chambered for the same cartridge, if well made, behave very much alike; but shot guns are different, each one seems to have special likes and dislikes of its own. It pays a man well to find out all he can about his pet shot gun, for there is certain to be some particular combination as regards size and charge of shot, and make and weight of powder, which will suit it better than anything else.

The reason for this, as I said above, you find out soon enough when trying to bore a shot gun barrel yourself. Theoretically the barrel should be a true cylinder up to the commencement of the choke, but practically nearly every barrel tapers slightly owing to the wear of the boring bit. Few gunmakers trouble I fancy to make the bore a true cylinder by the subsequent use of a long parallel lead lap; nor does a slight taper appear to have a bad effect on the shooting. Then the exact distance of the commencement of the slope up to the choke, and the angle of that slope, must always be variable quantities. The shooting of shot guns is largely a matter of trying a few shots, and then altering the choke, and then firing more shots, and so on. Thus there are many gunmakers who turn good shooting guns, but never make two exactly alike. Firms like the Winchester Arms Company, who make their shot guns as well as their rifles entirely by machinery, attain much closer uniformity in their products; but when as with English gunmakers, the choke and its slope are touched up with emery as wanted, until the pattern comes up to the standard required, it is obvious that no two barrels can be just alike.

In my own case the boring of ·360 and ·410 shot barrels was a much more chancy undertaking than it would be for a regular gunmaker, and so the touching up with emery, and trial on the plate, were processes which had to be repeated again and again. In the case of one of the ·360 barrels turned out by the joint efforts of my mechanical friend and myself, the results were so good that we have not yet been able to make a second barrel which will equal them. This is the more annoying as the ·360 in question has some bad tool marks and rings in the choke: two other barrels of the same calibre made since, are apparently perfect inside, while the angle and degree of choke are as close to the measurements of the original, as we can possibly get them. Despite this the first and worst bored gun shoots superlatively well, and we cannot make the others quite reach its standard.

A common way by which gunmakers improve the shooting of a choke bored gun, is to run an emery lap over about an inch or so of the bore, just below the slope of the choke. This operation causes a small jug or enlargement of calibre; and as this is just behind the constriction of the choke, it has the effect of increasing the degree of choke and so improves the closeness of the pattern. It was by the subsequent jugging that we got the shooting of the first ·360 so close. Unfortunately a jug choke is most difficult to measure exactly: with an ordinary choke one can pour melted lead into the bore, and so get an exact cast of the choke and the slope to it, but with a jug of course this is impossible, as the lead would not come owing to the enlargement being of greater diameter than the cylindrical portion of the barrel below the choke. Thus the exact amount and shape of the jug so successfully given to our first ·360, cannot unfortunately be ascertained.

As guns vary thus in position, degree, and slope of choke, it is not surprising to find that a certain combination of powder and shot may suit one barrel to perfection, but give poor results out of another chambered for the same cartridge. A tight barrel, i.e., one that is somewhat below its standard calibre, will naturally do best with a comparatively small charge. A barrel of larger size than the standard requires slightly more powder and shot to make it do its best. We made a nominal ·410, with the cylinderical portion of its barrel ·395 in diameter. This gun owing to its tight barrel gives considerably more resistance than usual to the passage of the felt wad up the bore: as a result it shoots very hard and well with Schultze, this powder requiring considerable resistance to make it perform well in a small bore. A ·360 made rather too large in the bore, will not shoot Schultze at all, and requires a very heavy charge of Black to make it give respectable penetration.

Then size of shot is all important. Pellets should be chosen which will fit in perfect layers in the muzzle of the gun, where the diameter of the bore is the smallest. Having found a suitable sized shot and made sure by shooting the gun for pattern that it gives the highest possible results, a note should be made not only of the number of the shot, but also the maker. A number made by one manufacturer, is seldom the same size as the same number of shot from another factory. As an instance also of how powder matters . . I was testing cartridges some years ago from a favourite gun which I had had for a long time. The pattern this gun made when first manufactured, was 185 with both barrels; I had again and again confirmed the maker's figures, with both black and smokeless powders. During the trials referred to I tested a new smokeless powder, and to my astonishment, my old gun proceeded to regularly put patterns of 200 and a little over, with the greatest steadiness on the plate. I have no reason now to think that the powder was an atom better than some half dozen other smokeless compounds, but just by chance it happened in an extraordinary manner to suit the boring of my gun better than anything else.

The above notes suffice I fancy to indicate the desirability of seeking out the particular charge that suits a gun, and sticking to it religiously.

AN authentic story is told of one famous club in St. James's-street, where a number of ancient members made it a law to themselves to reject everyone without exception who offered himself as a candidate. This practice of blackballing was long held as an imperative and unbreakable rule, but was at length evaded by a stratagem. At one election a number of a newcomer's friends were in attendance, but outside at a distance from the club-house. No one appeared in the committee-room, and it was generally supposed that there would be no quorum. The malcontents, therefore, abstained from voting. But when only a few minutes of the legal time for balloting remained, and the servants were at the point of removing the ballot-boxes, an overwhelming number of the candidate's friends rushed in and elected him before the slightest opposition could be organized. After this is absurd system of blackballing was dropped, and the club to-day is still alive and prosperous.

LONDON, Friday, 20th August 1909.

WINDSOR.

THE fixture on the Ray's meadows last Saturday proved intensely enjoyable, and throughout the afternoon good sport was provided, notwithstanding the fact that the first event resulted in a walk-over. The attendance was good and as each of the last five races provoked plenty competition visitors could not complain of the sport provided. Results :—

STOCKTON.

The capital attendance at the opening of the Stockton Summer Meeting (Tuesday) afforded all the evidence that could be needed that the long period of trade depression among Teesiders had at last come to an end. Not only on the far side of the course was the muster noticed to be of goodly dimensions, but in all other departments; and with the light perfect, the going good, and the whether remaining fine though dull, visitors to the Mandale Bottoms can be said to have participated in a sparkling day's racing. Results :—

Unmistakable traces of the severity of Tuesday night's hurricane were left behind on the Mandale Bottoms next day. Tents on the far side of the course were levelled to the ground, large pools of water had to be waded through in the paddock and other enclosures, while on the course itself stood miniature lakes, through which the horses galloped and sent up heavy sprays. In the endeavour to ensure some degree of dryness under foot for their visitors, the executive ordered cart loads of straw to be spread alike in the members' enclosure, Tattersall's, and paddock; but as rain continued to descend in torrents the afternoon through, their efforts were in vain, the day's sport being conducted under the most depressing conditions. It therefore speaks eloquently for the popularity of Stockton Summer Meeting that so many people braved the elements, though with but one solitary favourite proving successful, the general discomfiture of backers was naturally increased. Results:—

GOLF.

CALCUTTA CUP.—The Royal and Ancient Golf Club's handicap tournament for the Calcutta Cup was brought to a conclusion on the new course at St. Andrews when, in the final of eighteen holes, Captain R. A. Anstruther, scratch, beat Mr. H. O. Curtis, handicap 6, by 3 up and 2 to play. Fineweather prevailed, but a strong south-westerly wind made accurate golf somewhat difficult.

Captain Anstruther took the lead at the first hole, but Mr. Curtis drew level at the second in a perfect 4 to 5. At the third he made one of his few mistakes. Weakness on the green cost him the hole, and Captain Anstruther again secured the lead. Captain Anstruther became 2 up at the fourth, but the next hole was secured by Mr. Curtis with one of his allowance strokes. Going to the sixth Captain Anstruther made two fine drives on to the green, and won the hole in 4 to 6. He was bunkered from his tee shot to the next hole, and, being short with his pitch, his lead was again reduced to 1 up.

After a half at the eighth, the match was squared at the ninth, where Captain Anstruther missed a short putt. He regained the lead at the tenth, where he was down in a perfect 4 to 6, and from this point Mr. Curtis never succeeded in drawing level. The receiver of odds halved the eleventh with one of his strokes, but he lost the twelfth, and Captain Anstruther again became 2 up. The thirteenth was halved in an indifferent 4, and Mr. Curtis divided the fourteenth with the aid of one of his strokes.

After an indifferent drive to the fifteenth Mr. Curtis was bunkered, and after having played three more he gave up the hole. Captain Anstruther was now dormy, and a half in 5 at the sixteenth gave him the match by 3 and 2.

YORKSHIRE vs. LANCASHIRE.—On the links at South Shore, Blackpool, on Monday, the annual team contest between the professionals of Yorkshire and Lancashire was won, for the second year in succession, by Yorkshire, Yorkshire secured the singles by 8 to 4, and proved successful on the day by 11 to 7, the foursomes resulting in a tie of 3 each.

In the Singles, most of the spectators followed the match beween Alexander Herd, the open champion of 1902, and Tom Ball, who has been runner-up in the championship for the last two years. Herd approached splendidly, and, after turning all square, won by 3 and 1. His score was 68 (35 out and 33 home). The next two Yorkshiremen also recorded wins Edward Ray beating T. G. Renouf by 3 and 2, and Walter Toogood defeating T. Simpson by one hole. For Lancashire, Harry Simpson showed brilliant form when beating G. Cawkwell by 3 and 2. He went round in 66, holing every putt—one stroke worse than James Braid's competition record for the links. His figures were:—Out: 321455344 (34); home: 344443343 (32)—66.

In the Foursomes, Herd and Ray, who won the first three holes in 3, 2, 3, beat Ball and Renouf by 5 and 3. Fine weather prevailed all day.

Appended are the scores and the margins by which the games were won:—

SWIMMING.

THE BIG SWIM THROUGH LONDON.—On Saturday, the 14th August Jarvis, the amateur long-distance champion of the world, was beaten in the greatest swimming race ever held. The Weekly Dispatch S. C. gold trophy was won after a fast and gallant race by Henry Taylor, the Olympic champion, who beat his great rival by over five minutes. No more exciting contest has ever been held. Crowds, hundreds of thousands strong, lined the route and the winner had an enthusiastic welcome at H.M.S. Buzzard.

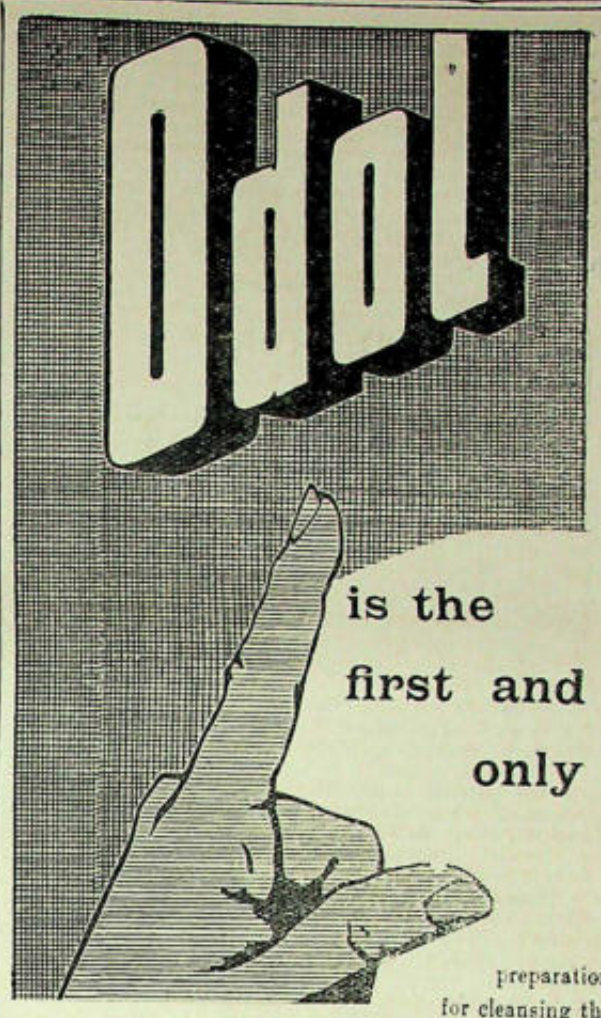
Of the thirty-two competitors who started in the race only seven retired. Every one of the eight girls finished, Miss Ethel Shipley, of Leicester, winning the special ladies' gold medal. The first three to arrive were:—

H. Taylor	1
J. A. Jarvis	2
F. Kearsley	3

The first three ladies were:—

Miss Ethel Shipley	1
Miss Lily Smith	2
Miss Olive Carson	3

Thus the favourites of both sexes were beaten, the winners in each case having entered the race for the first time.



Mr. Henry Taylor, the winner, is one of the best known swimmers in the world. When the Olympic Games were on in London last year some brilliant feats were performed by Mr. Taylor, who is a Lancashire man. In all he won three medals, beating the champions of Australasia and Austria in the final of the 100 metres (1(9·3) race. In the 1,500 metres (slightly under one mile) he beat the same two men in the final. He also won the 500 metres race.

Mr. Taylor represented Great Britain at the Olympic Games at Athens in 1906 with conspicuous success.

Taylor's time was 3hrs. 28mins. 38secs. He has beaten Jarvis's time of last year by nearly eight minutes.

Jarvis finished in 3hrs. 34mins. 28secs.

CYCLING.

N.C.U. CHAMPIONSHIPS.—The last of the National Cyclists' Union national championships—viz., the fifty miles (tandem paced) and the one mile itandem, in addition to a two miles tandem handicap, were decided at the picturesque London County Athletic Grounds, Herne Hill, on the 11th August. The proceedings commenced with the one mile tandem championship, which was won by Johnson and Hamlin, of the Putney A.C., who defeated McKaig and Piercy. But the latter crew lodged an objection, with the result that the two pairs rode their race again in which Hamlin and Johnson again won, but much more easily.

The tandem handicap was won by the limit pair, W.B. Brown and J. E. Killingback of the Kentish Wheelers, with 300 yards start. The fifty miles championship brought out seven starters, including the holder, C. H. Bartlett, the 100 kilometres Olympic champion, and W. J. Pett, who won in 1906-7. Punctures were frequent, both on the part of competitors and pacing tandems. Details appended:—

One Mile Tandem Championship (Holders—W.H.T. Isaacs and C. Brooks).—Final heat: H.T. Johnson and F.G. Hamlin Putney A.C., 1; C. McKaig, Putney A.C., and E.C. Piercy, Polytechnic C.C., 2; H.H. Lee and W. R. Pitts, Putney A. C., 3; G.W. Bishop, Beaumont C.C. and J. Hardy, Memorial R.C., 4. Bishop and Hardy led to the bell, when McKaig and Piercy challenged, but Johnson and Hamlin secured the lead entering the home straight and won all out by a length, while a length and a half divided second and third. Time—2mins. 8⅗secs. McKaig and Piercy lodged an objection to the winners for boring and the two crews rode again with the same result, the time being 2mins. 28⅘secs.

Two Miles Tandem Handicap.—Final heat: W.B. Brown and J.E. Killingback, Kentish Wheelers, 300 yards start, 1; C.W. Bailey, Memorial R. C. and E. E. Hicks, Polytechnic C. C., 170, 2; H. H. Lee and W. R. Pitts, Putney A. C., 100, 3. The winners led all the way and won a hard race by a length and a quarter; fifty yards divided second and third. Time—3mins. 50⅗secs.

50 Miles Championship (Tandem Paced).—The following started:—C. H. Bartlett (holder); S. F. Bailey Polytechnic C. C.; W. Yaxely, Paddington C. C.; H. H. Coombes, Paddington C. C.; G. W. Bishop, Beaumont C.C.; C. A. Denny, Polytechnic C. C.; and W. J. Pett, Putney A. C.

Denny was first away and covered the first mile in 2mins. 10⅗secs At five miles Coombes was leading by a few feet in 10mins. 18⅗secs. At ten miles Coombes led Bartlett and Pett in 20mins. 56⅗secs., and at fifteen miles the order was Coombes, Bartlett, and Pett, all three riding together in 31mins. 47⅗secs. At eighteen miles Yaxley's back tyre blew off and he had a very fortunate escape, but nothing daunted, he remounted and continued the race, but soon retired. At twenty miles Coombes Bartlett, and Pett were the leaders in 42mins. 24⅗secs.

At twenty-five miles Bailey, Coombes, and Bartlett were leading, in 53mins 43⅗secs. At 1hr. Coombes led with 27 miles 1,360 yards to his credit, at 30 miles Bartlett had regained the lead with Coombes and Bailey in close attendance in 1hr. 5mins. 24secs. At 32 miles a very bad spill occurred, in which Bailey, Coombes, and Pett all came a cropper, but all three remounted. Bartlett, who was in front at the time, gained a lap, while Denny lost a lap, and Pett, Coombes and Bailey lost two laps. At 35 miles Bartlett, Denny, and Coombes, were the leaders in 1hr. 15mins. 42secs. Forty miles saw Bartlett leading Denny by 1¼ laps (730 yards), with Pett third, in 1hr. 25mins. 38secs. Coombes retired at 38 miles. At 45 miles Bartlett was leading Pett by two laps, with Denny another lap away, third. Time, 1hr. 35mins. 53⅕secs. The race during the last five miles was keenly contested, but Bartlett continued to ride very strongly, and he eventually won, amid great applause, by 1,066 yards from Pett, while Denny was 1,006 yards behind Pett, third. Result: C. H. Bartlett, 1hr. 46mins. 10⅖secs. 1; W. J. Pett, 1hr. 47mins. 28secs. 2; C. A. Denny, 1hr. 48mins. 51⅕secs., 3; S F. Bailey, 1hr. 49mins. 36⅖secs., 4.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 28th August.—Beadnell's 12 noon. It was a nice cloudy morning to start with but was very close and warm and later on the rain came down in torrents and continued the whole afternoon. Being a general holiday the attendance at the Meet was quite a large one. Hounds were thrown into Beadnell's Shola without result, as they were proceeding to draw the bog up to Hearty a jack was viewed away to the right near the wire fence, the pack was soon on his line, holding Warwick on their right they crossed the stream below Bracken and turned right-handed along the edge of the bog below Paragon and fairly raced up past Karada Mund, Leaving Glyn's Court on right they topped the small hill and dipped down to the left of Diana's Dingle, straight down the ghat the jack, however, slipped them at the bottom on the Sholur Bridle Path. Some time was spent by the field waiting for hounds to come back from the ghats in a heavy downpour of rain and a thick mist rolling up from the north blotted out the whole country. Hounds then drew up towards Lord Robert's Shola, just below it they picked up a line and turning back down the valley to the left ran down the ghats again, the jack, however, escaped them below Diana's Dingle. On coming back they drew the belt of gorse that runs past Glyn's Covert. I believe this gorse was planted by the late Colonel Jago many years ago when he was Master of the Ootacamund hounds. It makes a capital covert for jacks, and on this occasion one was found at once, jumping up right in front of hounds he headed down towards the ghats and was allowed to continue his way unmolested as a fresh jack happend to cross his line and led hounds to Kengod Mund Shola, and on through Kingodu Hill shola and to the left past the top of Coffee Shop Shola into Road Shola. From here they crossed over into Dormer and from thence to Temple Shola, turning out of it down to the right they swept down towards the river: just short of it they turned into a small covert in which another jack was on the move and the pack divided, one lot hunting back to Dormer and dividing there again on another jack jumping up, hounds were stopped and taken home as it was getting dark.

Monday, 30th August.—Lake End 8 A.M. A long draw through Campbell's Copse and on down the Blackmore Vale, but it was not till we got to Rawlin's Nullah that a couple of outlying jacks was found. The one taking a line to the right was selected: he led hounds through Bluegums and Porlock to the left of Sheffield Plantation down to Leeds, coming out at the bottom he kept down the stream to just below Owl Crossing when he turned up the hill to the right under Hecuba, then down to the left and crossed the stream below Dharma Tope, still keeping left-handed he rose the hill above Melkavai and passed on into Porcupine in which the hunt practically ended, as there were several brace of jacks on the move and it is impossible to get the pack away on any particular jack, the coverts are so large and close together. It was a very wet morning and at one time the mist was also troublesome.

Tuesday, 31st August.—Avalanche Finger Post at 12 noon. The usual couple of jacks was found close by Finger Post Shola, one of them going away to the left crossed the Melkundah Road and ran hounds out of scent on the road not far from the Ittalur Village. The Master then moved down into the valley to the Avalanche Bridle Path, turning off it to the right drew up in a northerly direction, hounds finding almost at once ran up through Hookham Snivey and just right of Vane's Copse turned down towards the Nanjanad Village and up again to Nanjanad Scrub in which they lost him. The next jack was found below Egerton's Crossing, he led hounds smartly through Climbank and swung left handed into Middle Bit, from here he went away over the top of Vokal and dropped down as if for Pug Pits but turned up again through May Shola and was viewed away from the top with hounds close at him, but fearing to face the open he doubled back into the covert and then followed a pretty piece of hunting. From the height above we watched hounds hunting up and down and working well together they finally killed him at the bottom of May Shola. The Master moved off from here to Schmidt's Shola, hounds touched a line above Kurathagulli and ran down the hill then swung round right-handed through Sambur Shola to Nanjanad Scrub to below Vane's Copse, here they turned up again to the top and holding Schmidt's Shola on their right came back to the ridge where they had found then swung back to above Sambur Shola. A fresh jack unfortunately jumped up here causing the pack to divide. The leading hounds sticking to their hunted jack chased him over the Little Dangar Ride down past Vane's Copse and back above Peaulieu and lost him short of Middle Bit Shola. The main body of the pack having been stopped on the fresh jack was brought on by the second whip and a wide cast was made but without success.

BOATBUILDING AND PACE.

It was pointed out to me by a famous veteran soon after Henley that the straining of the abdominal (or "abominable," as some would say) muscles has become a much more frequent incident of late than it used to be, and he deplores even the possibility of such an occurrence writes "An Old Blue" in a Home exchange. In the old days the sharpness and crisp neatness of the oarsmen was pleasantly conspicuous both at the beginning and the finish. The unduly protracted slide of modern eights puts a man in a position of mechanical inefficiency, because at the beginning he cannot really shove until his shins have left the perpendicular over his heels, and at the finish he flattens his knees with (in most cases) a rounded back and hollowed abdomen. Struggling to retrieve the shapeless carcase that wobbles above the stretcher of the man behind him, and following his coach's instructions not to use his straps, he falls back, for the recovery, on abdominal muscles, which were never meant for such a task, and, of course, trouble ensues.

Like all virtues, the virtues of length and shove may be exaggerated. I have said enough about the first. As to the second, I may improve the proverb by putting it that a pennyworth of human energy saved is worth twopence towards the sum total that means success; and if I am right in what was published here on Thursday we now apply our strength in such a way as to diminish its propulsive effect and increase the price we pay for it in exhaustion, whereas we fail to appreciate the enormous value of a quality that is somwhat negative in its aspect, I mean the value of never interfering with "the run of the boat," with its progress during the two-thirds of the distance covered between each immersion of the blades. If she runs eight feet while the blades are covered, she ought to cover sixteen while they are out.

It is an accepted axiom that a boat travelling well should "cover its water" at a fairly fast stroke, in other words, stroke's blade should come into the water beyond the eddy made by two's blade in its previous effort. Now the distance covered by an eight doing the record over the Henley course is 17 feet per second. It is, therefore, well within the mark to say that a good crew rowing 40 would move 16 feet during the two-thirds of a stroke (counted from one immersion to another) that elapse while the blades are out of the water, and that distance is more than enough for stroke's blade to get well beyond the eddy made by two. The primary excellence of the Belgian style is that they swing forward so steadily and slowly that the boat nearly always does her 16 feet for this period. They have never got under 7mins. for the Henley course, and so they have never moved as fast as our best English crews; but, considering their very crude ideas of training, and their more conspicuous faults (as we consider them) in oarsmanship, this one virtue must mean a very great advantage against any English crew that does not possess the rhythm and excellence of our very best eights.

Nothing more illuminating on this point has been published of late than the "opinions" of English rowing authorised to be given to readers of the Field by Emile Wauters, Julien de Dryver, and Victor de Bischop, the trainers of the three Belgian crews that won the Grand Challenge. They object to "the English style" for four reasons: (1) Our use of the arms, which should only be a link between the oar and the body, (2) our lack of beginning as contrasted with the way they plunge in the blade with straight arms, (3) our letting the slide go before the body instead of working the two together, (4) our dragging out the finish instead of keeping the chest forward and swinging back the elbows and shoulders. I have called these criticisms illuminating" because no one who knows anything of first-rate rowng can avoid recognising every point just mentioned as a definite and glaring fault which every English coach does his best to eradicate.

Our Belgian friends have been keen enough to see why our crews have been beaten, but they have not understood that those crews lost their races owing to exhibiting points of style which we all know to be faults. In other words, the beaten English crews have not been first-rate crws, or they would not have committed these errors. The points enumerated are by no manner of means distinctive of "the English style"; they are precisely contrary to our most cherished tenets. "Fas est et ab hoste doceri." No more scathing comment on the rowing form prevalent since 1905 has yet appeared than this obviously honest and impartial description of what in these years has appeared to the Belgian coaches to be English oarsmanship. It may have so appeared to them in 1906, and 1907, and 1909. But they can have seen nothing of it in 1908. And why? Not merely because we won and they lost in that year, but because the winners of the Olympic gold medals were rowing better than any crew has rowed since 1900. Like the Cambridge crew of 1900, or the Oxford crew of 1897, and a very few others, that Olympic eight was good enough and strong enough to row the true English style perfectly, in spite of sliding right up to their work and going far back at the finish.

To return to my original point—the value of the second in time absorbed during the period when the blades are out of the water—if a fast crew can let their boat travel 16 feet in that time merely by such good watermanship and steady moving as the Belgians exemplified, it obviously becomes of the greatest importance that their boat should be so built as to travel smoothly and fast during the same period. I have already spoken of riggers, oars, and slides, and that part of the mechanical outfit which immediately affects both the distance of 8 feet travelled while the blade is immersed and the man whose efforts and strength are then utilised; but now we touched on the after-results of those efforts—results which cover twice the distance, be it observed, and results over which the man can at the time exert merely what I have called a negative influence; in other words, he can only give the boat her best chance by doing nothing to stop her run; his active effort is over; until the next stroke begins he is, comparatively speaking, passive. This period, then, though valuable to him for recuperative purposes, and though largely influenced by his original propulsive motion, is the period when the design of the hull in which he sits becomes a predominant factor. If, as I think I have shown, we need to reconsider questions of rig, are we not also equally bound to reconsider the problem of construction under water?

The mere fact that a boat has been built which is of normal length and breadth, and of normal weight-carrying capacity, but exposes much less surface to friction, is surely an enormously important consideration for the future. Cowes week offers one great contrast with Henley Regatta, and that is in the interest taken in the designs of various boats. At Henley we scarcely remember who built even a winning craft, in spite of the fact that the greatest revolution in light boat-building occurred in these waters just fifty-three years ago, when Matt Taylor adapted to eights the principle of keel less hulls which Clasper had invented for smaller boats, and laid down lines of construcion which lasted for half a century, and are still believed to be right by so good an authority as Dr. Warre. The new school of design tends more to the principles of Cowes than to the traditions of Henley. Whereas the broadest part of a Matt Taylor boat is about No. 5, and fines away from there to the rudder, the model favoured by Mr. Riach exactly reverses those ideas, and produces a boat which may be briefly described as setting Matt Taylor's rudder where his bows used to be and vice versa.

The new principle, in fact, gives a bluff stern, and lines that fine slowly forward from six's seat to the cutwater. This is claimed to produce much less friction beneath the waterline and therefore to improve the run of the boat in that important interval while the blades are out, which I have already emphasised. It was only natural that this should be a result of applying to rowing the principles which makes a yacht's hull slip easily through the waves. Though the method of propulsion is quite different in the two cases, the travelling of the ship after the impulse of the blades has been applied would be very much the same as the motion of a yacht before the wind; and if a crew were as steady forward as the Belgians are at their best, the new boat should certainly "cover more water" (in the sense already explained) than if she were built on the old lines. Provided the lines of her hull also admitted of such an effective application of weight and strength, through the oarblades, as was formerly the case, and provided she was rigged on the right principles, it seems to me that we have here a distinct advantage of at least a length over the Henley course, if not more. She might not be so lively off the hands as the old models, because her pace would be relatively greater when the blades were out than when thy were immersed; but if the crew realised that change in the feel of her, there seems every prospect that she would give us as great an advance in boat-building as anything seen since Matt Taylor's first eight won the Grand.

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSEES.—The annual match was this year played at Poona on the 6th and 7th instant and ended in a very easy win for the Presidency by an innings and 71 runs. They took first knock and compiled 192, Cooper not out 55 being top scorer and Captain Greig making 36. The Parsees then went in and were all dismissed for 37. Warden 12 not out being the only one to reach double figures. Following on they fared a little better but could only score 84 all out, the Presidency thus winning as stated. The winners put a very strong team into the field while the Parsees were conspicuously weak. Score:—

POONA GYMKHANA vs. BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Played on the 3rd and 4th instant ending in a draw. Bombay batted first but were all out for 78 Poona then went in and at the end of the first day's play had lost eight wickets for 153. The remaining players added 18 to this total next day the innings closing for 166. Bombay went to the wickets again and showed much better form: Sanderson, Stileman, Elliott and Eberhardie all played attractive cricket and when time was called the scoring board showed 205 for the loss of six wickets. BOMBAY RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

WEST RIDINGS vs. LEICESTERS.—A telegram in our last issue announced the defeat of the Leicesters by the Yorkshiremen. Appended are further details. The teams met on the Cooperage on Monday, the 30th ultimo, and an excellent game was witnessed. The Leicesters were the first to attack on starting, but Morris relieved and the West Ridings put in some good runs. Hougham stopped a couple of rushes and then had to touch down to save. The Ridings continued to press and Ryan tried to drop a goal but the kick went wide. A free kick to the Leicesters brought relief and tall kicking by the opposing backs followed. Then the Yorkshiremen attacked. Once more Turner and Ryan both made unsuccessful attempts to drop a goal and half time arrived without score. On resuming the Leicesters pressed but were gradually sent back and a good run by Ryan and Chapman ended in the latter crossing the line with a try for the West Ridings. The place kick failed. The Ridings kept up a strong pressure and Morris got over but was given in touch outside the line. At length the Leicesters cleared and Hyde put in a good run which was terminated by Crampton. They continued to attack for the rest of the game and Hougham twice tried to drop a goal, and though they were both unsuccessful the second very nearly saved the game. Time was called with the score.—West Ridings, 1 try; Leicesters, nil. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Crampton, back; Simpson, Chapman, Ryan and Turner: three-quarters; Wilson and Morris, halves; Webster, Wormald, Widdot, Lister (Captain), Gatacre, Shaw, Stokes and Haigh, forwards

LEICESTERS.—Hougham, back; Cooper, Dooley, Capt. Liddell and Hyde, three quarters; Gregory and Cooper, halves; Lieut. Weir, Hadley, Norman, Brewin, Attebury, Martin, Webb, and Green, forwards

CALCUTTA vs. MHOW.—Brief details of this match were given in our last issue. Calcutta had the best of matters all through but it was a very uninteresting game; both sets of forwards were fairly evenly matched but Calcutta was superior behind the scrum. The Central India team were hemmed in at the start and Burnett got over with a try, the kick failing. Calcutta were very nearly through again on resuming but a free kick stopped them but not for long, for after a drop at goal had failed the Calcutta threes took the ball down and Kay scored a try, the extra points being added. Mhow now attacked and Robinson and Oliver were prominent but nothing came of their efforts and Calcutta led by a goal and a try at the interval. On changing ends Calcutta kept up a strong pressure and at length Bocquet crossed the line with a try which was easily improved upon. Mhow then got going but a pass to one of the Calcutta players spoiled their effort. They continued to press, however, and securing from a throw in one of the Central India players dashed across with a try which was not improved upon. A scrum near the Calcutta line almost let them through again but the Ditchers relieved and rushed it to the other end where Turnbull registered another try, which Burnett converted. Calcutta kept up the pressure till the end of the game when the score read: Calcutta, 3 goals, 1 try; Mhow, 1 try. Teams :—

MHOW.—Brennan, back; Lieut. Burn, Pte. Greenhouse, Lieut. Humphrey and Lieut Oliver, three-quarters; Lieut. Mead and Robinson, halves; Lieut. Wootten, Lieut. Hornsby, Lieut. Hayes, Lieut. Longstaffe, Sergt. Parker, Lce.-Corpl. Moore and Pres. Bone and Bryan, forwards

CALCUTTA.—Oliver, back; Longbottom, Kay, Turnbull and Burnett, three-quarters; Bocquet and Wilson, halves; Cadell, Cunynghame, Macmillan, Bryce, Malcolm, Richmond, Earp and Trenchard, forwards

MADRAS vs. GLOSTERS.—These teams met on the Cooperage on the 1st instant when the soldiers were defeated by 12 points to nil. The Glosters put up a strong defence but never looked like scoring. Madras attacked right away from the start and were almost through, one of the military three-quarters saving by falling on the ball. The Glosters next rushed down but the ball was brought back and the Madras threes gave a nice exhibition of passing.

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It is now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

MADE IN A MINUTE.

Play ruled up and down for a spell and then just before half time Heffernam got possession and passing Ible raced over with the first try, Purvis' attempt to convert falling by inches. On resuming after the interval play lay almost entirely with the forwards and scrum followed scrum. At length Sayers got the ball in his own 25 and dribbling it down obtained a try. An easy kick at goal failed. Madras pressed once more and an attempt to drop a goal fell short. Purvis ran up and got the leather before Ible and got over with a try and shortly after Madras ran down and Bambridge scored. Neither try was converted and the game ended in a win for Madras by 4 goals to nil. Teams :—

GLOSTERS.—Ible, back; Hanfords, Hendy, Smith and Bartlett, three-quarters; Millwater and Murray, halves; Travall, Strong, Nash, Curtis, Hart, Hill, Lovell, and Ford, forwards

MADRAS.—T. W. Graham, back; Wigley, Johnston, Sayers and Purvis, three-quarters; Todd and Browning, halves; Capt. Heffernam, Marsh, Prendergast, Walker, Legge, Alexander, Rendall and Bambridge, forwards.

MADRAS vs. CALCUTTA.—This game on Thursday last ended in a lucky win for Madras by 9 points to 8. Calcutta gave a much better display than in their first match, whereas Madras did not show the form they exhibited against the Glosters. Play centered in the Calcutta half at the start but they cleared and took the ball down to the Madras 25 where Longbotton dodged Graham and grounded between the posts, Burnett converting. Calcutta though playing one short owing to an injury continued to have the better of the game, but there was no further scoring in the first half. Play was very level on changing ends, Calcutta being decidedly smarter in heeling out. At length Purvis got the ball and opened the Madras account by dropping a goal. Calcutta next rushed away but were stopped and Madras rallying kept the Calcutta men in their 25 line, and Johnston getting possession dropped over with a try. The major point followed and Madras kept up the pressure. A long kick at length relieved and Turnbull rushing down obtained a try. The extra points would have given Calcutta the victory, but the kick was intercepted and they retired beaten by a goal and a drop goal (9 points) to a goal and a try (8 points). Teams :—

MADRAS.— T. W. Graham, back; Wigley, Johnston, Sayers and Purvis, three-quarters; Todd and Browning, halves; Capt. Heffernam, Marsh, Prendergast, Walker, Legge, Alexander, Grenville and Bambridge, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Oliver, back; Longbottom, Kay Turnbull and Burnett, three-quarters; Wilson and Bocquet halves: Cadell, Macmillan, Cunyngham, Bryce, Malcolm, Trenchard, Dick and Earp, forwards.

Final.

WEST RIDINGS vs. MADRAS.—The tournament came to an end on Saturday last when the West Ridings beat Madras by 7 points to nil and thus won the trophy for the third year in succession. Play was principally among the forwards and the Madras threes seldom got a chance to open the game. The Yorkshiremen pressed as soon as the game started and obtained a mark. This was followed by a struggle near the Madras line but the civilians managed to clear and though kept penned up in their 25 offered a stubborn resistance. Purvis and his colleagues occasionally broke away but could not get very far and shortly before the interval Turner broke away in Madras territory and crossed over with a try, which remained unconverted. On resuming there was some long kicking by both sides and Battle ran down transferring play to the soldiers' half. The ball, however, was soon returned and an attempt to drop a goal by one of the Tykes just failed. Play continued near the Madras goal line and Purvis tackling well prevented a try. Madras made great efforts to break away but were stopped on every occasion. Just before time Chapman dropped a goal, the West Ridings thus winning by a try and a drop goal (7 points) to nil. Mrs. Wallace presented the Cup to the winners at the close of the game. Teams :—

MADRAS.—Wigley, back; Sayers, Johnston, Battle and Purvis, three-quarters Todd and Browning, halves; Heffernam, Graham Prendergast, Walker, Legge, Alexander, Rendall and Bambridge, forwards.

WEST RIDINGS.—Crampton, back; Chapman, Ryan, Turner and Wormald, three-quarters; Wilson and Morris, halves; Webster, Waddington, Widdulph, Bootland, Gatacre, Shaw Stokes and Haigh, forwards.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

DALHOUSIE vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday last, the Rangers winning by 2 tries to nil. The first half was very evenly contested; both teams attacked in turn and the interval arrived without score: On changing ends the Rangers attacked and Williams obtained a try, Cody failing with the place. Shortly after Rosetti got over near the corner flag and the attempt to majorise again failed. The Dals tried to reduce the margin in the remaining play but without success, and they returned beaten as stated. The Rangers as usual did not have their full team and played one short throughout. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Margett, full-back; Apcar, Cody, Williams and Rosetti, three-quarters; Fairly and Davis, halves; Macdonald, Forman Nicoll, Lonette, Minet, Allen and Gilmour, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Eden, full-back; Pike, Chave, Smith and Polley, three-quarters; Evans and Deware, halves; Williams, Brewire McLeod, Wilson, Smith, Wardel, Bates and Dovay, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. E. Martelli.

CUSTOMS vs. EAST YORKS.—The Customs were unable to get together a team for this match on Saturday and the East Yorks secured the two points without playing.

CALCUTTA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Neither side was at full strength for the return match on Saturday. The game lay chiefly with the forwards, but when the Calcutta backs got the ball they gave a good account of themselves. Kerr got over with the first try shortly after the start. Whitely added the extra points and himself obtained a try shortly after. This was unconverted. The United Services pulled themselves together and attacked. Wheatly got over with a try and added the extra points himself. Even play characterised the opening of the second half. Then Calcutta pressed and Meldrum and Morrison scored tries. The first was unconverted but the extra points were added to Morrison's effort, Calcutta thus winning by 2 goals and 2 tries to a goal.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE RANGERS and East Yorks played their return match on Tuesday evening on the Police ground, a close game resulting in a win for the men from Fyzabad by three points to nothing. The first half was very evenly contested, but in the second half the East Yorks scored through Brownlow the kick at goal failing. Rangers, as usual, turned out short, three of their men failing to put in an appearance, but had they been at full strength it is probable that the result of the match would have been different. Failure to put a full side in the field has been the rule rather than the exception with Rangers this season and this shows a great slackness among the members to which, to a certain extent must be attributed the poor position they have taken in the League.

ON Wednesday the return match between United Services and Dalhousie took place on the Calcutta ground, the Services winning a poor game by 16 points to 3. Dalhousie were the first to score, the kick at goal failing, but after this rebuff the Services began to assert themselves and by half time led by two tries to one. In the second half they had all the best of the game, Dalhousie falling off badly in the closing stages of the match. Chase for Services was the best player on the field and was responsible for two of their tries. The old Richmond forward is playing a splendid game just now and is perhaps the best forward I have seen so far this season, while Le is also very useful as either a half or three-quarter. In the first half the Dal. three-quarters made a mistake in kicking over the Services' back's head when they had only two or three of their opponents to pass instead of trying to go through when they would likely have scored.

OWING to the Bombay Tournament neither United Services nor Calcutta were able to put out a representative side for their return match, which took place on the Calcutta ground on Saturday. The game which resulted in win for a Calcutta by 16 points to 5, though interesting owing to the sides being fairly evenly matched, can only be described as a poor display of football, both packs being ragged in the scrum and slow and clumsy in the loose, whilst neither sets of backs showed much idea of combination. The Services were unfortunate in having to play a man short during the first half, especially as their fifteenth man when he did arrive was easily the pick of the side. Wheatley at three-quarter played well but for one very bad mistake when, by taking a flying kick at the ball instead of falling on it or gathering it, as with his size he might easily have done, he let Kerr in with one of the softest of tries. With a little more vim, dash and experience this player would be a very dangerous three-quarter. Rowlett at half played pluckily and got the ball away smartly to his three-quarters on the few occasions his forwards gave him the chance. Ward and Morrison at the base of the Calcutta scrum worked like Trojans and made the most of the few chances which came their way. Morrison shows a remarkable faculty for working his way through the opposing forwards and on several occasions he safely emerged with the ball in his possession from the thick of a forward mêlee. Of the Calcutta three-quarters neither of the centres showed up to advantage, Siddons having for him an "off" day, none of his feints deluding his vis-a-vis, the wing men on the other hand sprinted well but Meldrum was often faulty in fielding.

RANGERS flattered their supporters by securing an unlooked for and somewhat lucky victory over their neighbours the Dalhousie.

SATURDAY'S matches decided the order of the League, for although Dalhousie and East Yorks have still their postponed match to play off it will not affect the order whatever the result may be. Calcutta, last year's winners, again carry off the trophy, whilst the United Services are a good second with the East Yorks, Dalhousie, Rangers and Customs following in the order mentioned. The League has been disappointing as compared with last year owing to the fact that Calcutta won all their matches in runaway fashion, scoring 254 points against 10.

ON Tuesday evening Shropshires and United Services "B" met on the Calcutta ground, a very close and well contested game ending in a pointless draw. The play throughout was of a very interesting description, both the three-quarter lines getting plenty of the ball but neither taking full advantage of their chances. The Shropshires flung away two certain scores, the latter of which there was no excuse, for Statham with a pretty kick sent the ball right across to his wing man, who had only to catch it cleanly and fall over the line; instead of which he fumbled, giving his opponents time to come over and thus lost a splendid chance. Wheatley was the best of the Services' backs and rescued his side from more than one tight corner while he was always prominent in attack.

CUSTOMS "B" and La Martinière met on the former's ground on Thursday night, a poor game resulting in a draw of two tries each. Owing to the ball being in a very greasy condition the passing of both sides was very weak, but the Martinière boys tackled very pluckily and with more practice will become a useful side.

THE Customs in the absence of Mr. Cadell failed to put in an appearance on their own ground to meet the East Yorks on Saturday nor did they have the courtesy, I understand, to notify the latter and so save them the trouble of turning out for nothing. In the Junior League they also scratched to United Services "B" on Monday.

ON Monday evening a friendly match took place between the Shropshires and the H.L.I., the latter winning a close game by 3 points. The forwards were very evenly matched, and although the packing was, at times, ragged both sides played well. Both sets of backs were too inclined to kick instead of running, but the Shropshire's line had one nice bout of passing from which they should have scored. One of the H.L.I. half-backs unfortunately met with an accident to his head and had to temporarily retire, but he pluckily resumed shortly afterwards and covered himself with glory by scoring the only try of the match after a very good run.

AFTER the match was over on Monday night the Junior League Cup was presented to the Shropshires. Mr. Pickford congratulated the winners on their well-earned victory after which the trophy was gracefully handed over to them by Miss Lees.

THE draws for the Cup Tournaments, Senior and Junior took place on Saturday evening and the first round of the Senior Tournament will be played off on Wednesday, when the East Yorks meet Rangers, the other seven teams having drawn byes. I am glad to learn that all the matches are to be played on the Calcutta ground which is a very sensible arrangement, for not only will the teams benefit by having a good field to play on instead of a swampy marsh as would otherwise have been the case in certain matches, but also lovers of football will have the opportunity of seeing all the games. From the draw it would appear probable that Calcutta and West Ridings will meet in the final on Saturday, the 18th, when a close, hard-fought game should result. I can see no reason why Calcutta should not win provided they get their forwards better together in the scrum by having some scrum practices between now and then and can unearth a full back who can both field and kick even moderately well.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

R.G.A. vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 1st instant, a very one-sided game ending in a win for the Gunners by 14 goals to nil. In the first half Keating opened the scoring and Watts scored two goals, but in the second half the soldiers kept up a continued bombardment on the Parel goal and netted 11 points, Watts being responsible for 6. Teams :—

R.G.A.—McKeown, goal; Jones and Franklin, backs; Llewellyn, Hunt and Gill Jones, halves; Bailey, Toole, Watts, Collumbell and Keating, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Fox, goal; Thomson and Pennock, backs; Holtham, Furbisher and La Touche, halves; S. Alcock, W. Alcock, Patterson and James, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. GLOUCESTERS.—These teams met on the 2nd instant, the Gloucesters winning by 2 goals to nil. The military opened the attack and Harris scored two goals. Play then settled down. The Gymkhana made desperate efforts to score but lost chances through erratic shooting. The Gloucesters returned to the attack before the interval but there was no further scoring. On resuming the soldiers kept up the pressure and after Cox had disposed of several shots Childlow headed the ball in. Play was more equal after this, but there was no further score, many opportunities being lost owing to poor shooting. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Ruck and Scaife, backs; Barton, Cooper and Law, halves; Mason, Short, Harris, Leahy and Childlow, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Cox, goal; Holl and Cooper, backs Barrett, Wenghi and Sim, halves; Murray, Hargreaves, Moir, Price and Sharpe, forwards.

WINCHESTER®

RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

GETTING OUT OF TROUBLE IN GOLF.

HUMAN fallibility is such that even without the existence of hazards, the playing of golf would be attended by material uncertainty, but probably not to such an extent as to appeal strongly enough to the sportsman instinct of the players. The element of chance in golf exerts its appeal more powerfully as a person advances in skill and experience. Much of what is termed the "fascination of the game" proceeds from it, and consequently the various forms of hazards resulting from the work of man or nature, must be accepted by the playe s as necessary evils if the game is to retain its striking popularity.

Probably the most familiar hazards are bunkers of varying heights, sand traps (pits, etc.), tall grass, roads, fences, bushes, trees, and water hazards, i. e., brooks and lakes, or swamps. Strong and fluctuating winds and rain-soaked grounds may be included in the list of handicaps to accurate playing, as also the so-called "mental hazard," which usually has dangers more imaginary than real. Its presence suggests that disaster will follow error, therefore leading the unhardened player to become nervous and to worry, and often causes him to incur the penalty that he might have avoided with a calm, undisturbed mental attitude.

Since getting into trouble among the hazards of a well-constructed course is an easy matter the player does well to practise conscientiously the modes of escaping therefrom, with the minimum number of strokes. The soundness of his judgment in a single emergency will often save or lose him the hole, possibly the match. And it would seem axiomatic in golf that soundness of judgment can only be obtained through practice and experience. For instance, in the case of a lie close to a high bunker, say from five to six feet in height, one man may be impetuous enough to attempt to loft the ball straight over, taking a chance when if he is successful he will be a decided gainer over any other method of getting free; but after his shot, when he finds that he has imbedded the ball in the side of the bunker, repentance is sure to follow. Another man may conclude that he can get the ball over, from the same lie, by playing it diagonally over the obstruction. Often his judgment proves faulty, and the man who has been willing to play back, gaining position, is frequently seen to have shown best judgment. Granted that one man often can accomplish what another cannot, it is evident that the golfer is mistaken in attempting a difficult shot in a match simply because he has seen some one else do it. The game teaches that the player profits when he plays a difficult lie according to what his own experience has taught him he can successfully do. The mode of executing all trouble shots must depend on the particular nature of the lie. Conditions are rarely twice the same, hence the need of constant study of all the attendant circumstances when making a stroke. It is the rule of many players not to attempt to play straight over a high bunker from a lie close up, unless the ball is almost a club handle's length from it. This rule is found safe to follow when no unusual circumstances attend the lie. Complications might arise, for example, through the imbedding of the ball in soft sand or its rolling into a horse's hoof-print, etc.

Strokes to clear a bunker from a bad lie close up should be chop strokes, going into the ground, with a decidedly shortened grip. The object is to get height and distance and the stick that can be used with good results is either a niblic, with a broad face (a "pancake" niblic) or a deep-faced mashie. The extent of the necessary shortening of the grip must be regulated according to the condition of the lie. Less difficulty is of course met in getting distance and direction from a bad lie close to a low bunker, say of the three-foot variety. Sometimes the player finds that he can gain a more effective stance by resting his foot against the side of the low bunker, something he could not do in the case of a high one. It has long been a familiar rule that soling the club is not allowable when the ball is imbedded in a bunker, or lying on a road, path or in fact in any sand trap or earth hazard. Under any of these conditions the club must not touch the ground in addressing the ball. The idea of this rule has been to prevent players from flattening or scraping away obstructions or otherwise improving the lie. However, a new rule has been adopted which qualifies this regulation by providing (Rules of Golf, Rule XXII, Sec. 2).

If a ball be completely covered by sand, only so much thereof may be removed as will enable the player to see the top of the ball; if the ball be touched in removing the sand, no penalty shall be incurred.

The penalty for breach of this rule is the loss of the hole.

Arrival of the season of long and thick grass marks an increase of the golfer's troubles. Hazards of this nature along the boundaries of playing areas call for shots as difficult as bunker shots in getting back on the course. The grass catches on and winds around the club on the back swing throwing the club out of what should be the line of its swing, and has a similar effect on the forward swing. Terrific force must be put into such shots, which are the hardest kind of chop strokes, tearing up the grass by the roots if necessary, as at best one cannot get much height or distance and there is practically no follow through obtainable. A follow through is possible in tall grass only where it is of thin growth. Some players use a rake niblic in tall, thick grass, but they do not get the best results, according to reliable opinion, because the teeth or prongs, like the teeth of a rake or comb, into which the upper part of the club's face is cut, are prone to catch and entangle in the grass. Also, the hitting surface is decreased and consequently much greater force is required to get the same results that can be had from a "pancake" niblic or a deep-faced mashie. These clubs and also the mid-iron are most effective when they have stiff shafts, because the energy put into the shots will be conserved and exerted to the best advantage.

As golf balls float, streams with swift currents often cause annoying contingencies. The rules allow the player to strike at the ball while it is moving, if in the water, though he must not delay making the stroke in order to allow winn or current to better the position of the ball—penalty, loss of the hole. As in almost all trouble shots, the niblic (broadfaced) may be used in working free from water hazards. The rules provide as follows regarding water hazards.

If a ball lie or be lost in a recognized water hazard (whether the ball lie in water or not), or in casual water in hazard, the player may drop a ball under penalty of one stroke either (a) behind the hazard, keeping the spot at which the ball crossed the margin of the hazard between himself and the hole, or (b) in the hazard, keeping the spot at which the ball entered the water between himself and the hole.

The cleek and the mid-iron come into frequent use in playing out of sand traps, which hazards are subject to infinite variety. Firm stance, the body well balanced, is a requisite in shots from sandy lies running horizontally with a hole. The well-known eighteenth hole at Garden City, L. I., is an example of how difficult a hole can be made by means of sand hazards. It is one of the most difficult short holes in the country. There are sand traps at either side, and also at the rear to penalize over approach. In front is a lake, which, like a ravine, etc., is a typical example of "mental hazard," instilling fear into the player's heart that should be entirely unfounded unless he is the merest tyro. When the ball goes into a deep sand pit in medal play it is often advisable to drop back and take the penalty. This practice has been found frequently to save both worry and strokes. Of course in match play the ball must be played as it lies.

Bush hazards often conceal the ball entirely from sight. It is allowable to bend back the bushes to discover the ball though they must not be broken off. After pushing the bushes aside it sometimes becomes necessary to hold them down with the foot in order to get the ball back on the course. A shot made under such circumstances is one of the most awkward in the game. Balance is most difficult to obtain and maintain, as most of the weight of the body is thrown on one leg. Here again a shot of great force is necessary.

As a general proposition, in summing up, trouble shots should have loft, graded to meet the particular conditions; the stroke a chop, in most cases, grip shortened and stance firm, the swing manifestly limited as to circumference, yet forceful.

The head should not be moved while making the shot, a most important rule applicable to all golf shots. The stationary pose of the head, while in play, is a mark of the golfer of good form. While making the address the head should be set in the position it should have as the club hits the ball. The violation of this rule is the secret of many of the failures of golfers, and while it is applicable to all golf, the rule should be given particular heed in the execution of trouble shots.

While this article makes references to the frequent use of both the broad-faced or "pancake" niblic and the deep faced mashie, in trouble shots, it wi l be found that more distance can be gained with the broad-faced mashie where the lie is fairly good.

As regards the alignment of the fingers, and the relative positions of the hands in making the chop strokes mentioned, there is practically no change from the Vardon grip—allowing, of course, for the fact that the shortening of the grip in the chop stroke means that the hands are slipped down on the club below the point that they grasp under ordinary circumstances. The distance that the hands should be slipped downward in these strokes cannot be given here accurately, as the conditions of the lie will vary.

The stance that I, among other golfers, have found satisfactory in executing the trouble shots referred to, is one that gives the body a firm position, minimizing the chances of slipping. In making the diagonal shot over a bunker from a bad lie close up, the right foot is advanced a few inches beyond, that is, in front of the left and most of the weight falls on the left foot. In making the straight shot over a bunker from such a lie, the right foot is not advanced quite so far in front of the left as in the diagonal shot. It has been found that the position with the right foot advanced gives the body freedom in a swing that it does not have otherwise. Speaking for right-handed golfers, the swing of the body is easier, as the left hip is not so likely to be cramped as the shot is made. This position can well be used in all shots where a pronounced swing is required, and a better follow through will be found to result therefrom.

Of course, a stroke with a follow through is used on every occasion that the lie and other conditions may allow. But in the extremely bad lies, in bunkers and long grass, the chop stroke, as before indicated has to be used.

While in match play the ball must, of course, be played from where it lies, in medal play it is often found advisable to take advantage of the privilege of lifting the ball out of trouble, and dropping back to a better lie. In medal play, for instance, it would be folly in most cases to play the ball from a lie in a stream, or in soft mud, or thick bushes. The ball is dropped back to a point in line with its original position in the stream or mud.

Such action penalises the player a stroke, but he will gain in the long run by calmly incurring the penalty.

The ball from a lie close to the post and a few inches from the wires, must be played through the fence, and over the other fence across the roadin the background. G. P. TIFFANY, in Recreation.

Boxing.

PHYSICAL AND MENTAL MAKE-UP OF SUCCESSFUL BOXERS.

THE physical and mental qualifications that go to make up a successful boxer differ from those of any other class of athletes in the world, says an American writer. There are many strong points about a fellow who becomes a champion boxer that are not generally noticed by the fickle followers to-day. In the first place, the successful boxer must have rugged physique—broad shoulders with big punching muscles in the upper part of the back; a good, thick neck, that can stand a strain; heavy, thickset jaws that denote bull-dog tenacity; a small, rather flat nose, not easily broken; small, sharp eyes, with the fighting glint in them. The arms, of course, should be long and muscular, yet not bound up like those of a lifter of heavy weights, while the waist and legs should be small in comparison with the dimensions of the upper part of the body.

Great speed is absolutely necessary in the make up of the classy boxer. I've never known a great one with heavy, ponderous limbs. Look them over—John L. Sullivan, Jack Dempsey, Jack McAuliffe, Kid McCoy, Jim Corbett, Bob Fitzsimmons, Tommy Ryan, George Dixon, Joe Gans, Frank P. Slavin, Young Griffo, and a host of other famous men with comparatively small lower limbs. It's that way with sprinters—men, horses, and dogs. The boxers of to-day do much more speedy footwork than those of the old school. Take Stanley Ketchell for an illustration. With what wonderful rapidity he gets around an opponent in a twenty-four foot ring! His speedy legs certainly play a most important part in most of his fights. He's lightning itself in the arena and by means of his rapid footwork he keeps on top of his antagonist every moment. No man has yet been able to outsprint him in a ring contest. That is one of his strongest points. Jack O'Brien is a very speedy fellow on his pins, but Ketch caught him every time he tried to get away.

John L. Sullivan was very fast on his feet when he first came out, but when he got fat and heavy he also became slow and clumsy. He was a big ice cart when he met the swiftly moving Jim Corbett in New Orleans seventeen years ago. Corbett, it will be recalled, had so much speed that he was on top of Sullivan at all stages of the one-sided mill. In that contest Sullivan was not actually put to sleep. He was simply exhausted and went down in sections like a worn-out horse.

Did you ever know that a great majority of the fistic champions of the past have had small eyes, set well back in the head? Yankee Sullivan, Joe Coburn, Jim Dunn Jem Mace, Joe Goss, Billy Edmunds, Jack Dempsey, Jack McAuliffe, Bob Fitzsimmons, Terry McGovern, Young Corbett, Jim Hall, Jimmy Britt, Battling Nelson, Joe Walcott, Joe Gans, Abe Attell, Young Griffo, Kid Lavigne,

Tommy Ryan, Billy Papke, Jim Jeffries, Jem Driscoll, Billy Plimmer, and many others have been noted for small eyes. But their optics have all been clear, bright and piercing just the same. A boxer of the highest class must have a good, true eye—one that can correctly judge distance, so that a blow can reach the mark aimed at. That was one of Dempsey's best qualities. He could h't an adversary on the spot selected without being an inch out of the way.

Jack Johnson, by the way, does not have many of the strong points of the champion in his make-up. His eyes are too large and unprotected. An old London-rule fighter would simply blind him with bare knuckles in a hard battle. Compare the coloured champion's optics with those of Billy Edwards, which were small, deep set and protected by overhanging brow bones. Johnson's legs are too heavy for speed. He will discover this fact when he gets into the ring with Ketchell, who will force him to move quickly or take an unmerciful walloping. Besides, Johnson's feet are flat, and that reminds me that I never saw a flat-footed boxer with any great amount of action.

Some physiognomists will tell you that the ideal fighting face is the low-brow, square-jaw, Bill Sikes type. This is a mistake. Can you point to one great boxer to-day with this kind of a mug? I'm sure no one would pick Ketchell as a pug in a crowd on the street. Corbett McCoy, Young Corbett Packy McFarland, Tommy Burns, Abe Attell, Battling Nelson, Jimmy Britt, Owen Moran, Jem Driscoll, Welsh, Summers, and a whole fleet of clean-cut boxers might pass for swells when they have their glad rags on and mingle with the fashionable throngs. I tell you a big change has come over the boxers of to-day regarding their general appearance, when you recall the old bruisers of bare-knuckle days.

A classy boxer must have a clear brain. No dull-witted, ball-headed fellow can hold away among the topnotchers. The modern fistic champion must be a bright intelligent walloper. He must be a good ring general who can plan his battle and be able to carry it out by skill and science to a successful finish. Take the American and British ring stars of to-day and you'll find they are all bright, clean cut, smart fellows, with other qualities that were unheard of in olden times.

The Kennel.

FREAK DOGS.

THE English Kennel Club Council of Representatives lately did a sensible thing when they passed a resolution recommending the committee of the Kennel Club to prohibit classes offered at shows for a defect or for any point at variance with the standard of points of any recognised club promoted to encourage the breed. As shows are presumably held for the purpose of improving the different varieties of dogs, it seems absurd on the face of it that countenance should be given to classes which would encourage the perpetuation of undesirable features. Mention was made of prizes being offered for white poodles with black spots, and it would not be difficult to find others still more grotesque. As one gentleman remarked, "It is not for the benefit of the breed or for the benefit of anybody else, except probably the person who guarantees the prize, and who has a dog with that particular defect which he wants to bring forward." Another strong point was that dogs with undesirable characteristics would perforce get on the register, which might induce people to use them for breeding purposes. The resolution might very well have gone a little further by suggesting the prohibition of specials as well as classes.

SKYE TERRIERS.

Incidentally, the discussion gave rise to an interesting divergence of opinion as to the legitimacy of the claims of the newly-boomed short-haired Skyes. Mr. Sandwith, who brought forward the proposal, declared that they were in no sense representative of the Skye terrier breed as it has been exhibited for years, and the appearance of four of them at Cruft's show was resented by the three specialist clubs formed to watch over the interests of the Syke as commonly known. Mr. L. P. C. Astley, however, whose knowledge of the subject is most extensive, insisted that the dogs shown at Cruft's were the original article. Twenty years ago he judged classes of them in the North of Scotland, and there is a strain now kept by the factor of one of the landowners in the Island of Skye, which represents the true terrier. This is not a long-coated animal at all. He further said:

"The Syke we have now is descended from this, and I have not the slightest doubt that the Scottish terrier is also descended from those dogs. Those dogs had been kept for twenty years, and their pedigree then was twenty or thirty years old, and they have been in that family from their origination." This may be perfectly true, but when we come to talk about the early progenitors of the Skye and the Scottie we are on very uncertain ground, from which hasty deductions must not be drawn. Some of the best authorities consider that long and short haired varieties existed side by side several centuries ago, while others maintain that the former were produced because they made prettier pets with their profuse hair and quaint appearance. It is certainly quite reasonable to infer that the short, wiry-coated fellow would be preferred for working purposes. The Scottish terrier, as we know him to-day, looks thoroughly adapted for turning the fox out of the cairns in which he lurks, or doing any other duty his master may call upon him to perform. Not so easy is it to imagine the luxurious and aristocratic Skye coming home fresh after a long day's sport, although we are perfectly willing to admit that appearances may be deceptive. The Borzoi, for instance, with his fine bearing and airs and graces, might well be regarded as a possible hanger-on in the hall of a Grand Duke rather than a hunter of the wolf. He does not look to have it in him, but he has for all that; and English owners before now have had occasion to regret an outbreak of the instinct to chase anything moving. We once heard of several of these apparently docile-looking creatures making sad havoc among a flock of goats. Therefore, we would hesitate to condemn the Skye as a mere lapdog because his coat is well brushed and cared for. He is certainly more active than his appearance warrants one in assuming.

TRIUMPH OF MONGRELS.

CANINE intelligence was seen at its highest level at the sheep dog trials held early last month in connection with the Tring Agricultural Society's seventieth annual show. It was a day of triumph for mongrels. Never were nondescript dogs so mightily applauded.

Looking across a green valley to a spot under high woods half a mile away, one saw three sheep—springy little Welsh sheep, as wild as could be found—let out of a cart. It was the dogs' duty to drive the sheep through two sets of false fences, across the valley, through narrow openings in two more false fences, and then, the "commander" being allowed to join his dog at this stage, to put the sheep each way through a Maltese cross, and finally pen them. Twelve minutes were allowed for this heavy task, and a dog was called off if he did not get his sheep through the first false fence in five minutes.

The sheep were uncarted at a flag signal by a steward, and when they were seen to be free, like three white dots on the far-away green, the first dog was sent to his business with a shrill whistle. By a series of short and long whistles the dog was directed when at a distance, and as he came nearer he was shouted at in language only understood by sheep dogs. But the first and several succeeding animals lost on time.

Then came a Yorkshire shepherd with a large crook, a loud voice, and a nine-year-old black-and-white dog called Laddie. In his shirt sleeves, with his crook akimbo, he amused the crowd greatly with his vehemence. The dog was doing well until another dog broke loose and tried to help him. This caused confusion, and the "commander's" pathetic shouts of "Laddie!" were stayed by the judge, who promised him another chance.

When the second chance came Laddie penned his sheep amid loud applause, and rushed with proudly flaunting plume to receive a pat from his master.

The shepherd with the crook had a later turn with another dog, a ten-year-old winner of several hundreds of pounds worth of prizes, named Lady. At the second false fence this dog brought her sheep to a stand still just past the outside of the obstacle. She lay down at once till they began to browse, then slyly steered them round again and through the opening amid immense cheering. She penned her sheep in a little over nine minutes.

Lady did not win the first prize, however. That honour went to Smart, a dog from Corwen belonging to Mr. W. Jones, which finished its task in 9mins. 25secs., in astonishingly skilful manner.

But the tit-bit of the trials was seen when the dogs worked in pairs with half a dozen sheep, one working to the right and the other to the left of the wayward Welsh animals. These brace competitions proceeded in the same manner as the singles until the final penning, when three sheep were put into one pen, with one of the dogs crouching "on guard" at the opening, while the remaining dog penned the other three.

The two dogs did not interfere with one another unless commanded and each obeyed the orders meant expressly for him, understanding to a nicety the difference in the two codes his master was using.

THE IRISH WOLFHOUND.

ALTHOUGH the last wolf in Ireland suffered the misdeeds of his race in the early part of the eighteenth century, it is somewhat a matter of surprise that such a beautiful dog as the Irish wolfhound should have been allowed to become practically extinct. One would have imagined that the sentiment clinging round old associations would have been sufficient to preserve the race from decay. Surely one could not wish for a nobler appanage to a great man's establishment, even for strictly utilitarian purposes his services were no longer in demand. The emerald Isle has never been so rich in varieties of the canidae that she could afford to lose the best example of the native breeds. Tradition has invested the wolf-dog of old with gigantic stature, but there is certainly no justification for the statement that these dogs attained to the height of 4 feet, or the size of a yearling calf. We may dismiss that as being apocryphal. The modern animal may be looked upon as a canine giant, measuring as he does from 31 inches to 34 inches at the shoulder. Beyond this it is difficult to ensure a symmetrical form and free movement, which, after all and of more value than an extra inch or two of height. The craze for size alone must have its limitations, unless a monstrosity is to be produced. To be of any use a wolfhound must combine fleetness with strength.

No exact opinion can be offered as to what the ancient dog was really like; but, judging from the manner in which artists differed, one depicting a smooth-coated dog not altogether unlike a mastiff, and another showing one approaching the greyhound in structure, it is surely a justifiable inference that types varied a good deal. The fact is that any variety may suffer or benefit materially from the caprices of any particular breeder, and when no common standard existed as a model to be aimed at it can easily be imagined that there would be a wide diversity in form, size, and coat. We know that the greyhound conformation is one of great antiquity, and it is preserved with slight variations in many parts of the world. In Afghanistan, Persia, Russia, and the Arabian deserts we find examples perpetuated in several beautiful types of fleet-footed hounds. The main difference shows itself in the coat and ear, most of these Eastern dogs carrying profuse coats, and possessing drop ears. This, of course, is quite understandable in such countries as Afghanistan and Russia where the rigours of the climate would be altogether too much for a fine-coated animal such as our greyhound. Even the Arab Slughi, although his hair is of a silky texture, is not a smooth-coated as our own dog, and he has a profuse feather on the tail. The latter is supposed to be more helpful as a rudder.

To return to our subject, however, the credit of making the modern wolfhound belongs to Captain Graham, of Dursley, who set about his task in 1862. It is difficult to say whether or no the blood which formed the foundation of his strain contained any of its original purity, but we know that the services of the Scottish deerhound, the Great Dane, and, in still more modern times, the Borzoi, have all been employed. The result has been eminently satisfactory—a very handsome dog, which now breeds true to type, taller and heavier than the deerhound but not so massive as the Great Dane. The weight of a dog should be about 120lb. and of a bitch 90lb. Anything smaller than this is considered objectionable, but either sex may be larger. The colours are the same as those of a deerhound, viz., dark blue-grey, darker and lighter greys or brindles, yellow sandy-red or red-fawn with black points. The less white the better, although these markings appear, especially in the case of dark dogs, on chest and toes. The wolfhound is docile and affectionate, easily trained to good manners, and he is so gentle in the house that he takes up far less room than his size would suggest. He is an ideal guard.

The Naturalist.

THE BOMBAY NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

MR. MAXWELL LEFROY, the Imperial Entomologist, delivered a lecture at the rooms of the Society on Tuesday night on "The orders of insects and how to recognise them," illustrated by lantern slides.

The lecture took the place of the ordinary monthly meeting of members.

Father Dreckman, the chairman, in few words introduced Mr Lefroy. Mr. Lefroy by means of diagrams and beautiful coloured slides showed the minor divisions, or orders, into which insects are divided and described the characters which mark them. He then took each order in turn, showing typical examples of the common forms and pointing out how they were recognised in the field. The immature stages were also shown and described, the commonly known forms mentioned and the chief characteristics of the habits and the economic importance of each order described. The lecture was a brief survey of the insect world, as illustrated by nearly one hundred slides of common insects, and was designed to enable anyone to distinguish a beetle from a bug, a moth from a Caddisfly, etc. Colonel Bannerman moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Lefroy for his interesting lecture and said he was sure that all present had learnt a great deal from Mr Lefroy's remarks and the beautiful slides which illustrated them.

The election of the following 70 new members since the last meeting was announced:—Rao Nahar Singh of Bedla; Mr. Carl Gross, Bombay; Mr. William Archibald, Bangoon; Mr. Jehangir Fardunja Dastur, Bandra; Mr. W. The Story Teller.

YARNS FROM THE RANKS.

BY A GENTLEMAN RANKER. No. I.

I, AS an apparently never-to-be-promoted subaltern, look back on my service in the ranks with some pleasure and much regret. My being but a subaltern leads me to hope that my poor efforts at creating interest in a Ranker's Reminiscences will be less severely criticised than were I so exalted a person as a captain!

Strange though it now seems, I was once a "full blown" corporal. As such I applied for leave, on one occasion, to wear mufti at a big Naval Ball which I was particularly keen on going to. My C.O. refused the leave—had to according to regulations—so I looked on the ball as a "bad egg" and sympathised with our friend the fox over the grape question.

On the morning of the ball I found myself in charge of a target and two private soldiers in the long gallery butts of a well-known rifle range. As we were marking for a big meeting open to both services, the officer in charge was alternately Naval and Military. In the present case a Naval Lieutenant was "running the show" in the butts and very little he seemed to know about it. However, he tried to impress everyone that his knowledge was without bounds by finding fault with everything in turn—the targets, which were bad, target frames, patches, paste, etc., all of which had been lately done up for the occasion. Finally, he got our backs up a good deal by treating us, who were all old hands at the game and picked men too, as novices and men to be looked on with grave suspicion. At last in an unguarded moment, I had the audacity to answer him back in sheer defence of myself and my little command (one target and two private soldiers). Quite wrong I admit, but the man would have "riz a saint" by finding fault in the way he did with the marking, etc., which most officers would have left alone or perhaps, even, commented favourably on. However, the position became more and more strained, and I was lucky at the end of the morning's work to find I was not a prisoner but had merely been well choked off Nevertheless, I sincerely hoped that I should never meet the man again as I looked upon him as my sworn enemy for life.

The particular fiend told off to watch me contrived that I should be persuaded that afternoon, at the eleventh hour, to go to the dance and risk all chances of meeting any of the officers of my regiment. I must confess I was easily persuaded. I thought the chances of being "spotted" were few, especially as I was going disguised as a gentleman. I ought to have remembered that I carried the "mark of the beast," namely, a small white mark over the right eye on the sunburnt forehead caused by the field service cap.

To my horror one of the first men I saw at the dance was the Naval Officer with whom I had worked in the butts that morning. He didn't see though and soon was enveloped in the crowd of dancers. It was such an awful shock that I took the first opportunity of getting a little stimulant. I had just got the glass to my lips when the man standing next to me turned round—mine enemy again! I felt him looking at me though I paid every possible attention to my glass of milk (or whatever it was). I watched him in a mirror eyeing me evidently wondering where he had seen me before. I gulped down my drink and bolted to greater security in the crowd.

Quite late in the evening I found myself again in the smoking room, this time to enjoy a well-earned cigarette as well as a stimulant. I was just getting comfortable and cool again when to my dismay I saw him coming towards me with the evident intention of speaking. No time to bolt. Nothing for it but to lie, and lie well, speaking. No time to bolt. Nothing for it but to lie, and lie well,

"Good evening! Think we've met before!"

"I—I don't think so."

"Almost sure—face very familiar—Gib?"

"Never been there."

"Malta?" "No." "China?" "No."

"Home perhaps? Ever stationed at Plymouth?"

"No never. Mistake me for someone else, I expect."

"What's your regiment?"

I offered up ten silent prayers for help in record time.

"Oh! I'm only in the volunteers you know." And I felt myself turn on a No. 1 maiden's blush.

"Really! I spotted the mark on your forehead you know, and quite thought I knew you too. Reminded me of . . ." Then he suddenly knew me.

I saw a fleeting vision of myself being escorted in dress clothes to the Main Guard Room and it struck me what an amusing figure I would cut being marched up the following morning between a file of "brutal soldiery" through fairly crowded streets in such clothes, which would not be improved by a night spent in a Guard Room.

I pictured myself before the Court Martial and knew I'd lost all chance of getting my commission, and all for the sake of a dance.

"By Jove!" This by the detested enemy.

A long pause then, quite nicely.

"How do you like it?"

"What? Marking in the butts, sir?"

"Partly, and life in the ranks generally."

"As for the first, it depends a good deal on the officers in charge and for the rest it might be work."

The music striking up for the next dance put an end to farther conservation, except that he wished me luck and hoped we'd meet again.

We never have and I'm rather sorry. I rather liked "mine enemy" in the end.

No. 2. "Bet you a 'bob' I turn the Quarter Guard out to-night." This was addressed by "Sharky" (I forget his real name, which matters not, since the whole regiment knew him as "Sharky") to "Pedlar" Palmer. The occasion was after "Taps" (time the lantern closes) at night just before Tattoo Roll Call and the barrack room was full and pretty noisy. It generally was at that hour of the evening—the inmates were nearly all old soldiers and hard drinkers and seldom left barracks to "walk out" as it necessitated a lot of cleaning up and a longish walk to the first pub and the canteen beer was just as good as any outside and they didn't care a straw whether they were served by a fellow soldier or a pretty (?) wench.

"Make it the price of a decent drunk and I'm with yer."

"Right oh! Where's my bloomin' sword. Hey! Toddler, lend us your bloke's."

A bloke, I must explain, was in this case an officer. "Toddler" Bell was an officer's servant.

"Wot d'yer take me for! Think I'm going to lose a billet and a badge for a blighter like you? No bloomin' fear."

"Orright! Don't get yer bloomin' rag out. Plenty of substitoots ain't there?"

He eventually armed himself with the barrack room poker, attached a coat strap to it and approached the Guard Room dangling the poker at his side.

Sentry: "'Alt! Oo comes there!"

Sharky: "Visiting (emphasising the "G") rounds."

Sentry: "Stand visiting rounds. Guard turn out!"

The Guard duly turns out with the usual clatter and precision and the corporal and a file double out to take the countersign. They halt some ten yards short of "Sharky." Then the corporal with much smartness: "Stand visiting rounds! Advance one and give the countersign."

Sharky: "The countersign's 'Rats' and you can turn your bloomin' guard in and give 'em each a kiss."

With a growl and an oath the corporal pounced upon Sharky and he was led smiling into the Guard Room where he received many doubtful compliments from the comrades he had fooled. The Commanding Officer was really rather amused at the story, I fancy, though the witnesses spared our friend not one iota and Sharky was given fourteen days after a severe rating.

"Wot did yer get?" Sharky was asked on returning to the Barrack room.

"Three extra orderly officers and fourteen days to do 'em in!! Won my bloomin' bet anyway."

THE INDIAN FIELD.

1, Hare Street, Calcutta.

THURSDAY, 16th September, 1909.

AN OLD TIME FESTIVAL.

Once again Grasmere sports have been held, and once again the men of the northern counties of England have demonstrated that in point of strength, endurance, and that jewel, fair-play, they are maintaining the best traditions of their forefathers. A visit to Grasmere is reminiscent of the past. Grasmere is still unspoiled by railways; you must travel to it by road, and automobiles seem sadly out of place there.

The sports held on the beautiful enclosure at the foot of Butter Crag brought together on 19th August a rare collection of coaches, brakes, char-a-bancs, wagonettes, and smaller vehicles of all decriptions from the stylish private carriage to the farmer's pony trap. Add to this stream of traffic a great throng of country folk afoot and some scores of snorting automobiles, and one had a mixture which made it something of an achievement to get to the sports at all. All this commotion was covered by a desire on the part of many people to see some simple old English sports in a charming spot among the hills. The people gathered round a big circular space of firm, closely trimmed turf in a field deep down in a space among the hills. In spite of the hosts of lake-side visitors and day trippers this is still in the main a meeting of country folk. They come early and get the best places. They had filled the plank seats round the ring before the visitors from the towns began to arrive. They had brought baskets of food with them, for the sports last the whole of the day. Late comers had to stand behind or sit on the turf in front. The circular pile of spectators was completed by the arrival of coaches and carriages which took up positions on the outside of the ring and allowed a good view of the field from their seats. It seems pretty clear that if the men of Westmorland and Cumberland had never discovered the fascination of wrestling there would have been no Grasmere sports. The wrestling is the great thing—the other events are mere trimmings put on to please a weak public which is not able to concentrate its interest on serious sport.

When the bellman called out the names of the light wrestlers just after 10 in the morning, men who had entered the enclosure quite insignificantly in ordinary every-day clothes came out of the dressing booths in white tights and vests which displayed their well-knit figures and muscular limbs. As a rule in the design of a wrestler's costume the effort at decoration is concentrated on the tightly-fitting loin cloths, or, as the wrestlers themselves call them, "paunch bags." These are nearly always made of velvet of rich colours, and they are usually brightly embroidered. Some of the men had designs done in colours upon the legs of their tights and wore garters of ribbons or silver tinsel. In this kind of full dress a well-built man makes a fine appearance. Wrestling in the Westmorland style is not particularly interesting to people who are not initiated into the mysteries of the sport. The two men start always by bending from the hips, placing their shoulders together, and clasping each other over the back. In this attitude they move about, sometimes for a considerable time, like some strange pantomime quadruped. They are working for a grip, and when one gets his grip the battle is generally over in a second or two. There were enough wrestlers on this occasion to last all day, putting them on the green three pairs at a time. A good deal of interest was taken in the re-appearance of Hexam Clarke of Workington, who four years ago was heavy weight champion. He has been in retirement, and only came out as he said to test the young blood. He found it as vigorous as reported, and in the semi-final met his Waterloo, Studholme, a burly blacksmith, with typical sinewy hands, defeating him after a splendid struggle. Studholme went easily through the final.

To the visitors from the outside world the great event of the day was the "guides' race" as it is called. The runners in this have to go over a course which takes them out of the field and up the side of Butter Crag, which rises almost precipitously from the side of the valley. People in the field could just discern on a rocky knoll at the top of the hill the flag round which the runners must go. Fourteen young men started. They sprinted briskly out of enclosure and over the few fields in the valley, but when they got to the slope of the hill it ceased to be a running race. No man can run up Butter Crag. Through bracken and over slippery scree they toiled upwards. As they mounted higher they became mere white speck on the dark hillside. The crowds in the field watched the climbers intently. They saw the leading man disappear near the top behind a ledge of rocks and then re-appear at the flag, and begin to come down. The descent was marvellous. It was a combination of running, jumping, and sliding. The white speck grew rapidly as it descended, and soon the watchers could see the man's arms and legs moving as he came in great strides and leaps down the hill. The leading man got down the hill in a few minutes, and was soon back in the enclosure, loudly cheered. The climb to the top had taken twelve minutes; the return was made in four and a half. The winner was Ernest Dalzell, of Keswick, a stripling of 5 feet 5 inches and 25 years of age, who established a record by winning the race on five consecutive occasions. One of his opponents, J. C. Murray, of Falstone, who finished fourth, had, prior to Dalzell's first success, been the winner for four years in succession. In these days when it is the fashion of pessimists to decry everything that is English it does one good to visit Grasmere sports; one learns that the old spirit is still alive, that there is no deterioration in physique, and that, win or lose, the sturdy, honest men of the north of England are sportsmen in the very best sense of the word.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's racing in Calcutta was of an extremely interesting description, but has given rise to the largest crop of slanderous and malicious allegations and insinuations that we should think has ever been known for one pretty little afternoon's sport. A "storm in a tea cup" hardly describes it and we should say a "cyclone in an egg spoon" would be nearer the mark. It has been roundly asserted that one mare who happened to be a little off colour and did not run quite up to form was stuffed and that another one was not trying. The absurdity of the accusation in the second instance is manifest to every student of racing form. There is no harm in stating that the mare in question is Colina and we have no hesitation in saying that she ran a better mare under 9st. 10lb. than anybody would have thought possible on her performances during the last two years. She finished fourth, the verdict being a short head, neck and head. We should have given her no chance whatever at the weights and she started at 10 to 1, so it is hard to understand of what anybody has to complain. The grumblers are, as a matter of fact, confined to two classes, those who have not yet learnt that the horse is an animal and not a machine and cannot always run the same, and those who always want to blame someone for their lack of judgment or bad luck when they lose their money. If racing were an exact science it would soon stop. It is, of course, unfortunate for owners and backers when animals do not run up to expectations, but if they cannot take their bad luck with a certain amount of sangfroid they had better make up their minds to retire from the turf, instead of slinging mud about to the damage of the reputations of men trying to earn an honest living on it.

To come down to details besides the allegations about Colina the race anent which there was all the talk was the Autumn Plate, Division I. Most people present, including the stewards and officials, thought it a very excellent genuine race, and, as there was a distinctly close finish between the first three or four, it is hard to believe that it was anything else. It has been suggested that Tana's form showed marvellous improvement and Harene's form corresponding deterioration. But no account has been taken by the critics of the differences in weight or the still more important differences in distance. The horses have been meeting recently at five furlongs, but Tana's record throughout shows that she is very little good at five furlongs, as she does not begin to gallop until she has gone that distance, while Harene on the other hand is a bad stayer and is nothing like so good relatively for six as she is for five. The whole root of the trouble, however, is undoubtedly that the public here have not sufficient confidence in the stewards. It may be merely a question of a "prophet being without honour in his own country," but there it stands and until we have got strong stipendiary stewards who have been brought up to the game in some other country we shall always be liable to these fierce outbursts. Another matter on Saturday which gave rise to a great deal of talk was the Judge's verdict in Cyril's race, as a large majority of those present were positive that Bridge Knight had won by at least half a length, and this opinion was shared by the jockeys both on Bridge Knight and Cyril. It is, of course, only too possible for a Judge to make a mistake and without expressing an opinion one way or the other, he may have done so in this case, but here again, however good an expert the gentleman who so kindly officiate at present, may be the public will never be contented until the stewards have seen fit to get a professional Judge from England or Australia. It is bound to come sooner or later and we can only add the sooner the better. We were glad to note that the stewards have decided to follow the advice of the press in one matters, and for the first time a notice of the result of an enquiry was immediately posted up and made public, the enquiry in question being into the failure of the jockey of Lord Chester to weigh in, the decision being that in consequence he lost his place (value Rs. 200) and was fined Rs. 100. We trust this precedent re enquiries will be strictly followed in future.

To "cut the cackle, and come to the hosses" the afternoon's sport began with the Lilliput Handicap. Coin II. had been freely spoken of as a certainty for two or three days before the race, but when it was seen that a new and unknown jockey, Osborn, was to ride her the punters were scared and the money poured on Echo and Pantomime making them hot favourites. However, the public once again learnt that, in spite of many theories to the contrary, horses have got a good deal more to do with winning or losing races than their jockeys, and Coin II., who was looking a little picture, came in a comfortable winner by a length with the favourites second and third.

The Autumn Plate, Division II., came next and seven started, Bridge Knight was well backed, then Silphoe and Cyril. Coming down the straight Silphoe looked all over a winner, but at the distance dropped back quickly and Colina and Cyril, Nettie R. and Mannjes came all in a bunch, Cyril got clear of the others and at the finish was tackled by Bridge Knight, who had got away very badly but made up his ground at a most extraordinary pace. He was galloping all over them at the end, and according to the majority of the spectators and to the jockeys of the first two horses got home by about half a length, but the verdict was a short head in favour of Cyril.

Bandy Leg was made favourite for the Pony Hurdle Handicap, but he was not quite class enough to beat Piccaninny, who was very much on her day and capitally ridden by Mr. Dudley, got home with a bit in hand by a length.

The Fourth Amateur Hurdle Race was Mr. Kindersley's one bad mistake in a day of excellent handicaps, as he had underrated Dalgai almost as much as Mr. Griffiths underrated Bandy Leg last week. This mare finished cantering twelve lengths in front of Lord Chester all out, a week ago and was only penalised 8lb.. with that horse for so doing. Dalgai was therefore very naturally made favourite at 6 to 4, and though the result of the handicap was to produce a good race for the places, Mr. Evers was able to bring the public money home in absolute safety by seven lengths. Queen of Hearts came with a run at the finish. and beat Lord Chester, who had been ridden right out by three-quarters of a length with a bit in hand.

After this came the Autumn Plate about which there has been all the talk. Tana was favourite, Northwood. Haloya and Blue Flame next most backed. A very fine race between the fancied ones resulted in Tana who, as usual, came with a rush at the finish winning by one and a quarter lengths.

As was expected Moira was made a very hot favourite for the Assaye Plate, though heavily handicapped, but Matin Bell something like a stone better in with her than last time they met was able to win by two and a half lengths. Solace was also heavily backed but could not get into the first four, and seems to be going off a bit.

The Selling Race produced the biggest field of the day not less than 11 going out. Bridge Knight on his former run was a hot favourite with Yulgibar heavily backed, Downland and Golden Morn next in demand. Bridge Knight again disapponted his connections running second to Downland, who won by half a length. The owners in the hope of changing the luck have with subtle irony changed Bridge Knight's name to Too Late, but we hope he will cease to justify it. Downland has come on a good deal in Mr. Pearson's stable which she left only on the day of the race to go over to Bence. She has, however, gone now back to her former trainer as the Messrs, Huck bought her for Rs. 1,000 and Mr. Pearson is, we understand, training for those gentlemen. Yulgibar ran a very disappointing horse and has obviously been much over-rated as he finished right at the back.

gymkhana and horse-show, a polo tournament and two golf competitions. The Hon'ble Sir Lancelot Hare, K.C.S.I., is presenting a silver cup value Rs. 250 with Rs. 100 added from the fund for a race in which ponies must be the bona-fide property of residents in this Province—Eastern Bengal and Assam. Silver cups are also being given by the Dacca P.W.D., the Civil Police, the Civil Service, Messrs. Kellner and Company, the staff of the Lieutenant-Governor and the Eastern Bengal and Assam Livery and Bait Stables. There are races for ponies 12-1 and under, 13-3 and under, 14-0 and under, 14-1 and under, and even one for bona-fide hacks in which horses may take part. Mr. "Bob" Lockhart and Messrs. Orr and Company are giving cups for the horse show and Messrs. Hamilton and Company are responsible for one of the prizes in the gymkhana. The polo tournament will, of course, be held under I.P.A. rules and four cups value Rs. 100 each will be given to members of the winning team. As Dacca is so handy to Calcutta it is hoped that two teams at least will make the short journey from the capital of India to the capital of the new Province. As for golf there will be two competitions, one an 18-hole competition for men under handicap, and the other a 9-hole Mixed Foursome under handicap. Silver cups will be presented to the winners. Mr. J. W. Nelson, I.C.S., is in charge of golf. Mr. P. Leo Faulkner, I.P., is responsible for the arrangements for the races, gymkhana and horse show while Mr. J. O. Rennie deals with all matters pertaining to polo.

Balls Bridge, Dublin, is the hub of the world for those who buy or admire horses. Last month's Horse Show was held in genial weather and it was, as usual, a gigantic success. A correspondent writes:—

"An hour after the show opened I found a party of most enthusiastic Frenchmen measuring the jumps in the big ring. The stone wall, made of good, solid stone and large pebbles throughout, is the stoutest jump put up in any ring, worse than any jump in the Grand National. The water jump, adorned with seductive bunches of reeds and wild iris, the bank and ditch, and the hurdles, were all carefully measured with line and rule, for the distinguished Frenchmen had come to learn, as well as to buy and admire.

"Among them were M. A. Oliver, Chief Inspector-General of Horses to the French Army; Baron Du Teil, president of the Societe Hippique Francaise; and Captain Feline, who was acting on behalf of the most remarkable horse society in the world—the newly developed Society for French War Horses, with its centre at Saumur. 'There is nothing like it in the world,' they said, with an expressive glance round the beautiful ring.

"The thoroughbreds were first being led in, the stallions into one half, the yearlings into the other. A finer sight no eye could desire. The thoroughbred colt or filly is as light and dainty as an antelope. Their niceness of form takes another year to develop. As they felt the grass under their feet they danced at the end of their leading reins and whinneyed in chorus. The frequency of the brilliant chestnut colour, that Ireland especially produces, filled the eye, and even fascinated the judges. It would surprise an English visitor to know that a number of the best were owned by small farmers or small holders, and were from the finest stock in the world. Mr. Wray's Gallinule colt was a good example.

"With difficulty the French visitors, who number some sixty in all, tore themselves from the thoroughbreds to visit the hunters, who after all are the horses of the show. 'If we could only persuade our people to breed hunters from pure-bred sires, as you do!' said the Inspector-General of French horses. The hunters, sometimes as many as forty to a class, swung round the rings with rare dash, each rider making an obvious effort to get the inner part of the circle and catch the judge's eye. They might have been yachts jockeying for position. There were continual ejaculations of admiration in many languages.

"The horses were of every sort—light-limbed hunters in the heavy-weight classes, and rough cobs competing with almost thoroughbreds. But proof that no country in the world can breed bone as can Irish meadows met the eye in every ring. The supremacy of the Dublin Show, however, is in the permanent stalls. One can walk down avenue after avenue of wide, open stalls and inspect at leisure a thousand or more of the picked horses of the world before they are distributed about Europe.

"On the opening day much time is spent at the stalls. It is a day of business, of judging pure and simple. The large house parties entertained by every Irishman of position in and about Dublin wait for the jumping and the polo of the second day. Even rooms and hotels do not quite overflow till the second day, when many visitors remain in the steamers for the night."

In India and the East the bitless bridle is no new thing. We have known at least half a dozen horse owners, who have successfully used nose nets, nose bars and other devices; but little is known of the idea in England though it by no means is a new proposition in that country. We learn from a London exchange that the bitless bridle experiment is about to be made by a well-known hunting man—a British cavalry officer. He feels confident that the experiment will prove a success, at any rate with his own hunters, in which case he intends to abandon the use of bits altogether for hunting, as he has already done for hacking. He says he may even try riding between the flags in a bitless bridle. He has done a good deal of steeplechasing.

"Naturally," he remarked, in course of conversation, "most men ridicule the idea, but they forget—some of them never knew until I told them—that the experiment has been tried before, though not with conspicuous success.

"Poor Tom Freake, son of Sir Thomas Freake, repeatedly tried riding without a bit. In fact, when he met his death in the hunting-field, in Devonshire, a report got about that he was riding with a bitless bridle at the time, and that his horse bolted with him in consequence.

"It is true, however, that some years ago a man was bolted with and killed while schooling a young horse in a nose-net only. Another man who experimented with bitless bridles and not without success was the late 'Roddy' Owen, who won the National on Father O'Flynn."

Though from very early times horses of Asiatic-European breeds have proved more or less unmanageable except when bitted, the horses of Libya are known to have been controlled by a noseband only, which was made of plaited straw, while many of the Numidian warriors used neither bridle nor saddle and found it possible to guide and control their animals with the help of a rope only, which passed round the neck, low down.

In addition Mr. Blunt mentions in an interesting book called "The Bedouin Tribes of the Euphrates" that the Bedouin does not, as a rule, use either bit or bridle, but controls his horse by means of a halter to which a thin chain is attached that passes round the nose. "However," said the officer in question, "I don't propose to adopt any device of that sort. I am going to use what I have for some months past used for hacking—an ordinary headstall with a nose-net attachment."

"But supposing you find yourself on a bad-tempered brute, will you be able to hold him in that?"

"None of my horses are bad-tempered brutes," he answered with a laugh, "but, even if they were, I believe I could manage to hold them. I've schooled several young horses in a nose-net only, and one or two were pretty bad pullers, but I got them to go all right.

"After all, the weakest horse is stronger than the strongest man, and it isn't by force that you control an animal. Look at a thoroughbred going down to the post at Newmarket, apparently pulling his jockey's arms out. Yet the boy on his back, a lad of twelve or fifteen, perhaps, weighing seven stone or less, and with so little strength in him that you could topple him over if you wrestled with him with one arm, has little difficulty in pulling the horse up, and that in a snaffle bit, remember.

"It may sound paradoxical when I say that though I don't believe in Hayes's theory that a finished horseman should be able to hold any horse in a plain snaffle, and that if a plain snaffle won't hold him no other sort of bit will, I do maintain it should be possible to hold any horse without a bit at all provided the animal is broken and trained without a bit, and provided also that the rider has good hands.

"Of course a horse that always has been bitted would probably bolt with you into the next world if you suddenly brought him out with hounds in a nose-net only. Everything depends upon what the horse has been brought up to.

"American trotters are trained to catch hold, and increase their speed, directly you tighten the reins. The more you pull, the faster they go, and as soon as you give them their heads they slacken speed of their own accord. With our harness horses the direct opposite holds good.

"Why, then, not train horses to answer to a nose-net only? Later I intend to try hunting with a leather noseband only, though, of course, some of my friends will think me mad.

"Look at the number of horses there are that won't face a sharp bit but that are quite comfortable to ride in a smooth snaffle, which, according to accepted theories, gives the rider much less control, or 'power' as we rather absurdly call it.

"A horse that won't face his bit almost invariably carries his neck in an arch, with his chin drawn in towards his chest, the result being that while the action of the hind legs is contracted, the forelegs still have full play, and thus the hind legs are kept too much under him and the action of the forelegs is too high. I don't believe that any horse accustomed to being ridden without a bit would ever contract that habit."

"Nikole" contributes to the Madras Mail, the following interesting notes on the curious methods of tiger slaying in china:—

In China goats are left tied to the mouths of the caves that tigers frequent, and as each dawn appears heralded by the chirping of a thousand swallows and all the brilliant colours of a Chinese morning, one tramps up into the hills to inspect the bait. If they are at their posts untouched, bleating hungrily for breakfast, another monotonous day of waiting ensues, and one begins to doubt whether the Chinese tiger exists. Certainly the tales one has heard of the country seem but a snare and a delusion, and as the days lengthen into weeks it is a sore temptation to abandon the quest. Then suddenly comes the first intimation that the game has arrived. In the dead of the night there is a tremendous uproar in the village street; the natives

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

are running wildy to and fro, the huntsmen are preparing their torches and spears in a manner which suggests a sally against some hostile tribe. A tiger has entered the fields. This is, indeed, welcome news, for if only he has killed a goat there will be something to work on. At daylight the hunters are in readiness; their torches, formed of long bamboo rods with oil rags tied around their tips, are prepared, the idol is duly propitiated, and off we starts into the hills, expectancy and hopefulness at top notch. The hunters light their torches and enter the cave as carelessly as though it were a pig, not a tiger, that they expected to find within.

Meanwhile the sportsman stands a few yards away from the entrance, ready at any second to fire, should the animal try to escape. The excitement is now intense. The men are feeling around inside the cave lighting their way with the torches, and guarding themselves with their spears against an attack. Suddenly a dull roar seems to come from the depths of the rock; the men shout a warning, there is a loud aughrr and the tiger springs from between the great boulders. He will not go out of his way to attack, nor will he hesitate an instant, but makes off in great bounds down the mountain side; in that moment the sportsmen must shoot, and shoot accurately; no second chance is given. More likely, however, on seeing the light of the torches, the animal will cower back in the innermost recesses of the cave, whence it will be impossible to dislodge him. On ascertaining his position, the hunters block up all possible exits with bundles of stuff which are thrown down from above by the villagers, who never miss the fun of seeing a hunt, and invariably gather on the hill side at a respectable distance from the scene of action. This blocking in of the game often takes several hours, which are hours of tense expectancy for the sportsman, who must be ready at any second for a change of tactics and a sudden charge on the part of the tiger.

Finally it is announced that the animal is effectively blocked. The sportsman drops down between the boulders that forms the entrance to the cave, and, having accustomed his eyes to the torchlight, he follows the direction of the hunters for approaching the tiger's retreat. He will, perhaps, have to wriggle on his stomach through some narrow passages, dragging his gun by the muzzle after him. He is practically in darkness, and his ignorance as to the exact whereabouts of the tiger renders his task one of peculiar interest. As he draws near, a low, half-suppressed roar reveals the animal's position. Probably the sportsmen can now see through the chinks in the rock the glowing eyes and the great striped side, yet he is in no danger, for the huntsmen have done their work well, and left but a small hole through which the shot is to be fired. It is a novel situation thus to be within a few feet of a live tiger in a dark cave, and to see the green eyes blinking sleepily in the glow from the torches which have been thrust through the chinks in the rock underneath, and to watch the mighty head and great swelling muscles of the magnificent brute as he lies panting with anger. In spite of one's feeling of security, one does not dare to delay too long. The Express is dropped painfully into position; the tiger, as he sees the muzzle approaching, draws back snarling. Then the report of the rifle resounds through the cave, and the hunt is over. The body is dragged with difficulty to the surface, and slung from a pole, is carried by the hunters back to the village, while the natives follow alongside joyfully shouting, dancing, and generally rejoicing at the death of so dreaded an enemy.

There is a proposal, subscribed to by a good many people, to amalgamate the London Zoological Gardens and the Botanic Gardens. We are inclined to regard the scheme as of doubtful benefit and are disposed to share the view of those who urge that the average Cockney would be apt to get his flora and fauna hopelessly mixed up—something after this fashion:—

The Bot-Zoo.

I met him close by Regent's Park,
And craved of him a thousand pardons,
And asked what did he most remark
When visiting the Bot-Zoo Gardens;
He told me, with his eyes afire,
E'en more than I could well desire.

"I saw," cried he, "the bison's bud,
Its varied tints in sunshine flashing;
The cactus in its thirst for blood
Its hungry-looking teeth was gnashing.
The gaunt carnivorous saxifrage
Went wandering round and round its cage.

"I heard the huge verbena roar
Just when the dinner-hour was chiming,
While o'er the trellis at the door
Luxuriantly the yak was climbing;
I saw the juniper, which shuts
Its eyes when it is cracking nuts.

"I saw the grave wistaria fed
With fish by amiable keepers
And saw a rabbit stricken dead
By venomous Virginia-creepers,
And marked in an adjoining room
The armadillo in full bloom.

"I saw the aleander swing
Itself by its appendage caudal
And watched the phlox with folded wing
Beside the limpid lakelet dawdle
And marked the little delphinium
With facile beak pick up a crumb.

"I saw the fierce ranunculus
Burst into a tremendous passion
While close at hand the platypus
Was blossoming in splendid fashion:
The camomile was eating buns,
Extremely stodgy-looking ones."

He waxed distinctly eloquent
But I no longer could be waiting,
So on my homeward way I went
In wistful wonder ruminating,
Feeling there were 'mongst Cockney lots who Would bring such memories from the Bot-Zoo.

It is not unnatural that Anglo-Indians should entertain the general belief that the rhinoceros is an amphibious animal, for all three species of the Asiatic rhinoceros haunt chiefly riverside swamps or a similarly wet neighbourhood, but as pointed out by the author of "Studies in the Zoological Gardens" now appearing in the Times, the African rhinoceros, black or white, is no amphibian though it loves to wallow in a mud hole as it delights to roll in the dust. The so called "white" rhino probably obtains the epithet from its habit of rolling in dust; it has been pointed out that when covered with dust and standing in the full African sun it may well have looked truly white, and so disguised may the creatures be with dust or mud that "in one district they appear almost white and in another red or nearly black as the case may be" in harmony with the surrounding soil. Opinions vary considerably as to the character of the rhino; the four now in the London Zoo are accounted among the worst tempered and most dangerous beasts in Regent's Park. Mr. Selous considers the black rhino to be "stupid and blundering" but rarely intentionally aggressive. This seems to be the general opinion, but Gordon Cumming found the animal "extremely fierce and dangerous." It is almost certain that many of the cases of ferocity which are reported are no more than manifestations of the animal's stupidity—what is mistaken for a charge being but the bewildered rush of a frightened beast endeavouring to get away. With its miserable sight the rhinoceros is usually made aware of the approach of danger, if at all, either by its sense of smell or by the warning of the rhinoceros bird which, haunting the beast for the sake of the ticks which infest it, acts as a sentinel. In the latter case the animal probably has no idea from what quarter it is threatened, and in the former it probably places the direction of the peril but vaguely. All rhinoceroses seemingly run up wind when suddenly roused or alarmed, and it necessarily follows that the first blind rush not seldom takes them straight at the object the scent of which has disturbed them. Thus many instances have been reported of their charging straight at passing and peaceful caravans, sometimes breaking through the line of porters, sometimes heading direct for one of the wagons; and whatever comes in the way of a rhinoceros moving at full speed is likely to suffer. The rhino seems to be able to hold his own with any other animal though an instance is on record of one having been seized by a hind leg by a crocodile in shallow water and dragged out of its depth and eventually killed. At the hand of man, however, the rhino frequently ends his life and both the white and black are said to be doomed to become extinct unless the establishment of game preserves succeeds in maintaining them in a semi-wild state. The rhino is called an anachronism of to-day, a solemn clumsy animal that plainly seems "to be out of time, to have belonged to a former state of things, and to have been forgotten when the change was made."

It has recently been decided in the courts at home that professional football players are on the footing of workmen and that they are entitled to the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Act as such—since they earn their wages by providing the public during eight months of the year with a marketable product—to wit, spectacular Association football, and keep in condition to produce it during the summer or close season, when their employers are not allowed to take money at the turnstiles. The decision will not do anything towards removing the commercial spirit with which professional football is so deeply tainted to-day. The sums obtained from the gates of big matches now are enormous and the popular professional of particular merit naturally expects a large share. Perhaps one of the most unpleasant aspects of this modern trade from a sporting point of view is that by means of the system of transfer fees a League Club, when its finances are in a bad state, can sell one of its players of outstanding merit for a large sum and so tide over its difficulties. An effort to fix a maximum limit for transfer fees was a failure, one or more men of little or no value in the football market being sold with the invaluable player at fictitious prices. It is generally impossible for the well-meaning legislator to evade the operation of the economic law of supply and demand. The General Federation of Trades Unions have taken up the cause of the Players' Union and are negotiating on behalf of the latter with the Football Association. This is the consequence of an attempt on the part of the Football Association to suppress the Players' Union by suspending the Committee and Members.

Bowls is a game well suited to a hot climate, and might be played more generally than it is in Calcutta, where it would [not] be difficult during a great part of the year to obtain the necessary turf. An article which recently appeared on this game remarks that though most of us now find a congenial recreation in more violent sports, they often seem less kindred to the national character. The great example of the expression of the national spirit in bowls is the famous Armada game between Drake and Hawkins on Plymouth Hoe. The whole genius of the game spoke out in Drake's refusal to be hurried unnecessarily, and equally in the waiting game which he played later with the Spanish admirals. Every true bowl-player must believe that he went from his game upon the Hoe the better primed for the task he had in hand. It was the crowning distinction of a great epoch in the history of bowls. The game is said to be becoming more popular at home than it has been for many years past. It is possible that it has taken some share in the popular enthusiasm for golf. It is pointed out that apart from its eminent suitability for hot weather bowls has, as compared with golf and many other games, a simplicity about its methods and implements which is not unwelcome amid the general multiplication of athletic paraphernalia. In olden days Bowls was much played by ladies and there is no reason why they should not do so nowadays. Provided the bowls with which they play are not too heavy nor the casts too long the game is a very suitable one for ladies. It is worth the while of many an owner of a compound in Calcutta to consider whether he or she shall not institute a bowling green therein.

Having amassed a comfortable fortune by his exploits on the running track, Dorando Pietri, the dapper little Italian who burst into fame in the Stadium on the occasion of the Olympic Marathon, on 26th July last year, has been married at Carpi, Lombardy, to a girl named Teresa Dondi. The young couple will go to stay in the villa which Pietri has built with the money he earned in America in his many "Marathon" races which followed there.

In an interview Dorando stated that his last race in the United States brought him in £8,000. He now intends to abandon the sporting life. He was a humble cookshop worker before he won his first Marathon. Dorando, as our readers know, was disqualified in the Olympic Marathon because, after he had fallen on entering the Stadium, his too-sympathetic friends helped him to pass the winning post. His time from Windsor was 2hrs. 54mins. 46 2-5secs. The race was awarded to Hayes, whose

On the 23rd August, riding a single gear, fixed-wheel machine, H. Green beat the record for the ride from London to Brighton and back by 3mins. 15secs. Green started from Coulsdon and completed the journey in 5hrs. 12mins. 14secs.

The previous best, which stands to the credit of R. Shirley, was put up three years ago.

The Cooch Behar Cup Association football tournament was concluded in Calcutta on the 9th instant when the Mahomedan Sporting beat the Aryans in the final by a goal to nil.

The cricket match between the Gentlemen and the Australians was abandoned.

Last week end Lord Londesborough's England Eleven beat the Australians at Scarborough by 133 runs.

The Players of the South, beat the Gentlemen of the South, at Hastings by 228 runs.

The final in the Minerva Cup Association Football Tournament, was played on the Sovabazar Club ground, Calcutta, on Saturday last when "E." Co. Gordons beat the E. I. Railway by 2 goals to nil.

Hundreds of horrified spectators witnessed a fatal attempt to swim the Niagara Rapids on the 17th of last month, when an eighteen-year-old boy named August Sporer was caught by the torrent while bathing. Sporer went into the rapids, swimming strongly, and held his own until he reached the Giant Wave, which curls backwards to a height of 30 feet. It was this wave that broke Captain Webb's back. The boy disappeared here for a moment and then reappeared, being flung by the succeeding wave high above the surface of the waters. He sank after swimming a hundred yards further than the famous English swimmer.

The Rajputana Hockey Tournament, open to teams from all stations on R. M. Railway, i.e., Ahmedabad, Deesa, Abu Road, Ajmere, Nasirabad, Neemuch, Mhow, Bandikui, Delhi, Agra, Cawnpur, etc., begins on the 15th proximo.

The 14th King's Hussars held their annual Boxing Tournament at the Bowring Institute, Bangalore, on the 8th and 9th instant. Sergt.-Major Dove officiated as Master of the Ring, Lieutenant Mason as Time-keeper, Sergt.-Major Cox, Leicestershire Regiment, Q. M. S. Mathews, O. Battery, and Colour-Sergt. Cope, Sherwood Foresters, as Judges, and the Referee was Captain Campbell Ross, 20th Deccan Horse. The prizes were distributed at the close of the proceedings on Thursday night by Brigadier-General Cookson. Results:—Novices, Bantam Weights, Pte. Crisp beat Pte. Foster. Feather Weights. Pte Lyons beat Pte. Crossby. Light Weights. Pte Thorley beat Pte. Coffer. Middle Weights. Pte. Martin beat Pte. Chester. Open, Bantam Weights. Pte. Healy (Leinsters) beat Pte. William Westlake, the crack-brained ancient mariner, made a second attempt (on the 26th August) to cross the English Channel on a plank. By way of teaching him the folly of his ways a merciful Providence first drifted him miles out of his course, then sent a big wave which washed away all his victuals and drink, and afterwards a few steamers nearly ran him down in the dark. After two days of footling about, damp, miserable and half starved, he was picked up by a Belgian trawler.

George Gray, aged 17, the antipodean boy billiard champion, at Melbourne, on the 25th ultimo, made the world's record break of 831 off the red, as per details in our London Sporting Letter.

As will be seen from the details given in our London Sporting Letter, there was some interesting athletics at Birmingham on the 25th ultimo. The most attractive event was the 100 yards and 120 yards races between V. L. Johnson, the cyclist, and R. E. Walker, the marvellous sprinter. In the 100 yards (level) the cyclist beat the runner by 4 yards in 9 4/5 secs.; in the 120 yards, the runner, getting 10 yards, beat the cyclist by 3 yards in 11 2/5secs. Fine performances both.

The Poona Horse Show has been fixed for the 27th and 28th instant.

A letter addressed to the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture asked for information as to how to get rid of the ants on the lawn. Prof. Surface replied that the material which he recommends for destroying ants on lawns, is carbon bi-sulphide, a foul-smelling liquid which volatilizes, and the fumes of which at once destroy the pests. Make holes in the ground near their nests. Make these to a depth of a foot or more, and from one to two or three feet apart, according to the porosity of the soil. Pour into each hole from one-third to one-half tea-cupful of the bi-sulphide of carbon, and close it with earth by tramping it in. It may possibly increase the efficiency by covering the holes with wet blankets, or something to hold the fumes down for a while. Keep fire away from the liquid and its gas. It will not injure vegetation

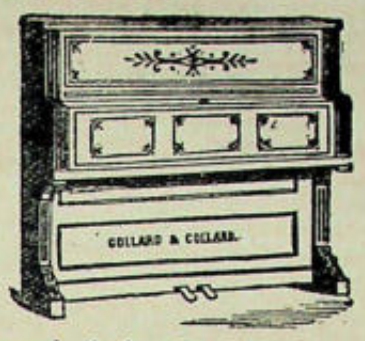
Our Poona Correspondent writes:—Punters must have got nearly all they lost on Saturday back on Wednesday, when the first two out of six were the only races in which they did not pick the winner; these two being third favourites. Fine weather favoured the large attendance though rain had fallen during the Presidency cricket match at intervals. We are enjoying the sight of all the best in the different classes and they provided some very pretty finishes.

We began with the first pony jump race of the year, six starting with Cheeky warming to better favourite than Wakeful and Tete-a-Tete. This last one adopted the same style as his stable companion Daroji and was followed by Wakeful, who found the effort of having to make up a good deal at each flight too much when it came to racing. Cheeky was the danger to the leader as she came with a rattle near the bend and caught him at the last jump, but fell there—not a purler luckily. Wakeful was beat and Carmenita followed Tete-a-Tete home.

On his Midget Handicap win in 1min. 22secs. Shanwar was naturally thought good for the Arab Pony Derby, though Gafal, then second and ten pounds worse off, looked dangerous, as did Rajput. Shanwar and Rajput were in front before the half mile but Gafal got away badly and only came up at the bend. Rajput hung on to Shanwar and a furlong from home had his measure, Gafal also passing Shanwar with Nagashi fourth after a bad run.

The Poona Plate brought out the classy sprinters and favouritism again rested with Soult Line, Tangaroa and Killua next. Killua was first away and with the other two coming at him down the straight there was a great finish. Killorn rode a fine waiting race, but Soult Line just beat him a head on the post.

An exceptionally large field of twenty-two faced the gate in front of the Stand for the Poona Derby, Second Thoughts being a strong favourite with other good money for Hazza, Parliament, Merrily, Devon and Colaba. In Merrily's interests Babil cut out the running for the first mile in very solid fashion, Brutus, Lapwing and Merrily leading the bunch that followed. Half way Thaboor, Hazza and the favourite were thereabouts. Another couple of furlongs saw Second Thoughts catching Babil with Merrily and Hazza next, and at the bend the favourite on the outside and Merrily led with Young Salanic and Colaba coming up to the bunch. Merrily was soon being driven and Second Thoughts ran on to win fairly comfortably and bring off a coup for the keen sportsmen who have looked to his training and "made a bird of it" by securing Southall to ride.



There were a dozen in the Criterion with Absentee backed to odds on from Sacricomar and Lachlan. Lachlan proved his Moderate Plate win no fluke as he took over from Chobham at the bend going well from Paul Pry. Absentee had none too clear a run and made no impression till near home when he was overhauling him at every stride but missed by a half neck. After such a performance it was hard on Lachlan being disqualified for wrong weight, which was only done when cash bets had already been paid.

Finally the Dealers' Plate needs no description as, after following Sanjakdhar, Tachreet, twos on, came away from Mr. M. G.'s pair Moonib Pasha, finishing very strong, and Dilarjung.

Half the card on Saturday, for the third day of the Meeting, were handicaps but the terms races continue to give punters trouble and they cannot claim any the better of exchanges. Betting continues to be good, as also the racing.

More falls occurred in the stick race, the Grand Annual, for which Greenstone and Pincher were favourites. Opposite the stand the field was reduced to four as Gerard came down and brought Pincher with him. Capt. Tomkinson had a narrow escape under Pincher's hoofs, getting a nasty blow as it was. From here Umutbee made the running with Greenstone and Squire Alfred in close attendance. It was anyone's race to the last jump, where, however, Umutbee went away comfortably.

With Tachreet out of the Wanowrie Plate, Bay Middleton gradually shortened to a better favourite than Scimitar and Gafal. It was a splendid start, Rajput shewing out for a moment from Bay Middleton with Gafal as usual last for a time. At the half mile Scimitar was slightly in front of the other two and at the bend Gafal put in an appearance. All were soon being ridden and Gafal, under the whip from the distance, won a good race from Rajput and Scimitar.

Next was the great Aga Khan's Cup in which there was some confusion, owing to Peru's number only going up late on the board owing to declaration being put in the wrong box. The stable were lucky he was allowed to run at all. Wandin was not long in being installed favourite from Wise Bird and Pelargonium with some money for Peru. Wandin was sent out to make all his own running from Wise Bird, Peru and Pelargonium.

There was no change till the mile, where Mother Goose came up third and Misty Morn was also close up. At the five furlongs Wise Bird began to close on Wandin and the pace was a cracker at the half mile, Wise Bird soon passing the leader. All looked well for her till down the straight Peru passed Pelargonium and Wandin. He was level with Wise Bird at the Stand and won a splendid race by half a neck, Absentee coming late into third place.

There were thirteen in the Aga Khan Commemoration Plate of ten furlongs, Peculiar, Second Thoughts and Precious practically equal favourites. Dhafer and Fruit Salt made the early running, Peculiar soon dropping in second and leading at the three furlongs from Second Thoughts, Famous and Precious. With Precious in such a good position so early it was considered all over. Peculiar fought with him for a time but the great old grey went away in the last furlong.

With fifteen runners, the Autumn Plate was considered difficult, Posco favourite from Lady Violet, St. Patrick and Zotique. Lumination cut out the pace till Coquette dashed to the front but went very wide at the bend. Here Zotique shewed out with Metal Boy and Lady Violet outside, and in a desperate finish the last named got there.

Finally the International Plate, with Comeback favourite, but expanding on money coming for Cracker and Refresher. It was a splendid race, Mandeville making the pace from Cracker who led at the bend and, in a desperate finish with Comeback, Koko and Refresher, won by a neck; Koko the same in front of Comeback.

The Durand Football tournament opened at Simla on Monday and we publish brief telegraphic results of the games on the first two days. Our correspondent promises further details for our next issue. The Calcutta Volunteer Rifles have given a good account of themselves by defeating the 12th Lancers in the first round and their next game is looked forward to with interest. Perhaps the best match played so far has been between the Royal Scots and the Lancashire Fusiliers, the Cup-holders, the latter coming through by 3 goals to 2.

In the preliminary lawn tennis contest at Philadelphia between England and America for the right to challenge Australia in the competition for the Davis Cup, the Americans have won three events out of five.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 27th August 1909.

This is the quiet season for the newspapers, there is absoutely nothing being chronicled but the preparations of the flying men at Rheims and a few banalities on "the proper age to marry." Kings and War Lords are taking the waters, the sun-burnt Territorial is back in plain clothes, once more sitting on his office stool or jumping behind his counter, the world is turning gently without any perceptible jolt. In the calmness of the air the wail of the modern Balbus rises clear and shrill.

The Builder, like the Lancet, is determined to make our flesh creep. With all the horrible zest of the Lancet discovering the germ that infests bread and butter, the Builder tells of the ravages of the Engineering Ornamentalist. This is the being who, among other inquities, is making the streets of London hideous with electric-light standards that mock the revival of a dignified street architecture. Keeping to the principal streets, the Builder's artist has collected a dozen specimens of light-standards which may well make us pause to demand what advantage the country is reaping from its lavish expenditure on schools of art and design.

Some of the earliest gas lamps in London still remain to rebuke this revel of crazy ironmongery. How our forefathers would have approached such a simple problem is better suggested by the old standards in which swing the sign of the road-side inn. Perhaps some South Kensington magnate will explain how it is that an eighteenth century publican could easily command a far better article than that which the London authorities with the rate-bag in their hands can buy for us in the twentieth century.

The allusion to builders and decorators reminds me that the huge Caravanserai, to be known as the Strand Palace Hotel, is to be opened on the 12th proximo. It has many external attractions I observe, and inside it is to be the dernier cri in comfort, elegance and twen cent accessories; but the feature of features is the "No Tips" regulation. The management argue that the practice of tipping is wrong in principle and that the hotel should pay its employes reasonable and adequate wages, and not expect the visitor to take the burden off its hands. It will be interesting to see whether the experiment is thought worthy of emulation by other hotels.

This pet dog craze in the "hupper succles" has reached a pitch which indicates the intervention of some one in authority—the Board of Health, the Commissioners in Lunacy or the Police. There are now several shops in London devoted to canine outfitting from shoes to bassinetts, from collars to lace handkerchiefs, and they do brisk business too. A few years ago when Londoners left town, or went abroad, it used to be the practice to entrust "Fido" to the Battersea Dog's Home, if suitable diggings could not be found for him elsewhere. Now there are scores of "boarding homes for dogs," and they are at this season crowded with the animals whose mistresses (servants really) have had to leave them behind on crossing the Channel.

Fido and Fifi go through the gaieties of the London season. They are taken to Ascot and Goodwood. They are the life of the houseboat party at Henley, and they sail the blue waters of the Solent during Cowes week, but when the fashionable woman goes to Trouville, to Marienbad, or Carlsbad the English quarantine laws prevent her having the comforting companionship of her canine pet.

Telephone messages and telegrams flow in all day long from idiotic females who want a daily bulletin of their pets' health.

Most of these miserable, pampered little victims get chicken daily, and some get game, many arrive at the boarding houses with their scents and play things, then silver backed brushes, and even tooth brushes, and lace handkerchiefs are included in their kit! Sickening isn't it?

The Indian sedition monger is, like some of the noxious weeds that grow in his country, difficult to eradicate, especially when we approach the task of extermination with occidental methods. Like his own weeds, a gentle spraying fails to settle him, he must be dug up by the roots and burned, so to speak; but, of course, there is little chance of those who have the dealing with him knowing how to go about it, and the remotest chance of their taking the advice of experts whose knowledge of the Indian has been gained by life long contact with him. This being so it surprised me not at all to find that, following close by on the Dhingra Execution, a fresh number of the Indian Sociologist, the printer and publisher of which, Arthur Fletcher Horsley, was recently sentenced to four months' imprisonment as a first-class misdemeanant, has appeared, "printed and published for the proprietor by Guy A. Aldred, of the Bakunin Press, at 35, Stanlake-road, Shepherd's Bush."

The new issue is headed by a leading article, apparently from the pen of the editor, infamous Krishnavarma, entitled "Indian Martyrdom in England," in which Madan Lal Dhingra is again extolled as "an example of heroic courage and patriotism" and "a martyr in the cause of Indian independence."

The new printer and publisher, a youth of twenty-two, in a long signed article, proclaims himself "an Anarchist-Communist," and endeavours to prove "the anti-constitutional nature of the law of seditious libel" under which his predecessor was sentenced. He has been arrested and remanded after preliminary enquiries at Bow Street.

"The Pin and the Pudding," a pleasant little Christmassy Dickens and water play by Mr. Barton White, which was given at the Comedy last Monday night, has a story founded on that of Mr. Carker the Junior. Robert Malkin is a clerk earning, after twenty years of devoted service to his firm, twenty-eight shillings a week. He has a wife and a daughter, and he lives in Tooting. The daughter is tired of her hard, pinched existence, and dreams of other and better things which can be procured only by money.

Malkin early in his life has stolen half a sovereign from his firm, has been sent to prison, and is now a servant only on the terms that he is never to ask for any higher wage.

Fortune comes to him in the shape of a legacy, but with careful forethought for the needs of the playwright the testator has made it a condition that his beneficiary shall never have been in prison. So strong is the temptation of the money that Malkin does not disclose his past and receives the benefit.

His employer, a coarse, ungainly, ill-mannered brute, has cast an eye of longing on the daughter, and with Malkin's secret in his hands almost succeeds in forcing an alliance. But with the same careful forethought the same testator has appointed as his residuary legatee, in the event of Malkin's not being eligible by virtue of the clause above mentioned, a young man whom the girl meets and loves in the third act. So the girl is happy, the patient, loving, suffering father is happy, and even the hard employer, moved by the compelling necessities of the stage, is if not happy, at least benevolently acquiescent.

To such a play as this it is scarcely fair to apply the rules of commonsense and everyday life, so one must not ask how Robert contrived to give his daughter a first-rate musical education on a salary of twenty-eight shillings a week, or how a lawyer's clerk managed to get incapably drunk in five minutes, and half a dozen hundred other things. There were moments when the farce rather interfered with the sugar and spice of the sentiment, but the play being chiefly composed of "all things nice" was very warmly received. It was a happy thought of the author to make the bounderish villain a farcical figure, with a bluff humour that made him at moments likable, and Mr. Robert Whyte, jun., who always played the part capitally, struck quite a pathetic note when making his exit after being thrown over by Tamsie. As Tamsie Miss Iris Hoey played very sweetly, but was inclined to talk directly at the audience when she should have been talking to the characters in the play. Mr. Harding Cox acted with a quiet strength as Robert Malkin, and other excellent work was done by Mrs. Sam Sothern, Mr. Athol Stewart, and Mr. Raymond Butler

Mr. Anstey's fantastic comedy, "The Brass Bottle," which is to be produced at the Vaudeville early in September, is being anticipated with the liveliest interest. If the play is a tithe as full of fun and humour as the well-known story of the same name it will be one of the biggest laughter-raisers that has been seen for a long time. It is not easy to understand how a great deal of the story can have been adapted to stage requirements, but—in due course we shall see what "The Brass Bottle" is filled with.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's censor-banned play, "The Showing Up of Blanco Posnet" has been produced, after some preliminary difficulties, at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin. I was not privileged to see it but apparently I didn't miss much. A correspondent, who lived through it, writes as follows:—

"The piece, is a compound of farce and cheap melodrama. Blanco is sometimes distinctly amusing, as when he explains that he left the place in the early morning because he did not want to see this rotten town by daylight. The jury are amusing in their anxiety to hang Blanco, not so much from a sense of justice as from a keen anticipation of the entertainment which the hanging will afford. Even that old hypocrite, the elder Posnet, is amusing when he propounds the theory that Americans are great because they work hard when they work, and when not working get too drunk to fall into temptation, and the seductions of the world pass them by. Apart from such broad humour there is little that is remarkable or original. The motive—the conversion of a bad man—is a favourite with the short story writer of to-day, and here it is not treated very forcibly. The denouement—the failure of Phemy to say the fatal words which will send Blanco to the gallows—is robbed of intensity by the fact that her evidence has been almost wholly discredited. If one remembers the play at all after having seen it, it will be for its stray humour, and not for any moral lesson it conveys."

A lady who died a short time ago in Weymouth Street, W., leaving an estate of nearly £50,000, directed that her funeral should be "as cheerful as possible." I hope it is not cynical to remark that if those who attended the funeral were beneficiaries under her will her wishes were probably gratified. Nothing mitigates sorrow more effectually than a legacy, and affliction is deprived of its sorest sting (in spite of succession duties) when the next-of-kin comes into a comfortable heritage. But there is a limit to cheerfulness, whether forced or natural, on these occasions. It must not go so far in the "as possible" direction as to degenerate into hilarity. A subdued and sober geniality is the most appropriate mood for the event. Anything that oversteps the limit of mild facetiousness, or insinuates the chorus of a comic song, is to be deprecated as exceeding the discreet requirements of the testatrix.

The Vagrant.

The smart young man—his school honours thick upon him, and his intention to teach the world in general, and his father in particular—stood earnestly holding forth in his father's office. "You may rely upon me, sir," he was saying with emphasis. "I will devote my whole life to the interests of the business. It shall be my aim and ambition to keep the family name free from stain." "Go!" said the old man gruffly. "That's the spirit. Get the whiting and ammonia, and polish up the brass nameplate on the door."

Review.

A FRENCH SPORTSMAN IN AFRICA.*

The author of this handsomely got-up and beautifully illustrated volume spent three years between 1904 and 1907 in the Portuguese province of Moxambique, mainly for the purpose of executing certain surveys and prospecting for gold and other mineral products. He combined, however, with these duties the task of making a collection of the skins and other trophies of the local animals for the Paris Museum, while he also devoted a considerable portion of his leisure time to big-game shooting, alike for the love of sport, for the sake of ivory, and as a food-supply for his followers. The work has been very faithfully translated from the original French by Mr. Lydekker and his daughter, the former of whom has added notes where he considered it necessary to identify the animals referred to by the author.

In judging of the merits or demerits of this work it is important to bear in mind that the author is a Frenchman, and that consequently he does not see altogether eye to eye with an Englishman as to what does or does not constitute fair and legitimate sport. He writes, for instance, in one passage with considerable glee and triumph of having shot a female Lichtenstein's hartebeest, whereas an Englishman unless he had done so for purely scientific purposes, would probably have kept the matter dark. Again, during the rainy season the author devoted a large portion of his time to trapping lions and leopards in a fashion which most of us would regard as utterly unsportsmanlike, but which to him appears to have been perfectly correct and legitimate. While we cannot approve of such practices, we cannot, on the other hand, condemn them (especially when they are not carried out in British territory) when employed by a foreigner. Moreover, lions and leopards appear to be so numerous in the flooded "tendo" country, that it is possible the compassing of their destruction by any methods may be considered legitimate. Whether, in the case of the larger antelopes, Mr. Vasse is open to the charge of butchery, we will leave our readers to decide for themselves when they have purchased and read his volume.

Mrs. Vasse, it may be mentioned, accompanied her husband, and proved an intrepid sportswoman, killing two leopards, a hartebeest, a gnu, and a wild cat with her own rifle. As the country had been previously well explored, Mr. Vasse obtained no new species of big game, although a duikerbok included in his bag has been described and named in his honour as a new race by Dr. Trouessart, of the Paris Museum.

Among the larger items in the author's bag may be mentioned 90 gnus, 55 bushbucks, 38 reedbucks, 35 waterbucks, 30 hartebeests, 28 oribis, 27 zebras, 12 wart-hogs, 23 lions, 21 leopards, and 16 hyænas. As we have said, many of the gnus, hartebeests, waterbacks, and zebras were killed as food for the camp-followers; but it is difficult to justify slaughter of so many kinds of the smaller species of antelope.

The best shooting season in this part of the country appear to be from October to December, inclusive; but during the later summer, that is to say from January to March, when the great rains and floods occur and the heat is intolerable, the sportsman has to lie by, unless he ventures out in search of elephants, rhinoceros, and buffalo. Lions in this part of the country display remarkable boldness, and show little hesitation in approaching and raiding settlements. One night the party, who were occupying the house of a settler, were disturbed by loud outcries and rushed out to find that what they supposed to be a leopard had raided the sties by leaping on the roof and tearing a hole, "we enter," writes the author, "and find four pigs killed and many wounded; the beast had escaped by forcing two pailings. A little of his hair left in the breach indicated his passage. I had forgotten to ascertain the time, and did not know whether it would soon be day. To spend the night in this place, where the mosquitoes are in legions, is impossible. On the other hand, after our departure, the beast may return and recommence the massacre. I accordingly resort to the following stratagem: I draw forth the carcase of a pig and place it outside, facing the point of exit of the beast. If the leopard returns, it will find this victim and drag it into some bush to devour. In the morning we will take up the track, and if we cannot shoot the robber, will set a trap by what remains of his victim and so capture him.

"Matters happened in this manner. In the morning we find that the bait had been dragged away; we accordingly follow the groove made in the soil as the carcase was dragged away and enter a vast reed-brake, when on a sudden one of the men in advance calls out to me:—'Bondolo' (a lion). I look, and can scarcely believe my eyes. Yes, it is in truth a lioness which had attacked the enclosure; its tracks are clearly impressed in the damp soil."

In the pursuit of one of the two elephants brought to bag Mr. Vasse states that he had to go without water for six-and-thirty hours, and that in intense heat. The carcase of this elephant was not located till decomposition had already set in; and after the tusks, estimated to weigh about 29lbs., had been cut out they were stolen and never recovered.

Between the Pungwe and the Zambezi elephants are stated to be fairly numerous, but are vastly inferior in size to those found in Central Africa and carry poor tusks, 29lbs. being a good average for those of bulls. This, of course, is nothing in comparison with the great tusks of 90, 120 or 140lbs. which may often be seen on the route from the interior to Zanzibar. Moreover, a very large proportion of the cows and even many bulls are devoid of tusks; these, it is reported, being more irascible in disposition, and therefore more dangerous to hunt than tuskers.

Perhaps the most exciting portions of the author's adventures are to be found in the chapter on lion-hunting in the "tendo" country in the neighbourhood of the Pungwe valley.

"A tendo," the author explains, "is an immense plain inundated during the rainy season, where, during the winter, when everything is dried up by the sun, vegetation can grow in proportion to the subsiding of the water. The grasses of these plains are stunted and mixed with thistles. All round these open stretches are woods, chiefly composed of various mimosas, and certain palms under which tall grass grows. These forests sharply define the limits of the inundations, which are due to the numerous streams and rivers falling into the low-grounds. Wild animals, eager for green pasturage, naturally congregate in these plains, which extend from the Zambezi to the Pungwe, following the course of the Urema. Lions, which follow the herds in their migrations, are likewise also naturally very numerous in the district."

On one occasion in this district Mr. Vasse came across a party of eight lions in a deep defile from among which he succeeded in killing a couple of lionesses before his presence was detected, except by the sound of the first shot. Immediately afterwards a third lioness charged, but she, too, was dropped by a single bullet; while with the two remaining cartridges her pair of cubs were laid low. Not bad work this;—one cartridge to each lion! A lion's charge, it may be observed, the author considers far less dangerous than the rush of an infuriated elephant or buffalo, as a well directed bullet may be relied upon to drop the former in its tracks, while this is by no means the case as regards either of the two latter.

"One would think," observes our sportsman, "that the Kafirs of the neighbouring villages would be delighted to see me for having rid them of such troublesome formidable neighbours as the lions of the tendos. Nothing of the kind, they were on the contrary much distressed, and, instead of helping me, did all they could to hinder my finding them. It is, therefore, entirely due to my own efforts that I have fired at twenty-five lions and accounted for twenty-three of them. I have at last, however, solved the mystery. A native, more loquacious than the rest, said to me one day when I was showing him the skins of my lions, which were drying near my camp: 'Yes, you have killed a great many lions, but there are still plenty more, and as you will not always be here, when you have gone away they will return in multitudes, and, looking for their brothers and being unable to find them, they will see their skeletons on the plain, which will cry out to them: 'these are the men who have killed us,' and in revenge they will come and eat us in our villages.'"

Fortunately, Mr. Vasse was a bit of a surgeon, and was thus enabled to cure a young negress who had been seized and badly mauled by a crocodile and subsequently suffered from the usual cicatrising treatment prevalent among the Kafirs.

Crocodiles our author considers to be the most noxious of all African animals; numbers of deaths and cripples by the score being due to their attacks.

In taking leave of the adventures of a bold and staunch sportsman, we commend his book to the best attention of his fellow big game hunters in this country.

JUNGLE MEMORIES.

THE PANTHER AND LEOPARD.

It is with a certain amount of diffidence that I have thus headed this article. It is, I believe, now practically settled, that the panther and leopard are identical, still in spite of the scientists, I am inclined to agree with Saunderson and Baldwin that the two are distinct species. The panther's skin is much lighter in colour as a rule than that of the leopard, while the head of the latter is quite distinct from that of the former. In the panther, the head is long, and more the shape of a bull terrier's, while there is a ridge on the cranium similar to that of a tiger. In the leopard the head is rounder and more cat shaped, while the cranial ridge is wanting. The Mahrattas of the Western ghats divide these spotted cats into two classes, the first of which they call the husinia, which takes from four to six men to carry and is usually seven feet and over in length, while the other is called the biptah, a two men's load and about six feet long. When reporting the news of a kill, the villagers will invariably state, that it was either that of a husinia or of a biptah which shows the way they differentiate between them. In India the two are generally placed in one category, and called panthers, by which name I will in future designate them.

My experiences in attempting to drive them out of a jungle have been so unfortunate, that I now only beat for them as a last resort, when after awaiting them over a kill they have not returned to it. During a beat I find they generally crouch in some thick bit of cover and then when the beaters have passed, steal quietly back, or also adopt the same procedure after climbing a tree. An incident exemplifying this occurred to me three years ago. I had missed a panther over a kill by moonlight, and beat for him the next day. The ladder had been placed at the bottom corner of a small hill in some tree jungle, the hill itself being covered with thick karwi stalks, with a few trees dotted about on it, and near the top there were three or four in a clump together. About ten minutes after the beat started, I saw the panther spring like a lamplighter up one of this group of trees, with his long tail stiff and straight out behind him, and disappear in the foliage. The beaters were not far behind but owing to the thick karwi had not seen him. They passed the trees and came along towards where I was still sitting, as I was in the hope of another panther being in the beat. Nothing, however, came my way except two cheetal, so as soon as the hank was over, I descended and climbing up the hill towards the clump of trees a hundred yards distant, had a good look at each one, but the brute was non inventus, and must have jumped down again after the beaters had passed without any of us having seen him.

The most successful way of bagging panthers is by waiting for them over a kill, but the sportsman must still be prepared for many disappointments, and must require a good stock of patience if he uses this method. A good many men do not care for the tedium of sitting quietly for several hours on the chance of getting a shot, but there are others like myself who find it interesting, when sitting in quiet concealment to watch the jungle life around one, the different kinds of birds hopping and twittering, the lithe mungoose, a prowling jackal, or, perhaps, a wary old sambhur, as they emerge from the forest depths when the shadows lengthen. It is rather fascinating to watch a panther approaching its kill. I remember one such occasion well. At the time I was on a hot weather shoot and the day after moving into a fresh camp, a panther killed, and drawing lots, the chance of the shot fell to me. Taking my ladder I immediately set forth to choose a place for sitting up in, and after going about a mile arrived at the scene of the tragedy. Not much of the carcase had been eaten, though the guts had been put a little to one side, and covered carefully over with leaves. Having ascertained the animal's probable route from the water in the evening I had the ladder placed at the proper angle against a tree covered with creepers about fifteen yards away from the kill. Then having put three or four split bamboos in position above and below the seat, I had them lashed into a hoop formation to form a framework for the branches and leaves, which were then plaited in as a screen, a hole eight inches square being made about a foot above the seat for me to shoot through. Returning at four o'clock I found that the panther had come back to the kill at some time during the day, and had eaten a good deal of the stomach and chest. The men whom I had told off to watch by the carcase swore the brute had never been there, but seeing was believing, and I presume in their casual way, they had moved off some distance into the shade of the trees and had gone to sleep.

I was now rather afraid I should not get a daylight shot, as the panther would not be very hungry after a recent meal, so I clambered up to my perch with rather mixed feelings. It was still very hot and there was not much life about, but towards five o'clock the birds began to come forth from their leafy retreats, twittering and hopping among the branches and at times sitting within a foot of my nose, as they chatted away in blissful ignorance of my presence. Dingy sathbhais, astonished looking hoopooes, copper-smiths, bul buls, and gorgeous looking woodpeckers fluttered and chirped around me, and once for a minute or so, two paradise flycatchers with their long white tail feathers came within my limited vision. It was all very interesting and the time passed quickly, though every now and then the slight crack of a dried stick on the ground would make me look cautiously around, expecting to see my spotted friend, only to find however the sound had been caused by small birds. The hum of the cicadas was deafening, and one in particular annoyed me immensely, as just outside my leafy screen and quite unapproachable, he shrilled away with excruciating persistency. The lengthening shadows now announced that the sun would shortly be setting, and I was beginning to wonder, whether the visitor I so ardently desired was going to turn up or not when again hearing the slight noise of a broken stick, I turned my head to the right and saw the panther quietly and unsuspiciously slouching along towards the kill.

When a few yards off, it stopped, and sitting down on its haunches, gazed calmly round for a couple of minutes before beginning to lick itself. I noticed all the time the brute was doing this, although not in the least suspicious, it was yet casting quick keen glances in every direction, and on my very slightly moving the barrels of my rifle so as to be in an easier position for taking aim, the movement, slight though it was, immediately arrested the animal's attention and she at once began to stare straight at my hiding place. Seeing no further movement she was apparently satisfied and walking up to the carcase began playing with it with her left paw in the same way that one sees a kitten after a reel of cotton, and then further exerting herself began trying to hook the goat's body towards her. As the remains were still tied by the neck rope, the panther began to employ more force, so as I had by this time drawn a perfect bead on her heart, I pulled the trigger.

Simultaneously with the report the brute fell on her side, stone dead, though the mouth gave an occasional slow gape for a minute or so, as the paralysed muscles vainly endeavoured to resent their enforced quietude. On getting down to examine her, for it turned out to be a female, I found her to be a small, though full grown, leopard, and on subsequently measuring her, she did not tape more than 5 feet 11 inches.

On another occasion I had a kill about one hundred and fifty yards behind the little dak bungalow, at which I was stopping. The perpetrator of the fell deed, was a well known heavy panther, that had been in that locality for some years, and had been known to pull down cattle on the high road, close by, even going so far, one night, as to kill the Executive Engineer's cow in the compound, when he happened to be staying there, and then adding insult to injury had come in and had a good drink out of his bath. From what I was told about this brute's cunning, I did not think there was much chance of bagging him, but was resolved so far as careful arrangements went, to leave nothing to chance.

The carcase lay by the side of a narrow footpath, which led through rather dense jungle to a village half a mile distant.

Just opposite, and about five yards away, was a small tree with thick foliage partially growing out of a large thorny bush, and in this tree, though it was a bit close, I decided to place the machan, as it would be well concealed by the heavy foliage. The bush, too, I thought, would prevent the panther coming right underneath, and so make him less likely to be aware of my proximity as I have noticed, as a rule, that if a panther came from behind and beneath me by daylight, he had usually spotted the ambuscade and made tracks. I soon had a nice little arbour arranged, with two broad planks lashed into the form of a garden seat in the middle of it quite concealed from view, and after selecting a branch on which to hang the lantern should a night shot be necessary, returned to breakfast.

About five o'clock my wife and I came back and climbed up to our leafy retreat and waited silently for the enemy. We had not been long in our places before we heard the monkeys swearing some two hundred yards away so guessed our spotted friend was on the move to get his evening drink before his dinner, as the water lay in that direction. A little time after we thought we heard his footfall, and in a minute or two heard a bamboo crack a little further off, as if he had gone away again. Another half hour went by and then all of a sudden, without the slightest warning, the panther bounded across the path, and seizing the carcase began tugging hard in a very hurried manner, to break the rope and get it away. He was evidently very suspicious that some one was about.

His head was facing away from me, so taking him half way down his back to rake him forward, I let fly. As I fired he gave a convulsive bound into the air, and with a succession of savage grunts stayed not in the order of his going, but bolted into the jungle behind us. As he dashed on he went into something with a loud crash and pulled up about fifty yards away, where we heard him growling at intervals. After waiting a quarter of an hour I whistled up the men, and we got down, the panther giving loud growls as we did so. As the light was getting bad, and the jungle a dense one, I deferred a further interview till next day. On going back to the bungalow I found that my Paradox, with which I had intended following him up if necessary, was jammed, the safety catch being clogged with dry oil, so it was just as well I had not gone after the brute. The next morning I went off with my fox-terrier Bingo and the shikari to renew the acquaintance which had terminated so abruptly the evening before. On arriving at the machan with Bingo in front, we slowly went into the jungle. There were absolutely no tracks, except once we picked up some hair, and then came across a broken creeper, which accounted for the crash we had heard the previous evening, when the panther was making off.

Poking about and looking under the bushes we saw Bingo a few yards ahead suddenly stop and begin sniffing the air towards his right front. He then went cautiously forward, step by step, twitching his nose as he did so, thereby letting us know we were not far off our quarry. His tail then went slightly down and he trotted back to us. Patting him gently on the head I motioned to him to go on again, which he did still sniffing the air as he looked towards a certain part of the jungle. All of a sudden down went his tail and away he shot for the bungalow, where, so my wife informed me, he arrived in a great state of mind. Poor old chap, he was carried off by a panther when I was at home last year, the third dog I have now lost by these sneaking savage brutes. The panther had evidently been too much for his nerves, but as he had shown us where it lay, he had done all that we wanted. Carefully advancing we could still see nothing, until Ithobar climbing quietly on to a low bough made signs to me that he could see the beast lying on his side a few yards distant. Going on a little further I at last got a view of him as dead as he had looked, at which I was distinctly relieved, as it was a nasty bit of stuff to have found him alive in. This panther was a very heavy thick-set old brute, his tail at the root being almost as thick as that of a tigress, but as he was curled up stiff, unfortunately, I was unable to measure him, his skin, however, when pegged out, was just on eight feet, so he would have taped probably well over seven in a straight line from nose to tip. So far this has been the only panther I have had to follow up, the others I have shot, having dropped on the spot or fallen a few yards away, so up to date I have had no unlucky contretemps with these big and ferocious cats.

On one occasion I had rather an eerie experience, though it was hardly a dangerous one. I was on a shoot at the time, and had just packed up one morning, prior to shifting camp, when a villager arrived to say a panther had killed a cow about two miles away. From this I judged the brute would be a husinia, so ordering my camp to be repitched, I went off to see the kill which I was very annoyed to find was just outside the village, so there would be no chance of a daylight shot. The only place to put my ladder, was against a thick thorny bamboo clump at the side of the path skirting the village, and a few yards away from the kill. This was a full grown cow and from that and the size of his pugs and the width between the fang marked in the throat of the carcase, he must have been a big panther. I had only had the ladder mended the evening before, the top of one of the poles from the seat upwards having got rotten, but as I had lashed some bamboo strips round it, it seemed to me strong enough to use for some time yet.

Returning in the evening to the village a little after sunset, I placed the shaded hurricane lamp about a yard from the kill on the ground, as there was nothing on which to hang it, and then climbed up to the ladder seat. The village noises soon ceased, and an hour after dark or at about 8-30 P.M., I heard the stealthy rustle and the soft pad of the marauder behind me. There was a short pause and then a swishing crackle, as the animal forced its way through some of the slender bamboo stems, the thorny tops of which scratched my face and ears as they swayed and rattled about my head. The next moment the beast bumped into the ladder, and then must have silently retired, apparently not caring for the lamp, as ten minutes after I heard him grunting at a little distance to my right. Another few minutes and the performance was repeated, the rattle of the bamboos, the bump against the ladder and then the silent flitting and grunting. After a bit longer wait back he came once more, but instead of clearing off as he had done on the two former occasions, "spots" deliberately began rubbing himself backwards and forwards against the ladder, which swayed and creaked to such an extent from the contact of his heavy body, that I was afraid every moment, that the rotten pole would break once more, and that I should come down with a run on top of him. It was pitch dark and I could see nothing, so refrained from firing, the more so as now I hoped he would face the light and start on his dinner. But, alas! he faded away as before, and though I stayed in my machan for another couple of hours, the brute never returned.

In conclusion I add the following hints which perhaps may be of some use to a beginner:—(1) If possible see your machan put up yourself. (2) Have it so placed that it is at right angles to the panther's line of approach. Villagers can generally tell, which way he will be coming after he has been to water. There is a greater likelihood of his spotting you if he comes from behind and underneath, or sees your machan staring him in the face. (3) The best and most comfortable form of machan is like a garden seat, made from two pieces of board four to five feet long, the one to sit on, and the other to rest the feet. You will find plenty of room to place your water bottle, knife, book, etc., should you require it. (4) See that none of the coolies employed in erecting the machan, smoke, or that if they have done so, the cheroot butts and half burnt tobacco, is removed from the ground in the vicinity. The panther has no great sense of smell, but he does notice things of this sort. (5) Do not leave your machan till 9 P.M., and as soon as it is getting dark, if there is no moon, have an ordinary lantern brought and hung above the kill. The panther generally arrives before 9 P.M., or else in the early morning. He does not mind a light above the kill, so long as it is not too brilliant, and so shaded round that the light is flung downwards. (6) Be sure to have two men watching the carcase all day, until you are in the machan. The panther often returns in the middle of the day to feed again. I have had the kill completely removed, on more than one occasion, though men have been supposed to have been watching it. (7) The machan should be put up silently and the wood and bamboos necessary for its construction cut at a little distance, or else done with a saw. (8) A strip of white paper or cloth pasted on the rib is as good as anything else at night. Aim so as to see half an inch of white aligned on the lower edge of the target and see that there is plenty of fur above the muzzle when you pull the trigger. (9) Always be alone when you sit up.

SLEEPY POOLS.

THOUGH the official rainfall of Bettws-y-Coed is something over eighty inches, long spells of hot dry weather are not so uncommon as one might expect: and with the rivers dwindled to nothing in their rocky beds, it becomes almost impossible to catch a dish of speckled Welsh trout by ordinary means.

In the Llugwy and Conway, however, are long still pools, bordered with grass and bushes, where the water remains deep close to the banks despite of many rainless days. Here in the summer plenty of good sized trout have their quarters, and during the still hot days feed lazily on the flies which drift slowly down with the scarce perceptible current.

Sunday is a dies non in strictly sabbatarian Wales; but having been to church in the morning, the angler may blamelessly, if without a rod, stroll during the afternoon along the margin of his beloved river. These pleasant post meridian hours may very profitably be devoted to scouting, and discovering the position of the enemy in readiness for the attack on Monday morning. By stealing amid the overhanging branches and peeping through the hemlocks and grass stems which fringe the margin of the pool, the angler may discover where sundry fat half and three-quarter pounders have their haunts. If he supplies himself with a few grasshoppers or coch-y-bonddhus, and flicks one of these insects on to the water with finger and thumb, he will see the goodly trout, which has been floating almost motionless among the flickering shadows, sail out and suck the fly gently down. Another and most important point will also be noted, that the fish's movements are so leisurely that something like a full second elapses between the sucking in of the insect and the downward turn of the trout afterwards with closed mouth. When at last Monday arrives, it proves to be another hot still day: so our fisherman makes preparations for dapping with the live fly, about the only effective method of dealing with the situation. There is a fly like a small sized blue-bottle, but of more active habits and metallic green in colour. These green flies sit in sunny situations on rocks and walls, and are unfortunately most difficult to catch. As, however, trout seem to like them better than anything else, an hour is devoted to capturing a supply of them: they are deposited in the angler's store bottle together with a few coch-y-bonddhus and grasshoppers, as alternative lures.

A very fine plaited and dressed silk roach line on a small Nottingham reel, which happens to be amongst the tackle, seems to be just the very thing for the work in hand. To the end of the line is attached about a foot of fine gut carrying a tiny double hook, made by whipping two No. O. eyed snecks back to back. A very small bullet put on at the junction of gut and reel line, completes the equipment.

Among the trees which edge one of the pools, is a little turfy hummock which projects like a miniature promontory into the still water. Here there is a good depth right under the grasses which stretch out and nod to their reflections in the glassy pool. Indeed the bank is hollowed out, and yesterday's scouting revealed the fact that a good trout lives there, and is accustomed to rise within a few inches of the bank. Our angler carefully extracts a green fly from his bottle, and fixes the little double hook delicately into the shield between the insect's shoulders. Then with the line drawn up till the bullet touches the top ring, he steals forward step by step, till the rod point can be extended just beyond the bank edge. Then a little line is paid out, and the weight of the bullet draws it down until the fly buzzing and twirling drops out of sight between the grass stems, on to the water below. Thereafter comes an expectant pause, and then suddenly a widening ring comes into view from beneath the bank. But the angler saw enough yesterday to make him realise that hurried striking is fatal when using the natural fly, so he waits an instant before giving the slight turn of the wrist, which suffices to send the keen little hook home. Then comes a plunge and a whirr of the reel which show that the trout below is of respectable dimensions. The position, however, is an easy one, as there is room to raise and manoeuvre the rod point, and soon the net lifts a well conditioned half pounder on to the grass. Other encounters with the denizens of the pools do not prove so easy and straightforward, and in the case of a three-quarter pounder hooked among thick bushes, the fisher has to thrust his rod tip deep under water, and hold on, as the only way of preventing entanglement amid the thick vegetation. The bending rod in this case plays the fish under water, and soon the trout waggles feeble and exhausted at the end of the short line. Even then, however, the business is by no means over, for the next thing is to get the fish into the net: this is at last effected by a friendly Welshman, who produces a knife and hews his way through the jungle, and eventually nets the trout.

Dapping is essentially slow deliberate work, but it enables the patient fisherman to produce a plate of nice fish, at the end of a hot summer's day when (save perhaps up-stream worm fishing), all other methods would prove useless.

It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

DANGEROUS OLD FASHIONS

Not to be followed.

Old habits are often better than new ones, but not always. For instance, the old-fashioned method of cleaning the teeth and mouth with tooth-powders and tooth-pastes is a complete mistake.

Brushing the teeth with tooth-powders and tooth-pastes can never safeguard them from tooth-destroying microbes; for the simple reason that the parts which are most liable to attack, the backs of the molars and the fissures and interstices of the teeth—the very parts where the microbes live and thrive—are not purified because they cannot be reached by tooth-powders and tooth-pastes. Only a liquid dentifrice can penetrate everywhere, and when it is antiseptic it destroys all the enemies which attack the teeth. Odol is such a dentifrice, and has such a practical antiseptic effect that it effectively arrests all bacterial inroads and fermentation processes.

The complete disinfection of the mouth and teeth resulting from the use of Odol is especially due to a remarkable property which this preparation possesses and which causes it to be absorbed by the surface of the mucous membrane and in the hollows of the teeth, so that it here deposits a store of antiseptic matter whose action continues for some hours. By regular cleansing with Odol healthy teeth are kept absolutely intact, and teeth already impaired are preserved from further destruction. For this reason Odol must certainly be regarded as the best of all known preparations for cleansing the mouth and teeth.

Totalisator paid Rs. 20 on the winner; Rs. 7, Rs. 13 and Rs. 7 for places.

Won cleverly by a head; Bellman third a short head away. Time—46⅗secs.

THE FOURTH WINDSOR PLATE.—Rs. 199 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third pony. A flat race for Burma-bred ponies 13-1 and under, 13-1 to carry 9st. W. I. 700 yards.

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 27th August 1909.

HURST PARK.

THEY had very good weather for the wind up of this meeting. The improvement brought an increase in attendance, which was a rattling good one all round, the half-holiday folk packing the enclosures, and several leading patrons of the national sport were present in the club enclosure. The bright sunshine did good service in drying the going, which had a rare soaking on Friday night, and the thick crop of grass afforded good galloping, while big fields made a card of seven events a heavy one, as close upon one hundred horses took part. Results:—

LANG

"FIELD," June 12, 1909:

". . . . a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumbnail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs. Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked. . . . . Congratulation may be permitted concerning the lively balance and neat finish of the gun submitted."

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

Bright weather was reserved for the Ebor day, the afternoon fulfilling the promise of the morning, though towards ten o'clock it became so dark and cloudy as to suggest a repetition of Tuesday's gloomy surroundings. It was more like April than November this time, sunshine alternating with light showers, that gave umbrellas a short innings. Legislation will never put down the spirit of sport, especially in Yorkshire, where the rude forefathers of every little village hamlet indulge in a sweepstake on the Ebor, and this year they had more material to go upon. An enormous crowd braved the showers in the open, and saw fine sport, especially in the rattling finish between Diba and Royal Realm in the great Ebor Handicap. Results:—

The Gimcrack Stakes though assailed by richer prizes, the outcome of gate-money meetings, still possesses a charm of its own. Old traditions still cling to the race, which involves the ordeal of a speech from the owner of the winner to such critical ears that one possessing a rare chance might think twice before incurring such a penalty for success. The best weather was reserved for the concluding day, as the wind had dropped, the sun had a better chance, the temperature was pleasantly fresh, and the going good. After the Ebor crowd, the attendance on the Knavesmire seemed small, but no fault could be found on the stand side, the various enclosures being well patronised and as most of the notabilities remained to see the fall of the curtain the stand was again filled by a brilliant company. The programme was sensibly curtailed to half a dozen events.

A Second Life

"If I only had another chance!"

How often does a man utter these despairing words when he feels his health undermined, his strength ebbing, his vital forces depressed—often as the result of his own errors or follies—and he realises the infinite possibilities which might lie in his grasp could he indeed receive, in Shakespeare's phrase, "A Second Life."

Happily, this other chance, this second life, is to be had for the asking by means of that which has been aptly described by a famous physician as "the last word science has spoken" on the subject of such remedial agents and to which, by virtue of its health-giving properties, the name of Sanatogen—meaning "The Health Producer"—has been given.

So potent is its force that it will not only restore the health and vitality which have been lost, but, if persevered in, will, in addition, impart the highest measure of nervous and physical vigour of which the individual is capable; for there is a maximum capacity of health for everyone, although he may not hitherto have had the fact impressed upon him. Doctors endorse this and daily prescribe Sanatogen in increasing quantities.

The constituents which give Sanatogen its power are known to every physician. What they are is described below in the plainest terms in the telling analysis of Sir Charles A. Cameron, the Chief Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst for Dublin.

Medical testimony of its value can be read in the statements of Dr. C. W. Saleeby and Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical authors. Over twenty five thousand doctors prescribe Sanatogen in their daily practice, while some ten thousand physicians have testified to its merits as

A Revitalising Force.

In Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever and other wasting diseases incidental to life in India it acts "like a miracle," to quote the words of a physician who has used it largely. It reconstitutes the blood, rebuilds the body, reinvigorates the health, reinforces the strength, restores the vitality, revivifies the waning powers and revitalises the nervous system, until the patient is as well as he was before his illness, while it safeguards him from further attacks.

The typical letters of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., and Miss Ellaline Terriss are selected from hundreds of communications of famous men and women who have of their own free will written of the debt they owe Sanatogen.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Medical Opinion

DR. C. W. SALEEBY, the well-known medical author:
"13, Greville Place, London, N.W.

"Sanatogen is a specially adapted food that has solved the problem of giving phosphorus in such a way that the nervous system can take hold of it. I would specially refer to its value in the feeding of invalids, whether during actual illness or during convalescence, and for nursing mothers."

C. W. Saleeby

DR. ANDREW WILSON, the distinguished scientist:
"110, Gilmore Place, Edinburgh.

"I have found the ideal tonic and restorative in Sanatogen. Recovering from influenza, and suffering from severe weakness, I gave Sanatogen a fair trial, and without the use of any other medicine or preparation I was restored to health."

Andrew Wilson

A Telling Analysis

SIR CHARLES A. CAMERON, C.B., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst, Dublin, etc.

"On analysis it proved to be composed of 9.5% moisture, and 90.5% of dry matter, including 7.37% of ash. It contained 83.13% of Albuminoids (nearly wholly made up of casein, but including a little Albumin), together with 2.2% of phosphoric acid, a small portion of which existed in the albuminoids, but by far the larger portion was in the form of Sodium glycero-phosphate.

"It is this organic phosphorus which, in my opinion, makes the substance of such value as a metabolic stimulant, and the means of increasing the amount of nitrogen assimilated in the food.

"I have arrived at the conclusion that Sanatogen is a substance of the highest nutritive value, containing as it does a large amount, relatively speaking, of organic phosphorus—that is, phosphorus which is offered to the tissues in exactly the form in which it can be easily absorbed. It is an excellent nerve food."

Typical Letters

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the popular novelist:
"20, Carlton House Terrace, S.W.

"I have used Sanatogen at intervals since last autumn with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Miss ELLALINE TERRISS, the favourite comedienne:
"Hicks' Theatre, London, W.

"I have every reason to be grateful to Sanatogen, for it has completely revitalised and restored me to perfect health."

Ellaline Terriss

ATHLETICS.

TWO EXCITING MATCHES AT BIRMINGHAM. The chief events at Aston Lower Grounds, Birmingham, last evening, were two races between Vic Johnson and R. E. Walker, the distances being 100 yards and 120 yards. Walker was on foot, while Johnson cycled, and was simply held up on his machine, not having the advantage of the push off. Johnson won the 100 yards, but in the longer distance event Walker, with an allowance of 10 yards, proved successful. The grass track was a trifle rough, but Walker ran well, while Johnson also cycled splendidly.

Half-mile Second-class Cycle Race.—E. A. Spratt 1, L. H. Johnson 2, W. A. Smith 3. Won easily. Time—1min. 14secs.

Quarter-mile Cycle Race.—V. L. Johnson 1, A. J. Denny 2, G. A. W. King 3. Won by a length; 2 lengths. Time—22¾secs.

Half-mile Cycle Pursuit Race.—Spratt brothers beat Johnson brothers by 2 lengths. Time—1min. 10secs.

150 Yards Match.—A. J. Denny (cyclist) beat C. Oliver (Midland 100 yards sprint champion), received 32 yards, by 7 yards. Time—12⅝secs.

500 Yards Cycle Handicap.—W. Tomlin, 45 yards, 1; G. A. W. King, 18, 2; E. A. Spratt, 18, 3. Won by a length; half a wheel. Time—34⅕secs.

Three Miles Race.—Dennis Hodgetts 1, A. J. Denny 2, G. A. W. King, 3. Won by a length; same. Time—7mins. 14secs.

300 Yards Match.—Dennis Hodgetts (cyclist) vs. C. J. Oliver.—The latter received 100 yards, and won by 20 yards. Time—22secs.

100 Yards Match (level).—V. L. Johnson (cyclist) beat R. E. Walker (runner) by 4 yards. Time—9⅘secs.

120 Yards Match.—Walker, received. 10 yards, beat Johnson by 3 yards. Time—11⅘secs.

A. J. Denny attacked the track record for quarter-mile, standing start, but was outside, his time being 29⅕secs.

ROWING.

MARATHON SCULLING RACE.—The Double Sculling Race in two classes from Waites's boat house just below Richmond Lock, down round Putney stone bridge, and back to the starting point, took place last Saturday afternoon. They started on the last of the ebb, but met the young flood at Mortlake, so that from that point to Putney Bridge it was a case of very hard work. Results:—

BILLIARDS.

WORLD'S RECORD RED BALL BREAK.—A telegram from Melbourne dated 25th August says:—

George Gray, aged 17, while playing a billiard match on a standard table here, in a break of 836 made 831 off the red. This is a world's record.—Reuter.

It is doubtful if the foregoing record will be officially recognised on this side, for when young Gray compiled 501 off the red ball under similar conditions about six months ago, the performance, although recognised as a marvellous one, was not accorded official recognition. The official red ball record stands to the credit of H. W. Stevenson, that player having made 354 off the coloured ball at the close of last season at the Grand Hall.

George Gray is expected in London some time this year. His father will accompany him, and presumably will stage manage for him, but a successful tour would have been a greater certainty had his engagement list been opened before he sailed from "down under." Gray will doubtless secure some lucrative engagements, and probably his most attractive match on this side will be when he meets our boy champion, Tom Newman.

Hunting.

WITH THE POONA AND KIRKEE FOX-HOUNDS DURING AUGUST.

1st August.—A large field met hounds at the 8th milestone, Bombay Road, at 7 A.M. There were too many jacks in the gardens close to the Meet. Hounds forced one out at the north side, but after a ring he returned to cover through the Vale of Tears. Another broke on the east side but only travelled a short way to ground in the Vale where he was left. Hounds soon had another jack away along the line of the nullah running north from the gardens. At a very slow pace hounds held the line for a couple of miles towards Bhosari on the north-east and were soon run out of scent, the sun shining brightly and making things very unpleasant for hounds. We then returned to the Vale and bolted the jack which had there gone to ground. Unfortunately he swung sharp round and passed near the pack in waiting. Getting away at a view hounds soon ran into him when entering an adjacent sugar khet. From this khet another jack went away taking hounds back to the gardens where he was left. It was really too hot to persevere. Hounds had been working for two hours under a bright sun with a plethora of jacks, which made it somewhat confusing. But after nine o'clock heavy clouds came up from the south-west and a thick mist commenced to fall. With this welcome change in the weather hounds were taken to the nullahs north of the gardens to look for an outlying jack. From the first nullah drawn a fine jack went away and gave us the run of the season up to date. With a serving scent hounds fairly raced almost due north over the best of our country for three miles, then swung right handed, crossed the Nasik Road near the 11th milestone, turned further right handed, and ran parallel to the road towards Bhosari for a mile, recrossed the road to the west, and traversed the entire breadth of the upland country, and running from scent to view killed in a small kopje in which the jack had at the last taken refuge—about seven miles without a check in 35 minutes. The brush was given to Mrs. Beatty, the mask to Mr. Hugh Symons from the neighbouring Bombay Hunt.

5th August.—Met at 9th milestone, Alandi Road, at 7 A.M. A jack gave a very fast gallop between the Alandi and Nasik Roads and was killed close to the Indrayani river, the northern boundary of our country. Miss Forbes received the brush, Mr. Chaytor the mask.

8th August.—Met at Kolas, which is six miles out on the Alandi Road. A jack gave a short run and we then hunted a ravine deer all over the Kolas country for about an hour, eventually running north to between the 10th and 11th milestones on the Alandi Road when hounds were stopped.

10th August.—The 7th milestone, Bombay Road, was the place of meeting this morning. The adjacent gardens so prolific on a recent occasion failed to hold a jack to-day. But in a ravine close by a jack was found and gave a nice run over a good line to the north when he was killed. A gallop of a few miles with a chinkara also over nice grass land finished the morning's sport.

SOME IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

Days in Hellas.—By MABEL MOORE, Author of "Carthage of the Phœnicians." Illustrated. Crown 8vo. Rs. 5-4.

"She has plenty of humour, plenty of good sense, and is quite capable of sentiment, always gracefully expressed, when occasion demands. It is most excellent reading."—Spectator.

The Love Letters of Thomas Carlyle and Jane Welsh.—dited by ALEXANDER CARLYLE. Uniform with "New Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle." 2 vols. Rs. 21-14.

Spectator.—"No one will regret the appearance of these letters—the authentic and complete correspondence between Carlyle and his wife before their marriage. . . . The real interest is psychological, and it is well-nigh impossible to give an adequate account of it."

Memoirs of the Dukes of Urbino.—Illustrating the Arms, Art and Literature of Italy from 1440 to 1630. By JAMES DENNISTOUN of Dennistoun. A New Edition, by EDWARD HUTTON. Demy 8vo., 3vols. Rs. 36-12.

". . . The book is not only a history of a briliant line, but an account of the arts and literature of Italy, given in the most readable and agreeable way."—Pall Mall Gazette.

George Canning and His Friends.—Containing hitherto Unpublished Letters, Joux d'Esprit, etc. Edited by CAPT. JOSCELINE BAGOT. With Portraits. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. Rs. 26-4.

". . . Presents a charming picture of the life of the time. . . . . Captain Bagot can fairly claim to have introduced us to some of the most human and interesting letters which we have seen for long, and which contrast remarkably with the extraordinary dulness affecting the ordinary memoirs and journals of the early nineteenth century. . . . There is a simple charm about the correspondence itself, a sympathy about the editor, which is delightful."—The Times.

Problems of the Middle East.—By ANGUS HAMILTON. Rs. 5-10.

There are so many foreign questions of importance in which the Middle East is concerned nowadays that a volume dealing in a simple manner with their various phases has long been wanted. "Problems of the Middle East," by the author of "Korea" and "Afganistan," is intended to serve as a simple and reliable handbook for those whose attention is aroused by Imperial subjects. Admittedly, the interests of the Middle East are not confined to India, Persia, and Siam; they are no less associated with the Far East by reason of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, and with the Near East by reason of the Baghdad Convention. Accordingly, Mr. Angus Hamilton's new book deals with the interests of Great Britain and other Powers in Turkey and Persia, Great Britain and France in Indo-China, Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia, and Great Britain and Japan in Korea. The influence of any one of those questions touches the others, and the book therefore may be said to be an index to all points of the political compass. It is not unillustrated, but equipped with all necessary appendices and a map.

Hungary of to-day.—By Members of the Hungarian Government, etc. Edited by Percy Elden, M.P. Rs. 5-0.

An authoritative and reliable account of its people, its constitution, and its social life.

"Full of useful and interesting information about a country less known than it ought to be."—The Outlook.

THACKER, - -
SPINK & CO.,
P.O. Box 54,
CALCUTTA.

18th August.—8th milestone, Nasik Road ; a fast 19 minutes' gallop from the west of Bbosari with a jack to the north of the Sister Hills, where he was killed. The brush was given to Mrs. Edgar. Another jack put up amongst rocks on the west of the Nasik Road, stood up for half an hour, and was eventually killed in thick jungle near the 9th milestone on the Bombay road. The brush was given to the Hon'ble Mr. Cameron.

15th August.—We had to travel a long way to this morning's meet, which was at the 10th milestone, Alandi Road. A large field met hounds at 7-30. When fixing the Meet for this late hour it was never anticipated that a break in the rains might let us in for a hot dry morning. But so it turned out ; we had two excellent gallops notwithstanding, but it was a severe day for hounds. A jack gave us a 30 minutes' run over very undulating country. The hills crossed were rough and stoney but the valleys rode light. After three miles we reached the Indrayani river opposite Chiruble village. Hounds ran along the river bank towards Alandi on the east, then made a circuit of the adjacent low-lying country and killed in a nullah close to the river. The brush was given to Mrs. Beatty. A bath in the river refreshed hounds, and the sun shining brightly it was decided to draw towards home instead of visiting the many tempting looking gardens in the neighbourhood of the river. When we had nearly reached the place of meeting another jack was put up and gave us another excellent gallop of 25 minutes right away from home. We left him in crops near the river, hounds having had quite sufficient work on such a bright and hot morning.

19th August.—Met at the 6th milestone, Nagar Road. Still dry and morning very hot, but there was a heavy dew on the ground. A jack found on the south side of the road gave us a ring over the roughest piece of country imaginable, then crossed the road to better ground, but was soon run into. Found another jack in the rocky country to the south, ran him to the Mutha Moola river, along the river bank in the direction of Poona for a mile, then north-west across the Nagar Road, across stoney glen and on to Yerrowda, where he was killed after a good gallop of 31 minutes. The distance was 6 or 6¼ miles. Captain Hannay received the brush, Mr. Purser the mask.

22nd August.—Dapuri at 6-30 was the fixture. Two jacks which were found near Bhopkhel did not provide much in the way of sport. The first after a short scurry lay up in Cactus near the village; the other took a line to the north but did not travel more than a mile when he was run into. Then ran a deer for a short time in the Kolas country, but the ground being dry and hard hounds were soon run out of scent. A fox took hounds round the base of one of the Sister Hills and was lost in high grass. Rain is badly wanted.

24th August.—Met at Khondwa Khud at 6-30 A.M. Ran a jack found on plateau south of Towers of Silence to Cactus near village of Khondwa 8. Ran another from Khondwa Valley over the range of hills on the east to Mahomed Wari Valley, where he was kept in high crops. The morning was hot and dry.

26th August.—Hounds were at the 6th milestone, Nagar Road, at 6-30 A.M. A slight fall of rain had freshened up the country and there was also a heavy dew. We found a good jack amongst ravines near the meet and had a very fine gallop of about 5½ miles to the Sister Hill, which lies furthest on the east. The line was at first to the north, then in a westerly direction leaving Lohogaon on our right, then north for Temple Hill. Near the latter hill, however, the jack swung left handed and made the nearest Sister Hill his point. When nearing this hill hounds got a view. A deer passed between hounds and their quarry but was quite unnoticed. Up the steep face of the hill hounds pressed but only to be disappointed, as near the summit the jack went to ground in a narrow mouthed cave in the rocks into which hounds could not enter. The time of this gallop was 24 minutes a 4½-mile point, a mile further as hounds ran. Ran a deer for 14 minutes round the Sister Hill and stopped hounds as the deer did not seem inclined to leave the rough vicinity of the hill. When nearly back at the meet got a fox away from a ravine and ran him hard due north for 15 minutes until he defeated hounds amongst rocks beyond Lohogaon.

29th August.—Met at 8th milestone, Nasik Road, at 6-15 A.M. Ran a jack a 2½-mile point and killed. Then found again amongst rocks near the Nasik Road : ran all over the country on the west and killed near Chinchwad Station on the Bombay Road. The distance was about 4 miles, the time 24 minutes. Mrs. Carmichael received the brush.

30th August.—Met near H. H. the Aga Khan's residence on the Nagar Road at 6-45 A.M. Had an excellent gallop over the Yerrowda country and killed a good jack in 28 minutes. The brush was given to Mr. Rube, the mask to Surgeon-General Sloggett.

THE CALCUTTA RUGBY CUP TOURNAMENTS.

FIRST ROUND.

EAST YORKS vs. RANGERS.—These teams met in the opening game on the 8th instant. The Rangers pressed at the start but the military transferred play and were nearly through, Apcar saving by falling on the ball. The East Yorks continued to attack and at length Brownlowe got over with a try, the place-kick failing. The soldiers kept up the pressure for a spell but the Rangers' defence was sound and play was open and fast for the rest of the period. On changing ends the game was very level. Both sides attacked in turn : the East Yorks were able to get across with another try, Farthing being responsible but this remained unconverted. The Rangers made great efforts to reduce the margin but without success and they were thus beaten by two tries (6 points) to nil. Teams :—

EAST YORKS.—Cressy, full-back ; Mason, Gibson, Brownlowe and Lieutenant Crawford, three-quarters ; Welsh and Rhodes, halves ; Kelly, Bladen, Farthing, Underwood, Afleck, Tose, Miller and Cooper, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, full-back ; Apcar, Wheelock, Williams and Rosetti, three-quarters ; Davis and Fairley, halves ; Allen, Minet, Macdonald, Nicol, Ker, Bennett, Starling and Gilmour, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Cadell (C. F. C.).

SECOND ROUND.

KING'S OWN REGIMENT vs. H. L. I.—This game on the Calcutta ground last Friday was fast and closely contested throughout, the King's Own eventually winning by ten points to nil. They had the best of the exchanges at the start and looked like scoring from a mark but the kick fell short. Open play followed but the King's Own were soon back in the H. L. I. "25" and though the Highlanders' defence was good the King's Own threes got past and Murray crossed over with a try, Lieutenant Blackburn adding the extra points. They continued to attack on resuming and Howie obtained the second try, Lieutenant Blackburn being once more successful with the kick. The H. L. I. rallied and gave a good account of themselves during the remainder of the first half but were unable to score. On changing ends the play was mainly in midfield and there was no further scoring. The H. L. I. made great efforts and were nearly through on more than one occasion but they were kept out till the end and retired beaten by 2 goals (10 points) to nil. Teams :—

KING'S OWN.—Mason, full back ; Murray, Fowler, Lieutenant Blackburn and Goldin, three-quarters ; Lieutenant Cassidy and Kennedy, halves ; Buckley, Howard, Grey, Bridson, Sidgworth, Bowl, Sutherland and Massey, forwards.

H. L I.—Tait, full-back ; Schewrin, Clayton, Turner and Clarke, three-quarters ; Bigger and Reid, halves ; Passfield, Henderson, McGlone, McGeehan, Shrubsbell, Keith, Sims and King, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Arthur, (C. F. C.).

CALCUTTA vs. EAST YORKS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday a one-sided game ending in favour of Calcutta by 21 points to nil. The Civilians had the upper hand all through but could only get through once in the first half, Arthur concluding a nice bout of passing by crossing the soldiers' line with a try. Burnett converted. On resuming after the interval the military went to pieces and Calcutta kept them penned in their own "25." Four tries were registered, Burnett, Meldrum, Cadell and Kerr being responsible. Burnett added the extra points to two of these, and Calcutta thus won by 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Whiteley, back ; Longbottom, Meldrum, Siddons and Burnett, three-quarters ; Arthur and Ward, halves ; Cadell, Studd, Bryce, Morrison, Kerr, Richmond, Malcom and Miller, forwards.

EAST YORKS.—Cressy, back ; Mason, Gibson, Brownlowe and Lieutenant Crawford, three-quarters ; Welsh and Rhodes, halves ; Cooper, Underwood, Farthing, Afleck, Bladen, Clarke, Kelly and Miller, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. C. Reid.

UNITED SERVICES vs. WEST RIDINGS.—A good game was witnessed when these teams met on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. It was keenly contested from start to finish the holders eventually winning by 9 points to 3. Play was fast and very even during the first half ; the Ridings pressed at the start and Chapman registered a try not long after the start : Morris kicked a splendid goal from a difficult angle. Foul against the Dukes relieved the pressure on resuming and then the Services worked the ball down and Bocquet nipped across with a try which was not improved upon. The West Ridings did most of the attacking on changing ends, but the Services' defence was sound and could not be pierced. Morris dropped a fine goal for the Dukes early in the half and this was the only advantage gained. The Services broke away occasionally but nothing further resulted, the Ridings winning by a goal and a dropped goal (9 points) to a try (3 points).

DALHOUSIE vs. SOUTH BEHAR BARBARIANS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday. The heavy showes during the afternoon had made the ground sticky and the ball greasy, but the visitors were always superior to the local team and eventually won by a goal and a try to nil. Play was contested in midfield during the opening stages of the game : then the Behar team took up the attack and Danby had to touch down to save on more than one occasion. The Barbarians kept up the pressure and Ennet receiving grounded the ball near the posts, Hanney completing the effort with a good kick. On changing ends Dalhousie were kept busy defending once more and shortly after the start Mason ran in with a try for the Barbarians. The place failed and subsequent play ruled even for a spell. The Dals made vigorous efforts to reduce the margin but could not pass Macpherson and the game ended in their defeat as stated. Teams :—

SOUTH BEHAR BARBARIANS.—Macpherson, back ; Ennet, Hanney Arakiel and Broome, three-quarters ; Coldwell and Henry, halves ; Kelly, Wright, Steevens, Phillips, Luby, Mason, Inkson and Kennedy, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Danby, back ; Bevill, Smith, Eden and Sinclair, three-quarters ; Wilson and Evans, halves ; Brewer, Williams, Williamson, McLeod, Wardle, Lewis and Dickson, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Cadell (C.F.C.).

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ON Wednesday evening in very fine weather, the Rangers and the East Yorks opened the twentieth competition for the Calcutta Rugby Championship Cup, a well contested game resulting in a win for the military men by two tries to nothing. Undoubtedly the better team won, but the Rangers who made desperate efforts in the closing stages of the game to score had hard lines in not doing so. The East Yorks had the best of matters forward, their packing being much better than their opponents' while they got the ball nearly always in the scrum. Their foot work was also good. Bunty and Afflick being the best of a hard-working lot. The Rangers' forwards, of whom Minet was the pick, got away with the ball once or twice but invariably lost it through reckless dribbling; they were also very slow in getting round the ball. At three-quarter the East Yorks again held the advantage, and although their fielding in the second half was a little faulty they had some nice runs, from one of which Brownslow got over. Lieutenant Crawfurd played well; his kicking being good. Cressey at full back also played well, he had to take some hard knocks but came through it all creditably.

ON Friday night the two teams from Lucknow, the H.L.I. and the King's Own, were opposed to each other on the Calcutta ground, which was in excellent condition but if anything on the hard side. The game, though evenly contested, was a rather dull one from a spectator's point of view as the play was chiefly confined to the forwards. The King's Own were better in the pack and also outside the scrum and deserved to win, the score of ten points to nil about representing their superiority. The H.L.I. forwards were somewhat disappointing, coming round the ball very slowly, though once they did get their heads down they held their own with their opponents. The King's Own packed well and seemed fitter than the opposing eight. Outside the scrum the two King's Own officers played well, Lieutenant Blackburn's tackling and kicking being very effective, while Lieutenant Cassidy had some good individual runs.

THE United Services had out a strong side to meet the West Ridings in the second round of the Cup Tournament on Saturday evening, and although they had to admit defeat by nine points to three, they gave their opponents a hard fight for it. Considering the sultry evening, the game was of a very fast order, but it was a pity that it did not start up to time as the closing stages were fought out in very poor light.

Both sets of forwards were good, Services having the best of matters in the tight, while the Ridings were slightly better in the loose. The Service forwards were splendid and where all played well it would be invidious to single out any person for special mention; repeatedly they screwed the scrum and got away with the ball at their feet in first-class form. Chase at half for the Services played a fine game, his kicking being particularly good. Bocquet also played well and got in quite a lot of useful foot work.

The West Riding halves were quite good and got the ball away to their three-quarters very smartly, Morris's drop kicking being a feature of the game; his first goal was a beautiful kick while he had hard lines in hitting the cross bar with another fine one a few minutes later.

The West Riding three quarter line was much too good for the Services and the former made a mistake in not keeping up the high, cross kicking which was so profitable at the start. The United Service three-quarters were poor and they simply presented the Ridings with their first try, not one of them marking their men properly. Their tackling was bad but they were not alone in this respect as the forwards also were often at fault, showing a strong inclination to go for their opponents' heads instead of their feet.

Oliver at full back played well except for his slowness in fielding the ball and getting in his kick which nearly proved disastrous on one occasion.

ON Saturday the East Yorks and Calcutta met in the second round of the Cup Tournament on the Dalhousie ground, the local team winning by 21 points to nil. The East Yorks played well in the first half but on the resumption Calcutta began to assert themselves and thereafter had matters in their own hands. In the scrum the East Yorks more than held their own and unless the Calcutta pack improve considerably there is not much chance of their carrying off the Cup. It is in the scrum that Calcutta are weakest, which is surprising considering the number of good forwards they have at their disposal; still, the fact remains that they cannot get the ball out quickly and cleanly which is absolutely essential with a decent back division.

FIRST ROUND.

(By Telegram.)

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. 12TH LANCERS.—This was the opening game of the tournament. The Calcutta team had the best of the play throughout and eventually won by 2 goals to 1. L. H. Smith scored both goals for the winners.

17TH LANCERS vs. WILTSHIRE.—This was not a particularly brilliant game. The Lancers scored in the first half but the goal was disallowed for offside. In the second moiety Gowan found the net for the 17th and all the efforts of the Wiltshires to equalise were fruitless.

WEST RIDINGS vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—Played on the 14th instant a well contested game ending in a win for the Highlanders by a goal to nil. Play was very level throughout and it was not till five minutes before the call of time that McMenemy notched the only point of the game.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS (Holders).—Considerable interest was taken in the meeting of these teams on the 14th instant and spectators were not disappointed, for it was an excellent game. The Scots were all over the holders at the start and registered two goals within the first ten minutes. The Fusiliers then settled down and before the interval they had equalised. The second half was a desperate struggle the Lancashires scoring from a penalty and thus winning by 3 goals to 2.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on the 6th instant. The Y. M. C. A. attacked at the start and Keith-Roach was tested by Roberts. Play was then transferred to the other end but the Young Men cleared and the ball was kept in midfield for a spell. Keith-Roach next saved a shot by Brown but soon after let through a long shot which Elliot failed to clear The Gymkhana pressed during most of the remaining play in the first half but without result. On crossing over the Young Men attacked and Dowling scored. The Gymkhana were prominent for a while, but Hildreth cleared and a foul against the Gymkhana let their opponents in once more. Ward's kick was cleared but Brown was lying handy and netted the ball. A heavy pressure was kept up on the Gymkhana goal, Brown put through again but the point was disallowed for off-side. A rush by the Gymkhana produced an abortive corner and the ball was returned to their territory where Pack beat Keith-Roach twice in succession. Just before time the Gymkhana got away again and Moir scored. Final score; Y. M. C. A., 5 goals; Gymkhana, 1 goal. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Keith-Roach, goal; Elliot and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Wengli and Sim, halves; Murray, Hargreaves, Moir, Price and Sharpe, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and C. Templeton, backs; Hotz, Ward and H. Templeton, halves; Roberts, Dowling, Brown, Pack and Whitcombe, forwards.

GLOSTERS vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—This game on the Oval last Saturday concluded the Harwood League. It was keenly contested throughout but was marred by a deal of rough play, the Commercial Gymkhana being most to blame. Play was mainly in the Gymkhana territory during the first half but the efforts of the soldiers were unsuccessful. Just before half time the Commercials rushed away and Cook put the ball through. The ball was taken down to the other end and Short lost an opportunity of equalising from a corner. On changing ends, however, the soldiers soon got on terms, Harris putting through. The Commercials attacked vigorously and Blois was kept busy. He cleared all shots and the ball was rushed down to the other end where a foul against Lay enabled Ruck to score for the soldiers from the penalty kick. The Commercials forced two abortive corners and play was again transferred. The soldiers pressed hard but it was not till a few minutes before time that Law scored. The Glosters thus won by 3 goals to 1. Teams :—

GLOSTERS.—Smith, goal; Scaife and Ruck, backs; Cooper, Barton and Law, halves; Maton, Short, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Blois, goal; Harwood and Lay backs; Bellamy, Osborne and Elliot, halves; Evans, Hosmson Johnson, Woolly and Cook, forwards.

The Story Teller.

THE STRANGER.

THE members of Moreton Street Congregational Church were very proud of their Literary Guild.

The President was an Irishman, and by his wit and social bearing had transformed a deadly dull society into a jovial circle of friends.

A few of the Church officers regarded its proceedings as slightly unorthodox, but admitted they were wholly enjoyable. They boasted of their broad-mindedness and their fine scorn of red tape. Some of the members belonged to the Church, the others were outsiders; all were bound together by the ties of fellowship and good feeling.

To this Guild there came at the beginning of the session a little, middle-aged man. His appearance was not taking. The three parts of his costume were of different patterns, his linen was dull of hue, his tie cheap and shabby. "A little weed of a man," somebody called him. Nobody knew where he came from or what he did. Rumour had it that he was a broken-down journalist. Though he had a crushed look, there was nothing cringing in his manner—quite the reverse. He was no respecter of persons, and never seemed concious that his suit constrasted strangely with those of the other men.

He soon became famous for his rude little remarks. The Guild did not know how to take them at first. Among themselves there was plenty of banter; the wearisome votes of thanks had long given place to a sharp hail of good-natured criticism, but they were all old friends, and this stranger spoke with as much freedom as if he had known them for years. He never laughed and did not smile when making his comments. At one debate he promised to support the girl who opposed the motion. She was astonished beyond measure when, on rising to speak, he took the other side. Afterwards she demanded explanation.

"I didn't forget my promise," he said, "but your's was such a silly speech I didn't like to be on your side."

For a moment she was silent, then the impudence of his words caught her fancy and she laughed. "You don't fail in candour, anyhow," she said. From that day his rudeness was treated as a joke.

He was an undoubted egoist, speaking freely of his thoughts and feelings; but of his occupation he never talked. The girl whose speech he had called "silly" took a liking to him. He would sit beside her and pour out his little comments in a low, even tone, as if he were communing with himself. The theory that he was not right in his mind was banished by the excellent papers he occasionally gave.

After a few weeks he joined the Society, but it was noticed that though he came faithfully to the regular meetings, on nights when members had to pay he was absent. A friendly offer of a ticket for an entertainment was so curtly rejected that no one dared to repeat it. About the middle of the session the Treasurer was taken ill, and the little man was asked to take his place. It was discovered then that he lived in a mean street on the outskirts of the town.

* * * *

At the end of the season the Committee held a business meeting to settle the accounts and elect the officers. It was a cold night in March, and the Church Parlour was a scene of comfort. It had been furnished during the ministry of a man of taste, and the harmony of colour gave rest to the nerves. A large fire blazed at one end of the room, and round it the Committee was gathered; the President in an armchair, and the rest grouped as they pleased. The Treasurer sat a little way apart, looking more insignificant than usual. The minister was leaving and the Guild wanted to give a parting present.

"We are in a pretty good way financially," said the Predent; "we have about fifty shillings in hand, have we not?"

The Treasurer rose, giving a sudden air of formality to the meeting, which hitherto had been a fireside chat. There was a tinge of colour in his cheeks, and a show of spirit in his blue eyes. His voice was passionless as usual.

"I think I had better explain," he said, "that the Guild has nothing in hand, because I have taken the money. It has been a clear case of stealing; I never thought for a moment I could refund it in time. You can put the law on me if you like, I don't care. I meant to—to go away and say nothing, but changed my mind." He moved as if to sit down, then drew himself upright and continued—

"Perhaps I ought to say I was hungry when I took the money. I suppose nobody here knows what it is to face starvation. I have been down on my luck for a long time. You can see I am not a strong man, and lately neither my head nor my hands have been able to earn me a living. An account of what I have been doing would merely bore you. My last job was distributing circulars about metal polish, but that was a temporary thing. I have never stolen before; the other week only the Guild money stood between me and starvation. It would have been more heroic to starve. I am no hero."

He moved towards the door, but the Secretary slipped between it and him.

"Ah, you'd use force, would you! Well you're eight to one," and the man sank into a chair.

"Don't be an idiot!" said the Secretary. "Mr. Sanders wants to speak to you; it's not manners to bolt like this."

"This Society is not famous for politeness, and I've said more rude things than anyone. Half the time I was jealous and angry. It seemed hard lines that you should all be strong and happy, and I—Ah well, that's fool's talk."

"Never mind old chap; we thought they were jokes."

For the only time on record the Treasurer laughed. By this time the President had shaped his remarks.

"I am disappointed," he said, and his voice was not quite steady. "I hoped that it was an understood thing in this Guild that the members should think of each other as friends. I have tried to create a feeling of good fellowship here. I did not think Mr. Graham would be in deep waters all this time and not tell us. He might have made a friend of one of us. We do not pry into each other's ways and means, but he should have known—I am uncomfortable to think I have been in good circumstances all this winter, and he has not." He broke off, and began again a little nervously. "It's not my function to preach, but the text this Guild tries to live out is 'Bear ye one another's burdens.' Of course, this talk about the law is nonsense. We always have managed our own affairs and w'll have no one interfering with us."

There was a little sympathetic murmur from the company.

At the President's first words the Treasurer had started; then as the sympathetic voice went on, he burried his face in his hands and gave a slight sob. At last he tried to speak, but could not control his lips. The President saw this.

"We will proceed to the election of officers," he said.

"I beg to propose Mr. Graham as Treasurer," said the girl who had always befriended him.

"I beg to second that," said another member.

"Those in favour show hands; carried unanimously," said the President. It was done before the man could speak. "Any nominations for the Secretary?" and so the business went on.

After the meeting the President went up to the Treasurer "come home with me," he said

* * * *

When the little man reached his lodgings that night, he went straight to the cheap dressing-table, and, opening the drawer, took out a little phial. He flung up the window and threw the bottle far out into the night. A musical tinkle told that it had broken. The man smiled. "Must put that job off after all," he said to himslf; "that Guild shall have its money back."

NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 20th August 1909.

A NEW end-to-end record has been established by Mr Vivian Olsson, a member of the Motor Cycling Club. Mr. Olsson drove his 7 h.p. V. S., fitted with Millford sidecar, and, accompanied by Mr. Charles Talbert as passenger, left John o' Groat's at 1-35 on Thursday morning last. He arrived at Carlisle at 7-49 on the following morning, and eventually reached Land's End at 6-49 P.M. on Saturday, having covered the distance in 65hrs. 14mins. at an average speed, including stops, of between fourteen and fifteen miles per hour. This is the first attempt ever made to drive a sidecar and passenger over the end-to-end course, and the permormance thus constitutes a record. Mr. Olsson was delayed somewhat on account of bad roads and punctures, but otherwise had no trouble. He attributes his success—in fact, his ability to complete the run—to the very effective variable gear fitted to his machine. Neither the gear nor the engine had to be touched throughout the whole of the journey.

ON the question of proper inflation the Michelin Company make some very pertinent comments. Each of the several parts of a pneumatic tyre is, they point out, manufactured in a special form, to do a certain kind of work in a certain way. That is to say, some parts must resist given strains, and other parts must undergo flexions which have also been determined beforehand. These calculations are based on a determined interior pressure. If this pressure exists, everything is correct; if the tyre is wrongly inflated the flexion also increases, and so does the heating. Consequently the cover weakens under abnormal wear, and the inner tube perishes. If the cover is a non-skid, a stiff hard body is working in unity with a flexible body. If there is any fault in the inflation, the harmony which was so difficult to secure in the first place is destroyed; and the result is even more deplorable then than it would be in the case of a plain cover. Thus the importance of proper inflation cannot be overlooked. It is to be regretted that so many drivers travel on insufficiently inflated tyres. Sometimes it is done involuntarily, either from a desire for exceptional comfort, and in order to avoid even the slightest jolts, or from nothing less than downright laziness, and in order to avoid the toil of giving the few final strokes with the pump. It should be ascertained at frequent intervals whether the pressure in the tyre is normal. With the exercise of a little care and attention the driver can economise very considerably in the matter of tyres, and can avoid a deal of trouble.

ENGLAND, as was generally expected, has done all that was sought at the world's championships, which were concluded at Copenhagen on Sunday. Last year's victory in the long and short distance Amateur Championships has been repeated. W. J. Bailey won the 1,000 metre championship, and Leon Meredith, for the fifth time in succession, captured the 100 kilometres. Both riders are Londoners, the sprint champion being a member of the Polytechnic C.C., while Meredith owns allegiance to the Paddington C.C. Bailey has come to the front in a remarkably short time, and he is one of the youngest amateurs who ever won a world's championship. Meredith has many years' experience behind him, indeed, his versatility alone marks him as a rider of distinction. It costs the N.C.U. some little money to send a team to the world's championships, and little comes back in the shape of coin of the realm, but this year the outlay has been justified, inasmuch as the union has demonstrated that in at least one sport—amateur cycling—England continues ahead of her neighbours.

BOTH our champions rode splendid races. Meredith won easily by eighteen laps and in excellent time. At half distance he was a minute inside the professional champion's time of the previous Sunday, but in the latter part of the race, although he lost two minutes in changing bicycles, he secured a commanding lead, and was able to take matters somewhat easily. Otherwise, it is more than probable that the professional's time would have been beaten. Although some of his previous world's championships have been won in faster time, it must be remembered that in this year's race the safety roller on the back of the pacing machine was 8in. further back than in former races. And the greater distance of the rider from the pacer the less protection he has from wind resistance, and, as a consequence, the time is certain to be slower. Increasing the space between the rider and the pacer also makes the race more a race between the men, and this was all in Meredith's favour, for as a distance rider it is certain he has no superior on the amateur path to-day. And if a match could be arranged between Meredith, the amateur, and Parent, the professional champion, there are many competent judges who would pin their faith to Meredith's ability to win. Such a match would arouse enormous interest, but it is doubtful whether the N.C.U. would give its consent.

CRICKER.

EX-LORD CHANCELLOR HALSBURY, when leader of the South Wales Circuit, caused much amusement among his friends by the manner in which he unblushingly identified himself with the interests of the locality. During the hearing of a case, one of the Judges at last could refrain no longer from remarking on this. "Come," said he, "you must not argue too much in that strain. You cannot make yourself out to be a Welshman, you know." "Perhaps not, my Lord," was the reply, "but I have made a good deal of money out of Welshmen in my time." "Oh, in that case," answered the Judge, "we may call you a Welshman by extraction."

AN Irishman dying in a remote village in Ireland, his relatives were anxious to have his name and the dates of his birth and death engraved upon a coffin-plate. The village tinker was sent for. "How old was he?" asked the tinker. "Twenty-eight," was the reply. "Well," said the tinker. "I'm afraid I can't do the job, for I can't make an eight; there's too many circles in it. But I could make you four sevens, if that will do ye. Four sevens is twenty-eight." The compromise was accepted, and the coffin-plate finished and nailed to the coffin. At the funeral the officiating clergyman said: "Brethren and sisters, we are gathered together to pay the last tribute of respect to our deceased brother, who has passed away at the early age of"—here he paused and readjusted his spectacles—"at the early age of 7,777 years! Great Scott, brethren, he was born before the flood!"

The lodger summoned the husband for assault, and he was fined 1s.

COMMERCIALISM IN SPORT.

A REPORT that Bardsley, the brilliant Australian batsman, had received an offer to qualify for Northampton has aroused considerable controversy in English cricketing circles. The report proves to be unfounded, but, nevertheless, it has served the useful purpose of ventilating an important point. Attention was drawn to the subject by Mr. C. E. Green, the father of Essex cricket. He took the very proper stand that the retention in England of Australian cricketers would prejudice and do away with the real character and best traditions of county cricket and the esprit de corps which should exist in this class of cricket. "Not only is it unfair to the Colonies" he contended "that inducements should be made to deprive them of any of their players but it is also most unfair and discouraging to our home-bred players that their places should be taken in county teams by those who have not learned their cricket in England." Real county cricket is the backbone of the game in England, and everyone will agree with Mr. Green that every endeavour should be made to keep this as genuine as possible, and to prevent it from becoming a gate-money business affair, which the engaging of outside "star" players to strengthen a county side must ultimately cause it to be.

Lord Hawke, the famous captain of the Yorkshire eleven, is also opposed strongly to the importation of Colonial cricketers into English county teams. "It does not seem to me," he says "to be at all fair to our English cricketers. I do not wish to refer to any particular case, but a Colonial cricketer in the front rank is doing very well, and I cannot see why an English cricketer should be made to suffer in order to replace him by a Colonial in a county team. I think," Lord Hawke proceeds "that at the cricket festivals in all parts of the country in which county teams take part the people like to see English cricketers playing for their counties. They equally enjoy, no doubt, seeing Colonial teams play against our English teams. The Colonials are good cricketers, but I do not think it would be in the interests of English cricket that our county clubs should secure the services of these Colonial cricketers who come over here with teams." Happily it turns out that no attempt has been made to keep Bardsley in England, and after the strong expression of opinion that the incident has elicited it is to be hoped that no proposals will be made to retain in England Australian cricketers, however brilliant their play may be. The practice would be a further approximation to the commercial methods of the League football clubs.

Meanwhile a crisis has arisen in professional football through a dispute between the Football Association and the Players' Union. The Players' Union had asserted the right of its members to carry their claims with regard to wages into the county courts; the Association had declined to abate anything of its autocratic power to settle all such disputes without right of appeal to the courts. However, at a conference at Birmingham the representatives of the Association abandoned this position. They admitted the right of the player to take his claim to the courts, but stipulated that the Association should first be given the opportunity of offering terms of settlement to the disputants. The principle for which the Players' Union has been fighting was thus conceded, for the Association thus consents to regard itself no longer as a court of final appeal, but as an arbitrator whose decision may be rejected by either of the parties to the proceedings. But the Association refused to give summer wages to players whom they had suspended on the ground of disobedience, and on this pebble the Conference split. It is difficult to think that the Association will risk the break-up of the organisation which it controls for so small a point after making such large concessions of principle.

Public opinion, especially in the Midlands and the North of England, is on the side of the professionals who wish to obtain freedom of contract with their employers and liberty to make use of their legal privileges under the Workmen's Compensation Act without reference to the officials of the Association. The General Federation of Trade Unions is advising the executive of the Players' Union, and recruits are coming in strongly. The Scottish professional—still regarded as an indispensable ingredient in every English League team—is strongly in favour of the movement for a free contract.

In the North, the absence of the capable and popular players, who make the individuality of a team, will be bitterly resented by the spectators. In no case will the Players' Union consent to abandon its campaign, as long as the Football Association refuses to allow suspended players to claim arrears of payments withheld by the clubs that employed them at the request of the governing body.

The case for the professionals was well set forth in the following remarks by a player of some celebrity :—"We earn our living by entertaining the public, and have as much right to get the highest wages we can and the best terms of employment as a music-hall singer. What would be said if Mr. Harry Lauder, for instance, only received £4 a week and one music-hall could sell him to another for a few thousands pounds? Of course, we do not intend to allow the men to suffer loss who began the fight for free contract, by which we shall all benefit in the near future. It is nonsense to suppose that the amount of wages paid will affect the style of play prejudicially. A player receiving a high salary and knowing that he can keep his best form for a very few seasons only will not, even if he is not a sportsman, indulge in foul play and run risks of being injured by way of reprisals." This point of view seems reasonable enough. There seems every probability that the Players' Union will ultimately triumph over the Football Association.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's racing in Calcutta brought us very near to the end of the Monsoon Season as the 25th inst., is to be positively the last day. Enjoyable as has the sport been throughout, if we are to get it as hot as we have had it during the last two race days, it is perhaps a good thing for everybody concerned, especially the unfortunate animals, who must find racing week after week at this time of year very trying.

The going on Saturday was extremely good as the times put up show, and the handicapping was successful in producing some open racing and magnificent finishes, though for the first time this season the public got a bit the better of the exchanges, only two outsiders getting home, Silphoe and Moira, and the latter of these was also well backed.

Mr. Galstaun's stable which up to Saturday had had a very poor time this year at last had a share of success and we congratulate Mr. Bletsoe, who is looking after the string while the owner is away in Poona, on turning out two winners for Calcutta's largest owner.

The riding honours were shared by Mr. Robertson, who scored a double in the two Amateur events and R. Elliot, who got home on Jacchus and Eruption. The division of the Amateur Pony Hurdle Race gave us three jump races on the programme, all of which provided most excellent fights.

With evenings beginning to draw in proceedings began at the early hour of 2-45 P.M., the Amateur Pony Hurdle Race—Division 1—being the first item on the programme. The Gem opened out favourite out of a field of five, but there was no real reason for backing her except that Mr. Evers was riding and money coming for Lola and The Pink 'Un, the black receded to threes. Minstrel Boy was also backed for a fair amount to win and there was always money for him for a place, first of all at 2 to 1 and later at evens. The Gem went away very fast and seemed to take a lot of holding, but she had run herself out by the time they had got half way round and Lola had the race in hand any time after the big tree. There was a magnificent fight, however, for the places. The Pink 'Un and Minstrel Boy came at the last hurdle together, but the latter, who was travelling the faster of the two, hit the fence and pecked badly losing a couple of lengths. He came very strong as soon as he got on his legs again, but though overhauling The Pink 'Un every stride he could not quite catch him in time and was beaten by half a length.

The Second Division of the Goomtee Plate came next and out of a field of ten Nettie R. was made a warm favourite, a position which she occupied throughout the betting. Jacchus, who opened out at a long price, was brought down to threes by a heavy commission and Peter and Golden Morn were next well backed. The favourite lay in a good position and flattered her supporters' hopes till they had got into the straight when she dropped back almost to last, and Peter, who had made all the running, was still in the lead. Jacchus, however, caught him at the distance and running on won in good style.

For the Dalhousie Plate all eight of them left in started. Wake Up, Queen of Gems, and Cyril divided favouritism pretty well between them, but Ynyslas was also well backed, especially by his connections. The pace was set a cracker by Clipper, a nice looking cut of a horse recently imported by W. Griffiths and purchased only a few days before by Mrs. Whalley. He was followed by Mulison and Wake Up with Queen of Gems next, then Cyril. Coming round the bend to the big tree, Wake Up got the inside running, and she and Cyril lay second to Clipper, who was tiring, Mulison and Queen of Gems next. Clipper jumped very crookedly at the last two and interfered badly with Cyril and coming round the bend only just missed riding Wake Up outside the flag into which she cannonned, knocking it flat. At the last hurdle Wake Up, Queen of Gems and Cyril were all nearly level and a magnificent race between the three ended in the former just struggling home in front by a head, a bare half a length separating Cyril and Queen of Gems. The result proved the handicap as near perfect as could be, as Wake Up had the best run throughout, Cyril having suffered at the hands of Clipper and Queen of Gems being forced round the outside of the party at the top bend, so that but for the luck of the race the verdict might easily have been the other way. Ynyslas was a great disappointment as she jumped badly and would not gallop at all, never showing up at any part of the race.

With Picaninny out of it Bandy Leg was naturally considered a good thing for the first division of the Amateur Hurdle Race, Meprise also well backed. The favourite, however, had a much narrower squeak than was expected, as Violet II came at him in most determined fashion at the finish and looked as if a few lengths further would have found her the winner. Meprise was a bad third.

The big pony race came next, and the handicap being generally approved betting was very brisk. Solace, who was thought to have too much weight and to be going off and Albatross, who declared 15lb., being the only ones entirely neglected. Ruling Passion was absolute favourite, with Echo, Matin Bell and Primrose next in the betting. Again the result of the race was to some extent a a question of luck, as there was a good deal of jostling at the bend, and Matin Bell got so much the worst of it that she never had a chance at all, while Primrose also would probably have been much more forward if she had not got shut in badly coming into the straight and had to pull back and make her run again on the outside. There was a magnificent finish between Moira, who held the lead and Ruling Passion, who was over-hauling her, and the result was in doubt till the numbers went up when it was seen that Moira had been first to catch the Judge's eye, the verdict being a short head; Albatross just beating Primrose for third place by a head also.

The unlucky Too Late was again favourite for the Poojah Plate, but once more justified his name by running a close second to the jade Silphoe, who turned it up when heavily backed last week, but with 6lb. less weight on his back ran on and won like a race-horse on Saturday at the forlorn price of 10 to 1. Too Late ran the race in the way to which he has now accustomed us being last for the first three furlongs and then beginning a magnificent run, flashing past everything in the field at a terrific pace and, as usual, only just failing to get there in time. Lasso, who was one of the well-backed ones, was a great disappointment, as after lying well up for four furlongs he fell back almost to last place very quickly. London, who was also thought to have a big chance, and to ride whom Barret had given up the mount on Silphoe, ran a good horse but found the pace too much for him at the finish and could get no nearer than third.

Silphoe had young Osborn up giving this jockey his second win in the country.

The Goomtee Plate—Division I—was the last race of the day, and with a field of seven all looking to have a chance, betting throughout was very brisk, Eruption, Devil's Limit, Downland, Blue Flame and Blix being well backed at threes and fours all the time. There was a good start, but Elgin hung out after they had got off and interfered badly with Downland and also, though to a less extent with Devil's Limit. This gave Eruption a chance to get away clear, and though Devil's Limit chased him hotly she could not get on terms and was beaten after a fine race by a neck.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—With the break in the Big Meeting, the Closed Meeting took place on Wednesday, in fine weather. It was fairly attended but punters were reluctant to have much of a fling on races, the majority of which brought out some unknown quantities. There is plenty of G. R. talent, Southall and Hayhoe were the only professionals to get a ride each and one cannot find an instance where a race was thrown away.

Proceedings opened with the jump race, in which only three figured, Nell Gwynne, Ugly and Sentiment, fancied in that order. All three jumped well and completed the course, Ugly leading from the favourite. The only change was Sentiment passing Nell Gwynne, Ugly staying on without being hustled.

There was a bit of an upset in the three-furlong scurry when Sinbad, St. Gatien and Highborn were the pick. Sinbad led Highborn for a furlong, when Nazzar came up and went away to stay out St. Gatien and Gannet on the rails.

Nettle was the "office" for the Lingfield Plate from Sher and Arabistan and the race resulted in a pretty finish. After Sher had led Nettle crept up on the rails with Hemyock, Arabistan being shut in and dodged about all the way down the straight. Captain Meynell found an opening in the nick of time and beat Hemyock by a head.

Nagashi with Southall up was good enough for the Beginners' Plate as he caught Diamond Jubilee and Golden Wren before the distance and had them well set from there. Golden Wren securing second place by a head.

Backers of Welsh Love in the Hurst Park Plate had their misgivings when she expanded from six to four to three, Carmenite warming to the former price. It was a bad start, Robin, Redshot and Welsh Love first with Carmenita following after a long gap. She made a game bid and passed Robin, but never had a chance with Redshot, who was smothered by Welsh Love when it came to a finish.

Of the eleven in the Kempton Park Plate, Mademoiselle Genee, a fraction more than a pony, was backed as though all was over from Yuba and Yvette. Chassepot was hopelessly left and the favourite some way behind White Heather, Firecracker and Steam Whistle. Firecracker fell back and Yvette, Yuba and the favourite came up only to be easily stayed out by White Heather and Steam Whistle, Yvette squeezing in third.

Lastly the Little Arab Plate with Rufus better backed than Nagashi. The lastnamed passed the former and Prince Chestnut at the distance, to win comfortably from a late run by Arabistan. Captain Tomkinson rode the winner this time, who brought off a double.

When one states that only one actual favourite got home on Saturday, the fourth and last day of the First Meeting, it can be understood that punters did not score. Conditions were, however, perfect and the big crowd witnessed good racing and hot finishes. Before entering into details, I may mention that Mr. Kelso is pushing on with the Peru affair in the Aga Khan Cup, claiming the value of stakes.

As to the racing now, the card had the Bhamburda Plate first, Recovery out leaving six with Wakeful a bit shorter than Tete-a-Tete, Cheeky and Little Dolly. McGown heralded his arrival here by going right away on Nigam from Little Dolly and Carmenita. After a mile Nigam fell back, Carmenita leading Wakeful for a time when Tete-a-Tete came in between them. At the three furlongs Carmenita dropped back and Cheeky came up. Wakeful very nearly came down at the last jump and the other two fought out a remarkable finish for such a race, Checky winning by a short head. Little Dolly finished third with Morrison suffering from a blow on the chest from her head on blundering. After being examined, he was taken to hospital.

Despite having risen to top weight, Daroji was favourite from Ugly and Greenstone in the Grand National. Idle went away to cut out the running from Greenstone, Daroji and Ugly. Lamrock refused opposite the stand and Umutbee after a mile. Daroji was second behind the trees and led over the last jump there. At the jump in the course Ugly began to come up and, both under the whip, won a good race.

The Eclipse Plate was a very pretty race, Posco warm favourite from Picturesque, Lord Merv and Ebullition. Lord Merv showed slightly in front of Posco and Picturesque and they ran thus locked together all the way. These positions were never changed—head, head being the verdict.

Fourteen started for the Dealers' New Plate, Parliament shorter than Winchester with long shots at Zinfandel and Lapwing. Here again the race was exciting, Jadir leading and his stable companion Winchester falling in second after a furlong with Parliament and Zinfandel handy. At the bend the last two and Fruit Salt came up with the leaders, and Parliament on the rails went away. Zinfandel hung on but near the post swerved right across and spoilt his as well as Lapwing's chance when he came strong. Parliament consequently got there by three-quarters.

Oakton was thought good for the mile Visitors' Plate from Metal Boy, Absentee and Sue at a nice price. It was a run-away win as Sue passed Lady Violet before the bend and came home on her own from the favourite, Absentee beating his stable companion, Metal Boy, for a place.

The Selling Plate came last, Najmi being made hot favourite till at the last the stable went for False Start, who got away badly and with neither getting a place spoilt the coup. Ajeel and Rubdan made the early running till Santra passed them and stayed out strong runs by No Trumps and Middleman by a neck with the same between the other two. Thus ends the first part of the Big Meeting, and we can only hope the second will be as classy.

The Quetta Polo Tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 11th instant, when the 15th Lancers beat the Quetta Gymkhana in the final.

The final game in the Poona Open Polo Tournament was played on the 20th instant, when the Inniskilling Dragoons beat the 26th P. W. O Cavalry by 4 goals to 3 after playing extra time. There was a big gathering of spectators, including the Gaekwar of Baroda, Sir Pertab Singh and several other native chiefs.

The Calcutta Rugby Cup Tournament brought together the West Ridings (holders) and the Calcutta F. C. in the final. Their first meeting last Saturday ended in a pointless draw, but when the game was replayed on a sloppy ground on Monday a drop goal gave the West Ridings their fourth successive win.

The thoughts of most of us "Ditchers" are now turning towards the fast approaching Poojah Holidays and many plans have doubtless been made for a flitting from Calcutta. Those who are contemplating a vacation away from the metropolis will read with interest the notice, appearing further on, giving particulars of the concession fares allowed by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway on their system during the Doorga Poojahs.

The scheme for sending an Indian cricket team to England has once more been revived on the Bombay side, and it is probable that a representative eleven will go home on tour in the summer of 1911 or 1912.

It may be remendered that efforts were made to send a team in 1906, and a promise by K. S. Ranjitsinghji, now H. H. the Jam Saheb to captain the eleven was actually obtained, but the project fell through, owing to several of the best Indian players being unable to get away, and also to the difficulty of raising sufficient funds. This time there is likely to be no financial obstacle. H. H. the Gaekwar of Baroda, Mr. D. J. Tata, Mr. Ratan J. Tata and Mr. J. M. Framjee Patel are taking the lead in the matter, and Mr. Patel, who is the prime mover of the undertaking, is already corresponding with Lord Harris and Mr. Maclaren with reference to the contemplated visit.

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

A MUSSOORIE correspondent writes to the Madras Mail as follows :—Sportsmen in other parts of India often envy their brethren on the Nilgiris, where, owing to the presence of planters and other Europeans permanently settled in the country, a healthy public opinion exists where the Game Laws are concerned. Unless some steps are taken, and that speedily, by the various Provincial Governments, the chance of sport with gun or rifle will become extremely poor, outside the jurisdiction of the Forest Department. No complicated legislation is required ; no alteration in the provisions of the Arms Act ; merely the briefest of Bills to introduce what might be styled "Sporting Licenses." Everybody desirous of shooting ferœ naturæ, fur or feather, should be compelled to take out a special license for the purpose, and the permission now granted to possess fire-arms for the protection of life and property, or for the protection of crops from wild animals, would not entitle the holder to kill birds or deer for amusement, or baser financial motive. The law should apply to all, irrespective of colour or calling. Europeans and Indians, whether exempted from certain sections of the Arms Act or not, ought to be obliged to provide themselves with the sporting license suggested, before sallying forth for a day's shooting in jungle or on the nearest jheel. Ten rupees would not be an extravagant sum to pay for the privilege of shooting in India, when one remembers the amount demanded for like indulgence in Western lands. On the license must be printed the conditions on which it is granted : a short summary of rules relating to close seasons and adapted to the locality for which the license holds good. As infringement of these conditions would mean a fine or withdrawal of the license, the authorities would thus be supplied with a simple, yet effectual, check on the wily shikari and other unsportsmanlike individuals, who are addicted to shooting at all times and seasons, to the detriment of the game and of other persons with stricter views of the subject. At all events, something must be done to stop the indiscriminate slaughter of wild animals now going on, and the foregoing appears an easy solution of the matter.

ARE women a nuisance in sport ? That they are is evidently the view of an angry golfer who recently wrote to a London paper asking if they could not be prevented from playing his favourite game.

"My game last Saturday was utterly spoiled through the presence of women on the links," he complained. "I consider them a nuisance, for they will not allow us to finish a match or to pass them. All the men I know who are fond of the game agree with me that women entirely spoil all sport.

In reply to the inquiry, "Do women spoil sport?" male devotees of many different games unanimously answer "Yes."

"Women are a decided nuisance on the links where they are allowed to play on the men's course," another enthusiastic golfer writes. "It is probably for this reason that on most golf links there are special days set apart for ladies or they have a course of their own.

"Most men golfers complain bitterly if they find they have to follow members of the fair sex, as the latter, in most cases, are very slow, and retard their progress.

In most games women are inefficient because they will not trouble having learned a little, to improve their game. They are satisfied with themselves, and though apparently enthusiastic, continue to play in their slow, fussy way, without desiring to play better. Even in tennis, which is eminently suitable to women, they are often a bore."

"Women are most useful at picnic-time on boating excursions." said a well-known oarsman "but otherwise on the river they are, as a rule, the very opposite. Set a woman to steer a boat and watch its wobbly course. Occupants of other boats are quite at a loss to know what course to take, or where the boat with the 'beauty at the helm' will wobble to."

In motoring also woman is arraigned as a nuisance. The reason of this is explained by a well-known motorist.

"Women will not conform to rule," he said. "A man learns the correct way of doing anything and by force of habit acts on it. A woman will do all kinds of wrong things in a small way which irritate a man.

"A woman in sport is as tiresome to a man as a man is to a woman in a kitchen or on a shopping expedition. It is easy to deal with a man who does not 'play the game,' but more chivalrous treatment must be meted out to a lady."

"When two men go off for a day's fishing," said an experienced angler, "and they reach the river, one says to the other : 'See you to-night,' and each devotes himself entirely to the sport that is quite satisfying to him.

"When a woman accompanies a man she must and will talk. That is the reason why the presence of the ladies is not ardently desired by most fishermen."

With regard to racing, it is man's opinion that women look attractive in the grand stand, but should be kept out of the ring.

"In cricket women are an awful nuisance, even though they do not play" said a cricketer who has played cricket all over England. "In first-class cricket they don't worry the players much because their idiotic remarks cannot be heard. It is the keen spectator who suffers from a deluge of idiotic questions.

"Worse than all, when you come back having made a lucky twenty by the most disgraceful cricket you ever played, you are loudly congratulated and greeted with 'How splendid!'"

A GERMAN paper in an article on "English Sport" recently stated that according to statistics, which the London Press only repudiate as too low, a capital of 45 million pounds sterling is laid out in Great Britain in clubhouses, racecourses, playing grounds, and such like, and more than 40 millions is yearly spent in these arenas of sport. The German view is that this makes the Englishman (according to English opinion stronger and healthier than the son of any other nation, whereas as a matter of fact, it is pointed out, among the comparatively small upper classes, who for fox-hunting alone spend four millions a year and have laid out another 15 millions in capital, it is possible that sport may have had a good influence on their physical constitution, yet the powerful form of the British aristocrat is unknown to Germans. The article goes on to say : "But incomparably more beneficial than the English sport is our compulsory service, and also the official care for the bodily constitution of the lower classes. The pure animal strength of the workman is without doubt far greater in Germany than in any other land. We meet the same crowd at sport on the football field. They do not play themselves (they lack the means), but they have enough money to support a horde of professional players, and they watch their efforts till quarrelling, brawling and often fighting set in. Have they profited by football, the sport of the masses? Do they look like it? No ; only the rich can derive advantage from sport. The physical degeneration of the British nation, which no offerings to sport have succeeded in stopping, has compelled the War Office constantly to reduce the minimum measurements for recruits ever since the Crimean war." What physical degeneration there has been in England is no doubt due to modern conditions of living and especially to the fact that so many have left the country to live in large towns. The same degeneration from the same cause is probably evident in Germany and every other civilized country. At the same time it must be admitted that the growing custom of the masses to watch football and cricket instead of playing them in England is a great evil. But it is difficult to see any German superiority in national physique or in the means of attaining it. The best time for improving the physique is in youth and it cannot be denied that the schools of Great Britain provide a better physical training than any other schools in the world—a training, moreover, which not only produces muscle but elasticity of limb, agility and self-reliance which are of more importance than mere strength and stolid solidity acquired by compulsory military service.

THE average yachtsman whether he be of a sociable nature or not probably prefers to have a companion on his vessel. According to a Times correspondent, however, anyone who has begun cruising in the truly independent spirit, who has gained nerve and practical skill by relying on his own wits and muscles and those of his amateur friend or friends, is sure to experience sooner or later a craving to pursue the sport, if only for a short time, single-handed. It is not easy to explain and justify this craving to those unacquainted with the life of the sea and accustomed to regard all sport as a social affair. Of all forms of solitude, solitude on the sea seems to most people the most unnatural and repellent. At bottom, of course, the explanation of its charm for the few lies in the very circumstances which condemn it for the many ; in the stark loneliness of the conflict with a formidable element in the voluntary abnegation of all human aid, moral or physical, and in the submission of a man's own faculties to a merciless ordeal self-imposed, self-contemplated. Nobody is looking on ; if there is no ridicule for blunders, there is no applause for triumphs. Without a rival to vanquish or a tribunal to satisfy, save that of a man's own soul, the competitive and spectacular elements inherent in most sports are totally eliminated. Absent, too, except for rare and brief intervals is the sense of recreation pure and simple. Body and brain are continually at high tension. Emergency succeeds emergency, and you are exceedingly lucky if one can be dealt with before the next is on you. Often they accumulate until they produce a situation so complex that there seems to be no solution. But the rude schooling of necessity ripens capacity and sharpens the senses amazingly and will enable you to be successful when engaged in so many actions as are entailed by steering your vessel through a dangerous channel, keeping an eye on buoys and passing ships using when necessary chart, binoculars and compass, trimming a sheet there or slackening a runner here and at the same time cooking your breakfast—tea on one spirit lamp and eggs on another.

ANOTHER link with the past has been snapped by the passing away of Charlie Rowell, the world-famous distance runner, who died on the 31st ultimo at Cambridge at the age of 55. Rowell's name figures conspicuously upon the record book for the 85 to 150 and 160 to 380 miles records, every hour record from 12 to 81, with the solitary exception of the 26 hours record, stand to his credit. Rowell was a native of Chesterton, Cambridge, and belonged to the little but good class of pedestrian athletes, standing but 5 feet 5 inches in height, and weighing about 10st. when in condition.

He was first connected with the river, having been brought up among the watermen, but turned his attention to pedestrianism when about 18 years of age, winning several minor matches. In 1874 he beat W. Shrubsole in a 19 miles race in 1hr. 57mins.—a performance which suggested a future for him. In March 1876, he competed against E. P. Weston at the Agricultural Hall, and the long distance walker became interested in Rowell.

Then at the end of October 1878 he entered in one of the great six days' races at the hall, and distinguished himself by pressing the leaders for a considerable distance, and though some way behind at the finish occupied third place, while his running so impressed Sir John Astley and Mr. G. W. Atkinson, of the Sporting Life, that they advised him to devote himself to long distance work. This he did and going to America, he had an almost uninterrupted run of success commencing by defeating O'Leary for the championship in 1879 ; and afterwards he not only set up the records which are now attached to his name, but also amassed a considerable fortune running well into five figures.

For many years prosperity favoured him, but then heavy losses reduced him to a state of penury and he had been in straitened circumstances for many years. His last public appearance was a rather melancholy one, inasmuch as the poor old fellow entered the professional Marathon a year ago, but fell down in the Windsor Streets through sheer exhaustion, being quite untrained and unfit for the ordeal.

Some years back Rowell had some of our leading boxers under his charge. He trained Jake Kilrain for his fight with Jem Smith, and Charlie Mitchell for his famous encounter with John L. Sullivan.

A MONKEY-EATING eagle, from the Phillipines, is the latest novelty at the London Zoo. He is the first specimen of the kind ever captured alive it is said ; and he looks an unadulterated villain and capable of eating something bigger than a monkey. A weird, unkempt obscene fowl whose towzled crest and fiery eye give him the expression of a worried and truculent human being.

On the general account the 5 per cent. levy on the Cup-ties in the Competition Proper produced the record total of £2,876 18s. 9d. The expenses on the same account included £2,337 0s. 6d. for the cost of meetings, conferences, commissions, etc.

The total amount allocated to charities during the year reached the sum of £1,409 8s. 3d.

The investments and cash at the bank represent a grand total of £23,316 9s. 3d., and after paying the amount due to clubs and charities there remained a surplus of £13,706 19s. 2d. as against £14,018 15s. 5d. a year ago.

ONE of the chief attractions of the Berlin Zoological Garden is a female hippopotamus calf, now about four weeks old. Born on 30th July, it was at once removed from the dam and put into a tank in the elephant-house, where it is on view at certain hours of the day. Shortly after birth it was found to weight about 95lbs., and it taped 44 inches from the snout to the root of the tail. It is being fed by hand, and gets six litres of cow's milk daily, a litre at a meal. The first hippopotamus reared in Europe was born in the Amsterdam Garden in 1865. Calves had been born previously there and in the Jardin des Plantes, but had always perished, either from the violence of the mother immediately after the birth or from incapacity to take food when removed from her. Probably the most famous hippopotamus reared in captivity was Guy Fawkes, which was born in the London Gardens on 5th November 1872, and died early last year.

THE match between the Champion cricket county, Kent, and the rest of England at the Oval, has been abandoned.

THE United Provinces Secretariat Football Tournaments which was concluded at Naini Tal last week, resulted in a win for "S" Battery R. H. A. from Lucknow, who beat the Highland Light Infantry Band by 2 goals to 1 after extra time.

THE Royal Scots Fusiliers Boxing Tournament recently held at Rangoon provided some excellent sport: the fighting was of a high standard and keenly contested throughout, while the arrangements were all that could be desired. Lieutenant Miller acted as referee. The following were winners and runners up :—Middle Weights: Pte. Fry 1, Pte. Hubble 2. Light Weights: Pte. Payne 1, Pte. Duncan 2. Feather Weights: Lce.-Corpl. McLaughlin 1, Pte. Duncan 2. Bantam Weights: Dmr. Ellis 1, Pte. Clarke 2.

THE Naini Tal Civil Service week opened on the 18th instant with the Polo Tournament. Nine teams have entered and the opening game was between the 15th Hussars (Messrs. R. P. Wells and H. A. Bruen and Captain F. W. Barrett back) and the Royal Dragoons (Messrs. F. W. Fitzgerald and C. W. Turner and Major G. Makins back). The Hussars won easily by 10 goals to 4. In the second round the Three Fourths (Messrs. C. R. Bradley, G. Howson and R. E. Harene back) beat the Rifle Brigade Subalterns (Messrs. E. C. Dimsdale, H. S. M. Railston and H. L. Riley back) by 7 goals to 2. The tournament was continued on Monday when the 17th Cavalry Subalterns (Messrs. A. H. R. Dodd, E. G. Atkinson and T. W. Kirkwood back) beat the Civil Service "B" Team (Messrs. Murray, Williamson and Grant back) by 8 goals to 2; and the Civil Service "A" Team (Messrs Keane, Adams and Hoare back) beat "The Worms" (Messrs Gannon, Mullaly and Berthoud back) by 5 goals to 4 after playing an extra chukker. The 15th Hussars were to have met "The Wanderers" but scratched owing to the indisposition of Captain Barrett.

THE Elliott Football Shield competition has at length been decided. On the Sova Bazar Ground, Calcutta, on Tuesday evening the Scottish Churches beat the Presidency College by 3 goals to 2 in the final. These teams had met on five previous occasions, a drawn game resulting each time.

THE Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Boxing Tournament was concluded at Lucknow last Saturday, Private Rudd, Highland Light Infantry, won the Army Feather Weights, Corporal Sherwood, Worcesters, the Light Weights, and Bombardier Griffin, R.F.A., the Middle Weights. Rozario, who styled himself Bantam Weight Champion of India, met Driver Sampson, R.H.A., Feather Weight Champion of the U. P. in a 20-round contest and was knocked out by the gunner in 4 rounds after a very tame display. It will be remembered that Rozario's pretensions to championship honours were set at rest a fortnight ago when Driver Paddy Doyle of the 75th Batty. R.G.A. knocked him out in two rounds.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 3rd September 1909.

THE outlook for the Temperance Brigade has been suddenly overcast by the black shadow thrown by the latest version of the Budget. The last batch of changes, as contained in the amendments to the licensing clauses, has pleased no one in particular, while we are told that there will now be a direct encouragement to "secret drinking." Hitherto grocers who have purveyed whisky on the "off license" system have been able to sell nothing less than a reputed quart, under Mr. Lloyd George's proposed amendment they will be able to retail it in small quantities. Here is the opportunity of the nasty sly drinker, for this, it is urged, will incite ladies and others who have a predilection for spirituous comfort in secluded places, to lay it in by the flask which in pocket or reticule can be comfortably and unostentatiously taken home, there to be consumed in secret. There is some difficulty at present in conveying a quart bottle undetected through the streets or smuggling such into "my ladye's bower" unbeknowns. Temperance reformers have naturally been thrown into a condition of consternation and, as usual, they evince their hostility in hysterical fashion. It is certain that, for once, publicans and—teetotallers will agree, the former because, they say, the Government proposals will injure their trade, the latter because the pocket flask facilities will, it is alleged, lead to increased intemperance. Already meetings of trade associations and anti-drink people are being held and the joint hostility evoked is certain to place fresh and formidable obstacles in the way of the Government's efforts to force the licensing clauses through.

BUT let me leave drink for biography. Mr. Gilbert Chesterton has this week published in book form a string of sparkling epigrams on Mr. George Bernard Shaw, and Mr. George Bernard Shaw has taken up two pages of the Nation with a view to telling the world what he thinks about Mr. Gilbert Chesterton. It is all very brilliant and entertaining, no doubt, especially to those who are interested in intellectual acrobatics, but it is a matter of doubt whether the majority of people care over much for this kind of diversion. They may be occasionally captivated by Mr. Shaw's pyrotechnics when fired off in the theatre, although they may feel subconsciously that it would be an advantage if the colours were a trifle warmer and the light a little less steely; and they may also be impressed by the paradoxes with which Mr. Chesterton so copiously interlards his contributions to the Press. Here the game might reasonably end, for it is apt to get a little wearisome to the average man when these General Smith-Dorrien, you will remember, put his men "on their honour" during the autumn manœuvres and he found the experiment so eminently satisfactory that he is about to repeat it this year. He announced last night in his orders for the autumn manœuvres that he has decided to continue to hold in abeyance during the manœuvres the regulation prohibiting soldiers from entering public houses, and also to extend the limits within which passes may be granted.

When the General was appointed Commander-in-Chief at Aldershot last year, one of his first acts was to suspend the order which forbade the men to go into public houses, and put them on their honour not to abuse the concession. He also later discontinued the system of patrolling the streets of Aldershot with pickets, and trusted the men to behave themselves. In short the General has discovered that the British soldier is usually a gentleman and not the 'canteen-haunting, absent-minded lurid language using individual created by Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

"The feast of St. Partridge" opened on Wednesday and from all accounts prospects in the South are generally gloomy and hardly anything better than a moderate season is expected; indeed many sportsmen have given up the idea of taking shootings in centres they have hitherto favoured. The pick of partridge shooting in England is to be found in the eastern counties, particularly Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex, but the outlook even in the famous Six Mile Bottom district of Cambridgeshire is singularly depressing. Moderately good bags are expected in the grass counties. That is to say, there should be fairly good sport in Kent, Wilts, and Hants, but in the agricultural counties the birds have fared badly owing to the effect of the bad weather on the young birds. "Happily, however, there is no reason to despair of the shooting north of the border. The reports from those districts are more reassuring."

We have been avintion mad for several days, and the doings of the aviators of Rheims have been served up ad nauseum in the papers. But there is no denying the fact that the Rheims Meeting has considerably raised the social status of the aeroplane. Its fondness for terra firma seems to have entirely disappeared, shortly we may expect to find that "the pathless air" and "la chateau en Espagne" have lost their old meaning. It is hardly necessary to add that, according to the writers of aviation notes, poor old Britain comes out of this flying competition business shockingly badly. We are told that she is wholly devoid of enterprise, she is being left lamentably behind, she is destitute of all initiative, her mighty Empire can't go on much longer at this rate, and all the rest of it. It was just the same in the early days of motoring, and it will go on in precisely the same fashion to the end of the chapter. Why we should not let all the drudgery of the preliminary work be done by intelligent foreigners I can't see. And they seem to like doing it, too.

Every day one sees fresh proofs of the way in which all these new-fangled modes of progression are increasing the pace of everything in our daily life. even omnibus horses seem of late to have developed quite a turn of speed, and last Sunday in Berkshire was seen the smallest donkey on record whirling along a cart with three people in it at a positively perilous pace. Seeing that people were stopping to look at him he began to bray at the top of his voice without diminishing his speed. In the excitement of the moment he believed he was a motor car.

"The next best thing to being a great poet or a great artist is to be a great thief." That is the view of the criminal hero of "Arsene Lupin," by Francis de Croisset and Maurice Leblanc, an English version of which was produced at the Duke of York's Theatre last night. The play, in plot and character, is strongly reminiscent of "Raffles," but it is far more highly coloured than "Raffles" ever was, which is saying a great deal. The authors have made no attempt to be plausible; they might be suspected of going out of their way to caricature the popular order of detective drama, and their incidents are so far-fetched as to become broad farce. The way to enjoy the piece is to laugh at it. Approached in that spirit, it becomes a very lively entertainment. For such a type of drama to succeed in its chief purpose, however, a certain air of plausibility should surround its scenes. "Arsene Lupin" is so far without evidence of sincerity that neither the play nor the hero is likely to become as popular as "Raffles."

And yet the hero out-Raffles Raffles at every turn in audacity and cool cheek and ingenuity. He is a wonderful organiser. He has under him a host of assistants; his rooms are filled with weird electrical arrangements for escape. He has only to touch a button for a secret lift to be transformed into a book-case, and that is not the least of his many inventions. He is so sure of himself that he is not content merely with thieving—he always writes to say when he is coming, and leaves his signature behind at the scene of his robbery. And meanwhile all France regards him as the noble and distinguished Duc de Charmerace, man of wealth and fashion. The real Duc died in the Polar regions, but Arsene Lupin so successfully impersonates him as to be received as the affianced husband of Germaine Gournay-Martin, and he makes such good use of his position as to rob her father of his works of art and other treasures, going the length of stripping the old gentleman's houses until little but the bare walls are left. It is sad to have to add that so great a rogue lived to be found out by stupidly leaving one of his special brand of cigarettes, and a bunch of flowers he was known to have plucked from his intended father-in-law's conservatory behind in the house that he robbed.

There is not much story in the play. It is rather made up of a series of incidents. Every known trick has been brought into use. There is a little "love interest," for "the Duc" falls in love with the pale, poor, down-trodden companion of Germaine, and when she in danger of being arrested as an accomplice he gives himself up to the detective, Guerchard, who has for ten years made it his life's work to track him down. Oh, but he comes off trumps in the end, does Arsene. With one wrench he frees himself from the handcuffs; with a diminutive air balloon, which the police believe to be a bomb, he keeps a dozen gendarmes at bay while he escapes from his room; he shuts the detective up in a secret cupboard above the lift; he disguises himself as the detective in five seconds so thoroughly that even the police are deceived; he escapes with the pale-faced companion in his arms to happiness; and the curtain falls on the crestfallen Guerchard exclaiming, "I'm damned if he hasn't gone off in my motor car."

Guerchard in his one particular way is quite as quaint a character as Lupin. He declines to enter a room like any ordinary mortal. He prefers the window or the chimney. His unexpected entrances remind one of the harlequin of pantomime.

"Arsene Lupin" is so ingenuous as to be beyond criticism. Its improbabilities are not to be ignored. They seem to shriek to be noticed. And the serious business of the play strikes a false note. But, approached in the proper spirit, much of it is very good fun, and the reception was warm on the whole.

Mr. Gerald du Maurier has so easy a manner and so telling a personality that he made Arsene a very delightful scoundrel. Mr Dennis Eadie as Guerchard made the detective a striking figure. Mr. Eric Lewis was always funny, Miss Rosina Filippi gave a certain amount of character to the part of Arsene's old retainer, and Miss Alexandra Carlisle and Miss Marguerite Leslie did all that was possible with shadowy parts.

A murderess defended in court by an advocate who is her own son, the mother knowing the fact, the son ignorant of it—that is the "big" situation of "Madame X.," by Alexandre Bisson, which was produced last night at the Globe Theatre, late the Hicks. It is a situation that should be made movingly pathetic, strongly dramatic, even tragic. But as treated at the Globe it is none of these things. It is without sincerity, without conviction, without appeal.

In the prologue a wife who had "bolted" two years before with her husband's friend returns, and prays to see her little son, who is dangerously ill. The husband shows her to the door. In the first act the wife is shown in "the lowest depths," and she murders her latest lover when he proposes to make capital out of the history of her past by blackmailing her husband. Twenty years are supposed to have elapsed since the incidents of the prologue, and the sensation of the scene is not the murder, but the way in which the lady has worn. In the second act nothing happens vital to the play, and it only serves to introduce a blackmailer who, for reasons only known to himself, is always accompanied by a comic assistant. The third act is the trial scene. Marylebone Police Court on a Monday morning is much more interesting. The elaborate attention to detail in a play which has no connection with life is productive of yawns. The platitudes of the son result in the mother being brought in "Not guilty"—the jury alone knew why, since she had confessed her crime. And then the lady proceeded most conveniently to die in a comfortable chair, after being introduced to and kissed by her son, and wept over by her husband.

The shooting scene was almost exciting melodrama; the rest was maudlin sentiment. The acting of Miss Lena Ashwell alone made the piece worthy of sitting out. She was at her best. She made a real woman out of a shadowy part. She seemed to have lost all her recently-acquired mannerisms; she never overacted, she never raised her voice unduly, she was real. Mr. Edmund Gwenn, as a most wonderful "boots" with a surprising vocabulary, did his best, as did Mr. C. M. Holland, Mr. Sydney Valentine, and Mr. J. H. Barnes, among others, in parts quite unworthy of them.

Lord de Clifford was killed on Wednesday afternoon in a motor accident at Small Dole, about two and a half miles from Steyning, near Brighton. He was travelling with a chauffeur from Beeding towards Cowfold, when, in order to avoid a collision with a market van, the brake was suddenly applied, and the car was overturned, with the result that the bracket of the lamp came into violent contact with Lord de Clifford's head, killing him instantly. The body was removed to the house at Cowfold, which Lord de Clifford took on lease about a year ago. Lady de Clifford was staying there with him.

Lord de Clifford was born on 2nd July 1884, and succeeded his father in the title when he was only nine years of age. In 1906 he married Miss Evelyn Victoria Ann Chandler, better known by her stage name of Miss Eva Carrington. She was one of the Gibson girls, her mother was wardrobe keeper at one of the west end theatres and her father was a commissionaire at the Tivoli.

Lord de Clifford was a prominent figure in Irish society. He was a thorough sportsman, and was the youngest Master of Foxhounds in the kingdom. He has raced horses on an extensive scale, sometimes riding himself, and he had a private racecourse on his Irish estates. He was also a splendid shot and a great traveller.

Just as I close this letter news comes of the discovery of the North Pole by an American doctor named Cook. He went there with one Eskimo he says, and tells a long story with no lack of definiteness and a wealth of remarkably descriptive detail. The public are generally accepting his assertion, the experts are naturally sceptical and want more precise information. Anyhow it is a pretty tough job for one man to get to the North Pole by himself is it not? What do you think?

ON THE OREGON ELK TRAILS.

There is a vast region in Southern Oregon where the watersheds slope toward the coast. Here Coos River rises and winds its way westward through mountain defiles; and to the south, the North Fork of Coquille river and its tributories rise and flow through passes even more abrupt; then to the north Lake Creek and its branches drain a large district and its waters finally flow into the Umpqua. A few small herds of elk still roam in their wild freedom over this territory—their last stand—for the settlements are fast crowding them back and the inexorable trend of fate will soon see their last haunt appropriated by man.

Formerly thousands of elk inhabited this wild and almost inaccessible range. The mountains being so rough and densely timbered, the most hardy woodsmen hesitate before undertaking the difficult task of following the few dim trails that lead into them, much less think of bringing out their antlers and meat. Here the hunter may travel through many townships under thickly interwoven giant tree tops with scarcely an opportunity to see the blue sky, and the deep shadows of even tide are always present. The canons are deep and their walls of dark green blend into the blue-black shadows of the dizzy depths below. All about you are long, low, crooked ridges and saw-toothed ranges in the distance which impress you with the magnitude of this great region where the happy rays of light are lost in mountain gloom. The dark green conifer woods—the softest of forest scenery—give no hint of the tangle of vines and windfalls where the object of the quest seeks cover from the hunter.

The elk has learned to avoid the few trails that follow the main chain of divides and watersheds of this region. He finds the heads of the small streams that rise in the deep gorges less frequented by man, so makes his home in these deep canons where he can feed undisturbed. Here the luxuriant undergrowth affords him abundance of choicest browse and the fallen timber and undergrowth offer him a suitable place to ruminate. In these places silence and shade join with the harmony of the vast tangle of green, brown, red and gray in shielding the wild wards from their foes.

The elk is a great traveller and when once frightened is apt to go a day or two before he stops; then, if he lingers long in one place he keeps the thought of surprise by pursuers in mind, which fact makes him well-nigh unapproachable. The fact that he is suspicious of every strange sound makes the elk a difficult creature to hunt successfully. Add to this his innate cunning, keen nostrils, alertness and piercing eyesight and you have a game animal well worth anyone's time and efforts. The elk may appear a little stupid in localities where he has not been disturbed. This is especially true in the open-timber districts, where one can get very near them. But in a densely timbered country it is a very different matter. When hunting has once commenced on their range they do not trust as much to their eyes as does the deer, but go to another range. In hunting deer we find the great trouble in locating the game when we get where it is; but with the elk the great trouble is to get where the game is. When overtaken the elk is apt to hesitate long enough for his undoing, whereas the deer displays his greatest cunning in the very presence of the hunter.

Last September my brother and I hunted this region. We found that most of the hunters were operating on the headwaters of the Coos and Coquille rivers. Much hunting for deer around the edges of the elk ranges and a few sly poachers hunting elk more or less all summer broke up the herds and made them unusually wily. We went in by way of Scottsburg and when we arrived at Ash, hired a settler's horses and a man to go with us, and packed our provisions about eight miles above the settlement, where we made a permanent camp. From this point we could hunt the entire country easily. We could have gone into the heart of the elk country, but preferred to work in by degrees.

The first day we took a light pack apiece (without blankets) containing enough provisions to last several days, and started on a tour of investigation. Everywhere we went signs of hunters trailing elk were evident. This was not encouraging, for the most essential thing in hunting elk is to be on the ground first. However, it was certain that we had only one chance, which was to take a trail and follow it doggedly until the game was overtaken. Later in the day we found the trail of a small herd of elk that other hunters were following. Nevertheless we followed it, hoping that the herd would take fright and scatter, which would give us a new trail to follow.

The trail led through a series of low timbered flats and was very easy to follow. The broken twigs overhead indicated that a bull—a very large one—was with the herd. After trailing for about an hour we came to where the herd had scattered in every direction. The other hunters followed two small elk that had kept to the old trail. Shortly after this we heard eight shots across the valley, indicating that they had found their game.

Here was a new problem—which way had the master bull gone? My brother examined the lower slopes while I worked along the mountainside toward the main divide. Elk tracks were plentiful, both old and fresh, but it was an hour before I discovered the trail of the old bull. While waiting for my brother to return, a black bear and her cub passed along very near me, giving me a good chance to observe their quaint habits.

In a very short time we were off on the fresh trail, but our anxiety was tense until we were certain that we were the only hunters following the big bull. Here the brush was so thick that we could only see a few rods ahead and the noise we made getting through it might have been heard by the game a long way off. And from the way the trail led away to the north we anticipated that the big bull would not stop until he reached the headwaters of Fall Creek, a branch of Lake creek, or the big basin beyond; and the roughest and brushiest part of all that wild region.

All the hunters that we knew of were operating to the south. Hence we felt sure no one would disturb the elk after he had crossed the divide. We trailed him many weary miles before he ceased to trot, and even then he was travelling too fast for us to equal his gait.

We reached Fall Creek and camped about the time the black shadows began to hover over the forest. The year before my brother had killed a large five-point bull elk within a mile of this camp, and he was greatly disappointed because I had failed to get one at the same time. So he insisted that I should kill this one if possible.

Then came the pearl-gray dawn of mid-September, and ere the sun had mellowed the chill morning air, our hunting packs were rolled and strapped and dropped into well-worn pack sacks. The two bear hounds which accompanied us wagged their tails approvingly as we set off on the elk's trail. These dogs were bent on hunting bears and panthers, so were of little use to us in following the old trail. The elk had made a plain trail along the sloping hillside and across brier-wrapped fern flats before turning toward the mountain. He seemed determined to travel far before resting. Presently he turned toward a long, abrupt spur that slopes away from the mountain range. From this action of the elk we judged that at least two days' journey would be required to overhaul him. Here trailing was very difficult on account of the dryness of the ground. In places bare rocks stuck up and stones were strewn about in such a fashion that the carefully placed hoofs left no mark; but after considerable circling the trail was located. He had gone on to the main divide, where he paused as if to observe the surroundings; and no doubt he watched his back track for a time.

As we stood there marvelling at the panorama spread out before us the desire to kill seemed dormant for the moment and we were reminded of the significance of that familiar old painting, "Monarch of all he surveys." Who knows what beauties appeal to the wild creatures of these silent and impressive solitudes? They, too, must have an eye for the beautiful and a taste for the glowing harmony about them. And the very attitude of this grand old wapiti as his eyes beheld his rich domain extending from the sunset sea the snow peaks of the Cascades—his outer sentinels—must have been that of royalty.

Round about us were saplings from which but recently the bark had been rubbed off by elk cleaning their antlers of the velvet. It is here the old bulls gather their harems around them in the rutting season. At this time of the year the bull elk is not the same retiring, timid creature that we know at other seasons; he becomes a thing of terror and roams about his herd of cows and calves, listening for rival bulls that may invade his sacred kingdom. To one not familiar with the weird bugling of the elk there must come a feeling of amazement as he hears it for the first time. On these mountains where you may look away for forty or fifty miles in either direction and see nothing but a solid forest of green, the challenge of the elk makes you wonder what creature would dare break the reverential silence of these solitudes. To the elk it is music, and at the same time a challenge to any that would dethrone him as it goes ringing through canons and is answered from the crags by a thousand echoes.

The big bull had made the only fresh trail through here, however, and we found little difficulty in following him. He had followed the ridges some distance before turning north. From this point a small pond was visible and his trail led straight for it, where he spent some time wallowing before continuing his journey. Then he took to cover again and seemed delighted in the steepest places, where the incline was so abrupt that a goat might hardly consider it safe. How he got through some of those thickets is a mystery to me even yet. In these sombre retreats the sparkle of the polished antlers of an elk could not be seen more than a few yards away, much less could one get an opportunity for a shot. Yet as you follow the trail the feeling of awe and the chance of the big game springing up within a few yards of you, and uttering that peculiar harsh, breathing snort before he bounds out of sight, fills your mind with continuous expectation.

Presently we reached a more rugged mountainside, where many jagged spurs shot into the main canon and the scattering timber was less imposing, but the numerous windfalls and rocks presented a rather discouraging appearance. The elk had found his way over it all. He leaped logs as high as a man's head where the tangled brush drooped so low that one could hardly believe that a creature with such head adornments could perform such a feat. But his trail ceased to lead straight away now, which indicated that he may have been looking for a place to browse or lie down.

The trail now led down across a salal flat where numerous bears feeding on the berries had mashed the brush down, making it impossible to tell which way the elk had gone. We swung in a wide circle, striking the trail beyond the tangle, and followed it across a series of benches covered with vine maple, hazel brush and tree-like ferns. Here trailing was easy; his widespreading antlers had torn apart the overhanging vines; and we could easily see the drooping twigs some distance ahead which he had broken in passing. As we emerged from the confusion of vines and shrubbery a full-grown Columbian black-tailed deer walked into plain view and paused a moment, eyeing us curiously before plunging back into his protecting environment. His antlers, size, proportions and sleek, bluish-gray coat stood out in bold relief against the light green background and afforded a sight worth all our efforts.

The elk's track showed that he had settled to a very slow gait; and on the more elevated places he paused frequently and watched his back track or analyzed the shifting winds with keen nostrils. How should we trail now for a sight of him? Here were more windfalls and higher salal, greater vine maple, and in the depth of the canon acres salmon-berry brush—an ideal place to screen him from searching eyes. This peerless deer has learned from civilization's bitter advancement that it is safer to feed late and early—even at night time—and hide away during the day in the recesses of the silent forest than to trust to his old-time habit of lying in the open. The dim light that finds its way through the thickly interlaced tops of the giant firs causes the rich colors of the elk to blend with the extravagant display of nature so perfectly that you may look at him and not be able to distinguish him from the many moss-covered rocks projecting above the maze.

Patiently and carefully we crept over the windfalls where the long legs of the elk had carried him so easily, peering into every nook and corner for the patch of tawny hair or the tips of the newly-polished antlers that should betray the presence of the quarry. A fresh bed and signs where he had lately browsed convinced us of the nearness of the game. We crept on slowly and cautiously, peeping into every thicket as we passed and noting the outlines of every object.

"Listen!" we both whispered excitedly.

A low, breathing murmur raised like the far off note of some wind-instrument—the elk! We had heard him utter his alarm and resentment, and now came the unmistakable crashing of the fleeing game. I caught a glimpse of the dark brown head above the windfall bearing the dark antlers with white tips, and fired a quick snapshot at a patch of yellowish gray that I knew was his shoulder. I knew at once that I had hit him, but as he disappeared into the dark blue shades of the conifer woods I was most impressed with the size of the fleeing wapiti stag.

My brother unleashed the dogs immediately, having also seen the elk was hit, and they raced off in mad pursuit. The race was short, for the elk soon turned to fight off the dogs. Breasting our way through the thicket we came suddenly very near him, but the screen of brush and autumn leaves concealed his body and only the tips of the antlers were visible as he made another wild dash for freedom, the dogs following closely on his heels. The snapping of dead limbs and small brush under his moving weight and the clear tones of the baying hounds made the echoing woods vocal with sounds.

Up out of the next gulch the excited baying of the hounds came appealingly to our ears. There was no need of cautious movement then, for we knew the dogs would hold him. But imagine our surprise when the elk wheeled quickly and started up the slope. Nor had my three hurried rifle shots any effect in stopping his wild flight.

Then he turned down the hill and stood at bay beside a mountain rill. There he looked every inch a king; undaunted, throwing his head from side to side as he watched the baying pack. Stately and proud he faced the peril—and the hunter's heart filled with sadness as he drew the curtain that closed the forest tragedy.

Nature seemed to resent the slaying of the quarry—one of the fittest survivors of the diminished few, ranging where the great herds of former days roamed free from the ravage of man's passion to destroy. One of earth's crevices received the dead wapiti in his last convulsive struggle, and his widespreading antlers catching on the crevice's edges held him suspended there while drooping ferns concealed his majestic head from view.

The situation was a perplexing one. We could not get at him to dress him; for the body fitting so neatly into the crevice made it impossible to get where we could make an incision. So my brother went to the settlement, a distance of five miles, to get help.

During his absence I made all the measurements necessary to aid the taxidermist in mounting the trophy; also other interesting measurements. The antlers from the head to the extreme tips measured respectively 48 and 49 inches, and the spread at the tips was 51 inches. The antlers were evenly balanced, carrying seven beautifully polished tines on each beam. He measured 5 feet 9 inches at the shoulders, and due allowance was made for the position in which he hung.

Judging from the measurements taken of the dead elk and comparisons made with measurements of other animals of similar size, he must have exceeded 1,100 pounds in weight. An animal of such size crammed into a hole just large enough to receive him proved a hard task to prepare. First, I skinned the head and neck and removed them. The head and cape weighed 90 pounds, and the neck (with the skin off) weighed 92 pounds, a total of 182. (These weights were taken after we came out.)

About dark my brother returned accompanied by two settlers who came to assist us in saving the meat. It was a slow and laborious job and night came on before it was half done. So we gathered old limbs and strips of bark and kept up a good fire, by the light of which we worked until about 10 o'clock.

When the task was finished the next thing in order was cooking supper and preparing a place to sleep. I had only eaten a hardtack since the early morning breakfast and felt greatly fatigued. But there is a delight and fascination about cooking over a camp-fire on those forest-covered mountains when all nature is wrapped in darkness, and the appetite whets while one waits.

We ate supper that night with a relish and satisfaction such as only comes to men in like places, and tasted for a brief time the real freedom of the mountaineer. The boys were very talkative and showed no disposition to make ready for sleeping. The way they planned to kill game was alarming, and it was only the knowledge of many such camp-fire hunts failing to materialize that enabled me to at last go to sleep, leaving them still planing.—Recreation.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL ON THE FRANCO-BRITISH EXHIBITION, 1908.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The last meeting of the Association of the Franco-British Exhibition has been held. Before its work takes its place among the historic events of this country and of France, I feel bound as Honorary President most cordially to express appreciation of services rendered in carrying out this vast undertaking.

The Exhibition has been the first of its kind conceived, constructed, and carried out without Government or Municipal aid, and handing over a substantial surplus for the benefit of the charitable institutions of the two nations concerned.

To Mr. Imre Kiralfy is due the credit for having given birth to the happy idea, which his skill in designing, his capacity for organisation, and his earnest though gratuitous labours—with the assistance and co-operation of many of this country's greatest men in Science, Art, Education, Industry, and Commerce—brought to a successful issue.

Special thanks are due to the Earl of Derby for the promptitude with which he consented to come forward and fill the place of his honoured father as President. To that large body of Guarantors, including many of the most honoured names in this country and France, who guaranteed upwards of a quarter of a million sterling, but who have now happily been relieved from all liability, and above all to Lord Strathcona, Lord Rothschild, Count Chandon, Lord Blyth, Lord Welby, Sir Earnest Cassel, and Sir Francis Mowatt, for their opportune financial support on special occasions, we owe a very deep debt of gratitude. In a variety of other ways, particularly as Chairman of the Organising Committee, Lord Blyth from first to last by his extensive commercial experience most materially added to our success.

In the fulfilment of his duties as Chairman of the Executive Committee, Viscount Selby gave his time most ungrudgingly, and by his keen judgment, wide experience of public affairs, and profound knowledge of the law ever maintained the dignity of the proceedings over which he presided.

Lord Welby's labours as Chairman of the Finance Committee, as well as the assistance given by Sir Francis Mowatt, Monsieur Chevilliard, Mr. W. R. Malcolm, and other members of the Committee, deserve the fullest acknowledgment.

Of Sir John Cockburn's assistance, labouring constantly from the very inception of the scheme, and presiding over the Colonial Section, it would be difficult to say enough. Lord Desborough presiding over the Sports Committee, especially in regard to the Olympic Games, ensured a success. The Congress and Conference Committees found in Lord Weardale an ideal Chairman.

Special mention should be made of the valuable services rendered by the Earl of Jersey, Sir William Holland, Mr. Freeman Murray, Mr. Frank Debenham, Mr. Charles Charlton on the Executive Committee, and in other directions.

In the position of Commissioner of the Fine Arts Section, Sir Isidore Spielmann secured an unprecedented collection of British Art, and was happy in having the co-operation of the President of the Royal Academy, Sir Edward Poynter, as Chairman of his Section Committee. Our gratitude is likewise due to Sir William White for his work as Chairman of the Machinery, Mechanical Engineering, and Shipping Section; to Sir William Mather for his Chairmanship of the Education Committee, and for the organisation of the first and most complete series of exhibits illustrative of the subject ever got together in this country on such an occasion. Organised and presided over by Sir Norman Lockyer, the Science Section was a model of efficient display.

I now come to the various Group Committees. In connection with them we all recognise how much we owe to Sir Boverton Redwood (Liberal Arts); to Mr. T. Hurry Reches (Mechanical Engineering); to Mr. Maurice Deacon (Mining Engineering); to Sir Hugh Bell (Metallurgy of Iron and Steel); to Professor W. Gowland (Metallurgy of other Metals); to Mr. H. Cosmo Bonsor (Transportation); to Colonel D. Prain (Horticulture); to Mr. Charles C. Allom (Decorative Arts); to Mr. Alfred Mond (Chemical Industries); and to Sir W. Lee-Warner (Indian Section).

Of Lady Jersey and Lady Haversham and those ladies associated with them it must be said that they succeeded in creating a section for Women's Work unequalled in any previous Exhibition.

By Mr. Charles Kiralfy and Mr. Albert Kiralfy the whole of the administrative and practical work was undertaken with the utmost skill, energy, and devotion, and these gentlemen were indeed worthy lieutenants of the Commissioner-General, their father.

It is an especial pleasure to render our thanks to the large body of able members of the French Section, who, with M. le Senateur Dupont as their Chairman, laboured so unceasingly to make the exhibits from France in every way worthy of that great nation.

I think, it will be universally admitted that the Franco-British Exhibition has been highly beneficial, not only to the two nations, but indirectly to many other countries, and that its good effects will be felt far into the future.

To have been associated with so many distinguished men of the French Nation and British Empire in the execution of such a truly patriotic work I regard as a very high honour.

I am, Sir, Yours faithfully,

ARGYLL,
Honorary President,
Franco-British Exhibition, 1908.

TESTIMONIAL FROM IR SAMUEL BAKER,

Newton Abbot, Devon
DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the efforts of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

DERBY.

YORK commenced the autumn season in earnest, and found a worthy successor in Derby, another stronghold of influential patronage, to carry it on. The importance of the meeting has long been acknowledged by all sorts and conditions of sportsmen, and the occasion was marked by the running of special trains by the railway companies, who catered for their patrons in satisfactory fashion. On the 31st ultimo the weather, which at one time had a wintry tinge in town, improved into a sunny afternoon at Derby, where a large and influential company recruited from the big mansions in the neighbourhood mustered to see an afternoon's sport well worthy of Derby traditions. The course was in good riding order. Results :—

POLO.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—The seventh annual match for the Patriotic Cup, an international challenge trophy competed for alternately at Hurlingham and in Dublin, took place on the 28th ultimo on the Nine Acres ground, in Phœnix Park, of the All-Ireland Polo Club, and resulted in England, the holders, retaining possession of the cup, by 10 goals to 3. The Irish Counties team was to have represented Ireland, but after the Open Cup tournament it was decided to choose a fresh side, and yesterday Captain Lloyd was assisted by the Hon. Aubrey Hastings, Major Browne Clayton (of the 5th Lancers), and Mr. L. Morrogh Ryan, the All-Ireland Polo Club honorary secretary. The England team included Mr. Harry Rich and Captain Herbert Wilson, who each took part in one of the recent international matches against America, together with Mr. A. N. Edwards, of the 9th Lancers, whose brilliant play this season has gained him promotion to the Recent Form List, and Captain C. C. de Crespigny, the 2nd Life Guards back. Up to half-time the Irishmen made a good stand, but subsequently they were unable to score, and in the end England won easily.

In the first period Mr. H. Rich and Mr. Edwards each hit a goal for the holders, Capt. Lloyd scoring for Ireland; while England made three more goals in the second ten minutes, the scorers being Messrs. Rich and Edwards and Captain de Crespigny. Ireland had the better of the third period, and successful shots by Captain Lloyd and of England. Subsequently the Irishmen were outplayed, of gngland. Subsequently the Irishmen were outplayed, and hitting 5 more goals England won as stated. All the winners played well, Captain de Crespigny in particular, while Captain Lloyd was the most prominent of the losers. Teams:—

ENGLAND.—Mr. H. Rich, Capt. H. Wilson, Mr. A. N. Edwards, and Capt. C. C. de Crespigny (back).

IRELAND.—Hon. Aubrey Hastings, Major Browne Clayton, Capt. J. Hardless Lloyd, and Mr. L. Morrogh Ryan (back).

ATHLETICS AND CYCLING.

W. J. BAILEY was in great form at the first annual meeting of the West London Cycling Association at Herne Hill on Saturday. In an attempt on the quarter-mile flying start record he beat his previous best time by 3mins. 5secs, and also lowered the professional world's record by 1min. 5secs. His time was 25min. 1/5secs.

Prior to this Bailey disposed of his field in the 550 yards handicap—both in preliminary heat and final—in the hollowest fashion. His last "quarter" in this contest was ridden in 26 1/5secs. When it came to his turn to appear as one of the Polytechnic team in the final bout for the Turner Cup and club championship of London Bailey won his two heats equally easy, and brought victory to his club by 19 points to 21. In all a splendid afternoon's work.

...though C. H. Bartlett failed, owing to his pacing motor-cycle giving out, in his attempt on Leon Meredith's ten miles record of 14mins. 44-1/5secs, the Polytechnic boy made no mistake in winning the mile open handicap from the 50 yards mark in 2mins. 13-1/5secs. E. F. Ryan, who was second, made a great fight in the last 100 yards.

The final of the five miles scratch race for the West London Cycling Association championship produced one of the most exciting finishes ever witnessed. Five men finished within a length, the verdict going to H. T. Johnson, with F. G. Hamlin second E. G. Piercy third, and C. Brooks fourth. Time,—11mins. 46-1/5secs.

At Eastbourne the summer sports of the Eastbourne Athletic Club produced some highly-interesting results. That greatly-improved runner, from Tunbridge Wells, G. C. Gorringe, finished first, a yard ahead of the holder, G. Saunders, Brighton and County H., in the mile championship of Sussex—time, 4min. 33-1/5secs.—but was declared ineligible in consequence of his residing outside the county, and Saunders was again declared the winner. Gorringe, however, afterwards won the club's mile championship in 4mins. 51-1/5secs.

A. E. Wood, the ten miles champion, won the open mile handicap, with 20 yards start, in 4mins. 20-1/5secs, but was easily beaten in the three miles level invitation race by the British Olympic athlete, A. J. Robertson, of the Birchfield H., who won by 60 yards in the fast time of 14mins. 34secs.

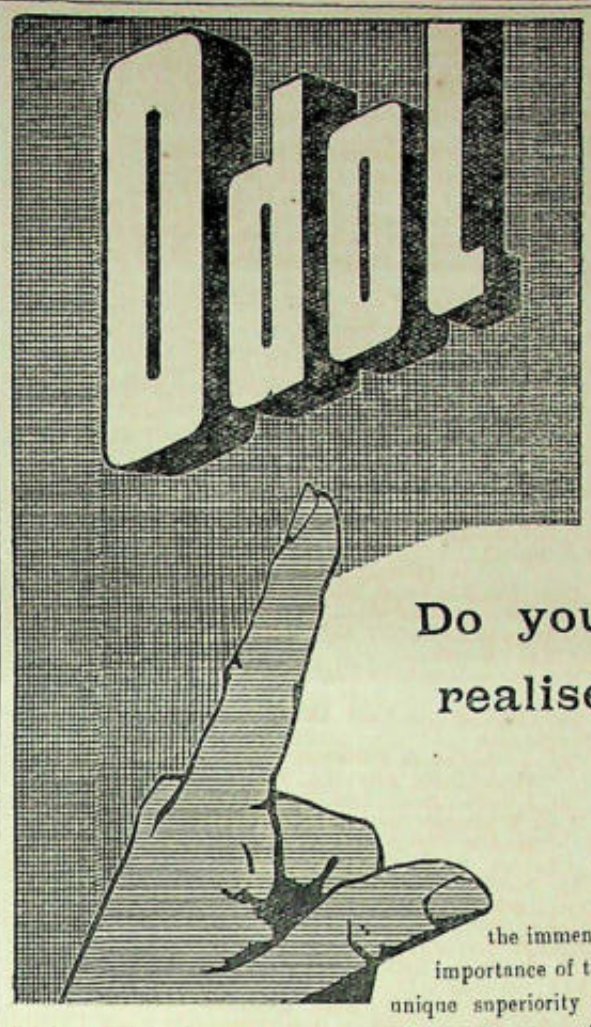
E. J. Webb (Herne Hill H.) showed grand form in the three miles walking handicap, in which the starts were limited to 300 yards. He took the lead after going two miles, and won easily from W. H. L. Ovens (Herne Hill H.) 190 yards start, in 21mins. 25-1/5secs. The ex-champion, J. Butler (Polytechnic H.), 250 yards start, was third.

H. H. Lee (Putney A.C.) won all the cycle races—the half-mile handicap, with 15 yards starts, in 1min. 10-4/5secs; the mile, with 30 yards start, in 2mins. 30secs.; and the five miles scratch race in 14mins. 5-4/5secs.

At the Birmingham charity sports, the furlong champion, J. N. Cartmell (Pennsylvania University, U.S.A.) won the 100 yards invitation race in 10-1/5secs C. J. Oliver (Sparkhill H.), who with 3½ yards start, also won the 120 yards hadicap in 11-4/5secs., and M. Chapman (Finchly H.) followed in the order named.

V. L. Johnson (Rovers C.C.) and D. Hodgetts (Rovers C.C.) were, respecitively, first and second in the five miles (Birmingham Centre) championship of the N.C.U. Johnson also won the 500 yards cycle race. Leon Meredith failed by a second to beat the one-mile motor-paced cycle record of 1min. 34secs from a flying start, but he beat S. F. Bailey in a ten-miles motor-paced match, doing 17mins. 51secs. to Bailey's 17mins. 53-2/5secs.

Hunting.



THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 2nd September.—Lascelles Covert 8 A.M. Drawing the bog which runs down to the right of the New Pykara Road, to Mackenzie's Crossing hounds crossed over Double Crossing and drew up the Blackmore Vale and over New Market to Gold Mine Crossing; in the bog below hounds opened on a line and with a merry burst of music ran up to the left of Rawlins' Nullah, then turned down to the bottom and led away over the Sandy Nullah stream up Schmidt's Bog through the Alley and up the Butter Slide, then dipped down on to the Back Staircase Road and turned right handed along the road to Briar, but only touching this covert, they raced along Windy Saddle and turned left handed over Cox's Crossing. Bearing slightly to the right swung over the hill past Hearty into and through the covert near Somerdale Bungalow; up again by Hamlet into the top of Bracken. The jack dived into a small hole, but finding the accommodation rather limited bolted out right into the middle of the pack and was quickly accounted for. On running hounds through Bracken a jack was viewed away from the top, taking a line through Fuddler and Wenlock, then right handed over the top of Khed and straight through Road Shola. Coming out at the bottom by Jackson's Crossing he ran on into Toda Coffee Shop Shola with hounds close at him throwing their tongues in a full chorus; he was driven out and rolled over on the Falls Road close to the Toda Coffee Shop. It was a very fast run and scent all that could be desired. A third jack was accounted for below Chemmund in the nullah of that name. Hounds touched the line of this jack above Chemmund and hunted him round about the covert for some time before he decided to leave it only to get to ground in the nullah out of which he was bolted by the terriers and hounds despatched him.

Saturday, 11th September.—Briar Shola 12 noon. A dull monsoonish day with a thick fog and squalls of rain at intervals. A jack had been viewed on Lawley's Course by Major Henderson on his way to the meet: hounds were taken over with little delay and opened on the line near Schmidt's Clump, where the jack had waited, they were soon chasing him down to the stream. Crossing it they pointed for Rawlins' Nullah, from here a brace of jack went away in front of hounds and near Blue-gums the jacks divided, one going away with a few couple of hounds towards Governors Shola—the other with the main body of the pack turning to the right led across the Sandy Nullah Stream up to the left of Staircase Shola; turning down again he ran along the bottom of the covert and on through Stokes' Shola and Mund Shola, where he was viewed by the terrier boys going away up the hill past the tin hut up through Upper Briar and made his escape. The next jack was found near Martyn's Shola; hounds touching his line above the cover carried it across the Devil's Dyke to Yemakal and brought it back to the Devil's Dyke; scent, however, was poor and they were unable to make anything more of it. A long draw followed by Rallywood, Jackal and Dudley to Dreadnaught before hounds found again, but with such a wretched scent they could barely own to it; they carried it up through Denmark to the foot of Cairn Hill and gave it up. Another jack was found in Woodstock, but nothing came of it.

Monday, 13th September.—Rees' Corner 7-30 A.M. A most perfect morning, bright warm sun with a strong westerly breeze. A nice change after the monsoon conditions we have had hitherto. A long journey by Long Swamp, Blackmore Vale and Sandy Nullah Stream found us below Schmidt's Clump and hounds opened on a line at the head of the bog of that name. They started running at a good pace up through the Alley into Staircase and down Back Staircase and dropped on to the Back Staircase Road near Barton's Shola, then turning right handed they raced the whole length of it to the corner of Briar, where they swung to the left in the direction of Bacon Wood; leaving it on their right they sank the hill into Yemakal Valley and crossing the stream turned up the Devil's Dyke to Fifes' Nullah and rose Back Staircase but lost their jack in Staircase Shola. Another long draw followed before hounds touched a line below Paragon; they hunted this below Maikod Mund, then up through Warwick and keeping straight on to the Dartmore Valley where scent never very good failed entirely. The sun was very hot by now so hounds were taken home.

PYKARA.

Do you realise the immense importance of the unique superiority of Odol? While all other preparations for cleansing the mouth and teeth are effective only during the few moments of application, the antiseptic and refreshing power of Odol continues gently but persistently for hours afterwards. Odol penetrates into the interstices of the teeth and the mucous membrane of the mouth, to a certain extent impregnating them, and thus securing a safeguard and preservative for the teeth such as no other dentifrice can provide, not even approximately.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE vs. PENGUINS.—This was the first of the two games on the opening day, Monday, the 13th instant. It was hotly contested throughout, victory eventually resting with Government House.

First Chukker.—The Penguins pressed till Lucas cleared and ran the ball down for Greig to open the scoring. Up and down play, Miles missing a chance of equalising after a good run.

Second Chukker.—Government House attacked but play was transferred to midfield where Miles' pony came down but neither was hurt. Play ruled all over the field till Martin got on and scored for Government House. A free hit to the Penguins enabled them to put through shortly after.

Third Chukker.—The Penguins rushed down and Colman put the teams on terms. Fast up and down play followed and then the Penguins got away once more and Badger put them ahead with a good shot.

Fourth Chukker.—Government House attacked vigorously till Badger relieved, but Greig brought the ball back and equalised. The Penguins put in a good run but the chukker ended before they could score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Penguins worked the ball back from their own territory and Miles, Badger and Colman all had shots at the Government House goal, all of which were unsuccessful. Then Alderson rushed down but failed in his final effort and the chukker ended without score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Penguins got on but were deprived of the ball by their opponents, Martin having a long shot at goal which went wide; up and down play was followed by a free hit to Government House from which Alderson scored the winning goal. Final Score: Government House, 4 goals; Penguins, 3 goals. Teams:—

Umpires:—Major England and Captain Popham.

INNISKILLING DRAGOONS vs. 33RD CAVALRY.—This was the second game on Monday, the Dragoons winning by 8 goals (all scored in the fourth chukker) to 2.

First Chukker.—The Dragoons attacked and missed two shots at goal. Play was transferred and Anderson sent wide. Up and down play followed till Wise at length got possession and scored for the 33rd.

Second Chukker.—The Dragoons attacked but could not score and all efforts on the part of the 33rd also met with no success.

Third Chukker.—This was also a pointless period, the Dragoons doing most of the attacking.

Fourth Chukker.—The Dragoons kept up the pressure and hit three goals in this chukker, the first obtained by Terrot, the next by Burnham and the third by Bowen.

Fifth Chukker.—Burnham rushed down and tried to increase their lead but was stopped and the 33rd took the ball down the field, Colonel Edwardes putting it through.

Sixth Chukker.—An attempt to score by Terrot was frustrated but the 33rd continued to attack and a free hit against the Dragoons followed. Aliyarkhan took the hit but missed and the chance of equalising was thus lost, the game ending with the score. Dragoons, 3 goals; 33rd Cavalry, 2 goals. Teams :—

Umpires :—Colonel Taylor and Major Faunce.

13TH HUSSARS vs. 26TH LIGHT CAVALRY.—Played on the 14th instant, the Cavalry having the best of the game and eventually winning by 4 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The 26th got away and Popham scored a goal. They kept up the attack but the Hussars cleared and ran down. Chaytor intervened and Henderson bringing the ball back hit a second goal for the 26th.

Second Chukker.—The Hussars pressed but could not score, three penalty hits against the 26th all going wide. Chaytor ran down for the Cavalry towards the close and missed by inches.

Third Chukker.—Popham took the ball down and scored. He followed this up registering another goal and just missed a third shortly after. The Hussars then attacked and Hind made a fine attempt which was successful.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars were prominent for some good run, but this period ended without score, fast runs from end to end bringing it to a close.

Fifth Chukker.—The 26th kept their opponents busy defending and Popham got away on more than one occasion but could not score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hussars got on and Hind hit a goal. Popham was next conspicuous but his final effort went behind. Fast up and down play ended the game with the score :—26th Cavalry, 4 goals, 13th Hussars, 2 goals. Teams :—

Semi Final.

INNISKILLING DRAGOONS vs. GOVERNMENT HOUSE.—A large gathering witnessed an excellent game when these teams met on the 16th instant, the Dragoons eventually winning by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Dragoons made the pace at the start and Burnham hit a goal. Thereafter Government House attacked and two attempts to score failed.

Second Chukker.—Ritson rushed down and Burnham had a shot at goal, Martin cleared and Government House took the ball down for Greig to equalise. They continued to press and the same player hit a second goal shortly after.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play followed by desperate efforts to score on the part of the Dragoons, all of which were unavailing.

Fourth Chukker.—The Dragoons kept up the pressure and eventually got through, Ritson scoring a goal and putting the teams on terms.

Fifth Chukker.—Alderson put in a good run but was stopped by Burnham, and the ball returned to the Government House ended, where a foul against the defenders enabled Ritson to give the Dragoons the lead.

Sixth Chukker.—Government House made strenuous efforts to equalise but without success, the game ending with the score. Inniskilling Dragoons 3 goals, Government House 2 goals. Team :—

PARSEES vs. HINDUS.—The first of the triangular cricket matches was played on the 16th and 17th instant between the Parsees and Hindus, a low scoring game ending in a win for the Parsees by four wickets. The Hindus took first knock, but were all disposed of in an hour and a half for 65. Date made 23, Mehta and Talpade being the only others to reach double figures. Warden took 5 wickets for 36 runs, and Balsara 4 for 27. The Parsees then went in but lost 2 wickets for 9 runs before tiffin. Later on they fared better, Dinshaw, the Karachi crack, scored 51, Balsara 21, while Mulla, Meherhomjee and Dubash made useful contributions, the innings closing for 107. Baloo was the most successful bowler taking 5 wickets for 28 runs. With an hour still to go the Hindus entered on the second innings and at the close of the day's play had made 48 for the loss of 3 wickets. Date compiling 20 and Talpade 20 not out. On resuming the next day Talpade carried his score to 55 before he was run out but the others did little and with the exception of the Baroda Prince no one else reached double figures, the side being all out for 113. With 72 runs to make to win the Parsees again went to the wickets but began badly, losing three wickets for 12 runs Chothia then came in and played good cricket. He scored 30 leaving with the score at 67 for 6 wickets. Warden joined Kapadia and there was no further separation, the required 6 runs being soon obtained. The Parsees winning as stated by four wickets. Score :—

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

FIRST ROUND.

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. 12TH LANCERS.—The tournament opened with this game on the 13th instant. Calcutta pressed throughout and eventually won by 2 goals to one. The first half was pointless but the Volunteers had lost opportunities through lying offside. On resuming Calcutta took up the attack once more and a nice pass by Galbraith to L. H. Smith enabled the latter to open their account. Play in midfield followed and then Smith again got possession and sent in a shot which went in to the net off the Lancer custodian's foot. Up and down play gave place to determined efforts by the Military and after they had failed to score from a penalty kick they registered their only point through Cox five minutes before time.

Teams :—

12TH LANCERS.—Young, goal; Hammond and Badman, backs; Rainey, West and Edward, halves; Jenkins, Cox, Bird, Campbell and Hill, forwards.

Referee :—Col.-Sergt. J. H. Knight, V. C.

WILTSHIRE REGT. vs. 17th LANCERS.—This game also played on the 13th instant was fairly well contested and ended in a win for the Lancers by a goal to nil. The Lancers pressed at the start and Gowers put through but the point was disallowed for offside The Wiltshires did most of the attacking till half time but at the interval the score sheet was blank On changing ends play was up and down till the 17th rushed down and Gowers gave them the lead. The Wiltshires made determined efforts to score but without success and were beaten as stated. Teams :—

17TH LANCERS :—Simpson, goal; Irving and Gallenvit, backs; Davies, Dyson and Lieut. Boyd, halves; Birch, Westwood, Gowers, Whittle and Wright, forwards.

WILTSHIRES :—Giddings, goal; Niblett and Pagett, backs; Bromham, Farmer and Hitchens, halves; Captain Andrews, Williams, Pte. Andrews, Butler and Warne, forwards.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. WEST RIDINGS.—Played on the 14th instant, a good game ending in a win for the H.L.I. The opening exchanges were level and the first half was devoid of score, though the Highlanders lost an easy opportunity through an erratic shot. On changing ends the West Ridings rallied but could not score and the only goal of the match was obtained by the Highlanders, Pte. McMenemy putting through at close range. The Duke's efforts to equalise were unavailing and they retired beaten.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—The Royal Scots, who have come out from home with a big reputation, met the cup holders on the 16th instant and a tough struggle was anticipated, and so it proved. The Scots pressed at the start and scored two goals in quick succession, Thomson and Francis being credited with the points. But the Lancs were in no way disconcerted and carrying the game into the Scot's territory they scored through Abbott. Shortly after the Lancs forwards again got away and Spriggs equalised with a neat shot. On resuming after the interval with the score two all both teams tried all they knew to get the lead. Both custodians were tested in turn and both did good work. Fletcher, the Scot's goalkeeper after performing some excellent saves, was penalised for a carry and from the kick the Lancashires put through. The Scots tried hard to get on teams but without success, being thus defeated by 3 goals to 2.

CONNAUGHT RANGERS vs. EAST YORKS.—This match was played on the 15th instant and was a very uninteresting display. The East Yorks had the best of it all through and eventually won by three goals to nil. They opened the scoring shortly after the start and put on two more goals before the interval. The second half was very slow. Both teams had chances which were not taken advantage of and there being no further scoring the East Yorks won as stated.

NORTH STAFFORDS vs. DURHAM L. I.—These teams met on the 15th instant, a fair game ending in favour of the Staffords. Play was up and down the field at the start, the Staffords losing more than one opportunity of scoring. The Durhams next took up the attack but could not break the opposing defence and the Staffords clearing, a good passing run by their forwards terminated in Baker finding the net. A rush by the Durhams was unproductive and then the Staffords came away once more and Pye scored the second goal. On changing ends play was very fast and the Durhams were kept busy defending. They frustrated all attempts to score and the game settled down Both goals were visited but nothing further was obtained and the Durhams retired beaten by and 2 goals to nil. Teams :—

NORTH STAFFORDS.—Talbot, goal; Latimer and Mulliner, backs; Crutchley, Ward and Shelby, halves; Davies, Pye, Baker, Massey and Flanty, forwards.

SECOND ROUND.

SIMLA UNITED "B" TEAM vs. BISHOP COTTON SCHOOL.—This match on the 16th instant ended in a pointless draw. The Schoool had the best of the exchanges but the game was a poor one and time arrived without score; extra time was played without definite result but on the 17th instant the game was played when the Simla team won by a lucky goal to nil. The boys again had the best of the play but lost many chances owing to erratic shooting. Teams :—

SIMLA UNITED.—Fox, goal; Appleby and Baptiste, backs; Taylor, Von-Goldstein and Bloodworth, halves; Barne, Simpson, Heron, Beany, and C. Rees, forwards.

BISHOP COTTON SCHOOL.—Hider, goal; Thorne and Vernal, backs; Mackay, Goodwin and Lisbey, halves; Lewis, Sergt. Pestige, Dowse, Stook and Lynn, forwards.

Referee :—Color-Sergeant Knight.

SIMLA UNITED "A" vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—This was the other game played on the 16th instant and provided a very indifferent display of football. Simla attacked at the start and put the ball through but the point was disallowed: they continued to press and Oldrini scored. They netted the ball once more but the whistle proclaimed it offside. In the second half the Dragoons equalised from a penalty kick for a foul and time arrived with the score one all. The extra allowance was played without result but the replay on the 18th instant ended in a win for the Dragoons by a goal to nil, after another poor game. Teams :—

SIMLA UNITED "A".—Danskin, goal; Inskip and Salt, backs; Ellis, Reilly and Thornhill, halves; Fitzpatrick, Lamb, McGinn, Oldrini and Rogers, forwards.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—Watts, goal; Bramell and Hawley, backs; Pye, Askew and Williams, halves; Butler, Townsend, Richer, Haggerston and Kirkton, forwards.

Referee :—Staff-Sergeant Curley.

BLACK WATCH vs. KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT.—Played on the 17th instant, a well contested game ending in a win for the King's Regiment. The game was vigorous throughout and exchanges in the opening half were level. The Black Watch were weak in front of goal and on one occasion missed an open net. Half time arrived without score. On restarting the Kings got away and Broadfield drew first blood. The Highlanders then took up the attack and from a free kick for a foul Reid equalised Hereafter the Black Watch kept up a vigorous attack and had hard luck in not scoring. Play was next transferred to their territory where Jones rushed the ball through but the Highlanders were not long in retaliating, scoring from a free kick. Both teams were playing at top pressure and a drawn game was expected but just before time the Kings got through and notched another goal which gave them the victory. Score: King's Regiments, 3 goals; Black Watch, 2 goals.

CAMERONIANS vs. ROYAL BERKSHIRE REGIMENT.—This game last Friday was not so good as its predecessor. The Cameronians attacked hotly at the start and the Berks' custodian was kept busy. Nothing was scored and play was taken to the other end where Harper put through for the Berkshires, the point being disallowed for offside. The interval arrived without score and on resuming the Cameronians again forced the pace. One of their shots hit the cross bar and rebounded into play but shortly after Bannister put through and all the efforts of the Berkshires to get on terms proving ineffectual the Highlanders won by a goal to nil. Teams :—

CAMERONIANS.—Lawson, goal; Mitchell and Lee, backs; Taylor, McBlack and Veitch, halves; Langdon, Dawkins, Johnstone, Bannister, and Cain, forwards.

BERKSHIRE REGIMENT.—Clark, goal; Heath and Rodson, backs; Dippes, Crumpt and Gash; halves; Simons, Harper, Taylor, Overton, and Tibbles, forwards.

With
200 grain Bullet
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. 17TH LANCERS.—Played on Saturday last Calcutta winning by 2 goals to one. Up and down play at the start was followed by an onslaught by the Lancers but Gowers shot struck the cross bar. Two free kicks against the Volunteers were unproductive and the Calcutta men then took up the attack and sent in several shots without result. The 17th next got possession and rushing down Gowers put through. Hendrie making no effort to save: an appeal for offside was disallowed by the referee, a decision which amongst many others gave general disapproval. On changing ends a good run by the Calcutta forwards ended in Galbraith equalising and the Volunteers continued to keep up a hot attack on the Lancers' goal. The game was very rough at this period and there were numerous fouls. From a free kick for one of these against the Lancers, Calcutta scored a goal and time was called shortly after with the score 2 to 1 in favour of the C.V.R.

LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS vs. H. L. I.—These teams met on Monday the Cup holders winning by 3 goals to one. The exchanges at the start were in favour of the Highlanders who forced a corner. It was not improved upon and play settled down very level. Both custodians were tested but neither team could score and a corner to the Fusiliers also failed to give them any advantage, the interval arriving with the score sheet blank. The Fusiliers opened the attack on resuming and Russel scored. The Highlanders immediately retaliated Kennedy putting them on terms. Level play followed but the Fusiliers gradually asserted their superiority and before time was called had added two more goals to their score and won as stated.

NORTH STAFFORDS vs. EAST YORKS.—The second of the game on Monday ended in a win for the East Yorks by 2 goals to one. The Staffords attacked at the start but the pressure was eventually relieved and play transferred to the other end where Birch opened the scoring. The Staffords made big efforts to get level all of which proved abortive and just before time the Yorks scored again from a free kick for a foul. On crossing over the Staffords did most of the attacking and registered a goal shortly after the restart. They failed however, to get through again and were defeated by 2 goals to one.

THIRD ROUND.

SIMLA UNITED "B" vs. SIRHIND MOUNTAIN BATTERY.—The Gunners, who had had a walk over in the second round owing to the retirement of the Warwicks, met the Simla B team on Tuesday and won a very poor game by 2 goals to nil. They attacked throughout but could only score twice, Holmes and McBride being credited with the points.

KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT vs. DRAGOON GUARDS.—This was another tame game. The Liverpool Regiment after the form they had displayed against the Black Watch were expected to win by a large margin but they did not reproduce the form and could only scrape through by a goal to nil. The Dragoons had rather the best of the exchanges in the first half but neither teams had scored at half time. The Dragoons missed several chances after the interval and then the King's Regiment took up the attack and pressing for the rest of the game scored the only goal of the match from a free kick for hands. Teams :—

KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT.—Waters, goal; Jennings and Lethbridge, backs; Hughes, Reston and Stephenson, halves; Pughs, Welby, Broadfield, Rhodes and Borman, forwards.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—Watts, goal; Bramill and Hawley, backs; Pye, Askew and Williams, halves; Butler, Townsend, Richer, Hagustony and Kirton, forwards.

THE CALCUTTA RUGBY CUP TOURNAMENTS.

SEMI-FINALS.

CALCUTTA vs. KING'S OWN REGIMENT.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Wednesday, the 15th instant, a good game resulting in the defeat of the Military by 8 points to nil. The home team pressed at the start and Studd and Burnett were conspicuous for good work. A free kick against the King's Own fell short and Lieutenant Blackburn relieved the pressure with a good kick. The soldiers then attacked vigorously and were nearly over more than once. Offside against them saw a transfer of operations to midfield. Play ruled up and down for some time, neither side gaining any material advantage. Scrums and line outs followed in quick succession, the home team gaining ground. Arthur was prominent for a run but was forced into touch: a moment later a nice passing run by the Calcutta back division ended in Kay running over with a try, the attempt to majorise failing. On changing ends the King's Own had the best of the game till Cadell dribbled the ball into their territory. Arthur here did many good things among them a gallant effort to drop a goal. Calcutta tried hard to increase their score but the military defence was sound and good foot work by the soldiers brought the ball back to the home 25 where Turnbull saved by falling on the leather. Play was then transferred to the other end where Arthur picked up and ran in with the second try. Burnett added the major points and the whistle soon after proclaimed Calcutta winners by a goal and a try (8 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA :—Turnbull, full-back; Burnett, Siddons, Reid-Kay and Longbottom, three-quarters; Arthur and Ward, halves; Studd, Caddell, Kerr, Elderton, Bryce, Carroll, Morrison and Richmond, forwards.

KING'S OWN.—Mason, full-back; Lieutenant Cassidy, Murray, Lieutenant Blackburn and Gouldin, three-quarters; Lieutenant Wigley and Kennedy, halves; Massy, Sigswodth, Fowler, Howard, Sutherland, Grey, Bridson and Buckley, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. C. Reid (C.F.C).

WEST RIDINGS vs. SOUTH BEHAR BARBARIANS.—The second game in the penultimate round was decided on the Calcutta ground on Thursday last when the holders beat the Barbarians by 27 points to nil. Our Behar visitors though playing gamely to the end were quite outclassed. The soldiers rushed down at the start but Hanney saved. A free against Behar was the next advantage gained but a touch down resulted. The Ridings continued to press and Chapman got over with the first try which was not improved upon. Morris added to the score by dropping a splendid goal but nothing further was scored in the first half the Barbarians stoutly repelling all attacks. But on changing ends the Ridings kept their opponents penned in most of the time and added 2 goals, a drop goal, and 2 tries to their total, thus winning by 2 goals, 2 drop goals and 3 tries to nil. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Crompton, full-back; Turner, Chapman, Ryan and Mainory, three quarters; Morris and Wilson, halves; Lieutenant Gilcare, Widdof, Wormald, Hirst, Stokes, Bootland, Shave and Haigh, forwards.

Final

CALCUTTA F.C. vs. WEST RIDINGS.—These teams came together in the final on Saturday last when a large crowd assembled on the Calcutta ground. The result was a pointless draw—the first time the final has had to be replayed in the history of the tournament. It was an excellent game throughout—strenuously contested from start to finish and remarkable for some brilliant exhibitions. When the teams turned out on Monday it was noticed that Turner replaced Johnston in the Dukes three-quarter line and Lieutenant Hiddel and Bootland played in place of Shaw and Hayman among the forwards. Calcutta turned out as before, save that Bryce and Clayden replaced Carrol and Richmond in the scrum. The heavy rain during the day had put the Calcutta ground into a shocking condition and the game was almost entirely with the forwards. The Dukes who revelled in the mud had the best of it on the days play: nevertheless Calcutta played the game right out to the end and had the satisfaction of not seeing their line crossed—a drop goal by Morris giving the victory to the West Ridings. "Critical Crock" deals with the game at length in his notes, to which we would refer our readers. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Crompton back; Chapman, Turner, Ryan, and Wormald, three quarters; Morris and Wilson, halves; Lieutenant Gatacre, Warrington, Haigh, Webster, Stokes, Captain, Liddell, Bootland and Widdop, forwards.

CALCUTTA RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ON Tuesday evening the South Behar Barbarians and Dalhousie met in the second round of the Tournament on the Calcutta ground, the former emerging victors from a muddy if not bloody conflict, by 8 points to nothing. Four of the Barbarians called off at the last minute and they had to travel short but they were able to procure substitutes locally and turned out a full team. The field was a perfect quagmire, which made accurate play impossible, but what the spectators lost on this account was more than made up for by the amusing efforts of both teams to keep on their feet. There is no doubt that the better side won and their success was largely due to Hannay, who played a splendid game at three-quarter, while Ennett also played well but got very little of the ball. Dalhousie never looked like winning, their forwards being poor, while the backs, the best of whom was McGee, got very few chances.

A LARGE crowd turned up to see the match between Calcutta and King's Own on Wednesday night, a hard game resulting in a win for the former by 8 points to nil. The ground was in beautiful condition and what should have been a fine game was very much spoiled by a lot of unpleasant incidents for which the King's Own were responsible. Deliberate hacking at a man after the ball has gone away as was the case when Elderton, the Calcutta forward, got injured should not be tolerated for a minute, and considering the offender had already been warned I think the referee treated him very leniently in not ordering him off the field.

For the first ten minutes it looked as if Calcutta were going to have matters in their own hands, their forwards getting the ball every time in the scrum and their three-quarters having some nice runs, but after that the military men bucked up and there was little between the teams. Kay got over the line just before half time but Burnett failed with the kick at goal which seemed to be taken too close in.

The forwards of both teams played a hard game, the Calcutta eight were best in the loose, while the King's Own showed up to advantage in the tight. Kerr and Cadell were the best of the Calcutta lot and the former had hard lines in being pulled up by the touch judge when he looked like scoring.

Their packing still left much to be desired, the chief offenders being Carroll and Studd who did not appear to exert themselves, though the latter is good at the line out he is very disappointing in the tight.

Arthur and Ward at half for Calcutta were too clever for their opponents and the former had a fine score after dodging through half a dozen of the other side, while Ward, whose kicking was excellent, was always conspicuous.

The King's Own three-quarters were poor with the exception of Lieutenant Blackburn, who played very well and was the mainstay of his side, his long punts to touch being particularly effective. The Calcutta three-quarters were all good, but although Burnett and Longbottom had some fine runs neither of them showed that resource which is so essential for a first-class "three." Kay and Siddons both put in a lot of useful work, but though the former player was strong in defence he was very disappointing in attack.

Turnbull at back, except for one mistake, played quite well and it looks as if Calcutta have now found their much sought after full back.

THERE has seldom if ever been a larger crowd than turned up on Saturday to witness the game between the West Ridings and Calcutta in the final of the Cup Tournament. The weather was fine but very hot and with the field in the pink of condition there was every prospect of a fast game. The result (a pointless draw) just about represents the run of play, for although both teams worked like Trojans from start to finish there was little to choose between them, Calcutta if anything having a slight advantage. Rough play which has been too much in evidence recently was entirely absent from the contest, which throughout was of the cleanest and fairest description.

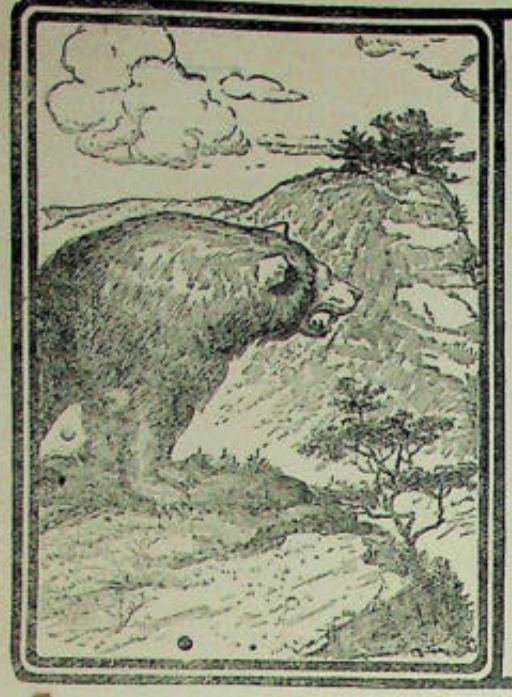
In the first half there was very little open play, the Calcutta forwards practically never getting the ball in the scrum while the military men preferred to kick to touch instead of letting their three-quarters away. Morris, of the Ridings, twice tried to drop goals, the first of which went wide of the mark, but the second was a lovely kick from far out and just fell short of the cross bar giving the local team's supporters an uncomfortable second or two. Calcutta had a similar experience a few minutes later when Ward from a penalty sent in a fine long kick which was very nearly successful. In the second half the Calcutta backs got more of the ball but their passing was not up to their usual standard and lacked finish. Siddons got away once and by clever feinting worked his way up to the Ridings' line but was brought down with the ball in his possession when, if he had only passed, a score would almost certainly have resulted.

The forwards of both sides played a very hard game and there was little to chose between the two packs. Lieutenant Gatacre of the Ridings was good especially in the loose; but the whole pack put in a lot of strenuous work. The Calcutta forwards packed fairly well but in the first half could not get the ball at all, though in the second half they improved in this respect. In the loose they were all useful, the most prominent being Cadell, Kerr, Elderton and Malcolm. Cadell got away from touch once in fine style but with only the full back to pass he had to kick, as none of his side were up to receive his pass.

The West Ridings were fairly well served at half, though both players were often pulled up for off-side tactics. Morris kicked splendidly but did not get the same chances as usual to pot goals. Arthur and Ward both put in a lot of good work for Calcutta but were not quite so effective as might have been expected. In the second half Ward was too slow in getting the ball away from the scrum but his kicking was always first class.

Neither sets of three-quarters got much work to do, but when the ball did go out to them the attacking line found their opponents tackling keen and sure. The civilians gave one the impression of being the better line both in attack and defence, but they showed a tendency to get too much in a straight line with the man in possession of the ball and of passing a trifle late with the result that their passes were liable to be intercepted. Turnbull at full back was the most useful man on the Calcutta side, his fielding and kicking throughout being really excellent and on more than one occasion he relieved from positions which threatened to become dangerous.

IN dull and gloomy weather and on a waterlogged pitch Calcutta and the West Ridings faced each other in the replay of the Final for the Cup on Monday night and after a great fight which was mostly confined to the forwards the "Dukes" just managed to retain the Trophy by the narrow margin of a drop goal or 4 points to nothing. On the run of play they deserved to win and it says a great deal for the West Ridings that they should have won the Calcutta Cup four years in succession. Their play throughout this Tournament has been of the cleanest description and though many would like to have seen the local team get back the Cup, it cannot be denied that the better team won.



The Ridings kicked off and thereafter followed a long series of scrummages in which the military men had all the best of matters. Calcutta were awarded a couple of free kicks from which they gained very little and then the Ridings gradually worked their way towards the civilians' line. A forward rush by the visitors looked dangerous, but Longbottom luckily brought relief by dribbling the ball right across the field and ultimately finding touch on the other side. A couple of attempts to drop goals by the Ridings were unsuccessful though one went very near the mark and half time sounded with Calcutta being severely pressed. The second half was more interesting and after Morris replied to the kick off with a rousing punt to touch the game settled down to tight scrummages in which the Ridings again showed to advantage. The finest piece of play seen was when the Calcutta line was besieged they screwed the scrum and came away with a splendid rush in which both forwards and backs took part. Then the inevitable happened, in a loose scramble a Calcutta forward, who must be very sick with himself now, kicked the ball straight into the hands of Morris, and he, with a really magnificient kick, dropped a lovely goal. The last ten minutes of the game found Calcutta trying hard to equalise matters, but the Ridings gave nothing away and they had to retire beaten but by no means disgraced.

As in Saturday's game, the forwards had most of the play and once again the Tykes could claim the advantage, for though Calcutta packed well they could not get the ball in the scrum which, to a certain extent, must be attributed to the fact that their opponents, for part of the game at least, played with an extra man in the scrum and always got first shove on. In the loose the home team were all good, particularly Kerr and Cadell, while Captain Liddell and Lieutenant Gatacre played well for the winners although the former was frequently offside.

Ward and Arthur at half were both useful and put in a lot of hard work but they got few chances to show up to advantage. The Riding halves were good and Morris' kicking was superb, but he is always inclined to be selfish and forget he has a line of three-quarters to feed. Neither he nor his partner appeared to put the ball straight into the scrum though the referee did not seem to notice this.

Neither sets of three-quarters got much of the ball, but the Calcutta quartette came in for a lot of defensive work in which Reid Kay was always prominent and very safe. Longbottom was not a success and should never have attempted to dribble across the field in the way he did, fortunately it came off all right but it was not sound Rugby. Turnbull once again played brilliantly at back and considering the greasy ball, his kicking and fielding were excellent.

ON Friday evening the Junior Tournament for the Gloucester Cup was started and as there is a large entry some good games

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.

When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

Problems of the Middle East.—By Angus Hamilton. Rs. 5-10.

There are so many foreign questions of importance in which the Middle East is concerned nowadays that a volume dealing in a simple manner with their various phases has long been wanted. "Problems of the Middle East," by the author of "Korea" and "Afganistan," is intended to serve as a simple and reliable handbook for those whose attention is aroused by Imperial subjects. Admittedly, the interests of the Middle East are not confined to India, Persia, and Siam; they are no less associated with the Far East by reason of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, and with the Near East by reason of the Bagdad Convention. Accordingly, Mr. Angus Hamilton's new book deals with the interests of Great Britain and other Powers in Turkey and Persia, Great Britain and France in Indo China, Great Britain and Russia in Central Asia, and Great Britain and Japan in Korea The influence of any one of those questions touches the others, and the book therefore may be said to be an index to all points of the political compass. It is not unillustrated, but equipped with all necessary appendices and a map.

Hungary of to-day.—By Members of the Hungarian Government, etc. Edited by Percy Elden, M.P. Rs. 5-0.

should be witnessed. The match between the Shropshires and United Services "B" team which took place on Calcutta ground resulted in a win for the latter by 8 points to 5. The Services had out a strong team which was strengthened by the inclusion of two of the King's Own reserves, but it was a pity they had to call upon them, for although eligible to play, not having taken part in the Senior Cup, it is not in the spirit of the game to play men who come down as reserves with the military teams. Private Jackson played well for the Services and scored both their tries, one of which he converted.

The Shropshires had the most of the game, but thanks to the selfishness of their backs, did not make the most of their chances. In the second half they did not exert themselves at all and had they done so they might quite well have reversed positions and passed into the second round.

POONA WANDERERS vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS.—These teams opened the tournament on the Cooperage ground last Saturday. The Dragoons were expected to win very easily and it was a matter of general surprise when the score stood 2 all at the interval. But this represents the play in the first half which was very even. Senior drew first blood for the Wanderers, Whyte equalised and level play followed. Then Robinson put the Poona team ahead, but they did not hold their advantage long, Ashworth making the scores even just before the interval. On resuming the soldiers gradually assumed the upper hand, their superior training told and the Wanderers went to pieces. Save for a few isolated runs by the Poona team, the Dragoons did all the attacking and adding four more goals to their score ran out winners by 6 goals to 2. Whyte, Jarrett, Holt and Moore were responsible for the scoring in the second half.

POONA WANDERERS.—Capt. Tillard, goal; Arthur and Viney, backs; Swanwick, Wilson and Wise, halves; Buckley, Robinson, Capt. Sullivan, Barbour and Senior, forwards.

ROYAL DRAGOONS.—Fisher, goal; Seaton and Helliwell, backs; Jeffrey, Boyle, and Ashworth, halves; Hart, Holt, Hore, Whyte, and Jarrett, forwards.

Boxing.

THE O. AND R. RAILWAY TOURNAMENT.

THE Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Boxing Tournament, which opened at the Railway Sports Club, Lucknow, on the 13th September, proved a complete success. The tournament extended over four nights and was under the patronage of Brigadier-General Bell and Staff. Sergeant Major Jones refereed on the two first nights and Mr. F. Owen O'Neill on the third and fourth nights.

On the first night Paddy Gill, professional, beat Private Jones, King's Own Regiment, in a special six-round contest. The twenty-round contest between Driver Sampson, R.H.A., Feather-weight Champion of the United Provinces and G. Rosario, Bantam-weight Champion of India and Burma, on the third night, proved a tame affair. Sampson forced the fighting in the third round, and in the fourth round Rosario went early to the boards. He was up in four seconds, but went down again almost immediately and was counted out.

The tournament came to a close on Saturday, 18th September, and the prizes were presented by Captain Gardiner, R.E., Deputy Manager, Oudh and Rohilkand Railway. The prize for "grit" was awarded to McFarlane, of the Locomotive Department.

The following are the results of the finals :—

KNOCK-OUT BLOWS.

MODERN "DISCOVERIES" 2,000 YEARS OLD.

ATTENTION has recently been called to the comparatively small number of vulnerable parts of the human body which those most interested in their location—professional boxers—have discovered, and further, the curious fact that each of these few said vulnerable spots have been discovered purely by chance. So far as it goes, the criticism is more or less true, and seeing that pugilism is a sport of several thousands of years old, and that everywhere above the belt is fair ground for the landing of a blow which shall put the receipient temporarily hors de combat, it is curious that so few Western performers with the fists have succeeded in inventing or discovering means to that end. I say Western because, though boxing or pugilism is a game which has no charm for the Oriental, he has discovered and used for many years past knock-out blows of many and varied kinds.

In the days of the gladiators—and of Homer's heroes as well—head was the principal object of attack, the jaw, the temple, and the ear the known vulnerable spots. But the tactics of the pugilists generally were crude; to batter an antagonist into unconciousness by repeated blows on the skull was the general system, and the hardest hitter was usually the winner.

When the prize ring flourished in England, knock-out blows were seldom in evidence, men fought until blindness or sheer bodily weakness prevented them from again coming up to the scratch. When a single blow did happen to put a man out, such result was generally due to the tremendous force with which it was delivered, and not because it alighted by design on a known vulnerable spot. The clever men invariably set to work to blind their opponents by heavy and repeated blows over the eyes.

No single boxer, it is evident, ever studied the human body, so far as to discover that a blow landing on any particular region produced consequences that could be foreseen, and, by preventing the victim from continuing, won a battle. Men had favourite blows, of course, and it was realised that a smash over the temple dazed the victim; but there was no scientific working or playing for a knock-out blow until the abolition of prize-fighting, the rise of boxing, and the advent of Sam Baxter.

SAM BAXTER'S FAMOUS BLOW.

Baxter is usually termed the discoverer of the knock-out blow—as though there were but one! He won nearly all his battles with this point-of-the-jaw blow, and, so great was the terror it inspired, his antagonists were half-beaten before they entered the ring against him. But Baxter alighted on the "point" blow purely by accident, and it is not too much to say that over-cultivation of the attempt to bring it off has had a deteriorating effect upon the scientific side of boxing.

George Dixon, the coloured marvel, is credited with the discovery of the demoralising kidney punch—again accidental; certainly there is no mention of its use as a deliberate form of attack until he made such good use of it. But others, though not pugilists, knew the blow centuries before George Dixon was born.

To Bob Fitzsimmons is said to be due the first intelligent use of the solar plexus punch—a knock-out blow in every sense of the word when properly delivered. But to claim that the lanky Cornishman discovered the blow is to protest too much, though not until Fitzsimmon's time was it known by its present name. But the "mark" has been for years recognised as one of the most vulnerable spots in the human body, though who was the (probably accidental) discoverer of the fact is lost in antiquity. That it was known and practised any record of fighting in the prize ring will bear witness; that one well-known pugilist of those days made the blows his special and particular "knocker-out" may also be learned by any searcher after the truth who is inclined to believe that everything good must of necessity be recent of discovery. That man was Bishop Sharpe, otherwise known as the Bold Smuggler, of Woolwich, and one of the most desperate 10½st. men that ever toed the mark. Seventeen battles did he fight, and against him there was but one defeat—at the hands of Alec Reid, the Chelsa Snob. Twice he licked the well-known Gipsy Cooper, and fought one draw with him; and before his defeat by Reid had scored a victory over him by the aid of his terrible blow on the mark. Each of the Smuggler's fifteen successes was gained in the same way. With a cast-iron head and body, he could take the most terrible punishment without wincing in the hope of getting home his celebrated drive. And sooner or later it came, his antagonist went down, knocked out by the blow that some would have us believe is of comparatively recent discovery and use. But when Bishop Sharpe was doing his fighting George IV. had only just commenced his reign.

The Wisdom of the Japs.

Peter Jackson's heart blow and McCoy's liver blow, both discovered fortuitously, were hailed as something novel. Perhaps they were to modern pugilists; but, as with all other knock-out blows, their value had been acknowledged lifetimes ago. Even La Blanche's random pivot blow, which disposed of Dempsey, has been practiced for long by those Orientals to whom I referred as being in possession of every knock-out blow known to the pugilistic fraternity of the Western world, and many others besides. The Orientals are the Japs, who have studied anatomy and the peculiarties of the human body, and, in consequence, have evolved ways and means of securing the victory over an opponent by knock-out blows and otherwise that strike the man who sees their application for the first time as something almost uncanny.

By the great majority of persons ju-jitsu is regarded as nothing more than a system of Japanese wrestling, composed principally of fouls, which has for its object nothing more nor less than the straining of sinews or the dislocation of joints. They see it on the music hall stage, grudgingly acknowledge that it is of some use, doubt very much if the performer could hold his own against a white boxer, and regard it as a combination of acrobatic tricks and strangling or bone-breaking arm and leg holds. But only a part of what ju-jitsu really is is presented on the music hall stage. Many of those who become (for a time) enthusiastic learners of the game have no conception of its possibilities or realise how much it includes. They, the public generally, and pugilists would be greatly surprised to learn that included in ju-jitsu are a number of blows with the hand, the sole object of which is to bring about a knock-out. Every blow that the wiliest professonal fighter is acquainted with for achieving so much—kidney, solar plexus, point of the jaw, upper cut, heart punch—is known to the Japanese ju-jitsuan, besides several others the boxer knowns nothing of at all.

Certainly this will be news to many, but none the less such are the facts. True, the ju-jitsuan does not strike his blows with his clenched first; he has evolved what, to him, appears a far more formidable means of delivery. Some of his blows are made with the edge of the hand, the wrist, and the finger-tips. He has physiological reasons for believing that his blows are the more effective. Certainly they do not disfigure as a punch with the clenched fist may but they do the trick; they knock the man out, and when he has no immediate wish for further fighting. Nay, so powerful are some of the blows the ju-jitsuan can deliver that death even will result; but these he will never make use of except it be when his own life is in danger. No doubt it will be scoffingly said that a blow given with the edge of the hand cannot be so heavy or disastrous in its effects as one dealt with the full strength of the arm with all the weight of the body behind it. Precisely, but the pugilist knows himself that is not the force of his pile-drivers which knock a man out, it is those blows which land on a vulnerable spot, and those blows need not be with all the strength and weight of the body behind them.

Great Force not Necessary.

Fitzsimmons and Tommy Ryan were credited with being able to put a man out with a blow to the chin—an upper-cut—wherein the fist did not travel six inches. The same with Tommy Burns and his formidable left and right hooks to the jaw, and Battling Nelson's liver blows, or Dixon's kidney punches. Their real efficacy lies not in the tremendous force wherewith they are delivered—it is obvious there cannot be very heavy weight in pounds represented by an object that has travelled but six inches, and behind which there cannot be applied the full propelling power of the striker's weight and strength—but in the fact that the impact of the blow is received by a part of the human body peculiarly sensitive to a shock, in other words that the blow reaches one of the vulnerable spots of the anatomy. Thus is it demonstrated that sheer force has little to do with such knocking-out of the recipient of the punch. A master of ju-jitsu would guarantee to knock out any ordinary individual, i.e., one not hardened by ju-jitsu methods, by a six-inch drive to the solar plexus made with the tips of his extended fingers. It may be startling, but true, and the explanation is of the simplest. The really vulnerable spot covers but an inconsiderable area, and the necessary blow to cause the physical shock can really be more usefully delivered with the pointed hand, no part of the force of the blow falling and being wasted upon the tissue lying around the vulnerable point. Let any reader try it on himself if he needs convincing—as he probably will.

Some Destructive Blows.

By very frequent practice, the process lasting over many months, the ju-jitsuan acquires a hardness and toughness of his hands' edges that is wonderful. The tapping or striking on a wooden bench, rail, etc., in time converts these parts into something almost approaching stone in its hardness, and he can strike a blow sufficiently hard to break a stout stick without hurting in the slightest. Imagine that terribly hard edge applied to the body! What holds good with the solar plexus drive applies equally well to all other vulnerable spots. For the reason quoted above, a hard-edge-of-the-hand blow over the heart, the liver, underneath the ribs, or over the kidneys, is equally as destructive, as painful and weakening, as any blow with the clenched fist; more when the hand has become so powerful, as it will in time, to enable its owner to break an arm or leg-bone by a single chopping stroke delivered as a clever hatchet-holder strikes a length of wood, in an oblique direction to the course of the bone. The same with the upper-cut and point-of-the-jaw blow.

Besides being able to use these blows the ju-jitsuan can put an opponent out by a blow on the throat, squarely across the Adam's apple, given either with the hand or flat of the wrist, an edge of the hand blow over the jugular, midway between jaw and collar-bone (infinitely more effective than a punch in the same place), slant-wise across the temple, horiontally above the ear and across the base of the skull. But these last blows, together with the blow across the base of the spine, are liable to be so serious in their consequences that the ju-jitsuan would not employ them save in the direst circumstances. But there are other blows he can use, blows to win a knock-out, about the head and neck, where are vulnerable parts unknown to the boxer, which he can make less effective use of because of the wide surface of his hitting medium, but easily accessible to the ju-jitsuan's hand edge.

The real point, however, is that the great majority of these knock-out blows have been known to the Samurai of Japan—the inventors of ju-jitsu—for at least twenty centuries, whereas the Western nations, partial to fighting with the fists, have only stumbled on the existence of the vulnerable parts of the human anatomy quite by accident. Curious it is that La Blanche, for instance, should have hit upon, accidentally, a blow similar to one known to the Japanese fighting men of 500 years before the Christian era; and that George Dixon, where when he disabled men by his great kidney punch, was but using a means hallowed by centuries of antiquity. What vulnerable parts do exist it is quite certain the Jap has discovered, and any boxer who desires the benefit and honour accruing from the discovery of a new knock-out punch should make himself acquainted with ju-jitsu, and see if it be possible for him to turn to account Japanese blow which will win him championships, and kudos, and money galore.

"Once for all, madam," thundered counsel, in that Court in which the incompatible are put asunder, "do you flatly deny ever having committed adultery?"

"I do—other than with my husband," replied the respondent, with much precision, while three of the learned judge's front teeth fell out.

Diner: "Gaasong! Donnee mwaa ung chattobriang avec petty pwah——" (And much more a deal worse.)

Diner: "Oh, it's a treat for them to hear a little French occasionally!"

The gentleman from the country was busy cultivating a taste for art, so he subsidized the attendant to walk round the gallery with him and help him to supply the deficiencies in his artistic education in the minimum amount of time. "An' that?" asked he, pointing to the group in bronze of the wolf suckling Romulus and Remus. "That?" and the attendant pondered. "That? Romeo an' Juliet." "Romeo an' Juliet? What's the dog's name?"

One of the best plain cooks that Playfair has ever known left Half Moon Street on account of the old early Victorian stone staircase at No.——.

"They don't suit my haricot veins," he said.

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday afternoon the 29th July 1909.

PRESENT:—Vice-President.—Colonel T. J. O'Donnel, R.A.M.C., Major T. H. Goodwin, R.A.M.C.

Members.—Mr. A. Anderson, Major A. M. Anscomb, Mr. A. D. Marker, K.S., Mr. A. D. McDonough, Lala Mulraj, Mrs. A. Waterfield.

Honorary Secretary.—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

Read letter dated the 28th July 1909, from Mr. G. H. Frost, expressing regret at his inability to attend the meeting.

Read list of donations made to the Museum during the month of which the most important were :—

An egg of the European Bee-Eater obtained at Baleli by Mr. J. W. N. Cumming, on 24th June 1909.

An Allied Grey Shrike from Hirok presented by Mr. T. Clear.

A Lizard (Agama caucasica, Eichw.) from Ziarat presented by Mr. B. H. Ford.

Several Afghan Jerboas from Quetta obtained by purchase.

Several specimens of fresh Water Crabs (Male and Female) with eggs, from Quetta, presented by Mr. W. R. S. Porter.

Read letter dated the 9th July from Mrs. Waterfield, thanking the Society for electing her a member.

The Honorary Secretary next passed round for the information of the Members—

(1) Part LXXVIII. by Colonel C. Swinhoe of "Lepidoptera Indica," received from the Government of India, Home Department.

(2) A note by Mr. W. R. S. Porter on the breeding of fresh Water Crabs in Quetta.

(3) A painting by Mr. A. D. McDonough of the Dormouse found by Master Stranack at the Brewery, Quetta.

Read letter dated the 28th July 1909, from Major F. C. Webb-Ware, C.I.E., and an extract from a letter of the same date from Mr. G. H. Frost, regarding the Quetta Cicada. The Honorary Secretary remarked that on the 3rd July, he found a pupa crawling on the ground and that the flying insect emerged in an hour's time. He also remarked that all the flying insects in the station had disappeared by about the 10th of the month.

Read letter dated the 16th July 1909, from Captain A. D. G. Ramsay to the Hon'ble the Agent to the Governor-General suggesting that Bee-keeping be tried as an experiment in Baluchistan, also a note by the Honorary Secretary to the effect that though no honey bees had so far been found in Quetta, he did not see why they should not thrive if imported. He added that honey was procurable in parts of the Chagai District. Mr. Porter remarked that honey was also to be found in Hindubagh and the Khojak and that Mr. H. R. C. Dobbs, the Officiating Revenue Commisioner, was in correspondence with him with a view to experimenting with Bee-keeping in Quetta. The Members were of opinion that they knew of no reason why the experiment should not prove a success.

There being no further business Colonel O'Donnell closed the meeting with a few remarks in which he expressed regret at the absence of the Hon'ble Colonel Sir Henry McMahon, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., on leave, and thanked Mr. McDonough for his beautiful painting of the Dormouse.

J. W. N. CUMMING,

Honorary Secretary.

Dated 20th July 1909.

DEAR MR. CUMMING,

Your interesting note on the subject of the Cicada which recently appeared in such numbers in Quetta. I have been connected with Quetta now for nearly 20 years but I certainly do not recollect the swarms or in fact any but isolated insects of this species. There is a small type of this same insect which is common to Baluchistan and is usually to be found where fairly long grass grows. For instance, I have frequently seen it at Pishin. The pupa in, I think, the larger number of cases emerges in its pupa covering from the ground and climbs on to a branch of the nearest tree. You will always find their holes below trees or bushes. The pupa then suns itself for a short period and emerges from its covering which splits open down the back. After sunning itself for some little time the fully developed insect dries and then can take to flight The noise they make is due to the rapid vibration of a membrane which is situated on either side of where the body and extremity join. They emit three or four notes and I dare say you noticed that the Cicada on one tree always emit the same note. The most interesting fact to ascertain is why it is that these insects should have appeared in such numbers this year, also their method of propagating their species, etc. In Australia you obtain various kinds of the same but they run to 1½ to 2 inches long and have the most brilliant colouring, gold being common. In Seistan the Cicada—a small black type—used to give us considerable trouble by appearing uninvited at dinner.

Yours sincerely,

F. C. WEBB-WARE.

DEAR SIR,

* * * * *

I notice the black ants are carrying the eggs of the Cicada away and should therefore be the means of a great reduction in the number that comes to the larval stage.

INSECT USES AND BELIEFS.

EVERYBODY knows that the locust is looked upon as a toothsome tit-bit, in more countries than one—that the Mahomedan likes him best in a curry, and the Arab fried or fricasseed. The locust is eaten in Greece and considered a dainty. It sounds very unlikely—that "dainty!" but I have really come across people, even in India, who have tasted them, and they have declared that the word is not misplaced. Hottentots not only eat the insect itself, but they make a kind of "delicious" brown soup of the eggs of the creature, and look upon this as a particular treat. So much for the useful side of what really is a most destructive creature to plant life—greedily destructive—for they spare nothing not even the bark of fruit trees. As well then that it has a useful side. But there is still another view to be had of the locust. In "olden time" they were looked upon as a scourge of God of course, but among Orientals this is still a belief and the Arabs in particular consider them a kind of "avenging host of the Deity. An Arab will tell you that the locust carries on his wings this statement in best Arabic to be found in the markings. In spite of the symbol, however, he enjoys him fricaseed! the better for it may be! But even in some European countries there is a belief that when a locust is seven years old, he bears on his back a letter of the Alphabet not very clearly defined perhaps, but readable, nevertheless, and if this should bear any resemblance to the letter W it foretells war. So the locust is a prophet as well as a dainty and a scourge. There is a tribe in Ethiopia called "The eaters of Locusts" (Acridophaga) so they must be quite specialists at devouring them.

The Bee was believed by the ancients to be very closely connected with the human soul. And in Wales, once upon a time, there was a superstition that the bees left Paradise when Adam and Eve were driven forth; only unlike their human companions, they left with the blessing of God on them, and so wax came to be considered a very right and proper adjunct to the celebration of Mass. The people of Ceylon eat the bee itself—not merely the wax and honey. The native of India—some parts of India at any rate—has it, that if a bee stings you (or a hornet or a wasp) and is not killed there and then, the pain inflicted will be far more severe than if the insect be done for forthwith—it will last much longer too—and the throbs and pricks you feel will correspond exactly to the fluttering of the creatures' wings! for a certain number of hours afterwards.

So long ago as the fifteenth century the Spaniards believed that spiders found anywhere in abundance were an indication of a valuable mineral. The natives of New Caledonia are partial to a large kind of spider—about an inch long, with hairy legs—which they like best roasted! It is said that there have been a few instances of Europeans being tempted to take this particular rare bit, but it is hard to believe! Once on a time there were supposed to be no spiders at all in Ireland—why I wonder? and it is even now believed no spider will make its web in a cedar tree, nor a cedar roof. The scientist Luewenhock calculated that a hundred threads of a full-grown spider's web laid side by side, did not equal the diameter of a hair from his own beard! and that supposing the hair to be of a round form, ten thousand threads of a spider's web put together, would scarcely equal it in thickness. Nothing extraordinary about the thickness of that particular hair I suppose, or that would have been put on record too. It was once worked out too, that a bunch of spider webs as big as a buckshot if disentangled and smoothed out, would measure distance of 350 miles! A spider is usually believed to bring good luck, but I believe in Germany this depends on the direction he takes. If he comes down towards you from above, he brings good luck, but quite the reverse if he rises towards you. In Britanny they say, that if you wear a spider as a charm, hanging round your neck, it will cure you of fever, but the spider must be shut up in a nutshell.

A grasshopper is not a pleasant thing, but the Germans think he foretells the coming of stranger guests by his appearance at close quarters. And the Chinese firmly believe that the souls of poets and musicians pass into grasshoppers, and this because they have an idea that the grasshopper, once it begins, will sing till it forgets all else and starves to death.

Ants are supposed to be particularly hard at work when bad weather is coming. They have their eggs and stores to get out of harm's way, and the busy little bodies lose no time in saving their treasures. Talking of—writing I should say—ants' eggs, by the way, there are lands where they are believed to be an antidote to love! I should like to know the experiences of such an experience!

If the ordinary black ants are led to the covered way of the white ants houses, they will soon rid you of the latter pest. A train of syrup or sugar will soon lead them to it, but of course a black ant's nest must be found first. Then see the excitement when their scouts bring in the news of the termites at the other end, and they march out to do battle with their enemies. Not only do they kill the white ants, but they eat and enjoy them too. But more than ants eat the termite. In the West Indies and in Africa the natives relish them, nice juicy morsels they ought to be! and the Hottentots delight in them either cooked or raw, and ask nothing better.

But to return to the black ant for a moment. The Jews have an olden time legend regarding the ant, and wise King Solomon. The Jews, and even the Mahomedans, believe that Solomon in all his great wisdom, even understood and could converse with each and all of God's creatures. Well, he is said to have been riding out one day with a great following in his train and his way lay right over and across an anthill, and then Solomon, who headed the line, heard one of the tiny creatures say, "They say this is the great wise king, who knows everything and is kind and merciful, generous and just, or so his flatterers tell him. But now he and his people are going to ride over us, and crush and destroy us, without caring at all for our sufferings." Solomon understood and commanded his followers to spare that anthill, and all others that might fall in their paths, and his courtiers marvelled greatly at the strange ways of their king, but Solomon explained "It is the duty of wisdom to heed and learn from the lowliest and weakest as well as from the great and strong."

But worse, far worse than eating any of the insects I have mentioned is the idea of eating a bug! just the awful terrible "B flat." And yet I've heard a native of India declare that one taken at bed time wrapped up in a beetle nut leaf (pân) will cure a cough. It was quite seriously recommended to me for mine! but needless to say I infinitely preferred the cough.

HE was walking along the front at Margate, when a sudden gust removed him of his straw hat. He turned, gave chase, and, after a lengthy run at full speed, pounced upon it. At the same moment a stranger (also perspiring and almost breathless) took it from him and thanked him kindly.

"But it's my hat," said he.

"No,' said the other, "yours is hanging down your back on a string."

THE new girl had been but three weeks in the employment of an artistic family, but her time had evidently not been spent exclusively in studying the domestic arts. As her mistress was giving her instructions as to the dinner, she said: "Marie, don't forget the potatoes." "No, madame,' was the reply, "will you have them in their jackets or in the nude?"

OLD BULLION: "What! You wish to marry my daughter! She is a mere schoolgirl yet."

Suitor: "Yes, sir. I came early to avoid the rush."

GOODFELLOW: "I'm sorry to say my wife has an aggravating habit of interrupting me in the middle of a sentence."

SINNS: "Humph! You are fortunate to be able to get so far."

A STORY arising out of the death of "Garry" Moore was of "Old Brer Rabbit," when the Fifth Lancers were quartered in Ireland, and there was a race meeting at the Curragh. "Garry" was running a horse, but no one could find out anything about it, and so were afraid to bet. "Brer, not liking to be seen taking too many sodas and whiskey in one place, went down the course and had one somewhere else. He noticed "Garry" do the same, and then saw him give it to the mare. On this, away he went to the ring and backed her for all he could get on, and she won in good style. Everyone wanted to know how he had found it out, and he described what he had seen, adding: "I knew Garry' wouldn't waste a pint of whiskey on a mare that was not trying."

THE DONCASTER ST. LEGER.

MINORU did not after all capture the "triple crown" for King Edward by adding the Doncaster St. Leger to his other classic victories of this season. To the great disappointment of nearly everybody who assembled on the famous Town Moor at Doncaster on 8th September to give King Edward a hearty Yorkshire cheer, the Two Thousand Guineas and Derby winner cut an inglorious figure.

Not only was the bearer of the Royal colours badly beaten by Mr. Fairie's Bayardo, but Lord Carnavon's Valens and Mr. W. Astor's Mirador were also too good for him. It was the tamest and dullest St. Leger since Mr. L. de Rothschild's Doricles defeated the late Mr. W. C. Whitney's Volodyovski eight years ago. Not a sound was heard as the Manton colt with the American Jockey D. Maher on his back passed the post an easy winner. There is not the slightest reason why Bayardo's victory should be unpopular. Yet unpopular it seemed to be, for not only was the great and boasted "Yorkshire roar" missing, but there was no applause at all, and a painfully chilly reception to the winner when he came into the paddock, and this in face of the fact that Bayardo was favourite.

It was probably that the vast assembly was so disappointed at the failure of the Royal colours that they forgot their natural admiration for a good horse, and there is no doubt that Bayardo at his best is a great horse. It is equally certain that he was unlucky to be beaten in any of the classic events, and but for the trouble Alec Taylor had with him over his feet, he would probably never have known defeat. He was not in the least distressed after his race, and that he suffered no ill effects was proved by the easy manner he won the Doncaster Stakes two days later.

His owner, Mr. Fairie, is a well-known man in the city, and has an enormous income derived from shares in Australian mines. He is a big speculator on the turf, and is reported to have won a fortune over the St. Leger, but the amount even now is small compared with what he would have been netted had Bayardo won the Derby.

After the defeat of his stable companion Lemberg who was thought to be the champion two-year-old of the season in the Champagne Stakes on the day before the St. Leger a strong opposition set in against Bayardo, and this was sustained to such an extent that he went out to 11 to 10 before the start for the classic. From the time the market settled down his quotations in the most reliable quarters were evens, 11 to 10 against, evens, 6 to 5 on, and 11 to 10 on, what time Minoru was wavering between 9 to 4 and 7 to 4. Beyond this pair, though there were only seven runners in all, 100 to 8 was procurable, this price being accepted about Valens, who had made a respectable show in the Derby, only to fail to get a place, as it seemed for want of stamina. Stamina, by the way, was the main question of this race as between Bayardo and Minoru. The former was the pick of his breeding, and in all his races since Epsom, he had shown himself a better and still a better horse.

The competitors were very orderly at the start, and they were got despatched nicely by Mr. Willoughby. The American owned Mirador went off for all he was worth and set an excellent pace. The first and second favourites kept in very close to the rails, one evidently waiting on the other, and neither jockey being satisfied that his mount could stay, although both horses had accomplished the distance in private trials. Jones, on the King's horse, carried his caution to almost too great a length, and at one time looked like being shut in. After passing the Red House he pulled back into last place, and kept on nursing his mount in the hope of finding an opening on the rails. No doubt the opening would have been found had Minoru possessed any chance of winning. More than half a mile from home he was in hopeless difficulties, and it was very evident that the reports as to his improved stamina which had been so assidiously circulated of late by the Newmarket horse watchers were terribly exaggerated, to say the least. Valens took up the lead below the distance but he is admittedly a miler at the most, and with Mirador possessed of no speed at all, the task given the favourite was easier than even anybody connected with him could have expected. Bayardo passed the post an easy winner, with his jockey standing up in the stirrups.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Monsoon Season of 1909 was a distinct improvement on former years, and provided a large amount of sport and enjoyment for all who participated in it, even the unfortunate sportsmen who did not succeed in spotting the winner so often as they could have wished, but had the pleasure of seeing some excellent contests. For this the handicapping deserves much credit and the work has been most admirably done first by Mr. Griffiths and then by Mr. Kindersley though there have, of course, been one or two glaring errors and here and there an owner is found to complain that he can never get weight off his horse however much he runs them out! However mistakes must occur as long as horses are horses and men are men, and provided they are not too frequent, it is a thankless task to grumble. The arrangements for the comfort and convenience of horses, jockeys, owners, trainers the general public and any other division of the racing world, have been improved almost out of knowledge, by the able efforts of Captain Hughes and his assistant Mr. Lance. We have dealt in these columns fully with each little item in its turn, the improved courses, the new type hurdles, the starting gates, and proper winning posts on the hurdle course, white railings, hose box for horses, the new and orderly arrangements in the paddock, comforts in the dressing rooms and the hundred and one other little matters which just make all the difference, but it is more difficult to do justice to the Acting Secretary's never failing tact and readiness to do all in his power to assist the members of the racing community in every way, and we can only say that he will carry away with him from Calcutta the gratitude and best wishes of every member of the racing world here from top to bottom. His few months tenure of office will have given racing in Calcutta, a fillip of which it will feel the effects for some time to come.

The figures which we append speak for themselves and do not require any comment. In accordance with our usual custom we only include in our totals of winnings amounts for races won and ignore all place money. A satisfactory feature is that the money has been very evenly divided instead of, as in former years, one or two owners standing out with the largest share of the loaves and fish and the others dividing between them a few poor crumbs. In the riding Mr. Evers stands out a long way from both G.R's and professionals with nine wins to his credit, Murdison and Butters coming next with six each, but Murdison has by no means had the best of luck as he has eight times run second, and on several occasions by the shortest of short heads. Piper heads the lists both of winning trainers as, in addition to his own useful pair, Cyril and Blix, he has also had Mr. W. Griffiths' excellent string in his hands. Bloss has done very well with a stable of three, Colina, Morsel and Too Late, as he has got two wins out of each of the former and it was nothing but the hardest of hard luck that he did not get at least one with Too Late. Colina ran a real bad mare on the last day of the meetings, and was thereupon, we learn, sold to Mr. Kindersley at a very modest figure.

There will probably be two Gymkhana meetings on 7th and 21st November, but except for these racing in Calcutta is dead till we begin the cold weather season with the first extra on 28th November. Appended are statistics:—

Saturday afternoon saw this season's Monsoon Meetings brought to an end with a very interesting and highly upsetting day's sport. The rain had been pretty incessant during the early part of the week but held off on Friday and Saturday with the result that though a little bit sticky in parts the going was very fair, if not quite so fast as in the two previous weeks.

Except in the Small Pony Race fields were not too bad for the last day of the season and with money forthcoming for nearly everything that started there was wide betting in each race, in the majority of which absolute outsiders got home, and the books must have had reaped a golden harvest.

Of the seven races on the card, the Dwarf Handicap was first set down, and early backers were much upset to find that Pantomine, who had been made a hot favourite before the race and had been taken in all the doubles and treble events was not declared to start though he was down on the ground. No one, however, can blame the owner, who could find no one to offer a better price than 2 to 1 on, and it was certainly not good enough to back at that figure, and hardly worth his while to run the animal and risk losing his maiden for a stake of Rs. 750. With Pantomine out of the way most people thought the race a certainty for Smallman's stable, either fangerine or Grey Lady. A big run, however, came for Gipsy at the finish and he was installed second favourite. Firelock, one of the small ponies imported by the late Mr. Lamotte and purchased by Mr. Corbett, had his first run in public, and did not seem to like it much. His waywardness caused a long delay at the gate, and when eventually they got off he was pretty badly left. Gipsy took the lead from the start but Tangerine caught her at 3 furlongs and after that the race was never in doubt, and he won comfortably by three lengths from his stable companion Grey Lady.

For the Fifth Amateur Hurdle Race, Division II, Mr. Billikin was a strong favourite with Lord Chester and Marconi well backed. Marconi led with the whole field in a bunch behind him for four flights but then Merman and Mr. Billikin went to the front and though the favourite just got ahead at the last hurdle, Merman had passed him in the run home and Captain Stewart scored a well deserved victory by three-quarters of a length.

For the Durga Plate, Division II, Wake Up, Scramble, Downland, Lasso and Mulison were all well-backed at fours, fives and sixes, the last named who opened at twelves receiving very large amount of support. Wake Up ran sore and never showed up in the race. Shakespeare made all the pace with Downland next some lengths away, then Mulison, Nettie R and Scramble in a bunch. At the turn they closed up and Downland passed Shakespeare and won in good style by a length and a half.

For the Fifth Amateur Hurdle Race, Division I, Highland Fling and Dalgai divided the public fancy with Maisonette next in demand. Electric Light, Queen of Hearts, Dalgai and Highland Fling were fighting it out the whole way round. Coming to the last hurdle flight, however, Dalgai was beaten and Highland Fling and Electric Light went on with Queen of Hearts lying next. After they had passed the hurdle Highland Fling drew right away from the others and won by four lengths, Queen of Hearts who had put in a great run finishing second.

Of the nine starters in the Mooltan Plate, Albatross and Moira were alternately most fancied, the former finishing up strongest favourite at 2 to 1. Mr. Thaddeus' new pony Guide was first in the lead and though Albatross gradually wore him down coming along the straight, winning eventually by half a length, it was a capital performance for a beginner, and we expect to see Guide give his owner his first win before very long. Moira proved a great disappointment as she never got on terms with the leaders and finished up fifth.

The Durga Plate, Division I, proved another big upset. Haloya was favourite with Foy, Colina and Cyril all well backed, but Harene, who had been neglected by the punters and was not fancied by her stable, established such a lead in the first furlong that though hotly challenged by Haloya he could not catch the tiring mare who was able just to stick it out and win by a neck.

The afternoon finished with the Fourth Horse Selling Race for which again a large proportion of the field were well-backed, Pressy being more fancied than Clipper. Once more a bolt from the blue upset things. Blix, despite the heavy weight of 10-1 went straight out to the front and, though Pressy made her gallop for the last 3 furlongs, she was never caught and finished by winning by half a length to the great surprise of her owner, and trainer whose modest investment we believe consisted of a Totalisator ticket. There was somewhat brisk bidding for the mare, who was eventually knocked down for Rs. 1,150 to Messrs. M. I. and M. M. Huck, the purchasers of Downland out of last week's Selling Race.

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—The second day of the Poona Closed Meeting came off on Wednesday, when the racing in general was not up to that of the first day, and punters again had a poor time of it. There were seven races, and in the majority fields were not large. Killorn was in much request, and perhaps some reversals of form may be put down to his superior handling. He brought off a double for Mr. Morison with Young Lomond, and passed the post first on Raffles, but was disqualified for crossing Nagashi at the start. Another professional in Evans won the Selling Plate.

On previous running Nagashi was confidently backed for the Novice Handicap though Killorn's name figuring at Raffles' number got him support despite his meeting the favourite at scarcely sufficient difference of weight to justify it. They made no mistake in this, however, as he was out in front all the way. Nagashi only came late after a bad start and, as mentioned, got the race on an objection.

Lady Sentinel caused an upset in the three furlongs Open Polo Plate, coming away from Robin fairly comfortably after running neck and neck down the straight in front of the hot favourite, Chinook. Miss Betty was a fair fourth after coming all the way round her field.

Four faced the starter for the Arab Pony Plate, Nettle and Young Lomond being in most demand, though on Nettle beating the other at worse terms last time it looked good for the bay. He, however, got a bad start and in any case would have had no chance with Young Lomond, who slipped the others when it came to racing and had Nettle well set.

Chassepot was backed as if all was over in the Sandown Park Plate, over the R.C. and Distance, Yuba and Steam Whistle expanding as questionable stayers. The latter of these proved herself merely a sprinter, being out of it half a mile from home. Countenance made the pace fifteen lengths in front and being only caught after a mile and then finishing fourth, one wonders what would have happened had she been kept more in hand. Xerxena was given a chance but rushed through the gate and after getting Ott caught in it bolted. Chassepot took the lead half a mile from home, but Yuba was then handy and came up to beat the favourite badly down the straight, Umutbee next.

Rufus was made a better favourite than Raffles for the half mile, but the winner cropped up in Prince Chestnut, who was first out followed by Express and Raffles. Rufus came fairly strong at the finish but could not alter the positions of the first three.

In the mile four went out and Young Lomond again had Killorn's services in an open betting race with Arabistan and The Munshi in fair demand. Young Lomond led The Munshi and Gannet slightly and when they came to the bend had them both beaten. Here Arabistan came up, but could do very little to the leader, Young Lomond again winning without being really asked.

There were only four again for the Open Welter Selling Plate, with Meerdhan at once installed favourite from Mazi and Assi. The favourite was first away from Assi and Peewit. He held Assi fairly safe, the latter swerving, but Evans rode a capital waiting race on Mazi and just at the right moment called on him and won a pretty race. He was bought in for Rs. 900, Meerdhan went to H.H. of Idar for Rs. 1,400 and Assi to Mr. J. M. Mistry for Rs. 650.

The second part of the Poona Big Meeting opened with Governor's Cup day and past experiences prepared us in a way for some bad upsets. His Excellency owing to his recent bereavements, was not present, but the enclosures were packed to a very uncomfortable extent. Once more there were some remarkably fine finishes and the class out was naturally of the best.

We first had to discuss the Lawn Plate, in which a preference for Salanic over his stable companion Scimitar made him a hot favourite from Vedas. The race can be very simply described as, after Vedas had made the running, Salanic caught and passed him anyhow, Mumbra rather unexpectedly finishing third.

It was disappointing to see Soultline left out of the Ganeshkhind Plate and no support came for the other, Lord Carlyon. Tangaroa was at once installed a fairly warm favourite, but later a deal of money came for Picturesque. Bucolic kept up his reputation by being badly left, Lord Merv leading out from the other two mentioned. When they entered the straight Tangaroa had taken the lead, but on reaching the distance, Picturesque caught him and won with a good bit in hand in the remarkably fine time of 1min. 14⅘secs.

Eighteen were lined up across the course at the gate for the Governor's Cup. Sialkote, who put up a great gallop and on it was bought by Messrs. R. R. S. and Beg, being favourite from Jehangir and Merrily. After Famous and then Brigand had led a closely packed field, Antica came into the lead at the first bend, Jehangir, Alma and Brigand next. He kept there right away to the half mile, where Alma, Mooreed, Jehangir and Colaba were close up in advance of a big bunch. The favourite, Merrily and Second Thoughts joined them at the bend, the first two of these having to put up with a deal of buffeting and the third having to go right outside to avoid it. Alma went a bit wide and Jehangir on the rails and Sialkote were level with him at the distance. Merrily joined in here outside Balmoral, but all looked well for Sialkote till Balmoral put in a run and recorded another outsider's win. Second Thoughts swerving under the Judge's box gave third place to Merrily.

After her run in the Aga Khan Cup, Wise Bird was a firm favourite for the Western India Stakes, no very great confidence being placed in Wandin, but support coming from the right quarter for Fizz. To begin with, Pelargonium was badly left and Wandin away none too well, Sacricomar leading Wise Bird, Ebullition and Lovania. The only change for some time was that on passing the five-furlong post, Fizz drew up into fourth place. Ebullition fell back on reaching the home turn, where Lovania and Fizz came up outside. All three soon passed Sacricomar and Wise Bird was leading well when Fizz drew on her and, going away nearing the post, won with plenty to spare. This introduces yet another who will be seriously considered for the Viceroy's Cup.

The best race of the day was that for 14-2's the Colonial Plate of a mile. Known to be an improved stayer after her seven-furlong win in Bombay, Russley Rose was made a hot favourite from Refresher and Wild Boy. Tete-a-Tete jumped out in front and soon established a substantial lead from Lady Nannie and Russley Rose, Refresher last, but neverthless not far behind. Lady Nannie gave way after the half mile and Refresher drew up into third place with Wild Boy. Turning for home Russley Rose with Refresher outside drew on the leader and first Ames and then Southall respectively were under the whip. A furlong from home they were a fraction in front of Tete-a-Tete, on whom Melsom got to work and came again, but in a last desperate effort Russley Rose got there by a head, the other two dead heating and Wild Boy on the rails very close up. They ran the mile in 1min. 46secs.

Finally the Lanowli Plate with Spearmint slight favourite from Bendigo and Pinkie. The last got none too good a start and none too good a run,

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

Lofan leading Rubdan for a furlong when this order changed, Spearmint and Bendigo next: Lofan falling back Humayoon drew up second, Urgent fifth. At the entrance to the straight all looked very good for Spearmint, but Whalley had Urgent nicely in hand and in the last furlong upset the pot, Hundred coming late and beating Humayoon for a place.

Fuller details are to hand by the last mail of the St. Leger, the result of which appeared in our Special Telegram of the 9th instant. Great interest was taken in the meeting of Minoru and Bayardo. The race is always a big attraction to sport-lovers of the North, but on the present occasion the meeting of the two cracks mentioned made it additionally exciting, and a great crowd assembled upon the Town Moor. The race provided a big disappointment for those who championed the cause of the King's representative, for Minoru ran badly throughout, and not at any part of the race did the son of Cyllene possess a winning chance. This was not his true form, and probably the colt was feeling the effects of being in training since the beginning of the season. Carrousel made most of the running, with Valens and Bayardo handy, but when at the distance Maher let the Manton crack out, the race was all over. The favourite went on to win easily by a length and a half from Valens, with the moderate Mirador keeping Minoru from securing third place. The victory was well received, although keen disappointment was felt at the poor display given by Minoru. Bayardo was the champion two-year-old, and he has now reasserted his position, although the friends of Minoru may justly claim that he did not show his right form in the Leger. Bayardo was unlucky in the Derby, and was greatly hampered when Sir Martin fell.

We have to thank the publishers for a copy of Vol. XXVIII of the Australian Racing Chronicle. This useful compilation contains much valuable information and full details of Australian racing from 1st February to 31st July 1909.

The Civil Service Week at Naini Tal this year has been as enjoyable as of yore. A fancy dress dance at the Metropole was largely attended on the 20th instant and the next day there was a garden party at Government House, a fancy dress ball at the Royal Hotel and a private dance at the Chalet given by the Wanderers' polo team. The Civil Service fancy dress ball was abandoned owing to the death of Mr. Radice. Turning to the sporting contests of the week: the Civil Service won the hockey, beating the Gymkhana by 9 goals to 6. Time was called with the score 6 all, but in the extra play the Civilians put on 3 goals. Moore (5) and McWatters (4) were responsible for the winners' score, while Powell registered 5 goals for the Gymkhana. The cricket match extended over three days and ended in a draw. Its principal feature was the century scored by Gannon in the "World's" second innings. The Civil Service won the Tennis Doubles, their representatives, Messrs. Drake Brockman and Ireland defeating the P.W.D. couple, Messrs. Dillon and Humfries, by three sets to one. The Tennis Singles was won by Dillon (P.W.D.) who beat Ireland (I.C.S.) by 3 sets to love. At Golf the Gymkhana beat the Civil Service in the Singles but lost the Doubles. The representative Fours and Pairs at the regatta were won by the Police and the polo by the Wanderers. In the polo semi-finals the 17th Cavalry Subalterns beat the Civil Service "A" team by 7 goals to 5, and the "Wanderers" beat the Three Fourths by 7 goals to 5. The final was played on the 24th instant, the Wanderers defeating the 17th Cavalry Subalterns by 7 goals to 4. The Civil Service Dinner and Billiard matches brought the Week to a close on Saturday last.

Local dog fanciers will be interested to learn that Mr. Horace Johnstone, a member of the English Kennel Club, is on his way out to settle in Calcutta. His especial breed is the Airedale Terrier, but he has a very good general knowledge of dogs and should be in demand as a judge at the various Indian shows.

The third Simla Championship Dog Show was held at Ravenswood last Saturday and was attended with the usual success. Arrangements were excellent, entries larger than at either of the previous exhibitions and the quality of a very high standard. Major M. Williamson judged all classes. We hope to give our readers a detailed report next week, meanwhile we append a list of the Special awards:—

Viceroy's Prize for Best Dog—Mrs. Miller's Airedale Imperialist.

Commander-in-Chief's prize for Best Dog of the sex opposite to number one—Mrs. Holdich's Pekinese Girl.

Messrs. Hamilton's prize for Best Dog bred in India—Mr. L. Jacob's fox-terrier, Jo Hukm.

Messrs. Thacker, Spink's prize, for Best Brace of Terriers—Mr. L. Jacob's Billie Burke and Jo Hukm.

Messrs. Plomer's prize for Best Brace other than Terriers—Col. Dawson's Cockers, Rock Heir and Rock Gipsy.

Maharaja of Jhind's prize for Best Puppy bred in India—Miss. Hildesley's Dachshund, Hans of Appin.

Mr. W. H. Wood's prizes for Best and Second Best Dog owned in Simla—Miss Wapshare's Dachshund, Maidie, Mr. Bean's Honest Injun.

I. K. A. prizes for Best Terrier in the Show—Mr. Jacob's Jo Hukm; for best sporting dog—Col. Dawson's Rock Heir; for Best Non-sporting Dog—Capt. Aspinall's Bull puppy Simla Suffragette.

C. K. C. prize—Mr. Jacob's Jo Hukm.

The latest of the series of "Studies in the Zoological Gardens" appearing in the Times deals with crocodiles. One of the reasons given by old writers for the crocodile being worshipped in Egypt was the somewhat cryptic one that it "laid three score eggs and lived for three score years;" but from 20 to 30 is the common number of eggs found in a clutch. The eggs are absurdly small, a mother 20 feet long laying an egg no larger than that of a goose; the crocodile having produced its eggs covers them up with sand and leaves the sun to do the rest with the result that they often become the prey of the ichneumon and birds. It is pointed out that until recently science was of the belief that crocodiles belonged exclusively to the old world and alligators to the new. It is now known that there are true crocodiles in America (the difference is chiefly one of the shape of the head and arrangement of the large teeth), and alligators, equally true, are found in Asia; and with the possible exception of the little musky cayman from Brazil, the Chinese alligator is the gem—if very much in the rough—of the reptile house. One of the treats of the Zoo is to hear the alligators roar. Few people know that they roar, and fewer still ever hear them; but while the crocodiles make little sound beyond the snapping of their jaws (and that can be loud enough) the American alligator bellows, with an awe-inspiring, shattering noise not unworthy to be compared to the roaring of lions or the trumpeting of elephants. In the gardens they are often silent for months together; then the need of utterance will seize one of them; and, when one begins, all join in, making the whole house to shake, the stone floors to vibrate, and the water to bubble and boil around them. It is truly said that the real honour of the members of the crocodile tribe lies in their usual noiselessness. "They swim with great silence, making scarcely even a ripple on the water." Sir Samuel Baker tells of the cunning of crocodiles which advance at an animal without any concealment and then, as if in disgust at their failure, turn and swim away, still in sight, only at last to sink below the surface and, returning without a ripple to betray them, rise immediately below the quarry, which has by this time returned to drink in fancied security. By this trick he saw them again and again catch birds which settled on branches overhanging the water. In conclusion it is remarked that when all has been said to the crocodile's credit, whether of its cunning, its voice, its ancient honours, or the adaptation of its structure to its environment, the chief characteristic of it remains its stark repulsiveness. We can well believe that the chief feeling of those who know him is repulsiveness towards the huge and loathsome monster that is so common in the banks of the more secluded river of the Sunderbands.

It appears that mountaineering in the Alps this year has not been very successful. The elements which the most intrepid climber must regard, have not been such as to favour those who strive with ice and snow on the great mountains of Central Europe. It is described as the worst season since 1860, a season of successive disappointments, always tempting you, always denying you; always exacting the hut-tramp and sometimes the tread mill on the morning snow slope; always driving you from the reward with the cursing of the awakened wind and the instant peril of the thunder; and sometimes, worst insult of all, assuming a smiling face, when you are definitely worsted, and sunning you home with the reflection that, with a little more perseverance, you would have attained many waited in vain for better conditions to prevail, for some days of continuous sunshine to bind the surface of great walls of ice to thin main structure, while still leaving them friendly, firm enough for the boot and not so hard as to need the heavy stroke of the axe. Above all steady weather was awaited, hot misty noondays and sharp bright nights giving the promise that once in that great labyrinth nature would not close her hand upon the climber, until he had regained safer latitudes. A writer thus describes being caught in a storm on Mont Blanc. "The shrieking wind beat us to our knees, sucked out our breath, shook us like naughty children, stilled an instant, and then struck us across the face with his infernal artillery, the flying scraps of ice and snow. He tore my handkerchief from my head, and whirled it high up and then down towards Italy. Rage came upon me that I should have to walk so fast. I screamed at my companion and jerked his rope. He jerked it back and went on. For an instant, no more, we halted at the Petits Mulets, and someone said a gloomy word about the time to come. Then still on, and suddenly there appeared to us a wooden post and rails, and behind it a living creature who beckoned to us; we followed him down a spiral stair and in a few moments were drinking tea in the buried observatory below the summit of Mont Blanc."

The popularity of boy scouting continues to grow in England; the recent review by General Baden-Powell of eleven thousand boy scouts at the Crystal Palace is the latest evidence of the spread of the movement. There are some who are inclined to doubt the value of the training, and it is undoubtedly a form of sport which, if permitted in excess, could harm a boy. But the truth of the statement that it is a most useful addition to the outdoor pursuits of English boyhood cannot be denied. Its greatest value will, no doubt, be found in what it does for the Board schoolboy. It has been pointed out that the Board school system of education abolishes in its subject the power of adapting themselves to the necessities of any manner of life save that of great urban communities, where the wage-earner is merely a cog or screw in a vast industrial mechanism. A small percentage play football, fewer still play cricket; the vast majority are content with watching others play, quite half the huge crowds assembling at League matches consisting of mere lads, who have often sacrificed a meal to save the coppers required at the turnstile. Whenever and wherever an exhibition of spectacular football is given, there is a gang of ill-clad boys hanging about the entrances to the ground and beseeching late arrivals to give them the price of admission. The vicissitudes of a match between hired players satisfy in some degree, no doubt, the instinct for adventure which is possessed by every healthy boy. So does the street warfare between gangs of hoolligans—the nervous excitable products of urban life which is a feature of the circumstantial under-tow of all great cities from London to Melbourne and from Paris to Buenos Ayres. But no good quality, least of all adaptability can be acquired in these ways. To such boys the discipline and both moral and physical training afforded by scouting will be of enormous benefit. If this idea of B. P.'s has the effect of removing the evils of professional football and of correcting the Board school manner he will have just cause for pride.

The Bombay Gymkhana Annual Athletic Meeting will be held this year on the 9th and 16th October, entries closing on the 30th instant.

In an article on "The Green Links of Peshawur," which appears in Blackwood's Magazine, Mr. A. H. Grant writes amusingly on the Pathan golf caddie. "When I first knew these boys," he says, "they were under the superintendence of a head groundman, universally called by them 'Uncle,' who was a mullah or clergyman in his leisure moments. But 'Uncle' died of fever, and the long, cross-eyed Jaffar Khan rules in his stead—a maypole of a man, with a most villainous countenance, but efficient withal. In the days of 'Uncle,' there was a famous caddie, whom we all called Shaitan, which means Satan, with a face like a ripe apricot, and the impudence of a street arab. He played golf really marvellously, and would doubtless have developed into a Vardon had circumstances admitted. To-day, alas! he is a bazaar-loafing Khidmatgar in the house of some commissariat sergeant. Shaitan had a younger brother, called by his parents Ata Muhammad, but tradition was too strong, and he inevitably inherited the name of Shaitan, together with a like genius for the Royal and ancient game. A year ago he, too, left us, and enlisted as a trooper in the Lancers, and when I last met him and said, 'Hallo! Shaitan, how are you?' he implored me, almost with tears, never to call him by that name of shame again, and to prevent others from so doing, as he had been so unmercifully chaffed in his regiment on this account.

"A little after this poor little Shaitan was sent with his regiment to the Mohmand war, and one day, as we listened to the guns talking on the border, a small, rosy-faced, wizened man came up to me on the links, and, clasping my feet, said, 'Sahib, I have an "arz"' (petition). 'Speak,' said I. 'What is your desire?' 'My son, whom you and the other sahibs named in jest Shaitan, has been sent to the battle, and I know he is dead. And if not, I pray your honour to summon him at once, and allow him to cut his name forthwith. For you are his father and his mother, and he has no protector but you. I explained that as a civilian I was not in a position to recall soldiers from the front, and told him that I firmly believed that Shaitan was alive and well, and that he would doubtless earn great distinction in the campaign. I am happy to say that this was, in part at least, correct, and Shaitan returned to his anxious parent safe and sound.

"Apart from the Shaitan dynasty there have been many other quaint personalities among the Peshawur caddie coterie, but none more notable than that of Bahram—naturally called Baa Lamb by the British subaltern—a strange little figure—uncouth, chinless, with head tapering like a cocoanut, and negro lips—a caricature of a Pathan—truly one of 'Shah' Shuja's mice.' But of him it may be truly said that he is not such a fool as he looks, and for sound golfing advice in a club match, with money behind, I would as lief consult my little friend with the poached-egg face as Andrew Kirkaldy himself."

In the final of the Durand Football Tournament played at Simla last Saturday, the Lancashire Fusiliers (holders of the Cup) beat the King's Liverpool Regiment by 2 goals to 1. His Excellency the Viceroy distributed the trophies. Details in our Football columns.

The final tie of the Royal Artillery Cup Football Tournament brought together the 1st and 81st Batteries, R.F.A., at Bangalore on the 18th instant. Their first meeting had ended in a draw, but in this, the second encounter, the 1st Battery won by a goal to nil.

The Mussoorie Football Tournament was concluded on the 8th instant, when the Forest College beat St. George's School in the final by 5 goals to 3.

Two important Football Tournaments were brought to a conclusion in Rangoon last week. The final in the Walter Locke Association Football Shield brought together the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and the Royal Scots Fusiliers on the 21st instant, the Welsh winning for the second year in succession by 2 goals to nil. The Burma Rugby Championship Tournament ended on Saturday last, when the Public Schools team beat the Royal Welsh Fusiliers by two tries (6 points) to nil after a splendid game.

Major Seton, I.M.S., is appealing to arouse sympathy on behalf of the members of the Giri Fishing Club. Since Colonel Baker Carr relinquished the part he took in its progress, local fishmongers have offered the Mahan State Rs. 4,000 for an annual lease, so that Major Seton's appeal is not a day too soon if the Fishing Club is to exist.

By the courtesy of Mr. E. H. Hawes, who has presented a young example, the Siamang gibbon is once more represented in the collection at the London Zoo. Only one other has been received; that was presented by Captain Stanley Flower, now director of the Giza Gardens, and lived but a few months in confinement. It was formerly believed that these gibbons were found only in Sumatra, but evidence supplied by Captain Flower showed that they were also found in the Malay Peninsula, and the new arrival came from Perak. It has generally been considered that these anthropoids need a warm house; but when Mr. Wray made his ascents of one of the lofty peaks of the peninsula he heard their cries at altitudes ranging from 6,000ft. to 7,000ft. This gibbon is entirely black; the second and third toes are united by a web as far as the last joint, and there is a large bare patch on the throat, overlying the distensible laryngeal pouch. This young animal is kept in one of the outside cages, opposite the gulls' aviary. Its small size distinguishes it at once from its companion, a hoolock, whose black fur is relieved by a white frontal band. With regard to anthropoid apes Regent's Park stands an easy first among the Zoological Gardens of Europe; for there are now exhibited three orangs, eight chimpanzees, one of which was received on 6th April 1898, and examples of five species of gibbons.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 10th September 1909.

Last week I alluded to the trouble in temperance circles occasioned by Mr. Lloyd George's wicked "small bottle of whisky" proposal, which found a place among his amendments to the licensing section of the Budget. If there are any members of the temperance brigade among your readers, they will be relieved to hear that all is calm and bright again—the odious proposal has been withdrawn, secret drinking is not for the moment to be numbered among State-aided vices. Therefore we shall not be edified by the huge teetotal demonstrations, the mass meetings and petitions, which were en train almost as soon as the abandoned proposal was published and, thank goodness, our daily papers have one mournful and unprofitable subject the less to worry to death.

We are accustomed to look for most sorts of undesirables in Parliament in these days of labour members, Socialists, and legislators of the 'orny 'anded assorted class, but surely the House has not before, at any rate within living memory, been so far disgraced as to number among its members a renegade, a man convicted of high treason and condemned to death! Arthur Lynch, who was sentenced to death for committing high treason by fighting against the British during the Boer War, and who subsequently received a free pardon, was on Friday returned unopposed as Nationalist member for West Clare, in succession to the late Mr. Halpin. An Irishman by birth, Lynch has filled many roles on the stage of life, for he has been a soldier, author, journalist, and song writer. When the Boer War broke out he went to South Africa as a newspaper correspondent, and at the request of ex-President Kruger organised the 2nd Irish Brigade (of which he became colonel) and took up arms against the British. At a by-election in 1901 Lynch was elected Nationalist M.P. for Galway. He was abroad at the time, and was therefore unable to take the oath for his seat in the House of Commons.

Scarcely had he set foot on English soil again when he was arrested on a charge of high treason. A memorable trial in January 1903, culminated in Lynch being sentenced to death. This was subsequently commuted to penal servitude for life. On his conviction the seat for Galway became, ipso facto, vacant. Lynch remained in prison for a year, being released "on license" in 1904. In July 1907 he received the King's pardon, and was restored to full civil rights, his disqualification for membership of the House of Commons being, therefore, removed.

That eccentric "Immortal" M. Pierre Loti, who has hitherto been known in England chiefly through his fascinating books, his curious social and domestic habits and his hatred of all things English, has recently been on a visit to London, although for years he has been declaring that wild horses couldn't drag him here. And what's more he has had a ripping good time and is not afraid to say so and to admit that many of his previous impressions were quite wrong. He devotes a long article in the Figaro to the beauty, the ideal order and method of London, and to the refinement of the Londoner.

"I find London is a peaceful city," he writes, "spread amid gardens with lofty trees, lawns, and lakes. . . . There seem to be flowers everywhere. The most humble balcony, the most modest window, has its basket of flowers.

"How neat and methodical everything is in the streets, in the way the traffic is handled! No quarrels; no one raises his voice. . And how discreetly the women are dressed. Nowhere do I see extravagant hats like those which make the Avenue de l'Opera look like the recreation hall of a lunatic asylum.

"It is strange indeed. I fancied that in London everything would be repulsive to me, and, on the contrary, I feel my racial dislike of the English nation gradually vanish. One only knows the English when one sees them in England." Which reads pretty well till one reflects on the "refinement of the Londoner" and the discretion of his females in the matter of dress and then one is inclined to suspect that our friend Pierre is indulging in a little pulling of the leg.

London playgoers are sorry to hear of the death at Chalons of that prolific American dramatist Mr. Clyde Fitch: "The Woman in the Case," "The Last of the Dandies," "The Climbers," "Toddles" and "The Truth" are among his many London successes. He died at the early age of forty-four after an operation for appendicitis performed a few days ago. Those who, on his occasional flying visits to London, made acquaintance with Mr. Clyde Fitch, never failed to wonder at his inexhaustible fund of humour or appreciate his abounding good nature, which was shown in many little acts of kindness towards less successful members of the dramatic art. There was a time when Mr. Clyde Fitch sported a stock such as was worn by his "Last of the Dandies," which Sir Herbert Tree produced. But when hard-won fame and fortune came to him the dramatist dispensed with this adventitious aid to the acquirement of distinction much in the same spirit as our young artists despise the "Byron" collar and the "butterfly" bow when once they have been "hung" at Burlington House. M. Edmond Rostand, we believe, is now the only prosperous author who has the courage to engirdle his neck with a stock.

Mr. and Mrs. Cosmo Hamilton's three-act comedy, "A Sense of Humour," originally produced in January 1906, at a Sunday night performance at the Comedy, has at length found its way into the regular evening bill at a West-end theatre, the Playhouse to wit. The authors write brightly and wittily; the idea upon which they found their story is ingenious, and in the drawing of their characters they display no small measure of freshness. But the comedy itself is distinctly artificial; it scarcely ever impinges on reality, while the material handled is far too scanty satisfactorily to extend over three acts. The entire action practically lies in the hands of four people—two married couples—who love and quarrel, quarrel and make it up, precisely as the spectator plainly sees from the outset they are destined to do. It is only a genius like Paganini who can achieve the difficult task of playing upon one string without creating a feeling of monotony, and in attempting the feat Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton, it must be declared, have laid themselves open occasionally to a distinct charge of wearying their listeners. Their story can be told in few words, although its development covers a considerable deal of space. Major Archibald Hay and his wife have joined forces with Sir William and Lady Hutton in the leasing of a fishing cottage on the Isle of Mull, where they have gone to spend their holiday. Sir William quickly falls a victim to the charms of Mrs. Hay, a fact that promptly comes to the knowledge of his own spouse. Luckily her sense of humour intervenes to appease the first outburst of indignation, and as the best means—best alike for the Major and herself—of straightening out matters, she persuades Hay to pretend that he and she have also fallen desperately in love with each other. Mrs. Hay, as it happens, is far too shrewd to be deceived by the stratagem, and speedily contrives to turn the tables upon her antagonist. So the game of cross-purposes goes on with varying results, the ladies turn by turn scoring a victory, until at last a conclusion satisfactory to all parties concerned is arrived at. The misfortune is that the issue is never at any moment sufficiently in doubt to arouse in the spectator any very serious feeling of apprehension. As Lady Hutton, Miss Beryl Faber repeats a performance, remarkable for its gaiety, its tenderness, and its delicate humour. Miss Auriol Lee is no less successful in the part of Mrs. Hay, her rival; while Mr. Guy Standing, who, both in appearance and manner, vividly recalls his father, Mr. Herbert Standing, acts with delightful ease and natural buoyaniy as Major Hay. Mr. Leslie Faber, also, gives an excellent account of the impulsive and quick-tempered Sir William.

Sir Arthur Pinero has returned to illicit love for his theme after resting from the seventh Commandment in "The Thunderbolt." "Mid-Channel," produced at the St. James's Theatre, is a brutal story of matrimonial unhappiness, shipwrecked lives with suicide as a finale. Theodore Blundell and Zoe, his wife, cannot agree. As Peter, their friend, explains in a little parable, there comes a time in the married life of everyone that is akin to the shoal that every passenger comes to in a journey from Folkestone to Boulogne—a period of restlessness and dissatisfaction. Once safely passed and all is well. Theodore and Zoe have come to such a stage in their married life. They wrangle about petty things; they growl and grunt at one another, and agree to part. Theodore drinks more than is good for him, and makes Mrs. Annerley, a woman of notorious character, his mistress. Zoe travels on the Continent, and in a weak moment "goes wrong" with Leonard Ferris, a very youthful admirer. Yet husband and wife continue to love each other. Zoe has "broken" with her lover on learning that she had come between him and the girl he was to marry. Theodore has paid off his mistress. But when he learns how far things have gone between his wife and Ferris he becomes adamant. Useless for her to cry that her sin is no worse than his. He insists on divorce. He insists that Ferris shall marry her. And Zoe, rather than that she shall spoil Ferris's life and the life of the girl to whom he has become engaged, solves the problem by throwing herself out of a fourth-storey window.

The play is constructed with all the author's mastery of technique. The lines have all the author's familiar cynicism, and wit, and knowledge of human nature. But it suffers from being so long drawn out. All the characters explain themselves at very great length. They are a long time coming to the point. The play also suffers from the fact that it does not contain one sympathetic character. There are strong scenes. There are good lines. There is clever characterisation. But the really dramatic situations are few, and at times the piece is only limping on its journey to the tragic end.

The acting honours were carried off by Miss Irene Vanbrugh as Zoe. A woman with a wounded soul, she gave a touching rendering of the part, if perhaps unnecessarily vixenish at times. Mr. Lyn Harding played powerfuly as Theodore, but was inclined to over-emphasise. Indeed, both he and Miss Irene Vanbrugh made so much noise over their quarrels that one was set to wonder why the police did not come in. Mr. C. M. Lowne gave one of his best character studies as Peter—a part exactly suited to his personality—Mr. Eric Maturin was sound, if a little given to mannerisms, as Ferris, and Miss Nina Sevening and Miss Kate Sergeantson, among others, gave good performances in less important roles.

"Dear Little Denmark" was put on at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Saturday. It is entirely by Mr. Paul A Reubens, who, to quote the programme, is responsible for "chatter, jingles and tunes." And this rather concisely describes the piece. What plot there is concerns Conrad Petersen (a bell founder), Christine (daughter of the Burgomaster), his sweetheart, Hans Hansen, a clock maker, who craves the lovely Christine's hand, and Ophelia (a native of Jutland), who is Hansen's sweetheart. From this situation "Dear Little Denmark" is manufactured. While Conrad Petersen (Mr. Bertram Wallis) is away in Copenhagen striving to put the Duke Von Rasmussen's chimes in order, Hans Hansen (Mr. Huntley Wright) pays fair and unfair court to Christine (Miss Isabel Jay). Of course, Conrad gets to know, and, of course, he comes back with a run. He cares for nobody, and is so very insulting to the Duke that he is thrown into prison. Equally, of course, he is assisted to escape by Christine, aided by Ophelia, and need it be said that the end is very satisfactory?

This is the sort of pleasant, healthy entertainment we have all seen scores of times before, but it is being put before big houses, its pretty girls, pretty dances, fascinating groupings and excellent scenery being in themselves sufficient to attract.

These Polar explorers are fairly jostling each other. Last week I think I told you that one Cook had just returned to civilization, claiming to have found the North Pole quite by himself—sort of worried around casually till he got there, as one pokes about at a junk sale till the right article comes uppermost you know. Vast numbers of the credulous believed in his story unreservedly, others awaited proofs. Others pooh-poohed the story, not a few concluded that David of old must have had this class of person in mind, when he made that sweeping assertion of his. Cook had barely received his first civic welcome, pocketed a gold medal, and eaten his first banquet, before Commander Peary, the world renowned Arctic expert, turn up and says he and his party were the first and only explorers to "Nail the American flag to the North Pole," to quote his own laconic message announcing his success. Cook most of us never even heard of before he burst upon our astonished notice last week; but Peary is a household word in matters Arctic, "quite another different sort of fellow altogether" is this magnificent trier, who has at last achieved success after weary years of endeavour backed by dauntless courage and wonderful patience. Peary and his party say without mincing matters that Cook is undoubtedly one of those whom the Psalmist alluded to in his haste and they are ready to prove it. Exit Cook, I suppose, to join De Rougement, Munchausen and Company *Un*limited.

NOTES ON THE TAPIR AND RHINOCEROS.

An interesting article which appeared in the Rangoon Gazette of 10th August 1908 on the rhinoceros of Burma induced the writer to take up his pen and air his views on the subject. He was unable to continue and complete it however, till now owing to his having been engaged on other more important work. The author of the article referred to above, however, was in error when he referred to the "Kyan-thu-daw" which is the Burmese for tapir, as a species of rhinoceros, as the animal known to Burmans by that name is undoubtedly a tapir, the Tapirus Indicus of naturalists, or Malayan tapir, the largest of the genus. All other living forms are said to be Central or South American.

The Burmese for rhinoceros is "Kyan" or "Kyan Sin," Sin in Burmese meaning an elephant. Blandford in his Fauna of India gives "Tara Shu" as the Burmese name for this species but the writer has never heard it called so either in Tavoy or Mergui or in Burma proper. He may be wrong, however, and is open to correction. The Tapirus Indicus is usually found in the district of Tavoy, Mergui and the Malay Peninsula generally, also Sumatra. None of these animals, it is believed have ever been seen in Upper Burma or indeed in any of the other districts of Lower Burma excepting, perhaps, those which abut on the abovenamed districts.

Tapirs like rhinoceroses are extremely shy animals and being principally nocturnal in their habits are rarely met with during the day unless they are tracked up to their resting places or are driven out of their haunts by beaters and netted and speared or trapped in pits. They usually inhabit remote damp swampy evergreen jungle but the writer has come across them in jungle in close proximity to villages in Tavoy where they abound. Both tapirs and rhinoceroses revel in a country where the rainfall is heavy. The latter animal, although disliking the heat, is sometimes found at a low elevation in many parts of Burma where the rainfall is not much over from 70 to 80 inches. Tapirs seldom if ever inhabit the high mountainous country frequented by rhinoceros. The writer has come upon the latter at various elevations ranging from dead sea level to five and six thousand feet and their tracks have been seen by others at an even higher elevation.

The rhinoceros of Burma does not usually inhabit the plains. They may be found there occasionally when water is scarce in the hills or during the end of the rains, for they often wander immense distances to visit salt licks, but they are just as often, for no apparent reason, found wandering in places many miles distant from salt licks or their usual haunts. Their habitat proper is, however, the hills. I have known of a solitary rhinoceros in Northern Arakan leaving the hills to visit a sugarcane plantation on the Kaladan river and remaining in the neighbourhood for months together, only leaving for the hills when the heat and forest fires deprived the animal of the cover and the mud holes to which it was accustomed to resort during the day. On one occasion this animal was seen by some boatmen on a bright moonlight night grazing and wallowing in the mud on the banks of the Kaladan in full view of every one. The rhinoceros like the pig cannot exist without mud pools in which to wallow. Mud and water in fact are as much a necessity for the existence of the rhinoceros and tapir as is damp ground to the existance of the snipe. A rhinoceros was shot by the writer some years ago in the Ruby Mines District in the Shwe U Taung Range at a distance of only six paces as it lay completely submerged in a mud wallow. Although at other times usually so alert and keen scented this animal was so deeply embedded in the mud and so engrossed in its occupation of wallowing, the day being an unusually warm one in April, as to be utterly oblivious of everything going on around it. So undistinguishable indeed was the position of the animal's head from the rest of its body as it lay submerged in the mud even at that short range, that a shot had to be taken at random at the heavy mass of mud.

Even the keen eyed and experienced Maung Pé, the Burman shikari, who was present with me on that occasion, failed to assist me. Poor old Maung Pé, I can see him in fancy as he was then a valuable assistant, advisor, tracker, hunter, yea, boon companion, and in some instances protector in many a hard fought fight with the denizens of the jungle. Now alas no more, having been cut off in his prime by a fell illness and gone on before to the halls of silence, to the so-called happy hunting grounds—those mysterious unknown realms which for many of us do not exist—where, let us hope, if such a thing can ever be, his spirit in fancy still roams in chase of the mighty gaur and lordly elephant, with the same keeness, alertness and unerring sagacity as it showed when it adorned its earthy tenement.

The first tapir which the writer ever had the good fortune to see was brought to bag by him in the Tavoy District of Lower Burma. It was at a place called "Ya bu" or "Yé pu" (which in Burmese means the place of hot water) situated in the upper reaches of the Tavoy river beyond "Mi-yaunghlaung" (the resort of alligators) where a magnificent morass of hot bubling saline springs of mineral water and mud may be seen situated in the heart of virgin tree and cane forest, a veritable health resort of all wild animals who partake of the mud and waters in order to rid themselves of internal parasitic worms.

The animal which had been disturbed galloped past in broad daylight with a young one following in its wake. At the time the writer was hunting for Tsine or Banting Bos Sondaicus and when the lumbering galloping sounds of the animal's hoofs were heard approaching, so unlike that of all other animals, excepting perhaps the buffalo and the rhinoceros, it was conjectured that it must be one or other of these last two named animals and not a female tapir with a young one. It was all over in a few seconds. The jungle was dark and gloomy and objects were not easily discernible, the animal consequently, as she galloped past, received before it was known what manner of beast she was, a right and left behind the shoulder from a 12 bore "Cosmos" ball and shot gun which brought her to the ground with a crash into a nullah 150 yards further on shot through the lungs. The young one was captured alive after a short, struggle and kept alive for a period of about 15 days after which it succumbed to shock and blood poisoning, in spite of every attention and a liberal use of antiseptics, as it transpired that both it and her dam had been badly mauled either by a leopard or a tiger, the former probably, which had attacked them with the object of making a meal of one or other of them but had been frustrated in the attempt. The tapir has no means of defending itself with the exception of the kicking power of the hind legs which are not, however, propelled with sufficient force to be of much use as a means of defence to ward off an attack from the felidæ and wild dogs their only enemies, excepting man. The shape and position of the snout of the animal also makes any attempt at using its teeth with any great hope of success, well nigh impossible. If the hind legs of the animal could be used with the rapidity and force employed by an ostrich or a cart horse when kicking, it might have some chance of holding its own. As in the case of the rhinoceros the acute sense of smell, sight and hearing, probably saves these animals from early extinction. The snout of the tapir like the trunk of an elephant is extremely sensitive to pain and a struggle between one of the former animals and a tiger or a leopard would invariably end in favour of either of the cats. The feet or hoofs of the tapir make excellent trophies if properly mounted. The fore feet have four toes whilst the hind feet have three. Three of the four hoofs of the animal shot were converted into spirit cheroot lighters whilst the fourth was made into a call or alarm bell.

Sportsmen new to the country often mistake the tracks of a tapir on seeing them for the first time for those of the lesser or double horned rhinoceros. The flesh of the tapir, although coarse, is palatable enough and not unlike that of the rhinoceros but neither animal is sought after on account of their meat which does not fetch a ready sale. The people moreover believe that the consumption of tapir flesh tends to cause leprosy which, of course, is a fallacy, like many other of their beliefs. Burmans and Karens indeed rarely hunt for tapir although they sometimes catch them in nets whilst poaching for deer and pig. A good square slab of the hide of a rhinoceros can be set up and converted by a taxidermist who understands his work into a presentable tea table or "what not" the feet being used as legs or pedestals. The skin of the tapir, however, is not thick or clear enough to permit of this being done with any degree of success. A properly prepared slab of rhinoceros hide when dry will present an appearance not unlike clouded amber when held up to the light.

Rhinoceroses in Burma are ruthlessly hunted down by the natives of the country for the sake of their blood and horns which are almost if not quite worth their weight in silver. The blood is eagerly purchased in its congealed half cooked state by Burmese doctors and quacks and by the people themselves, and it is truly wonderful the way the people believe in its supposed healing powers. The blood drawn straight from the heart is considered the most valuable It is quite a sight to see them seated round the carcase of a newly killed rhinoceros filling up bamboo after bamboo of the, to them, precious liquid, and jostling one another in their attempts to be first. The mouth of each bamboo, after it is filled, is plugged up with leaves and then the contents are partially cooked or smoked over a wood fire, the bamboo being almost burnt through under the process. The horn of the animal again is in great request by the Chinese and all natives of India and by the Burmans themselves. A good horn of from 10 to 20 inches in length will fetch as much as from Rs. 150 to Rs. 200. The horn is scraped or ground down and the powder in small quantities is mixed with other drugs or taken alone with a little water. It is said to act as an aphrodiziac. The horns of the two African and I believe the Indian species Rhinoceros Indicus are not so valuable, not possessing it is said the same medicinal properties as the horns of those animals found in Burma. It will not be many years indeed before both the rhinoceros and the tapir become extinct. They, with the elephant, are perhaps the only large wild animals with a prehistoric appearance now in existence in India. The tapir and rhinoceros unlike the majority of wild animals do not, at the present day, reproduce their species rapidly. This is the more noticeable in the case of the rhinoceros. It would be possible to count on the fingers of one hand indeed the European sportsmen in Burma who, during the past 20 years, have ever seen the tracks of a young rhinoceros. Burman hunters aver that the reason why traces of young rhinoceros are so rarely seen is because the mother when passing beneath any log-fallen tree or branch which bars its way has a habit of lifting the obstacle with its snout when passing beneath it and of tossing it backwards over its body thus causing the heavy branch or sapling as the case may be to fall upon and crush to death its offspring following in its immediate wake. This, of course, is a myth and can hardly be accepted as the true reason.

Rhinoceroses do undoubtedly carry their heads low and bore through and under every obstacle which may be in their way in the shape of jungle, but fallen saplings, branches, and tree trunks do not lie so loosely and free at both ends in the jungle as to enable a rhinoceros to cast them backwards with such unerring precision as to permit of its falling upon and crushing its young behind. The logs so cast behind indeed would as often as not fall upon the hind quarters of the mother itself. Rhinoceros are much sought after by all the well known dealers in wild animals and until quite recently offers have been made for the delivery of young rhinoceroses landed alive in Europe, amounting to as much as from three to four hundred pounds per animal The tracks of young tapir again may often be seen in the soft mud of a remote swamp in any district where they abound. In captivity they, like rhinoceros, are easily and quickly tamed and make very nice pets, eating plantains, jack fruit and leaves and almost anything out of the hands A young animal belonging to a former Deputy Commissioner of Tavoy was very tame. This animal eventually found its way into the hands of the Maharajah of Mysore. Young tapir are very prettily marked with spots. When born they are black or brownish black with spots and longitudinal streaks of brownish yellow on the sides and of white below. This colouration changes into that of the adult between four and six months after birth. The colouring of the body of the adult behind the shoulders including the rump and upper part of the thighs is greyish as is that of the tips of the ears whilst the fore part of the body including the head and limbs is black or dark brown. There are believed to be only two varieties of rhinoceros in Burma, viz., the small one-horned species, viz., Rhinoceros Sondaicus and Rhinoceros Sumatrensis the double-horned species. This latter species is the smallest of existing rhinoceroses. In addition to these two species of rhinoceros there is the large one-horned species Rhinoceros Indicus of India and Assam and the two African species one white or rather of a paler or albino colour. The so-called white species are now said to be nearly, if not quite, extinct. There is no animal in the East that will give the sportsman more trouble to track and come up with especially in hilly country covered with a dense growth of bamboo, tree forest, undergrowth and cane, than the rhinoceros. They cannot be followed up on the back of an elephant anywhere in Burma except when they enter the plains amongst a high elephant or what in Burma is called "Keing" grass where, however, unlike other parts of India they are rarely if ever found. The sportsman, who essays to hunt up this animal on foot in hilly country, will need to be in the best of condition indeed and to possess the sweetest of tempers to stand the violent strain of the exertion of ascending and descending the steepest of hills through the heaviest of jungles and to disregard also the discomfort of being wet through, of being blinded for hours together with perspiration and of going doggedly on whilst itching from head to foot with an intense itchiness. This itching is the result of coming in contact with a hundred thousands minute particles of fine lance-shaped bamboo hairs and spear grass, which work their way to the skin, and particles of fine vegetable fibre or broken twigs and dry leaves which become detached from the disturbed undergrowth and find their way down his neck, whilst passages are being forced through the jungle. Then there are the lacerations and cuts from thorns and the sharp edges of grass and bamboo leaves, the stings and bites from giant nettles, ticks and leeches, ants, hornets large and small and the desire to assuage an ever increasing and agonizing thirst. There have been men who until they followed hot on the tracks of gaur, rhino and tsine over rough and hilly ground have boasted that they never had and never would find it necessary to drink water whilst out on such expeditions. All idle boasts these, as the writer has seen these self-same men forced, owing to the heat and the pace, to go down on their hands and knees time after time and drink again and yet again deep draughts at nearly every mountain torrent that was crossed. If the sportsman is at all keen and means to be successful when out after rhino or gaur he must, however, perfect the condition he may be in, drink water to keep him going if the pace is at all killing, which it is more often than not, especially when the thermometer stands at 100°. There are occasions, of course, during the cold weather when the sportsman may find that the two water bottles full of cold tea or water taken out by him are sufficient to last him out the day but these occasions are rare indeed if he is working honestly and covering the country as it ought to be covered. No man will stay as well when out shooting on any other liquid as with water.

PECULIARITIES IN CHOKE BORE PATTERNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The behaviour of shot guns is so much influenced by minute variations in the regulation of the choke, and these final touches are so greatly a matter of personal fancy on the gun maker's part, that we find each gun has a marked individuality of its own. For this reason it becomes necessary to find out the particular loads which suit a weapon best, and, having discovered them, to make sure that one's cartridges are always loaded so as to give the gun every chance of doing its best. A very small increase in the weight of the shot charge may immensely improve the pattern in the case of one gun, and quite spoil the regularity of the diagrams of another.

Reducing the weight of shot occasionally results in cart-wheel patterns; that is, the pellets are distributed all round the thirty inch circle, leaving a large blank space in the centre. A pattern of this kind is obviously to be carefully avoided, as the shot may go all round a bird without touching it.

I have before me a most extraordinary example of a cart-wheel pattern, shot with a ·410 choke-bored gun at five yards. The load was 8½ grains of Schultze and 12 pellets of No. B.B. shot. These shot fit in the muzzle of a choked ·410 in layers of four. This is noteworthy, for as the shot lie in the cartridge their centres are all well outside the axis of the bore, and this I believe to be the explanation of the curious result. All the pellets are within a three inch circle, but I find I can describe within this three inch circle an inner one of two inches diameter, which contains no pellets at all. That is to say, the whole of the twelve pellets are in a narrow belt just inside the edge of the three inch circle. It is obvious that with any large sized shot, there must always be this drawback, that a very small proportion of the charge can be near the axis of the bore. The exception to this is shot of such large size that the pellets fit in perfect layers of three in the muzzle of the gun.

Here we have a point of immediate practical importance. Those who desire to use slugs out of their 12 bore choked guns should select a size which lie in exact fitting layers of three in the muzzle of the gun. With this size excellent shooting will result, whereas layers of four will probably give cart-wheel patterns, with a large blank space in the middle of the pattern.

It is well known that large bore guns perform better in proportion with big shot than 12 bores: the above no doubt is the explanation.

Piling on powder and shot is seldom likely to improve a gun's killing powers. Large charges result as a rule in a small proportion of the pellets in the shot charge getting a very high velocity, at the expense of the rest. This condition of things means undue stringing, while in addition the heavy powder charge is sure to cause irregularity of pattern. A great deal too can be lost by deformation of the pellets: an excessive powder charge results in abnormal crushing of the shot when they are being hustled up the slope of the choke. Thus there are a larger number of pellets than usual which are so flattened, as to be practically useless as projectiles.

Of course when one wants to shoot at high ducks, and so on, the extra kick of 1¼ ounce of shot seems a sort of guarantee that the gun is doing more than usual: but really the time spent in testing a series of loads intended to give the hardest possible hitting would be very well expended. A gun I had, which made average patterns of 185, had these raised to 200 by a new smokeless powder, which for reasons unknown happened to exactly suit its peculiarities. These little points are well worth discovering in the sportsman's pet shot gun, and the knowledge of them is certain to prove invaluable when one wants the old gun to do something just a little bit beyond the ordinary work of every day.

From experiments lately carried out, I am of opinion that a number of clusters near the outside of the killing circle, combined with hollow centres showing large vacant spaces, are signs of an over-choked gun. I do not suppose, however, that an over-choked gun is a thing one is likely to come across, unless it is home-made like my own experimental barrels. On the occasions that one wants the closest possible patterns, the trouble usually is that the gun is not hard choked enough. For duck and geese on the Sind jheels for instance, one can hardly have a gun which shoots too hard or too close. Besides having the right charge of powder and shot in one's cartridges, it is also necessary to have cases, wadding and turnover just right, in order to get the best results. It is extraordinary what a difference is made by having first rate tight fitting wads over certain smokeless powders, and a healthy hard turnover above the shot. With small guns like the ·360, smokeless powders are no good at all, unless the felt wad fits very tight in the cartridge case, and the end of the shell is well and tightly turned over. With larger guns careless loading is not so absolutely disastrous as with the miniature ones, but bad wadding, inferior cases, and poor turnovers results in a tremendous loss of velocity, and therefore killing power. To show the importance of this strict attention to the quality of cartridges, I may mention that while in India I carried out some tests with certain cartridges out of a large batch, which had been imported from Home. The rack tests proved the penetration to be so poor that on receiving my report, the firm who had imported the cartridges withdrew the whole batch. These cartridges, be it noted, were loaded with a first rate smokeless powder in a first rate manner. The climate had, however, had such an effect that combustion was imperfect, and so velocity had woefully fallen off. Cartridges in India should certainly not be used after they have been kept through a monsoon, without testing them for pattern and penetration.

It is no uncommon thing to see aged smokeless cartridges in the Shiny, roll their shot gently out of the barrel, with a puff little louder than an air-gun.

As an example of what some people will do occasionally, may I recall a story of old Madras days. Two friends went out snipe shooting to Guduvancheri. B told A not to bring cartridges, as he had plenty. A was a good shot, and having fired twenty cartridges without touching a feather, he got suspicious, and opened one of B's cartridges. That sportsman had left the filling to his chokra, who had considered wads between powder and shot unnecessary.

One may carry simplicity in making up ammunition to a fault.

THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.

Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER,

Mr. Fairie's Bayardo, by Bay Roland—Galicia ... ... Maher 1
Lord Carnarvon's Valens ... ... F. Wootton 2
Mr. W. Astor's Mirador ... ... Dillon 3
His Majesty's Minoru ... ... H. Jones 0
Mr. J. B. Joel's The Story ... ... Wal. Griggs 0
Mr. H. J. King's Carrousel ... ... Trigg 0
Mr. J. Lowry's Bachelor's Double .. Thompson 0

(Winner trained by Taylor.)

Betting : 11 to 10 on Bayardo, 7 to 4 agst. Minoru, 100 to 8 Valens, 100 to 6 Bachelor's Double, 33 to 1 The Story, 40 to 1 Mirador, 66 to 1 Carrousel.

Mirador made play from Bachelor's Double, Minoru, The Story, and Bayardo, with Valens whipping in for about three furlongs, when Carrousel suddenly shot to the front and carried on the running, pursued by Bachelor's Double, Mirador, Bayardo, and Minoru. Thus they raced till half a mile from home, when Valens, on the outside, rapidly drew into second place, and wresting the lead from Carrousel in the next hundred yards he turned into the straight, attended by The Story, Bayardo, Mirador, and Minoru. The King's colt was now hopelessly beaten, as also was The Story at the distance whereupon Bayardo speedily closed with Valens, and asserting his superiority in the last hundred yards won easily by a length and a half ; half a length separated second and third. Time—3mins. 8⅘secs.

The "off" day at Doncaster on Thursday was decidedly the most pleasant of the first three days of this meeting. In the morning it was rather chilly, but as the day wore on there was glorious sunshine and genial warmth, which cheered up winners and losers alike. Strange to say, Thursday's racing at Doncaster has generally been looked upon as the most enjoyable, for there is no rush and bustle, and one can watch the racing with comfort. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

LEAGUE—DIVISION 1.

CHELSEA vs. LIVERPOOL.—To some extent spoiled by the rain that fell before the start and throughout the second half the match at Stamford Bridge proved rather disappointing, and apart from the fact that Chelsea won by 2 goals to 1, the crowd, estimated at about 30,000, had little reason for satisfaction. Had not their defence been wanting on one occasion Chelsea might well have won more decisively, and their success was of greater merit because Hilsdon went lame and was off the field almost all the second half. Chelsea had the same side that opened the season with a drawn game on Wednesday, except for the substitution of Ormiston for Birnie at centre half. Ormiston, who comes from Lincoln City, gave a good display, and with Warren and Downing, the other halves, gave chief strength to the side. Liverpool had two new men, Stewart, of Motherwell, inside right, and McDonald, Glasgow Rangers, outside left. Neither did much, and their best men were Orr and Robinson. The early play went in favour of Chelsea, and in seven minutes Windridge met a nicely-placed long centre by Warren and put the ball past Hardy. When Hewitt equalised from a centre by Goddard nothing was seen of Chelsea's backs, but for the rest of the game the home defence met all requirements. For a foul on Hilsdon a penalty was given, and quickly recovering from the effects of his fall Hilsdon shot into the net. For the rest of the first half Chelsea made the only dangerous attacks. Hardy once saved splendidly when a goal seemed certain. Windridge kept the home attack going after change of ends, and was prominent in the few good things done, but most of the play was scrambling. Near the end Whitley saved from Hewitt, who had got close up, and the next minute Hardy kept out a header by Humphreys when Holden sent in a fine centre. Windridge and Downing both came near scoring, a long shot by the half back whizzing past the post. Chelsea, 2; Liverpool, 1.

EVERTON vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—Tottenham Hotspur, who lost at Sunderland on Wednesday, entered upon another formidable engagement in opposing Everton at Goodison Park. Twenty thousand people gathered to witness the encounter. Tottenham placed their full strength in the field, while Everton played Mountford instead of Turner, who had been injured. Hotspur opened in most determined fashion, and from an opening made by the right wing, Middlemiss placed the visitors ahead. Almost immediately afterwards from Mountford's pass White equalised. Having thus got on terms, Everton displayed a distinct improvement, and, approaching the interval, Young put on a second point for the home side. On crossing over rain fell heavily, but with Hotspur battling bravely the play proved very interesting, Minter registering a second point for the visitors, the game again stood level, but Freeman ensured the success of the home club by securing two further goals. Tottenham being unable to make any effective response, the match ended: Everton, 4; Tottenham Hotspur, 2.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL vs. SHEFFIELD UNITED.—Woolwich Arsenal opened their home seasons at Plumstead with a visit from Sheffield United, and the game attracted about 10,000 spectators. After the poor form shown at Birmingham on the opening day of the season Woolwich Arsenal introduced Lawrence, the old Crystal Palace amateur, at inside left, and Sands at centre-half. Injuries to Gray and Lucas also brought in Cross and Dick. Sheffield United played the same side that did so well against Middlesbrough, and included Walton, the old Hotspur forward. The result of a rather moderate game was a draw, no goals being scored, and in a sense both teams were fortunate to escape defeat. Woolwich Arsenal were seen to great advantage in the first half, when the Sheffield forwards could make little or no headway. The home side were continually attacking, and their new left wing, composed of Lawrence and Beppinstall, formerly of Swindon, was very prominent. Lievesley was in fine form in the Sheffield goal, and was generally good enough for the poor shooting of the Woolwich attackers. Once Lawrence cleverly secured position to send in hard drive, which Lievesley only saved at the second attempt. Near half-time a miskick by Cross endangered the Woolwich goal. When the game was resumed Lee, the Arsenal centre, was limping badly, and soon retired from the field. Sheffield United were as prominent now as Woolwich had previously been, and McDonald, the home goalkeeper, was continually picking up and throwing away. The visitors proved no better marksmen than the Arsenal forwards. Kitchen, the Sheffield centre, missed three distinct chances before the game ended, and Hardinge ran the ball over the line when the Woolwich defence had been completely beaten. Heavy rain greatly interfered with the play, and, McDonald playing finely in goal, the home defence proved equal to all demands. Arsenal, 0; Sheffield United, 0.

An indescribably delightful sensation is procured by those who accustom themselves, immediately before retiring to rest, to take a mouth douche of Odol. This preparation penetrates the cavities of the teeth and the whole mucous membrane of the mouth, and its refreshing and antiseptic properties are felt at every breath that is drawn—a most useful and agreeable antidote to a stale mouth in the morning.

LEAGUE—DVISION II.

CLAPTON ORIENT vs. GAINSBOROUGH.—Opening their season at Homerton with nine of last year's players, Clapton Orient gave an excellent account of themselves and beat Gainsborough Trinity by 2 goals to nil. L. A. Louch, owing to an injury sustained in the practice match of the previous Saturday, was unable to lead the attack, and his place was taken by the new man, Williams, who made a promising debut. Underwood, late of Brentford, showed good form at outside left, and in the team that had drawn with Derby County Gainsborough substituted Boyle for Lowe at left half. The match, which ended in heavy rain, began under fine conditions before an enthusiastic crowd of 8,000, and so well did the home team play, that they obtained five corners in the first twenty minutes. Nothwithstanding occasional weaknesses of his full backs, Day shaped finely in the Gainsborough goal, although it must be admitted that the home forwards, very good in mid-field, might have rounded off their attacks with more method. After having nearly all the play for thirty-two minutes, the Orient opened the scoring through Parker, who applied his head to a capital centre by Underwood. A little later, Underwood was badly tripped and the referee awarded a penalty kick, which was taken by Reason and ably saved by Day, who had to be very alert. Scott missed a chance of adding to the Orient score, but a second goal accrued shortly after change of ends, Parker netting with a cross shot after the defence had been drawing over to the other side, Right to the finish Clapton were altogether the smarter team. Clapton Orient, 2: Gainsborough Trinity, 0.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

LEYTON vs. NORTHAMPTON.—The Southern League champions have not made an auspicious start in their attempt to hold the title. They met with their second defeat at Leyton on Saturday, but at the same time they gave signs that they will be as good as ever when they have settled down. Their forward line is still strong, but in this game received very little support from halves, who were also unable to quite hold the Leyton forwards. The game was stubbornly contested throughout and was productive of some good and exciting football. In the first half the visitors had had rather the better of the game until a good run by Durrant enabled Ryder to shoot a pretty goal for Leyton, which was supplemented almost directly after by a point from Renneville after Thorp had saved finely from the home centre. Five minutes before the interval some pretty passing by McDiarmid and Lessons ended in the latter scoring a nice goal for the visitors. The pace was not so fast in the second half, but there was plenty of good football. Both sides should have increased their score, for Whittaker and Robertson both shot over when well placed. Leyton deserved the victory in a game that was always good. Leyton, 2; Northampton, 1.

BRENTFORD vs. BRIGHTON AND HOVE.—Brentford opened their home season yesterday before a crowd of fully 8,000 people, but with Brighton as their opponents, they did not give of their best, and a goalless draw about represented the play of both teams. The weather was wretched, rain falling throughout the game, and with a greasy playing surface and a wet ball, there were many mistakes on both sides. Brighton turned up at full strength, but Hamilton is still away from the half-back line,and an injury to Rhodes caused Stewart to cross from left to right back and Baxter came in to fill the vacancy. At the start of the game, both teams went off at a fast pace and James, the Brighton centre forward, and many duels with Stewart, his old clubmate. Bowman and Reid, on the Brentford side, put in a few good shots, but they were slow in midfield, and most of the good work was done by Anderson. After a series of scrambles in the centre, the Brighton right wing got away, but Featherstone, when well placed, missed a glorious chance. From a centre by Anderson, Bowman put in a shot and missed by inches, while Reid was also prominent near goal, and Ling was kept busily employed. Riley and Buxton, on the Brentford left, were very capable defenders at this juncture, but at half time nothing had been scored. During the interval the rain came down in driving showers and on the resumption the men could hardly keep their feet. A number of petty fouls and minor injuries caused several stoppages in this half. McGhie was badly winded in a collision with Bowman and Rushton so badly hurt his shoulder that he had to leave the field and was little better than a passenger when he returned. While he was away, Brighton showed to advantage, but, although the forwards were nippy on the ball, they lacked finish. In the closing stages of the game, both teams put forth their utmost endeavours and twice Anderson and Bowman came near scoring. Brighton's left wing were also dangerous, but the whistle went without any score. Brentford, 0; Brighton and Hove, 0.

CROYDON COMMON vs. EXETER CITY.—There were about 3,000 spectators to watch this game played on Croydon's ground,which has been considerably improved during the close season, but which still lacks elbow room for the players. Exeter started splendidly and their clever footwork compelled admiration from those present. It was pretty and clever, but Croydon has a sound defence and a half-back line that requires some passing. The net result was that Exeter could not trouble the home keeper, as their own custodian was troubled, and as the latter did not seem too businesslike it was not surprising that Croydon were the first to score. The point was hotly disputed, but was allowed to stand. A long dropping centre from the Croydon left permitted inside men to get into the goal mouth even before Crossthwaite had time to reach the ball and Gorman turned the ball into the net. The referee consulted the linesman on the appeal of Exeter that their keeper had been hampered,but without altering his decision. Then Exeter put in a lot of good work and shots rained on Hewitson until Exeter were awarded a penalty for handling and this was converted by Chadwick. This was all the scoring up to the interval, although each side was within inches of adding to their score. There was no alteration during the second half either until nearly the end of the game, although it must be stated that Exeter's defence was in serious difficulties on several occasions and a succession of corners indicated the trend of play. The ball was sent whizzing past the post on several further occasions. Just before the finish, when Croydon were making great efforts to secure the lead, Hodgkinson, who had been busy on the home left wing, ran along the line and sent a speculative dropper into the goalmouth. Crossthwaite was ready to receive it when the ball gave a remarkable twist in the air and shot into the corner of the net. Exeter tried hard, but failed to draw level again, while in the last minutes Croydon all but scored twice. Croydon Common, 2; Exeter City, 1.

ATHLETICS.

RECORD WALK TO BRIGHTON.—The walk to Brighton on Saturday the 14th instant, was won by H. L. Rose, of the Carmelite Athletic Club, who not only secured the valuable George Michael trophy, but also succeeded in establishing a new record. Ross covered the distance of 51¾ miles in 8hrs. 11mns. 14secs., thus beating Hammound's record made on 1st May 1907, by 7mins. 4secs.

Ross is an electrical engineer by profession, a member of the Carmelite Athletic Club, which is composed of representatives of the staffs of the Associated Newspapers —The Daily Mail, The Evening News, and The Weekly Dispatch and a member of the Tooting Athletic Club.

Ross until quite recently was a comparatively unknown walker. He made his first appearance in the walking world two years ago, when as an untrained novice he won the first Southern Counties' road walking championship, beating such men as Schofield, Hammond, and Butler.

This season he put up a fine performance in the combined sports of the Amalgamated Press, Associated Newspapers, and Pictorial Newspapers at Herne Hill, winning the two miles handicap, after giving away enormous starts, by a quarter of a mile.

It was in every way a memorable race. There were thirty-two competitors, and all but five finished. The pace from the start was very fast. A. R. Edwards, of the Lancashire Walking Club, led at the end of a mile, at two miles, and at three miles, but at four miles, in 35mins. 59secs., he was joined by Payne, who at five miles in 45mins. 26secs., showed J. Butler, of the Polytechnic Harriers, in fairly close attendance.

Payne was only two seconds behind Butler at twelve miles, and half a mile further on he took the lead, only, however, to give way to Ross, who, striding along splendidly, showed the way at thirteen miles in 1hr. 58mins. 9secs.

At fourteen miles, in 2hrs. 7mins. 7secs., Ross was 59secs. ahead of Payne, and at fifteen miles, in 2hrs, 16mins. 5secs., had further increased his lead.

On reaching the George Hotel, Crawley (twenty-nine miles 494 yards from the start),Ross's time was 4hrs. 29mins. 25secs., as against 4hrs. 35mins. 28secs., by Hammond on the occasion of his record walk last May.

In the forty-second and forty-third miles Ross had a bad time. He pulled round again, however, and when he completed his forty-fifth mile in 7hrs. 8mins. 21secs., was going as well as ever. His forty-ninth mile was walked in 8mins. 50secs. Fifty miles were completed in 7hrs. 58mins., 53sec.—only 6mins. 26secs. slower than Butler's fifty miles "track" record accomplished at the Putney Velodrome on 13th June, 1905—and, finishing at a fast pace, Ross won as stated.

The positions at the finish were:—

	H.	M.	S.
1. Ross (Carmelite A.C.)	8	11	14
2. Roberts (Woodford Green)	8	35	3
3. Payne (North Shields)	8	37	9
4. Brown (Surrey)	8	41	30
5. H. W. Horton (Surrey)	8	42	12
6. Warden (Polytechnic)	9	3	12
7. Hadnutt (Garratt)	9	5	25
8. Palmer (Hairdressers')	9	14	43
9 Edwards (Lancashire)	9	17	35
10 Lynch (Polytechnic)	9	18	21

SOUTH LONDON HARRIERS.—This famous club's autumn meeting was held in the presence of 5,000 spectators at Kennington Oval last Saturday. The most important event was a quarter-mile invitation scratch. L. J. de B. Reed, the Essex champion, won after making all the running in the fast time of 50secs. Nat Cartmell, the furlong champion, was beaten by nearly three yards for first place, but he won the scratch 100 yards race by two yards from J. A. wells, of the Herne Hill Harriers, in 10 2-5secs. E. J. Webb, the walking champion, was placed twenty yards behind scratch in the two miles walking handicap. He walked splendidly and finished fourth, G. C. Grimsdale, Surrey Walking Club, 280 yards start, being first.

The more important of the other events were won as follows:—One mile inter-team race was won by the Polytechnic Harriers, one mile relay race fell to the South London H., and the ten miles scratch bicycle race for the Surrey cup to S. F. Bailey, Polytechnic C.C.

GOLF.

IRISH OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP WON.—The eighteenth annual tournament for the Irish open golf championship was concluded on the Royal Dublin Club's links at Dollymount on the 4th instant when, in the final of 36 holes, Lionel O. Munn, ex-holder of the native championship, defeated Robert Garson, of the Troon Portland Club, by 2 holes. Munn, who entered from the North-West,a Londerry club, was a warm favourite, but after Garson's defeat of the holder, J. F. Mitchell, in the semi-final round, an exciting match was anticipated. After losing the first hole, Munn took a strong lead, and was 4 up at the end of the first round; but he had to go to the last green in the afternoon before he could claim to be the second Irishman to win the championship.

The following are details of the play:—

First Round.

Munn.—Out: 545444443 (37); home: 544574454 (42)—79.
Garson.—Out: 445555445 (41); home: 453574555 (43)—84.

Second Round.

Munn.—Out: 545545443 (39); home: 45363664 (42) —81.
Garson.—Out 455544453 (39); home: 343563566 (41)—80.

SWIMMING.

220 YARDS A. S. A. CHAMPIONSHIP.—The Victoria Baths, Manchester, were packed by a large and enthusiastic assembly last Monday evening, the chief attraction being the race for the 220 yards A. S. A. championship. There were ten competitors, and, as was generally anticipated, the Southport representative, T. S. Battersby, proved successful, his time being 2mins. 32 4/5 secs. P. Radmilovic, the Welsh champion, swam excellently, finishing second to Battersby, about 4 yards away, in 2mins. 36 2/5secs. W. Foster, of Bacup, was placed third, but F. A. Unwin, of Sheffield, evidently felt the effects of his race with Brogan in his heat, the latter just failing to qualify for the final by a touch.

Heat 1: T. S. Battersby, Southport, 1; W. Foster, Bacup, 2; P. Shaw, Hyde Seal, 3; W. H. Warburton, Manchester, Victoria, 0; G. H. Carlie, Nottingham, 0. Won by 8yds. 5yds; time—2mins. 3 0/5secs.

Heat 2: P. Radmilovic, Weston-super-Mare, 1; F. A. Unwin, Sheffield, 2; M. H. Brogan, Burnley, 3; L. Goalen, Birkenhead, 0; J. E. Heyes, Stalybridge, 0. Won by 3yds. a touch; time—2mins. 40 2/5secs.

Final.

Battersby	1
Radmilovic	2
Unwin	0

A capital start was effected, the four swimmers cutting the water together. Battersby at once took a slight lead from Radmilovic and Foster, and after going two lengths not more than 1yd. covered the trio. Before the half-distance, however, Battersby put on top speed and began the second portion of the journey with a lead of 2yds. from Radmilovic, with Foster 1yd. behind third. From this point to the finish Battersby gradually increased his advantage and won by 4yds. from Radmilovic, who was a good second, whilst Foster, 10yds. further behind, was third. Unwin, after going three laps, gave up. The winner's time was 2mins. 32 4/5secs. Radmilovic covered the distance in 2mins. 36 2/5secs.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 14th September.—Sultan Shola 12 noon. Hounds drew down by Leatham's Nullah to the Parsons' Valley, and as they were proceeding down a jack was viewed on the hill side; on picking up his line they carried it up to the top of Waterfall Hill and getting on better terms with their jack, the pace improved, and they ran him into Deer Leap Shola. From here a brace of jacks went away in front of the pack; the original one, however, crossing the Krurmund Path went to ground in Little Mekodmund Shola. The next jack was found near Kurumuda Shola; hounds starting on good terms with him pushed him through this covert over the hill above Thukkurai Mund and crossing the Krurmund Path put him to ground below the Great Dangar side near Mekodmund, and killed him in the earth. After a long draw down by One Tree Hill to the Yemmakal Stream and up towards the Devil's Dyke, hounds touched a line below Duff's Earth, then worked it slowly down the stream, then turned up towards Chemmund and running over Denny Nullah turned left handed down to the stream again and crossed it near Irwin's Clump and kept on over the Kabbalkod Stream to nearly the top of One Tree Hill, then turned down below Yemmakal Shola and crossed the Nadankod Stream; the jack, however, got to ground under some rocks out of which it was impossible to dislodge him. It was a hot sunny day and scent was poor: hounds worked very well in spite of it.

Thursday, 16th September.—Municipal Crossing 7-30 A.M. New covert was first drawn but was not holding; as the pack was about to draw Mill's Covert a jack was viewed entering it at the bottom. He dodged about for a few minutes before going away to the Municipal Steam, turned right handed up it and on into new covert and from here he led hounds over the hill above to Longswamp and bending to the left crossed the Krurmund Road by Rees' Corner and ran through Dreadnaught into Dairy Maid and on to Denmark. In this covert there were several fresh jacks on the move and hounds lost their hunted one. Another jack was found in Jackal and went away at once over the top to Monkey, then swung to the left through Junglesheep and through the top of Baikie into Dendron Belt. Turning right handed he led round the bottom of Porcupine to Ursula and dropping down on to the Avalanche Path crossed the ravine into Cairn Hill and made his escape in this large covert. The few fine hot days we have had lately have already dried up the ground considerably and the going is pretty hard in places.

Saturday, 18th September.—Windy Gap 12 noon. It was a blazing hot day, not a cloud in the sky and the grass as dry as a bone and prospects of sport poor. A long journey brought us to Glyn's Covert outside of which a jack was viewed; hounds drove him through the covert; coming out to the left pointed for Amphill Wood. On the top of the small hill the jack swerved to the right past Barrow's Bump, ran down Diana's Dingle and got to ground in a hole in the face of a cliff at the bottom of the covert where he was left. The pack then drew back by Glyn's Covert to Kengodu Shola: the terrier boys on the ridge above whistled a jack away and a short run followed to Maharaja Shola where the jack at once popped into a large earth under some rocks. The rest of the afternoon was spent in drawing a large track of country without finding; as hounds were on their way back to kennels a jack jumped up close to them in the bog between Bingham and the old Pykara Road and raced for dear life with the pack close at him, into Brooklands. He led them round the covert for a time before leaving it when he set his mask for the ghats; taking a line past Toda Cathedral he made for Waterfall Shola and beat hounds in the thick jungle at the bottom.

Monday, 20th September.—Sheffield Corner 7-30 A.M. A lot of country was drawn before a jack was found in Stokes' Shola. Leaving the covert at the top he led hounds over Hill Crest and down Backstaircase on to the road; turned up again through Barton's Shola and ran round the top of Staircase, then sank the hill into Stokes' Shola again. From here he took a line to the right through Mund Shola and not touching Gibbs ran down Lawley's Bog and got to ground above Pamelas' Crossing in a water course. The two terriers were unable to bolt him, but between them they killed him in the earth. The pack then drew Lawley's Course and along Newmarket to Rally Wood; a jack went away from here to Bluegums and then crossed over into Governor's Shola through he which ran as far as the old Toda School, swung to the right through Cromwell and Round Shola into Staircase and beat hounds. Though the morning had been fine at the start it clouded over and a welcome shower of rain came down about midday.

PYKARA.

"DOCTOR, I want to thank you for your valuable medicine.'—"It helped you, did it?" asked the doctor, very much pleased.—"It helped me wonderfully."—"How many bottles did you find it necessary to take?"—'Oh, I didn't take any of it. My uncle took one bottle, and I am his sole heir."

"AH, my dear sir," said a financier, seizing a young barrister's hand and shaking it warmly, "am so immensely obliged to you! That case of mine the other day, you know—it was a great triumph." "Thanks," replied the other, "but did I appear for you?" "No, my dear fellow, but you appeared for my opponent."

"POOR chap! Everything he earns goes on his wife's back.' "Well, from what I saw of her at the opera the other night, I should say he earns precious little."

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

Final.

INNISKILLING DRAGOONS vs. 26TH CAVALRY.—The final game in the tournament brought together the above teams on the 20th instant, and was witnessed by an exceptionally large gathering of spectators. The Officers of the Royal Artillery were "at home," and among those present were the donor of the Cup, General Sir Pertab Singh, H. H. the Maharajah of Jodhpur, H. H. the Gaekwar of Baroda and many other notabilities. The game was a brilliant exhibition of polo and an extra chukker had to be played to decide who was to hold the trophy.

First Chukker.—The Dragoons were first away, and Ritson crowned a good run by a successful shot at goal. The Cavalry attacked on resuming and Chaytor scored from a scrum. Both goals were visited in turn without advantage. Then Popham ran the ball down but missed his hit. Chaytor was, however, handy and put it through.

Second Chukker.—Play was fast and up and down during this period but there was no score.

Third Chukker.—The Dragoons pressed and Burnham missed two chances, then Ritson came through and equalised.

Fourth Chukker.—Exciting play all over the field; both goals had narrow escapes, but nothing was scored in this period.

Fifth Chukker.—The Cavalry rushed away and Chaytor scored. They continued to harass the Dragoons for the rest of the chukker, but all further efforts to score were unavailing.

Sixth Chukker.—Chaytor got away but missed his shot and the Dragoons getting possession brought the ball down, Burnham again putting them on terms. Chaytor had another unsuccessful attempt to score before the close of the chukker.

Extra Chukker.—The goals were widened and the game resumed. Exciting play in the Dragoons territory, Chaytor almost scoring on two occasions. The 6th eventually cleared and rushing down Bowen scored the winning point. Final score: Dragoons 4 goals, 26th P.W.O. Cavalry 3 goals. General Swann congratulated the winners at the close of play and Mrs. Swann handed them the cup. Cheers for Mrs. Swann, General Sir Pertab Singh and the two teams terminated the proceedings. Teams:—

EFFEMINACY IN SPORT.

AT the conclusion of the last of the Test matches against the Australian team, a gentleman—and a well-known cricketer, too—gave it as his opinion that a working (or playing) day of six hours for those engaged in such strenuous business as Test cricket is far too long. Whether this be accurate or not is, possibly, a matter of opinion, though it may be safely assumed that the paying public do not concur with Mr. L. O. S. Poidevin; and it is more than probable the statement was read with a smile by those players who took part in Test cricket twenty years ago, when the periodical bringing out of iced and other drinks to refresh the players was not the common practice, and the tea interval was not an established fact. If six hours cricket a day twenty years ago was not too much for the player, even in a representative match, the statement that it is too much for the present-day cricketer seems to be an acknowledgement of deteriorating, nervous force and physical endurance.

Beyond all doubt it is that there has been a strong tendency to make things easier, not only for those who play cricket, but for the partakers in almost every other form of sport or athletic recreation. The luxurious club house for the golfer is quite a modern innovation, the motor rides to a hunting meet, the hot lunches for shooting parties, all are evidences of the modern tendency to indulge the softer side of human character, to cater for the growing love of bodily comfort which is not far removed from luxury, to do away with any suspicion of "roughing it." Ease and comfort are studied in every possible direction.

Whether sportsmen, using the word in its very widest sense, are the better or perform the better for these innovations is a question which a large number of individuals would answer unhesitatingly in the negative.

A POSSIBLE DANGER.

That benefit has resulted from the alterations that have been made in the conduct of sports and games during the last generation or so is undoubted. The greater part of the roughness and almost all the brutality which was included in the playing of games and athletic recreations of a century ago has vanished, but it is possible to carry improvements and innovations too far. Strength of body and toughness of nervous fibre are required no less now than they were in the time of Napoleon Buonaparte, and if roughness and brutality did enter into our recreations of that period, the conditions did have some value. The prize ring had its brutal side, but there were compensations. And it is questionable whether the desire for improving upon all our forefathers did will not ultimately bring about the loss or decadence of many of those moral and physical compensations for aforetime roughness and brutality.

No doubt the modern boxing match is an improvement upon the old prize fight, with its copious flowing of blood and one or both of the contestants temporarily disfigured beyond recognition; but those earlier conditions bred grit and toughness in men; they encouraged the never-say-die English spirit of doggedness, and brutal as they may have been, they served a useful purpose. Whether the same purpose is to be gained under modern conditions is to be doubted. One thing is quite certain, the men years ago were "harder" than those of to-day; they endured better; comfort was not a sine qua non, and they were not often caught grumbling because things were not made more easy for them; their discipline was harder, and they were the tougher in consequence. There were not then outcries against "inhumanity;" now everything and everybody seems to require being handled with kid gloves—or something still softer if procurable. Is this for the benefit and betterment of the English nation?

No upholder of olden practices would ask for a return of such brutalities as a boxer "kneeing" his opponent; bear baiting and bull baiting (though decidedly not cock fighting) were cruel pastimes; and the legal prevention of the savagery of the old Lancashire purring matches no person with any humanity in him would wish to see repealed. But when the improving of a sport takes place, there is the fear that much that is really useful may be eliminated together with the features that are undesirable.

In the "Cornish Hugg," perhaps the oldest guide to the art of wrestling, the author, the eccentric Sir Thomas Parkyns, advocates the use of such means as the twisting of fingers, the blow with an elbow point, and the falling, "if you have a mind to disable him for wrestling any more," with a knee in an antagonist's stomach. Tricks such as these may very well be stigmatised as brutal, and their elimination from the modern game is very proper, but had some good folks their way, wrestling should not be permitted at all, the fact that there is a liability to some injury from a heavy fall being sufficient to stamp it in their estimation as a brutal pastime. With such humanitarian faddists at the helm, both boxing and wrestling would either be done away with altogether or reduced to the level of such amusements as find their fit place in a lady's drawing room.

FEAR OF HARD KNOCKS.

This fear of getting hurt is but another indication of the growing tendency towards softness. It is a proof of the superior humanitarianism of the present to that of the preceding generation, argue those who have a holy terror of the vigorous and virile, an improvement due to the enlightenment begot of advancing education. Perhaps; but this fear of bodily pain or inconvenience also indicates a weakening of character, and breeds a selfishness which is certainly not advantageous to either the individual or the community.

In the early days of football, when it was played in few other places than the English public schools, there was much took place which has since been removed because of its brutality. Hacking was part of the game. Harry East explained to Tom Brown the fellows wore white trousers to play in just to show that they cared nothing for the hacks that would inevitably come. And when Big-side was over, we are told the boys pulled up their trouser legs and showed the marks of the kicks they had received, and no doubt with much the same pride and glory as the old West-country players would show the scars on their shins which indicated their encounters in the wrestling ring.

The hard-baked leather boots of the Wes.ern wrestlers have now vanished (a good thing, for the deliberate kicking was brutality undisguised), and hacking is forbidden at football; penalties are enforced against its indulgence, and players now wear shinguard protectives against possible injury; but who will dare to say that it is better for those interested, both as boys and for the men into whom they will grow, and consequently, for their country, to hear half-a-dozen lads (or the lads' parents) protesting that football is too rough and brutal a game to be played, or to listen to a group such as the old Rugbeians, discussing and examining the scars received in fair and manly contention?

A WIDE DIFFERENCE.

There is a difference, a wide difference, between legitimate roughness and deliberate brutality. A large amount of the first is necessary; the lessons acquired in the endurance of it are valuable, the benefits derived thereby are incalculable. The boy or man who is reared and kept in cotton wool is not the sort on whom one would care to depend in a crisis. The individual who funks playing field injuries, who sees brutality in boxing, who has neither the stomach for physical inconveniences nor the physique to endure them, who has not trained body and mind in a more or less rough school, is not the one to lead a forlorn hope or emulate the deeds of Lieutenant Shackleton (or a wish to do so), or put up without an outcry with a severe attack to toothache.

There is a logical connection between Mr. Poidevin's outcry against six hours in the cricket field and the modern fear of asking too much of brain and body. There are situations wherein the nervous and mental stress and the physical strain are infinitely superior even to the playing of a Test match; and the man who is unable to endure six hours in the cricket field against even the Australians when he happens to be representing England is certainly not the individual who could be trusted to acquit himself creditably in the graver circumstances.

Six hours of cricket! What right has a man to represent his country, even in a game when he cannot, or if he can will not, endure so much? Compare such a day's work with that of a ship's captain—with what is demanded of the commanding officer of a military troop on a punitive expedition—with what Lieutenant Shackleton got through in his recent expendition to the South Pole. Comparison is impossible; it is too ludicrous. Why should cricketers be presumed less sturdy and enduring than others? If men cannot endure to play hard (though it may be work to some) it is quite certain they cannot be strong enough to work hard. If not fit for the one they will not be for the other.

The men who cannot endure six hours cricket are too poor representatives of the men who made England to be worth criticism: assuredly they are not of the type of men to sustain England in the position she holds in the world. But the habit of thought which contends that six hours cricket is too much, and the modern tendency towards making all things easy, are worth criticism, for the thought and the tendency have an influence upon national life and character the effect of which cannot be overestimated.

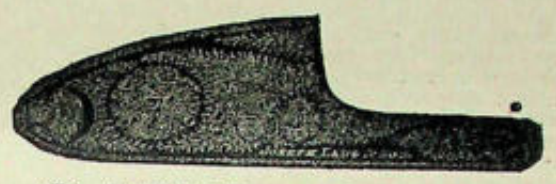
TOURIST—"This seems to be a very dangerous pass. I wonder there is not a warning board up."

Guide—"Yes. There was one up for two years, but no one fell over, so it was taken down!"

HUNGRY GUEST—"How is this? I ordered steak and a poached egg. I see the egg, but where is the steak?"

Table Attendant—"Dat's all right, sah. De steak am under de egg."

A TRULY eloquent parson had been preaching for an hour or so on the immortality of the soul. I look at the mountains," he declaimed, "and could not help thinking, beautiful as you are, you will be destroyed, while my soul will not! I gazed upon the ocean and cried, 'Mighty as you are, you will eventually dry up, but not I!'"



SUFFRAGETTE: "Why, even the man who keeps the low beer-house has a vote!"

Her Husband: "Ah, my pet, but just think—that poor man has to shut up at half-past eleven every night!"

LANG

(PATENT.)

"FIELD," June 12, 1909:

". . . . a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumbnail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked. . . . . Congratulation may be permitted concerning the lively balance and neat finish of the gun submitted."

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

HISTORY OF THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

ALWAYS old and yet ever new, the historical "Record of the University Boat Race, 1829-1909," and the register of those who have taken part in it, will be read with keen delight by those fortunate enough to secure a copy of the new work revised and completed to date by C. M. Pitman, O U. B. C., and published by T. Fisher Unwin, Adelphi-terrace, London. The price of the volume is 21s., and the edition is limited to 550, of which only 500 are for sale.

To dip into this book is like mining in a valley of diamonds. There are treasures everywhere. There is not a page that does not possess its own fascination, and we congratulate author and publisher on the extremely valuable addition they have provided for the sports library. The University Boat Race is an event that is unique in the truest sense of the term. A test of aquatic prowess between the chosen representatives of the two most famous seats of learning in the United Kingdom, the annual struggle now decided between Putney and Mortlake, has seized hold of the popular imagination, and the result is awaited with breathless interest, not merely in these tight little islands, but in every part of the habitable globe. The man who has never handled an oar and has had his education at an elemetary school is as excited over the race as the most devoted wetbob who learned style at Eton, and figured in the eights on the classic Isis or Cam.

There may be people who have no genuine interest in the Homeric aquatic struggle between the Dark and Light Blues. We do not know them, and have no desire for their acquaintance. The Oxford and Cambridge Boat Race is a glorious chapter in the annals of British sport, and so strongly does it appeal to the unalloyed sporting instincts of a race of sportsmen that it will always maintain its place in our regard, notwithstanding the tendency of sordid commercialism to choke the finest traditions of some of our greatest pastimes. The Boat Race is safe from attack in this direction, and it is unadulterated pleasure to avail ourselves of the opportunity which the publication of "The Record of the University Boat Race" affords to refresh our memory with the glorious struggles of long ago, and refurbish our knowledge of what may be called the contemporary battles.

Mr. Pitman has succinctly set out in the preface what he has successfully attempted to accomplish. The first edition of the work, of which the one before us is the latest and most accurate, was published in 1881, and a second edition two years later. Scrupulous care was exercised on each occasion, but errors crept in, and Mr. Pitman has endeavoured to remove them with co-operation of others. Here and there a minor inaccuracy may still be found, but in all essential particulars it is trustworty, and rowing men may consult its pages with the confident assurance that what is found there in the matter of history may be accepted without question. Rowing men owe a debt to Mr. Pitman, and so do all who value a true and faithful record of the greatest acquatic event in the world. Everybody knows that on June 10, 1829, but it is not clearly aestablished who was the first inter-'Varsity Boat Race was decided responsible for arranging it.

"The 'iron horse' was but in its infancy, and the road was still in its glory," we are told in the opening chapter, "when Henley on that memorable Wednesday, the 10th of June 1829, first awoke to the echoes of University cheers. Though boat-racing had not then the hold upon the public mind which it now boasts, Oxonians turned out on that day in far greater numbers than we see them even in these days. All available hacks and traps in Oxford were requisitioned. . . Cantabs, also were there in force, though hardly in such numbers as their rivals, for the distance from headquarters was greater. The course selected was from Hambleden Lock to Henley Bridge, 2¼ miles, against a summer stream. . . . In the friendly rivalry and healthy motive of its origin, in the hearty, thorough success of its accomplishment, and in the manner of men who formed the crews, this first University race, primus inter pares, forms a model for the practice of future generations of those taking part in this annual acquatic event. Reference is made to the lofty positions to which men have attained who have represented their Alma Mater in the Boat Race, and we are assured that this record proves, if anything, that bodily culture is not antagonistic to, but rather the complement of mental culture, and that the discipline and training undergone in the University boat tend perhaps more than any other part of the academic system—

"Not only to keep down the base in man,
But teach high thoughts. . . and the desire of fame,
And love of truth, and all that makes a man."

Oxford won the initial event, and great was the hurly-burly when the race was over.

It was in the second race, rowed in June 1836, that Cambridge first adopted light blue as their colour, and that apparently by accident." They were on the point of pushing off from Searle's yard, at Westminster, when somebody remarked that the boat had no colour in the bow. . . . At the last moment the late Mr. R. N. Phillips, of Christ's, a well-known oarsman in those days, ran over to a haberdasher's close by, and asked for a piece of Eton blue ribbon or silk. This was produced, and the crew adopted it con amore. Since those days Cambridge has worn light blue; while Oxford, for the sake of contrast, have rather deepened their shade of the same colour." For some years there were differences of opinion at Oxford on rowing matters, and this was reflected in the comparatively poor form shown when Cambridge were met, but the formation of the O. U. B. C. proper and steady training, and good coaching, brought about a turn in the tide, and in 1842 Oxford won their first race on London water. Mr. F. N. Menzies, president of the O. U. B. C., completely revolutionised the style of rowing then in vogue by substituting for the short, digging "waterman's stroke," as it was called, the long, sweeping stroke with sharp catch at the beginning, which has ever since been held to be the only true form of good oarsmanship.

Still quoting freely from the book, the year 1849 was remarkable in two ways. "In the first place, it was the only one in which the University crews met twice on Putney waters. Secondly, a foul took place in one of the matches; the first, and let us hope the last, which will ever mar these contests. University coxswains will, as a rule, rather run ashore than foul, and no one impressed upon them the policy of chivalrously giving way to each other, rather than endeavouring to snatch a victory by the chance of a collision, more than a former umpire, the late Lord Justice Chitty. Oxford were beaten, but they had a poor boat, and they were not in good condition. They were not satisfied with the result, and issued a new challenge, which Cambridge accepted. The second match was rowed in December, and Oxford having learned wisdom from experience, were in fine fettle. Cambridge jumped off with the lead and took Oxford's water, but the latter rowed Cambridge down off the Crab Tree, and ran into them soon afterwards, Cambridge not giving way. After the delay of the foul, Cambridge got away with a three lengths lead, but Oxford gradually caught them up, and at the finish, overlapping the Cambridge boat, proved themselves the better crew on their merits. The umpire, Mr. Fellowes, of the Leander, gave the foul, which was caused by misdirection given to the Cambridge coxswain, unhesitaingly in favour of Oxford.

The first race rowed by any University crew in a keelless boat was by Oxford in the Stewards' Cup, at Henley, in 1852. She was built of mahogany, by Henry Clasper, and had previously been used by the Clasper crew in their race against "Bob Coombes' crew." The 1859 race was rowed in a gale, and Cambridge sank, while Oxford only just managed to keep afloat. In 1877 the bow in the Oxford boat damaged his oar when they were well ahead, and the race resulted in a dead heat. Ten years later No. 7 in the Oxford boat broke his oar, while in 1898, owing to a gale, the Cambridge boat filled with water in the first few strokes. Sliding seats were used for the first time in 1873 by both crews. Since 1845 the race has been rowed from Putney to Mortlake on the flood tide, except in 1846, 1856 and 1863, when it was rowed down on the ebb tide from Mortlake to Putney. The fatest time on record for the race from Putney to Mortlake is 18mins. 45secs., which was accomplished by Oxford in 1893, and by Cambridge in 1900. The slowest time, 26mins. 5secs., is that ofCambridge in 1860. The fatest time in practice was that of 18mins. 21secs., by Oxford this year on the flood. Since 1841, when the authentic records of weight begin, there have been sixty-one races. There was one dead-heat—in 1877—and of the remaining sixty races forty-one have been won by the heavier and nineteen by the lighter crew. The heaviest crew was that of Oxford this year, which weighed 100st. 10lb., or an average of 12st. 8¼lb. per man. The lightest crew was that of Cambridge, in 1854, which weighed 85st. 12lb., or an average of 10st. 10¼lb., per man. A table showing the numbers of individual "Blues" supplied by different schools at either University, reveals the overwhelming preponderance of Eton, which has had 143 in the Oxford boat and 83 in the Cambridge boat, Rugby being second with 25 in the Light Blue boat, and 17 in the Dark Blue boat.

CRICKET IN BOMBAY.

PARSEES vs. PRESIDENCY.—The second match in the triangular cricket contest was to have begun on Tuesday, the 21st instant, but heavy rain put cricket quite out of the question. Similar conditions prevailed on Wednesday morning, but it cleared up in the afternoon and a belated start was made at 4 o'clock, the Parsees opening their innings with Dinshaw and Chothia. They scored fast at the start, but Dinshaw was caught with the score at 17 and Warden took his place: Chothia left 8 runs later and Meherhomji was next in. The score was carried to 65 before Warden was disposed of. Meherhomji was caught when he had compiled 23. Driver hit up 19 before he was bowled, and then Mody and Mulla came together and carried the score to 108 when stumps were drawn for the day. A start was not made till 3-30 on Thursday owing to the wretched condition of the pitch, the delay depriving the match of all its interest, a draw being inevitable. The Parsees added 20 runs to their overnight score and then the Presidency went to the wickets with an hour and a half before them. Greig made 15 before he was beaten by Bulsara, with the score at 32. Cheetham followed him out quickly, Christie was caught without scoring, Foster, of whom much had been expected, could only score 3, Simms made 14, Heath, Faviell and Cooper contributed small scores, but Milne was in good form and carried out his bat for 30, Sprott being not out 8 when time was called with the score 110 for eight wickets. WINCHESTER

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

AN INTENSELY INTERESTING BOOK OF NATURAL HISTORY.

SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED ON ALMOST EVERY PAGE.

By H. MAXWELL LEFROY, M.A., F.E.S., F.Z.S., Entomologist, Imperial Department of Agriculture for India.

With 70 Full-page Coloured Plates, 15 Plain Plates and 500 other illustrations in the Text.

This volume is the first single comprehensive work on the Insects of India.

For each family a general account of structure, sex-distinction, life-history, habits, food and economic importance is given, followed by the number of species, references to all important systematic works and an account of those species of which anything definite is known. Every important paper is referred to and the complete literature of Indian Insects summarised.

In the Introduction, and in "Interludes" at appropriate places, general biological topics are discussed under such headings as "Insects and Man," "Where Insects Live," "Cosmopolitan Insects," "How Insects protect themselves," etc. The Diptera, as well as the bloodsucking insects, are dealt with by Mr. F. M. Howlett, Second Imperial Entomologist.

The book is invaluable to the specialist, to the entomologist in India and to the amateur who is interested in the abundant insect world around him.

BANGALORE GYMKHANA vs. KOLAR GOLD FIELDS.—This match was played here to-day (25th September) in fine weather and on an excellent pitch. The home eleven had first knock but bad luck attended some of their best bats. They, however, managed to bring up their total to the respectable figure of 217 before they were all out. The visitors fared rather badly at the hands of Fleming and Sargent and when their last wicket fell their score stood at 88 leaving Bangalore winners by 129 runs. Scores :—
