THE new waitress seemed eminently satisfactory, but the mistress of the house thought a few words of advice would be just as well. "And remember," she concluded, "that I expect you to be very reticent about what you hear when you are waiting at table." "Certainly, madam, certainly," replied the treasure. But then her face lit up with an innocent curiosity. "May I ask, madam, if there will be much to be reticent about?"

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. CAMERONIANS.—These teams met on the 22nd instant, the volunteers winning by 2 goals to nil. Shortly after the start Smith looked like scoring when he was fouled in the penalty area. This was not the only occasion on which the Cameronions were pulled up for foul play, in fact the game was unnecessarily rough all through. McCready took the penalty kick and opened the scoring. Play during the rest of the initial period was up and down, both goals were visited in turn and the C. V. R. defence was severely tested but they managed to keep the soldiers out. On changing ends the Cameronions pressed but the Calcutta team cleared and rushed the ball to the other end where a mis-kick by one of the Cameronian backs let Smith in to score the second goal. Thereafter play was all over the field but neither team scored, though opportunities were lost on both sides. The C. V. R. thus won by 2 goals to nil.

Teams :—

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES.—Hendrie, goal; Anderson and Quaile, backs; O'Shea, Smith and Montgomery, halves; Smart, McCready, Galbraith, Smith and Hurlston, forwards.

CAMERONIANS.—Lawson, goal; Hampson and Lee, backs; Taylor, McBeath and Veich, halves; Langdon, Dawkins, Johnstone, Banister and Caine, forwards.

Referee :—Staff Sergeant Curley.

EAST YORKS vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—Played on the 22nd instant, the holders winning easily by 3 goals to nil. The East Yorks put up a good fight but were kept on the defensive throughout. The Lancashires scored a goal soon after the start, but failed to add to this before the interval. On crossing over, however, they confined the Yorks to their own territory and scored two more goals. Brandon, Russell and Abbott were credited with the three points.

SEMI-FINALS.

KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT vs. SIRHIND MOUNTAIN ARTILLERY.—This match on the 23rd instant was a very tame display. The King's Regiment had the best of the exchanges throughout and eventually won by 2 goals to one. Broadfield and Rhodes scored for the winners, the Gunners' single point being the result of a penalty kick shortly before the call of time. The King's played a man short all through the second half. Jennings, their right back, who was injured before the interval, being unable to resume.

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS.—The meeting of these teams was looked forward to with the greatest interest and a large crowd lined the ropes on the 23rd instant. The Calcutta team did not put up such a good game as in their previous displays, doubtless the hard match they had played with the Cameronians the evening before had something to do with it. Nevertheless they played pluckily to the end and if they did not win they had the satisfaction of knowing that they were only beaten by the best team in the tournament. Calcutta attacked at the start but were twice pulled up for offside. Then the Fusiliers pressed and getting through Russell opened the scoring Shortly after they almost scored on two further occasions, one shot hitting the crossbar and the other just sailing over. A couple of runs by Calcutta were stopped and half time arrived with the Fusiliers a goal ahead. On resuming Calcutta pressed and both Galbraith and McCready missed good opportunities. Fast play followed and then the Fusiliers forwards rushed down and Abbott found the net. The Volunteers tried hard to score but without success and were thus beaten by 2 goals to nil.

FINAL.

LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS vs. KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT.—A big gathering witnessed the final game on the 25th instant, when the Lancashire Fusiliers as was expected had little difficulty in retaining possession of the Cup. Exchanges were very level at the start, then the King's got away but were stopped and the ball taken to the other end by the Fusiliers. Here they kept up a vigorous attack and after several shots were cleared Russell opened the scoring. The Liverpools next got away and after one unsuccessful attempt they managed to equalise. On changing ends after a spell of attacking the King's Regiment were forced back to their own territory where Brandon put through but was ruled offside. The Lancashires continued to press and scored again shortly after. The King's were unable to reply and the game ended in a win for the Fusiliers by 2 goals to one.

At the conclusion of the game, the Hon. Mr. Miller gave a brief history of this competition and complimented both teams on the fight they had put up, adding a word about the exposition of the game by the Calcutta Volunteers whom he wished better luck next year.

H. E. The Viceroy also made a speech prior to distributing the prizes.

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

VICTORIA TECHNICAL INSTITUTE vs. R. F. A., KIRKEE.—These teams met on the 20th instant. The game needs little description, for it was a one-sided affair, the Gunners attacking all through and eventually winning by 12 goals to nil. Boak, Manning (2) and Kelly (2) scored in the first half. Kemp (3), Boak (2), Greaves and Manning after the interval. Teams :—

R. F. A., KIRKEE.—Firmston, goal; Bakewell and Kelly, backs; Stradwith, Goldsmith and Hogarth, halves; Kelly, Greaves, Kemp, Boak and Manning, forwards.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—Murthy, goal; Jacobs and Nataraj, backs; Ghosh, Dutt and Raju, halves; Phillips, Mendes, Chinnappa, Myers and Shanta, forwards.

Referee :—Sergt. Watts.

GLOUCESTERS vs. ROVERS.—This match on the 21st instant was abandoned after half time owing to torrential rain. Each team scored a goal. Replaying the following evening the soldiers won by 3 goals to nil. The Rovers played a man short and this gave the Gloucesters a decided advantage. Teams :—

ROVERS.—P. Lane, goal; A. G. M. Lane and Topper, backs; Patterson, Ashet and Petty, halves; Thompson, Oswald, Murphy, Bissett and Furbisher, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Scaife and Ruck, backs; Law, Cooper and Curtis, halves; Yaton, Short, Harris, Leahy and Childlow, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on the 22nd instant, a well contested game ending in a draw. The first half was devoid of score but on changing ends Moir scored for the Gymkhana, Kelly equalising shortly after from a penalty kick. The re-play on Friday last attracted a big crowd. The weather interfered with the game but both teams played hard and another interesting game was witnessed. The Y. M. C. A. who were without Dowling were eventually beaten by a goal to nil. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Hall, goal; Cooper and Elliot, backs; Barret, Sim and Collingwood, halves; Murray, Hargreeves, Moir, Haskell and Wenghi, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Hildreth, goal; C. Templeton and Deane, backs; Hotz, Ward and H. Templeton, halves; Brown, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Whitcombe, forwards.

Referee :—Corporal Tilley.

WORCESTERS vs. LEICESTERS.—These teams put up a fine exhibition of football last Saturday, a good game ending in a draw—one all. Rain fell during the second half and the Leicesters appeared to have more command over the heavy ball than their opponents. They sent in several difficult shots which were well cleared by Lewis in goal. Both goalkeepers were severely tested and came out with flying colours. The interval arrived without score and in the second moiety the Worcesters were the first to score, Plant putting through. Not long after the Leicesters equalised from a penalty and the game ended as stated. Teams :—

LEICESTERS.—Irwin, goal; Bailey and Faulks, backs; Pickering, Cliffe and Whitmore, halves; Butler, Wardle, Wale, Jackson and French, forwards.

WORCESTERS.—Lewis, goal; Clark and Parton, backs; Clayton, Jeffries and Pitt, halves; Jones, Greenaway, Plant Rowbotham and Sutton, forwards.

Referee :—Corporal Tilley.

BOXING DIVISIONAL CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE Burma Divisional Boxing Championships were brought to a conclusion at the Jubilee Hall, Rangoon on the 25th instant The tournament was most successful in every way : big crowds witnessed the boxing on each of the four nights and the military charities to whom the net proceeds of the gate receipts were devoted must have benefited to no small extent. The fights were all were contested, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers retaining the Championship trophy with 32 points as against the Royal Scots Fusiliers 28. General surprise was occasioned by the defeat of Sergeant Stock, R. Welsh Fusliers, military light weight champion of India, who was beaten by Private Dalby of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Shows.

THE MUSSOORIE CHAMPIONSHIP DOG SHOW.

THE Mussoorie Championship Dog Show was held in the grounds of the Savoy Hotel on Saturday, the 18th instant, and was a big success and Major T. J. Ellis, the honorary secretary and his committee are indeed to be congratulated on the results of their hard work. Entries were good and might have been better, but for a difference of opinion between the Indian Kennel Association and the Calcutta Kennel Club on the subject of championship rules, which discordance kept several Calcutta owners from exhibiting at Mussoorie. Nevertheless over a hundred dogs were benched and the quality was of a very high class Colonel Hyde Cates and Colonel Willan Dawson showed some really good Cocker spaniels. Mr. Lionel Jacob was once more to the fore with his wire fox-terriers. Jo Hukm annexing the open classes and two specials, and the Raja of Pithapuram showed some good smooth fox-terriers. Mr. Rayner's Irish terrier Martian Muddler, a well known dog, won among poor class. There were some good Scotties shown, Captain McLeod's Angus winning in both open and limit, beating Mr. J. L. Reid's Jock of Glencairn, who scored all along the line at the last Calcutta show. Another Calcutta champion who was beaten was Mrs. Mollison's Cad. It will be remembered that at Calcutta last February the Cad won open and limit in the bull terriers-class and carried off five specials—the Lieutenant-Governor's prize for the best dog or bitch bred in India, the Vice-President C.K.C. prize for best in limit classes, and prizes for best bull terrier dog, best non-sporting breed and best terrier in the show. On Saturday he was beaten by Mr. J. Hurst's "His Excellency," who won both open and limit. Other classes were all well represented. The judging was good and gave general satisfaction. The Judges were :—Mr. C. Clifford Batten (Dachshund); Mr. N. P. White (fox and Welsh terriers); Lieut-Col. Rennie (Cooker spaniels, great Danes, grey-hounds, retrievers and bull-terriers); Mr. J. Miles (Pekinese, Airedale and Irish terriers, spaniels other than Cocker, pointers, setters, Eastern breeds and Maltese); Major G. B. Riddick (Scotch terriers). The general arrangements were excellent, the benching carried out with every regard for the comfort of the exhibits, while the catalogue was of the best. The show was well attended and the greatest interest taken in the proceedings. Mrs. Reynolds, wife of our popular Commissioner, gave away the prizes at the close of the proceedings.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 10th September 1909.

SWEEPING innovations are contained in the Government's Development Bill—a sort of pendant to the Budget—which has just been laid before the House of Commons by Mr. Lloyd George. The following is the scheme of grants for development of the land and improvement of roads :—

1. The Treasury will make loans or free grants for :

Forestry	Rural transport.
Agriculture	Harbours.
Rural industries	Canals.
Reclamation	Fisheries.
Drainage	Other purposes.

2. The grants will come from a fund fed by :
(1) Annual votes from Parliament.
(2) £2,500,000 to be paid in instalments of £500,000 in each year 1911-15.
(3) Repayment of loans and profits.
3. The Board of Agriculture will have power to acquire land compulsorily.
4. A Road Board to improve motor facilities will consist of about five members, one being paid.
5. It may make new roads, or get existing road authorities to do so, and improve old roads.
6. A new road made by the board will be primarily for motors, and will have no speed limit.
7. Non-motor traffic may be allowed to use the road and may have to pay charges for so doing.
8. The Road Board and highway authorities have compulsory powers of acquiring land to the extent of 220 yards deep on either side of the road, in order to benefit from the increment of the land when built on.
9. Charges will be made for allowing private roads to communicate with motor roads.
10. The expense of the board will be met out of the motor and petrol taxes.
11. The unemployed are to be used as far as possible in the road-making and the like.

The scheme, it will be seen, is one of great boldness, and marks a new departure in British plans of legislation.

CYCLISTS, and in fact all road users, will be delighted to note that the R. A. C. has taken up tests with a view to minimise the dazzling effect of the strong head lights on motors, and still at the same time afford sufficient illumination of the road in front of the car. The objections raised by cyclists and other users of the highway have not been in a carping spirit, and the governing body of motorists have long seen that something must be done to remedy this defect. On any dark evening a cyclist is practically blinded for a few moments after meeting a motor-car, and anything may happen immediately, the car is passed whilst the rider's eyesight is temporarily blinded. Personally I turn away from the lights, and for a moment shut my eyes, to minimise, as far as possible, the effect, but even in this there is an element of danger. The lamp manufacturers state that they can retain the powerful lights and minimise the dazzling effect to other road users, both pedestrian and vehicular, so that they will have little cause for complaint, and we await with considerable anxiety the results of actual experience.

A POMPOUS-LOOKING lawyer once chartered a hansom cab, and, on reaching his destination, he only gave his driver the shilling required by law. The driver looked at the coin, and bit his lip. Then, in the most courteous manner, he motioned to his fare to get in again. "Step in agin, sir," he said, "ye'd better have the other few yards."

BOTH boys had been rude to their mother. She put them to bed earlier than usual, and then complained to their father about them. So he started up the stairway, and they heard him coming.

"Here comes papa," said Maurice, "I am going to make believe I am asleep." "I'm not," said Harry. "I'm going to get up and put something on."

A WOMAN in London had to discharge her maid and cook, who were sisters. She had occasion to call on the person through whom she had originally obtained these jewels. The latter said, laughing :

"I should like to tell you of the character that they gave you."

"Oh, do," said the other. "I insist."

"Well, the cook came to me at once. 'I don't think them people is married,' she remarked. No married man is that polite to his wife.'"

SNAKE FEEDING AND THE PLUMAGE TRADE.

In a pamphlet entitled "The Secret of the Reptile-House" the Humanitarian League has made a fresh attack on the Zoological Society of London, which exceeds in rancour and directness any of those previously delivered. In one respect this virulence is a decided advantage, as it reveals the feeling upon which the attack is based, and thus serves to put all unprejudiced readers on their guard. The conduct of the attack has in this instance been confided to a Mr. H. S. Salt, who commences by insinuating that the visitors who daily witness the feeding of the lions and tigers are no better than the ancient Romans who gazed on the immolation of the early Christians by wild beast attack.

As it is added that a future generation will very probably marvel that the sight of caged animals could afford pleasure or instruction to the people of our own day, the writer certainly does not go the best way to attract ordinary people to his side. To tell people that they are worse than brutes is, indeed about the feeblest way of attempting to gain their suffrages that has ever come under our notice.

Snake-feeding is, however, as usual, the main object of the attack; and the officials of the Society are charged with deliberately attempting to deceive the public as to how this is conducted. The contention of the Humanitarians is that if snakes cannot be fed on dead animals they should not be kept at all; while a further point appears to be that it is possible to feed all species on dead meats.

That the feeding of snakes with live animals is not a process which should be exhibited to the public, we are now-a-days all agreed; while we are likewise in accord that whenever possible snakes should be fed on dead animals. That this is now the practice at the "Zoo," is made clear by a reply given to a question from the Home Office, when the Secretary stated that "living prey is never given to serpents that will take dead prey."

This is surely a clear and definite statement, showing that the officials of the Society are doing all they possibly can to make the snakes feed upon dead animals. But if this cannot be done in all cases, surely naturalists have their rights in the matter, and if they wish to have serpents kept which will not take dead prey, what right has the Humanitarian League to say that this shall not be permitted! It is not as though it were a thing contrary to nature; serpents feed on living animals in a state of nature, and why, then, should they not in captivity? If the Humanitarians do not approve of the methods practised there, they can stay away from the "Zoo"; and we can assure them that their presence will not be missed! But that they should presume to say that naturalists and the public generally should not be permitted to enjoy the sight of certain species of snakes because they cannot always be kept without living prey appears to us preposterous. "Ye take too much upon yourselves, ye house of Levi."

Mr. Salt then goes on to say that in place of keeping live specimens, "it would be much better to exhibit snakes and other reptiles as stuffed specimens—set in natural attitudes, instead of, as now, lying half hidden, and to all appearance inanimate, in the corner of a glass case—than to kill the higher and more sensitive mammals and birds on their behalf."

Here he absolutely gives himself away, for every Museum-curator knows, to his sorrow, that it is an absolute impossibility to give to stuffed serpents any thing approaching a life-like appearance. Something more satisfactory may be done by means of casts, but even the best of these fall far short of the appearance of a living snake.

The matter is not, however, left here, for the author of the pamphlet states that there are some grounds for believing that the Zoological Society may ere long ask for a subsidy from public funds. Whether there be any truth in this rumour, we are unaware. It is, however, urged that if such a Government subsidy be accorded, the Society's Gardens ought to be liable to inspection by the officials of some such body as the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. If such powers were granted to any outside body, it would be about time that the "Zoo" closed its gates for ever, as an inquisition of this nature would in all probability render the working of the establishment practically impossible.

Our readers may rest assured that the officials of the Zoological Society do all in their power to run the establishment on the most humane lines possible. If larger funds were at their disposal, they might doubtless be able to improve the accommodation provided for some of their animals; and the best way of providing them with such funds is for every one of our readers who is not already a Fellow, to lose no time in submitting his name to the Secretary for election.

Turning to the second part of our subject, we may direct the attention of our readers to a very remarkable article, translated from a French journal, on the trade in South American egret plumes which appeared in the July number of the Zoologist. It is scarcely necessary to repeat that these plumes, forming the so-called "ospreys" of the trade, are the product of adult white herons and egrets when in the breeding dress; and heart-rending stories of the cruelties practised by the plume-hunters in procuring them have been published almost ad nauseam. In the article referred to accounts given at first hand by Mr. Geay, who has recently travelled extensively in Venezuela and the neighbouring South American States put, however, a totally different complexion on the matter. According to these accounts, the "osprey" plumes are shed by the birds towards the close of the breeding season, and large quantities of these collected in good condition and sold by the natives at so much per pound. It is further stated that in no case are the plumes plucked from the living birds, and that the young birds which yield no valuable feathers, are always spared by the plume-hunters. As regards the alleged starving to death of these orphaned young, Mr. Geay assures us that these are always fed by other birds.

In consequence of these statements, the author of the article urges that the English plumage bill (to which we devoted an article some months ago, and which has not yet been passed) over steps the objects its promoters had in view, and would be, as was pointed out in our own article, seriously detrimental to the plume trade.

It will be observed that while Mr. Geay, as reported in the article in the Zoologist, does not actually say that a certain number of egrets and herons are shot for the sake of their plumes, yet that the reference to orphan young indicates that slaughter of this nature does take place.

Before the appearance of Mr. Geay's statements a letter was published at Buenos Ayres embodying assertions of a very similar nature, but going still further, and definitely stating that no birds are killed, but that all the "ospreys" exported from Venuezela and Argentina are fallen feathers.

As a reply to this, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has published a leaflet quoting testimony from various English officials and naturalists to the effect that all the egret plumes put on the market are obtained by shooting the breeding birds, and that the alleged starvation of the young is perfectly true, as indeed is demonstrated, in certain cases, by photographs.

Here, then, we have a direct contradiction of evidence; whether due to intentional misrepresentation or from imperfect information is not for us to say. We may observe, however, that we have every confidence in Mr. Geay's credibility, and therefore find it difficult to believe that good plumes may not be obtained from cast feathers.

The case is, however, obviously one where further information is absolutely essential; and legislation should therefore be postponed till this is forthcoming.

In our own opinion ladies will go on wearing ospreys so long as a supply can be obtained, and we see no reason why they should not do so if the plumes can be obtained without revolting cruelty. If fallen feathers can be obtained in sufficiently good condition and sufficient quantity, the problem is solved.

If this be not the case attention should be specially concentrated on the following paragraph from the article in the Zoologist:—

"As to egrets, the real remedy would probably lie in domestication, by means of which the two species would lose their migratory instinct, just as tame ducks and geese have lost theirs. The difficulties would not be insurmountable, but probably much less than those which the English colonists at the Cape have had to overcome in domesticating the ostrich. Various attempts have already been made, but they have not been persevered in for a sufficiently long period."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

"Utter stagnation" is an adequate description of the state of racing matters in Calcutta since the end of September. In order to give the grass a chance the racecourse has been entirely closed and wears a most forlorn deserted appearance, giving no suggestion of the scene of animation which will be presented of mornings a month hence. Almost the only topic of conversation now among racing men is Cup and Trials' prospects. In the former it seems to be the universal opinion that if nothing happens to him and he survives his preparation the Cup is bound to fall to Peru, though, as is so often the case, there are rumours about that he will never run in the race at all. On the other hand, Bleach's friends assert that the trainer has stated that the horse is doing really well, there are no signs of anything going wrong, and he has every confidence of bringing him fit and well to the post. Fizz's victory the other day brought him down in the betting with quite a run, and he has been backed at the absurd price of 6 to 1, equal with Peru! To take these odds about a good handicap horse in a weight-for-age race nearly three months before the event, seems uncommonly shortsighted, and with Peru, Bantock, Wandin, and Neith all in the race, we are likely to see a much better price about Mr. Wittingham's little horse on the day itself. Last year's winner has so far been very much neglected, but he is by no means to be left out of calculations and our opinion is that fit and well Peru and Bantock are his only possible dangers. With Tangaroa, Auber, Saloon and possibly Soultline making pace, the race is likely to be an extraordinarily fast one, and it must not be forgotten that this will suit Wandin, who won last year, going easily, the fastest Cup on record. However, ideas will no doubt change with events as time goes on, but as things are at present our own fancy is Peru, Wandin, and Bantock.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—Wednesday, was the rainiest race-day we have had yet but fortunately the rain only fell then and did not make the going as heavy as it might have been. Crowds in the ring were much thinner, and those who kept away were the most fortunate.

Proceedings opened with a seven-furlong Arab race and Grey Falcon, who does not seem to be able to strike anything like his true form, was well backed, whereas Farick expanded from a short price and Corrector shortened considerably at the death. Real Blood was quickest away but did not last long, Ebrahim Pasha, Grey Falcon and Hamayoon being in front till, entering the straight, the last of these had the favourite cooked. From the distance Manley came away on Corrector and in an exciting finish landed him a winner. This is the first time the pony has shown his track form, and the timing was brilliant.

JUST double figures went up for the mile horse race, Picturesque on his two runs getting top weight but still looking good, Galloping Girl at slightly shorter odds and Posco and Lovania fancied. Mallinyook made the pace solid from the two P.'s. till the bend, where Posco led slightly. Galloping Girl and Hunting Horn were going well, but soon after the distance Killorn had to shake Posco up, and Evans being quiet on Picturesque came away without much trouble, Hunting Horn filled third place, all out to beat Galloping Girl.

ON paper there was no good thing in the ten furlongs and betting was good, Tachreet, Pinkie, Bendigo, Brigand II. and Hazza being backed. Spearmint went out in front, Antica, Alma and Hazza nearest him, Brigand last. Bendigo showed up for a moment after the half, but at the bend Hazza and Darianoor were next to the leader and Brigand had made up a deal of ground. Down the final stretch Spearmint appeared to be still going well when Darianoor came and pipped him on the post, Hazza staying Brigand out. Spearmint thus continues unlucky, though with a stronger finisher on his back he would have won.

A TOSS up indeed from a "form" point of view was the Paddock Plate with its dozen starters. Singleton's stable showed every confidence and Chobham and Castalia were not much longer in odds. Castalia was quickest on her feet from Foursome, Chobham's backers giving up all hope. Chivalry and Singleton came at the leader, but it was no good, Southall having a very solid hold of Castalia. Chobham put up a good performance by coming up into fourth place.

IN the pony race Comeback and Koko appeared to stand out, the former being shorter, but a great run came on Danseuse, for whose form one had to rely on those who knew her Australian performances. Wild Boy and Evening Herald were in front to the bend, where the former gave way to his stable companion, Naughty Boy, Danseuse and Koko. Danseuse was in the lead before the distance, Koko close on her, and in a desperate race the latter squeezed home by a head. The going was all against Danseuse.

WINDING up with the Lilliput Handicap, punters left with none too cheerful minds. Mudkoor was backed down to favouritism from Bay Middleton and Darby. Prince Chestnut got his usual lead, Bay Middleton, Hishan and Darby coming after him. The first of these looked like coming through but his stable companion hung on and won, Darby missing a "shop."

THE Meeting bowed itself out on Saturday, another full crowd being in at the death. Conditions were all favourable to a good day's racing, but punters had again the worst of the exchanges despite the protest against the handicapping and the good things that simply "stood out!" We have now to resign ourselves to the minor Extras with the bigger guns leaving the station.

THE jumpers set the ball rolling, a field of five going out for the Deccan Plate with Squire Alfred favourite from Mount Dane, Dirty Boy and Umutbee, Pincher also backed. The lastnamed took the first two flights badly and was some way last, Umutbee and Mount Dane leading. After a mile the former had established a long lead, Dirty Boy closing second. He came into the lead at the three furlongs and Squire Alfred began to come up. They took the last jump together and raced for a furlong when Dirty Boy went away, Mount Dane and Pincher coming up late.

WITH Sharar scratched, Zari warmed to favouritism from Plassy, from the same stable, Disfigure and Orby. Little Sanaya jumped out in front, Orby interfering with Zari. These two were leading at the bend where Plassy, Selection and Disfigure were prominent. It was evident Selection was well in hand and Brown came away anyhow from Plassy and Disfigure.

OF the four left in for the Stewards' Purse, only Hunting Horn and Flaneur started, with the former at twos on. Flaneur led him to the three furlongs where he was caught and passed. Whalley kept a bit in hand and made a bid at the finish, but it was no use. They actually ran the race two seconds faster than the Aga Khan Cup.

A DOZEN went for the Turf Club Cup, Second Thoughts shortest at threes from Sialkote, Darianoor, Peculiar and Jehangir. Peculiar was away first, but Second Thoughts came with a run into the lead from Sialkote, Pinkie and Peculiar. Soon after the half mile the leader was done, Sialkote passing him and Balmoral having drawn into second place in front of Peculiar and Jehangir. Once in the straight, Peculiar came along the rails and, passing everything, stayed out a challenge by Darianoor, Alma failing to catch Sialkote. This again was run over two seconds faster than the Poona Derby.

THERE was a fight between Picturesque and Posco for favouritism in the September Plate, the former eventually finding most money. Posco got away slightly in front of Picturesque, Singleton and Wise Bird. The first two raced down the straight neck and neck and were indulging in a tremendous finish when Wise Bird came through on the rails and blew them out by a nose, Posco just beating Picturesque.

MUMBRA on his last run looked sound to end up the day with, and, after Salanic had made the pace, he came away easily. Maimoon and Saree filled the places.

THE rumour that Danny Maher, the eminent jockey, contemplates giving up riding at the end of the current season, has been fairly presented of late. Apparently he has not yet definitely decided on his future plans. He is in good health, and lighter at present than he has been for some time; but, fearing that his weight may increase during the winter months, he thought it was only fair to those who have employed him in the past to know that increased avoirdupois might prevent his riding at a handy weight thoroughout the season 1910, and therefore give them an opportunity of making other arrangements as regards retaining a jockey. It is probable that Maher will ride as usual next season, but should he find wasting a detriment to his health, it is his intention to relinquish his profession as a jockey, and start as a public trainer.

WE understand that the Honorary Secretary of the Meerut Races has applied to the C.T.C. and received permission for the re-opening of the first entries for the Autumn Meeting till the 15th October owing to the paucity of entries received. This lack of support is due to the absence or preparation for manoeuvres in November of nearly all the units of the Northern Army.

IT is stated that an American millionaire, being annoyed at a decision of the judges at a recent horse show concerning one of his animals, promptly withdrew the whole of his entries for the show and thus robbed it of much of its interest. This seems hardly a sporting proceeding, but then American notions of sport are somewhat different from those generally held in this country. Indeed a grave difficulty would seem to arise in connection with the desire of competitors to judge their own animals and those of other people as well. In England they have impartial judges to decide between the competitors, but with a certain kind of American this does not seem to work. Perhaps the best way would be to hold a special show for the horses of touchy millionaires, with first prizes in each class equal to the number of competitors. Each man could then judge for himself and give his own entries the place to which he felt they were entitled. In this way all jealousy and ill feeling could be avoided and the judges would be saved a very unpleasant task.

A DOCTOR in England has had his rib broken by a hot return at lawn tennis, and the game must now be definitely classed among those dangerous to life or limb. Really no form of sport seems safe nowadays. One can even catch diseases, they say, from keeping white mice.

He curses, raves, implores, and then is forced to blow; A
The crew meanwhile complacent take their way,
Unmindful of their form and what the coach may say."

These well-known lines by Thomson are as true now in many respects as ever they were. Modern rowing coaches are not appreciated as they ought to be. They are not thanked sufficiently for their labours of love, oft-times extending over many months. During the excitement of any big tussle, and even after it is over, the crew invariably gets all the praise and the coach is forgotten. Mr. Pennefeather (Fermoy) suggests that good coaches nowadays are few and far between, hence some sort of control ought to be had over them. In other words, that as great care should be exercised over the appointment of a coach as in the selection of a crew. He insists that half the bad form shown on English rivers is primarily due to bad coaching, and that none but practical oarsmen—men who have won their spurs at boat-racing—should be allowed to pose as mentors. The idea is sound enough. Obviously, any man who occupies the important position of an aquatic coach should have all the principles of rowing at his finger ends. He must also be thoroughly experienced in the principles of training; be able to judge how his crew, individually and collectively, are progressing in the matter of condition; decide accordingly what work they are to do in the boat and out of it; and regulate their diet. It is best, also, of course, that he should

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

once, at least, have been a proficient oarsman, albeit this is not absolutely necessary. Nor is it absolutely essential that a coach should be personally skilful in the practice of what he preaches. He may be a man who was a class oar in his day, but has long since retired from the active list. As a rule, however, the coach who has done some rowing in good company is preferable. Rowing cannot be taught entirely from theory, hence the experienced, practical oarsman makes the best mentor. All the same, a sound theory produces a successful practice, and a coach with a theoretical knowledge of rowing only often produces sound results. He often brings his pupils to a very much higher standard than he had ever attained himself, for instance.

One cannot quite see how aquatic coaches can be placed under any sort of control. Nor would such procedure be wise, even were it possible. Every club can choose its own mentor, and it is their fault if an inexperienced one is appointed. There are coaches and coaches, of course; some qualified in every way, and others decidedly not. And it is amusing to see how the characteristics of different men show themselves and how opportunity is given for the exhibition of that which in ordinary life stands concealed. A very conceited man, to wit, one who seems to be shamefully bumptious is oft-times the most nervous of creatures and vice versa. On the river bank this is detected to a certainty. The sarcastic coach, usually green in matters aquatic himself, revels in hurling shafts of satire at each and every man in the boat. This sort of thing: "Three, don't you think you could put in a little work by way of a change?" "Bow, would you mind trying to put in two strokes to the others' three; you are only getting in one at present." "Stroke, do you think this is a pleasure trip?" etc., etc. Then there is the bustling coach, who tells you to do twenty things in the same breath without a pause, repeating the same after he has finished in a different order. Something like this: "Stroke, you're hoiking!" "Keep your back up and your feet on the stretcher"—"Swing further forward"—"Hold your oar lightly"—"Don't dig"—"Grip the beginning"—"Get on to it smartly"—"Keep it long," and so on ad lib. The cheery coach generally orates thuswise: "Now then, well rowed all"—"Stick to it No. 2, well rowed"—"That's right, you're improving immensely, well rowed"—"Well rowed all, oh! well rowed." The taciturn coach rarely opens his mouth, except to say, "Time, bow!" once or twice during the outing, which flatters the novice into the belief that advice is superfluous in his case. Needless to add that when he gets taken in hand by the sarcastic coach he finds he has made a little mistake. On the whole, however, latter-day aquatic coaches are a sportsmanlike, long-suffering body, who know their business thoroughly well, and devote much time and trouble in imparting the same knowledge to those under their charge.

An unfortunate Bengal tigress recently held up Marseilles for three days, but succumbed miserably after having been hunted with every description of small arm, cutting or other lethal weapon by gendarmes, sportsmen and the general populace. The cage in which she had just been landed at the docks was kicked by a horse and a panel smashed; the tigress was outside in a trice and began by biting off a sailor's ear, killing a dog and knocking down and slightly mauling a few humans. Next she took to the goods sheds and then the fun began. The following diary of the hunt affords amusing reading:—

TUESDAY.

During all the afternoon police, armed with revolvers, have been cautiously searching among the great bales of merchandise lying on the quays. The tigress is thought to be hiding in one of them. Several false alarms led to a wild flight of policemen.

A detachment of naval gendarmes, armed with carbines, are patrolling in a boat off the jetty, watching for the tigress, which may be amid the blocks of large stones lying about.

WEDNESDAY.

The tigress had not been found by nightfall. A wide cordon has been drawn round the district, and 300 armed police are keeping watch. Barricades have been raised to restrain the animal's range, and these are lighted by electricity. The prefect of the department has arrived to take part in the hunt.

THURSDAY.

Gendarmes who had been following her from lair to lair tracked her down at the waterside.

They fired several shots at her from their rifles. The tigress was badly wounded, and finding it impossible to evade her pursuers, she leaped into the sea, where she was drowned.

The body of the animal was afterwards recovered by the gendarmes.

During the night (says a Reuter message) the tigress had emerged from her lair on the jetty, and bounding on to the parapet, slouched along the jetty wall.

She was sighted by a gendarme, who fired on the animal but missed.

The tigress continued her stroll towards the northern end of the jetty, where she found a new hiding-place.

She had been at large for nearly three days, and had defied all the efforts of police, soldiers, and populace to run her to earth.

When she escaped her first act was to bite a sailor's ear off. Then she bit a dog to death with one snap of her teeth, leaped into the sea, and swam across to the main breakwater at Marseilles.

Dockers scattered when she landed, and the drawbridges were raised.

A strong body of gendarmes armed with service rifles cruised about in one boat, and policemen carrying revolvers in another, while volunteers with weapons enough for an eight days' tiger hunt chartered fishing-boats and went out on their own.

Rifle in hand, the gendarmes explored the breakwater, ready to shoot, but saw no tigress. She altogether declined to appear.

Marseilles was kept informed of the progress of the chase by half-hourly telegrams. Armed gendarmes and citizens scoured the rocks in which the tigress was hiding.

Then it was determined to smoke her out of her lair, and when at last she emerged she was wounded by a revolver shot.

Still she escaped, and it was not until to-day that her gallant fight for freedom ended in her death.

There are many in England who have not set up Ranjitsinghji as an idol, some who, apparently, have reason to regret his frequent visits to England, others who openly aver that he is not wanted.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday, the 15th September, Mr. Joynson-Hicks asked the Under-Secretary for India whether the Jam of Nawanagar was a ruling Prince in India, and whether such Jam could come to England only with the permission of the Secretary of State?

The Master of Elibank: His Highness the Jam of Nawanagar is a ruling Prince or chief governing his own territories under the suzerainty of His Majesty. The permission of the Secretary of State is not required to His Highness visiting England, but such visits would be arranged by Indian Princes in communication with the Government of India.

Mr Renton: Is the hon'ble gentleman aware that this Prince is alleged to owe a great deal of money to small tradespeople in Sussex?

The Deputy Speaker: That does not arise out of the answer.

Mr. Joynson-Hicks: Will the hon'ble gentleman state whether he is prepared to receive and consider any representations which any member of this House may make on his own responsibility before making arrangements for a further visit of this Prince?

The Master of Elibank: I am afraid the answer I have given must suffice. I have said that these visits are made only after communication with the Government of India, not that there is any definite arrangement.

Mr Rees: Will the hon'ble gentleman state whether any "such Jam," as described in the question, is not a better Jam for India if preserved for Indian consumption (Laughter and cries of "Oh!" and "Order!")

No answer was given.

Those of our readers who are fishermen will be interested in the letter appearing further on detailing the capture of a huge mahseer in Coorg by Mr. C. E. Murray Aynsley. The fight lasted two hours and the weight of the fish was 103lb., just 1lb. less than one caught by the same sportsman in September 1906.

The Leicester Regiment retain possession of the Madras Rugby Challenge Cup for another year. They beat the Madras Gymkhana in the final of the tournament last Saturday by 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to nil.

Messrs. Lipton and Company have presented a cup valued at Rs. 400 for competition between the winners of the Bombay Rovers Tournament and the Lancashire Fusiliers, who won the Durand Tournament at Simla, a fortnight ago. The Lancashires have been invited to Bombay for the contest, the Cup to go to the winners of the best of three matches.

The final match for the Harris Cricket Shield was played at Bombay on the 27th and 28th ultimo between the Fort and Proprietary High School and the Elphinstone High School, the latter winning by 46 runs.

The Senior sculling race for the Power Challenge Cup, ¾ mile, brought the Calcutta Rowing Club season to a close on Saturday. H. Claughton, the holder of the Cup, did not defend and the race was between W. C. Burke and A. Clemensha. The latter was not in racing trim and was beaten easily. Time—4mins. 49secs.

The Handicap Singles in the Poona Racquets Tournaments ended on the 28th ultimo in a win for Lieutenant Sloggett (−3) who beat Eales (+4) by 15−10, 15−6, 15−6. Lieutenants Sloggett and Scott (−12) won the Doubles on the 26th ultimo, defeating in the final Captains Tomkinson and Badger (+3) by 14−17, 15−12, 15−5, 15−9, 18−15.

The Bombay Gymkhana Athletic Sports Meeting, originally fixed for the 9th and 16th October, have been postponed until 16th and 23rd instant, and the Mounted Sports to the 27th, 28th and 30th instant. This change has been made as it is expected that the Rovers Association Football Tournament will not be finished before next Saturday.

Ignorance of the best methods of skinning and preserving shikar trophies accounts for the destruction of large numbers of heads and skins which might otherwise be saved. Messrs. Theobald Brothers, the well-known taxidermists of Mysore, have just issued a useful little pamphlet entitled "Skinning and Preserving Shikar Trophies." Detailed instructions, clearly set forth, are given on these points and the brochure should be of the greatest assistance to all hunters of big game.

The existing rules of the Nilgiri Game Association having been found to work none too smoothly a Sub-Committee of the Association was recently appointed to frame rules introducing certain wished for changes. A draft of the new laws was submitted by the Sub-Committee at a meeting of the Association on Monday, the 27th ultimo, but they will have to be approved before they become operative, and a meeting for this purpose has been fixed for the 13th December next. The following are the rules introducing changes:—

(3) "Every person holding a license granted by the Collector to shoot and fish for the whole season shall be a member of the Association for the period for which the license is issued." (4) "Every person holding a similar license, for a portion of the season, may become a member of the Association for the period for which the license is issued on payment of a donation of Rs. 10 to the Association." On the first of these rules the Sub-Committee, in a covering letter, observe that "This makes all holders of license to shoot and fish for the whole season members of the Association. It seems to us only fair that those who subscribe equally to the funds of the Association should have an equal voice in the management of its affairs. The existing rules differentiate special and ordinary members, but on no clear grounds both classes are declared to be subject to election, but there is nothing to show by whom they are to be elected; both classes pay an entrance fee of Rs. 5, but only special members can vote; there is no list on record of either class; and it is well known that gentlemen, who were neither elected members nor license holders, have voted at general meetings and served on the Committee. The difficulty of holding such elections as the present rules seem to contemplate is very great, as to canvass all license holders is impossible and to leave the matter to the Committee is undesirable. A membership composed of all the season license holders, with equal powers of electing the Committee, seems to us to be likely to result in smoother and more united working; while the objection that undesirables may thus become members of the Association is met by the arguments that they will be few in number and that the power of individuals is very limited." The new Rule 3 too is commented upon but briefly. They say that in it will be seen "that holders of short term licenses are to be made members only for the period of their licenses, and then only on payment of an

Another important change is introduced in new Rules 13 and 14, a change which allows members to control the proceedings of the Committee, should need arise for any interference.

On the subject of fishing, some modifications are called for, and these are contained in a draft notification under Act II. of 1879:—"Under sections 4 and 5 of Madras Act II. of 1879 His Excellency the Governor-in-Council hereby notifies that for three years from this date all fishing by any means, including fixed engines, weirs and nets (except fishing conducted by or under the order of the Conservator of Fisheries for purposes connected with conservation) is prohibited in (a) the Pykara River and its tributaries above the Falls, including the Parson's Valley stream; (b) the Kundah River and its tributaries, including the Avalanche and Emerald Valley streams; and (c) the Billitbadabulla and its tributaries, except that in the portion of the Pykara River, between the inflow of the Parson's Valley stream and the Falls. Fishing for fish other than trout with a single rod and line is permitted under a license obtained from the Collector of the Nilgiris on payment of Rs. 10. Such license will be non-transferable, and shall be in force from 16th September to the following 15th September for whatever date it may be taken out. Such license will not be required of holders of licenses to shoot and fish, or to fish, under the Nilgiri Game Rules. Fishing in the Awdry Bay of the Ootacamund Lake is prohibited except under similar licenses, and such licenses shall cover the use therein of only a single rod and line." "Notification No. 507 published on page 756 of Part I. of the Fort St. George Gazette for 25th November 1884 is hereby cancelled." The Game Association approved of the above draft notification which the Collector submitted to Government in last July.

Who has not wondered at the swift flight of the swallow, the winged motion that carries him across great tracts of land and sea! He holds a foremost place amongst small birds. Yet in England it is sometimes thought that the persecution which the swallow and the house martin suffer from the common sparrow is causing a decrease in their numbers. Whilst it is stated in opposition to this view that the sparrow has long been persecuted in the same way, a fact which is mentioned in Gilbert White's famous book, yet it is well known that the numbers of sparrows have greatly increased at Home of late years, and it is likely therefore that their persecution of the martin and swallow is also greater. The nests of swallows and martins are more difficult of construction than any others made by British birds; the mud layers are only prevented from falling to the ground by their adhesive tenacity, and it is absolutely necessary that each layer in the rising rim of the nest should be dry and firmly set before the next is added. It has been pointed out that the work to be done by the house martin is considerably more than that of the swallow; for, while the open saucer-shaped swallow's nest represents less than a quarter of a complete sphere, the martin's is often nearly half, and sometimes fully two-thirds. After the crust of the nest is once finished both birds have light work in lining it with straws and feathers. But it is just when the house martins have reached the end of the most troublesome part of their work, that they are exposed to the greatest of all their risks in the shape of invasion by sparrows. Fully half the martin's nests built every summer seem to be seized by house sparrows, and filled with the slovenly stuffing of hay, which is the sparrow's contribution to the work. The laboured shell which is essential for the martin's family life is only one of a hundred situations which are equally convenient for the sparrow; nor after the sparrows have effectively spoilt a martin's or swallow's nest for its builders by filling it with their own coarse mattress do they by any means always care sufficiently about it to make serious use of it themselves.

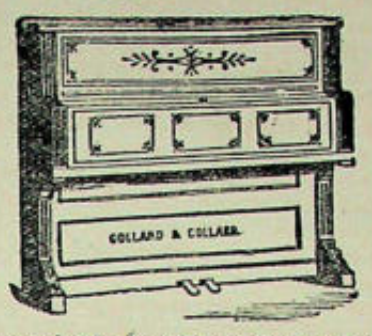
The North Pole controversy continues. Commander Peary, when stating that he alone had reached the Pole, and that he was prepared to prove it, remarked that in six months, probably, the whole story would become known. At present, it seems, both Peary and Cook can make best use of their acquired information, imaginary or not, by withholding those points which, it is said, will make it quite clear to science whether either both or only one of them reached the Pole. In the meantime, as excellently portrayed by Bernard Partridge in last mail's Punch, America has an undisputed claim to the Pole. The American eagle garbed in the hat and trousers of Uncle Sam holding the stars and stripes in its claw, stands upon the ice covered Pole and, complacently smoking a cheroot, turns an eye of triumph across the ice-bound waste to the envious nations beyond. Until some reliable decision has been made known to the world, speculation must continue rife as to the accuracy of the claims made by the two men. From his great experience, from the fact that for twenty years to reach the Pole had been the one object of his life, and from the knowledge that he had equipped what has been described as an ideal expedition for his attempt, there can be little or no doubt that if reached at all the Pole was certainly reached by Peary. He is now a man of advanced life, and having at last gained his great ambition, it can well be understood how bitter the blow to him, when told that another had been before him. It is not easy to understand on what grounds he at once denied that Cook had reached the Pole, as at that time he cannot have heard full details of Cook's story. Peary has, no doubt, gained unpopularity in many quarters by his bitter remarks against Cook, though most people seem to believe that he really reached the Pole. Cook, on the other hand, though many question the accuracy of his statements, has become increasingly popular on account of his genial nature and openheartedness—qualities, it is to be noted, which smack of truthfulness. However, as stated before, the differences between the two men can be settled by only one arbiter, Science, and that only after full detailed statements have been obtained from each of them.

The news of the death at Southwick, Dumfries, of Mr. F. W. Perman will have been received with deep regret by his many friends and fellow sportsmen in Calcutta. Formerly head of the firm of Perman and Hynd, Mr. Perman retired from business some years ago, but during his long sojourn in this city he was an ardent supporter of the Calcutta Paperchases. An admirable horseman and a good sportsman, "The Old Man" will always be held in affectionate remembrance by all who knew him.

We have to thank the publishers, Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Company, for a copy of "Insect Intruders in Indian Homes." In this bright little volume Mr. E. P. Stebbing, of the Indian Forest Department, tells us of the many quaint creatures which invade the homes, gardens and camp life of those whose lot is cast in India. The book is written in popular form and makes pleasant as well as instructive reading for those who have not the time nor the inclination to study the huge insect world in scientific works. The iniquities of the beetles, cockroaches, ants, termites and the many other bugbears of the careful housewife are set forth in these pages; we learn of the many kinds of creeping jumping and flying things to be found in our gardens, and are told of those whose depredations on the plant life call for their ruthless extermination, and of those whose lives should be spared as being harmless, while a section is devoted to the numerous commoner forms of insect life met with in the jungles. The illustrations, most of which are from drawings by the author and his wife, form a pleasing feature of this interesting volume, which deserves a place on our bookshelves alongside the better known classics of "Eha."

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)



Friday, 17th September 1909.

It will be satisfactory to all Englishmen in India to learn that the measures taken for the suppression of seditious printing and publishing in London are a little more decisive and prompt than those in vogue in unhappy Bengal. The young anarchist, Guy Alfred Aldred, who recently took up the publication of the Indian Sociologist, for the Native miscreant who hides in Paris and hires villains to scatter the seeds of disaffection and unrest, and incite to murder and assassination over here, has just been sentenced to a year's imprisonment by Mr. Justice Coleridge. It is to be hoped that the learned judge's remarks to the prisoner will be well pondered by this "vain and foolish" young man, and others who aspire to do their little worst to upset the administration of the laws in force in India. The creature Aldred may be actuated by the most splendid motives, but these cannot excuse the mischief worked by men of his kind. One would as soon think of excusing a man who tried to burn down London because he believed that it would be improved by rebuilding.

The latest form of suicide is by motor-car. The fashion has been set by a man who, having been threatened with personal violence, thought to end the suspense by throwing himself in front of a motor-car. As a matter of fact, he escaped with a broken leg and a broken head, and next time he will doubtless choose something more effective—a steam-roller for example. But this idea of motor suicide is certainly unfair to motorists in general. In the first place, if the suicide be at all bulky he may upset the car and add manslaughter to his last account, and in the second place supposing the affair goes off all right from his point of view, he may leave a weight on the motorist's conscience unless he, the suicide, survives long enough to confess that he did it on purpose. It is never a pleasant thing to kill a fellow creature, and many people would keep awake at night worrying over it if they thought that they were in any way to blame.

Last Tuesday two big inauguration ceremonies were performed—one in the Strand, one on the banks of the Thames. The opening of the new Strand Palace Hotel provided the public with a genuine surprise. The ever-fertile resource and unflagging enterprise of "Joe" Lyons have given London something entirely novel, both as regards comfort and price. Only a few years ago the advantages which the new hotel offers to its customers would have seemed impossible of realisation, but "impossible" is evidently a word that has no place in the Lyons' lexicon.

If one wished to sum up the merits of London's latest caravanserai in the fewest possible words, one would say that it is in every sense abreast of the spirit of the times. Its promoters have, amongst other things, recognised that modern taste is tending more and more towards the meal taken in public in a refined, luxurious environment, and that people prefer light, well-cooked food to the heavy fare which pleased a past generation. They have also realised that the public have an innate dislike for tips, and they have boldly given articulate expression to that dislike by abolishing the system.

This, and many other features in connection with the new hotel, serve to prove how daring is the enterprise. But though daring it is in no sense hazardous. As soon as the public realise—that everything in the new palace is designed for their comfort and delight, they will not fail to respond with their custom. The absence of tips and "extras," the extremely low prices charged for sleeping accommodation, the excellence and economical charges of the bill of fare, the artistic decoration of the various apartments—these things, combined with the central position of the new hotel, augur well for that success which so complete a revolution in the art of catering thoroughly deserves. I should say that the place should be a vertiable Anglo-Indian colony in the leave season, for I cannot call to mind any other London hotel that offers the man from east of Suez quite what this place does.

The other opening was that of what is now the wide bridge over the Thames. At midday the last barrier across the new portion of Blackfriars Bridge was removed, and the Lord Mayor declared it open for traffic in the presence of the Prime Minister, members of the Government, big (and little) wigs of all sorts and an inspiriting gallery of the fair sex. Waiting near the pavilion was a line of decorated tramway-cars, and at a signal from the Lord Mayor the first electric car approached from the Victoria Embankment. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, with Sir Melvill Beachcroft, chairman of the London County Council, entered the car and crossed the bridge into the borough of Southwark. The other guests followed in the remaining cars.

Directly after the opening of the widened bridge a circular service of cars commenced running via Blackfriars and Westminster Bridges between Greenwich, New Cross, Streatham, and Tooting. A new halfpenny fare will be instituted between Waterloo Bridge and Stamford Street on the south side of Blackfriars Bridge.

The widening to 150 feet from parapet to parapet has cost £203,000, the money being provided out of the funds of the Bridge House Estates Committee. Messrs. Sir William Arrol and Company, of Glasgow, the contractors, commenced the work in February 1907. They were allowed until February 1910 to finish, and it was arranged that a bonus of £20 for every day saved should be paid to them. They thus gain a bonus of well over £3,000 for their rapid work.

One more effort—perhaps the last—is to be made to reinstate the horse-cab as a popular favourite, this time by means of the introduction of sixpenny fares. On 1st October about one-fifth of the horse-drawn cabs that ply in the thoroughfares of London will bear a little flag to denote that the initial fare has been reduced to 6d. for the first mile instead of as now one shilling. This new rate will also be cheaper by twopence than the motor-cabs' charge of 8d. for the first mile traversed.

The change has been brought about by the Kennington Hackney Carriage Proprietors' Association, which controls about one-fifth of the horse-cabs in London.

The autumn season at His Majesty's Theatre was opened last Tuesday night by Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree with "False Gods," a translation by Mr James B. Fagan of Eugene Brieux's latest play, "La Foi."

Advantage has been taken of the recess to have the interior of the theatre overhauled and redecorated, and the new colour scheme of white and gold is delightful. The all-important subject of ventilation has been most carefully considered, and a trial is being made of a new system by which ozone is pumped into the auditorium through a moist screen, played upon by electricity, a constant supply of fresh air thus being maintained.

"False Gods" takes us back to the pre-Christian era. Egyptian life and manners 1,500 B.C. are portrayed on the stage with a realistic splendour that holds the judgment captive and compels admiration. The central theme of the play is a conflict between belief and unbelief, faith and materialism, the instinctive desire to pay homage to and worship the Unknown, and the enthronement of reason as the only deity to which man can bend the knee. And "False Gods" does not solve the eternal problem, nor throw any special light upon it. It is not to be expected it should. In matters of faith man is to-day where Satni, the hero of "False Gods," was thirty centuries since.

Although Sir Herbert Tree assures us that he was never assailed with doubt when determining upon the production of "False Gods," it was a daring thing to do. That so certain a success should have been scored is at once a tribute to his intuitive knowledge of what appeals to playgoers, and his perception of the wonderful possibilities of Brieux's masterpiece from the point of view of scenic splendour and stage realism. Sir Herbert Tree did not assign himself a large part, but he made a tremendous impression in the fourth act in his scene with Pharaoh in the Temple. As Satni, Mr. Henry Ainley gave a powerful reading of a part that could easily have been spoilt. He did not disappoint in any particular, and he presented a manly, dignified, at times regal, character to an appreciative audience. Mr. Hubert Carter was a satisfactory Pharaoh, Mr. Edward Sass a lordly Rheou, and Mr. William Haviland gave a dramatic rendering of Pakh, the Potter. Mrs. Patrick Campbell, as Mieris, wife of Rheou, added another to her long list of successes, and Yaouma found a fairly successful interpreter in Miss Evelyn D'Alroy. The other characters were well sustained.

In "Making a Gentleman," Mr. Alfred Sutro has given us plenty of smart dialogue and not anything else. A plot is not necessary, perhaps, for a society play, but there were few of the representative audience at the Garrick on Saturday evening, when Mr Arthur Bourchier presented this four-act play for the first time, who did not feel when the curtain was rung down on the last scene that there was something lacking. The denouement was not striking, and it was certainly not convincing.

The plot is very thin, but it serves its purpose. All the incidents are crowded into a portion of twenty-four hours, and there is here an example of the mad whirl of the fashionable world. After the stroke of mid-day, and before eight o'clock in the evening, we have a young man who does not contemplate marriage rushed into an engagement with a woman whose past has incidents that Mrs. Grundy would be shocked at, we have the whole history of the young man's family laid bare, we are introduced to various people in society, and made acquainted with the history of a man who started life in an unpretending way, became a successful pickle manufacturer, retired from trade in the interest of his son, whom he sent to Harrow and Oxford, entered into speculation and lost his money, and finally determined to start life once more in Canada. Archibald Carey, the son, for whom the sacrifices were made, when he learns of his father's misfortunes, agrees to accompany him to Canada, but then proposes marriage to the Baroness von Ritzen, asks for his father's consent, is refused, but persists in his request, gets his own way, and the curtain falls with the determination of Sam Carey to go to Canada with an adopted daughter.

Quite the best things in the piece were the little scenes in which a comparatively unknown actress, Miss Athene Seyler, appeared. There was a charm and tenderness imparted by her to the character of a girl in a dependent position that was delightful to witness. The character of Sam Carey was just such as Mr. Bourchier loves to interpret. Mr. Kenneth Douglas made a personal success, and so did Miss Ethel Irving, as far as her part allowed.

Grandiose grotesqueness, that is the latest drama of Druby Lane, and it will be most amusing into the bargain as soon as the traffic is reduced from four hours and a half to three, and the railway in the third act is more punctual, less slow, and more easy.

"The Whip" is grandiose because Mr. Arthur Collins is a producer of an unlimited horizon. Money is no object to him; he fears neither the limitations nor the optics of the stage; he manoeuvres actors and supers alike with a fieldmarshal's staff; and in engineering scenes he displays the knowledge and the practical sense of a scientist. I have not heard how many people were present at the first performance, but the house was crammed with people, the majority of whom helped in some way to swell the roars of laughter and applause. Many of the main incidents of the drama revolve around the race horse called "The Whip," after whom the play is called, but naturally that is merely so because it is upon his ability to win a great race that the happiness and fortune of hero and heroine depend. How the horse is watched and plotted against, how the hero is cruelly injured and maligned, how the charming heroine refuses to believe anything bad against him, is told with many a stirring incident. It is well acted, too, by nearly all concerned—Miss Jessie Bateman as heroine, Mr. Cyril Keightley as villain, and Miss Madge Fabian as the wronged girl (why does melodrama require a wronged girl?) being chief favourites.

When that big boomster Baden-Powell, balloonist, skirt-dancer and Military Officer, invented the boy scout it was generally recognised that he had added to the gaiety of the nation, for when his tender years and tired little feet do not move us to commiseration, his antics with his little pole and his grotesque rig incite to mirth. But by dint of persistent booming he is being kept well before the eyes of a public who has long since grown rather weary of looking at him in the streets, and in the cheap pictorial papers. He has been taken to Germany, and into the country there to worry the land and orchard owner, he has wearied us at exhibitions and now Mr. Kipling, the poet of patriotism, (or as some prefer to call him, our "National Scold") has published some nursery jingles about him. The occasion of this latest dropping into poetry was the presentation of the "Silver Wolf"—whatever that may be—to an infant precocity named Francklin, who is styled "the cleverest boy scout in England." This poor little beggar had obtained this badge of merit for proficiency as:—

Fireman,	Seaman,	Horseman,
Cyclist,	Marksman,	Electrician.
Clerk,	Master-at-arms.	Musician, and
Signaller,	Stalker.	Cook.
Pioneer,	Gardener,

Of course General Baden-Powel presented the "silver wolf" and equally, of course, the fact has been extensively advertised.

NOTES ON THE TAPIR AND RHINOCEROS.

Many and many a weary fruitless tramp has the writer experienced through putting up rhinoceros which had gone off after obtaining a slant of his wind. Once a rhinoceros has been disturbed it is by no means an easy matter to come up with him again or get near enough to him to obtain a shot. The writer some years ago came up with a rhinoceros on no less than four occasions within four or five hours without so much as obtaining even a glimpse of the animal, which after covering several miles of the most abominable country simply stood or lay down in a thicket each time with his head turned in the direction he had come from and bolted down wind again with a loud snort as soon as he either scented, heard, or saw the writer approach. Rhinoceros get to their feet when disturbed and dash away at a much greater rate than would appear to be possible for such a clumsy looking animal. On another occasion a rhinoceros that the writer came on suddenly in its wallow without being aware of its presence jumped up and dashed away before a glimpse could be obtained of it, uttering at the same time a succession of peculiar squeeling grunts in different keys not unlike that emitted by a donkey when braying. Again a rhinoceros which had been disturbed feeding at a very early hour in the morning by the writer in the Thayetmyo Yomahs dashed away to the top of a hill where it waited till it was approached to within about 25 paces, when before making off it emitted two tremendous snorts such as are emitted by bull bison or a large boar when similarly disturbed. With a pack of dogs or even two or three of these animals, a rhinoceros could easily be run down and brought to bay, for, like pigs they are soon winded especially if the weather is at all warm.

The Burmans can distinguish as indeed can any sportsman once he has been made aware of it, between a male and female rhinoceros when following up their tracks by noticing the way the young saplings, creepers or branches have been twisted by the animal's horn as it moves along when feeding. A female or male again with a short horn, according to a Burman shikari, cannot do this owing to the shortness of its horn. The more twisted the appearance of the creepers and branches the longer the horn is said to be. Another way of distinguishing whether one is on the tracks of a male or female rhinoceros when following up the tracks of an animal, as there is often little or no difference in the size or appearance of their tracks, is by carefully noting the position of their droppings when come up with. In the case of a male the ordure and urine will be found on the ground a foot or two apart, whereas in the case of a female they will be found together or scattered over the bushes in the immediate vicinity at a height of from three to four feet from the ground. The urine of a female as seen by me on one occasion was of a pale pinkish colour. The male no doubt when twisting saplings and creepers does so with the object of either cleaning its horn or of sharpening it, or simply because of the pleasing scratching effect obtained similar to the operations performed by horned cattle and deer, or perhaps from pure "cussedness" and enjoyment of life.

The rhinoceros of Burma all appear to be perfectly harmless and although the writer has accounted for five, of which two were wounded followed up and eventually bagged, there was no charging or aggressiveness on the part of any of the animals.

The Burma or Karen shikari does not seek to kill or catch the tapir unless it be to capture a young one for sale to some European or menagerie as their blood appears to possess no valuable property like the rhinoceros. The people of Tavoy and Mergui appear as a matter of fact to think it a sin to kill a tapir because as the legend has it, and as its Burmese name seems to imply the animal is considered to be holy and more or less sacred as it periodically about the full and new moon visits the nearer salt lick or hot springs of mineral and saline mud in the vicinity of its haunts as if to go into retreat or to make as it were its orisons. The word "Kyan-thu-daw" literally translated from Burmese would mean "Kyan" a rhinoceros and thudaw, a person devoted to the service of religion, or in other words the worshipping or holy rhinoceros or tapir, although why they should prefix the word "Kyan" before the "thudaw" I am unable to say. It may perhaps be because the shape of the animal's foot is not unlike that of a rhinoceros.

There is no doubt also that the rhinoceros visits salt licks once or twice a month at the full or new moon or about these periods.

The writer has never bagged a rhinoceros or indeed any other animal over a salt lick although his want of success has not been for want of trying. If a remote salt lick or "Ye ngan" as it is called by the Burmese, which is known to be frequented by elephants, bison, wild cattle, bos sondaicus, rhinoceros and the deer tribe, and which is situated at the foot of some high range of well wooded hills, is chosen and systematically visited for a few nights at the periods referred to above, by the sportsman, he should undoubtedly end in bagging a rhinoceros. It is at these salt licks also that the sportsman may, if luck smile upon him, and he is at all on the alert on a moonlight night, obtain a shot at the dreaded midnight prowler, who having marked down the salt lick as being within his own particular beat or reserve, may often be seen stalking expectantly forth along the well worn pathways used by animals on their way to the licks. It is absurd to say that such a form of sport in the case of a European sportsman who knows what he is shooting at, is poaching, any more than is shooting at game off the back of an elephant or at tiger in broad daylight from a safe position off a machan or at driven game in a bank. Of course if the sportsman wantonly shoots at any dark object which approaches the salt lick which he may have elected to sit over without knowing or caring at what he is shooting, then it is certainly time to criticise his actions. There is no doubt, of course, that when sitting over a salt lick in a poor light, there would be some danger of a sportsman wounding unnecessarily some animal which might get away to die a lingering death. On the other hand animals have also been wounded by sportsman on foot in broad daylight which have sometimes only escaped to die in the jungle. It has been said that unless a sportsman can so fix himself up at night over a salt lick with some lighting contrivance such as an electric projector in order to make certain of bagging his animal, he should not shoot at all. There is something to be said in favour of this but it should not be forgotten that elephant, bison, rhinoceros, wild cattle and sambur often visit a salt lick before sunset provided always the lick is situated far enough away from the haunts of man.

In Burma my experience has been that when the lick is situated a long way from any village and has not been visited by local shikaris, wild animals, especially sambur, visit it before dark or at dawn when there is no moon or when it is only a day or two old. As the moon increases in size each day, however, with a corresponding increase in the light the animals arrive at the lick at a later hour each evening, that is to say they would arrive at any hour between 7 and 10 P.M. or even later when there was a good moon visible instead of at between 5 and 7 P.M. when there was no moon. This does not apply so much in the case of elephant, gaur, or rhino, which, as a rule, stand in no fear of the tiger who haunts all salt licks and whose fresh pug marks may be seen by an early inspection of the game pathways leading to and from these licks. There is no doubt that all animals prefer to feed and be lighted by the rays of the moon. The reason for these visits by wild animals to salt licks do not appear to have been much noticed or commented on by sportsmen generally in any country for no doubt these salt deposits or animal health resorts exist elsewhere than in India and Burma. It would be interesting to hear what other sportsmen and naturalists have to say on the subject. From an inspection of the tracks leading to and from some of these saline deposits examined by the writer in Burma there is no doubt that they are more often visited by sambhur and barking deer than by any other animal. These animals appear to visit the licks daily. The elephant, gaur and tsine come next in the order named with a visit of, perhaps, once or twice a week, then comes the rhinoceros with a couple of visits in a month. There are regular beaten tracks leading to nearly all the most frequented salt licks and the writer has seen these pathways literally churned up into a sea of mud by the hoofs of animals coming and going. It should be noted, however, that these salt licks are only popular at certain times of the year. In fact there is a regular season when animals partake more freely of the brackish mud and water and that at other times there is a regular falling off in the number of visits paid by all the larger animals such as rhino, gaur, tsine and elephant. More visits are apparently paid to them between the months of December and June, than at any other period. Some salt licks which are more highly impregnated with salt deposits than others and which are situated far from the haunts of man are naturally these which are most frequented. During the monsoons from July to October most of the salt licks become inundated with water and the earth then no doubt is less palatable.

It is not easy to give a good reason for these visits paid by animals to salt licks but it is assumed that their digestive or intestinal troubles inform them at intervals that a course of this saline mud and water is necessary to free them from internal parasitic worms which are found in the paunches of nearly all wild animals and which if not expelled before they multiply to any great extent cause great trouble and are also often the means of disease breaking out amongst them.

On more than one occasion the writer has observed these parasites amongst the droppings of elephants which have been eating at these salt deposits. It is simply astonishing the large quantities of earth and gravel which elephants will put away at one meal. The writer once watched at a distance of about only 10 paces an old tusker elephant kick up and shovel down his throat a quantity of this saline earth and gravel weighing from quite 25 to 30lbs. before departing to drink at a stream close by. At some salt licks the water only is sucked up or drunk out of pools being in itself without the earth sufficiently impregnated with saline matter.

Many animals are, regardless of size or sex, wantonly slaughtered year after year at these salt licks by native shikaris throughout this province and it would be a good thing if everyone of them could be preserved by reserving the forest in which they are situated. Were this done there is no doubt that the big game of Burma would not diminish so rapidly as at present.

Fishing.

SEVENTEEN BLANK DAYS.

Now the records of those who shoot and those who fish, generally read as one cheerful series of successes, or failing that of success achieved at the final gasp against a concatination of circumstances that might well depress the most sanguine heart. And the tigers and bison that fall to unerring aim; and the big fish that plunge futilely in the green depths, only to be drawn at last on to the shelving beach, all these might lead one to suppose that shikar in India was all sweet without the bitter. Therefore it is as well that the reverse of the shield should be sometimes shown; unpalatable it may be, but to the novice who expects to find the India of old, it is as well to break it gently that times have somewhat changed. It was towards the end of April that I arrived at Solan, to find awaiting me the mules and coolies I had ordered beforehand. As heavy rain had fallen a day or two back, and storms still circled in the hills, the day was cool and the 10 mile march to Kharganu was done in well under the four hours. The day before my start I had met two men who had lately been fishing the Giri, and they both had the same cheerful tale to unfold, that there was not 2 feet of water in the river this year, and that practically no fish had yet run up from the Jumna. My only hope was that the late heavy rain had raised the water level a bit. Reaching the bungalow about half an hour before dusk, there was no doubt that the river was low, the only effect the rain had apparently produced was to make it dirty as well. Hastily putting together a small rod I tried a few casts in the Ashni junction, a spot that never before had failed to produce a fish or two, even though but small ones. But this time it proved absolutely blank, not a fin stirring. The next day dawned fine and the river was distinctly clearer, but though I fished my way steadily down to Majere, not even an offer rewarded me. But with the unfailing optimism of the angler I put it down to the fact of the water being still coloured, also thunder in the air, hoping for better things on the morrow. There was nothing to show Majere camp, but my cooly intimated to me that we had arrived when we reached an open space, rather dirtied by cattle, on the river bank. The kit was still behind and soon it became a race as to which would arrive first, the mules or a storm that was steadily working down stream. This being the reverse of the shield, it is needless to state that the latter was a good first, and for half an hour the cooly and I crouched under the shelter of a solitary tree in the middle of the camping ground. The three stages of comparison were soon worked through, wet, wetter, wettest, the cooly scoring here as he had practically no clothes to absorb the moisture. I tried sitting on my Silex reel, but the modicum of success I secured, did not really repay the discomfort. For one hour after the arrival of the mules, I cheered my bedraggled followers with the prophesy that the storm would soon pass. But annoyed apparently at such optimism the weather continued to get worse, till at last there was nothing for it but to pitch camp in the rain. Over the discomfort of that afternoon and night a veil may be drawn.

The next morning was fair but cloudy, the river however had risen nearly a foot and was now very dirty. Newar camp we made, by the grace of Providence, just before another heavy storm broke. Fishing was out of the question, but hope still sprang eternal, fifteen days lay before me and this was April, so that the temporary disturbance would soon pass away. The only thing to do now was to push on down to Sattibagh, there to catch the fish that would be bound to work up from the Jumna in this spate, and then I could fish back again up to Khargann when the river cleared. But now my troubles were to begin in earnest. Heavy rain must have been falling in the Baghi range, for the river which had been rising inch by inch, suddenly commenced to rise by feet, and the fords which before had been mere child's play, began to assume more serious proportions. The Nait brook was crossed 4 miles from Newar, and it was quite a treat to wade through its crystal clear waters, after continuous crossing and recrossing of a coffee coloured flood. A mile and a half on lay Khoorkna camp, in finding which slight difficulty was experienced, my cooly having apparently entered new worlds since we left Majere. The camp, however, when discovered, proved to be in a most delightful little wood, situate on a bluff overlooking the river. The rain had once more commenced to fall in a persistent drizzle, that boded ill and was really more depressing than a heavy downpour would have been. An interval, however, allowed of camp being pitched, this was done with care and trenches dug round the tents, since the appearance of the weather was not encouraging. And the precautions were not ill-timed, for at 4 o'clock in the afternoon commenced what I can only describe as monsoon. Heavy rain and dense mists, and for three days we hardly saw the sun, while the river continued to rise and rise, till the roar of the waters and ceaseless patter of the rain, nearly drove me to distraction when I thought of day after day of precious leave slipping by. But as friend Omar Khayam said "There was a veil through which I could not see," and better perhaps that you should remain his side, till a draggled crew once more emerge from the mists at Seun camp.

Here the weather improved though frequent showers were the order of the day, but the Giri roared and tossed, a chocolate coloured flood, utterly and hopelessly unfishable. The Palar burn joined the bigger river here, just below the camp, a stream of some size and pretensions forming quite a nice junction. Unfortunately it, too, was coloured, but as it did not look quite hopeless and being desperate, I put up my small rod and a 1 inch silver fly spoon. Then to the run above the junction. Here to my great surprise I rose a fish, and seeing no signs of doing so elsewhere, I hammered away at him for ages, till probably having reduced him to frenzy, in a gust of passion he seized my spoon and worried it. He weighed 2lb., and was a gladsome sight to one, who in six days of a fishing trip, had not yet seen a fish. Do what I might not another fish could I move, till sheltering from a downpour behind a rock, my cooly made a base suggestion. He was punished there and then by being sent forth in the rain to procure the worms, and about half an hour later he returned with a cloth full of the finest and reddest worms that ever gladdened the eyes of a patient riverside angler in the old country. There would be money in it, I'm sure, if only those Seun worms could be shipped home in large quantities. A single hook mounted and a young snake impaled, I worked out along a spit of land where the boil of the junction formed a backwater. To ascertain the depth in different parts, the cooly with my alpenstock waded in the mouth of the Palar and prodded with the stick. When he suddenly disappeared altogether, I knew that a good lie had been discovered, and while the cooly punished by a second wetting crawled forth, I slung in my worm.

Sport was not exhilerating, but it was better than sitting listening to the drip on one's tent, still I got a 1lb. mahseer in the first half hour. Then something big took hold, and the reel screamed, while my topee tilted over my eyes to allow of a brief doze, fell off into the river. The hat retrieved, the line was found to be slack, and reeling in one realized the obvious disadvantages of using a bait about 2 feet long, since nearly half the succulent worm was gone, and the fish had not condescended to take the hook at all. Just at the finish when the lowering clouds suggested more heavy rain, came another good tug, and for a short time I had hopes that I was into a really decent fish. But the heavy waters of the junction were deceptive, and the fish who fought well and gamely only drew the scales down to 4lb. when landed. Still fish figured on the menu for the first time that night. Myuth camp was missed, and the 10 miles to Sattibagh accomplished not without many difficulties. When we left Seun the Giri had dropped a little ,and the first four fords were negotiated without any serious trouble. But now the river suddenly commenced to rise at an alarming rate, and we were between the devil and the deep sea. Fords there were in front of us, and fords there lay behind us, and as it was impossible to camp where we were, the only thing left was to push ahead. A little over half way we came upon the ford that was all but to prove our Marathon. The river thrown off one bluff here, raced down and across the angle to a second bluff, and in the 100 yards before us a crossing had to be effected somehow. The advance guard in the shape of a cooly with a tentpole, stepped in gingerly, his not to reason why, but simply to do or die. We watched him breast the mill race till it reached his waist, then with a squeal of terror he was carried off his feet. Frenzied shouts that he was to save the tentpole even though he sacrificed his life, apparently reached him, as he crawled forth some 50 yards down on to the further bank bearing his burden safe.

Matters, however, were looking serious, a tremendous storm was flashing and echoing over the chur, and spreading rapidly across the heavens, swallowing voraciously every patch of blue sky. The mules to their credit showed no trace of nervousness, but followed their leader into the water, the best swimmers among the men keeping near them but not interfering with the animals, who were loose. It was a nervous few minutes, as had a mule stumbled the chances were against his emerging alive, and at any rate his loads would never have been seen again. But taking the current at an angle, the mules stumbling and swimming won across in grand style. The humans were not so fortunate, not one of them getting across without being carried away. I came last, and having reached three-quarter of the way across was full of pride, but a slippery rock and an extra surge of the current, and I disappeared beneath the muddy flood. That I was not drowned was due to the fact that I swam faster than any of my preservers, about five of whom with terrified shouts hurled themselves to the rescue, grabbing at my head, feet and arms, but luckily avoiding them I got ashore with no worse damage than the flooding of my watch which struck work there and then. Sattibagh was reached at last, though not without a minor catastrophe; at another bad ford a mule went down, and though we saved him, his loads were never seen again. Luckily being a bag of gram and another of atta, they were easily replaced, but with guns, clothes and valuable fishing tackle, one's anxieties at every ford were acute.

At Sattibagh Post Office no letters were to be found, which rather upset my plans. On complaining afterwards the letters were found to have gone to the D. L. O., Bombay! ! ! the Punjab Postal Authorities on being addressed assuring me that "Branch Office Ranka, Sattibagh, Simla Hills," was not a full enough address! (Italics are my own.). At Sattibagh two wet and weary days were passed, two other anglers being in camp here, our only amusement being to foregather and curse the weather. One other occupation there was, and that to visit the beautiful Ranka Tal, and tossing bread to the sacred fish, wish we could hook one or two of the biggest. Then came a fine day, and the Giri really began to clear, a second fine day in which I moved camp back to Seun produced a most cheering difference in the water and one's spirits.

But alas the higher the hopes the greater the fall, and as I sat having tea beneath a big mango tree outside my tent, a distant roar fell on my ear. Though the sky above was cloudless, there was no mistaking that ominous sound, and rushing to the bluff that overhung the river, we were just in time to see a fine sight. With a deafening roar the Giri raced down in spate, rising 8 feet in as many minutes, and carrying trees—and at least one dead bullock—down in a smother of chocolate foam. It was grand to watch it strike enormous rocks, that a minute before stood high and dry up on the bank, the coloured spray, caught by the wind that seemed to follow the waters, reaching right up to us on the cliff above. C'etait magnifique, but it was not fishing, and the last hopes of the river clearing during my leave were extinguished abruptly. The only other little excitement we had that day was a wager between two of my men, one betting the other a rupee that he would not swim across the river. I did my best to dissuade the man, but his theory was that his life was not worth a rupee at the best of times, and who was I to gainsay him! Besides anyone with a pessimism such as that was not born to be drowned. The man won his rupee, though I must admit my heart stood still once or twice, when the raging current carried him within a hairsbreadth of jagged foam tipped rocks. But he judged his crossing well, and landed some couple of 100 yards below where he went in. It was not till five days later at Majere that the river began to look a trifle less like coffee, and more like the sort of bathwater you gaze on after a Bombay to Pindi journey in May. But when the seventeenth day arrived, it was easy to see that no fishing was to be mine this trip, even could I wait another ten days. I had been suspicious of the sudden check in the clearing of the river the last two days, but now my worst fears were realized. It was unmistakedly and palpably coming down snow water. The continuous rain of the last fortnight was lying in snow on the lower ranges, up where the Giri had its source, and now that the fine weather was once more established, the heat was melting it rapidly. I did catch one fish in the Giri, no-one more surprised than myself. Spinning a big spoon idly in a long run, I found my bait hung up as I thought. The second jerk cleared it with a rush, and a 3lb. mahseer was brought to bank. So ended seventeen days of precious leave.

PROS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Could you kindly decide the following through the columns of your paper :—

H. says that strictly speaking any members of a lawn tennis club become professionals, if they take part in a sweepstake the value of which, in cash, goes to the winner of the tournament.

The tournament might be a small private one got up among a few members only, and there is no other prize but the value (in cash) of the sweepstake. Is H. right?

"DHA."

BURMA, 17th September 1909.

[No: winning a sweepstake does not make the winner a professional.—ED.]

A MIGHTY MAHSEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On the 20th of this month a friend and myself went to the Hutty and Cauverie Rivers for a four days' fish. We found the river a bit big but clear. The first day on the Hutty my friend moved one fish. The second day we fished the Hutty to its junction with the Cauverie and then on into the Cauverie. A little before 3 P.M. in the second run in the Cauverie, when I had given up all hope of moving a fish and at the end of the run when I was making my last cast, I got a tug at my line that fairly astonished me. Up stream he went for about 40 yards, then turned and came down, passing me in my coracle about 30 yards from me at a frightful pace taking out about 80 yards of line before he stopped, then made across the river and then up stream again and got under a rock. I got up above him and then came down to the rock, reeling up as I went, and when within 25 yards out he came and went down stream. I then made for the middle of the pool (which had a good current on it), my friend was below me and I signalled to him to come up, which he did after some trouble as the current was against him. I tried to keep the fish in mid stream as well as I could, he making runs all over the pool; after about an hour of this I got him fairly close to the coracle and he kept going round and round me. I putting on all the pressure I thought my rod and tackle would stand: this went on for over 30 minutes, but do what I could he would not come to the surface.

At last he came up a little and I got a glimpse of him. I worked away and managed to get his tail up, but he kept his head very low in the water. After two hours at him I found it was no go, I should never get him up, his weight was too much so I made up my mind to get him to the side of the pool and try and shelve him. I funked it as the bank was nasty looking with trees and roots around and some nasty bushes below and only one small clear space of about 15 yards. However, I managed to get him there and my friend followed in his coracle. We both stranded our coracles, my friend's below mine, and I managed to get the fish up close to his coracle, in fact more than half the fish was under it, when he gaffed him and with the help of our two boatmen we dragged him on to the bank, and then we saw what a beauty he was and I began to think I had broken my record of September 1906, when I killed a fish of 104lbs. But when we weighed him he scaled 103lbs. We then got the tape and measured him and found his dimensions as follows: weight 103lbs., length 64 inches, girth 39 inches, mouth across 8½ inches, tail across 19 inches. Very much the same as my record fish which was 104lbs.: length 66 inches, girth 37 inches, mouth and tail the same, i.e., 8½ and 19 inches.

I was using a 16-foot Hardy's salmon rod, cane built, steel centred (the second joint had a nasty bend in it just above the joint after the fight, but I am glad to say it is now straight again), a No. 8 spoon mounted by myself with a swivel and one treble hook, a Punjab wire trace (also made by myself), a Hardy's Silex reel and a tanned flax twine.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

DONCASTER.

To the comfort of racegoers fine weather predominated during the Doncaster Week, and except the national disappointment caused by the failure of Minoru all went merrily as a marriage bell. The wind dropped almost to a dead calm on the last day and about nine o'clock the sun began a pretty successful reign, almost dissolving the shade thrown by high, light, floating fleecy clouds—the most seasonable day of the four. That all interest in the week had not been absorbed by the St. Leger was shown by the staunch support the Yorkshiremen accorded the Cup, a race whose traditions in the North rival those of the now much more important event instituted by handsome Jack Leger, whose memory it perpetuates to a more business-like posterity. WARWICK.

The weather here on Monday was of a wretched description, rain falling incessantly during the morning and continuing during the time racing was in progress. This state of things naturally affected the attendance to a considerable degree, the muster in the principal ring being a poor one ; while the heavy settling over Doncaster kept many would-be visitors in town. However, compensation was to a certain extent forthcoming in that four out of the six favourites during the afternoon realised expectations, to the great delight of backers ; although the defeat of Welbury in the opening event was a severe blow. Results :—

Folk who patiently endured the damp discomforts of Monday had their reward, next day when a mellow autumn day, with a capful of wind from nor'-east to reminded us of the change of season. The attendance was materially increased, and the crowd on the course was a big one. The fair sex was numerously represented in the club enclosure, in which were many county notabilities. Tattersall's was better filled, and the lacking "go and vim" was infused into the proceedings by larger fields and closer finishes on soft going. Results:—

FOOTBALL.

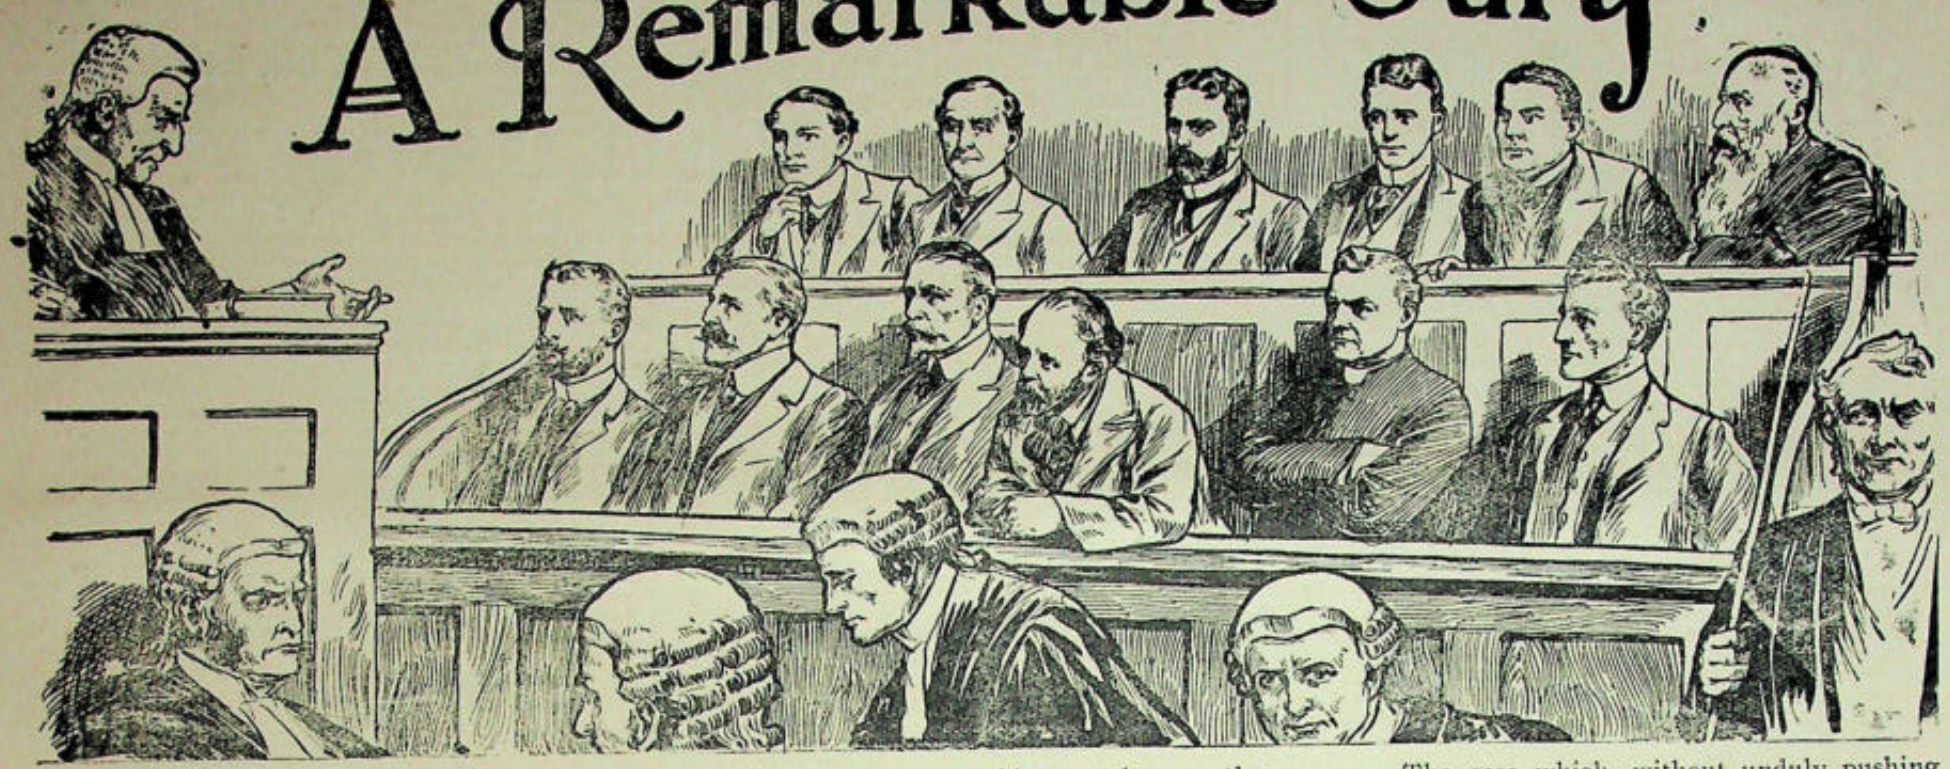
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALWAYS popular, Tottenham Hotspur made themselves the most famous of London professional clubs when they won the Association Cup and brought the chief honours of the game to the South again. Nine seasons later they have distinguished themselves by checking the victorious career of Manchester United—most famous of present-day football teams—on the occasion of their first home match as a League championship club. The Hotspurs, in the absence of V. J. Woodward and Walton, two of the forwards that helped them to greatness last season, began with two defeats, and when the side that had won three victories put on a couple of goals in the first five minutes, nothing better than a disastrous beating seemed in store. By the aid of two penalty kicks the Hotspur got on terms, and their defence, hopelessly outclassed at the start, held the Manchester forwards for the rest of the game. Fully 35,000 people saw the match, and, as the play went, they had every reason for growing enthusiastic. The Hotspurs played well, but must become more reliable in checking clever forwards.

Chelsea had a bad day, losing to Aston Villa by 4 goals to 1. Such a score points clearly to weakness in defence. The Villa had gained just as handsome a win over Woolwich Arsenal on the opening day of the season, and on Saturday the Plumstead team lost at Middlesbrough by 5 to 2. Until their halves and backs have a better understanding the Arsenal must fare badly.

Visiting clubs took a fair share of the honours on Saturday, Notts Forest, Bradford City, and Everton enjoying the distinction of winning away from home, and four teams dividing the points. Chief credit belongs to the Forest team, who beat Newcastle United, holders of the championship, after having the first goal scored against them. No great reliance can at present be placed in any team, but Manchester United, Aston Villa, Notts Forest, Sunderland, and Everton are playing well and meeting with rewards commensurate with their ability.

In the Second Division of the League home clubs generally had the better of matters, six being successful, but there were a couple of rather surprising results, Oldham Athletic and Bradford losing on their own grounds and so confusing form somewhat. The two London clubs had different experiences, for while Fulham gained a well-merited victory over Glossop at Craven Cottage, Clapton Orient, from whom so much had been expected after their fine form the previous week, suffered defeat at Grimsby in a game in which their attack was sigularly weak. No fewer than five amateurs were playing in the match at Fulham, Glossop having four and Fulham one. T. Ritchie and H. S. Stapley did not reveal their best form. A. Berry, the old Oxonian, who was in the England team against Ireland at Bradford last season, played in fine style, and was quite the best of the Fulham front rank. The cleverest man on the field was James Sharp, the Scottish International full back, and to his splendid efforts Fulham owed not a little. Last season, it may be recalled, Fulham lost the corresponding match, but they have now taken an ample revenge. His injured ankle having recovered, L. A. Louch, the Shepherd's Bush amateur, took his place as centre forward for Clapton Orient against Grimsby Town, but the Orient forwards were weak. Late in the game Whittaker gave a fine display in goal, but that only saved Clapton Orient from a heavier defeat.



After winning three matches off the reel Hull City had their triumphant career checked at Wolverhampton, where each side scored twice in a very hard fought game, while Blackpool received a set-back at Gainsborough. Following their unexpected reverse at home during the week from Stockport County (whom they had already defeated at Stockport), West Bromwich Albion created a surprise by beating Oldham Athletic in good style, while Leicester Fosse also won away from home in a match in which they had been expected to be hard pressed. There were a couple of heavy-scoring games. Manchester City finding their best form and getting six goals to two against Lincoln City, while Barnsley beat Birmingham by five to one.

In the Southern League last season's champions, Northampton, gained their first victory. They had already suffered defeats from Coventry City and Leyton, but, playing at home against Plymouth Argyle, they were seen to considerable advantage, and secored five times to their opponents' once. Substantial as this success was, it did not approach Swindon's sensational win at Reading. Outplaying the Reading men at every point, Swindon actually obtained nine goals to one—a victory that recalls their remarkable score early last season against Norwich City when they won by ten goals to two. It is quite evident that Swindon are a very good side, for during the week they beat Brentford by four goals to none, and no surprise would be felt if they turned out champions—a distinction they narrowly missed last April. At the same time, Reading must be weak, New Brompton having defeated them by seven goals to one. With the exception of Millwall and Brentford, the London clubs have started the season in satisfactory style. The newly promoted Croydon Common accomplished a smart performance by beating Millwall at North Grenwich. Colpus, who was previously an amateur, playing a very effective game. Like Reading, Brentford had previously taken part in four matches without scoring a goal, but though they obtained a couple against West Ham United they had to admit defeat. Queen's Park Rangers showed improved form against Leyton and won, but Crystal Palace could only draw with Watford.

LEAGUE—DIVISION I.

HOTSPUR vs. MANCHESTER U.—The first match of the Tottenham club in the First Division of the League at Tottenham proved a great attraction to North Londoners, fully 35,000 turning out to see Manchester United play the Hotspurs. The teams had rather different records, Manchester having won all their three matches, while Tottenham had lost to Sunderland and Everton in the north. With the exception that Downie played at left for Bell in the Manchester side, the teams were both at full strength. Tottenham people had a severe shock right at the start of the game, Manchester scoring twice in the first five minutes. The first came from a brilliant singlehanded effort by J. Turnbull. He ran right round Morris and Coquet and easily beat Boreham. A minute later Turnbull tested Boreham with a fast shot which the Tottenham goalkeeper did well to fist out. Wall got the ball from the rebound and scored with a shot which touched the post on its way to the net. For a time the Tottenham men went all to pieces, but they gradually pulled themselves together and the game was played at a great pace. Both goalkeepers had hot shots to stop and Tull once hit the upright with a stinging shot. A little later Tull was tripped in the penalty area, and from the free kick R. Steel scored for Tottenham. Both goals had narrow escapes prior to the interval, but nothing more was scored. Tottenham had much the best of the exchanges after the interval, but Moger kept a brilliant goal. A bad trip by Stacey, which laid Minter out in the penalty area, ended in Steel scoring a second penalty goal. After this the play was fast and exciting up to the end. Middlemiss

A Remarkable Jury.

WHAT a sensation would be created throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire could a jury be empanelled of such eminent men as the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Norwich; Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, artist and litterateur; Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., statesman and author; Sir William Bull, M.P., famous in the business world and well-known as a solicitor; Sir John Hare, one of the greatest actors living; the Venerable William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London; Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., M.P., one of the best known men at the bar; Mr. Walter Crane, as noted as a lecturer as he is an artist; Mr. Hall Caine, the famous novelist; Mr. Max Pemberton, one of the most popular writers of the day; Mr. C. B. Fry, whose name is known wherever athletics are practised; and Mr. Cyril Maude, one of the finest comedians on the London stage.

The newspapers would report the case they tried, word for word, while the demeanour of the jury would be scrutinised by the most competent descriptive writers, eager to catch every passing phase of expression on their faces as a hint to the verdict they might give.

In this picture, the gentlemen who constitute the jury are the distinguished ones whose names have been mentioned above. They have not only tried the case submitted to them, but they have actually given their verdict on evidence brought before them—by their own senses. In this way, there is no possibility of a miscarriage of justice, as there sometimes is when the evidence is laid before the jury by skilful advocates, trained to make the best of their cause. This jury's verdict, though unanimous, is expressed by each individual, so that the public may know exactly what he thinks.

The case which, without unduly pushing the metaphor, they tried was that of Sanatogen. The evidence on which their verdict was given was the effect of Sanatogen in revitalising the blood, reinforcing the strength after strain, restoring waning vitality, re-creating nervous energy, replenishing the jaded system, and generally stimulating and building up the natural forces after disease until they were once more as vigorous as they ever were, and the health was made as perfect as that of which the individual was capable.

The verdict of the jury was unanimously in favour of the power of Sanatogen—universally recognised as the greatest tonic-food science has given the world—to produce these results and even more than these. Here are the individual statements of the gentlemen empanelled in the Remarkable Jury:

THE VERDICT.

MR. HALL CAINE, the author and dramatist:
"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

MR. MARSHALL HALL, K.C.:
"I think it only right to say that I have tried Sanatogen, and I believe it to be a most excellent food."

Marshall Hall

MR. MAX PEMBERTON, the distinguished editor and author:
"I beg to say that I have been taking your Sanatogen since the beginning of the year, and would not be without under any circumstances whatever."

Max Pemberton

THE VEN. ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR:
"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

SIR JOHN HARE, the popular actor:
"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

MR. WALTER CRANE, the eminent authority on decorative art:
"In recovering from a rather sharp attack of influenza, I certainly found Sanatogen, prepared with milk, beneficial in its effects."

Walter Crane

MR. C. B. FRY, the famous cricketer:
"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, especially valuable in nervous exhaustion, to which men who undergo severe training are liable."

C. B. Fry

SIR WILLIAM BULL, M.P.:
"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

William Bull

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the author and traveller:
"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

MR. CYRIL MAUDE, the eminent comedian:
"I have found Sanatogen quite wonderful. I often take it now during the performance, when I feel rather done up."

Cyril Maude

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH says:
"Mrs. Sheepshanks is taking Sanatogen regularly, and deriving great benefit from it."

LORD RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER:
"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath or Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

Sanatogen produces the remarkable results to which these distinguished men attest by being at once a food and a tonic, each of which helps and reinforces the other. No secret has ever been made of its composition, which, on the contrary, has always been openly stated. It is made of milk proteid, the substance on which the food value of milk depends, and a special form of phosphorus, one of the most important constituents of the nervous system. Instead of being merely mixed together, however, these two substances are combined chemically. This alters their nature and makes the compound more easily assimilated by the body, thereby giving the necessary nourishment to nerve and muscle and improving the quality of the blood. For these reasons Sanatogen has become the sheet-anchor of the physician in India in treating Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever, and the after-effects of these and other devitalising complaints.

Besides these, some 10,000 physicians have voluntarily testified in writing to the excellent results they have obtained from the use of Sanatogen in the treatment of diseases depending on poor digestion and loss of nerve force, with their attendant train of depressing symptoms like sleeplessness, loss of memory, inability to stand fatigue or to sustain the ordinary duties of life.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which, by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

GROWING HAIR BY THE CALENDAR.

Watch the Calendar for a Week and See How Rapidly Your Hair Will Improve with Only Seven Days' "Harlene Hair-Drill.

ALL THE MATERIAL AND INSTRUCTIONS NECESSARY FOR CARRYING OUT THIS VALUABLE TOILET TEST SENT FREE BY REQUEST.

The popularity of "Harlene Hair-Drill" is largely due to the rapid results it gives. "Harlene Hair-Drill" grows beautiful hair in a week—it stops hair from falling out in four days. There has never been anything to compare with "Harlene Hair-Drill" so far as its practically instantaneous action in developing the beauty, colour, and luxuriance of the hair is concerned. A week's trial of "Harlene Hair-Drill" convinces everyone of the almost magical effect of the new method in growing new hair upon bald or thin patches, in restoring the lustre and colour to grey or faded hair, in removing scurf, in increasing the lustre and glossy luxuriance of "Woman's crowning glory."

Practise the rules for "Harlene Hair-Drill" as drawn up by Mr. Edwards, the eminent Royal and Court Hair Specialist, and discoverer of "Harlene-for-the Hair," and you can literally watch your hair growing thicker, and longer, and more beautiful. You can grow hair by the calendar—a calendar only seven days long. Test this yourself. Try it for a week. If you accept the offer given here to-day you can test the merits of the "Harlene Hair-Drill" at Mr. Edwards' own expense. Fill up the coupon given below and send it together with three pence in stamps to cover the carriage and you will be sent in return, free of any charge or obligation, a supply of "Harlene" sufficient for a week's "Harlene Hair-Drill," together with a book containing the full directions for this best of all methods of cultivating the beauty and strength and health and luxuriance of the hair.

"Harlene Hair-Drill" only takes a couple of minutes of the day, but the effect takes years off your appearance. And as after the week's trial you will desire to continue this successful method of Hair-culture and Preservation, you may like to know that further supplies of "Harlene" may be obtained from ordinary enterprising chemists or stores, or it will be sent direct on receipt of postal order (which must include postage) from the Edwards' Harlene Co., 95-96, High Holborn, London, W.C., in 1s., 2s 6d., and 4s. 6d. bottles.

The Practical Outcome of many Careful Tests.

IN THE VAILE BALL WE HAVE NOW ATTAINED WHAT IS REQUIRED.

In his article in the "Times" of March 16, 1909, SIR RALPH PAYNE-GALLWEY says:—

"From such practical tests it is evident that the surface of a golf ball is far too rough, and that it would fly with more accuracy and further, especially with a head or a side wind, had it much less numerous and prominent markings on its cover."

And in his later article he conclusively demonstrates that a smoother ball than that at present used is required for putting.

MIDDLESBROUGH vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—In meeting Woolwich Arsenal at Ayresome Park, Middlesbrough had the same team in the field as beat Sheffield Wednesday. The Arsenal left out Dick and Cross. With fine weather prevailing, there were about 12,000 people on the ground, and those present had the satisfaction of seeing the home team play a brilliant game in the first half. The Woolwich defence could do nothing right, and at the end of twenty-five minutes Middlesbrough were three goals to the good. Dixon obtained the first point and Hall the second and third. In the meantime Bloomer had failed with a penalty kick. Middlesbrough held the upper hand to half-time, and Hull put on a fourth goal. Some sensational play marked the resumption, as in less than two minutes Dixon scored a fine goal for Middlesbrough. Then from a free kick Beney headed through for Woolwich Arsenal, while ten minutes later he added another point After that the game was finely contested, but nothing more was scored. Middlesbrough, 5; Arsenal, 2.

ASTON VILLA vs. CHELSEA.—The meeting of Aston Villa and Chelsea at Aston Park proved a great attraction, the attendance at the start numbering fully 20,000 people. The weather was dull and recent rain had rendered the turf soft and greasy. Throughout the first half Aston Villa proved themselves by far the better side at all points, their defence being sound and their forwards well backed up by the halves setting up many strong attacks. The Chelsea team played in lifeless manner and were never really dangerous. At the end of fifteen minutes Gerrish scored for the Villa, and before half time the same player followed suit with two more goals. Jones missed a good chance for Chelsea. On resuming the game was more evenly contested and on several occasions Chelsea were rather unlucky not to score. It was not until thirteen minutes from the finish that anything further was scored, Bache putting on a fourth goal for Aston Villa. In the closing stages Jones got through. THE LEAGUE.—DIVISION II.

FULLHAM vs. GLOSSOP.—In point of cleverness Fulham were the better team at Craven Cottage, but Glossop, who beat them in the corresponding match of last year, showed a capital turn of speed and sufficient enterprise to make a good match of it. Fulham ultimately won by 2 goals to 0, but their forwards gave anything but a convincing display for the greater portion of the game. Against full-backs who were very speedy they were prone to dally too much in the early stages, but later in the game they showed form in advance of that of last season. Berry, the old Oxonian, being very clever at outside right. Mavin, the new centre-half from New Brompton, was a great success, but the best football of the day was shown by Sharp, the Fulham left-back, whose placing was perfect. Glossop had four amateurs in their forward line, including T. T. Fitchie at inside left. The old Woolwich amateur, however, was not seen at his best, mainly owing to lack of speed. After a good start much rough-and-tumble play ensued, some of the Glossop men being more than a trifle impetuous. Forty minutes expired before Fulham scored their first goal, this being headed by Harrison from a fine centre by Berry. Glossop made many good attempts to equalise in the second half, and Skene did well to save two shots in quick succession from Raine. Dalrymple lost a chance by shooting widly, but eventually Collins made Fulham safe by scoring with a high shot from a corner. The afternoon was beautifully fine and the attendance numbered 25,000. SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

RANGERS vs. LEYTON.—After an exceptionally hard and fast game Queen's Park Rangers gained a well-deserved victory over Leyton by 2 goals to 1. About 14,000 people turned up at Park Royal, but neither team was able to put their full side into the field, the Rangers being short of Hartwell and Mitchell, for whom Radnage and Wentworth played. Leyton were short of Durrant, Kingaby turning out in his place. The game was hard and fast from the start, and although injuries were many, bad fouls were few. At the start Leyton were quickly into their stride and with the Rangers' half-backs rather weak, Shaw had plenty of work to do. In less than ten minutes two goals were recorded. Leyton got the first, Kingaby converting a fine centre from Kirwan; while almost from the re-start Whyman took a nice pass from Barnes and scored a somewhat soft goal. The same player again put the ball into the net, but the whistle went for off-side. In a mix-up Robertson was hurt, and had to retire until the interval, when the score was 1 all. In the second half the game was contested at top speed and the Leyton defence being hardly worked, used their weight rather unnecessarily. Steer was rather badly knocked about by Busby, but the Rangers' forwards would not be denied, and Whitbourne had a lot of work to do. At one stage the ball was kept in front of the Leyton goalkeeper for a quarter of an hour, Radnage, Barnes, and McNaught all sending in hot shots, and fully deserved to score. A collision between Travers and Wake resulted in the former being carried off the field suffering from concussion and an injured rib, and while he was away Steer put the Rangers ahead with a shot from close quarters. The two doctors who immediately attended Travers considered his injuries to be very serious, and he was removed to the West London Hospital in an unconscious condition. Queen's Park Rangers, 2; Leyton, 1.

WEST HAM vs. BRENTFORD.—If the football seen at Upton Park, where West Ham beat Brentford 3—2, was not high class, it was fast and interesting, and there was plenty of incident. West Ham were a shade the better side, but the goal scoring was more or less accidental. The locals relied upon the same side that beat Exeter and won at Norwich, while Brentford were again without Rhodes, their full back. Buxton, however, was an efficient deputy and, indeed, he was one of the best defenders on the field. West Ham took the lead five minutes after the start following a corner, and it was Shea who beat Ling. Ruston missed a fine opportunity of equalising directly after. Shea was indirectly responsible for the second to West Ham, as he shot hard at the net and Stewart turned the ball past Ling. Kitchen was rather weak in clearing the ball, and twice just before the change of ends he was at fault. In this way Brentford were level at the interval. Their first goal was scored by Rushton, Anderson crossing the ball. Their second was from Reid, who headed through. Shea headed the only and winning goal for West Ham during the second half. The referee had some little difficulty in keeping the men in hand during the closing stages when West Ham rather overplayed their opponents. At this time Ling, the Brentford goalkeeper, was at his best, and among other things he made fine saves from Blackburn and Haynes. There were 10,000 spectators. West Ham, 3; Brentford, 2.

CRYSTAL PALACE vs. WATFORD.—The progress of the Place received a check at Sydenham yesterday when Watford took away a point in a drawn game of a goal each. The visitors accomplished this by a plucky display when they were apparently a well beaten team, for in the whole of the first half the superiority of the home side was most marked and Watford were extremely lucky to be only one goal down at the interval. This point came from a clever individual effort by Payne, who finished up with a shot that sent the ball in off the post and at a great pace. On many other occasions further goals were only narrowly averted, but Higgins, who deputised for Biggar in the Watford goal, did very well indeed, and kept all sorts of shots out. A curious change came over the game after the interval, for the Palace forwards lost all their effectiveness, and the Watford line began to take a hold on the game. Cleaver got through, but an apparently good goal was disallowed. Maclaine, however, soon equalised, and the balance of the remaining play was so much in favour of the visitors that they were unlucky not to score again. There were 8,000 spectators. Crystal Place, 1; Watford, 1.

MILLWALL vs. CROYDON COMMON.—At Millwall, before 6,000 spectators. After their previous defeats by Southend and Southampton the East Enders decided to make changes in their team. Glen was introduced at inside right, and with Jones dropped at inside left, Twigg was transferred to take his place. So far the changes were justified by results, although Twigg missed a penalty kick just before half time which might have won the game for his side. It was at half back, however, that Millwall were weakest. Wilson, who displaced McCormack in the centre, altogether failed to come up to expectations. He was terribly slow, and, besides neglecting to feed his own forwards, did little effective tackling, and it was he who was chiefly at fault in permitting Hodgkinson to make that shot from thirty yard's range which led to the winning goal. This was about nine minutes after the interval, and Joyce, who had previously made some good saves, was quite surprised with the uncertain fight of the ball. Joyce and the two Millwall backs played well enough, and Blythe sustained his reputation as a hardworking half, but the forwards were uneven, certain being slow, while Morris and Semple although enterprising, lacked restraint. Croydon appear to be a well-balanced team, and in Hewitson, who gave one of his best displays at Millwall, the South Londoners have a finished custodian. Boden was the better of two useful backs, and the three halves, Ryan, Yenson, and Garrett, shadowed their rivals splendidly. The forwards combined prettily, and Hodgkinson, who had to retire through injuries just before time, was very smart, Colpus and Frost making a good right wing. Croydon Common, 1; Millwall, 0.

CYCLING AND ATHLETICS.

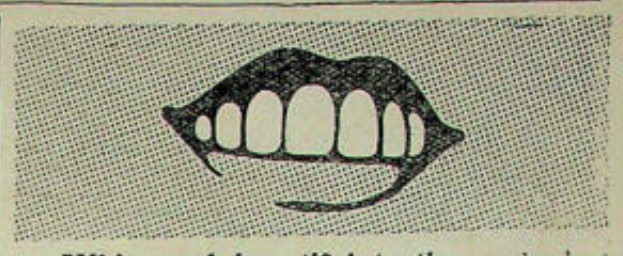
MARATHON RUNNER'S SUCCESS.—At New Maldon, on Saturday, D. F. McNicol, of the Polytechnic Harriers, won the Surrey Athletic Club's mile invitation scratch race by 25 yards, from F. A. Knott, of the South London Harriers in 4min. 27⅘sec.; and with 15 yards start, also won the half-mile open handicap in 1min. 59⅕sec.

Knott, with 30 yards start, won the 600 yards open handicap in 1min. 13⅗sec. E. H. Montague, the quarter mile ex-champion and holder of the records (1min. 11sec. on cinders and 1min. 13⅘sec. on grass), was at scratch, but did not finish, as he experienced great difficulty in working his way past his man after going about 400 yards.

SOUTHEND HARRIERS SPORTS.—That the long and arduous journey of walking from London to Brighton in 8hr. 35min. 3sec., in the Polytechnic Harriers' open race, on the 4th instant, had not entirely deprived F. E. Roberts of his pace, was shown at the Southend Harriers' sports on Saturday, when, with 185 yards start, he secured second place in the two miles open walking handicap. The winner was W. R. Hendry, with 600 yards start. His time was 14min. 11sec. At the same meeting A. Haigh (holder) won the catch-as-catch-can light-weight wrestling championship of Essex, and T. M. Ellis, with 2min. 12sec. start, won the three miles flat handicap. A half-mile cycle handicap was declared void through the competitors riding inside the flags, and time did not permit of the race being re-ridden during daylight.

100 MILES CYCLING RACE.—On the Crystal Palace track on Saturday, E. V. Norman (holder) won the Anerley Club's "Fry" Challenge Cup for the third occasion in a 100 miles cycle race. His time was 3hrs. 56mins 15⅘secs. H. Knowles was second in 4hrs. 30⅘secs and L. E. Hale, a son of the once famous cyclist E. Hale, was third, in 4hrs. 1min. 9⅘secs. Norman also won the sealed handicap from scratch. He is a well-known member of the Blackheath Harriers, and, in addition to being a splendid cyclist, is a good long-distance runner. He finished third in the Blackheath Harriers' "Marathon" Race on 4th April, 1908, when he covered 24 miles in 53mins. 52⅘secs. and he was one of those who went the full course in the Polytechnic Harriers' Trial "Marathon" Race for the Olympic Games.

In Saturday's race B. H. Hogan rode a tricycle, and beat all records for that type of machine from 40 miles to 100 miles inclusive. His time for the 100 miles was 4hrs. 26mins. 56⅘secs., 31mins. 37secs. faster than the previous best.



BILLIARDS.

M. INMAN vs. W. COOK.—This fortnight's match ended on Saturday evening at the Grand Hall, Leicester-square, in a victory for Cook, who, from first to last, made it clear that his concession of 5,000 points start in 18,000 up was far too lenient. His winning balance proved to be no less than 1,923 points. As is customary with him, Inman tried desperately hard to accomplish his heavy task, but he was far too heavily handicapped.

Despite the one-sided nature of the match the scoring-board showing the positions at 16,795 to 15,094, in favour of Cook, there was yet a goodly attendance to witness the afternoon proceedings. These came to a somewhat summary conclusion with the leader scoring his required complement of points in one hour and a quarter. Playing at his best, Cook made breaks of 241 (from 45 unfinished), 103, 127, 163 (the last 41 points being scored off the red ball), and 45 unfinished. He averaged 74 points per innings for a total of 666. Inman made no bigger breaks than 74 and 59 in an aggregate of 224, put together at an average of 24 2 3 per innings.

The concluding chapter on Saturday evening found Inman in improved form. He scored breaks of 161, 94, 79, 53, 44 and 43 (twice), in compiling 760 points, gained at an average of 27 1-7 per innings. Cook was not seen at his best, and his total of 539 produced nothing higher than 50 (from the unfinished item), 65, 60, 43, and several thirties, and an average of 18 2-3 points per innings. Final scores:

W. Cook (rec. 5,000) 18,000
W. Inman 16,077

White and beautiful teeth are the best possible letters of recommendation. They show the character of the possessor. We are aware that their brightness and their perfect health are direct indications of care bestowed upon them; that is to say, of the self-respect and love of cleanliness of the individual. In effect, you may safely judge a man by his use of Odol, the liquid antiseptic dentifrice and mouth-wash, which every man and woman of distinction and character is now using for cleansing the mouth and teeth.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 23rd September.—Lascelles Covert 7.30 A.M. The morning was bright and clear and a good many people turned up at the Meet. We had just moved off down the old Pykara Road when a jack was viewed in the swamp near Mackenzie's Crossing. The pack was close to him as he rose the hill to Brooklands and dived down into the covert, he dodged round for a bit and then went away from the bottom to the Demon Valley Stream. Crossing it he pointed for Rocky but had not gone far when he changed his mind and swung sharp back to the left over the Stream, rose Tall Bar Hill and the next one back to the swamp from which he started, and it looked as if Bagman was to be his point, but unfortunately he was headed and turned back over the swamp. Leaving Bingham on his left ran over the hill and the Seegur Road down across Farrier's Crossing to the Rifle Butts, then to the left into Hanging Shola. A fresh jack going away from the bottom of the Covert led hounds to the top of the Seegur Ghat. They were stopped and brought to Hanging Shola, but the hunted jack had moved off. Hounds touched a stale line at the top of the covert and worked it slowly down to the head of the Demon Valley but threw up on the other side of the stream. On visiting Brooklands again a couple of jacks were roused. One of them led hounds round by the Jack Bridge up towards Hanging Shola but got to ground in a small watercourse before reaching it, out of which neither Kitty nor Scoks could move him. The sun was very hot by now and though several more jacks were found nothing more was done

Monday, 27th September.—Golf Corner 7-30 A.M. As hounds drew over the hill to Rees' Corner a jack was viewed away. With heavy dew on the grass and scent lying well hounds started running with a tremendous cry. They drove him through Dairymaid and Denmark down to the stream below the Avalanche Road and up into Cairn Hill, and though they were close at him all the way they lost him in this dense covert. On drawing back by Long Swamp along Bagman hounds touched a line and carried it back to Jackal, where a jack was viewed just outside the covert. Going off at a good pace across the Krurmund Road and holding Monkey on their right, they raced down the Najanad Valley to the left of the Stream. Crossing it at Dharma Tope rose the hill to the top of Pangar Shola where the jack was viewed dead beat, but by this time the sun had dried up the dew and scent failed altogether, and though they could barely own to the line they carried it on as far as Sambur Shola but were unable to do anything more. A move was made homewards, but at the head of Kuruthugulli Shola hounds struck a line and carried it down to Egerton Bog, then swung round through Climbank and below Middlebit Shola right up over the top of Vokol Hill. From here they swept down hill to Beaulieu, and turning left handed skirted Mattey Bog and continued the chase into Sambur Shola where scent gave out altogether and nothing more could be done.

FLAT RACING IN ENGLAND.

1. LINCOLN TO GOODWOOD.

On casting one's eye over the first half of the present season which Goodwood brings to a close, it is extremely satisfactory to note that the fears so generally entertained that the equine heroes imported from the United States would deprive our home-bred animals of many of our chief prizes, have not been realized. Gossip now says that the autumn will see the American Star in the ascendant, and this may be so, for there is no doubt that such as Balot, Colin and Priscillian are horses of the highest class, while Fair Play II., Delirium and others are really good handicappers, though they have failed so far to win a race in England, due no doubt to the fact that being of the older generation they have failed to become acclimatized as quickly as their younger companions, and it may well be that before the curtain is rung down at Manchester these fine horses will have done something more nearly approaching their best deeds across the "Herring Pond" and the reputation brought over with them. Among the American three-year-olds, Sir Martin, Perseus and Mediant have given us a taste of their quality, though they have not proved themselves better than good class handicappers, while the American two-year-olds may be rightly dubbed as "medium."

The Lincolnshire Handicap fell to Duke of Sparta who started at 20 to 1 and beat the more fancied Arranmore, who gave him 9lb., by a half a length, with Longcroft third, and thus continued the long run of successful outsiders which was the outstanding feature of the previous year's racing. Arranmore was greatly fancied with Wootton in the saddle and the form is inexplicable in view of latter running, as not only did Arranmore win the Newbury Cup in a canter and also the Durdans Palte at Epsom but he also finished second to Dark Ronald in the Hunt Cup at Ascot, where he gave Duke of Sparta 11lbs. and lost him. The remainder of the races at Lincoln, minor handicaps and second-rate two-year-old sprints or 4 furlongs, call for but little comment, and much the same can be said of Liverpool, except for the Spring Cup which fell to Star of Doon and the Grand National Steeplechase, which appeared so open that the record price of 100 to 9 was offered on the field at flag-fall, Shady Girl and Lutteur III. being joint favourites at that price while victory rested with Lutteur, Judas being second at 33 to 1 and Caubeen third. The winner is a fine gelding bred, owned, and trained in France, though for some weeks previous to the race he was under the care of Escott at Lewes, who gave the final touches to his preparation. By St. Damien out of Lausanne and only 5 years old, he accomplished a rare feat in defeating the huge field of 32 runners the first time he had ever faced the huge Liverpool fences, and with a jockey (Parfrement) in the saddle also a stranger to the course. His victory was by no means unexpected, for in the Champion Steeplechase at Hurst Park some weeks earlier he had defeated Mount Prospects Fortune, Leinster and other aged cracks at level weights. Doubtless he would have started at a far more cramped price but for the fact that so many urge that age and experience is a sine qua non to success over the tiring Aintree course. The statistics of the race certainly bear out this contention, for not since Empress won in 1880 had a five-year-old won, though on the other hand the number of five-year-olds entered is very small compared to that of the older horses.

Passing on to the Epsom Spring Meeting, we find Laughing Mirror capture the Great Metropolitan at a long price, and White Eagle in receipt of 9lb. beat the old warrior Dean Swift by a length and a half with Lafayette third in the City and Surburban. Right gallantly has the old Dean performed in this race; out of six attempts he has won it twice, was second twice and third once. So consistently has the old gelding run that he always gets those few pounds extra from the handicappers that are just fatal to success, so that sandwiched in between his seconds in this year's City and Suburban, Great Jubilee and Liverpool Summer Cup, it is comforting to chronicle his well-deserved success in the rich weight-for-age Coronation Cup at the Epsom Summer Meeting, where he took revenge on White Eagle at level weights by an easy victory of three lengths; surely he will now finish his days in peace and will not, as one of the "Knowalls" asserts, be specially prepared for the Cambridgeshire and then be retired to the stud! The next two important handicaps fell to good class four-year-olds and showed us that they are quite up to the average of former years. In the Chester Cup Santo Strato carried top weight of 9st., and though the field was not numerically strong he won like a gallant horse giving the disappointing All Black who was second 9lb. and Tirailleric colt nearly 3st. Santo Strato is one of the few good class genuine stayers of the present day and is now resting from his labours in the Spring, but it will be strange if he does not do further good services in the popular dark blue and yellow cap of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild: he is just the sort to win the Cezarewitch, which is run over a course that should suit him better than Chester, where the turns are not in favour of a big far-striding colt. The Jubilee Handicap at one time promised to be the handicap of the season with all the American cracks entered, Your Majesty, Llangwm and a host of other good horses, a promise, however, which was not fulfilled; from one cause or another every good class horse, except the ubiquitous Dean Swift and Galvani, failing to put in an appearance. The race, however, by no means lacked interest and Dean Swift was a strong favourite on his City and Suburban form, though he just failed by three parts of a length to give Ebor 17lb, their respective weights being 8st. 10lbs. and 7st. 7lbs. Captain Dewhurst, who trained Ebor also supplied the third, Succour, a consistent horse always carrying a few pounds too much. Ebor followed in the footsteps of last year's winner Hayden and Royal George a few years ago, each having run a good fourth in the City and Suburban of this year. Rushcutter was a dismal failure in the Jubilee, and when again backed for the Manchester Cup he had to put up with second place to Cargill, but later in the year he carried off the Ascot Stakes, at last changing his trainer's (Brewer) ill luck of repeated seconds in important handicaps.

Early in the season the King's horse showed good, form, and it is extremely gratifying to see His Majesty favoured by Dame Fortune, for there is nothing that works more for the all-round good of the Turf than royal successes. A minor victory with a two-year-old, Vain Air, was followed in quick succession by a double event at Newbury with Oakmere and Minoru, who made his first appearance this year by defeating Valens easily. How Minoru improved under the careful handling of R. Marsh and won the Two Thousand and the Derby is now a matter of history, and the present year will ever be ear-marked by the most popular victory of all time. The success of the King's colt was lucky in a double sense, for there is no doubt he met with all the race and but very little would have altered his head victory into a defeat; but it was lucky in a wider sense than that it was a lucky event to every person and every thing connected with the Turf. It will have a lasting good effect on the Sport of Kings and it dealt a crushing blow to the machinations of the anti-gambling, spoil-sports and ploughers-up of racecourses. After the scene of unbridled enthusiasm on Epsom Downs of the 26th May this heterogeneous crowd have taken a very back seat—Minoru "scotched" the snake; would that he had killed it! The race for the Derby was marred by one regrettable incident, namely the fall of the American crack Sir Martin, whom American money had made favourite in a very active market. It appears he crossed his legs at Tattenham Corner and came down of his own accord, no blame according to his jockey, Martin's, account, attaching to anyone; whether he could have won will ever be a bone of contention and a question which will never be solved. Louviers ran a great horse in only succumbing by a head to the King's colt while William IV. who was third with Valens and Bayardo next upheld the good opinion formed of them. Minoru is one of a batch of eight horses leased by Colonel Hall Walker, their breeder, to His Majesty, a batch which also included Oakmere and Princess de Galles: they have indeed borne the Royal colours worthily, but are to be returned to Colonel Walker at the end of their four-year-old career. At the time of their lease great things were expected of a colt by the name of Calderstone who, however has not won a race, while no especial merit was attached to Minoru, Oakmere and Princesse de Galles, the last of whom credited His Majesty with the valuable Coronation Stakes at Ascot after running second in the One Thousand and Oaks; how often it is that those, of whom most is expected achieve least! The Royal victories are not yet at an end, Minoru having gained further honours at Ascot and Goodwood; may they continue till the Final Plate at Manchester.

To revert to the earlier Classic races, Minoru, son of Mother Seigel and Cyllene, had carried off the Two Thousand from Phaleron and Louviers with fourth place filled by the hitherto unbeaten favourite Bayardo, who for some weeks previous had been the subject of much rumour as to all not being well with him, a rumour for which there was some foundation, for the hard ground which prevailed in late March and early April was against him, and there is now no doubt that it was the dry weather that completely stopped Bayardo from showing his true form; his feet have always been shelly and his trainer Taylor could not treat him as he would wish till the ground softened. He was expected to make a much better show in the Derby in which he finished fifth although meeting with none the best of luck in running, but it was not till after many refreshing showers that the old Bayardo of last year reappeared in the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Ascot, which he won easily, and followed this success up by taking the Sandringham Foal Stakes at Sandown easily defeating Louviers, who was unplaced, at level weights thus completely altering the Derby form. The rich Eclipse Stakes of 10,000sovs. next fell to his lot, in which race as weight-for-age he easily accounted for Your Majesty who was last of four behind Santo Strato and Royal Realm. This race proved two important facts, first that Your Majesty is no longer the horse he was on St. Leger day in 1908 and secondly that Bayardo is now entirely himself again.

It is rough luck on Mr. Fairie that the hard ground should have prevented his colt from keeping his unbeaten certificate, and even though Fortune has smiled on him in the St. Leger there is no doubt he would have preferred to win the Derby to all the other races Bayardo has won, or is likely to win, put together. On the whole the three-year-old colts are good and above the average, but the same can hardly be said of their contemporaries, the fillies, of which Perola, winner of the Oaks, Electra, who took the One Thousand, Princesse de Galles and Maid of the Mist are no doubt the best; but that they are well behind the colts is proved by Perola finishing a poor third to Bayardo and Valens in the Duchess of York Plate at Hurst Park at the end of July. Their form has been pretty consistent not brilliant, and Electra might well have taken the Oaks but for getting away so badly in a poor start that her chance was at once quashed.

Of last season's cracks Your Majesty has sadly tarnished his reputation, for, foregoing his liability in the Ascot Gold Cup, he was prepared especially for the rich Princess of Wales' Stakes at Newmarket, in which he started favourite at 11 to 8 on, though he only finished third in a field of ten to Dark Ronald and Primer giving them only 7lb. and 6lb. respectively, form which was thought too bad to be true, but that it was true, was proved by his poor fourth a week or two later in the Eclipse Stakes. Dark Ronald's victory in the Newmarket race showed what a certainty he was for the Hunt Cup in which he was handicapped at 7st. 2lb., and won in a canter from Arranmore and Christmas Daisy, so easily in fact that it is a matter of doubt if there ever such was a certainty in any big handicap; he spread-eagled his field from the start and was a very warm favourite at 4 to 1. Llangwm, whom many considered Your Maesty's superior, and in fact he was officially handicapped in the Jubilee to give the St. Leger winner a pound, has after not going too well in his training, made a re-appearance, carrying off the 46th Biennial at Ascot, but at Newmarket in July in the Dullingham Plate he finished third in a field of four to Royal Realm and Lagos, a race which can be disregarded as far as Missel Thrush's son is concerned, as he broke down badly in running and is not likely to be seen on a course for some months.

The two-year-old racing has been interesting and has introduced horses quite up to the average of former years even if not a little beyond it. Mr. Fairie's colt Lemberg by Cyllene out of Galicia and therefore half-brother on his sire's side to Minoru and on his dame's side to Bayardo, Admiral Hawke by Gallinule out of Admiration, an own brother to Pretty Polly and the property of her owner Major Eustace Loder, Greenback (St. Frusquin and Evergreen) belonging to Lord Villiers, and Mr. Nelke's Yellow Slave, by St. Serf out of Croceum, and Lord Rosebery's Neil Gow, a son of Marco and Chelandry stand at the top of the tree at present, and it is unlikely that anything will appear out of the at present dark brigade to beat this lot. Of these the only one which is still unbeaten is Lemberg and until he meets defeat he must be looked upon as the best, for his initial performance in the New Stakes at Ascot, when he easily accounted by 1½ lengths for Catrail and a good field was a very smooth performance, and was followed by an even better one in spite of a penalty in the Chesterfield Stakes at Newmarket, Catrail again being second and Prince Rupert third. He has also taken the Rous Memorial at Goodwood, but has not yet met any of the abovementioned cracks; still by his trainer Taylor he is thought to be the equal of Bayardo, though this cannot be accepted till he has met something better than he has hitherto had to account for. Admiral Hawke caused a surprise in his first outing by winning the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, where starting at twenty to one he defeated by three lengths Yellow Slave and Neil Gow at level weights with a large field in the rear. He was known to be a good colt, but started among the unbacked division as he was not thought to be yet at his best. Here he beat a better class field than ever Lemberg has done, but in make and shape he is not his rival's equal, and though he gained another victory in a minor stake at Newmarket, he somewhat spoilt his record by failing to get a place behind Neil Gow who was in receipt of 11lb. in the richest two-year-old race of the season, the National Breeders Produce Stakes at Sandown in July, but he again showed good form in carrying a penalty successfully in the Levant Stakes at Goodwood. Greenback and Yellow Slave have both shown good form and appear about the same animal, the former having some four victories to his credit, in one of which he gave Yellow Slave 5lbs. and an easy beating, but in their next outing Yellow Slave won by ½ a length at a like difference in weights, though it is admitted Greenback was a little unlucky in running. To sum up, it looks as though Lemberg were the best of the colts, and Yellow Slave out by herself among the fillies.

A feature of the two-year-old racing has been the good form of all the off-spring of Sundridge, who is making a name for himself at the stud as he did on the Turf; easily recognized by their names, for they are all of them Suns, Sun Angel, Sunbright, Suncloud, Sundrop and others have between them picked up several races and have shewn consistently good form. Perhaps the most striking feature of this year's racing is the excellence of the sprinters; not for very many years have there been so many or such good horses over short courses. Each season has known its champion such as Sundridge, but this year the English Turf can boast of something more: Jack Snipe and Hallaton are a host in themselves among the older brigade, and have both successfully carried welters of over 9 stone in good class handicaps: then comes St Michan among the four-year-olds while the "threes" are headed by Glenesky and Glasgerion, the latter at one time thought a Derby horse and second favourite for that race in the winter, but he cannot stay. The Irish horse Glenesky has shown great speed and perhaps his best performance was in the Molyneux Plate at Liverpool where carrying 8st. 11lb., he beat Mediant in receipt of 3lb. and a very smart field, while a few days later Mediant cantered away with the Goodwood Stewards' Cup carrying the substantial weight for a three-year-old of 7st. 13lb. Glasgerion's form is even a little better than this; the Fernhill Stakes at Ascot going to his credit, where he showed a clean pair of heels to some very good animals at level weights including Sunflower second, Glenesky third and Mediant. Yes, it can be said for certain that our present lot of sprinters are a first class and far better than the stayers, among whom Bomba as an Ascot Gold Cup winner must take a high place, a very unexpected victory it is true, seeing that he started at 25 to 1 in a field of six, a price well warranted by his poor displays earlier in the season. The race was looked upon as a match between Santo Strato and Siberia, but they could only finish second and third respectively to the son of Carbine and St. Neophyte, who only two days before had run a poor third to Amadis and Jackson in the Gold Vase. The charms of Goodwood were very much spoilt by rain on the first and last days, though the other two days were fine and throughout the meeting we have seen the usual good class racing. The King was present to see the fourth successive win of Minoru, and each of the good two-year-olds, Lemberg, Admiral Hawke and Neil Gow picked up a valuable stake. Time was when the Stewards Cup was the most popular race of the year, but those days are past, though the race still provokes some antepost betting. Sunflower II. and Mustapha were favourites, but they shared the fate of every favourite for this race since Dumbarton Castle's year in 1903 and were beaten in easy style by the American Mediant with The Tower second, and the 1907 winner Romney third. Lagos after a whole year of disappointments stayed on to win the Goodwood Plate from Twig and Asticot, while the Cup fell to Carrousel, a good staying three-year-old who ought to do well if treated fairly in the back-end handicaps. It is worthy of note that the "threes" seem to be very backward this year, and not till Mediant won had a single three-year-old been placed in an important handicap, though no doubt in the fall we shall find them as formidable as usual.

A most important innovation in the Rules of Racing has to be recorded, by which no horse shall be allotted a weight for any handicap until he has run three times in England, a rule which opens up many difficulties while at the same time it is doubtful whether it will be of much assistance to handicappers. The idea is that a horse shall show something of his capabilities before he takes part in handicaps, and it is by no means meant as a bar to foreign competition, but there is not the slightest doubt it will act as such and we shall not see this year the usual French entries for the Cezarewitch and Cambridgeshire. It is a recognized thing that an owner may run his horses by way of practice when not entirely fit, and if a horse runs three times in June and July, for instance, when half fit, it is difficult to see that any light can be thrown on his form in November and if he is still to be weighted on his previous form abroad, to what end are the qualifying races? Moreover there are not sufficient qualifying races for the many handicappers to appear in, and an owner abroad desiring to make a bid for a big handicap will think twice about sending his horse over to qualify. The old plan of keeping an unknown or dark horse at the top of the handicap till he has proved his disability to carry such a weight seems for the best. The American horses in England being handy can easily qualify, but the rule will be awkward as regards the Nurseries when two-year-old weight for age races are few and far between, and it will seem strange that a youngster who has run three times unplaced when unfit early in the season is qualified for nurseries where one that has run twice only in October, perhaps second each time and whose form is known to an ounce is not qualified. Still the rule is in force and time will show how it will work.

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY CUP TOURNAMENT.

EIGHT teams entered in the competition for the handsome cup presented by the Gloster Regiment, and of these two—the Calcutta F.C. Nomads and the Measurers—scratched, leaving two matches in the first round The meeting of the United Services "B" team and the Shropshires produced a good game, the Services winning by 8 points to 5. The Customs and the Calcutta Police played twice before a decision was arrived at, the second game ending in a victory for the Riversiders by 16 points (two goals and two tries) to nil. In the semi-finals the defeated the United Services by two tries (6 points) to nil after a well contested game, but it took Calcutte "B" three attempts to qualify for the final. They played two drawn games with St. Xavier's, but on the third occasion beat them by 12 points (three tries and one penalty goal) to nil. The final was played on the Calcutta ground an interesting game ending in favour of the Customs by the narrow margin of a try (3 points) to nil. Calcutta "B" were the heavier team and had the best of the game all through, but their final efforts were weak and chances of scoring were lost. The Customs scored through Maitland in the second half, Seth's effort to add the extra points being unsuccessful.

RUGBY IN CALCUTTA.

SCOTLAND vs. ENGLAND.—The annual international rugger match was played on the 2nd instant on the Calcutta ground and was well contested throughout. The score was 13 points to nil in favour of Scotland, but the representatives of the Rose were unlucky to lose by so large a margin. They were badly served behind the scrum, Arthur and Ward quite out classing the English halves, Arthur in particular playing a fine game. In addition to their halves Cadell, Kerr, Burnett and Turnbull were all conspicuous for Scotland, while Oliver, Elderton, Williams, Blackburn and Siddons were most in evidence of the English team. Scotland attacked at the start and a few minutes after the kick-off Arthur dropped a goal. England then had a spell of attacking, but off-side against Williams brought them up and Scotland again asumed the offensive. Burnett got the leather and scored a try, Siddons just failing to touch down. The try was not converted. The next item of interest was a penalty kick to England, Blackburn making a brilliant attempt to score a goal, the kick just falling short.

Crossing over with a seven-point lead Scotland again took up the attack : Burnett was brought down close to the line : and the English team cleared and raced the leather to the other end where Longbottom and Trenchard lost chances of getting over. Baek came the ball to the English "25" and Chase was injured in one of the scrums, having to retire. Then Kerr crossed the line with a try which was not improved upon. England then made great efforts to reduce the margin : Siddons was responsible for a good run but was pulled down before he could score. Longbottom was nearly in on another occasion but all their attempts met with no success and Scotland attacking once more scored their third try through Meldrum and won as stated by 13 points (a drop goal and 3 tries) to nil. Teams :—

SCOTLAND.—Strachan, full-back; Burnett, Kerr, Meldrum and Turnbull, three-quarters; Arthur and Ward, halves; McLeod, Cadell, Blair-Cunynghame, Fraser, Bryce, Nicoll, McMillan and Richmond, forwards.

ENGLAND.—Oliver, full-back; Lilley, Siddons, Lieutenant Blackburn and Williams, three-quarters; Longbottom and Morrison, halves; Studd, Birch, Clayden, Miller, Chase, Trenchard, Elderton and A. N. Other, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. C. Reid (Ireland).

FOOTBALL AT KHARGPUR.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

THIS match took place at Khargpur on Saturday, the 25th instant, on the railway ground. Cadell opened for Calcutta and from the outset the B. N. R. team assumed the aggressive. Their efforts were keen enough, but lack of combination spoiled a likely opening. After a good deal of scrappy play Lilley made an attempt to open the scoring with a good, but abortive, drop at goal. The drop-out from the "25" found the home side in difficulties, and when first Meldrum, and then Burnett for the visitors made rings round the opposition, the game began to

Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon ; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

BOVRIL

No matter what we may say about Bovril, nothing can speak so strongly to you as an actual trial of Bovril itself.

Bovril contains all the goodness of prime beef in highly condensed form.

assume a one-sided aspect. Burnett's try was rather flukily converted by Martelli. At this juncture the tackling of the railway men was miserable, but as the game progressed they warmed to their work and Carroll, the home three-quarter, headed a raid into the Calcutta ground, only to spoil his own chances of being dangerous by hugging the touch-line unnecessarily. Once having established themselves in the Calcutta "25," the B. N. R. side put in some telling work, Leakey making a splendid opening which culminated in Lilley outwitting Oliver, and by a clever punt and strong running, securing a try in a none-too-favourable position. Chase, who took the kick, judged the angle to a nicety and brought out full points. With only three points dividing the teams, play raged in neutral ground, the efforts of the railway men to gain the lead meeting with sturdy opposition. Working with commendable dash, the B. N. R. forwards were giving their men behind plenty of the ball, and it was the hardest of hard luck when Carroll, the three-quarter, found himself robbed of a certain try by running into touch in rounding Burnett. The score was only delayed, however, for Lilley provided the tit-bit of the match by gaining possession and from a perfect melee in front of the posts dropping a very pretty goal. Half time was thereupon called leaving the B. N. R with a lead of one point.

B. N. R. 1 goal, 1 drop goal, (9 points); Calcutta 1 goal. 1 try, (8 points).

On the resumption, give-and-take play was the order of the day, although by this time the railway forwards, who were working like Trojans, gave their backs every opportunity. Blackburn, for the visitors, was putting in some splendid spoiling work, but the first item favouring of danger came from the home side, Gordon slipped his man in approved style and slung along the leather to Leakey, who, in turn, drew the defence in splendidly and at the right moment transferred to Lilley. The wing man made a good attempt to score, but his over-head punt was made rather soon with the result that Oliver was enabled to double back and kick dead. After the drop-out the Calcutta men, by virtue of sound foot-work in which Cadell was prominent, took up the running and the B. N. R. team had their work cut out to keep their line intact. For a time they defended well, but at the critical moment C. A. Carroll, being over-keen got out of position, and Burnett promptly turned this mistake to account by romping over the scorer of a capital try. The place-kick was rather an awkward one to negotiate, but with a splendid effort Burnett secured the major points. Soon after this score a storm broke over the ground which was the means of robbing the game of its finer points. Play thereupon deteriorated considerably and the efforts of the railway men to reduce the lead were futile.

The last incident was a break-away by the Calcutta forwards.

Calcutta 2 goals, 1 try, (18 points) B. N. R. 1 goal, 1 drop goal, (9 points).

The game was a fast and a stirring one throughout and was contested in the best of spirit. Taken all over a draw would have been a more fitting result, and the Calcutta men had to thank the aptitude of their backs in seizing opportunities for their victory. In the Calcutta front rank Cadell and Cunynghame were untiring, while Bull and Duncan for the B. N. R. worked hard. Cruttwell was prominent in the open.

The teams were:—

CALCUTTA.—Oliver, back; Meldrum, Blackburn, Martelli and Burnett, three-quarters; Ward and Morrison, halves; Cadell, Trenchard, Phelan, MacLeod, Miller, Malcolm, Cunnynghame and Fraser, forwards.

B. N. R.—Watts, back; W. Carroll, Gordon, Leakey and Lilley, three-quarters; Chase and C. A. Carroll, halves; Duncan, Duke, Cruttwell, Mearns, Robbins, Bull, Slane and Bluett, forwards.

MADRAS RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

CEYLON vs. DORSET REGIMENT.—The tournament was opened on the 28th ultimo with the match between these teams. The Dorsets who are new to the game were not expected to extend the Ceylon visitors and so it proved for the soldiers were quite outclassed and eventually beaten by 31 points to nil. Ceylon took the game into their opponents' territory at the start, Norman getting over with [a] try which was not converted. They continued to attack and Clarke crossed the line with another try which was also not improved upon. The Dorsets playing pluckily held their opponents in mid-field for a spell but it was not for long and Ceylon added another unconverted try to their score Continuing the pressure the ball was grounded between the posts by Norman, and Davies made no mistake with the place-kick. Play was better contested thereafter till the interval when Madras led by a goal and 3 tries to nil. On resuming, play was in mid-field till a good run by Norman and Davies ended in the former getting over with a try. The kick failed, but it was not long before Davies scored another try which was majorised. The Dorsets were conspicuous for a spell, but all their attempts were frustrated and Ceylon attacked for the rest of the game scoring three more tries, none of which were improved upon. Davies, Carey and Bissett were responsible for the points. Final score: Ceylon 2 goals 7 tries (31 points) Dorsets nil. Teams.

CEYLON.—W. H. Davies, back; L. C. Davies, Taylor, Norman and Clarke, three-quarters; Bissett and Carey, halves; Ogilvie, Ash, Clarke, Wilson, Douglas, Martin, Taylor, and Gray (Captain), forwards.

DORSETS.—Wilson, back; Howard, Lieutenant Wigley (Captain), Hutchings and Lieutenant Willes, three-quarters; Lieutenants Nelson and Powell, halves; Lieutenant Rendall, Martin, Hodges, White, Knight, Linham, Searle and Stone, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. F. E. L. Worke.

MADRAS GYMKHANA vs. BANGALORE.—This match was played on the 1st instant and was not a particularly brilliant game. Bangalore were a scratch team but gave a good account of themselves and the score does not give a correct indication of the play, which was well contested throughout. A series of scrums and line-outs at the start was followed by a run to the Bangalore "25" where a free-kick for offside against the visitors enabled Madras to score a goal. Play then ruled in mid-field and neither team gained any material advantage till Battle got away and scored a try, the place failing. Shortly after another try was scored and remained unconverted. Bangalore though working hard were unable to keep Madras out of their territory and Battle crossed the line between the posts and had no difficulty in adding the extra points himself. The remaining play in the first half was very level. Bangalore played doggedly in the second period and only had their line crossed on one occasion when Smith got across, the try being unconverted. Play was very level and though the Bangalore attack did not seriously trouble Madras, their defence was strong enough to render fruitless all effort to get through. Final score: Madras 2 goals (1 penalty), 3 tries (17 points.) to nil. Teams:—

MADRAS.—Riach, back; Ogden, Purves (Captain), Battle and Boyson, three-quarters; Browning and Sayers, halves; George, Walker, Harris, Smith, Legge, Goffe, Conningham and Bambridge, forwards.

BANGALORE.—Kidner, back; Taylor, Becke (Captain), Oswald and Lecky, three-quarters; Sargent and Davies, halves; Wilkinson, Marsh, Wynedl, Wright, Fuller, Redfern, Chanter and MacDonald forwards.

CEYLON vs. LEICESTERS (holders).—Played on the 30th ultimo. A well-contested game ending in a win for the military. They were heavier than the Ceylon team and play was almost entirely with the forwards, the speedy backs from the Spicy Isle getting very few opportunities of getting away. Play was fast all through the first half: both teams attacked, the soldiers having the better of the exchanges but the interval arrived without score. But on resuming the Leicesters pressed: they were kept out for some time: then Liddell set his men going and Gregory crossed the line with the first try which Hougham converted. The Leicesters continued to worry the Ceylon defence and it was not long before Cooper got over with a second try to which the extra points were also added. Level play followed and Ceylon were conspicuous for a spell: Davies rushed through with a try which was majorised: but this was Ceylon's only score. The Leicesters asserted their superiority and continued to add to the score till the end. Hougham kicked a goal from a penalty for off-side and Liddell and Cooper got over with tries, the latter of which was converted, Leicesters thus winning by 4 goals (1 penalty) and 1 try (21 points.) to 1 goal 3 points. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Hougham, back; Cooper, Capt. Liddell (Captain), Dooley and Alterbury, three-quarters; Gregory and Hyde, halves; Lieut. Weir, Hadley, Norman, Brewin, Green, Howbett, Webb and Martin, forwards.

CEYLON.—W. H. Davies, back; L. C. Davies, Taylor, Norman and A. M. Clarke, three-quarters; Bissett and Carey halves; Ogilvie, Ash, A. H. Clarke, Wilson, Douglas, Martin, McNiven and Gray (Captain), forwards.

Referee:—Mr. W. G. McBean.

FINAL.

MADRAS vs. LEICESTERS.—The Madras Gymkhana met the Cup holders in the final on Saturday last. There was an exceptionally large attendance and weather conditions were perfect. Madras had to take the field without Purves and Battle, their best three-quarters and this proved a handicap. They gave a good account of themselves in the first half and had quite as much of the game as their opponents, the interval arriving without either team having scored. But on changing ends the superior training of the Leicesters had its effect and they ran up 21 points without response. The opening exchanges after half time were very level, but gradually the Leicesters worked their way into the Madras territory and Dooley, who had earlier made an excellent though unsuccessful attempt to drop a goal, got over with the first try, which remained unconverted. Continuing to press the Leicesters got through again and Cooper's try was converted. The holders next attempted to drop a goal. But it failed and Madras rushed away only to be held up by Hougham. Dooley returned with the leather and transferred to Gregory, who scored another unconverted try. Madras were kept penned up in their own "25" for the rest of the game. Dooley and Liddell each scored a try for the Leicesters and both being improved upon the Cup holders won the match by 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to nil. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller made a short congratulatory speech and Mrs. Miller gave away the Cup at the conclusion of the game. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Hougham, back; Cooper, Capt. Liddell, Dooley and Atterbury, three-quarters; Gregory and Hyde, halves; Lieut. Weir, Hadley, Norman, Brewin, Green, Howlett, Webb and Martin, forwards.

MADRAS.—Riach, back; Ogden, Sayers, Campbell and Boyson, three-quarters; Browning and Todd, halves; George, Walker, Harris, Smith, Legge, Goffe, Coningham, Bambridge, forwards.

BOMBAY ROVERS TOURNAMENT.

WORCESTERS vs. LEICESTERS.—The drawn game between these teams was replayed on the 27th ultimo before a big gathering. It was well contested from start to finish and an excellent game ended in the defeat of the Worcesters, who were the cup holders. Even play at the start followed by a hot attack by the Worcesters. The Leicesters' defence, however, was not to be beaten. They conceded two corners in succession, but Owen and the backs cleared all attempts to score and the game was transferred to the other end where the Leicesters lost two good chances of scoring. Up and down play followed till the interval arrived without score. The Worcesters pressed strongly on resuming and the Leicesters had to concede a corner. This was cleared and Owen disposed of a couple of fine shots by Rowbotham, and later one by Greenaway. The Leicesters then took up the attack and after missing several chances they scored a goal, Wale beating Lewis at long range. Up and down play and then the Leicesters returned to the attack, Wardle hitting the cross bar, and Lewis saving cleverly from Barton. They continued to press till time was called, thus winning by a goal to nil. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Owen, goal; Bailey and Faulks, backs; Cliff, Wale and Whitmore, halves; Wardle, Butler, Barton, Shingler and French, forwards.

WORCESTERS.—Lewis, goal; Clark and Parton, backs; Clayton, Jeffries and Pitt, halves; Jones, Greenaway, Plant, Rowbotham and Sutton, forwards.

CHESHIRES vs. KING'S OWN.—A good game was witnessed when these teams met on the 20th ultimo. The Cheshires pressed on opening and Hughes saved brilliantly on two occasions. Then the King's Own ran down, but after Trueman had saved from Carney they lost a good opportunity. The ball was taken back to their end where Eden put in a shot which hit the cross bar. A moment later Eden was more successful and beat Hughes with a difficult shot. The King's Own tried to get on terms and Trueman was called upon to save, which he did. Then the Cheshires pressed once more and Hughes saved at the expense of a corner which was not improved upon. On resuming after the interval the King's Own pressed and Trueman was kept busy and eventually beaten by Moore. The Cheshires attacked for a spell but were forced back to their own territory where the King's Own forced two corners. Neither was improved upon and the Cheshires got the ball away. The King's Own were playing at the top of their form and returned to the charge. A free kick against the Cheshires was cleared and they attacked once more and were also awarded a free kick. Hughes saved and the King's Own rushing the ball away forced two corners, from the second of which Holmes headed the ball in and gave his side the victory. Score: King's Own, 2 goals; Cheshires, 1 goal. Teams:—

CHESHIRES.—Trueman, goal; Price and Edwards, backs; Moore, Stevens and Fowles, halves; Pickering, Eden, Lieutenant Hume Wright, McGuire and Garrett, forwards.

KING'S OWN.—Hughes, goal; Walsh and Stokes, backs; Windrim, Ralph and Brown, halves; Moore, Holmes, Ashworth, Carney and Harris, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Watts.

LINCOLNS vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 30th ultimo. This game calls for little description. The soldiers had the upper hand all through and gave some fine exhibition of accurate shooting. They scored four goals in the first half, Marklew (2), Parsons and Lay being responsible, and on changing ends R se was beaten on three occasions, by Marklew twice and by Dwane. The Commercials scored their only goal just before the interval, when Johnson headed the ball in. Teams:—

LINCOLNS.—Smith, goal; Butters and Dormey, backs; Jackson, Wickham and Greatorex, halves; Parkinson, Parsons, Dwane, Marklew and Drake, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Rose, goal; Lay and Harwood, backs; Bellamy, Osborne, and Elliot, halves; Evans, Chapman, Johnson, Woolley and Crole Rees, forwards.

Referee:—Corporal Tilley.

KING'S OWN vs. LINCOLNS.—This match in the second round was played on the 2nd instant and resulted in a pointless draw after a fast and well contested game.

R.F.A. KIRKEE vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS.—These teams met on the 4th instant, a draw—one all being the result.

THE MURREE TOURNAMENT.

MUNSTER FUSILIERS "B" vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—The tournament opened on the 27th ultimo with the match between the above teams. The Northumberlands rushed away at the start and hit a goal which was the extent of the scoring in the first half. The Munsters lost many opportunities but on changing ends they took up the attack. The Northumberlands defended well and after three penalty corners had been cleared by them their opponents got through and equalised. Time arrived with the score one all and an extra ten minutes each way was played, the Munsters scoring three goals in quick succession, and thus winning by 4 goals to 1.

ROYAL IRISH FUSILIERS vs. BLACK WATCH "B"—This was also played on the 27th ultimo, ending in a win for the Fusiliers. They did most of the attacking in the first half and after one shot had hit the bar they scored their first goal. Crossing over they hit two goals in quick succession. The Black Watch were unable to score and the Irishmen won by 3 goals to nil.

10TH ROYAL HUSSARS vs. ROYAL SUSSEX "B"—These teams met on the 28th ultimo. The opening play was very even; then the Hussars attacked and were awarded two penalty corners, but they could not improve upon either and the ball was taken to their own territory where the Sussex scored. On resuming after the interval even play was witnessed till half way through when the Hussars got away and equalised. The Sussex were determined, however, to get the lead and a hot attack resulted in their scoring again. The Hussars did their utmost to get on terms during the remaining play. They obtained two corners, but neither was turned to account and they retired defeated by 2 goals to 1.

MUNSTER FUSILIERS "A" vs. BLACK WATCH "A"—Played on the 28th ultimo. Even play at the start terminated in a corner against the Black Watch, but it was cleared, and getting away the Highlanders opened the scoring. The Irishmen next took up the attack and equalised after a sharp struggle in front of goal. They kept up the pressure till the interval and on changing ends again invaded the Black Watch territory. A penalty corner ensued; this was cleared, but the ball was brought back and inadvertently put through by one of the Highlanders. The Irishmen had the best of the remaining play, and scoring two more goals won by 4 goals to 1.

ROYAL SUSSEX "A" vs. R.G.A.—This game on the 29th ultimo was well contested from start to finish and ended in a win for the Gunners by 4 goals to 3. Play was up and down on commencing, a good run by the Artillery leading to their first goal. Continuing the pressure they forced a corner which was not turned to account, but shortly after they scored again from a penalty bully. The Sussex forwards broke away on occasions but were held up for sticks,

WINCHESTER

REPEATING HUNTING RIFLES ARE RELIABLE

Reliability, strength and accuracy are the cardinal virtues in a hunting rifle. Success and safety often hinge upon them in big game shooting. Winchester rifles possess these virtues to the fullest extent, all models being made of high grade material and inspected with great care and exactness. They shoot accurately, are positive and certain in action, graceful in outline, easy to operate, and, considering their many good qualities, low in price. They are made in all desirable calibers, weights and styles, and for every rifle a Winchester cartridge is made. Winchester Rifles and Cartridges, the Red W Brand always gives satisfaction.

and the Gunners getting possession once more scored a third goal before the interval. On crossing over the Sussex asserted themselves and after one unsuccessful attempt opened their account. They continued to attack and added a second point shortly after. Then the Gunners got away and put on a fourth goal, but the Sussex, nothing daunted, again took up the attack. Many chances of scoring were missed and it was not till just before the whistle blew that they scored their third goal.

KING'S LIVERPOOL REGIMENT vs. ROYAL WARWICKS—Level play till half way through the opening moiety, when a penalty corner against the Warwick's enabled the Kings to score. Penalty corners against both teams followed but without result. Then the Warwicks attacked; two shots were abortive, but a third went through and the teams crossed over with a goal each. Play was slow on resuming and the Warwicks eventually got busy and scored a second goal. Up and down play followed, but towards the close the Warwicks had the best of the exchanges, and scoring two goals in quick succession won by 4 goals to 1.

ROYAL IRISH FUSILIERS vs. MUNSTER FUSILIERS "B" TEAM.—These teams met on the 30th ultimo an excellent game ending, in spite of extra time, in draw of one all.

ROYAL SUSSEX "B" vs. MUNSTER FUSILIERS "A"—Played the 30th ultimo, the Munsters winning by 7 goals to 1. Play during the first half was very level. The Munsters scored twice and the Sussex once. But on changing ends the holders of the Cup had matters all their own way and put on five more goals, winning as stated.

27th, 28th and 30th September 1909.

THE Show opened on Monday, the 27th ultimo, but after two classes had been judged the rain came down in torrents and put an end to the proceedings for the rest of the day. Resuming on Tuesday the remainder of the first day's programme was got through without further hitch and the fixture was concluded in fine weather on Thursday. Major R. Faunce had charge of the arrangements this year, and the success of the show is largely due to his efforts ably assisted by the Judges, Stewards and Committee. Entries were not as good as those in previous years, a falling off being especially noticeable in the harness classes. Hacks and ponies, however, were shown in their usual numbers and the quality throughout was excellent. The jumping was, as usual, an interesting feature of the show. Among the ponies Major G. Moore's Robin was awarded first prize and Major Arnold's Ruby winning in the horse section. The judging met with general approval and a most successful show was brought to a conclusion with the distribution of prizes by Mrs. Swann, wife of General Swann commanding the division. Appended is a list of the awards :—

THE SIMLA DOG SHOW.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SINCE the Simla Committee started a championship dog show, entirely separate from the old Horse and Dog Show institution, in 1907, the show on the new lines has become an annual one, and the third of the series was held on the 24th September last. The separation was undoubtedly a judicious move. The month of June is suitable enough for horses, their summer coats are then at their best, and the annual polo tournament is held at that time and adds considerably to the entries; but for dogs, who feel the heat more keenly, June is not an appropriate month, and altogether debars owners at a distance from exhibiting. No one cares to send valuable animals long journeys in the hottest month of the year.

The Show, under its present management, has always been held in the ground of Ravenswood, with kind permission of the Faridkot Darbar, and no better site could be selected. The third exhibition of the series was held under the patronage of H.E. the Viceroy and H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, who both presented handsome cups as specials, and the greatest credit is due to the Honorary Secretary, Miss Forbes, for the success it achieved. The arrangements were in every way excellent, the dogs were well-benched, the judging prompt, the rings well-fed by the ring stewards, the lunch and afternoon tea on the spot everything that could be desired, and the prizes numerous and attractive. The whole show was judged by the well-known all-round expert, Major M. Williamson, than whom there is no better all-round judge in India, and with whose awards there is rarely any discontent. He is a judge who never fails to take into consideration the merits of all his exhibits, but who then makes up his mind with great decision. The task of judging a whole large show, which would have been so formidable to less experienced judges, was no great difficulty to him and was completed in good time to enable the exhibitors and spectators to discuss results over their tea and cakes before the prizes were given away by Mrs. Miller at 5 o'clock.

Both numerically and in quality the Show was a very strong one and the competitions in the classes and for the specials very keen. The Viceroy's Cup for the best dog in the Show was awarded to Mrs. Miller's well-known imported Airedale Imperialist with Mr. Lionel Jacob's grand little wire-haired terrier Jo Hukm second. Mr. Jacob's small kennel of fox-terriers scored freely. Jo Hukm, who won the Viceroy's Cup last year, was second on this occasion, but he was first in the Challenge Class and is now no doubt a full-blown champion. He also won the specials for the best dog bred by exhibitors in India, the I.K.A. Terriers Cup, the C.K.C. Cup, and the cup for the best brace of terriers with Billie Burke. Mr. Jacob also won two firsts with Billie Burke, three firsts with Inspector, and two firsts with Ju Jitsu. The two latter are new faces. The bull-terriers made a good display and Mr. Mollison won well with The Cad and Morning Glory, the latter a very nice bitch puppy. The Cockers were very strong, as the kennels of Colonels Willan Dawson, Hyde Cates, and Moore and of Mrs. Cuthbert Edwardes were all represented, and these four kennels appropriated the prizes. The other spaniels were poor, but the Retriever class was good and Captain Forster showed a fine dog in Tyne. H.H. the Maharajah of Jind sent up a strong string in charge of Mr. Miles and carried off a good many prizes, winning first in greyhounds with Pretty Molly, and in the mixed class with a good Japanese spaniel. In Airedales the competition mainly lay between Mrs. Miller and Major Cleveland, both exhibiting good specimens of the breed. Foxterriers were very strong, and in addition to Mr. Lionel Jacob's winning kennel, the Rajah of Pithapooram was represented by his good little dog Darbar Splinter. Mr. Arden Close brought up his old winner Cruiser, Colonel Hyde Cates showed champion Jim the Penman, the Maharajah of Jind had strong exhibits in both wire and smooth classes, Mrs. Sladen showed a good dog in Kno'l Demon, Mr. T. S. Bean exhibited Honest Injun and others, and Mrs. Forbes won with her Indian Duchess. Irish terriers were weak with not one really good Paddy among them, but the Scotties were better and the open class was very closely contested, the winner being found in Captain Macleod's Thornton Kelpie. All the Dachshund classes filled, and two excellent youngsters, Hans of Appin and Gretchen of Appin were shown by Miss Hildesley. These two dachshunds should be heard of again, they stood out from the other exhibits in quality. Three good bull dogs appeared and the first prize fell to Captain Callaghan's Lahore winner, Bruiser Stone. The Pekinese were few but high in quality. Mrs. James won in dogs, and Mrs. Holdich in bitches with Girl, who also took the Commander-in-Chief's prize. The Lhassas were indifferent, but the collies were a nice class, and the old Calcutta winner, Mr Bradley Birt's Merry Eyes, was once more to the front. The complete list of awards is given below.

NOB'S BENEFIT.

JOE BIGGS is, in his way, a wealthy man, and although he lacks many points in his King's English, he is certainly an easy winner in his complete and voluminous Cockney vocabulary. A genial man is Joe Biggs to those he likes, and a soft-hearted one, especially with the fair sex, if one has the courage to bite through the crab apple exterior and rely on the sugar plum within.

That he is liked in sporting circles is true, but before I knew him, well, I never expected to see him sought after as he is in circles that, I should imagine, would be as little to his taste as he was to theirs. But there it is, and it is not his money that makes him so popular. Joe Biggs is a complete edition in himself, roughly bound, but containing many chapters of humour and romance, and an extensive and thorough knowledge of sport in all its branches.

I met Joe Biggs only yesterday at the City and Sub. He was got up regardless of taste or expense and presented a striking (though small) appearance on the box seat of young Lord ——'s coach. He greeted me with his usual familiar deference carefully avoiding as is his invariable custom a reference to anything in the nature of "shop" until the subject was opened to him, as he well knew would be the case.

I asked him as casually and, I hoped, as unconcernedly as possible whether he fancied anything for the big race.

"Well, Sir, 9lb is a lot for the old 'oss to give away to a geezer like Mr. 'all Walker's, he 'olds a record what he can 'ardly 'ope to increase and what's the matter with Ebor Sir, if Trigg's can 'old him, 7 stun 9's a nice wight, an little Woottons got 'is orders too, I reckon like the rest," and so on, a little bit to say about them all, and I saw I had made a mistake to try and get anything out of Joe unless we were safely out of hearing of anyone else, and he was feeling particularly soft.

I found that Joe was leaving his friends on their return to Town, and as I really wanted to see him about professional matters, I asked him to dine with me at a West End Restaurant: I shook hands with him and left. In doing so, he palmed a slip of paper in my hand, and on it was "Put your shirt on Vintage 3-30."

I followed his advice as far as decency allowed and horse came in at 5 to 1 as you may know.

That evening I met Joe looking very cheerful at the Pall Mall at 8 o'clock. He had not, he told me, backed the winner of the City and Sub, on the course, but he had laid the odds against "Dean Swift" to all and sundry.

I noted that he said that he had not backed the winner on the course and as he appeared to be in such a very genial mood, I surmised that Joe had "sent away" all he wanted on the winner.

Joe's affability was more than normal and during dinner I began to wonder whether I was lucky in finding him in such a mood for my own purpose, which was connected with the sale of a pair of hackneys, or whether Joe had some sinister design of palming off a faulty animal on me.

Over our liqueurs and cigars I made several advances in the conversational direction I wished to take, but Joe always shied and broke into a canter in the opposite direction. At one time, being driven, he went so far as to enquire what I thought of the state of affairs in Constantinople, politics being his bete-noir and when I suggested in an endeavour to reach my subject that if there were war it might increase the price of horse-flesh, he merely made an allusion to the "pretty filly" with the "peroxide" locks, who was sitting with an eyeglass and a mild and innocent looking youth a table to our right.

At last I withdrew my skirmishes and suggested that we should walk back to my rooms and have a chat there.

"If I might mike a suggestion," said Joe, taking a racing calendar from his breast pocket, "I've got a ticket 'ere for a box at the H—E—a friend o' mine what sent it me takes a bit a interest in sport and they tell me that there will be a pretty scrap between Teddy B and a dark horse what our club has put up."

I accepted cordially, but I noticed that the ticket for the entertainment had a rubber stamp of that day's date on it, and that it was not marked by invitation. There are very good shows at the H—E—but it is only a second class Music Hall, and I had heard nothing of the Teddy B—being on the halls.

We went and were made comfortable in the stage box. Teddy B—did appear and gave a very poor exhibition of stage boxing with a man who knew nothing of ring craft, but who, if he had hit Teddy, the boxing world would have been one good man the less.

During the whole evening Joe's conversation ran upon the hard life of the professional boxer and what good fellows they were, how magnanimous to each other, what evils they had to contend with, and even touched on the misery of their married life.

I was quite non-plussed by Joe's continuous reference to the misfortunes of the profession—but when it came to Joe's allusion to their particular state of misery in what is usually described as "connubial bliss" I sought some explanation.

"I dunno, Sir, but fighting men and marriage don't seem to blend some 'ow: perhaps its a kise of like kills like, but I knowd good men as could stand all the 'itting in the world, until they got married and then they wernt worth two pennorth of cold gin."

"But why Joe"? I asked again. "You see, a most fighting man is made of a very loving gentle disposition, when they fight they fight because its their business, just as you move your legs when you want to walk to your club, or just the same as you chinwag and tell the jury any d—d lie you can think on when you wants to get a cove off doing time."

"Thank you," I bowed acknowledgment to Joe's tribute to my sacrifice of my soul for the benefit of the cove. "Yus, and the man fights as I say, cos its 'is business, but he don't want to 'urt nobody any more an you wants to 'urt the poor bloke whose silver candles your cove 'as pinched.

Again I acquiesced.

"So you see there aint no guile in them natural like, but when they get married, or took up along with a petticoat then, well then they aint the same man, that's all as I got to say."

"They ought to be better men." I said for I have had some thoughts of matrimony myself: "it ought to give them an impetus in life, to make them take a keener interest in their profession, to give them broaded and better views, to—" I stopped. Joe's pale blue grey eyes were fixed on me with a deprecating look of amazement. Slowly he removed his cigar from his mouth, and then withdrawing his eyes from my face got up and abruptly suggested a move. Joe was grieved with me and when I laughingly replied that I was quite ready, he came away without a word.

We hailed a taxi, and I said, "Come round to my rooms Joe, I have been wanting to have a little talk on shop with you all the evening, but you wouldn't let me get a word in edgeways."

"Ave you' Sir," 'ave you, I'm sorry if I took up all the tawking but its your fault Sir, you've got a kind of way about you as makes a man talk when he oughn't and I'll tell you straight, I've got a little matter of business as I wants to put to you."

Having fixed Joe up in my rooms with another cigar and the tantalus at his elbow, I said, "Now then Biggs, what is it?"

Joe figetted about for a bit and glancing towards the door said mysteriously, "Its a little matter o' business connected with a poor boxing cove what has been led away by his wife."

He took from his pocket book a sheet of paper and handed it to me: on it was a list of names or letters with various sums written opposite each and on the top was written "Nobs' Benefit."

"Well, what's this," I said, "That Sir is to show you my bona fide." those names wot you see are gents what are willing to assist Nobs and these figures are the sums they are put up. If you rottle it up you'll see I've got £59-8-6 and that aint bad in 24 'ours.

Joe's name started the list with twenty-five guineas, so it was not such a very great effort.

"Look here, Joe, all this is Greek to me. If I can help you I will, but just you fill up a whisky and soda and spin your yarn right away from the beginning."

"You know I'm the president of the Sunbeam Sporting Club," I nodded I assent.

"About 18 months ago or may be a little more, a young feller named Noble used to attend our club nights very frequent. He was about as likely a looking lad as ever you come acorst and I reckon if things 'ad panned out different, he'd a made as fine a middle wight as ever stepped into the ring. Well, I just noticed this boy along with Dave Smith, our manager—where Dave got the name of Smith from I dunno, least ways it wernt from his parents, for if ever there were a 'all-marked Hebrew Dave Smith's one.

Well, when I seen him night after night with Dave Smith I think to myself "here's a nice young pigeon what's enjoying himself being plucked" but when I found he hadn't any money to speak of but was a clerk in a office at two pund a week, I knew old Dave wernt at him for the money stakes, an I I begin to tumble there was a petticoat in the case for Dave's a rare un for a pretty face One night Noble or Nobs, as they call 'im, took a turn in the ring an he put up as pretty a spar as I seen by a amater in my life and I began to take more interest in him, so I took him and me to dinner one night an I he tole me all about hisself and what a good fren Dave 'ad been to him: I cracked old Dave up and got a bit more out of 'im.

It seemed that Dave had lent him the money to go in for a corse o' boxing and training and had promised to fix up a purse for'im again a North Country lad what had been 'aving it all 'is own way and that Noble was to go 'arves with 'im on the winnings.

Then I twigged why Dave were so friendly with 'im but that warnt all, as I found out later. Well, Dave fixed up a show and a purse of £50 aside and we 'ad a good all round programme as you will remember last May"

"Oh Yes," I interrupted, "I remember and I remember also the fight between Teddy Burke and Noble so that was your young friend. It was a good fight and I think Burke was entitled to the verdict on the points."

"Yus and don't you remember the row there was cause the Ref was for giving the verdict on points to Burke and how Dave Smith took the popular view and clamoured for another round and 'ow the ref give way and give for another round."

"Yes and very improperly too I think," I said.

"Well I wornt altogether of the ref's opinion on that show there's no doubt that Burke had the greater ring craft but it seemed to me that the points Noble made was far above any Burke scored and Burke got scared of his man's dogged fighting and did much too much climbing. Well, anyway Nobs knocked Burke out next round and old Dave was mad with joy.

Nobs got his pieces and very drunk that night and we seen nothing of him for a month.

Next day Burke put in a challenge to meet Nobs again for £250 a side and old Dave was awful keen to fix it. From what I could see Dave hadn't had his loan back and was a bit figgetty. He come to me at my place at Epsom next days about Burke's challenge to arst me if I would put up the ready and he then tole me that Nobs had gone orf the night afore and he couldn't find 'im. That he 'ad been to 'is rooms in Upper Street and he warnt there but ad left with 'is bag early that morning.

Nobs was a gent, Sir, and though 'e took 'is drop after 'is bout the night afore which he was entitled to, 'e was a steady cove and never made 'isself conspicuous like at the Club. They say he was a rare un at figures as our secretary tole me, but he never talked much and 'e could 'it 'arder than 'e could swear and I tell you I liked the lad." Joe paused to glare at me defiantly.

"I like 'im, he was strite and wouldn't do nothing wrong unless 'e was led astray, "Lord luv a duck Sir,' said Joe, leaning forward in his chair and striking the table. 'Ow could a cove what 'ad the science in him like Nobs do a dirty thing, 'ow could 'e, I say" "I did not know he had," I answered mildly.

"E' adn't Sir, 'e 'adn't, Im telling you. Well, I tole Dave I would give 'im a purse but he must see Nobs first and bring 'im to me."

"Next day when Dave turn up again, 'e is purple with rage, I ses "Ello Dave, whats up now?' 'E dives into' is pocket and pulls out a letter which he shoves in my face and ses:—"Vat you tink of that?" "'Arf a mo," I ses, "don't wipe my nose with it" and I reads the letter which was like this:—

"DEAR MR. SMITH,

I am sorry I did not see you before I left and that I could not wait to call at the Club the next morning."

"See im, I vos wid him the ole evening, I put im to bed Bah!" and Dave spat 'ard on my Turkey Carpet an I allus 'ave as pittoon by the grite, but Dave aint no gentlemen, so I read on:—

"I enclose Bank notes for £10 which I think you will find correct. £10 you paid for boxing lessons, £5 personal loan and £10 you said you had laid out in bets on me at 2-1 against me. I have the £100 stakes and you have £80 winnings, therefore the enclosed £10 will make us right for share and share alike as you suggested.

Yours sincerely,

ALFRED NOBLE.

"He 'ave robbed me," raved Dave "he shall pay me 10 more pounds: but that's not all." There was a postscript saying:—"I know you will congratulate me when you hear that I was yesterday married to Molly Reed." When I read the P.S. I confess I was shook.

"The d—young fool," I said.

"He is a scoundrel to rob me of £40 and he do worse than that, he rob me of Molly" and Dave danced round the room in despair and rage.

I see then 'ow things was and from what I larnt afterwards it were like this.

Old Dave were dead nuts on Molly Reed and she, the little cat 'ad been playing 'im up all along to 'elp Nobs, without 'is knowing mind you, and Old Dave thought the minx never could refuse 'is money and take on the young un without any. I don't know whether Dave's intentions were honourable in this case, but judging from his age of 40 and his propensities and his being unmarried, I should lay long odds agin it.

"I'll 'ave my revenge," ses 'e, "you see if I don't."

"What," ses I, "he don't owe you any money."

"Money be d——d," ses Dave, "I want de gell" and then I knowed he was took very bad.

Well, you know Nobs beat Burke in three rounds the next time and off he went agin with is gal and blewed 'is money as fast as 'e could, like the gent 'e is, and it seems that Dave 'ad started on 'is gimes for revenge.

When Nobs come back stoney broke 'is luck ran clean out. Whenever we tried to fix up a show for 'im something 'appened to spile it, 'e got one or two small turns but no good to 'im with 'is extravagant ways, leastways, 'is wife's I reckon.

If 'e thought 'e'ad got a turn on the 'alls fixed, at the larst moment the manager would cry off. It must 'ave corst Dave a mint of money to buy up every Manager that Nobs 'ad a charnst with, but all them Managers are of the chosen people and they all 'ave their price.

Then there were nasty rumours running around about the Burke fight. Somethin was said about a drug and a 'int here and 'int there of foul play and sich like but the most anyone could say was that they 'ad 'eard sommot but couldn't say for sartin.

Nobs went back to his room in the Upper Street with 'is missus and she used to strut abart and laugh and say she didn't care a cuss as long as she got Nobs. "Yus," says Joe, musing "there's no manner of doubt it must 'ave been 'er, a boxing cove couldn't 'ave thought of it. Well anyways when they got right down on their uppers the trouble began which needn't 'ave happened if that young fool Nobs 'adn't been so prard and 'ad tole me when I arst him 'ow things were.

This is what Nobs as tole me since and I'll tell it you as near as I can and 'ow I can see it appear.

One evening just when Nobs thought he had fixed a deal with a Manager 'aving seen 'im that die and got it all settled in words and 'ad it all dark, he got a wire to say "Deal off" and 'e tell me 'e dropped is 'ead in 'is 'ands and fairly 'owls. Molly the 'ard 'arted little cat comes up to him and starts messing 'im abart saying a lot of soppy things to 'im as women will, instead of leaving 'im alone. Then she ses, "Aint we got nothing more we can pop old boy?" and she routs out the few things she 'as left in a box.

Presently she starts 'owling, not very loud but just sniffy and loud enough for let 'im 'ear, the artful jade, incorse 'e jumps up and starts fooling around with 'er which if e 'adn't done 'ed never 'ad any trouble and there 'e sits on the floor with 'er black fluffy 'ead lon his shoulder up again 'is copper top, she a trying to tickle 'im and swearing she was larfing, the lying little beggage, but dursent show her fice else the tears would 'ave proved she was lying. There they sits, I ses, like a couple of kids messing abart instead of getting up and trying to earn a shillin' or two." Joe paused, raised his glass and finished the contents at a gulp.

"Presently Nobs tikes is copper top off 'er black frizzy un and ses 'Moll could you trust me absolutely."

"Yus in corse" she ses pushing 'er nose further into is coat and squeezing up to 'im. "Moll, could you back me if I was to go sumthin not quite on the strite?" This time she pulls her nose out of 'is coat pretty quick and stares at 'im.

"What are you getting at Kid" and he ses "Look ere." 'E tikes out of his pocket an old envelope and out of it he draws a death certificate. She looks at 'im as if 'e'd gone mad.

"Cricky! Kid, you must want a drink badly" she ses.

"Look ere Moll, this is the death certificate of my Uncle's wife my Aunt Molly. 'er nime was Molly Noble and 'is nime was Alfred Noble same as mine and she died on the 22nd day of February 1889 twenty years ago to-morrow. Now if you was to die to-morrow and he gave 'er a cuddle as he ses it "I might be able to get them to give me a show at the club."

Well, to cut it short, he tells 'ow that somethin at the club was wrong and that some one 'ad been saying something about 'im and if she pretended she was dead 'e might get enough sympathy for them to give im a show to pay the funeral expenses. In course, she agreed to everything he ses and she said she would get away at night and go to an Aunt of 'ers in the country and stop there and then if 'e got a good show and mide a bit they'd go off to Canada. So they altered, or she did I expect, the date of the death certificate to the 22nd February 1909 and then Nobs goes for to the Club.

Nobs was sitting there by himself looking the picture of woe when Pat Mullock woo was allers tender arted ses.

"Cheer up Nobs, what yull 'ave to drink?"

Nobs as a drink and Pat ses "are things very bad Nobs?"

"Awful," ses Nobs, "but taint that."

"What is it" ses Pat, "Perhaps I can 'elp you a bit."

"My poor little wife" ses Nobs 'iding is emotion in 'is tankard

"Molly, pritty Molly, what's up with er?"

"Shes took awful queer" ses Nobs.

"Queer is she," ses Pat "What's the Doctor say."

Nobs buries is fice in the pot agin, as he wornt quite ready for what the Doctor said.

"Spasms" ses 'e at larst being the only thing what come to 'is mind.

"Spasms" ses Pat, "give her a 'ot mash and keep her in bed she'll be orl right to-morrow."

"Doctor ses somethin' abart tomain pisoning" ses Nobs.

"Who's your Doctor, Nobs?"

Agin Nobs as to have a drink then 'e recklects the name on the certificate and ses "Dr. Liddle."

"Liddle, Liddle I'm not remembering the name of Dr. Liddle around here: you be after Dr. Priestly, till him I sint you: I'll stand the racket.

"Liddle's a very clever man," ses Nobs, "I must run back now" and on his way he tole several others.

That night Molly went to 'er aunt's twenty mile away and she walked the 'ole way. Nobs walked the first tin mile with 'er and thin back.

About three in the afternoon 'e turned up at the Club looking pretty bad with 'is long walk and not too much food.

Pat see 'im and shouts out "Ows Molly, Nobs?"

Nobs ses nothing, but jabs 'is kerchief over 'is fice and 'ands the certificate to Pat.

I don't know what they all see'd in 'er but every man that knew Molly allus seemed as if 'e was doing 'is best to make a ass of isself about 'er and old Pat our Vice-President was, I think, the worst. Pat just drops into a seat and ses "Gosh" and Nobs clears orf leaving Pat with the certificate

In the evening Nobs was sitting by 'isself in 'is room when 'e 'ears a knock at 'is door "O's there" he ses gently going to the door "Sure it's only me" ses Pat, "ken I come in?"

Nobs expected a visitor and 'ad placed a bolster in the bed and bunched up a pillar for the 'ead laying a sheet over it keerful.

"If you wants to particular" ses Nobs.

Pat goes in and looks round and when he looks toward the bed 'es go a pent up sigh and lays is 'and on Nobs and ses: "Poor old chap, poor old chap" Then he sits down and stares at the bed. Nobs sed he began to feel very uncomfortable and asked Pat if he wanted anything.

"Sure Nobs" said "Pat the thought of pretty Molly lying there under the sheet 'as knocked all my senses clane out 'ave me I've come from the Club, we've 'ad a meeting and I went to talk to you but we cant talk 'ere and then he ses in a whisper.

"Do you think Nobs she'd mind if I had a larst look at 'er. Nobs jumped up almost shouting." No, no you mustn't, she'd 'ate it I know she would "and that was true right enough.

"All right, me boy" ses Pat looking very astonished at Nobs; than lets clear out.

Pat took Nobs to a pub and tol 'im that he as Vice-President called a meeting of the Committee of the Club and decided to give 'im, Nobs, a benefit to help over the expenses he would 'ave to incur over 'er. That they wanted to get a good programme and it would take some time to fix it, but that if he, Nobs, wanted a bit of ready he could 'ave it.

Nobs ses he felt rarely queer about the job and what with the strain of 'is wife's deception pretending to be dead and is 'aving to keep it up and ole Pat's kindness he nearly give the show away.

Pat tole 'im that Dave Smith were dead agin the benefit and added some things about 'im, Nobs, what would be no good for 'im, to hear but that he had been outvoted and told by more than one Committee man that they wornt too pleased with 'im and 'is ways as it was, and that 'e 'ad better shut 'is mouth, which 'e did.

All next day Nobs shut 'isself up in 'is rooms thinking 'ow he was to going to get rid of the body.

That evening he arranged for a coffin to be sent up through a man what he knew and he fills it up with things his wife would want and with as many brick bats as 'e could get 'old of and then he tells the undertaker's man to call for the coffin and drive it down to 'is wife's aunt which cost 'im a quid, leastways he owed it. The coffin 'ad ardly been gone a minute when up came Dave Smith to 'is room.

"Nobs, ma boy, I vos dredful sorry to 'ear of your terrible grief" ses 'e "and I vos doing all I can to 'elp you."

"I think youd better git out of this," ses Nobs.

"Now my boy I vos really sorry for you. I use my influence wid the Committee to git you a benefit" and 'e pushes 'is way into the room and looks round suspicious like. "Where you take 'er to" he ses, under his breath to Nobs. "Git out", ses Nobs and 'e takes 'im by the scuff of 'is neck and knoks 'im own the stone stairs and 'e ears 'im tumbling down and screaming murder all the way.

About two days after Dave turns very friendly to Nobs and withdraws all 'is opposition to the benefit and 'e works 'ard to git up a good show which 'e can do and no one like 'im when 'e pleases but..... Nobs tell me that he found out where Molly's corfin were taken to, and then 'e goes down and finds Molly, but 'e promises 'er not to blow the gaff and starts makin' love and tell 'er all sorts of lies abouts Nobs and a gel in town 'e ses Nobs 'as took up with. First of all Molly, she won't believe 'im, then she begins to get suspicious and jealous and when Dave brings in a photo of a pretty gel with "Dear Alf from his lovin' sweetheart" writ on it and ses he found it under Nobs' coat while he, Nobs, was playin' billiards, she went fair mad and sed she'd come up to town and give Nobs what for at wonst, then old Dave started threatenin' 'er and tole 'er that if she ever went back to Nobs, he'd 'ave Nobs pinched for forgery and he pulled out the death certificate of Nobs' aunt which 'e 'ad got from Pat, and he tole 'er that 'e 'ad made enquiries and that the Doctor whose nime was on the paper 'ad been dead for eleven years. When 'ed frit the life out of 'er, 'e started with his gimes of love makin' again and tole 'er she could never go back to Nobs and that 'e warn't no good for a gell like 'er but that 'e 'ad got a nice little cosy 'ome 'e could give 'er where she could be as 'appy as a bird and 'ed look after 'er and all sich promises and sich like until she were nearly off her chump.

Well the time went by and the benefit night was reached, Nobs 'ad got 'isself as fit as a Greek statty and 'e looked like one too when stripped but 'e 'ad a big task afore 'im.

Charley Gold was a 'eavy wight and Nobs 'ad to give 'im 17 lbs. He was an inch taller with a reach on 'im like a gorilla, 'ed mide a big reputation in America too and took on 'is own merits 'e could lick creation—and I tell you I warn't at all too 'appy about Nobs.

I was dead agin the challenge of Gold but Dave worked it and Nobs 'e insisted on meeting 'im, 'e tole me 'e 'ad 'eard rumours in the past and 'ed show what 'e could do when 'e 'ad the charnst.

You worn't at the show more's the pity, for it was a programme brim full of good things.

At 10 o'clock Nobs and Gold took the ring, Gold came in, 'is massive frame and 'is long swinging' arms lookin' the pink of condition.

I remember 'is looking across at Nobs before 'e seated 'isself in 'is corner and then starin' round at the audience with a sarcastic grin on his features, as much as to say is that all I got to do to-night.

I never saw Nobs look more physically fit than 'e did than night, but 'e looked a slip by the side o' big Charlie and there was a restlessness about 'is eyes as 'e waited in his corner for the referee to present them that I did not like. The first two rounds both men seemingly waited for a lead from 'is opponent and they opened very slow and cautious.

In the third round Nobs 'ad a squeak; he feinted, making Gold break ground, 'he shot out 'is left getting in a stinger on Gold 'ear, but as 'e recovered 'isself, Charlie swings 'is gorilla right round and misses Nobs' jaws by a 'air's breadth and follows with 'is left on 'is neck. If that first swing 'ad got 'ome with a left to follow Nobs must have gone to sleep.

Nobs see what 'e'd missed right enough. Charley again weaved in and tried 'is left swing but it flew round Nobs' 'ead and a clinch followed after which Nobs got in two jabs in the stomach which made Charley grunt.

In the fifth round Nobs got fairly going; 'e seemed then to have lost any nervousness or excitement that I feared. 'is eyes shone like opals as 'e dashed in continuously at 'is man and 'ad not Gold repeatedly clinched and 'eld I believe that round would have been the last.

Gold looked rattled when 'e come up for the sixth round and 'e started with a 'eavy swing of 'is right but agin fell short and got another spanking body punch for 'is pains. Nobs countered another swing o' Gold's left with a jarring jolt on the jaw.

The pair of 'um were 'ard at it and there was a deal of excitement when Gold rushin' in caught Nobs a smashing blow in the neck followed by a slashing left 'ander, cutting open Nobs' eyebrow.

The claret was running pretty free and seems to have 'alf blinded Nobs for 'e got pounded all round the ring till the call o' time.

In the tenth round, Nobs came up fit and fresh and the 'eavy wight began to look at 'is man a bit keerful. They played slow, sizing each other up.

Gold led with 'is left which Nobs parried 'e then drew 'is right out and Nobs ducked, and got an easy body punch. Then Nobs swung 'is right clean over on Charley's jaw and caught 'im with 'is left with a 'alf upper cut enough to scrape 'is nose off

Gold seemed fair surprised and for the rest of the round kep' 'is gime of clinching.

It were the 17th round. Excitement was running 'igh and there was deal of party feeling There's no manner of doubt that at the start the odds were again Nobs, but the way 'e stood to 'is man, 'is science, 'is grit tole much in 'is favour.

Nobs started the round with a smashing blow on Charley's mouth that split his lips from nose to chin: Charley tried 'is rushing tactics but Nobs was too quick for 'im and landed another clean un on 'is bare teeth and then follered with a mighty left swing and Gold went to earth like felled bullock.

There was a breathless silence as the ref counted 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, Charley 'alf raised 'isself, 7, 8, then with a mighty effort he was on 'is pins again, swaying and groggy amost waiting to receive on is knock art. Just as Nobs stepped up to 'im slow like as if to pick out where'e should give 'im 'is finishing touch, a woman's vice rang out, clear and sharp.

"Stop 'im, for Gaun's sake, stop 'im!"

Nobs 'eard like the rest on us, and for a second 'e turned 'is 'ead towards the plice where the vice came from with a scared look in 'is eyes. It was only a second but foxy Charley took 'is charnst.

He dashed in at Nobs and landed home on the stomach and jaw bowling 'im over like a ninepin and I tell yer, Sir, it were only the call o' time that 'as saved Nobs.

They was busy over Nobs in 'is corner, I can tell yer, Dave 'e was messing around and 'e 'anded up a glass of water and when I see Nobs let it fall from 'is hands as if 'e couldn't 'old it. I groans to myself.

But when he took the ring again, I never see a man pull 'isself together so quick. 'E looked grand man, 'e looked inspired. 'E went straight for 'is man right and left, then another smash on Charley's mouth. Gold give way a bit and as 'e did so, Nobs jumped in with as straight and clean a blow as ever I see fetched in right to Charley's chin. The blow was a fine clean artistic piece o' boxing but it turned Charley a 'arf sommersault. 'E landed 'im on 'is 'ead and 'e was carnted out 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, the ref seemed to linger on the numbers but Charley never moved for 'e was dead.

"Dead" I exclaimed.

"Yus, dead, while the ref was a carnting 'im art the recording Angil was aclosing 'is ledger."

Well, there was a nice 'ullaballoo. The perlice took the ring and there were sharting and cussing and a nice set to, but above the lot there was the woman's vice kep saying, "Let me go to 'im, let me through, let me go to 'im, and the next minute there in the ring were Nobs' wife aclinging round 'is neck, akissing 'is gory fice. Well what with the living dead and the dead living, you can imagine we was a bit surprised.

Nobs was took off by the perlice together with 'is seconds the ref and others, but they only kep Nobs in the cell that night letting the others go after binding them over to appear.

Well, Sir, that's the gime I got to tell yer, in corse the Club will defend Nobs as to the fight but Dave Smith e's been an took action and 'e swears that e's going to lay information agin Nobs for obtaining 'is benefit by fraud and forging 'is wife's death certificate and our little fund is for 'is defence but it 'as to be got up quiet like for ther's no doubt that Nobs ad the Club on toast, proper."

I arranged with Joe to see Mrs. Noble and her husband the next day and afterwards to interview Dave Smith and I was glad to be able to write Joe in the following terms:—

Dear Mr. Bigg,

After having interviewed Mr. and Mrs. Noble, I had a long talk with Mr. David Smith. I pointed out to him the mistake the audience made when they heard a woman cry out "Stop him" during the Gold—Noble fight, in thinking that the woman referred to one of the combatants, but that on the contrary she referred to a certain Israelite who was about to empty the contents of a small bottle into the glass standing half full of water in Noble's corner and that when Noble turned his head towards the voice he saw the small bottle fall from the hands of the said Israelite. I explained to him that the small bottle had been recovered and in it there was still a little of what proved to be a very powerful and noxious drug.

He seemed to think that if the authorities knew of Noble's trick on the Club, it would prejudice him with regard to the manslaughter trial and I quite agreed and pointed out the necessity of avoiding scandal of any sort and persuaded him to take quite an appreciatory view of the Christian principle of "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us" and especially the quid pro quo.

You need have no fear about the result of Noble's trial, the police tell me it was a clean fight and the proceedings are only formal. The inspector who was at Club that night whispered to me on leaving, "That it was the finest fight he'd ever seen and quite worth it." I wonder what he meant?"

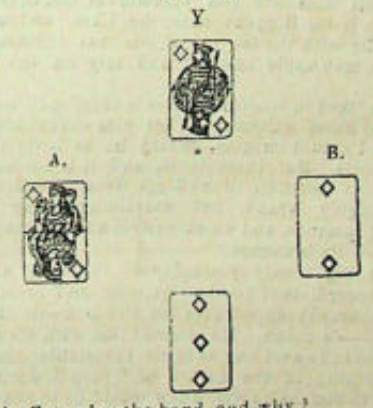
Solution to Problem No. 80.

THIS is a case in which the ordinary rule of playing through strength does not apply. A should not lead a diamond, for if B holds ace and queen he will be led up to eventually, and if he holds the queen only, A & B have a better chance of making a trick in the suit if it is led by the dealer. It will be seen that they are bound to do so, if not ruffed, unless the queen is imperfectly guarded. Also, A cannot go on with spades, for that would give Z, who, of course, holds the two unseen trumps, a ruff in one hand and a discard from the other. He must lead a club, therefore, and as the 10 will not help B, but may take a trick on the third round, he should lead the 2.

Problem No. 81.



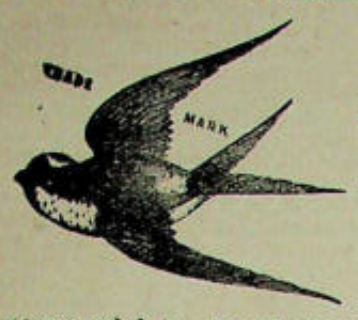
SCORE: A B, 0; Y Z, 0; Z deals, and leaves it to Y, who declares hearts. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:

Y's HAND (Dummy): Hearts, queen, 6, 5, 4, 3; diamonds, ace, king, 6; clubs, 7; spades, queen, 10, 5, 2.

Z's HAND (Dealer).—Hearts, Ace, king 2; diamonds, 5, 4, 3; clubs, king, 8, 6; spades, knave, 9, 4, 3.

The first trick is as follows:

Trick 1.



How ought Z to play the hand, and why?

A waiter on the top of a London 'bus was heard to pay a tribute to the late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman which the ex-Premier would probably have appreciated. "I have waited on him many's the time at Cluny Castle, in Scotland," said this admirer, "and a nicer gent you couldn't see. Whether it was soup or oysters or only a biscuit, he had always a kind smile and a simple word, and that's more'n most gents has for the waiter.

AN old lady from a remote country district who visited Edinburgh for the first time happened to arrive as a party of golfers were hurrying to catch a suburban train for the links. "It's a braw toun," she informed her minister after her return, "but it hurt me sair tae see sae money decent-like men carrying bags o' broken umbrallas. There maun hae been sair douncomes, an' though I wadna mention it for the warl' to anither, there was twa or three that lookit as if they had been ministers!"

AEROPLANE ACCIDENTS.

THE fatal accident at Juvisy to the daring young French aeroplanist M. Lefebvre, who so greatly distinguished himself at Rheims, sadly mars the comparative freedom from serious accident, which has marked the development of the flying machine.

The lamentable occurrence is the more distressing as it came about in circumstances where apparently there was no danger, as the new Wright machine he was flying was only about 30ft. from the ground when it dived downwards, and as no explanation of the cause of the accident has been forthcoming. There are at least two possible explanations. The first of these is that something went wrong with the horizontal rudders or elevator planes which are carried out in front of the main planes. The machine was a new one under test, and quite probably had never been in the air before. If there was any serious defect in the fittings of attachment of the elevators or in the connections between them, and the hand lever by which the pilot actuates them, this might not be noticeable by inspection, and the fault might develop as soon as the stress of actual flight began to tell. It has to be borne in mind that the Wright machine has little or no automatic stability. In this it differs from most of the French machines, which have tails.

On the other hand, such efficient power of control is provided that in the hands of an expert pilot the machine is as safe as any other, and probably safer than most, and is capable of evolutions in the air which no other type of machine can rival. If, however, the elevators suddenly became useless, an accident was almost certain to follow. The same result would probably ensue in the case of any type of aeroplane, but with the Wright machine it would be likely to come very suddenly.

The second possible explanation is that M. Lefebvre may have become suddenly unconscious or have died suddenly while in the air, through some disease or heart failure. If that occurred the machine would of course come to earth just as surely as the soaring bird when shot on the wing drops at once.

There is no room for a third explanation that the accident was due to want of dexterity on the part of the pilot. M. Lefebvre was a very expert manipulator of the Wright machine. Though some observers think that he had not the supreme command shown by Messrs. Orville and Wilbur Wright, others consider that he was practically their equal.

In any case his performance at the recent Rheims aviation meeting was the wonder and admiration of every beholder. His evolutions and rapid turns and sweeps in the air marked him as a past master; they indeed suggested aerial acrobatic feats. A man capable of this kind of thing cannot be expected to be in any danger from want of skill in the comparatively humdrum and easy task of guiding a machine simply undergoing ordinary tests. Neither in the circumstances would he be attempting any "fancy skating" or indulging in new experiments. Accordingly, it can only be concluded that the accident arose either from a breakdown of the elevators, or some other essential part of the steering or from unconsciousness suddenly striking the pilot.

Looked at theoretically and in the abstract, it would appear that the evolution of flying machines and even their use when perfected must be one of the most dangerous sports conceivable. Yet during the whole course of the movement only three fatal accidents has occurred before that of M. Lefebvre. Of course, leaving out of account, any accidents that may have happened from the Middle Ages downward, when a few men without any knowledge of the problem are credited with having equipped themselves with artificial wings, and with having killed themselves by jumping off heights in the stupid hope that the wings would sustain them. Human flight began with Otto Lilienthal in Germany about the year 1894. In those days, of course, only gliders were in use, the motor-driven aeroplane being then only a possibility of the future. Lilienthal was the first to achieve remarkable success with a gliding apparatus. He maintained the balance in his flights down hillsides by the active movements of his body. On 9th August, 1896, while gliding near Berlin he fell and was killed. It is interesting to note that, just as in the case of M. Lefebvre, his aeroplane tilted up behind till the plane was vertical, and he dropped.

The next fatality was that which happened to Percy S. Pilcher at Market Harborough, near Rugby, on 30th September, 1899. He was an imitator of Lilienthal, and had carried out very successful gliding work both in Scotland and in England. Looking forward to fitting his glider with a motor and propeller, he was experimenting, by being towed in the air by a rope pulled by horses, when a gust of wind broke the frame of his machine and he was killed by the fall. It is perhaps hardly necessary to point out, that the dangers with gliders at that time were greater than those now faced by pilots of power-driven machines, as the means of control was very rudimentary, and the machine had to be so light that the margin of strength of the framework was very small.

Though gliding continued in America and France, and the glider was developed into a power-driven machine, no further death occurred till 17th September, 1908, when Lieut. Selfridge, of the United States Army, was killed at Fort Meyer, Washington. He was not the aviator, but was taken up as a passenger by Mr. Orville Wright in his motor-driven machine. While in the air one of the wires connecting with the rear vertical rudder got loose, and one of the propellers fouled it, with the result that the blade was broken off. The other propeller (all the Wright machines have two) remained effective, and swung the machine round suddenly and the balance was lost. Then the machine plunged. Mr. Wright kept his head and owing to his powers of control of the apparatus he was beginning to get it in hand, but the time before striking the earth was too short to allow of it. Mr. Wright was of opinion that if the machine had been at a greater height when the breakage occurred he would have been able to regain control, and to come to ground on a glide. As it was the machine fell from a height of about 75ft., Lieut. Selfridge was killed, and Mr. Wright was seriously injured. As the world knows, Mr. Wright is now in as good form as an aviator as ever he was.

In the present state of the art the chief danger lies in the possibility of anything suddenly going wrong with the steering gear or any serious breakage of framing from sudden wind gusts or other cause. Stoppage of the engine can be met by gliding to earth, hence the wisdom of aviators in securing the maximum strength of every part and accurate and secure fitting, and also in making a careful examination of the whole machine before each flight begins. With the engine power now available there is no difficulty from the point of view of weight in providing an ample margin of strength in every part.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—There was rather an extraordinary day's racing on Saturday when the Extras were continued, dead-heats being declared in each of the first three races, though all of them did not meet with general approval. Two of Mr. Ali bin Talib's participated in these and Tom Scott brought off a treble, the two big horse races going to H.H. the Jam Saheb. This is the first of five remaining Extra Meetings, and the public are as usual determined to see them out, being once more lucky with the weather, though rain fell when actually on the way to the course. They were, in the bargain, served up a liberal card of eight events owing to two divisions.

First of the Maiden Plate divisions opened the day, Defence, Sabuktakin and Marcus being best fancied. Waziristan was out first followed by First Class and Defence, First Class assuming the lead before the bend. At the distance Defence passed him and looked all over a winner as he also held Priceless. First Class, however, came again and, drawing rapidly on the leader, made a dead-heat of it. It was decided not to run off, First Class getting the race.

Steel and Grey Morn II. fought for favouritism in the next, Lahuk taking no part as he bolted home from the paddock. Hyacinth showed the way for a moment till Mizhir Bey took it up and Grey Morn came second, Jacko and John Scott joining Hyacinth. Well before the bend Grey Morn was in the lead, Hyacinth turning wide and Steel coming up after the leader. A little later John Scott put in an appearance outside, but still Grey Morn had not been asked. When he was he failed to answer and Steel passed him for Brown to come with a rattle and draw level on the post, though many thought he just missed. John Scott got a walk over.

Thirteen started for the first of the Consolation Plates of a mile, open betting left Bendigo shorter than Merrily, Ashroff, Amood and Lapwing. England led out closely followed by Hadee, Thaboor, Ashroff and Lapwing, Young Salanic last. Before half way Hadee had assumed command from Merrily, Lapwing, Ashroff and Colaba, Bendigo soon after closing with them. Merrily passed Hadee at the bend and Young Salanic was amongst the next batch on the outside. Merrily had the other two well beaten, but Young Salanic came with a great run and seemed to have got his head well in front, but once more a dead-heat was given. The owners decided to divide.

Next came the mile Ascot Plate with eight runners, Metal Boy decided favourite from Sacricomar and St. Patrick. The last of these made the running from Flaneur and Metal Boy, Lady Violet later closing up and Flaneur dropping out. Down the straight there was an interesting race, Metal Boy just pipping St. Patrick by a neck, Lady Violet and The Loaf close up.

The second division of the Arab Consolation was run in very poor time, Brigand favourite from Middleman, Antica, Humayoon, etc., sixes quoted bar one. Antica was as usual in front, but Company soon showed just ahead of him, Brigand slightly leading the rest. Antica held on gamely, but once it came to serious business it was no race, Brigand winning easily from a late run by Humayoon.

Out of twenty-one, sixteen faced the gate for the Alexandra Park Plate, Vigorous getting more money than Foursome, White Heather and Forfeit. For a few strides Moonlight led White Heather, and then on the rails Foursome drew up and Vigorous made a bunch of three with Moonlight next. In the home stretch Vigorous came to the front and held Foursome in a canter, Manlock coming late to beat Moonlight and White Heather for a place. It was a very slow race, the winner standing out on his own and making the third consecutive winner for his trainer.

Of the five for the Arab Welter, Little King with Killorn up remained a trifle better fancied than Express, for whom a deal of money came. Sheik Farid led the favourite some way in front of the other three, but the former went right out at the bend and things looked better for Little King. Once, however, Express came up to him it was all over, Major Pitman far from all out to win in a straggly finish.

Finally a bad blow for backers in the Karjat Plate when Sharar was a strong favourite from Hishan, Sir Jamal and Darby. Disfigure was first on his legs, but Chechan soon passed him leading Sharar, Rajput and Hishan. Sharar was done with as early as the bend, but otherwise there was little change except that Hishan passed Rajput, Chechan winning with a good deal to spare and thus avenging his defeat by Sharar at the beginning of the season. The stable had a good win at long odds, as very few of the public had him on their mind.

Ever since the catching of a big pike on the River Test, which, according to some of the sensational daily papers, was, of course, the largest fish that had ever been taken, a number of pike stories have been going the rounds. But, although many old friends have cropped up again, one has seen no mention of what must still be the record pike story. This story, in fact, although it is to be found in the appendix to a well-known work on angling, appears to be little known. It is taken from a London newspaper of 25th January, 1715, and runs as follows:—"On Tuesday last, at Lillishall Lime Works, near Newport, a pool about nine yards deep, which had not been fished for ages, was let off by means of a level brought up to drain the works, when an enormous pike was found. He was drawn out by a rope fastened round his head and gills, amidst hundreds of spectators, in which service a great many men were employed. He weighed upwards of 170 pounds, and is thought to be the largest ever seen. Some time ago the clerk of the parish was trolling in the above pond, when his bait was seized by this furious creature, which by a sudden jerk pulled him in, and doubtless would have devoured him also had he not by wonderful agility and dexterous swimming escaped the dreadful jaws of this voracious animal." The pike of 145lb., said to have been caught somewhere in the Tyrol in the year 1862, becomes a mere baby as compared with this Lillishall monster, whose fame ought to have lived during all these years better than it has. One believes that the largest pike ever caught in British waters (leaving this fairy tale of the 170lb. fish out of the question) was the 72lb., pike taken in Loch Ken, Galway. This fish is mentioned by Daniel in his "Rural Sports" and by others, and there seems no reason to doubt its size. Salmon have been taken even larger.

The recent Resolution by the Home Department giving the results of the measures adopted for the destruction of wild animals, and venomous snakes last year shows that the total number of persons killed by wild animals in India rose from 1,966 in 1907 to 2,166 in 1908—a figure higher than that reached in any of the previous four years.

The most noticeable features of the returns are the large increases in the number of deaths attributed to tigers in Bengal and to tigers, leopards and bears in the Central Provinces and Berar. The number of persons killed by tigers in Bengal was 455, or 100 more than in 1907.

A special reward of Rs. 200 was sanctioned for the destruction of each of three rogue elephants in the Kalimpong Subdivision of Darjeeling, and rewards of Rs. 100 and Rs. 500 were also sanctioned for certain man-eating tigers in the Monghyr and Hazaribagh districts. The number of people killed by wolves rose from 47 in 1907 to 75 in the Hazaribagh district, notwithstanding the fact that a special reward of Rs. 20 for every wolf killed within the jurisdiction of certain thanas had been offered. Next to Bengal the Madras Presidency had the highest mortality from tigers (170) and the great majority of these deaths (126) occurred in the district of Vizagapatam.

A man-eating leopard, for which a reward of Rs. 50 had been offered in 1907, remained at large at the close of the year under review, and the amount of the reward has since been raised to Rs. 500.

It was found necessary to instruct the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich to take special measures for the extermination of wolves.

The total mortality amongst human beings caused by snake bite fell from 21,419 to 19,738. The figures for 1907 were the lowest since 1879 and the still lower figures for the year under review are remarkable.

A correspondent writes:—An interesting story is appearing in a daily contemporary upon the private life of Nussir-u-deen, King of Oudh. Presumably it is not claimed for the story that it is true to fact though some of the incidents described may have actually happened. An incident which appears most improbable is a graphic and vivid description of a fight between a so-called man-eating horse and a tiger. Probably it has never before been assured that a horse had actually beaten a tiger. The fight had been arranged for the delectation of the King. The tiger had been kept from food since the previous day and was a particularly fine animal. When both were in the arena the horse stood motionless awaiting the attack of the tiger, the latter after creeping noiselessly round the arena sprang upon its foe with the intention of seizing the head and forequarters; "but the man-eater was too adroit for that; and by a quick diving motion of his head and shoulders, had received his antagonist upon his muscular haunches behind. The claws sank deeply into the flesh, whilst the hind feet of the tiger made a grasp or two at the forelegs of the horse; but there was no time to secure his position. The man-eater lashed up with his iron heels into the air with tremendous vigour, and in a moment Bunhea (the tiger) was sprawling on the ground." A second attack by the tiger was met in the same way; but the horse dived a little further so that the tiger landed further with its head in the neighbourhood of the horse's tail and received a tremendous kick which broke its jaw and caused it to make its escape as quickly as possible. Another tiger was let loose at this remarkable horse but refused to attack. Three buffaloes were then sent into the arena; they likewise refused to attack and presently received a sound kicking, after which the horse was led forth a proud victor. If this yarn is true horses have changed since the days of Nussir-u-deen, King of Oudh.

The only buffalo now in the London Zoological Gardens is a Senegambian but a Times correspondent in the course of his "Studies" in the gardens has nevertheless obtained much information regarding the various species of this animal. It is pointed out that the buffalo does not include the bison, which was once so common in America and is now practically extinct, and from whom Buffalo Bill and other heroes of reality and fiction took their sobriquets. The same kind of mistake is often made here in India where the gaur which has been described as the finest species of the genus Bos in the world, is often spoken of quite erroneously as the Indian bison. Opinions appear to vary as to the ferocity of the buffalo but there is no dispute as to its courage. When it charges it always charges home, neither losing heart nor swerving, whether its antagonist be man or elephant or tiger; nor can anyone doubt its tenacity of life, making it at times extraordinarily difficult to kill; or its cunning which suggests to it the most disconcerting manœuvre, when wounded and being followed up, of turning back its tracks for some distance and then stepping aside into the bush to lie in wait until its pursuers come along, when it can take them at a disadvantage, charging suddenly out at them from the side or rear. All buffaloes alike appear to charge not with their heads down, but with their necks at full stretch, their noses out in front of them and their horns laid back. The largest individual Asiatic buffalo horn known is that in the British Museum which measures 77⅜ inches along, its outside circumference. The record African head seems to be about 4 feet between the tips, the individual horns being 53 inches long. With such formidable weapons it is easy to imagine what destructive powers the animal has. Many instances are given illustrating how difficult it is to kill a buffalo. In India the wild buffalo (as well as the gaur) is commonly reputed to be a match for the tiger, and the latter is said never to attack the tame buffaloes when in a herd; and as Colonel Percy mentions, the small native child who commonly acts as herdsman "traverses the tiger's domain in perfect safety if mounted on the broad back of one of his charges." Reference is made to the well known and not altogether unintelligent hatred of tame buffaloes of India towards white people; Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling speaks of the ignominy of "a party of stalwart British sportsmen being treed by a herd of angry buffaloes and obliged to wait for rescue at the hands of a tiny naked herdsman's child." Europeans who are only acquainted with the great beasts who drag heavy carts along the streets of Calcutta may be surprised at this but in the Mofussil they can get ample proof of the buffalo's hatred for the white man.

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

British aviators still fail to achieve the performances accomplished by those of other nations. There can be no doubt about it that in the gradual conquest of the air, which has been progressing so rapidly during these last twelve months and more, Great Britain has played a poor part. For some time past there have been two clubs connected with aeronautics but it is hard to discover what they have done to justify their existence. It is reported that at the present time there is a disagreement between the Aero Club and the Aeroplane Club regarding the Government of aerial sport and play, but neither of them appear to have earned any right to control anything or anybody capable of flight, for neither has demonstrated that it or any part of it can fly. Although the President of the aeroplane exhibited a beautifully finished aeroplane some months ago it is said that the machine has not yet been taken off the ground by its owner. The clubs seem to arrange excursions to foreign countries to see foreigners fly but to fly themselves they cannot. If only to justify their existence these clubs ought to quickly produce some Britisher who can aviate.

Pittsburg millionaires are taking to athletics. Before another year shall have run its course Napoleons and Crœsuses of the steel-making world will (says the Philadephia Record) be doing all kinds of gymnastic "stunts" in the finest athletics club-house in America. Quondam "young partners" of Andrew Carnegie and bankers and railroad magnates of nation-wide fame will vie with each other in the fistic arena, in wrestling bouts, and in aquatic feats in a great swimming pool, around which thousands of spectators can be seated.

All these things will take place in the magnificent new home of the Pittsburg Athletic Association. This club-house is to cost a half-million dollars, and, as an equal sum will be expended in furnishing and to defray the cost of the ground, the investment will represent a million. It is estimated that the wealth represented by these members exceeds $650,000,000, one man alone, Mr. Henry Clay Frick, being credited with nearly one-sixth of this.

A splendid site in the heart of the fine residential and institutional centre of Pittsburg has been chosen for the great pile of Cleveland sand-stone, wrought after the style of the Italian Renaissance, that will be the club home after the 1st July, 1910. It fronts on three streets in Belefield, facing Fifth Avenue, with the beautiful, broad acres of Schenley Park only a square away, and the superb new home of the Pittsburg Ball Club one block to the right. At this most modern and largest of ball parks the athletic association will hold tournaments and all kinds of meets.

The club of the association will be a marvel of its kind. Absolutely no expense is being spared to make it one of the most up-to-date buildings of the kind in the United States. Before an architect was employed a committee visited the chief athletic club-houses of the East and West, and obtained a vast fund of information; so it comes about that the Pittsburg Club will embrace every convenience and facility for the carrying-on of good and wholesome athletics. This, however, will not be the sole purpose of the organisation, for it is designed to meet the social needs of the men, women, and children of Pittsburg, as well as their physical needs. The aim is to make the club-house the headquarters for athletics and amusements of Greater Pittsburg.

The scope of the work to be carried out is most ambitious, as it will embrace annual tournaments on an imposing scale, in which men of millions will take part as athletes, running, throwing the hammer, jumping, diving, swimming, wrestling, and other stunts that will be highly entertaining. Besides this contests and trials of strength with other clubs and associations will be held, clubs from abroad being invited to participate, as well as those in this country. Some of the great college games will be pulled off at Forbes Athletic Association, so Pittsburg will assume an importance and take on a prestige as a centre of intercollegiate athletics that she does not now possess.

Special consideration is to be given students of educational institutions, and systematic plans will be made for the physical development of the members under the supervision of competent instructors. The fair sex is not neglected in the plans of the organisation, for the women are to profit by the club's privileges; special hours are to be set aside for them and various features will be designed to meet their requirements.

The Murree Hockey Tournament ended last week in a win for the Royal Munster Fusiliers "A" team, who beat the West Yorkshire Regiment by 5 goals to nil and thus retain possession of the Cup for another year.

The three football matches for the William Younger Cup, between Upper and Lower Burma, have this year ended in a tie. The first resulted in a pointless draw, the second was won by Lower Burma by a goal to nil, and the third was won by Upper Burma by 3 goals to nil. The Cup will be held for six months by each team.

Under the captaincy of Mr. E. Horncastle of the Ballygunge C. C. a cricket team composed of members of the leading European clubs in Calcutta will visit Chittagong during the coming Poojah holidays. Tennis and Golf are also included in the programme and the team as at present arranged is as follows:—

Messrs. B. A. White, H. F. Yeoman, D. S. Shallow, R. N. Bocquet, B. H. P. Trenchard, E. C. Phelan, F. A. Sewell, H. B. Turle, C. P. Lomax, A. D. Garth, R. L. McIntyre, and E. Horncastle (captain).

In the final of the Walton Heath £240 golf tournament, Tom Ball beat Alexander Herd by seven up and five to play.

The tournament was notable for the sensational defeats of Taylor, Vardon, Braid, and other champions.

The Hunting Season in Madras will probably open about the 11th November, and there is every prospect of a most successful season. A bitch pack of eighteen couple selected for the Madras Hunt by Mr. J. Wilton arrived last week, and with one exception landed in excellent condition. The Hon'ble Mr. W. O. Horne again undertakes the duties of Master and Huntsman, which he so efficiently carried out last season, with the assistance of his last season's Whippers-in, Mr. H. N. C. Campbell and Captain the Hon'ble O. E. Vesey. Mr. Campbell also acts as Honorary Secretary.

It is probable that a return fight between Bill Squires and Bill Lang will be pulled off in Melbourne at Cup time.

Young Corbett, the pugilist, since his defeat by Johnny Frayne on 17th July, at Cofforth's, is looked upon as a back number, and is finding that the pathway of a has-been is not rose-carpeted by any means. On the night of 30th July, the Pacific Athletic Club had an evening of boxing at Dreamland, and there was some surprise when Corbett was brought into the ring by Billy Jordan. The mystery was cleared up when Jordan announced that Corbett, after years of fighting, had found himself broke and stranded in San Francisco. Jordan made an appeal for help to enable Corbett and his bride of a couple of weeks—he was married the day after his go with Frayne—to return to New York. Several pugilists present went round with their hats, and many coins were tossed on the ring platform. In all about one hundred and thirty dollars were collected. It made some of those present think, for they remembered the days when this same Young Corbett used to give wine suppers at San Francisco's swell restaurants. He celebrated most of his triumphs in this manner, and the costliest vintages flowed like water. They say that before making himself a mark for such cheap charity as a ringside shower Corbett asked assistance from some of those who were his boon companions in the flush days, and that all he received was a measure of bogus sympathy. It's a story that's been told before, and will be told again.

A Boxing entertainment was held at the Grand Opera House, Calcutta, on Tuesday evening the principal feature of which was a twenty-round contest between the Dixie Kid, Feather Weight Champion of Calcutta and Driver Paddy Doyle, Bantam Weight Champion of India and Burma. The fight lasted seven rounds: the Dixie Kid had the better of the exchanges all the way, floored his man three times in the fifth round and knocked him out in the seventh. The programme was filled out with three other contests and an exhibition of weight-lifting.

The following cabled account of the Kaufman-Johnson ten rounds battle at San Francisco on the 9th September, appears in the Sydney Referee to hand by the last Australian mail:—

Prior to the fight Johnson was favourite at 10 to 4, but there was only slight interest in the betting. A few wagers of 2 to 1 were made that the Californian would stay out the ten rounds. A condition of the match was that if both men were on their feet at the end of the tenth round there would be no decision, but the referee, Eddie Smith, promised to give his opinion to the newspapers.

Johnson's weight was announced 209lb., and Kaufman's 205lb. Johnson was hooted on entering the ring, but the Californian was cheered.

Johnson opened the first round by landing a left on the stomach, and the pair exchanged rights and lefts to the jaw. Johnson then shot his right to the face. Kaufman appeared to be worried, and closed on Johnson, landing short blows on the head. The champion was smiling. Kaufman was slow in his movements.

Johnson, when the gong sounded for the second round, rushed his opponent, and they wrestled on the ropes. The coloured man drove lefts to the face and body, and to the jaw, but Kaufman was unable to land a blow. Johnson sent swings to the head, but they lacked steam, and he then rushed Kaufman to his corner. Little damage was done, though the round was Johnson's.

A right uppercut from Johnson early in the third round sent the blood spurting from Kaufman's mouth. The champion then planted a terrific right on his opponent's face, and Kaufman stalled off the attack for a time. Johnson taunted him, and he drove his right to the coloured man's jaw twice. Kaufman stumbled at the gong and was apparently a beaten man.

Round four opened with a right to the stomach by Kaufman. Johnson then drove him to the ropes with rights and lefts to the jaw. Kaufman retaliated with another right to the stomach, and both men eased. The round ended tamely. It looked as if Johnson deliberately slowed down.

At the commencement of the next round the men closed in the centre of the ring. Johnson sent in two uppercutting rights that made Kaufman's head rock. The latter was constantly on the defensive, and unable to land a blow. The champion drove a right and left to the stomach, but with little effect, and the pair were clinching at the gong.

The sixth round started with Kaufman missing with his left, and Johnson, following up the advantage, drove the Californian through the ropes with a left hook to the body and right cross to the jaw. Light blows, which did no damage, were exchanged. Johnson was complete master of the situation, and had everything his own way.

Kaufman opened the seventh round with two leads that were easily blocked. The crowd hooted, and the Californian then went in close. He was unable to land a blow for a time, but finally planted his right and left on the coloured man's body. A clinch ensued, Johnson evidently holding back.

The last round opened with some sparring. Then Johnson sent a left hook to the face, and the men mixed it in the centre. Kaufman landed a right and a left on his opponent's face. Johnson replying with a left. The crowd jeered as the fight ended with the men slugging on the ropes, but doing no damage.

No decision was given, though the fight was Johnson's all the way.

The referee refused to express an opinion at the end of the fight. Newspaper men declare that Johnson early outpointed Kaufman in every exchange, and that all the rounds were Johnson's. The Californian was unable either to land blows or avoid them.

Later the refree stated: "Johnson out-fought, out-hit, and out-generalled Kaufman all through the fight. I don't think that Johnson held back in the ninth round and some of the earlier ones, but tried to finish his opponent. Kaufman was no match for the champion."

A GOOD programme of six events was put through at the Bombay Gymkhana Mud Sports on the 6th instant: entries were better than usual, competition was keen and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent, the Band of the 116th Mahrattas adding to the success of the meeting. Tent-pegging opened the proceedings and was won by Mr. Duncan Wilson with Captain Nash second. Jumping by half sections for horses was won by Messrs. Grayburn and Byrt: Lodge and Phillips 2: Major Darby and Cadell 3. The two ladies' nominations provided good sport, the Umbrella and Cheroot Race went to Miss Gass and Mr. Grayburn, and the Marketing Stakes to Mrs. Cudlip and Mr. Richmond. Mr. Grayburn put a third win to his credit with the Victoria Cross Race, being followed home by Messrs. Thomson and Richmond. The Scurry was well contested, the handicap being most successful: Mr. Andrews on Bill squeezed home by a short head from Mr. Pearson on Bess.

THE first of the Annual General Meetings of the Calcutta Football Club to elect Officers and General Committee for the coming season, will be held at the Saturday Club this evening at 9-30 P.M.

WE have received from Messrs. Ganda Singh Uberoi and Co. a copy of their sports catalogue for 1909-10, a very complete list full of interest for all athletes and sportsmen All the outdoor and indoor games and pastimes find a place in the catalogue and besides a stock of the best makes of English cricket, football, hockey, golf and other athletic appliances this well-known firm lists its own manufactures, all produced in their own workshops. They are the largest manufacturers of games in the East and the cricket bats, hockey sticks, tennis rackets and footballs turned out from the Punjab Sports Works at Sialkot are famous throughout the peninsula, while their polo sticks have a reputation second to none in India. Messrs. Ganda Singh Uberoi and Co. have won many awards for their manufactures at exhibitions in India and in England, including a silver medal at the Franco-British Exhibition last year—the only award for games made in India. A long list of patrons—among whom one notes the names of almost all the British and native regiments in India—proves the popularity of the firm as athletic outfitters.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 24th September 1909.

WE feel that winter cannot be very far off when we see the gulls in the Thames. Last Monday I discovered the first harbingers of the cold weather hovering around Westminster Bridge and fluttering over the spars of the old Buzzard. A less agreeable and seemly sign, of the nearing change I found in the West End, where quite an extraordinary number of tramps have quite recently taken to wandering about aimlessly. The country has disgorged its casual labourers into the town, driven hither, like the seagulls, by a desire to pick up what odds and ends of sustenance may fall in their way. It is a sorry spectacle—this procession of human flotsam, displaying unashamed its "windowed" raggedness in the streets of the world's richest capital. One rarely sees the like in Paris, Berlin, or Vienna. In those cities the more than poor seem too proud to exhibit their tattered and forlorn condition.

THE Peary-Cook controversy continues, and the opening chapters of the history of the last North Pole Expedition are being written in "Billingsgate." Personally I have very little interest in the matter, for after all said and done, "what of it," as a man observed the other day, "why do men try to reach the North Pole? They know there is nothing to be found there and that their success can add nothing to the sum of human knowledge, or human happiness. Sheer vanity is at the root of all these expeditions." Remembering the splendid struggles of the heroes of the past one feels inclined to combat this rather cynical view, but when one considers some things one begins to think in certain cases there may be something in it. For example Peary is reported to have said that he reached the pole absolutely alone, that he took no one with him on the last few marches, because he wanted the honour all to himself. If this is really so it was childish and quite unworthy of his reputation as an explorer. One feels disappointed in him. On the other hand the accounts of Dr. Cook regarding his bartering with the simple and child-like Eskimos and the tales of rich furs exchanged for tin cups and cheap pocket-knives or cotton pocket handkerchiefs rather grate on one's sense of fairness. Doubtless both the Eskimos and the highly civilised explorers are pleased, and that is the main thing, but one cannot help longing for a more open-handed white trader to chip in and spoil the market.

GOLF would not appear at first sight to be a game likely to appeal to a Boer; but one can never tell. The spectacle of General Botha, who a few years ago was our most redoubtable opponent in South Africa, quietly acquiring the game of golf on a Scottish link gives food for reflection. The General is said to be uncommonly good for a beginner, a strong and sure driver, and a putter of no mean capacity. Curious that he who in the past showed such absolute genius in keeping himself out of a hole should now spend his time in trying to get into one!

NEWS of the death of the organ-grinder who styled himself "Viscount Hinton" has only just become known, although the event occurred so far back as last April. When Earl Poulett died ten years ago the deceased man claimed the title, but on his case coming before the Committee of Privileges in July, 1903, judgment was given against him. For years previously he had been a familiar figure in the London streets, where he earned a living with a barrel-organ, on which he displayed a notice that he was heir to the Poulett estates.

His last days appear to have been passed in poverty, somewhat alleviated, it is said, by a small allowance from several friends. In February of this year he went to lodge in Medcalf Place, Pentonville Road, a small, dingy turning near the Angel, and after remaining there for five or six weeks he became ill, and was taken on 31st March to the Holborn Union Workhouse, in Shepherdess Walk, City Road, whence he was once removed to the Holborn Union Infirmary in Archway Road, Highgate. His name and address were entered in the register as "William Turnour," aged 59, of 1, Medcalf Place, Pentonville Road. His condition was dangerous, and he spoke but little. In a day or two, however, several patients who hailed from the same neighbourhood recognised him as the "organ-grinding viscount."

APPARENTLY a woman perfect in form and feature is terribly hard to find in England, at least one, who is prepared to turn her charms to commercial account. The theatrical manager who has been advertising for a lady of "really classical beauty of face and figure" has given up his quest in despair. "There is no woman with a perfect face and figure in England," he declares. One cannot say whether he really expected to find one, but he must be a remarkably cheerful sort of idiot if he did. What he asked for was someone possessing a figure giving seventeen or eighteen measurements according to his standard and combining it with a face perfect in feature and charm. It may have occurred to him that the odds against his finding this extraordinary person were rather huge: but he may not have paused to consider that all the figures in the world would hardly suffice to express them. Moreover most of us, if we happened upon a lady only half so wonderful, would feel inclined to offer her something other than a merely theatrical engagement.

A GOOD many of us who know our India smiled this week, when the Times correspondent drew attention to the "amazing coincidence" revealed in Lord Kitchener's recent farewell speech to the Indian Army and Lord Curzon's ditto to India delivered four years ago. Read in parallel columns the thing was really startling. One theory is that Kitchener of Khartoum has deputed some subordinate to prepare his valedictory oration and that this worthy had indented freely on Lord Curzon; another is that it is an example of Kitchener humour. Those inclining to the latter theory maintain that the resemblance was evidently intentional, Lord Kitchener's aim being to amuse his listeners by praising himself and his own work in the style and language in which Lord Curzon spoke of his Viceroyalty. I wonder if an explanation will be forthcoming. "The long arm of coincidence" has rarely assumed such dimensions as are revealed in these farewell speeches. There is, of course, the historic instance of Darwin and Wallace hitting upon the same theories regarding the origin of species. Disraeli was, as it were, a very focus of coincidences; but he had his critics who called his "best things" by another name. Some time ago a writer in the Spectator set out in seventeen paragraphs the bulk of the phrases which he made famous. Everyone, declared this unpleasantly inquisitive person, was a plagiarism.

MR. ANSTEY writes too little for the stage. So far his one great success has been "The Man from Blankley's," in which a dozen or so intensely ridiculous types were pourtrayed with unflagging humour. But he has just weighed in with a four-act farcical play, The Brass Bottle, a piece that runs on pretty close lines to his well-known story, and, as presented at the Vaudeville, it is a veritable triumph of fantastic humour. It is redolent of the "Arabian Nights Entertainments," and the scenes of Oriental splendour, manners, and customs, introduced as they were in so extraordinary a manner, were as remarkable as they were mirth-provoking. The quick changes from the ordinary room of a London house let out as apartments to a scene of Eastern magnificence, and vice versa, are convincing examples of mechanical skill, and they leave the audience wondering how such complete transformations were effected in so brief a space of time. The setting of the play throughout is excellent.

There is abundance of humour in The Brass Bottle. The audience found it so last Friday evening, and their spontaneous, unrestrained, almost hilarious laughter was the best proof they could give that the author had realised his object—to provide amusement. There is a combination of novelty and unadulterated fun, and The Brass Bottle should have a long and successful run. There is plenty of diversity in the characters, and there is not a weak member in the cast. Mr. E. Holman Clark gave a clever and subtle impersonation of Fakrash-El-Aamash, and Mr. Lawrence Grossmith was a most capable Horace Ventimore. Mr. Alfred Bishop acted the part of Professor Anthony Futvoye, the Oriental scholar and curio collector, as if to the manner born, and Mr. Rudge Harding gave a capital rendering of the character of Spencer Pringle, a pompous, self-important architect. Mr. Luigi Lablache did well as Samuel Wackerbath, and Rapkin, the landlord of the house from whom Ventimore rented his lodgings, did not suffer in Mr. J. H. Brewer's hands.

Mrs. Futvoye was entrusted to Miss Lena Halliday, who made it an excellent part, and Miss Viva Birkett was a charming Sylvia Futvoye, while the other minor characters were well represented.

"The Great Divide," which opened at the Adelphi last week end, seems assured of a long and successful run. As its title suggests, the locale of the play is Arizona, and we have a glimpse of the wild and lawless methods of life in that part of the world in the period with which the play deals. It was exceedingly well staged, and the audience showed their appreciation of this, as well as their satisfaction with the manner in which the various parts were sustained.

The play opens with a realistic scene of a rancher's cabin in Southern Arizona, and here Ruth Jordan, the heroine, her brother Phillip, and Polly Jordan, his wife, and Winthrop Newberry are assembled. Polly leaves the district to save herself from ennui, and is accompanied on the first stage of her journey by Phillip, while Newberry is summoned to a distant spot to attend to a man who has met with an accident. Ruth is left alone at the cabin, and as the night advances the door is forced by a band of desperadoes, under the command of Stephen Ghent. His two companions decide that the possession of the girl shall depend upon a throw of the dice, but Ruth implores Ghent to save her from such a fate, and in her terror promises that if he will do so she will accompany him. Stephen buys off the "greaser" with a collar of gold nuggets, and fights a successful duel with the third man, who refuses to sell his chance for gold. Ruth is told to prepare for her journey with Stephen, but she pleads for freedom, for release from her rash promise. He is obdurate, and the act closes with them leaving the cabin for the distant mountains, where Stephen has chosen his home.

The second act is a small, rocky crest of a mountain, where Stephen has built his domicile. He has treated Ruth, whom he has married, with an instinctive chivalry, and she had hoped that he would respect her wishes that there should be no consummation of the marriage, but in this respect he falls short of her hopes, and from that moment there is discord and unrelieved unhappiness. Ruth is discovered by her friends and learns from her dictatorial brother that her flight, from the ranche has brought ruin in its train, and the savings of their mother have gone. She is urged to explain her position, but loyalty to her husband restrains her. After Ruth's friends have departed there is a heart-rending scene between husband and wife, and the brother arriving, urges Ruth to depart with him and she does so.

In the final scene there is reconciliation between Ruth and her husband, after a long explanatory dialogue.

The cast is powerful, and with so many opportunities for the display of pathos and passion, it follows that the audience was interested from beginning to end. Ruth Jordan was interpreted by Miss Edith Wynne Matthison with much skill, Miss Laura Hope Crews was a dashing, irresponsible, inconsequential Polly Jordan, Mr. Henry Miller was an emphatic success as Stephen Ghent, and Mr. Frederick Burt was quite good as a stern, unyielding brother. The minor parts were also well sustained.

Signor Caruso made one of his now rare appearances in London last Saturday before an audience of something like 10,000. Indeed, the Albert Hall was all too small to accommodate everyone who wished to hear the great tenor.

The great outbursts which greeted every song were unique for a London audience, and the singer proved his appreciation of them by a prodigality of encores. He sang "Celeste Aida," "O Paradiso" from "L'Africana," "Vesti La Giubba" ("Pagliacci"), and numerous other songs, including a duet ("Solennel in quest' ora") with Signor Lecomte; but the audience was clamorous for more, and it was not until the tenor had sung Tosti's "Good-bye" in Italian and disappeared with a colossal laurel wreath that the gentle hint was taken.

We are for ever advancing in our travelling facilities in this huge overgrown city. We already possess the most rapid underground railway service in the world, but the last word in speed has not been said yet on the systems which now touch nearly every part of the metropolitan area. Experiments are being made on the District Railway which may mean a long step towards the running of a train a minute. Records taken this week show that in quite a number of instances trains have followed one another at intervals of only sixty-five seconds, and it is common to find them in the day's working running but seventy-five and eighty seconds apart. Imagine for one moment what would be the effect of this system suddenly introduced at the Howrah or Bombay termini, where the booking of a single ticket and the weighing of a maund of luggage, usually occupies as much time as it takes a Londoner to travel from Charing Cross to Kew.

AFTER GAUR AND RHINOCEROS.

We had been travelling steadily for two days without seeing anything and were well on our way to our third camp on the "Hun" stream on the afternoon of the 8th, June having covered some 12 to 15 miles of very hilly country when we crossed the two days old tracks of a very large bull gaur which had been feeding along the banks down stream in the direction of our next camp which was reached without our coming upon any fresh indications that the owner was in the vicinity In the morning early the writer accompanied by three men carrying his battery, which consisted of two single cordite ejectors of 500 and 450 calibre and a ·12 bore started off down stream leaving his coolies to follow slowly in the rear.

In the afternoon about 3 P.M. the well known hoof marks of the old bull gaur appeared once more heading down stream and this time it was evident from their fresh appearance that he could not be many miles ahead. After travelling down the "Hun" stream for a distance of about 6 miles we entered the bed of the "Ru," a much wider stream than the Hun with luxuriant patches of grass growing along its bed and banks here and there and from either side of which steep hills covered with dense bamboo and tree forest rose abruptly. It was about 5 P.M when the "Ru" stream was reached and as the sun's rays were still powerful we knew that no animal would be about till he had dipped his fiery head behind the hills and until cool inviting shadows had been thrown across the bed of the stream which at this time of the year had only a small volume of water meandering along its course. Cautiously and slowly with eyes and ears on the alert we picked our way slowly along up stream. Presently the sun disappeared behind a neighbouring height causing shadows to form here and there and cooling the atmosphere which hitherto had been sultry in the extreme. All was still. A faint breeze lowgently fanned the leaves of the surrounding trees on the hills whilst a "kakur" from a neighbouring nullah broke the spell with hoarse incessant barks. We waited, listened intently, and moved on. What was that faint clatter among the bamboos along the hillside some 250 paces to our right? We stopped and listened again We were then in mid stream standing on a high bank of shingle and scrub jungle which had been thrown up by the floods of the last monsoon. Monkeys, said one man, no, a sambhur said another. It is only the wind said the third man. At the same moment from the opposite bank of the stream some 100 odd paces to our left and slightly ahead the stillness was rudely broken by the sounds of a mighty long drawn out bellow which once heard can never be mistaken or forgotten. Again immediately to our right away up the hillside in the same direction from whence the first faint noises had emanated the bamboos clattered and rattled at the signal and we knew at once that the roar from our left had been uttered by the bull of the herd as a signal to his companions on our right that it was time to begin feeding. There was no mistaking the sign and their reply of quickly moving feet and rattling bamboos. The herd of gaur on our right from the sounds emitted were evidently moving down towards us in a body. Just then a branch cracked to our left and from beneath the dark shadows of a wild fig the big bull that had emitted the call stepped slowly out into full view but suddenly stopped dead and throwing up his head gazed intently in our direction. There was no doubt about it we had been discovered not by scent but by sight. We had not been able to conceal ourselves sufficiently owing to the scanty undergrowth at the spot where we had halted to listen to the movements amongst the bamboos on our right.

No time was wasted, the 500 flew to my shoulder in a trice and belched out its deadly contents, the bullet raking him forward between neck and point of shoulder. The bull spun round and with outstretched neck dashed up the hillside but not before he had received a second shot in the neck from the rapidly loaded 500 which finished him on the spot the vertebra having been severed. The 450 as a second weapon could not be used as the Chin who was carrying it had hung too far back with the object, no doubt, of bolting should the gaur charge. The clatter of the startled herd bolting helter skelter through the bamboos up the hills on all sides, after the first shot, was tremendous. They could be heard making frantic efforts to get up and over some of the most impossible places whilst stones came rattling down from all sides. So steep did these places appear indeed from an examination of the ground made by us afterwards that we marvelled that any thing but deer or goats could ever have ascended them. The bull was a magnificient animal with a 74 inch head and enormous hoofs. He was undoubtely the same animal whose tracks we had seen when coming down the Hun stream. After obtaining two or three good photographs of the bull as mementos of the occasion with some of the men placed in position aroond him the mask was removed with care after two or three hours hard work and then the animal was cut up and the meat divided amongst the men, none of it being wasted. During the night a herd of elephants that passed within 50 yards of the spot where the gaur fell stampeded down stream in the direction of camp, screaming and trumpeting in a most appalling manner, being only brought up and turned off by shouts from our camp followers who waved about bamboo torches. Elephants as a rule are much bolder at night than during the day time, A tusker will approach a camp at night and often walk right through it, upsetting tents and causing great confusion and havoc without apparently objecting to human scent, camp fires, or shouts, whereas the same animal would not do this in daylight. If a sportsman is out in camp with tame female elephants which have been tethered in the vicinity he is more likely to receive a visit from some "Muckna" or tusker if it is a locality for elephants, provided always the animals have not been worried much or shot at for some years past. In some districts where elephants have been harassed a good deal by hunters in past years a herd or even solitary animals will think nothing of charging out at once or even scenting or sighting a human being before a shot has been fired. It is one of the most dangerous and awe inspiring spectacles to see an angry herd of elephants charging up in close formation. The females with young ones are then the most dangerous and the sportsman on these occasions has either to ascend a tree or trust to his legs to get out of the way or stand his ground and risk turning the animals or bringing them to a stand still. Nowadays, of course, elephants are forbidden game and are consequently more easily approached in most localities than in former years when they were hunted and shot down a good deal. There are still many localities abutting on our borders, the Arakan Hill Tracts for instance, where it is positively dangerous to meet elephants anywhere, owing to the dense bamboo jungle and undergrowth, the result of fires and hill cultivation, and to the fact that the transfrontier people are ruthlessly shooting at and hunting down the small herds that still remain. Many of them have been rendered vicious and savage from wounds received in former years. Occasionally a pair of tusks find their way into the hands of the Chittagonian shop keepers living along the borders of this district within the administered territory and who generally get the best part of the bargain. There are still, I am glad to say, two or three fine old tuskers inhabiting the transfrontier whose skulls are too thick to be penetrated by the balls discharged from the inferior flint lock weapons of the transfrontier tribes, whose powder also is naturally not of the best.

On the following morning we were up and off up the Ru stream whilst the star were still twinkling above us. It was a case of groping our way in the dark along the bed of the stream amongst boulders, bushes, pools and holes, but we managed to put a couple of miles between us and camp by the time day had broken. I had seen the previous day, the three days old tracks of a rhinoceros which had been browsing on the tops of young shrubs along the banks of the Ru and was in hopes that we might with luck come across fresher tracks. The jungle everywhere in this neighbourhood and amongst these hills is a hopeless tangle of bamboo and undergrowth, and animals in this district especially during the hot months, are, as a rule, found along the beds and banks of streams where the grass and vegetation during April and May is greener than it is anywhere else. The shooting in the Arakan Hill Tracts is extremely disappointing as there is little or no big game, most of the bison and rhino having been shot off by the hill tribes who possess over 100 guns amongst them, and what little big game there is, if followed through the dense undergrowth, is obtained by the sweat of ones brow with a will in one hand and a rifle in the other, which if not held straight at the critical moment in the case of a charging gaur will probably result in the sportsman's death. The few solitary bull gaur left have all at one time or another been fired at or wounded in some manner by these hill people that the majority of them charge at sight.

However let me resume It was about 5·30 A.M. and we had been moving rapidly up stream along the right bank when my attention was suddenly attracted to a long dark ungainly looking object which walked quickly across our path into the bushes some 20 paces ahead of me as if it were about to wade across the stream which lay on our left. Although the bed of the Ru stream at this point was from about 50 to 60 yards in width, the volume of water which flowed along its course was only from about 10 to 15 paces in width with a depth about 2 feet. A number of overhanging bamboos from immense clumps growing on the high banks on our right swept over us causing deep shadows to be formed at this particular spot, and at first I thought the animal before me was an immense boar. As it disappeared and appeared again however for a moment amongst the bushes, I caught a glimpse of overlapping skin along its hind quarters and saw the well-known low hanging ugly looking head with its small wicked beady looking eyes, and knew at once that the animal was a rhino. To exchange the ·450 which I was carrying at the time for the ·500 cordite and to take aim and fire was the work of only a few seconds. It was all so simple. The rhino which received the bullet behind its shoulder collapsed on the spot, uttering a strange unearthly scream and after falling kept on lifting and banging its head on the ground as if to rise. The animal lifted its head and uttered a long drawn out scream which was unpleasant to listen to, just before all movements ceased which occurred in about a minutes time, for the bullet had, as I afterwards discovered, severed the large artery of the heart close to that organ which it lacerated in its course. The bullet, strange to say, did not pass clean through the animal. I have often noticed that a shot given at close quarters with a rifle has resulted in the bullet remaining in the body of a large animal, whereas the velocity of a bullet fired from a distance of from, say, 100 to 200 yards has invariably appeared to me to be greater and to have passed through most animals excepting elephants. I remember once firing with a 600 cordite burning 100 grs. of cordite into the point of the shoulder of a large bull tsine that stood facing me. The bullet in this case failed to pass through the animal, although he collapsed from the shock like a bullock which had been brained by a butcher. The rhinoceros, I am sorry to have to confess, turned out to be a female, but the heads of both it and the bull gaur, superbly mounted by Spicer of Leamington, now look down upon me daily from my dining room walls and are the admiration and awe of the simple minded hill tribesmen who flock in and gaze at them in wondering bewilderment. The feet and hide of the rhinoceros were also constructed into suitable trophies by the same taxidermist. Word was at once sent back to camp with the good news, so that my camera skinning knives, and a few more men could be brought up to assist in breaking up the animal and removing the mask. It was a sight, two hours afterwards, to see the way my men, after removing the mask, skin and feet of the rhino, fought with each other as to who should be first in removing the blood of the animal. No portion of the rhino was wasted, the bones, blood and meet were all taken away placed on three bamboo rafts and with the skull, mask feet and slabs of hide floated down easily to camp where their arrival was greeted with great shouts. Those who had never seen a rhinoceros before now came up to inspect the mask, feet and hide. It was a great day also for the cook, who enquired whether he might experiment and give me rhinoceros liver with bacon, grilled or boiled salt rhinoceros tongue, and a savory of rhinoceros brain and cheese. Shooting.

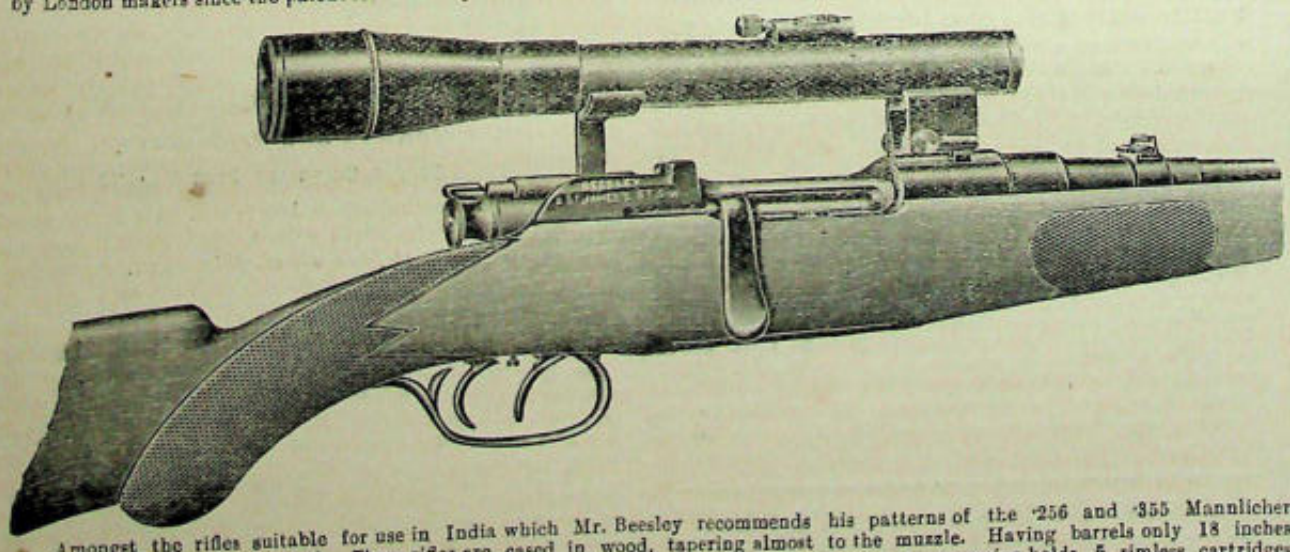
MR. BEESLEY'S 16-BORE SPORTING GUNS.



ATTENTION has at various times been directed in these columns to the increasing use of light game shooting charges. An ounce of shot, instead of 1⅛oz. has come to be very generally used in 12-bores and ⅞oz. or even ¾oz. is often recommended. These loads of less than 1oz. of shot are really appropriate for 16-bore guns and it is for that reason that the modern 16-bores have lately achieved so much popularity.

Mr. F. Beesley, of St. James' Street, London, has for several years past recommended the use of the 1oz. charge for game shooting. Recognising that with less than an ounce of shot very efficient shooting could be made, he has more recently devoted attention to perfecting the boring of 16-bore guns. In this he has been so successful that he tells me his orders for best guns this year include nearly as many sixteens as they do twelves. The weight of the 16-bores is 5¾lbs., and they are regulated to shoot ¾oz. of shot (236 pellets of No. 6). Patterns taken on card show that while at 40 yards about 60 per cent. is given on the regulation 30 inch circle, the spread at 20 yards and intermediate distances is kept sufficiently open to be quite effective. The boring of the new guns is designed to secure good killing circles at every range at which they are likely to be used. As the 16-bore is suited for light charges, it stands to reason that greater regularity should be obtainable from them than is the case when ¾oz. of shot is fired from a 12-bore regulated for a heavier load. The smaller calibre, at its best with the standard ¾oz. load, will also shoot ⅞oz charges, or ⅞oz charges. The latter is a good, high velocity load, particularly suitable for ladies, but the ⅞oz charge is not always found to give a better pattern than the ordinary ¾oz. charge, which from the ballistic point of view is preferable.

Mr. Beesley has been so successful in obtaining consistent and effective shooting as to justify the claim that with the appropriate light load his 16-bores in pattern, penetration and killing power give results equal to those of the 12-bore. There is a saving of some 14 ounces in the weight of the gun, which is a great consideration anywhere, and more particularly in a hot climate. The 16-bore thus has a notable advantage on the score of lightness and easy handling. The guns, as Mr. Beesley turns them out, are perfectly proportioned examples of the gunsmiths' craft in its highest development. With ejectors, single trigger, side locks embodying the pick of the improvements Mr. Beesley has introduced, and material and workmanship of the finest, these little guns have everything to recommend them. In all cases one would not desire to expose productions so costly as these, to the risks of unfavourable climatic conditions, but serviceable, well finished plain 16-bores of the body lock type are available also, at very moderate prices, and Mr. Beesley considers these guns capable of fulfilling most of the purposes for which the more costly models are designed.

The single trigger Mr. Beesley invented and uses is one of the few mechanisms of the kind which have retained their popularity. His best guns are now very seldom made with double triggers. The Beesley single trigger, which is unlike any other, is shown in the accompanying illustration. The trigger carries two blades, one being a little higher than the other. When the trigger is pulled, both blades are lifted together. In the sketch, one blade is removed and its position is shown in dotted lines. Between the blades is a fan-shaped piece of metal mounted on a pivot, with a long light spring on the trigger plate which trends to revolve the fan backwards. On pressing the trigger, the blade shown solid lifts the sear of the right lock and that lock is discharged, the square key-piece rising out of its recess and impinging on the top of the slot in the fan. The fan then is free to turn, but the pressure on the trigger prevents this. With the involuntary release the fan commences to turn and the square "key" therefore cannot drop back into the recess 1. Almost instantaneously after the release there comes the involuntary pull, the key being raised again to the top of the slot. Then, when the shooter intentionally relaxes his finger pressure on the trigger, the fan reaches the position in which the key lies under the recess 2. In the illustration the position of (2) at this stage would be where (1) actually is shown. When the shooter pulls to fire the second barrel the key rises in the slot 2, and the left-hand blade, shown in dotted lines, releases the tumbler of the left lock. To those conversant with the cause of the involuntary pull (which, of course, is much too quick to be either seen or felt in actual shooting) it will be apparent that this fan-shaped piece really operates as an inertia stop. Under the backward drive of recoil, the pivot on the trigger plate is jerked back, so that if the fan had any forward play at all, its tendency would be to jerk forward, because its base was being carried from under it. Thus, while the trigger finger is off the trigger, the inertia of the fan is opposed to the spring, the finger which involuntarily pulls, and the fan which prevents an unintentional discharge, both operating in the same way. It is not accepted, even by all gunmakers, that the actual cause of involuntary pulls is the comparative inertia of the shooter's finger, but that this is the case there can be little doubt. The release of the trigger takes place because the finger, although it is pulling at the time, is left behind by the recoiling gun. The muscular force exerted on the finger is less than the force of explosion exerted on the recoiling gun. The finger is only relatively inert, and it catches up with the released trigger before any consciousness exists that there has been a release. The theory upon which Mr. Beesley's single trigger mechanism is constructed appears to be exceptionally sound. He calls it the "straight pull" single trigger, because after the first pull the trigger does not return to its original position, the second voluntary pull raising it higher. After firing, the fan is moved back by the turning of the top lever, so that it is set ready for use before the gun is opened. As one instance of the many distinctive features of Mr. Beesley's locks, it may be mentioned that the safety is put on by the dropping of the barrels as the locks are cocked. The ejectors used are of the two-piece pattern originally invented by Mr. Beesley, which have been very generally adopted by London makers since the patent for them expired.

Amongst the rifles suitable for use in India which Mr. Beesley recommends his patterns of the ·256 and ·355 Mannlicher Schönauers must be mentioned. These rifles are cased in wood, tapering almost to the muzzle. Having barrels only 18 inches in length they are exceedingly handy for stalking purposes, and light to carry. The Schönauer magazine holds 5 rimless cartridges loaded from a clip. The sporting bullets are soft nosed or split to expand on impact. The finish of the rifles is excellent and their appearance all that can be desired. Peep sights can be fitted and also various patterns of detachable telescopic sights. Mr. Beesley favours the Skopa pattern as illustrated, with the mounting in two places as shown. This telescope gives the clearest possible definition and an exceptionally wide field of vision.

Fishing.

TROUT FISHING IN A YORKSHIRE BECK.

To the trout fisherman in Yorkshire, the spring of 1909 was particularly distressful. Cold, dry north and east winds were the rule in April and May; so that the streams were generally at a low level, while the bleak weather conditions neither favoured the hatching of flies, nor made the trout inclined to feed at the surface. A kind friend had given me a day ticket for the Laver, a small stream near Ripon, and a tributary of the Skell. The fishing is in the hands of a small club of fourteen or fifteen members, and as some of these do not fish, and the water is well preserved, there are plenty of trout. The limited number of members prevents the stream from being over-fished, so that the handsome little trout therein are not unduly knowing and capricious.

Having these facts in mind, I kept continually putting off my day, hoping at last to secure perfect weather and water conditions. This was all of course mere greed, I wanted a really big basket. When I did go at last, it was in July, a bad month indeed for fishing; and though the soft breezy day, with sun only occasionally breaking through clouds, looked right enough, I was horrified on arriving at Ripon, to find the beck as low and clear as it well could be. A long pool at the commencement of the fishing, which was overhung along one bank by willows, had dwindled so that only one or two parts of it looked fishable at all.

I put my rod together lazily and half heartedly, being almost inclined to give up any attempt at all at inveigling the trout under such seemingly hopeless conditions. Fine tackle, and patient crawling, however, I reflected, ought to insure my not going home absolutely fishless, so I set to look out a drawn 4x cast, on which I mounted two small flies: a water-hen bloa as stretcher, and woodcock and hare's ear for drop.

At the head of what had been the long pool, the stream took a bend, and a little run entered the smooth, making an eddy under a willow bush opposite. The water nowhere looked over eighteen inches deep, and was clear as crystal. On my side the retreating stream had left a broad band of shingle. I got down on to this and crawling forward on hands and knees, arrived within reach of the eddy. All was clear behind, so that it was now easy to drop my tail fly, with a side sweep in the ripples of the run. I did so and watched it dry and buoyant, float down the little stickle into the smooth under the opposite bank. Joy! it vanished in the circle of a rise, but, alas! my wrist hardened and dulled by much recent golf, was all too coarse in its strike for the delicate tackle, and the cast came away minus the water-hen bloa, which I had put on only three or four minutes before. I rose from my knees in a very chastened mood, but my lesson was not even yet completed, for having replaced the lost fly, and found a very similar stickle and eddy a little higher upstream, I rose another trout, and again striking too hard, left another water-hen bloa in the fish. The double lesson at last seemed to have calmed my rough wrist into respectable delicacy, and this proved to be the last fly lost by hard striking.

Number three is always held lucky, and my third fly lasted the rest of the day, and was responsible for all but one of the trout caught. Higher up, and at the edge of a wood through which the Laver winds its way, I found a most likely spot. A run going into a deepish pool, and that pool overhung by a big willow bush, which dipped its lanceolate leaves into the water. My tail fly touched the willow leaves, clung for an instant, and then dropped into the smooth glide. A trout took it instantly, and proved a bonny quarter pounder. Having dropped No. 1 in my bag, I went into the wood where there is some good water. After ten minutes' struggling against the flies, I was driven ignominiously out.

They were only the common house flies, but they came on me in such swarms, covering face and hands with their innumerable crawling and irritating bodies, that I found myself quite unable to attend to such a delicate art as fly fishing, in the midst of their persecution, so gave it up, and sought open water above the wood.

There clear of the trees and flies, were a hundred yards of beck, which were to give me the only real sport of the day. At that place the Laver took a wide curve, and all along opposite was a steep clay bank falling abruptly into the stream. Under that bank, despite the general lowness of the brook, was a good depth of water; and the gentle current went gliding softly along, hardly broken even by the great lumps of clay and turf, which had dropped here and there down the bank. On my side were shallows and a wide fringe of white shingle. The sun was clouded and a soft breeze blew across stream to the opposite shore, slightly ruffling the placid brook. Here were perfect conditions at last. On hands and knees I crept yard by yard upstream fishing all that delightful stretch of water with jealous care. Trout after trout rose to my water-hen bloa, and was drawn down stream to the landing net; until by the time I had reached thickets of wild roses on both banks, which stopped further fishing, I had added ten lovely little trout to the solitary fellow already in my bag.

Four of these fish were about six ounces each, but nothing quite reached half a pound.

My hopes were now high of making a basket, in spite of the low water, but further exploration of the beck, soon proved that there were no more places where similar good luck could be expected. Only here and there were there spots worth casting over at all. True, good pools with plenty of water did occur at intervals, but all these were so overgrown with trees, and the banks so steep, that they were unfishable without wading stockings; and not having brought these useful articles with me, and having no desire to get wet to the hips for the sake of a few extra trout, I passed those places by.

By the time then that I had reached the top of the club water, I had added only two more trout to the eleven already in the bag. Turning homewards, I walked back down stream, revisiting on the way all the likeliest places, including the lucky bend. On getting back to my starting point at the willow pool, I found I had the respectable total of sixteen trout, weighing a little over four pounds together. This Yorkshire beck, pretty as it no doubt is, seems to suffer by comparison with similar sized streams in North Wales. The rank foliage is all too exuberant: plenty of shade is good for the trout, but here you have much good water which can hardly be fished at all. I was much struck by the jungle of Coltsfoot, covering the banks in parts with its vast round leaves. The hemlock too seems to flourish in Yorkshire judging by the miniature forests of this plant through which I had to force my way in places to reach the little river. Beds of wild mint filled the air with their sweet scent, and I was glad to pick some handsfull of the leaves to make a bed for my trout.

Having finished my day's fishing, I came to the conclusion that the Laver trout must be delightfully easy to catch, otherwise I would have come away emptyhanded or nearly so. Certainly in those Welsh streams which I have compared with the Yorkshire ones, at the expense of the latter, I could never have got a respectable dish of trout like this, in dead low water in July.

A MIDDLE AGED FOOZLER'S REMARKS ON GOLF.

USING THE RIGHT CLUB—I.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It is a sad and common sight on the links to see men after foozling a stroke, attempt a brilliant recovery, out of a bad lie, with the wrong club. How often do we see these insane efforts come off? The mashie, our meanest club, can after all root the ball out of the rough and throw it a full hundred yards: yet though we know this well, we constantly adventure with cleek or brassie in places where a humbler tool would prove far more likely to save the hole.

I suppose there is no temptation harder to resist than having a smack at the ball with the brassie, whenever the lie looks anyway possible. Accurate direction is very difficult for average players to attain with wooden clubs. so whenever straightness is considerably more valuable than a little extra length, as it so very often is, it pays to take cleek or iron, instead of brassie. The cleek is a regular bugbear to many golfers: they try it again and again, and eventually give it up in despair. The iron on the contrary, which is simply a cleek with a lot more left, is quite an easy club to use. There are numerous hybrids between cleek and iron, one of which is quite likely to suit a man who cannot master the ordinary type of cleek. Personally I have found it useful to have a long shafted heavy cleek and an iron, both of similar balance; and these two clubs I use for full shots with a good free swing. Then there is another iron of similar weight to the first, but a little shorter in the shaft, which I only use for stiff arm shots, holding the club tight with both hands. I find it easier to only play free hard iron shots with one length of shaft. The stiff arm shot with the shorter iron is very useful for long approaches beyond the comfortable range of the mashie. It seems to be very difficult to keep a very full mashie shot anywhere near straight, and an easy stiff arm shot with the iron always appears to go far truer.

I have only touched on the mashie's excellence in its ability to lift one's ball out of the rough, but after all this is its least important function. The true metier of the mashie is the short approach. And what an elusive tool this humblest club is. One cannot enunciate golden rules for its use: mastery of the mashie is only to be arrived at by incessant practice, and constant failure to do the thing intended. For me, just a little light seems to be breaking through the clouds of adversity which surround this beastly little club. The glimmerings of certain general principles in connection with it, appear to be faintly drawing on my mind. The shaft must be gripped tight with both hands. If the ball is struck with the head of the club at right angles to it, a pull will invariably result, but slanting the club head a little will counteract this pull, and send the ball straight. The easiest way to shorten the pitch, is to shorten the shaft in the hands. By holding the shaft quite below the leather, it becomes much easier to make a little short pitch . . . . a very useful shot when one is in grass too long to allow of a run up.

Here we come to another phase of approaching. When the ball lies on decent turf a little off the green, and there is no obstacle in between, it is usually far better to use a light straight faced iron, and make a run up shot to the pin, than resort to the much more difficult mashie. The iron has just enough loft, and no more, to lift the ball clear of the grass outside the green: the flatter curve results in a straighter run, after the ball strikes the green. It is thus far easier to keep true direction in the run of the ball with the iron, than with the mashie. With the latter club, the run is much shorter, and the ball generally rolls to the right after alighting, owing to the cross spin given by slanting the head of the club (to counteract pull). The putter should never be used when the ball is off the green. The smallest piece of rough is quite sufficient to falsify all one's calculations as to strength, if the ball has to be sent through it. With the iron one can make the ball skip the little bit of unshaven grass, so that its resistance has not to be taken into account, when calculating the degree of strength necessary.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies rtistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

DARJEELING SKY RACES.

EXTRA MEETING.

First Day, 7th October 1909.

THE "Extra Meeting" has been a most sporting little affair, and our Calcutta visitors declare they have never enjoyed anything better. Speculation has been very mild and most of the investments have been duly brought home. Kistrel has won his race each day in the commonest of canters, while Bridge, who has run very green, gives a promise of what she will do when she settles down to the game. The management, as usual, has been excellent, and everything has gone with a hum from start to finish. The following are the details:—

HACK STAKES.—For a Cup value Rs. 32. For all bonâ-fide hacks 14-1 and under (that have not cost the owner more than Rs. 800). English and Australians 12st. C.-B.'s and Arabs 10st. 4lb. W. I. 1 lap starting from the Gymnasium.

Mr. H. Jones' b aus g The Flea, 8st. 2lb. ... Native 1
Capt. E. M. Liddell's g aus m Moira, 12st. Owner 2
Mr. A. K. Searight's b aus m Ruby, 9st. 6lb. ... ... Capt. Dinwiddie 3
Mr. A. A. Price's b aus g Sparklet, 11st. 2lb. ... ... Capt. Whish 0
Mrs. Chengti's b aus g Kazi, 6st. ... Native 0
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's br aus m Queen Bee, 12st. ... ... B. Singh 0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Sparklet, 5 to 1 Moira, 6 to 1 The Flea, 10 to 1 Ruby, and 20 to 1 Kazi.

Sparklet got off very badly and The Flea shooting away to the front got a good lead which he held to the end, winning easily by a length.

2ND RACE.—For a Cup value Rs. 32. For all Bhutia ponies 13-1 and under. 13-1 to carry 12st. W. I. Previous winners of Rs. 40 or over, once 7lb., twice or oftener 10lb. Ponies that have never won a 1st class Bhutia Race value Rs. 40 or over allowed 7lb. 3 laps.

The totalisator paid Rs 107 on First Class and Rs. 13¼ on Defence, the dead heaters; Rs. 45¼, Rs. 14¼ and Rs. 4¼ for places.

Defence declining the run off, the race was given to First Class.

There is not a civilised country in the world in which Odol is not known as the greatest preparation for cleansing and preserving the teeth and mouth, and the millions of bottles of Odol which are sold every year afford an irrefutable proof of the universality of its use and of the favour with which it is received. These two facts, indeed, speak louder than anything else of the excellence of the preparation, which can only be compared to itself, for it has no parallel.

A MAIDEN PLATE.—(Second Division)—Winner Rs. 500, second Rs. 200, and third Rs. 100. A handicap for maiden Arabs, 14 hands and under, landed since 1st July 1908. 6 furlongs.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

BUT for the thick haze that hung over the course on the opening day and prevented a fair view of the racing at Castle Irwell and the numerical poorness of the fields in comparison with the entries, there was little to complain about, as, fortunately, rain kept off; and if Sunshine and Hanover Square cut up badly, a fair proportion of favourites were successful. The going nicely yielded to the tread, without being on the soft side; and an enjoyable afternoon's racing resulted. Details:—

BURY TWO-YEAR-OLD SELLING PLATE—Of 200sovs. 5 furlongs.

Mr. C. Hibbert's Mint Master, by Pride—Aminte, 8st. 6lb.	Trigg	1
Sir E. Cassel's Daira f, 8st. 6lb. ...	F. Wootton	2
Mr. H. P. Whitney's Xela f, 8st. 6lb. ...	Martin	3

Also ran: Isis Belle f (Maher).

BETTING: 7 to 4 agst. Daira f, 3 to 1 Isis Belle f, 3½ to 1 each Mint Master and Xela f.

Won by a short head; four lengths between second and third.

FRIDAY SELLING PLATE—Of 103sovs. 6 furlongs, straight.

HURST PARK.

The sylvan beauties of Hurst Park were never more charming than on Saturday. 'Twas a perfect September day, with scarcely a breath of wind stirring the mellow autumn air, while the course gleamed like an emerald strip in the sunshine round the centre area, on which the seeding grass carried the russet tinge of approaching autumn. Considering counter-attractions at Manchester, the attendance was a good one, as far as the smaller rings and the holiday crowd was concerned but there was a sparse attendance in the club enclosure and Tattersall's. Fields panned out well, and the feature of a capital afternoon's sport was the winning form shown by little Stanley Wootton, who led off with two winners, and then after a break in the Autumn Handicap scoring his third success off Sandysike in the fourth race, and remarkably well did the child sustain the family's reputation. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE First League competition furnished quite a crop of surprises last Saturday. Aston Villa, after beating Woolwich Arsenal, Bolton Wanderers, and Chelsea, lost to the Rovers at Blackburn. Nottingham Forest, who could claim three victories, including one over Newcastle United at Newcastle only a week previously, went down on their own ground before Liverpool, and Sunderland, with two wins and a draw to show as the result of three engagements this season, were beaten at Roker Park by Newcastle United. While these prominent clubs failed, Bolton Wanderers, having commenced with four defeats and a draw, gained at the expense of Woolwich Arsenal their first victory, Bristol City followed two defeats and two draws with a handsome win against Middlebrough, and Bury, after losing to Manchester United and Bradford City and drawing with Bristol City, had the satisfaction of beating Sheffield Wednesday on the Owlerton enclosure by 4 to 1. Almost as noteworthy as any of these victories was the draw effected by Preston North End with Manchester United at Manchester, the Preston team having previously gone down before Nottingham Forest, Sunderland, and Everton.

As a result of all these upsets of form—if at this early period of the season, such a term may be used—Manchester United and Sheffield United remain the only undefeated clubs in the First League. The Cup holders stand at the head of the competition with 8 points out of a possible 10, but Sheffield United, although unbeaten, can only claim one victory—that achieved at Middlebrough on the first day of the month. Saturday's results had not so pronounced an effect upon the records of the clubs at the bottom of the list, but the number of teams without a single win to their credit has, with the successes of Bristol City, Bury, and Bolton Wanderers, been reduced to five.

Among those unfortunate elevens are both Woolwich Arsenal and Tottenham Hotspur. For the failure of the Arsenal at Bolton—the poor record of the Wanderers notwithstanding—most people were prepared, the Plumstead team having to take the field at Burnden Park without Sands, Ducat or Gray. The draw made by Tottenham Hotspur with Manchester United, however, had raised hopes of the North London club sharing the points at Bradford, if not of gaining their first victory in the higher class in which they find themselves this season. Up to the interval, although subjected to a good deal of pressure, Hotspur kept the scoring down to one goal, and in less than ten minutes from the resumption they got on terms, but then the defence failed badly against the onslaught of the Bradford front rank, who put on four more goals, three coming through the agency of O'Rourke. Thus at the end of four engagements, Hotspur and the Arsenal find themselves with only one point apiece—a sorry record indeed for London professional football. The case of Chelsea is not a great deal better, for the Stamford Bridge team, while able to show 4 points as the spoils of as many matches, have three times enjoyed the advantage of playing at home and on the only occasion they have figured away from Stamford Bridge they sustained a severe defeat.

In the Second Division of the League the clubs enjoying the advantage of ground fared remarkably well. No fewer than seven of them won their matches, the remaining three games being left drawn. In five instances the scoring was heavy, five goals being obtained at Homerton, six at Hull, five at Derby, seven at West Bromwich, and four at Lincoln. The three clubs at the head of the table all won their games, while Lincoln City, who had not previously met with success, gained a thoroughly well-deserved victory over Leicester Fosse, this being the one engagement where a real upset of form occurred. Clapton Orient, however, scored a notable win against Manchester City, emphasising once more their rather curious power of showing their best form against a strong and more fancied team. Although without L. A. Louch, the forwards played in brilliant style in the first half, combining admirably and carrying on their attacks at such a pace that the Manchester City defence was quite upset. Scoring three times, they looked to have the match quite safe, but the Mancnester men played up well afterwards and, following a mistake by Reason, who put through his own goal, Ross obtained a second point, Clapton Orient having to defend stoutly to keep their lead. As Birmingham had not won a match, Fulham seemed to possess a good chance of beating them on the St. Andrew's ground. The London club failed to accomplish that, but they did the next best thing and drew, holding the lead for a long time before Chappell equalised for Birmingham. Although in the end they won readily enough, Hull City, the leaders of the division, experienced something of a shock in their game with Gainsborough Trinity, when at half time the Gainsborough team led by a goal. The subsequent play, however, went all in favour of Hull City, who, showing very good form indeed, scored on no fewer than five occasions. The two Smiths obtained two goals each and E. G. D. Wright the last one, Hull City thoroughly justifying their position by the manner in which they rose to the needs of the occasion. As had been expected, Barnsley, who the previous week had scored so heavily against Birmingham, gave West Bromwich Albion a fine match and were only beaten by the odd goal in seven. The Albion, however, gained too strong a lead in the first half to be in real danger of defeat, and afterwards they missed a penalty kick.

Swindon could do no better than draw at Southend yesterday, and as Portsmouth beat West Ham United on Monday, no team in the Southern League has now a full complement of points. Four clubs won away from home. Queen's Park Rangers beating the Argyle at Plymouth, Northampton overcoming Southampton at the Dell, the Brighton team vanquishing Watford, and New Brompton getting the better of Croydon. Northampton's win will attract special attention, the champions so far this season having fared very moderately. The slight check sustained by Swindon does not affect their position at the head of affairs, but Queen's Park Rangers, the Brighton Albion, and New Brompton are serious rivals. Only a couple of clubs won at home yesterday—Brentford and Leyton—but five of the eleven matches were drawn.

LEAGUE—DIVISION I.

CHELSEA vs. SHEFFIELD UNITED.—A draw of two goals each was a fairly equitable result of the match between Chelsea and Sheffield United at Stamford Bridge yesterday. If Chelsea had the better of the first half, United certainly had a compensating balance of the second, which was full of fast, interesting and thrilling football. The weather was delightfully fine, and while United were at full strength, Chelsea were still without Hilsdon. Jones was given a second trial at centre forward, and played fairly well, though rather crudely. There were about 35,000 people present when Chelsea opened the game in thrilling style by scoring at the end of two minutes. Brawn cleverly eluded Brooks and centred to Windridge, who smartly put the ball into the net. The game went on in Chelsea's favour for the greater part of the first half, but no further goals were scored. The defences on both sides were sound, and Whitley and Lewesley had not a great deal to do. The second half was considerably faster and more exciting. In five minutes Bulsford and Kitchen gave Evans a clear run through, and his accurate centre was easily converted by Simmons. Soon afterwards United took the lead. Simmons and Cameron were struggling for the ball, when Kitchen rushed in and fired it hard into the net. Chelsea fought strenuously and in four minutes Downing, profiting by a faulty tackle by Brooks, equalised with a great shot. The succeeding play was fast and exciting. Time and again the goals were in jeopardy, and twice Kitchen was stopped by Downing and Whitley when he seemed to have the goal at his mercy. Benson, who played a splendid game, once luckily got in the way of a scoring shot by Holden, but neither side could get the winning goal. Chelsea, 2; Sheffield United, 2.

BRADFORD CITY vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—To witness the match between Bradford City and Tottenham Hotspur at Bradford a company of nearly 30,000 assembled at Valley Parade. Delightful weather prevailed, and both clubs were at full strength. The home forwards started off in brilliant style, and although several promising attacks were repelled, O'Rourke got through ten minutes after the start, Boreham having failed to clear from a free kick. Still Bradford pressed, the Tottenham defence being severely tested. The home club should have increased their advantage, but Whittingham, Hardman, and Spiers all narrowly missed, and the interval arrived with no further score. Early in the second half Bradford City were very aggressive, and the Tottenham goal was constantly in danger. In one of the home attacks, however, R. Steel got away, and after some

". . . . a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumbnail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs. Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked. . . . . Congratulation may be permitted concerning the lively balance and neat finish of the gun submitted."

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

passing by Minter and Tull, the latter scored a fine goal and equalised. From this point Tottenham were again kept on the defensive and Bradford City won the game comfortably. In less than five minutes O'Rourke scored two goals for Bradford and the same player and Whittingham followed with two more goals. Bradford City, 5; Tottenham Hotspur, 1.

BOLTON WANDERERS vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—A good crowd witnessed the match between Bolton Wanderers and Woolwich Arsenal at Bolton. The Wanderers played Feebury, who is making his League debut, and Hogan for Gaskell and Lockett, whilst the Arsenal included Cross, Thompson, Satterthwaite, and Neave in place of Gray, Sands, Lewis, and Heppinstall. The Arsenal were the first to attack, but Bolton had much more of the game, Hunter scoring after twenty-five minutes of very fast play. Four minutes before the interval Hughes increased the Wanderers' score with a very fine shot. On crossing over, the superiority of the Wanderers was clearly emphasised, the attacks of the Arsenal being very few and these, as a rule, lacking life. Edmondson, however, was called upon to save from Beney and later on from Shaw when the Woolwich back was taking a free kick. The Bolton men contrived to work with plenty of vigor, and Marsh, after hitting the post on one occasion, put on a further point for the home side. Bolton Wanderers, 3; Woolwich Arsenal, 0.

THE LEAGUE.—DIVISION II.

CLAPTON O. vs. MANCHESTER CITY.—After a fine game, witnessed by nearly 20,000 spectators, Clapton Orient at Homerton beat Manchester City by three goals to two. Fifteen minutes from the start Davies was caught with the ball after a shot by Scott and, being bustled by Williams, the goalkeeper was dispossessed, and Parker easily scored. Near half-time the Manchester defence collapsed, and Parker headed a second goal from Underwood's centre, which was quickly followed by a fine goal shot by Underwood. Their exertions had evidently told upon the Orient, for in the second half they seemed to be content to defend, although Underwood nearly scored with a magnificant long shot which hit the crossbar. It was within twenty minutes of the end when Manchester met with their first success, Reason putting through his own goal when attempting to clear a free kick. Ross followed with a second goal, taken very cleverly, but Manchester could never get the equalising point, and in fact, the Orient in the closing stages nearly increased their lead, although they had generally the worst of the play. LEYTON vs. LUTON.—Leyton are so far enjoying a good season, and at Leyton yesterday they well beat Luton by three goals to nil. This result was somewhat flattering, but their victory was a meritorious one and gained by slightly better football all round and distinct superiority near goal. It was in this respect that the visitors were let down, for while they did many clever things in midfield, their shooting was weak in the extreme, the Leyton goalkeeper having but two good shots to stop during the game. The first half saw both sets of forwards kept quiet by the backs who, on both sides played a fine defensive game. Shortly before the interval Robertson shot a fine goal for Leyton after a clever individual effort. Luton made several attempts to equalise before Leyton got going, but then they had all the better of the game. Towards the finish Renneville, the home centre, got two more goals. The first was a fine one, shot on the run, following a clever pass by Robertson, and the second came from a foul on himself inside the penalty area. Jarvis saved from the kick taken by Buchanan but Renneville put through before he could get the ball away. K. R. G. Burt, the old Oxonian and international, made his first appearence for Leyton as captain, but Leyton were without the services of R. Hawkes, who was married yesterday. Eight thousand spectators were present. Leyton, 3; Luton, 0.

CROYDON COMMON vs. NEW BROMPTON.—There were 8,000 present, in fine weather, at Selhurst when Croydon Common suffered their first defeat, being beaten 2—0 by New Brompton. The visitors opened the scoring in twelve minutes, Court beating Hewitson with a fairly easy shot. On the whole Hewitson at this time was being tested more frequently than Batcup, the Croydon goal having a narrow escape when Court sent in a fine shot, the rebound from which was caught by Taylor, who hit the post. The visitors had a fine opportunity of adding to their score soon after the change of ends, Taylor making a splendid dash for the goal, but, when Hewitson came out to meet him, putting the ball wide. Croydon attacked the visitors' goal once or twice with much energy, Batcup saving from Frost and Macdonald; but, as a rule, the home forwards were out of form and failed to take advantage of the strenuous work of the halves. Ten minutes from the end New Brompton obtained their second goal through the efforts of Reynolds and Court. The latter sent Reynolds forward on the right wing, and a spirited dash down the side eventually resulted in Hewitson being beaten by a grand shot high up just under the crossbar. New Brompton, 2; Croydon Common, 0.

MILLWALL vs. EXETER CITY.—A moderate game was played before 5,000 spectators by Millwall and Exeter at North Greenwich, and at the finish neither side had scored. After a poor start Millwall had rather the better of the game and several chances of scoring fell to them, but they did not take them. Crossthwaite made one very fine save when Jones and Twigg had the ball between them; while Jones, Exeter's full back, did well in catching a forward and kicking the ball away after Crossthwaite had dashed out and left an open goal. Towards the close of the first half Jones, the Millwall forward, twisted his knee, and soon after the change of ends he had to leave the field. There was then more than half an hour to go. Millwall again forced the game, and again Crossthwaite saved in good style after the backs and Chadwick had been beaten. Although their football was not high-class, the locals certainly had the chances, but the best shot of the match, perhaps, was made by McGuigan for Exeter. Joyce fell on his knees and stopped the ball. Millwall, 0; Exeter, 0.

BRENTFORD vs. PORTSMOUTH.—Before a crowd of 8,000 people Brentford beat Portsmouth, at Griffin Park, yesterday, by 2 to 0. At half-time there was no score, but directly after the change of ends Bartlett put in an excellent centre, and Bowman getting his head to it beat Cope at close quarters. Play ruled all in favour of Brentford, but the shooting was poor. Twice Anderson sent the ball across the goal mouth, but there was no one up to help him. At the other end Haycocks shot over the bar when well placed, and a short stoppage was caused by an injury to Riley. The Brentford team still continued to have the better of the game, but no further success came to them until the end of the game when Bartlett put in a centre which Bowman converted with his head. ATHLETICS.

24 HOURS' WALK.—The Blackheath Harriers 24 Hours' Open Walking Race, which took place at the Stadium on Friday and Saturday was, despite the wholesale collapse in the early stages of most of the favourites, an interesting contest.

The starters included F. E. Broad, winner of the first Stock Exchange walk, whose re-appearance and fine walking was one of the features of the race, T. E. Hammond, holder of the 24 hours' record of 131 miles 580 yards, accomplished at the Stadium about a year ago, in the Middlesex Walking Club's race, H. V. L. Ross, winner of the recent London to Brighton (51½ miles, walk in the record time of 8hrs. 11mins. 14secs. Tom Payne, of North Shields, who was third in that event, J. Butler, holder of the 50 miles' record of 7hrs. 52mins. 27secs., and J. Iles, the Welshman, who did so well in the early stages of last year's 24 hours' race. The only noteworthy entrant who failed to start was F. E. Roberts, who finished second to Ross in the Brighton walk.

When the competitors settled down, after the first dash from the starting line, Iles took the lead and set a fast pace. He covered his first mile in 8mins. 33-3/5secs. and six miles 1,436 yards in the first hour, when he led A. R. Edwards, of Manchester, by 356 yards, with Butler another 114 yards behind, and W. Brown, of the Polytechnic H., Hammond, H. Swabey, the vegetarian and Ross all fairly handy. In the third hour the last-named increased his pace to such an extent that at one point he was doing over seven miles an hour, and rapidly overhauled the leaders, but he soon paid the penalty, for shortly before completing 25 miles he had to quit. The next walker to drop out was J. R. Barnes Moss (Middlesex Walking Club), which he did just after covering 33½ miles. Butler, who had been in the first four for four hours and was walking in fine style, got little further, however, for he stopped early in his thirty-fifth mile, and Hammond did little better, for after he, too, had walked well, 39 miles was the end of his tether. It was a curious coincidence that all these competitors complained of cramp in the stomach.

All this time Iles had kept up his quick, jerky action, and as was anticipated, at 51 miles, covered in 8hrs. 46mins. 15-3/5secs., he beat Hammond's time, accomplished in last year's race, by 57secs. The Welshman, however, had shot his bolt, and in the next lap, retired for more than an hour. He twice tried to get going again, but eventually retired for good, after walking 51 miles 586 yards

When Iles left the track for the first time he was leading Brown by a little more than a mile, and the latter naturally soon walked into first place, a position which he kept, by going at a steady gait, until after the completion of the fifteenth hour. When twelve hours had expired, Brown had covered 68 miles 855 yards, as against Hammond's distance, in the Middlesex walk, of 68 miles 335 yards, and Payne 67 miles 372 yards. In the sixteenth hour Payne, who had for some time been walking faster than anybody on the track, took the lead, and Broad, who had been steadily plodding along, dispossessed H. W. Horton (Surrey Walking Club) of third place.

Payne completed 100 miles in 18hrs. 8mins. 55-4/5secs., 4mins. 45-3/5secs outside the time occupied by Hammond last September.

The feature of the closing stages of the race was the fine walking of Swabey, but, although he got into fifth position, he could not catch R. Bramham, of Sheffield. The latter, although not going so fast as Swabey, gained on Broad, who, in turn, gained on Brown, until the last hour, when the last-named increased his pace and picked up nearly half a mile on Payne. The last-named covered 120 miles in 22hrs. 22mins. 2-3/5secs. when he was 44mins. 16secs. in front of Brown, but 29mins. 4-2/5secs. behind Hammond's last year's time.

Amongst the competitors was L. Norwood, a 66 years old vegetarian athlete from Sheffield, who kept in the race until he had covered 100 miles in 23hrs. 49mins. 36 4/5secs.

Payne eventually won by a little over three miles from Brown, with Broad nearly another 3½ miles behind, the orders at the finish being as follows:—

GOLF.

OPEN AND EX-CHAMPIONS AT HONOR OAK.—J. H. Taylor is seizing every opportunity to demonstrate his fitness to hold the title of open champion. On Saturday, the 18th instant, he gained another win over his old rival, James Braid, whom he beat by 6 and 4 in a match of 36 holes. The event took place before about 1,000 spectators on the charming course of the Honor Oak and Forest Hill Club, which is situate on high ground, and is surely the closest of all greens to the metropolis. It is probably the only place where the golfer can play within sight of such landmarks as St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and the Tower Bridge. It is a well-planned course of nine holes, and the length of the round of 18 holes is 6,594 yards.

Braid was not in his usual form. He was often short with his putts, and he made several wooden club shots that were not characteristic of the man who won four open championships in eight years. Taylor played many fine approaches, and on the whole, putted well. He accomplished the best score of the day, viz., 74. A special prize of £5 was offered in the afternoon for a score below 72, but this time Taylor took 76 and Braid 83.

Taylor won the first hole by laying a chip shot dead, and the third by means of another excellent approach. Braid squared by winning the sixth and eighth, approaches laid dead again deciding the holes. All square at the turn, the ex-champion lost the eleventh, where he missed a yard putt, and the twelfth, where Taylor hit the pin with his approach. Braid won the thirteenth by running down a long putt. The fourteenth, which measures 528 yards, was halved in 4, but Braid was twice bunkered at the fifteenth. He was three down at the sixteenth, but he won the last two holes, so that Taylor stood 1 up on the round. The scores were:—

Taylor.
Braid.
Out: 54555333 (38), home: 454447443 (39)—77.

In the afternoon Braid squared at the first hole, but he lost the second, where he was always short, and he never afterwards drew level. He became 2 down at the fourth, where he sliced out of bounds, and topped his second, and he stood 3 down at the turn. Taylor played very well coming home. He holed a four yards putt for the tenth in 3, and laid a long iron shot dead to win the eleventh in another 3. He would have had a remarkable score for these nine holes if two or three of his putts had gone down instead of running round the hole. He finished the match on the fourteenth green, where Braid missed a short putt. The figures were:—

Taylor.
Out: 544656343 (40); home: 554555344 (36)—76.
Braid.
Out: 464765443 (43); home: 444565444 (40)—83.

CYCLING.

CHAMPIONS AT HERNE HILL.—The meeting of cycling champions of the year was held by the N.C.U., at Herne Hill track, on Saturday.

B. H. Hogan, on a tricycle, beat the mile standing start record of 2mins. 39-4/5secs. by 5-2/5secs.; C. McKaig and E. C. Piercy, of the Polytechnic, beat the quarter-mile flying start unpaced tandem record by doing 23-2/5secs., as against Brook's and Isaacs' record of 24secs. V. L. Johnson, who won the one-lap scratch race, beating Ben Jones and W. J. Bailey (the world's champion), clipped 3/5secs. off the quarter-mile standing start record.

C. B. Kingsbury was disqualified in the three miles invitation race for cutting across W. T. Dunn, and the race was given to Ben Jones. Dunn was second. Time, 6mins. 39-4/5secs.

McKaig and Piercy secured the mile tandem handicap from virtual scratch. Later in the thirty miles race, they croppered, and Piercy sustained a broken collar-bone, his partner being badly cut about the legs.

The ten miles motor-paced match between Leon Meredith and C. H. Bartlett was won by Meredith, who beat previous records from the first quarter-mile to the sixth mile, inclusive. He won by forty-five yards, in 15mins. 26-4/5secs.

The mile ordinary or high bicycle handicap caused much merriment. The winner was H. W. Bartleet, of the Anerley, who rode a pneumatic-tyred "tall-'un," from scratch, in 2mins. 59-2/5secs. The thirty miles scratch race was won by S. F. Bailey, of the Polytechnic, who led all the way and won by 500 yards from H. Mortimer, of the Kentish Wheelers. Time,—60mins. 1-1/5secs.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 28th September 1909.—Andy Plantation 12 noon. The morning was very hot with masses of heavy clouds coming up from the west, and shortly after leaving the meeting place a heavy shower of rain came down, which was most welcome, as the grass and ground were parched and hard. The pack drew down to below Dante's Spinney and up to the left by Pulpit Shola and back across the Parson's Valley to Irwin's Shola outside of which an outlying jack was viewed, hounds hunted him into Leatham's Nullah, pushed him out below Lancer Shola and climbing up the steep hill on the far side ran him through Sulton Shola to the corner where the Dangar Ride and the Mysore Ride meet. The jack running along the latter ride dived down a ravine to the left and hounds were at fault, the Master, however, cast them back down the ravine in which they recovered the line and the hunt continued down the Nadankod Spur. Near the end of it they swung sharpely to the left to Rattalkod Mund and still keeping to the left ran above Kelly Shola. Crossing the Krurmund Bridle Path near High Heavans Shola they drove him through Nekod Mund Shola and over the stream below the Curate; hunted on into Walhampton when unfortunately a fresh jack jumping up let the main body of the pack away to the right over Volkal and down the Enural Valley to Gartru Hill, with only Major Duff in attendance, who brought them back to Kennels. The remainder of the pack with the hunted jack in front of them recrossed the Parson's Valley Stream and put their jack to ground in Leatham's Nullah. After a long wait he was bolted, but only ran up to Lancer Shola when he doubled back and got to ground below Irwin's Shola and on being bolted out of this found another earth a little higher up. Once more he was dislodged and this time he ran right into the jaws of Redskin and his end was swift.

Thursday, 30th September.—Lascelles Covert 7-30 A.M. A dry scentless day, though it was cloudy in the early morning the sun was very powerful later on. A long journey all over the Home Downs brought us to Kengoda Hill when hounds at last struck a line and ran it over the top of Kengoda, through the left of Amphill Wood and round right-handed through Jajo's Gorse to Badankod Mund Shola, and back to the right again to Kengoda Hill Shola, from here to the left into Coffee Shop Shola and got to ground under a large rock. bolt him so he was left to run another day. Road Shola, Khed, Wenlock and Hero Shola were drawn on the way home but none of them were holding so hounds jogged back to Kennels.

Saturday, 2nd October—Toda Coffee Shop 12 noon. It was not till about 3 in the afternoon that a jack was found, the day was hot with heavy clouds hanging about and jacks were conspicuous by their absence. After drawing all the country between Toda Coffee Shop and Glenmorgan Estate, the Master took the pack over to Elaine Shola where a jack was at last viewed away—the jack ran a small circle back to the place he started from and went to ground but holes shortly after. Running down to the river near the bridge, he turned left-handed along the bank and ran up the ravine below Rock Shola, through Kattamund down to the ravine below the Plague Camp, on to the Falls Road into the Devil's Dance and crossing over to the other side along the bottom of Coffee Shop Shola the chase continued through Beaton's Shola. Here the jack turned off to the left and set his mask for Lord Roberts Shola, but leaving this on his right went up the hill and sank the far side to the river; keeping along the bank he then turned up over the Pykara Road back in the direction of the earth out of which he had been bolted but without trying it continued his flight to Rock Shola and succeeded in running hounds out of scent in Donner.

Monday, 4th October—Kandal Cross Roads 7-30 A.M. A jack was found in the burrows to the left of the Native Cemetery, taking a line through Emerald he led straight for Aramby. Heaney hunted him through this covert into the old Tudar Hall Estate and through him back to above the ne Winton Road near Monte Rosa when they lost him. The next draw was Bucklands, a jack got away from here ran below Hanging Shola, crossed the Coonoor Road and dived down the Ghat. On getting hounds back a draw was made towards Hanging Shola, a jack was found not far from here but got to ground after a short run, he was disturbed out of this and the jack broke him up. A few more covets were drawn after but nothing more was done.

THE AUSTRALIAN CRICKET TOUR.

IT cannot be said that the hopes of May regarding the English cricket season which has just concluded, have been realised, for the weather was rarely summerlike, and its effect on players and spectators alike was depressing.

The Australians whose triumph in the test matches, after a bad start, was a lesson in grit, skilful adaptation and machine-like unity, were unlucky not to win the last match of their tour, which was against a South of England team at Hastings; for, had not the play been curtailed to two days owing to rain, they would no doubt have wound up with a win. When stumps and the game were drawn the Colonials only required to make 103 runs in their second innings to give them the victory.

Since they arrived in England at the beginning of May the Cornstalks have suffered no more than four defeats. Thirteen games have been won, and the large proportion of twenty-one of the thirty-eight matches entered upon left drawn. This compares with sixteen victories three defeats and nineteen draws by the 1905 team; twenty-three wins, two defeats, and fourteen draws by that of 1902; and sixteen wins, three losses, and sixteen draws by the 1899 combination.

Although on figures they have not got such a good record as the 1905 team, the Australians were, all things considered, superior to that side. On the other hand, they cannot be considered the equals of the 1902 or 1899 teams. In analysing the record of the team, however, regard should be had, as a very important factor, to the character of the summer against which they had to contend. Half the members of the side were making their first tour in England, and they had to play under conditions entirely foreign to cricketers whose experience of the game has been confined to Australia. The moral effect of such a season as that which has just ended might have been very pronounced on such a comparatively new team, and they deserve considerable credit for facing their difficulties so well. They carry the "ashes" back to Australia, and England will not get another opportunity to recover them until 1911-12. Few of those who saw Fry and Hobbs gain England a ten-wickets victory at Birmingham in the first test could have foreseen that this would be the result of the tour.

The visitors who are now on their way home again will be chiefly remembered for their fielding which throughout the tour reached the best Australian standard. There was a falling off in this department in 1905, but the team under notice got right back to the old Australian form. There was not only a lot of exceptionally brilliant work, as there was no weak spot in the side, and all the players were keen.

Among the batsmen the performances of the two young left-handers Hansford and Bardsley have been a big feature. As a whole, however, the batting was not brilliant although there was a decided absence of failures. Laver heads the bowling averages, but W. W. Armstrong has been responsible for most of the wickets captured, his total nearly doubling that of the first-named player. O'Connor, Macartney, and Whitty have also dismissed more batsmen than Laver.

The captaincy of M. A. Noble has been a big factor in the success of the side. Certainly he was lucky to win the toss in all of the test games—but quite apart from this, his judgment has been very sound, and his management of the bowling—otter in particular—masterly. Mr. Noble established a record in that he was the first Australian captain in test matches in England to put his opponents in first after winning the toss and see his policy crowned with success.

The averages for the tour are interesting. They are ;—

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL DRAGOONS vs. R. F. A., KIRKEE.—The drawn game between these teams was replayed on the 4th instant, the Dragoons being victorious by three goals to one. After the Dragoons had forced a corner which they could not improve upon the Gunners pressed and scored rather a lucky goal. They continued to press for a spell but all further attempts were frustrated and play taken to midfield. Then the Dragoons attacked and Hollowell equalised from a penalty kick. For some time after the Gunners' defence was kept busy but were equal to all emergencies, and the interval arrrived without further score, though Boak on one occasion nearly put the Artillery ahead. On resuming the Dragoons had the better of the exchanges. Jeffrey and Moore put in shots which struck the cross bar and after Firmistone had cleared in good style he was beaten by Jeffrey. Watts added a third goal shortly after and the Dragoons won as stated. Teams :—

R. F. A., KIRKEE.—Firmistone, goal; J. D. Kelly and Flynn, backs; Strudwick, Goldsmith and Hogarth, halves; P. H. Kelly, Greaves, Kemp, Boak and Manning, forwards.

1ST ROYAL DRAGOONS.— Fisher, goal; Seaton and Hollowell, backs; McDonald, Boyles and Ashwood, halves; Hart, Waters, Moore, Jeffrey and Jarrett, forwards.

Referee : Sergeant Watts.

LINCOLNS vs. KING'S OWN.—A fast and interesting game was witnessed when these teams replayed their draw on the 5th instant. There was nothing to choose between them in the first half—both sets of forwards displayed excellent combination but their shooting was weak and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the King's Own asserted their superiority and had the best of the play. Several visits to the Lincolns' goal were unproductive owing to weak shooting. A corner to the Lincolns followed but Hughes saved well. Then the King's Own took up the attack once more and save for an occasional run the Lincolns were kept in their own territory for the rest of the game. The King's Own missed many chances of scoring and it was not till just before time was called that they registered the only goal of the match, Ralph putting through. Teams :—

LINCOLNS.—Smith, goal; Butters and Dromey, backs; Jackson, Wickam and Greatorex, halves; Parkinson, Parsons, Ratcliffe, Markiew and Drake, forwards.

KING'S OWN.—Hughes, goal; Walsh and Stokes, backs; Carney, Ralph and Brown, halves; Moss, Holmes, Ashworth, Cassidy and Goulden, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. GLOSTER REGIMENT.—These teams met on the 6th instant, an interesting game ending in a pointless draw. This was replayed the following evening, the Glosters winning easily by 4 goals to nil. The Gymkhana could not reproduce their previous form and were never really dangerous. Pressing hotly the Glosters made several efforts to score before they were successful, Cooper putting through. A second goal was obtained by Leahy shortly after and then the Gymkhana rushed away but lost a chance. The Glosters returned to the attack but missed opportunities and there was no further score till half time. The soldiers took up the attack on resuming and scored from a free kick. The Gymkhana got away on occasions, but their efforts lacked sting and the military pressed once more, Harris netting the fourth goal. Thereafter the Gymkhana goal was besieged but the defenders managed to clear all shots and the game ended without further score. Glosters, 4 goals; Gymkhana, nil.

GLOSTERS.—Smith, goal; Scaife and Ruck, backs; Lewis, Cooper and Curtis, halves; Mator, Short, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal; Cooper and Elliott, backs; Jasper, Sim and Collingwood, halves; Murray, Hargreaves, Moir, Haskell and L. B. Ward, forwards.

SEMI-FINALS.

KING'S OWN vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS.—The first match in the Semi-Finals was played last Saturday and resulted in a draw. The game was well contested from start to finish and a draw was a fitting termination. The King's Own drew first blood, scoring in the initial period, Jarrett equalising just as the whistle went at at the conclusion of the game. Teams :

KING'S OWN.—Hughes, Goal; Stokes and Walsh, backs; Carney, Golden and Brown; halves; Moss, Holmes, Ashworth, Cassidy and Bishop forwards.

1ST ROYAL DRAGOONS.—Fisher, goal; Seaton and Hollowell, backs; McDonnell, Boyles and Ashwood, halves; Hart, Waters, Moore, Jeffrey and Jarrett forwards.

Fortunately he misjudged my height and jumped at least 2ft. over my head, and then rushed away into the bush. Early next morning I and my guide started to track him. After several hours we came noiselessly upon him. And there, in a clearing of the forest, I saw him practising low jumps!"

THE MURREE TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL MUNSTER FUSILIERS "B" vs. ROYAL IRISH FUSILIERS.—The drawn game between these teams was replayed on the 1st instant and ended in another tie—one all. The following day they met once more, the Munsters winning after a great struggle by a goal to nil.

WEST YORKSHIRES vs. R. G. A., BARIAN.—Played on the 1st instant. The Gunners were expected to win, but expectations were not realised, for, though they scored the first goal shortly after the start, the West Yorks very soon equalised and netting the ball once more led at the interval by two goals to one. On resuming the West Yorks again put through and it was not till just before time that the Gunners managed to score again. They were thus beaten by three goals to two.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL MUNSTER FUSILIERS "B" vs. "A".—These teams having come together in the semi-finals "B" team scratched in favour of the first team.

ROYAL WARWICKS vs. WEST YORKS.—Played on the 4th instant, this match was very well contested. The first half was devoid of score and when time was called the score sheet still remained blank. An extra ten minutes each way was agreed upon and in the first period the Yorks scored twice—the first goal from a free hit for sticks and the second as the result of a nice passing run. On changing ends a penalty corner against the Yorks enabled the Warwicks to score but they were unable to put through again and the West Yorks thus qualified for the final by two goals to one.

FINAL.

WEST YORKSHIRES vs. ROYAL MUNSTER FUSILIERS "A."—The final game was played on the 6th instant and resulted in a win for the Munsters by five goals to nil. The opening exchanges were fast and level: then the Munsters took up the attack and opened the scoring, adding a second goal shortly after. The Yorkshires pressed for some time but the interval arrived without score. On resuming after half time the Munsters rushed down and netted a third goal, which they followed up with a fourth, scored from a penalty corner soon after. Continuing to have the best of the exchanges they registered another point before time and thus won as stated. General Sir J. H. Wodehouse gave a history of the tournament and congratulated the winners in a short speech and Mrs. Watkis distributed the Cups and Medals at the conclusion of the game. Teams:—

MUNSTERS.—Barrett, goal; Harris and Murphy, backs; Davis, Coffey and O'Haulan, halves; Casey, Lieut. Ireland, Sullivan, Kelleghar and O'Grady, forwards.

WEST YORKS REGIMENT.—Pretty, goal; Lieut. Myles and Higgins, backs; Colr.-Sergt. Carter, Lieut. Grigg and Sergt. Douglas, halves; Luby, Lieut. Hawley, Davill, Rendel and Smedley, forwards.

NORTHERN INDIA TOURNAMENT.

THIS annual fixture commenced at Muree on the 4th October, entries being quite up to the average of those of former years. That redoubtable player Major Sheppard R., E., English Amateur Champion in 1906, is out of India just now and was unable to defend his title in the open singles, which this year was won by Lieutenant Harrington, who with Lieutenant Heyland also carried off the Handicap Doubles. The 5th Gurkhas beat the 36th Sikhs, holders of the Regimental Doubles, and Haileybury, the holder of the Public Schools Double, succombed to Cheltenham. AN exhibition match was played on the last day of the tournament between Majid a local marker and Jamsetji the great Bombay player, ending in favour of the latter by 4 goals to 2. PROTECTIVE COLOURATION.

IN a very interesting and instructive article, entitled "Protective Colouring in Animals," which appeared in the Indian Field, dated 1st April, the writer gives some very graphic accounts, showing the utility of protective colouration in insects, birds and mammals.

Among many instances in wild life, such as butterflies which, when sitting among leaves, are invisible to the closest observer, he cites as examples, Mr. Thayer's well-known models of the visible and invisible ducks in the Natural History Museum, which very conclusively prove the benefits derived, to the bird that is protectively coloured.

While, in no way disparaging the theory of protective colouration, any one who has spent some time in the jungles of India, for instance, is inclined to pause, before accepting, as so many do, that protective colouration is the only factor, except, perhaps, natural selection, that birds and beasts have to rely on in the great struggle for existence. What other agencies play a part, we shall, perhaps, in time learn, but that there are others, there can be no doubt, or how else can one account for the myriads of gaudily coloured finches, flycatchers, orioles, grosbeaks, etc., that one finds so prolific in India and which appear to find the great struggle, none too terrible, if the numbers, which survive it, be any criterion. Taking it for granted that both protective colouration and natural selection, are at any rate the chief factors, which we have to thank, for keeping alive so many of our little friends, one naturally asks the question, Why should only certain kinds benefit from protective colouration and a limited few learn by experience, how and where to build, to escape the ravages of predaceous birds, while hosts of feeble little birds, having benefited by neither, are left out in the cold?

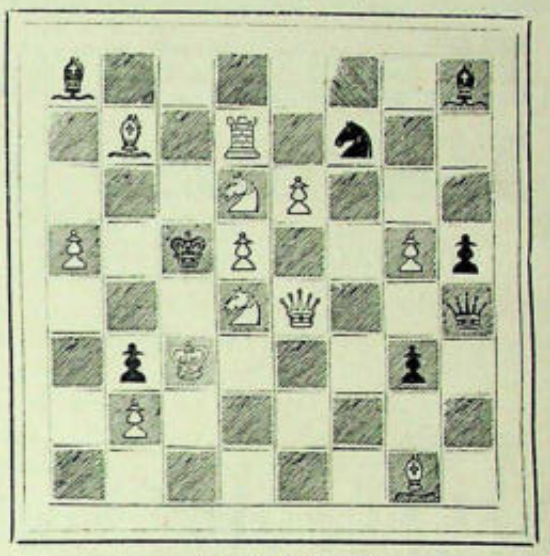
Strangely enough those which have learnt the lessons of natural selection, are the very ones which least need their advantages as I pointed out in an article in the Pioneer some years ago.

Kingfishers, hoopoes, rollers, bee-eaters are among those which build in holes, because, as it has been pointed out to us, both male and female are gaudily coloured and the female would be so conspicuous while sitting on her eggs if she built in the open. So far the reason appears an excellent one, but then, why should this device be confined to such a small minority? The abovementioned are all birds well able to look after themselves. The kingfishers and rollers, besides being very strong on the wing, have a pair of mandibles to inspire respect, and as for the hoopoes and the bee-eaters, they are both past-masters in the art of dodging, and it takes a very smart falcon to catch either of them.

Now we find the gorgeous minivets, paradise flycatchers, orioles, grosbeaks and many others as resplendent, building an open nest in a tree. It is true that the hen, in each of the above instances, is more sombrely clad than the cock, but this makes little or no difference, when both birds take their turn at incubation, as egg thieves are not so obliging as to only come along whilst the female is sitting.

What could be more conspicuous than a cock paradise flycatcher, with his long, white, ribon-like tail, streaming away a foot or more beyond the next? Yet he flourishes out in the open, while a parrot, for instance, who might safely build in the open and still be invisible among green leaves, betakes himself and his powerful cutting beak, not less formidable than the hawk's which he seemingly fears, into a hole of a tree or a chimney.

In conclusion we might just consider who the egg thieves are which the birds must avoid. Hawks, falcons and the Raptores generally, we might leave out of the question almost entirely, for with the exception of the honeybuzzard, there are no regular nest hunters among them, though a marauding kite or harrier or the black eagle may sometimes rob a nest. Hawks and falcons will very seldom attack a stationary object, so a sitting bird is more or less quite safe with them.



The common coucal or crow-pheasant is a notorious egg thief from which minivets and orioles are fairly safe, as they build high up in trees, whereas the coucal confines his depredations to the ground, or branches up to about 20 feet from the ground and bushes and grass, where he would naturally meet with babblers, reed-warblers and that ilk, who, by the way, are protectively coloured. The chief nest robbers, we have in India, are snakes and mongooses, and to these the protectively coloured, as well as the gaudily dressed, those that build in holes, and those that build in the open all pay toll alike, for with the exception of those birds which build on the ground, colour is of no consequence, for looking from below, the mongoose would presumably see the nest itself and not the bird inside it. This being the case, what is the use of protective colouration and natural selection. If the thousands of little ones, which are bereft of their benefits, get along so well in the world and are on an equal footing, as regards numbers, with more favoured brethren, what is it that brings them through the struggle unscathed?

A MODERN lady died and went to Hades. His Majesty met her deferentially at the gate.

"Will it be possible for me to secure an establishment here?" she said.

"Certainly, madam."

"In a desirable location?"

"I think so."

"I don't care to be near the riff-raff. And I should like to be sure and get suitable servants."

"You should experience no difficulty. There are several good agencies."

"I could give dinner parties when I liked?"

"Dear me, yes."

"And make a splash at it?"

"Oh, certainly."

"I should expect to spend my summers abroad."

"Quite right, Return tickets free."

"You have operas?"

"Several, devoted to the haut ton"

The lady lifted her lorgnette

She smiled slightly.

"Do you know," she said, 'I am agreeably surprised. I was afraid this place was not kept up to conform to the best standards. It troubled me to think I might possibly have to associate with my inferiors. I am glad to see that you have such a sense of the fitness of things. I am very glad to have renewed our brief acquaintance made on earth, and I will trouble you to see that my arrival is chronicled in the society columns of the papers."

His Majesty bowed respectfully

"Sorry, madam, but that will be impossible."

She gazed at him haughtily.

"How is that?" she asked sternly.

"There are no papers here. There are no society columns. No matter what you are doing, the public is in absolute ignorance of it."

And sinking back she muttered softly to herself:

"This is indeed Hell!"

HUNTING THE WILD DEER ON EXMOOR.

CAPTAIN A. S. ADKINS, who has this year succeeded Mr. Stanley in the mastership of the Devon and Somerset Staghounds, is providing his followers with capital sport. The present season marks a new departure in stag-hunting policy, for the unwritten law regarding subscriptions has been codified as under, but the wind is to be tempered to the shorn subscriber-lamb by the explanation of the hunt secretary that the committee have no wish to prevent anyone hunting who finds the new tariff prohibitive; rather have the rules been made to catch the elusive carpet-bagger. The minimum rates of subscription are: (1) 25 guineas for the whole season for a party. (2) 15 guineas for the whole season for the subscriber and one member of his family. (3) 10 guineas for the whole season for the subscriber only. (4) 5 guineas a month, or half a guinea a day for stag-hunting. (5) 5 guineas for the whole hind-hunting season, or 5*s.* a day for residents and visitors. Ladies' subscriptions to be at the same rate. Children under 16 and tenant farmers free. These proposals are very reasonable.

Time was when the wild red-deer of Exmoor were royal game, inhabiting the Royal Forest of Exmoor and its purlieus, and reserved for the sport of the Kings of England; and terrible were the pains and penalties inflicted by the Forest Laws of the Norman Kings on all who transgressed their Royal rights or raised a hand against the tall red-deer. But in these democratic days stag-hunting flourishes by and because of the favour of the people, to whom Exmoor is thrown open with certain limitations, and by whom the sport of stag-hunting may be enjoyed. At one time, thanks to apathy towards the hunt, in certain cases hostility on the part of the landowners, and the prevalence of poaching, the wild red-deer became almost extinct. It is interesting to trace the gradual increase in the numbers of the herds of deer from 1825, when for two seasons there was no stag-hunting, to the days of Mr. Mordaunt Fenwick Bisset, who restored the fallen fortunes of stag-hunting, but who killed only two stags and two hinds in his first season, 1855. Then, after a long and successful mastership, in 1880, Mr. Bisset accounted for 75 deer in 94 hunting days. In the reign of his successor, Lord Ebrington, the total of slain first passed the century, since when the deer have continued to increase until in 1904-05 there were five packs hunting Exmoor and its environs, accounting for no fewer than 370 deer that season. Gradually three of the four auxiliary packs have dropped out of the list, leaving only Sir John Amory's pack, kennelled at Tiverton, to assist the parent pack, the Devon and Somerset Staghounds, at Exford, in their arduous task of keeping the ever-increasing deer within due bounds.

Why the deer should so have increased is somewhat of a mystery, but the fact that poaching is practically a thing of the past may have a great deal to do with it, to say nothing of the leniency shown to the hinds by certain masters within the last 20 years. Now that the deer are wired out from so many estates to protect the tenant farmers' crops, they may be expected to feel the pinch of poverty in a hard winter and to decrease in reproductive powers, if not in "heads." Since January the tenants have under the new Land Tenure Act become entitled to claim damages from their landlords for the depredations of the deer. The landlords thus pressed followed the line of least resistance and gave their tenants written leave to shoot the deer unless compensated by the Hunt. Apparently, however, no ill-effect has resulted, though greater tact than ever and more lavish expenditure will be necessary to maintain the amicable relations which are so essential to the success of stag-hunting. Fortunately the farmers are by no means blind to the advantages accruing to them from the sport, which brings such large and wealthy crowds in its train. At present, according to reliable information, there are deer enough and to spare throughout the country, although certain districts are more congested than others. The one black spot on the stag-hunter's map is the Barnstaple country, where a numerous herd of deer, recruited from stragglers from Exmoor, remain unhunted, and consequently exposed to the rifle of the irate farmer, owing to the continued and relentless opposition to hunting on the part of the chatelaine of Arlington. In so big a country as that traversed by the Devon and Somerset there are sure to be cases of deer-shooting, but these are only sporadic, and so healthy is the state of public opinion throughout their territory that such acts are carefully concealed from the light of day and are not objects of boasting.

Very prominent on Exmoor are the modern Amazons, the ride-astride ladies, and our grandmothers, accustomed to flowing habit skirts, would surely turn in their graves if they could see the hunting lady's scanty costume in to-day's hunting field. However, the horses benefit, as they do not get so many sore backs as with the old side saddles. During a recent meet of the Devon and Somerset at Hawkcombe Head a stag was roused at Lilleycombe and sent flying over Yenworthy Common. He had, however, no heart for the moor, and sought the cliffs of Glenthorne, going out to sea where Devon marches with Somerset. Far out he swam into the shimmering haze of the Severn sea, till lost to the ken of the huntsmen on the boulder-strewn beach: but when the day was far spent he swam ashore among a party of ladies bathing below Rodney, like a modern Actæon surprising Diana at her bath and being metamorphosed into a stag. The maidens kept his secret, and did not betray him to the hounds. Captain A. S. Adkins has this season nearly 70 couple of hounds, and a good stud of horses. Altogether the prospects of the continued prosperity of stag-hunting on Exmoor are excellent.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The public riding track on the Calcutta course will be open for use on the 1st proximo and the training track on the 5th idem.

The Tollygunge Club will hold gymkhana race meetings on the 6th and 20th November.

First Entries for the Calcutta Races First Meeting, Tollygunge Steeplechases and Maiden Horse Plate at the Calcutta Third Extra will close on the 3rd November.

A second stipendiary steward, who will also act as assistant handicapper, has just been appointed by the Calcutta Turf Club. This gentleman is Mr. Harvey Roulston, an official of the Australian Jockey Club, who will arrive here next month. Mr. R. Boteler, the other Stipendiary Steward, is also expected out from home very shortly.

It is with regret we have to record the death in Colombo on the 16th instant of Mr. J. R. Stewart, for many years connected with the firm of Messrs. Jardine Skinner and Company, Mr. Stewart had in been in poor health for some time and left Calcutta on a sea trip to Ceylon a fortnight ago. The voyage apparently did not prove beneficial and the news of his sudden death from heart failure came as a shock to his many friends in Calcutta. Mr. Stewart was a good sportsman and in his younger days had been a great cricketer, but it is in his connection with the turf that he is better known in India. He was at one time a well-known owner, racing under the name of Mr. Ashkirk, and also rendered good service when he served as a steward of the C. T. C.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—There is still a feeling of unrest about racing in Poona, the target of some trainers and owners being the handicapper. I personally must give these said gentlemen best, as not only have I failed to detect anything glaring, but take it that the continued success of outsiders means that others also fail to pick on these good things which have been so palpably thrown in, and which must be showing the select few referred to big dividends!

A voice or two has been raised against the starter too, and certainly one or two fields on Monday especially got off in very straggly fashion. Before, however, condemning the said official, one must remember that the only bad example occurred amongst a set of ponies, not one of which I would care to give Rs. 500 for, animals which can only be said to have been failures in anything but consolations and selling races. Bucolic's whims cannot be credited to the starter, and on the day mentioned Antica and Haymaker were only acting up to their reputations.

Again the splitting up of two races made eight events which, as stated, went against the punters but gave us good sport. The divided Little New Comers was the first, Defence once more going out favourite in a field of six from Sabuktakin and Lalkak. The favourite came into the lead with Young Achilles soon after the start and, this being five instead of six, there seemed no chance of his being passed. The rest ran well together down the straight, Matheran detaching himself from the rest near home and very nearly upsetting his stable companion. There was apparently an idea that if he had come earlier he would have won, but the Stewards must have come to the same conclusion as the writer as Whalley came out O. K.

There were nine in the other, Young Anaiza heading Gibraltar, Arnica and Henry on the lists. This was the bad start quoted above, Henry getting a clean break from the favourite and Sayar, the others in a bunch some way back. Near the bend Gibraltar and Duxion had drawn up, and once Duxion caught the leader it was all over. Lieutenant took no part in the race as after being driven to the gate by a couple on foot, he refused to face the tapes.

Old Chippy Norton was first fancy for the 14-2 Brisbane Plate from Encourage and Comeback, a little on Gun Metal, whose marvellous improvement is the sensation of pony racing this year. He was first out, but then gave way to Nigam with Encourage and Comeback behind them. Chippy Norton showed up turning the bend, but that was the last of him, Cracker passing him on the extreme outside. Gun Metal and Encourage caught Nigam at the distance and five of them ran very close together. Encourage showed slightly in front, only to be passed by Cracker, who stayed out a late rush by Comeback, who could have won at these weights last year without taking the trouble to gallop.

The two Neral Plates were peculiarly enough won in one-horse fashion, both timings being better than anything so far this season—the first best. Saree, Ashroff and Mumbra were shortest, but it came to the stable companion of the second to bring off an upset. Killorn was quickest out of the gate on Salanic from Ashroff and Eed, Mumbra early falling in just behind them. The last named and Hazza had hard jobs at the bend to find a way through and had to come on the outside, Ashroff being the stumbling block. When Mumbra did get a clear run he came great guns, but Salanic had a fairly safe lead and stayed on. The winner could have been had at odds of double figures, but some people must have raked in a bit, as I know of one Book at least who was a good bit to the bad on the race.

Hamayoon, Farick, Dilerjung and Meerjan were in most request for the second, which seemed very open, though only five more started. Company was first away, contrary to the last time, followed by Hamayoon, and these positions were never altered, Little Gafil coming with a strong run into third place, which marks him as a smart little stayer.

One did not blame many of the Books for standing down during the little betting there was on the Closed Welter, for which only Pincher, Boil Over and Steam Whistle started, the first a warm favourite. Fraser made the running on Steam Whistle for about half the journey, when Mr. Kearsley caught him on the favourite and waited in front holding hard to the finish. Those eligible would have done well to do their best to make some sort of a show with a view to being catered for next year, as the Stewards must be seriously considering the abolishment of closed races.

Though there were numerous scratchings in the New Comers' Handicap, thirteen started, Lapwing shortening to the same odds as Shawcutt, who was given out as a really good thing to those who cared to take the chance of his running out, a favourite dodge of his in past races and in his work. Evans waited on him behind Brukat, Waziristan and Lapwing to the turn, where his backers had the satisfaction of seeing him hold to his course. He came away from the rest literally as he liked. About a hundred yards from home Killorn made a last effort on Lapwing and Evans gave Shawcutt an inch or two more of rein. That, however, was enough, as out he went straight for the outside rails. Luckily for Evans the pony eased and turned. He finished under the judge's box and got beaten a neck. Some even thought he had won, which shows what he would have done had he run straight. It is a great pity he is inclined to do this, as there is no getting away from it that he is one of the most brilliant Arabs in the country, and only a youngster. They would be well advised to give him a bit of trapping round sharp corners, a ruse I have known to work effectively. Third was Ziufandel after a very bad start; he must be watched.

Threes the field could be had at any time about the Selling Plate, White Heather better fancied than Haymaker, Alruna and Winsome. Haymaker was left, and the other in the stable, Lady Leslie, showed up with the favourite only for a time. Alruna, Wolferton and Winsome passed them within half a furlong cutting out a fast pace, and at the bend White Heather was dangerously placed on the rails with Mademoiselle Gence outside. The leaders went out a bit in turning and Evans got his chance, taking the lead at about the distance. Mademoiselle Gence was after him but White Heather stayed on, Wolferton beating Alruna for third place.

Another very long and open card of eight events on Saturday, the Tenth Extra. Tom Scott and Penton have left for Lucknow, Watson also has left, but these were the only notable absentees amongst trainers or jockeys, though Evans was due to leave for Ceylon that night to ride for Mr. DeSoysa. Hoyt and Mujeed each won two races, the latter a double on Company, a performance Scimitar just missed.

The first division of the Ahmednagar Plate had ten runners, Sharar being thought to stand out on his own from Selection, Sheriff and Minerva, Tamim also fancied by some. Sheriff, Tamim and Sharar led in line, Sheriff following behind the other two after a furlong. Sharar passed Tamim at the bend, but Minerva came through at the distance and went away easily; Selection a close third to Sharar.

Second on the card was the first of the Dhond Plates, Scimitar favourite in good betting from Farick, Murzook, Antica, Hishan etc. Real Blood was first out from Chechan, and Antica head of a bunch. At the bend Chechan led, but later Scimitar inside and Farick outside came out, Hishan showing up later. Hishan passed Farick with Antica close, but Scimitar won fairly comfortably.

There were thirteen in the Arab Welter, no G.R.'s taking part. Colaba warmed solidly to favouritism from Sheik Farid, Moscow, Rubio and Middleman. Sheik Farid and England led together from Company; Rubdan, Colaba and Middleman coming up handy later. Middleman, Colaba and Company caught Sheik Farid entering the straight, the first three eventually finishing in reverse order, Company very comfortably.

Though there were only five in the Newbury Plate of a mile and a half, it was an interesting and exciting race. Oakton was made favourite from Sugar Apple and Hunting Horn, all supported. Oakton led out from Clear Artist, Hunting Horn and Ashanti Gold, Clear Artist taking a clear lead at the seven furlongs. When they reached the bend, all except Sugar Apple were in a bunch and it was an open affair all down the straight. Hunting Horn on the outside was level with Ashanti Gold, whom Manley just got in front by a short head on the post, Clear Artist a neck behind.

Out of sixteen, only nine went out for the R. C. Eastern Plate, Parliament, Hazza, Merrily being the order, Alma expanding. Alma made the running for over half a mile from Young Salanic, Parliament, Urgent and Silvermine, Antica leading them with Hazza handy after that. At the half mile Parliament and Silvermine were together, Merrily and Huzza next. Merrily and Parliament ente ed the straight together, but then Merrily began to tire and Parliament comfortably went away from Huzza and Antica, close together.

Of the seven bar Milner in the Epsom Plate, all found some money, Metal Maid, Paul Pry and Coquette all equally fancied from Castalia and Pincher. Coquette delayed the start, Chivalry leading from Castalia and Paul Pry. Coquette came up at the bend with Metal Maid, and the former, Paul Pry and Castalia led to the distance. Here Paul Pry went away all over a winner, but Pincher coming through was full of running and, despite bumps, Whalley landed him a fairly easy winner in smart time.

Next was the second division of the Dhond Plate, Maimoon opening and remaining favourite from Company, Afreed and Hurgon. Malik Jaman and Afreed led Company to the bend, where on the approach of Maimoon and M. V. O. Company went away and won almost as easily as he did on the first occasion.

Finally, Scimitar was backed to repeat Company's double, Shanwar as well fancied with good money for Plassy. Yacoot, Chechan and Happy Land led in a line till Chechan went away before the bend, Shanwar, Scimitar and Plassey in order coming up at this part. It was anyone's race at the distance, then Scimitar going away seemed sure to win till Plassy caught him. There was an exciting moment, Hoyt riding a strong finish got there by a neck.

I have to record the retirement of that classic racehorse Your Majesty, writes our London correspondent. Mr. J. B. Joel's popular colt broke down so badly in a gallop at Wantage on the 26th September, that a racecourse will see him no more. This was particularly regrettable in view of the fact that the Jockey Club Stakes (£10,000) was only a few days off when the disaster occurred. Your Majesty was always a difficult one to train. Early in the spring trouble developed in connection with a suspensory ligament. This meant that Morton had to exercise both caution and patience, and when it was decided to reserve him for the rich Princess of Wales's Stakes at Newmarket Dark Ronald had not then loomed large on the racing horizon.

On paper his task in that event did not appear to be a formidable one, and although the son of Persimmon, who is a somewhat gross horse, was not absolutely wound up, he was quite as fit as circumstances would permit.

It was a relief to Morton to find that he had not pulled up lame in the race.

The same trouble was experienced in training him for the Eclipse Stakes, in which he was last of four. His next appearance was in the Atlantic Stakes at Liverpool, in which he ran second to his old opponent, White Eagle, to whom he was giving 4lb.

Since then both his forelegs have become infirm. This is not an infrequent case, as a horse naturally tries to save the good leg, with the inevitable result that the other one goes as well. And now he has broken down completely. Hard luck for Mr. Joel.

The Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society for August is as interesting as usual and we must apologise for this rather belated notice of this excellent periodical. Its contents are numerous and the treatises on a variety of interesting matter are carefully propounded, while the coloured plates, photographs and diagrams which adorn the number are, as usual, a feature of the Journal. Major F. Wall, I.M.S., C.M.Z.S., leads off with a diverting account of the common Indian snakes; Major H. H. Harrington discusses a list of the birds of the Bhamo District, Upper Burma; Father Blatter, S. J., dilates on the Flora of Panchgani; Messrs. J. C. Kershaw and G. W. Kirkaldy record some biological notes on Oriental Hemipetra, while Major Wall again makes some lengthy observations on snakes from Darjeeling and Major Harrington once more weighs in with a list of Rangoon birds. Lieut.-Col. R. G. Burton contributes some interesting Nature notes giving a comparative study of the habits and nature of African and Indian animals. The nesting of the Bar-headed Goose in Tibet is an uncommonly rare subject andthis Mr. Bailey narrates very concisely. Next come a lengthy continuation on the Plants of the Punjab, North-West Frontier, and Kashmir by Lieutenant-Colonel Bamber, I.M.S., the Butterflies of the plains, by Mr. T. R. Bell, the Preservation of Natural History specimens in air-tight cases and several other valuable subjects. The rest of the Journal comprises miscellaneous notes on varied subjects all of the greatest interest.

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book, which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

The great black lumbering buffalo which is to be seen in the streets of Calcutta drawing slowly but easily heavy wagons bearing loads, looks peaceful and amiable enough, in spite of the massive horns that decorate his head. In Calcutta he shows no animosity towards the European, but up-country he is often known to do so. A Times correspondent in writing on the subject of buffaloes remarks that as is sometimes the case with individual elephants, the tame buffaloes of India have a well-known and not altogether unintelligent hatred of white people; Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling speaks of the ignominy of "a party of stalwart British sportsmen being treed by a herd of angry buffaloes and obliged to wait for rescue at the hands of a tiny naked herdsman's child." Those who are so unfortunate as to incur the anger of the buffalo and to be within reach of his great horns, have little chance of their lives. The wild animal is no doubt stronger and more agile than the tame, but both must be very formidable adversaries. One author writes that he has heard of people avoiding a charge by stepping quickly to one side, but the ground must have been in their favour and they must have been very cool. He doubts if he himself could do it successfully, a jump of four or five feet at least being necessary. But once he saved himself by gripping a bough of a mimosa tree overhead and swinging his legs up to his chin so that the huge beast passed underneath Less fortunate was another sportsman, who, having hidden behind a tree, when the buffalo charged clutched the horns on either side of the trunk, with some desperate motion of being able to hold on. The end was inevitable, the man being tossed aside and gored to death. Nor when the buffalo is coming on will it be stopped by a bullet anywhere but in its brain, and the slope of the forehead, as the animal charges with nose outstretched, offers but a difficult shot at a few inches of space below the shield of the massive horns.

It is sometimes said that big game shooting is gradually becoming more and more difficult by reason of the growing scarcity of wild animals. From the figures returned by the Home Department giving the number of deaths caused by wild animals it appears that big game sportsmen have still plenty of scope in India; not only can they obtain good sport but greatly help the thousands of their fellow-men who at times go in terror of the lives from knowledge of the wild beast that lurks near by ready to devour. Here in Bengal the terror and destruction caused by wild beast are greater than elsewhere in India. The total number of persons killed by wild animals in India in 1908 was 2,166 as against 1,966 in 1907; out of the 1,900 total no less than 455 were killed by tigers in Bengal which was an increase of 100 in 1907. It seems that some special measures should be taken to prevent this terrible mortality. Another animal responsible for many deaths was the wolf. The number of people killed by wolves rose from 47 in 1907 to 75 in the Hazaribagh district, notwithstanding the fact that a special reward of Rs. 20 for every wolf killed within the jurisdiction of certain thanas had been offered. Of these people probably the majority if not all were children. An article on wolves which appeared in the Times not long ago said that the wolf is responsible for the destruction of children, for the deaths of more human beings than the tiger in India. This does not appear to have been the case in 1908, but it is comprehensible that the wolf is more hated than the tiger. Horried tales are told of how in famine times, when the natives are too weak to defend themselves, the wolves grow bold and come out in daylight to kill and feast on men and women. There is something to admire in the tiger, but the wolf has no redeeming feature; even from the sportsman's point of view it cannot be said to offer any attraction.

Mr. Ernest L. Harris, United States Consul-General at Smyrna, has issued a report on the amount and variety of wild game in Asia Minor, in the course of which he says that about two hours' ride on the Aidin Railway from Smyrna one gets into a district which abounds in wild boars. The small brown bear is at home in the Paphlagonian Range. The fur has always been sought after by the people in the interior as an article of dress. There is a common belief among the peasants generally that the thicker the clothing worn at all seasons of the year the better it is for the human body, protecting it alike from the winter cold and the summer heat, and it is not uncommon to see in many parts of Asia Minor and Caucasia people wearing huge bearskin coats in the midst of summer, with the thermometer standing at 100 degrees of heat Fahrenheit. The panther is to be found only in the inaccessible districts in the south of Asia Minor. The red stag has during the past twenty years been persecuted so much for the sake of its horns that it is no longer abundant. Fallow deer may still be found in large numbers in the Taurus Range and in Mesopotamia. In the province of Koniah the moufflon is still fairly abundant. At Angora some 60,000 hares are killed annually for the sake of the fur, which is shipped to Marseilles and used in the manufacture of hats. The wolf is at home in the interior of Anatolia. Hyænas frequent various parts of Asia Minor, and jackals are to be found in large numbers in the plain of the Meander. In some parts of the country leopards, wild cats, and the lynx are also to be found in considerable numbers.

The traffic in old horses between England and the Continent which has long been termed a disgrace to the British nation is likely to be investigated shortly and measures taken to prevent cruelty. An important step in this direction is to be taken by the railway companies serving the ports on the East Coast from which the animals are shipped. A conference of railway representatives is shortly to be held, at which discussion will take place upon the question of issuing very stringent regulations making it impossible for any horse which is at all unfit for travel to be taken into a train. Captain Revill, the special inspector of the Board of Agriculture, appointed to supervise traffic, is expected to attend the Conference. So much indignation has been aroused in Belgium over the stories of the agonies suffered by some of the aged animals that the Government authorities, in conjunction with the municipality of Antwerp, are proposing action also. The reform suggested is likely to be a special police regulation prohibiting any horse imported for the ultimate purpose of slaughter from being worked before being killed, and also making it compulsory for aged horses bound for abattoirs inland to be carried by train. A public abattoir adjacent to the wharves at Antwerp is also a proposal put forward. It is to be hoped that these measures will have the effect of preventing further cruelty in this unpleasant traffic.

The most terrible accident which has happened since man learnt to fly was that which, a few days before the mail left, occurred to the French Military airship République. When on its way from the Grand Army Manœuvres the vessel was blown up in mid air at a height of some 500 feet and came crashing down, a dead weight of nearly 4 tons. The crew, consisting of two officers, Captain Marchal and Lieutenant Phame of the aëronautical section of the First Engineers, and two non-commissioned officers of Engineers, were killed on the spot, and their mutilated bodies were with difficulty recovered from among the tangled wreckage of the airship. The vessel was following the national road from Paris to Antibes, where two motor-cars, conveying several officers of the French aërostatic park, were keeping pace with her. Suddenly the occupants of one of the cars beheld a bright object flash through the air between the region of the propellers and the balloon proper. It was one of the blades of the propeller which had become detached, and which, by centrifugal action, had been flung upward towards the envelope of the balloon, which it tore open in a clean cut. A loud explosion was heard, and the immense mass fell like lead. Only a moment before, Captain Marchal had been seen signalling to the officers in the motor-car his satisfaction with the progress of the airship. The dirigible fell across the road, the men in the car being buried under the shapeless envelope of the balloon. The four victims of the disaster were accorded a state military funeral at Versailles. The calamity brings home to one the peril that those who are engaged in aëronautics incur. At the same time it may be said that it is good augury of the future that so few fatal accidents have occurred to those who are so boldly conquering the air.

Whilst records have been established by Bleriot, Latham, Farman, and others, less has been heard lately of the Wright Brothers, who were so prominent in the public eye a few months ago when conducting experiments at Pau and elsewhere. At the Hudson-Fulton celebration, however, Mr. Wilbur Wright has reappeared and seem to have considerably enlivened the proceedings. With delightful coolness and daring he is reported to have flown out over the Bay and circling back went seaward again, this time sailing over the Lusitania as she passed out on her way to Liverpool. The Lusitania's passengers cheered the aëronaut excitedly and the liner whistled a salute, which was taken up by the other vessels in the harbour. It is described as being an extraordinary sight and elicited the enthusiasm of everyone who witnessed it. Mr. Wright said he believed he made 50 miles an hour, and at one time he was probably 300 feet up in the air. Another aëronaut, Mr. Baldwin, who tried to fly over the Hudson, after making a beautiful ascent, settled down again gently into the river; he was rescued by sailors from the warships and brought safe ashore. It is interesting to learn that Wright Brothers declare that the Bleriot and Farman aëroplanes are infringements of their patents, and announce that they will take proceedings against all persons taking such machines to the United States for the purpose of making flights.

The Bangalore Horse and Dog Show will be held on the 23rd and 24th November. Lieutenant Thompson, R.H.A., is the honorary secretary, and the exhibition will be held in the Residency grounds.

The Connell Cup Polo Tournament will begin at Allahabad on the 10th January next, entries closing on New Year's Day.

The Bombay Rovers' Football Tournament was won by the Leicester Regiment who beat the King's Own in the final by 5 goals to nil. Details further on.

The winners of the Durand Tournament, the Lancashire Fusiliers, through manœuvres and shifting of the regiment, are unable to go to Bombay to play the winners of the Rovers' Cup for the Championship of India. The match has, therefore, been abandoned, but Messrs. Lipton have kindly consented to let the Cup stand for competition next year under the same conditions.

At the annual general meeting of the Calcutta Football Club held last Thursday the following officers were elected for next season:—

President—Mr. G. Pickford.

Vice-President—Mr. W. N. Winckworth.

Rugby:—Captain—J. Reid Kay; Vice-Captain—C. G. Arthur; General Committee—T. R. Elderton and A. M. Burnett; Selection Committee—F. S. Kerr and E. Martelli.

Rugby and General Secretary—A. R. Birch; Treasurer—G. R. Strachan.

Association:—Captain—A Crawford; Vice-Captain—(not appointed); Secretary—W. Macdonald Smith; General Committee—V. Sherman and W. MacConnell; Selection Committee—W. N. Winckworth and J. F. Fyfe.

Hockey:—Captain—G. Turnbull; Vice-Captain—R. N. Bocquet; Secretary—S. A. Roberts; General Committee—E. Studd and W. St. J. Oliver; Selection Committee—H. K. Pierson and T. Manders.

Ground Secretary—G. A. C. Badham.

The Sinhalese Sports Club Committee have decided to accept the proposal of Mr. F. Laver, Manager of the Australian team of Cricketers, to play a one-day match in Colombo, on the 30th instant. The team will be an All-Ceylon eleven and the match will be played on the Colombo C.C. ground.

Sir Thomas Lipton has sailed for America to try to arrange a race for the America Cup under the modified rules.

In the opening match of the Harris Football Tournament, which commenced at Poona on Monday the Lincolns defeated the Worcesters by 2 goals to nil. The latter lost good opportunities for equalising but failed owing to erratic shooting. The Leicesters met the R.F.A. on Tuesday and won by 2 goals to nil.

The big fight for the Boxing Championship of the world between Johnson and Ketchel was decided at San Francisco on the 16th instant, the coloured man retaining his title. From the short account wired by Reuter we learn that the early rounds were marked by cautious sparring. Ketchel went down in the sixth round and was later the recipient of a succession of lefts on the jaw. Though outgeneralled the white man slogged away and rushing the negro in the twelfth round brought him down. Johnson was quickly up and, driving his right to the jaw and his left to the body, sent Ketchel to the floor to take the count. We await details of the contest with interest. Johnson having now disposed of Kauffmann and Ketchell it is probable that his next meeting will be with Sam Langford: the fight with Jeffries is very much in the air and there are many who doubt if will ever take place.

The Mud Sports in connection with the Bombay Gymkhana held on the 13th instant added another to the successful series of these meetings held this season. There was a large attendance, a capital programme was put through and the Band of the 116th Mahrattas added to the gaiety of the afternoon. Tent-pegging in half sections was won by Major H. J. Everett and Captain R. L. Haynes, with Captain Nash and Reynolds second. Jumping for ponies gave Mukle a win, Greyburn second and Thompson third and the Horse Scurry resulted as follows:—W. L. Richards 1st, Denro 2nd, W. Priestley third. The Musical Medley (Ladies nomination) in which the ladies were to write down the names of six well-known selections played by the Band and hand them to their partners, caused no little amusement. J. Greig nominated by Mrs. Trebble was first in with the correct answers and was followed by W. Reynolds and Mrs. Curdlip. The Hallowe'en Stakes, picking an apple out of a bucket of water with the teeth, produced great merriment Captain Haynes fished his apple out first, with Greyburn next and Pearson third. The Egg and Spoon Race closed the programme and was won by Richmond and Mrs. Curdlip.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 1st October 1909.

While Cook and Peary are slanging each other on the other side of the Atlantic over North Pole matters, we Londoners are more closely concerning ourselves with the South Pole and its heroes and properties. Lieutenant Shackleton's good little wooden ship, the Nimrod, is moored in the Thames and she was thrown open to public inspection this week. by the Lord Mayor. She is a bit battered as to her bows after ploughing through 300 miles of ice, and she isn't beautiful to look at, but, like Joe Bagstock, "dev'lish tough."

A good idea of the discomforts of Antarctic life can be obtained from a glance at the sleeping quarters and the tiny cabins in which Lieutenant Shackleton, the captain, and the chief biologist lived and worked. Nowhere in the ship is there "room to swing a cat."

At the Examination Hall of the Royal College of Surgeons, close to the Savoy Hotel and five minutes' walk from the ship, is the second half of Lieutenant Shackleton's unique exhibition. Here the work and trials of the ice parties are vividly shown. At one end is an Antarctic tableau with penguins, seals and skua birds. In front of this stands the bell tent which was taken farthest south, and near by a figure dressed in Lieutenant Shackleton's marching costume, with skis on the fur boots, an ice pole, and a sledge-hauling rope round the chest and waist.

On the right can be seen two of the sledges loaded with 600lb. of sleeping bags, tent-poles, food-bags, and instruments. At the end of one sledge is the wheel and meter which registered the distance travelled each day. On the walls are hundreds of photographs, the pick of 2,000 illustrating the whole voyage. Altogether it is a most alluring little show and bids fair to be one of the most popular given in London for many a day.

We have this week been edified by voluminous reports of the treatment meted out to the incarcerated suffragettes. They started hunger strikes and several found it a paying game, as after an abstention from food for about a week they looked so miserable the authorities grew alarmed and liberated them! Since then the jail administration has exhibited signs of recovery from this exceedingly weak-kneed policy and now when a hunger strike is entered upon the suffragette is tackled, deprived of the power of offering resistance, "forcibly fed" (to quote the official phrase) and saved from committing suicide. Of course Mr. Keir Hardie wants to know all about it, and has asked questions in the House on what he is pleased to regard as a "horrible outrage," and he has been properly sat on by the Home Secretary. I believe the stomach-pump is well known in Indian jails, and is regarded by the energetic and resourceful Civil Surgeon as a valuable aid in dealing with contumacious prisoners of high caste. I have heard of its application with such "variations," as would be calculated to nip in the bud the hunger strike of the Aryan brother, of caste somewhat below that of a Coolin Brahmin! But this was in the good old days before Congresses, the vernacular press and other things had arisen to hamper the administration of justice, and incline the imaginative and active Executive Officer to "count twenty," so to speak, before taking action.

Occasionally the Daily Mail and its allies do some good: they are to be congratulated on the success so far attendant on their campaign against the infamous traffic in decripit and diseased horses between ports in the north of England and the Continent. The details brought to light raised such a storm of indignation that the Railway Companies have now decided to carry no more horses destined to drag out their remaining days in agony under some fiendish foreign master and return to England ultimately in some form of German or Belgian "delikatessen." It is reported that no foreigners are buying worn out horses in London now, so that we seem at last to be within measurable distance of the day when the German sausage and the poloney will be relegated to the limbo of forgotten things.

I regret to confirm the news of the death of Lady Elgin, the announcement of which you have already received by wire. She had been for some time in indifferent health and succumbed last week at Lord Elgin's Scotch residence, aged fifty-eight. When in India, if I remember aright, Her Excellency's delicate health and domestic cares interfered to a considerable extent with those official and social functions which figure so prominently on the programes of the Calcutta and Simla seasons, and on which the Vicereine is usually the brilliant central figure. Her attention was, I believe, chiefly occupied with the large family who, ten in number, survive her.

Writing of Indian Viceroyalty reminds me to tell you that the will of the late Marquis of Ripon has just been proved and his estate valued at £125,574, a figure which surprises many who thought he would have left a good deal more. The will has been proved by Admiral Lord Walter Kerr and Sir H. W. Primrose, each of whom receives £200, and Mr. Frederick Simpson St. Quintin, of 9, Chelsea Embankment, who is left £10,000, the freehold house, 9, Chelsea Embankment, and certain furniture. Lord Ripon left the church and convent of San Damiano, near Assisi, Italy, to Lord Walter Kerr. An annuity of £150 is left to the Misses Annie and Eliza Mason, formerly of Fountain Hall, Ripon, jointly.

Lord Ripon gave his executors power to dispose of his papers and documents as they think proper, but directed that no official or public document should be published without the permission of the Crown.

After bequests of £100 to Miss M. E. Weaver, of 125, Bond Street, W., certificated nurse, £40 a year to his former coachman Henry Heath, and legacies to servants, the remainder goes to the present marquis. Among the property mentioned is an original miniature of Oliver Cromwell (by Cooper) and certain plate taken from his tomb.

Such a thing as an Angling championship is as unknown in India I suppose as a Ping Pong, a Diavolo championship or other of the wierd enterprises which somehow can find enthusiastic supporters in these isles, the population of which are "mostly fools," according to the sage of Chelsea. The report of the recent English Angling championship is before me; it incites to mirth. Two hundred and sixteen competed at Newark on Trent for the gold and silver medals offered, and the event was won by the Leeds team numbering twelve, "after a keen contest" says the report; Derby was second and Sheffield third. And the total weights were:—Leeds, 7lb. 5¼oz.; Derby, 4lb. 10½oz.; Sheffield, 3lb. 13oz. Prodeegeous!

Here are further extracts from this exciting report:—

"There were several bookmakers, and odds of 66 to 1 were laid against individuals, and the odds against the teams varied from 8 to 1 Newark to 12's other sides. Leeds were heavily backed at these rates, and the individual victory of J. H. R. Bazley was a heavy blow to the bookmakers. He had 2lb. 2½oz. altogether, and T. Hayes, of the same association, had 2lb. 2¼oz. J. Mitchell (Bradford), with 2lb. 1¼oz., was third.

The stretch of the Trent backwater in which the match was fished was an absolutely fair one for all the competitors, but a minority of them caught fish. Still, that is not unusual in matches of this sort. The famous Sheffield teams were close up, but the Boston twelve were out of the hunt for once in a way, and so were the London sides.

The match lasted for five hours, and it was a cramped and stiff lot of anglers who welcomed the call of time at a quarter to five."

Great Scott! Twelve men fishing five hours caught 7lb. 5¼oz. of fish or about 7½oz. each and were judged worthy of a gold medal and flattering press notices extending to a column in some instances!

A WELL KNOWN FACT

that no matter what part of India you go to, if conversation turns on Music or Musical Instruments, the names of either HAROLD & CO., Calcutta, or S. While most people seemed to bemoan the disappearance of "The Merry Widow" from Daly's I, personally, was relieved when she made her exit, I was weary of her and her waltz on all the piano organs, her monstrous hats and other accessories. I was quite prepared to welcome "The Dollar Princess" who has replaced her and I have to-day the pleasing task of notifying another of Mr. George Edwards' emphatically popular successes.

In construction the play is far better than most of its kind. It is not mere hotch-potch of irrelevant songs and dances. The plot is as slight as is customary in musical comedy, and it boasts no note of originality; yet the book has cohesion, and is always moving directly towards a definite end, while the lyrics—many of which show Mr. Adrian Ross at his best—are almost without exception relevant to the action. And although "The Dollar Princess" has been turned out according to a long familiar pattern, it has a distinct individuality of its own. There are faults, of course. For one thing, it begins tamely, and for another, it is far too long. The second act occupied an hour and a half, and the whole performance lasted from eight o'clock till a quarter to twelve. But compression should be a simple matter. Then the book if not exactly notable for choice wit, contains a good deal of real, refreshing humour, and the caste is made up of well established musical comedy idols and new comers who, unless my judgment is sadly at fault, will soon establish themselves as favourites.

The piece has one thing in common with its predecessor—Miss Lily Elsie and Mr. Joseph Coyne are again starred in it. Miss Lily Elsie is always good, and though a careful analysis has failed to show me the reason for Mr. Coyne's popularity, the public will have him, so to start with we have two predisposing causes for success. Mr. Coyne's part is that of Harry Q. Conder, an American Oil King multi-millionaire, whose fad it is to employ impecunious members of the British aristocracy as his servants. His butler is a duke, his groom is an earl, a baronet mixes him his cocktails, and ladies of title dust his furniture. But Harry's wooing of Olga, a circus lion tamer, who masquerades as a Russian Countess, and is mistaken for a Nihilist with a special mission to assassinate millionaires, is only a side issue of the story. The real "love interest" centres in the duel of wits and wills between Harry's fair sister Alice (Miss Lily Elsie), and her well-born secretary Freddy Fairfax (Mr. Robert Michaelis). When Freddy comes after employment Alice engages him, that she may tame him, cure him of what she considers his superciliousness and his conceit, but the gentleman wins in the end. Each is a very self-willed person, each loves the other, and each tries to govern. But when Alice says that it is her whim to marry, and practically offers to buy Freddy with her wealth—"He's just a doll that dances while Alice pulls the string," she sings—he scorns the suggestion, tells her that she has a heart for nought but dollars. It is with a telling, dramatic finale, rich and suggestive in its music that the second act ends—a touch of real comic opera. Scornfully Freddy declares "They are the dollar princesses, the poorest women on earth!" and Alice, humiliated, faints in her brother's arms.

The third act, as is generally the case when a musical play is extended to three acts, is the weakest part of the piece. It is very short, however, and serves to settle the differences of several pairs of lovers. Freddy has gone to California, "struck oil," and in a month become a millionaire, and Alice comes humbly enough to his bungalow, which is fitted up with quite an Eastern splendour. Here, too, Alice's cousin Daisy (Miss Gabrielle Ray) comes into the arms of John, Earl of Quorn (Mr. Basil Foster), Conder's ex-groom, and Conder himself pairs off with the lion tamer (Miss Emmy Wehlen).

Mr. Robert Michaelis, a new comer to Daly's, is an immense success. He has a powerful and pleasing singing voice, and is a far better actor than the majority of musical comedy lovers. H eactually gave the part of Freddy character. Miss Gabrielle Ray is just her own quaint self and made the most of her one opportunity to show her talents as a dancer. Miss Emmy Wehlen is a handsome and sweet voiced Olga, the lion tamer. Mr. Basil Foster, one of the family of cricketers, is a handsome and agreeable Earl of Quorn, and Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm has little chance to display his gifts as a comedian in a slender part. Mr. W. H. Berry's broader methods contrasted effectively with the lighter comedy of Mr. Coyne, and Mr. Willie Warde, Mr. F. J. Blackman, and Miss May Kinder were good in smaller parts.

The Vagrant.

A short-sighted gentleman accompanied his favourite daughter to the station one day to see her off by train. Securing her a seat he took a stroll along the platform, and then returned to the window to say a parting word. The daughter had changed her seat, and a prim old maid had taken her place next the window. Unaware of the important change inside, the gentleman hurriedly put his face to the window and said. "Give me a kiss, darling." In another instant the end of a cotton umbrella was thrust through the window, followed by the passionate injunction, "Be off with you, you gray headed old wretch!"

THROUGH PERSIA.*

Quite one of the most fascinating and most picturesquely written books on the East to-day is Mr. Bradley-Birt's "Through Persia: From the Gulf to the Caspian" The author is already too well known in this country to need any introduction to the reader, and his books on local affairs have won for him almost as much distinction as that achieved by eminent writers like Sir William Hunter and Sir Henry Maine. Hitherto Mr. Bradley-Birt has dealt with a variety of topics full of absorbing interest about India and its peoples. This time, however, his work stretches over entirely new ground, and embraces new scenes Every chapter teems with life and is a volume in itself. The author is not merely contended with setting down his impressions as they occurred to his mind as pleasure-seeking tourists generally do; he goes one further—he combines the qualities of the historian and artist, and his book is characteristic of that fine literary style which is so distinguishing a feature of his earlier productions. It is printed in distinctly large type—a desideratum nowadays—on the best possible paper and is interspersed with photographs illustrating the text. The description of cities and places of historic interest, like Bushire, Shapur, Shiraz, Ispahan, Persepolis, Teheran, and the tombs of Cyrus, Sadi and Hafiz, is full of an old-world charm.

The East is East, and all the orientalism, all the gorgeousness, all the splendour and tinsel which impress the European in India are to be seen in the land of the Lion and the Sun; but Persia seen through Anglo-Indian spectacles is still more interesting: still more strange. It exercises a subtle influence and infuses a subtler charm, and the Western man whose mind is already well ingrained with Eastern traditions in this land of mysticism and splendour finds himself a hopeless stranger in a strange land when he gets to Persia! And yet, the East is East! But let us see what the writer has to say:—"In the land that is left behind (that is India) even over its greatest treasures and most historic memories, there has fallen something of the desecrating atmosphere of the West. But this land, towards which one has set one's face, still lies deep buried in a world of its own. At its gates the nations of the West have long since beaten, but none has gained admittance." Therefore, it it not strange to hear the same person tell us that it is "a new and salutary experience" for an Indian official who has spent ten years in the East among a people who for a hundred and fifty years have been subject to Western influences to come into contact with another Oriental people who pay no allegiance to the West. The book can hardly be complete without some reference to the recent crisis, and this the author has done with a deal of pessimism. There is an engaging chapter on Mejlis, and incidentally mention is made of the part which the Calcutta and Bombay agitator have played in the revolution and the stimulus afforded by a certain Calcutta print.

Mr. Bradley-Birt is to be complimented upon a work so full of encyclopædic information and so full of genuine interest.

A DAY'S SHOOTING IN A FLORIDA SWAMP.

It is a long time since I enjoyed the day's sport which I propose to describe, but I have not forgotten the pleasure of it, nor shall I ever do so. Yet the bag was more remarkable for its variety and curiosity than its weight, and shooting in the swamps of the St. John would not be to every gunner's taste. It is purely sportsman's work, and every bird dropped will probably cost its weight in sweat—or nearly so. To shoot successfully in a Florida swamp, a man must love to seek his game as well as kill it.

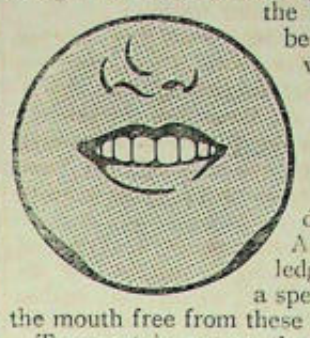
It was a splendid October day, but the climate of this State is sub-tropical in effect on the human system, whatever it is in physical geographies. Practically, all the days are fine. In the height of the summer the weather is too hot for much exertion, and I should not advise intending visitors to this region to come in the autumn, which is a dangerous time of the year. I was well seasoned but young and rash, and ran risks I would not take now.

After a good breakfast, a strong dose of quinine, and a stiff glass of brandy to wash all down (very necessary precautions against fever, which loves to attack an empty stomach), four of us started on the shoot. In a swamp, however, sportsmen cannot be companionable. We each took a canoe and dispersed in different directions. I found the water shallow—not much more than a dozen feet deep in most places—the bottom being really the flooded bank of the river. Here and there subterranean springs burst forth with such violence that they have scooped out huge holes of great depth; yet the water is so beautifully pure and clear that the bottom is quite visible. The force of the inrushing spring is so mighty that if a large stone or other weighty object is dropped into the pool it will not reach the bottom, but as soon as the force of water acts upon it it flies away in a straight line, as if shot from a catapult.

The water is full of large cypress trees, the roots of which find nourishment and a firm hold at depths of six or eight feet. The foliage is mostly near the tops, but masses of Spanish moss hang down and float gracefully in the breeze, when there is one, and there are walls, or sheets, of matted creepers so thick that a way cannot be forced through them. These are enlivened by dense clusters of brightly coloured flowers. Shafts of brilliant sunshine find their way through the clouds of dark foliage above, but there are many gloomy and mysterious-looking spots where the twilight is of the dimmest, and there are some fearsome creatures in these recesses—ugly-looking lizards, water-moccasin, which hiss their angry resentment of intrusion as they wriggle away into heaps of decayed vegetation, and huge alligators, which do not hiss but look venomous as they bounce into the water with a tremendous splash, obviously much irritated at being driven from some favourite sand or mud bank. They do not dare, however, to attack during daylight, experience having taught them a lesson they thoroughly understand; but after nightfall they are exceedingly dangerous creatures, making sudden rushes on their victims from the darkness of some lurking-place where it is impossible to perceive their presence.

My first shot was at one of these ugly reptiles. I aimed to put a bullet through it just behind the shoulder joint, and as it rushed on through the water with great velocity I at first thought I had missed it. After swimming fifty or sixty yards, however, it turned belly upwards and feebly clawed the air with its four ungainly feet. I gave it the second barrel, and left it to become, in due course, a welcome meal for the turkey-buzzards, which are among the most characteristic birds of this district, and are to be seen in all parts of the swamp in flocks which often number hundreds of members.

Soon afterwards I got a shot at a snake-bird, which fell and lodged in some forked branches a few feet above the water. Fortunately, it was quite dead, for these birds are nearly always lost if only wounded, and, moreover, they fight desperately, inflicting ugly injuries with their long, sharp-pointed bills. The bird is generally called a darter in books, and is the aulimga of Brazil; locally it is known as a water-turkey. The body is about the size of that of a duck, with a long tail, and a tapering, snake-like neck. In colour the bird is black, with metallic reflections, the shaft of the covert feathers white, and a long, thin stripe of white down the sides of the neck.



The shotgun is the only weapon likely to be required in these swamps. I carried a rifle merely because I was nervous on account of the numerous alligators, some of which were fifteen or sixteen feet long. I found them, however, quite as anxious to keep out of my way as I was to shun them, and the rifle, which I carried in front between my knees, was very much in the way. Presently, on my turning quickly to aim at a bird, it went off and blew a big hole in the bottom of the canoe, and I had to hurriedly land on a sandbank to effect repairs. Here I disturbed several large alligator-terrapin, which were nearly two feet across the shell. They quickly slid into the water, and I did not attempt to interfere with them, as they always show fight, and their large, hawklike beaks inflict most formidable wounds.

Soon after I had relaunched the canoe I perceived a pair of snake-birds sitting on the bough of a cypress, almost hidden by the foliage, but betrayed by the incessant motion of their long necks and bills inquisitively poked out, now to the right, now to the left, and sometimes straight up in the air. As I wished to secure a pair for preservation, I to remember that of all the duties which we owe to ourselves for health and comfort's sake, the proper care of the teeth is one of the most important.

One should realise—and recent investigations have proved it again and again—that the condition of the teeth has far more influence upon our general well-being than most of us suppose. The protection of the teeth, however, can only be considered as sufficient when the tooth-destroying substances which are the causes of fermentation and decomposition, and which renew themselves in the mouth daily, are also daily destroyed.

As everyone must acknowledge after a little reflection, a special care is needed to keep the mouth free from these harmful substances.

To a certain extent the tooth-brush will be useful for the removal of the impurities from the teeth, but only to a certain extent, as with the brush the surface alone of the teeth can be reached. But as the injurious bacteria are located everywhere—in the mucous membrane of the mouth and especially in the corners and folds where the brush cannot reach—one must use besides the tooth-brush, the liquid and antiseptic dentifrice Odol, which penetrates into the most hidden places of the mouth and destroys all harmful bacteria.

It is in its unique properties that Odol especially excels all other mouth-cleansing preparations. After the mouth has been rinsed with Odol its active antiseptic principle spreads itself with all-pervading effect over the entire oral cavity, the microscopically minute antiseptic element maintaining its influence for hours.

It is this lasting effect, this precious and transcendent quality which no other dentifrice or mouth-wash possesses, that gives to daily users of Odol the absolute assurance that their mouths are permanently protected against the processes of fermentation and decomposition, which, if not guarded against, inevitably destroy the teeth.

fired at the one of which I could see most, and brought it down; but these birds are very hard to kill, and a few twigs between one and the muzzle of a gun afford it much protection. My bird was not killed this time, and on dropping into the water instantly dived, and I saw no more of it. Snake-birds can swim on the surface of water, with only the head showing above it, or entirely submerged. No bird is a better diver, and most of the fish on which they prey is captured under water.

Considerable care is required in managing a canoe in these Florida swamps. The roots of the cypresses grow in peculiar formations, something like sharp-pointed cones, and many of them are completely submerged, with the point a few inches only beneath the surface. If these snags are run against they will pierce the bottom of a canoe as easily as a knife goes through paper.

Suddenly, from the black shadow of a clump of magnolias, a stream of blue light, bright as an electric flash and nearly as rapid of motion, rushes across a broad ray of sunshine. It pauses a moment on the dead branch of an old cedar and gives one time to perceive that it is a blue jay. Other creatures of almost celestial hues abound—metallic, brilliant, tinted light—any term is better suited to their description than mere colour—incessantly delighting the eye with their beauty and unexpected appearance.

Shots, however, are not numerous. A large proportion of the creatures that frequent the swamps are more interesting to the Nature-lover than to the sportsman. Nobody, for instance, would be so wanton as to shoot the wood-storks, which abound in these little-frequented recesses, and the huge nests of which may be seen in many of the trees. These storks are worthless for sport, but they are a great beauty in a gloomy and mysterious tract, and are most useful in keeping down the multitude of snakes, which often threaten to over-run some parts of it. They also feed on frogs and young tortoises, which they succeed in whisking out of their shells by beating them against a tree trunk or cypress knee.

Bang! bang! Two heavy charges of No. 1 shot fly into the air, and amid a cloud of leaves (for the spot is overhung with trees), mingled with a few feathers floating slowly down, a plump, dark body falls with a big splash into the water. A few strokes of the paddle and I am alongside of it and lift out a fine male crested duck (hooded merganser), a bird very rarely seen in these swamps.

A little vexed that I had missed with one barrel, I proceeded to reload, still watching the slowly dispersing blue smoke amidst the deep recesses of cypress foliage, when a much larger flock of duck flew across an open space fifty yards ahead. I had got the cartridges home, the breech closed, and was ready to give them both barrels. Again I missed with the left, and this time picked up a mallard. An hour later I brought down a brace of blue teal, but the closely wooded cypress swamp is scarcely the place to enjoy good duck-shooting. Duck congregate in great numbers on the open marshes of the Everglades in the centre of the State, where thousands of them may be seen in a single flock.

There are rails, and a bird which seems to be a species of water-hen, in the St. John River swamps, but these are all nocturnal birds, and it is only on rare occasions the sportsman succeeds in getting a shot at them.

About the mouth of the river immense numbers of pelicans breed on the sandbanks, and during certain states of the weather on the coast small flocks of these curious birds ascend the swamp to a distance of at least fifty miles; but I presume no one would fire at these harmless creatures unless he wished to obtain a pair for preservation.

On my way home I heard, and dimly saw, a pair of large owls (probably eagle-owls) flitting among the trees with noiseless wings, but uttering many weird cries, particularly a mournful double note sounding like "Oh-hoo-o-o-o-o," much prolonged. These birds are here, as elsewhere, held in much awe and considered to be omens of evil, but it is bad luck to kill them.

It may be well to mention, for the information of intending visitors to this region, that all animals met with in the Florida swamps are difficult to kill, and large shot, with a good charge (four drams) of powder, should be used.—P. F. in Shooting Times.

A HOME-MADE SHRAPNEL FOR CYLINDER BORED GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It has always been a difficult problem to get the ordinary cylinder bored game gun to throw a sufficiently close pattern for long range work. The concentrator effects this object to a partial extent, raising the shooting to about the level of a modified choke. I have lately been experimenting with a shrapnel shell of very simple design, so simple in fact that anyone can readily make a few and try them for himself, with but little trouble. As to the action of these shrapnel, I can only say that sometimes they act very well, but on the other hand occasionally fail completely. Anyhow they are amusing toys for a dull afternoon, and if considered sufficiently promising, it is easy to carry a few cartridges loaded with them, and test the merits of the contrivance practically, by an occasional longshot into a flock of koolung, or geese.

To describe the arrangement, first, one must get a few old cartridge cases for a small bore shot gun, of such size that the cardboard tube portion will go easily right through the bore of the gun from which the shrapnel are to be used. The paper tube of a 16 bore cartridge is ·725 in external diameter, so that it will only go through the bore of a large sized 12 bore. Most 12 bores having a calibre of about ·72, or a little over. If then a bit of the 16 bore cartridge case refuses to go through the gun easily, one must go to 20 bore cases, which are ·679 in diameter, and therefore rather loose. To make the shrapnel a piece of cartridge tube is cut off, and then closed at one end by putting in a tight card wad, and turning the edge of the paper over it, just as one turns over the edge above the over-shot wad when loading shot cartridges.

The tube is then placed on a table with the open end up. The next thing required is a piece of string about ten inches to a foot long. To one end of this string a felt wad fitting the gun, and therefore of larger diameter than the piece of tube, is attached by putting it through a hole in the wad and then tying a big knot. A substantial knot is also made at the other end of the string. This latter end, with its knot (but no wad), is inserted into the piece of tube as it stands on the table, until the knot rests at the bottom: then shot of the required size is poured into the tube till it is a little more than half full, and thus the knotted end of the string is embeded in the shot. The loose string between wad and tube, some eight or nine inches in length, is now coiled away into the vacant space in the tube, on top of the shot, which it thus keeps within the case. The whole arrangement of wad and tube is now pushed into a cartridge which is loaded with powder (and a wad above it) only. The wad, of course, goes down first, so that the wad of the shrapnel, and the wad over the powder in the cartridge are together. The cartridge case is not turned down, and if the shrapnel does not fit tight enough to keep in position, a bit of paper can be wrapped lightly round it. The action on firing is as follows:—The whole arrangement is driven out of the gun together, and as soon as the shrapnel gets clear of the muzzle blast, the wad at the end of the string, being lighter than the tube with its contained shot, is more affected by the resistance of the air, and lags behind, pulling the coiled up string out of the tube. When the end of the loosely bunched up string is come to, the last bit with the knot at the end is jerked out of the shot, freeing most of them from the tube, so that they then travel on unconfined. The whole arrangement is not unlike the now almost forgotten John's Shell. The wad at the end of the string acts like the tail of a kite, keeping the tube from turning over and travelling sideways. The tube must not be cut too long, or it will not travel point first, and so one must be content with only getting a charge of a little over half an ounce in a 12 bore. When everything goes right, the shot gives a very close pattern: its success, however, depends on having the string the right length and thickness, and so coiled up that it pays out smoothly and readily. Though I will not vouch for the reliability of this string worked shell, yet my experiments point to its being occasionally a useful tip for anyone to try if his gun happens to be cylinder bored in both barrels, and therefore ordinarily useless at long range. In this event the string shrapnel will give a very much better chance of bagging a bird or two out of a flock, when the distance is great, than if an ordinary cartridge is used.

BURMAH OIL CO., LD.

Producers and Refiners of
THE FOLLOWING WELL-KNOWN BRANDS OF KEROSINE OIL.

"Gold Mohur" 125°—A pure water-white Oil, equal in lighting quality to the best Foreign Oils, especially prepared for European consumption.

"Oriental" 125°—A good burning Oil, but not quite equal in colour to "Gold Mohur."

"Victoria" 125°—A low priced Oil, specially prepared for bazar and village consumption in the ordinary open native lamps.

CANDLES.

The well-known "VILLAGE" BRAND of Candles manufactured by the Company are prepared by a special hardening process which makes them more adapted for use in hot climates than any other qualities, because it obviates bending and guttering.

DEAR SIRS,

You will be pleased to hear that the Cartridges you loaded for me in 1907 are being used by me for Chikore Shooting and I have not had a miss fire yet and yesterday I got

7 consecutive shots.

I was not able to use these Cartridges as I went home in 1908 and did very little Shooting on my return They speak well for your loading."

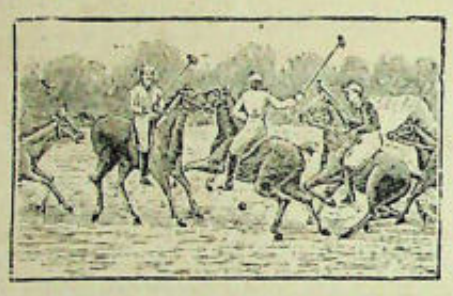
BURBAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.



The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

A COCKNEY angler and a brother East-ender decided to spend a well-earned holiday on the bosom of Old Father Thames; and though the twain knew rather less about fishing than they did about airships, they decided further that it should run to a punt, rods, baits and the whole slap-up outfit. And as they sat watching their floats dancing in ripples, one of them—the floats I'm talking about—disappeared with a rush. A mighty strike, a pull-devil-pull-baker act of breathless interest, and a sailing away into his native depths of a fat perch adorned with a necklace of gut and about five yards of line. The wretched fisherman noted the fish's bright, barred sides as he slipped out of sight, and, peering downwards, groaned distractedly. "Well, of all the rotten bits of luck, Bill! I've lost a mackerel."

THE youth from Oxford had never heard of the capacity of brewers' draymen for beer, and when one of them lowered a quart without an effort, he began to ask questions.

"Some days," said the man, "we drinks twelve or thirteen pints. Some days we has a lot."

"WILLIAM," cried an astonished lady, "what on earth are you doing standing before the looking-glass making those dreadful faces!"

"Well, the fact is, my dear," replied her husband. "I am to receive a presentation at our club meeting to-night, and as I am not supposed to know anything about it, I'm practising a look of intense surprise!"

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

AFTER waiting for more than three weeks, the many thousand enthusiastic supporters of Tottenham Hotspur are at length able to rejoice in a victory, the match with Sheffield Wednesday last Saturday ending in favour of the North London club by 3 goals to 0. Three games out of four having been lost and the other drawn, the position of Tottenham threatened to become somewhat desperate and two alterations—one necessitating the exclusion of Morris, the sole survivor of the eleven who won the Association Cup—were made in the constitution of the eleven. Hotspur had the good fortune to score in the first minute of the game and, although waiting a long time before any further success attended their efforts, they won handsomely in the end. Too much importance must not be attached to the victory, seeing that Sheffield Wednesday had previously met with three defeats on their own ground, but still the performance—temporarily at any rate—puts an end to the anxieties caused by the early failures. Curiously enough, on the same afternoon, Woolwich Arsenal also broke the spell of misfortune which had so far dogged their footsteps, but the satisfaction at the Plumstead men's first win was somewhat damped by the fact that the points had been gained at the expense of another London club—Chelsea, who are now not much better off than Tottenham or the Arsenal.

A much more remarkable achievement than that of either Hotspur or the Arsenal was that of Notts County, who, also until Saturday without a win to their credit. They succeeded in overcoming no less formidable a combination than Manchester United. As a consequence of this match at Trent Bridge Sheffield United are now the only First League club without a defeat on record against them. Everton, by beating Sheffield Wednesday last Monday, had placed themselves at the head of the competition, and they strengthened their position to a pronounced degree yesterday by defeating Newcastle United at St. James's Park, taking at the same time their revenge for the one reverse they have sustained this season. In addition to Everton, three other clubs won away from home, Bristol City just pulling through at Bury, Bolton Wanderers gaining an unexpected victory at Middlesbrough, and Sunderland enjoying quite a triumph at the expense of Liverpool, who, since their defeat at Stamford Bridge on the first Saturday of the month, had won three games in succession.

Swindon suffered their first defeat in the Southern League on Saturday, Leyton distinguishing themselves by being the one visiting team to win. As Queen's Park Rangers could only divide the points with Southampton at Park Royal, New Brompton, who just beat Millwall, go, thanks to their goal average, to the head of the competition. Two of the newest clubs in the League suffered very heavy defeats, Croydon Common going down at Northampton by 10—0 and Southend United having 6—0 scored against them at the Crystal Palace. As the outcome of the work on four Saturday's and a good many mid-week matches, New Brompton, Brighton and Hove Albion, Queen's Park Rangers, and Leyton all have 10 points. The fight for the championship is evidently going to be exceptionally keen.

On various occasions the Bohemians have given proof of possessing skill far beyond the average of foreigners. Their victory over Southampton established a record, and they have since then beaten Middlesbrough and met the full strength of England, under the auspices of both Associations. On their own grounds they have invariably played well, and established such a reputation that their visit to play a series of matches with some of our best amateur sides aroused more interest perhaps than any tour of a similar kind has done before. Only disappointment, therefore, can be felt at their severe defeat at Ipswich on Saturday. A score of 10 goals to 1 perhaps does them some injustice. At times the game went evenly and the score was one all midway through the first half; but even when holding their own the Bohemians did not look the equals of their opponents, and subsequently, with the English forwards carrying all before them, their limitations became very pronounced. The halves and backs met the ball well, but wanted practice against fast, clever forwards, capable of dribbling, passing and shooting when going at full speed. The pace and cleverness of the Englishmen beat robust and plucky rivals, who played the game in whole-hearted fashion.

S. H. Day has gone into football with the same remarkable success that attend him at cricket. He scored five goals, and by his perfect passing and knowledge of what to do made his forwards a tremendous attacking force. He received most help from H. G. Bache, the Cambridge centre, and H. G. Yates. Very skilful in dribbling and passing Bache proved himself a most worthy colleague for Day. They had a thorough understanding and the Bohemian defence looked helpless in the attempts to check the rapid passing runs. The English halves and backs played their part well, J. D. Barnsdale, of Nottingham, giving a particularly sound display at centre half.

LEAGUE—DIVISION I.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL vs. CHELSEA.—The success of Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead on Saturday in beating Chelsea by three goals to two was largely due to the aptitude of their young forwards—Lee, Lewis, and Greenaway—to seize upon chances and make the most use of them. The attendance numbered 20,000 but it would undoubtedly have been larger had the rain not fallen in torrents before the opening of the game. The deluge had the effect of soaking the surface of the turf, and the players could not get an adequate foothold. As a result little good football was forthcoming at any part of the game. Chelsea had Ormiston, Wileman, Fairgray, and Jones in the places of Burnie, Humphreys, Holden, and Husdon; and for the Arsenal, Neave, Satterthwaite, Lee, Dick, and Gray appeared, vice Heppenstall, Lawrence, Beney, Ducat (injured) and Shaw. The opening half was all in favour of Chelsea, but the game was seventeen minutes old before they got a rather lucky goal. Fairgray shot, but the ball appeared to be going behind when Cross deflected it through his own goal. Jones and Windridge both shot well without any luck, and just on the interval Lee broke through the Chelsea defence and equalised. The Arsenal resumed with great dash. Once Whitley appeared to have carried the ball over the line, but the referee ignored an appeal for a goal, and at the end of eight minutes Lee scored, following a miskick by Ormiston. Two minutes later Greenaway ran down the right and scored a third goal. Play was a mere scramble for a time, but twenty minutes from the end Wileman got a clever goal. He had another chance later, but failed, and once Brawn ran right into the goal mouth, but hesitated, and Gray got the ball away. It was Chelsea's last chance, and near the end Lewis hit the upright with a good shot. Woolwich Arsenal, 3; Chelsea, 2.

TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR vs. SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY.—After a very fast and exciting game Tottenham Hotspur won their first victory in the First Division of the League by beating Sheffield Wednesday by 3 to 0. The result is rather flattering to the Tottenham men, for there was little between the sides on actual play, and Sheffield were certainly more often attacking than the Hotspurs. To the greater steadiness of the Tottenham defence the result is largely due. Slavin and Layton, the Sheffield backs, made many mistakes, and although Davison kept a good goal he had no chance of saving any of the three shots. On the other hand Coquet and Wilkes both made blunders, but one or other of them always covered his partner. There were changes in both sides, Wilson at centre forward, Taylor at left half, and Slavin at left back, replacing Bradshaw, Bartlett and Holbein respectively in the Sheffield team. In the Hotspurs, Macfarlane filled the veteran Morris's position at right half, and Lyle played at centre forward instead of the West Indian Tull. In spite of the showery, dull weather there were fully 25,000 people present. There was an extraordinary opening of the game, D. Steel scoring for Tottenham in less than a quarter of a minute from a pass by Curtis. Subsequently, both goals had narrow escapes and Boreham made some wonderful saves for the Hotspurs. The Sheffield defenders used their weight to marked effect, and Lyle early on was so hurt that he was a passenger for the rest of the game. The best play was seen in the second half, when the Sheffield men were the more frequently attacking, but Coquet and Wilkes at back Steel at half, and Boreham in goal defended splendidly. Half way through Minter scored with a long shot, and in the last minute Curtis got a third goal from a fine pass by Minter who drew the defence. Tottenham Hotspurs, 3; Sheffield Wednesday, 0.

*Sheffield United, 3; Blackburn Rovers, 0.
*Preston North End, 2; Bradford City, 2.
*Aston Villa, 0; Notts Forest, 0.

THE LEAGUE.—DIVISION II.

FULHAM vs. WEST BROMWICH.—The 25,000 spectators at Fulham were doomed to bitter disappointment in the defeat of the home club by two goals to none. Fulham relied on the team that drew at Birmingham, whereas the Albion introduced the veteran Pheasant at centre-half instead of Harrie. Neither side was well together in the early stages, and in the first five minutes Bettelley twice nearly let the Albion down by miskicking towards his own goal. Thereafter, however, he played a fine game, and the visitors were the cooler and more resourceful team. After twenty-five minutes, however, Brown netted for Fulham as the outcome of a corner, and the crowd was very angry when the referee ruled him off-side. There was no scoring in the first half and subsequently the ground was slippery owing to a heavy rainfall during the interval. Fulham forced three unproductive corners, but their spirited attack was not well maintained, for they fell away as West Bromwich improved. The latter scored their opening goal through Thompson, as the result of a free kick against Collins, and many of the Fulham players urged that the whistle should have been blown previously owing to Collins being hurt. The Albion's second goal, however, was brilliantly shot by Buck from a pass by Garratty, and on the general run of the play the visitors deserved to win. West Bromwich Albion, 2; Fulham, 0.

*Wolverhampton Wanderers, 2; Stockport County, 1.
*Leicester Fosse, 4; Clapton Orient, 0.
Derby County, 4; *Gainsborough Trinity, 2.
Hull City, 3; *Grimsby Town, 2.
*Burnley, 2; Birmingham, 0.
*Blackpool, 0; Manchester City, 0.
Glossop, 2; *Leeds City, 1.
*Barnsley, 2; Oldham Athletic, 1.
*Bradford, 4; Lincoln City, 0.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE

CRYSTAL PALACE vs. SOUTHEND.—The Palace put up their best performance of the season at Sydenham on Saturday when they decisively beat Southend by 6 goals to 0. This score in no way flatters them, for Southend were never dangerous, and the game was almost confined to struggles between the home forwards and the visiting defence. The Palace's experiment of playing Woodger at inside right was a great success, for rarely has Garrett, the outside man, played a better game for his side. He repeatedly made brilliant runs and accurate centres, and his clever work led up to the outstanding success of Williams, the centre-forward, who scored five of the goals obtained by his side. All of these points came directly from Garrett, and Williams's feat was gratifying to his club, for he had not previously done anything of note. The display of Southend was very disappointing, and the poor work of the half-backs made the play of the Palace forwards look perhaps better than it was. Neither of the backs or the goalkeeper showed much soundness, and the forwards, with one exception, played without the slightest dash. Seven thousand people watched the match, which was

A Second Life

"If I only had another chance!"

How often does a man utter these despairing words when he feels his health undermined, his strength ebbing, his vital forces depressed—often as the result of his own errors or follies—and he realises the infinite possibilities which might lie in his grasp could he indeed receive, in Shakespeare's phrase, "A Second Life."

Happily, this other chance, this second life, is to be had for the asking by means of that which has been aptly described by a famous physician as "the last word science has spoken" on the subject of such remedial agents and to which, by virtue of its health-giving properties, the name of Sanatogen—meaning "The Health Producer"—has been given.

So potent is its force that it will not only restore the health and vitality which have been lost, but, if persevered in, will, in addition, impart the highest measure of nervous and physical vigour of which the individual is capable; for there is a maximum capacity of health for everyone, although he may not hitherto have had the fact impressed upon him. Doctors endorse this and daily prescribe Sanatogen in increasing quantities.

The constituents which give Sanatogen its power are known to every physician. What they are is described below in the plainest terms in the telling analysis of Sir Charles A. Cameron, the Chief Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst for Dublin.

Medical testimony of its value can be read in the statements of Dr. C. W. Saleeby and Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical authors. Over twenty five thousand doctors prescribe Sanatogen in their daily practice, while some ten thousand physicians have testified to its merits as A Revitalising Force.

In Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever and other wasting diseases incidental to life in India it acts "like a miracle," to quote the words of a physician who has used it largely. It reconstitutes the blood, rebuilds the body, reinvigorates the health, reinforces the strength, restores the vitality, revivifies the waning powers and revitalises the nervous system, until the patient is as well as he was before his illness, while it safeguards him from further attacks.

The typical letters of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., and Miss Ellaline Terriss are selected from hundreds of communications of famous men and women who have of their own free will written of the debt they owe Sanatogen.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Medical Opinion

DR. C. W. SALEEBY, the well-known medical author:
"13, Greville Place, London, N.W.

"Sanatogen is a specially adapted food that has solved the problem of giving phosphorus in such a way that the nervous system can take hold of it. I would specially refer to its value in the feeding of invalids, whether during actual illness or during convalescence, and for nursing mothers."

C. W. Saleeby

DR. ANDREW WILSON, the distinguished scientist:
"110, Gilmore Place, Edinburgh.

"I have found the ideal tonic and restorative in Sanatogen. Recovering from influenza, and suffering from severe weakness, I gave Sanatogen a fair trial, and without the use of any other medicine or preparation I was restored to health."

Andrew Wilson

A Telling Analysis

SIR CHARLES A. CAMERON, C.B., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst, Dublin, etc.

"On analysis it proved to be composed of 9.5% moisture, and 90.5% of dry matter, including 7.37% of ash. It contained 83.13% of Albuminoids (nearly wholly made up of casein, but including a little Albumin), together with 2.2% of phosphoric acid, a small portion of which existed in the albuminoids, but by far the larger portion was in the form of Sodium glycero-phosphate.

"It is this organic phosphorus which, in my opinion, makes the substance of such value as a metabolic stimulant, and the means of increasing the amount of nitrogen assimilated in the food.

"I have arrived at the conclusion that Sanatogen is a substance of the highest nutritive value, containing as it does a large amount, relatively speaking, of organic phosphorus—that is, phosphorus which is offered to the tissues in exactly the form in which it can be easily absorbed. It is an excellent nerve food."

WEST HAM vs. WATFORD.—In spite of threatening weather, 7,000 spectators saw West Ham beat Watford 2—0 at Upton Park. Rain fell heavily during the closing period, when the players slackened off somewhat, but on the whole it was the best display West Ham have given so far this season. The locals' attacking line was led by the amateur G. W. Webb, instead of Haynes, and there was no question that his inclusion had a marked effect on the play of the other forwards. Watford rearranged their team at the last moment. They had Maclaine inside-right, Skinner right-half, Fife left-half, and Squires inside-left. Their half-backs were weak all through. West Ham opened strongly and Biggar made fine saves from Blackburn, Shea, and Webb. The Watford goalkeeper was beaten fifteen minutes from the start by Shea and the inside-right was chiefly indebted to Webb, who made the opening and gave a short square pass. Playing well together, West Ham had much the better of the game till the change of ends and at one period Biggar, the opposing goalkeeper, gave a very fine display. Soon after the interval he was beaten again by a long rising shot from Randall, the left-half. It found the corner of the net. Kitchen had little to do during the closing period, but he once dropped a wet, heavy ball near the end. Luckily it did not cross the line. West Ham, 2; Watford, 0.

QUEEN'S PARK RANGERS vs. SOUTHAMPTON.—Playing at home before 13,000 people, Queen's Park Rangers shared two goals with Southampton after a really capital game. Both teams were practically at full strength, and despite the terrible weather—driving showers of rain fell at frequent intervals—the game was bright and fast from start to finish. At the opening the Rangers went away at a rare pace, and twice Barnes was in a favourable position, but he preferred to pass the ball instead of shooting. Travers, too, might have scored, but he later made amends with a left-footed shot that tested Burrows severely. At the other end MacGibbon was dangerous on several occasions, but nothing tangible resulted until Whyman broke down through a collision with one of the Southampton halves. He left the field for a time, and although he returned he was little more than a passenger for the rest of the game. This mishap upset the combination of the home team, and a noticeable weakening in the defence was also seen. Macdonald badly miskicked just before the interval, and McGibbon snapping up the chance scored with a fine high drive, and the visitors crossed over with the lead of one goal to nothing. As in the opening half, the Rangers went off with a rush, and Steer, working his way through the opposing backs with rare skill, equalled with a short range shot. After this the Rangers played a really great game for a time, but Burrows kept a magnificent goal, and all their well-meant efforts came to nothing. Once Travers got right through the opposing defence, but when within range he shot weakly, and the ball went behind. Southampton did a trifle better, and McGibbon required careful watching. Towards the end of the game the Rangers made desperate efforts to take the lead, and shot after shot was rained on Burrows, only to be saved in splendid fashion, and a strenuous game ended in a draw. RUGBY RULES.

LONDON WELSH vs. CATFORD BRIDGE.—There was plenty of excitement and some really good football display by both sides in the game between the London Welsh and Catford Bridge on the former's ground at Wandsworth Common. Catford started quite sensationally and after a scrum in the Welsh "25" following the kick-off, they twice in quick succession were within an ace of scoring. Once it was due to Maddocks holding on to the ball too long and on the other occasion Morgan fumbled a return. It was not until towards the interval that the Welsh got into their stride, but Catford defended well and nothing was scored when the whistle blew for change of ends. On the resumption, the Welsh opened the attack and from a neat pass from Lloyd Maddocks scored their first try, which, however, S. Evans failed to convert. Then came the Catford try which was the most exciting of the match. It was directly due to a magnificent bit of play by Alexander, who, kicking across the field after a good run, gave Larmour the chance he was not long in turning to good account. He got over in a good position and Lindow easily converted. Shortly before time the Welsh got going again and from a free kick, which dropped over the line, Evans rushed up and scored, and a few minutes later Maddocks got over after a characteristically clever run. Neither tries, however, were improved upon. London Welsh, 3 tries; Catford Bridge, 1 goal.

LONDON IRISH vs. OLD BLUES.—At Catford in showery weather, the London Irish could not turn out their best side and were, consequently, well beaten by the Old Blues. The latter were superior in all parts of the game and lost no time in scoring a couple of tries. Savory was the first to get over as the result of a scramble near the Irish line. Then Kraus seized a similar opportunity to add a second try. McKenzie was unable to convert either of these, although with his second shot he hit the post from a wide angle. So the visitors led at half-time by two tries to nothing. Soon after the restart another of the three-quarters, Mansfield, finished up a splendid run by securing a third try, and this was easily improved by McKenzie. No more scoring occurred until just towards the close, when Kraus added the final try for McKenzie to again add the extra points. Old Blues, 2 goals 2 tries; London Irish, 0.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. ROYAL NAVY (CHATHAM).—The treacherous weather interfered considerably with this game at Richmond, but the attendance was well maintained. The Navy were a side of hard workers and they prevented the Scottish developing anything like a good showy game. The home team was a fairly strong one, but they were a long time getting into anything like a stride. Midway through Walter made the way easy for Scott, who scored the first try, and before the interval Walter ran in himself and Kennedy added the extra points, the Scots leading 8 points to nil at the interval. On crossing over play was scrambling and scrappy for some time, and then Lieutenant Egerton rather luckily got a pass that enabled him to run in for the Navy. No goal resulted, but from thence onward the Scots were always threatening. Walter sent Scott in with another try, and later, after a clever run, ran in himself. Neither try was converted and the Scots won easily by 14 points to 3. Scottish, 1 goal 3 tries; Royal Navy, 1 try.

BLACKHEATH vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—The opening game of the season at Blackheath was completely spoilt by the weather. The ground was very soft at the start, in consequence of previous rain, and heavy showers during the game added to the discomfort. The turf was so slippery that it was almost impossible to retain a footing and the ball soon became so greasy that passing was a complete failure. Blackheath were without Wright, but they had Coverdale and Nicholas, and Rosslyn Park, their opponents, were well represented. The visitors were the first to score, Adams placing a goal from a penalty, but then Blackheath took command, and at the interval had established a lead of eleven points to three. Coverdale was the first to score for them, running in with a clever try, which was not improved. Then Hemsley scored after a forward rush, and Stone improved, and Twining added an unconverted try. In the second half the visitors soon obtained the lead, tries by Moore and Macpherson being converted by Adams, who himself gained another try and gave Rosslyn Park a lead of five points. A couple of minutes before time, when the game was near the Park line, Coverdale gained another good try, and, Stone improving, the scores were level and the game ended in a draw of 16 points each. Blackheath, 2 goals 2 tries; Rosslyn Park, 3 goals (1 penalty 1 try.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. THE HARLEQUINS.—This was a keenly-contested and sporting game at Richmond, and the Harlequins won because of the excellence of their backs. The Taylors had much the better forwards, and until an accident to Geary compelled them to take a man from their pack to make up their three-quarter line, they more than held their opponents. Birkett and Wallace had each scored an unconverted try for their sides, when Geary was injured, and then during his absence Palmer, Poulton and Lambert ran in with further tries for the Harlequins, and as two of them were converted the Taylors had a strong lead at half-time. After the interval Geary returned and the Taylors played up very strongly, but though O'Callaghan ran in twice for them and Wallace gained another try for them, they could not recover their lost ground, for Palmer and Lambert added further tries for the Harlequins, and so the Harlequins won by 22 points to 14. Harlequins, 2 goals 4 tries; O. M. T., 1 goal 3 tries.

ATHLETICS.

THE CLOSE OF THE SEASON.—With the London Athletic Club's autumn meeting at Stamford Bridge Grounds last Saturday the athletic season, in so far as open flat racing is concerned, was brought to a close. As usual the executive provided an interesting programme, but, owing probably to the wretched weather which prevailed, only about a thousand spectators were present. In addition to the ordinary running and walking handicaps, a 300 yards level race and hop, step, and jump and running long jump contests were included. The level race produced a splendid finish, E. W. Haley, of the Herne Hill Harriers, securing the verdict on a rather heavy track by half a yard from the ex-quarter mile champion, E. H. Montague, in 31-3/5secs.—only 1/5secs. outside amateur record. For the two miles walking handicap a special prize was put up for the competitor showing the best style. Twenty-five of the twenty-eight entrants started, including the champion, E. J. Webb, who was placed twenty-five yards behind scratch. Webb walked well, but could only finish seventh, completing the two miles and twenty-five yards in 14mins. 16-1/5secs. The style shown by the majority was scarcely of a high order. Indeed, with the exception of the champion and W. H. F. Martin, the mode of progression as a whole was poor. After some little consultation, the judges awarded the trophy to Martin, who finished third about twenty yards behind the winner, A. E. Evans. The points for the club championship cup, to be won outright by the member scoring the greatest number of points at club meetings during the year, resulted as follows: R. F. C. Yorke, 27 points; F. A. Knott, 21; W. H. Gunton, 20. Details.

100 Yards Handicap (Open).—Final Heat: W. H. Bowey, St. Saviour's A. C., 7½ yards start, 1; J. W. Noble, Gainsford A.C., 6, 2; J. G. Brooks, L.A.C., 4½, 3. Won by a yard; half a yard between second and third. Time, 10-1/5secs.

One Mile Challenge Cup Race.—R. F. C. Yorke, 1; F. A. Knott (holder), 2; E. F. Judson, 0. Knott went off with the lead and held it for 400 yards, when Judson led to the bell. Here Knott quickened up, but half way round the last lap Yorke made a splendid effort and won by fifteen yards. Judson did not finish. Time, 4mins. 28-1/5secs.

300 Yards Scratch Race.—E. W. Haley, H.H.H., 1; E. H. Montague, L.A.C., 2; W. H. Gunton, L.A.C., 3. Haley was soon in front and, running in great style, won by a yard; similar distance separated second and third. Time, 31-3/5secs.

Half Mile Bicycle Handicap (Open).—Final heat: T. W. Evans, Polytechnic C.C., 65 yards start, 1; T. G. Lance, Polytechnic C.C., 75, 2; E. J. Rolfe, Oval C.C., 80, 3. Won after a capital race by two lengths, half length separated second and third. Time, 66-3/5secs.

Three Miles Inter-Club Race.—A. E. Wood, Essex Beagles, 1; A. Ashby, Birchfield H., 2; D. F. McNicol, Polytechnic H., 3. Club placings: Essex Beagles, 12 points, 1; Birchfield H., 13, 2; Polytechnic H., 27, 3; Ranelagh H., 31, 4; Thrapston C. and A.C., 34, 5. Furbank went away with the lead and retained it for half a mile, but Martin of the H.H.H. led at a mile with Long of the Polytechnic H. At two miles McNicol of the Polytechnic H. was in front, but a lap later Wood of the Essex Beagles came up with a fine burst of speed, which soon spread-eagled the field, and, having matters all his own way for the remainder of the journey, won easily by 80 yards. A splendid race down the finishing straight for second place resulted in A. Ashby, Birchfield H., defeating D. F. McNicol, Polytechnic H., by inches. Time, 14mins. 56-4/5secs.

Long Jump (Open).—J. S. Archdeacon, Irish A.C., 21 feet 5½ inches, 1; C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., 21 feet 5 inches, 2; M. D. Dineen, Highgate H., 20 feet 11½ inches 3.

220 Yards Handicap (Open).—Final heat: H. Nor[illegible], S.L.H., 16, A. N. Walton, Herne Hill H., 15, 2; D. W. Gardner, Cambridge H., 14½, 3. Won by two yards, with a yard dividing second and third. Time, 22-1/5secs.

Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.:
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

GOLF.

Royal and Ancient Club.—The autumn meeting of the Royal and Ancient Club on the old course at St. Andrews yesterday attracted a large and representative field of players. The competitors included Mr. Robert Maxwell, the present holder of the championship, as well as six past winners of the championship—Mr. Horace G. Hutchinson, Mr. Leslie Balfour-Melville, Mr. J. E. Laidlay, Mr. John Ball, Mr. Charles Hutchings, and Mr. A. G. Barry. It was Mr. John Ball's first appearance in one of the premier club's competitions, but the famous Royal Liverpool player hardly showed his usual form at the last nine holes, for which he required 43, and so had a card of 82. M. Francis de Bellet, the French amateur champion, was another noteworthy competitor.

As usual, the proceedings opened with the ceremony of the new captain—Lord Kinross—playing himself into office. At nine o'clock the gun was fired, and Lord Kinross drove the first ball in the eighteen holes competition for the medal presented by King William IV. This trophy was won by the Hon'ble R. Bethell with a fine score of 76.

Mr. Bethell was among the last players to go out. He played steady golf on the outward journey, but his score of 39 for the first nine holes did not suggest the possibility of his displacing the leaders, Mr. Robert Maxwell and Mr. J. L Low, who had each recorded 78 On the homeward journey, however, Mr. Bethell did not make a mistake, and, completing the inward half of the round in 37, his total of 76 left him an easy winner. The details of his round were:

Out 544455435—39. Home: 334554454—37. Total 76.

Mr. Maxwell played a very steady round of 78, displacing Mr. C. A. Palmer, who had recorded 79, from the leading place, which he had held during the greater part of the day. The champion went out in 39 and returned in a like figure The feature of the game of Mr. Low, who tried for second place, was the excellence of his putting.

Mr. Horace G. Hutchinson, the retiring captain, also showed good form. He went round in 80. His partner, Lord Kinross, the new captain, took 90.

Mr. Edward Blackwell, who secured the trophy last year after a tie with Mr. Leslie Balfour-Melville, made a bad start by taking 5 and 6 respectively for the first two holes. He continued to steer a somewhat erratic course, and was off his short game. The consequence was that he required 86 for the round.

Captain C. K. Hutchinson, the runner-up in the last amateur championship looked like doing well at the start. He was out in 41, and played steady golf up to the seventeenth hole. Here, however, he was bunkered from his tee shot. He subsequently pitched too strong, got on the road, and required two more strokes to get back to the green. The hole cost him 8, and his total for the round was 84.

The play of Mr. John Ball naturally attracted a good deal of attention. He was partnered with Mr. A. G. Barry, the champion of 1905, and Mr. Ball made a brilliant start by doing the first three holes in 4 strokes each. He did the next three holes in 5 each and reached the turn in 39. Coming home Mr. Ball was trapped in the "hell" bunker at the "long hole" and he got on the railway at the dyke. These mistakes cost him 6 and 5 respectively, and he took another 6 at the road hole.

Hon. R. Bethell	...	76
Mr. John L. Low	...	78
Mr. Robert Maxwell	...	78
Mr. C. A. Palmer	...	79
Mr. James A. Shaw	...	79

BILLIARDS.

H. W. Stevenson vs. A. E. Williams.—Messrs. Burroughs and Watts opened their newly decorated saloon at Soho-square for the first time this season last Monday, when these players commenced a game of 18,000 up under Billiard Control Club rules. Throughout the week Williams, who is in receipt of a start of 7,000 points, has had all the better of the exchanges for when a resumpton was made yesterday he led by 5,716. During the afternoon the display given was of an even character. Williams scored 459 and Stevenson 556. The chief breaks were 201, 95, 72, and 105 by Stevenson, and 92, 133, 71, and 76 unfinished by Williams. At the adjournment the scores were called:

Williams (in play)	...	12,042
Stevenson	...	6,425

At night Williams quickly reached his points and when play ceased at the half-way stage he led by 5,624 points. His best breaks were (76 full 154, 104, 48, and 40, Stevenson being responsible for 144, 104, and 56. The respective aggregates were. Williams 458, and Stevenson 451. The champion is now 2,124 behind his handicap points. Closing scores:

Williams (in play)	...	12,500
Stevenson	...	6,876

T. Reece vs. C. Harverson for £50.—The match of 15,000 up on even terms for £25 a-side, which these professionals have been contesting, ended at Thurston's last night in a runaway victory for Reece by no fewer than 5,262 points. During the day Harverson gave a most brilliant display, and altogether he aggregated 1,452 points against Reece's 1,249. His chief breaks were 177, 101, 145, 179, 134, 104, 218, 85, and 107, Reece being credited with 197, 172, 54, 92 (twice), 79, 258, and 126 unfinished. Final scores:

Reece	...	15,000

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 9th October.—Windy Gap 12 noon. A good deal of rain had fallen the night before and prospects of sport were more hopeful than Thursday, when there was no scent at all and consequently sport was nil. Saturday was a nice fine morning, but about 3 P.M. a perfect deluge of rain came down soaking us to the skin in a very few minutes. Chemmund was drawn blank, also Denny, but in a small shola lying below the Toda Mund hounds spoke to a line which they carried through the covert and on along the grass to just above the river where a brace of jacks were viewed, one turning back towards Denny, and the other with the pack in full cry in his wake, set his mask to the north and gave us a rattling good chiney. Keeping slightly to the right above the river, he ran at a great pace past the Plague Camp to Jack's Nest. From here he ran through Riverside into Tuvalkundi Mund Shola in which he beat hounds. Later on another jack was roused above the last named mund. At first he pointed for Lord Roberts' Shola, but doubled back through the shola and went away over the top of the hill and slipped down into a large shola on the other side near the river Then turning right handed along the bank of the river, led hounds to the head of the Pykara Falls and crossing the river he made for the Government Tea Estate. With a few couple of hounds close at him he raced up the path and found refuge in an earth in a nullah where he had to be left. The Master then drew by Mount Gordon Tea Estate homewards, but nothing more was done.

Monday, 11th October—Municipal Crossing 7 A.M. The morning was nice and fresh, there had been heavy rain the day before. Hounds opened on a line below New Covert and carried it to Brickkiln Crossing where they got on better terms with their jack and the pace improved. They hunted him over the top of Parlock and past Governor's Shola on to the Andy Road and continued the chase along it to just short of Gaylad where they swung off to the right across the bog and rose the hill above Dante's Spinney. Racing down the other side over the Parson's Valley Stream they ran back by Bilanjikod Mund over the Mekod Stream and put their jack to ground in Lebenrood Shola. There were so many jacks about that the pack was considerably split up. A long draw followed along the Dangar Ride, down the Yemakal Valley and round by Briar without finding again.

Pykara.

WITH THE POONA AND KIRKEE HOUNDS IN SEPTEMBER.

2nd September.—Met at 6th milestone, Nagar Road, at 6-30 A.M. The morning was hot and dry. Found a jackal amongst rocks half a mile to the east and ran past to near Wagholi Hill. Being pressed the jackal did not face the hill but turned right handed and ran a large ring through crops. Again travelling northwards he held the side of a long ravine which reaches nearly to Waldgoon on the Indrayain. The going now was rough for horses and hounds travelling fast killed after a 30 minutes' gallop. The brush was given to Mr. Hewlett. It was very bright and hot as we turned towards home. When nearing the Meet another jackal was viewed, but he soon took refuge in prickly pear and was there left.

5th September.—Kalas 6-15 A.M A nice gallop to the north and killed a jackal after 10 minutes. The brush was given to Mrs. Graham. Another found near Dighi crossed over to Bhosari side, but hounds travelling at a great pace soon ran him down in the open. Drawing towards home another jackal was viewed. Hounds were soon on his line and ran him fast towards Dighi and killed in a swamp near the village.

6th September.—Third milestone, Nagar Road, at 6-15 A.M. Drawing towards Stony Glen hounds went away on a jack's line, ran hard due north and killed a mile short of Lohagaon. Found in Yerrowda Nullah, ran to Kalas Lohagaon Nullah and left the jackal in thick cactus. Soon found another jackal and ran to Stony Glen through the northern end of the glen and away north, crossed Lohagaon Road and killed in the open country beyond.

9th September.—Met at 8th milestone, Nasik Road, at 6-30 A.M. Had a capital gallop of 18 minutes, fast, from the northern side of the Vale of Tears, passed north of Bhosari Village over the Nasik Road, left Dighi on our right hand, crossed the Alandi Road and killed half way up the northern face of the first Sister Hill. The brush was presented to Miss Nannie Forbes, the mask to Mr. Humfrey. Then had a nice run of 20 minutes with a deer. Ran a fox hard for a mile and a half when all trace of him mysteriously disappeared on a rocky knoll. It now began to rain heavily, but as the morning was consequently cool for hounds it was decided to draw again. With a much diminished field hounds drew the country towards the north and getting a smart jackal away from a nullah near the 10th milestone on the Nasik Road ran fast over good grass land, crossed the road to the east crossed undulating country consisting of stony hills and deep ravines in the direction of Alandi Village and running from scent to view killed in a ravine. The time was 14 minutes. Brush and mask were given to Mr. Enthoven.

12th September.—Eighth milestone, Bombay Road, at 6-45 A.M. Trotted to the ravines on the north and got away on the line of a jackal. Ran at a fair pace over grass land covered by dew towards the north-east, then turning more right handed had a check near a jowari khet, recovered the line on the right and ran to Bhosari, in the thick cactus around which village he was left. Drew back to the original line of nullahs and further north found a jackal in the middle of the high country. Ran at a great pace northwards, then towards the east, eventually southwards parallel to the Nasik Road. Left Bhosari wide on our left and entered the heavy cultivation at the northern end of the Vale of Tears. It was a fast gallop over a good line. About four and a half miles without a check in 22 minutes. From the cultivation hounds were called off to avoid damage although the jackal had been viewed two or three times in the khets.

16th September.—Met at the 6th milestone, Nasik Road, at 6-30 A.M A heavy dew covered the country as we moved off just before the sun appeared over the horizon. Although an early run and one of the best which we have had. The first draw that of the sugarcane khets near Bhosari was unproductive. Hounds were then trotted to the Kalas side of the country where numerous stony ravines rarely fail to hold. When north of Kalas near the Alandi Road hounds struck a line which turned out to be that of a very stout jackal. They ran northwards parallel to the road at a moderate pace for a mile, the jackal evidently having passed by a considerable time previously. Across ravines and through swamps hounds carried the line, doing excellent work. Passing to the left of Dighi hounds were travelling fast. Thus they crossed the good country to the Nasik Road. Over the road not far from the 10th milestone and away due west over the best of our country. Then turning right handed we had a pause of a few seconds in a jowari khet where the jackal had been headed by cultivators when endeavouring to leave it on the north side. Hounds quickly recovered the line and left the khet towards the west: on over grass country with here and there a heavy swamp to negotiate until the whole extent of the upland was traversed, then across the low country—not bad going to-day until opposite Chinchwad Station on the Bombay Road. Turning left handed towards wooded country near the road hounds threw up in a jowari khet eight miles in 32 minutes to this point. The jackal now beaten ran short but was forced out and killed in a neighbouring grove after 37½ minutes from the find. The brush was given to Major Woodhouse, the mask to Mr. Johnson, 26th Cavalry.

19th September.—Kalas 6-15 A.M. Drawing northwards towards Dighi a jackal was found and took hounds in a westerly direction across the Nasik Road 6½ miles out to the Vale of Tears. Here there was heavy cultivation which was avoided by keeping to the headlands. Hounds worked beautifully through the crops right round the vale at a good pace. At the southern end when almost clear of crops he turned northward, ran the entire length of the vale in this direction and was eventually run into in a deep ravine close to Bhosari on the south side after 37 minutes. The brush was given to Mr. Heugh Symons. Hounds were trotted round the village and on the north side got away on good terms with a jackal from a ravine. But the sun had dried the dew and over the high lands the scent was not good. Still hounds ran well at a fair pace holding a line almost dew west until midway between Chickli and Chinchwad, when getting a view they bowled him over in the open after 21½ minutes without a check. The brush was given to Miss Sloggett, the mask to the Master of the Peshawar Vale Hounds.

21st September.—The 4th milestone on the Nagar Road was the meet at 6-30 A.M. Stony Glen failed to hold. Near the Yerrowda Nullah, however, we found a travelling jackal. Ran him hard towards Kalas, crossed the Kalas-Lohagaon Road and nullah, ran over some high undulating country to the north and killed before reaching Dhonawri Rifle Butts.

23rd September.—Met at 8th milestone, Alandi Road, at 6-30 A.M. About a mile to the west of the road a jackal was found and took a line for the Sister Hills passing north of Dighi. Scent was indifferent and pace moderate. On reaching the high hill nearest to the road hounds soon gained the summit. Here scent seemed of the best; hounds were evidently on good terms with the quarry judging by the chorus which greeted us as we looked on from below. Coming down the south face of the hill very fast a few hounds jumped down a clear drop of some fifty feet sustaining but minor injuries. In the next valley the jackal was killed. Trotted back to country north of Dighi and were soon on the line of a jack. Scent was very poor over the dry uphands. At times it appeared as if the jackal was hopelessly lost, but with much perseverance hounds puzzled along over a large extent of country altogether ignoring several deer which got up close in front of them. Eventually we got to a thickly grassed and well wooded country near a well-known tank. Hounds pushed him hard through the long grass over ravines and boulders at length killing on the edge of the low country within a few fields of the Indrayani river. Very few remained to see the finish of this long hunt of 62 minutes' duration.

26th September.—Ninth milestone, Bombay Road, at 6-30 A.M. A fairly large field notwithstanding the distance to the Meet. Trotted to sugar khets near Chickli Village, drew several khets without finding. This was most disappointing. Did not persevere in the low country but ascended the ridge to the plateau to try our luck in more open country. Soon roused a solitary chinkara stag in long grass by a ravine and hounds ran him very merrily for 20 minutes at a fast pace. Then got a fox away from a kopje, but it was late and scent was poor. Ran him a mile to a khet and left him there.

30th September.—The country near the 6th milestone, Nasik Road, where we met at 6-15 A.M., was fairly swamped from the previous afternoon's heavy rain. We therefore trotted a few miles to the north of the Vale of Tears and drew without result until a couple of miles beyond Bhosari when a fox was viewed going northward. Selecting a very rough line of country he played with hounds for twenty minutes when he was given up.

3rd October.—Hounds were at the 8th milestone, Nasik Road, at 6 A.M, to finish the season. Mounting while still dark we moved along the old Bombay Road to the west and then drew the country to the north. At 7 o'clock hounds struck the line of a fox in long grass. Scent was very good and we had a capital fast gallop, the first 30 minutes being excellent. Then a check and again away for another 15 minutes when hounds were stopped as October mornings soon get bright and hot and we were a long way from home. This 45 minutes run was a fitting wind up to a good season.

The Hunt Point-to-Point Races were held on the morning of the 7th October, ten and a half miles out on the Nasik Road, when the Hon'ble Mr. Cameron, President of the Hunt Committee, entertained the members of the hunt to breakfast after the races.

SECUNDERABAD JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

Royal Fusiliers vs. Futteh Maidan.—The tournament commenced on the 11th instant when these teams played off their tie before a large gathering It was an interesting game, the Royal Fusiliers eventually winning by 5 goals to 4.

First Chukker.—Futteh Maidan had the best of the opening period and scored two goals.

Second Chukker.—Green got away and registered a third goal for Futteh Maidan. Then the Fusiliers took up the attack and after one attempt had been frustrated they scored their first goal.

Third Chukker.—Futteh Maidan pressed till, shortly before time, the Fusiliers rushed the ball down and Clarke hit a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play, Hamid scoring with a splendid hit from midfield The Fusiliers transferred operations and Clarke put through.

Fifth Chukker.—Futteh Maidan gave Annesley a busy time, but he cleared brilliantly and the ball was taken to the other end where Tilliard scored the equalising goal.

Sixth Chukker.—With the score four all excitement was intense Futteh Maidan rushed down but the hit fell short and the Fusiliers getting possession took the ball to the other end, hit a goal and kept their opponents out for the rest of the period, thus wining as stated. Teams:—

29th Lancers vs. Bleriots.—This game was also played on the 11th instant and was an uninteresting display. The Bleriots were a scratch team and were quite outplayed by their opponents. The Lancers opened their scoring in the first chukker, put on two goals in the second and one in the third. The fourth period saw them increase their score by three goals, two followed in the fifth, and two in the last chukker, making a total of 11 goals. The Bleriots did not score. Teams:—

WINCHESTER

.351 Caliber, High-Power Self-Loading Rifle

THERE is nothing to take your mind off the game if you shoot a Winchester Self-Loading Rifle. The recoil does the reloading for you, which places the complete control of the gun under the trigger finger. You can shoot six shots as fast as you can pull the trigger and without taking your eye off the sights. As this rifle is made with a detachable magazine, you can replace an exhausted one with a loaded one in a jiffy and continue shooting. No recoil-operated rifle but the Winchester offers this advantage. The .351 Caliber, High-Power Cartridge has great killing power, making it heavy enough for the largest game.

33RD CAVALRY vs. 13TH HUSSARS "B."—Played on the 13th instant the Cavalry winning by 9 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The 33rd attacked all through but only scored once, Beattie putting through.

Second Chukker.—Continuing the pressure the 33rd added two more goals to their score through Wise: they missed other chances and midfield play closed the period.

Third Chukker.—The Hussars were prominent for a spell but could not get through. Play returned to their own territory where they were penalised for hitting behind and the 33rd scored from the free hit.

Fourth Chukker.—Both teams attacked in turn. Then Wise got away and scored. The Hussars next showed up and Hinde hit a goal after a good run. An attempt by the Cavalry failed.

Fifth Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed all through. After one unsuccessful attempt Beattie scored and shortly after another goal was added to the Cavalry total.

Sixth Chukker.—A good run by Oakes was stopped and Collins getting possession scored with a remarkably long shot. The 33rd kept up the attack and obtained a free hit for a hit behind. Nothing resulted but before the close of the game Wise gave them another point, the final score reading.—33rd, 9 goals; 13th "B." 1 goal. Teams:—

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

KING'S OWN vs. ROYAL DRAGOONS.—The match between these teams, which had ended in a draw the previous Saturday, was replayed on the 11th instant and resulted in a win for the King's Own Regiment. Play was in midfield at the start. Then the Dragoons rushed down and Hughes brought off a fine save. The King's Own next attacked and Holmes opened the scoring. Moore almost equalised shortly after and up and down play followed. A corner to the Dragoons nearly let them in, but Hughes was not to be beaten and the game was transferred, a couple of unsuccessful runs by the King's Own bringing the period to a close. On resuming play was up and down. Fisher was called upon to save from Bishop and Cassidy and Hughes was also tested, but there was no scoring till a good run by the King's Own ended in Bishop netting the ball. Play ruled up and down, the King's Own having rather the better of the exchanges till the end of the game. They thus won by 2 goals to nil. Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Hughes, goal; Stokes and Walsh, backs; Carney, Golden and Brown, halves; Moss, Holmes, Asworth, Cassidy and Bishop, forwards.

1ST ROYAL DRAGOONS.—Fisher, goal; Seaton and Hollowell, backs; McDonnall, Boyles and Ashwood, halves; Hart, Waters, Moore, Jeffrey and Jarrett, forwards.

LEICESTERS vs. GLOUCESTERS.—The second match in the semi-finals was played on the 12th instant, the Leicesters winning as was expected. The Gloucesters attacked first and Harris shot wide; then the Leicesters pressed and were nearly through, Smith just managing to clear. Both goals were visited in turn, but wild shooting and hesitation in front of goal prevented any score till Shingler got possession and netted. The remaining play in the first half was well contested, but on changing ends the Leicesters had all the best of the game. They kept the Gloucesters penned in their own territory and scored four goals. The first was put through his own goal by one of the Gloucesters' backs, French scored the second, Barton the third, while the last was the result of a penalty kick of hands. Final score: Leicesters, 5 goals; Gloucesters, nil. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Owen, goal; Bayley and Faulks, backs; Cloiff, Wile and Whitmore, halves; Wardle, Butler, Barton, Shingler and French, forwards.

GLOUCETSERS:—Smith, goal; Ruck and Scaife, backs; Law, Cooper and Curtis, halves; Maton, Sharp, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

Final.

LEICESTERS vs. KING'S OWN REGIMENT.—These teams met in the final on the 14th instant before a large gathering of spectators. The Leicesters were the better team on the day's play and won by 5 goals to nil. The King's Own nevertheless played pluckily right up to the whistle. Up and down play at the start, the Leicesters gaining the first advantage—a corner—which was quickly followed by another; exciting play followed in front of the King's Own goal, but they managed to get the ball away and the Leicesters were next forced to concede a corner. This was not improved upon and once more the King's Own half was invaded. Hughes fell in saving a shot from Butler and Barton, who was handy, banged the ball into the net. The King's Own made great efforts to get on terms and the Leicesters were kept busy defending. They ultimately transferred operations and Wardle scored their second goal. The Leicesters obtained another corner before the interval but it was not converted. On changing ends the Leicesters kept up a regular bombardment of the King's Own goal and Hughes brought off some brilliant saves. Then the King's Own pressed but failed owing to poor shooting and the game was taken back to their half where Shingler scored. The same player sent in a shot shortly after which was cleared by Hughes, but he fell in saving and before he could recover himself Wardle had registered a fourth point. The Leicesters continued to press for the rest of the game, and though the King's Own played their best and Hughes did marvels in goal they were once more beaten, Butler scoring the fifth goal for the Leicesters, who thus won as stated. After the match Mrs. Beaman distributed the various cups and trophies for the Harwood League and Rovers, Tournaments and Justice Beaman made a short congratulatory speech in which he referred to the excellent work done by Messrs. Hogan and Watson in the carrying through of the Rovers' Tournament. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Owen, goal; Bayley and Foulkes, backs; Cloiff, Wile and Whitmore, halves; Wardle, Butler, Barton, Shingler and French, forwards.

KING'S OWN.—Hughes, goal; Stokes and Walsh, backs; Carney, Golden and Brown, halves; Moss, Holmes, Asworth, Cassidy and Bishop, forwards.

THE SIMLA DOG SHOW.

SOME REMARKS.

I VISITED the Simla Show of the 24th September last as a mere visitor, out of curiosity more than anything else, just to see what an Indian dog show was like. Finding myself there, I also found myself interested in the proceedings, and it is just possible that my impressions may interest some of the readers of the Indian Field in their turn. If I criticise it will be with due humility, I do not pose as an expert all-round judge, and the special breed which is my fancy was conspicuous by its absence at Simla. But having attended many dog shows in my day, I am accustomed to the sight of show dogs of many different breeds, and I think any extraordinary errors of judgment would strike me from the fact of my general familiarity with shows.

I never of course expected that the Simla Show would be of anything like the scope or proportions of a Kennel Club Show, or Crufts.' I imagined something of the nature of an English outdoor summer show, and by comparison with such shows Simla was by no means disappointing. The arrangements were excellent, the proceedings very prompt and business-like with an absence of fuss, and all attended with general good humour. The disappointed professional was not in evidence and was no loss. I was surprised to find that one judge was to judge the whole show, not that this is unknown in England with small summer shows and a professional on duty, but I did not know that any amateur was capable of the business. I did not always agree with the judge, but it struck me that he was a remarkably good all-round judge with a keen eye for form, and his rapidity and decision impressed me very favourably. Without being slack or careless in his examinations, he was very quick in making up his mind, a point which always give confidence to exhibitors, and he seemed to go for what he wanted by a very direct route. On the whole, I had considerable admiration for him, especially for the decisive and candid way in which he dictated his judging remarks to one who took down the notes for him.

With his views on the greyhound class I entirely agreed; he appeared to be a very competent judge of a hound. In the retriever class, which succeeded, I was unable to think out my own placings very clearly; the judge, and quite rightly, had them out of the circumscribed ring to see their action in movement, and the interested crowd often hid the dogs from view. But from what the judge was taking stock of, it struck me that he would not be far wrong. I was not prepared for such an excellent collection of cockers, a breed that appears to be popular in India. There was nothing in my opinion up to really high class English form, but the general merit of the best was remarkably good, and the few best were often so close that it was difficult to judge between them. The other spaniels were very poor as show specimens, and if the prize had been withheld no one could have grumbled. Apart from two very nice puppies, the dachshunds were nothing much. The two puppies attracted the judge's notice at once, for though they were full of quality they were really too young to show at all and it was difficult to say how they would mature. The judge was circumspectly paying attention to soundness and rejecting cripples, but the two puppies were sprawling in a way that it was impossible to say whether they were sound or not. The difficulty in comparing them with mature dogs was very great, and one which would not occur in England, where such young puppies would not be exhibited.

The fox-terriers were quite a warm lot, and the competition in the open smooth dog class was strongly contested. This class contained six excellent terriers, all fit to win at small shows in England. I personally placed the dog, selected by the judge, first, but I did not expect him to do so. In the company of showier rivals, the winner required some looking into to appreciate; he is a little dog, not without faults, but possessing some superlative good points which usually only a connoisseur would appraise at their worth. I thought he rightly won, though I should not have been surprised if he had lost. There were also four good bitches, and the judge's awards appeared to me to be correct. The wires were equally strong, better even in the winners than the smooths. One point about the wires, in fact about all the rough terriers, whether fox, Irish, Scottish, or Airedales, cannot fail to have struck an eye accustomed to English shows. They were shown so much more au naturelle. There were evidences of trimming, and not very expert trimming, about some of them; but in the mass they were exhibited far more naturally than would be the case in England. I don't think they lost much in consequence, in fact the untrimmed specimens presented a better appearance than those done up by "prentice" hands. In the open dogs, I saw Manton Matadore, a Home winner, but he was fairly beaten by a dog, Jo Hukm, a very high class terrier with some superlatively good points and very little wrong with him. He fully deserved all he won. The open bitches were a very good collection. It is possible I might have placed them a little differently, but this is not certain as I was not in the ring to handle them and the judge was. The same man has often one opinion as an onlooker and another as a judge. On the whole it struck me that the judge knew his business very well.

The Irish terriers were so inferior that it was impossible to take any interest in them, and in the open class the prize might very well have been withheld. The Scottish were better, but of all classes of rough terriers they were the most unkempt. It was not that they were not trimmed; they did not appear to have been ordinarily groomed. There were some useful little terriers among them, but nothing super-excellent. The Airedales were apparently a competition between two grown dogs of one kennel and some promising puppies of another. The winner in the open dogs is a fine upstanding Airedale, truly built and of good size. He won rightly enough in his class, but his skin and coat should have put him out of the running for the best dog in the show. In my opinion he was nowhere near this position and the puppies exhibited will beat him when they have matured.

I was disappointed with the bull-terriers, a breed I had always understood was very popular in India. Bull-terriers are, however, down in the world; it is rare to see a really neat animal, full of power yet built on quality lines. At Simla, the more active-looking dogs were anything but neat, and the most powerful were wanting in quality. The judging, however, appeared to me to be competent. The few bull-dogs were nothing much, and I preferred the bitch placed second to the winner. The bull puppies were too young for show judging.

The winners of the Pekinese, dogs and bitches, were undoubtedly correctly picked out, but I would not have attached the importance of the winning bitch, by her place in the specials that the judge did. The Lhassa terriers were a disappointment. I had heard that very good specimens were to be seen at Indian shows. The winner was said to have been brought down direct from Lhassa, but that does not necessarily mean that he is a good dog of the breed; many a bad Manchester terrier may come from Manchester and a bad Scottie from Aberdeen. At any rate we have far better Lhassas in England. In collies, the best dog won and was quite a good collie. The Japanese spaniel, the winner in the miscellaneous class, might have been more in evidence in the specials.

On the whole, the Show was quite a good one of the small kind, and compared more than favourably with shows of the same class elsewhere in all respects.

A WONDER-YEAR IN SCIENCE.

So far as it has yet gone—and at the time when this article was written it had still three months to run—the year 1909 bids fair to beat the record in the matter of wonderful discoveries and remarkable events in the realm of both natural and mechanical sciences. So numerous, indeed, are these events and discoveries, that it is difficult to forecast under what special designation the year will go down to posterity.

In mechanical science the year's claim to special distinction is, of course, the conquest of the air, and the rendering the long dream of aerial navigation a fait accompli. To many persons the crossing of the Channel by flight on 25th July will indeed remain the chief and most important event of 1909, as it is certainly the one most likely to exert a far-reaching, and at present unthinkable, influence on the world and the progress of humanity. The "flight-year" would therefore be a good title for 1909 to hand down to posterity.

On the other hand, it has an equal claim to be known as the "pole-year," as being the one in which information was received of both poles having been reached, although the actual discovery of the South Pole took place in the preceding year, and the same is alleged to have been the case with its antipodes. If Dr. Cook's claim to have reached the North Pole be substantiated, it will be a most remarkable coincidence that, after nearly three centuries of unsuccessful attempts, the conquest of the Arctic and of the Antarctic poles should have been accomplished in the self-same year. What, if any, practical results will accrue from this conquest of the poles (and that of the northern has yet to be definitely proved), we are not in a position to state; but whether they be great or whether they be nil, in no wise detracts from the greatness and heroism of the respective undertakings.

The foregoing events are solely due to human skill and perseverance; but the one we have now to record, to wit the arrival of Halley's comet, is under the immediate control of the Ruler of the Universe himself. Man has, however, played his part and played it, too, with little short of miraculous skill, in predicting almost to a day the date on which this wanderer from the infinite would first reappear within the limits of human ken. A nice little dispute is, indeed, likely to arise as to which country is to have the honour and glory of first recognising the wanderer. For it appears that the comet was actually first "spotted" in the sky by a German astronomer; but when his discovery was announced and attention directed to the particular region of the heavens where it had been seen, it was found that the little stranger was depicted in a photograph taken two nights previously at the Greenwich Observatory.

So far as we understand, Halley's comet will not become a conspicuous object in the heavens till well on in 1910, so that the latter year will have the chief claim to be known as the "comet-year," despite the fact that the wanderer first made its appearance in 1909.

Halley's comet has a history even more romantic than that of great comets in general, for it made its first recorded appearance in the year that William the Conqueror invaded England; and when first seen by his affrighted followers it was regarded as a portent sent from heaven to forbid the expedition. Rising, however, to the occasion, with all the promptitude of a born leader, the Conqueror at once claimed the comet as a messenger in his own favour, and went ahead and won.

From that time to this the comet has reappeared at intervals of something over seventy years, so that few of those who see it this time have ever beheld it before. Apparently, however, its brilliance will be far less than was the case some centuries ago, when it was reported to have turned night into day in England.

During the year, as previously related in the columns of this journal, we have celebrated the centenary of the birth of Darwin, who did for zoology and botany what Newton accomplished for astronomy.

In America the great scientific ceremonial of the year has been the Hudson-Fulton fete, organised for the purpose of perpetuating the memory of one of the most intrepid pioneers of Arctic exploration, and also of the man who introduced steam-vessels into the New World. To every Englishman worth his salt the name of Henry Hudson is, or should be, familiar; although it is probable that comparatively few persons are acquainted with the tragic fate of himself, his brother, and some half-dozen of their crew. When worn-out and enfeebled by disease the gallant explorer and his sick companions were set adrift in an open boat on the polar sea by the heartless crew in order to save the fast-failing stock of provisions on board, and were, of course, never heard of again, although mariners in the Arctic still, from time to time, report that they have caught a glimpse of Hudson and his phantom crew flashing by in the falling shades of the polar night. On the other hand, to English ears the name of Robert Fulton is practically unknown, although its owner was a man of great original and inventive power, who not only introduced steam-power into American waters, but went some way towards inventing the torpedo, and actually launched and manipulated a submarine, in which he is stated to have remained five hours under water, and returned to the surface in safety.

None of the discoveries and events alluded to above has any connection with the preservation and safeguarding of human life; it is, therefore, fitting that we should bring this article to a close by referring to an invention which will go a long way towards revolutionising medical and surgical treatment of the centre of the digestive organs. This invention takes the form of what is termed a gastroscope, or, in other words, an instrument by means of which a surgeon is enabled to inspect the interior of the stomach of his patient. To devise an instrument which should render it possible to inspect the interior of an absolutely dark chamber situated at the lower end of a long tortuous tube, was a task which might well appal the most ingenious of inventors; but, by the aid of an electric lamp and numerous mirrors, the feat has been successfully accomplished.

The instrument is described as consisting of a bent metal tube, which is passed through the mouth and gullet into the stomach. It contains an ingenious arrangement of mirrors and a small electric lamp, by means of which not only is the interior of the stomach illuminated, but a picture of its walls reflected up the tube to the eye of the observer, who looks through an eye-piece attached to the projecting end of the tube.

At present the instrument is generally used when the patient is under the influence of an anaesthetic; but it is hoped that it may eventually be found possible to employ it without any necessity for the use of chloroform. Already much good has resulted from the use of this marvellous instrument, which it is confidently hoped will prove of the highest value in cases of cancer of the stomach, and other diseases. Possibly other events and discoveries might claim a place in the present article, but those mentioned are amply sufficient to demonstrate that, so far as the natural and mechanical sciences are concerned, 1909 is undoubtedly entitled to rank as an annus mirabilis.

YOUTH TRIUMPHS.

The big tourney at Walton Heath under the auspices of the Professional Golfers Union marks the close of another golfing year in Great Britain, so far as the great tournaments are concerned and it has provided a new name for the trophy in Tom Ball of West Lancashire.

For years past we have been talking about the coming on of the younger school of professionals, and of the way they were challenging the great men of experience; but, for all their challenging, they never seemed to get any further. Three years ago in this same tournament, young Mayo got into the final, but Herd defeated him. Last year at Richmond, the most promising Robson reached the final stage, but he too was put out by an older man in Taylor.

Last year, also, in the open championship, Tom Ball was second to Braid. This year, at Deal, he was second again, and a very few bad shots by Taylor would have let him in. Several big foursomes have been played in which young players have opposed the older ones, but the latter have always won. Sooner or later, however, it was certain that the young ones would score, and during the last twelve months the golf world, after turning its fancy first to this one and then to that, settled it that the best of the young batch was this Tom Ball. Now he has won one of the two greatest professional events of the year, and he is the first young player to do so since the reign of the triumverate set in.

The tournament under notice provided several surprises the most sensational of the early stages being the defeats of the past and present champions J. Braid and J. H. Taylor. The first-named, who won the tournament when it was last held at Walton Heath and who naturally had a big advantage in that it was again played on his own course, started a warm favourite but was knocked out by Rowe, the Ashton Forest player, while Taylor was beaten by J. Hepburn (Home Park), after a keen struggle at the twentieth hole.

Rowe and Hepburn did not long survive Braid and Taylor for they were both beaten before the final which saw A. Herd opposing the young Lancastrian. The game aroused intense interest. The first ten holes were halved—an extraordinary performance, which has only once before occurred at the beginning of a first class match; that was when Willie Park and Harry Vardon divided the first ten holes at North Berwick ten years ago.

There was strong wind against the players, on the outward journey in the morning, and it increased in strength in the afternoon. Herd drove well, but neither his approaching nor putting was up to his usual standard. It was in these things that Ball excelled. His putting was splendid, and it was never more valuable to him than at the tenth hole in the afternoon, where Herd appeared certain to get back a hole after being five down. The former champion had laid his approach dead, and his opponent was bunkered from the tee, but Ball holed a long putt to halve in three.

Herd won only two holes during the whole of the day—the thirteenth and fourteenth in the afternoon. At the latter hole he seemed to be approaching his proper style, but it was too late to avert defeat. There was an interesting passage at the fourth hole in the first round. Ball pushed his drive out to the right and laid behind a hedge. Taking his brassy, he played a fairly long shot, but could not regain the course, and was in the bracken to the right. His approach left him still to the right of the green, but from there he pitched dead. Herd was on the edge of the green in three, but, running his putt five feet beyond the hole, he was left with a tricky downhill putt to halve. Herd sliced into the rough at the seventeenth, but made a fine shot out on to the green. The scores at the end of the first round were:—

Ball.—Out: 4,5,4,5,5,4 4,5 5 = 41
Home: 4,4,4,3,4 4,4,5,4 = 36—Total 77
Herd.—Out: 4,5,4,5,5,4,4,5,5=41
Home: 4,5,4,4 4,5,4,5,4 = 39—Total 80

On restarting Ball drew still further away from the Huddersfield man. A fine approach to the last green placed Ball about eight feet from the pin, Herd was again a bit short with his putt, and Ball, putting his down, secured the hole and the game by seven and five.

It was a great triumph for the young player—a triumph for grit and skill for he had ploughed his way to success through the ranks of golfers who had beaten Braid, Taylor and Vardon. Here alone was justification for his victory.

The winner was born at Hoylake in 1882, and is a younger brother of Sydney Ball, of Wrexham. In 1906 he finished fourteenth in the championship at Muirfield; in 1907 he was second to Massey at Hoylake, and as for the past two years he has, as already stated, been runner up to Braid and Taylor respectively in the classic event.

Alec Herd was born at St. Andrews in 1868, and was formerly professional at Portrush before becoming attached to the Huddersfield club. He was open champion in 1902, and has figured in all international matches against England and many big money matches during his career.

"I HOPE they don't give my little boy any naughty nicknames in school?"
"Yes, ma; they call me 'Corns.'"
"How dreadful! And why do they call you that?"
"'Cause in our class, you know, I'm always at the foot."

MRS. MURNFORD, was visited the other day by some ladies, on whom she particularly wished to make a favourable impression. "Do make yourselves at home," she cried. "I'm at home myself, and wish that you all were." First impressions were not favourable.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

With October nearly over one begins to feel the near approach of the racing season. The course will probably open on Monday next, the 1st proximo, and it will not be long after that date that matters will be in full swing and the training track once more a busy sight, of a morning. Wishart arrives with his string from Bangalore on Tuesday, and the majority of the Poona trainers will arrive in the course of the next fortnight. They will see things very much changed on the Calcutta course, and though perhaps not the most important, the most noticeable improvement will be in the white rails, and the large furlong posts which now make it look like a real modern race course instead of a neglected sort of maidan. The improvements that have been made in the course itself are, though not so showy, even more important, but the work has been by no means all done yet and Captain Hughes calculates that with hard work and the use of much energy it will take Mr. Lance, who is to have charge of these matters in future, a full five years before all the improvements that have been planned can be carried into effect. Mr. Hutchison, who arrives next week, will no doubt be very glad to find that the work has now been divided and that he is in future only to be responsible for the office and the stands, while the course work is left entirely in the hands of Mr. Lance. Even so we think that both these gentlemen will find themselves with as much on hand as they can possibly cope with, and we shall not be at all surprised to hear that it has been decided to give to each a capable European assistant.

The most pressing work which is now in hand is the re-marking of the Tollygunge Steeplechase Course, and Captain Hughes is staying on for another fortnight in order to get this as far forward as possible before he leaves, but at the most moderate computation it will be very nearly the end of November before it can possibly be finished. The surface of the course itself requires any amount of attention, the take off in front of each jump being incredibly bad and there are 14 jumps in all to be made entirely! No one who has not participated in such a job can have any idea of the amount of labour involved, and the making of each jump can safely be reckoned very nearly a three days' task. The obstacles are all to be of the pattern of the model, which was put up in the jumping school near the race course and which was described in these columns some months ago; that is to say they will be made of bundles of dhal sticks tightly packed in a wooden frame. In addition to the open ditch there will be two fences with guard rails, but the others will all be plain fences. Where there are no guard rails the frame work will be painted white to assist horses in taking off. The heights of the jumps will vary from 4 feet to about 4 feet 9 inches from take off levels, and they will be carefully measured and described instead as in former years varying from 1 to 2 feet from their theoretical dimensions.

We hear that Tom Macnamara has now received a license to train, and trust that he will soon be successful in getting together a stable.

We tender our heartiest congratulations to that well-known racing man Mr. "Cowper" on his recent marriage.

The stewards will have some difficulty in filling vacancies among their number this season. Both Messrs. P. J. West and A. G. H. Macpherson will be away all the cold weather, and though Mr. Garth is returning even if Mr. Kesteven remains as a Steward it will leave one vacancy. Among others we have heard Mr. Birkmyre's name mentioned as a possibility, and if he is invited and consents to act as a Steward we should think it should be a very good nomination, as Mr. Birkmyre is a good sportsman and is well-known to be both fearless and independent.

We hear that the number of bookmakers in the big enclosure is to be increased to fifteen. As we understand that Messrs. Atkinson and Company will not be making a book this season this will leave three vacancies, and among others applications have been received from Messrs. Ducasse, Simpson and Thomson, all three of whom were standing up during the last monsoons. We trust they will be successful in obtaining permission as they all proved themselves bookmakers of the right stamp in the Monsoon season just past. Their prices were as good as any ones, and better than most and they are always prepared to lay the odds shown on their boards to any reasonable figure.

A feature of the past week has been the number of race meetings held in India. Three days' racing at Darjeeling, two at Karachi, the final day at Poona, interesting sport at Bareilly, Bangalore, and Shillong are all dealt with in our Turf columns, together with reports of Rangoon Tenth Extra, and the first day of the Colombo October Meeting.

The report of the Ceylon Turf Club shows that the income for 1909 was Rs. 1,18,627 and expenditure Rs. 1,02,911. Amongst income items lotteries contributed Rs. 5,281, against Rs. 1,800 in 1908; pari-mutuel contributed Rs. 19,900, against Rs. 15,336 in 1908, and the totalizator Rs. 5,016, against Rs. 3,627 in 1908. Added money in 1909 was Rs. 57,615, against Rs. 46,174 in 1908.

The sabre-horned antelope, of which a specimen was recently received at the London Zoological Society's Gardens, is a North African species that has not been represented in the collection for some time. Some years ago it was usually included in the series of antelopes in the menagerie, but nowadays its range is more restricted, and specimens are not easily obtained. The present example comes from the Soudan. It is a pale-coloured antelope; its whitish fur is faintly tinged with red; its neck is rather darker than the body, and its white face is marked with brownish patches. Its slender, pointed, and recurvous horns are of enormous length, and in spite of their graceful proportions have an unwieldy appearance when compared with the straight ones of its congeners, the Beisa and the Beatrix antelopes, of which, unfortunately, there are now no specimens in the collection. But this antelope fights in a peculiar manner; instead of charging directly at its rival, it approaches cautiously, with its head down between its fore-legs. In this posture the horns are close to the ground, with their points directed upwards and forwards. The object of this manoeuvre is to get the points under the body of its opponent, when, suddenly jerking up its head, it can inflict a terrible wound. Eminently suited to internecine warfare, such weapons are not of much use in warding off the attack of a beast of prey, for the preliminary bending of the head places the antelope at a temporary disadvantage.

Spectacles for animals is the latest scientific fad. Soon we may expect to find at our Zoological Gardens Pickwickian tigers blandly beaming at us over the gold rims of real brazilian pebbles and owls blinking at us more wisely than ever through the latest form of pince-nez. We read that Mr. Lindsay Johnson, the well-known ophthalmic surgeon, of Cavendish Square, has completed an extraordinary series of experiments. He has examined the eyes of almost every animal in the London Zoo, besides a number of exhibits in travelling shows and the like, and now possesses over 400 drawings of animals' eyes, in addition to a large number of photographs. Altogether he has employed the opthalmoscope upon a thousand creatures of different species—lions, tigers, reptiles, cats, birds, and other members of the animal kingdom.

If it were necessary, we are told, Mr. Johnson could now furnish spectacles for every animal with defective sight at the Zoo. This has actually been done in the case of a raven, upon which an operation for cataract has been performed. Properly-adjusted lenses were made and fitted to the eyes by means of a kind of hood. The improvement in the raven's sight became obvious at once. Food mixed with sand was placed before it, and the bird began immediately to pick out the edible matter.

Mr. Johnson and his assistant have had several hairbreadth escapes, for in order to use the ophthalmoscope upon the animals and make drawings of the back of the eyes, it was necessary to approach within a few inches of the animals. One of their most thrilling and not unamusing experiences was met with in attempting to examine the eyes of a puma, the property of a travelling showman. The animal had been taught by its owner to box. In order to prevent it from using its claws a pair of boxing gloves were fastened round its fore paws. Naturally the animal associated the gloves with its performance, and when the artist put his head down to look at the puma's eyes, the patient vigorously hit out with its "right."

One of the most important aspects of Mr. Johnson's observations is the new light thrown upon theories of evolution. He has discovered that the back of the eye has a different appearance in each family of animals, and by means of this difference it is possible to classify them in a much more definite manner than has hitherto been possible.

Once only in the course of his investigations was Mr. Johnson obliged to resort to chloroform. This was in the case of a tiger-cat—a vicious brute which resisted every effort to approach him. The result of the administration of the chloroform, however, was disastrous, for the animal, which was valued at £60, died under its influence.

Retired Anglo-Indians have now a new source of income and means of employment offered them. The "Civilising" of monkeys—preferably the larger apes—ought not to come amiss to one who has put in many years in India, especially if his exile has been spent a good deal among our wild frontier tribes or the Educational department or Missionary work. We are told that in London monkey training is one of the most lucrative professions and may remain so until it is overcrowded. "Peter," that intelligent simian which recently appeared at the Palace Theatre, is now earning £300 a week in New York. He was trained by Mrs. Hamlyn, of St. George Street, in the East End of London, and is one of seventeen pupils educated by her who have

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

since got on in life. Seven of them are in receipt of salaries that a Cabinet Minister might envy.

"I do not call it training," said Mrs. Hamlyn to an Evening News representative recently, "but 'civilising.' My aim is not to produce a monkey which will perform tricks, but to make the monkey behave exactly like a well brought up child." As she spoke, Mrs. Hamlyn held in her arms a little chimpanzee about seventeen inches in length, which she acquired a week ago. It was dressed just like a human baby in jersey and vest and shoes and stockings.

"To teach a monkey stage tricks," said Mrs. Hamlyn, "after I have brought it up to behave like a child, is a very easy matter. It resembles teaching a human being.

"During the first forty-eight hours I get a complete mastery over the monkeys, and show them that I am to be trusted. The rest is comparatively easy, for like children, they are very anxious to do everything they see me do.

"One of them took to washing the stairs in my absence. Unfortunately, he got wet through, and soon after died of pneumonia.

"It takes me from three to five months to train them to behave in every respect like children. I have not yet sold one for less than £100."

Dr. T. Zell, a well-known German naturalist, has collected many instances to prove that animals learn by experience, and thus become wiser than their uninstructed parents. Game animals of all kinds, he avers, have learned the range of modern rifles. Greyhounds quickly learn to let rabbits alone, and foxhounds pay no attention to either rabbits or hares. Killer whales and gulls follow whaling vessels, just as vultures follow an army. Crows begin to accompany the chamois hunter as soon as they have seen the result of his first successful shot, and rough-legged buzzards follow the sportsmen after winged game. The number of birds that kill or injure themselves by flying against telegraph-wires is much smaller than it used to be.

A Cambridge crew has been experimenting in the Belgian style of rowing under a Belgian Coach. The idea has been to get a few wrinkles if possible, we understand it is not contemplated to adopt this style in the college races. The crew consisted of A. S. Lloyd (bow and steer), H. G. Palmer, F. E. Hellyer, and J. B. Rosher (stroke). The experiment originated, it is said, with Mr. D. C. R. Stuart, but Mr. W. B. Close is undoubtedly largely responsible for the idea being put into actual practice. Although they did not have a new boat built specially for the occasion, they naturally had the fittings adjusted to suit the Belgian style. The crew do not appear to have been remarkable for good watermanship, though their coach considered they made fairly satisfactory progress; they did not show themselves capable of travelling at a very fast pace under the new conditions in spite of the obvious fact that they were often putting in all they knew. It is more than doubtful whether the experiment will revolutionise 'Varsity rowing!

The Automobile Club of France has decided to revive the Grand Prix Motor Race next year, provided the manufacturers show sufficient inclination to compete.

The proposals for the race are of a novel kind. It is suggested that the constructors shall be given the utmost liberty in respect of the weight and power of their machines. The distance of the race is to be 500 miles.

The club also proposes to hold an Aviation Week within the fortnight following the Grand Prix.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The final in the "Gentle" Football Tournament was played off this (23rd) afternoon, between teams from the 81st Battery, R.F.A. and "E." Company, 1st Sherwood Foresters, in the presence of a record attendance of the military and general public, to say nothing of natives. Both teams were well matched and anticipations of a good game were fully realised. The infantry men had the best of the game from the start, but were unable to score; at the end of ten minutes play Knight of the Gunners had the Sherwood's custodian beaten. This was the only goal scored in the match, which gave the Gunners the victory for the second time in succession, "E" Company having won the trophy in 1907. The handsome cup was presented to the captain of the winning team, Bombardiar Smith, amidst deafening cheers. Mr. Gentle, the donor, was present, and took several snap shots during the progress of the game. The tournament was played under the auspices of the British Soldiers' Club in this station.

The Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Golf Club, Limited, will be held at the Pavilion on Friday, the 5th proximo, the Opening tiffin and competition for a Cup and Duffers' prize taking place the following day.

The Golf Championship of India will again this year be played over the Tollygunge Club course, the dates fixed being 24th, 25th, 27th and 28th December, and the Visitors vs. Calcutta match will probably take place on 26th December. The "Asian" Cup will be played for at Barrackpore from 18th to 28th December.

The Tollygunge Club engineered a very successful golf competition during the holidays last week. Over seventy entered, the conditions being a qualifying round of 36 holes, stroke play, handicap. The best sixteen net scores to play off by match play and the next best sixteen to play off in similar manner—a prize being presented for each division. The following qualified for the first division:—E. Watson, F. E. McEwan, J. Henderson Gray, Captain F. S. C. Thomson, J. H. Hechle, T. D. Wood, B. E. G. Eddis, A. D. Anderson, K. W. Digby, L. G. Dunbar, H. G. N. Taylor, J. Hampson, W. C. Beaumount, J. D. Guise, W. C. Crum and E. H. Townend. Of these Watson, Gray, Hechle, Eddis, Dunbar, Hampson, Guise and Townend survived the first round, and Gray, Hechle, Dunbar and Townend qualified for the semi-finals. Hechle beat Gray, and Dunbar beat Townend in the penultimate stage, and in the final Hechle defeated Dunbar by 8 and 7.

The second sixteen were R. B. Wilson, J. C. Thomas, A. T. Bruce, Dr. Forsyth, E. H. Bray, E. Elliott, H. D. Cartwright, J. G. Ballantyne, G. F. Martin, H. C. Bell, W. N. Winckworth, H. H. Hayden, R. O. Law, C. R. Rice, H. Collingridge, and N. McLeod.

In the play off Thomas, Forsyth, Elliott, Cartweight, Bell, Hayden, Rice and McLeod were successfull and these were further reduced to Forsyth, Elliott, Hayden and Rice in the next stage. Forsyth beat Elliott, and Rice beat Hayden in the semi-finals, and in the final Dr. Forsyth scored a popular win after a strenuous struggle with C. R. Rice, the match being carried to the 38th green.

The Thirteenth Lahore Dog Show will be held as usual during Xmas week, the Annual Dinner and General Meeting of the Indian Kennel Association taking place after the Show.

The Harris Football Tournament, concluded at Poona on the 22nd instant, resulted in a win for the Leicester Regiment, who beat the Lincolns in the final by 2 goals to 1.

A Special General Meeting of the Calcutta Cricket Club, will be held on Tuesday next, the 2nd proximo, at the Calcutta Turf Club, to approve and adopt the alterations and amendments of the rules as already circulated. This will be followed by the Annual General Meeting for the purpose of receiving and passing the Annual Report and audited accounts for the past season, to elect officers and a general committee for the ensuing year, and to transact any other business that may be brought forward.

We have just received the new season catalogue of Messrs. R B. Rodda and Company, the well-known gunmakers of this city. It is one of the first of the numerous price lists, which herald the approach of the cold weather. A long range of weapons, and many other requisites for the sportsman's outfit are listed and the catalogue is, as usual, well turned out. We would draw special attention to the fact that Messrs. R. B. Rodda and Company, have their own factory in Birmingham, where they manufacture all their weapons and they further claim to be the only firm in India, who supply guns and rifles at manufacturers' prices plus freight and duty.

The last of the weekly mud sports held by the Bombay Gymkhana took place on the Marine Lines maidan on the 20th instant. The entries and the attendance were the smallest seen at any of the meetings this season, but an excellent programme of six events was put through. Proceedings opened with Tilting the Ring and Tent-pegging, horses and ponies, won easily by Mr. J. R. Reynolds. Next came the jumping competition, which was won by Mr. W. H. H. Thompson with Mr. L. M. Grayburn second. Later in the afternoon Mr. Thompson on John Burns romped home in the Polo Scurry from seven starters, Mr. R. Andrews on Bill finishing second. The third event was the At Home Stakes, ladies' nomination: gentlemen to ride over the course to where tea tables were placed, presided over by their lady partners. After handing over their mounts to syces they had to "call" and take tea with their partners, sign chits for the tea and return over the same course. This was won by Captain Haynes and Mrs. Payne, with Major and Mrs. Tulloh second. Then came the Deck Quoits Stakes, ladies' nomination: gentlemen to ride over the course, hand the horses to syces, pick up a supply of polo balls, and run with them to their nominators who had to throw five of them into each bucket, after which the riders had to return over the course. Mr. L. M. Grayburn and Miss Sinclair, 1; Mr. H. C. Richmond and Mrs. Cudlip, 2. The programme was brought to a conclusion with Dumb Sports: gentlemen to ride round the course and dismount opposite the ladies who had to imitate in dumb show some particular sport. The gentlemen had then to pick from a bran tub some article closely connected with the sport represented by their partners. Six pairs took part. Won by Captain Haynes and Mrs. Payne; Mr. Grayburn and Miss Sinclair second.

Among the passengers on board the Australian mail boat Otranto, are Bob Fitzimmons and Hugh McIntosh, the organiser and Referee of the Burns-Johnson fight. Fitzsimmons is going out to the Commonwealth to meet Lang, ex-heavy weight champion of Australia, and also hopes to subsequently fight Tommy Burns for the heavy weight championship of Australia. There is a talk of Fitzsimmons touring India later on and McIntosh is anxious to find a good man to pit against him. Contrary to the general doubt there has been on the subject McIntosh is confident that the much-talked of fight between Jeffries and Johnson will take place. Johnson has agreed to fight for a purse of £10,000 offered by McIntosh, but Big Jim is holding out for more. Interviewed while in Colombo McIntosh said the fight would take place either in England or in Colombo, with the preference to the latter place where weather conditions were dependable for the cinematograph pictures, to which he looked for a return on his investment. Fitzsimmons, whose ambition it is to meet Johnson, expressed an opinion that Jeffries would beat the "big coon."

We regret to learn the death at Lucknow, on the 19th instant, of Lieutenant E. Rube, Royal Dragoons. A good sportsman, polo player and the owner of a big stable, his death is much deplored by a large circle of friends and brother officers.

J. N. Crawford, the surrey cricketer, has accepted a college mastership at Adelaide.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—With a divided race, there were seven for the Eleventh Extra on Monday, when the attendance was again big and the racing open. Ferguson was the only jockey to ride two winners, Ames not being out at all, owing to his suspension over the riding of Paul Pry, when he lost to Pincher on Saturday.

There were only six down for the first race, the Kalyan Plate: all started and in the betting there was very little to choose between the three top-weights, Shanwar, Hishan and Saree. Saree could never make up a poor start and Nasaralla only lasted to the bend, where Shanwar had a commanding lead of Hishan. The latter made an effort down the straight, but it was useless, Shanwar romping in on his own with Duxion finding third place.

Eleven started for the first division of the Extra Plate, Yacoot being very slightly better fancied than Chechan, Hachal and Hurr next. Chechan, as usual, was to the front at the start accompanied by Sinclair whom he soon shook off, Waziristan and Yacoot being after him at the bend. The former of these began to fall back, but Yacoot caught Chechan at about the distance and went away from him easily. Grey Morn was running second down the straight till First Class passed him going strong.

Turning to the second, Zinfandel, on his recent third, being heavily backed with money also for Minerva, Matheran and Sunsun. It was a good race, Minerva getting the best of the start from Duxion, Matheran, Lahuk and Sunsun drawing up at the bend. Sunsun wide was all out and Duxion and Matheran were left by Lahuk. Zinfandel made his appearance outside soon after the distance and there was some excitement as to whether he could catch those in front. Lahuk just got the better of Minerva when Zinfandel in the last rush came up and pipped him on the post.

The mile Auction Plate included a very third rate lot of five, St. Patrick being leit out and Peria Doray, because I suppose he was the only one we have ever seen show any sort of form, was made quite a hot favourite from Oldham and Haymaker, some money coming for Milner at long odds. It was a very slow run race, Haymaker and Peria Doray showing out till joined by Milner and Oldham, the four running in a line. There was no change to the bend, where Milner began to come away, Oldham having to go outside falling back a bit. The latter came again after the distance and all looked over. He seemed going far the better, but under the whip Milner put in a surprising dash and got there. In the last few strides Rosewater passed Peria Doray for third place.

Not at all a bad lot went for the Maiden Arab Plate of a mile, Shawcutt, despite his tendency to run out, being hotly fancied, also Desert King and Darwin in particular. Bailey, who has given none of his early promise, led out and kept in front all the way to the bend followed by Aziz and Shawcutt, who was only cantering behind them. He came away at the bend, to be challenged by Silvermine, who made up a deal of ground, and Tunis on the rails. It was a dangerous thing to go outside Shawcutt, and Hoyt on Silvermine found it out. As they reached the Grand Stand the first three were close on one another and Shawcutt looked very good when he suddenly shot away to the tan and took Silvermine with him. The latter came round behind him, but missed Tunis, who kept straight along the rails.

As in the mile, there were some poor ones out in the five furlong Welter Plate, Lady Lomond being in most demand from Wolferton and Pincher, the M.G. stable going on Lady Leslie. T.M.S., Wolferton and Moonlight led out, the first named soon assuming a long lead, Solution being left. Lady Leslie began to come up to her stable companion, T.M.S., at the turn, where Pincher also caught Wolferton. Hill gave Pincher a bit of a shaking up, and the top-weight was very soon on terms with the leaders. Once there he was never troubled and came in a very comfortable winner despite his crusher of 10-12. There must be something wrong with both Wolferton and Lady Lomond to make such a bad show in a race run in 1min. 4secs. T.M.S., hanging on third from Lady Leslie and Rosewater.

We were left with the Sholapur Plate, Good Chance being the street-corner tip and being shorter than Zari, Maimoon and Salanic. Zari was first away, but that was all he could do, Sheriff taking the lead followed by Good Chance, who with Salanic, began to draw up in the straight. Good Chance on the rails got none too good a run, but Salanic passed Sheriff and stayed out a very strong run from nowhere by Rajput. Maimoon was in the crush and never showed up.

Another liberal card of eight events was served up on Saturday to give punters a last chance, but (need I say it) they failed to take full advantage of it, outsiders cropping up now and again to take the gilt off the good things that came off. It was a fitting wind up, and we can say that big fields and hot finishes have been the general rule throughout the season. I personally have always thought it unjust to stamp the Arab as uncertain, and still hold that stuffing and the "Armstrong" business have most to do with it. The Stewards are apparently of rather the same opinion, as on Sunday quite a file of jockeys made their way into the Stewards' sanctum. Nothing more serious than a few "kind words," however, occurred.

As to the racing itself the Arab Selling Plate came first and Hachal was heavily backed, though his previous running by no means justified it, Gwalior and Disfigure also. Disfigure got away badly and Hachal was not long in dispossessing Angler of the lead followed by Gwalior. There was never any alteration after that, Hachal holding Gwalior all the way and Disfigure getting third from Angler and Malik Jaman, who finished in a bunch wide.

In the first of the divided Maidan Pony Plate, Gray Morn was better fancied by the stable than Nishan, Lahuk and Ebrahim Pasha always short. It was much the same sort of a race as the first, Nishan leading away from Gray Morn and Begler Beg. There was nothing to touch the first two, finishing in that order, Thuvil and Lahuk coming late into the next places.

The second was run in over a second worse time, Muzloom warming to a hot favourite in preference to Matheran, Priceless and Orby having a strong following. Mizhir Beg was first away from Priceless, Muzloom and Contractor, the first named soon giving way to Priceless, who led up to the distance. Here Muzloom caught him, and they ran together for a time till he went away and won comfortably. Orby failed to stay and Injabukh beat Contractor for third place.

On the betting, as well as on form, the Doncaster Plate appeared to lie between Oakton and Pincher, who is now quite into the top rungs and would seem to improve after five furlongs. Lady Honour gave a deal of trouble and was left, Boomey and Winsome making play at a good pace from Oakton, Pincher and T.M.S. At the bend St. Patrick and Admiral Crichton closed up and Oakton came outside, leaving a gap which Hill on Pincher took advantage of. T.M.S. and the latter two were running level at the distance, and it was anyone's race with Admiral Crichton also going well just behind. Nearing the stand, Oakton showed in front and beat T.M.S. half a length, Pincher a neck off just saving his place from Admiral Crichton, The surprise of the race was T.M.S., who, judiciously handled, stayed much better than was expected.

There were just eight in the Matheran Plate, Shanwar and Dilerjung always commanding the market with a late run on Mudkoor. Hishan was first away, and led Chechan right away to the bend, where Shanwar made up ground very fast, passing Hishan and Selection and catching Chechan at the entrance to the straight. Chechan was under the whip, but answering gamely held on to win by a neck in a splendid finish, though a stronger finisher on Shanwar would have reversed the order. Dilerjung got his place from Hishan.

The mile and a quarter Dussera Plate had to be split up, Colaba and Spearmint being shorter than Alma in the betting. Spearmint and Alma cut out the running from Young Salanic, Jehangir and Colaba. Alma and Young Salanic fell back on the way to the bend, Urgent closing with Colaba and coming after Spearmint down the straight. Whalley never really needed to bustle Urgent to beat Spearmint, and Colaba saved his place from Jehangir. Alma was absolutely last and something must be radically wrong with him.

A faster run race was the other division, Hazza, Hadee, Amood and Antica being most fancied. As usual, Antica was out clear in front of Hazza, Eed, Hadee and Lapwing. At the bend Eed came outside, but was not nearly as strong as Hadee, who caught Antica and won easily. Amood came late but failed to catch Eed, who is beginning to show something like his old form.

We were faced with the last race of the season, the mile Arab Welter, uncertain between Little Gafil and Silvermine, Desert King and Murmurees. There was no good line to take for Murmurees, who went away from the raising of the barrier to lead England, Little Gafil and Thuvil with Silvermine again last, a slow starter. The only change was that Brukat showed with them at the five furlong till at the bend Silvermine had made up his ground and he rounded outside Little Gafil. They closed with Murmurees at the distance, but on Little Gafil swerving and interfering with Silvermine they fell back a bit. Coming again, however, Silvermine pipped Little Gafil by a neck, Murmurees the same distance behind and Thuvil remaining fourth fairly close.

London Week by Week.

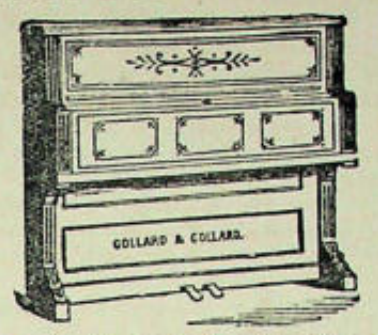
Friday, 8th October 1909.

How seldom the home-visiting Indian exile finds his cheerful and friendly advances met half way by the casual fellow traveller or fellow guest at hotel or restaurant! I do not lose sight of the fact that the stay-at-home Londoner gets more civilised every year, and that, in spite of the fact that he has lacked opportunity for knocking off his corners and clearing his vision by travel, specimens of him may be found (in the more select neighbourhoods) almost devoid of that astounding prejudice and animosity towards strangers which has, alas! come to be regarded as typically English.



The League of Sociable Londoners intend to help in the extinction of the latter species and they are sanguine of banishing, in time, the look of gloomy ferocity which a conversational advance by a stranger usually provokes. Two little flags worn in the buttonhole—a Union Jack crossed with the Japanese mercantile ensign—are to indicate that the wearer is a Sociable Londoner, eager to speak without introduction to anyone decorated in the same remarkable fashion. At the same time we have news of an American badge by which citizens will proclaim that they are Polite Americans, ready to carry old-fashioned courtesy even to the point of giving up to a lady a seat in a street car.

I may add that I have not yet met a wearer of the crossed flags, when I do I shall test him and endeavour to discover whether there is any chance of persuading Londoners generally to signal by scarf pin, button or badge that they are Polite Englishmen.

on the 1st of this month and is now plying for hire over two thousand strong, and malgre the croakers who predict a short life for the thing I must confess I think the "tanner cab" looks as if it had come to stay. With the advent of the new order of things, the cabmen, judging from the papers, have acquired a new set of manners, and are out prepared to treat the sixpenny "fare" with politeness and consideration. The public are also well satisfied with the venture, so success ought to be assured. If it fails the fate of the horse cab is scaled for this would appear to be the only system that can save it.

WRITING of public vehicles reminds me to remark that we shall soon be freed from the tyranny of the motorist who persistently drives to the common danger. Some time ago a notice was issued by the Chief Commissioner of Police that, after a certain date, no motor vehicles would be licensed unless they were provided with a device which would denote audibly when the legal speed limit was exceeded. Experiments have been made since then, and with the expiration of the notice drawing near it is stated the General Motor-Cab Company have invented a speedometer which, after exhaustive tests, has fulfilled all the necessary conditions. In this device a bell commences to ring when the motor-car to which it is attached exceeds a speed of twenty miles an hour, and continues until the rate of progress is sufficiently reduced. Good business indeed.

"PONY" MOORE died, in his ninetieth year, last Friday. He was the survivor of that wonderful partnership—Moore and Burgess—which for forty years made St. James's Hall the home of negro minstrelsy, and never once performed out of London. Poor old chap, he was a rough diamond but a first class nigger, a king among cornermen and withal as open-handed, genial and kind hearted a soul as ever used burnt cork. But he had survived his calling, they are all gone—Leslie, Little Willie, Burgess, J. B. Ferrell (who is well remembered in India), and the rest—the nigger minstrel troupe is disbanded. A black face man still smile at us over the footlights in a music hall turn, or at a seaside resort, but the brotherhood of the bones and tambo is as extinct as the Round Table.

It belonged to a simple age. Among the crowd which attends a music hall once a week and waits in a theatre queue once a month you could not re-enlist that unsophisticated audience which was smitten with a pleasant sadness by "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower," which was quickened to laughter by that song of "Camptown Races," whose chorus even Mr. Gladstone is recorded as singing to his delighted friends. While anxiously eager to be amused, that audience was not "gleg at the uptake." Mr. Bones, the corner man, had to give it due warning when a joke was to be propounded to it. A joke might not be loosed hastily upon an audience.

Thus, when the strains of "Coal-black Rose" had died away, Mr. Bones would break the silence with "Mr. Johnson." Mr. Johnson, throned in the middle of the crescent of black men, their collars like vast ham-frills, would reply encouragingly, "Yes, Mr. Bones." The audience's attention was caught; the impression of a coming jest gained upon it. "Mr. Johnson, why am you not like a donkey's tail?" As one surprised by the question, but unsuspicious of the possibility of disrespectful humour, Mr. Johnson would say, "Why am I not like a donkey's tail, Mr. Bones?" Pressing his point, Mr. Bones would insist upon "Yes, why am you not like a donkey's tail?"

After a moment's hesitation the chief of the tribe gave up the problem, demanding, "Well, Mr. Bones, why am I not like a donkey's tail?" By this time the whole audience was primed and eager for Mr. Bones's joke. So soon as he had cracked it and subsided into a paroxysm of clattering upon his beef-bone castanets the quicker wits had caught the humour of the answer, and soon the whole audience was abandoning itself to enjoyment of Mr. Johnson's discomfited dignity. That was, indeed, the Arcadian age of public entertainment. In such an age Mr. George Washington Moore prospered until the visible signs of prosperity sparkled upon his ample shirt-front, diamonds "as big as half-crowns—some of them as big as three-and-six." The first stage of the road was the hardest, and Mr. Moore had tales of paying his troupe in New York with tea and groceries obtained on credit from a grocer patron of art, and of a dreadful day when even burnt cork failed them, burnt paper and axle-grease taking its place.

THE wit and the ingeniously arranged situations of Mr. Somerset Maugham have been sufficient to fill the Comedy Theatre for something like a year, First there came "Mrs. Dot"; then entered "Penelope"—both tremendous successes, according to the "booking"—and now has arrived "Smith," which, on its merits, should meet with an even greater success than either of Mr. Maugham's previous big successes at the Comedy.

"Smith" shows Mr. Maugham as much "out for laughter" as he has always been since he began to lay himself out to catch the approval of the gallery and the pit with "Lady Frederick." On the surface, he aims to do no more than amuse. And yet he is more serious than he has ever been since that morbid, human, unsuccessful play of his, "A Man of Honour."

The gist of "Smith" is just this: Thomas Freeman returns from the Colonies with a new view of life. He sees things from a different point of view—he is a different man from he who left Tilbury some five years ago. He arrives back among the old set—the "Smart Set," the bridge-loving, child-hating set, such as Marie Corelli, among other lady novelists, pictures with so much blue paint. The old set disgust Thomas. He finds the unsophisticated serving maid much more to his liking; and to her he proposes marriage. That is the theme.

It does not matter very much whether Mr. Maugham's picture of the "Smart Set" is true or false; it does not matter whether there was ever, since the world began, such a sweet-voiced, well-mannered "slavey" as "Smith." What does matter is that the play provides a very pretty romance, with some gentle, homely, useful lessons coming in its train. Also, there is much wit and humour, much agreeable sentiment. Altogether, then, a delightful entertainment. The play may not offer realism, but it makes for thought, as well as for laughter.

The acting all round was excellent. Mr. Robert Loraine, as the man from the Colonies—the man who had learned his lesson of life—was strong, sincere, and convincing. Miss Marie Lohr gave a human, appealing character study as "Smith." She was not in the least like the ordinary servant girl—"beefy-faced and grubby hand," as Kipling puts the case—but she was in perfect tune with the idea of the play. Mr. A. E. Matthews was his own easy-going, attractive self in a comparatively small part; and Miss Kate Cutler was altogether admirable. The acting, in short, was good all round. And, since the play was both witty and strong, it well deserved the enthusiasm with which it was received.

To the success of the Gilbert and Sullivan revivals may, last year, be attributed the reopening of the Savoy under the management of Mr. C. H. Workman with the production of new comic operas as his policy. Last week he began his venture with "The Mountaineers," which is the joint work of Messrs. Guy Eden and Reginald Somerville, the former being responsible for the lyrics, and the latter for the music, with the book their joint work. The "faithful"—those who gave such whole-hearted welcomes to all the Savoy revivals—had assembled in force, and each act, number and artiste was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

The story is decidedly slight. The scene is laid in a frontier Alpine village, where there are two rivals for the hand of sweet Clarice—Fritz, a strong, rugged mountaineer, and Conrad, a polished young gentleman from town. She bids them prove their love by bringing her a sprig of edelweiss from the highest peak of the nearest mountain. Fritz—to whom Clarice has really lost her heart—not only succeeeds in his mission, but also saves Conrad's life. And in the end, in gratitude, Conrad acts as Fritz's substitute when the reserves are called out for war, so that the favoured lover may be left with Clarice.

It is a simple, almost trite story, and prettily told, but it is too slender to support three acts and wants pruning of a good deal of irrelevant matter. But on the whole the piece, though it is far from Gilbert and Sullivan or at best it may be said to be G. and S. diluted, it lives up to the true spirit of the Savoy traditions and is dainty, bright, tuneful and generally very amusing when Mr. Workman is on the stage.

Mr. Workman is, as always, a host in himself. He plays Pierre, Clarice's father, Chief Custom House official, and has a love affair of his own with a rich and buxom widow. He is provided with a number of songs of design that strikingly recall many of his successes in the Savoy revivals—snappy songs, largely composed of adjectives which he rattles off at a wonderful pace without the audience losing a word. And he is getting fun out of all his lines with a look, a vocal eccentricity, or a gesture. Miss Elsie Spain as Clarice, Miss Jessie Rose as a village coquette, and Mr. Laurence Legge as Conrad—all established Savoy favourites—sing and act with every effect; and as Fritz, a newcomer in the person of Claude Flemming, scored a big success. A fine figure of a hero, he acts with the romantic grace and the dramatic fire of a hero of melodrama, and sings in a rich baritone voice that is both tender and powerful. The smaller characters and the chorus were always well in the picture.

THERE must be a few still in Calcutta, who have pleasant recollections of Kyrle Bellew what time he and Mrs. Brown-Potter presented that city with amusement of a class it has seldom had during the last fifty years. Such will be sorry to hear that sudden and serious illness has compelled him to cancel for a time all his engagements at New York. It seems he broke a nasal blood vessel and his condition was regarded yesterday as grave. Kyrle Bellew is really rather closely connected with Calcutta, indeed I think I am right in saying he was born there: his father was the eloquent padre who used to preach at St. John's and at your Cathedral, and at one time edited the Bengal Harkaru, which lang syne was incorporated with your contemporary the Indian Daily News.

* * * * * *

MISS ISABEL HUNTER, who used to be the Shillong correspondent of a Calcutta paper I once conducted, has written an Indian novel, which she has called "The Land of Regrets." As its sub-title informs us it is "A Miss Sahib's Reminiscences," and it is brightly written, in the gossipy letters to friends' style. There is a good deal of descriptive detail of life in Shillong and other hill stations, something of the men and manners of the big cities of the plains and a good deal of anecdotal matters connected with native domestic servants. Into the latter some very mouldy old "Chesnuts" have been introduced by the author as personal experiences, notably the stories of the cook washing his feet in the soup tureen and the sock and coffee outrage and others—these were stock yarns current nearly a century ago (vide old books in my possession) and our reminiscent Miss Sahib, though perhaps not in her first youth, is hardly so old as that I think. Still they will amuse English readers, while the book, as a whole, conveys with tolerable accuracy impressions of Anglo-Indian social and domestic life—that life to which we often look back with a sigh when our exile is done. Alas how many of us at such times recall Tennyson's lines:—

"This is truth the poet sings.
"Is remembering happier things."

Then India becomes indeed a land of regrets.

THE VAGRANT.

INDIAN INSECT LIFE.*

WE have received through the courtesy of the publishers, Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., a copy of the above book which the author calls a manual of the insects of the plains (Tropical India). This fine book contains nearly 70 full-page coloured illustrations besides numerous uncoloured ones, and is most freely endowed with woodcuts. A large number of the plates have been painted by native artists at the Pusa Institute and are exceedingly well done and show the greatest credit to the art schools out here; they have been beautifully reproduced by the Calcutta Phototype Company, proving that it is not necessary to go to England to have one's coloured plates done. We must congratulate Mr. Slater on the way he has turned them out, and he deserves the patronage of future authors who may wish their works illustrated We also congratulate the publishers, Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., on the general finish of the book, but think it deserved a nicer binding than the one given it.

The book contains a mass of interesting and valuable information, but also shows what a lot there is still to learn in Indian entomology, even of such common insects as the familiar house cricket. This work should prove a great boon to students of entomology and should, on account of its interesting reading induce many others to take up the subject, and unless many more workers join this field of science, our knowledge of this branch of natural history must always remain inadequate owing to the huge number of Indian species—nearly 30,000 as estimated by Mr. Lefroy. The drawback in the study of insects in this country is the great difficulty experienced in keeping the specimens, as they are greatly subject to mould and pseeds; for those who have found this difficulty we recommend them to read the information given by Mr. Lefroy to Mr. John Wallace, C.E., in No. 2, Vol. XIX. of the Journal of the Bombay Natural History, Society and give a trial to the kind of boxes mentioned therein and in which the Pusa collection is stored. Mr. Lefroy gives a most useful and simple aid to the identifying insects by means of their food and habitat. They are divided into land, fresh water, salt water and Myrmecophilous insects, and these are again divided into Herbivorous, Parasitic and Predators and Scavengers, and these further divided into a number of small families according to their diet. This work comprises many notes on the habits of insects in general and also in some cases the life histories of various species. Also those who wish to do so can get information of the best means of collecting their specimens and also where they may be found. Many of the coloured illustrations are of insect pests and of such useful insects as the Tusser and Eri Silk Moths (Antheræa paphia and Attacus ricini) and lac insects (Tachardia lacca). The author also mentions where further information on the various may be obtained, which should prove useful to the student, especially to those interested from an economic point of view. We think Mr. Lefroy has made a mistake in saying that the Bherwa (Schizodactylus monstruosus) is "destructive to crops only when its burrows are so abundant that it cuts the roots of plants." We have seen indigo, chillies, etc., which have been cut down by these formidable pests and found fronds of ferns partly drawn into their burrows, where these occurred in a fernery. There is, bye the bye, a very good woodcut of this insect drawn by Mr. Howlett. Something about every kind of insect imaginable is found in this bulky tome and we thoroughly recommend it to all interested in the subject.

Fishing.

SALMON FISHING IN MONTEREY BAY.

EVER go salmon fishing?

If so, you have experienced the most exciting, exhilarating and ecstatic piscatorial sport.

If not. What's the use of asking why. The bay that bounds the beaches and cliffs of Santa Cruz beckons every day. The fish are abundant at this time of the year and as a rule easy game.

To take salmon you don't have to secure a license, and equip yourself with arms and ammunition, not even with fishing tackle and bait, unless you decide to use your own favourite rod and reel.

You engage a boatman, and he does the rest.

He will have rods and reels and lines and hooks and sinkers and bait, a landing net and a gaff. All there is for you to do is to pay the boatman and look pleasant—the fishing is yours.

For a certainty there is a boat ride on the bay, worth the price at any time, and the chances are all in favour of taking from one to ten salmon in a morning's expedition.

And then there is lots of fun before you start, listening to the jingle of the alarm clock, turning out of bed in the presence of the electric light, preparing your own breakfast and hiking down to the wharf before 5 o'clock A.M.

It makes a crack in the crust of habit that is growing all over you and encasing your very thoughts. It gives you a new sensation of being boss of yourself when you can get out of the rut, to make such a venture.

For salmon fishing the Santa Cruzan has two points of departure. He can start from the local wharf or he can leave for the Capitola wharf via the first trolley car. Some prefer one fishing ground and some another. Good luck and poor has been found a plenty from both places this year, Then there are two kinds of conveyances, the old-fashioned, time-honoured fishing boats, with a lateen sail for the wind when it rises; the same model that floated on the sea of Galilee two thousand years ago, the same one that puts out from every port on the Mediterranean, in this year of 1909; and the modern motorboat that supplants the oarsman's muscle with gasoline and puts no trust in Providence for a favouring wind.

Some think the whirr of the motor "scares" the fish, others scoff at the notion. Both styles of boats bring in fish some days and both return with empty bottom on other days.

Compensation also comes in another form before starting. It will be found in the wharf scene at sunrise—we say sunrise, but it is understood that there will be a fog on the morning you go salmon fishing. The fog plays an important part in the morning's entertainment. It curtains off the land and it hides the boundless expanse of water, and just shows the centre of the stage on which the performance is about to begin, whereon the struggle for mastery between your science and sagacity, and the combined resources of the King of Fish, in his own realm, is to take place.

As you approach it the wharf reaches to the very end of things apparently, so snugly has the mist settled down. The Santa Cruz wharf is not as picturesque as it was before the railroad encroached upon it, but at Capitola traffic does not trespass and the fishermen appropriate the wharf for their very own.

In the dim space the fog has left you for a visible world, you can trace the pink bloom of the bay flowers that border the beach, on the westerly side of the wharf, and you hear the muffled music from the eternal diapason of the tides, and the soft lapping of the sea gull's wings as he wafts himself about undecided where he will find his breakfast. It's a wierd world and a small one, without a trace or suggestion of the one in which you normally move and have your being.

As you arrive the fisher boats of commerce are beginning to come in from their all-night vigil on the deep. Strong, lusty fellows are on board and they pass up the catch of the night to their co-partners on the wharf above. They speak in an unknown tongue, the language of modern Macedonia, but they laugh in our language and the work of unloading is accompanied by many evident jests.

"Gee! aren't they beauties?" That's what the tenderfoot exclaims in accents of surprise and admiration. They are.

Each boat brings from twenty to forty fish about equally divided between sea bass and salmon, the sea bass running from twenty to forty pounds in weight and the salmon from ten to twenty-five pounds.

These boats went out towards sunset last evening, and spread their nets in a line which extends from three to five miles in width.

Heretofore the mesh of their nets was limited by law to 7½ inches. Last winter the legislature passed an amendment reducing the mesh to 6½ inches, thus rapidly increasing the speed at which the bay is robbed of its finny treasures, and certain fish dealers in San Francisco accumulate profits from the fish business.

And it is a great business. From half a ton to two tons daily of fish go up from Santa Cruz and Capitola to the San Francisco market. Many kinds of fish in their season and according to the demands of the market. The fishermen work on a percentage or share of the profits, and to-morrow morning the fish just landed will be on the slabs of the retail markets of San Francisco and interior cities.

But all this is another story, which quite offensively thrusts itself upon the attention and impels to profanity when we ought to be cultivating serenity.

Forgetting the fish depletion sanctioned by the law and the legislature, it is fun to watch these boats unload. The fisher folk certainly seem happy, but we cannot find it in our hearts to envy them their job. After setting their nets at night they have "nothing to do but wait," only at about 11 o'clock the nets must be hauled up and emptied, and again about 3 o'clock, for sometimes a sealion comes along, and if he found fish in the nets he would have a fine play-spell with them. Sometimes a basking shark gets entangled in the nets, and at other rare times a whale finds his flukes tangled in a net. Then he gets mad and tears about to the terror of fishermen and the destruction of their net. Fortunately for the industry these occasions are rare.

The sight of the fish-bottomed boats, and the wharf strewn with the catch of the night is a great appetizer to the amateur fisherman, and he grows eager to get off in his own boat.

Our boat puts off, and the box of sardine or anchovy bait in the bottom looks as promising as the full dinner pail the artisan carries to his work.

Our thoughts are on the near future, discounting the joys of realization by the delights of anticipation. We are after noble game, and the consciousness stimulates our self-respect.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, the most eminent ichthylogist in America, has credited the salmon as being the highest type of his family among fishes.

"In beauty, activity, gameness and quality as food, it stands easily with the first among fishes," he says, and we are going fishing for salmon.

There is a tidal roll in the water, but the surface is smooth. "Nothing doing" yet. The boatman carefully scans the waters far and near for sardine "sign." For where the schools of sardines or anchovy are there will be the salmon in quest of them.

Bye and bye you feel a gentle pressure on your cheek like the breath of one near. That breath has touched the bay. It is not a wind, only air in motion, but it breaks the monotonous smoothness of the water and ripples and flutes and scallops it until it looks like the tracery of delicate lace work.

"Now look out for a strike," says the boatman, for we have struck favourable water.

"How will I know when I have a bite?" asks a tenderfoot.

How would you know if you were struck with a club?

"I've got one."

The immediate, instantaneousness of wireless telegraphy is rivaled by the speed of the "thrill" that passes along your line and down your rod.

Glory:—

In an instant of time, ten, twenty, thirty, forty years, as it may be, roll off like the discarded skin of a snake. You are a boy again, with all the eager anticipation, the zest for conquest of young blood.

The boatman lays aside the oars. Your companion reels in his line that it may not get tangled with yours while playing the fish. Occupants of other boats in sight turn their eyes towards you and keenly watch the fun.

Luck, so far as you are concerned, led the salmon to take the anchovy on your hook for his breakfast instead of one swimming in the vicinity, but it is by your skill, science if you wish to call it so, that he is to be landed

You are fairly aflame with excitement, yet, if you get excited, you will lose your fish.

If you relax the tension on the line for a second, he will snap the line in twain with his teeth, and your trophy will be lost. If you give him the butt of the rod and strain too tightly on the line he will break it with his weight—that is some lines.

Down there, somewhere, in ten to twenty fathoms of water, is the other fellow. He knows at once that he has been "stung," as you would if you had swallowed a bee or a wasp, but generally it seems he is not immediately aware that there is a battle for his life and liberty before him. Usually he will follow for a time along the line of least resistance, that is the persuasive impulse of your reel, but sooner or later it dawns upon him that he is caught and that it is up to him to make a breakaway—and he begins. Perhaps he will make this decision when he is far down, and suddenly plunge like a bucking bronco, perhaps he will not seemingly commence to put up a fight until near the surface, and then how he will plash the water into foam. Down he dives again, or perhaps shoots off, to put distance between himself and that ugly apparition (to him) in the boat. If you give him "plenty of line" and never relax the pull, he will turn about and come back. By this time he is thoroughly in earnest. He makes a leap out of the water, and as the light strikes him, you see his whole body, arched to exert his full strength, his passion causing an iridescent play of colour, wholly indescribable (one of the most beautiful sights in creation).

Again he finds there is no let go to that pesky thing that pulls him. Back he plunges into his own element. This time he takes another course, and turns your boat round like a top with the strength of his determined "get-away." His course and his tactics change with lightning-like rapidity, leaping and diving off and away, and then towards the boat, leaping in the air perhaps several times before, by tact and persistency you draw him near enough for the boatman to gaff or scoop him up in the basket net—and the battle is over.

How long?

It is on record of a salmon who fought a three-hour battle. Usually from five to fifteen minutes. Sometimes you catch a chump even among salmon who can be pulled in as easily as a sucker.

How large?

An experienced angler doesn't need and never uses scales. He can tell within a pound, the "pull" that is on his line. It is a mistake to suppose that the size of a salmon measures its gaminess. There may be more "fun" in a ten-pounder than in one which will weigh forty pounds.

Perhaps your boat will bring in twenty fish from a morning's cruise. Sometimes none at all.

But the duration of the battle, the size and number of the vanquished are only details for the true sportsman.

Fishing boats are ordinarily out from five to six hours. With best of luck there are many dull moments, and with the worst of luck there is the whole time to be whiled away.

Recompense for this can be found in the scenery of sea and shore, in watching the flight of the sea birds, and in listening to the tales your boatman can tell. These narratives will often yield both amusement and information.

The bay views, from the lighthouse to off Aptos, are incomparably finer than the landscape from the shore. No one can really appreciate the Sea Beach Hotel, or the Casino, who has not had this view from the bay, and there is no land view of the canyons of the Soquel and Aptos, comparable to that obtained from a boat a mile out.—Santa Cruz Surf.

THE LATEST TESTIMONIAL

ALMORAH,
KUMAON, U. P.
16th September, 1909

You will be pleased to hear that the Cartridges you loaded for me in 1907 are being used by me for Chikore Shooting and I have not had a miss fire yet and yesterday I got

7 birds with
7 consecutive shots.

I was not able to use these Cartridges as I went home in 1908 and did very little Shooting on my return They speak well for your loading."

Yours faithfully,
H. M. H.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,

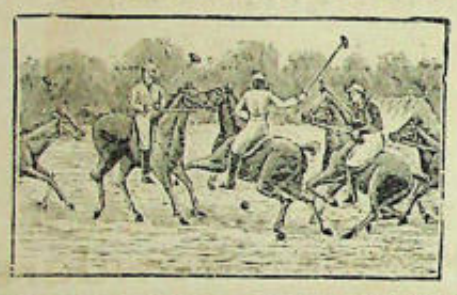
Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.



The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

THE Darjeeling meeting was scarcely so successful from a racing point of view as the Poojah meeting usually has been. This, of course, refers to the Waler pony racing where three or four good ones had it all to themselves, "the rest" being padding to make up the race. The first day was rather dismal and cheerless owing to bad weather, but the other two days were got through in ideal conditions. Mr. Power had the roughest of luck in both his ponies coming down on the first day, putting them hors de combat. Mr. Shillingford is on top of the owners' list, mainly through the performances of his gallant Kestrel who, taking in the extras, has won five races right off the reel. Mr. Galstaun heads the list of riders, having nine wins to his credit. The Bhutia pony racing is getting better every year, and this meeting it has been quite good from every point of view. This class of racing delights the hill tribes, who come in from all parts of the district, men, women and children in hundreds to witness their relatives or friends prowess as owners or riders. The management has, as usual, been all that could be desired Speculation was not very brisk, and Russell and Co., who were book-making at the meeting, say it was the poorest they have attended in their ten years of monopoly. Mrs. Caspersz very kindly presented the cups at the conclusion of the races on Saturday. Appended are the details:—

First Day, Tuesday, 19th October 1909.

NOVICE STAKES.—For a Cup value Rs. 49. For all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a stake of the value of Rs. 40 or over. 14-1 to carry 11st. 7lb.; C.-B.'s and Arabs allowed 24lb. W. I. 2 laps.

A SCARCELY KNOWN FACT.

The worst Foes of Mankind.

When one thinks of the fact that not millions, but milliards of microbes and bacteria—of which the accompanying illustration reproduced from an actual photograph of a minute drop of tooth moisture forms a specimen—are living in a neglected mouth, it seems nothing less than disgusting to allow such destruction to continue in our mouths and teeth.

It is simply incredible that there still exist many educated people who refuse to realise that it is an absolute necessity not only for the preservation of the teeth, but also for the general health, to take regular care of the mouth and teeth.

To protect the mouth and teeth from tooth destroying bacteria Odol is the only preparation which absolutely and safely answers the purpose. This antiseptic dentifrice and mouth-wash has the remarkable property which causes it to be absorbed by the teeth and by the mucous membrane of the gums, exercising its antiseptic and refreshing powers not only during the brief period of application but for some hours afterwards. By its use the development of those bacteria which gather in the mouth during the day will be arrested. No other dentifrice can produce, even approximately, such a reliable antiseptic effect and one which lasts so long after use.

Won comfortably by two lengths; half a length between second and third. Time—1min. 11⅘secs.

THE POLO HANDICAP.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A high-weight handicap for ponies. 3 furlongs.

Honorary Secretary :—CAPT. A. CAMPBELL ROSS.
Clerk of the Scales :—MR. O. DIGNUM.

Thursday, 21st October, 1909.

THE absence of a Military Band this afternoon left something much to be desired, and as to the public—goodness knows where they were. There was some cricket going on somewhere, between the Sherwoods and Hussars, which might account for the absence of a few sporting men, but the rest were nowhere, and had it not been for the interest centred in the Mounted Infantry Race which attracted a considerable force of Jocks, Trainers, Volunteers, etc, things would have been very flat. I might also mention that these races are never advertised, hence there is no public. Following are details :—

OPEN PONY RACE.—Rs. 49. For ponies 14-2 and under. Weights—English and Australians 14-2 to carry 11st. 7lb. C.-B's 14-2 to carry 10st. 7lb. Arabs 14-2 carry 9st. 7lb. W. I. 5 furlongs.

Col. A. A. Jones' br ch h Kilkite, 9st. 8lb.	...	Narainswamy 1
Hajee Hashim Sait's ch a h William Rufus, 7st. 2lb.	...	Kuhn 2
Mr. G. Newall-Watson's ch aus m Dainty, 11st. 7lb.	...	Owner 0
Capt. A. Campbell Ross' ch aus g Fish Hook, 10st. 4lb.	...	Capt. Ley 0

BETTING : 2 to 1 on Kilkite, 2 to 1 agst. Fish Hook, 3 to 1 William Rufus, and 6 to 1 Dainty.

William Rufus made the running up to the distance, being at one time at least eight lengths in front of the favourite, but Kilkite crept up slowly and passing his opponent at the rails won comfortably by two lengths, the others pulling up. Time—1min. 11⅘secs.

TALLY HO PLATE.—Rs. 49. A handicap for all chargers 2 miles over the chase course.

Mr. P. Hannyngton's b aus g Cocoa, 10st.	...	C. Hoyt 1
Mr. E. J. King-King's b aus g Relic, 11st. 2lb.	...	Owner 2
Mr. J. H. M. Douglas's ch aus g Truculence, 10st. 11lb.	...	Owner 3
Capt. Maturin's b aus g Advance, 12st. 2lb.	...	Mr. Greenshields 0
Capt. H. E. Joicey's ch aus g Ramnagger, 10st. 7lb	...	Mr. Bruce 0

BETTING : Evens each Cocoa and Relic, 3 to 1 Ramnagger, 4 to 1 each Advance and Truculence.

After the first few strides Truculence took up the running from Relic and showed the field a clean pair of heels. Coming to the jump in front of the Grand Stand they passed in the following order : Truculence, Cocoa, Relic, Advance and Ramnagger ; they raced down the hill in Indian file and when the top of the hill was reached Cocoa was seen in front with Relic and Truculence bringing up the rear; on entering the straight a good race home ensued between Cocoa and Relic, the former winning by about a length, Truculence lying ten lengths behind. Time—4mins. 10secs.

ARAB POLO SCURRY.—Rs. 49. For ponies that have played regular Station polo in Bangalore, and have never won a race valued Rs. 150. Weight 11st. 3 furlongs.

Capt. S. R. Wybrant's g a h Arth, 11st.	... Mr. Nicholson	1
Mr. T. R. Bruce's b a g Ogara, 11st. 4lb.	... Owner	2

Mr. C. A. C. Mackenzie's b a g Mac, 11st. 4lb	... Capt. Ley	0

BETTING : 2 to 1 on Mac, 6 to 4 agst. Ogara, 3 to 1 each Char and Arth, and 6 to 1 each Banjo and Marquis.

Arth came out of the scurry from the distance and beat all the others with ease, winning by a couple of lengths from Ogara, Banjo third by one length. Time—44secs.

M. I. RACE.—For a cup presented by Messrs. Wrenn, Bennett and Co., value Rs. 49, to the winner, Rs. 15 to the second, and Rs. 5 to the third, confined to ponies that have been regularly ridden on Parade. Owners up. Weight 10st. 7lb.

Sergt. Simpson's b aus m Scout	...	Owner 1
Tpr. Girlings's ch a g White Face	...	Owner 2
Sergt. Hayes's ch a g Chestnut	...	Owner 3
Tpr. Burton's g a g Flea Bite ...	...	Owner 0
Cpl. Howerden's b aus g Faugh o' Ballagh		Owner 0

BETTING : 6 to 4 on Flea Bite, and 2 to 1 the others.

Flea Bite broke away as soon as his rider got on his back but Burton managed to pull him up on the road and turning his head took him to the post. When all were apparently in line, and a start was imminent Flea Bite and another horse got away, thinking no doubt they had been sent off on their journey; the former went round the course while the latter pulled up after going a couple of furlongs. It turned out to be a "no start" and Flea Bite lost all his chances in the race, which was eventually won by Simpson on Scout, who finished about four lengths in front of White Face ; same distance between the latter and Chestnut. Time—2mins. 14secs.

WALER POLO SCURRY.—Rs. 49. For ponies that have played regular Station polo in Bangalore and have never won a race valued at Rs. 150. Weight 11st. 7lb. 3 furlongs.

XX D. H. Polo Club ch aus g Good Shot 11st. 11lb.	... Capt Ley	1

We fortunately escaped what looked like proving a wet day to finish up with, though the sky was dull and lowering, and a light mist seemed to invite rain. Moreover, the temperature, which was maligned as "muggy," was acceptable to all who, like Corporal Brewster, suffer in their "toobs," and dread the autumn's nipping and eager air. The card included no item of paramount importance to stir the Metropolitan brigade to action, and the concluding day's attendance did not add to the average of one of the smallest afforded by a First October week. The going was good, and what fields lacked in quality, they made up for in quantity, keeping the ball merrily rolling, and what little pull the "talent" had was paid for at such a rate of interest as gave them the worst of the deal.

NOTTINGHAM.

The autumn meeting at Colwick Park usually finds high favour with Midlanders, among whom there is not the same antipathy to Monday racing as at many Southern fixtures. In view of this the attendance was if anything slightly in excess of the muster at the corresponding fixture twelve months ago, all the railways carrying heavy freights from town by their convenient specials. Though a thick atmosphere enveloped the Colwick end of the course and obscured the early phases of the races on the straight course, the weather remained fine all the afternoon, and mild in temperature at that. The outstanding feature of the day's racing was the stylish victory of Rushcutter, the prevailing Cesarewitch favourite, in the chief event, Persimmon's son cutting Specifical and Altitude down from the distance to outstay his opponents, and score cleverly. He was travelling a deal faster at the finish than at any part of the race, and considering the water-logged state of the course the time—2mins. 59⅘secs.—was respectable. Results:—

LANG

"FIELD," June 12, 1909:

". . . . a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumbnail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs. Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked. . . . . Congratulation may be permitted concerning the lively balance and neat finish of the gun submitted."

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

M. W. K. Vanderbilt's Ripolin, 3yrs., 7st. 12lb.	O'Neil	0

BETTING: 7 to 2 agst. Moulins la Marche, 5 to 1 Rebelle, 6 to 1 each Biniou and Ronde de Nuit, 12 to 1 each Messaouda, Talo Biribil, Duc D'Albe, Ripolin, and Negofol, 20 to 1 Aveu, 33 to 1 each agst. Herouval and Chulo, and 65 to 1 agst. Hag to Hag.

PLACE BETTING: 1,305 to 100 agst. Hag to Hag, 18 to 10 agst. Ronde de Nuit, and 11 to 4 agst. the Talo Biribil.

From a good start Ripolin made the running from Ronde de Nuit, Messaouda, Rebelle, and Chulo, Moulins la Marche heading the rest, of whom Hag to Hag was last. So they ran for the first half-mile, when Rebelle and Messaouda improved their positions, Ronde de Nuit and Biniou coming next, with Talo Biribil most prominent of the rest. Soon afterwards Herouval joined Talo Biribil, with Chulo and Biniou next. The last-named was beaten by the heavy going and got hopelessly shut in. At the turn for home Hag to Hag came through, and quickly passed Talo Biribil, Massaouda, and Ronde de Nuit. At the distance Moulins la Marche appeared to have a chance, but dropped away immediately, and Hag to Hag shot to the front, and never being afterwards challenged, won easily by two lengths from Ronde de Nuit, who was half a length in front of Talo Biribil. Massaouda was fourth. Time—2min. 43⅗secs.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

For the first time since the opening Saturday of the season Chelsea on the 2nd instant succeeded in winning a First League match, the Stamford Bridge team pulling through by the odd goal in five against Bolton Wanderers. It had been hoped that Hilsdon, who has been kept out of the field for a month, would resume his place at centre-forward, but he did not find himself quite recovered from the injury sustained in the match against Liverpool, Jones still acting as his substitute. Despite the fact that they scored twice in the first twenty minutes, Chelsea were somewhat lucky to win, Bolton Wanderers drawing level soon after the resumption and coming very near to taking the lead, while the winning point resulted from a kick by Windridge taken about mid-field, the Wanderers' custodian misjudging it and letting the ball bounce over him into the net. Although so narrow, the success of Chelsea was exceedingly welcome after a draw and two defeats. Moreover, it was no small achievement to beat Bolton, who in their last three matches had scored five points out of a possible six.

No victory rewarded the efforts of Tottenham Hotspur at Bristol, but the North London club, on halving the points, improved upon their previous performances away from home this season. The forwards fell away after change of ends, but Boreham kept a splendid goal, and Coquet, who had Burton for a partner at back, also defended well. A very different fate befel Woolwich Arsenal who, ill-advised in playing McDonald in goal, seeing that the Plumstead custodian was suffering from an injured knee, lost at Blackburn by no less than 7 to 0. Up to the interval the Arsenal made a creditable stand, but afterwards the Rovers carried all before them.

Liverpool supplied the surprise of the afternoon in the First League games, visiting their Everton neighbours at Goodison Park, and there gaining a victory by 3 goals to 2. Apart from the fact that Everton stand at the head of the competition, the performance was remarkable, seeing that Everton led until quite late in the game. The match between Manchester United and Newcastle United—Cup holders and League champions respectively—drew a great crowd to the Clayton enclosure. Manchester should have won, but Duckworth, putting through his own goal, equalised for Newcastle, and, reduced to nine men at the finish, Manchester did very well to escape with a draw. Sheffield United, the one unbeaten team, materially improved their position with a win at Nottingham, while Sheffield Wednesday gained their first victory at the expense of Preston North End, who are now alone in not possessing a single win.

In the second division of the League visiting clubs enjoyed an unusual measure of success, no fewer than six of them winning their matches. Those who went down on their own ground were Hull City, Clapton Orient, Oldham Athletic, Blackpool, West Bromwich Albion, and Birmingham, so that some real upsets of form occurred. The defeat of Hull City was the great surprise of the afternoon, although in Manchester City they were opposed to a very formidable combination. For all that the doings of the Hull team until yesterday suggested their being able to hold their own at all. The downfall robs them of their unbeaten record, as until meeting Manchester City they had won five out of six matches, the game with Wolverhampton Wanderers being left drawn. Another remarkable result was that in the match at West Bromwich between the Albion and Burnley. Having lost three out of five engagements Burnley did not appear to possess much chance of escaping another beating, but they scored twice in the first half, and defended so stubbornly that the Albion could only get through once. The two London clubs differed in their experiences, Clapton Orient being beaten quite unexpectedly at Homerton by Lincoln City, while Fulham proved victorious at Oldham. Fulham thoroughly deserved their success, the forwards playing extremely well, and a draw would perhaps have been a more fitting result in the other match. Despite their defeat West Bromwich Albion keep their position at the head of the competition, an extra match successfully fulfilled giving them the advantage over Hull City. Derby County are third, with a fine goal average. Yesterday they scored six times against Grimsby Town, and obviously possess a capital forward line.

By far the most noteworthy performance in the Southern League was the victory gained by Millwall over Northampton. Though not showing the fine form that enabled them to carry off the championship last season, Northampton had done sufficiently well to suggest that they had an easy task at North Greenwich, but calculations were upset. The introduction of Brearley at inside left for Millwall materially enhanced the attacking power of the side—hitherto the weakest point in the team—and throughout the East London side had the best of the game. This is the first success gained by Millwall in seven matches, five of which have been lost, and the only sides who have yet to taste the sweets of victory are Exeter City, Watford, and Reading. Swindon, who ran Northampton such a close race last season, could do no more than draw with Plymouth Argyle, but the Wiltshire club have recently shown such in-and-out form that this result came as no surprise. New Brompton, who have so far played more consistent football than any other eleven in the competition, beat Exeter City after a hard struggle and they now hold a lead of two points over Queen's Park Rangers, their nearest rivals.

CHELSEA vs. BOLTON W.—Chelsea, by a fluky and sensational goal in the last minute, beat Bolton Wanderers by three goals to two at Stamford Bridge. The conditions were ideal, and a crowd of 35,000 people were present. Chelsea played Harding for Walton, and Jones still led the forwards. Edmundson was unable to play for Bolton, owing to illness, and Davies kept goal. Chelsea had the better of the opening half, and much of their forward work was excellent. One great combined movement left Downing with a clear goal, but he shot wretchedly. After seventeen minutes' play Warren sent to Brawn, and from his centre Jones headed through, Davis failing to hold the ball. Three minutes' later Downing got a good goal, following a corner kick. Hughes hit the post from close range, and after half an hour Hunter shot hard at goal, and Whitley allowed the ball to go through his hands. Chelsea led by two goals to one at the interval, and in the second half Bolton were the better side. Hunter got another clever goal in nine minutes, and both Jones and Wileman went close. Windridge hit the post, and once Whitley luckily fell in the way of a shot from Hughes. In the last minute Windridge kicked the ball hard forward from the goal line. Davies should have cleared easily, but he allowed the ball to bounce over his head into the net. It was an extraordinary and very luck goal. Chelsea, 3; Bolton Wanderers, 2.

BLACKBURN ROVERS vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—In anticipation of a keen game, about 12,000 people attended the Ewood Park ground to see the Rovers oppose Woolwich Arsenal. Splendid weather favoured the match, and the ground was in excellent condition. Both clubs had their full strength in the field. The Rovers were the more aggressive at the outset, and there was a sensational incident after a few minutes. Bracegirdle made a brilliant run, and after rounding one of the Arsenal backs passed to Aitkenhead, who shot through, only to be given off-side. When the game had been in progress for twenty minutes, however, Chapman scored for the Rovers, who for the remainder of the half held the upper hand without getting through again. In the first half the Rovers had shown decided superiority at all points, but few people were prepared for the complete collapse of the Arsenal which took place after the change of ends. The Woolwich goalkeeper was handicapped by an injured knee, and he was beaten no fewer than six times before the end of the game. The scorers for the Blackburn Rovers were Aitkenhead, Latheron, Bracegirdle, Anthony Davies and Walmsley. Blackburn Rovers, 7; Woolwich Arsenal, 0.

BRISTOL CITY vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—At Bristol, before 9,000 people. During a well-contested first half Bristol City showed better form than their opponents, but Boreham kept goal well and was well supported when Bristol took corner kicks. On occasion Tottenham attacked strongly, Middlemiss playing well. He had one good shot saved finely by Clay, who, however, should have been beaten by Steel from a nice pass by Middlemiss. At half time nothing had been scored. Early in the second half the play went in favour of Bristol City, who quickly forced two fruitless corners. During this period of the game Coquet at back and Boreham in goal accomplished much good work for Tottenham Hotspur. The Tottenham Hotspur forwards were not in nearly such good form as in the first half and Clay had few shots to save, while at the other end Boreham was severely tested by Cowell and Stanniforth. Nothing was scored, however, and the game ended in a draw. Bristol City, 0; Tottenham Hotspur, 0.

CLAPTON O. vs. LINCOLN CITY.—There were 8,000 people at Homerton to see Lincoln City play Clapton Orient, and the result of a hard contested game was an unexpected defeat for the home team by two goals to one. Lincoln's first goal came in the first few minutes, and was due to a miskick by Johnstone, which let Burrell run on to beat Whittaker with a low shot. The Orient were generally the more aggressive, but the dashes of the nippy Lincoln forwards kept the Orient defenders active. After twenty minutes' play Yule got down following a fast movement on the left, and sent right across goal to Foster, who shot into the net. Despite numerous and sustained attacks, the Orient could never quite overcome Lincoln's defence. After the interval, the Orient re-arranged their forwards, Louch going centre and McLean resuming his old partnership with Parker on the right. This worked an improvement, but Clapton were not in luck's way, and many well-directed efforts just failed to bring the much-desired goal. The home team were almost disheartened by their repeated failures when Liddell unexpectedly shot a good goal. This was five minutes from the end and with a last desperate rally the Orient forced four corners and Williams hit the post when a goal seemed certain. Lincoln City, 2; Clapton Orient, 1.

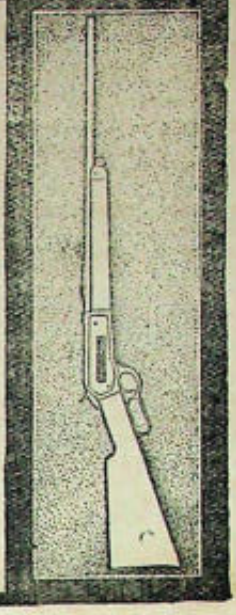
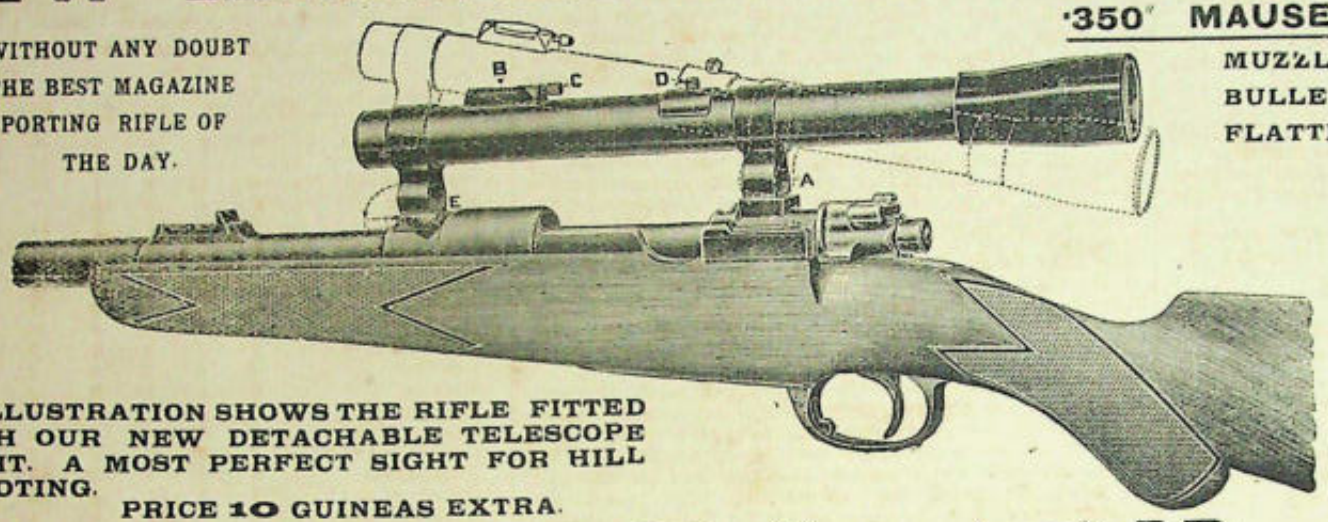
BRENTFORD vs. NORWICH.—Brentford sustained their first home defeat in the Southern League when Norwich City beat them after a rather poor game by 1—0. Both teams were at full strength. Right up to the interval the game went in favour of Brentford, without, however, producing anything in the nature of a score, and the nearest approach came from Gooch, who neatly headed a centre from Barnfather into Ling's hands. The start of the second half was very fast, and Bowman seemed to head the ball into the net before Bede scooped it out. The referee was doubtful about the point and had to consult both linesmen before deciding against the home team. A few minutes later Norwich forced a corner, and although Ling got to the ball he



WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.



Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

INDIAN INSECT LIFE. By H. Maxwell Lefroy, M.A., F.E.S., F.Z.S., Entomologist, Imperial Department of Agriculture for India. With 70 full page coloured plates; 16 plain plates, and 500 other Illustrations in the text. Published under the authority of the Government of India. Crown 4to. 800 pages. Cloth, Rs. 20.

"It is evident that the author aims at interesting the general public as well as the scientific workers, and it is certain that whoever takes the volume in his hands will not put it down without finding something to make him wish to open it again. But the great mass of the book, as might be expected, is hard scientific fact and to young workers in the Province there is a mine of information in this first collection of the united labours of the Department in book form tested and sifted and arranged with no common skill."—Madras Mail.

THE WATERFOWL OF INDIA AND ASIA. Being a New and Enlarged Edition of "How to know the Indian Ducks," but including those species of Waterfowl which are found in Asia. By Frank Finn, B.A., Oxon., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. Cloth back, paper sides. Rs. 2-8.

 The handiest, the most complete, and the most accurate guide ever published at so small a price. The Illustrations by the famous bird-artist, H. Gronvold, include all those species of Ducks likely to fall to the gun in ordinary Indian shooting.

INSECT INTRUDERS IN INDIAN HOMES. By E. R. Stebbing, F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S. Imperial Forest Zoologist to the Government of India. Large crown 8vo. Cloth, Rs. 4-8.

An entertaining book on the familiar insects of India. With numerous Illustrations in the text showing these small intruders in our homes in the aspect they most commonly affect. The Illustrations are unique and unusually interesting. Pictures of all sorts of queer little "animals" stand out life like from the margins of the text in striking and familiar attitudes. The author's style is light, pleasant and humorous, reminding one anon of the inimitable "EHA" whose classic books still fascinate thousands of readers, young and old.

The Rangoon Gazette.—"Mr. Stebbing has a highly readable style, and we confidently recommend his little book to the notice of our readers. The get up is admirable. A rivulet of print meanders through a meadow of margin and that meadow is filled with admirable Illustrations of insects and insect life and surroundings in India."

The Madras Mail.—"A brightly written little work...purely popular...will appeal to a wide circle of readers."

only partially cleared, and Allsop scored through a forest of legs. The game became very ragged after this, and although Brentford did most of the pressing their shooting was still very erratic. Bartlett played a fair game at outside right but his shooting was no better than his comrade's. In the last few minutes Reid was fouled in the penalty area, but Bowman made a sad mess of the resultant kick, and the game ended in a narrow win for Norwich. Norwich City, 1; Brentford, 0.

CROYDON COMMON vs. QUEEN'S PARK RANGERS.—After a poor, one-sided game at Croydon Queen's Park Rangers beat Croydon Common by 3 goals to 0. There were 8,000 spectators, and the match was contested in delightful weather. Croydon pressed at the start, Hodgkinson nearly scoring on two occasions, but once the Rangers got accustomed to the swampy conditions there was only one team in the hunt. Faster and cleverer and bigger, they completely outplayed the Croydon men, and might easily have won by more than they did. Steer missed an open goal with Hewitson on the ground, but before the interval, however, he scored for the Rangers. Early in the second half Travers shot a couple of splendid goals for the Rangers. After this the game became a scramble, and nothing more was scored. Queen's Park Rangers, 3; Croydon Common, 0.

RUGBY RULES.

HARLEQUINS vs. RICHMOND.—There was a good attendance at the opening of the new Rugby Union ground at Twickenham, when a good game was played between the Harlequins and Richmond. The ground was rather soft in consequence of recent rains and the ball became greasy towards the close. But the principal drawback was the long grass, which should have been cut before the game commenced. The Harlequins were much stronger behind and had all the better of the play in the first half, scoring three tries in just over twenty minutes. Birkett had the distinction of making the opening score on the new ground, after a clever run with F. M. Stoop. Soon afterwards Lambert, with the assistance of A. D. Stoop and Boulton, scored on the left, and a few minutes later A. D. Stoop scored cleverly after some loose play. Lambert failed with all the place kicks, and at the interval the Harlequins led by nine points to nothing. In the second half the Richmond forwards, who were much clever in the loose, outplayed their opponents, and as the rsult of some sound dribbling Odgers scored two tries for them and Terry improved in both cases. But though the Harlequins were inferior in the pack their backs were always dangerous, and after having been kept on the defensive for some time by the opposing pack, the halves made a good opening; all the threes handled and F. M. Stoop, who received the last pass, ran round behind the posts and Lambert easily improved. This score came between the two Richmond tries, and the Harlequins won by 14 points to 10. Harlequins, 1 goal 3 tries; Richmond, 2 goals.

OLD LEYSIANS vs. OLD BLUES.—A slippery ball accounted for a very tame opening half in this game at Wandsworth, but later on an exceedingly keen contest ensued. The Old Leysians crossed over with a lead of a try to love, and that was gained by Hosken after a splendid run, Mellor having failed with the kick. The Old Blues quickly found their form, for first Rouse and then Cuthill ran over with tries, both of which McKenzie converted into goals. However, another try was soon forthcoming for the home side when B. H. Holloway crossed the line in brilliant fashion for Mellor to improve. Pollard in a race with the opposing full back got there first and increased the visitors lead but this time McKenzie failed to convert. Great excitement was produced when Buttery ran over for the Leysians, as a successful kick following it would have made the scores level just on time. Hosken, however, could not add the extra points and so the Old Blues just won by thirteen points to eleven. Blues, 2 goals 1 try; Leysians, 1 goal 2 tries.

LONDON WELSH vs. BRISTOL.—Played at Wandsworth, about 2,000 persons watching a well-contested spirited game, in which the Welshmen were just sufficiently superior to win. There was little in the game during the early stages, but the home team seemed the more likely to score on several occasions. The smart foot-work by Bristol, a clever kick by Boddie, and a dash over the line after the ball by Shaw, ended in Bristol getting the first try. Shipp converted from near the touch line. On restarting, the Welsh took the game in hand, and after several mishaps when well-placed Davies cleverly got through and gave H. C. Evans a walk-over at the corner. J. S. Evans just failed by inches to convert, and at half-time the Welshmen were two points in arrears. Though there was little that was brilliant, there was a lot of good play in the second half, but spoiling and defending were the principal characteristics. There was one great exception, and then, following smart play by the Welshmen, T. P. Lloyd was given the ball thirty yards out. Striding through half the Bristol side without anyone being able to get a hand on him, he scored under the bar, and J. S. Evans goaled. London Welsh, 1 goal 1 try; Bristol, 1 goal.

GOLF.

ROYAL AND ANCIENT CLUB.—On the old course at St. Andrews, on Saturday the replayed tie for the Royal and Ancient Club's gold medal, the second prize at the autumn meeting on the previous day, resulted in favour of Mr. Robert Maxwell. The amateur champion, it will be remembered, tied with Mr. John L. Low, each with 78. On playing off, Mr. Maxwell accomplished a score of 80, while his opponent made no return. The tie produced some very exciting golf, for, during the greater part of the round, Mr. Low more than held his own. He made an indifferent start, getting into the burn from a bad lie, and taking 6 for the opening hole. Mr. Maxwell missed a holeable putt, but was down in 5. Mr. Low dropped another stroke at the second, where he made an indifferent tee shot, and was then too strong with his run-up. He made amends by getting a splendid second shot to the fourth, and holing out in 4 to 6. At the long fifth hole the champion was trapped in the bunker on the face of the hill from his second shot, and taking 6 to his opponent's 5, the scores were level at this point. Mr. Low took three putts in the next green, and at the turn Mr. Maxwell still led by 1 stroke. The scores for the first nine holes were: Mr. Maxwell, 39; Mr. Low, 40. Mr. Low drew level at the tenth, where Mr. Maxwell missed a putt, and at the eleventh Mr. Low took the lead for the first time. At the twelth the champion laid his approach dead, and got down in 3 to 5. Mr. Low was trapped when going to the long fourteenth, and took 6 to his opponent's 5. He lost another stroke at the fifteenth, and was then 3 points behind Mr. Maxwell. The contest ended at the seventeenth, where Mr. Low was again bunkered. He took three to recover, and the hole cost him 9 to 6. At this point Mr. Low tore up his card. The details of Mr. Maxwell's round of 80 were:

Out	...	5 4 5 5 6 4 4 3 3—39	80
Home	...	5 4 3 5 5 4 4 6 5—41

SWIMMING.

THE A.S.A. FIVE HUNDRED.—The National 500 yards championship was decided at the Hackney Baths on Saturday, the 2nd instant. Previous to the race, T. S. Battersby expressed an opinion that record would not be broken owing to the bath being too long Swimming with the utmost confidence, Battersby led the holder, Henry Taylor, all the way, and without unduly exerting himself won easily in 6mins. 26 1/5secs., as compared with B. B. Kieran's record of 6mins. 7 1/5secs., made in August 1905. Details:—

		Time. m. s.
1	T. S. Battersby, Southport S. C. ...	... 6 26⅕
2	H. Taylor, Chadderton S. C. ...	... 6 36⅘
3	F. P. Giles, City of London Police S. C.	... 7 22⅖

Giles was rather late in getting away, but Battersby at once cut out the pace, and at the first turn led by a foot. This advantage he increased to a yard at the second turn, with Giles another 5 yards behind. The leader was showing a clean, easy action, and at 121 yards was a yard and a half to the good, and 20 yards in front of Giles. In the fifth length Taylor drew up, but at the sixth the Southport man was still 2 yards ahead. From this point he went ahead, and at the eighth turn was 5 yards in front, while on reaching the ninth length Giles was exactly a length behind. Taylor gradually dropped back also, and at the twelfth was 12 yards to the bad. Battersby won by 15 yards; 45 yards dividing second and third.

BILLIARDS.

H. W. STEVENSON vs. A. E. WILLIAMS.—The match of 18,000 up, in which Stevenson conceded a start of 7,000 points ended at the Soho-square Salon last Saturday night in an overwhelming victory for the young Manchester player by no fewer than 6,435 points. All through the game Williams had been on top, for Stevenson could never really settle down. Day by day Williams increased his advantage, and when play began on the last afternoon he was leading by 6,506 points. During the session Williams, making breaks of 253 (full from 210 unfinished), 58, 60, 44, and 69, aggregated 458—his necessary points while Stevenson totalled 563. His chief breaks were 106, 59, 137, 103 and 46. At the interval the scores were:

Williams (in play)	... 17,543
Stevenson ...	... 11,140

In the evening Williams did best, and by scoring 457 against 425 won easily as stated. His best breaks were 87, 49, 104, 85, and 52 (unfinished), Stevenson being responsible for 58, 44, 123, and 142. Final scores:

Williams	... 18,000
Stevenson	... 11,565

C. HARVERSON vs. B. ELPHICK.—At Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester-square, last Saturday night, the match of 3,000 up ended in favour of Harverson, who conceded 2,000 points start by no fewer than 1,582. During the day the chief breaks were 59, 68, 48, 140, 265, 271, and 48, by Harverson, while the South Londoner, who has been far from well, was credited with best breaks of 49, 75, 50, 54, 82, 125, 101, and 66. Full scores:

Harverson	... 8,000

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. 29TH LANCERS.—Played on the 14th instant, the 29th winning by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—Fast up and down play, Clarke drawing first blood for the Royals.

Second Chukker.—The 29th did most of the attacking and Marchant equalised, but Clarke put the Royals ahead once more with a successful long shot just before time. During this period Captain Marchant sustained a heavy fall but was able to resume.

Third Chukker.—This chukker was devoid of score. The 29th pressed hard but both teams lost chances.

Fourth Chukker.—Play was very fast in this period: Meynell put the teams on terms and towards the end the Royals tried hard to again secure the lead, Willis having to hit behind in order to save.

Fifth Chukker.—The Fusiliers pressed, but Willis cleared and play being transferred, Marchant hit a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Clarke put in a good run and passed to Annesley, who hit wide. The Fusiliers continued to attack and had the best of the play, but failing to score were beaten by 3 goals to 2. Teams:—

33RD CAVALRY vs. 13TH HUSSARS A.—This game was also played on the 14th instant, the 33rd winning by 5 goals to 3.

First Chukker.—Fast play, the Hussars pressing most of the time. No score.

Second Chukker.—The Hussars kept up the attack, but Colonel Edwards was equal to all emergencies and cleared time and again.

Third Chukker.—The 33rd took up the offensive and Collins opened the scoring. They continued to press and sound play by Vanneck prevented further score.

Fourth Chukker.—The 33rd scored a goal through Wise, but the Hussars had most of the play during the period, Hamilton Grace being conspicuous for several good runs.

Fifth Chukker.—The Cavalry got away and Collins scored. With three goals against them the Hussars never slackened and Hamilton Grace playing brilliantly hit two goals in succession.

Sixth Chukker.—The 33rd pressed and Collins scored. Wise following this up with a fifth point. The Hussars made desperate efforts and were rewarded by another goal. Time was called with the score: 33rd 5 Goals, Hussars 3 goals. Teams:—

FINAL.

29TH LANCERS vs. 33RD CAVALRY.—These teams met in the final game on the 16th instant, before a large and fashionable assembly. The 33rd were the superior team throughout and eventually won by 4 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—Up and down play of which the 29th had slightly the better. No score.

Second Chukker.—Edwards made a brilliant run down the field and scored a goal. Resildar Mahomed Hussain was next prominent for a good run but failed in front of goal.

Third Chukker.—The 33rd kept up a strong attack and Collins scored. The 29th, though making great efforts, were kept penned in their own territory.

Fourth Chukker.—Meynell ran down and scored for the 29th. Then the 33rd returned to the attack, but Willis cleared in splendid fashion.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast up and down play. Beattie scored for the 33rd and then the 29th pressed, but they lost several chances and had bad luck on more than one occasion.

Sixth Chukker.—The 33rd attacked and a further goal by Beattie placed their victory beyond doubt. Final score: 33rd Cavalry 4 goals, 29th Lancers 1 goal. Teams:—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA ATHLETIC SPORTS.

Second Day, Saturday 23rd October 1909.

THE 19th annual athletic meeting of the Bombay Gymkhana was concluded this afternoon, a large gathering of spectators witnessing good sport. The programme opened with the final in the 100 yards which was won by H. J. Shaw by two yards in 10⅘secs. Shaw, who won the Quarter Mile last Saturday, romped home in the Half mile and was placed third in the Hurdles. Captain O'Brien won the Young Cup for the best aggregate score of points with 33, H. J. Shaw running him close with 32. In addition to his success in the shot putting the previous Saturday Captain O'Brien to-day won the High Jump, the Hurdles, was second in the 100 Yards, and third in the 150 Yards Handicap. Another prominent performer was C. D. Baker, who won the 150 Yards Handicap Quarter Mile Obstacle Race. Long Jump and was third in the 100 Yards High Jump. E. L. Sim won the Quarter Mile Handicap and ran second in the Hurdles, Half Mile and Quarter Mile and was also second in the High Jump. Appended are results of the events on the second day.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE, DARJEELING, ANNUAL ATHLETIC SPORT.

Monday, 18th October 1909.

THE Annual Sports at North Point were held this afternoon in fine weather, though rain fell during the morning. The sports were up to the usual standard; there was a big attendance, the band of the Royal West Kents played at intervals and the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Walsh, wife of the Commissioner of Bhagalpore. Some good performances were put up. J. Johnson scored four wins in the open events and broke the school record for the hurdles. He annexed the North Point Cup for best man and also won the silver watch, chain and medal presented by H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. In "B." Division N. Lindsay also performed creditably, winning every event. Results:—

THE HARRIS TOURNAMENT.

LINCOLNS vs. WORCESTERS.—These teams opened the tournament on the 18th instant before a big crowd of spectators. Play at the start was uneventful, the ball travelling up and down the field. At length a foul against the Lincolns gave the Worcesters an opportunity of scoring but the attempt was fruitless. A free kick to the Lincolns was the next item of importance, but it gave them no advantage. They continued to press, however, and after an abortive corner were awarded another free kick, from which they registered a goal. On resuming the Worcesters tried hard to get on terms. They made determined onslaughts on the Lincolns' goal but all their shots went wide and the Lincolns getting away notched a second point. Play was fast and well contested during the closing stages: the Worcesters lost more than one chance of scoring and had to retire beaten by 2 goals to nil.

LEICESTERS vs. R. F. A.—Played on the 19th instant. The Gunners led off and obtained the first advantage—a corner, which they failed to improve upon. The ball was then taken to the artillery end where the Leicesters forced two corners in succession. Neither was turned to account, but the Leicesters kept their opponents on the defensive for the rest of the half, save for one rush down which resulted in an abortive corner. On changing ends both teams put in good work and play was up and down till the Leicesters got away and a nice pass from the wing was headed in. The Gunners tried hard to equalise, but the Leicesters gave them no openings and taking up the attack once more scored a second goal. Final score: Leicesters 2 goals, R.F.A. nil.

LINCOLNS vs. NORTHAMPTONS.—These teams met on the 20th instant the Northamptons, who had drawn a bye being looked upon as the likely winners. They pressed at the start, but the Lincolns' defence was sound and all attacks were repelled. A couple of good runs by the Lincolns followed and they forced a corner which was not improved upon. They continued to press and several shots were sent in, all of which were cleared. Then the Northamptons transferred play and shot a goal from close quarters, up and down play closing the period. The Lincolns attacked on changing ends but their opponents kept them out and transferred operations. Play ruled in the Lincolns' territory for a spell but they cleared and rushing down equalised in the midst of much enthusiasm. Thereafter play was very fast and all over the ground. The Lincolns eventually took the ball to their opponents' line where they obtained a corner from which they scored. The Northamptons made desperate efforts during the few minutes left but were unable to get on terms. Final score: Lincolns 2 goals, Northamptons 1 goal.

FINAL.

LINCOLNS vs. LEICESTERS.—The final was played on the 22nd instant in the presence of a large gathering, an excellent game ending in a win for the heroes of the recent Bombay Rovers' Tournament by 2 goals to 1. The Leicesters were first to attack and their opponents were kept busy defending till at length they broke away and play was transferred. The game ruled up and down, neither team gaining any advantage till close on time after some lofty kicking by the backs of both teams, the Leicesters got through and banged the ball into the net. The Leicesters took up the attack on changing ends and two shots failed, one sailing over the cross bar, the other striking a post. They kept up the pressure and were at length rewarded with a second goal. The Lincolns made desperate efforts to score, but it was not till the closing stages that they put through, all subsequent attempts to equalise being fruitless. General Swann gave away the cup at the conclusion of the game and congratulated both teams.

INDIAN SNARES.

INNUMERABLE are the methods the native of India is clever at devising, for the snaring of birds and beasts; in fact I am not at all sure that he is not immeasurably better at that than he would be, generally speaking, at shooting his victims, whatever the amount of practice. Be that as it may, the snares remain, and are still resorted to a great deal, I have no doubt; for after all they are, for the most part, made up of materials that cost little or next to nothing—a very weighty consideration, when one comes to think of the ordinarily poor native's resources and means. Besides his ingenuity, he has a quite remarkable patience. With a certain amount of cunning and natural love of trickery added to the other qualities, he is especially well fitted for the purpose of setting and working snares. Some of the "dodges" one hears of seem so very apparent, and almost impossible of result, and yet they have been tried again and again and generally with success in some degree.

Not long ago I found out details of a plan that used to be adopted a few years ago, in parts of Kabul, for catching the "Chicor." There are heaps of these birds to be found in the hilly parts of Northern India. The Punjab has them—and there they are secured with nets too—but the Punjabi understands only the call-bird, for the purposes of enticing the birds to the spots where nets are arranged for them. Probably the Kabuli used a call-bird when he had one, or could beg or borrow it, but when he had no means of getting one he managed otherwise. He procured a length of coarse yellow cotton cloth, ornamented lavishly with black spots and dots, of conspicuous size, and out of this he had fashioned for himself a garment consisting of a kind of loose robe and cap, and mask, all in one. In fact almost exactly the kind of affair that some of the Mahomedan women in India hide their charms beneath, when obliged to leave the seclusion of their own homes, and called by them a burka. The yellow and black was made in the same style, peep holes and all. The idea was, of course, to be mistaken for a leopard! and whether we think the disguise a good one or not, the birds were quite willing to believe he was the creature he started out to represent, and that they had a natural and very particular aversion to. He would creep and crawl along, very carefully, on "all fours," starting some distance away from, and eventually arriving at the place where he has his nets arranged. Once one bird discovered him his success was assured, for this one would call and call, long and loud, collecting all its kind from round about with its continuous and alarmed cries; and they would then all flutter round and follow the "leopard" as it moved cautiously on to the fulfilment of its intention—leading them to the snares prepared for them. This habit among birds of raising an alarm is very common. If there is a snake or a cat about you will hear the mynas, and certainly the "Seven Sisters" create no end of a disturbance, and yet, though they do their chattering from fear, clearly, they will persist in moving round the cause of their alarm—even following it, and sometimes coming quite close. It is just the same with the leopard, or any other creature that they fear.

The other evening I was very much interested in watching a net swung for flying foxes. The men select a tall tree on either side of the one which has fruit on it, and which the flying foxes are known to frequent—and yet not quite in line with it—so that the flying foxes meet it just as they approach the fruit-laden tree. This will be a "pepal" or "goolar" perhaps. Over the high branches of these two trees, then, they throw thin cotton ropes of pretty good length. No hitch or entanglement must occur among the branches—in fact it is essential for the rope to run as lightly and smoothly over these, as it would over a pulley. On to one of these ropes the net is slipped (having rings along the top edge generally) and then the two (one from each tree) are carefully knotted together (those two ends which hang furthest out over the branches)—and the net is spread, wide, from one tree to another, and then by pulling the inner ends of the ropes that have been left hanging to the ground, the whole is drawn up high and level with the top of the fruit tree. A man remains at each of these loose ends, and it is his business afterwards to work this part of the arrangement. He holds his end lightly, letting it run through his fingers when a flying-fox flies into the net and letting the weight of the creature pull the net to the ground with a rush. As soon as one is removed, a tug at the end ropes takes the net up to the old level again, in next to no time, ready for the next. The flying fox is considered very delicate eating, but this is not the only purpose for which they are snared. The fat is said to be a valuable remedy for rheumatism, sprains, and the like.

Starlings—the pink and black variety known as "Pastor Roseus—are caught in nets too, and in large numbers, but the nets for these are worked on quite another principle. There must be two nets in this instance, each about twelve or fifteen feet long, and three or four feet broad—with a cotton rope running along one edge of each. For the setting of these the ground, under a mulberry tree when in fruit—is first hollowed very slightly in a canal or torpedo shape, the depression being about the length of the nets and the width of the two together, when laid side by side "in its widest part. A peg firmly driven into the ground at one extreme end, or point, has one end of each net gathered and tied securely to it. Here too the rope ends that side are secured. Now the two nets are spread along the hollow in the earth, the roped edges being kept on the outer side, and the other two edges lying straight along the centre. The second pair of short ends are likewise gathered at the other end of the canoe, or torpedo shaped arrangement, and they and the rope ends there are merely fastened carefully together, and to them is attached a long length of rope that leads to some distance away, which will, when pulled with a jerk, close the nets. The shoulders of the canoe shape are held wide and open by long narrow strips of bamboo, which are fastened firmly, at the outer edge, to the rope that runs along the side: and on the inside to the net itself, leaving a couple of inches of each slip projecting beyond the net. The points just left projecting are stuck into the ground a little, almost horizontally, so as to give a little resistance, and hold the net widespread. Now loose earth is lightly and thinly spread over the whole affair. The ripe fruit (of the mulberry tree, under which the nets are laid) may be shaken down over it all, or scattered by hand. Starlings come in great numbers, and will settle wherever the fruit is to be seen. One tug at the rope, which was attached to the second point, and which a man holds, will jump the outer roped edges of the nets up, and together, and make them meet, with the captured starlings in between.

Then they have another method, again, for catching "soares" (a small variety of "Seven Sisters" called also, I think, "Jungle Babblers," and among the natives sath bhai) which the natives of some parts of the Punjab consider very good eating.

A dome shaped affair is made of twigs or split bamboo, for all the world like a very coarsely woven basket, of the ordinary shape, and about as wide as an open umbrella. To begin with, into this they put a sparrow (easily caught) and the cries of the sparrow in distress usually attract the "shrike," or "Butcher Bird." He may then be caught, in his turn, by bird lime, or a horse hair noose, on top of the basket. When secured he and the sparrow are tied together under the basket, and the two will make no end of a noise, which will never fail to bring together any number of the "Seven Sisters"—birds that are always well to the fore when there's any scare or disturbance in the Bird World. They hop right on to the basket, chattering and "babbling," and since numerous horse hair nooses have previously been arranged along the twigs, or ribs, of the basket foundation, they walk right into the "trap" and, of course, remain there. The natives know the "Butcher Bird" as the "Latora." And another name that they numerously give the "Seven Sisters" is "Bhatyaries," or in other words women of the caste that parch grain!—and for the very good reason that women of this particular caste have tongues that "beat all others to fits!" The length of their tongues is quite proverbial.

CUSTOMER: "And is this chair really an antique piece of furniture?"

Dealer: "There's no doubt about that. Why it was so worm-eaten when I bought it that I had to have a new back and a new seat and three new legs made for it."

AS William bent over her fair face he whispered, "Darling If I should ask you in French if I might kiss you, what would you answer?"

She, calling up her scanty knowledge of the French language exclaimed, "Fillet doux."
