J. W. NELSON, ESQ., I.C.S.

Honorary Secretary—P. LEO. FAULKNER, ESQ., I.P.

AN interesting little race meeting was held in Dacca on the 17th instant. Unfortunately the elements were not kind and many were kept away by a big storm which broke over the course after the first race. It was the first time a meeting in the rains had been attempted. Several lights of other days were to the fore, notably Fortunatus and Mahomedia, while Noser's win was also very much to the public taste. The financial results of the meeting, despite the adverse climatic conditions, are so favourable that another one will probably be held early in August. Many of the European residents of Dacca and all those of Narayanganj are to be congratulated for the sporting way in which they supported the undertaking.

THERE is a little man in Ipoh with a particularly sharp tongue and an absolute genius for telling repartee. It may also be mentioned that he entirely shaves his head from time to time for the sake of coolness. Recently he offended a fellow-member of the club, who comes from "down under." That evening the latter, wishing to annoy the little man, called out to him across the card-room.

"I say,——, what do you shave your head like that for? You look like a bally convict."

The little man just glanced round in the middle of the game and drawled out :

"That's the worst of you Australians, always got your family history on the brain."

There was a silence that you could have cut with a knife.

HOW GREAT MEN RECOUP THEIR ENERGIES.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Eminent men are the authoritative exponents of a nation's thought. Their views, given with the sense of responsibility which rests upon those who mould public opinion, must command the most earnest attention. When the subject for consideration is the creation and preservation of those physical and mental attributes which so largely enter into the sum total of human success, then, surely, the opinions of those who have risen to the proud position of leaders of men will be all-convincing.

The unanimity with which the most distinguished personages proclaim Sanatogen to be the ideal tonic food remedy, affords striking evidence of the high esteem in which Sanatogen is held as a restorative and a tonic.

Sanatogen is proclaimed as being the most powerful restorative known for renewing and sustaining the vigour of health. When run down and in conditions of lassitude, nervousness, metal inertness, as well as debility, and all the ills foreshadowed by that danger signal depression, Sanatogen is unrivalled. It speedily and permanently restores that buoyancy and elasticity which are the very essence of well-being.

Sir Gilbert Parker, equally famous as a gifted author and an intrepid traveller, is full of enthusiastic praise:

"20, Carlton House Terrace.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Sir John Hare gives us a peep into the means employed to sustain the wonderful vitality which is one of his distinguishing characteristics:

"Upper Berkeley Street.

"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

Lord Sutherland Gower, the creator of the noble Shakespearian memorial at Stratford-on-Avon, says of Sanatogen:

"Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.

"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair expresses his opinion as follows:

"The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral,
London, E.C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Madame Sarah Grand, the gifted authoress of "The Heavenly Twins," says she has found in Sanatogen renewed vigour of body and brain.

"Grove Hill.

"Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sarah Grand

Conclusive proof is forthcoming also in the testimony of over 9,000 physicians as to the superlative merits of Sanatogen as the ideal tonic food remedy.

Amongst the many who have written in praise of Sanatogen, Dr. Andrew Wilson expresses golden opinions in that striking publication, "The Art of Living," a copy of which will be sent gratis and post free on forwarding name and address to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, etc., throughout India.

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

THE TURF.

EPSOM.

The elements had been working to produce the most perfect day of the four for the Ladies' race—summer sunshine, a refreshing breeze, springy turf free from the chalk stains of recent rain, and roads in splendid order of driving. Sport was interesting and exciting too; Electra, the favourite for the Oaks, was left and Perola, who was next in demand, romped home an easy winner Details:—

Belmont Plate (handicap).—Of 800sovs. 6 furlongs.

KEMPTON PARK.

After the strenuous life of the Derby week, backers and layers last Saturday enjoyed the comparative quietude of Kempton, where the surroundings are all that can be desired for the enjoyment of an afternoon's racing. The run on taxicabs was continued, the road division being a strong one, while society mustered in force on the lawn and in the paddock and the business portion of the community was thoroughly well represented. But for getting almost insupportably hot under cover, the weather was simply perfect, and the occupants of the crowded specials from Walterloo were treated to a capital afternoon's sport. Results:—

HURST PARK.

All the world and his wife seemed to be at Hurst Park on With Monday, the attendance being enormous, and the only drawback was the dust that came off the road over the fence. The various enclosures were crowded, and with August-like fervour a glorious sun poured his rays on the country with hardly a breath of air to temper the tropical heat. The going after all was excellent, and fields, except in one instance, ruled well, the holiday makers being given seven races for their money. Results:—

MANCHESTER.

Whit week is always much appreciated by Lancastrians, consequently the attendance on the first day was equal in every department to that which annually assembles, and for once in a way visitors were able to enjoy an uninterrupted view of excellent racing, as the sun shone from a sky breft of clouds. The course rode well; in fact, the jockeys were unanimous in their praise, and with everything going smoothly, and the public backing for the proportion of winners, Manchester received a fillip which after recent disappointing experiences was well deserved. Details:—

Following Wednesday's delightful experiences a huge crowd yesterday enjoyed one of the best day's racing since the venue was removed from the old course at New Barns. Critics have declared that the premises at Castle Irwell would never meet with the requirements of the public, but judging by the patronage yesterday, there is no reason to doubt the future success of the meeting. The course rode beautifully, and the racing was good from start to finish; but favourites went down with aggravating persistency, and the professionals on the whole had far and away the best of the exchanges. Results:—

·375 RIMLESS MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,899 ft. lbs.,

With 200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It is now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Price, plain quality ... ... 20 Guineas.
Best quality and finish, neatly engraved ... ... 25 "
Improved Model Telescope Sight (including fitting) 12 Guineas extra.

ROWING.

THE OXFORD EIGHTS.—Save for the break-up of the glorious weather on Monday, Eights week at Oxford proved a brilliant success. As usual the more attractive social functions will be held during "Commen," and already the list is a truly bewildering one. From the rowing point of view everything was eminently satisfactory. The first Division work was well above average, by pretty common consent, and that of the lower boats remarkably sound on the whole. A splendid entry for Royal Henley is assured. Salient features of the week's rowing were (1) the over-bump which took Oriel II. up three places; (2) the unusual number of no-change courses rowed, (3) the plethora of mishaps to contending oarsmen; and (4) the fine performance of Christ Church in retaining head of the river honours against such a formidable crew as Magdalen I. The latter included five members of this year's winning 'Varsity Eight, and was admittedly the most powerful combination seen on the Isis for many a decade. In physique they had a tremendous advantages with only one man under 11st., whereas Christ Church had no fewer than four. Mr. Gladstone and confreres deserve all praise for thus retaining premier position for the third successive season. Judiciously strengthened, they should also take a lot of beating at Henley. It is instructive that Christ Church, Magdalen, and New College finished in the order placed in 1907-8-9—another very unusual occurrence. The most successful boats otherwise were Brasenose and University II. (who rose three places each) and Oriel II. (who made five bumps and thereby won their oars). Altogether, twenty-five bumps were registered in the six days—which demonstrated the previously-expressed opinion that (in the main) the boats were very equal in calibre. Interest now centres upon the Varsity Sculls and Pairs' racing, which promises to be equally interesting. If they all start—as expected—a very fine fight is assured between Messrs. Bourne, Hope, and Gladstone, the Blues. Hope won in 1906, Gladstone last year while Bourne figured strongly for the "Wingfields" last summer. These three will find a doughty opponent in Mr. Mitchison (Pembroke and Hertford), who was beaten in his heat last year by Bourne, but has improved considerably this. The Brothers Gladstone won the pairs in 1908, and, partnered by Mr. H. R. Barker, "A. C." should make a bold bid for further winning brackets on the present occasion.

CAMBRIDGE.—All the crews have made some progress during the week, but only one or two combinations are really showing good form. Further ill-luck has befallen Trinity Hall, and Thomson, the Blue, has had to forego his position at stroke owing to indisposition. In consequence of this D. C. R. Stuart, the 'Varsity stroke, has come to the rescue and now sets the work. They have since made advancement, but will have to improve a good deal to hold their position at the head. Mr. Brooksbank coaches. Jesus are now training on well under the advice of Mr. Steve Fairbairn. First Trinity are maintaining their early promise, and occasionally show capital pace. Mr. Stuart advises. Lady Margaret have made numerous changes, and are now stroked by Penfold. With Mr. Bushe Fox as mentor they are gradually improving. Pembroke have not made much progress. Emmanuel continue to display fairly good style, and Caius are earnest workers, but have a tendency to hang over the stretcher. Third Trinity are showing capital form, and sit their boat well. Mr. Gibbons, the old 'Varsity stroke, has been in attendance. The lower boats Jesus II., Corpus, Clare, and Dowing are doing well.

GOLF.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

WHEN I closed my note last week, the Championship had reached its final stage, Mr. Robert Maxwell, the Tantallon player, being left in to fight it out with Captain C. K. Hutchison. As the appended details show, Mr. Maxwell won, after a hard match, thus repeating his success of 1903. Curiously enough it was on the last occasion of the championship being decided on the Honourable Company of Edinburgh golfer's course that Mr. Maxwell was successful, but whereas he then defeated Mr. Horace Hutchinson, the winner of the first championship, by the large margin of 6 up and 5 to play, Mr. Maxwell last Friday only made certain of premier honours by a put on the last green.

It was a stubbornly contested match, and the players were never separated by more than 2 holes. Captain Hutchison only twice held the lead, but the Honourable Company player, on several greens, only failed by an inch or two to run down long puts to win instead of halve. Fine weather prevailed during the game. The scores were:

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 12th June and Monday, the 14th—Were two of the worst days as regards sport we have had this season. Covert after covert was drawn and several jack found but hounds were unable to hunt them for more than a few hundred yards. There was absolutely no scent.

Tuesday, 15th June.—Melkaval Village, 12 noon. Although the meet took place here with the intention of hunting the Nunjanad country, it was found too dry and hard to do so, a move was made for Andy and the Parson's Valley. Drawing down the bog a cub was put up, a short run resulted up and down Leatham's Nullah, before he went to ground in the stream from whence he bolted but was run into almost at once and eaten up. A lot of country was drawn after this and it was well on in the afternoon that we found again in the Kabbalkod Valley : scent had greatly improved and hounds went off with a good cry just below Kabbalkod Mund on the line of a jack viewed by the first whip. At first they pointed for Irwin's Clump, crossing the Kabbalkod stream, then swung back over it and raced up to the corner of Little Yemakal, then turned left handed over to One Tree Hill, then to the right into and through the bottom of Yemakal Shola past Duff's Earth and plunged down the Devil's Dyke and up the far side just short of Hungerford Plantation and bent to the left over Back Staircase into Staircase Shola. Pushing him through and out at the bottom they ran down the bog almost to Gold Mine crossing before they swung to the left and crossed the Pykara Road at the 7th mile; ran down the ridge to Portal's Crossing and over the next ridge and Cox's Crossing to below Pirate ; from here over the top of Hamlet and along the wire fence with Warwick Shola on the left they crossed the bog below Badankod Mund and on through Kingod Mund Shola to Boars Copse where the Master stopped them as it was too late to risk the ghats.

Thursday, 17th June.—Municipal Crossing 8 A.M. It was a glorious morning without a cloud in the sky. The country is getting dry and hard ; it is more than a week since we have had any rain; early meets will be the order of the day next week. On the other side of Municipal Crossing hounds feathered on a line near New Covert but nothing came of it. Drawing round the hill a jack was viewed near the small stream that runs down past New Covert. Hounds were close on to him as he raced a over Bagman and down to the right and crossed the Municipal Stream above Treble Crossing, then up the hill below the 5th hole on the golf course and back to the stream, but was run into before he could cross it. We moved on from here over Newmarket and up the Sandy Nullah Valley to the bottom of Governor's Shola. Below Martyn's hounds opened on a line and carried it up through Cromwell to the side round the top of Staircase; this side of the hill is quite the worst and steepes bit ; horses were quite blown by the time they reached the side. Hounds put their jack to ground in an earth near the top of Staircase facing Herbert Plantation. On drawing down Lawley's Course hounds touched a line and hunted it to the Pykara Road near the Toll Bar, where it fizzled out. The next jack was found on the bank of the Demon Valley stream ; he led hounds up to Doris Crossing, then swung to the right over the Sigur Road and set his mask for Hanging Shola; running through the bottom of this he swept left handed round the hill to the Umbrella Tree and disappeared down the ghats. It was frightfully hot by now so hounds returned to kennels.

MYSORE BIRTHDAY TOURNAMENT.

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. 2ND QUEEN'S OWN SAPPERS AND MINERS.—This game on the 16th instant opened the tournament, the local team defeating the Bangalore quartette by 6 goals to 4. There was a big attendance which included the Maharajah, the Yuvaraj, and most of their guests.

First Chukker.—The Sappers got away and Pringle scored a goal. Mysore equalised immediately on resuming through Bunny Singh.

Second Chukker.—Mysore pressed and Bunny Singh crowned two splendid runs with successful shots. Runs by the Sappers were stopped.

Third Chukker.—Mysore continued to attack and registered two more goals, the Engineers' efforts being fruitless.

Fourth Chukker.—The Sappers made strenuous endeavours to score but the Mysore defence was too strong, and Fyaz Mahomed getting away added a sixth goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Sappers were rewarded with a goal in rather a slow period.

Sixth Chukker.—The Sappers attacked strongly and Johnson hit a goal. Mysore then pressed but were pulled up for a foul, Johnson scoring from the penalty hit. Time was called shortly after, the score at the finish being : Mysore, 6 goals ; Sappers and Miners, 4 goals. Teams :—

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. 14TH KING'S HUSSARS.—This game on the 18th instant ended in an easy win for Mysore. The Cavalry men played well at the start, but their opponents ran rings round them after the first two chukkers.

First Chukker.—The Hussars pressed throughout this period and Tilney opened the scoring.

Second Chukker.—The Hussars continued to attack but could not score, and Mysore rushing down equalised through Fyaz Mahomed

Third Chukker.—From this chukker to the close the Gymkhana had the upper hand and registered 3 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars were kept defending and Mysore hit 2 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Mysore continued to press and added two further goals to their score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hussars attacked and kept their opponents busy but they could only score one goal through Joicey. Mysore rushed down in the last minute of play and Bunny Singh scored the last goal. Final score : Mysore Gymkhana, 9 goals; 14th Hussars, 2 goals. Of the 9 goals scored by Mysore Fyaz Mahomed was credited with four, Bunny Singh with two, Desaraj Urs and Gopalraj Urs with one each. Teams:—

Umpires :—Captains Henderson and White.

BANGALORE GYMKHANA vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—Played on the 18th instant, the Deccan Horse winning easily by 12 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Deccan Horse pressed and after two unsuccessful attempts the ball was put through by Kounsul. Worgan hit a second goal and before the close of the period Ross scored a third.

Second Chukker.—Level play till the Gymkhana got away and Pile scored, Bangalore pressed for the rest of the period.

Third Chukker.—The 20th attacked and goals were scored by Ross and Worgan.

Fourth Chukker.—Nur Khan hit a goal with a long shot and Worgan followed it up with another. A free hit to the Gymkhana for crossing against the Deccans was not improved upon and the 20th getting possession pressed for the rest of the chukker.

Fifth Chukker.—The 20th attacked throughout this chukker, Ross, Kounsul and Nur Khan all scoring goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Kounsul hit a goal and Worgan made a fine run which was checked but the Deccans returned to the attack, and Kounsul scoring another goal they ran out winners by 12 goals to 1. Teams :—

13TH HUSSARS vs. MYSORE SERVICE LANCERS.—Also played on the 18th instant, the Hussars winning by 6 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—Up and down play. Taylor and Lockett scored for the Hussars.

Second Chukker.—Level play ; both goals were visited but neither team scored.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till just before the close the Hussars got away and Bayley scored.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars kept up a continuous attack and Taylor and Steele scored goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Level play ; no score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers rushed down but were stopped and Taylor scoring another goal the Hussars won as stated. Teams :—

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

DALHOUSIE vs. K. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on the 16th instant an interesting game ending in a draw. The Dals had the best of the play in the first half, but though their forward line showed good combination their shooting was poor and they could only score once, Montgomery putting through after a good individual run by Hurlston. On changing ends play was fast and very level. The soldiers got away immediately and Bird equalised. The Shropshires continued to press but could not add to their score. Play then ruled up and down and both goals were visited but there was no further score, the result being a draw of one all. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clarke and Quail, backs; Wilson, Morrison and Wright, halves; Prike, Burnett, Montgomery, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

K.S.L.I.—Robinson, goal; Busby and Howells, backs; Hartfield' Roberts and Hayley, halves; Poole, Onion, Birch, Bird and Sanderson, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Adams (C.R.A.)

CUSTOMS vs. RANGERS. Played on the Customs ground on the 16th instant the home team winning by 2 goals to nil. The first half was in favour of the Customs but they failed to score, and the teams crossed over with a blank score sheet. The Rangers rallied on resuming but could not get through, and the Customs took up the attack. Vears scored the first goal from a centre by Boileau and L. A. Smith beat Margrett shortly after. The Rangers were unable to score and were defeated as stated. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Margrutt, goal; Chandler and Minet, backs; Cornis, Coby and Allen, halves; Davis, Skimpton, Lawton, Smart and McKay, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; McCready and Seth, backs; Fischer, L. A. Smith and Currie, halves; Boileau, D'Silva, Galbrieth, L. H. Smith, and Vears, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Claridge (C.R.A.)

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—The return match between these teams was played on the Calcutta ground last Friday, a level game ending in a draw. The visitors had the best of the opening exchanges and Morrison brought off a couple of splendid saves: the efforts of the home team were repeatedly checked. Both teams forced corners from which nothing resulted. On changing ends Calcutta had the larger share in the attack but the heavy rain prevented any good play and the game ended pointless. The referee stopped play four minutes before time and the game will have to be replayed. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal; Oliver and Stuart, backs; Pooler, O'Shea and Ansell, halves; Longbottom, Ross, V. Sherman, Lee and Sherman, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; McCready and Goldsmith, backs; Fischer, L. A. Smith and Curry, halves; D'Silva, Berkley, Galbrieth L. H. Smith and Vears, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Miller (C. R. A.).

SHROPSHIRE L. I. vs. Y.M.C.A.—This game on the Y.M.C.A. ground last week ended in a win for the military team, by 2 goals to nil. The Y.M.C.A. who played a man short gave a good exhibition of defensive work. There was only one goal scored in the first half, Howells heading in from a free kick. On changing ends the Young Men had as much of the game as the soldiers, but they were unable to score. Howells, however, netted another goal and the Shropshires won as stated. Teams :—

K.S.L.I.—Robinson, goal; Bushby and Roberts, backs; Hayley, Roberts and Hartfield, halves; Sanderson, Birch, Howells, Onions and Poole, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Gray, goal; Reynolds and Kendall, backs; Grey, McKay and MacLaren, halves; Rosetti, Hawan, Brown, Gillon and Collingwood, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Richards.

RANGERS vs. GORDONS.—Played on Saturday the Gordons winning by 2 goals to nil. The Gordons had the upper hand all through, Allan put the ball through his own goal shortly after the start, and gave the soldiers the lead. The Fort team pressed during the greater part of the game, the Rangers occasionally getting away to be quickly checked. Shortly after the start in the second half McKay easily beat Mogrett and the Gordons might have increased their score still more but for erratic shooting. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Finley, Harper and Thomas, halves; McKinnon, McNaughton, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

RANGERS.—Mogrett, goal; Minet and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Cody and Allan, halves; McKay, Skempton, Lawton, Smart and Berkley, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Curley (C.R.A.).

SHROPSHIRE L.I. vs. CALCUTTA.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday evening ending in a win for the Shropshires by one goal to nil. The military attacked at the start and several shots were sent in but all went wide. They obtained a corner which they could not improve upon and then Calcutta got away, H. Sherman rushing down on the wing. He was stopped and the ball transferred to the home territory where the pressure was relieved by offside. The Shropshires returned to the attack, however, and forced a corner. Nothing resulted but shortly after hands against Calcutta near their goal gave the soldiers a penalty kick from which they scored. On changing ends Calcutta played better and had hard luck in not equalising. Corners to both teams gained no advantage and a shot by Cowden looked like proving successful, but the ball hit the post and rebounded into play. The game was well contested to the finish, but there was no further score. Teams:—

K.S.L.I.—Robinson, goal; Busby and Humphreys, backs; Hartfield, Roberts and Hayley, halves; Howell, Onion, Birch, Sanderson and Bird, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Morrison, goal; Wright and Oliver, backs; Ansell, O'Shea, and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Kingcome, Cowden, V. Sherman and Longbottom, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Adams (C.R.A).

MEASURERS vs. BURNS F.C.—Playing on their own ground on the 16th instant Burns F.C. beat the Measurers by a goal to nil after an interesting game.

MEASURERS vs. SIBPORE.—Played on the Measurer's ground last Saturday, the home team winning by 3 goals to 2 after a level game.

Y.M.C.A. (AM) vs. 20th R.G.A.—These teams met on Saturday, the Gunners winning by 2 goals to nil.

BURNS vs. WANDERERS.—This match on Monday ended in the defeat for Wanderers, who were a man short and played a scratch team by 4 goals to nil.

GORDONS (B) 4, MEASURERS 1.—On their own ground on Tuesday the Measurers were beaten by the Gordons by four goals to one.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DRAWS still continue to be a feature of the League matches. Dalhousie and Shropshires played a drawn game on Wednesday of last week and Calcutta and Customs did likewise on Saturday; this latter game, however, was left unfinished, the Referee for some reason only known to himself stopping play, within four minutes of the close. True, the weather was bad but with only four minutes to go it was extraordinary to stop the game which must now be replayed—probably on Monday next.

DALHOUSIE were distinctly unlucky not to have bagged a brace of points when they played the Shropshires. Their forwards were all over the soldiers in the first half and for the greater part of the second. It was the best exhibition the Dals have given this season and that, strange to say, with a team considered not up to full strength. Lees stood down and his place at centre half was very creditably filled by a new-comer whom we do not remember to have seen out before. He was quite the best half on the field, and his placing and passing were reminiscent of first-class play at home. All the Dalhousie halves showed up in good style and Hurlston, the outside left, played the game of his life, his runs up the wing and centres leaving nothing to be desired. The team as a whole must have caused the selection committee of the club to feel very jubilant about their chances in the Shield Competition when they should make a great bid for the honour they achieved four years ago.

THE Shropshires have not come on so well as one expected them to do after their early displays, though they are by no means an easy team to defeat. How they will perform in the Shield ties must be a matter for conjecture, and indeed with Gordons, Customs, Calcutta, Dalhousie and themselves, all very much on a par with each other the winner of that competition this year will take some finding.

THE Fort team overcame the Rangers on Saturday by 2 goals, a similar score to that resulting from their first meeting. The former evidently do not intend bringing Montgomery back into the team, the period of his suspension being now ended, and his substitute having proved himself quite worthy of his place. They have now practically won the league, the remaining matches having no bearing on the championship.

CALCUTTA, now that their prospects in the League have vanished, are going in for experimenting with their team. During the remaining matches several new men will be tried and, unless rumour is once more a lying jade, we shall see Drew, Fyfe and MacConnell among others donning the red shirt again. It is wonderful the rejuvenating effect produced on these veterans by the rains. The display the team gave on Saturday against the Customs was very poor, backs, halves and forwards all being at fault, and the only man who played at all well was Morrison in goal who made two wonderful saves in the first ten minutes of the game. The forwards were all painfully slow and Lee was obviously out of condition and should not have turned out. Victor Sherman heads and passes the ball very nicely, but he should know that a centre forward must always keep on the opposing backs and not play a semi half-back-forward sort of game. Pooler bears too much into the centre of the field and interferes with the centre half. His kicking also leaves much to be desired, and on several occasions of late his miskicks have nearly given goals away: a little judicious "jawing" by the Captain would appear advisable at times and might make players more careful.

AFTER an inglorious sequence of defeats Caledonia have at last retired from the fray and will no more be a chopping block for other teams. That four nil defeat by the Y.M.C.A. must have been the last straw and the goal average of several clubs will now require adjusting, as of course all matches played by Caledonia will not count.

CALCUTTA'S usual bad luck followed them on Tuesday and another valuable couple of points were presented to the Shropshires by the Referee. It is difficult, unless one knows the Referee's point of view, to make out the why and wherefore of this penalty kick. A foul for hands is supposed to be given only when a player deliberately strikes the ball with his hand and in order to do that the player must move his arm or hand. On Tuesday evening the ball bounded off the ground touching Ansell's hand in doing so and the decision must be set down to the Referee's inexperience. We understand the Referees' Association is in rather a bad way just at present owing to the wholesale retirement of Messrs. Curley, White and Houndsel, and we have therefore no desire to appear to harshly criticise those referees who are left. In fairness to teams, however, gentlemen who take up refereeing should endeavour to thoroughly master the rules and until they can distinguish between intentional and accidental had better confine their attention and practice to friendly games. At the commencement of the season the C.R.A. seemed to have achieved the success it deserved out for some reason or other its chief supporters have resigned and at present it is at a low ebb. A meeting was held last night to make arrangements for the refereeing in the Shield ties and several proposals were made which may tend to improve matters.

THE Forfarshire Club, the new team of Mill Assistants, have got into harness and shape very well. They made rings round the Dum Dum reserves on Saturday and try conclusions with a C.F.C. team next Saturday. In their Royal blue jerseys and white shorts they look a very neat lot, and though their colours are somewhat reminiscent of the defunct Caledonia, their performances are the very reverse.

THE Combined Jute and Gunny Brokers were signally defeated on Friday last by the Exchange Banks. Quite a large crowd mustered to watch the game and if any hoped for comic interludes they were disappointed as both teams played good football and the game was every whit as exciting as the ordinary league match, the result 3—1 in the Banks' favor was a sad blow for the Brokers who evidently imagined they had a "soft thing" on. These matches have become so popular that next season we understand there will be a Cup to be competed for by the Banks, Brokers, Gunny and Jute, and any mercantile firm that can raise a team. Truly football is a great game.

WHILE their seniors have been showing very in and out form Calcutta "B" have been playing most consistently as their record up to date will show. They have played 21 matches, won 15, drawn 3, lost 3 goals for 43 against 12 and now that the rains have broken and enticed several laggards to the field again we don't think there is much danger of their record being spoiled.

REFEREE.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

R.G.A. vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 14th instant ending in a draw. The soldiers have the makings of a good team and should do well in succeeding matches. They attacked for the greater part of the first half, but wild shooting spoiled many chances and they only scored one goal through Hughes. On changing ends the Hornets made a few runs, one of which terminated in Faulkner equalising, but they were kept on the defensive most of the time, and it was only weakness in front of goal which deprived the Gunners of a victory. Teams:—

HORNETS.—J. Viegas, goal; Bennet and Millard, backs; Gardner, Molyneux and Osborne, halves; Faulkner, Garrick, Faulkner, Henderson and Oeroux, forwards.

ROYAL GARRISON ARTILLERY.—McEwen, goal Jones and Watts, backs; Saban, Hunt and Gill-Jones, halves; Hughes, Southcott, Gair, Devey and Bailey forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Cooke.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. GLOUCESTERS.—Played on the 15th instant the Telegraphs winning by 3 goals to nil. The Gloucesters pressed at the start and obtained four successive corners none of which were improved upon. Then the Telegraphs got away and Ryan scored the first goal. Level play followed the Telegraphs forcing a corner just before half time. The Gloucesters again pressed on resuming but the Telegraphs backs cleared and the Civilians put in several good runs. Hands against the soldiers enabled Ryan to score from the penalty kick. The Gloucesters rallied, forced a corner and looked like scoring but Edie saved brilliantly. Up and down play till just before the close Holman netted a third goal for the Telegraphs. Teams:—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS:—Edie, goal; Taylor (Capt.) and Crutchley, backs; Woolen, Conquest and Rexford, halves; Green, O'Hearn, Ryan, Asplin and Holman, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS:—Smith, goal; Atkinson and Ives, backs Barton, Cooper and Law, halves; Maton, Short Harries (Capt.), Buckland Chidlow, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA vs. ROVERS.—These teams met on the 16th instant. Both goals were visited in turn at the start and both teams obtained abortive corners. Parel then took up the attack but lost many chances through poor shooting till at length Watson gave them the lead. Uninteresting play followed till the interval Parel having the best of the exchanges. The Rovers attacked on restarting and continued to press till Brewin equalised. Play was very level after this. Parel got away and Watson scored. Then the Rovers pressed but were kept out, and all their efforts to get on terms being unsuccessful they were beaten by 2 goals to one. Teams:—

PAREL GYMKHANA.—S. Alcock, goal; Paterson and Edwards, backs; Pennock, Holtham (Capt.) and Fox, halves; Sherren, Fubisher, Major Watson and W. Alcock, forwards.

ROVERS.—Rose, goal; Bayfield and Lyons, backs; Brydon, Alcock and Tyler, halves; Brewin Poyntz, Farre, (Capt.), Rowe and McLaughlin, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. R.G.A.—Played on Saturday. The gunners opened vigorously and Lieutenant Brooke scored a goal. Play in the first half was very level and there was no score, but on changing ends the Gloucesters showing improved form, had the better of the exchanges and Sherwood equalised. Neither team was able to score again and the game ended in a draw—one all. Team:—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Atkinson and Ives, backs; Barton, Sherwood and Cooper, halves; Maton, Shortt, Harris Captain Ruck and Chidlow, forwards.

ROYAL GARRISON ARTILLERY.—McEwen, goal; Franklin and Watts, backs; Southcott, Hunt and Gill-Jones, halves; Hughes, Toole, Lieutenant Brooke, Davey and Bailey, forwards.

Golf.

THE BRITISH AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE final of the British Amateur Golf Championship of 1909, which was recently decided at Muirfield, will, we should imagine from the accounts to hand, rank as the finest final in the history of the event.

Mr. Robert Maxwell, of the Royal and Ancient Club, came out the winner, and thus became champion for the second time in six years, he having previously proved successful in 1903.

It was a very narrow victory that gave Mr. Maxwell the title on this occasion, for he only defeated Captain C. K. Hutchinson by one hole. That the finish was exciting goes without saying, but it had the merit of being an exciting finish to a display of golf that should live in the memory of those who were fortunate enough to witness it as the best that has ever been given in the last stage—or indeed in any stage—of the Championship.

It was a contest between clubmates, both grand golfers; but while Mr. Maxwell, as already mentioned, had won the honours on a previous occasion Captain Hutchinson was playing his first final. And yet the play was absolutely free from any trace of nervousness; it opened with perfect golf and ended with perfect golf.

Few mistakes were made in the course of the two full rounds, and at the end the soldier was beaten in a brilliant finish. In the first round Mr. Maxwell led by two holes; in the second the match was evened up at the seventh green. Captain Hutchinson got the lead for the first time at the tenth, and from that point it was anybody's Championship. Mr. Maxwell sustained his reputation and Captain Hutchinson made his, for the golf the loser played would have won almost any Championship in the past ten years.

Mr. Maxwell the winner is a Scotsman, he having been born at Edinburgh in 1876. He has played golf since he was a boy. He won his first Championship at Muirfield six years ago, he stood fourth in the open Championship in 1902, and he has won many medals in the club from which he entered (Tantallon) in the Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers, at North Berwick and St. Andrew's, probably his finest club performance being the winning of the Glennie Medal of the Royal and Ancient in three successive years—a feat that Mr. Maxwell alone has accomplished. Mr. Maxwell is thirty-three years of age.

Captain Hutchinson, who is also thirty-three years of age, is an officer in the Grenadier Guards and therefore has not so many facilities for practising golf as most of the leading amateurs. He learned the game at North Berwick and is a stylish player. In 1903 he won the St. George's Cup at Sandwich: he has gained many honors in club events; and he holds the record for Muirfield (74).

Bot h winner and runner-up showed splendid form all through the tournament, but they excelled themselves in the concluding stage. It was a fight of giants literally. Their figures show how magnificent was the golf. The scores were :—

First Round.

The international side of the tournament is not one that an Englishman would wish to emphasise unduly. The American champion, Mr. Jerome, D. Travers, and Mr. Stevenson, the other American, were unfortunate in meeting such fine players as Mr. Henderson and Mr. Pearse in their first matches. England was only able to squeeze one representative, Mr. Darwin, into the last eight, and though he managed to get one stage further, he could not stand against Mr. Maxwell.

So long as it is not abused we like to think of the Scottish superiority in golf; it is in the fitness of things, and while we are thinking that this is the best of all possible worlds, it must be for the best surely that the honours have fallen to such a fine player as Mr. Maxwell. He was very hard pressed in the fourth round, when Mr. Fowler took him to the last green, but after that he disposed of Mr. Laidlay, Balfour Melville and Darwin in a business-like way.

The final seems to have been a really splendid affair. The golf was excellent, and as the figures above show, Captain Hutchinson stuck to his work magnificently. Two down at lunch time he was all square at the ninth in the afternoon, and at the tenth he took the lead—the first time anyone did bother Mr. Maxwell during the week.

On the seventeenth tee he was one up, and is reported to have missed his long and difficult putt for a half on the last green, by no more than an inch. His record through the tournament is about as fine as could be wished. He beat Mr. Cairns by five up and four; Mr. Grant, who had just beaten Mr. Ball, by four up and two; Mr. Munn, who had slaughtered Mr. Robb, by three up and two; Mr. Shaw, by four up and two; Mr. Graham, by one; and Mr. Andrew, by three up and two. This is very like deserving the Championship.

A number of players in the Competition must have played very well up to form, but we expect for the majority the end was not quite what they had hoped for; when it came they took it like Mr. Shaw's Crampton—"Startled at first, miss; but resigned —very resigned indeed, miss."

GOLFING NOTES—THE PUTTER.

GOLF has become so popular all over the world, that no apology is necessary for a few notes on the ubiquitous game, by one who feels that he is at last emerging from the foozling stage.

Notes by the expert, who must have more or less lost the acute impressions of his early difficulties, can hardly be as useful to the tyro as similar jottings by one to whom unutterable foozling is an all too recent recollection.

It is no bad plan to touch on a humble club first.

Putting is so hugely important, and yet it is a thing that every golfer flatters himself, he will soon become proficient at with a little practice.

The proverb anent the bad workman abusing his tools, is singularly inapposite as regards golf. The game is one in which it is all essential that the tools should be first rate, and suitable as to both weight and length to their users.

The putter is the club of all others, that the beginner oftenest loses his trust in, and changes again and again for some fresh pattern. The writer and a friend have devoted some weeks to efforts towards discovering what form of putter is likely to give the best and most certain results.

Without venturing in any way to be dogmatic, they believe that there are certain general principles which should be adhered to, in putter construction, in order that the tool may do good work.

The elongated, flattened driver shape, commonly seen in present day alluminium putters, with the shaft at one end not in the middle, seems to be the most generally suitable form.

The club head should be shallow, as to depth, so that the ball may show well above the upper surface of the putter. This shallowness is a great preventative to topping the ball.

The lead should not be concentrated in one spot, but distributed at both ends, this does away with any tendency of the club head to twist, if the shaft is not grasped tightly, and is a great assistance to accuracy.

It seems to be quite an advantage to give the putter face a slight loft, as thereby the ball receives a certain amount of back spin, when it is struck. This acts gyroscopically, and tends to compel the ball to keep to a straight line, in spite of any smal inequalities of the green which it may encounter on its course towards the hole.

Then it is most important that the striking point of the club head should be at its centre of percussion. This is quite readily found experimentally, by tapping the face of the putter on some hard object. There is a clear unmistakeable ring, together with complete absence of jar, when the centre of percussion is struck. The proper point having been found, it should be marked, and a line passing through it at exact right angles to the face of the club, should be drawn across the upper surface. The writer's experimental putters have been made of beech or oak, and the line through the centre of percussion is marked by letting in a brass wire, into an undercut groove, across the top surface of the club head.

If the putter is of alluminium, the line across the top can be painted in black, or any other colour fancied.

When addressing the ball, the club is laid nearly touching it, with the line pointing at the hole. The putter is then swung the required amount according to the distance, and the centre of the ball is struck with the end of the line. The aiming line having once been laid on the hole, the player concentrates all his attention on the ball, striving to keep the swing of the club head true along the direction givin him by the line, and to strike the centre of the ball truly with the line point.

As to weight of putters, this seems a most difficult point to decide. For long run-up putts, a heavy head of about twelve ounces, seems to do the most certain work: while for short putts a somewhat lighter weight appears to give greater delicacy of touch. Perhaps a head of about ten ounces will be found a good general all round weight for most people.

How to do the actual putting can only by discovered by patient and constant practice. Suffice to say, that confidence and determination seem to be half the battle.

Easy, cool optimism is essentially the mental condition which leads to deadliness on the greens.

THE OLDEST KNOWN HUNTERS.

ACCORDING to an article by Dr. Ludwig Reinhardt published in a recent issue of the German journal Naturwissenschaftliche Wochenschrift, the remains of the oldest known man have been discovered in a cave at Le Moustier, in the Dordogne province of south-western France.

The oldest mummies from the Egyptian pyramids have an age of about 5,000 years; which is a mere fraction in comparison with the age assigned by prehistoric antiquarians to the remains of the old mammoth and reindeer hunters of Europe, who are supposed to have lived from 20,000 to 25,000 years ago. This antiquity, vast and incomprehensible as it seems, is in turn a mere nothing against the minimum of 300,000 years assigned as the age of the Neanderthal man, whose skull was discovered many years ago in the district of that name near the village of Düsseldorf. Even this stupendous figure forms, however, only three-fourths of the age assigned by the German Professor to the ancient hunters of Le Moustier, which is given as about 400,000 years. How these figures are arrived at, we are not informed, although there are doubtless good grounds for the estimates, which must, however, be regarded to a great extent as approximations.

For the new and most interesting discovery science is indebted to the energy of the well-known Swiss archæologist Dr. Otto Hauser, who for some years past has been engaged in investigating the traces left by the men of the great ice-age in south-western France.

Investigations were made at Le Moustier many years ago by the celebrated French archæologists Lartet and Christy; but these excavations only reached a certain depth in the ground. Dr. Hauser has gone down some thirty feet deeper, and reached a stratum abounding in flint implements of the chipped type. In April of last year he was fortunate in coming across the skeleton forming the subject of Dr. Reinhardt's article. When discovered, the skull was much broken, while the bones of the skeleton were scattered irregularly among the matrix.

Careful mending has, however, restored the skull to its original form; and a wonderfully low type of skull it is. The skeleton is evidently that of a young man, probably between sixteen and eighteen years of age; and this immaturity probably accounts for the absence of heavy brow-ridges in the skull.

In the region of the temples the skull slopes back in a decidedly ape-like manner, while the great projection of the muzzle, the large size and wide separation of the sockets of the eyes, and the width and depression of the bridge of the nose are all simian features. From the form of its supporting bones, it would seem, moreover, that the nose of the Le Moustier hunter must have been of a decidedly squab-type, with the nostrils opening almost straight in part, after the manner of those of a chimpanzee. Then, too, there is but little in the way of chin; while the teeth are remarkable for the large size of their roots, and the distinct foldings in their enamel both these features being ape-like. Indeed, although a few skulls of native Australians exhibit a somewhat similar projection of the muzzle, no living race of mankind has such big-rooted teeth as those of the Le Moustier hunter.

In correlation with these large teeth the jaw-muscles, as indicated by their impressions on the jaw, were of enormous power, so that their possessor could, in the author's opinion, crush bones as easily as a carnivorous quadruped.

This, it may be observed, is a "nasty one" for our friends, the vegetarians and teetotallers, who are constantly preaching that primitive man lived on roots and fruits alone; whereas Dr. Reinhardt is convinced that he subsisted mainly on the products of the chase.

The Le Moustier hunter, in Dr. Reinhardt's opinion, probably possessed large, but very deeply sunken, dark eyes, overhung by beetling, shaggy eyebrows. His black hair being in wiry coils down his neck, and also sparsy covered at least the greater portion of the body. Burnt and browned by wind and sun, the old hunter probably protected his otherwise unclothed body by a cloak of skin thrown athwart his brawny shoulders. Generally more hungry than satiated, he and his companions roamed over the plains of southern France to hunt the great beasts of the period, whose flesh, together with roots and fruits, formed his stable food. And although these ancient hunters of the Dordogne lived more like beasts than human beings, yet there is a strong presumption that they had some dim perception of a superior omnipotent Being and the hope of a future existence.

To pursue these speculations further would, as the author observes, be a fruitless and thankless task; but the proof of the existence of real human beings at an epoch so remote as that of the Le Moustier hunter forms a distinct gain to our knowledge of prehistoric man.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday afternoon at Tollygunge was eminently successful, several of the races producing really good finishes and the fields in all but the steeplechases being well up to the average. As we were also blessed with a fine day the fairly large crowd that came out were able to enjoy themselves to the full more specially as the winners were spotted by the public in nearly every event and the books got distinctly the worst of the encounters.

Mr. Kenneth Campbell is to be congratulated on having achieved a series of good starts in spite of the fact that he had such noted budmashes as Regina and Piccaninny to deal with, and in the last race a crowd of inexperienced horsemen who gave him any amount of trouble, before he finally got them off.

The going was good, though as was to be expected after so much rain a bit heavy coming down the straight.

The hurdles for the Pony Race have been cut down a bit from their original dimensions and did not present very formidable obstacles, though the timbers with which they were bound on the take-off side were unpleasantly solid and distinctly dangerous to any pony hitting them.

The afternoon's sport began with the Steeplechase for which a field of three only started. Electric Light was odds on favourite and had no difficulty in winning comfortably from Eureka Girl. Boolara, another starter, has apparently lost any form that he ever had and finished a bad last, having entirely failed to stay the distance though he jumped well.

Blazes and Mr. Rees' well measured pony Chas were made equal favourites at 6 to 4 in the Pony Hurdle Race, but the winner turned up in Ruling Passion, a pony sired by the famous Predominant, a five-year-old who has been up here for a year and is apparently just getting fit. He is a big 14-1 who was only getting 3lb. from Chas a 14-2. Mr. Bletsoe rode the winner with great judgment and keeping always with striking distance of Chas, who took the lead from Gem coming to the last hurdle, caught the favourite at the distance and after a great finish won comfortably by half a length. Blazes, the other favourite was never in the race at all and finished a bad fourth.

In the Invitation Stakes there were eager backers of Lefterin even at the unattractive price of 2 to 1 on, as she was very properly considered of a class above everything else in the race. However she very nearly missed pulling it off as Regina had all the luck of the race. She was moving as the gate went up and consequently got away with an enormous lead and it took all Mr. Galstaun's skill in finishing to bring his mare in first by the shortest of short heads, though we could say if the race were to be run again Lefterin would probably win by a couple of lengths. Regina as usual did not put up much fight after she was collared and stopped very fast.

For the Jodhpur Plate Mr. Macpherson and his stable felt that they had a good thing in Mr. Billikin and beginning on Friday morning he was steadily backed from eights down to even money which the punters were gladly accepting about him up to the fall of the flag. The confidence of his connections was fully justified, as though Singalelah boring out took him very wide round the bends and indeed almost carried him off the course, he was able to come through at the finish and won very comfortably by a length and a half and another furlong would have seen him right out away from everything.

There was another fine finish in the Open Pony Race. High Court, a very taking looking black pony, who is by the famous Arab Magistrate out of a waler mare, was running his first race and even with this disadvantage was quickly installed second favourite, Mr. Galstaun's mount Piccaninny carrying most of the money. The latter was very troublesome at the machine and eventually got away none too well, but coming on very fast she got on terms with High Court in the straight and just got the best in a dingdong finish.

The public were badly out in their selections in the last race of the day, as of the two favourites Vanity could get no better than second and Viola got away badly and was nowhere in the hunt at all. The race was wellnamed Jiu Jitsu as there was enough bumping and jostling in the straight to justify the impression that it was more of a rough and tumble than of pucca race. Mr. C. F. Payne's 10 to 1 chance Bayleaf emerged from the fray unscathed and came in a very easy winner by two or three lengths.

The next meeting is down for 10th July, the programme being as under.

The entries close on Saturday next, the 3rd instant, to No. 1, Moira Street as usual at 6 P.M., and as the card is distinctly attractive it is hoped that there will be a large number of competitors for each event.

THE S. S. Hymettus with a number of animals for the well-known importers of racers, Messrs. R. Powell, W. Griffiths and Coonan, arrived on Tuesday. We have not yet had time to take stock of the arrivals, but hope to do so before our next issue and we will give some description of the most interesting among them.

TUESDAY morning was wet and consequently there was nothing like so much work done as usual. There was one very interesting school in which Mercedes (W. Alford) and Narwanah (W. Southall) went over four flights. Mercedes hit the third hurdle pretty hard but took the fourth in good style and was moving very well and freely between them. She had to be ridden hard into her hurdles, but there is no doubt that with a strong man up she will be pretty useful. Narwanah was taking any amount of chances standing away too far at times and at others getting right under the hurdles and then jumping over it and she was very lucky to get through without a fall. Fingall (Mr. Barrow) and another horse whose name we did not get ridden by Mr. Tanner went all the way round. Fingall was not jumping at all quickly and lands on all four feet in a very awkward fashion. He was going well between his fences and at the finish galloped right away from the other horses giving one the impression that he will be a great stayer. W. Alford took Queen of Gems over three flights and she fenced quite well and will no doubt be successful as a hurdler.

A CORRESPONDENT writes :—The next Tollygunge Gymkhana prospectus contains, I note, an event for horses which have not won a race value Rs. 1,000! This is a tall order for a Gymkhana Meeting and it is calculated to bring out a class of race horses not usually seen running for a Rs. 49 stake. Whether it is a wise move on the part of the executive to attempt to follow so closely on the lines of the pucca registered meetings is a matter which has frequently been discussed of late among riding men in Calcutta. Opinions on the point differ, though it is generally agreed that the management of these meetings as it is at present conducted is in many ways unsatisfactory and leaves much to be desired.

Eight or ten years ago these Tollygunge meetings were of the bumble-puppy order, and the card was usually composed of a few events in which ladies could generally take a part, with perhaps a jumping competition for horses and a polo scurry thrown in. Later on, as far as I can at the moment recollect, the number of horse events was increased until nice little meetings of some five or six races for hacks, polo ponies, etc., became the order of the day. These meetings were worked by a small committee as is the case at present and I believe were confined to members and their friends—no public, no sale money, no bookmakers, no betting and consequently better and cleaner sport in every way. The management at that period were quite competent to put this class of meeting through, as they had little or nothing to do with the business side of racing. The only prize for competitors then was the stake and those who rode may be supposed to have done their best to win, and when they couldn't win, well, there were no disappointed backers to assail reputations, and they hoped for better luck next time.

The old order of things, however, has now changed, and racing at Tollygunge has gradually been brought up to a much higher level in point of quality of the horses competing, and, as I have already shown from the present prospectus, bids fair to become of a higher standard still—but the class of management remains as it was in the beginning—of the bumble-puppy order.

Little or nothing has been done by the management to keep pace with the improvement in the class of the racing notwithstanding that the public have been admitted and at present contribute a very substantial sum to the coffers each meeting; that some six or eight bookmakers are to be seen nowadays doing a brisk business and also adding to the funds of the executive; and also that a proportion of the races are open to horses owned by the outside public: the whole sub chiz is apparently run without a set of rules or regulations (except those printed on the prospectus and referring to entries only). It may, of course, be contended that the management attempt to follow the C. T. C. rules as far as circumstances permit, but this is scarcely correct as I have seen the management do and allow to be done, during the last year or so, things which the C. T. C. would never dream of allowing, and at which the most hardened frequenter of a flapping meeting would snort with indignation.

In addition to being handicapped by this want of rules the executive are further handicapped by some two-thirds of their number not being men who have ridden in races, and they have no real control over the actions of owners and riders beyond that, as the prospectus states, they reserve to themselves the right to decline to accept entries without giving a reason. Any expression of opinion also by the executive (which appears to be as far as the executive can go) regarding the running of horses is of little effect and I venture to predict will remain of little effect unless and until the body of Stewards will decline to allow any of their number to enter, run, back, and win with horses owned by Stewards as is the case at present.

There seem to be but two courses open to the executive. The first is to go back to the old gymkhana, limited to members of the club and their friends, to turn out the bookmakers and the totalisators, and to admit none of the paying public; and the second is to endeavour to get the meetings registered under C. T. C. rules. The advantages to owners and riders, to the public and to the Stewards themselves, of being under C. T. C. rules are too obvious to need comment, and I venture to predict that one of these two courses will be followed before long.

REGARDING the purchase of the three-year-old gelding Aboriginee (Merriwee—Indian Queen) for India, an Australan paper writes:—In New Zealand the idea obtains that, in 1,200 guineas, Mr. R. G. Baldock paid full value for him. However, the latter is a shrewd buyer, and knows the sort of horse best suited for India. Aborigine showed himself a rattling good miler by winning the Easter Handicap at Auckland, and the Thompson Handicap at Wellington, while at his last appearance in N.Z. he won the Burke Memorial Stakes at Hawke's Bay, carrying 8st. 10lb. and cutting out the mile and a quarter in 2mins. 8secs. Possibly he may never be able to run the Viceroy's Cup distance, but stakes are on the up-grade in India, and during the coming season there will be several good prizes to be won from six furlongs up to a mile and a quarter.

THE English mail brings news of the death of H.M. the King's stallion Florizel II., which fell dead while at exercise on the morning of the 11th instant.

This is a serious loss to his Majesty, especially as it follows so closely on the death of Persimmon, who was the sire of Florizel II.

Florizel II. was eighteen years of age. Always a fine-looking stamp of the thorough-bred, he was a disappointment during his racing career, and his principal success was in the Manchester Cup in 1895, when he beat ten opponents with 8st. 11lb. in the saddle.

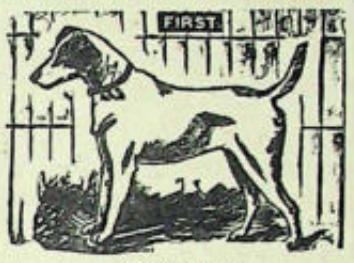
His failures under the Royal colours were, however, amply atoned for as a sire. Almost all his descendants turned out to be winners, and the most notable of them were Volodyovski, Doricles, and Vedas, respectively successful in the Derby, St. Leger, and Two Thousand. It will be remembered that Volodyovski was a strong favourite for the St. Leger (1901), with Lester Reiff as the jockey, and was defeated in sensational fashion by Doricles, an extreme outsider.

In 1906 Florizel II.'s stock won £11,049, and the year previous £16,336, while this season, although he is not credited with any important winner, he has had a satisfactory share.

It is understood that Florizel II. was heavily insured, the sum being stated to be between £10,000 and £15,000. The policy was taken out with the Live Stock Insurance Company, which paid out heavy amounts on Persimmon, Velocity, Hackler, and Blairfinde. The sum paid on Velocity's death was £10,000.

A HORSE race, with ladies prominent in Philadelphia hunting circles as the jockeys, has been arranged as a special feature of the fashionable Chesterbrook Farm race meeting in September.

The idea was suggested by the mayor, Mr. Cassatt, son of the late president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and was enthusiastically adopted by the ladies of the hunt.



Among those who have promised to enter are Mrs. Robert Strawbridge, who rode last season at Melton Mowbray; Miss Rita Carson, who won the brush with the Radnor Pack; and Miss Polly Page, of the Upland Hunt, the only "mistress of foxhounds" in America.

The ladies are expected to ride astride, wearing an adaptation of the usual jockey costume, and the racing colours of their own stables. The contest will be a flat race over a distance not yet determined. If they ride in the crouching style after the manner of Tod Sloan and his many imitators a certain modicum of amusement and instruction would seem to be assured!

HARDLY a season passes that castor oil is not recommended by some turf paper as a medicine for horses or colts, writes The American Horse Breeder. It may be used in some cases without causing death,

SHERLEY'S
DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.
It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.
"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED).
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.
SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.
SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.
SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

but a valuable young colt, owned by the writer some thirty-five years ago, was killed by giving him castor oil for constipation. The oil was administered and the colt died before we knew that he was sick.

Our advice to horsemen is, never give castor oil to any animal of the horse kind, old or young, and that is the advice of Dr. Robert McClure in "Diseases in the American Stable, Field and Farm Yard," page 223, where he speaks of the use of castor oil as follows:—

However useful castor oil may be as a purgative in the human family, it is certainly a dangerous poison when given in sufficient quantities to induce purging in either the horse, cow or sheep. It produces irritation and inflammation of the coats of the bowels, without relief from purging.

Whenever a purgative is needed always give raw linseed oil, which is both effective and safe and much cheaper than the poisonous castor oil, bulk for bulk. It is seldom necessary to give oil for constipation in young foals. One or two injections of warm water per rectum, by means of a common bulb family syringe, will relieve the trouble in much less time than oil. A dose of oil sometimes produces diarrhœa in a young foal, and it is more difficult to check the latter than to give an injection. When brood-mares have plenty of laxative food, either grass, winter rye, or bran mashes during the last few weeks of pregnancy their foals will seldom suffer from constipation.

A MEETING of Members of the Poona and Kirkee Hunt took place recently, Surgeon-General Sloggett, C. M. G., A. M. S., in the chair. The Hon'ble Mr. W. H. Cameron was elected President and some vacancies on the Committee were filled. Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Bull is again Master and Huntsman with Messrs. H. Symons, A. W. Purser, R. F. A. and F. Blackwood, Lincolnshire Regiment, as Whippers-in, and Mr. R. E. Enthoven, I. C. S., continues as Hunt Secretary. Hounds are reported to be doing well and ought to be ready to take the field early this month. Two regular days and a by-day each week will probably be arranged for.

WE regret to hear of an accident to Lieutenant Berrington, 15th Lancers, who came by an ugly fall owing to his mount Toprail coming down with him in the steeplechase at the Second Quetta Gymkhana on the 19th ultimo.

WHAT will prove to be the most interesting house in the London Zoological Gardens is now nearing completion. It is the new sanatorium, where sick birds and animals will be treated and operated upon under ideal conditions, which have hitherto been unobtainable. The nurses (trained men who served an apprenticeship at the Tuberculosis Commission's experimental farm) will never leave their charges unwatched night or day, and the elephant with nerve troubles or the chimpanzee with bronchitis will have an equally fair chance of recovery.

The new system, which will be in full operation, it is hoped, by the early autumn, is explained by Dr. Chalmers Mitchell, the secretary, to the Zoological Society. "Roughly, quite half the deaths at the gardens," he said, "occur in the cases of animals which have only been from two or three days to a week at Regent's Park. In the cages in the past these have been too often a centre of infection. Now each new arrival undergoes a period of quarantine in the isolation sheds on the North Bank. If given a clean bill of health they go to the cages; if not, they will, when the hospital is completed, go there.

"An operating-room, which will take most animals, is being fitted up, but the largest animals will be anaesthetised (after taking an opiate), and operated on in their cages. A post-mortem room for inquests will also be attached.

DR. POZZI has given the honour of a lengthy explanation before the French Academy of Medicine to the curious experiments carried on by Dr. Alexis Carrel in the Rockefeller Institute of New York. Dr. Pozzi paid a visit to his compatriot some time ago, and the facts which he laid before the Academy of Medicine have, it is said, never before been brought to the notice of the public. Dr. Carrel has, it appears, succeeded in grafting new legs on several dogs. The first case was that of a fox-terrier, whose leg had to be amputated. It happened that another fox-terrier was killed accidentally at the same time, and the French surgeon at once decided to graft one of the legs of the dead dog on to the amputated stump of the living one. The operation promised to be a success, the bones had begun to grow together, and the fox-terrier was about to be let loose to run around on another dog's leg, when he caught pneumonia and died. But Dr. Carrel was not discouraged. He practised a similar operation on two other dogs, and at the time that Professor Pozzi left him, which was about a month ago, the two dogs were getting on very well with their grafted legs. Dr. Pozzi adds that in certain cases it might now seem possible to do the same to human beings.

MR. E. F. SWEENEY, late Locomotive Engineer, Burma Mines, has just had the distinction of accounting for the first tigress known to have been shot in the Northern Shan States. She is said to have measured 11 feet 7 inches and stood 29 inches high. An exceptional beast, if these figures be correct.

THAT right good sportsman Colonel A. E. Ward, has just been honoured by his friends and fellow sportsmen in Kashmir, Sir John Hewett presenting him on their behalf with a handsome silver bowl and a pair of silver candlesticks in recognition of his strenuous efforts in the direction of game preservation in Kashmir. Colonel Ward is well known throughout India as an ardent naturalist, and has a big reputation as a traveller and big game hunter, while what he has done to preserve game in the Happy Valley has earned him the highest esteem of all good sportsmen. We publish further on an account of the presentation.

THE gymkhanas have been resumed at Simla and the fourth was held on the Annandale ground last Saturday, but was poorly attended owing no doubt to the threatening weather. The programme opened with a Mounted Competition for Men—picking up polo balls on a tennis bat. This was won by Captain Gibbs. The Ladies' Angling Stakes was won by Miss Black with Lady Eileen Elliot second and Miss Dane third. An Affinity Race followed—gentleman to run with a flag to his partner who then finished over a wand course. Lady Eileen Elliot first, Miss Dyer second, and Miss Dane third. Lady Eileen, also won the next event, Ladies' Tilting at the Ring, Miss Dane being second. The last item was an Affinity Race: gentlemen to execute a dance which their partners were to guess. Won by Miss Mahon and Captain Renton, Miss Black and Captain Black second. The last gymkhana is to be held next Saturday, when the competition for the Baring Prize will be concluded. Lady Eileen Elliot leads at present.

IN our Turf columns to-day will be found the nominations for the Melbourne and Caulfield Cups.

THE Mysore Birthday Polo Tournament was concluded on the 24th ultimo, the 20th Deccan Horse beating the 13th Husars in the final by 2 goals to nil.

IN connection with the Birthday Polo Tournament at Mysore a polo pony show was held on the 23rd ultimo. H. H. the Maharajah had offered three prizes, one each for Arabs, heavy and light weight walers which had taken part in the tournament. There was a large entry and the judging resulted as follows:—

ARABS.—Captain Bayley's chestnut arab pony, Pioneer Judges.—Major Thring, Mr. Puttana Chetty, Mr. Aga S. Shah and Captain Popham.

WALERS, HEAVY WEIGHTS—Major Tilney's bay Australian mare, Beryl. Judges.—Colonel Desaraj Urs, Mr. Kindersley and Major Sykes.

WALERS, LIGHT WEIGHTS.—Colonel Desaraj Urs' bay Australian mare, Laure. Judges.—Major Sykes, Mr. Kindersley. The Maharaja gave away the prizes to the successful competitors at the close of the show.

A Polo tournament on the American system was held at Abbottabad during June. Four teams entered the final scores being:—A team +4; B team +1; C team −2; D team −3. A team beat C team by 3 goals to one: and B team beat D team by the same score. A team beat B team by 2 goals to 1; B team drew with C team at one all. A team beat D team by 2 goals to 1. C team drew with D team at one all. The winning team was composed of Messrs. Somerville, Chapman, Rennie and Captain Govan.

THE Sculling Championship of Australia was decided on the Parramatta River on the 29th May, when Henry Pearce of Middle Harbour beat Ben Thoroughgood of Stockton. The most favourable conditions prevailed and it was a great struggle throughout, Pearce winning by two lengths. The race was rowed against the tide over the full championship course on the Parramatta River, from Ryde Bridge to Searl's Monument, a distance of 3 miles 33 yards. Harry Pearce had won an all-comers' race on the Parramatta River—a little over a mile—defeating Chris. Neilsen and Worboys rather easily, but afterwards lost to Dick Tresidder, and was again defeated on 1st August last year by Richard Arnst, the present holder of the championship of the world.

Ben Thoroughgood, on the other hand, has been beaten by Tresidder and Towns; but under clause 7 of the articles now governing the championship of Australia, Thoroughgood was recognized as the holder of the title, and he had twice successfully defended it—against Fogwell and Whelch.

In the race this year thoroughgood was quickest away but Pearce soon caught him and led by three-quarters of a length at Uhr's Point: this he had increased to two lengths by the time he reached the mile post in 6 mins. 18secs. At Putney Thoroughgood spurted and came up to within three-quarters of a length. But Pearce again went away from him and at Gladesville was four lengths to the good. They reached the three miles in 20mins. 25secs. and then Thoroughgood again spurted gamely but he could not reduce the gap to less than two lengths, and this was the verdict at the finish, Pearce passing the winning post in front in 21mins. 19secs.

A WALKING competition among the Indian assistants of Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot and Co. was held on Saturday afternoon. Twenty-four competitors faced the starter but all did not complete the course, which was from the garden house of Mr. S. C. Dey near Khurdah station on the Eastern Bengal State Railway to No. 43, Chowringhee Road, a distance of about 13 miles. The walk was won by Surendra Nath Dutt who covered the distance in 2hrs. 43mins. S. Bose was second—2hrs. 50mins., and N. L. Sircar third—2hrs. 52mins. Mr. J. H. Bray, senior partner of the firm, congratulated the successful competitors and gave away the prizes. The following members of the firm acted as time-keepers and referees:—Messrs. E. W. Harlow, R. Mildrum, H. R. Pilcher, M. C. David, W. D. Lovell and N. P. Baird. Messrs. Ewart and Hunter acted as starters.

THERE is probably little that pleases the Anglo-Indian who returns to his native land after some years in this country, more than the quiet scenes of English country. Whether his lot here has been cast in a big city, in a small mofussil station or in remote places where he may be the only European within many miles, he will find a peace and repose in the green meadows and pleasing scenery of rural England that cannot be obtained by him in any other part of the world. To thoroughly appreciate the beauty of country life he cannot do better than take a tour in a caravan. A tour in a motor car has its charm; the rush through the air is joyous and exhilarating but the motion is too rapid to allow one to appreciate the country through which one passes. The annual meet of the Caravan Club of Great Britain and Ireland took place a short time ago at Cranford, Middlessex. After the meeting broke up the caravans went on tour. The club was founded by Mr. J. Harris Stone, who is acting as honorary secretary, and has for Vice-President Dr. Gordon Stables, R.N. It is said that the club has become especially popular with retired naval officers, and many army officers in India have become members with a view to exploring rural England on a caravan tour when they return from abroad. From the information afforded by members on tour and other sources a register is kept of the pitches in the various counties, with the accommodation available in the vicinity, thus enabling members to select suitable touring routes. The pennon of the club, Mr. J. Harris Stone states, is becoming so well known that rural police and farmers welcome the members on tour, who, they are assured, pay for what they get and refrain from robbing hen-roosts. Mr. Stone added that van travellers are not the uncleanly people some imagine, as a bath tent is part of the ordinary equipment of the tourist.

THE following are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Middlesex beat Notts at Lord's by 176 runs.

Northampton beat Warwickshire by 51 runs.

The matches between Leicester and Warwick and Derby and Hampshire, the Australians and Lancs. and Yorks team, Surrey and Gloucester, Hampshire and Middlesex, and Sussex and Oxford were drawn.

The matches between the M. C. C. and Cambridge, and Essex and Leicester have been abandoned.

The following will represent England in the third test match against the Australins, which begins at Leeds to-day :—Maclaren, Fry, Jessop, Brearley, Hayward, Hobbs, Tyldesley, Hirst, Rhodes, Lilley, and Relf.

The new bowling machine has lately been paid a very great deal of attention by most prominent cricketers in England. All of them were unanimous in their praise of it, whilst Victor Trumper, who after practising with it, scored a century, said that he liked it very much indeed, and fully expected that it would be largely adopted in the winter. He said it could be put in a shed and a cocoanut matting wicket used, whilst at the nets it "would go on for ever.'

The new machine has been invented by Dr. Venn, F.R.S., and his son, Mr. J. A. Venn, after two years' experiments. The delivery is secured by an arm moving from a joint at the base. This arm swings forward, worked by a spring, which can be tightened or slackened for pace. The twist of the ball is secured by a clutch at the top of the arm, which grips the ball until it is released. At the moment the arm finishes its swing, forward, this clutch works on the ball, which can be started spinning in the direction required. Therefore, the ball is sent on its course spinning, and when it strikes ground breaks either from leg or off according to the direction of rotation. The amount of break can be controlled, and when the machine is set it will go on bowling exactly the same ball with the same length, same pace, and same break as long as desired, which should be valuable for the practice of a scientific cricketer.

Dr. Venn, the inventor of the new bowling machine, has naturally great hopes of the efficacy and usefulness of his invention, and he says: "For sixty years or more, attempts have been made to introduce a bowling machine. These have generally come to nothing, owing to a failure to reproduce the twist or spin that all good human bowling displays. The old-fashioned catapult could vary the speed and the length of pitch of the ball, but that was all. Its course was always in a straight line.

"The machine that we have invented and patented," explained the doctor, "will make a ball break as much as three feet, but the exact amount of break or turn desired can be easily produced. In addition, the machine will bowl any length desired, and thus, when set, will go on bowling one particular ball as long as is desired. Thus a batsman who wishes to perfect certain strokes can by means of this machine have as many deliveries of a certain kind as he desires, and each ball will be exactly the same until the action of the machine is changed.

"It will bowl any length, pace, direction, and break required, and will bowl two balls while an ordinary bowler would be sending down one. For public schools it should be invaluable, as it will teach boys how to play cricket scientifically without the expense of a professional. The propulsion is readily secured by a long arm, the length being such that the ball is discharged at about the height of an ordinary man when bowling 'over-arm.'

"It is worked by a strong iron spring, the tightening of which varies the velocity. Rotation is secured by the use of clutches fixed to the end of the arm, which grip the ball till it is detached. The clutch is made to spin with a lace or piece of string, as with a toy, and it is therefore a simple matter to get as much or as little spin on as required. For teaching the young a machine which will continue all day to deliver exactly the same ball, at any desired range, and with any amount of desired 'leg' or 'off' break, ought to appeal to the practical and pecuniary interest of the schoolmaster or teacher."

At the Annual General Meeting of the English Football Association held on the 9th ultimo, with the Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird in the chair, Mr. C. Crump brought forward the proposed alterations in the Laws of the Game to be discussed by the International Board. These were slight. In Law 13 the referee was empowered to order offending players off the field instead of "shall have the powers," etc. An explanation as to allowance for time wasted was approved. In Law 17 (Decision A) the insertion in the third line after ball "if the game is in progress" was accepted, and the Council's decision to oppose the proposal of the Irish F. A. on the subject of the claim on players under the jurisdiction of other nationalities was also endorsed nem con.

The Spencer Cup Football Tournament recently concluded at Bangalore ended in a win for the 81st Battery, R. F. A., who beat "F." Co. Sherwood Foresters by a goal to nil.

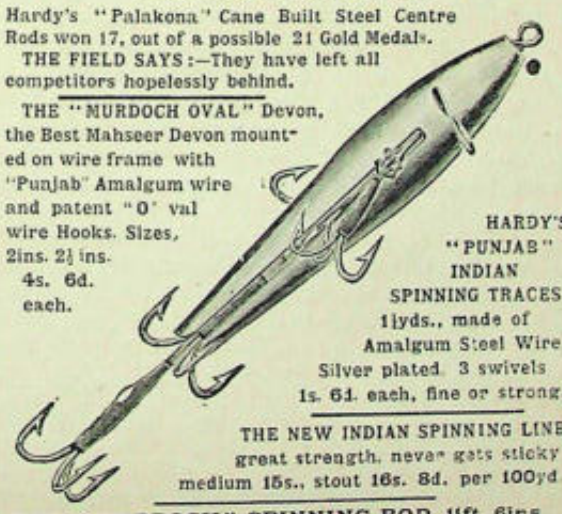
The 1st Durham Light Infantry held a regimental boxing tournament at Nasirabad last month. The entries were large, the programme was extended over three nights, some interesting contest were witnessed, and Lieutenant G. Hayes, who organised the tournament, must be congratulated on the success attending his efforts. In the closed contests Pte. Duggan won the Middle Weights; Pte. Waugh the Light Weights; and Lce-Corpl. Elliot the Feather Weights. The Open Light Weights was won by Gnr. Moore of the 12th Battery, R. F. A., and in addition several six and four round bouts were put through.

Under the title of "The Skintillator," a new publication edited by past and present Etonians, has made its appearance at Eton. The contents of the first issue include a cartoon by Sir F. Carruthers Gould, "An Old Etonian" (the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone in Eton attire), and an amusing article in which Mr. R. C. Lehmann, M.P., champions the cause of rowing against that of cricket.

It had been intended to publish also an article on cricket by Mr. F. S. Jackson, but an editorial note expresses regret that Mr. Jackson's article "has failed to reach us in time for press," and the publication of it is consequently deferred to a future issue.

Badger-digging may not be a sport that appeals to the majority, but, whatever one's views on the subject may be, no one can have two opinions as to whether wanton cruelty is admissible in connection with the "drawing" of this unfortunate beast. The terrier (or terriers) to keep the badger employed while the digging is going on is a necessity, but there is no occasion to handle the quarry roughly after it has been taken, and if it is to be killed it ought to be put an end to in a merciful manner. At a recent badger-digging party an immature animal was taken, and after being kept in a bag was turned out in a meadow and coursed by terriers, who worried it to death. Of course, the poor little beast had no chance, and it is this sort of behaviour on the part of those who know nothing of the principles of sport that get for all kinds of sporting diversion a bad name. To kill a badger under any circumstances in these days strikes one as a peculiarly wanton act, for these animals are scarce enough to demand a good price in the market, and many a man who owns a private park or grounds would be glad enough to have one or two. From the game preserver's point of view, the badger may not be a very desirable creature to have in one's coverts, but it is doubtful whether it does so much harm to game as some people suppose. A good authority declares that the badger's chief food is "roots, wild fruits, snails, and worms"; but, however this may be, this interesting creature is entitled to just as good treatment as any other beast pursued by man for purposes of sport. If it is to be hunted it ought to have a fair run for its money.

Messrs. Bruce Sinclair and A. Preston, who tied for first place in the Cleek competition recently held by the Calcutta Golf Club, played off the tie on the 23rd ultimo, Mr. Bruce Sinclair beating his opponent.



Reuter wires the defeat of England by America by 9 goals to 5 in the first of the series of three matches for the International Polo Cup at Hurlingham. The second and third matches were to have been played on the 26th and 30th ultimo, but the results have not yet come to hand. The following details regarding the contest, which appeared in the Polo Monthly, will be of interest :—

In 1886, some ten years after Mr. James Gordon-Bennett had introduced the game of polo into America, the Westchester Club, which had then been in existence about two years, issued an invitation to Hurlingham to send over an English team to the States to play a series of matches for a challenge cup kindly offered by the first-named club.

The invitation was accepted, and a duly accredited Hurlingham Club team, captained by the late Mr. John Watson, crossed the Atlantic to do battle for England in this, the first, International Polo match on record. Four of the leading soldier players of the day made up the team. They were Captains Thomas Hone and the Hon. Richard Thompson Lawley, who had that season both helped the 7th Hussars to win their fourth successive Inter-Regimental victory at Hurlingham; Captain Malcolm Orme Little of the 9th Lancers; and Mr. John Watson, who had retired from the 13th Hussars in 1882, after eight years' service with that regiment in India. Mr. Shaw Safe accompanied the team to America as fifth, or spare, man, and Captain the Hon. Charles Lambton, of the Northumberland Fusiliers (5th Foot) was the umpire for England.

America was represented in this inaugural contest for the cup, which took place at Newport, Rhode Island, by a team captained by Mr. T. Hitchcock, jun., the other members of the side being Messrs. W. K. Thorn, jun. (who afterwards was Master of the Pau Foxhounds, a South of France pack), Raymond Belmont and Foxhall P. Keene, who is well known on English polo grounds, and will very likely be playing in London again this season. All those four players are still on the active polo list, Mr. Foxhall Keene, Mr. Thomas Hitchcock and Mr. Raymond Belmont being members of the Meadow Brook (Long Island) Club, handicapped at 9, 7, and 3 goals respectively; while Mr. W. K. Thorn belongs to the Whippany River Club in New Jersey, and has a handicap of 4 goals. The umpire for America was Mr. E. C. Winthrop, jun.

Playing a dashing individual game, but lacking in combination, the Americans proved unable to cope with their more scientific opponents, who were, moreover, mounted on faster ponies, and the result was that England gained a decisive victory, winning the match by ten goals to four. The Hurlingham team also won the second match of the rubber, and so gained the holdership of the cup. These matches were played in the presence of a very brilliant gathering on the Westchester Polo Club's ground at Newport which was a very fine boarded ground, but rather small, only measuring about 225 by 130 yards. It may be mentioned that Mr. S. Sands, jun., was timekeeper, and Mr. S. H. Robbins officiated as referee. The visit in the course of which the team were most hospitably entertained, thus resulted in the cup being brought to Hurlingham, and here it has remained ever since.

The cup is a splendid silver trophy valued at $1,200 (£240) and is of unique design. Messrs. Thomas, the well-known silversmiths, who had the cup on show in their windows some years ago, thus described it:—

"The base consists of a series of silver shields, interlaced with a design of laurel leaves. Above this is some boldly chased scroll work, with six figures of polo players, mounted, springing therefrom, the whole being surmounted by a massive three-handled egg-shaped cup, with three panels on it. The first panel contains the inscription, 'International Polo Cup, presented by the Westchester Polo Club, U.S.A.'; the second bears the arms of England and America; and the third is a representation of a couple of players passing each other in opposite directions." The players shown are understood to be Captain Brocklehurst and Captain Herbert, as depicted in the late Mr. George Earls well-known polo picture of the match at Hurlingham in 1877 against the Monmouthshire team.

According to the conditions governing a contest for this International Polo Cup, the best of three matches have to be played on the ground and under the rules of the country for the time being holders of the cup, which apparently can be challenged for at any time. The England team is selected by the Hurlingham Polo Committee, and the choice of the American team rests with the Polo Association of America, founded in 1890, which has its headquarters in New York, and controls the game throughout the United States, with the exception of California, which has an association of its own, playing under Hurlingham rules.

In 1890 there was some talk of the Cup being challenged for, and a question was raised by an American writer as to the conditions under which it was held. Captain (now Sir) Walter Smythe, the then Polo Manager at Hurlingham, at once issued the following official announcement: "The Challenge Cup, won in 1886 by a team sent out, and duly accredited, from the Hurlingham Club, captained by Mr. J. Watson is held by them under the following conditions: Any international team can challenge and play for the above cup, such match to take place at Hurlingham Club, and to be played for under Hurlingham Club rules."

It was not, however, until 1900, that is to say fourteen years after the first contest, that a challenge was issued by four Americans then in this country, who were not, however, strong enough to have any reasonable prospect of success. The challenging side was captained by Mr. Foxhall Keene, and included Mr. Walter McCreery (1), Mr. F. J. Mackey (2), and Mr. Lawrence McCreery (back). The challenge was, of course, accepted by the Hurlingham Polo Committee, who chose the following team to defend the cup: Captain the Hon. J. G. Beresford, 7th Hussars (1), Mr. F. M. Freake (2), Mr. W. S. Buckmaster (3), and Mr. John Watson (back). Mr. Rawlinson would have played but for an attack of influenza. Mr. C. D. Miller was spare man. It is worthy of note that the captains of either team had played in the first match in 1886, while Colonel the Hon. R. T. Lawley, who umpired for England on this occasion, was also one of the original players. The American team had Lord Harrington for umpire. The match, which was paid at Hurlingham on 7th July, in the presence of a huge crowd, was not a very exciting affair, England winning comfortably by eight goals to two. This was the only match played of the rubber.

Two years later, however, in 1902 a representative American team came over from the United States specially to try for the cup, and the visit aroused a tremendous amount of interest in polo circles. Mr. Foxhall Keene again captained the team, which included Messrs. R. L. Agassiz and Lawrence Waterbury. Mr. J. M. Waterbury, jun., a younger brother of the last-named, played in the third and last of the matches, and in the two others the challenging side was completed by Mr. J. E. Cowdin. In the first game Messrs. Cecil Nickalls, P. W. Nickalls, W. S. Buckmaster and C. D. Miller were beaten by two goals to one, but subsequently the England team was altered. Messrs. Cecil Nickalls, George Miller and Buckmaster won the second match (with the assistance of Mr. F. M. Freake) by six to one, and the third (when Mr. P. W. Nickalls played instead of Mr. Freake) by seven goals to one.

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Friday, 11th June 1909.

THE lions of the week have been the Imperial Press Conference wallahs, who since last Saturday, when they entered upon the business (!) which has brought them together from many thousands of miles over seas, have had a right strenuous time methinks. Proceedings opened at the White City with a huge banquet carrying an appalling menu such as only press men could tackle undismayed. Thereat Lord Rosebery, who has been felicitously termed "the orator of the Empire," delivered a speech which will probably be voted the most brilliant he has ever made. The hosts were 600 British journalists and the guests the 56 delegates from the Colonies, India and the Far East. As became the occasion, Lord Rosebery struck a high Imperial note and rose to heights of glowing patriotism. He drew a vivid picture of the present state of Europe—the sky dark with clouds; the nations groaning beneath the heavy armour of militarism. But he declared that there was no failing or weakness in the Mother-country, and she rejoiced in renewing her youth in her giant dominions beyond the seas. This brought the orator to the subject of national defence, and he made an emphatic declaration in favour of building as many Dreadnoughts as were required regardless of cost. The speech was rapturously cheered.

FROM journalists to novelists is not a long step. There is a dreadful story going the rounds of a strenuous novelist (can it be Nat Gould?) who can dictate a novel in a week, who calls on three publishers in a day, leaving a novel with each. Such doings explain the suggestion that bewildered publishers shall be given a close time of twelve months, during which no novel shall be offered to them.

In those twelve months the novelist need neither idle nor starve. Let him take the advise so freely given to other callings. Let him emigrate. Before me is the new blue-book of the Moral and Material Progress of India. It tells how during a whole year only two original works of fiction were published in Burma. Therefore we may take it that there is room in Burma for a reasonable number of hard-working novelist emigrants. Another opening is to be found in Bombay, where newspapers are pushing their sales by offering presentation copies of novels. But Gujarati is there the popular language of fiction, I believe, and few of our novelists dictate Gujarati with ease.

In Bengal "most of the readable fiction is historical," and there may be room here for a few of our cloak and sword romancers who are suffering cruelly from a falling demand. Emigration to the United Provinces is recommended only in the case of the hardiest problem-novelists, for there the favourite type of romance is one which seems to have shocked the blue-book's compiler, whose mildest word for it is "ultra-Gallic."

THE Indian drama seems, from the standpoint of our own dramatic reformers, to be in a healthy condition. It is true that "King Lear" has been translated into Telugu, and that Mr. D. M. Nannavare's new play bears a suspicious resemblance to "Hamlet." But there is plenty of actuality beside this old-fashioned stuff. "The social drama 'Samaj' aims at exposing the evil of the practice of bride-grooms' fathers demanding exorbitant dowries," and for the Marathi oratorio "showing the misery resulting from the marriage of old men to young wives" we would willingly exchange one of our musical comedies.

SOCIETY is spending laborious days and extra high-pressure nights the noo. The week preceding Ascot is ever a busy one, this year it seems more than usually crowded with fixtures. Quite apart from all the shows there are more dances, weddings and functions than the "hupper succles" seem able to cope with. And withal the weather is none too good. There was the Caledonian Ball at the Cecil, two big dances at the Ritz, a big crush at St. John's Lodge, Regent's Park, the gala day at the Olympia Horse Show with their Majesties present and hardly breathing room anywhere, the Ladies' Kennel Club Show, their Majesties hold a Court at Buckingham Palace to-night, the meet of the Coaching Club and a big gymkhana at Hurlingham are down for to-morrow and sandwiched between there have been pageants, weddings, dinners, receptions and minor events galore. To these add the usual full list of society and theatrical divorce cases, murders, inquests, mysteries and other delectable matter recognised as important "news" by the papers, and you have a general idea of how busy we've recently been.

* * * * * *

I KNEW a revulsion would come. It is all the fault of Mr. Eustace Miles. People simply can't go on on beans, and meat is growing dearer every day, so as a natural result we find Dr. Hopkins calmly telling us that "in consuming his own kind the cannibal is eating exactly the right stuff." This is what our vegetarians have brought us to!

The resident "Silas Wegg" of a Sunday paper has dropped into poetry on the subject as thus:—

Oh, the times will be more pleasant
Than they ever are at present
When we live upon a scientific plan,
And when no one cares a button
For a cut of beef or mutton,
And when gourmands blandly eat their fellow-man.

Then the income-tax collector
And the L. C. C. inspector
Will be served up in an appetising stew,
And the pawky, priggish paragon
Will be neatly dressed with Tarragon,
And boiled in oil the money-lending Jew.

Then the chronic scandal-monger
Will appease his victim's hunger,
And the road-hog will adorn the roasting-jack;
And the ghoul who tells you stories
Which you've heard long before is Doomed with chestnuts to provide a luncheon-snack.

But, Belinda, spite the changes
Which the scientist arranges,
Do not let your little heart be filled with fear;
When with these sweet words I greet you,
"I so love you I could eat you,"
Do not take my words too literally dear!

MR. JAMES BERNARD FAGAN is the most puzzling of our younger dramatists. Sometimes he is so good; sometimes, to put it very mildly, he is so very ordinary. His "Prayer of the Sword" was an artistic triumph, but scarcely a popular success. Then he wrote "down to the crowd" with "Under which King," and "U.S.A. Hawthorn." And recently he has become prominent with that vital play of modern life, "The Earth."

A clever dramatist, surely, but he seems to have left off trying to be realistic or witty in "A Merry Devil," which was produced at The Playhouse last Saturday night. The piece is described as "A Florentine Farce of the 16th Century." The 16th Century costumes are there all right, but it is really not a farce. There is not enough bustle and go for that.

The story runs like this:—Madonna Geralda Capponi, in order to score off the Englishman Sir Phillip Lilley, whom she considers has slighted her, pretends that she has poisoned one Captain Bambazone. She rigs up a dummy body, and induces Sir Phillip to dispose of it. All her friends are "in the know," and when the deed is done, the false corpse disposed of, they turn and laugh at Sir Phillip. And the lady presently falls in love with Sir Phillip. That is all. It is a small story, and it is told without many amusing situations, and with a singular dearth of witty lines. Mr. Fagan can do better than this.

Mr Cyril Maude, made up as a sort of diminutive Falstaff, was amusing at times, which was quite a feat in its way, considering the lines allotted to him; but Miss Winifred Emery always looked too sensible a woman to play such a trick as Madonna Capponi is supposed to play. Mr. Aubrey Smith was a dignified, natural Sir Phillip, and for that reason was quite out of the unreal atmosphere; and the rest of the cast worked hard against heavy odds.

MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE'S delightful comedy, "Peter's Mother," was revived at the Haymarket on Tuesday, and although three years have passed since the piece was produced at the Adelphi, it remains as fresh and fragrant to-day as on the night of its first performance.

Very happily, most of the original cast were available to reappear in their old characters. This is particularly pleasing in regard to Miss Marion Terry, whose Lady Mary Crewys—Peter's mother—remains one of the most beautiful performances she has given us during recent years. It is no exaggeration to say that her particular charm of personality is to a very large measure the means of making the character as understandable as it is. Mrs. de la Pasture has drawn Peter's mother with a firm, sure touch, but perhaps no other actress could realise it as Miss Terry does. Nor is it easy to imagine anyone giving a better impersonation of Peter himself than does Mr. A. E. Matthews. Thoughtlessly selfish, largely prig, and partly good fellow, Mr. Matthews's methods are ideally fitted to the successful handling of the part. Mr. Frederick Kerr is again at his best as the downright, easy-going man of the world, John Crewys, Q.C., and Mr. Alfred Brydone scores in the small part of Sir Timothy Crewys.

"Peter's Mother" was preceded for the first time by "Chips," a one-act comedy by Lechmere Worrall. This chiefly served the purpose of exploiting the talents of that always pleasing child-actress, Miss Iris Hawkins. She appears as a cockney waif, who enters unexpectedly the drawing-room of a barrister and his wife. She talks quaintly of her life; she describes her adventures as an organ grinder's assistant, a "half-timer" in a factory, and a pantomime girl; she sings a song and dances. And she does all these things with a natural grace. As the little piece is provided with some quaint lines, it scored a fair measure of success.

A most interesting reunion of the veterans of the historical Kabul to Kandahar March of 1880, was held at the Hotel Cecil last night and many old and stirring memories were revived. Field Marshall Sir George White was in the Chair and Lord Roberts (who led the march) looked in during the evening.

To Lieutenant-Colonel McInnis came the idea of calling together the survivors of the great march through which he went as a young adjutant of the 9th Lancers. He described the scenes of thirty years ago with vivid detail. He reminded them that Lieutenant-General Sir Reginald Pole-Carew, who is with us, was in the march, acting as aide-de-camp to Sir Frederick Roberts. General Sir Robert Low was in command of the transport. Major-General J. Palmer Brabazon was then brigade-major of cavalry. Colonel Lord Frederick Fitzgerald was an adjutant of the 60th Rifles. General Sir Oriel Tanner was in command of native troops, and joined in the march, and if my memory serves me, your new C.-in-C. General Sir O'Moore Creagh, V.C., was in it too.

The "vulgar women from the West End," as John Burns styles the Suffragettes, have been at it again; this time their advertising tactics took the form of a hooligan exhibition at the Academy. They managed, undetected, to paste a "Votes for Women" placard across the portrait of the Prime Minister. It savours rather of the schoolboy trick of attaching a descriptive placard to an unconscious companion, while it detracts somewhat from the calm dignity which we have come to regard as the leading characteristic of the Women's Suffrage movement! But Doubtless thy are well pleased with this fresh "blow for feminine liberty."

AN "OLD SHE BAR."

A year ago I was visiting my college friend, Walter Morton, at his plantation in the Yazoo-Mississippi Delta. It is a peculiar and interesting region, where half-tropical vegetation grows in a delirious luxuriance undreamed of in well-conducted and temperate localities, and where civilization exists only in spots. Plantation homes are scattered many miles apart, and surrounded by vast areas of wood and sweeps of cotton land. The uncleared country is a riot of vine-clasped woods and almost impenetrable cane-brakes, and is intersected by a net work of bayous—dark, sluggish, sinister, and suggestive of all manner of creeping reptile life.

It was 5 o'clock in the morning of an October day, and the appointed time for setting out on my initial bear-hunt. With the first peep of dawn a grinning black face had appeared at my door, and "Sugar-foot Ike" crept in, bearing with cautious hands an old-fashioned silver waiter (it had been buried for two years during the war, and the stains were there still), which held a cup of steaming coffee, "Black as hate, bitter as love, and strong as steady habits."

No more folding of the hands to sleep after that coffee. As soon as I could get into my corduroys I joined Walter on the verandah, where he stood with old Isom, the Nimrod of the plantation, himself almost as black and rugged as the bears which were his favourite game. Already the dogs were jumping and yelping about us, and I looked at them with amazement. Hunting dogs! Surely never was so motley an array of canine democracy assembled at a cover side. "Mongrel, puppy, whelp and hound, and cur of low degree" were there.

"Why, man," I said, "what on earth do you call this—your pack?—this mob of shaggy, bobtailed, flea-bitten curs?"

He laughed. "These little 'flea-bitten curs' are the only kind of dogs we want this day," he answered. "If they were not little, wiry, and quick on their legs, that old she up on Bayou Seche wouldn't leave many of them alive to come home to supper to night—would she, Isom?"

Isom grinned assent, and I found out afterwards that Walter was right. I knew but little then of the prowess of the old she on Bayou Seche, well known by that name to every dog-owner in the country around, and, as I was informed, often and vainly hunted aforetime.

After a hurried breakfast, we mounted, and took our way towards a distant line of cypress trees that raised their gaunt arms and shaggy heads high above the surrounding forest. The heat, which a few weeks before had shimmered over the cotton fields like light on shifted steel, was gone, and in its place was an air like that which blows over English white-thorn hedges at the end of May. The little dogs frisked and yelped about us, and quail rose whirring at our feet. It was an ideal scene of peace; and when the sunlit beauty of the fields gave place to the solemn grandeur of primeval woods, the feeling of calm serenity was still uppermost in my mind.

Slowly we picked our way through the deepening shadows of the wood. After wandering aimlessly for an hour or more, we reached a spot where a giant liquid-amber, or sweet gum tree, lay uprooted, having borne down in its fall a dense tangle of muscadine grape-vines, and making, as it lay with its green burden, a wilderness in itself. Its roots, with all the earth still clinging to them, formed a mound, at the foot of which lay a pool of ink-black water. The dogs ran eagerly forward, but scarcely had they reached the water when a chorus of yelps burst from the whole pack simultaneously, startling the echoes of the solemn wood, and thrilling me strangely after the silence.

A huge owl, scared from sleep by the sudden clamour, floated noiselessly away in the mid-day twilight, and the whole pack of dogs burst frantically into the tangle of muscadine vines about the fallen tree-top. "She's in there!" shouted Walter, plunging widly around the wall of vines.

"At her, boys! At her! At her!"—he seemed to have suddenly become insane; and while I was wondering at the complete change from calm to frantic excitement, a loud, angry grunting and puffing sound, much like that made by a hog, which came from the vines, seemed to complete the frenzy of the dogs and master. Isom was by this time on the ground, peering into the vines, and urging on the dogs with a low, intense hissing sound. My horse begun to paw and snort. I got off him, trembling with an excitment I could scarcely comperhend, and, after fastening him to a tree, ran to the thicket, gun in hand.

As the wiry little dogs forced their way into the vines, the grunts changed to growls, and in a few seconds the noise of a tremendous conflict came from the depths of the fallen branches. Yelps, snarls, hoarse grunts, and fierce growls were mingled with an occasional sharp yell of agony from some unlucky dog. The vines shook and crashed and lashed about as if a whirlwind were beneath them. Two of the dogs crept out, gashed by the razor-like claws of the bear, and Walter and I rushed round and round the wall of vines, forgetting everything in the fury of excitement, pounding the branches with our guns, and shouting like madmen.

"Shoot!" I shouted, "shoot!" and was about to do so, when Isom seized my arms. "Whut ye 'bout?" he growled. "Wan'kill all de dogs in de pack? Us gotter gitter outen dat ar bresh; den youk'n shoot."

This calmed down my ardour; and a moment after, when I saw two scared, half-grown cubs steal out of the vortex of lashing vines and horrid noises, and shamble off at full speed with every hair on end, I didn't tell on them, but silently watched them hustle off down a steep slough-bank. The next moment the mother, having covered their retreat, burst out of her concealment, her huge dark body parting the thick vines like cobwebs. Away she crashed the tangle of vines and close-growing tree-trunks, the dogs at her heels, and hanging to her with fierce, worrying snarls as she went.

"Get your horse," shouted Walter. She'll make for the cane to the west," and in a moment we were in as fast pursuit as the trees would allow, while the noise of the dogs could still be heard, already far in the distance. I simply shut my eyes, clung to my gun, and let Dixie have his head; and after a race which seemed to me to be of interminable length, we emerged from the road on the edge of a cane-brake—a dense, impenetrable jungle of lapped and tangled growth twenty feet high, and spreading like a sea before us. How so large an animal as a bear could force a way through this living wall was a mystery, but far within the cane-brake we could hear the barking of the dogs around a little hack-berry tree, which rose from the midst of the dense green sea of foliage.

"Treed! Treed! We've got her!" said Walter, springing to the ground and running up-and-down along the edge of the cane. Isom threw himself from his horse, and searched carefully for some point of ingress, cane-knife in hand. This is a dreadful and most murderous-looking weapon, practicallly the same as the Cuban machete, and formed of a broad iron blade about three feet along, with a short, stout handle.

When we found the spot at which bear and dogs had burst and broken their way into the cane, we forced ourselves into it, working, turning, and struggling, while Isom wielded his cane-knife in front of us to enlarge the way. It was now about ten o'clock. The heat in that stifling jungle, and the fury with which we worked under the excitement, made the labour incredible; but, struggle as we would, our progress was so slow that almost an hour was consumed before we came upon the bear. The old she had her back against the tree, and seemed literally to be covered with dogs, which had rushed anew to the attack as they saw us.

No fewer than four of the dogs lay dead before her, and others were so covered with blood that their original colour was indistinguishable. The old Amazon of the woods did not seem to be suffering much except from heat and thirst. Her flanks were bleeding, and her red tongue hung from her foam-dripping jaws. It was her terrible claws and fore-arms which made death sure to the luckless dog that came within their reach, and we knew that unless powder and lead entered into the game, there would soon be left not one dog to tell the tale.

Walter called to me to shoot, but I had what Isom called the "buck ager" so badly that I dared not trust myself for fear of further reducing the pack of dogs. Something had to be done. Walter raised his gun with an emphatic exclamation, and fired. The ball entered her shoulder, and one of her terrible arms fell helpless. She did not utter a sound. Again and again the dogs rushed upon her, and struggled together upon the ground. It was impossible to shoot without further harming the already decimated pack. At last she burst into the dense cane, followed by us as fast as we could force our way.

Guns were useless in that almost impassable jungle. It was war to the knife now. The heat became stifling. No breath of wind could force its way through those close-growing stems, and perspiration poured from us as in a Turkish bath.

The rapidity with which the old she forced her way wounded as she was, and hampered with dogs, was wonderful, and her escape would have been almost certain had not Isom, who by vigerous wielding of his cane-knife close to her, found a chance to bring his weapon down upon her shoulder.

The terrible blade split the flesh to the bone, and for a moment she fell. As we rushed up she received another bullet, this time from me, and fired when I was too excited to be really conscious of what I was about. Even then the magnificent courage and vitality of the beast did not seem to be abated, until Walter rushed forward and plunged his hunting-knife deep into the shaggy body.

It was a death-blow, but as the bear toppled backward she struck with her left paw, and with one sweep tore through the muscles of his arm to the bone. He sank down, nearly fainting, and as fast as we could struggle through the cane Isom and I half led, half carried him out of the stifling heat and back to the clear space around the hackberry tree, leaving the dogs to vent their fury on the helpless form of their enemy.

It was not the first scratch that Walter had received from a bear's claws, however, and by the time we found our horses he was even laughing at the occurrence, and triumphing in the final conquest of his stout old foe. B. H.

A SPORTSMAN HONOURED.

A few days ago at Government House, Naini Tal, Sir John Hewett presented to Colonel A. E. Ward, on behalf of some of his friends and fellow-sportsmen in Kashmir, a large and handsome silver bowl and a pair of silver candlesticks as a souvenir in recognition of what he has done to preserve the game in Kashmir.

Sir John Hewett before presenting the bowl and candlesticks made the following remarks:—

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—I am taking this opportunity of complying with a request made through Mr. William Mitchell by some of Colonel Ward's friends and fellow-sportsmen resident in Kashmir that I should present to him on their behalf the handsome silver bowl and candlesticks which they desire to give him. They have honoured me by making this request on the ground that they desire the present to reach Colonel Ward from the hand of some old friend and fellow-sportsman. Certainly I can claim to be an old friend of Colonel Ward, whom I have known intimately for more than thirty years. I have tramped under his guidance on sport intent in the United Provinces, in the Central Provinces, in the Himalaya, and in Kashmir. Most of my knowledge of the jungles and of my interest in jungle life owes its inspiration to him.

"Colonel Ward takes high rank among the many excellent shikaris whom India has produced. When a subaltern in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers at Jubbulpore, he had his first experience of killing a notorious man-eater not very far from that station. Somewhat about the time when I arrived in India he was engaged in breaking up the band of man-eating tigers that for long infested and disturbed the neighbourhood of Chakrata. A man of even temper, with power to get the best out of his men, studious of the habits of animal life, of dogged determination and great powers of endurance, and a fine shot with both rifle and gun, he was bound to be a success as a sportsman. Not so very long ago I had personal evidence that his hand had not lost its cunning. I was shooting chakor with him in Kashmir, and, being a little off colour, had myself to give up shooting early in the day. Before evening he had shot 25½ brace of chakor to his own gun.

"But Colonel Ward is very much more than a mere shikari. He is a traveller of wide repute and an ardent and accomplished naturalist. As a traveller he has roamed over our North-West Frontier from end to end. I remember hearing from him long ago about Hunza, Nagar, Dir, and all the places in that wild neighbourhood, which are now a household word, but which were less than a quarter of a century ago practically a terra incognita to Europeans. He is among the few of our race who has seen the wildfowl breeding on the Mansarawar Lake.

"As a naturalist Colonel Ward has devoted himself for years to ornithology, and he has also been recently engaged in assisting the British Museum in making a collection of the small mammals of India. The man who goes into the jungles solely with the intention of shooting some quarry loses a great deal more than half the pleasure that should attend his sport. The scenery, often a combination of hill and plain with a sparkling stream running through it, the trees of the jungle, the grasses which surround them, those animals which one likes to observe but has no wish to shoot, and the great variety of birds which one sees or hears all excite the keenest interest in any one who takes delight in the world of Nature. I have, to my great regret, no scientific knowledge of botany, zoology, or ornithology, but I constantly envy that possessed by men like Colonel Ward and many of the forest officers with whom I have been fortunate enough to go into the jungles.

"The present which his friends in Kashmir desire me to give to Colonel Ward to-night is offered, not in recognition of prowess as a shot or a shikari, but in testimony of all that he has done to preserve the game in the Kashmir State. I dare say that most of you here to-night know that that State has led the way in adopting a well-designed set of game laws for the protection both of game birds and animals. Colonel Ward has for some years had charge of the large rukhs which H.H. the Maharaja of Kashmir has maintained for the preservation of the Bara Singa. The experiment has led to an enormous increase in the number of this species of deer, and they are pushing themselves out from the preserves into the country open to all sportsmen. A future generation, which might not otherwise have known the Kashmir stag, will have much cause for gratitude both to the Maharaja and to Colonel Ward for the successful efforts that they have made for his preservation. Colonel Ward was also one of the pioneers in the scheme for trout culture in Kashmir, which has under the guidance of Mr. Frank Mitchell now become an assured success, and will I hope be extended before long to some of the streams not far from Naini Tal. Colonel Ward can give points to all of us present here to-night in age and experience. The best that I can hope for the younger of those among us is that when they reach his age they may still possess his energy and activity and his accuracy with both gun and rifle. I feel sure that the company here to-night will join the sportsmen who have made him this handsome present and myself in wishing Colonel and Mrs. Ward many years of health and prosperity."

"Sir John Hewett, Ladies and Gentlemen,—It is far easier to my mind to preserve game or to kill it than to stand up and make a speech, but I must hasten to state that too much credit has been given to me, both here and in Kashmir, in the matter of protecting the animals of that country. Of course it is evident to all, in the first place, our thanks are due to the Maharajah of Jammu and Kashmir for so kindly making over to me the charge of his game. . . . Again no one except myself knows how much I am indebted to a very dear friend, the late Rajah Sir Amar Singh, whose sound commonsense and almost unlimited power was always at my beck and call. Many of those here present must have known Mr. Rose, formerly Commissioner of Kumaon. He it was who first advocated the preservation of the Kashmir game. When he was at Jammu twenty-five years ago, backed by an influential personage, he induced that grand chief the late Maharajah Sir Ranbir Singh to issue a code of laws. Unfortunately we had no money at our disposal, it was no one's business to enforce the laws, and they fell through. During Sir Adelbert Talbot's tenure of office as Resident in Kashmir the existing laws were framed. I think they were drafted by Colonel Stewart Godfrey; I admit the origination of the scheme fell to my charge. It was then that the Hon'ble Mr. H. V. Cobb, at present Resident at Indore, came valiantly to the rescue; without Sir Amar Singh and Mr. Cobb I should have had an impossible task.

"Gentlemen, Sir John Hewett lays on me the responsibility for his love of jungle life. I think not, for the call from the mountain and the forest claimed him—ever the discordant voice of the peafowl, the lively crow of the jolly little jungle cock, the roaring of the stags and the grunt of the leopard was as nectar to him. A more thoroughly unselfish shot does not exist. Sir John, it gives me great pleasure to accept from the hands of so old a friend the beautiful present sent to me by my brother sportsmen of Kashmir. Mrs. Ward and I thank you and Lady Hewett most sincerely for your great kindness."

There is a proprietor of a shop, a man of most excitable temperament, who is for ever scolding his employees for their indifference in the matter of possible sales. One day, hearing a clerk say to a customer, "No, we have not had any for long time," the proprietor, unable to countenance such an admission, began to work himself into the usual rage. Fixing a glassy eye on his clerk, he said to the customer: We have plenty in reserve, ma'am plenty down stairs." Whereupon the customer, looked dazed and then, to the amazement of the proprietor, burst into hysterical laughter and quitted the shop. "What did she say to you?" demanded the proprietor of the clerk. "We haven't had any rain lately."

It simply has to be recorded that at the time of the last mail leaving, a Wellington (N.Z.) suburban council was struggling with a seemingly insoluble financial problem.

"Personally I give it up," said the Mayor, magnificently, "it's an enema to me!"

·22 RIM FIRE SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—·22 rim fire rifles do not as a rule last very long; so much ammunition is fired out of them, and the cases contain so much detonating composition, that the barrels deteriorate sooner than those of central fire rifles. Rust ruined ·22s. are then common enough articles, and out of these one can make quite useful little shot guns, and that too without any great trouble It is only necessary to bore out the rifling on a lathe. A bit large enough to take the grooves out completely, and no more, should be employed: this should be run through the barrel to within about a third of an inch of the muzzle. The bit is then rubbed down a little on a stone, and then passed through the last third of an inch, previously left untouched. By this means one obtains a slight choke or constriction, in the last third of an inch of the barrel. This choking is of considerable importance, and makes all the difference in the pattern. After the boring and choking has been finished, the barrel should be lapped out so as to leave the interior polished and smooth.

A simple and very effective way of making of shot cartridges for a ·22 rim fire, is to take the bullets out of some black powder long rifle ammunition, and then shake about a grain of powder out of each case, so as to make room for the insertion of a pellet of cotton wool as a wad in the mouth. Small cylinders of writing paper are made of such external diameter as to fit comfortably into the barrel: these are stopped at one end by first turning in the edges of the paper, and then pushing a pellet of cotton wool down inside. Next about 21 to 23 grains weight of small sized shot are poured into each cylinder. The tubes are then cut to such length that the paper only extends about an eighth of an inch above the top of the shot. The open ends of the tubes are then lightly turned in, so as to prevent the shot getting out, and no more. The little cylinder containing the shot is first put into the breech of the gun, with the cotton wool stopped end to the rear: then the cartridge containing 4 grains of black powder and a cotton wool wad is inserted afterwards. Thus it will be noted that there are two pellets of cotton wool between powder and shot, making an efficient and gas tight wad.

Of course, if preferred, one can make up the shot cartridge on the same lines so as to be all in one, by fitting the rear end of the shot tube into the mouth of the cartridge case.

On firing the paper tube is driven up the barrel with the shot inside it, and remains intact till it reaches the choke. Here the paper cylinder is suddenly checked, and the shot being only kept inside by the slight turn over described above, at once quit the paper tube. This is proved by the fact that the empty paper always drops to the ground just outside the muzzle.

I have tried a ·22 shot gun made on the above lines, pretty thoroughly and have come to the conclusion that it is quite a useful little gun for shooting birds, rats, etc., up to about 20 yards.

At ten yards it makes a close pattern about the size of one's closed first, while at 20 yards it covers a circle of 12 to 15 inches diameter. I found that No. 10 shot was a most suitable size to use in the ·22. The charge contains about 50 pellets of this size of shot. Even at 20 yards the probabilities are that a smallish bird would be struck by two or three pellets.

Four grains of black sounds a very small charge of powder, but the penetration seemed excellent, even at the longer range. At ten yards the little gun actually sent some of its shot, when No. 8 was used, through a half inch deal board.

The above notes are, I think, sufficient to demonstrate that it is quite worth while looking up any old ·22 rifle that may happen to be lying about, and converting it into a little shot gun, for use on mischievous birds, and small mammals about the garden or compound.

"Fleur-de-Lys."

[The writer sends us a splendid diagram made with a ·22 choked gun with a charge of 4 grains black powder and 28 grains weight of No. 8 shot.—Ed.]

BENGAL HOCKEY ASSOCIATION.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

The vagaries of the weather at Manchester are such that race goers would indeed be surprised were a meeting at Castle Irwell to terminate without rain. In accordance with expectations, therefore, rain descended during almost the whole of the concluding afternoon. In addition, the Pendleton end of the course was so enveloped in haze that the happenings at the start on the straight sprint courses could not be seen from the stands, albeit the jockeys vouched for the excellence of most of Mr. Coventry's despatches. The steady morning's downpour have improved rather than impaired the going, which rode in top-hole condition, while backers kept up their good record in their exchanges with the layers. Results:—

County Welter Handicap.—Of 200sovs. 5 furlongs.

LINGFIELD.

Irrespective of the seasons, this delightfully pretty Surrey enclosure is ever faithful to its appropriate sobriquet of "Lovely." Last Wednesday it provided a veritable feast for the eye with the rhododendrons' pink chestnuts, and May in few occasions have more people filled the enclosures visitors relief against the rich green of the shrubberies, which had been refreshed by last week's welcome rain. Only on very full bloom, the combination of colouring standing, out in bold were not in the least deterred by the promise of unwieldy fields and the fact that many of the problems set by the handicapper required a deal of solving. The course rode in excellent order, and, considering the number of competitors, it was not surprising to find the laying fraternity having a shade the best of the exchanges. Results.—

·375 RIMLESS MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec.:
Striking energy, 2,899 ft. lbs.,

With 200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Price, plain quality ... ... 20 Guineas.
Best quality and finish, neatly engraved ... ... 25 "

Colonel Sir DAVID BRUCE, C.B., F.R.S.,
writing from the Sleeping Sickness Commission in Uganda, says:—

"I found Bovril of great use on several occasions. It is excellent stuff.....I think it ought to take the place as a stimulant, in many cases, of the whiskies and sodas which are run to on every occasion of fatigue in tropical climates."

A somewhat lesened muster journeyed down to assist at the concluding stage of the fixture, and fields were not so large as on Wednesday. The class of competitor seen out was hardly so good as usual, a fact that was emphasised by the two principal events of the meeting being carried off by ex-hurdlers, viz., Whistling Rufus and Lady Brenda. Be that as it may, a redeeming feature was forthcoming by three of the events being productive of close, well-fought-out finishes. Results:—

A Remarkable Jury.

WHAT a sensation would be created throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire could a jury be empanelled of such eminent men as the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Norwich; Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, artist and litterateur; Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., statesman and author; Sir William Bull, M.P., famous in the business world and well-known as a solicitor; Sir John Hare, one of the greatest actors living; the Venerable William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London; Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., M.P., one of the best known men at the bar; Mr. Walter Crane, as noted as a lecturer as he is an artist; Mr. Hall Caine, the famous novelist; Mr. Max Pemberton, one of the most popular writers of the day; Mr. C. B. Fry, whose name is known wherever athletics are practised; and Mr. Cyril Maude, one of the finest comedians on the London stage.

The newspapers would report the case they tried, word for word, while the demeanour of the jury would be scrutinised by the most competent descriptive writers, eager to catch every passing phase of expression on their faces as a hint to the verdict they might give.

In this picture, the gentlemen who constitute the jury are the distinguished ones whose names have been mentioned above. They have not only tried the case submitted to them, but they have actually given their verdict on evidence brought before them—by their own senses. In this way, there is no possibility of a miscarriage of justice, as there sometimes is when the evidence is laid before the jury by skilful advocates, trained to make the best of their cause. This jury's verdict, though unanimous, is expressed by each individual, so that the public may know exactly what he thinks.

The case which, without unduly pushing the metaphor, they tried was that of Sanatogen. The evidence on which their verdict was given was the effect of Sanatogen in revitalising the blood, reinforcing the strength after strain, restoring waning vitality, re-creating nervous energy, replenishing the jaded system, and generally stimulating and building up the natural forces after disease until they were once more as vigorous as they ever were, and the health was made as perfect as that of which the individual was capable.

The verdict of the jury was unanimously in favour of the power of Sanatogen—universally recognised as the greatest tonic-food science has given the world—to produce these results and even more than these. Here are the individual statements of the gentlemen empanelled in the Remarkable Jury:

THE VERDICT.

MR. HALL CAINE, the author and dramatist:
"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

MR. MARSHALL HALL, K.C.:
"I think it only right to say that I have tried Sanatogen, and I believe it to be a most excellent food."

Marshall Hall

MR. MAX PEMBERTON, the distinguished editor and author:
"I beg to say that I have been taking your Sanatogen since the beginning of the year, and would not be without under any circumstances whatever."

Max Pemberton

THE VEN. ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR:
"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

SIR JOHN HARE, the popular actor:
"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

MR. WALTER CRANE, the eminent authority on decorative art:
"In recovering from a rather sharp attack of influenza, I certainly found Sanatogen, prepared with milk, beneficial in its effects."

Walter Crane

MR. C. B. FRY, the famous cricketer:
"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, especially valuable in nervous exhaustion, to which men who undergo severe training are liable."

C. B. Fry.

SIR WILLIAM BULL, M.P.:
"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

William Bull

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the author and traveller:
"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

MR. CYRIL MAUDE, the eminent comedian:
"I have found Sanatogen quite wonderful. I often take it now during the performance, when I feel rather done up."

Cyril Maude

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH says:
"Mrs. Sheepshanks is taking Sanatogen regularly, and deriving great benefit from it."

LORD RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER:
"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath or Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

Sanatogen produces the remarkable results to which these distinguished men attest by being at once a food and a tonic, each of which helps and reinforces the other. No secret has ever been made of its composition, which, on the contrary, has always been openly stated. It is made of milk proteid, the substance on which the food value of milk depends, and a special form of phosphorus, one of the most important constituents of the nervous system. Instead of being merely mixed together, however, these two substances are combined chemically. This alters their nature and makes the compound more eatily assimilated by the body, thereby giving the necessary nourishment to nerve and muscle and improving the quality of the blood. For these reasons Sanatogen has become the sheet-anchor of the physician in India in treating Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever, and the after-effects of these and other devitalising complaints.

Besides these, some 10,000 physicians have voluntarily testified in writing to the excellent results they have obtained from the use of Sanatogen in the treatment of diseases depending on poor digestion and loss of nerve force, with their attendant train of depressing symptoms like sleeplessness, loss of memory, inability to stand fatigue or to sustain the ordinary duties of life.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which, by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

ROWING.

THE ROWING SEASON.—Belgians have made no mistake in picking a really strong crew of the Grand Challenge at Henley this July. Only one man will be new to the course, the five stern oars rowed in the Olympic Regatta, and both bow and two have won the Grand Challenge twice. The main point to consider in connection with this fact is the result of the eights at Oxford, though these races seem rapidly degenerating into a big regatta for mixed talent instead of a real trial between the best crews of every college. And the main feature of that result is the failure of Magdalen, with the five Blues who helped Oxford to her gallant victory in April, were unable to depose Christchurch from the headship of the river.

Christchurch had H. R. Barker, of the winning University crew at seven, and Hope, who rowed in 1907, at five. Their six was Majolier, of Eton, and they were stroked by A. C. Gadsone's brother. Rowing the same fast and easy stroke which distinguished them last year, and sliding only up to within 2in of their work, as Dr. Warre advises, they were evidently able to hold their own for the short distance which the head boat has to do on the Isis.

Magdalen, on the other hand, though rowing a far longer and more polished style, were never able to do more than 33 in practice, and it was presumably the effort to increase that rate during the race which overstrained Somers Smith's muscles on the first night, and compelled him to leave the crew. Apparently the men behind him took as long to get together as they did in the spring; and though they will no doubt show to greater advantage over the punishing the Henley course, they will be well advised not to leave their final improvement until quite so late an hour as was the case at Putney, for the Belgians are already well together, and are showing every sign of pace.

Whether Leander are able to put on a crew for the Royal Regatta or not, it is unfortunately only too probable that no Cambridge College is this year capable of putting on a first-class eight, judging from the form hitherto shown in practice for the races that begin this week on the Cam. Though D. C. R. Stuart has been tempted into reversing his previous decision, and is now stroking Trinity Hall, they do not promise to be a good crew in the time; and Jesus, though fast for a bit, are not taking to the eye. Third Trinity, who have not enough material to back up their two first-rate men, are good but weak.

Christ's and Caius show hard work, but are not much above the form usually seen in the Ladies' Plate trial heats. All the Cambridge boats seem to have suffered from a general uncertainty as to the composition of their crews until the very last moment. First Trinity are heavy and willing, and shown the most promise of improvement in the future. There remain the metropolitan clubs, and we shall not know much of them until Walton Regatta, which is fixed for the 19th inst., and should prove an admirable trial ground for the crews that are to complete at Henley on July 6th, 7th, and 8th. It may well be that Thames, with their new boat and rig, will provide a surprise from this quarter, for their scratch crew at Putney was always a formidable combination, and their indefatigable Captain has has done them a great dealof good since then. In addition to the Belgians the only foreign entry is that of Rudolph Lucas, Mayare Rowing Club, Germany, for the Diamond.

Henley will also have a novelty this summer in the new Remenham Club, which is now in full working order and gaining new members every week.

CAMBRIDGE SUMMER EIGHTS.—The May term races, which, with their attendant festivities, form an enjoyable wind-up to the academical year at Cambridge, opened on Wednesday Enght bumps were recorded in the two divisions, three in the first and five in the other. In the second, King's the first start, easily retained their place. Clare caught Lady Margaret in the Long Reach, andPembroke hadsmall difficulty in defeating St. Catherine's. King11. raninto Christ's 11, in the London Reach, andCaius caught Emmanuel 11. in Plough Reach, whilst Downing overtook Peterhouse after round Ditton Corner.

In the First Division Trinity Hall made a good start, but Jesus gradually crept up, and spurting splendidly, made their bump just before reaching Ditton Corner. Jesus have not at the head of the river since 1895, when they lost their place after holding it for eleven years. Pembroke I. caught Lady Margaret I. near the Willows; whilst Cropus, a greatly improved crew, lowered the colours of Christ's I. at Grassy Corner.

After a dull day the evening at Cambridge proved bright and pleasant yesterday, and there was again an excellent attendance to witness the races. The contests in both divisions were exciting. In the second only two bumps were recorded. Trinity Hall, who were caught by Pembroke II., had bad luck, as they were only bumped right on the winning post after being within a few feet of defeating Lady Margaret.

In the first division four bumps occured. Jesus I., who went to the head the previous evening kept well away from Trinity Hall, who lost another place to First Trinity, the latter making their bump in the Long Reach. Caius somewhat unexpectedly were defeated by Third Trinity, and Corpus again ascended, solely through Jesus II. leaving off rowing a stroke of two too soon. First Trinity II. gained a place at the expense of Christ's I.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY CHALLENGE PAIRS.—The Challenge Pairs, as usual, did not excite a deal of opposition and, with Wadham falling out at the last minute, only three crews were left in, of whom Christ Church (H. R Barker and C. A. Gladstone had the luck to secure the bye). Consequently New College (Sir. R. Parker and E. V. Culme Seymour, stroke) had to settle with Magdalen (J. F. Forrest and G. R. Somers-Smith, stroke) as to who should meet Christ Church in the final to-day.

New College, who had second station, were much the smarter at the start, and, gaining all up Iffley Reach, were about two lengths to the good on coming out of the Gut. Magdalen had a very bad crossing, and lost further ground until reaching the wall. From this point, however Magdalen improved their position, but, although they steadily regained ground to the finish, they failed to get on terms, and New College won by a length.

GOLF.

PROFESSIONALS' INTERNATIONAL.—Regarded as a body, the English golf professionals have shown, during recent years, very decided superiority to their Scottish brethren, and there was no sign of Scottish revival at Deal, on Saturday, when there took place the sixth professional's international contest. The issue was settled at the end of the singles, for England, leading by nine matches to two, with one match halved, could not be prevented from winning, even if Scotland secured every foursome. It so happened that each side gained two foursomes, and two were halved, so that England proved successful on the day by eleven matches to 4. Last year's fixture was abandoned, owing to rain, but England won in 1907 by eight to five, and in 1906 by twelve to six. The contests of 1905 and 1904 were halved, and Scotland's only victory to date was scored by nine to eight in 1903, the year of the institution of the event. Appended are the results of the contest on Saturday:—

THE OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE qualifying competitions for the Open Golf Championship were begun, in brilliant weather, on Tuesday, on the Cinque Ports course, at Deal. With 204 entrants there were 51 couples in each section. The players returning the thirty best scores in each section and any who tie for thirtieth place complete in the Championship proper.

James Braid, the holder, played in the morning's section, and had a fine round of 72, a return which was subsequently equalled by Philip Gaudin, the Fulwell professional, and these two players lead their section, although Harry Vardon, who, like Braid, has four times been champion, and C. H. Mayo are only a stroke behind. Mr. Maxwell, the amateur champion, was also drawn in the first section and he, with Mr. Myddleton were, with seven strokes behind Braid and Gaudin, the leading amateur's in the section. Leading scores in both sections are appended:

WINCHESTER CARTRIDGES SHOOT WHERE YOU HOLD

WINCHESTER

.22 Short and .22 Long Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges.

If you want to use .22 Caliber Cartridges that shoot when you want them to and where you point your gun, and strike a good, penetrating blow, buy the time-tried Winchester make, having the trade-mark "H" stamped on the head. They cost but a few pence more a box than the cheap, unreliable kind, and they are shillings better. Winchester .22 Caliber Cartridges are loaded with Black and Smokeless Powder. Those loaded with Smokeless Powder have the celebrated Winchester Greaseless Bullets, which make them cleaner to handle than any other .22 Caliber Cartridges. Special powder, made according to carefully determined and tested formulas, is used in loading all Winchester Cartridges, and every bullet is swaged by special machinery, which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. This modern method of manufacture, coupled with a rigid system of tests, makes Winchester Cartridges better than any other brand on the market. A trial will convince you.

Of the leading professional players only Arnaud Massy, Tom Ball, and Fred Robson were in serious danger of failing to survive the qualifying stages when the second half of that portion of the programme was carried out They soon made their positions secure, for they all three went out in the morning, and if Robson had cause for anxiety when here and there he drove off the course or missed a putt, he managed a round of eighty, which was sufficient. Ball and Massy were in great form. They were playing when the wind was blowing against the competitors on the outward journey, and blowing with sufficient strength to make the long holes full shot holes of the most pronounced order. Yesterday was by no means a period of unalloyed happiness for the old school of champions. J. H. Taylor played well, Alexander Herd left himself well in the running, but James Braid, Harry Vardon, and Arnaud Massy can hardly resume the struggle to-day with the same feeling of hopefulness which was theirs yesterday morning.

Taylor has a grand chance to gain his fourth victory, and thus equal the records of Braid and Vardon of the present race of golfing giants and old Willie Park and the Morrises, father and son, of a bygone day. That he deserves such a distinction will be admitted by all who have followed the career of the Devonian since that year when on the Sandwich links hard by the scene of the present meeting he leapt into fame by gaining championship honours at the age of twenty-three.

When the players started this morning a stiff wind was blowing in a diagonal direction, and it continued throughout the day, accompanied at times by showers. This made the outward half difficult, but could be turned to account on the homeward journey. There it was that Taylor laid the foundation of his strong position. In the first round he went out in forty-one, but the combination of fine driving and approaching and deadly putting gave him a brilliant homeward half of thirty-three. He holed putts of three yards at the tenth, four yards at the thirteenth, four yards at the fourteenth, and two yards at the fifteenth, while it was an excellent approach, succeeded by a good putt, that gave him a par 4 at the sixteenth after he had been bunkered.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 19th June.—Beadnell's 12 noon. Rain is much needed now and we shall be glad to get a taste of the monsoon again. On throwing hounds into the covert a jack went away but as he headed down the ravine for Waterfall it was very fortunate hounds did not get on his line. The Master then moved on to Hearty and Hamlet both of which were blank. A jack was viewed near Bracken. He ran round below Warwick and got inside the wire fence on the north side and made his escape out on the south. Shortly afterwards hounds picked up a line near Fuddler's Shola—at first turning up towards Wenlock then swung right handed through Little Khed and over the Pykara Bridle Path and running along the ridge between Coffee Shop Shola and Paragon to the bottom of Kengodu Hill Shola, they turned right handed up to Badankod Mund Shola and over Jackson's Crossing to the wire fence, along this right handed to the shola above the bungalow where they lost him. From Briar we had a short gallop over the top and down Back Staircase—by this time there was little or no scent and though the Master drew the whole length of Governor's Shola below the road nothing came of it and hounds returned to Kennels.

Monday, 21st June.—Lake End 7 A.M. A jack was found shortly after moving off from the meet and ran to Baikie in which hounds lost him. It was a hot dry morning and scent very poor. The next jack was viewed near Rallywood—he led hound over the hill into Bluegums, from thence he crossed over into Governor's Shola, keeping along the bottom to the old Toda School where he turned up into Martyn's Shola then doubled back through it into Governor's again. It was some little time before hounds got on his line, as there had been a slight check in the ravine below the Toda School, though they worked it up to the road through the dense bracken, on the road they had to give it up—it was so dry and dusty. Then ensued a long draw to Briar before we found again—this jack gave us a pleasant gallop from the corner of Briar over the Windy Saddle to the head of the swamp above Cox's Crossing and lay up for a few minutes in a thorn break, he was soon hustled out and ran for dear life with the whole pack at his brush throwing their tongues merrily as they raced him over the bog by Piggott's Crossing into Briar. Here they unfortunately divided—the main body of the pack hunted the original jack to the western corner of Briar and turned up by the ride as if for Back Staircase but came back on to the Back Staircase Road and kept along it for some distance—but here again scent died out and so ended the morning's doings.

Tuesday, 22nd June.—Andy Plantation 12 noon. A very poor day. After a long draw down the Parson's Valley a brace of jack was found but went to ground almost at once in a hole on the bank of the river, one jack was bolted but succeeded in making his escape. A lot of country was drawn but nothing came of it. On the way home a sudden squall of wind, mist and rain swept over the downs, so I am in hopes it is the monsoon back again and that I shall be able to give you better accounts of sport in my next. The want of rain is having a serious effect on the country, the going is hard and a good number of hounds and horses are suffering in consequence.

MYSORE BIRTHDAY TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—This was the first of the games in the semi-finals played on the 22nd ultimo before a large gathering of spectators, which included H. H. the Maharajah, the Hon. Mr. Fraser, Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Barrow and guests from Government House. It was an exciting game, the Deccan Horse eventually winning by 6 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The 20th attacked first, but Gopalraj Urs cleared, and Mysore rushing down Bunny Singh opened the scoring, Desaraj Urs hitting a second goal shortly after.

Second Chukker.—The 20th pressed and a penalty against Mysore followed, Ross scoring from the free hit. A minute later Worgan hit a goal, and the chukker closed with the score 2 all.

Third Chukker.—The teams attacked alternately till Worgan got away and passed to Kounsul who scored. Worgan ran down on resuming and registered a fourth point.

Fourth Chukker.—Mysore incurred two penalties during this period, but they were not improved upon and the chukker ended without score.

Fifth Chukker.—Two fouls against Mysore, from the free hit attending the second of which Ross hit a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Kounsul ran down and hit a goal. Mysore attacked desparately for the rest of the period but without success. The final score reading Deccan Horse 6 goals : Mysore 2 goals. Teams :—

MYSORE IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS vs. 13TH HUSSARS.—The second game on the 22nd ultimo between these teams ended in a win for the Hussars by 6 goals to 3.

First Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Second Chukker.—A mêlée in front of the Hussars' goal; Henderson hitting a goal. The Lancers pressed for the rest of the period.

Third Chukker.—The Hussars attacked and Taylor equalised. They continued to press but lost opportunities through bad shooting and the Lancers rushing down towards the close scored through Murad Beg.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers were aggressive, but the Hussars broke through, and Taylor once more equalised and shortly after added a third goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Hussars attacked through and Taylor registered another point.

Sixth Chukker.—A penalty for a dangerous foul against the Lancers gave their opponents no advantage, and Murad Beg coming away scored a goal. Thereafter the Hussars attacked and put on two more goals, running out winners by 6 goals to 3. Teams :—

FINAL.

90TH DECCAN HORSES vs. 13TH HUSSARS.—These teams met on the 24th ultimo, a well contested match ending in a win for the 20th by 2 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—Up and down play at the start followed by an attack on the Hussars flags, the 20th losing chances through bad shooting. The 13th got a run towards the close but failed to score.

Second Chukker.—Play was slow and uninteresting. The Deccans got a free hit for a foul against the Hussars, but there was no score

Third Chukker.—The Hussars had the better of the exchanges and almost got through from a scrimmage but the ball was sent behind.

Fourth Chukker.—A good run by Ross was checked and the Hussars took up the attack, the Deccan goal being besieged. The 13th, however, lost many chances owing to poor shooting, and the score sheet remained blank.

Fifth Chukker.—The Hussars pressed but continued to miss chances till the 20th at length relieved, and rushing down Worgan scored a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Play ruled in midfield at the start : then the Hussars attacked, but the 20th cleared, and Nur Khan getting possession rushed down and registered a second goal. The Hussars were unable to respond and were beaten as stated. Teams :—

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

DALHOUSIE vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the 23rd ultimo on the Dalhousie ground. The Dals had the upper hand during the opening exchanges but the Young Men kept them out and rushing down themselves McLaren just failed with a good shot. The ball was returned to the visitor's territory and Montgomery drew first blood. Even play followed till just before half time, Prike scored for the home team. Play in the second half was well contested but while the Young Men failed to score the Dals added another goal to their total, through Montgomery, and thus won by 3 goals to nil. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Wright and Quaile, backs; Whyshall, Lees and Wilson, halves; Prike, Burnett, Montgomery, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Dr. Gray, goal; Reynolds and Kendall, backs; Grey, McNay and Gay, halves; Rosetti, Hamer, Brown, McLaren and Gillan, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Claridge, C.R.A.

DALHOUSIE vs. GORDONS.—The return fixture between these teams attracted a big crowd to the Dalhousie ground last Saturday a well-contested game ending in favour of the military team. The Gordons were first to attack but play soon centred in their territory and the Dalhousie forwards gave them a busy time. The soldiers were forced to concede a corner: this was not improved upon but it was not till offside was given against Montgomery that the Dal's pressure was relieved. Both teams attacked in turn till the interval but without success. On resuming the home team missed chances of scoring and play ruled up and down till McDougal transferred to Mckay and this player beat Hendrie with a smart shot. Even play followed but the Gordons came again and McKay scored a second goal. In spite of desperate efforts the trades club were unable to reduce the margin and were beaten as stated. Teams:—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Finlay, Foreman and Thompson, halves; McDougal, McKinnon, McKay, McNaughten and Gilchrist, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clarke and Quaile, backs; Wright, Morrison and Wilson, halves; Hurlston, Dalling, Montgomery, Burnett and Prike forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Curley.

K. SHROPSHIRE L. I. vs. RANGERS.—These teams met on the Rangers' ground last Saturday the result being a drawn game—2 all. Play was level at the start but the soldiers were first to score, Birch putting through. Level play for a spell till the Shropshires again pressed but failed to score and the home team took up the attack, Allan equalising just before the interval. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn. Allan spoiled a nice run by lying off side and then Birch put in a couple off hard shots. Margrett saved at the expense of corners which were not turned to account. At length the soldiers efforts were rewarded by another goal, scored by Onion. The Rangers pressed and Smart beating Robinson put the teams on terms once more and there was no further score. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Minet and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Cody and Postence, halves; McKay, Allan, Murphy, Smart and Berkley, forwards.

SHROPSHIRES.—Robinson, goal; Busby and Humphreys, backs; Hartfield, Roberts and Hayley, halves; Nend, Onion, Birch, Sanderson and Oberia, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Hounsell.

CUSTOMS vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the Y.M.C.A. ground on the 26th ultimo, the Customs just winning by a goal to nil after a very level game. The Riversiders who were without L. A. Smith and Galbreith pressed at the start but the play settled down and was very even till the interval when neither side had scored. The home team took up the offensive on resuming but they could not get through and a strong attack by the Customs which followed ended in McCready finding the net. This was the extent of the scoring. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Anderson and McCready, backs; Currie, L. H. Smith and Fischer, halves; Veas, D'Silva, William, Goldsmith and Boiban forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Dr. Gray, goal; Reynolds ann Kendall, backs; Grey McNay and McLaren, halves; Rosetti, Wood, Brown, Gillan and A. N. Other, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Hooley.

SHROPSHIRES vs. CUSTOMS.—This game on the Customs' ground on Tuesday ended in a win for the soldiers. The home team who were without L. A. Smith gave an indifferent display. They attacked at the start but as soon as the Dum Dum team had settled down play was transferred to the home territory where Fitzpatrick was called on to handle. After disposing of two shots Birch beat him. The Customs tried had to get level, and though they were awarded a free kick for the military custodian carrying they failed to turn it to account and were still behind at the interval. The soldiers had the best of the game in the second half, and had it not been for the excellence of Fitzpatrick's play in goal and erratic shooting on the part of the Shropshire forwards they would have won by a larger margin. Teams :—

SHROPSHIRES.—Robertson, goal; Busby and Humphreys backs; Hartfield, Roberts and Hayley, halves; Poole, Unions, Birch, Saunders and Bird, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Fitzgerald, goal; Anderson and Goldsmith, backs; Fischer, L. H. Smith and Currie, halves; Boileau, Birkley Galbreth, McCready and D'Silva, forwards.

Referee :—B. P. Claridge.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"ALAS poor Yorrick." The Calcutta Referees' Association is dead and buried to all intents and purposes and whether or no it will be resurrected next season no one seems to know. It's a sad business, and it is most unfeeling of the C.R.A. not to mention the Caledonians to thus disturb the peaceful serenity of the League. But joking apart, it is a mistake to let the matter drift as seems to be the case. The C.R.A. came in for a lot of criticism and we fear the right class of referee will now be harder than ever to locate and entice into the arena. At the commencement of the season it was apparently going strong, but a certain section of its members were very "touchy" on certain points and resigned en bloc owing to an imagined grievance on the part of one of their number. Instead of at this juncture lending all the support they could to the Association the old hands stood aloof and left the control of the games to a devoted band of three or four inexperienced gentlemen who had things gone on rightly would have been qualifying in junior or less important games than league matches and might have proved very useful later on. As things have turned out, we fear they too will subside under the volleys of criticism levelled at them and the referee in Calcutta will soon be as extinct as the adjutant bird. The I.F.A. competition will be refereed by gentlemen agreeable to the teams concerned—a reversion to the old system, and the usual dik and worry will in consequence ensue.

SATURDAY'S match between Dalhousie and the Gordons was a spirited struggle till within ten minutes from time when condition began to tell and the home team went to pieces. The fort men were always a shade more dangerous and deserved their win. They are a well balanced lot, the Gordons, and without possessing a player of outstanding merit are undoubtedly the best soccer team that has been in Fort William for some years. Though their record this season is not so good, they are a better side than they were last year and possess several very good reserves in case of need.

Dalhousie played a plucky game throughout but could not last at the pace. Quale has developed into a steady, reliable back and is about as good a man as the Dals have had for some seasons in that position.

WHEN it comes to a question of condition, as was the case on Saturday, the soldiers always has a pull over his civilian opponent. He is in India the professional and the civilian the amateur. He is looked after by a trainer, who takes him out every morning for a walk or run, and generally goes through a thorough preparation for every match he participates in. His drill work is made as light as possible. He is let off early morning parade and he must be a teetotaller. Contrast this with the average civilian's lot. The latter sits in office or drives about in his jaun—has his peg at tiffin, gets down to the footer field at 6 P.M. when he can. If there is no match on he has a kick about—a peg or two after—home to dinner—more pegs—afterwards bridge or a theatre and to bed any time after 12 P.M. It stands to reason he can't be in such good trim for a hard match as Thomas Atkins whose retiring hour is about 10 P.M. and yet he puts up a good fight every time he turns out and makes Thomas go all the way to win. It will be ever thus, however, and his training will always be in Tommy's favour.

He would probably train whether it was necessary or not, as he has practically all day and evening to himself, and as his opportunities for sport are few and far between his games of soccer must be a godsend.

RANGERS surprised their supporters and probably their opponents on Saturday when they drew with the Shropshires. Both sides strove hard for the winning point but had to rest content with one each.

THE League matches finish this week with the exception of the replay of the unfinished game between Calcutta and Customs. The former team occupy the lowest position they have had in the league table for a considerable number of years. They tried the old stagers V. Cooper, McConnell and Drew on Saturday against the Jute Mill men and will very probably play them in the Shield competition. The game was only a friendly and Calcutta won somewhat easily by 2—0. Morrison, the C.F.C. goal-keeper, has damaged his leg and will not be able to take part in any further matches this season, which is very unfortunate for Calcutta, as he was just beginning to show the form that made him such a hard man to beat in the Strollers' team of three seasons ago.

A CIVIL vs. Military charity match has been arranged for Saturday next on the C.F.C. ground, the civilian team being composed of the following :—Margrett (Rangers) goal; Reynolds (Y.M.C.A.) and Quale (Dals) backs; Wilson (Dals) L. A. Smith (Customs) and Cody (Rangers) halves; H. M. Sherman (Calcutta), Burnett (Dals) Brown (Y.M.C.A.) McCready (Customs) and Longbottom (Calcutta), forwards.

These matches have always been well patronised in the past and if only the weather god will turn the tap off and develop his best sunshiny mood, Calcutta charities may expect to benefit considerably. The Gordons Pipe Band will enliven the proceedings in their usual picturesque style.

THE Y.M.C.A. very nearly took a point out of the Customs on Saturday, only failing by the narrow margin of a goal to nil. The latter were not at full strength and played a very sketchy game all through. The back division, however, was safe and the onslaughts of the Young Men were not productive of any goals.

ON Tuesday evening the Shropshires avenged their defeat by the Customs in their first engagement, winning by the only goal of the match. This gives them the third position in the League table. The game was a fairly good one and the Dum Dum forwards showed greatly improved form. Customs were without L. A. Smith, which may account for the weak showing of their front rank. Anderson, who has returned to Calcutta, was included in the team and gave a good display at back. The home side was inclined to play a bit rough towards the finish, the left half being the chief offender. Owing to an oversight the referee allowed seven minutes overtime to be played in the second, half which, with the Customs going for all they were worth, might have proved disastrous for the Shropshires, but luckily for them their defence rose to the occasion and warded off attacks in grand style.

So far, we understand, there are no up-country entries for the I.F.A. Shield competition. Most teams, however, leave their entry to the last day and as the closing date is the 10th instant, there is still lots of time. Presumably the King's Own, West Ridings and the King's Royal Rifles will all toe the line. The latter, it will be remembered, reached the penultimate stage of the competition last year while the West Ridings had three ding—dong struggles with Calcutta before receiving the coup de grace. Whatever teams may venture here, however, we are of opinion that the Gordons will again emerge victorious from the fray and will metaphorically speaking "take tea" with each and every club that may oppose them.

REFEREE.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

ROVERS vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 21st ultimo. The Hornets who started with three men short attacked vigorously and Faulkner scored a goal. They continued to press and forced an abortive corner. Then the Rovers took up the attack and a series of corners against the Hornets followed. All were cleared and in spite of being without their full complement they put up a good game and had just as much of the game as their opponents till the interval when they still led by a goal to nil. Up and down play, the Hornets were kept busy defending and the Rovers gained three corners but failed to improve on them. Then the Hornets attacked and the ball glanced off one of the Rovers men into his own goal. The Rovers tried hard to score and after several attempts they got a goal, McLaughlin putting through. Brewin next sent in a fine shot, which was nicely stopped and all further efforts by the Rovers were frustrated. Shortly before time the Hornets got away again and Faulkner scored, the Rovers being thus beaten by 3 goals to 1. Teams :—

ROVERS.—Rose, goal; Bayfield and Ingram, backs; Brydon, Cave and Stubbs, halves; Poyntz, McLaughlin, Farrel (Captain), Brewin and Ramsin, forwards.

HORNETS.—Henderson, goal; Bennett and Millard, backs; Gardner, Molyneux and Osborne, halves; Wilson, Faulkner, Garrick, A. Faulkner and Daroux, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—This game on the 22nd ultimo calls for little description. The Young Men had the upper hand all through and beat their opponents to the tune of 8 goals to nil. Ward and Kelly scored a goal each in the first half. Kelly (3) Pack, Templeton, and Dowling being responsible for the score after the interval. Teams :—

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; C. Templeton and Deane, backs; Hotz, Ward (Captain) and H. Templeton, halves; Bowbottom, Pack, Kelly, Dowling and Whitcomb, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—England, goal; Paterson and Edwards, backs; Pennock, Holtham (Captain) and Fox, halves; Shereen, Fubisher, Major Watson and W. Alcock, forwards.

ROVERS vs. GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Played on the 23rd ultimo. The Rovers played well at the start and for a large part of the first half, but after the Telegraphs had opened their scoring from a penalty kick for hands, the Rovers went to pieces. Ryan followed up his successful kick by scoring a second goal for the Telegraphs. On resuming Ryan and Holman increased the Telegraph's score and then McLaughlin got away and after a fine individual run beat Edie. This was the Rovers' only score and Ryan scoring two further goals for the Telegraph's they won by 6 goals to 1. Teams :—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH.—Edie, goal; Taylor (Captain) and Crutchley, backs; Woolen, Conquest and Redford, halves; Green, Walker, Ryan, Cress and Holman, forwards.

ROVERS.—Burgess, goal; Modiaman and Ingram, backs; Marsland, Cave and Petty, halves; Poyntz, McLaughlin, Farrel (Captain) Young and Mackay, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA vs. ROVERS.—Played on the 26th ultimo, the Rovers winning by a goal to nil. The game began in heavy rain and the Commercial Gymkhana had the best of the play which was very slow. After the Gymkhana had forced an abortive corner the Rovers got away and after obtaining two corners which they failed to improve upon Muddiaman scored a goal. A spell of attacking by the Gymkhana was followed by level play till the interval. Play in the second half was very even. Both teams were handicapped by the greasy state of the ground, but they struggled on manfully. Corners were obtained by both sides but no further advantage was gained, and the Rovers won as stated. Teams :—

ROVERS.—Rose, goal; Ingram and Fenners, backs; Petty, McLaughlin and Davies, halves; Vase, Muddiaman, Farrel (captain), Poyntz and Cave, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Hill, goal; Lane and Taylor, backs; Bellamy, Osborne (captain) and Johnson, halves; White, Harwood, Lay, Symes, and Cook, forwards.

Boxing.

TOURNAMENT AT WELLINGTON.

1ST NIGHT, 16TH JUNE.

THE annual boxing tournament, an event of special interest to military sportsmen throughout India, took place at the Gymnasium, Wellington, on the night of the 16th instant before a large and enthusiastic gathering. The boxing exhibited was of a very poor order and indeed it was a matter of regret that boxing which is considered as an act of self-defence which every soldier should know, dwindled to such a pitch that the referee had to remark that if the pugilists did not exhibit the real science and art of it, he would disqualify some of the competitors. The question arises how to improve boxing—this could only be done if each regiment had real competent men who could train up. Nowadays boxing means real slogging hits and very few seem to know the science or the art of the game. The military element grew rather boisterous and several of its spectators in their enthusiasm in backing up their own men became so rowdy that they had to be hoisted out of the hall. Lieutenant Shute of the Dorset Regiment acted as referee with Lieutenant Moore of the Border Regiment who took the time, while Lieutenants Herd and Norrington, both of the Borders, acted as Judges. Color-Sergeant Waybrow, of the Borders, proved an efficient master of ceremony. Following are the details of the fight, all the bouts were fought under the revised Queensbury Rules.

FEATHER WEIGHT COMPETITION.

1st Series.

Pte. Ingram, R. F. I. Secunderabad, beat Pte. Wright, Borders, Wellington.

The fight was opened by Wright, who looked in better form and in the first round succeeded in inflicting severe punishment on Ingram. In the second round Wright began to show signs of weakness and dropped down. Wright soon picked himself up but it was evident that he was losing the fight. Ingram took the part of attacking and led all through and won on points.

Pte. Page, R. W. F., Secunderabad, beat Pte. Somerville, Border Regiment, Wellington. Somerville was quick with his work while Page seemed to be reserving his strength and appeared to be the heavier pugilist. In the latter two rounds Page was in better form and won the battle on points.

Pte. Hayes, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Gnr. Secluna, R. F. A., Madras. Hayes was the better pugilist and opened the attack in inflicting severe punishment on Secluna in all the rounds. Secluna's work only laid in guarding himself.

Pte. E. Elson, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Sherrett, Cheshire Regiment, Secunderabad. Elson soon got to work and quickly had Sherrett in difficulties. Sherrett was glad to give in the first round.

10ST. COMPETITION.

1st Series.

Pte. Coster, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Barry of the some regiment.

Coster was decidedly the better pugilist and opened the attack well, while Barry faced with great pluck and coolness. In all the rounds Coster inflicted severe punishment on Barry and was an easier winner.

Pte. Skinner, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Cooper, R.S.F., Bangalore.

Cooper gave in the first round.

SPECIAL SIX-ROUND COMPETITION.

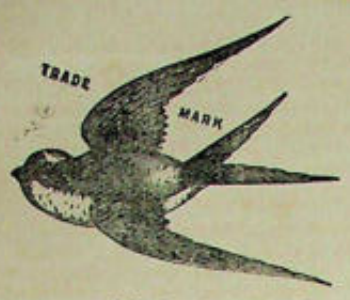
Pte. Brett, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Hanwright, R. W. F., Burma. Of all the fights of the night this alone proved exceptionally interesting and in this real good boxing was witnessed. Brett appeared in better form and slightly heavier, as such his win was a foregone conclusion. At the command to commence Brett opened the fight in a brisk workmanlike manner. In the second and all succeeding rounds, the fight assumed that of a slogging character with Brett leading all through and he was returned an easy winner. Hanwright made desperate efforts to get on equal terms with his opponent, but could not do so and for this he received a great ovation from the audience.

FEATHER WEIGHT COMPETITION.

2nd Series.

Pte Ingram, R. W. F., Secunderabad, beat Pte. Durrant, R.S.F., Bangalore. Pte. Page, R. W. F., Burma, beat Pte. Monro, R. S. F., Burma. Monro won on points. Pte. Hayes, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Gardener, O. L. I., Bangalore. Hayes won on points.

10ST. COMPETITION.



2nd Series.

Lce.-Corpl. Burrows, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Hooker, Border Regiment, Wellington.

Hooker threw up the sponge in the first round. Pte. Weston, Border Regiment beat Lce.-Corpl. Terry, same regiment.

Pte. Skinner, Border Regiment, beat Pte. Coster same regiment.

THE MENAGERIES OF THE WORLD.

THE history of zoological gardens and the number of these institutions now existing in the world have been studied with great care and attention by Captain Stanley Flower, the energetic director of the Government Zoological Gardens at Giza, near Cairo. Some time ago Captain Flower published a provisional list of all the establishments of this nature then known to him. This preliminary attempt has been followed by the publication, in the May number of the Zoologist, by a list which is as nearly complete as the author's investigations can make it, and which will be found to contain a very large amount of extremely interesting matter. The list included no less than 154 gardens, although many of these are closed, and in certain instances it has not been found possible to ascertain whether the establishments are still going, while in other cases no information at all could be obtained. To most of us it will come as a surprise that such an out-of-the-way country as Szechuen, in North-Western China, should possess a "zoo;" but it is stated that one had been established in a newly-laid out public park, although the name of the go—a-head city which has set up this establishment is not given.

Of existing zoological gardens the oldest appears to be the Imperial Menagerie of Schönbrunn, Vienna, which was founded so long ago as 1752. This was followed by the zoological garden at Madrid, founded in 1774; and this again by the Paris garden, dating from 1793. In comparison to these ancient establishments the London Zoo is a mere infant, its foundation dating only from 1828.

The foundation of the London gardens stimulated the desire for collections of live animals in other cities in the British Islands, and between 1828 and 1836 four other menageries were established, of which those in Dublin, Manchester, and Clifton still flourish. This example also caught on in the Low Countries, and the year 1838 saw the foundation of a zoological garden at Amsterdam, followed in 1843 by one at Antwerp. The idea was next taken up by Germany, resulting in the establishment of the Berlin Zoo in 1844.

In 1850 there appear to have been eleven public zoological gardens in existence, namely, those of Schönbrunn, Madrid, Paris, London (Regent's Park and the Surrey), Dublin, Clifton, Manchester, Amsterdam, Antwerp, and Berlin.

No sooner was the first half of the nineteenth century completed than institutions of this nature began to be established, not only in other parts of Europe, but likewise in Australia, America, Asia, and, lastly, Africa; our own Calcutta Zoo dating from 1875. At the present time the number of fairly large zoological gardens may be given approximately as fifty-seven; but if smaller collections of animals in botanical gardens and public parks be included, the number will be raised to ninety-five, or, allowing for establishments which have been omitted, in round numbers approximately one hundred.

After this preliminary portion of the paper Captain Flower proceeds to discuss ancient zoological gardens. And here he states that although the ancient Egyptians as is fully demonstrated alike by inscriptions and by mummified remains, kept various kinds of wild animals in captivity, yet that China, as in so many other things, was the first in the field in the matter of real zoological gardens. This earliest zoo was founded by Wu-wang, the first emperor of the Chow dynasty, who ruled Northern China rather more than one thousand years B.C.; and it is noteworthy, that the Chinese, with a full estimation of the educational value of such institutions, called it the "intelligence park."

The classical Greeks and Romans for the most part collected wild animals from various parts of the Old World only for the purpose of gladiatorial and other displays in the arena ; and it is on record that lions, leopards, bears, elephants, rhinoceroses, antelopes, giraffes, camels, hippopotamuses, ostriches and crocodiles were killed in incredible numbers either by combats among themselves or by the hands of professional gladiators, condemned criminals, and slaves. The author might have added that giraffes, or cameleopards, as well as Grévy's zebras, or "hippotigres," were likewise included in these bestial displays, which were, however, but little worse than the Spanish bull fights of the present day.

To Alexander the Great appears, however, to be due the credit of making collections of rare and previously unknown animals for the purpose of being studied and described by his former tutor Aristotle.

From the days of Darius menageries were kept by royal personages, as a part of the regal state, as still continues to be the case in India ; and it is to establishments of this nature that zoological gardens of the modern type owe their origin. In Europe public zoological gardens may, indeed, be stated to have been directly evolved from the old royal menageries ; but in America a period of three hundred and thirty-eight years intervened between the overthrow of the Imperial Mexican Menagerie in 1521 and the foundation of the Zoological Society of Philadelphia in 1859.

The earliest known English royal menagerie was in existence at Woodstock, Oxfordshire, during the reign of King Henry I. (1100—1135) ; and this appears to have been transferred during the rule of Henry III. (1216—1272) to the Tower of London, where it remained till some time after 1828. A second royal menagerie also existed at Windsor ; and Kew Gardens likewise at one time contained a collection of animals.

In France a royal menagerie existed as early as the reign of King Philip VI. (1328—1350) in Paris ; and another was founded by Louis XI. (1461—1483), who is reported to have introduced canaries into Europe, at Plessis-les-Tours, in Touraine. After the death of that sovereign, the menagerie was transferred to the Louvre, and special missions were sent to Northern Africa and elsewhere to obtain rare animals for the collection. The establishment came, however, to a sudden and violent end during the reign of Henri III. (1574—1589), for that monarch dreamt that he was torn in pieces by lions, bears, and dogs, and in consequence all the "lions, bulls, bears, etc., were killed with shots of arquebus."

Later on the royal French menagerie was re-established at Versailles, where it soon proved of the greatest value to naturalists ; and the well-known menagerie of the Jardin des Plantes was founded in 1793, in connection with the Paris Museum of Natural History.

As to German menageries Captain Flower states that information is scant ; but it appears that an imperial establishment of this nature existed in 1552, and that the Dresden Gardens were founded two years later.

Captain Flower also gives an account of the menageries of America existing at the time of the Spanish conquest, but for this we must refer our readers to the original article ; and we may therefore conclude by congratulating the author on the large amount of information of an interesting nature he has furnished to the public in regard to a subject but little touched upon by previous authors.

THE AMATEUR ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIPS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Saturday, 3rd July 1909.

The Championships were held this afternoon and some good performances were put up. Walker, the Olympic Champion, won the 100 yards in level time, and Cartmell, one of the American representatives at the Stadium last year, won the 220 yards. Voigt, Noakes and Horgan retained their titles in the 4 miles run, 2 miles steeplechase and putting the shot respectively. H. Braun, who represented Germany and ran third in the 800 metres at the Olympic games last year, carried off the half this afternoon, his time, 1min. 57⅗secs., being the best recorded since 1898, when Relf won in 1min. 56⅕secs. A. H. Healy won the hurdles in the excellent time of 15⅘secs., while a fresh record was established with the Hammer. T. R. Nicholson, who has won this event on four previous occasions throwing 164 feet 8 inches which is 2⅘ inches better than the record made by S. P. Gilles, the American, at the Championships last year. Appended are results :—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE entries for the Tollygunge Gymkhana on Saturday which we give elsewhere are well up to the mark except in the Pony Steeplechase which has fallen through so that the card will consist of five events only.

THE Hurdle Race for Horses is likely to be a very good one and the whole seven entered are probable starters. A contemporary before the handicaps were out stated that the race was a certainty for Electric Light or Au Revoir. The former is undoubtedly a very fair horse in Gymkhana Meetings and almost certain to run well, but Au Revoir's two schools were both distinctly disappointing, and in any case if Mr. Clifford's big brown horse Fingall starts he must go very near winning at any weight under 12st., as he is a different class from the others. The horse has come on the lot during the last week or two and though still a bit fat has worked off the larger portion of his obesity.

THERE has been a fair amount of schooling both on Saturday and Tuesday. On the former day Lefterin, ridden by Alford, had her first run over hurdles. She was accompanied by Lord Chester (Mr. Bletsoe), Prince Moorfield (Mr. Levetus), and Au Revoir (Mr. Wallace Jones) and did not go badly for a first school, though, of course, there is room for improvement. Au Revoir could not pace with the others and went behind. Prince Moorfield was anything but keen on jumping and we regret to say has got a "leg" as a result of the school and is not likely to be seen out over hurdles again.

PALLAS (Alford) and Queen of Gems (W. Southall) were the next pair. They went at a good pace and both fenced well over the first two but Pallas got too close to the third, jumped very big and fell on landing a long way from the fence Queen of Gems went on and took the fourth by herself in real good style. We regret to say that Alford's collar-bone was broken as a result of the fall, and though he is going on well and is out every day superintending his work, we are afraid it will be some time before we shall see him again in the saddle.

Mr. Pugh's pair Beaumaris (W. Bloss) and Delusion (Mr. Bletsoe) went over three flights. They jumped well but were not going any too strongly and looked anything but fit. Singalelah (Mr. Tanner) Ermine (Mr. Barrow), and Leading Lady (Mr. Dudley) were the other ones schooled on Saturday.

ON Tuesday Cyril (Drew), Blix (Mr. Barrow), and Fingall (Mr. Tanner) were the first lot out. They went over two flights only. Fingall and Cyril went at a good strong pace and both moved and jumped exceedingly well, Blix going slowly behind made rather a mess of the second flight, hitting it with her hind legs and pecking decidedly on landing.

Bridge Knight (F. Smallman) and Mataura (Mr. Levetus) then started for a school from the big tree. Both animals refused the first and only got over it on a third attempt, and the riders gave up at the second hurdle after half-a-dozen or more most determined refusals, on the part of both horses

Mr. Billikin (Mr. Evers) and Au Revoir (Mr. Wallace Jones) were next out and schooled over three flights. Au Revoir was again slow at her jumps and Mr. Billikin went right away from her at each fence. We begin to think that the "brougham horse" is going to be among the first flight in the Amateur Hurdle Races these Monsoons. Thomas rode Mulison over two fences unaccompanied which finished the morning's work. This horse is an accomplished jumper and if only his wind will last we shall see him well to the front in the open Hurdle Class.

THE Monsoon track was open for fast work all the way round on Tuesday for the first time, but there was nothing of importance galloped.

THE following are the second entries for the Army and Civil Service Cups, closed on the 1st instant. Army Cup:—Lord Francis Scott's Mauser, Major J. B. Prideau's Nagashi, Lieutenant-Colonel S. J. Crocker's Seaview, Mr. Johnstone Stewart's Moulood.

C. S. Cup:—H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Coin II., Fabiana, Eileen, Matin Bell and First Bell.

WE have to thank the Calcutta Turf Club for a copy of the Racing Calendar from April 1908 to March 1909. It is as neatly compiled, correct and well turned out as ever.

SHERLEY'S
DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.
It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,
"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED),
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.
SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.
SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.
SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

The Bangalore Polo Tournament began on Monday afternoon, the first match being between the 20th Deccan Horse and the Royal Engineers, the Deccan Horse winning by 5 to 1 after a good game. The next was between the Mysore Gymkhana and the Imperial Service Lancers; the former simply walked round their opponents and outplayed them at every point. The Uvaraj played brilliant polo, accounting for 6 goals, while Banni Singh had 5 to his credit. The Lancers were not able to get home once.

The second match for the International Polo Cup was played at Hurlingham on Monday afternoon. America beat England by 8 goals to 2 and thus won the trophy.

Sir Daniel Cooper, the well-known English race horse owner, died in London on the 14th July. His was quite a romance of Colonial life. Sir Daniel was the descendant of a poor Lancashire lad who, with his brother, went out to Australia to seek his fortune in the early years of the nineteenth century. The two brothers became merchants and prospered exceedingly. A great deal of the wealth of the family also came from lucky purchases of real estate in Sydney. The freeholds of what are now many of the best business streets and most fashionable suburbs were bought for trifling sums.

One of the two brothers, Daniel, died in 1853, but the other, Thomas, lived to found and become first president of the bank of New South Wales. To him had been born in 1821 Daniel Cooper the second, who combined politics with banking and became the first Speaker of the New South Wales Legislative Assembly. This Daniel Cooper's splendid munificence to the widows and orphans of the British soldiers who were killed in the Crimean war was recognised by a knighthood, a baronetcy following six years later.

Our London Sporting review to-day gives details of the final stage of the Open Golf Championship which J. H. Taylor annexed for the fourth time. Of the amateurs Mr. E. A. Lassen, of Lytham (308) and Mr. Robert Maxwell, of Tantallon (309 did best.

Other interesting items of Home sport dealt with are the racing at Ascot, the Cambridge Summer Eights and the Open Golf Championship of France.

Corporal Newman, a gunner of the Royal Field Artillery, met his death in a remarkable manner while practising tent-pegging for a display at the recent Horse Show at Olympia. He missed the peg and was swinging the lance over his head, when it flew from his grasp. The butt end embedded itself in the ground in front of the galloping horse, and the point falling towards the rider, he was impaled on his own weapon. Both lungs were pierced, the lance going completely through the body. Newman fell from his horse, pulled out the weapon and died in a comrade's arms. The older generation of Indian pigstickers will recall two fatal accidents under precisely similar circumstances and we ourselves can remember a case only a couple of years ago when a horse was impaled in the same way and had to be shot.

Rifle shooting without noise will be the next feature in warfare—no noise, no flash at the rifle muzzle.

Mr. Hiram P. Maxim last month gave a demonstration of his silencer for guns and rifles at the King's Club, Jermyn Street, where a variety of rifles were fired in a small rifle range, four feet of sand being behind the targets.

Mr. Maxim first fired each rifle without the silencer, when the noise produced was demonstrated by means of a Borland sound recorder, an instrument in which the sound, received by a small megaphone, is made to throw up a little ball suspended by a delicate thread. The greater the sound the higher is the ball thrown up.

With the silencer in use no effect was produced on the recorder, while without it the ball was in some instances thrown violently against the top of the instrument.

The silencer takes the form of a small cylinder, which fixes easily, by a quarter of a turn, on the muzzle end of the rifle barrel. Inside it is what practically amounts to a negative turbine—i.e., a series of fixed "blades," which cause the gases of the explosion to assume a rotary motion. In turning rapidly round in this way their energy is absorbed and turned into heat, the sound being destroyed owing to the waste of the energy against friction.

The most remarkable result was produced with a British service rifle, which made a deafening noise in the small shooting gallery. With the silencer on, however, there was practically no noise whatever.

Both the flash at the muzzle and the recoil are also practically done away with, the latter being reduced by about 60 per cent., the former completely.

To demonstrate how the force of the gases, which are at a pressure of something like 10,000 pounds per square inch at the muzzle, is destroyed, Mr. Maxim held in his fingers a visiting card in front of the silencer while a service rifle was fired. A small hole was merely blown through the card. When, however, the experiment was repeated without the silencer, a piece of cardboard being held on a stick in front of the muzzle, the cardboard was completely blown to pieces.

The bleat of the Channel swimmer is again heard in the land. Undaunted by his many previous unsuccessful attempts to swim the English Channel Jabez Woolfe declares his intention to try once again on the 9th July. He will probably fail.

Mr. H. S. Coates, late private in the Yorkshire and Lancashire Regiment and holder of the one mile record of India, is prepared to set up new walking records from one to ten miles; or to walk any man in the country the same distances provided some sportsman will come forward with a cup. He says he will be fit about October and is not particular where the contest takes place.

A Cooner correspondent writes:—"An interesting hockey tournament for a cup offered by the Cordite Factory terminated on the last week of the month. In the final, St. Joseph's College team beat the Cordite Factory by five goals to two. The result of the tournament is interesting as every military team in Wellington competed and a college team composed purely of Eurasian boys carried off the cup. In these days when so much is said of the physique of the Eurasians and in some quarters it is doubted whether Eurasians are eligible to enlist in the army, on account it is said that they are not very strong. Major D. M. Babington, C. I. E., R. A., Superintendent of the Cordite Factory, who gave away the cup, in the course of his speech, remarked that Eurasian lads if they were given a thorough good training in sports, would distinguish themselves in the field. The leaders of the Eurasian community ought to be proud of the victory St. Joseph's College, Coonoor, achieved and see their way to carry out Major Babington's suggestion. It goes to prove the Eurasians possess a good physique and so why should they not be enlisted in the army, and if it is objectionable to have them in the British army, why not have an army purely for them. The victory of St. Joseph's College is a feather in the cap of their leaders and the question of physique ought no longer to stand in the way of the Eurasians, at least so far as the question of their enlistment is concerned."

A correspondent writes from Chail:—The week in which the King's birthday occurs is devoted by H. H. the Maharaja of Patiala to a contest between the inhabitants of Chail and those of Simla at any form of game which may suggest itself. On the 23rd of June, Lord Francis Scott brought over a team primarily for the purpose of playing a return of the cricket match in which Patiala fared so disastrously at Simla. The Meteorological Department most considerately allotted us two and a half days of perfect weather, and as the cricket ground is laid out on the top of the hill, the ardours of fielding out are almost invariably mitigated by a welcome breeze. The turf is improving yearly, and is already sufficiently even, over the greater part of the ground, to make clean picking up a tolerably simple matter. The pitch plays true and very fast, and as the boundaries are narrow, the enterprising batsman is apt to amass large scores. But the Simla team, who have only had the Annandale wicket on which to practise, were more than a little baffled by the pace of our pitch at the start. So much so that within half an hour or so of the opening of their innings on Thursday morning they had lost 6 good wickets for 24 runs. The Patiala players began to hope that they were about to obtain a set off to their collapse in the previous week, but Major Geoghegan and Lord Francis Scott, playing with great spirit and skill, raised the score to 95, and finally with the assistance of a useful contribution from Mr. Barne, the Simla total reached 129. Mistri, who took 5 wickets for 46 runs, bowled with all his old skill, and also brought off a very fine catch at short-slip. Ziaulhaq also bowled well.

The Maharaja and Sadan Singh opened the Patiala innings, but the former fell a victim to impatience just when he seemed to be "getting his eye in." Tara Chand played well, especially on the leg-side, and Sadan Singh's 48 was very useful, though his style is as yet far from graceful. Mistri made a bright but short-lived endeavour to force the pace and Gokul Chand played doggedly for 15. Scott's bowling analysis was remarkable, and his second venture with the ball was quite sensational, in 11 overs (of which 5 were maidens) he took 9 wickets for 17 runs, and as he had previously taken the first wicket, he had the satisfaction of establishing a record for himself and for the ground. Harker's figures do little justice to his performance, but in neither innings did he have any luck.

In their second innings Simla started more promisingly, and one of Langhorne's off drives reached the cart road, but half an hour before time an appeal against the light was admitted, 3 wickets being down for 70. French and Barne resumed on Friday, but did not survive long, and the Simla captain had for the second time to come to the rescue of his side; at the end of the innings he was undefeated, and had Champain not been handicapped by a cracked rib, the score might have been considerably augmented. Abdulghani bowled well, and Sadan Singh showed great improvement at the wicket.

Patiala had 88 to make, and more than 60 of these were got before the Maharaja lost his wicket, he hit hard for his 43, and made some good strokes, but he gave two chances, and did not seem able to get hold of Rogers' bowling. He was well caught, very near the boundary. Jaswant Singh played an excellent innings, showing a sound defence and a promise of good finishing strokes. Tara Chand appeared to be playing for a draw, but Mistri went straight for the bowling, and hit the ball with great vigour once or twice; but with French behind the stumps, the most active of batsmen can scarcely afford to sit down well outside the crease. So Tara Chand made the winning hit after all.

As the cricket match had been finished by lunch time on Friday, the afternoon was set aside for tennis; four pairs of each side played an American tournament, and Simla won with a few games to spare; had Major Champain been able to represent them, the result would probably have been more decisive; on the other hand, Chail could not count upon the Kanwar Saheb, who has, unfortunately, been suffering from a cold.

On Saturday morning there was a golf match, four a side and each side claimed two victories. Mr. Sells played with great accuracy and succeeded in defeating Mr. Barne, who was, no doubt, puzzled by the peculiar conditions of the course.

In the afternoon there was the annual Gymkhana which was brought to a successful conclusion, in spite of the weather, which necessitated the change from "mounted" to "pedestrian" in two events. His Highness most generously presented the prizes, of which Miss Ross Johnson secured that for driving a blindfold pair in a rickshaw, Mrs. Champain won the Marketing Stakes, Mrs. Sells the Artist Stakes, and Miss Betty Sells the Chatty breaking.

In the evening there was a most successful dinner, after which Simla defeated Chail at billiards.

Reports as to the Bridge and Poker Patience matches are not yet to hand, but it is believed that Patiala were victorious in the former.

Athletes, and indeed all sportsmen, should never neglect to consider the important question of diet: more especially should the question be studied by those whose lot is cast in the tropics. There is enshrined a truth in the proverb which says that it is not what a man eats, but what he digests that does him good. The food problem being of such vital importance to the majority of our readers —those who engage in outdoor sport and the harder forms of physical exercise—we make no apology for presenting the following remarks on diet and its intimate connection with their health and well-being. A heavy toll is exacted from those who ignore the proper care of their "tummies" in India. Constitutions are readily undermined by errors in eating and drinking out here, and then to these we have added many other conditions inimical to health and predisposing to sickness, it behoves us to follow the example of one Agag and "walk delicately" when approachihg our diet—the keynote of health in the East.

That a European cannot live healthily and enjoy life in the country without undermining his system and laying up for himself a diseased and miserable old age would be an absurd statement, and one which experience would prove to be lacking in the first element of truth. He can, and often does. It is, however, necessary that he should rigorously practise certain laws and remember that moderation is the source from which all pleasures come.

In endeavouring to achieve this result, it is, of course, impossible for the ordinary European to attempt to live on the same diet as the native. His previous life at home, the habits he has formed and those which have come to him through centuries of hereditary influence, prevent his stomach from extracting from such foods the necessary constituents for the maintenance of his bodily health, in exactly the same way as it would be impossible for him to extract all the nutriment he needs from the blubber on which the Greenlander exists with ease.

It woud be absurd to suggest that mere dietetic errors are responsible for the lassitude, the lack of energy and the general conditions of debility which are so markedly the outcome of tropical life in general, and of life in India in particular. There are other causes as potent, if not still more powerful, which attack the system beyond its endurance and undermine the European's wonderful power of adaptation to such altered conditions that he can leave his temperate climate and support existence, with almost equal ease, in the ice-clad regions of the Arctic circle and beneath the sweltering overhead sun of the equator.

Prominent among the conditions inimical to health in India is the heat which induces exhaustion, cripples the energy, affects the internal organs —especially the liver—and injures the nervous system sometimes beyond all ordinary powers of recuperation. This last effect is especially marked in a damp atmosphere such as that of Lower Bengal.

Tropical conditions, too, cause the blood to deteriorate in quality, thus predisposing to fevers of various kinds, to boils and other ailments, and rendering it less able to throw off or destroy the germs of disease which attack the body through it. Among these diseases Malaria takes a primary place, for it is the cause of more sickness and invaliding than almost all the other diseases incidental to life in India combined, while it seldom entirely ceases to manifest its effects on the constitution.

Nor must Dysentery be forgotten in the list of contingencies to be provided against by the Anglo-Indian, seeing how frequently it occurs.

Despite all safeguards, including those relating to proper clothing, exercise, recreation, self-restraint and discipline against all excesses, the fact remains that the effect of the climate on the digestion is one which it is exceedingly difficult to counteract with ordinary food, and digestive disorders are the forerunners of grave diseases like malaria and dysentery.

The Anglo-Indian whose general nutrition has been lowered, whose digestive system is depressed, whose mental energy has been diminished, whose physical powers of resistance have been interfered with, whose tone and vigour have been reduced and whose vitality and health generally have been undermined until life seems to him not worth living, may take heart of grace at the thought that all the evidenses of his condition can be removed and he can be restored to s mething like his original health if he will only take the trouble and give himself sufficient time.

Of the food elements, the two most important are undoubtedly nitrogen and phosphorus. The former is particularly concerned with body building and the generation of energy, while the latter is, as everyone knows, the active principle of the nervous system.

It is, therefore, essential that foods rich in these constituents should be supplied. More than that, however, it is absolutely essential that they should be so combined that they can be easily digested by the overweakened organs and readily assimilated and absorbed into the blood to feed it and the starved tissues.

For very many years physicians have demanded such a preparation. To meet their requirements, many so-called phosphorus-containing preparations were introduced. One by one they have been dropped, for though they might stimulate for a short time, it was found that their effects were not lasting. At length, one preparation was discovered which did not have this drawback. To it, in consequence of its health-producing properties, the name of Sanatogen has been given. What it has achieved in many forms of disease and in all conditions of malnutrition are facts graven deep in the history of the medical progress of the twentieth century. It is wonderful stuff—we speak from personal experiment—and we recommend it broadcast.

The Graphic in its number of 5th June puts forward the following suggestion under the heading of Men and Matters :—

"We should like (in reference to Baden-Powell's boy scouts) to see an experiment tried. We should like to see a detachment of these boy scouts and a detachment of Regulars or Territorials turned out to play hide and seek with one another in a country with which the former are familiar. The object should be to locate each other without being seen by the opposing force. Much has been done of recent years to make Tommy observant. When route marching he is made to observe the number of pigs in a farm yard, or to commit to memory the number of a passing motor-car. Still, we fancy the boys would beat him. At any rate, some fine lessons in reconnaissance work might be learned that way, and the game would be a popular one with both sides."

Any one perusing this paragraph casually will probably have arrived at the conclusion that the weekly in question has suddenly begun to wax facetious. Perhaps quite unconsciously the originator has solved the mystery of the paucity of candidates for the coming examination for entry into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. Just think of it ye parents! The climax of the hundreds of pounds spent in giving your sons a liberal education is to teach Tommy to count the number of pigs in a farm yard! Just think all ye budding young Napoleons, think of the glorious work that lies in store. If such be a fact, and not a fabrication, is there any wonder that fond fathers are seeking more enlightend professions for their male progeny! We should very much like to be informed in what British Regiments of the line this procedure of instilling into the minds of Thomas Atkins the principles of observation is adopted. We hold our breath when we consider that this novel and original method may yet, perchance, find a corner in some future combined training. What a truly grand field for observation in this respect would be opened out in the precincts of the village bustee. What a pleasure such a route-march would afford, what an appetite for breakfast would be engendered!

Now we have no wish to disclaim in any way the merits and capabilities of the boy scout. He may be the future means of saving hearth and home from destruction. But why go out of one's way to hold up to ridicule the backbone of our standing army, we believe in these days of degenerate political platitudes the correct expression is—our expeditionary force? Is this sudden boom on scouting the outcome of the South African War, or is it merely a means to an end to keep a certain personality well within the public eye? What we do say is—by all means let the boys play their games of hide and seek among themselves, let them if necessary have the services of competent scout officers to instruct them during their leisure hours. Great benefit would undoubtedly accrue from such a plan. But in Heaven's name when that sword of Damocles—efficiency—is for ever being dangled in front of the weary eyes of our soldiery, give Thomas Atkins a little credit for not being an absolute fool.

What—did we hear somebody suggest that a bevy of Billingsgate beauties in place of the boy scouts might make the game a more popular one for both sides—Tut, tut.

Rain caused the abandoning of the final Gymkhana at Simla fixed for last Saturday. The prizes for the season's competitions were accordingly awarded as follows :—Baring prize for the Lady who gains most marks at the Gymkhanas during the season. Won by Lady Eileen Elliot with 30 marks; Miss Mahon, second with 22 marks; Miss Dyer and Miss Black came next each with 12 marks. The Dill prize for gentlemen was won by Lord Francis Scott with 16 marks.

The all England Lawn Tennis Championship singles has been won by Mr. A. W. Gore who beat Mr. M. J. G. Ritchie by three sets to two in the final. Mr. Gore has on two previous occasions been champion, in 1901 and last year when he beat Mr. H. Roper Barrett in the final by 3 sets to 2.

dollars through their depredations in the levees, are now most eagerly sought by the millinery trade throughout the country, and hunters in Louisiana are now eagerly trapping them. For years the muskrats have burrowed in the levees, and in nearly every case where there has been a crevasse along the river front the cause was traced to a muskrat hole. The State has tried several means to get rid of the pests, but without success. During the winter the milinery stores in New Orleans bought several hundred muskrat furs from hunters in the different parishes and placed them on turbans, which now so resemble a cat curled up on milady's coiffure. Several of the more progressive hunters quickly realised that muskrats were marketable and gave up the pursuit of ducks and other game. One hunter alone in February killed 6,000 rats, for which he received 20 cents apiece. Other hunters have followed suit, and it begins to look as if the State will soon rid itself of the industrious rodents whose burrowings have for many years endangered the cities and towns along Louisiana's river-front.

THE third Test Match has been won by the Australians. Play began at Leeds on Thursday last in cloudy weather and on a soft wicket. The Colonials won the toss and elected to bat. At lunch they had scored 89 and were eventually all out for 188, compiled as follows :—Gregory 46, McAlister 3, Ransford 45, Noble 3, Bardsley 30, Armstrong 21, Macartney 4, Cotter 2, Carter 1, Laver 0, and Trumper not out 27. Extras 6. Total 188. England then went in and lost two wickets for 88, when stumps were drawn. Hobbs 12, Fry 1, Tyldesley not out 30, Extras 7. Continuing their innings on Friday, England were disposed of for 182. Tyldesley took his overnight score to 55 before he was out, Sharp made 61, Maclaren 17, Rhodes 13, Hirst 4, Barnes 1, Brearley 6, Lilley not out 4. Extras 8. Total 182 for nine wickets. Jessop did not bat. He had strained the muscles of his back while fielding on the first day and retired from the game.

Going in again on Friday the Cornstalks made 175 for 8 wickets, McAlister 57, Gregory 0, Ransford 24, Armstrong 45, Noble 31, Trumper 2, Bardsley 2, Cotter 19, Macartney not out 7, Carter not out 22, Extras 18. Total (8 wickets) 175. On Saturday morning Macartney and Carter took their scores to 18 and 30, respectively, and Laver made 13 not out, the innings closing for 207. With 214 to make to win England went in again. By lunch time they had lost two wickets for 56 but on resuming the team collapsed and were all out for 87. Jessop was still absent. Score : Fry 7, Hobbs 30, Tyldesley 7, Sharp 11, Maclaren 1, Rhodes 16, Lilley 2, Hirst 0, Barnes 1, Brearley not out 4. Extras 8. Total 87. The Australians thus won by 126 runs. Details of bowling analysis as published by the Pioneer are as follows :—

In the Australian first innings Rhodes took four wickets for 38, Hirst two for 65, Barnes one for 37, Brearley two for 42. In the second innings Barnes took six wickets for 63, Brearley one for 36, Rhodes two for 44, Hirst one for 39.

In the first innings of England Macartney took seven wickets for 58 runs, his six wickets on Friday being obtained for 28 ; Cotter took one for 45 and Laver one for 15. In the second innings Cotter took five wickets for 38 and Macartney four for 29.

APPENDED are other important English cricket results during the past week :—

Kent beat Gloucestershire by 52 runs.

Hampshire beat Leicestershire by 7 wickets.

Yorkshire beat Surrey by 51 runs.

Nottinghamshire beat Lancashire by an innings and 80 runs.

Surrey beat Derbyshire by an innings and 76 runs.

On Saturday, 31st July, there will be a match Married vs. Single Handicap Match Play.

A CORRESPONDENT contributes an interesting article to the Times upon "Bears in general." The bear is an animal whose appearance rather lends itself to ridicule. The writer points out that it is not easy to take bears seriously. This may be partly the result of our own prejudice, born of seeing them dance ridiculously in the streets ; but in large measure it is undoubtedly the fault of the bears themselves "very-ill-favoured rough things," "shuffling bears" whose clothes fit them, so to speak, deplorably ill, while their persons end towards the rear with a suddeness which precludes any affectation of dignity.

> "The Bear he never can prevail
> To lion it for lack of tail."

His awkwardness, however, together with his love of buns, sweetmeats, honey and jam are traits in his character which at Zoological Gardens, at all events, gain him no little affection. But these are not aspects of him which are likely to attract the attention of the sportsman much. The writer goes on to say that it is easy to exaggerate the amiability of bears. "Not altogether without justification is it that 'surly as a bear' has become a proverb, or that we use 'bearish' in the sense in which we do. Cubs indeed make often delightful pets and playthings, but with advancing years, even under the kindest treatment, they tend to grow treacherous ; and whether in captivity or at large, bears are wicked fighters when they choose, their method of attack being by striking savagely with their huge fore-paws, armed with the long curved talons. Even the absurdest looking sloth bear (surely almost the funniest and most entertaining animals in Regent's Park !) is said to be one of the antagonists of which the tiger itself stands in awe Nineteen times out of 20 a bear, whether European brown, Asiatic red, grey, or black, or American black or grizzly, is willing enough to avoid an encounter with man, but the choice of the twentieth time seems to be a matter of mere caprice, so that no man can say for certain that bruin, however met, will not show fight. As Artemus Ward discovered, a bear if "amoosin," is to often also "onreliable."

London Week by Week.

Friday, 18th June 1909.

THE return to London of Lieutenant Shackleton, the leader of the Nimrod South Pole expedition, has, of course, been marked by scenes of genuine and spontaneous enthusiasm. The Antarctic hero is a modest young man withal and a well plucked one, as for that matter, are all the others who went with him. He very nearly got there, and aided by his past experience, he may quite get there, if he has another shot at it, and—who knows—he may yet be selected by Providence to decide the much-disputed point as to whether, when either of the poles are actually reached, there will not be found fully established there our good old friend Cursetjee Damtheboy, or other genial Parsee, running a general store with leading lines in Burma cheroots. Indian condiments, toilet requisites and "China's curious things."

Shackleton, by the first tabloid details so far vouchsafed, did much, saw much and learned more. We are to have it all in book form anon, meanwhile he lectures almost at once to the Royal Geographical Society, showing at the same time cinematograph films which are sure to be vastly interesting. Thousands of tickets have been applied for—it is to be delivered at the Albert Hall—and, doubtless, the gathering will be historic.

Is he being lionised ? I believe you gentle reader : he has put most other things and people away in the background for a moment—even Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee and the Press Conference people have had to be content with smaller type on the bills and the small boys have changed their cry from "'Ullo ' Indoo" to "Ooray for Shackleton, the h'iceberg 'Ero." He is booked up to the eyes in public, social and business engagements ; he is to be dined by all sorts of bodies—and *no*bodies—he escapes polar privations to grapple with gastronomic perils, in short he is in the thick of it and there I must leave him just now.

IT seems an age since I heard anything definite regarding the Victoria Memorial in Calcutta. Failing news from your end I give you an item from this. At a recent meeting of the Clive Memorial Committee it was unanimously decided to give to Mr. John Tweed the commission for the bronze statue of Lord Clive to be erected on the steps at the end of Charles Street, Whitehall, and the marble statue to be placed in the Victoria Memorial Hall at Calcutta. The sketch model for these statues was submitted by Mr. Tweed to his Majesty the King on Thursday last at Buckingham Palace.

No more Senior Wranglers ! For the last time the Cambridge Mathematical Tripos list has been published in order of merit, and Daniel, of Trinity, is the first name on the list.

The outside world knows nothing of the reasons which persuaded the University authorities to abolish the order of merit, but the passing of an ancient institution drew a great crowd last Monday to the Senate House.

Last year a Jew student yclept Brodetsky, of Trinity, secured this honour and now another Jew winds up the distinguished list. Percy John Daniell was born in South America, and got most of his early education in a Birmingham Grammar School.

And this reminds me that the foreigner (and often I fear the undesirable alien) is rapidly climbing up the ladder provided by our present idiotic educational system. A report of the L.C.C. on its probationary scholars being trained as teachers, shows that over a third of the scholarship winners are aliens, chiefly Germans or Russians. Oh ! We Britishers : it is the same hopeless cry everywhere—England for everybody but the English all along the line ! What will be the end of it ?

THE big coaching event at Olympia, fancifully styled the "Coaching Marathan," came off on Monday with considerable éclat, and a real good show it was. The twenty-one four-in-hands were horsed and driven in a way recalling the palmy days of the road : to watch them come over Hammersmith Bridge, where I took my stand early in the afternoon, was to gaze on something unusually pretty and inspiriting. They started in the chesnut avenue at Bushey Park and ended at Olympia ten miles. A big cheer went up as the first coach, driven by Mr. Francis Francis, led off the dashing procession. Sleepy old Hampton Court seemed to awake with a start at the cheerful blast of the horns, the performers, red-coated and gold braided, competing with each other in ear-piercing music as the four-in-hands swung along down the road. On one coach the ribbons were in the hands of a lady, Miss Brocklebank, who, attired in a grey costume, with a grey top hat, managed her team magnificently.

Mr. Alfred Vanderbilt was getting the best out of his famous Greys as he guided them skilfully along the winding roads, and cheers greeted this daring whip as he took one difficult gradient at a gallop.

Many an old sportsman saluted the original "Old Times" coach with which Jim Selby made his record run to Brighton and back in 1888. Loaded with veteran passengers, it looked as fresh and smart as ever in its coat of primrose, and seemed quite equal to the fastest efforts of its upstart rivals.

Everywhere along the ten-mile course stood the delighted crowd, and many of them could not avoid expressions of regret at the passing of the good old days when such sights were of daily occurrence.

The first team to arrive at Olympia was Mr. Vanderbilt's at 3-40, and he was followed by Judge Moore.

IN these days of reform and abolition in most mundane concerns the announcement of "ballroom reform" fails to move me to even mild surprise. It seems we have got far too rowdy in our dancing. there is a tendency to romping, horseplay and worse—especially in the lancers—and the Dancing Teachers' Conference are going to check it, if indeed they cannot succeed in altogether stamping out this dreadful evil if need be by the total abolition of the third figure. With the uncomfortable sort of feeling of impending though undefinable catastrophe (such as one experiences before an earthquake) I read in a morning paper as follows :—

"Deliberate horseplay at dances has now reached such a stage that it is keeping people who like dancing for dancing's sake entirely away from the ballroom," declared Mr. S. Bishop, president of the British Association of Teachers of Dancing, yesterday. It is under the ægis of the association that the conference is to be held.

"We have, accordingly, decided that a definite step must be taken to do away with this rowdyism," he added. "The romping that goes on—and it is often worse than romping—occurs chiefly during the lancers. The third figure—known as the 'basket' figure—is by far the worst. In fashionable ballrooms I have myself frequently seen the women whirled right off their feet in this figure, and swung round and round in a most ungraceful way.

"This has become, indeed, the customary thing. The men get excited, and work up the romping till this third figure comes. Then there is a rush and a lot of violent horseplay. Many ladies I have spoken to are now refusing to let their daughters go to dances at all owing to this rowdyism. The result will be, unless a check is put to it, that dancing as an amusement for ordinary people will be doomed."

In which case I presume we shall follow the example of the East, hire nautch walins and so indulge our light fantastic proclivities vicariously.

Last Saturday the death was announced of an Anglo-Indian celebrity of thirty years ago. I allude to the demise of Field Marshall Sir Frederick Paul Haines at the age of ninety. He entered the Army in 1839, at the age of twenty, was the son of the late General Gregory Haines, C.B., Commander-General of the Forces and married the daughter of Colonel E. E. Miller, Madras Army, in 1854. He survived his wife by twenty-nine years. He attained the rank of general in 1877, and was Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army from 1871-75 afterwards becoming Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army, a position which he held for six years. He fought in the Crimea and in Afghanistan in 1879-80.

"The Fires of Fate," by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, is the latest Wallerian venture at the Lyric: it is a highly sugared moral pill affair, rather melodramatic with two acts devoted to padding and two to action. A Nonconformist clergyman brings about such incidents and complications as form the story of the play. Colonel Cyril Egerton receives his death warrant in a doctor's consulting room. He is suffering from a nervous disease which will assuredly kill him in less than eighteen months. He is afraid of the short life of waning health and strength that is before him and resolves at once on self-destruction. He tells the doctor quite frankly his decision, and the doctor is unble to deny that such a decision is a wise one. But the doctor's brother is the Nonconformist clergyman, and he holds very different views. He tells Colonel Egerton that it would be cowardly to desert his post before he is called by the Great Captain, and his words of robust religion bring the Colonel round to the same way of thinking. So, instead of shooting himself, Egerton goes on a tourist trip up the Nile, falls in love with a pretty American girl, rescues her from the clutches of the Dervishes, and gets a crack on the head from an Arab which cures his supposed incurable nervous diseases for good and all. If there really is a moral in this modern morality play, it is either that while there is life there is hope or that a certain cure for certain nervous diseases is a crack on the head from a wild Dervish.

Mr. Lewis Waller as Colonel Egerton has again to be the grave, determined strong man of action. He plays it with becoming dignity. Mr. A. E. George is excellent as a loud-voiced clergyman. Miss Evelyn D'Alroy looks charming as a young American. Sound work is done by Mr. Fisher White and Miss Agnes Thomas, among others. But all the characters are mere shadows. Characterisation is apparently not Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's strong point.

The Dramatic Censorship again comes up for discussion. On Monday next Mr. Robert Harcourt, promoter of the Theatres and Music-halls Bill, intends to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to appoint a committee of inquiry into the working of the censorship over stage plays previous to production, and also the forms of license granted respectively to theatres and music-halls, with a view to considering whether legislation is desirable. There is some hope that Mr. Asquith will make a favourable reply.

What next? At an afternoon recital given in London this week by a lady, "considerable amusement (we read) was caused by the solemn presentation to the singer of either a Spitz puppy or a black kitten—it was not easy to see which through the dense forest of fashionable hats." After this it sounded absurdly commonplace to read that "flowers, too, were freely offered." What every body must really have been anxious to know was whether the concert-giver's other tribute took the form of a puppy or a kitten, and the mystery certainly is one that must be cleared up. One cannot help reflecting how Sophie Menter—who at one time never travelled anywhere without her feline pets—would have rejoiced at receiving a black kitten as a tribute to her powers. But where is such a fashion to end? Not long ago we recollect seeing several baskets of luscious-looking fruit handed up to a recital-giver by one of the hall attendants. But this was as nothing compared with a puppy that might have been a kitten, or a kitten that might have been a puppy. If this sort of thing goes on, we shall soon see our concert platforms "adorned," not with floral tokens, but with dogs and cats, not to speak of parrots, white mice, and goldfish.

The Welshman has been rearing his head in the land lately. Yesterday was concluded his Gorsedd and his Eisteddfod—that strange, though not unpleasing pageant of hewn stones, harps, horns, garlands, flowing beards and weird music. The Welshman gathered in his thousands in leafy Kensington Gardens and having proclaimed himself a good fellow, and having had this confirmed by Messrs. Asquith, Balfour and others, he is much pleased at this present.

I watched him last Tuesday afternoon from among the crowd the while I stood between two buxom Welsh lassies wearing "witch hats." I saw the mystic Maen Llog, and the circle within which four venerable bardic gentlemen handed the enormous horn of welcome to Ynyrs wr Pyr; I inspected from a safe distance the 8-foot sword with which at one moment I feared the Arch Druid was about to lay about him so ferocious was his challenge. "Is it Peace?" as he half drew it from its scabbard; I heard the harps aringing and the hirsuite bards asinging, and all words seemed as long as the sword aforesaid and as sonorous as the mighty horn called Corn Gwylad. And it was all quite good, very quaint and picturesque with its white, blue and green gowns, its garlands and chaplets, its soothing music and chanting, in its sylvan setting that glorious summer day, albeit, like Old Kaspar, what it all meant "I couldn't well make out." So I looked for a possible solution in my paper next morning and was cheered and comforted to learn among other essential details, that gentlemen bearing for names the odd syllables of Mon. Y. ar Botholec and Yoonouk ar Bodolek (or were those two the same gentleman?—let him, or them, forgive me if I err) assisted at the ceremony of handing the Horn of Welcome to Ynyrs wr Pyr, and that great enthusiasm expressed itself in the words "Clywch, clywch," instead of "Hear, hear," Strange—is it not?—that in Kensington Gardens, in the year 1909, Ynyrs wr Pyr—or was it Yoonuk ar Bodolek?—should be receiving Horns of Plenty to the rapturous cries of "Clywch, clywch!" Small wonder that certain men of Harlech of my acquaintance cannot get their hats on yet without using force.

TIGER DRIVING PANTHER OFF HIS KILL.

The following incident happened in the Central Provinces a few years ago, and came as a very agreeable surprise, though it ended in disappointment.

There were five of us who used to go out shooting from Pachmarhi, and as we could only get away for Saturday afternoons and Sundays we were heavily handicapped; but Esar Singh, my orderly, was very useful. I had sent him to a village Mogra, about six miles off the Pachmarhi Piparia road, to tie up a buffalo calf near the river Denwa. And he was to let us know if there was a kill.

We received no news from him, but decided to spend our week end at Mogra, and having sent off our bedding, etc., early on Saturday morning, we ourselves started on bicycles at 2-30 P.M.

From Pachmarhi we had a stiff pull up for about 1½ miles, but from there to Singanama we had a downhill run of over thirteen miles with perhaps 500 yards uphill in it. The road is so steep that we had to tie a branch on a string to act as a drag keeping our brakes for emergencies, and we wanted them, too, as the road winds a great deal and as likely as not one met a string of bullock carts round a corner.

We arrived safely at Singanama and six miles further on crossed the river Denwa from this spot a footpath leads to Mogra, just as we were turning down this a coolie met us, he had been sent by Esar Singh to say that our buffalo had been killed by a tiger.

Full of keenness we proceeded to bike along a very indifferent footpath and luck was with us as our tyres did not get punctured.

We arrived at about 6 P.M. and were very disappointed to hear from Esar Singh that a panther and not a tiger had killed the buffalo.

Esar Singh said he went about 6 A.M. to feed the buffalo and when about seventy yards off he saw what he took to be a tiger still on the kill, he said its head was all red with blood, and it looked so big. He quietly returned to the village and sent off men to collect coolies for a beat and one to tell us the news.

At about 12 noon he went again to the kill and then found by the smallness of the fangs in the throat and the pug marks, that a panther had killed the buffalo. Well as arrangements had been made to collect a hundred and twenty coolies we thought we might as well have the beat and try to get the panther. After some grub we rolled up in blankets and were soon asleep.

It must have been about 11 o'clock P.M. when I woke up hearing a panther making his peculiar call in the jungle near by. I thought "Well perhaps that is the panther, he's moved off here from the nullah near the kill." And as it happened it was undoubtedly the panther, as I am about to relate. We had breakfast about eight o'clock next morning and waited till the sun was well up before starting. We counted the coolies and gave them each a metal ticket, and finally set off for the jungle, about a mile and a half away, at 10 A.M.

As we neared the spot we found the fresh pugs of a panther coming along the path away from the kill. We all said "no luck here" but decided to go on and have the beat.

It took us about half an hour to get round to the position for the guns. One gun would have been sufficient as the nullah was very narrow here. We drew for places and C. got the centre, R. and G. going on the left and L. and I on the right.

I told Esar Singh and the local shikari to go off to the flank and act as stops and I climbed up and sat on a branch of a tree overlooking a small branch nullah. It must have been about an hour later when I was recalled from oblivion by the sound of leaves being brushed about just as though a peafowl was coming along and then lo and behold I saw a fine tiger walking slowly up the middle of the nullah straight for C.

Thinking that C. would get an easy shot I waited, and waited! and waited!! What had happened? There was absolute silence, and I wondered if C. had gone to sleep. I was trying to hoard up a nice fund of things to say to him when what should I see but the tiger slinking back down the nullah. I could not get a decent shot but I knew it was our only chance so leaning round a branch that was in the way I fired at his shoulder. He turned sharp at the shot and at full speed passed right under me. In my hurry to get a second shot in I nearly fell out of the tree in front of him, but just saved myself—I got my second barrel in after he had passed. When to my horror I saw the local shikari appear from behind a large rock not five yards from the line on which the tiger was travelling, but a moment later Esar Singh rose and forced him down behind the rock again. I was relieved to find that the tiger passed on and did not notice them.

Quickly getting down from my tree and whistling up the others I told them what had happened. We soon found a strong blood track, but decided to wait and let the wound take effect before following up. I had a D. B. 577, R. a D. B. 500, L. a ·400 certus cordite, and G. and C. ·303. Not the sort of battery to follow up a wounded tiger with. However R., L. and I went in front and G. C. formed the second line, and on we went. The coolies were most annoying, they kept on shouting and yelling and could not be persuaded to stay behind. This was very probably the reason that the tiger did not lie down. In several places he had stood for a long time and left great patches of blood but he would not lie down. We followed the trail for a good mile and a half and about 3 P.M. lost it going up a hill. We could find it nowhere and so sat down for some grub.

After tiffin we had another try but could not unravel it and fearing that if he had made over the hill he was not badly hit we at last decided to turn towards Mogra, as we had to bike from Mogra to Singanama and return thence to Pachmarhi in bullock carts or tongas. I preferred a bullock cart as after a long day and a good dinner one can sleep soundly in one. And it got one up to Pachmarhi in time for morning parade.

From the blood marks on bushes, etc., he must have been badly wounded high up on the shoulder and there must have been a big hole in his stomach, evidenced by bits of his intestines which we picked up. On our return we passed by the kill and saw plainly that a panther had killed the calf, but we also saw the pugs of the tiger going in to the nullah along the very path near which the buffalo had been tied. I should dearly liked to have been there to have witnessed the "enter tiger left, exit panther right."

Two days later I searched one of two thick places where the local shikari said wounded animals went to die and strange to say at the very top of a nullah where they told me I might find the tiger we found the remains of a panther, just his skeleton and the fur along his tail. They told me it was one that had been wounded by an officer four months before.

I found no trace of the tiger and only hope that he lived to show sport another day.

Si Si.

Suffragettes have been pestering the Prime Minister on the links. That's the worst kind of golf "bogey" he has ever known.

Mr. Felix Brown, of Chicago, has invented a machine which enables a man to cut his own hair. He can also annoy himself exceedingly by talking to himself all the time.

Eugene Higgins, a wealthy financier, was entertaining at dinner in Monte Carlo a party of Americans. The talk turning to play at the Casino, Mr. Higgins described an incident he had witnessed the night before. "In one of the gold rooms," he said, "a gentleman in lavender gloves was playing with wonderful luck, winning nearly every stake. As a great stack of plaques—you know those beautiful big gold pieces called plaques—was pushed to him by the croupier, I heard a young lady whisper in his ear, 'It is very odd, monsieur, to wear gloves at play. What do you do it for—luck?' The fortunate player smiled grimly. 'Not at all' he replied, 'I promised my wife on her deathbep never again to touch a card.'" .

A thief who was seen in France to jump a wall fifteen feet high, bound on to a roof, and poise himself on a rainpipe, has been called "the india-rubber burglar." The rainpipe episode surely makes him rather a gutter percher.

THE SHILLONG RACES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—In reference to the recent letters which have appeared in the Englishman, Statesman, and other papers concerning the Shillong Races, I have recently been informed that certain persons, needless to say not racing men, are under the impression that I made vast sums of money at the above Races, having also been handicapper for the handicaps on the second day. I think, therefore, it is as well that I should explain exactly what my position was. The first day's races were not handicaps, and it was, of course, open to any one, Steward of the Races or other, to back his fancy. The lotteries I attended under protest in order to help things through, as there were very few racing men and every individual was needed to make them a success. My book the next morning showed that at the worst I could not lose and at the best was bound to do very well indeed. I then and there, before the races came off, gave away three-fourths to one gentleman and another one-eighth to a friend staying with me, merely keeping one-eighth myself to shew my bond fides.

For the following day I and another gentleman made up the handicaps and again I went to the lotteries to help them through; I made my book for the evening and again the next morning made exactly the same transfers before the races came off. My interests in the races financially were practically nil and in some instances the books will prove this. I stood to win on every horse in the race and in one I stood to lose, whatever happened, a few rupees.

I have also had comments made to me on the handicapping of Miss Mac and Eileen, and of Gowan. In these cases those commenting have forgotten that Miss Mac carried 7lb. over weight the first day, and the handicap therefore gave her a stone, not 7lb., for a two length beating and the race itself showed, I think, that if the mare had run her race out she would have won well.

As regards Gowan, I handicapped her 11lb. under what she carried, and had she carried her proper weight I think she, too, should have won. The first pony in her race won all out under the whip by two and a half lengths and the second pony was barely clear of her. Her owner's ideas might have been judged by his backing her in spite of the over weight. Mr. Deakin's riding had also much to do with the winning of certain ponies both on the first and second day, but one cannot handicap ponies on the form of their riders.

I believe the writer of the letter which started the present controversy is now well known, but until he publishes his name I cannot well comment on his letter in detail. Mr. Hennessy is a sportsman of the best, and I take no exception to his criticisms, though they are both incorrect and unjust; but I must refer to one insinuation, in which he talks of handicapper, gambler and starter being one and the same.

The regular starter of the Shillong Races was Mr. Molesworth, but as he was owner of Miss Mac who was running in one race I was asked to start for him. Eileen and Miss Mac gave no trouble, but Stockdale appeared to be rather a handful to his rider, and I had to warn him against coming up sixteen annas whilst the others were going four. As it was, I let them go to a perfect start, though Stockdale again tried his rushing tactics, and I think the owner and rider of Miss Mac will admit that if any of the three ponies in the races got off better than the other it was this mare. As it was, she led up to within the distance and then absolutely stopped.

I am publishing these details as I think they should be known to those to whom I and the other Stewards are unknown quantities, but I have no idea that it is in the least necessary for me to defend myself to those who do know me. I should certainly not act in future as Steward at any race meeting with which the anonymous writer was connected, but, except for this, do not consider further action of any sort necessary nor will I trouble the papers with further explanations.

Handicapper, Shillong Races.

BENGAL HOCKEY ASSOCIATION.

A Contradiction.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—This is an interesting incident in the history of Calcutta Hockey. I think that the public has not yet forgotten a circular recently issued by the Bengal Hockey Association in most of the local newspapers. I am going to give below full details of the facts to which the circular owes its origin and leave it to the public to judge, whether the B.H.A. were justified in issuing such a circular.

(1) One of the members of the City Athletic Club got together a team which played for the Indian Challenge Cup in Hockey in the year 1908, under the name of the City Strollers, who were the holders of the Cup that year.

(2) In the beginning of May 1909 the City Strollers asked the City A.C. to allow the eleven members of the City A.C. (names mentioned by the B.H.A. in their circular issued in the papers) to play for the City Strollers in the I.C. Cup this year, but as the Secretary of the City A.C. did not permit them to play for them, the Captain of the Hockey team of City A.C. for this year, who was the organizer of the City Strollers, induced the other members that played in the Cup referred to above to leave the City A.C. and join his club (the City Strollers).

(3) The City Strollers were not affiliated to the B.H.A. who has nothing to do with the I.C. Cup.

(4) The City Strollers played for the I.C. Cup this year and the Honorary Secretary, B.H.A., sent a letter to the Honorary Secretary, City A.C., asking him whether his team played for the cup in question. The reply was in the negative.

(5) The Secretary, City A.C., was called upon to attend a meeting on the 18th May 1909, but as, owing to some urgent business, he regretted his inability to attend the meeting, he received the following letter from the Secretary, B.H.A., on the 20th May 1909, though he emphatically protested against the charges of breaking the Rule No. 27 (i. e., playing in an unrecognised competition):—

"My Council at their meeting held on 18th instant at 6-45 P.M. have suspended the City Athletic Club and its following eleven players for a period of one year from the date of the meeting—the former for not appearing to answer the charges made against them in connection with the said competition and the latter for taking part in an unrecognised competition, etc."

Now will the B.H.A. answer the following questions:—

(a) Whether they were just in suspending a club or any of its players when the club is not affiliated to their Association.

(b) How is it that in the circular published in the newspapers by Mr. Bhattacharji, it has been stated that the City A.C. has been suspended for breaking Rule No. 27 (playing in an unrecognised competition) though he writes in his letter to the Secretary, City A.C., that they have been suspended for not attending that particular meeting, though the City A.C. replied that they had no connection with the City Strollers?

Now it was through Mr. Bhattacharji himself, the Secretary, B.H.A., that Messrs. Ishaque and Yasin (both of whom played this year for the City Strollers in the cup in question) were taken in as members of the Rovers Club. Then why did Mr. Bhattacharji not call upon the Rovers Club (his own Club) to explain why they allowed these two players to play in unrecognised competition?

B.H.A. and I.F.A.

Mr. Bhattacharji, the Secretary, B.H.A., stopped the Calcutta F.C. from playing a fixture game in football on 18th June as the City Athletic has been suspended in Hockey but allowed the Rovers to play the City A.C. on the 20th June though everybody knows him to be all in all to the said Club.

The B.H.A. also applied to the Indian Football Association not to allow the City A.C. to play for any cup governed by them, but thanks to the Indian Football Association they decided against the B.H.A. and allowed the City Athletic to compete in the cups governed by them and thus maintained their reputation of being always just.

In this connection we may also remind the public how the B.H.A. treated the City A.C. on the Customs ground which was lent to the City A.C. for playing the second round of the Bengal Challenge Shield Competition during the last Hockey season. The City A.C. were playing East Indian Railway and when the game had been in progress some ten minutes it was stopped by the B.H.A. who took away the ground for a match for the Beighton Cup (Calcutta vs. Dhanbaid) which was to have been played on the Rangers ground, this being on that day quite unplayable on account of rain. This is also to remind the public how the Lakshibilas Hockey Cup was given away to the Seebpore College after scratching the Mohan Bagan, the runners up in the final.

Dear Sirs,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom, included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

LITTLE JOHNNIE, who had been praying for some months for God to send him a baby brother, finally became discouraged. "I don't believe God has any more little boys to send," he told his mother, "and I'm going to stop it."

Early one morning not long after this he was taken into his mother's room to see twin boys, who had arrived in the night. Johnnie regarded them thoughtfully for some minutes. "Golly," he remarked, finally, "it's a good thing I stopped praying when I did."

THE TURF.

GATWICK.

IT was a convenient arrangement by which last week's South-country racing was confined to the counties of Sussex and Surrey. The greatest benefit was reaped by Gatwick where the racing was distinctly good on Saturday, and if the class of animal competing was no better than could reasonably have been expected the week before Ascot, the finishes were of a closeness in the majority of races to make the pulse positively tingle. Results :—

Won by four lengths; a neck between second and third.

The unpromising outlook on Saturday morning deterred many from attending the final stage of this meeting; nevertheless the company present exceeded the average. The rain, however, had a depressing effect, and with more than one heavily-backed horse failing to justify expectations, there was no compensation to be derived from the results as far as backers of first favourites were concerned.

VERANDA SELLING HANDICAP—Of 100sovs. 1¼ miles.

Mr. G. F. Avila's Rambling Rector, 4yrs., 8st. 13lb. ... ... Foy 1

From the King down, society takes a breather between the Stakes and Cup days, and we lack the seal of Royal approval set by the procession. The Royal party on Wednesday included many of the guests present on Tuesday, but the Royal enclosure was not so thronged by reasons of counter attractions elsewhere. As one of the old fashioned mediums of ante-post speculation, the Royal Hunt Cup still holds its own. Everybody who takes an interest in the national sport backs his opinion in the old-fashioned way; and the favoured division who can shake the trammels of carking care from their shoulders come down to see their fancies justify or otherwise their opinions. All fears of rain were hushed as the heavily loaded specials shot away from the wilderness of bricks and mortar with a balmy June atmosphere clarified by a midsummer sun. The King, for whom a most popular victory was in store, was met by a thoroughly representative company. The course was again in grand order and sport well worthy of the occasion. Results :—

LONDON, Friday, 18th June 1909.

THE TURF.

GATWICK.

IT was a convenient arrangement by which last week's South-country racing was confined to the counties of Sussex and Surrey. The greatest benefit was reaped by Gatwick where the racing was distinctly good on Saturday, and if the class of animal competing was no better than could reasonably have been expected the week before Ascot, the finishes were of a closeness in the majority of races to make the pulse positively tingle. Results :—

The unpromising outlook on Saturday morning deterred many from attending the final stage of this meeting ; nevertheless the company present exceeded the average. The rain, however, had a depressing effect, and with more than one heavily-backed horse failing to justify expectations, there was no compensation to be derived from the results as far as backers of first favourites were concerned.

From the King down, society takes a breather between the Stakes and Cup days, and we lack the seal of Royal approval set by the procession. The Royal party on Wednesday included many of the guests present on Tuesday, but the Royal enclosure was not so thronged by reasons of counter attractions elsewhere. As one of the old fashioned mediums of ante-post speculation, the Royal Hunt Cup still holds its own. Everybody who takes an interest in the national sport backs his opinion in the old-fashioned way ; and the favoured division who can shake the trammels of carking care from their shoulders come down to see their fancies justify or otherwise their opinions. All fears of rain were hushed as the heavily loaded specials shot away from the wilderness of bricks and mortar with a balmy June atmosphere clarified by a midsummer sun. The King, for whom a most popular victory was in store, was met by a thoroughly representative company. The course was again in grand order and sport well worthy of the occasion. Results :—

GOLF.

THE OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

A SPLENDID wind-up has to be recorded of the open championship meeting at Deal. The weather was perfect, and the day's play strenuous in the extreme. The result was a well-deserved win for J. H. Taylor, who now shares with Harry Vardon and James Braid the honour of having won the title four times. At the close of the previous day when my last notes were posted Taylor led the field with an aggregate of 147, C. Johns coming next with 148, and Tom Ball with 149.

Throughout Friday Taylor played wonderfully steady golf and made two fine rounds of 74 each, his grand total thus being 295—a record only once before bettered in the championship, viz., by James Braid, at Prestwick, last year. Beyond being occasionally weak with his approach putts, Taylor made few mistakes. James Braid and Tom Ball tied for second place with aggregates of 301. The feature of Ball's game was 'ts straightness, but Braid was scarcely at his best.

Young Johns, who finished fourth, was the surprise of the tournament, and although a little lucky in some of his recoveries, he deserved his position for the attractive and enterprising character of his play. Messrs. E. A. Lassen and Robert Maxwell were the best of the amateurs, whilst one of the features o fthe afternoon was a splendid last round of 73 by Tom Renouf, which gained him fifth place. Appended are the scores:—

OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP OF FRANCE.—Within a week of his fourth triumph in the British open championship, J. H. Taylor, of Mid-Surrey, gained yesterday his second consecutive victory in the French open championship.

His play was brilliant in the extreme. A strong wind prevailed, but it did not trouble Taylor, whose approaching, and putting too, were splendid. Out in 35, he came home in 36, and, with a score of 71, equalled the competition record for the course, previously accomplished by himself, Arnaud Massy, W. E. Reid, and C. H. Mayo.

In the afternoon nearly all the interest was focussed on the play of Braid and Taylor. Their respective scores to the turn were 38 and 36, so that they were now level. Taylor came home in 36, so that his aggregate was 293. On the last green Braid had a putt of twelve yards to tie. He played it well, but just failed to hole it, and, for the second time within a week, had to rest content with second place to the Englishman.

An interesting feature of the morning round was that Tom Williamson, of Nottingham, who captained England in the recent professionals' international match, did the tenth hole in one stroke. The hole measures 230 yards.

Appended are the scores:—

ATHLETICS.

THE CIVIL SERVICE SPORTS.

Reginald E. Walker, the South African sprinter, made his first appearance of the year in the metropolis, last Saturday at Stamford Bridge in connection with these sports. His running proved quite the feature of an excellent afternoon's sport, and he gave the impression of being in quite as good form as when last year he won the Olympic sprint.

After winning the 100 yards strangers' handicap he had matters all his own way in the invitation 100 yards, and simply walked away from such capable sprinters as L. J. de B. Reed and L. F. Tremeer.

Another South African competed in the person of Victor Duncker, the A.A.A. hurdles champion, but after winning his heat in the 120 yards hurdles handicap owing eighteen yards, comfortably, he was beaten in the final by Captain

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

BOVRIL

is ALL beef—prime beef in a readily digestible form.

That is why BOVRIL is so invigorating a beverage, so strengthening a food, why Cooks find it so useful, why Doctors and Nurses recommend it, why the sensible housewife will have nothing in place of it.

C. E. Kinahan, of the L.A.C., to whom he conceded four yards. The one mile invitation relay race was a well-contested event, in which the L.A.C., S.L.H., Blackheath Harriers, and Herne Hill Harriers competed. The S.L.H. proved successful, thanks mainly to F. A. Knott, who beat T. H. Just, the old Cambridge Blue, in the half-mile by about 1½ yards. From this point the S.L.H. representatives were always in front. Appended are results of the more important events on the card:—

100 Yards Invitation Scratch Race.—Heat 1: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., 1; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 2. Won easily. Time—10-4/5secs. Heat 2: L. J. de B. Read, L.A.C., and S. J. Marshall, Blackheath H., walked over. Heat 3: H. Watson, S.L.H., 1; L. F. Tremeer, L.A.C., 2. Won by two yards. Time—10-4/5secs. Final Heat: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., 1; H. Watson, S.L.H., 2; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 3; S. J. Marshall, Blackheath H., 4. Won by two yards, with a yard between second and third and inches third and fourth. Time—10-4/5secs.

100 Yards Bentley-Tomlinson Challenge Cup.—C. C. Davies, Home Office, 1; H. W. Monroe, Patent Office, 2; T. O. Church, Post Office, 3. Won by a yard. Same distance between second and third. Time—10 4/5secs.

Half-mile Members' Handicap.—P. Corry, Admiralty, 45 yards start, 1; J. W. Cornish, Board of Trade, 62 yards, 2; F. J. Smith, Post Office 28 yards, 3. Won by a yard; five yards between second and third. Time—1min. 58-3/5secs. Cornish ran well, but was staggering at the finish, and Corry passed him just before the tape.

100 Yards Handicap (strangers).—Final Heat: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., scratch, 1; H. B. Blower, L.A.C., 7½ yards start, 2; W. G. Harris, Highgate H., 7, 3; F. H. W. Neatham, Civil Service, 11, 4. Walker got away to a good start, and getting up six yards from the tape won by a foot; a yard divided Blower and Harris. Time—10-1/5secs.

One Mile Scratch Race (Strathcona Challenge Cup).—F. S. Thomson, Admiralty Registry, 1; G. N. Mathie, Stationery Office, 2; G. C. Smallwood (penalised 25 yards), Patent Office, 3. Thomson led throughout and won by four yards; twice that distance between second and third. Time—4m ns. 44secs.

One Mile Relay Race (half-mile, 440 yards, and two at 220 yards).—South London H. (F. A. Knott, E. H. Montague, A. Longhurst, and H. Watson), 1; London A. C. (T. H. Just, W. H. Ginston, A. Abrahams, and S. Abrahams), 2; Herne Hill H. (J. Henney, C. Stanfield, E. E. Brockman and E. W. Haley), 3; Blackheath H. (H. E. J. Southwell, W. A. Dewsnap, W. D. Lancefield, and S. J. Marshall), 4. Won by five yards; thirty yards between second and third. Time—3mins. 40-4/5secs. Knott beat Just by about a yard and a half in the first half-mile, an advantage that was gradually increased by Montague in the quarter and Longhurst and Watson in the two furlongs.

220 Yards Handicap (members).—Final Heat: L. J. de B. Reed, Board of Trade, scratch, 1; P. Corry, Admiralty, 17, 2; L. P. Cooper, C.S. Commission, 20, 3; H. W. Monroe, Patent Office, 9, 4. Reed got up in the last few strides and won by inches. Time—23secs.

120 Yards Hurdle Handicap (strangers).—Final Heat: Captain C. E. Kinahan, L.A.C., owes 14 yards, 1; V. Duncker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., owes 18, 2; C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., owes 11, 3. Won by a good yard; a like distance separated Duncker and Dugmore. Time—18-3/5secs.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE SUMMER RACES.—Rain early in the day was succeeded by fairly fine weather in the late afternoon at Cambridge on Friday and the races were again witnessed by a large company. Once more they proved exciting, but only four bumps were recorded. Of these three were made in the second division, and probably the one recorded in the first section constitutes a record for these races. First Trinity were expected to seriously trouble Jesus, but the wearers of the red and black had very little difficulty in retaining their place at the head of the river. The one bump made was by Third Trinity, stroked by Arbuthnot, the Etonian Blue, who made short work of Emmanuel. In the second division, Pembroke II. caught Lady Margaret in the Long Reach, Caius II. made their third successive bump at the expense of King's II., and Peterhouse II. re-bumped Downing, after rounding First Post Corner.

The concluding night produced only a couple of bumps, making the total for the four nights 21—one of the smallest on record. The feature of the races was the great success of Jesus, who not only went "head" after 24 years' rest, but proved themselves the fastest and decidedly the best boat. For Steve Fairbairn, who has instituted and worked out what is known as the Jesus style, it is a great triumph. For three or four years now he has worked hard to get a crew who would give a fair demonstration of his style, and having had the present crew under his care ever since they have been at Cambridge, he has succeeded, for the first time, in getting the College to the top rung of the Cambridge rowing ladder. Last year the College carried off the Ladies' Plate at Henley, and then won the Cambridge Fours, whilst they have now reached the summit of their 'Varsity ambition, and will have a flutter at the Belgians at Henley. Bumps were made as follow:—Wednesday 8, Thursday 6, Friday 5, and Saturday 2. Officiating on Saturday were Messrs. L. H. K. Bushe Fox, G. N. M. Bland, J. F. A. Trotter, with Messrs. C. W. H. Taylor and J. H. Gibbon, the famous old Third Trinity Blues.

DIVISION II.—Order of Starting.

King's I.	First Trinity III.
Clare	Jesus III.
Pembroke II	Caius II.
Lady Margaret II.	King's II.
Trinity Hall II.	Emmanuel II.
St. Catharine's	Christ's II.
Queens'	Peterhouse
Sidney	Downing

King's did not expect to be bumped by Clare, but at Ditton Corner only half a length separated the boats. Clare felt the effects of their recent change, and Pembroke II. began to gain, and only missed by a quarter of a length at the finish. In the Gut Lady Margaret II. looked like catching Pembroke, but fell off, and from Ditton Trinity Hall II. gained rapidly on the Johnians, and only just failed to lower their colours. St. Catherine's, Queens', and Sidney rowed over their distance apart. First Trinity III. made a fine race of it with Jesus III., but had to give in at the Glass Houses. The remaining half-dozen boats—Caius II., King's II., Emmanuel II., Christ's II., Peterhouse, and Downing—had evidently reached their right places, for they remained practically their starting distances apart all over the course.

DIVISION I.—Order of Starting.

Jesus I	Corpus.
First Trinity I.	Jesus II.
Trinity Hall I.	First Trinity II.
Pembroke I.	Christ's I.
Lady Margaret I.	Selwyn.
Third Trinity	Magdalene.
Emmanuel I.	King's I.
Caius I.

Jesus took matters fairly easily, just rowing in from the Railway Bridge. D. C. R. Stuart brought off another triumph with the Hall, for although Pembroke got within a quarter of a length on Friday, there was always a length clear between the boats on Saturday. Third Trinity were fast over the first part of the course, and on Saturday, by vanquishing the Johnians, they ascended a third place, all of their bumps having been made opposite the Pitt Club Lawn. At the finish Caius were only half a length behind Emmanuel, whilst Corpus were rather less than that distance away from them. Jesus II. and First Trinity II. rowed over, but the next three boats were all close up, Selwyn being only a quarter of a length off Christ's and Magdalene practically overlapping Selwyn when the winning-post was reached. King's, who rowed eight courses, did not try for a bump after Ditton.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 24th June.—Lascelles' Covert at 7 A.M. The weather has at last broken and the Monsoon is with us once more. Only a little rain fell last night, though not sufficient to make the going softer, it improved the scent a good deal, and as there were lots of jack afoot there was no lack of sport, and those who stayed late were rewarded by a rattling good run. On moving off from the Meet hounds started off on a line in the bog below the 5th hole on the Golf Course, scent was a bit catchy at first, but they puzzled it out on the hillside above the New Pykara Road and crossed the Stream at Elmhurst Corner running up the hill to the left of Mills' as if for New Covert. Near the Stream below a brace of jack was viewed, hounds sticking to the one on the right chivied him over the Krummund Road and running past Druid, turned right handed along the road into Baikie, bustled him out of this below Dudley and right handed round One Tree Hill into Jackal. But scarcely had the jack touched this covert before he doubled back on the line he had come and saved his brush. Next drew Bluegum without success, then trotted on to Andy hounds touched a line to the right on the hill above Governor's. Running down to the road and along it for some distance pointing for Hungerford Plantation, then turned left handed up through the covert and out at the top and sank the hill past Lady Lawley's Shola to the Parson's Valley and were at fault near the stream. The Master held them forward to Dante's Spinney without recovering the line again. The Master then drew round the bog which lies to the west of Dante's Spinney, on the far side hounds hit off a line but were unable to make much of it. As we clambered down the face of an exceptionally steep hill, and one felt like a fly walking down a wall, hounds were busy in the bog at the foot and presently went off in full cry across the bog and up the opposite hill pointing for Dante's Spinney but just short of this they swung left handed over the hill, past the Twin Sisters and fairly raced their jack to Sambar Shola and on down to the Avalanch Finger Post when he apparently slipped them. It was one of the fastest runs we have had. Those who were lucky enough to have slid down the hill first when hounds found, started on excellent terms with the pack, but the tardy ones were reduced to a stern chase for the remainder of the run.

Saturday, 26th June.—Toda Coffee Shop 12 noon. A fine Monsoon day with a blustering sou'-wester blowing in full blast, driving rain and mist, but this did not prevent a fairly good company turning up at the Meet. The first jack found was a ringer, he ran several circles round and over the hills between the Pykara River and Lord Roberts' Shola and eventually made his escape just as a thick mist swept up. The next led us a short burst from Booster's Shola to Ampthill Wood in which hounds lost him. We moved on from him to the east of Kingodu Hill and hounds picked up a line and carried it to Booster's Shola then up past Gonikaralmund Shola on to the saddle, a herd of buffaloes crossing the line caused hounds to check, the Master cast them forward and down to the bottom of Paragon where the jack had waited. The instant they touched his line they set off at a great pace over the bog and pointed for Malkod Mund but bent to the left over the hill and then to the right to Kengod Mund and checked. Picking up the line again on the hill side they swept round above the Dunsandle Tea Estate to Boar's Copse and Glyn's Covert back to the place we had started from then down to the bog and up through Paragon and over the Falls Road to the bottom of Road Shola, running over the crossing and turning left handed skirted the far corner of Road Shola and dipped down to the bottom of Dormer. They hustled him through and over the ridge to the corner of Chemund. At one time it looked as though they would cross the Yemakal Stream but short of it they swung to the left and skirting Chemund ran over the top of Khed and put their jack to ground in an earth on the edge of Road Shola just below the Waterfall Road. It was a merry chase lasting close on an hour, and we went home well satisfied with the day's sport.

Monday, 28th June.—Melkaval Village 8 A.M. The morning was cloudy, the clouds lying low on the hills and a good deal of mist about, it also rained frequently and we were thoroughly wet before we set our faces homewards. The Master drew down to the Mathesura Stream on the other side of which hounds touched a line and carried it up the steep slopes for some distance then turning to the left through Kuruthugulli they ran round above the Nunjonad Village in the direction of Vane's Copse but turned before reaching this and came back to the Avalanche Finger Post. As usually happens in this country there were so many jack about that the pack had divided and it was some time before they were all got together again. The fields below the Nunjonad Village were next drawn and in a small gully a pig jumped up but hounds were fortunately stopped in time and an opportune jack making his appearance just then they lost no time in transferring their attentions to him. They hunted him round about the scrub, and over the fields and finally ran into and killed him on a small hill to the right of Goondapa Stream. A brace of jack had gone away to the left, no sooner had hounds broken up this jack than they were running hard on the line of one of the other but this was a small hearted jack and was quickly accounted for. It was late and we were all soaked to the skin so a move was made for home.

CALCUTTA ROWING CLUB.

FIRST REGATTA.

Saturday, 3rd July 1909.

THE Calcutta Rowing Club opened their season with a successful regatta this afternoon. The weather conditions were excellent till the last race but one and then the rain came down and the proceedings were brought to a close in a steady downpour. There was a large gathering of spectators in the club enclosure despite the counter attraction of the charity football match and all the arrangements were tip top. The programme opened with the final in the junior sculls between Fairley and Walker. The race had attracted six starters and preliminaries were decided on the two previous days. Fairley, who had the advantage of weight, beat Walker who, however, sculled in good style. The Ladies' race brought out two competitors, Mrs. Stevens winning easily. The pairs provided a good race, Ridley and Bennett beating Fairley and Clemensha, who rowed pluckily all the way. Only two crews entered for the Hoare Cup, the Bank of Bengal four beating Heron's crew by three and a half lengths. The winners had the advantage of weight but had Heron bustled his crew at the bridge the finish would have been closer. The Canoe race was won by Fairley and Pearsall and the time honoured scratch fours brought the programme to an end. It was the best race of the day, Green's boat just passing the post two feet to the good. Details:—

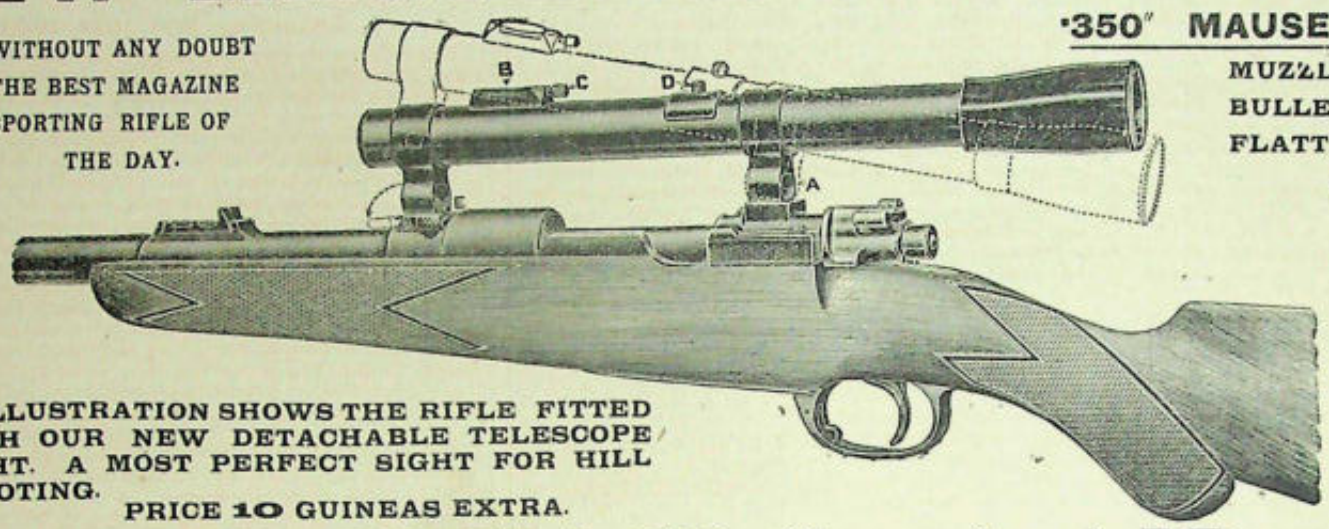
WINCHESTER



RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—The return match was played on the Calcutta ground on the 30th ultimo. The home forwards were first away and a good bit of passing ended in Cowden beating Margrett. After the Rangers had forced a corner which proved abortive Calcutta again attacked but Margrett managed to get the shots away. Anscombe next conceded a corner to the visitors but this was not improved upon and level play followed. Calcutta were prominent for some good runs and from a free kick for a foul against the visitors O'Shea very nearly scored. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn : then Longbottom got possession and scored with a fine shot and before the close of the game the same player added a third goal, a faulty kick by Chandler going off Longbottom's foot into the net. The visitors were not able to reduce the margin and were beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Anscombe, goal ; Oliver and V. Cooper, backs ; O'Shea, V. Sherman and Pooler, halves ; H. Sherman, Drew, Cowden, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal ; Minet and Chandler, backs ; Cornish, Cody and Postence, halves ; McKay, Lawton, Murphy, Smart and Berkley, forwards.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SATURDAY saw the crowning incident of the League this season when the Gordons were presented with the Walter Locke Cup at the conclusion of the Civil vs. Military match. Dalhousie finished second, the best position they have yet achieved, and the Shropshires third. Play, on the whole, this season has shown an improvement over last and the teams have been more equally matched than has been the case for a good number of years The Fort team have played most consistently throughout and fully deserved their position at the head of affairs for the second consecutive season. The Shropshires are new to Calcutta, this being their first appearance here, but they have become very popular owing to their thoroughly sportsmanlike play, and next year we hope to see them finish higher up the League table.

THE game on Saturday was, from a spectacular point, marred by the heavy rain which fell at midday and converted the C. F. C. ground into little better than a swamp. The teams turned up as advertised save that the R. F. A. representatives stood down for Foreman of the Gordons and the Shropshires inside right, and the crowd was large and enthusiastic. The Military men won by a goal—a rather lucky goal be it said, and, so long as the Civilians lasted the pace, they were "all over" their opponents. In the last ten minutes of the game the superior training of the soldiers enabled them to keep going better and their goal resulted. For the Civilians the two Calcutta men, Longbottom and Sherman, were the best forwards, and Smith at centre half shone in the defence. Reynolds had an "off" day and did not show up so well as usual. Anno Domini must be beginning to trouble him a bit and in a fast game like Saturday's it might have been better for the Civilians had they played a young and energetic back like Oliver of Calcutta. Quaile was seen to great advantage and if he only possessed the weight and inches would be a very formidable proposition for any forward to tackle. For the Military Roberts was the best, McKay not showing up too well against Smith. The outside left from Dum-Dum was their best forward and the backs and goal-keeper were very safe. After the match Mrs. Beadel presented medals to the winning team and the League Cup to the Gordons' Captain amid loud applause. About Rs. 1,600 in all was paid for admission and after expenses have been deducted, a very fair sum should be left for distribution among the Calcutta charities.

THE ubiquitous Boxwalla was much en évidence and many who might have been constrained to part with a rupee were, we fear, enticed away by his siren voice, and, perched high on the giddy Olympic heights evolved from empty orange boxes, surveyed the dazzling scene for the paltry sum of two annas. He is an enterprising gent, the boxwalla, and his placid and bland like countenance becomes suffused with smiles and radiates with an unholy joy as he contemplates the pantino and perspiring sahib being hoisted to the dizzy eminence afore mentioned. At half time he sends the plate round and, the illegal harvest gathered in serenely doses until the whistle goes for time, when he and his boxes disappear into thin air.

THE draw for the I. F. A. Shield competition took place on Monday evening at the Y. M. C. A. and turned out as follows :—

First round to be played on Saturday, 10th July.

A. Forfarshire vs. Dalhousie.
B. Y. M. C. A. vs. Mohan Bagan.
C. Customs vs. Shropshire.

Second Round.

1. Calcutta vs. winners of A. on Wednesday, 14th July.
2. Gordons vs. winners of B. on Wednesday, 14th July.
3. Chinsurah vs. winners of C. on Tuesday, 13th July.
4. Sova Bazar vs. Rangers on Tuesday, 13th July.

Semi-final on Saturday, 17th July.

Winners of 2 vs. winners of 1.
Winners of 4 vs. winners of 3.

Final on Saturday, 24th July.

FOR the first time for many years there is no up-country team among the competitors, a circumstance which will detract from the interest of the competition. The winner of the Customs-Shropshries match is pretty certain to figure in the final and the game between these two teams should draw a very large crowd on Saturday next. They have met twice in the League and each has had a win over the other. Dalhousie should manage to oust the Forfarshire men and Y. M. C. A. the Mohan Bagan. The second round should produce a ding dong struggle between Calcutta and Dalhousie the winner of which will meet the Gordons in the semi-finals.

REFEREE.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 28th ultimo. The Gymkhana were all over their opponents and won by six goals to nil. They scored three times in the first half, Abbott and Moir (2) being credited with the points. On changing ends Abbott scored twice and Moir netted the sixth goal. The Hornets played hard throughout but were quite outclassed. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal ; Bennett and Millard, backs ; Gardner, Osborne and Molyneux, halves ; Henderson, Faulkner, Garrick (captain), George and Doroux, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal ; Collingwood and Elliott, backs ; Barrett, Padgett and Sim, halves ; Murray, Hargreaves, Price, Abbott and Moir, forwards.

Y. M. C. A. vs. R. G. A.—These teams met on the 29th ultimo. The first half was very evenly contested and neither team was able to score But on changing ends the Y. M. C. A. had the wind with them and outplayed the soldiers. They attacked throughout this period and scored four goals, Kelly and Pack netting two each. Teams :—

R. G. A.—Gair, goal ; Frankland and Jones, backs ; Southcott, Hunt and McKowen, halves ; Hughes, Turner, Watts, Toole and Keating, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Hildreth, goal ; Templeton and Deane, backs ; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves ; Robottom, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Whitecombe, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 30th ultimo. The Glosters attacked all through the first half but repeatedly lost chances owing to poor shooting and hesitancy. The interval arrived without score but on changing ends the soldiers again took up the attack. They scored their first goal from a mêlee in front of the Gymkhana citadel, the second was netted by Marsden and Sherwood registered the third. The Gymkhana were unable to score and were beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal ; Atkinson and Ruck, backs ; Cooper, Sherwood and Barton, halves ; Maton, Law, Short, Marsden, and Harris, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Blore, goal ; Taylor and Lane, backs ; Johnson, Osbourne and Croles-Rees, halves ; Harwood, Burgman, Lay, Cook, and Bellamy, forwards.

THE SARMA CUP.

Y.M.C.A. (Eastern) vs. ISHAPORE.—This match in the first round of the tournament ended in favour of the Y.M.C.A. by 3 goals to 2. Ishapore scored twice in the first half and the Y.M.C.A. netted all their points after the interval.

RANGERS (Reserves) vs. "A" Co. GORDONS.—This match ended in a win for the soldiers by a goal to nil after a very level game.

B.-N.R. vs. SPORTING UNION.—Played on the Sova Bazar ground on Thursday, the railway team winning by 2 goals to nil, Chase and Carroll were responsible for the scoring.

HASTINGS vs. "G" Co. GORDONS.—Played on Friday, ending in a draw one all. Replayed on Tuesday the Gordons winning by a goal to nil.

MEASURERS vs. MEDICAL COLLEGE.—This game ended in a win for the Measurers by 3 goals to nil.

Second Round.

DALHOUSIE "B" vs. Y.M.C.A. (Eastern).—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Monday, the home team winning by 2 goals to 1.

ROVERS vs. ORIENTAL REGROIST.—Played on Tuesday the Rovers being defeated by a goal to nil.

CALCUTTA RESERVES vs. HOWRAH U.C.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday, the home team winning by 2 goals to nil.

TELEGRAPH ASSOCIATION vs. SOVA BAZAR.—Their two previous encounters having ended in drawn games these teams met for the third time on Tuesday when the "Tar Wallahs" scraped home by a goal to nil.

C. E. Kinahan, of the L.A.C., to whom he conceded four yards. The one mile invitation relay race was a well-contested event, in which the L.A.C., S.L.H., Blackheath Harriers, and Herne Hill Harriers competed. The S.L.H. proved successful, thanks mainly to F. A. Knott, who beat T. H. Just, the old Cambridge Blue, in the half-mile by about 1½ yards. From this point the S.L.H. representatives were always in front. Appended are results of the more important events on the card:—

100 Yards Invitation Scratch Race.—Heat 1: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., 1; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 2. Won easily. Time—10-4/5secs. Heat 2: L. J. de B. Read, L.A.C., and S. J. Marshall, Blackheath H., walked over. Heat 3: H. Watson, S.L.H., 1; L. F. Tremeer, L.A.C., 2. Won by two yards. Time—10-4/5secs. Final Heat: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., 1; H. Watson, S.L.H., 2; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 3; S. J. Marshall, Blackheath H., 4. Won by two yards, with a yard between second and third and inches third and fourth. Time—10-4/5secs.

100 Yards Bentley-Tomlinson Challenge Cup.—C. C. Davies, Home Office, 1; H. W. Monroe, Patent Office, 2; T. O. Church, Post Office, 3. Won by a yard. Same distance between second and third. Time—10-4/5secs.

Half-mile Members' Handicap.—P. Corry, Admiralty, 45 yards start, 1; J. W. Cornish, Board of Trade, 62 yards, 2; F. J. Smith, Post Office 28 yards, 3. Won by a yard; five yards between second and third. Time—1min. 58-3/5secs. Cornish ran well, but was staggering at the finish, and Corry passed him just before the tape.

100 Yards Handicap (strangers).—Final Heat: R. E. Walker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., scratch, 1; H. B. Blower, L.A.C., 7½ yards start, 2; W. G. Harris, Highgate H., 7, 3; F. H. W. Neatham, Civil Service, 11, 4. Walker got away to a good start, and getting up six yards from the tape won by a foot; a yard divided Blower and Harris. Time—10-1/5secs.

One Mile Scratch Race (Strathcona Challenge Cup).—F. S. Thomson, Admiralty Registry, 1; G. N. Mathie, Stationery Office, 2; G. C. Smallwood (penalised 25 yards), Patent Office, 3. Thomson led throughout and won by four yards; twice that distance between second and third. Time—4m 7s. 44secs.

One Mile Relay Race (half-mile, 440 yards, and two at 220 yards).—South London H. (F. A. Knott, E. H. Montague, A. Longhurst, and H. Watson), 1; London A. C. (T. H. Just, W. H. Ginston, A. Abrahams, and S. Abrahams), 2; Herne Hill H. (J. Henney, C. Stanfield, E. E. Brockman and E. W. Haley), 3; Blackheath H. (H. E. J. Southwell, W. A. Dewsnap, W. D. Lancefield, and S. J. Marshall), 4. Won by five yards; thirty yards between second and third. Time—3mins. 40-4/5secs. Knott beat Just by about a yard and a half in the first half-mile, an advantage that was gradually increased by Montague in the quarter and Longhurst and Watson in the two furlongs.

220 Yards Handicap (members).—Final Heat: L. J. de B. Reed, Board of Trade, scratch, 1; P. Corry, Admiralty, 17, 2; L. P. Cooper, C.S. Commission, 20, 3; H. W. Monroe, Patent Office, 9, 4. Reed got up in the last few strides and won by inches. Time—23secs.

120 Yards Hurdle Handicap (strangers).—Final Heat: Captain C. E. Kinahan, L.A.C., owes 14 yards, 1; V. Duncker, South African A.A. and L.A.C., owes 18, 2; C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., owes 11, 3. Won by a good yard; a like distance separated Duncker and Dugmore. Time—18-3/5secs.

440 Yards Handicap (strangers).—Final Heat: C. N. Seedhouse, Northern Polytechnic A.C., 24 yards start, 1; H. B. Blower, L.A.C., 19, 2; E. H. Montague, L.A.C. and S.L.H., 3, 3. Won by a foot Time—50-2/5secs.

High Jump.—E. E. Leader, L.A.C., 5ft. 9in., 1; C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., 5ft. 7in., 2; J. H. Banks, Weymouth A.C., 5ft. 6in., 3; O. Groenings, L.A.C., 5ft. 6in., 5. Banks won on tossing for third place.

ROWING.

Cambridge Summer Races.—Rain early in the day was succeeded by fairly fine weather in the late afternoon at Cambridge on Friday and the races were again witnessed by a large company. Once more they proved exciting, but only four bumps were recorded. Of these three were made in the second division, and probably the one recorded in the first section constitutes a record for these races. First Trinity were expected to seriously trouble Jesus, but the wearers of the red and black had very little difficulty in retaining their place at the head of the river. The one bump made was by Third Trinity, stroked by Arbuthnot, the Etonian Blue, who made short work of Emmanuel. In the second division, Pembroke II. caught Lady Margaret in the Long Reach, Caius II. made their third successive bump at the expense of King's II., and Peterhouse II. re-bumped Downing, after rounding First Post Corner.

The concluding night produced only a couple of bumps, making the total for the four nights 21—one of the smallest on record. The feature of the races was the great success of Jesus, who not only went "head" after 24 years' rest, but proved themselves the fastest and decidedly the best boat. For Steve Fairbairn, who has instituted and worked out what is known as the Jesus style, it is a great triumph. For three or four years now he has worked hard to get a crew who would give a fair demonstration of his style, and having had the present crew under his care ever since they have been at Cambridge, he has succeeded, for the first time, in getting the College to the top rung of the Cambridge rowing ladder. Last year the College carried off the Ladies' Plate at Henley, and then won the Cambridge Fours, whilst they have now reached the summit of their 'Varsity ambition, and will have a flutter at the Belgians at Henley. Bumps were made as follow:—Wednesday 8, Thursday 6, Friday 5, and Saturday 2. Officiating on Saturday were Messrs. L. H. K. Bushe Fox, G. N. M. Bland, J. F. A. Trotter, with Messrs. C. W. H. Taylor and J. H. Gibbon, the famous old Third Trinity Blues.

Division II.—Order of Starting.

King's I.	First Trinity III.
Clare	Jesus III.
Pembroke II	Caius II.
Lady Margaret II.	King's II.
Trinity Hall II.	Emmanuel II.
St. Catharine's	Christ's II.
Queens'	Peterhouse
Sidney	Downing

King's did not expect to be bumped by Clare, but at Ditton Corner only half a length separated the boats. Clare—en felt the effects of their recent change, and Pembroke II. began to gain, and only missed by a quarter of a length at the finish. In the Gut Lady Margaret II. looked like catching Pembroke, but fell off, and from Ditton Trinity Hall II. gained rapidly on the Johnians, and only just failed to lower their colours. St. Catherine's, Queens', and Sidney rowed over their distance apart. First Trinity III. made a fine race of it with Jesus III., but had to give in at the Glass Houses. The remaining half-dozen boats—Caius II., King's II., Emmanuel II., Christ's II., Peterhouse, and Downing—had evidently reached their right places, for they remained practically their starting distances apart all over the course.

Division I.—Order of Starting.

Jesus I	Corpus.
First Trinity I.	Jesus II.
Trinity Hall I.	First Trinity II.
Pembroke I.	Christ's I.
Lady Margaret I.	Selwyn.
Third Trinity	Magdalene.
Emmanuel I.	King's I.
Caius I.

Jesus took matters fairly easily, just rowing in from the Railway Bridge. D. C. R. Stuart brought off another triumph with the Hall, for although Pembroke got within a quarter of a length on Friday, there was always a length clear between the boats on Saturday. Third Trinity were fast over the first part of the course, and on Saturday, by vanquishing the Johnians, they ascended a third place, all of their bumps having been made opposite the Pitt Club Lawn. At the finish Caius were only half a length behind Emmanuel, whilst Corpus were rather less than that distance away from them. Jesus II. and First Trinity II. rowed over, but the next three boats were all close up, Selwyn being only a quarter of a length off Christ's and Magdalene practically overlapping Selwyn when the winning-post was reached. King's, who rowed eight courses, did not try for a bump after Ditton.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 24th June.—Lascelles' Covert at 7 A.M. The weather has at last broken and the Monsoon is with us once more. Only a little rain fell last night, though not sufficient to make the going softer, it improved the scent a good deal, and as there were lots of jack afoot there was no lack of sport, and those who stayed late were rewarded by a rattling good run. On moving off from the Meet hounds started off on a line in the bog below the 5th hole on the Golf Course, scent was a bit catchy at first, but they puzzled it out on the hillside above the New Pykara Road and crossed the Stream at Elmhurst Corner running up the hill to the left of Mills' as if for New Covert. Near the Stream below a brace of jack was viewed, hounds sticking to the one on the right chivied him over the Krummund Road and running past Druid, turned right handed along the road into Baikie, bustled him out of this below Dudley and right handed round One Tree Hill into Jackal. But scarcely had the jack touched this covert before he doubled back on the line he had come and saved his brush. Next drew Bluegum without success, then trotted on to Andy hounds touched a line to the right on the hill above Governor's. Running down to the road and along it for some distance pointing for Hungerford Plantation, then turned left handed up through the covert and out at the top and sank the hill past Lady Lawley's Shola to the Parson's Valley and were at fault near the stream. The Master held them forward to Dante's Spinney without recovering the line again. The Master then drew round the bog which lies to the west of Dante's Spinney, on the far side hounds hit off a line but were unable to make much of it. As we clambered down the face of an exceptionally steep hill, and one felt like a fly walking down a wall, hounds were busy in the bog at the foot and presently went off in full cry across the bog and up the opposite hill pointing for Dante's Spinney but just short of this they swung left handed over the hill, past the Twin Sisters and fairly raced their jack to Sambar Shola and on down to the Avalanch Finger Post when he apparently slipped them. It was one of the fastest runs we have had. Those who were lucky enough to have slid down the hill first when hounds found, started on excellent terms with the pack, but the tardy ones were reduced to a stern chase for the remainder of the run.

Saturday, 26th June.—Toda Coffee Shop 12 noon. A fine Monsoon day with a blustering sou'-wester blowing in full blast, driving rain and mist, but this did not prevent a fairly good company turning up at the Meet. The first jack found was a ringer, he ran several circles round and over the hills between the Pykara River and Lord Roberts' Shola and eventually made his escape just as a thick mist swept up. The next led us a short burst from Booster's Shola to Ampthill Wood in which hounds lost him. We moved on from him to the east of Kingodu Hill and hounds picked up a line and carried it to Booster's Shola then up past Gonikaralmund Shola on to the saddle, a herd of buffaloes crossing the line caused hounds to check, the Master cast them forward and down to the bottom of Paragon where the jack had waited. The instant they touched his line they set off at a great pace over the bog and pointed for Maikod Mund but bent to the left over the hill and then to the right to Kengod Mund and checked. Picking up the line again on the hill side they swept round above the Dunsandle Tea Estate to Boar's Copse and Glyn's Covert back to the place we had started from then down to the bog and up through Paragon and over the Falls Road to the bottom of Road Shola, running over the crossing and turning left handed skirted the far corner of Road Shola and dipped down to the bottom of Dormer. They hustled him through and over the ridge to the corner of Chemund. At one time it looked as though they would cross the Yemakal Stream but short of it they swung to the left and skirting Chemund ran over the top of Khed and put their jack to ground in an earth on the edge of Road Shola just below the Waterfall Road. It was a merry chase lasting close on an hour, and we went home well satisfied with the day's sport.

Monday, 28th June.—Melkaval Village 8 A.M. The morning was cloudy, the clouds lying low on the hills and a good deal of mist about, it also rained frequently and we were thoroughly wet before we set our faces homewards. The Master drew down to the Mathesura Stream on the other side of which hounds touched a line and carried it up the steep slopes for some distance then turning to the left through Kuruthugulli they ran round above the Nunjonad Village in the direction of Vane's Copse but turned before reaching this and came back to the Avalanche Finger Post. As usually happens in this country there were so many jack about that the pack had divided and it was some time before they were all got together again. The fields below the Nunjonad Village were next down and in a small gully a pig jumped up but hounds were fortunately stopped in time and an opportune jack making his appearance just then they lost no time in transferring their attentions to him. They hunted him round about the scrub, and over the fields and finally ran into and killed him on a small hill to the right of Goondapa Stream. A brace of jack had gone away to the left, no sooner had hounds broken up this jack than they were running hard on the line of one of the other but this was a small hearted jack and was quickly accounted for. It was late and we were all soaked to the skin so a move was made for home.

CALCUTTA ROWING CLUB.

FIRST REGATTA.

Saturday, 3rd July 1909.

The Calcutta Rowing Club opened their season with a successful regatta this afternoon. The weather conditions were excellent till the last race but one and then the rain came down and the proceedings were brought to a close in a steady downpour. There was a large gathering of spectators in the club enclosure despite the counter attraction of the charity football match and all the arrangements were tip top. The programme opened with the final in the junior sculls between Fairley and Walker. The race had attracted six starters and preliminaries were decided on the two previous days. Fairley, who had the advantage of weight, beat Walker who, however, sculled in good style. The Ladies' race brought out two competitors, Mrs. Stevens winning easily. The pairs provided a good race, Ridley and Bennett beating Fairley and Clemensha, who rowed pluckily all the way. Only two crews entered for the Hoare Cup, the Bank of Bengal four beating Heron's crew by three and a half lengths. The winners had the advantage of weight but had Heron bustled his crew at the bridge the finish would have been closer. The Canoe race was won by Fairley and Pearsall and the time honoured scratch fours brought the programme to an end. It was the best race of the day, Green's boat just passing the post two feet to the good. Details:—

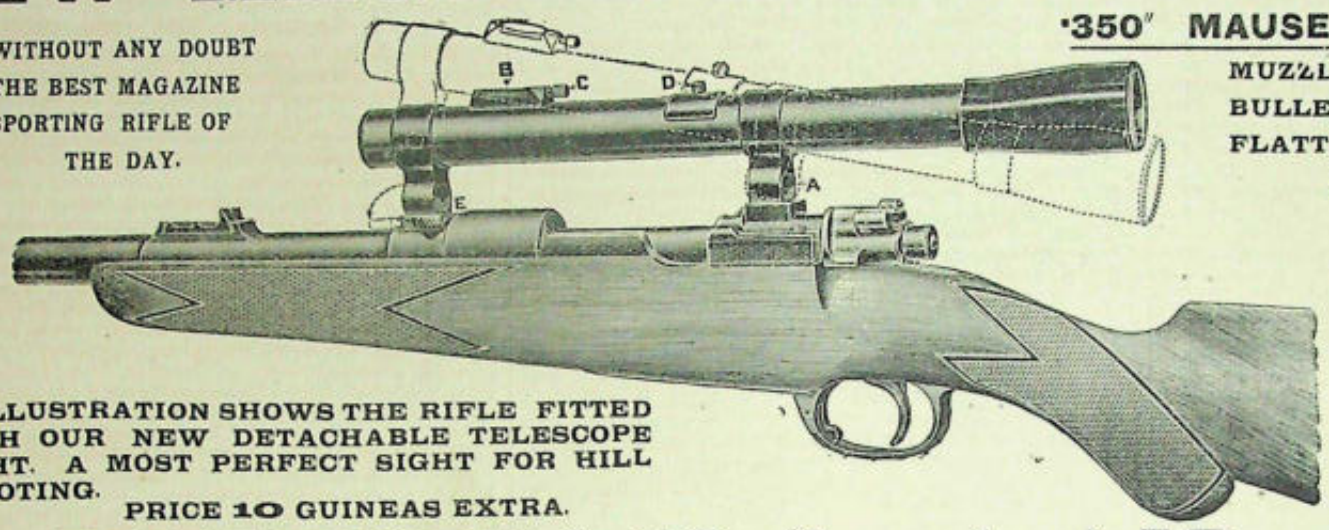
WINCHESTER



RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—The return match was played on the Calcutta ground on the 30th ultimo. The home forwards were first away and a good bit of passing ended in Cowden beating Margrett. After the Rangers had forced a corner which proved abortive Calcutta again attacked but Margrett managed to get the shots away. Anscombe next conceded a corner to the visitors but this was not improved upon and level play followed. Calcutta were prominent for some good runs and from a free kick for a foul against the visitors O'Shea very nearly scored. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn : then Longbottom got possession and scored with a fine shot and before the close of the game the same player added a third goal, a faulty kick by Chandler going off Longbottom's foot into the net. The visitors were not able to reduce the margin and were beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Anscombe, goal ; Oliver and V. Cooper, backs ; O'Shea, V. Sherman and Pooler, halves ; H. Sherman, Drew, Cowden, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal ; Minet and Chandler, backs ; Cornish, Cody and Postence, halves ; McKay, Lawton, Murphy, Smart and Berkley, forwards.

Referee :—Sergt. Curley (C.R.A.)

GORDONS vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on the Y. M. C. A. ground on the 30th ultimo, the Gordons having matters their own way throughout the game. McKay scored in the first half and McKay and McNaughton in the second. They thus won by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

GORDONS.—Riach, goal ; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs ; Finlay, Forman and Thomson, halves ; McDougall, McKinnon, McKay, McNaughton and Gilchrist, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Dr. Gray, goal ; Reynolds and Kendall, backs ; Gay, McNay and McLaren, halves ; Rosetti, Grey, Gillan and A. N. Other, forwards.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SATURDAY saw the crowning incident of the League this season when the Gordons were presented with the Walter Locke Cup at the conclusion of the Civil vs. Military match. Dalhousie finished second, the best position they have yet achieved, and the Shropshires third. Play, on the whole, this season has shown an improvement over last and the teams have been more equally matched than has been the case for a good number of years The Fort team have played most consistently throughout and fully deserved their position at the head of affairs for the second consecutive season. The Shropshires are new to Calcutta, this being their first appearance here, but they have become very popular owing to their thoroughly sportsmanlike play, and next year we hope to see them finish higher up the League table.

THE game on Saturday was, from a spectacular point, marred by the heavy rain which fell at midday and converted the C. F. C. ground into little better than a swamp. The teams turned up as advertised save that the R. F. A. representatives stood down for Foreman of the Gordons and the Shropshires inside right, and the crowd was large and enthusiastic. The Military men won by a goal—a rather lucky goal be it said, and, so long as the Civilians lasted the pace, they were "all over" their opponents. In the last ten minutes of the game the superior training of the soldiers enabled them to keep going better and their goal resulted. For the Civilians the two Calcutta men, Longbottom and Sherman, were the best forwards, and Smith at centre half shone in the defence. Reynolds had an "off" day and did not show up so well as usual. Anno Domini must be beginning to trouble him a bit and in a fast game like Saturday's it might have been better for the Civilians had they played a young and energetic back like Oliver of Calcutta. Quaile was seen to great advantage and if he only possessed the weight and inches would be a very formidable proposition for any forward to tackle. For the Military Roberts was the best, McKay not showing up too well against Smith. The outside left from Dum-Dum was their best forward and the backs and goal-keeper were very safe. After the match Mrs. Beadel presented medals to the winning team and the League Cup to the Gordons' Captain amid loud applause. About Rs. 1,600 in all was paid for admission and after expenses have been deducted, a very fair sum should be left for distribution among the Calcutta charities.

THE ubiquitous Boxwalla was much en evidence and many who might have been constrained to part with a rupee were, we fear, enticed away by his siren voice, and, perched high on the giddy Olympic heights evolved from empty orange boxes, surveyed the dazzling scene for the paltry sum of two annas. He is an enterprising gent, the boxwalla, and his placid and bland like countenance becomes suffused with smiles and radiates with an unholy joy as he contemplates the panting and perspiring sahib being hoisted to the dizzy eminence afore mentioned. At half time he sends the plate round and, the illegal harvest gathered in serenely doses until the whistle goes for time, when he and his boxes disappear into thin air.

THE draw for the I. F. A. Shield competition took place on Monday evening at the Y. M. C. A. and turned out as follows :—

First round to be played on Saturday, 10th July.

A. Forfarshire vs. Dalhousie.
B. Y. M. C. A. vs. Mohan Bagan.
C. Customs vs. Shropshire.

Second Round.

1. Calcutta vs. winners of A. on Wednesday, 14th July.
2. Gordons vs. winners of B. on Wednesday, 14th July.
3. Chinsurah vs. winners of C. on Tuesday, 13th July.
4. Sova Bazar vs. Rangers on Tuesday, 13th July.

Semi-final on Saturday, 17th July.

Winners of 2 vs. winners of 1.
Winners of 4 vs. winners of 3.

Final on Saturday, 24th July.

FOR the first time for many years there is no up-country team among the competitors, a circumstance which will detract from the interest of the competition. The winner of the Customs-Shropshries match is pretty certain to figure in the final and the game between these two teams should draw a very large crowd on Saturday next. They have met twice in the League and each has had a win over the other. Dalhousie should manage to oust the Forfarshire men and Y. M. C. A. the Mohan Bagan. The second round should produce a ding dong struggle between Calcutta and Dalhousie the winner of which will meet the Gordons in the semi-finals.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 28th ultimo. The Gymkhana were all over their opponents and won by six goals to nil. They scored three times in the first half, Abbott and Moir (2) being credited with the points. On changing ends Abbott scored twice and Moir netted the sixth goal. The Hornets played hard throughout but were quite outclassed. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal ; Bennett and Millard, backs ; Gardner, Osborne and Molyneux, halves ; Henderson, Faulkner, Garrick (captain), George and Doroux, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal ; Collingwood and Elliott, backs ; Barrett, Padgett and Sim, halves ; Murray, Hargreaves, Price, Abbott and Moir, forwards.

Y. M. C. A. vs. R. G. A.—These teams met on the 29th ultimo. The first half was very evenly contested and neither team was able to score But on changing ends the Y. M. C. A. had the wind with them and outplayed the soldiers. They attacked throughout this period and scored four goals, Kelly and Pack netting two each. Teams :—

R. G. A.—Gair, goal ; Frankland and Jones, backs ; Southcott, Hunt and McKowen, halves ; Hughes, Turner, Watts, Toole and Keating, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Hildreth, goal ; Templeton and Deane, backs ; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves ; Robottom, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Whitecombe, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 30th ultimo. The Glosters attacked all through the first half but repeatedly lost chances owing to poor shooting and hesitancy. The interval arrived without score but on changing ends the soldiers again took up the attack. They scored their first goal from a melee in front of the Gymkhana citadel, the second was netted by Marsden and Sherwood registered the third. The Gymkhana were unable to score and were beaten by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal ; Atkinson and Ruck, backs ; Cooper, Sherwood and Barton, halves ; Maton, Law, Short, Marsden, and Harris, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Blore, goal ; Taylor and Lane, backs ; Johnson, Osbourne and Croles-Rees, halves ; Harwood, Burgman, Lay, Cook, and Bellamy, forwards.

THE LAHORE TOURNAMENT.

N.-W. RAILWAY "B" TEAM vs. 38TH DOGRAS.—The tournament opened on the 1st instant with two games. In the one under notice the Dogras were beaten by the holders of the Cup by 5 goals to 1. The Railway went away at the start and scored 2 goals in quick succession. Then the Dogras attacked but were driven back and before half time the Railway had netted the ball four times. Two of these points were disallowed for "sticks" and the teams crossed over with "B" team leading by 4 goals to nil. On changing ends the Railway got away and scored but for the rest of the game the Dogras did most of the attacking. They scored once and lost many chances owing to erratic shooting.

SOUTH LANCS REGIMENT vs. AITCHISON COLLEGE.—This game also played last Thursday was not particularly interesting. The first half exchanges were even and play slow, the interval arriving without score. The College had slightly the better of the play on changing ends and they managed to score a goal. The efforts of the Military were unrewarded by any score and they retired beaten by a goal to nil.

TELEGRAPH CLUB vs. GOVERNMENT COLLEGE "A."—Played on the 2nd instant. Play ruled up and down at the start the College scoring a goal after several unsuccessful attempts. The Telegraph tried hard to equalise but were still behind at the interval. They continued to attack on crossing over, their shooting was miserable. Many chances were lost but they at length managed to get on terms. The College rallied and, rushing down, again assumed the lead with a straight shot. They might have followed this up with further score but for their erratic shooting. The Telegraph played hard to the end but could not score again and were thus beaten by 2 goals to 1.

1ST P. V. R. vs. N.-W. RAILWAY "A" TEAM.—This game on Friday ended in favour of the Volunteers by 5 goals to nil. They did all the attacking in the first half and scored three goals—other points obtained being disallowed for "sticks." They maintained their advantage in the second half and scored two more goals, a third being disallowed and several opportunities being lost owing to weak shooting.

Boxing.

BOXING AT WELLINGTON.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Second Day, 28th June 1909.

THE annual boxing tournament of Wellington terminated on the night of the 17th June and the boxing of the last night was of a better order than that of the previous night. I trust that the Border Regiment which has come with the reputation of a sporting regiment will do what they possibly can to improve this sport in Wellington. The tournament was attended by a large gathering of the military and every sporting officer of both the Borders and the Depôt was present, including the popular officer commanding the Border Regiment, Colonel Walker. Lieutenant Moore and Norrington of the Borders did the judging, while Lieutenant Shute of the Dorset Regiment was the Referee and Lieutenant Herd kept the time. Color-Sergeant Whybrow creditably carried out the duty of the M. C. and great measure of the success of the tournament is due to him.

Details of the events, the bouts were fought under the revised Queensbury Rules.

FEATHER WEIGHTS.

Semi-Finals.

Pte. Ingram, Royal Fusiliers, Secunderabad, beat Pte. Hayes, Border Regiment, Wellington. Hayes was the heavier man but Ingram looked as though he would win the battle. The fight was opened by Ingram and in the first round he succeeded in inflicting severe punishment on Hayes. In the second round Ingram, who was undoubtedly in better form, gave Hayes several facers. Hayes was showing signs of weakness and dropping down. In the last round Ingram attacked and won on points.

Pte. Elson, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Page, Royal Warwicks, Burma. Elson went to work at once and had the best of thes econd round and Page began to drop and in the third round Elson had an easy task.

10ST. COMPETITION.

Semi-Finals.

Pte. Weston, of the Border Regiment, Wellington, who had to take up the gloves against Fleming of the same regiment, being absent the fight was awarded to Fleming. Fleming sparred a bye with Boyce of the Borders. Pte. Skinner, 1st Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Lance-Corporal Barrows. Barrows, the heavier man, led off and in the first round Skinner was knocked down, but soon picked himself up. The fight then turned in favour of Skinner who seemed to be reserving his strength. The Referee could not decide and in an extra round Skinner won on points.

SIX-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Adam, 1st Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Harrison, Cheshire Regiment, Secunderabad.

Adam, who was in better form, opened the attack with many hits which sent Harrison to the ropes. However, with great pluck Harrison stood the hard punishment but in the fifth round he dropped and was counted out.

SPECIAL SIX-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Barry, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Elles Oxford Light Infantry, Bangalore.

This was for a purse offered by Mr. E. Garside, late Quarter-Master-Sergeant of the Depôt, Wellington. Elles gave in and, Barry took the purse.

FEATHER WEIGHT.

Final.

Pte. Ingram, Royal Fusiliers, Secunderabad, beat Pte. Elson Border Regiment, Wellington.

Elson was the heavier man and not so quick with his work. This was an excellent fight in which good boxing was witnessed. In all the three rounds "give and take" continued, each pugilist scoring an equal number of points. In the special round Ingram fought determinedly and won on points.

SPECIAL SIX-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Crone, 1st Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Glandfield, Royal Fusiliers, Secunderabad.

In this Glandfield threw up the sponge in the first round, but the Referee declined to give the prize to Crone.

10ST. COMPETITION.

Finals.

Pte. F. Fleming, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Skinner, of the same regiment.

Skinner was knocked out in the first round.

SPECIAL SIX-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Crone, Border Regiment, Wellington, beat Pte. Hanwright, Royal Warwick Fusiliers.

Crone knocked Hanwright out in the second round.

TEN-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Howlett, Royal Fusiliers, Secunderabad (9-8), beat Lance-Corporal Bunnyan, Border Regiment, Wellington (9-12). In the fourth round Howlett floored Bunnyan and carried off a handsome purse.

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday afternoon the 24th June 1909.

PRESENT:—Vice-President.—Colonel D. O'Sullivan, R.A.M.C.

Members:—Mr. A. Anderson, Mr. A. M. Anscomb, R. S. Basant Singh, Lieutenant R. G. Bignell, R.G.A., Mr. T. Clear, Mr. E. G. Foley, A. D. Marker, K.S., Mr. A. D. McDonough, Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozeshaw, Mr. W. R. S. Porter, Captain A. B. Smallman, Mr. H. R. Smith.

Honorary Secretary.—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

In the absence of the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon on leave, the chair was taken by Colonel D. O'Sullivan.

Read list of the donations received by the Museum since the last Meeting, the exhibits themselves being passed round. Of these the more important were:—

A collection of neatly mounted butterflies from Quetta presented by Lieutenant R. G. Bignell.

Numerous specimens of the Quetta Cicada (Sena quaerula) presented by the Hon'ble Colonel C. Archer and other members with numerous pupae and cast off skins of the same presented by Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

A nest and two eggs of the Purple Sun-bird from Panjgur presented by Mr. T. O. Hughes.

A Cuckoo from Loralai presented by Major H. Gough.

A Moth and several Bees and Beetles presented by Mr. C. H. Dracott.

A Lizard from Quetta presented by Master Walter Cumming.

A beautiful painting of the butterfly Danais chrysippus, male and female, by Mr. A. D. McDonough.

While the Cicada and its pupae were being circulated the Honorary Secretary read some notes which he had recorded about them.

Read letter, dated 15th June 1909, from Major-General F. J. Aylmer, V.C., C.B., thanking the President and Members of the Society for electing him a Member.

Read letter, dater 7th June 1909, from Dr. Anandale, stating that Rev. T. R. Stebbing had identified the Quetta Isoped as Hemilepistus crenulatus (Pallas), having Porcellis klugii, Brandt, for a synonym.

Letter No. 1656, dated 3rd June 1909, from Mr. Maxwell-LeFroy, M.A., F.E.S., F.Z.S., Imperial Entomologist, Agricultural Research Institute, Pusa, with 3 reprints from the Indian Insect Pests, was then passed round for the information of the Members.

The Honorary Secretary next passed round for the information of the Members.

Six bound volumes and some unbound parts of Dr. Moore's valuable work entitled "Lepidoptera Indica" presented to the Museum by the Government of India in the Home Department;

Two back numbers of the Bombay Natural History Society's Journal and another of the Proceedings of the London Zoological Society presented by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon; and

A copy of Major F. Wall's "Poisonous Terrestrial Snakes of our British Indian Dominions" purchased from the Honorary Secretary, Bombay Natural History Society.

Resolved that the grateful acknowledgment of the Society be conveyed to the Government of India for their extremely generous gift of Dr. Moore's "Lepidoptera Indica" to the Museum.

The next item of business being the election of new members Colonel O'Sullivan proposed and Major Anscomb seconded the election of Mrs. Waterfield and Miss Keyes.

This was unanimously carried.

In conclusion Colonel O'Sullivan expressed regret at the absence of the Hon'ble President, thanked Messrs. Bignell and McDonough for their valuable donations to the Museum and expressed the hope that some of the Members would take up the study of the Cicada (Sena quaerula) now swarming all over Quetta. He pointed out that the present afforded an excellent opportunity of watching the development of the Insect from its earliest stage as the cycle of its life history, had evidently now begun. He suggested that the study be undertaken by some of the permanent residents in the station as, owing to the life history of the insect covering a period of some 5 or 6 years, it was obviously impossible for a temporary resident to observe all the developments. He added that this was an excellent opportunity for some one to make a name for himself. Colonel O'Sullivan further stated that Captain Smallman was busy trying to solve the house-fly problem and expressed the hope that he would be able to place before the next Meeting the result of his labours. In conclusion he suggested that greater attention be paid by Members to the study of the Moths of Baluchistan.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

SENA QUAERULA (PALLAS).

The flying Insect which at present swarms all over Quetta making such a continuous noise belongs to the Order Rhynchota or Bugs, Sub-order Homoptera or Equal winged Insects, Family Cicadidae, Sub-family Gaeninae, Division Cicadatraria, Genus Sena (Distant) and belongs to the Species named Sena quaerula (Pallas).

An interesting description of both the Family and Species will be found given at pages 55 to 57 and 135 to 136 respectively of the Fauna of British India, Rhynchota, Volume III. I have had my home in Quetta for the past 19 years but this is the first time I have seen the Cicada in such swarms. It appears, however, from Major Anscomb and other old residents, who have been more continuously in the station than I have been, that similar swarms have been known to visit the place at intervals of about 6 years, the last occasion being in 1903 when I was out of the station.

The first specimen seen by me this year was brought to me by my son on the 11th instant. The same day the Hon'ble Colonel Archer captured some and sent them over to the Museum. A few days later I secured a number but of a smaller size near Baleli. On the 18th I went down to the Lora and found the Willow trees there covered with them, while under the trees it looked as if it were raining. I at first thought this was due to the Insects bleeding the trees but on approaching nearer I found that the Insects themselves were giving out a fluid discharge.

The same evening I noticed numerous empty pupa skins slit open down the back hanging from the low shrubs which there covered the ground, and which is called locally Busanda (Brahui), or Ghurezah (Pashtu) and botanically Sophora alepecuroides, (Linn), while the ground itself was perforated with numerous small holes, each about ½ an inch in diameter. Seeing these pupa empty skins in such numbers I concluded that they had been cast off by the flying Insect under consideration. Not having time that evening to dig up any of the holes I was going away when I noticed a young Echis carinata in one of them. This I soon got out with the help of a little water.

This morning I again visited the place and selecting a spot where the holes were very numerous—20 in a space 18 inches square. I set a man to dig up the ground carefully examining each hole separately.

The holes, I would add, were open to the sky and went down more or less vertically to a depth varying from 11 inches to 2 feet, widening slightly at the bottom for about 1½ inches or 2 inches to a diameter of ¾ inch.

Each hole was separate, none of them meeting anywhere, even though some of them were less than an inch apart.

At the bottom of some 6 or 7 holes I found some beetle-shaped pupa which I now place before the Meeting.

One of these—an injured specimen—appears to have been on the eve of splitting open when dug up.

These pupae, it will be observed, are just able to crawl, each limb being enclosed in a separate sheath.

Though the holes had been bored in ground covered with the Busandak shrub, very few of them came into contact with any roots and seemed intended merely to hold the insect in its pupa stage.

There was only one pupa in each hole and, as already stated, the mouth of every hole was quite open.

It will be interesting and useful if others will also take the trouble to study the life history of this Insect in all its stage.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

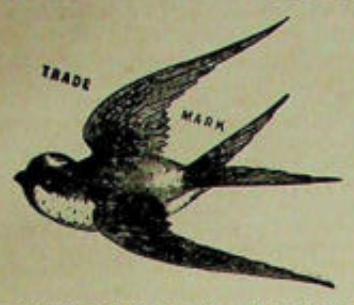
THE LATE MR. AITKEN.

The Chairman, the Rev. F. Dreckmann, made the following remarks on the late Mr. Aitken. Before we proceed with the business of the meeting I wish to move that on behalf of the members of the Bombay Natural History Society, the Honorary Secretaries be instructed to express to the widow and family of Mr. E. H. Aitken their condolence with them in their sorrow and their sense of the great loss the Society has experienced through Mr. Aitken's death. The Bombay Natural History Society which has now over 1,400 members stationed in all parts of India and Burma—and we have members in all parts of the world—owes its inception to seven men, of whom Mr. Aitken was one, and it was Mr. Aitken, who, at the first meeting held on the 15th September 1883, seconded the proposition that the new Society should be called "the Bombay Natural History Society." Mr. Aitken was the first Honorary Secretary of the Society and until February 1884 the meetings of members were held in the Victoria and Albert Museum.



In March 1886 Mr. Aitken had to resign his post as Honorary Secretary owing to his departure from Bombay and a special vote of thanks was passed at a General Meeting of the members to Mr. Aitken for "the energetic manner in which he had carried on the work of Honorary Secretary since the commencement of the Society."

Before Mr. Aitken left, however, he had, with the co-operation of the late Mr. R. A. Sterndale, brought out the first two numbers of the Society's Journal, the first of which was published in January 1886. Although the Journal in those days was small, the work of bringing out a number probably entailed as much trouble and work on the Honorary Editors as the present ones do, where we have so many distinguished writers to fill our pages. Mr. Aitken was Honorary Secretary of the Insect Section from the commencement of the Society until the death of Mr. DeNicéville when he became the President of the Section. He was elected a Vice-President of the Society in July 1902. I will not touch here on Mr. Aitken's published works, "Trifles on my Frontier," "A Naturalist on the Prowl," "The Common Birds of Bombay," "Behind the Bungalow," and "The Seven Windows of the Soul," but would draw your attention to the many and varied papers. The early numbers of our Journal are full of interesting and amusing papers from his pen, such as, "A voyage from Liverpool to Bombay," and "The Red Ant," and covered a great range of subjects.

The proposition was briefly seconded and carried unanimously.

The following papers, both of which will appear in full in the Society's Journal, were then read and discussed. Some Nature Notes, by Major R. G. Burton. The Nesting Habits of the Baya or Weaver Bird, by Douglas Dewar, I.C.S.

THE DARWIN CENTENARY.

By the time this article appears in print the celebration at Cambridge of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin will be only a memory, albeit a memory that will long remain in the minds of all thoughtful men. Darwin and Gladstone were both born in the year of grace 1809; and it is a curious reflection on the mutability of human greatness to observe how completely and hopelessly the memory of the politician has disappeared from amongst us, while that of the world-renowned naturalist and philosopher daily obtains more and more honour and glory.

The influence of Darwin and Darwinism is indeed at the present day all-pervading, and has radically altered our conception not only of matters biological, but of practically everything in the world, inclusive of religion, sociology, politics and language. Our thought is, indeed, nowadays saturated with evolution; and we speak of the evolution of naval tactics or of the Christian religion just as glibly and confidently as our fathers spoke of the separate creation of each individual species and race of animal and plant.

This is the more remarkable when we recall the bitter hatred and obloquy with which the theory of evolution was received in England at the time of its promulgation by Darwin and Wallace a little over half a century ago. That it would destroy religion and ruin morality, were some of the mildest forms of denunciation hurled against the pestilent new doctrine by persons of all classes; and it was quite common to hear older people roundly rebuke their juniors who thought that there might perhaps be some thing in the new gospel. As a rule, indeed the men and women of Darwin's own generation would have nothing whatever to do with what they regarded as a pernicious heresy; and they nearly all remained true to the short-sighted and imperfect creed in which they were brought up. And perhaps, from their own point of view, they were right in not endeavouring to force upon themselves a doctrine their minds were too old and too inelastic to receive and assimilate.

But the slow progress of Darwinism was only to last for a time. A new generation was rising up which looked at the world and its inhabitants in a light infinitely brighter and clearer than that which sufficed for their fathers and mothers; and science was daily advancing with swinging strides and revealing new facts which could be logically and satisfactorily explained by evolution alone.

When the change of opinion did come, it came with a rush, just as will tariff reform before many more years are over; and evolution and Darwinism were not only accepted and explained in the lecture room, but were preached and advocated from the pulpit, and quoted in the forum.

The teaching of Charles Lyell in Geology that the continued effect of existing causes had been sufficient to produce all the great changes in the earth's crust undoubtedly paved the way for the doctrine of evolution as the true explanation of the origin of the life of the globe. Darwin was indeed the apostle of the importance of little things, in that the essence of his teaching consisted of the recognition for the first time of the cumulative effects of slight structural modifications in animals and plants in producing new races and species.

The one thing essential to this doctrine of the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest was unlimited time, which were also required by the geologists of Lyell's uniformitarian school. This unlimited draft on the bank of time was, however, just the one thing which the physicists, who based their refusal on their estimate of the sun's age, refused to grant. Of late years, however, the discovery of radium, with its unlimited power of restoring effete energy, has removed this source of difficulty to the free acceptation of Darwinism, which thus has the field clear before it at the advent of its founder's centenary.

In addition to urging the importance of minute modifications in the production, Darwin earned the undying credit of being the first to recognise that the methods adopted by the breeder in the production of new races and strains of domesticated animals and those employed by the horticulturist in hybridising plants are all important to the naturalist; and that the small modifications by means of which different domesticated breeds are produced artificially are in all respects analogous to those which give rise to species in nature. In fact the only difference between the two processes is that the one is immeasurably more rapid in its action than the other.

Although the doctrine of evolution, of which, in its modern aspect, Darwin and Wallace may be regarded as the founders, is now universally accepted not only by all those whose opinion on scientific matters is worth having, but likewise, although in many cases in a more or less half-hearted manner, by the great majority of educated persons, yet Darwin's explanation of the manner in which evolution has been brought about has been assailed of late years from many sides.

In place of evolution being brought about by means of slight structural modifications, de Vriess, from observations made on a certain kind of evening primrose, maintains that it has been produced by leaps and bounds; while those who have studied and developed the Mendelian theory of hybridism believe that this has been largely instrumental in the origin of species. On the other hand, the doctrine of the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest, or in other words, the Darwinian theory of evolution by means of slight and in many cases unimportant modifications has been as stoutly defended by a number of naturalists whose opinions are worthy of the very highest consideration.

While evolution is triumphant, Darwinism may indeed be said to be holding its own at least as strongly as ever: and the centenary of the great evolutionist may accordingly be considered to have fallen at a most opportune time.

Scientific men are coming to the Cambridge celebration in great numbers from all parts of the world, and especially from the United States; and at the moment of writing the Natural History branch of the British Museum is almost crowded with Americans and foreigners who have come to do honour to the memory of the great apostle of evolution. Three generations of Darwins are to be represented at the celebration, and it is hoped that the veteran associate of Darwin, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, will find his strength sufficient to admit of his personal presence.

No man, in either ancient or modern times, has exerted one-tenth of the influence over the minds and the mode of thought of the educated portion of the entire human race which has been brought about by the writings of Darwin. Of him it may, indeed, be truly said

"Veni, vici, vinci."

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

London, Friday, 9th July 1909.

The following are the results in the finals of the events at the Henley Regatta. The Oxford crews won three races, Wadham retaining the Thames' Challenge Cup, Christ Church winning the Visitors', and Balliol the Wyfolds. The grand challenge was once more carried off by the Belgians who beat Jesus College, Cambridge, in the final by a bare length, in 7mins. 8secs. St. John's won the Ladies' Challenge Plate, and Thames' R.C. the Stewards'. In the Diamond Sculls, A. A. Stuart of Kingston R.C., who was runner up to McCullogh last year, easily defeated the German representative, R. Lucas, in the final on this occasion. The Goblets were won by Leander, represented by Messrs. Johnstone and Williams. Results:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There was another very interesting day's sport at Tollygunge on Saturday and though all the winners with one exception were well-backed, only one absolute favourite got home. The exception was Blix in the All Comer's Stakes and as it was a good betting race and there were only a few small sums put on the winner, it alone must have been sufficient to give the books a fair day, though we must say it is not out of their turn, as they have had considerably the worst of it during the first two meetings. The riding honours were divided between our oldest and our youngest local G. Rs in the persons of Messrs. Barrow and Bletsoe, each of whom scored twice, while the fifth win of the day went to Mr. Dudley whom we are glad to see secure a bracket again for the first time since his return to India. The rain most considerately held off during the proceedings, though in consequence it was a particularly boiling hot afternoon.

As the Pony Steeplechase had not filled there was only one jump event on the card and for this also for one cause or another the field dwindled down to three only. Ermine, who was for a long time the outsider of the party, but was well-backed at the finish, was taken straight away to the front by Mr. Barrow and as she is a good stayer she was able to last it out and staved off Lily's attempt to get on terms in he sraight. Fingall jumped badly and did not seem at all inclnied to gallop: we should think from his performance that the horse cannot be right as he must have been a good deal better than that in Australia to have won a steeplechase down there, however small.

In the Russa Cup Amazon, was considered well worth backing at even money, though she looked somewhat tucked up and overdone. High Court the next favorite on the contrary appeared as fit as hands could make him and so it proved in the race. Amazon did not get away too well and never could get up to them at all and High Court took the lead just before coming into the straight and then ran on a very easy winner.

The All Comers' Stakes with eight starters seemed the most open race of the day. Haut Fleur on his Australian performances was made favourite, but Regina, Lollypop and Lefterin were also well backed. The winner turned up in Blix, who is well just now but distinctly on the big side and no one would have said she was fit from her appearance. However it seems that she races better like that and well-ridden by Mr. Barrow, she just managed to beat Lefterin by half a length to the surprise of everybody her stable included. Regina got away well, but without the luck of the start that she had at the previous meeting could run no nearer than third. The favourite evidently has not struck her form here yet and to the great disappointment of all concerned was never with the leaders at all.

In the July Plate Ruling Passion, who is distinctly a class above tumtum ponies like Gem, was made favourite and won with comfort giving Mr Bletsoe his second winning ride of the day.

Govindpur was the street corner tip for the Beginners Cup, for some two days before the race and opened out favourite. However, when Eureka Girl, came into the ring anyone could see with half an eye which was better of the two and the mare, who stood at threes at one time was quickly backed down to even money equal favourite with Govindpur. There was a terrific long delay at the post, Blackfish and Viola who gave much trouble eventually getting left. Eureka Girl was lying, to the front right through the race and won very easily by three lengths.

THE programme for the next meeting, which we give below is full of novelties. We are afraid the Cavalry Cup will not fill as it will be hard to find sufficient recruits with horses which they would care to gallop, and the terms may have to be modified slightly. A bumper entry is assured for the Hurdle Race, and it is to be hoped that the presence of good horses like Mulison, Cyril, etc., will not deter the owners of such as Electric Light, Ermine, Lord Chester, etc., from entering as if they get sufficient probable starters the race may be run in two divisions, thus giving the second raters a race on their own.

APPENDED is the programme:—

1. The Cavalry Cup.—A Flat Race for horses that have never been placed in a flat race, hurdle race or steeplechase value Rs. 40 or over—the property of and to be ridden by members of the Calcutta Light Horse who have joined since 31st March 1908. 3 furlongs.

2. The Trial Stakes (open).—A Handicap Hurdle Race for horses that have never won a hurdle race value Rs. 500 or over. About 1 mile.

3. The Jiu Jitsu Handicap.—A Handicap Flat Race for approved bona-fide hacks. G. R.'s only who have never ridden a winner under any recognised code of racing. About 1 mile.

4. The Alipore Cup.—A Handicap Flat Race for ponies 14-2 and under. About 1 mile.

5. The Monsoon Plate (open).—A Handicap Race for horses that have never won a race value Rs. 1,000 or over. 5 furlongs.

6. The Polo Scurry.—A Flat Race for polo ponies that have been regularly played up to date. 14-1 to carry 11st. 3 furlongs.

THERE was a good deal of jumping work going on Tuesday morning, both in the cage and over hurdles. Piccaninny and Lefterin were whipped round the school led by Narwanah. The mare, as always, jumped beautfully and the pony after one or two rounds also performed well. Lefterin however, did not take to the game at all kindly and after she had rolled over the open ditch jump turned back the attempt to school her was even then abandoned. Haut Fleur was given a go in the cage later on and performed well. Over the hurdles Mulison (Thomas) and Electric Light (Mr. Wallace Jones) went at a fair space for four flights. Bridge Knight was supposed to go with them, but could not be got going at his jumps at all. Beaumaris (Mr. Bletsoe) went behind the school and jumped cleverly, but not too fast and he is still looking very poor and thin. Mr. Billikin (Mr. Evers) and Fingall (Fr. Tanner) were out together. The chestnut showed improved style but Fingall refused in most determined fashion and unseated his rider. Gall and Singalelah were also schooled, and another pair to go were Mercedes (Mr. Evers) and a big bay horse whose name we do not know, but which we think is a new purchase of Mr. Evers ridden by Mr. Corbett. Mercedes fenced well the first two and showed much improved form but she went right through the third and was lucky to stand up. On Tuesday Mr. Cowper sent Highland Fling (professional) over a couple of flights with a pony (native boy). The former refused the first flight in the last stride and his man "came out" on to his feet. He jumped well at the second attempt and going on was interfered with by the pony at the next flight and jumped his jockey off, again on to his feet. Highland Fling is apparently not a pleasant horse over sticks!!

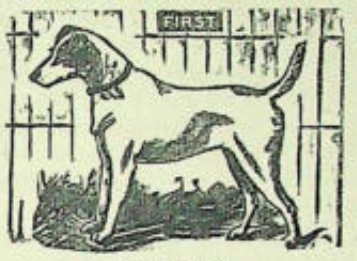
SATURDAY'S schools included Emerald (Mr. Turner), who refused at first by himself, but afterwards went in great style accompanied by Minstrel Boy (Mr. Barrow), Loch Lily (Mr. Evers), who jumped in great style, and Cyril (Drew), who jumped badly and refused once. The last two went by themselves.

BLIX (Mr. Barrow) was the only one out on Wednesday, but she refused badly and could not be got to jump at all, even when Mr. Johnstone kindly gave her a lead on his pony. She would possibly go better in a race but obviously does not like the game in cold blood.

THE child jockey, Frank Wootton, met with a serious accident at Ascot on the 19th June. The unfortunate infant, whose mount was the favourite, Arranmore, collided with one of the other riders, and was shot on to the horse's neck. He very adroitly got back into the saddle, but became unbalanced. He grasped one of the other jockeys, and this enabled him to keep on the horse for another few yards. He then fell, and was dragged along till he released his hold of the reins, and a passing horse kicked him on the back of the head. On examination it was found that the little mite was suffering from concussion but when the mail of the 25th ultimo left London he was reported to be making a good recovery, and a telegram from England, dated the 14th instant, reports him riding at Newmarket on that day.

Frank Wootton is only in his sixteenth year, and this is his fifth season in the saddle. He ranks among prodigies of the turf, with "knickerbocker jockeys" like Fred Archer, George Fordham, Harry Custance, and Johnnie Reiff. It used to be said of him that even while his mother administered the nightly ablution Frank's income ran into four figures. Last year his earnings amounted to no less than £5,000. The most remarkable proof of the faith racing men place in Wootton is found in the fact that thousands systematically bet on "Wootton's mounts," regardless of the form of the horses he rides. Rarely has he had a day without a winner, and once at least, at Birmingham, he rode no fewer than four firsts.

A HOME correspondent writes.—His Majesty now holds a commanding lead in the list of successful owners on the English Turf this season. His horses have won altogether £19,077, of which £14,379 stands to the credit of his leasehold colt Minoru, winner of the Two Thousand Guineas and Derby, and possible hero of the St. Leger. It is practically impossible for the royal aggregate to be eclipsed by any owner except Mr. Fairie and Mr. Jack Joel.



Mr. Fairie is chiefly dependent on Bayardo and his youthful half-brother Lemberg for his chance of heading the list next November. This good youngster has a variety of engagements, including a £3,000 race at Kempton and the Middle Park Plate, but it seems necessary for Bayardo to win the £10,000 Eclipse Stakes and Minoru to lose the St. Leger to put Mr. Fairie in the fighting line. Mr. Joel's hopes are centred in Your Majesty, who in addition to the Eclipse has liabilities in the Princess of Wales's Stakes at Newmarket next month and the Jockey Club Stakes on 30th September. Roughly speaking, these races for which Your Majesty is being reserved are worth £20,000 to the winner, so that if the champion of 1908 does realise expectations and bag the lot even a St. Leger triumph would not serve to maintain the King at the head of affairs. White Eagle and Siberia in the Princess of Wales's Stakes; Siberia, Santo Strato and Bayardo in the Eclipse Stakes; and William the Fourth and Santo Strato in the Jockey Club Stakes constitute at this stage the real opposition to Your Majesty.

Mr. Joel, although not having quite the glorious Ascot he expected, yet succeeded in nearly trebling his aggregate, and he comes next to His Majesty with £6,050. His bitterest disappointment at the royal meeting came with the defeat of the Sweet Story colt in the New Stakes. This youngster began indifferently, and being on a big scale as well as inexperienced the driving necessary to retrieve the lost ground was all against his chance of success. The winner, Lemberg, is not in the £5,000 race at Sandown the day before the Eclipse, a curious omission, seeing how extensively Mr. Fairie has engaged him, and that his half-brother Bayardo won the corresponding event last June. But the other Ascot revelation—the brother to Pretty Polly—can run, and as he is penalised 9lb. and the Sweet Story colt enjoys a 10lb. breeding allowance, the race would be a severe test of his apparent phenomenal ability.

THE most interesting of the questions considered by the Members of the Jockey Club at their annual meeting held on the 24th ultimo was the one brought forward by Lord Cadogan. He wanted Rule 139 to be cancelled. The Rule reads:—"An owner running two or more horses in a race may declare to win with one of them. . . . A jockey riding a horse with which the owner has not declared to win, must on no account stop such horse except in favour of the stable-companion on whose behalf declaration to win has been made." It was the second part of the Rule to which Lord Cadogan took serious exception—the sentence authorising a jockey to "stop" a horse. He considered that "a very dangerous provision." The Jockey Club, he thinks, should not in any shape or way countenance any such proceeding. Lord Coventry, in seconding the motion, stated that the late Admiral Rous, the greatest legislator and administrator the Turf has known for many generations, was anxious to do away with declarations, and regarded it as an anomaly that an owner should under any circumstances be justified in giving orders to his jockey to pull a horse. And really, when you come to think of it, the proceeding is not easily defensible. The majority of jockeys are mere boys, who cannot be expected to understand all the niceties of the position when they are boldly and fearless told to "stop" their horses in order to let another animal win. In an ordinary way a rider can commit no more serious offence than that of pulling his mount, and one is inclined to agree with Lord Cadogan in his protest against any exception being countenanced. The fact of the matter is a "declaration to win" would be altogether unnecessary if we adopt the very sensible plan they have in France of counting two or more horses in a race belonging to the same owner as one. There it is the "stable" that is competing for the prize, and for betting and other purposes it matters not which of the candidates wins. Lord Harewood, who disagrees with Lord Cadogan, stated that when an owner makes a declaration to win it is "generally" in favour of the worst of his representatives! This is amazing. We live and learn. He instanced the case of Memoir and Semolina. "It was well known that Memoir was better than Semolina, but the Duke [of Portland] wished to win with Semolina because she was already exposed and had penalties." But, surely, if an owner wants to take two chances of winning he should be prepared to accept all the consequences, be the result what it may? The Jockey Club, ostrich-like, refuses to take cognisance of betting.

DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.
It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,
"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED).
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.
SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.
SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.
SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

But they know as well as the rest of us that betting there is, and that all of it is not conducted on the racecourse. If an owner deliberately declares to win with the worst of two horses he is doing an injustice to those speculators who are not attending the meeting. In the long run nothing came of Lord Cadogan's proposal, because he withdrew it. But it will probably come up for consideration at some future date in a modified form, the suggestion having been made that a declaration to win shall only be permissible in races of a mile or over.

The Dacca Amusement Club have arranged a gymkhana race meeting to take place on the 28th ultimo, and an attractive programme of five events has been framed.

Lt.-Col. H. H. Butler, R.F.A., has been appointed to act as a Steward of the Western India Turf Club for the Poona racing season 1909.

The protest lodged in the Pony Trials on the first day of the Bangalore Races, was considered by the Stewards, who allowed that Salanic bumped Prince Chestnut in the straight. Salanic was consequently disqualified and second place given to Prince Chestnut.

It is said that the growth of population in India and the relatively long period during which Europeans with firearms have searched it for game have reduced very considerably the opportunities of the twentieth century big-game hunter. Whilst this is the case with regard to one or two animals, such as the elephant and rhinoceros, both of which have considerably decreased in numbers, it can hardly be stated with correctness that the big-game hunter has not still ample opportunity of finding game. Even in Bengal, thickly populated as it is, it is no uncommon matter to hear of villages being attacked by leopards and tigers. The fact is that the difficult country in the shape of very thick jungle, and the cunning of these animals, increased by living as they often do near the habitations of man, make the sport, unless extensive preparations are made beforehand, both long and difficult. Big-game hunters who are able to choose what fields they like throughout the world prefer such a country as British East Africa, where game of many kinds abounds and the presence of man has not yet given them the sly cunning of the Indian tiger. It is said, indeed, that the novice can there speedily acquire the experience of the veteran, so frequent are his opportunities, for it is literally true that over enormous tracts of country it is scarcely possible to walk a mile without seeing a herd of wild game. On such a shooting ground a huge bag can be obtained in a comparitively short space of time; the numerous trophies obtained by the ex-President of the United States are evidence of this. But it is questionable whether such sport, approaching as it would seem, to a wholesale slaughter, can afford the same satisfaction to the true sportsman as the killing of a tiger after some days of careful hunting on foot in an Indian jungle.

From various statements made by Mr. Shackleton, the hero of the latest Polar expedition, it seems likely that he will soon make another attempt to gain the Pole itself, and the fact that a French expedition is also planning to carry out the same object will probably cause some international rivalry. In view of the great progress that has been made during the last two years with flying machines it seems a pity that they cannot be employed to visit the inhospitable territory around the Southern Pole. This suggestion has been mooted, but from the information provided by the members of the Shackleton expedition, it seems that the nature and power of the wind in the South Polar region are often of such force as to show little possibility of modern aerial vessels being successfully employed in exploration work. It is probable that the airship is not yet sufficiently efficient to undertake a journey in so perilous a region, but that it will be equal to such an expedition in the near future and the most effective means of overcoming the great cold wastes of ice and snow that have to be crossed by the intrepid explorer is more than likely. It cannot be taken as proven that the same conditions of wind noted by Mr. Shackleton prevail in the North Pole, and it is therefore to be hoped that Mr. Wellman, who has undertaken an aerial expedition, will have success. One of the most novel contrivances in connexion with his vessel is the arrangement whereby, if necessary, a part of the hydrogen gas in the balloon can be used as fuel in the engine instead of petrol. Mr. Wellman's ship being of the non-rigid type is naturally slow, and this defect will tell very heavily against it if strong winds are encountered. Judging by the frequent accidents which attend the aerial attempts of airships under favourable weather conditions the undertaking must be an extremely perilous one.

Mr. W. H. Pitt, acting District Superintendent of Police, North Malabar, has recently shot a proclaimed rogue elephant in the Kuttiyur forest. The animal, which is reported to have killed several persons, carried a very fair pair of tusks, the right weighing 65lb. and measuring 5 feet 9 inches in length, and the left 62lb. and measuring 5 feet 11 inches.

One of the sights of Brussels that attract all visitors is the markets in the Grande place, which looks its best when filled with plants and flowers under huge umbrellas and tents of varied hue. Birds of all sorts are sold, too, and formerly the dog market was held there also.

But the dogs themselves had so much to say about their sale that the inhabitants of the Grande place petitioned for the removal of that special market. And it is now held near the Midi station at the abatoir. Here every Sunday, from 8 o'clock to mid-day, dogs of all kinds are offered for sale, the weekly number averaging about 300.

Most of them are, of course, mixed as to pedigree, and if a buyer is in search of an animal with a family history in which no bar sinister occurs, he should not try the dog market.

Occasionally of course a dog appears on the scene whose patrician appearance betrays at once that he has been stolen, and sometimes the fact is brought home to the seller by the owner appearing. But generally thieves are artful, and if a dog is stolen in Dan he is sold in Beersheba, or Mechlin, or Antwerp, which have good markets, the latter being conveniently placed for sending dogs abroad.

Naturally many griffons are offered in the Brussels market, since it is the national breed, and if a buyer is not seeking a Mlle. Atom or a stud book hero, a nice little dog can be picked up here for from 8s. to 2 pounds. Naturally the best are privately snatched up by the buyers who rake the country every week for London, Paris, and New York, but pretty little dogs are to be seen in the market every Sunday.

Another Belgian specialty, the schipperke, which is so much in fashion, just now, is also to be found in the Brussels dog market, at from 7s. 6d. to 16s. As these dogs are small, they are easily stolen, and consequently there is generally a good choice of them.

Fox terriers are favourites in Belgium, and good plebeian little animals can be had at from 8s. to 1 pound, no questions being asked as to origin or real owner.

The annual general meeting of the Bombay Hunt was held at the Bombay Gymkhana, on the 8th instant, Mr. J. H. Symington presided and the following members were present:—Messrs. A. R. Binney, H. Blair, C. M. Brounell, R. G. Campbell, A. K. Graham, F. Hearson, M. N. Hogg, N. Lodge, N. G. W. Meikle, C. G. Montgomery, E. C. Reid, T. L. Roberts, G. Withers and Alister Forbes (Honorary Secretary). The report of the Committee for the season 1908-09 was adopted, the accounts passed and the following gentlemen elected (with power to add to their number) to form a committee for the ensuing season:—Messrs. R. W. L. Dunlop, J. H. Symington, J. L. Symons, H. E. E. Procter, R. W. Harter, H. C. Wright, and A. E. Lord and Colonel Mead. It was also decided that the Committee be authorised to purchase 30 couple of hounds for next season, and the Committee were empowered to make all necessary arrangements for the purchase and shipment of the hounds, and to appoint a Master.

Mr. Alister Forbes was re-elected Honorary Secretary. It was proposed and carried with acclamation that the thanks of the Hunt be conveyed to Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop for the able and successful way he hunted the hounds during the past season. The thanks of the Hunt were also tendered to Mr. Alister Forbes, Honorary Secretary, and Mr. John Crawford M.R.C.V.S., Honorary Veterinary Surgeon to the Hunt, for their past services, and to Mr. Hewal Hardie, C.A., for having audited the accounts of the Hunt without remuneration.

The Honorary Secretary read the following minutes of a meeing of the Committee of the Hunt, held on 7th April, at the Byculla Club, to consider the terms of the Hunters, Flat races at Mahaluxmi, etc., for the season 1909-1910. Present:—Messrs. R. W. L. Dunlop, J. L. Symons, H. E. E. Procter, Cecil Gray, and J. H. Symington, and Captain Meyer, R.E.

It was resolved to recommend to the Stewards of the Western India Turf Club the following terms, etc. Hunters' Flat Race.—For all the horses that have been certified by the M.F.H. as having been regularly hunted by their owners during the current season and which have not won a flat race value Rs. 500 since the 31st March 1907, to be ridden by members of the Bombay Hunt who have hunted regularly during the current season. A member of the Bombay Hunt for the purpose of the Hunters' Flat races is a man who has subscribed to the Hunt and hunted regularly during the current season.

It was further resolved that in the opinion of the Hunt Committee a horse or pony to have been regularly hunted must have been regularly and fairly hunted throughout the season. If a horse or pony is prevented from any cause whatsoever from being hunted throughout the season, it is left to the discretion of the Master to give a certificate provided that the horse or pony has been hunted not less than eight times during the season and has been well up on these occasions.

A member shall only be deemed to have hunted regularly who has been out at least eight times during the season.

The meeting then dissolved with the usual vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Our Ootacamund correspondent writes:—It is with deep regret that I have to chronicle the death of Sergeant-Major Leech, the Kennel Superintendent of the Ootacamund Hounds, on the morning of Saturday, 3rd July. Sergeant-Major Leech had been ill, since about the 21st of May, with a moderately bad attack of enteric, but was on the road to convalescence, when blood poisoning set in and carried him off. He was well known in Ootacamund, and was deservedly popular with all classes, owing to his many good qualities and happy pleasant, disposition. As Kennel Superintendent to the Ootacamund Hounds, a post which he held for rather more than a year before his death, although previously he had had practically no knowledge of the work, he quickly mastered his duties and relieved the Master of much of the drudgery inseparable from the management of a pack of hounds, and his untimely decease will be widely regretted by the Master, Staff and Members of the Ootacamund Hunt, and by all who knew him. The funeral took place at St. Thomas' Churchyard on Saturday afternoon. In consequence of this sad event the hounds did not meet as advertised.

A meeting was held at Simla, on the 6th instant, to discuss the possibilities of starting an association football club, with a view of entering a team for the Durand Tournament. Major-General Scallon occupied the chair. It was unanimously decided to start such a club, with the title of the Simla United Football Club. An executive committee was elected consisting of the Rev. G. D. Barne and Mr. F. G. McQuin as Joint Secretaries; Mr. C. H. Stuart, treasurer, and Mr. A Jelf, Mr. G. P. De La Ley, Mr. A. Matthews, Captain S. Clarke, R.A., as members. The committee were empowered to draw up rules and regulations to be submitted to a general meeting of members at an early date.

The Inter-Varsity Cricket match at Lords ended in a draw. Other important cricket results at home during the past week are as follows:—

Lancashire beat Surrey, at Manchester, by an innings and 185 runs.

Yorkshire beat Notts, at Bradford, by 4 wickets.

Kent beat Worcestershire, at Worcester, by an innings and 33 runs.

Northamptonshire beat Hampshire, at Northampton, by 1 wicket.

The match between Warwickshire and the Australians at Birmingham was drawn.

The match between Sussex and Leicester was abandoned.

The Players beat the Gentlemen, at the Oval, by 64 runs

The match between Eton and Harrow, at Lords, was abandoned.

The Australians beat Worcester, at Worcester, by an innings and 112 runs.

Lancashire beat Notts, at Manchester, by ten wickets.

Kent beat Derbyshire by an innings and 134 runs.

The following gentlemen have passed the Football Examination of the Calcutta Referees' Association:—

Mr. S. P. Hooley. Address—6, Sudder Street.

Mr. G. M. Russell. Address—76, Elliot Road.

Private Macintosh. Address—"A" Company, Gordons.

The first named gentleman has just brought out a useful little chart, which gives at a glance a summary of offences against the laws of Association Football and the corresponding penalties together with definitions and notes. This should be of value to players, and touch-line enthusiasts would do well to study this pamphlet, when they will be less ready to question the decisions of the man with the whistle.

THE Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation have received from their head office at Hongkong the following telegram :—Subject to Audit Bank Dividend for the half-year ending 30th June 1909 will be £2 per share. Added to silver reserve $750,000. Carried forward to next half-year $2,000,000.

A LOCAL Polo tournament began at Quetta on the 28th ultimo and was concluded on the 5th instant. Fifteen teams entered. Conditions were four chukkers of six and a half minutes each. In the first game N. team defeated a combination of Staff College players by 5 goals to 3. The second match between F. team (15th Lancers) and D. team (Staff College) ended in favour of F. by 4 goals to 2. G. next beat M. by 5 goals to one : and C. beat H. by the same margin. L. (S. and T. Corps) defeated J. (South Wales Borderers) by 2 to one, A. (19th Lancers) beat K. (24th Regiment) by a goal to nil, and B. (17th Lancers) beat I. (29th Lancers) by 3 goals to 2. The second round was played on the 30th June and 1st July and resulted as follows : F. beat N. by 4 goals to 1 ; G. beat C. by 5 goals to 2 ; A. beat J. by 6 goals to 2, and O. team, a combination of six players, beat I. by 2 goals to one. In the semi-finals on the 3rd instant G. beat F. by 3 goals to 2 ; and A. beat O. by 5 goals to 3. The final was played on the 5th instant when G. team, composed of two members of the Staff College and two of the 28th Cavalry, beat A. team (19th Lancers) by 4 to nil. Teams :—

G. : 1, Captain Bartholomew ; 2, Captain Stoney ; 3, Mr. Kreyer ; back, Mr. Marshall.

A. : 1, Captain Whitby and Mr. McLeod ; 2, Mr. Baddeley ; 3, Major Medley ; back, Captain Craik.

JACK MCAULIFFE, the pugilist, engineered a boxing entertainment at the Empire Theatre last Saturday. The usual courtesy of a complimentary ticket to see the show was not extended to us, so we regret we are unable to give our readers details, but from what we hear it was much the same class of affair as the usual boxing shows Calcutta is treated to.

FOLLOWING close on the exhibition of bioscope pictures of the Burns-Johnson fight, Calcutta is to be shewn the details of the recent Hague-Langford battle at the National Sporting Club. The Elphinstone Bioscope Company have secured the sole rights in the picture for India, and it will be exhibited here shortly.

THE Lahore Hockey tournament was concluded on the 10th instant when the N.-W. Railway beat the Aitchison College in the final by 6 goals to one. This is the third time in succession that the Railway have secured this Cup.

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Friday, 25th June 1909.

"ASCOT SUNDAY" probably never attracted greater crowds than it did this year; but the weather was not idyllic, and in this particular the up-river record fell just short of being beaten. There were leaden skies and sharp showers, but the lissome river-girls and their flannelled attendants were as gay and busy as ever, while in town the muster at Church parade and in the big parks was quite up to the average, in spite of the substitution of the umbrella for the sunshade.

One distinct peculiarity of this year's "Ascot Sunday" was the enormous preponderance of foreigners in every section of the crowd by land or water, and one reason for their presence is not difficult to guess, for no other country has so curious a sight to show. Consider what goes on. Even the merciless analysis of Mr. H. G. Wells is scarcely necessary to reveal the facts. From half-past nine in the morning onwards every train out of Paddington holds a hundred or so of Londoners who are determined that, whatever they may do on other days, this day they will spend on the river. They ...ice in brown paper and let it drip on one ... heads. They haul into the railway carriage ...pers crammed with lobsters which ap... strong objections to travelling under... seat. They wear a strange mixture of ... suggesting a cross between a garden ... sail at Ramsgate. They sport the ... rainbow in various parts of their ... the ladies seem to insist on motor veils, whether they are motoring or not. And so they travel down to Maidenhead, and some see them at Botler's Lock, at Clievedon Woods at Cookham and at all the favourite centres on this Sabbath of riverine alarums and excursions.

ANGLO-INDIAN memories are so short and you good people who dwell within The Ditch so migratory I doubt whether there are more than a dozen or so who remember the late Mr. St. John Hankin what time he was Assistant Editor of The Indian Daily News, some fourteen years ago in the early days of its proprietorship by the syndicate who, known as the Ranee Moody Gully Bobbery Pack, used to amuse us by their weird journalistic enterprises. Poor Hankin has just committed suicide at a Welsh Spa, as the result of nervous breakdown and a horror of a future of invalidism. Before he went to Calcutta he was connected with the Saturday Review, but it was soon made apparent that hack journalism was not his forte so he returned to England and directed his attention to literature and the drama, with conspicuous success, for he soon made a reputation at the Court Theatre under the Vedrenne-Barker management. His play, "The Return of the Prodigal," was one of the earliest productions under that regime. Prior to that he had written "The Two Mr. Wetherbys," produced in 1902. Three other plays—"The Charity that Began at Home," "The Cassilis Engagement," and "The Last of the De Mullins"—complete the list of his dramatic work. As a journalist he had worked for The Times and he also contributed verses to Punch, which were marked by the same delightful satire that characterised his comedies. Latterly he became a disciple of Bernard Shaw and took high rank in the new school of drama.

The circumstances of his death are distressing. For some time he had been run down in health following an internal operation last summer. He was trying the efficacy of the mineral waters at Llandrindod Wells, the picturesque spa in Radnorshire, North Wales. He was missed from the hotel at which he was staying, and was later found in a pool on the River Ithon, at a beautiful spot called the Lovers' Leap. In a pathetic farewell letter written to his wife the dramatist said he did not want to go on living, and that at the bottom of the pool he hoped to find rest. He had made sure of this by strapping a pair of 7lbs. dumbbells to his neck.

THE Americans are showing us the way with a vengeance. They have just beaten us at Polo, and last week before they taught some of us how to drive a four-in-hand! Talking of coaching reminds me to observe that just at this time of year eleven o'clock near Trafalgar Square recalls memories of the days when the "Golden Cross" was really a coaching house, for several of the coaches now running begin their daily journeys in that district to the unspiriting note of the "yard of tin." Motors, aeroplanes, balloons, and bicycles may come and go, but there's nothing pleases the eye for movement more than the rattle of a well-matched team hauling along the old coach. But as above remarked, Americans come here, take our businesses, beat us at running, fighting and yachting, buy all our great masters and some of the little ones. And now they beat us at our old game—the coach and four! It would not be bad if we got something out of the Yank, but all he gives in return is cheek and reminiscences by President Roosevelt.

THE Richmond Horse Show was held this week in the famous Old Deer Park and, judged by the greatly improved entry, the enormous attendance—in spite of the counter-attraction of Ascot—and the keenness of the various competitions, it must be regarded as the best of the series. It was feared that the International at Olympia might interfere with the older and more prosaic function, but the great London show which has just finished has undoubtedly helped the one at Richmond as all records were beaten, Class was of the very highest and altogether the exhibits and arrangements reflected the utmost credit on a show which even now has no rival in England.

PERHAPS Reuter has told you of the collision, off Dungeness, between an English warship and a merchantman, the curious point about which was that both vessels bore the same name—Sappho. There is a reflection that arises in this unfortunate affair, one that opens up a big field for speculation. While the collision afforded us a splendid example of British pluck and coolness it is sad to note that a protected cruiser—even a second class one—should be so completely knocked out of time by a mere civilian liner!

THERE were very great and gay doings at Windsor last Saturday when the King, and with him the Queen, presented colours to no less than 108 units of his noble though sombre-garbed Territorial warriors who may now be said to have reached their climax. It cannot be denied that the growth of this force wherewith to replace the old Volunteers have been rapid—so rapid indeed that, when one considers it, one is forcibly reminded of mushrooms, and one cannot ignore the fact that the trail of the Daily Mail is over it all. In 1907 Mr. Haldane's Territorial Army Bill was passed providing for a force of 300,000. For many months it made slow headway. But in February last at the request of Lord Esher, The Daily Mail made a special appeal in London for men. It sought to raise 11,400 additional recruits, about 80 columns of matter were devoted to this national invitation and within three weeks, true enough, the men were found, the numerical strength was completed. Sounds well till one begins to cast a critical eye over the khaki-clad ones who literally swarm over parts of London on Saturdays, and then, if one has a practised eye for picking out physical points, the "terrier" taken in bulk fails to create much enthusiasm. Still if the movement does no more than help to keep these young men out of the bars and other haunts of vice at week ends, it cannot be said to have entirely failed, and, of course, among the chaff there must be some good grain.

This is the hour of the bad boy. Why, oh why, was I good when I was young? I might have soared to giddy heights had I not been brought up on a liberal mental diet of "Sandford and Merton" and "The Swiss Family Robinson." We have just been told in an official report that the bad, the wicked and the incorrigibles sent to the schools of the London County Council turn out amazingly well as a rule and attain to careers which are described as brilliant. In my middle-aged mediocrity it dawns upon me that had I not been so good in my youth I too might have achieved greatness, or peradventure it might have been thrust upon me, as C.I.E.'s are not infrequently forced on astonished people in your parts as I am told. But like the ninety and nine just persons of old my pastors and masters evidently considered me too good to need attention, so it was given to those who shed incredible gallons of ink on "impots,' for whom a monthly public caning was an absolute necessity and on whose school horizon explusion ever loomed large. Thus it happens, I suppose, that I am among the "Also Rans" and figure low down in the betting. Yet stay, I extract a grain of comfort from the perusal of this report, I solace myself with the reflection that there may yet be a bright and useful future for Mr. Winston Churchill.

Alas! all our cherished links with the past are being snapped. The other day we saw the last Wrangler turned out and this week the presentation of the "wooden spoon' was made for the last time at Cambridge. This year it dangled before Mr. C. L. Holthouse, of St. John's, as he returned along the Gangway in the Senate House after receiving his degree and old 'Varsity rowing men in India may be interested to hear that it was carved from an oar he won as a member of his College crew.

Mr. Charles Frohman has come to an arrangement with the owners of the Hicks Theatre by which he will change the name of the house very shortly. The new name has not yet been chosen. Many theatres in London have had their names changed. St. James's was once known as the Prince's Theatre. The New Royalty was first christened Miss Kelly's Theatre, afterwards the New English Opera House. The Court Theatre was opened as the New Chelsea, and dropped that for the Belgravia. The Kingsway had four different names before the present one, and the Prince of Wales began its career as the Prince's. The Duke of York's was first called the Trafalgar. The Playhouse was called the Avenue Theatre, and when the Adelphi was rebuilt a few years ago it was reopened as the New Century; it very soon, however, picked up its old name.

Play producing for this season is over, and the lucky managers are those who have attractions strong enough to carry them through the summer. One or two plays that had the honour of being noticed as plays that would run at least a year are on their last legs, and some that got anything but flattering criticisms are among the ten of those now being performed nightly that will be still in the bill when the autumn mists have returned.

"L'Assommoir," the five-act play with which M. Guitry and the entire company from the Renaissance Theatre (presented by Miss Andrews), began a short French season at the Adelphi last Monday night, is by no means a great play; but it is a play which carries with it a telling atmosphere, and it has many finely dramatic scenes. The character of Coupeau scarcely gives M. Guitry so much scope for displaying his great gifts as some other parts with which his name is associated, but he, nevertheless, gave an artistic performance, which impressed by its quiet strength.

L'Assommoir is not a pretty story, but it is a story strongly told by a company who make the scenes real, and get straight at the heart-strings. It would be difficult to conceive better all-round acting and pride of place was won by Mme. Dux as Gervaise. Her portrayal of a suffering woman was pathos itself. It was painful in its quiet realism. It was a thing to draw tears. Mme. Cora Laparcerie as the brazen, revengeful Virginie suggested the character finely, M. Lamothe as Lantier was exceedingly good, and M. Guitry as Coupeau brought out every phase of the character with perfect effect. His was a very subtle study, human and touching.

In choosing "The Merry Wives of Windsor" as the first revival of his fifth Shakespeare Festival at His Majesty's Theatre, Mr. Tree made an exceedingly happy selection. If Falstaff cannot be described as the best part in his repertoire, there is no character that Mr. Tree plays better, while all through the company were admirably suited by their parts last night. And what a splendid company had been gathered together for the revival! There was Miss Ellen Terry, still sunny and charming and irresistibly mischievous as Mistress Page; Miss Constance Collier, handsome and gay as Mistress Ford; Mr. Lionel Brough, richly humorous as the host of the "Garter"; Mr. James Hearn, admirable as Shallow; Mr. Lyn Harding, as Master Ford; Mr. Charles Quartermaine, as Slender; Mr. Basil Gill, as Fenton; Mr. William Haviland, as Dr. Caius; and Mr. Norman Page, as Sir Hugh Evans—each entering into the spirit of the character; each bringing out all the character of the part. The mounting, it almost goes without saying, was as beautiful as the art of the producer and the scene painter could make it, and the revival was greeted with every enthusiasm.

The Birthday Honours List is published this morning: it contains the name of no new peer. There are thirteen new baronets, including the Lord Mayor of London, while amongst the new Knights, who number thirty, will be found Mr. Pinero, Mr. Tree, Mr. H. W. Lucy ("Toby, M.P.") The two Sheriffs of London also receive Knighthoods. Five appointments to the English Privy Council include Mr. Hobhouse, Sir Hudson Kearley, and Mr. J. X. Merriman. Four new members of the Irish Privy Council are also created.

WITH ROD AND GUN IN NORWAY.

For many years Norway has been a happy hunting ground, being well patronised by both visiting anglers and gunners. Perhaps the greatest attraction to the Land of the Vikings, when the late Queen Victoria was a youthful sovereign, was the salmon-fishing. In those good days riparian rights over Norwegian waters could be rented on very moderate terms from the farmers; but matters are changed now. The middleman has slipped in, and choice stretches along the rivers of Norway, in which salmon are abundant, call for very long purses. However, in some of the smaller, or rather the shorter, rivers sport may be had at a fairly cheap rent, and, even if the salmon-angling cannot be voted as first-class, sea-trout fishing can be had chiefly in the tidal waters. Taken altogether, the salmon fishing is nothing like as good to-day as it was, say, fifteen or twenty years ago, owing to the continued use of nets, although several of the British lessees have by artificial means greatly improved their rented waters. The salmon-fishing in Norway varies considerably, a few streams giving the best sport as late as August; but perhaps the best month in the season for capturing fish is June. There is plenty of trout-fishing to be had in Norway on reasonable terms, both in stream and highland lakes, the latter being very numerous in the mountains. The best season for trouting is the month of July and the beginning of August. In the low-lying lakes and streams good sport can also be had in the latter part of June, or even earlier. Taken altogether, the cream of the trout-fishing commences in the middle of July, and good sport may be expected up to the middle of August. In August, too, the sea-trout fishing is at its best. In some of the lakes the trout run to a great size, many having been captured weighing from 12 to 15 pounds or even more (which are taken in very deep water), but the basket will hold, as a rule, trout of ½lb. to 4lbs. As regards the outfit for the trout-angler, opinions may differ, but the visitor is recommended to take with him a fly-rod about 12 feet long with stout spike to screw into the butt; also three fly-tops and one shorter top for bait-fishing, one reel with 60 yards of tapered fly-line, and a short, stiff trolling rod, with strong waterproof line, will be found most useful. The best flies are: Zulus, Alexandras, March Brown, and Claret and Grouse. For the remainder of the angling kit the visitor must use his own discretion. It may be as well, however, to say that the majority of streams in Norway can be fished either from a boat or from the bank, so that waders are not an absolute necessity.

Let us now see the sport available for the visiting hunter with gun and rifle. The king of the Norwegian forest is the elk, the largest game beast in Europe. It is unnecessary to go into lengthened details regarding the chase of this noble animal, which in these days is, to all intents and purposes, reserved for Royalty and millionaires. On some of the big preserves in Sweden the elk are driven, and on a very small scale in Norway also. The two chief plans for elk hunting in vogue all over Scandinavia are by following the trail of the quarry with a good dog on the leash, or with one loose, but the latter for some unexplainable reason, is debarred from the chase in Norway, although the majority of sportsmen who have tried both methods hold the opinion that elk hunted by the loose dog have a better chance of escape than if stealthily followed up by the hound in slips. The elk season in Norway, with a few local variations, is limited to twenty days from 10th September. Next in importance to the elk is the wild reindeer, which frequent the wilderness of the Norwegian high fields. Wild reindeer hunting is looked on as grand sport but very hard work, the difficulty of stalking being much increased owing to the vigilance of the hind scout that is posted to keep guard over the herd whilst feeding or asleep. The season for reindeer hunting is from 1st September to 15th September. The chase of the red deer in Norway needs but little comment, as all the best forests are held on lease by Englishmen. Irrespective of the aforesaid, the visitor during his rambles may meet with bear, wolf, lynx, and glutton, besides seals, otters, and blue hares. By the way, bears are becoming scarce in Norway, and in the near future are likely to become extinct. Even now the stranger in the land will require the assistance of a local hunter who knows well the haunts of bear ere Bruin is brought to bag. In the autumn he is at his best, and his splendid pelt is a trophy worth working for.

We now come to the feathered game of Norway, the chief of which are all of the grouse tribe—the capercailzie, the black grouse, the hazel hen or tree grouse, the ptarmigan, and the willow grouse. The last named, which is commonly called the ryper (skor-ryper), afford by far the best sport. Norway can also offer the visitor sport with wild duck, woodcock, snipe, and quite a variety of wildfowl. Whilst ryper-shooting, sportsmen usually hunt the game with setters, pointers, or spaniels, but when the birds are plentiful they may be walked up with the assistance of a few beaters.

For a fisherman or gunner to proceed to Norway haphazard in the hope of finding sport might indeed prove a wild-goose chase, for let it be borne in mind that Norway covers an area of 122,711 square miles, the shooting and fishing rights over a large proportion of which are leased and very strictly preserved; and even over parts where such is not the case, leave must be obtained from the farmers who own the land. The visitor breaking this law is fined pretty heavily. The object, therefore, of the writer is to put a small party of thorough sportsmen—say three or four—on the track of where they will find excellent trout-fishing and fairly good sport amongst ryper, reindeer, and other game winged and four-footed, based upon a report recently received, and which there is every reason to believe is perfectly genuine. The visitor, however, must not expect to find the game close to the port of landing, but be prepared to make a two days' journey by carriole or stolkiare for part of the distance, and the remainder astride a Norwegian pony. The starting place will be Stavanger or Flekkefjard, either of which is reached by coasting steamer from Bergen. When the traveller dismounts from his sturdy little steed he will find himself 2,000 feet above sea-level, right in the mountain wilds, and outside the pale of civilisation. There are three beats altogether to be let on very moderate terms, and on two of them there are comfortably furnished little shooting-boxes. The third beat has no house, and is generally taken by the sportsmen renting one of the other two. Last year, over one of these beats four guns on six days brought to bag 240 brace of ryper, the sportsmen being very indifferent shots. On another beat a big bag of ryper was made, besides seven large bucks.

The writer has spent some pleasant weeks in the land of the Midnight Sun, and can truthfully say that if a visitor never wet a line or drew trigger during a sojourn in Norway a tour in this delightful country would well repay him. The stillness of the fjords, which is broken by the rushing fos the stern mountains and the rippling streams, make up a charming panorama that is to be seen nowhere else in Europe, the nearest approach to it being the scenery of Alaska. The Norwegians are a particularly courteous people that even in these days of travel are still uncontaminated by the advances made by vulgar trippers. The main roads are kept in very good order; some of them are hilly, of course, but the level ones are excellent for cycling and, perhaps, motoring. The hotels in Bergen and the other large towns are good, and in the village inns the menus will compare favourably with those of other Continental countries.

A flying visit at an early date to the haunts of the Norwegian grouse and reindeer might repay the wandering shikari. It would be a pleasant outing, and he could then judge for himself if the game be worth the candle.—Shooting and Fishing.

THE TURF.

ASCOT.

AN interesting card was reserved for the last day and a goodly company was left to meet the King, who arrived shortly before the first race. The King and the Prince of Wales, together with most of the Royal guests, motored over from Windsor, and the gathering fully upheld its prestige to the end. In the Ascot High-weight Stakes Arranmore struck into another horse and threw Wootton, who was kicked on the head and carried off unconscious. Results:—

Won by a head; three-parts of a length between second and third.

WINDSOR.

From its handily adjacent position by road and rail, Windsor was the most convenient of all meetings to follow Royal Ascot, and doubtless the particularly good attendance on Saturday was due to this fact. The weather was very close and thundery, but the light excellent; and it was not until the big company were on their way station-wards that the bottled-up rain began to fall. The going was excellent, fields ruled well, and capital sport was afforded.

NEWBURY.

The exodus North made little or no difference in the attendance at Newbury on Tuesday in Tattersall's Ring, and, of course, it would not affect the club or the public enclosures that depend in a great measure on local support, while the holiday folk from the countryside made a good show. Thanks to recent rain the going was as green and springy as might be expected at this time of year. Results:—

NEWCASTLE.

This week is known as "race holiday" for the miners north of the Tyne, and a wet Plate day is regarded as something approaching a calamity throughout the Newcastle district. A thunderstorm broke over the course prior to racing on Wednesday, the clouds becoming as dark as night except for the occasional vivid flashes of lightning, while the peals of thunder fairly shook the foundations of the ancient stands. In addition came a deluge of rain that drenched the thousands of holiday makers as they wended their way across the picturesque park to the course from the trams. The "Pitmen's Derby" was a gift for Sir Harry, who ran in very different form to that he showed at Ascot. Results:—

ATHLETICS.

L.A.C. SUMMER MEETING.—With the Canadian sprinter, R. Kerr, the South African hurdler, V. Duncker, E. E. Leader, E. H. Montague, C. R. Dugmore, and several other prominent athletes who will be seen battling for championship honours a fortnight hence, among the competitors at the London Athletic Club's summer meeting at Stamford Bridge, on Saturday was of more than usual interest. Kerr, who was making his first appearance since his return, won the invitation scratch sprint by a good foot from H. Watson in 10-2/5secs., but did not turn out for the open 100 yards handicap, in which he had been placed at scratch. The hurdles champion, V. Duncker, competed in both the 120 yards scratch and 300 yards hurdles handicap, but failed to show up to his best form. After getting well away at the start in the first event, he was beaten by the old Blue C. E. Leader by a good yard in 16-1/5secs., whilst in his heat of the 300 yards he fell four flights from home. An open mile bicycle handicap, the first promoted by the club for fifteen years, was well contested, Percy Bevan, of the Putney A.C., gaining the verdict. E. H. Montague put in a good performance in the 440 yards Challenge Cup race, beating his only opponent, W. H. Gunton, after a splendid race, in 50/4 5secs. Details:—

100 Yards' Invitation Scratch Race.—R. Kerr, Tigers A.C., Hamilton, Canada, 1; H. Watson, S.L.H., 2; R. Gibson, S.L.H., 3. Kerr got well away and won by a foot; a yard between Watson and Gibson. Time—10-2/5secs.

300 Yards' Hurdles Handicap (Open).—Heat 1: C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., 17 yards, 1; C. E. Kinahan, L.A.C., 7, 2; H. W. Kirk, Tooting A.C., 15, 3. Won by four hurdles from home. Heat 2: E. H. Adam., Tooting A.C., 22, 1; H. F. Renton, United Hospital, 10, 2; J. B. Densham, L.A.C., 5, 3. Won by a yard. Time—39-1/5secs. Final heat: C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., 17, 1; H. F. Renton, United Hospitals, 10, 2; E. H. Adam, Tooting A.C., 22, 3. Dugmore quickly took the lead and won easily by half a dozen yards; two between second and third. Time—37-2/5secs.

120 Yards Hurdles Level Race and Challenge Cup.—E. E. Leader, 1; V. Duncker, 2; C. E. Kinahan, 3. Duncker was first away, but at the half-distance Leader drew level and eventually won by a good yard; rather more separated second and third. Time—16-1/5secs.

One Mile Bicycle Handicap (Open).—Heat 1: P. Bevan, Putney A.C., 100 yards, 1; T. W. Evans, Polytechnic C.C., 150, 2; E. C. Piercy, Polytechnic C.C., 40,3. Won by a length and a half. Time—2mins. 18secs. Heat 2: A. W. Pegg, Twickenham C.C., 190, 1; P. Ellis, Putney A.C., 100, 2; P. Emmett, Battersea Poly C.C., 155, 3. Won easily. Time—2 mins. 15-4/5secs. Final heat: P. Bevan, 1; A. A. Pegg, 2; T. W. Evans, 3. Won by ten yards. Time—2mins. 12-2/5secs.

100 Yards Challenge Cup Race.—W. H. Gunton, 1; S. Abrahams, 2; H. S. Harmer, 3. Won by two yards. Time—10-3/5secs.

100 Yards Open Handicap.—Second Round.—Heat 1: H. B. Blower, L.A.C., 7½, 1; C. R. Dibb, Highgate H. 3½, 2. Won by half a yard. Time—10-2/5secs. Heat 2: W. R. B. Thomas, L.A.C., 9½, 1; W. G. Harris, Highgate H., 7, 2. Won by a foot. Time—10-1/5secs. Final heat: W. R. B. Thomas, 1; W. G. Harris, 2; C. R. Dibb, 3; H. B. Blower, 4. Won by a foot, with half a yard dividing next two. Time—10-2/5secs.

440 Yards Challenge Cup Race.—E. H. Montague, 1; W. H. Gunton, 2. Won, after a good race, by a yard. Time—50-4/5secs.

300 Yards Handicap (open).—Heat winners: J. F. Twort, C.C. and R.A.C., 24 yards (time—31-2/5secs.); A. N. Watton, Herne Hill H., 18 yards (Time—32secs.); F. Norrey, S.L.H., 23 yards (Time—31-4/5secs.); D. Basan, L.A.C., 22 yards (Time—31-4/5secs.); F. C. Butcher, Finchley H., 17 yards. (Time—32secs.); A. A. Cameron, Blackheath H., 26 yards. (Time—31-4/5secs.). Final heat: D. Basan, L.A.C., 22, 1; H. Norrey, S.L.H., 23, 2; F. C. Botcher, Finchley H., 17, 3. Won, after a good race, by a yard; a foot divided Norrey and Butcher. Time—31-4/5secs.

High Jump.—E. E. Leader, L.A.C., 5 feet 9 inches, 1; C. R. Dugmore, S.L.H., 5 feet 6 inches, 2; H. W. Kirk, Tooting A.C., 5 feet 5½ inches, 3; W. E. B. Henderson, L.A.C., 5 feet 4 inches, 4.

Three Miles Open Handicap.—G. F. Jennings, Cambridge H., 225 yards, 1; W. H. Mirley, Beaconsfield C.C., 210, 2; H. E. J. Southwell, Blackheath H., 250, 3. Thirty-five competitors entered and all started. The limit man, C. H. Spendlove, Ranelagh H., with 700 yards, took the lead for the first mile, followed by E. Gibbs of the same club, and S. L. Sarel, L.A.C.; during the next furlong Sarel passed Gibbs and also Spendlove at the completion of the lap. Meanwhile Jennings and B. C. Long were making rapid headway. Half a mile from the finish Jennings took the lead, followed by Mirley, with Southwell and Long amongst the leaders. He was never seriously threatened during the last lap and finally won by fully thirty yards; ten yards between second and third. Time—14mins. 26-3/5secs.

GOLF.

OPEN AMATEUR COMPETITION.—The first 36-holes amateur scratch competition for the "Golf Illustrated" Gold Vase valued at 250gs, was held on the Mid-Surrey Club's course in the Old Deer Park. The trophy, which has to be won three times in succession to be secured outright went to Captain Cecil Hutchison, who ran up to Mr. Robert Maxwell in this year's amateur championship.

There was an entry of sixty-nine, including many leading amateurs, and of those who sent in their names all but three started. The weather was perfect for golf, and some low scores were made. The best was 71, accomplished by the winner in his afternoon round, which beat the competition record for the course, set up by Mr. S. H. Fry last month by a stroke. The details of his score were as follows:—

RANELAGH. OPEN CUP.—FINAL.

AN attendance estimated at close on 4,000 people was present at the Ranelagh Club's grounds on Saturday the 19th instant, and witnessed the final tie in the Ranelagh Open Cup Tournament. The American players, who on Wednesday commenced the series of three Test matches with England, had reached the final, and the match gained its special importance from the fact that the opposing team, Rochampton, was with one exception the same as has been selected to represent England in the first Test match. Naturally, a good deal depended on the result, and both sides brought into use their best ponies. The Americans won easily by a margin of 5 goals—and the fact has to be faced that the challengers look very much like achieving the primary object of their visit.

Rochampton's display was disappointing, and they were outclassed from start to finish. Mr. Miller at back played as well as he has ever played. Mr. Nickalls at No. 3 was nothing like at his best. He seemed nervous and oversanxious. Mr. Freake at No. 2 must do better than Mr. Grenfell did; but Captain Wilson at No. 1, though frequently outpointed and beaten for quickness, did his share. The Americans played as if they were never in doubt about the proper thing to do. Once again their hitting was so clever and frequently brilliant as to make that of their opponents look very moderate.

Little detail is necessary to describe the course of the game. Rochampton with a little luck might have scored in the first minute, but it was left to Mr. Larry Waterbury to get the first goal of the match. The Americans attacked

·375 RIMLESS
MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.

Striking energy,
2,899 ft. lbs.,

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

the whole of the second ten minutes, but were unable to score. Once Roehampton were penalised for a cross within the fifty yards line, and an extremely easy goal from a free hit should have followed, but Mr. L. Waterbury in some way missed. He and his brother each scored once in the third period, at the end of which Meadowbrook led by 3 goals to nil.

In the fourth period Mr. Nickalls started a strong movement, and Mr. Grenfell carried on the ball in good style, but Captain Wilson, who edged the ball through, was given off-side, and the point, therefore, was disallowed. The Americans scored twice in the fifth period, and it was then that Mr. Grenfell got Roehampton's only goal, though Mr. Monty Waterbury was off the ground at the time. Finally Meadowbrook won easily by the score indicated. Teams:—

MEADOWBROOK (U.S.A.).—Mr. L. Waterbury, Mr. M. Waterbury, Mr. H. P. Whitney, and Mr. D. Milburn (back).

ROEHAMPTON.—Captain H. Wilson, Mr. R. N. Grenfell, Mr. P. W. Nickalls, and Mr. C. D. Miller (back).

Umpires: Captain Bayley and Hon'ble Hugh Grosvenor.

Buda Pesth beat Ranelagh by 6 goals to 4.

The winners in this match, on the Old Ground, led at half-time by 4 goals to 2. Teams:—

BUDA PESTH.—Count Anton Sigray, Count Louis Karolyi, Marquis Pallavicini, and Mr. L. Stoddard (back).

RANELAGH.—Mr. J. Pearce, Captain R. E. Cecil, Captain E. W. Morrison-Bell, and Mr. H. Schwind (back).

Tiverton beat Casuals by 10 goals to 2.

SWILLINGTON.—Mr. S. R. Mallet, Sir Charles Lowther, Bt, Mr. E. B. Sheppard, and Captain G. M. Mort (back).

Penguins beat Wanderers by 5 goals to 4. Teams:—

PENGUINS.—Mr. R. P. Wilson, Mr. E. R. Dawson, Mr. A. C. Paton, and Major M. Archer-Shee (back).

WANDERERS.—Count Galleani, Mr. J. T. Lempriere, Mr. L. Avery, and Mr. H. Mulliner (back).

THE INTERNATIONAL MATCH.

A brilliant gathering witnessed the first great international polo match yesterday at Hurlingham, where America beat England by 9 goals to 5.

The result was not unexpected, as the famous Meadowbrook team which represented America have been beaten in this country only once this season, and on that occasion they were riding strange ponies.

Moreover, the England quartette were handicapped by the absence of their best back, Mr. Charles Miller, his substitute, Lord Wodehouse, being scarcely at the top of his form in the early stages of the game.

The trophy fought for is the America Cup, held by England since the inaugural contest at Newport, Rhode Island, in 1886.

Threatening showers discouraged many ladies from donning their lightest summer dresses, but there was no lack of brightness and colour in the scene, and the general effect was as charming as such spectacles always are, amid the delightful surroundings of the Hurlingham Club.

The following teams took the field:—

ENGLAND (Defenders.)		AMERICA (Challengers.)
Capt. Herbert Wilson, D.S.O.	1	Mr. Lawrence Waterbury	1
Mr. F. M. Freake	2	Mr. J. M. Waterbury jun.	2
Mr. P. W. Nickalls	3	Mr. H. P. Whitney	3
Lord Wodehouse, M.P. (back)		Mr. Devereux Milburn (back)

Mr. Freake came down in the first minute of the game, but was up again directly. Honours were easy at the conclusion of the first ten minutes.

In the second round, which opened in a shower, Mr. Whitney scored for America. A second and third goal were added by Mr. L. and Mr. M. Waterbury.

Play was more even in the third spell, and at half-time the score was: America, 5 goals; England, 1 goal.

America afterwards led by as much as 9 goals to 2, but in the last ten minutes England rallied and reduced their defeat to 9 goals to 5.

The visitors certainly owed their victory largely to their speedier ponies, as there was not such a great deal of difference in the accuracy of the hitting of the two teams.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Tuesday, 29th June.—The Dangar Ride Sign Post Matley, 12 noon. This is the first time a meet has been held at this spot, its a long way out, about two miles or more beyond Sheffield Corner. Matley Covert was first drawn and a jack was afoot at once, it went away over the Dangar Ride to the bog beyond and over Egerton's Crossing to Democrat and up the hill, then swung to the right and pointed for Sambar Shola, running through it—hounds were at fault on the far side and though a wide cast was made they failed to pick up his line, scent was poor. In Hookham Snivey a cub was roused and killed in the water course just below. Hounds feathered on a line in the bog near Gartree Hill, but nothing came of it. The Master went back to the Dangar Ride and in a small covert close by hounds touched a line. The jack had evidently made use of the ride as they ran along it for some distance, the jack was viewed going across to Middle Bit Shola, hounds ran him through this and swung over Vokal Hill through Boldu and Beauliew over Matley Bog through Sambar Shola past the Nunjanad Village to the ravine through which the Goondapa stream runs. The jack ran up the ravine and was viewed coming out at the head, he doubled back into the ravine and was killed about half way down. A moderate day.

Thursday, 1st July.—Briar Shola, 8 A.M., drew Briar blank, then proceeded over the top of it to Herbert Plantation and through Stokes and lower part of Staircase and along the Sandy Nullah Stream. Back to Briar and over Windy Saddle to Chemund. Here at last our hopes were raised, hounds spoke to a line which they hunted slowly round about Chemund, Wenlock and Dormer. Some few couples of hounds marking a jack to ground in Dormer. The rest of the pack went away on a line that led them down to the Yemakal Stream when they swept round to the right and came up to below Dormy, then sunk the hill again to the Yemakal Stream, crossed it and running up through Little Yemakal Shola rose Hungerford Hill by the Mysore Ride and put their jack to ground not far from Governor's Shola.

Monday, 5th July.—The Umbrella Tree, 8 A.M. This meet, so celebrated for the magnificent view over the plains it affords in fine weather, to-day appeared under the welcome aspect of thorough monsoon conditions, a driving wind from the S.W. and a thick misty drizzle, which at times became quite decent rain, so though the view was conspicuous by its absence, the prospect of a good hunting day was much more favourable than it has been for some considerable time, and we hoped that the long deferred monsoon was really coming at last, as conditions are getting quite erious in many places owing to want of rain, and prices which are now high enough in all conscience show no signs of ever coming down again, a matter of grave moment to all of us who keep horses to follow the "Sport of Kings" in the Nilgiri Hills. On arrival at the meet the Master was informed that one jack had been seen to go down the Ghat by Billigul Path, and that another, with a bone in its mouth, was sitting waiting for us on the hill above. Going to look for the latter we were only in time to see the last of him disappearing down the Ghat so the Master did not pursue, but drew the small sholas between the Connemara Road and Hanging Shola. In the latter hounds formed a cub, which after a circular tour at best pace in spite of the efforts of the 1st whip to head him off, succeeded in making his way back into Hanging Shola and thence straight for the Ghat near the Umbrella Tree. Here he went to ground and we left him to run another day. Finding again below Brooklands to the Demon Valley hounds ran at a fair pace through Rocky, above the Waterfall River, past Karimolimond, and turning away from the cliff- at Waterfall the Master stopped them at the head of the Ghat close to Cathedral Shola. Finding again on Bagman hounds ran a fast 10 minutes viâ Rallywoods and Monkey to Dharma Tope, then swung back to Korothagulli and on straight over the top of Heeuba, through Andy Bog to Lady Lawley's Shola, where they could do no more and we came home.

Tuesday, 6th July.—Hungerford Hill, 12 noon. Drew down the bog and along the South-Western side of Hungerford Hill and up to the East of Sultan Shola, in one of the small coverts hounds spoke to a line and carried it over the head of Lancer Shola, when a sounder of pig caused a diversion, one squeaker being killed in the Parson's Valley Stream. The mist was very troublesome in this part of the country, so the Master decided to draw nearer home and a move was made for Governor's Shola. Near the old Toda School hounds opened on a line and carried it along the outskirts of the covert and checked. When he got on to the ridge opposite Blue Gums a jack was received on the fine path outside and hounds were soon on his line. They pushed him through the covert and over the ridge into Governor's, from here they ran him up into Martyn's, when near the top of this he doubled back into Governor's and running back on almost the same line he had run before he got to ground in the watercourse below Blue Gums. It was some time before "Kitty" prevailed on him to quit and he retaliated by meeting his teeth in her nose and then made off into Blue Gums with the pack in full cry not far behind. From Blue Gums he turned back into the ravine and running up it past the Toda Mund, he turned to the left and went to ground again in Round Shola, and this time he refused to quit, so was left to run another day. A long draw ensued across the home downs to Hill's Covert, this covert was blank, hounds went off with a great chorus on the other side to Elmhurst Corner, on to Turtle Crossing and back to below Mill's, when they marked their jack to ground. He was probably one of the cubs bred in the covert, so was quite at home. The evening was drawing in and being close to kennels hounds were taken home.

THE BANGALORE TOURNAMENT.

20TH DECCAN HORSE vs. 2ND SAPPERS AND MINERS.—There was a large crowd of spectators to witness two games in the first round of the tournament on the 5th instant. The first match between the Deccan Horse and Sappers was well contested; the Cavalry eventually winning by 5 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The 20th got away and put in two shots at goal. These went wide but they returned shortly after and Ross scored. Mid-field play was followed by an attack on the Deccans' goal, Morris losing a chance.

Second Chukker.—The Sappers got on and Morris very nearly scored. The Deccans next had to hit out from their own goal as a penalty for off-side. From this White got possession and equalised. Up and down play, both goals being visited without success.

Third Chukker.—The Deccans pressed hotly throughout this period, several shots were sent in but the chukker terminated without score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Deccan Horse got the ball and scored with a long shot. Campbell Ross added another goal on resuming and for a spell the Deccans pressed hard. Then the Sappers took up the attack but there was no further score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Sappers opened well and kept the Deccans' back busy, but all their attempts to score were frustrated and the 20th assuming the offensive scored twice, Worgan hitting one goal and Nur Khan the other.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast and exciting play neither team scoring; the game thus ending in a win for the Deccan Horse by 5 goals to 1. Teams:—

20TH DECCAN HORSE.		SAPPERS AND MINERS.
Jemdr. Kounsul Singh	1	Mr. G. M. Morris	1
Dffdr. Abdul Nur Khan	2	Mr. J. C. Pringle	2
Capt. R. B. Worgan	3	Capt. J. R. White	3
Capt. Campbell Ross (back)		Major Marshall (back)

Umpires:—Captain Popham and Mr. Tompkins.

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS.—This game was a runaway victory for the Mysore Gymkhana for whom the Yuvaraj and Bunny Singh played brilliant polo.

First Chukker.—The Gymkhana attacked and the Yuvaraj hit two goals in quick succession. Following a penalty hit for crossing against the Lancers which went wide, the Yuvaraj got away again and scored a third goal.

Second Chukker.—A good run by Murad Beg ended in a poor shot and the Gymkhana taking up the attack scored three more goals; the Yuvaraj being responsible for one and Bunny Singh for two.

Third Chukker.—The Gymkhana were on the offensive throughout, but their shooting was poor in this period; the Yuvaraj hit one goal and many chances were missed.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gymkhana continued to press and the Yuvaraj and Fyaz Mahomed scored a goal each.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers rallied and took the ball to the Gymkhana territory but could not score and their opponents taking it back scored twice in quick succession; Bunny Singh and Fyaz Mahomed being credited with the points.

Sixth Chukker.—Bunny Singh got away and put on two goals; the Gymkhana keeping up the pressure till the end.

Final Score: Mysore Gymkhana, 13 goals; I. S. Lancers, nil. Teams:—

MYSORE GYMKHANA.		I. S. LANCERS.
Jemdr. Fyaz Mahomed	1	Major Henderson	1
The Yuvaraj of Mysore	2	Reisdr. Murad Beg	2
Mr. Bunny Singh	3	Jemdr. Krishna Urs	3
Mr. Gopalraj Urs (back)		Jemdr. Syed A. Rahman (back)

20TH DECCAN HORSE vs. 14TH HUSSARS "A" TEAM.—These teams met in the semi-finals in the presence of a large crowd of spectators on the 7th instant. The officers of the 14th Hussars were at home and the regimental Band added to the afternoon's enjoyment. The Deccans had the best of the game and won by 11 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Hussars were the first to attack and Joicey scored, the Deccans rushed down on resuming and Worgan equalised. The Hussars got away again and Bruce scored from a scrimmage and once more the Deccans invaded their opponents' territory and Ross put them on terms.

Second Chukker.—The Deccans put in two good runs and Ross hit a goal. They continued to press and Ross narrowly missed scoring.

Third Chukker.—The Deccans pressed throughout and scored four goals, Ross 2, Nur Khan and Worgan being credited with the points.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play followed by a spell in midfield till off-side was given against the 20th. They hit out from their own goal and rushing the ball down Ross hit a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—Kounsal Singh got away and shot a goal and Worgan followed this up with another. Then the Hussars attacked and Fetherstonhaugh put through.

Sixth Chukker.—A well contested period the Deccans eventually getting through to score another goal. Final Score: 20th Deccan Horse 11 goals. 14th Hussars "A" 3 goals. Teams:—

DECCAN HORSE.		HUSSARS.
Jemdr. Kounsal Singh	1	Mr. T. R. Bruce	1
Dffdr. Nur Khan	2	Mr. A. E. Fetherstonhaugh	2
Capt. R. B. Worgan	3	Mr. G. K. Mason	3
Capt. A. Campbell Ross (back)		Capt. Hon. H. E. Joicey (back)

Umpires:—Major Henderson and Captain Tompkinson.

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. 14TH HUSSARS "B" TEAM.—The Mysore Gymkhana met the Hussars second string on the same day as the previous game. The Cavalry were completely outclassed and beaten by 11 goals to one.

First Chukker.—The Gymkhana attacked throughout but erratic shooting, in which the wind had not a little to say, lost them many opportunities.

Second Chukker.—The Mysore team got away and the Yuvaraj scored two goals in quick succession, Gopalraj Urs and Bunny Singh adding one each.

Third Chukker.—Mysore pressed once more and Fyaz Mahomed, the Yuvaraj and Bunny Singh made additions to the score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gymkhana continued to have the whip hand and scored three more goals, two of which were contributed by the Yuvaraj, who played a splendid game throughout and the other by Gopalraj Urs.

Fifth Chukker.—The Hussars still on the defensive but they managed to keep their opponents out in this period.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hussars got away and Secker scored their only goal. They were hemmed in for the rest of the period and Bunny Singh scoring another goal: the Mysore Gymkhana won as stated by 11 goals to one. Teams:—

MYSORE GYMKHANA.		14TH HUSSARS.
Jemdr. Fyaz Mahomed	1	Capt. J. F. D. Woodhouse	1
The Yuvaraj of Mysore	2	Mr. G. N. Nicholson	2

A Second Life

"If I only had another chance!"

How often does a man utter these despairing words when he feels his health undermined, his strength ebbing, his vital forces depressed—often as the result of his own errors or follies—and he realises the infinite possibilities which might lie in his grasp could he indeed receive, in Shakespeare's phrase, "A Second Life."

Happily, this other chance, this second life, is to be had for the asking by means of that which has been aptly described by a famous physician as "the last word science has spoken" on the subject of such remedial agents and to which, by virtue of its health-giving properties, the name of Sanatogen—meaning "The Health Producer"—has been given.

So potent is its force that it will not only restore the health and vitality which have been lost, but, if persevered in, will, in addition, impart the highest measure of nervous and physical vigour of which the individual is capable; for there is a maximum capacity of health for everyone, although he may not hitherto have had the fact impressed upon him. Doctors endorse this and daily prescribe Sanatogen in increasing quantities.

The constituents which give Sanatogen its power are known to every physician. What they are is described below in the plainest terms in the telling analysis of Sir Charles A. Cameron, the Chief Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst for Dublin.

Medical testimony of its value can be read in the statements of Dr. C. W. Saleeby and Dr. Andrew Wilson, the well-known medical authors. Over twenty five thousand doctors prescribe Sanatogen in their daily practice, while some ten thousand physicians have testified to its merits as A Revitalising Force.

In Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever and other wasting diseases incidental to life in India it acts "like a miracle," to quote the words of a physician who has used it largely. It reconstitutes the blood, rebuilds the body, reinvigorates the health, reinforces the strength, restores the vitality, revivifies the waning powers and revitalises the nervous system, until the patient is as well as he was before his illness, while it safeguards him from further attacks.

The typical letters of Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., and Miss Ellaline Terriss are selected from hundreds of communications of famous men and women who have of their own free will written of the debt they owe Sanatogen.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Medical Opinion

DR. C. W. SALEEBY, the well-known medical author:
"13, Greville Place, London, N.W.

"Sanatogen is a specially adapted food that has solved the problem of giving phosphorus in such a way that the nervous system can take hold of it. I would specially refer to its value in the feeding of invalids, whether during actual illness or during convalescence, and for nursing mothers."

C. W. Saleeby

DR. ANDREW WILSON, the distinguished scientist:
"110, Gilmore Place, Edinburgh.

"I have found the ideal tonic and restorative in Sanatogen. Recovering from influenza, and suffering from severe weakness, I gave Sanatogen a fair trial, and without the use of any other medicine or preparation I was restored to health."

Andrew Wilson

A Telling Analysis

SIR CHARLES A. CAMERON, C.B., M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst, Dublin, etc.

"On analysis it proved to be composed of 9.5% moisture, and 90.5% of dry matter, including 7.37% of ash. It contained 83.13% of Albuminoids (nearly wholly made up of casein, but including a little Albumin), together with 2.2% of phosphoric acid, a small portion of which existed in the albuminoids, but by far the larger portion was in the form of Sodium glycero-phosphate.

"It is this organic phosphorus which, in my opinion, makes the substance of such value as a metabolic stimulant, and the means of increasing the amount of nitrogen assimilated in the food.

"I have arrived at the conclusion that Sanatogen is a substance of the highest nutritive value, containing as it does a large amount, relatively speaking, of organic phosphorus—that is, phosphorus which is offered to the tissues in exactly the form in which it can be easily absorbed. It is an excellent nerve food."

Typical Letters

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the popular novelist:
"20, Carlton House Terrace, S.W.

"I have used Sanatogen at intervals since last autumn with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

MISS ELLALINE TERRISS, the favourite comedienne:
"Hicks' Theatre, London, W.

"I have every reason to be grateful to Sanatogen, for it has completely revitalised and restored me to perfect health."

Ellaline Terriss

I. F. A. SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

MOHAN BAGAN vs. Y. M. C. A.—Played on the Y. M. C. A ground on Saturday. The Association played a man short throughout and were without several of their regular players. The native team gave a good account of themselves and eventually won by 4 goals to nil. Sukul and S. Badhuri scored a goal each in the first half: and the same players added a goal each on changing ends. Teams:—

Y. M. C. A.—Atkinson, goal; Reynolds, back; McLaren, McKay, and Levingston, halves; Collingwood, Gillan, Brown Parker, and Rosseti, forwards.

MOHAN BAGAN.—Mookorjee, goal; Chatterjee and Biswas, backs; M. Mookerjee, Bhatterji and Sircar, halves; Roy. B. Bhaduri, S. Bahadhuri, Sukul and Dassi, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Hounsell.

CUSTOMS vs. KING'S SHROPSHIRE L. I.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Saturday. The soldiers got away at the start and forced a corner. Nothing resulted and the Customs took up the attack. The military defence was kept very busy and the Customs seemed on the point of scoring time and again. A couple of corners were not turned to account and then the soldiers rushed down, Fitzpatrick conceding a corner in clearing. Another corner followed but the Customs got the ball away and once more the Shropshires' goal was besieged. Just before half time the military got away and Fitzpatrick was called upon to save, which he did at the expense of another abortive corner. On resuming the Shropshires attacked and looked like scoring from a free kick for a foul. Up and down play followed both goals being visited in turn. Fischer sent in a pretty shot for the Riversiders the ball just dropping on the crossbar. They continued to press and a good centre by Boileau resulted in Galbrieth putting through. The Shropshires had slightly the best of the exchanges during the remainder of the game but they were unable to equalise and retired defeated by a goal to nil. Teams:—

K. S. L. I.—Robinson, goal; Garside and Humphrey, backs; Onions, Roberts and Hayley, halves; Poole, Howell, Birch, Sanderson and Bird, forwards.

CUSTOMS A. C.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Anderson and McCready, backs; Fischer, L. A. Smith and Curry, halves; Boileau, Berkeley, Galbrieth, L. H. Smith and D'Silva, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. S. P. Hooley (C. R. A).

DALHOUSIE vs. FORFARSHIRE F.C.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday last, the game ending in a draw of 1 all. Both goals were scored in the second half, Quaile putting through from a free kick for the home team and Gibson equalising. The game was replayed on Monday when the Dals, who had the best of the exchanges throughout, won by 5 goals to 2. The ground, owing to the rain which fell during the day, was in a wretched condition and the game was further marred by rough play and improper conduct.

Dalhousie pressed at the start and Wright beat McGell before the game was five minutes old. The visitors nothing daunted transferred the play and Benham equalised. They continued to press but the Dals cleared and coming away obtained a corner. Nothing resulted, but shortly after Dalling scored, and keeping up the attack the home team put on two more goals through Dalling and Montgomery. The second half was marred by a deal of rough play; fouls were frequent and two of the Mills team were dismissed from the field. Wilson scored for the Forfarshire on resuming: level play followed, then the Dals pressed but were unable to score. But after the departure of Muir and Halkett the Forfarshire, though playing pluckily, were beaten once more, Montgomery scoring the fifth goal. With the exception of a good attempt by Spence which hit the crossbar nothing further of note occurred and Dalhousie won as stated by 5 to 2. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clarke and Quail, backs; Morrison, Lees and Wilson, halves; Prike, Montgomery, Wright, Dalling and Hurlston, forwards.

FORFARSHIRE F.C.—McGell, goal; Cooper and Patterson, backs; Esplen, Spence and Muir, halves; Benham, White, Wilson, Benecook and Halkett, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. P. C. Margrett.

CUSTOMS vs. CHINSURAH.—This game on the Customs' ground on Tuesday was a very one-sided affair. The home team pressed throughout, but their forwards have never given a worse exhibition in front of goal. The visitors' citadel was subject to a continued assault and shot after shot was attempted. In the first half only three found the net, and of these two were disallowed for offside. On changing ends the home forwards continued their erratic display and were credited with one more goal. Chinsura were thus beaten by 2 to nil. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Anderson and McCready, backs; Fischer, L. A. Smith and Curry, halves; Boileau, Berkley, Galbrieth, L. H. Smith and D'Silva, forwards.

CHINSURAH.—J. K. Sen, goal; T. Mundal and P. Paul, backs; K. Seal, P. Dhur and A. Paul, halves; N. Mukherjee, D. Dhur, Echlin, S. Paul and R. Mukherjee, forwards.

Referee:—Corpl. White.

SOVA BAZAR vs. RANGERS.—Played on the Sova Bazar ground on Tuesday, an uninteresting game ending in favour of the visitors by 3 goals to nil. Sova Bazar had the best of the opening play and Gupta beat Margrett, but the point was disallowed for offside. Up and down play followed till Smart scored for the Rangers shortly before half time. Play ruled even on resuming, and then the Rangers again got away and Taylor scored. The visitors' backs were kept busy, but Sova Bazar were unable to get through and McKay rushed down and found the net. The home team played up pluckily to the finish but were unable to reduce the margin and were beaten as stated. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Minet and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Lawton and O'Kelly, halves; Berkley, Smart, Murphy, Taylor and McKay, forwards.

SOVA BAZAR.—S. Mukherjee, goal; L. Mitter and B. Banerjee, backs; A. Gupta, A. Mukherjee and Roy, halves; Rahaman, D. Mukherjee, N. Day, N. Ghose and K. Gupta, forwards.

Referee:—Sergt. Curley.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN fine weather on Saturday the Shield ties in the first round of the competition were played off, large crowds assembling on the various grounds, the native element principally gravitating to the Y.M.C.A.-Mohan Bagan match. Y.M.C.A. turned out one man short and were minus no less than five of their regular players including their three best men after Reynolds viz, Gay, Brown and Dr. Gray. The result was that the native team ran rings round them, scoring four goals to the home team's nil, and once again Swadeshi triumphed and the Babu log rejoiced exceedingly. Unless there was some very good and sufficient reason for the Y.M.C.A. taking the field with such a weak side it could hardly have been worth their while entering for the competition and in future unless some great change for the better occurs, they had better confine their attention and talents to junior competitions. The game merits no comment, and any symptoms of that distressing complaint known in vulgar parlance as "Swelled head" which may have been developed by Mohan Bagan as the result of their victory, were probably dispelled on Tuesday when they met the Gordons in the second round.

THE Customs-Shropshire match took place on the C.F.C. ground and, as was to be expected from a meeting between these strenuous rivals, a ripping game was the result. Customs won by a goal, and, without detracting in any way from the fine performance put up by the soldiers, were value for their win, the first half was pointless, the goal being scored about ten minutes after the interval, and the roar of triumph set up by the Customs' supporters is supposed to have upset some of the starters in one of the races at Tollygunge!! After this it was easily seen that the Customs were determined to be one of the finalists this season, and despite some dashing play by the soldiers, maintained their lead fairly comfortably. Smith appeared in their forward line after a fortnight's absence and his inclusion greatly improved that already very effective quintette. The Shropshire forwards struggled valiantly to score but were badly served by their halves, who went in too much for tall kicking. Roberts, as usual, was the pick of the middle line and he worked gamely for the equaliser which never came. The backs were weak and the team as a whole seemed slightly stale, having evidently been training harder than is absolutely necessary in this sunbaked clime. We are sorry to have seen the last of them this season, but they are too good sportsmen to grudge their opponents a hard won victory and next year we hope to see them make a braver show than they have yet done.

WHEN Forfarshire played Dalhousie to a draw on Saturday there was great jubilation at the various jute mills along the river, and those of the fraternity who could, remained in Calcutta to celebrate the event and hopefully looked forward to a win for their favourites on Monday. In the replay, however, Dalhousie made no mistake and in a very ragged sort of game defeated the Jute men by 5 goals to 2. The mill hands were handicapped in having to take the field without two of their best men, the substitutes proving very inefficient. They further had to commence with only ten players, and during the absence of the late comer the Dals got their first goal. Forfarshire, at times, gave glimpses of what they might do on a dry ground, and it was only too evident that they were more severely handicapped by the state of the ground than the home team, there short passing game being rendered abortive by the slush. At half time the score was 1-1 in Dalhousie's favour but this gives no indication to the form shown by the visitors which was quite equal to that of the home team. The Forfarshire backs and goalkeeper were very weak and fluky, the latter letting in 3 very soft goals. He wore a "Queen's Park" jersey but we can quite understand why his services are not in request by the premier Scotch Amateur's Club. Shortly after the interval the jute team scored and a few minutes later a contretemps occurred which, in all probability, lost them the match. Their centre forward, who played well throughout, made a fine run but was charged and prevented from scoring by Clarke. Claims were made for a penalty which the referee very rightly ignored, the charge having been a perfectly fair one. Thereupon the left half and outside left of the visitors abused Mr. Margrett, using, it is alleged foul language and were promptly ordered off the field by that gentleman. They evinced considerable reluctance in obeying the Referee's mandate and it was only after the intervention of their Captain that they departed. With only nine men the visitors case was hopeless and Dalhousie scoring in the last few minutes, the game ended in the latter's favour by 5-2. It was rather hard lines on the remainder of the Jute team, who played a sporting game, to have had their fate in the competition sealed through the behaviour of a couple of men who should have known better than to act as they did.

RANGERS AND CUSTOMS had easy tasks on Tuesday when they met Sova Bazar and Chinsurah respectively. The scores were 3 nil and 2 nil in favor of the League teams and while the Rangers-Sova Bazar match was quite a good one to watch, the other was a very poor affair. Sova Bazar scored a beautiful goal which for some reason known only to the referee was disallowed. With more practice Sova Bazar would always give a good account of themselves and it might not be a bad idea to start a native League. Teams like Mohan Bagan, Chinsurah, Sova Bazar would then get all the practice necessary and their players would probably learn to go straight for goal instead of "fiddling" about until they lose the ball as they do at present.

THE various Junior Cup ties are now in full swing and every evening numerous matches are in progress. Calcutta "B" have reached the semi-final stage of the Sarma Cup and Suburban Shield and have great hopes of annexing these trophies. It is wonderful the number of protests that arise in connection with these junior cup matches, and the Plaintiffs and Defendants mostly of the Babu persuasion get up these cases, call their witnesses and make speeches in a manner that would considerably astonish the legal luminaries that adorn our Courts of Law

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

Y. M. C. A. vs. GLOUCESTERS.—Played on the 3rd instant. The first half was very evenly contested. Both teams attacked in turn and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends both goals were visited. Kelly just missed scoring for the Young Men and then the Gloucesters came down with a rush and put the ball through. The Young Men did all they could to get level but without success and retired with their first defeat.

Y. M. C. A. vs. HORNETS.—This game on the 5th instant was very one-sided, the Young Men having the upper hand throughout. They lost many opportunities of scoring owing to erratic shooting in the first half at the end of which they led by a goal to nil, scored by Kelly. In the second period, however, they netted the ball five times—Kelly scoring 3 goals, Pack and Dowling one each. The Young Men thus won by 5 goals to nil. Teams:—

Y. M. C. A.—Hildreth, goal; Templeton and Booker; backs; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves; Brown, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Whitecombe, forwards.

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal; Topper and Millard, backs; Gardner, Osborne and Molyneux, halves; Garrick, Patterson (captain), Cotter and Daroux, forwards.

R. G. A. vs. ROVERS.—Played on the 6th instant, the Gunners winning by 3 goals to nil. Even play at the start till the Artillery men pressed and after a fine shot by Sergeant Watts had rebounded into play, Turner got possession and scored the first goal. The soldiers did most of the attacking during the first half and Toole shot a second goal. On changing ends the gunners pressed, but hesitancy in front of goal lost them many opportunities. The Rovers got away

Bombay Gymkhana vs. Commercial Gymkhana.—Played on the 7th instant, the Bombay Gymkhana winning by 2 goals to nil. The Commercial Gymkhana were not at full strength and opened with a man short, their opponents scoring a goal through Hargreaves, before the vacancy was filled. The Bombay Gymkhana continued to press throughout the first half but were weak in front of goal. The Commercials pressed on changing ends and lost a good chance of equalising. Then the Gymkhana took up the attack and had the best of the play for the rest of the game. Hargreaves scored a goal but many chances of adding to their score were subsequently lost. Teams:—

Commercial Gymkhana.—Blore, goal; Harewood and Croles-Rees, backs; Coffmann, Osborne and Bellamy, halves; Two Sailors, Cornfield, Cooke and another, forwards.

A black man in Jamaica applied to the parson to be married. On being asked his name he refused to give it, saying his mother had given him a name, and from his birth he had never mentioned it to any one. The parson insisted, telling him he could not marry him unless he gave his name. After a great deal of hesitation he stammered out, "Well, parson, my name, sah, is 'Damn Nastiness Brown,' and you is the first man I ever tell it to." On looking his name up in the register the parson discovered that he had been christened "Demosthenes Brown."

LAHORE TOURNAMENT.

Second Round.

Aitchison College vs. 4th Battery R.F.A.—These teams met on the 3rd instant, an uninteresting game ending in favour of the College, who played a steady game throughout. They had the upper hand in the first half but could only score once. On changing ends the Battery played better but on the College scoring another goal the Gunners went to pieces, and were ultimately defeated by 5 goals to nil.

N.-W. Railway vs. Government College "B" Team.—The Railway team had matters all their own way against the boys last Saturday and won very easily. They scored five goals in the first half and six more on changing ends.

Semi-Finals.

Aitchison College vs. Government College "A" Team.—A well contested game was witnessed when these teams met on the 6th instant. The Government College were first to attack and drew first blood ten minutes from the start. They continued to press and forced a corner but sticks against them relieved the pressure and the Aitchison College took up the attack. But it was not for long and the Government College coming away once more pressed till the interval. On resuming play ruled even for a spell then the Government College ran down and obtained a spell then the Government College ran down and obtained a corner. Nothing resulted and the Aitchison College next attacked. They appeared to have recovered themselves and were not long in equalising. Fast play followed and the Aitchison College scored again. Their opponents made big efforts to get on terms but without success and were thus beaten by two goals to one.

North-Western Railway "B" Team vs. 1st P. V. R.—A big struggle was expected when these teams met on the 7th instant. Play was level at the start the P. V. R. were the first to attack but lost opportunities, being pulled up on three occasions for off-side. Then the Railway pressed and after one shot was cleared they returned to the attack and put the ball through. The Railway had the best of the play till the interval and managed to net the ball once again. The point, however, was disallowed for "off-side." Up and down play on resuming was marred by frequent stoppages for sticks and off-side. The Volunteers had chances of drawing level but lost them all, and the game ended without further score, the Railway thus qualifying for the final by a goal to nil.

Final.

N.-W.R. vs. Aitchison College.—These teams met in the final game on the 10th instant before a large crowd of spectators. The Railway soon showed their superiority to their opponents and eventually won by 6 goals to 1 thus registering their third successive victory in the Tournament. The Railway got away and scored shortly after the start. They followed this with a corner but nothing came of it, and the College ran down and lost several chances. Once more the Railway pressed and scored three goals in quick succession. Just before the interval the College rushed down and scored their only goal. On changing ends the Railway continued to do all the attacking and put on two more goals, many chances being lost through weak shooting, sticks and offside. Mr. Justice Robertson gave away the Cup at the end of the game.

Boxing.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS' TOURNAMENT.

The Sherwood Foresters held their boxing Tournament at the Bowring Institute, Bangalore, on the 5th and 6th instant in the presence of a large attendance. The sport was good throughout and the keenest interest was evinced in all the competitions. The judges were Q.-M.-S. Mathews, R.H.A., and Sergeant-Major Milgan, 14th Hussars: S. S.-M. Dove refereed for the novice events, and Captain Campbell Ross for the open contests and the ten-round fight between Bagge and Strickland. This was for a purse of Rs. 150 with side bets of Rs. 300. The two opening rounds were level. Strickland took the lead in the third round, but Bagge was superior at the next meeting and knocked his opponent down in the fifth. He stayed down till nine was counted and then resumed, but after receiving further punishment was unable to continue, Bagge being awarded the verdict. The Hon'ble Mr. S. M. Fraser, British Resident, was present on the second evening, and gave away the prizes and made a short congratulatory speech.

The prizes in all the open events were handsome cups, in addition money prizes. The judges awarded special prizes to the best losers in two classes. These went to Barber of "O" Battery, R.H.A., for the best figure in the open middle weights, and to MacMahon in the novices middle-weight. A handsome bowl was presented to "B" Company of the Sherwood Foresters, as being the best Company in the Regiment during the past year.

The tournament was a great success and Sergeant-Major Randall, who initiated and carried it through, is to be congratulated on the excellent results of his efforts. Details:—

The Horse.

THE GALLOPING HORSE.

Until instantaneous photography was introduced, a little more than twenty-five years ago (by the discovery of the means of increasing the sensitiveness of a photographic plate), and gradually became familiar to everyone in the exhibitions known as the "biograph" or "cinematograph," the actual position of the legs in a galloping horse at any given fraction of a second was unknown, remarks Sir Ray Lankester. Anyone who has tried to "see" their position will agree that it cannot be done. Attempts had been made to make out what the movements and positions of the legs "must" be, by studying the hoof-marks in a soft track laid for the purpose. But the result was not satisfactory. As everyone knows, the so-called "biograph" pictures are produced by an enormous series of separate instantaneous photographs taken on a continuous transparent flexible film or ribbon. The pictures are thrown by the lantern on to a screen, and are jerked along at the rate of from thirty to sixty a second, and are magnified enormously. Animals and men in rapid movement, railway trains, the waves of the sea are thus photographed, and when the serial pictures are thrown on the screen the result is that the eye detects no interval between the successive pictures—the figures appear as continuous moving objects. This is due to the fact that the impression produced on the retina of the eye by each picture lasts for a tenth of a second (less with brighter light), so that it has not gone or ceased before the next picture is there; hence there is no break in the retinal impression, but continuity.

It is this duration of the impression on the retina which prevents us from separating or "seeing distinctly," the successive phases of a horse's legs as he gallops by—and has led to the remarkable result that no artist has ever until twenty-five years ago represented correctly the gallop of a horse. If we examine the separate pictures of a galloping horse as taken on a cinematograph film (and I wish they would sometimes show us the separate pictures at a "biograph" exhibition), we have before us the actual record of the positions assumed by the legs at intervals of the thirtieth of a second (or whatever less interval and length of exposure may have been chosen), and it is simply astonishing how utterly different they are from what had been supposed. Twenty years ago Mr. Muybridge produced a number of these instantaneous photographs of moving animals—such as the horse in gallop, trot, canter, amble, walk, and jumping and bucking—also the dog running, birds of several kinds flying, camel, elephant, deer, and other animals in rapid movement. The animals were photographed on a track in front, of a wall, marked out to show measured yards; the time was accurately recorded to show rate of movement and length of exposure, and of interval between successive pictures. By means of three cameras worked by electric shutter-openers, a side, a back, and a front view of the animal were taken simultaneously. Repeated photographs were obtained at intervals of a fraction of a second, giving a series of fifteen or twenty pictures of the moving animal. The length of exposure for each picture was the one-hundredth of a second or less, and Muybridge's great difficulty had been to invent a shutter which would act rapidly enough. I have these pictures beore me now. They show that what has been drawn by artists and called the "flying gallop," in which the legs are fully extended and all the feet are off the ground, with the hind hoofs turned upwards, never occurs at all in the galloping horse, nor anything in the least like it. There is a fraction of a second when all four legs of the galloping horse are off the ground, but they are not then extended, but, on the contrary, are drawn, the hind ones forward, and the front ones backward, under the horse's belly. A model showing this actual instantaneous attitude of the galloping horse has recently been placed in the Natural History Museum. When the hoofs touch the ground again after this instantaneous lifting and bending of the legs under the horse, the first to touch it is that of one of the hind legs, which is pushed very far forward, forming an acute angle with the body. The shock of the horses's impact on the ground is thus received by the hind leg which reaches obliquely forward beneath the body like an elastic <-spring. Since the instantaneous photographs have become generally known artists have ceased to represent the galloping horse in the curious stretched pose which used to be familiar to everyone in Herring's racing plates, with both fore and hind legs nearly horizontal, and the flat surface of the hind hoofs actually turned upwards! Indeed, as early as 1886 a French painter, M. Aime Morot, availed himself of the information afforded by the then quite novel instantaneous photographs of the galloping horse, and exhibited a picture of the cavalry fight at Rezonville between the French and Germans, in which the old flying gallop does not appear, but the attitudes of the horses are those revealed by the new photographs. The picture is an epoch-making one, whether justifiable or not, and is now in the gallery of the Luxembourg. It must be noted that though Meissonier and others had succeeded in representing more truthfully than had been customary, other movements of the horse, such as "pacing," ambling cantering, and trotting, yet in regard to them, also, more easily observed because less rapid, the instantaneous photograph served to correct erroneous conclusions.

Two very interesting questions arise in connection with the discovery by instantaneous photography of the actual positions successively taken up by the legs of a galloping horse. The first is one of historical and psychological importance, viz., why and when did artists adopt the false but generally-accepted attitude of the "flying gallop"? The second is psychological and also physiological, viz., if we admit that the true instantaneous phases of the horse's gallop (or of any other very rapid movement of anything) cannot be seen separately by the human eye, but can only be separated by instantaneous photography, ought an artist to introduce into a picture which is not intended to serve merely as a scientific diagram an appearance which has no actual existence so far as his or other human eyes are concerned? And further, if he ought not to do this, what ought he to do, on the supposition that his purpose is to convey to others the same impression of rapid movement which exists—not, be it observed, in his eye, or on the retina of that eye—but in his mind, as the result of attention and judgment?

The first of these questions has been answered by the great French authority on archaeology and the history of art, M. Solomon Reinach, whose writings are as lucid and terse as they are accurate, and solidly based on research. M. Reinach shows (and produces drawings to support his statement) that in Assyrian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, mediæval, and modern art up to the end of the eighteenth century "the flying gallop" does not appear at all! The first example (so far as those schools are concerned) is an engraving by G. T. Stubbs in 1794 of a horse called Baronet. The essential points about "the flying gallop" are that the fore limbs are fully stretched forward, the hind limbs fully stretched backward, and that the flat surfaces of the hinder hoofs are facing upwards. After this engraving of 1794 the attitude became generally adopted in English art to represent a galloping horse, and the French painter, Gericault, introduced it into France in 1821 in his celebrated picture, the "Derby d'Epsom," which is now in the Louvre.

Previously to this there had been three other conventional poses for the running horse in art, of which only the third to be mentioned below has any resemblance to a real pose, and that not one of rapid movement. We find: (1) The elongated or stretch-legged pose (French, "cabre allonge"), in which, whilst the front legs are off the ground, and all four legs are stretched nearly as much as in the flying gallop, there is this essential difference, viz., that the hoofs of the hind legs are firmly planted on the ground. This pose is seen in a picture by the same artist (Stubbs) of two years earlier date than that in which he introduced "the flying gallop." The "stretch-legged pose" is found in Egyptian works of 580 B.C., and is a favourite pose to indicate the gallop, in ancient Assyrian as well as mediæval art, for instance, in the Bayeux tapestry; (2) the second pose made use of for this purpose is the "flex-legged pose," in which all the four legs are flexed, so that the hind legs rest on the ground beneath the horse's body whilst the fore legs "paw" the air. This is seen both in Egyptian, Greek, and Renascence are (Leonardo, Raphael, and Velasquez). It is by no means so graceful or true to Nature as the next pose, but gives an impression of greater energy and rapidity; (3) the third pose represents a kind of "prancing," and is seen on the frieze of the Parthenon and in many subsequent Greek, Roman, and other works copied from or inspired by this Greek original. One only of the hind legs is on the ground, and the animal's body is thrown up as though its advance were checked by the rein. It is called "the canter" by M. Reinach, but that term can only be applied to it when the axis of the body is horizontal and parallel to the surface of the ground.

The reader will perhaps now suppose that we must attribute the "flying gallop" to the original, if inaccurate, genius of an eighteenth-century English horse-painter. That, however, is not the case. M. Reinach has shown that it has a much more extraordinary history. It is neither more nor less than the fact that in the pre-Homeric art of Greece—that which is called "Mycenæan" (of which so much was made known by the discoveries of that wonderful man Schliemann when he dug up the citadel of Agamemnon)—the figures of animals, horses, deer, bulls (see the beautiful gold cups of Vaphio!), dogs, lions, and griffins, in the exact conventional pose of "the flying gallop," are quite abundant! There was an absolute break in the tradition of art between the early gold-workers of Mykene (1600 to 1000 B.C.) and the Greeks of Homer's time (800 B.C.). Europe never received it, nor did the Assyrians nor the Egyptians. Thirty centuries and more separate the reappearance in Europe of flying gallop,—through Stubbs—from the only other European examples of it—the Mycenæan. What, then, had become of it and how did it come to England? M. Reinach shows by actual specimens of art-work that the Mycenæan art tradition, and with it the "flying gallop," passed slowly through Asia Minor into ancient Persia, thence by Southern Siberia to the Chinese Empire, as early as 150 B.C., and that the "flying gallop," so to speak, "flourished" there for centuries, and was transmitted by the Chinese to the Japanese, in whose drawings it is frequent. It was at last finally brought back to Europe, and to the extreme west of it, namely, England, by the importation in the eighteenth century into England of large numbers of Japanese works of art. It was a Japanese drawing (as M. Reinach infers) which suggested to Stubbs the upturned hinder hoofs and the detachment from the ground of "the flying gallop" which he gave in his portrait of "Baronet," and so established that pose for a century in modern European art. This is a delightful tracing out of the wanderings, of an artistic "convention," and the curious thing is that its chief importance is not that it has to do with the movements of the horse, but that it tends (as do other discoveries) to establish the gradual passage of preclassical Mycenæan art across Central Asia to China and Japan by trade routes and human migrations which had no touch with later Greece nor with Assyria nor India.

How did the Mycenæans come to invent, or at any rate adopt, the convention of "the flying gallop," seeing that it does not truly represent either the fact or the appearance of a galloping horse? Though 20,000 years ago the earliest of all known artists, the wonderful cave-men of the Reindeer period, drew bison, boars, and deer in rapid running movement with consummate skill, they were (be it said to their credit!) innocent of the conventional pose of the "flying gallop." I base this statement on my own knowledge of their work. M. Reinach thinks that the "flying gallop" was devised as an intentional expression of energy in movement. I venture to hold the opinion that it was observed by the Mycenæans in the dog, in which Muybridge's photographs (now before me) demonstrate that it occurs regularly as an attitude of that animal's quickest pace or gallop. It is easy to seen "the flying gallop" in the case of the dog, since the dog does not travel so fast as the galloping horse, and can be more readily brought under accurate vision on account of its smaller size. The late Professor Marey (a great investigator of animal movement) appears to have denied that the dog exhibits the full stretch of both limbs with the pads of the hind-feet upturned, and all the feet free from the ground. He was mistaken, as Muybridge's photograph giving side and back view of a galloping fox-terrier amply demonstrates. It is quite in accordance with probability that the early Mycenæan artists, having seen how the dog gallops, erroneously proceeded to put the galloping horse and all other animals which they wished "to make gallop" into the same position. I must leave to another day the question as to what attitude and appearance an artist ought—bearing in mind the purpose of art—to give to a galloping horse, should he attempt to present one in a picture or other work.

An Irishman, newly-established in Glasgow, found himself in a thoroughfare famous for the number of fruit and poultry shops therein. Passing a large shop of the latter species his eye chanced to rest on an owl hanging above the door, a bird he had never seen before. Going inside, he tapped the shopman and said: "Excuse me, sorr, but what might the price av that square-faced chicken be that's hanging abune the dure?"

"Awa', ye fool," said the shopman, "that's no a chicken, it's a night owl." "I don't care a dam," says Harrigan, "supposin' it was a fortnight oul,' it'll do for the lodger's broth!"

BALUCHISTAN BIVOUACS.

III.

OVIS VIGNEI.

An outlaw, well known in local circles, had for some time been carrying out with impunity his nefarious practices in the vicinity of Fort Boulderman. One morning an individual of the bunnia class had set out in a tonga to make a lengthy journey. He had traversed about 7 miles when the apparition of a naked man running in his direction as if the devil himself were behind him caused him to pull up his conveyance precipitately. This rude person, on being questioned, proclaimed himself to be the policeman's tonga driver. The story that he divulged was startling at any rate to the bunnia. He had been driving his master's tonga, which was luckily empty, back to Fort Boulderman. About the 12th milestone, he was suddenly and wholly unexpectedly, held up by a gang of ruffians, armed to the teeth. He himself was captured, and the pony and chaise were driven up an adjacent nullah. Here the animal was ruthlessly shot, and the vehicle chopped into match wood. While this performance was being enacted, the unfortunate driver was stripped of every vestige of raiment, with the exception of a loin cloth. A confabulation then took place as to what should be the ultimate fate of the victim. Some were for cold-blooded murder, others more mercifully inclined voted that his life should be spared but that his ears should be cut off. The captive, however, solved the problem for himself. Whilst the argument was in full swing he jumped up, broke the rings, and was in full flight before the situation had been properly grasped by his would-be torturers. The first weapon spoke at about 20 yards, the other rifles sped their leaden missiles in rapid succession, but though the dust was being raised in spurts all round him the fugitive passed through this fusillade unscathed, and being far more lightly clad than his pursuers effected a lucky and providential escape. The pace with which that bunnia retraced his wheel-marks was phenomenal. The news of this impudent piece of devilry enacted within such close proximity spread like wild-fire. In a very short space of time parties were hurrying out to the scene of the outlaws filled with a spirit for revenge. But a Pathan with two hours' start in the hills, especially when the actual direction of his exodus is unknown, takes some catching, and as usual the quest proved futile. This open defiance of the law under the very noses of the political authorities roused that body to a sense of the necessity of action—not necessarily immediate action. It was decided to hold a big drive through this particular portion of the country. The extent of the task may best be imagined by stating that the area covered 200 square miles, and contained mountains rising to 9,000 feet in height. This tract was divided into 18 portions, each portion being allotted to one patrol of 14 men. The writer was detailed to accompany one of these units. So far all was excellent and the plan adopted seemed to be the only one feasible under the circumstances. The student of Henderson's "Stonewall Jackson" will recollect a very powerfully written chapter on a certain type of "interference." The fiat was announced that this vast display of military force and political ingenuity would commence six days after the event which had caused its origin. A criticism of political policy, however, will not interest the reader. It was not openly admitted but secretly avowed that before a start had been effected this desperado and his equally villainous crew would be safely across the Afghan border. In the opinion of the writer, at any rate, it seemed more than probable that this warlike demonstration would merely resolve itself into an unprofitable and decidedly uncomfortable outing. Uncomfortable, for no transport being allowed, bedding, cooking pots and food had to be carried on our backs. The monotony of the picnic, however, might be relieved by the possibility of procuring a shapoo. Early one morning our cavalcade wended out from the precincts of a rest house, situated in a deep ravine. The objective was the top of a well-defined ridge, from which the gullies running down on either side could be thoroughly searched. I elected to do my own scouting, for reasons that were not to be mentioned. The remainder were instructed to follow at a reasonable distance behind, so as to be out of the way in case one of these sheep were sighted, and yet near enough to prevent a bullet being surreptitiously planted in my back. The route first lead through a maze of entangled nullahs, which served to demonstrate the practical hopelessness of our mission. The pace was naturally slow, for each successive dell had to be carefully examined with the field glasses before a fresh start could be effected. That persistent, though unwitting, habit of closing up was prominent. A miniature plateau of small extent had been reached, and a halt to scrutinize the vicinity had been made. Of a sudden a good ram bolted at a distance of less that 100 yards and was out of sight before the rifle could be seized. How I wished I could be rid of the clattering cavalcade that followed behind me, but sport on this occasion was the minor consideration, and its presence had, perforce, to be endured. The ridge was reached after a stiff climb, from which a large extent of country could be dominated. In this corner of our Empire, when wandering among the hills, the question of water is one of paramount importance. Holes exist only in certain localities, and the watercourses are for the most part perfectly dry. Thus the vicinity of the precious fluid may be the means of unfolding a very enlightening tale in connection with the whereabouts of a band of outlaws. Plain footprints need not be expected and hardly looked for, as the man with a price on his head does not take any unnecessary risks. To the uninitiated the track of a bush or a branch having been dragged over the sand will probably be passed by without comment, as it may be the traces of a weighted cloth that temporarily catches the eye of the novice. To the experienced hunter, however, these signs, especially if fresh, will cause him to take a glance at his weapon to assure himself that all is ready for instant use, and the eye will wander instinctively round the nearer ridges, for the glint of a rifle-barrel, or the outline of a swarthy visage might not unreasonably arrest the gaze. A spring is reached and a halt called for our first al fresco meal, look-out men having been carefully posted beforehand. The writer's open-air déjeûner is simple enough—tea and porridge, but the latter is satisfying, and a better substitute for meat than plain rice, and, moreover, to one who has been brought up on it, more appetizing. When the collation has been consumed a move is made into more open country where a siesta is enjoyed while the sentries scan with field-glasses the plain below for any signs of human life. When the sun has crept to the west our trudge is again resumed. On topping a spur a ewe and one lamb are espied some way down the mountain slope. Ten minutes are occupied in spying upon the movements of the pair. The rest of the herd is nowhere to be seen, and a stone hurled down the hill side sends the mother and her offspring, helter-skelter, to a place of safety. That night weary limbs are stretched and rested among some high grass and bushes in the sandy bed of a water-course. Is it a dream or is it a reality that in the dead of night brings the cords of consciousness back with a snap and in a twinkling sees the rifle in position? I listen intently for foot falls on the stones but the tinkle of the rivulet is not broken by any harsh discord, and the remaining hours of darkness pass by without further incident.

A horse-shoe shaped feature, an off-shoot of the range that runs continuously from north to south, the topmost cap of which towers high above all other neighbouring peaks, looms out massively to the southward. The cup enclosed by these walls of solid rock would form an excellent retreat for a hunted forman. It is therefore decided to follow the ridge round continuously. I elected to take the inner edge of the crest with a couple of men, the rest were ordered to adhere strictly to the outer slope so that both our flanks should be guarded. Inquisitiveness in a native is one of the most extraordinary traits in his complex character. About three-quarters of the ascent had been completed. On cautiously peering over a spur a flock of shapoo was descried grazing peacefully on a grassy slope about 400 yards distant, and separated by a deep gorge. The field glasses revealed one fine ram. The prospect of a good trophy and a meat diet seemed almost within reach. I calculated that in a quarter of an hour the last tail would have disappeared from view round a bulge in the hill-side whence an easy stalk should bring me within 50 yards. But alas! such was not to be the pleasing outcome. Of a sudden up goes the ram's head and he steadily looks in our direction. Then a dignified but rapid retreat is carried out by the entire family party. As the last beast skips round the corner, I prepare for a bolt to try and cut off the herd. But the spectacle that I see is warranted to rouse the anger of even the most phlegmatic nature. Thirteen khaki-clad figures are squatting on the inner side of the crest line endeavouring to elucidate the object at which I have been gazing so fixedly and intently for the last 10 minutes. Over the subsequent proceedings it is better to draw the proverbial veil.

MOTOR MEMS. FROM HOME.

London, Friday, 25th June 1909.

With the threatened increased cost of motoring due to the Budget proposals, it is interesting to note the many schemes that are advertised that seek to nullify the extra charges to be imposed on the pastime. Some suggest economy in lubricants, others state their particular motor carriage is in itself the true economy, omitting to say how present users of the particular make are going to effect a further reduction in their annual cost. As for tyres, they all have their good points, so each maker draws attention to their excellent qualities. But their rivals, the anti-rubber brigade, have also taken the Budget as the bugbear of which their specialities are the antidote. Spring wheels of various sorts, patent suspensions, and so on ad nauseam, are all claiming to be the panacea for Mr. Lloyd-George's imposts. The Scottish Automobile Club, with that decision of purpose that has always been the distinguishing feature of their policy in automobilism, boldly state they want none of it, and protest against any extra taxes or imposts whatever. In a long letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the club, through its secretary, Mr. Robert J. Smith, states that the proposed increases of the annual tax on motor-cars, and the proposed tax on petroleum spirit, will hinder the development of the automobile movement in Scotland. Also that in regard that it is proposed that the taxes levied on motor-cars and on motor fuel will be applied to road improvement, they (the club) submit that it is inequitable that the funds for this purpose should be drawn from one class of road user. They also point out that there are many classes of road vehicles which do more harm to the roads than the ordinary petrol-using motor-car, which are exempt from their share in the payment of this road tax. Neither steam tractors and wagons nor the steam and electrically-propelled pleasure vehicle are included in the petrol tax. The Scottish Automobile Club also suggest that the graduation of the horse-powers in the Budget statement, particularly in the higher ranges, should be closer, as under the scheme a very small difference in the larger powers may mean a very considerable difference in the amount of the annual tax.

But returning to the devices suggested for economy in motoring, the most novel suggestion comes from Mr. R. V. Wagner, who has invented a form of wheel that should certainly attract the commercial user of the motor vehicle. Mr. R. V. Wagner is a master mariner retired from the sea, and further demonstrates the song that "Jack's a handy man." He has designed a wheel that uses the elasticity of cane to provide the resilient qualities of the road wheel he has patented. The felloe has a large number of short canes bent to an angle of 60 degrees embedded in its outer surface, on which rides an outer metal tread or rubber and metal, if so preferred. In fact, the outer tyre is cushioned on canes, which take up the inequalities of the road. A set of wheels made after this design have been running for nearly two years on a Darracq car, and showed no wear at all. Those are the original design, and are somewhat clumsy compared with the present models, but have shown very clearly the practicability of the cheapest form of resilient wheel yet presented to the motor-using public. Perhaps the financially-distressed public service vehicles might do worse than look for some such device.

Cost of running depends largely on the weight a car may usually carry, the mileage it runs, and lastly, its horse-power. During the past year an owner of a 10-12 h.p. Wolseley-Siddeley car that ran 7,104 miles on the North Staffordshire roads spent £30 1s. on tyres, covers, and non-skids, and £20 8s. on petrol, lubricants, and sundries; of which petrol consumed £14 13s. His total annual cost was only £50 9s. and his approximate cost per mile equalled 1·7 pence. Now, this is as cheap and economical as can be expected, and though the tyre expenditure is rather heavy, there were no mechanical replacements whatever. But this is a feature of good modern motor-cars. There are seldom mechanical replacements, and this means true economy that is far beyond "Budget devices." Another instance of mechanical efficiency comes from a doctor who has a 10 h.p. Adams car. This little single-cylinder carriage has run 20,000 miles, and taking the gear-box down after this distance, he was glad to see that there had been no wear on the gear wheels whatever, and they were "as good as new."

Fortune has favoured the many motorists whose enthusiasm for the pastime has led them to make the reliability trials of the Scottish Automobile Club their annual holiday. In the 1,000 miles to be covered all the prettiest, grandest, and wildest scenery is to be explored. Sunny weather, also, was an added pleasure for the first day's journey from Glasgow to Aberdeen, a distance of over 181 miles. When the sixty-five cars faced the starter, there was no grumbling from anyone. All were glad to be in the balmy air. Glasgow was left behind with pleasure as the cars ran on the old Roman road to the Campsie Glen and over the Fintry hills. Doune Castle, built in 1350, was passed, with a distant view of Ben Lomond as its background. Crieff, with its mountain of Amubree, produced the first trouble for the motorists. This steep incline proved too much for several cars. They had to drop their passengers and make the ascent with their assistance from behind instead of carrying them up to the top of the mountain. All the cars, however, managed to get to Blairgowrie for lunch.

The timed hill climb over Cairn o' Mount was the piece de resistance of the day. Its two miles ascent of 1,800 feet caused many cars to lose marks. The fastest cars were: Class A, the Riley, with the Adams second (5mins. 44secs. slower); Class B, 12 h.p. Riley fastest, 12 h.p. Adler (5mins. 26 4-5secs. slower) second; 8 h.p. Rover third (plus 5mins. 48 3-5 secs.); Class C, 10-12 h.p. Humber fastest, 12 h.p. Star (plus 90 2-5secs. second, 14-16 h.p. Miesse (plus 50 4-5secs) third; Class D, 15 h.p. Star fastest, 15 h.p. Mass (plus 2 3-5secs.) second, 15 h.p. Straker-Squire (plus 4 3-5secs.) third; Class E, 16 h.p. Humber first, 20 h.p. Vauxhall (plus 13secs.) second, 30 h.p. Vinot (plus 30secs.) third; Class F, 24 h.p. Vauxhall fastest, 29-30 h.p. Austrian-Daimler (plus 1min. 41secs.) second, 40 h.p. Piccard-Pictet (plus 1min. 50secs.) third; Class H, 50 h.p. Ariel made the fastest time of the day over the two miles. In order to judge the capabilities of these cars up the hill, they were also timed at the mile-post, so as to give the comparative speeds over the mile with a standing start and the mile with a flying start.

Although a dull grey morning greeted the sixty-five competing cars for their seven o'clock start on their second day's journey, the sun burst through the clouds soon after ten o'clock. Consequently the 180½ miles of road traversed was very dusty early in the day. Troubles of various sorts pursued some of the cars. The Rapid remained behind for two and a half hours at Aberdeen (the starting point this morning) to repair its clutch; while F. Luther's 40 h.p. Austrian-Daimler retired at Tomintoul, owing to ignition trouble and a broken fan bracket. The seven hills and warm weather tried the smaller cars very severely, and the smaller Chenard-Walker reported a broken water-jacket. This was not to be wondered at, as a great number of the cars boiled up on the hills, so long and so steep were their ascents.

At Clash Hill the smaller cars were timed up the half mile, and fastest times were made by the Riley first, Darracq second (plus 20 2-5secs.), with the Adams third (plus 39 2-5secs.) in Class A; the 12 h.p. Riley was also fastest in Class B, with the Clyde (plus 21 3-5secs) second, and Adler (30 1-5 secs.) third. As was expected, the 10-12 h.p. Humber was fastest in Class C, with the Star a good second (plus 3secs. slower), and the Irish-built car, the Chambers, third (plus 17 2-5secs.).

The cars competing in the Scottish Motor Trials covered the last stage of their journey yesterday, when the route lay from Pitlochry through Kenmore, Callander, Fintry, Lennoxtowne, and Strathblane to Glasgow—a distance of 135 miles. This was the shortest section of the tour, and the vehicles which completed it had covered 1,007 miles during the week. The Fates were unkind to several of the cars. The 12-14 h.p. Argyll, which had made non-stop runs for five consecutive days, had mechanical trouble two miles past Bridge of Balgie, the S.P.A. damaged its differential at Callander, and the 16 h.p. Vinot lost a lot of time and marks through water in the petrol tank, and the Chenard-Walcker was in difficulties near Kilna. There was a timed hill-climb at Fintry, for all cars except those in Classes F., G., and H., which would have taken the hill too fast to negotiate successfully the turns in the road without danger to the vehicles and their occupants. Sixty-one cars were despatched from Pitlochry in the morning, and fifty-nine had passed through Callander, the luncheon halt by a quarter past three in the afternoon. Non-stops for five days have been issued as follow: 10-12 h.p. Humber, 12-14 h.p. Argyll, 14 h.p. Miesse, 15 h.p. Mass, 20 h.p. Cadillac, 15 h.p. Straker-Squire, 14-16 h.p. Argyll, 15 h.p. Star, 16 h.p. Singer, 20 h.p. Vauxhall, 16 h.p. Humber, 20 h.p. Lancia, 15 h.p. Rover, 20 h.p. Bell, 12 h.p. Talbot, 18 h.p. De Dion, 12-40 h.p. Sunbeam, 30 h.p. Adler, and 24 h.p. Albion.

Just now, when the price of petrol is being discussed so energetically in view of the recent increase in prices by the distillers of spirit, all economically-minded motorists will be interested in the performance of the Humbers on the last day of the Irish Reliability Trials. On that day, the quantity of fuel used by each car was officially measured, and the 12 h.p. Humber made the splendid average of 37 miles to the gallon and the 16 h.p. of the same make averaged 30 miles. To appreciate this performance to the full it may be recalled that the distance of the day's run was 180 miles, over the give and take roads from Killarney to Dublin. The two Humbers head the list of thirty-four cars in order of efficiency in ton-miles, the 16 h.p. being first with 51 ton-miles per gallon, and the 12 h.p. second with 47 ton-miles per gallon. The economy of these cars makes them particularly suitable for that much-discussed individual, the man of moderate means.

In order to continue the good work the Royal Automobile Club has done in the past as a society of encouragement, it proposes to hold a series of tests on Monday, 19th July, to investigate and endeavour to discover the most efficient headlight. For some years there have been many complaints from all users of the highways of the annoyance caused by the dazzling lamps used by motor-cars and motor-cycles. The committee of the club believe this blinding effect can be greatly minimised by the adoption of certain patterns of lamps. These, while giving sufficient illumination of the road in front of the vehicles, have their beams so grouped or controlled that no one meeting the rays is dazzled by them. The tests which the club propose giving the lamps submitted to them are of such a character that it is hoped all the necessary points to be considered in making a successful headlight lamp will be discovered. As a basis for this mark are to be awarded, each lamp tested for its absence of dazzling effect, range of the lamp, horizontal dispersion of beam, absence of back reflection, and simplicity of design and general construction. It is to be hoped that the result will be of use to the makers of lamps, as well as curing a complaint against the motorist from the general public.

And writing of economy motorists have also been presented with a fuel which, it is claimed, is 25 per cent. more powerful and 50 per cent. cheaper than petrol. It is named "Homoil," and used in conjunction with the Grunewald carburettor gives some astonishing results. Those who may have had fears as to the supply of petrol being cut off from this country at any time will be reassured on learning that "Homoil" is, as its name implies, home produced, is a by-product of gas, and that the supply is practically inexhaustible. The Grunewald carburettor is a simple mechanism that can be fitted to any type of internal combustion engine, and enables "Homoil" or any other standard motor spirit to be used with complete success. The new product and the carburettor have both passed the experimental stage and constitute a sound proposition, as is evidenced by an order for fitting two hundred taxi-cabs. The saving effected in a trial, with petrol at only 8½d. a gallon, was £2 13s. 0½d. on a hundred hours' running.

Some fast speeds by motor-cyclists were witnessed at Brooklands when the third race meeting of the British Motor Cycle Racing Club was held. All the events were over a distance of about eight miles, but there were also some time tests over the flying mile. In the latter, W. E. Cook, on an N. L. C., won the class for big machines, with a speed of 75·63 miles per hour, H. H. Bowen, on a Bat, being second with 70·94 m.p.h. In Class D. G. Lee Evans and W. H. Wells, both on Indian machines, did 63·83 m.p.h.; in Class C, A. G. Fenn, on a Triumph, proved successful, with 51·64 m.p.h.; while in the class for light-weights, G. L. Fletcher, on a Moto-Reve, did 40-45 m.p.h. The other events resulted as follow:—

Tourist Trophy Scratch Race (machines not exceeding 750 c.c.).—G. Lee Evans, Indian, 1; A. G. Fenn, Triumph, 2; W. H. Wells, Indian, 3. Won by ten yards; eighty yards separated second and third. Winner's speed, 59 miles per hour.

All-Comers' Scratch Race (450 to 1,000 c.c.).—W. E. Cook, N.L.G., 1; H. H. Bowen, Bat, 2; A. G. Fenn, Triumph, 3. Won by half a mile; 300 yards between second and third. Winner's speed, 59 miles per hour.

Afternoon Handicap (machines up to 500 c.c.).—A. G. Fenn, Triumph (scratch), 1; H. H. Bowen, Bat (21secs. start), 2; F. A. McNab, Triumph-Jap (33secs.), 3. An exciting contest. Won by a few yards; twenty yards between second and third.

Chukker.

During a discussion held at a meeting of a debating society the chairman had occasion to speak of the distance between two large buildings, referring to it as being "three miles as the flow cries." A brilliant young member of the society saw that this was his chance to shine. "You mean," said he, with deferential smile, "as the fly crows—or rather, he added hastily, "as the cry flows." Whereupon he tooke up his hat and rushed into the street. No one was rash enough to make a further attempt.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

As every day passes it becomes more apparent that the Prince of Wales' memorable advice "Wake up England!" ought to be taken to heart by the nation in the matter of aerial navigation. Happily there are not wanting signs that the country is realising the danger that it is incurring by its backwardness in regard to this important science. The recent marvellous performance of Count Zeppelin in his rigid dirigible balloon Zeppelin II. has amazed the world. The balloon with the inventor and a crew of eight men on board succeeded in remaining in the air for thirty-nine hours. During that time it traversed a distance variously estimated, but apparently well over 700 miles. It has thus more than doubled the best previous performance of a vessel of its own pattern, and has further established its superiority over other types of dirigible airships. From the military side Count Zeppelin's voyage is of the highest importance. It may still turn out that the dirigible is too costly, too dangerous, and too uncertain for passengers; but expense and danger do not count in war, and uncertainty, is one of its elements. There is no doubt that a machine which can carry a number of men with provisions and liquid fuel for hundreds of miles, and hover aloft for a couple of days, must claim the closest attention of all the War Offices and the Admiralties. That steerable balloons will be immensely valuable for scouting and observation purpose can be taken for granted. They will be the eyes and ears of a fleet or an army.

The German newspapers are quick to point out the vast possibilities which are opened out by Count Zeppelin's noteworthy feat. The Leipzig Neueste Nachrichen, for instance says:—"Starting from Metz or Cologne the Zeppelin II could sail to Portsmouth, take observations of the English maritime armaments there, then could sail to London, and afterwards undertake a cruise of investigation along the British coast, and have a look at Dover before returning to Cologne with complete reports, and, of course, with photographs which we may add, would easily have been developed before her return. We have now witnessed the proof that Zeppelin II can achieve all these things. Count Zeppelin has achieved a feat which will spread a panic in England and France, and which will lend life and colour to those tales of invasion which have been circulated in Great Britain. The wonderful weapon which our enemies have imagined has now become an actual fact." Before long airships will be crossing the Atlantic, in fact Mr. Wilbur Wright goes so far as to predict that this will be accomplished before another year has passed.

We are glad to note that an appeal, which the London Morning Post has made to the public for £20,000 with which to purchase and place at the disposal of the nation an airship of the dirigible balloon type has received substantial support. Earl Roberts, Viscount Milner, Lord Charles Beresford, and others have consented to act as an Advisory Committee to assist, in consultation with the War Office, in purchasing the best of the several kinds of airship of this type which are at present doing practical work on the Continent. Further proof of the general awakening of the British people to the national danger involved in any further delay is approved by the announcement that the Parliamentary Aerial Defence Committee has secured an option for the purchase by the nation of a modern airship of approved type, the largest and most powerful of its kind that has yet been constructed. This ship, which is now approaching completion in Paris, will be of 227,500 cubic feet capacity, fitted with two propellers and driven by two motors, each of about 220-h. p. Each propeller can be driven by either engine, or both propellers by one engine, with devices for reducing and reversing gear. The balloon will carry twenty-five passengers, and the speed will be between thirty-five and forty miles per hour. It will be able to ascend over 6,000 feet and is designed to carry supplies and petrol for nearly 700 miles. The ship will shortly make an attempt to fly from Paris to London, and should it succeed will be on exhibition in England.

The formation of a Women's Aerial League of Great Britain is another sign of the awakening interest of the country in the subject of aviation. Lady O'Hagan, who has been elected the first president, in explaining the objects of the League says:—"We are going to approach the women of Britain to help us to promote the interests of our public in aerial navigation. We are commencing work at once in the hope that we may play some part in that education of the public which is so necessary on this question. We shall insist on opportunities being given for the proper study of aeronautics. We want aeronautics taught in our secondary and technical schools, and we hope to find some means of enlisting the engineers and mechanics of the country, so that we can stimulate the interest of the workshops in this subject."

This is all as it should be, particularly in view of the great activity which is being shown in aviation in foreign countries. It is calculated that Germany will, by the end of the present year, possess no fewer than ten dirigible balloons, including types which are the result of all the most recent discoveries. France possesses dirigibles of three different types, and a number of others, embodying the latest improvements are coming into being this summer. In Austria the Budget Committee of the House of Peers has asked for £22,000 immediately, and an equal sum to be expended next year on the purchase and maintenance of airships. In Italy the Government is asking for funds to build two more dirigible balloons, which are considered necessary for coast defence, and are actually spending £16,000 on the construction of a large shed for airships. In Germany last year the huge sum of nearly £400,000 was raised for the new science. What did England do? The sum of £1,980 was spent on dirigibles, and £5,270 was considered a sufficient total for every sort of official experiment in flight! Surely we are entitled to ask, "How much longer will the nation permit the Government to starve the War Office in a matter of such vital importance?"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Schooling has been the order of the day of late and both on Saturday and Tuesday there was a perfect feast of it to the edification of a fairly large concourse of spectators both on hacks and seated in comfort on the Grand Stand.

Alford's broken collarbone has mended if not completely anyhow sufficiently for that stalwart to be up and doing and he was busy making them jump anyhow or somehow both on Saturday and on Tuesday.

The ever vigilant Acting Secretary noticed on Saturday that the chief fault of most of the performers was that they were getting too close under them and after consulting with the experts as to how this was best to be avoided he hit upon the happy expedient of painting the lower bar of the hurdles white the whole way across, having very much the effect of a white guard rail. The result has been all that could be desired and on Tuesday whatever else they were doing they certainly were for the most part standing well away.

Mercedes was out on both days. On Saturday Mr. Evers took her alone about three-quarter pace and she showed considerable improvement over her former efforts, but on Tuesday when she went over four accompanied by Highland Fling (T. Southall) and Electric Light (Mr. Wallace Jones) she was chancing them a good deal, and it is still a toss up whether she wins in a canter or falls at the race at the first meeting next week.

Alford confined himself on Saturday to a comfortable ride on Betrayer accompanied by the great jumping horse Mahomet who was only landed three weeks ago. They went all the way round Betrayer only cantering and Mahomet, as was to be expected from one so recently landed, blundered very badly at the third hurdle but treated the others with considerably more respect. On Tuesday Alford was as usual busy. He first rode Picaninny in company with Moira (Thomas) and Loch Lily (Mr. Evers). They went over the first two only and then galloped round the rest of the course on the flat. Picaninny landed very badly over the first and almost fell but took the second better. The other two jumped in good style both pulling very hard and appearing very fit and well. He was then up again on Bridge Knight determined to make him jump somehow and in company with Narwanah (W. Bloss) they went all the way round over five flights. He got over them all and that is all one can say, as the big horse stopped and bucked rather than jumped. Mulison (Thomas) led Cyril in a school but the latter got rid of his jockey and the former went on, fencing well but getting very tired at the finish. Cyril (Native Boy) went again later with Eureka Girl (Thomas) at a fair pace round the course both jumping in fair form. Killarney (Mr. Evers) and Minstrel Boy (Mr. Barrow) went a very good school over four flights on Tuesday.

Wake Up was another one who was out on both days ridden by Mr. Levetus on each occasion. She went over three in company with Peter (Mr. Bletsoe) the first time and went over the fourth by herself. On Tuesday she went over a couple and was taken on round the course on the flat at three-quarter pace. Her second school showed some improvement on the first but she went crookedly both times. Peter jumped well the other solitary schools on Saturday were Queen of Hearts (Mr. Corbett) Queen of Gems (T. Southall) Beaumaris (Mr. Bletsoe) and on Tuesday Lord Chester (Mr. Levetus). All these jumped well, Queen of Gems specially so and if she can only stay as is probable she is almost certain of a place on Saturday next week. Blix and Emerald went at a good working pace together the whole course on Tuesday morning. We regret to see that Mr. Tanner, owner of the latter, is still incapacitated from riding as a result of the accident to his knee when Fingall fell with him the other day but we hope that he will be fit to be in the saddle again at the first meeting. The only other school to record is Toism (Mr. Evers) and Myolene (Mr. Corbett) who went over the four horse hurdles on Tuesday performing well.

There were a couple of schools again on Wednesday morning. Leading Lady (Mr. Dudley) went very slowly over four flights fencing well, and then Marconi (Mr. Glen) and Lionel (Native) went fast over four, Lionel carrying on in the flat. The latter pony moved far better than he has as yet and seems to be coming on fast.

Our Monsoon Jockeys are beginning to put in appearance once more, among the latest arrivals being R. Fraser, who has been doing riding work in Colombo, R. Elliot and S. Gee, Barrett, Murdison and Butters we understand are expected here next week.

Captain Hughes is very busy getting everything ship shape for the first meeting and it looks as if we are going to get monsoon meetings under more pleasant auspices than we have ever known. Not only have the interior arrangements and comforts to both G. R's and Jockeys been much improved and such little luxuries as shower baths for both men and horses put up, but also the whole of the compound has been put in order. Steam rollers and heavy oxen rollers have been at work during the last day or two making "the rough places smooth" and rows of flowers in pots are considerably to the attractiveness of the enclosure. We have at last got a man in charge of affairs who really loves racing for racing's sake, likes to see it carried on under the most pleasant surroundings possible and who very rightly holds that "it is the little things that make all the difference" and also that the large income of the Turf Club is made to be spent on racing and not to be hoarded in banks. Our only regret is that his stay among us is but temporary and hope that when he is gone the virtues of his policy may be appreciated and carried on by others.

The entries for the final Tollygunge Club meeting on Saturday are extremely good and we are particularly pleased to note that there are no less than 11 in the "Cavalry Cup" which is practically a C. L. H. Recruits' Race. The handicaps are published too late for comment in this paper.

The Hymettus shipment has now been up nearly three weeks and some of the animals are beginning to get into work. Among the more interesting are a pony called Precede by Predominant which has been imported by Mr. R. Powell and of which he has great hopes. Mr. Griffiths' has The Fog, a useful little horse who has won several sprint races at unregistered meetings in Australia and looks as if he would be able to stay and jump. Parwan, who met with fair success in hurdle races in Australia but who is eligible as a paperchaser as he has not won more than £40 to £50, and The Clipper, who is a first class 6 furlong horse who has won fair races in Australia, have already been put into training to run either at the end of the Monsoons or next cold weather. The Clipper has won over £100. Mr. Griffiths has also some other good ponies including one by Priam. Messrs. Parker and Kelly have got a nice little horse called Dick and one or two other useful ones for which they are asking moderate prices, and they present all the fascinations of the possibility of turning out something really good with very little risk attached as they are always saleable as hacks at the figures asked. Messrs. Coonan and Caffrey and Mr. Allardice have both got some nice ponies, one or two likely paperchasers and show jumping ponies. A horse that has created a good deal of interest is a big bright bay Mohamet who has already done a school here and they think he will be very successful in jump races though in Australia he only appeared in the show ring. He looks useful but a bit big for this country.

The totalisator continues to be the bête noir of the English bookmaker. We see that the Bookmakers' Association are taking counsel's opinion as to the legality of the totalisator system introduced at Newmarket, and have also asked the Turf authorities to receive a deputation on the subject.

The system was again introduced in the cheap rings at the Newmarket July meeting, but was promptly stopped by the inspector of the police on the Heath.

Mr. A. Tyler, the Secretary of the Bookmakers' Association, states that he had good ground for believing that this system would not be tolerated on any of the English racecourses in the future. Mr. Tyler expressed the opinion that the use of the totalisator system would be against the interests, not only of frequenters and supporters of our race meetings, but also against the interests of the promoters of such meetings, whilst he was inclined to think the system was quite illegal, on the ground that it came within the Lottery Acts, inasmuch as an investor in it could have no knowledge of the ultimate result of his investment at the time he made it, and that a 10 per cent. reduction in the form of commission taken by private individuals for their own benefit would be such a drain upon the resources of those investing that ultimately it would be bound to effect in a marked degree the attendance at all meetings.

We don't find this condition of affairs obtaining at Indian race meetings!

The last big boxing match of the season provided rather a stormy ending. This was when Sam McVea met and defeated Jim Barry on the eve of the Grand Prix at the Cirque de Paris. Barry who seemed to be out of training—or, at any rate, not nearly hard enough for a genuine bout—discovered about half-way through that he had no chance against the burly negro, to whom he was conceding 13lb., and he either lost his temper or set himself to get disqualified so as to avoid being knocked out or beaten on points.

Whatever his motive, the fact remains that in the fifteenth round he not only struck foul blows, but tried to butt his opponent, and the referee, Mr. H. D. McIntosh, very properly disqualified the white to the great dissatisfaction of a section of the public. Mr. McIntosh even had footstools thrown at him by excited "amateurs de la boxe," and as he had been applauded frequently during the contest, he is now in a position to ruminate on the fickleness of the public.

The fifteenth annual competition for the United States open golf championship ended in a victory for George Sargent, a native of Surrey, and a former assistant to Harry Vardon at Ganton. He had an aggregate of 290 strokes for seventy-two holes, a splendid performance for a course so testing as that of the Englewood Club, New Jersey. Sargent left England about three years ago, and was until recently professional to the Ottawa Club. He has just been appointed to the Hyde Monor Club, Vermont.

Tom Macnamara, who is professional to the Wollaston Club, Boston, was second, with 294. Alexander Smith, of the Wyhagyl Country Club, New York, finished third, with 295, and Willie Anderson of the Country Club, St. Louis, fourth, with 299. Smith, who hails from Carnoustie, won in 1906, while Anderson, who is a native of North Berwick, was champion in 1901, 1903, 1904 and 1905.

Tom Vardon, the well-known Sandwich player, unaccustomed to the great heat, never showed his true form. He started with rounds of 80 and 82, and was completely out of the running on the second day.

The following letter by Mr. A. G. Steel appeared in a recent issue of the Times:—"I know something of captaincy of a cricket team, as I have been captain of my school (Marlborough), captain of my University team (Cambridge), captain of Gentlemen vs. Players, and captain of England vs. Australia. These are my credentials. Well, I cannot understand the present-day captains in this respect—they will not change their bowlers quick enough. To-day they often use a bowler for 40 or 50 runs with no wicket without a change, and sometimes two bowlers at the same time with the same result. This is, as a rule, bad captaincy. Again, when things are in a knot with the bowling side, it seems strange that the captain does not think it advisable to change ends for a bowler who has not been successful at the end he began at. The last Test match at Lord's was an instance of this. Again, when the best bowlers have been unsuccessful, why not try the worst for a couple of overs—as I often used to do—sometimes with success? It is always, worth a trial.

"As for batting, I am convinced that a straight bat is still the best, in spite of the pull strokes. Jumping in front before the ball reaches the bat is and must be radically wrong. The once best bat on the present Australian side has spoilt his play by continually playing with a cross bat to a straight ball. Grace never did this, and though I was never in the same class with him, I think I never did it. Schoolboys, verb. sap."

In the third Test match at Leeds which was not concluded when the mail left on the 2nd instant Jessop was seriously injured and had to be taken away in an ambulance. In returning a ball he badly strained the muscles at the bottom of the spine, and his condition was so serious that he was scarcely able to move. The injury is apparently similar to that sustained by Trumper in the First Test at Nottingham in 1905.

Appended are the results of the important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

The Players beat the Gentlemen at Lords by 200 runs.

Warwickshire beat Sussex by two wickets.

The Australians beat Gloucestershire by an innings and five runs.

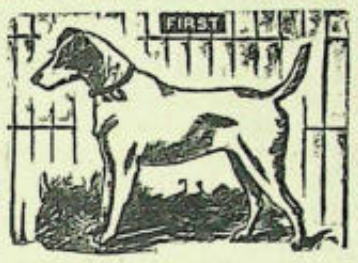
Worcester beat Somerset at Bath by ten runs.

Hampshire beat Derby at Southampton by 168 runs. Surrey beat Middlesex at Lords by 74 runs.

The matches between Notts and Yorks, Surrey and Australians, Middlesex and Lancs, Kent and Sussex and Warwickshire and Leicestershire were drawn.

Reuter wires news of a tragic accident which occurred during a cycle race in Berlin on Monday and which was attended with loss of life and severe injuries. A motor, which was pacing the racers, exploded, and was hurled into a crowded stand, scattering a rain of fire. A score of summer dresses were set ablaze. Many of the spectators, in a state of panic, jumped on to the track, and were run over by competitors, most of whom were thrown from the machines and hurt. Four persons were burned to death on the spot, and 32 injured, mostly by burns. Two of these have subsequently expired.

The Bangalore Polo Tournament ended in a win for the Mysore Gymkhana who beat the 20th Deccan Horse by 3 goals to 1 in the final on the 14th instant.



At the Central Assault-at-Arms at Bangalore on the 15th instant Sergeant F. Norman, of the 14th King's Hussars, fell while tent pegging, sustaining a fracture of the skull. He was conveyed to the Station Hospital but died without recovering consciousness. Efforts were made to operate but the injury was too deep seated.

Richard Arnst and William Webb met for the second time for the Sculling Championship of the World and stakes of £1,000 on the 22nd ultimo. The race was rowed on the Wanganui river in fine weather, large crowds of people lining the river banks at every point of vantage. Both men were fit to row for a kingdom, and though Arnst had defeated Webb for the title in December, the form of the ex-champion had improved so much that his supporters had great confidence in his powers to regain the title. The betting was 7 to 4 on Arnst.

The water was as smooth as a mill-pond, and there was a good tide with the scullers. Webb won the toss and chose the inside position. The men got awao at the first attempt to a fine start, with Webb slightly ahead. A desperate race for the first mile ensued, with the boats practically level, though the nose of Webb's boat was in front for over half a mile. They

DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA.
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.
These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.
It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,
"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED),
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.
SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.
SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.
SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

were accompanied by hundreds of horsemen on the banks, the sight being altogether remarkable. Arnst gradually drew away, but so grimly did the ex-champion stick to him that at the mile, completed in 5 minutes 15 seconds, the champion led by only half a length.

The physical strain on the men must have been intense, for their boats seemed to shoot through the water. It told heavily on the lighter man, as Arnst, rowing along, powerful stroke, now began to draw away. At the two miles he had a lead of several lengths, the time being 10 minutes 51½ seconds.

Going along with seeming ease, the champion soon had a gap of six lengths between the boats. It was now recognised on all sides that though Webb was sculling with characteristic pluck, the champion had the race in hand.

However, encouraged by shouts from his supporters on the steamers and the banks of the river, Webb spurted gallantly and desperately, but it was a forlorn struggle, as while he reduced the gap, Arnst finished victorious by five lengths. The 3¼ miles full course was done in 18 minutes 15 seconds.

The final game in the Rampur Cup Football Tournament was played at Naini Tal on the 13th instant when the Band of the 1st Highland Light Infantry met and defeated the Royal Dragoons by a goal to nil.

The Calcutta Light Horse held a very successful Gymkhana on the Ballygunge Maidan last Saturday. An excellent programme was put through, entries were good, the arrangements could not have been better and altogether a most enjoyable afternoon was spent both by the competitors and the large gathering of spectators. Appended are the results :—

Cigar and Umbrella Race.—Combined pairs. Gentleman to ride to lady carrying cigar, matches and rolled umbrella. He dismounts and hand matches and umbrella to lady who lights his cigar and then hands him the umbrella open. Gentleman mounts and rides back to winning post. Cigar must be lit and umbrella open when passing the winning post. Competitors provide their own umbrellas. Won by Miss Curtis-Haywood and Mr. F. P. Walker.

Riding and Jumping Competition.—Individual. Ladies or Gentlemen.—Pace not to exceed a fair hunting gallop. Points given for hands, seat, style and pace. Two runs over 3 jumps. More than one refusal in one run to disqualify. Won by Miss Forsyth and Mr. Stokes. No fewer than eighteen competed and competition was keen and close, Miss Forsyth, who rode Karoli in excellent style, eventually being declared winner. Mr. Stokes on St. Odille won the prize in the men's section.

Tournament Stakes.—Combined pairs. The gentleman to take a peg with a lance, and the lady to break a chatty on a pole with a stick. Two runs. Points for pace. Won by Sergeant E. A. Smith and Miss Norman.

Bucket and Ball Race.—Combined pairs. The gentleman carrying a polo ball to ride down the course, drop the ball into a bucket, catch a second ball thrown by his partner, and drop it into a second bucket. Two runs. Points for pace. Won by Mr. R. A. C. Pugh and Miss D. Norman.

The Pice Scramble Combined Pairs.—Gentlemen carrying a chatty filled with bran ride over two hurdles to a flag, dismount, hand over horse to syce and run to lady. Lady will find a coin hidden in bran, hand it to her partner and they will both run 30 yards with it to winning post. Won by Miss Edwards and Mr. Radmore.

V. C. Rescue.—Each competitor will mount bare backed and ride to his comrade, take him up on his horse and ride to the finish. Won by Messrs. A. H. Harvey and H. K. Pierson.

The Gymkhana Hockey Tournament at Naini Tal brought together the Diocesan Boys' School and St. Joseph's College in the final on the 15th instant. It was a fast and interesting game throughout, the Diocesan Boys' School winning by a goal to nil.

A correspondent writes the following interesting letter to our Allahabad contemporary :—"Sir,—It may interest your sporting readers to learn that I to-day had brought to me two Chinkara which had been captured whilst fighting, by a zemindar named Ramoo, of the village of Manehti, Rewari tehsil, district Gurgaon. Seeing that the animals were heedless to everything else but the combat they were having, he stole up at a time when their horns were locked, and laid hands, on one of each of their legs, and although they struggled to get away, they did not succeed in doing so. His brother who was not far off, soon came to his assistance, and between the two they carried the animals in triumph to my bungalow. Strange to say neither of the animals were in any way injured and their captor escaped without a scratch from their horns, which measured nine and ten inches respectively. Although these animals are very destructive to young crops, the zemindar who caught them gladly let them loose, and away they bounded over a hedge and were soon out of sight, perhaps to finish their fight some other day."

As the grouse season at home draws near the usual preparations are being made for the annual flight of those sportsmen whom time and money permit to indulge in this delightful sport in the heathered hills of Scotland. It is thought that some who have been accustomed to lease a moor every year will now have to forego so expensive a holiday and practise stricter economy under the burdens imposed on capitalists by Mr. Lloyd-George's Budget. It is likely, however, that the greater number of those held back from sport on the moors by the Budget will be weary members of Parliament, to whom the new proposals mean so much time, labour, and discussion. Prospects of sport appear to be quite satisfactory now, although at one time it was thought that some havoc had been wrought by the severe weather. It is said that there was a record this year of a grouse's nest in a red-land field which was being worked for turnips, though there were patches of heather and gorse near at hand. The bird was disturbed off her nest of nine eggs by the harrow which was being used on the land. She flew away, but soon returned again, and afterwards sat without fear of the men who were working around her. It is said that nine eggs was a better average than personal observation has shown to be the case this season. The coveys seem to be rather small in number ; six and one will be near the mark, but this will amply provide for excellent sport if they keep well and healthy till the fateful Twelfth arrives. Calcutta and other Indian sportsmen may feel envious of those who will so soon have the enjoyment of shooting in the invigorating air of the Scotch moors. But they may console themselves with the reflection that though the bracing atmosphere is unobtainable here, yet they will soon have the opportunity of better sport amongst the snipe that abound here than could ever be got in Scotland and with, moreover, far less expense.

In the latest of a series of interesting studies in the Zoological Gardens, which have been appearing in the Times, there is an excellent account of the character of the Indian sloth bear known as the aswal, amongst others. Its habit of taking food by suction is said to make it one of the most entertaining creatures in the Zoo. "If a piece of biscuit be placed some three inches outside the bars of the cage this bear puts its snout as near to the morsel as it can reach ; there is a long whistling in-drawing of breath, and the biscuit—whee-ee-ep !—disappears into the animal's mouth as suddenly as if it had been jerked in by a piece of elastic. As a renovator of draperies on the vacuum principle a properly educated sloth bear would be invaluable. But, with all its air of ragged good-humour and its agreeable eccentricities it is a dangerous animal, with its long muscular forelegs and huge hooked claws. The tiger, it is said, learns to give it a wide berth in the jungles ; and in captivity an aswal has proved itself the master of the polar bear itself." In these articles the fallacy of more than one popular belief in regard to some of the best known animals has been shown. There must be many people who from their childhood's days have thought that bears killed their victims by hugging them. This idea is quite wrong. "All bears seemingly follow the same fighting tactics, attacking first by striking with their paws and then, on coming to close quarters, endeavouring to clutch the adversary with their claws and draw it within reach of their jaws. This act of pulling an enemy, dog or man, close up to the chest to bring the teeth into play might easily be mistaken for hugging and doubtless gives rise to the belief." The acuteness of the bear and its dexterity with its claws are will illustrated by one which recognising that if it ate honeycomb standing much would be lost, lies on its back holding the food above in its claws and so converts its own body into a sort of basket or saucer. It thus catches the drippings on its chest and stomach and licks them off at leisure.

The Elphinstone Bioscope Company favoured us with an invitation to a private exhibition, at the Theatre Royal on Tuesday night, of the remarkable film representing the recent Hague-Langford fight for the Heavy-weight Championship of England. This series of pictures has been secured by the Company for reproduction in India at no little expense and it really is a magnificent film. The National Sporting Club was specially fitted up with a new installation of arc lamps by Messrs. Gaumont on the occasion, and the exposures taken at 11 o'clock at night have produced as excellent pictures of this exciting contest as if the photos had been taken in brilliant sunshine. Preliminary views show the contestants in training and the incidents of the four rounds which the battle lasted are clearly and distinctly portrayed.

The Madras Boat Club hot weather Regatta is fixed for the 28th August, and the following programme has been framed :—

1. Four-oar, Half-mile.—Madras vs. Royal Connaught Boat Club, Poona, and visiting crews.
2. Challenge Fours, Half-mile.—Crews made up by the Committee from members entries received.
3. Novices Fours, Half-mile.—Fixed seats. For members who have never raced on slides.
4. Pair-oar, Half-mile.—Clinker boats, Cox-wainless, Visiting Crews will also be allowed to compete.
5. Junior Pair-oar, Half-mile.—Fixed seats, with Cox, Clinker boats. Open to members who have never won a race with oars.
6. Sculling Race, Half-mile.—In best boats. Visitors may also enter.
7. Junior Sculls, Half-Mile.—Sliding seats. In whiffs for members who have never won a sculling race.

Tub Race, Quarter-mile.—Pair sculls. Prize to Lady Cox.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 2nd July 1909.

Last Saturday morning in brilliant sunshine, South Kensington was filled with more life and Colour than usual when Their Majesties came in State to open the new buildings of the Victoria and Albert Museum. The magnificent structure, which has cost nearly a million sterling, forms an extension of the old South Kensington Museum, which was opened by Queen Victoria in June 1857. Forty-two years afterwards her late Majesty laid the foundation-stone of this addition, which is now architecturally complete, and has been erected from the designs of Sir Aston Webb, R.A. Last year, it will be recalled, a committee was appointed to prepare a scheme of re-arrangement which would provide the greatest facilities for study by those primarily interested in the collections, craftsmen, designers, and manufacturers ; and secondarily, to those interested in art without regard to its relation to industrial production, artists and students of art, and of history, manners, and customs. This re-arrangement and classification has practically been carried out under the direction of Mr. Cecil H. Smith and other well-known experts, and, as it now stands, it may be claimed that the Victoria and Albert Museum is a worthy exposition of the applied art of the Empire, and one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world.

In the general architectural scheme a free Renaissance treatment has been adopted as the one that best admits of the introduction of the very large amount of window space required in such a building.

Sculptured decoration is a strong feature of the new museum. The front includes statues of 32 famous British artists and craftsmen, while a figure of Fame crowns the top of the lantern.

Here we have, then, a splendid storehouse of the nation's arts and crafts, which certainly deserves all the praise which the King bestowed upon it. Although it has been long in reaching completion—fifty-eight years having passed since the surplus proceeds of the Great Exhibition were devoted to the purchase of land for its site—the finished product

In a few days London is to have its Naval pageant. After the Indian and Colonial Editors have had their show on the deep blue, the British public as represented by the inhabitants of London, is to have its turn. By the way these much fêted Editors are evidently regarded by the Ha'penny papers as not far removed from cave dwellers and aborigines, judging by the comments which garnish their reports of the sight seeing the poor surfeited ones are enduring with such praiseworthy fortitude. When speculation as to what such good people as Messrs. Stanley Read, Chesney and Lawson, think of a gun factory takes the form of solicitude lest the revelation should be too great a shock to their untutored minds, one expects to find bananas and cocoanuts, suggested as a corrective! It provokes to mirth when one finds a body of cultured gentlemen, many of them public school or 'Varsity men, regarded much as one might view a troop of Andamanese, just because they write leaders under punkahs or correct proofs amid the blue gums!

But to return to our pageant. Between the 17th and 24th of this month the Home and Atlantic fleets will be on view; something like a hundred and fifty vessels will stretch for miles alone the mouth of the Thames and the fleet will include the Dreadnought, Bellerophon, Superb, Temeraire, Indomitable Inflexible and Invincible—all vessels of the Dreadnought type. In addition a share of the pageant will be brought to our doors, so to speak, as many torpedo boats, destroyers, cruisers and submarines are to be stationed at intervals between Gravesend and the House of Parliament. But the pessimistic Lord Ellenborough sounds a note of alarm: really it seems terribly dangerous to do anything now-a-days. His idea is that when our Fleet is neatly moored all up the Thames some enemy may come, blow up the outside ships, block up the entrance to the river and so bottle up the rest. Seeing, however, that the Maily Fist has just delivered his hundred and thirty-eighth speech on the blessings of peace, and that the Turkish Navy is being sold off, we need not be unduly perturbed.

Will the ostrich ever become a popular fowl in this island? I see Mr. Carl Hagenbech, who desires to be taken seriously, says that, provided he has the space and knows how to keep birds there is no reason why anyone should not start an ostrich farm in England and do well. The bird, has an undependable temper and takes up a lot of room, but, so far as we know, it makes less noise than the ordinary domestic fowl and is more profitable.

Of course the suggestion has provided the funny man with a bright idea, and he thinks it is just on the cards that the feathered biped might be taught to play polo. England does not seem to be very successful in its efforts to play the game on ponies, and possibly she might bring back the ashes from America if she employed the ostrich as a mount.

There is apparently in England just now an American enthusiast named Phelps who has made it his mission in life to free India from our hated yoke. So far he seems to be having an uncomfortable time of it, for not only has the proprietor of his hotel quietly but firmly requested him to get out, but owing to his fear of assassination at the hands of the British Government he has felt himself constrained to order himself an aluminium shirt of mail which is proof against daggers and revolvers.

The Travel and Sports Exhibition, which opens next Monday, promises well. Many famous big-game hunters have sent, or are sending, interesting and priceless mementoes of their prowess.

There will be trophies of the chase from every part of the world, including over 1,000 head of big game of form unknown to stay-at-homes, while there will be countless other objects of curiosity sent in by globe-trotters from everywhere, or loaned by those who make collecting their hobby and passion. Methods of travel in many lands will also provide a fascinating study, and a pleasing attraction will be provided by the performances of famous folk dancers from Denmark. Another feature of the exhibition will be a collection, got together by the Editor of the Sporting Life, of various sporting implements, etc., pertaining to various branches of sport, many of them of great value and historical interest. India, I hear, is to be particularly well represented.

Old Paulines in India have, I know, been keenly interested in their old school lately, they may be further interested to hear that Lord Curzon, in his capacity as Chancellor of Oxford University, presides at the ceremonies attendant on the celebration of its 400th anniversary this month. St. Pauls', founded in 1509, is the fifth oldest public school in England and is going as strong as ever. The chief item on the programme will be the opening of the new laboratories built at a cost of about £10,000, on the site of the old fives courts, near the school hall. Afterwards there will be a conversazione at the school and a performance of Milton's "Comus."

There is also to be a cricket week, the opening of the new swimming bath, a masque for Old Paulines and their friends, and a grand entertainment given by the Mercers' Company. Dean Colet, who founded the school "in honour of Christ Jesu in puericia and of his blessyd Mother Mary" for "ciij boys of all nacions and centres indifferently to be taught fre in the same in good literature both Laten and Greke" will look down in bronze from the centre of the garden in front of the school. This group, with its elaborate canopy, is really a very fine piece of statuary.

In the House of Lords last Monday night we had an echo of the famous Viceregal resignation incident when Lord Curzon made his trenchant indictment of our Military policy in India. Among other things he said:—

"You are going to concentrate in the hands of one man in India not merely the executive control of the Army, but also its patronage, its organisation, its equipment, its inspection, preparation for war, and all the business of finance and administration which is ordinarily discharged by the War Office. There is no one in history except a Napoleon who could bear such a weight."

What Lord Curzon objected to was what he called the immense amount of power, responsibility, and work concentrated in the post of Commander-in-Chief in India. This is now occupied by Lord Kitchener.

"The Commander-in-Chief," said Lord Curzon, "is a Cabinet Minister in India, a member whose duty it is to attend the Executive Council of the Viceroy and the Legislative Council, and he has to deal with the Budget.

"You cannot always hope to turn out men of the Napoleonic type. The system is opposed to all the modern principles with regard to armies.

"The only thing I am absolutely certain about," said the ex-Viceroy of India, bringing down his fist in fervid emphasis of his words, "is that this present system cannot last."

Lord Morley, Secretary of State for India, rose and made light of the fears of Lord Curzon, argued for the continuance of the system, and paid a warm tribute of praise to the wisdom and superb military ability of Lord Kitchener.

Lord Roberts questioned whether any man could carry out with satisfaction to himself and the Government the enormous burden now thrown on the Commander-in Chief.

"The first duty of the Commander-in-Chief is to make himself acquainted with the army for which he is responsible.

"It is impossible for him to travel about the country in pursuit of his military duties and at the same time discharge his duties as a member of the Council."

Then came a striking quotation of the words of Lord Kitchener from the lips of Viscount Midleton, an ex-Secretary for India. "It is fatal to the efficiency of Government in peace and in war; such a system must break down," he quoted.

The large number of playgoers and among them many home-visiting Anglo-Indians who have enjoyed many happy evenings at the Kingsway, while it was under Miss Lena Ashwell's management, will hear with deep regret that her tenancy has now come to an end, and that the talented lady herself has joined the Frohman legion. Her productions were always distinguished by brilliant stage-management and clever, intelligent acting. She collected round her a company which played together with a unanimity and ensemble which might well serve as a pattern, and which has doubtless made its mark on the theatre of to-day. If not always successful with her plays, Miss Lena Ashwell may at any rate claim to have discovered new dramatists in the authors of "Diana of Dobson's," "Irene Wycherly" and "The Sway-boat." Miss Ashwell will probably next be seen at the Hicks Theatre, where Mr. Frohman is inaugurating the new Yankee policy of producing a series of "strong human plays."

It would be adding insult to injury to criticise the "celebrated Grecian dancer" Nerigne, who evidently hails from Suburbia. Whoever has advised this latest devotee of the semi-nude contortionist school that her efforts are ripe for public production has proved a sad misleader. The exhibition at the Aldwych would be screamingly funny if it were not too sad for words to behold this waste of money, time, and good intentions. The evening began with a very vulgar little piece entitled "Physical Culture," over which we will draw the veil; it proceeded with three love poems of Longfellow and Tennyson, if you please, recited with all the grace of an amateur and generous display of physical charms by Nerigne. It wound up with a schoolboy's musical-comedy entitled "On Jhelum River," in which one or two love songs of Amy Woodforde-Finden were the redeeming points of a woefully commonplace score, and the singing of Miss Olive Elton and Mr. Ivor Foster vouchsafed a few moments of oasis in a desert of boredom. The rest impels the silence of regret and commiseration.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's latest play, which is entitled "Press Cuttings," has met with the same fate as "Blanco Posnet." The Censor has refused to license it.

"Press Cuttings" is described as a topical sketch compiled from the editorial and correspondence columns of the daily papers. It was announced to be performed at two special matinées at the Court on the afternoons of Friday week and Monday, 12th July, for the benefit of the London Society for Women's Suffrage. The cast was to have included Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Agnes Thomas, and Mr. Loraine.

In a characteristically piquant letter which Mr. Shaw has sent to the Times he states the reason given by Mr. Redford for refusing the license.

"A few weeks ago one of the most popular of London actors and managers was found guilty by the Lord Chamberlain of attemped blasphemy, and muleted and suppressed accordingly. To-day the King makes that manager a knight. But the Lord Chamberlain, now that Sir Harry Poland has shown that the Act of 1843 makes him independent of the King, has not taken the rebuke lying down.

"An hour after I read in the Times of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's triumph the counterblow fell on me (the accomplice in Sir Herbert's blasphemy) in the shape of the Lord Chamberlain's refusal to license my sketch entitled 'Press Cuttings,' and announced by the Women's Suffrage Society for performance at the Court Theatre on 9th and 12th July. It only remains for the King to make me a duke to complete the situation.

"This time my alleged offence is not blasphemy, but, in Mr. Redford's own words, 'personalities, expressed or understood.' Now, as to personalities understood I can say nothing, for the Lord Chamberlain's understanding is a thing totally beyond comprehension or even conjecture. But I can assure the public that I have been careful not to express a single personality that has not done duty again and again without offence in the pages of Punch."

To fill up the somewhat dull hiatus between Ascot and Henley those disorderly females, the Suffragettes ("Pankhurst" Divison) got up a little disturbance for us on Tuesday. They organised their thirteenth raid on the Commons, sent previous warning of their intention and programmes of the evening's proceedings were on sale to the crowd By 8 P.M., when they opened fire, the neighbourhood of the Houses of Parliament was a seething mass of the idle, the curious, the criminal and the dirty. Also there were on hand over 3,000 policemen, mounted and foot. The "vulgar women from the West End," as John Burns calls them, first sent a mounted amazon picturesquely attired à la Robin Hood in Lincoln Green and armed with a whip and a copy of the requisition on the Prime Minister to give them audience. Naturally she was encouraged by a crowd which rather enjoys seeing the police harassed, so that when she became involved in a wrestling on horseback contest with four burly Roberts she was cheered to the echo. She was no sooner driven off the scene than the main body of invaders came noisily down Victoria Street and launched themselves on the Custodians of the Gates. They were firmly and politely told to move on. Then Mrs. Pankhurst led off by slapping the face of Inspector Jarvis and knocking off his helmet: thus encouraged her followers began to comport themselves in the manner now familiar to long-suffering Londoners, and the rest was all screams, kicking and biting, dishevelled women, broken windows, and incidentally much horse-play in the crowd and a busy time for pickpockets. Net result:—One hundred and sixteen arrests, Government Office windows smashed, many injured and robbed, much depreciation of police uniform and—"no forrader," as the ancient mariner remarked, after sampling half a gallon of "Zoedone."

"HORSE MANAGEMENT IN INDIA."

We have been favoured with a copy of this neat and useful little work compiled by Colonel H. deB. deLisle, that "past" Horsemaster, Horseman, and Poloist, who knows his subject well ab initio, writes practically, in plain words, and to the point, that all who read may understand.

This is a book that should be in the hands of all horse owners in India (and the East generally where almost all rules equally apply): it contains much valuable information for the neophyte, and even the most experienced horsemasters may glean many items of most valuable information by a perusal of its clearly written pages.

Colonel deLisle might have given us a small space to the care of feet, and shoeing, especially of polo ponies, as up-country one is away from a cavalry station, and is at the mercy of the local nalband, who is not always reliable and never to be trusted without proper supervision.

The prices of oats are also somewhat below those ranging over the past few years, when grain has been scarce.

One item we do not altogether agree with, and that is the removal of "clean cobwebs" from the roofs of stables, especially in the plains, during the summer months. Many of our oldest trainers say "the more cobwebs the fewer flies," which at times prove a nuisance.

The title is also not chosen too well, it reminds the "old hand" of a work of almost the identical name, but of a much more technical nature published many years ago in India, but of which we fancy the present generation know little.

We recommend this little work, written by one who knows the game, to one and all who have the good of man's best friend at heart.

THE MOUNTAIN SHEEP IN NORTH AMERICA.

Patience and perseverance are prime essentials in the make-up of every man who goes out for big game, and he who would successfully hunt the mountain sheep should possess more than the ordinary endowment of these characteristics. Unlike some other animals sheep cannot be hunted by rule of thumb. Rules for sheep hunting are usually true only in the exceptions, and the only one really worth bearing in mind is to "always expect the unexpected."

"Prepare to climb if you go for sheep in the Cocopahs, and don't expect to find any under three thousand feet."

Thus cautioned my friends in Yuma, when I first went off down the Colorado, for a fortnight's hunt in Lower Colorado, and the only sheep I secured this trip was shot at the edge of a plain and at an elevation, or rather a depression, of a hundred feet below sea level.

"No use looking for sheep at the lower water-hole after last night's cloudburst in the upper mountains" said the Mexican guide who had taken me down to Mount San Pedro on another occasion, and an hour later—gunless—I was crowded into that very water-hole by a big ram whose only line of flight chanced to lie by a foot-wide ledge along which I was gingerly plicking my way.

"Send the Indian boys down the wind and let them drive the animals to us," we ordered our half-breed guide when he reported a fine bunch of Ovis Dalli, a half-mile above on a spur of the Takina range in Southern Alaska, and after we had shivered for two hours in the shadowed river-bottom, the sheep went charging off up the wind, so that the half-grown Chilkat boys, meeting them in a narrow defile, shot two point-blank, and brought down a third with butts of their old Springfields.

The spot where I shot my "submarine" sheep as was dubbed the fine specimen I have alluded to as having been secured below sea level, first appeared to me in a mirage. It was a scorching noon-day on that sun-baked stretch of white alkali which constitutes the portion of the Colorado desert lying across the international boundary line, and south of the new California irrigation colony of Imperial. The sky was a dome of hammered brass, inverted over a floor of gleaming zinc—the plain. The wheels of the camp-wagon moved noiselessly over the yielding alkali and no sound broke the stillness save the monotonous creak of the springs and the occasional clank of a trace-chain.

Gradually out of the steel-gray glow of the air where sky and plain merged into a misty blur, a shimmering lake of crystal water began to form, the wavelets of whose further side lapped against a beach of black sand lying in the right angled embrasure of a towering golden cliff, the latter standing out so clear and distinct as to seem almost to float just before the eye. The water and cliff had been tantalizingly receding before us for perhaps an hour; when down to one side of the lake came walking, three full-grown sheep—one ram and two ewes. Right off into the water they marched without pausing, the giltering surface of the lake gradually closing over them without splash or ripple.

After an interval of a minute or two the big back-curving horns of the ram appeared, bobbed along the surface of the lake for a hundred yards as if detached, to be finally followed by the shoulders and body of their owner. A moment later the ewes came into view, and all three trotted out on to the beach and disappearad in a depression at the apex of the great right-angled cliff.

Later, returning from two weeks of fruitless climbing in the parched Cocoopahs, we chanced upon the same distinctive cliff observed in the mirage, camped at the water-hole deep back in the angle of its overhang, and following morning shot a fine young ram that was coming down at sun-up for an early drink. This instance, and of another animal brought down by a prospector on the floor of Death Valley, California, is the only one I have knowledge of in which a mountain sheep has been shot below sea-level. The phenomenon of the animals appearing to walk through the water was undoubtedly caused by the not uncommon combination of a true mirage and a lake effect, due only to the agitation of the waves of heated air.

Mountain sheep have, and probably still do, exist in all of the Rocky mountain and Pacific states, but only in Colorado, Wyoming and Montana are they plentiful enough to justify one in hunting them. At present there is a closed season the year round in Colorado, but Montana and Wyoming they may be shot during two months in the fall, only one sheep, however, being allowed to a man. Cody is the best point to outfit and secure guides in Wyoming, and Missoula or Kalispel, in Montano.

Comparative freedom from attack by wolves as well as well as human hunters has made the sheep of the remote desert region of the extreme southwest rather tame. In regions where wolves abound, however, mountain sheep seldom venture from the near vicinity to steep cliffs.

Eight years ago sheep were plentiful in the Tetons of Wyoming and the adjacent mountains, and it was on one of the lesser Tetons that I had the unusual experience of being presented with a shot, firing, and shooting a sheep which I did not get, yet ultimately getting a sheep which I did not shoot. Accompanied only by a guide, I had just picked my way up the side of a steep-walled valley to a table-land upon which, according to word brought us the night before, fresh sheep tracks had been recently noted. We reached the mesa at a point where, in shadow ourselves, we could watch a great slash of sunlight cutting through a gap in the eastern ridge, decending like a wedge of light touched a jutting point on the mesa's outermost rim it revealed, with startling suddenness, a well-grown young ram standing sharply in relief against the blur of blue mist that filled the valley. I shot as I sat, resting my rifle across my knee, and as the distance was under a hundred yards, could hardly have missed by many inches the shoulder at which I aimed. The young ram toppled forward over the brink of the cliff and, simultaneously, another animal leapt after him from the shadow, while a number of others scampered back out of sight into a rocky gully which cut the mesa at that point.

We descended to the bridle trail, two hundred feet below the cliff, to find, lying on its outer edge, not the animal I had shot, but a much larger ram with a shattered but still magnificent pair of horns. The wounded sheep had evidently struck a projection of the cliff in its descent, which deflected it sufficiently to clear the trail and bound on into the rushing mountain torrent which foamed along the valley wall immediately below. The unwounded ram, leaping out from the brow of the cliff, had fallen straight to the bridle trail and been instantly killed.

I do not believe for a moment that the leap of either of these animals was in any wise deliberate, yet I have so often seen sheep proceed unscathed from plunges of ten, fifteen and even twenty feet, that I do not doubt that, in extremis, one might take the chances from much greater altitudes. Several Rocky Mountain guides I have known have been most vehement in asserting their belief that the Big Horn, unwounded, never essays a leap greater than would be risked by a deer in similar condition. Others, also, one meets whose tales of the jumps they claim to have witnessed are so extravagant as to eliminate all possibility of belief. In my own experience I have witnessed few unusual leaps by sheep in either the United States or Mexico, but in Northwest Territory, Canada, and in Northern British Columbia, near the Alaska line, on practically every one of perhaps three-score occasions I was present when a bunch of sheep was fired into, undisabled members took cliffs and abrupt snow and ice banks of considerable height, apparently regardless of what lay beneath, and almost invariably without injury.

I recall but one instance of a flock of sheep balking at a leap, and yet of but one instance of serious miscalculation. In the former case the flying animals, a dozen or more in number, wheeled with the precision of a company of cavalry on the brink of a thirty-foot bank of a rock-floored gully, skirted the break for a hundred yards, to finally go plunging over where there was the remnant of winter's snow-slide to land upon. This action may have been coincident, but it had all the ear-marks of a lightning piece of judgment.

The other instance was that of a large bunch of sheep which charged over a ten-foot bank of the swift-flowing Kleehena river, in Southern Alaska, broke through the honey-combed ice and snow that bridged the tumultuous torrent suffering a considerable loss of its numbers as a result. The game struggle of the old patriarch of the flock on this occasion was one of the finest things I have ever witnessed. The first to leap, his unfortunate old body, half buried in the yielding snow, had received the impact of more than a few of the flying hoofs and horns that followed, and for four or five long minutes after the last of his mates had either floundered safely through to the further bank, or had gone down into the surging stream, he lay, stunned and bleeding, on a slender peninsula of firm snow which jutted out over the angry current. As the sound of the hoof-beats of our horses sharply reined up on the frozen gravel of the bank, reached him, he pulled himself together and at almost the first flounder broke through his precarious footing and then went whirling down the raging stream.

At the lower end of the cave-in his high-flung horns caught against the rim of soft ice and gave him a brief, but what we felt sure was only a temporary respite from the fate of his fellows. But we underrated the mettle of the brave old veteran, for even while the sturdy hind quarters drew down in the grip of the powerful undercurrent, one sharp fore-hoof and then the other, gained hold on the trembling crust, and his splendid body was almost lifted into safety before the sagging mass again gave way and left him struggling in the water. Twice, and then yet once again, was this same plucky manœuvre repeated, but only to end each time in the same heart breaking failure. Every shred of muscle, very ounce of bone, every fibre of nerve seemed strained to its last limit of endeavour in his final effort, and when once more the soggy ice gave way victor.

And such, no doubt, would have been the end had not the last cave-in carried the resolute animal to a barely submerged bar of shingle, from which rallying his seemingly unexhaustible supply of strength he gathered himself and leapt cleanly to a solid stretch of crust, to disappear a few moments later down the wake of his surviving family.

The poor judgment which was responsible for this accident was due entirely to the fright of the animals, and it is not likely sheep often get into similar difficulties under normal conditions. Several instances are on record of the horns of rams becoming entangled in fighting, resulting in the death of both combatants.

The result of what is, perhaps, the greatest tragedy that ever befell a flock of mountain sheep I was privileged to see in Yukon territory one day, in the summer of 1899. In the little Indian village of Neskatakeen, commonly known as Dalton's Post, I had remarked upon the great number of sheep-horn spoons and ladles in use among the people, to be told by the Northwest Mounted Police sergeant, in command at that point, that they came mostly from a branch of the tribe living a hundred miles further into the interior, and that the latter claimed to obtain the material for them by digging it out of the earth, as the white men dug gold.

Such truth as there was in this story I verified a month later during a visit to the Hoo-chi tribe in question, its village chancing to lie directly upon the Dalton Trail over which I was travelling.

Many years ago, the Indians said, sheep were as plentiful in their country as are the cariboo to-day in the Tundra plains to the north, and one day a flock of them numbering many hundreds, was caught by a huge side of snow and gravel which the jar of its passing must have precipitated from the mountain-side. This slide occurred above the timber-line at an altitude of about 4,000 feet where, on account of its northerly exposure and the comparatively short duration of the warm weather, it had suffered practically no diminution by melting. The snow has long since turned to the hardness of ice, and the gravel even in summer, is rarely thawed to a depth of more than two or three feet. As a consequence, the slide has acted as a great refrigerator, and even to this day the meat of a newly excavated animal is considered a great delicacy in the village. The flesh of sheep which have been imbedded in pure snow may be really good, but that thrown out by the several blasts we set off in the gravel was almost black in colour and had a most disagreeable odour.

The date of this slide we are unable to even approximate, though the fact that none of the oldest men of the village professed to remember when it was not there, would lead one to believe that it occurred at least seventy-five years ago; that it does not date back twice or thrice that period I can see no valid reason to prove.

Shooting.

A NEW ·425 FIVE LOADER MAGAZINE EXPRESS RIFLE.

Although single and double express rifles have, in the matter of balance, handling and silent working an advantage over the various forms of repeaters introduced for sporting purposes, the popularity of Magazine rifles for game shooting steadily increases. These rifles, primarily designed for military use, have been ably and ingeniously adapted for the requirements of sportsmen. They are often enormously powerful, and by the use of expanding bullets shock-giving properties have been imparted to projectiles that in the fully enveloped form are more remarkable for penetration than for stopping power. It has been felt that the smallness of the bore which is a general characteristic of the magazine rifle is from the sporting point of view disadvantageous. How often one hears it said of one or another of the many forms of magazine rifles in use that it would satisfy every possible requirement "if it were only a little bigger in the bore."

There are grave difficulties in the way of providing this particular form of improvement. Barrels bored and chambered for any size of cartridge can be produced without adding very materially to the cost of a weapon, but as the whole bolt and magazine action have to be designed and manufactured to suit the cartridge the barrel is but one of many points to be considered. Magazine rifles are comparatively inexpensive, because they derive from Military prototypes. If all the parts had to be specially produced in small quantities to suit some particular form of sporting rifle this advantage would be lost. The Magazine sporting Express might then be better adapted for a special purpose but it is a very open question whether the benefit might not be too dearly bought. When the actual increase in cost comes to be reflected in the increased price of the weapon this is a question which would certainly arise in the minds of intending purchasers.

Messrs. Westley Richards & Co., Ld., have submitted for inspection and trial a five shot Magazine rifle of ·425 calibre which is neither ungainly in proportions nor excessive in price. Hitherto the largest five shot magazine rifle has been the ·350 bore with a bullet weight of 310 grains and a muzzle energy of 2,788 ft. lbs. There is also the 11 m/m German rifle, i. e. ·433 bore with a bullet of 310 grains with a muzzle energy of about 2,750 ft. lbs., but as this is inferior to the ·350 bore it need not be included in the comparison. A more powerful rifle than either is in use, viz., the ·404 with a muzzle energy of 4,500 ft. lb., but as this weapon loads only three cartridges into the magazine at a time it is not comparable with a magazine rifle of the five loader type, such as the new ·425 bore which permits the firing of six consecutive shots. Larger calibres have been represented only by double and single Expresses. The new rifle shoots a bullet of 410 grains in weight giving a muzzle velocity of 2,300 f. s. and a muzzle energy of of 4,809 ft. lbs. This represents an increase of over 70 per cent. in muzzle energy and 300 feet velocity over the largest bore five shot magazine rifle hitherto available, with the additional advantage of the increased diameter of bullet.

Either solid or capped projectiles may be used of the same weight, the rifle is also arranged to shoot the long acutely pointed form of L. T. capped bullet weighing 390 grains which gives practically the same elevation as the other kinds at one hundred yards range, and all these three forms are shown in the illustrations. The action used for the new ·425 cartridge is of the well known Mauser type, designed for smaller bores, but now ingeniously adapted to operate the larger calibre. The ordinary flush magazine on the Mauser pattern rifle is too small for five rounds of ·425 ammunition and the bolt is designed for a cartridge with a head less in diameter. For reasons already referred to it would be impracticable, although not of course impossible, to alter the whole of the bolt and breech action. Messrs. Westley Richards & Co., have overcome the difficulty by following the line of least resistance. Since cartridges differ in the size of the head according to calibre and the bolt cannot conveniently be altered to suit the large cartridge head, they have devised a plan of altering the cartridges. This arrangement, which has been patented, consists in making the diameter of the head smaller than the diameter of the cartridge case immediately beyond the head. Thus in the ·425 bore a cartridge is used which has the same diameter of head as that of the well-known Westley Richards' ·318 bore with the result that the same bolt serves for either bore without the necessity of cutting away the bolt head. The rearrangement of the magazine is carried out by means of an addition to the ordinary magazine in the form of a box slightly projecting to afford space for five cartridges of larger calibre instead of five of the smaller cartridges contained in the recess covered by the bottom plate of ordinary magazines of the Mauser type. It is simply a magazine projecting slightly, in lieu of the flush magazine, and adapted to contain five ·425 cartridges which are loaded from the strip pattern of clip inserted in the breech action, the empty clip being removed from that position automatically on closing the bolt. As will be seen by the illustration the projecting magazine is so formed as to afford to the left hand a means of steadying the rifle when firing. The end of the additional box is fitted with a horn tip so as to form a convenient grip. The barrel is made either fixed or on the Westley Richards hand detachable system, which enables it to be removed with the greatest celerity.

A point of considerable importance about this new weapon is that it not only provides a calibre large enough to be suitable for all kinds of big and dangerous game and to serve adequately the same purposes as the ·450 bore used to serve, but it affords also all the facilities associated with the Magazine type in the smaller calibres, giving even the advantage of the full six shots at one loading, if one cartridge is placed in the chamber and five in the magazine. The magazine being charged from a clip as stated reloading is performed most expeditiously.

The rifle submitted for our consideration weighs 8lb. 10ozs. or about 9ozs. more than the ·318 Accelerated Express made with the same action. The ·425 handles beautifully and the peculiarly constructed cartridges work faultlessly through the magazine. In shooting at 100 yards it produced several good diagrams which need not be referred to more particularly as all the series of high velocity rifles introduced by Messrs. Westley Richards & Co., seem fully to satisfy every possible requirement in the way of accuracy. The new rifle seems indeed perfectly adapted to supply the need, so often expressed for a rifle of comparatively large bore having the advantages that have gained such wide appreciation in magazine express rifles of smaller calibre.

Fishing.

NOTES ON FISHING TACKLE.

The latest improvement in traces for spinning is one which commends itself strongly to all rod fishermen, being equally applicable to both gut and twisted wire traces. It is an invention of Messrs Hardy Brothers, Alnwick, and consists of a wire bar about 1½ to 1¾ inches long, with a small eye at each end, to one of which the centre swivel of the trace is attached, and to the other the upper half of the trace. On this bar a simplex lead, or split shot, can be placed. The idea is to prevent damage to the trace by the friction of the lead against it, or by removing and changing the lead. The lower ends of the trace is furnished with a clip just half an inch in length, for the rapid changing of baits. It can be attached either to the swivel or the ring at the head of an artificial bait, the "antikink" properties of the leaded bar rendering a third swivel at the end of the trace unnecessary, while the short clip is far less conspicuous than the ordinary spring-hook swivel of about 1¼ inch in length. It is said that this wire bar, even when used without leads, considerably reduces any tendency to kink. I have not yet had an opportunity of trying one of these traces—(of which an illustration will be found at page 105 of Messrs. Hardy's Catalogue, S. 1909)—but they appear to me to be the acme of the perfection. At page 107 of the Catalogue, a diagram is given showing the actual thicknesses of natural (not drawn) gut, from the finest to the stoutest—9 sizes in all. On comparing the wire traces with this diagram, I find that the finer traces are of the same thickness as "Padron 1st" which is just midway on the scale of thicknesses, while those for heavy fishing vary from "Marana 1st" to "Imperial," i.e., one or two sizes finer than the stoutest single gut. The difference in strength is enormously in favour of the wire trace. By practical test I have found the finer sizes sufficiently supple to work satisfactorily with very small and light spoons, even in very slow water, and with everything in their favour as regards cost, invisibility, and strength, there is no reason why they should not entirely supersede gut for spinning, though it must, of course, still continue to be used for fly fishing. Oval wire spring hooks for spoons are another new invention, consisting of two single hooks facing different ways, made on one wire, of which the top one hangs in the belly of the spoon, and the lower one below the tail end. At the head of this mount the wire is turned over to form an eye for attachment to the ring at the head of the spoon, and is then continued downwards to form the second hook; the mount is therefore of double wire down to the bend of the upper hook, one wire lying by the side of the other as far as this point, and the mount is fitted on in a moment, by bringing the ring between the two wires up to the eye, the tempered spring bringing the wires together again. For spoons varying from one to two inches in length, these are the neatest and most taking mounts imaginable.

In the matter of rods, our American cousins appear to be much in advance of us in India, in their universal adoption of the short spinning rod, of 11½ to 12½ feet in length, for heavy fishing. These must necessarily be used with a rod with removable check. The line is wound up till the bait is within a few feet of the top of the rod, leaving, say, a foot or so longer than the length of the trace, and the cast is made direct from the reel. The adjustment of the play and balance of these rods is such, that exceedingly long casts can be made, while the difference in weight, and consequently in comfort in using them, makes them preferable beyond comparison to the fifteen or sixteen foot rod now generally in use among us. They are coming largely into use in England, and with those who can afford to have separate rods for spinning and fly fishing, they will doubtless soon be equally popular out here. A "Murdoch" rod, Silex reel, and Panjab wire traces, will, I think, soon be recognized as indispensable items of every angler's fishing outfit in India.

In conclusion, I may say that though the articles and inventions which I have mentioned are those of Messrs. Hardy Brothers, I hold no brief for this firm, nor have I any interest, directly or indirectly, in pushing their goods, beyond bringing to the notice of brother fishermen matters which I think it may interest and benefit them to know, and in doing so I must naturally mention the place where these articles may be procured. It is quite possible that other firms may have kept equally abreast of the times, but I write from my personal knowledge only, which is confined to the productions of the firm which I have mentioned, some of which are also noticed in a very useful little pamphlet entitled "Mahseer Tackle," by Major Rivett-Carnac, published last year by the Pioneer Press at the moderate price of Re. 1-8, which I commend to the notice of my readers.

THE SCIENTIFIC PUTTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In a letter published in the Indian Field of 27th May last, I gave a short account of some home-made putters, which proved very efficient clubs when put to practical use. Since then, with the help of a friend, who is also a golf maniac, I have been making further experiments with a view to arriving at the perfect putter. The material used was, as before, beechwood, but in our latest form, the shaft is set into the head at about the centre of the upper surface, in the same way as in the "Schnechtady" type of aluminium putter. When the head is of aluminium, the metal itself is heavy enough, so that it is not necessary to insert any lead. With our beechwood putters however a good deal of lead has to be put into the head to bring it up to the requisite weight. By putting the lead at the extremities of the head, half, at each end, instead of in one lump at the centre, one gets a club which has absolutely no tendency whatever to turn in the hand, however loosely held. This characteristic has been found very advantageous: even when the club is held loosely and carelessly, it is impossible to get a wild shot as regards direction. With a lump of lead at each end of the head, the centre of percussion comes about the centre of the putter head. The shaft being set into the head at a slight rake for convenience in putting, it enters the upper surface a little behind the centre, and comes through below a little in front of the centre: thus the centre of percussion is just in front of the shaft on the top, and there is quite sufficient room to mark the usual sighting line across the upper surface of the putter head, clear of the entry hole of the shaft.

After very thorough trial, I have come to the conclusion that this present form of putter is on the whole slightly superior to the one previously described, with the shaft at the end.

The difference in merit between the two patterns is certainly small, but golf is made up of a number of small things, and anything which may make the difference of a stroke or two in the round, is worth thinking about. Certainly the plan of getting the lead at the ends of the head, makes it easier to keep direction true however the shaft is held. One can in fact swing the putter with finger and thumb, quite loose like a pendulum, and yet not lose direction.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

At a restaurant where the cloak-room attendant is celebrated for his memory as to the ownership of hats and the like, the following incident occurred. "How do you know that this is mine?" asked a well-known actor, as his silk hat was returned to him. "I don't know that it is yours, sir," replied the man. "Then why did you give it to me?" expostulated the bewildered actor. "Because you just gave it to me," replied the man, without moving a muscle of his face.

A lady had a pet chameleon that changed it colours in sympathy with its environment. It was in charge of an old and faithful servant, who, when asked to bring it to show a visitor, said he could not. "Why not?" asked his mistress. "Well, you see mam, it's this way. One o' your lady friends called while you were out. To amuse her I just showed her your pet. I put it on a blue cushion, and it turned blue." "Yes." "I put it on the pink cushion, and it turned pink." "Yes." "I put it on a yellow cushion, and it turned yellow." "Yes." "I put it on a gray cushion, and it was just as gray as your ladyship's dress." "Well, well," "Then" (in saddened tones) "I put it on a tartan plaid, and it just bust itself."

THE TURF.

SANDOWN.

On Friday Sunny Sandown belied its name, the weather being of a character more suitable for the November Handicap at Manchester than a midsummer meeting at Esher, as, in addition to rain, a mist, which was most detrimental to colour and colours, set in and spoilt a view of the racing. The course, despite all the rain, was not heavy by any means, the hoofs just cutting a clean impression here and there. As it was, the muster, which included many leading patrons of the national sport, was a good one, the enclosures being well filled, while the enlargements and improvements in the public ring came to meet a long-felt want. Results:—

To the satisfaction of the numerous Saturday afternoon brigade, which gets its share of the national sport on the last day of the week, Saturday, though not brilliant, was a great improvement on Friday's February-like sample. The going was soft enough to show cleancut hoof-prints, the sand so quickly absorbing the moisture here. The attendance showed considerable increase, and the alterations in the half-crown ring were much appreciated, while the road and motor brigade was a strong one, and society well represented in the members' enclosure.

NEWMARKET.

IT was hoped that the storm which swept Newmarket on Monday had cleared the air, for early on Tuesday visitors were treated to the unwonted spectacle of cheerful sunshine, which gave quite a summer tone to the scene; but the turn of the tide had not come yet, as some time before racing began the sky assumed the familiar leaden hue, and working up from the north-east, rain drove the earliest arrivals on the course to shelter.

Such bad weather necessarily handicapped the attendance. The Ditch only harboured a few hardy souls, and in neither of the rings was there any lack of elbow room. Despite the persistent downpour, the course afforded good going, and fields were of good strength. Results:—

THE GRAND PRIX.

I wired you the result of this race on the 29th ultimo. I now append further details. A wet Grand Prix is little short of a calamity, and they hoped against hope for a fine afternoon; throughout the morning the rain came down heavily; but about midday there seemed a prospect of the weather clearing up, and all the vehicles that ply from the Boulevards to Longchamps filled up. The sun even came out for a little while at lunch time, and all Paris turned out to see the race as usual. Perhaps some went in a spirit of curiosity to see if there would be a repetition of last Sunday's disorders, but the precautions taken by the authorities prevented any interference with sport. M. Pataud and his fellow agitators, finding that the stable lads are not likely to be stirred up to revolt against imaginary wrongs, will now turn their attention to the ballet girls and the theatres!

The two English horses, William the Fourth and Valens, were not among the first three: William was fourth and Valens last. Details:—

GRAND PRIX DE PARIS—Of 40sovs. each, 24ft., with 12,000sovs. added, for three-year-olds; second receives 1,200sovs., and the third 600sovs. 1 mile and 7 furlongs.

BETTING: 185 to 100 agst. Negofol (stable), 3 to 1 William the Fourth, 15 to 4 Union, 10 to 1 each Valens and Verdun, 33 to 1 Ronde de Nuit, 40 to 1 each Rebelle and Darwin, and 66 to 1 Exorde.

PLACE BETTING: 21 to 10 agst. Verdun, 41 to 10 Rebelle, and 100 to 65 on Union.

To a good start Oversight led from Verdun, Negofol, William the Fourth, and Union, these being in Indian file clear of Valens and Darwin, with Rebelle whipping in. Opposite the stands William the Fourth took second place, with Negofol and Verdun close up, the latter on the outside. A mile from home William the Fourth took the lead, followed by Oversight, Negofol, and Verdun, the latter being just clear of Union. At the turn for home Valens was beaten, and Rebelle raced up and joined Union, who was now abreast of William the Fourth and Verdun. At the distance Negofol and Oversight were beaten, and Verdun, passing William the Fourth, was followed by Union and Rebelle, the latter of whom was in front at the half-distance, but Verdun came again and won easily by two and a half lengths; three-parts of a length separated second and third. Time—3mins. 28-2/5secs. Value, £14,071.

Three Miles Walking Race.—R. Quinn, Bellahouston H., (holder), 1; A. Justice, Clydesdale H., 2; P. Farmer, Clydesdale H., 3. Won easily. Time—23mins. 22secs.

Four Miles Race.—A. M'Phee jun., Clydesdale H., 1; T. Jack, Edinburgh Southern H., (holder), 2; J. D. Hughes, Edinburgh H., 3. Won a fine race by half a yard. Time—20mins. 36secs.

Quarter Mile Race (W. Halswell, Edinburgh H., holder).—Jas. D. Dickson, Edinburg U.A.C., 1; G. W. Young, Bellahouston H., 2; J. Millar, West of Scotland H., 3. Splendid race, won by inches; close third. Time—51⅖secs.

WELSH CHAMPIONSHIPS.—Hail and rain made the grass track very heavy at Newport (Mon.) on the 26th ultimo, when the Welsh Athletic championships were decided. Results:

100 Yards.—J. Gorman, N.A.C., 1; J. Austin Miller (holder), London A.C., 2; R. Woodruff, Machen F.C., 3. Won by a foot; 2 ft. between second and third. Time 10⅖secs.

One Mile.—C. G. Hill, Tredegar H., 1; W. Emerson, Newport A.C., 2; Rhys Evans, Roath H., 3. A great finish, won by a foot; a yard between second and third. Time—4mins. 14⅘secs.

120 Yards Hurdles.—E. Wyatt Gould, Newport A.C., 1; D. W. Walters (holder), Cardiff University A.C., 2; W. Fitt, St. Saviours's Gym., 3. Won by a foot; a yard between second and third. Time—17⅘secs.

High Jump.—W. T. Thomas (holder), Cwmbran F.C., 5ft., 4in. 1; E. Freenway, Hay F.C., 2; E. J. Protheroe, Newport A.C., 3.

Half Mile.—E. G. Rec, Swansea A.A. and C.C., 1; J. O. Jones, Abergavenny H., 2; W. Sharpe, Newport A.C., 3. Won by ten yards; eight yards between second and third. Time—2mins. 7⅘secs.

220 Yards.—J. Gorman, Newport A.C. (holder), 1; R.A Gibbs, Cardiff F.C., 2; C. H. Wyatt, Abergavenny A.A., 3. Won by two yards; four yards between second and third. Time—24⅘secs.

Two Miles Walk.—A. T. Yeoumans, Highgate H., 1; W. R. Sullivan, Swansea, 2; J. G. Williams, Weston, 3. Won by six yards; three hundred yards between second and third. Time—14min. 31secs.

Long Jump.—D. W. Walters, Cardiff University A. C. (holder), 20 ft. 5½ in., 1; W. Fitt, St. Saviour's Gym, Cardiff, 2; W. J. Maartin, Newport A. C., 3.

Four Miles.—T. Arthurs, Newport H. (holder), 1; A. S. Wilson, Abertilery, 2. Only two finished. Time—20min. 58 ⅕secs.

Quarter Mile.—T. Whittaker, Llanisher A. C., 1; E. G. Ace, Swansea, 2; B. Uzzell, Newport A. C., 3. Won by a yard; two yards between second and third. Time—55⅘secs.

TERRITORIALS AT THE STADIUM.—Between 20,000 and 30,000 persons were at the Stadium to witness the Territorial championships. The Princess Royal distributed the prizes. As generally expected, the London Scottish (14th Battalion) won the twelve miles "Marathon" race, their team of fourteen completing the distance, with full equipment, and finishing in marching order and military formation in the Stadium in the fast time of 1h. 47min. 43secs. They were followed by the 27th Battalion (Inns of Court) 5th Battalion (London Rifle Brigade), and 16th Battalion (Queen's Westminster) in the order named. Fourteen teams completed the journey, and all finished fairly fresh.

London Scottish, however, had to put up with second place in the competition for the Duke of Fife's Challenge Bowl, given for the highest aggregate of points. This was secured by the 8th Battery with a score of 29 points to the Scots' 26.

Among the many individual winners in other events were several well-known athletes. They included Private, R. F. C. Yorke (London Scottish) in the mile run; Private W. F. Poulton (London Scottish) in the 100 yards; Private F. W. Smith (5th City of London) in the quarter-mile; Private P. Markham (12th Battalion) in the 120 yards hurdle race; and Rifleman P. C. Curnew (8th Battalion) in the quarter mile, and Rifleman E. G. Matkin (8th Battalion) in the one mile and five mile cycle races.

Other events were won as follows:—High jump: Private J. C. Brown (London Scottish), 5ft. 4in. Long jump: Private B. Sampson (28th Battalion), 20ft. 9¼in. One mile relay race: 5th Battalion, first. Tent pitching and striking: 14th Battalion (London Scottish), first. 110 yards swimming: Gunner R. E. Chilverd H.A.C. (A. Battery), first Quarter-mile swimming: Private J. Dodds, H. A. C. (Infantry), first Quarter mile relay swimming race: 16th Battalion (Queen's Westminister), first. Tug-of-war: 12th Battalion, first. All the events carried with them championship titles.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 8th July.—Golf Corner 8 A.M. A cold rough morning and a thick mist which was very troublesome. A great deal of country was drawn before a jack was found in the Devil's Dyke. At first he headed down the Yemakal Stream, then turned right handed up towards Bacon Wood, but leaving this on the right he ran straight across to Chemund. Here, however, every jack in the valley was "at home" besides a few sambur! Hounds took no notice of the latter; the pack was split up in every direction, the place was fairly alive with jack. One was put to ground at the top of Chemund; the others led hounds round about in Chemund for close on two hours; not one of them would face the open. It was a most disappointing day.

Saturday, 10th July.—Beadnell's 12 noon. A pleasant cloudy morning with just a suspicion of rain, and every prospect of good sport, nor were we disappointed. Hounds on being thrown into Beadnell's spoke to a line but it did not develop. In Bracken they started by chopping a cub in covert. Before we quite realized this a jack went away from the top, the Master blowing the pack out of covert was soon galloping hard in his wake. This jack led us a merry chase and a fast one to boot, over some of the best turf he could possibly have chosen. From Bracken he took a line along the bog below Paragon, then turned up through Paragon, to the left over the hill, crossed the bog below Little Khed, up through Khed and down the other side into Chemund, straight through this without a pause from top to bottom down to the Yemakal Stream. It looked rather like Yemakal Shola, but short of the Stream he swung up to the left and, crossing the Devil's Dyke just above its junction with the Yemakal Stream, he rose the hill over Back Staircase and dived down into Briar. No time was allowed him for a breather; herewith the whole pack racing for blood and close at him. He sped across the bog below and along the Dartmore Vale to Hearty, keeping along the top of the ridge. All the way we had to gallop ventre à terre to keep on terms with hounds. Crossing the bog above Beadnell's Bungalow they ran him up past the wire fence to Bracken; from here they turned down skirting the bog below Paragon and on to Kengodu where the jack lay down for a spell in a small patch of thorns by the Stream. Out of this he was ruthlessly bustled but evidently refreshed, he continued his flight through the corner of Kengodu Shola and on through another small covert, and finally rolled down the hill into Paragon with a couple of hounds almost on top of him. In Paragon he had another short spell, the pack getting on to a cub and the hunted jack taking this opportunity to slip away over the hill, and turning right handed into Road Shola was viewed by Major Duff. From Road Shola he once more turned back over the top of Coffee Shop Shola into Kengodu, through it, and round right handed above Kerada Mund, and went to ground in a rocky place in the bed of the stream. A long wait here resulted. Kitty was unable to move him. The Master then drew up through Paragon, out of which a jack and a small cub were roused, the former being killed near Gonikarai Mund Shola. Plague Shola and some others were drawn before hounds returned to Kennels.

Monday, 12th July.—Fairlawns Bridge 8 A.M. A wild boistrous day, thick fog and a steady downpour of rain; the going was extremely greasy, and as for the cattle paths they rivalled the famous Cresta Run! The Master drew the slope below Melkaval Village and hounds went off at once on a line and carried it slowly to Sambur Shola where what little scent there was fizzled out. The mist was so thick in the valley it was quite hopeless to hunt in it or expect any sport, so a move was made up to the Dangar Ride Sign Post. In Middle Bit Shola a jack was found and hounds slipped away in a thick mist over the top of Vokal Hill to Pug Pits. They were neither seen nor heard, but very fortunately they turned back again over the edge of the cliffs overlooking Pug Pits, and crossing Heseltine's Ride threw up. We all agreed it was no day for hunting, and the Master having got his pack together a start was made for home. The monsoon is indeed making up for the fortnight it stopped away.

Tuesday, 13th July.—The Dangar Ride Sign Post, Matley 12 noon. Another thick and stormy day the mist would lift for a few minutes and then settled down in a dense mass. After waiting in the hopes of it clearing, the Master decided to draw nearer home, so trotted back past Andy to Governor's Shola and drew through the lower part of it on to the ridge opposite Porlock. In a small hollow on the hill side where there is a thick patch of bracken hounds suddenly alighted on a jack and chopped him in covert. A great pity, as he was a fine big fellow and might have given us a good run if he had not been caught napping. The next jack found had just moved away from Rawlin's Nullah and was viewed by the Master on New Market. As soon as hounds got a sight of him they simply raced him down the hill to the Sandy Nullah Stream, and running up to the right hand corner of Staircase they pushed him through Stokes Shola and Herbert Plantation, then swinging round through the small shola near Gibbs they ran back below the Butter Slide into Staircase and out on the far side to Round Shola and on to Governor's, in which he managed to elude the pack. It was getting late, and as the mist had every appearance of settling down the Master proceeded to look for a few couple of hounds in the direction of Andy. The few followers that were left set their faces to the East and home, little knowing that they were thereby missing the run of the day. For no sooner had the Master arrived at the corner of Andy then the packed dashed off on the line of a jack that had but recently crossed the road. Running over the bog to Democrat they tumbled down the slope of Hecuba and on to Kuruthugally, and with Sambur Shola on their left they sank the hill to Finger Post Shola, and crossing the next valley hunted him through the sholas below the Mel Kundoh Road, and were finally stopped about 2 miles beyond Ittalur. It was pitch dark before they returned to Kennels. The field was a very select one.

Thursday, 15th July.—Sheffield Corner 8 A.M. Again I have to record another miserable day, so far as the weather is concerned. The Parson's Valley was smothered in fog, so the Master had to abandon any thoughts of hunting there and drew nearer home. Parlock and Bluegums were blank, but better luck awaited us in Rawlin's Nullah, however, a jack having moved away from here, hounds carried the line over Lawley's Course to Gibb's Shola and past the corner of Briar, they then streamed over Piggott's Crossing and swung left handed to the Pykara Road and raced down the Back Staircase Road for some distance, then turned up over Back Staircase into Staircase Shola—with only the first Whip in attendance, the Master and the field keeping along the road. The fog was so thick no one knew exactly which way hounds had run, and this ended the day's sport for them Major Dennistoun, however, was more fortunate. Hounds had paused a few moments in Staircase, and as he emerged out of Staircase by the middle ride he saw them below him, the fog having lifted slightly. They crossed the Sandy Nullah Stream and ran on into Bluegums in which a few couple of hounds got on to a fresh jack; the main body of the pack pushing the hunted jack out of the top continued the chase through Rally Wood, and leaving jackal on their left and Monkey on their right they hunted him along the stream to Dharma Tope, then up through the lower end of Sambur Shola to beyond Nanjanad Village, when Major Dennistoun stopped them and brought them back to Kennels.

FINAL.

MYSORE GYMKHANA vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—The final which had been postponed from day to day owing to the bad weather, was eventually played on the 14th instant in the presence of a big gathering; among those looking on were H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore, the Hon. Mr. S. M. Fraser and Mrs. Fraser, Sir James and Lady Wolfe Murray. The Officers of the 20th Deccan Horse were "At Home" to their friends, and at the conclusion of the game, His Highness gave the Cup away to the winners.

First Chukker.—Bunny Singh and Worgan put in runs for their respective sides. Ross looked like scoring, but the Yuvaraj cleared, and Bunny Singh getting possession sent the ball through. The Deccans pressed hard on this reverse and eventually Ross equalised.

Second Chukker.—The Deccans continued to attack but gained no material advantage, and the ball being transferred to the other end Bunny Singh hit another goal.

Third Chukker.—The Deccans pressed throughout this period and experienced bad luck in not getting on terms.

Fourth Chukker.—Rain fell in the early part of the chukker. Half way through Bunny Singh fell and his pony trod on his shoulder thus preventing him from taking further part in the game; Jemadar Saduleen took his place. Play was uneventful till the close and there was no scoring.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gymkhana attacked but could not get through. The Deccans cleared and made desperate efforts to score but without success.

Sixth Chukker.—Ross and Worgan took the ball down but were stopped by Gopalraj Urs, and the Yuvaraj subsequently getting possession rushed away and hit a goal. The Deccans played all they knew to score but met with no luck, thus being defeated by three goals to nil. Teams:—

2,899 ft. lbs.,

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

writing from the Sleeping Sickness Commission in Uganda, says:—

"I found Bovril of great use on several occasions. It is excellent stuff.....I think it ought to take the place as a stimulant, in many cases, of the whiskies and sodas which are run to on every occasion of fatigue in tropical climates."

FEATS OF ENDURANCE.

It will probably surprise most people to know that man has greater powers of endurance than any animal. He is the only creature who can endure all climates and live on all foods, and there are some astonishing cases on record which show his wonderful power of resistance. Experiments have shown that the human body has a climatic resistance of at least 244 degrees, or 32 degrees more than is found in the range between zero and the boiling point of water, but the lay mind will be more vividly impressed by some instances of remarkable endurance than by any number of figures, and the following are amongst the most astonishing cases that can be brought forward. In 1879 a man, named Weston, walked 1,977½ miles in 1,000 consecutive hours, and two years before a pedestrian, named William Gale, had accomplished an even more astonishing feat, traversing 4,000 half miles in 4,000 consecutive periods of ten minutes. Foster Powell, an English pedestrian of last century, ran from London to York and back again in 140 hours! Probably there has never been anything in history quite parallel with the endurance of Napoleon's Grande Armee of 1812. The Russian winter has been described as being "so cold that you must be careful how you unbutton your coat to get to your pockets lest you be frozen"; but Napoleon's army of 680,000 men lingered for six months in one of the most severe winters ever known. Nansen's expedition to the North Pole, if it had taught us nothing else, would be memorable for the striking proof it produced of the possibilities of man's physical endurance. Nansen tells us that a temperature of 40 and 43 degrees below zero did not trouble him at all, but that, on the other hand, he "sweated like a horse." "Both yesterday and to-day," the explorer says, in another place, "I had a red flannel mask on my face, but it made me too warm, and I had to take it off!" Some of the sailors who took part in the Franklin Search Expedition spent years among the ice, but they lived on board ship in comparative comfort, whereas Nansen and his companions lived for a whole year in the open, or in the burrow they made for themselves out of stones and earth. Yet they retained their full physical vigour, and their intellectual alertness. Some time ago, for the first time in history, two young Norwegian fishermen succeeded in crossing the Atlantic in an open boat, under the impulse of oars alone. The boat, which was seventeen feet long, had no other shelter than a canvas to sleep under, and it was in the highest degree improbable, judging from all past attempts, that the boat, which left New York, would reach Havre. But the men arrived safely after sixty days on the open sea, having rowed themselves all the way from New York harbour. The possibility of endurance of the human frame, indeed, is amazing. Sir George Nares, the Arctic explorer, and his party underwent forty-eight hours of cold equal to 81 degrees below freezing point, while Professor Chaubert, the French "Fire King," has frequently remained for a considerable length of time in ovens heated to a temperature of 500 degrees. And that it is possible to live without food for weeks together has been demonstrated over and over again. It is only necessary to mention the names of Succi and Dr. Tanner, the latter of whom lived for forty days on water alone in 1880. In 1884 four men were taken alive out of a mine in which they had been twenty-four days without food; and not many years ago seven men were shut in a colliery in South Wales by flood. Forty yards of coal had to be bored through before they could be rescued, and the work occupied ten days and nights; but at the end of that time all the men were found alive, and each one recovered. In July, 1884, the yacht Mignonette which had left Southampton for Australia, foundered in a storm about sixteen hundred miles from the Cape of Good Hope and four of the crew escaped in an open boat. They were rescued after twenty-four days by a German barque, all still alive, though none of them had tasted food for that long period. Seven men belonging to the crew of the Earnmore, an English steamer, which was wrecked in 1889 off Bahama Islands, lived for twenty-five days without food.

There have been some very remarkable cases of endurance on the part of children of late years. Some years ago a little girl was missed from her home at Nottingham. For three days nothing was seen or heard of her, but at the end of the fourth day it was discovered that an old clock case in a lumber-room had fallen from its place across the floor. It was raised, and beneath it lay the little child asleep. She had stepped inside the case, which at that moment overbalanced and made her a prisoner. Thus she lay, without food, and almost without air, for four days and three nights. Yet she was still alive, and the doctors were hopeful of her recovery; but the shock proved too great, and the child died from its after effects. A boy at Louth, in New South Wales, two years of age, recently wandered into the bush and was lost. After five days he was found thirty miles from his home, and though he had had neither food nor water during that time he speedily recovered. There have been cases at Luton and in Wales recently of children wandering into the woods, and being found after two or three days, little worse for their adventure, and many readers will recall the case of the child who was a few years ago locked in a schoolroom at Edinburgh for fifty hours. An example of endurance of a different kind, though not less remarkable, occurs in the account of the Siege of Rouen. The body of a soldier was thrown into a ditch it being supposed the man was dead. From eleven o'clock in the morning till half-past six at night the body lay in the ditch and then, finding that the body was warm, a servant carried it into the house. There it remained for five days and nights, showing no sign of life, but still keeping warm. At the end of that time the town was taken, and the servant of an officer, coming across the body in the house, and thinking it was a corpse threw it once more from the window. It fell on its head in the street, where it lay with hardly any covering for three more days. Once more the soldier was picked up as dead, but slight signs of life being detected, it was then taken care of, and the man eventually recovered. The case is well authenticated. There are many equally authenticated instances of men reaching old age without ever having more than two hours' sleep at a time, and there is a case recorded of a man who never slept more than fifteen minutes at once. General Pichegru told Sir Gilbert Blane that he never had more than one hour's sleep in twenty-four during his active compaigns, and Napoleon, it is well known, only gave three or four hours a day to sleep. From twelve to twenty days is probably the limit of man's endurance without sleep. Instances of extraordinary endurance of pain are not rare, but it is doubtful if the following case has any parallel. Two plumbers were working at the top of a house, and, the ladder being short, one of the men climbed on to his companion's shoulder. While in that position he overturned some boiling lead on to the arms of his friend. The suffering man held firmly to his post, however. Had he moved his mate must have fallen. When, a few minutes later, the men reached the ground, it was found that the scalding metal had burned into the bone!

Animals, as already remarked, have not generally man's power of endurance, although a pig buried alive by a fall of cliff at Dover is said to have been dug out alive at the end of 160 days! In 1870, too, during the siege of Metz, a dog lived after being locked in a room without food for 39 days, and a dog was found only a few months ago in a closed van at Boston, in which it had lived a fortnight without food. But such cases are very rare among animals, and the only animal which can in any way compete with man in powers of endurance is the camel, which can live for ten and fifteen days without water, and can perform its tedious journeys across the desert for days without food of any kind. It is recorded that two hounds once ran in pursuit of a deer 120 miles, but at the end of the race all three animals fell dead.

I.F.A. SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

GORDONS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—These teams met on the 14th instant, the Gordons winning by 3 goals to nil. The first half was well contested and the native team gave a very good account of themselves. The interval arrived without score but on changing ends the Gordons took the upper hand. Hands against Mohan Bagan looked as if the soldiers would score but Chatterjee cleared. The Fort team returned to the attack however and McKay opened the scoring. Then Mohan Bagan ran down and B. Bhaduri shot, Riach saving. The military pressed for the rest of the game and though Mukerjee in goal covered himself with glory he was twice beaten, by McKay and by McKenna. Teams:—

GORDONS:—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Finlay, Harper and Spence, halves; McDougall, McKinnon, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

MOHAN BAGAN:—H. Mookerjee, goal; A. Biswas and S. Chatterjee, backs; Mukherjee, Sircar and Nilmadhab, halves; Roy, S. Bhadhuri, B. Bhadhuri, Sukul and Ghose, forwards.

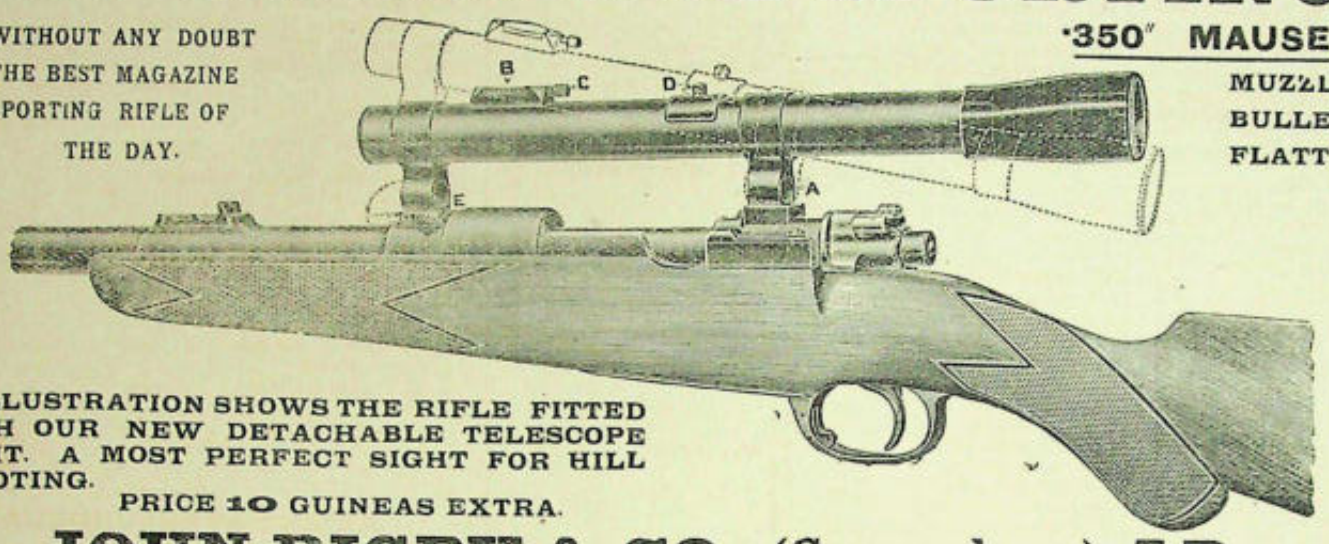
Referee:—Sgt. Hounsell.

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Calcutta ground on the 14th instant, the home team winning by 2 goals to nil. Up and down play at the start till a foul against V. Sherman gave the Dals a chance but the shot went wide. The home forwards were next conspicuous for a couple of good runs and after Drew had missed Ross got possession and scored the first goal. V Sherman tried a long shot a little later and then play settled down in mid field. The Dals did good work: Lees and Montgomery sent in shots but failed to score Anscombe was next called upon to save a free kick for a foul. He cleared and the Calcutta got away and attacked once more.

WINCHESTER



HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.

When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

THACKER, SPINK & CO., P. O. Box 54, CALCUTTA.

Longbottom and Ross tested Hendrie and then the ball was transferred, the Dals forcing a corner. This was not improved upon and H. Sherman was prominent for a couple of good runs. A pass to Drew enabled the letter to shoot but the ball rebounded into play after hitting Hendrie and Cowden who was lying handy netted it. In the second half the home team pressed at the start, and lost chances. Then the Dals had a spell in the Calcutta territory. Anscombe cleared a feeble attempt by Prike and a subsequent corner proved abortive. Calcutta played a man short all through the second half, V. Sherman having retired injured before the interval, nevertheless they had the best of the play. The closing stages of the game were uneventful and the Trades Club retired defeated as stated. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Anscombe, goal; Wright and Oliver, backs; O'Shea, V. Sherman, and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Drew, Cowden, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Hendrie, goal; Clarke and Quail, backs; Wright, Lees and Wilson, halves; Prike, Burnett, Montgomery, Dalling and Hurdston, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Hooly.

SEMI FINALS.

CUSTOMS vs. RANGERS.—This match on the Rangers ground on Saturday was well contested and interesting throughout. The Customs eventually won by 2 goals to nil, but the Rangers had bad luck in not scoring on more than one occasion. The first goal was obtained by L. A. Smith and on changing ends Galbreth headed the second from a corner kick. Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—Fitzpatrick, goal; Anderson and McCready, backs; Currie, L. H. Smith and Fischer, halves; Bolleau, Berkley Galbreth, L. A. Smith and De Silva, forwards.

RANGERS.—Margrett, goal; Minet and Chandler, backs; Cornish, Lawton and Cody, halves; McKay, Taylor, Smart, Murphy and Davis, forwards.

GORDONS vs. CALCUTTA.—On Saturday last a record attendance witnessed the third meeting of these teams this season and for the third time Calcutta had to retire beaten by a goal to nil. The home team went away with a rush at the start and Longbottom, Ross and Drew all had shots none of which were successful. Then the Gordons took up the attack and Gilchrist sent in a hard one which went behind. A run by Sherman was checked and the home territory again invaded. Anscombe saved in splendid style from McKay and the Calcutta backs were kept busy for a spell. Sherman put in a nice run but Spence cleared and once more the Calcutta defence was tried. Anscombe got rid of a hot shot from Gilchrist but the soldiers continued to attack till the interval. On changing ends the Gordons kept up the pressure. McKay sent wide but shortly after a shot by the same player struck Wright on the knee and was diverted into the corner of the Calcutta net. Elated with their success the Gordons tried to increase their score but they were kept out and the closing period of the game saw Calcutta making desperate efforts to get on terms. All attempts however failed and the game ended in a win for the Military by a goal to nil. Teams :—

GORDONS.—Risch, goal; Richards and Kirkwood, backs: Finlay Harper and Spence (Capt.), halves; McDonal, McKennon, McKay, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Anscombe, goal; Wright and Oliver, backs; O'Connel, O'Shea and Pooler, halves; H. Sherman, Drew, Cowden, Ross and Longbottom, forwards.

Referee:—A. B. Rosser.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Shield competition has now reached the final stage and on Saturday the gladiators will enter the arena for the last time this season. Customs and Gordons will, for the second year in succession, face each other, and he would be a bold man who would venture to predict the winner. The teams have met twice this season, the first time ending in a win for the Customs and the other encounter being drawn, so that football enthusiasts should get their money's worth in this third and most important meeting of the teams. Our own opinion is that Customs will just about win. They play just the sort of game that will beat the soldiers and, having more experience than they had last year, will not be too overcome by the nervousness that characterised their play in the previous final.

CALCUTTA, in their match with Dalhousie in the second round, flattered their supporters into visions of their once again carrying off the trophy. They certainly played well and with only ten men all the second half and part of the first half more than held their own, running out winners by 2—0. On Saturday against the Gordons, the team did not show up so well. For the first five minutes they pressed the Fort team very hard and Drew and Sherman both missed when well placed. After that the Gordons had nearly all the play until half time—with occasional bursts by the C. F. C. forwards. Anscombe, in goal, although the soldiers were doing a lot of shooting, had very little to do. Goal kicks were numerous but not one really good shot was put in. In fact the only decent shot all through the game was the one that scored—though had not Wright let it strike his knee, Anscombe would have saved it. During the second moiety the game was more equal and very exciting. The Calcutta forwards worked hard but were badly served by their halves. Pooler, especially, being very poor. He was, however, unwell, and it might have been better for the home team had they put in a substitute. O'Shea was palpably "done" by half time and did not play up to his form besides, while McConnell, who took the field at very short notice, has had very little practice this season and was far from showing the form he was in two years ago. The backs were good—Wright, with the exception of the goal episode, played very well and was slightly the better of the two. Oliver was slow. He is a mighty kick but seems to forget that it is very necessary for a back to be able to take the ball quickly. The Gordons were all uniformly good and were much quicker on the ball than Calcutta. Spence, their old skipper, made his re-entry to the team, and played a very sound game. Their backs and halves are good and, could the forwards only improve their shooting, the team would be much more formidable than they are at present.

THIS makes the third defeat they have administered to Calcutta this season, the margin of victory being one goal in each instance, all of them more or less lucky. The first was from a penalty, the second a doubtful one from a corner kick and Saturday's came off Wright's leg when the goalkeeper would otherwise have caught it. One goal, however, just about represents the difference between the teams which is principally due to the superior training of the Fort men.

The crowd at the game was the largest we have ever seen round a football field in Calcutta, not less than 15,000 at the lowest computation, being present. The Gordons Pipe Band turned out and gave their usual picturesque display.

THE Customs-Rangers match on the Dalhousie ground was a keen struggle, Customs running out winners by 2-0. The result was not unexpected and it now behoves the Customs to go in for some special training for the final. A win would put the crown on their achievements this season and their record would then be—Hockey League, Beighton Hockey Cup and the I. F. A. Shield. The tie will be refereed by Corpl. White, Seaforth Highlanders, and the linesmen will be Messrs. Williamson (Dalhousie) and Taylor (Rangers). A charge of rupees two and rupee one will be made for admission to the ground of the C. F. C. on the occasion, the proceeds going to Charity. The South end will be reserved for soldiers and members of the Customs Club who will have free access to the chairs behind the goal.

IN reference to my notes of last week's anent the Y. M. C. A.-Mohan Bagan match, Mr. Reynolds, the Secretary, writes to point out that it was owing to an extraordinary series of misfortunes that the Young Men had to turn out with such a scratch team. Three of their players had to be on duty and two met with accidents. They only knew of one of these before Saturday morning, and did their best to fill the vacancies but could not get hold of their men. No fewer than six of their usual XI were unable to play.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. HORNETS.—Heavy rain had caused the postponement of the games in the Harwood League on Monday and Tuesday and the game between the above teams was the first played last week. The ground was in a wretched condition and play, which was in the Hornets' territory throughout, was of a scrambling nature. The Telegraphs scored seven goals, Conquest, William, Ryan, Asplin (2) and Holman (2) being credited with the points. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Deroux, goal; Millard and Topper, backs; Molyneux, Osborne and E. Faulkner, halves; A. Faulkner, George, Garrick, Peters and Dudley, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Taylo and Crutchley, backs; Willian, Lewis and Redford halves; Green, Conquest, Ryan, Asplin and Holman, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 17th instant a closely contested game ending in favour of the Y.M.C.A. The first half was level and ended without score but after the interval the Y.M.C.A attacked determinedly and followed up an unconverted corner by scoring a goal through Pack. The Gymkhana pressed but lost chances and, the Young Men returning to the attack, Pack scored again from a corner. The closing stages of the game, during which rain fell, were in favour of the Y.M.C.A. but there was no further scoring. Teams :—

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and Templeton backs; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves; Brown, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Chapman, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Blore, goal; Lane and Harwood, backs; Johnson Osborne, (Capt.) and Bellanny, halves; Kauffman, Cook, Taylor, Symes and A. N. Other, forwards.

Third Round.

DALHOUSIE B. vs. TELEGRAPH ASSOCIATION.—Played on the 15th instant ending in a draw 2 all. Replayed on Monday, the Telegraph Association winning by 2 goals to nil.

74TH BATTY., R. F. A vs. "A" Co. GORDONS.—These teams met on the 15th instant at Barrackpore, the game ending, in spite of extra time in a pointless draw. The tie was replayed on Monday, the game still remaining undecided, neither side having scored.

Boxing.

THE ENGLISH CHAMPIONSHIP MAZE.

WHO is the middle-weight champion of the world? The welter-weight champion? The light-heavy-weight champion? The light-weight champion of England? Or any other champion of England, bar the heavy-weight? We do not have to go back far to pick up the threads that will start us on our investigations.

Beginning with English ring titles first, we are safe in saying there are only two men who can properly lay claim to championships in their class; "Iron" Hague, the heavy-weight; and Tom Thomas, the middle-weight. The recent rearrangement of boxing weights by the National Sporting Club has dethroned all other holders from their high positions, and by introducing three new classes—the fly, welter, and light-heavy-weight—has given added opportunities to boxers to claim and win championships which they have neglected to take advantage of. "Iron" Hague, retains his full honours as heavy-weight champion of England, because no system of weights could alter the poundage of his class, and also because he has won his title since the issue of the new scale. Tom Thomas retains his title also, because he is still within the weight allowed for middle-weights by the new schedule. The other classes are wide open at present. They will not remain so long, however, as during the coming season the National Sporting Club intends to offer a series of contests that will have for its main object the determining of who those missing champions are. The start will be made, in the light-weight division in October, when Fred Welsh and Johnny Summers will contest the English title at the new weight-limit of 9st. 9lb.

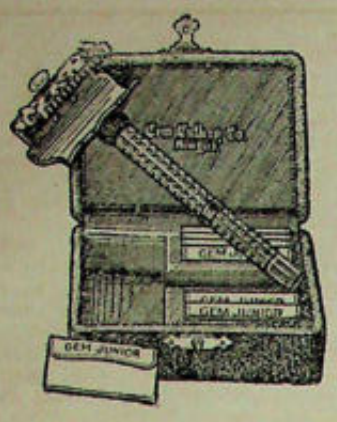
It is intimated that this match will fall through if Summers should be defeated by Jimmy Britt next month, but just why such an attitude should be adopted when an English championship is at stake we are at a loss to understand. It is argued, and properly so, that "Iron" Hague did not sacrifice his English title when defeated by Sam Langford, as the latter, being a "foreigner," was not an eligible aspirant for the national premiership. Britt is also a "foreigner," and if we are to be consistent, the same rule that applies to the heaviest title should be allowed to regulate the minor. As matters stand at present Summers has the best claim on the English light-weight championship—his summary disposal of Jack Goldswain, the previous legitimate holder, at a weight even inside the present allowance, giving him all preference of distinction. But in the office of the Sporting Life, on the day of his arrival, Fred Welsh, being informed of the utter lack of a recognised champion in his class, laid formal claim to the title, and stated his eagerness to establish his full rights to it by meeting and defeating all contenders. The result of the contest between Welsh and Summers will give us a firmly established champion in their most interesting class. We think that clears up the light-weight situation so far as England goes, so that includes it with the middle and heavy-weight, already disposed of.

But we have five other divisions under the newly adopted scale, viz.:—Fly-weight, 8st.; bantams, 8st. 6lb.; feathers, 9st. welters, 10st. 7lb.; and light- heavy-weights, 12st. 7lb.; all of which present most speculative probabilities at best. Our American cousins admit that, however, deficient we may be in classy big men, our "little fellows" can hold their own against the world, and it is not beyond possibility that the lads who are to win the honours in our smaller divisions will also annex world's championships. The fly-weight class is an experimental concession to those who demanded that lads about the weight allowed should not be asked to give away pounds when seeking high laurels. In this country, particularly, we have a host of 8-stoners or close to it who are scientific and aggressive, and the title is sure to change hands frequently before it finds a resting place. Were "Digger" Stanley able to weigh in at the weight—some claim that he can—it does not look as though the title would get beyond him. But when Stanley weighed for his recent contest with Jimmy Walsh, the scale showed 8st. 4½lb., and the "Digger" did not look to the writer as though he could take off the extra 4½.. and be fit. Charlie Dew, Jim Kenrick, Albert Cocksedge, and many others of high quality are well within the weight, and may become troublesome factors when the trying-out process is reached if they enter for it.

The English bantam title is also a matter of dispute, and has been for some time. Partisans of Owen Moran, Joe Bowker, and "Digger" Stanley, to mention only the most prominent, all claim it for their favourite. But under the new schedule Moran is hopelessly out of it, while Bowker would have much difficulty in taking off the pound or two necessary for him to scale. The past season, however, produce a couple of likely candidates, and another interesting competition is in prospect. In the feather army, the most numerous that we have, there is a smaller element of doubt. Big as he looks in his clothes, Jem Driscoll has proved time after time that he comes well within the 9st. limit, and he seems to be the most likely successor to Spike Robson, who last held the title. But Driscoll's pretensions are defied by Owen Moran, and the Birmingham boxer has given such an excellent account of himself whenever called upon that he is entitled to the fullest respect. It does not seem, however, that we will have to look beyond the better of this pair to find a bona-fide feather-weight champion, at least, for the present, and we are only voicing the sentiments of all who love the game when we hope that they will meet soon to decide it. The Americans have gauged the mettle of both Driscoll and Moran, and each openly confesses that the inducements held out to settle their rivalry in America exceed any to be obtained in their own land. How strange, then, it would be if they boxed for the English feather-weight championship in America! Would the boxing authorities of this country acknowledge the title of the victor? We think not.

The welter class, a division absolutely new to the English ring, is also pregnant with possibilities. Andrew Jephtha claims to be welter-weight champion of England, but do readers believe he is the best of that class, even if he can make the weight? Not many. Jephtha's successive defeats of late at the hands of Connolly, Lewis, and Lancaster put him out of the running. The welter class seems to have been made for Young Joseph, Goldswain, and their like. True, they may be called upon to give away couple of pounds to occasional adversaries, but when 10st. is exceeded that difference is not near the handicap it would be to Driscoll and Moran, for instance, who are both pounds within the feather-weight maximum. It looks to us as though the mantle of the new class will fall upon the shoulders of Young Joseph or the man who defeats him at the weight.

The light-heavy-weights, also a new division, is more mystifying. All our best big men are real big men, few of them coming below 15st. Were Jack Kingsland boxing he might have a good try for the new honours, but it is believed he has retired permanently. Pte. Harris, of the 2nd Coldstream Guards, who is still young and improving, looks like becoming an ideal light-heavy-weight, but there are not less than a score who would laugh to scorn the suggestion that he has the beating of them in him, and each is entitled to a fair hearing. If the National Sporting Club goes through with its intentions, there are lots of fun ahead in this class.



Riding.

NERVE.

MANY are the qualifications that a fox-hunter must possess before he can be described as "a good man to hounds," for he must be a firstclass horseman, have a great knowledge of hunting, and an excellent eye for a country; but perhaps the most important factor of all in getting to hounds is that indefinable quality known as nerve, and which will often out, at any rate for the time being, indifferent horsemen, and those ignorant of the most elementary principles of hunting, into the first night, and make them appear to the casual observer to be well versed in the many intricacies of "the noble science."

Good nerve appears to be of two kinds—active and passive. A horseman possessed of the first fully appreciates his danger, and is thoroughly alive to all the perils that he may have to encounter, but nevertheless resolves to face them without flinching. In the second case the rider (in this class there are to be found many ladies) does not seem to be aware of any risk he may run, and therefore gallops on, in that state where ignorance is indeed bliss, until rudely awakened by some untoward circumstance which occurs with that lightning rapidity that characterises so many accidents in the hunting field. Then, perhaps, his eyes are at last opened, while, as likely as not, his nerve is irretrievably ruined, for this sort of nerve is often not so lasting as the other kind.

Courage often arises from a high sense of self-respect, which will not let its possessor show fear, however nervous he may actually feel, and this is a splendid example of the mind conquering matter. There are several things which have great influence on one's nerve, such as sudden shock, ill health, and even weather conditions. For instance, a gloomy day has a marked effect on the spirits of many people, while a disordered liver, in combination with a raw four-year-old, will try the pluck of most of us. Napoleon, who suffered in this way, thought the same, for he wrote: "Without this accursed bile no great battles would be won"; and has not Jorrocks said that fox-hunting is "the image of war." If one could but analyse the feelings of many hard riders, it would be found that not a few of them are men of undoubtedly nervous temperament, and this often accounts for the irritability displayed by some M.F.H.'s in the hunting-field. Although nerves of this kind give one a keener perception of dangers, yet at the same time it will be generally found in cases of this sort that all the faculties are highly developed, and consequently a quick grasp of situations often accompanies this form of nerves, which aids a man in riding to hounds, for he at once seizes his opportunities, and notices things that would remain unseen by men of more lymphatic natures.

Many people labour under the wrong impression that a nervous man must necessarily lack courage, but this is not so; in fact, the reverse is often the case, for it is a far greater effort for a nervous man to do a deed of daring than one who is not troubled in this way, and far more true courage is displayed. If any proof of this be wanted, let us take the horse for an example, for in this respect all animals, whether human or otherwise, are governed by much the same laws. No more nervous animals exist under the sun than our equine companions, yet when once their blood is up they will face the highest brooks, the thickest of bullfinches, and the highest of timber with unflinching courage, which sets a splendid example to many a poor quaking human soul. The great sympathy which often exists between horse and man is undoubtedly transmitted through the medium of the nerves, and the union is so close that a hunter often knows the mind of his rider better than that worthy does himself; hence arises the old and true saying, "Throw your heart over and your horse is bound to follow." All horses will, of course, refuse at times, but if a hunter persistently objects to taking a fence within his power, don't turn your attention to the four-footed animal; look at the biped, and a hundred to one the cause will be at once revealed. Then, again, the fox-hound is by nature extremely nervous; this statement, I am sure, will be heartily endorsed by anyone who has walked puppies, yet there is no dog which displays greater dash and gameness; in fact, these qualities may almost be said to be the characteristics of the breed.

Courage is rightly supposed to be the outcome of high breeding, yet it will be observed that the higher bred any animal is, the more nervous it will often be; in fact, this is so obviously the case that examples are unnecessary, for every one of us can call to mind many cases of the kind.

True courage and good nerve are undoubtedly gifts, yet they may to a great extent be developed by judicious management. Health should be the first thing attended to, whilst early hours coupled with strict morality tend to allay nervous irritation. I may here incidentally mention that good wholesome field sports have a far greater moralising influence than any number of long-winded discourses. Did not poor Whyte Melville say that after a day's hunting he felt like a man who had done a good deed? But to return to my former subject. Doing things that require pluck have a remarkably stimulating effect on the nerves, but at the same time care should be taken if possible not to do anything, at any rate at first, that is calculated to bring about disastrous results. Blows on the head, more than any other region of the body, seem to take the courage out of one quickest, and brave indeed is the man who, after being thrown on his head, can remount his horse, and ride on with his accustomed vigour. Women, whose organisations are for the most part more delicate that men's, often display the greatest pluck in the hunting field, which leads one to wonder why this should be. Many have undauntedly true courage, and others ride hard from mere ignorance, while vanity in not a few cases is, I suspect, the cause of their running so many perils. In this connection I may say that when some time ago I asked a dentist, who had a large and varied practice, as to what class of patients displayed the most pluck, and he replied, "We have the least trouble with school-girls," I blushed for my sex.

Many people who are extremely nervous at the thoughts of some impending disaster or crisis, display the greatest pluck and never lose their heads when their blood is up and the danger is actually present. A sailor who fought in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and was present on board the Inflexible at the bombardment of Alexandria, told me that before he went into action for the first time he felt, to use his own expression, "in a funk," but that directly the firing commenced, and he found himself actively employed, all thoughts of danger passed away from him and nothing but the work before him occupied his mind. It will no doubt be remembered that the Inflexible was the ship that received that now famous shell which marked the name of its makers on a bollard, and killed in its passage more than one of the crew.

In conclusion we may say that most people have good nerve in some shape or form: for instance, the man who would not get on the back of a horse for a fortune, might be able to make a speech before a vast audience, and display the greatest coolness both before and during the course of his oration. Again, a man who, though a good performer, might feel nervous about singing a song in public, would perhaps steer a small sailing boat in a heavy sea (and nothing requires more nerve) with the greatest self-possession, and never lose his head for a single instant.

The Story Teller.

THE FREEING OF EVA.

JACK STURT was by way of enjoying a holiday at the seaside. But sooth to say the enjoyment promised to be of a very negative character, and already this young man felt rather at a loose end. The light hearted girl cousins for whose sake he had come, had been prevented from leaving home at the last moment, and he had arrived to find a telegram instead of the expected boisterous welcome.

That was yesterday, and now his morning swim having been followed by breakfast, behold him sauntering rather disconsolately along the asphalted parade, looking enviously at a crowd who all seemed to be enjoying themselves thoroughly.

They were the usual holiday lot of sunburnt girls in gay prints and muslins, with their attending men kind in light suits and straw hats.

But soon his wandering eye had detected a pair, who, like himself, seemed out of tune with their surroundings. A tall slight girl in black, walking beside a bath chair which contained a striking looking old woman.

Though her white face, grey hair and method of taking the air suggested fragility, this was emphatically contradicted by the hard bright eyes, compressed mouth, and determined chin. Nor was there any indication of failing health in the energetic gestures, and high pitched clear voice. The girl who walked besides the chair had a lovely pale face with weary sapphire eyes. The sweet mouth with its tired droop, and little pointed chin, were signs of a compliant unselfish disposition somewhat lacking in backbone. A nature in fact all too easily dominated by any stronger will with which she happened to be brought in contact.

With the impetuosity of youth Sturt instantly decided that this pretty girl was bullied and miserable. Pity naturally excited interest and he determined to find out all about the pair. This proved easy enough, being effected by the simple means of bestowing a florin on the bath-chair man. Their names were Mrs. and Miss Morrell; mother and daughter.

Instantly on hearing the name, Sturt remembered having heard all about them from some friends who had met the Morrells abroad.

The pity he had felt for the girl on first seeing her was quite inadequate to her sad lot.

Mrs. Morrell was a truly abominable old woman. She had used this daughter of hers as a slave; for the girl was sweet and easy going to a fault. Her will never strong, now after a long course of subjection was completely in abeyance. The terrible old mother dominated her child utterly, and forced her to wait on her hand and foot.

Several men had been attracted by the girl's sweet face, but Mrs. Morrell took good care to give no one a chance of taking away her devoted servant.

When one admirer, bolder and more persistent that the rest, had continued to seek the Morrells out in spite of all discouragement, the mother fearful that her useful slave might be snatched away in spite of all precautions, suddenly left with her daughter at a moment's notice.

Moreover so well did she lay her plans, that the young man's leave came to an end without his being able to discover where they had gone.

Now that he had seen the girl her pitiful story roused Sturt to immense indignation, and he determined to make an effort at freeing her from her bondage.

The idea of winning the maiden for himself did not for a moment occur to him, for deep as was his compassion, it could not but be mixed with a certain amount of contempt for a creature who was so poor spirited as to make no effort at freeing herself.

It would be wearisome to describe the ingenuity Sturt displayed during the next fortnight in establishing himself in the good graces of the formidable mother.

Afterwards he confessed to me that during the fortnight he spent over his manœuvres he told lies so numerous, and so skilfully conceived that he felt afterwards thoroughly competent to instruct Annanias and Sapphira in their own art. One of the fictions by which he inspired confidence, was a wholly imaginary story of how he was enamoured of a girl of great wealth and beauty. In fact he quite enlisted Mrs. Morrell's sympathies in this wholly imaginary story of unrequited love.

Eva Morrell had never before been brought into such intimate relations with any man. It was therefore only natural that the starved heart should have warmed to the easy mannered energetic young fellow who was now their constant companion.

This little spark of friendship soon glowed and kindled her frozen feelings, until at last a great fire, which we call love, burnt beneath her breast.

She herself, poor child, was quite unaware what these new and irresistable feelings really were—only she felt that somehow the world from being blank and cheerless had suddenly become very good. Also she seemed always to be saying to herself that Jack Sturt was a dear good fellow.

She wondered a little when doing her hair in the mornings to seen how rounded her cheeks were becoming, and that they were decked with a hitherto unknown pink. These new feelings which had entered Eva's gentle heart passed quite unnoticed by her companion.

Sturt was too modest to dream for one instant that the priceless gift of a maid's first love had been bestowed on him unasked.

Mrs. Morrell was too utterly selfish and self centred to observe that the sapphires of her daughter's eyes had taken an added lustre, or that the erstwhile wan cheeks were tinged with delicate rose.

Sturt's plans for rescuing Eva Morrell from her state of slavery had been somewhat nebulous, but now that he seemed firmly established in the mother's good graces he began to think it was time to put some kind of scheme into action. The greatest obstacle seemed to be the girl herself. On the very few occasions when Sturt had an opportunity of speaking to her tete a tete she dismissed his suggestions, that he should leave her mother for a time and stay with her cousins, as quite impracticable; Mrs. Morrell could not possibly be left, she was far too delicate.

One morning Mrs. Morrell announced that her lawyer was coming the following day and that she would be completely occupied for several hours. "Would Mr. Sturt very kindly take Eva on the parade?"

Here at last was an opportunity to effect something, and Sturt tried to think out some great plan. All he eventually settled on was to take the girl out for these few precious hours, and see to it that she thoroughly enjoyed herself!

Next day it was glorious with a glassy sea and a heat haze on the water. Sturt took Eva out to the pier, and there, moored at the steps, showed her a little motor boat. "I am going to take you to 'Cavern Island' it is only ten miles off and we shall get there in an hour and a half. See I have a basket full of things, and we shall have a jolly little picnic all by ourselves: the man there is not coming for I always manage the motor myself."

Who could resist such a prospect? Certainly not poor Eva who had never before had the chance of an excursion like this.

As soon as the boat's head was pointed seawards, Sturt started the little engine and they tok-tokked away across the sunny sea.

What a delight the short voyage was to Eva, and how excited and pleased she was when the little island appeared close ahead. Sturt steered the little boat to a natural rock jetty, and having stepped ashore made fast alongside. Then he helped Eva up for it was a bit high the tide only being half up; last of all he got the basket ashore, and they carried it between them to the cavern.

The cave was a huge one, its wide mouth looking seaward, while the floor was level and dry being a long way above high water mark.

After exploring the cavern, Sturt suggested that he should catch some fish, and cook them all fresco for lunch. He had brought a short sea rod, some tackle and bait. Below the cavern was a convenient rock from which deep water could be easily reached. They sat there happily fishing, nor were Sturt's efforts unfruitful for he caught several little bream and rock whiting.

Then having collected some drift wood, and made a fire, he deftly prepared the fish and grilled them on a grid which he improvised out of an old piece of telegraph wire he had found.

So contented was Sturt, and so charmed with the unconcealed delight of his companion, that all his vague plans for persuading her to leave her mother were for the time forgotten.

As to Eva the pleasure of this unconventional picnic, with a companion whom she already loved unconsciously, was absolutely perfect. The magic wand had touched all things that day, so that every incident would remain golden in her memory.

Her cheeks glowed her eyes were like stars; while she displayed a quick sympathy and ready wit, which no one at other times would have dreamed that she possessed. Sturt marvelled to find that this girl whom he had thought dull and uninteresting, in spite of her sweet face, had suddenly become entirely charming.

The time fled. . . At last while Eva repacked the basket, Sturt went off to look to the boat.

Then he found that a sudden and unexpected misfortune had occurred. . . The rock on which they had landed, and alongside which the boat had been moored, had an overhanging ledge. Under this the gunwale had caught until the rising tide had swamped the boat.

There she lay visible enough in the clear water; but raising her without assistance was quite out of the question—nor, if she could have been got up was it likely that the engine would run, without a thorough overhauling.

Sturt went back and broke the news to Eva. The girl was horror-struck for it was evident to the meanest intelligence that their imprisonment was likely to be a long one. They climbed to the top of the island and scanned the sea. But one of those sea fogs so common in fine weather, had come, and prevented their seeing more than a very short distance all round.

The girl sat down on the turf and burst into tears.

"Oh what will mother think! How terribly angry she will be!"

Jack Sturt sat down by her and tried to cheer up. "I expect they will soon send out to see what has happened; the man I got the boat from knew quite well where we were going."

But Eva was not to be comforted. "Look at the fog! they will never attempt to get out here till it clears. We shall have to stay here perhaps two or three days."

Jack put his arm protectingly round the girl's shoulders.

"Come, Eva, trust me to look after you. If the worst comes to the worst, you will be quite all right in the cave with some dry grass to lie on. I can catch enough fish to keep us from starving, and there is a rain pool which will do to make tea with. Can't you trust me to look after you?"

"Yes, I do trust you" and the girl raised her eyes which looked the lovelier for the tears clinging to the long lashes.

Jack began to lose his head. He bent the arm about Eva's shoulders, and drew her nearer to him.

"Tell me Eva dear, don't you like me a little?" and he put his disengaged hand under her chin, and turned her face still more towards his.

For some moments he gazed into her deep blue eyes so near his own, and then saw there such utter delicious surrender that straightway he pressed the sweet face to his and covered it with kisses. At last with his lips on hers "Kiss me! Kiss me!" he pleaded in a whisper. First shyly, then fondly, her lips gave him all he asked.

"Tell me now, child, supposing your mother disapproves of our engagement—what will you do? are you going to give me up?"

Eva hesitated for a moment. "Of course, it will make me very miserable if mother does not like it, but. . . ." and here she looked at him trustingly "I will do whatever you think best. . . .Oh I could never give you up now" and she hid her face in his breast and clung to him.

Then Sturt knew the rescue was complete, though brought about in a fashion that he had never intended. Yet he was very content. The closed bud of this childish heart had only wanted the sun of love to make it blossom into a glorious flower. What a keen joy it was to think that he had been the cause of this marvellous transformation.

The flower had opened, and he swore in his heart that it would be his life's work to keep it from ever drooping. . . . .

They wandered about collecting grass for the cave, and when five o'clock came, Sturt decided that a high tea with fish was the kind of meal suitable to marooned mariners, so set to work and caught more rockwhiting. Meanwhile Eva prepared the tea with the help of the rain water pool, and a tin of condensed milk.

They made a happy meal. At last dusk came on, and Eva began to feel nervous at the idea of night in the cave. Jack made her a comfortable grass bed well inside, while he put another for himself at the mouth.

Then Eva undid her hair which fell in a cloud on her shoulders, and made her look like a child. After that Sturt insisted in taking off her little shoes, and then making her lie down, covered her with a cloak. Having done all this he bent down and kissed her goodnight.

"Don't go far away Jack I feel rather frightened and like to know you are near."

The girl's complete trust in him filled Sturt's heart with tenderness "God bless you and make you sleep well dear child." And he went off to his own shake down.

Jack was waked early by the rays of the rising sun striking him in the face. The fog had gone, and the sea was sparkling in the level beams.

He went off to a secluded spot and washed as well as he could. The absence of a razor and the thought of his unshaven cheeks rather worried him.

When he came back he found Eva looking astonishingly clean and pretty. They kissed, and then set to work to make breakfast. The fish fortunately were still on the bite, and neither the tea, the rain water pool, nor the condensed milk were finished. They were making a very creditable breakfast, when a hail from the water startled them both.

A boat had come for them, and as there were several men on board, and the tide was low, they soon succeeded in raising their little sunken craft, and then went back with it in tow. . . . . .

The scene that occurred when the shipwrecked pair appeared before Mrs. Morrell was a terrible one. The old woman rose from her chair eyes blazing with fury—the first outbreak of her wrath was directed on the unfortunate Eva.

"How dared you go off like that, without telling me! and what do you mean you shameless creature by staying away the whole night like that and ruining your reputation you abandoned, immodest." . . . . Here Jack Sturt broke in white with anger.

"The whole thing was an accident—it was not Eva's fault in the least; and as we want to marry each other, it does'nt really matter a bit."

This was adding fuel to the flame of Mrs. Morrell's wrath. "You shall never marry her, leave the house this instant. You are a mean low adventurer! a common seducer!" . . . andthen, wonder of wonders, the dove turned. . . . .

"Jack is not an adventurer mother, and I mean to marry him—nothing will make me give him up"—and Eva took her lover's arm and stood half in front of him, with her head up and flashing eyes like a little lioness. . . .

At the astounding sight of her meek daughter defying her, Mrs. Morrell collapsed whimpering into a chair. From that hour the victory was won: mother and daughter had changed positions.

Eva once having discovered the delights of emancipation, continued to press her advantage.

When a week later Jack regarded the now amenable Mrs. Morrell, he smiled and thought to himself. "After all she was a bully and like all bullies a coward at heart."

"Jabu."

Wheeling.

N. C. U. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Fine sport was witnessed at Portsmouth on Saturday, the 26th June, the N. C. U. having chosen the track at Alexander Park, North End, as the venue for the decision of the quarter-mile, one mile, and five miles championships. Additional interest was lent to the meeting by the fact that C. B. Kingsbury, who held the mile, is a native and resident of Portsmouth, and naturally the sporting fraternity wanted to see him hold his own on the home track against the pick of the amateur riders. That they did so in one event is now known, but in Bailey they saw a world beater, and the accident to his pedal in the heat of the quarter-mile undoubtedly robbed him of a triple victory. Kingsbury rode well, had good men in Johnson and Morisetti to beat, and deserved all the applause he received from the gate, which numbered probably nearly 20,000, a record for the track.

When racing started it was dull, and rain soon fell, but not very heavily until later. The sun came out and kept the temperature fairly warm. The quarter-mile championship heats were won by the favourites excepting the last, when W. Morisetti, the mile London champion, beat Ben Jones easily. The riding of the young Italian was the feature of the meeting next to the fine riding of Bailey, and in scoring two seconds he did more than even those who knew him expected. That he would have been placed in the five is certain, but punctures robbed him. The track in parts was most destructive to the men, Victor Johnson, L. Meredith, W. Morisetti, and C. W. White being amongst the victims. In the mile, Bailey showed the crowd what he could do when he had ordinary luck, and again in the five the riding he exhibited was magnificent.

Quarter-Mile.

(Holder, Vic L. Johnson, Rovers R.C.C., Birmingham; standard time—32secs.).

Heat 1: V. L. Johnson, Rovers R.C.C., 1; H. T. Johnson, Putney A.C., 2; A. G. Cheverton, Isle of Wight C.C., 0; A. W. Vallor, Brighton Mitre C.C., 0. Vic Johnson led all the way and won by one and a half lengths. Time—34⅕secs. Heat 2: C. B. Kingsbury, Portsmouth N.E.C.C., 1; E. Payne, Worcester, 2; C. W. White, Scunthorpe, 0; L. Psalty, Poly. C.C., 0. Won by a length Time—33⅖secs. Heat 3: A. J. Denny, Rovers R.C.C., 1; E. B. Sims, Bristol South C.C., 2; W. J. Bailey, Poly. C.C., 0. Bailey slipped his pedal at the start, and Denny won by five lengths. Time—32⅖secs. Heat 4: W. Morisetti, Paddington C.C., 1; Ben Jones, Wigan C. and A.C., 2; S. J. Burbidge, Portsmouth N.E.C.C, 0. Won by one and a half lengths. Time—31⅘secs.

Denny, on the inside, held the lead for a short distance, when Kingsbury from the back went in front and took the inside. Morisetti tried hard to get by, but suffered defeat by inches; Johnson, on the outside, just came too late. Time—32secs.

One Mile.

(Holder, C. B. Kingsbury, Portsmouth North End C.C.; standard time—2mins. 15secs.).

Heat 1: Ernest Payne, Worcester, 1; Ben Jones, Wigan C. and A.C., 2; A. G. Cheverton, Isle of Wight C.C., 0. An easy win for Payne. Time—2mins. 33⅗secs Heat 2: W. J. Bailey, Poly. C.C., 1; L. Meredith, Paddington C.C., 2; W. J. Alder, Portsmouth North End C.C., 0. Bailey made no mistake in winning his heat, beating Meredith by half a length. Time—2mins. 28⅖secs. Heat 3: W. Morisetti, Paddington C.C., 1; V. L. Johnson, Rovers R.C.C., 0. There were only two in this heat, and Morisetti rode home alone, through Johnson puncturing. Time—2mins. 36⅗secs. Heat 4: C. B. Kingsbury, Portsmouth North End C.C., 1; A. J. Denny, Rovers R.C.C., 2; E. B. Sims, Bristol South, 0; C. W. White, Scunthorpe, 0. Denny made a bold bid for this heat, but Kingsbury made two good sprints, and secured the verdict by half a length. Time—2mins. 30⅗secs.

Ernest Payne, Worcester	...	...	... 0

Bailey led from the start for a lap, the pace being done in turns. Kingsbury led at the bell, and Payne soon after shot out. Bailey, however, was not done with, and coming away at the home bank, he ran out an easy winner by one and a half lengths from Morisetti, Kingsbury being only half a length or less behind the holder of the London mile championship. Time—2mins. 41⅖secs.

Five Miles.

(Holder, Ben Jones, Wigan C. and A. C.; standard time—12mins. 50secs.)

Heat 1: W Morisetti, Paddington, 11; Ben Jones Wigan C. and A.C., 2; L. Psalty, Polytechnic C.C., 3; B. Stace, 0; C. W. White, Scunthorpe, punctured: Leon Meredith punctured; Ernest Payne, Worcester, 0; W. J. Alden, Portsmouth N.E. C.C., 0; P. A. Tibbs, Camberley Wheelers, 0; H. T. Johnson, non-starter. Jones led at the bell, and kept in front until entering the home banking, when Morisetti put on a smart sprint, and beat Jones easily in 12mins. 11⅘secs. Heat 2: W. J. Bailey, Polytechnic C.C., 1; A. J. Denny, Rovers R.C.C., 2; C. B. Kingsbury, Portsmouth North End C.C., 3; S. J. Burbidge, Portsmouth North End C.C., 0; A. W. Valler, Brighton Mitre C.C., punctured.

Ben Jones (holder), Wigan C. and A.C.		...	3

W. Morisetti, Paddington C.C. punctured; L. Psalty, Polytechnic C. C., punctured; C. B. Kingsbury, 0.

At two laps to go, Bailey had the lead on the inside and kept it at the bell. Kingsbury and Jones both tried their utmost to get by, and Denny in the last 200 yards made a determined effort to pass Bailey, but the young Polytechnic champion had no trouble in giving all the go-by, and ran out a winner of his second championship by half a length, Jones being about 5 lengths away, with Kingsbury sitting up. Time—13mins. 37⅘secs.

One Lap Handicap (open)—Second Round.—Heat 1: A. Theobaldi, 30 yards, 1; A Hillyer, 16, 2. Time—42⅖secs. Heat 2: S. E. Alder, 60, 1; A. G. Cheverton, 45, 2. Time—13⅖secs. Heat 3: W. J. Brooklands.

The experiment of holding an important meeting in the middle of the week at Brooklands proved to be a success, for yesterday there was the largest attendance of the season at the Weybridge enclosure. The principal item in an interesting programme was the attack by Felice Nazzaro, the famous Italian driver, on the flying start records for the kilometre and mile. In a preliminary run he was unofficially timed to do 97 miles per hour, as against his own track record of 121·64 miles, accomplished in June of last year, when he covered a lap in 81·85secs. In the attempt on record he did 105½ miles per hour, and so was a long way behind Marriott's speeds of 121·58 for the kilometre and 127·6 for the mile, made at the Ormond Beach races of three years ago.

An important event was a race for Grand Prix cars, and it promised to be interesting although drawing only four entries. The 59·6 h.p. Brasier, however, when leading by a quarter of a mile, in the second lap, broke the petrol pipe, and had to retire, leaving the 60 h.p. Napier, driven by F. G. Cundy, an easy victory. The third Montagu Cup was won by Mr. H. P. Egleston on a 41·9 h.p. Bianchi, which, although nearly on the limit mark seemed to be much the fastest car in the race, and very easily finished first.

Chukker.

At a popular regatta some of the members of the Royal Thames Yacht Club noticed a smartly painted craft flying a flag upon which were the letters R.I.Y.C. They interviewed the owner, found him a jolly good fellow, and invited him, as a member of their club, to join them at dinner.

He readily accepted the invite, but assured them he did not belong to any club, having bought the flag with the yacht.

"We are very sorry," said the chairman, "but we must ask to take it down."

"Oh certainly, gentlemen," replied the guest.

Next morning some of the members noticed the letters M.O.B.Y.C., upon his flag, and inquired the name of the club he had joined. He replied:

"Well, gentlemen, that means My Own Blooming Yacht Club! Good-day to you!"

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

AMERICA'S POLO TRIUMPH.

ENGLISH prestige at sport has received another great blow, as following on the successes of Colonial footballers and cricketers and the victories of foreign rowing men and athletes over the British comes the severe defeat of the old country at its pet game—polo.

Ever since the late John Watson and his team went to America to win the International Cup presented by the Westchester Club of New York, twenty-three years ago. Englishmen have been living in the comfortable conviction that in whatever other branch of sport Great Britain might be defeated it was safe at least in polo.

Various ill-equipped efforts of the Americans to regain the trophy only served to strengthen that conviction. And now the awakening has come. It has been discovered at last that England has met its masters in a game at which it imagined itself to be practically unassailable, and the blow is severe.

Excuses of course are numerous, but when they are all done with the truth must be told—and that is, the representatives of the old country have been beaten by players better both as a team and individually.

No more perfectly balanced side has ever been know in International polo than the four men in the brothers L. and M. Waterbury, H. P. Whitney and Devereux Milburn, who hail from the Meadowbrook Club. They play with a swing and unison which carry them far, and in this respect they are vastly superior to the American team of 1902, which was split and weakened by internal dissensions.

The two test matches afforded a remarkable contrast in styles. The English players almost without exception were slower in getting in their strokes than the Americans, and the latter had a greater variety of hits for every possible emergency. They had taken the trouble to specialize in their hitting, and their confidence in meeting the ball and their skill in goal hitting served them well.

If England had won either the first or the second of the International games and America had just carried off the cup in the third, England might have prided herself on saving her face. But in the first match, played on 23rd June, the Meadowbrooks scored 9 goals to 5, and their second win—making the best of three—was even more decisive, the holders having 8 goals to 2 hit against them.

That the home team would be so badly beaten as they were was never contemplated when the challenge from America was accepted by the Hurlingham Committee. It is plain that polo in England has not made appreciable progress during the past seven years. It may have more players than in 1902, but there are fewer really first class men, and few young players have come strongly to the front in recent years.

It is to be hoped that good will come out of these International defeats. Let us hope they will come as a stimulus to the younger English players to improve their game, than which there is none so well calculated to foster and develop the best attributes of sportsmanship and virile manhood. The knowledge that the International Cup has now gone to America should vanquish slackness and stagnation and inspire all lovers of the game with an ambition to get it back again.

Well wishers of British polo will hope that the day may not be far distant when England will be able to send to America a team as happily assorted, as carefully organised, and as well equipped in ponies as the Americans were this season. The Trans-Atlantic visitors proved to be good sportsmen in the truest sense, and since it is fated that England loses possession of the cup, Englishmen could not wish it to have been carried off by a more sporting team.

As regards the play it was the old story—a team of Americans whose every nerve and muscle and brain fibre were trained for the occasion, and drawn to the finest point of concentrated combination, against four Englishmen picked recently, and playing without the machine-like unity of their opponents.

The Americans were drilled like a crack regiment. The English team which played in the first match was on the second occasion half changed—Captain Hardress Lloyd, the all Ireland player, replacing Lord Wodehouse of the Old Cantabs, and Mr. Harry Rich of Wembley going to "number 1" instead of Captain H. Wilson. Although the new men were better ones, the team as a whole were weaker by change, while the Americans were stronger by continued playing together.

The display of Mr. Whitney's team in the game which settled the fate of the cup was probably the finest they gave since their appearance in London—impressive in the pace they set, the variety and astonishing daring of their strokes, and the match-winning combination of their long and wide passing. They were positively exhilarating to watch, and though there were few singled handed gallops their comparative absence was made up for by the more effective tactics of a well-organised team, in which there is perfect understanding. Some of the shots which brought off goals were extraordinary. An isolated one or two would have caused little comment, but the fact to remember is that they were constantly making such great strokes.

The most brilliant man in the game was Mr Milburn, and nothing more remarkable has ever been seen than his series of astonishing saves in quick succession when England kept up a really hot attack towards the close of the first half. The Englishmen did splendidly, considering all things. They were slower and quite ordinary by comparison, but one could not question their pluck. Captain Lloyd was quite good at back, and hit hard, too, and Mr. Rich in every way justified his selection by the committee. He stuck to his man doggedly and frequently "spoiled" him, but then Mr. Milburn is not an ordinary back. Both Mr. Freake and Mr. P. Nickalls did well, and at any rate they all had the knowledge that they did better than the English combination in the first test although they scored fewer goals.

Wrestling.

THE ALL-INDIA TOURNAMENT.

The All-India Wrestling Tournament which closed at Lucknow on the 25th instant, after an exhibition lasting five days, owed its origin to Messrs. F. Owen O'Neill, Barrister-at-Law, and de Hoxar, to whom great credit is due for their efforts to relieve the monotony of Lucknow during the monsoon season. But for the almost continuous rain the attendance of Europeans would doubtless have been larger, and on the final day the civil and military element was well represented. The tournament attracted vast numbers of Indians throughout. The wrestlers were drawn from Bengal, the Central Provinces, Punjab, Rajputana, Sind and the United Provinces and included many well-known champions of the art. Several of the men were of magnificent physique, and a conspicuous feature of the proceedings was the absence of friction and the good spirit which prevailed from start to finish. There were fifteen contests each day. Lucknow was well represented, but the local champions fared badly at the start. The best match on the second day was between Hari Chand, a pupil of Sandow, and Mangal Dhunna, of Muttra. The event, like many others, ended in a draw. On the third day Amir, of Ghazipur, beat Mirza-ud-din, of Lahore, after a prolonged contest. The principal match of the fourth day was between Ahmad Jan and Ismail, both of Khurja, which closed even, but as the former failed to appear in the final Ismail was declared the winner. Considerable interest was displayed on the closing day, in the bout between Gulloo of Amritsar and Samud of Lucknow. The Punjabi appeared to be the better man, but his opponent was far too wary and resisted all attempts to place him on his back. Good bouts were also witnessed between Bal of Patna and Rahim Buksh of Amritsar and between Ibrahim of Lucknow and Lallie of Benares, the former in each case being declared winner. Mr. F. Owen O'Neill refereed throughout the tournament, and the judges were Messrs De Hoxar and Reich.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Tollygunge Club brought their summer series to a most successful conclusion on Saturday last, the only drawback being the weather which was as wet as wet could be. The racing, however, was distinctly good and all the handicap events produced closed finishes

It was a great disappointment to see a field of two only go out in the Open Hurdle Race First Division for which trainers had asked specially and we do not expect to see this item figure again in a Tollygunge programme. The race was considered an absolute certainty for the top weight Queen of Gems of whom there were eager backers at 5 to 2 on, but the good thing only just came off as Mr. Evers got away with a terrible break on the light weight and the mare jumping badly lost ground at each hurdle. The superior pace, however, told at the finish and she was just able to get home by a neck.

There were four starters in the Second Division of which Electric Light was made favourite, Eureka Girl next well backed. These two and Lord Chester ran almost together practically the whole way till they got into the straight, when the first named pair came to the front and finished by making a dead-heat of it, with Lord Chester two lengths behind. We think, however, we would be inclined to back Eureka Girl again at the weights and she is evidently a better mare than was thought.

In the Alipore Cup Mr. Barrow riding a patient race on the top weight Gem was able to come up at the finish and beat the favourite, Badcock, by a length and a half. Mr. Evers' mount Border Manna, who was also well backed, proved a great disappointment as she only could run fourth.

The Jiu Jitsu Handicap produced a field of six of which Karolyi was made a very strong favourite at even money. Bayleaf, the top weight, made all the running till the straight when Karolyi came through on the inside and beat him at the finish very comfortably, giving the popular Dr. A. C. Taylor his maiden win.

They were backing a nice looking little pony called Ladysmith in the Polo Scurry, with money also for Chas K. and Lady Wilful. The last named, however, is something above smart among polo ponies for three furlongs and she came through the heavy mud like a good 'un and won comfortably by three and half lengths, the favourite a bad fourth.

There was also a considerable upset in the Monsoon Plate. Shakespeare, a small compact looking English chestnut, was given about as absolutely the certainty of the day, on reports of some wonderful gallops he was supposed to have done, and was quickly backed down to even money, odds on even being laid in some places. Pallas was next well backed and the pair getting best away from the gate fought it out between them the whole way. Shakespeare looked to have a little the best of things at the distance, but as so many of them do in their first race he died away just at the finish and Pallas secured the verdict by a neck. It is curious how often these big certainties go down, when it is a case of an animal's first run in the country. We have seen it happen twice in these four meetings and several times during the last cold weather and yet some of us never seem to learn that it is usually unwise to back a horse in its first race after a long time, however good its track gallops may be.

The afternoon's entertainment was concluded with the Cavalry Cup for which no less than nine gallant troopers competed. There was considerable difficulty in finding a jockey for the favourite as his owner who had intended to ride was unfortunately ill in bed with fever and the man who was going to take his place was not on the spot. However Mr. Dain very sportingly jumped into the breach and riding in his ordinary clothes came in an easy winner by six lengths to the delight of every one.

The riding statistics for the four meetings are as follows :—

	Win.	2nd.	3rd.	Unplaced.
Mr. Wallace Jones ...	4	2	—	4
Mr. Galstaun ...	4	2	—	—
Mr. Bletsoe ...	3	2	—	6
Mr. Barrow ...	3	1	1	1
Mr. Evers ...	2	5	5	4
Mr. Levetus ...	2	2	3	3
Mr. Morris ...	1	2	—	7
Mr. Payne ...	1	1	—	—
Mr. Dudley ...	1	—	1	5
Dr. A. C. Taylor ...	1	—	—	2
Mr. K. Robertson ...	1	—	—	—
Mr. Glen ...	1	1	—	2
Mr. Dain ...	1	1	—	1
Mr. R. M. Melin ...	—	2	—	2
Mr. O. Rasch ...	—	1	2	6
Mr. Tieferman ...	—	1	—	—

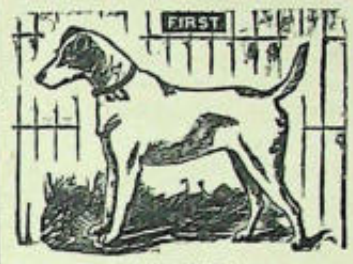
Messrs. Tanner, Pierson, Westmacott, Marshall, Peploe, Constant, Tegart, Redmore, Robertson, McGeorge, Cowper, Hilliard, Smith, Reynolds, Pilcher, Ballantyne, D. Johnstone, Kennedy, Dutton, Burn, Murray, Richmond, Ezra and Dean also ran but did not get first or second.

Mr. Evers has as usual had the most riding but has not been quite so lucky as is his wont and Mr. Galstaun has the remarkable average of four wins and two placed rides out of six starts.

With the near approach of the Monsoon Races matters are beginning to get very busy down on the course. We are pleased to chronicle some unexpected arrivals, considerably adding to the number of horses which will be run in Calcutta. Mr. J. D. Scott has come down with Bonita, Royal Colours and Lady Teazle. Butlin and Ruiz have arrived in charge of Sacristan, Golden Morn, Wise Hawk, Marmalade III. and Tana and Wishart is up with Andros, Mystic Circle and Sparkle. Butlin has only come to ride Golden Morn in the hurdle race on Saturday and will then return to Dehra to look after the rest of Norton's horses, the five down here being left in charge of Ruiz. Among the jockeys other arrivals are Murdison, Butters and Collin Barrett and the tally is now pretty well complete.

The entries for Saturday which closed on Monday night are well up to the average for the first meeting. We notice that the entries are now numbered so that one can tell at a glance how many there are in each race and also that each sheet bears the impression of the signature of the Acting Secretary, two very sensible innovations. Indeed revolution seems to be coming in a flood in the Calcutta Turf Club and they are now actually so far up to date at last to be connected with the telephone, only a few years after everybody else in Calcutta has had one.

In spite of the wet weather there was a good deal of fast work done on the course on Tuesday though the going was very heavy and it seems a mistake to ride horses out as was done in some cases, under such conditions. Of the ponies Solace, High Court, Piccaninny and Primrose were all galloped, among the horses Bundah, Harene. Morsel, Eruption and Bertheir, Spinnet and Beaumaris did fast spins.



There was not much schooling. Cyril (Mr. Bletsoe) and Queen of Gems (T. Southall) went very well over a couple and Wake Up (Mr. Levetus) was put over two by herself and then galloped round to the winning post. Wake Up showed much improved form but dwelt a little on landing over the first.

On Saturday, however, there had been a plethora of jumping work and two pretty little "pips" for the benefit of the spectators who are gathering in considerable numbers in these days. Cyril (Mr. Bletsoe) and Blix (Native Boy) were the first out. Cyril jumped well, but Blix was none too good and at the second flight she ran into her companion and made him refuse. Mercedes (Mr. Evers) Spinnet (Mr. Bletsoe) and Mulison (Thomas) went together round the course. Spinnet knocked the second one right out of the ground but jumped well afterwards, and the other two both showed good form. Tom (Mr. Evers) and Queen of Hearts (Mr. Corbett) did three flights, the former showing a good deal of improvement, but Queen of Hearts pecked badly landing over the stand flight. Raffles (Mr. Pierson) subsequently came down on the same spot and Captain Hughes has since had the landing here much improved so that these accidents may not be expected to recur. Leading Lady (Mr. Dudley), who was with Raffles, went on alone and jumped in good style. Lo lo (Mr. K. Robinson) also did a good school by herself. The last school of the day Beaumaris (Mr. Bletsoe) Chas (Mr. Levetus) and Killarney (Mr. Barrow) went out together. Chas pecked at the first one and dislodged his jockey, but on being remounted went over three without a mistake. Killarney jumped perfectly as ever and Beaumaris who does not seem to come on as he ought to do could not stay with her at all.

There was more schooling again on Wednesday. Loch Lily (Mr. Evers) went round the course alone at a fair pace, pulling up very strong and her prospects for the Amateur Hurdle Race on Saturday seemed brighter than ever. Golden Morn (Butlin) also on her own jumped big at the first few but took the last well. The two absolute winners, Mystic Circle (Thomas) and Mercedes (Mr. Evers), went well at a good working pace over three or four and the morning's work finished with a big school consisting

DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.
These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.
It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,
"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED),
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.
SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.
SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.
SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.
SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

of Tom (Mr. Evers), Simontura (Mr. Robertson), Master Billikin (Mr. Barrow), and Malmesbury (Native). They went all the way round travelling at a fast pace. Master Billikin showed a lot of improvement over his former schools, and Malmesbury, who was striding along with extreme ease behind, created a very favourable impression.

The following notice re the revision of Rule 17 in the Rules of Betting appears in the latest issues of both the C. T. C. and W. I. T. C. Racing Calendars. "17. A bet becomes due when the event on which it depends, is decided except as provided under Rule 4 (a)."

This latter clause is as follows:—"In the case of a dead heat for first place between two or more horses the horses which run the dead heat shall be considered to be horses placed first and by the Judge within the meaning of the preceding Rule, and the money betted shall be put together and equally divided, irrespective of whether the race be subsequently run off or not."

Lt.-Col. F. C. Logan Home, 26th Light Cavalry, has been appointed to act as a Steward of the W. I. T. C. for the Poona racing season 1909.

The following pony was classed, aged, and measured by the Official Measures, W. I. T. Club, at Poona, on the 20th instant. Captain H. Meynell's b e m May Morn, four years, 14-2, until 31st March 1910.

The following ponies were classed, aged and measured at Calcutta, on the 8th July 1909, by the Official Measurer:—

Mr. R. Powell's ch aus m Bonnie Jean, late Bonnie Bell, aged, 13-1¾, for life.

Mr. R. Powell's gr aus m Bridge, late Diamond, aged, 13-3¾, for life.

Every now and then the Arab horse gets a little passing notice in England. Mr. Wilfred Scawen Blunt held one of his sales of pure bred Arabs at the Crabbet Stud on the 3rd instant, when some good prices were obtained, and some notable company present in the persons of famous sportsmen and breeders.

Before the sale began Mr. Blunt said he was convinced that the late Lord Bradford proved that crossed with the English thoroughbred the Arab could win on the flat. In 1882, the late Duke of Westminster bought Basilisk, one of the Crabbet mares, and put her to the Derby winner, Bend Or. She had a filly which was sold to Lord Bradford, and he put her to Chippendale, and the result of the second cross was a colt which won the Dee Stakes in 1884. Lord Bradford also won hurdle races with Arab crosses. Regarding the Crabbet Stud, Mr. Blunt regretted to say that the best customers were foreigners. He was selling freely to Germany, Austria, Italy, and Spain, all of which countries understood the Arab's merits and employed him in their Government studs.

Our London Sporting review to-day gives details of the Amateur Athletic Association Championships, at which some rare good performances were put up. From various causes several of the holders did not defend their titles, and of those that did, R. E. Kerr in the sprint, W. H. Bleaden in the long jump, and W. Duncker in the hurdles suffered defeat. As is usually the case, the 100 yards was considered the premier event. With R. Kerr (the holder), the Olympic sprint winner, R. E. Walker, and N. J. Cartmell, among the competitors, a great race was anticipated. Expectations were fully borne out, for in the final the South Africa flier, R. E. Walker, won a grand race on the post in even time from Cartmell, with Kerr, only inches away, third.

In the 220 yards Kerr was again defeated, the ex-Pennsylvania University athlete, N. J. Cartmell, winning by a good three yards in the fast time of 22-4/5 secs.

E. J. Webb, holder of the seven miles walking championship, had little difficulty in securing the two-mile walk, and R. Noakes retained the title in the two-miles steeplechase, somewhat easily. The four miles was keenly contested, the holder, E. R. Voight, gaining the honours by less than half a dozen yards from the veteran, A. J. Robertson, in 19mins. 57-3/5secs.

Major Philip Trevor recently suggested in the Daily Telegraph, a cricketing team composed exclusively of men whose surnames begin with the letter H. a hope has been expressed that they will not be allowed to play in London. An Oval crowd calling out, "Run it hout, 'Ayward," "Well played 'Obbs," "Fielded, 'Itch," "Well caught, 'Utchings," would have a most depressing effect if continued during three days. It would be almost as bad as the case of the judge's associate who, when he saw his chief (who was evangelical in his views) in the distance, exclaimed, "Ere 'e 'comes, the 'oly 'umbug, 'umming an 'orrible 'ymn; 'ow I 'ate 'im."

As our readers are aware, Australia scored a signal victory over England in the third Test match at Leeds on the 3rd instant, good bowling on the part of the victors and surprisingly poor batting by the Englishmen being responsible for the Colonials' second triumph in three games.

Left with 214 to get in the fourth innings of the match, England collapsed in a startling manner before the bowling of Cotter and Macartney—the former dismissing five batsmen for 38 and the latter four for 27.

Due allowance being made for the unfortunate accident to Jessop on the opening day, and the treacherous Leeds wicket, there is nothing to extenuate the feeble show made by the pick of England's batsmen, who could only total 87 in their second innings, in reply to the Australian second innings total of 207.

Thanks to this second triumph, won by a team which after the first Test match was generally hailed as one of the weakest Australian elevens that had ever visited this country, Australia has now only to draw one of the remaining matches to keep the "ashes" Scores and details will be found in our London Sporting review to-day.

The fourth test match between England and Australia opened at Manchester on Monday morning in showery weather. The Australians won the toss and batting first made a poor start. They had lost 4 wickets for 48 at the luncheon interval and were eventually all out for 147, made up as follows:—Bardsley 9, Gregory 21, Ransford 4, Noble 17, Trumper 2, Armstrong not out 32, Hopkins 3, Macartney 9, Cotter 17, Carter 13, Laver 11, and 13 extras. Barnes took 5 wickets for 56, Blythe 5 for 63. England made 119 in the first innings. Warner 9, Spooner 25, Tyldesley 15, Sharp 3, Rhodes 5, Hutchings 9, Maclaren 17, Hirst 1, Barnes 0, Blythe 1 Lilley 26 not out and 8 extras. Laver took eight wickets for 37, Macartney one for 31 and Cotter one for 37. Resuming on Tuesday the Australians had scored 77 for the loss of two wickets at the luncheon interval after which rain prevented further play.

Appended are the results of other important matches in England during the past week:—

Kent beat Somerset, at Gravesend, by 279 runs.

Hampshire beat Worcestershire by 152 runs.

Lancashire beat Sussex, at Eastbourne by 10 wickets.

Northamptonshire beat Notts by 7 wickets.

Somerset beat Middlesex, at Lords, by 5 wickets.

Sussex beat Worcester, at Eastbourne, by 10 wickets.

Kent beat Surrey, at Blackheath, by an innings and 62 runs.

The Australians beat Derby, at Derby, by 10 wickets.

Notts beat Gloucester, at Nottingham, by 182 runs.

Yorkshire beat Warwickshire, at Leeds, by 5 wickets.

The matches between Yorkshire and the Australians, Essex and Gloucester, and Essex and Lancashire were drawn.

Mr. Guy Nickalls, of rowing renown, who has been out to the Zambesi River to make arrangements for the world's regatta to be held in August next year, returned to England early this month, and speaks in glowing terms of the facilities afforded by the Zambesi.

Invitations are to be issued to Oxford, Cambridge, Yale, and Harvard Universities, and Toronto, Argonaut, Belgium, Australia, and the Cape. Mr. Nickalls said on the Zambesi there was a stretch of water some 500 to 600 yards wide, affording a course of 4 to 5 miles, and races could be rowed there under absolutely ideal conditions.

Lord Curzon, in the course of his speech at the opening of new buildings at St. Paul's School yesterday, said the pessimists were abroad in the land. They could never take up their morning newspaper without reading of the physical and moral declension of the race.

One day they were beaten at international cricket, another they were worsted at international polo. On another occasion some foreign aquatic team took from them the laurels of the Thames. Or, again, a foreign pastry cook was discovered who could run twenty-three miles quicker than any corresponding champion in this country. Then their national poets wrote poems describing in almost bloodcurdling tones the decline and ultimate disappearance of the race. Every man over fifty was a Cassandra, talking of the brave days of old, and of the bad times in which they lived.

But they knew the saying that the judgment of foreign lands was the nearest equivalent they could get to the enlightened verdict of posterity. He thought that was a wise saying, and he asked them to take note of the fact that foreigners were continually coming here seeking to learn the secret of and imitating the institutions which they at home were engaged in decrying.

Grandmotherly anti-sport legislation proceeds apace in the Transvaal. We now learn that the Bill for the regulation of horse-racing and betting and for preventing the dissemination of betting news, has passed both Houses of Parliament with various amendments introduced with a view to rendering it more workable. These amendments enable the Government to exclude journals wholly devoted to racing without debarring others.

The prohibition of betting in boat and motor races has been withdrawn.

Details of the concluding rounds in the English Lawn Tennis Championship, of the final in the Polo Championship, won by America, and full details of Henley will be found in our English Sporting letter this week.

The following paragraph, which we reproduce verbatim from the Midsummer Bulletin of the New York Zoological Society, will doubtless interest, and to some extent amuse, many of our readers:—

"But for the enterprise of His Grace the Duke of Bedford, Pere David's Deer, formerly of Manchuria, would now be as extinct as the dodo. The Boxer war destroyed the last known specimens that lived in China, and all those living ten years ago in the Zoological Gardens of Europe are now dead.

"David's Deer is a large and handsome animal, with a long tail, and queer-shaped antlers of good size. It owes its name to the fact that it was first brought to the attention of zoologists by Father David, a Catholic missionary, in China. Of this species there are living to-day precisely twenty-eight individuals; and all of them are in the matchless collection of hoofed animals owned and maintained by the Duke of Bedford, at Woburn Abbey, England, thirty miles north-west of London. That collection is strictly private, and is to be seen by no one save on the invitation of its owner, and by his co-operation.

"Zoologically, as well as otherwise, it is risky and dangerous to preserve in one basket the whole of a lot of particularly valuable eggs. In no form of close captivity could David's Deer be safer, or more immune from epidemic diseases, than in Woburn Park. But, at the same time, the eggs are all in one basket. If rinderpest should break out in England, if the foot-and-mouth disease, or the Tubercolosis should enter Woburn Park (which Heaven forbid!) it might go hard with David's Deer. If Germany should invade England—as so many staid Englishmen fear, she might or could do,—the herd of David's Deer at Woburn Park might easily be butchered to make a soldier's holiday, as was the herd of 200 in the Imperial Park south of Pekin.

"We have respectfully suggested to the Duke of Bedford that it would be a wise and generous act if he were to place an adult male and two females from his herd of David's Deer in some great wilderness preserve, we care not where it might be, to become as wild and mayhap as fruitful as the three English red deer that so wonderously stocked Waipura Island in New Zealand, and without any deterioration through in-breeding. Three animals located in the right spot, under intelligent and skilful management in the beginning, might easily rehabilitate the species in a wild state, and restore it to the world's fauna."

The last cricket-season of the Sporting Union Club ended in a brilliant success. Thirty-one matches were played in all—out of which 14 were won; 6 drawn; and 11 lost. Two prizes were given away by the Executive Committee of the Club, for the best batting and bowling averages.

THE Rugby Football season opens in Calcutta on Saturday. The two Leagues have drawn good entries, six in the first division and eight in the second as follows:—

Senior.—Calcutta, Customs, Rangers, Dalhousie, United Service and East Yorkshires from Fyzabad.

Junior.—Shropshires, La Martiniere, St. Xavier's, Calcutta "B," United Service "B," Customs "B," Measurers and the Calcutta Police.

Good up-country entries are expected for the Challenge Cup competition, and it is probable that the Calcutta F.C. will send a representative team to compete in the Bombay Tournament at the end of next month.

SIX teams have entered for the Poona Divisional Association Football Tournament, which begins on the 9th proximo with the match between the Northamptons and Worcesters.

THE I.F.A. Challenge Shield has been won for the second time in succession by the Gordon Highlanders. In the final game on Saturday last they beat the Customs F.C. by a goal to nil after a very interesting game.

BILL SQUIRES, ex-champion heavy weight of Australia, has expressed his intention to return to the ring. He has recently been challenged by Mike Williams, and he is looking forward to a return battle with Bill Lang in Melbourne during the Cup Carnival in November next, and, as he now weighs 14st. and is in capital condition, he has great hopes of regaining the title of champion of Australia.

THE Simla Dog Show has been fixed for 24th September.

A VESSEL which aroused considerable interest at Henley this year was Mr. Alfred Vanderbilt's new houseboat The Venture which is described as the finest and most luxurious craft of the kind ever seen on the Thames. It is 85 feet long, with an additional 35 feet for the tender. The boat proper is built of oak sheathed with elm, and in the superstructure, which is portable, teak and deal have been used. The canvas roof is supported on trusses of bent American elm and aluminium. The accommodation consists of a mahogany panelled drawing-room, several bedrooms, and elaborate bathrooms. The windows are bow-shaped—for the first time on any houseboat. A promenade deck and large dining-room occupy the space beneath the awning, and the appointments throughout are of the most elaborate character. It is a wonder that more wealthy men do not indulge in this ideal method of taking a holiday during the summer months in England. Fine weather is, of course, a necessity to the full enjoyment of such a holiday, but on such a craft as described above even bad weather could be enjoyed. Anyone who has spent a holiday on a Thames houseboat must look back on it with pleasing recollection. One is roused from one's berth in the early morning by the cheery calls of the milkman, the butcher and baker who hail from the river bank, the little dingy moored by the kitchen at the rear of the houseboat, which is presently pulled out through the rising mist of dawn to return laden with stores for the day. You ascend to the promenade deck above and dive therefrom for your morning dip in the cool clear river. After a hearty breakfast you take your choice of skiff, punt or canoe, scull, pole or paddle, as fancy dictates; you fish, or lounge on cushions and gaze on the beautifull scenery. You can picnic on the green meadows that border the limpid water or roam amongst the quaint little old world town and villages, that abound in the Thames valley. And in the evening you may sit beneath the papered lantern, whose lights dance in the rippling water and listen to the strains of music, and live in the peace and happiness that follows a day of hard exercise in good fresh air.

To the average man who has not yet seen much of the struggles in the air that have been exciting the world for several months past, the success of Mr. Bleriot, in crossing the channel in an aeroplane, is a distinct evidence of the great progress made, such as none of the exploits of previous aeronauts have provided. The Wrights at Paris roused our enthusiasm by their flights and by their offers to carry royalty and other notable personages, Zeppelins have made us marvel at their exploits, and other travellers of the air have caused us to wonder at their skill but their success has always been somewhat vague and frequently the success of one day has been followed by a calamity on the next. But in Mr. Bleriot's exploit we have tangible comprehensible proof of the power, now obtained by his aeroplane. He left Sangatte at half past four in the morning in calm weather, and descended at the back of Dover Castle in a strong wind twenty-three minutes later, having covered the distance of 21 miles at an average speed of over 50 miles an hour. He thus wins the Daily Mail prize of £1,000 for which Mr. Latham tried a short time ago and failed. When the latter attempt was made, great preparations were carried out before hand. The Daily Mail was, of course, to the fore, and installed a Marconi wireless service between Dover—where the landing was intended—and at Sangatte, near Calais, the starting point. The Mayor of Dover postponed a visit to the Continent in order that he might give the conquering hero of air and sea an official welcome and invitations were sent out to the leading men of both Dover and the County of Kent to witness the landing and join in the welcome. Much sympathy is, no doubt, felt for Mr. Latham, but it seems likely, from the description given of his character, that he will be heard of again, and as a successful aeronaut. Mr. Bleriot, who has sprung so suddenly into fame, is to be congratulated on his great achievement. Many Anglo-Indians will hope that he will soon make passenger aeroplanes that will enable us to dispense with the rough and often unhappy voyage by steamer between Calais and Dover.

THAT squirrels are occasionally carnivorous and will sometimes take young birds from the nest and devour them is pretty generally known to naturalists, but that they will cause serious damage amongst young game birds is realised by few, the destruction being usually attributed to stoats, weasels, etc. A letter in the Scotsman confirms their bloodthirsty propensities, and the writer relates how, some years ago, a head gamekeeper in the North of England informed him that he had been losing every season for three or four years many young pheasants and partridges, and that the depredations had become intolerably numerous. He suspected sparrow-hawks, notwithstanding the fact that not a single pair of these birds bred on the estate or within a circuit of ten miles. Kestrels he did not suspect, although, as a matter of fact, these useful birds have been known to destroy young game-birds. The writer suspected the squirrels, of which there were many in the neighbourhood. The gamekeeper scouted the suggestion that squirrels were to blame, but a few days afterwards he had his eyes opened. Under a large tree close to his cottage a brood of barn fowls were moving around, and an old squirrel was seen stealthily stalking some chickens from a branch of a tree not six yards off. When the chickens moved under the tree the squirrel ran rapidly down the bole of the off-side, promptly seized one of them, and reascended the tree to a considerable height, where it leisurely ate the bird. Squirrels also do immense damage among young plantations, especially of fir trees, by destroying the top shoots. In 1907 so great was the damage done to young plantations in various parts of the Highlands that the extermination of the squirrels was decreed in 1908.

THE Calcutta Rowing Club has decided to hold the final Regatta of the season, under A.R.A. Rules, on Saturday, 4th September, on the Alipore Boat Canal, when the following events will take place, viz.:—

2. Light Double Sculls.—In clinker boats. Distance—½ mile.
3. Senior-junior Sculls.—In clinker boats. Distance—½ mile. Open to members who have not won a Senior sculling race.
4. Mixed Double Sculls.—To be rowed in tubs. Distance—¼ mile.
5. Junior Tub Pairs.—To be rowed in tubs. Distance—¼ mile.
6. Scratch Fours.—

Entries close on 28th August, positively. No post entries will be accepted.

THE Rovers' Challenge Cup Football tournament begins at Bombay on 18th September, entries closing on the 11th idem. The present holders of the Cup are the Worcester Regiment and the present holders of the Dewar Challenge Shield for the runners up are the Royal Scots.

The third annual Rovers' tournament sprinting competition for the Leslie Cup will be held during the tournament and run off during the half time interval each day.

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Friday, 9th July 1909.

THE one topic of conversation this week has been the dastardly murder of Sir Curzon Wyllie and Dr. Lalcaca by the Indian native student, Dhingra. I have no doubt you have had full details wired you, so I need not recapitulate them here: on Monday last, the inquest was held and a verdict of murder returned against the miscreant. Incidentally I may remark that I have seldom seen a more criminal type of face than Dhingra's—yet he and hundreds of others like him are freely admitted to the homes of well-to-do and educated Londoners. Oh! these poor untravelled Britishers when will they learn? Perchance this diabolical business will give some of them to think.

* * * * * *

THE line of the police inquiry in London was directed towards determining whether the murder was the outcome of a purely personal political grievance on the part of the assassin, or whether it formed a large and more serious part of the whole revolutionary movement, and it has been fully established that it was the fruit of the subtle conspiracy against British rule in India, which has been going on for a long time, and will probably continue. One effect of the assassination has been greatly to increase the vigilance of the authorities. Indian natives in London are at last being more closely watched, and the public movements of notable Anglo-Indians more strictly guarded. No unknown Indian could gain admission to the India Office to-day without being searched.

Had Dhingra, the assassin, been searched as he entered the Imperial Institute "At Home," three loaded revolvers and a dagger would have been found in his possession. In return for the privilege of being invited to the "At Home," the miscreant sacrificed the lives of one of India's best friends and an unoffending Parsee bystander.

For the wretched dupe of Indian agitators the law provides a penalty swift and terrible, but what of the agitators themselves? What of the men like Krishnavarma, who skulk under the protection of foreign Powers, while they urge the young men of India to the most hideous crimes, and extol the criminals as patriots, the just victims of the law as worthy of a martyr's crown?

And what of those of whom we must blush to think as men of our own blood and kin, who have openly encouraged in Parliament and on public platforms in this country, aye, and in the very centres of disaffection in India, and agitation founded upon anarchy and murder? Let us remember, not only now, when the blood of the victims is still wet upon our halls, but after, when the first horror of the moment has passed away, that to these men is due no small share of the guilt, and that their hands bear in the sight of all honest men the stain of the blood that has been shed. The feeling I rejoice to see is gaining ground (now that our eyes are being opened), that when Dhingra next appears in the dock, he should have beside him the Editor of The Indian Sociologist, who disseminates his poisonous and plausible doctrines from a safe retreat in Paris. And let me add there are hundreds of Anglo-Indians in London, who would like to see them joined by the Keir Hardies, the Cottons, the Rutherfords and others of the same persuasion.

Immediately after the murder a great meeting was held at which the Indian community, resident in London, based a strongly worded resolution in condemnation of the assassinations and disassociated themselves from the crime. How truly Oriental! And the meeting was presided over by Baboo Surendranath Bannerjee, Editor of The Bengalee!!

The other day Mr. Henniker Heaton gave a very delightful luncheon at the White City, and after the feast Mr. Pollak gave an exhibition of the wonderful Pollak-Virag invention, by which telegraphic messages can be transmitted at the rate of over forty thousand words per hour. At present the system cannot be employed on cables, but only on telephone wires. In the days that are to come—and they may not be distant—I fear you long suffering overseas people will be doomed to an amount of "home news" the suggestion of which is enough to make one shudder.

The arrangements in hand for ensuring the safety of Mr. Latham, when he essays to cross the English Channel on his aeroplane, seem to me to be but adding to the dangers and difficulties. According to what one reads the sea, apparently, will be one mass of motor-boats, torpedo-boats, and all sorts of other craft, intent upon the privilege of rescuing him should anything go wrong. It is all very well to take proper precautions against a catastrophe, but it looks very much as if in case of an accident he is bound to fall upon one of these would-be life-savers, and, personally, if it were my lot to fall from a great height I would immeasurably prefer tumbling into the nice, soft sea than coming plump on to some hard and unyielding deck.

Thoughtless Mr. Rudyard Kipling! Fancy daring to write and publish a piece of poetry without taking the obvious precaution of finding out whether it met with the approval of Mr. Winston Churchill! Such a proceeding is as indefensible as it is incomprehensible, and the temerarious poet richly deserves the contumelious criticism poured over him the distinguished statesman. He must hide his diminished head and do his best to live down "The City of Brass."

Incidentally, brass is a subject on which Mr. Churchill is perfectly competent to speak critically, and this fact adds force to the scathing expressions employed by the President of the Board of Trade.

After a long absence, Mlle. Adeline Genee returned to the Empire on Monday night, and met with the reception that such a mistress of her art deserves. An even larger audience than is usually found at the Empire had assembled to give the popular dancer welcome, and the moment that she tripped on to the stage with all her own incomparable grace, and smiling with all her old friendliness and charm, the house rose to her. For her reappearance the ballet divertissement from the third act of Meyerbeer's well known opera "Roberto il Diavolo" was staged, and a very delightful performance was the outcome. Mr. Noel Fleming, as Robert, and Signor Barbalonga, as Bertram, both sang well, and the scenic effects were perfect; but it was, of course, Mlle. Genee's dancing that chiefly served to give distinction to the performance. Her Elena was a charming performance from all points of view, and the only reason for regret was that she was not longer on the stage. Altogether, however, she had a triumphant reappearance, and London is all the brighter for her return.

Among the important productions to be expected early in the autumn, is the new Drury Lane drama. This year it is to be distinctly "sporting" in character. It is long since the stage of Drury Lane responded to the sound of horse's hoofs, and the moment, Messrs. Raleigh and Hamilton have decided, has arrived when a subject in which the great bulk of Englishmen take so deep an interest may profitably be handled once more. Mr. Collins, meanwhile, is busy getting the scene models ready and generally preparing the ground for his coming production. It is to include, of course, the orthodox great "sensation" scene without which no Drury Lane drama would be complete. The exact nature of that will, however, be kept a secret until the date of the first performance has been definitely decided on. But the piece, so far as the principal characters are concerned, has already been cast. Mr. Basil Gill is to be the hero, and Mr. Cyril Keightly the villain; Mr. Vincent Clive, further, returns to the stage where he made so conspicuous a success last year. Miss Jessie Bateman appears as the heroine, and Mr. Charles Rock in a character-part; while that inimitable comedienne, Miss Fanny Brough, has also been well provided for by the authors. And, assuming Mr. Tom B. Davis's consent can be obtained, Mr. George Barrett will have a comic role after his own heart.

That popular actress Miss Cecilia Loftus has made another matrimonial adventure. The marriage took place very quietly, and the bridegroom was Dr. Waterman, a Chicago physician. Though the wedding took place in the prosaic surroundings of the registry office, the courtship was romantic enough, as the bride tells it: "A few weeks ago he came to London, rang me up on the telephone at Liverpool, where I was fulfilling an engagement, and proposed to me. He told me not to hesitate, as every minute over three meant money, so I had to say "Yes." Miss Loftus adds, "I shall remain on the stage. I could not tear myself away from my profession. I love it too well,"—and so on and so forth, after the manner of interviewed stars.

Any Indian sportsman, home on leave this summer, misses one of the best shows in London if he fails to visit Olympia and feast his eyes on the magnificent collection brought together by the Travel Sports and Pastimes Exhibition. It is the "place to spend a happy day" as the old Rosherville Gardens posters used to put it. I can only touch on a few of its leading features. The Shikar Club, of which the King is patron, and the Prince of Wales is President, has a most attractive exhibit, covering many thousands of square feet. This club consists of big game hunters, and they show hundreds of trophies collected from all parts of the world. In addition to these, there are many unique trophies lent by sportsmen and travellers. The falconry section is a strong centre of interest, for it comprises a mews and live hawks. A thoroughly experienced falconer gives information regarding the sport, whilst many unique protographs and other methods are employed in the endeavour to make this a most comprehensive exhibit.

The aeronautical section has been organised by the Aeronautical Society of Great Britain, the Aero Club, Major B. Baden Powell, etc., and includes an historical exhibit of aeroplanes and other craft from the earliest to the most recent date in the history of aeronautics. The Marconi system of wireless telegraphy is demonstrated in detail, and arrangements have been made whereby visitors may transmit wireless messages to friends on liners on the ocean.

The commercial sections comprises exhibits from sporting houses of repute. No "faker" or cheap-jack stands, comprising such trades as rubber stamps, sight-testing, and cheap jewellery, have been admitted. The management set out with the determination to make the exhibition in fact what it purported to be—a travel, sports and pastimes exhibition. They have gathered together a wonderful collection, in quest of the various details of which travellers and sportsmen, whose names are household words, have visited every part of the habitable globe.

General Sir Alexander Elliot, who went out a young subaltern to India in time to take part in the capture of Gwalior, has just died in London, and so the fine old soldiers who saw service in the pre-mutiny days have lost another man from their thin ranks. He was also a Balaclava veteran, having been A.-D.-C. to Scarlett of the Heavy Brigade on that great cavalry day.

Few families have such a record of good service as these Elliots, who are now, for the second time, giving a Viceroy to India. An elder branch bred that stout soldier, Lord Heathfield, who for years held the western Gibraltar against two nations. Of the Minto branch come viceroys and admirals, generals and governors of provinces, too many to be easily reckoned. Sir Alexander's own father, who died an admiral, heard the guns of St. Vincent and the Nile and earned a good word from Nelson. Of his five sons two followed the sea, two were soldiers, and the fifth a civil servant of John Company.

BALUCHISTAN.*

Within the memory of the present generation the sandy waste constituting the "land of the Baluch" was little better than a terra incognita to Europeans; and even at the present day very little is known with regard to the greater part except along the main trade-routes.

The volume before us is therefore a very welcome addition to our Geographical libraries, the more especially since it is the work of such a born explorer and investigator as Mr. Tate, whose services to the Indian surveys of this part of the world are well known to all interested in geography and travel. In addition to the nature-made desert of Baluchistan, Mr. Tate also treats of a tract, which although once fertile and flourishing has become practically a desert through human folly and greed. We allude, of course, to the Persian province of Seistan, for which, as the centre of the British sphere of influence a brighter future may perhaps be looked for at no very distant date.

Personally, we cannot affirm that a desert is the kind of country which specially appeals to us, and the five months' constant wind which prevails in Baluchistan must be simply detestable. Nevertheless there are individuals who take a delight, and that a very strong one in such physical conditions, and of this band Mr. Tate forms a member. Through the deserts of both Baluchistan and Seistan, as well as through the small portion of the latter country which is inhabited at the present day, the author conducts his readers with picturesque descriptions and interesting historical allusions; and his experiences as survey-officer with the Baluch-Afghan Boundary Commission of 1895-96, and the Seistan Arbitration Mission, 1903-05, enable him to speak with authority and full knowledge.

He has, of course, much to say with regard to the political future of a country "where three empires meet;" but for his opinions on this subject we venture to refer our readers to the book itself.

That travelling in Baluchistan is not unaccompanied by unpleasant experiences, and even by danger to life, is made evident by a couple of paragraphs in an early chapter of the work, where Mr. Tate tells us how his own party were tormented by raging thirst in the midst of scorching sand. Worse, however, befel two of his followers, as is told in the accompanying extract:—

"The two Afghan lads who had strayed from my party were discovered the next afternoon by the Commissioner's followers who were crossing the desert by the right track. Senseless and exhausted, the poor fellows were found lying on a low mound, almost in a dying condition from want of water and exposure to the sun, and it was many days before they completely recovered.

Among the physical features of the country, by far the most remarkable and noteworthy is the huge monolith known locally as the Naz-i-Sultan, which 'towers to a height of 670 feet above the low watershed, on the crest of which it rises as if from a pedestal; the hills that form the watershed being in their turn, about 250 feet higher than the floor of the ancient crater which still forms a circular bowl pierced by the stream up which we marked.' In plan this Giant's 'Staff' is roughly a right angled triangle, the two sides facing west and south, while the base fronts the north-east."

As a matter of fact, this huge pinnacle, which forms a conspicuous land-mark for miles around, is in reality the natural cast in solid stone of the chimney of an extinct volcano; the cone of the latter having been, owing to its softer nature, almost completely washed away while the harder core has resisted the ravages of time. We believe the "Neza" to be an absolutely unique feature.

Of natural history matters Mr. Tate has unfortunately not much to tell us, although undoubtedly much still remains to be learnt concerning the smaller animals of the country; while Major Kennion's recent discovery of a new race of gazelle suggests that we do not yet know everything in regard to the larger kinds. Our author has, however, a few interesting observations on the migration of birds. After stating that his camp was visited by desert-larks, when they discovered that water was to be had in the tanks, he proceeds to observe that—

"Then the wild fowl began to move eastward, and wisps of teal and duck passed overhead on their journey from the lake towards the swamps and lagoons of the Indus and still further east. Shortly after sunset, wedge-shaped flocks used to make their appearance moving swiftly eastwards, and their flight continued till the small hours of the morning. Long after darkness had set in, and their forms could no longer be distinguished, their movements could be followed by the sound of the strokes of the powerful pinions. The stronger birds could make the passage without mishap, but very frequently the feebler coots were unable to reach the banks of the Helmand, and were compelled to alight on the desert to suffer a lingering death from thirst. Fully a dozen exhausted coots were taken alive in the neighbourhood of this camp."

To the student of the Geographical distribution of animals this passage is of great interest as affording further evidence of the effectual barrier formed by deserts to the free migrations of even birds.

Once Mr. Tate thought he was on the track of fossil bones, but the supposed fossils proved to be concretions freed from the rocks by the action of the weather. Apparently he did not visit the Bugti Hills, where recent discoveries have greatly added to our knowledge of that most remarkable family of swine-like animals known as the Arethracotheridæ. Those interested in such matters should consult an article by Mr. Pilgrim, in the latest issue of the Records of the Geological Survey of India, where they will find descriptions of the all too fragmentary remains of some most curious monsters.

To the antiquarian Seistan must be a veritable mine of interest, and we would specially refer our readers to the beautiful illustration of a minaret of a musjid at Zahidan, built in the twelfth century, as an example of the former architecture of the country.

Mr. Tate's volume will doubtless long remain the standard work of reference for all that concerns Baluchistan and Seistan and their inhabitants.

A STORY OF A SAD MISTAKE.

We had agreed to go out for a little shoot together, the three of us, but one, the Railway man, couldn't come at the last moment and so the Beak and I struck out together to a forest rest house six miles from the foothills where we hoped to bag a tsine or two. Travelling in the rains in Burmese jungles is a slippery muddy game, carts, of course, are impossible and so are ponies, if you have any regard for your animal, which gets up to his girths in places in deep black mud and may strain himself badly getting out, especially with 14 stone or so on his back. Oour transport was all right, we had two elephants, and travelled very light. At the first bungalow there was absolutely nothing of interest except the rain and the leaks in the roof, which kept us sufficiently employed in shifting our things about to avoid the wet. The Beak seized the opportunity also to get through those "arrears of work" which every one seems to have in this Golden land. Next day, we plunged through more mud and water for another six miles to the bungalow, which was our objective. It was at the foot of the hills, on the edge of the Reserve, beautifully situated among high forest of teak and overlooking quite a considerable stream. The rain came down in torrents in the afternoon and it was a moot point whether the river would be fordable to let us get to the tsine ground next day. However next morning broke delightfully fine, and off we went in different directions. I, to make a long story shorter, did not strike a fresher track than fifteen to twenty days old, and it was evident the herd my men expected here had changed their ground. My men were rather anxious for me to sweep round into the Beak's country but this I, of course, refused to do and went home a very draggled individual and having only got outside one (or was it two?) whiskies and sodas and inside a bath, heard my friend's cheery hail, nothing depresses him, a most desirable attribute to every one but especially to a shooting companion. He had had better luck in a way, any amount of tracks, in fact too many as they kept on intercrossing. He had got within 20 yards or so of a bull which however was lying down on an off ridge to the one he was on, and so saw him and was off with a snort without giving a shot, he then chucked it as eight or nine miles up and down very slippery hills had about done him up. The next day was a repetition, as far as the Beak was concerned, only he got up to two lots this time but never even saw them, the jungle being so thick. I had work to do and did it. A little talk with my Burmans convinced me of what I had already expected that my friend's great height handicapped him very much in a forest full of recently dead and fallen bamboos as well as much undergrowth. We then went on to the next forest house and here again no luck, no fresh tracks even were come across. The exigencies of Government work now forced the Beak to chuck it, none too unwillingly I am sure, as he was about fed up and I think realized it was almost hopeless owing to the dense forest and the innumerable fallen bamboos. He left me then next day making a bee—line for Head-quarters and I took a day off also to get rid of "arrears." In the evening the Burmans I had sent to guide my friend came back and said they had come across absolutely fresh tracks of tsine close to the Rest House but they could not persuade the "thakin" to follow. I at once made arrangements to go with them the next morning. Now remember, when reading what follows, that I was told the tracks were of two bull tsine, bison were never even mentioned or thought of. It was not a bison country at all, and they seldom if ever came down so near cultivation. At earliest dawn then off we went, I bare footed, as always when shooting in the rains, with only my ·450, leaving my 8 bore behind because, as I have said before, the idea of bison never even entered my head. We went for a mile or so along a foot track leading to a village at the outskirts of the Reserve. A perfect morning for stalking, there had been torrential rain during the night, now it was fine but very steamy, the foot going was perfect, but oh the undergrowth! A chaos of half dead and fallen bamboos in places with a thick carpet of bamboo seedlings, the rest of the jungle undergrowth of the densest description. A mile or so along that path and we were brought to a stand by the clear inprint of what we all took to be a bull tsine crossing the road, a little casting around and we found the tracks of the other. Now in my long experience I have often come upon two bull tsine together. I possibly ought to have known they were not tsine tracks but I didn't and my Burmans didn't and so, to my eventual infinite sorrow, we took up the tracks. They were feeding and going very slow indeed crossing and re-crossing their tracks and lazily browsing along. Step by step, I leading with ready rifle, we gently and almost noiselessly pushed our way through the dark undergrowth, crossed two streams with their heavy fringe of kaing grass, under or over a tangle of fallen and half fallen bamboos, standing motionless at times listening for all we were worth. Not a sound except the harsh cries of a flock of lesser hornbills and twice the startled cackle of regular conveys of jungle fowl. Now through the most lovely piece of open jungle. Oh if we had been fifteen minutes earlier an episode would not have occurred which will always be a bitter memory. Through this glade, down into a very thick teak plantation, the air was deadly still and the perspiration was simply pouring off me. Through the teak plantation and another patch of kaing when crack! and then crack! again in the level ground right in front, which was a mass of six feet high strobilanthe and dense bamboos. The sound was at once recognisable as that of tsine (!) breaking off tender bamboo shoots. Leaving my men behind I crept forward inch by inch. I could locate them within a few feet but not an inch of hide or horn could I see. Thick as only a Burmese jungle can be in the rains and as still as death except the deep breathings of grazing bovines near me. They were not 25 yards off, but not a thing could I see. Breathless I stood and waited, finger on full cocked trigger. Another sharp crack and suddenly a huge black form loomed in front of me, I saw a mass of black, I saw the switching tail but I could not make out the head and nor did I try to. I was obsessed with the idea that I had two splendid bull tsine in front of me and all I cared for was to draw a bead just behind that monstrous shoulder. I put up my rifle three of four times but always to find I could not get a clean shot, and so we stood. I filled with the lust of killing and he (?) with sweet succulent bamboo shoots. Another crack, of a stick this time, and a horn knocked against a bamboo and another huge black form came more or less alongside the other and then I got my shot. Just a half step more and by peering head I could see about six inches square of black hide. Carefully I drew my bead the bang! the sound of the little ·450 reverberated in the damp still air, the unmistakable sound of a fallen animal and the mad rush of the other for twenty yards or so, and there he stood broad side on in what looked like impenetrable scrub and bamboo, but I could just see the huge black form dimly outlined. Not a thought crosed my mind of anything but tsine. "Two bulls with a right and left if I have any luck by Jove" I muttered and again sighted at where I thought the shoulder should be, and again got it plum centre. "My Lord what luck" I thought I whistled for my men whom I had left behind as I always do when I have entered into the final phase of a stalk after big game. With broad grins up they came as they too had heard the falls and the thud thud of hoofs kicking in their death throes. Jubilantly I walked up to number one, to my horror a cow bison! with utter misgiving and despair I ran to the other, another cow bison! And there my sin stands confessed! Twenty-seven years ago I shot a cow, my first bison, over 50 bulls have intervened and now two cows!! Was there ever such luck? The idea of two cow bison being alone together! A thing I have never come across before. There was absolutely no thought in any of our heads of bison. There were the big hoof marks of what I took to be two bull tsine. There was the blackness of the hide rendered blacker by the early morning light, the whole thing was over by 6-30 A.M., and the deep shade of the bamboos. "An inexcusable mistake" I think I hear some of your shikari readers exclaim "he should have known the difference in shape." Well perhaps I should but I didn't and so a self-confessed cow murderer throws himself on the mercy of his fellow sportsman and sincerely hopes they will never have such luck(?).

FLY FISHING FOR DACE ON THE YORKSHIRE OUSE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD"

Sir,—The Ouse at Fulford is very charming in that slow sleepy way, so characteristic of English rivers which wind their leisurely course through flat country. The river here is broad and deep, the size of the Thames at Henley, and the meadows which border it on either side are lush rich pasture, typical of the fertile, deep solid plain of York. Magnificent willows overhang the slow gliding stream with their graceful arrow shaped leafage: in the background are the slopes of the well kept Fulford golf links. A little lower down, on the opposite bank, is that fine old pile, the Bishopthorpe palace, seat of the Archbishop of York. Above and below the palace the river bank is set thickly with willows, but there are open spaces on the opposite or left bank, where the roach fisher can have nine or ten feet of water right under the point of his rod, and this consequently is a very favourite stretch of the Ouse with the anglers of the Amalgamated Clubs, and many a fine roach finds its way into the landing net, under the very windows of the Archbishop. Steamers, however, disturb the river a great deal, and make the fish very much shyer than they would be, were the Ouse a quieter stream with less traffic.

The drainage arrangements of York are so elaborate, all the sewage being carefully purified in settling tanks at Naburn, still lower down stream, that the water is extraordinarily clean, so much so in fact that there are actually trout in the Ouse, few certainly, but of large dimensions. Close to the Fulford golf links, just where the remains of a sunken barge near the bank, make a stronghold such as fish love, there is a fine trout of something like four pounds. This fish is naturally the ambition of the local fishermen, but so far he has escaped their wiles. Like similar Thames trout, he knows not only the look of an artificial minnow, when he sees one, but even the shop it comes from! Where this trout lives, along the side of the sunken barge, is a most excellent place for dace fishing, and if the boat is held off in the stream, at nice casting range from the bank, one may get many rises, and net not a few of the silvery beauties. The angler must, however, be able to fish fine and far off, and possess a quick wrist, ready to answer instantaneously to the eye, in order to achieve a good basket. Dace fishing is looked on with contempt by some people, but really the skill required is about the same as for trout, and then there are plenty of dace to be caught, while perhaps the nearest trout stream is many miles away, and not much good when you do make an expedition and go there.

There is equally pretty dace fishing below the links, all round about the Archbishop's palace. The stream runs slowly, and if the boat is gently backwatered, so that it goes down stream still slower, and always about the same distance from the fringing willows, one gets excellent sport on any suitable evening. The flies should be small and tied on eyed hooks, and the gut collar of the finest possible gut. Dace over half a pound are seldom caught on the fly, so that the most delicate of gear suffices. There are, of course, chub also, and if the angler chances to hook one of these fat fellows, he may come to grief; it is good though to take sporting chances, and the finer one fishes the more rises one gets. I have found the tiny eyed flies with diminutive double hooks very effective for dace, and as these fish are so tricky in their rising, coming so often to larger flies without being touched, it is no bad plan when one finds that one is missing them, to try these tiny doubles. As to pattern of fly, dace will take various kinds. Small dark palmers with a little silver twist are good, as also black gnats, and red quills, Greenwell's glory, etc. A little touch of white at the tip of the tail, makes the fly more attractive. Using a single fly dry, as for chalk stream trout, is a good plan to try, when the dace are found not to come well at the wet fly.

The plan is to select a rising dace, and cast the single dry fly a little above the rise, and let it float down to the fish. On smooth gliding water one can watch the fly float down, and one's wrist should be turned the instant the fly vanishes in the ring of the rise. The rod should be just a well balanced light single handed trout rod, and furnished with a tapered dresed silk line. Without good equipment, the angler will have but poor success.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

ALEXANDRA PARK.

The sunshine that enhanced the pleasures of Newmarket's closing day was in full blaze on the Muswell Hill slopes last Saturday and gave scope to the crowds of visitors to don garments suitable to the season, straw hats being in the ascendant. It was a perfect summer day, and the attendance was worthy of the occasion, the London Cup still retaining a claim to favour, to which the full muster in every department attested. For once the going was faultless, while fields did full justice to the occasion, except in the opening race, in which Merry Masque frightened away the opposition. Results :—

WINNING JOCKEYS.—Frank Wootton is still hors de combat but late reports suggest that he will soon be able to resume his profession. Neither D. Maher nor C. Trigg were seen to advantage last week as far as riding winners is concerned, only one notch having been added to the score of each during the week. The honours were divided between W. Saxby and Wal. Griggs, each riding four winners. Wootton's advantage over Maher is now 30 points, the last-named leading Triggs by one point. The following are the full scores of the leaders:—

Jockey.	Won.	Second.	Third.	Unplaced.	Total. Mnts.
1 F. L. Wootton ..	66	63	37	131	297
2 D. Maher ...	36	25	15	93	168

THE A.A.A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE annual Amateur Athletic Championships were held at Stamford Bridge on Saturday in the presence of 12,000 spectators. The Prince of Wales arrived soon after the meeting had begun, and at the conclusion of the racing presented the medals to the winners. Among those present in the Royal box were Prince Henry of Wales, Princess Blucher, Lord Alverstone (President of the A.A.A.), Lord Desborough, the Rev. R. de Courcy Laffan, Sir Claude de Crespigny and Mr. W. Hayes Fisher.

The meeting was one of the best of recent years. A high standard of excellence was maintained throughout, and many of the finishes were extremely close. In the final heat of the 440 yards L. J. de B. Reed, who ran with excellent judgment, caught the other men napping and, dashing away 200 yards from home, looked a certain winner, but Lieutenant Patterson just got level. Montague, who was most fancied to win, was quite beaten by Reed's clever tactics. It is a pity that the two men could not remain joint holders for the year, as it is too much to ask men to run three hard quarters of a mile in one afternoon. Reed, who had done 51-3/5secs. in his heat and 50-3/5secs in the final, could only just beat 52secs. at the third attempt, and took a long time to recover after the race.

The Half-Mile Challenge Cup goes to Germany as the result of a very fine piece of running by H. Braun, who finished third to Sheppard in the 800 metres at the Olympic Games last year.

Voigt retained the Four Miles Challenge Cup, winning fairly easily from the veteran A. J. Robertson, and it would appear as if there is no one who can extend him at distances between one and ten miles. Robertson again finished second twice during the afternoon. Time after time he has finished second in championships at various distances, and his fine sportsmanship at the Olympic Games, when he threw away his chance of winning the Three-Mile Team race in order to stay behind and encourage another English competitor, will not readily be forgotten.

T. R. Nicolson put up a championship record by throwing the hammer 164ft. 8in., while Horgan added to his record number of wins by taking the weight for the 11th time.

The officials, winners of races, and foreign guests and competitors dined together at Frascati's Restaurant in the evening, when Mr. M. Shearman, K.C., took the chair in the early stages, and was succeeded by Lord Desborough.

The results were:—

Throwing the Hammer.—T. R. Nicolson (West of Scotland Harriers), 164ft. 8in., 1; D. Horgan (Irish A.A.A.), 137ft. 1½in., 2; A. H. Fyffe (L.A.C. and O.U.A.C.), 130ft. 5½in., 3.

The winning throw is a championship record.

100 Yards Flat Race.—R. E. Walker (South African A.A.), 1; N. J. Cartmell, U.S.A. (Birchfield H.), 2; R. Kerr (Tiger's A.C., Hamilton, Canada), 3.

Won by a foot; 6in. between second and third. Time—10secs.

Long Jump.—T. J. Ahearne (Athea, Ireland), 22ft. 4½in., 1; S. S. Abrahams (L.A.C. and C.U.A.C.), 21ft. 5¼in., 2; W. H. Bleaden (O.U.A.C. and L.A.C.), 20ft. 5in., 3.

Quarter-mile Flat Race.—A. Patterson (Salford H.), 1; L. J. de B. Reed (L.A.C.), 2; E. H. Montague (S.L.H. and L.A.C.), 3.

The final resulted in a dead heat between Patterson and Reed in 50-3/5secs. The former won the run-off by four yards in 51-1/5secs.

One Mile Flat Race.—E. Owen (Broughton H. and A.C.), 1; A. J. Robertson (Birchfield H.), 2; R. F. C. Yorke (Surrey A.C.), 3.

Won by two yards. Time—4mins. 23secs.

Two Miles Walking Race.—E. J. Webb (Herne Hill H.), 1; A. E. M. Rowland (South Canterbury H., New Zealand), 2; T. J. Eaton (Polytechnic H.), 3.

Won easily by over 100 yards. Time—13mins. 56-2/5secs.

Putting the Weight.—D. Horgan (Irish A.A.A.), 44ft. 1in., 1; T. R. Nicolson (West of Scotland H.), 40ft. ½in., 2; H. A. Leeke (C.U.A.C. and L.A.C.), 37ft. 8in., 3.

120 Yards Hurdle Race.—A. H. Healey (Blackheath H. and Alnwick H.), 1; K. Powell (L.A.C. and C.U.A.C.), 2; V. Duncker (Randfontein A.C., South Africa), 3.

Won by a yard. Time—15-4/5secs.

Two Miles Steeplechase.—R. Noakes (Sparkhill H.), 1; H. L. Hart (Sparkhill H.), 2; G. M. Parkinson (Essex Beagles), 3.

Won by 50 yards. Time—11mins. 2-2/5secs.

Pole Jump.—A. E. Flaxman, junior (L.A.C. and S.L.H.), walked over. Flaxman cleared 9ft. 7½in.

Half-mile Flat Race.—H. Braun (Munchener Sports Club), 1; A. Astley (Salford H.), 2; I. F. Fairbairn-Crawford (M.C.C. and West of Scotland H.), 3.

Won by two yards. Time—1min. 57-3/5secs.

High Jump.—J. H. Banks (Sparkhill H.), 5ft. 9in., 1; T. J. Ahearne (Athea, Ireland), 5ft. 8½in., 2; C. R. Dugmore (S.L.H.), 5ft. 7in., 3.

220 Yards Flat Race.—N. J. Cartmell (U.S.A., Birchfield H.), 1; R. Kerr (Tiger's A.C., Hamilton, Canada), 2; E. W. Haley (Herne Hill H.), 3.

Won by three yards, Kerr easing up. Time—22secs. (championship record).

Four Miles Flat Race.—E. R. Voigt (Manchester A.C.), 1; A. J. Robertson (Birchfield H.), 2; A. E. Wood (Essex Beagles), 3.

Won by six yards. Time—19mins. 57-3/5secs.

The "Harvey Memorial" Gold Cup for the best performance at the championships was awarded to E. J. Webb.

LAWN TENNIS.

The Championships.

Wimbledon this year attracted a huge entry, and almost called for a qualifying competition, no fewer than 85 names having been received for the men's singles. This entails a severe strain on the winner of the all-comers, and is liable to have a detrimental effect on his play in the challenge round when he meets a man who has only had practice matches, and is therefore perfectly fit and fresh. This year's meeting has lasted not only longer than any of its predecessors, but has the distinction of being the wettest that has ever been known, rain preventing any play at all on two days, while matches were limited to the centre court on the Saturday and Wednesday. The entries were of quite an international character, Germany, Belgium, France, Canada, New Zealand, South America, and Australia all being represented by prominent players, and with the cream of England's talent taking part, it resolved itself into a very interesting and exciting struggle for premier honours.

We give below details of the finals of the most important contests.

The Singles.—Mr. A. W. Gore and Mr. M. J. G. Ritchie are not regarded as attractive players, and when both are off their game the lawn tennis is apt to appear of a very poor standard. On Saturday, when as holder and challenger respectively they battled for the singles championship, neither player at any time approached his usual form, so the match may be written down as disappointing at all points.

The play continued without incident or variety until "2 all" in the rubber set. The position of the match at this stage called for some enthusiasm, but Mr. Ritchie seemed unable to rise to the occasion, and the holder, without doing anything out of the ordinary, won the next four games easily, the last ace of the match being gained by service. Mr. Gore had some good fortune towards the end. In the sixth game he won an ace by a lucky net cord stroke, and a bad line decision was given against the challenger.

The Doubles.—As it happened the play all round was dull and one-sided. The Australasians, Mr. S. M. Doust and Mr. H. A. Parker, were clearly overmatched by the internationals, Mr. H. Roper Barrett and Mr. A. W. Gore in the final of the Doubles Championship, and failed to win a game until the Englishmen were five up. In the second set they won the second and fifth games, and the championship looked as good as decided when Mr. Gore and Mr. Barrett gained a lead of 4—love in the third. Then Mr. Doust put in some smart volleying, and practically won the next four games off his own racket. The Colonials had no chance afterwards, and Mr. Gore and Mr. Barrett ended one of the tamest championship rounds of the doubles ever seen with a love game. Some excuse must be made for Mr. Parker, as he had scarcely recovered from a recent indisposition.

Final Results.

The Singles' Championship (Challenge Round).—A. W. Gore (holder) beat M. J. G. Ritchie (winner of all-comers' competition) (6—8, 1—6, 6—2, 6—2, 6—2).

The Doubles Championship (holders, A. F. Wilding and M. J. G. Ritchie, retired).—Final and championship round: H. Roper Barrett and A. W. Gore beat S. N. Doust and H. A. Parker (6—1, 6—2, 6—4).

The All England Plate.—Final round: R. B. Powell beat H. A. Parker (3—6, 6—3, 6—1).

Open Mixed Doubles.—Final round: H. Roper Barrett and Miss Morton beat A. D. Prebble and Miss Boothby (6—2, 7—5).

TENNIS.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—At Lord's, yesterday, Oxford, by beating Cambridge in the singles, retrieved their loss on Tuesday in the doubles. Mr. A. Tylor represented Oxford, and Mr. A. G. Rothschild Cambridge. The latter was again off his game, and after winning the first set could do little. Although play was chiefly on the floor, both made some excellent straight forces for the dedans, and Mr. Rothschild would have done better if he had been more consistent in his attack upon the winning openings. As it was his strokes off the floor were very weak and short chases rare. The scores in favour of Mr. Tylor were: (2—6, 6—4, 6—2, 6—4).

POLO.

The International Cup.—The second and last match between England and America for the International Cup, which had been held by this country since 1886, was decided at Hurlingham on the 5th instant. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, and a large and distinguished company, which included the Princess of Pless, the Duke of Westminster, Viscount and Viscountess Valentia, the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Ancaster, Lord Savile, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Duchess of Portland, and the Countess of Dudley, attended the enclosure, where the scene was strikingly brilliant.

The Americans won the first match on Wednesday, 2ord June, by 9 goals to 5, and with a view to strengthening the England team alterations were made at No. 1 and back; and it must be said that the newly-introduced players rendered a good account of themselves. Mr. Rich, who displaced Captain Wilson, played finely, and the form of Captain Lloyd at back was excellent. The England team, however, were outmatched, and after the first twenty minutes it became apparent that the Americans had the game in hand. Well served by speedy mounts, they were quicker on the ball than our representatives, their hitting was harder, and their placing remarkably accurate, and the strokes they brought off when making shots at goal were simply amazing. At five o'clock the sides took the field in the following order:—

America.—L. Waterbury, M. Waterbury, H. Payne Whitney and D. Milburn.

England.—H. Rich, F. M. Freake, P. W. Nickalls and Captain Hardress Lloyd.

Umpires—Major K. McLaren and Captain E. D. Miller.

Referee—Mr. W. S. Buckmaster.

Play during the first few minutes ruled in favour of England, but nearing the end of the opening period they were penalised for a foul crook, and had to hit out from their own posts. The Americans then penned their opponents until Mr. Whitney gave them the initial goal. At the beginning of the second "ten," England pressed hard, but a good stroke by Mr. Nickalls just missed the mark. After hitting off from their own end, the Americans made a journey to the centre, near which one of their players was crossed, with the result that a free hit was given against England. The American back made an accurate drive, but before the ball reached the line Mr. Freake rode out and saved splendidly. Mr. Nickalls was following in his wake when he was crossed, and England therefore had a penalty hit at the American goal. From this Captain Lloyd equalised. The third period was fought out at an even faster pace than its predecessors, but it proved most disastrous to England, against whom three goals were registered in rapid succession by Mr. M. Waterbury. At half-time, therefore, America led by 4 goals to 1.

Early in the fourth period Mr. Whitney centred from the boards, and Mr. L. Waterbury scored with a magnificent near-side stroke at a difficult angle, while the same player almost immediately gained another point by a similar effort.

Perhaps the best goal in the match was that which followed. The ball had almost reached England's back line, but Mr. M. Waterbury managed to screw in. England then had a spell of attacking, and from a pass by Mr. Freake Mr. Nickalls obtained their second goal with a back-hander. In the last "ten," Mr. M. Waterbury scored again for America, who therefore gained the victory by 8 goals to 2.

America thus regains possession of the cup, which was presented to the captain of the winning team by the Princess of Wales. The American players are to be congratulated on their brilliant polo since their arrival in this country, and they are undoubtedly the finest team ever seen here.

CYCLING.

The N. C. U. 24 Hours' Race.—This event began at 8 P.M. on the 2nd and finished on the 3rd instant, the winner being J. H. Bishop, an employee of the Beaumont Cycle Company. He reached Mr. Goodwin's figures of 476 miles 1,702 yards when he had been going 22hrs. 3mins. 30-1/5secs., and on the completion of the whole day's ride he had covered the stupendous distance of 513 miles 1,430 yards, thus beating the thirteen-year-old record by 36 miles 1,488 yards.

By virtue of this feat Bishop becomes the world's prominent cyclist. The finish of the race was witnessed by a huge assembly, while many hundreds stayed all the Friday light. The race was a great struggle between Bishop and Combes, the wonderful French rider. It was anybody's race until the Frenchman had ridden 205 miles. Then he suddenly collapsed, and though afterwards he revived and put in some very fast work. Bishop never lost his advantage.

Towards the end the feature was the plucky riding of Grubb, Cole, Jones and Hanks. Some of these men, notably the first two, showed extraordinary turns of speed. The excitement was so great that the riders flew along as if they had been riding an hour instead of a day. Bishop reached his 500 in 23hrs. 17mins. Grubb reached the old record in 23hrs. 15mins., and Combes in 23hrs. 34mins. Three men put up a better mileage than Goodwin did at the historic Hearne Hill race thirteen years ago.

Ten minutes before the finish the pacers left the track, and the competitors raced unassisted, and amid a scene of wild excitement the great race finished.

Bishop rode 513 miles 1,430 yards.

Grubb rode 492 miles 1,720 yards.

Combes rode 486 miles 1,100 yards.

The other men finished in this order: Hanks, Jones, Cole, Norman, Lundy, Dicks.

ROWING.

HENLEY REGATTA.

Fine weather favoured the opening day at Henley last Monday, although the sun only shone through a cloudy sky at rare intervals, and the breeze, hardly perceptible when racing commenced, increased in force during the afternoon, and proved very bothering to the crews. It was a head wind, giving some advantage to the Bucks station over the first half-mile, and this, together with a fairly strong stream, made times slow.

The programme was a heavy one of twenty-one races, which included thirteen heats in the Thames Cup, three each in the Wyfolds and Diamonds, and two in the Ladies' Plate. The Thames Cup races before lunch only provided one keen struggle, that between Corpus Christi (Cambridge) and Trinity Hall (Cambridge), the latter winning by the ord of a length after a desperate struggle for a mile.

Wadham, who won last year, and were again stroked by Walker, the light-weight of 8st. 13lb., easily accounted for Downing in fast time.

The three heats of the Diamond Sculls provided good races, but in each case the 'Varsity sculler was defeated by a more experienced Metropolitan sculler.

Gladstone, after leading Edye for a mile, failed to stay the course. Stuart proved too good for Powell, who rowed very pluckily, and Donaldson, who sculled strongly, steered badly, and was in the end easily defeated by Cloutte. The three defeated candidates had all won their 'Varsity sculls.

One of the best races of the day was that betwee King ston and Magdalen College School (Oxford), which, but for very erratic steering, would doubtless have been won by the boys, who were only defeated by 6ft.

On Tuesday we had torrential rain, wind-gusts and completely depressing conditions; but there was some good racing.

In the Grand, London made a fine fight against Jesus (Cambridge), who did not get away from the metropolitan crew until after passing the mile post. Magdalen made an example of Thames in the other heat. The Oxonians, with five members of this year's Oxford crew in the boat rowed in great form.

In the Diamond Sculls the German representative, Lucas, sculled very strongly against Filleup, and won easily. Edye beat Cloutte after a magnificent struggle. The loser was so baked at the finish that he fell out of his boat and was rescued in an exhausted state. Stuart also won his heat.

The programme on Wednesday was carried out under more favourable conditions and as a result there was an improved attendance.

The two heats in the Grand Challenge Cup monopolised attention. They were rowed off before lunch, and produced magnificent struggles. Leander vs. Jesus (Cambridge) came first, and for the first time since 1902 Leander went down before an English crew. Leander led for some time, but Jesus rowed better than on Tuesday, and, making a fine effort near the mile-post, rowed Leander down and won by the third of a length.

The Belgians went off at a tremendous pace, striking forty-three strokes to Magdalen's forty, and led by nearly half a length at the quarter-mile. Magdalen slowly crept up until they were level at Fawley. For a time it was anybody's race, and Magdalen actually led by a trifle at the Grosvenor Club. Then the Belgians made their final effort. At the mile-post they put on a tremendous spurt at forty-two to the minute. Magdalen kept their form, but could not go the pace with the leaders, and the Belgians won a fine victory by half a length.

There was another foreign victory in the Diamonds, Lucas beating Thomson after a good race.

In the Stewards' Cup, Thames beat Trinity Hall with unexpected ease, but last year's record-breaking Magdalen crew were hard pushed by Trinity for nearly a mile.

One of the surprises of the day was Oriel's win over Brasenose in the Thames Cup. It was secured by a gallant spurt on the part of Oriel just when Brasenose appeared to have the race in hand.

In the Ladies' Plate First Trinity were led by Corpus (Oxford) for three-parts of the course, but weight told in the end.

There was a large attendance yesterday to witness the finals, and the weather was exceedingly fine at the start. There was a good wind blowing, but, apart from this, the rowing conditions were perfect.

A good race was witnessed in the Grand, which, as expected, fell to the Belgians. When the boats came into view shortly after the start the Belgians were leading by about a quarter of a length, but at the mile the foreigners went about three-quarters of a length ahead.

Jesus continued to persevere, but the Belgians passed the line a bare length ahead in 7mins. 8secs., which is seventeen seconds outside record.

The winners received a splendid ovation. Complete results:—

DIAMOND SCULLS.

J. de G. Edye (Auriol) beat A. C. Gladstone (Christ Church, Oxford); time—9mins. 41secs. A. A. Stuart (Kingston) beat E. W. Powell (Leander); time—9mins. 27secs. A. H. Cloutte (London) beat M. Donaldson (First Trinity, Cambridge); time—9mins. 10secs.

A. A. Stuart beat E. Millington-Drake. Time—9mins. 31secs.

G. L. Thompson beat C. E. Hope. Time—9mins. 2secs.

J. de G. Edye beat A. Hamilton Cloutte. Time—9mins. 12secs.

Rudolph Lucas beat P. R. Filleul. Time—9mins. 21secs.

Rudolph Lucas (Germany) beat G. L. Thompson (Cambridge). Time—8mins. 59secs.

A. A. Stuart beat J. de G. Edye. Time—9mins.

Final.

(Bucks) A. A. Stuart (Kingston R.C.) beat Rudolph Lucas (Germany).

Stuart went away with the lead, and soon had a length advantage. This he continued to increase gradually, and at the mile was leading by over two lengths, when the German stopped rowing, leaving Stuart to paddle home. Time—8mins. 31secs.

THAMES CUP.

First Round.—Royal Engineers beat Thames; time—7mins. 57secs. Trinity Hall (Cambridge) beat Corpus Christi (Cambridge); time—7mins. 45secs. Clare (Cambridge) beat Vesta; time—7mins. 57secs. Oriel (Oxford) beat Pembroke (Cambridge); time—7mins. 57secs. Kingston beat Twickenham; time—8mins 12secs. Anglian beat Jesus (Cambridge); time—8mins. 11secs. Brasenose (Oxford) beat Royal Engineers; time—8mins. 10secs. First Trinity (Cambridge) beat London; time—8mins. 15secs. Trinity (Oxford) beat Christ Church (Oxford); time—7mins. 48secs. Wadham (Oxford) beat Downing (Cambridge); time—7mins. 47secs.

Second Round.—Clare (Cambridge) beat Corpus (Oxford); time—7mins. 35secs. Anglian beat Trinity Hall (Cambridge); time—7mins. 44secs.

Oriel College (Oxford) beat Kingston R.C. Time—7mins. 41secs.

Wadham College (Oxford) beat Anglian B.C. Time—7mins. 46secs.

Clare College (Cambridge) beat Trinity College (Oxford). Time—7mins. 34secs.

Wadham College (Oxford) beat Clare College (Cambridge). Time—7mins. 27secs.

Oriel College (Oxford) beat Brasenose College (Oxford). Time—7mins. 41secs.

Final.

(Bucks) Wadham College (Oxford) beat (Berks) Oriel College (Oxford).

The crews were level at the top of Temple Island, where Wadham obtained a slight lead, which they maintained, winning a fine race by three-quarters of a length. Time—7mins. 21secs.

LADIES' CHALLENGE PLATE.

Corpus Christi (Oxford) beat Jesus (Cambridge). Time—7mins. 39secs. Brasenose (Oxford) beat Rugby College. Time—7mins. 44secs.

First Trinity (Cambridge) beat Clare College (Cambridge). Time—8mins. 6secs.

Brasenose (Oxford) beat Trinity College (Oxford). Time—7mins. 41secs.

Corpus Christi (Oxford) beat Pembroke College (Cambridge). Time—7mins. 27secs.

St. John's College (Oxford) beat Eton. Time—7mins. 14secs.

St. John's College (Oxford) beat Brasenose College (Oxford). Time—7mins. 27secs.

First Trinity (Cambridge) beat Corpus Christi College (Oxford). Time—7mins. 23secs.

Final.

(Berks) St. John's College, (Oxford) beat (Bucks) First Trinity (Cambridge).

Won by two and a quarter lengths. Time—7mins. 9secs.

St. John's time was the fastest at this regatta until beaten by the Belgians in the Grand. Although having the worst station, they did not seem bothered by wind, as were some of the crews who rowed on the Berks side yesterday.

WYFOLD CUP.

Molesey beat Thames; time—8mins. 48secs. Kingston beat Magdalen College School; time—8mins. 27secs. London beat Royal Engineers; time—8mins. 41secs.

Balliol College (Oxford) beat Vesta R.C. Time—8mins. 5secs.

University College (Oxford) beat Customs Amateur R.C. Time—8mins. 33secs.

Christ Church (Oxford) beat London R.C. Time—8mins. 6secs.

Molesey B.C. beat Kingston R.C. Time—8mins. 22secs.

Christ Church (Oxford) beat University College (Oxford). Time—8mins. 10secs.

Balliol (Oxford) beat Molesey B.C. Time—8mins. 3secs.

FINAL.

(Bucks) Balliol College (Oxford) beat Christ Church (Oxford). The crews were level up to the half-distance, when some bad steering on the part of Christ Church lost them a lot of ground. Balliol won easily, the race not being rowed out.

The time was 7mins. 44secs., which is only one second outside record for this event. The record is held by Burton-on-Trent, who won in 1902.

VISITORS' CUP.

St. John's College (Oxford) beat Trinity Hall (Cambridge). Time—8mins. 22secs.

Trinity College (Cambridge) beat Balliol (Oxford). Time—8mins. 4secs.

University (Oxford) scratched to St. John's (Oxford).

Christ Church (Oxford) beat First Trinity (Cambridge). Time—8mins. 11secs.

FINAL.

Christ Church (Oxford) beat St. John's (Oxford). Time—7mins. 59secs.

FINAL.

(Bucks) Thames R.C. beat (Berks) Magdalen College (Oxford).

Won by a length and a half. Time—7mins. 30secs.

Hunting.

THE POONA HUNT.

THE Poona and Kirkee Hounds are in good trim now and, though continual rain has made the going very heavy, the mornings have been cold, scent strong and sport very fair. Fields have been up to a good average and one is glad to see the gentler sex well represented, with Mrs. Beatty out regularly as usual as well as Mrs. Graham and Mrs. Perkins.

There were two enjoyable runs last Bye day when the Meet was at Dighi, and hounds found just off the Alundi road. Crossing the Nasik road, almost straight from the ninth to the tenth mile-stone, the jack turned back fairly well the line he had come. No shelter being afforded he was pulled down after a quarter of an hour's run.

Unsuccessful in finding another at hand, a move was made northwards when a jack was viewed and went away fast. He provided a fast ten minutes' burst and then got clear.

On Tuesday the field scarcely ran into double figures, Mrs Beatty being out again as well as General and Miss Sloggett and Mrs. Aylen. Near the ninth mile-stone a jack was found but went to ground very soon in a well. The next let an erratic course along the Nasik road and eventually made good his escape after nearly half an hour's run. The third went away from the first covert near Bosri in Moki direction. A three mile run ended in his being bowled over in the thick growth near the latter village.

A not too pleasant drizzle met a field of fifty on Thursday when the Meet was at the seventh mile-stone on the Bombay road. There are two ways out of this covert, one into good and the other into bad country. By careful manœuvring a jack was coaxed into the former, going away with a great burst into open, grassy lands. Over the stream there was a short check in a ploughed field before the line was carried on across the railway and over the stream by a bridge. Another check before the quarry crossed and re-crossed the stream. A splendid burst ensues over capital going and at last this great stayer saves his brush.

Another was put up and one hound was after him, but unfortunately part of the field cut off the rest. This one hound bowled the quarry over, but he was off again and the Master called them all off.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Saturday, 17th July.—Windy Gap 12 noon. A windy day though cloudy, no rain to speak of, and no mist at all. Drew down by Bungalow Shola to the Yemakal Stream where hounds picked up a line and carried it up a small drift at the head of which the jack had gone to ground under a large rock. The trail of another jack led hounds past the Toda Mund below Yemakal Shola on through Little Yemakal and up the Mysore Ride to the ravine below the Krurmund bridle paths and turning sharp to the right past Nadankod Mund they crossed the stream and pointed west at first, but swung back again over the stream, and keeping below Yemakal Shola put their jack to ground in Duff's Earth. The Master then drew up towards Chemund, outside of which a jack was viewed. He took a line round to the top of the cover and coming out at the bottom went to ground in one of the streams that lead down to Yemakal Stream Hounds then got on to a brace of jack and hunted one of them round the covert for some time; he eventually slipped over into Dormer. Hounds pushed him through into Road Shola where they threw up on the Pykara Road. A wide cast was made along the road, and presently the jack was viewed at the lower end of Khed. Setting his mask for Bracken he went away at a great pace over the bog below Fuddler, and rising the hill left Bracken on his left and ran through Hamlet and Hearty into Beadnells, turning to the right over the top he fairly raced across the Bridle Path and along Windy Saddle into Briar. He was viewed leaving this cover at the top, but unfortunately hounds had got on to a fresh jack in the covert and by the time they were got out scent had practically died out.

Monday, 19th July.—Reis' Corner 8 A.M. Druid and Dudley were not holding nor was Jackal. A brace of jack was viewed from Bagman in the Blackmore Vale; galloping across hounds picked up the line of one, and carrying it up through Ballywood and the Potato Field, turned to the left across the road into Monkey. From here he was viewed away to the left of Bakie; taking a line through Dudley he ran over the top of Druid and sank the hill to Dreadnought and on past Dairy Maid to Woodstock when hounds lost him. Next drew New Cover and on along the Municipal Stream. Just then one of the second horsemen on Bagman viewed a jack in the Blackmore Vale. Hounds were quickly taken to the spot; picking up the lines they ran over Newmarket to Bluegums and on to Governor Shola when they put their jack to ground at Sheffield Corner, Kitty was put in but was unable to make him quit. Moving on to Rallywood hounds spoke to a line at the bottom and worked it slowly over to Monkey and back to Rallywood; the line was a stale one. As they were puzzling it out down the Blackmore Vale a brace of jack was viewed on the hillside. One of them went to ground almost at once, was evicted and run into; the other also went to ground some distance further on. He was forced to quit by the help of Kitty and the spade and was quickly accounted for. Hounds were then taken home. It was a delightful morning, nice and cloudy, with a pleasant south-western breeze, and a fairly large field turned out.

Tuesday, 20th July.—Andy Plantation 12 noon. Drew down the Andy Bog to Leatham's Nullah where three jack were found, each running in a different direction. The pack split up in Lancer Shola. One lot hunting their jack back along the Danger Ride were stopped before they reached the Parson's Valley. Some six or eight couple with the Master and field crossed the Krurmund Bridle Path, and running down below Sultan Shola swung round left handed past Thukkurai Mund and through Krurmund Shola to the Parson's Valley Stream. Here the Master was joined by Captain Vesey and Madurai with the rest of the pack. One of the three jack had gone to ground at the top of Lancer Shola. After a short while he bolted and running a short circle tried to get back to the earth but was run into a few hundred yards lower down. The Master then drew down towards the Yemakal. One or two jack were found but they at once popped into earths, and when bolted promptly dived into another. So we moved on in search of more sporting jack, and were fortunate in finding one near the Yemakal Stream. He led hounds at a fair pace up the hill to Chemund. At the far corner he turned over the ridge between Khed and Road Shola and fairly raced down to the bog below Dormer and up through the corner of the covert and through Temple Shola and just skirting the edge of Chemund. In short down to the Yemakal Stream and crossing it below One Tree Hill ran up through Yemakal and Little Yemakal Sholas to Nadankod Mund Stream were he succeeded in finding a safe refuge under a large clump of rocks near the stream. The day was a perfect one, cool and cloudy; although the sun came out for a short time it was never very hot. I am glad to hear that Mr. Vernon was not seriously hurt after his bad fall to-day—a broken rib and some bad bruises. The field was a small one.

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

I.F.A. SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

THE FINAL.

CUSTOMS vs. GORDONS.—The last match of the tournament was played on the Calcutta ground on Saturday last. The field was lined by an immense concourse of spectators and as was expected a capital game was witnessed. The Customs kicked off and Riach was called upon to save. Then the Gordons took up the attack but the shot went wide. L. H. Smith was injured and left the field for ten minutes, and though he returned and played pluckily to the end he was not his usual self. Both goals were then visited in turn till a foul against the Gordons looked like letting the Customs through but Harper cleared. A combined run by the Riversiders gave Smith an opportunity but the soldiers got the ball away and running down kept up a lengthy attack on the Customs citadel. McCready and Anderson, were, however, equal to all their efforts and the interval arrived without score. On resuming play was very fast : first the Gordons pressed but the Customs cleared and running down Galbreith and Smith made great efforts to score but were kept out. A good run by the former was well cleared by Riach who was injured in the attempt but resumed after a temporary cessation of hostilities. The Gordons attacked hotly and eventually McKay beat Fitzpatrick. The civilians tried hard to get on terms but without success and retired beaten by a goal. Mrs. J. H. Allen presented the shield to the Captain of the winning team at the conclusion of the game. Teams :—

GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—Riach, goal; Kirkwood and Richardson, backs; Finlay, Harper and Spence, halves; McDongal, McKinnon, McKay, Foreman, and Gilchrist, forwards.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE curtain was rung down on Soccer on Saturday when the I.F.A. Shield final took place. The Gordons won and we tender them our congratulations on their success. To see the beaming faces of the Tommies as they marched home after the game led by the redoubtable Pipe Band, he would be a hard man who would grudge them the pleasure of victory. Thomas Atkins' lot is never an easy one, and his football triumphs are more to him than the average civilian can guess. The Gordons will, we understand, go over to Bombay to take part in the Rover's Tournament there, and, if they retain their present form, should about win it. They are a better side than they were last year and are a splendidly balanced team. They never get flustered when pressed as most teams do, and their coolness, steadiness and balance should bring them successfully through the tournament at Bombay. The danger is that they may go stale between now and September as was the case last year when they visited Simla, but their experience then should prove of great utility now.

TURNING to the game, everyone who paid to see it had value for his money. There were numerous exciting moments and the interest of the spectators was never allowed to flag. The better team won, though, in all fairness to the Customs, it should be mentioned that the accident to the younger Smith weakened their attack. Play during the first half was very equal, but after the interval the superior training of the Gordons began to tell, and shortly before the close the winning point was notched. Customs played hard and well, but, as with every other civilian team, the pace was too much for them and their efforts towards the finish slackened perceptibly. In this instance, however, it appeared to be due to overtraining, as right through the game that peculiar slackness due to staleness was apparent in their play, and possibly the couple of rugger matches they took part in during the week had something to do with it. The crowd was huge and enthusiastic and the face of that humble benefactor ! (sic.) of mankind, the bawalla, shone with the pure joy of living as he contemplated the scene. After the match Mrs. J. H. Allen gave away the Shield to Spence, the Gordon's skipper, amid loud and prolonged cheers. Owing to a misunderstanding on the part of the firm supplying them, the gold medals for the winners and silver ditto for the losers did not turn up. They arrived by last mail, however, and probably have ere now been handed over to the teams.

THE tournament this year has been very much like its predecessors and, though the non-entry of any up-country teams was a matter for regret, we doubt if the crowds would have been any larger or the interest keener, had several of them taken part. Of the local teams five of them, at least, were very evenly matched, viz., Gordons, Dalhousie, Shropshires, Customs and Calcutta, while Rangers were probably within a goal of either of them. The Gordons must, however, be adjudged the champions, and it is no mean achievement to win the League and Shield two years running. Its more than any other team has done, and will doubtless stand as a record for some time to come. Customs have had a very similar season to last year. They are one place lower in the League, due chiefly to their very erratic play at the commencement of the season. They will, we understand, try their luck in the Durand Tournament at Simla this year, and we wish them all success. If they retain their form they should take some beating. Calcutta have also had a very similar year to the previous one, though the team this year was better. Hugh Sherman and Wright are the only members of the side of two years ago which was probably the best team the club has ever put into the field. All clubs, however, have their good and their bad times and possibly next year may see Calcutta in something like their true form.

DALHOUSIE showed greatly improved play this season and in Quale they have discovered a first rate full back. They finished second in the League table, a better position than they ever held before, and their record will read better than it has done for many years past. Rangers, too, did better than for several years, and possess one or two young players of promise. Y.M.C.A. have done no better or no worse than usual and occupy their annual position in the League table, while Caledonia are dead and buried with very little hope of resurrection.

SHROPSHIRES, the new comers, did fairly well and will probably make a better show next year.

JUST when the senior competition comes to an end, innumerable small competitions run by native clubs commence and wend their way with a burlesque seriousness right on to the beginning of the cold weather. There seems to be no apparent reason why they should all commence at once and at the end of the season, the consequence of which is that the "B" teams of the senior European clubs are unable to compete for want of grounds to play on. The principal junior cup competitions are the Sarma, Jabakusum and Minerva. The first has reached the penultimate stage, but the two others are only commencing, and it would be a more sensible thing for the promoters to run the ties during the League competition, when the weather is favourable and the interest of competing teams is not allowed to fade for want of grounds to play on.

NEXT Saturday will see Rugger in full swing and already several matches have taken place. The prospects point to a very favourable season, and a junior league has been started which will give those whose talents are obscure but whose keenness is undoubted all the exercise they want. No one will regret the end of the Soccer reason more than the bawalla who has been more than ever in evidence this year. Rugger does not attract his patrons, but it is only a case of "Au revoir" and not goodbye, for next season we shall again see his beaming countenance on all big match days.

WINCHESTER
Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

PAREL GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on a sloppy ground on the 19th instant, the Parel team winning easily. They had the best of the game in the first half but could only score one—through W. Alcock, and the Hornets managed to equalise. On changing ends play was fairly even for a spell and then the Gymkhana again took the upper hand and after missing innumerable chances scored two more goals. W. Alcock and Furbisher being responsible. The Hornets were unable to score and were thus beaten by three 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal; Wood and Millard, backs; Brookes, Osborne and Molyneux, halves; Dudley, Peters, Garrick, Jones and Gallacher, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Fox, goal; Holthal and C. Edwards, backs; Pennock, Patterson, and Major, halves; S. Alcock, Furbisher, W. Alcock, Sherren and R. Edwards, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ROVERS.—The Rovers had reorganised their team with the result that this game on the 20th instant was level and interesting throughout. They both scored a goal in the first half, the Rovers drawing first blood through Wilson, and Jaeger equalising shortly after. Play was very even after the interval. Price put the Gymkhana ahead, but Wilson again beat Holl a moment later and all further attempts to get the lead failing the game ending in a draw of two all. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKANA.—Holl, goal; Collingwood and Cooper, backs; Barrett, Sim and Price, halves; Padgett, Murray, Jaeger Cudlip and Moir, forwards.

ROVERS.—Rose, goal; Castle and McCoy, backs; Young, Osborne and Petty, halves; Thomson, Poyntz, Farrell, Wilson and Powell, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. R. G. A.—These teams met on the 21st instant, the Gunners who were not at full strength drawing with the Telegraph team one goal all. The game was well contested and interesting throughout. There was no score in the first half, but on resuming Southcott, of the military team, opened the scoring and the Gunners pressed for some time, but failed to add to their score. At length Green got possession and rushing down transferred to Ryan, who put the ball through for the Telegraphs. Teams :—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edies, goal; Taylor and Crutchley, backs; Woollen, Lewis and Redford, halves; Green, Asplin, Ryan, Conquest, and Holman, forwards.

R. G. A.—McKeown, goal; Watts and Br. Jones, backs; Sindrey, Hunt, Gill-Jones, halves; Brooke, Southcott, Franklin, Bailey and Keating, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. GLOSTERS.—These teams met on the 24th instant, one of the best games witnessed thus far in the League ending in a win for the Military by 2 goals to nil. The Gloucesters pressed at the start but play soon settled down and was very level throughout the first half, the interval arrived without score. On resuming the Gymkhana attacked but without success and the soldiers coming away, Holl was called upon to save. He cleared a fine shot by Leahy but was beaten a moment later by Osborne. The Gymkhana tried hard to get on terms and faced a corner. Nothing resulted and play ruled up and down the field. Both goals were visited. Shots by Leahy and Harris hit the cross bar but a foul against the Gyms in the penalty area enabled the soldiers to score their second goal. All efforts of the civilians to get through were unsuccessful and the game ended as stated. Team :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Atkinson and Buck, backs; Cooper, Sherwood and Law, halves; Maton, Short, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Holl, goal; Collingwood and Elliot, backs; Barrett, Jaeger and Sim, halves; Murray, Wadeson, Price, Abbot and Moir, forwards.

In order to avoid an argument with a woman suffragist on the subject of her hobby a happy bachelor gallantly acquiesced in the truth of her assertions.

"But, sir," sternly remarked the spinster, "your admission is anything but creditable to you What, for instance, have you ever done for the emancipation of woman?"

"Madam," responded the gentleman with a polite smile and a bow, "I have at least remained a bachelor!"

A charitable lady was reading the Old Testament to an aged woman who lived at the home for old people, and chanced upon the passage concerning Solomon's household.

"Had Solomon really seven hundred wives?" inquired the old woman, after reflection.

Oh, yes, Mary. It is so stated in the Bible."

"Lor', mum!" was the comment. "What privileges them early Christians had!"

GOLF RECORDS.

Golf records are cheap to-day, cheaper perhaps than they have ever been, though the supply of them was very liberal during the season following the first introduction of the rubber-cored ball, observes a writer in a London paper. Nearly every morning we see in the papers that someone has broken the record of some course or other, and even if such course was one that few people living far from it had ever heard of before, the fact that another new record has been made must to some extent interest even the non-golfing reader and cause him to think that we breed and train a fine lot of golfers in these days.

But many of these records are not such very wonderful things after all. The balls that are being made this season can undoubtedly be driven further than their predecessors, and when courses get dry and hard and professional players of the Open Championship class get playing on those where none of their quality have ever played before, records for the round are always likely to "go." One would be quite safe in saying that there are at least a hundred courses in the country, played on constantly, of which Taylor, in his present form, could beat the records if he had three attempts at each of them, and in many cases probably the first attempt would suffice.

And there are many other kinds of golf records besides this one, and, though he may not have realised it, there can scarcely be a golfing reader of these notes who has not made one of his own at some time or other. Thus he may have got the third, the eleventh, and the seventeenth holes on his course in 3 each, though they were all par 4's, and that may have been the only time that such a thing was ever done; but, even if in the strict sense a record, it was hardly worth talking about, after all. So there should be some discrimination—more than there is—in this recording of records.

TAYLOR'S WONDERFUL FORM.

These considerations do not alter the fact, however, that some really very curious and extraordinary things have been done on the links just lately that are very well worth noting and remembering.

I have just hinted at Taylor's present form. It is amazing. It does not generally happen that a man, after winning the Open Championship, displays, for some time, at all events, such great form as enabled him to win the most coveted distinction that is afforded by the game. He has to reach his highest point of excellence to win the championship, cannot go much, if any farther, and suffers a reaction afterwards. Trace the histories of the Open Champions of the past, and you will generally find that after winning the blue ribbon of golf their great merit has then disappeared for some time.

Certainly there have been exceptions to this rule. Braid, for instance, generally having played his very best after gaining his biggest successes, and one remembers that the day after he won the Open Championship at Prestwick last year he visited another Scottish course, and there broke the record of it, even though he was then without his favourite putter, which, in a most generous mood the night before he had presented to an amateur friend, remarking at the time that he did not know what on earth he would do on the putting greens the following morning.

But no Open Champion has ever shown that his big victory was less of a flash in the pan than Taylor has done since his success at Deal, for since then he has been playing a dazzling game, and could win the championship over again at the present time if he were called upon to do so.

DIFFERENCE IN CLASS.

No record of a course is safe just now when Taylor is out. Last Saturday he went down to Ilford and made a new record there, and on Tuesday he was in Scotland and made another new record on the course on which he was playing. What is very remarkable about such performances as these is that a man like Taylor can do the best score that has ever been done at his first attempt, and often do it with something to spare, when such courses have been played upon by hundreds of players for months or years previously.

Nothing could better indicate the wide difference that there is between the quality of the game as played by men of the triumvirate class and others. They play every time shots which are equal to the best ever played by inferior men. The ordinary golfer may play a stroke that lives in his memory for weeks afterwards, perhaps for years. He will tell you now how in 1907 he once played the ball with a niblick from an impossible lie at the seventh, laid it within four feet from the hole, and then got the putt down; but Taylor would do this or something like it nearly every time; sometimes he would lay the ball within a foot of the hole. There is something about such form that even experienced golfers cannot understand.

But there have been many other records made recently which are interesting to think about besides those of the Taylor variety.

Thus, I find that no fewer than eighteen have been made with the same ball within a fortnight, and again it is set forth that last week a Welsh doctor broke the course record at Portmadoc in his first round one evening, and going out again, broke the record that he had only just made.

Night then cast its cover on the links, or there is no telling what a man in this vein might not have done. I remember that Taylor once broke his own record twice in one day at Mid-Surrey, and, needless to say, it was a much harder thing to do there than at Portmadoc.

A GOLF-CRICKET FEAT.

And there have been two other achievements of a most remarkable character done within the last few days, having nothing to do with the number of strokes played in a round.

In one case a cricketing golfer in Manchester tied for first place in a big golf cup competition in the morning, departed thence to play cricket at Stockport, many miles away in the afternoon, made top score for his side, went on to bowl, was summoned back to play off his tie at Timperley, went there in a motor-car, and won the cup. This was Mr. Vernon Hope, who will not soon forget that day's work.

Again at this time of the year the fever seizes some men of desire to play an extraordinary amount of golf in one day—not because they want so much of the game, but just for the satisfaction of knowing they have played so much.

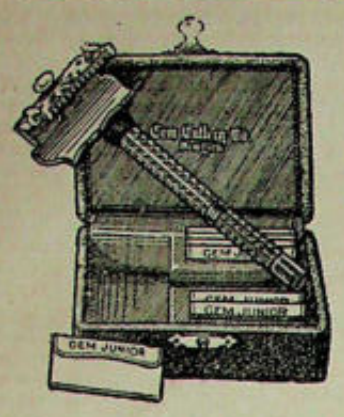
It is less than a year ago that at Aberdeen a golfer did his nine rounds in one day, and now on the course of the Edinburgh Burgess Club, at Barnton, two golfers have done their eight rounds between sunrise and dark, and one of the twain was about sixty years of age. They wasted little of the light of day, for they slept overnight in the greenkeeper's house, were called at three o'clock in the morning and drove their first balls an hour later.

The elder of the two walked a long way home after doing his eight rounds, and the younger, who had an average of 82 strokes for the eight, was up at six o'clock the next morning, and went off somewhere else for a day's pleasure.

The veteran Captain Molesworth, of Westward Ho, once did eight rounds there, eating nothing but an apple and some biscuits from the time when he began until he had finished, and in the evening of the same day he played billiards with a guest until nearly midnight.

It would hardly seem that there are many more records of this particular kind to be made at any rate.

The Naturalist.



THE SIMPLEST LIVING THINGS.

In old times, if one wanted to compare a man to the humblest and simplest of animals, one called him "a worm." But really a worm is a very elaborate creature, with skin, muscles, blood-vessels, kidneys, nervous system, pharnyx, stomach, and an intestine, and is built up by hundreds of thousands of protoplasmic cells. Shakespeare got nearer the mark when he made one of his uncompromising professional "murderers" exclaim, as he stabbed the young Macduff to the heart, "What, you egg!" An egg is a single cell or corpuscle of protoplasm, and the simplest living things are of the same structure—mere units, single corpuscles of protoplasm, often less than the one-thousandth of an inch in diameter, and invisible except with the microscope, though in some cases big enough to be seen by the naked eye as they swim or crawl in a glass of pond-water. Many thousands of kinds of these simplest animals and plants have been carefully recorded, distinguished from one another, and named by naturalists.

MANY of these unicellular animals (or "Protozoa") crawl by a curious irregular flowing movement of the viscid tenacious protoplasm of which they consist. There is no firm coat or cell-wall, only the thinnest pellicle on the surface. The Proteus animalcule is so called because of its constant change of shape; it is also called Amœba on this account. It flows out into broad, sometimes elongated, finger-like processes, of which one or several of different sizes may be formed at the same time, and then quickly disappear as the whole creature moves. So particles of food—minute unicellular plants—are engulfed the moving viscid protoplasm and digested within it—that say chemically dissolved, just as food is digested in the sto of a big animal. The colourless cells of our blood and lyr are called "amœboid" because of their identity with an Amœ in shape and movement and digestive power. In some of the animalcules (sun-animalcules and others) the processes of t protoplasm are in the form of very fine long spreading threac which entangle a food-particle, and then contract, drawing i up into the disc-like central body.

A WHOLE group or divison of these simplest animals are provided with special moving or vibrating hair-like extensions of the protoplasm called "cilia," that being the Latin name for "eyelashes," to which they are compared. These cilia are arranged with great regularity in rows, circlets, or spirals, on the surface of the "cell." They are found not only on cells which are independent unicellular animals and plants, but also on cells which form the clothing or surface layer of many larger animals. Thus in ourselves they are found lining the windpipe, and they also line the internal cavity of the brain and spinal cord. The gills of the oyster, and such shell-fish, and other parts of their skin, are paved with ciliated or cilia-bearing cells, set side by side in thousands. A single "cilium" is like a little lash of a whip, and is always making its lashing movement. For a fraction of a second it is straight and upright, then suddenly curves over and bends to one side with a flick," and immediately recovers its upright position. All the cilia on one cell or one surface "beat" in the same direction, and with a common rhythm, so that if the cell is a free independent animalcule it is driven along through the water by the rapid strokes of these numberless tiny "oars" or "paddles." If the cilia are on a surface—like the oyster's gill—they drive the water along and create a constant current. Each cilium consists of an elastic and a contractile fibre closely fused together; the contraction of the one part causes a flick or bending of the hair-like cilium, the elasticity of the other substance causes it at once to straighten out again.

THE ciliated unicellular animalcules (often called the infusoria because they flourish in decomposing "infusions" not only swim by means of their cillia but have a definite mouth or opening in the firm outer layer of the protoplasm of the cell, into which solid particles of food are driven by whirlpool-like currents set up by special lines of cilia. The mouth leads through a definite "gullet" into the interior of the cell. Remember that the whole creature is but a single minute cell or corpuscle of protoplasm! It is only from the hundredth to the thousandth of an inch long—with nucleus of denser structure within—just like, in essential structure and properties, one single cell of the many thousands which build up the liver, or are packed in layers to form our outer skin, or are piled side by side (by self-division) to make the stems and leaves of plants. Yet here is such a cell—self-sufficing. When it divides (as it does) the two resulting cells do not remain in contact as they do when a germ cell (a fertilised egg-cell) divides. They simply separate, and each swims away and carries on its own life. Many of them are fitted out with these cilia as a most serviceable locomotor apparatus,and as producers of food currents driving the food right into a permanent, definitely-shaped mouth. Some have also a separate opening by which the undigested remains of the food are extruded. They have also a liquid-holding cavity or series of cavities which when distended contract and discharge their contents to the exterior. This is an apparatus for "washing out" the protoplasm of the unicellular animalcule and getting rid of excretory products; it is definitely comparable in its use, though so different in origin, to the many-celled kidneys and bladder of higher animals.

ONE of the numerous kinds of "bell-animalcules" affords an excellent example in which we can watch the structures and life-processes in a single cell. It is a pear or bell-shaped body, little more than one-thousandth of an inch broad, supported on a long, hollow stalk (though sometimes it breaks off from its stalk and swims freely); inside the stalk is a muscle so attached that when it it contracts it shortens the stalk by throwing it into a close-set, corkscrew spiral. The bell-shaped body has a relative firm surface, beneath which is soft viscid protoplasm and a large sausage-like nucleus. The body can expand itself so as to look like a solid bell or trumpet shaped figure, with a flat disc-like surface where the "hollow" of the bell should be, or it can draw the edges of the disc together and assume the shape of a ball. A line of "cilia" is set on the edge of the bell's disc and takes a spiral course.

THERE is a deep pit on one side of the disc. This is the mouth. It is easy to feed this minute "egg" of a creature; A powder of fine particles—boiled bacteria, in fact, are what I have used—is introduced into the water between two slips of glass in which the bell animalcule is displaying itself under our microscope. We see the particles whirling about in a vortex, hitting the disc of the bell-animalcule and then driven into the pit or cavity of the open mouth, whence they sink, enclosed in a sphere or droplet of water, into the internal protoplasm! If the "boiled bacteria," before they are introduced, are stained with an alkaline blue such as blue litmus, they are seen in the course of a few seconds to turn red—showing that an acid has been secreted by the protoplasm (probably accompanied by a ferment) into the little sphere of water, in which the digestion of the boiled bacteria now goes on. In the course of a few minutes you will see the little sphere of water dwindling in size—the nourishing fluid being absorbed by the protoplasm—and then you will see the undigested fragments passed on by a slow movement to the vestibule or "pit" of the mouth, extruded through a temporary opening from the protoplasm and whirled away by the water currents! If you colour the "boiled bacteria" with water-soluble anilin-blue—as I did many years ago—you will see that the colour vanishes from the particles taken into the bell-animalcule's protoplasm, and presently an independent sphere of bright blue liquid begins to form in the protoplasm. This sphere or globule is the renal organ mentioned above—here very simple and single. It is called the "contractile vacuole." It enlarges rapidly, filling with blue liquid (when special coloured food has not been supplied the liquid is colourless), then suddenly contracts, squirting its blue contents out through a special reservoir into the mouth-pit.

THE nucleus of these uni-cellular animals is often elongated, and shaped according tothe general shape of the animalcule; but it is the same thing as the "nucleus" of all cells, whether of plants or animals—a denser "kernel" protoplasm, limited by its own delicate sheath or membrane. It shows, like the cell-nucleus of ordinary cells, a special affinity for certain dyes, which do not stain the rest of the cells, so that it can be made very obvious and clear when the animalcule is killed by alcohol, picric acid, or other preservative solutions, and then stained; and it shows a curious breaking-up of its substance into threadlike fibres when the animalcule is about to divide into two—as is seen also in all cells when the regular process of division of one cell into two commences. The larger animalcules have enabled us to find out what are the special properties of the nucleus of cells, as contrasted with those of the rest of the protoplasm. The trumpet animalcule (Stentor) is a single cell, and though only one-thirtieth of an inch long is large enough to be cut into pieces by very skilful use of a fine blade. It is found that, if we cut the Stentor into four or five bits, all continue to "live"; that is to say, to swim about by the vibration of the hair-like cilia on their surface But those bits which have no part of the nucleus in them die after a few hours. They cannot take nourishment nor grow. On the other hand, all the bits which comprise a slice of nucleus commence to contract, and shape themselves like the original Stentor, then form a mouth, and take nourishment, and grow up to be fully-sized, complete Stentors—animalcules like that by the cutting-up of which they were formed. This and similar experiments are held to prove that the processes of nutrition, growth, and production of specific form are dependent on the nucleus. In its absence, you may have contractility and active movement for a time, but no repair, no building-up of new material, no directed or seemingly "purposive" movement. Such movements, viz., advance in one direction, arrest hesitating, or exploring movement to the right and left, followed by rapid retreat or advance in a straight line, are often exhibited by those minute animalcules, and cannot be distinguished in character from those, say, of a fly or even of a mouse.

THESE facts throw a great light on the significance of the structure of the protoplasmic corpuscle which we call a "cell," and show that the universal presence of the nucleus in every "cell" is due to the fact that it plays the most important part in the life of the cell. It is the seat of control, and contains substances in virtue of which the changes which constitute growth and formproduction take place, and in the absence of which the rest of the protoplasm cannot "carry on," although for a time it lives; that is to say, remains chemically undecomposed, and shows active movement. At the same time, we must not underrate the importance of the general protoplasm without the presence of some of which the nucleus cannot do its work, nor even exist. It is no wonder, then, that when a cell divides, there are curious and elaborate proceedings in the nucleus, by which each daughter-cell gets its due half of the all-important nuclear substance.

The Story Teller.

THE STORY OF A DACOITY.

YEARS ago, I was Assistant Superintendent of Police in a Bengal District, when one night my District Superintendent being out in camp a man named Hengah Badya came to me about 8 o'clock saying he had information of a dacoity to be committed the following night at Palasbari over 60 miles from the Head-Quarter's Station. Having been only a short time in the District, I had no previous acquaintance with him, but he said he had served a term of 20 years in the Andamans for dacoity, and had been released five years before, since when he had lived by cultivation. Four days before two of his fellow-villagers had gone to his home evidently to sound him, knowing of course his previous history; they stated that a number of men of the neighbourhood had arranged to attack the house of one Jeswant Mull at Palasbari, and would he join them; he had at first declined, but they pointed out that the local Police were then all engaged enquiring into a serious rioting case at a distant village, that Jeswant himself had gone with two boat loads of jute to Serajgunge leaving only his women folk and two servants at home, and that the nights were dark, and the chances of detection almost nil, and though he feared being again drawn into crime he had at length agreed to join them. They had then divulged the names of the whole party, some 22 in all, and it had been settled that they should collect in a certain jungle near the main road after dusk the following Saturday evening, and proceed thence to Jeswant's house. Hengah Badya went on to say that he had afterwards thought the matter over and being then fairly comfortably off with his cultivation he was afraid of the possible consequences of his journey, and had therefore determined not do so, but to inform against the party. I sent for an old Inspector then in the Reserve, enquired what he knew of Hengah, and learnt that though he had never been actually proved to have committed any fresh crime since his release, he was a very suspicious character. There appeared however to be no time or means of testing the information he had given me or to take any preventive measures, as I decided on sending out a party of Police with Hengah Badya and following myself.

I started about 3 A.M. riding, and caught the Police up some 40 miles out; they were dead beat, so we halted for a time. About 3 P.M. we again started, but several of the men were footsore and three had to be left a few miles further on. We neared Palasbari about 11 P.M. and realized that Hengah Badya's information was correct, and that the dacoity was then actually occurring, for though still distant a half mile we could see the glare of torches over and through the trees about the villages, and in the still night could hear shouts. We hurried on and as we went I placed Hengah Badya in sole charge of two constables, and divided the rest of the men with two parties, one to remain on guard outside, while I took the other inside the place.

The Marwari's premises consisted of a large yard surrounded by a high interlaced bamboo fencing, inside of which facing the entrance was a large house used as a store and for the transaction of the owner's business, behind this again was a small inner courtyard with his family's private rooms. At the outer entrance we found two of the dacoits on guard and at once seized, gagged and bound them. Inside the yard two more were standing holding lighted torches, while three others had broken open a large chest from which they had pulled out several bales of new cloth, a quantity of ornaments and brass utensils, and a bag of cash. On seeing us one managed to rush through the constables at the gate after felling one of them with his lathee, and a second snatching up the bag of cash followed, and also shoved through in the confusion, and got away, but the other three were secured. In the meantime we could hear piercing shrieks of women in the inner yard, to which I then ran, followed by four or five constables, here 11 or 12 dacoits armed with spears, swords and lathees and their faces covered with ashes and bound round with cloths had sized an old woman and two girls whom they had stripped of their ornaments, and most of their clothing, and were burning with torches about their arms and chests to make them shew where other valuables were concealed. Two of the rascals were holding down one of the girls while a third was pricking her under the thumb nail with a large thorn.

We came on these ruffians unawares as they had not heard our arrival. Some of them at first attempted to make a stand but their weapons were quickly beaten down, and the rest made a bolt for the door where they were met by some of the constables. One was knocked down, and three others were badly hurt, cowed and driven back into a corner of the room: the rest however broke through to the main entrance while one more was secured by the Police on guard there, and the others escaped. One constable inside the house had been rather badly mauled having his right wrist broken, and another at the gate had received a bad cut across the cheek, while others had been more or less hurt, but none severely. Altogather 14 of the dacoits had been secured and the whole affair was over in ten minutes. The villagers who till then had kept in their houses finding the turn matters had taken now came up and an attempt was made to follow up the dacoits, only one however, who stumbled and fell soon after leaving the house, was caught. My men were too much exhausted for any further exertion, and the villagers were too frightened and half-hearted to do anything alone.

In the morning, after getting from Hengah the names and residences of the escaped men, I rode out along the riverside east of Palasbari with a view to ascertaining if any such men had crossed at either of the two adjacent ferries, but they had not. Some eight miles down, however, I learnt from a man who was fishing from a dug-out, that shortly after dawn a man carrying a bundle had asked him to cross him over the river, he had noticed when the man had stepped in that the dug out appeared to sink rather deeply at that end and he had asked what he was carrying, but got not reply, and on his repeating the question the man appeared to be annoyed and mumbled that it was only tobacco. On reaching the opposite bank his passenger, who looked travel stained and tired, slipt as he hastily got out and the fishermen distinctly heard the chink of money in his bundle as it struck against the side of the dug-out. I unsaddled my horse, and getting into the dug-out told him to take me across the river, which he did, my horse swimming alongside. He said his late passenger had gone southwards a large village he pointed out two miles off, a sharp canter took me to it, and I found myself in a crowd of people who had collected round a man seated on a small bundle on the ground. I at once surmised that this must be the man the fisherman referred too. The villagers said he had tried to pass the village through the adjcent fields, evidently wishing to avoid being seen, and would give no account of himself, so they had stopped him on suspicion. He was clearly a good deal taken back at seeing me, and after a bit admitted having been in the dacoity, and having escaped with one of his companions named Fukeer Mushoo who had carried off a bag of cash, when they had gone a couple of miles he had suggested a division of the plunder, Fukeer, however, would not agree to this until the whole party collected, they quarrelled over it and he had struck Fukeer senseless, and leaving him in a scrub jungle had made off with the bag which he had wrapped up in his body cloth for better concealement.

I got a couple of the villagers to return with me leading the man whom I secured with a rope, and we recrossed the river. I then made my prisoner who gave his name as Ramdin Badya show me where he had left Fukeer. Taking us to a low scrub jungle he pointed out the dead body lying in some long grass into which he had dragged it; there was a deep cut on the head and the skull appeared to be fractured, while a good deal of blood lay about the ground. Ramdin said he had not intended to kill Fukeer, and then in a maudlin way attempted to deny his first story, alleging he had himself carried off the bag of money from the Marwari's house, and knew nothing of how Fukeer had come there or met his death.

Several of the escaped dacoits were brought in during the next few days, they all at first attempted to deny their complicity but gradually admitted it. Very little property had been actually carried off besides the bag of money which contained Rs. 1,000, in fact only a few ornaments and some brass utensils were missing; two of the dacoits gave up some of these which they had buried near their houses, while two others named a petty local landholder as having bought their shares of the plunder, from whom the things were recovered.

Though Hengah Badya had not been seen with the Police by any of the men arrested, and had the morning after the dacoity been allowed to return home, it somehow leaked out that we had acted on his information and one of the dacoits indignantly informed me that Hengah was a regular member of their gang for months past, and had participated in several dacoities; he had quarralled with them over the division of property in a recent case, hence the information he had given, the man added that an influential Jotedar named Mokram Khan of Huldibari was a great "ally of Hengah's," and always took over his stolen property. Mokram Khan's house was consequently searched when a great quantity of suspicious property was found, much of which was subsequently recognized as having been plundered in various cases, and which Mokram Khan said had been pawned to him by Hengah Badya. Two constables were sent at once to arrest Hengah, but while they were crossing the river with him he jumped off the boat, one of the constables pluckily plunged in too and seized him, they sank together and were swept down by the swift current, and weeks after the bodies still grasping each other were found miles away. The dacoits arrested and the receivers were all convicted and thus a formidable gang was broken up.

Travel and Adventure.

ON FOOT ACROSS THE GREAT KAROO OF CAPE COLONY.

In the year 1904 I returned to Cape Town from Argentina expecting to find the city prosperous and flourishing, but was astonished to hear on all sides that the city had gone "dead in." The idea of a trek across the great Karoo was suggested to me and keenly supported by the Cape Times. The West of England Outfitters offered to equip me with the best suitable clothing that many could buy and I finally decided to undertake the feat. The Karoo is a sandy belt beginning at Touw's River and ending at Norval's Pont where the Orange River is encountered, which constitutes the division of the Cape Colony and the Orange River Colony, and is some 300 miles in extent. The average rainfall per annum is about six inches in the Karoo and travellers by the Cape Government Railway en route to Rhodesia, the Transvaal or Orange River Colony dread this portion of the journey. The intensity of the sun's rays is accentuated by the scarcity of water and the great distances between farms: towns or even villages there are none except on the Railway line. 'Tis one great arid waste and here exists in very truth what is euphemistically termed the "abomination of desolation." Shifting sand dunes constitute a terrible danger and one might travel for days round and round battling for life and yet never leave the original spot of departure for long. So treacherous are these shifting dunes of sand that the Engineering Department of the Railway are constantly engaged in digging out the railway track. A sand storm in the Karoo once encountered is a life-long recollection. Huge waves of sand are carried along in the storm, hot and blistering in its power and a simoom in velocity. Everything has to give way before this awful evidence of the power of God and the utter weakness of man. Flat on the ground with nose and eyes protected is the order to observe and should the storm be of lasting fury nothing survives it. Birds, the smaller animals, sheep, horses and human beings are found from time to time victims to some unrecounted or forgotten disaster. Such is the intensity of the heat and so rarified the air that carcases or corpses do not decay and are recovered in a perfect state of preservation and bear out Byron's lines:—

"He, who hath gazed him, o'er the dead,
Ere the first day of death has fled,
Before decay's effacing fingers,
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers,
Would surely doubt that tyrant's power
So fair, so calm, so softly sealed,
Each last, best look in Death revealed."

This then is a somewhat imperfect idea of the great Karoo and the difficulty of my walk across this desert may well be imagined by the reader. To begin my narrative, however. In excellent fettle and feeling or fit as a fiddle I set out on my trek, with the hearty good wishes of a crowd of enthusiastic sportsmen, most of whom tried to dissuade me from starting and most of whom recounted harrowing tales relative to the fate of others. Nothing deterred, I started away after lunch intending to go easy until I had gained my walking condition. Only twelve miles away I was held up at Parow by the members of the local Club, who forcibly detained me as their guest for the night and feted me right royally. I thought that I had started badly, for dissipation and trekking the Karoo were incongruous elements and early next morning gave my hosts the slip, bribing Dinah, the coloured chambermaid, to let me out quietly. I was in splendid form and reached the Paarl by 7 P.M., having stopped for a meal at Kaalfontein and having covered 39 miles.

I was, of course, not yet in the Karoo and had perforce to accept civilized hospitality and it was here that the Mayor of the town presented me with a bottle of Cape Brandy sixty-nine years old. From Paarl to Worcester I had a series of adventures, but outside the range of this article. I have placed the Karoo as beginning at Touw's River, which is strictly correct, but it is locally contended that it actually is entered at Worcester. There is nothing of the Karoo in the most beautiful, fertile and prosperous valley in South Africa. The mighty mountains of the Drakensburg, snow-capped; the lonely Hex River flowing at its base and the smiling farms, principally orchards, all contradict the contention. I must digress here to mention a particular farm, the property of Mr. James Brodie and for which he refused £169,000 sterling. This is staggering but 'tis a fact. Mr. Brodie bred even his own trout from his native streams of Scotland. Well! Brodie was my host for one night and such a host, hence this tribute. I was accommodated in the guest chamber of his homestead and to my surprise there was a book for autographs. Rudyard Kipling, Melton Prior, Bennet Burleigh, Stephen Gwynne, Earl Roberts, Lord Methuen, General Wauchope, etc., had all been guests of this large-hearted, sporting and God-fearing Scotsman. We parted with mutual regret and he and his wife sportingly accompanied me five miles on my onward way. To walk this valley with its prosperous farms and flowered hedge rows made one feel that it was good to live. This was "away from the madding crowd," from the degenerating influences of city life with its rush and crush for wealth and its high pressure existence. Nightfall found me at De Dooms (the Thorns) and place well named as it is over-run with the Wacht-em-bichi (wait-a-bit) thorn—the bete noir of cyclists, for they wait a very long bit and use very expressive language at punctures for which it is responsible. Tackling the Karoo proper at Touw's River and some ten miles on my course, the idea came into my mind that it was a particularly snakey-looking country, when I spied immediately in my path a full-grown Cobra-de-capello. I drew up and as I was unarmed except for a pen knife and a walking stick, I decided to concede the position to it and walked round. This was the only snake I saw in South Africa during a nine year's residence.

It was a dreary journey from now until I entered Matjesfontein, memorable in history, as the shambles of the Highland Brigade under General Wauchope. He is buried here and a superb monument erected by the Hon'ble J. D. Logan attests his many virtues. Logan is known as the Laird of Matjesfontein and owns everything for miles round. It is here also that George Lohmann, the Surrey cricketer, is buried and even his grave is Logan's cave. This is an extraordinary town. Excepting the Laird everybody is a consumptive: the Station Master, Colporteur, Bank Manager, Hotel Manager, Police—all, and they are specially sent here to benefit by the dry atmosphere of the Karoo. From here begins the Koop, quite distinct from the Karoo, inasmuch that the shrub that grows in it is of a different and less salt quality than that of the Karoo and it is in the Koop that the finest sheep in South Africa are bred. Continuing my weary and somewhat monotonous road I made Prince Alfred, a town with a hotel and a store. A great rush for problematical gold was on and the country for miles round was being pegged out. It was going to become a second Johannesburg but it didn't. It was a wild cat venture, engineered by an unscrupulous Company promoter. Fraserburg Road was my next halting place, a town noted for one peculiarity, viz., that all vehicles are drawn by donkies: the horse dies of lung sickness and cattle die out from disease, but the donkey nothing seems to affect. I said one peculiarity, but there is yet another, Fraserburg is also noted for its Thistles: there is a legend attached to these Thistles, but 'tis perhaps unsuitable for the columns of the Indian Field, so I shall not recount it. From here I felt the horror of the Karoo: sinking to my ankles in loose sand, hot, blistered by the sun, parched for a drink, I all but gave up the trek to make tracks for a railway station and back to civilisation, but I bethought me of the text, "He who putteth his hand to the plough and turneth back is not fit for the Kingdom of God" and determination came to my aid.

Colesburg (the birthplace of Paul Kruger) was worthy a visit. Here I met Mr. Zanzibar Stevens, F.R.G.S., who gave me an interesting memoir. It was that at the Masonic Hotel there in the early Kimberley days, himself, Barney Barnato, Cecil Rhodes and Rudd played marbles on the hotel stoop (verandah), but the marbles were diamonds. Those days have gone and poor old Zanzibar was "stony broke" at the time. Two years later I wrote his biography for "Men of the Times" and it was pathetic in the extreme to find him daily at my office to implore me to hurry up with his life, "as," said he, "I may die any day: my race is run and I long for my rest" He is at rest. Beaufort West, my next halt, is famous as the graveyard of South Africa, for it is to Beaufort West the consumptives of the world flee to eke out their last days: their last days is the correct term for in the majority of cases, they arrive too late and go to swell the cemetry extending some two miles in length where lie princess and peasants, rich and poor, young and old in their last long sleep. It is heartrending to read some of the inscriptions on tombstones; men, the hope of their families; women, young and beautiful "cut down as a flower" in their youth and beauty. At Beaufort West I had a great reception, especially from the Indian Community and at the request of the Magistrate and the Rev. Dr. McAuliffe S.J., I delivered a lecture on behalf of the funds of the local Library on "India and its People," which realised £42-10-0. The Karoo ends here so to say as the country becomes mountainous and it is a steady climb to within ten miles of Norval's Pont. Two days hard walking brought me into Norval's Pont, my complexion mahogany, but my health and strength perfect. Not all the cosmetiques of Belinda's toilet or Rowland's Kalydore will ever remove the tan I gained on that trek through the Great Karoo, but I was so fit that I wished I could then have met some of my past enemies. There would have been a record slaughter and I'd have started my own funeral yard. My average walking result was 39 miles per working day for 30 days.

MOTOR MEMS. FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 9th July 1909.

TOO MANY FOSTER-MOTHERS.

Of the associations supposed to watch over and guard the interests of motorists, we cannot say, says the Motor, that any one is in a position now to offer any serious opposition to the burden which has been inflicted upon us. Long ago we recognised what was likely to result from the formation of separate institutions affecting to foster automobilism in various ways, but in reality more or less in rivalry with each other and eager to jump in at every available opportunity to secure a scoop one over the other. We are now in a position to see the evils arising out of rivalry in organisation. We see one institution which has once committed itself in an effort to score off another, entirely unable to free itself from the fetters with which it has bound itself. We see the officials of another institution easily becoming the victims of the interviewers and committing themselves to hastily-expressed opinions which cannot by any stretch of imagination be regarded as representative of the opinion of the majority of motorists. Motorists have too many foster-mothers, each too eager to parade its solicitude for its charges to the disadvantage of the others.

NEW TYPE OF CAR SPRING.

A distinctive type of car spring, claimed to have such qualities as to dispense with a special shock absorber, has just been placed on the French market. It consists of a double set of superimposed springs, united at their extremities by a special type of hanger. When running with a light load, or over a good surface, the upper spring only is brought into play. With a heavy load on the car, the two springs work together as one unit. The benefits claimed from this are that a car, normally hard, unless carrying its full load of passengers, becomes easy to ride even with only one person up, if the double compensating springs are employed. The value of the contrivance as an absorber of shocks is based on the fact that, on dropping into a rut, the two sets of springs are flattened out together; but it is the lower one which first springs back to its normal position, whilst the upper one alone is insufficient to oscillate the car body. Any type of spring can be modified to receive this addition. Thus, if three-quarter elliptics are used, it is the quarter portion that is made double. In the case of the platform type of spring, it is the transverse one that is made double, the two being attached to one point at the centre, but separated where the clips bind them by a metal plate, and united by a special type of shackle containing a coil spring.

CLEARING THE SILENCER.

Now and then engines suffer from a mysterious loss of power. A careful overhauling of the ignition, carburettor, etc., fails to reveal any reason for it. Where the engine has been in use for some time it is worth while to examine the silencer to see if the exhaust gases have a free exit. If it is chocked with burnt oil they are impeded, and the engine overheats easily. A useful tip which, according to the Field, is often of value in this case is to fit temporarily a very small nipple to the carburettor, after which the engine is raced for a moment. The ignition is then suddenly switched off while the engine continues to revolve rapidly. After another moment, and before it stops, the current is switched on again, with the result that the gas in the silencer is exploded with great force. This causes large volumes of black smoke to be discharged, giving one some idea of the filth that collects inside. The reason for the use of a small nipple is that severe explosions are more easily obtained, as larger sizes give a mixture that is too good to explode in this way. If the silencer is weak this plan is inadvisable, as the explosion is often strong enough to shatter it, as, indeed, has happened when this experiment has been tried. There is little fear, however, of this on a modern car.

VALUE OF MOTOR TRIALS.

The time has come when those who have organised the two great motor-car trials must take into earnest consideration the question whether, in anything like their present forms, these trials are worthy to be continued in future years. Their forms, of course, are not identical, for different formulæ, different bases of classification, make some difference, but they are identical in one most essential respect, says the Times. Neither of them is long enough, nearly long enough, to test the soundness and durability of the best British or foreign cars, and the consequence is that these cars are not, as a rule, entered for these trials. The trials, in fact, are to a first-class and powerful car as a fourth examination paper ought to be to a schoolboy in the sixth form; they ought to be ridiculously easy. It is no credit to go through them with an unblemished reputation; and yet it is painfully easy to make mistakes and to lose marks. Moreover, since hard-and-fast rules are absolutely necessary, it is possible—and, indeed, it occurs frequently—that one car may lose as many marks for the merest accident as a rival loses for a grave mechanical defect. How long does it take to set things right and the car in motion again? That is the only question and the answer to it has often pressed far too heavily on many a good car, far too lightly on ramshackle vehicles. Add the inevitable facts that the "observers" are men, and therefore, of varying capacity, and that many qualities of real importance to the motorist cannot be tested on a trial, and it would appear that there is a good deal to be said against the continuance of either set of trials unaltered.

JOCKEY CLUB LEGISLATION.

THE Jockey Club on the proposition of the Stewards have adopted an important new rule to the effect "that no weight shall be allotted to a horse in a handicap, until he has run three times in the United Kingdom." The idea is not a new one. Something akin to it was placed on the Turf Statute Book in 1887, when, after much discussion, it was ordained that "No horse is eligible to be handicapped for any public race unless he shall have been habitually trained in the United Kingdom, or have twice run there during the six preceding months of the racing season." This law was first mooted in 1886, but encountered strong opposition. The reason of its introduction was generally understood to be the "double" effected by Plaisanterie in 1885, she winning the Cesarewitch under 7st. 8lb., and the Cambridgeshire under 8st. 12lb.,—the latter the greatest weight successfully carried by a three-year-old in this handicap. As in the same year Barberine had run away with the Newmarket October Handicap, English owners became very restive, and the new rule was welcomed. It was resented by French owners and on their behalf Mr. Henry Chaplin wrote to the Stewards of the Jockey Club setting forth their resentment in plain terms. However, the effect of the opposition was merely to delay the passing of the rule. A year was spent in arguing its merits and demerits, and finally it became a portion of English racing law in the Spring of 1887.

While the leading French owners took grave exception to the new rule, considering that it was a slur upon them, they did not all forsake the English handicap. Rather, one prominent owner, M. Aumont, proceeded to show the valueless character of the exhibition demanded in the interests of the handicapper, and the English owners. On 12th June 1888, he ran a four-year-old bay filly named Tenebreuse for the Ascot Gold Vase. She started second favourite, and finished a bad last. On 14th June, she started unbacked for the Ascot Gold Cup, and ran a bad third to Timothy and Tiesaphernes, amid jeers. On 3rd July she ran in the Bottisham Plate (5 furlongs 142 yards), and finished fourth out of five, her price being 20 to 1. By these exhibitions, of her form M. Aumont had more than complied with the demands of English racing law. He was bound to run her twice for the enlightenment of the handicappers. He was generous. He threw an extra exhibition in. In due course Tenebreuse was entered for the Cesarewitch. She was given 8st. 12lb., was backed down 10 to 1, and won comfortably from Millstream (6st. 7lb.), with the favourite (Trayles) a bad third. The great scoop made even the then rich Ring wince. With Tenebreuse M. Aumont and his friends had smitten the layers hip and thigh. When the following year's Racing Rules appeared, the clause added to them in 1887, after such ceaseless industry, was omitted.

It would be interesting to know what has really influenced the Jockey Club in passing the new law. If an owner is to be at liberty to run a horse three times, without backing him—run him for the mere sake of complying with the regulation—and if that sort of running is to be accepted by the handicappers, then it is to be feared that the position of these officials will be more perplexing that ever. If, however, directly a horse who has, so to speak, been "officially" run—and run down the course, is seen winning a handicap, it is the intention of the Stewards to ask the owner and trainer for an explanation, there may be some justification for the re-introduction of the "exhibiting" clause. If not, it is difficult to see what the advantage will be. It will only be the means of excluding French, German,

Australian, and Belgian horses from English handicaps, or involving their owners in unnecessary expense. American and Colonial horses are on a somewhat different footing, for they go to England to stop for some time, and can be run without trouble in the three preliminary races. That there is a great deal of in and out running, and that it should be stopped everybody admits. If by the new rule the Jockey Club accomplish an improvement in this respect, they will receive the thanks of all true sportsmen. The Jockey' Club have been discussing the question of declarations. Lord Cadogan, who raised the matter, wanted Rule 139 to be cancelled. The Rule reads:—"An owner running two or more horses in a race may declare to win with one of them. . . . .A Jockey riding a horse with which the owner has not declared to win, must on no account stop such horse except in favour of the stable companion on whose behalf declaration to win has been made." Lord Cadogan, took serious exception to the latter part of the Rule. He regarded the sentence authorising a jockey to stop a horse as a very dangerous provision. And argued that the Jockey Club should not in any shape or way countenance any such proceeding. The late Admiral Rous, the greatest legislator and adminstrator the Turf has known for many generations, was anxious to do away with declarations, and considered it an anomaly that an owner should under any circumstances be justified in giving orders to his jockey to pull a horse. There can be little that the practice is open to question. A way out of the difficulty would be to adopt the system which obtains in France, of counting two or more horses in a race, belonging to the same owner as one. There it is the stable which competing for the prize, and it is immaterial for betting and other purposes which of the candidates wins. Lord Harewood dissented from the views expressed by Lord Cadogan, and he was responsible for the surprising statement that when an owner makes a declaration to win it was generally in favour of the worst of his representatives. He instanced the case of Memoir and Semolina. "It was well known" he said "that Memoir was better then Semolina, but the Duke of Portland wished to win with Semolina because she was already exposed and had penalties." But, surely, if an owner chooses to take two chances of winning he should be prepared to accept all the consequences be the result what it may. Lord Cadogan eventually withdrew his proposal, but it will probably come up for discussion at some future date in a modified form. The suggestion has been made that a declaration to win shall be permissible only in races of a mile or over.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Pretty well every one concerned may congratulate themselves on the success of the first Monsoon Meeting of the season which was held in Calcutta on Saturday. The new arrangements on the whole worked excellently in spite of bad weather and everything went with a swing which in past seasons has been noticeably absent at any rate from the first day. The fields were good, the racing was keen, the arrangements for comfort of riders, horses and the public were excellent, and there were no "incidents" of any sort to mar the pleasure of the proceedings.

Captain Hughes' much-discussed hurdles stood the test excellently, as two fields of eleven jumped them with only one mishap and this in no way due to the fault of the obstacle, but solely to that of the pony Ruling Passion, who overjumped and slipped up on landing. With such large fields running some think it necessary to widen the first two or three hurdles, but there is a loads of room and the jam on Saturday was caused by the horses having the inside going wide of the wing and squashing up the whole field very uncomfortably.

One of the arrangements that seemed capable of improvement was the placing of the books. They, as last season, stood in the corridor underneath the central stand and the space being but small there was considerable difficulty in getting to the pencillers, or in even seeing the prices. We understand that this is to be altered in future meetings and the books will stand under a shelter just behind the monsoon stand, where every one can get to them with ease and without having to walk any distance, which will be a great improvement.

The new hosing box for horses was much appreciated, but unfortunately could not be used towards the end of the afternoon as the water supply was cut off from the main. By the way we are asked to let trainers and owners know that this hosing box can be used any morning after work.

Of the six races four were rather run-away affairs, but even in these the keen competition for places prevented them from being in any way uninteresting to watch,

The smallest field of the day, and six starters, went out for the Pony Plate, and the outsider Solace surprised backers by winning comfortably by half a length from Primrose, who was the only one who could stay near her at the finish. Sweet Marie, who was favourite, was third, but High Court and Dinghy, who were also very well backed, ran nowhere. High Court was well out in front for about four furlongs but apparently turned it up as soon as he was collared.

The Trial Hurdle Race was a very pretty sight, nearly the whole field going in a bunch over the first three flights, only Mercedes and Wake Up lying behind. Mystic Circle took the lead about half way round and never being headed won easily by three and a half lengths from Mercedes, who came up with a big run during the latter part of the journey. Queen of Gems beat Cyril for third place in the run home from the last hurdle.

There was a long delay at the post in the Pony Hurdle Race caused by Chas, who jumped about all over they place. When they eventually got off the favourite Loch Lily took the lead almost immediately and never being headed won not too easily by two and a half lengths from Piccaninny, who jumped well but could not quite stay the distance. Ruling Passion, who had been very well backed, fell at the first hurdle and Meprise carried Mr. Morris out between second and third.

For the Summer Plate Lady Teazle was favourite with Tana next well backed. The favourite made no show at all and the race was fought out between Morsel and Tana. The former's better condition told at the finish, and despite Tana's superior class the other managed to stick it out and won all out by half a length.

The Amateur Plate was, as anticipated, an absolute gift for Lefterin, who ran very wide and still won in a canter hard held. Spinnet, who was also expected to go well, began slowly and then getting shut in could not get a clear run at all till too late to be in any way near at the finish.

The Bengal Plate turned out as good a thing as they expected for the favourite Royal Colours, who jumped off in front and won pretty easily by two lengths, Bundah and Wise Hawk chasing him home. The latter ran very well indeed for a half-trained horse not long in the country and just down from Dehra and we have hopes of seeing him win a race before the end of the Monsoon.

The honours of the day both as to riders, owners and trainers were very evenly divided, nobody scoring more than once in either department. There was a surprisingly large number of jockeys engaged, there being no less than 12 G. R's and 18 professionals employed during the day and in consequence nobody got very many rides. Mr. Evers did the best with five mounts and Messrs. Galstaun and Bletsoe have four each while no professional was up more than twice.

A few ponies were measured on Monday morning, but they included Mr. Powell's famous little brown mare Etna, who went 14 hands without much difficulty. We understand she is already sold to Mr. Burjorjee and with Winnie R out of the way through having missed measurement she is an absolute certainty for the Civil Cervice Cup. However, it is a far cry till then. Full details of measurement are as follows:—

Mr. O. Rasch's b aus g Badcock, 13-0¼.
Mr. G. Allardice's br aus g Crown Jewel, 13-3½.
Mr. R. Powell's br aus m Etna, 14-0.
Mr. T. Caffrey's gr aus g The Needle, 13-2¼.

We hear that Mr. R. Powell's new Predominant pony Precede has been sold for Rs. 4,500.

There was very little schooling on the course on Tuesday morning, and only one or two gallops beyond half speed. We are not likely to see very much fast work now as most animals will get all they want in the races. Of those that were jumped Blix went over a couple none too well and Violet, a pony from Piper's stable, gave a very poor performance, swerving right off the course into a ditch. Electric Light went well over a couple.

The entries for Saturday which are published elsewhere are again quite good. The Open Hurdle Race has twelve, Amateur Hurdle Race 16, Monsoon Plate 19 and Pony Hurdle 12 and Midget Plate 8, and the Fort Plate 24, the last named has been divided, making two very good races which will give a total card of seven. There are altogether only nine duplicate entries so that good fields may be expected.

There was a little jumping again on Wednesday. Tommy Daw (Mr. Evers), Maisonette (native) and Highland Fling (Mr. Cooper) went fast over three and finished with a gallop on the flat. All went well but Highland Fling seemed to be going strongest at the finish. Tommy Daw took a lot of holding and was right away from the other two in the beginning. He pecked and almost fell over the first flight. Dalgai (Mr. Pierson) gave Blue Bell II.

(Mr. Morris) a lead over three or four and Leading Lady (Mr. Dudley) went slowly (two flights). There was very little galloping, but several of Mr. Holmes' stable sprinted across the grass.

Mr. Tanner's knee is still too bad to permit him to get on horseback and he has therefore handed over Fingall to Mr. W. B. Bletsoe to train and ride. Mr. Wallace Jones has practically recovered. He was out schooling Electric Light on Tuesday, and will ride him in the Amateur Hurdle Race on Saturday.

J. C. Smith is leaving Sydney for India, having accepted an engagement to train at Poona for Mr Gordondhas Khatau, better known to Australians as the owner of Mooltan, writes an Australian exchange: During his sojourn in this State, "the Captain" has turned out numerous winners, among these being Sleeper—A. J. C. Epsom Handicap, 1905. He will race a few horses of his own in India, and Mordialloc, Lancasterite, Boomey, and Duke of Lancaster will be shipped for their new home about the commencement of next month. Prior to his departure "the Captain" will be the recipient of a presentation from the members of the N.S.W. Breeders, Owners, and Trainers' Association, of which body he was the first secretary.

Lord Harris, at the annual meeting of the Cricketers' Fund Friendly Society, held at Lords early in July, had somewhat to say on mordern cricket. Dealing with the subject of batting, he said he thoroughly agreed with those who had criticised very severely the style of trying to get all the runs on the on-side. The thing had gone a great deal too far. Fields had been placed more and more on the off-side, and, the batsmen having to find somewhere to get runs, it became the practice to force the ball away on the on-side, but to hit the off balls on the off-side and the on balls on the on-side was not impossible.

He appealed to those present, and their brother cricketers who were employed in coaching, to induce the youth of the country to come back to the old and legitimate style of play. In his opinion, and that of many of the old cricketers, the habit in getting in front of the wicket and hooking the ball round on the on-side was bad cricket.

The success which attended the bowling of Mr. D. W. Carr, whose "googlies" puzzled the best professional batsmen in the Gentlemen vs Players match, gave rise to considerable discussion in the English Sporting press. "Long Leg," writing in the Sporting Life, expressed the opinion that if such bowling becomes general a complete change must come over the batting in first-class cricket. "A batsman playing googlies finds it necessary to reorganise his game at a moment's notice. The methods that have been giving him many runs throughout the season are put out of court."

Mr. R. E. Foster, writing on the subject of googlies in Wisden's Almanack of 1908, after the tour of the South Africans, delivered himself as follows:—"Personally I think this new type of bowling will deteriorate batting. It is possible it may completely alter cricket, and no one who has not played against it can realise the difference it makes to a batsman and his shots. Now a batsman when he goes in may receive a ball which either breaks from the off, perhaps from leg, or again may come straight through very quickly. If he survives half a dozen overs he ought to be getting set, but such bowling never allows a batsman to get really set, because he can never make or go for his accustomed shots. The ball just short of a half volley he is accustomed to drive between cover and extra cover fearlessly now bothers him and prevents him doing so, owing to his inability to discover which way and how much the ball is going to break. And as this bowling improves the difficulty will become increased, till those beautiful drives we are wont to expect from some of our great batsmen will become a thing of the past.

"Googlies," continued "Long Leg," "put a super-tax on fast-footed driving. There are only two ways of scoring from them—to play right back and be content to push them for ones and twos when the shorter ball appears, or to charge up the pitch, regardless of the wicket-keeper. A very attractive form of cricket, this latter, when it comes off. But here is a point that must not be lost sight of—googly bowlers are fast wicket bowlers. They make the firm-footed drive a thing of danger on a good pitch. And there are precious few batsmen in these days who could hope to run out and hit with success for many overs together. If googly bowlers become common, then, it is hardly likely that counties, out for points, would play into each other's hands by adopting dangerous tactics when by adopting slow and sure tactics they could expect to score largely. No; severe back play, with runs coming occasionally from pushes for ones and twos—those would be the general tactics in an 'off-breaking leg-break' era. That is the menace of the googly."

The fourth test match between England and the Australians ended in a draw. Continuing their innings on the third day, the Cornstalks had scored 249 for six wickets at the lunch interval. Thirty runs were added to this for the loss of another three wickets, and the innings was declared closed. Scores were:—Gregory 6, Bardsley 35, Macartney 51, Noble 13, Armstrong 30, Trumper 48, Hopkins 9, Cotter 4, Carter 12 and Ransford not out 54, extras 17, total 279. Rhodes took five wickets for 28, Blyth two for 77, Hirst one for 52 and Barnes one for 66. England scored 108 for the loss of three wickets, when stumps were drawn. Spooner 58, Warner 25, Tyldesley 11, Sharp not out 8, Rhodes not out 0 and Extras 6. Hopkins took two wickets for 31: and Laver one for 55.

Appended are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the last week:—

Surrey beat Somerset, at the Oval, by an innings and 86 runs.

Northampton beat Derby, at Northampton, by an innings and 95 runs.

The matches between Hampshire and Gloucester, Leicester and Essex, Sussex and Middlesex, Surrey and Sussex, and Essex and Kent have been drawn.

Worcester beat Gloucester, at Worcester, by 1 wicket.

The annual tournament of the Royal Western India Golf Club, Nasik, will be held from 13th to 18th September, inclusive, when the following programme will be discussed:—Men: Nasik Gymkhana Cup, and Bombay Gymkhana Cup, medal play: handicap: Handicap Foursomes; R. W. I. G. C. Challenge Shield and Gold Medal (scratch); Captain's Cup (handicap); Allied Pairs, handicap, medal play; and President's Cup (scratch). Ladies: Medal play competition; Bombay Bangle, medal play; Bogey Handicap; Foursomes Handicap; Allied Pairs, handicap; and Putting competition.

We regret to record the death of one of the finest specimens of a Great Dane that has ever come to this country, viz., Champion Vrola of Redgrave. Her breeding was of the best, Hercules ex Champion Valentine of Redgrave, her grand dam was the renowned Champion Emma of Redgrave whose wonderful quality she inherited. It was as a brood bitch that Vrola became so well known, and this accounts for her few appearance on the show bench. Although shown only six times in England she secured fourteen prizes, not including seven specials, and two championships; in India she was only shown once, in Mussoorie when she won a first in Open, reserve for best dog in show, and her third championship, which entitled her to the prefix Champion. Her most noted offspring is Champion Viola of Redgrave, supposed by many English judges to be the finest dane bitch living. Other well-known prize winners are Valeria of Redgrave and Vandal of Redgrave. Reckless Warrior who died in India was also a son of her's

Weather the journey to India upset Vrola or not, is hard to say, but before leaving England she was served by Lord de Grace (now defunct); nothing came of the union, and since then she has not bred.

A few months ago she underwent an operation and had a huge tumour removed, together with one of her teats. She made a rapid recovery, and was in the very best of health. Her owner, Mr. Clifford Batten, then decided to try and breed from her again, and she was mated to Kader Sanp, but probably owing to the heavy rains, she contracted a chill, which brought on inflammation of the uterus which ended fatally.

M. J. Sheridan, the American Athlete, is probably without an equal on the face of the globe. At the American Athletic Union, all-round championship contest, held at New York on the 5th July, he once more came out on the top of the tree with 7.385 points. Exactly how these huge points are reckoned we do not know, but at any rate Sheridan seems to have fully earned them. Here are his performances:—

100 Yards, first, 10-3/5secs.
High Jump, first, 5ft. 7in.
Throwing the Hammer (16lb.), first, 125ft. 10in.
120 Yards Hurdles, first, 17-1/5secs.
Broad Jump, first, 20ft. 7½in.
Putting 16lb., Shot, first, 43ft. 1¼in.
880 Yards Walk, first, 3mins. 43secs.
Pole Vault, first, 10ft. 9in.
Throwing 56lb., Weight, first, 29ft. 11½in.
One Mile, second. Sheridan's time, 6mins. 5secs.

This is the order in which the events are run through, and practically no interval is allowed, the athlete having to essay each task right on top of the other. A wonderful athlete is Sheridan to go through such a programme, and there cannot really be another in the world to approach him, T. F. Kiely notwithstanding. The previous record was 7,130½ points in 1907 by Sherdan.

Battling Nelson, the Illinois champion lightweight, and A. D. Wolgast, of Milwaukee, fought a ten-round bout at Los Angeles on the 14th July. The law does not permit a decision, but Nelson was thoroughly whipped at the end of the tenth round by this practically unknown fighter.

Battling Nelson is the holder of the light-weight championship of the world, although he has been challenged for the title by several men, Nelson is by birth a Dane, but he has been living in America for some years past.

Wolgast is not so well known, although he has been taking part in a number of contests in America

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

in CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

(ILLUSTRATED),

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

during the last five years. Perhaps his best performance, previous to his bout with Nelson, was a drawn contest of six rounds with Owen Moran.

Local boxers have apparently been fired to great deeds by the bioscope pictures of the fistic encounter between Hague and Langford. Several challenges have appeared in the columns of one of our contemporaries, and there has been the usual lengthy correspondence without which no fight in Calcutta is ever engineered. McAuliffe and Pickering are said to have signed articles for a contest to take place on the 9th September, at the Empire Theatre, neither man to weigh over 11st. 4lb., winner to receive Rs. 3,500 and the loser Rs. 1,500. Both men have been out of the ring for a long time. We believe we are correct in saying that McAuliffe's last appearance in a serious battle was in 1904, when he was knocked out in four rounds by "Tiger" Smith, whose aspirations to fame in the ring at home, have met with much disappointment, as he has been beaten in all his big fights since he left India. We note that in the coming McAuliffe-Pickering contest the winner is to be proclaimed middle-weight champion of India. Perhaps it would be as well to give "all India" a chance before so readily claiming championship honours. Pte. Biddle of the Royal Berks, who won the Middle Weights at the recent Sirhind Boxing Tournament, and various other Regimental Champions surely have as much claim to the title as. Pickering or McAuliffe. Other local "champions" have also signified their readiness for a scrap. Among others the Dixie Kid and Rozario, who after some much newspaper talk have been unable to fix up a contest. However, Dr. A. Sampson, R.A., now stationed at Lucknow, will be pleased to meet either of these gentlemen, in a contest from ten to twenty rounds for a purse of Rs. 300—the fight to take place in Lucknow next month.

At Bangalore on Saturday last, Theagaraj, the South Indian Champion and Carl D'hane, a German from the Dutch East Indies, met in a twenty-five miles cycle race. Theagaraj has been a well-known figure on the cycle track in South India for the past ten years, and has several good performances to his credit. The German comes with a big reputation from Java, and has been champion of the Dutch East Indies for eight years The race on Saturday resulted in an easy win for Theagaraj by a mile in 1hr. 16mins. 13secs. The Indian track record for twenty-five miles is 1hr. 3mins. 26secs. established by Pte. E. A. Fay of the 10th Hussars at Rawalpindi, in 1907. Pte. Higgins rode the distance in 1hr. 7mins. at Bangalore in 1902 and in 1899, Mr. A. A. Bachmann covered the twenty-five miles in 1hr. 9mins. 15secs. on a grass track, when he won the Bengal Cycling Association Twenty-five Miles Championship at Calcutta.

The officers of that sporting regiment, the Glosters, have presented the C.F.C. with a handsome cup for Rugby Football. It is proposed to give this for a junior tournament. The Glosters have done much for the Rugy game in Calcutta by coming down to play in both League and tournament year after year, and this gracious presentation should give an extra fillip to the game by promoting keenness among junior clubs.

The Officers' Football Tournament was concluded at Chittagong on the 31st ultimo, when Chittagong beat Pahartali in the final by 4 goals to 2.

The annual tournament of the Poona Gymkhana Golf Club begins on the Yeravda Links on the 19th instant. There are eight competitions and all events are on handicap, and are open to members of any recognised Golf Club or Gymkhana. The competitions are:—Gentlemen: Singles, by tournament match play; singles, medal play; singles, match play against bogey and foursomes, medal play. Ladies: Singles, tournament match play; singles, medal play; foursomes medal play, and mixed foursomes medal play.

What is apparently the first snipe of the season, was shot at Kot Chandpur on Sunday last.

A correspondent in the course of an interesting letter to the Times of Ceylon, describing a fight between a four-foot Cobra de Capello, and a full-grown mongoose, says:—

On first catching sight of the cobra, "Rikki Tik" (as Rudyard Kipling calls the Indian mongoose) quietly smelt its tail and then hung around awaiting events, with curiosity; but, he had not long to wait, for the cobra spread its hood, hissed out its death-sentence, and prepared to dart from its coil at its natural and hated enemy.

Now commenced a most interesting and deadly battle—of feint and counterfeint by the mongoose, and "strike" and lightning-like recovery by his adversary who was also on the defensive all the time, watching for the opportunity to get in his properly aimed bite.

Time after time "Rikki Tik" squirmed slowly up to within reach of those terrible fangs—belly on ground—with every grey hair of his body erect with anger and excitement, his eyes glaring from his head, which by the way he invariably held sideways during this approach and attack, but the moment the cobra "struck," in a flash back sprang master mongoose, and, although often it appeared as if impossible that he could have escaped the dreaded fangs, never a scratch harmed him and there he would be again wearing the cobra out and pressing his advantage inch by inch. At last, with a growl and sharp "Rikky" cry, the plucky little beast flew in, avoided the "strike," and seized the snake behind the head, never for a moment getting "under" its mouth, but right at the nape of the neck and head, which he crunched with a loud cracking sound, despite the struggles and twistings and turnings of the cobra. Again and again "Rikki" returned to the now writhing reptile and bit its head and body until it lay dying.

Finally he ate 3 or 4 inches of his mortal foe, but carefully avoided eating the fangs and poison glands, which I picked up by a piece of stick and found broken, but with the venom sacks attached.

Contrary to popular belief I am of opinion the mongoose is not immune from snake poison, else why should he so particularly and carefully avoid being bitten, for it is only by his marvellous activity that he escapes the spring and darting strike of his deadly enemy, the Cobra de Capello.

Indian shikaris have often referred to the extraordinarily noiseless step of the tiger, and how the markings of the skin seem to blend or fade away in the foliage of the jungle. But the most weird attribute of a tiger is its voice. Colonel Algernon Durand, a hunter of wide experience, believes that a tiger's cry is a most powerful aid in securing prey. He says: "Often as I have heard it, the memory of one occasion is as vivid as the moment when it held me spellbound. I was stalking sambur in the evening in a glade in the forest, when suddenly from not fifty yards above me rang out a long, low, penetrating moan, which seemed to fill the jungle with a terrifying thrill and for a moment made the heart stand still. The native shikari, who, in spite of Mowgli's contempt, may know something of jungle ways, believes that the deer, hearing the tiger's voice and unable from the reverberating nature of the sound to locate the position of their enemy, stand or lie still, and so give him the chance of stalking his prey. There is probably some truth in this, for, unless you are following the tiger and have seen him, it is almost impossible from the sound alone to tell with any certainty where he is.

In the interesting "Studies in the Zoological Gardens" which are appearing in the Times the author although exposing several popular ideas favourable to the characters of certain animals has been able to find redeeming points, but in the latest of the series the wolf he can find no virtue. By day it hides, at night it comes forth silently "to hunt whether singly, in pairs, or with the pack, and then to all things weaker than itself it becomes ruthlessness personified, killing where it can, as among a flock of sheep, far in excess of the amount that it can eat. And, like many bullies it is, when left to its own resources a coward. Almost every animal when at bay will fight at the last with desperation; but there is abundant testimony to the fact that a wolf when finally cornered so that it knows escape to be hopeless, so loses heart that often it will cower and suffer itself it be killed without resistance." Instances are given showing how terrible a thing a wolf pack may be and the horror of death at their fearful jaws. The author of "In my Indian Garden" is quoted as evidence of the fact that the wolf eats children and it is remarked that it is by the destruction of children that in India every year the wolf is responsible for the deaths of more human beings than the tiger. Not that it does not, especially when in company, sometimes attack adults; and horrid tales are told of how in famine times, when the natives are too weak to defend themselves, the wolves grow bold and come out in daylight to kill and feast on men and women. ..... It is true that sometimes wolves are tamed and prove faithful to their masters, and that in folk and fairytale they often figure as the dull-brained fools who are outwitted by the fox, but never in such a way as to excite sympathy with the wolf which, in story as in real life, is always cunning if less cunning than the fox, always treacherous and always cruel. Always, too it comes to a bad end. And when that end comes we can but fall in with Grimm's kids who danced round their mother for joy crying "The wolf is dead! The wolf is dead!"

The Animal Lovers' Conference, held in London early in July, produced some curious orations, much narrow minded sentiment, some common sense suggestions, a modicum of valuable criticism, a wee sprinkling of humour, and a terrible quantity of drivel and misrepresentation. The anti-vivisectionists let themselves loose, some Indian missionaries weighed in with some piffle re Hindoo and Mohamedan sacrifices, and it goes without saying that the sportsman and hunter were condemned. For example, "Blood Sports" was the title of a paper read by the Rev. J. Stratton. True sport, he said, demanded that wounded birds should be brought to hand, wherever possible, before others were aimed at. Park deer chasing was one kind of sport in which the death of the quarry was the last thing the hunt desired. That was the kind of sport pursued by the old Royal Buck-hounds, concerning which diversion, Queen Victoria said, through her Private Secretary, on 24th December 1891: "The Queen has been strongly opposed to stag-hunting for many years past." To kill any living thing in a way that inflicted upon it unnecessary pain proved a man to be cruel, tyrannical, selfish, and mean. To get amusement out of the process proclaimed him to be something worse than that.

Mr. George Greenwood, M.P., in a paper on "Sport," said that many good and humane men—men who would shrink from and abhor anything that they recognised as cruelty—were nevertheless habitual followers of the hounds. But he believed that as thought and true civilisation advanced it would be recognised that to seek pleasure in the hunting of any animal to its death was unworthy of a thinking and humane man.

What a curse to England, said Mr. Greenwood, was the selfish mania for the preservation of game—preservation for the purpose of destruction! For that were the country folk warned off from the quiet woodland ways; for that the children were prohibited from entering the copses to gather wild flowers; for that were enclosures made, barbed-wire fences erected, footpaths and commons filched from the public, and the landless still further excluded from the land; for that must temptation be constantly set before the eyes of the labourers.

Mrs. Albert Bradshaw said that the performance by animals on the music-hall stage ought to be absolutely prohibited by the Government. It was a fallacy that animals were only trained by kindness.

Mr. Ernest Bell spoke on the subject of an after-life for animals. "We claim," he said, "that the after-life of animals is inseparably connected with that of our own species, and that the time has come when it should receive our more serious consideration." We found in the animal the identical qualities and faculties in various stages of development which we found in ourselves—not only bodily feelings, but the higher faculties also, such as memory, reason, love, sympathy, and self-sacrifice. That some of the domesticated animals had a well-developed moral sense and a conscience could hardly be denied.

Some of the speakers were filled with the idea that no animal should be caused any pain that could be avoided, would stop hunting and shooting, prevent the wearing of feather or sealskin jackets by members of the fair sex and pursue a course so beneficial to animal that they could eventually only come to the conclusion advocated by one speaker that human being should adopt the fruitarian system of living. Indeed it seems that it the views of some of the most advanced of animal protectionists were adopted mankind would live only on vegetable diet and go clothed only in such raiment as is obtained from vegetable sources, whilst the principal sports now indulged by mankind would be greatly curtailed till animal realising its power would perhaps cause a reaction, by turning the tables too freely on its one time foes. However, it must be admitted that the moderate speaker advocate measures that should be adopted to some degree at all events. One speaker read a paper on the "docking of horses" and moved a resolution to the effect that "docking" being a cruel, useless, and senseless fashion should be forbidden by law. Vivisection was generally condemned by the speakers: to non-medical men it must appear extraordinary what directly opposite opinions are held on this question by scientists of note. Whilst one man claims that more pain has been saved mankind by the knowledge acquired from vivisection that could possibly have been endured by the animals used, another man deliberately declares that vivisection is a bar to medical progress. The speaker who read a paper on "Sport" said the thinking man could never escape the thought that it was necessary for his pleasure that an animal in all the agony and terror of exhaustion should be running for its life before him, and he should ask himself "am I morally justified in purchasing my pleasure at such a price."

The Novices' Polo Tournament, for which eight teams have entered, opened at Secunderabad on the 29th ultimo when two games were played, neither being particularly brilliant displays of polo. In the first the 29th Lancers (Mr. Dickson 1, Captain Willis 2, Mr. Jackson 3 and Captain Henderson back) ran rings round the 13th Hussars B. (Mr. Sassoon 1, Mr. Lumley 2, Major Cox 3, and Mr. Oakes back) beating them by 8 goals to nil. The second game was between the Cheshires (Messrs. Craig 1, Barbrook 2, Mallinson 3 and Major Thomas back) and the Royal Artillery (Messrs. Shaw 1, Trench 2, Van Straubenzee 3 and Captain Stopford back). Play was very indifferent throughout and the Gunners won by 2 goals to 1.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—Eight events on the card, large acceptances and a very big attendance gave the 1909 Poona Racing Season a great send off. As yet the new betting enclosure is in only a half-finished condition, and there was no Tote, but in the excitement these details are scarcely noticeable. Rain throughout the night and early morning, with a sprinkling every now and again during the races, made the going very heavy and, although an upset or two occurred, punters had a very fair time of it.

First of the divided New Comers' Plate opened the ball, and it did not take much to pick on Sharar and Chechan, Nishan being touched as a "possible." Sharar soon showed in front and, streaking clear away, had plenty in hand to stave off Yacoot and Chechan.

In the second Hatchal and Harib, who went from tens to threes with a rush, were better fancied than Burtho and Steel. This was a great race, Sinclair being with Hachal, Prince Charming and Harib. At the bend Hachal led Harib and Steel and in a desperate finish Harib squeezed home.

The 5-furlong Beginners' Plate had Paul Pry for a strong favourite from Ianthe and Vigorous. Paul Pry made his own running, but on entering the straight had to be shaken up on the approach of Pincher, who overhauled him well in hand, Vigorous losing his place to Mergul.

Another divided race was the Arabian Plate, Ashroff being favourite in the first from Reefat. This was young Brown's second win and, easy though it was, he proves his knowledge of waiting in front. He soon passed Saleh, and when Reefat and then Darianoor came at him he went away anyhow in a straggly finish.

Colaba, Swalior and Brutus commanded the market in the second. Jadir made the pace, Colaba, Brutus and Swalior coming up with a bunch at the bend. Swalior and Brutus, who got a bad bump, entered the straight in front, but Devon, coming from the skies, came up nicely handled, and passing Swalior stayed out Brutus.

The appearance of Absentee in such a class naturally made him a strong favourite in the 7-furlong July Plate, though solid support came for Posco. Chivalry set the pace clear in front of Absentee and Posco together and, after a gap, Admiral Crichton. Entering the straight, Absentee came away having Posco set, but it took all Kaeson's driving and whipping to keep the favourite in front of Admiral Crichton.

Quite the best thing of the day was Tachreet in the Arab Pony Trial Plate, he being made an odds on favourite in a field of over the dozen. He was not long in passing Rajput and waited in front all the way, Afreed, Darby and Bay Middleton following. This was Brown's third win.

There was a bad upset in the closed race, the Subalterns' Plate, when Betty looked very good, though Rufus, Arabistan and Nettle were backed. Once more the professional won, Rufus coming away with a stone in hand after No Trumps had cut out the pace.

Thus begins what is likely to be a very big season.

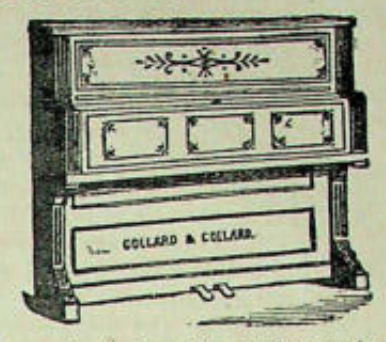
The first of the Bombay Mud Sports this season was held after two postponements owing to rain on the 28th ultimo. There was a big attendance and the band of the 110th Mahrattas played during the afternoon, but the quality of the sports was not high and two showers of rain rather spoiled the enjoyment. The programme opened with tent-pegging and a wretched exhibition was given. Mr. Grayburn being the only competitor to lift the peg won both the horse and pony classes. The Ladies' Trotting Race was won by Miss Crawford with Mrs. Pickard second. The Bombay Duck Stakes was the next item, Mr. Westropp coming in first, followed by Mr. Richmond. The Crawford Market Stakes, Ladies' Nomination, came next. Competitors, provided with a list of fruits and vegetables, had to ride over a given course to tables of fruit and vegetables presided over by the ladies. Each competitor presented his order to his nominatrix who placed the articles required in his haversack. He then returned over the same course. Won by Mrs. Tennant and Mr. A. Graham, with Mrs. Wallace and Mr. Richmond second. Mr. E. G. Montgomery won both the Horse and Pony Scurry, being followed home by Mr. E. G. Pearson, who was giving him 40 yards start in the first race, and by Mr. Williamson in the pony event.

The Sherwood Foresters have won the Madras Hockey Tournament, beating the Royal Fusiliers in the final by 2 goals to 1. Details further on.

The Surma Cup Football Tournament was concluded in Calcutta on the 3rd instant, when the 17th R G. A. beat the Calcutta Reserves by 2 goals to nil in the final game.

The East Yorks Football team, which is to take part in the Calcutta Rugby League, arrived from Fyzabad on Monday. The team has played prominently in Burma during the past two seasons and should give a good account of themselves here. Lieutenant Crawford is captain of the team and the other players are Card, Mason, Cressley, Blazier, Gibson, Rhodes, Kelly, Farthinge, Miller, Underwood, Afflick, Smith, Cooper, Tose, Clarke, Walsh, Brownlow and Wood.

London Week by Week.



(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 16th July 1909.

Lord Ripon died on Friday last, aged eighty-two. The veteran political leader's career extended over fifty-seven years, for five years of which, at any rate, he was perhaps the most discussed and worst hated administrator in the British Empire. I allude, of course, to the time he put in as Viceroy of India, the period aptly described by one critic as five years of "breathless benevolence to the baboo." Yet though he made some terrible mistakes—such as the repeal of the Vernacular Press Act, and the introduction of the Ilbert bill which earned him the execrations of practically every white man in India—there is no gainsaying the fact that he had the courage of his convictions and thus, among a certain section, he won influence and compelled admiration by sheer force of character. His judgment was frequently unsound, but nothing stood in the way of his convictions, and he had really a great capacity for administration which might have been turned to good and useful account in India had it worked in the right grooves. Still he made some friends in the East, and if his departure was hailed with a sigh of heartfelt relief by the Europeans, the natives bade him goodbye with much wailing. I remember forming one of the mass meeting of Europeans in the Calcutta Town Hall convened for the purpose of protesting against the infamous Ilbert bill. So wrought up were we by the passionate eloquence of Mr. Branson, that leading light of the Calcutta bar, that it has always been a source of wonder to me how we refrained from marching on Government House and wrecking the place. The bold bad planters, too, thirsted for his gore. Down South they planned to kidnap him, and would have done so, I am firmly convinced, had the tour not been abandoned. At Kurseong they gave him a reception which stopped short of personal violence by inches only so to speak. Ah! well, he has gone to his long account, poor old gentleman and de mortius nil, you know.

He is succeeded by his son Earl de Grey, born in 1852, renowned as a hunter of big game, and the possessor of a famous collection of trophies. Lord de Grey enjoys the distinction of being the best shot in this country. I can recall some of his marvellous performances when he was of the big Viceregal shooting camp given by the late Maharajah of Durbhunga. He married in 1885 Constance Gladys, youngest of the three sisters of the Earl of Mister Keir Hardie has at last turned on his revilers. In the course of a speech at Wolverhampton the man said :—

"I have received while sitting here a report of a meeting addressed by the Conservative candidate for Mid-Derbyshire (Mr. Cresswell). He makes the statement that by my speeches in India I have fed the seditious movement which has culminated in the murder of Sir Curzon Wyllie. I have stood this kind of thing until I can stand it no longer, and I give this intimation that when I return to London I shall give Mr. Cresswell the opportunity of proving his statement in the law courts of the land." I feel certain of one thing, Mr. Cresswell will carry the sympathy and good wishes of every Englishman in India in this business, for Mister Keir Hardie's "soul on toast" has been desired by most of them for some time past, if I am not much mistaken.

The Westminster Bear Garden has been so free from scenes of violence lately that one had almost begun to think the Labour Members, and those on whose education the "tuppence extra" had not been expended, had forgotten how to misbehave. But no; the old Adam manifested himself last Wednesday about one o'clock in the morning when the Labour party grew restive and after some preliminary skirmishing in which a member's speech was referred to as "silly farce," Lord Winterton drew Mr. Chairman's attention to the fact that Mister Will Thorne was "not in a fit state to take part in the debate." After loudly proclaiming his absolute sobriety this brawling person roared out repeatedly that Lord Winterton was a liar and ended up by inviting his lordship to come outside and take his coat off. The very natural result of this elegant little episode was the prompt suspension of the man Thorne.

Lord Roberts appeals incessantly to the nation. In his latest exhortation he would have every man a soldier—compulsory service in fact—and he waxed more earnest and impressive than ever in the course of his lengthy speech in the House of Lords when his bill to render service in the Territorial Army universal and obligatory was read for the second time. After allowing for wastage and exemptions Lord Roberts calculated that his scheme would train 150,000 men a year, and as they were liable for four years' service between the ages of eighteen and thirty he would produce a Territorial Army of at least 405,000 with 150,000 recruits. But in addition there would be nearly 900,000 men under thirty-one liable to be called up in national emergency. On the question of cost he was at issue with the War Office, but adhered to a figure between £4,000,000 and £5,000,000 extra to the present Army Estimates. A wonderful old warrior is "Bobs"; he attacks seven-figure grants and six-figure armies of recruits with as much vim and dash as in ancient days he used to exhibit when he led off against the "Paythuns." But, alas! like many really great reformers he is before his time. His bill for National Service was next day rejected by a majority of twenty. The country which was glad enough to trust itself to him in war is ready enough to turn from his advice in time of peace, but one day he will be justified. At the moment his is the somewhat thankless task of advocating an ideal for which the country is not prepared.

The Censor having refused to license Mr. Bernard Shaw's "Press Cuttings" for public performance, as I recently told you, it was given last Sundy afternoon at a so-called "private reception" at the Court by a hitherto unheard-of body, styled "The Civic and Dramatic League." A perusal of the League's rules makes one opine that it may be heard a good deal more of in the future. Its aim is stated to be "the removal of arbitrary restraints upon the expression of public opinion," by which is probably meant a very different thing—the public expression of opinions, which may be held by one person only, and not seriously held by him.

"Press Cuttings" proved to be not so much a play as a bewildering circular tour of the most inflammatory topics of the hour. Woman's lack of a vote was not the only subject turned upside down and inside out. The soldier's deprivation of the ordinary privileges of citizenship, compulsory military service, the exclusion of women from the Army, and a score of other matters were blithely and surprisingly handled. To attempt to describe a plot that did not exist would be absurd. Better reading may be a few extracts from the play, copies of which were, and no doubt are, to be had for a shilling. At first all you got was a coupon, which you could cash for the play as you left the theatre. Evidently it was felt that in the matter of Mr. Shaw's humour, to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

Balsquith, the Prime Minister, asked by General Mitchener, of the county council, how he comes by his Suffragette disguise, explains that he stole it from a "little exhibition we are having in Downing Street." Again :

Mitchener: We learn from history——

Balsquith : We learn from history that men never learn anything from history. "That's not my own; it's Hegel."

An unusual frankness on the part of Mr. Shaw!

Mrs. Farrell, the charwoman at the War Office, and the only intelligent person about the place, says:

"They've come about the vote. I don't know whether it's dhem dhat want it, or dhem dhat doesn't want it; anyhow, they're all alike when they get into a state about it."

Thrue for you, Mr. Shaw.

And so Mr. Shaw rambles on, vigorously brandishing his shillelagh, a stick of which as often as not he gets the wrong end. But "Press Cuttings" is, save for some dull passages in which Mr. Shaw does his best nôt to repeat himself, excellent sport, and it kept the audience in a good humour and very much on the alert.

"TRAINING OF THE REMOUNT."

We have been favoured with a copy of another admirable little book by Colonel H. de B. de Lisle, C.B., D.S.O., of the 5th Dragoons equally as well and lucidly written as the last, viz. "Horse Management in India," but we think penned more for the use of the Cavalry officer, than that of the public; although they or at least the horse-owing portion will gain a lot of useful knowledge from a careful perusal, more especially those keen sportsmen who take a delight in buying purpose or the purposes required, be he officer, civilian or the purpose or the purposes required be he officer, civilian or the keen volunteer; even if a man be keen few have the time to attend to all details explained, but one can see when the work is done and explain to those whom he employs, as well as gain a lot of useful information for himself after a study of the brooklet. We congratulate Colonel H. de B. de Lisle in this well put together little book "Training of the Remount" and should be inclined to think that a few copies widely distributed amongst those men who handle the "Remounts" imported to India, would be inestimable and a very great benefit to the horse as well as to the Regiment or Battery to which he finds his way.

SIX MONTHS' BIG GAME SHOOTING IN PORTUGUESE EAST AFRICA.

It was in June of 1905 that we found ourselves in the Shakespeare Bar in Commissioner Street, Johannesburg, whither we had wended our way to slake a thirst arising from dust and minute particles of gold mine cyanide dumpings, when we saw the magnificent array of sporting trophies displayed on the walls of the room all gained by the one man, Caleb Mann, the proprietor. He is "Caleb" to everyone and is never happier than when talking big game shooting, yet modest withal of his own undoubted prowess. Our company consisted of five, excluding Caleb, viz., the Hon'ble Dixon Ross, Signor Rodrigoes, Jack Hawley, Anthonie Roos and the writes. Carried away by the eloquence of Mann we, on the spur of the moment, decided to form a party, and, as things were very slack, to start at as early a date as possible for Portiguese East Africa, and emulate, if not outstrip, the performances of old Caleb. The conditions were that each member supplied his own shooting gear, paid his own travelling expenses to Beira and pooled £100 to meet general expenses. The general expenses meant a great deal, as we carried a multum in parvo outfit i.e., our medicines were Homeopathic, our tea was in tabloids, our meat in Beef extract form and our wearing apparel was reduced to the smallest but of the most durable quality. Everything went as merry as the proverbial marriage bell under the expert supervision of Caleb and in a week's time we left for Durban with as perfect and complete an outfit as ever sportsman owned. Nothing had been forgotten or omitted even to a letter of introduction from Signor Alvarez, the Portuguese Consul-General at Johannesburg, to the Governor at Laurenzo Marques.

The German liner the Field Mareshal a huge, top-heavy looking steamer, conveyed us from Durban to Beira. I must here mention that the climate of Portuguese East Africa, is the most deadly in the world, what with black water fever, Tetse fly, the malaria, etc., and all considered, we were somewhat rash in undertaking the venture, but as each of us had served throughout the late Anglo-Boer war, we reckoned ourselves as salted and therefore standing a better chance than the new arrival. We spoke among us English, German, French, Portuguese, Dutch and Zulu, so were prepared to do great things. The Portuguese authorities were very civil and thoughtful ; gave us every encouragement and assistance so that in a short time—comparatively speaking—we found ourselves with thirty well recommended carriers and guides on our way into the interior making N. N. W. by the compass for the region of the Zambesi, passing en route though Bangwe and Sarmento, but leading towards the Barui marsh. Progress was slow, but on the whole the difficulties were very ordinary and we had very enjoyable sport. The smaller game was very plentiful, and our stores were practically untouched. We carried no tents, but as a substitute had a good quantity of blankets and waterproof sheeting.

This Congo district is distinctly unhealthy, as the miasmic vapour lies thick nightly ; but a quinine and brandy every morning on an empty stomach seemed quite a preventive, besides we used a Pasteur light filter and took the precaution of boiling drinking water and even then mixing about a table spoonful of whisky in our water bottles. At Lupta Gorge we camped for a rest and as a base of further operations. Lions were about and though up to now we had not seen one, there were evidences of their proximity. There was now no scattering as the country was marshy, and full of crocodiles. Charles Waterton says in his Essays on Natural History, that an active boy armed with an axe can easily destroy a crocodile. He was speaking of the West Indies. Audubon, the French Naturalist, emphatically contradicts this statement and facts, which are the best evidence, prove that the crocodile is almost as dangerous on land as in the water. Was it not only very recently that Mr. Rochfuel Lobistoure, K. C., Attorney-General for the Colony of Natal while shooting in Rodhesia, was lost. He was absent ten minutes and has never been seen or heard of again. His bones were not found nor even his gun and it is believed universally that he fell a victim to a crocodile, which must have rushed him and carried him under water, as he was, gun and all. Thousands of Matabelis beat the forests for months, but not a trace of him has been found, not even a foot print. Such is the danger of these forests. At times we had to cut our way for half-a-mile at a time with axes. I must here dissipate a false theory that obtains, that the Congo and these parts are infested with the Momba, the Hamadriad and Boa serpents : it is not true, there is not a venomous or destructive serpent throughout these regions, but lions, elephants and crocodiles must be feared.

On the third night we were painfully made aware of the presence of lions by the disappearance of "Six Pence," a bright little Zulu boy whom Roos had brought with him, but we had our revenge, or rather Roos had ; for two days later he again visited Roos's impromptu tent to meet a ·450 express bullet through the right eye and into the brain at 10 yards range. The head was shattered, but it was our first bag of a lion. Things began to get very lively now, and we began to think the lions were stalking us. One of our carriers "Tin Whiskers" (a name given him owing to his plaiting his scanty beard with wire) a splendid savage, was reported missing. At my suggestion we adopted the Indian machan system and in seven days we had bagged three more lions, all splendid specimens for Sczendsky, (the Skin and Feather Merchant of Johannesburg) paid £20 for each skin.

Our nerve was well fortified now as we had had a kill, and we moved camp to Inyatsutsu, the elephant haunt. Personally, I am strongly opposed to shooting an elephant, and I took no active part in this direction, but had excellent results of my own. I was fortunate in bagging a lioness and capturing two of her cubs which gave us great entertainment in camp. We disposed of them at Conceicao to a dealer : they were getting out of hand, and besides freight on them would have been out of the question. Our party were successful in getting three elephants, two average bulls and one a youngster that should really not have been shot. Here came our first disaster. Jack Hawley was only a youngster of twenty-five and nothing could restrain him. He rushed from cover to meet a charging bull elephant, and get in a near shot : he did, but it cost him his life. The mighty beast gave a roar, fell to his knees, but in a flash he had Hawley and threw him with awful force against a tree. Poor fellow ! he had killed his elephant who never rose from his knees, but Hawley was done. God knows how many bones were broken, but every movement brought forth a groan. We tended him as a child, for we loved the cheerful lad, brave, generous, always a smile and always glad to do the lion's share of work. He had a particular affection for me and was always somewhere very near me in a big days battue.

Well ! This burst up our excursion. We had shot three lions, a lioness and had two cubs with us, three elephants and innumerable hartebeeste, wildebeeste, springbok, crocodiles, hippos. We prepared to return to the coast by the shortest route i.e. by Makanga to Bassenga and then down to the Zambesi to Conciecao. We moved but slowly, as it was evident Hawley was doomed. He grew weaker and weaker, despite our attendance. He was never alone for a minute, night or day. He tried to appreciate our attention, but I shall never for get the look in his eyes when I asked him to sign a will in favor of his mother. He then realized he was dying and was awe-stricken at the thought. We were none of us very goody-goody men, but we rested that day and waited for the end. It was all very quiet and peaceful ; a dense forest, no shadows but a sombre darkness, Roos reading to him from the Bible. He died peacefully and happily. We buried him in sorrow, but the future traveller to Bassenga will see our efforts at a monument. We spent three days making the cross and engraving the words of his epitaph.

Should we abandon the shoot was the momentious question ? It was decided to curtail it, but not to abandon it. Our carriers had been considerably reduced in numbers and from many causes. These were from deaths from lions and misadventure, and six from sickness. We decided to make for the Zambesi and hug its banks, taking our chance of such game as came in our way. It was a pleasant and lucrative decision for we added considerably to our trophies and were better able to preserve skins, heads, etc., as we had an unlimited supply of water. We had carried a plentiful supply of arsenic, and salt was substituted with the ashes of a shrub which grows plentifully in these regions and gives a potash on burning which is an excellent substitute for salt. As regards food, we were living in luxury and could really have done without the stores we originally carried. It was a great trek, we had traversed Portuguese East Africa, and then came down réd the Zambesi to Conceicao. We sent the late King (Don Carlos) of Portugal a lion's skin, perfectly cured and dressed, and a letter acknowledging the kindness of the Portuguese authorities. His Late Majesty sent an autograph letter in reply, thanking us for the splendid specimen of a skin which he assured us would grace his private study.

There is really nothing difficult in an extended shoot in Central Africa, given good health and strength, nerve, straight-shooting powers and money, it is the greatest enjoyment in the world. That there is danger must be acknowledged, but there is danger anywhere. The one difficult item is the initial expense, and for a person to undertake such an expedition from start to finish, the cost runs into at least £ 300, not including passages by sea and rail. Another great difficulty is that of language, and the sportsman should speak at least Portuguese, and then hire an interpreter who may be a Kaffir, for all Portuguese Kaffirs speak Portuguese. English Colonies learn the local language, not so the Potuguese, they compel the native to learn the language of the predominant race.

KENNEL QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I know that most dogs shed their coats once a year, but a fox-terrier of mine is shedding his at such a rate just now that at the present rate of progress he will qualify for the "Mexican Hairless" class in about a fortnight. What can you suggest?

Bal.

[We should say the dog is not in the best of condition and is probably being injudiciously fed. The coat will come out in spite of any treatment, so it is as well to hasten its disappearance with a good brushing and handrubbing daily. An aperient and cooling dose is indicated and no harm would be done by the administration of a vermifuge, which might well take the form of one of Sherley's worm capsules. Supposing this is not efficacious, a warm bath should be given, to which has been added a little Jeyes' fluid.—Ed.]

VETERINARY QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Regarding the query which appeared in your issue of 22nd July, authorities agree that "Osteoporosis" is incurable, if it was otherwise, why would not all the horses, or at least a percentage of the number, sent yearly to Behar to recuperate from this disease, come back in a way recovered.

The disease is a softening and enlargement of the bone due to the absence of "Lime Salts" which when once having left the bone cannot by any means be again assimilated.

The cases we hear of as having been cured could not have been true Osteoporosis, but either "rheumatism," or sore shins, when there has been no porosity, or enlargement of the osseous substances.

The only real diagnostic symptoms being the thickening and enlargement of the lower jaw and frontal bones, with generally lameness, (occasionally not) until the disease has advanced.

The disease of so-called "Big-head," "Swollen," or "Lumpy jaw," common in the southern and eastern parts of Australia and South Africa, is totally different, and usually disappear on a change of pasture, or in those affected before their arrival in India, on the passage up, this is not the case with "Osteoporosis."

With an animal suffering from the above disease, the most humane, in fact the only course, is the "friendly bullet, to end the animal's suffering.

SHOOTING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I would be much obliged if you could tell me, through the medium of your paper, the cost of a license in Uganda for non-residents for shooting:—

(a) Big game including elephant.
(b) Big game excluding elephant.

E. K. O.

Jullundur Cantonment, 26th July 1909.

[The Game Laws in British East Africa and Uganda are of necessity under frequent revision; but the latest available information allows the holder of a £50 license (which lasts for one year from date of issue) to kill or capture the following:—Elephant (tusk ivory weighing not less than 60lb.) 2: Buffalo (except in Ukamba Province) 1: Rhinoceros 2: Hippopotamus 2: Zebra 2: a Eland 1: a Oryx Callotis 2: Oryx beisa 2: a Sable Antelope 1: a Roan Antelope 1: a Kudu (except in Baringo District) 2: a Topi 2: a Topi, (Jubaland) 10: a Neumann's Hartebeest 2: a Bongo 1: a Grants Gazelle 10: Thomson's Gazelle 10: Jackson's Hartebeest 10: Coke's Hartebeest 10: Impala 10: Reedbuck 10: Duiker 10: Klipspringer 10: Steinbuck 10: Waterbuck 10: Wildebeest 10: Bushbuck 10: Paa 10: Lesser Kudu 10: Gerenuk 10: Colobus and other fur monkeys 2: Aardvarks 2: Cheetah 2: Aardwolf 2: Marabout 2: Egret of each species 2.

Extra licenses can be taken out and entitle the holder to kill or capture:—£16. 13s. 4d. Bull Elephant 1: £5. Bull Giraffe, or Rhinoceros or Bull Eland 1 each: £2 Zebra or Wildebeest or Water Buck 2 each. £3 any antelope of class a (above) 1.

Lions and Leopard are classed as vermin and consequently no license to kill them is required.

The Vulture, Secretary Bird, Owl, Ostrich, Kudu in Baringo District, and Rhinoceros in a 10 miles deep strip north of Uganda Railway between Sultan Hound and Machakos Road Stations, are not to be hunted, killed or captured, except under special license.—Ed.]

A HALF BLACK PANTHER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I have asked Messrs. Vane and Company of Bangalore to send you two copies of some photographs they have taken for me of a trophy, which may be of some interest.

The skin is one of a half black panther shot by me in July of last year. I can only suppose it to be a hybrid, which would seem to imply that the black panther is a separate species. As far as I know the bulk of the evidence is against that theory, and I had always thought it was more or less an exploded one.

The skin is quite black from the brow to the tip of the tail, the black band broadening out over the shoulders and rump. The underside is of the usual smoky chocolate colour. The face and neck, however, and a band along the sides are quite distinct, as can be seen from the photograph. The latter does not quite show the panther as the eye sees it. The spots are quite distinct along the sides but the background is a sort of pencil grey, merging into the smoked brown of the underside The rosettes on this grey are so dark in the centre that they look like solid spots until closely inspected. Behind the ears the colouring is more of a yellowish grey, and the face is smoked colour with black spots and some specks of the same dirty grey. This grey resembles that of the ordinary jungle-cat. This panther came to the kill of the previous night at about 5 P.M., and stood watching the live kid that I had tied up alongside, giving me a very easy shot. He was not very shy, as three cows from the village had come down the hillside only about ten minutes before he made his appearance. I was surprised, thinking it over, that with his conspicuous colouring he had ventured out in the daytime at all. I believe his mate came with him, but I cannot be sure. I at any rate did not get a sight of her, and I was unable to discover any evidence of the black strain having remained afterwards in the neighbourhood.

Local belief attributed to the animal more fierceness and cunning than to his yellow relation. But no one there had heard of one being shot or seen for many years. The animal was quite young and only tared 6-4½ between points. The village always had a panther of the ordinary kind in the neighbouring jungle.

Messrs. Theobald Brothers of Mysore, who set the skin up for me, tell me that they have never seen one like it before, and the only others I have seen (in captivity) have been so completely black that the rosettes could hardly be distinguished.

I trust the photographs will reach you safely.

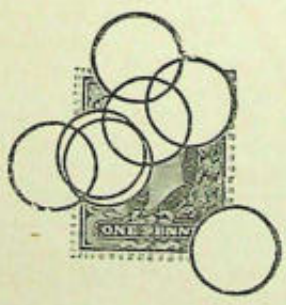
NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM (PATENT.)

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.



Messrs. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

AFTER BEING FIRED.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.

Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Starters:—R. S. LOCKHART, ESQ., AND E. C. RYLAND, ESQ.
Hon. Secy.—P. LEO FAULKNER.

Wednesday, 28th July 1909.

FAVOURED by beautiful weather and good support from the sporting residents of Dacca and Narainganj, the meeting proved very successful. Noser again won the Polo Race in excellent style, and the wins of Runic and Ruby were very popular. Runic has been seen out at the recent Tollygunj meetings, while Ruby was running at Lucknow last cold weather. Shepherdess broke her martingale when leading in the Milton Cup and bolted off the course with the result that her jockey was taken for a long involuntary ride. She was, however, pulled out again for the last race and ran into second place. Details of the races are as follows:—

THE TURF.

LINGFIELD.

Last Friday the presence of the fair sex, who, as usual, paid a full tribute to Lingfield, and the dulcet strains of the band served as accessories to enhance the sylvan charms of the lawns, which, despite a disheartening season, have been converted into the semblance of a bower of roses, which in more or less perfect condition flourished on the boards of the stand, festooned the railings, and gave standard test of their various beauties. The going was in capital order, and if fields were not of plethoric dimensions they afforded sufficient pabulum for a capital afternoon's sport, the feature of which was the triple success attained by Lewis' stable, the three successful animals being ridden by Saxby, these being his only mounts during the afternoon. Results:—

Batnors Selling Plate—Of 103sovs., for two-year-olds. 5 furlongs, straight.

Mr. A. P. Cunliffe's F by Symington—Santa Casa, 8st. 11lb.	Saxby	1

(Winner trained by Lewis.)

Betting: 2 to 1 Santa Casa, 4 to 1 Can't Sing, 5 to 1 The Colugo, 7 to 1 each Half Sovereign and Casana, 10 to 1 the others.

Won by three-parts of a length; half a length between second and third.

Jack's Bridge Handicap—Of 100sovs. 6 furlongs.

Mr. E. Cohen's Marchesa, by Marco—Zelva, 4yrs., 7st. 12lb.	Fox	1
Col. H. Fenwick's Cherry Cap, 4yrs., 7st. 10lb.	Avery	2
Mr. McMicking's Peregrine Pickle, 3yrs., 8st.	Randall	3

Also ran: Seisdon Squire (3yrs., 8-1, East); Dinder (3yrs., 7-13, Greening); Gala Tweed (3yrs., 7-12, Trigg).

(Winner trained by F. Darling.)

Betting: 2 to 1 Marchesa, 3 to 1 Gala Tweed, 4½ to 1 Seisdon Squire, 6 to 1 Dinder, 8 to 1 Peregrine Pickle, 10 to 1 Cherry Cap.

Won by three lengths; a head between second and third.

NEW
·375 RIMLESS
MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec.;
Striking energy,
2,899 ft. lbs.,

With
200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Price, plain quality ... ... 20 Guineas.
Best quality and finish, neatly engraved ... ... 25 "
Improved Model Telescope Sight (including fitting) 12 Guineas extra.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa

What can now be dubbed a seasonable morning in London—dull as December—shook the faith engendered by Friday's glorious weather that summer had at last come to stay. As experiences have long proved, London finds a startling contrast in weather to the North Weald, and visitors in plenty converged into a pleasant sunny climate marred only by one heavy storm of summer rain drops towards the finish that left the air clearer for its passage. After the previous night and early morning showers, the course rode a bit heavy, and fair fields in five events on the card made up for the falling through of the opening item, the Blackwell Hollow Plate, for which Dutch Charm was allowed to walk over.

A Remarkable Jury

WHAT a sensation would be created throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire could a jury be empanelled of such eminent men as the Rt. Rev. the Lord Bishop of Norwich; Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, artist and litterateur; Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., statesman and author; Sir William Bull, M.P., famous in the business world and well-known as a solicitor; Sir John Hare, one of the greatest actors living; the Venerable William Sinclair, Archdeacon of London; Mr. Marshall Hall, K.C., M.P., one of the best known men at the bar; Mr. Walter Crane, as noted as a lecturer as he is an artist; Mr. Hall Caine, the famous novelist; Mr. Max Pemberton, one of the most popular writers of the day; Mr. C. B. Fry, whose name is known wherever athletics are practised; and Mr. Cyril Maude, one of the finest comedians on the London stage.

The newspapers would report the case they tried, word for word, while the demeanour of the jury would be scrutinised by the most competent descriptive writers, eager to catch every passing phase of expression on their faces as a hint to the verdict they might give.

In this picture, the gentlemen who constitute the jury are the distinguished ones whose names have been mentioned above. They have not only tried the case submitted to them, but they have actually given their verdict on evidence brought before them—by their own senses. In this way, there is no possibility of a miscarriage of justice, as there sometimes is when the evidence is laid before the jury by skilful advocates, trained to make the best of their cause. This jury's verdict, though unanimous, is expressed by each individual, so that the public may know exactly what he thinks.

The case which, without unduly pushing the metaphor, they tried was that of Sanatogen. The evidence on which their verdict was given was the effect of Sanatogen in revitalising the blood, reinforcing the strength after strain, restoring waning vitality, re-creating nervous energy, replenishing the jaded system, and generally stimulating and building up the natural forces after disease until they were once more as vigorous as they ever were, and the health was made as perfect as that of which the individual was capable.

The verdict of the jury was unanimously in favour of the power of Sanatogen—universally recognised as the greatest tonic-food science has given the world—to produce these results and even more than these. Here are the individual statements of the gentlemen empanelled in the Remarkable Jury:

THE VERDICT.

MR. HALL CAINE, the author and dramatist:
"My experience of Sanatogen has been that as a tonic nerve food it has on more than one occasion done me good."

Hall Caine

MR. MARSHALL HALL, K.C.:
"I think it only right to say that I have tried Sanatogen, and I believe it to be a most excellent food."

Marshall Hall

MR. MAX PEMBERTON, the distinguished editor and author:
"I beg to say that I have been taking your Sanatogen since the beginning of the year, and would not be without under any circumstances whatever."

Max Pemberton

THE VEN. ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR:
"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

SIR JOHN HARE, the popular actor:
"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

MR. WALTER CRANE, the eminent authority on decorative art:
"In recovering from a rather sharp attack of influenza, I certainly found Sanatogen, prepared with milk, beneficial in its effects."

Walter Crane

MR. C. B. FRY, the famous cricketer:
"Sanatogen is an excellent tonic food in training, especially valuable in nervous exhaustion, to which men who undergo severe training are liable."

C. B. Fry

SIR WILLIAM BULL, M.P.:
"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

William Bull

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the author and traveller:
"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

MR. CYRIL MAUDE, the eminent comedian:
"I have found Sanatogen quite wonderful. I often take it now during the performance, when I feel rather done up."

Cyril Maude

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH says:
"Mrs. Sheepshanks is taking Sanatogen regularly, and deriving great benefit from it."

LORD RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER:
"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath or Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

Sanatogen produces the remarkable results to which these distinguished men attest by being at once a food and a tonic, each of which helps and reinforces the other. No secret has ever been made of its composition, which, on the contrary, has always been openly stated. It is made of milk proteid, the substance on which the food value of milk depends, and a special form of phosphorus, one of the most important constituents of the nervous system. Instead of being merely mixed together, however, these two substances are combined chemically. This alters their nature and makes the compound more easily assimilated by the body, thereby giving the necessary nourishment to nerve and muscle and improving the quality of the blood. For these reasons Sanatogen has become the sheet-anchor of the physician in India in treating Malaria, Dysentery, Low Fever, and the after-effects of these and other devitalising complaints.

Besides these, some 10,000 physicians have voluntarily testified in writing to the excellent results they have obtained from the use of Sanatogen in the treatment of diseases depending on poor digestion and loss of nerve force, with their attendant train of depressing symptoms like sleeplessness, loss of memory, inability to stand fatigue or to sustain the ordinary duties of life.

Anyone desiring to learn more about Sanatogen and the conditions for which it is peculiarly appropriate is invited to write for an instructive book, "How to Keep Well in India," which will be sent free to those mentioning this paper, on application to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Sanatogen, which, by the way, is used in the Royal Family, can be obtained at all chemists and bazaars, or from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

ATHLETICS.

POLYTECHNIC SPORTS.—A huge programme was put forward by the Polytechnic Harriers at their summer meeting, which took place at Stamford Bridge on Saturday the 10th instant.

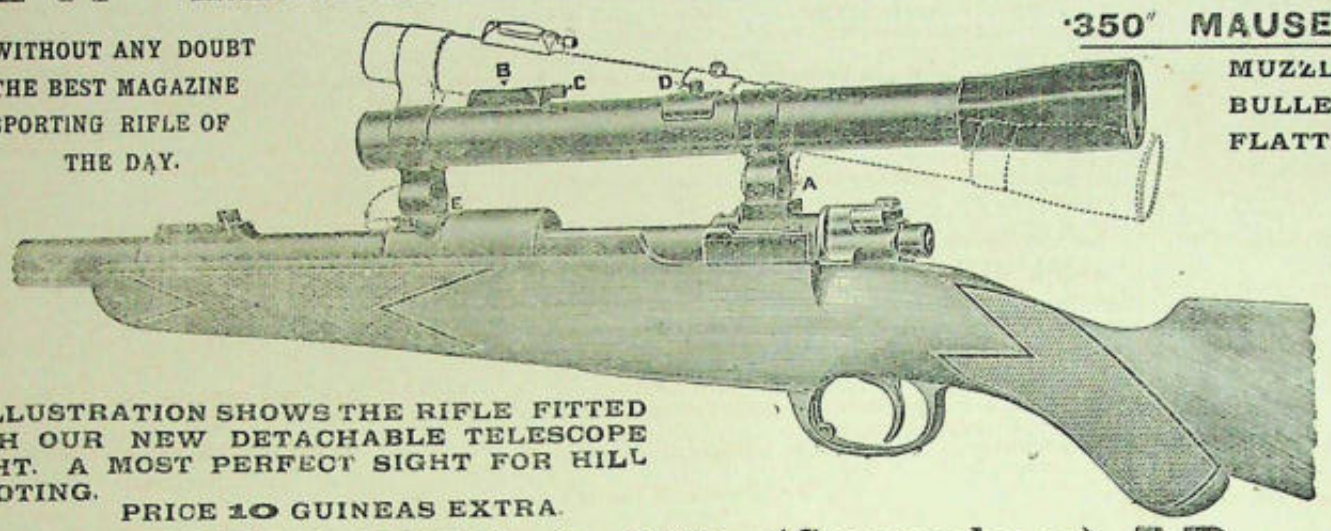
Some disappointment was felt at the absence of "Bobbie" Kerr, the Canadian sprinter, who was expected to oppose R. E. Walker in a 150 yards level race. The disappointment was accentuated when in the first heat of the 100 yards handicap Walker suffered defeat.

Walker made amends later on, when, with the inside berth in the 150 yards invitation level race, he ran through at his lightning pace in the splendid time of 15s., and this, too, on a rain-soddened track. E. W. Haley, the speedy Herne Hill Harrier, who was second, was well beaten by five yards.

Capital entries were received for the Inter-club competitions, which the Poly. Harriers included for the first time. Nine clubs competed in the seven events, the Poly. boys coming out on top with 27½ points, L.A.C. were second with 14 points, and Herne Hill H. third, 13½ points.

WINCHESTER

MODEL 1907 SELF-LOADING RIFLE



.351 CALIBER HIGH POWER.

Before deciding upon a rifle for your next hunting trip, don't fail to investigate the merits of this new Winchester, which is reloaded by the recoil of the exploded cartridge. There is nothing complicated, cumbersome or freakish about it. It is a reliable, handy gun from butt to muzzle. The .351 Caliber High Power Cartridge which it shoots represents the latest development in powder and cartridge manufacture. Although small in size it develops tremendous velocity and energy, making it powerful enough for the largest game. This most modern type of cartridge also possesses the added advantage of economy. Owing to the comparatively small amount of metal used in the shell it costs much less than old style cartridges no more powerful.

In the club series Haley secured the 100 yards in 10-3/5secs.; that fine miler, D. McNicol (Poly.), won in 4mins. 24-3/5secs.; S. S. Abrahams (L.A.C.) won the long jump at 22ft. 7½in.: the 120 hurdles went to Captain C. E. Kinahan (L.A.C.) after a duel with his fellow-clubman, K. Powell, in 16-1/5secs.; the 440 yards proved an easy victory for G. Nicol (Poly.) in 51-2/5secs.; the three miles saw B. C. Long (Poly.) first in 15mins. 4secs.; and the high jump was taken by O. Groenings (Poly.) with a leap of 5ft. 4½in.

The other open events outside the Inter-club competition were won respectively by W. A. Stewart, of the London Hospitals (6 yards) in the 100 yards handicap (time—10-1/5secs.); W. H. L. Ovens, Herne Hill Harriers (200), in the two miles walk (time—13mins. 46-1/5secs.); P. Mann, Polytechnic (56) in the half-mile (time—1min. 53-3/5secs.); B. Duncker, South Africa, in the 300 yards hurdles (scratch) in 39secs.; and the Poly. team (F. B. Gibbins, E. G. Judd, T. Parsons, and F. R. Yeatman) in the mile relay race (time—3mins. 40-3/5secs.). The open 10st. 6lbs. boxing contest was won by J. Bunt (Poly. B.C.), who beat A. Titley (Columbia B.C.). Lord Kinnaird afterwards presented the prizes.

TENNIS.

The M.C.C. Gold Racquet.—The challenge round for the M.C.C. Gold Racquet took place at Lord's on the 14th July, and for the eleventh time in thirteen years E. H. Miles proved successful. His opponent was W. M. Cazalet, who, owing to the retirement of E. B. Noel, the holder of the silver racquet, was called upon to challenge.

The match lasted only an hour and five minutes the superiority of the holder being so marked that he won a love rubber with the loss of only four games. Miles was in capital form, his mistakes being very few, and he combined hard hitting with great activity. He got up difficult balls in a surprising manner, and showed skill in his attack on the winning openings. Cazalet played well on the floor at times, and laid down a number of short chases in the course of the matches. The service on either hand did not appear to present much difficulty.

POLO.

Inter-Regimental Cup Final.—There was not such a large attendance as usual for the final of the inter-regimental tournament at Hurlingham on Saturday the 10th instant. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught was present, and on the conclusion of the match presented the cup to the winners.

This year there was an entry of seventeen teams for the competition, and only three regiments scratched. The 11th Hussars, who won last season, and the Royal Horse Guards had qualified to contest the last tie. The sides were:

11th Hussars.—Major T. T. Pitman, Major P. D. Fitzgerald, Captain M. L. Lakin, and Captain F. H. Sutton.

Royal Horse Guards.—Captain G. V. S. Bowlby, Captain Lord Alastair Innes-Ker, Captain Harold Brassey, and Mr. J. F. Harrison.

Umpires:—Captain E. D. Miller and Captain Hesketh.

This year the Blues have been showing capital form, and indications pointed to their making a good fight. Such proved to be the case, for except during one period, in which they lost four goals, they quite held their own. The first goal of the match came from the stick of Captain Bowlby, four minutes from the commencement of hostilities, and the Royal Guards again attacked on a change of ends taking place. Towards the close of the first period the Hussars were penalised for a cross, but nothing came of the free hit, and early in the second stage a beautiful combined run by Majors Pitman and Fitzgerald and Captain Lakin ended in the latter equalising. Either side recorded a goal during the third ten minutes, that for the Hussars being gained by Captain Lakin, who was seen to great advantage all through the contest, while Captain Brassey responded for the Blues. Half-time arrived with the teams level, 2 goals each.

The turning point in the match came soon after the resumption, for in about five minutes the Hussars scored four times. Getting in near the boards, Captain Lakin beautifully centred across the goal, and Captain Sutton put through, while the last-named player, after a capital run up the field by the other members of the team, hit a fourth point with a long near-side stroke. Before the period ended Major Fitzgerald brought off two more successful drives, making the score 6 to 2 in favour of the Hussars. There was a long-sustained attack by the Blues in the fifth stage, and at length a third goal was given them by Captain Bowlby, who met a back-hander by Captain Sutton. At the beginning of the final bout the Horse Guards had to hit out from their own posts for an infringement of the offside rule. They failed to get the ball away, and Captain Sutton enabled the Hussars to forge further ahead. Before the close Captains Brassey and Bowlby scored for their side, but their effort came too late, and in the result the Hussars carried off the cup by 7 goals to 5.

BOXING.

Welsh beats Young Joseph.—Fred Welsh, of Pontypridd, the young boxer who met with such success in his recent American tour, on the 12th instant, met and defeated Young Joseph, of Aldgate, in a 20-round contest for £100 aside and a purse of £550 at the Pavilion, Mountain Ash, before fully 10,000 spectators. Joseph took the ring at just over 10st., while Welsh's weight was 9st. 8lbs.

The contest did not go its full course, Joseph being disqualified in the eleventh round after being cautioned three times.

Welsh forced the fighting at the start and had a shade the better of matters in the first round. The second round was evenly contested, but in the third round the Welshman gained an all-round lead on points. In the fourth round, however, Joseph landed Welsh a heavy blow on the jaw, but in Round 5 Welsh again scored well, punching Joseph over the kidneys. Joseph went to the floor in the sixth round, Welsh fighting much the stronger of the two.

In the seventh round Joseph attempted to use his weight with some success, but his mouth was bleeding freely, and in the eighth round he was punished severely, and the Welshman looked all over the winner. The ninth round saw Welsh scoring rapidly and leading well on points, but the fighting was not clean.

In the eleventh round Joseph was disqualified and the fight awarded to Welsh.

Jem Roche Defeated at Belfast.—In a tournament at the Belfast Empire on the 14th instant, the principal event was a contest of 20 rounds between Jem Roche and Cyclone Warren "for the championship of Ireland and £200."

For the first two rounds Roche had much the best of the exchanges, getting home the left repeatedly without a return, but in the third round Warren got in a half-hook which toppled Roche over, and his head coming in contact with the floor he failed to rise in stipulated time, and Warren was awarded the verdict.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 22nd July.—Municipal Crossing 8 A.M. On moving off New Covert was drawn but was not holding. As we approached Mills' Cover a jack was viewed just below it. Hounds were soon on his line; he kept along the west bank of the Municipal Stream to above Triple Crossing, where he turned right handed over the stream, and running over the Golf Course below the 5th hole he dipped down to the left below Mackenzie's Crossing and headed straight for Brooklands. Although there were some fresh jack on the move in this covert, hounds pushed their jack through it into the Demon Valley and put him to ground in Rocky Shola, as this is a large earth it is generally a safe refuge for jack. Beadnell's and Hamlet were next drawn without success. As the hounds were about to draw Bracken a jack was viewed on the far side and away we went down the hill past Fuddler's Shola, then up into Wenlock and on to Khed. Going away from the bottom he struck back across the Bridle Path, and leaving Bracken on his right he ran up the hill to the wire fence through which he managed to squeeze himself leaving the pack on the other side. They were, however, helped over, but in the meantime the hunted jack had made good his escape and hounds picking up a fresh jack hunted him about for some time before he had them down into the Dunsandle Tea Estate and beat them. We then returned to Rockey and Kitty was put into the earth where the first jack had gone to ground, but he had taken himself off a long while before. Just as we were about to turn away a couple of jack were viewed a short distance off. They were evidently returning to the earth after a night out. As soon as they discovered the presence of the Master and the pack they thought Waterfall a safer retreat and set their masks for it. The Master tried to cut them off but they just managed to get ahead, one going down to Waterfall. The other turned to the right and running up the hill and on into Cathedral Shola and from here he turned over the southern slope of Mutanad Hill and made for Hanging Shola. It was decidedly hot by now and hounds could do no more so were taken home.

Saturday, 24th July.—Pykara Bridge 12 noon. A cold wet morning with fog and a thick drizzle which later on developed into a steady downpour and we were quickly soaked to the skin. The weather was so rough and the mist so thick that any idea of hunting this part of the country had to be abandoned. The mist had lifted by the time we reached Wenlock, so hounds proceeded to draw this country in which a jack was afoot and was viewed away at the bottom taking a line over the Pykara Bridle Path, and leaving Fuddler on his right he ran on into Warwick Shola. He was not at all inclined to leave this covert, but after dodging about for some time thought better of it and headed for the ghats to the north through Kengod Shola and Glyn's Copse and on to Boar's Copse, where instead of going down he turned back but was unfortunately headed back into covert. Making the attempt once more he was again met by some of the field on the far side, so thinking discretion the better part of valour he set his mask for the ghats and made good his escape in the dense scrub and rocks above the Dunsandle Tea Estate. A thick mist had now settled down, and though some more country was drawn on the way home nothing more was done.

Monday, 26th July—Brooklands 8 A.M. Brooklands was drawn blank, so moved on down the Demon Valley. One of the terrier boys viewed a jack just below Brooklands. Scent was poor hounds carried the line slowly over the stream and up Rocky Saddle to Malkod Mund and threw up. Rocky Covert was next drawn but was not holding. We then proceeded to cross the Pykara Road and the Sandy Nullah Stream and along Newmarket. Near the stream hounds feathered on a line and worked it slowly up past Schmidt's Clump and over the bog of that name into Staircase and over the Saddle on to Back Staircase Road, where scent was so bad that the Master had to come to their assistance and lifted them on to Briar, where they hit off the line again and carried it up over Windy Saddle. They ran above Wapshare's Hare on to the Pykara Bridle Path and Hearty, where they checked, but picking it up again carried it up to and along the wire fence. A brace of jack had parted company on the hill, the pack divided, one lot turning to the right ran down past Warwick to the bog and then right handed again and down to Dunsandle Tea Estate. The others with the Master ran round Warwick, crossing the bog below Paragon and on over the Bridle Path and the Pykara Road to the left of Road Shola, over Pykara Hill and on through Dormer. Coming out at the bottom they headed straight for the Pykara River, when they were stopped and brought back to Dunsandle. The day was not an unpleasant one though sport was only moderate.

Tuesday, 27th July.—Krurmund Bungalow 12 noon. Arriving at the meet the mist was so thick that it was quite impossible to hunt this part of the country. As we were jogging back along the Krurmund path hounds suddenly went off on a line near a small shola. Crossing the path they put their jack to ground after a very short run. Another jack jumped up quite close to this earth and led hounds over the stream and through Mekod Shola, then back over the same bog and went to ground in a small covert on the other side of the Krurmund Path. Bearing away to the right hounds started running again but lost their jack somewhere near Krurmund Shola. The first jack was then bolted by Kitty and killed in the stream, which was very full and swift and the jack's body was carried some distance down stream. The mist cleared away in the afternoon and we had quite a good run to finish up with. This jack was found on the hill between Pichol Mund Shola and Dante's Spinney. He started off at a great pace past Dante's Spinney and crossing the bog at the bottom ran through Bilanjikod Mund Shola, and coming out on the right and skirting the hill crossed the bog below the Twin Sisters, over the hill and down and across the bog below Limerick, through this covert, Gaylad and Democrat, past Andy Plantation into Governor's, where he made good his escape. A very good run and particularly fast at the start.

Rowing.

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

The results of this regatta were published in our Special Telegram of the 15th July. Our rowing readers will doubtless appreciate a brief, critical review on the event which was one of the most successful of the series. "Camisis," writing in a London paper, remarks that its outstanding features were the perfect management, the record entry of crews, the numerous upsets of form, and the further success of Oxford University crews. For once in a way, Cambridge University failed to win a single event. The only drawbacks were bad weather in the main and the prevalence of a Bushes wind on most days. The latter undoubtedly marred the racing to a very great extent, and is the only bad point about the historic course. Briefly discussed, the "Grand" was again won by the Belgians, with Jesus College (Cambridge) as runners-up. This means the triumph of two dissimilar rowing styles, both dubbed bad and unorthodox by British experts, yet which were once more proved to be get-there ones at least. Leander had little to do with the issue this year, nor, frankly, did they deserve to win. They took matters far too easily for a contest of such importance. Another year perhaps they will emulate the keenness, energy, and lengthy-preparation tactics of their 1908 Olympic Regatta crew. Magdalen (Oxford) gave the Belgians the hardest fight of the series, despite the crocked condition of several of their men and their having drawn the Berks station. With the conditions reversed, many experts insist the Oxonians would have won—but that is a moot point. The Cantabs' plucky spurts towards the finish of the final deserve all praise, yet nothing can detract from the Belgians' success. Putting aside the merits of their style, we shall now have to seriously consider the build of their craft. Not one English-built boat ran smoother between the strokes or faster when "easy all" had been called! Neither of the Metropolitan eights figured prominently, I am sorry to say, but later events compensated a good deal for such failure. During the regatta the Belgians made it known they will not come over to Henley again until some English crew or other have visited Belgium. In other words, they insist that reciprocity should obtain in boat-racing as well as in everything else, and they are right. Far too long have British crews maintained this exclusive role (so to speak). We welcome foreign crews to Henley, but never think of sending representative crews to other countries—procedure followed by no other British sportsmen, by the way. It can no longer be expected that international rowing shall mean competition in England only.

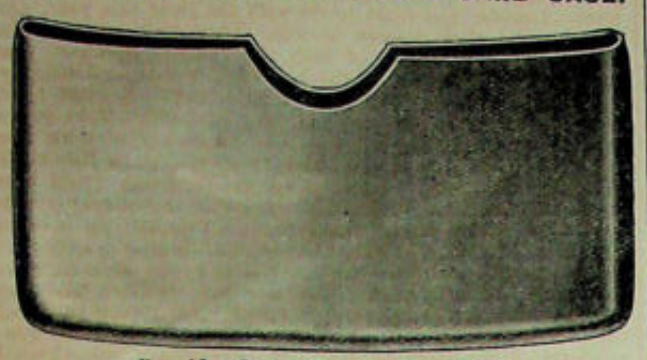
St. John's (Oxford) won the "Ladies" event in the fast time of 7mins. 9secs.—only beaten during the regatta in the final of the "Grand" by a second. First Trinity (Cambridge) were runners-up, other crews distinguishing themselves in the preliminaries being Corpus Christi (Oxford), Radley, Eton, and Jesus (Cambridge), the holders. Radley has rarely, if ever, put on a smarter combination. Mr. J. S. Carter, the old Cambridge Blue, deserves unlimited credit for thus inaugurating his career as coach. The excitement when the boys succumbed by 3ft. only to the heavier Brasenose (Oxford) eight was intense. Eton (who had been some time in finding a fitting stroke) rowed well, but hardly shaped so smartly as in some previous years. Wadham (holders of the "Thames") never looked like being beaten for that trophy. They polished off rival after rival in great style and, in the final, gained a meritorious victory over their fellow-students of Oriel in 7mins. 21secs. The runners-up rowed splendidly also, and the success of two such small college clubs was received with satisfaction generally. Several other Oxford and Cambridge crews figured prominently in the preliminaries, but neither they nor either of the Metropolitan contingents seemed to train on so well as the finalists. Walton Regatta form was somewhat misleading for once in a way, although the Anglian, Kingston, Vesta, and Thames eights should do well at future first-class Thames regattas. The supremacy of the University crews over their Metropolitan rivals was again maintained, and expectations to the contrary raised at Walton were falsified in the various results. Eight-oared rowing still wants much improvement on the Upper Thames and at Putney.

The surprise of the meeting took place in the final of the "Stewards." The critics to a man had tipped Magdalen (Oxford) to win and thus retain the trophy which they won in record time (7·27½) last year. The Thames R.C. IV. (champions of the Netherlands) again opposed them in the final, and, leading almost from the first stroke, won "anyhow" midst a scene of great enthusiasm. One hopes this is only the forerunner of a really good time for Metropolitan clubs, and the T.R.C. in particular, henceforth. I daresay the Oxonians were jaded after their big "Grand" fight on the preceding day, yet, at their best, I doubt if 1908 history would have repeated itself. As a matter of fact, they were streets below their 1907-08 form, and have gone off a good deal. This was the Metropolitan clubs' solitary fours success, however, as Balliol and Christ Church (Oxford) carried off the "Wyfolds" and "Visitors" respectively. Christ Church were lucky to meet their St. John's rivals somewhat fatigued after their earlier exertions in the Ladies' Plate, perhaps. Anyway, Balliol rowed the same crew to a standstill in the "Wyfolds" race, and the wearers of the dark blue, magenta, and white colours proved themselves a very speedy combination. The all-round showing of the Metropolitan "Wyfolds" crews was disappointing after their Walton Regatta form, and the same applies to University (Oxford) after earlier regatta-practice work. They seemed to go right off. The sole Leander victory was for the "Goblets," which B. C. Johnstone and E. G. Williams won by three lengths from the Thames R.C. pair, J. Beresford and K. Vernon, in 8·30. The latter were thus runners-up for the second successive year. Mr. Johnstone has now figured in three winning pairs.

Sculling for the "Diamonds" was hardly so classy as usual, with notable exceptions. The winner, A. A. Stuart (Kingston R.C.) was evidently trained to the hour, and, sensibly enough, had undergone a thorough preparation under "Bossey" Phelps's charge; who, by the way, has now coached three successive winners of this event. He sculled with great power, and had the pleasure of beating Rudolph Lucas (Germany) in the final very easily in 8·30. J. de G. Edye showed capital form, but it is evidently served better over a longer distance; and G. L. Thomson, the Cambridge Blue, only has to take up sculling seriously to develop into one of the best. Per contra, neither A. C. Gladstone nor E. W. Powell fulfilled the great expectations previously formed of them. A well-known riverside man put it down to laxity of training—but that, of course, was mere surmise. Anyway, they seemed to lack old-time vigour, and, in racing parlance, certainly seemed "short of work." As Stuart and Edye are to meet again for the "Wingfields" a little later, presumably, we ought to see further good sculling over the full championship course. The innovation of deciding the finals of the "Grand" and "Diamonds" after lunch, instead of before it, met with general favour, and is likely to be repeated. The scene on the last day was an impressive one. Enormous crowds foregathered on either bank and filled the festive array of houseboats, launches, club enclosures, etc., right along the line of battle. Add the panorama of ever-shifting small craft—like the Ancient Mariner's fire-flies darting in and out—the thousand types of faces and the polyglottic confusion of tongues, and one had a tout ensemble hard to beat.

"Do you ever write on an empty stomach?" asked the mere man.

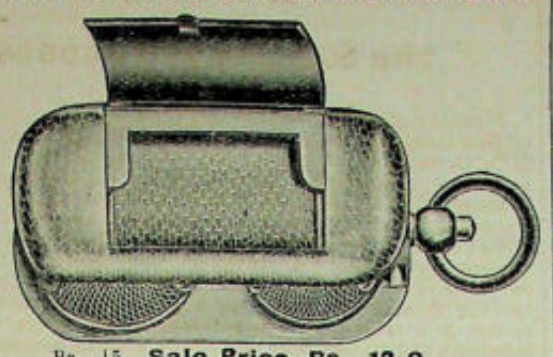
"Sir!" exclaimed the literary person, "I am a poet, not a tattoo artist!"



"I saw you at the banquet last night," said the best-hated-man-in-the-club.

"I didn't see you," returned the person addressed, who had some reason to doubt the veracity of this statement.

"Oh, but I was there," persisted the bounder.



"Then," asked the other, coldly, "why didn't you bring me some more asparagus?"

THE SARMA CUP.

Semi-finals.

70th R.G.A. vs. Telegraph Association.—These teams met last week, a fast and interesting game ending in a win for the Gunners by 2 goals to nil. The first half was level and there was no score. O'Hearn put the ball through before the interval but the point was disallowed for offside. The second half was also very even and it was till during the closing stages that the Gunners obtained their two points.

Calcutta Reserves vs. "A" Co. Gordons.—Played last Friday, the Calcutta Reserves winning by 2 goals to nil. The Gordons had the best of the first half but neither team could score. On resuming Drew and Strannach recorded goals for the civilians, who won as stated.

Final.

70th R.G.A. vs. Calcutta Reserves.—The final match was played on the Customs ground on Tuesday, a well contested game ending in a win for the Gunners by 2 goals to nil. Both goals were scored in the second half, by Gillet and Bates. Teams:—

C. F. C. Reserves.—Dods, goal; Taylor and Wright, backs; Pooler, McConnel and Badham, halves; Stranach, Kingcome, Drew, Clark and A. N. Other, forwards.

70th R.G.A.—Hayhunt, goal; Johnstone and Lock, backs; Diven, Gillet and Campbell, halves; Holtesen, Lieutenant Bates, Cumming, Bett and Gillet, forwards.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

Division I.

Calcutta F. C. vs. Customs.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Saturday, this the opening game in the League was a very one-sided affair, the home team winning easily. The Customs worked hard and should render a good account of themselves later in the season. They were rather handicapped by losing Warden early in the game through an injury. Calcutta were in good form and crossed the Customs line nine times. Four tries were scored in the first half, Turnbull (2), Burnett and Siddons being responsible, but none were improved upon. In the second moiety Arthur got over, but the extra points were not added. Then Ward, Siddons and Turnbull scored tries, Burnett majorising in each case, and the final try was scored by Turnbull but was not improved upon. The Customs could not get through and were thus beaten by 33 points (3 goals and 6 tries) to nil. Teams:—

C. F. C.—D. J. Leckie, back; G. Turnbull, J. R. Kay, H. Siddons, and A. M. Burnett, three-quarters; J. Ward and C. G. Arthur (Captain), halves; F. S. Kerr, T. Elderton, J. D. Malcolm, C. C. Miller, E. Studd, A. C. Earp, F. T. Collins, and W. Bryce, forwards.

Customs.—Dempster back; Jackson, Williamson, Maitland and Warden, three-quarters; Rowe and Shave, halves; Featherstone, Petty, Cadell, Abraham, Marsden, Thompson, Fredricks and Macdonald, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Esmond Martelli.

United Services vs. Customs.—This match on the Caledonian ground on Tuesday was a scrambling affair, but the teams were evenly matched, the Services, who played one short throughout, eventually winning by 8 points to 5. The Customs drew first blood, Maitland getting over with a try, which Rowe converted. A free kick to the Services shortly after enabled Jackson to place a splendid goal. Later Lieutenant Townend crossed the Customs' line with a try which Jackson converted. Final score: United Service, 1 goal and 1 penalty goal (8 points); Customs, 1 goal (5 points). Teams:—

United Services.—Speller, back; Townend, Morgan, Deay and Jackson, three-quarters; Bocquet and Slater, halves; Blair-Cunyngham, Fraser, Phelan, Trenchard, Hans, O'Connor and Hall, forwards.

Customs.—L. H. Smith, back; Jackson, Williamson, Shave and Maitland, three-quarters; Rowe and Dempster, halves; Featherstone, Petty, Cadell, Abraham, Marsden, Thompson, Fredricks and Macdonald, forwards.

Calcutta vs. Rangers.—This game on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday was very one sided. The home team had the whip hand all through and ran out winners by 38 points to nil. In the first half Ward, Burnett and Reid Kay (2) recorded tries, Burnett converting the two latter. On changing ends Calcutta scored six tries Reid Kay (3), Siddons, Turnbull and McLeod being responsible. Major points were added to two of these and Calcutta thus won by 4 goals and 6 tries (38 points) to nil. Teams:—

C. F. C.—G. R. Strachan, back; G. Turnbull, J. R. Kay, H. Siddons and A. M. Burnett, three-quarters; C. G. Arthur and J. Ward, halves; F. S. Kerr, T. Elderton, J. D. Malcolm, E. Studd, A. C. Earp, J. McLeod, W. Bryce and W. H. S. Phillips, forwards.

Rangers.—Margrett, back; Davis, Williams, Cody and McNeil, three-quarters; Wheelock and Fairley, halves; Minet, Bennett, Nicol, Macdonald, Lyon, Gilmour, Cavan and Whitburn, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. H. McGee (Dalhousie A. C.)

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY LEAGUE.

Calcutta "B" vs. United Services "B."—Played on Friday last, a fairly interesting game ending in a win for Calcutta by a goal and a try (8 points) to nil. Crumber and Whitely got over with tries, the latter converting his own.

St. Xavier's vs. Police.—Assisted by some of the Armenian College players, St. Xavier's beat the Police on Monday by a try to nil.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA vs. HORNETS.—Played on the 26th ultimo, the Commercial Gymkhana scoring their first victory in the League by 2 goals to nil. The opening half was devoid of score, for though the Gymkhana had the upper hand erratic shooting and a good defence by Millard and Topper kept them out. On changing ends it rained heavily and the Commercials pressing throughout scored 2 goals in quick succession through Woolly and Evans. Hornets were unable to respond and retired beaten. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal; Topper and Millard, backs; Brooks, Osborne and Molyneux, halves; Dudley, Garrick, Peters, Henderson and Daroux, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Hill, goal; Harwood and Lane, backs; Johnson, Osborne and Bellamy, halves; Symes, Evans, Taylor, Woolly and Cook, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. TELEGRAPHS.—An exciting game was expected when these teams met on the 27th ultimo. Nor were the spectators disappointed, for it was keenly contested throughout, the Y.M.C.A. winning by the odd goal in three and thus taking the top position in the League Table. The Young Men pressed at the start and then the Telegraphs retaliated. Hildreth saved from Holman and Ryan in good style. The Tarwallahs continued to press and forced two corners but without further success. Then the Young Men took up the attack and Kelly scored an easy goal. The Telegraphs tried hard to get level but missed opportunities through weak shooting and the Young Men still led at the interval. On changing ends the Young Men pressed hard and Ward scored with a long shot from a free kick for tripping. The Telegraphs then attacked, but all their efforts were thrown away owing to poor shooting. At length Templeton got through and passing to Donohoe the latter scored a goal. In the remaining play both goals were visited but nothing more was scored and the Young Men thus won a hard game by 2 goals to 1. Teams :—

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and Templeton, backs; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves; Chapman, Dowling, Kelly Pack and Roberts, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Taylor and Luce, backs; Crutchley, Lewis and Conquest, halves; Green, Woollen Ryan, Donohoe and Holman, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—These teams met on the 28th ultimo, the Bombay Gymkhana winning by 4 goals to nil. Parel pressed at the start but were kept out and the Gymkhana took up the attack. Play was slow and uninteresting and the first half was devoid of score. On changing ends the Bombay Gymkhana had matters all their own way and put on 4 goals, Cole, Price, Murray and Sim being credited with the points. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Keith-Roach, goal; Collingwood and Cooper, backs; Elliott, Holl and Sim, halves; Murray, Price, Cole Abbott and Moir, forwards.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Foxe, goal; Holtham and C. Edwards, backs; Pennock, Patterson and Major, halves; S. Alcock, Furbisher, W. Alcock, Sherren and R. Edwards, forwards.

THE MADRAS TOURNAMENT.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS vs. MADRAS VOLUNTEER GUARDS "B."—The Tournament opened on the 26th ultimo in wretched weather. It rained heavily before the start and the game between the Leicester Regiment and the Royal Fusiliers had to be postponed owing to the M.C.C. ground being under water and unfit for play. The match under notice was played on the Engineering College ground, the Foresters having little difficulty in disposing of "B" team. The Volunteers pressed at the start but their efforts in front of goal were weak. The ball was worked back to the Volunteer end and several shots essayed. Capewell opened the scoring and continuing the pressure the Sherwoods added three more goals—Dawes being responsible. The Volunteers nothing daunted rushed down but their attempts to score were foiled, and the interval arrived with the Foresters leading by 4 goals to nil. On changing ends the Volunteers attacked but lost chances of scoring, and the Foresters getting possession pressed for the rest of the game. They scored 4 more goals and ran out winners by 8 goals to nil. Teams :—

SHERWOOD FORESTERS.—Starten, goal; Nason and Shillcock, backs; Walker, Lieutenant Becke and Bowen, halves; Foxon, Lieutenant Wyncoll, Lieutenant Dawes, Capewell and Harrison, forwards.

MADRAS VOLUNTEER GUARDS "B."—Condamine, goal; Pacheco and Scott, backs; B. Lynsdale, Scott and Gray, halves; King, Kelly, Calder, Marshall and H. Lynsdale, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. Gordon Fraser and Lieutenant Ward.

MADRAS C.C. vs. MADRAS VOLUNTEER GUARDS "A."—Played on the 27th ultimo, on the M.C.C. Ground the Volunteers winning by 3 goals to 1. The M.C.C. attacked first and forced a couple of corners before the Volunteers had settled down. These were not improved upon and the Volunteers pulling themselves together pressed hotly, and after Partridge had saved a couple of good shots by D'Cruz, Blake got possession and beat the M.C.C. custodian. On resuming the M.C.C took the ball down and Tyers equalised with a soft shot. The M.C.C. then attacked and obtained a corner and a penalty hit for sticks, but these were not turned to account, and though the home team kept up the pressure the Volunteers' defence was very sound. Up and down play then led to a corner to the M.C.C. They failed to improve upon this and the Volunteers cleared, D'Cruz getting the ball and rushing down to score a splendid goal. At the start of the second moiety the M.C.C. made strenuous endeavours to get on terms but could not beat the Volunteers' defence. The visitors then attacked and Hennessy and D'Cruz tried shots which proved abortive. A penalty corner for a foul against the Volunteers led to an exciting scrimmage in front of the Madras Volunteers Guards' goal. The ball was got away and shortly after Campbell was loudly cheered for brilliantly saving a shot by Purves. The Volunteers took up the attack once again and Hennessy registered their third goal. The closing stages of the game saw the M. C. C. playing with great determination, but they were unable to score and the Volunteers won as stated by 3 goals to 1. Teams :—

VOLUNTEERS "A."—Campbell, goal; A. Laybourne and B. Laybourne, backs; Marcar, Allen and Simpson, halves; Phillipsz, Blake, Hennessy, D'Cruz and Pacheco, forwards.

MADRAS C.C.—Partridge, goal; Sinclair and Leech, backs; Browning, Stroats and Dawes, halves; Purves, Todd, Ogden Boyson and Tyers, forwards.

Referees:—Lieutenants Dawes and Becke.

ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. LEICESTER REGIMENT (HOLDERS).—This match, which had been postponed from the evening before, was played on the 27th ultimo and ended in the defeat of the holders. Up and down play at the start, both goals being visited in turn, and the Leicesters losing a fine opportunity of scoring from a penalty hit. Then Foote took the ball down for the Fusiliers and from a scrimmage in front of the Leicesters' goal King opened the scoring. The cup holders made great efforts to equalise but could not break through the Fusiliers' defence. Buckingham saved in good style and Foote once more getting possession raced down and transferring to Smith, the latter scored the second goal. The Leicesters attacked till the interval but a corner was the only advantage they gained. On crossing over determined play by the Leicesters resulted in Murphy scoring. The Fusiliers rushed down but were stopped and the ball returning to their territory they were kept busy for the rest of the game. Leicesters lost several opportunities of getting on terms and time arrived with the score 2 to 1 in favour of the Fusiliers. Teams :—

ROYAL FUSILIERS.—Buckingham, goal; Clarke and Eade, backs; Ingram, Davis and Collins, halves; King, Nihan, Smith, Lieutenant Foote and Brown, forwards.

LEICESTERS.—Crofts, goal; Findley and Captain Liddell, backs; Herd, East and Spriggs, halves; Batt, Murphy, Durnford, Sanders and Sole, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. Gordon Fraser and Lieutenant Ward.

SEMI-FINALS.

DORSETS vs. ROYAL FUSILIERS.—The Dorsets who had drawn a bye met the Fusiliers on the 28th ultimo, a fast game being witnessed in spite of the wretched state of the turf owing to the rain which fell just before the start. Save for a good run by Foote and a shot which Bridge cleared, the Dorsets did all the attacking during the opening stages. They were penalised for sticks, but the free hit gave the Fusiliers no advantage and the Dorsets returned to the attack. A foul against them at length relieved the pressure and the Fusiliers took up the offensive. A break away by the Dorsets was stopped and then the Fusiliers got possession and Nihan scored. They continued to press for a spell, but once again the Dorsets rushed down and obtained a couple of penalty corners. Nothing resulted, and play being transferred to the other end, a scrimmage in front of the Dorsets' goal closed the first half. On resuming after the interval Foote and Tatum were responsible for good individual runs for their respective sides. Then the Fusiliers pressed but could not score. Vigorous attempts to score were then made by the Dorsets, Tatum being again prominent, but they met with no success. The remainder of the play was in favour of the Fusiliers who scored two more goals through Foote and Smith, and thus won by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

ROYAL FUSILIERS, as before.

DORSETS.—Bridge, goal; Adams and Lloyd, backs; Macoy, Cassels, and Ashford, halves; Tatum, Maidment, Long, Miller and Grant, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. Gordon Fraser and Mr. A. G. Ogden.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS vs. MADRAS VOLUNTEER GUARDS "A."—Played on the 29th ultimo. The Volunteers did not play up to expectations and were defeated by 2 goals to nil. The Foresters got away and put in a couple of shots at the start. These were cleared and the Volunteers attacked in turn' Starten being called upon to save. Regaining possession the Foresters rushed down and Dawes opened the scoring. The Volunteers looked like scoring but a fine chance was spoiled by D'Cruz being offside. Thereafter the Foresters had the upper hand for a long time. Wyncall scored their second goal, but the Volunteers' defence was equal to all other onslaughts. Shortly before the interval the Volunteers got away but lost many opportunities. On changing ends the Foresters attacked and Campbell was tested more than once. But the Volunteers cleared and appeared at length to have regained their form. The game from now till the end was very fast and well contested. Both teams attacked in turn, but the defence was stronger than the attack, and though both goals had narrow escapes nothing further was scored, the whistle sounding a victory for the Regulars by two goals to nil. Teams as before.

FINAL.

ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. SHERWOOD FORESTERS.—Played before a big gathering of spectators last Saturday, the Foresters winning by 2 goals to 1 after a capital game. Each team attacked in turn till a good run by the Fusiliers ended in Foote getting the ball and putting it through. The Fusiliers continued to press and lost opportunities, till, after a penalty corner had been cleared, the Foresters worked the ball to the other end where Wyncall equalised from a scrimmage in front of goal. Play ruled up and down, corners were obtained by both teams but neither could take the lead before the interval. On changing ends after a spell of up and down play a penalty hit against the Foresters looked dangerous but the shot went behind. The ball visited both goals, the Foresters having if anything the better of the exchanges. Eventually Dawes got away and scored with a splendid shot. The Fusiliers tried all they knew to get on terms during the remaining ten minutes but were kept out, the Foresters winning as stated. Teams as before.

Referees:—Messrs. Gordon Fraser and H. G. Ogden.

Lady King gave away the Cup and mugs to the winning team at the conclusion of the game.

MOTOR MEMS. FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 9th July 1909.

THIS week the Royal Automobile Club have convened a mass meeting of the principal motorists in this country "to consider amendments to the clauses of the Finance Bill affecting motorists." As the progress of this Government Budget is so slowly proceeding through the House of Commons, the chances are that little time will be spent there in discussing that part of it that affects the petrol-motor vehicle. Consequently the Royal Automobile Club have rightly gauged the situation by organising this meeting at the Caxton Hall, Westminster, at 5 P.M. on Thursday next. For here speeches will be made, and let one hope widely reported, that will show to the world at large how the Government's proposals really do affect the users of self-propelled vehicles. Party politics will be laid aside at this meeting for motoring politics, and all shades of political parties will be represented. When the Government intimated to the Royal Automobile Club, under the chairmanship of Mr. (now Sir) C. D. Rose, M.P., that it was going to tax motorists some two years or so ago, the club rightly realised there was no hope of escaping taxation altogether, so proceeded to interview the Chancellor of the Exchequer. From the consultations that took place then, the system of taxation was evolved that is put forward to-day. But the Royal Automobile Club Committee, which took part in these meetings, did not realise that the burden would be made so heavy. It is to lighten it, or at any rate spread it over a wider area, that the meeting at Caxton Hall has been organised. It can but do good, or at any rate, do no harm, so it is hoped all motorists will attend it who possibly can. Tickets of admission can be obtained free from the secretary of the Royal Automobile Club.

THE International League of Touring Associations constitutes, apart from purely political organisations, one of the largest and most powerful federations in the world. It has already a membership of half a million, and is steadily growing. Founded in 1898, it is, as its name suggests, an international league of the principal touring clubs, formed with a view to securing from the different Governments of Europe facilities of all kinds for tourists. Each of the constituent associations retains complete autonomy in its own affairs, whilst for the administration of the league there is a central office known as the Bureau Central, which is managed each year by a different association, viz., by the body which has organised the congress for the previous year. This year the congress has been held in London, on 7th, 8th and 9th July, at the invitation of the Motor Union, and the management of the Central Bureau will devolve on the Motor Union for the succeeding year. The delegates to the congress will represent the various clubs and touring associations of Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Finland, France, Great Britain, Luxembourg, Holland, Russia, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States of America. The subjects which have been down for discussion at the congress indicate its importance to motorists. The long agenda may be summed up in the sentence: "What further steps can be taken to facilitate international travel?" Englishmen are probably greater travellers than any other nation, and are, therefore, under special obligations to the various touring bodies comprised in the league, through whose efforts travelling on the Continent has been greatly simplified. The Motor Union prepared elaborate entertainments for its foreign guests. On Thursday an official banquet was held in London in their honour, at which a large and representative gathering of motorists and others interested in travel attended. Next day they started on a motor tour from London to Swansea, via Oxford, Warwick, Leamington, Cheltenham and the Wye Valley with a full agenda of sightseeing banquets, feats and shows sandwiched between. The Foreign delegates should carry away with them memories of British hospitality which will tend to strengthen the friendship already existing between the various touring organisations throughout Europe and America.

AT his second attempt that wonderful cyclist Harry Green was successful in beating the 50 miles road record, cutting the substantial period of 5mins. 44secs. off the previous best time of 2 hrs. 6mins. 44secs. How near we are getting to finality in some of the recognised road records is shown by the fact that there has been no alteration in the 50 miles time since 1906, when Green, the holder of the new record, beat the eight-year-old figures of A. A. Chase by less than a minute, doing 2 hrs. 6mins. 46secs. against Chase's 2 hrs. 7mins. 8secs. The latter was the first of the unpaced records, so that it does not compare with any previous time. The paced record is of course considerably less, A. E. Walters having placed it for the first time under the two hours, doing, in 1895, 1 hr. 55mins. 50secs., and beating Chase's previous record figures by four and a quarter minutes. In the years 1894 and 1895 the 50 miles record was a favourite distance with the speed men, new times being established no less than six times in the two years. A big share in the honours was held by Chase, who claims four out of the six records, the other holders being J. W. Stocks and Walters. The first recognised record at the distance was that of W. Travers, made in 1885, the time recorded being 3 hrs. 15mins. 39secs.

A VERY interesting review of the progress that cycles have made during the past 20 years was recently shown at Messrs. Cadburys' works at Bournville, when the staff there held an exhibition of various types of machines. Starting with a freak machine supposed to be of a prehistoric nature, the exhibits included a boneshaker, an old ordinary, various types of safeties, showing how the design of the present-day machine had been modified from its first introduction by Lawson and Starley, concluding, of course, with types of modern roadster and racing machines. It is a pity that all these machines (most of which were loaned) cannot be collected together and form something in the nature of a permanent exhibit, being added to, of course, from time to time as the bicycle evolves. There is surely room in the South Kensington Museum for an exhibition of this sort.

Wanted.—Young man in gaol wants to get out; suggestions solicited that might result in immediate release; wants poet's address who wrote: "Stone walls do not a prison make nor iron bars a cage."—Address, John L. Silber, County Gaol.

This so tickled the public that readers of the paper became interested in the man and, as the result of an agitation, his pardon was granted by the Governor of the State.

ECONOMIC ZOOLOGY IN INDIA.

THERE was when the scientific naturalist considered it beneath his dignity to devote any attention to what the man in the street persists in calling the practical side of natural history. Nowadays all this is changed, and a number of the cleverest and most highly trained zoologists and botanists are engaged in studying the relations of animals and plants to man and his works in every part of the world. And the economic zoologist occupies at least as highly respected a position as his brother naturalist who devotes his attention solely to the determination of species; while to the community at large he is infinitely more useful.

In saying this it is not to be presumed for one moment that we are casting the slightest reflection on the work of the systematic naturalist. On the contrary, its value cannot be overestimated, as without such systematic work the good results which have attended the study of economic zoology could not possibly have been attained. The researches in connection with the propagation of malaria by mosquitoes would, for example, have been of no practical effect if the distinctive characters of the various species of mosquitoes had not been most carefully worked out; and the same remark applies to the study of the African species of tsetse-flies in connection with the study of sleeping sickness.

In India, again, where the last mentioned disease is happily unknown, the determination of the species of rats which are most active in the dispersion of plague—through the medium of the fleas by which they are respectively infested has become of late years a field of study of the very highest importance. Similarly the study of ticks, as the producers of various kinds of diseases affecting cattle has assumed an importance which could scarcely have been dreamt of a few years ago. Equally noteworthy are the researches undertaken during the last few years in connection with blood-serum as an antidote to snake-bite.

But to summarise, even in the briefest manner, all the various lines of research in medical and economic zoology that have been established and carried on during the last half dozen years would occupy more than the whole amount of space it is possible to allot to the present article; and we must accordingly proceed to a brief survey of some of the more striking pieces of work of this nature which have been inaugurated in India itself.

One of the most important lines of investigation in economic zoology on which the Government of India has recently embarked relates to the damage caused to forests by the attacks of insects, the department organised for this purpose having its headquarters at the Imperial Forest Research Institution. This department now issues two serial publications, the Indian Forest Memoirs in quarto, for the more important articles, and the Indian Forest Records in octavo, for minor communications.

As an example of the style of paper communicated to these journals, we may refer to the first part of the Memoirs, which is devoted to an account by Mr. E. P. Stebbing, of some undescribed Scolytidæ of economic importance from the Indian region. Until recently, very little was known with regard to the Indian representatives of his group of bark-boring beetles, and scarcely anything of their life-histories and food-plants. It is now, however, ascertained that the Scolytidæ are of very considerable importance to the Indian forester, this being specially the case as regards the great coniferous forests of the Himalaya. Other species, referable to the genus Sphærotrypes, are, however, detrimental to the sal forests and other broad-leaved timber trees, one kind S. assamensis, infesting the sal timber of Assam and Eastern Bengal, while a second, S. quercyi, attacks the oaks of Kumaun.

As another example, we may refer to the fact that for more than half a century the most strenuous efforts have been made to discover the origin of the so-called "bee-hole borings" which ruin the heart-wood of so much Burmese teak timber. Mr. Stebbing has been fortunate enough to discover the insect causing this serious damage, and has recorded his investigations which led up to the discovery in a pamphlet published by the Calcutta Government Press under the title of "The Bee-hole Borer of Teak in Burma." The offender turns out to be the larva of a large species of moth, which, after living for some time in the bark, when about to turn into a pupat, bores large channels right into the heart-wood of saplings. As the sapling grows into a tree the borings remain in the heart, and thus completely ruin the timber for many purposes. Suggestions are made with regard to remedial measure, against the ravages of these mischievous larvæ, which will probably prove more or less completely effectual, and thus in the long run save an enormous amount of valuable timber.

Other issues of the same journal might also be quoted to show the good work which Mr. Stebbing and his assistants are doing with the view of checking insect-ravages to crops, and thus in the long run saving lacs of rupees to the Indian Government; but sufficient has been cited to show the importance of the work and to hint at the, in many cases, probably successful results.

Government entomologists are also engaged on the study of locusts and other insects injurious to the agricultural and horticultural interests; and as a sample of the nature of these investigations we may refer to the third part of Vol. II. of the Agricultural Journal of India in which Mr. H. M. Lefroy gives coloured illustrations, with descriptive letterpress, of the various developmental stages of the two species of Indian locusts. Of these, the North-West locust (Acridium peregrinum) is normally a migratory species, inhabiting dry districts, and giving rise to annual swarms. The Bombay locust (A. succinctum), on the other hand, is typically a native of the moist Western Ghats, and only occasionally associated in migratory swarms, the members of which assume an abnormal red colouring. As to the black-spotted grass-hopper, often miscalled a locust, there is no evidence that it ever assumes migratory habits. The proper identification of migratory locusts from different parts of the country is a matter of some importance in connection, not only with the distribution of the species, but with agriculture; and for this purpose instructions and descriptions are given in the paper which ought to enable any intelligent cultivator to identify the particular species which may be ravaging his crops.

Of even greater importance are the investigations which have been recently undertaken, first by Dr. Hossack for Calcutta, and secondly by Captain R. E. Lloyd for India generally, in regard to the distribution of the various kinds of rats and bandicoot-rats in the country and their relation to the disposal of plague germs. Captain Lloyd, whose investigations are published in the third volume of the Records of the Indian Museum, finds that the black rat and the brown rat are both equally susceptible to plague, but that the latter spreads the disease with much greater rapidity than the former owing to the larger number of fleas harboured in its fur. The brown rat is therefore the species against which the war of extermination should be carried on with the greatest vigour. A very curious fact brought in connection with this species by Captain Lloyd's researches is that while brown rats abound in the sewers of Calcutta and Bombay, they are altogether absent from Madras, where they appear unable to obtain a foothold owing to the great bandicoot-rat having firmly established in all the situations usually occupied by brown rats.

As Madras has enjoyed, with one or two temporary exceptions, practical freedom from plague, there is a very strong presumption that this immunity is due to the absence of the pernicious brown rat. The same absence from most parts of the Mofussil may likewise account for the slight headway plague has hitherto made up-country. Whenever brown rats make their appearance in an up-country station immediate steps should be taken for their extermination; while a regularly organised crusade against rats in Calcutta would likewise be an excellent move. The experiment might also be made of introducing the big bandicoot-rat into the sewers of the city, to see if this more powerful species would drive out the brown rat, as it has apparently succeeded doing in Madras.

Of great importance are the investigations which have taken place of late years in connection with the pearl fisheries in the Gulf of Manar, which, it will be remembered, Professor Herdman was deputed to visit.

The object of the professor's investigations were fourfold. Firstly, to inspect the oyster-banks; secondly, to find out the conditions under which the molluscs live; thirdly, to take into consideration the marine zoology of the other Singalese waters in connection with trawling; and, lastly, to select a spot for a marine laboratory. As the result of the survey, it was found that in the main the oysters were healthy and free from epidemic, and, indeed, from much disease of any description. Parasites were present in considerable numbers, but were not considered to be doing much damage. "Spat" were found in abundance in certain localities and enormous quantities of young oysters in others A large percentage of these appeared, however, never to reach maturity, either from being destroyed by enemies, choked in sand or overcrowded. The remedy for this is thinning out and transplanting. It was concluded that "there is no reason for despondency in regard to the future of the pearl-oyster fisheries, if they are treated scientifically."

In a later report after mentioning the condition and extent of the oyster-banks, Professor Herdman briefly pointed out the chief sources of injury to the molluscs, after which reference is made to the mode of formation of pearls, and the best methods of pearl-fishing. This report concluded with a series of recommendations, among which are comprised the substitution of dredging, in many instances, for diving, and the advisability of the appointment of a permanent naturalist.

In addition to this fishery of the pearl-oyster, Ceylon, it appears from an article contributed by Dr. A. Willey to Spolia Zeylanica for November, 1907, possesses a source of pearl in beds of the "window pane oyster" (Placuna Placenta) in the back-waters of the eastern province. These beds occur in the back-waters of two neighbouring divisions of the Trincomalee district, one of which includes Lake Tamblegam, the head-quarters of the Placuna fishery. As the lease of this fishery recently expired, Mr. Willey was sent to the district to report on the best means of improving the product of oysters. These molluscs, it seems, are liable to be destroyed in large numbers by unusually heavy storms such as took place a few years ago; nevertheless, the species is in the main a hardy creature, capable of living for several hours out of water, and of surviving for long periods in earthenware vessels if the water be from time to time changed. No mention is made by the author of the annual value of the pearls yielded by the Placuna fishery. The paper included an account of certain cysticercid larvæ found parasitic in these oysters.

In a later paper on the fishery of these window-pane oysters published in the same journal Mr. Willey described a certain very remarkable peculiarity in the development of that species. The fact that the largest oysters examined during the inspection in October were immature, led to the conclusion that the Placuna does not produce an annual brood, but that one generation succeeds another at intervals longer than one year, and that sexual maturity is attained only after completion of the superficial growth of the shell, the life of individual oysters probably being three years. With this we must take leave of the good work the Indian Government is accomplishing in all departments of economic zoology.

At a political meeting the speakers and audience were very much disturbed by a man who constantly called out, "Mr. Henry!" After several interruptions of this kind at each speech, a young man ascended the platform, and was soon airing his eloquence in magniloquent style, striking out powerfully in his gestures, when the old cry was heard for Mr. Henry. Putting his hand to his mouth like a speaking trumpet the man was bawling at the top of his voice, "Mr. Henry, Henry, Henry, Henry! I call for Mr. Henry!" The chairman now rose and remarked that it would oblige the audience if the gentleman would refrain from any further calling for Mr. Henry, as that gentleman was then speaking. "Is that Mr. Henry" said the disturber of the meeting, "Thunder! that can't be Mr. Henry. Why, that's the little chap that told me to holler."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

SATURDAY'S racing in Calcutta consisted for the most part of upsets and bewildering reversals of form, for which the extraordinarily heavy going was to a large extent responsible and the lesson was once more borne home to race-goers that 1lb. in mud is equal to 2lb. on a dry day, so that a difference in handicap in ordinary going of 10lb. had to be reckoned about the same as 20lb. as things were on Saturday. It was also noteworthy that in each race it was a little horse that won, and the big fellows seem to find the mud more trying than their smaller brethren.

THE books must have had a pretty good day on the whole, as only two favourites got home and there were two absolute outsiders came rolling in for their benefit. They did not, however, make so much as would appear on paper, as there was very little money in the ring, due no doubt to a considerable extent to the extremely unsatisfactory nature of the weather which kept many people from the races.

THE afternoon passed off without a hitch and the arrangements working well big fields were despatched punctually to time in each race. Matters began badly for the public with the Midget Plate for which Cocky at 9st. 2lb was eagerly backed at 3 to 1 on. Tangerine, a sturdy little fellow carrying 8st., was the only other in demand. At a difference of 16lb. it really looked a good thing for Cocky, and on the top of the ground we should think it worth backing at the weights any day. The mud, however, proved too much for him, and, Tangerine taking the lead into the straight, Cocky could never get up to him again and was beaten comfortably by a length. That very little creature, Grey Lady, ran well, and though she was put on the rails just passed the distance, only got beaten by a head for third place.

THE whole field of nine started for the August Hurdle Plate, Mercedes a warm favourite in spite of her heavy burden of 11st. 9lb. The weight, however, was a good deal too much for her through that going, and she never seemed to be able to get into her stride at all, running last throughout the race. A great deal of interest centred in the performance of old Betrayer, who, after taking his first two hurdles none too well, settled down into something like his old form, jumping past two or three horses at each flight. He looked all over a winner at the home turn, but the sturdy little Queen of Gems came past him at the last hurdle and won easily by three lengths. Betrayer came in very lame and we are afraid may have broken down for good this time and Narwanah sprung a tendon and is undoubtedly finished for racing. Wake Up was a great disappointment as she seemed to have been generously treated by the handicapper and looked a real good thing for a place. She occupied a good position throughout the race but tired at the finish and got beaten by a length for the third shop by Cyril. She is very sore after it, which no doubt accounts for her failing to come off.

THE Pony Handicap proved the biggest upset of the day. Moira at 9st. 8lb. looked a certainty to beat Solace (10st. 7lb.) and Primrose (8st. 7lb.), and there seemed nothing else in the race worthy of consideration. Moira was backed to even money and would have been odds on, except that she was short of work. Solace, Wal and Primrose all had some supporters despite the handicap, but the result was absolutely a bolt from the blue, as Solace's stable companion, Ruling Passion, declaring 10lb. overweight, came away in the straight and won in an absolute canter by four lengths to the surprise of owner, trainer and everbody else concerned. The pony had hardly been backed for an anna and paid Rs. 342 on the tote.

THERE were ten starters for the Amateur Hurdle Plate. Tommy Daw was favourite at twos, Spinnet and Leading Lady next most backed. These two soon settled their chances by going out through the mud at an enormous pace. Soon after the fifth hurdle Leading Lady was cooked, Spinnet ran on longer, but good horse as he is, was done and beaten out of the place in the run home. Tommy Daw, the favourite, had all the luck, as not only had these two gone out much too fast, but Maisonette, who ran him to two lengths at the finish, seemed to make her run a little too late and would undoubtedly have won if there had been another 100 yards to go. Electric Light went surprisingly well, beating Spinnet by a length for third place, and he is evidently a very much improved horse.

SACRISTAN II. was a hot favourite for the Monsoon Plate, as he was reported to have got back a lot of his old form, which would make him a very good thing amongst this company. It was sheer bad luck that the good thing did not come off, as he got all the worst of the start and had to gallop his utmost to overtake Morsel, who was away first. He just got his head in front at the distance and looked a winner, but the effort had been too much for him and Morsel, capitally ridden by young Fraser, came again and just won the most exciting race of the day by half a head.

MYSTIC CIRCLE, then Bundah and Royal Colours were those fancied for the Fort Plate Division I. Royal Colours got well away but found the weight too much and was done with after a couple of furlongs and then Colina for the first time for a couple of years galloped her best and ran clean away from the field, giving Mr. Baring his second win of the afternoon and his third of the meeting. We offer him and his trainer Bloss our heartiest congratulations. We are very glad to see the latter have a bit of good fortune, which is thoroughly well deserved.

THE Fort Plate—Division II.—was the best betting race of the day, as London, Black Paint, Lasso, and St. Rule's connections all thought that they had big winning chances and Pressy was well backed by the public. The absolute favourite was Lasso, who finished up at 2 to 1, and coming away in the straight like a little race horse beat the tiring Yulgibar by three lengths, giving Fraser his second winning ride of the day and making him the leading jockey up to date with three wins to his credit, Mr. Evers having two, nobody else more than one.

THE entries for Saturday are again extremely good, and as they include several horses which have not appeared before this season prospects for the continuance of big fields throughout the whole meeting are excellent.

MR. PIERSON arrived last week with Lodge Worcester and Carnegie in addition to Koorlong and Downland, whom he ran on Saturday, and Mr. Burjorjee's ponies, Bonita II. and Echo, are now down here ready for the fray. With the keen competition that we look likely to have throughout and with an undoubtedly efficient handicapper we may look forward to a continuance of excellent sport, though it will probably rather tend rather to the advantage of the books and backers who will have to be careful.

THE weather on Monday and Tuesday continued very wet and there was very little work done. On Monday Mr. Billikin (Mr. Barrow) schooled, but seemed to find great difficulty in getting through the mud and went very slowly. On Tuesday Fingall was taken by himself at a hurdle, but refused it very determinedly, and then Piccaninny (Alford) and Violet (Mr. Bletsoe) went at a fair pace over the whole six flights. Piccaninny went better even than in her race and Violet showed marked improvement, going straight at them and jumping cleanly if not very fast. The difference from her first school was very noticeable.

THE following ponies were classed, aged and measured at Calcutta on the 22nd July by the Official Measurer, C. T. C.:—Messrs. Coonan and Caffrey's ch aus g Glenworth, 6yrs., 13-3, for life; Mr. W. Griffith's br or bk aus m J.E.K., aged, 14-0¾ for life; Lieutenant-Colonel A. Young's ch a g Koregaon, 6yrs., 14-1½, for life.

AT Poona on the 3rd the W. I. T. C. Official Measurer classed, aged and measured the following ponies:—Mr. Fife's b e f Felia, 2yrs., 14-1¾, until 3rd November 1909; Mr. Fitch's b e m Tiny Rose, 6yrs., 13-2, for life; Mr. M. Goculdas' Young Chester, 5yrs., 13-2½, until 31st March 1910.

THE general manager of the largest horse-selling establishment in the United States remarked recently that the introduction of automobiles had been to greatly increase the demand for speed in the fashionable carriage horse. "People get used to going fast in their cars," he said, "and when they come to buying coach horses they all want a bit of step—a good bit, I may say. Next to conformation, it's the first thing they look for. If a horse can't step away the dealer is wasting time to show him in most cases, for the customer won't buy. Showy action was the main thing only a few years ago, but 'Get there' seems to be the watchword with everybody now. Of course, the best horse is and always has been the one that combines speed and action, but speed comes first." The only breed of harness horses in the world that can fill the demands of the public in the direction indicated by this gentleman's statements is the trotting-bred horse. Other breeds furnish horses with plenty of action but none of them combine speed with that quality. That the hackney men realize this is indicated by the fact that they are quite generally mating trotting-bred mares with their hackney stallions. While the hackney men find it necessary to go to the trotter to get the required speed to combine with action, it is not necessary for the breeders of trotting-bred horses to go to the hackney to get action to combine with the speed they already have. There are many strains of trotting blood which produce plenty of action, and it only requires a careful selection of individuals to enable their breeders to produce horses bred entirely on trotting lines but possessing the speed and action demanded by the present-day market.

IN our correspondence columns to-day will be found some very exhaustive notes on the ·360 shot gun, written by "Fleur-de-Lys." This particular bore is not known much about, so that the experiments detailed are breaking more or less fresh ground. Naturalists who want a small bore collecting gun for gathering their specimens will be interested to learn that the ·360 when properly choked is quite up to most collecting work and would even kill hares up to 25 yards or so.

THE world's tarpon record now rests with Mr. L. G. Murphy of Tarpon, Texas. Mr. Murphy, according to a telegram recently received by the Catalina Tuna Club, of which he is a member, landed, after a lively fight whilst fishing in the waters off Tarpon, Texas, a tarpon that measured 6 feet 6 inches in length. He used a 9-ounce rod and a nine thread cuttyhunk line. Murphy has done considerable fishing in southern waters and is an enthusiastic and expert salt-water angler.

A CORRESPONDENT from Palanpur gives us the following details of a recent panther shoot:—Owing to heavy rain during the night of 27th July, the river Balaram, a mile and a half from Chitrasni, a station on Rajputana-Malwa Railway, was so swollen as not to be fordable on the following morning, and people coming to Chitrasni from the opposite side of the river had to follow the railway line and cross the river by means of the bridge. While coming over, two men saw to their surprise a panther under the bridge a few yards from the river. They threw stones at him, but the panther took no notice of them nor did he move from where he was lying. This led them to believe that the panther must have had a fall from the bridge and injured himself. On coming to Chitrasni they brought the news to the Police Fozdar of Chitrasni and the Forest Officer of Palanpur State who happened to be in the town. These officers at once put some men near the place where the panther was lying and sent a man to inform Sahibzadah Taley Muhammed Khan Sahib, Heir-Apparent, Palanpur State. Accompanied by Sahibzadah Yamer Hussein Khan and Sahibzadah Zabardust Khan and others, the Heir apparent came over to Chitrasni and reached the bridge, which is ten miles from Palanpur, early in the afternoon. The bridge held a crowd of people, and the water having subsided, Sahibzadah Sahib and party crossed the river on horse back.

Khubber was brought to them that the animal was lying out and had just moved in the bushes not very far. They dismounted, loaded their rifles, and advanced towards the bushes. The jungle being thick and grass standing high, Sahibzadah Sahib went in front and ordered others to stand and keep themselves ready in case of a charge. When twenty yards away from the bushes where the panther was lying the Sahibzadah saw the animal and fired. Out came the panther and made straight for him, but the sportsman stood his ground and finished him with a bullet in the forehead.

It was surmised that the panther, trying to catch monkeys which generally take shelter under the girders and arches of the bridge during the rains, must have missed his leap and fallen, hurting himself so severely as to be unable to get away to his lair

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO., And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

(ILLUSTRATED).

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

THE reappearance in England this summer of Pallas's sand-grouse is an event of considerable interest to the ornithologist, if not to the sportsman. Unfortunately, the hopes that were entertained some years ago that this handsome game-bird might become a regular visitor to, if not a resident in, Great Britain have never been realised, and no considerable quantity of the birds has been observed in England since the year 1888. Last year—the first time, one believes, for many seasons—a few coveys were noted in different parts of these islands, notably in the north of England, at Liss in Hampshire, and in Berkshire. But they disappeared as suddenly as they arrived, and probably perished, like their predecessors, when the wet weather set in in the autumn. During the summer months—or, at least, during a dry summer—Pallas's sand-grouse seem to thrive well enough in this country, but a period of wet spells speedy disaster to them. Their curiously small feet, which are quite rudimentary in character, are quite unsuited for a muddy country like our own, and soon become clogged with dirt when it rains. The sand-grouse's home is in the vast sandy deserts of Asia, where it runs with ease over the light soil with its small and ill-developed toes. Here, on the other hand, it is soon rendered incapable of getting about to search for food, and consequently perishes. So much was thought of the large influx of sand-grouse to this country in 1888 that the birds were specially protected by Act of Parliament—a measure which, as it turned out, was not much needed. It is much to be regretted that these visits of the sand-grouse to England are not more regular, for the birds might afford sport up to the end of August, at least, if they became a migratory species, in which case the restrictions might be removed.

A TWO days' Open Monsoon Sky Meeting will be held in Meerut on the 26th and 28th August 1909.

THERE will be a Horse Show at Jubbulpore after the autumn races, the dates fixed being the 27th and 28th October. The polo tournament begins on the 18th idem.

THE final game in the Novices' Polo Tournament was played at Secunderabad on the 7th instant when the 33rd Light Cavalry beat the 29th Lancers by 5 goals to 2.

A WRITER to a daily contemporary stated a short time ago that the Calcutta Golf Club have now acquired about three-fourths of the land which they require for their new links at Tollygunge. He also pointed out that they possess a fairly large stretch of land which could with very little labour be made fit for play. It is said, nevertheless, that the Club do not see any prospect of play on the new links for some time to come. This seems a pity. A new course is badly needed by Calcutta, and the work should be pushed on as quickly as possible. The Tollygunge Club is understood to have more members than it requires already on its links. Barrackpore is often overcrowded, and it is also too far off to satisfy the needs of the Calcutta golfer unless he can obtain a whole day away from the city. As for the maidan, at this time of the year the play obtainable on it cannot be called golf; at no time can it provide a really good game; the number of pedestrians and equestrians are too great to permit that; its only advantage lies in the fact that it is so conveniently situated for those whose occupation does not permit them to go so far afield as Tollygunge. It is clear that there is a great need for a golf club for golf only, whose object will be to provide the best course possible under the somewhat adverse conditions of climate that prevail here. The Calcutta Golf Club should be able to provide such a course on the ground they are acquiring, and in view of the great number of golfers interested and the inadequacy of the links that exist at present, no pains or expense should be spared in making such a course as soon as possible and as perfect as possible.

THERE are several games that can be played on a billiard table and there are various shapes and sizes of billiard tables, but billiards on the ordinary table remains and is likely to remain the most popular of table games. A short time ago an exhibition was given at Olympia of a new game called Billiatelle, which is played on an ordinary billiard table. The Times describes the new game as follows: The innovation consists of a board containing 15 cupped hollows with numerical values from 1 to 25. It occupies about 2 feet by 18 inches of the bed of the table and is placed in the bottom right hand corner. The object white after it is pocketed is invariably placed upon one of the spots of the D and the striker when in hand has to make his stroke from the other spot. Otherwise the principles of billiards are adhered to, cannons and hazards counting as in the English game. These strokes, however, are employed as a means to position, the aim of the player being to find a resting place for one of the three balls in one of the cups. The accurate strength required to prevent the ball returning from the board or jumping the bottom cushion would be a severe tax upon the skill of the average player. On the other hand, high class players are not likely to be attracted by a game which contains so great an element of luck and at the same time affords fewer opportunities than billiards for the display of all-round ability.

BEFORE Mr. Latham made his famous attempt to fly across the Channel it was thought that if the motor, which was recognised as being a weak point, should fail and the monoplane descend into the sea, the great speed at which it was flying would be bound to result in the total destruction of the machine and the certain death of its occupant. That there was no great disaster was no doubt due to Mr. Latham's cool courage and presence of mind. He estimates that the monoplane descended on to the water at a speed of 60 kilometres an hour. The water made an ideal brake, and the machine came to a standstill within a few mètres, but this could only have been attained by most accurate guiding. In speaking of it Mr. Latham is reported to have said: "I struck the water so gently that only a tiny splash was caused, and I merely felt some spray in my face. The machine floated splendidly, as I expected, and I kept my feet dry by raising them on to the framework. After a few minutes the Harpon's boat came to me bringing ropes, which I fastened above and below the centre of gravity, and then we towed the aëroplane alongside the destroyer. She is considerably damaged from rocking about in the water." Mr. Latham considered the cause of the engine stopping was probably that the salt air had a bad effect upon the carburation, but M. Levavasseur, the inventor, is said to have afterwards discovered a small piece of wire in the motor which he declared must undoubtedly have been the cause of the motor's having stopped and so ended the flight prematurely. How the piece of wire found its way into the delicate mechanism is not clear.

Oh, promise me that when you get the tin,
You'll buy an auto-car and we will spin;
We'll wander up and down the boulevard,
And when we hit the pike we'll strike it hard:
We'll see the wheels go round and sulphur roll,
As each man we run down relieves his soul
By swearing long and loud and deep and free
Oh, promise me, oh, promise me.

Oh, promise me that you will hold my hand,
As we go scorching through Fredonia's land
We'll make the rubber necks just hold their breath
And dodge us as they would the jaws of death;
But should the blame thing break, what would we do
Say love you'd better buy a horse or two,
—A nice 2-13 roadster fine would be
Oh, promise me, oh, promise me.

IT has been decided, we learn, that a native Indian team will visit England for a season's polo next year. The players will all belong to Patiala, a State for its polo in the days of the late Maharaja. The present ruler is very keen on keeping up the polo tradition of Patiala, and will probably take the team home himself next year. At any rate the State will be represented in England in 1910, the team in all probability consisting of Colonel Sova Singh, General Pretum Singh, Resaldar Thakur Singh, and Colonel Chunda Singh. This same team won the Beresford Tournament at Simla two years in succession, and it is well known how the late Patiala team won two Champion Cups in India. It is confidently believed that they will take about a dozen specially picked Arab ponies and will buy a dozen other mounts in England. Colonel Chunda Singh has been playing No. 3 for the "Tigers" and is expected in India early next month.

THE Poona Divisional Football Tournament began on the 9th instant, when the Worcester Regiment "A" team beat the Northamptons by 3 goals to nil. On Tuesday the Leicesters beat the Worcesters "B" team by 2 goals to one after playing extra time.

APPENDED are the results of important cricket matches played in England during the past week:—

Somerset beat Gloucestershire, at Bristol, by 116 runs.

Northamptonshire beat Leicestershire at Northampton by an innings and 111 runs.

Kent beat Middlesex at Canterbury by an innings and 37 runs.

Essex beat Derbyshire at Derby by 136 runs.

The Australians beat South Wales at Cardiff by eight wickets.

Surrey beat Notts at the Oval by six wickets.

Yorkshire beat Lancashire at Bradford by 100 runs.

Sussex beat Hampshire at Brighton by 105 runs.

Worcester beat Warwickshire at Birmingham by an innings and 233 runs.

Kent beat Hampshire at Canterbury by ten wickets.

Worcester beat Yorkshire at Harrogate by six wickets.

Derby beat Leicester at Derby by two wickets.

The Australians beat Lancashire at Liverpool by 47 runs.

Northants beat Hampshire at Southampton by 5 wickets.

The matches between Surrey and Middlesex and Essex and Notts were drawn.

THE last test match between England and Australia opened at the Oval on Monday on a fast wicket. Noble winning the toss for the fifth time sent his side in. The Australians began none too well and had lost four wickets for 58 at the lunch interval. Then Barsdley and Trumper got together and scored fast: Macartney succeeded Trumper and helped Bardsley to run up a big score, and when the innings closed the Autralians had put up 325. Bardsley had given a grand display for 136 with one chance: the other scores were:—Gregory 1. Noble 2, Armstrong 15, Ransford 3, Trumper 73, Macartney 50, Hopkins 21, Cotter 7, Carter 4, Laver not out 87 and Extras 5. Carr took 5 wickets for 146, Sharp 3 for 67, and Barnes 2 for 25. England then went in and at the close of the day's play had compiled 40 for two wickets. On resuming on Tuesday Rhodes and Fry, who were not out overnight, batted well, and at lunch time were still together with the score at 129, Fry having scored 56 not out. The innings closed for 352, Rhodes having made 66, Fry 62, Hutchings 59 and Sharp, who batted brilliantly, 102. Maclaren 15, Spooner 13, Wooley 8, Hayes 4, Carr 0, Barnes 0, Lilley not out 2, Extras 21. Cotter took 6 wickets for 95 runs. Laver snapped the muscles of his thigh while bowling and is unlikely to play again during the tour. At the close of play on Tuesday the Australians had made 76 without loss, Bardsley 33, and Gregory 35 both not out.

THE Durand Football Tournament which begins at Simla on the 11th proximo is drawing good entries; the following have sent in their names so far—Wiltshire Regiment, 2nd North Staffords, Black Watch, Connaught Rangers, Dragoon Guards, Mountain Battery Jutogh, Durham Light Infantry, Highland Light Infantry, the King's Regiment, the West Ridings, 17th Lancers, Royal Warwicks, Royal Berkshires and the Bishop Cotton School. The recently formed Simla United Football Club is likely to enter two teams in addition to the above, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers are expected from Burma and there is a talk of a volunteer team representing Calcutta. The Committee have arranged for the services of Staff Sergeants J. Leak and J. Curley as referees. Entries close on the 15th instant and the usual camp formed for competing teams opens on the 7th proximo.

"FREE DAY AT THE ZOO."—The Calcutta Zoological Garden will be opened free to the public for six months on the following days:—Monday, the 9th August 1909; Monday, the 13th September 1909; Monday, the 11th October 1909; Monday, the 8th November 1909; Monday, the 13th December 1909; Monday, the 10th January 1910.

OUR Poona correspondent writes:—A divided race made seven events on Saturday for the Second Extra. Things did not go as well as they did on the previous occasion for the public—a couple of bad upsets occurring.

We opened with the Sungam Plate, in which two were jumping in a race for the first time, Pincher and Dirty Boy, and the former was favourite with Greenstone well backed. Umutbee made the pace fairly hot attended by Pincher, who scarcely jumped quite as kindly as reported. At the five furlongs the leader was passed, Greenstone falling in second with Dirty Boy next. Pincher brought down the last jump, and in the run in Dirty Boy won comfortably from Umutbee, who came up again outside to beat Greenstone.

The Lilliput Trial Plate looked a toss up on paper, but Scimitar had apparently given a sufficiently good gallop to encourage his stable to back him to favouritism, Darley and Rajput supported. Creditor made the running, but when Scimitar came up entering the straight all was apparently over, though Sir Jamal put in a strong finish.

Murzook did punters very little good in the first Karli Plate when Afreed was heavily backed from Vedas. Great Power led Vedas, but both were out of it when Afreed and Azzad came. Suddenly Murzook and Yacoot appeared in the centre and the former won very comfortably.

Thirteen went out for the New Stand Plate. Paul Pry made a very hot favourite, Coquette's price expanding correspondingly. Castalia showed pace for a time and then Paul Pry went away followed by Sacricomar. Sacricomar was going very well, but Hayhoe realised the impossibility of overtaking the favourite, Wolferton finishing third.

Meerjan was another really good thing, though a big commission came for Sabah from Bombay, the owner being unable to attend owing to a family bereavement. Malik Jaman led Sabah and Narsin out and at the bend Hishan pushed through on the rails looking like a winner, till Meerjan coming right through went away fairly comfortably.

Though there were sixteen starters in the Arab Trial Plate, the race was considered to lie between Precious and Dhafer, but here came a huge upset. Lofan and Company cut out the pace and Dhafer came a bit too early into the lead before the bend. At the distance Peculiar, Swalior and Second Thoughts came at him and the last named shot away in the last few strides easily. The winner used to be known as the Ranger, and could have been had anywhere at 20's.

Racer was the pick of ten in the Arab Welter Aziz next in demand. Santra went away to the front with Sun Sun and Sandid handy. It was a toss up to the distance, but here Robinson came through nicely on the rails, bringing off a popular win on Racer.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 23rd July 1909.

I have to report the tardy arrival of something approximately bordering on summer. The holiday makers are hard at it in the country and abroad and London is uncomfortably stuffy and dusty. This has made most of us who are left behind rather cantankerous, as witness the manners and tempers of certain of our faithful Commons, as recorded in my letter of last week. And now something like the same state of affairs is noticeable in the usually sedate and well mannered House of Lords, where one nobleman has just alluded to a certain ducal amendment as "Evasive, ignorant and fatuous." And this in what was once described as the best Club in London!

It has been suggested that possibly the soothing and pacifying influence of the newly-formed Poetry Recital Society might be brought to bear with advantage on these excitable assemblies. This society, headed by Lady Margaret Sackville, herself a poetess of high repute, proposes to improve the world by giving soulful renderings of poetry's highest flights. It even suggests that real good might be done by going into our gaols and reading beautiful passages to the prisoners. The chief point against this scheme appears to be that the Prison Commissioners flatly refuse to allow anything of the sort. It seems in a way a good idea, especially as in certain bad cases it might be used as an additional punishment for old offenders; but one does not envy the situation of the man told off to read peace-bringing poesy to the infuriated Suffragettes in a state of open mutiny in Holloway.

But the tragedy latent in the newly-formed Poetry Recital Society seems to have escaped the notice of all commentators save the Sunday Times which remarks that one of the projects of this society is to spend five months in a camp in the desert of Sahara. The members will occupy their time by "the camp-fire's ruddy glow" in reciting their own poetry to each other. It promises a novel and entirely effective process of mutual annihilation. It is impossible to believe that at the end of the five months there will be a solitary survivor left. The sonneteer will have extinguished the writer of triolets, the epic poet will have obliterated the sonneteer, the blank verse dramatist will have swept the camp clear of all the rest and afterwards have expired of his own ineffable dulness. Years hence, adventurous explorers will come across the relics of that camp, the ashes of its long-spent fires, and the bleached bones of its poets, and there will only be odd scraps of manuscript, faded by time and a Sahara sun, to suggest the grim tale of their destruction. The sand-storms of the desert, the agonies of unquenched thirst, the terrible solitude of that austere region are of themselves sufficient to create horror; but five months of poetry—mostly other people's poetry—good heavens, it is too awful for words!

The murder of Sir W. H. Curzon Wyllie has had a remarkable sequel. The Treasury has lost no time in the endeavour to show that the criminal law of England is able to deal with those taking part in the dissemination of sedition or articles of an inflammatory or mischievous character, subversive of the King in this country or in any part of His Majesty's dominions. The printer of the Indian Sociologist, a wretched creature named Horsley, whose press is somewhere in the East End of London, has issued the last few numbers of that poisonous sheet in which Krishnavarma publishes his sedition, assassination and general anti-British propaganda—the fugitive firebrand who has justified Dhingra's crime in public print from the safe retreat of a Paris slum. The man Horsley is now being prosecuted for having published "a scandalous and seditious libel in the form of a printed publication called the Indian Sociologist in July 1909, against the Government of His Majesty and against the peace." Incidentally the Grand Jury returned a true bill against the murderer whose defence was that the case was a political one; needless to say it was soon made apparent to him that the law of England recognised no such device. Both cases are proceeding as I close this letter.

That "manners makeyth man" is being generally recognised in officialdom in our metropolis. It was only the other day that those who run the London telephone systems issued a mandate to all women operators to mend their ways and treat the public with decency and civility and make the telephone service a business convenience instead of an exasperating nuisance. And now the Postmaster-General seems to be infected with the new-fangled notion that post offices are places for the convenience of the public. Acting upon this theory, he has suggested to the charming ladies who condescend to attend behind the counters for a few hours daily, in order to discuss hat-trimming and the ethics of courtship, that in future they might, perhaps—occasionally, just for appearance's sake—relax a little of their supercilious repose to wait upon the customers. This, of course, seems very absurd, and Mr. Buxton has been badly advised to make such a fantastic suggestion. The very raison d'être of the post offices would be gone if a mere man could hope to buy a postage stamp without having first to listen to the statement that "blue doesn't suit her a bit; I can't make out why she wears it." They may, indeed, be regarded as national schools for the cultivation of feminine nonchalance, and it would be a pity to lower their efficiency by imposing on the assistants a standard of politeness such as one might reasonably expect the Almighty to employ towards an inoffensive blackbeetle.

A few days ago some candid Yankee, greatly daring, suffered himself to be interviewed by a London paper and declared unreservedly that he preferred to live in England to America and gave a fairly lengthy list of reasons for such preference. The article has, I see, raised quite a storm in "N'York," where such sentiments are harshly condemned, while it is stoutly denied that more Yankees than heretofore are settling in England. I know not how this may be; I for one hope the American papers are correct in this statement at any rate. The Murrican man and his wife are distinctly not liked by the million in this little island and for reasons I need not trouble to recapitulate here. It moves to laughter to read what one journal prints in this connection. "When, it asks, will the British begin to take note of the broad-minded, well-poised, well-travelled native of the United States, whose manners have been polished by contact with the world, who views life philosophically, who is slow to form opinions and slower to utter them, who is as much at home in Paris and Berlin as in London, though he is never really at home out of the United States." I have travelled in a good many countries and my eyes have not yet been gladdened by the sight of a Yankee answering to the above description, and I fear the vision will not be vouchsafed to me. Certain it is I never saw anything even remotely approaching this type among the cold weather herds of transatlantic globe-trotters who used to infest the presidency towns and hill stations and occasionally make one yearn to be both deaf and blind. Not so long ago these people were not welcomed at the best Calcutta hotels and boarding houses, indeed some establishments I know used to decline to receive them; but as brandy and beef rajahs are now to be seen at table d'hôte dinners at some of your big caravanserais, perhaps the guessing and calculating people are to be found there too.

LAST summer the playhouses of London had the benefit of the tens of thousands of visitors attracted here by the fame of the White City; this summer they have derived almost as much benefit out of the unseasonable weather, which has made outdoor amusements almost impossible. If it were not for the weather we have had in June and July at least ten theatres that are now open nightly would have closed their doors for the season. "Long may he rain" is the loyal wish of all those concerned in plays making a summer profit.

BUT we are now beginning to look ahead, and the opening of the next dramatic season is now being clearly indicated by the new productions. Wyndham's Theatre will easily be first with its new play "Supper For Two," on 5th or 12th August. About 28th August "The Proud Prince" will appear at the Lyceum, and on 31st August Mr. Frohman is to produce "Arsene Lupin" at the Duke of York's Theatre. 1st September has been chosen as the first night of "The False Gods" at His Majesty's Theatre, and for the same evening "La Femme X" is announced at the Globe Theatre. Sir Arthur Pinero's new play, "Mid-channel," will be produced at St. James's Theatre on 2nd September and on Saturday, 4th September, W. Somerset Maugham's new play "Smith" will come on at the Comedy Theatre. In the few days following the opening of the season Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton's new drama will be produced at Drury Lane, and the American drama, "The Great Divide," with Mr. Henry Miller and Miss Edith Wynne Mathison in the cast, will be produced at the Adelphi on 15th September. Mr. Frank Curzon is to do a new musical play by Paul Rubens at the Prince of Wales Theatre; and a newly-formed syndicate is negotiating with Mrs. D'Oyly Carte for a lease of the Savoy Theatre in order to do musical plays there. Mr. Arthur Bourchier will produce a new play by Alfred Sutro at the Garrick Theatre, and Mr. George Edwardes will produce "The Dollar Princess" at Daly's.

I must not forget to add that Mr. Norman Trevor (by which stage name India's one time champion sprinter and hurdler is known) is now running a company in partnership with another and has struck oil judging by the flattering notices he and his company are receiving everywhere.

THE secret leaked out eight days ago. It was a moment of supreme import. We now know why Mr. Bernard Shaw's "Press Cuttings" was not licensed. It was not on account of politics or personality, but because the Censor was apprehensive of the consequences of its excruciating humour on an ordinary theatre audience. The copious extracts published in the press indicate clearly that there would have been considerable risk of fatal attacks of apoplectic mirth if the play had been licensed for public representation. That no lives were lost at the "private reception" at the Court Theatre only proves that the audience was exceptional and blasé and proof against the most convulsing sallies. The papers that printed samples of the dialogue, appealing to less stoical intelligences, excited a perilous degree of merriment, and what are sometimes beautifully called the "risible faculties" of the public were stimulated to the very verge of casualty. The Censor deserves commendation for his humane interference. We cannot afford, in these times of European menace, to have the able-bodied population decimated by the side-splitting jokes of irresponsible humorists.

AFTER all that plucky, patient young aviator, Mr. Latham, failed in his first attempt to fly across the English Channel: he may be said to have scored a try, next time he may register a goal. For many days he waited for favourable conditions the while all England discussed his chances and the papers reported his doings and sayings with each succeeding edition. On Monday he got his chance and took it. He got a magnificent start and everything went well till he had got nearly seven miles on his journey when the engine shut up and the end was a flop, a gigantic splash and a prompt rescue by one of the attendant vessels. The aeroplane with its wings torn to ribbons and its accessories otherwise crumpled up was hauled aboard a tug and carried back to France. Mr. Latham may have another try for the £1,000 offered by the Daily Mail at no distant date. It was an absurdly annoying accident, for had the engine but kept going there seems to be little doubt that he would have crossed triumphantly. There are other competitors in the field or in the air now and ere long we shall be looking out for the arrival of the next modern Icarus I suppose.

BRITAIN'S war fleet came up the Thames last week end and brought with it the rare burst of sunshine which has lasted ever since. It received an immense welcome. The leviathans anchored in the lower reaches the small fry in the shape of submarines, torpedo boats and destroyers worked their way up as far as Westminster Bridge and were moored opposite the Houses of Parliament. Huge Saturday and Sunday crowds rushed down to Southend to gaze at the mighty battleships, stay-at-home Londoners in their tens of thousands swarmed on the banks and bridges, from the Tower to Westminster. The foreshore for miles was literally alive with spectators, thousands went afloat and watched the novel and inspiriting spectacle and realised, as perhaps most of them had never before realised, the fighting power of old England at sea. It has been a magnificent show and it was greeted for days with demonstrations of unsurpassed enthusiasm, in fact London went fairly Fleet mad. It is quite refreshing to find that we Britishers can occasionally enthuse over something in which the Daily Mail or some other mammoth advertising concern has had absolutely no hand. Some one early in the visit discovered that the spirit of Nelson's day was still dwelling in the British navy. This prepared the way for a welcome which extended over every hour of the week and left hosts and guests exhausted but happy. After "Rule Britannia" and "A life on the Ocean Wave" had been played, sung or whistled at every turn and corner during the early part of the week the blue jackets to the number of 1,200 marched through the city to the Guildhall the entire route being thronged by scores of thousands who accorded the men such a welcome as is offered to monarchs. Next came the Guildhall banquet and the rest has been all saluting, shouting, speechifying and singing, and joyful tumult indoors and out. This fleet visit has been a huge success and has made for good in every possible way I think.

MOUNTAIN SHEEP IN NORTH AMERICA.

As a sheep-hunting country the peninsula of Lower California has the advantages of accessibility, lenience of laws, and a comparative plentitude of game. Sheep are found both in the Cocopahs, near the point of confluence of the Colorado river and the Gulf of California, and in the lofty range which forms the backbone of the peninsula. Yuma, Arizona, makes a convenient outfitting point, and the two days' float down the lower Colorado river is in itself well worth while. For the Cocopahs, headquarters should be established in one of the cattle ranches on the delta, but for the interior a pack train and camping outfit will be necessary. Indian guides may be had for a dollar a day, and these will be found quite reliable as to trails and waterholes—the main considerations in a desert country. Good sheep country in the main range may be reached from the coast side by taking boat from San Diego to Ensenada, and making the latter city the outfitting and departure point.

One of the most unusual and amusing of my sheep-hunting experiences occurred in connection with an expedition to the great peak of San Pedro, situated about a third of the way down the Lower California peninsula, and as the incident involved a moment of actual physical contact with what I believe was one of the largest specimens of mountain sheep that ever lived, a brief account of it may be worth recording.

Starting from Bruce's camp, near the mouth of the Colorado, for a week we traversed every kind of land from the rich river delta, sparkling in velvet verdancy, to arid plains of alkali, where the hollow trail of our pack train, stretching away to the nothern horizon, would gradually grow into a bas relief as the wind blew away the unpacked earth around the tracks. We crossed flint-paved cloudburst moraines, where the horses' hoofs wore to the quick, to zigzag down cut-banks into sinks where the place for every step had to be prodded with a pole. And always the withering heat of the sun at midday and the biting coldness of the air at the end of the night; and in all the way never a tree for shade, never a spring for drink, and never a sign of life to relieve the monotony. Not even did we have a trail for guidance, our course being steered like that of a ship at sea, by compass bearing of star and headland.

The second day we sighted the pinnacle of lofty San Pedro, and from then on we shaped our course over plain and pass by the blot its steadily growing bulk made against the deep blue of the southern sky. The seventh day, with all the horses' water gone and only a few swallows apiece left for ourselves, we travelled long into the night in the hope of reaching our destination and avoiding the pitiless grilling that a waterless day would render inevitable under the scorching sun. But soon after the wisp of a new moon wriggled down behind a shoulder of the now towering mass of San Pedro we were compelled to camp through loss of bearings. The next morning we were afoot at daybreak and topping the first rise found we were practically at our journey's end.

The sun, a disc of glowing copper, was just emerging from the shimmering mirror of the Gulf, the placid surface of which stretched away beyond eye-scope to the eastern horizon. The level rays, cutting through the clear air, struck upon each cliff and seam of the mighty San Pedro like the beams of a thousand searchlights. Every gully, every ravine, every canyon was sun-searched to the last pebble on the aching line of its waterless bosom All save one; this, a sinister line of heavy black, murky and bottomless to the eye, clave the mountain from its base upwards, to be finally lost in a tumble of boulders on a lofty mesa. From the lower end of this forbidding seam, leapt a stream of clear water, a brocade of white silk studded with opals and diamonds, to be dissolved in spray before it reached a rock-bound pool that glimmered in lucent green through the brighter verdure of a grove of spreading cottonwoods and nodding fan-palms. A hundred-yard straggle of dewy grass, a fugitive gleam of water between brown rocks, and the desert, as parched as that we had been traversing all the week, resumed its sway.

The prime object of this trip was to look over some borax deposits in the vicinity, which done, there was still a few days left for hunting. The evening before we were planning to set out, there was a heavy cloud-burst high up on the mountain, which fact led our head packer to advise against visiting the lower water-holes. It was for this reason that I was unarmed when I set out alone to explore the great black crack—the source of our water supply.

At the outset my interest was stirred by the discovery of three sets of tracks in the moist sand near the foot of the falls, the largest of which, while like those of a sheep in form, in size seemed more like those of a cow. Up a well-defined path to the top of the falls wound the tracks, and then on up the smooth bottom into the murky blackness of the sinister hole, only an occasional grass-stain or hoof-scratch on the rock giving evidence that living creature had passed. Overhead the opposite walls of the chasm overlapped in places and occasional glimpses of the broken ribbon of the sky showed only patches of purple-black, studded here and there with sparkling little dots—the stars. The glare of the desert day had sunk to the subdued light of an old cathedral, and the roar of the stream, swelling constantly as I proceeded, seemed to have become a palpable substance rather than a mere sound. Soon I was conscious of the tingle of drifting spray on my face, and, rounding a turn, came upon a steep cascade which came tumbling down from a subterranean source somewhere deep in the bowels of the mountain. The great crack bent sharply to the left and ran on with its bottom as smooth and dry as the surface of the sun-baked rocks on the desert.

But where before both walls of the uncanny gorge were of black basalt, one—the left—was now formed of a lofty ledge of pure white, crystalline quartz, which, acting as a reflector for the few plummets of light that sounded to such a depth, made the sepulchral effect far less pronounced than in the lower chasm. Impelled almost against my will, I fared on up the weird gorge, constantly marvelling at the grotesque effects in light and shade wrought by its sharply contrasted walls. For perhaps a quarter of a mile it ran thus and then, in one of the strangest corners imaginable, bent again at a right angle and zigzagged along in its original direction up the mountain. I will describe this place as I saw it at my leisure some days later, the rapid sequence of events of the ten minutes immediately following my discovery of it having made it impossible for me to give much intelligent attention to detail at that particular time.

When the disturbances occurred which opened up the great crack in the lofty old mountain, the rift evidently ran down until it encountered the quartz vein, and then ran along and around the latter as a crack in a board runs around a knot hole. The subterranean waterflow was probably tapped at the same time. Just as the crack reached the gleaming quartz wall its bottom fell away abruptly for a hundred feet or more, forming, when there was a cloudburst immediately above, a waterfall whose stream was precipitated out against the ledge and into the pool below.

The impetuous stream from a cloudburst is usually composed of about equal parts of sand and water, and centuries of grinding at the elbow in question had gouged out a well of great depth at the foot of the fall, partly worn out of the diamond-hard quartz and partly scoured out of the volcanic rock of the mountain. Around the right side of this well, worn by aeons of use into the sloping rock, ran a narrow path along which one might, with care, pick his way to a broad shelf of flinty obsidian on the opposite side.

The wall behind the shelf was plainly the head of navigation for everything but birds, but urged on by curiosity I began to edge cautiously along the faint depression that led around the pit. It was ticklish work, and my eyes were too busy looking out for my feet, to wander far afield after details. Suddenly a snort like a bursting bomb ripped out in the half darkness ahead, and before I could retreat I was dealt a pile-driving blow across the thighs that sent me spinning down into the pool. My legs were almost paralyzed from the blow, various sections suffered as I ricochetted into the depths, while the broadside slap I got from the water would have been ample cause for complaint under ordinary circumstances; but all this was nothing to the fact that the whole surface of the pool was shortly alive wih hoofs and horns and woolly backs, and the air a quiver with bleatings, snortings and splashings, which, increased a hundredfold by the ringing echoes of the grewsome cavern, made a bedlam which completely beggars description.

It appears that I had stumbled upon my sheep at a moment when the strangeness of my surroundings had driven every thought of them from my mind. The shelf was a day rendezvous for the considerable flock under the suzerainty of the big ram, and in true mountain-sheep fashion they had stood motionless during my approach in the hope that I might overlook them and turn back. When they did start, it was with the rush of a theatre-fire crowd and the narrow passage was not sufficient to accommodate the crush. The giant leader himself had been responsible for my downfall, but the impact had also thrown his own dead-centre out of true and we had gone down together. For some little time afterwards he experienced the inconvenience of fifty pounds of horns on the top of a head that instinct undoubtedly told him it was vitally necessary to keep above water.

I have no idea how many of the flock got away without falling in, but the pool itself was like a free plunge for the poor on an August afternoon. There must have been a dozen in all—mostly ewes—and each was trying to keep up by climbing up over another. It was probably my imagination that led me to think at the time that the company showed favoritism in selecting my own much-abused body for a life-preserver, but it is certain that I had a very lively struggle of it for five minutes. At the end of that time—or it may have been only half or a quarter as long a period—an active young ewe found the way out at the lower end of the pool, to be followed almost immediately by the rest of the flock. I crawled out last and, limping painfully along in the rear, reached the lower chasm just in time to catch the echoes of the fusilades with which the appearance of the second detachment of sheep were greeted from the camp. Several sizable animals fell as a result of some very excellent shooting that was done on this occasion, but never again did any of the party get so much as another glimpse of what we all agreed was the largest mountain sheep we had ever seen or heard of.

A TRESPASS AND A TROUT.

Let the reader picture to himself a stream limpid as crystal, with a gravelly bed, a swift current, and many a twist and curve as it flows merrily through lush meadows, budding woods, rushy bottoms, and magnificently timbered park-lands, on its way to the sea. Or let him read Tennyson's beautiful poem, "The Brook," and unless he be utterly soulless he will see this little river flowing at his very feet.

Rising near the outskirts of a small Midland town, the river turns the ponderous wheels of no fewer than four old-time grist mills ere it has run two miles from its bubbling source among the chalk hills, while great quantities of deliciously crisp watercresses, both brown and green, are grown in its cool, clear depths and find a ready sale in the markets of Liverpool and Manchester. The tenants of the watercress beds pay a rental of £50 per acre to the riparian owners; but, as I have not the good fortune to own even one square inch of these valuable water rights, I do not propose to enter into the subject of watercress growing as an industry. Suffice it to say it is a highly profitable business.

It was while wandering or, rather, trespassing, along the banks of a lovely reach of this little river that I met with a benevolent-looking, white-haired old gentleman "whipping" the stream with a 9ft. split cane, a gossamer-like silk line, and a tiny midge of a March Brown tied upon the finest of fine drawn gut. Trout (many of them goodly fish) were rising freely, and so intent was the venerable angler on endeavouring to 'tice the speckled beauties that he did not appear to notice my presence until I had approached to within a few yards of him, when, with a good deal more courtesy than I really deserved, he asked if I was aware of the fact that I was trespassing upon a private fishery.

Seeing that several notice-boards bearing the superscription, "Private Water.—Trespassers will be Prosecuted," had confronted me at different points along the river, I could not but admit having knowingly committed an act of trespass, and somewhat lamely—albeit truthfully—excused myself on the ground that I had wandered from the King's highway in search of Nature notes from which to write a spring sketch. As luck had it, just as I was bringing my unwonted flow of oratory to a close, Piscator rose and hooked a trout, which, judging from its fighting powers, I guessed to be a good one. After a tough battle the fish allowed itself to be drawn close into the high bank, and, taking up the landing-net, which in the excitement of the moment the old gentleman had dropped, I had the capture—a fairly well conditioned brown trout of nearly 1½lb., weight—kicking on the grass in a "twinkling."

"My first trout this season," exclaimed the delighted angler as he deftly unhooked the fish and laid it amongst a growth of cool, yellow-blossomed marsh marigolds growing on the margin of the stream. "And," added he with a smile, "I have to thank you, sir, for your goodness in landing it so skilfully."

To curtail a long story, in the course of conversation I learned that Mr. B. rented a very charming cottage standing on the river-side, together with the sole fishing rights over some three-quarters of a mile of the water. This ideal little place forms his home during the summer months, and in late autumn he migrates with the swallows to sunnier climes.

"I find that a couple of hours with even a 6½oz. rod are just as much as I am able to manage comfortably, and, having already exceeded that limit, will you do me the pleasure of taking my rod while I relieve you of the landing-net?" suddenly remarked my new acquaintance as we sat on the bank smoking and chatting and watching the swallows hawking for insects over the surface of the stream.

It was not without a slight feeling of embarrassment that I took over the perfectly balanced split cane, for, apart from the fact of my being purely and simply a trespasser on the old gentleman's fishery, I am bound to confess that he threw a far better and prettier dry fly than myself, and I therefore felt a little shy at displaying my inferior skill. But he who hesitates is lost, and, taking the rod from its owner, I essayed a longish cast over a small bay in the further bank. The fly fell on the rippleless surface of the water with a splash of sufficient magnitude to have scared all the fish in the neighbourhood out of appetite for feathers, steel, and gut. With a kindly smile my companion encouraged me to do better things, nor did he so much as hint that the trout inhabiting the river C—were too well educated to accept such a clumsily cast lure. My second attempt was a decided improvement upon the first, and the fly dropped on the water in a very natural manner under an outspreading bough of a catkin-festooned alder. It was immediately taken, and the next moment I knew I was into a good fish. Up and down stream and across and across rushed the speckled beauty, now leaping out of the water and now "streaking" towards a cluster of dangerous-looking boulders, upon the jagged sides of which I momentarily expected to see him smash the fine-drawn point, "lock, stock, and barrel." For fully eight minutes (to me it seemed an hour) did that game trout battle for freedom, but, despite his mad rushes and leapings, he failed to make good his escape, and, gallant fish though he was, he could not cope for ever against split cane, steel, and tested gut. At length he lay gasping on the emerald turf at my feet, his lovely carmine spots vieing with the field-poppy in point of colour. Two pounds and one ounce did that game fish scale, and, notwithstanding the earliness of the season, a more beautifully coloured or more shapely Salmo fario it had never been my pleasure to kill.

The scintillating spears of the setting sun now began to gild the summits of a distant range of purple hills, and, probably not caring to encounter the chill evening air, my kindly host led me across a beautiful level stretch of lawn to his old-fashioned creeper-clad fishing lodge. "Well, my young friend," said he, as we sat smoking and sipping a cool and refreshing soda and whiskey in a small but cosily furnished smoking-room overlooking the river, "seeing that you have pleaded guilty to trespassing on my preserved water, I see no reason why you should not be penalised. However, I will allow you to go free this time, but" (shaking a warning finger at me) "when next you trespass on this little fishery, well, don't forget to bring a rod."—B. C. Conway, in Shooting Times.

RESULTS OBTAINED WITH ·360 COLLECTING GUN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—The following notes as to the capabilities of the ·360 shot gun will no doubt be of interest to naturalists and collectors, who use small bore shot guns for obtaining specimens. The ordinary walking-stick gun is of very inferior make, and has never the semblance of a choke. Consequently the powers of a ·360 which is carefully made and hard choked, will come as a revelation to those who are used to the ordinary Belgian-made article. The ·360 used for trial was one of two barrels bored by a friend on a foot lathe: both were full choked, but one, and that the one with the shortest barrel, proved decidedly the closest and hardest shooting gun of the two, and this was consequently chosen to carry out a series of exhaustive experiments with. The barrel is of steel, and nineteen inches in length. The best load was, after much trial, found to be 12½ grains of Curtis's and Harvey's No. 4 Black, or an equal bulk, i.e., about 6 grains full of Amberite or Schultze. The weight of shot to suit this is a little over one-fifth of an ounce. A felt and a card wad are placed between powder and shot, and a card over the shot. Schultze, which suits the gun particularly well, has to be carefully loaded with tight-fitting wads, and a good turn-over above the over-shot wad. If these precautions are not taken the combustion of the powder will be incomplete, and though the patterns may remain good, the penetration will be very weak. With black powder, no precautions as to turn-over are necessary; in fact the cases need not be turned over at all.

At ten yards the ·360 full choke makes a pattern only 5½ to 6 inches in diameter, so that anything shot at this extremely short range would be badly damaged. Fifteen and twenty yards are the useful ranges, and special pains were taken to ascertain the capabilities of the little gun at these distances. At fifteen yards, using No. 10 shot, the ·360 averages about 72 pellets out of the 128 in the total charge, on an eight inch circle.

With a load of 60 pellets of No. 6 shot, i.e., just over one-fifth of an ounce, 42 are placed on an average in a nine-inch circle at fifteen yards. With the same load of No. 6 shot, but the range being 20 yards, about 40 pellets are placed on an average in a fifteen-inch circle. At twenty yards the killing circle is only fifteen to eighteen inches in diameter, so that one has to hold pretty straight with these miniature guns.

The 360 was tested thoroughly with No. 6, 7, 8, and 10 shot, only chilled shot being used on account of the fulness of the choke: it performed consistently well with all four sizes. With the larger numbers it might be depended on for a rabbit or hare up to twenty-five yards; with No. 10 a bird would have to be very small and very lucky to escape at twenty yards. The ·360 cases stand reloading several times, before giving way, and as the charges are so minute the cost of cartridges, when made up at home, comes out very small. Card and felt wads for 300 cartridges work out to a little under two shillings, or about eight pence a hundred.

The above ·360 barrel has now been put inside a bamboo, so as to make a walking-stick gun. The action, which is home-made like the barrel, consists of a striker pin with a spiral spring wound round it, carried in a tube: this tube at the cartridge end has a female screw thread tapped in it, which fits a corresponding male thread cut on the outside of the breech end of the barrel itself. The tube at the end where it screws on the barrel is closed by a short metal cylinder having a small hole in its centre to let through the point of the striker pin. This action is of course slow, as it takes five complete revolutions of the action tube to screw it home to the barrel. On the other hand it is immensely strong, and very easy for an amateur to make for himself. Moreover, it could be easily converted into an interrupted screw, by slotting away alternate quarters of the male and female threads. A half cock notch is made on the striker pin, at such a point that the striker point is only just drawn back clear of the face of the false breech, consequently if allowed to strike the cap from the half cock, the pin does not hit with any force, and there is no danger of exploding the cap. The half cock serves to keep the firing pin clear of the cap when screwing up the breech. The rear end of the striker pin projects just enough from the handle of the bamboo stick to enable one to pull it back to full cock with the finger and thumb.

A ·410 barrel has been also made on similar principles, and it makes particularly fine even patterns: this latter gun is, however, not a full choke, and another ·410 very fully choked is to be made later, in order that the extreme capabilities of this calibre of shot gun may be also investigated. The ·410 is very much more powerful than the ·360, as it shoots three-eighths of an ounce of shot: in fact one of these guns if choked would be quite good enough for quail shooting, if held straight. The small killing circles of the ·360 choke are a clear indication of the difficulty of hitting fast flying birds with these very small bores; for collecting purposes where pot shots are the rule this feature is not objectionable.

Flossie, junior, is a little girl whose ideas of creation are yet crude, but she is very curious. "Is all of us made out of dust, mamma?" she asked, the other day. "Yes, Flossie." "Little babies, too?" "Yes." The kid was silent for a moment. "Mamma," she said, "heaven must be a dreffful dusty place."

During the recent Mississippi campaign Prohibition doctrines figured in the struggle, and seemed very important to a Methodist minister. "Brother Truly," said the minister, "I want to ask you a question. Do you ever take a drink of whiskey" "Befo' I answer that," responded the wary Brother Truly, "I want to know whether it is an inquiry or an invitation."

THE LANG DETACHABLE LOCK.

MESSRS. JOSEPH LANG & SON, of 102, New Bond Street, W., have just introduced a newly-invented form of detachable side lock which they are applying to all their guns. The innovation, although in itself of an extremely simple character, necessitates some slight alterations in the shape and dimensions of the limbs of the locks, in order that the plates shall remain of the ordinary size. At the rear extremity of each lock plate there is fitted a spring-actuated snap-catch. In order to provide room for it the sear spring proper and the spring of the safety sear are modified in shape, their functions and power being unaffected by the alteration. Internally the snap catch takes the form of a projecting tongue, with bevelled edge, impelled in an outward direction by the pressure of a coiled spring. Externally a curved-headed thumb lever is sunk flush in the metal of the plate. A short and narrow aperture, into which the thumb nail can be inserted, is provided, so that the lever can be readily raised. When opened it projects at a right angle to the face of the plate. By means of a ratchet inside, this raising of the lever draws the tongue of the snap bolt inwards and frees it from engagement with a metal recess sunk in the wood of the stock. In principle, the action is that of an ordinary door latch, opened by means of a handle, but closing automatically. This thumb lever fastening takes the place of the ordinary pin at the rear end of the lock. At the front, the lock is secured by bevelling of the plate and countersinking of the edge of the recess in the action body. There is also an engagement of projecting and recessed parts on the upper internal surface, to prevent any possible movement due to shrinking of the wood of the stock. As has been said, the whole arrangement is simple in the extreme, and its efficiency for the purpose in view seems to be unquestionable.

A further improvement is an arrangement whereby it has been made impossible to insert the locks with the cocking rods in the wrong position. If there is an objection to locks automatically detachable, it is that the operation of removing them, which used to be too difficult, may be made too easy. The little thumb levers, on the plates of the Lang gun under consideration, are a standing invitation to all and sundry to operate them and take the plates off. When this is done, if the position of the cocking rods or lifters could alter, there would always be a possibility that through ignorance or carelessness, the plates might be forced in and the catch snap home, with the lifters in the wrong position. Then, when an effort was made to open the gun, resistance would be encountered and something in the lock would probably break. This difficulty has been overcome by fitting a spring to the upper part of the lifter so that it retains its position when the locks are taken out and is always in the same place when they are put in again. It is all very skilfully worked out, and in the result, although the locks—with the cocking rods in the lower position to which the spring bears them,—should be uncocked, it makes no difference if they are put in cocked, for the upward movement of the rods when the barrels are dropped has, in that case, no effect.

In the illustration of the gun A represents the catch embedded in the lock plate and closed, while in that of the lock B shows it opened with the thumb, and the lock released. Messrs. Joseph Lang & Son are to be congratulated on the efficiency and ingenuity of this, their latest development in the mechanism of hammerless sporting guns. In addition a word of commendation must be said for the beautifully proportioned and balanced game gun, a very admirable specimen of the best grade of London work, to which the new device has been fitted, for submission to the Indian Field.

"Oriental" 125°—A good burning Oil, but not quite equal in colour to "Gold Mohur."

"Victoria" 125°—A low priced Oil, specially prepared for bazar and village consumption in the ordinary open native lamps.

CANDLES.

The well-known "VILLAGE" BRAND of Candles manufactured by the Company are prepared by a special hardening process which makes them more adapted for use in hot climates than any other qualities, because it obviates bending and guttering.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN.

SHOULD the belated summer, which at last made an appearance at Sandown on Saturday, have come to stay, sportsmen will have to train on Turkish baths to keep the bodily temparature in a comfortable plane. It may be that the weather represented the reason or that the National Breeders' Produce Stakes had more attractions than the Eclipse Stakes, but anyhow the muster was far and away a larger one in every department than on what should have proved the important occasion, and the welcome presence of His Majesty insured a thoroughly representative attendance in the members' enclosure. Better going could not have been desired, and except in the Coombe July Plate, fields panned out well. Results:—

LIVERPOOL.

On Wednesday last at Aintree there was a chilliness in the breeze, and it would have been more in keeping with the autumn months than midsummer. Before dawn some light showers fell, and these freshened up the race track appreciably. It was not the state of the going that could have been responsible for the shortage of runners, and, as the prizemoney offered during the three days totals upwards of £12,000, it might have been expected that the executive would have received more patronage at the hands of owners. The attendance did not reach average dimensions, and proceedings were somewhat of a quiet order. Results:—

Rain threatened all the time racing was in progress at Liverpool on Thursday, but the elements were kind and the threatened downpour did not occur. The proceedings which were of a highly interesting nature, were enjoyed by a bigger company than that which patronised the meeting on the opening day. Several heavy showers fell during the morning, these having a beneficial effect on the going, which according to the jockeys was in first-rate order. The outstanding feature of the day's sport was the riding of Higgs, who won successive races on Take Care, Carnea, and Faithful Don, though in each instance the verdicts were easily secured. Neither of his mounts started favourite. Higgs thus followed the good example set by Maher and Wootton during the earlier part of the week. Results:—

·375 RIMLESS MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,899 ft. lbs.,

With 200 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co, Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

COLONEL SIR DAVID BRUCE, C.B., F.R.S.,

writing from the Sleeping Sickness Commission in Uganda, says:—

"I found Bovril of great use on several occasions. It is excellent stuff.....I think it ought to take the place as a stimulant, in many cases, of the whiskies and sodas which are run to on every occasion of fatigue in tropical climates."

ATHLETICS.

IRELAND vs. SCOTLAND.—Close upon 4,500 spectators witnessed the competitions between these countries at the Royal Dublin Society's enclosure on Saturday the 17th instant.

Proceedings opened with the half-mile, which Scotland carried off, Burton winning without being unduly pressed. Scotland had a walk-over for the hammer, for, although Denis Horgan was present, he did not elect to make an effort on behalf of Ireland.

It was fortunate for Ireland that Kerr was eligible to represent the country of his birth, for Roche, owing to illness of a relative, did not turn out. His assistance proved most valuable, for otherwise Scotland would have carried off the honours in the "sprint" and the furlong. In the latter event Kerr put up new figures for Ireland, the 22-4/5secs. standing to the credit of A. Vigne and N. D. Morgan giving way to his 22-1/5secs.

In the mile Morphy and McGough shared a capital finish, the Irishman just winning. Captain Kinahan won the hurdles for Ireland; and another Irishman in O'Neill ran away with the four miles. Scotland, through the instrumentality of Dickson, secured the 440 yards; and when Ireland, by the aid of Ahearne, captured the long jump, the Emerald Isle gained the day by 8 events to 3.

Half-mile.—R. Burton, Scotland, 1; G. N. Morphy, Ireland, 2; I. F. Fairbairn-Crawford, Ireland, 3; A. Turnbull, Scotland, 0. Crawford led at the back straight, but succumbed to Burton's challenge, the Scotsman winning by 2 yards; same. Quarter-mile, 62-1/5secs.; full time, 2mins. 0-4/5sec.

Throwing 16lb. Hammer.—T. R. Nicolson, Scotland, 160ft. 2in., 1; D. Rose, Scotland, 136ft. 5in., 2.

High Jump.—T. J. Ahearne, Ireland, 5ft. 8¾in., 1; G. H. Wilson, Scotland, 5ft. 4½in., 2; C. H. Caulfield, Ireland, 5ft. 2½in., 3.

100 Yards.—D. Kerr, Ireland, 1; R. C. Duncan, Scotland, 2; W. Murray, Ireland, 3; I. D. Dickson, Scotland, 0. Duncan led for sixty yards, when Kerr went to the front and won by 1½ yards; a foot. Time—10-1/5secs.

220 Yards.—R. Kerr, Ireland, 1; R. C. Duncan, Scotland, 2; I. D. Dickson, Scotland, 3; W. Murray, 0. Kerr led from the start, and won easily by 8 yards; a yard. Murray was struck into a hundred yards from the start, and fell. Time—22-1/5secs. (Irish record).

One Mile.—G. N. Morphy, Ireland, 1; J. McGough, Scotland, 2. Also ran:—H. T. Jamieson, Scotland, and I. F. Fairbairn-Crawford, Ireland. Crawford was beaten at three-quarters of a mile, and Morphy then moved into second place. He joined issue with McGough a hundred yards from home, and got the better of a rousing finish by a yard. Time—4mins. 33-3/5secs.

Putting 16lb. Shot.—D. Horgan, Ireland, 44ft. 6½in., 1; J. Barrett, Ireland, 43ft. 11in., 2; T. R. Nicolson, Scotland, 41ft. 4½in., 3.

120 Yards Hurdle.—C. E. Kinahan, Ireland, 1; A. Halligan, Scotland, 2; T. J. Ahearne, Ireland, 3. Also competed:—E. Mackenzie (Scotland). Kinahan led from the second obstacle, and hurdling beautifully, won without being pressed by 4 yards; half a yard. Time—16-4/5secs.

Four Miles.—Lce.-Sergt. O'Neill, Ireland, 1; J. Murphy, Ireland, 2; J. D. Hughes, Scotland, 3. Also ran:—A. McPhee, Scotland; T. Jack, Scotland; F. J. Buckley, Ireland. Buckley set a strong pace, and led for nearly two miles, when he was beaten and dropped out, McPhee, shortly afterwards, following his example. O'Neill then drew to the front, and, forging right away from Murphy, won in very hollow fashion by 250 yards; 350 yards. Jack retired a mile from home. Intermediate times:—1 mile, 4mins. 44secs. (Buckley); 2 miles, 9mins. 46-3/5secs. O'Neill); 3 miles 15mins. 9-1/5secs. (O'Neill); 4 miles, 20mins. 12-4/5secs.

Quarter-mile.—I. D. Dickson, Scotland, 1; G. W. Young, Scotland, 2; G. N. Morphy, Ireland, 3. Young shot away, but was overhauled after a hundred yards by Dickson, who eventually won by 3 yards; a yard. Time—51-3/5secs.

Long Jump.—T. J. Ahearne, Ireland, 22ft. 10in., 1; G. Stephen, Scotland, 21ft. 9½in., 2. Also competed:—J. L. Reed, Scotland; and W. F. Watt, Ireland.

AQUATICS.

AMATEUR PUNTING CHAMPION.—The amateur punting championship was decided on the 20th instant at the annual regatta of the Thames Punting Club at Shepperton. The weather was fine and there was a good attendance. There were three entries for the championship, for which the holder, A. Gordon Dickson, did not start. In the first heat J. H. Secker beat A. Bennett by a third of a length in 6mins. 15secs. In the final Secker was opposed by F. C. Covell. The latter made a fine race to the turn, but he then steered badly and was finally beaten by a length and a half in 6mins. 8secs. This was Secker's fifth championship win in the last six years.

In the championship doubles F. C. Covell and H. A. Graves beat J. H. Secker and A. Bennett easily in 4mins. 20secs.

SWIMMING.

THE LONG DISTANCE CHAMPIONSHIP.—The thirty-third annual race for the long-distance amateur swimming championship was won in the Thames on Saturday the 17th instant from Kew to Putney by H. Taylor, of Chadderton. Last year's winner, F. W. Springfield, of Brisbane, was not a competitor; and P. Radmilovic, the champion of 1907, was beaten into second place.

Out of an entry of forty-three all but five started, and thirty-two finished, with the following result: Henry Taylor (Chadderton), time—1 hr. 5mins. 34secs., 1; P. Radmilovic (Weston-super-Mare), 1 hr. 7mins. 8secs., 2; F. A. Unwin (Sheffield Otter), 1 hr. 8mins. 49secs., 3. The following gained standard certificates: G. A. Pedler (West Ham), 1 hr. 11mins. 57secs., 4; G. H. Savage (Cygnus), 1 hr. 12mins. 24secs., 5; George F. Rice (Shepherd's Bush), 1 hr. 12mins. 44secs., 6; R. Sullivan (Weybridge), 1 hr. 12mins. 48secs., 7; W. J. Hawes (Hornsey), 1 hr. 12mins. 53secs., 8; A. F. White, 1 hr. 13mins. 34secs., 9; H. G. Stokes (Dorking), 1 hr. 13mins. 53secs., 10; E. W. Knight (H. Division Metropolitan Police), 1 hr. 14mins., 11; Reg. Sheldrick (Kingston Cygnet), 1 hr. 14mins. 55secs., 12; A. W. E. Matthews (West Central Postal), 1 hr. 15mins. 26secs., 13; R. F. B. Cross (Hornsey), 1 hr. 15mins. 29secs., 14; Arthur Rouse (St. Andrew's Home), 1 hr. 15mins. 31secs., 15.

The water was very cold for the time of year, and several of those who did finish suffered from cramp in the closing stages.

POLO.

COUNTY POLO CUP.—There must indeed, have been something seriously wrong with the London polo season, now fast nearing its close, when it was necessary for the inter-'varsity match and the final of the County Cup Tournament to be played away from Hurlingham.

What has been Hurlingham's loss, owing to days of rain and consequent drenched turf, has been Wembley's gain. The club, managed by Mr. Gordon Withers, which has its headquarters at Wembley Park, has also had to put up with the bad weather conditions; but for some inexplicable reason it has been possible to play at Wembley while the London managers have kept closed their grounds.

After bringing off the 'varsities' match the County Cup final was decided at Wembley on Saturday the 17th instant, with the result that Kingsbury beat Salisbury Plain by 6 goals to 3. The Kingsbury Club have their ground close to Wembley, and it is sufficiently outside the metropolitan area to come into the embrace of the County Polo Association. The winning players included the two brothers Julian and Walter Winans, sons of the well-known exhibitor of harness and trotting horses, Mr. Walter Winans: Mr. Harry Rich who played at No. 1 for England against America in the second Test match, was in the team, and the fourth man was Mr. Gordon Withers, one of the finest and hardest hitters in English polo. He scored most of the goals for the winners.

The Salisbury Plain team were all subalterns, Mr. A. V. Stokes and Mr. W. Neilson, who are in the 4th Hussars (Mr. Winston Churchill's old regiment), and Mr. N. Edwards and Mr. R. Brocklebank, of the 9th Lancers. During the match Mr. Gordon Withers was brought down rather heavily. He sprained his thumb, but pluckily continued, and proceeded to score three goals.

Hunting.

THE POONA HUNT.

THOUGH a kill was actually effected, the hunt of the 25th can only be described as disappointing. About 50 met the Master at Bhosri on the Nasik Road at a point where the 8th mile stone stands. It was not long before a quarry was put up, but a long check followed almost immediately and they only got on the line again to lose him without any real run. Hounds finding another, were after him at a fair pace, but just when one was beginning to enjoy it they pulled him down. The morning was such that one might reasonably expect good sport, but the mysteries of scent were once more evinced.

Owing to the 26th Cavalry Race Meeting at Kirkee, there was no hunting on Tuesday and on Thursday the field had to wait about for a find in pouring rain. It was a monotonous business under such conditions, and many did not wait for the run that was subsequently obtained.

The Bye Day Meet was on the Bombay road, and here again many went away before the final run. It was disappointing to have the first jack killed in the wood without a run at all, and the second had just got into the open when he found a convenient drain.

A mere handful remained when the nullah outside the garden was drawn. This provided a fairly stiff-necked customer who made away over splendid going across the Nasik road. Hounds drove him back again and after a seven-mile run he was pulled down in a cactus hedge near Pimpri.

Being one of the few that hung on and kept up throughout, Mrs. Beaty was presented with the brush, Mr. H. S. Symons with the mask, whereas the two whips took a pad each. Owing to his horse casting a shoe, the Master was unluckily not up at the death.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Thursday, 29th July.—Briar Shola 8 A.M. It was 8-30 before a move was made, the mist was so thick all over the country. As soon as it lifted hounds were thrown into Briar but without result. Outside Bacon Wood hounds picked up a line and carried it through the lower end into Bungalow Shola, where they were at fault. The Master cast them round the hill and they recovered the line again below Chemund. Running up through the covert and over the hill they fairly raced through Road Shola and on past the Toda Coffee Shop; ran the road for nearly a mile then headed for Lord Roberts' Shola; short of this they swung to the right over the stream and up the steep hill to the east of Lord Roberts' Shola and lost their jack in the large shola adjoining the Glenmorgan Tea Estate. There were several jack on the move about here; one was marked to ground by a couple of hounds in Lord Roberts': he was killed in the earth and was afterwards broken up by the pack. He was a fine big jack and very tough. Drew back towards Coffee Shop, a jack was found in this covert, and although he was twice viewed crossing an open space he mysteriously disappeared. Then ensued a long draw over Khed through Wenlock and Wapshare's Hare and along by Preston's crossing to the Sandy Nullah Toll Bar without finding again: it was one o'clock when hounds returned to kennels.

Saturday, 31st July.—The kennels 8 A.M. (Puppy Show at 9 A.M.) The weather was decidedly unkind, a cold wet cheerless morning greeted us as we wended our way to the kennels, a damp mist lay all over the downs in spite of a roaring gale of wind. However, a cheerful and interested company were present at the Puppy Show and afterwards were entertained by the Master and his staff in a large comfortable tent where a hot breakfast was served. After breakfast His Excellency, the President of the Hunt, presented the handsome Cups. The local bred puppies were the first to be judged by Lieutenant-Colonel E. R. C. Butler, S.V.O. A Silver Cup presented by His Excellency the President of the Hunt, for the Walker of the best Puppy, dog or bitch bred at Ootacamund, was awarded to Pilot walked by Major L. N. Younghusband. This puppy also took the third prize, presented by the Whippers-in of the O. H. for the third best puppy bred at Ootacamund of either sex. A Silver Cup presented by the Master, for the Walker of the best Puppy, bred at Ootacamund, of the opposite sex to that awarded the President's Cup was secured by Miss Cecilia Lawley, for Ransom, Miss Lawley getting second prize for Ringlet. Turpin Trumpeter, one of the imported, was awarded a first prize. He is from the Bicester and Warden Hill Hunt. The local bred puppies were a far fine looking lot than the imported ones. It is a great loss to the Hunt that there are no puppies this year, but Fanciful has just presented the Master with a fine even looking litter of three couples; they are about six weeks old and are to be walked at Government House. His Excellency then proposed the health of Major Younghusband and others who had walked puppies and was most amusing when referring to the Misses Lawley.

THE PUPPY SHOW.

The judges' remarks.—Country-breds, a good lot, doing the hunt great credit—the dogs on the small side, with one exception (Pleader) but all well balanced quality hounds on the best of legs and feet.

Placings—Dogs—

(1) Pilot, full of quality, excellent body and feet.
(2) Prodigal, also a quality hound, with perhaps not quite so much character.
(3) Pleader, the best grown and timbered puppy of the lot but down in the stern and did not give a good show.

Bitches—

(1) Ransom } Both smart bitches, very little separating
(2) Ringlet } them, and standing like all the C. B.'s on excellent legs and feet.

CHAMPIONS.

(1) Pilot.
(2) Ransom.

DRAFT FROM THE BICESTER.

They compared very unfavourably with the country-bred puppies. Some, notably Saffron, the pick of the lot, were weak in the back and with perhaps two or three exceptions they were not up to the Ooty standard. Turpin was considered the best of a poor draft.

Mr. Penn and Mr. Burke were present with their cameras and the usual photographs were taken near the 18th hole on the Golf Course in a thick drizzling rain; we then moved off across the Municipal Stream to Mill's Covert which was drawn black. Hounds feathered on a line on the west side of Bagman, but the wind was blowing with such terrific force they could barely own to the line, and threw up near the stream. To the right of Bluegums a jack had been on the move; hounds touched his line and worked it patiently and well to the Sandy Nullah Stream and up Schmidt's Bog; warming to it here they started running in earnest and the pace increased; throwing their tongues merrily they swung up through Stoke's Shola and past the tin hut on Herbert Plantation, bent to the left over the Saddle and swept down Back Staircase at a great pace to the road; turning sharp to the left along it put their jack to ground on the edge of a small covert just below the road where we left him, as the entrance to the earth was so small that even Kitty would have found it difficult to get into. A long draw followed down the Yemakal Valley over One Tree Hill and past Irwin Clumps, then back over the stream to Chemund when a jack was afoot at once. After he had dodged round the covert several times and we were getting fairly sick of it, he at last broke covert and went away over the hill into Dormer. Through this hounds drove him on to Rock Hill; he tried Rock Shola but hounds were close at him and he dared not dwell in it. The hunt went on over the next hill; the jack then set his mask for the Pykara River. Plunging in about five hundred yards above the bridge he made the far bank and rose the big hill behind the bungalow, with hounds in full cry not far behind him. He dipped down the other side to the Gudalur Road, then turned to the left along the hills towards the river again and tried to shake off his pursuers in a small wooded ravine, but it was no go. They stuck to him gamely and forced him out into the open again. He ran on another mile, then slipped into a hole in a watercourse a few hundred yards from the river nearly opposite the junction of the Yemakal Stream with the Pykara River. With the united efforts of Kitty and Cyclops he was unearthed and hounds got their well-deserved blood. It was a grand chivey of an hour and a quarter. I believe it is the first time on record that a jack has been killed on that side of the river. Those of the fortunate few who were with hounds were the Master, Major Duff, Miss Lawley, Mr. Cox, and Miss Morgan.

Monday, 2nd August.—Lake End 8 A.M. A pleasant morning, cloudy and fresh. Hounds touched a line near Long Swamp and presently a jack was viewed making for Jackal Shola. He was pushed through this covert into Rallywood. Turning down to the right he ran up into the Potato Field, then to the left through the top of Rallywood over the Krurmund Road. Leaving Sheffield on his right he bent to the left into Monkey and then crossed over to Baikie, turning to the left again through Dudley, then to the right along the Fire Path past Druid and sank the hill to the bottom of Denmark. The pack divided in the ravine—there must have been at least two brace of fresh jack afoot, and it was some time before the pack was got together again. To the right of Jackal an outlying jack was found. Hounds dashed off at a tremendous pace along the western slopes of Bagman, then to the right down past Mill's Covert and Elmhurst Corner, crossed the Pykara Road on to the Golf Course near the 12th Tee where some coolies were at work on the course headed the jack and hounds were at fault. They cast themselves round but were unable to recover the line. The Master came to their assistance and held them forward towards the kennels. They touched the line again quite close to the kennels but scent had practically died out and they could make nothing of it. The Master took hounds over to the Blackmore Vale and drew up to Brick Kiln Crossing. On the other side of the bog no less than four jack were viewed all in a bunch. On catching sight of hounds they made off into Jackal. Hounds got on to the line of one which went away over One Tree Hill into Baikie. They pushed him through over the hill into Dendron Belt; in this covert a fresh jack joined the hunted one

.405 Caliber, Big Bore High Power Rifles.

It's safer, when you are going after big game, to use a rifle whose power to kill you can always depend on. The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful made, a statement borne out by the following comparison: The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot by the .405 is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for many years was considered the most powerful rifle for big game hunting. The .405 is designed to use the Winchester .405 caliber cartridge, whose high velocity and 300-grain mushrooming bullet makes it particularly effective against all kinds of big game. Winchester rifles, with Winchester cartridges, each made for the other, are invaluable to all successful hunters.

THE SECUNDERABAD NOVICES TOURNAMENT.

33RD CAVALRY vs. ROYAL FUSILIERS.—This was one of the matches in the second ties which had been postponed on account of the weather and was not decided till the 2nd instant. The Cavalry had an easy win. They scored a goal in the first chukker, and two in the second, one in the third and two in the last and thus won by 6 goals to nil. The Fusiliers were handicapped by being without one of their best players, Sir Basyl Brooke, who was prevented by indisposition from taking part. Teams :—

SECUNDERABAD GYMKHANA vs. 13TH HUSSARS "A." TEAM.—Played on the 2nd instant, a very level game ending in a win for the Hussars by the odd goal in 5. The Gymkhana drew first blood in the opening period and the Hussars replied through Mr. Hinde in the second chukker. The third chukker was very level Captain Eve putting the Hussars ahead. On opening the fourth period an extraordinary incident occurred. The teams commenced to play the wrong way and become engaged in a fast and furious struggle, and it was not till some two minutes had passed that Mr. Hinde suddenly realised the mistake that had occurred and taking advantage of the situation sent the ball through what the spectators, and at least the Register keeper, thought was his own goal, and accordingly a goal was registered to the Gymkhana The teams re-started as if the goal was given to the Hussars, and ere long Mr. Howell, who had considerably improved in his play, placed another straight hit through the posts. The board then displayed Gymkhana 3, Hussars 2, but on the Umpires coming in at the end of the game, they intimated that the goal hit by Mr. Hinde was to the credit of the Hussars, as no matter whether the rest of the field were mistaken as to the proper direction they should be playing in, Mr. Hinde was certainly in order. The Hussars thus won a well contested game by 3 goals to 2. Teams :—

SEMI-FINALS.

29TH LANCERS vs. ROYAL ARTILLERY.—These teams met on the 4th instant, the Gunners putting up a good game against their more experienced opponents. The Lancers attacked vigorously in the first chukker and scored 2 goals, and they opened the second period with another point. Then the Artillery got going, Mr. Trench opened the scoring and a second goal was scored from a free hit for a dangerous foul against the 29th. The third was a fast period much in favour of the Gunners but they were unable to score, the score remaining the same. Stopford was prominent at the start of the last chukker but the ball was brought to midfield where Jackson got possession and scored a fourth goal for the 29th, who thus won by 4 goals to 2. 33RD CAVALRY vs. 13TH HUSSARS "A."—Also played on the 4th instant, the Cavalry once again asserting their superiority and winning by 5 goals to nil. They were the first to settle down and Colonel Edwardes put the ball through. Continuing to attack in the second period they scored 2 more goals through Mr. Beattie and might have scored more had not Mr. Hinde been playing in good form. The third chukker saw the ball travelling from end to end but though the 33rd had the best of the play there was no score. They made great efforts but the ball was forced back to their territory where Mr. Collins put it through, Mr. Beattie adding another goal shortly after. The remaining play was all in favour of the 33rd but there were no further additions to the score. Teams :—

FINAL.

33RD CAVALRY vs. 29TH LANCERS.—These teams met in the final last Saturday in the presence of a large attendance which included the Honourable the Resident and Mrs. O'Dwyer. The officers of the 2nd Cheshire Regiment were "at home" to their friends. The game was exciting from start to finish, the 33rd eventually winning by 5 goals to 2. They opened their scoring in the first period, Colonel Edwardes drawing first blood and Mr. Beattie adding another goal. The 29th just missed a goal At the start of the second period and in the remaining play each team registered a point. In the third chukker the 33rd got away and hit a fourth goal and after a spell of play in midfield Colonel Edwardes ran down and scored a fifth. Off-side against the Cavalry in the fourth chukker enabled the 29th to score their second goal but all further attempts were frustrated and they retired beaten as stated. Teams as before.

Referees :—Major England and Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor.

MACKINTOSH (to his Elder, who has advised him to try and check his strong language at Golf by picking up pebbles, one for every bad word, and bringing them to the Elder on Sunday after kirk). "Here, man, is a handfu' for 'Bothers' and here, Man, is anither for "Hangs.'"

Elder: Well, that's no verra dreadfu', I'm thinking."

Mackintosh: "Ay, but bide a wee, there's a cart coming up the hill wi' the 'Damns!'"

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN SYSTEMS OF TRAINING.

NOT for the first time, the intense competitive spirit of American sport has been severely condemned just lately. President Slocum, of Colorado College, U.S.A., bitterly complains that his countrymen err badly in excess of enthusiasm; or, put another way, that they follow too well pursuits which to be pleasurable should be a pleasure, and not a business. He boldly insists that American sport has become altogether selfish in its tendencies. And (as a sportsman) he warns his countrymen that this implies the beginning of much evil. As a corrective he recommends the example of our own Universities, Public Schools, and leading organisations, in cultivating sport for its own sake. At the present moment, when all British athletes are feeling their pulses and wondering whether the diagnosis that they are suffering from general break-up can be correct, such outside testimony to the value of our British methods is truly refreshing. And how far is President Slocum justified in his remarks? There is no doubt that most American sports have "growed out of knowledge" within the last few years; a matter of general congratulation, by the way. Has not sport in this country also grown with England's growth during its acknowledged term of existence, extending back well over a thousand years? In the distinction of President Slocum, however, has such growth been allied to a real sporting advance? In other words, has it brought in its train the best results? One fears not. And the learned President is right in attributing this to an ever-increasing tendency to pursue sport as an end in itself, rather than a means to an end. In making excellence in the achievement the primary object of sport it is robbed of half its value. Let me briefly show in what ways.

NUMBER OF ACTIVE COMPETITORS REDUCED.

In America (as in England) money spent on sport is greatly in excess of the amount spent upon the same number of men a few years ago. Training accounts nowadays from America read like a page out of Plato's "Republic." The leading athletes are nursed at the public expense in a sort of hydropathic establishment "standing in its own grounds, where trainers and all the latest luxuries and appliances are in readiness. The inmate, under penalty of expulsion, must conform to all its rules and regulations; in fact, harbour no thought at all but how best to harden nerve and muscle. He is a human machine, so to speak, and I daresay the end in view is oftener than not attained. But is the worth of the end attained? Again, one fears not. The object of all this, mainly, is to merely vanquish some rival club, to win a championship, or to beat the record; all estimable aspirations so far. A characteristic trait of human nature is to excel, of course. But it also means the reduction of competitors in every department of sport until, alas! the actual practice is left largely in the hands of a class of experts. And, in turn, this minimises the encouragement which ought to be given to sport generally in the way of counteracting the enervating tendency of the times. It is poor sort of news to hear that barely ten per cent. of those who are members of American sporting organisations take an active part in the sports fostered by their respective clubs.

NO INCENTIVE TO NON-ATHLETIC CLASS.

So long as accomplishing a feat, winning a prize, or breaking a record are the main objects of American systematic physical training, a man who lacks the requisite qualifications of a "specialist" is likely to despair at the outset. Ask the majority of the non-athletic class why they do not take an active interest in running, rowing, etc., and you will be told the standard is too high for them. They are content to admire the exploits of their more talented companions. So strong is this desire to pose as a champion, moreover, that it entails many a bad moment on those at the top of the tree. Once debarred from the required amount of practice, or beaten by better men, and nine out of ten of them withdraw altogether from active fray. "No chance for a prize" is considered a laudable excuse for the general neglect of sport both in America and England one fears, and, judging from President Slocum, pre-eminently so in the States. The sooner sportsmen in both countries realise that the real value of athletics is in the preparatory training, not in the contest or the prize, the better. A wider application of the system of English handicaps, too, would, I think, create more general competition in those sports to which they can be applied.

UNDUE PROMINENCE IN SPORT.

The American methods decried by President Slocum imply training in and out of season. A six months' preparation is thought nothing of in the States; in fact, any athlete, to stand above mediocrity in his chosen sport, has to be in harness the greater portion of the year. So severe a tax is this upon the time and energies of those engaged in other occupations that it is quite impossible for them to attend to business, with the inevitable result. Nor is that the worst feature in this connection, seemingly. A wrong sort of hero-worship is engendered, it appears, while leading sportsmen are in danger of being puffed up by undue adulation—but enough. Many of these evils are more or less in existence in our own country. In very large measure President Slocum's warning applies to British as well as American sport, and the converse obtains. That is to say, English sportsman cannot yet be accused of making their favourite pastime too important in its details. The personal equation is not so pronounced in this country, for one thing. Men of exceptional ability in varied sport are frequently in evidence, of course, but they are not made nearly so much of. Nor are so-called "specialists" so many in number. An American athlete, for instance, will specialise for one particular event and stick to it. An Englishman will risk a well-earned reputation as an expert in one sport by dawdling with another, to manifest disadvantage. Excellence in one thing often pre-supposes excellence in another, I am aware; yet nobody knows better than the specialist in athletics how weak he is outside of his favourite sport. Judged by results alone, the American's policy is the wiser, but then, that is President Slocum's very point. His contention that Americans make sport far too much of a business holds good, I think, when compared with our own methods.

THE RIVAL METHODS COMPARED.

There is an old saying that whatever you do you should do well, which—like many other old sayings—is very untrue, and very dangerous in its lack of truth. But nowhere is it more untrue than in reference to our amusements. To play billiards is the amusement of a gentleman, to wit, but to play them pre-eminently well is the life's work of a man who, in learning to do so, must have devoted his whole energies to the task. Chess, perhaps, is of all recreations the one most adapted for intellectual persons, but to be pre-eminent at chess is generally to be that and nothing else. And the same thing may be said with more or less justice of all games. The American devotes months of toil, self-denial, and almost grim devotion to his preparation for competition, and gets to work daily as if his very life depended upon the issue. No relaxation is allowed. In good and bad weather alike the full rigour of the game is insisted upon by his trainer, and loyally observed. The Englishman never practises unless "he feels like it"—which, professionals tell us, is a very real factor in physical training. And he always adjusts his work so that he will be able to "get some fun out of it." No slavish sort of routine is followed in his case. The usual prelude to hard work on the track is an hour's fooling, and yet there is a good deal of method even in this alleged madness. As regards the jolly training walks indulged in by Englishmen, the average American athlete would as soon think of flying. All this means that Americans look upon their sport as a strict matter of business, and Englishmen as a pleasure. I cannot quite agree that victory is the sole aim and object of American sportsmen and the pleasure of competition that of Englishmen. The statement is highly coloured both ways. On the whole, however, President Slocum's appeal for a greater love of sport for sport's sake in the States seems justified.

ANOTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE.

Unconsciously, perhaps, a current American writer joins in the argument by upholding existing methods in his country. What is more, he insists that—in the face of our many international reverses of late—we shall soon have to meet the specialisation of foreign competition by similar specialisation, and perhaps so. I trust the day will be far distant, however, as it would rob sport of half its joy, its independence, its relaxation. And the further questions would arise: Is it worth while? Must sport be taken more seriously? Happily, both problems are yet a great way off. And, personally, I do not feel in a despairing mind after our recent reverses. Such defeats have a perpetual tendency to correct themselves. The improvement in our foreign friends' skill is no proof whatever of our own decline. We must distinguish—As Mr. Gladstone used to say. We shall win at cricket, polo, and the rest of it, and win often. But even if we were never able to win again, the proof would be absent that we had declined in skill or energy. The only clear thing would be that foreigners had vastly improved. The fearful pleasure of writing "Ichabod" is generally indulged in too soon by pessimists, and the present case is no exception to the rule.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

United Services vs. Rangers.—Played on Saturday last, the Rangers being beaten after a hard struggle by a try to nil. Hoff got over for the Services shortly before time was called.

Calcutta vs. East Yorks.—Those who assembled on the Calcutta ground last Saturday expecting to see a close game between the above teams were disappointed, for the home XV quite outclassed the Fyzabad team and won by 35 points to nil. Turnbull opened the scoring, crossing their line in the corner, the attempt to convert failed, but Siddons gained the second try a few minutes later and Burnett kicked a goal. Turnbull and Arthur got over with tries before the interval, Burnett adding the major points to Arthur's score. On changing ends Calcutta swept all opposition before them and scored five times. Ward placed a goal from a penalty kick, Arthur and Turnbull got over with tries which were not improved upon, and Ward and Siddons also crossed the military line, Burnett majorising on both occasions. Calcutta thus won by 4 goals, 1 penalty goal and 4 tries (35 points) to nil. Teams:—

C. F. C.—G. R. Strachan, back; G. Turnbull, J. R. Kay, H. Siddons, and K. A. M. Burnett, three-quarters; C. G. Arthur and J. Ward, halves; F. S. Kerr, T. Elderton, C. C. Miller, J. D. Malcolm, W. Bryce, E. Studd, A. B. Morrison, and B. G. Westrup, forwards.

East Yorks.—Pte. Card, back; Mason, Lieutenant Crawford, Cressy and Blazier, three-quarters; Rhodes and Gibson, halves; Kelly, Featherend, Affleck, Cooper, Tose, Bladen, Underwood, and Miller, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. C. Reid (C.F.C.)

Customs vs. Dalhousie.—This match was played on the Customs ground on Saturday, the visitors winning by a try to nil. It was a scrambling game confined mainly to the forwards. The Dals scored in the first half through McLeod, but the Customs certainly had the bigger share of the game throughout and were unlucky not to equalise. Teams:—

Dalhousie.—Berry, back; Prike, Griffin-Shave, McGee and Smith, three-quarters; Bates and Eccles, halves; Bevill, McLeod, Wilson, Williams, Shirres, Grahamslaw, Callicut and Waddell forwards.

Customs.—L. Smith, back; Jackson, Cunliffe, Maitland and Shave, three-quarters; Rowe and Dempster, halves; Featherstone, Pelly, Cadell, Abraham, Thomson, Fredericks and Macdonald, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. Martelli (C. F. C.)

Calcutta vs. Dalhousie.—Played on Tuesday on the Calcutta ground a one-sided game ending in an easy victory of the home team who were not at full strength. Dalhousie were handicapped by losing Griffin Shave owing to an injury shortly after the start, but they were outplayed at every point. Meldrum got over with the first try for Calcutta but the place failed: Burnett obtained the second and added the extra points himself: Reid Kay crossed the line with third which was not improved upon: and two further tries were registered by Ward and Meldrum, Burnett being successful with the kick on both occasions. Calcutta crossed over leading by 21 points to nil. In the second half the home team scored five tries and Meldrum dropped a a goal. Reid Kay got over three times, Burnett converting two of these, and Ward and Westrup obtained the other tries which were not improved upon. Calcutta thus won by 5 goals, 1 drop goal and five tries (44 points) to nil. Teams:—

C. F. C.—L. C. Parton, back; Meldrum G. Turnbull, J. R. Kay and A. M. Burnett, three-quarters; C. G. Arthur, and J. Ward, halves; T. Elderton, A. C. Earp, B. G. Westrup, C. C. Miller, W. Bryce, A. B. Morrison, N. Simpson, and A. S. Hober forwards.

Dalhousie.—Berry, back; Prike, Griffin-Shave, McGee and Allen, three-quarters; Bates and Eccles, halves; Bevil, McLeod, Wilson, Smith, Grahamshlaw, Callicatt, Sherrys and Sinclair, forwards.

United Services vs. East Yorks.—Played on Tuesday ending in a pointless draw. After a rush by the East Yorks at the start the game settled down in favour of the Services who pressed throughout the initial half but could not score. On changing ends the Yorks attacked and the Services were kept busy defending till the closing stages when they again made efforts to score but without success.

Customs vs. Rangers.—These teams met on Tuesday, a fairly interesting game ending in favour of the Customs. The first half was very level and there was no score but on changing ends the Customs had the best of the play and scored 12 points. Johnstone got over with two tries, the second of which was converted and Maitland dropped a goal. The Rangers were unable to score. Teams:—

Customs.—Boileau backs; Smith, Maitland, Johnstone and Williamson, three-quarters Shave and Rowe, halves; Cadell, Fredericks, Petty, Marsden, Macdonald, Thomson, Featherstone and Carlton forwards.

Rangers.—Margrett, backs; Cody, Davis, Wheelock and Rosetti, three-quarters Fairley and William, halves; White, Nicol, Minet, Allen, Macdonald, Bennett, Gilmour and McCullagh, forwards.

CALCUTTA JUNIOR RUGBY LEAGUE.

Calcutta B. vs. King's Shropshire L. I.—This match was played on the Caledonian ground on Saturday last, the Dum Dum team winning by 5 points to 3. The military rushed down as soon as the ball was kicked off and McInnes got over with a try which Statham converted. Calcutta then settled down and had the best of the remaining play, but it was not till shortly before time that they scored. Schaumberg got over with a try but Whiteley failed to add to extra points. Teams :—

C. F. C. (8)—L. C. Parten, back; R. Meldrum, S. A. Roberts, J. Schaumberg, and F. N. Whiteley, three-quarters; N. C. Wilson and H G. Pearce, halves; A. C. Earp, G. McDougal, G. F. Clayden, T. Richmond, W. Cowden, R. G. Dick, J. Collins, and W. T. C. Huffam, forwards.

K. S. L. INFANTRY.—Wheeler, back; E. Lucas, Statham, Lieutenant Fort and Riley, three-quarters; Hockenhall and Gurnes, halves; Lieutenant Harris, Giles, Morris, Shestly, Hughes, McGuinness, Williams, and Timonas, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. B. R. Robertson.

THE HARWOOD LEAGUE.

GLOSTERS vs. GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Played on the 3rd instant the Glocesters winnining by 4 goals to 1. Play at the start was very level. Both goals were visited in turn but it was not till midway through that Leaky headed in the first goal for the soldiers. The Telegraphs fell to pieces at this stage and were kept hemmed in for the rest of the period. Edie was repeatedly called upon to save and was only once beaten when Ruck put through from a free kick. Two unconverted corners against the Telegraphs followed. They played better on resuming after the interval and the game was well contested for a spell. At length the soldiers came away and shortly scored a goal. Then the Telegraphs rushed down and Donohoe put through. Leaky replied with a fourth goal for the soldiers but the rest of the play was in favour of the Telegraphs who attacked hotly and had bad luck in not scoring again. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Atkinson and Ruck, halves; Cooper, Sherwood and Law, backs; Maton, Short, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Taylor and Crutchley, backs; Woollen, Lewis and Luce, halves; Green, Ryan, Donohoe, Conquest and Holman, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on the 4th instant an uninteresting game ending in favour of the Young Men who outclassed their opponents in every department. They scored three times in the first half, Pack being credited with two of these points and the other dropping in off the goal post. Pack added two more goals in the second moiety and the Gymkhana failing to score the Young Men thus won by 5 goals to nil. Teams :—

Y.M.C.A.—Hildreth, goal; Deane and Templeton, backs; Hotz, Ward and Templeton, halves; Berton, Dowling, Kelly, Pack and Gidney, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Hill, goal; Harwood and Lay, backs; Johnson, Osborne and Crole-Rees, halves; Cooke, Evans, Taylor, Elliott and Bellamy, forwards.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS vs. HORNETS.—On Thursday last the Telegraphs met the Hornets and beat them to the tune of 8 goals to nil. They had the upper hand all through and the margin might have been even larger had they taken advantage of all their opportunities. Lewis and Donohoe (2) scored in the first half, Lewis and Ryan (1) after the interval. Teams :—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPHS.—Edie, goal; Taylor and Crutchley, backs; Woollen, Lewis and Redford, halves; Green, Donohoe, Ryan, Conquest, and Holman, forwards.

HORNETS.—Viegas, goal; Topper and Millward, backs; Brookes, Osborne and Meyers, halves; Dudley, Peters, Garrick, Henderson and Deroux, forwards.

R.G.A. vs. COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Played on Saturday. The Gunners were not at full strength and the Commercials showed a marked improvement on their previous displays. The soldiers, however, had the best of the game, and though there was no scoring in the first half they continued to attack throughout the second period and put on four goals, the Commercials responding with a single point. Toole, Watts, Hughes and Bailey were responsible for the Gunners' scoring. Teams :—

R.G.A.—McKeown, goal; Watts and Jones, backs; Southcott, Hunt and Collumbel, halves; Toole, Hughes, Franklin, Bailey and Keating, forwards.

COMMERCIAL GYMKHANA.—Lay, goal; Harwood and Taylor, backs; Johnson, Osborne, and Bellamy, halves; Kauffmann, Evans, Elliott, Woolley and Cooke, forwards.

Y.M.C.A. vs. GLOUCESTERS.—The Y.M.C.A. continued their victorious career on Saturday when they met and defeated the Gloucesters by 4 goals to nil. The military team did not play up to expectations and their shooting was wretched. The Young Men attacked at the start and Upton scored; Smith was kept busy in goal for some time and the Y. M. were nearly through on more than one occasion. Then the Glosters got away and Leahy missed by inches: a spell of play in the Young's Men's territory followed, but the soldiers were unable to score and the game was transferred to the other end where Brown beat Smith. An unproductive corner to the Y. M. was the next item of interest and the remaining play in the first half was in favour of the soldiers who lost many chances of scoring. On resuming the Y. M. rushed down but failed in their attempt to goal. The military took up the attack and pressed for some time, erratic shooting and hesitancy losing them many opportunities. The Young Men worked the ball back and after Smith had saved from Pack, Dowling beat him and two minutes later Upton scored a fourth goal. The soldiers made great efforts to score but were unable to get through owing to weak shooting. Teams :—

GLOUCESTERS.—Smith, goal; Atkinson and Ruck, backs; Cooper, Sherwood and Law, halves; Maton, Short, Harris, Leahy and Chidlow, forwards.

FOOTLESS BIRDS.

"ALL living creatures," says Pliny, "have one certaine manner of marching and going, according to their several kinds, unto which they keep, and alter not. Birds only vary their course, whether they go upon the ground or flie in the aire. Some walke their stations, as crowes and choughs; others hop and skip, as sparrows and ousels; some run, as partridges, woodcocks, and snipes; others again cast out their feet before them, staulk and jet as they go, as storks and cranes."

Aristotle has remarked that there is no animal known to fly always as fish are known to swim; hence he concluded that all birds could walk, though such as have small feet were sometimes called "footless" (Apoda).

Some singular beliefs were, however, formerly maintained respecting the feet of birds, which it may be interesting to mention. According to some ancient authors, the bird of paradise was without feet; for none of the great numbers imported to Europe had them. It was even alleged that the inhabitants of Aron believed the bird to be hatched with legs, but apt to lose them, either from disease or old age. The primitive impression that the bird was footless arose from the fact that the leg is extremely slender, and only about a palm in length. The Dutch navigators were challenged to investigate the point, and found that the legs were certainly there but more weak and slender than those of the magpie, and that they could walk and fly like other birds; but the Indians, upon taking them, cut off the legs, and, taking out the entrails, dried the birds in the sun to fit them the better for ornamental head-dresses. The practice of disembowelling them, in conjunction with their being deprived of feet, led to another singular fancy—that, having no need of food, they lived wholly upon dew and vapours. There is a British bird—the swift (Cypselus murarius)—which has, at least in name, been represented as "footless"; but, though its legs are exceedingly short, the structure of its feet is admirably adapted for their uses. The shortness of the legs and the great length of the wings render it very difficult, if not impossible, for it to rise from any even surface, and, as if conscious of this inability, it is never seen to alight on the ground. The peculiar conformation of the foot distinguishes the swift from the swallows, and, indeed, from all other known birds; for, though some species have the power of turning one of their toes either before or behind, none but the swift can turn all the four toes of the foot forward. The least toe also consists only of a single bone, while the other three toes have only two bones each—a structure adapted to the habit of the bird of clinging to the perpendicular face of walls and rocks and eaves of houses, aided by its strong, sharp, hooked claws.

The feet in swallows, though not quite so short as in the swift, are very small, but peculiarly adapted to the bird's habits. In the capture of its prey, for example, it does not employ its feet. In fact, the great requisite in the foot of the swallow is that it shall be formed without those qualifications which are such wise provisions in the feet of most other birds, for what is a perfection in them would be an imperfection in it.
