But there was no time to be lost. Where there was one there might be more, and I got to work to scour the sides of the pool most carefully with my glasses. Once over I worked the whole of it from a respectful distance (for had not our friend just shown that, if he was not shot at, he was nevertheless wary) and had just made up my mind that there was nothing left, when something caught my eye on a rock quite eighty yards off. Was it——Yes by jove, it was a tiny crocodile. My powerful glasses put the evidence of my naked eyes beyond dispute. He was only a baby and yet he was as much a curiosity as his bigger relative who was now probably smiling to himself at the bottom of the pool. I determined to do my best to bag him and considered the lie of the land.

It was no use my trying to crawl down to the water's edge, for there was not a scrap of cover on the sloping bench. What I hoped was that he would let me work round by the far side among the big boulders till I should reach his end of the pool. There the water narrowed down to a shallow where I could cross without making a noise and gain a high bank which commanded the sloping stone on which he was laying at a distance of not more than 50 yards.

Old Balach evidently thought me mad. I could not be taking more trouble over a markhor. But whatever he thought, this was my job, and his opinion was no affliction to me.

Very cautiously I worked round my side of the big pool. The soft native leather sandals which I was wearing for the purpose of my markhor shoot made no noise, and presently I was literally crossing the rubicon with a very reasonable prospect of success.

Crocodile have appalling vitality. Specimens hit in the most vital of spots slide into the water by a last galvanic wriggle just as they seem the certain prey of the marksman. My 200 grains of powder and my metal patched bullet were accordingly not so out of proportion as they seemed.

I would aim for the neck, I reflected, as I crawled up the shale slope. None of your body shots for me that spoil a skin without stopping the crocodile.

A little pause for breath and a peep to fix my bearings and see if the little monster were within reach. No. Not yet.

Again a forward wriggle as if I were simulating the gait of my intended victim. Another peep and—there he was, the little blackguard, within fifty yards of me, tail on, but offering a good neck shot. Slowly I got my rifle barrel straight and took a last rest to steady myself after my exertions. One can miss a two and a half inch ball even at fifty yards.

And now the rifle was up and the sights aligned. Yes that was steady enough. . . . bang.

The effect was electrical. The small saurian, hit low in the neck, gave one convulsive leap like a salmon 3 feet from his rock and fell without a movement almost where he had lain before, belly upward on the rock.

I climbed out on to the rock and collected my prize. He was a curious little beast, 37½ inches long with a head 4¾ inches long by 3½ inches broad, and no claws yet developed on either "feet" or "hands." And the five teeth in each premaxillary bone showed him to be a palustris.

"When you go for Jackal prepare for Tiger" is one of old Balach's own shikar maxims, and I quoted it to him now. He did not, however, seem to think that my baby crocodile was any sort of a substitute for a markhor.

LUCKNOW SPRING MEETING.

Fifth Day, Wednesday, 7th February 1912.

THERE was a diminished attendance for the last day of the meeting, but the sport was of the best. Backers, however, came out very badly on the whole. A great deal of money was lost on Lady Douglas, Devon and Snip Snap, the latter especially being well backed by the auwary. The favourites, however, won in most cases, and it was not a day for outsiders as many hopefully believed.

A final word of praise is due to Mr. Deane, the Secretary, for the excellence of his arrangements throughout the five days' racing—a period which is in every respect a record for Lucknow.

The police arrangements, we need hardly say, were excellent.

THE PONY HURDLES.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap hurdle race for ponies 14-2 and under. About 2 miles over 8 flights of hurdles.

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 19th January 1912.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

RACING at Manchester on Monday proved a fiasco, as it was impossible to decide more than one event. It was risky starting at all, as, although it was fairly clear at noon—when the crowd was admitted—it was impossible to see more than a hundred yards half an hour later.

After Connie Edise had won the Ellesmere Hurdle five jockeys weighed out for the Monday Selling Steeplechase, but, by this time, the fog had got very dense, and a postponement of thirty minutes was decided upon. No improvement taking place, another half an hour's delay was officially made.

The horses went to the post just before 3-30, but quickly returned, the fog making it dangerous to race. Then it was decided to postpone the remainder of the programme—eleven races—until Tuesday. Details:—

ELLESMERE HANDICAP HURDLE RACE—Of 100sovs.; second 10sovs. 2 miles.

Not only were the Manchester executive able to keep faith with their patrons on Tuesday, thanks to a partial absence of fog, but at Mr. Cecil Frail's suggestion the five races postponed from the first day were tacked on the second day's programme a generous and much appreciated step providing a full day's sport and something in the nature of a record card, consisting as it did of eleven races. In Hackness's year at Newmarket there were ten events decided one afternoon, where at Castle Irwell five years ago eight races were run through on the flat, while again in 1909 the same number of events made up the last day's card. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

For many disappointments this season Woolwich Arsenal enjoyed some consolation on Saturday when at St. James's Park, Newcastle, they followed up a win against Newcastle United at Plumstead four months ago with another success at the expense of the famous North-country club. A considerable element of luck entered into the struggle, it is true, the ground having been reduced to a deplorable condition, and, furthermore, Newcastle could not place anything like their full strength in the field. Still, the Arsenal making better use of their opportunities than Newcastle, deserved their very welcome victory. Flanagan gave them the lead early in the game, and, although Stewart equalised, Common, to whom the post of centre forward has been entrusted, put on before the interval, what proved to be the deciding goal. Newcastle losing and Blackburn Rovers gaining a very handsome win against Notts County at Nottingham, the Blackburn team oust the Newcastle men from the leadership of the First League. Newcastle, indeed, are not only dispossessed of first place in the competition, but find their advantage over Everton reduced to a more matter of goal average.

No such gratifying success as rewarded Woolwich Arsenal in the far north attended the efforts of Tottenham Hotspur against Sunderland at White Hart-lane. The North London team indeed, were rather lucky to divide points in a match that failed to yield either side a goal. Minter having been sent back to his old position of inside-right and Newman failing to distinguish himself in the Cup-tie at West Bromwich, Hotspur tried Elliott as centre-forward. Pated against Charles Thomson, the Scottish international, Tottenham's new player found himself overweighted, as many other clever forwards have been when facing that famous half-back. Happily, the Hotspur defence held out against some resolute attacks on the part of the Wearside men, and so, as at Roker Park in September, the meeting of Tottenham and Sunderland ended in a draw. Apart from their victory over Woolwich Arsenal on Christmas Day, Hotspur have not won a match since they scored so well against Oldham Athletic early in December. With the season now so far advanced, their prospects of making a bold fight for the championship, of which a great chance existed six weeks ago, have largely disappeared.

Outside the victories of Woolwich Arsenal and Blackburn Rovers, the most notable occurrence in the First League was the performance of West Bromwich Albion in beating Manchester United at Old Trafford. By no more than the odd goal in three did the Albion pull through, but in so doing they registered their second success against the famous Manchester organisation. Other instances of games having the same results as those contested between the same clubs last September were furnished at Liverpool, where Everton again defeated their neighbours and at Birmingham, where Aston Villa overcame Manchester City. Quite low down on the list in the early days of December, Everton have since won six matches out of seven and drawn the other. Middlesbrough and Sheffield Wednesday, making a draw when they met in the Cup competition at Ayresome Park a week ago, tried conclusions on the same enclosure in the League yesterday and again a draw resulted, so there exists every prospect of another close fight when the Cup-tie is replayed at Sheffield next Thursday. Losing game after game towards the close of last year, Oldham Athletic in the course of the last fortnight have won a Cup-tie and two League fixtures, but they still stand in some danger of losing their membership of the First League.

The programme of matches in the Second Division of the League was considerably interfered with, fog at Bradford and Barnsley stopping the games fixed for those grounds, while the turf was so bad at Derby and Leicester that no play was possible in the games between Derby County and Birmingham and Leicester Fosse and Notts Forest. Derby County therefore retained their position at the head of affairs, because Chelsea who stood next to them, went down badly before Wolverhampton Wanderers at the Molineux grounds. Burnley once more advanced, a victory over Hull City by five goals to one taking them to second place. While Chelsea suffered defeat, the other two London clubs were successful, Clapton Orient winning at Leeds and Fulham, at home, against Huddersfield. Both clubs strengthened their positions considerably thereby.

In the Southern League Swindon further strengthened their position at the head of affairs by beating Crystal Palace, while Queen's Park Rangers, playing at home, could only draw with Watford. This was a poor performance on the part of the Park Royal team, as their visitors were far below full strength owing to the replayed Cup-tie at Wolverhampton to-morrow. Swindon had to work very hard for their success, the Palace team playing fine football and only losing after a hard struggle in a very good game. Plymouth Argyle distinguished themselves, being the one side to win away from home; they found West Ham United below full strength and in poor form, and are now fourth on the list—next to

ENGLAND vs. WALES

ENGLAND entered upon the first of her International matches this season at Twickenham with great hopes of repeating the victory they gained there over Wales a couple of seasons ago, and as the result turned out hopes and anticipations proved correct. They had built up a powerful team by a series of trial games, and though, as was the case both last year and in 1910, they received something of a set-back in the final trial "against the Rest," the conditions on that occasion were such as to militate against scientific football, and the selectors only instituted four changes—one at half-back, Pym for Oakley, base of the scrum, F. E. Chapman on the wing three-quarter line instead of Brougham, and Dibble and Eddison for Brown and Ritson in the forward division. It is true Stoop did not play for England against the Rest, but he was away on holiday and was always a certainty, Knott acting as substitute. During the week, however, it was necessary to make another alteration, Daniel Lambert, the speedy Harlequins' left wing, found himself unable to play owing to an injury, and Brougham, his club mate, was brought in again. The Welsh team did not meet with entire approval in the Principality, but the Welsh Rugby Union have always proved themselves past masters in the matter of selection, and there was a good deal of confidence that the fifteen chosen would worthily uphold tradition. Curiously enough, the chief criticism was as to the combination and speed of the visiting backs, hitherto their strongest point, while the greatest confidence was felt in the forward line. In 1910, it will be remembered, owing to Stoop's opportunism in the first minute England won for the first time in twelve years, while last season Wales gained the victory after a fine contest by 15 points to 11. In London the match was looked forward to with the keenest interest, and though there was some anxiety about the weather, especially following the long succession of wet days and the fact that it rained heavily in the morning, many thousands of spectators wended their way by road and rail to Twickenham to assist at what everyone anticipated would prove a great game. By half-past two on Saturday there were about 20,000 people present and the number was being added to by fresh arrivals every minute. For an hour or so before the start the crowd were kept amused by an excellent military band playing selections of national music, but their efforts were quickly drowned by the enthusiastic greeting of the Englishmen when they came out to be photographed. There was more cheering for the Welshmen when they underwent a similar experience, and then, amid further applause, the teams filed into the field, and all being in readiness Mr. J. T. Tulloch, the Scottish referee, gave the signal to begin punctually at a quarter to three.

Bancroft kicked off for Wales. The home forwards returning looked like going through, but they were stopped by Owen who kicked into touch. Wales were penalised for off-side, and King followed up and collared J. P. Jones before his return kick. However, Spiller relieved with a fine touch finding kick, and the visitors commenced to press. In some scrums in the home twenty-five Owen beat Pym for possession once or twice, but Chapman got in a fine kick, and next Dibble headed a splendid rush to the visitor's quarters. Woodhouse then gathered and cross-kicked, but Spiller won in the race for a touch down and saved. Directly afterwards Johnston returned to the Welsh twenty-five and there was some exciting football, with the English backs making repeated efforts to break through. Once Stoop gave Birkett a chance, and after the latter had been collared he got rid of the ball, but Chapman had no opportunity of gathering, and the chance was lost. England were penalised for "feet up" and lost ground, while immediately afterwards Birt intercepted a pass and got a clear run only to be overtaken and pulled down by Chapman's superior pace in the last twenty yards. Brilliant running and passing by Birkett, Poulton, and Chapman suggested danger, but the visitors tackling was very hard and very sure, the game going on with England unable to reap any advantage from their continual attacks. Once Birkett fumbled, but scooped the ball to Poulton, who cross-kicked, but Wodehouse lost an opportunity by getting offside. Again the English attacked and Wodehouse dribbled over and, following up, appeared to touch down, only for the referee to decide against him. Having been kept on the defence for nearly a quarter of an hour with their lines many times threatened, but always kept intact, the visitors at last broke away, and did their turn of pressing. Owen set his backs going and the ball was kicked over from the wing, only for Birkett to touch down, a performance the last-named had to repeat a minute later. Once more, led by Dibble, the home forwards came away, and J. P. Jones just averted by kicking into touch in his own quarters. There the home fifteen were threatening danger when they threw away a chance by offside tactics. Twice Pym tried to open out but failed, and the Welsh backs, getting away, kicked across for Dibble to intercept, and returned to the other end. Poulton and Birkett and then Dibble and Wodehouse made pretty little runs, but Dibble had his final pass intercepted and Birt cleared. Again and again the Englishmen delivered attacks, but nothing was scored. Half-time:—

Wales 0

It had been a tremendously fast game with many thrilling moments and with England having quite three-fifths of the football. With a brief rest the sides changed ends, and Dibble kicked off to begin the second portion of the match. The three-quarters on both sides indulged in kicking instead of trying to run or pass. At length the Welshmen broke through and England had a very anxious time. Once Bancroft looked to have a fairly easy chance of dropping a goal, but he kicked badly and missed the bar. A penalty against the visitors gave England a chance of relief, but the kick was down the field and Birt, fielding found touch close to the goal-line. Some blundering among the home backs made matters very awkward until Stoop initiated a splendid run, which the forwards took up and, acting for the moment as three-quarters, took the ball right up the field. It was transferred, but again taken back by the English forwards, who were superb in the loose. Jones kicked down the field and Johnston returned and then a rush of the Welsh forwards gave their side the advantage once more. An accident to Johnston's clothing in a tackle necessitated a stoppage while some fresh "smalls" were found for him, and all the players had a much-needed rest, while amidst considerable laughter the change was effected with the teams crowding round. On resuming the visitors got within a foot or two, but Dibble broke through and took the ball well out of danger. Then with three-parts of the time gone and less than twenty minutes to play, England scored the first try. Wodehouse started the movement, Pillman continued it, and finally sent Brougham over for the last-named to run round and score between the posts. Chapman took the place kick and with the Welsh charge disallowed kicked an easy goal, the cheering for both the try and the successful place-kick being tremendous all over the ground. From the kick-off the English forwards, encouraged by their success, did some splendid work in the open, and though the Welsh defence held out for some time it was again broken. Poulton, with a fine kick, found touch within a yard of the line, and for the line-out there was a general scramble and England claimed another try, Mr. Tulloch disallowed this, but from the scrum almost immediately afterwards Pym dived through the defence and with two Welshmen clinging on to him fought his way over and scored. As in the previous case the Welshmen were too anxious and their charge was again disallowed, but Chapman had not such an easy task on this occasion, though he made a good attempt, and he failed to convert. England were then eight points to the good with only five minutes to go and their success was assured. The visitors played up with tremendous pluck and determination, but they never really looked like scoring, and so the great game ended amidst the wildest enthusiasm in a victory for England by a goal and a try or eight points to nil. It is not too much to say, although the margin was comparatively narrow, that the winners were the better side at almost every point. Their forwards were certainly cleverer in the loose rushes, where, by the way, Wodehouse was magnificent and Dibble almost equally so. They were quite as clever, if not more so, at half-back, while at three-quarters they fairly overshadowed their opponents for speed. In touch-finding, perhaps, the losers were slightly the superior while it must be confessed that in tackling they were every bit as good.

England ... ... 1 goal 1 try.

SCOTLAND vs. FRANCE.—This, the first of the Scottish internationals of the season, was played at Inverleith, Edinburgh, more than usual interest being taken in the game by reason of the fact that last season in Paris France had beaten Scotland. The weather was dull, but the ground was in good condition, and there were about 12,000 people present when Scotland kicked off. From a scrummage in the French twenty-five Pearson kicked cleverly into touch. The French backs then burst away, but Angus pulled them up grandly. From a scrummage at midfield Hume got offside, but the free kick yielded nothing. Paoli next tried to kick for touch, but sent the ball towards his own goal. Angus made a great dash, but Paoli tackled him in fine style. A free-kick then came to Scotland after six minutes' play and from it Pearson kicked a lovely goal.

The Scotch forwards rushed to the French line, where Hume picked up smartly and passed to Gunn, who ran in and scored a fine try near the posts. Turner converted. France then attacked and reached the Scottish twenty-five, but a fine kick by Dickson sent them back. Hume then sent the Scottish three-quarters off for a brilliant run, in which the whole line handled, and Will was held up just in time. A moment later Will was again collared on the French line by Dutour. From just past the centre the Scottish forwards went off with a grand dribble, McCallum and Robertson leading the way to the French line. Robertson, however, failed to touch down. A moment later Angus went off and sent to Pearson. The latter passed to Will, who got away splendidly, but he was unfortunate to hit the touch-flag in crossing the French line.

France then pressed and Paoli narrowly failed to drop a goal. Keeping up the pressure he worked to the Scottish twenty-five, and after Dufau had made a dash for the line Communeau secured possession and raced over. Boyau failed with a kick. France continued to be dangerous till the Scottish forwards wakened up again and broke away in characteristic style to the French twenty-five. Sutherland picked up, but kicked too hard and the ball rolled into touch. Faillot then raced away, but was held by Angus. The play was then carried to the French line, where Will made a great effort to score, Dutour saving grandly. The next minute Dutour marked in fine style, but the Scotsmen were not to be denied, and Angus, running finely, played to Pearson, who got in at the corner, Turner converting from a difficult position. Half-time:—

Scotland ... ... 3 goals (1 penalty).
France ... ... 1 try.

The play at the outset of the second half went in favour of Scotland, Angus making a lot of ground with a fine kick into touch. The French forwards, however, were by this time keeping a better grip of their opponents, and, after Angus had missed a pass from Turner, the Frenchmen worked their way to the Scottish twenty-five. There Scotland found relief with a free kick, which was well taken by Gunn, and the home forwards dribbled down. Bain caught Dutour in possession on his own line. Dufau however, relieved and the Frenchmen worked back to the centre, where Dickson found touch with a splendid kick.

Scotland continued to press, but Dutour relieved with a nice kick into touch from behind his own goal line, with two Scottish forwards in close attendance. Then followed a splendid passing bout between Angus, Pearson, and Will, which ended in the last-named scoring a try near the posts. Turner converted. The Frenchmen then attacked vigorously, Faillot running grandly to the Scottish twenty-five, where, however, Will tackled as well and kicked into touch. The Scottish forwards were now showing a clear superiority in the loose, and Pearson, getting possession from a pass by Hume, sent Will away. A fine shot was spoilt, however, by a knock on. The French backs were next on the move, Dedet starting a movement, but Faillot, when going at full speed, was splendidly collared by Angus. The Scotsmen, by loose play and clever foot-work, regained mid-field, where Angus had a fine chance, but he held on to the ball too long before passing to Hume, and Dedet was enabled to clear to the centre. Keeping up the pressure, the Scottish forwards reached the French twenty-five, where Gunn gave McCallum a nice pass. The latter handed on to Turner, who scored a try, but failed to improve it. Following that a great run by Dufau took France right to the Scottish line: but they could not press home the attack and Scotland retaliated with a fine forward rush. Sutherland scored a try, which Turner converted, and then, just before the finish, Sutherland got over again for Turner to place another goal. Thus the end came with Scotland easily victorious by 31 points to 5.

ROWING.

THE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

OXFORD.

AT Oxford the term has opened in a most unsatisfactory manner, as when the crew made their first appearance on Thursday they found the river in full flood, and at one time the president had serious thoughts of removing operations to the upper river, where the towing-path generally stands high and dry. But up to the present the excellent arrangements made by the Thames Conservancy in dealing with the flood water have made it unnecessary to leave the boathouse, although naturally coaching is only carried on at great personal discomfort to the coach. Dull, cheerless weather prevailed yesterday, and the floods showed a further rise of three inches. Very few spectators were in evidence, albeit the three old Blues, A. E. Kitchin, St. Johns; E. H. L. Southwell, Magdalen; and Dr. G. C. Bourne, New College; witnessed the practice from the boathouse balcony. Proceedings commenced by the president taking out Fletcher and Fison for some instruction in the pair, and on their return the No. II. trial was launched and manned in the same order as on Friday. They went down stream accompanied by the 'Varsity secretary in a sculling boat, and at a stroke of twenty-two made the journey to Iffley in one piece. Only a brief rest was indulged in before they started back at the same stroke, and went through to Salter's in one piece, afterwards paddling home. Littlejohn and Hamilton made a trip up the Cherwell in the gig pair, with the president steering, after which the eight was manned a second time in the same order. They pulled to Iffley without a break at twenty-four, but on the return the stroke was reduced to twenty-two, at which they continued until just passing the Cherwell, when Wells called on them to row, and they finished the last 200 yards at a stroke of twenty-eight. A steady paddle back to the boathouse concluded the afternoon's work. Names and weights:—

CAMBRIDGE.

With the exception of Wednesday the Light Blue crew underwent changes every day this week. The most important were the inclusion of two blues, the president (R. W. M. Arbuthnot) at stroke and S. E. Swann at 3. R. Le Blanc Smith, the 'Varsity secretary, is the only other Blue to take his seat. The Russian oarsman, W. Wankowicz, and H. R. Dobb have both stood down owing to colds. It is too early at present to criticise, as the crew are far from together, but there is no reason why they should not make a useful set under the guidance of Mr. Gibbon. Yesterday Heyland and Goldsmith changed places. The feature of the work was a paddle for two and a half miles on the flood stream and a minute row later. Order of rowing:—

B.S.A.
MATCH RIFLES

(LEE-ENFIELD PATTERN).

Practically every competitor at the British and Colonial "Bisley" Meetings uses a B.S.A. Service Pattern Lee-Enfield Rifle specially prepared and selected for match shooting. Throughout the whole course of manufacture and subsequent testing B.S.A. Rifles intended for this work receive the special care and attention which is justified by the magnificent results that have been achieved continuously with B.S.A. arms by military and other marksmen.

The user of a Government Viewed B.S.A. Rifle occupies the very favourable position of knowing that his rifle will collaborate in full sympathy with his efforts to put on a good score. Although a rack rifle may shoot as well as the best match rifle made yet it is always wise to be on the safe side.

B.S.A. "APERTURE" MATCH SIGHTS.

In England and the Colonies open sights on military rifles have been practically entirely dropped in favour of aperture sights fitted at the back of the bolt. The improvement in shooting has been very pronounced. Aperture sights for service rifles are coming into gradual use in India, and every competitor who would be a winner should have his rifle fitted with the B.S.A. No. 9c (1912) sight, or with the B.S.A.-Martin or the B.S.A.-Parker sight on the B.S.A.-Tippins Mounting.

Fully illustrated interesting rifle booklets may be had post free from the B.S.A. Co., Ld., Birmingham.

B.S.A. High Velocity Target and Sporting Rifles, Mid-range and Miniature Rifles. Air Rifles, and small bore Shot Guns are adapted for practically every class of target and sporting work.

B.S.A. Rifles, Guns and Sights are stocked and sold by all gun dealers in India. If any difficulty is experienced in purchasing please write to:—

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The cricket at the end of the season is generally of a tame character and the games are only of interest to those who are engaged in such fixtures. However, there has been some little excitement amongst the students of the local colleges owing to the competition of the Harrison Shield which has been in progress during the last two weeks.

At one time—a few years ago—some very interesting and exciting matches used to be witnessed in these tournaments, but class players of the G. Lewty, G. Jones, R. Thompson, F. Byers and Fink sort are no more to be found in local college teams.

All these players mentioned played in representative cricket after they had left their respective colleges; Lewty having played and distinguished himself often at the gardens, while Georgie Jones during or rather after the war in Africa was named Ranji the second and no military team was thought to be representative without Jones. The medical man when stationed at Lucknow always represented the station in out matches and in a game Oudh against the Punjab in 1895, Jones had the honour of taking nine wickets for 41 runs and contributed a not out 97. Oudh won easily, and on the losing side H. S. Bush, Clive Wigram, now Major, and Rawlins played.

Thompson, Byers, and Fink all played in good company, as well Besides these, other fine all-rounders in their day, viz., Ossie and Teddy Templeton, Fred Goodwin, Preston, the fast bowler, Georgie Power, and a host of other good cricketers used to be playing in the Senior Harrison Shield matches, but now the games are of no interest, whilst the class of cricket is very poor indeed, and none of the boys now at the different colleges would be picked in any of the local club's first elevens.

The Medicals have won the Shield this year and the side is certainly stronger than any that has played in these tournaments during the last five years. The Medicals beat Sibpur in the final last Tuesday on the Dalhousie ground, by 85 runs, and the win is all the more a creditable one, as, while Sibpur included European and Indian students the Medicals had no Indians assisting them. St. Xavier's also had Indians playing for them; but La Martiniere, like the Medicals, had no non-Christians in their eleven.

The Calcutta and Presidency College match last Saturday afternoon, like all half-day games, was a most unsatisfactory one, but had the C.C.C. skipper declared earlier they would have won. Calcutta, who batted first, knocked up 149 for 4, and it was simply to give Bocquet a chance of securing a century that the closure was applied so late. However, with six short of the century, Bocquet was out to a catch by J. Mukerjee in the slips. White scored 71 and was smartly run out.

The Presidency College lost 7 wickets for 87 in an hour, and another fifteen minutes' play would no doubt have got the whole side out for less than 100.

The game at Ballygunge last Sunday was an inter-club affair—the club vs. Mr. C. M. Pope's XI. The latter won by 48 runs, Ballygunge scoring 146 to their opponents' 191. For the club Bocquet 28, H. F. Forster 61, and R. C. Cumberlege 22; and for the winners White 28, L. E. Waite 42, J. C. Sewell 54 and C. H. Ansell 27, were the principal contributors. Waite, a new-comer to Calcutta, did a good bowling performance by taking 7 wickets for 69 runs.

THE ALLAHABAD TOURNAMENT.

THE Tennis Tournament at Allahabad was held last week, the finals being played on Saturday, the 10th instant. Entries were again large, though not quite so good as last year in some events. The handicaps were well patronised and interesting play was witnessed throughout. The men's Open Singles was won by Captain Davies, the well-known Punjab player and the holder of the Rampur Cup, his match with Nelson Wright

BY APPOINTMENT To H.M. THE KING.

LEMCO AND MILK is a powerful, tissue building, invigorating, readily digested food tonic. A glass twice a day does more for invalids, delicate children, anaemic and "nervy" people, than change of air. Add ⅛ to ¼ teaspoonful of Lemco to half a pint of warm milk.

LEMCO, Thames House, London, E.C.

In the final being well contested. The Handicap Singles was won by Crawford, and Davies and Crawford carried off the Open Doubles. In the final of the Handicap Doubles this pair met Burdett and Johnson. They lost the first set 4—6 and won the second at 8—6. The light had by then become very bad and another set was out of the question so Davies and Crawford very sportingly scratched. The Ladies' Singles was won easily by Mrs. Adams, and Mr. and Mrs. Adams won the Mixed Open Doubles. The Mixed Handicap Doubles went to Mrs. Blair and Jacob. The tournament was most successful in every way, the play was of a high standard throughout and the Committee are to be congratulated on the excellence of the arrangements. Appended are results :—

THURSDAY, 22nd February 1912.

THE INTER-REGIMENTAL OF 1912.

THE anticipations of polo enthusiasts all over India are centred now in Meerut, for there, during the first fortnight of next month, will be decided the Blue Riband of the Polo World in this country —the Annual Inter-Regimental Tournament. Ever since the exposure of form which took place at Delhi, the various teams have been hard at work, repairing weak points, which were then discovered, and improving their chances of success by every means in their power.

The forthcoming gathering bids fair to be unique in the annals of the game, for, if original intentions are fulfilled, every single British cavalry regiment in India will this year, for the first time, do battle for the coveted trophy.

Although Meerut is undoubtedly the most convenient venue for the majority of competitors, it is nevertheless very hard on Regiments quartered in the South, who, unless financially well-equipped, are practcally debarred from entering on the score of expense ; and proof of this is furnished by the fact that only once in the history of the Tournament has a southern team been victorious, and on that occasion—when the 4th Hussars went up from Secunderabad—most of the strongest sides were on service in South Africa.

Another prominent feature of the approaching meeting is the great uncertainty which prevails as to the ultimate destination of the Cup. For many years past one team has usually stood out prominent, and the result could be predicted with tolerable certainty ; as is shown by the fact that the 15th and 10th Hussars have divided the honours between them for the last decade, with the exception of one year, when the 9th Lancers were successful. In 1912, however, though some indication is furnished by the form displayed at Dehli, yet so many changes have taken place since the beginning of that classic meeting, through illness or accident, improvement or the reverse, the introduction of new players, and so forth, that the prospects of the Inter-Regimental are as open as the most pessimistic bookmaker could desire. Although four teams—the K.D.G's, Inniskillings, 10th Hussars and 17th Lancers—seem on paper to hold the issue safe between them, yet the changes and chances of polo are so extraordinary—as was admirably exemplified at Dehli—that it is never wise to make a too confident prediction. The unfortunate illness of Captain Leslie Cheape has deprived the K.D.G's of a practically certain victory. There can be little question that, with his powerful assistance, they would have won the Durbar Tournament, but, although they suffered defeat on that occasion by a margin of three goals at the hands of the Inniskillings, it was due rather to the disorganization consequent on Captain Cheape's sudden retirement and the lack of condition and suitable ponies under which his substitute laboured, than to inferiority of play. With a new member in fit condition, mounted on carefully selected ponies, and with the benefit of three months continuous practice, it will be strange if they have not regained a considerable part of their former superiority, though the loss of such a player as Cheape is, of course, to a large extent irreparable.

The Inniskillings, too, will not be represented by the same combination which triumphed at Delhi. Captain Nixon, their No. 1 on that occasion, has gone home, and it is very probable that Mr. Burnham, who has been away on sick leave, will appear at Meerut in his stead. This change will by no means decrease their strength, and any team which succeeds in lowering their colours is very likely to prove the eventual winner.

The 10th Hussars, on the other hand, who have been invincible at Meerut for no less than five years, are not so overwhelmingly powerful as on former occasions. The injury to Captain Palmer's wrist is largely responsible for this fact, as this skilful player has lost some of the precision and power which rendered him such a tower of strength. In addition, in view of the regiment's approaching departure from India, new blood in the shape of ponies is not forthcoming, and the lack of this all-important quality was severely felt in their match with the K.D.G's at the Durbar. All the same they are still an exceptionally strong factor and will take a great deal of beating by the most powerful team. The 17th Lancers have been very unlucky in the loss of their hardworking No. 1, Captain Bruce, through an accident at Delhi. Taking a line through Captain Barrett's Scouts, however, they would seem, even without his assistance to be about equal to the Inniskillings, and should these two teams meet at Meerut, the ensuing battle should be the feature of the Tournament.

Of other competing teams, the 14th Hussars have suffered from a prolonged residence in Southern India and may not as yet have attained the standard necessary for victory in a Tournament such as this. For nothing is more noticeable in Indian Polo than the enormous improvement manifested by teams who have been quartered in the south as soon as they gain experience of Northern Tournaments. The 13th Hussars are a case in point. They have improved out of all knowledge since leaving Secunderabad, and although they may not be strong enough to carry off the Blue Riband on this occasion, they will be a most formidable factor in future years, and seem to hold an extremely strong hand in the Subaltern's Tournament, which is this year to run concurrently with the Inter-Regimental. The form of the 7th Hussars will be an object of great interest, for they are fresh from England, and, whatever may be the result in 1912, they may be relied upon to make a very bold bid for premier honours before their tour of foreign service expires.

In conclusion, in view of their victory in the Lucknow tournament just concluded, the Inniskillings seem to possess a chance second to none, while the K. D. G's and 17th Lancers should prove their most dangerous opponents.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The result of the Grand Western Handicap in Bombay came as somewhat of a surprise, as there were four of them considerably better fancied than the ultimate winner, Refresher, who started at 7 to 1. Victo was the first one they went for, presumably on the strength of her victory over Tangaroa at 1st. 13lb. in the Prince of Wales' Plate (1 mile) in Calcutta, but there was likewise a good deal of money for Wayward and Wild and she started level in the quotations with Mr. Craig McKerrow's mare. A good deal of it went on to Wayward and Wild from, and in, Calcutta at the various unlicensed resorts and some of it was wired away. Personally we have always deemed Wayward and Wild a very much overrated animal and her performances mark her as very ordinary. She was backed for a good deal of money for the King-Emperor's Cup in Calcutta, but how they could look at a very moderate hurdle-race mare when they had Brogue in the stable we could never quite understand. Wayward and Wild's form at home was nothing to make a song about and she has never been put to the job at which she is best, hurdling. As to Victo she has shown us in Calcutta that she is a brilliant little mare over 6 furlongs; her win in the Metropolitan in 1min. 14secs. being decidedly good and she has also gone a mile in very good style, as she won the Prince of Wales' Plate, as already recorded above, and when she was in receipt of two stone all but a pound from a good horse like Tangaroa, but she has not acted over any longer distance: she ran nowhere in the 1¼ mile Cooch Behar Cup ditto in the Wellesley Plate over the same distance. Her best distance in England was 7 furlongs and she had never, so far as we know, showed them she could get a yard farther than this. There was, however, some encouragement to think that she might stay the 9 furlongs of the Grand Western on her Calcutta running. She was, however, very badly beaten and from all the accounts of the race was never near the front at all. This was not Refresher's first victory in the Grand Western, as in 1910 he won this race for his present owner, Mr. Mathuradass Goculdass, at 6st. 11lb., beating Master Theo 8st. 10lb. and his own stable companion Master Delaval 9st. 2lb and his victory on that occasion was even less expected than it was this year, as Fizz started a hot favourite at 3 to 1 and Master Theo was also much fancied, Refresher's S. P. having been 10 to 1 and even longer odds. This year he won in great style and coming to the front three furlongs from home was never again headed and won from Hilarity by a head with, according to many people's opinion, a bit to come and go upon. He had 8st. and his challenger Hilarity 8st. 13lb. and the somewhat unreliable Devil's Dyke, who ran third 8st. 9lb., Wayward and Wild was fourth and Victo finished amongst the ruck.

The other most interesting contest at Bombay on Saturday last was the Malabar Hill Plate in which the Calcutta Metropolitan form was very faithfully reproduced. In the last-named race Socialist getting 2st. from Tangaroa dead-heated with him for second honours close up behind Victo, who had 8st.; Tangaroa's weight, 10st. 7lb., Socialist 8st 7lb. actual weight carried. At Bombay the scale was a stone lighter and Tangaroa beat Socialist a head in the very fast time of 1min. 13⅗secs. The fastest time ever put up in the Metropolitan in Calcutta was 1min. 13⅘secs. by Mr. Deakin's Sea Spray, who carried 7st 3lb. against Tangaroa's 9st. 7lb. in Bombay the other day; so that Mr. Galstaun's horse's performance may be fairly claimed to be a considerably better one than the light weight's.

The Australian papers received by the incoming mail announce the death as a result of an operation of Mr. W. S. Cox, the well-known steeplechase jockey and trainer who was for a short time in India some years ago. Mr. Cox started riding races as a G. R. but later joined the professional ranks. His name will always be indissolubly connected with one of the greatest steeplechase horses Australia has ever produced, Redleap and Mr. Cox piloted this great jumper in all his successes. He was also at one time the trainer of our old friend Realm, who has now we fear broken down hopelessly as a result of his last expedition over hurdles. The Australasian in reviewing the deceased's riding career says:—"Cox was a son of the late Mr. W. S. Cox, the founder of the Moonee Valley racecourse. When only 13 years old he rode his father's horse, The King, in the Melbourne Cup won by Calamia, in 1878. His first mount over fences was on Slapbang, at Kensington, in 1878. His name will always be associated with the triumphs of Redleap. Redleap ran as a four-year-old for the first time in a steeplechase at Caulfield, ridden by Orr, but he fell. His next appearance was in the Grand National Hurdle Race, a few mont's later, with only 8lb. over the minimum. Cox rode Redleap, and although he ran very 'green,' he landed him an easy winner from Corythus, whom Scobie regarded as unbeatable that day. Redleap did not run again until three years later, when he won both the Grand National Steeplechase at Flemington and the Caulfield Grand National (now Australian) Steeplechase. In the Caulfield race he carried 13st. 12lb., and Cox, who could ride well under 9st. at the time, had to put up over 5st. deadweight. By this time Cox had established himself as one of the best amateur riders Victoria had produced, and he continued winning races for several years after Redleap's success, although he had joined the ranks of professional riders. The last ride he had was on Springfield, at Moonee Valley, in 1903. He had a very bad fall, and, in addition to breaking several ribs, his jaw was fractured. His friends prevailed upon him to give up riding, and to devote himself to training. As a trainer he met with a fair share of success, and among his best patrons were Messrs. K. S. MacLeod, J. Turnbull, A. T. Creswick, and H. Alan Currie. As a matter of fact, the last winner he sent out was Basra, who won the Jumpers' Flat Race at Aspendale Park a fortnight ago for Mr. Currie. His most important successes as a trainer were gained with Realm."

The racing in Calcutta last Saturday, when the Sixth Extra Meeting was run, was very good of its class, several close finishes being witnessed and though fields were not big on the whole there would seem to be about as many horses here this year for these meetings as there were last year. Nevertheless it is said that the Extras are to be cut down by two and that the season here is to be brought to a definite conclusion on the 2nd March when the Eighth Extra is set down to be run. There is, however, just the possibility of a ninth meeting on the 9th March. Last season there were ten Extras and the last of them was run on the 15th March. In season 1909-10 there were eleven of these Extra Meetings, the last of them being run on the 19th March. The length of the season is usually governed by the state of the thermometer, and though it is not exactly cool at the moment it is not any hotter than it usually is at this time of the year. The word has, however, for we understand, gone forth that after another fortnight there is to be no more racing unless there is some very strong encouragement to prolong the season further.

The attendance in the paddock and members' stand last Saturday was not large but the ring was full all through the afternoon and there was a good deal of betting one way and another. The ringmen said that they were badly knocked about, but as the Ring have recently been having all the best of it over Lucknow and are not doing badly over Bombay so far, there is possibly still a little left in their satchels to keep the wolf from the door.

The reconstructed card for Saturday last comprised six events, the first race on the programme being the Alexandra Plate, for which the public went for Lah on the strength of his recent running against Convent Girl, and The Witch was also backed. Royal Colours also had a few friends. Lah was never dangerous and ran very unkindly in Pegrem's hands. He was late away and never got to his horses finishing dead last. The Witch ran well forward all through and had not a great deal of difficulty in beating Convent Girl at the finish by a length and a half, the obviously unready Alpheus running third. Last week it was alleged that The Witch was badly interfered with in the Outram Plate, which was won by Bomb and in which she finished second, but the objection for a cross was overruled. Bomb was not in this race last Saturday and when all the others from J. D. Scott's stable were struck out and Royal Colours was left as their sole representative, The Witch seemed to hold a very good chance.

The best thing of the day was Kilmarnock in the Serpentine Plate and on his previous week's performance it was difficult to see him beaten, even though he was 15lb. worse in the handicap to a fast five-furlong mare like Foudrette. He made hacks of the lot of them. Kilmarnock was said to be none too generous at home, but his too last performances have not been those of a thief, as he has run very gamely and he won in very good style on both occasions. He had a fairly big weight on Saturday 9st. 10lb. and he won in 1min. 2⅗secs. according to the official watch, but private watches made it better than this and it was probably 1min. 2⅕secs.—a very nice gallop. Foudrette and Bonny Boy dead-heated for second honours, but the winner had them both well beaten a long way from home. Hughie did not run as well as we expected that he would after his recent performances at Lucknow.

For the Semaphore Plate the public picked Ruling Passion and he was backed down to 2 to 1. May Kenley being the only other one fancied and her closing quotation was 5 to 1. The favourite and Winna, who was well backed for a place were in front all the way, May Kenley, who was not well ridden, running very wide at the turns and hanging out from the rails all the way. She was making up ground fast at the finish and got to within half a length of Winna, but had long before this had any chance she may have possessed of winning extinguished. Ruling Passion seems in a winning vein and this is his third success this season and his second consecutive one.

The betting on the Third Selling Handicap for which only six were stripped indicated a very open contest, as four of them were backed, Pressy, Light Metal, Bird of Freedom and Hackler's Bloom. The public picked them all right, as there was an Homeric battle between these four and from the home turn in they came along locked to together, Bird of Freedom, ably ridden by Mr. Evers, winning a short head on the post, heads dividing the other three. On being put up for sale after the race the winner fell to the bid of Dr. R. Spooner Hart for Rs. 1,800 or Rs. 1,150 over the upset price of Rs. 750, the fund therefore benefiting to the extent of half this surplus and the owner of Pressy to the other moiety. Bird of Freedom has been purchased to send home to Dr. Hart's stud in Norfolk and she is a beautifully shaped little mare and full of quality. She is by Free Mason out of Sweet Maiden. She was previously known as Nettie R. and before that as Good Friday. Dr. Spooner Hart recently bought Fadgie for the same purpose and this mare will go home with the other one very shortly.

The upset of the day so far as the public were concerned was Lasso's victory at 7 to 1 in the Esplanade Plate, for which Mahoney Boy was selected and Rapin and Bomb were also fancied. Lasso was backed by the stable and they made no mistake about it, as when getting home time came this horse who got off late had no difficulty in getting through his field and winning with a bit in hand by three-quarters of a length from Bomb. First Love, who is improving and will probably connect ere long, being third. Mahoney Boy ran very disappointingly and was never prominent: he was away about fourth, but he dropped back shortly after the half mile and was not able to pace it with them at the finish.

The last race on the card was the round the course event, the Valentine Plate, and Santoinette and Jemima were the only ones seriously backed, the former having the call of the market at the finish. The public placed them very accurately as they finished 1, 2, Santoinette winning by one and a quarter length from Jemima, who was giving the winner 1st. 11lb. and ran very gamely under the big impost of 10st. 3lb. This was the third winner sent out from Thomas' stable, as both Kilmarnock and The Witch hailed from his establishment and Pressy, who ran second, is also in this trainer's charge so that he was very much in evidence over the afternoon's proceedings. Full details appear elsewhere.

At the Annual General Meeting of the C.T.C. to be held this evening the principal matters so far as the Calcutta programmes for 1912-13 are concerned are the increases in the values and the enhancement of the penalties and allowances of the two second-class races run at the Second and Third Extra Meetings respectively the December Plate and the Wellesley Plate, races for which a good number of the first-class horses engaged on the Trials and Cup usually go. These races at the moment are of the nominal value to the winner of Rs. 1,500 and are W. A. and C. reduced 10lb. with penalties and allowances. The present scheme is not to alter the scale of the weights but to increase the penalties on winners and give more in the shape of allowances to those of the second division who are usually to be found in fairly big numbers competing in these races. The idea is to level things up a bit and it is a very good one and one that might be followed with advantage in the principal weight-for-age contest at these meetings, the Viceroy's Cup. Other contemplated alterations are the reduction of the value of the King-Emperor's Cup from Rs. 20,000 to the winner to Rs. 15,000—a reduction which we think is regrettable and hardly justified in the circumstances, for it is obviously desirable that His Majesty's Cup should be backed by as much added money as the Viceroy's Cup; in fact we should like to see it the most heavily-endowed race at the meeting and made worth a cool £2,000 to the winner. It is only fitting that this should be so. The King-Emperor's Cup is to be run on the first day of the Second Meeting instead of, as it was this year, on the fourth day of the First Meeting. This will necessitate the Macpherson Cup being found a place in the card of one of the other days of the second meeting, probably the second day. The German Cup is to be run on Trials Day instead of the Viceroy's Cup Day as at present and is to change places with the Paddock Plate, which will now appear in the second day's card. Whether the matter of a top weight limit in handicaps, other than high-weight and welter handicaps, is to be seriously discussed we have not heard, but we trust that the matter is not going to be shelved, for it is obviously one that is of prominent interest to owners and one that certainly merits the attention of the Stewards. The senior Steward Sir Apear A. Apear is himself one of the supporters of this proposal and Mr. Boteler, the senior stipendiary steward of the C.T.C., is likewise in favour of an alteration of the rules to bring this thing into effect. There are several other owners who are in favour of this reform and we look forward hopefully to a discussion of its possibility at this evening's meeting, for we are convinced that it will be in the best interests of racing in this country if it is carried through.

The Calcutta Light Horse Annual Regimental Sports on Friday last were well up to the average of excellence for which these entertainments have always been noted and drew good all-round entries. The display in most of the events was very good indeed and in both those open to the garrison and those closed to the corps we saw some keen competition. The earlier part of the afternoon was marred by a nasty accident which befell Captain Gourlie, Adjutant of the Corps, who got a bad fall when riding in the officers' section of the tent-pegging. The horse Captain Gourlee was riding started bucking and eventually threw its rider who landed on his head and was temporarily knocked out of time. Captain Gourlie was removed to hospital, but we are glad to learn that he has now completely recovered. The section tent-pegging was won by the officers' team of the 36th Jacob's Horse, the Calcutta Police section being second. The Dismounted Service is always rather a ragged performance as horses do not lead well as a rule when there is a crowd of spectators, a band and so forth. It was, however, won by Sergeant E. Marshall's section in good form. There was a big entry for the Inter-Troop Section jumping and it was won by T. S. M. Studd's section who were given most points for pace, dressing, jumping and riding. The saddling competition, in which horses had to be saddled and got ready with all their accoutrements and then ridden over a couple of fences, was won by Lance-Corporal Trousdell. The Musical Ride was quite one of the features of the programme and was a remarkably good performance for Volunteer Cavalry and the credit for training the men and horses is due to Sergeant-Instructor Jackson, 8th Hussars, attached to the Calcutta Light Horse.

The First Aid to the wounded contest was won by Trooper Walker nominated by Mrs. Walker. The Tug-of-War mounted was won by "A" Squadron H. E. the Viceroy's Bodyguard who beat the 36th Jacob's Horse team in the final. The Balaclava Mêlée caused much amusement and was a very long drawn out battle, "H" Troop, Calcutta Light Horse, eventually coming out victorious.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—After a series of eight Extras, the Bombay Big Meeting opened on Wednesday when a very fair attendance turned out to witness a liberal card of eight events, in all but two of which there was place betting on three. Two upsets came to the assistance of bookmakers, who were, however, on the wrong side as a whole. Amongst visitors was Mr. Galstaun as well as most of the trainers and jockeys we usually expect, the honours amongst owners going to Messrs. G. K. and Oomer with two each, Evans riding three and Ferguson two winners.

All fourteen on the card went out in the initial event, the half mile for new Arabs, so it was reasonable to expect that some would suffer at the start. Realm was a hot favourite at odds on from Agah Pasha, but the former got hopelessly mixed up with the ruck and was never anywhere near the leaders. On the other hand, Agah Pasha got away handily behind Mijbas and came into the lead at the three. Moonspot, who had been third, came gamely, but Agah Pasha had a bit in hand when staving him off.

Next the first division of the Fort Plate, eleven starting with very open betting, leaving Yussuff

Pasha in command of the market at 7 to 2 from Far East, Sweden and Upright. Sweden continues to run the same sort of race and was a long way out of it all the way. It was not a good start, Shihab breaking away by quite half a dozen lengths, followed by Makeb, who subsequently gave way to Yussuff Pasha, Red Monk and Far East. These three faced the straight in the lead in that order and a tremendous finish ensued. A furlong from home Upright came from "nowhere" and was exceptionally lucky to find an opening and get his head in front, in fact a head only separated the first four in turn and the numbers were anxiously waited for.

Just eight started for the Importers' Plate, and Socialist certainly looked a good thing, though money for Lord Carlyon and some for Macann and Sperry sent the first named out at odds of 5 to 4 on, better than anticipated. A good start was effected, Lanceolar leading, Socialist, Sperry and Macann all close together. At the three Socialist went away with Lanceolar and Sperry dropping back. Lord Carlyon could go no faster when he came up inside Macann and the latter had but little chance with Socialist, whereas Devil's Dyke gave some promise by coming along at the death knock.

Our best Arabs 13st. 3lb. and under came out for the Paddock Plate, and on his easy win on Saturday money came very strong for Rajput, sending him to odds on. Those speedy stable companions, Abdul Malik and Majesty were nibbled at all the way and next was Zoolphokarr. The race was a really fine one with Zoolphokarr quickest out with Little Titch, who soon fell away. After a furlong Rajput in his position on the rails took a slight lead from Abdul Malik, but the latter was soon displaced by Majesty and Zoolphokarr outside. Rajput had the former of these settled, but Zoolphokarr came very fast and actually caught the leader near the Grand Stand only for Evans to get Rajput away again to win quite a sensational race.

Unfortunately only five ran in the important City Plate, which resulted in a bad upset. Half money was about the best to be had about Brogue and then threes on, Coat of Arms and Black Douglas at eights and Aborigine and Hilarity longer. The race needs but little description, Hilarity and Aborigine being first away, to be passed by Black Douglas. He in turn gave way to Coat of Arms, who was a clear two lengths in front of Brogue and Aborigine. A couple of furlongs from home Brogue was driven along, but it was evident that the big chestnut had him set. Half a furlong from home Coat of Arms began to go out and finished wide, but he was well clear of Brogue and so the objection lodged did not keep the lucky ones long from collecting their big dividend.

Something of a repetition of Saturday's race was the mile for Arabs, the Dealers' Plate, and of course Braganza was a firm 2 to 1 on favourite from Grand Duke, at fours, Guinea Gold eights. On the inside, Braganza jumped off in front of Grand Duke, then the latter led momentarily before Guinea Gold passed him and Braganza ran second. At the three Braganza led again and from there was able to hold Grand Duke safe, Artist coming late and failing to catch the latter. The race was run under 1min. 51secs. and there is no doubt the winner has improved into a wonderfully good horse.

Punters cannot claim a score in the mile Vellard Plate for second raters, the favourite being Goldseeker till the run on Lady Erna made her half a point shorter at threes, Chestnut Park, Picnic and Metal Boy finding good money. Lady Erna ran very badly, never in it after making the pace for a furlong or so, when Picnic went out and the other two backed ones were handy. From the half mile Metal Boy drew up and later went clear away from Chestnut Park and Goldseeker. From now there was no doubt and Goldseeker had to be driven to secure place money with only seven starters. It was alleged that in taking the lead Metal Boy interfered with the next two to finish, but here again the Stewards were not long debating the question.

Finally in the last division of the Fort Plate, betting favouring Young Thara and Order, with some for Tofic Pasha and later a great run on Pendil. This was another exciting race, Young Thara showing Kimberley, St. Anthony and Tofic Pasha the way till at the three Pendil dashed to the front with Tofic Pasha after him. Order and Prime Minister had a deal of ground to make up, but came with a great rattle and after boring out Order only missed Pendil by half a length.

In a card of seven races there was again on Saturday some really excellent sport for the second day of the meeting. More than one hot finish saw the programme culminate with a dead heat, which was run off. Punters again managed to hold their own, though some of the races appeared to be very open. Wootton again won on Tangaroa and Brown was successful no less than three times.

We had our first 14-2 race of the season to open the card with, six going out and Leo Grand being a decided favourite all the way from his stable companion Regalia, Evening Herald commanding some money on the strength of her being left in preferably to Borgie. Regalia and Evening Herald first showed out, but soon Leo Grand, with all his weight, drew up to the latter along the rails. As they neared the turn the favourite had the mare settled, and when Regalia came on the outside she too was held quite safe.

In the next a mediocre lot of horses went over six furlongs, Grevillea soon settling down head of the market from Beckmesser, who was backed rather late to shorter odds than Solution with Pincher and Britannia next. Looking very fresh and well, Solution jumped away clear to make all the running from Pincher and Ruby Tin, the latter then giving way to Britannia with Grevillea outside. As they faced for home, Pincher began to draw up to Solution, and though the latter finished too strong for Grevillea she had very little chance with Pincher. I may mention that Metal Boy took Templeman right round the course before the gate went up for the start.

The big Arab race, the Bombay Derby, had a field of ten, and on recent form Braganza was of course a steady favourite at 6 to 4, though Artist, Tajilmulook and Baloz were quite well fancied. Artist was slow in getting away, otherwise the start was level after Valens had delayed it. Those on the rails, Last Chance and Braganza slipped away from Regent, then Grand Duke went out to be joined by Thaboor, and these two were a good way in front of the rest headed by Baloz, Regent and Braganza. Thaboor was done at the five furlongs and Braganza, Regent, Tajilmulook and Artist in order had decreased Grand Duke's lead. At the quarter mile Braganza caught him, and though Artist beat the rest, nothing could trouble these two, Braganza winning comfortably, and further proving how he has come on.

No less than fifteen paraded for the Grand Western Handicap, and, naturally enough after his Calcutta form, Victo was made the pick in a fairly open betting race, Hamara, Refresher and Wayward and Wild next. They looked a very fit lot, but one felt that the really classy ones were not quite at their best. It was a fast run race all the way, Aborigine going out in Coat of Arms' interests from Elser, Devil's Dyke and Valerius. This soon changed, as Wayward and Wild was second at the six furlong post with Valerius and Brogue in close attendance. Later Refresher and Hilarity put in an appearance, and with Aborigine stopping were just behind Wayward and Wild. Refresher passed the latter and was well in the lead as they entered the straight, where Hilarity came at him, but fighting on gamely the pony just got home by a head, repeating a former success in this race. Wayward and Wild was done, and near home Devil's Dyke came again to just pip her for a place.

What was generally looked upon as the "moral" of the day was Tangaroa in the Malabar Hill Plate as he now met Socialist at only 2lb. worse than the last time and the extra furlong did not appear to particularly suit the latter; Punt, the only other starter, being out for the first time. Instead of being an easy thing, the finish was most sensational. The three were away in a line, then Tangaroa on the rails with Socialist began to leave Punt. The topweight took a slight lead, but they faced the straight practically level. Near the stand, Socialist was just a trifle to the good, but in the last few strides Wootton got busy with his whip and just scrambled home by a head in the record time of 1min. 13⅘secs.

The Tom LeMesurier Plate over seven furlongs for Arab ponies found only seven starters, Ashroff being a shade of odds on from Abdul Malik, Grey Falcon and Lookman. Little Laffy went out to make the pace hot from Abdul Malik, who then gave way to Singer and was joined by Ashroff with Lookman outside. At the quarter mile Abdul Malik went out in the lead with Lookman following, and with Ashroff giving no promise the first named kept in front comfortably.

Lastly the race for new ponies over six furlongs, a very hot thing in the ring being Khalid Beg in preference to Ream, Mafush also being well fancied with money for Agah Pasha, Galiard and Moonspot. Sirmust was first away, then Khalid Beg passed him but he also had had enough before the distance, where Galiard had passed him with Mafush. Galiard looked good, but Good Success put in a run outside and in a very exciting finish they were returned dead-heaters. In the run off Good Success was slight favourite, but Galiard had his measure almost from the start and won in remarkably good time for new ponies, almost equal to the best of old ones.

The Cavalry School Horse Show will be held at Saugor on Saturday and Monday, the 24th and 26th instant, and the Cavalry School Race Meeting is fixed for the 27th and 29th.

The Subalterns' Polo Tournament will be held at Meerut concurrently with the Inter-regimental Tournament, commencing about 4th March.

The Native Cavalry Polo Tournament at Umballa ended on the 19th instant in a win for the 17th Cavalry who beat the 3rd Skinners' Horse after a close and exciting game by 4 goals to 3.

At a meeting held at the 9th Hodson's Horse Mess, Umballa, on the 16th instant, to discuss various matters in connection with the annual Native Cavalry Polo tournament, the principal resolution passed was: "It is considered necessary in the interests of the polo-playing community generally that some measures should be taken to stop the increasing price of ponies." This was carried unanimously. With a view to carrying out the above the following proposal was made and passed: (1) Handicapping ponies according to price (in accordance with Major Taylor's scheme). (2) Strict measurement of 14-2 by a paid official. The C. T. C. measurer for preference. (3) Failing the above, then the abolition of all measurements and ponies to be registered at a fee of Rs. 10 instead of receiving an I. P. A. certificate.

It has been decided to have a third day's racing at Bareilly on Monday, the 26th instant, entries for which closed yesterday.

The Infantry Polo Tournament began at Bareilly on Monday last when the first round was played resulting as follows: The Durham L. I. beat the 4th Worcesters by 5 goals to 1; the 2nd Gurkhas beat the 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles by 8 goals to 1; and the 2nd Royal Welsh Fusiliers beat the 1st Seaforth Highlanders by 5 goals to 1. The Highland L.I. drew a bye.

The last of the series of three billiard matches between Stevenson and Gray ended in the defeat of the Australian champion, the final scores being Stevenson, 18,000; Gray, 16,503.

The 10th weekly meet of the Calcutta Paperchase Club was held on Friday last. The start was delayed by a heavy mist and the hot morning and long course compelled several competitors to stop their horses. The course was over six miles taking in the line ridden over in the Ladies' Cup last week and continuing through winding lanes to the 6th milestone on the Garreah Hât Road. There was a fair field and amongst those out were:—Mrs. Reid on At Last, the Misses Mackay on bays, Mrs. Wanklyn on Grey Harold, Mr. Ballantyne on Farthing Bun, Mr. Riviere on 10 to 6, Mr. Murray on Desmond, Mr. Chancellor on H.E., Mr. Deakin on Brown Mouse, Mr. McLean on Minnie, Mr. Wheeler on Sauce, Mr. Montgomery on George, Mr. Muir on North Shore, Mr. Barrow on Hurlingham, Mr. Hutchison on Steel Arrow, Mr. Reid on a chestnut, Mr. Tanner on Jaguar, Captain Astor on Sidbrook, Mr. Gladstone on Joanna, Mr. Evers on Rifleman, Mr. Mackay on a bay and several more.

In the Horse Chase, Mr. Evers led from the start with Mr. Riviere, Captain Astor and Messrs. Ballantyne and Murray next in order. There was very little change in this order till the Jodhpore station where Mr. Evers pulled up as Rifleman was beginning to feel the strain of the distance. Mr. Riviere, Captain Astor and Mr. Ballantyne went on and Captain Astor taking command a couple of miles from home won comfortably. The official order was :—

1. Captain Astor on Sidbrook
2. Mr. Riviere on 10 to 6.
3. Mr. Ballantyne on Farthing Bun
4. Mr. Murray on Desmond
5. Mr. Montgomery on George
6. Mr. Mackay on a bay, followed in order by Messrs. Deakin, Wheeler, Reid. Muir, Tanner, Mrs. Wanklyn, and Mr. Gladstone no one else in sight.

Nine went out in the Pony Chase and only two finished—Scarboro and Minnie. Scarboro had led nearly all the way, but getting near home Minnie came up and the judge was unable to separate them past the post.

Mr. Deakin on Scarboro. } Dead heat.
Mr. McLean on Minnie. }

No others finished.

Mr. Murray's Desmond has only to be placed once more to win the Average Cup and Mr. Deakin's Scarboro looks a certainty for the Pony Average Cup. The Pony Cup will be run for on Wednesday next and a good race is expected between Scarboro and Minnie.

"A Mere Man" writes :—When I wrote you last week suggesting that borrowed horses should be barred from competing in the Ladies' Paperchase Cup I was under the impression that this year's winner was a borrowed horse. I have since seen from the papers that Mr. Gresson purchased the animal the week before the Ladies' Cup was run.

As I pointed out last week a horse purchased in this manner is not under the rules eligible to start in the Ladies' Cup, as a sale cancels all previous qualifications.

The rules provide that a lady may ride any qualified paperchase horse, and a lady may therefore borrow a horse qualified by any other member of the club without infringing the rules. But she cannot ride a horse purchased by any one the week before the race, as the qualifying rule provides that an animal to qualify shall have started in at least half the number of weekly chases held during the season (or up to the date of the cup race) and that he must have been the property of the owner during the period of qualification. A certain amount of discretion in admitting horses to these competitions is allowed to the Committee in cases not covered by the Paperchase Rules, but in this case the rule appears to be clear.

It seems to me therefore that it is up to Mr. Gresson as a sporting man either to explain how Enthusiast came to be entered for the race or to pass on the stake to the next horse in duly qualified.

The Madras Hunt held their Point to Point races at Sheep's Head on the 16th instant. There was a big gathering of spectators, and Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Carmichael were "at home" on the course, Her Excellency giving away the prizes at the close of the proceedings. The Pony Point to Point was won by Captain P. Heffernan's Molly Malone, ridden by Major T. Symons. The official verdict was :—

They joined again at the second flag, where Milton was in command with Miladi, Sir Tim and Maid Marion next. There was little change till nearing home when Maid Marion went in pursuit of Milton but failed to catch him. Sir Tim came down at one of the fences and broke his neck. Captain Heffernan being fortunately unhurt. The order at the finish was : Milton 1, Maid Marion 2, Gaylad 3, Miladi 4, Big Ben 5, Mooltan 6, Islander 7.

On Thursday last the Bombay Jackal Club gave a complimentary dinner to the Master, Mr. W. R. L. Dunlop, who wet home on Saturday. Between forty and fifty sat down and a very merry evening was spent. The Hon. Mr. W. H. Lucas presided and there were many speeches, much good fellowship and a musical programme which lasted till a late hour.

The Northern India Racquets Tournament was recently held at Rawalpindi and this year attracted a record number of entries, which included the names of many well-known exponents of the game. The Championship Singles drew 14 competitors. Captain Sloggett won all his matches without losing a game, but a sprained ankle prevented him from doing himself justice in the challenge round and Major Sheppard, the holder, beat him 4—0. The Inter-Regimental Doubles produced some excellent racquets and the Rifle Brigade couple came through fairly easily. The holders, the 2nd Division Staff, were represented by Major Sheppard and Brigadier-General Smith, the latter very sportingly coming in to partner Major Sheppard, though he has not played for several years. They put up a good show in the challenge round, but the R. B.'s were too good for them. In the Public Schools Doubles some very exciting games were also witnessed, particularly the match in the final between Clifton and Harrow. Clifton won by a very narrow margin, but were beaten in the challenge by Haileybury the holders. The handicap Doubles were won by Kearsey and Palmer (—5). The tournament was a big success and the class of racquets considerably above the average standard. Results :—

Championship Singles.—Major Sheppard, R. E. (holder), beat Captain Sloggett, Rifle Brigade, 4 games to love.

Inter-Regimental Doubles.—Rifle Brigade "A" (Slogget and Gull) beat the holders, 2nd Division Staff (Major Sheppard, R. E., and Brigadier-General Smith), 4 games to 2.

Public Schools Doubles.—Haileybury (holders) (Major Sheppard, R. E., and Captain Skipwith 2-5th Gurkhas) beat Clifton (Captain Kearsey 10th Royal Hussars, and Mr. Farquhar, I. P.), 4 games to love.

Handicap Doubles.—Kearsey and Palmer (—5) beat Skipwith and Bateman-Champain.

The Madras Association Football Tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 17th instant, when the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders met the 2nd Leicester Regiment in the final. The game was very closely contested and some exciting moments were experienced. The first half ended without score and in the second the Camerons made desperate efforts and after forcing three fruitless corners they at length got through and scored the only goal of the match just before the close of time. They thus wrested the cup from the holders.

THE Punjab-Bengal Football Tournament commenced at Umballa on Monday, when two games were played. In the first the Lancashire Fusiliers met the South Lancashire Regiment and won by 2 goals to love, though most of the game was in the Fusiliers' half.

In the second game between the King's Dragoon Guards and 3rd King's Royal Rifles no score was made in the first half, but soon after restarting the King's Dragoon Guards found the net with a good shot. The King's Royal Rifles pressed for the remainder of the play and in the last ten minutes scored 2 goals and won by 2 to 1.

On Tuesday both matches ended in pointless draws. Gordon Highlanders vs. 2nd North Staffords, and King's Regiment vs. 2nd Royal West Kents.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Referees' Association was held on the Calcutta Football Club ground last Friday evening. Mr. T. H. Richardson, of the Civil Engineering College, presided. All the leading European and Indian clubs were represented. The General Secretary, Mr. N. R. Bhattacharjee, read the Annual Report for 1911, which was unanimously adopted. The following Committees were elected :—

Hockey Committee.—Messrs. R. N. Bocquet, E. Studd, E. M. Slane, M. H. Carver, A. B. Rosser, Rev. Father J. Power, S.J., and Suhrwardy, with Mr. J. F. Hoggan (Customs) as Honorary Secretary.

Football Committee.—Messrs. T. C. Crawford, C. C. Bose, H. G. Pooler, C. H. Cody, A. McCready, A. C. Mookerjee, Prince Dara Jah Mirza and Captain C. C. Lamb. It was decided that this Committee will select its own Secretary later on.

Mr. N. R. Bhattacharjee was re-elected General Secretary of the Association.

AT their meeting at Queen's Club on the 29th January the joint committee of officials of the Oxford and Cambridge Athletic Clubs decided to put the weight from a circle having a 7 feet diameter instead of from a 9 feet square, and to surround this circle, both in the Hammer and the Weight, with a guard board instead of a chalk line. Only by the consent of both parties will this device be used at the sport this year. Otherwise it will come into operation at the meeting in 1913.

THERE is a remarkable development in the cricket dispute in Australia and we learn that another Australian team is to be formed to go to England and a fund opened to guarantee the expenses of this team. The members will be selected by Trumper, Armstrong and Hill independently of the Board of Control, and the fund already amounts to £700.

THE match between the M.C.C. and New South Wales began at Sydney on the 6th instant in perfect weather. New South Wales had first lease of the wickets and compiled 106, Foster taking seven wickets for 36 runs. The English team then went in and had made 183 for two at the close of the day's play. Continuing on Saturday they completed their first innings for 315 Rhodes made 119—a very sound display which included twelve fours. When stumps were drawn for the day New South Wales had put together 93 for one wicket, and on Monday they carried this total to 403 before they were all out. Gregory batted brilliantly, scoring 186 not out, including eighteen fours. Emery made 65 and Trumper 53. The match was concluded on Tuesday when the M. C. C. continued their second innings and made 195 runs for two wickets, thus winning by 8 wickets. Rhodes was again in great form and compiled 109 runs without a chance, his innings included fifteen fours. Gunn made 56 not out.

THE M.C.C. team visiting the Argentine began the first Test Match with Argentina at Buenos Ayres on Monday. The M.C.C. batted first and made 186. Argentina had put together 135 for 4 wickets when play closed for the day.

AN investigation of the life history of the tsetse fly was recently made by the Natal and Zululand Game Protection Association. The Association does not countenance the theory that the pest can be exterminated by clearing out game in an infected area. This theory assumes that game is necessary to the fly, but there is evidence to show that it can live on the blood of reptilia and upon certain vegetable juices, such as that of sugarcane. Apparently this noxious insect is attracted by vegetation of a certain character. It is also migratory, and the removal of game would not be likely to prevent domestic cattle being eventually attacked. The Association, however, has faith in the ability of the expert to produce immunising sera.

REFERRING to the new Protection of Animals Act, mention of which was made in last week's notes, it would be interesting to know how the clause which seems to affect the amateur angler might affect those strenuous "harvestors of the tide" who gain a precarious livelihood by long-lining for cod and other fish. These men bait their many-hooked lines with lug-worms, sand-eels, lamperns, etc., and, so far as we can see, by so doing they are quite as liable to be prosecuted under the Act as is the freshwater angler who uses squirming live-bait, wriggling worm, or aldermanic gentle. It appeared to us that the new Act required a considerable amount of understanding, and not a little amendment. But, having compared the Wild Animals in Captivity Act of 1900 with that which has recently come into force, and discovered that the former contains practically the identical wording to the clause which has proved so alarming to rodsmen of late, we are inclined to think that anglers in general have anticipated trouble from the New Act somewhat prematurely. The Act of 1900 did not affect anglers in any way whatsoever ; indeed, we very much doubt if one fisherman in a thousand was aware that such an Act existed. In any case, if an invitation to a good day's pike-fishing came along, we should, perchance, "snap at the bait."

ONE of the surprises which greets visitors to Khartum is the absence of mosquitoes, which are present in numbers in towns farther north less subject to rigid sanitary supervision. But the control of mosquitoes on the artificially irrigated farms of the district is a matter of much greater difficulty. On a large farm the gudwals or smaller irrigation canals, do not empty ; the water becomes stagnant, and affords ideal breeding places for the mosquito. A whole village has been attacked by malaria owing to the existence of a single stagnant gudwal ; but the farmer is usually of opinion that the mosquitoes cannot be controlled, except at considerable and (as he thinks) unnecessary expense. Various larvicides are cheap ; paraffin is one ; and the Panama mixture of carbolic acid, resin and soda cheaper still. An application of Panama mixture will kill all the mosquito larvæ in five minutes. The difficulty is to persuade farmers to be troubled with it. Mr. H. H. King, the Government Entomologist at Khartum, has endeavoured to find about the White Nile some species of fish which would emulate the example set by the Barbados "Gerardinus poecilioidies," a fish which has gained for itself a world-wide reputation as a mosquito destroyer under the name of "Millions." Several fish were tried. One identified as "Ophiocephalus obscurus" appeared to look on mosquito larvæ as its natural and only food, and it would be destined to emerge permanently from obscurity but for the fact that like some of the child actors in "Peter Pan" it insists on growing too big. It is good for swamps, but too large for gudwals.

BIG game shooting on the house tops is the latest form of divertissement in Islington! Last month an extraordinary scene was witnessed near Cattle Market. At 7 A.M. a truck load of cattle arrived at Maiden Lane Station, and while the animals were being driven to the Corporation slaughter-houses one of them—a young shorthorn bull—became frightened and dashing away from its fellows ran into one of the entrances to Camden Buildings, a four storey block of tenements at the corner of York Road, and clambered up the stone staircase. There was no one on the staircase, and none of the doors of the many tenements were open. The bull successfully passed several sharp turns and in a very short time the astonished drovers saw the animal running wildly to and fro on the flat roof 50ft. above, used ordinarily as a playground and drying ground. When the tenants of the buildings learnt what had happened they promptly barricaded their doors, and for a time they were prisoners.

The owner of the animal and several drovers made efforts to lasso the bull but without success. For about three hours it held the place against all attempts at capture. The roof is of considerable length and divided by various walls. These the animal cleared in its rushes from end to end. The drovers as they used their lassoes were on the other side of a 5ft. 6in. division, but the bull crashed through this and they were forced to seek refuge behind chimney stacks and then to make for the exits. By this time a great crowd had collected around the buildings and on adjoining roofs. A horse slaughterer was sent for and he, from a door leading on to the roof, fired no less than 13 shots into the wretched beast. The firing seemed merely to madden the animal and for a time it was feared that in one of the wild rushes it would throw itself into the street below.

About 10 o'clock a Service rifle was obtained from the local Territorial Headquarters. The first shot fired by a police inspector also seemed to have no effect, and the bull charged the inspector. A second shot brought the animal down. The carcase on the roof of a four-storey building was almost as embarrassing as the animal in life and had to be partly cut up before being brought to the ground. In its occupation of the roof the animal destroyed a chimney stack and various parts of the brickwork.

The nineteenth Championship Meeting of the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association was held last Saturday in the Eden Gardens, Calcutta and Dr. Gray and his committee are again to be congratulated on a big success. Entries were very large and a long programme of twenty-six events was run through without a hitch. An innovation this year was the gymnastic competition on Horizontal and Parallel Bars, open to all comers. The display was good and was won by Naik Dewa Singh of the 22nd Punjabis, the British Army supplied the second place with Sergeant Wilkie of the Black Watch and a civilian, M. G. Martin, was third. The athletic events were keenly contested throughout and new records were put up. Among the amateurs Leadon was not running in as good form as last year, for he was beaten in both the 100 yards and 220 yards by A. J. Duffy from Dacca in slower time than that in which Leadon won twelve months ago. He retained his title in the quarter mile, however, but here again his time was slower than last year. The half mile was won by Felix Rossetti in 2mins. 13secs., and the High Jump, for which H. E. Lord Hardinge had presented a handsome Challenge Cup this year, was taken by F. Ford, the St. Xavier's boy, who cleared 5 feet 7 inches. The handicaps worked out very fairly well, the 150 being won by W. L. Cooper from 6 yards and the 300 by F. V. Mahoney from 12. The latter was rather leniently treated. The Hurcle race was won by H. Van Spall, but none of the competitors showed good form. The Amateur Championship went to the Y. M. C. A. Calcutta Central Branch with 50 points.

The British Army Championship was won by the Royal Irish Rifles from Kamptee with 36 points, thanks to the fine performance of that champion Sergeant Miller, who was invincible at the shorter distance and won the 100, quarter and 600 yards His time in the 100 equally the Army record for the meeting, while he established new figures for the 600 yards, his time being 1min. 15⅘secs., which is one second better than the previous best, standing to the credit of Private Marshall since 1906. The 1,000 yards and mile were both won by Dr. Roberts of the 2nd King's Regiment. Private Mahoney and Lance-Corporal Fuller finishing second and third behind him in both races. In the 1,000 fresh figures were again recorded, the 2mins. 20⅖secs. put up so long ago as 1897 by that fine runner Private C. Checkley of the Black Watch being reduced to 2mins. 19⅗secs. The Relay race was won by the Dorsets and the 8th Mountain Battery again took the Tug-of-war.

The 93rd Burma Infantry carried all before them in the Native Army Championship. In the 100 yards they supplied the 1st, 2nd and 3rd men, Bagh Singh's time 10⅗secs. equalling the Native Army record. In the half Imam Din, a well-known performer at the Presidency meetings, was first, and Bishen Singh from the same regiment second. Imam Din won the quarter in 52⅕secs. equalling the record he established last year, Harman Singh and Bagh Singh also from the 93rd finishing second and third. The mile was won for the second year in succession by Naik Kaikar Singh of the 66th Punjabis with Jagat Singh of the same regiment second while Amar Singh got third place for the 93rd, who thus took the shield with 69 points, the 66th being runners up with 19.

The Schools Championship again went to St. Xavier's College, which makes their fourth successive victory and the tenth occasion on which they have won the shield. On Saturday, although unplaced in the 100 yards, they won the 220, were second in the High Jump and once more supplied first and second in the quarter mile. The 100 was won by the Calcutta Boys' School and the High Jump by St. Josephs High School.

Lady Jenkins gave away the prizes to the successful competitors at the conclusion of the meeting.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 2nd February 1912.

It has been a week of really good weather, of sun and clear sky, of dry ground, sharp wind and frost, and of hope partially realised; for the cockney skater has actually had one day's skating—the first for years. The sharp frost set in just after the floods in the Thames valley had reached their highest level, consequently thick ice on hundreds of acres of inundated land provided bracing pastime for thousands. In Regent's Park and Wimbledon I saw them at it—and it is a most unusual sight, these modern winters—and at many places round London the skaters last Tuesday had a merry time. But, alas! that night it thawed, and the skates are once more put away. While these good folk were making the best of their rare opportunity, racing in most places was at a standstill, two fairly important fixtures having to be abandoned.

The L. C. C. contemplate running special tramcars reserved for women only, and if the plan be adopted the motor-bus companies will no doubt follow suit. If we men were as selfish as we are said to be we might chuckle over the escape thus afforded from the perils of an ugly rush of suburban ladies journeying to the West End sales. But even in the chortling joy of our own prospective immunity we cannot picture without alarm the tragic conflicts that may happen when the fair creatures struggle between themselves in a mad endeavour to secure seats. Scrimmages may result, feathers fly, and hatpins be brandished in a dangerously practical spirit. Unless the L. C. C.'s innovation is accompanied by the French system of the queue with numbered tickets we can foresee long files of indignant and voluble females hurrying to the courts, carrying wisps of their own uprooted hair as irrefragable proof of the damage that has been done to them.

The L. C. C. have another work in view—the establishment of a technical school for English waiters. Amongst the subjects to be taught are French, arithmetic, and physical exercises. Arithmetic is indispensable if the English waiter is to compete with his Italian rival in the art of making 7s. 6d. and 2s. 9d. equal 14s. 3d. There used to be a fine old-crusted cashier at Evans's supper rooms who added up a customer's bill like this: "Steak, sir? A shilling. Potatoes? Threepence—one and three. Cheese, sir? No cheese—one and six. Stout, sir? Sixpence—two shillings. Bread, sir? No bread—two and six. Thank you, sir? Good-night, sir." Ah, departed old friend, had you survived till now, your nimble additions would have paid their ineffectual audacity before the acrobatic arithmetic of your foreign rivals. But why should the English waiter go in for physical exercises? Is it that he may be called upon to act as chucker-out?

Those who came home this year by the long sea route will be interested to hear that the evil repute of the Bay of Biscay is now a thing of the past. It seems that for donkeys' ears it has been grossly misrepresented and maligned. The idea has found expression in song and story that it is a vexed and stormy sea, where toll is taken of gallant vessels and their crews. This, however, is all a mistake. The Bay, according to "a well-known peer," is "like a mill pond." In all his experience of thirty voyages he has "never met with a sea with pleasanter manners." "A little freshness in the breeze maybe and white caps on the waves, but rough?—goodness me, never." Only to think that so many of us have, in a craven spirit, taken train across France rather than face the purely imaginary misconduct of one of the smoothest, nicest and most hospitable bits of water in the world. Shipwrecks?—non-sense. Tempests?—fiddle-sticks! Nothing of the sort. Only a calm, placid mill pond, incapable of producing a qualm, let alone of foundering a ship. Clearly this is the very place in which to spend one's week-ends. If any dissatisfied tripper wants billows he must go elsewhere. He cannot have them in the Bay even by paying extra. That is what the "well-known peer" says. But most well-known piers are much nearer to the English coast.

Should girls be told? It is a question of intimate concern to parents and guardians, a delicate question, proper to be discussed with a certain reserve. Is the playhouse a convenient place for such a discussion? Old-fashioned people will think not. Yet The Blindness of Virtue, at the Little Theatre, which discusses this delicate question, is not so offensive as old-fashioned people might be inclined, from its topic, to suspect. The reason is that Mr. Cosmo Hamilton's play is really a very ingenuous production, "childlike and bland." The personages are not really personages but sticks of barley-sugar. There is a saintly parson, of the robust order, pipe-smoking, back-slapping, "dear old fellow"-ing, mingling the unction of the pulpit with familiar slang. His wife is all devotion. His daughter is innocence itself. His cook is a guardian angel. A young village girl who has been led astray is all repentance. All of the purest sugar this vicarage household; it melts in the mouth.

There enters a young pupil, with a handle to his name, and a bad reputation from Eton and Oxford.

Is he really what the parson would call a "rotter" or merely a generous spirited boy misunderstood by narrow-minded schoolmasters and pedantic Dons? When the parson slaps him on the back, old-fellows him, and declares that a bad reputation from Eton and Oxford is the best evidence of sterling worth, the boy is won over, and reveals himself as barley-sugary as the rest. Young Miss at once falls in love with him, and (bless the little innocent!) comes into his bed-room to tell him so. Papa finds them, quite innocently, embracing, and, good foolish baby that he is, at once puts the worst construction on the act. A tragedy, he says, in his rhetorical pulpit manner, has happened in their home. And why? Because his daughter has never been "told." His wife had promised to "tell," but postponed the delicate business till the mischief, as the parson supposes, had been done. But, of course, the misunderstanding does not last long. A "straight talk," more slaps on the back, some fervid "old-fellow"-ing, soon put everything right. There will be wedding bells, and a vicarage world all barley-sugar for evermore. A harmless play, then, after all, despite its delicate topic, because it never handles that topic with any seriousness, with any sense of reality, with any other effect than turning it into a label for a packet of barley-sugar.

Mr. Charles Kenyon plays the parson with tremendous gusto; Mr. Owen Nares is quite pleasant as the boy; Miss Margery Maude charmingly fresh as the girl; Miss Beryl Faber quietly agreeable as the wife; and Miss Vollie Emery vastly amusing as the "mothering" cook. The little play was received last night with great favour.

Mr. Basil Macdonald Hastings, the author of a new play, "The New Sin," has two claims on our interest. First, he is a new native dramatist, a rare bird indeed in these days. Second, he has written a play without a woman in it. There he shows, at least, originality and daring. Mr. Hastings says, valiantly enough, that women are not necessary to theatrical salvation, and that if his play is a good play it will succeed, men only or no. Mr. Hastings has an almost touching confidence in the judgment of the public. Apart from the question of dramatic excellence, however, the deletion of feminine interest does seem peculiarly hazardous. We may have advanced in our dramatic taste, despite certain contrary appearances, beyond the stage of sugary conventions in love-making on the stage or of the unsavoury thraldom of sexual "problems." But women are less than ever a negligible factor in modern life. They no longer faint on sight of a mouse. But they break windows. They have a mind superior to mild flirtation. But they apply their talents to the organisation of riots. Everywhere, suffragist and anti-suffragist, they remind us forcibly of their presence and importance. Besides, they remain decorative, and not even the votes would deprive them of that characteristic. They add to the charm of life; they bring colour and grace and wonderful invention to relieve its drab dulness. To cut out the decorative element in the theatre, to do without "dresses by Mme. X——" and "hats by Miss Y——," does seem a stroke almost overbold. We wish Mr. Hastings very well, and—we shall see.

Miss Flora Sackville-West appeared at the Marble Arch House, where the arts are cultivated in the spirit of entente cordiale, as the inventor of a new and attractive form of conversazione—the causeries dansantes. The first of a series of six dealt with the dances of Ancient Greece and was introduced by a poetical dissertation on dancing as an art—an introduction so graceful that it might be used as the entrée en matière to every one of the following lectures. Gradually Miss Sackville-West led her audience back through centuries to old Greece and its place in the world of art, philosophy and literature. In the development of her theme, she showed not only a thorough knowledge, but also illuminated her French discourse with delicate flashes of wit and anecdotes of some of the ancient heroes and heroines whose personality had a great influence on choreographic art.

At the close of the causerie Miss Sackville-West shed the legal robe of a Portia and appeared in classic attire. Then Mlle. Phine de Nocker sang the "Hymne à Apollon" with piano and harp accompaniment and Miss Sackville-West danced the Sacred Dance "Emmelie," a slow and stately invocation. This was followed by two Greek songs by M. Ravel, delightfully rendered by Mlle. de Nocker, the second, "Tout Gai," being again interpreted in a joyous, airy dance by Miss Sackville-West. A beautiful solo by Saint-Saëns for the harp was admirably played by Mr. Arthur Jones, and the pianoforte accompaniments were well executed by Mr. Parlovitsch.

A large audience vividly betokened its sincere approval of this new form of art, and the next causerie which will deal with the fascinating folk of Romany Rye (Les Bohémiens) is looked forward to with great interest.

Wherever older playgoers met on Wednesday, and especially at the luncheon tables of the West End, the word passed round "Florence St. John is dead." It seemed to express and epitomise the passing of the old joyous days when Theatreland and Bohemia were interchangeable terms, and the sacred lamp of burlesque, the predecessor of the modern musical comedy, burned brightly, and with just a little twinkle. Those were the days before leading actors were knighted and when "legitimate" artists did not appear on the music-halls, which were not so "respectable" in those days. But many of the older generation lament the times that are past, and declare that the comedies then were wittier, and the burlesques cleverer, than those of to-day.

Most of the stage contemporaries of Florence St. John, in her greatest days, which were the 'eighties, are dead, or are living in retirement far from the glimpses of the "limes." To many younger playgoers she is but a name, if, indeed, they know her at all. But what memories are stirred by the news in the hearts of men who were gay and careless bachelors thirty and more years ago—in the days of "The Grand Duchess," "Madame Favart," "Madame Angot," and others of the kind, with their "champagney" music and sprightly, punning librettos.

Miss St. John's career was a romance excelled by few in the stage world. Married at fourteen, while on tour with a diorama, taking part in a ghost show, chasing a bogus manager while an angry audience was tearing up the seats, singing outside public-houses to support a dying husband—these were some of the experiences of the actress who was later to have London at her feet. Never, in the midst of her triumphs, did she forget her own fight against adversity, and her generosity was proverbial even on the stage, where it is so common a virtue. Miss St. John was three times married—to the late Mr. St. John, who died a few years after the late M. Marius, and (a few years ago) to Mr. Arthur Cohen, who is well known in the theatrical world. She died at the age of fifty-seven from heart failure following a severe nervous breakdown.

Mr. John Galsworthy is the British Brieux. His plays are dramatic presentations of social problems with the incidental comments of the artist and the observer. "The Pigeon," produced last Tuesday night at the Royalty Theatre, is second cousin to Brieux's "Les Bienfaiteurs"—a sad and almost despairing demonstration of the futility of charity, and still more of the futility of charity organisation.

Three wastrels fill the centre of Mr. Galsworthy's canvas—Guinevere Megan, a thriftless, moral—less flower girl; Timson, an elderly drunken cabman; and Ferrand, a French ne'er-do-well, a vagabond by instinct. In the first act they plant themselves, one after the other, on Wellwyn, a hopelessly kind-hearted artist. He is a man who cannot say "no" to a beggar, and who is happiest when he is being most evidently plucked—the pigeon, but the contented pigeon for all that. The daughter is naturally not so content. She adores him—Wellwyn, like all simple, foolish people, is altogether adorable—but she deplores his shabby clothes and his empty pockets. To save her father from the wastrels Ann calls in Professor Calway, a sort of Sydney Webb sociologist, Sir Thomas Hoxton, a stern J.P., and Canon Bertley, an amiable clergyman. But neither Wellwyn nor the wastrels will be saved. Timson is sent to jail, but he comes out only to get drunk again. Guinevere Megan will not live with her husband. She is sent to homes, but she runs away. Despite argument and appeal, Ferrand remains Ferrand, and Wellwyn Wellwyn. The play ends apparently with sardonic tragedy. But that is a superficial reading of its meaning. For "The Pigeon" is really a courageous and original essay in optimism. It is a declaration that men are greater than systems; that life overwhelms sociology, and that love is the one thing that matters.

Wellwyn, as played by Mr. Whitford Kane, is a rather tiresome duffer. Wellwyn as conceived by Mr. Galsworthy is something of a seer. The Ann of Miss Gladys Cooper is just a pretty, cheeky boyden. The Ann of Mr. Galsworthy stands for the common-sense persons who would leave the wastrel alone to work out his own destruction. Mr. Dennis Eadie, clever player as he is, was not quite convincing as Ferrand, and Miss Margaret Morris never showed as the real Guinevere Megan. The one real acting success of the production was made by Mr. Wilfred Shine, who played the drunken Timson with extraordinary understanding. But with it all, "The Pigeon" was interesting, far above the dead level of the every-day play with its threadbare motive and its artificial sentiment.

To be a yacht owner is generally thought to be one of the joys of life; but, like all other joys, it has its drawbacks. British yacht owners have just received a Home Office circular demanding, with penalties for default, a return of employés who suffer from ankylostemiasis, epitheliomatous disease of the skin, compressed air illness, nystagmus, and miner's bent knee. The last-named ailment is presumably the masculine variety of housemaid's knee, and it is possibly related to ankylostemiasis, which sounds as if it were something the matter with the ankle. All yachtsmen have their occasional tribulations; they have to encounter squalls in the harbour and confront the perils of the inner dock, but to have to master a dictionary of pathology is the crowning sorrow of all.

The Vagrant.

Shikar.

II.

"Since the Sirkar," said Banki Sah, shikari, "discountenanced the possession of guns—even our poor toredars, our rough muzzle-loaders, sometimes fired with a match, requiring skill, time and opportunity, also much blindness and patience in the quarry—we depend upon dogs, and the value of these has advanced in estimation. That is the reason I advised your honour to proceed without dogs, even the one who is accustomed more to home than the wilds, and who long for food first and frolic afterwards. A dog eager for squirrel, and who thinks he has done enough by barking away a stranger, can be taught higher things by force of example and some cuffs judiciously administered to suit his comprehension; and when a dog who is fond of ease and comfort and used to having his dinner brought to him punctually, finds that on the contrary he must work hard for it or go without, it is strange how soon he realises the fact and rises to the situation. Had your honour's dogs been brought along I should have had considerable trouble in keeping them from evil hands. To be sure, villagers in these hills are not experts in dog-stealing as the sweeper tribe are, but much can be done even here owing to the pressing need. Of course, we fear the sahibs, who also are specially wrathful where their dogs are concerned, and I have known one sahib who tarried a full week for his missing dog till all the village dispaired of his departure and the dog was miraculously found; but villagers are coming to learn that the laws protect them against inquisitive people, and at the worst a short time of detention could be borne."

"I know, Banki," I said, "that the sahibs now depend more on your hope of munificence than on your apprehensions, and that the jails are models of comfort. Still, there should be an objection to jails on any terms."

"There should be" said Banki slowly and thoughtfully; "but in any case jail terrors have been removed and those who steal dogs are usually of circumstances that make jails seem a change. The police, too, have to be well-behaved and must not make themselves disagreeable and obnoxious as a distinct trouble."

"But you should have enough dogs without stealing."

"They fall victims to leopards," said Banki, "sooner or later. There is hardly any dog that dies of old age. The leopards do not allow of that. It is true a dog of our parts—I have known of plains dogs growling at concealed leopards in their simplicity—our dogs know what a leopard is, but they can never keep from being inquisitive about any crouching near the homestead, waiting, and constantly run to the doorway to observe afresh, and so they are taken off almost from inside the house. Timely cries by the owner may cause the leopard to drop the dog, but sometimes people are unconscious of what is happening under their very noses, for the leopard is wise in being noiseless and expeditious, pressing the dog's neck hard to prevent him informing his friends of the outrage. Often the owner only awakens to the fact by a squeal in the distance when the enemy had perhaps made for a fresh hold in the assurance that all was safe. Most dogs consent to be taken almost without protest or lamentation, but one or two I know have put up a fight, and though it is unequal and can only end in one way, the people get aware of the scuffle and shout discordantly till the leopard reluctantly abandons the endeavour. A dog yet lives who bears the scars of half-a-dozen escapes, but that of course can never last."

"But what can dogs do in shikar without a backing of guns?"

"Much, your honour; and it is surprising how they recognise the necessity and understand what is wanted. They even assist for jungle fowl that fly off and against which mere legs are nowhere. The plan is for the villagers with sticks to enclose a suspected area in three lines and send the dogs in to trouble the fowl. I have known a wise dog look back at a weak point as being a flaw in the arrangement and advising that it should be remedied; and this same dog often disapproves of the area selected as not containing anything, declining to go in, trotting away to a place he knows, and inviting us to follow. And such is the respect for his opinion that we abandon our selection and accept his. When the fowl are disturbed they fly off, but are unable to keep long on the wing and soon settle down again, and fly again, and again settle, with the dogs urging them on towards the sticks, allowing no rest and causing over—exertion and perplexity. Jungle fowl are bagged thus; and as for hares, they stand even less chance. To see the dogs who suspect a hare nose about with industry and rapidity along the line of scent, giving us to understand that it is undoubtedly thereabouts and we should be ready to receive it, is astonishing when we consider that there seems to be no particular smell about a hare and we could never discover any though applied to our nostrils. Yes, they are all pariah dogs, sir, with no special training but an inheritance for hare, and a knowledge that they should play into the hands of their masters."

"Dogs are known, of course, to be all sense and intellect and in greater matters than shikar." And I briefly described life-savers, war sentinels, trackers, coadjutors in thievery, and so on; greatly to Banki's pleased admiration and marvelling, with a leaning for the dishonesties.

"They cannot speak," said Banki, "and that is all. As compensation they bring scent, instinct, speed, endurance, intrusion, and quickness in avoiding danger, such as from serpents. It is a difficulty for a snake to strike a dog on his prying muzzle if he has his wits about him, and he knows the art of harrying with safety to himself. But they are best when hunting in couples, and the way in which a dog will apprise his chum that he has seen something which should be attended to at once is remarkable. He comes to the other in a hurry and shows restlessness and starts off wildly, which is almost as plain as talk. The friend grasps the meaning and instantly accompanies him. There was a shikari in the days of guns who had wounded a deer very nearly the size, of a cow which made off, and his two dogs, who had been as silent as the grave pending the shot, rushed off and disappeared after it. After calling and waiting long he returned sadly, fearing the worst for the dogs, which he was confident had fallen to leopards. It was full four hours after that he was called hastily to the adjoining village, whither his dogs had carefully piloted the deer, one on either side. The marks on the deer's flanks proved that his escort had kept him on the line for inhabited country against his endeavours to break for the jungles, and they had maintained that position and terrific pace for nearly 10 miles, and having got the quarry where it was knocked over by the villages and saw their duty was over, they lay down beside the body fearfully exhausted. The deer was in the same case. Through what difficulties they had come was known only to themselves. They were recognised as belonging to the shikari, and word was joyously sent him, transmitted from point to point. In the meantime a Mahomedan of the village was called in to slaughter the deer according to his rites, so that he and his co-religionists there could participate—for it is customary for everybody to share in such windfall. The owner got a good portion, and the dogs first of all, and their exploit is remembered to this day."

"That was very well, and yet they do even better in the cause of knavery. A dog has been known to starve for two days rather than give up to the authorities property stolen from a shop for his master, and another to drive home another person's sheep circuitously for a whole night to avoid publicity and inconvenient questions, in both cases never giving away the master by recognising him on the way, but treating him as an utter stranger."

"Wonderful!" ejaculated Banki, grinning sight across his face. "We only know of dogs who are devoted and courageous virtuously. There was the dog which saved his master from no less an animal than a tiger. The tiger was anxious to get at the man, who was up a steep rock. It was a difficult task, but possible; but the dog had gone below, and, getting into a bush, so troubled the beast with feigned attacks, after once nipping his flank, and dodging amongst the bushes when turned upon, and coming up again each time he was let alone, that the tiger in trying at the rock was always in anxiety about his rear and could never give his full attention to the man. Perhaps he could have had the dog if he was not so anxious to keep sight of the man. After a short time of this work the man began to recover from his fright and paralysis, and, upon the tiger once again turning on his tormenter with an exasperated snarl which was much like an oath, crept away, and then ran very earnestly. At a great distance he stood and had the satisfaction of hearing the dog still barking whilst the tiger was seemingly trying for the rock in the impression that the man was there and pretending to have escaped. Still greater was his joy to find the dog rejoin him, but often looking back with regret that he had not finished the tiger off. That dog was worth a lakh of rupees, and all the village sorrowed when he met the usual fate, which was ignominious after he had faced a great foe."

Thus did Banki discourse, and I found it tolerable, though somewhat disposed at times to think of Ananias. But it is well not to be hard on shikari trails.

W. W.

ROUGH SHOOTING IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

Generally speaking, the above State cannot be called a very sporting country. One would expect its endless square miles of bush would be a harbour for all kinds of bird and animal life; but beyond the different varieties of kangaroo and wallaby there is little or none. On the more open plains of the east and north the wild turkey (great bustard) is found in plenty, and affords good sport with the rifle. There are numerous kangaroos, which provide coursing with greyhounds or the crosses there used for the purpose, and collectively known as "kangaroo dogs."

The south-west of the State is better watered, and the black swan is found there. It is somewhat scarce, so is quite rightly protected now or it would soon become extinct. Seeing that it is the emblematic bird of the country, that would be a pity. There are, however, plenty of duck. On Christmas Eve the wildfowling season commences on the inland waters and estuaries. The local gunner is more intent on the pot than sport for its own sake; and consequently the shooting in any fairly populated districts amounts to a persecution; still, one does not hear complaints that there is any falling off in numbers of the duck so far.

During my stay in the country the chance did not occur of any wildfowling, the camp at which I was settled being well in the heavy-timbered belt of karri and jarrah bush that runs from the neighbourhood of Bridgetown to the Warren River and to the coast. An early opportunity was taken to explore my surroundings, to see what could be done with the gun. Fortunately, my colleague on the work (railway construction) was a genuine sportsman and Nature lover. His knowledge of timber was profound. A keen and quick observer of all bird and animal life, he knew the many different species of even small birds in the Bush; nothing escaped his attention. He was no pot-hunter, his idea being hard work and something that wanted shooting.

There is a fair lot of kangaroo in the south-west forest country, and they grow to a much larger size than in the north-west. Kangaroo dogs stood very little chance, because of the high bracken fern. Had hounds been available, the Bush is scarcely rideable, owing to fallen timber and branches that are hidden by the fern. We had no rifles, and one cannot get near enough to use a 12-bore with effect; so, although on the first day the dogs got a doe that had been wounded by a shot from my friend, we abandoned kangaroo hunting, and confined our attention to wallaby found in the swamps. These only contain water in winter and spring. They are covered with paper bark trees and ti-tea scrub, which, although pronounced "tea," has nothing to do with the afternoon beverage. It is a feathery shrub, growing in height up to ten or twelve feet. In these places in summer the "pads" or "runs" of the wallaby are a regular network, like those in open thorn patches that are infested by rabbits at home. At first we tried walking through and trying to drive the wallaby, but that was useless; they always double back, and in this scrub cannot be seen by the guns. Eventually we found that a small terrier belonging to my friend was just the thing. The two, and sometimes three, guns took up positions round the swamps, and this little terrier, only about 12lb., would hunt up and down. The wallaby would sneak out of the covert and get away over the rises to neighbouring swamps, and when we learned the likely spots we got our chance at them. They go a good pace and dodge in and out of the herbage, so give some sporting shots. Many a time I longed for the team of working fox-terriers left at home. A team, however, could soon be got together there, and when entered to the work would be useful and show pretty hunting. Cockers are rather favourites about Perth. These would do the hunting well, but their colour would not be so good. It would not be ideal work for them; they would get wild, of course, but, as there is nothing legitimate for them to do there, except a few quail, that would scarcely matter.

Wallaby are said to be very good eating, but, as they are infested with round worm (Ascarides), we did not fancy them. Some of the navvies on the work considered them a delicacy. The skins are quite nice; seventy I have of them, which will make a rug about 6 feet 6 inches square, and will be very useful for future Bush life. Tanning these skins gave considerable interest, the medium used being the gum that exudes from the red gum tree—a eucalypt. The infusion is about the colour and consistency of cocoa as generally drunk. The skins are left in this from three to five weeks, but have to be carefully watched to see that they do not get overdone or the leather becomes rotten and tears easily. The hard work of the business is cleaning the inner side of the skin from all the fatty layer. After a shoot, with a dozen to twenty in hand and the weather perhaps a little warm and "muggy," no time can be lost; and this, in addition to one's daily round, makes things a bit strenuous. My "leather-stocking" friend was an old hand, having done a lot of tanning of 'possum and other skins; he instructed me into the "secrets and mysteries" of tanning as practised in the Bush; otherwise success would scarcely have crowned my apprentice efforts as it did. The species of wallaby in this district is the quagga; the tamma is another found further north, and is bigger and has a better fur—in fact, almost as good as 'possum.

We were moved to some fresh work at Kattaning, and I was looking forward to getting some tamma there, but had to return to England. However, the day may come. Wallaby are as destructive to crops and as plentiful almost as rabbits at home, so one has no compunction about thinning them down. The shooting may not be high class, but it makes a break in the monotony of camp life, and an interest and zest to the days that are so good to look back on spent face to face with Nature in the Bush.—WILL RAMBLE in Shooting Times.

Fishing.

GREAT GAME DISTRICTS.

BRITISH COLUMBIA, says Mr. J. P. Babcock, Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries for the Province, has a coast line of over 7,000 miles, and is the source of the Columbia, Fraser, Thompson, Skeena, and many other large but less known rivers, containing fresh water lakes of great extent, like the Kootenay, Okanagan, Quesnal, Shuswap, and the Harrison, besides thousands of lesser lakes, and it is not surprising that she should stand at the head of the Province of Canada in the wealth of her game fishes. The salmon products of the Province alone amount to from 3,000,000dols to 5,000,000dols per year. In the year 1905 upwards of 33,000,000 of salmon that were bred in her waters were captured. Two of her five species of salmon may be taken with troll or fly. The fresh waters of the interior of British Columbia teem with the only true trout indigenous to the waters of Canada. Her game fishes comprise two species of salmon, several species of trout, and two char, one of which is not indigenous to Eastern Canada. Of the salmon, only two—the "Spring" and the "Coho"—are of particular interest to anglers, because the other three species cannot be taken with any lure. The "Spring" or "Tyee" salmon of the Province is the largest and gamest of the salmon family. It is the one known in Oregon as the "Chinook" or the "Columbia," in California as the "Quinnat," and in Alaska as the "King" or "Tyee." It freely takes the troll in fresh or salt water, and occasionally rises to an artificial fly. Sir Wm. Musgrave killed a specimen with rod and line at the mouth of Campbell River in September, 1897, that weighed 70lbs. and measured 4ft 3in. in length. A plaster cast of this magnificent fish may be seen in the Provincial Museum in Victoria.

A great many of these powerful salmon, weighing from a few pounds to sixty odd, are taken every year by anglers in the salt water reaches from Victoria to the waters at the extreme northern end of Vancouver Island and all along the coast of the mainland. More are taken in the vicinity of Victoria, Vancouver, Cowichan Bay, and the mouth of Campbell River, because they are more fished for. At some seasons of the year they may be taken in every estuary and at the mouth of almost every river in the Province. The best months are from July to November. At many points on the coast of Vancouver Island they are taken as early as February. The Indians of the west coast, during the early spring, keep the markets of Victoria and Vancouver well supplied with these big fish which they catch with hook and line. During the greater portion of the year the fresh fish trade of the two cities named is supplied with both spring and coho salmon, caught with hook and line. The latter are more numerous than the former, and, while of smaller size generally, are just as game, and very sweet eating. Indeed, many anglers consider the coho more game than the spring salmon. It is often stated that the Pacific salmon do not take a fly, but, having caught both the spring and coho salmon in the Province with a fly, the writer feels justified in denying this statement. Trolling with rod and line in fresh and salt waters is, however, the favourite method in use amongst anglers for catching salmon in the Province. Few anglers appear to have sufficient patience to try for salmon with a fly, possibly because trolling produces many more fish with much less effort. I have no doubt that the same amount of energy and persistence one sees displayed on Eastern Canadian, English, and Scotch salmon rivers by anglers who have to depend upon the fly to take the fish would raise an equal number of salmon in the estuaries and rivers of British Columbia. One familiar with bait-casting methods wonders that it is not more practised in the waters of the Province, as it is an easy matter to place one's boat or canoe in waters where the salmon are breaching with great frequency, and where a spoon can easily be placed within their sight. The water best known and frequented for the capture of large spring or tyee salmon is at the mouth of Campbell River, a river teeming with most excellent fish, on the eastern coast of Vancouver Island, just south of Seymour Narrows and north of Cape Mudge, where in July and August one may see anglers from every clime hunting for record fish. Like most other coast points, one may reach this place by steamers either from Vancouver or Victoria, though many go there and to other points along the coast in their own yachts. Campbell River holds the record for big fish, but for numbers one may do as well at many other points along the coast. That large expanse of water which lies to the north of Vancouver Island is seldom fished by anglers, though the rivers that there empty into the sea are all salmon rivers, some of which produce as many spring and coho salmon as the mighty Fraser itself. On the mainland, the Harrison River, above the city of Vancouver, is the most accessible and productive water for those who desire to take salmon with a fly. Very few spring salmon are there taken by that method, but one may take a good many coho in October and even as late as November.

The trout of British Columbia comprise most of the recognised varieties of the Pacific coast, though varying greatly in colouring and markings; and because of these and other slight modifications present many difficulties to the ichthyologist, so that it is not surprising that the fisherman finds it difficult to determine just which variety of trout he is catching; but, notwithstanding the doubts he may have upon that score, he will never be in doubt as to the game qualities of whatever variety of trout he may be engaged with in the waters of the Province. The steel-head trout of the Province more closely resembles in habit, form, and colour the salmon of Europe than any other fish found in the Pacific. By a few writers the steel-head is many sections is still classed as a Pacific salmon. It, like the Pacific salmon, is generally anadromous, and spawns only in fresh water; but, unlike the Pacific salmon, it survives spawning and returns to the sea, where it remains until it again comes into fresh water to spawn. In the Kootenay and Okanagan lakes the steel-head variety is very common, and does not go to salt water at all. Specimens of the steel-head taken from salt water are commonly seen in the markets of Vancouver and Victoria during the winter and spring months. They run from four to twenty pounds in weight, though occasional specimens weighing as high as thirty-two pounds have been taken. As a game fish, many anglers, including the writer, consider the steel-head the gamest fish taken in fresh waters. The numerous varieties of trout found in the upper tributaries of the Fraser and Thompson rivers, and in the great lakes and streams that belong to the Columbia watershed, within the Province, are not easily distinguished one from another. As already stated, the large specimens taken from the great lakes, in technical character follow very closely the sea run of the steel-head; yet one also finds specimens with the well-known markings of the cut-throat and rainbow varieties. Because of the many differences in colour, form, and habit, they are given many names, and offer a productive field for the student who delights in fine differentiations.—Shooting Times.

Shooting.

THE OMMUNDSEN BATTLE SIGHT.

A good deal of interest has been aroused in a new sight for military rifles devised by Mr. Ommundsen. The explanations in the papers are rather hard to follow, and the frequently recurring expression "negative angle," must sorely puzzle a great many people. I will therefore endeavour to describe the contrivance in simple language, and at the same time give my humble opinion as to its utility.

Instead of having a sight which can be set at various elevations, according to the range, the backsight is fixed permanently at such an elevation that the highest point of the trajectory curve shall be about 11 feet, or twice the height of an average man. The actual range then that the rifle is set for will vary according to its ballistics: the range will, for instance, be much longer with the Ross-Eley than with the Lee-Enfield, on account of the flatter trajectory. Having your elevation fixed, if you want to shoot at a man who is nearer than the rifle is sighted for, you measure his apparent height with the foresight, and shoot that amount below Aim. If the man is near, he looks bigger, and therefore the nearer he is the lower you aim. The whole idea is simple enough, but to make it effective the rifle must have a very flat trajectory so that a curve with a calminating point of 11 feet may give a long range.

Two weak points at once strike one: the man has to stand up, for you to measure him, and shoot the right distance low, and there is the great disadvantage of always having to aim off the object.

The inventor claims, I believe, that his sight will be most effective for field artillery and the heavy ordnance of battle ships. In my opinion it would not be the least good for artillery of any kind. Field guns, in these days, do most of their fighting from behind cover: folds of the ground generally allowing of concealment. The target fired at is therefore not visible from the battery at all, and the guns are given quadrant elevation, while direction is maintained by laying, for line only, on some convenient and conspicuous object, on one or other flank of the battery. On the infrequent occasions when direct fire might be employed, it would be most improbable that there would be anything to shoot at of which the height was known. Anyhow the whole method is too ridiculously rough and ready to be any use at really long range. For naval guns, which will be used frequently in future battles at ranges of 10,000 and 12,000 yards, the notion of applying the Ommundsen sight is even more absurd. If the side of the hostile vessel is the object taken, its apparent height will vary with every passing wave. With all artillery, wind and state of the atmosphere are serious factors in long range shooting, and have to be calculated for. The best results are achieved by judicious splitting up of the several duties. An officer corrects elevation and direction generally from the fire control station, while one man lays the gun for direction, and another puts on the elevation passed down. The Ommundsen sight would bring back the old bad system of one man doing everything, a rotten principle calculated to enormously multiply personal error.

For sporting rifles the Ommundsen sight does not appear promising: having to lay off the object is especially objectionable. Also a rifle sighted on this principle would obviously be of little use for shooting at animals of varying sizes. Sporting rifles for large game have now such extremely flat trajectories that all the old difficulties as to giving the right elevation have disappeared. With the .280 Ross-Eley, for instance, one fixed sight can be used successfully up to 300 yards, the foresight being taken full or fine according to the distance. I am sure no one wants to shoot at game further off than this.

Third Day, Saturday, 17th February 1912.

THE Meeting was brought to a conclusion with a capital afternoon's sport to-day. It has been a most successful fixture and there is every indication that in the future the Allahabad races will be as popular a meet as any in Northern India. The excellence of the arrangements rewarded the untiring labours of Captain Kerans. The public were able to spot most of the winners to-day and some excitement was provided in the Naini Plate. Gaddy and Black Peter fell and left Rupert and Claudia in front. Rupert brought his rider down at one of the fences and Claudia looked like winning easily. However Rupert was remounted and steadily gained on his opponent who relaxed at the last fence and left Rupert to win comfortably. Captain Johnson and Mr. Thomas had two wins—Pioneer Plate with Prince Charlie and the Quibble Cup with Maori King. Captain Furnell rode the latter and also steered Scotch Girl to victory in the St. Leger Plate. The Royal Scots were "at home" with their band. Results:—

ASSOCIATION RULES.

DELAYED through the recent wintry weather in the north and midlands, the completion of the first round of the Association Cup was reached last Thursday—nearly a fortnight after the date arranged for the opening stage of the competition. Out of sixteen First League clubs which could have qualified for the second round no fewer than fourteen have earned that distinction, the field of 32 also comprising nine Second League clubs and (including Portsmouth, who belong to the second division) seven representatives of the Southern League. Considering the number of First Leaguers surviving, fortune, in the draw for the second round of ties which are to be decided next Saturday, has not been very kind to that body, only six of the fourteen clubs enjoying choice of ground, whereas of nine Second Leaguers six have had the luck to be drawn at home. Quite the best of the sixteen games promises to be that at Derby, where Derby County, the conquerors of Newcastle United and the leading club in the Second League, oppose Blackburn Rovers, who stand at the head of the First League. Chelsea encounter Bradford City at Valley Parade, where Queen's Park Rangers received their dismissal from the Cup, and West Ham United visit Middlesbrough, who have not been beaten at home this season. In these two instances the prospects of the London clubs appear far from hopeful, but at Craven Cottage Fulham should pull through against Liverpool and Crystal Palace may possibly overcome Sunderland.

For their early dismissal from the Cup competition, Woolwich Arsenal are enjoying some consolation in a marked improvement in their League record. A week ago the Woolwich team surprised everybody by beating Newcastle United at Newcastle and that success they followed up on Saturday with a victory over Sheffield United. Naturally enough the Arsenal depended upon the same eleven that had won at Newcastle, Common acting as centre forward, Greenaway and Flanagan forming the right wing, and Thomson and McKinnon assisting Ducat at half. For a long time the defence on each side proved too strong for the attack, the first half being nearly at an end when Kitchen scored for Sheffield. Before the interval, however Greenaway had equalised and on crossing over two goals by Common left the Arsenal with a handsome revenge for the defeat inflicted upon them at Bramall Lane early in the season.

In drawing with Blackburn Rovers at Ewood Park, Tottenham Hotspur accomplished almost as satisfactory a performance as that of the Arsenal, for on the Blackburn ground this season no visiting club had succeeded in gaining a victory, and the large majority appearing there had found themselves compelled to admit defeat. Hotspur, who were without Minter, enjoyed a fair share of the game up to the interval, but had to act mainly on the defensive on change of ends. Indeed, with good shooting, the Rovers could scarcely have failed to win, but there was some weakness near goal, and such shots as came to him, Lunn dealt with admirably. Thus, without ever looking likely to win, the Tottenham men halved the points with their formidable rivals.

Contrary to expectation, Everton failed to beat Aston Villa at Goodison Park and Newcastle United at Hyde Road could only draw with Manchester City. Sunderland, however, at Roker Park inflicted upon Manchester United the most severe defeat sustained by the League champions this season. None the worse for their strenuous efforts in the Cup tie on Thursday, Sheffield Wednesday beat Notts County in decisive fashion, and Middlesbrough won at Gigg Lane, where Bury had to admit their fifteenth reverse in the course of twenty-two matches. Oldham Athletic gave further proof of their recent improvement by holding their rivals at Bradford, and Bolton Wanderers for the second time this season overcame Preston North End, West Bromwich Albion at home also beating Liverpool, as they had done at Anfield Road in September.

Of the first six clubs in the Second Division of the League prior to Saturday's matches Chelsea alone were successful, and in consequence some changes have taken place. Thanks to a draw at Huddersfield, Derby County are still at the head of affairs, Chelsea being level on points with them, but not having such a good record by reason of an extra match fulfilled and an inferior goal average. The London club, however, are in a good position, a point ahead of Burnley and two in front of Hull City. Burnley went down at Grimsby before Grimsby Town, who earlier in the week had suffered defeat on their own ground at the hands of Leeds City, so that the result of yesterday's game was scarcely in accordance with form. Grimsby Town have done well against Burnley this season, the previous game between the clubs at Turf Moor being drawn. Although playing on their own ground Hull City could do no better than draw with Barnsley, who gave them a fine game. Following Chelsea's lead, Clapton Orient, with a fine win over Wolverhampton Wanderers, made an advance of two places and are now fifth on the list, only four points below the leaders. Fulham, however, were beaten at Blackpool and lost ground again just when they seemed likely to hold their own.

Form was completely upheld in the Southern League the only three victorious visiting teams being those standing at the head of the competition. Northampton had the hardest task in opposing the Crystal Palace at Sydenham and they accomplished a performance equalled by no other side this season. Crystal Palace enjoyed a good opportunity of getting in the running for the championship, but now their prospect of high honours has disappeared. Although without Harold Fleming, who is suffering from an injured knee, which prevented him taking part in the international trial match early in the week, Swindon played fine football and were always appreciably the better side than Southampton, who had three goals scored against them before forcing home an attack. Queen's Park Rangers won at New Brompton, an achievement that is now by no means out of the ordinary. They are still four points behind Swindon with a game in hand, so that, if a reverse overtakes the leaders and the London club maintain their winning sequence, the Wiltshire team may experience great difficulty in retaining their title. CORINTHIANS vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—The Corinthians beat Cambridge University at Queen's Club on Saturday by three goals to none.

It was a fast game from start to finish and the football was always interesting to watch. The ground had dried up surprisingly after the recent heavy rains, and as there was an entire absence of wind accurate passing was the rule rather than the exception. The Corinthians had decidedly the better of the game all through, and, although they were scarcely at full strength, they gave a fine all-round display. S. H. Day was the most prominent of a good line of forwards, but R. A. Young is not so dangerous a player as a centre as he is on the wing. He is the type of player who wants plenty of room; he rather lacks experience of the short passing game of the inside forwards.

The defence was sound all through, and C. D. Melver was in particularly good form at half-back. V. G. Thew showed a fine turn of speed at back and was always just too fast for C. Law on the outside left wing for Cambridge. J. N. Cranstoun had very few difficult shots to deal with, but his clearances were full of method. This was the first match that Cambridge had played this term, and the team as a whole showed up fairly well, though their forwards failed in front of goal. They did not have many opportunities, it is true, but there seemed to be a hesitancy about their methods, a fault which has been such a marked feature of their play this season. Their new centre, A. S. Dawe, is certainly not an improvement on M. Woosnam, who is a strong and bustling player. The chief fault seems to be with the inside forwards, who are frequently out of position when an opening is made.

The half-backs were distinctly good, and the backs seem to understand each other thoroughly. R. G. Thompson has improved very considerably. S. Baker on Saturday rather hesitated at times as to what he was going to do, but usually got out of any difficulty satisfactorily. E. R. Hopewell gave a creditable display in goal, although he might possibly have saved the first goal, which R. A. Young headed from a very well-placed corner kick.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. OLD CARTHUSIANS.—At Oxford the University eleven beat a weak team representing the Old Carthusians by one goal to nothing. The Dark Blues made one change in their side, James, a Freshman, taking the place of Anderson at centre forward. The ground was very heavy. Nothing was scored in the first half, and it was not until a quarter of an hour before the end that Gow obtained the only goal of the match. The defence of both sides was, considering the conditions, quite sound, but the backs kicking and tackling as well the goalkeepers had little to do. Oxford University, 1; Old Carthusians, 0.

RUGBY RULES.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

CUMBERLAND vs. YORKSHIRE.—More than usual interest attached to the meeting of these teams at Kendal, for Yorkshire had only to win to make certain of finishing on top in the Northern section of the competition. As it happened, however, they were just beaten by the narrow margin of a point—Cumberland scoring a placed goal to a dropped goal—and, as Northumberland defeated Lancashire, at North Shields, Northumberland, thus heads the division. In the opening half Cumberland forwards were in fine form, the ball coming out on their side much more often than on that of the Yorkshiremen. Weakness at half-back, however, lost Cumberland several chances. On one occasion Yorkshire nearly scored, Cumberland just saving at the corner flag, and at half-time neither side could claim any advantage. For a long time after change of ends Yorkshire pressed in most determined fashion, but the Cumberland defence was very sound, Bell in particular giving a great display. At length, F. Steinthal dropped a goal in glorious fashion for Yorkshire, and this seemed likely to win them the game, but Walter Dixon got over for Cumberland, and, with Bell placing a goal, Cumberland won a splendid game. Cumberland, 5 points; Yorkshire, 4 points.

NORTHUMBERLAND vs. LANCASHIRE.—Teams representing these counties met at North Shields, in the presence of 2,000 spectators. Cold weather prevailed and the ground was hard and covered slightly with snow. Northumberland began in fine style and had much the better of the game for the first quarter of an hour, but after that Lancashire were seen to excellent advantage and in quick succession H. Robinson and A. Robinson scored tries. In neither case was the place-kick successful. Even play followed, but towards half-time Northumberland had the ball more often than their opponents. Their three-quarters were weak, however, and, finishing badly, failed to get over, so that at the interval Lancashire led by 6 points to nothing. After change of ends, Heads went full-back for Northumberland and Robb played centre three-quarter. These alterations had a marked effect upon the run of the game. In a quarter of an hour the scores were level, Thompson and Robb scoring unconverted tries for Northumberland. Then Thompson and Roberts got over, both these tries being improved upon by Alexander. After that Lancashire rallied splendidly and Entwistle and Haywood scored unimproved tries for them. The result, therefore, was a splendid victory for Northumberland by 2 goals and 2 tries to 4 tries. Northumberland, 16 points; Lancashire, 12 points.

BLACKHEATH vs. HARLEQUINS.—The Harlequins took their revenge at the Rectory Field for their defeat in the first match by beating Blackheath by a placed goal and a try to a penalty goal and a try. Lambert and Sibree, of the Harlequins, and Coverdale, of Blackheath, were away through injuries. The game was played under very favourable conditions, and there was a record attendance. The Harlequins went off in a great dash and pressed, but a quarter of an hour elapsed before they could score, Stoop then making a beautiful opening for Brougham, who obtained an unconverted try. A few minutes later Knight equalised with a goal from a penalty kick, and the sides crossed over level. Early in the second half Stoop made a great run almost to the Blackheath line and passed to Birkett, who scored in a good position, and R. Ward placed a goal. Then Dodds from his own 25 made a great run through and transferred to Neale, who made another grand effort, finishing with a pass to Stokes, who scored for Blackheath. The place kick failed. After this the Blackheath backs did some excellent work, and made some very clean passing runs, but they could not break through the Harlequins' defence. The home forwards played in characteristic style, and frequently spoiled the Harlequins' attacks. Neither set of backs did themselves justice, the attempts at passing being rather poor, but it was a grim struggle kept up strenuously to the end. Harlequins, 8 points; Blackheath, 6 points.

OLD LEYSIANS vs. ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S H.—Although led at half-time by the difference between a dropped goal and a try, the Old Leysians having to play against the wind throughout the first portion of the match, readily asserted themselves in the second half at Wandsworth to finally maintain their unbeaten record this season by 17 points to 4. It was curious that the dropped goal gained by the Hospital was the clever work of Williams himself, an Old Leysian scholar. Quite early after the change of ends, B. H. Holloway dropped a goal for the home side, and this good work was followed up by Bell and Walker on opposite wings gaining tries from which Mellor easily placed goals. Bell's try was a truly magnificent piece of work. Quite early he was nearly forced over the touch line, and saved the situation by swerving in and out of the clutches of his would-be tacklers, finally grounding the ball between the posts. The visitors had a strong, heavy pack, who had the best of it in the scrums, and their half-backs got the ball on many occasions, but outside there was no comparison when once the Leysian backs handled the ball. Ultimately the Old Leysians won by 3 goals (1 dropped) and 1 try to 1 dropped goal. Old Leysians, 17 points; Bart's, 4 points.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. UNITED SERVICES.—In this game at Oxford the University had a moderate side, only six Old Blues turning out. The Services had a capital fifteen and proved much too fast for the Dark Blues. In the first half Royle crossed the University line and Coltar placed a goal. Afterwards the Services, though losing Church, who was injured, had all the better of matters. Collier obtained a couple of tries, and W. de-Gery and Wodehouse also crossed the Oxford line. Wodehouse converted two of the tries, and in the end the Services won by three goals and two tries to nothing. In the later stages the Oxford men showed better form, but taking the match through they were outplayed. United Services, 21 points; Oxford University, 0 points.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. RICHMOND.—Richmond, after having the better of the struggle in this game at Richmond for two-thirds of the time, were well beaten by Cambridge in the concluding twenty minutes of the game and lost by 2 goals and 3 tries to 2 tries. It was not by any means a good game. Most of the play was scrambling and disappointing but throughout the opening half the Richmond forwards had much the better of the play, and with the chances that came to them, their side ought to have scored more points than they did. The Richmond backs failed badly with their passing time after time. Plant got over with a try shortly before the interval, but it was not improved. Early in the second half Richmond, again having had the better of much scrambling play, scored again, Woodhead gaining an unconverted try, but then the Cambridge men suddenly found their form, and, playing admirably together for the rest of the time, they had Richmond well beaten. During the last twenty minutes they were always in possession of the ball, and the good work done by their forwards was so well taken up by their backs that much nicely-managed passing landed Hill in with three tries and MacIntosh in with two others, and two of them were converted. Cambridge University, 19 points; Richmond, 6 points.

ATHLETICS AND CROSS-COUNTRY.

BLACKHEATH HARRIERS gained a double victory on Saturday over the Cambridge University Hare and Hounds. In the first and second team matches alike the winning side had the five scorers in the first six men home. In the first team match at Blackheath (where the Cantabs were beaten by 18 points to 57) the first six men were: C. H. Baxter, C. A. Glaesser (Blackheath), H. W. C. Lloyd (Cambridge), J. R. Barrowclough, C. A. Wickham Jones and E. F. Judson (Blackheath). Baxter's time for the seven miles was 42mins. 4secs.

At Long Eaton the Midland Counties' junior cross-country championship was won, in a field of 200 runners, representing twenty clubs, by the Thrapston Harriers with 97 points to the Derby and County's 156 points, and the Birchfield Harriers' 168 points. S. C. Greenaway (Banbury Harriers) was first man home. His time for the six and a half miles course was 39mins. 9secs.

The north-eastern cross-country championships at Stockton-on-Tees were won as follow: Seniors—Darlington Harriers (F. H. Reay, of Sanderland, finishing first). Juniors—Saltwell Harriers (Urwin, of Blaydon, being first man home).

At Roehampton the Thames Hare and Hounds four and three-quarter miles challenge cup race was won by the old Cambridge University cross-country Blue, A. R. Pearson (holder), in 29mins. 55secs. beating C. H. Camden-Noad, a previous holder, by 21secs.

The Highgate Harriers ten miles championship at Colder's Green was won by the Scottish international, T. Johnston, in 58mins. 44secs. and the Polytechnic Harriers' ten miles championship went to C. O. Read, in 61mins. 34secs.

An inter-team walking race of eight miles, under the auspices of the North London Harriers, was won by the Middlesex A.C., with the low score of 19 points, to North London's 46. H. V. L. Rose, of the winning team, finished first in 62mins. 23secs.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

LAST Monday night was Mr. A. F. Bettinson's "benefit" at the National Sporting Club, and a delightfully varied entertainment was presented, although the actual fights were of minor consequence.

However, of the serious contests, that between Joe Bowker and Charles Ledoux, the bantam-weight champion of France, was better worth watching than the average championship struggle. Bowker is not so young and fast as he was, and the Frenchman, who is a miniature edition of Harry Lewis (the French style is obviously Americanized) and adopts the crouching attitude, won easily, thanks to a very useful left and a terrific right. Bowker was knocked out in the tenth round.

The amateur vs. professional bouts were unusually entertaining. Gunner Moir had distinctly the worst of his engagement with Mr. W. Hazell, the amateur heavy-weight champion and Mr. R. G. Warnes was quite as effective in his quiet, business-like way with M. Wells, whose victory over Welsh revealed the existence of an English boxer with the physique as well as the skill required for conquering such abnormal American fighters as Wolgast. In the other exhibition bouts the professionals were much cleverer than their opponents, and in one case the affair was made into a burlesque of boxing, a form of low comedy that nobody really cares to see.

The meeting of Mr. H. Bowers, the amateur light-weight champion and a boxer as skilful as he is strenuous, and Jim Driscoll was far and away the most artistic episode in the evening's sport. Driscoll was as swift and evasive as ever, but he knew better than to reduce his opponent to absurdity.

Appended are details of the contest between Bowker and Ledoux:—

1st round.—Bowker seemed a trifle the taller, but the Frenchman looked the stronger. The contest started at top speed, and finer two-handed boxing could not well be imagined. Bowker used his left with lightning rapidity and with considerable effect, once sending his man to the ropes with three successive left-handed blows. It was exceedingly pretty boxing.

2nd round.—The Frenchman was as smart as the ex-world champion, but his leads frequently miscarried, and always Bowker was on him like lightning. He had had considerably the better of the first round, and had nearly all the point-gathering, and again he started off this round in very sprightly fashion. The Frenchman depended almost exclusively on his right, which was really a very useful member, but it seemed to be a mistake to lead with it when Bowker was so agile with his left. This was again easily Bowker's round. The Frenchman had connected with his right once or twice, but it was always when Bowker was retreating.

3rd round.—The Frenchman changed his method of attack, and used his left more. The pace slowed down for a little while, but there was always plenty of strenuous work when the men got to close quarters. The Frenchman crouched a good deal now, but his right was always dangerous, and he was constantly looking for an opening. This was a much more even round, each man scoring about an equal number of points.

4th round.—Extreme quickness was the chief characteristic of this round. The Frenchman did a good deal of the leading, but it was not so much had direction as the cleverness of Bowker, which caused him to so frequently miss. But the Frenchman, now that he had changed his style, was doing very much better, and frequently he worried Bowker very considerably. His rushing was always well executed. In the middle the men stopped for a second to shake hands—the sequel to a somewhat low blow by the Frenchman, who immediately held out his hand. Bowker was not so ahead on points at the end of this round.

5th round.—Beautiful feinting by the Frenchman, who used his left with effect, marked the opening. Ledoux is the possessor of a long reach, and this he used in very clever fashion. But there was never a moment when Bowker did not use his left, and once, when he was forced into a corner, he used his head in convincing fashion in getting out of difficulties. This round was a shade in favour of Ledoux.

6th round.—For little men the blows were heavy enough to suit anyone. At the opening it was all Bowker's left—he did little at all with his right, but he was exceedingly clever in dodging out of distance, and then rushing in with his left. Bowker seemed to think that the best method of attack was defence, and often he scored at the instant when his opponent was swinging his right. The boxing was still very clever, and Bowker had more of his own way in this round.

7th round.—The boxing in the middle portion of this meeting is entitled to the description hurricane. The Frenchman was obviously looking for a chance to land his right, and frequently he swung; but at a moment when he appeared to be most dangerous Bowker would rush in and spoil his plans. Bowker was indeed boxing with the maximum of skill, and scored so frequently that the round was easily his.

8th round.—For the first minute it was all Bowker, but then for a space the Frenchman livened up, and took a very decided hand. But several times he leapt into Bowker's electrical left. There was a breathless second when the Englishman was forced to the ropes. Ledoux did all he knew to get in one of his right-handed blows, but Bowker managed to get out of a very tight corner, although not without losing a little.

9th round.—The Frenchman at this stage was the more active of the two, and he did most of the leading. Then came the sensation. Bowker before the end of the round was down six times, and on the majority of the occasions took nearly all the seconds available. The blow which sent Bowker down first was a terrific one, which came from underneath, and caught Bowker full on the chin. He looked to be out, but then six successive smashes met him, and each time he went down. The Frenchman was wildly excited, and could only with difficulty be kept away from his opponent. Bowker displayed the maximum of courage, but it was the bell which saved him, although the end was inevitable.

10th round.—This was a round full of drama. Five times Bowker went to the boards, twice for six seconds, and once each for seven and eight seconds. It was always right swings which sent him down, but with it all he managed to get in his left once or twice. Ledoux was much more restrained now, and hung on the ropes whilst his opponent crawled to his feet. After being down five times Mr. Douglas rightly interfered, stopped the contest, and declared Ledoux the winner. Bowker boxed with plenty of courage, but there was never any hope for him after the first of the sequence of right-handed blows.

Polo.

NATIVE CAVALRY POLO TOURNAMENT.

THIRTEEN teams entered for the Native Polo Tournament at Umballa and the first round was opened on the 12th instant when five games were down for decision. The 2nd Lancers who were drawn against the 4th Cavalry were unable to put in an appearance and the 4th Cavalry had a walk over. The 3rd Skinner's Horse met the 9th Hodson's Horse "A" and a good game was expected, but to the general surprise the 3rd showed exceptionally fine form. Their combination was superb and they went away from their opponents' right from the start and eventually won by 7 goals to one. The game between the 1st Lancers and 17th Cavalry was a runaway affair for the 17th who were much too strong for the 1st and scoring steadily throughout the game, won by 12 goals to nil. The 11th Lancers and 18th Lancers put up a very good game, the 19th, though a young team, gave a good account of themselves and were beaten 6—3. The remaining match of the first round was between the 18th and 30th Lancers and was a very closely contested game throughout. It was the 30th's first appearance in any Northern India tournament and they gave a good display. Play was level in the first three chukkers, the 30th leading at half time by 2 goals to one. Then the 18th got going and scored four goals in the next two periods. The 30th could only add one more in the last chukker and were beaten 5 to 3. Both Nathe Singh of the 30th and Ralston of the 18th received blows over the eye from the ball but pluckily continued playing to the end.

TRAILL & CO., 20, British Indian Street, CALCUTTA.

The four games in the second round were played off on the 14th instant and were witnessed by a large gathering of spectators. The 9th Hodson's Horse and the 30th Lancers were "At Home" and the Band of the West Ridings was in attendance. The 7th Lancers and 9th Hodson's Horse "B" team who had drawn byes in the first round were drawn together in the second the 9th winning by 8 goals to nil. It was a hard galloping and well contested game but the shooting of the 7th was very poor indeed and accuracy in the direction would have made considerable alteration in the score sheet, as they missed many opportunities. The 17th Lancers and 17th Cavalry put up a hard fought game which closed in favour of the 17th by 4 goals to one. The first and third period were very level and no score was registered. In the second the 17th put on two goals, in the fourth the 37th notched their only point, and the 17th scoring a goal in each of the remaining chukkers won as stated. The two Meerut representatives, the 3rd Skinner's Horse and 18th Lancers were expected to give a good game and the spectators were not disappointed. It was fast and well contested throughout. The score was level with 3 all at half time and then the 3rd pulled ahead scoring a point in the fourth period and another in the fifth. The 18th got another at the beginning of the last chukker, but before time was called the 3rd had put on two more goals and thus won by 7 goals to 4. The match between the 4th Cavalry and 11th Lancers was the most exciting game of the day. The 11th went away at the start, scoring 3 goals in the opening chukker. They got another in the second, at the close of which the score stood at 4 to 2. The 4th equalised in the third, but just before half time the 11th again got the lead. There was no score in the fourth and fifth and the sixth provided some most exciting play, time being called with the score 6 all. The goals were then widened and the game resumed, a prolonged scrimmage in front of the Lancers' posts ending in the 4th Cavalry scoring the winning goal.

The semi-finals were played on the 14th instant, when a big gathering assembled on the polo ground, among those present being General and Mrs. Pirie and many other notabilities. The 9th Hodson's Horse and 30th Lancers dispensed hospitality and the Band of the 23rd Pioneers was an additional attraction. The first game was between the 17th Cavalry and the 9th Hodson's Horse "B" team. The 17th were better mounted and were superior in combination to their opponents. The 9th nevertheless, played hard all through, but had to admit defeat by 11 goals to 1. The 3rd Skinner's Horse and 4th Cavalry match ended in favour of the 3rd, who played in splendid form, their combination being excellent, while they were much better mounted than their opponents. Final score: 3rd Skinner's Horse 5 goals, 4th Cavalry 1 goal.

The final was decided on the 19th instant in the presence of a big gathering of spectators. The 9th Hodson's Horse and 30th Lancers were "At Home" and the King's Dragoon Guards Band played a fine selection of music. The game was well contested throughout and ended in a win for the 17th Cavalry by 4 goals to 3. After the game General Pirie congratulated the teams and Mrs. Pirie handed the Cup to the winners.

First Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Second Chukker.—Midfield play till the 17th got on and scored in a scrimmage. The 3rd then pressed but the 17th cleared and working the ball back Atkinson hit their second goal.

Third Chukker.—The 17th scored with a long shot. Then the 3rd asserted themselves and playing a more combined game notched a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—This was a very level period. Both teams were making great efforts and the 17th managed to add to their total.

Fifth Chukker.—The 3rd were playing well up to their form in this chukker and forced the 17th to hit behind, Conway-Gordon scoring from the penalty shot.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play till the 3rd got on and put the ball through. They pressed for the rest of the game, but were unable to get on terms and were thus beaten 4 to 3. Teams:—

BY APPOINTMENT To H.M. THE KING.

A commendable feature about Lemco is its marvellous "keeping properties." Even in the tropics opened jars keep absolutely fresh and pure. This phenomenon is not due to preservatives, but to beef purity and perfect concentration. Food reliability reaches its topmost point in Lemco. Replace the cork to keep out dust.

Football.

THE MADRAS ASSOCIATION TOURNAMENT.

THE Gymkhana Association Football Tournament opened on the Island on the 12th instant, when the "A." and "B." teams of the Leicestershire Regiment met in the first round. The result was a foregone conclusion and the score of 5 goals to nil gives a very fair idea of the respective merits of the teams. "A" team scored 3 goals in the first half and two after the interval, Shingler (2) and Barton being credited with three points, the two others being obtained from penalty kicks.

On Tuesday the 13th the Madras Gymkhana met the Perambore Library. The Gymkhana were the heavier team and had more knowledge of the game, but Perambore were extremely quick on the ball and gave a most creditable display against their more powerful opponents. They lacked combination, and had their forwards not hung on to the ball for so long they might have scored. The Gymkhana won by a goal to nil, the point being netted by Probyn shortly before half time.

The Leicesters "A" team played the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry on the 14th instant and a fair game was witnessed. Fast play characterised the opening stages and the Oxfords looked like scoring, but they were unable to get through and the Leicesters took up the attack. The Oxfords cleared and up and down play followed, till Baker got away and scored for the Leicesters. They kept up the pressure and Shingler netted, Barton adding a third point before the interval. In the second half the Leicesters continued their attack and the Oxfords were kept busy defending throughout. They gave a good account of themselves and Dixon was only beaten once more, Baker putting through. The Leicesters thus won by 4 goals to nil.

The Gymkhana and the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders met in the semi-final on Thursday last. The Gymkhana pressed at the start and Edmonds scored. A corner followed but nothing came of it and play was transferred to midfield. Up and down play till Sutherland equalised. The Gymkhana were next prominent but could not get through. both teams were doing their utmost to secure a lead and this was obtained for the Camerons by Anderson, who headed the ball in just before the interval. On changing ends the soldiers scored again. The Gymkhana, nothing daunted, made great efforts to get through but they lost chances and were at length driven back to the defensive. Shortly before time a fierce scrimmage in front of the Gymkhana goal resulted in the Camerons putting through once more and they thus won by 4 goals to 1.

The final between the Leicesters A team and the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders was played on Saturday, the Scotch team defeating the holders by a goal to nil. It was a very evenly contested game: the Leicesters had the upper hand in the first half but on changing ends the Camerons had most of the play and the only goal of the match was scored by Sutherland a few minutes before time was called. Lady Hammick presented the cup to the winning team, and Brigadier General Bond made a short speech. Teams:—

CAMERON HIGHLANDERS.—Currie, goal; Robertson and Lumsden, backs; Broadfoot, Major and Cooper, half-backs; Doherty, Cuthbert, Sutherland, Martin and Anderson, forwards.

LEICESTER "A." TEAM.—Owen, goal; Sergt. Dooley and Corpl. Faulks, backs; Cliffe, Lucas and Sergt. Sutherland Pickering, half-backs; Wantie, Butler, Barton, Sergt. Shingler and Steele, forwards. Referee:—Mr. A. S. Todd.

CALCUTTA LADIES' GOLF CLUB.

DOUBLE COMPETITION.—Played last Thursday for two prizes presented by Mrs. Hannaford the present Lady champion. Partners and opponents were drawn for and the couples received half their combined handicaps. There was a large entry—16 couples and Mrs. Peddie and Mrs. G. Robertson were the successful competitors. The following are a few of the best scores:—

Mrs. Peddie and Mrs. G. Robertson	...	78 – 8½ = 67
Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Martelli	...	86 – 4 = 74
Mrs. Cowan and Mrs. Wheeler	...	86 – 9 = 77
Mrs. T. P. Stewart and Mrs. G. Watson	...	90 – 12½ = 77½
Mrs. Bates and Mrs. A. Windsor	...	83 – 5½ = 77½
Mrs. Hope Stewart and Mrs E. A. Watson	...	81 – 3½ = 77½
Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Wanklyn	...	91 – 14 = 78
Mrs. Begg and Mrs. P. Walker	...	81 – 2½ = 78½

Mrs. Bates is the successful competitor in the January—February running Bogie competition—2 up on Bogie.

THE annual "At Home" was held at the Club House on the maidan on Tuesday, the 20th instant. There was a large number of guests and Her Excellency Lady Hardinge arrived at 5 o'clock and distributed the prizes among the winners of the various competitions held during the year. The men had a nine hole competition, which resulted in a tie for first place between Mr. A. Mann and Mr. J. D. Gatheral with 33 each. They tossed for the prize and Mr. Mann was victorious. Lady Jenkins gave away the prizes in these events. The "At Home" was a huge success, the arrangements perfect, and the entertainment much enjoyed by all present. Lady Hardinge has presented a Cup to the Club to be played for annually and to be called the Hardinge Cup. This gift it is needless to add is much appreciated by members of the Club.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Monday evening saw the opening of the eighth Hockey League competition, and judging by the form displayed generally, the season promises to produce some keen struggles. The 40th Pathans, who have taken the place of the 27th Punjabis, the latter having left Alipore, appear to have a magnificent team, which includes four European officers. The Pathans were to have met the Customs in their first engagement, but the match was postponed. The Alipore men, however, paid the Customs a visit and the Riversiders put out a scratch side and a friendly was played. The Customs, it is true, were minus three of their regular players; but the result—five to nil in favour of the Pathans—came as a surprise. The Customs always take some time in settling down, and on Monday they seemed to be all ends up during the closing stages of the game. But any team who can beat the Customs must be reckoned with. The Pathans' left inner, an Indian who is over six three, is not only very speedy but has splendid control over the ball, and in addition is a hard and accurate shot. Against the Customs he netted three out of the five goals and on the evening's play was undoubtedly the best man on the field. The Customs will have to play for all they are worth to beat this team in the League. The Rangers beat the Orientals by four goals to one in their first League encounter, but it was only during the last ten minutes of the game that the Rangers held the upper hand. Calcutta are said to be stronger than they were last year, but I doubt if the Club will annex the Beighton Cup. Hockey is not a game for the old 'uns and 12 and 13st. men are useless against younger and lighter opponents. Calcutta are too slow and much too heavy a team to expect to go one better than they have done. A few more of the Pike and Coxon class men are wanting in the team. On Tuesday, Calcutta drew with St. Xavier's, the score being two all, but on the evening's play the boys should have won. St. Xavier's have a good team, but on Tuesday five of their regular players were absentees.

Sibpur the present holders of the League Cup, will not be as strong as they were last year, having lost Darrell, the centre forward, Sennett, the left half, Cyril Fox, their right full, and McGinn, their goalie. These vacancies have been filled up by the new students, but it will take some time before they settle down.

The Medicals have also lost four of last year's team, but two out of the four substitutes are said to be better than those who have left. The Medicals it will be remembered tied with Sibpur for first place last year and were only beaten in the re-play.

The Amateurs are another team who again will show well. They lost to the Rangers last year in the final of the Beighton after a hard struggle, and as several of last year's players are available, the side should do well. Jahans their centre forward is a brother to the famous Naini Tal Volunteer player. The Orientals should also do better than they did last year.

Boxing.

BOXING IN BOMBAY.

Thanks to the efforts of members of Messrs. John Roberts and Co., who managed the whole affair, the evening's boxing on Tuesday the 13th instant at the Empire Theatre Bombay was quite a success. More than a fair number of enthusiasts turned up and the chief items in particular were very bright: some of the others were poor, but mainly due to bad matches in weight. Inability of certain men to fulfil their engagement is the prime difficulty of promoters, and this crept in here. Anyhow, the programme was well worth sitting through and all we want is "more." The Union Jack Club must have received good assistance for their funds, and the object is a deserving one.

The Hon'ble Mr. Hill Trevor is not new to local audiences as a Referee and was assisted by a good ring performer in Captain Leahy with Lieutenant Knight Bruce as Judges, Mr Taylor of the R. N. was M. C. and Sergeant Thomas the Time-keeper.

Of the six fights, the chief was naturally that for the Western India Middles Championship between that well-known and one-time champion Sergeant Chapman, late of the Royal Horse Artillery and Blake of the Norfolks, who gave a good account of himself in Delhi. This was a really hard-fought go without dull intervals, and a survival of the fittest, Blake taking some hefty wallops early and then staying on the better. There was not a great variety of blows struck, the superior in this respect being Chapman, who went more for the body and several times narrowly missed the desired spot. He got his man down for 6 in the second round with a heavy right cross counter, but Blake revived. Subsequently Chapman showed himself much below his old form and was weak in evading rushes, which from the 6th round onwards were him out. In the 8th he went down three times, to rise with difficulty; in fact, time saved him on the last occasion. With great gameness he came up for the next, very groggy, and after going down for 9 the Referee wisely stopped further punishment. Blake was thus a substantial winner and showed himself perfectly trained. He has no originality, goes purely for the head and is untiring in his rushes; he got his man on the ropes many times, but did not pay enough attention to where he landed. He is now champion, but will have a tough proposition in Nolan of the Dublin Fus. who has more than a fair claim to the title. I am sorry to hear that Melville, in his capacity as Police Inspector, is not allowed to have his cut in.

Though no title was attached to it, the meeting between Makins of L. N. Lancs and Strickland of the 14th Hussars was eagerly looked forward to, as the former won a close set to in Delhi. Slightly heavier but at a disadvantage in years, Strickland tried early to put to full use his superior strength. He rushed his man to the ropes and made things lively, but Makins held to his old style and covered well, though a cut showed on his cheek bone. In the second the latter began to retaliate more with short rights, and in the third the end came. He landed a pretty right to the abdomen and a moment later another right on the mark, sending Strickland down for the count.

In each half of the programme Mr. Wilkins' gave exhibitions of wrestling with Private Clements, in-catch-as-catch-can and Jiu Jitsu. Each hold was explained, which undoubtedly did much to stir up some interest in this sport.

Further boxing events resulted as follows:—Volunteer Windsor beat Volunteer Brown on points through his longer reach. Private Hudson, L. N. Lancs, met Private Donovan, Dublin F., but this was stopped in round 2 as they were judged to be only sparring. Corporal McGann beat Signaller Windsor, R. N., knocking him out in round 3 and being a stone heavier. Private Isaacs, Warwicks, beat Bombardier Chittrell, R. N. L. I., the winner a stone heavier. Chittrell was leading on points but was knocked out in round 5.

THE POINTER.

A REQUEST to give some information as to the origin of the pointer and where it came from affords an opportunity to attack a whole lot of very erroneous conclusions, which have been passed along by writer after writer, apparently for no other reason than that no one has ever taken the trouble to make any personal investigation, but preferred the easy way of all predecessors by saying the pointer originally came from Spain. We get our pointers from England, of that there is no question, but to say that the English pointer came from Spain is altogether wrong. Some reached there from Spain; that needs no discussion, but all Latin Europe had pointers, and so had Germany, and so had England, writes James Watson in the Philadelphia Enquirer. I am pretty well convinced that Italy first began shooting flying and made use of the dog we now call pointers. That country was well ahead of any other in the development of what the English called the fowling piece, and I had a small engraving which dated back well towards 1600 by an Italian artist representing shooting at flying partridges with pointers in front of the sportsmen. Not only that, but in Jacobbo Bassano's painting of Moses striking the rock, which is in the Dresden gallery, there is an excellent representation of a liver and white pointer, a dog quite fit to put in the ring with dogs of the present day.

Bassano takes us back to 1550, as he was born in 1510, and died in 1592. It is no fancy picture. I mean to say it must have been either a dog he well knew or it was a typical dog of the period. In the picture there are a white Arabian horse, a mule, a donkey, two lambs, a rabbit and a rooster, all so true to life that it would take the very best of our present day animal painters to do anything like equal work. Then you need only say that a man who would so faithfully represent all these animals must be credited with faithfully reproducing things he knew well. There was no use for the pointer as a pointer until the quick-firing gun began to be developed up to which time guns were fired from a rest, and the process of firing the gun was slow and called for several different things to be done to fire the powder. Even when the improvement came there was nothing like what we have, or even what our grandparents had in the flint lock, but it was a decided step in advance and it did permit of shooting from the shoulder, and from this quite naturally followed shooting on the wing.

Up to this time the setter had been the only dog used with partridges, but not to shoot over. He was still the setting spaniel used to "set" the covey, and over the birds a net was drawn. This sounds rather like pot hunting to us, but there were ethics of sport in those days, and the right thing to do was to make a selection of such as were in the best condition for the table and let the rest go. This setter was not quite what was wanted for the gun, but there had been in use for many years tracking hounds, which had developed the pointing instinct and stood the game, not birds, but animals of the chase. By years of parental education these dogs came naturally by this, showing by their standing and pointing. Perhaps it will be better to give a quotation from a print engraved for Blome's book, published in 1640. He is speaking of the tracking hound whose duty was to go on a lead in the early morning, pick up the slot of the deer or other animal, and trace it to where the deer had "harbored" for the day. The man with the hound then returned to the head huntsman and reported where the deer was. The hounds were taken there in couples, and the deer was "unharbored," driven out for the chase. The quotation referred to is as follows: "Some are of that nature that when they have found the game they will stand still till the huntsman comes up, to whom in silence, by their face, tail and eye, they show the game." What is that but pointing. And that was originally written early in the seventeenth century, and possibly earlier.

These tracking hounds were used all over Europe; in France they used basse hounds, which I am very sure were the real St. Hubert hound, not the legendary dog usually supposed to have been of that breed. Ridinger gives several illustrations of this deer tracking in Germany, and at the same time he illustrates the pointers of Germany. I have some half dozen of these illustrations, showing several differently named pointing dogs, and the question as to their work is set at rest by their being shown pointing partridges and pheasants. These French and German dogs are much lighter, as shown on almost every illustration that I have seen, than the Spanish pointer, as typically illustrated by Stubbs, or as usually described in books of that period. What we know about them is that they were slow and sluggish, but had good noses. Some described them as being peculiar from other dogs in having a split nose, but I have come across that feature as being claimed specially for German dogs, and within the past week read in a good English work of a hundred years ago that the split nose was peculiar to the French variety of pointer.

It will be seen from this that published information has not been in the least reliable. The fact is that there is hardly a single reiterated assertion regarding pointers which has for the last century passed muster as a fact which is absolutely reliable. For instance, you will find in every dog book, with but few exceptions, the statement that flying shooting was introduced into England by an impoverished baron, who had brought some Portuguese pointers there some little time before Sydenham Edwardes published this statement originally in 1806. This has ever since been accepted as gospel truth by bookwriters. Even Rawdon Lee, in Modern Dogs, repeated it within the past decade. To refute that it is only necessary to turn to the poems of Guy, who in 1711 wrote the poem "Rural Sports," and described faithfully the actions of the pointer in the field, as well as the sportsman shooting flying. He was describing an every-day incident in the sporting field of that time, and one is at liberty to form his own estimate as to how long before that period there were pointers and wing shooting in England for a poet to recognize it as an everyday affair.

I did read some time ago in one of the old sporting magazines, 1796, if I remember correctly, that the flint lock was in operation in the fourteenth century, but that seems to be too far back. However, as soon as sportsmen had that contrivance put on their "arquebuses" shooting flying at once followed, and to accommodate the man who wanted to find where the game was, this self-educated tracking dog was still further developed. In European countries he had several names, and in England alone he was named the Pointer. He was just as much an English dog as any other dog in that country, and bore no more affinity to the Spanish dog than did either the French, the German or the Italian dog used for the same purpose, each of these having a distinct name.

The best evidence one can get in the way of back tracking in the way of breed history is in paintings. Poets and descriptive writers used phrases which may now be misinterpreted, but when you get a painting, such as the Bassano above referred to, or anything of a like nature, you get on canvas what the artist knew of what he actually had before him. It is by this total absence of any pictures showing pug-faced black and tan spaniels we know that King Charles never had any of what we now call King Charles Spaniels. The spaniels he fancied were snippy-faced, small, leggy, liver or black and white spaniels, bearing not the slightest resemblance to what we see at Dog Shows as English toy spaniels.

WISDEN'S ALMANACK.

THE indispensable companion of the cricketer and follower of the great summer pastime, "Wisden's Almanack," has just made its 49th annual appearance, replete with every fact and figure that can possibly be wanted in connection with it. The history of the game is a bulky business, and it is a waste of words to say the publication is cheap, when it is stated that there are over 500 crowded pages, no line but which contains a fact.

The index to the book betrays the international character of the pastime. "Five members of the M. C. C. team in Australia," form the frontispiece—F. R. Foster, Kinneir, Mead, Strudwick, and Hearne—and later there are chapters on the Germantown (U. S. A.) Tour, M. C. C. in the West Indies, the South Africans in Australia, and others dealing with the game in Australia, South Africa, India, and America—a sufficient indication surely of how popular the game really is.

"Never in an English summer has there been so much sunshine as in 1911," says the Editor in his notes, "cricket flourished. Assuredly there was nothing to justify the attitude of the pessimists who, during the winter, had argued that the game was declining and could only be saved by drastic alterations in the rules. The methods of the modern batsman make one wish that the change in the law of 'Leg before wicket' brought forward by the M. C. C. in 1901 had obtained the requisite two-thirds majority at Lords, but apart from this I can see nothing in modern cricket that needs the interference of a reformer. The fact that in such an abnormal season only thirty-five county matches out of one hundred and eighty were left unfinished, shows that practically every match was played on its own merits without any undue regard to decimal points at the end of August. Personally I was opposed to the plan, proposed by Somerset and adopted by the Counties, of giving points on the first innings in drawn matches, but I think it led to more interesting play. As nothing is known to the contrary, I presume it will be given a further trial in 1912. The most important result of the new system of scoring was that Warwickshire carried off the championship.

"Under any of the old methods Kent would have come out first, and even as it was they only lost by a fraction. It was certainly a good thing for cricket that the Championship should have gone to one of the outside counties. People had come to the belief that only Kent, Yorkshire, Lancashire, Surrey, Notts, and Middlesex had any chance of taking first honors, and the success of Warwickshire, entirely unexpected as it was, may have far-reaching effects. The immediate result was to make Birmingham, for the first time, really enthusiastic on the subject of cricket. Such sudden devotion, following on years of lethargy, is not very convincing to old-fashioned cricketers, but we must hope for the best. I do not think there is much fear of Birmingham cooling down if F. R. Foster can be induced to go on playing for the next five or six years. The importance of Warwickshire having an England cricketer as captain can scarcely be over-estimated."

To those who are interested in records, the pages dealing with Mr. Archibald Campbell MacLaren in first-class cricket will doubtless appeal very strongly. The figures, indeed, are so interesting that one may be excused for reproducing what some are apt to regard as very dry reading. Since 1890 Mr. MacLaren's record in England has been as follows:—

Matches.	Innings.	Times not out.	Total runs.	Most in an innings.	Average.
569	614	42	18,388	424	32·06

It is almost needless to add, for every cricketer must know it, that the score of 424 was made by Mr. MacLaren for Lancashire against Somerset at Taunton in 1896, and stands, to this day a record, the nearest approach to which is C. W. Gregory's innings of 383 made for New South Wales against Queensland at Brisbane in the season 1906-7. Three times Mr. MacLaren has toured in Australia, and his record for these shows that in fifty-five innings he scored 2,696 runs for an average of 51·84 and with a highest innings of 228. Summarized, his first-class cricket career over a period of twenty-one years is as follows:—

Matches.	Inn.	Times not out.	Total runs.	Most in an inn.	100's.	50's.	Avg.
490	669	46	21,034	424	45	90	33·70

Figures cannot tell all that Mr. MacLaren has done for the game, but those given in the Almanack are at least indicative of his wonderful powers as a batsman.

Another glance at the scores and analysis of the matches played by the South African cricketers in Australia in the winter 1910-11 only serves to strengthen the opinion that the googlie bowler cannot hope for much success in Australia. Apart from Dr. Hordern's remarkable success in the first of the present series of Test matches at Sydney, the googlie bowler has not proved very deadly in that country.

With a very heavy programme to be dealt with next summer, which includes the nine Test matches in connection with the Imperial Cricket Contest between England, Australia and South Africa, and the possibility of new records being set up, the current issue of "Wisden's" should prove of very great value to the cricket enthusiast.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

At the Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Turf Club on Thursday last, the 22nd instant, the alterations in the draft programme submitted by the Stewards were not numerous, the principal of them having been that the value of H.I.M. the King-Emperor's Cup remains as it was last season, namely, Rs. 20,000 to the winner and has not been reduced to Rs. 15,000 as proposed—a decision upon which the C.T.C. are to be felicitated, for it did not seem meet and fitting that there should be any race in the cards of greater value in added money than the King-Emperor's Cup. Personally we think that it would be better if the value of this race were increased to a round £2,000 which, after all, is not a great deal of money to a wealthy club like the C.T.C. The Zeerut Plate (pony hurdles) run at the First Extra and which was formerly a terms race has been changed into a handicap and the increases in values, penalties and allowances outlined in a previous note as regards the December Plate and the Wellesley Plate have been carried. A proposal brought forward by Sir A. A. Apear that the top weight in first-class handicaps on the flat should be limited to a maximum of 9st. 12lb. was negatived by a very narrow margin, amongst supporters of the proposal, besides the mover, having been Mr. R. Boteler, senior stipendiary steward to the C.T.C., and many other prominent racing members. But established custom dies hard in Calcutta and a useful and badly-needed reform was lost. The stewards elected for season 1912-13 were Sir Apear A. Apear, Sir Allan Arthur, the Hon'ble C. H. Kesteven, Mr. G. B. Deakin, and Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson. The only change is that Mr. Macpherson takes the place of Mr. Dudley B. Myers, who is going Home this hot weather. Mr. Myers has done a lot of hard work during his period of office and has proved himself a most energetic and painstaking official. Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson does not now hold office for the first time, as he was a steward of the C.T.C. in season 1910-11 and was succeeded by Mr. Dudley Myers in 1911-12: and he has also since then officiated temporarily upon more than one occasion. At the same meeting the resignation of Mr. R. G. Bates, the Official Starter, was announced much to everyone's regret, as Mr. Bates is the best starter that the C.T.C. have ever had, and when he was appointed in succession to Mr. F. Beaty, a number of years ago, a successful period of office was prophesied for him. These expectations have been most amply fulfilled, for good starting has been an outstanding feature of the Calcutta Meetings since Mr. Bates' appointment. The reason for his resignation we do not deem it necessary to specifically mention, it being sufficient to say that Mr. Bates considers that reason an ample one. When Lord Durham was in Calcutta during the past cold weather he complimented Mr. Bates upon the excellence of his work and even went further and said that a starter of his great skill was badly needed at Home, where, according to Mr. Hulton, who spoke upon this subject at the Gimcrack Dinner, the starting is at present very bad indeed. Lord Durham said the same thing. Mr. Bates has been very popular with all classes of racing men, both owners and professionals, and the almost unbroken run of success that he has had is the best testimonial to his worth. Mr. S. Griffiths is another official of the C.T.C. who will be missing next season, as the senior official handicapper has decided to retire to his own country, Australia, the Indian climate not suiting his constitution. Mr. Griffiths has done good work since he has held office, even if he has at times made mistakes, and he will be a loss to the C.T.C. We understand that an endeavour will be made to find some one at Home to take Mr. Griffiths' place and with the yearly increasing numbers of English horses it is perhaps desirable that an official with an intimate knowledge of the English form should be appointed to act in consort with Colonel P. K. L. Beaver. No name has yet been definitely mentioned, but we believe that a prominent official of the C.T.C. has put forward a suggestion and that the gentleman recommended by him will probably be approached.

The racing at the Calcutta Seventh Extra Meeting was good of its kind, though fields were small in some races and there was not a very big crowd of spectators. T.S.H. Prince and Princess William of Sweden and their suite were present as also a large number of prominent officials and the consular body was in force. The weather was propitious and there was a cool south breeze blowing across the course most of the afternoon. Fields were greatly cut down by numerous scratchings at the last moment and what promised on the acceptance list to be a fairly full card dwindled somewhat. Of the six left in the Kalighat Plate, which came first on the list, only five went, Pat C. being the absentee. Village Girl was about the only one backed, though there was a little money for Etna and Lady Ratcliffe at fours and Beryl found a few friends at a point longer odds. The favourite never gave anything a chance and leading throughout won comfortably from Lady Ratcliffe and Winnie R. who were close together. Etna and Beryl were last the whole way, the latter never seeming to get on her legs at all.

Of the six left in the Fourth Selling Handicap both Spook and Red Tape were struck out and the ringmen then were taking the odds about the untrustworthy Speedometer. The horse yet once again ran an arrant cur, as he totally declined to gallop until pursuit of the outsider Sacristan II. was quite hopeless and he was handsomely beaten by two lengths, Sacristan II. having led practically all the way. On being put up for sale after the race the winner failed to attract any bid. He is an old horse and an ex-winner of the Metropolitan and his owner is lucky to have managed to catch a race with him in the autumn of the old veteran's career.

In the Middleton Plate of the eleven left in over night four were struck out, Hughie, Up Guards, Rupert and Winna, the last of which seemed to hold a good chance, but the stable apparently considered old Lady Grey II. good enough, as she was the only one they left in and she started level favourite with one they left in and she started level favourite with Moira at 5 to 2. Moira won all the way and was followed home by Ngakapa, Lady Anne and May Kenley, Lady Grey II. failing to connect. Ngakapa was well backed in some quarters for a place at 6 to 4 and his S.P. straight out was 6 to 1.

The pen was very busy in the next race, in which there were a dozen left in, but the field was cut down to six, Kilmarnock, Foudrette, Santoinette, Hughie, Tana and Sacricomar all declining the contest. Kilmarnock was the only one we gave any chance to against the topweight Black Buck, but as Thomas had the winner in the stable there was no point in knocking "Mr. Lauder's" nice-looking chestnut about. Black Buck, who was ridden by Firth, started at 2 to 1 on and at one time was at 3 to 1 on. The horse won easily from Wise Hawk, who was the only one in the field that made any sort of show against him; Elpis running third and the "Monsooner" Mahoney Boy fourth. Rapin was backed in this race and started second favourite, but ran very badly and was never in the hunt.

The biggest field of the day turned out for the Elgin Plate, for which ten were stripped, Mahoney Boy, Whin, Royal Colours, Lady Grey II. and Sacristan II. being the absentees. When betting opened there was a good deal of money for The Witch and she was backed down to 7 to 4 and later 6 to 4, there being plenty of it for her both ways. Bomb was at 7 to 2 at the start and Ruling Passion at "fours" whilst just before the start there was a stray bet or two for Pressy from the right quarter. Make Haste III., the Cooch Behar mare, was on offer at eights and twos right up to the finish. She was sent on ahead to the post by permission of the Stewards and she played up considerably in the paddock before she was finally got on to the course. She caused a general scattering and had finally to be backed through the gate way. In the race it is said that both The Witch and Pressy were badly knocked about, the latter being nearly brought on to her knees. The result was that they never got going again and Ruling Passion, who slipped away early and so avoided the scrimmage, won comfortably from Make Haste III., who finished two and a half lengths behind him: The Witch third and Pressy fourth, nothing else looking dangerous. This race was Ruling Passion's fourth successive victory and his fifth win this season out of eleven starts and he has in addition been twice second and once third. At one time this staunch son of old Predominant and Naughty Boy was only considered good enough to win Tollygunge Club Gymkhana races and was sold to Mr. Partridge by Mr. Tremearne for a few hundred rupees. When Ruling Passion won over the "closed" limit of Rs. 500, Mr. Partridge thinking that there was not much more before the pony let him go and Mr. Roy Chowdhury bought him. Predominant was an English pony and was imported by Mr. V. L. Rees about 1890 and in 1891 he won the International Pony Stakes and other races and was then sold to H.H. the late Maharajah of Cooch Behar, who won the International with him in 1893, the pony carying 10st. 6lb. and the time was 1min. 19⅘secs. He did the late Maharajah good service and was eventually sold to go to the stud in Australia, where he has done uncommonly well. He has marked his personality on Ruling Passion, who, bar his head and neck, which he must have got from his dam, is very like the sire in make and shape and exactly the same colour. Predominant had only one drawback and that was that he was an absolute savage both in the stable and out of it.

Only three ran for the last race and True Love and Sea Lad were about level in the betting for a long time till just before the start True Love's price shortened to level money, whilst Sea Lad's remained at 6 to 4. There was not much in it at the finish, Sea Lad only winning in the last few strides, Mr. Evers riding him a very vigorous finish. The time for the R.C. was very slow, the official record giving it as 3mins. 9⅘secs. Details appear elsewhere.

The C.L.H. Chart and Compass Competition was run last Sunday over a 17-mile course in the neighbourhood of Dursana a station on the E.B.S.R. about 80 miles north of Calcutta and was won by Trooper Constant in the very creditable time of 1 hour 57½ minutes. Although the course was nominally 17 miles, this means measured as the crow flies and as the majority of the competitors rode it, the distance must have been over 20 miles allowing for even very slight deviations. The contest is a despatch carrying one and also is designed to test the competitors' faculty of reconnaissance as he is required to write a report on the country traversed from a military point of view and to hand same in to the officer at the starting and finishing point within an hour of his return. The map he is given has certain points marked on it to which he has to ride and deliver his "despatches" and certain roads and places are marked as "held by the enemy" and which if he approaches he is liable to be put act of action as either "shot" or taken prisoner. The course this year was selected by Major T. H. West-macott of the C.L.H. and was a very good one, though the going in places was somewhat rough. The weather was favourable and few, if any, of the horses showed any signs of distress at the finish. Trooper A. C. Gladstone won the Recruits' Prize, though Trooper Willis did the fastest time of the recruits, but as he was a minute and a half behind time in handing in his report on the country he was disqualified. There were 39 starters and a very high percentage of them got the course, 25 completing. The performance was a highly creditable one to all concerned and the value of this competition for a body of volunteer cavalry is obvious, for in the actual operations of war in this part of this world it is work of this description that would very probably be assigned to them.

It is now definitely settled that the eighth extra meeting on Saturday next will bring the current Calcutta racing season to a close.

We are glad to learn that Butlin has been discharged from hospital. He intends, we believe, leaving for Australia very shortly, but hopes to be back by the beginning of May. We trust the sea voyage will help him towards a complete recovery. His stable will be managed during his absence by his very capable daughter.

All Sir A. A. Apcar's horses have now gone back to Bangalore, the last batch having left Calcutta on Monday last.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—There was, perhaps, a slightly diminished attendance and a more mediocre class of horses on Monday for the Third Day, but the sport was nevertheless good. Punters in some instances were on the mark, and in others off it, so that exchanges between them and the books were fairly level. Jockeys' honours this time went to Ferguson with three and Archibald two, the latter now making his mark on Arabs.

Eight events were down, the first again being the ponies', Borgie being a starter making the betting good between herself and Leo Grand, the pick out of Byramjee's three in a field of four. Leo Grand was first away, then Borgie along the rails flattered as far as the turn but no further. Here Leo Grand went away and won clear of Regalia, who had been running last a long way off.

Twelve went in the first division of the Midget Plate, there being some indecision amongst backers till Red Monk became solid and Yussuff Pasha expanded, a run coming on Polish from a longish price with steady money for Upright. Instead of streaking away as before, Shihab was left this time, Upright, Golden Day, Polish and Sinclair being prominent, then Golden Day settled down in front from Sinclair and Polish. At the quarter mile Polish went out on his own and Red Monk came handily on the rails but could not beat Sinclair, who in turn had no hope with Polish, dead-heaters behind these being Sharar and Upright.

In the other division there was good betting between Electric and Pendil with St. Anthony and Kimberley next, and punters scored. St. Anthony was badly left, Pendil, Good Evening and Electric making the pace, to be joined by Plassy. Good Evening dropped out at the turn and Electric came on the rails, but Pendil nicely in hand held him safe. Kimberley put in a late run outside after not being in the front lot and beat Plassy for a place.

In the six furlong horse race there was at once a run on Macann, so solid that he started at evens from Picnic at fours and Huka fives. This was no race, Danseuse showing out first on the rails with Macann on the outside, the latter then going clear in front followed by Chestnut Park, Picnic and Goldseeker and the only change in this was that Huka eventually passed the eased Goldseeker, Macann winning with a good hold on him.

Of the ten in the Arab Seven Furlongs, Money Gold at 6 to 4 was backed whenever he expanded, Harry Johnson next with Well Done, Sir Hugo, Shawcutt and Regent all in the betting. As he usually does, Ghalyum at once streaked away into a four length lead from Money Gold, Burgomaster, Shawcutt, Regent and Well Done all in a fairly compact bunch. Burgomaster dropped out soon and Ghalyum was done at the quarter mile, where Money Gold led clear of Well Done on the rails. Harry Johnson had been lying last, but came well on the extreme outside and there was an anxious moment when the whip came out on Money Gold, but in the run in he had them all well beaten. This makes some amends for the time when he fell with Yussuff who, I am glad to say, is progressing favourably.

Only five went out for the Flying Plate, Chobham being backed to odds on almost as though all was over, Hoppner warming to 5 to 2 with Soultline expanding to fours. When Chobham hopped off in front punters rejoiced, but very soon Hoppner shot out on the rails and Malmsey also passed the favourite with Elser handy. Chobham was driven along outside at the turn, but all to no purpose as Hoppner was going very easily and Elser getting through on the rails snatched second place. The timing was very good, 1min. 1⅕secs., considering how easily Hoppner won. Soultline was never in it.

The Arab mile was interesting and resulted in probably the worst upset of this season. Lookman was always in command of the market with Grey Falcon preferred to his stable companion Mudkoor and good support for Young Majub. For a moment Young Majub showed out, then Zinfandel led Singer and Mars till the last named went clear away followed by Singer, Mudkoor and Lookman. Singer led round the last turn, but got a squeeze as Mudkoor edged through on the rails. This gave the latter a distinct advantage, but Singer coming again headed him on the post. This is more like Singer's true form after being off colour in Lucknow recently.

There were ten in the mile for horses, which was a good betting race with Beckmesser favourite from Bull's Run, Forfeit and Wayward and Wild till at the close a rush on Black Douglas made him second favourite. This was a great finish after Wayward and Wild had got off in front and made all her own running from Lady Spring, Forfeit and Bright Metal. At the three furlongs Beckmesser moved up with Lady Spring and at the turnthere was a bunch of them with Metal Boy drawing up and Black Douglas having to go right outside. Wayward and Wild here appeared to hold everything safe, but with the last two mentioned finishing strong and Lady Spring hanging on there was only a head between each of the four on the post. Wayward and Wild at last makes up for more than one disappointment whereas Black Douglas now appears to be running into something like form, as also Lady Spring, who was well up all the way.

There was a bigger attendance on Wednesday and again some really fine sport in a card of seven events, which went very decidedly in favour of bookmakers. Evans had a wonderfully good day out with no less than four wins, and we are more than ever satisfied as to his sterling merit as his judgment was perfect.

First was the seven furlongs for Lilliputs, and that Fado can get the distance was evident by the betting, he being made better favourite than Prime Minister, the disappointing Sweden next. It was a slow run race, Prime Minister, Mars and Lama making the running. Fado was handy nearing the quarter mile, and an opening offering itself shot away clear. In the straight Regiment was after him, but was held safe and only just kept on from Prime Minister, who had dropped back and came again on the outside.

Lord Merv was made a very decided favourite for the Stand Plate from Grevillea and an unknown quantity to us in Airman. To begin with Lanceolar was badly left, Danseuse and Chivalry showing out to the three where Airman shot out from Grevillea, Chivalry and Lord Merv in order. As they turned Lord Merv came up second but, strong as he finished, found Airman to have too great an advantage and missed him by a head in good time for this class.

The big mile race for newly landed Arabs was full of interest, Bustan appearing to be a good thing on form, but Thultha, whom he has easily beaten before, came in for very strong support, Galiard and Berar the only others under tens. Thultha made almost all his own running, Straight Shot leading for a space from the six furlongs where Bustan and Lord Durham came up handily. After his strong run, Bustan shot up later, Thultha again taking the lead with Ya Nasib and Lord Durham his nearest attendants, and thus they finished with Yunji Dunya next out of a place.

Only six went for the Exeter Plate, Watch Tower always favourite with good money for Victo, Lumination and Refresher whereas Punt and Elser were not altogether neglected. A good start was effected, Watch Tower on the rails, Elser and Refresher running level till the first went away a bit. At the turn Elser went away and Punt came through. These stable companions promised a great race, and so it was with Elser just managing to stay on, the two longest priced ones thus finishing first.

Of the nine in the ten furlongs for Arabs Braganza naturally stood out on his own top of the handicap but was nevertheless made favourite from Winchester with Sir Hugo and Parliament next. Most of the running was made by Parliament from Young Salanic and Tachreet, the second for a moment taking over at the five. With Parliament again in the lead, Merrily and Winchester drew up at the last bend, and the former of these took a clear lead all over a winner. Here, however, Evans set Braganza going, and after a clever race landed him in a winner for the fifth consecutive time.

One of the worst upsets one could see occurred in the Colaba Plate, a strong favourite being found in Black Douglas, next being Devil's Dyke, Lady Erna and Wayward and Wild. The early running was made by the last named but at the mile The Cellarer was clear in the lead, following them being Lady Erna and Devil's Dyke, who were some way in front of Lady Spring and Black Douglas. Only the front bunch ever had a look in, and they finished in the order named, The Cellarer winning with a good deal in hand and continuing some promise he gave of staying when in Poona.

Lastly a most interesting sprint race for Arabs, Abdul Malik at topweight being most in demand from Zoolphokar on the same mark till a run on Chechan made this one nearly the same as the first named, good support for Young Majub too. It was a really grand race, Chechan beating the gate and securing a four length lead from Abdul Malik and Zoolphokar close together. Near the turn Zoolphokar passed Abdul Malik and at the distance caught Chechan, but Evans on the latter had only given the pony a breather and headed the other again. A final bit of excitement came when Young Majub came with one of his brilliant rushes and just missed Chechan by a head, a similar distance in front of Zoolphokar. The time, 1min. 6⅘secs., is quite sensational, and has never been beaten, though equalled by the winner's stable companion Rajput.

It was not unnatural to expect that Cup Day should turn out bad for punters, and so it was on Saturday when a card of seven events again saw several surprises—at least to the majority. Templeman and Brown each rode a couple of winners and that Whalley should finish in a place every time meant his being unlucky not to have a win. Several jockeys have left for England, but quite enough good lads remain, amongst them Wootton, who at last rode an Arab winner. The great racing question has come up again and a proposed list of rules has been issued by the Council. These practically suggest that everything be placed in the hands of Government. Naturally the W. I. T. C. do not quite fall in with these views, and the only real outcome of the meeting on Saturday morning was that they would draft a letter and await a reply before doing anything definite. The Poona prospectus is consequently liable to alterations or cancellation.

Once more the pony race introduced us to the card, and on the way she finished the last time Regalia was made a sound favourite from Encourage and Kiora, who was preferred to Evening Herald. To begin with, Regalia got away badly by a substantial margin, the other three running level till the half mile, where Evening Herald led slightly and Regalia had made up ground with Kiora now lying last. At the turn Regalia and Encourage were together, but Kiora was now drawing up and, full of running, went on to win quite comfortably in quite good timing. This is great improvement on her first showing and I understand some enquiry was made into the books.

With Macann carrying a big weight in the next Sperry was made a better favourite with Lanceolar also well backed, in fact some money for everything in a field of six. First out were Danseuse and Lord Carlyon, who went on in that order followed by Macann and Lanceolar. As they entered the straight Sperry and Lanceolar came up and Macann challenged Danseuse, but the mare held on with a bit to spare, whereas Sperry got none too good a journey.

Following came the Turf Club Cup of a mile and five furlongs for Arabs, a field of eight and good betting, Artist favourite at 5 to 2 from Winchester then Valens and Merrily. First away were Tajilmulook, Winchester and Parliament, then the last named went away followed by Winchester, Sir Visto and Artist. Valens came up handy at the six and at the half mile Sir Visto took the lead from Artist with Merrily coming up to his stable companion, Tajilmulook. At the turn Artist was driven after the leader to no avail and well as Merrily came he also was held safe. Artist was done, and in the last few strides was beaten out of a place by Valens. Backed at good odds, Sir Visto's starting price was eights.

The great Byculla Club Cup next claimed our attention, and the public found selection difficult, first making Brogue and Wayward and Wild favourites. Subsequently The Loaf warmed to 7 to 2, next Brogue and a point longer Wayward and Wild, Hilarity and Coat of Arms. This was quite an interesting race, Wayward and Wild, Hilarity and Master Delaval being first away, but at the first bend the order was Mil, Wayward and Wild, Hamara, Coat of Arms and The Loaf. There was no change in this till at the six the first three were in a line and then Hamara led with The Loaf drawing up handily. Before the three the last-named went out in the lead and here Hilarity was allowed to run on past the rest. An exciting finish was promised, but the more carefully nursed Hilarity was going the better and left no doubt as to the result, four lengths behind them the stable companions, Aborigine and Coat of Arms, had a race for place money, which the less fancied one secured.

One of the two who did the public some good during the day was Grand Duke in the Desert Plate, Wootton having the mount as Archibald has left. He started at 6 to 4 in a field of seven, a good price due to support for Regent. This race was never in doubt as, going out in his customary manner in the lead, Grand Duke was waited with in front from Shawcutt and Sir Hugo. Shawcutt was beaten at the three furlongs and Sir Hugo had no chance with the leader as also Regent, though he got through on the rails. This is Grand Duke's fourth win after several seconds to the all-conquering Braganza.

A very interesting race was the Mansfield Plate, Punt on his last running being made slightly better favourite than Hoppner and Chobham in a field of nine. There was some delay, and when let go Socialist and Watch Tower shewed, to be soon caught by Hoppner on the rails and Malmsey, Elser and Devil's Dyke handy behind these with Punt last. In the straight it was at once evident that Punt could not get through, but Elser came outside and, going well, went on to win from Chobham who came with a great run with Soultline, both passing Malmsey and Hoppner. Elser's fourth win was more unexpected than the previous one.

Lastly the Asian Plate, and with an extra furlong from the last time Abdul Malik was made a solid even money chance from Ashroff and Singer with six runners. There was some trouble at the gate before Ashroff on the rails got away with Minerva, Abdul Malik close between them. Nearing the turn, Abdul Malik came away and all was over, he winning easily from Ashroff, who narrowly outstayed Grey Falcon.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

The increase of gambling on the race-courses in Bombay and Poona has become an evil which calls for remedy in the public interest, and legislation is necessary to deal adequately with this evil. This Bill has accordingly been framed to give Government power to exercise control over horse-racing, as defined in clause 2 of the Bill. The necessary degree of control is obtained by the provisions of clauses 3 and 4 which prohibit horse-racing on unlicensed race-courses and empower the Governor-in-Council to grant licenses on such conditions and for such periods as he may think fit. Penalties are provided in clauses 5, 6 and 7 for permitting or taking part in horse-racing on unlicensed race-courses, and for contravening the conditions of licenses. Clause 10 enables Government to exempt from the operation of the Act any horse-races, such as gymkhana mounted sports, hunt-club races, etc. The Bill is modelled on the English Statute for the licensing of Metropolitan Suburban Race-courses.

BOMBAY, 23rd February 1912.

THE half-yearly general meeting of the members of the W.I.T.C. was held on Saturday morning in the Byculla Club marquee at the Racecourse at Mahaluxmi, Colonel Broome, C.I.E., presiding.

Great interest centred in the deliberations, since the following important motion was on the agenda, to be proposed by Captain M. R. K. Hodgson.

"That bookmakers are not abolished from the First Enclosure without a referendum to all the members of W.I.T.C. now present in India."

The Press was not admitted to the meeting, but from details afterwards obtained from Mr. Cecil Grey, the Secretary, it was learned that Captain Hodgson's motion was withdrawn without discussion.

The situation created by the draft of the Bill proposed by Government was discussed and the sense of the meeting was that Government should be asked to give the Club the earliest information possible as to the date when it was anticipated the proposed Bill would become law, and the conditions under which racecourses would be licensed. An extraordinary general meeting of Club members will be called as soon as possible after a reply from Government has been received.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from England :—"There has not been much business done on the Lincolnshire and Grand National yet, but some of the knowing ones have been getting on Shanballymore at a long price for the former. The result is he is now at sixteens. He showed very good form in Ireland last year and won the Irish Derby in most taking style. For the Grand National the four most in demand are Jerry M., Rathnally, King of the Scarlets and Trydon. The lastnamed is apparently being backed because Parfrement will probably ride him. Selectman, who is by the American horse Voter, is the best hurdle horse in England now. Of course he has shown very good form on the flat and he seems to stay much better than Yankees usually do."

THE eleventh and penultimate weekly fixture of the Calcutta Paperchase Club was held on Friday last and brought out a big muster. The course was an excellent one. Starting to the right of the Gurriah Hât Road, about half mile beyond Jodhpore Thana, the line went out over the Bund country and left-handed through the Durzi's Bustee, back to the Gurriah Hât Road. This was not crossed, but the course led past the starting point and out to the Tollygunge Lane, across it and back again across the Gurriah Hât Road, up as far as Jodhpore Railway Station, and back again to the starting point across the road once more. There was a good field out in the Horse Chase and when they got away Rifleman led out from Sidbrook, Farthing Bun, Desmond and Eileen with 10 to 6 leading the others. Sidbrook was nearly down at one of the mud walls in the Bund Country but made a good recovery and was with the leaders again. Rifleman ran off the paper and Dervish then took command, but Rifleman was soon back again and out in front with Sidbrook, Brown Mouse, Desmond, Farthing Bun and 10 to 6 next and they finished in this order, Rifleman beating Sidbrook in a hot finish by a length. The official verdict was :—

1. Mr. Evers on Rifleman.
2. Captain Astor „ Sidbrook.
3. Mr. Deakin „ Brown Mouse.
4. Mr. Murray „ Desmond.
5. Mr. Thomas „ Farthing Bun.
6. Mr. Riviere „ 10 to 6.

followed in order by Messrs. Taylor, Knox, Tanner and Miss Binning, then a long gap and Mrs. Wanklyn and Mr. Mackay and Mr. Felsenthal and after them Messrs. Montgomery, Trousdell, Marshall, Morshead and Lady Jenkins.

The result of this chase gives the Average Cup to Mr. Murray and we add our congratulations to the others he has received on his fine performance during the season with his clever fencer Desmond.

The Pony Chase attracted a small field and was won by Dr. Taylor, Miss Binning, who had led all the way, taking second place, only three finished :—

1. Dr. Taylor on Billy.
2. Miss Binning on Brandy.
3. Mr. Hutchison on Steel Arrow.

Mr. Deakin wins the Pony Average Cup, having won ten of the weekly chase on Scarboro including one dead heat first with Minnie.

THE Calcutta Pony Paperchase Cup was run yesterday morning over a course about five miles long in the Jodhpore country and over a line of numerous made obstacles, the majority of which were stiff mud walls. The race was won for the second year in succession by Mr. E. B. Deakin on his grey pony Scarboro on whom Mr. Deakin has won every paperchase he has started in this season, a really admirable record. This fine score also procures for Mr. Deakin the Pony Average Cup, a trophy which he also now wins for the second time of asking. The field was unfortunately only a small one, four ponies facing the starter. The conditions of the Cup are 14-2, 12st., W. I. and Scarboro who is 14-1½ carried 11st. 5lb. and won all the way, beating Minnie and Steel Arrow easily at the finish. There was a close contest for second honours, Minnie beating Steel Arrow by half a length only on the post. The following are the details :—

1.	Mr. E. B. Deakin's	Scarboro	14-1½	11st. 5lb.
2.	Mr. McLean's	Minnie	14-2½	9st. 12 lb.
3.	Mr. Hutchison's	Steel Arrow	14-2	12st.
4.	Mr. Muir's	North Shore	14-2	12st.

Mr. J. H. Allen, Honorary Secretary to the Calcutta Paperchases, has, we regret to learn, been bitten by a mad dog and left for the Pasteur Institute at Kasauli last night. Mr. Allen will therefore be unable to be present at the Calcutta Paperchase Cup on the 8th March or at the Annual Dinner which takes place on that night.

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

Merits Every Good Word ever spoken in its praise.

TO say a Fountain Pen is reliable, does not make it so. To say a Fountain Pen is the best, does not make it so. But when hundreds of thousands of people constantly affirm that a certain Fountain Pen is absolutely reliable, and is without a doubt the best, then one may be quite sure the pen possesses exceptional merit.

People started praising Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen twenty-six years ago. To-day, in its perfected form, Waterman's Ideal enjoys the whole-hearted support of millions of writers. The Poona Boxing Tournament will begin on Monday, the 18th March, the tournament as usual being open to all officers, N. C. O.'s and men of the Regular Army, Royal Navy, Marines, Royal Naval Reserve and Volunteer Corps in India. First entries close on 6th March, second entries and entries for Officers and Boys' competitions on 12th idem with the Honorary Secretary, Lieutenant E. S. Bamford, Superintendent of Gymnasia, Poona.

It is understood that a twenty-round contest is being arranged to take place in Bombay on the 13th or 20th March between Rifleman Curzon, of the King's Royal Rifles, winner of the Middleweight Army Championship and Locke-Elliot belt at the Coronation Durbar Boxing Tournament at Delhi, and Jack McAuliffe, the well-known profession boxer. Mr. Clarkson, a sportsman, who hails from Johannesburg, has sportingly offered a purse of Rs. 3,000 for the event. A contest has also been fixed between Sergeant Chivers of the Essex Regiment and Private Blake of the Norfolks who recently knocked out Chapman in the fight for the Heavyweight Championship. Private Makins of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment is also throwing out a challenge to meet anybody at his weight.

Abe Attell met Johnny Kilbane for the World's Featherweight Championship at Los Angeles on the 22nd instant, Kilbane winning in twenty rounds. The winner hails from Cleveland, in Vernon, California. Attell was recently suspended for a period of six months from participating in any public sparring exhibition in New York and also forbidden to be admitted even as a spectator at any boxing club during the same period. This sentence was passed by the State Athletic Commission, for it found Attell guilty of faking in his recent fight with "Knock Out" Brown at the National Sporting Club of America and misstating facts before the Commission when called upon to explain his conduct during the encounter. Attell blames a lame thumb for his poor showing in the fight and announced that he would retire from the ring after his bout with Kilbane.

William F. (Billy) Delaney the famous American trainer of champion pugilists, died in New York at the beginning of February. He had been ill for several months, complications following a severe cold, and his demise was not unexpected. Delaney piloted more pugilists to championship than perhaps any other trainer and adviser. His last connection with an important fight was when he trained Jack Johnson for his battle with Jeffries at Reno. His presence in Johnson's corner on that occasion was due to a quarrel he had had with Jeffries whom he accused of welching on a gambling debt and also publicly accused of being "yellow." It was Delaney who first declared that Jeffries lacked heart. He said he had prevented Jeffries from quitting in several fights but that they were good friends until Jeffries repudiated a match Delaney made with Bill Squires. Delaney claimed that Jeffries had authorised him to make the match. Delaney took up Al. Kaufmann and for several years Kaufmann made rapid strides up the fistic ladder. Then Delaney got a chance to train and second Jack Johnson in the big fight. The sight of Delaney in the negro's corner is believed to have taken the heart completely out of Jeffries when he entered the ring at Reno. Delaney's failure to make a champion out of Kaufman soured him on the ring and he practically retired last summer.

The return fight between Fred Storbeck, the South African Champion and Frank Moran, the Pittsburg heavyweight took place at the Ring on the 5th instant. The first match had ended in the disqualification of Storbeck and in the second Moran was again given the verdict. This time the American, though taking punishment in the early rounds, waited his chance and from the 8th round had it all his own way. He dropped Storbeck in the 11th round, but the South African came up gamely and lasted out the round. In the 12th, however, Storbeck received terrible punishment. He was down again for 9 and on rising was sent to the boards once more. This time for the count.

Bill Lang, the Australian ex-champion heavyweight, appeared in the ring once more at the end of January at the Sydney Stadium when his opponent was Jim Barry, the American. The contest went the scheduled twenty rounds, at the end of which the verdict was given in favour of Barry. It was a good fight; Lang made a brave showing, his defence preventing anything like a wide margin win. Subsequently Lang was offered a match with Dave Smith by Mr. H. D. McIntosh, but he refused and has announced his retirement from the ring.

Jim Barry has been matched with Sam Langford the match to have taken place at the Sydney Stadium on the 17th February. We await results with interest. The last battle between the pair was fought at Vernon, Los Angeles, about two years ago when the battle went 16 rounds. Barry has also met Sam McVea in Paris, when he was disqualified for a foul in the fifteenth round. More recent scraps wherein Barry figured were those with Sandy Ferguson, which he won in twelve rounds, on 24th January last year, Joe Jeannette twice (8th February and 16th March), each a ten rounds "no decision contest," "Gunboat" Smith on 4th May, Barry winning in six rounds, and "Porky" Flynn, ten rounds "no decision" at New York last August.

Mr. H. D. McIntosh's persuasive eloquence and tempting offers having failed to induce Sam McVea to shape in opposition to Sam Langford again, the obstinate one has been served with a writ.

The fifth Test match between England and Australia began at Sydney on the 23rd instant on a perfect wicket. England batting first had made 204 for six wickets when stumps were drawn, Gunn having made 52 and Woolley 52 not out. On Saturday the wicket was slow owing to heavy rain overnight nevertheless England did well, completing her first innings for 324, Woolley carrying his score to 133 not out. The Australians then went in and at the close of the first day's play had lost five wickets for 134. No play was possible on Monday owing to a heavy downpour, but on Tuesday the match was resumed on a soft wicket. Australia completed their innings for 176 and when stumps were drawn England had lost 9 wickets for 209.

The M.C.C. team visiting the Agentine lost the first Test match with Argentina at Buenos Ayres. The M.C.C. batted first and made 186. Argentina had put together 135 for 4 wickets when play closed for the day and on the morrow completed their first innings for 209. Going in again the M.C.C. compiled 157, Argentina responding with 136 for 6.

In the second Test match the M.C.C. made 266 runs in the first innings, Argentina replying with 206. The M.C.C. put together 250 in the second innings and after losing 3 wickets for 18 runs on Monday Argentina ran their score to 100 all out next day, the M.C.C. thus won by 200 runs.

The Australian cricket dispute is still unsettled and the position is acute. Early last week the Board of Control sent an ultimatum to the cricketers who have not answered the Board's invitation to join the team to represent Australia in the triangular matches to be decided this summer in England.

Armstrong, Ransford, Carter and Trumper having insisted that Laver should be appointed manager of the team which is to play in the triangular matches the Board of Control has cancelled the invitations to play issued to these players. Gregory, MacLaren and Hazlitt have been selected, as also have Macartney and Webster for the team to visit England. The precipitancy displayed in filling the places in the team makes the situation all the more hopeless. If a settlement is not reached, Noble, Hill, Laver and five others will retire from first-class cricket.

Mr. McGown, the Prime Minister of New South Wales, is endeavouring to mediate.

Lord Chelmsford and Mr. P. F. Warner, the English captain, have also conferred with the Home players, but the result of the Conference is not known.

The North-Western Railway football tournament is fixed to begin at Lahore on the 11th March. It is open to all Civil and Military Teams. Military Teams to be selected from half battalions of Infantry, batteries of Artillery and half regiments of Cavalry.

The final match in the Infantry Polo Tournament at Bareilly ended in a win for the Durham L.I. who beat the Royal Welsh Fusiliers by 5 goals to 1.

The Eastern Command Native Army Hockey Tournament was concluded at Allahabad on Saturday last when the 33rd Punjabis beat the 48th Pioneers by 3 goals to 1 and thus scored their third successive victory in this tournament.

The final of the Punjab Bengal Army Football Tournament was played at Umballa on the 24th instant when the holders (the Lancashire Fusiliers) were again successful, beating the 2nd Staffords by 2 goals to 1.

The annual match for the Indian Council's Golf Challenge Cup was played at Barrackpore on Saturday last and resulted in a win for the Bengal Council by 4 to 3 after a tie; they also annexed the Foursomes by 2 matches to love.

A billiard match for a gold medal presented by Mr. P. C. Lall of Purnea was held at the Calcutta Club on the 22nd instant. The players were Mr. F. Inglis and Moti Lall Shaw, the Club marker. The game was for 1,000 up and play was interesting till 300 was reached, then the marker walked away from his opponent and won by 400 points, the game being closed at 750 when it was found that Mr. Inglis had no chance.

The Laver Hockey Tournament at Secunderabad this years drew ten entries. The first match was between the combined team 1st Brahmins and 95th Russell's Infantry and the Secunderabad Sports Club. It was a splendid match the combined team winning by 5 to 4. Then Secunderabad met the officers of the 6th Jats and 61st Pioneers, the game ending in a draw 3 all. In the replay the officers won by 2 goals to nil. The 17th Brigade R.F.A. met and defeated the 7th Dragoon Guards by 7 goals to 5; the Leicester Regiment beat the King's L. I. by a goal to nil; the Sherwood Foresters beat the 109th Infantry by 6 goals to nil; and the officers Jats and Pioneers drew with the combined team Brahmins and 95th Infantry. These latter scratched so the match was not replayed. In the semi-finals a splendid game was witnessed when the officers Jats and Pioneers met the Leicesters, the latter being defeated by a goal to nil, and the Sherwood Foresters won their match with the gunners by 3 to nil. The final was played on Saturday, the 17th instant, and a very even game resulted: time arrived with the score two all, but an extra period of ten minutes each way was decided upon. Nothing was scored, but during further extra time the Foresters scored and thus won the cup by 3 goals to 2.

A friend of mine out ferreting lately in the Kildare hunt country, not far from Naas, had a strange experience, writes "E. J. G." in the Field. From the first likely looking hole his ferrets bolted a weasel and two rabbits, all of which he shot. About 100 yards further on the same fence and quite near the herd's house, a big cat was evicted, and almost immediately from the same hole three rabbits. Then from a ditch running parallel to the first and near a flour mill the ferrets bolted eleven rats, all of which were fortunately despatched, and then the ferrets lying in, his men dug to them, to find that they had two dead rabbits, and beyond them at the end of the hole four live ones. The week before Christmas his ferrets bolted two foxes and several rabbits from the same burrow.

Writing to a contemporary, a correspondent quotes some amusing "howlers." Asked to explain "If music be the food of love, play on," a thoughtful boy said that "music is what the Duke thinks gives him an appetite for dinner." A Scotch child misled by an English teacher's pronunciation of bricks, made it clear in a written paper that the task set to the Hebrews was "to make trousers for Pharaoh without straw." The same examination—the entrance to a great public school—supplied a delightful historical mix-up. "What were the circumstances of Sir Walter Raleigh's introduction to Queen Elizabeth?" "Queen Elizabeth was riding one day from Kenilworth to Coventry with nothing on, and Sir Walter Raleigh met her and offered her his cloak."

Last week we had a note stating that the Natal and Zululand Game Protection Association does not countenance the theory that the tsetse fly can be exterminated by clearing out game in an affected district. Dr. Menharto, whose investigations in the areas affected by this pest extended over months, absolves big game from responsibility in spreading the trouble. The Doctor, while lecturing before the Transvaal Game Protection Association, contended that the tsetse existed in districts devoid of big game, and combated the suggestion that a wholesale slaughter of game would lead to the extirpation of the fly. He declared that investigators should confine their examinations to the habits of the noxious insect, and by such means only would it be exterminated. Dr. Menharto went on to say that he had collected a number of blood slides from game shot in the fly belts. The blood smears were obtained from such as sable, reed-buck, water-buck, buffalo, elephant lion, hyena, crocodile, hares, and snakes. Strange to say, none of the slides exhibited any trace of trypanosoma.

Though we are an indifferent pigeon shot, we have read with sustained interest a recent brochure, "dedicated to pigeon amateurs and associations," regarding the improvement in the "fabrication of automatic recording apparatus." The author of the composition in question appears to be a Belgian, but whether he himself has written this English version, or has had it translated by some anonymous expert, is a matter for you to decide when you have scanned the following extracts. His invention, states our writer, "is actually, and will always remain, the model of automatic recorders: such is its glory title." This is not unreasonable, for "the apparatus . . has given entire satisfaction since it has undergone all plagues, an though has remained unchanged and really invulnerable." One of its features is that it gives "the minimum chance to condemnable manœuvres," and is said to resist successfully all attempts of the "temerarious defrauder." If such defrauders, again, tried to close the apparatus by "retaining the marker" (which seems slightly reminiscent of kidnapping in the billiard saloon), the affair would be "discovered irremediably, because the ring boxes wheel would occasionette the stillstand of the apparatus." But it is in its superiority to its rivals that models of this particular type are so desirable. "The ones," we note, indeed, "are efficient, others unfortunately are not, because they are of inferior quality or badly placed, and in such case they only constitute vulgar bugbears." Which, in our opinion, puts the whole thing in a nutshell.

The question of preserving the more destructive forms of game in the East Africa Protectorate has often been discussed and still crops up at intervals in the House of Commons. But Sir Percy Girouard's Annual Administration Report for 1910-11, which is just issued, does not express any adverse opinion to the arrangements now in force, says the Times of India. The stock of game in the two Reserves appears to be satisfactory, and elsewhere animals such as buffalo, eland and Neumann's hartebeest have increased considerably since they have been protected by legislation. Lions are reported to be as numerous as ever, and more troublesome in the Athi Plains District, but, presumably, as transport improves, they will decrease. The rhinoceros, of which numbers are killed in self-defence and as many as 227 in the year under review, is decreasing fast, as is inevitable with so slow a breeder, but elephants except the larger bulls—are holding their own. The prospects are satisfactory, there has been very much less disease, and the plentiful rain which fell early in 1911 were expected to produce an abundance of food and consequently a rapid increase in the stock in this sportsman's paradise.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 9th February 1912.

When the morning's milk is taken in frozen and has to be thawed before it can be induced to leave the can, when butter has to be approached with a hatchet, when the taps refuse to run, it is fairly safe to assume that the weather is of a somewhat wintry character. When added to these internal domestic phenomena (which have been of daily recurrence throughout the week) one reads that the glass registers some degrees below zero, that the English Skating Championship has been decided and that millions of people are skating on every pond, lake, river and reservoir in the Home counties it spurs one to the recklessness of stating that we are now enjoying the first "winter" of any consequence we have had in the south of England for fifteen years or thereabouts. Our friend the plumber has been waiting a long time for his innings and he is making the most of his rare opportunity I give you my word.

Those many thousands who, like myself, earn the daily crust in close proximity to a desk telephone, have been given to blaspheme since the New Year came in and with it the change in the London telephone system. If one recollects aright, this system when it was under the control of the National Telephone Company did not give unmixed satisfaction. More than once when we have been in a hurry to speak to another fellow half a mile away we have walked round to see him about it, and have saved time by not ringing him up. There were optimists who imagined that when the Post Office took over the system there would be an immediate improvement, and now these people are very disappointed and very sore.

The delays and other disadvantages are found to be worse than they were before, which is so much a natural evolution that nobody ought to be surprised. Experience of the manner in which Government departments do things should have been a warning that the Post Office would spoil the telephone system wherever it was possible and spoil the telephone company's servants into the bargain. Knowing what always happens to the man or woman who becomes a Government servant, we are not astonished to learn that the "Helio!" girl is more haughty than ever, and that the telephone subscriber, speaking generally, finds himself "out of the frying-pan into the fire."

Ugly old London! The suggestion made this week at Carpenters' Hall, where there was a gathering of town planning experts, that the two hideous railway bridges over the Thames at Charing Cross and Cannon Street should be removed is never likely to materialise. One might ask in passing what the equally ugly railway bridge at Blackfriars has done that it should be exempted from the proposed abolition, but that we know there is not the slightest chance of anything ugly being removed, so long as it can lay any claim to utility.

In the process of improving London it more often happens than not that additions are made to the ugliness of the City, and at the best one ugliness is removed to make room for another. It is only the picturesque and beautiful and interesting that is pulled down, like Crosby Hall, and things which might well be spared are left standing, like that gloomy looking church in the middle of the Strand The ugly railway bridges over the Thames may be threatened, but they will survive, to be the wonder of foreigners, who cannot understand the Londoner's delight in spoiling his spacious waterway.

Fifteen years ago, when "Woman and Wine" first appeared at the Pavilion Theatre, in the East, Messrs. Ben Landeck and Arthur Shirley, the authors, described their exciting output as "the great moral drama." As there is nothing in it to lead the innocent astray—nothing more than a hero in love with two women and a glass of champagne—tens of thousands of young and old up and down the country have since flocked to see it and been none the worse.

For a new generation Messrs. W. and G. Melville put on this seasoned melodrama at the New Princes Theatre, Shaftesbury Avenue, last Monday night. They were rewarded by seeing over 2,000 people excited to the highest pitch by the sequence of unhappy trials that dogged the footsteps of the hero.

The authors of "Woman and Wine" have a ready way of dealing with events that would have taken Ibsen off his mental feet. When, for instance, they think a man has been sufficiently long in love with one woman, they bring on another, open a bottle of champagne, and love springs for an act—if not for eternity—in his human breast. So it was with Dick Seymour. He first loved Mary. Then he went to Paris and fell in love with Marcelle. Mary, too, went to Paris and sold button-holes, and nursed Dick's father, and refused to sell flowers in a café to Marcelle. Mary had none to love her but Dick, but all the men fell in love with Marcelle because she had lovely clothes and was extravagant.

Then a jealous woman compelled Marcelle to fight a duel. They took off their ball dresses to do it comfortably, and Marcelle put herself in the way of an upper cut that finished her. Of course Dick happened to be in the neighbourhood and was arrested, and as he was an honest fellow and once said he would kill the villainess he was found guilty. But the real culprit came into court, after the verdict, and upset the French judge and jury by confessing, earning for herself and the drama a tremendous outburst of cheering that even the orchestra could not smother.

Mr. Harry Lonsdale and Miss Janet Alexander were splendid as hero and heroine, but first honours fell to Miss Ethel Warwick—Marcelle, "the woman who didn't care."

It is seven years since Mr. Cyril Maude last revived "The Second in Command," and then the reappearance of the late Captain Robert Marshall's comedy provided one of the few bright features of a disastrous season at the Waldorf Theatre. Since then Mr. Maude has won many fresh triumphs, and created many delightful characters, but all his admirers were glad to welcome him again last night in his old part of Binks. He has seldom been better suited.

Fashion in the lighter form of comedy has not changed greatly since. "The Second in Command" was produced at the Haymarket, and as Captain Marshall's wit was never more sparkling, his sentiment more engaging than in this play, it delighed the audience last night. Mr. Cyril Maude played Binks as though he enjoyed it; he was back in the skin of the part at once; and every gesture, every glance, every trick of voice helped to complete the humour and humanity of the character. He was excellently supported by Mr. A. E. Matthews, Mr. Cyril Knightley, and Miss Doris Lytton.

A continuous outburst of laughter at the Comedy Theatre last Saturday night greeted the first performance of Mr. R. C. Carton's new farcical comedy, "The Bear Leaders."

From the first act, when the socially ambitious Mr. and Mrs. Stanhope found misfortune staring at them through a lost will, until the end, when the will, quite naturally, is found in the office of the dundering solicitor, the whole audience was kept in the liveliest of moods.

And why? The intrigue in itself possesses nothing very much in either ingenuity or originality. One always knew exactly what was going to happen. But the lines—nearly all of them are undiluted Cartonisms!

Take the following examples:—

"Damn!" doesn't take us very far.

A great family has to pay many duties—life duties and death duties.

Finishing school leaves you unfinished.

Solitary eating is a vice.

There are two sides to every keyhole.

The younger the young man marries in life the better it gives him an object in life.

Perhaps taken from the theatrical atmosphere they are not enriched. In the crowd of wittisms, too, they shine all the more.

The outline of the play gives no idea of the amusement the play itself affords.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanhope Molyneux, in order to tide over bad times, accept the offer of "bringing out" Lady Marjorie Hillborn, an immatured shrew, granddaughter of the Dowager Countess of Grimsdel. Coincidentally they accept at the same time a similar responsibility towards a young, sulky cub, Edward Petworth, great-nephew of the Duke of Gallminster, who has no love for the Countess.

Both the Duke and the Countess are unaware of the Molyneux duplicity, and in their part the two tutors strive very hard to give the impression that they are leading only one bear.

Of course, the two young teddy bears fall in love and create all the mischief, Lady Marjorie flouting the efforts of every one to marry her to Sir Kennedy Loomes, a dreary Government official, and Petworth showing open contempt towards Lady Tuddenham's daughter, a lifeless, vulgar, and ugly automaton.

In the end the two little cubs bolt in order to compromise themselves, and the will is found, C'est tout!

Mr. Edmund Gwenn's fussy, blundering Stanhope Molyneux was a superb piece of acting. Miss Compton's Mrs. Molyneux was dignified and real; while the two lovers were prettily interpreted by Mr. Donald Calthorp and Miss Muriel Martin Harvey.

Of late we have been bored to extinction by grotesque forms of dancing. We have suffered under the idiotic waltz known as the "Grizzly Hug," and the even more inane and meaningless "Bunny Hug" and now we are threatened with the fearsome "Turkey Trot"—needless to say from America. Yankees first saw this banality and were shocked—so shocked that it was banned everywhere. The dance was produced at the London Hippodrome last Tuesday night by Oscar and Suzette, and London saw the "Turkey Trot."

But London is not likely to ban it, because there is nothing about it that need be suppressed. There must be something radically wrong somewhere. Either the morals of America are so distorted that it sees immorality in anything, or the "Turkey Trot," as performed by Oscar and Suzette, is not the "Turkey Trot" that made Uncle Sam put his hands over his righteous eyes.

The latter theory is unlikely, for the two artists responsible for the production are not in the habit of faking their business. And so we must take it for granted that London's "Trot" is the same as New York's "Trot."

No one can charge the dance with being either graceful or pretty. It is an abortion pure and simple, an extravagant caricature which only succeeds in making people laugh. The movements have been described as sensuous to a degree. The adjective should have been senseless.

It is difficult to describe. Oscar and Suzette are the best waltzers in London, and we saw this fantastic freak under the most favourable circumstances, but we were not impressed with their nonsensical hopping or the gander-like gyrations. The only redeeming feature of the "Turkey Trot" is that as presented at the Hippodrome it is pleasantly brief.

The new sports club at Hampstead, which seems likely to rival Queen's for the variety of its attractions will probably be opened next September. The prospectus is already drawn up, and will be circulated this week.

Lawn tennis is to be strongly catered for, both in the open and under cover. The covered courts, however, will not have a wooden floor, but a hard sand surface as at Brooklands.

At Hampstead they are to be treated with a special preparation to prevent the dust rising. This is a modification which has the approval of Mr. A. H. Gobert, the great French player, and Mr. H. S. Scrivener, the referee at Wimbledon. It is practically the same surface as prevails in the Riviera.

There will also be eight "squash" rackets courts at the new club, for this is a game which is growing more popular every day. There are, for instance, 250 playing members for the three "squash" courts at the Automobile Club. There will also be billiard tables and card rooms, and bedrooms for residential members.

Two professionals will be attached to the club, the cost of joining which will be five guineas.

literature—the Raineys, Cotton, "Black-hole" Wilson among them—but none, in my humble opinion, approached the writer of the "Echoes." Commissioned to the East India Company's service in August 1855, he arrived in the country in the following March. In the Mutiny, as a medical officer with the Horse Artillery, he was in the relieving forces of both Cawnpore and Lucknow, and he received the medal with clasp. He was appointed in 1865 Assistant Assay Master of the Madras Mint, and was in the Bombay Mint in a like capacity for a year or two; but, transferred to Calcutta at the close of 1870, he was appointed Assay Master there in 1872, and retained the position, sometimes acting as Mint Master, till his retirement in June 1886. A few months later he received the C.I.E. decoration.

Dr. Busteed had not been long in Calcutta before he was attracted to the study of its early history, and undertook diligent topographical and literary researches, ransacking old and forgotten records. Over the name of "Æacus" he contributed a series of historical articles to the Englishman. They attracted much attention; and when the late Sir William Wilson Hunter identified their author he strongly urged their development and issue in permanent form. The advice was repeated from different quarters, and, accordingly, in 1882, Dr. Busteed published an unassuming little volume of "Echoes from Old Calcutta." Its success was immediate; but it was not until the fourth edition was issued, in 1908, with index, chronology, and much new and curious information in the notes, that "Echoes from Old Calcutta" was presented in a form worthy of the industry, accuracy, and literary judgment of its author. The book is a classic of the history of Calcutta, and incidentally of Bengal, in the days of Clive, Warren Hastings, and Madam Grand. Dr. Busteed determined the site of the Black Hole; and it was his lament that the monument put up by Holwell, one of the survivors, to his less fortunate fellow-sufferers had disappeared in 1821, leaving Calcutta without memorial to them, which, as all old "Ditchers" know, led Lord Curzon to present to the city, in 1902, a reproduction of the structure.

THE VAGRANT.

JUNGLE FOLK.*

MR. DOUGLAS DEWAR is well known as a pleasant writer on natural history, generally of a popular type, although in conjunction with Mr. Frank Finn he has produced one work of a more serious nature on the making of species. With the exception of two chapters dealing with the mongoose and the cobra, the present work treats entirely of birds, and principally those birds which are perhaps more denizens of the compound than jungle folk. These denizens of the compound are always with us, and, as the author says in his preface, "the man who passes his days in India without knowing them misses much of the pleasure of life." This we cantfully endorse from the memory of many a pleasant hour spent in watching the feathered creatures whom Mr. Dewar so well describes. Those who desire to undertake a fascinating study cannot do better than obtain this interesting book, and follow the author's advice. They will find a new world opened out to them in the pages of this volume and in the verandah and trees of the compound.

To the uninitiated it will probably be news that there are many species of cuckoo, and that numbers of these are not parasitic, but are respectable birds which build their own nests and bring up their own young; it is interesting and perhaps somewhat remarkable to note that all the American species of cuckoo lead virtuous lives in this respect. The crow-pheasant is a respectable cuckoo, but the coel or brain-fever bird does not possess even this virtue, for it lays its eggs in crows' nests. One of the most interesting chapters in this volume deals with falconry in India; another treats of the cobra, which appears to be neither as aggressive nor as poisonous as it is generally represented to be. The krait is four times as venomous, while the bite of the latter is mild compared with that of the sea-snake.

The writer of this book is deservedly hard on the natural history of poets. Thus he remarks of the river-tern: "None of God's creatures are more attractive than terns to those who love beauty. That few, if any, of our English poets have sung the praises of these beautiful birds surely demonstrates how little attention poets pay to nature and how artificial are their writings." He also very properly condemns Jules Michelet "than whom no more wrong-headed naturalist ever lived." Certainly the French writer is a most careless observer, a poetic writer more concerned with theory than with fact, and having a tendency to make everything fit in with his preconceived notions. There are here some interesting notes on green bulbuls, which appear to possess some human attributes, for while "a true pair will live together in harmony," it is difficult to find a pair of this kind.

Mr. Dewar is certainly correct in saying that the wild goose is no fool. There are, in fact, few more wary creatures, yet the present writer one day twice approached a flock, when floating down a river, and succeeded in shooting seventeen. These were bar-headed geese. An interesting subject is that of "the cement of bird masons," from which we learn that the edible birds' nests of commerce are made entirely of saliva, which furnishes the cement in the case of many other species, such as swallows and swifts. We are inclined to think that the most instructive and suggestive chapter in this book is that dealing with the education of young birds. In this, as in the case of protective coloration and the sub-division of species, theoretical naturalists, and Americans in particular, have gone to absurd extremes. Thus according to Mr. W. J. Long, birds attend what he calls "the school of the woods," just as children study at educational establishments. He says: "After many years of watching animals in their native haunts, I am convinced that instinct conveys a much smaller part than we have supposed; that an animal's success or failure in the ceaseless struggle for life depends, not upon instinct, but on the kind of training which the animal receives from its mother." In short, as Mr. Dewar says, but for its parents a young bird would never learn to find its food, to fly, or sing, or build a nest. There is no doubt that such naturalists allow their pet theories and preconceived notions to obscure their powers of observation. While animals undoubtedly do instruct their young in many ways, actual experiment, undertaken with an open mind, has proved that birds instinctively develope the habits and attributes of their race. What of the parasitic cuckoo? There is certainly no instruction in that case. Ducklings hatched under barn-door fowls take instinctively to water. Birds develope the notes and song of their species when isolated from birth with no chance of instruction. Young ospreys learn of their own accord how to catch fish; and Barrington is inaccurate in saying that—"Notes in birds are no more innate than language is in man, but depend entirely upon the master under whom they are bred, as far as their organs will enable them to imitate the sounds which they have frequent opportunities of hearing." So also Michelet with his usual exaggeration: "Nothing is more complex than the education of certain singing birds. The perseverance of the father, the docility of the young, are worthy of all admiration." To which we may add—"Bosh!"

So long ago as 1823 an experiment, detailed by Mr. Dewar, was carried out by Mr. John Blackwall with chaffinches and robins, which conclusively proved that these birds developed their notes instinctively. Certain simple-minded people are ready to invest everything in heaven and earth with anthropomorphic attributes; but reasonable observers, with no pet theory to prove, will no doubt agree with our author in his conclusion that "the parental teaching forms a far less important factor in the education of birds than many naturalists have been led by careless observation to believe." As for some of the incubations of Jules Michelet, and especially his theorising as to the terrors that night has for birds, Mr. Dewar says "greater nonsense was never penned outside a political pamphlet." There could be no severer condemnation than that!

Fishing.

LOW WATER ROACH FISHING.

THE exact effect of the state of the water on trout fishing is, generally speaking, well understood. It is common knowledge that a freshet followed by genial cloudy weather, with a southerly wind, are conditions which favour sport. With roach the affair is different, and it is very difficult to define the state of water and weather which is most promising of sport. Some of the Yorkshire rivers, when swelled by rains on the uplands, remain a very peculiar colour for a long time after the actual muddiness has passed off. The water, though clear, is of a strange red brown tinge, due to a strong infusion of "ling," or peaty stain from the earth of the moors. This colour is always bad for bottom fishing, and has the effect of sending roach off the feed. This summer the great trouble has been the almost absolute lack of rain. The occasional thunder showers have sunk at once into the thirsting soil, and have had no effect whatever in raising the level of the rivers. All the streams are at their very lowest and clearest. The roach is already an over-educated fish, so that the increase in clearness and decrease in volume of our Northern streams have made the big fellows well nigh uncatchable. Only by using the finest possible tackle, hooks of the smallest tied to 6X gut, and fishing late on into the evening until the white tip of my porcupine quill has become almost invisible, have I been able to take a few of the better sized specimens. Probably the most favoured of all baits for roach fishing is the gentle, or larva of the blue-bottle fly. The ordinary Yorkshire workman, however, never calls it by this pleasant name, but just baldly dubs it "maggott." The scientific and most playing method is to adjust the quill float so that the tiny hook just trips along the bottom, and then bait with a single large gentle hooked through a bit of skin only. The gentle then goes down the swim just dibbing along the bottom and wriggling as it goes. This is a much more deadly plan than using two gentles, that is if the roach are at all shy. Directly the gentle loses its shape and liveliness it should be changed for a fresh one. Small fry will nip at the gentle as it floats down, and it soon acquires a drawn out attenuated look, like the finger of a glove on a reduced scale. The discriminating roach like it to be plump and lively, and the trouble of constantly changing the bait is trouble well laid out. This method of fishing is what is popularly known as "swimming the gentle."

Paste fishing is very much more troublesome, but it must be admitted that most of the best fish are taken on paste. To begin with, it is necessary to keep the piece of paste which conceals the hook in one place; it is no use whatever to let the paste swim down the current in the same way as a gentle. To anchor the paste in a stream weight is required. An ingenious method of gaining weight without losing sensitiveness has been devised in the ledger float tackle. A little cylinder of lead with a hole through its longer axis slides on the gut between two tiny shot. The float is adjusted so that it lies nearly flat on the water, while the lead (on the lower shot) rests on the bottom. The line between lead and float is taut, so that the lower end of the quill is a little sunk, and the float is thus in a slanting position, but much more nearly flat than upright. The effect of this arrangement is that the paste is anchored in the stream by the lead, while, as the gut can run freely through the weight, the most gentle of bites is signalled by the quill rising into a more upright position.

CLARKE'S BISCUIT FACTORIES, Limehouse, London, England.

By Royal Warrant to the KING.

The quill should be long and slender, thus giving more leverage, and therefore greater sensitiveness. There is a patent paste sold in the form of powder in penny boxes. It is called "King's Natural Bait" and is made in two colours, white and pink. I prefer the pink, but do not use it plain; I mix some of the powder with either flour, or paste made out of white bread. The King's Natural Bait is, I fancy, scented with aniseed: anyhow the roach seem to like it very much, and it makes a good tenacious paste which sticks well on the hook.

It is difficult to say in what exactly the undeniable fascination of roach fishing lies. I know that when, as often happens, a chub comes along and takes the gentle meant for roach, there is a feeling of resentment against him as an interloper. The roach is the fish for which all one's little dodges and refinements are meant, and the chub, which should be caught in some other way, with a fly for preference, has no business to poke his broad head into the swim. With dace and perch it is different: the gallant dashing dace is always welcome, while the perch enjoys the rare distinction, among coarse fish, of being a prize, which still is a prize on arrival in the kitchen.

A delightful spot to fish with the single gentle is a large quiet eddy. The depth should, of course, be considerable, seven to ten feet or more. The main stream glides quietly along thirty or forty feet out, and on this side of it the big eddy circles slowly round with a centre of still water, like the bull's-eye of a target. Here one can throw gentles in loose as groundbait, with the comfortable certainty that they will work round into the centre of the eddy, just where they are wanted. You cast out your tackle to the edge of the stream, and the quill cocks, and then starts on its circling tour. If there is no bite as it curves round, it can be humoured with a touch of the wrist to linger in the calm centre, and there, after a moment or two, come the expected gentle movements followed by the sinking of the white tipped quill. After that the thrill of the tightened line, to which the delicate rod tip bows in response, followed perhaps by the rush of a heavy roach into mid-stream. I have lately made myself a present of a most charming roach rod. It is 10 feet 7½ inches in length and weighs 9 ounces. The butt is of pine, the centre of blue Mahoe, and the top of lance-wood. It has just the right degree of stiffness combined with extreme delicacy. With it there is no difficulty in using such extremely fine tackle as No. 6X drawn gut; with a less sensitive tip there is fear of breaking the gut when striking. The rod is stained throughout a dull green, very pleasing to the eye, while being inconspicuous from the fishes' point of view.

The line I now use entirely for roach fishing is the finest possible plaited silk. It is no thicker than stout sewing cotton, and is dressed a green weed colour. I always rub six or seven yards of it with tallow, before going fishing. This will ensure the line floating for the rest of the day, while the tallow does not prevent the line running freely through the rings. The rings fitted to my rod, I may add, are all bridge rings, through which fine line runs much more freely than through the ordinary snake pattern.

The extremely fine tackle used for roach fishing is the cause of much anxiety to the angler when a two or three-pound chub or small jack happens to take the bait instead of the real Simon Pure. The large roach of a pound and upwards cannot be checked at once, especially if there is some current, and they usually take off several yards of line and get out into the middle where the stream is strongest, and then have to be carefully worked back, until the long handled landing net can be slipped under.

The fisherman's surroundings are very often extremely beautiful. The most exquisite scenes of English pastoral beauty are found beside her slow flowing rivers. Some of the stretches of the Derwent and Wharfe are not to be surpassed by any of the Thames reaches, choose them where you may. The angler too can ply his pursuit in that peaceful solitude which he longs for but can seldom find, during summer weather, on our all too popular Southern river.

In many a quiet corner of the Derwent the fisher can sit all day, and never have his swim ruffled by passing boat or motor launch. The only rival anglers are the kingfishers, which flash by at intervals, like flying turquoises.

I am never quite sure, when fishing, how much of the enjoyment is due to the actual fishing and how much to the entourage. Certainly I find a keener zest in the pursuit of the little roach, with a pounder as a good fish, than I did in angling for rohu, where eight to twelve pounds was a common enough weight, and a two pounder was hauled in without ceremony, and tossed contemptuously back as soon as unhooked.

The rougher tackle and more brutal methods necessary for great Indian tank fish, may possibly somewhat blunt the keenness of one's enjoyment, but I think the principal difference really lies in the extraordinary contrast of the surroundings, the difference in the air. Rohu fishing begins with the hot weather, and with those brazen months ahead one does not feel keenly enthusiastic about anything. The scenery too of an Indian tank is not such as to make an ever-growing appeal to the average Englishman. Most people would gladly exchange the lotus-fringed pool with its palm tree reflections, and chances of enormous rohu, for the September beauties of some river near their home.

AUNTIE (who is housekeeping during mother's absence): "Now you see, children, I have made you a pudding—murmurs of approval—and there won't be any trouble over getting you to take medicine to-night, for I am not going to give you any (Loud applause.) I have, however, mixed all the pills and draughts and powders up with the ingredients of the pudding." (Groans.)

PROPOSED FOX-TERRIER CLUB FOR ALL INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It is proposed to inaugurate a Fox-terrier Club for all India to be affiliated with the Fox-terrier Club of England.

As there can be no doubt about the popularity of this breed throughout India it is hoped that fanciers will support the proposal. In the first place will those interested in the Fox-terrier fancy kindly submit their names to undersigned in order that a meeting may be convened for the purpose of electing officers, etc., and the club launched on a satisfactory basis with as little delay as possible. Several leading fanciers have already signified their intention of supporting the venture, so the success of the proposal is practically assured.

BAREILLY RACES.

Third Day, Saturday, 24th February 1912.

THE Bareilly Meeting this year has been a great success. This is the first year that Rs. 500 races have been given and three days' racing provided. Previously a two days' meeting with Rs 200 races was the most ever attempted. Last year several complaints about the hardness of the course were heard but this year everybody has been agreeably surprised at the soft going. The Bareilly course is one of the finest up-country; it has a straight run in of four furlongs while the jump course is well laid out, the jumps being of the right sort, neither too big nor too small. The two stands, the paddock and all appliances are well worthy of mention. The arrangements were excellent and great credit is due to Captain Stewart, the Honorary Secretary

BY APPOINTMENT To H.M. THE KING.

In praise of LEMCO

Home-made beef tea is neither so strong, so free from fat nor so digestible as Lemco; that is why Medical men prescribe Lemco for their patients.

Home-made beef tea often disagrees; Lemco can be assimilated with ease and benefit; home-made beef tea takes hours to prepare, Lemco is ready in a minute; home-made beef tea varies in quality, Lemco is constant.

A POOR fellow, having with difficulty procured an audience of the first Duke of Newcastle, told his Grace he came only to ask him for something towards his support, and as they were of the same family, being both descended from Adam, hoped he would not be refused.

"Surely not," said the Duke—"surely not! There's a penny for you, and if all the rest of your relatives will give you as much, you'll be a richer man than I am!"

WINCHESTER

.405 CALIBER REPEATING RIFLE

THE DREADNOUGHT OF THE JUNGLE.

The .405 Winchester fears nothing alive. It is powerful enough to stop any animal, no matter how big or how dangerous. Its 300-grain, soft-point bullet has a ton and a half of energy, and when it strikes, it mushrooms and delivers the whole of this tremendous energy with terrible shocking effect. There is an immediate collapse—the animal drops as though struck by a thunderbolt. The rifle holds five of these cartridges, which can be fired in rapid succession. Its action is reliable and strong, and its shooting straight and true. As a big-game gun of exceptional power it has no peer.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

Quite apart from the results, the most remarkable feature of Saturday's play in the second round of the Football Association Cup competition was the fact that the whole sixteen ties were brought to an end despite the intense cold that prevailed all over the country. It is difficult to recall, at any rate in recent years, a Saturday on which the frost has been so severe, after a week of abnormally low temperature in all parts of England; and yet the care taken with the grounds made it possible for the referees to sanction play at places so far apart as Swindon and Middlesbrough, Darlington and London. Nor did the bitter weather chill the enthusiasm of the vast crowds who habitually find their chief week end pleasure in watching Association football; and if, under quite favourable conditions, the attendances would undoubtedly have been larger, the gates varied from 35,000 at Manchester to about 6,000 to see Bradford play Portsmouth, but in the Yorkshire city there was the great counter-attraction of the visit of Chelsea to oppose the Cupholders. Altogether, therefore, everyone concerned could feel satisfied, and in London, where the clubs engaged were neither the strongest nor the most popular in the district, the support given by the public came fully up to the highest expectations, 30,000 people assembling at Craven Cottage and 25,000 at Sydenham.

In the matter of results the Metropolitan teams fared better than seemed probable, for though Fulham alone have as yet qualified for the second series of ties, Crystal Palace drew with their formidable opponents from Sunderland, and West Ham United showed their best form in holding their own at Middlesbrough, only Chelsea, who had the severe task of going to Bradford, suffering defeat. So of the four London clubs left in after the disastrous first round three survive, and if the prospect of Crystal Palace winning the replay at Roker Park seems remote a very good prospect exists of West Ham United succeeding, though, in estimating their outlook, it must be borne in mind that Middlesborough, after drawing at home, went to Owlerton and beat Sheffield Wednesday in the replay. The West Ham team, however, did extremely well last season against prominent clubs, vanquishing Nottingham Forest, Preston North End, and Manchester United before falling victims to Blackburn Rovers, so that they will not be without hope of reaching the third round. One other Southern club did exceedingly well, Reading holding their own with Aston Villa at Birmingham; but, on the other hand, Northampton could only draw at Darlington, while Portsmouth met with the only fate that seemed possible for them at Bradford, and Coventry City had a crushing defeat inflicted on them from Manchester United.

The League champions were one of four teams to win away from home, and their victory by 5 goals to 1 was the most decisive of the day. Blackburn Rovers were the only other visiting side to score more than once, but their success over Derby County, leaders in the Second Division of the League was by the bare margin of 2 goals to 1. The other two teams to win on their opponents' ground also belong to the First Division, West Bromwich Albion beating Leeds City and Oldham Athletic overcoming Manchester City also by 1 goal to 0. Besides Middlesborough, and Aston Villa, teams to disappoint their supporters were Everton, who, at Goodison Park, could not overcome Bury—by far the weakest of the big League clubs. Swindon played up to their form as Southern League champions, and leaders in the competition by scoring 2 to 0 against Notts County, who share with Liverpool the somewhat ignominious fate of being knocked out by a club not belonging to their own select tournament.

Swindon enjoy the unique distinction of being the one Southern League club already in the third round. They will probably be joined by Northampton, who should certainly manage to account for Darlington in the replay, and possibly by West Ham United. Six First Division teams have so far qualified, and there may be four more, while four of Saturday's conquerors belong to the Second Division. Of the sixteen teams that reached the third stage a year ago only five enjoy that happy position at present, namely Bradford City, Blackburn Rovers, Manchester United, Wolverhampton Wanderers, and Swindon, but, of course, the number will be increased in the replays, though only two of last season's semi-finalists remain—Bradford City and Blackburn Rovers. Regarded generally, the ties provided a remarkably even lot of matches. Five of the sixteen were drawn, and in six cases only a goal divided the teams at the end of the hour and a half's football. Of the thirty-two goalkeepers ten went through the trying ordeal without succumbing, and as many as fifteen more gave away but one goal each, while altogether the sixteen ties yielded 33 goals.

Corinthians vs. Oxford University.—The Corinthians beat Oxford University at Queen's Club on Saturday by two goals to one. There was considerable doubt as to whether the game could be played or not, as the ground was very hard after the recent frost. As the University match is to be decided on Saturday next, Oxford were particularly anxious to have some practice, and, as matters turned out, a really good game was seen, although heavy charging was out of the question. Although beaten by the odd goal in three, Oxford had quite as much of the play as the Corinthians, whose forwards never really seemed to settle down. The result must have been very gratifying to Oxford supporters, as the team appears to have come on by leaps and bounds since last term. The two outside forwards, A. H. G. Kerry and C. B. Johnston, both showed fine form, and some of their dropping centres were quite the feature of the game. H. Popham, a Freshman this term, also showed excellent form at right half-back. The inside forwards, like Cambridge, are not great shots at goal, although on Saturday they had few opportunities, for W. U. Timmis and V. G. Trew always seemed in the right position when danger threatened. All the goals were kicked in the first half of the game. W. I. Macdonald opened the scoring for Oxford after a fine centre by Johnston, but R. A. Young soon equalized after some pretty work on the right wing. M. H. Clarke directly afterwards gave the Corinthians the lead, but B. Scott certainly ought to have saved quite an easy shot.

Oxford should be thoroughly satisfied with their display, and their improvement coming so near to their match with Cambridge should give them confidence.

RUGBY RULES.

Wales vs. Scotland.—In wintry weather Wales and Scotland met at Swansea on the 3rd instant to decide their twenty-eighth match under Rugby Union rules. While each country had won thirteen of the previous encounters, Wales had triumphed seven times in the last eight years. Moreover, twenty years had elapsed since Scotland last proved victorious on Welsh soil. In these circumstances Wales, despite their defeat at the hands of England at Twickenham a fortnight ago, were naturally strong favourites. From the Scottish fifteen successful against France a fortnight ago the visitors made only three changes, two forward and one at half-back while Wales tried three alterations at three-quarter back, one at half-back, and one amongst the forwards from the side beaten by England. The weather had been very hard all the week, and during Friday night a considerable amount of snow fell, but, thickly covered with straw until yesterday afternoon the field of play was in capital condition the whole enclosure having been protected except the space in goal at either end—somewhat unfortunate neglect. Though, of course, cold, the weather turned very bright and a huge crowd gathered to witness the the struggle, the company a quarter of an hour before the start being estimated at quite 30,000. Just before three o'clock the Scotchmen, led by McCallum, entered the field, and a minute later the Welshmen followed, headed by Owen.

Scotland won the toss but gained little advantage thereby. Bancroft kicked off, and, following a return by Pearson, Stephens broke away. The Scotsmen, however, worked their way back into the Welsh half, where a series of scrummages ensued. The visitors got the ball once or twice, but made little ground. Hirst dashed away, only to be pushed into touch but a useful kick by Crew found touch in Scotland' " 25," where Owen made a mark. Sutherland returned badly, but the Scottish forwards relieved the pressure. Offside against Scotland enabled Bancroft to maintain the attack by finding touch. Owen opening from a scrummage, the Welsh backs had a fine chance, but combined indifferently, Birt ruining the movement by throwing wide to Plummer. Still, for the first ten minutes Wales had had much the bigger share of the game. Again Scotland were penalised, this time for " foot up " yet Wales could not drive home the advantage. A free kick for Scotland was neutralised by a good return from Birt. So far the play had been rather disappointing, consisting chiefly of scrummaging and punts into touch. The Scottish forwards broke away but kicking too hard, W. Davies checked with a mark. Scotland improved, and from a kick up the field the ball rolled just over the Welsh line. Bancroft touching down.

Again Owen opened well for his three quarters, the ball going right across to Plummer, whom Will forced into touch. Another time a fine chance for Wales was lost by Birt passing forward Scott and Milroy headed a capital rush back to the home half, but the next minute a fine bout by the Welshmen saw Hirst forced into touch on the Welsh line. In some loose work that followed Stephens was over the line, but lost the ball, and Scotland touched down. The drop out brought Scotland but little relief, but at length Milroy slipped round the scrum. Gunn and Pearson handling and Will running strongly until pushed into touch well up the field. Bancroft relieved, and Sutherland kicking poorly Scotland again found themselves on the defensive. Once more Wales were nearly in, but Purves cleared in good style. An interchange of kicks, however, ended in favour of Bancroft. Following brief interruptions the Welshmen had another fine chance, but Birt passed too low to Hirst. A moment later, however, Owen feinting gave to Hirst, who slipped over with a man on his back and scored. A try for Wales. Bancroft failed at a difficult place kick. Following the drop out Wales maintained the pressure, and from a pass by Owen, Trew dropped a goal, Wales thus scoring twice in two minutes. For a while after this Wales continued to hold the upper hand, but just before the interval Scotland broke away. Adams and Pearson handled, and Will running strongly, crossed the Welsh line. Turner failed with the kick. Nothing more was done before half-time, when the score stood:

Wales	...	...	1 dropped goal 1 try

Disappointing for a long time, the play, with three scores in the last ten minutes of the opening half, had aroused great enthusiasm. Scotland had defended well, but the Welsh backs, considering how often the ball was with them, should have scored more often. McCallum kicked off on resuming, Pearson finding touch well in the Welsh half. Gunn, from a scrum, dodged splendidly and passed to Scott, who sent Will in with a try for Scotland. Turner made a poor shot at goal, but within three minutes of the resumption Scotland were thus only one point behind. Wales then worked to midfield, and in a fine rush by the home forwards Ivor Morgan scored a try, Bancroft placing a capital goal. Wales, with only six minutes of the second half gone, led by 12 points to 6. Just afterwards Wales, when dangerous, were penalised, and, following a free kick to to Wales, Gunn made an opening for Angus, who came away in great style. The latter, however, was brought down, and just afterwards, from a penalty, Pearson missed a great chance for Scotland. At this period Scotland were playing up in splendid fashion. Angus ran strongly, but could not quite get through, and then Bancroft, in front of goal, blundered for the first time. Angus dashed away, but Birt brought him down. The Welsh forwards relieved slightly, and then came a brief delay owing to an injury to Gunn. On resuming, the Scottish forwards carried the game well into the Welsh " 25," but Bancroft relieved with a fine kick. A free kick to Scotland was followed up by capital work on the part of the visitors' forwards, whose fine dribbling passes were much in evidence. Very strenuous work on both sides ensued. Scotland having rather the best of matters and Pearson found touch near the Welsh line, where a series of scrummages took place. Eventually Trew relieved. Plummer next ran finely, but fell. Scotland, however, were generally much the more dangerous in the second half, but Bancroft was never again at fault, his fielding and kicking being admirable. Still, less than ten minutes from the finish Scotland were again on the Welsh line. Seven minutes before the close Wales were penalised near goal, but Turner just missed a splendid chance of reducing the balance against Scotland. The game had almost run its course when Wales broke away, and Bert, picking up in the loose, dropped a goal. Immediately afterwards Plummer put Wales further ahead with a try that Bancroft converted. Wales thus won by 21 points to 6.

LONGBOAT BEATS RECORD.

A FIFTEEN miles sweepstake match which had an international flavour was decided on Saturday, the 3rd February, at Powderhall Grounds, Edinburgh. The contestants were W. Kolehmainen (Finland), winner of this year's Powderhall Marathon race; Hans Holmer, a Londoner long resident in America, the winner of the Powderhall Marathon in 1911; and Tom Longboat of Canada.

The match was the outcome of the Powderhall Marathon race, when the Finn beat Holmer by a few yards. Cameron, of Nova Scotia, was mentioned as a possible fourth party to the match, but he did not come in.

The betting some time before the start was 6 to 4 against Longboat, 7 to 4 Holmer, and 2 to 1 Kolehmainen, but at the start the Finn was favourite at 6 to 4 against, Holmer's price being unchanged, while Longboat had receded to 5 to 2 against.

Longboat at the fire of the pistol took the lead and when a lap had been covered he was 20 yards in front of Kolehmainen, who in turn was a couple of yards in front of Holmer. At one mile Longboat held a lead of 20 yards, but two laps later the Finn started to overhaul the Indian, and at two miles he was at Longboat's heels, with Holmer a yard behind. Gradually the Indian and Kolehmainen drew away from Holmer, and when a fifth of the journey had been traversed the latter was half a lap behind. With five miles of the journey gone, Longboat still held the lead, with Holmer falling further in the rear. Half a mile later Longboat drew away about ten yards from the Finn and he was then only a matter of 20 yards short of being a lap in front of Holmer.

Twenty yards separated the leader from the Finn at the sixth mile. Longboat at one point lapped Holmer, who, however, drew up again later. Meanwhile Kolehmainen had lost some ground, being about 50 yards in the rear.

The position was unaltered when half the distance had been covered. The Finn seemed a general favourite, and from time to time he received an encouraging shout. When ten miles had been covered the Indian put in a strong spurt, but Kolehmainen responded gamely, and began to make up some of the leeway. At the conclusion of the eleventh mile the spectators, who were not relishing the climatic conditions, got something to shout about. The Finn, running gamely, and showing fine determination, quickly wiped out arrears, and when he took up a position a yard behind Longboat a great cheer went up.

Now a four struggle began, the three men running in a bunch. In the course of the thirteenth mile Kolehmainen took the lead, and for some time after this there was a series of sprints, the Finn and Holmer leading alternately. Perhaps this was a tactical blunder on the part of the former, for he had not to fear Holmer, and Longboat showed sound judgment in hanging on in the rear.

Two laps from home Kolehmainen and Longboat burst away, and Holmer was left behind. The Finn was a couple of yards in front, and this order was maintained till the bell rang for the last lap. The finish was an inspiring one. Two hundred yards from the tape Kolehmainen broke away, but the Indian was not to be shaken off, and when the straight was reached they were running neck and neck.

Then the Finn made the final effort, and twenty yards from the tape Longboat got in front, and won from Kolehmainen by a couple of feet.

The winner's time was 1h. 20mins. 46⅘secs., which beats the professional record for the distance, but does not equal that of Appleby. The professional record for 15 miles, and also for 14 miles, was also broken.

BILLIARDS.

STEVENSON vs. INMAN.—During the second week of his exhibition match of 18, set up with Inman (receiving 2,000) at the Leicester Square Hall Stevenson seemed likely at one time to get on terms with his opponent in spite of the latter's long lead at the close of the first week's play; it was hoped that he would at any rate be less than the 2,000 points in arrears behind at the finish. All this season however Stevenson's form has varied considerably. This has been no doubt partly to the fact that he has had spells of indisposition and partly to the necessity of changing from ivory to bonzoline balls and vice versâ. He was unable to maintain the improvement shown at several of the mid-week sessions, and in the end he was beaten by 3,291 points, the closing scores being:

Inman (receives 2,000), 18,000.
Stevenson 14,707.

Inman, who seems always capable of making an extraordinary effort when he thinks it necessary, played really brilliantly towards the end of the match. On Saturday afternoon he scored 667, with an average of 222 to Stevenson's a total of 144, and in the evening 665, with an average of 166, to Stevenson's total of 56. His largest break was 382, nearly all made at the top of the table; but perhaps the 272 (unfinished) with which he ran out an easy winner was the most interesting of his breaks. He never once had a difficult position to deal with, and he scored with the fluent grace which, until the present season, has never been a characteristic of his style. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that he is the best of the English professionals on current form and that he ought to beat Reece in the coming contest for the championship. It is very unlikely, however, that he would have a chance against George Gray, although, when he chooses to do so, he is capable of making a long sequence of red losers a very useful asset in matches with the Australian players, who naturally do not like to be challenged at their own special game. The fact that Lindrum, retiring on this occasion on his special gift of keeping the position for red losers into the top pockets, won his match of 18, 60 up, level, with Reece at Manchester by no fewer than 6,442 points does not, of course, throw any new light on the situation. Reece was altogether out of form, his three-figure breaks being few and far between.

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY CREWS.—Although time is rapidly passing the Cambridge eight remains in an extremely unsettled state, for one and another of the oarsmen have crocked up with colds and influenza, and thus very considerably handicapped Mr. J. H. Gibbon. The president's cold is only a little better, and he is not expected to row any more this week; whilst F. E. Hellyer's illness has turned out more serious than was at first expected.

Under the circumstances Mr. Gibbon is taking drastic measures, and yesterday called upon two men who did not row in the trial eights in the persons of L. A. Pattinson and J. Ayliff. Pattinson was the winner of the Colquhoun Sculls, beating President Arbuthnot in the final, and although not by any means polished oars, both are real hard workers. They were left out of the trials solely because they were indisposed. Aylliff was put in at bow, vice Lloyd, and C. F. Bernaud the Blue, who had been rested for a few days, returned to No. 2 vice Shore. Pattinson was not called upon to row in the eight.

Mr. Gibbon commenced operations in the morning, when he took Aylliff and Shore for a lengthy spell in the small boat. He continued tubbing after lunch, when he instructed Lloyd and Pattinson, Heyland and Dobbs, Wankowicz and Swann. The ship was launched just before half half-past three, and the crew paddled to the Pike and Eel and then on to Baitsbite Locks in one piece. Returning against the stream, they paddled through to the Railway Bridge without an ease, and after that pulled home in a number of easy stages. On both journeys the work was interspersed by short bursts of rowing, the afternoon's work showing some improvement. Amended order and weights:—

Wretched conditions attended the practice of the Dark Blues yesterday. Fortunately it had been arranged to practice on the home water and Dr. Bourne opened the proceedings with small boat instructions to Pitman and Tinne. Horsfall and Wormald, and Wedderburn and Wiggin.

It was getting on towards four o'clock before last year's racer was brought out, and with darkness coming on space the work was necessarily somewhat restricted. They had two outings, but in neither did they row a full course. On both occasions paddling was indulged in to the Ivy, and having turned at the Lasher they pulled up to the long bridges, and had two lively runs, each of one minute's duration, the boat being sent along at a capital pace against a strong stream. This was practically the whole of the hard work, as they subsequently contented themselves with easy paddles back to the raft. Names and weights:—

Polo.

THE INFANTRY TOURNAMENT.

THE Infantry Polo tournament began at Bareilly on Monday, the 19th instant, when the first round was put through. Three games were down for decision and the Highland Light Infantry had drawn bye. None of the matches were particularly close and the winners in each case came through fairly comfortably. Results were:—Durham Light Infantry beat the 4th Worcesters by 5 goals to 1; 2nd Gurkhas beat the 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles by 8 goals to 1; 2nd Royal Welsh Fusiliers beat 1st Seaforth Highlanders by 5 goals to 1. The Semi-finals were played off on the 21st instant in the presence of a large assembly of spectators. The 17th Cavalry and the 2nd Gurkhas were "At home," the Gurkhas Band being an additional attraction. The first game was between the Durham Light Infantry and the Highland Light Infantry. The Durhams got away at the start and scored in spite of a stout defence. The Highlanders pressed throughout the second and third periods but were unable to get through. They continued to attack in the next chukker but again failed to send home one of their numerous shots and just before the close of the period the Durhams scored. In the next the Highlanders kept up a strong attack but all their shots at goal went out on the wrong side of the flags. The Durhams hit another goal in this period and having all the best of the last chukker during which they scored again, ran out winners by by 4 goals to nil.

The second game was between the 2nd Gurkhas and the Welsh Fusiliers and a great struggle was witnessed, the Fusiliers who were better mounted eventually winning by 6 goals to 1. The Fusiliers had the upper hand in the earlier chukkers and at end of the third period stood 4 up. Then the Gurkhas asserted themselves and in the fourth chukker they did all the pressing but could not materialise any of their efforts. The fifth was all in favour of the Fusiliers who scored two more goals. The final period saw the Gurkhas pressing once more and they were on top till time was called, but all their endeavours yielded but a single goal and they had to retire beaten by 6 goals to 1.

The final between the Durham Light Infantry and the Royal Welsh Fusiliers was decided on the 23rd instant. The R.A.M.C. were "At home," the band of the Worcestershires played an excellent programme and there was a large attendance. The result was rather a surprise as most people fancied the Fusiliers' chances but the Durhams played a sterling game and won decisively by 5 goals to one, and thus carried off for the seventh time the cup presented by the Earl of Airlie for the Infantry Polo Tournament. It is interesting to note that Captain Wilkinson and Major Lucas who were playing for the Durhams were members of Colonel DeLisle's famous team which carried all before them during the early nineties. Details:—

First Chukker.—The Durhams went away at the start and quickly scored two goals. The Fusiliers then took up the attack but were unable to score.

Second Chukker.—The Fusiliers pressed and shot in several shots, none of which were successful. Then the Durhams came away but the ball went out at the side.

Third Chukker.—The Fusiliers attacked vigorously throughout this period and their efforts were at length rewarded with a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Level play up and down. The Durhams hit behind but the penalty hit was not improved upon. No score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Fusiliers pressed without result and then play was transferred Wilkinson scoring a third goal for the Durhams.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play. The Fusiliers narrowly missed scoring. The Durhams next got possession and after three unsuccessful attempts put the ball through. They got away again soon after and just before time notched another point and thus won by 5 goals to 1.

MINIATURE AND MID-RANGE

TARGET RIFLES

Rifle Clubs with many thousands of members now exist in England and the Colonies, and practically every one of them uses the special B.S.A. rifles adapted for miniature and mid-range work.

The B.S.A. Martini and the Bolt Action rifles are adapted for the ·22, ·230, ·250, ·300, ·310, ·32-23 and ·32-40 Cartridges. With the cheap but popular and accurate ·22 "long rifle" cartridge B.S.A. rifles will shoot into a 2-inch circle at 100 yards, and into a 4-inch circle at 200 yards.

Of the cheap but well-made and highly accurate B.S.A. No. 2 Model Miniature Rifle (retail price in England 30/-), Mrs. Darley, a well-known Indian lady rifle shot, recently wrote as follows :—

"I am writing to tell you how very pleased I am with the ·22 bore Miniature Rifle of yours that I have been using at the S.I.R.A Meeting held here during the last fortnight. I think it is what is called a No. 2 Model, but am not sure. It has a bolt action and costs out here Rs. 32 (£2 2s.), the peepsight being extra. I bought it over a year ago and it has done me well. I have a new much more expensive rifle by another maker, but it is with the little B.S.A. that I have made all my best scores. At this meeting alone I have won with it one first prize, one second prize, one third prize, and the Ladies' Championship (value £5), besides eight silver spoons in pool shooting —over £13 worth in all. Besides which I have won several prizes with it at other meetings."

"Mrs. Applin has also done very well with one of your rifles, which she has had for some years. She made several 'possibles' with it during the meeting, one being 19 consecutive bulls."

SPECIAL SIGHTS.

The B.S.A. No. 8 screw adjusted aperture backsight, with 6-hole eyepiece, and Nos. 19 and 20 combination target foresights, are specially adapted for these and other kinds of match rifles.

Football.

THE PUNJAB-BENGAL TOURNAMENT.

THE Punjab-Bengal Tournament opened at Umballa on the 19th instant, when two games in the first round were played. The South Lancashire Regiment met the Lancashire Fusiliers and were defeated by 2 goals to nil, and the 3rd King's Royal Rifles beat the King's Dragoon Guards by 2 goals to 1. In the latter game the first half was pointless, but on resuming the Dragoons scored and held a lead till the last few minutes of the game when the Riflemen put the ball through twice and won as stated. Two games were played on the 20th instant and both ended drawn. They were replayed the next day, when the North Staffords beat the Gordon Highlanders by 2 goals to nil. The opening play was very even, but before the interval the Staffords had scored, the Gordons losing a good chance of getting on terms from a free kick. They were nearly through again early in the second half, the ball just going over the bar. Then the Staffords pressed and netted once more and the Highlanders being unable to score the game ended as stated. The other game also ended in a 2 to nil victory, the King's Regiment defeating the 2nd Royal West Kents by this margin. The King's scored soon after the start. Up and down play followed in which the West Kents made desperate efforts to get through, a fine shot once missing the goal by inches. The King's had the better of exchanges subsequently, and missed chances through erratic shooting. At length shortly before the interval they scored from a corner kick. In the second half play was even and neither team got through, the King's winning by 2 to nil.

The semi-finals took place on the 22nd instant, the first match being between the Lancashire Fusiliers and the 3rd King's R. Rifles. It was an exciting game throughout. The Riflemen, playing with the wind in their favour, were a goal up at the interval, but in the second moiety just before time the Fusiliers equalised from a penalty kick, the score being one all at the interval. An extra ten minutes each way was decided upon and during this period the Fusiliers scored twice and thus won by 3 goals to 1. The other match, between the 2nd N. Staffords and the King's Regiment, was also a well contested affair. The opening play was very level, then the King's attacked but the Staffords' custodian was equal to all their attempts and at length play was transferred to the opposite end, where the Staffords put the ball through. In the second half play was rather slow neither team gained any advantage, the N. Staffords thus qualifying for the final by a goal to nil.

The final was played on Saturday in the presence of a large gathering, a good game ending in a win for the holders, the Lancashire Fusiliers, who beat the 2nd N. Staffords by 2 goals to 1.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LAST year's Beighton Cup winners are going very strong in the League, but their huge victories are due to the excellent play of Smart. This player is not only very speedy but has a fine centre over the ball and when in scoring mood is one of the most dangerous players one could wish to find. In four games the Rangers have scored 29 goals to their opponents' 3, and out of this number Smart has netted no fewer than fifteen. The Orientals, La Martinière, 40th Pathans and Rovers have all gone down before the Rangers. The Rangers are easily first on the League; but as the E. I. R. have not played a single match and as some of the other Clubs have only played one or two, we will give the table in our next issue.

The Customs are also going strong. Williamson against Sibpur was tried at centre half, and he should be kept in this position. He is a hard worker, intercepts the passes nicely, and will, with a little more practice, feed his forwards with more judgment. He hits a bit too hard at present, but he will soon get rid of this habit. Anderson is playing a more combined game with the rest of his forwards, and although McCready was an absentee, the Customs were able to beat Sibpur by 3—2 last Tuesday, in a well contested and interesting game, in which the Riversiders had decidedly the larger share of attacking. Galbraith was seen to great advantage at centre forward, and when McCready is able to assist his side the Customs will take some beating. Customs beat Dalhousie 1—0, and Sibpur 3—2. On Saturday, Customs play the Rangers, and a great game is expected. That the League is going to be keenly contested goes without saying, as both Calcutta and the Medicals are also teams to be reckoned with, while Dalhousie, when at full strength, can put out a very decent eleven.

Now that the Lawn Tennis Championships are coming to an end, Calcutta will have the assistance of all their good men, but the team that will represent them in the Beighton Cup will not be selected until half the programme of the League has been completed. H. M. Sherman is taking a rest, but of last years' players Cole, Studd and Bocquet are playing at the top of their form, while of the new players, Halliday and Porter are shaping exceedingly well. Calcutta have played three games; their first resulting in a draw with St. Xavier's, but the "Reds" beat the Rovers by 3—0 on Saturday, and last Tuesday they licked the Measurers by 6—0.

Dalhousie have put up two magnificent fights—one against the Customs and the other against Sibpur but the Trades Club are not blessed with the best of luck, and both games were lost by the narrowest of margins. Indeed the Dals should have beaten Sibpur on Saturday, for they had by far the best of the game, but the boys netting one in the closing stages of the match won by 2—1. Dals lost to the Customs by 1—0 but a draw would have been a truer index to the game. On Tuesday, however, the Trades Club who had out a scratch team, lost to St Xavier's by 3—0.

The 40th Pathans who have four officers included in their team, are a very fast side, but their shooting is erratic. Their defence too is uncertion, and but for this they would not have lost to the Rangers by 6—2.

The Medicals have won their two matches easily, but their team is likely to go stale long ere the League is concluded. The Medicals play much too hard, and they take all their matches too seriously. A sixteen-anna gallop cannot last long and if they are to render a better account of themselves in the big tournament, they should slacken their efforts in some of their League engagements.

Sibpur too take the League very seriously, and if this continues, they, like the Medicals, will go stale. It will be recollected that both these Colleges were beaten in the knock out tournament last year—Sibpur losing to Barrackpore who were only a scratch lot, while the Medicals went down to the Customs by 4 goals, both results being surprising—the big margin by which Customs won and the defeat of Sibpur by a second rate team.

The Orientals, La Martinière, and the Y.M.C.A. Amateurs are all on a par, but the Y.M.C.A. (Central Branch), and the Measurers will go down to the bottom of the League. The Amateurs will be stronger as the season advances. The E.I.R. have not played a single match, but as the side is identically the same that played last season they should wind up in the middle of the table.

EASTERN COMMAND NATIVE ARMY TOURNAMENT.

SEVEN teams entered for the Eastern Command Hockey Tournament at Allahabad this year and of these two the 13th Rajputs and 62nd Punjabis scratched. The opening game, and the only one in the first round, was played on the 20th instant when the 33rd Punjabis met the 41st Dogras. The Dogras put up a good fight and though they were beaten 5 to 1, the game was closer than the score would indicate. The 48th Pioneers had been drawn against the 38th Rajputs, but the latter scratched. In the first of the semi-final games on the 21st instant the 5th Light Infantry met the 48th Pioneers and a good fast game resulted in a win for the 48th by 2 goals to nil. The other semi-final between the 33rd Punjabis and the 16th Rajputs was played on Thursday when the 33rd easily accounted for the 16th by 9 goals to 1. The final last Saturday brought together the 48th Pioneers and the 33rd Punjabis and a fine game was witnessed. The 33rd notched two points early in the game and though the 48th got through once the 33rd scored again and won by 3 goals to 1. This is the third successive year in which the 33rd have won this tournament. It will be remembered that they are the winners of the King's Cup Tournament at the Delhi Durbar. The 48th have met the 33rd in the final three times, and although they have been defeated on each occasion they have the satisfaction of knowing that they have their name twice inscribed on the cup.

At the conclusion of the game Brigadier-General Shaw congratulated both teams and Mrs. Shaw presented the Cup to Captain Chamier, the captain of the 33rd, amidst cheering.

Shows.

THE BOMBAY HORSE SHOW.

THE Bombay Horse Show was held last week and was as usual a most interesting fixture. The entries showed a slight falling off, but the class was good all round, the Hunters being especially good. The attendance on Tuesday was poor, but it is always better on the second day and this year was no exception, a large gathering of spectators turning up in the afternoon. The general arrangements in the hands of the Show Secretary, Mr. A. H. M. Wilson, could not have been improved upon. The judges were Col. E. C. R. Butler, Col. Gough, Col. R. C. Broome, Major J. H. PROSPECT VILLAS.

JOE BIGGS was the owner of a row of houses in the nature of small residential property, and his tenants consisted, almost entirely, of "gentlemen of the ring" prize or turf, to whom he invariably gave precedence as tenants, and treated with the greatest leniency. The more ferocious repulsive and burly on the one hand, or "hoary" on the other, the prospective tenant appeared, the better chance he had of making easy terms with the dapper little cockney trainer.

"Lord luv ye sir" he would say, "A man wot ken use' is fists, or lives again the' oses is art rite, 'e is. 'E pays wen dukes, or lives again the' oses is art rite, 'e is. 'E pays wen 'e can, and wen 'e cawnt, 'e cawnt and that's arl abart it."

He never would realise that the loafing touts and tipsters who beguiled him into giving them tenancies, and who never paid their rent knew as much about a horse as an Artic fox, and cared less. A time came however, when his belief in his own particular tenants began to waver.

"Prospect Villas" consisted of a row of small semi-detached houses, run up by an enterprising builder, whose rose-coloured spectacles converted clay into cement for foundations, and sand and water into mortar; and Joe Biggs, with the desire of being a house-property owner hot upon him, looked no further than the smartly painted fronts, took the bait and paid quite twice as much as the houses were worth, even if properly built, and straightway set to work to tenant them with as fine and representative a lot of blackguards as it was possible for a soft-hearted amateur sporting landlord to collect. I was not, therefore, surprised, when Joe informed me that he had decided to sell his houses, giving, as his reason that he wished to extend his training grounds and stabling, and required the capital, a reason which in no way hoodwinked me.

"What are the rentals?" I asked.

"Two quid a month" said Joe.

"Tenants pay rates and taxes." I queried.

"No" said Joe "I does that."

"Yus"

"Good tenants?"

"Well, they are very good fellers but I reckon that things 'ave been a bit rough with them the larst year," said Joe evasively.

"Any in arrears"?

"Well may be there is."

"Who has been collecting the rents?"

"I done it meself."

"Then you know all about it. Give particulars of each tenancy. You see Joe, if anyone t hinks of buying they will want to know what the tenants are like."

After the greatest difficulty and much cross-examination, I elicited from Joe that all the tenants were in arrears, the least being seven months; that they all, whenever he called for rent, clamoured for repairs, in spite of his having expended during the last year, quite three years' rent on each house in complying with their demands; and when I asked him why he did not clear the whole lot out, he had so many excuses for them, such as—one had put his little all on such and such a horse, which by all the rights of form should have got home, or—that Bill Blobs had spent so much on his training for the heavy weight bout with "Cute Cha Charley" and fell sick, that it was not in his nature to press them, and so on.

"Joe" I said. "You started on this property the wrong way. What you ought to have done was to have given a free conveyance to each of your tenants. It would have saved you a lot of money in the end."

"Ah" said Joe, eyeing me doubtedly. "anyways I want to sell it now."

And so it came to pass that Joe, in due course, received an offer for his property, of a little less than half of what he paid for it, provided he gave vacant possession.

A responsible firm of agents was instructed, notices to quit were served, which had at first, about as much effect upon the faithful tenants as a circular for a new brand of tea would have done, and were quite as useful for pipelights. The agent was persistent, and farther notices were served, these caused the tenants pained surprise for they were amazed that Mr. Biggs should so treat them. They held a conference, when they decided that the hateful notices could not have emanated from their worthy landlord, but must be the meddling interference of an overzealous and obnoxious agent. Having come to this conclusion, they decided to form a deputation; call upon their landlord; place their grievances before him; and obtain the instant withdrawal of the offensive notices to quit. Their meeting took place at the village Inn "the Crooked Billett"; a quarter of a mile down the road.

The worthy landlord, deriving considerable income from Prospect Villas and knowing it was diverted from its proper channel, viz., in payment of rent to Joe Biggs, was naturally outwardly in sympathy with the tenants, but as a good sportsman had an immense respect for our friend Joe.

The speeches of the tenants were not violent they were tinged more with pained astonishment than with anger. The references they made to their landlord were almost affectionate in tone, and the Agent was alluded to as a misguided and ignorant trifler with their rights. It was finally put to the meeting and carried with their rights. It was finally put to the meeting and carried nem. con. that Alex. Wheedle, tipster, card sharper, and flat catcher, should represent the tenants as spokesman, while Bill Blobs, self-styled heavy-weight Champion, and old Alf. Tickle, who lived on the reputation of having once won a classic event as a jockey,-the actual event varying from a welter handicap to the Derby, according to the potency of his refreshment and the intensity of the cerebral emotion caused thereby, were to be Wheedle's supporters. After the interview Joe came to me much perturbed. I gathered that some one in every house was either at death's door or in an interesting condition and that therefore it was quite impossible for them to quit. Also, that the roofs of all the houses were leaking, the drainage in them all was blocked, the floors were falling in, and the main walls required underpinning. The tenants had suffered all these defects without a murmur, because Mr Biggs was a gent and sportsman, and although they, with becoming modesty, did not lay claim to call themselves gents they were all sportsmen, and they went to him as one sportsman to another to protect them from sharks like the Agent.

"Ye see, Sir, I know wot it it is ter be darn on me uppers, and them pore blokes they sea they'll soon weigh in with the chips if I giv em time."

"Look here, Joe, I have instructed the Agent for you and if you don't leave the matter in his hands, I have done with you." Joe went off shaking his head and looking very troubled. The notices being ignored, the Agent applied to the County Court, and obtained short orders for ejectment and Prospect Villas were duly served with same.

Another meeting was held at the "Crooked Billet." This time the tone of the meeting was indignation. Old Tickle was heard to say that he was d—d if old Biggs were n't playing a game with them. The words "forceable ejectment" on a given day, appeared on the orders and Blobs smiled grimly when he read them. Much argument on the law, relating to forceable ejectment, took place and it was finally settled, that if force were used, force might, by the rights of British Justice, be met by force, therefore, there being twelve able bodied tenants and fifteen lodgers they arrived at the very right conclusion that by cohesion and mutual defence it would require a very considerable force to eject them. The landlord heard their debate, and punctuating their periods of sympathy with sympathetic "Ahs" and "Ohs" served much stimulus to their feelings, as a right-minded sportsman, appreciating the esprit de corps which unites all true sportsmen in a bond of fraternity and mutual support. Again, a resolution was unanimously passed. Prospect Villas henceforth were not to be left without guard day or night and in the event of any one house being attacked, the tenants and lodgers of the others should all assist in its defence. The lodgers were somewhat doubtful as to their legal position, but as they, in turn, were one and all more or less in debt to their immediate landlords, they were perforce, obliged to agree to the terms. One bright morning early in May, the agent marched down the village street, with an escort of the one local representative of law and order; a youthful clerk from his office, and two men from the neighbouring town who earned their living as "the man in possession." The agent knocked at the door of No. 1 Prospect Villas, and, not waiting for an answer opened it, entered, and called to his clerk and the two men to follow him, leaving the policeman to wait outside. A shrill voice from upstairs called out.

"Who's there! ye carnt come in 'ere."

"But I am in here" answered the agent. "Is Mr. Blobs at home!"

"No! 'e aint, an wots more its lucky for you 'e aint" said the owner of the voice, a slatternly tousled red haired woman, as she hurried down the stairs followed by a little girl.

"Wot do ye want in 'ere!"

"I've come to take possession of this house under an order of the Court. You must remove your furniture at once, and these men will assist you, if you refuse, I shall order these men to do so themselves!"

"Ho! will ye! remove my furniter Mr. Impereence. Ho! I'll soon see abart that. 'Ere Minnie you be off."

Minnie, the little girl, dived down the passage and out of the house.

"Now Mrs. Blobs" said the agent moving into the front room "you had far better be reasonable, if there is in any trouble it means the police court."

"Ho! does it!" said Mrs. Blobs her arms akimbo. "If my Bill was 'ere it might mean the Old Biley for all 'e'd care."

While the above colloquy was taking place, the little girl Minnie was darting from house to house, and the tenants were hurriedly leaving their premises, some of them ranging up alongside of the policeman by the front gate, while the others made their appearance at the back of the house. Presently Mr. Wheedle pushed his way into the front parlour.

"Dear me! What's this Mrs. Blobs! I hear you have trespassers in the house."

"Nonsense" said the agent.

Mrs. Blobs started a tirade against the agent,—the law,—the landlord and she discoursed volubly of the iniquity of all and every, choking and spluttering in her rage.

"Now then men, remove these sticks," called out the agent. The two men each took up a chair in a perfunctory sort of way, and moved to the front door but when they reached it, found the entrance blocked by half a dozen of the tenants.

"Now then make way" said one of the men, pushing a chair in front of him.

"'Ere who er you a shoving of" said a burly boxer in the doorway.

"Now then Mister, drop that orm-cheer, that berlongs ter me" said another.

"That tother chair belongs to my Granny" cried old Tickle from the rear, raising a laugh

"Now then boys, let's come through" appealed the men.

"Wot and take my orm-cheer, no me" said a tipster.

"And Grannie's too the d—d thief" squealed old Tickle "here officer the blokes in there are a stealing of our furniture."

The policement, appealed to, looking very uncomfortable at the laugh that followed, and the attention called to himself, endeavoured to maintain his dignity by telling the men to move on.

The tenants, entirely ignoring him, continued to crowd round the door, shouting jibes and jeers at the embarassed visitors within, claiming every article in the house as their own, and protesting that they were there to see that their goods were not stolen.

The Agent appealed and threatened, but to no purpose, and finally losing his temper, he flung up the window, and ordered his men to throw the furniture out. But no sooner had an article of furniture reached the window than it was received by the tenants and lodgers outside, and handed to those at the door to be passed into the room again. Presently a shout was raised outside of "'ere comes Bill" and almost immediately afterwards Bill's burly form pushed itself into the room. Mrs. Blobs at once began to wail and sob.

"Now then, wots this art abart," roared Bill.

"I've come to take possession under an order of the Court and"—ere before the Agent could finish his sentence Bill seized him. "Oh' ave yer! 'out 'em boys don't let 'em go" he called to his friends, who pounced on the others. Bill, holding the Agent by the back of his collar with his left hand, took firm grip of his trousers in the rear with his right, then swinging him backwards and forwards, with a one, two, three flung him hurtling through the open window into the little front garden, where he was caught by the tenants outside, and deposited off in the same way over the railings into the road beyond. The clerk followed next while the other two were chuckled out through the front door into the road. The country policeman looked on and gasped, perspiring profusely, until a brilliant idea flashed across his mind.—His note book. Out it came with a flourish, and he commenced to take rapid notes, when a well-directed turnip struck him full on the belt, followed by a lump of wet clay in his eye. The Agent picked himself up, bruised and sore—Bill came to the door.

"Now then ye loafers, be off. Wot ye ere Sift Soap!" he said to the policeman "Wot ye been abart letting these 'ere ruffians break into my 'ouse, and murder my missus! Why don't yer take 'em in chawge!"

The "men in possession" had taken up a position on the far side the clerk had bolted down the road, and the policeman moved away, his only asset in the affair such little dignity as clay-filled eyes and a "winded" diaphragm allowed him, while the agent shaking with rage, retired by short marches fighting a well sustained rear-guard vocal action.

Half an hour later the old dog cart and mare from the "Crooked Billet" galloped past Prospect Villas, bearing the village police and an infuriated agent to the house of Joe Biggs. Joe received them in his Study, and looked at the blackening eye of the policeman, and the torn and soiled clothing of the Agent in astonishment mingled with a suspicion of amusement.

The Agent who had, by no means, recovered his equanimity, burst out in indignant protest against the behaviour of the tenants "Somebody will have to pay for it Mr. Biggs, mark my words, somebody will have to pay for it."

"Nout less than a riot, Sir." said the policeman, note book in hand. Joe Biggs scratched his head, and being doubtful what line to adopt, fell back on the never failing stibboleth. "'ave a drink."

The sufferers having fortified themselves with two stiff whiskies and soda at a gulp, and their glasses being replenished, became somewhat calmer and were prepared to discuss the matter.

"Well," said Joe, "I'm real sorry for wot's occurred, but Lord its only their playfulness."

"Playfulness Sir! playfulness! what! throwing men through a widow and assaulting the police! I wonder how the County Magistrates will view their playfulness," said the angry agent.

"Nout less than a riot" repeated the constable.

Joe Biggs contemplated the two in silence for a few moments. He had no desire to have the matter brought before the Magistrates. The tenants were his tenants, and he was not going to be hard on them just because they could not pay a few pounds rent, and indulged in the pastime of throwing an agent or two out of their windows. On the other hand he wanted to get rid of the property, which he could not do unless he was in a position to give vacant possession to the prospective purchaser, so Joe, wishing for a happy solution to his difficulties, and remembering that a policeman's palm never ceases to itch, and having the agent's face in front of him which indicated, in no uncertain manner, that he belonged to a tribe that places wealth above all virtues said, turning to the latter—

"When you undertook with absolute assurance to get me vacant possession of them 'ouses in a month, you did so on the clear understandin' that yer would use no vilence"

"Neither did I" said the Agent.

"Well I dunno" said Joe "seems to me that them pore fellers had a good lot of provocation."

"Mr. Biggs, Sir, if that is your feeling in the matter I have nothing more to say but that I have done with the business" and the agent rose to his feet flushing angrily.

"Nout but a riot" growled the policeman."

"Aif a mo" said Joe, I knows that you two have been very roughly handled, and said Joe slowly, "I alius recognise my obligations."

Joe turned his seat to the desk in the corner of the room, and taking out his cheque book said,—

"I take it, neither of you two gents would 'ave anythink to gain by makin' this ere little kick public."

The policeman looked at the agent, and the agent winked at the policeman.

"I take my instructions from this gent 'ere" and the policeman indicated the agent, with a backward jerk of his thumb.

The agent looked at the cheque book and then at his torn clothes "It is a matter of indifference to me Mr. Biggs, who compensates me for the damage done to my clothing and my person."

Joe Biggs wrote out a cheque.

"Now it seems to me that you went the wrong way to work to get them tenants bout. Wot ye ort ter 'ave done wos to appeal to their feelin's."

The policeman rubbed his blackening eye.

"Now them tenants of mine are all sports and follow every race I 'ave anythink to do with. They 'ang round my Stibles and if one of my 'osses so much as snorts, its known down at Prospect Villas in a tick. You knaws well enough, but—praps you don't—not being of a sporting clawss yerselves, that I have two 'osses running in the City and Sub next week, praps I 'ave an praps I aint made up my mind which 'oss I am going to try with. The only 'oss I am afraid of is old Deering's 'Grey Wolf' wots training on t'other side of the darns."

Joe paused, and handed a box of choice cigars to his visitors then drawing up his chair, he handed a cheque to the Agent, and slipped a gold coin into the policeman's hand.

"Listen ter me, an I'll tel ye 'ow to get rid of them beauties." After this followed minute whispered instructions from Joe which were received by the Agent with sundry "Ahs" and "Ohs" and many snorts and mutterings by the policeman.

"No vilence" said Joe as they rose to go "I want 'ave it, and I'll see Nat Pooley at wanst."

The Agent drove off with the healing plaster in his pocket book, and the policeman, shaking his head, went off muttering that it would certainly end in "Nout but a riot."

That evening there was a large attendance of the tenants and lodgers at the "Crooked Billet" and the battle of Prospect Villas was fought over again with much embellishment and additions of an unofficial nature, Blobs being the scrowling but proud Hero of the fray.

Of the twelve tenants and fifteen lodgers, four were exponents of the noble art of self-defence, three were bookmakers' clerks and the remaining twenty were racing touts, course tipsters, and card sharpers, mug-hunters and flat-catchers, most of them of public notoriety and well known to the police. Occasionally one of these gentlemen would fail to return home when expected, and the tenants and lodgers of Prospect Villas, at once grasping the situation, would rise to the occasion, and the hat would forthwith go round, and the best defence obtainable, that the funds allowed, would be put up for the gent in question. If any direct evidence was required, to prove an alibi, or anything else, that might be suggested by an astute lawyer, whom they always retained on these little occasions, Prospect Villas never failed to find the necessary witnesses. They all had, though they would not pay their rent, a genuine respect and belief in Joe Biggs, and a day never passed, but one of their number might be seen prowling round his stables, or pumping his men and boys for tips If they knew that Joe was out to win it was their custom to have a general fund, all subscribing to the utmost of their ability, and laying out their money at the longest odds obtainable, and it was not often that Joe let them down. If his horse failed them, it was of course used as an excuse for non-payment of rent for a considerable time to come.

At 8-30 on the evening in question the diminutive Nat Pooley Joe's favourite jockey strolled into "The Crooked Billet" and found the tenants assembled there in full force.

The arrival of Nat Pooley was an important incident, for although Nat had been known, after a failure to win an event he was out for, to partake of more grog then was good for him, and to talk cheerfully of suicide, it was but seldom that any of Joe's men were seen at "The Crooked Billet"

The tenants looked at each other, and exchanging winks with Mr. Wheedle the latter rose, crossed the large bar parlour, and addressed Nat Pooley.

"How are you Mr. Pooley? I am glad to see you."

"Arm well thank ye" said the Yorkshire Nat.

"Good, What will you have?"

"Well ar don't know as 'll ave out. Ar've been ower t' Deerings t' afternoon, and ar lushed me oop proper" and Nats eyelids looked heavy as he peered up at Wheedle.

"Over at Deerings. Eh! Why I thought Mr. Biggs and old Deering were at daggers drawn."

"Ai!" so they mebbe for owt ar know" and Nat winked at Wheedle.

"Don't be unfriendly Pooley, have a drink!" said another, who had joined Wheedle at the bar.

"Glass o cold ale then" said Nat.

"If they are'nt friends how is it that you were over there?" asked Wheedle.

"Ai" said Nat and he winked again.

"Come and sit at the table Mr. Pooley" called out another tenant from the other side of the room Nat looked round, and taking up his glass crossed the room, and the tenants, to their great delight, noticed that there was a little hesitency in his starting, and that the line he took would not have passed muster as a test for sobriety with a police doctor.

Nat seated himself at the table next to old Tickle, while Wheedle perched himself into the seat on the other side of him.

"Here's to ye" said Nat, finishing his beer at a gulp and placing his empty glass on the table with a bang.

"'Ave one with me Mr. Pooley" said Tickle.

Nat turned heavy eyes on the speaker.

"By gum, 't is Mister Tickle, Tickle ma fancy. There 's loock in that, There 's loock in that" and Nat laughed boisterously, the others joining in "What is your fancy?" whispered Mr. Wheedle insinuatingly.

Nat pulled himself up and shaking his head said

"Ar dunno."

"Have another drink, me boy" said one of the lodgers, placing a full glass before Nat.

The tenants and lodgers crowded round Nat, plied him with drinks, laughed uproariously at all his jokes, talked of his triumphs on the turf, and gave it as their opinion that there never was, and never would be a jockey to come near him for skill, pluck and endurance.

"By gum" said Nat "You be good sports all on yer, and ar darned if ar don't tell ye summat"

Dead silence fell on the crowd round Nat.

"What is it?" at last Mr Wheedle said softly.

"Ar dunno." said Nat as if pulling himself together." Ar 've changed ma mind."

That aint sport mate thort you was a real sport," said Tickle

"Ha ha!" laughed Nat "Tickle ma fancy, so he do, so he do."

A glass of whisky, the "Crooked Billet's" guaranteed poison was pushed towards Nat. Nats hand went out to it,

"Here's luck "said Wheedle. "Down with it Nat, No heel-taps."

Nat stood up holding the glass at such an angle that the whisky was fast falling on the floor.

"Gents all, By gum, you be sports." and Nat sat down with such vigour that the rest of the whisky went overboard.

"Al l ar reckon yo'd all give summat to know what ar knows Mr. Biggs and old Deering, stable-companions, Oh chricky!" and Nat rolled on his chair with laughter then suddenly pulling himself up said "Gent's ar'l do it! Dam it all ar'l do it."

The tenants and lodgers pressed round him

"Tickle ma fancy, that done it."

In whispers and under sacred Oaths of secrecy Nat told his audience how that Deerings "Grey Wolf" was the only horse his master feared for the City and Sub the following week, and that he and Deering had joined hands, and were going to have a secret trial on the downs at dawn next morning, of the three horses, two from Biggs stable, and 'Gray Wolf from Deering's, and that the winner of the trial would be the winner of the race, and that it was almost a certainty that it would fall to one of Mr. Bigg's horses, but as the public was on "Gray Wolf" the odds should be good and the information valuable.

Many questions were asked as to the time and place of the trial. Nat told them that it was arranged to take place on the far side of the heath, and the finish would be be a gate, opening on to a chase running through the adjoining woods. The tenants and lodgers gave a concerted sigh, and looked at each other. Here, was luck indeed! Here was a chance in a thousand! Properly worked, this opportunity should place them in funds for the whole season A youthful tipster asked whether Mr. Pooley would acquaint them to-morrow of the result of the trial.

Mr. Wheedle and those around him looked at him scornfully. "Not to save ma neck" said Nat emphatically.

The youthful tipster winked, and one and all promised that not a soul should be seen at the trial. Nat rose to leave, refusing many more offers of refreshment. Making a zigzag path for the door he reached his trap and was helped into it by grateful and willing hands, and drove off at a spanking trot giving vent to loud gawfaws when out of hearing.

Prospect Villas was restless that night. Between two and three on the morning—of May 190—muffled figures might have been seen leaving the villas in two's and three's lounging down the road for some two hundred yards, and then striking across the fields in the direction of the downs for an hour's tramp to the farther side.

At 4-30 in the woods on the borders of the heath on either side of the chase running through the woods might have been heard the cracking of twigs and the rustling of the undergrowth accompanied by the muffled sounds of restrained imprecation, but not a soul was to be seen. Presently the sound of horses hoofs upon the turf came thudding on the ear, and all movement in the woods ceased, but a close observer would have seen, as the rising sun topped the horizon, and threw its rays over the undulating ground and fell open the borders of the wood, eager faces peering through the leaves and branches, and necks strained in the direction of the pounding of the horses hoofs.

But what is this? One horse only, and that a heavy farm welding with Nat astride its neck, decked in a loin cloth that would have rivalled a circus horse's trappings!' And what is the strange device upon the cloth in bold black letters!

"Ejectment out of Villas by Agent."

For a moment Nat paused opposite the gate.

A wail of rage and despair went up from the silent woods, as Nat Pooley galloped away across the downs.

Boxing.

THE VALUE OF BOXING.

In the February number of the National Review Mr. Harold Claughton has an extremely interesting article on "The Nation and the Noble Art." He says in part:—To revert to the main theme of the present argument, the value of boxing to the working classes, it is at least significant that the practical value of a few pairs of the gloves in East End boys and youths' clubs has been vouched for repeatedly and convincingly, and by persons who have no interest in boxing for its own sake. Lads who would be attracted by nothing else in the first instance will come in from the streets for a few rounds. Until street life is made slightly less unclean by a paternal government, that can scarcely be regarded as anything but beneficial. For brutality, go to the streets—not a boxing show or a club room. For chastity—if a man is living intemperately he will not risk the ring; or should he, the contest will be stopped in half a minute. For foul language—an oath in the ring would be as out of order as a bird of paradise in Bermondsey.

Granted that professionalism in all forms of sport is, from an idealistic standpoint, not absolutely good, it must be remembered that we deal purely in the relative. Civilization itself is a compromise, whereby we hope to gain a trifle more than we lose. Professionalism in relation to the terms of modern life cannot be accounted wholly bad. It is so easy and so common to apply the standards of idealism as practical criticisms of what we do not like. It is hard to see that the ethical good of the Stock Exchange is really any loftier in degree that that of the prize ring. Legislation against the former would be quite as easy from a purely ethical standpoint.

We have, it is hoped, arrived at the fact that boxing has beneficial tendencies. Bring in the human element of the classes with which we are mainly concerned, and it will be found that boxing cannot thrive without two factors—heroes and funds. This may surely be accepted as axiomatic. Some sort of inspiration is needed in every kind of human activity. In the ordinary workaday world it is bread and butter. Outside of that it must either be a person or an ideal. Such ideals as come within the reach of the masses are invariably represented or conveyed through an individual. One need only consider the great religions of the world to realise this. Those fine intellects who can gather the inspiration of their lives from an abstract idea are few in number, and even among them the thought derives at least part of its power as being the creation of the personal thinker. Now, a hero may be defined as one who has attained superlative excellence in sphere of general interest. Such a sphere may be represented by an abstract quality like courage, or by a concrete fact like war. In a sense, certainly in the concrete sense, all heroes are professionals. The difference between the soldier hero and the pugilist hero is only in degree. The one risks his life for the good of his country; the other, so that he may thereby earn his living. We encourage a man to die in our own defence, but not to protect himself.

Now, the only method of attaining superlative excellence open to the boxer of the working classes is by becoming a professional. As such, if he is successful, he becomes an inspiration. Boxing at the public schools has really prospered only since the institution of the public schools competition at Aldershot—a field for heroes.

To ensure the position of boxing in the future there is grave need of an ultimate authority, co-ordinating and controlling British boxing and boxers throughout the land. The position of affairs at the moment would foster any attempt in such a direction. The law has grown anxious, and needs more security than can be given by a single show-promoter, eager to make what he can out of any given contest. A controlling body, composed of men of substance and repute, would form a sponsor with whom the authorities would readily co-operate. If no contests, amateur or professional, were permitted to take place in public except under the auspices of such an association, the police would have a simple task, and the position of boxing would be assured. An organisation of this nature would necessarily be large, but funds derived from a small percentage on the profits of all contests or exhibitions should amply provide for working expenses.

The big purse, the raucous correspondence, all the limelight and grease-paint effects that are just now slowly but surely beginning to pervade the whole atmosphere of the ring, could be brought under control. Boxing is only dangerous and brutal when divorced from authority. If the law of a land is strong, a man may remain for his whole life a Sunday school teacher. If the law grows weak, that same man may in time murder his aunt with the bread-knife.

To sum up, the beneficial tendencies inherent in boxing are such that, unless very good cause is shown to counteract, the British nation cannot lightly afford to erase the sport completely from its scheme of life upon a moment's outcry. It be known that the law is against boxing, and boxing will die as surely as did the Prize Ring. The disadvantages of the sport are extraneous and curable.

A famous doctor, Sir James Crichton-Browne, who is over seventy, has surprised us all by the announcement that he is engaged to be married again.

One recalls an appropriate enough story told by Sir James himself.

A recently-married couple and a friend were travelling by train when they were suddenly plunged into the darkness of a tunnel. There was no light in the carriage and when they abruptly returned to the daylight the bride and bridegroom were caught in the midst of a furtive kiss.

The friend was dreadfully embarrassed and to cover his confusion he said the first thing that came into his head.

"That—ah—that tunnel cost a hundred thousand pounds."

The bridegroom nodded his head wisely, "It was worth it," he said.

Marion, who had been taught to report her misdeeds promptly, came to her mother one day, sobbing penitently.

"Mother—I—broke a tile in the fireplace."

"Well, that isn't very hard to remedy. But how on earth did you do it, child?"

"I pounded it with father's watch."

CALCUTTA RACING SEASON, 1911-12.

THE Calcutta Racing Season, 1911-12, was brought to a conclusion on Saturday last after a series of seventeen days' racing including two days' steeplechasing and a total number of 108 races in all, as against 126 races spread over nineteen days last season. In season 1909-10 there were twenty days' racing in all, so that our programmes show a continuing diminution in their length, and though there may be reasons of high policy for cutting down the season's duration, they do not, we confess, appear upon the surface and we think the curtailment is to be regretted, particularly at the present juncture in racing affairs in India. Some disappointment was expressed in racing circles at the season's having been brought to a conclusion without a day of "consolations," a class of event always popular and well supported by owners whose horses have not managed to find their way home during the season. Possibly if it could have been foreseen that Calcutta was to be visited by the cooling storms of the earlier part of the present week the Stewards might have been disposed to reconsider their decision to apply so comparatively early a closure, but the announcement having once gone forth it is not likely to be now revoked. The season of 1911-12 will always remain a memorable one in the history of the Calcutta Turf by reason of the fact that it is the first year of an event which has added great lustre to these meetings—the presentation of a Cup by His Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor to the C. T. C. to be competed for annually. His Majesty was so gratified at the loyal reception accorded him and the efforts made upon all hands to make the Royal visit to the Calcutta course an enjoyable one, that after the decision of this year's race he was graciously pleased to announce that he intended to make an annual gift of this Cup to be run for during the present reign, which Heaven grant may be a long and prosperous one. His Majesty's generous gift naturally caused the highest enthusiasm, and this important handicap, which ranks level in monetary value with the older event, the Viceroy's Cup, will be the best patronised, as it is bound to be the most highly-prized event of the Calcutta season. There were forty-four entries for the King-Emperor's Cup this year and of these eighteen ran, nearly, 50 per cent., a high average as races go, and there is little doubt that in the years to come this race will increase rather than diminish in popularity and importance. We are not without hope that in the near future the Stewards of the C. T. C. will see their way to increasing the value of the added money and making the King-Emperor's Cup the one outstanding feature of their cards. At present, so far as its money value goes, it ranks only level with the Viceroy's Cup, each of these races being Rs. 20,000 to the winner with Rs. 7,000 and Rs. 3,000 in place money. It would be more fitting if the value of the King-Emperor's Cup were made a round £2,000 to the winner (Rs. 30,000) and the place money proportionately increased. The occasion is worthy of some special memorial and we suggest that this is the most fitting way in which the honour done to the Calcutta Turf can be marked. This race returned the Stewards more than the Viceroy's Cup has ever done, for the entries for the older race are never more than half the number of those that were entered for the King-Emperor's Cup this season, and in future years it is fair to suppose that there is not likely to be any diminution in the support accorded it. It will no doubt be argued that it is not good economics to increase the value of a race that does not return more than 50 per cent. of its value in entries and that the C. T. C. cannot afford any increase. Against this, however, must be placed the fact that the present expenses of the Club are very small; that all that is necessary in outlay on stands and course improvements has been done and that the Club can show a yearly increasing reserve fund upon which it has never yet been found necessary to draw, not even for the improvements hereinabove referred to, for those improvements were paid for out of income and not out of the reserve fund. The question therefore whether the C. T. C. can afford to take the bold plunge of making the King-Emperor's Cup a £2,000 race cannot be said to be fairly arguable. The Club is a very rich one and can well afford it. The opportunity has arrived for still further adding to the importance of the Calcutta meetings and attracting even greater support from owners, and it will be regrettable if it is not availed of, other considerations already advanced quite apart. The brilliance of the scene on the Calcutta course on the occasion of Their Majesties' arrival will long remain photographed in the memory of everyone who was privileged to witness it. Calcutta is able to furnish a setting worthy of such a picture when she is in one of her smiling moods, and upon that day she excelled herself. The race for the big event was in every way worthy of such an occasion and the same may be said of the racing all throughout that day's card.

The season has been on the whole a very successful one and we have seen a horse of a better all-round class competing. There are numerous and various owners dropping out of the ranks, and Mr. Galstaun's big string will be missing when next season comes round, as he has definitely decided to give up racing in India and transfer his scene of operations to England, but there are others his place to fill, and we could probably name three big stables, if we had at present the liberty to do so, who will be very much in the picture in the coming season and who are all intent upon making a strong bid for the principal prizes of these meetings.

The contest between England and Australia has been a very keen one indeed and, counting in two walks-over, Australia beats England by one in the actual number of races won. So far, however, as successes in the principal events of the meeting are concerned the English horses have had the best of it, as they have won twelve against eight important wins by the Colonials and these victories include every important long distance race on the flat and the Indian Grand National Steeplechase, as well as an important hurdle race, the Burdwan Cup. The following lists speak for themselves and are a handy means of reference to the events of the immediate past:—

ENGLISH HORSES: TWELVE IMPORTANT RACES.

Burdwan Cup (Mayfowl), International Pony Plate (Refresher), The Viceroy's Cup (Mayfowl), German Cup (Koonowla), Sandown Park Plate (Chobham), King-Emperor's Cup (Brogue), Metropolitan (Victo), Macpherson Cup (Brogue), Chowringhee Plate (Watch Tower), Prince of Wales Plate (Victo), Indian Grand National (True Love) and the Merchants' Plate (Jemima).

AUSTRALIAN HORSES: EIGHT IMPORTANT RACES.

The Trials (Tangaroa), The Grand Annual (Realm), Calcutta Plate (Tangaroa), Cooch Behar Cup (Five Crown), Tally Ho Plate (Proprietor), Hastings Plate (Sequent), Tollygunge Plate (Realm), Hooghly Plate (Tangaroa).

For old England that tough customer Mayfowl has again stood manfully to his guns, and, though yet once again the less fancied of the pair from his stable in the Viceroy's Cup, he asserted his superiority in the most uncompromising manner and won the big race in even better time than that in which he scored the previous season. His time, if we may take this as an indication—and in this case we think it is permissible—shows him a most consistent performer. He won the Viceroy's Cup in 1910 in 3mins. 2secs., that being a record; and in 1911 he cut this time by three-fifths of a second and galloped the 1¾ mile 3mins. 1⅗secs., carrying the same weight upon each occasion. He furthermore this year beat a really good long-distance horse in Last Call, who, although he has since broken down, cannot have been very far off his best on Cup day. Many people still think that Vavasor ought to have won and that his jockey was in fault. The horse may not have been ridden with the best of judgment, but even had Wootton been on him it would have taken Vavasor all his time in a slogging fight to a finish to have beaten such a really good one as the winner. Vavasor has been a greatly boomed horse, but we never have placed him in the same class as Mayfowl and we consider that events have proved this estimation of the pair of them to be correct. Brogue, Mr. Galstaun's little English mare, has also done well for her "side" and her brilliant win in the King-Emperor's Cup, followed by her winning the Macpherson Cup, stamp her as a good handicap mare. Mr. Galstaun's successes in these important races were the more acceptable, as he was deprived of the services of Wavebird, who, if all had gone well with him, was quite good enough to win the Viceroy's Cup and of Prince Rupert, who was a virtual certainty for the Cooch Behar Cup. Maria Farina, another one he had entered, also went amiss when she was doing well. Wavebird never seemed to do in India and Prince Rupert's round joints began to cause grave apprehension. Both horses were struck out and sent back home, whither Maria Farina also accompanied them. Victo, Mr. R. Craig McKerrow's mare, and Mr. Garda's Chobham have been the principal sprinting performers for the English horses and the former is the only one who has managed to defeat the almost invincible Tangaroa, having won the Metropolitan in which Tangaroa and Socialist deadheated three quarters of a length behind her, and the Prince of Wales' Plate, in which Tangaroa finished two lengths behind her. Australia owes the good score she has put up principally to that great horse Tangaroa, who has won five times out of seven starts, the other two occasions being those just above referred to when he ran second to Victo. He won the Trials, the Calcutta Plate and the Hooghly Plate—three of the principal short distance races of the meeting, and in the two latter, which are handicaps, he carried thumping big weights and put up very fast time. His time for the Trials—1min. 40⅕secs.—was an Indian record and he made very fast time in the other two races, the 5 furlong Hooghly Plate being done in 1min. 1sec. with 10st. 7lb., another Indian record. Tangaroa is to be shipped back to England, a country he has already visited once, and well-bred as he is—Grafton—Waihine—Grafton being by Galopin and Waihine by Trenton by Musket—there is, we hope, a career of usefulness before him at the stud. He has done Mr. Galstaun well and it is chiefly due to him aided by Brogue's big win in the King-Emperor's Cup that this owner finds himself top of the winning list. Sir A. A. Apcar comes next and others close up to the front are Mr. M. Goculdass and Mr. Roy Choudhury, who has to thank two consistent performers in Jemima (winner of the Merchants' Plate) and Ruling Passion for his good score. These two horses between them have won their owner ten races, Jemima (the Victoria May filly by Jeddah) having won five times out of ten starts and Ruling Passion has won five out of eleven, a record of which any owner might well be proud and one for which he has to thank staunch horses, a painstaking trainer, O. Dignum, and a good jockey, Thoburn. Mr. McKerrow, the owner of Victo, is also well up, also Mr. Garda, but the bulk of the spoils have as usual gone to the two powerful stables at the head of the lists.

Wootton and Thoburn ran a dead-heat for the jockey premiership, though Wootton's average is the better of the two, and Whalley, Firth and Kuhn are close up.

Wootton was unlucky to find Mr. Galstaun's string disorganised and he had a very bad outside ride in the Viceroy's Cup on that disappointing horse Cattaro, who ran absolutely last. The crack horseman, however, showed fine form upon anything that his weight permitted him to ride, but it was with difficulty that Wootton went to scale at 8st. 12lb. and increasing avoirdupois looks as if it were going to deprive the turf of one of the few artists it possesses. T. Ferguson comes out top of the list of trainers with fourteen wins for Mr. Galstaun and

For old England that tough customer Mayfowl has again stood manfully to his guns, and, though yet once again the less fancied of the pair from his stable in the Viceroy's Cup, he asserted his superiority in the most uncompromising manner and won the big race in even better time than that in which he scored the previous season. His time, if we may take this as an indication—and in this case we think it is permissible—shows him a most consistent performer. He won the Viceroy's Cup in 1910 in 3mins. 2secs., that being a record; and in 1911 he cut this time by three-fifths of a second and galloped the 1¾ mile 3mins. 1⅗secs., carrying the same weight upon each occasion. He furthermore this year beat a really good long-distance horse in Last Call, who, although he has since broken down, cannot have been very far off his best on Cup day. Many people still think that Vavasor ought to have won and that his jockey was in fault. The horse may not have been ridden with the best of judgment, but even had Wootton been on him it would have taken Vavasor all his time in a slogging fight to a finish to have beaten such a really good one as the winner. Vavasor has been a greatly boomed horse, but we never have placed him in the same class as Mayfowl and we consider that events have proved this estimation of the pair of them to be correct. Brogue, Mr. Galstaun's little English mare, has also done well for her "side" and her brilliant win in the King-Emperor's Cup, followed by her winning the Macpherson Cup, stamp her as a good handicap mare. Mr. Galstaun's successes in these important races were the more acceptable, as he was deprived of the services of Wavebird, who, if all had gone well with him, was quite good enough to win the Viceroy's Cup and of Prince Rupert, who was a virtual certainty for the Cooch Behar Cup. Maria Farina, another one he had entered, also went amiss when she was doing well. Wavebird never seemed to do in India and Prince Rupert's round joints began to cause grave apprehension. Both horses were struck out and sent back home, whither Maria Farina also accompanied them. Victo, Mr. R. Craig McKerrow's mare, and Mr. Garda's Chobham have been the principal sprinting performers for the English horses and the former is the only one who has managed to defeat the almost invincible Tangaroa, having won the Metropolitan in which Tangaroa and Socialist deadheated three quarters of a length behind her, and the Prince of Wales' Plate, in which Tangaroa finished two lengths behind her. Australia owes the good score she has put up principally to that great horse Tangaroa, who has won five times out of seven starts, the other two occasions being those just above referred to when he ran second to Victo. He won the Trials, the Calcutta Plate and the Hooghly Plate—three of the principal short distance races of the meeting, and in the two latter, which are handicaps, he carried thumping big weights and put up very fast time. His time for the Trials—1min. 40½secs.—was an Indian record and he made very fast time in the other two races, the 5 furlong Hooghly Plate being done in 1min. 1sec. with 10st. 7lb., another Indian record. Tangaroa is to be shipped back to England, a country he has already visited once, and well-bred as he is—Grafton—Waihine—Grafton being by Galopin and Waihine by Trenton by Musket—there is, we hope, a career of usefulness before him at the stud. He has done Mr. Galstaun well and it is chiefly due to him aided by Brogue's big win in the King-Emperor's Cup that this owner finds himself top of the winning list. Sir A. A. Apcar comes next and others close up to the front are Mr. M. Goculdass and Mr. Roy Choudhury, who has to thank two consistent performers in Jemima (winner of the Merchants' Plate) and Ruling Passion for his good score. These two horses between them have won their owner ten races, Jemima (the Victoria May filly by Jeddah) having won five times out of ten starts and Ruling Passion has won five out of eleven, a record of which any owner might well be proud and one for which he has to thank staunch horses, a painstaking trainer, O. Dignum, and a good jockey, Thoburn. Mr. McKerrow, the owner of Victo, is also well up, also Mr. Garda, but the bulk of the spoils have as usual gone to the two powerful stables at the head of the lists.

Wootton and Thoburn ran a dead-heat for the jockey premiership, though Wootton's average is the better of the two, and Whalley, Firth and Kuhn are close up.

Wootton was unlucky to find Mr. Galstaun's string disorgainsed and he had a very bad outside ride in the Viceroy's Cup on that disappointing horse Cattaro, who ran absolutely last. The crack horseman, however, showed fine form upon anything that his weight permitted him to ride, but it was with difficulty that Wootton went to scale at 8st. 12lb. and increasing avoirdupois looks as if it were going to deprive the turf of one of the few artists it possesses. T. Ferguson comes out top of the list of trainers with fourteen wins for Mr. Galstaun and one for Mr. Thaddeus (Watch Tower) and considering that he was deprived of the services of his best horses this score is very creditable. J. D. Scott is next and Thomas and Dignum, both of whom have come with a "rush at the finish," are dead-heat third.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The last day of the Calcutta racing season—the Seventh Extra Meeting—was run last Saturday in stormy weather, a heavy squall coming on shortly after the decision of the second race. Heavy rain fell all through the latter part of the card, though it it cleared off just before the last race. The rain made the course very greasy, as owing to its hard state the moisture did not penetrate more than the top two inches. If this course were kept in the soft condition that it ought to be kept and were watered sufficiently as it was when Major Hughes took it in hand, a shower of rain such as we had on Saturday would make very little impression on it, as it would soak in at once ; but where the course is kept as hard as it is and is more like a golf green or a tennis lawn than a race-course, the rain cannot do more than make the surface greasy and loose and consequently treacherous. The attendance was fair considering that it was the fag-end of the season and the racing far from bad and full of surprises. The starting was not good and Mr. Lance, who is kindly officiating until a successor to Mr. Bates is appointed, has naturally had no practice at this work and cannot therefore be seriously criticised. During the time when the second race was being run a quite unexpected and unrehearsed little incident occurred. J. Robinson, the senior jockey riding and O. Dignum, the senior trainer, requested Mr. Bates' attendance in the jockey's room and there Robinson on behalf of himself and his brother professionals presented the ex-starter with a very handsome silver cup and a written address expressing their regret at his retirement and their regard and esteem for him. The written address was signed by the following professionals who had subscribed for the cup : O. Dignum, J. Robinson, Kuhn, Wishart, Butlin, Williamson, C. Hoyt, Barrett, Whalley, Templeman, Firth, Murdison, Smallman, Thomas, Norton, J. Davis, A. Hoyt, T. Ferguson, Jellias, and F. Wootton. Mr. Bates was much affected at this unexpected testimony of the good wishes of the professionals amongst whom he has worked so many years and he thanked the donors, and shook hands with all those who were present. The Cup was duly "christened" after the meeting ! It was a very graceful tribute to Mr. Bates' good work and an exceedingly kind thought upon the part of the professionals to give him this memento of the years during which he has so ably fulfilled the office of starter.

There were seven races in the card, including the Balaclava Plate for horses owned and ridden by active members of the Calcutta Light Horse, and proceedings commenced at 3 P.M. with the Division II of the Mediocre Plate. At the close of the betting operations Lah was a firmly established favourite, though the owner was not encouraged to back him for very much, as when the horse was last out he ran very badly, and he is known to be unreliable. He was then, however, ridden by a jockey who did not do him any sort of justice. On Saturday Kuhn had the ride and getting out of the gate one of the first, he led the whole way and won easily in the very good time for the class of horse of 1min. 3secs. Eleven of the thirteen coloured started for the Balaclava Plate and a hot favourite in Sincerity, who started at 5 to 4 on went down the 5 to 1 chance, Peer Ray, pipping it on the post and winning by neck. Mr J. G. A. Stephen, who recently had a bad fall out paperchasing, owned and rode the winner and is to be congratulated upon his maiden victory under C.T.C. Rules.

When Black Buck, Kilmarnock and Tana were scratched in the March Plate the race was deemed to be a very good thing for Thomas' remaining representative Santoinette, but a good many people stood loyally to that consistent performer Jemima, who started at two's, the favourite's price being 5 to 4 on. Jemima won comfortably from Hughie and Wise Hawk, Santoinette finishing fourth. This race was run in the rain. When the field went out for the next race it was coming down in sheets and the slippery going destroyed any chance that the small-footed Skehanagh may have had and she ran very badly. Tom Chaucer, the second favourite, jumped out of the gate quickly and won all the way. There was a good deal of delay at the post owing to the unruly behaviour of The Priory II. and both this horse and Hard Times were left at the post.

Another favourite that was well backed was Village Girl, who was beaten out of a place in the Presidency Plate. Up Guards was also backed, but May Kenley, who has not scored a bracket this season, won from end to end and never looked like being beaten at any part of the journey. She evidently likes the wet, as she has not won since last Monsoon season. No better fortune attended the public selections over the next race, for which Moira and The Witch were both backed, but Mahoney Boy, another Monsooner, won after lying well up all the way. He had 9st. 12lb. and showed a taste of his monsoon form once more. He started at sixes and evens.

The favourites again went down over the last race, the Wellington Plate, for which Ruling Passion and Tana were both fancied. The top weight Chin Chin jumped out of the gate quicker than anything and making every yard of the running with 10st. 4lb. on her back won in a canter, nothing in the race being able to pace it with her and Tana, who carried 8st. 4lb., finished one and three-quarter lengths behind her well beaten. Royal Colours was a moderate third and Light Metal was fourth.

Butlin is not going to Australia as erroneously stated in these notes last week. Miss Butlin is to be married very shortly to Ramshaw, the well-known trainer, and after spending the honeymoon in Ootacamund, she and her husband will go to Bangalore for the hot weather, returning to Calcutta next November.

The entries for the Calcutta Paperchase Cup run to-morrow (Friday) morning are somewhat disappointing and only total eleven, the following being the list :—

1. Mr. H. B. Taylor's Dervish. (H.)
2. Mr. R. J. G. Ballantyne's Farthing Bun. (H.)
3. Mr. G. Montgomery's George.
4. Mr. B. Felsenthal's Rocky Valley. (H.)
5. Mr. T. G. Evers' Rifleman.
6. Mr. W. R. Tanner's Jaguar.
7. Mr. T. H. Wheeler's Sauce.
8. Mr. V. W. Murray's Desmond.

9. Mr. G. B. Deakin's Brown Mouse.
10. Mr. Cecil U. Knox's List.
11. Mr. C. S. Steele Perkins' Sincerity.

The course has had to be altered owing to the recent heavy rain and will be run over the open Salt Lakes instead of in the Jodhpore Country as originally intended.

It is a galloping course between five and six miles in length and will suit the fast horses and the light weights, as even in the Salt Lakes the going is somewhat heavy. The race is very open, but on recent form it looks as though Rifleman, Desmond, Brown Mouse and Jaguar might run very well and we shall not be surprised to see them finish in that order. For the Heavy Weight Cup Farthing Bun looks to be a virtual certainty bar a fall, but as she is a clever careful jumper this is not an eventuality that seems to be at all likely to occur.

The last of the regular weekly meets of the Calcutta Paperchase Club was held on Friday last and was very well attended. Some of the Cup candidates were reserving their horses for the big race on Saturday, but nevertheless a big field was despatched by Mr. Dalglish. The course which had been laid by Mr. Daglish and Mr. Deakin was over the same line as in the Pony Cup. Amongst those out we noticed :—Mrs. Gresson on Enthusiast, Mrs. Reid on At Last, Mrs. Dods on Bopeep, Mrs. Wanklyn on Grey Harold, Miss Binning on Eileen, Mr. Ballantyne on Farthing Bun, Mr. Wheeler on Sauce, Captain Astor on Sidbrook, Mr. Gladstone on Joanna, Mr. Evers on Rifleman, Mr. Morshead on Punch, Mr. Felsenthal on Rocky Valley, Mr. Knox on List, Mr. Trousdell on a grey, Mr. Tanner on Jaguar, Mr. Studd on Makutu, Mr. Brownell on Brandy, Mr. Sayers on a chestnut, Mr. Sheridan on a bay, Mr. Reid on a chestnut and several more. Mr. Evers and Captain Astor made all the running, Messrs. Tanner, Knox, Sayers, Wheeler and Miss Binning being well up all the way. At the last hurdle Captain Astor was in front and in spite of a good effort by Mr. Evers on Rifleman Sidbrook stayed it out and won very easily ; Mr. Sayers finishing third. The official order was :—

1. Captain Astor on Sidbrook.
2. Mr. Evers on Rifleman.
3. Mr. Sayers on a chestnut.
4. Mr. Tanner on Jaguar.
5. Mr. Knox on List.
6. Mr. Wheeler on Sauce, followed in order by Miss Binning, Messrs. Morshead, Gladstone, Felsenthal, Studd, Brownell, Ballantyne, Reid, Mrs. Reid, Mr. Sheridan. Enthusiast came down at a ditch, but we are glad to learn that Mrs. Gresson was unhurt. Mr. Reid's mount also fell at the fourth fence but was remounted and finished the course.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Resuming the Extra Meetings on Wednesday, a card of seven races for the ninth gave us sport but little below the recent standard, several visiting stables remaining down. Of the jockeys, Brown and Ferguson each won twice, and are likely to pass the total earned by Evans, as the latter left by the Australian Mail, ostensibly to accept an engagement to ride there on his arrival. There was but one upset during the day, short priced ones generally winning and giving punters the upper hand.

First on the card was the pony race, in which only three figured—all trained by Byramjee. Mauveron was at once established favourite from Regalia and warmed to half money. It was never a race, Encourage getting away on the rails with Mauveron, but the mare gradually left him. Regalia came up as they rounded the turn and beat Encourage without looking like catching the leader.

The race for new ponies was divided, and in the first Ya Nasib was backed with Good Success, the latter then closing favourite with Ream next to them. Tide, Sadee Beg and Kabul showed pace, but at the half mile Master Bill and Good Success closed and then passed them to be joined by Ya Nasib, with Ream handy. From the quarter mile Ya Nasib went away and outstayed Ream, who came across Good Success without, however, influencing the result.

Turning to the second division, which really came last but one, Mafush was always steady at odds on in a field of eleven, Gowahajmer a close second favourite from Mijbas and Bavan. Of these Bavan only showed at the start and Gowahajmer at no time. On settling down, Mahboob led Chanticleer, Mafush and Lucky Slave, but nearing the turn Mafush came away, followed by Mijbas and had quite a bit in hand.

Something new to us in Wellfield, who showed form recently in Lucknow, was backed to odds on from four others in the Ascot Plate, Chobham, Malmsey and Pincher next in demand. Chobham jumped out well, but at once began to fall away, leaving Wellfield to lead slightly from Lord Carlyon on the rails, about four lengths behind being Pincher with Malmsey last all the away. As they entered the straight Lord Carlyon was palpably beaten and nothing else seemed handy enough to catch the favourite. Pincher, however, came very strong and provided some excitement, but Wellfield just had enough left to get home by a head. Chobham came again with a remarkable rattle and was within a neck of the first two, the race being run in fast time.

Though carrying 10st. 10lb., Grand Duke was once more looked to for a big win in the ten-furlong Arab race with Wootton up again, Merrily, Parliament and Sir Hugo being thought the most dangerous. Sir Hugo lost all chance by being badly left by about ten lengths., Real Gold going out to make the running from Grand Duke, Regent and Parliament. Half a mile was enough for the leader, who was closed on, and at the five Grand Duke led well in hand from Parliament, Merrily and Harry Johnson. Though Parliament hung on, it was all over, as Grand Duke did not need to be ridden out to win. Sir Hugo put up a great performance by annexing third place comfortably in front of Harry Johnson.

Only half a dozen went for the Doncaster Plate of nine furlongs, Aborigine at once being installed favourite, but money was always coming for Devil's Dyke and a rush for Langton. The Diver made the pace a fairly solid one for three furlongs, where Langton and Aborigine caught and passed him to be joined by Bull's Run and followed by Devil's Dyke. Bull's Run dropped back at the three and Whalley driving Devil's Dyke through the opening went clear away to win anyhow at the finish by ten lengths pulling up from Langton, who beat Aborigine by a head for place money.

A very fair class of Arab went out in the seven furlongs with eight starters, an open betting race, leaving Mudkoor in command from Baloz and Zinfandel. As usual, Shihab (now Tippu Sultan) went clear away with a fully six-length lead, followed by Zinfandel, Mudkoor and Baloz. This lead was practically nothing at the half mile, where Prime Minister, Baloz and Zoolphekarr were in close attendance. From the three Prime Minister went right away, and though Baloz came strong he could not catch the outside. Zoolphokarr failed to stay and Zinfandel secured a place. The winner has run most consistently, but now with a native up, Mujeed, not even his own connections had much of a win.

No less than eight races were served up to us for the Eighth Extra, and good sport was the general order with some close finishes and a few results contrary to general anticipation to practically level matters up in the financial department. Kamad showed signs of his old form by carrying off the first two races, but subsequently Brown proved the most successful jockey with four wins. Wootton and Whalley left by the morning's mail and the list of riders by now has been considerably reduced, but the usual ones remain and things are likely to continue to go strong during this concluding month.

There were rather a large number of scratchings to contend with, but a field of ten went out in the first, one of the divisions of the race for new Arabs. Bustan, despite his disappointing running in the mile recently, was favourite for the furlong less from Lord Durham, Gowahajmer next, and the race was between the three. From start to finish Bustan was in front, Lucky Slave and Fathibeg giving away to Lord Durham. Bustan had the race well won, whereas Gowahajmer came late into a place.

Mafush and Ya Nasib, Wednesday's two winners, naturally contested favouritism in the second half, the fact that he had not yet started allowing Moosahar to start at fair odds despite rumours of a crack gallop. In the race, however, he proved too good for any of them, as he was first away and still had something in hand, Ya Nasib was second all the way, staying out Mafush, who passed Different at the turn and was unlucky to meet a bump by Ya Nasib as they came round. By waiting in front, the winner made it by no means a fast run race, the time surprisingly being worse than in the first case.

In the Tanna Plate also a division was necessary, and of the ten Kimberley and Red Monk fought for first place till the former contracted, Upright and Zuffer Beg nibbled at. This was a surprise, as neither of the first two could even place. Zuffer Beg and Sharar were first away, then Upright passed them on the rails with Kimberley handy. Fascination ran up momentarily, but Upright held on and succeeded in outstaying Zuffer Beg, who was beaten on the post by Sir Edward. This latter was very badly away, otherwise one can only presume that he would have won.

Out of eighteen on the card, only seven started in the second batch, and money came freely for Majesty and Far East, the latter, who had been bought by Mr. Lion, winding up the shorter. The race itself rested in these, Far East passing Mezahim into the lead and appearing to be going quite comfortably from Soomsam and Baloz. From the three, however, Majesty crept through along the rails. He caught the leader at about the distance and a few drives sent him on to win.

There was betting in the Kempton Park Plate, which showed more open prices than anticipated, Pincher and Danseuse going out equal favourites at a shade more than twos with Solution and Beckmesser next out. Wellfield also far from neglected, the outsider being Lanceolar. Danseuse and Wellfield made the early running from Solution with Pincher on the outside. At the quarter mile Wellfield had Danseuse settled, but as they turned for home Pincher showed outside them. Wellfield fought on well, but Pincher had his measure and appeared to have more than a neck the better of him.

In the longer race Wayward and Wild was made a firm favourite from Langton in a field of eight, Lady Spring expanding from a short price, with Gallileo annd Parkhill well in the betting. Devereux showed out momentarily from Bright Metal with Langton a bad last, but in a couple of furlongs Wayward and Wild and Lady Spring were in front together, followed by Bright Metal and Parkhill. This order remained to the half mile, where Lady Spring had a slight lead and Gallileo had closed up with the latter pair. Wayward and Wild now began to fall back and was passed by both Bright Metal and Gallileo, but these had no chance with Lady Spring.

A small field of only four started in the mile and a half for Arabs, Valens being backed to odds on from Merrily and Thaboor, Guinea Merchant ignored. Thaboor was first out, then Guinea Merchant took his light weight to the front and at the mile Valens crept up to make the race faster run. At the six furlongs the favourite and Merrily were practically level, but at the half mile Merrily led with Thaboor coming up outside. A very exciting finish was seen in the straight, Valens pocketed between the two and Merrily thus being able to stay on by a head with Valens the same in front of Thaboor.

This leaves us with the mile, Rozelmulook warming to favouritism from Regent with Ghalyum next. Ghalyum made the pace warm for five furlongs from Rozelmulook and Young Japan, the favourite taking up the running here. Regent, however, made up his ground going well and in the straight had the other well set, Ghalyum keeping his place from Crown Prince.

We regret to record the death at Poona of Mr. Cursetjee Dunjeeshaw, who, for many years, was the Official Handicapper to the Western India Turf Club. In that capacity he was immensely popular with the members of the Turf, and was held in high esteem by the officials of the Western India Turf Club.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The Gymkhana Hockey Tournament will open here on the 11th instant, two matches being played each afternoon, one on the Gymkhana ground, and the other on the Cameron Highlanders' ground. The following is the result of the draw for playing:—Monday, 11th March, St. Joseph's College Cadets vs. Bangalore Rifle Volunteers; Royal Artillery, Secunderabad, vs. 2nd (Q.O.) Cameron Highlanders; Tuesday, 12th, Royal Engineers vs. 13th Brigade R.F.A.; Sherwood Foresters vs. 7th (Q.O.) Hussars; Wednesday, 13th, winners of first day's matches and winners of second day's matches; Thursday, 14th, Kolar Gold Field Volunteers vs. Oxford and Bucks; Leicestershire Regiment vs. "S" Battery, Royal Horse Artillery; Friday, 15th, Semi-Final on the Gymkhana ground; Saturday, 17th, Final on the Gymkhana ground. All matches will commence at 4-45 P.M.

It is reported that Mr. Morris Davies, a very strong player in the K.G.F. team, met with an accident at hockey on the field a few days ago and may not be able to join his team in the tournament, but it is hoped they will be able to find a capable substitute should Mr. Morris Davies not be fit to play on the date fixed for their match. Barring the Gold Field team, which is considered a safe thing for the final, the Leicesters and Sherwoods are the other favourites for honours. It is very plucky of St. Joseph's College to have entered a team from their cadets; all their older boys have left and they can only put in a team of youngsters; the Bangalore Volunteers too have fallen off much in their hockey and they cannot hope to do much in the field. The R.E.'s used to get together a strong combination at one time and they have been having a deal of practice lately.

Major Rankin of the 7th (Q.O.) Hussars, who is running the Gymkhana Racing Sports, and Polo branch clubs is determined to make things hum during Easter Week. A Novices' Polo Tournament for a Cup valued Rs. 500 is on the cards, to commence on the 1st April; then there will be some Point-to-Point Races and a National Hunt Steeplechase with some mounted sports. After this there will be a flitting to the hills.

There will be a meeting of the Assault-at-Arms Committee at the United Service Club to fix dates for the forthcoming tournaments and to work out details of the programme.

The following teams have entered for the Subalterns' Polo Tournament, which opened at Meerut last evening:—The King's Dragoon Guards the Inniskillings, the 10th, 13th and 14th Hussars, the 17th Lancers, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers and the 18th (King George's Own) Tiwana Lancers.

The Inter-Regimental Tournament opened on Monday with the following results:—

The King's Dragoon Guards defeated the 7th Dragoon Guards by seven goals to one; the 7th Lancers the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons by six goals to five; the 10th Hussars the 14th Hussars by ten goals to four; and the 13th Hussars the 8th Hussars by ten goals to four.

The Coronation Sports Company, Limited, Sialkote City, which came in existence only last year, has already gained a good name for its manufacture of athletic goods for which it has been awarded a Silver Medal in the Exhibition of Old Bombay, 1911-12.

In the fifth Test match at Sydney England were all out in their second innings for 214. Australia then went in and had scored 193 for three wickets when stumps were drawn. No play was possible on Thursday owing to rain, but the game was resumed on Friday, when the Australians ran their score to 292 before they were all dismissed. The English team thus won by 70 runs. Scores were: England, 324 and 214; Australia, 176 and 292.

the place of Hill in the triangular contests. An extraordinary meeting of protest was held in Melbourn on 1st March, expressing indignation at the action of the Board of Control in excluding six of the Australian leading cricketers from the team for the triangular contest. Mr. Mitchell, K. C., suggested applying for an injunction to prevent sending the team. A Committee was appointed to co-operate with the Committees of other States.

The third test match between the M.C.C. and Argentina ended in a victory for the British team who thus win the rubber. Argentina scored 171 in the first innings and 98 in the second. The M.C.C. made 169 in their first venture and 102 for 8 wickets in the second, thus winning by two wickets.

The first test was won by Argentina by four wickets. They made 209 and 136 against M.C.C.'s 186 and 157.

In the second match, which was won by M.C.C., the latter made 266 and 250; Argentina 206 and 100.

Reuter announces the death on the 29th ultimo of Storer, the former wicket-keeper of the Derbyshire cricket team. William Storer was born at Ripley in Derbyshire in 1868. He was the first professional to score two separate hundreds in a first class match (Derbyshire vs. Yorkshire, June 1896). The same year he finished eighth on the list of batting averages with an average of 42· and kept wicket for Players vs. Gents at the Oval. In 1899 he was wicketkeeper for England vs. Australia at Nottingham. He visited Australia with A. E. Stoddart's team, 1897-98 (average in all matches 32·20). Storer retired from first class cricket in 1905. He also used to play football for Derby County, Derby Midland, Loughborough and Glossop Northend.

The Bengal Lawn Tennis Doubles Championship was concluded last Friday when Captain Whatford and Mr. C. F. Scroope beat Messrs. K. M. Singh and F. A. Thorpe in the final by 1—6, 2—6, 6—4, 6—3, 9—7, after a keen contest. Scroope and Singh have come through to the final in the singles which was fixed for Saturday last. Owing to the indisposition of Singh this, however, had to be postponed but it is hoped the match will take place this evening.

The Alderson Hockey Tournament for British troops began at Poona on Tuesday when the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment met the Dorsets, a well contested game ending in a win for the Dorsets by 4 goals to one. The other match in the first round is between the 1st Royal Dublin Fusiliers and the Royal Warwicks. The winners of this play the Divisional Staff in the second round and the Dorsets will play the 33rd and 34th Divisional Signal Company. The Alderson Hockey Tournament for Native Troops has drawn six entries also: the 12th Pioneers meet the 110th Mahrattas and the 3rd Sappers and Miners meet the 105th Mahrattas in the first round and the winners play the 117 Mahrattas and 127th Baluchis respectively in the semi-finals.

The Secunderabad Boat Club held their annual Regatta on the Hassain Saugor Lake on the 24th ultimo and a very pleasant afternoon was spent. The big race on the programme was the Challenge Fours (1,200 yards) in which the Gymkhana "A" team (Capt. Cullen bow, Capt. Furnivall 2, Capt. Davies 3, Mr. Armstrong stroke and Capt. Murphy cox) beat the "Wasters" (Mr. W. C. Clark bow, Mr. C. H. Chamen 2, Mr. K. Burnett 3, Capt. A. F. Clark stroke and Miss N. Evans cox) by two lengths. The Pair Oars (600 yards) was won by Messrs. Burnett and Chamen coxed by Miss N. Evans, who beat Capt. A. S. Clark and Mr. W. C. Clark coxed by Mrs. A. S. Clark. In the Double Sculls the brothers Clark came out again and beat a perfectly fresh pair, Messrs. Cockburn and Vyvyan (Miss Turner Jones) cox. The single sculls (1,200 yards) for the Laver Challenge Cup brought together Messrs N. Burnett and Armstrong. Burnett won comfortably and scored his third victory in this event. A punt race was won by Messrs. Rogers and Yule. The prizes were given away by Mrs. Pinhey.

Georges Carpentier, the famous French boxer, met Jim Sullivan at Monte Carlo on Wednesday last for the Middle Weight Championship of Europe. Carpentier won in two rounds. This French youth is a marvel and since last year has had a wonderful career. His first big fight was with Arthur Evemdun, the English welter weight, in Paris, last August. The contest was one of 15 rounds and was a very near thing, Carpentier getting the verdict. In October he met and defeated Sid Burns on points in a fifteen-round contest and a couple of weeks later fought Yonng Joseph for the Welter Weight Championship. The English champion was beaten to the world and the towel was thrown in the tenth round. In December last Carpentier was matched with Harry Lewis, the famous American. The fight went the scheduled twenty rounds and the Frenchman got the verdict. He has now beaten the English middle weight champion and is matched with Willie Lewis in a contest to take place on the 27th instant. Sullivan, who won the Middle Weight Championship from the late Tom Thomas, has not appeared in the ring since his match with Billy Papke, the American in June last year. On that occasion he was knocked out in nine rounds. The rise of the boxing Frenchman is a matter of considerable interest and we publish further on an article from the pen of Mr. A. F. Bettinson, which appeared in our English contemporary Boxing.

Mr. E. B. Percival has just presented to the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, a very beautiful specimen of a white zebra. For some years past, naturalists and big game shooters have been aware of the existence of an albino zebra in the East African Protectorate, but all attempts to shoot the animal proved futile until Mr. Percival secured the prize for the South Kensington institution. The skin is now in the hands of a well-known taxidermist, and will, as soon as possible, be set up for exhibition in the Mammal Gallery.

Friday, 9th February 1912.

Last week I wrote of ice and skates and plumbers and other accessories incidental to frost and winter. To-day I tell of early spring conditions, of balmy breezes and patches of blue in the skies much more than sufficient wherewith to make the traditional "Sailors' Jacket." The behaviour of the weather last week was simply disgraceful. Nothing could have exemplified callous ingratitude more than the way in which it threw over "our meteorological expert." After all his attention, too! "Our expert" almost grovelled before the frost; boomed it for all he was worth; predicted that it was going to outdo every record since 1895; and when it showed signs of relaxing its grip, boldly assured us that it would return on Tuesday night with greater severity than ever. But the frost, with a cynical contempt for newspaper prophets, did nothing of the kind. It gave place to a sloppy thaw and a rise in temperature that made one long for summer clothing. The poor experts were discredited.

Now a fortnight ago we heard of roses and violets blooming in the open and of song birds becoming matrimonially inclined and tuneful withall. Next week "came a frost—a killing frost," and the roses and violets were shrivelled up. There is a lesson in this—spring flowers should not hustle. In these days when so many commercial men mistake raw haste for enterprise, the lesson may have a wider application. Hustling is not a virtue. It accomplishes nothing. The plodding tortoise nearly always beats the hustling hare. The flowers that await their proper season to come out, last longer, and have a richer hue and a sweeter fragrance than those silly things that make-believe it is spring before winter has even started. The "rathe primrose" only gets frost-bitten for being too previous. The hustler who wants to be ahead of everyone else finds out that haste and speed do not always mean the same thing. But I moralise—let's switch off.

In "John Company's" time, and before, it was—if we are to believe the earlier Indian romances—quite a common thing for English military and other adventurers to take unto themselves wives from among the native "princesses," such enterprises more often than not, being carried out on the marriage by "capture" lines rather approved by the ancients. Sometimes they came bounding in at a Suttee ceremony and made off with the young and beauteous just as the flames had reached her bejewelled tootsies; at others, with their trusty blades they carved their sanguinary way through incredible obstacles and carried off the girl with the untold treasure and the snakestone, moonstone or what not. During the last century the princess snatching habit has apparently not been cultivated by the sahebloguе, though, perhaps, as a set off we have now and then heard of "marriages" between rajahs and nawabs and white women. But here comes along Mr. Lionel Henry Mander ready to revive the custom of the early British settlers and wed the young and comely "Princess" Pretiva, as she is styled in England. Mr. Mander is an old Harrovian, an aviator and something of a traveller and he is a member of the family which, as Mander Brothers, Wolverhampton, makes very excellent paint and varnish. "Princess" Pretiva is the second daughter of the late Maharaja of Cooch Behar. Mr. Mander, I assume, is a Christian, and the lady, if I mistake not, is a member of the Bramo Somaj. It is said the marriage will take place in Calcutta when I suppose there will be a double ceremony in order to make it quite all right on both sides, unless the bridegroom goes to the length of some of the old-timers aforesaid and, shedding his western religion, enters the small and select fold whose founder and arch priest was the late lamented Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, grandfather of the bride elect.

GARTERS for the Masses! This week that good man and true Sir Edward Grey has had the (I think) unique honour paid him by his Sovereign of being created a Knight of the Garter. For a long time the Order of the Garter has never been bestowed upon anybody below the rank of a belted Earl, and we have felt that not only did this limitatation exclude us, but it was, in a measure, contrary to the democratic spirit of the age.

True, Sir Edward Grey is a baronet and a scion of an eminently aristocratic house, but he is a commoner, and when one commoner is permitted to regard "Honi soit qui mal y pense" as his own motto there is no reason why another should not aspire to the honour. It will doubtless afford sincere satisfaction to the Labour party to reflect that the working man's son, who is now "creeping like snail unwillingly to school," is not debarred from the blue riband of chivalry because his father is a coster or a blacksmith or, at any rate, not an Earl.

THE latest idea of the military geniuses at Whitehall is to employ the cinematograph as an assistant to the recruiting sergeant. The embryo "Tommy Atkins" to be shown the regiment (which only needs him in the ranks to be recognised as the finest corps in the world) at work and at play and it is anticipated that all his delusions about there being anything disagreeable in a military career will vanish immediately.

One is sorry to throw cold water on a scheme which looks so promising on paper, but it will not work. The only time I ever saw soldiers shown on the cinematograph the pianoplayer accompanied their march-past with the strains of "The Soldiers of the Queen," and the troops, hastening across the screen about five times faster than the march time of the pianist, seemed to have so little idea of what they were doing that, had I been disposed at that moment to enlist, I should have changed my mind from sheer disappointment at the ways of the British Army.

A NEW "Yellow Peril" confronts the English householder. Being about to migrate from the classic precincts from which I send you my weekly budget, I have lately had dealings with house agents and decorators and other evil minded and tiresome persons, and it is somewhat disquieting to learn that Chinese designs in wall papers are likely to prove the latest decorative fashion. Now Chinese art is not of that restful and reposeful character which is likely to contribute to the comforts of the home, and I should imagine it would harmonise very badly indeed with a bilious attack.

This is true of the art of China in the old style when the Chinese confined themselves chiefly to blue willow trees and yellow dragons. They have now adopted a new colour scheme for the Chinese republic, which includes red and black and white as well as blue and yellow, and if the fashionable wall papers of the future are to be carried out in all the colours of modern China, our drawing-room walls will look as though they had been erected with barber's poles. Obviously we must not be in the fashion.

MR. ROBERT LORAINE is going to produce a new comedy with the curious title, "98.9." This opens up a wide field of arithmetical possibilities in connection with the drama. Mr. Bourchier gave us a hint of decimals when he produced "The Tenth Man"; he might have stimulated curiosity a little more if he had called it ".1." What "98.9" means, we shall learn in due time. It sounds like the bore of some terrible new gun. Since we seem to have started the use of mathematical titles, why stop at decimals? Why not "The Vulgar Fraction," "A Minus Quantity," "The Square of X," "Sines and Countersigns," "The Surd and the Absurd," "Who Stole the Hypothenuse?" "Squaring the Family Circle," and "Roots"?

THE appointment of that rather aged person, Mr. Alfred Ernest Bendall, dramatic critic, as joint examiner of stage plays with Mr. Chas. Brookfield has been officially announced.

Mr. Bendall will fill the vacancy in the department created by the resignation of Mr. G. A. Redford, who was in the office for seventeen years. In addition to the salary fixed by the Lord Chamberlain, the post carries with it part of the fees paid for the reading and licensing of each play.

Mr. Bendall, who is in his sixty-sixth year, was formerly dramatic critic for the Observer and recently for the Daily Mail. He commenced life in the department of the Paymaster-General, from which he retired after thirty years' service. His journalistic career began on the London Figaro, for which under the nom-de-plume of "Almaviva," he succeeded Clement Scott as the writer of theatre articles. This work he continued, in addition to his duties as a civil servant, until 1874, when he was appointed critic for the Observer.

IT is pleasant to welcome from America a serious play free from the cloying sentimentality which is generally so prominent in that country's "drammer." "The Easiest Way," with which Miss Sarah Brooke began a season at the Globe Theatre on Saturday, suggests a Pinero problem play Americanised. The author, Mr. Eugene Walter, has not attempted to give psychological studies; but he has succeeded in presenting a sordid corner of life realistically. The manner of the play can best be shewn by a sketch of the story:—

Act I.—A country house near Denver. Laura Murdock, an actress of sorts, is the mistress of Willard Brockton, a wealthy financier. Real love—so she says—has come to her at last, and she has determined to marry John Madison, a poor but honest journalist. He knows all about her past; he trusts her to run straight in the future; and he proposes that she shall go back to New York, on the stage, while he sets to work to make his fortune. Brockton gives her up with reluctance, but with a cynical disbelief in her ability to exist without luxuries.

Act II.—Laura Murdock's lodgings in New York—and precious poor lodgings they are. Things are going badly with her. Brockton, who desires to get her back again, has seen to it that she shall not obtain an engagement. Her landlady has given her notice to quit; young Madison's fortune seems as far off as ever, so she assents at last to return to the old life and Brockton. But first that stern stickler for the truth forces her to write to Madison telling him the truth. She waits till his back is turned, and then burns the letter.

Act III.—Laura Murdock's apartments in a New York hotel. A telegram arrives from Madison with the news that he has made his fortune all right, and is hastening to marry her. Brockton gets hold of the telegram, and extracts from Laura confession that she has continued to correspond with Madison, and that she has not told him of the renewal of her relations with her old protector. He makes her promise that she will tell the truth to Madison when he arrives. But she sees her last chance of happiness slipping from her, and leaves Madison in ignorance. He hurries off to obtain a marriage licence; she hurries with her packing.

Act IV.—Madison comes back with the licence, but in the meantime he has heard rumours that Laura has again been living with Brockton. She denies this glibly, but when the financier lets himself into the room with a key her lie is transparent, and the game is up. Finding herself deserted by both men she thinks of suicide; but the call of life is too strong for her, and she is left preparing to find a successor to Brockton as "the easiest way."

Miss Sarah Brooke by personality did not suggest the frail, non-moral Laura, but she acted strongly and with sincerity. Mr. Guy Standing gave a very finished study as Brockton. Miss Laura Nelson Hall as a big-hearted "unfortunate," with a wealth of slang and quaint expression, provided some delicious humour and a neat piece of character acting. Mr. Godfrey Tearle played nicely as Madison, and smaller parts were capitally filled by Mr. O. B. Clarence and Miss Violet Rand.

LISTER.—On the 10th February, at Walmer, the Right Hon. Lord Lister, O.M., F.R.S., in the 85th year of his age. No flowers, by request.

In the simple words quoted above was announced early this week the death of one of the greatest men of the Victorian era. Not only was Lord Lister one of the greatest among the great number of men distinguished in every sphere in which distinction can be gained, but he was one of the greatest surgeons the world has ever seen. Lord Lister, who had been in failing health for some time, died on Saturday at Park House, Walmer.

As the Times puts it:—"He may be called the great life-saver. More than ten years ago it was computed that he had saved more human lives than all the wars of the nineteenth century had sacrificed; and the record has been steadily rolling up ever since."

There were surgeons before Lister, cunning and well-learned men. We may believe Mr. Bob Sawyer's friend when he tells us that the operation was a magnificent sight when Slasher did it. But now-a-days, not all the fame of Slasher will keep us from remembering the dreadful case of the man who lay on the illustrious Slasher's operating table. Slasher's knife cut into the quivering flesh of an agonising man: Slasher's saw crunched through living pain. Pretty as the operation might be, not all Slasher's skill would save the subject from dying of the shock of it.

There must be many old surgeons among us who can remember the horrors of Slasher's day in the operating theatre, of that day when patients would struggle with scream upon scream against their pinioning bands, even as men long ago struggled at the gibbet-foot against the headsman's bowelling knife.

Then came Simpson, and Slasher did his merciful work upon an unresisting body lapped in a deep sleep. But the greater peril remained. There were hospitals in which eight out of ten died after operations. Now came Lister's turn. He followed with his carbolic sprays, his antiseptic methods, and Slasher's patient woke up from his drugged dose, with a clean wound cleanly dressed, with a fair hope of going back to the world of sound men.

Joseph Lister, as the Times statistician says, saved more lives than all the wars of the century had cast away. Simpson and Lister did more than this. They took away a black fear out of life. We, in our gratitude, made the one a Baronet and the other a Peer of the Realm. But then, what could we do for such men?

THE VAGRANT.

THE SANDBAR HONKERS.

"WHEN you get below Cairo," said the old shanty-boat man, "you will see nothin' but a bend an' a sandbar—a sandbar an' a bend." With this final mite of information he went into his floating domicile and poked up the fire, for it was frosty almost every night during the early part of the fall.

We rather liked the bend and the sandbars. They were not so much alike that one might say they looked the same. Of course, in cruising we are eager to get as much change of scenery as possible, and generally we could see the differences in the country we were in and those we had passed. Above Cairo we had come to the first big bends and sandbars in our cruise down the Mississippi. Unless one consulted the charts of the river assiduously, he was apt to become lost as to his correct location on them.

And it was above Cairo, too, that we saw the first phalanx of honkers, long-necked and strong-winged, making a great fuss over alighting on this point of a certain sandbar or that, each seeming to pay no regard to the leader of the once regular wedge-shaped band. We were following one of the Government steamers that was towing a pair of large barges loaded with stone to within a few inches of their tops. This seemed to be the easiest way of navigating certain waters where the men on the tows had to heave the lead constantly in order that the pilot might keep in the ever-changing channel.

Off ahead, something like a mile, we could see with the glasses a great number of Canada geese flapping about in the little gale that was blowing, apparently looking for a resting-place for the night, as it was midafternoon or later. From the way they played in the air, it looked to the pilot of the Wanderlust that one might get a shot worth taking if we could but get ahead of the steamer and her tow.

Putting a couple more notches of speed on at the engine, we pased the steamer and drew down on the honkers with their long black necks and the streak of white across the throat. They were swinging easily here and there, not seeming to care whether they alighted at all. When we approached they swung higher, settled down to a line of flight, rose higher, and let a cautious gander lead the way. We had not even come within gunshot of them. The water was beginning to come into our mouths at the anticipation of goose and cranberry sauce, but we had to retrieve it.

When we arrived at the next bend below, there sat the cautious gander on a bar as white and clean as sand could be, his flock drawn out about him, resting and preparing to make another get-away in case we approached too close. We tried a shot with a rifle and missed. One could not hit a cow at that distance, to say nothing of a goose. The boat vibrated some, and moving made it still harder. After the shot they rose like a scattered legion makes its retreat—in disorder, honking and defying us to bother them again.

At the next bend and sandbar there they were squatted about ready for us, but this time, instead of waiting for our shot into them they all made their little trot of a few strides, goose fashion, flapped their long wings, and went into the air. With the aid of the glasses we saw that their number had been augmented by some old woman's white goose which had at some stage of his career been a home-loving rascal, of rather smaller calibre than the honkers he had taken up with. And by this white goose, more of a waddler than the rest, smaller and more reluctant to fly, we marked this same bunch of honkers from one point to another.

As we sauntered southward at the rate of sixty to a hundred miles per day, motoring and hunting and fishing as we fancied, the numbers of wildfowl increased, being added to by others of their kind that came down each little tributary of the Mississippi. All were southward bent for the winter to eat of the stray heads of grain that had been left in the fields, delve in the pools and pockets of the river, and bask in the sunshine on the warm sandbars after they had fed in the morning, and to roost there at night after pilgrimages into unshucked cornfields along the bottoms.

At one place I stopped for a day or two to pursue the keen wild turkey. The nature of the hunting was such that I thought moccasins would make less noise among the twigs and brush than hunting boots. I carried glasses, gun, and patience. It was dense with stalks and weeds, and geese were feeding in it. They must have had their outposts well trained, for 200 yards was the nearest they would allow one to approach them.

Dropping down the river further, we stopped at the immense work the Government is doing at head of Island No. 35. In the river sat a few dozen honkers, sporting themselves during the evening on a small bar that had just shown up owing to the falling river. They had taken this location during the night, seemingly to be harder to approach, even if it was closer to the hundreds of men at work along the river front opposite them. One member of the party got a river man to brush his boat and went ahead of the little bar, thinking to drop down on the geese in the dusk and perhaps get a shot at them. They sat for his approach to within a hundred yards, rose in the air, and stayed there until he had rowed back to the cruiser, and then they came back to their sandbar.

We stopped at Pushmataha Landing for a couple of days. The chance had come to reckon with our friend the white goose and gang again. They sat serenely content on the white sand of a bar that separated a chute or cut-off from the main swing of the channel to the outside of the bend. We went to the bar, and up they flew. Hiding the boat, we dug pits and crept into them. And it was well we had patience. The geese returned and dropped on the bar near the boat. From the pits it looked as if they were roosting on it. Discouraged in the darkening night, we shooed them up and departed for the cheery boat's cabins.

The further we went south, the more geese we saw. When one bunch took to the air, another heard their prattlings and honkings, and up they went, too. They sat along the bars during our trip past them, easily within rifle shot, though it seemed they knew we could not hit them. Often the rifle would fail to make them rise. Ducks by the thousand were among them, more often than not taking to the air first if fired into. Plainly, our meat was not to be goose, but duck, shot from the boat while travelling. But we persevered. We had set our teeth into goose, mentally speaking, and literally meant to accomplish the same feat.

One evening we consulted the charts. They told us that a long sandbar would be found at the foot of a certain bend on the Mississippi side of the river. We halted at four. Making the cruiser fast was but the work of a moment or two. Then, equipped for some wading, mud and soft sand going, we hied away down the gravelly bar and through the driftwood, wreckage, logs, and old skiffs for a point where a few of the real old-fashioned rail-splitting pigs were rooting among the wild artichokes. Geese are wont to follow stock. We had seen none there, but it was a likely-looking spot.

Just as we made for a clump of willows to hide a portion of our approach, we saw a fine lot of geese making across the river and for the spot where the pigs had been feeding. We dropped to the ground and remained motionless for a few minutes, watching the while just where the geese dropped to the sand and cockleburs; then screened by the weeds, we crawled, walked, kneed it, ran, till we had found their place of alighting.

Their tracks showed them to have waddled off further down the short, and probably settled among the pigs where warning of danger would be given first by the "woofers." Darkness was drawing over the sky. We crawled further. Every moment we expected them to get up further ahead than the guns would carry. Experience had told us before that it was useless to shoot unless you had a goose practically cleaning the gun barrel with his long neck and knob-like head.

The "pigs" had disappeared, it seemed. We crept further. Suddenly we heard a beating of the air with those gigantic wings, a few honkings, and the entire bunch, cautious gander in the lead, with the old white goose close up, rose well ahead of us, and swung off to the left.

Lying still as death, those fool geese circled around us, swung a little higher, then gracefully came right over, and we rose. The guns spatted out two charges of shot each, both charges being aimed at a certain goose. Two thuds answered the summons of the buckshot, and we shook hands like a pair of men who alone have put down a revolution in Central America.

"There's a dinner for the crew and the captain bold," partner shouted.

"But we didn't get the white one!" I called back, reaching over for that big, fourteen-pound goose that had scarce flopped after he came to sand.

"We'll have to let him go for another time," answered partner, and we did.—AMOS BURHAMS, in Forest and Stream.

ODD DAYS IN SOMALILAND.

I.—A JUNGLE INTERLUDE.

It was after a strenuous but unsuccessful morning after oryx, I was passing the latter part of the afternoon in more restful fashion, sitting in a tree at the edge of some thick bush where a leopard was supposed to dwell: a goat tethered to a stump twenty yards away.

Nothing happened for an hour or so; then, as the sun was sinking low, some fifteen or twenty crows suddenly appeared from nowhere, and began flying around my tree and the goat, cawing uproariously and making a great to-do. I fancy my thoughts had been elsewhere as with something of a start, I turned any attention to the business in hand, realising that the corbies' behaviour might mean that the evening was on the move.

Presently the cause (presumably) of all the commotion appeared in the shape a black-backed jackal who sat down on his haunches about thirty yards away from the goat, looking at her. At least, he sat in the open facing the goat, but you would have thought that she was the last subject to have any interest for him. First, he looked to one side and then to another, and perhaps gave his moustache a twirl as he cast a glance, a very casual glance, across the way. Then one of the crows made a swoop at him to which he replied with just a shadow of a snarl, as who should flick his handkerchief and say "Bother those flies!" One knew all the time that he wanted to come out with a big swear-word, but was not sure whether bad language was quite the thing just now in really good society. For there was no doubt that he desired to make a good impression, and he was certainly smartly dressed and very spick and span; the idea evidently being to fascinate Mistress Nannie alike by his elegance and by his indifference to her charms.

The lady's attitude however is, and continues to be, one of disdain tempered by suspicion; until at last Master Jack, finding it slow (or—be it whispered—getting hungry) gets up and strolls still in the most genteel fashion towards her. But his advances are received in the most chilling manner as he walks round her saying in a deprecatory sort of way, "Why so standoffish to an old pal?" Nannie makes no pretensions to be anything but of the masses, who have not yet learned that language is intended for the concealment of thought and whose modes of expression are vigorous. She keeps him at horn's length: "Garn! think I don't know yer; old pal indeed; you dirty mean skulking son of a crab-eater!" Our jackal, living a hundred miles from the coast, has never seen a crab in his life, but he does not like to be reminded of the family taste for such things, which is considered low. So he promptly loses his temper and makes a vicious snap at the goat's hind leg, the veneer of gentility vanishing at once. The goat twists nimbly round, keeping her horns, such as they are, towards him, and only says "Think I'm afraid of you? You just hook it!" At this Jack puts on his deprecating air again: "What is the matter with you to-day my dear? as if you don't know I was only playing." "Don't you 'my dear me' you—you—crabby!" This is a little too much and the reply is another savage snap which nearly gets home. But now poor Nannie is begining to lose her confidence in herself, and the tone of her "Yah coward!" rises to something very like a scream for help. It seemed about time for Master to interfere, so I threw a cartridge at the little bounder and shook my rifle at him as he looked up. Then he went—quickly.

ANTELOPE LIVING WITHOUT WATER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—It has already been established that Indian antelope drink regularly where water is obtainable, but the question whether these animals are able to exist without water still remains to be settled. The following extract from the Oriental Sporting Magazine for February 1831 forms an interesting addition to the literature of the subject. Perhaps some one acquainted with Tanjore will be able to enlighten us as to whether the conditions stated here are constant and still continue. "Mr. K.—, well known as one of the best sportsmen on this side of India, during a residence of about three months at Point Calymere in the Tanjore Province (a place resorted to by many during the hot season), killed upwards of eighty antelopes with his dogs this year. Being much of the same opinion as most other people regarding the impossibility of catching them, he had, of course, never thought of slipping his dogs at them, until one day, whilst coursing a fox, his dogs took after a buck antelope and pulled him down. This being repeated a second time, and thus finding that they were to be had, he made a practice of going out after them; and the same success attending him during the time he remained there, the result in the end was, as I have stated, more than eighty killed. Many (I should think one-third) were black bucks, and the remainder full-grown does with a few fawns. His dogs although of the best English blood, bred in the country, are not superior to those of many other gentlemen who have often experienced the futility of slipping them at these animals, nor is the nature of the ground unfavourable to them (the antelopes), for although the soil is sandy it is hard and covered with grass, and they scarcely leave a mark on it with their feet. The sport is on the whole very pretty, being a complete race, tail on end, generally for about a couple of miles, though frequently they are caught almost immediately, and as frequently beat the dogs altogether; and as there is no turning, any number of dogs may of course be slipped. The inferiority of speed and bottom of the antelope at this particular place is only to be accounted for by the peculiar nature of the situation acting on their general condition. The plain on which they are caught is between the sea and a very deep jungle, and beyond that again is the broad salt swamp which runs across the whole part of the coast, lying east and west for about forty miles. The antelopes are found for a long distance up the small strip of dry land which lies between the sea and the swamp, and which, I believe, they never quit; and a very curious fact regarding them is that in these places there is not a single drop of fresh water to be found. So much is this the case that the people who resort there for the purpose of carrying salt fish are obliged to take water with them for a very great distance. The only moisture which they can get must be, therefore, derived from the herbs which they eat, and they may in that respect be similar to rabbits, which never, I believe, require to drink. Notwithstanding this their meat is very juicy and good to eat, and this perhaps is as marked a particular in which they differ from other antelopes as can be adduced, for in most parts of the country their flesh is generally black, dry, and scarcely eatable. In connection with this fact it may not be out of place to notice that Strabo, speaking of the Kalus (Antelope Scythica) says, 'it draws through its nostrils a great quantity of water, which it retains in its head, which serves to supply it with moisture for many days in the desert.'"

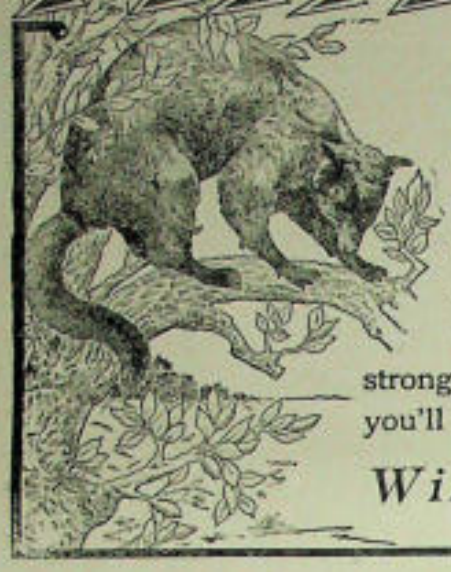
WINCHESTER



.22 Caliber Automatic Rifle.

This is the only automatic rifle using rimfire ammunition, and consequently it is inexpensive to shoot. It's rapidity of fire makes it a great game getter, and for shooting rabbits, birds and other small game, it has no equal. For running game it is particularly desirable, as a succession of rapid shots may be fired with accuracy while holding the rifle on the game. It holds ten strong shots, each of which is fired by simply pulling the trigger. Shoot one and you'll realize it's great effectiveness. It is strongly made and simple to shoot.

Winchester Rifles are Sold by All Dealers.

REGARDING DURRIES

To the Memsahib with ambitions to achieve economical housekeeping a few minutes spent in inspecting ELGIN DURRIE samples will reveal ways and means of cheap and tasteful floor covering hitherto undreamt of.

ELGIN DURRIES

bear the stamp of quality and good taste, are made of the best possible materials and produced in colours, patterns and sizes to suit all rooms and fancies. An "ELGIN" DURRIE keeps its freshness better and lasts longer in hard service than any other make. The reason?—well, fifty years of manufacturing experience count for much! But judge for yourself.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Bromford Bridge executive cannot be said to have been favoured in the matter of weather on the 12th instant. Their grievance was not on account of frost or snow, but a drizzling rain, which was to the general discomfort of an average attendance. Incidents there may have been, amusing and otherwise but the sport in the main was practically featureless, and, for the most part, deadly dull. Results :—

B.S.A.
MATCH RIFLES
(LEE-ENFIELD PATTERN).

Practically every competitor at the British and Colonial "Bisley" Meetings uses a B.S.A. Service Pattern Lee-Enfield Rifle specially prepared and selected for match shooting. Throughout the whole course of manufacture and subsequent testing B.S.A. Rifles intended for this work receive the special care and attention which is justified by the magnificent results that have been achieved continuously with B.S.A. arms by military and other marksmen.

The user of a Government Viewed B.S.A. Rifle occupies the very favourable position of knowing that his rifle will collaborate in full sympathy with his efforts to put on a good score. Although a rack rifle may shoot as well as the best match rifle made yet it is always wise to be on the safe side.

B.S.A. "APERTURE" MATCH SIGHTS.

In England and the Colonies open sights on military rifles have been practically entirely dropped in favour of aperture sights fitted at the back of the bolt. The improvement in shooting has been very pronounced. Aperture sights for service rifles are coming into gradual use in India, and every competitor who would be a winner should have his rifle fitted with the B.S.A. No. 9c (1912) sight, or with the B.S.A.-Martin or the B.S.A.-Parker sight on the B.S.A.-Tippins Mounting.

Fully illustrated interesting rifle booklets may be had post free from the B.S.A. Co., Ld., Birmingham.

B.S.A. High Velocity Target and Sporting Rifles, Mid-range and Miniature Rifles, Air Rifles, and small bore Shot Guns are adapted for practically every class of target and sporting work.

B.S.A. Rifles, Guns and Sights are stocked and sold by all gun dealers in India. If any difficulty is experienced in purchasing please write to

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

WHILE in the Rugby international match at Twickenham England registered five tries against Ireland, at Dublin in the Association contest between the same countries England scored six goals. Whereas, however, in the Twickenham game the representatives of the Sister Isle failed to make any reply, at Dublin they succeeded in obtaining one goal and on several other occasions came desperately near reducing the balance against them. Still all round the England eleven showed distinctly finer football than their opponents, the disparity between the contending sides being very pronounced after change of ends. Fleming who came into the team consequent upon Jeffries of Everton—originally selected as partner to Simpson on the right wing—being unable to travel with the rest of England on Thursday afternoon, seized the opportunity to register three of the goals and the others came from Holley, Freeman, and Simpson. Last year when so much was expected from the association of Simpson and Fleming, the latter greatly disappointed expectations, and upon the occasion of the match with Scotland he was passed over in favour of Stewart of Newcastle. After his success yesterday the Swindon man must be regarded as certain of his place in the eleven against Wales, and will doubtless also partner Simpson in the contest with Scotland. Ireland, it is only fair to mention, had to find substitutes for four of the men originally chosen to play against England, and they suffered a big handicap in the disablement of Thompson after half-time. The severe defeat inflicted upon them is matter for some regret, seeing that they drew with England at Belfast two years ago and at Derby last season put up a capital fight. Ireland have now met England thirty-one times and have been beaten on twenty-eight occasion. Their first victory over England is still a thing of the future.

Although compelled to take the field without Crompton, Bradshaw, or Simpson, all of whom were appearing for England at Dublin, Blackburn Rovers just managed to pull through against Liverpool and thus retain their position at the head of the First League. They are, however, closely pressed by Everton, who—also with a weakened side—overcame Sheffield United by the odd goal in five. Newcastle United, on the other hand, although at the beginning of the year possessed of a substantial lead over all their rivals, continue to show such disappointing form that their last four engagements have yielded them only one point out of a possible eight. Strongly contrasted, fortune attended the efforts of the two London clubs yesterday. Tottenham Hotspur, journeying to Bury, appeared, after their achievement in drawing at Blackburn, fairly certain of victory, but went down before the club that in the course of twenty-two previous encounters had gained only two successes. While Hotspur thus greatly disappointed their supporters, Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead winning by 3 to 0, took a handsome revenge upon Bolton Wanderers for the defeat inflicted upon them in the Cup-tie at Bolton a few weeks ago.

Saturday's results among the leading clubs of the Second Division of the League brought about a startling change in the position of affairs. Losing to Glossop, who had previously won only one match, Derby County dropped from first to third place, Chelsea with a fine victory over Grimsby Town assuming the leadership, a position they have not before occupied this season. Burnley won at Nottingham and are now second—a point behind Chelsea with a equal number of matches played. A capital win over Gainsborough Trinity enabled Clapton Orient to become fourth on the list, while Fulham are now eighth. Of all the clubs they accomplished the best performance in winning at Hull. Previous to that reverse Hull City had not suffered defeat in a League match on their own ground.

In the Southern League the great events were the defeat of Swindon at reading and the success of Queen's Park Rangers at Brentford, results which take the London team to within a point of the champions at the head of the competition. After Reading's victory over Aston Villa in their replayed cup-tie the eleven might be regarded as equal to anything, but Swindon possess such exceptional ability that the Berkshire team's win came quite as a surprise. Swindon had not lost a match since the first Saturday this year, and no doubt the absence of Fleming, playing for England, had something to do with their inability to score after getting sixty-six goals in twenty-four league matches. Reading's superb defence caused the overthrow of the Villa, and it pulled the side through on this occasion. This was not the only match in which the influence of the cup-ties was felt, for Crystal Place lost at home to Stoke after being only a goal to the bad in three and a half hours' football with Sunderland, while Northampton lost at Plymouth and West Ham United, victorious over Middlesbrough on Thursday, gained the most handsome success of the day at New Brompton.

THE 'VARSITY MATCH.—Some capital football was seen at Queen's Club on Saturday when Cambridge beat Oxford in an exciting finish by 3—1. Cambridge played clever football throughout, but they were a trifle lucky to win by a margin of two goals.

Oxford scored first in the first two minutes of the game, and the scores were level with less than three minutes to go. Then Cambridge got an unexpected goal, and almost with the last kick of the match Woosnam again beat the Oxford goalkeeper.

Kerry, the Oxford captain, played a great game at outside left and was perhaps the best forward on the field. The Oxford front line, however, did not combine so well as the Cambridge attack, and it was in this department that the Light Blues showed a marked superiority. Campbell played well at back for Oxford but it was a blunder on his part that enabled Cambridge to score their second goal.

Oxford's first goal came from a fine piece of work by Kerry who quite outpaced Baker, and put in a perfect centre, which Arkwright easily converted. Cambridge equalised soon after from a corner forced by Lee, and admirably placed by Vachell. Farnfield took the final kick, and Scott had no chance of saving.

For the greater part of the second half the play was very even, but with less than three minutes to go Campbell allowed Winterbottom to get away by himself. The outside right slung the ball right in front of Scott, and Dawe had a very easy task to put it in the net. Immediately after some clever combination among the Cambridge inside forwards gave Woosnam his chance, and running between the back, he put the result beyond all doubt.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—Ireland's Association team was hopelessly beaten by England by six goals to one at Dollymount Park Dublin, in a game in which there was not a real thrill from start to finish. The Irishmen were outplayed in every position, Burnison and McCann, the two backs, being particularly weak and unresourceful. The game was played under ideal weather conditions, before 15,000 spectators, and the condition of the ground gave no excuse for poor play.

There was a striking difference in the methods of play. The Englishmen, who had the advantage of height and weight, played a cool, calculating game, and with entire precision throughout. Fleming, who was the best of a brilliant forward line, has never played better. Wedlock was the pick of the halves and Pennington the better back.

The Irish side played a spasmodic and half-hearted game in the opening stages. They dashed about wildly, and ran themselves off their feet to no purpose. Scott was poor in goal until he got real work to do in the second half, when he showed what manner of man he was. Harris was the best of the halves, who did well in the first half. The forwards did not come up to expectations.

The Englishmen won by 6 goals to 1, but had they let themselves really out in the second half one shuddered to think what the score would have been. The absence of Thompson, of course, meant much to the Irish side, but if I reland mean to beat Scotland radical changes will have to be made. Ireland won the toss and this was taken as a lucky omen by the crowd, who cheered vociferously, but the luck was with the visitors this time, and the opening cheer was the only real enthusiasm displayed during the match.

Freeman inaugurated a beautiful movement, and after thirteen minutes play Fleming scored a good goal, which Scott made a poor effort to save. Holly added another inside two minutes, McCann being at fault. The Irish half backs played sounder after this, and their exertions brought about a goal, Hamill catching a pass from Thompson and rushing through Ireland's only goal. Just before the interval, however, England added a third goal through Fleming.

In the second half the Irishmen fell to pieces. Lacey and Thompson were occasionally prominent on the wings, but there was no real heart thrown into the game. Freeman scored a fourth goal for England, and Thompson was hurt and had to retire. With ten men the Irish game degenerated and Fleming and Simpson scored in the closing stages after Scott had saved shots from all angles.

RUGBY RULES.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—After a tremendously fast and keen game, England beat Ireland at Twickenham by 5 tries (fifteen points) to nothing. There was little extravagance in the reports of the excellence of the Irish forwards. But even forward Ireland were beaten.

The real experts, the men who have played the game and see many a point hidden even to the keenest onlooker who has not been himself a player, say that England have not turned out such a pack for twenty years.

Indeed the best judge I know, a player of great experience, says that there is only one pack in his memory who could have beaten them, the wonderful "All-Blacks": and even they might not have done it. English forwards of late years have been accused of playing too ladylike a game. On Saturday though there was no suspicion of the brutal in their work, they played a terrific game.

Kewney, who came back again, appeared to be stronger, more aggressive, and faster than ever: and Dibble made a perfect leader. Of the rest one can mention nobody in particular, unless you want to mention every one particularly. Besides their great work in the scrum and in the loose, it was delightful to see them 100 per cent. better in the line out than they were against Wales.

Ireland made some fierce rushes, were always triers—though apparently suffering from lack of condition at times. But it is not unfair to them to say that they were outplayed at their own game. Though I was one of many who would have liked to see Pillman playing, everyone must admit that the Selection Committee were entirely right in dropping him for the match, and we entirely wrong in disagreeing with them.

The penalty goal that Lloyd nearly kicked from some five yards behind the half-way line, showed how terribly England might have suffered from anything like offside tactics. Lloyd was both extraordinarily good and disappointing. His kicking into touch last year was a thing to talk about: but on Saturday his length and accuracy in finding touch at any angle and from any position was the absolute limit.

Of the English halves, Pym did his work really well and Coverdale was really good, his hands being splendid: and he gave his passes quickly and always at the right height. Birkett and Poulton were disappointing, as centres, in the first half, but showed fine form in the last twenty minutes.

Brougham scored the try of the match—a try that will become historic, and be quoted for years and years—and Roberts showed that he has great pace and determination and only needs a few decent opportunities—not necessarily sitters—to score tries. Yes; our wings are good enough, thanks very much.

England had the best of the first half, and, though the Irish forwards made many characteristic dashes, they seemed pretty badly done after about twenty minutes. A great chance was spoilt fairly early owing to a bad pass from Birkett to Brougham. A little later Mclvor kicked dead after a fine race with Brougham.

Then came the first try. Roberts followed up at a great pace, collared Hinton as he tried to swerve round, picked up and got over. Fine work. The try was not converted. Just before half-time Lloyd tried a wonderful left-foot drop at goal, and only missed scoring by a very few feet.

Ireland started well in the second half and were always dangerous till Brougham's try came. Brougham got the ball from Macllwaine, swerved past Hinton, and, though checked by the half-tackle, managed to dive over the line as Maclvor got him. It was great. Afterwards England were always winners.

A fine movement, Birkett wide to Roberts, Roberts inside to Poulton, and Poulton inside again to Birkett, ended in the latter scoring. Roberts got over again in the right hand corner, with two men hanging on to him. Poulton scored again just before the finish, after Coverdale had made a brilliant opening.

There was only one bad thing about the English side. They had no one who could make an effort at a place-kick. Though it seems a thousand pities to change the side, England must have a good place-kick for Inverleith.

MID-SURREY vs. CAMBRIDGE.—In their first match of the Lent term against Mid-Surrey at Richmond, on Saturday, Cambridge University were beaten by 6 games to 3. Mid-Surrey were without the services of H. E. Taylor, the English International, who although a spectator, was not well enough to play. The home side were led by J. S. Worthington, who, showing excellent form, beat H. Gardiner Hill by 4 and 3. Halving the first two holes, Worthington took the lead at the third, from which point the Cantab never succeeded in drawing level. Worthington led by 3 up at the turn. A. C. P. Medrington, the Cambridge secretary, defeated J. E. P. Mellor by 2 and 1. The 'Varsity captain, F. M. M. Carlisle, putted wonderfully well against C. J. Hamilton, with the result that he led by 5 up at the turn, and ultimately won by 6 and 5. Details:—

OXFORD TRIAL MATCH.—Some good form was shown in the Oxford University trial match at Radley on Saturday. D.C. Leng, who beat J. L. S. Vidler by 7 and 6, went out in 38, and hardly made a mistake except for the missing of one or two holeable putts. A. R. Smith played well with all his clubs, and defeated G. D. Forrester by 3 and 2, R. Le Fevre, a freshman this term at Exeter College, beat R. H. Jobson on the last green. The former went round in 80. Jobson was suffering from an accident sustained whilst skating, and could not do himself justice from the tee. The results were as follow:—

A. R. Smith beat G. D. Forrester by 3 and 1.
D. C. Leng beat J. L. S. Vidler by 7 and 6.
R. Le Fevre beat R. H. Jobson by one hole.
S. Henderson beat J. R. Platt by 2 and 1.
J. B. Balfour beat J. P. Younger by 3 and 2.
W. F. McClive beat J. F. Hodges by 4 and 3.
The weather was perfect, and the course was in good order.

ATHLETICS.

A HUNDRED YARDS RECORD.—D. MacMillan, the Cambridge Blue, who last year won the inter-'Varsity 100 yards in even time, and was also first in the 100 for the 'Varsities against Yale and Harvard, on the 14th instant accomplished a grand performance in a strangers' 100 yards, by covering the distance in the wonderful time of 9¼secs., which is equal to British record—A. F. Duffy's performance at Leicester on July 20th 1901. In 1900 and 1901 A. E. Hind, and in 1904 J. Churchill, both old Blues, accomplished similar performances, but it is stated they were assisted by the wind, and got the better of the pistol. MacMillan yesterday had no wind to assist him, and did not get the better of the pistol. He won his heat in 10⅕secs., winning easily by 3 yards, and in the final travelling magnificently, he got home first by fully 2 yards. J. L. Fairrie conceded 2 yards, was second. MacMillan, who hails from Felsted, is just now in best form. Yesterday he had a fine track to run on but was not otherwise favoured.

The race was run in connection with the concluding instalment of the Peterhouse-Fitzwilliam Hall sports in the inter-collegiate competition, the first named college just winning by 4 points —52 to 48. The meeting was a most sporting one, and the score was 45 all when the last event was entered upon.

LAHORE TRADES' CUP TOURNAMENT.

THE Trades' Football Tournament opened at Lahore on the 27th ultimo, when the Lancashire Fusiliers met the 3rd King's Royal Rifles. The Riflemen went away at the start and drew first blood. The Fusiliers immediately equalised and before half time had put on three more goals. On changing ends, in spite of a stout defence, the Fusiliers put through again. Play then became more even, but try as they might the Riflemen could not score again and the Lancashire Fusiliers won by 5 goals to 1. On the 28th ultimo the 13th Hussars met the King's Regiment, an evenly contested game ending in a pointless draw. This was replayed the following day when the King's Regiment were victorious, they had the upper hand all through and scored a goal in each half.

Last Friday the Connaught Rangers and the South Lancashire Regiment took the field and a fast and interesting game was witnessed. The Rangers did most of the attacking in the first half, but the defence was sound and only one goal was scored. The Lancashires tried hard to equalise but without success. Play in the second half was very level. The Lancashires continued their efforts to score but were unable to get through. The Rangers then got away and scored again—the result of a fine shot by their left wing. The Lancashires were unable to respond and thus retired beaten by 2 goals to nil. The Ferozepore Football team met the 4th King's Royal Rifles on Saturday last; the military eleven were the stronger side and had a comfortable win by 4 goals to nil.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

By their win over the Rangers on Saturday the Customs have greatly strengthened their position, for they have beaten Sibpur too, and this means four valuable points. The Riversiders have only Calcutta and the Medicals to get over and there should be no difficulty in disposing of both these teams, provided the Customs are at full strength. The match between the Customs and Rangers was a very hard and well contested one, but it was a game of missed opportunities. The Customs won, and on the evening's play deserved their victory, but they were lucky to win by three goals to one. Both teams missed chances of scoring, and it was unfortunate that the Rangers had to play a man short for about ten minutes, A. Lawton putting in a late appearance. The Customs opened well and inside seven minutes scored two goals; but a third was badly missed by Galbraith from a penalty "bully." The Customs led at half time by 2-1 and so far had much more of the play; but during the second half the Rangers attacked oftener and were unlucky in not drawing level. Just before the close the Customs added another goal. The Rangers, who have had more practice, lasted better and of the two sets of players, where all worked hard, Galbraith, Williamson, Bolleau and Lynch for the winners and Smart, Tripp and Rosetti for the Rangers were seen to most advantage. Smart and Bolleau are once more two of the finest forwards in Calcutta, and Williamson is to be complimented in keeping Smart in check The Customs are a very strong team and they would be more popular but for two or three of their supporters, who are anything but sportsmen. Calcutta beat the Pathans by a goal to nil on Saturday, but the winners did not give a convincing display. Calcutta are yet trying their new men, and so the team will not be a representative one until three or four more games have been played. Against the Pathans, Collingwood was tried in goal, but he had nothing to test his ability, while there were one or two other changes in the team. Sherman has turned out and there is a rumour that he will play only occasionally. Cole played an excellent game at centre forward, but the other four were erratic in their passing and slow near goal. The Pathans too were not at full strength. The game was very evenly contested and the only goal of the match was netted by Cole ten minutes after ends had been changed.

On Tuesday Calcutta showed marked improvement when they defeated the Oriental Sporting by three goals to nil. The latter club, which is composed of Mahomedans, are a very speedy lot, but their great fault is weakness in the circle. The Orientals gave Calcutta a good game, and but for weakness in front of goal would not have been beaten by three goals to nil, as on the evening's play there was only a goal's difference between the two teams. The Orientals, it will be recollected, put up a magnificent fight against the Rangers; but in this match too the Mahomedans lost by 4-1 owing to poor shooting.

In Tuesday's match Cole, the Calcutta centre forward, again distinguished himself, while Halliday, a newcomer, also plays excellently and his presence has strengthened the attack considerably. Halliday netted two goals against the Orientals, Cole being credited with the third.

Owing to lack of C.R.A. referees, three or four games have had to be postponed; but this is the fault of the B.H.A. for having more than four League matches on the same day. To provide referees for six matches is asking a little too much, as each game is supervised by two men.

The E.I.R. (Lillooah) team are playing as well as can be expected, but it is a pity that with such a lot of hockey in all the important stations between Howrah and Allahabad, a representative E.I.R. team cannot be got together. Asansol, Jamalpur, Dinapore, Allahabad and Dhanbaid have all of them hockey clubs, but an important station like Howrah, with the head-quarters at Calcutta, cannot turn out an eleven. In the All-India Tournament only those stationed at Allahabad represented the E.I.R., while in the Beighton tournaments here, Jamalpur, Dhanbaid and Lillooah teams compete, and it is a pity a representative E.I.R. team does not enter. The N.W.R. who are the holders of the All-India trophy, are not a picked team from one station, but are a representative railway team, the players being picked from the various stations.

On Tuesday Lillooah beat the Rovers by a goal to nil; but the game was too rough to be interesting. Referee Clayton had to warn a player on each side. While the Rangers have played six games, the Medicals have only played two, and later on the Medicals will have a great strain in getting through their engagements, as three or four matches in a week will tell on the players.

The Rangers beat the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday by twelve goals to nil, and it looks as if the Chowringhee team are qualifying for the "wooden spoon." The Measurers have obtained a point by drawing with Dalhousie last Tuesday, and the only two teams that have failed, so far, to place a single point to their credit are the Amateurs and the Y.M.C.A. There is a rumour that the Amateurs and the Y.M.C.A. will amalgamate for the Beighton Cup. In the "B" Division the Port Commissioners are going very strong and it would be a pleasure to see this fine team in the Senior Division next year. Appended is the table up to date:—

THE PUNJAB NATIVE ARMY TOURNAMENT.

The tournament began at Jhelum on Wednesday the 28th February, when two games in the first round were played. The 47th Sikhs met the 45th Sikhs and a good match had been looked forward to and so it proved. The 45th opened well but were driven back and the 47th pressed almost throughout the remainder of the period and stood three goals up at the interval. But on changing ends, the 45th showed splendid form. Within 5 minutes of resuming they had scored two goals and notched the equalising point not long after. Continuing the pressure they scored three more goals and thus won by six goals to three. The cup holders thus retire from the tournament as the result of their first game. The second match was between the 87th Punjabis and 76th Punjabis. This was a well contested game ending in a win for the 76th by 2—1. The first half was pointless, play having been mainly in favour of the 87th. On changing ends the 76th scored a goal and quickly followed this up with a second. Towards the close the 87th made desperate efforts. They put through once but in spite of their endeavours they were unable to equalise.

Two more games were played on Thursday last and both were most interesting. In the first the 37th Dogras met the 15th Sikhs. The initial half was very evenly contested. The Dogras were first to score from a corner and a corner enabled the 15th to equalise not long after. Just before the interval, however, the Dogras got through again. They pressed on resuming and eventually hit a third goal. Then the 15th attacked and after one corner had been unproductive they scored from a second. They kept up the attack but their shooting was poor and the 37th getting away just on time scored a fourth goal and put the issue beyond doubt. Dogras 4 goals; Sikhs, 2 goals. The 36th Sikhs next met the 84th Punjabis and a very level game was witnessed. The score was one all at half time and each team scored a goal in the second period. Extra time was played but though they had plenty of chances neither team could score. The following day a further period of 15 minutes each way was played without result but in an extra period the 84th scored a goal and won the match.

Two other games were also played on Friday. The 33rd met and defeated the 82nd Punjabis by 3 goals to 2 though the issue was in doubt till the very end. The 82nd put up a fine game against their doughty opponents and were first to score. The 33rd got on terms soon after and the interval arrived with the score one all. On resuming the 33rd got through and then the 82nd equalised as the result of a free hit for offside. Play thereafter was fast and exciting and it was not till just on time that the 33rd broke through and scored the winning goal. The game between the 45th Sikhs and 20th Punjabis was won by the 45th by three goals to one. The 20th lost chances at the start and the 45th scored a goal, leading by this margin at the interval. On crossing over the 45th hit a second point. Then the 20th pressed and scored from a corner. Thereafter the 45th asserted themselves and netted the ball once more and try as they might the 20th were unable to get through again.

The second round opened with two games last Saturday. The 37th Dogras played the 76th Punjabis and beat them three to one. Play was up and down all through the first half. The 76th netted the ball twice but both points were disallowed for offside. Eventually they scored a goal and the 37th equalised just before the interval. Up and down play once more on resuming, corners accruing to both teams. From one of these the 37th scored and shortly after another short corner enabled the 37th to register their third goal. The 76th played up all they knew but could not score again and retired beaten 3—1. The game between the 84th Punjabis and 45th Sikhs was an excellent one. At the start the 84th got away and scored; keeping up the pressure they were nearly through again. The 45th conceded a corner and the 84th put the ball through but the point was disallowed for "sticks." Then the 45th got away and scored, but one of their players was offside. The 84th were next prominent and scoring once again led at half time by two to nil. Changing ends the 45th had rather the best of the game and managed to equalise before time was called. Extra time was played and the game was very level but eventually the 45th got through and thus won the game by three goals to two.

Boxing.

FRANCE'S CHALLENGE TO ENGLAND.

I HAVE been watching and waiting during the last few months for any striking expression of opinion on the really remarkable change—amounting almost to a revolution—which has occurred in the sport of boxing during the last few months and I have been more or less watching and waiting in vain, not only for the expression of opinion I was looking for, but even for such a comment on the remarkable studies with which French boxers have come right into the forefront of the game, as would lead one to suppose that anyone had taken any particular notice of them. For many years new critics and followers of the sport have seemed to consider that the only possible rivals to this country's supremacy at one of her greatest national sports must necessarily come either from America or Australia, and have even to some extent admitted a certain degree of superiority to boxers from the States, though while doing so they have at the same time generally appeared to be satisfied that this superiority would only remain a temporary one.

I have already more than once pointed out that the whole secret of the various successes which have of late years more or less established the American claim to the premier position in the boxing world from a championship point of view to be the almost inexplicable way in which so many of our own men have chosen to abandon the old English style of boxing for a wild method which has nothing to recommend it from a scientific method. American boxers have beaten our representatives because they have adopted and practised the old original English style and because they have also, as a rule, been invariably careful to enter the ring thoroughly fit and trained for any bout in which they had to engage. Our own men, with a few notable exceptions, have for some grotesque reasons (I will not say an absolute inability to think clearly) ascribed their defeats to certain peculiarities or habits of their conquerors. They have taken a survey of successful American boxers and have imitated the faults instead of their virtues. It is inconceivable, but it is a fact nevertheless. Let any hard-hitting, butting or boring American visit us, almost ignorant of the very rudiments of the art, but who by virtue of his hitting powers, a few lucky punches, or other causes, happens to win a few victories then will you see a whole regiment of men casting all their previous methods to the winds and going into their contests swinging from all sorts of positions without the slightest attempt at defence other than the crude cover-up which was the only one with which their exemplar was acquainted.

The Coffee Cooler, Frank Craig, won several matches when he first came here, but our men were unable to see that he won these by virtue of his clever footwork, his long reach and the clever use he made of it, his tricky ringcraft, and his two-handed methods. No, all they could see about him was that he had a habit of chewing gum all the time. So they immediately jumped to the conclusion that in this gum-chewing habit lay the real secret of his success, with the result that several of them and of their imitators have gone on chewing gum to this day, without troubling to perfect themselves in any real department of the game. Of late years they have had Jim Driscoll standing forth as a living example of the methods and attendant success of the old and true style, the real English style. Yet how many men are there now-a-days who make the slightest attempt to model themselves on Driscoll, either in foot work, methods of delievering a punch, defence, pose, style, or indeed in any single particular? Matt Wells shewed them how the old English straight left could always be made to beat the American crouching style adopted by Freddie Welsh, yet Welsh has to-day far more would-be imitators of his style than has Matt Wells.

Ten years ago, when dealing with the subject at considerably greater length than I am able to do just now, I ventured to say that "I had faith in the future," but I must regretfully confess that the faith I then entertained has since undergone some very serious trials. At the present moment, however, I am feeling a shade more hopeful. The old long established apathy with which English boxers and the English boxing public together were content to accept the victories of American boxers has been more than a little irritating, but I shall be extraordinarily astonished if they rest content with a similar treatment at the hands of French rivals. And yet unless they bestir themselves almost immediately, and bestir themselves very vigorously into the bargain, I am seriously afraid that they will have to put up with considerably worse experiences from the new school of boxers which has arisen so suddenly on the other side of the English Channel. We have been content to regard American boxers, no matter whether these were born in Germany, Italy or Denmark, as our cousins. They speak the same tongue as ourselves and style themselves Americans. So we have come to feel that they were sprung from the same stock as ourselves. We cannot, however, foster such delusion where Frenchmen are concerned. For various reasons we have all along flattered ourselves that Frenchmen would never be able to learn to box. The reasons were absurd as I hope to prove later on, but they were nevertheless existent, and so I feel satisfied that once our somewhat sluggish minds awake to the fact that there are very strong probabilities of France annexing all the leading positions in the sport, we shall see such a wave of determination sweeping over the land as cannot fail to manifest itself in a return to the old days, when our supremacy in the best and greatest of all our national sports was absolutely unquestioned inevitably.

For that Frenchmen are destined to prove the most dangerous of competitors for the world's championships must, I think, be generally admitted. To commence with, boxing is a sport for which they are physically fitted to a degree it astonishes me that no one should have suspected. Their superiority as swordsmen, especially with the foil and rapier, has long been admitted. And if you will only think the matter over, you will, I fancy, admit that the man who is physically adapted to develop into a great swordsman possesses many of the qualities which go to the making of a great boxer. The rules of attack and retreat are very similar. The footwork developed by the one sport will be found highly useful in the practice of the other, while an accurate judgment of distance is of absolutely primary importance in both. The Frenchman, again, is proverbially quick-witted. As a rule more so than the average Briton. Another very important quality for boxing success. Add to these the tremendous enthusiasm with which young France has taken to the game and you will, I feel sure, be compelled to admit that we shall have to put our best foot foremost in all earnest if we are to retain our old superiority.

I have written retain, because I for one am not yet willing to admit that we have lost it absolutely but I am not convinced on recent form that I ought not rather to have written regain. Look at the long list of victories with which French boxers have recently credited themselves. Almost every report one reads of boxing contests in Paris contains the news of a fresh triumph gained by a French boxer—frequently one who is practically an unknown—over an English rival of even fair and sometimes almost first-class reputation.

Carpentier has beaten Sid Burns and our champion Young Joseph in the welter weight division as a wind-up to a really lengthy list of other successes. He recently earned a decision over Harry Lewis, the famous American, and there will not I fear be any sound reasons for laying particularly heavy odds on Jim Sullivan's chances when the two meet at the end of the month. Of course I am hoping to see Sullivan come out on top, but I have an uneasy suspicion that he will have to be at his very best and do all he knows to accomplish the feat. The one quality with which I must confess to have been most surprised is the manner in which these Frenchmen have stuck contests out. Take young Ledoux, for example, in his recent bout with Joe Bowker. Bowker was winning all along the line as cleverly as any Englishman could have wished to see him doing it, but Ledoux never slackened speed or hesitated to come at him for all he was worth. Even had the bout continued on the lines it had been going up to the eighth meeting right into the last round, I feel pretty confident that the French boy would have tried his hardest to win. Like all his compatriots who have taken to the game Ledoux came into the ring as fit as a fiddle. These French boys are always at it. Even when they have no bout in immediate prospect they are always in semi-training—that is to say, they put in a spell of regular practice in the gymnasium, and, what is more, they put in intelligent practice, boxing among themselves and endeavouring to improve not only their stamina, speed, and hitting power, but also their knowledge of the finer parts of the game.

Carpentier, Ledoux, Til, Poesy, Legrand and others are still young and would also appear to be improving at a steady rate. Looking round our English boxers, I can only see Jim Driscoll and Matt Wells whom I should say unhesitatingly were better than the best they have at their respective weights. It is true that they have no-heavy weight at present of any particular note, but if, as seems certain, young Carpentier is destined to develop into one, well, they ought to be able to rest fairly satisfied that they will soon have the best "White Hope" in the world.

It is up to anyone who is at all interested in the sport therefore, and is, in fact, up to every Briton with healthy red blood in his veins, to see that by some means or other, by every means in our power, in fact, that we should at once set about putting our house in order. The French are our very good friends, but we cannot allow them to beat us right out at our own game all round. Our boxers have simply got to be improved very considerably. It has actually come to be a matter of international importance. They must be taught, or must be made to learn for themselves, that they will have to go back to the only correct style, the true English style which was carried to Australia by Jem Mace, taught by him to Larry Foley, and then carried to America by Peter Jackson, Fitzsimmons, Jem Hall, Dan Creedon, Young Griffo, and Bill Murphy (all pupils of Foley or of

The last word in dynamo car lighting by the firm who had the first word on the subject.

We had the first word in electric car lighting when we originated specially designed lamps for car use nearly ten years ago. Determined to maintain the lead we have designed and perfected after the most searching tests, quite regardless of expense, the new dynamo lighting outfit. It effectually represents the last word in car-lighting systems.

The whole system is characterised by extreme simplicity, exceptional lightness and compactness. This is supplemented by a great increase in efficiency and reliability. Complete, the plant is a tribute to British ingenuity, skill, and workmanship.

In spite of its manifold advantages, the dynamo complete can be supplied from

There are still a few men in England who can show our rising generation how to box, and there are also not a few who can teach them how to train. But the aspirants must be convinced that the future rests chiefly with them and on their determination to succeed. Those of us who cannot ourselves hope to personally represent our country have also a few duties, by the way—namely to exert all our energies to provide the youngsters with all the tuition and facilities for practice within our powers. For, believe me, it will be a sad day for Great Britain when the only role open to any of her subjects at world's championships matches will be that of spectators.—A. F. Bettinson in Boxing.

COMPLICATIONS OF DISTEMPER.

Complications in distemper are varied both in their form of attack as well as the parts affected. One individual organ or the entire system will be the prey to complications. In so-called head distemper we find in its inception a simple catarrhal inflammation, which quickly develops into a chronic form. That entails every organ of the head. The most common ailment of head distemper, both during and after the attack of the disease, is iritis (an inflammation of the white of the eye). This inflammation, if not checked, leads to ulceration of the iris and will occasionally destroy the eyeball. Again, we frequently find inflammation and opaqueness of the cornea (the pupil of the eye), which will lead to ulceration of the cornea, as well as the mucus membrane, which is technically called ophthalmia. While ophthalmia does not depend on distemper for inception, it is usually a complication of the disease. In nearly all eye troubles there is more or less inflammation, aversion to light, and watery discharge with corresponding pain.

The first treatment, of course, is that of hygiene. Keep the eyes clean and free from matter by using a solution of boric acid. If much pain is present, have your druggist fill the following:—Cocaine sulph., grs. one; aqua dist., drs. three; use one or more drops in the eye as occasion demands. Cocaine is not a remedy or cure, but merely a narcotic. The usual treatment for iritis and ulceration of the cornea as well as opaqueness is the sulph. of atropia. Have the following filled:—Sulph. atropia, grs. three; aqua dist., drs. three, and use one or two drops three or four times a day in the eye. The medical properties of atropia are absorbent, dilutive and slightly narcotic. Used for inflammation it is absorbent, as it is in ulceration.

In opaqueness its action is dilutive, that is, it causes the cornea to open or dissolve, thereby breaking the film beneath the crystalline substance of the pupil of the eye, which is the cause of opaqueness or the shutting off of reflection on the retina.

The use of the yellow oxide of mercury conjointly with atropia will do much to detach the ulcerated growth after it is brought to a head. Take a goodsized pinch of the oxide and rub it up with twice its quantity of vaseline; insert in the eye and gently rub in a circle. In the use of all the mercurial salts care must be taken against dampness and salivation. Good eye lotions are made from sulph. of zinc, sugar of lead, tincture of hydrastis and other drugs. Inflammation and congestion of the brain (meningitis) is a frequent complication in distemper. The old school recommends leeching, cupping, etc. But as distemper is a fever, making a great drain on vitality, I do not advise the drawing of blood. A co-symptom in this complication is fits, from which most persons get the idea that distemper is fits and fits distemper. There is little that the layman can do in any form of meningitis. The ice bag is a handy adjunct, but the best results are obtained from the seton. To apply, first get a needle used by bakmakers and thread with a course piece of hemp, sterile both thoroughly. Next take the skin at the nape of the neck, in the thumb and forefinger, care being taken that you have not taken up any of the neck muscles, run the needle through both sides of the skin and draw the hemp through. Then tie a knot at both ends, draw cord to end of one knot, leave there a day, and then draw to the other end. The idea is to keep the wound open by drawing the cord through it, allowing of suppuration, which will carry off much diseased matter.

Chorea is most frequently an after effect of distemper, and might be classified as a head complication, but it is more generally due to a general affection of the nervous system, and the strain undergone in the ravages of distemper. Strychnine and nux vomica are the two principal agents used to combat this malady, while in the obstinate cases pills composed of the silver nitrates are found beneficial. As these drugs are too deadly to be handled by the novice, I shall not append the dose or receipts.

Pulmonary complications are always a part of canine distemper, ranging from a simple bronchial affection to the more serious pneumonia and pleuropneumonia. The beginning of these dread disorders is the common bronchial catarrh, and if the following is used at once, we may minimize the attack. Have your druggist put you up a syrup of comp. syrups of morphines, and muriates of ammonia, and give according to age and breed of dog. In all cases of threatened bronchial complications, give immediately doses of the muriates of ammonia. For a mature dog, over twenty pounds, the dose is a teaspoonful; smaller dogs and puppies in proportionate doses.

In pneumonia two to five grain doses of quinine and bromide are good. Keep up the strength with fine chopped raw beef, raw eggs and brandy. The bowels should be kept freely moved by the use of castor oil and laudanum. Counter irritants are useful both to the chest and the sides, using either mustard or liniments. When fever is not unduly high the following will be found good. Sweet spirits of nitre, one half ounce; powdered nitre, one dram; spirits mindererus, one-half ounce; antimony wine, one dram, and aqua four ounces. The dose for dogs over twenty pounds is one teaspoonful every three hours; smaller dogs and puppies in proportion. In pleuro-pneumonia, the treatment is more energetic and complicated, requiring such drugs as digitalis, etc., and often the oxygen gases.

Entritis (inflammation of the bowels) and its complication, peritonitis (perforation of the intestines) is the most fatal agent in distemper. The danger is recognized by all breeders. The treatment is to move the bowels as quickly as possible, and without irritating purges. Clysters made for the purpose should be used. After the action, give doses of equal parts of castor oil and sweet oil, either with or parts of castor oil and sweet oil, either the old school, but its action is too drastic. Opiates are used together with True James powders, and for the pains, the tincture of opium is handy in from two to five grain doses. Rest, warmth and an easily digested diet, consisting of broths, is about all that can be done.

Bladder troubles, more particularly diabetes, are frequently brought on by distemper. Podophyllin and colocynth is used as a remedy and for the incessant thirst largely diluted phosphoric acid is used, while the sulphates of iron are beneficial as a general tonic.

Congestion of the liver sometimes occurs, but if taken in time, will readily yield to treatment. Gastritis (inflammation of the stomach) together with its primary cause, indigestion, can be relieved by using the tincture of hydratis (Golden Seal) peptonized in food and feed on easily assimilated matter. The less drugs you use the better.

Paralysis is another result of distemper, and is more spasmodic than chronic. It is seldom general, but confined to one part of the body, usually the hind legs. The treatment is much the same as for chorea, and the same drugs can be used to advantage, except in the case of a bitch in whelp.

Eczema, an affection of the skin, wrongly termed manage, is another ailment due to distemper, as is anaemia (poverty of the blood). These two diseases are dependent on the other in inception; in other words, anaemia will bring on eczema.

Epilepsy (a form of fits) is another fruit of distemper. In fact, there are few diseases to which the dog is heir that cannot be traced to this scourge of the kennels. Those I have mentioned are a few of the principal complications.

THE TURN-SPIT.

The dog-wheel or turn-spit is a relic of the past, and it is presumably safe to say that no turn-spit dogs have been made use of within the memory of living man. Modern methods of cooking meat have enabled us to dispense with the services of the unlucky cur whose daily task it was to enter the tread-mill and keep the joints turning for two or three hours until they were well done. One can readily believe that meat cooked in this fashion was far better than that which is cooked by the ordinary methods of the present time, for it stands to reason that it must have been done more evenly and more gradually, and it was also far better basted; there being no oven doors to open, and the task of basting being one which only the laziest cook would have shirked.

An old woodcut shows very clearly the modus operandi. Close to the oak-beamed kitchen ceiling the dog-wheel was fixed, and a cord like a bicycle chain was attached to the axle and carried to the front of the kitchen fireplace, where it was fixed around a small wheel welded to the end of a long rod, to which last the joint was attached. Beneath the joint was placed a large pan to catch the melting fat, and a long-handled ladle, so that the cook could sit at a little distance from the fire and baste the joint in comfort. The turn-spit dog was never allowed to cease from treading the wheel until the meat was done, and after three hours of labour in a hot kitchen the poor brute must have been a moral and physical wreck.

The dog-wheel, it seems, dates from quite early times, for Doctor Caius, founder of Caius College, mentions it in his work on dogs, which was, by the way, the first book on the subject written by an Englishman. He says:—"There is comprehended under cors of the coarsest kind a certain dog in kitchen service excellent. For when any meat is to be roasted they go into a wheel, which they, turning about with the weight of their bodies, so diligently look to their business, that no drudge nor scullion can do the feat more cunningly, whom the popular sort hereupon term turn-spits." There are several stories which show well enough how thoroughly the dogs disliked their task. At an inn near Carmarthen, a dog which was employed as a turn-spit would go off and hide indefinitely if he noticed the cook so much as glance in the direction of the larder, and the patrons of the establishment were thus often deprived of the piece de resistance!

A political satire which saw the light in 1705 describes at some length how a demagogue became a "quiet placeman." The verses describe the more or less contented wheel-dogs in the kitchen, eating some bones, the fruits of the day's labour in the turn-spit. Enter a "demagogic cur," who rates them, after the fashion of a stump orator in Hyde Park, for their want of pluck, and so on. He, the demagogue assures them, would prefer to die slowly of starvation rather than perform such debased and menial tasks. Let anyone attempt to put him in the wheel, and what a time there would be for the unlucky adventurer! In the midst of this the cook enters, and:—

"Seeing him among the rest,
She called him very gently to her,
And stroked the smooth submissive cur:
Who soon was hushed, forgot to rail,
He licked his lips, and wagged his tail,
Was overjoyed he should prevail
Such favour to obtain.
Among the rest he went to play,
Was put into the wheel next day,
He turned and ate as well as they,
And never speeched again."

Buffon tells a story of two turn-spit dogs who were employed in the kitchens of the Duc de Lianfort in Paris. These dogs took it in turn to perform their culinary duties, but one day one of them, in a lazy fit, ran off and hid itself, and the other was compelled to take its place. Having finished the task this dog began wagging its tail and barking, until at last it induced some of the scullions to follow it. Leading them to an upstairs garret, it dislodged the lazy dog from beneath the bed and straightway fell upon and killed it!

An incident of the same kind is said to have occurred at the Jesuits' College of La Fleche. One day the dog whose turn it was to work the wheel was nowhere to be to found, and so the cook, in desperation, endeavoured to set the other turn-spit to work, but the latter refused to enter the wheel, and when force was attempted, bit the cook somewhat severely, and ran away. The man was surprised, as the dog was fond of him, and hastened to the college to have the bite cauterised. He returned to his kitchen just in time to see the dog which had bitten him drive the shirker into the wheel, snapping and snarling, and once the dreary task was begun, run off, apparently content!

Ancient anecdotes frequently contain some allusion to wheel-dogs, and a story is told of a Bristol sea-captain, who, owing to his political views, was not looked upon with favour by the inhabitants of that seaport, and for that reason was treated with great inhospitality. Just to give them a lesson he took his men ashore one night, and ordered them to capture every turn-spit dog they could lay their hands on. This was done, and the dogs were stowed away in the hold. For several days chaos reigned in the Bristol kitchens, but eventually the dogs were returned to their owners, an event duly celebrated by the feasting and lionising of the captain and his officers.

The Horse.

HORSESHOES.

There is no superstition more deeply ingrained in all classes of society than that which is attached to the horseshoe. As an emblem of good fortune it holds pride of place. Nelson did not disdain to nail a horseshoe to the mast of the Victory. In the early part of the nineteenth century the horseshoe was very highly prized, and there were few London mansions where it was not displayed, while humbler folks were at great pains to fasten it over their doors. Though its popularity may have waned somewhat, it is still ubiquitous. There are horseshoe clocks and horseshoe ornaments of every kind. Cottage mantelpieces are often decorated with a miscellaneous collection of horseshoes, discovered on the wayside, while every farmer makes a display of at least one such emblem of good luck.

Horses were not shod either by the Greeks or Romans. The ancients were content with wrapping fibre cloth round the feet of their horses in cold weather, or when it was necessary to pass through miry districts. Instead of troubling about horseshoes they devoted their attention to hardening the hoofs of their mounts. Xenophon when conducting the retreat of the Ten Thousand had to obtain horses as best he could, and, in order that they might be able to endure the ardous marches, he laid down rules for his men to follow. Nero, who ever strode to outdistance his contemporaries, caused his horses to be shod with silver, while his wife's were resplendent with gold, but in no case were nails driven into the hoofs. The practice of shoeing horses by driving nails into the hoofs was introduced into England by William the Conqueror, but such a practice did not make any headway for centuries.

It is not difficult to understand why lovers of horses came to adopt the horseshoe as a talisman against misfortune. Horses were considered to be especially liable to the machinations of witches. This fact stands out in all the records of the Lancashire witches and other evil hags. If precautions were not taken these mischievous witches would ride the horses at dead of night over the hills, and when the owner came to the stables in the morning he would find his animals in a lather and utterly exhausted. A horseshoe fastened over the stable door was believed to ward off such evil. The old witch in Gay's fable declares.

"Straws laid across my path retard;
The horseshoe's nail'd, each threshold's guard."

Another method of warding off witchcraft was to tie a hag stone, with a hole through it, to the key of the stables. A further danger awaited horses when they were put out to grass. The moonwort was believed to possess the power of drawing the shoes from a horse's feet.

Many a wordy battle has been waged as to whether horses should wear shoes or not. Certain it is that the hoof of a horse has been very cunningly devised by Nature. It is well adapted for all manner of ground, as is essential in view of the fact that the original home of the horse is Central Asia. The hoof is endowed with self-repairing qualities. Hard and stony ground may wear it down, but the loss is repaired by Nature; so much so that when horses in a wild state keep to a marshy area their hoofs grow to such an extent as to cause lameness. Instinct prompts wild horses to seek out a rough tract of country, and this trait may be observed in Exmoor ponies. The Indians, who had no superiors as horsemen, never thought of shoeing their mounts in any way, and yet they were capable of performing remarkable journeys over most difficult country. The Sandowa Derby was won by a horse running in a natural state. The race was run twice owing to the fact that three horses made a dead-heat on the first occasion. Prior to the second attempt the owner of Marden gave orders for the light plates to be removed from the hoofs of his nominee, with the result that Marden gained a comfortable victory by three lengths. Even at the present day in Japan the modern horseshoe finds a strong competitor in the old-fashioned sandals made of straw which are fastened to the horse's hoofs after the manner of equine "cricket shoes."

But expert opinion in this country has declared in favour of the up-to-date horseshoe, of which there are as many patterns as human footwear can boast. The farrier's shop is still an important meeting-place, even though the advent of motors has aimed a deadly blow at this picturesque occupation. Humble lovers of horseflesh drop in to take a look at the four-legged clients, and recall the good old days. The farrier's shop has a great fascination both for young and old. There was a time when the farrier had every reason to be a proud and independent member of the community. If a really skilful man his merits were proclaimed far and wide, with the result that he was sought out by owners of valuable horseflesh. In Scotland he was subjected to special legislation. If a farrier pricked a horse during the shoeing process he was compelled to nurse the animal until it had recovered, meanwhile providing a substitute. If the horse died, or had to be destroyed as the result of the injury, the farrier was compelled to make the loss good. His was not an occupation to be undertaken lightly or without careful training. And now the very existence of the farrier is in peril. He is making a brave fight and is accommodating himself to changed conditions by offering motor spirit for sale, and expressing a willingness to undertake minor repairs now that there are few horses to shoe. The emblems of good luck have been powerless to protect him against a progressive and mechanical age.—Globe.

"Well, mum, to tell the truth, it was in our back yard. When I was quite a kid I used to sit out there and watch the chimneys."

The Naturalist.

LEAVES FROM A NATURALIST'S NOTEBOOK.

In the Daily Telegraph of 30th December 1909, I read Dr. Karl Kumm's account of his adventurous journey from Lake Chad to the British station of Wari, in the Bahr-el-Ghazal, in which he claimed to have discovered a new buffalo and a new giraffe in the country to the east of the Upper Shari Valley. The district in question lies in the upper part of the French Congo, at a point some distance to the northward of a line drawn between the town of Adamawa, in the German Cameruns; and as its zoology is almost unknown, I was in hopes that I should have had two interesting new types to describe. When, however, the specimens reached the Natural History Museum, I confess to feeling some disappointment on account of their exceedingly imperfect condition. They are only two in number; and the so-called new giraffe is represented merely by a portion of the forehead of a skull showing the three horns. These horns, it is true, are taller than in any other specimen available for comparison, but I should be extremely loth to say that the specimen indicates a new race, much less a new species.

Matters are a little better in the case of the buffalo, which is represented by a frontlet and horns, for these appear to indicate the male of a race hitherto known by the female, of which a skull and horns from Togoland, in German West Africa, have been described by Dr. Matschie, under the name of Bubalus thiersi typi, although, of course, this is merely a race of the ordinary Bos caffer. Togoland is, however, a long way from the Shari; and it is possible that if we had a bull from the former and a cow from the latter, sufficient difference might be found to justify the separation of the Togo from the Shari buffalo. Whether the two be racially separable or not, it is something to have become acquainted with the form of the horns of the male of what is certainly a very remarkable type of buffalo. But the specimen was certainly insufficient to justify Dr. Kumm's confident claim to the discovery of a new species; and travellers may perhaps take warning from this instance against hastily announcing so-called discoveries before the specimens have been submitted to specialists.

If Dr. Kumm has failed to make an addition to the list of African big game, Mr. N. Hollister, of the museum at Washington, has the credit of bringing to notice a new kind of oribi antelope on evidence which most sportsmen would regard as insufficient. For this oribi is described from the skull alone, which indicates a large species characterised by the unusually small size of its cheek-teeth, and hence appropriately named Oribia microdon. As only a single specimen was available to the describer, it might be urged that the small size of the teeth was an individual peculiarity; but this is negatived by a skull brought home by an English sportsman which exhibits precisely the same feature. This small-toothed oribi, which comes from the Guasengishu plateau of British East Africa, seems therefore to be a good species; and it remains for some enterprising sportsman to procure an entire specimen.

To pass from Africa to Asia, and from ruminants to carnivores, I am much interested in the reference by Dr. Satunin of Tiflis of the Turkistan representative of the little squirrel-like rodents known as susliks to the same genus as the so-called prairie-dogs, or prairie-marmots, of North America. Hitherto all the Old World susliks have been included in the genus Spermophilus, while the prairie-dogs constitute the genus Cynomys. If Dr. Satunin is justified in referring the Turkistan suslik to the latter genus, we shall have one more instance of the intimate relationship of the fauna of Northern and Central Asia to that of North America, as is exemplified by the existence in each area of big-horn sheep, wapiti deer, alligators, and spoon-beaked sturgeons, and their complete absence from the rest of the world. The skull of the Turkistan suslik, or prairie-marmot, as it may now be called, agrees closely with that of the American species, although there is a marked difference in the size of the cheek-teeth of the two animals.

Turning to birds, I have been much interested in an account by Mr. J. Drummond, published in the Emu for April 1910, of the wonderful migration believed to be annually performed by the New Zealand godwit (Limosa Novæ-Zealandiæ), a species which is also common to Australia and Tasmania. At the migration season, which occurs in March and April these birds in New Zealand collect in immense flocks, and, soon after start on a journey believed to end in Eastern Siberia, where they are stated to breed. They commence to return to the Antipodes in small parties during the early part of September, and by December may be seen in thousands. Formerly these godwits were protected by the Maori, but the protective laws were allowed to lapse about fifty years ago, and the numbers of the birds have in consequence greatly decreased.

These godwits appear to be equalled—and indeed surpassed—in the length of their migration only by the Arctic tern, which nests in the northern polar regions and then journeys to the border of the Antarctic ice to spend the rest of the year.

Epicures who esteem the famous green oysters of Marennes and Ostend, on account of their plumpness and delicate flavour, will be delighted to learn that a method has been discovered by which the green tint, with the accompanying flavour, can be produced in other members of the species.

It should be mentioned that in addition to these Belgian bivalves, whose green tint is due to what may be termed natural and physiological influences, there are others, like those of Falmouth and Truro, which present a green tinge owing to the presence in the water of an unduly large proportion of salts of copper, this communicating not only the green tint to every part of their tissues, but likewise a metallic flavour. A third, or pathological, type of greenness, due to a diseased condition of the liver, is exhibited, so far as known, only by oysters from certain parts of the Lancashire coast. Finally there is a fraudulent practice of producing unwholesome green oysters by immersing ordinary samples in water containing a large proportion of blue vitriol (copper sulphate).

As regards the cause of the greenness in naturally green oysters, two French naturalists, MM Calvet and Paul, attribute it in part to the sea-bottom being highly impregnated with iron (which is quite harmless), and in part to the presence in the sea-water of certain microscopic organisms known, from their colour, as blue diatoms (Navicula ostrearia). In the case of the highly esteemed Ostend and Marennes bivalves these blue diatoms are the main, if not the sole, cause of the green tinge, this having been demonstrated at the oyster-culture station at Salarus-les-Baine, where samples precisely similar to those from Ostend are now regularly bred by cultivating the diatoms

DOCTOR BOSS STRASSBURG introduced Gonosan in the treatment of the most painful of diseases to which mankind is liable. It is better and safer and more effective than other preparations of Copaiba- Cubeb, or plain Santal wood oil. The same is the verdict of other Specialists who have patiently tried it. It is the latest Scientific Remedy and has never known to fail. At all chemists and dealers.

in the beds. To develop the blue diatoms, a stagnant condition of the water and abundant sunlight are essential; and both these factors exist at Balaruc-les-Bains.

In the future, then, residents in temperate regions where similar conditions obtain may look forward to the luxury of green oysters at a reasonable price. Unfortunately for Anglo-Indians, tropical seas are not conducive to the production of oysters of the best types.

ANIMALS IN SICKNESS.

It is not easy to watch the larger animals when these are stricken by disease; or when an animal in a state of nature finds itself unable to carry on its usual life, it retires into the depths of the forest, or to some hiding place and dies unattended and alone. Sympathy from those of its own kind it cannot expect, for life is too much of a struggle to admit of much kindness being shown by one creature to another, though instances have been known where some kind feeling has been displayed as in the case of a wounded elephant, whose companion aided its escape; but in most of such cases the animals have been brought into contact with man, for in a natural state it is rare.

At the present time, when most civilised nations are producing ever greater numbers of degenerates, that is, those unfit either in body or mind, or both, to benefit the race it may be that we may learn something from the lower creatures as to how they keep up their high standard of health; for it is a remarkable thing that wild animals conform to every known rule of health and have practised such rules from times unknown.

Though wild animals know instinctively that "prevention is better than cure," there are several remedies known to some of them in case of sickness, provided this is not infectious. When an epidemic breaks out among them they seem powerless to avert ruin, and whole districts are decimated by such a disease as the terrible rinderpest, which a few years ago deprived large districts of Africa of almost all wild game. This disease is almost exactly similar to anthrax, and acts in the same way; possibly, therefore, it was introduced by man, and may have begun its ravages by being imported into Africa with some domestic breed of animal. Indeed, it is not unlikely that most of the epidemics among wild animals may have come to them from man in some form or another.

Animals will do anything to keep themselves in perfect condition, and they have learned in the course of ages that cleanliness is one of the conditions of health. It is wonderful what care all creatures will take to keep themselves and their dwellings clean, and a bird's nest even when the parents are most busy feeding their ravenous young ones is usually beautifully clean. The care they will take of their skins and coats, or in the case of birds of their plumage, is wonderful.

Many ages before mud-baths came into fashion among humans, the curative value of mud was known to many animals, and animals in tropical countries frequently take mud-baths; indeed, wounded elephants and other large quadrupeds will roll themselves in the mud of a river-bank and will fill up the wound with mud if they possibly can, while wounded birds will sometimes also fill up a wound to prevent foreign matter getting into the wound, which they seem to know from experience will do mischief.

Luckily perhaps for themselves, the vast number of drugs and medicines wherewith poor humanity is dosed are unknown; but there are several plants which animals use as medicine, and it has even been said that we have learned the value of some such by watching the use made of them by animals and birds. Thus it has been told that the healing value of the springs of Bath became known by watching a sick pig which drank the water; and though we no longer believe that snakes rub their eyes with fennel to improve their eyesight, yet certain plants are certainly eaten by animals to produce certain results. Thus in tropical countries capsicums are eaten by various birds when these feel they need a stimulant; while in our colder climates the wild arum and other plants with biting flavours are eaten for the same reason. Mammals, too, will eat grass, the sharp blades of the sword-grass being in demand among dogs and cats when they require an emetic; while grass-eaters will travel long distances to procure salt: indeed, their extreme desire for salt has been the means of bringing many of them to destruction, for hunters take up their position near the "salt-licks" in the same way as they do near the drinking places in hot countries.

Digestion is a thing carefully looked after by wild creatures; they seem to know how important it is to their life that this should be kept in perfect order. Thus dogs and cats will eat ashes now and then, and birds and even snakes will swallow stones to aid digestive powers. When hens are laying, of course, they require lime to form the shells, and the amount of grit and fragments of stone they then eat is incredible; if they have been confined in a small place for some time and suddenly turned loose upon a heap of gravel or where they can obtain small stones and grit, they will be seen devouring them as if the heap had been formed of corn.

When the last stage comes, as it must come to all things wild or tame, the end is usually merciful in its speed. To die a violent death is the fate of most wild animals, and surely this is preferable to the wasting plague or slow decay which awaits so many of us; added to which they have not the anticipation of evil we possess, and which is the worst part of suffering. Now and then one of them may linger on into old age, but as a rule, when a wild thing can no longer maintain its high standard of activity, it perishes at once. When the last hour comes it will separate itself from its fellows and get into the most private place it can find, so that it is seldom anyone has watched a wild animal die. It seems that the first requirement of a stricken animal is to be at peace from friends and foes alike.—Globe.

DELHI AND TEHERAN.

THE February number of the Fortnightly Review contains an article by Sir J. D. Rees on the Coronation Concessions in India and a second, by Mr. Robert Machray, on the Fate of Persia, a short summary of which will probably interest many of our readers who have not the opportunity of seeing the originals.

After mentioning that if a Unionist Government had made use of the Royal prerogative in the manner which our present Government has done they would never have heard the end of it from the Opposition, Sir J. D. Rees goes on to say that Delhi is not a name with which to conjure among the Hindus, on account of one of their mythical cities having been traditionally placed in its neighbourhood, or with Mahomedans, because it was one of the chief cities of the Mogul dynasties, for Asiatics have no sentimental perception.

Delhi, as the Pioneer has well observed, is essentially a city of the past; and Calcutta must remain in fact, what Delhi can only be in name, the capital of modern India. The British entered India by the sea, and it is by their naval supremacy alone that they hold and must continue to hold India. That the climate of Calcutta is not intrinsically bad, is clearly demonstrated by the health of the European mercantile community, as well as by that of the High Court judges, many of whom do not come out to the country till well on in life.

The separation of the Government from the headquarters of commerce—seeing that British rule was founded on commerce—is indeed a strange and illogical proceeding; and the fact must not be overlooked that the removal from Calcutta to Delhi will still further tend to establish Simla as the headquarters of the Government.

"The expense entailed in housing the Government of Delhi will be enormous, as will be the loss of disestablishing the extensive and expensive buildings already erected on the Hughli, and those, hurried on for obvious reasons, at now-abandoned Dacca.

For, it must not be forgotten that the Government of Bengal are alesdy equipped with everything they want without encroaching on the houses and offices occupied by the Viceroy and Government of India."

Neither, it may be added, will the recent concession that the Imperial Government is to spend a month in each year in Calcutta tend to mend matters in this respect. On the contrary, it will but increase the financial burden; and it seems little less than absurd that Government House, Calcutta, should be maintained for this purpose at what must continue to be an enormous outlay.

After a long review of the opinions that have been expressed on the subject by the English and Native press, the author winds up as follows:—

"It is, however, already clear that the Coronation concessions, instead of 'satisfying the historic sense of millions, aiding the general work of Government, and removing a deeply-felt grievance of many Bengalis,' have been received in a wholly different spirit.

"In short, so far as can be judged so soon after the event, they have been received by the Anti-English party in Bengal with satisfaction, tempered by regret at the loss of Calcutta as capital, by the powerful and independent European commercial community of Calcutta, and by the Mahomedans of Eastern Bengal with natural disapproval, and by Hindus and Mahomedans in general with that indifference which might have been expected. Orientals have little or no sentiment. They are practical to the core, and leave this luxury to European races. But that such great concessions to a moribund agitation, and such far-reaching administrative changes should have been made over the heads of all concerned, and without the previously ascertained assent of Parliament, the Provincial Governments and public opinion is generally regarded as an unwarrantable exercise of authority and another unjustifiable use of the royal prerogative."

In the article on Persia, of which our notice must perforce be very brief, the author reviews the greatly improved relations which have taken place of late years between the British and Russian Governments; the improvement in this respect being attributed to a great extent to the entente with France, Russia's old ally.

This has undoubtedly tended to mitigate, or abrogate, the dissatisfaction which would otherwise have inevitably arisen in England when the entrance of Russian troops into Northern Persia was announced. In regard to this entrance, both the British and the Russian Government have categorically denied that it means partition, or indeed anything more than a temporary occupation of the country, which it is hoped will eventually again occupy, like Afghanistan, the position of a "buffer" state.

But the author is not altogether satisfied of the value of categorical denials on the part of Governments, Russian or otherwise. And we may venture to point out that in our own opinion the blessed word "categorical" seems somewhat akin to "non-intervention," which Talleyrand defined to be a political and diplomatic expression meaning much the same as intervention.

From the British point of view it is somewhat unfortunate that Northern Persia, which includes the capital, Teheran, and the next most important city, Tabriz, should constitute the Russian sphere of influence, while Southern Persia, forming the British sphere, contains only one city of note. Geographical consideration, and more especially the contiguity of Southern Persia to Baluchistan and Afghanistan, rendered, however, such an arrangement absolutely imperative and unavoidable, and we must consequently make the best of it.

How the present deplorable state of affairs was brought about, and the able manner in which Mr. Shuster was endeavouring to improve the financial state of the country by organising a regular and systematic collection of the taxes and by other means, constitute the main substance of the article; but to follow the author through his review would far exceed our limits of space.

We must therefore conclude by quoting Mr. Machray's final paragraph, which, it is satisfactory to note, contains a gleam of hope for the future of the distracted country:—

"What, then, is to be the fate of Persia? Russia has given assurances that the occupation of Persian soil by its troops is provisional and temporary, but the British gave similar assurances with regard to Egypt. British troops, although in no great numbers it is true, hold Shiraz and thus the South to protect the caravan-routes from the robber tribe, and they, too, are only temporarily and provisionally there. In both cases the presence of these soldiers has been caused by the weakness, and, it may be added, the folly of the central Persian Government. The experiment of a constitutional régime has produced chaos so far, and there is no good reason for supposing that for some time to come it will produce anything else, the same unfortunate influences still being operative. Some other form of Government seems to be required, but what? At the moment there is in effect a condominium of Russia and Great Britain, and it is just possible that it may subsist until Persia is nursed into strength. At all events, that is what Great Britain would desire to see accomplished."

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The latest betting wired out by Reuter concerning the Lincoln (26th March) and the National (29th March) disclose Warfare as favourite for the former race at 13 to 2 and Rathnally favourite for the big steeplechase at the absurdly cramped odds of 5 to 1, it being fair betting to say that it is as regards the latter race, fair betting 2 to 1 against any horse's getting the course without a fall. If we take last year's race as any criterion it is considerable odds on a fall!! However first of all of the Lincoln: other horses mentioned are Mr. Jack Joel's Spanish Prince and Mr. Solly Joel's Long Set (winner of the last Doncaster Handicap, 1 mile and of the Cambridgeshire, 1 mile 1 furlong) and both of whom are on the same mark, 100 to 9, and Mr. de Szemere's Sobieski, Mr. H. Rhodes' Great Surprise, Mr. George Faber's Uncle Pat 100 to 6. Mercutio, according to the mail papers, has not yet been seriously backed, and Mr. Charlie Hibbert is, they say, waiting to see how things are going to shape with his horse; but that he is reported upon very favourably. Others that have been at times mentioned are Cinderello, the Lincoln winner of 1910, Hornet's Beauty, the top weight, and Dalnacrag, who has 7st. 12lb. The reason for Warfare's strong favouritism is that Mr. H. P. Nickalls has scratched Eton Boy, who had 7st. 12lb. and backed Warfare, who is in the handicap at 6st. 11lb. It is said that Warfare is not exactly a "boy's horse" and that the difficulty will be to find a competent jockey to ride him at this light impost. Warfare won his last race on the flat at Warwick last November (Budbrooke Plate 1 mile beating Blood Orange and Luxembourg), and has since then been out hurdle-racing. He was not a success on the flat early in his three-year-old career last season and this was probably the reason Mr. Nickalls decided to let the horse take his chance at the "illegitimate." It is obvious, however, that this well-bred descendant of Ladas has recently shown them something better or he would not now be boomed for the Lincoln as he is being. Warfare is by Valiant out of Tar Baby. Valiant is by Ladas out of Surprise Me Not out of Enterprise out of Touch Me Not by Muncaster out of Thistle by Scottish Chief who was out of Miss Ann by The Little Known out of Bay Missie by Bay Middleton out of Camilla. Scottish Chief was the sire of that good mare Mowerina, whose produce won over £83,000 in stakes. Mowerina must not be confounded with the other mare of that name, the dam of West Australian, who was by Touchstone out of Emma. Mr. Jack Joel makes no secret of the fact that he greatly fancies the speedy Spanish Prince and that he does not consider that 8-st. 12lb. is likely to stop him. Frank Wootton presumably rides the "Prince," as he steered him in most of his races last season and won on him twice, once at 9st. 6lb., when he won the King George Stakes at Goodwood, 6 furlongs in the good time of 1min. 12⅘sec. Wootton found some considerable difficulty in riding 8st. 12lb. when he was in Calcutta, but he did not do a great deal of work and he was not overfond of wasting whilst he was with us. When he gets back into regular practice at home, however, he will probably manage to go to scale at something nearer the weights he used to ride in the earlier part of last season. He rode Spanish Prince at 8st. in the 7-furlong Victoria Cup at Hurst Park in April. One of the best races Spanish Prince ran last year was when with 8st. 8lb. he finished third in the Royal Hunt Cup (7 furlongs 166 yards) at Ascot behind Moscato 7st. 2lb. and Long Set 6st. 12lb. The respective weights of this trio in the Lincolnshire are Spanish Prince 8st. 12lb., Long Set 8st. 2lb. and Moscato 7st. 7lb., and there would seem to be therefore some ground for Mr. Jack Joel's confidence. The market will probably undergo a good many changes between this and the 26th instant and we may not find the run on Warfare quite so well sustained when some of the others, as yet only nibbled at, are backed in earnest. Mercutio is not likely to run loose and they say that Sir Thomas Dewar fancies Braxted and is only biding his time to see how things shape.

In the Grand National betting Rathnally, who is owned by Mr. Oliver Jones, had displaced Jerry M. when the mail left London and was then quoted at 6 to 1. Since then he has shortened up a point and Jerry M., who was previously at sevens, is now quoted at eights. Rathnally is held by some people to be handicapped as though he had actually won last year's National as he has got 11lb. more on his back than he then had, whereas Jerry M. is down a pound, his weight last year was 12st. 8lb. and after him came his stable companion Cackler 12st. 7lb., Lutteur III 12-st. 3lb. and lower down Jenkinstown 11st. 7lb. and Rathnally 11st. This year Jerry M. has 12st. 7lb., Rathnally 11st. 11lb., King of the Scarlets 11st. 9lb. (same stable as Jerry M.) Rory O Moore 11st. 7lb. and Jenkinstown 11st. 7lb. When Jenkinstown and Jerry M. met in the race of 1910 the former had 10st. 5lb. and the latter 12-st. 7lb. and Jenkinstown won by three lengths. Rathnally would in all human probability have won last year, as when Chadwick gave his horse a lead over the fence after Becher's, Rathnally was going very well and he had undoubtedly the pace of such horses as Glenside, Shady Girl and Foolhardy, even if no disaster had overtaken all bar Glenside. When Rathnally collided with Caubeen he had practically nothing to beat, as Caubeen, who was about the best of them, was tiring badly. As they went "into the country" the second time round, the only ones left standing up were Caubeen, Precentor II, Rathnally, Glenside, Shady Girl, Mount Prospect's Fortune and Foolhardy; Hercules II. having been pulled up after the water. At the second fence in the country Mount Prospect's Fortune fell and Precentor II. was stopped beaten; this only left Shady Girl and Glenside as possible dangers to Caubeen and Rathnally. What happened at the fence after Becher's it is hardly necessary to recount. Chadwick had plenty of room to avoid Caubeen, who was running down his fences to his right but did not do so; the result being that at this obstacle there was a collision and the impact sent Chadwick flying over his horse's head to land on his feet on the other side of the fence. Shady Girl fell at Valentine's and Rathnally, who was remounted, had then only Glenside in front of him; but as a twenty or thirty length lead takes a bit of reducing he was unable to catch even so badly beaten a horse as the ultimate winner. Even with everything in his favour and granting that Rathnally is undoubtedly one of the best chasers in England to-day, a price such as that now quoted about him is absurd and we should think it very foolhardy to back even the best of them at such odds over this course.

Whether the horrible exhibition of last year is going to disabuse the professionals of the virtue of the "monkey seat" when trying to ride over Aintree remains to be seen. Mr. J. M. Richardson, who in his time has ridden the winners of every important steeplechase in the United Kingdom, including two Grand Nationals, had a good deal to say about this style of "horsemanship" (save the mark!) and in a very interesting article in the Daily Telegraph last year, did his best to point out the folly of the short stirrup; but it is to be feared that he and other authorities did but waste their words upon the impalpable air and that the virus of things American is too deeply imbued for any antidote to be of any avail. The modern jockey (?) is convinced that a horse will travel faster and farther if he is ridden on the monkey-on-the-stick principle and he gambles upon his (the jockey's) being able to hang on by the reins and his stirrups over big obstacles. Because Parfrement is stated to have won riding short—though this fact has been denied as they say that Parfrement like the practical horseman that he is, after seeing the course decided that it was not negotiable riding short and let his stirrups down—every man Jack of them is now seeking to emulate the Frenchman's example. The gaudy success they made of it last year and the ludicrous farce into which this race was turned may have caused the profe-sional cracks to change their minds about the virtue of the forward seat. However, nous verrons!

The Calcutta Paperchase Cup 1912 was run on Friday last over a good course in the Salt Lake Country of about 4½ miles in length with fourteen fences, most of them mud walls about 4 feet high and some of them a bit bigger, and as usual it provided a very good and exciting contest not by any means devoid of incident. The Cup was won by Mr. T. H. Wheeler, the well-known G.R. and amateur trainer and owner, on his horse Sauce by Holbrook out of Clothilde and the result was somewhat of a surprise, as Sauce is by no means in the first bloom of youth and is rising eleven, not an extreme age as cross-country horses go, but one at which the majority of those in India have finished racing. Sauce was originally owned by Mr. W. Bell-Irving, who bought him from Dr. Spooner Hart about 1905 and he has run at Tollygunge Steeplechases, the Tollygunge Club and also in hunters' races on the flat in Calcutta. He was bought by his present owner for Rs. 300 at the beginning of the present paperchasing season, as he was not then considered to be of much more use and was not of the soundest. Mr. Wheeler, however, has a wonderful faculty for patching them up and getting them fit and Sauce will always stand out as one of his greatest triumphs. He has run in most of the weekly chases, but has not been unduly hustled along and has picked up condition marvellously ever since he has been in his present owner's hands. There was unfortunately a mishap at the second last fence at which 10 to 6 was leading, closely followed by Brown Mouse, Sauce and Farthing Bun, and Mr. Riviere, who rode 10 to 6, was under the impression that this obstacle had not to be jumped owing to some of the paper having got shifted somewhat to the left of the obstacle, though as the fence was obviously in fighting trim and the line lay direct for home, it is difficult to understand such a mistake. He, however, pulled off to the left and in doing so took Brown Mouse with him, thus destroying his own and Mr. Deakin's chance. Sauce then was left in command, and having no difficulty in holding Farthing Bun at bay sailed home over the remaining obstacle with about three or four lengths to spare, winning comfortably.

Whether Sauce would have won but for the unfortunate scrimmage which put 10 to 6 and unfortunate scrimmage which put 10 to 6 and Brown Mouse out of the hunt we shall never know, but personally we think he probably would have done so and that at the end of a long and tiring journey his superior stride would have told against his smaller rivals. Both 10 to 6 and Brown Mouse were going well and the later had the advantage in the matter of jockeys and it is therefore probable that this race would have been fought out to a desperately close finish between the winner and Mr. Deakin's mare Brown Mouse. There was only one accident and that to a prominent candidate, Mr. Evers' Rifleman, who stood a very great chance and would have in his owner's opinion gone very close to winning; but when leading after jumping the first five fences in front of his field and going well Mr. Evers was knocked off by a projecting bough of a tree in the close country which was traversed just before turning to come back over the open Salt Lake Country. Mr. Evers was somewhat badly damaged about the face but was extremely lucky to escape more serious injuries, as the accident happened in a narrow lane and the rest of the field were all close behind him. He was the recipient of much sympathy. After this accident Desmond, Farthing Bun, Jaguar, 10 to 6, Brown Mouse and Sauce formed the leading division with Dervish next, the rest more or less strung out. Desmond continued to lead till within about a mile of home when 10 to 6 Brown Mouse and Sauce passed him. It was shortly after this that the mishap already referred to happened. After pulling up Mr. Ballantyne objected to the winner on the ground that he had not jumped the second last obstacle, but at once withdrew his objection when it was pointed out to him that he must have mistaken either 10 to 6 or Brown Mouse for Sauce and the result was therefore left undisturbed. This is not the first occasion upon which Mr. Wheeler has won the Calcutta Paperchase Cup, as he scored a win in 1909 on the English mare Maisonette. Mr. Ballantyne wins the Heavy Weight Cup and we take this opportunity of congratulating both winners upon their success. The following is the record of the result:—

1. Mr. Wheeler on Sauce, 11st.
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Farthing Bun, 13st. 3lb. (H.W.)
4. Mr. Murray on Desmond, 11st.
5. Mr. Taylor on Dervish, 14st. 3lb. (H.W.)
6. Mr. Montgomery on George, 12st.
7. Mr. Felsenthal on Rocky Valley, 13st. 2lb. (H.W.)

0. Mr. Knox on List, 11st.
0. Mr. Deakin on Brown Mouse, 11st. (ran out).
0. Mr. Riviere on 10 to 6, 11st. (ran out).
0. Mr. Evers on Rifleman, 11st. (fell).

The usual Paperchase Dinner was held at the Saturday Club last Friday evening, Mr. H. B. Taylor being in the chair and making the customary speech reviewing the season's happenings and proposing the healths of the various winners of Cups, namely, the Ladies' Cup (Mrs. R. H. A. Gresson), the Average Cup (Mr. V. W. M. Murray), the Heavy Weight Cup (Mr. R. J. Ballantyne), the Pony Cup and Pony Average Cup (Mr. G. B. Deakin) and the Paperchase Cup (Mr. T. H. Wheeler).

The names of the donors of the cups for next season were also announced at the dinner and were as follows:—

The Horse Average Cup (Mr. E. A. Goward), the Ladies' Cup (by a lady), the Heavy Weight Cup (Mr. R. H. A. Gresson), the Pony Cup (Mr. Tanner), the Pony Average Cup (Mr. Barrow), a Ladies' Average Cup (Mr. Glucksmann).

The Calcutta Light Horse Paperchase Cup was run yesterday (Wednesday) morning over a 3½-mile course in the Salt Lake Country and was won by Trooper Savres on Dick from a field of ten others, Trooper Walker being second on Pan Out and Corporal Cropper third on Vanity. This cup has now reached its twenty-fourth anniversary, having been first won in 1888 by Trooper E. A. Goward on Job Trotter, Sergeant C. C. McLeod on Jack winning the Heavy Weight trophy in that year and it has since then been a very popular annual fixture. Last year a Challenge Cup was presented to the corps by the reservists to be held for one year by the winner of the C. O's. Cup. Colonel Apostolides again presented the Cup which is won outright and also offered a Heavy Weight Cup if six Heavy Weights started, but this number was unfortunately not forthcoming. The course was a nice open one and there were fourteen fences in all, an average of about four to the mile. The whole field completed

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Another good attendance to follow a long card of eight events in which honours were perhaps slightly in punters' favour. Robinson, Kuhn, Luckman, Boulton and Poote arrived to join the jockeys' list, Brown continuing his many successes with three more wins.

A start was made with a new pony race which was for maidens. Fourteen went out in the first division and another rush was made on Khalid Beg, who was a shade of odds on from Moonspot and Anwal. Longboat and Authority first showed the way, then Moonspot went out from Anwal with Khalid Beg next. The latter moved up at the three with Longboat still well up and Different handy, but none of them could extend the leader.

Of the sixteen in the second form pointed to Gowahajmer being a fairly good thing, but there was a strong run also on Favil Beg, whose first outing this was. Texib made the early running, but Gowahajmer was always handy and came away quite comfortably to beat Sadee Beg along the rails and Favil Beg on the outside.

Only six went out for the mile horse race and Bright Metal was at once made a warm favourite from Mafoota with Devereux also finding support. The two ponies, Mandeville and Encourage made the pace a warm one from The Diver up to the final turn, where Encourage was in the lead. Here, however, Bright Metal got through luckily along the rails, and, with Devereux coming on the outside, was under the whip. This he answered well, and though Devereux was dangerous all the way the favourite got home by a quarter of a length, Encourage stopping and being passed by Mafoota.

Next the mile for Arab ponies, Abdul Malik with his 10-4 being made favourite in a field of eight from Young Majab, Saree and Sir Edward in a good betting race, with his light weight Regiment was taken out in front from Singer and Abdul Malik, but at the half mile Singer passed the chestnut. As they came round the home turn Abdul Malik came up like a winner, but the weight told, and though Fado put in a strong late run Singer was able to stay on. All the fancied ones thus ran unplaced.

Bigger ones went over an extra furlong, Parliament opening and remaining favourite, though but little shorter than Terror with the remaining five not seriously fancied. Presumably in the latter's interests, Young Salanic went out to make the pace with Terror and Parliament together from Well Done. At the half mile Merrily momentarily joined Terror who at the three ran up inside the leader and went clear. Well Done made an effort, but was passed again by Young Salanic and also by Mutrood, leaving Terror a comfortable winner.

This led to the annual mile and five-furlong race for Hunters, a field of eight going out with the hero of two of these events. Tragedian, favourite from new-comers in Silverbolt, Best Luck and Jorrocks; Best Luck at the last moment going down to practically no price. Avocet, Jorrocks and Best Luck were quickest away, and at the first turn Best Luck led Jorrocks and Silverbelt with Avocet next. At the mile Silverbolt was second three lengths behind the leader. Best Luck was given a breather at the six, but then went ahead again and, going much the stronger, held Silverbelt safe all the way. Jorrocks was ten lengths behind these and after another fifteen came Better Luck, Tragedian going out on to the tan in a strung out tail. Mr. Rommel rode his own horse to success in a nicely ridden race waiting in front, and well deserves his win. A very keen sportsman, he has won several cross-country races, and this now comes to cap his win last year in the mile with Better Luck.

A good class was seen out in the horse sprint, eight starting with The Loaf and Watch Tower sharing favouritism from Socialist, Aqueduct and Forfeit. This proved to be quite an easy win for the first named, who was first away, had Wellfield settled and was then able to hold Watch Tower very safe. Wellfield kept his place from Socialist, who came through rather late on the rails.

Finally a six-furlong race for Arab horses, a very rare chance they get in a sprint. No less than seventeen started, a hot even money favourite being established in Rozelmalook from Burgomaster with Hyder Beg and Upright at eights. For a time Young Japan was in front, then Hyder Beg passed him, as did Tressady and Gunlyum, Rozelmalook came late close up to Tressady, but Hyder Beg still had plenty in hand to enable him to stay on.

Our Ootacamund correspondent writes :—Doubtless many of your readers will be interested in the following forecasted programme of the Ooty season's engagements, and I hope it may attract some to come here and share in the varied sport it will afford. The programme is much the same as usual, but the prospects of a larger number of visitors to the station this year gives promise of better and more keenly contested games, etc. The Hunt Master is Captain Merrick, of the 10th Hussars, who succeeds Captain Palmer, and if the clouds which collect and hover over the downs every day now bring rain an early opening of the hunting season may be expected. The prospects of polo and of cricket are both encouraging.

A TELEGRAM from Bangalore announces the serious illness of Mr. R. Kindersley, the late Official Handicapper of the Calcutta Turf Club. He was found insensible in the U. S. Club grounds yesterday having evidently been thrown from his horse, and was removed to the Bowring Hospital, where he was found to be suffering from cerebral haemorrhage. Partial paralysis has supervened, but he is getting every attention and we hope to be able soon to report his complete recovery.

THE death is announced in Madras of Sir Simon, the well-known racehorse owned by Mr. Haji Oosman Sait. Sir Simon, a ch ch h by Courage—Phil Mystery, began his racing career in 1907 when he won the Park Plate on the first day of the Bangalore winter meeting. In 1908 he ran seven times, winning the Farm Plate at the Mysore Races and the C. B. Plate at Bangalore, and was twice placed second. He was seven times under starter's orders as a five-year-old, was three times second and three times third. The next season out of eight starts he won twice—the Lawley Cup and the Salamat Purse, both at the Madras meeting, and was three times placed third. He did not appear at all this season.

WE would draw the attention of our readers to the advertisement appearing further on, giving dates of the tour of the Official Measurer of the Calcutta Turf Club.

THE fifteenth annual general meeting of Bovril, Limited, was held on 8th February 1911. The Earl of Erroll, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, said that the large sales that marked the close of the year 1910 had continued throughout the whole twelve months under review. This favourable result must be in a large measure attributed to the striking scientific confirmation of the food value of Bovril disclosed by the systematic feeding experiments made with it by that eminent scientist, Professor W. H. Thompson, in conjunction with two other well-known physiologists. Dealing with the accounts, the Chairman said that the gross profit on trading amounted to £343,455, being some £47,000 more than the previous year, and constituted a record in their history. The balance of profit and loss account showed £160,314 8s. 9d. This would enable them, after paying an increased dividend on the Deferred shares, to place £22,500 to reserve account, which would then amount to £212,500.

Sir James Crichton Browne, in seconding the resolution, stated that it was not upon medical authority in the ordinary sense—that is to say, on the opinion of medical men who had tried it—that Bovril now rested its claim to consideration, but upon the far firmer basis of exact scientific experiment. The report and accounts were unanimously adopted.

Mr. Seth Smith, the curator of birds at the London Zoological Gardens, is to be congratulated upon having "invented" an ideal foster-mother for the hatching of the eggs of the rarer species of pheasants and other game birds. Mr. Smith found that the ordinary type of domestic fowl was too clumsy for his purpose, and game fowls too light and unreliable, while the Japanese fancy breed known as the "Silkie," although excellent sitters, are so soft and fluffy in plumage that their feathers very soon become saturated in the English damp climate. The experiment of crossing the latter variety with the Indian jungle fowl—the progenitor of the domestic fowl—however, proved a complete success. The progeny are said to be perfect sitters, and have already hatched some peacock-pheasants and other rare and beautiful species of the same order.

While the Penobscot or Tarratine Indian is not considered the equal of the expert white man as a rifle shot, he is the best moose shot in the American woods. This sinewy, fleetfooted woodsman is fond of picking up a moose trail just after a light snow has fallen. Then, in light marching order, he will follow the animal across the country until he tires him out or kills him. The process frequently takes from three to four days, and it is possible only to the hardiest of pursuers.

When first started a moose will make off through the woods with the speed of an express train. If it is early in the season and there has been but a light fall of snow the travelling is good and it is a simple matter to follow the trail. At length the animal, confident of having thrown off his pursuer, will gradually slacken its pace and stop. But it is off again immediately upon hearing the first sound or upon the presence of those who are following.

It is a fact that a vigorous man can tire out a moose in the long run, and the Indian at length approach near enough to get a shot. He can burden himself with but little in the way of camp equipage, however, and then a scanty supply of food and a blanket is all that he carries besides his rifle.

This method of killing moose is regarded by many as being far the most sportsmanlike. Surely it requires endurance and determination as well as woodcraft, and the man who has procured a head in this fashion has done something which would be impossible for the average sportsman.

No white man, no matter how expert, can ever quite equal an Indian in following a trail or in a canoe. The Indians seem to possess an aptitude in the handling of these frail craft which has come down to them through a long line of forebears.

However, few birch canoes are made nowadays. Tough winter bark is used in their construction, and with the encroachments of civilization it is becoming more and more expensive each year to get it. A high grade birch canoe will outclass three which are covered with canvas, and a few are still built to order every year on Indian Island, Me. They are much heavier than the canvas canoes, however, and for long trips, where there are frequent carries, most people prefer the canvas covered craft.

Messrs. Douglas and Grant, Dunnikier Foundry, Kirkcaldy, the well-known engineering firm (of whom the local agents are Messrs. Pyne Hughman and Co., 4, Lyons Range, Calcutta), have recently received several large important orders for the installation of engines and other machinery in Scotland, England, Ireland, Canada, etc.

The first order was from Messrs. Henry Leetham and Sons, York, to replace an existing engine of English make by an 800 horse-power engine of Messrs. Douglas and Grant's latest type—the compound condensing drop valve system. This was followed by another engine of 1,200 horse-power of the same type for the London Paper Mills Company (Limited) for one of their large mills in Kent. It is interesting to note that Messrs. Douglas and Grant two years ago installed a complete new gas producer and gas engine plant, and the new installation is to take the place of the other plant. Both engines are for day and night continuous running. Another order secured is a 450 horse-power engine for Messrs. J. and D. Wilkie, Kirriemur Spinning and Weaving Mills of a similar type to the others. It may be mentioned that this is the fourth order Messrs. Douglas and Grant have received from the same firm. In addition this enterprising firm of engineers have received orders from a firm in Edinburgh district, and another in Yorkshire to convert their existing engines, which were built by well-known Yorkshire makers, from the old system to the new drop valve system.

As well as orders Messrs. Douglas and Grant have recently secured several important contracts for the Admiralty, for the home dockyards—one order for Devonport, and the other for Haulbowline in the south of Ireland.

The firm have just completed an important contract for two very large electrical winders for a new coal mining company which is being developed in Canada. These are probably the largest winders of the kind which have so far been made in Scotland, and, in addition to this, the firm have also completed orders for electrical winders and haulages for some of the important colliery companies, including the Niddrie and Benhar Coal Company, and Balgonie Colliery Company, Wemyss Coal Company, and the Pumpherston Oil Company.

Another branch of this firm's business is that of rice milling machinery for which they are the largest manufacturers in the world. Naturally India and the Far East are a great field for these rice mills, where Messrs. Douglas and Grant's name is very well known and they have supplied a large number of rice milling machines. We understand that Messrs. Pyne, Hughman and Co., who represent Messrs. Douglas and Grant, have recently secured some important contracts for this class of work.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 23rd February 1912.

They say we are on the verge of a national coal strike, a carters' strike, another railway strike, and, of course, with the rise in the price of coals our food and drink is to cost us more. So we are all plotting and planning to temper the malignity of the "thin" time which would appear to be on us. Of course many thousands will be thrown out of work, while many other thousands will have to work all the harder, among them our gay and debonnair "small specials."

The men who were enrolled as special constables during the railway strike last year have received official notices requesting them to be in readiness in view of the threatened coal strike. Last August their ambition to die or otherwise distinguish themselves in the defence of the lives and property of the citizens of London was unrealized, but there is a prospect that they may have better luck this time.

In 1887, during the unemployed troubles, every other man one met was a special constable, and one knew some "small specials" who would certainly have ran a risk of being lost had they become involved in any riotous proceedings. Their duties consisted principally of standing at ease all Sunday afternoon in Trafalgar Square, surrounded and protected by the professional police.

Is angling a crime? The angler's dilemma under the new Protection of Animals Act may be very diverting to those who are not anglers. The notion of the village policeman solemnly apprehending the small boy who is fishing with a worm, on which he has inflicted cruelty by impaling the creature on a pin, is funny enough. But the boy or adult threatened with a fine of £25 or six months in default, may be forgiven for seeing little humour in the situation. In fact, the position is serious enough. The poor man's sport is directly threatened. If the Act menaces angling at all, it menaces the coarse fisherman with his live bait for pike and pearch, his worms for roach and dace. Of course, the Act was not intended to have any result so patently absurd. But the question is, whether cranks and faddists may not be able to twist this loosely drafted Act to their own purposes, whether general fishing and vermin trapping, a legitimate sport and a necessary activity, may not be made criminal offences. In that case, the Goverment would be compelled to set right a grotesque blunder in their own Act.

Our Stigginses and prurient prudes are once more on the warpath. The latest cry is for a censor of cinematograph films! A deputation of about a dozen misguided and ill-advised folk interested in cinematograph manufacture and entertainments attended at the Home Office last Thursday, at the invitation of the Home Secretary, to discuss questions concerning cinematograph exhibitions.

The proceedings were private, but it is understood that the principal point under discussion was the advisability of formulating some means of providing more effective supervision of subjects for public entertainment and ensuring that undesirable pictures should be eliminated.

Yet another miracle—a miracle of art, skill, and industry—will shortly be seen at Olympia.

On 12th April the Ideal Home Exhibition will be opened, and when the public passes into the great building there will be found houses, villages, and farms erected with wonderful speed upon the same space where recently was a huge theatre with tier upon tier of seats.

The whole of the annexe, which has an area of over an acre, will be given over to the Dutch Village, which will contain :—

A canal system.	A village street with shops.
Three bridges.	A Frisian farm.
A windmill.	A South Holland farm.
A bulb farm	An avenue of Dutch trees.

Men, women, and girls, in the old-world costume of the country, will move about the village streets, and work on the farms, at one of which visitors will be able to see Dutch farming, butter, and cheese making, and at another buy the Dutch products as if they had made the journey by sea.

There will also be a Dutch inn, where the thirsty may quench their thirst with strange Dutch drinks, while they gaze down an avenue of Dutch lime and willow trees trained in the quaint Holland style and imported from Holland.

In the centre of the main building will be a wonderful example of English enterprise and business qualities—an eleven-roomed house, built in 240 hours, or ten days.

There will be a gardening section, in a vast rose pergola over 200 feet long, ending in a rock and water garden with a shimmering cascade. Here visitors will be able to see the latest things in horticulture and get ideas for their own gardens.

All that is best in modern furniture will be brought together in a gallery nearly 400 feet in length, where a series of rooms will be furnished according to the designs of the greatest furniture artists of the twentieth century.

English, French, and Dutch craftmen will display their finest designs in modern applied art.

Whatever question the mistress of a house wishes to be solved will be solved at the Ideal Home Exhibition, from labour-saving devices for the scullery to the most modish fittings for her own boudoir.

There is really no reason why Mr. Charles Hawtrey should have revived "Dear Old Charlie" at the Prince of Wales' this week rather than any other of a dozen similar farces in which he has played the gay intriguer with a genius for lying, except for the fact that it was adapted from the French by Mr. Charles Brookfield, now Censor of Plays, and that it was solemnly denounced before a Royal Commission by various deadly serious persons.

The idea of the intrigue is very, very French, and old-fashioned French at that. It is all impossible, wild, and as remote from life as chalk is remote from cheese. It is unmoral rather than immoral, occasionally vulgar, and, be it added, sometimes boring. On the other hand, with Mr. Hawtrey in a distinctive Hawtrey part, it makes one laugh through the whole of one act and the better part of the other two.

To treat it seriously and to discuss its effect on public morals is to break a naughty little butterfly on a most portentous wheel.

Mr. Hawtrey was ably assisted in the laughter-making last night by Mr Eric Lewis, Mr. Holman Clark, Mr. Arthur Grenville, and Miss Enid Leslie.

At the end of the performance, although the "Ayes" were in a large majority, there was a scene of very considerable uproar, hisses, and penny whistles being heard above the applause. For nearly five minutes Mr. Hawtrey stood on the stage trying to obtain a hearing. "You have got to listen," he said repeatedly.

At last, when silence was gained, he said : "It is discourteous for a manager not to acknowledge the call for 'Author.' Mr. Brookfield is not afraid to appear before you, but his absence is caused, I am sorry to say, by his severe illness. And," concluded the actor, "I am grateful to you for not blowing your penny whistles during the performance."

Everyone knows that musical-comedy girls have developed a habit of marrying into the peerage, that "young bloods" about town still haunt stage doors and deem it an honour to stand pretty ladies from the chorus suppers and jewellery, that some of the ladies are exceedingly calculating—taking everything and giving nothing—while others contrive to run a motor-car on a salary of fifty shillings a week. It is this shallow, artificial world behind the musical comedy theatres that Sir Arthur Pinero pictures in "The 'Mind the Paint' Girl," produced at the Duke of York's last Saturday ; but unfortunately the usually astute playwright has been so bent upon suggesting "atmosphere" that he has neglected to provide the essential of drama. The "atmosphere" is elaborately developed, without any vital happening, in two long acts and a half, and when at length action enters, when "situations" arise, Lily Parradell's choice of a lover scarcely seems a matter of such importance as to justify the extensive preliminaries.

Three parts of the play, in fact, are occupied in presenting a sketch of irresponsible Bohemia. All that the audience learns is that Lily Parradell, known as the "'Mind the Paint' Girl," after her most successful song, has risen from humble beginnings to the "star" of the Pandora Musical Comedy Theatre, that she is perfectly "straight" and tremendously good-hearted, and that she is provisionally engaged to Captain Nicholas Jeyes. She is to marry Jeyes providing he finds some employment, but, having thrown up the Army to act as Lily's watch-dog, he spends most of his time in club-loafing, and the girl sticks to him, more out of good-heartedness than from any love that she retains for him. The fact that Jeyes rather unnecessarily is left out of a party given in the foyer of the Pandora to celebrate Lily's birthday, and that he contrives to be present in the disguise of a waiter, serves little purpose, the incident is not even used as effective padding, and the development of plot owes nothing to it.

The third act arrives, then with the position very much the same as it was at the beginning of the first act. Then, after Lily has been seen home by a party of hilarious friends in the small hours of the morning, young Viscount Farncombe contrives to stay behind to propose to her. While they are together Jeyes, who has been spying outside the house, bursts into the room, and he and Lily proceed to "slang" each other. She calls him a cad, a loafer, and a waster—not without some justification—and emphasises her condemnation with a few damns. He replies with a tirade against the girls of the musical comedy stage, whom he calls a menace to society, and he accuses Lily of having ruined his life because, forsooth! he chose of his own free will to sacrifice his prospects in the Army to dance attendance on her. Lily is melted ; she realises that, however, unconsciously, she has been the means of spoiling his career, and accepts him on the spot ; but in the last act Jeyes withdraws to South Africa, leaving the field clear to Viscount Farncombe, whom Lily has come to love.

Of course, the piece shows much of the usual Pinero cleverness. The construction is splendid. The author manœuvres dozens of characters at one time, like a complete master of stage craft ; and the character-drawing is delightful. Every character has a definite personality. But the worst of it is that so few of them have anything to say that matters. It is as if Sir Arthur, in his anxiety to picture faithfully a set of people not in themselves notable for wit, found it necessary to shelve his own wit. The result was that with so little definite happening the interest of the audience was not held ; they grew restless, and there was much vigorous booing at the end.

Miss Marie Lohr did not give any particular distinction to the part of Lily, but she played very cleverly a subtly drawn character. She had charm and spirit, and she showed most effectively the bad breeding peeping out through the veneer of polish in moments of anger. Mr. Allan Aynesworth gave a manly dignity to Jeyes, which helped to save an unsatisfactory character, and there was a number of capital minor studies, particularly M. Dion Boucicault as a facetious stockbroker, and Miss Clare Greet as Lily's vulgar, easy-going mother.

It was a great triumph, both for the old "Trilby" and the new at His Majesty's last night. The play, cleverly manufactured by Mr. Paul Potter out of the rich romantic material provided in Du Maurier's novel, went, they say, better than ever it went since its original production at the Haymarket. The fresh representative of its heroine, Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry, brought to the part a spirit, a breadth of significance, and a command of pathos far fuller than it has received in any previous interpretations.

The great coup of the young actress so happily secured by Sir Herbert Tree for a long engagement was achieved by her at the end of the third act, where, by an altered arrangement, Trilby was brought before the curtain to sing, under the magnetic influence of Svengali, her florid French ditty and her simple "Ben Bolt." The encore of the one song which led to the other was most enthusiastic and was thoroughly deserved. Miss Neilson-Terry sings with her heart as well as with her voice, and her Trilby would be well worth hearing even if it were only for these incidental numbers. But she is a delight also in her frank girlish personality and her appeal of youth. She explains without an effort the devotion of the "Three Musketeers of the

Of the original trio of students there is one survivor in the genial Taffy of Mr. Maurice, while Miss Filippi is once more the ideal Mme. Vinard, and the inimitable Svengali of Sir Herbert Tree is more assured and easy than ever in the sinister flamboyance of his black art. Newcomers who do good work are Mr. A. E. George, Mr. Swinley, and Miss Laura Cowie, and indeed there is not a weak spot in the cast. The revival is announced for three weeks only, but it goes with such a swing that an extension of that run may well be demanded for what is certainly the best performance of the popular play that one remembers to have seen.

SOMETHING novel in the way of theatrical entertainment has been given us this week, nothing more nor less than a production by a Bengalee Baboo with a caste in which other Baboos figure prominently and acquit themselves well. "The Light of Asia" is not a very dramatic work, but out of Sir Edwin Arnold's poem Babu S. C. Bose, who is well known in Calcutta, has made an interesting and beautiful series of spectacles. His Buddha, which was produced last night, takes its dialogue from "The Light of Asia," and sets it off with all the attractions of costume, scenery, and music, to say nothing of the human voice. His six episodes show the young Sidhartha in the garden of his parents at Kapilavastu, where he meets and falls in love with Jashodhara: the Voice of the Wind calling him from his palace of pleasure and his wife's arms to see the world; his acquaintance in the street with men who are not kings, and with suffering, age, and death; his temptation by various forms of Illusion under the Bodhi Tree; and, finally, his return home as a Buddha. Mr. William Peel is the producer, and every scene and every group are pleasant to look at, while the verse is well spoken. Mr. Clarence Derwent has caught the spirit of the part of Sidhartha, and Miss Ruby Miller as his wife plays well. Among others Miss Ruth Parrott as the Queen, his mother, Mr. George Ellis as the King of Magadha, his father, and Miss Delphnic Wyndham as his wife's companion are prominent. Some of the parts are played by Bangalees and other Indian natives, and noticeable among these are the fine performance of the adapter, S. C. Bose, as Channa, the Charioteer, and the acting of N. Pal and Dhisa Swami. The music is composed by Miss Morison and well played by Miss Rosabel Watson's string orchestra, while a capital feature of the evening is the singing of Miss Viola Tree as the Voice of the Wind. Miss Tree being very tall, looks exactly as a goddess would be expected by these mortals to look, and her singing last night proved her a musician as well as the owner of a fine voice. Altogether Baboo K. N. Das Gupta, whose enterprise this production is, has succeeded in providing an evening's entertainment of a pleasing and consoling character.

AN EIGHTEENTH CENTURY INDIAN HORSEMASTER.*

COLONEL PHILLOTT has done well to translate this curious and interesting horse book into English. It is a veterinary treatise on the Arab by one Sa'adat Yah Khan, otherwise Rangin, a cavalry soldier of the latter eighteenth century, who had a taste for versification, and as veterinary surgery is not a subject that lends itself with peculiar facility to poetic handling, we would add that veterinary surgery, as we understand it, has no place in Rangin's work. The work boasts a certain completeness of form: we are given the origin of the Horse as accepted by Mohammedan tradition, created by the Almighty out of the south wind, called Faras, endued with good fortune (whose place is the lock of hair over the forehead) and appointed to Arabia for its place of abiding. We desire to speak with all respect of the work of this old horse master; but confess we find difficult in adjusting fixed ideas to the process of weighing in the same scales spavin and hair whorls. The "feathers" or whorls which occur in various parts of the horse's coat, are, as most people know, pregnant with significance to the native mind, though the Oriental is not prone to say much about these matters unless he be sure of his hearer's sympathetic interest. One whorl or feather on the forehead is acceptable; but it must be on the forehead and not down on the nose; two whorls are bad, and three or more are most evil. A white star which the thumb tip can cover is evil, but may be redeemed by the presence of white on the legs: nevertheless that white must not be on the hind legs. A whorl in the girth place is lucky: on the other hand one under the saddle is so ominous, the horse that has it should not be allowed to remain in the village.

Bay is held the best colour, and after bay, what Colonel Phillott happily renders "khaki dun," Rangin will have westerns with him here. Grey is not a good colour; westerns for reasons other than the cavalryman poet, agree with the estimate of grey as undesirable.

As regards actual veterinary prescriptions the author is really little behind British veterinarians of his day—1775-1795.

Passing strange were the mixtures and nastinesses applied by the horse leech of Georgian days to his unfortunate patients; and Rangin's nostrums are no whit more barbarous than those of his white contemporaries. We are interested to find, as a means of making "an old horse young again" a variant of the boiled-sheep's head of modern use for putting heart into a horse. This variant is a bullock's head, roasted in hot ashes, crushed and boiled until the resulting soup is of thin porridge consistency: the fat that rises is to be skimmed and given in a mash after watering. If this meal be repeated five days in succession the effect will last a year; feed for longer than this and the result will delight you." Colonel Phillott vouches for the efficacy of the method and we do not doubt that there is something in it. One thing we are bound to say for Rangin and his fellow-countrymen: at no period of their history have they fallen into the barbarous blunders which disfigured the horse for centuries in Europe: they played strange tricks with his inside and made a mess of the wound healing art even as did Westerns, but they left his external beauty unimpaired by nostril-slitting, ear-cropping and docking, so far they were vastly wiser in their generation than our own forebears.

A YEAR WITH THE GAEKWAR OF BARODA.*

MR. WEEDEN is a clergyman who, having made acquaintance with the Gaekwar when he was in England for the coronation had the good fortune to receive, and be able to accept, an invitation to pay a long visit to the Court at Baroda. This volume contains Mr. Weeden's letters, revised, to his mother during his stay; and though of necessity they cover a good deal of much trodden ground they possess the merit of presenting a picture of the East from the standpoint of a griffin who saw, with very discerning eyes, from an unusual point of view. The author writes frankly, and very pleasantly, as a total ignoramus and gives us a vivid picture of the daily life of the very up-to-date Court of Baroda. He dined with the Gaekwar, the Maharani, the Princess Indira and the Princes being present. Her Highness, as we all know, is among the "advanced" women of India, but Mr. Weeden's record shows us in much the same light as the chatelaine of a great English country home. We confess that we have envied the padre the advantages he enjoyed. Besides the usual shikar, he saw hunting with the cheetah, a sport rarely seen by Europeans nowadays; he saw too the "arena" sports, buffalo fighting, elephant fighting and ram fighting: the elephant fight was exciting and effective, the two charging one another "like express trains" and fighting furiously until the breakage of a tusk caused the Gaekwar to signal cessation of hostilities. Another curious display was that in which a musth elephant was turned into the arena to catch, if he could, a man mounted on a clever Arab. We should have liked a more detailed account of the business which Mr. Weeden compares to a bullfight without its horrors. The great tiger shoot arranged by the Maharaja of Rewah, for the delectation of the Gaekwar and Maharani, is a lesson in the application of Western conveniences to Eastern sport: the Maharaja, says Mr. Weeden, is a Rajput of the old school, but his arrangements displayed nice appreciation of the advances of science. "The arrangements for locating the tigers were very complete. Telephone wires had been laid through the jungle in all directions, and shikaries placed in every direction; then when one of them discovered a tiger he sent a message to head-quarters and steps were taken accordingly."

Mr. Weeden accompanied the Gaekwar upon various tours and journeys; among other visits he paid one to Ooty and had some good days with the hounds. Altogether we fully appreciate his remark that "it is a great help to be a padre in India;" that he was so well looked after and received so much kindness and attention was due we suspect less to his jampot collar than to his own geniality and the zest with which he entered into the interests of others. We close our notice of his entertaining book with a word of sympathy for the hapless man upon whom fell execution of the Gaekwar's command to translate "Alice in Wonderland" into Mahrathi! His Highness was so charmed with the book that when it was finished ("I made it last as long as I could") he would have nothing but "Through the Looking Glass": which, it was also commanded, is to be translated into Mahrathi. Well, far more pretentious works have been translated into Eastern tongues with less possible profit.

TROUBLES OF A DEER-HUNTER.

"SATISFIED that I was not cut out for a deer-hunter," remarked, in confidential mood, a citizen who wouldn't have his name mentioned for the world, "I have made that new rifle of mine a Christmas present to a friend.

"It happened last fall up in Sullivan County. In the first place, I had never gone out as a deer-hunter before, but tales that friends of mine had been bringing back to town season after season about the fascination, thrill and all-round joy of following the deer chase through the dim-lit aisles of the forest just lured me on to get a piece of that myself, and I bought a new rifle and went out after it.

"Now we come to how I took the trail of the big, fat doe.

"'That's the biggest and finest doe deer that has been in these woods for one while,' said the guide to me, 'and there ain't a feller in this party but what would almost give his head to get a crack at her. Now I'm going to give you a sure shot at that doe. If you'll slip along up the ridge here about a mile you will find her. Go sneaky, now, and aim just behind her shoulder.'

"'Leave that to me,' said I to the guide, just like that. And so I started off to sneak on that doe, get her, and accept the homage of my fellows.

"I made the sneak all right, and the first thing I knew I saw ahead of me through the opening in the scrub oaks that doe standing broadside to me, not twenty yards away, her head up, and to all appearances undisturbed. I sank down behind a bush and hauled up to let her have it just behind the shoulder.

"Before I could let her have it, though, out of the bushes jumped another deer, a little one, and with a glad little bleat it began to skip and play about the doe, and the doe pranced around with it, and I could see her great brown eyes beam on it with a look that meant as much as the fond gaze of a mother on her baby ever did.

"'That's the doe's fawn I s'pose,' thought I. 'I wonder which of 'em I ought to lay low first, for I might as well get 'em both.'

"Then bye and bye the fawn leaped into the bushes and stuck its head out, prettily cocked on one side, and the doe stepped into the bushes on the other side and peeked out at the fawn with the same cocking of her head.

"'Why,' thought I, 'they're playing peek-a-boo with each other, sure as there's hair on their hides!'

"Then the doe jumped back out of the bushes, and out came the fawn, bleating softly, and nestled up against the doe, and the doe fondled it with her soft muzzle and lay down in the sweet ferns that grew thickly there. The fawn dropped down beside her, cuddled up against her, and, as the doe gazed on it with that look in her eyes, the little thing went off to sleep.

"'I guess,' thought I, after a bit, 'that is, I'm afraid that my hand trembles too much to make sure of laying that doe low. Anyhow, I can't get a shot at her behind the shoulder, the way things are looking. But the guide'll be sneaking along here before long. Something must be done. I think I'll do it now.'

"And I did. I rose from my hiding place and gave a tremendous kick in the bushes. Like a flash that doe was on her feet, and the fawn sprang up in fright; away they went through the bushes, and the last I saw of them was a white flicker of fur as the doe's tail disappeared in the woods farther up the ridge. And I hadn't done it any too soon, for that doe had scarcely given me that last glimpse of her when the guide came sneaking along to the spot from down ridge. He looked about in plain amazement.

"'Wasn't she here?' said he.

"'Just my luck,' said I. 'I caught a glimpse of her tail as she swished it out of sight up yonder on the ridge.'

"'Shucks!' said the guide. 'Now she'll make straight for the tamarack swamp and nobody won't get her! You ought to snuck better!'

"And that was the way I got the first impression that I wasn't cut out to be a deer-hunter, and I am quite sure that the guide got that impression, too, for next day we were to go out after a huge five-prong buck that had worried the hunters quite a good deal, and which everybody was eager to get a shot at, and the guide said he guessed he would put me where the buck would be likely to run right over me if they got it going, and maybe I would get a shot at it before its tail whisked out of sight.

"I said all right. If any buck came along and tried to run over me, I said, we'd see about it.

"Well, I stood where the guide put me. Time went along, and they didn't seem to be able to get the buck going. If they had been able to, it hadn't seen fit to come along and run over me yet. I got hungry, and so sat down on a log and ate my lunch. Then I stretched myself out on the log, and was about half asleep when I saw a movement in the bushes a good way off.

"I got up with my gun in my hand. A moment later a big buck sprang out into the open space near me. At first he stopped and pranced a few steps, and his eyes seemed to be fixed on mine. And what eyes they were! He moved about in that open space as if he were stepping on eggs, but all the time his eyes looked straight into mine. There I stood, my gun at my shoulder, but I couldn't any more pull the trigger than I could have risen and flown away.

"The buck backed away until he was perhaps twenty yards off, and then pranced right towards me, his eyes with that strange glare in them that held me in such a spell that, although he was coming at me with bristles erect and antlers tossing threateningly, I couldn't put the motion in my hand to pull the trigger and stop him with a bullet. He came so near me that I could almost feel his hot breath, and then he backed away again, always with that hypnotic fascination in his eyes that he kept on mine. I was just as helpless against that glare as the bird is said to be against the fascination of the rattlesnake's eye.

"Again the buck danced towards me, and whether he would this time have jumped on me I don't know, but by an effort I found my lung power and gave a yell that was enough to scare a panther into fits, and that buck gave one tremendous leap and turned to dash into the woods. He didn't get there, though. The report of a gun almost in my ear broke on the stillness, and the buck tumbled in his tracks and lay theme.

"I turned to see where the shot had come from, and there stood the guide grinning. 'Well,' said he, 'I've seen fellers took with buck fever awful bad afore this, but I never seen one that had it so bad that he'd stand still till a buck kicked holes in him, and that's jest what that buck would have done to you if I hadn't followed him and stopped him.'

"Well, anyhow, that satisfied me that I wasn't cut out for a deer-hunter, and I've made my new rifle a Christmas present to a friend of mine. I may get a shotgun and try my hand at rabbits some day, but I don't know.—American Field.

Fishing.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE CODLING.

Though good river fishing becomes yearly harder to get at home, there always remains the sea, which is open to all. Sea fishing possesses various fascinations of its own, not the least of which is old Ocean's generosity in the matter of weight, both as regards individual fish and total bag. If you go out at the right time in the right weather, with the right tackle and bait, it is seldom indeed that the sport fails to be good.

I lately paid a short visit to Filey, a little village on the Yorkshire coast, which has become well known to sea anglers by reason of the rocky headland jutting far into the sea, known as the Brig. From this reef one may at times have excellent sport: in the summer with coal-fish and mackerel, which take a fly well; in the autumn with the codling, which begin to make their appearance in numbers during October. Filey Brig is to a certain extent dangerous, as the tide comes in with great swiftness, and an angler absorbed in his fishing may easily get cut off. The bottom all round this great natural pier is the roughest of rock, while there is a perfect forest of seaweed everywhere. If then one uses the ordinary paternoster tackle, as is the general custom on the East Coast, one must be prepared for constant loss of leads and hooks. The Yorkshire sea angler uses a very stiff and powerful rod fitted with pulley rings all the way up. His reel is an enormous Nottingham of six or seven inches in diameter. The custom always is to cast from the reel in the ordinary Nottingham fashion, and as the line is very coarse and strong, long casts can only be effected if the tackle is furnished with a heavy lead. The whole mode of fishing strikes one as coarse and clumsy as compared with the more refined methods obtaining on the South Coast. Fishing from Filey Brig with a paternoster at all is to my mind a mistake. By using a pike float with two hooks about twenty inches apart, and having the float set at such height on the line that the bottom hook just touches the seaweed, one can avoid all this constant entanglement in the bottom and consequent breakages. The codling take, as far as I can see, a bait just touching the seaweed better than one lying actually among and half hidden by the weed. Indeed I found as many or more codling took the upper hook, twenty inches above the seaweed, as did the lower, which was close to the bottom.

By using a float, and so escaping the necessity of having to strain everything to breaking point in order to drag lead and hooks out of the snaky weed, one gains the further advantage of being enabled to use lighter gear. The barge pole rod and cord line can be dispensed with, and a cane rod and comparatively fine line will do the work with much greater pleasure to oneself than can possibly be enjoyed with the conventional gear.

The Brig has become well populated with mussels through boats having in past years dumped their surplus bait there. The angler now, who purposes to fish from the Brig, need out worry about bait, as he can gather all he wants during his walk out to the end of the reef. Codling like a big lump of bait, and it is a good thing to cover the hook well with mussels, using from two to four at once according to size. The Filey mussels are, however, small, and one really big one, such as one gets at some seaside places, is enough for any cod. If one hires a coble, and anchors at the right time of the tide, between the end of Filey Brig and the Bell Buoy, the sport obtained will be far better than can be got off the Brig itself. The main difficulty is the strong current. The time to fish is from about an hour and a half before low water to an hour and a half after: thus one escapes the full force of the tide, and can hold the bottom with a lead of moderate weight. I found that I could gradually lighten my paternoster lead as the current slacked, and then when the tide began to make, the weight had to be increased bit by bit, in order to keep my bait at the bottom. It is consequently very necessary to have an arrangement by which the weight of lead can be increased and decreased at will, with the least possible delay. In some favoured spots the current is almost negligible. For instance behind the Nab, at Lerwick, I used to fish in twenty fathoms of water with a two-ounce sinker. In Loch Goil, where I have fished a great deal for codling and whiting, I could nearly always hold the bottom nicely with a two-ounce lead. Off Filey Brig I had to use half a pound sometimes, though my reel line was pretty fine and did not offer much resistance, and the depth was only about five fathoms.

Filey is a nice village, and there is no difficulty in getting comfortable rooms close to the shore. There is no pier, though curiously enough there was a good sized one in Roman times. At very low tides one can walk for about a hundred and fifty yards along the old Roman harbour wall. There are also rings cut in the rock, with numbers to them, where the triremes used to tie up sixteen centuries ago. The submergence of the old wall is due to the encroaching of the sea: the ancient Roman works might be easily used as a foundation for a new harbour, and harbours are so scarce on the East Coast that it would be most useful to have a port of refuge for small ships here.

A Roman road went in former times up the valley of the Derwent, through Malton, and it is quite probable that it was prolonged to Filey. It would also seem reasonable to suppose that this place was the seaport through which the Roman garrison at York kept up direct communication with Rome. To Filey no doubt came periodical batches of recruits for the legion quartered at York. There are some very decent golf links at Filey, and there is also a white cow which grazes on these links, and is well known to visitors by reason of her strange habit of every now and then eating a golf ball. A friend of mine one day drove his new Challenger down the straight towards this cow; she promptly picked up the ball and began to munch it. My friend gave chase, when the cow ran straight into a small pond close by, took a big gulp of water, and swallowed the ball. This case happened two years ago, and when I went to Filey this October I made enquiries, and found the cow swallowed another just lately. It is no doubt one of those curious morbid habits, which animals are well known to occasionally suffer from. Not, however, that this cow seems to have suffered from her quaint diet: on the contrary she looks in the best of health.

MANCHESTER.

Had the promise of the morning only been fulfilled, a midsummer day at Castle Irwell would have been enjoyed on Monday, glorious sunshine, with light fleecy clouds, wafting across a neapolitan blue sky till eleven o'clock, when the spell was broken by the demon cloud, and for the greater part of the afternoon smoke had its sway, the boxed-in course being so enshrined in fog that little of the racing could be seen. The attendance was well up to the average and though fields did not reach double figures in any races, fair sport was afforded. Results:—

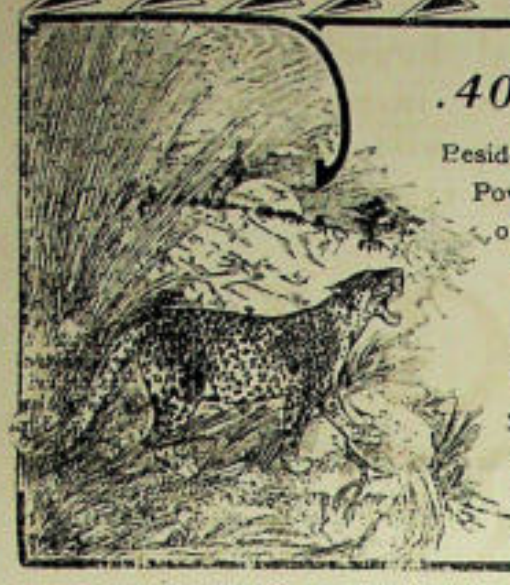
WINCHESTER



.401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loading Rifle.

Besides being the most powerful recoil-operated rifle made, the Winchester .401 Caliber High-Power Self-Loader is the simplest, strongest, most easily operated and most rapid shooting of all rifles of this type. For hunting game, the self-loading type of rifle is ideal, providing it is reliable; and when you can get the power and the swiftness and ease of action of the .401 Winchester, you have a battery that prepares you to meet any game alive. Just look at these figures: velocity of bullet, 2142 foot seconds; energy, 2038 foot pounds. These figures show that the .401 is more powerful than the .303 British, and in addition you have the increased rapidity of fire. This is further augmented by the interchangeable magazine system, the simplest, quickest and most effective method of loading ever devised.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

SEEING that of the previous five matches, in a series of twenty, with the Scottish League, the English League had only won one, Saturday's result at Middlesbrough must be regarded as highly satisfactory. Last year a draw at Glasgow was considered a good performance, and this win by two goals to none suggests that England will have a better side for the real internationals than was the case twelve months ago. Then England carried off chief honours in the international tournament, though able to do no better than divide two goals with Scotland at Goodison Park, and there will need to be some improvement in that form if a better result is to be obtained in Glasgow five weeks hence. For this reason the play of the team at Ayresome Park was particularly satisfactory, and the victory would have been more decisive but for a fine display of goal-keeping by Brownlie, who time after time saved his side. In all respects the English eleven did well; the old defence Williamson in goal, Crompton and Pennington at full back, once more doing splendid service, while a feature of the match was the success of the new right wing, Buchan and Wallace, the Sunderland inside and Aston Villa outside getting on so well together as to make the most effective attacking force on either side. The pity is that such a pronounced triumph was not achieved by the left-wing, as only a week before against Ireland, Fleming came out at his best, and, of course, Simpson is regarded as unequalled in the outside-right position. Still, it is satisfactory to know that we have such good men at hand. The chief want remains unsatisfied, however, and it seems impossible to find the man possessed of all the qualities desired in a centre forward.

Blackburn Rovers maintained their advantage at the head of the League, and their victory by 3 goals to 0 over Aston Villa at Birmingham was fully worthy of the team holding first position among the strongest clubs in the country. Only one other side won so easily, Oldham Athletic at home to Everton, putting up the same score. Newcastle United obtained as many goals, but had one scored against them by Sunderland, who were unfortunate in having three of their forwards away—Holley, Mordue and Buchan all assisting the English League—whereas their opponents were not handicapped in this way. The only team to gain two points away from home, Blackburn Rovers, can now claim to have played a dozen matches off the reel without sustaining defeat. They are four points ahead of all rivals, and, though Newcastle United who come next, have a game in hand, the Rovers must be considered both the strongest and most consistent side in the competition.

After going eight weeks without a victory in the League, Tottenham Hotspur managed to beat Middlesbrough, some changes in the eleven bringing about an improvement, though even as it was, the team showed moderate form, and were as much indebted to their rivals' shortcomings as any special skill of their own. Truth to tell, both teams seemed to play as if they had had too much football, and the great crowd of 25,000 people who went to White Hart-lane, found little cause for satisfaction beyond the fact that a bare victory came as an infinitely better result than the previous Saturday's defeat from Bury. It was, indeed, Hotspur's first win in the League this year, and this change of fortune will, it may be hoped, be followed by further successes. As Woolwich Arsenal held their own at Bradford with the Cup-holders, and Chelsea won at Nottingham against the Forest, it was quite a good afternoon for London clubs of the highest rank.

Although deprived of the leading position they held a week ago, by reason of Burnley having gained a victory over Barnsley, Chelsea are now splendidly placed in the Second Division of the League and possess an excellent chance of promotion. With a game in hand they are only a point behind Burnley, and their nearest rivals below them are four points worse off with the advantage of a game fewer fulfilled. Their success at Nottingham therefore was of great value to them. The two other London clubs in the competition did not fare so well, Fulham being only able to draw at home with Barnsley, while Clapton Orient, although showing much the better form, went down before Grimsby Town. Fulham hold their position, but the Orient dropped a place, giving way to Hull City, who accomplished a great performance in beating Derby County at Derby. That defeat may prove more disastrous to Derby County than would at present appear, but as it is it has, for the time being, prevented them from pressing the leaders in the race for promotion.

Among several rather startling results in the Southern League nothing came as quite such a surprise as the victory of Northampton over Reading by 7 goals to 0. The conquerors of Aston Villa in the Cup and of Swindon during the previous week, Reading could only be considered equal to any side in their League; and this sudden lapse of form must not be regarded too seriously, as several of their regular players were away, the amateur international taking Bailey and Hanney. Swindon recovered their capacity for winning handsomely, and a victory by 4 goals over Watford keeps them in front of Queen's Park Rangers, who accomplished a good performance in winning at Luton. Leyton and New Brompton both won, but are still badly placed at the bottom of affairs, and, as Southampton won well at Stoke, no club now seems likely to fall below them.

LEAGUE INTERNATIONAL.

ENGLAND VS. SCOTLAND.—At Ayresome Park, Middlesbrough, on the 17th instant was played the twenty-first annual match between teams representative of the English and Scottish Leagues. Of the previous encounters, England had won ten, Scotland five, and five had been drawn. Though dull, the weather held mild and fine, and a crowd of about 25,000 gathered to witness the contest. With only a slight breeze prevailing, the conditions proved entirely favourable, except that the surface of the ground appeared rather greasy. The Scottish League side took the field as originally selected and the only change in the home team was the substitution of Fay of Bolton Wanderers for Makepeace at left half-back.

Makepeace had not quite recovered from the injury he received on the occasion of the recent Cup tie between Everton and Bury.

Crompton won the toss, and Quinn kicked off, Pennington returning. Boyle put out to Mordue, who centred to Buchan, and beating McAndrew, the last named shot hard and low, Brownlie throwing himself at full length and bringing off a brilliant save in the first minute. Scotland then broke away, and Quinn made a clever opening for McMenemy, who shot just outside. Mordue set up another English attack, but Blair cleared. McNair, too, defended in fine style, as did Crompton at the other end. Following a free kick for England, Bennett and McMenemy dribbled down prettily, and Pennington miskicking, the home team were in danger. Crompton, however, relieved, Boyle helping on the good work, and Holley, out of a scrimmage, skimmed the bar as off-side was given. Crompton, miskicking over his own line, a corner for Scotland was well placed, and at close range Cunningham should have scored in ten minutes, but he kicked right into Williamson's hands. The play subsequently went rather in favour of England, without Brownlie having to handle, McNair and Blair both heading and kicking surely. England come very near scoring inside twenty minutes, Buchan, with a long drive, bringing Brownlie to his knees. Just afterwards McMenemy, breaking through, passed out to Bennett, who missed a fine opportunity. At the other end, Brownlie dashed out and Freeman charged and knocked him over, a corner resulting, but the Scotsmen easily cleared. Buchan next went wide, and Bennett shot straight and tamely to Williamson. The Scotsmen then set up a strong attack, Brown passing to Cunningham, from whom Williamson saved. Next came a clever clearance by Williamson, when Quinn shot close in. Mercer put over and Williamson stopped a header from Quinn, England, half an hour from the start, being very hard pressed. At length the Englishmen broke away and Buchan got in a long drive, but the ball struck one of the Scottish defenders. From Wallace's pass Holley had a capital opening, but headed high over the bar. The English forwards did not play sufficiently on the Scottish backs, who thus could generally clear without difficulty, whereas the English backs were always hampered by one or other of the Scottish front rank. From a pass by Bennett McMenemy looked dangerous, but Crompton saved at the expense of a fruitless corner. The Englishmen improved and forced a corner, but nothing came of it. Just before the interval Buchan who had been so prominent, was hurt, but he soon recovered. Half time:—

On resuming, Duckworth, passing up to Wallace, the latter got in a fine centre, Brownlie punching out on the right, where McNair cleared. Again Wallace centred finely, the Scottish goal escaping narrowly. A third time he put the ball right across the goal mouth, only for McAndrew to kick up the field. One of his openings should certainly have been turned to account. The Scotsmen relieved, but inside ten minutes Buchan worked his way through beautifully and passed to Freeman, who scored for England. Following upon this success, Buchan forced a corner, and an exciting scrimmage took place, the Scottish goal having a narrow escape. Then came an excellent movement by the home forwards, the ball passing right over to the left wing, whence Mordue sent across the goal mouth with no one up—another fortunate escape for the visitors. Bennett then got away, but Quinn headed wide. Holley next missed a great chance, Buchan giving him the ball right in front of goal, but the inside left kicked it wildly over the bar. On another occasion the home forwards combined admirably, but Wallace's shot missed its mark. Holley then sent right across the goal, England about this time having nearly all the play. The Scottish forwards still lay well up the field, especially Quinn, but the only one who achieved much at the moment was Cunningham, who worked most strenuously.

Quinn was slightly injured, but quickly recovered. Bennett raced away and beat the backs, but he kicked rather too hard. Williamson came out and, with Bennett on him, cleared in great style. England were soon pressing again, Wallace passing to Buchan, who this time shot rather tamely to Brownlie. A little later Buchan, who was quite the success among the English forwards, went desperately close. Crompton played a great game, but Pennington was not at his best. Following some clever work by Buchan and Wallace, Holley headed just outside. Crompton conceded two corners towards the close, but nothing came of them. Freeman then missed a great chance, and Brownlie next saved splendidly from Wallace. The Englishmen continued the attack, and in the last two minutes met with further success, Mordue shooting through from a centre by Wallace. The home side were much superior in the second half and well merited their victory. Result:—

AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL.

England vs. Wales.—Fortunately for everybody concerned, the weather at Bishop Auckland for the International match between amateur teams representing England and Wales was quite favourable, and so much interest was aroused locally that quite 9,000 people visited the ground to see the play. Only one change was made in either team Rowell, of Cardiff, playing for Wales, instead of Tait. The game opened at a good pace, the English forwards showing up prominently in some good attacks at the start. Rebel came, however, with Woodward shooting over the bar, and then Wales set up a very strong pressure. This was kept on for some time, but a splendid opportunity was allowed to slip by Evans, who, from a good position, failed to score. When England got away again, and at the end of about fifteen minutes Berry gave England the lead with a great shot. A little later, Sanders, who was playing splendidly, ran half the length of the field and sent in a terrific shot, which Owen managed to save very well. Next, Wales broke away and got close to goal, but Boswell failed with a good opening before him. A long attack by England followed, Berry and Healey both going very close with good shots, while, just before half-time, Owen saved in great fashion from Woodward, Sanders, and Healey. The interval arrived with England leading by 1 goal to none. Directly after the resumption, a clever movement was started by Healey, and as a result Sanders scored a second goal for England. Keeping up the pressure, the Englishmen soon obtained another goal, Healey sending into the net with a good shot. From that point the game went altogether in favour of England, the forwards combining splendidly and carrying on their attacks in fine style. The Welsh defence held up pretty well, but Owen was often tested, and near the close he made a great save from a magnificent shot by Berry. Owen's work was indeed one of the features of the match, and but for his capital goalkeeping the Welshmen would have suffered a very severe reverse.

RUGBY RULES.

London Welsh vs. Cheltenham.—Cheltenham had a good deal more of the game at Wandsworth than the score—a solitary try gained during the first half—would suggest. Once they settled down the clever footwork of their forwards largely dominated the game. They were continually attacking, and it was only the superb tackling and excellent touch-finding kicks of the Welsh backs that prevented a considerably larger margin in the visitors' favour. The try came about twenty minutes from the start, when Bennett gathered from a forward rush, transferred to Hughes, who, making fine use of his great speed, crossed the home line at the right-hand corner. Davy missed the goal points then, as he did later when Sullivan made a mark well in front of the Welsh goal. The Welshman made several spasmodic attacks, but several of these were frustrated by the capital collaring of the Cheltenham men, and others were spoiled by the selfishness of Morgan, the stand-off half. Cheltenham, 3 points; London Welsh, 0.

Cambridge University vs. Blackheath.—In a keenly-contested game at Cambridge the University scored a penalty goal and a try and Blackheath two tries, the result being a draw—six points all. Play was always good and full of interest, each side in turn taking the lead, only to lose their advantage after much keen football. Thomas opened the scoring for Cambridge with a penalty goal, this being the only score until just before half-time, when Pym got over in fine style for Blackheath. The place kick failed, but the visitors continued to have rather the better of the play, and Bonham Carter getting in they secured the lead. Again the place kick was unsuccessful, and when Lewis finished some brilliant play by getting in for Cambridge, it seemed as if Blackheath would be beaten after all. The place kick was in quite a favourable position, but Thomas did not convert, the place kick being disallowed because of some informality. Cambridge University, 6 points; Blackheath, 6 points.

Old Leysians vs. Guy's Hospital.—The Old Leysians lost their unbeaten certificate yesterday when at Wandsworth they were beaten for the first time this season by Guy's Hospital by a goal and 3 tries to a goal. There was a capital attendance and the conditions were favourable to a good game. Play in the first half was fairly even, though the Old Leysians did more pressing without being able to score, when as Guy's got an unconverted try about half-way through, Stokes punting over the head of the full back, and winning in the race for the touch. In the second half Guy's showed marked superiority and had nearly all the play. First Millett got over, after some pretty combination on the left wing and Stokes placed a goal. Not long afterwards Anthony scored in a good position after a clever concerted forward rush. About this time the Old Leysians backs got up several strong attacks and from one of these Walker scored behind the posts after a splendid run, and Mellor placed a goal. Both sides now made strong efforts to increase their score, and Medlock made an opening from which the ball was flung wide out to Stokes, and he scored an unconverted try. Guy's Hospital, 14 points; Old Leysians, 5 points.

Harlequins vs. Oxford University.—There was only a moderately large crowd at Twickenham to witness this match played under perfect conditions and with each side practically at top strength. The early stages of the game were rather slow, each team doing a lot of hand stopping. Poulton (playing for Oxford) all but scored in the first minute, but kicked too hard when near the line and lost the ball. After this the play was rather in favour of the Harlequins, who eventually got in a fine bout of passing ending in Brougham scoring an unconverted try. Oxford threatened to equalise, but were soon defending again. The defence collapsed before the Harlequins forwards and R. O. Ward scored a second try, which Lambert converted from near the touch line. At half-time Harlequins led by eight points to nil. The second half was full of excitement. The Harlequins opened with a remarkable score by Lambert and they ended it with a fine try by Brougham. Between these scores there was much play of an exciting and brilliant character. After Lambert had converted his try and played the home side thirteen points ahead Allen scored an unconverted try. Then characteristic work led to another by Birkett, followed by yet another by Stoop, who left the defence helpless. Lambert converted this try and the Harlequins led by 21 points to three. Then a remarkable change came over the game, Oxford suddenly outplaying their opponents and putting on three tries in rapid succession, one of these being converted by Brown. The excitement was intense as the Varsity thus reduced their arrears, but they failed to maintain this high pitch and at the finish Brougham definitely clinched matters with another try for the Harlequins, who won by three goals three tries to one goal three tries. Harlequins, 24 points; Oxford University, 14 points.

BLINDFOLD GOLF.—A match unique in the history of the game was played at Sunningdale on the 20th February between Mr. A. Tindal Atkinson, a scratch member of the Sunningdale Club, and A. H. Toogood, the professional at the Chelsea School of Golf.

Toogood, in support of his theory that too much attention is paid to the first of all golfing dicta, "Keep your eye on the ball," was blindfolded before he played each shot. He contends that golfers are so obsessed with the importance of this rule that they are liable to forget the second, and even more important, principle that the head must be kept perfectly still.

When play began shortly before three o'clock there were about three hundred spectators present. At the first few holes Mr. Tindal Atkinson vindicated the theory of keeping the eye on the ball. Toogood made some good drives, but he was frequently at fault with his approach shots and putts. On one or two greens, in fact, he seemed to lose all conception of the position of the hole. On the tees, of course, he had to dispense with the usual preliminary "waggle." He took up his stance, addressed the ball, and remained motionless while the handkerchief was tied over his eyes. When this was done he could only bring the club back and hit at the ball. In this he was not always successful, as is shown by the fact that he was 3 down at the fourth hole.

Mr. Tindal Atkinson won the first in 5 to 7. Toogood made two fine wooden club shots at the second, and had a chance of winning, but he was over the green with his second, and then missed a yard putt. He halved the third, where Mr. Tindal Atkinson was bunkered, but at the short fourth he was hopelessly at sea. Toogood, although playing his long shots well, was hopelessly outclassed in the short game. He lost the next four holes, and halving the ninth, turned seven down. Mr. Atkinson won at the eleventh by eight up and seven to play.

ATHLETICS.

CROSS-COUNTRY CHAMPIONSHIP.

For the tenth consecutive year, and the twelfth time in all, the Highgate Harriers (holders) won the Southern Counties' cross-country championship, which was held at Hillingdon Court, Uxbridge, on Saturday, the 17th instant and, for the second consecutive year, F. C. Neaves, of the Surrey Athletic Club, was first man home. The ten miles course over which Saturday's race was run consisted mostly of meadow land, but a stretch of 600yrds. of plough had to be twice covered. There was also a stretch of about 200yrds. of road. Neaves, the ultimate winner, showed splendid judgment.

The first ten men and their times were as follows:—F. C. Neaves (Surrey A.C.), 61mins. 56secs. 1; W. J. Tucker (Reading A.C.), 62mins. 23⅗sec. 2; J. Hughes (Surrey A.C.), 62mins. 46secs. 3; W. R. Wright (Surrey A.C.), 62mins. 49secs. 4; T. Johnston (Highgate H.), 63mins. 5secs. 5; A. Reeves (Highgate H.), 63mins. 6secs. 6; B. C. Neaves (Surrey A.C.), 63mins. 28secs. 7; G. H. Ruffell (Highgate H.), 63mins. 43secs. 8; J. G. Coughlin (Highgate H.), 63mins. 48secs. 9; T. Humphreys (Herne Hill H.), 63mins. 50secs. 10. About 250 others finished.

The club placings were: Highgate Harriers (holders), 53 points; 1; Surrey A.C. 90 points, 2; Herne Hill Harriers, 149, 3; Oxford University H. and H. 251 points, 4; Hampstead Harriers, 391 points 5.

BILLIARDS

STEVENSON BEATS GRAY.—The third and last "Test" match between George Gray and H. W. Stevenson ended at the Caxton Hall, Westminster, on Saturday, the 17th instant, the English champion winning in handsome style by 1,497 points. All through the game Gray was unable to use his favourite losing hazard stroke off the red ball with his usual certainty, and the game fell rather flat, as Stevenson also was not often at his best.

Stevenson began the last day with a lead of 980 points, and during the afternoon session the Australian, with no better breaks than 55, 48, and 47, could only advance his total by 329 points. Stevenson, too, made slow progress, his only breaks of note being 71, 60, 53, 112, 154, 51, 95 and 61.

Interval scores:—Stevenson, 17,250; Gray, 15,680.

Stevenson in the evening took a long time to score the 750 points he required to run out, his breaks of 195, 51, 223, 109, and 39 coming at long intervals, while Gray scored 471, including 459 off the red ball, 113, and 126.

Final scores:—Stevenson, 18,000; Gray, 16,505.

THE CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB.

THE Calcutta Golf Club held its Annual "At Home" at the Pavilion on the maidan on Saturday last. The attendance was not as large as last year but this was accounted for by the counter attraction of the garden party at Belvedere. The band of the Black Watch was in attendance. There were three competitions during the afternoon. An approaching and putting competition for ladies was won by Mrs. H. C. Begg, the well-known lady golfer with an excellent score of 9, whilst the second prize was won by Mrs. T. P. Stewart who returned a score of 11.

The Club Gold Medal was won by that ardent golfer Mr. J. D. Gatheral with a scratch score of 81 and Mr. F. H. Stewart was second with 82. The Ladies' Bowl for the best handicap score was tied for by Misses Dent, Stein and Zuffa with 79 each. These three will play off the tie subsequently. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Duncan, president of the Club, Mr. J. A. Tassie, gave away the prizes. Score:—

A commendable feature about Lemco is its marvellous "keeping properties." Even in the tropics opened jars keep absolutely fresh and pure. This phenomenon is not due to preservatives, but to beef purity and perfect concentration. Food reliability reaches its topmost point in Lemco. Replace the cork to keep out dust.

THE LAHORE TRADES' CUP TOURNAMENT.

THE Tournament was continued on Monday, the 4th instant, when the King's Regiment met the North-Western Railway Volunteers. Play was fast throughout. There was no scoring in the first half but on changing ends Mathews scored for the King's and Sherbourne equalised. Time was called with the score 2 all. An extra 20 minutes was played and during this period the Volunteers scored and won by 2 goals to 1. On the 5th the Connaught Rangers met the York and Lancaster Regiment. The Rangers had the larger share of the game, Macdonald scored in the first half and Feency and Macdonald in the second. The York and Lancaster team were unable to get through and were beaten by 3 goals to nil.

The first of the semi-final games was played on Wednesday the 6th instant, the King's Royal Rifles meeting the Lancashire Fusiliers. It was a splendid game. There was nothing to choose between the teams and time arrived with the score one all. An extra period was played but neither side could score, though the Fusiliers had several chances and once failed from a penalty kick. The game was replayed on Thursday and on this occasion the Fusiliers had things all their own way. The first half was pointless, but the Fusiliers put on three goals without response in the second. The other semi-final between the Connaught Rangers and the North-Western railway Volunteers was also played on Thursday. The play was very level in the opening period, but the Railway managed to score from a corner kick, and led 1—0 at the interval. A penalty kick enabled the Connaughts to equalise on resuming and keeping up the attack they registered another point and thus qualified for the final by 2 goals to 1. The tournament was concluded on Saturday last in the presence of a big gathering. The Connaughts attacked at the start, then play settled down and the Lancashire Fusiliers pressed, but missed chances. The Connaughts worked the ball back and scored. The Fusiliers made great efforts but were behind at the interval. On changing ends play was fast and level: both goals were visited and the Fusiliers tried desperately hard to get on terms, but all their efforts were frustrated and the Rangers attacking towards the close scored another goal and ran out victorious by 2 to nil. Colonel W. T Wright, 1st V.B., gave away the prizes at the close of the game and the proceedings ended with the usual cheering. Besides the Trades Cup, the captain of the winning team was awarded Messrs Max Bink and Co.'s Cup and each of the winning team received a small cup. The captain of the runners up had a small cup presented by the Lahore Trades and each of the team a medal.

The teams were :—Connaughts : Pte. Byrne, Knapp, Howden, Reynolds, Hanlon, Jesse, McDonnell, McBride, Kelley, Sergeant Murray, and Lance-Corporal Feeney. Lancashire Fusiliers : Williams, Hellenon Murphy, Sweeney, Russel, Walker, Halstead, Gambles, Lara, Stockton and Spriggs.

Hockey.

THE PUNJAB NATIVE ARMY TOURNAMENT AT JHELUM.

THE second round was brought to a conclusion on the 4th instant when two games were played. In the first the 30th Punjabis met the 46th Punjabis and a close game had been expected, but to the general surprise the 46th ran things round their opponents and beat them by 7 goals to 1. The other game was between the 33rd and 28th Punjabis Play was very level in the opening half the 33rd eventually scoring twice just before the interval. The 28th looked like getting through on changing over and keeping up a hot attack hit a goal. Play was fast and well contested, but the 33rd scored again before the close and the 28th being unable to respond were beaten 3—1.

The semi-finals were played on Tuesday, the 5th instant, and two keen games were witnessed. The 33rd Punjabis met the 46th Punjabis and play was very level during the opening half: the 46th were seen to advantage and should have scored on more than one occasion. Changing ends with the score sheet blank. There was a very even spell of ten minutes Then the 33rd got away and scored. The 46th then pressed but could not get on terms and the ball was taken back to their territory, where the 33rd scored again in a scrimmage. The 46th failed to get through and retired defeated by 2 goals to nil. The game between the 45th Sikhs and 37th Dogras was expected to end in a win for the Sikhs, but the 37th gave a fine display and eventually beat their opponents by 3 to 2.

Play was up and down at the start and both goals had narrow escapes. Then Nicholson got away and instituted a bout of passing which ended in a goal for the 37th, up and down play followed. Then the Dogras attacked hotly and scored another point, leading at half time by 2 to nil. On re-uming the 37th added to their score and then the 45th got going. They opened their account and forced three corners, which they failed to turn to account. They notched another point soon after and keeping up a strong pressure looked like equalising. The 37th, however, kept them out to the end and won by 3 to 2.

The final was played on Friday last and a most exciting game was witnessed. The opening exchanges were very even both teams attacked and corners accrued, but were not improved upon. Then the 33rd got away and scored. The 37th next forced a corner, but nothing came of it and the 33rd getting possession ran down and scored again. The 37th had the best of the remaining play till the interval but in spite of a strong attack on the 33rd's goal they were unable to get through. They continued the pressure on resuming and all through the second half they did all the attacking, but their luck was out and they could not score, the whistle blowing a victory for the 33rd Punjabis by 2 goals to nil. The 33rd have now won three tournaments this season—the Delhi Durbar Cup, the Eastern Command Native Army Tournament at Ambala and now the Punjab Native Army Tournament for the second time.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CALCUTTA, Rangers and Customs are leading in the order mentioned, but the last named have two matches in hand. As there is no likelihood of a combined Military or a Services team entering for the Beighton Cup, Calcutta should have a very powerful side—one that will take a lot beating. F. N. Forster of the Garrison Artillery made his first appearance for the C.F.C. on Tuesday, when the "Reds" beat the E.I.R.; and on the form displayed the R.G.A. officer is likely to represent the club in all the important matches Forster, who fields the ball cleverly, has a hard and accurate drive, and in addition has speed in his favour. Calcutta has never won the Beighton Cup, but I would not be at all surprised to see the "Reds" lift the trophy this year. They have some stiff fences to negotiate in the League having to meet Rangers, Customs, Medicals and Sibpur as yet, but with the exception of the two first named, who are both decidedly strong, Calcutta should have no great difficulty in getting over the Medicals and Sibpur. Against Rangers and Customs Calcutta will have the advantage of playing on their own ground, so that I would not be surprised if both the Rangers and Customs, were not seen at their best in these matches.

Sibpur, last year's League champions, are not nearly as strong as they were last season—indeed the team is one of the weakest they have had during the last six or seven years. Miles Duncan, and Baptist are playing as well as can be expected, but the loss of Durrell is a severe handicap.

Sibpur lost to the Customs, and on Monday the Engineers were all but defeated by the Measurers—Sibpur drawing level in the last minute of the match. As the trans-Hooghly team have several strong sides to play it is doubtful if they will wind up the League fourth on the table.

The Medicals who tied with Sibpur, last year but lost first place on the result of the re-play, are decidedly weak compared to what they were last season and with the exception of Doyle and Boodrie, the rest of the team have done nothing to catch the eye. The Medicals have lost five good men who represented the side last year, and the absence of McNally, Nyss, and Spiers is keenly felt. The Medicals, however, make a great mistake in entering two teams as there are a couple of good men playing in the "B" Division who cannot now represent the College in the Senior Division, but these will be able to play in the knock out tournament.

St. Xavier's are now settling down, and the Park Street boys will again render a good account of themselves in the Beighton competition. Semi-finals are nothing new to St. Xavier's, while they have also appeared in the final when they lost to Customs after a great struggle the year before last. The younger Fischer has come on a lot, but he is not quite so accurate a shot as his elder brother. Yakchee is playing brilliantly at left back and he, Templeton Anderson, and McCready are four of the oldest local players now in the game. Templeton has played in the Beighton competion since 1895, and as Teddy is in excellent form this season, he may represent his old club the Rangers once more in the big Tournament next month. Last year Templeton played very little hockey.

The Customs and Rangers are likely to have a few changes in their teams, but that will not be until the end of this month. Baker, who plays in the Junior League for the Customs, has the making of a first class player, and the Riversiders have also got a man from Simla, who comes with a good reputation as a hockey and soccer player. By the way, the council of the Bengal Hockey Association has accepted a cup from Messrs S H Smith to be called the Bengal Hockey challenge cup which goes to the winning team in addition to the the Beighton Cup.

It is to be hoped that the Bengal Gymkhana will get the permission of the Bengal Hockey Association to run an Open Hockey Tournament. The Bengal Gymkhana has as Patrons the Earl of Minto and the present Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the Commander-in Chief, and several of the most eminent Civilian and military officials in India, and I am sure the sporting gentleman on the Bengal Hockey Association Committee will be only too glad to see the popular Gymkhana run a hockey tournament of their own. Of course the tournament will be under certain conditions and rules of the Bengal Hockey Association.

The matches during the week have not been of much importance and the results have not affected the clubs at the head of the League except that Calcutta have changed places with the Rangers, the former being at present a point ahead. The Measurers, it is pleasing to state, have obtained three points in their last two matches and Mr. Knox's team are sure to be ahead of Dalhousie and the two Y.M.C.A.'s.

On Saturday Calcutta beat Dalhousie by 6 goals to nil, and on Tuesday the "Reds" beat the E. I. R. after a hard struggle by 2—1, Cole, Hannay and Halliday have been getting most of the goals. The Rangers beat the E. I. R on Saturday by 3 to nil, but the Lillooah men should have scored more than once.

The Customs beat the Amateurs on Monday by 4 goals to 2, and the principal features in this match was the magnificent individual efforts of Staunton for the losers and the fine play of Williamson, Barlow, Boileau and A. Anderson for the winners.

The results of the other matches were Sibpur and Measurers a draw of one all on Saturday, while the latter beat the rovers on Monday by 1 goal to nil.

On Saturday St. Xavier's beat La Martiniere by 4 goals to 1., Medicals beat rovers by 1 goal to nil and Orientals beat Y.M.C.A by 1 to nil.

On Monday the Medicals and St Xavier's played a poor goalless draw, while the Pathans beat Orientals by 4—1.

Lawn Tennis.

THE BENGAL CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE twenty-fifth Bengal Lawn Tennis Championships were brought to a close last Thursday, when C. F. Scroope beat K. M. Singh in the final of the singles.

It was a great disappointment to the Calcutta Cricket Club, in who run these competitions that Atkinson, Davies, and other United Provinces and Punjab men did not enter: it was hoped that the tournament just concluded would produce tennis of as high a standard as has been witnessed in Calcutta, but here too a great disappointment was in store.

The courts were excellent, being well watered and rolled and they presented a beautifully level surface, and the bounce of the ball was always delightfully uniform.

The entries, in spite of the crack up-country players keeping away, were the largest on record, but several of the competitors, especially in the preliminary rounds, were outclassed, and it is a pity that so many novices took part in a championship tournament. Some of the matches—if matches they could be called—were dreadfully one-sided and not worth witnessing. F. N. Warden, who has perhaps not missed taking part in a single tournament during the last twenty-five years, was expected to have the singles at his mercy, but his display was most disappointing. Last year's champion was all but beaten by F. Fox, a youngster who was little considered and did rather poorly at Simla last October, while several other local entrants viz., the brothers Shallow, specially D. S., played much under expectations. F. Warden lost badly to Smith and had the latter not been so unfortunate in having a bout of fever which kept him in bed for three days the Simla champion would have, on the form displayed on previous occasions in this tournament, annexed the singles.

In the doubles C. F. Scroope and Captain Wharton were certainly the two strongest pairs, but had F. A. Thorpe, who partnered Singh been playing in in anything like the form he showed last year at the Eden Gardens, Scroope and Whatford would not have won. The final of the doubles produced certainly the most exciting of matches in the whole tournament, but the tennis was only good in parts. Singh played his usual steady game, and Scroope played hard throughout, and owing to the very evenly balanced sides the match was interesting, but at no time was the tennis brilliant, and the players showed nothing like the skill shown by Atkinson, Kalbarer, Hechle, Pearson, and Davies. Whatford and Thorpe, who were the respective partners of Scroope and Singh, were most erratic, but Whatford made a great effort in the fifth and final set and this enabled his side to win, Scroope and Whatford winning by three sets to two.

One of the best players, in fact the best in the doubles, was E. M. Coates, but unfortunately did not last well. After two sets Coates was utterly exhausted, but had he Singh as his partner, there would be nothing to touch them in the doubles. Coates has a strong service—so long as he is fresh, but he tires, quickly.

If the tennis was not all that could be desired the tournament was run smoothly and Scroope must be congratulated on winning both singles and doubles.

THE WESTERN INDIA CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THERE have been very large attendances this week in the new Bombay Gymkhana courts on the Queen's Road to witness the concluding stages of the Championship. With regard to the Doubles, the European competitors were all disposed of in the semi-finals, leaving a Parsi pair, Naoroji and Engineer, to meet a Mahomedan and Hindu combination in Fyzee and Chinmulgund. The former have had the harder time of it in the earlier rounds, and with Naoroji's natural and open style combined with his partner's steadiness they made up a strong pair. Fyzee has, however, shown himself a very high-class player and Chinmulgund more than useful, and with their skill at volleying in particular they were expected to win. In service there was nothing special, Naoroji being the best with a heap of cut on, and consequently the play was attractive with good, sharp rallies. Fyzee was a together too good for them in the first set, doing most of the damage in running out at 8—6, but in the second misunderstanding and inaccuracy lost it to them easily at 6—2. Chinmulgund struck form in the third, Naoroji was tiring and Engineer's foot ball play was useless so that Fyzee and Chinmulgund had a comfortable time of it with 6—3.

On Thursday the finals of the Singles came off between Fyzee and Engineer, but this was so one sided that very little interest was attached to it. Engineer plays a most careful game, but Fyzee's science was very much superior. He was never extended, kept his opponent on the run throughout and won very easily at 6—2, 6—1.

Mr. Nicholson complimented winners and runners-up, also the Honorary Secretary and his co-workers, hoping that entries from further afield would come in next year now that the tournament has been thrown open to all. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Russell, wife of the President.

Boxing.

THE SIRHIND TOURNAMENT.

THE annual Sirhind Boxing Tournament was held at Umballa commencing on the 29th ultimo, and concluding on the 8th instant. The entries exceeded 120 and seven teams entered for the All-India Regimental Championship Trophy. These were the Royal West Kents, the Welsh Fusiliers, the Connaught Rangers, the Royal Berkshires, the West Ridings, the 3rd K. R. R., the South Lancashires and several men from different batteries. The cup was won for the second year in succession by the Royal Welsh Fusiliers with 21 points, the Royal West Kents being runners up with 16 and the Connaught Rangers next with 14. The Welsh Fusiliers also carried off the Rs. 500 cup presented by H. H. the Maharaja of Patiala. The boxing was good throughout and some tough contests were witnessed. Results will be found below. The general officer commanding gave away the prizes on Saturday night, and in addition to the prizes in the various classes a special award of Rs. 50 was presented by Major Williamson for the competitor showing the most grit: this was won by Staff Sergeant Allen, unattached list. The officials were—Major Williamson, referee; Lieutenant Moore, Gloucester Regiment, and Lieutenant Albin, 2nd King's Regiment, Judges; time-keeper: Lieutenant Simons, South Lancashire Regiment.

Motoring.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

BY "THROTTLE."

THOUGH introducing articles to readers of the Indian Field, under the above heading I offer no apology for going straight into a subject that has already occupied considerable space in the columns of the local dailies. I of course refer to the many letters on rash and negligent driving of motor cars. Rash driving of any vehicle is highly reprehensible and all fair minded people whether themselves drivers or not, can only favour the most drastic measures to suppress an evil that is daily becoming more pronounced on our roads and streets.

Good and considerate driving has become so rare that when seen it is doubly conspicuous. Bad driving has innumerable subdivisions, with certain sections peculiar to certain classes. For instance there is the selfish and thoughtless driver; he is usually an owner-driver, otherwise a Burra Sahib driving his own car. He is easily recognized, even by a blind man; his is usually a "two-seater" and generally noisy. It is equipped with a horn or syren of a most commanding tone. This gentleman can usually be seen on any road at about 10 A.M. hurrying to office and woe betide the hapless individual who happens to create a temporary obstruction, the very tone of the above-mentioned "hooter" makes even the most hardened hang his head in shame. This driver demands the road and rushes through traffic regardless of the claims of others to the "right-of-way," this conduct is particularly conspicuous at crossings and the culprit would indignantly resent any remarks levelled against his driving, simply because he gets through without an accident, nevertheless, he is a real source of annoyance and danger on the roads especially where restive horses are met with. It is an undoubted fact that possession of a car breeds a certain tendency to arrogance in even the mildest mannered man and should the foregoing lead only one offender to think and so nip such a tendency in its infancy, then this ink has not been wasted, because what is needed is an example.

Another prominent class is the Home trained professional driver. He usually takes advantage of the status of his employer, and his own ability, to make his own rules in traffic; the less said of him the better, were it not for him the repair business would be in a bad way in most garages.

Next comes the locally trained native, as a private driver. He also glows with the reflected luminence of his Burra Sahib, and the higher the official position of the owner the greater the insolence and domineering manner of the driver. The inherent aptitude of this driver, by the way, in dealing with the traffic of his native city stands him in good stead of real ability; needless to add his knowledge of the internal mechanism of his charge is usually represented by the familiar "X."

Lastly comes a well-known product peculiar to India. Kipling has shown how to take a farmer, and in a couple of years turn him into a brilliant machine; but to take a ryot, of generations of ryots from the North-Western Provinces and in a couple of weeks turn him loose, armed with a license, in charge of a motor car, as is done in Calcutta, certainly seems to constitute a record. The wonder is really that serious accidents are so rare. Is it surprising after all, with the material and the training, that driving in Calcutta is of a decidedly reckless order?

Only two days ago the writer met an up-country owner, who was in town solely to engage a driver. Five had already been engaged and fares paid only to find on arrival that, because the car was fitted dual ignition, a switch and the usual control levers on the steering wheel, the majority of them could not even start the engine.

In view of this motorist owners would do well to engage their chauffeurs through a responsible garage or agent. Although a considerable one, the driver of the mechanically propelled vehicle is not the only or even perhaps the greatest offender against the traffic regulations. The vagaries of the ghurri-wallah and his confere of the bullock cart are so well known that space need not be wasted here by pointing them out or dwelling on them.

Owing to the very low intellectual standard of the majority of road users in India, a remedy for rash driving is difficult to arrive at, but a start might be made by the appointment of a few scouts in plain clothes who would relentlessly bring to book all road users, motorists or others who created any breach of the traffic regulations. This scheme could very conveniently be worked by the co-operation of the Automobile Association with the Police as has been done at Home.

Again, by making the examination for a driving license more severe and re-examining holders of those already issued the intellectual status could be considerably raised.

Another question of almost equal importance to Calcutta motorists is that of road tarring.

This dressing, though of great value as a dust laye, is not without its serious drawbacks, chief among which are the yellow stains left on the under side of white painted mud guards. These marks are not conspicuous on dark painted cars, but the writer can instance two white cars considerably disfigured in the manner mentioned, solely because no opportunity occurred for removing the tar splashes for some hours after they had been received.

A MERITORIOUS motor performance which attracted only very slight attention, even in the local motor world was carried out recently in Calcutta: I refer to the continuous running for twenty-six hours of one of the motor fire engines of the Calcutta Fire Brigade.

This was highly creditable entailing as it did the working of two pumps at a high pressure. I am informed that the engine behaved beautifully and it says much for the very high state of efficiency to which motors have been brought. By the courtesy of Superintending Engineer Phillips an opportunity was recently given the writer to inspect these engines and the visit well repays any time taken over it by anyone interested in mechanics. The staff take considerable pride in their charges and are always pleased to exhibit them to visitors, and relate stories both thrilling and amusing of experiences at fires, and on the road to them, through the congested portions of the city.

THE Renard Road Train which was in Calcutta some years ago has made its reappearance from Home.

This engine is the product of the famous Daimler Company, and a worthy representative. The driver tells one that in two and a half years he has never had any engine trouble to speak of. Considering its size and the nature of its work this is very good. The train is, I understand, about to be commissioned for colliery work in place of a light railway.

OWNERS need to be very careful just now when leaving their cars outside theatres, hotels, etc., as several cases of theft of accessories are occurring. Recent losses consist of brass hub caps, lamps, a stepney wheel with tyre and tube and a jointed mirror for observing traffic approaching from the rear.

As well as the thief there is another individual making his presence felt, that is the practical joker: hitherto his attentions have been directed only to closing petrol cocks and such harmless but annoying pranks, but immunity from detection will certainly breed boldness, consequently it is advisable to impress on cyclists or drivers the necessity of remaining with the car and of keeping awake, otherwise one may be confronted with the necessity of going home in a tikka ghari in the small hours and having the car pushed into a garage, as a friend of mine did, only to discover that the wiring had been changed on his magneto.

Easter is rapidly approaching but before its arrival I hope to place at the disposal of my readers some hints and suggestions to assist them, in the face of the very limited facilities for touring in this part of the empire.

THE PRESERVATION OF TUSKS.

MANY an Indian sportsmen on his return from a toilsome but successful tiger-shooting expedition in the plains during the hot weather, bringing with him a fine series of skulls of "stripes," has been grievously mortified to find that these trophies have been utterly ruined by the splitting and cracking of their tusks and other teeth. This is due, of course, to the parching and desiccating effects of the hot winds, which suddenly dry up every particle of animal matter from the teeth, thus causing them to shrink and fly in pieces, not infrequently indeed with explosive violence. If the teeth are not exposed to the direct effects of a hot wind, the drying up process is slower, and may be accomplished without material damage, although even in such cases unsightly cracks may be formed in the tusks.

Much the same thing takes place in the case of elephant tusks, which nearly always develop a series of small longitudinal cracks during the process of drying; while if the drying takes place too rapidly, as under the influence of a hot wind, these small cracks often enlarge into great chinks, which seriously diminish the commercial value of the ivory.

The usual native remedy is to case the teeth with wax; but this, of course, is merely a palliative and not a cure.

The large collection of hippopotamus tusks brought from East Africa by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt to Washington appears to have shown signs of going to pieces; and the officials of the Museum in that city accordingly set to work to find some means of mitigating the evil. After a multitude of experimenters, one of them, Mr. F. L. J. Boettcher, seems to have been successful in his efforts.

At first the idea was entertained that by coating the tusk with some kind of varnish or size that would completely exclude atmospheric air, it might be made to retain its animal matter; but this was found to be quite impracticable, and it was eventually considered that the best plan would be to introduce into the tusk some substance which would penetrate its most minute tubercles, and thus render them impervious to air.

The substance most suitable for this purpose is ordinary solid paraffin ; its special suitability being that it contains, as impurities, certain quantities of lower grade paraffin, which will melt at a comparatively low temperative and become volatile below 100° centigrade. Such low grade paraffins will work their way more or less rapidly in the vaporous condition into the most minute tubules of the tusk, where, when cooled and crystallised, they form points of attention for the pure paraffin, which volatilises only at a higher temperature ; and this process will go on until finally the more slowly moving high grade paraffin has completely penetrated the finest tubules of the ivory or teeth. The greater the volatility of the paraffin, the greater, of course, its diffusive power.

Although superior to every other substance that has been tried for the purpose, paraffin is not, however, absolutely perfect, for it has the fault of contracting to an extent of about 14 per cent. of its bulk on cooling. This of course permits the entrance of air in the tubules ; but as it fortunately happens that the paraffin forms a complete sheath to the inner walls of the latter, the introduced air cannot get at the substance of the tusk.

There is, indeed, the danger that with the inrush of air to fill the vacuum caused by the cooling paraffin bacteria and spores of funguses may find their way into the tubules, where they may multiply or grow, and thus lead to the decomposition of the paraffin.

Nevertheless, observes Mr. Boettcher, "in spite of its contraction, crystallisation, and other imperfections, including the possibility of decomposition by moulds or bacteria, and in spite of the darkening effect and greasy touch, paraffin is at present the only substance that approaches in any considerable degree the conditions necessary for a perfect medium for the preservation of organic substances, such as teeth and bones. Still this substance can be employed successfully only in case it has been infiltered in its pure and uncombined state at a sufficiently high temperature."

As regards the practical methods of applying the paraffin, the author writes as follows :—

"The methods to be pursued in preserving osteological specimens necessarily vary according to their size, thickness, and purpose. If the subject is merely to prevent cracking during prolonged overland transport, as in the case of tusks in Africa, it may suffice to carefully pour the melted paraffin into the open end of the tusk previously heated. In employing this process any sudden change of temperature should be avoided. After allowing the tusk to absorb the paraffin for a few minutes, the surplus material should be poured off. The outside of the tusk may then be treated with a benzine solution of paraffin, which should be well rubbed over every part of the surface, using as much as the latter will absorb while exposed to the heat of the sun. If this has been well attended to, there is not much danger of longitudinal cracking, so undesirable in ivory intended for miniature painting, although it must be remembered at the same time that the slow desiccation and gradual contraction are not checked altogether because of the tendency of the paraffin to liquefy more or less during the day in the heat of the sun and recrystallize as the temperature declines. This method will prove very satisfactory for tusks intended for industrial purposes, as it is undesirable to have the paraffin penetrate deeply.

"If the purpose in view is permanent preservation, a large boiler of a sufficient size to allow the object to be immersed completely is heated in a water bath. In this boiler the object to be preserved is suspended by a wire for an hour or two in the case of small skulls, such as those of rats or mice, to a week or more in the case of tusks of a hippopotamus. . . . . .

"To allow bubbles of air to escape from cul-de-sac hollows in the skulls, the latter should be frequently shifted to different positions. When fully saturated, that is, when after long observation no more bubbles are found breaking above it, the object may be removed from the paraffin and drained in various positions in the heat immediately above the paraffin. If too much paraffin has been removed, a rapid dip in the hot liquid, and subsequent draining in a hot place, or a rub, will quickly restore the deficiency."

Specimens when thus treated are of course more or less greasy and will therefore tend to collect dust, so that they require pretty constant wiping in order to be kept in a presentable condition.

Although the addition of a store of paraffin, and perhaps also of an iron bath, to his impedimenta will undoubtedly not please the sportsman who desires to travel as lightly as possible, the fact that a means of preventing the destruction of ivory and tigers tusks by the scorching winds and sun of India and Africa should be a source of sincere satisfaction to all interested in the preservation of sporting trophies.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The situation created by the Bombay Racing Bill V. of 1912 was yesterday considered by the Stewards and Members of the W.I.T.C. at a General Meeting held at the Taj Mahal Hotel. The correspondence between the W.I.T.C. and the Government of Bengal as well as copies of the proposed Indian Bill and the Race Courses Licensing Act of 1879 (England) were placed upon the table and members were asked to consider the position which the Government of Bombay have taken up. In reply to a letter of the W.I.T.C., dated the 26th February 1912, asking what were the probable conditions under which the two racecourses at Bombay and Poona would be licensed, Government said that these conditions would be—

"(a) that Bookmakers are prohibited from carrying on their business within the licensed premises of the Club, and

(b) that there be not more than 15 days racing in the year on the Bombay Course and not more than 15 days in the year on the Poona Course.

As regards the unit of stakes in the totalizators, Government will withhold their decision until they have consulted the Stewards."

The Stewards of the W.I.T.C. had already in their previous correspondence with Government before the revision of the Draft Bill agreed to abolish bookmakers, but had pointed out that the proposed legislation, whilst doing away with the "licensed" bookmaker who betted on the racecourses under the W.I.T.C's control and who was required by the Club to make a deposit to safeguard the public who betted with him, did not touch the "bucket-shop" operators over whom the W.I.T.C. had no control and who, according to the Government's original contention, were equally with the "licensed" operator a cause of gambling increasing in this Presidency. The new draft Bill makes no provision whatever with regard to the "bucket-shop" operator, but is aimed solely at the Bombay and Poona Race Meetings and at obtaining power to Government to control them in any manner that it may seem good to them to do. The terms upon which licenses are to be issued to the two big courses in Western India are absolutely at the discretion of Government: no guarantee is given that these terms may not be made more onerous and restrictive: no guarantee is given that these courses may not at any moment be closed down and racing in the Bombay Presidency entirely stopped.

In the Statement of Objects and Reasons for the Bombay Racing Bill 1912 it is claimed that it is modelled on the English Statute for the Licensing of Metropolitan Suburban Racecourses. This is erroneous and entirely misleading. The English Act, beyond that it provides for the licensing of racecourses and the prohibition of racing on any course within a 10 mile radius of Charing Cross, in no way resembles the Bill that Sir George Clarke proposes to make law on the 1st June 1912. The English Act was passed solely to prevent racecourses being made in congested areas near London and it grants no power to the Government to control the management of any racecourse to which a license has been issued, or to say how many days racing there shall be at such course, or in what manner racecourse betting shall be conducted, or what shall be the maximum stake that a bettor may wager. The English Act does not, as the Indian one is intended to do, give the Government any power of control over the management of the private affairs of any private club, racing organization, etc., and this Bombay Act is the first of its kind that has ever been put forward. The regulation of racecourses in England is in the hands of the Jockey Club: this Indian Bill seeks to place the Government of Bombay in a position in that Presidency similar to that held by the Stewards of the Jockey Club in England—but with this exception that the new Bill provides that the Government of Bombay shall have the power to criminally prosecute offenders under this Act and fine them to an amount which may extend to Rs. 1,000. That is to say, that if any race meeting in Bombay is not conducted in any detail as the Governor of Bombay may consider that it should be conducted, he can swoop down and order a criminal prosecution of any person or persons whomsoever. Such a position is as intolerable as it is unheard of, and if this Bill is allowed to pass into law in its present form it will stand as a monument of bureaucratic interference with the rights of the individual. In no other country in the world would interference of this description be tolerated and we have hope that even now at the eleventh hour the Bombay Government may be defeated. An Act upon the lines of the Race Courses Licensing Act would be amply sufficient and the control and regulation of such racecourses as obtain licenses thereunder might fittingly be left to the influential hands in which it has rested for so many years past. What special knowledge of turf affairs and their management do the Government of Bombay possess to qualify them to constitute themselves a Jockey Club in Western India? Can H.E. the Governor or any of his officials lay claim to any experience whatever of racing or racecourses and how they should be conducted and managed? Has any such interference as this ever been considered necessary by any Government anywhere in the world? Is it alleged that racing in Bombay is worse managed than anywhere else in the world? These are some of the questions which suggest themselves as requiring an immediate answer before the Government of Bombay is permitted to proceed with this specious legislation.

The correspondence and the copies of the Indian Bill and the English Race Courses Licensing Act 1879 have been sent to H.E. the Viceroy and to the Secretary of State and it remains to be seen whether the Government of Bombay are to be allowed to have their way and ride roughshod over the rights and privileges of the individual and of a private club. It is no secret that H.E. the Viceroy does not personally approve of this action on the part of Sir George Clarke and it is furthermore said that when Lord Crewe was in India, he was told that all that Sir George Clarke proposed to do was to bring in a Bill exactly like the English Act and that the Secretary of State then said that he saw no objection to such a Bill. When however the revised draft is published it is seen that it in no way resembles the English Act, but goes to limits that are not so much as hinted at in the enactment upon which Sir George Clarke says that it is "modelled"!!

Whether bookmakers are a necessary adjunct to racing in Western India it is now bootless to discuss since the W.I.T.C. have been compelled at the point of the sword to say that they are not necessary. H.E. the Governor gave the W.I.T.C. the choice of either abolishing bookmakers or being themselves turned off the courses at Bombay and Poona. The W.I.T.C. had no option. As to whether the bookmaker is a necessity to racing in India we personally think that he is and we hold that the totalizator is not an all-sufficient means of speculation for either the owner or the public. The totalizator minus the bookmaker has been tried in Calcutta and proved a dismal failure and we opine that things are not much different in Bombay. The fact that "the Bank always wins in the end" is always cited against the bookmaker: but what about the totalizator? Does not the same argument apply? Is the totalizator any different excepting in detail to Monte Carlo? But the chief reason why totalizator betting in India will never be found to be satisfactory by itself—as it is claimed that it is in other countries—is that there is not the public in India. Stakes again are too small to make it possible for the average owner to carry on the game without betting and the totalizator is not a machine in which a horse can be backed "to money." Hence it follows, that as things are, it is necessary to have the bookmaker and to recognize that, if he is an evil, he is a no greater one than the "tables" at Monte or anywhere else that a bettor stakes his money on the wheel of fortune! In India the ring is particularly well-regulated and the interests of backers safeguarded. Great care is exercised in licensing only bookmakers of proven financial stability and the cases of "welshing" are so few and far between that we may say that they are practically unknown. There has only been in the last 25 years one case in which a bookmaker, licensed by the two big racing clubs in India, has failed to meet his liabilities and in which the deposit put up by him was not available to meet his creditor-clients' demands. The case is no doubt still fresh in the memories of most racing men in India as it made a good deal of stir at the time. Can a record like this be shown by any other country in which racing is carried on? Do we not almost every season at home hear of backers being "welshed" and in some cases by the "leviathans" who plaster the sporting papers with their advertisements and who assure a credulous world that a "tenner" is all the same as ten thousand "tenners" to them and that they are as safe as the Bank of England! In India we very rarely hear of any backer being "done in" and without holding any brief one way or the other for the Indian Bookmaker, we must say that the Licensed Ring in this country is composed of men of undoubted financial stability who punctiliously meet their engagements and liabilities. "The Bank wins in the end" no doubt, but the individual very frequently brings off a coup, or else he would not go on betting, and it is hardly necessary when speaking to racing men to press that point. A may lose to-day and win to-morrow and B may win to-day and lose to-morrow but so long A and B continue to race in India they will find it difficult to make the two ends meet and run a stable if there is no ringman!

There is not much news concerning the big "futures" of the English Turf by this mail. Reuter even announces that owing to the Coal Strike both Lincoln and Liverpool may have to be abandoned. It is said that Warfare is still a perfectly genuine candidate for the Lincoln and that there was still plenty of money for him but that it was doubtful whether he would keep his present place in the betting till the end. Brandimintine, who ran up to Mercutio in this race last year, was mentioned in two or three places when the mail left and so were Mercutio and Hornet's Beauty, whilst it was said that there was always money for Spanish Prince and that it was from the right source. Mr. Joel is very confident and has not let a chance go by when the odds have been favourable of supporting his candidate. Brandimintine is, however, the horse that the "heads" seem to think best worth watching and as he meets Mercutio at 5lb. better terms for the one length beating last year in this race and, as the latter's weight has gone up, they say that whatever happens it is probable that Brandimintine will reverse last year's positions. Mr. Hibbert, it is said, has backed Mercutio and the training reports say that the horse is doing very well and will go out on to the course very fit indeed. All the Lincoln horses are said to be far more forward than they were last season, as it has been a very open winter and work has not been interfered with in the way that it was last season.

For the National Rathnally was still being backed when the mail left and as the Hednesford horses are at present in great form, the general opinion is that although 5 to 1 and 6 to 1 are absurd prices about this race, he will take a power of beating. There has been some talk of Caubeen and his friends say that when he refused in last year's race he was going quite as well as Rathnally. Impartial critics say "no", and that he was a beaten horse when they went out "into the country" the second time, also that he refused from distress. Caubeen is an entire and they do not as a rule improve as racehorses with age. Old Grudon was a case to the contrary, but as a general rule entires are not the beau ideal of cross-country horses. Of horses engaged in this year's Grand National that ran in the Grand Sefton over 2 miles 7 furlongs and 110 yards of the Aintree country last November, are Carsey who won, Jenkinstown who was second, Bedgrove who finished third, Axle Pin who ran fourth, Glenside who fell at the first fence, Regent who bolted up the flat course (a horse that has been mentioned in connection with this year's National) and Lady Slavey who fell at the fence after Valentine's. In last year's Grand National the number of loose horses was a great source of danger and it was suggested that openings should be provided so that these animals could be got off the course, for, as things were then, there were no openings by which they could get out and they consequently were left careering about between the fences bringing down some of the few competitors left standing up and generally making a nuisance of themselves. It is advanced however that if openings were left for these horses to run out of they would be a great danger to the crowd. The only way is to have people out to try and catch them and have them then led through any openings that may be available. Perhaps the man who catches a horse would like to claim the steeplechasing privilege of riding him on over the course! In the year (1904) that Moifaa won there were no rails on the outside of the course and Mr. F. Bibby's Comfit, who had come down, managed eventually to jump into the canal. Mr. Bibby offered a sovereign to the man who would save him. Five men brought Comfit back to the paddock and were given a sovereign each; they then promptly disappeared in the crowd and three more men, dripping wet, came up and said that they had got Comfit out and not the other unjust five. So Mr. Bibby gave them a quid each, but when three more men appeared and said that all the previous eight were liars and that it was they and they alone who had saved Comfit from a watery grave the owner kicked! The three departed reviling him but he heeded them not and requested them to depart beyond that bourne from which no traveller returneth!

The wedding of Miss Butlin to Mr. E. C. Ramshaw, the well-known trainer, took place at St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta, this (Thursday) morning at 11-30 A.M. Mr. and Mrs. Ramshaw leave by the evening train for Madras and go on to Ootacamund where the honeymoon will be spent. Our best congratulations!

Mr. D. McCalmont, who is in India with his regiment the 7th Hussars, will probably be represented amongst Indian owners next season as he has sent home for some horses and Ramshaw will very probably train them.

Mr. R. Craig McKerrow will also probably pick up two new ones whilst he is at home. Mr. McKerrow is expected back next December.

The dates of the Calcutta Monsoon Races have been fixed as follows:—First meeting, 3rd, 10th, 17th and 24th August; 2nd meeting, 4th, 7th and 14th September.

The Lucknow Fourth Gymkhana Race Meeting will be held on the 28th and 30th instant and the following are the dates of the big meetings at Lucknow during season 1912-13: Autumn meeting 1912, 19th, 21st and 23rd November; Spring meeting 1913, 30th January, 1st and 3rd February with possibly an extra day on 5th February.

The Army Cup race will be run at the Lucknow Autumn at the end of next November. Entries close as follows: 1st June, 1st July, 31st August, 1st October and 2nd November: the Civil Service Cup at the Spring Meeting at the beginning of February next, entries closing 1st June, 1st July, 31st August, 2nd November, 13th January.

A splendid feat of horsemanship was achieved by Major F. Walshe, R. A., at the recent point-to-point meeting of the Peshawar Vale Hunt. He rode his own horse Newcastle to victory in the light-weight Hunt Cup, which opened the programme, but was disqualified for overweight. He then won the second race on Grey Plume and also the third race for the Heavy-weights, when he was again first on Newcastle. He fell in this event but remounted and finished streets in front of the others. In the fifth race he won on Valiant but was disqualified for going the wrong side of a flag. Four firsts out of five races is good enough.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—On Saturday for the Twelfth Extra there was a very long card of nine events and as full an attendance as seen this year. Several favourities got home, but with one absolute outsider, punters can scarcely claim any advantage. Kuhn was the only one to ride more than one winner, young Harrison registering his first win on the unbacked Yvette, riding quite a good race.

The first two races, divisions of a Maiden Plate for new ones, provided two of the good things of the day. Having placed in good company, Berar looked good for the first two comparatively untried ones in Bahiz and Beyrut being also fancied. Of these, the former made a good bid, being in front most of the way with Different handy. Berar got none too good a run and had to come rather wide but nearly a furlong from home he had it won.

Lord Durham similarly stood out in the second Fathi Beg and Trustee being thought the dangerous ones. Shirsab and Authority set the pace, then the latter went out only to be passed by the favourite at the three, and this one went on to win easily. Fathi Beg secured his place but Trustee missed his, though he gave a good indication that he is very useful.

The mile and a quarter saw another run on Terror, Thaboor, Rozelmulook and Parliament also in the betting. This was a win all the way for Rozelmulook, who jumped out in front of Parliament, Thaboor and Mutrood and kept there comfortably. Thaboor fell back and Mutrood ran on to beat Parliament for second place.

In the nine furlongs for all horses there was a field of seven with Lady Erna soon down to odds on from Bachelor's Knot and Gallileo at fives. This again was never any race, the mare getting away in front of Aqueduct, Bachelor's Knot and Goldseeker. The last named dropped out before the turn, and on rounding Devereux put in a run, but Bachelor's Knot held him without being able to make any impression upon Lady Erna.

Next the mile for Arabs, Regent at once settling down a hot favourite, only to expand on money coming for Crown Prince and Ghalyum. Hyder Beg was first away, but soon Ghalyum was in his usual place clear in front. Crown Prince came a long way round and was subsequently held fairly comfortably by Ghalyum with Prime Minister placing from Regent, who got a good enough journey along the rails.

There were only five starters in the mile handicap for hunters, and the previous winner, Best Luck, was made favourite from Silverbolt with a nibble at Tragedian. Once more Avocet was quickest away with a long lead from Silverbolt, Best Luck being a good distance further back. Instead of gradually closing up, Best Luck was driven along and actually took the lead at the five furlongs. This naturally took so much out of him that Silverbolt was able to hold him safe in the straight. Mr. Wilson's judgment was a contrast, as he wisely allowed his most serious opponent to run himself out.

There was very good betting in both divisions of the Old Maiden Plate, in which several new ones figured without success. In the first Baldwin was considered a hot thing, but at the finish there was plenty of money for Electric, Assud (late Far East) and Yussuff Pasha. Polish was first away, then Electric on the rails held a slight lead from Yussuff Pasha. As they turned Baldwin got through, but Electric held him very safe by a long margin.

In the second there was first a run on Gowahajmer, but he then went right out to sevens, Rangoon settling down favourite at threes from Red Monk, Mat-hat-Baig and Chaman. Six-fifty and Golden Day saw to the pace, but once in the straight Mat-hat-Baig went clear away and easily outstayed Makeb and a late run wide outside by Dilkhush.

Sandwiched between these was the horse sprint, a really bad upset. In a field of nine Lady Erna was backed to win again down to odds on from Wellfield, Danseuse and Picnic. The early running was made by Wellfield, then by Ruby Tin from Yvette, the latter going away at the quarter mile to win easily from Danseuse, who had been rather far out of it.

The final of the Military Racquets Singles Championship was played at Prince's Club, London, on the 14th instant when Lieutenant Muir of the 15th Sikhs beat Captain Berger, Army Service Corps, by 15-3, 15-11, 12-15 and 15-12. Muir then met and defeated the holder, Captain Luther, Yorkshire Light Infantry, in the challenge round by 14-17, 14-18, 18-15, 15-8 and 15-12.

The 10th Hussars by defeating the 17th Lancers in the final of the Subalterns' Polo tournament have thus carried off both the big Meerut tournaments. The 17th Lancers were also their opponents in the final of the Inter-regimental tournament concluded last week.

The Football tournament promoted by the 10th Royal Hussars was brought to a conclusion at Rawalpindi on the 9th instant when the 17th Lancers met the 7th Brigade R.F.A. in the final. The game was well contested throughout. Each team scored a goal in the first half but on changing ends the gunners notched another point and though the Lancers made desperate efforts they were unable to equalise and were beaten by the odd goal in three.

The Barton Cup Polo tournament began at Jubbulpore last week. The only game of the first round was between the 22nd Punjabis and the Royal Artillery, the gunners being quite outplayed and eventually beaten by 8 goals to one. The first game in the second round brought together the Royal Fusiliers and the Poona Gymkhana, the Central India team winning by 8 goals to nil. The next game was between the Bhopal Imperial Lancers and the Civilians, the Lancers winning a well-contested match by 3 goals to 2. The 22nd Punjabis then met the 2nd Lancers and beat them by 6 goals to 3. The Cavalry School were to have met the 32nd Lancers but scratched.

The two Hockey tournaments, for cups presented by General Alderson, were concluded at Poona last week. The British troops tournament ended in a win for the Royal Warwicks and in the Native Army competition the 110th Mahrattas were victorious. Results were as follows:—British—Dorsets beat Loyal N. Lancs by 5 goals to one: Royal Warwicks beat Dublin Fusiliers by 3 goals to nil: Royal Warwicks beat Divisional Staff by 6 goals to 1. Final, Royal Warwicks beat Dorsets by 2 goals to 1. Native—3rd Sappers and Miners beat 127th Baluchis by 4 goals to 3: 105th Mahrattas beat 117th Mahrattas by 4 goals to nil: 105th Mahrattas beat 3rd Sappers and Miners by 3 goals to 1: 110th Mahrattas beat 12th Pioneers by 2 goals to nil. Final, 110th Mahrattas beat 105th Mahrattas by 8 goals to 1.

Private Roberts of the King's Regiment, who established a new record for the British Army 1,000 yards and also won the mile at the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association Championships last month, ran with great success at the regimental meeting held at Lahore on the 13th and 14th instant. He won the ½ mile open to the Lahore Division, the mile open to Northern Army and the regimental mile. Private Parker, who has represented the regiment in the sprints at the Bengal Championships during the past four years, was much to the fore last week. He won the regimental 100 yards, the hurdle race and the ¼ mile open to troops in Lahore and was second in the long jump, the obstacle race and putting the shot. This performance secured for him the cup presented to the champion athlete of the regiment.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The Honorary Secretary (Major Rankin, D.S.O., 7th Q. O. Hussars), of the Gymkhana Races, has issued an amended programme for the Polo and Racing to be held here during our spring week, in which the original dates have been altered. The amended dates are:—

8th, 9th and 10th April.—1st and 2nd ties of Novices and Handicap Tournaments.

11th April.—Point-to-Point and National Hunt Steeplechases at Agram. 1st race 4-30 P.M.

12th April.—Finals of both Tournaments on Ulsoor Ground, beginning at 4-30 P.M.

The programme of the Bangalore Point-to-Point and National Hunt Steeplechases has also been issued, the date being altered from 4th to 11th April.

The Punjab Frontier Force Polo Tournament held at Mardan attracted only four teams this year. Of these the 22nd had to scratch leaving in the 25th Cavalry (holders), the Guides Cavalry and the Guides Infantry. The two Guides teams met in the first round on the 6th instant, a hard galloping game ending in a win for the Infantry by 7 goals to 1. For the winners, where all were good, Buist and Campbell were most conspicuous and of the losers Blois Johnson stood out by himself. The teams were:—

Guides Cavalry: Mr. H. M. Hankin (1), Mr. H. W. Ogilvie (2), Mr. D. K. Macleod (3), Major J. E. Blois Johnson (back). Guides Infantry: Major H. M. Cruddas (1), Mr. P. D. A. Banks (2), Captain H. Campbell (3), Major A. A. Buist (back). Umpires: Captain Hamilton, 15th Lancers, and Captain Clarke, 15th Lancers.

The final was between the 25th Cavalry and the Guides Infantry, a splendid game resulting in a win for the holders by 4 goals to 3. With the exception of Buist who gave a fine display, the Guides did not show as good form as in their first match and of the winning team Teesdale and Nethersole were most prominent. The Guides opened the scoring through Campbell in the first period; Nethersole equalised in the second and the 25th went ahead in the third. The fourth chukker was pointless, but in the fifth the Guides woke up: Banks put the teams on terms and Buist gave them a lead. The last was a well-contested period: the 25th scored twice without response and winning by 4 to 3, thus retained the cup.

The tie in the competition for the Ladies' Challenge Bowl held at the annual "At Home" of the Calcutta Golf Club recently was replayed on the 16th instant with the following result:—

	Gross.	Hcap.	Net.
T. E. Dent	95	— 15	80
G. H. E. Zerffi ...	101	— 18	83
Geo. K. Stein	103	— 16	87

A large gathering assembled at the 2nd Royal Fusiliers' Boxing Tournament in Jubbulpore on the 15th instant to witness the fight between Tates of the Royal Fusiliers and Hauston of the Black Watch, who styles himself champion of India. It was an exciting contest, Hauston being knocked out in the ninth round.

A London correspondent gives a few details of the short and sensational boxing match at Monaco between Jim Sullivan, the English middleweight champion, and Georges Carpentier, the Frenchman. The match was nominally one of 20 rounds, but Carpentier knocked Sullivan out in the second round. In the first round Carpentier led off, but mis-judged his distance, and Sullivan got home with a good left. Carpentier followed with three lefts in succession, but went wide with a vicious uppercut. Just before the bell rang, however, Carpentier got in an uppercut and Sullivan was very shaky when he went to his corner. In the second round Carpentier attacked at once and swung a terrific right on to his opponent's jaw, following this with a left to the body and a left hook to the jaw. This last blow knocked Sullivan out.

The Aga Khan Hockey Tournament is to be held in Bombay during April. All British regiments and recognised civilian clubs and gymkhanas are invited to compete. The tournament commences on 9th April and entries close on Saturday, 23rd March, the entrance fee being Rs. 25. Messrs. E. L. Sim and B. May (Bombay Gymkhana), are the honorary secretaries.

The following twenty teams have entered for this year's tournament for the Kaivan Hockey Cup which begins in Calcutta on the 27th instant:—Armenian College, Bengal-Nagpur Railway, Burn's H. C., Calcutta Boys' School, Calcutta Police, Customs "B" Doveton College, Eastern Bengal State Railway, Knight Rangers, Messurers "B," Medical "B," Oriental "B." 40th Pathans, Presidency College, Red Hackles, 70th R.G.A., St. Joseph's School, St. Xavier's College, Sibpur College "B," and Telegraph A. C.

Some years have elapsed since the London Zoological Society has been able to exhibit a specimen of that most beautiful species of the large carnivores, the snow-leopard. The Society has been endeavouring to obtain examples of these animals for some time and hoped to be able to exhibit at least four very shortly before the last English mail left. In the Nepal collection of animals presented to the King there are two young snow-leopards, while another pair of nine-month-old cubs, which were obtained by Captain Oliver, F.Z.S., in Kashmir, arrived at the Gardens on Wednesday last in excellent condition. Although very closely allied to the common leopard, the snow-leopard is somewhat larger, an adult specimen often measuring over 7 feet from muzzle to end of tail, while the thick, woolly fur is pale or yellowish-grey on the upper surface and pure white below, marked with large black rosettes, which more resemble the markings of the jaguar than those of the leopard. The natural habitat of the snow-leopard is in the highlands of Central Asia, and it is seldom found at a lower elevation than 9,000 feet. As it lies in a barren country, exposed to severe cold and great heat, alternately, the snow-leopard is, under its natural climatic conditions, very hardy, and practically impervious to the vicissitudes of the weather. On the other hand, however, being accustomed to rarified, exhilarating, and practically microbe-free air, it is very liable to contract pneumonia and tuberculosis when placed in confinement. The food of the snow-leopard consists chiefly of marmots and other small rodents.

"The all-round man" is to be the ideal of the sporting world's aspirations this year.

"The most interesting novelty in the Olympic Games to be held in Stockholm in July," said the Rev. R. S. de Courcy Laffan, honorary secretary of the British Olympic Association to a Morning Leader representative "is the modern Pentathlon. The competitors have to compete not in one branch of sport, but in five, and the man who does all these things best will be acknowledged the best all-round sportsman in the meeting. The competition is already proving very attractive to Englishmen. I know that a number of them are in active training."

It is interesting to learn what, in the opinion of the Swedish Olympic Committee, constitutes the all-round sportsman. The answer is contained in the list of the five things which competitors in the Pentathlon are asked to do. They are:—Duel shooting; Swimming; Fencing; Riding; Cross-country racing.

The "duel-shooting" is really pistol or revolver shooting at a whole figure target 1·7 metre high and divided into zones, which is visible for three seconds at intervals of ten seconds. The competitor will be allowed 20 shots in four series of five shots each, the target being 25 metres distant. (A metre is 39⅜in.) The swimming distance is 300 metres and the cross-country race will be over a distance of about two and a half miles, starting and finishing in the Stadium.

For the all-round athlete, as distinguished from the all-round sportsman, a Pentathlon, and a Decathlon as well, have been arranged. In the latter he has to compete in the following ten things: 100 metres flat race, running broad jump, putting the weight, running high jump, 400 metres flat race, 110 metres hurdle race, throwing the discus, pole jump, throwing the javelin and 1,500 metres flat race.

The national coal strike seems to be on us, though a perusal of to-day's papers is apt to leave room for doubt as to whether it is even yet fait accompli. About one million miners have laid down their tools and at any rate until they take them up again it would look as if we are going to be short of coal ere long. Be this as it may, at the time of closing these notes, the outstanding facts are that yesterday the Northumberland mine-owners came into line with the majority of the employers and agreed to accept the principle of the minimum wage: and that Mr. Asquith announced the determination of the Government to give effect to that principle. Thus the situation now is that 65 per cent. of the owners have accepted the principle and only 35 remain obstinate. The Prime Minister intimated that the resistance of this "dwindling minority" would not be permitted unduly to delay the enforcement of the minimum wage.

This looks as if peace were within reach. But do we really need peace, would it not be better to have one huge national bust up and get at something like finality though the way be through misery, starvation, trade dislocation, money waste, riot and death. Seems to me we have got into such a frightful mess over here, with the balance of nature so disturbed that almost every one is out of his right box, so to speak, with our unemployed, our discontented, our seditionist, our socialists and all our other undesirables and irreconcilables and that amazing change in the national spirit which makes everything a feverish, hysterical rush, the time is ripe for a resolution. We have travelled much too fast, we must try back, for only that way lies success; but, alas! nothing short of a revolution will effect it.

Of course rumours of other impending strikes are in the air. How does a gravediggers' strike appeal to you as the latest phase of labour unrest? In three Glasgow cemeteries these morbid but necessary functionaries have struck work for a three-shilling weekly advance, a reduction of digging hours, and more holidays.

The fraternity of the spade have evidently learned to take a brighter outlook on life than Gabriel Grubb, who was annoyed, it will be remembered, by the holiday spirit abroad at Christmastime. We would, however, urge the gravediggers not to carry things with too high a hand. They are not like coaldiggers, indispensable, for cremation has made us fairly independent of them.

At the Whitechapel County Court, a few days ago, twenty of the men summoned to serve on the jury were named Solomon. It seems a lot. Even in Whitechapel it is possible to have too much of a good thing. Toujours Solomon suggests monotony. If too many cooks spoil the broth, is it not possible that too many Solomons might spoil the judgment? On the other hand, it is only fair to say that in a multitude of Solomons there may be wisdom. We are not told if Solomon was the first name or the surname, or both—if there was a Solomon Isaacs, or an Isaac Solomon, or a Solomon Solomon—but one may be at least sure of a desire on the part of all the twenty Solomons to live up to their great and glorious name. But Solomon (apart altogether from the question of a plurality of wives) is a difficult name to live up to. One could live up to Moses, or Abraham, or Nathan or Aaron or Methuselah with difficulty—even with a feeling of jaunty confidence. But Solomon's reputation for wisdom and grandeur, for his temple, his family connections and his judgment—to say nothing of the Queen of Sheba—does take a lot of living up to. And there seem to be such a lot of Solomons in Whitechapel. It rains Solomons. You cannot walk five yards without treading on a Solomon. The County Court is paved with Solomons. The jury-box overflows with them. There must be a Solomon microbe in Whitechapel

The latest Gaiety success is "The Sunshine Girl," a musical play in two acts by Paul Rubens and Cecil Raleigh. No one goes to the Gaiety for the play. We all go to enjoy the Gaiety company disporting themselves—Mr. George Grossmith, junior, wearing his clothes, Mr. Edmund Payne twisting his face, Miss Olive May moving her limbs, Miss Connie Ediss speaking her mind, and Miss Phyllis Dare (or whoever the ingenue of the moment may be) looking pretty. And the great merit of "The Sunshine Girl" is that it sends us away feeling that we should like to see more of all these, and of Mr. George Barrett, and Mr. Robert Nainby, and clever Miss Mabel Sealby, and Miss Violet Essex, the new singer with the fine voice, and Mr. Basil Foster, the gallant but rather obscure hero. We have a strong impression that Mr. George Grossmith's clothes were not so various and beautiful as usual, though to be sure he wore them with all his usual art; that Mr. Edmund Payne ought to have had a bombardon, or something equally ridiculous, to play with. We are quite certain that he and Mr. Grossmith will play about together more elaborately before a week is over; and we are quite sure that we want at least twice as much as we got of Miss Olive May.

The explanation of this ingratitude is probably nothing more than the coherence and the swiftness of the piece as a whole. It is long; but there is no tedium in it, for it is all good of its kind—pleasant after-dinner kind. The story concerns a great soap works—"Port Sunshine"—the young heir to which (Mr. Basil Foster) will lose his inheritance if he gets engaged or married within five years, and so persuades his gay friend Mr. Grossmith to impersonate him, while in the guise of one of his own workmen he tests the affection of Miss Phyllis Dare, a workgirl. And Mr. Payne is supposed to be (if any one cares to know what he is supposed to be so long as he is Mr. Payne) an ex-cabman, and Miss Connie Ediss is his ex-wife, and Miss Olive May is Mr. Grossmith's betrothed. But the coherence and movement of the piece do not lie in its plot. They are the result of artfulness on the part of Mr. Paul Rubens and whoever else put the thing together. Each item comes so well after the one before and leads so well into the one that comes after that it seems gone—encores and all—before it has begun. We have never known a gayer evening in the gay and absurd world behind the footlights of the Gaiety.

There are tunes that we shall all be grinding our teeth at in a month; dresses that are monstrous, or pretty, or funny, but in any case worth looking at; and scenery that is good in itself and avoids the usual Gaiety fault of making the background the lightest tone on the stage. As to the acting and singing and dancing, everyone was at their best on Saturday night, and everyone shared in the opening and closing applause. But on Saturday night it was Miss Connie Ediss who shone with the fullest radiance. Mr. Leopold Wenzel conducted the orchestra, which, like everybody else concerned, came to the first night thoroughly prepared.

After producing the above on Saturday, Mr. George Edwardes, the indefatigable, revived "The Geisha," (potted by arrangement with Mr. Alfred Butt) at the Palace on Monday night. And a very dainty revival of a charming musical play it is.

As a matter of fact, musical comedy has never been so near a real art form as when Mr. Sidney Jones was writing the music and the late James Davis was writing the librettos for the productions at Daly's. The score of "The Geisha" is delightfully melodious, and the best of the airs are sung once again at the Palace.

The production is very elaborate and pretty, and Mr. Edwardes has engaged a capital company to play the familiar parts. Mr. Phil Smith in the Huntley Wright part Wun Hi is most admirable. Mr. Robert Evett follows Mr. Hayden Coffin and sings "Jack's the Boy to Work" with excellent spirit. Miss Blanche Tomlin sings charmingly in the Marie Tempest part. Miss Gladys Guy is delightfully chic and bright in Letty Lind's character, Molly Seamore; and beautiful Miss Hilda Anthony has journeyed from Sir Herbert Tree's "Orpheus" to Mr. Butt's "Geisha"—it is the fashionable journey nowadays, from His Majesty's to the Palace.

Mr. Sidney Jones himself conducted the performance which was deservedly received with the utmost enthusiasm.

Mr. Robert Loraine's new production, "98·9," at the Criterion Theatre, does not need the device of a mysterious title and an anonymous author to give it at any rate some measure of success. Whoever the author—and Mr. Loraine's hobbies are so numerous that it is possible that they include playwriting—he has a decided gift for alert and often brilliant dialogue, and for character-drawing of a diverting, if not wholly convincing kind.

Mr. Loraine plays a most modern lover, who conduct his wooing in accordance with the precepts laid down in his own treatise on the domestic life of sparrows.

He goes to unheard-of pains to get an introduction to the girl whom he has seen riding so admirably at Bordighera. He produces his birth certificate, family tree, and financial position in order to push his suit. He proposes to her two minutes after introduction, and is refused. He is delighted at the progress he has made. (End of Act I.)

He arrives to dinner by aeroplane, takes her temperature, which, since it stands at 98·9, is a proof that she is a real woman and not merely a painter of bad landscapes, wedded to her art, and finally offers on one condition to go for ever to Ecuador.

The condition is that she is not to inspect a studio which he has furnished in the country cottage, bought by him simply because she wished to lease it herself. (End of Act II.)

At the end of a month he invites her to tea in the studio, which is a gorgeous nursery, proves by a cinematograph display that she has already entered it, and after all his strategies fail, overcomes her by giving her a passionate embrace. (End of Act III.)

There are other characters in the play. There is the girl's aunt, a shrewd, incisive creature, excellently played by Miss Marie Wington. There is her rejected lover of her youth, who is also an admiring uncle of the hero, and who is most quietly and effectively portrayed by Mr. Charles Cartwright.

And there is the girl's cousin a conceited, lounging, invertebrate youth, who wants to marry her himself, and thinks up to the last moment, that he will be successful. This last is, of course, a splendid part for Mr. Vane-Tempest.

The girl herself is played by Miss Mabel Love, who reveals hitherto unsuspected powers. She looks charming, and acts a difficult and occasionally unconvincing part with real feeling and sincerity. Mr. Loraine rattles merrily through his part, and in the few really serious passages displays his usual quiet and tense fervour.

After twenty years' absence from England, Signor Mascagni had an enthusiastic reception at the London Hippodrome this week when he appeared to conduct his opera "Cavalleria Rusticana." Every seat in the house seemed to be occupied when amid an overwhelming outburst of hand-clapping and cheering, the popular composer was led to his desk by the manager of the Hippodrome.

Every favourite passage of the opera was heartily received, but the roar of enthusiasm which greeted the intermezzo seemed even to astonish the composer himself. Signor Mascagni's method of conducting is of the volcanic order. Commencing comparatively calmly, he was very soon in what seemed a fever of energy. His long hair tumbled and shook over his eyes, his baton whipped back and forth describing huge arcs, and his whole body seemed to follow every bar of the music. A huge solitaire ring on his left hand, flashing to and fro, added considerably to the total effect.

The company he has brought over is quite capable. Miss Teresina Chelotti, in the part of Sentuzza, has a good soprano voice, which is best heard in the quieter passages, and she acts well. Mr. Antonio Saludas as Turiddu used a powerful tenor voice with really fine effect. Mr. Renzo Minolfi, the Alfio, sang with certainty, and his acting was perhaps the best of the cast. Miss Amelia Biadi gave a good rendering of the part of Lucia. The chorus was evidently overawed by the presence of the composer, and they kept their eyes glued to him throughout. The orchestra acquitted themselves with distinction, and the whole performance went very smoothly.

Reminiscences of all the sporting dramas that ever were written—and their name is legion—are provided in Captain Browning's comedy, "A Member of Tattersall's," which was produced at the Whitney Theatre last Wednesday night.

That, however, may prove to be a blessing rather than a drawback. Such is the average Briton's passion for sport that the oft-repeated story of the winning horse and the baffled villain never fails to attract him.

On the present occasion the baffled villain resorts to a somewhat unusual method of laying the hero by the heels.

The scene is the weighing-room at Kempwick Racecourse. Plutocrat has won the race, but the villain "downs" the jockey when he enters the room and extracts, unseen, a couple of leads from the saddle-cloth. Then the jockey is weighed and found wanting. Tableau: General consternation and Plutocrat disqualified.

But, of course, all is put right in the morning room of the Alpha Ladies' Club, whither all the characters adjourn for explanations and the settlement of the hero's love affair, which, dogged by the customary misunderstanding, had been running anything but smoothly.

Mr. Rutland Barrington as a big-hearted paternal "bookie" rattled jovially through the piece, and created shouts of laughter with his crisp witticisms redolent of the Turf. Miss Iris Hoey was a pretty, mouse-like ingenue, and a bevy of racecourse beauties dazzled the fairer portion of the audience with bewildering "confections."

General Sir Alexander Taylor, whose death this week I regret to record, was one of the heroes who by their assault on Delhi turned the tide of the Indian Mutiny. He went to India in 1841 as a subaltern in the Bengal Engineers.

He took part in the two Sikh wars, and was the moving force of the engineering operations against Delhi in 1857. When General John Nicholson lay on his death-bed he cried, "If I get through this I shall let the world know it was Alexander Taylor who took Delhi." Lord Lawrence, who knew more than anyone of the inner history of the camp, wrote in 1858 to Lord Dalhousie: "To Nicholson, Alexander Taylor, of the Engineers, and Neville Chamberlain the real merit of our success is due."

For a time after our Army had successfully forced its way into Delhi it was in a precarious position. The enemy held the tall houses and narrow streets and we were losing more men than we could afford. Taylor proposed and carried out a scheme by which the engineers broke a passage internally from house to house, and sharpshooters were posted on the roofs of the highest houses, thus commanding the streets and gardens. After this, first the celebrated Burn Bastion and subsequently the rest of the city fell into the hands of the British.

Sir Alexander Taylor, who died at his Surrey home, Englefield Green, on Sunday, was eighty-seven years of age.

A TROOP OF LIONS.

It was only my third day in real shooting country when, quite unexpectedly, came what must always remain one of the red letter days of my shikar experience. I was out early with my three shikaris and saw both *gerenuk and aoul,† but they were unusually wild and I had no chance of a shot. Then about 9 A.M. we suddenly struck the fresh trail of a troop of six lions!—apparently three or four adult lionesses and two or three nearly full-grown youngsters. No time lost in discussion, but after them at once. The going was not good, in some places stony and the tracking difficult in consequence, it was only the number of the beasts that made it possible to keep the trail at a fair pace. Where the ground was open, we wasted no time, but whenever we approached thick grass or bush, Abdilleh (my head shikari) was very careful, always posting me in a good position before investigating to see if the tracks had passed on. I suppose we had followed the trail for about six or seven miles when at 11-30 A.M. we came to a patch of durr grass about 50 yards long and 25 or 30 broad. This durr grass grows to a height from four to six feet, in thick clumps set close together, and affords the favourite daytime cover for most nocturnal creatures in this part of the country. I was considering this with Abdilleh when Hendaleh (my second shikari) a short distance away, whistled to us and pointed gesticulating into the grass. His manner left no doubt as to what he meant, so Abdilleh and I hurried quietly round to the far side. There he was making for a likely thorn-bush to stand behind when I stopped him, for just at the near edge of the cover where the grass was thin, stood a lioness, tail towards me, just the top of her back and neck clearly visible and only 25 yards away! It was a chance not to be lost, and I fired; down she went to the shot out of sight in the grass. Then I had no more time to think of her for the moment, for at the report came the sight of a lifetime: the five remaining lions breaking from the cover, from different spots, but all on the side nearest me, almost simultaneously, and all within some 20 to 30 yards; then, checked by the unexpected sight of two humans in their way, dashing hither and thither, one straight away to my right, the others in and out of the grass uncertain what to do! You see, previous to the shot their attention had been fixed on the two shikaris on the far side whom they had detected. Now I had not started out that morning with any idea of seeing lions so had not my second lion rifle, the ·400, with me. Abdilleh was beside me with the ·318, powerful enough to kill any lion, but not in my view the sort of weapon for the close quarter game I had come in for now. Consequently I was determined not to have both barrels of the Paradox empty at once if it could be avoided, and immediately proceeded to load the empty chamber, before attempting another shot. Then I had a snapshot at 15 yards at a lioness bolting back into the grass and she too disappeared. By the time that cartridge was replaced, the rest had made up their minds it was time to go and were galloping off to the left. I might have fired at one of these, but did not think the shot, a galloping one at 60 or 70 yards, good enough under the circumstances, and let them go. I had two lionesses down in the long grass, both I knew hard hit, but one at least I knew to be alive, and I had no certain knowledge of how far either of them was disabled. Without a second double-barrel I was not keen on having a possible third wounded beast on my hands and don't mind saying so. Well! careful reconnoitring of the grass soon showed lioness No. 1 lying just outside round the corner, alive but done for; she made an effort to rise on seeing me but could not do it and with a second bullet she died. Listening and watching, we found that No. 2 was also alive and able to move. So we decided to fire the grass, first dragging the corpse of No. 1 out of danger from the flames. Then climbing into a convenient low tree whence I could see over the grass to some extent, I waited while Elmi (shikari No. 3) started a fire on the windward side. It blazed up quickly and in three minutes a growl or two and the waving grass showed where the second lioness was moving. She came out 25 yards from me, on her fore paws, her hindquarters dragging useless behind her. Catching sight of the body of her head companion close by, she made for this and sitting down beside it, bit viciously at the poor corpse. Was this a case of hitting a friend when he's down, or merely wrath that had to wreck its vengeance on something? Anyway I only wanted holes of my own making in my skins, so let her have it again. Then for the camera and steel tape. There they lay, two adult lionesses, after an experience which for a first encounter with lions must be very nearly unique. During those few crowded moments Abdilleh had stood by me splendidly; he kept saying "Don't be afraid sahib : shoot!" I didn't shoot quite as often as he wanted at the time, in which he afterwards admitted I was right ; as for being afraid, there was no time to think of luxuries of that sort. These two lionesses measured 8 feet 3¾ inches and 8 feet 1¾ inches respectively as they lay. The Somali lion is a comparatively small breed. By the time tape and camera and skinning-knife had done their work and we were on our way back to camp, it was 2 o'clock. Fortunately the lions had travelled in a circle, so that we were not very far away and were in camp in an hour and a half. As soon as we were within hearing Hendaleh began to announce our success in song which brought every one out to meet our triumphal procession. I was not sorry for a cup of tea, then came the pegging of the skins, and after an early dinner I was in bed at 8 P.M. and slept the sleep of the just. I did not dream of lions.

Next morning we were out at daybreak, meaning to try and ascertain what direction the four lions which had escaped the day before had eventually taken ; though not with much hope of seeing any more of them. After stopping to shoot an oorial, as meat was wanted, we made for the scene of the previous day's proceedings. There we found the usual concourse of vultures, etc. ; but both skeletons were already picked clean. We found too, which was more important, that these had been visited and inspected during the night by the remainder of the troop and the trail of these we now took up. After an hour's tracking we reached a spot where they had killed a gerenuk, of which there was not a fragment left. Their return to look for the other two, the subsequent kill and feast, must have all taken up time, which with the fact that their hunger had been in some measure satisfied tended to make our chances of coming up with them much more hopeful than they had seemed at first. But it took us quite another hour before we could get fairly going again each beast having wandered off in a different direction with some special tit-bit to be discussed at leisure, and it took a lot of work before we hit off the line the troop had eventually taken. And from this on they had wandered about in an apparently aimless sort of way difficult to follow. Once we thought we had them and beat some thick bush and grass ; I felt my heart beat faster as I noticed a rustle in the grass, then out came a long-eared fox (otocyon) ! a pretty little beggar with greenish grey fur and big black brush, but not just what I was expecting. At last, however, the tracks went into a long and rather thick patch of dare grass and, there was no mistake about it, did not emerge.

We decided that firing the grass was the best thing to do, and it was done accordingly, while Abdilleh and I took up our position behind a thorn tree, 20 yards from the other end. Behind us again to the left was a small patch of high grass that the lions would probably make for in the first instance and have to pass us in so doing. This time Abdilleh had the ·400 ready beside me. The blazing up of the flames was followed by several growls ; then a cub broke and bolted away to the right, but he was only half grown so I let him go. Next moment a head appeared to my right front, looking at us and snarling ; it disappeared and then appeared again on the other side, making a show of attacking. I did not wait to see if this was bluff but fired at his chest and he collapsed where he stood. At the report a lioness broke directly in front and, seeing me, swerved and went past on the left about ten yards away. As she did so I gave her the left barrel of the Paradox behind the shoulder ; she staggered but went on, vanishing behind the next clump ; however I had seen her wound was in the right spot and knew she was done for.

The next thing was to snatch the ·400 from Abdilleh and push the Paradox into his hand to load. Then seeing that No. 1 lying in front was trying to raise his head I gave him a finisher. Handing the ·400 back to Abdilleh, I took the Paradox which he had reloaded and aimed at a third lion which appeared and stood on a moment close to the body of No. 1. I pressed the trigger and nothing happened ! Now I had had my Paradox built specially with a non-automatic safety mechanism, so that with the closing of the breech the gun is ready cocked. Abdilleh in his excitement and excess of zeal, had pushed back the safet-bolt after loading. It might have been an extremely awkward mistake ! It only took a moment to rectify but my chance of a standing shot was gone, as the third lion, like No. 2, made past me on the left. He fell to my shot at only five or six paces distant, but was up again at once and turned to charge ; however the heavy bullet in his lungs had taken all the fight out of him and he swung round so unexpectedly that my second barrel missed him clean and he too disappeared behind the grass in rear. Just at this moment a big lioness broke on the right and dashed away across the open ; before I could change rifles and get in a shot she was behind some bushes 60 yards away and gone. All this had occupied a very short space of time, and the grass patch was only burnt half way through. The first thing was to drag the body of the first lion out of danger of being singed. Then behind us, where we found No. 2 lying dead 40 yards away. No. 3 we found lying in the open, 100 yards off, alive but unable to move. He was quickly finished and dragged with some difficulty up to the others. A group of three lions for the kodak this time. True, two of them were young males, not fully-grown and with manes as yet undeveloped, but they measured well over seven feet and were imposing enough. But for Abdilleh's mistake over the safety bolt, the remaining lioness would probably not have escaped either.

Five lions in two days to a single gun, all fairly tracked and shot on foot at close quarters ! Of course it was extraordinary luck, especially in the favourable ground I found them in and the easy shots I had. But honour to whom honour is due : I could have done nothing but for the fine tracking of my three shikaris backed up by Abdilleh's knowledge of the game. And the Paradox deserves its meed of praise ; its handiness was perfect and as to its effectiveness it need only be said that each of the five lions, if not dropped on the spot, was practically disabled by the first shot. My faith in it had been justified.

The animals skinned, we were back in camp about 4 o'clock : shikari and saheb well pleased with each other —quite a mutual admiration society ! And that troop of lion had ceased to exist. The neighbouring baricas (Somali encampments) ought to have been duly grateful, but the Somali is the last person in the world to show or feel gratitude, however much you may do for him. I gave the men a couple of sheep in honour of the occasion.

Fishing.

SNOW TROUT FISHING IN THE MURREE HILLS.

The following may be of interest to anglers who find themselves in the Murree hills, and have no time to go to the larger rivers in the district.

In May 1906 at Dungs Gali I was struck with the possibilities of small fish in the stream, a tributary of Hurroo, which rises between Dungs and Natia Gali, but on making enquiries from both Europeans and natives I was told that they had never heard of fish there, unless one went at least a day's march towards the plains.

In spite of this I thought it would be well worth trying, and started off a few days later by a track which leaves the cart road near the Police Lines and struck the stream about 2 miles below Dungs ; here it was a beautiful little burn, but only about two yards wide, broadening into ideal pools, connected by miniature waterfalls. I started off with wet fly and almost at once was taken by a small fish of about six inches, at the end of an hour I had only a few larger than this. I then tried a small fly spoon for half an hour or so but got only one, a rather badly conditioned half pounder : by this I had fished down nearly two miles of water and decided to turn back ; while resting I got a native who owned a small mill to get some worms ; he, by the way, said he had never heard of fish in the stream before, and seemed very surprised at the few I had got.

On getting the worms I began to fish carefully upstream using a long line and keeping well out of sight ; in less than two hours I had only covered half a mile my worms were finished and I had a total of eighty-three fish, which weighed on getting home eighteen and a half pounds.

During the rest of the hot weather I had many enjoyable days, generally going about four miles down, and fishing up, using a single hook No 8 to No. 10, with two yards of finest undrawn gut, there was no advantage in using Stewart tackle, as a very small worm or portion of one was best. My largest bag was over one hundred, and if about half the fish caught were returned, the remainder weighed quite four to the pound, including many over half a pound.

All fish were what is generally called snow trout, a handsome silvery fish with tiny scales. They gave good sport for their size and were excellent for the table. If one went further down the stream larger fish, including Mahseer, would certainly be got, but to get the latter camping out for at least one night would be necessary.

The next hot weather from Murree I had if anything better sport in the streams tributary to the same river, the best being a very small one that passed through the Murree Brewery, the best part of it being about one mile as the crow flies below the main road ; in this stream the fish ran larger and were in better condition possibly due to refuse from the Brewery.

M. S.

"Am I the first man who ever asked you for a kiss?"
"Yes. The others showed more nerve. They took it."

"Why did you quit boarding and go to house-keeping?"
"My wife has such a poor appetite that boarding wasn't economical."

The Stranger (in the local cemetery) "Grand morning."
Old Man "Yes."
Stranger—"Just the sort of weather to make things spring up."
Old Man—"Hush ! Hush ! I've got three wives buried here!"

She—"Anything that is worth winning is worth working for."
He—"Yes but the question is—Will your father thaw out, or will I have to keep on working for you after I've won you?"

A man who had been drinking too much liquor for his own good was induced to sign the pledge the other day. His wife was delighted. She took the document, and said :
"You must let me have it. I will keep it for you."
So the paper was confided to her custody.
On the next day the man was drinking again as freely as before.
"How is this?" asked a friend. "You signed the pledge yesterday, and now you are drinking whisky again?"
"It's all right," replied the pledgesigner in unsteady tones, "I don't have to keep the pledge. My wife says she'll keep it for me. That's the kind of a wife to have, old fellow. Let's take a drink."

WINCHESTER

AN EFFECTIVE BIG-GAME GETTER.

There's no question about it — when you go after big game, you want a rifle that has power. You get it in the .35 Caliber Winchester Repeater. This rifle handles a cartridge having a 250-grain bullet, which has a muzzle velocity of 2200 foot seconds and a muzzle energy of 2587 foot pounds. Think of this tremendous energy being expended inside an animal, as it is when a soft-point bullet is used! And you have five cartridges all told, which can be fired in rapid succession. What animal could withstand the terrible shocking effect of such a battery? Many so-called big-game guns seem mere toys in comparison. The .35 Winchester has a strong, simple and reliable action, and a short 24-inch barrel, which is easily handled and yet shoots straight and true at all ranges effective for big-game shooting.

NEWBURY.

AMENDS for the November-like gloom of Friday were made by a much more spring-like condition of affairs at Newbury on Saturday, a change that was generally appreciated. Stronger patronage was accorded the specials from Paddington, which have brought the meeting so handily into the metropolitan itinerary of meetings. The military were in strong evidence, and the further enclosures showed an increase, while the going, although a bit soft, was excellent for cross-country sport. Fields panned out well, the executive having the satisfaction of doing their best to please their patrons. Results:—

SANDOWN.

Too beautiful to last presumably spring has just dusted the snows of winter off her feet, and is garlanding the Valley of the Thames with earliest blossom, while the temperature is of that deceptively mild description that tempts the sportsman out without his greatcoat, and takes toll of his bronchial tubes after sandown. Sunny Sandown deserved its sobriquet yesterday, but the attendance, though a good one, was not a bumper, Society evidently waiting for the advent on the scene of the soldiers, whose prowess in the saddle always commands admiration at their popular gatherings. Better going could not have been desired, and such strong support was accorded that big fields kept sport rolling at top pressure. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

QUITE the feature of Saturday's ties in the third round of the Association Cup was the success which attended clubs playing away from home. West Bromwich Albion, Everton, Bradford City, and Barnsley all pulled through on their opponents' grounds, and, in addition Swindon held their own with West Ham at Upton Park and Manchester United drew at Reading. Barnsley, in beating Bolton Wanderers at Burnden Park, effected the great surprise of the afternoon, while West Bromwich Albion also upset expectations in knocking out Sunderland at Roker Park. In the match at Blackburn, too, a startling issue threatened when at the interval Wolverhampton Wanderers led by 2 to 1. Blackburn Rovers, however, not only drew level afterwards, but put on a third goal, and so qualified for the fourth round of the competition. So closely were the teams matched that only in one instance did more than a single goal divide the opposing sides, Everton, who a week ago lost at Oldham by 3 to 0, winning on the same ground by 2 to 0. On Saturday, however, Everton enjoyed the assistance of Makepeace, Bradshaw, and Jeffries, whereas those three famous players were all absent from the side when Oldham Athletic triumphed in such decisive fashion.

So far four First League clubs have earned the right to compete in the fourth round—a distinction also secured by two Second League teams. For the moment no representatives of the Southern League are through the third round, and it seems scarcely likely that Reading, having failed to beat Manchester United at Reading, will succeed in lowering the colours of the First League champions at Old Trafford. Still even if Reading go under, the Swindon and West Ham the must take one Southern League club into the last eight, and the South—if not the Southern League—will have other representatives in the fourth round in Fulham, who disposed of Northampton. Fulham yesterday did not display against Northampton quite such fine form as had characterised their efforts against Liverpool in the preceding stage of the struggle, but Brown gave them the lead half an hour from the start, and on crossing over added a second point before Lewis registered Northampton's one goal. In their match with Swindon, West Ham scored in little more than five minutes from the start, and the opening half was nearly at an end before Swindon drew level. A strenuous fight took place on resuming, but the pace gradually told, and before the end was reached both teams showed signs of fatigue. Against Manchester United Reading also met with early success, yet the First Leaguers equalised before half time.

For the meagre measure of success attending them in the first half of the season, Woolwich Arsenal are steadily atoning. Since their defeat at Manchester on New Year's Day, the Plumstead men have engaged in half a dozen League contests without losing one of them. Gaining four victories and drawing the other two matches, they have scored ten points out of a possible twelve, so this year they should be free from the anxieties which have so often weighed upon them during the last few weeks of the season. Yesterday, beating Middlesbrough at Ayresome Park, they earned the honour of being the first club this winter to lower the colours of that club at Middlesbrough. The distinction of not having lost a single home match is now possessed only by Blackburn Rovers and Everton. In opposing Notts County at Nottingham Tottenham Hotspur were faced with a less formidable task than confronted the Arsenal at Middlesbrough. They established a lead of two goals before the interval, but in the end had to rest content with a draw. Newcastle United gaining a narrow victory over Preston North End, are now only two points behind Blackburn Rovers and will probably run the Blackburn men very close in the fight for the championship.

On the result of Saturday's match at Stamford Bridge depended the lead in the Second Division of the League, and Burnley, by beating Chelsea by the only two goals scored, strengthened their position at the head of affairs. Three points to the good, the Lancashire club are very strongly placed now; but had Chelsea won the positions would have been reversed, with the London team a point in front. As Derby County regained their winning form they are only two points further away, and Chelsea, in suffering their first defeat at home, not only ruined an excellent opportunity of going to the top, but made it possible for the Derby team to overtake them should another disaster befall them.

Queen's Park Rangers failed to beat Millwall and so remain second in the Southern League to Swindon. The fight for the championship rests between these two clubs, who are level on points, Swindon having a game in hand, besides a slightly superior goal average, but the demands of the Cup-ties may cause some falling off in their League form. Plymouth Argyle alone won with anything to spare yesterday, and they had the misfortune to lose the services of Sutcliffe, their old international goalkeeper, who suffered a rather severe injury to his shoulder.

RUGBY RULES.

IRELAND v. SCOTLAND.

PLAYED in pleasantly fine weather, the thirty-fifth match between Rugby representatives of Ireland and Scotland resulted, on the Lansdowne road ground at Dublin, in a victory for Ireland by ten points to eight. Of the previous games Scotland had won twenty-four and Ireland seven, three being drawn. With the ground in fair order and the wind only moderate, the game took place under favourable conditions, and with considerable interest being taken in the encounter, the attendance probably numbered close upon 12,000. The Irish fifteen took the field as originally selected, Foster, who was doubtful, finding himself able to play. As had been announced, Bain of Oxford University stood out

MINIATURE AND MID-RANGE

TARGET RIFLES

Rifle Clubs with many thousands of members now exist in England and the Colonies, and practically every one of them uses the special B.S.A. rifles adapted for miniature and mid-range work.

The B.S.A. Martini and the Bolt Action rifles are adapted for the ·22, ·230, ·256, ·300, ·310, ·32-20 and ·32-40 Cartridges. With the cheap but popular and accurate ·22 "long rifle" cartridge B.S.A. rifles will shoot into a 2-inch circle at 100 yards, and into a 4-inch circle at 200 yards.

Of the cheap but well-made and highly accurate B.S.A. No 2 Model Miniature Rifle (retail price in England 30/-), Mrs. Darley, a well-known Indian lady rifle shot, recently wrote as follows :—

"I am writing to tell you how very pleased I am with the ·22 bore Miniature Rifle of yours that I have been using at the S.I.R.A. Meeting held here during the last fortnight. I think it is what is called a No. 2 Model, but am not sure. It has a bolt action and costs out here Rs. 32 (£2 2s.), the peepsight being extra. I bought it over a year ago and it has done me well. I have a new much more expensive rifle by another maker, but it is with the little B.S.A. that I have made all my best scores. At this meeting alone I have won with it one first prize, one second prize, one third prize, and the Ladies' championship (value £5), besides eight silver spoons in pool shooting—over £13 worth in all. Besides which I have won several prizes with it at other meetings."

"Mrs. Applin has also done very well with one of your rifles, which she has had for some years. She made several 'possibles' with it during the meeting, one being 19 consecutive bulls."

SPECIAL SIGHTS.

The B.S.A. No. 8 screw adjusted aperture backsight, with 6-hole eyepiece, and Nos. 19 and 20 combination target foresights, are specially adapted for these and other kinds of match rifles.

Signals of Hair Distress!

WARNINGS OF APPROACHING BALDNESS AND GREYNESS EVERY READER MUST HEED.

When your hair becomes weak it puts out signals of distress.

These signals mean that it wants strengthening nourishment and regular daily exercise.

Every living thing wants food and exercise to keep healthy—why not your hair also?

Here are the signals of hair distress. Take heed of them if you intend to keep your hair healthy and luxuriant and your own appearance youthful.

SIGNALS OF APPROACHING BALDNESS.

When your hair splits at the ends—

When it becomes dry and brittle—

When you notice fallen hairs on your pillow in the morning—

When your hair comes out in your brush and comb—

When it becomes infected with dandruff and scurf—

When it loses its lustre and becomes dull and lifeless—

When your scalp itches so that you feel you must scratch it—

When any of these things happen your hair is in danger. They are the hair's signals of distress—its "minute guns" which call for help.

And that help is at hand for you and your hair—to-day.

of the Scotland fifteen, his place being taken by J. Dobson of Glasgow Academicals.

Winning the toss, Ireland enjoyed what advantage there was to be gained from the wind in the opening half. There was, however, nothing in it. Scotland kicked off, the game settling down in the Irish half, but from a long kick by Quinn Scotland touched down. The drop-out was charged down, and play went on in the Scottish quarters. Milroy failed to take a pass by Gunn, but Scotland gained some ground from a free kick, and, with a strong forward rush, they carried the play over the half-way line. Then McIvor put in a short run, but Ireland were again penalised, and Scotland got well down. A blunder by Gunn let up the Irish forwards, who dribbled into their opponents' half. There Ogilvy got in a poor kick, but following up well tackled his opponent. The play went on in the Scottish half, Ireland eventually reaching their opponents' "25." The Irish forwards were playing a typically strong game, coming away time after time with fast rushes, Scotland were penalised, and Lloyd, with a long kick, placed a goal, Ireland thus securing a lead of 3 points ere the game was ten minutes old. Directly afterwards, Lloyd started a passing movement, the Irish backs gaining considerable ground, and then, in some quick play that followed, Lloyd, taking a pass from Read, dropped a goal for Ireland.

A little later, after some moderate passing by the Scottish backs, Gilray kicked down the field. Wright failed to field the ball, and Will, dashing up at top speed, scored for Scotland. Turner was unsuccessful with the place kick. The play up to this point had been very fast, and having scored, Scotland began to do better. Once more, however, the Irish forwards came away well, and Lloyd, picking up in the loose, ran some distance, taking the game to the Scottish "25" line. A bad pass by Gilray let the Irish forwards through and Foster tried to drop a goal, but the ball went wide and Scotland touched down. From the drop out, Scotland got to the other end, but the Irishmen returned with a long kick, which Ogilvy failed to properly field. He managed, however, to get in his kick, but despite that Ireland secured good position, only to lose it by being penalised. The game went on near the half way line, neither side being able to make much headway. Another free kick helped Scotland, touch being found in the Irish "25." So the game went on, with the forwards doing excellent work, but the passing of the backs was only of moderate quality. On one occasion Gunn, with a slow, lobbing pass, nearly got Scotland into trouble, but then the Scottish forwards with a fast and strong dribble gained a lot of ground, and looked like going through when Wright saved in plucky fashion. McCallum next found touch in the Irish "25" with a good kick, but the Irish backs put in some neat passing, Quinn getting away. He kicked hard, and the ball looked like going dead behind the Scotch line. Hitting one of the uprights, however, it rebounded into play and in a scramble just outside the Scottish line, Ireland went very near to scoring. After some anxious moments, Scotland cleared, Angus gaining a lot of ground with a long kick. The game was taken to the centre and a bout of passing by the Scottish backs followed, but Neal was tackled by McIvor. Will got away again a little later, but once more McIvor stopped him. Lloyd gave his side relief with a fine kick, finding touch in the Scottish quarters, and, then from another kick by Lloyd, Scotland touched down. Play was in the Irish quarters when half-time arrived with the score:—

Ireland	... 1 dropped goal, 1 penalty goal.
Scotland	... 1 try.

The second half opened in the Scottish half, where Abraham made a big burst to get through, but slipping, he was pulled down near the Scottish line. Some fast play followed, and though the Scottish backs attempted some passing, they did not make much headway. The game was removed to the centre, where Scotland were helped by a free kick. Faulty in their passing, they missed more than one good chance, and Quinn was enabled to dribble down a long way. For a moment Scotland were in danger, but Ogilvy saved the situation. After some hard kicking and fast following up by Scotland, Wright was collared by Milroy, and Ireland were penalised. Turner attempted to kick a goal, but failed. The attack was now with Scotland, and in one movement Will nearly got over, going into touch when only three or four yards from the goal line. A minute later there was another fast effort by the Scottish forwards, and, from a pass by Will, Turner scored a try from which McCallum placed a goal. This gave Scotland a lead of eight points to seven. In the subsequent play the Irishmen worked their way down with a good rush, and McIvor put in a capital kick which caused the Scottish defence some trouble. Ireland were nearly over, but being penalised, lost ground, Scotland reaching the centre. Some fast rushes followed, Wright stopping a very awkward one. Scotland were now playing a strong game, the Irish defence being very hard pressed. The play, however, was somewhat scrambling, many mistakes being made. Relief came to the Irishmen from a free kick taken by Lloyd, and Ireland reached the other end. In a sharp attack in which Read and Lloyd took part, Foster crossed the Scotland line. Lloyd took the kick, but the ball struck one of the uprights. As it happened, that try decided the match. The Irishmen kept up a good attack, and on neither side was there any slackening in the pace or falling-off in the tackling. Nothing more was scored, however, and so Ireland won by 10 points to 8.

Ireland	... 1 dropped goal, 1 penalty goal, 1 try.

Final Tie.

Devon vs. Northumberland.—In the final match for the Rugby County Championship at Devonport the Devon fifteen, showing splendid form, gained an easy victory over Northumberland by 29 points to nothing. The weather was fine and a crowd of about 10,000 people saw the match, which was played on a rather heavy ground. It was not long before Devon took the lead, Jago opened the game cleverly and Harvey, getting the ball, kicked across for Edwards to run in. Hayman converted. Following the centre kick Dodds cleverly broke through, the movement being carried on by the forwards, who rushed to the Devon line with the ball at their feet. Baker just managed to save. Then followed some bright play by the Devon three-quarters, but a forward pass brought the attack to a close. Northumberland then pressed, Lillycrap stopping a forward rush in splendid fashion. Robb returned with a long punt into touch, and the Northumberland forwards once more threatened danger until Lillycrap stopped the attack by saving well. With a useful punt Butcher put Devon on the attack once more, and after a round of passing Baker was pulled into touch only a yard outside the Northumberland line. Following further pressure by Devon, the Northumberland forwards, well led by Kewney, broke away to the centre line, but in a series of scrummages the Devon pack had the best of matters. Devon, however, lost ground by poor passing. At length Butcher broke away strongly and passed to Thomas, who sent Baker in to score another try for Devon. Hayman was successful with the kick. Some rushes by the Northumberland forwards afterwards looked dangerous, the play settling down near the Devon line. Once more Devon broke away, Thomas being pulled down just outside the Northumberland line after a fine run. The game was soon at the other end, where Robb was unsuccessful in attempting to drop a goal, while Morley sent wide from a free kick. Then Baker, securing the ball from a scrummage, ran strongly and passed to Thomas, while as the result of further handling Butcher went over. He was, however, recalled. Towards half-time the Northern pack came away in fine style and Dodd was nearly through. Half-time:—

Devon	...	...	... 2 goals.
Northumberland			... 0

Directly after half-time Devon attacked. Pope, Thomas, and Baker taking part in a smart movement which led to Baker scoring an unconverted try. A few minutes later the ball came out from a scrummage to Jago, who, with a fine kick, dropped a lovely goal. Devon kept up the attack and another brilliant passing movement by their three-quarters was only just stopped in time by Robb. Then Roberts came through cleverly and set the Northumberland forwards going, but Lillycrap checked them well. This was practically the last dangerous movement by Northumberland, the rest of the game going all in favour of Devon. After Jago had crossed the line and had been recalled, Butcher started another good movement, which ended in a try by Baker. Subsequently Baker got over again, and near the finish Butcher and Hayman also crossed the Northumberland line. None of these tries were improved upon and so the final score was:—

Devon	... 3 goals (1 dropped) 5 tries.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

It is not always that such a statement as the "best dog wins" can be written truthfully. But the whole of the running for this year's Waterloo Cup goes far to show that Tide Time is fully entitled to the chief honours of the year. In none of his six courses was there a suspicion of a fluke about his success. Against Screvel, and again in the final, he had to wipe off the early points which were gained by his opponents.

Tide Time may not have quite the pace of a real tiptopper, but when he once gets possession he rarely loses it. He had no easy task in his two concluding courses. He had, however, all the beginning in his semi-final against Hyson, but the latter, who is a rare worker, though short of pace, was beginning to get busy when "he cut his own throat" by killing too soon.

Adversary had the foot of Tide Time in the run up, and Mr. Alexander's puppy was more than clear when he reached the hare and then secured the next turn. But running wide he let in the winner, who soon equalised, and subsequently in a good working trial had plenty to spare when he killed.

What enhances the value of Tide Time's success is the fact that Saracen, the original favourite, who was defeated in the second round, got to the end of the Plate, which he divided with Grey Muzzle. Tide Time was bought at the Barbican last season by his present owner for 25gs. and though he is nominated by a well-known Irish courser, he was bred and is trained in England. Hence this year's Cup can hardly be termed an Irish victory.

It is not the first time that Tide Time has represented Mr. Fullerton, in whose nomination he shared in the division of the Produce Stakes at the first Altcar meeting, while he subsequently carried off the Becconsall Cup at the Hesketh Bank meeting. Thus he has an unbeaten certificate, and until this week he has never been led.

The runner-up, too, has a very good record, but was beaten at Altcar by Lucent, one of the dividers. He improved on this running in the Altcar January Home Bred Stakes, when he led and beat everything he met.

With such records it is wonderful that such long prices should have originally been offered against two such smart puppies as Tide Time and Adversary.

The surroundings were favourable, but, of course, as always is the case, there was a great falling off in the crowd who witnessed the closing proceedings.

BOXING.

Poesy vs. Digger Stanley.—There was a large company present at the National Sporting Club last Tuesday night, when the chief items were a 15-round contest between Digger Stanley (bantam-weight champion of the world) and Jean Poesy (feather-weight champion of France) and the final of the welter-weight eliminating contests between Sid Burns (Aldgate) and Lance-Sergt. Baker (Royal West Kent Regiment), the winner of which meets Young Joseph for the welter-weight championship and Lord Lonsdale's belt.

Baker had the best of the first round with Burns, once sending his opponent down with a hard left swing, but in the nine subsequent rounds Burns, with a splendid straight left, scored freely, and was a leader on points at the end of the tenth round. Burns won on points.

Poesy and Stanley fought cautiously in the first round, and in the second Stanley swung two terrific rights to the jaw in the first minute.

Digger at the next meeting kept his left busy on his opponent's face, and although his blows were light he was scoring all the time. His opponent was always game, and possessed a punch which replied very forcibly.

Round 4 produced some spirited fighting, and both received punishment. This was a good round, and was evenly contested. At the next meeting Stanley was cautioned twice for holding, but he kept his left going and a sharp look-out for the Frenchman's right, which was always ready.

Poesy improved in the next round, and although fighting like a hurricane, was always scoring. Stanley was hard put to hold his own.

On coming up again Stanley immediately rushed a straight left on the jaw, but the Frenchman took it without flinching, and replied with a clever right to the head, following up with a left and right.

At the end of Round 8 both appeared to be tiring. In the ninth round Stanley came in for a lot of punishment, and the Frenchman forced him round the ring with a constant succession of lefts to the face, Stanley being content to keep on the defensive. He got a right home on the face, but there was little force in it.

Towards the end of the tenth round Stanley held the Frenchman, who cleverly got away and scored with a right to the jaw.

During the twelfth round Poesy scored freely, but the bell came to Stanley's rescue.

On coming up for the thirteenth time, Poesy punished his man severely, but Stanley stuck to his task, although his punches were very weak, and it now seemed only a matter of time, Digger going to his corner all but beaten.

Round 14 saw Poesy adding to his lead, but Stanley stood the terrific onslaught pluckily.

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

OXFORD.—Yesterday saw the last of the practice of the Oxford eight on the home waters, and to-day, after lunch, they will resume their work on the Henley Regatta course. There was quite a boisterous wind and at times heavy showers, which did not tend to improve matters. Mr. W. F. C. Rothland (Brasenose) was again in charge, and coached from horseback in order to allow Taylor to get away with the boats in good time.

The crew got afloat early in the usual order. They at once proceeded to Iffley, and on passing the lock paddled to Kennington, where they rased up. After a breather they resumed their journey, and save for the lock at Sandford, did not halt again until the Horsegate was reached. Here they prepared for a hard row, and after some instruction from their coach, broke away at a stroke of 30 per minute. This soon dropped to 28, which they maintained along the Common. They reduced the stroke a trifle at the island, but afterwards 28 was again set, and passing the railway bridge, they did not halt until reaching the Lasher, thus completing the full extent of the long course. After a stroll they again took their seats, and paddled gently back to Sandford, where Taylor took charge of the oars, and they returned by road, leaving the boat at Sandford. Names and weights:—

CAMBRIDGE.—There is every indication that the Cambridge crew is now settled, but it is a very different crew from that which it was hoped Captain J. H. Gibbon would get together. The Blue, C. F. Burnand, who is down with a chill will not be fit in time to take his place, which points to R. S. Shove retaining his seat. L. S. Lloyd, last year's spare man, has performed so well at No. 7, despite his light weight, that he is not to be disturbed, and accordingly President R. W. M. Arbuthnot, who stood down on Wednesday, went in at bow yesterday, which seems to be the position at which he is seen to most advantage. J. Ayliff had to stand down because of being too heavy for the place, but he will probably be asked to act as spare man.

Yesterday the work was under the supervision of Captain J. H. Gibbon, who again crossed to the Ely bank at the Adelaide Bridge. The weather was gloriously fine, but the wind was in the same direction, and quite as strong as on the previous day, whilst the stream was running very fast. The crew got away from Appleyard's at about 2.15, and after picking up the coach at the Railway Bridge below, Ely paddled to the Lark in three long stages at 25 to 24, easies being indulged in at the Adelaide Bridge and Day's farmhouse. Having turned, they pulled back to the pumping station below Day's, when they removed their sweaters and prepared to row to the Adelaide Bridge, a distance of just over a mile and a quarter. At the outset Swann set a steady stroke of 29 a minute, and quickly dropped to 28, but never allowed the stroke to get lower. The crew had the wind and stream against them, but were reaching out well and getting quite a good beginning, whilst, although they got unsteady when gusts of wind caught them, they recovered themselves and settled down quicker than formerly. In the last hundred yards or so Swann called upon the crew, and although several of them were "baked," they responded gamely, and had worked the stroke up to 34 when they shot the bridge, after having been rowing for 8mins. 44secs. After a rest they paddled back to the boathouse in three or four short stages, and caught the 4.10 train back to Cambridge.

Mr. R. W. M. Arbuthnot has awarded Blues to L. S. Lloyd, D. C. Collins, and R. S. Shove, which completes the crew. Names and weights:—

THE PUNJAB TOURNAMENT.

THE Punjab Lawn Tennis Championships began on the 4th March and were concluded on the 13th instant. Record entries had been received, but it was to be regretted that more players outside the district did not send in their names. The Men's Singles attracted 14 and was won by Davies, who beat Atkinson in the final after a great struggle. With the exception of his first match, when Jacob gave him a lot of trouble, Davies ran through easily to the final. Atkinson also had a very smooth passage. The meeting of these giants in the final was a splendid display. Both were in good form. Atkinson lost the first two sets 6—4, 6—4 and then suddenly found his game and annexed the third and fourth at 6—1, 6—3. In the fifth, however, Davies again came out and won a hard-earned victory at 6—2. Each competitor won an equal number of games—22.

In the Doubles Atkinson and Roe beat Davies and Crawford by 6—4, 2—6, 6—1, 6—2. Atkinson and Roe were in the final last year when they succumbed to Davies and Bendall. In the earlier games in this year's doubles Jacob and Glascock had a stiff fight when they met Nicholas and Cheney, and again when they beat Glendinning and Furnivall, but they went down very easily to the ultimate winners. In the Ladies' Singles Mrs. Gracey went through very comfortably eventually defeating Mrs. Hutchinson in the final. Mrs. Gracey was beaten by Miss Warburton after a great struggle in the final last year, but she has showed such improved form this year that another match between them would be most interesting. Mrs. Gracey and Mrs. Hutchinson were the strongest pair in the Doubles and won very easily. Atkinson and Mrs. Leslie Jones carried off the Mixed Doubles, beating Johnstone and Mrs. Gracey in the final. The courts were in excellent condition and the arrangements in the capable hands of Captain W. T. Finlayson were, as last year, tip-top. The officers of the S. and T. Corps were "At Home" on the concluding day and the prizes were distributed by Lady Dane after H. H. Sir Louis Dane had made a short congratulatory speech. Appended are results:—

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Rangers and Sibpur match produced the best hockey seen this season; the combination by the College forwards being very pretty, indeed, but on occasions they overdid it, and were beaten by the Rangers by 3 goals to 1. With the exception of Skempton, on the winning side, and C. Fox of Sibpur, both teams were at full strength. During the initial half the play was fast and the exchanges very even. McGuin, the College goal-keeper, had more to do than his vis-a-vis, Little; but this was owing to the College forwards failing to make the best of their chances; while the Rangers' halves and backs also defended splendidly and played better than the opposite middle line and back division. The Rangers deserved to win by the margin, Lindsay scoring 2 goals and Smart 1. Lindsay is a nephew of the great Dalhousie centre forward, who in his day was considered one of the best in his position in India. Young Lindsay did well at hockey and football last year and this season he has improved considerably. He is speedy, shoots hard and straight, but has not such control over the ball as his clubmate, Smart. The Rangers, when at full strength, are a very powerful team and any side that will beat the Rangers on their own ground should annex the Beighton Cup.

There are only three teams in the League, and as Calcutta will play Rangers, Customs and Sibpur on their own ground, the "Reds" will have a slight advantage. The Rangers and Customs are both very slightly superior to Calcutta and either of the teams would beat the C.F.C. on neutral ground, but, as stated, the "Reds" have the advantage of playing at home, and this may give them a victory over both teams. There would be little to choose between Sibpur, St. Xavier's and the E.I.R., but the Medicals will not give any of the first three teams any trouble. The Pathans have improved a good deal lately, and on their show against the Medicals last Monday, the Alipore team would beat any except the three first on the League table.

Some very interesting matches have been played during the week and the hockey, generally speaking, has showed much improvement, but the two Y.M.C.A.'s are making no headway.

The Chowringhee Branch, who, a few years back, could hold their own against any local combination, are at the bottom of the League this year, and not only have they not scored a single point but they have not even obtained a single goal. When the late W. K. Brown, Fisher, Radcliffe, Twidale and other prominent players represented the Y.M.C.A. the latter often appeared in semi-finals, and even in the final for the Beighton Cup; but of recent years this club has been low down the ladder and that they are certain of annexing the "Wooden Spoon" goes without saying.

The Medicals have also fallen off considerably and this is just what I anticipated in my earlier notes. The Medicals made a fatal mistake of entering two teams and the strain has already been telling on their players. On Monday they lost badly to the Pathans who won by three goals to nil. The Pathans' four officers are players all above the average; Captain Campbell, the right back, being exceptionally good, while Shair Afzul, their centre forward, is as fine a player as any team possesses. He is fast, has a good control over the ball, and shoots hard and straight. Against the Medicals, Shair Afzul netted all three goals. The Pathans were superior to the Medicals in every department and only Craine on the losing side was seen to advantage.

The Medicals on Saturday could do no better than draw with Dalhousie. In this match Craine and Murray of the Dals were injured, the Medical man being cut on the chin, while Murry received a nasty cut over the eye. The Trades Club has improved and when Carver is able to play the side will be considerably strengthened.

The Measurers put up a magnificent fight against the Rangers, who only won by two goals to one. This speaks well for Mr. Knox's team. The Measurers lack combination, but the team is fast and all the men work hard to the very end.

St. Xavier's and the E. I.R. have also showed progress. The former play the Customs on Saturday, when an excellent game is anticipated. Yakchee is very safe at back, the College have a fine half-back line, and when the Park Street boys are at full strength they will want some beating. A new forward from North Point has strengthened the attack. St. Xavier's beat the Orientals by four to love, and the margin in itself will go to show that St. Xavier's are quite a strong side, as no team has got more than three goals from the Mahomedan Club. The Customs have placed three more wins to their credit since my last notes, beating the Pathans, Rovers, and Y.M.C.A. Against the Pathans the Riverstiders were not representative, but they managed to get the points although they only won by the narrow margin of a goal to nil. The Rovers were beaten by 3-0 and the Y.M.C.A by 10 to love.

The Calcutta and Amateur match last Tuesday was a very tame affair. Calcutta were without three of their regular players, and although they won by three goals to nil there was little of interest in the game. Cole and Porter (2) were the goal-getters. H. Sherman will probably not play this year as the club is not lacking forwards but reliable halves. Studd is very good when pitted against a slow team, but is beaten when opposed to a fast set of forwards.

Appended is the League table up to date:—

THE BANGALORE TOURNAMENT.

THE Annual Gymkhana Hockey Tournament opened on Monday last, the 11th instant. In the first round on the 11th the St. Joseph's Cadets met their comrades in the Bangalore Rifle Volunteers. The boys expected an easy win, but they reckoned without their hoste. The game was level throughout and ended in a draw, each side having 1 goal to their credit. In the re-play the Cadets secured one goal and the match. The R. A. (Secunderabad) having scratched to the Cameron Highlanders, the latter had a "walk over." On Tuesday, the 12th, the Sherwood Foresters (Secunderabad) engaged in a match against the 7th Queen's Own Hussars and wiped them out completely by 7 goals to nil. The latter never had a thought of making any show as they only arrived here a few months ago and have not had much time to spare for practice It was very sporting of them to have entered at all. The other match on the same day was between the 13th Brigade, Royal Field Artillery and the Royal Engineers. The latter were most fancied as they had been having no end of practice matches lately, but the Gunners were keeping themselves dark and after a well-fought contest beat the Engineers by 4 goals to 3. On Wednesday, the 13th, the 2nd Leicesters (Madras) met "S" Battery, R.H.A. The latter, like the Hussars, are comparatively new arrivals in the station and they were easily beaten by 7 goals to nil. The last match in the first round was played between the Oxford and Bucks (Wellington) and the Kolar Goldfield Volunteers. This was another very close and exciting match, the Oxfords eventually beating the Volunteers by 2 goals to nil.

The second round began on Thursday the 14th. The St. Joseph's College Cadets made their second appearance on the field and were opposed to the Cameron Highlanders. The boy again played a rattling good game and succeeded in defeating their opponents by 3 goals to 2 after playing an extra ten minutes each way, 2 goals aside being the score when the Referee piped time. The struggle between the Sherwood Foresters and 13th Brigade, R. F. A. was a strenuous one, the teams being very equally matched. In the end the Infantry team survived, beating the Gunners by 1 goal to nil in the extra time.

The first match in the semi-finals was played on the 15th instant the contending teams being the Oxford and Bucks and the 2nd Leicesters. Although the latter had the advantage over their adversaries many a time, no score was made on either side. Dooley (Leicesters) and Taylor (Oxford and Bucks) the two custodians were impregnable in their defence and distinguished themselves many a time during the game. In playing the extra ten minutes each way, the Oxfords succeeded in netting the ball in four minutes and no further score being made they came out winners by the narrow margin of 1 goal to nil. The second match of the semi-finals came off on the 16th St. Joseph's Cadets and the Sherwood Foresters being opposed to each other. It was a great game and the immense crowd that thronged around the ropes added to the excitement of the play by their repeated outburst of applause. The College lads drew first blood shortly after the bully, Strickland being responsible for the score and a couple of minutes later Foxon (Sherwood) equalised. The next goal went down to the credit of Hebbeed, the College inside right and there was nothing more done when half time was called. The Sherwoods kept the Cadets on their defence most of the time in the second half but they were unable to score and the match ended in a popular win for the College by 2 goals to 1.

The final was played yesterday afternoon on the Gymkhana ground in the presence of a record attendance including Sir Hegh and Lady Daly, General Mackenzie Kennedy, and nearly all Bangalore society, who were accommodated in the enclosure while around ropes on four sides of ground the crowds were densely packed. The opposing teams were St. Joseph's College cadets and the Oxford and Buckinghamshire Light Infantry and the lads gave the men a good run for their money. The play in the first half was level throughout and there was no score either side. In the second half Hebeerd hit a clean goal for the College and the Oxfords equalised just before time. An extra ten minutes each way was played. The College netted the ball soon after hostilities were resumed, but the score was not allowed the Referee having given sticks against the College. It appears the Referee admitted having made a mistake but he could not go back on his decision. This was a great misfortune for the Cadets on which they received much sympathy from their large circle of friends present. Play continued to the end and the Oxfords scoring a goal were declared winners by two goal to one. The Challenge Cup and small cup to each member of the winning team was presented them by Lady Daly. Admirers of the Cadets are getting up a subscription to present the boys with some memento of the tournament as runners up in appreciation of the splendid form shown by them throughout and their having got into the finals after beating such sturdy rivals as the Sherwoods, Camerons and their own regimental team, a performance they and the College staff may well be proud of.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

BY "THROTTLE."

PERTINENT questions are beginning to be asked as to the result of the Police inquiries into two accidents which recently occurred in Calcutta. It has become the recognized course, to consign to oblivion certain matters with the stereotyped remark "The Police are inquiring into the matter." This effectively muzzles comment at the time and in a few days the incident is forgotten by all except those who may have some interest in the affair. As a professional motorist with the best interests of the profession at heart it is my earnest desire to see the strongest possible light thrown on to all cases where a driver appears to be to blame. In justice to all classes this is necessary, let the driver, whatever his standing, be either publicly exonerated or if culpable punished in an exemplary manner. By this means only can our roads be swept of an element which is bringing the motor-driving profession in Calcutta to serious disrepute.

ONE of the greatest difficulties experienced by the amateur driver is gear changing in traffic, particularly "changing down," that is coming from top gear to second when an obstruction is met on the road. By the exercise of a little thought this trouble may be easily overcome and the life of the gears considerably lengthened, to say nothing of the relief to the nerves of those who are compelled to hear the horrible crashing and grating so common in the streets. It may be assumed that all drivers have some idea of the construction of a gear box and so I will proceed to demonstrate how a silent change can be effected. The first operation is to completely declutch, that is depress the clutch pedal to its limit than instead of at once trying to engage the pinions by means of the gear lever, time should be given the shaft to come to a stop, in most cars this is only a matter of a few seconds. In a car where a clutch stop is fitted the period which must elapse before moving the gear lever, is, of course, reduced and a little practice, with the foot boards removed, soon enables one to judge accurately the correct delay to allow, and the result is a perfectly noiseless change, either up or down.

A COMMON source of trouble to the owner-driver is the difficulty of "starting up" in the morning, when his car is fitted with magneto ignition only. The tendency is to curse the magneto, the man who fitted it, and everyone concerned in its construction. Poor maligned magneto how often have I had owners come to me and say "Have a look at this magneto of mine, and do it up; it takes half an hour to start my car in the morning." In the majority of cases which have come under my notice the trouble is with the carburetter, in the remaining few, failure of valves to "seat" properly has been a great contributer.

Through laying the blame on the carburetter, many owners have gone to the expense of having Dual ignition fitted, to find them to their immense satisfaction that their engine starts at practically the first "pull up." This result strengthens their conviction that the trouble under the original condition was due to the magneto, whereas this may not be the case, by any means. It is admittedly easier to start on the accumulator coil system, but the difficulty in starting on the other is not necessarily caused by any want of adjustment on the magneto. The trouble usually is on account of the weak spark provided by a magneto when turned over slowly by hand, not being of sufficient intensity to explode the weak mixture which carburetters are generally economically adjusted to supply.

Under exactly similar circumstances the accumulator spark intensified by the coil causes an explosion and the starting of the engine. The remedy therefore is to look to the adjustment of the carburetter when difficulty is experienced in starting on the magneto; give a richer mixture and the result is wonderful. The rich starting mixture is not detrimental on an accumulator system and is a decided advantage under that of the magneto. To regulate the mixture, if no means are already fitted, is a very simple matter. All that is necessary is to fit a slide valve at the opening of the main air intake; this valve may be coupled up to the front of the radiator with an ordinary wire, and have a spring on the reverse side to arrange for the weaker mixture when the engine is running and the wire is released.

On cars having magneto ignition only, this fitting is a necessity, because though they may now start easily on the magneto there will come a time when some temporary derangement such as jet stoppage or a dirty tank will weaken the mixture to too great an extent and then the closing of the air intake will provide assistance and by starting up, probably blow the obstruction away.

ONE of the most noticeable features of the present day motor engine is the attention that is paid to obtaining silence. When an engine becomes noisy as it usually does after a few months' wear a likely cause is the want of adjustment of the valve tappets. With the strong valve springs now generally fitted the valve toes wear faster than formerly and too wide a clearance between valve stems and tapped heads is a prolific cause of noise. This defect is easily remedied in any garage and the writer now makes a point of fitting all engines which come to him for repair, with tappet caps, where no adjusting device already exists. This plan has been found to act admirably and several well-known makes have been considerably improved both with regard to power and sweetness of running.

IT is the desire of the writer to give the benefit of his experience, which extends over ten years, to readers of the Indian Field, and correspondence is invited. Very often a little defect crops up in a car and for lack of advice considerable waste of time and expense is incurred by sending the car to the workshop when it could quite easily be remedied by the owner himself or his chauffeur.

The Naturalist.

THE INCREDULITY OF NATURALISTS.

The old story of the mother of the sailor-boy, who readily believed her son when he spoke of rivers of rum and flowers made of brown sugar in place of sand, but at once became utterly incredulous when he told her of fishes that fly, is but an example, so far as its latter part is concerned, of the attitude at one time assumed by naturalists to popular or native accounts of the habits and ways of animals.

The hunters of Fort Union had, for instance, persistently asserted for years that the pronghuck, or American antelope, annually sheds the sheaths of its horns and renews them; but the naturalists knew better, and, as other antelopes never did anything of the kind, at once relegated the statement to the limbo of travellers' tales. One fine day, however, a pronghuck in the London Zoological Gardens actually did cast its horn-sheaths, and the naturalists had to confess, with the best grace they could that they were wrong and the hunters right!

Again, settlers or natives in certain districts of the United States affirmed that the curious flat-bodied lizards locally known as horned toads have the power of squirting tiny jets of blood from their eyes. Here, of course was a good downright lie which no self-respecting naturalist would condescend to consider for a moment. But in this instance also one of their own confraternity happened to be handling one of these lizards, which suddenly squirted a jet of blood into his face from one eye, and then repeated the process from the other.

A somewhat similar case occurs with regard to certain South African snakes, which were reported by the Boers and other outdoor folk to spit venom from their mouths. "Oh no!" said the naturalists, "the thing is a physical impossibility, and cannot be done." Nevertheless, they had to confess to few years afterwards not only that it can be done, but that it is a common and general practice on the part of the snakes in question.

In this connection we cannot refrain from referring to the innate belief among the old-time English peasantry (we say old time, for our modern countrymen doesn't bother his head about such matters) that vipers swallow their young when the latter are threatened by danger. At one time the naturalists asserted that this too was a physical impossibility, but they subsequently climbed down, and admitted that there was no physical bar to such a process, to which, however, they still refused to give credence.

Personally, on account of the circumstance that almost all such popular and native stories rest on a basis of fact, we are disposed to believe that there is something in the legend. Possibly we shall be told that the belief in the venomous nature of the harmless glow-worm is of itself sufficient to show that the viper-legend has no foundation in fact; but this does not in the least shake our belief, as there is a natural tendency among all uneducated people to regard all snake-like creatures as dangerous. And in cherishing this idea they certainly have prudence on their side!

We might go on to cite other cases, but those quoted are sufficient for our purpose, namely, to show that popular statements in regard to animals which naturalists have refused to believe are usually, if not indeed invariably, based on a substratum of fact, which may or may not be overlain with exaggeration.

The latest instance of the truth of such a despised and neglected legend has come to light in the case of the rhinoceros. Old writers—we do not know how old—asserted that when these beasts are at rest, their front horn (or the single one in the case of species not supplied with a pair) becomes mobile, and can be moved backwards and forwards. Some of these ancient gentlemen went even further than this, and asserted that the horn becomes plastic, so that it can be employed for much the same purposes as the trunk of an elephant! But this is obviously overdoing it.

A few natural history writers have indeed expressed their opinion that there might be something in the story. Dr. William Burchell, the early explorer of South Africa, wrote for instance, in his "Travels in the Interior of Southern Africa" (1822-24, vol. II, p. 76) as follows:—

"It (the horn of the rhinoceros) grows from the skin only in the same manner as the hair—a circumstance which entirely divests of improbability the assertion of its sometimes being seen loose, although by no means so loose as some writers have supposed. Nor is it at all extraordinary that the rhinoceros should possess the power of moving it to a certain degree, since the hog, to which, in the natural arrangement, it so closely approaches, has a much greater power of moving its bristles, which if concreted would form a horn of the same nature."

Forty years later (1861) James Greenwood, on page 153 of his "Wild Sports of the World," referred to the subject in the following words:—

"Concerning the horns of the rhinoceros there exist many curious superstitions, one being that when the animal is undisturbed by man and at peace with its fellows, the foremost horn is plastic as the trunk of the elephant, and put to the same purpose; but that when enraged the accommodating implement stiffens to a weapon of war, and relaxes not till the ire of the terrible beast cools. This doctrine, however, may be not without foundation, for the horn is merely seated on the top of the nose, having for its base a peculiar knob of bone. . . . . The root of the horn may be planted in a bed of muscle, which when the animal is at rest, may so far relax as to admit of the weapon swaying slightly, giving to the eye of the furtively watching savage, an elastic appearance."

Since that date the subject appears to have been quite ignored, till recently, when Mr. R. J. Pocock wrote in the Field of 20th January (vol. cxix, p. 113) as follows:—

"I have never seen it recorded, although it may be known to sportsmen, that the horn of a rhinoceros is not tightly fixed like the tusk of an elephant or the horn of a buffalo, but can be moved backwards and forwards to a certain extent upon its root, like a loose tooth. I noticed this in the African rhinoceros that has just died, when it first reached the gardens five years ago, and I verified it on the dead animal. That the looseness of the horn was not an individual peculiarity is shown by its occurrence also in our young living specimen from Uganda. In the Indian rhinoceros recently dead the horn was worn to a mere stump, giving no grip or leverage whereby its mobility could be tested."

It is a pity that the subject did not come on the tapis in time for experiments to be made on the horns of the rhinos shot by the King in Nepal.

After this latest triumphant vindication of the truth of an old and discredited legend, it is to be hoped that naturalists will be less chary of according belief to native accounts of the ways of animals.

Accounts for 1911.

Mr. L. H. Savile, the Honorary Treasurer, in submitting a statement of the accounts for the year ending 31st December 1911, said:—I beg to call attention to the fact that the opening balance at the beginning of the year was Rs. 2,960-10-11, and the closing balance was Rs. 2,494-7-9, showing an excess of expenditure over income of Rs. 466-3-2. Although this is not a very large deficit, when compared with last year which showed a surplus of Rs. 8,485-9-3, it is a serious falling off.

With regard to the receipts which are Rs. 3,037-3-4, less than in 1910, the subscriptions are Rs. 600-0-1 less, entrance fees Rs. 1,079-4 less, and sale of Duck Book, Rs. 2,424-12-6 less. This latter source of income was practically expected to cease this year as the issue was nearly all sold last year, but what is more serious is the reduction in the amount of entrance fees, meaning as it does that the number of new members joining has decreased by 118.

While the receipts have diminished the expenditure has gone up by Rs. 4,945-15-10 as compared with last year, the principal items of increase being rent for the additional rooms taken over Rs. 750, salaries of staff, Rs. 1,151-10-10, and Journal account Rs. 3,302-8-3.

These increased expenses are all very necessary if the Society is to carry on the work it has undertaken and the way in which members can best assist in helping on this work is to induce others to join the Society or in agreeing to a substantial increase of the annual subscription.

The Mammal Fund.

A separate account has been opened during this year to deal with the finances of the above fund which has been started for the purpose of making a mammal survey of India.

The amount subscribed to this fund up to 31st December, 1911, was Rs. 23,530-1-0, the expenditure to the same date being Rs. 7,786-15-0, showing the balance in hand of Rs. 15,743-2-0.

Two collectors are now working on the collection of mammals for this survey and provided funds are forthcoming they will continue until a survey of the whole of India and Burma has been completed.

The expenses of the two collectors amount to about Rs. 750 per mensem.

Election of the Committee.

The following gentlemen were elected as office bearers for the present year:—President, H. E. the Right Hon'ble Sir George Sydenham Clarke, G. C. M. G., G. C. I. E., G. C. S. I, F. R. S. Vice-Presidents: Mr. J. D. Inverarity, B.A., LL.B., Revd. F. Dreckmann, S. J., and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice N. C. Macleod. Honorary Secretary, Mr. W. S. Millard. Honorary Treasurer, Mr. L. H. Savile. S., Mr. John Wallace, C.E. and Mr. T. Bainbrigge Fletcher.

Exhibits.

The members and their friends spent the evening in the Museum, examining the Society's collections. Among the exhibits were 155 skins of mammals which had just been received from Mr. G. C. Shortridge (the Society's collector) from the South Dharwar district. These specimens will be forwarded next mail to the British Museum for identification and return.

Mrs. W. H. Deakin exhibited a collection of marine shells made by her in Back Bay, Mr. O. D. Mahaluxmivala, Superintendent of the Victoria Gardens, exhibited three beautiful orchids in flower, Dendrobiums parishii, ochreatum and gratissimum.

ON HORSE SHOW JUDGING.

EVERY horse show is productive of controversy on the subject of judging. It seems well nigh impossible for even the best of judges to give complete satisfaction. One disappointed competitor asserts that the polo ponies were subjected to unfair tests; another that the hacks were judged on their looks alone without any regard to manners; a third that the awards were influenced by favouritism.

This latter, unfortunately by no means uncommon, complaint may be dismissed in a sentence as both unworthy and totally unjustified. Every experienced sportsman-like exhibitor will agree that not one judge in a thousand is actuated by any other motive than to select the best horse of a class, entirely regardless of prejudice or bias.

Often, however, these selections by no means meet with general approval, and sometimes, indeed, cases occur in which it is quite incomprehensible how the claims of one or more horses can have been disregarded in favour of the actual prize winners. Subsequent inquiry from the judges elicits the fact that their decision was mainly influenced by some particular attribute, which had not occurred to, or been deemed important by, the majority of spectators. Especially is this the case with polo pony, hack and hunter classes. Certain classes are more easily judged than others. The merit of chargers, for instance, though "make and shape" must certainly be taken into consideration, is ascertained chiefly by their handiness, ability to perform riding school movements, obedience to the various "aids," quietness under fire or other exciting influences—in a word, by their general docility. Thoroughbreds "in hand," on the contrary, are considered entirely from the point of view of their "make and shape" and display of "quality," while no account whatever is taken of their manners. In both these classes, then, the judges have but a single attribute to consider, in the one behaviour, in the other appearance—and the difficulty of reaching an accurate decision is accordingly diminished. But as soon as polo ponies, hacks and hunters enter the ring, several attributes have to be regarded simultaneously, and opinions at once begin to differ as to which of them should be looked upon as of paramount importance.

Take, for example, the hack class, almost invariably the strongest numerically of the entire show.

What is the object in view here? To select the most desirable horse or pony for a quiet ride on the hard, high road. The attribute of paramount importance to fulfil this condition is at once apparent—an animal which is a "comfortable ride," smooth paces at trot and canter, a fast walker, a good mouth, equable temper, and fearless in all kinds of traffic. With this idea in mind, some judges are of opinion that no attention whatever need be paid to the appearance of the animal. But this is wrong, because although one might possess a knock-kneed, broken down, old caster, who fulfilled all the above conditions, he would still be an undesirable hack, since one would be well aware that every passer-by would exclaim "What a miserable brute!"

Another judge, at the opposite extreme, says: "I don't care whether he is a 'comfortable ride' or not, so long as he is a showy little devil with plenty of 'go.'" But though this view appeals to many of us who like to feel a "bit of blood" between our knees, it need hardly be pointed out that judging on these lines is a matter of personal predilection, and not of actual merit.

There are those, again, who seem to think that a hack must of necessity have a bobtail and a cobby shape, and will not look at anything of racey appearance, but surely, if the racey one's manners are equally good, he is preferable to the cob, for there can be no question as to the pleasure of owning the one or the other. In considering the "make and shape" of a hack, there are certain points which should be specially noted, and others which are of little account. Good feet are essential for work on the road, sloping pasterns for comfort at the trot, a good shoulder, to obviate stumbling, these are all of the utmost moment; but a long "rein" and "well-let-down" hocks, so necessary in the hunter, are of trifling importance in the hack, who, technically, has neither to gallop nor to jump. Here, then, are some of the difficulties which beset the judge of hackneys, and as soon as he turns from them to a class of hunters, he encounters an entirely fresh problem.

What is the object in view here? To select a horse, exclusively on "make and shape," as an example to be aimed at, as a type of the ideal hunter. In England, this view is undoubtedly correct. The object of horse shows at Home is, the encouragement of breeding, and obviously it would not encourage breeders if they were beaten by an inferior looking animal merely because he had enjoyed a longer period of training, and was therefore better mannered than their own exhibits. But in India the object of horse shows is, to afford owners an opportunity to pit their animals against others, not as ideal types, but as good hunters actually in daily use. Therefore, it seems that the object of an Indian hunter class is, to pick the most desirable horse for an immediate gallop across country. This opinion, however, is frequently unsupported by judges, and prizes are awarded entirely on appearance, without any attention to manners, mouth, paces, ability to jump, and so forth.

The same applies to polo ponies. In England an example of an ideal type is required, but in this country the winner should be the pony best qualified immediately to take his place in a first class tournament. To this end, no test of handiness and boldness should be considered too severe, and it should be no excuse that the pony is perfect under the guidance of his owner, but indifferent in the hands of the judge. For the ideal tournament pony is, he who plays almost equally well, no matter whom he is carrying, always provided that an average horseman is in the saddle. Polo ponies in India should surely be judged almost entirely for speed, boldness and handiness, and "looks" should only be seriously considered when the above qualities are equal. Classes are arranged in most shows for ponies likely to play polo, and here, of course, make and shape is of paramount importance; but it is very annoying to see a pony, who, one knows, shies off the ball and is quite unmanageable in even an ordinary station game, carrying off the prize for trained polo ponies.

J. Baker made his fourth appearance at the meeting and carried off the half mile for the third year in succession. H. S. O. Ashington was credited with the two remaining Cambridge victories—the Long Jump with a fine leap of 23 feet 1 inch and the Hurdles. Among the Oxford men W. O. Ziegler won the weight putting for the second year in succession and also the hammer throw, in which he was second last year to Putnam. Gawan Taylor put up a good performance in the 3 miles. IN the international rugby match between Wales and France at Newport to-day Wales were victorious by 14 points to 8.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE Lincolnshire has not been without its sensations and the probability is that the bulk of the public have dropped money over the race, though a cute few possibly accepted the scratching of Spanish Prince as a straight tip that the other horse owned by the house of Joel was considered good enough to win. Long Set was at 10 to 1 last week-end and Reuter returns his S.P. as 13 to 2 and the day before the race he was at 9 to 1, so that up to within a short time before the race the astute Hebrew brethren must have held off and let the money pour into Hornet's Beauty and Warfare. It is very unfortunate that Hornet's Beauty should have gone amiss at the last moment, and much sympathy will be felt for Sir W. Cooke, for had all been well with this brilliantly fast horse it is reasonably probable that he would have won. A good deal of money must also have been done in over Warfare, as at the finish he was a warm favourite and when the rumours about Hornet's Beauty's unsoundness began to be put about there was evidently a rush to get on to Mr. Nickall's horse at the best price obtainable. According to the stable, who apparently made no secret about it as their money was on early, Warfare's trial was good enough to win any Lincoln: but on the other hand it was said that he was not exactly a "boy's horse" and the critics would have given him a bigger chance if a stronger jockey than little Longhurst had been in the saddle. It is, however, impossible to get a jockey in the 6st. division capable of doing justice to a horse who wants a strong vigorous man on his back. The Joel luck—both on and off the turf—has of recent years been phenomenal, and if it is not Brother "Jack" it is Brother Solly and they are a clannish nation, so that we may take it that the good things are shared. They have apparently worked the first big thing of the season "to rights," as everyone has all along been convinced that Spanish Prince was the one. Long Set is a five-year-old bay horse by Rabelais out of Belle Perdue and won twice last season, the occasions being the Doncaster Welter Handicap (1 mile), beating Thaddeus and Matelot and thirteen others, and the Cambridgeshire (1 mile 1 furlong), beating the favourite Mustapha in a canter, Mercutio and thirteen others. Long Set was upon that occasion ridden by Jelliss and had 6st. 12lb.

IT is to be hoped that when the record of the Grand National of 1912 reaches us it will not be in any way like that of last year's contest and that the raising of the bottom weight limit to 10st. will have, as it was hoped that it would, kept out the large crowd of inferior horses who have no right to be in that "gallery" at all. After last year's race we heard a good many reasons given for all the grief: the jockeys said it was the pace and the increased size and strength of the fences: other people said that it was nothing of the sort and that it was the short stirrup and inferior horsemanship. One critic even went so far as to say that it was in many cases the "white feather" and that a number of the jockeys who went out to ride the course were beaten before ever they got into the saddle. There were stories of special fees being demanded and paid: of well-known professionals being "jumped off," or shot off, when horses made the slightest mistake: of jockeys who ought to have known better riding directly in the wake of a leader at a fence and sharing in that leader's downfall when, if they had taken the ordinary and usual precaution of "having a bit to themselves," nothing would have happened, and of numerous other incidents that certainly did not redound to the credit of the performers. There is little doubt that it was neither the pace nor the size and strength of the fences but the new craze for riding over obstacles à l'Americaine that brought all the grief. The time, 10m ns 35secs., was, as a matter of fact, very slow, as it usually is when there is a terrific burst at the start as was the case last year. In last year's race it is recorded that the field went out as if there were going five furlongs instead of close upon five miles and that then it petered out to an absolute crawl, as it was bound to do, if such tactics were pursued. When Caubeen was leading them the second time round the pace was very slow, and after all bar Glenside had got to grief in some way or another that horse was so blown and beaten that the proverbial man in top-boots could almost have beaten him. The record for the present course is Cloister's, who won in 9mins. 42secs. with 12st. 7lb. in the year 1893, ridden by Dollery, and after making most of the running. In 1862, when Huntsman won with 11st., ridden by Lamplugh, the course was not the same, though it is probable that it was somewhat more severe, as the going was nothing like as good as it is at the present day, and he covered the distance in 9mins. 30secs.

THE time in which the Grand National is run has been compared by Mr. Arthur Coventry, and Mr. A. E. T. Watson who jointly wrote the steeplechasing chapters in Badminton, with that put up by the Derby colts at Epsom, and he has adduced some very surprising figures. Taking a period of twenty years for each race those writers point out that the average time for the Derby an easy 1½ mile has been about 2mins. 48secs. and the average time for the Grand National, a very long 4½ miles, has been 10mins. 13secs. That is to say, that a mile has been run at Epsom in 1min. 52secs. and at Liverpool in only 24secs. more, that is in 2mins. 16secs. They cite the extreme case of Huntsman, 9mins. 30secs., or a mile in about 2mins. 6secs., and a Derby winner (Ellington) has ere now taken 3mins. 4secs. to cover the 1½ mile at Epsom or travelled at the rate of 2mins. 3secs. to the mile. It must be also borne in mind quite apart from all considerations of weight for age, that whereas the three-year-olds at Epsom carry only 9st. the average weight at Liverpool is about 11st. Cloister and Manifesto have both won the race with 12st. 7lb. There is not much question therefore about the pace that a horse must possess to win the Grand National in the average year.

As to the outcry against the fences at Aintree that was raised last year, it was not only in connection with this course that complaints were heard. Jockeys who favoured the monkey crouch grumbled about the Birmingham and Lingfield fences, which were strengthened, the growing privet having been reinforced with gorse, much to the discomfort of the Sloanites, who found it by no means to their taste and were frequently put on the carpet even when their horses did not actually fall, for it is obviously impossible for these disciples of the American to "remain" even if a horse hits a fence hard It was only natural therefore that when the Aintree fiasco occurred they should turn round and blame everything excepting their own foolishness and bad horsemanship. Messrs. Topham strenuously denied the fact that Aintree was any stiffer or bigger, and in fact in some cases the height of the fences was less. Aintree is not nowadays anything like as stiff as it was 50 or 60 years ago or even less. In the early days of the Grand National all the horses had to carry 12st. and they had to jump one or two very formidable stone walls and gallop twice across twelve fields of very rough going before they came on to the race-course on which they raced about a mile after this trying ordeal. These fields over which they raced included a lot of ploughed land, and it may be of interest on the eve of this year's contest to set forth particulars of what the old course used to be like about the year 1843 and before. The following are authentic details of the "country," which is now mostly well kept turf bar 225 yards of light plough between the third and fourth fences:—

First Field:—Clover Root.
Second Field:—Wheat—very heavy.
Third Field:—Plough.
Fourth Field:—Plough and about 600 yards across.
Fifth Field:—Seeds.
Sixth Field:—Seeds.
Seventh Field:—Ploughed and harrowed.
Eighth Field:—In this field they turned at the extreme point and jumped out of it over Becher's Brook, which was then a natural water jump much more difficult than it is to-day.
Ninth Field:—Wheat and very heavy going.
Tenth Field:—Wheat and very heavy going.
Eleventh Field:—Grass—good going.
Twelfth Field:—Grass—good going.

The course nowadays is far better going and though the thorn fences no doubt grow stiffer with age they are no bigger than they have been in recent years, and, as has already been observed, smaller in actual measurement in some cases. One of the years when Aintree is supposed to have been at its stiffest and biggest was in 1900, when Ambush II. won in the Royal Livery, ridden by A. Anthony. A couple of facts in connection with the Aintree steeplechase course which might usefully be noted by those who build chase courses in India, is that the distance from the start to the first fence is 546 yards or 2 furlongs 106 yards and the run in from the last fence is 494 yards or 2 furlongs 54 yards. At our own course at Tollygunge in the 2½ mile chases the run to the first fence is only 165 yards and in the 3 mile chases about 220 yards. The run in from the last fence at Tollygunge is a sensible one and is about 440 yards. In the hurdle races in Calcutta and particularly on the Monsoon course, where there is more jump racing than anywhere else in Calcutta, the run to the first obstacle is very short and under half a furlong and the run in from the last flight is likewise very short and not much more than 110 to 120 yards.

THE two fences at Aintree that, in the opinion of those best able to judge, the men who have ridden over them, that take the most doing are the obstacle known as Canal Turn fence and the other big open ditch called "The Chair" fence. They are both formidable "regulations" and last year's official measurements are interesting. The Canal Turn fence after which the field have to pull sharp to the left is described as follows:—a thorn fence packed with gorse 5 feet high 3 feet 3 inches wide with ditch on take off side 6 feet wide 2 feet deep, banked up to a guard rail 2 feet high in front of ditch. "The Chair," so called because of the small superstructure at the right end of the fence which was in old days used for the chair of the judge at the distance post in heat races, was described as follows:—a thorn fence packed with gorse 5 feet high 3 feet thick ditch on take off side 6 feet wide 2 feet deep and banked up to guard rail 2 feet high. Captain Hayes in his description of this obstacle in his book Riding and Hunting makes "The Chair" 5 feet 2 inches high and 4 feet 3 inches thick at the base. The Canal Turn fence has to be jumped twice, "The Chair" only once, as it is in the straight and is jumped immediately before the water, which is also only crossed once. During the journey of 4 miles 856 yards formidable "regulation" fences to the number of seven have to be jumped. There is no fence on the course higher than 5 feet and none lower bar the 3 feet hedge in front of the water (16 feet of actual water plus the hedge which is 2 feet 6 inches thick) less than 4 feet 7 inches high and the majority of those fences that are not 5 feet are about 4 feet 10 inches to 4 feet 11 inches and between 2 feet 6 inches and 3 feet 3 inches thick through. Becher's and Valentine's Brooks are guarded by high thorn hedges 4 feet 8 inches and 5 feet respectively, Becher's hedge being 2 feet thick and Valentine's 3 feet 6 inches thick through and the natural brooks beyond are each 6 feet 6 inches wide so that a fairly big arc has to be covered to clear the lot. But this is so at every one of them and any horse that is not covering between 25 feet to 30 feet in width and roughly about 5 feet in height stands a good chance of "coming it." The average steeplechase horse going at speed of course clears considerably more than 25 feet without any trouble to himself, but this distance is about the minimum to give an angle of safety. At this big "regulations" for instance he has to stand away at least 12 feet to 14 feet to give him an angle that will shoot him over the top of the 5 feet hedge. The ditch is 6 feet wide plus a rail adding say another foot and the actual thickness of the obstacled is 3 feet 3 inches so that he has about 10 feet 3 inches of obstacle and allowing that he stands off a yard to a yard and a half this gives some small idea of the sort of effort that is necessary before he reaches the zenith of his arc. Even over the "regulation" measurements which are, fence 4 feet 6 inches high 2 feet thick, ditch 6 feet wide and 2 feet deep guarded by a rail 2 feet high, there is a big space to be covered before the obstacle is safely cleared, but these "regulations" at Aintree are, as will be seen, considerably more formidable. The large number of falls that are usually registered early in this race, that is over the first two or three obstacles, are as a rule due more to the eagerness of jockeys to get clear of the crowd than to the severity of the obstacles, and it is understandable that with a field of twenty or twenty-five all out to get clear the scrimmage is sometimes considerable. So far as our recollection carries us we do not remember a National during the last twenty years or so when the first two fences have not taken their toll of the field.

Recent purchases in Calcutta and others that have been sent home are chronicled as being on the eve of arrival at the Summer Hill Stud Farm which is now presided over by Mr. J. A. Longmuir, who was well known in Calcutta. Retort, Fadgie, Bird o' Freedom, True Love and our late Official Starter Mr. Bates' old black mare are amongst recent arrivals. Old Long Tom, who was owned by Dr. R. Spooner Hart when he won the Viceroy's Cup and the Prince of Wales' Cup in 1905, is also at Summer Hill and they say that the handsome old gelding is looking as round as a robin and is thoroughly enjoying life. Mercedes, Souvenir and several others are there and Footprint is the only stallion so far. Mercedes dropped twin foals last year, both dead, and Souvenir has not yet foaled; she is herself by Galeazzo out of Tender and True, the dam of Royal Tender, who ran third in last year's Derby. Galeazzo is by Galopin out of Eira, which gives Souvenir a lot of the Blacklock, Birdcatcher and Kisber blood.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Nothing like a pronounced favourite got home on Thursday, so that in a card of eight races the public cannot have been on the right side. The day being a holiday, this mid-week fixture attracted a good gathering and there was some decidedly interesting racing. O'Neill was successful in the first two, but Brown wound up with three, accounting for the last two.

First was the divided race for new maidens, Raspberry being made a shade shorter than Lawrence with Best Chance next and Sahbar and Manchester just inside tens. Except for a moment when Jofaran led, Best Chance, Sahbar and Raspberry had the race between them. As we said last time, Sahbar shows signs of staying and in a good race wore the other two down, Lawrence missing his place. Sadee Beg and Authority commanded the market in the second lot, but whereas the latter was hopelessly left the former also got badly away. A well-backed one in Tezab ran a good horse all the way, but an almost unbacked one in Krushan had him settled. Sadee Beg got a good opening and secured a place finishing very well.

There was very fair betting in the open pony race when one considers that out of eight runners only three stables were represented. Of Bleach's four Kiora was eventually shortest and Byramjee sent Regalia out shorter than Mauveron, the third stable being Penton's with Mandeville at acceptable odds. That the last-named got away in front of Mauveron and Evening Herald and then stayed on fairly comfortably from Regaha was certainly upsetting.

Only six went for the mile Arab Selling Plate, but still threes were on offer the field, Mysore being at this price, from Dumra without a real outsider. Mysore and Boneparte had the race between them, the latter going in front and holding the former safe when he came at him. Padsha outstayed Lama in a very straggly finish.

There was only one horse race, a seven furlongs which in a field of seven saw The Loaf favourite from Solution and Aqueduct. Solution was soon in front from Pincher and before very long it was evident that the weight was too much for The Loaf. He had no chance with the leaders and Solution won with a good deal in hand.

Two races were made of the Open Arab Pony Race, many omissions leaving only a field of eight in the first, Mudkoor warming to slightly shorter than Young Majub. Mudkoor never appeared to be in it, whereas Young Majub got off handily to Creditor and Plassy. The former appeared to still be going well on entering the straight, but after a great race Young Majub's superior staying powers told and he got home by a head.

In the other Dilkush was at first a decided favourite, but a rush at the end on Zuffer Beg made him the shorter. The latter was almost at once out in front with a clear lead from Fairplay, but as they neared the turn Dilkush moved up into second place. The leader has never been able to stay, so that once Dilkush collared him all was over.

Lastly a none too classy lot went out for the Pony Selling Plate, Red Monk and Agent being equal favourites from Once More. Engineer and Dushant first showed out, then Little Boy led to be passed by Agent as they turned the bend. The grey looked all over a winner, but from the distance Brown got Red Monk going and a desperately close finish left the latter returned as winner.

On Saturday the books scored rather decisively over the eight events, as only two hot favourites got home, whereas several were landed at long odds. Brown rode no less than four winners, the remainder being divided between Ferguson and O'Neill, the latter as usual on comparative outsiders.

The divisions of the Selling Plate for new Arabs were first, Lucky Slave in the former being backed to odds on in a field of sixteen from Tide and Abdul Aziz. This panned out according to the betting with the exception of second place, which was secured by Mahboob, who by getting within a head of the winner nearly gave Young Harrison another win.

Imperial and Favil Beg in the next were equally well backed amongst a dozen others, long shots taken at Solarstar, Brow and Mubrook. Neither of the favourites had any sort of look in, though Favil Beg was well away on the outside and Imperial showed for a moment wide at the turn. Brown got a good start on Mubrook and held Brow very safe with Solarstar coming late into a place.

A small field of five went out for the Selling Plate for horses, T. M. S. being a steady favourite from Huka. That these two finished last shows what an upset it was. Boomey got away in front of his stable companion Ruby Tin and T. M. S. The race appeared to rest between the front two when Mafoota came with a run and making up a deal of ground won a sensational race.

An open betting race was the mile and a half for Arabs, Young Salanic winding up at 5 to 2, shorter than Regent and Rozelmulook. Ghalyum made the running for a time from Harry Johnson, but after covering nearly a mile Crown Prince went into the lead clear of Rozelmulook, Young Salanic, Sir Hugo and Regent all fairly well bunched. Of these Sir Hugo was first done, and as they neared the last turn Regent went after the leader. He caught him a furlong from home and Crown Prince was once more relegated into second place a good way in front of Rozelmulook and Young Salanic close together.

There were just eight in the mile for horses, most of the early betting being between Lady Erna and Lady Spring till a run came on Goldseeker, making him favourite. The first two mentioned at once went to the front together from Beckmesser and Lancasterite. The last-named was then passed by Goldseeker and with Lady Spring stopping Beckmesser ran up second to hold the favourite safe, but to have no chance with Lady Erna.

Good fields were out in the first handicap for new Arabs over seven furlongs in both divisions, thirteen and fourteen respectively. In the first, Moosahar's defeat of the cracks naturally made him favourite from Bustan and Trustee, eights bar these. As usual, Bustan went away to make his own pace, followed by Moosahar, but at the three the latter suddenly lost a good deal of ground and eventually missed his place. All looked well for Bustan till a great run was put in outside by Moonspot and in winning he upset a nice pot.

Gawahajmer was the good thing he seemed to be on paper, being backed to odds on from Mijbas. The latter never showed up, but after following Pleader and Koweit the favourite went away to hold Different and Master Bill very safe.

Lastly a five-furlong sprint, an Auction Plate with Guffer Beg backed to evens from Good Evening and Plassy in a field of a dozen out of twenty-seven on the card. Woolwinder, then Golden Day showed the favourite the way till on entering the straight the latter took his big weight right away. All looked over till Brown set Red Monk going and with the grey stopping he got there as a great surprise.

Despite the fact that Mahaluxmi held a very strong counter attraction, a good number of hunting enthusiasts turned out on Thursday for the annual Point-to-Point held by the Jackal Club, which means practically the finals of matters sporting in the Salsette District. The 104th Wellesley Rifles' Band did much to add to the enjoyment of those who were so well provided for with regard to their comfort. The same course was selected as last year, the rendezvous being Marole; a triangular course with good going in parts and plenty of lepping to thoroughly test a real hunter. Mr. Lord, M.F.H., acted as judge and we have to thank Mr. Lodge for the thoroughly enjoyable time spent, the final cheers after Mrs. Lumsden had presented the trophies being suitably hearty.

Unfortunately entries for the Jumping Competition were poor and only that for ponies was held. Both Messrs. Knight Bruce and Robinson had falls, but fortunately there was nothing approaching a serious accident. Tomtit and Blytne performed really well and the latter lost by no great margin of points.

The Hunt Cup was interesting with a good field, in that most of them were well together till near the end. Mr. Rommel proved that he was riding a waiting race on Better Luck, as once he asked the chestnut he was able to go away quite comfortably from Frantic and Kitty. The Graham Trophy for first man home who has never won other than a scurry went to Mr. Robinson with Frantic.

In the pony race Mr. W. L. Graham equalled the record held by Mr. T. D. Moore by winning for the third time on a nicely shaped waler in Blotting Kaguz, holding Flyaway safe all the way with Midget a poor third.

Unfortunately only three, all ponies, went out for the open Point-to-Point, but this provided the finish of the day. Boxer never had much of a look in, Mr. Pearson's Buccaneer and Mr. J. St. J. Graham's Logic keeping together nearly all the way, till a few lengths from home the former shot away.

The whole affair was as sporting and interesting as ever, and the only possible regret is that two important fixtures should have taken place simultaneously.

Our Jubbulpore correspondent writes:—The first day of the Spring Meeting here was held last Thursday and quite a large gathering of society folk was present, among whom were Major-General Wallace and Mrs. Wallace, Colonel T. H. Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, Lieutenant-Colonel Baynes, Major Neil Haig, and a small contingent from Saugor and Mhow. There was also a smart gathering of the fair sex, who added much to make the assemblage attractive. The Band of the Royal Fusiliers played a choice selection of music and the Nerbudda Club did the catering under the management of Major H. M. Thomas, R.F.A., the Honorary Secretary. The entries were exceptionally good, but for some unknown reasons the acceptances were poor in most of the races, still racing was interesting and up to the mark. Mr. E. S. Deane, the Lucknow Secretary, is here and has successfully introduced his starting machine, he having undertook to perform the duties of starter, which he ably fulfilled.

There were six races down the card and the proceedings began with the Pony Hurdles over a distance of one and a half miles and six flights. Necklace and Primadonna were the only two who accepted and the former was made a "red hot" favourite with a few straggling bets on the latter. No sooner had they started than Primadonna took the lead with Necklace lying near her girths and this was the order maintained throughout and though the favourite made an attempt to get up to Primadonna over the last hurdle, she was done, and was beaten by two and a half lengths. The Bhopal Plate, a five-furlong sprint for Arabs, drew six out of the seven on the card and Hachal was immediately plunged for at even money and 2 to 1 on, while Dojan and Nelson found a few supporters at fours and sixes respectively, the others being nibbled at long odds by the Tommy Atkins element. The race was never in doubt, for as the barrier went up Hachal assumed command on the rails with Pagoda and Norwood lying next, and the others in a bunch. On entering the straight the favourite was still in front with Norwood next, and Dojan displaced Pagoda but Hachal was going too strong and won comfortably by five lengths, a length and a half dividing Norwood and Dojan.

This was followed by the Nerbudda Steeplechase over two and a half miles and four horses weighed out for it. Reinforcement was the tip and Spicey Breezes a place and the public justified their selection for Reinforcement, who went out at 2 to 1 on, won in a common trot with her stable companion Spicey Breezes second.

The fourth race for ponies brought out five and Little Corporal was the public fancy and 2 to 1 on was laid about her, Misfit and Necklace coming in for a small share at threes and fours. The latter would have carried more money but for her failure in the first event. However, Necklace brought recompense to her owner by defeating the favourite by three lengths and upsetting a pot of money. The next was a sprint race for horses and eight donned silk for it, Winsome carrying the bulk of the public money at 6 to 4 against, with Crout next at threes. They all raced in a bunch as far as the three-furlong rost when Winsome shot to the front followed by Betty Birr and Highland Maid and in the straight Winsome is supposed to have interferred with Betty Birr and there was some mild language used as the judge's box was passed, but the sporting owner, Captain Robertson, lodged no objection against the winner for crossing. The day's races concluded with a scurry for Arabs, two and a half furlongs, and was about the best race of the day. Sharief and Sher carried all the money and the others drew no backers. Five of them were sent away to a beautiful start, and Sharief, Sher and Khailas came at a rattling speed up the straight, for they made every inch a winning post and after a hard struggle between Sharief and Sher, the former squeezed home by quarter of a length in front of Sher.

The second and last day of the Spring Meeting was held last Saturday before a much larger gathering than on the first day and racing was very interesting, inasmuch as some good finishes were witnessed in the Race Club Plate and the Kellner Cup: the two jump races, however, were more or less a walk over for the winners. Mr. Todd rode two winners and Messrs. Trafford, Coventry, Fleming and Steele secured a winning bracket each. James O'Brien, the well-known turf accountant from the Bombay side, laid the odds and though there was not much money in the ring he must have fared well. Major Thomas, the Honorary Secretary, must be congratulated for the great success that attended his labours, for the meeting was quite up to the average of up-country races, and was well managed. I must not forget to mention that Mrs. Thomas made a hospitable hostess and her efforts to make things look nice on the course was crowned with success, for she had converted the grounds if not into a Garden of Eden, into something very near the mark.

The day began with the Leap Year Plate, a high-weight handicap hurdle race for ponies, and Prima donna was made favourite, while a few staked their chance on Discussion. Both stripped well and were sent away to a good start, the favourite leading a length in front right up to the half mile post, when Discussion was given his head and took command. In entering the straight both of them cleared the last hurdle together, but Discussion was full of running and won by two lengths.

In the Garrison Plate, Indore was heavily backed, while Nelson, Rustum-i-hind and Dojan were also fancied and received some support, the others, being at long odds finding supporters. Kailas gave a deal of trouble at the post and delayed the start, but when the barrier flew up they all went together except Rustum-i-hind, who was left ten lengths before he got away. Nero led with the others lying close up and this was the order nearly right up to the bend, Rustom-i-hind, who had been left, gradually making up the lost ground and closing in with the bunch. As they entered the straight Chance displaced Nero and Kailas followed with Rustom-i-hind next, but Chance was going too strong for the others and won easily by two lengths from Nero and Kailas third.

For the March Steeplechase there were four down the card and two only accepted, Lily Bart and the Curse of Cromwell; Reinforcement and Spicy Breezes refusing to chance their necks over a two and a half miles steeplechase course with 12st. 7lb. and 12st. on their backs respectively. This resulted in Lily Bart standing out by herself and 5 to 1 on was taken about her chance and she merely fooled her opponent the whole way and won with her mouth open.

The race of the day was the fourth for horses when eight weighed out and Betty Birr was the tip and received the most support. Simson was not neglected and carried a lot of money, while Winsome was also backed. The favourite was the quickest out of the machine and led into the straight with the others near at hand. Here Betty Birr was done and Winsome and Highland Maid came to the front and they were both riding for all they were worth and Simson, who happened to get shut in the straight, was given an opening and taking advantage of it came at a rattling speed on the rails and just got home by a length, while a head separated the second and third, who were fighting out the issue on the outside.

The Kellner Cup for ponies drew four starters and Little Corporal went out an odds on favourite. The Writ jumped off with the lead and kept it up to the three furlongs when he shot his bolt. Prima donna assumed command, and led by two lengths from Little Corporal, who soon overhauled Prima donna in the run home and won easily by three lengths.

The Meeting concluded with a Scurry for ponies and Wild Duck was served up as the best thing in, the two-day races. Three to one on was taken, and the "clever 'uns" who thought they had a soft bet at that price were beaten, for Joan of Arc, who was supported at six to one against, annexed it by two and a half lengths, the favourite finishing in the ruck.

The second round of the Barton Cup Polo tournament at Jubbulpore was played on the 15th and 16th instant. The Royal Fusiliers met the Poona Gymkhana and the latter team won easily by 8 goals to 1. The match between the Bhopal Imperial Service Lancers and the Civilians produced a most exciting game, the Lancers winning by 3 goals to 2. The 32nd Lancers were to have met the "Mutes," but the latter were unable to put in an appearance and the 32nd walked over. The 22nd Punjabis and 2nd Lancers also gave a good exhibition, victory resting with the Punjabis by 6 goals to 3 after a stout struggle.

The semi-finals took place on the 18th instant. In the first match the Goona Gymkhana met the Bhopal Lancers and having matters all their own way won by 8 goals to nil. The other match between the 22nd Punjabis and 32nd Lancers was well contested, the Lancers eventually winning by 4 goals to nil. The tournament was concluded on the 20th instant, when the 32nd Lancers met the Goona Gymkhana in the final. The Lancers were better mounted, and were surer on the ball and eventually ran out winners by 3 goals to nil. The teams were:—Goona Gymkhana—Mr Daunt, Mr. Williams, Captain Hogg, and Captain Henderson; and the 32nd Lancers—Mr. Molloy, Mr. Walker, Mr. Howard, and Captain Fergusson-Pollok.

A large and representative meeting of the members of the Western India Turf Club was held at the Taj Mahal Hotel on Wednesday afternoon, the 20th instant, to discuss the latest situation now that the new Racing Bill has been introduced. The proceedings, which lasted an hour and a half, were private, and the Press were informed at the close that there was no communication at present to be made.

The Handicap Polo Tournament for the Tradesmen's Cup opened at Rawalpindi on the 23rd instant, when four games were played. The tournament is being conducted without the offside rule. In the first game the Guides were beaten by the 16th Rifles "B" team by 1 goal. The next game between the 22nd Cavalry and the Rifle Brigade ended in a win for the Rifleman by 3 goals to nil. The 5th Cavalry then met the 31st Lancers, the latter winning by 6 to 1 and the 10th Hussars beat the Remounts by 3 to 2. On the 25th instant four more games were played with the following results: Rifle Brigade beat 10th Hussars by 8 goals to 2. The 31st Lancers beat 60th Rifles "B" team by 7 goals to 1. The 17th Lancers beat the 60th Rifles "A" team by 6 goals to nil; and the R. A. beat the 35th Sikhs by 2 goals to 1.

Having entirely recovered from his attack of pneumonia Matt Wells, the English light-weight boxing champion, has again gone over to the States. His matches across the Atlantic will be numerous, for in turn at New York he will meet "Knock Out" Brown, Leach Cross, and J. Goodman. Subsequently his opponent will be Packy McFarland, the match being decided in Chicago, after which Wells will go to the Gold Coast in the expectation of meeting Ad. Wolgast for the championship of the world.

Bombardier Wells will shortly be in America and has arranged to box Al. Palzer on the 4th July. He is going to fill in the time of waiting with music hall engagements, which it is to be feared he may find even more damaging to his prospects than a season of gymnasium practice.

Young Joseph, welter-weight champion of Great Britain, was again defeated early this month when Billy Hughes beat him over a fifteen-round tourney at the city A. C., Hull.

The preliminaries for the fight between Jack Johnson and Jim Flynn have been settled and the battle will take place at Wendover, Nevado, just across the line from Salt Lake, on a date between 17th and 20th July.

There is now a new feather-weight boxing champion of America, Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, who defeated Abe Attell, the champion for twelve years, at Los Angeles on the 22nd ultimo. The fight went the full 20 rounds, but from the first old timers believed Attell had met his match. Abe, who was decidedly groggy, started clinching in the eighth round. Kilbane appealed to the referee but in vain and he then employed similar tactics. He held, but he wasn't as good a holder as Abe and didn't know the dirty parts of the game so well. Attell's second saw his finish coming in the interval between the 15th and 16th rounds and Abe took the floor in the 16th with his body glistening with the grease that had been rubbed on it. The referee stopped the bout and rubbed the grease from Attell's body with a towel. Abe became desperate and deliberately butted Kilbane with his head opening a wide gash over Johnny's eye, Kilbane complained and getting no satisfaction butted Attell all round the ring. After Attell opened the eye he continually played for the sore spot but Kilbane was too clever and Abe was unable to reach it. In the 14th round Attell fell through the ropes in his endeavour to get away from a right hand swing. Attell used body blows through the entire fight after he found that Kilbane had a splendid defence and was able to block nearly every lead for the face. Kilbane on the other hand played for the face at all times and did his best to put Attell out, but the old champion stood it out to the end. Kilbane outfought his opponent in almost every round and was given the verdict.

The North-Western Railway Football Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Lahore on the 23rd instant, when the Left half Battalion beat the Right half Battalion of the King's Regiment by 2 goals to nil after an interesting game.

The Simla Open Lawn Tennis Championship Tournament promises this year to be of exceptional interest. The challenge cups offered are excellent trophies, and each of them is valued at over Rs. 450. They are believed to be the best offered for any such events in India. The tournament is open to all India, and entries close on the 4th May, 1912.

The All-England Lawn Tennis Club's decision to retain the challenge round will probably come as a surprise to most people. When the question was first raised, after Roper Barrett's physical failure against Wilding last year, it was stated that the matter largely depended upon the feelings of the existing champion. He having won it under certain conditions, those conditions could not be altered without his consent. Since then it had become known that Mr. Wilding was not only willing himself to play through, but thought it the more equitable system, and in fact he brought the question before the All-England Club in a manner that could not be ignored by formally requesting that the holder of the championship should in future have to stand on an equal footing with the other players.

The club committee put forward a number of arguments about "tradition," "special position," "great prestige," but certain references in Mr. Gore's presidential speech make it appear as if the reason which appealed most strongly to them was the one of gate-money. More glamour—and more gate-money—attaches to a challenge round than to a mere final.

The Oxford and Cambridge Boat race will be rowed on Saturday. Both crews are in splendid trim and a great race is expected. Oxford rowed the full course last Friday in 20mins. 53secs. and the next day the Light Blues rowed from Hammersmith Bridge to the mile post in 2mins. 51secs., which is one and a half seconds inside the record.

The South African Rugby Board has accepted the invitation of the committee of the four British Rugby Unions to send a team to England in the season 1912-13. It intimates, however, that it would prefer the 1913-14 season if that would equally suit.

As will be seen from our special telegram giving the results of the Inter-Varsity sports D. Macmillan of Trinity College, Cambridge, won the quarter mile in 49⅖secs. which is a record for these meetings. Macmillan is one of the best sprinters Cambridge has turned out. He recently won a Hundred yards Handicap at Fenner's ground, starting from scratch, in 9⅘secs., which is only ⅕ more than the world's record and equals the British Amateur record. At the Cambridge University sports, a report of which appears further on, Macmillan won the 100 yards in 10⅖secs. and the quarter mile in 50⅖secs.

The following letter signed by Lord Alverstone, the President of the A. A. A., has been sent to the secretaries of all affiliated clubs :—

As you are probably aware the Olympic Games this year will be held in Stockholm, and the athletic events are fixed to take place from 6th July to 15th July.

The Amateur Athletic Association is responsible for the selection and preparation of the English representatives, and being anxious that the best possible team shall be sent to Stockholm has appointed a Chief Athletic Adviser to visit training centres and to supervise the training of competitors throughout England for the Olympic Games Trial Races to be decided on 18th May at Stamford Bridge, London

The Association will also appoint subsidiary trainers to be in attendance at all the principal training grounds throughout the country to assist in the training and coaching of possible candidates for Olympic honours.

The present income of the Association barely suffices for the purposes of maintaining the necessary minimum of permanent organisation and the expenses in connection with the training, etc., of the selected competitors must of necessity be very heavy and cannot possibly be met out of ordinary income alone.

In order, therefore, that the English representatives may be thoroughly trained and suitably equipped the Association has decided to appeal to the clubs affiliated to it for donations to a fund to be devoted to preparing, training, and assisting selected representatives.

It is with confidence that I ask you to bring this appeal before your committee with a view to a donation from your club funds, patrons, or members.

Frank Gotch recently had an easy victory over Alec Monroe, the British wrestler, whom he downed in two straight falls at the Convention Hall, Kansas city. After the contest Gotch announced his retirement from the mat game and thus passes the greatest wrestler the world has ever seen. The Sydney Referee gives the following details of his career, which may be of interest to our readers. In all the history of wrestling under the intricate code known as catch-as-catch-can there has been no athlete that has even approached Gotch's class as a finished artist of the mat. He has been in a class by himself.

Others have been advertised as being on a parallel with Gotch, but one by one they have been eliminated and the Iowan's wonderful ability as an exponent of the palaestran game is now generally recognised the world over.

At the time Gotch came upon the scene as a wrestler bidding for fame Tom Jenkins was looked upon as the champion of America and George Hackenschmidt was supposed to be the king of all foreign grapplers "a la catch as catch can."

Gotch wrestled in the Klondyke in the early nineties and also tried his hand at the fighting game. Farmer Burns discovered Gotch on a farm near Humboldt, Iowa. He found the lad had great promise as a wrestler. Gotch even then could give the "Farmer" a battle for his life.

Coming from Alaska, Gotch challenged a number of wrestlers of mediocre ability and won with ease. He challenged Tom Jenkins for the championship of America. Gotch finally defeated the man who had held the American title for years and was hailed as the new champion of the western hemisphere.

One of Gotch's hardest matches at the beginning of his triumphs was that in which he defeated Yankee Rogers after a gruelling battle. Rogers held Gotch for fifty-seven minutes in the first fall, but succumbed to the strength and speed of the new comer in twenty-seven minutes for the deciding fall.

Gotch's memorable battle with Hackenschmidt in 1908, is still fresh in the minds of the fans. Gotch was afraid of the European star at the time and kept away. He learned Hackkenschmidt's limitations in that battle. In the recent fiasco in which Gotch completely smothered the Russian lion the American champion demonstrated that he was Hack's superior in every department of the game. Gotch's hardest match in the last four years was that with Yussif Mahomout.

Every inch of Gotch's body is distributed in the right place to make an ideal wrestler. He combines speed with wonderful strength and a knowledge of the game possessed by no other heavey-weight wrestler in the world. He invented the toe hold, which might well be called the "Gotch toe lock." The champion seldom uses this grip unless he thinks it necessary to gain a fall. It is a very painful grip and Gotch has seldom resorted to rough tractics except as a means of retaliation or self-defence.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 8th March 1912.

The last straw in militant suffragism has surely been reached. After this week's exhibition of mad women let loose can we stand any more? Surely not. For days mobs of these unsexed creatures have terrorised the harmless and unoffending shopkeepers of the West End and smashed plate glass windows valued at something like £15,000. It is impossible to imagine procedure more wild and wanton than this. Their demand for the vote is, or, perhaps one should say, until this week was, to come before the House of Commons in the near future, with a better chance of being seriously considered than it has ever had before. Yet because it is not dealt with just at their time and in their way, these enemies of women's suffrage must needs take hammers and smash all the windows they can reach. We presume that they intended to demonstrate how utterly unfit certain women are for the vote. That they could have thought they were promoting the cause by this exhibition of pretty Fanny's way is unbelievable. Nobody but a born lunatic would imagine that breaking trades-people's windows is a qualification for being put upon the Register. Even the very elementary and primitive intelligence which governed these proceedings ought to be able to grasp the notion that if we all tried to obtain what we want by these means chaos and anarchy would be the only results.

Here we have hundreds of big shops barricaded, with shutters down and an army of detectives, policemen and commissionaires patrolling the fronts of the shops in Bond Street, Oxford Street, Regent Street, Knights Bridge and Kensington and tons—literally tons—of plate glass smashed and scores of the little beasts run in, traffic suspended, business interfered with, people injured, and so on and so forth, to satisfy the inebriated fury of women who have conclusively shown that they have not even a glimmering of political sense. Upon my word if I were a West End shopkeeper I would protect my windows and teach them with bags of pepper from aloft and sacks of rats and mice let loose from below. That would shift them. It is obvious that nothing will convince the degenerate women that they are only ruining any cause they may have by the display of hysteria masquerading as brute violence. But the latest antics of these creatures show that some sterner way must be taken with them. No men are going to give votes to women who display this reckless disregard of the first elements of citizenship and this cynical insensibility to national troubles. Hard labour (and lots of it) seems to be the only remedy.

The most famous of the old Savoyards, Mr. George Grossmith, died at Folkestone, where he had been living since his retirement, last Friday in his sixty-fifth year. His reputation will rest on his creation of the comedy parts in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, beginning with his John Wellington Wells in "The Sorcerer," followed by his Sir Joseph Porter in "Pinafore," his Major-General Stanley in "The Pirates," Reginald Bunthorne in "Patience," the Lord High Chancellor in "Iolanthe," King Gama in "Princess Ida," the Lord High Executioner in "The Mikado," Roger Oakapple in "Ruddigore," and Jack Point in "The Yeomen of the Guard," all of which attained a quite classical authority; but his more material success was achieved in his subsequent career as a society entertainer, in which he attained extraordinary popularity, as shown by the fact that he realised as much as £20,000 in his first two years' touring. Like Yorick, he was a fellow of infinite jest, and the effect of his humour was greatly strengthened by his quaint personality and mercurial mannerisms, and by his dry staccato utterances. He had always had his hand, too, on the pulse of his public, he was quick to shoot ephemeral follies as they flew, and while he could keep an audience rippling with laughter for two hours on end his fun was always clean and wholesome, and guiltless of equivoque or malice.

This is the plot of "The Chalk Line," a drastic comedy by Mr. Fabian Ware, now running at the Queen's Theatre. In the very north of Scotland lives old Lord Strachan, known as the "Laird," who is an inventive genius. He holds the fate of Europe in the hollow of his hand, for he has invented a man-killer so very deadly that whatever nation be possessed of the secret prescription must infallibly prove supreme, because that nation, by use of this secret, could easily exterminate the world. Lord Strachan has lost a son in the South African War, and his consequent hatred of war has led him to invent this exterminator, that war may end for ever. He intends to present it to the beautiful Countess Derada, whom he believes to be the gifted apostle of international peace. But Captain Peter Greig appears on the scene. He knows that the beautiful Countess is a wicked spy. It is she—the wonderful woman—who has engineered the general strike throughout the country; it is she who intends to use the secret to make her own country supreme (that country's identity is kept discreetly obscure); and it is she whose lightest whisper is powerful enough to set the guns of Europe blazing. Captain Peter Greig has two staunch allies in Andy, a trusty Scot, and the lovely Kathleen, Strachan's grand-daughter. The Countess has her little Veerland. And so in the bonnie Highlands a pretty drama is prepared: wily Countess against gallant Captain—with the empire of the world for the winner's prize. And the drama is quite exciting, even if the patriotism be of the tawdry kind, and, as Celia would say, laid on with a trowel; and it is also quite useful because it so clearly shows the quality of the imagination from which war-scares are wont to be brought forth.

Captain Peter Greig complains that his country will not find him a job. But, by the way in which he handles the War Minister, who is pliant as putty to his fingers, and deals with Baines, the strike leader, it is obvious that the only post to which he was at all suited was that of supreme despot, and we were disappointed that another code telegram did not arrive, informing him, in terms of the scullery, that the King and both Houses of Parliament had at the nation's cry unanimously resigned in his favour and begging him immediately to assume the imperial sway. Peter, on the play's showing, fully deserved it. Of course he was more than a match for the Countess, though she was full of guile, and he handicapped himself by his English trait of "walking the chalk line." The Countess was foiled at every step, and at the very hour of what she thought to be her triumph, he brought her to open shame. She remained defiant, however, and proudly puffed at a cigarette, set at a defiant tilt in a long holder, while the gallant Captain reminded the honest British bulldogs who were growling to tear her to pieces, that she was a woman, and must be respected.

Mr. Kenneth Douglas played Captain Peter Greig with magnificent earnestness and ease, which gave this notable paragon a delicious air of verisimilitude. Lady Tree played the Countess Derada; it is a pity that an actress of her cleverness should be so often doomed to play the diplomatic lady of foreign extraction, but, of course, she did not find the least difficulty in making the part as effective as it could possibly have been made. Mr. Charles V. France was very dignified as Lord Strachan, the old Laird, and Mr. Alfred Brydone played Andy, the children's friend and the gallant Captain's right hand, extremely well. He managed to show the independence of the Highlander without making Andy either aggressive or ill-mannered. Mr. Stratton Rodney gave a very clever little performance of Lord Tempest. Miss Lydia Bilbrooke looked charming as the Highland lassie, Kathleen Stuart, but she had not the power which was requisite for the proper playing of the part. The authors, Mr. Fabian Ware and Mr. Norman MacOwan, were called at the end of the play; but the one who appeared was not allowed to speak by a certain section of the gallery, which discourteously shouted and whistled.

"Milestones," the result of the collaboration of Mr. Arnold Bennett and Mr. Edward Knoblauch, is not so much a play as a series of three pictures. And each of those pictures is a thing of infinite charm.

It is a story of the lovers of three generations of a family—of love in 1860, in 1885, and in 1912.

The new Royalty production is not a work with a challenge; it is a far too homely thing for those modern folk who would give us no stage spectacle which was not a philosophical treatise. But everyone else will go to the theatre and see a piece as delightful and acting as fine as anything done in London for a very long time indeed.

1860: It was the age when a bathroom was an almost startling innovation; when the crinoline was in vogue; when the antimacassar (to which the suburban landlady alone remains true now) was a fashion; when there were very terrible statuettes. The first picture reminds you of all this; and you may perhaps smile and think that we have since then gone far along the road to better things. But in essential things 1860 was as is 1912.

John Rhead and Rose Sibley love each other. Rose is a gentle girl (as a Victorian maiden ought to be); John is a young man of energy and ideas. He thinks that ships can best be built of iron. The family of Sibley thinks otherwise—and decides that Rose cannot possibly marry John.

1885: The age of plush mirrors and upholstery which you would prefer not to recall, of du Maurier dresses and Princess bonnets. John Rhead has seen his faith in iron justified; a baronetcy will be one of his rewards

Rose (you must know that fate, which is sometimes kind to lovers, killed her father at a very opportune moment, so that the forbidden marriage took place after all) is a very conjugal person of somewhere near fifty. The eternal marriage problem obtrudes itself again. Emily Rhead is doing what her mother did before her; she too has fallen in love with an unacceptable engineer (who this time believes in steel and William Morris). Which is lamentable, because the champion of iron in 1860 thinks little of a new process of making steel in 1885, and has, besides, decided that Emily must marry a peer. And Emily yields to her mother's tears.

1912: Twenty-seven years are gone, and the love problem faces the family of Rhead again. We see Sir John and Lady Rhead as fragile grandparents now, Emily Rhead as the widowed Lady Monkhurst, and Muriel Monkhurst as representative of the third generation. Muriel does as Rose and Emily did (for fate decreed that they all should fall in love with ineligible engineers); but she is of sterner stuff than they. She is the woman of 1912. Her grandfather raves; her mother weeps; and she argues. Her grey-haired maiden aunt Gertrude Rhead is her only champion; she is the antagonist of youth's surrender to the will of age. Fortunately for Love, chance brings back the unacceptable engineer of the generation before (a celebrated Labour leader now); and when he marries the widowed Lady Emily Age relents, and Muriel's way is clear to marry the ineligible engineer of the third generation.

The play might be called "Milestones or The Story with the Happy Ending." There is but one unhappy person in it—the maiden aunt, unhappy and yet the wisest of them all. Gertrude Rhead had rejected her lover, Sam Sibley, when the Sibleys of 1860 disapproved of her brother John. Since then she has seen young people marry and share the joys which she has missed. There is bitterness in her heart; and yet heart is young. Miss Haidee Wright made her a wonderfully pathetic figure; the performance will haunt the memory of all who saw it.

Mr. Dennis Eadie had a very hard task indeed; he had to be the arduous lover of 1860, the hard business man of 1885, the querulous grandfather of 1912; and he was all these things convincingly; Miss Mary Jerrold was Lady Rhead; and there could have been no better.

It may seem a story Mid-Victorian in its sentiment, so perhaps it is. Clearly though it is sentiment, which appealed very strongly to the people of 1912 who saw the piece last Tuesday night. That is why they applauded the actors so rapturously; and shouted for the authors, who were not there.

* * * * * *

The blunders and solecisms of an unfortunate "simple soul," whom a legacy has lifted out of the station to which the catechism has reconciled him, are poor material for a play, yet the other simple souls in front received "Kipps" at the Vaudeville last Wednesday night with rapturous applause. When he said, "Yes miss," to his own parlourmaid, when he poured his tea into the saucer and blew it, when he turned up to a garden party in frock-coat, flannel trousers, and brown boots, the house rocked with laughter.

It is quite easy of explanation. In a country where class distinctions were rigid and enduring, fun created out of such material would probably annoy the class burlesqued, and not amuse any other. Here we all recognise ourselves. We are all—save the very few—constantly changing our milieu, and even the loftiest of us have our moments of discomfort in getting used to our new surroundings. There is a story of a guest at Windsor Castle, smoking in a forbidden corridor, presenting a sovereign to a fellow-guest who surprised him, under the impression that he was a footman. Perceiving his mistake, he said wickedly, "Sorry B——, I know you are never at ease with a sovereign."

So few of us are always at ease, though we all pretend to be. So Kipps comes home to us, and reminds us of Aunt Lucy and her "dish of tay" and old Uncle Podgers, who, when he came up to stay at Lord R——'s, being discreetly shepherded to his room by an attentive man about eight in the evening, went to bed instead of dressing for dinner.

But, apart from the humour of the "simple soul" and the really moving pathos of Miss Christine Silver as Ann Pornick, the play is "no great shakes." There is not sufficient contrast between Kipps and the surroundings he stumbles into. They are only one remove from Kipps himself.

Mr. Clarence is really fine as Kipps, not at all traditional or conventional in his moments of blundering, and equally good in his natural outbursts when he leaves the shop and when he finally sends his smooth-faced solicitor about his business and carries off Ann from her own kitchen. There was one point that seemed to mar Miss Silver's perfect performance; there is really nothing to suggest that a girl like Ann would be ignorant of her duties as a parlourmaid.

All the parts are well played, though the assistant who serves Ann in the shop spoils an excellent performance by never having learned to unroll and handle a roll of calico. Five minutes at a real drapery counter would improve an excellent piece of acting.

THE ROGUE OF RAMPOORA.

(A Memsahib's Reminiscences.)

It is such a morning! The sun gleams like a crimson blot in the horizon, the clear air seems charged with an invigorating piquancy, and the long, dark clump of trees and hedgegrowth against the sky line, nod pleasantly in the ruddy hue of sunrise, as if revelling in all the bounteous glory of Heaven's great gifts. There, in that interminable riot of lovely nature, is our goal; for somewhere within its region, a tiger—the tiger of Rampoora,—and a frolicsome "rogue," are ensconced. Sheik Ahmed, the shikari—and a paragon—left us one solemn afternoon to traverse the affected area in quest of news. When he returned, his face wore such an expression of unmistakable chagrin as to be sufficient to reduce us to the utmost despair; for the Sheik, besides being a shikari and a paragon, is also a pessimist of the worst type, which of course, is a pity. It began when we got the first intelligence of the terrible depredations of the "rogue": of how it had walked unceremoniously round a tent where a European official was engaged in holding a "Jammabandi" (village meeting) fortunately restricting its facetious desires to no grater damage than the collapsing of the flimsy structure on the heads of the gathered assembly; of how it strolled off again, to the infinite relief of the European official and his frightened audience, in search of some new amusement, which amusement it eventually found in the person of some poor native, whom it seized upon immediately, killing him, and then tearing him in two; of how—but I will say no more. What I have written will, I think, be sufficient to show the reader that these unwholesome details had a depressing effect on the impressionable Moslem who, I have reason to believe, viewed the suggestion that he should migrate to the troubled territory in quest of further news, with grave disfavour; and when finally he did go, it must have been with the fixed determination that he would share the same fate as the unfortunate villager. However, it happened that he managed to conduct himself during the mission without any serious mishap, and when he arrived back in camp, his whole being glowed so with enthusiasm, as to merit a big "baksheesh" (which was an extravagance), and a resounding thump on the back for his cleverness and ardour. Spreading his great palms before him like an ascending aeroplane, to indicate the method, he described how the "hathi" had torn its victim asunder, told us that he had succeeded in locating its exact whereabouts at the present moment, and concluded by drawing a graphic plan of the latter on the ground with an exceedingly dirty toe, and imploring the sahib to lose no time in pursuing the delinquent. That was enough. The sahib (who is an optimist), would hear no more. He would conduct me back to the safety of the dâk bungalow, and return early on the morrow. I rebelled strongly; but the sahib was obdurate, explaining that my presence besides being unnecessary, would be even dangerous—to myself of course. So consoled with the promise that I should share in the big hunt for the Rampoora tiger (of which I shall write more anon), when the present expedition was over, I retired to wretched solitude in the lonely bungalow, while the "other" engaged in a desperate encounter with big game. Meanwhile, as the sahib was so considerate as to favour me with daily details of his experience, I cannot do better than give you the story in his own words:—

"It was bitterly cold on the first morning that we set out" he wrote, "so much so that I was almost afraid we should have to face something like a blizzard. But fortunately it was not so bad as that, and before long the sun burst through an obstinate cloud pack, and smiled benignly down upon us. It was wearisome going, and on no less than three occasions we found ourselves faced by unappetising swamps, which had to be 'forded' with considerable caution, but which, however, we managed to overcome with better effect than dignity. It was in one of those bogs that the shikari first espied a suspicious looking disturbance. But there was no direct clue, and I explained that unless we found something more convincing, it would be useless following that direction. So he set to work, and before long, I discovered him running his hand joyously over a tree trunk plentifully bespattered with mud, when I lost no time assuring him, in the most emphatic terms, that, he was a genius of a very exalted order. Returning to the bog, I convinced myself that the depression we had just examined, was fresh, so it was obvious that the "rogue" had wallowed in the coolth of the quagmire the night before, and cleaned himself against the tree. Further attempts to recover even a shadow of a trace, however, were rendered woefully futile by the ground under foot being hard, and thickly covered with leaves and dry grass, so by evening we retired to rest, having discovered nothing but poor luck, and hoping that a search next morning in the long, dew laden grass, might bring its reward.

I was astir long before daybreak, and rousing the slumbering Ahmed, together we trod softly out upon the gloom. But following up the track of a desperate rogue elephant is no easy job, and so indeed we found. We tramped unwearily into forest glade and ravine, stopping only at midday for a rest and breakfast, and then we had got no further in our quest, than when we set out. At this point, the shikari deserted me, and I almost feared he had fled. I came upon him afterwards, in a shady nook, dining off his hard black cake, and vowing solemn vengeance on the flies which settled about him, and disturbed his meal; yet a moment later, he had deprived himself of a goodly portion of his khana to feed the miscreants with, for luck as he said! By evening we had had no promise of the latter, and at dusk, as we trudged homewards—that is, campwards—a fierce black cloud spread across the heavens, and in less time than it takes to write, crash after crash of thunder, followed by sheets of blinding rain, descended upon us.

This augured well for our search next day, and by morning a clue was visible. A prodigious foot mark revealed itself in the sodden earth, another mud-smeared tree stared at one, while away in front, a long line, like a great wriggling serpent, loomed before us in the tall wet grass. But a score of mud covered trees, or a railroad track of traces in water laden grass, does not necessarily indicate than an infuriated rogue elephant is in the vicinity; it might mean anything (at any rate, so far as the traces are concerned), from an innocent sambhar or pig, to a herd of bison. But it was the picture of devastation which we came upon later, that told its own story; where numbers of good sized trees, some trampled down, others rooted up wholly, strewed the ground as if they had been mere weeds. Hardly had we come upon the scene of destruction, than there was a detonating crash: another huge tree had been felled to earth, and over it stood the swaying form of the leviathan, as it flicked off the branches with its trunk. Once—twice—the rifle spoke. Then there was a mighty rush, the crashing resumed, and we listened to it as it rattled through the echoes of the forest arches, growing fainter and fainter, until finally it ceased altogether. You will be wanting to know what happened next; and the worst of it is I cannot tell you. All I know is that I did not get the rogue elephant, or the reward that was offered for it, even though the unmistakable remains of a devilishly big tusker were found in the region a fortnight later, and the district was permanently freed of its winesome attentions. I wrote explaining."

Some time after the happenings related above, the optimist and I sighed over a small paragraph in a daily paper announcing the sudden and welcome demise of the Rampoora rogue elephant. We tried to establish our claim, but with such little proof as we had, we could expect nothing better than what we got—a pointed snub. The inhabitants of Rampoora still fondly imagine that the "musth hathi" died a natural death, and are happy in the belief. But we—the sahib and I, and the shikari—know better; that the honour is ours, and we glory in the thought.

Shooting.

THE DOUBLE RIFLE.

In the early part of the last century explorers began to bore holes here and there and to admit gleams of light into the darkness of the African continent. Returning, every man jack of the adventurous ones brought back tales of the wonderful game he had seen, tales of bully lions with long claws and sharp teeth and mean dispositions; of rhinos whose killing was much like standing on the track and shooting bullets into an approaching switch-engine; of buffaloes with courage and cunning equalled only by the thickess of their skulls, and of elephants, the most formidable of all the dangerous beasts.

Straightway the adventure-loving of the British sportsmen packed up and set sail for the place where such thrills could be obtained. Sometimes the gameseekers did much exploring on their own hook, while in search of their quarry.

Those were the days of the muzzle-loading guns—guns which required the user to call "King's Ex," after they were fired, so more powder and shot could be inserted into their barrels. It is hardly necessary to say that the time required for this reloading was ample for a charging lion to arrive and insert several sets of claws where they would do the most good, from the standpoint of the King of Beasts.

The failure to return home on the part of many of the early English sportsmen—men who didn't owe anybody anything, nor yet have the Grand Jury on their trails, persuaded the other British hunters that the game favoured the beasts a trifle too much for real comfort. Thrills were all right and desirable, but most of the sportsmen preferred that the matter go no further. Their guns were inadequate in power. That's the first conclusion at which they arrived. If a tree were handy, they returned home to report their conclusions. Otherwise the conclusions were drawn from the reports of the native who happened to see the performance.

Baker was the pioneer in the production of a weapon big enough to stop fauna of a switch-engine size and a side-window meanness of disposition. He persuaded a Bristol gunsmith to build for him a single-barrelled rifle with three-foot barrel, with an internal diameter of a 4-bore shotgun, an inch across. This was grooved with two grooves and shot a belted bullet of four-ounce weight, propelled by fourteen drams of black powder. Normal charge for a 12-gauge shotgun, three and a quarter drams.

This arm used to kill quite frequently, although the hunter still had to sidestep with some liveliness when the four-ounce bullet refused to take effect. To further improve the weapon he framed up a half-pound explosure bullet for it, using a cast-iron core, a percussion cap to explode it, and a bursting charge of an ounce of black powder inside the affair. He reported that this arm used to kill quite decisively at times.

Still, a gun with but a single shot was on occasion embarrassing to use, particularly when the unhappy hunter turned for the spare rifle, to find it thirty feet up the nearest tree on the back of the bearer, and still going for yet taller heights. In those days, as in these, true sportsmen hated to wound game. The reasons were not quite of the same nature, however. Further explanations seem superfluous.

Repeaters and automatics were still tucked away in the wallet of old Father Time, awaiting the time when most of the game was safely killed off before their appearance. Therefore the English hunter had rifles built with two barrels and two locks and two triggers, on the line of his fowling piece. Small bores made no hit in those days.

When poor powder and worse steel forbade driving a bullet at a much higher velocity than that of the early morning milkman, it behoved the hunter of bad game to use a bullet of sufficient size to impress his highly active targets with the fact that there was something doing in the killing line, there or thereabouts. Four-bores and eight-bores were stylish. In them they used to shoot four-ounce, and three-ounce, and two-ounce bullets, depending upon whether the game happened to be large, medium, or approaching the size of a rabbit. Anything less than 35-calibre was a rook rifle, a rook, by the way, being as near to a crow as he can get and still be good to eat.

The two-barrelled gun made a distinct hit. No harm is intended by this statement. It did make hits at both ends, but in this case we mean that it grew in popularity. It hung much like the fowling-piece, which is English for plain, ordinary shotgun. Its lines were the same, only there were more of them. Its second barrel could be fired into a wounded rhino before he could close his wings, fall into the water, and dive for the bottom, or the hunter could score a neat double on a hen elephant long before the covey got out of range. Hunters still carried two of these guns to Africa and entrusted the second one to the bravest—or the slowest runner—of their darky contingent. Sometimes they found their judgment of human nature in error, but usually the second barrel made up for the deficiencies of the hired help, in failing to stay where it was put.

The confidence of the hunter returned with the new departure in weapons. He used to pray for a charge, merely for the pleasure of seeing the charge turned into an item on the credit side of the ledger in the form of fresh meat for the camp. Nor did he care how much the charge might be. It would appear that a rhino has to play second fiddle to the summer resort proprietor. One sometimes fails to make the charge process stick. The other never does.

The hunters, their ranks lengthened by the addition of sportsmen of other nations who also sought thrills, used to sit up nights thinking up new ways for extracting thrills. It got tiresome, that business of insulting a cock rhino until he opened up the gasoline, and threw in the high, and made for the hunter with the intent of inserting two or three feet of horn where it would be most effective. There was nothing to it but firing both barrels into the countenance of the aforesaid rhino, being kicked out of range, and then watching the darkies eat the beast, with sort of a "bless-you-my-children" attitude.

They didn't have Kodaks in those days. It didn't do a fellow a bit of good to hang up four elephants and three rhinos and six hippos and a couple of lions and some dik-diks and a little fry of impallas before the camp fire. The effect was imposing, but you couldn't prove it when you got home. It was the same old thing. They'd take off 10 per cent. for poor memory and 10 per cent. for mistaken coups, and 10 per cent. on general principles, and 40 per cent. because the hunter was a well-known liar. By the time they got through with the yarn, all unsupported as it was by photographic evidence, it sounded as tame as shooting your neighbour's cat after the neighbour had moved away to the other side of the town.

Their shooting scrapes used to be conducted along the lines of a bull-fight. The beast would be provoked into a charge; the hunter would allow him to crash along until the beast felt certain of having white-man fricassee in the next instant; then the hunter would step aside and fire the heavy rifle into the animal as he slid by with his brakes on and wheels slipping.

Being a matador is child's play compared with dodging a peeved rhino with no nice sanded arena in which to do it. If the hunter was a poor judge of distance or his foot slipped, or the foot work of the beast proved better than the average, the darkies would probably turn over to the nearest white man such of the hunter's outfit as they could find no use for.

Pretty soon the breechloader came into being, and about the same time came the repeating rifle. Neither the one improvement nor the other budged the double rifle from the affections of the big-game seeker. He turned his muzzle-loader in on a breechloader, and later on swapped what was left of that for a double rifle, using the more powerful smokeless powder cartridges.

Improvements in the shotgun were added to the rifle as fast as they appeared. It became a hammerless instead of a hammer rifle. It acquired ejectors of automatic breed, it blossomed out with detachable locks, and sported a single trigger as early as did the shotgun. It had even more use for the latter improvement than had the shotgun. Not infrequently the terrific recoil of the right barrel would jar off the left, invariably from the sudden leap of the trigger against its sear. The single trigger stopped this, and besides gave the hunter two lightning-fast barrels without having to alter the grip of the right hand.

In appearance it was a shotgun, pure and simple, save for the heavier construction and the rear sight. It came to the shoulder with the lightning rapidity of the double hammerless, well balanced shotgun, could be fired with the same disregard for sights, and was more efficient in the hands of the experienced bird shot than any other pattern of rifle could be in the hands of the most practised rifleman.

The automatic came into the market with blaring of trumpets that could be heard to every portion of the shooting world, but the shooter of dangerous game kept the double rifle in the snuggest corner of his gun cabinet.

Cartridge makers, taking advantage of improvements in steel and smokeless powder, turned out cartridges with double the striking power of the old, largebore, black-powder cartridges. At the same time the rifles decreased in weight and recoil.

Knowing from experience the superiority of a second shot, placed quickly and accurately, to a dozen that were more or less quickly obtainable, the experienced one merely smiled knowingly at the claims of the repeating rifle advocate. When he made changes they were to more improved forms of double rifles, not to other patterns of arms.

Getting accustomed to the open countenance weapon, the big-game seeker used the double rifle even when he sought non-dangerous animals. The double rifle was the favourite for years for deer-stalking. This was due partly to the familiarity of the hunter with the double gun, both as a shotgun and as a rifle, and partly to the fact of the lack of satisfactory breech mechanisms for hunting rifles.

With the adoption of the Lee-Metford as the military rifle of England, the double rifle began to lose its grip. Many of them were made for the small-bore, high-pressure cartridges, but they failed to hold their own with the magazine gun for work where the dangerous character of the game did not make a quick second shot absolutely necessary. With arms of terrific recoil, weight was not undesirable. The rifle was not carried far, and at that was usually in the hands of a bearer.

For animals such as deer, the hunter required a light rifle, while at the same time he favoured high-velocity, small-bore cartridges, developing pressures that forbade light rifles, through the metal that had to be left in the frame and the barrels.

The double rifle is a very expensive weapon to produce, not only through the difficulties that beset the builders of high-grade double guns of any sort, but through the necessity for making the barrels shoot to a common centre, and the resulting necessity for repeated adjustment of barrels and ribs.

To make an arm with two barrels equal the magazine rifle in lightness, the makers had to build their double rifles with quite light barrels, wherever pressures allowed the robbing of metal. A single stumble, with the rifle pitching among rocks, could quite easily ruin a three-hundred-dollar masterpiece.

The magazine could be purchased for about fifty dollars, with excellent finish and workmanship, was not as easily damaged, had heavier metal where the pressure was high, and offered more shots without reloading. So it came about that the magazine gun gradually drove the double rifle back to the place where it had started—as an arm for dangerous game where two quick shots were worth a dozen not quite so quick.

At present it is the proper caper to carry a powerful magazine rifle, with the big double held in reserve in the hands of a bearer close behind. If the magazine gun can do the work, the double is not called upon. But if the quarry be lion or rhino or buffalo, and the place of the meeting be in thick cover, the wise sportsman usually reaches for the two barrels and hands back the many-shot arm.

The magazine gun has stopped to take a long breath after virtually running the double gun out of the field, save for big game. Then it began to aspire to the post of being the most trusted arm of the seeker of dangerous game. It blossomed out for cartridges twice as powerful as the cannon-like affairs of the time of Baker. It handled cartridges giving as much power as the ordinary double cordite rifle of around 450-bore, and handled some not equalled in power by any except the giant .577 cordite or the monstrous .600 cordite, with its 900 grain bullet and its 9,000ft. lb. energy.

The magazine gun using Mauser action—is obtainable for such cartridges as the .404, with 400-grain bullet at 2,400ft. secs.; the 11·2mm., 525-grain bullet at 2,600ft. secs., and the .402 developing more power than Roosevelt's big Holland double rifle.

The double rifle is still unsurpassed in its ability and its certainty in delivering the second shot with promptness, but the magazine rifle is made for such powerful cartridges that many big-game men are taking to it. They argue that the magazine rifle is so near the double rifle in its quickness of second shot, and the staggering effect of its huge bullet is so great, that it would be the worst of ill-luck when circumstances refused to allow the magazine gun to get in its second shot in time to finish the work.

The lower cost of the magazine, its lighter weight, its comparative immunity from damage, its greater number of shots, and its greater accuracy at long range are potent arguments, against which the double rifle can offer but the superior quickness of the second shot and the greater accuracy with which it can be fired, with its shotgun lines. No magazine rifle with its high sighting line and balance can hope to come to the shoulder and align itself with the game like a well-fitting shotgun. And the double rifle is the shotgun, to all practical effects.

Magazine rifles cost between fifty and one hundred dollars as made by the English makers for big-game cartridges. The double rifles average three times this amount. The cheapest listed by the lowest-priced English maker costs 125 dols., this with plain finish and minus ejectors. An ejector gun costs 175 dollars, while the fashionable makers ask from 275 dollars to 500 dollars for a double, hammerless, ejector rifle.

Of German make, the best model of the Mausers, with a fairly fine finish and workmanship, and adapted to the heavy cartridges, costs but forty dollars.

There is a constant argument and squabble in England over the comparative merits of the two classes of rifles. Some of the points pro and con appear rather far-fetched. The double-rifle brother insists that the magazine rifle is noisy and frightens game. The double rifle undoubtedly is more quiet than the magazine gun with its clattering bolt, but the question arises, who in thunder operates the bolt of a magazine gun until after the first shot is fired. And, once the first bellow of the rifle awakes the echoes, it would seem that either the game would have reached the stage where it cared nothing about a little additional rattle, or else, with more finicky animals, the hunter could operate the rifle before the echoes of the shot had died away.

No double rifle will shoot to a common centre with a charge much greater or less than the one for which it is standardised. The flip and expansion of the barrels is different: the strike of the shots cannot be the same with light and heavy loads, and the user is condemned to use but a single strength of load or else score misses through the variance of the two barrels.

But recently chance put into the hands of the writer a beautiful example of the modern double hammerless rifle, as built for dangerous game. Chance was good enough to furnish about two hundred cartridges with the arm. Therefore the two hundred occupied our thoughts by day and by night until they got us out to the club range, where a nice muzzle-and-elbow rest awaited the person with any curiosity about the performance of a rifle with the wobbling of the user removed.

The rifle uses a cartridge of 10·75mm.—about .42 calibre. The bullet weighs 360 grains and the powder charge 60 grains. The energy is just double that of the .30-40. The rifle itself weighs seven and-a-half pounds, about two pounds under the usual weight for rifles of this calibre. It is built with Greener cross-bolt system, with the additional lock of a doll's-head extension rib, through which the bolt passes. The bolting system is none too great in view of the pressure of the cartridge. The ordinary 12-gauge shotgun load develops about 6,000 pounds pressure per square inch. The 10·75 cartridge develops 35,000lbs. per square inch.—EDWARD C. CROSSMAN, in Arms and the Man.

THE NEW SERVICE RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—There is a talk of a new Service Rifle coming out soon but so far no particulars have been given in any of the papers that I know of. Some time ago the specifications of the future arm which gunmakers were invited to send in competitive designs for, I believe, were as far as I can recollect as follows. The rifle was to be a magazine weapon of the self-loading or automatic type, of sufficient strength and handiness for military purposes, its calibre was not to be less than .256 or more than .280, the bullet weight from 160 to 180 grains and its ballistics were to be of the most up-to-date kind.

It is now said that no existing automatic pattern of rifle has been found to be quite suitable and that the new rifle will be of the ordinary magazine type. No further particulars are given but I presume that as far as the bore and ammunition are concerned the lines of the Ross .280 pattern which is the most effective modern weapon will be pretty closely followed.

The Ross .280 has the flattest trajectory owing to its very high speed and comparatively heavy bullet, of any Military arm in existence—and its breech action which has effective locking lugs—is powerful enough to stand the high pressure required to obtain these results. It is not yet, I believe, the service arm of any country. The Canadian Ross Military arm takes the .303 ammunition but is capable of shooting a more effective cartridge of this calibre owing to its stronger action.

The present .303 Lee-Enfield is being resighted to take the new Mark VII ammunition which shoots a 175-grain pointed bullet with an increased velocity of 240 feet seconds. The trajectory being very greatly flattened and the military efficiency of the rifle much improved. The weak breech action of the rifle prevents full advantage being taken of an increased charge. The Americans have done the same thing and so have the Germans and French with their rifles—but they have been able to considerably increase their propelling charge and have enormously added to velocity and flattened trajectory—so that we are very much behind in these respects still.

Letters from Bibendum to a Self-made Motorist.

81, Fulham Road, London, S.W.
January 9th, 1912.

My dear Miles,—Your account in nine thousand words or (thereabouts) of your latest replacement campaign duly to hand.

It seems to me that what remains of your original car is pretty much like Paddy Looney's idea of Gruyere cheese. His description was "just a lot o' big holes wid little sphecks o' what the garsong called 'frummidge' betune 'em."

Why didn't you spend another ninepence and buy a new car right straight out?

Your faith in that old frame is positively touching. The only item I can't get behind is how many hundreds you will be out when the dear old thing does begin to Maud Allen herself. Anyhow, she's shown herself worth more by a jug'ful than the mechanical picture they sold to you with her. So who knows you won't some day be able to send her round once more to be refilled.

It's pretty certain that nobody's going to accuse you of discarding things before they have really served their turn, and, for their own sakes, it is a pity there are not more owners like you.

At the same time, I notice that your tyres are getting the habit of discarding you; and it may be an eye-opener to you to know that your brutal goings on are the cause of the whole trouble every time.

You see it occurred to me to have your car weighed just as she stood when you left her here the other day; and frankly I was surprised to see how much too much you have been asking of those tyres. It isn't in your nature to be brutal, I know; but perhaps it has never occurred to you that tyres are very much like children; you've got to put plenty of sustenance inside 'em, and never overtax their normal strength if you want 'em to keep up.

What you have been doing is overloading and under-inflating for a long time; otherwise that offside rear cover would not have burst as it did. Understand me, it's no use your retiring inside your own opinion in this matter, because the arm of my Fact is yards longer than the burrow of your Bluff, and I can fish you out into the daylight every time.

The tyres themselves afford conclusive proof that you have been treating them badly for a very long time; and as I know you, so, I am quite ready to admit that you didn't realise what you were doing.

But you can take it now, straight from me, and keep it for future reference, that under-inflation is one direct cause of the rapid and complete destruction of many a cover; and overloading is another. And if you will bear in mind that I have not written my Inflation Table for the purpose of causing you trouble, and that no tyre should be asked to carry more than it is built to carry, then you won't go short on the length of good and faithful service Michelins can render you. I append an illustration which will serve to elucidate my remarks still further.

Your sincere friend,
BIBENDUM.

Owner—What! burst again? Well, you had better get 810 × 100 m/m × — cover.

Chauffeur—Excuse me, Sir, but if you will give me an extra shilling I can buy an 815 × 105 m/m Michelin, which will last much longer and is far more comfortable, too!

THE TURF

SANDOWN PARK.

THE unfortunate breakdown in the weather last Friday threw a wet blanket on what would have been a brilliant occasion, for the soldiers' meeting promised well. As the visitor breasted the sandy slope from station to stand on Saturday, he mentally congratulated himself on the improved weather. However, the pride of the morning was not fulfilled, and when all looked to be merry as a marriage bell, the weather drifted into the same rainy channels as on Friday, quenching festivities, putting a premium on umbrellas, and with a right down regular pelting shower at the finish delaying the departure for the specials.

The attendance, both large and representative, was in excess of the previous days, the public enclosures being fairly crowded, and the early fashionable crowd that thronged the paddock showed what a muster might have been under more favourable conditions. Results:—

GATWICK.

Restricted as they are by the national coal strike calamity, the Brighton Railway did a good best for their patrons from town, on Wednesday and the South Coast sent a fairly strong muster to make up what may be called a decent attendance. AIR RIFLE

·177in. (No. 1) and ·22in. (No. 2) bores.

The wonderful power of this scientifically designed rifle is derived from a strong spring, which is quite easily compressed by means of the patent lever apparatus lying normally beneath the barrel. It is the only air rifle which can be seriously considered as a weapon of power and precision "B.S.A. Adder" Pellets, made specially for it, cost about 2 rupees per 1,000. The rifle is capable of grouping them within a 1½in. circle at 50 yards.

There is no other rifle in existence that provides for such wonderfully accurate practice at such a low figure. It is used in hundreds of rifle clubs, and is also extensively used for small bird and small game shooting up to about 40 yards. The Rifle makes practically no noise; there is no smoke or fire and no messy cleaning troubles, and is the only one that can properly be fitted with a "peep" sight. ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALTHOUGH no fewer than twenty-seven defeats by Scotland are now on record against Wales, the representatives of the Principality have rarely failed of recent years to put up a close fight with the Northern Kingdom and on Saturday at Edinburgh, although unable to command the services of all the players originally selected for the occasion, they ran the Scotsmen to a goal. The finish, indeed, was even closer than the score would suggest, for only three minutes remained when Quinn registered the solitary goal which the match yielded and just previously William Meredith, taking part in his thirty-seventh game for Wales, had hit the Scottish post. Of the last ten contests between the two countries Scotland have won four and Wales four, and two have been drawn, while it may be noted that in not one of the four encounters resulting in favour of Scotland have Wales finished more than one goal behind. Scotland play all their international games this month, meeting Ireland at the end of next week and engaging with England at Glasgow on the following Saturday.

London's First League clubs had a great time on Saturday, Woolwich Arsenal hating Manchester City at Plumstead and a single goal giving Tottenham Hotspur victory over Preston North End on the Deepdale enclosure. Not until the last minute of the match at Preston did Minter register the point which decided the issue in favour of Hotspur, and gave the North London club their first League victory away from home since they overcame Sheffield United at Bramall Lane on the opening Saturday of December. Still, the success was generally anticipated, the previous encounter at White Hart Lane having resulted in a win for the Tottenham men by 6 to 2. Woolwich Arsenal made themselves fairly certain of victory over Manchester City before the interval, Randall and Common each finding the net in the first half of the game. No club in the first League have achieved more of late than the Arsenal who, since they lost to Manchester United on New Year's Day, can point to a record of seven matches played, five won, and two drawn—a series of achievements which gives the Plumstead men twelve points out of a possible fourteen.

Rather contrary to expectation, Blackburn Rovers failed to beat Sheffield United at Bramall Lane but happily for their prospects of carrying off the League championship, in effecting a draw they fared better than either of their nearest rivals—Newcastle United and Everton. The Newcastle team, who have fallen off in most pronounced degree since the commencement of the year, went down on their own ground before Sheffield Wednesday, and at Bradford Everton lost to the Cupholders by 1 to 0. As a consequence of these three results, Blackburn Rovers are three points ahead of both Newcastle and Everton, who now find themselves hard pressed by Sheffield Wednesday—a team that opened the season's work by winning only one of their first eight engagements. Aston Villa gained what must have been to that famous club a very welcome victory, if achieved only at the expense of the unfortunate Bury team, and Manchester United pulled through against Notts County but West Bromwich Albion failed at Bolton.

The leading clubs in the Second Division—the three who at present have the fight for promotion to themselves—each won. All favoured by playing at home, they won with varying margins corresponding quite appropriately to their positions in the competition. Burnley, the first team, did as they pleased against Fulham, scoring 5 to 1; Chelsea put on 3—0 against Clapton Orient, and Derby County just overcame Bradford by the only goal of a hard match. Chelsea rearranged their side, V. J. Woodward and Hilsdon returning to the front line. These forwards had no immediate effect on the result, all the three goals being scored by Whittingham in the second half. Derby County, by gaining two wins on consecutive Saturdays, after a very bad period, show signs of causing Chelsea serious trouble, if they have only a remote chance of catching Burnley.

In direct contrast to these results, the three top clubs in the Southern League all suffered defeat. Swindon, after their fine win in the replayed cup-tie with West Ham United, lost to Exeter City, whom they had beaten in the previous match by 4 goals to 1, while at Upton Park Queen's Park Rangers had 3 goals scored against them; this being a complete upset of form. Plymouth Argyle, who have been showing such capital form and had gained a good win at the Crystal Palace during the week, had a fair chance of approaching near the two leaders, but they lost at Coventry, and so the relative records of the teams—one of which seems sure of the championship—remains unaltered. New Brompton in beating Northampton, hitherto undefeated at home, gained their first success in an out match, but they still occupy the last place, as Leyton proved successful over Southampton, who are now in danger of reduction to the second division.

SCOTLAND vs. WALES.

TEAMS representing Scotland and Wales met under Association rules at Tynecastle, Edinburgh, on the 2nd instant. Considerable interest was taken in the match, and although the weather was showery and windy a crowd of 30,000 people watched the play. The Scottish team took the field as originally chosen, while Wales had to make two alterations from the side first picked. The match was the thirty-seventh between the two countries, and of the previous games Scotland had won twenty-six and Wales four, six being drawn. Wales kicked off, but Scotland were the first to attack, Quinn sending Sinclair away on the right. Before the movement could be properly developed, however, it was checked by some good play on the part of the Welsh halfback. Still, the game settled down in the Welsh half, and McMenemy, when in the act of shooting, was only just stopped in time. Then Vizard led an attack on the Scottish goal, and, slipping past Mercer, he gave Evan Jones a splendid pass. Jones shot hard, but Brownlie saved, as he did another shot from Wynn. Scotland broke away again, but with McMenemy miskicking the attack was brought to an end. Still Scotland continued to have the best of matters, their forwards playing very cleverly. The first corner of the match was forced for Scotland by Robertson, but nothing came of it. From another corner kick Lloyd Davies cleared a shot from Quinn almost under the bar. Following a spell of defensive work the Welshmen came away, the forwards sweeping down the field with a beautiful passing run.

Then, with everybody else beaten, J. Walker saved the situation with a splendid tackle and clearance, Scotland again took up the attack and R. Walker tried a long shot, but Evans was able to save quite easily. A little later Sinclair placed the ball beautifully into the goal-mouth, but in trying to head through Quinn sent it only just over the bar. The Scottish forwards continued to press, but they rather overdid the close passing and Wales were able to break up the attacks more easily than would have been the case if the Scotsmen had swung the ball about more. The Scottish halves were good, keeping their forwards well supplied, and then once more Quinn, from close in headed just over.

Vizard then got away for Wales, running down very nicely, but, getting offside a little later, he spoilt a promising movement. Next, Meredith dribbled down and centred well, but the inside forwards were unable to take advantage of the good opening, and Scotland cleared. Scotland once more attacked, a shot by McMenemy being tipped over the bar at the expense of a corner kick, following which R. Walker shot hard and low. Evans, however, brought off a brilliant save on his knees. So far, this had been the best shot of the match. Sinclair was prominent on the Scottish right, ending a clever run with a fine centre, but McMenemy failed to turn the ball in. A mistake by Russell let Williams away, but the Welsh inside left was charged off the ball and Quinn at once raced to the other end. He also was charged off when he threatened danger. Wales at once got away and with J. Walker beaten Wynn put in a remarkably fine shot. Brownlie, however, saved splendidly, but it was a very narrow escape for Scotland and with the least bit of good fortune Wales would have found themselves a goal to the good. Half time:—

The Welshmen were the first to attack after the change of ends, Vizard shooting over, but Scotland were soon away, Evans running out to save a slow shot by Quinn. In another attack by Wales, Hughes found himself in a good position, but the greasy ball turned off his foot and went very wide. The game was soon at the other end, Lloyd Davies having to kick out, while Thomson, with a hard shot, narrowly missed scoring. Then followed a fine piece of work by the Scottish forwards, a brilliant attack being started by Quinn, with an overhead pass to Robertson. Running on, Robertson centred finely, and R. Walker shot hard, but the ball was very luckily intercepted by one of the Welsh defenders. A mis-kick by Thomson gave the Welsh forwards an opening, and Williams headed in, but Brownlie took the ball easily, and cleared. Following a wide shot by Wynn, the Scottish forwards went away in good style, and, with the Welsh defence completely upset, Robertson had a good chance. He shot badly, and so Wales escaped. Evans then saved brilliantly from Sinclair, with Quinn and Walker standing close in to turn the ball into the net, and again, when hard pressed, he got rid of a straight shot from Quinn. The press round the Welsh goal continued, but the Welsh defence was very sound, the halves and backs being robust in their methods. From a centre by Robertson, Quinn failed to trap the ball, and later on made an unsuccessful attempt to hook the ball into the net from a neat pass by McMenemy. Near the close, Meredith got away, but was stopped by Thompson. A few minutes later, Meredith was away again, finishing with a terrific shot that hit the upright. Three minutes from the finish, Quinn broke through, and, scoring cleverly, enabled Scotland to win a fast and interesting match by 1 goal to nil.

RUGBY RULES.

NAVY vs. ARMY.—The annual game between the officers of the Navy and the Army, at the Queen's Club, West Kensington, ended in a win for the Navy by two goals two tries to one goal and one try. This was the sixth encounter and was the fifth victory gained by the Naval representatives. The match was honoured by the presence of His Majesty the King, who was accompanied by the Prince of Wales; in attendance were Captain Brian Fawcett and E. W. Wallington, Secretary to the Queen. His Majesty was received at the entrance of the ground by General Smith-Dorrien, Earl Clarendon, and Lord Desborough, and in the Pavilion by Earl Roberts and Admiral Jellicoe. The match was played under unfavourable conditions. Shortly after the start rain fell rather heavily, the result being that the ball became very slippery and very difficult to handle with any certainty. In the first half the Navy had all the best of the matters and ran up a winning score. The game had only been in progress for about ten minutes when Collier gained a try and Harrison kicked a goal. Soon afterwards, as the outcome of one fine play, Peet also scored, but the place-kick failed. The Navy continued to have the best of the matters and after a movement in which Davies had an important part Millar gained a try which Harrison converted. Towards the interval the Army pressed strongly, and in the right Kelly scored a try and Pym kicked a goal. Thus at half-time the Navy led by two goals and a try to a goal.

In the second half the Army men showed very much better form than they showed in the earlier stages, but at no time did they look like drawing level with their opponents, their forwards scrumming very well but their backs were somewhat bad in their passing. The Navy made the result practically secure through Hynes gaining a try, and it was not until later in the game that Kellye scored a try for the Army. It was a bright and spiriting game; having regard to the conditions the play was of an excellent quality. On both sides the tackling was very keen and there was little to choose between the half-backs. Lyon, full-back, was in excellent form, usually finding touch with a long kick. As the match was played the Navy thoroughly deserved their win, they being much quicker in the open and being more ready to take advantage of their opportunities.

SUNNINGDALE vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The Oxford University team accomplished another excellent performance on Saturday, when, at Sunningdale, they halved their match with a strong side representing the Sunningdale Club. Each side won five games. With one match to come in, that between Mr. D. K. Landale and Mr. L. L. S. Dodsworth, the home side led by five matches to four, but Mr. Dodsworth saved the University from defeat, by winning on the last green.

In the top match, Mr. H. E. Taylor avenged his defeat at the hands of Mr. A. J. Evans at Mid-Surrey the previous week, by defeating him by 6 holes up and 4 to play. Mr. A. V. Hambro, M.P., played a very strong game against the University captain, Mr. J. F. Macdonell. The former went out in 36 strokes led by 4 holes at the turn, and won by 5 and 4. Perhaps the best individual performance was that of Mr. E. H. Holderness against Mr. H. S. Colt. The University player putted splendidly, and won by 3 and 2. The results were:—

WOKING vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—The Cambridge University team gave a rather disappointing display in their match against the Woking Club at Woking on Saturday, and the home side proved successful by 8½ games to 1½. The only winner for Cambridge was the captain, Mr. F. M. M. Carlisle, who beat Mr. B. Darwin on the last green. The results were:—

SECOND DAY.

Postponed from Monday owing to the unfavourable weather the concluding portion of the Oxford University athletic sports took place at Oxford on Wednesday under better conditions. The 100 yards race was omitted owing to Lange being engaged in the inter-university lacrosse match at Cambridge, and this will be run on Saturday.

On the whole the performances were up to the average. In the mile A. N. S. Jackson (Brasenose) covered the distance in 4mins 26⅕secs, beating among others W. C. Moore, of Exeter, last year's winner. W. O. Ziegler (Waltham) threw the hammer 43ft. 2in., nearly approaching W. W. Coe's record.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—W. O Ziegler (Iowa and Waltham), 43ft. 2in., 1; E. P. Hubble (Chicago and Queen's), 37ft. 7in., 2; K. T. Adams (Baylor University and Worcester), 34ft. 6¼in., 3.

QUARTER-MILE.—G. S. L. Anderson (Eton and Trinity), 1; W. C. Robertson (Bermuda and Brasenose), 2; W. G. K. Boswell (Eton and New College), 3. Won by 11 yards. Time, 50⅕secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES.—W. J. F. Macdonald (Charterhouse and New College), 1; J. H. E. Whitebeat (Clifton and Trinity), 2; H. L. Bowlby (Eton and Balliol) 3. Won by four yards. Time, 17⅖secs.

LONG JUMP.—A. G. Jones (Llandovery and Lincoln), 21ft. 10in., 1; J. A. J. Hartley (Eton and Merton), 21ft. 6¼in., 2; L. G. Dake (Malvern and Brasenose), 21ft. 3¼in., 3.

ONE MILE.—A. N. S. Jackson (Malvern and Brasenose), 1; E. Gawan Taylor (Durham and Pembroke), 2; W. C. Moore (Felsted and Exeter), 3. Won, after a splendid race, by eight yards; three yards between second and third. Time, 4mins 26⅕secs.

LACROSSE.

INTER-'VARSITY MATCH.—Oxford won the tenth annual Inter-'Varsity lacrosse match at Cambridge on Wednesday by 9 goals to 4. For two years the Cantabs had effected surprises, but at length the Rhodes' scholars from Canada, who have made Oxford so strong at the Canadian national sport proved equal to the occasion.

Except that B. H. Holloway shot well at times, the Light Blues were weak in attack. Their catching was faulty, and their passing was often erratic. Oxford were a very smart side. They played the typical shot-passing game of a Canadian team, and played it well.

Cambridge scored the first goal, and when a few minutes later, J. F. Sidebotham, the Oxford goal-keeper, had to retire owing to an injury to his face, it seemed as though the Dark Blues might have considerable difficulty in holding their own. However, they soon equalised, and after the score had stood at 2 all, they began to forge ahead. They led at the interval by 5 to 2.

Holloway then gained another goal for Cambridge, after a clever movement by J. K. Doak, but Oxford were soon attacking again, and they won as stated. C. T. Dart, A. Yates and R. L. Lange were excellent in aggressive movements. Dart scored three goals and Lange two.

RACKETS.

THE MILITARY DOUBLES CHAMPIONSHIP.—As was generally expected after their easy victory over the Royal Horse Artillery on Wednesday the Yorkshire Light Infantry (Captain A. C. G. Luther and Lieutenant C. E. D King) beat the King's Royal Rifles (Captain H. Harker and Lieutenant E. B. Denison) by four games to one in the final round of the Military Doubles Championship at Prince's Club, Knightsbridge, yesterday.

On the whole the match was distinctly disappointing and unworthy of a final tie in this competition. Service played far too important a part in the games; during the whole rubber there was only one rally of any length, which was eventually won by a fine return by Lieutenant King. There was scarcely ever a doubt as to the result. The winners were undoubtedly the the better pair, the losers being practically dependent on Captain Harker's very powerful, though rather erratic, service; he came within two aces of winning the second game, his side having led at 13—4, and did practically win the fourth game. The King's Royal Rifles, however, had little understanding of each other's methods, and this is an essential factor in a doubles match. Moreover, they had little idea of how to return service. This is not surprising as the court at Prince's is very severe on a player who cannot to a great degree anticipate the length of a fast service. Hard service is extraordinarily effective in this court.

For the winners Captain Luther, who has almost recovered from his attack of sciatica, was seen almost at his best. Three times he made long sequences by excellent service, and his back-hand returns were well judged and sometimes really brilliant. His only weakness was in the right-hand court, from which he made several poor returns. Lieutenant King was a more useful partner than he appeared to be. He was still obviously nervous, but he got up some difficult services by running up and volleying. Still, his play on the whole is not so good as it was last year, and his style seems to be more cramped.

Captain Harker and Lieutenant E. B. Denison have distinct possibilities as a pair, but they have much to learn, particularly where to stand, both in the rally and in taking service. Captain Harker has an exceptionally powerful wrist service. The scores were:—

	1st game.	2nd game	3rd game.	4th game	5th game	Total aces.
Yorkshire Light Infantry ...	15	... 18	... 15	... 5	... 16 =	68
King's Royal Rifles	6	... 13	... 9	... 15	... 4 =	47

Mr. B. S. Foster was the referee.

THE CHALLENGE ROUND.

The Championship match, which is to be played to-morrow, will thus be between the same two pairs that met in this competition last year. In 1911 the Yorkshire Light Infantry, after having won the first three games, lost the rubber to the holders, the Army Service Corps (Captain A. Berger and Major J. Puckle, D.S.O.). The result of to-morrow's match is likely to be another victory for the holders.

ROWING.

THE UNIVERSITY CREWS.

OXFORD.—The work of the Oxford crew yesterday morning consisted chiefly of spells of paddling; at the rate of 24, with occasional bursts into rowing.

The afternoon work was watched by a large crowd. Mr. Holland was accompanied on the launch by Mr. E. W. Powell (C.U.B.C.). The eight was launched at 3-30, and the crew paddled up stream to Marsh Lock and back to Henley Bridge before they started a trial over the Henley Regatta course. Sweaters were removed above the point, and Mr. Holland got them off the winning post mark in good style.

Mr. Bourne pulled 32 strokes in the first minute and dropped the stroke to 28 past Grosvenor Club. The boat was travelling well, and the half-way mark at Fawley was passed in three minutes exactly. The men maintained their form well; along Regatta Island Mr. Bourne quickened to 30, and for the last half-minute to 34. The course was covered in 6mins. 8secs. The men were not unduly distressed, and their performance was the best yet accomplished at top speed. They have the satisfaction of having rowed the course in faster time than has hitherto been accomplished by any crew. Names and latest weights:—

CAMBRIDGE.—There was a welcome change in the weather at Cookham yesterday, for the wind had veered round to the north and there was brilliant sunshine. The water was running down at a tremendous pace, all the sluices having been drawn at the weirs.

In these conditions Captain Gibbon decided to give the crew a trial over the full course of 3¼ miles from Marlow Point to Cookham Bridge in the morning. The crew put up a good performance, for although fast time was certain it was not expected that the crew would cover the distance in less than 16mins. They completed the journey in 15mins. 3secs., which is 3secs. faster than the time reported to have been accomplished by an Oxford crew many years ago, and nearly half a minute better than the "record" of 16mins. 3secs. made by the Cambridge crew of 1910.

The boat was launched at 10-45, and the crew paddled up to Marlow Point, and then prepared to row. The coach was not satisfied with the first start, and after the crew had been rowing 2¼mins. at top speed he stopped them and took the crew back to the point. The second time Mr. Swann pulled 17 and 32 strokes in the half and full minute, and then dropped to 28. On the rushing stream the boat travelled at a great pace. Mr. Sawna was keeping a good length, and the rowing was distinctly better in length and finish. The form was fairly well maintained over the last mile. Mr. Sawna raised the stroke to 30 at the bend above Cookham and finished at the bridge with a spurt at 35. Altogether the crew covered over eight miles during the outing.

In the afternoon only light work was attempted. The crew paddled up to Bourne End and back, with half-a-minute's burst of rowing on the return journey. According to present arrangements the crew will row at Putney on Friday next. Names and latest weights:—

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

So the Customs at last received a check, St. Xavier's being the first team to share points with the Riversiders, and next Tuesday the Customs, I fancy, will lose another point to Calcutta. Hugh Sherman's reappearance has certainly strengthened the attacking line, and as Calcutta will be playing on their own ground I would not be at all surprised if the "Reds" were to win. The League is yet a very open question, although there are only three teams in the running. Calcutta and the Customs have only lost a point each, both teams being unable to beat St. Xavier's.

The Park Street boys, as will be seen from the table, have not lost to a single team, but they have played no fewer than six draws, out of nine games. The Rangers and St. Xavier's have yet to meet, and it will be of interest to know what the result of this match will produce.

During the week there were only two matches, the results of which would affect the positions of the three leading teams, viz., the Customs and St. Xavier's match and the Calcutta vs. Sibpur match. As the former match resulted in a goalless draw on Saturday, Calcutta beat Customs for second place by virtue of a better goal average, and as Customs and Calcutta won over Medicals and Sibpur respectively on Monday and Tuesday, both the "Reds" and the Riversiders, who have now played the same number of matches as the Rangers, are both ahead of the last-named club.

The Hockey during the week has, generally speaking, been interesting, and most teams have displayed marked improvement, while the refereeing too has been of a very satisfactory character, Sibpur perhaps play the prettiest game, but they overdo it. When the trans-Hooghly forwards take the ball near the circle they would be considerably more effective if they exhibited a little more individual dash, and a little less combination. With the exception of Duncan, the others feel afraid to go on their own, and instead of shooting when just inside the circle they want to carry ball and man into their opponents' goal. Too much passing near, and in the circle, may look very pretty, but against a strong defence it will never be effective. In the six matches that Sibpur have lost, they have enjoyed quite as much of the game as their opponents, and that they have lost has been the fault of their forwards playing too long with the ball. With the exception of the games against Rangers and Customs, Sibpur should have, on the play, beaten the other teams instead of losing to them by the narrow margins, as they did. It will be recollected that Sibpur only last year lost to Barrackpore—a scratch second class team—simply because their forwards hesitated to shoot. On that evening's play—on the amount of attacking—Sibpur should have won by no fewer than six to eight goals and yet they in the end lost by 1-0.

But now to the week's matches. The Customs and St. Xavier's match produced a very exciting game. Customs had by far the larger share of attacking; and Galbraith sent in quite a number of good and a few bad ones as well, but the former were beautifully saved by Sarkies, the College goal-keeper. Yakchee and Vaughan at back also defended brilliantly. St Xaviers, during the opening ten minutes of the game, missed a good opening owing to DeLanougerede misshitting with only the goal-keeper to beat and during the second half Seth was only called upon twice.

The Medicals lost to Calcutta on Saturday, the game was a good one which the latter won by two to love, albeit the Medicals had more of the attacking. Collingwood, who is now keeping goal for Calcutta, saved three or four difficult shots in good style, but early in the game Thomas, of the Medicals, missed twice—open nets. The Medicals played better than they did against the Pathans; and against the Customs last Monday the College team, although beaten by four to one on the play, were unlucky to lose by so large a margin. When Calcutta played Medicals, the "Reds" were handicapped by playing one short throughout, Cole being the absentee, and as this player did not play against Sibpur on Tuesday, on recent displays with Cole in the team, Calcutta, on their own ground, should just about beat Customs. However, it will be a good game and worth a long way going to see.

The Calcutta and Sibpur match produced a very even game, but there was no excitement in the whole match. Neither goal-keeper had much to do and the only goal of the match was netted by Sherman within a minute of the start. Sibpur players lack the dash possessed by Lindsay, Smart, Galbraith, Captain Macpherson, Sherman, Hannay, McCready and a few others, who, when once in the circle, shoot for all they are worth, and don't hesitate, which gives the opposite defence time for clearing. The Pathans beat the E. I. Railway by 3-0 and I am glad to say that the Alipore forwards always make the most of the opportunities presented to them in the circle. The game against the Lillooah men was very even, and had the Pathans been slow to take advantage of their opportunities they would never have won.

Dalhousie lost to La Martiniere and Pathans; in each match the score being 5-0 against the Trades Club. The refereeing in the Pathans' match was poor and two out of the five goals appeared to be "off side."

Boxing.

ALL INDIA TOURNAMENT.

THE All India Boxing Tournament was held at Poona, contests taking place every evening from the 18th to the 22nd instant inclusive. The arrangements were as complete as they could be made and some very fine sport was witnessed, though a big tournament at Jabbalpore interfered to no little extent with the numbers of the entries. The fighting was good and several old stagers were seen out. Possibly the best bout of the tournament was that between Connor and Makins in the final of the Light Weights, ending in the defeat of Makins by a narrow margin. Pte. Murphy, 1st Royal Dublin Fusiliers, won the prize for the best loser. Captain Mowat, 26th K.G.O. Cavalry, was referee, Captain Leahy, R.A.M.C., Captain Weldon, Dorsets, Lieutenant Gore Brown Dorsets and Lieutenant Magrath R. F. A. were the judges, Mr. Deffese held the watch and Sergeant Instructor Cansdale acted as M. C., while the success of the tournament was largely due to the hard work of Lieutenant Bamford, Superintendent of Gymnasia. At the conclusion of the programme on the last night, Colonel Whyte, Commanding the Poona Brigade, gave away the prizes. Results :—

The Story Teller.

THE FAILURE.

"SHIP after ship, the whole night long,
Their high-built galleons came,
Ship after ship, the whole night long,
Drew back with her dead, and her shame.

For some were sunk, and some were shattered, and so could fight no more,
God of battles, was ever a battle like this in the world before?"

The discordant voice droned on monotonously. The queer chi-chi accent lent an unfamiliarity to the old, stirring words. In a fruitless effort at expression, the reader chipped the last word of each line, with staccato emphasis on the rhyme, investing the verses with a sing-song cadence that would have been peculiarly irritating to a listener.

But Herbert Ellis had no audience, he was reading aloud for his own amusement, and had chosen "The Revenge," his favourite poem, which, in his eyes, outshone all else as the sun outshines the stars.

He revered the English race above all others, because Sir Richard Grenville had been an Englishman. There was a subaltern in the gunners, stationed at Bhakhan, who bore the name of Grenville. Herbert Ellis did not doubt but that he was a descendant of Sir Richard's and treated him with an exaggerated deference that mystified, and rather embarrassed young Grenville, who avoided the clerk's attentions by keeping clear of the Post Office, and getting his stamps second-hand.

Bhakhan was a lonely little border station on the Indus, about fifty miles north of Attock.

The primitive little Post Office was built on a rocky shelf overhanging the road, and reached by a precarious path cut in the rock.

From where he sat, had he raised his head Herbert Ellis could have seen the road, lying white beneath him; the road along which the battery which composed the small garrison of Bhakhan had marched a year ago, the road along which they would march back to civilization when their time was up, leaving no trace of their footsteps in the thick, white dust.

Below the road, the Indus brawled amongst the enormous boulders that lay in giant confusion in its bed, flowing with malignant haste where its course was unimpeded, the swirls and eddies forming little whirlpools from the force of the current. Sheer and brown from the opposite bank, rose the barren hills, their outline cutting hard, and pitiless against the sky.

The sweet soft air of a spring evening in the north flirted the pages of the Tennyson on Herbert Ellis' knee, but he was oblivious equally to the austere charm of the scenery, or the alluring fragrance of the breeze. His very soul was absorbed in the words that rolled from his mouth in his grotesque accent. He was fighting rapturously with Sir Richard, dying gloriously with Sir Richard's words on his lips.

"I have only done my duty, as a man is bound to do."

Plunging on through the waves with the rebellious "Revenge," manned with an alien crew, sinking at last, with the brave little ship, "To be lost ever more in the main."

He put down the book reverently, and stared in front of him with unseeing eyes. The carping desire after the Unattainable, that lurks in the depths of even a half-caste's soul gripped him with painful intensity. He hungered to be a hero, even for one short hour, to taste the triumph of some great deed splendidly accomplished. Half-formed dreams whirled through his brain. The chaos of a battlefield. A mad charge of cavalry thundering past, himself, the central figure, leading a forlorn hope. Death seemed but an incident, shadowy and unreal beside the amazing glory to be won. Fear? Fear was an emotion for cowards. Herbert Ellis' hero-worship was singularly pure, his ideal of a hero none the less exalted that he aspired to be one himself.

A man was crossing the river on a mussack. He lay face downwards on the inflated skin, propelling himself rapidly with his hands. It was a feat requiring nerve, and skill, and Herbert Ellis, watching him, remembered with a spasm of shame, how he had shirked the risk on more than one occasion when some Tommies, wearying of the enforced idleness of their leisure hours, had borrowed the Battery Bheesti's mussack, much to that worthy's dismay and effected the crossing one by one amidst the jeers and shouts of their comrades. Herbert Ellis had hastily refused their invitation to join in, on a plea of pressing work, and had climbed to the safety of the Post Office whence he had watched them with wistful eyes, only too conscious that, though the spirit was eager and willing, the flesh was painfully weak.

The recollection was humiliating, coming as it did on top of his airy visions. He tried to shake it off, by turning his attention to the man on the mussack. He had landed about a hundred yards below his starting point, and was making his way up towards the road. Another man with a mussack appeared on the opposite bank, and proceeded to cross in the same manner, followed by another, and two more.

Herbert Ellis stiffened into alertness, and watched the foremost man with sudden anxiety. Such crossings were of rare occurence; the natives preferring to use the bridge, a mile lower down the river. Why should not these six have crossed by the bridge too, unless they feared the scrutiny of the sentries guarding it?

The first man swung himself up on to the road. He was obviously a Pathan. His figure, compact, and lean, suggested immense strength. He was dressed in a loose coat and trousers, that had once been white with a conical cap on his head, and was armed with a Martini rifle, as were the other five, which fact explained their avoidance of the sentries while the skirts of his coat, flattering aside with his quick movements, disclosed a gleam of steel at his belt.

Herbert Ellis sat down on the wooden bench, sick with an unreasoning fear. The leader of the troop, who had crossed the road, was ascending the giddy little path to the Post Office. Deep in his heart, Herbert Ellis had cherished a hope that they would pass him by, the hope died slowly, remorselessly, as he heard the soft pad of their feet on the hard rock. He rose as they approached, and, without daring to look at them, stood, with downcast head, and quivering limbs, in the clutch of the strongest emotion he had ever known.

The Pathan spoke in Pushtu, a language of which Herbert Ellis had a smattering.

"I wish to send word to Dalkôt" he said harshly.

Herbert Ellis was mute, weighed down by his excessive fear.

"Dost hear, half-bred cur? Dalkôt lies under the feet of my brother Ahmed Khan. He but waits for the signal that we hold the means of communication, to sweep Dalkôt clean of the Christian dogs, and pour into Bhakhan in his hundreds, while the Feringhees are powerless to cry for help. I myself hold a hundred men in readiness over the hill yonder to reinforce him. Send now this message, which I shall tell thee."

The clerk moistened his dry lips with his tongue.

"I cannot," he muttered.

"Cannot?" Nay, by the beard of the prophet, "'tis a word for fools" jeered the Pathan. "We have a way to force thee"

His men closed round with threatening gestures. Their white teeth gleamed in coarse laughter, their black hair curled crisply round their ears. They seemed the incarnation of primitive brute strength, and indomitable courage. There was the whisper of steel kissing steel, as they drew evil-looking blades from their sheaths.

"Go, fool," thundered the leader. "Am I a slave to wait thy leisure?"

One of his men playfully pricked Herbert Ellis in the fleshy part of his thigh with the tip of his long, curved knife, and he fell on his knees in a paroxysm of terror.

"Only spare me," he moaned. "Spare me, and I will do anything you wish."

The Pathan, who was a man absolutely without fear, prodded him disgustedly with his foot.

"Tears and prayers are for women and cowards" he said curtly. "Send my message if thou wouldst live."

The clerk stumbled to his feet, stifling a sob of horror, as he saw the patch of red that stained the whiteness of his drill trousers.

He entered the little hut dignified by the name of Post Office, followed by the Pathan, who glanced curiously round him.

"I know not this devil's trick or tapping messages down the wires" he said, "but, understand, if the message be not correct to the smallest word, I shall know by the answer, which thou shalt read me out, and—" he paused significantly, "thou shalt taste the punishment of those that play me false. Also, the baboo at Dalkôt is on our side of the scale, it would be useless to warn him."

Blind with terror, Herbert Ellis sat down at the transmitter. The sight of his own blood had completely unmanned him, and he had no more the thought of protesting. Every fibre in his body was alive with the instinct of self-preservation, to the exclusion of all other emotions. He would have bartered his immortal soul for his safety without a moment's hesitation.

With trembling fingers, he ticked off the message the Pathan dictated to him:— "Praise be to Allah: all is well."

And read out the answering signal:—

"Allah be praised. Dalkôt lies quiet, yet ignorant of the fate. The Musselman outnumber the infidels by six to one. In an hour, Dalkôt is ours: in two hours and a half, we will be with you, and Bhakhan cannot stand against us."

"Good," snarled the Pathan softly. "Very good." "We will now destroy this devil's toy, and cut the talking wires, lest the infidels desire also to send word to their friends."

Four or five shots fired in quick succession made him wheel round sharply his knife out in an instant.

The evening light was shut out of the hut by a figure blocking the door-way.

The Pathan sprang forward like a wild-cat; but he had no chance against the deadly accuracy of a revolver at such close quarters. The man in the door-way stepped neatly aside, and, taking careful aim, fired.

The Pathan stood for a moment, swaying gently, his face livid, then he fell over backwards against the transmitter without uttering a sound.

Herbert Ellis tottered forward, and would have grovelled at the feet of the man with the revolver, had he not been forcibly kept upright by an iron wrist.

"Here hold up" said Grenville, in boyish alarm of what he vaguely termed a "scene."

"It's all right now."

"Single-handed" gabbled Herbert Ellis hysterically. "Single-handed you routed them five to one. But that's because you are a Grenville. He fought at fearful odds too—" the one and the fifty-three."

The subaltern surveyed him in undisguised alarm.

"The poor chap has gone completely off his chump." He thought, but he diplomatically concealed his suspicions.

"Lord, no" he explained patiently, "I could scarcely have talked of five hefty Pathans by myself. I brought over half a dozen Tommies, simply spoiling for a fight, and they surprised the four outside, while I came in here to reconnoitre. A fellow I know at Dalkôt got reliable khabber of this rising, and gave me a hint as to time and date. We decided it would squash the affair more thoroughly if we let them lay their plans quite undisturbed until the last moment, and then caught them red handed. There some more of them over the hills; there we start on a hasty punitive expedition in about an hour."

Herbert Ellis looked at him with dull eyes.

"Then it is all right?" He faltered.

"Perfectly" said Grenville cheerily. You must have had a pretty rotten time of it when the beggars were trying to make you send the messages for them" he added with a touch of pity for the abject figure.

"Very plucky of you to hold out."

Herbert Ellis was at least honest He could not lie to this bronzed young god who had come so suddenly to the rescue.

"I did not hold out," he said "I sent the message." Grenville looked at him sharply.

"Eh, what? You knew our plans were deeper laid than theirs! Who told you?"

"I did not know" whispered Herbert Ellis.

The subaltern stared at him in blank, uncomprehending amazement.

"Then what they deuce did you send it?"

"I was afraid" said the Eurasian miserably. "I thought they would kill me if I refused."

Grenville looked at him gravely. He felt shocked, and a little bewildered. He himself had been face to face with death on many occasions and had felt no fear only, the queer elated thrill of the born fighter.

He stepped out of the door-way into the dim twilight.

"Poor devil" he said softly, and disappeared down the path.

Herbert Ellis fled out of the hut, away from the dead Pathan, and the scene of his own disgrace.

The awful sense of his own failure swept over him, clearing his mental vision, and he saw himself as he was, a miserable coward, desperately afraid, worse, he had shown himself as such to his hero.

The low ejaculation, "poor devil" had cut him to the quick.

He flung himself face downwards on the hard path, and the merciful night fell swiftly and softly to hide his shame.

"CHIPKALI."

A MEMBER of Parliament has been badgered to the turning-point for subscriptions to this, that and the other, and at last he has begun to answer the beggars savagely.

"Dear sir," his reply runs, "I was elected for—as member of Parliament not as relieving officer."

BOMBAY RACING SEASON, 1911-12.

AFTER a series of twenty-one race days in all, the Bombay season of 1911-12 came to a close last week. As all through, the closing stages saw very keen racing with large attendances : the racing public seemed to wish to make the most of things as they stand at present in view of the Government proposals to abolish the books and reduce the number of days. What support there is can be gauged by the fact that entries in Arab events have been so large that it has been often necessary to divide and thus on occasion make cards of no less than eight events. As large a number of new animals have been imported as ever ; up-country stables lent a very fair amount of support in the Big Meeting and all round there are signs of prosperity with which it is more than a shame to interfere.

The weakness in class rests in the same department as we have complained of before, in stayers, and nowadays we do not even expect Viceroy's Cup candidates, presumably owing to the strenuous time they have before we start. We thus saw comparative second raters figuring high up in the handicaps and contesting the issues. Thus the Byculla Club Cup was won by Hilarity with 9st. 3lb. up, and though she has come on a good deal in the last year, she can scarcely be considered up to what this standard should be. Brogue was a complete failure after what she led us to expect by her recent form, as also was Aborigine, who should have shone in this class, though not an ideal stayer. It was left to The Loaf to run a very close second. This horse, considered an arrant rogue before coming out here, has now suddenly shown himself to be a sprinter. Giving Watch Tower weight, he won a six-furlong race on his own in record time and subsequently won over a furlong less with 10st. 6lb. up, which marks him as quite near the best of sprinters in the country. Tangaroa was, of course, the hero of short distance races, giving us a rare taste of his ability, though his second win was a touch and go affair with Socialist and allowed Wootton to show his wonderful power of finish, considering the shortness of his leathers. Neither Soultline nor Chobham showed their true form, and the first of these did not disappoint, as we had been prepared for this.

Punt is such a slow beginner that there is every likelihood of his being blocked, which occurred twice. Most improvement was shown by the expony Elser. He has on English form always been credited with being within a mere few pounds of Lumination, but he could never show this till now. Starting by winning against second raters, he has risen to beating the classy ones and proves that he can sprint five furlongs or stay a mile. Another small one in the pony Refresher also beat the big ones. He is very carefully treated and sent out only occasionally, but he repeated a success of some years ago by taking the rich Grand Western Handicap.

As to pony races, I fear there is again some complaint with regard to numbers of runners and stables represented. We have seen good fields out, but we have also seen very poor ones, and there is still a danger of the class being eliminated, as was the case with 14-1's and C-B's. With Refresher reserved for horse races, Leo Grand once more stands out on his own and won on the two occasions he started, the last time with 10st. up. Borgie has not proved as good as anticipated, though useful, and once more Regalia with all the changing of name has had to content herself with places. Old Mandeville came out rather late to upset a pot and remind us of his past performances, and some new ones who show themselves useful are Mauveron and Kiora, who improved wonderfully after their initial runs, but subsequently did not indicate being more than handy at light weights.

There is no getting away from the excellence of the sport provided by Arabs. The sensations of the year have been the improved form of Braganza and Grand Duke, who finally won with well over 10st. to carry. On all five occasions the former won and he alone can claim to have beaten the latter, his ability to stay and win the mile and a half Derby being the crowning feature. Grand Duke was out eight times and won five with three seconds to the one named. He was ridden by Wootton in the last two runs, carrying 10st. 6lb. and 10st. 10lb. and won so decisively that there cannot be more than half a stone between these two horses. It must be admitted that some of the best stayers are out of form, noticeably so Tajilmulook and Young Salanic, but there is always the crack timing under big weights to seal the merit of the performances. These latter two at one time beat the old champion Precious, whom one regrets to hear is over with his racing days. He has been a marvel for many years, a wonder at a finish, but at his best we think he was not up to the two first mentioned.

In sprints we have the same lot of ponies fighting for supremacy with the exception of Lookman, who has been off colour, and how good these are is evident by their putting up as good times as the horses. Majesty, Ashroff, Rajput, Chechan, Zoolphokarr, Abdul Malik, Young Majub and Singer are exceptional, the last three showing a preference for six furlongs or over and even a terms race fails to provide a good thing when they meet.

As mentioned before, the new ones are likely to turn out up to the mark, Mafush, Thulpha, Gowahajmer, Moosahar, Moonspot, Master Bill, who came on late, and Berar are the most promising. Most of the owners we expect at the top are there again, though Mr. Goculdass's large string has suffered almost throughout from various complaints, mainly colds, which have passed right through nearly all, and latterly he has done very poorly. Messrs. Heath, Oomer, G. K., R. R. S., Ali bin Talib, Kelso and Garda have taken a large share of stakes, whereas Mr. Galstaun is the most successful of our visitors.

As to jockeys, it is no surprise that Brown heads the list, though had Evans been here for the last part he would at least have run him very close, Brown also having missed some earlier extras. Both have, of course, the full confidence of the public and there is practically nothing to choose between them. Evans is heavier and stronger, thus able to hold any mount and ride a nice waiting race. In judgment we can think of none to beat Brown, who never comes too early, as it is a very great fault amongst the jockeys here as a whole. In the interests of two stroog staibles, Ferguson has done very well, particularly partial to riding a waiting race in front, as also has Templeman, who is inclined to make too much use of his mounts. Hoyt has won quite a number of times, but participates in the run of bad luck experienced by his connections. Appended are Statistics :—

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

London, Monday, 1st April 1912.

The attempt to row the Inter 'Varsity Boat Race on Saturday was a failure. The weather conditions were most unfavourable, there was a strong head wind and very rough water. Cambridge were swamped opposite Harrods and had to swim ashore. The Oxford boat, which was leading at this point, continued but were also swamped opposite Chiswick Eyot. The crew landed, bailed out and completed the course but the umpire declared it no race as the Dark Blues had been assisted in bailing their boat. The race was rowed again on Monday in a hailstorm with a head wind and rough water all the way. Oxford were never troubled throughout and won paddling by six lengths. Time—22mins. 5secs.

The following were the crews as given in the last English Mail papers:—

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

H.E. Lord Carmichael, Bengal's new Governor, arrived in Calcutta on Monday last and was accorded a very cordial welcome, both officially and otherwise. Amongst the troops on parade for escort and other duties was a large contingent of the volunteer force, a strong squadron of the Calcutta Light Horse forming part of H.E's escort and at a time of the year when a large number of men are away on leave and the drill-season is over it is unusual to find it possible to secure so big a muster. In common, however, with everyone else in Calcutta, our citizen soldiers were anxious to do honour to the new Governor and it was very satisfactory to see such a good turn-out. H.E. is a keen patron of sport and in Calcutta he will find that he has every facility for its enjoyment under extremely pleasant conditions. H.E. has a very sporting staff and it is by no means improbable that we shall see Government House represented at the local meetings. The hitherto untried filly "New Bengal" has, we think we may safely say, got away with a good start: we wish her the luck of every fence along the line, a good place on the rails and an easy win at the finish. We feel convinced that she has a good jockey up, who will not throw the race away for want of experience, pluck or judgment of pace, and we join in respectfully wishing His Excellency the very best of luck.

The Grand National of 1912 was again prolific of grief as only seven out of the twenty-four starters finished and amongst the earliest to get into trouble was the heavily-supported Rathnally, who fell at the third fence. Mr. O. H. Jones' horse was apparently well backed right up to the finish, as the day before the race his price was returned at 3 to 1 and presumably, in spite of the good support for Jerry M. whose connections have stood to him through good and evil report, Rathnally was the popular favourite at the start. To accept even 5 to 1 about a horse for this race is "asking for it;" to take 3 to 1 is hardly to be classed as prudence for it is, upon the showing of recent years, about that against any horse's getting over the country without a fall. Less than one-third of the field got the course this year; last year only one horse stood up; in 1910 only five (Jenkinstown, Jerry M., Odor, Carsey and Fetlar's Pride) out of 25 finished; and in 1909, out of 32 runners, only 19 finished, or a little over 50 per cent. Any bookmaker, therefore, who got much of the 5 to 1 and 3 to 1 money about the favourite, must have been hugging himself. A fair price is 10 to 1 the field about this race, anything else is absolutely daylight robbery!! In recent years there has been a good deal of outcry amongst the ringmen about the in-and-out running under N. H. Rules and whenever there has been a complaint in the press about cramped prices, the retort has been that no notice has been taken by the authorities of the various meetings of running that has been, to say the least of it, peculiar! But where the National is concerned this excuse hardly holds water, for all of them are genuine candidates and a dishonestly-inclined owner has a small chance of saying what shall or shall not happen. The fences do all the "stopping" that is required, for Aintree is not like the majority of the provincial courses, where the perils of the way are not excessively great and a horse may with any ordinary sort of luck, be depended upon to get the country. The prices this year have been exceedingly cramped compared with most other years. Rathnally 3 to 1, Jerry M. 4 to 1! Last year Lutteur III. started favourite at 7 to 1, Caubeen and Rathnally at 8 to 1, Carsey 100 to 9, Rory O'Moore and Jenkinstown 100 to 7. In 1910 Jerry M. started at 6 to 1, Judas 13 to 2, Caubeen 8 to 1, Jenkinstown 100 to 8, Carsey 100 to 7, Bloodstone 100 to 7. In 1909 Lutteur III and Shady Girl started at 100 to 9 each, Domino 100 to 8, Tom West 100 to 6, Mattie Macgregor and Leinster 100 to 6. The comparison is useful, for we do not suppose that there was more money for the favourites this year than there has been for the last three, and right up to within about five days of the contest there were six or seven of them all figured and presumably, therefore, backed.

So far only very fragmentary details of how the race was run have come over the wires. Chadwick apparently got well away on Rathnally and was leading when the horse fell at the third fence, which is the first "open ditch" on the course—a regulation 6 feet guarded ditch with a thorn fence beyond 4 feet 11 inches high (i.e., 5 inches higher than N.H regulation measurements) and 2 feet thick through. Jerry M., according to the report, came away from Bloodstone and Axle Pin over the last two fences, which are plain flying obstacles 4 feet 6 inches high with no ditches, but with low guard-rails close up against them and they are about 3 feet thick through. At the finish Sir C. Assheton Smith's fine horse won very comfortably by six lengths, four dividing the second and third. All the placed ones had been out over this course before, Jerry M. when he ran that great race with Jenkinstown in 1910 in which race Bloodstone started well backed by his connections, and fell at the third fence, and Axle Pin when he ran in the last Grand Sefton which is over about 2 miles 7½ furlongs of the Aintree course and finished fourth behind Carsey, Jenkinstown and Bedgrove. They had therefore all three had a good hard look at these fences before and were all old horses, Jerry M. 9 years, Bloodstone 10 years and Axle Pin 8 years. The young horses that have successfully crossed this course are few and far between, but it has been won by the following five-year-olds:—Alcibiade (1865), Regal (1876). Austerlitz (1877), Empress (1880) and Lutteur III. (1909). All the rest have been 6 years and upwards and Manifesto—who by the way started at very short odds both times he won (6 to 1 and 5 to 1)—was the patriarch of them all.

Jerry M. is a fine slashing horse, the beau ideal of an Aintree customer and it is a thousand pities, after what he has shown us this year, that all was not well with him last year, for he was in that race on practically the same terms, having been put in at 12st. 8lb., about a stone better to Jenkinstown than when he suffered defeat at this horse's hands in 1910. We doubt whether he had then as good a field against him as that which he has met and beaten so signally this year. He is a beautifully bred horse and shows his quality at every point. He is by Walmsgate and his dam is by Luminary who traces back to Glare (Footlight, Paraffine by Blair Athol out of Paradigm) and Walmsgate is by Hampton (Lord Clifden—Lady Langden) out of Flying Footstep who was by Doncaster (Stockwell—Marigold) out of Atalanta by Galopin (Vedette—Flying Duchess) out of Feronia, who was by Thormanby out of Woodbine by Stockwell out of Honeysuckle. He is well-bred enough to win a Derby, as indeed most horses aspiring to win a National have to be. Jerry M. has not been out since the Grand National of 1910, as all last season he was more or less amiss and this year again there were rumours that he might not stand the strain of the preparation it is necessary that a Liverpool horse should have. He was favourite for a long time last year, but Sir C. Assheton Smith struck him out as soon as he saw small prospect of getting him ready. This year again he opened favourite when first the market on this race began to make. During the last three weeks, however, he was displaced by Rathnally, who was backed as if it were all over and is probably one of the hottest favourites that has ever gone out for this contest, for few horses have even on the day of the race touched the price he was at about a week before it! Just before Jerry M. ran second in the Grand National of 1910, as already above recorded, he won the Liverpool Trial Chase, 3½ miles, at Sandown, beating Moonstruck and Springbok; he fell when running in the Open Chase, 3 miles, at Newbury, The Pilot winning. In the season before that 1908-09 he won a lot of races, his record reading as follows:—Seven starts six wins, the list being:—Malahide, Plate 2½ miles, at Baldoyle; Novices Plate Chase, 2½ miles, at Baldoyle; New Century Chase, 2 miles, 12st. 5lb., at Hurst Park; Stanley Chase, 2½ miles, for five-year-olds, 11st., at Liverpool; Becher Chase, 2½ miles, 11st., at Liverpool; and the Richmond Chase, 3 miles, 11st. 13lb., at Kempton.

For the further and more particular details of this year's race we shall have to wait till the mail after next.

Bloodstone, who is owned by Mr. C. Bower Ismay, is by Cherrystone out of Royal Bride and he recently (16th February) won the Champion Handicap Steeplechase, 3½ miles, at Hurst Park; but there was only one other runner, Master at Arms, who fell. Bloodstone did not run in last year's race, and, as already mentioned, fell at the third fence in the Grand National of 1910.

Lord Derby purchased Axle Pin from Mr. H. M. Hartigan this winter the horse having belonged to the latter gentleman when, he ran fourth in the Grand Sefton last November. He is by Quidnunc out of Hairpin and on the 23rd February of this year he ran second at Newbury in the Grand National Trial Steeplechase of 3½ miles to Ballyhackle, and on the 29th February he ran third in the Liverpool Trial Steeplechase, 3½ miles, at Sandown to Mount Prospects, Fortune, and Kilkeel.

The second important flat race of the new season, the Liverpool Spring Cup, 1 mile 3 furlongs, was run on Thursday last and was won by Mr. J. Ellis Potter's four-year-old colt Subterranean by Inn out of Sub Rosa. As a two-year old Subterranean was a failure, as out of his six attempts he failed to "strike ile" on any single occasion and he never even secured a place bracket. The nearest he ran was when he finished fourth in the 7-furlong County Nursery Handicap at Gatwick to Eton Boy, Linggi, and Mercury. He did better, however, last season, and out of his nine attempts he won three and was placed three times, the list of his performances being shortly as follows: Won the Billesdon Handicap, 1 mile, at Leicester with 6st. 8lb., beating Bulls Run, 7st. 6lb. (now in India) and Lord Ninian, 7st. 5lb. ran third at Lingfield in the High-Class Selling Handicap, 1 mile, with 8st. 11lb. to Rouleau, 8st. 11lb., and St. Distaff, 7st. 6lb., and seven others unplaced in the Starboro Selling Handicap, 1 mile, at a later meeting at the same place; won, the August Three-Year-Old Handicap, 1 mile, 60 yards, at Sandown in which he had 7st. 13lb., Paulhan, 7st. 12lb., ran second and Chateau Vert, 8st. 9lb., third; second to Olearia, 8st. 2lbs., in the Hartington Plate 1½ mile, at Derby, his own weight on that occasion having been 7st. 8lb. and Catana ran third 7st.; unplaced in the 1½ mile Autumn Handicap at the Newmarket Second October won by Fob, 7st. 11lb., Subterranean's weight having been 7st. 9lb.; won the Beckhampton Three-Year-Old Handicap, 1½ mile, at Newbury with 7st. 3lb., Jackdaw, 7st. 3lbs., and Proud Scot, 7st. 10lb., following him home and seven others ran. In the Lancashire Handicap, 1 mile 6 furlongs, at Liverpool, with 6st. 7lb., he ran up to Accurate, 7st. 2lb., the Chimera gelding by Florizel II, being third. His last appearance was in the 1½ mile Brackley Handicap at Manchester in which he was unplaced.

Mr. Dean, the Secretary to the Lucknow Races, has been appointed Official Starter to the C.T.C. and will commence operations at the Monsoon Meetings in August. Mr. Dean has started at Lucknow with much success, is very well known to all racing people and a deservedly popular entity in the turf world in India. The C.T.C. are to be congratulated upon their selection.

We regret to hear that Mr. Cecil Gray, the Secretary to the W.I.T.C., has been ordered home by his doctors. Mr. Gray has been in poor health for some time past and his absence on sick leave may, we hear, be a somewhat lengthy one. He left last Saturday. Mr. Reynolds, Official Handicapper to the W.I.T.C., officiates during Mr. Cecil Gray's absence.

The Stewards of the W.I.T.C. have, we understand, decided to hold the Poona Autumn Meeting, which will be restricted to fifteen days' racing. There will be no bookmakers and an experiment will be made with an extended totalisator scheme. It is not expected that the meeting will pay its way; in fact, it is impossible that it should do so and the club will be very lucky if they get out without loss. Sir George Clarke's time is up in October and unless his successor sees his way to issuing race-course licenses under less restricted conditions than those imposed by the present Government of Bombay, racing in Western India, as far as Poona and Bombay are concerned, is doomed.

The Hon. Mr. C. H. Kesteven, a Steward of the C.T.C., leaves for Home by this mail. Captain James Gourlie also goes Home by this mail.

"Mr. Lauder" has sold Greenware, Pressy and Warrayure. He is expecting some reinforcements from Home very shortly.

Mr. Joe Lee laid the Lincoln and Grand National to a well-known local gentleman, 8,000 to 100 Long Set and Jerry M. and paid up smiling.

The Lahore Junior Polo Tournament under handicap rules began on the 23rd ultimo when the 28th Punjabis, conceding 1 goal, beat the King's Regiment by 4 goals to 3. They then met Mamdot on the 25th, when Mamdot, conceding 5 goals, won on the stroke of time by 7 goals to 6. The 37th Lancers and 7th Hariana Lancers started level, the 37th eventually winning by 4 goals to 1. The 10th Lancers conceded 1 goal to the left wing 37th Lancers and beat them by 4 goals to 1, the 37th failing to score. In the semi-finals the Connaught Rangers were to have met the 10th Lancers but had to scratch owing to injuries to some of their ponies. The 37th Lancers "A" team met Mamdot and a fast and interesting game ended in a win for the former by 4 goals to 1.

The first of the semi-final games in the Tradesmen's Cup Polo Tournament at Rawalpindi was played on the 29th ultimo, when the 31st Lancers (—6) beat the Rifle Brigade (—7½) by 5½ goals to 2 after a strenuous game. The other match was played the next day, the 17h Lancers (—8) meeting the R. A. (—4½). The 17th scored 4 goals without response and thus won by half a goal on the handicap. The final ended in a walk over. There was heavy rain at Pindi at the beginning of the week and as there seemed no prospect of the ground drying for four or five days, the 17th Lancers team could not remain, and scratched, the 31st Lancers thus winning the Cup.

Our Ooty correspondent writes:—Drought still continues and the downs are as hard as the proverbial brickbat, so the opening of the hunting season seems to be very far off. Captain Meyrick has been up here for the past fortnight, learning something of the country and taking over the direction of the Hunt. Hounds look well; on the fat side of course at this time, but they are getting regular exercise and would soon train on hard.

Regarding the April race meeting I cannot give you prospects yet. Captain Annesley will still be here to carry on the duties of Honorary Secretary. Racing legislation in the Bombay Presidency may have the effect of sending horses into the other presidencies, and it is likely that the Bangalore and Mysore meetings will benefit, though we hardly think that western owners will bring their animals for the small meets at Wellington and Ooty. However it is to be hoped that entries will fill better this year than they did last.

The Amateur Golf Championship meeting of Southern India will be held on 20th, 21st, 22nd and 23rd May and the Ooty Gymkhana Tennis Tournament will commence on the 15th instant and finish on 1st May.

Cricket: a half-day's match, Married vs. Single, was played on the Ooty Gymkhana ground last Saturday at which the Benedicks proved superior. Captain Meyrick for the bachelors contributed 67 by some very tall hitting and was also useful at trundling. We hope this gentleman's duties as Master of Hounds will not prevent his often figuring in the cricket matches this season.

Rain is badly wanted to get the pitches good; at present they are rather bumpy.

Last month rather a novel equine feat (for England) followed a mishap in a race. While taking part in the River Selling Steeplechase at Windsor, Shiner II. fell, and, galloping away riderless, plunged into the Thames. After swimming some distance down the river he finally landed on the opposite shore, where he was caught, without his bridle. The fact that the river was in full flood makes the performance a particularly good one, but as there are no events under racing rules of this description his owner naturally did not appreciate the feat.

For many years a scientific breeder of stock in England has been investigating the question of the determination of sex. He now considers that in most stock he can prophesy with considerable certainty the sex of the offspring; and his views are to be published shortly in a small pamphlet called "The Production of Sex at Will in Animals." His secret appears to lie in a close and particular study of the more immediate ancestors of the parents. He thus finds what is called a male or a female "preponderancy," and by judging the degree of this preponderancy in the father and mother the probability of the offspring's sex can be accurately foretold. The author, who has had twenty years' experience with every sort of stock, has achieved great results and is confident that "the rules and new lines laid down in this pamphlet on sex preponderancy will be followed by all stock breeders with success, and that the Government will found breeding studs or farms where breeders can have their stocks replenished and renewed. A sufficient number of approved breeders of sires and dams should be subsidised. Breeding of animals will then be on strong, safe, and proper foundations."

Since Frenchmen gave up their national sport, La Savate, in favour of boxing a few years ago, they have made such remarkable strides in the fistic art that they are already defeating some of the best men in England, and if the sons of France continue to make the progress they are now doing, it will not be long before they will be winning the world's championships. A few years ago Englishmen were wont to regard the performances of their Gallic neighbours in the ring with amusement. Now, however, they take them very seriously, and have to admit that they are worthy opponents of their best. It was the fine showing that Henri Piet made against the then light-weight champion, Freddy Welsh, at Mountain Ash, about three years ago, that first aroused enthusiasm in the heart of the young Gaul. This was increased when Georges Carpentier made his advent, with the result that Frenchmen have studied the art so thoroughly and become so adept that they can now more than hold their own with boxers of any nationality.

The progress of Carpentier has been simply phenomenal. His long run of brilliant successes has done more for the sport in France than that of even Piet, and his quick and decisive win over the British middleweight champion, Jim Sullivan, at Monte Carlo recently, following his defeats of such men as Sid Burns, Young Josephs, and Harry Lewis, stamps him as a boxing phenomenon. Bitter pills must have been swallowed by lovers of English boxing when two of their best men in "Joe" Bowker and "Digger" Stanley, the latter of which pair was regarded as the world's bantamweight champion, were beaten in turn by Frenchmen, Bowker by Charles Ledoux and Stanley by Jean Poesy. But they must have been sweet in comparison with the one they had to gulp down when Carpentier, a youth of eighteen, knocked out Sullivan, their middleweight title holder in two rounds.

That Carpentier is the greatest marvel the history of boxing has known needs no emphasizing. His record and remarkable performances proved the argument. One is compelled to ask of what class is the English champion compared to the Frenchman? Arthur Evernden lasted fifteen rounds; Sid Burns fifteen rounds; Joseph ten rounds; Harry Lewis twenty rounds. What of the other Lonsdale belt holders, Sid Smith, Jim Driscoll, Matt Wells, and Bombardier Wells? It seems that their positions are anything but secure. It might be said with all the logic at command, who is there in France able to beat Driscoll and the Wells (Matt and Billy); but, then, it is argued anything is now likely to happen. Already many tongues are wagging of what is likely to happen to the British heavyweight Champion should he consent to meet Carpentier; while several there are who declare that Poesy will beat Jim Driscoll, and that France can produce a lightweight capable of defeating Matt Wells.

Perhaps they are cultivating one in the la boxe academies of Gay Paree. It is certain that if England wishes to maintain her prestige in the boxing world some drastic alterations will have to be made in her boxing curriculum. Judging by the recent big list of defeats administered by Frenchmen to the "boys of the bulldog breed" it goes without saying that to every follower of the sport in the Mother Country it is apparent their methods or their material is not up to standard. Their houses must be put in order at once.

It is contended by lookers on, and strongly contended, that once the enterprising Gaul takes a position at the head of matters fistic it will be a most difficult task to dislodge him. Not only will they hold the various European championship titles, but also of the world. They have learned all the tricks of the trade and there is not a move they don't know. With their naturally clever inventive brains they have introduced new ideas and brought to a basis of perfection old ones. Frenchmen future champions of the world! And then think of Charlemagne and la Savate boxing!

Is it not gall and wormwood for followers and staunch upholders of the famous British sport of boxing! From the time of James Figg (the first acknowledged champion) down to the period when Gunner Moir held the championship, the idea of a Frenchmen beating the best of the Englishmen was always treated with scorn, and anybody who would have suggested the possibility would have been considered nothing less than a raving lunatic, fit associate for the inmates of Colney Hatch or Cane Hill. Yet it has come to pass; the evolution of the almost impossible.

Jim Sullivan is anxious for a return match with Carpentier the French Champion. The latter is willing but has a full programme before him for some time, so Sullivan will have to wait. Last night Carpentier was to have met Marcel Moreau: on 12th May Kid McKoy is to fight him, while George Gunther, Harry Lewis, Eddie McGoorty and the Dixie Kid are all to be accommodated in the near future.

Jim Sullivan has accepted the terms offered for a match with Jack Harrison for the English Middle weight Championship title and belt and the contest is to take place at headquarters shortly, probably on the 27th May.

Digger Stanley and Ledoux, the Frenchman, have been matched to box for the Bantam weight Championship of the world and the contest is fixed to take place at the National Sporting Club on the 22nd instant. Stanley, when giving away much weight, was recently defeated by the Frenchman Poesy while Ledoux not long ago defeated Joe Bowker.

Another important contest will take place at the N.S.C. on Monday in Derby week, 3rd June, when the English Featherweight Champion Jim Driscoll is to meet Jean Poesy, neither to exceed 9st on the day.

Abe Attell, erstwhile Featherweight Champion of the world, recently defeated by Johnny Kilbane has again been beaten—this time by Tommy Murphy. The fight was held at Daly City, California, on the 9th ultimo and lasted the full twenty rounds, Murphy winning a splendid battle on points.

A recent boxing contest at the Elysee, Montmartre, has ended fatally. Arthur Evernden of London met Raphael Belli, who ranked with the best Frenchmen in his class and an interesting fight was witnessed till the twelfth round, when, on coming out of a clinch, Belli dropped his hands and turned slightly aside just as Evernden rushed in to plant his left to the point. Belli staggered back and the Englishman followed up and drove the right to the jaw. Belli went down to the blow and his head struck the boards with great force. They were unable to bring him back to consciousness and he was transferred to the Hospital Laribosiere where he died the next morning. There was some impression that Belli had turned aside to protest to the referee and that Evernden had taken an unfair advantage but everyone at the ringside declared that this impression was quite wrong and all are unanimous that the French had turned groggy as Evernden rushed him and that he was knocked out legitimately. The Englishman was arrested but subsequently released on bail. The post-mortem examination showed that, contrary to the opinion of the hospital doctors, there was no fracture of the skull, and that death was the result of cerebral haemorrhage, following great arterial tension due to over-fatigue.

This melancholy event will probably produce a series of violent outbursts of wrath from the pharisees who will no doubt seize the opportunity of stirring up Mrs. Grundy's bile with their horrible tales of the brutality inseparable from the sport.

As a result of the above unfortunate occurrence the French Boxing Federation at the request of the Prefect of Police have drawn up a new list of regulations which provide among other stipulations—

That the ring shall be covered with thick felt in order to break the violence of falls.

Gloves shall be four or six ounces in weight and must be evenly stuffed.

Boxers shall have the right to bandage their hands before putting on the gloves.

Fights to a finish are absolutely prohibited unless specially authorised.

No fight is to exceed twenty rounds.

French boxers under twenty-one years of age are not allowed to enter the ring except with the written consent of their parents.

A doctor is to be present at every match to certify that each boxer is in a fit condition to take part in the contest.

Referees are to be duly qualified and stop any contest immediately one of the combatants is in a condition of marked inferiority.

Prohibited blows are defined as including hits below the belt, the kidney-punch, clinches, blows with the head or shoulder, and fighting at the ropes. A combatant is to be considered down when he has one knee touching the floor.

Betting is absolutely prohibited, as are also matches between women.

The 2nd Royal Fusiliers' Boxing Tournament at Jubbulpore was concluded on the 25th ultimo after extending for 13 nights. The tournament had attracted over 250 competitors, and to Colonel Lawford and Mr. Old, late of the gymnasium staff, is due the big success of this tournament. The fighting was clean and spirited throughout and some fine contests were witnessed. Several well-known men were again seen in the ring, among them Sergeant Houston, Bombardier Griffin, Corporal Gates and Privates Wootton and Sly. The last named won both the light and welter weights and was mainly responsible for the victory of the 1st Middlesex Regiment who beat the 2nd Royal Fusiliers by 42½ points to 42 for the first regimental cup. The third cup was tied for by the 1st Northumberland Fusiliers and the 1st Royal Irish Rifles. Major-General A. Wallace, Commanding the Jubbulpore Brigade, distributed the prizes.

The interest taken in wrestling in Northern India was testified to by the immense crowd which assembled on the parade ground at Lahore on Monday evening to witness the match between Biddo and the celebrated Gama. The contest did not last long, for Gama soon threw his opponent and turning him over on his back sat on his chest. The victor was given an ovation and carried in procession through the streets of Lahore.

George Horine of Stamford University, California, has just established a new record for the running high jump, clearing 6 feet 6¼ inches. The previous world's record stood to the credit of M. F. Sweeney who at New York in September 1895 jumped 6 feet 5¾ inches.

The final game in the Bechtler Hockey Cup Tournament was played at Cawnpore on Saturday between the United Provinces Police and Mohammad Bagh Gymkhana teams. The former won after a well-contested and fast game by three goals to one.

The dispute between the Amateur Athletic Association and the National Cyclists' Union has been brought to an end at a meeting of representatives of the two bodies, when it was agreed that:

All sports and festivals throughout England and Wales advertised and carried out as athletic sports shall, as regards the general conduct of such athletic meetings be under the laws and control of the A.A.A. but all cycle races competed for at such meetings shall be run under the rules and regulations of the National Cyclists' Union, and any competitor in such races shall, as regards his entry and whilst actually competing in such cycle race, be amenable to the National Cyclists' Union as regards all future suspension and disqualification.

The decision of the judges or referee at all athletic sports or joint meetings is to be final and without appeal to either association.

The National Cyclists' Union undertakes not to sanction professional cycle races at any meetings where foot races or other athletic sports are to be competed for.

Neither body shall be required to obtain a permit from the other.

In view of the Olympic Games it is very satisfactory that the feud between the National Cyclists' Union and the Amateur Athletic Association has been ended. It would be good news this week to learn that the two Football Associations had also signed a treaty of peace.

London beat Paris in the lawn tennis covered courts meeting at Dulwich on the 30th ultimo by 16 matches to 11.

The semi-finals of the English Cup competition were played on the 30th ultimo, both matches ending in drawn games. Swindon played Barnsley at Chelsea: no score. Blackburn Rovers met West Bromwich at Liverpool: no score.

The International Cross Country Championship was run on Saturday last and resulted in a win for the English team with 41 points: Scotland was second with 88: Ireland third with 110: France fourth 123 and Wales fifth 146. The first man home was Bouin (France), Scott and Hibbin (both England) second and third.

The annual Merchants' and Bankers' Regatta was held at Madras on the 23rd ultimo and attracted a large gathering of spectators. The big race was, of course, the Challenge Fours, first rowed for in 1900. This year five crews entered, but Messrs. Binny and Co., Ld., scratched and the others met in the preliminary heats held earlier in the week. The results were as follows:—

Bank of Madras.				Best and Co.
J. R. Blackwood	(bow)	beat	W. T. Chitty	(bow)
A. L. M. Moodie	2		C. Christie	2
I. Stewart	3		S. E. Sewell	3
G. R. Attwood	(str.)		A. Fraser	(str.)
A. O. Bentley	(cox)		L. V. Heathcote	(cox)

Wilson and Co.				Gordon, Woodroffe & Co.
W. J. U. Turnbull	(bow)	beat	C. D. T. Shores	(bow)
A. D. Charles	2		K. Gillon	2
I. St. C. Stuart	3		R. C. M. Strouts	3
F. Anns	(str.)		A. H. Steele	(str.)
F. Davidson	(cox)		H. Fenton	(cox)

On Saturday the Bank of Madras and Messrs. Wilson and Co., put up a great race in the final. Wilson's made a fine bid for victory and were only just beaten by the length of a canvas. The Bank have thus won the race on three occasions, Binny and Co., have a similar number of victories, Gordon, Woodroffe and Co., have won six times and Parry and Co. once.

The preliminary heats in the Open Double Sculls had been rowed during the week with the following results:—

A. H. Steele	(str.)	beat	Greig	(str.)
C. G. Alexander	(bow)		Gillon	(bow)
Payne	(str.)	beat	Scott Mackenzie	(str.)
Smith	(bow)		Mellor	(bow)

The final between Steel and Alexander and Payne and Smith rowed on Saturday resulted in a win for Steele and Alexander by one and a quarter length.

Other races which made up the programme on Saturday were a Tub Sculling and Sailing Race with lady coxes won by St. Paul and Stokes steered by Mrs. Padday; the Mixed Double Sculls won by Mrs. Padday and A. H. Steele, cox Mrs. Campbell; and the "Hunt Cup" won by Miss Scroggie's crew. The Merchants and Bankers were "At Home," the Leicesters' Band discoursed sweet music, and the prizes were given away by Mrs. Jackson.

Mr. Bose, Superintendent of the Calcutta Zoological Gardens, left for England in the S. S. Afghanistan on Tuesday in charge of the collection of animals presented to His Imperial Majesty by the Nepal Durbar. The collection, which has been housed at Alipore for some time, includes one rhinoceros, one kiang, four leopards, one barking deer (albino), two barasinghas (swamp deer), four Himalayan bears, a rare collection of Himalayan pheasants and other animals, numbering altogether 160. After making over the collection to the London Zoo Mr. Bose goes on the continent to see the work of the principal Zoological Gardens in Europe.

The final report of the Royal Commission on Vivisection fully justifies this method of research on both physiological and moral grounds. Seeing that the report deals only with the evidence given to the Commission between October, 1906, and March, 1908, it must be regarded as being rather behind the times, for not a word anent Flexner's work on spotted fever, even, appears therein. The report sets forth at considerable length the advantages gained for both mankind and the animal world by vivisection during the past thirty years. It is claimed that the diseases of animals are now better understood and better controlled than before. The report also considers how far immunity from pain is, or can be, secured in experiments upon animals, and sets forth the statement that complete insensibility to suffering of any kind may be secured by the use of several well-known anaesthetics. With regard to inoculations and similar experiments, which represent 95 per cent. of the experiments made upon animals in the United Kingdom, the Commissioners agree that in the majority of cases the subjects do not appear to suffer pain. On the other hand, some inoculations are followed by pain, including that for tetanus and plague in rats, guinea-pigs, and rabbits. The report considers the moral question, and arrives at the conclusion that "experiments upon animals adequately safeguarded by law, faithfully administered, are morally justifiable, and should not be prohibited by legislation." "Some of us," says the report, "would prefer that in the case both of experimentation and demonstration the further special protection given to horses, asses, and mules should be extended to dogs; some of us would exclude the use of dogs altogether. But if any alteration is made in the existing procedure, the majority of us would agree that the special enactments now applicable to horses, asses, and mules might be extended to dogs and also to cats and anthropoid apes."

The coal strike goes on. The merry miners are still "at play," the half million others who have been thrown out of work by this abominable business are wondering how much longer they can exist with starvation staring them in the face. The Government so far has been unable to do anything, so like Brer Rabbit, we are "expecting every moment to be the next." Yet among all the tragedy of it some crumbs of humour are to be had for the seeking. I am told that the offer of four hundred Oxford University undergraduates to dig coal during the continuation of the coal strike was not intended as a joke; such is the solemn assurance of the chairman of the meeting at which the four hundred volunteered their services. This only makes it more of a joke, for the undergraduates cannot possibly have any notion what they are seriously undertaking. Their talk of "digging coal" alone shows they have no idea of how coal is procured.

The collier does not make a hole in a back garden or the middle of a field and get up coal as a gardener would potatoes. The hole is sometimes nearly half a mile deep, and the collier, when he gets to the coal, has to do a lot of skilful timbering work before he can get any coal at all. Even then he does not dig it out, but gets it down from the coal face several tons at a time. Suppose the unsophisticated undergraduates was able to do that, the law would not allow him to attempt it until he had worked for two years under supervision at the coal face. That is why the offer of the four hundred is a joke.

The worm, although it plays but a humble part in the economy of nature, is entitled to protection from the slanders of the calumniator. When Mrs. Pethick Lawrence boasted that the recent window-smashing was an illustration that "the worm had turned," she insulted the worm. It is impossible to imagine worms making such asses of themselves. They perform a constructive, and not a destructive, part. To put them in the same category as the shrieking sisterhood is to class them with a lower order of animate things. If Mrs. Pethick Lawrence had said that the wild-cat had turned, no one would have challenged the appropriateness of her simile. But to drag in the inoffensive worm was gratuitously rude. The worm, in all the ages of its existence, has never exhibited the qualities of a hooligan or a Maenad. It unfortunately sometimes gets cut in two with a spade, and if that had been the point of Mrs. Lawrence's remarks, there would have been no great lamentation.

Captain G. S. O. Swinton, recently elected chairman of the London County Council, has been appointed chairman of the crew styled the "Delhi Town Planning Commission" who are to go out to India forthwith and settle the site for and plan out the new capital of India. The other men are one F. R. Brodie, a Liverpool city Engineer, an architect named E. R. Lutyens and H. V. Lanchester another architect who is, I believe, at present working on a job in India. We are told these men will assemble at Delhi about the middle of April, that they will be hanging around there for some months and that their work will be to advise as to the laying out of the proposed city and the preliminary work connected therewith. How grotesque! men from Liverpool and London—two of the ugliest and most impossible of the big cities in Europe—are to teach India how to build a city. Let them go to Allahabad, for instance, and try and pick up a few tips before they go back. But before they can begin planning they must find a site and this they will not do in a hurry, unless I am much mistaken. What folly, what wicked waste of money!

"Horses for the Army" is still the cry. There is an unprecedented demand for English carriage and harness horses on the Continent, and the scarcity of good horses in England, we are assured, presents a serious prospect for the Army. The suggestion is, of course, made that the Government should bolster up the horse breeding business by subsidies to those engaged in it, and another tax on poor John Bull for the benefit of private interests. In our ignorance we should have thought that the demand for English horses on the Continent, coupled with the needs of the Army at Home, were sufficient encouragement to the horse breeder to persevere in the hope of getting his money back.

So far as the requirements of the Army are concerned, it is obvious that the expedient adopted during the Boer war would not answer to-day in the event of a sudden need arising for horses for cavalry and guns. Then the War Office put into operation their right to commandeer the omnibus horses, upon which they had paid a yearly bounty, and very useful animals they proved themselves—when they had been taught to start without hearing a bell rung. We would be glad, if it was possible, for the Army to take the motor-buses in similar fashion, and would not be sorry if they had to leave them derelict in some foreign country, but as horses must be provided it occurs to us that the War Office should go into the horse breeding business themselves and save a good deal of the fancy price which the foreign demand now compels them to pay.

Many of us have been laughing of the recent discomfiture of that blatant person Mr. John Burns. One of the tricks of oratory of this egregious person—and he's as full of them as a cage of monkeys—is to offer what doubtless he considers it a "sporting" bet. He's a great sportsman is "honest John," according to his friends and the gutter press. On a public platform this sort of clap trap goes down you know. So the other night in the House of Commons a ridiculous challenge of his was received with "cheers and laughter" as I read in my paper.

Let Eton send an eleven down to play Poplar's Poor Law boys. I think Poplar would beat them—they would if I captained the Poor Law boys.

That was Mr. Burns' challenge, and it has been accepted.

Immediately after the speech arrangements were made through several prominent Etonians to get together an eleven of Eton boys to play this match with Poplar on the sole condition that Mr. Burns himself would captain the Poplar eleven.

It is hardly hoped to procure any of the Twenty-two of Eton, but Mr. Burns is promised a fine day's leather hunting. The date of this interesting match will be announced on receipt of Mr. Burns' acceptance, but it is hoped to bring it off on 1st May. So far Mr. Burns has made no acceptance. It is to be doubted very much if he will. But what a pretentious creature it is.

Those of us who have pleasing memories of the premiere of "The Count of Luxembourg" may question the need for anything in the form of a "second edition" of Franz Lehar's most melodious of musical plays. But Mr. G. Edwardes has decreed that there shall be new songs and new dresses to gild the refined gold of the box office, and give added life to a representation which is one of the best and merriest entertainments in London. Those who were bidden to Daly's Theatre on Saturday night to appraise for a second time the quality of the Viennese piece found a crowded audience as enthusiastic over the story of the Count and his screen-marriage as if the delights of the play possessed all the charm of novelty.

What changes have been made in the progress of the story are all to the good (there is a merciful reduction in the riotous noise of the students in Briseard's studio), and such changes as have been inevitable in the company are of a character to make comparisons unnecessary. Miss Daisie Irving, who is now the Angele Didier of the performance, wins ready acceptance alike as actress and singer. She has a voice admirable in quality, and she delivers the now well-known numbers of Lehar with much charm. She has the great advantage, too, of acting with Mr. Bertram Wallis, whose performance, manly and romantic, helps to cover up any deficiencies in warmth of expression of the new Angele. In the second act Mr. Wallis has discarded evening dress for a dashing uniform, and the staircase dance gains in picturesqueness by the change. Apropos the dancing Miss Dorma Leigh and Oy-ra are responsible for some daring and eccentric movements that evoke the greatest enthusiasm, and there is another new waltz in which hoops are manipulated with really graceful results. Of the new songs, the one that gains most favour is a topical ditty for Mr. W. H. Berry, who with Mr. Lionel Victor, is responsible for all the evening's fun. Mr. Berry kept his audience in constant laughter on Saturday night, and his latest song, in which we fancied we detected the hand of Mr. Lionel Monckton, "Is it necessary?"

was deservedly encored. There is so much real enjoyment and vitality in "The Count of Luxembourg," that its career is certain to continue for many more months.

Miss Alexandra Carlisle, bewitchingly bonnie in kilts, is the most attractive feature of "Proud Maisie," the new romantic play by Mr. Hemmerde, K.C., just produced at the Aldwych Theatre. The scene of the drama is Scotland in 1745, with a romanticised Young Pretender as its central figure with clansmen pledging themselves wildly to a hopeless cause, with Young Lochvar (not Young Lochinvar) convinced of the Stuart perfidy, and working valiantly, foolhardily may be, for King George, with Maisie, Stuart to her pretty finger tips, in love with Lochvar, and with all the alarums and excursions that belong to such a plot.

In the first act there are stirring fencing bouts. In the second act there is singing to the harp. In the third act there are pipers and reels and a fiery speech from Prince Charlie and thrilling bustle and colour, and the play ends in the note of romantic tragedy.

Mr. Hemmerde, a very Alexander in his yearning for new worlds to conquer, has written much of the dialogue in blank verse. It is not strikingly good blank verse unfortunately, and many of the images are familiar. But the play is quite good of its kind, though it would, perhaps, have succeeded better as the libretto for a light opera.

The production is elaborate, and most picturesque, and the acting of Miss Carlisle as Maisie, Mr. Henry Ainley as Lochvar, Mr. Ben Webster as the Prince and Mr. Leon Quartermaine is splendidly vigorous and appropriate.

In "the Demagogue" at the Court Theatre Mr. Norman MacOwan has endeavoured to interest us in a professional agitator whose one purpose is to "get on." He is the secretary and treasurer of the "S.D.L.P.," and, while he mouths Socialism, he is at heart a thorough-going Individualist. No one can be more eloquent in claiming "the land for the people," yet, when there is a chance of indulging in speculation and buying up property which will be needed for a railway extension, the secretary of the S.D.L.P., does not hesitate to use the funds entrusted to him in the hope of turning a big profit. He and his friends are also ready to exploit an old man's accident at the local factory for purely party ends, and to reject the employer's generous offer to make the maimed workman comfortable for life in order to "show up" the dangers incidental to the use of machinery. Even this unhappy business, the secretary does not hesitate to use to his own advantage, and when the Council of the S.D.L.P. suddenly swoop down upon him with an accountant's examination of the books in advance of the ordinary date (suspicion seems to be characteristic of this "brotherhood of men"), he readily accepts the bribe which he had so vehemently rejected and compromises the compensation case.

All this Mr. MacOwan sets forth in a manner interesting in its way, but with a good deal of tiresome conversation. Although the types he presents are easily recognisable, they somehow lack reality, and the comedy leaves us unmoved. But it is evident that Mr. MacOwan has only to use his materials with the skill which comes of experience to give us a really good play. Already he shows considerable skill in character-drawing, and if the secretary was a trifle vague in outline, and the young lady who finds him out in time much too ready to quote verses at him in his darkest hour, there were at least two personages in the play that gave real pleasure. One was Horace Straker (the son, we should imagine, of the now famous 'Enery, chauffeur to Mr. John Tanner), admirably played by Mr. Sidney Sherwood, and the other the much too talkative, but engaging, fellow who unwittingly drew the secretary into a bad speculation in land. This part was excellently presented by Mr. H. K. Ayliff, who is so delightful as the footman in "Fanny's First Play." Mr. C. F. Cullings was only moderately good as the Socialist secretary. His methods were much too affected and melodramatic. It was not Miss Violet Sterne's fault that the role of the Socialist's fiancee was rather artificial. She played with no little intelligence, if her final moments sadly lacked restraint. With all its faults, "The Demagogue" is a merciless exposure of the paid agitator and of the self-seeking of many who preach the brotherhood of man. It was warmly received last night; in the regular theatre it would certainly provoke antagonism.

With the production of Sir Edward Elgar's Imperial masque, "The Crown of India," at the Coliseum the variety theatre has scored another great triumph. While not ignoring the part Mr. Henry Hamilton's "book" plays in the success of the piece, nor the claims of the magnificent Coliseum stage production, on the first night the call was for Elgar at the fall of the curtain. It was Elgar's day. It was Elgar's triumph.

Although the masque was the thing, the star turn was really in the conductor's chair. After a short musical prelude of a fanfare character, the curtain rose on a scene wrapped in steel-blue light, which changes gradually to amethyst, then to rose, and finally to a glitter of sunlight and gold.

The Taj Mahal is seen in the background; in front is a semi-circle of sculptured seats for the twelve great cities of India, in the centre of which is the marble throne of India herself.

On either side of India are two vacant seats—Calcutta on the right, Delhi on the left. All the other seats, with their names inscribed below them, are occupied by the majestically beautiful forms of the cities' representatives.

Elgar's grip of the Oriental idiom shows itself at once in an initial dance for Nautch girls, in which the native tom-tom plays an effective part.

India steps down, and greets each great town with a reference to its chief historic greatness—Benares, Mysore, Hyderabad, Bombay, Madras, Lahore, Allahabad, and Agra. Lucknow's siege is touched on, and an echo of the bagpipes suggests Campbell's dauntless Highlanders coming to the rescue.

Though India only speaks, and Benares replies in speech, Agra answers with a song, "Hail, Immortal Ind," and here again the composer meets the case.

Then comes the real motive of the masque—the rival claims of fair Calcutta and crumbling Delhi for the capitalship of India. The former attended by Commerce and Statecraft, all energy, action. The latter, attended by Tradition and Romance, Delhi calls on the mouldy past to bear witness to her greatness, and four Mogul emperors pass before the scenes in all the splendour and pageantry of the ancient Orient, making a scene of wonderful colouring and effect on the Coliseum stage rivalling the triumphal episode in the opera "Aida."

Calcutta in return calls on the flower of Britain's Eastern pioneers, who have made her great, and figures of "John Company," Clive, Monro, Warren Hastings, Locke, Outram, Havelock, and Colin Campbell line up in her support. The natives cry for Delhi, and the British for Calcutta.

No settlement being possible, both at India's advice appeal to "Caesar"—England's King, who is coming with his Consort.

St. George, resplendent in golden armour, and a brilliant halo of arc-lights, exalts the emblem of freedom and justice in a great song, "The Rule of England," which could never have been written by any other than the composer of "Land of Hope and Glory," a bar or two of which is heard in the last verse.

The second tableau is the recent Durbar in symbol. King George and Queen Mary, in the forms of two young Oriental rulers, arrive in great pomp, and all the powerful princes of the East come to do homage. But the question of capital stands foremost in the needs of the moment. India states the case, and the King gives Delhi the verdict in the following judgment spoken by India:—

> The Majesty of Ind his will proclaims,
> Delhi to be his capital he names;
> And, of his Empire, further makes decree,
> Calcutta shall the Premier City be.

The distinction is, perhaps, fine, but evidently poor old jilted Calcutta is satisfied, and joins as lustily as any on the stage and in the audience in singing, "God Save the Emperor," to Elgar's masterly adaptation of the National Anthem.

Miss Nancy Price made a most dignified India, and declaimed most eloquently. Miss Marion Beeley as Agra sang finely in the first lyric in the piece. But one of the greatest successes of the performance was Mr. Harry's Dearth's as St. George, in which capacity he gave Elgar's "The Rule of England," magnificently.

Truly "The Masque of India" is the musical production of the year.

III. AN AUDACIOUS VISITOR.

My camp at a place called B—was a charming one at the higher end of an extensive valley between two converging hills. It proved the scene of two of my most interesting experiences. The valley contained a good deal of thick bush on the banks of a river bed, excellent cover for leopards, so the first night just after dark Elmi went out and tied up a goat 4 or 5 feet from the usual loophole. Half a minute after he had left it and before he was back inside the zariba, there was a rush and a scuffle followed by long angry growling roars in front of the loophole. I had just sat down to dinner, but ran out at once leaving the soup to get cold. The noise the beast or beasts made was so loud, and such behaviour so unlike a leopard that I thought it must be a lion, and Abdilleh (my head shikari) at once assured me that he believed it was so and that there were two if not more. By the time I had got down to the loophole the growling had ceased; it was a starlight night, no moon; I could make out that there was something on the kill, but nothing definite at first. I peered at the dim object in front of me trying to distinguish its outline, when suddenly with an angry roar, it hurled itself at the loophole, a round head with two blazing eyes appearing in the aperture, the while an impatient paw seized the muzzle of my gun and dragged it violently to one side! My finger was on the trigger at the time so the result naturally was an explosion, the bullet probably passing just over the audacious visitor's shoulder. Of course he vanished. Abdilleh came up and rebuked me for shooting in such a hurry. I said "Please, I didn't: he tried to shoot himself"! It then came out that when the goat was first charged, Henduleh, who was on guard at the loophole, mistook the enemy for a hyena, and gave him a jab with a spear, hence the appalling language! Subsequently no doubt the lioness or leopard, whichever it was, noticed my gun barrel and took it for the spear about to be used again. The visiting-card that I had fixed to the muzzle as a night sight had been torn off. I replaced this and sat down to wait. Not more than three or four minutes had elapsed when a crouching figure came into view and came straight up to the kill. The next moment I let drive with the charge of S.S.G. in the right barrel and the thing sprang out of sight. We heard it struggling and growling on the ground 20 or 30 yards away, evidently very badly hit. Presently I caught a shadowy glimpse of something else moving towards the sounds, and then began a duet, the moans of the wounded animal mingling with the sympathetic growls of, presumably, its mate, and every now and then a different scratching sound; No. 2 apparently stroking and soothing its unhappy partner with affectionate caresses!

This was going on a short distance to my left front and I was straining my vision to see something in that direction, when out of the corner of my eye I caught sight of another shadow creeping up to the kill from more to the right. I glanced round and the left barrel blazed out. The new-comer sprang high into the air and fell the other side of the kill, lying without a move; but after a few moments, a raised head showed it was not quite dead, so I fired again and then all was still. I did not think either of the animals as I fired at it seemed large enough for a lioness, though in the crouching position assumed by both one could not be certain in the very dim light. I now turned on my little electric lamp which showed a beautiful leopard lying by the kill: the most cleanly spotted I have ever seen. I then turned the lamp in the direction where the first wounded animal had been lying, but could see nothing, and all sounds from there had ceased. Cautiously reconnoitring the open ground which extended some 40 yards or so from the zariba, we soon made certain there was nothing there, and were forced to the conclusion that, impelled by the sound of the shots at No. 2, the first wounded beast had contrived to drag itself a few yards further into the bush, where of course there was no choice but to leave him until daylight.

Presently came an ominous sound, the call of a spotted hyena, from the same direction. I was repeated again and again, all too effectively, for in a short time it was easy to judge that there must be half a dozen of the foul brutes assembled round their dying foe, waiting with ghoulish patience or impatience, for the end, which none were found as yet with the courage to go in and strike the first blow to hasten. Ever and anon a low growl, feeble and feebler yet, bidding them keep their distance. The scene, vivid enough to one's mind's eye, recalled someone's picture of "the dying king." By this time I had no doubt that we had had to deal with leopards all along and that there had been no lions about at all. But Abdilleh was not convinced and still maintained that the goat had originally been killed by a lioness. Well! the leopard with his wonderful caution and his no less wonderful audacity is a beast of infinite variety, and my own experience warns me to be chary of disbelieving anything with which he may be credited. But I find it difficult to believe in any leopard trying to take a lion's kill from under his very nose, however hungry he might be. Anyhow, lion or leopard, he was clearly still alive and able, for the moment at least, to keep the warabas (hyenas) at bay: so however anxious I might be as to the fate of his skin, it was out of the question to think of going to look for him in the dark in that bush. All we could do and did, was to fire a number of shots in the direction of those weird crescendo-diminuendo engine whistles, for that is what the waraba's gathering cry resembles. His hideous laugh is a very different note, much less frequently uttered, but once heard never to be forgotten.

At daybreak we were out, and found the spot where the wounded animal had lain down, thence followed the blood-tracks into the bush. It took another half-hour's search before we found, in different places: first just the tip of the tail, then the head (part of the skin eaten off), and finally one forepaw, which were all that was left of what must once have been an exceptionally large leopard. Disgusting wasn't it? The only thing left to be done was to photograph the other, a very handsome but not very large male. He had evidently gone hungry for several days at least, and this was, of course, the explanation of the audacity of both. Though whether the big leopard first wounded was the animal that killed the goat and charged my loophole, must remain undetermined. Personally I believe he was.

THE NEW ARMY RIFLES.

To the Editor of the "Indian Field."

Sir,—It has been recognised for some considerable time that our Service Rifle is no longer up to modern requirements. A new Infantry small-arm is consequently in process of evolution. This embryo stage is quite likely, for financial reasons, to last several years. A responsible minister, in order to allay public anxiety over the matter, has sought to minimise the value of flat trajectory, adding that our Lee-Enfield possesses a wonderful superiority over Continental arms in its freedom from jamming. "All that kind of silly rot," as the young man in Punch said, is not likely to impose on the people who know something about rifles, and what they are for. The sportsmen who clamber with Mauser or Mannlicher among Himalayan precipices, do not find their rifles jam and fail them at critical moments. I have had both kinds myself, and never had a minute's trouble with either.

It would appear that the new Service Rifle is to shoot a bullet weighing about 150 grains. The projectile will, of course, be of the modern long-pointed shape. In order to get long range with this weight of lead it will be necessary to have the bore small. Probably it will be ·275 or ·280. It is no doubt the ammunition which is the difficulty, for a high muzzle velocity is essential, and the severe pressures resulting therefrom, make the design and manufacture of suitable cases and bullets a difficult problem. That this problem is by no means unsurmountable is evidenced in the Ross-Eley rifle, which has the very high muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet per second.

It does not seem very probable that the new rifle will be an automatic loader. The decision as regards this will, however, depend on the action of the Continental Powers. The adoption of a self-loading Infantry weapon by one of the Great Powers, would probably lead to the immediate rearmament of the whole of the armies of Europe with similar automatic rifles. One of the South American Republics has already adopted an automatic rifle.

No doubt the ammunition supply would become a tremendous problem, in the case of troops armed with self-loaders, as the expenditure of cartridges is sure to increase largely. Highly trained men would undoubtedly have their efficiency increased, by being armed with automatic rifles, but the value of such weapons in the hands of poor and indifferent shots is, to say the least of it, problematical.

It is to be hoped that the new arm may be fitted with a good design of peep sight. That such sights greatly simplify aiming, there is no manner of doubt. There should be no difficulty in fitting the sight on a loop, or bridge, through which the bolt can work. It is of paramount importance that a peep sight should be near the eye, when aim is being taken. Everyone will be glad to hear that the wretchedly designed Lee-Enfield bolt is not to be perpetuated in the new rifle. The supporting lugs are to be close up to the base of the cartridge, so that the action will be capable of standing extreme pressures.

It may not be generally known that the new type of long sharp pointed bullets require extreme accuracy of centering, in order to give reliable shooting. The ammunition has therefore to be manufactured with the greatest care. The tremendous muzzle blast, which in the case of modern high velocity weapons, overtakes the projectile just after it has left the muzzle, exercises a very disturbing effect, and entails an extra amount of spin to prevent the bullet from being upset. Some American manufacturers have sought to improve the accuracy of rifles, by making vents near the muzzle, to relieve this final gas pressure, and allow the bullet to start on its flight without being caught in this maelstrom of whirling gases. I have never, however, heard that this method of relief gave any practical advantage. One would, however, expect a long barrel to shoot high velocity ammunition more steadily than a short one.
