WINCHESTER

THE MOST POWERFUL REPEATER MADE.

In the confidence that comes from knowing that one is equipped to meet the largest or most dangerous prowler of the jungle is often found success. The .405 Winchester is the most powerful repeating rifle made. Its 300-grain, soft-point bullet has sufficient shocking power to stop any game alive. Note the tremendous velocity and energy shown by the following figures: velocity, 2204 foot seconds; energy, 3236 foot pounds. The rifle holds five cartridges, which can be fired in rapid succession, each shot delivering a ton and a half of energy. Simple of operation, reliable in action and accurate in shooting, it is used by famous big-game hunters in all parts of the world.

Winchester Rifles Are Sold By All Gunmakers.

Distinguished ELGIN Tent Dwellers

His Highness the Maharajah of Gwulior is another distinguished user of Elgin Tents. We have supplied tents for many years for the use of His Highness, also for all departments of his State, including the Army, and as a result of the uniform satisfaction we have given. His Highness has been pleased to grant us a special warrant of appointment as Tent-Makers.

Native States and all large users of tents should require no higher proof of the estimation in which are held than this signal recognition of their merits by so distinguished & capable a ruler.

ELGIN

Please write for our Catalogue.

LONDON, Friday, 15th March 1912.

BIRMINGHAM.

STABLES sheltering National Hunt performers have been severely drained of late, and on Monday at Bromford Bridge, with but just over thirty runners, their resources seemed to have been taxed to the utmost. The clashing with Lingfield may have had something to do with the paucity of runners. Very little life or excitement marked the proceedings, the feature of which was probably the success of well-backed horses. The atmosphere was foggy, and there was but a thin muster in Tattersall's. Results:—

LINGFIELD.

"Lovely Lingfield" was lucky on Monday in securing its share of sunshine, as the fog that enshrouded the southern suburbs extended far beyond Croydon, but on the southern slopes of the first range of Surrey Hills it thinned sufficiently to give a fair view of the racing. To the perforce curtailed facilities of railway transit may be accounted the falling off in fields, which, under the circumstances, failed to come up to the usual charter. In places the going was holding, but on the whole there was little cause for complaint, and the course looked fresh and green. Results:—

Monday's sunshine had accentuated the evening mist from a wet country, and with a suspicion of frost in the air on Tuesday the white fog that was prevalent South of London held general sway, and give a November-like aspect to the scene. In the absence of wind the afternoon was dull, and the light bad for glasses, while the going was again on the soft side. If the attendance showed little improvement, a more lively tone was given to sport, as after Irish Wisdom had been allowed to walk over for the Three Miles Selling Handicap Chase, fields were of stronger proportions. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

With one notable exception, the ties in the fourth round of the Association Cup produced very close struggles and two of the four remain undecided. The clubs to qualify for the semi-finals, which take place on the last Saturday of the month, the draw being made next Friday had very different experiences, West Bromwich Albion doing no more than expected in beating Fulham, though the score was astonishing, while Swindon accomplished the great performance of the day in defeating Everton. Manchester United and Blackburn Rovers, the other two Lancashire teams concerned, played a draw at Old Trafford before a crowd approaching 70,000 in number, and Barnsley, runners up two years ago to Newcastle United, held their own with Bradford City. Probably the holders, who in four Cup matches have not given away a goal, will win the replay. But, unlike the second meeting of the two Yorkshire clubs, that between the representatives of the other great northern shire will most probably be a very close struggle. Unless Barnsley succeed in accomplishing at Bradford what they could not do at home there will be three First Division League teams and one from the Southern League to fight for the honour to appear at the Crystal Palace on 20th April.

On Cup from West Bromwich Albion must be regarded as the strongest side in the competition, as they have beaten Tottenham Hotspur, Leeds City, Sunderland, and Fulham, scoring 9 goals to 1; and their last brilliant win shows how the course of this contest is influenced by the draw. Fulham enjoyed the advantage of playing at home in all three previous rounds; in their first out-match they lose by three goals to none, and their overthrow in such decisive fashion leaves London without a club in the semi-final, the hopes of the South resting on Swindon, who gained their triumph over Everton by means of a brilliant start, their visitors only being able to reduce the adverse margin of two goals by one although having the best of the play in the second half. The presence of Swindon, the Southern League champions, and West Bromwich Albion, who had to work very hard to regain admission to the First Division last season, promises to make the semi-final ties particularly interesting. Swindon reached the same stage two seasons ago, but have yet to earn for themselves a big name in the Cup; West Bromwich Albion were the first Midland team to contest a final tie, losing to Blackburn Rovers after a drawn game in 1886, and they won the Cup two years later, unexpectedly beating Preston North End after losing a year before to Aston Villa. Recalling as it does their old glories, Albion's success must be extremely popular, and Swindon are general favourites because of the high-class football they have played for several seasons.

In the League the great events were the defeat of Newcastle United by Bury, which leaves Blackburn Rovers with a clear lead of three points at the head of affairs, and the success of Burnley over Clapton Orient, while Chelsea—also away from home—could do no better than draw with Bristol City. As the result of these games in the Second Division Burnley seem almost sure to gain promotion, but Chelsea, although three points ahead, are close pressed by Derby County who have a game in hand. Queen's Park Rangers have come to the top of the Southern League, but Swindon, with two matches in which to make up a couple of points, have much the better record.

ENGLAND vs. WALES

At Wrexham on the 11th instant England beat Wales by 2 to 0. The first half ran quite smoothly and the team furnished a delightful exhibition. It seemed that Meredith, the Welsh captain, whose team turned out as chosen, was destined to open the scoring, for he was the first player to come into prominence with a dash down the right and a beautiful curling centre into the goal mouth. Williamson, however, fisted out and saved again a few seconds later, and then England got their first goal, Holley, who came into the side for Fleming, taking advantage of a perfect centre by Simpson and placing the ball very coolly into the net. It was unfortunate for Evans, who has been acting as reserve to L. R. Roose for nine years, that in his first international at his native Wrexham he should have failed to check the first dangerous attack on his goal.

The Welsh custodian improved later and stopped some hot shots in the second half but he could never live up to the high standard set by Williamson. The work of the Middlesbrough man throughout the game was magnificent. He had shots of all sorts to deal with, and he faced them with consummate ease and cleared with masterly judgment. Williamson's work indeed, was the leading feature of the match, for Crompton and Pennington could not always hold the brilliant Welsh outside men, Vizard and Meredith, and Wales were only prevented from scoring on several occasions by the masterly work of the goalkeeper. Thus in the first half Williamson saved in wonderful fashion from both wingers, pushing away Meredith's shot and clearing from Vizard's return. Clever work by Meredith left Jones and Wynn in front of goal with a score apparently certain, yet in some miraculous fashion Williamson cleared.

The English forwards were more frequently attacking, but they had fewer shooting chances. At length, however Freeman dashed between the backs after close passing by Jeffries and Holley, and steadying himself in front of goal shot with judgment quite clear of the custodian.

A shot by Meredith struck one of the posts, and Wynn made a great effort which brought another brilliant save from Williamson.

The shooting was not so accurate in the second half, but both goalkeepers were alive to their duties when their services were needed.

The Welshmen certainly were not disgraced in failing to beat such a clever allround team. Indeed, it was a glorious defeat and a victory even might have been recorded but for the wonderful exhibition of the English goalkeepers. The chief difference between the sides was in the defence for there was very little indeed between the two sets of forwards, and the Welshmen put in the greater number of shots.

RUGBY RULES.

IRELAND vs. WALES.

THE twenty-seventh match between the Rugby representatives of Ireland and Wales took place on the Balmoral ground, Belfast. Wales made several changes from the side that defeated Scotland, and further alterations had to be made. With Trew dropping out, he and Owen gave place to the Newport halves, Vile and Martin. Spiller and Dyke, the Cardiff three-quarters, were unable to play, and Birt and Plummer, of Newport, took their places. Geldrick resigned his place in the Welsh pack, and Uzzell was chosen. In the Ireland team changes had also taken place. Hinton had been restored to his old position at full back, and as Taylor was unable to play Quinn regained his place. Halpin dropped out of the forward ranks, and his place was taken by Beatty, of the North of Ireland Club. As a good deal of rain had fallen in Belfast during the week and the ground was in a soft condition, the weather was of spring like nature, and the turf to some extent had recovered. There were some slight showers before the game started, but the ground was in a wonderfully good condition. The attendance was somewhat below expectations, but probably 10,000 spectators were present. A strong wind blew from corner to corner, and Bancroft, the Welsh captain, on winning the toss, decided to play with the sun to his back. Lloyd, the Irish captain, kicked off at a quarter past three (Irish time.) Hawkins running down and gathering the ball got near to the home twenty-five. There was a chance of Wales scoring, but Hawkins passed forward. Ireland wheeled the first scrummage and Lloyd found touch. Following this Wales was penalised and Hinton with a good kick gained ground, but soon afterwards the Welsh forwards rushed back and showed excellent work in the loose. The play was carried into the Irish twenty-five and when the home side were in danger Lloyd saved with a smart punt into touch. Wales directly afterwards had a great chance, but Lewis, in taking a pass from Davies, slipped, and was brought down. Lloyd should have got away, but through hesitation allowed himself to be collared. The Irish forwards did excellent work in the loose, but through a mistake on the part of Hinton Plummer was nearly in. The situation was saved by Quinn and in a scramble on the line Hinton saved. Ireland continued to be hard pressed and Wales should have scored. Davies passed out to Lewis, who with a splendid chance, knocked on. A quarter of an hour from the start the referee penalised Wales in the mid field for loose head, but Birt replied with a very good kick. Just afterwards the same player dribbled past all but Hinton, the Irish full back, but kicking too hard at the finish Ireland were enabled to touch down. After the drop-out the Irish forwards took the play into the Welsh twenty-five, but they were unable to maintain their position. Wales were soon attacking again, and should have scored. Lewis passed to Birt, and the game was taken close on to the Irish line, but the Welsh forward dropped the ball when a score seemed almost certain. Lloyd gathered the ball and cleared in brilliant style. Again Wales pressed, and were nearly in, the Irish tackling being at fault. Ireland had some marvellous escapes at this point. Birt had a shot at goal, but his kick went wide. Then following a fine kick by Lloyd to mid-field, McIvor picking up, ran strongly, and in some loose play near the line Ireland came very near scoring. Then McIvor dropped with the left foot to goal, but the kick went wide, and Plummer returned into touch. McIvor found touch in the Welsh twenty-five, and Ireland again came near scoring a try, but off-side right on the line saved Wales. Then Bancroft kicked into touch to the centre. Just afterwards Ireland were penalised, but Birt's drop at goal went very wide. So far the game had gone in favour of Wales, who had several good chances, but allowed them to escape them, and as the play went on Ireland began to assert themselves, and were more than holding their own. The Irish forwards broke away in brilliant style, and Wales were in great difficulty. The game was right under the post, and Vile cleared in a very clever manner. Shortly before half-time Vile started a movement which was carried on by Martin, the latter sprinting down the touch line and passing to Davies, who scored for Wales. Bancroft kicked a fine goal. Half-time:

Wales ... ... 1 goal.
Ireland ... ... 0.

After changing ends Lloyd got in a good reply from a kick off, but Ireland were penalised, and lost ground. Then came a series of marks. Bancroft, with an exceptionally fine kick against the wind, placed Ireland on the defensive. In the rush that followed the ball was forced over the Irish line, but Foster succeeded in kicking dead. At this point the Welsh forwards were repeatedly getting the ball and Vile and Martin were working extremely well together. An excellent movement was spoiled by Birt knocking on. Ireland were nearly let down by Hinton, who was not only rather slow, but repeatedly bad in his fielding of the ball. Ten minutes after the interval Vile broke away from the scrummage and with weak Irish tackling should easily have made an opening for Lewis to score, but he threw forward. The pressure on the Irish line continued until Wales were penalised. Bancroft misjudged Lloyd's kick and the ball rolling into touch in the Welsh half the home side escaped from a difficult position. With the Welsh forwards scrummaging more skilfully than their opponents the ball was soon back near the Irish line. Once more a forward pass lost Wales the chance of scoring. At length Abraham, intercepting a pass, ran strongly and Brown carried on the movement, but Moore knocked on. Directly afterwards Lloyd from a scrummage broke away and passed out to McIvor, who struggled over near the corner for a try for Ireland. Lloyd made a fine shot, but the ball went just outside the post. Directly afterwards the Irishmen dashed down and Lloyd getting the ball from scrummage dropped a goal, thus placing Ireland two points ahead. Wales were penalised and Lloyd only just missed kicking a goal. With Davies finishing a run with a kick into touch Wales looked dangerous but were penalised, Bancroft, however, made a good return, with the result that the play continued to be in the Irish half. The game was still contested in a most vigorous manner, the Welshmen showing superior cleverness in the scrummage. Vile broke away, and Plummer gathered the ball and ran well, but spoilt his efforts by passing wildly. Wales forced the play over the Irish line, but Abraham cleared in brilliant style, Ireland having a very narrow escape. In the closing stages the Irish forwards came away, but Bancroft with a good kick, maintained the pressure, Quinn intercepting slipped through, but Moore failed to gather his pass and so threw away a great chance. In the last two minutes Brown scored for Ireland, and Lloyd placed a goal. The result was:

Ireland ... 2 goals (1 dropped)... 1 try.
Wales ... ... 1 goal.

OXFORD INTER-COLLEGIATE COMPETITION.—The final of the Inter-Collegiate Cup competition at Oxford, on the 9th instant, between Trinity and Brasenose, excited a great deal of interest, and fortunately the conditions proved of a very favourable character. The result was a victory for Trinity by 40 points to 32. Savage was unable to compete for Brasenose, and his absence probably deprived them of the hurdles. Oxford president, Anderson, was in excellent form, and accomplished a grand performance in the quarter, after winning the hundred. Porter, the 'Varsity three-miler, also brought off a double for Brasenose. His victory in the half mile was due to one of the most brilliant efforts seen on the 'Varsity ground for years, as he appeared hopelessly out of it 200 yards from home. The final of the 'Varsity 100 was run during the afternoon, and Shepherd, after many attempts, at length succeeded in turning the tables on Lange, whom he had never before beaten off the mark. The Strangers' Mile Handicap saw the Blue, W. L. Williams, win a capital race from scratch in 1min 59secs. Results:—

100 Yards.—G. D. L. Anderson, Trinity, 1; W. E. Robertson, Brasenose, 2. Won by a yard and a half. Time—10⅕secs.

Half Mile.—C. H. Porter, Brasenose, 1; H. E. A. Boldero, Trinity, 2. Porter, finishing with a brilliant spurt, snatched the race out of the fire in the last two strides. Time—2mins. 4secs.

RACKETS.

THE MILITARY CHAMPIONSHIP.—The challenge round of the doubles at Prince's Club on Saturday, the 9th instant, ended in the defeat of the holders, the Army Service Corps, by 4 games to 2.

As in the other matches in which he has taken part, Captain Luther's service was the outstanding factor towards the success of the Yorkshire Light Infantry. He received little help from his partner, Mr. C. E. O. King, who was evidently very nervous. The latter served himself out time after time, but Captain Luther made very few faults. The losers were a far more even pair, but the return of Captain Luther's service generally appeared to present unsurmountable difficulties to them both.

Captain Luther after winning the spin, ran up four aces by service. Captain Berger replied with a sequence of five, and then small contributions took the score to "7 all." The holders got possession at this stage, and went out in their two hands. Major Puckle failed to add and Captain Luther, finding a splendid length for his service, ran right through the game, and attained "4—love" in the third game. All but four of his sequence of nineteen aces were gained by service. Captain Luther made a further run of seven aces, six by service, and a couple by Mr. King took the Infantry to "game ball—4." The only sequence of note in the fourth game was six to Captain Luther, and hands also ruled small and unproductive in the fifth game. The holders led at "game ball—5," and Captain Luther made a good effort with five aces. Mr. King however, did nothing, and Captain Berger scored the necessary ace.

Continuing his hand in the sixth game, Captain Berger added four, and after both the challengers had failed he went to "7—love." "Twelve—five" was eventually called in favour of the Army Service Corps and the match became interesting aspect. Then Captain Luther ran up half a dozen, and Mr. King, as second hand, added a couple. The game was set fine at "13 all," and, after putting the two challengers out, Captain Luther made four aces, and Mr. King scored the winning point.

Challenge Round of Doubles Championship.—2nd Battalion King's Own Yorkshire L. I.—Captain A. C. G. Luther and Mr. C. E. O. King (challengers)—beat Army Service Corps, London—Major J. Puckle, D. S. O. and Captain A. Berger (holders)—by four games to two 80 aces to 56. Scores: 7—15, 15—0, 15—7, 15—6, 10—15, 18,—13.

THE JAMASJEE CUP TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINAL.

17TH LANCERS vs. S. AND T. CORPS.—The second of the semi-final games was played at Rawalpindi on the 24th and 25th ultimo and resulted in an easy win for the Lancers. They made 379 for 9 wickets and then declared their innings closed. Fowler made 148 not out and Lockett 124. The S. and T. were all out for 131 in their first innings and, following on, only compiled 76. The Lancers thus won by an innings and 172 runs. Score:—

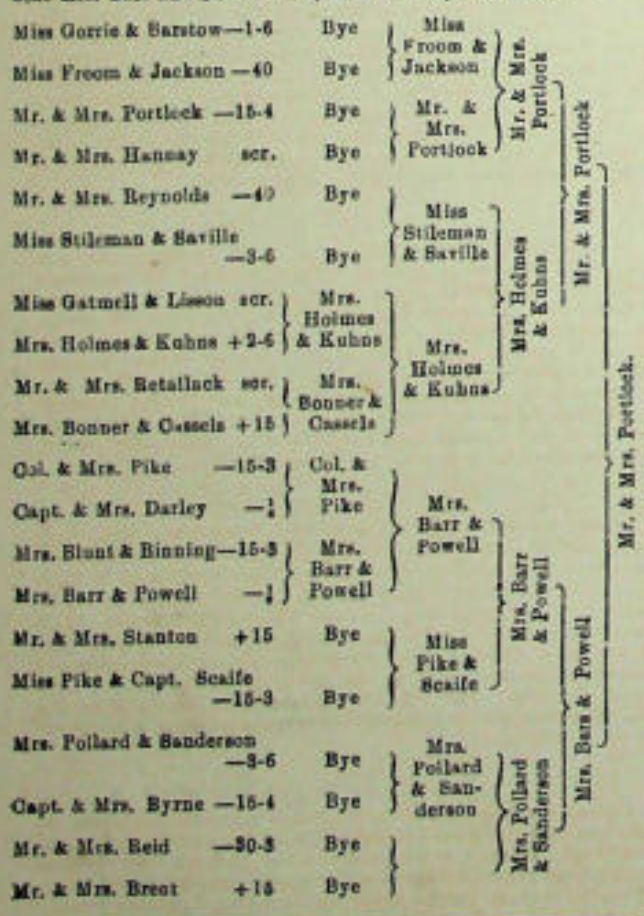
BOMBAY GYMKHANA TOURNAMENT.

MIXED DOUBLES.—The final game was played on the 25th ultimo and resulted in a win for Mr. and Mrs. Portlock who beat Mrs. Barr and Powell 6—5, 6—4. Complete results:—



"WHAT seems to be the matter with him?" asked the doctor, approaching the bedside of the man, who lay swathed in bandages.

"He found the gas-leak," briefly explained the nurse.

"EVERY husband ought to make his bride a regular allowance from the start," said Senator Depew at a wedding reception in New York. "This is but just," he continued, "because from the start every bride finds that she must constantly make allowances for her husband."

Hockey.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS

LAST year, it will be recollected, when the Bengal Gymkhana ran an open Hockey Tournament, the Bengal Hockey Association did not allow those teams who competed for the Gymkhana tournament to take part in the Beighton competition, on the grounds that the Bengal Gymkhana was not affiliated to the B.H.A. To avoid all unpleasantness, the Bengal Gymkhana, in the interest of sport, applied to the B.H.A. for affiliation, and applied for sanction to run an open hockey tournament. This has been refused by the B.H.A. whose council state that it would be a duplicate of the Beighton Cup Tournament. This is only a lame excuse and now the Bengal Gymkhana have no other alternative but to go on their own. If the members of the latter Club work with those cunning tactics possessed by some secretaries they will, in spite of the refusal of the B.H.A., run an open tournament of their own.

The weather last week interfered with hockey, and in addition to three matches being postponed, two games were abandoned on Saturday out of four matches, but had the games started to time there would have been no necessity of stopping the games. The Calcutta and Y.M.C.A. match which started five or six minutes late was got through, as was the Sibpur vs. Amateur game; but the games between Dalhousie and Rangers and St. Xaviers and Measurers had to be stopped owing to the storm. I am sorry to state that the two latter games started fifteen minutes after the appointed time. In the St. Xaviers and Measurers match the score was two all when further proceedings were stopped, but the Rangers had hard lines as they were leading by 3—0. Dalhousie will probably give Rangers the points as they have no chance of beating the Rangers.

The League Championship may be said to have been decided last Tuesday, when the Customs beat Calcutta. However the Riversiders have the Measurers yet to play—a team which drew with Sibpur, and gave the Rangers a deal of trouble before the latter could win by the narrow margin of a goal. It was hard lines on the Lillooah men in having to give two points to the Customs without having a chance of a fight. The Customs and the Railway team were to have met last Saturday, but owing to the annual Inspection Parade the Lillooah team wrote into the Honorary Secretary of the B.H.A., as well as to the Customs asking for a postponement. The Customs were agreeable to a postponement, but the B.H.A. decided that Lillooah should lose the points. This is anything but sport.

On Saturday Calcutta had the Y.M.C.A. as their opponents but the latter were simply outclassed and were beaten by no fewer than 8 goals to nil. However three out of the eight goals might easily have been saved had the Association a better goalkeeper. He was a novice and gave a very poor exhibition. The ball was netted on four more occasions, but these goals were disallowed for offside tactics.

Sibpur, the same evening, beat the Y.M.C.A. Amateurs by three goals to nil and although this match started at 5-20 it was got through. The Y.M.C.A. and the Amateurs are to combine for the Beighton Cup, but only H. Vanspall and Blacquire will represent the Amateurs. Jellico, last year's Captain and brilliant centre half, comes up from Singapore on Saturday, and I expect the combined team to render a good account of themselves in the knock out tournament.

The Measurers and St. Xaviers match was very evenly contested, and when the game was stopped with only five minutes to go the score was two all. Dalhousie had three goals against them when playing the Rangers and in this match young Lawton had two of his fingers badly injured. Some of the Dalhousie players are very reckless in their hitting and in five matches the opposing teams have had the misfortune to get some of their players injured when playing against the trades club.

On Monday, of the three matches for decision, the one between the Rangers and St. Xaviers attracted most attention. As the Rangers started a man short, and in addition were without Skempton, A. Lawton and L. Fitzpatrick, a victory for the College was anticipated but Smart and Lindsay were too good for the opposite defence, and the Rangers were able to win by two goals to nil. St. Xaviers had, if anything, more of the game, but their forwards were weak in the circle and many fine opportunities of scoring were thrown away. De Lanougerede was too slow in the centre, and Newton shot, on two occasions, wide. Sam Lawton played a great game for the Rangers in the back division, as did Tripp and Cody. P. Fitzpatrick, late of the Customs, has considerably improved; while Smart and Lindsay were the two best forwards on the field: as a centre man, Smart has no equal. He is very speedy and is the hardest and most accurate shot in Calcutta. With such men as Smart, Cody, S. Lawton, Yatches, Bocquet and the pick of the Customs team, viz., Boileau, Galbraith, Williamson, C. Barlow, McCready, J. Anderson, Quiterio and A. Anderson, a team from Calcutta might well take part in the All India tournament. We have no left wing of the Ansell class now in Calcutta, but Wilks and Hudson are above the average It is a pity that Rossetti has fallen off so considerably. Last year he played quite a good game, but this season he hardly catches the eye.

The Civil and Military match will be another fiasco, for if the civilians are a representative side the military will not have the ghost of a chance against their superior opponents.

The Measurers beat La Martinère on Monday by four goals to one and on the evening's play Mr. Knox's team won on their merits. The Rovers and Amateur match the same evening was a draw of two all. The Amateurs in addition to having a scratch side played a man short.

The match of the evening, nay of the season, was the meeting of Calcutta and Customs on the former's ground last Tuesday. On the result of this match practically depended the championship, for whichever side won would annex the Carnobis Cup. Customs and Calcutta were leading on the table, each having only lost a single point and as the Rangers were only a point behind, one side had to win in order to prevent a replay between the trio teams. Of course the Customs are not yet out of the wood as they have the Measurers to play, a team which may upset calculations. Calcutta and the Rangers too have to settle matters, but so far the Riversiders are in the safest position, being three points ahead of the Rangers but the latter have a game in hand. In Monday's game for the first twenty minutes there was nothing to choose between Calcutta and Customs, but after the Riversiders had scored there was only one team in the hunt and that was not the Reds. During the first half both sets of forwards missed chances of scoring but on the evening's play Customs were all three goals better than their opponents. Calcutta, however it may be stated, were without Cole and Hannay. Boileau played a great game for the winners. He scored the first goal and was instrumental in the scoring of the second which was netted by Williamson. Although Calcutta lost I fully expect the Reds to give a better account of themselves in the coming Beighton tournament. Appended is the League table up to Tuesday evening :—

Motoring.

BY "THROTTLE."

IT is pleasing to see that a move has at last been made to put a stop to furious driving on the part of taxi cab drivers in Calcutta. During the week we have been informed by the Daily press that the Commissioner of Police addressed the drivers and administered a caution ; this is all very well so far as it goes, but it is only a most insignificant beginning ; next week new men will join the company who know not Sir Frederick and by the old hands the admonition will be forgotten. An excuse and a very feasible one, put forward by the men is that fares are frequently in a hurry and demand a pace in excess of that allowed by law. In these circumstances the drivers are in an awkward position, on the one hand is baksheesh and the liability of prosecution ; on the other abuse from the fare, loss of gratuity but immunity from the Police, truly a predicament which would overtax the reasoning ability of better than a taxi driver. But why not take the ability to brake the law, and the temptation to do so out of the drivers' hands altogether ! To accomplish this should not be a difficult task to any motor mechanic. Let the Police authorities appoint a qualified man to adjust the timing of the magnetos and the actuating mechanism of the carburetters on the several cars, so that only a given speed could be attained on top gear, then seal the timing and by means of a lock nut or similar device, which could also be sealed, fasten the carburetter adjustment. The same man's services could then be retained as an Inspector who could anywhere and at any time examine the seals, and should it be found that they had been tampered with action against the Company would follow as a matter of course. Unfortunately speed in itself is not dangerous, only when rashly used does it become so and the remedy for rash driving has already been discussed in this column.

A NOTEWORTHY performance has just been put up by a firm of motor repairers which is rapidly making a name for itself locally. A car met with a rather bad accident, having been in collision with another, the result was a badly bent front axle, bent stub axle, slightly bent frame and head-lamp bracket, mudguard bent and broken, and head lamp hinged. The car in its damaged condition was delivered in the garage at 5 P.M. ; at 1 P.M. on the following day the repairs had been thoroughly executed, tested, and the car delivered at the owner's residence. This is certainly a step in the right direction and the firm concerned deserve the highest commendation for their rapidity and the example they have set, as there is a constant grumble amongst owners, and not without cause, at the dilatory manner in which repairs are usually carried out. With competition of this kind it seems that in the near future an owner will not be deprived of the use of his car for weeks over repairs which should be reasonably expected to be carried out in a few days.

THE following hint may be useful to those who experience difficulty in engine starting. On the contact breaker of most magnetos there is a moving arm which rocks on a short steel stud insulated by a short fibre sleeve. This stud frequently binds in the sleeve owing either to rust on the stud itself or swelling of the fibre sleeve due to heat or moisture. If the magneto is suspected the cap will be removed from the contact breaker and the arm given a twitch, when it will frequently be found to spring back correctly, but at the same time it is quite possible that it will not respond to the more gentle handling which it receives in ordinary working. Result loss of temper and a visit to the workshop. The simple remedy is to remove the arm carefully so as not to lose either spring or screws and then treat the stud gently with very fine emery cloth or enlarge the bore of the fibre sleeve with a fine rat tail file.

ON removing a cover recently which had been for a year on a wire wheel, a ring of rust spots was found throughout the whole circumference of each clinch, showing obviously that water had penetrated the rim through the spoke holes. The wheel was perfectly rigid under all ordinary tests, nevertheless road shocks under the weight of the car had evidently loosened the spokes in their holes sufficiently to allow the leakage. If this had gone on the clinches would soon have been rotted or eaten away by the rust. A good way to prevent this is to occasionally give the inner circumference of the rim, that is the side nearest the hub, a couple of coatings of good thick enamel.

NOW that the hot weather is once more with us a few words on the care of petrol may not be out of place. Many owners are compelled by various reasons to keep a stock of petrol by them and this is frequently stored in sheds which become exceedingly hot at this time of the year. It is well, therefore, to be watchful and inspect the petrol shed daily, as the heat causes a certain amount of expansion and sound tins under ordinary temperatures are apt to develop leaks in the summer. In addition to the loss of petrol, this is a source of considerable danger, as any carelessness in the use of lamps or matches is likely to end in a disastrous conflagration and explosion. Another point for the hot weather in India is the proper ventilation of the motor house. If tyres and paint as well as body work are to be preserved this is an important matter. In the first place any windows which face the sun, particularly those which receive its mid-day rays, should be shaded. The best plan is to have light shutters fitted or failing these, thick dark curtains of any material to exclude the light. This will greatly reduce the temperature, for exclusion of light means a consequent exclusion of heat to a great extent, and although the place may get hot it will still be cooler than a place with unprotected windows. Another factor in garage cooling is through ventilation—that is a continuous current of air passing straight through the buildings, but it is important in the use of this method to so construct the shutters as to prevent the entrance of rain during the Monsoons. If protected shutters be placed on opposite sides of the motor house—the shady and the sunny—it will be found that the difference of temperature between the two sides will induce a continuous air current, another simple application of the Thermo Syphon system.

MANY cars suffer from leaky gear boxes, by this I do not mean that the lubricant leaks from joints in the casing or from the cover but that during the running of the car, oil persistently exudes from the shaft bearings. The writer was once considerably puzzled by this complaint as in spite of the refitting of bearings, etc., the trouble remained the same. After considering the matter and looking for a cure for some time I tried fitting an air vent—similar to a crank-case breathing vent—in the lid of the gear-box and this met with immediate and complete success. This is the explanation. A gear-box filled to the proper level with lubricant and then closed up is airtight. Now it stands to reason that on the gear-box becoming hot from running the air expands and exerts considerable pressure on the surface of the oil, outlet must be found somewhere, so the line of least resistance is followed and the oil is forced along the shaft bearing. Care must be taken in fitting the vent not to have it immediately over a pinion as in that case it would soon become choked by the splash and rendered useless.

A TIP for the amateur with regard to removing a fixed wheel. I use the term fixed wheel advisedly and in opposition to the wire wheel and its kin. A wheel drawer is not supplied with every car having the so-called fixed wheel—for, of course, no wheel is fixed—so proceed in this manner. First remove the brass hub-cap, then draw the split pin which locks the axle nut which latter must in its turn be removed. If it is now found, as often happens, that the wheel sticks, try placing a small wooden block or packing in the hub-cap which must then be screwed on to the wheel in its original position. It will be readily understood, that the wooden block acts as a fulcrum and by preventing the hub-cap screwing right home, through contact with the stub axle, the wheel is so eased as to be withdrawn by hand. Care must be taken in adopting this method to see that the hub-cap is a substantial one and is not as sometimes happens turned so thin as to burst if used as directed. Again, be sure that the wood packing is not too thick to allow the cap to take a firm hold of the hub.

IT frequently happens that when the amateur attempts to change a tyre he finds the valve notch of the cover is some inches from its proper place, over the valve hole in the rim. The writer has seen and frequently sees apprentices and others struggling with a cover so displaced, trying to tug it back to the proper position. All this trouble could be avoided by placing in the rim valve hole an old valve, or a wooden dummy, when starting to fit the cover, then all that is necessary is to use ordinary care in rotating the wheel, during the fitting of the remainder of the cover, to prevent the check used from falling out.

MOTORING MEMS.

LONDON, Friday, 15th March 1912.

IT is all very well to talk of motorists not feeling the pinch of the present national coal strike at any rate if the question of travelling comes under consideration ; in theory it should be all right, in practice it is not so. Motorists all over the country have noticed with alarm the sudden and abnormal rise in the price of petrol owing to the coal strike. The price commenced to rise towards the end of February and increased each day, until at the time of writing petrol is quoted at about 1s. 8d. per gallon retail, with every prospect of going still higher. There can be no doubt that if this strike continues several of the larger companies dealing with petrol will experience a shortage owing to the difficulty of conveying it from the wharves. It is stated, however, that some of the principal London firms have large reserve stores on which they can draw to supply the Metropolis, but the chief difficulty will be experienced in circulating petrol over the country owing to the limited train service. Fortunately many motorists, profiting by the lesson taught by the recent carter's strike, had the forethought to lay in a good stock in case of emergencies. This strike I fancy will not affect motorists in India very much, for you have your own indigenous supply from Assam may have you not, or are you dependent on the Standard Oil Company of New York ?

A FEW statistics that show the use to which the new premises of the Royal Automobile Club have been put during the nine months ending 31st December last are exceedingly interesting. It appears that nearly 153,000 meals were served during that period, and 11,000 bedrooms were let. Swimmers in the magnificent swimming bath totalled 18,700, whilst 6,500 Turkish baths were given. Over 195,000 rounds were fired in the rifle range, and the squash racquet courts were let for more than 3,000 games. The total turnover of the Club for the year exceeded £270,000. Yet they tell me the place is likely to turn out a White Elephant unless something wonderful happens. In motoring as in most things now-a-days, amalgamation and combine are the watchwords of success. The A. A. and M. U. combination is a case in point and now that this powerful body is at daggers drawn with the R. A. C., it may be that ere long the latter organization will not feel quite so comfortable as its supporters hoped some eighteen months ago. News current.

IN the States, speed counts for a lot in selling a car, and a Chicago salesman is reported to have invented an ingenious dodge for impressing prospective purchasers with the speed properties of his wares. He knows a quiet bye-road where he takes his clients for a trial run, and there lets the car out until it is running at about 35 m.p.h. The car is then stopped by a constable who says he has timed the car doing 85 m.p.h. After a deal of wrangling he is bought off, and the car proceeds on its way, but not before the client has been thoroughly convinced of the "speed" of the car. The "constable" is of course, a disguised confederate of the salesman.

SURELY are the cases of advertisement, truly, and many go-ahead manufacturers have seized on the motor-car to effectively advertise their wares. The car with a representation of a huge tyre section and that of a recumbent bottle are familiar to us Londoners, but the latest, perhaps, hails from America. This device takes the form of a huge head mounted on a chassis, and is used as a delivery van. In the head's mouth is placed a cigar four feet long, and as the car proceeds the ends of the cigar smouldere and volumes of smoke are blown from the figure's mouth, the ears meanwhile wriggling to show enjoyment at the cigar's quality.

INDIAN tea planters who battle incessantly with the Green fly and various insect pests and fungoid growths ought to motor and encourage motoring round about their gardens. An English agricultural expert declares that the garden and farm pest, known as aphis, has at length been conquered by "motorcar dust." It was noted that the parasite was very prevalent last year save on dust covered vegetation close to the main roads. Experiments were tried of using road dust on affected plants, and the aphides were routed.

C.A.V. Colonial Accumulators.

C.A.V. colonial types of accumulators are as consistent, reliable and efficient as all other C.A.V. ignition fitments. They are specially suitable for use where charging stations and repair shops are few and far between. A prominent feature of C.A.V. colonial accumulators is that they retain their charge for a greater length of time than other types of accumulators. Hence their suitability to varying conditions. Not so long ago we in England constantly heard that road dust was doing a great deal of harm to vegetation, but now it would seem that road dust may be precious enough to put up into tins and sold as insecticide. Of course it must be genuine "motor-dust!" The exhaust gases, the high speed mixing and aeration of the dust, and the action of the rubber tyres give magical properties to the main road dust, one would suppose. Now in India you have enough dust on your roads, all you would appear to want is a sufficiency of motor car traffic to establish in the Shiny a real corner in the finest jât of "Kilburg mixture."

"METHOD" IN CAR SUPERVISION.—Even the latest convert to the ranks of motorists recognizes the necessity of an occasional tour of inspection about the various parts of the car. Inspection in itself while a sine qua non is not sufficient to fully determine the fitness of the car on all occasions. The motorist should observe a certain routine which will suggest itself by experience or preference, rather than make a random inspection which, while it may accomplish the desired end ninety-nine times out of a hundred, will be sure to result in the overlooking of some important detail sooner or later. A good method to pursue is to post a schedule on the wall of the building. Lubrication charts are generally furnished by the makers of the car with directions as to how often each part is to be lubricated and what sort of oil or grease to use. An ignition wiring diagram is also a valuable adjunct, and will aid the motorist to a large extent in his occasional survey of the ignition system. A list of parts which are apt to become clogged may be also made up and will consist of the petrol piping, water jacketing, radiator, carburettor, needle valve, etc. Leaks, knocks, and squeaks must be sought for and remedied as soon as they appear, always remembering that where a repair is of a temporary nature it should not be allowed to remain long without being replaced by a permanent one. After some experience has been gained the habit of methodical inspection will be deeply ingrained and the rapidity of the work will be markedly increased.

The Naturalist.

A MONTH'S BIRDNESTING IN INDIA.

BIRDNESTING is a fascinating hobby all the world over. Life in India however, would seem to leave little room for it among the counter-attractions of clubs, games and society, and so it was with me for many years after my arrival in that country.

Then there came a period when a spell of ample leisure succeeded a time of over-work. I found myself out of sorts and unable to play any game with accuracy or satisfaction to myself, and the general company of my fellow men became a burden to me. I craved for solitude. Shooting would have been my best antidote, but the season was practically at an end.

Then it was that the idea came to me to try and see if I could get to know a modest something about the Indian small birds. A penchant in me for birdnesting dated back to my early youth, when, I remember, I created something like a domestic revolution by declaring for it to the utter neglect of stamp-collecting, a hobby with which my parents, with view to improving my mind, had tried to set me up.

I secured a single congenial friend, whom I managed to infect with some of my own enthusiasm, and we took to our new pursuit with all the keenness of two school-boys, birdnesting for a typical month of the Indian breeding season, namely, three weeks of April and one of May, in one of the large stations of the Central Punjab.

The following is a record of our results: we made the acquaintance of the Purple Flower Pecker, a dainty little creature with a voice as loud for its size as an English Wren's, first attracted by the sight of the male bird hunting on the wing for something under the cornice of a wall. What was he doing, we wondered, whose traffic was generally with the sweets of flowers? We watched with our glasses and the secret was out. He was collecting cobwebs with which to decorate the outside of his nest, a quaint little elfin structure, built like a purse, four or five inches long with a door in the side and a little porch over it, the whole felted of bents and hair and wool. It was hung, the little nest, with an apparent disregard to publicity in a Purple flowered Bougainvinea bush. But it is only the eye of special interest that will distinguish it from a chance conglomeration of rubbish, with such care to deceive is the outside finished off with the powder of decayed wood, scraps of paper and any other tiny scraps of rubbish that will adhere to the cobweb dressing.

We found, in a shady garden, placed in the drooping branches of a pear tree, the dainty cup of the Paradise Fly-Catcher, that exquisite little species with the long lyre-shaped feathers in his tail, whose mature males exchange an uniform of white for the bright chestnut which, in the females and young males earns them the popular name of the "Rocket bird."

Hard by, in a Mango tree, his cousin the White-Browed Fantail Fly-Catcher had built, an engaging little bird, black spotted with white, flirting his tail in anger at our intrusion and snapping his beak at us valourously in defence of his nest.

In the same garden the Indian White Eye had slung a tiny hammock, like a miniature Oriole's nest, between two twigs in a branch five feet from the ground, and we found three tiny pale blue eggs.

The Swallows made an interesting family. The Swifts in their nest-colony in the roof of the spiral staircase of a large public building already had young; the Wire-tailed Swallow was starting to build among the rafters of the open dressing-rooms of a disused swimming bath, and the Mosque Swallows, who, true to their name, had taken possession of the domed roof of a tiny tomb on the Canal Bank already had a family to bring up.

The little Green Bee-Eaters, whose appearance is the first sign of the approach of the hot weather, were excavating their nest holes, monuments of energy for birds so slightly equipped for mining, at the beginning of our month, and by the end of April they had full clutches of round white eggs, resting among the debris of innumerable wing-cases belonging to the insects brought by the parent birds for food.

Another familiar hole-builder was the White-breasted Kingfisher, that gaily garbed species that seems to have almost exchanged for good aquatic for terrestrial habits. For many a day the cheery cry of the birds had rung loudly in our ears at a certain spot and we had looked diligently for their house and home. A countryman had told us they used to nest "in the sides of a dry well." For this well we searched in vain, little wonder when we learned subsequently that it had been filled up. But at last we surprised the bird one morning, and, in a bank adjoining the original well, the nest was found.

Three of the Dove family came within our ken, the common Brown Dove, tumbling out of a bush with an admirable imitation of a broken wing to decoy us from his eggs; the Ring Dove, and the handsome Bronze Winged Dove, the owner of a voice that sharply distinguishes him from his commoner congeners.

The birds of prey in India nest mainly in the winter months, October to March. We found, however, late nests of the common kite, and the White Scavenger Vulture. The latter species, we were glad to find, redeems the opprobium which attaches to his habits by the beauty of his red-brown eggs, whose colour, be it noted, washes off in water.

For the Shikra and the White Eyed Buzzard we were well in the season. Very devoted to his nest is the last named bird, whistling plaintively round you and frequenting the spot even if all the eggs be taken.

With the Warblers we were not very lucky. The Tailor Bird, however, that ingenious little artist, who, as Macaulay's school boy knows, sews leaves together to make his nest, is very common in the Punjab, and we found his nest by watching among latifoliate shrubs for any leaves growing near the ground, the edges of which showed the stitch-holes made by the bird. At last our search was rewarded by the discovery of one specimen of this bird's skill, complete, but not yet containing eggs. One other species only, the streaked Wren Warbler, did we run to earth, finding his delicate little nest, dome-shaped with the hole very near the top, and its complement of four pink brown-spotted eggs in a big tuft of jungle grass, close to the ground.

The Large Crested Lark we saw building on the 22nd of March, and gave him a week in which to complete his work and lay. But in the interval came heavy rain and the little nest, whose place we had marked so carefully, had disappeared in a sea of yellow mud.

The Grey Babblers, large and small, most interesting birds, common though they are, both had eggs early in April. The bigger species are gregarious, a habit which the common English name for them, "The Seven Sisters," well hits off, and they can be seen hopping and chattering socially in any hedge-row. No nest is commoner than that of the smaller species, a furtive little creature that hops in and out of the bushes crying plaintively as you approach. Both birds have glossy blue-green eggs.

The first pair we found of the Punjab Red-Vented Bulbuls, members of a family of birds that have eggs most beautifully spotted with rich claret and crimson-lakes on a pink ground, had selected the drooping branches of a Tamarisk tree.

Further on, in the same line of Tamarisks the Indian spotted Woodpecker was feeding a family of young ones.

Many nests we found of the Common Indian Robin, a delightful little dark-coloured bird with a brown back and a white band in his wing. The first was placed in a niche in the wall of an abandoned dwelling-house on the verge of the Golf Links.

We had noticed a pair of Brown Rockchats very active in the neighbourhood of a high building still in process of construction. Search revealed the nest high up and almost inaccessible in the roof, full of hungry young birds, though April was not half gone.

In the same building we found another nest, with young birds in it, namely, that of the Indian Hoopoe, a bird who much discounts the smartness of his appearance by the squalor of his domestic arrangements.

A fortunate journey to the Canal Bank one morning gave us three new nests. Two of them, namely, those of the Spotted Owlet and Common Indian Roller, were situated in almost identical positions, namely, in holes in old Tamarisks, a tree which is a boon surely to every Indian feathered troglodyte. Each contained four white eggs of almost identical appearance.

But for the fact that we saw the bird leave the hole in each case we should have been puzzled to identify nests and eggs. And in this we counted ourselves lucky, for the Roller is a wily bird, who never allows himself to be seen going to or coming from his nest if he can help it. The third nest, completed but still innocent of eggs, was that of the Plain Brown Munia, a first cousin of the Java Sparrow, and was a large and somewhat untidy ball of grass with a hole in the side, set in a thorn bush.

Another interesting discovery was the nest of the small Minivet, a beautiful little bird, scarlet and black and white, that rivals the English Chaffinch for neatness as an architect and beats him for compactness, his tiny cleverly-felted structure being generally fixed in the fork of an Acacia, and only just big enough for the bird to sit on rather than in.

A day later, not far from the spot, we found in a thorny tree the cream and brown-mottled eggs of the Red-backed Shrike, cousin to the Minivet.

The Night Heron, building its nest, with its delicate green eggs, in the high trees above a piece of ornamental water, completed our list.

Thirty species in all we had found within the short period of a month and inside a radius of only two to three miles from our station, and we were very well content.

THE Shop-keeper. "Well, sonny, what do you want?"

The small Boy: "'Arf a pound o' yeller soap, please, and muvver says will you please wrap it up in a good love story."

Jinks: "To-day I pleased a pretty woman by telling her that a certain, red-faced, snub-nosed, bald-headed mortal looked like her."

Winks: "Get out!"

Jinks: "The red-faced, snub-nosed, bald-headed mortal was her baby."

FATHER (to lazy schoolboy home for the holidays): "Late again, Tom! Now when I was your age, I once found a purse lying in the road at seven o' clock in the morning—and all from getting up early."

Tom: "Well, sir, the man who lost it got up earlier."

MUSEUMS AND THE SUFFRAGETTES.

Owing to the disorderly proceedings of a few score or a few hundreds of wild women in the fashionable thoroughfares of the metropolis of the empire, the authorities of the British Museum and of its Natural History Branch in the Cromwell Road felt themselves compelled on Monday, 4th March, to close both these establishments to the public till further notice. This is the first time that the British Museum has closed its doors on account of popular disturbance since the Chartist riots of 1848 (the Natural History Museum was not then in existence) ; and it is nothing less than a disgrace to our boasted civilisation that it has been compelled to do so on the present occasion.

On the morning of the aforesaid Monday both Museums were opened as usual at 10 A.M., but some time after 11 intelligence was received at the Natural History Museum that the suffragettes had been smashing windows at Harrod's stores and other commercial establishments in Knightsbridge, and an hour or so later the Museum authorities received official warning that a raid was contemplated on that establishment.

Wisely considering that in such matters discretion is the better part of valour, the authorities at once decided to close the doors ; and about 1-30 the public were requsted to leave the building.

The adjacent Victoria and Albert Museum had closed its doors a little earlier ; and some of the other public exhibitions in the metropolis were not long in following suit. Indeed the loan collection of old Masters is stated to have closed its doors for the season, as any chance of damage to a priceless collection like this, which is the property of private individuals, could not, of course, be contemplated for a moment.

The Victoria and Albert reopened its doors in the course of Wednesday, 6th ; but only on condition that all female visitors should divest themselves at the entrance of umbrellas, parasols, muffs, stoles, hand bags, and other impedimenta. The British and the Natural History Museums remained, however, closed throughout the day ; and on enquiry in the evening at the latter institution we were informed that no instructions had been received with respect to reopening.

In view of the warning they received, it is quite clear that the authorities were doing only what was an act of common prudence in shutting out the public ; as the damage which the wild women could do by concerted action in a few moments to the glass cases (to say nothing of the specimens), more especially in the Natural History Museum, would be enormous ; the staff being quite insufficient to admit of each case being watched.

In the case of the British Museum there is a special statute imposing very heavy penalties on persons damaging specimens ; and this probably applies also to the Natural History Branch. Whether, however, it embraces in its scope damage to the cases in which they specimens are contained, we are not aware.

That the public, who visit both Museums by the hundred every day, should be excluded owing to the mad action of a comparative handful of wild women who desire to obtain a privilege for which they are obviously quite unfitted, is neither more nor less than a scandal. And it is equally shameful that if women are admitted, it should only be by the degradation of being compelled to divest themselves of their loose belongings.

The difficulty, however, is how to prevent the possibility of outrages of this nature. Now that the police-magistrates are taking to giving sentences of two months hard to many of the women who have inflicted damage under the value of five pounds, while it may be expected that heavier sentences will follow in the case of those who have been committed for trial on account of higher damage, it may be that the suffragettes will begin to think that the game is not worth the candle.

Moreover, the prosecution which had just been commenced against the leaders of the movement may, if it succeed, have good results ; but if not, it is difficult to see what measures will have to be taken. Making the penalty excessively severe would obviously be a false move, as it would tend to induce juries not to convict and judges not to use the full powers entrusted to them.

Corporal punishment has been suggested ; and it is reported that a suffragette who broke the window of a dairy establishment in South Kensington was hauled inside there and then, and summarily "spanked" by the enraged manager. Served her right ! will no doubt be the general verdict ; but, after all, such methods are really methods of barbarism, and are not likely to commend themselves to the general public.

And here we may refer to a curious belief on the part of the suffragettes in a kind of sacro-sanctity attaching to their own precious persons. For if, when engaged in smashing other person's property, a civilian presumes to lay a restraining hand on one of them he is promptly asked how he dare touch her, and that she "will have the law of him." Fortunately they have been told pretty plainly that it is the bounden duty of every law-abiding civilian to arrest, without warrant or process, every law breaker he comes across red-handed.

That much of the suffragette rioting may be attributed to the lawlessness that has been preached in high quarters can scarcely be doubted. And the most hopeful sign of the times in this respect is the recent election at Manchester, which may be taken as an augury that the country is getting heartily sick of the present state of affairs and that ere long we may have a government whose first principle will be the enforcement of law and order, and of respect for property, coupled, it may be hoped, with reasonable economy in financial matters.

THE CONQUEST OF THE SOUTH POLE.

It seems to be generally accepted that Captain Amundsen has followed Commander Peary's example of planting the Stars and Stripes of America at the North Pole, by raising the flag of Norway at the South Pole But what of Captain Scott, the British explorer, who was expected to reach it at about the same time as the Scandinavian ? In the absence of any news regarding the latter, Captain Amundsen has been given the credit of the conquest, but there is still slight hope that Captain Scott may have reached the goal first.

Captain Amundsen's story of his success adds something valuable to the total of human knowledge contributed by Captain Scott's previous expedition in 1902 and Sir Ernest Shackleton's dash seven years later, about the land, ice-covered seas and mountains of the Far South.

In brief, in describing his arrival at the goal of his endeavour, the leader of the Fram expedition tells of an icy waste about which he circled for three days, taking hourly observations to confirm the belief that he had indeed reached his objective. Then he recites how he raised the flag of Norway and the pennant of the Fram on this waste and called it King Haakon's plateau.

Then his story, after detailing fatiguing marches over snow and ice-covered wastes, tells of exhausting climbs of ice-capped mountains, the establishment of ten depots at various stages of the journey, where seal meat and pemmican were cached, the loss of 80 of his 104 dogs and the sufferings from intense cold of himself and the four men who accompanied him in his final dash to the Pole.

The chief results of the expedition, according to Captain Amundsen's own contention, were the determination of character and lengths of the Ross Barrier, the discovery of the probable connection between Victoria Land and King Edward Land and their continuation in great mountains running for 850 kilometres towards the south-east as far as 88 degrees south, which, he says, probably continues across the Antarctic Continent.

Captain Amundsen declares also that the expedition to King Edward Island achieved excellent results ; that Captain Scott's discoveries were confirmed—this is a strong positive note in the narrative—and that he is bringing a good geological collection from King Edward and South Victoria Lands. He describes his return from the Pole as a pleasure trip, and says that on 16th January the Japanese expedition arrived in the Bay of Whales, near his winter quarters, and ends a long despatch by announcing that all on the Fram, which, he declares, penetrated farther south than any other vessel, are well.

Captain Amundsen left Norway in August 1910. His destination, as everyone supposed, was the North Polar basin, where he was to investigate oceanographic conditions. He laid his plans before the Geographical Society of Norway in November 1908, and before the British Royal Geographical Society a year later.

It was not until October 1910 that a letter written by him from Madeira gave any indication that he was southward bound. A little later a telegram from Buenos Ayres stated that Captain Amundsen had actually left for the Bay of Whales on the Antarctic Barrier. It is from this point that he made the southward dash from which he has just returned.

In addition to the Terra Nova, headed by Captain Scott, of whom his countrymen are so anxious for news, there are three other expeditions still engaged in Antarctic exploration. They are those of Dr. Mawson, Lieutenant Filchner and the Japanese, the latter of which Captain Amundsen refers to as having arrived in the Bay of Whales in January. Lieutenant Filchner (German) left Bremerhaven, 7th May 1911, and Buenos Ayres for Weddell Sea on board the Deutschland 4th October 1911. He has attacked the Antarctic from the side opposite to that explored by Sir Ernest Shackleton, Captain Scott and Captain Amundsen.

Dr. Mawson, on board the Aurora, left Hobart (Tasmania), on 2nd December 1911. Dr. Mawson, who accompanied Sir Ernest Shackleton on his expedition in 1909, was in London in the spring of 1911, and his ship the Aurora only left West India Docks on 27th July of last year.

Lieutenant Shirase, who leads the Japanese expedition, after an unsuccessful start, spent most of last summer at Sydney and eventually made another start for the Pole on the Kainan Maru in the early autumn.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

If a very felicitous speech made by H.E. Lord Carmichael at a recent dinner at a certain well-known Club in Calcutta may be taken as any indication, this sporting province has indeed obtained a man after her own heart and one who holds views about sport that are diametrically opposed to those of the Governor of its less favoured western sister. The racing correspondent of our respected contemporary the Statesman has put forward the suggestion that the time is opportune for the C.T.C. to approach the Government for sanction for a steeplechase course in Calcutta and with this suggestion we entirely concur. H.E. has already declared himself the enemy of Red Tape and it has only been the meshes of this troublesome material that have hitherto hampered the C.T.C. in carrying forward a scheme that they have long recognised as necessary. Good as the Tollygunge steeplechase course is in many ways there is a pressing need for a course closer in if steeplechasing is to be saved from extinction in this part of the world. On almost every Indian race-course of any importance, with the exception of Bombay, a steeplechase course inside the flat course is an adjunct and there would therefore seem to be no reason why Calcutta, the principal centre and the head-quarters of racing in India, should be denied a similar convenience. As things are at present we have only two days' steeplechasing during the whole year with perhaps a dozen steeplechases all told, for which, as a rule, and certainly of recent years, very poor fields have been obtained. The reason is surely not far to seek when we look at the large number of opportunities an owner has of running his horse on the flat! More jump races and more opportunities of finding employment for the steeplechaser would automatically result in an increase in the species. At present the C.T.C. can do no more than manage to keep Tollygunge on its legs, and if that popular racing resort is to be saved from the fate which would seem to be threatening it, the only possible remedy must be applied, namely, by obtaining a course in Calcutta over which steeplechases can be run at the Calcutta Meetings and we concur in the belief that there would not now be much difficulty in obtaining the sanction of the Government of Bengal under whose direct control this Presidency now is, for the very small amount of construction necessary to give us a very excellent jump course inside the present race-course. Sanction has already been accorded the C.T.C. for the three schooling fences now erected on the course and it would only be necessary to put up another three fences to give us every facility for a very good 2½-mile chase course with ten fences. At Tollygunge in the 2½-mile chases there are only eleven obstacles to be crossed and, though ten is short measure, it would be better than none at all. There are now three fences alongside the Old Straight, i.e., from the 1 mile post to the ½ mile turn. There is ample room for two more in the straight run from the ½ mile to the winning post, and there is also plenty of room for another obstacle somewhere near the third flight of hurdles on the Monsoon Hurdle race-course. Starting down at the mile post or even opposite the 1¼ mile post and going twice round there is plenty of distance. In the cold weather the steeplechasers would have to finish on the flat course, but this would surely not be a matter at all difficult of arrangement, as it is done on many other courses all over the world and the last obstacle at that time of the year could easily be made of a removable order, as it is not at all difficult to build a plain flying obstacle on the lines of a glorified edition of the sturdy bushed hurdles over which we at present race. It would, however, be a very admirable plan to make a trial trip during the coming Monsoon season and the obtaining of the necessary sanction will, we feel certain, be the least of the difficulties in the way.

Major Moore, 27th Light Cavalry, at present at Jubbulpore, is coming down to Calcutta for the Monsoon Meetings with a few horses principally jumpers.

Oakley, trainer to H.H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, is this year summering his horses and ponies in Behar instead of in Darjeeling, which is not the best place on earth for a big horse and is a bit too risky for mettlesome racehorses. Including some that are about to be sent to him and those he already has Oakley will have a very useful little string for the Monsoons and amongst his lot will probably be Fidelio, Make Haste III., Pyers Mostyn, First Bell, Eileen, Tod, Coin II. and the jumpers Blue Light, The Priory II. and Frank. Oakley has some excellent stables and a private exercising course near Shahpore, Patooria, T. S. R., and he is open to take a few more horses, so he tells us. The Behar climate agrees excellently with horses and we hear that both Fidelio and Make Haste III. are doing well and looking as bright as new guineas.

Kuhn, who has been light-weight jockey to Sir A. A. Apear's stable for two seasons, has, we hear, severed his connection and will probably ride for one of the Bombay stables next season.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven, a steward of the C.T.C., left for home by last mail. Captain J. Gourlie left early this week and will be at home about five months. On his return Captain Gourlie makes over charge of the adjutantcy of the Calcutta Light Horse, which he has held for the last three years with such credit to himself and advantage to the corps.

Pressy, Greenware and Warrayure, late the property of "Mr. Lauder" have been sold by that owner to make room for some new ones that he is probably getting out from home very shortly. "Mr. Lauder" has a very useful horse in Kilmarnock as has already been proved to demonstration and Whin, who is by Common out of Chincherry out of Cherry by Sterling out of Cherry Duchess, is also a bit more than useful if she continues to show the improvement she did last season. Both these were selected by Mr. J. A. Longmuir, who was much gratified by the successes they achieved during the past cold weather racing season.

Lah, Captain Gourlie's gelding, has been sold to Singapore and there is a report that Wise Hawk may possibly follow him there.

H.H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala has sent home a commission for a horse good enough class to win the Viceroy's Cup and it is said that he has given his commissioner the ample margin of £2,000. At the same time horses "for India" are by no means easy to buy, as sellers have an exaggerated and erroneous idea of the riches of the Orient and since the recent successes of English horses have been putting up their prices. The beginning of the flat racing season is also about the worst possible time to go into the market, and Indian owners would find it far more economical to obtain their next season's requirements at the back-end rather than at the commencement of the English racing season. H.H. the Kour Sahib has had bad luck with the two best horses he has recently bought—Capture by Cyllene out of Kore, the brilliant four-year-old who broke down, and with Cattaro (Carbine—Gandaretta) who had earned the rogue's badge long before he came to India and has never done any good for himself since he has been here; so that we trust that H.H.'s next venture will prove to be more fortunate. Bull's Run and Hamara are not class enough for first-class races in India and have not improved since they have been in this country.

Saxonite by Sir Tristram out of Carronade has been purchased by Mr. J. D. Scott for one of his patrons. Saxonite, who is a gelding and a very good stayer with plenty of pace besides, dead-heated with Prize Fighter in the last Australian Cup run on the 5th March and also won the 1 mile 5 furlongs Autumn Plate at the V.R.C. Meeting on the 7th March. On the first day of the V.R.C. Meeting he ran sixth in the Essenden Stakes, 1½ miles, behind Trafalgar 9st. 3lb, Comedy King 9st., Cadonia 9st., Prize Fighter 9st. and Matouree 9st. 3lb., his own weight having been 9st. In the Australian Cup, 2¼ miles, his weight was 7st. 8lb., and Prize Fighter had 8st., Flavian 7st. 13lb., half a length away, and the favourite, Eye Glass, an English horse, 8st. 7lb. It is said in the accounts of the race that Eye Glass was unlucky not to have won and that R. Lewis did not ride him a good race. Nevertheless the form that Saxonite had behind him was good enough, as Flavian ran up on the last Caulfield Cup to Lady Medallist and in that race Aurofodina was third, so that there is no doubt about the merit of the performance, especially as all those he met or at any rate most of them, have been winning and running forward lately. Someone usually has to be blamed when a hot favourite is beaten and they usually either blame the jockey or find an excuse for the horse. In the Essenden Stakes, already refered to, they say that Saxonite was coming up hand over fist at the finish and was well with the bunch at the end of the race, and some of the critics seem to think that he ought to have been much closer up. In the Autumn Plate he beat Eye Glass, who had 9st. 3lb., Saxonite's weight having been 8st. 8lb., so that he was only meeting the Australian Cup favourite on 4lb. worse terms and this would seem to say that even if Eye Glass had had everything in his favour in the latter race Saxonite would probably have got there all the same. In the Autumn Handicap Obi, 7st. 4lb., was second, Flavel 8st. 14lb., third, and Eye Glass 9st. 3lb., fourth. Saxonite started favourite and short-headed Obi. They say that he is possessed of a great dash of foot at the end of a long race and that he is a real genuine stayer.

On his breeding Saxonite certainly ought to stay well as he gets Musket on the dam's side and Bend Or-Galopin in the sire's pedigree. Sir Tristram is by Bend Or out of Angola out of Angelica, a full sister to St. Simon by Galopin out of St. Angela. Macheath, the sire of Angola, is by Macaroni out of Heather Bell by Stockwell. Heather Bell was out of Tightfit by Teddington out of the daughter of Gladiator. Macheath is by Macaroni by Sweetmeat by Gladiator, who was the grandsire of Gladiateur on the dam's side (Miss Gladiator).

It is said that an offer of 6,000 guineas for Hornet's Beauty from Bombay was recently refused, as the owner wanted 8,000 guineas; and yet in spite of Hornet's Beauty's fine record last year he only once bumped up against really good form and beat it, namely, in the Trial Stakes at Ascot in which with 7st. 8lb. he beat Mustapha 9st., Dean Swift 8st. 7lb., Nerestan 6st. 11lb., Sunspot 8st. 8lb. and Oasis 7st. 5lb. and on that occasion he won in a canter by four lengths. But most of his other victories were not against the absolute best. There cannot be much the matter with him as regards his soundness if they refused a good offer such as this and we have it upon good authority that it was a perfectly genuine bid. They look a long way ahead at home and though Mahsud was the stable's best at the back end of last season and beat Hornet's Beauty in the Cambridgeshire trial, they may have very different ideas about things this year. However the Indian offer was treated with contumely!

Mr. W. Kenworthy of the 33rd Cavalry and owner of Sholto, etc., etc., has been appointed Adjutant of His Excellency Lord Carmichael's Body-guard and will be a great acquisition to the local turf and also to the ranks of the G.R's.

A sky race meeting will probably be held at Bangalore about the middle of June, before the Mysore week which begins on the 28th of that month.

There is a strong rumour that there will be no race meetings in Poona this year. The Western India Turf Club have rejected the proposal of Government to make the new license binding for five years, though they are prepared, however, to sign a license for one year, abolish book-makers for that period and give totalisators a fair trial. If these proposals are not accepted it is stated that there will be no racing at Poona this year.

Scotland's victory over England in the last of the purely British Rugby internationals of the season, which deprived the latter of the mythical triple crown, came as a great surprise, but the "Thistles" thoroughly deserved their victory for they played their greatest game of recent years.

In three seasons they had only won one match, but they left no doubt about the one at Inverleith. They triumphed through the virtues of their forwards and through the unquestionable weakness of the English van and centre three-quarter backs.

Behind a pack who were well beaten, J. G. G. Birkett and R.W. Poulton might have declared that they had not many chances, but the cause for complaint against them was that they did not make the best of their comparatively rare opportunities. Birkett was very slow; Poulton too often ran into difficulties while his fellows looked on.

But early in the game England had bad luck when J. A. King broke a rib. Up to the time of his departure his side had done badly, and did badly the game through, but the absence of the plucky little Yorkshire captain was to be lamented. There were times when he would have been invaluable to England, whose forwards had to do more work than was their due. And yet the forwards were off their game. They were not to be compared with the Scots who played as though their lives depended upon the result.

The home country had introduced a new forward into the side in C. M. Usher, of the Royal Navy. He was one of the great successes of the game, and, for his strong work, should, as he is available, be chosen for many a long day to come. He is of the best Merchiston Castle type, which has been rare in Scottish forward lines of late years, but which should surely be seen after the school's championship success of this season.

England have done well this time; yet they have not done well enough. The patent weakness has been at centre three-quarter back. Hope has been held against hope—but the results have been bad. In another year, if not another match—for the French game should be used by way of one trial—surely other centres will be tested. Birkett has had his day, and Poulton has yet to play his first really great international game.

Scotland should do much better in another season. It would seem that the lean years are coming to an end, and that if some common sense is only used in the construction of the team the men should do famously in 1913. It seems remarkable that a forward like Usher and a right wing combination like that of W. Burnett and W. R. Sutherland should have been delayed until the last match of the campaign. There is a lot more football in the two Border players than has been shown by some men tried in recent years. Though beaten by Wales, Scotland share the bottom position with the former a rather quaint station for the Principality. It is long time since they last occupied it.

The terms of peace between those athletic bodies of Great Britain, the National Cyclist's Union, and the Amateur Athletic Association, contained in the agreement that has been arrived at between them are fair, and appear well calculated to secure British athletics from any recurrence of the chaos of the past two years. Analysis of the new agreement reduces the points of difference between it and the one of the spring of 1910 to a clearer limitation of the powers of each side in matters of possible dispute, and to a provision which makes it necessary for either party practically to give the other nine months notice of any intention to terminate the new agreement. If this latter proviso had been attached to the 1889 document the split would not have taken place, for those whose interests were made the buffer of the antagonists would have taken concerted action to prevent a rupture, and would have had the time necessary to have compelled peace—very much as they have compelled it now.

The N. C. U., it will be remembered, alleged that their racing men had had grievances that were hung up by the A .A. A. local official to an extent which compelled the Union to demand some direct power of offence against these people when their delay or refusal to see justice done was fictitious. Their proposed remedy was the issue of free permits by both sides to the affiliated clubs of the other.

That form is not given effect to in the settlement, but the possibility of a recurrence of the old grievance is removed by specially providing in Clause 12 that all complaints against clubs of this kind shall be dealt with forthwith by a local committee consisting of two members of each body. That is a simple, and it ought to be a radical, cure if sportsmen really desire to work in amity for the good of sport with each other. Another difference is, in the inclusion of the clause stipulating that no purely cycling club will be accepted by the A. A. A. unless first affiliated with the N. C. U., and vice versa. The reason for that is not very clear from the circumstances, but it is a highly commendable provision, taking for complete control on both sides. There are other additions all for the same purpose and, quite apart from forming the basis of peace, the new treaty is a much more satisfactory one than the old.

The final round of the Junior Polo Tournament at Lahore brought together the 37th Lancers and the 10th Lancers. It was not a particularly brilliant game, the 10th eventually winning owing to their better shooting and superior combination. They scored 4 times and the 37th only once; the final score being 10th (+½) 4½ goals to 1. Teams:—10th Lancers: D. O. Lamb, Captain Foster, E. C. Bradyll, Captain Peters. 37th Lancers: Captain Paterson, Major Loring, Captain Lucas, Captain Temple.

The Punjab Commission Cup Cricket Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Lahore last week, when the 17th Lancers beat the Manchester Regiment by 71 runs and thus carried off the Cup for the second year in succession.

Six teams have entered for the Novices Polo tournament which began at Bangalore on the 8th instant. They are 6th Hussars B team, 7th Hussars B team, 7th Dragoon Guards, 20th Deccan Horse, Mysore Imperial Service Lancers, and the Jamkhandi team. One match was played on Monday, the 7th Dragoon Guards outplaying the Mysore Imperial Lancers and defeating them by 4 goals to 1. The same evening the handicap tournament was also begun when the 7th Hussars met the Bangalore Gymkhana. The 7th had a handicap of 12 and the Gymkhana 7. The Hussars scored 5 goals to 1 and won the match. The only other entry was the Sappers team who met the Hussars on Tuesday, the 7th winning easily by 9 goals to 2. In the Novices' tournament on Tuesday the 20th Deccan Horse were to have met the 7th Hussars B team but the latter scratched.

Twenty teams have entered for the Aga Khan Hockey Tournament which began at Bombay on the 9th instant, when the Byculla Educational School Old Boys met the Cheshire Regiment (cup holders). The game was well contested in the first half, the Cheshires scoring from a penalty hit. In the second moiety the soldiers had the upper hand but were only able to score a single goal. They thus won by 2 to nil.

The final match of the Ladies' Doubles Lawn Tennis Tournament at the Bombay Gymkhana ended in a win for Mrs. Darley and Miss Pike (+15) who defeated Miss Froom and Mrs. Luke (—30) in two sets. Mrs. Darley and Miss Pike were rather let in on their handicap and won easily.

The Madras vs. Ootacamund cricket match played at Ooty during the holidays has ended in a draw. Madras batted first and made 135. Then Ooty went in and after scoring 402 for eight wickets declared. In their second innings Madras made a great stand and put together 360 runs. This left Ooty 95 runs to make and 25 minutes to do it in. At the close of play they had lost seven wickets in scoring 85 and the match was thus drawn. Details will appear in our next issue.

Mr. Basil Foster, all-comers' winner, has secured the amateur singles racquets championship of England, Baerlein not defending his title.

Interviewed by the representative of a Colombo newspaper while in the Ceylon capital last week Syd. Gregory, Captain of the Australian team now on their way to England, expressed his opinion of the colonials. He said they were a great team, full of infinite possibilities, young, enthusiastic, and in fielding the finest Australia has sent out. He thought they would make a great fight to win back the "ashes" and had hopes that they would come out on top. "Good fielding," he said, "makes moderate bowling first class, and as I told you our fielding is our strongest point and our bowling, which is quite as good as anything that has been seen recently in England, will then be rendered doubly effective." When asked "who were their best batsmen?" he replied, "You have all heard of Bardsley. Well he ought to do better than he did last time when he scored over 2,000 runs. Then Claude, Jennings, Macartney, Mayne, Minnett, Hazzlitt, Matthews, not to mention myself should get some runs in England; no, we are fairly strong in batting and we won't let the side down on that score. I shall not touch on the recent "difficulties" in Australia but merely tell you that the present team is the best available side that is capable of doing anything. The majority are quite young but not inexperienced. We shall surprise many critics when we get going and I hope we shall silence them."

With regard to the Australian defeats in the recent test matches he said that the English team played far better cricket and deserved to win. A pair like Barnes and Foster are not met with every day. Hobbs is the best bat in the world and as a cover point peerless. The Australians were fairly and squarely beaten, but their turn would come soon. "It will then be Young Australia versus England, and I doubt whether the former will take a second place. Honestly I am delighted with the task of captaining this fine side. In the tests we shall have Macartney at mid off, Bardsley in the outfield, Hazzlitt in the slips, Matthews extra cover or in the deep field, Mayne point and besides in Roy, Minnett and myself at cover we haven't bad men. Carkeek is exceedingly good behind the wickets and a fair bat, and MacLaren and Kelleway can field well. We have had many hard things said of us, but the end of the season will refute much of these sweeping assertions."

Between 5,000 and 6,000 people watched a most exciting battle at the Sydney Stadium on the 16th ultimo when Sam McVea and Jimmy Barry were in opposition.

Though Barry was known to be a "plucked 'un," and a good deal of an iron man as far as capacity for punishment went, few expected him to live the full time (20 rounds) with that past master in skill, Sam McVea.

The colored boxer stood up in better shape than in his previous appearances in Australia and his white antagonist looked and proved to be trained to the hour.

Despite that Sam McVea rose above himself, and probably fought the battle of his life, he did not handle Barry as cleverly as Sam Langford dealt with the same boxer little more than a month ago. May be the explanation is that Barry has improved, and that he stripped in better condition for all close to him know the climate of this country has built Barry up so that if he could be sprung upon America at the present moment he would appear an altogether new man over there.

Round town all the week there was some betting on the quiet, and those who looked for it were able to get as much as 10 to 1 that McVea would win. Layers of the odds could not have felt at all comfortable when McVea was sent down in the third round. A long-range swung right to the ear was responsible for the mischief. McVea skipped away when he saw the blow coming, but it arrived quicker than he expected, and just caught him with his feet off the ground. The black flopped to his haunches, one hand on the floor to save the force of the fall, and resumed the perpendicular before Mr. Timekeeper Kerr had told off four seconds.

Barry's work, as a rule, was wild, and badly timed, but here and there he landed some heavy punches, and always forced the excitement of the contest, McVea very properly preferring to call up all he knew in skill rather than mix it with such a combination of gameness and toughness as that opposed to him.

Often when at close work the devil in McVea's fighting was shown; he used his right more than Sydney had previously seen him bring it to bear, with the result that Barry's left eye suffered a good deal, but his right optic evidenced no signs of the heat and fury of battle. Yet there were people who claimed that McVea's sinister weapon was responsible for the condition of Sam Langford's right eye in the Boxing Day duel between the two colored men, when, as a fact, a clashing of heads caused the trouble.

Often in the contest, as Barry "smothered" while stooped and rushing to close quarters, McVea got in a good deal of effective work with left and right upwards jolts, but they did not all make contact with anything other than the bony elbows and forearms of the other fellow.

McVea missed many wide openings as one of his skill should never have done, and mostly through those frequent out-of-distance swings with right or left which Barry vainly endeavoured to land.

The colored man smiled a good deal, but the white boxer never did; he always appeared impressed with the seriousness of the situation, and now and again compelled McVea to completely change his expression.

Not once did the black look like loosing, and never in any round was he behind on points, yet there was always much to hold attention, and everything to justify the opinion vented generally afterwards that a most exciting battle had taken place.

The return encounter between Langford and McVea took place at Sydney on Easter Monday and news reaches us over the wires that the match went the full scheduled twenty rounds, Langford winning on points—thereby reversing the last decision.

The betting at the start was 10 to 9 on McVea, but after the third round veered to 5 to 4 on Langford.

The fighting throughout was fast and fair and we await details with interest.

The following account of a battle between a bulldog and what is described as a "full-grown tiger" appears in the Uitenhage Times:—"A tiger had taken refuge in a cave on a farm at the foot of Winterhoek Mountain, in Cape Colony. A bulldog was fetched, and it at once rushed into the cave. A desperate struggle ensued. The dog was badly wounded by the tiger's claws, but it caught the tiger by the throat and did not let go until both rolled over as if dead. In a few minutes the dog came round, but the tiger, which measured eight and a-half feet, was found to be dead." In point of fact, there are no tigers in any part of Africa—barring caged specimens—and we would suggest that it was a leopard which that valiant bulldog "nailed."

A young man who is fond of an adventurous life may earn a good income by insect-hunting for wealthy collectors of, or big dealers in, insects.

The insect-hunter must, of course, have a fair knowledge of insects and insect life, and be able to recognise readily the various types of the rarer and lesser-known insects.

The really rare insects of which collectors are in search are only to be found in remote parts of the world; but sufficient knowledge of insect life can easily be acquired by a student in this country to fit him for hunting insects in other countries.

For example, only a few years ago one of the wealthiest and best-known of collectors of insects in England despatched a young student of entomology, who had never been out of England before, to Alaska to search for beetles of the type known as vespoideae, which are extremely rare.

The collector engaged the services of the young man in question, who was only twenty-two, for two years, at a salary of £400 per annum, and, of course, paid all his expenses.

He was in Northern Alaska for six months before he found even a single vespoideae beetle.

During the two years he only found eight perfect specimens altogether; but, as against this, he collected a number of other rare insects.

Some insect-hunters prefer to remain freelances, and trust to recouping themselves by selling their finds to collectors or dealers or to museums; but a hunter who does so must have a fair share of capital, and it is, in any case, a highly risky sort of business, for a man may be months hunting in some remote country without finding any insects of special value.

One of the biggest firms of insect dealers in London sent three men out to Northern Burma to look for neuropteroids, an extremely rare kind of butterfly. One of the hunters was paid at the rate of £1,000 per annum, and the other two at £500 per annum.

They were six months in Burma, and never found a single butterfly of the type they were hunting for, and though they captured several rare kinds of insects, the expedition, from a financial point of view, was a failure.

The insect-hunter must possess a strong constitution, and has to be prepared to rough it. He may for months have to sleep in the open air in all sorts of weather, and live on such food as can be procured in semi-civilised countries.

But a first-rate hunter need never want for employment, and can always be certain of good pay.

Sometimes an insect-hunter, by a stroke of good luck, may find a very rare and valuable specimen of a kind of insect which he is not searching for and such a find will always greatly enhance his reputation and increase his earning power.

A man named Ernest, whilst hunting for a English collector in South Africa for insects of the butterfly type, at a salary of £300 per annum, found a green-and-yellow beetle, of which there are few examples in the world. A couple of months later this lucky hunter was engaged by Mr. Harriman to go insect-hunting in Brazil for him for three years, at a salary of £1,200 per annum.

According to the Calendar it is Spring, according to the thick overcoat I wear to-day, to the heavy hailstorm we had yesterday, the icy rain and the piercing northerly wind without and the roaring fire within it is the depth of winter. Yet from the comfortable front seat of a friend's motor three days ago did I not observe that the countryside shows that the season is far in advance of the almanac and that spring is really in mid course?

Thrushes, robins, and rooks have finished their nests and have begun to lay eggs. Miles of hedgerows are out in their brightest young green waistcoats. Pear trees are in blossom. Those who are picking the watercress harvest find the byways of the water full of frogs' spawn. The bees are collecting honey as well as pollen. Many queen wasps and hibernating butterflies have been seen. In some meadows the grass is the better part of a foot high; the roses have new shoots 10 inches long. The bats are abroad in the evening and the wild daffodils are a carpet of gold. It is April, if not May—whatever the almanac says.

Yes "every prospect pleases" the moment one gets fifteen miles out of London, and of a truth "only man is vile"—miners, labour members, agitators, conspirators, taxicab drivers, and all the rest of the wretched crew who loom so large in the papers and in other ways compel us to agree heartily with the Psalmist when he was in his most implacable moods. This devilish coal strike and all the misery and trouble it has brought to millions! You have not the space, Sir, neither is this the place to discuss it, also I have no language for it, except such as could not possibly see print. And the miserable, cringing government, with their amazing bill which fatuous Liberals thought might end the strike; if ever anyone rode for a fall it is Messrs. Asquith and Company. This measure has been received throughout the country with amazement and dismay. It is no wonder, for a more emphatic negation of statesmanship it would be impossible to imagine. With singular but fatal ingenuity Mr. Asquith has contrived to combine within the four corners of his measure almost every mistake which it was possible to introduce. It is professedly intended to put an end to the coal strike. Yet it places no sort of compulsion upon the strikers, and certainly encourages them to strike again at the earliest convenient opportunity. Bah! From first to last it is an abject surrender to syndicalism and one sincerely trusts that the opposition will accept no sort of responsibility for the bill either now or hereafter. We were told that Government would "settle" the strike this week end: we are just as far off a settlement as when the strike began. A general election seems close at hand.

London without smoke or fogs, and a clean and beautiful city blossoming with roof gardens, is the dream of the promoters of the International Smoke Abatement Exhibition, which will open at the Agricultural Hall on to-morrow afternoon. Sir William Richmond, R.A., the artist who has done much to beautify London, will open this exhibition, of which the Duke of Argyll is the president, and at which many eminent professors and experts will read papers on the best methods of slaying the "smoke fiend."

All the latest appliances for the use of smokeless fuel, both in the home and factory, will be shown at the Agricultural Hall. There will be soot and spark catching cowls, and smoke dissipators of every kind and shape, ready to be fixed to chimneys at a moment's notice. The fogs of London, for which the metropolis was formerly famous, the organisers say, have been largely diminished in intensity of late years in consequence of the rapidly extending substitution of gas for fuel. Electricity remains too costly—even at one penny a unit—to be adopted by the general public, but the promoters of the Smoke Abatement Exhibition are hopeful that although much remains to be done, the air of London will one day rival that of Paris or New York.

The glories of Richmond by the riverside are to be revived this summer. If, we are told, modern enterprise can make it so, it will again become the resort of the "smart" world and the gay youth of London. That is rather unfortunate for the respectable people who may want to live at Richmond but we presume they have had a voice in the arrangement and understand the penalty of popularity. I am not sure that, after all, they will suffer very much from the invasion of the smart set and the gilded youth who take musical comedy actresses out to dinner on Sunday, for the simple reason that Richmond lost its attraction for the class of people who made it prosperous when the motor-car made it possible to go farther in the same time.

If Richmond recovers its lost popularity among fashionable folks, it will therefore be only as a kind of half-way house to somewhere else. The run to Richmond and back is not long enough to give the owner of a motor-car time to prove its paces.

A remarkably stupid expedition is to leave England next month in quest of hidden treasure on an island in the South Pacific. A few days ago an advertisement appeared in the Yachtsman asking for the loan of a yacht for this expedition. The advertisers stated that they had visited the island, and had satisfied themselves as to the truth of the statements in the papers they have had in their possession for some time, and that they were convinced that enormous treasure lay buried there.

It is said that the advertisers are two ladies, both well connected, and further that a well-known yachtsman has practically agreed to participate in the hunt for gold. One of his yachts, of 200 tons, is to be fitted out and leave England early next month. They expect to be back in six months with the treasure. It is stated that the booty amounts to millions and was buried by pirates who made the island their headquarters. Records of this treasure, it is further stated, are filed in the British Museum. Haven't people yet got tired of this sort of fool's errand!

"Rutherford and Son" which has run through a short series of matinees at the Little Theatre has now been brought out for evening presentation and a wider circle of the public is given an opportunity of seeing it. Considering that the authoress, Miss K. G. Sowerby, has never before ventured upon a stage play, and considering also that she has declared that she has no particular knowledge of the corner of life she depicts, her grey, sombre study of John Rutherford's household, her picture of souls warped and lives wasted through the action of a strong man's well-intentioned iron law, is remarkable. It smacks of inspiration because it rings so true—rings true, that is to say, in its essentials, the essentials of character and atmosphere. Carefully analysed, it will not always bear the searchlight of reason. Character contradicts itself at certain points. But these are small things. They do not stand out at all arrestingly from the completed picture, a picture graphic and realistic, a study that is human if its subject be narrow, a tragedy in monotone. There is not much drama in "Rutherford and Son," as drama is judged by plot and incident and situation. But there is in it larger drama than that—the drama of temperament, the drama of struggling souls, of nature's call of human tears.

And because a close study of character means so much to Miss Sowerby's play, it is important that the principal parts were last night in the hands of their original interpreters. For it is impossible to imagine any other present-day actor realising John Rutherford as Mr. Norman McKinnel realises him. He brings out the strength, the remorseless purpose, of an iron-wilded man, set by circumstance to use his power in small places—a "big" man narrowed and dwarfed by the circumstances of his upbringing—without exaggeration, without resort to bombast, even with an underlying grim humour. Then his daughter, whose humble tragedy is, after all, the vital spot of the play, could not be better presented than by Miss Edyth Olive. The smouldering mutiny of her nature; her deep, almost inarticulate love; best of all, her revolt against her father and her life, are shown without exaggeration, with naturalness and true feeling, with a searching sense of pity and truth. Other parts were finely sustained by Miss Agnes Thomas, Miss Thyrza Norman, and Messrs. Edmond Breon, Frank Randall, and Harvey Braban.

The model of the King Edward Memorial in the Green Park, which will take four years to erect, and is to cost £20,000, has been approved.

It is to be of Portland stone, 43 feet high, and will be surmounted by a bronze group representing St. George and the Dragon. The figure of King Edward is to be on the south side of the central pedestal, facing Buckingham Palace, and will stand on a plinth 8 feet 10 inches from the ground.

The figure of his late Majesty will be in Garter Robes, with the Orb and Sceptre in his hands. Supporting the statue of the King on either side of the central pedestal, on the same level as the King, will be seated figures in bronze—one representing "Peace," and another "Arbitration Quelling Strife." The royal arms will also be included in bronze and stone. In the face of several big strikes in full swing and the utter failure so far, of the Government and various conferences to effect a settlement, "Arbitration Quelling Strife" sounds a bit thin at the moment.

The Vagrant.

The dear little office-boy had been detected in a lie. It was not one of the ordinary prevarications of the every-day world, and, moreover, to make the crime more grievous, he had persisted in adhering to his original mendacious statement. "Do you know, my lad," asked a grizzled clerk, in a kindly fashion, "what becomes of young lads who trifle with the truth?" "Aye," was the assured reply; "the boss often sends them out as travellers when they grow up."

Review.

THE HORSE AND ITS RELATIVES.

Despite the number of books that have been written on the horse, it is not a little remarkable that hitherto there has not been a single one which combines an up-to-date account of all the more important existing species, races, and breeds of the family with a comparatively full account of their extinct forerunners. This want Mr. Lydekker has endeavoured to supply in a handy and well illustrated little volume which Messrs. George Allen and Co. are publishing under the above title. It forms a companion to the volume on The Ox and its Kindred, by the same author, of which a preliminary notice appeared some time ago in our columns, and which, by the way, was published by Messrs Methuen on 29th February.

After a long introductory chapter on the zoological position and structure of the horse, in the course of which allusion is made to the occasional development of rudimentary horns in domesticated horses and also to the maximum age attained by horses, the author discusses the history of the wild Mongolian tarpan, or so-called Przewalski's horse. In the course of this discussion it is pointed out that naturalists have displayed a remarkable reluctance to admit the existence of really wild horses, despite the fact that so long ago as the thirties Colonel Hamilton Smith, from evidence obtained during the occupation of Paris by the allied armies in 1815, clearly pointed out that there were such animals in Mongolia, which were the true tarpan, and that the half-wild horses which at that time abounded on the Russian steppes and were known by the same title, represented an impure and mixed offshoot from the same stock.

It is likewise shown that in prehistoric times tarpan-like horses were spread over the greater part of Europe, much of which in the earlier portion of that epoch presented steppe-like conditions very similar to those obtaining at the present day in many parts of Russia. Gradually these steppe-like tracts were more or less completely replaced by forest; and this led to modifications in the wild horses, some of which became adapted to a forest-life, while others became suited to grassy plains, and yet others retained their original fondness for the open and more or less desert like steppe.

When these various phases of truly wild horses were exterminated and to what extent the herds became mixed by means of animals escaped from captivity, are matters which cannot now be determined; but certain it is that from these wild herds were derived the majority of the indigenous breeds of domesticated ponies and horses of Western and Central Europe; the differentiation of the wild stock into phases dependent upon the nature of their habitat rendering the production of distinct breeds inevitable at the very start. The author agrees with Darwin in regarding the old dun horses of Norway and other parts of Europe as the representatives of the original tarpan-like stock, despite the circumstance that such duns may now be produced by cross breeding.

Passing from Europe to Asia, reference is made to the various Asiatic breeds which show the nearest affinity to the wild tarpan; among such being included Mongolian, Yarkundi and Spiti ponies The modifying influence in all these cases has been, of course, the infusion of Arab blood; the extent to which this infusion has been carried forming one of the greatest puzzles and problems in connection with the history of the horse.

A chapter is devoted to the principal British breeds of horses, of which, however, only the more ancient are discussed, so that thoroughbreds receive but scant notice, and hackneys and trotters none at all; the reason for this being that the writer has treated his subject from the point of view of the naturalist rather than from that of the breeder.

Foreign breeds—other than the Arab and the Barb—form the subject of another chapter, in which the reader may gather much interesting information with regard to Percherons Belgians, black Hanoverians and the royal cream-coloured breed.

The Arab stock of course claims a chapter to itself, and in this connection it is important to notice that while the author leaves the question open as to whether the Arab and the Barb jointly constitute a species distinct from the tarpan—and thus from the horses of Western Europe—he has hesitation in "jumping on" Professor Ridgeway's theory of the African origin of the Arab stock. That this stock originated in Asia is, indeed, a practical certainty; but when we have one authority like Professor H. F. Osborn—the great American naturalist and palæontologist—confidently stating that the Arab represents a specifically distinct aboriginal stock, while Dr. Duerst, our greatest authority on the history of domesticated animals, as confidently asserts that a tarpan-like stock in Turkestan gave origin to the Arab, it is very difficult to arrive at any definite conclusion. If, however, the Arab really represent a distinct species, it is suggested that it may have been derived from the extinct Indian Siwalik horse, or a nearly allied stock.

The various wild representatives of the horse family, other than the tarpan, together with the various breeds of domesticated asses, form the subject of separate chapters, in regard to which there is little special to notice, except that, like the whole of the book, the subject is treated in a popular, and yet at the same time, accurate style. Another chapter is devoted to hybrids, in which it is pointed out how constant is the tendency to the development in such hybrids of narrow stripes of the Grevy zebra type; this being equally well-marked whether one of the parents be a pony mare, an onager, a wild ass, or a broad-striped zebra, and neither a Grevy. All this seems to point to the conclusion that the proximate ancestor of the horse family was marked like the latter.

The volume concludes with a chapter on the extinct forerunners of the horse, which to many readers will be the most interesting of all. After pointing out the increase in bodily size and in the length of limb as we pass from the earlier members of the group to the modern horse and the gradual reduction in the number of toes, the author observes that—

"The adaptation for speed is most noticeable in the progressive lengthening of the limbs, and the gradual discarding of the lateral toes. The limb-elongation is most marked in the lower segments, more especially the foot; the thighbone, or femur, and the humerus, or upper bone of the fore-leg, displaying much less proportionate lengthening. This causes the powerful muscles necessary to work the limbs to be situated close to, or even within, the body; while they act upon the extremities by means of the long, slender tendons, which are as tough and elastic as steel, and whose development in the modern race-horse is expressed in horse-dealing language as 'plenty of bone.' Concurrently with these changes in the bones of the limbs, the sole of the foot is gradually raised from the ground, till eventually the whole weight of the body rests on the tips of the toes, whose terminal armament becomes modified from a narrow claw or nail into a broad hoof. Apparently, in herbivorous animals adapted for running on hard ground, this elevation of the sole of the foot is always accompanied by a reduction in the number of the toes, for we find the same thing occurring in antelopes, deer and giraffes, although in a somewhat different fashion and to a rather less marked degree.

"All these changes culminate in producing not only a strong and yet graceful type of limb, moving rapidly in the same fashion as a short pendulum, and thus combining rapid movement with

THE COLONEL'S SNIPE.

"Yes, H——," the Colonel was saying, "I have shot over those parts of India myself, and generally got a fair bag of snipe."

"Any snipe-shooting around this district?" the lieutenant presently asked.

"There are a few on my place at B.," replied the Colonel.

"I have hired some very good marsh-shooting out that way."

"Indeed!" Private B. heard the lieutenant remark.

"Better run over one day next week," suggested the Colonel. "I will tell my marshman-keeper to-morrow."

"Thanks awfully, Colonel; I am horribly keen on snipe . . ."

The remainder of the conversation was lost to Private B., for his sweeping had taken him away to the far end of the passage.

"Lucky beggar!" soliloquised Private B. Then, straightening his back, he suddenly stared vacantly into space.

"By Jove! I'll chance it," he muttered. And what Private B. meant to "chance" was simply to impersonate the lieutenant and slay some of the Colonel's snipe.

Easier said than done, however, and Private B. found many formidable obstacles in the way. By Sunday, only two real difficulties remained—first, to obtain a day's leave, and secondly, to make sure that the lieutenant himself was not off after the snipe (the Colonel invariably visited his beloved marshes on a Saturday) Obstacle No. 2 was easily overcome by judiciously "pumping" the lieutenant's soldier servant; but how to obtain a day's pass was a "stickler," and in vain Private B. turned over various plans in his mind—the whole of Sunday afternoon was spent in the vain attempt to find some excuse for a day's pass. On his way down to tea, Private B. took a casual glance at the Order Board, and noticed that his own name was mentioned as being required the next day, Monday, for sergeants' mess fatigue—i.e., peel potatoes and clean knives, etc., for the gentlemanly sergeants.

Very soon after reveille on Monday morning, Private B. reported himself at the sergeants' mess, where sweeping broom and scrubbing brush awaited him. Presently the mess-caterer came hurrying in, and handed Private B. a note to be taken to the fishmonger's out in the town.

"Look sharp and change," said the caterer, "as we want this fish for breakfast."

Private B. duly delivered the note, and then a curious sensation came over him. The air blew salt and fresh from across the estuary, which shimmered in the sunlight, and near by was his private room, where civilian clothing and gun were kept. But behind him, the sergeants' potatoes! Private B. hesitated for one moment and then walked swiftly away to his private room. Here a quick change into his best shooting togs was effected, and erstwhile Private B. sallied forth to the station. He had judged the time to a nicety, and had only to jump into a train that awaited him.

B was duly reached, and soon the marshes were in sight. A farm hand, apparently, who was coming along the road directed Private B. to the Colonel's marshes, and soon he was slipping a couple of "sixes" into his gun. The first dyke was drawn a blank, and, crossing over to the next one, Private B. dropped a fine plump snipe that flew twisting away across the marsh.

Shortly afterwards a big, gaunt figure hove in sight, and Private B. rightly concluded him to be the Colonel's "marshman-keeper." On Private B.'s approach, the keeper respectfully touched his cap with a "Mornin" sir, and waited for Private B. to introduce himself.

"Good morning," replied Private B. "I suppose you are the Colonel's keeper?"

"Yes sir," was the reply. "I work down at mesh (marsh) and kinder keep an eye on 'em."

"I'm Lieutenant H——," explained Private B. "I think the Colonel told you on Saturday to expect me."

"Yes, sir; the Colonel said as how you was a-comin'. May be you'd like me to show you round?" the keeper suggested.

"Certainly," assented Private B.; and they walked across to the Mill Road. When they were within about a hundred yards of the road, the keeper called a halt.

"Now, sir," he said, "some o' them snipe allus fly out afore you kin get nigh enow for a shot. You go round by yon brook, and hide up agin' the sluice. The snipe allus make out over that, and then you kin walk the road arterwards."

Private B. walked across to the brook, and concealed himself near the sluice, while the keeper approached the road from another direction. Before the keeper had reached the road, a snipe flew out and made straight for the spot where Private B. was hiding. The bird succumbed to a well directed charge of sixes from the right barrel, and Private B. hastily reloaded. The report of his gun had startled other snipe from the road, and "scaping" lustily, they gyrated off in various directions. Private B. had a couple of shots in quick succession, and another of the Colonel's snipe was bagged.

The keeper now beckoned for Private B. to join him, and they proceeded to walk the road in line. Several snipe were flushed, and Private B. floored a couple with the expenditure of half a dozen cartridges.

"There fare to be a tidy few snipe about this mornin'," remarked the keeper as they reached the end of the road And Private B. readily assented.

The keeper now suggested that they should walk the "spring-deek" (dykes); accordingly they wended their way thither.

"A veritable snipe's paradise," thought Private B., as he stepped lightly alongside a "spring-deek." Soon a snipe rose out of shot, and was duly marked down in the road, and presently a jack-snipe flew out at very close quarters. The two afforded rather an easy shot, and was neatly grassed. At a corner where two dykes joined, a mallard rose from some rank weeds. Private B. made an unaccountable miss with his first barrel, but hit the bird hard with his second, and the keeper, shading his eyes from the sun, successfully marked the mallard down.

"Thatty (thirty) yards to the right o' yon bridge," presently muttered the keeper.

They went off in pursuit at once, and after a short search the mallard was found lying dead, close by the bridge. Private B. had purchased some sandwiches before leaving the town, and these were now discussed. Afterwards pipes were lit, and the keeper related some of the experiences that had befallen him "down at mesh" (i.e., on the marshes).

In due course a move was made to some "spring-deeks" that had not been visited in the morning, and very fair sport obtained. The first snipe was missed clean with both barrels, but Private B. retrieved his reputation somewhat by making a very long shot at a wild-rising snipe. Several of the dykes were drawn blank, and the keeper suggested a return to the road, where possibly some of the disturbed snipe might have settled. A wide drain skirted the road, and, having made sure that no snipe were in the drain, Private B. decided to refrain from hunting the road again.

"We must leave a few for the Colonel," said Private B., as they rested against some railings and indulged in a pipe.

A hasty "Get down, sir," from the keeper made Private B. crouch behind the railings, and soon a fairly large string of golden plover were espied approaching. But there was not sufficient cover behind the railings, and the plover passed wide.

The keeper suggested "taking the flight," and Private B. had no objection, providing they left in time for him to catch the 6 o'clock train from B. station.

The Colonel's marshes proved to be a very good flighting-ground, and even before dusk had properly set in ducks were flighting across the marshes.

"The decoy is where they come from," explained the keeper in a whisper, as some ducks passed high overhead. "Want a nor'-west wind to keep 'em low."

Hoarse quacks sounded at frequent intervals from various parts of the marshes, and at length Private B. was offered a chance. Three ducks with half-closed wings sailed past, and one was dropped on to the marsh with a resounding thud.

A short interval of waiting, and then some ducks passed swiftly overhead. Private B. took a quick shot at their retreating forms, but no welcome thud reached his ears this time.

And now Private B. had perforce to take his departure. The keeper accompanied him to the road, and, having received a suitable tip, took his leave.

In due course Private B. arrived at his destination and hurried off to his private room. It was obvious that he would not have an opportunity to visit his room again for at least a week, so the Colonel's snipe and mallard were made into a convenient parcel and exchanged for hard cash at the best game dealer's! After which Private B. made tracks for barracks.

"Half a minute," said the lynx-eyed sergeant of the guard, as Private B. endeavoured to slip quietly through the barrack gates.

Private B., I think?" inquired the sergeant. "Well, we've been looking for you all day. It takes you a mighty long time to get the fishmonger's and back," remarked the sergeant sarcastically.

Private B. cast an interrogative glance in the direction of the "prisoners' room," and the sergeant nodded his head. A few moments later a key grated in the lock, and Private B. was left to meditate upon how he could best explain his absence to the Colonel in the morning.

This indeed was a knotty problem, and when on the morrow Private B. was ushered into the Colonel's presence to the tune of "Prisoner and escort, quick march!" he was as far off the solution as ever.

Colonel: "Er, Private B., you are charged with—er—being absent from 7-45 A.M. to 8-10 P.M. on Monday, the 11th instant. Er—what have you to say?"

Private B.: "Nothing, sir."

Colonel (irascibly): "What the devil do you mean by 'Nothing, sir'?"

Private B. looks sheepish, and is palpably trying to think of a suitable excuse.

Colonel glances across at the Sergeant-Major.

Sergeant-Major: "Now, then, Private B., speak up."

Private B.: "Well, sir, I met some friends—I mean long-lost relatives—"

Colonel (loudly): "Long-lost grandmothers. Speak the truth, man."

Private B. (reluctantly): "I went shooting, sir."

Private B. (hopelessly): "Yes, sir."

Colonel: "Where did you go?"

Private B. (avoiding the Colonel's eye): "On the estuary, sir."

Colonel: "Have good sport?"

Private B. (cheerfully): "Very fair, sir."

Colonel (after deliberation): "Well—er—Private B., the fact of your having had good sport should considerably lessen the sting of your punishment. Seven days C.B." (confined to barracks).—UNIQUE in Shooting Times.

ODD DAYS IN SOMALILAND.

IV. JUMBO AT HOME.

I HAVE told of a night at B—, the day was not less memorable. I went out and spent the morning looking for kudu, of which there were traces, but without success. At length we had turned campwards when suddenly a strange sound crossed the breeze, once and again repeated, a sort of attenuated imitation of a man-of-war's syren whistle; and both shikaris gave a spring to attention. Somehow I knew instinctively before Elmi spoke the word, that I had heard, for the first time, the trumpet of the wild elephant. All thoughts of kudu were thrown to the winds. I might not shoot at Marodi, who was under protection of the law, but I must see him. Apparently the sound of the trumpet came from not more than a mile away, and fortunately the wind was right. In ten minutes we were on the fresh trail, a little farther and we could hear the elephants ahead moving slowly upwind through a fairly thick jungle of mimosas and euphorbia. A little way to the right was a small hill, for this we made, and climbing looked down upon the valley. There they were, 300 yards away, seven or eight of them, moving leisurely more or less in file. Not a bit like Jumbo, at first sight, for their colour was red, the hue of their last mud-bath. I did not stop to study them from there, but having located them exactly, descended the hill, and into the jungle again: taking Henduleh alone with me. We were soon close up and presently, the bush here not being very thick, spotted three of them, 50 yards ahead. Then out came the camera and great was my disgust to find it only contained a single film unexposed. Then a puff of wind from the left (it had hitherto been straight from the front) alarmed me lest I should not get my photo. The elephants too were moving on and the bush seemed thicker ahead, so creeping hurriedly forward I got in a snap at 40 yards or so. Further off than I had intended, and not at a favourable moment, but I was over anxious. Then of course as soon as the deed was done, they stopped again, and I crept forward to a tree from behind which for five long minutes I was able to watch at my leisure a fine old tusker as he stood only 25 yards away munching some sansevieria plants torn up by his trunk. Waving trunk and great flapping ears, they were never still; while his ridiculous little eye, all the time, apparently, was fixed on me. But his expression was one of placid content, very different to what it would have been had he realised the dangerous proximity of mankind, his deadliest, his only foe.

To be so close and yet unable to shoot! My fingers were itching for the trigger; but though the rifle remained handy in case of accident, the feeling passed away and I was content to stand and watch. For my privilege was no small one. The lion is a royal beast, say his detractors what they may; but were the elephant to put forward his claim, who could deny his title to be the real King of the African Jungle! My thoughts wandered back to happy hours spent deep in the pages of the mighty hunters of the last century from Gordon Cumming to Cotton Oswell, from Baker to Selous. And now to me too had been permitted a private audience of the Master of the Jungle. But even Royalty so primeval as this must not be too lavish of its favours, and five minutes audience is ample for any mere human: or it may be the Monarch was a trifle bored. Anyway, suddenly, up went the mighty trunk, and round he swung away from me. And then one after another in Indian file "the great earth-shaking beasts" passed silently from my sight.

Fishing.

KING OF THE DEEP.

"SNAGSBY, you are a fisherman!" remarked Burgess, the man in the corner.

I rose from my seat and acknowledged the compliment with a graceful bow. Then I addressed my companions.

"Well, boys, what will you have? The same as before? You will? Landlord, fill them up again."

"Snagsby, you remind me forcibly of some leviathan of the deep," continued Burgess, mercilessly. "You have the eyes of the lordly salmon, you have all the wiles and artfulness of the speckled trout, and I think if anyone were to hook you through the gills you would fight like the fresh-water shark. In fact, I firmly believe that there was a time when your portly form assumed another shape. It might have had scales, even fins, and perhaps," he added impressively, "it might have had a tail."

"Gentlemen," I said gravely, "our learned friend, Ike Burgess, has, for once in a way, wandered dangerously near the truth. His remarks, I regret to say, are, as a rule, both vulgar and pointless, but for once he has struck the right chord. He has hinted of strange things—credited me, Richard Snagsby, with once possessing a tail. Gentlemen, he is right. I once had a tale. What is more, I still retain that tale."

Three men looked at me with open mouths; the remaining two hastily drained the contents of their mugs.

"Lord, lumme!" gasped Cribbs; you are jokin."

"I always had my doubts," remarked Burgess, seriously. "I distrusted that suspicious crease in your trousers. Tell us, Snagsby—what sort of fish were you!"

"Gentlemen," I said, apologetically, "I am afraid I have misled you. I am no fish; I possess no scaly tail, only a fisherman's t-a-i-l-e. Would you like it?"

"Rather! Fire away," cried one.

"Remember, Snagsby," said another, "not too long a bow."

"Shut up, Cribbs," retorted the oldest man in the room. "Have you forgotten that he is a fisherman?"

I held up my hand for silence. Then I launched forth, and, though I says it myself as shouldn't, for twenty solid minutes I held the room; you could have heard the proverbial pin drop on the hearthstone.

"I was a rotten bad fisherman at the time I am speaking of. I had a strike which was liable to pull a trout's head off. As for nerves, my rod went up towards the heavens at the slightest suspicion of a rise. Of course, I broke my cast every time, swore like a trooper, and the next moment was frightfully ashamed of myself. I tried everything I could think of, but it was all of no use; I could not break myself of the habit. Finally, one of those well-meaning chaps advised me to chuck up trying to catch trout, and go in for salmon-fishing instead. He told me that my strike would hook a salmon every time—hook him well—and I, poor deluded simpleton, believed it.

"Well, I got my outfit—went in for whole bag of tricks. Gosh! talk of expense! The missis was wild, and swore she would have two new hats to get equal with my extravagance, and, by Jingo, she had her own way in the end. But I did not care; I was simply living for the moment when I should hook my first salmon.

"It came sooner than I expected. I was casting from the edge of a long stone slab, and the water at that particular spot was very deep. My thoughts had begun to wander, when all of a sudden I got a rise, a deuce of a rise—in fact, the salmon was not the only fool that rose, for I went up like a Jack-in-the-box and came down like a rocket—down—down—until I reached the bed of the river. I gasped for a few seconds (they seemed like hours to me), and then a strange thing happened. I saw a huge salmon swimming towards me with open mouth, and as he came nearer he appeared to get even still larger, until I could see nothing but a cavern studded with sharp spikes.

"I suppose he must have swallowed me; if he did, he made the mistake of his life. My tough carcase must have been too much for his digestive organs, for he sighed wearily and gave up the ghost. Then, boys, will you believe it, but I Richard Snagsby, arrayed in the glittering scales of my would-be slayer, swam lazily down the river. Gosh! it was a grand feeling! No more business worries, no heckling wife; simply a life of ease and pleasure. Landlord, fill my mug up again. My throat wants a little lubrication. Well, I swam about to my heart's content, scorning to notice my finny brethren. I had brains—at least, I thought so; the point had yet to be proved.

"It was when I was gliding down a somewhat swift current that I first saw the thing. It was a gaudy object, and it dropped with a splash not two yards away from my snout. For the moment I was nonplussed. Then I felt as if I could have burst out laughing. The bally thing was a salmon fly! So they thought they were going to catch me! Why, I knew every wrinkle in the game. Presently the fraudulent fly began to caper about the water in a most maddening way. I began to get horribly irritable. Every second the gaudy lure became more maddening. I knew the danger, but for the life of me I could not resist the temptation. At length I made a sudden grab at it, felt the hook pierce my jaw, and then I was down the river, travelling at the speed of a runaway motor.

"Gosh! I could even hear the hum of the reel. Luckily for me, that angler did not know his business. He gave me plenty of slack line, plenty of time to think, and I finally showed my gratitude by running him round an old stump. Lord! I could almost fancy I could hear him swearing on the bank. Of course, he had to break the line. I knew my business, if he didn't; that tangled knot was a masterpiece. Then I calmly worked the hook out of my mouth and swam lazily down-stream. I was the lord of the river, the king of the deep, and I meant to jolly well convince my brethren and land enemies of my supremacy.

ELEY CARTRIDGES

—essential to good sport.

The most accurate and reliable of cartridges may not always suffice to ensure good sport, but good sport is out of the question without them.

Eley Cartridges do all that the best cartridges can do in this direction, with a trustworthiness which has won for them a measure of success greater probably than any other cartridges in the world.

Two 'Eley Loaded' Cartridges:

Eley 'Acme'
A bright orange 4-inch deep-shell Cartridge, loaded with Eley (42-gr.) Smokeless Powder.

Eley 'Elold'
A light maroon Cartridge. Loaded with Eley (33-gr.) Smokeless. Light recoil; absolutely waterproof.

The above, and other Eley Specialities, may be obtained from Gunmakers and Dealers in Ammunition, everywhere.

W. WILSON, 8, The Mall, Rawalpindi.

"Presently I came across a school of trout-anglers. I even recognised my old pal, Dai Ponsford. Now for some sport, I thought, as I dashed up and seized their casts, breaking them to smithereens. You should have seen those anglers' faces! If an artist could have depicted them he would have made his fortune.

"I kept the game up for fully half-an-hour; then I grew tired and swam off in search of further game. I had a grand time, when all was said and done, but it came to an end at last. Night wrapped its dark cloak over the river, and I went to look for a resting spot. Do fish sleep? I was never given the chance of solving this vexed question. An otter spied me (strange, I had never thought of otters) and I went into a blue funk. I tried to slip him, but it was no use; he had got me cornered. Gosh! at that moment I would have cheerfully taken the debts of the whole of Crickleton on my shoulders if I could only have been Richard Snagsby again. Nearer and nearer he came. I stood as one fascinated, simply waiting for the end. Then, before the otter could spring, a sudden darkness fell over me, and I remembered no more until muffled voices fell upon my ears.

"'Keep it up, Bill,' I heard one say. 'He is coming round.' I opened my eyes.

"'What's up?' I murmured, blankly.

"'Nothing, sonny,' muttered a bluff old gent, 'but it would have been all u-p with you if Bob Travers hadn't pulled you out. Gad! never seen such a close shave!'

"'Yes, gentlemen,' I echoed, 'it was a near thing (I was thinking of the otter at the time)—a closer shave than you can imagine.'"

I poured the remains of my beer down a well-oiled groove. Then faced my companions with the air of one who has surpassed himself. For two solid minutes no one spoke. It was Burgess who ultimately broke the silence.

"Snagsby, I repeat my statement," he said reproachfully; "You are a fisherman!"

VARIOUS NOTES.

To the Editor of the "Indian Field."

Sir,—In these days I suppose very faint interest is taken in bicycles: motors and aeroplanes make the really excellent design and finish of the present day paidal-gharry seem a very small affair indeed. The fact, however, remains that the push bicycle is still a very indispensable machine for many thousands of people, so that a few passing notes may be useful to some of the readers of the Indian Field. Six years of constant work in all weathers have made my old bicycle, excellent machine though it was once, decidedly the worse for wear. Not believing that a cheap bicycle is true economy, I have made it my business to discover the best possible machine, regardless of price. There are several firms, between which there is little to choose, so I will carefully abstain from mentioning names. Two points, however, suggest themselves: first that a much-advertised article is by no means necessarily the best, for it is the buyer who has to pay for the advertisements, and so they must come out of the value put into the machine. Second that the addition of motor making to the original business of bicycle manufacture, is not likely to increase the attention paid to the creation of the humbler vehicle.

Aluminium alloy rims I do not advise, for the following reasons: The metal is not nearly so strong and hard as steel, and a heavy rider wheeling on rough hilly roads, is likely to find his rims, if of aluminium, wear from the brakes, and lose their truth. They are also liable to dent, if the tyres are not pumped hard, and have been known to peel after a time. Their sole advantage is non liability to rust. An oil-retaining gear case is an enormous advantage, as it lengthens greatly the life of both chain and teeth. I have used a bicycle without gear-case, with the result that both the chain and the teeth of the hub wheel are very badly worn. The cause of this is the sharp grit from the macadamised roads, which is picked up with the mud, and distributed over the unprotected chain. There it grinds away at the steel, like so much coarse emery. An oil-tight gear-case prevents all this, and so prolongs the life of the hardest worked parts of the machine.

Pedals should certainly have non-rusting surfaces, as the parts between the rubbers are hard to get at for cleaning.

As to variable speed gears, I cannot imagine anyone who has once tried these excellent contrivances, ever going back to single speed. There are people who declare that for £10 one can buy as good a bicyle as it is possible to get. This is not really the case, a really first-class machine, listed at £16-16, but which one can sometimes get for rather less, is decidedly superior as regards small but important details to the £10 cycle. Brakes, etc., are more carefully fitted, and the front forks with their crown are nester in design and more strongly constructed.

Divided Cartridge Cases.

It is, of course, well known that a shot cartridge can, on emergency, be converted into ball, by partially cutting through the case below the shot, so that the forward part of the cartridge shell itself, with the shot within it, goes out of the gun in one piece like a bullet. Such an experiment should, however, only be made with a strongly constructed gun of cylinder bore. A friend of mine, Colonel W——, suggests further that a cartridge thus cut partly through, can be used as a shrapnel for killing birds at long range. To make the piece of cartridge case release its shot, aim should be taken so that the projectile will strike the ground just short of the object. Then if the surface be hard such as sand or rock, the paper case will break and let out the shot which will go forward with the velocity due to the gun. I have as yet no data to give as to how this plan acts in practice, but hope to be able to supply the results of experiments later.

A hollow wooden bullet might very probably act well in "Paradox" and similar rifled shot-guns, if used on the same principle. The bullet should be made of hard wood, solid ended at the base, but hollowed out from the front so as to contain the charge of shot. The shot would be kept inside the bullet by a wad inserted in the front. On hitting the ground, which the bullet would do point first owing to the rifling, the light wood case would be checked, and the heavy shot would necessarily all fly out at once. It should be easy enough for anyone possessing a ball and shot gun to try this practically. The bullets must, of course, be nicely and accurately made, and it would probably be necessary to glue in the wad over the shot, to prevent these latter escaping during flight.

Fourth Day, Saturday, 9th March 1912.

CHAMPION STAKES—A sweepstakes of 10sovs. each, with 1,000sovs. added; second horse to receive 200sovs. and the third horse 100sovs. out of the stake. For three-year-olds and upwards. Weight-for-age. 3 miles.

Messrs. P. and W. Mitchell's ch h Trafalgar, by Wallace—Grand Canary, 6yrs., 9st. 4lb.	W. H. Smith	1
Mr. J. Lynch's br g Prizefighter, 5yrs., 9st. 11lb.	F. Clarke	2
Mr. S. A. Rawdon's b h Indiscreet, by Positano—Disgrace, 4yrs., 9st. ...	G. Lambert	3

(Winner trained by W. S. Hickenbotham.)

There was practically no betting on the race.

Indiscreet jumped off in front and led along the river by about twenty lengths from Trafalgar and Prizefighter. Indiscreet led to the straight the first time, but the favourite took charge passing the stand, and, making the remainder of the pace, won in a canter by three lengths from Prizefighter, with Indiscreet about a furlong and a half away last. Time—3mins. 25⅕secs.

REGARDING DURRIES

To the Memsahib with ambitions to achieve economical housekeeping a few minutes spent in inspecting ELGIN DURRIE samples will reveal ways and means of cheap and tasteful floor covering hitherto undreamt of.

ELGIN DURRIES

bear the stamp of quality and good taste, are made of the best possible materials and produced in colours, patterns and sizes to suit all rooms and fancies. An "ELGIN" DURRIE keeps its freshness better and lasts longer in hard service than any other make. The reason?—well, fifty years of manufacturing experience count for much! But judge for yourself.

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

It was a delightfully calm spring day at Kempton Park on Monday after a shower had cleared the air, and the attendance all round was a very fair one, the members' and Tattersall's enclosures being well filled. The going was a bit on the soft side, and except in one event fields did not reach the usual average, but this was not so bad considering the difficulties of transit. Results:—

Sheppperton Selling Steeplechase—Of 100sovs. 2 miles

Mr. K. Arbuthnot's Stonehenge, by Missel Thrush—Frantic II., aged, 11st. 7lb. S. Avila 1

Betting: Evens War Dance, 11 to 8 agst. Wildrake, 100 to 8 Bowstead, 20 to 1 the others.

War Dance finished first, was disqualified for crossing and the race awarded to Wildrake, Bowstead being placed third.

FOOTBALL. ASSOCIATION RULES.

Except in 1907, when Wales carried off the championship, the Association International tournament has almost always provided a struggle between England and Scotland. This season affords no exception; Scotland, by their victory at Belfast on Saturday, have followed the example of England, and successful over both Wales and Ireland, the Scots and the Englishmen will do battle next Saturday at Hampton Park, Glasgow, to decide the question of supremacy at the dribbling game. Scotland drew at Goodison Park last season and two years ago won by two goals to none, and their prospects must be regarded as favourable for repeating this triumph on the ground of the Queen's Park Club, because the eleven chosen on Friday by the Football Association includes both the full backs and two of the halves who were on the beaten side on that occasion. Only one of the forwards—Wall—remains, and it is on attack that England would seem dependent for their chance of victory at the end of the week. Apparently the win gained at Wrexham on Monday satisfied the authorities, but the fact that the Welshman failed to score did not mean that England's defence was sound. Had not Williamson been at his best in dealing with some shots, the result might easily have gone the other way. England looked the better side and an early goal, due largely to careless defence, left them free from anxiety. On this account their form may be misleading, but it will be surprising if to-morrow the Scottish F. A. do not pick a side capable of beating them—for there is only one alteration in the English eleven.

League form has become quite unreliable recently, and on Saturday the four teams at the head of the contest for the championship suffered defeat. Blackburn Rovers, after their wonderful victory in the Cup on Thursday, were naturally not at their best at Bolton, and the Wanderers—fifth on the list—gained a victory which takes them above Everton, who, like Sheffield Wednesday and Newcastle United, underwent unexpected reverses, Manchester City scoring 4—0 against the Goodison Park team, Middlesbrough winning at Newcastle, and the Wednesday losing at Oldham to a side last but four in the list. So despite this defeat that occurred such an awkward period when the Cup gives the side special work of a most exacting nature, and the Internationals claim several of their players, Blackburn Rovers actually find their chance of carrying off the championship improved.

In fact at the present time ardent supporters of the Blackburn team will have very high hopes of the side securing chief League honours and winning the Cup. To outplay a side like Manchester United and win by two goals after being that number in arrear when little more than twenty minutes remained, proves the Rovers to possess all the essentials for Cup Tie fighting, besides the consistent skill necessary to take a side to the head of affairs in the prolonged League tournament. Until Saturday the Rovers had not lost a match since 16th December when they were beaten by West Bromwich Albion, who, curiously enough, were on Friday drawn to meet them in the semi-final for the cup on the last Saturday of the month. This match is to take place at the Annfield-road ground, Liverpool, a circumstance rather favourable to the Manchester team. It is not known yet who will oppose Swindon in the other match, Bradford City and Barnsley having to meet for the third time to-morrow at Leeds; and, the two Yorkshire teams having played three and a half hours without scoring, the Southern League team's outlook does not seem to depend so much on their opponents as on their own form. Allotted to the Chelsea club's ground, the match in which Swindon participate will come as some solace to Londoners for the overthrow of all the local clubs in the earlier stages of the contest.

Besides the results already alluded to, the defeat of Woolwich Arsenal is noteworthy, the Plumstead team having escaped defeat in the League since January and winning five out of seven fixtures fulfilled. Of course a beating from West Bromwich Albion, on Cup form, would come to any side in the ordinary course of events; but in the League the Midland team stand below Woolwich Arsenal, who, moreover, enjoyed the advantage of playing at home, so that the result was quite a surprise. Tottenham Hotspur, victims at West Bromwich on Wednesday, were one of three visiting sides to win yesterday, two useful points rewarding them at Liverpool, who, it may be added, are among the five Lancashire clubs at the bottom of the competition.

In the fight to replace two of these teams in the first division next season everything goes prosperously for Burnley, so that the northern country will only have one less representative unless something very extraordinary happens. Derby County did well to draw at Burnden Park, but Burnley lead by five points from Chelsea, who disappointed their supporters by losing to Birmingham by to goals to nil at Stamford Bridge. This means that Derby County are two points behind Chelsea with a game in hand, besides a much superior goal average. Another London club with more than a likelihood of gaining high honours slightly improved their position. Queen's Park Rangers drawing at Swindon, and the position at the head of the Southern League is that Swindon remain two points behind with two games more to play.

Letters from Bibendum to a Self-made Motorist.

IV.

81, Fulham Road,
London, S.W.
January 24th, 1912.

My dear Miles,—At the present moment your place is at the business end of a moral toasting fork; and for sound reasons I'm just going to keep you well down on the coal-glow for a goodish bit.

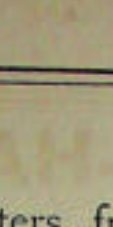
You see, I've never yet been convinced by the application of any of the ordinary amateur stage-directions for simulating righteous indignation; and even when a fellow starts in on me in a well modulated silver-clarion-with-a-cold-in-it voice—one in which you can hear the tear-drops splashing on his soft palate—like you have done, I naturally begin to nose for signs of decay, all the same.

"I've never yet been convinced."

That is just why I have been sniffing round that "rotten badly-built spare cover" yarn you have been slopping such a lot of bluff-juice over. And let me say, right here, that a bad argument is like a dead rat under the flooring: the more it is dwelt on, the easier it is to locate.

The mistake you made was sending the King's Evidence right along and letting it talk for itself.

Your sending me that cover reminds me of the unsuccessful bid William Anstruther Ronald Thorold Young—commonly known as Warty from his initials—made to regain the confidence of the Vicar of Loamwell. When Warty was about twelve he developed a keen interest in taking care of any unconsidered trifles he could find lying round loose in people's gardens and back-yards. But in the still watches of one murky night, he extended his operations to the Vicar's vegetable garden, and, next morning, sold to that gentleman's cook half a barrow load of fresh young potatoes. That was where he came to grief. The Vicar's gardener was old and deaf; but Warty must have calculated he was blind and dumb as well. Anyhow the Vicar obtained the permission of Warty's widowed ma and demonstrated to Warty that there was a strong cane that had no turning. For three months thereafter Warty was so good that he began to illustrate the fact that, for him at least, the straight and narrow path was just about the widest thing in turnpikes on the survey. Then he won the Sunday School prize for an essay on Honesty. Next day the Vicar stopped him and shook hands. Warty was carrying a bag. "A splendid essay, my boy," said the dear old Vicar, "and I am sure you wrote it so well because the error of your former ways has really struck home to you." "Yes, Sir," said Warty, with a little break in his pure young treble. "Ah, yes," went on the Vicar, beaming kindly at his little friend; "and you're taking something home to Mother?" "Yes, sir," said Warty, "a nice vegetable marrow, sir." And the Vicar would have felt no breath of suspicion if at that moment some passing ducks had not quacked. The game was up when the nice vegetable marrow in the bag quacked back.



William Anstruther Ronald Thorold Young.

"A splendid essay my boy," said the dear old Vicar.

Spare the duck and spoil the yarn was Warty's trouble. Your trouble is that you ducked the spare and spoilt the yarn just the same. You can't side-step it; every stain round that burst is a double-bass quack to the effect that you have left that cover out in the wet for weeks. The soakage has gone right through; which is another proof of your utter carelessness; and altogether I think you had better start in, right now, to get sense.

Perhaps it will help you to know that that cover never would have burst suddenly if you had kept it dry all the time, and away from the light and air in a waterproof wrapper. And here's another bit of elementary information for your guidance: If you store spare covers in a damp atmosphere they will perish. Leave them in their original wrappers; keep them off the floor; and see that your garage is dry. Also, when you get home after a wet run, don't make a break for that bath and change, until you have seen to it that your tyres have been lightly sponged over and carefully dried. On this point, I might mention in passing, some folks reckon they know more than their daddy, and just let be on the dirt and the wet. But it's not what a man thinks he knows, it's what he knows counts—and counts as money saved when it comes to drying covers and filling up their surface cuts.

Your sincere friend,
BIBENDUM.

IRELAND vs. SCOTLAND.

The fourth of the Association International matches of the season was played on the 16th instant at Windsor Park, Belfast, before 10,000 spectators. Fine cold weather prevailed, and with the turf firm, the conditions were in every way favourable. Since originally chosen the Irish team underwent several changes, and at the last moment Darling, of Linfield, was brought in as right half-back in place of Harris. Except that Reid was at centre-forward instead of Quinn, the Scottish eleven was the same as selected. Losing the toss Scotland had to play against a slight breeze during the opening half. Following a brief attack by the Scottish forwards, Macaulay had an excellent chance of getting away for Ireland, but he retained possession of the ball too long, and Scotland was soon at the other end again. The attack was cleverly checked by Craig. A little later Scotland were helped by a free kick, and Reid raced past the backs.

A goal seemed probable, but Hanna, running out, cleared in clever style. Ireland then attacked vigorously, Enright receiving a fine pass from Macaulay and looking dangerous, but he overran the ball and a promising opening was lost. Scotland was soon away again and Aitkenhead, receiving a good pass from Sinclair, scored for Scotland with a good shot. In no way upset by this reverse, the Irishmen once more attacked strongly, but the Scottish backs proved wonderfully sound and not many opportunities were given the Irish forwards for getting into a scoring position. On one occasion, however, Macaulay looked like going through from a pass by Enright. The Huddersfield man missed an open goal through slipping as he was about to shoot. Scotland then broke away again and Walker got through but his pass to the wing went over the line. Following that the Irishmen almost scored, Houston sending in a beautiful shot which Brownlie failed to hold. Macaulay dashed up and neatly put the ball through, but recovering well Brownlie cleared magnificently. For the next five minutes Scotland had the better of matters, and after a brief attack by Ireland, Scotland scored again, Sinclair sending the ball across for Aitkenhead to put through after a scrimmage. After that Houston, the Linfield winger, made a very good effort to get past the Scottish defence and was almost successful. In a subsequent attack upon the Scottish goal McNair handled in the penalty area, and from the ensuing kick McKnight scored for Ireland. Scotland was soon pressing again, Templeton and Aitkenhead doing good work, and Hanna had to clear a hard shot from the Blackburn Rover. Then Houston got away again, the Scottish goal having a narrow escape. The first half ended with Hanna saving brilliantly from Reid. Interval scores:—

Ireland resumed with a strong attack, Macaulay being cleverly pulled up by McNair. Play was soon at the other end again, Hanna having to concede a corner in stopping a good shot from Walker. The Irishmen continued to play well. Houston after a splendid run getting in a good centre. Enright, however, sent behind. Following that Scotland dashed away and scored again. Reid received a neat pass from Low, and cleverly beat the two Irish backs with a neat dribble.

Hanna ran out to clear but Reid tricked him as well and placed the ball in the net. Another attack by Scotland was spoilt by Templeton getting off-side, and although Ireland got some relief from the free-kick, Walker, of Swindon, had no difficulty in once more transferring the play to the vicinity of the Irish goal. Low got in a fine shot, but although hampered by Reid and Aitkenhead, Hanna cleared well. Just about this time Scotland were easily the superior team, but they did not take advantage of several good openings. From a free-kick just outside the penalty area Hanna saved again in brilliant fashion, and then Houston got away once more, only to be pulled up by McNair when he seemed likely to go through. Just afterwards Walker scored for Scotland with a dropping shot which took Hanna unawares and then Ireland lost the services of Macaulay. They made a great rally near the end, but could not get through, and the result of the match was:

ENGLAND vs. HOLLAND.—Teams of amateurs representing England and Holland met at Hull in brilliantly fine weather and with 8,000 people looking on the Englishmen gained an easy victory by four goals to none. The turf was rather heavy, but despite that handicap some fast football took place. Holland were the first to attack, Brebner having to clear from a well-placed centre from Bouvy. The English forwards soon settled down, and in some strong pressure Wright missed a good opportunity when well placed to score. The game was less then ten minutes old when England took the lead, Woodward shooting through after neat passing by Bailey and Wright. Five minutes later Bailey added another goal from a centre by Wright. Despite these early reverses Holland played very good football and following a spirited run by Vos and Kolff, Thomee was nearly through. Later on Gobel, the Dutch goalkeeper, made several brilliant saves, on one occasion running out and taking the ball from Berry's feet. Then from a centre by Perry, Bailey scored another goal for England. Gobel did further good work after that, and at half-time England led by three goals to none. In the early stages of the second half Berry showed fine form and repeatedly beat the Holland backs, but the English inside forwards failed to take advantage of several good opportunities. Then Holland forced a corner and from a centre by Bouvy there was an exciting scrimmage in front of the English goal. Brebner, however, ultimately got the ball away safely. After that the Englishmen frequently attacked, Gobel distinguishing himself with many fine saves. Towards the end Holland had a good chance of scoring when Brebner left his charge to clear, but the Dutch forwards did not shoot well. Just before the close Wright kicked another goal for England. Result:—

England	...	...	4

SCOTLAND VS. ENGLAND.

THE match at Inverleith on the 16th instant—the last of the purely British internationals this season under International rules—was the thirty-ninth of the series of games between the two countries. Of the thirty-eight previous matches Scotland had won sixteen, England thirteen and nine had been left drawn. For yesterday's match England, as was only natural, enjoyed a strong favouritism. They had beaten Wales by a goal and a try to nothing, and Ireland by five tries to nothing, whereas Scotland suffered a severe defeat at the hands of Wales and lost by ten points to eight to Ireland. England only made one change in the team that beat Ireland so easily, Stoop returning to his old place at half-back to the exclusion of Coverdale. Scotland on the other hand, made six alterations from the side they put in the field against Ireland, the newcomers being Dixon, Sutherland, Burnett, Boyd, Bain, and Usherwood. Four of the changes were in the back division. Though victory for England was so confidently expected, the match lost nothing of its old attraction. Half an hour before the time for the start of play the unreserved portion of the ground was practically full. The weather had been delightful in the morning, but as time went on the atmosphere became rather dull and chilly. The ground was in excellent condition, and apart from the breeze being a trifle too strong there seemed every promise of a first-rate display. As is usual on these occasions, music was largely utilised to while away the time of the crowd before the match began. A body of pipers supplemented the efforts of the big brass band. Despite the coal-strike, some special trains were run from Glasgow to Border Town and before three o'clock there must at a rough estimate, have been over 20,000 people on the ground. As the time of the kick off drew near the wind increased blowing straight down the field. At half past three the time fixed for the start neither team had put in an appearance, but five minutes later the Englishmen led by Dibble, came out, the Scotchmen quickly following them.

England won the toss and at something before twenty minutes to four McCallum kicked off. The Scotchmen followed up smartly, and the first scrummage was found in England's twenty-five. Stoop, however, soon had the ball out among his three-quarters. A little later, with England pressing, Sutherland got in a fine return to mid-field. Burnett and Will did some smart work, and things were beginning to look rather serious for England when Roberts cleared. The Scotchmen, however, attacked again at once, and in a race for touch over the England line Milroy was only just beaten. Then a free kick to England for feet up relieved the pressure. Still the Scotchmen were not to be denied, and with brilliant footwork they were twice nearly in and must have scored if Sutherland had gathered a lofty pass. Finding touch in the centre of the ground. Poulton relieved England for a moment, but Dixon just afterwards sent the ball to the visitors' twenty-five flag. A scrummage followed, and thanks to some smart work by the English forwards Sutherland was collared before he could get in his kick. King was now injured and had to retire. Just after this Johnston, in collaring Will, was knocked out but fortunately for his side was able to go on again. With King off the field England were, of course, at a manifest disadvantage. After Burnett had dropped his pass Birkett dashed up and kicked so hard that Dixon had no trouble in returning the ball. The Scotsmen now came with a grand burst and took the ball right on the English ground. Getting possession of the ball the three-quarters came away, but Poulton, passing forward to Roberts, England were penalised. McCallum had a capital chance of placing a goal, but the strong wind carried the ball to the side of the post. So far Scotland had shown a marked superiority at every point. At last England brought off a good passing movement, but it came to nothing. Sutherland bringing Brougham down. Just after this Dixon failed to pick up and for the first time since the opening minutes of the game England got to within a few yards of the Scottish line. Then a great chance was lost through Poulton again passing to Roberts. A minute later Poulton was nearly in but he did not quite succeed. For a brief space the pressure was relieved, but before long Stafford broke through and sent the ball to Stoop, who threw it out to Birkett. For a moment the last-named looked dangerous, but being swung round he gave a forward pass and the ball, but being swung round he gave a forward pass and the chance was lost. Just after this hesitating play by England allowed Sutherland a run. A cross kick carried the ball over the England line, but Roberts touched down. For the second time in the match Johnston was damaged. Being charged as he made his mark he rolled over and was obviously in much pain. On the game being resumed after this mishap, Dibble made a wretched kick, but still England gradually gained ground, and the ball going over the line, Scotland touched down. Following the drop out, Sutherland missed a great chance, but a minute later the same player was nearly in. With Sutherland still conspicuous, Scotland was within a few yards of the English line at the interval. Half-time:

On the game being started afresh, a knock on was given against Johnston. England were at once on the defensive again, and could give no relief, Roberts blundering rather badly. Within three minutes a good combined movement sent the ball out to the right wing and Sutherland racing in secured a try in the corner for Scotland. McCallum took the place kick, but just failed to convert. Usher, dashing through, was nearly in directly after this, but lost the ball, which rolled dead. Penned to their own twenty-five the Englishmen touched down twice and were very hard pressed. Brougham had one chance given him by Birkett, but was smartly tackled. The strong pressure continued and as a result of faulty work by the English backs Usher was nearly through when the second half had been in progress twenty-seven minutes. Then came a change. The ball was taken to the other end and Holland, getting over in the corner, scored a try for England

McIlwaine took the place-kick, but was not successful. Some very exciting play followed. The Scotchmen dashed away for attack, and England being penalised Turner took the place. Stoop caught the ball and sent it to Poulton, who dodged through midfield, Roberts carrying the game into the Scotch half. Strenuous from the start, the play became harder than ever during the last few minutes. The English forwards did better work then before, but Pym found touch and the Scotch position was relieved. Then a wretched pass from Birkett let Scotland in. Usher scrambled over in the corner with only five minutes left, and Turner placing a splendid goal, Scotland won by eight points to three.

RACKETS.

'VARSITY RACKETS.—Remarkably fine play was witnessed in the Cambridge University Rackets Challenge Cup, which event also decides who shall compete against Oxford. The standard reached was higher than can be remembered for some years. F. A. Sampson, the holder of the cup for the past two years, being defeated by H. W. Leathem, who is a greatly improved player. Though not definitely decided upon, it is probable that the inter-'Varsity matches will be played on 17th or 18th April and the Cambridge prospects, in both the singles and the doubles, are very rosy. There were eight entries for the cup, the final resulting in Leathem beating Lang by 3 games to 1, with scores of 15—9, 17—14, 10—15, and 15—6.

Leathem, as the winner of the competition, challenged F. A. Sampson (Rugby and Trinity), the holder, who was beaten by 3 games to 1: 15—12, 15—17, 10—15, and 15—0. Lang, who challenged Sampson for second place, was defeated by 3 games to love: 15—6, 15—8, 15—7.

Polo.

THE EXPENSE OF POLO AND THE HEIGHT QUESTION.

THE future of our games is not a matter that greatly troubles the majority of us: so the existing condition of affairs contents us, we are not much in the habit of looking forward, more especially if by looking forward we discern possibilities of trouble in waiting. And yet it must be clear to polo players that if the game is to continue one in which men of moderate means may participate, steps of some kind are necessary to reduce the increasing expenses. Polo in this country is not the game it was ten years ago—or five years ago; it is not too much to say that the cost of ponies, not necessarily first class ponies has doubled within the last few years; with the inevitable result that all but men of means are being, we will not say, driven off the polo ground, but excluded from it. In a game like polo, to which the would-be player must be entered early, when his youthful powers are at their best, this is a serious matter. We do not think it will be denied that every man who has attained to a noticeable standard of proficiency is one who has played the game from his early twenties; he who, for lack of means or opportunity, never took polo stick in hand until he was "turned thirty" rarely arrives at a degree of skill above the average of station polo of very moderate kind. It is then desirable that, in the interests of the game itself, the expenses of participation should not forbid the rising generation to make it their game. It is the greater pity that any game should become costly beyond the reach of the majority out here: one of the greatest temptations that India held out to the youth of spirit seeking a career, was the prospect of sharing in sports and games which are quite beyond his reach in the old country. Parents, drawing upon the memories of a day that is past, or at least passing with regretable rapidity, fire the young ambition with pictures of the larger opportunities offered by life in this country. If the tendency to increased expense of games and sports—for polo does not stand alone, unfortunately—continues, the colours which lend those pictures their attraction must be toned down; and when India ceases to be able to offer attractions to the youth of brain and muscle—to youth of the stamp that built up the Empire—the effects will be felt over a vastly wider area than that of sport.

There can be doubt that the number of polo players is steadily decreasing; we make all allowance for the growing system of going home on leave whenever possible; that of itself sufficiently accounts for the falling off in the numerical strength of polo players to some extent; but the general feeling seems to be that there are far fewer recruits to the game than there used to be; and the explanation is always the same: "Fellows simply can't afford it." It is difficult to suggest a remedy. Wealth sets the pace wherever it enters and the demand for ponies as a matter of course send up prices as it grows; some years ago when the game was beginning to rise into wider popularity at Home and its spokesmen were realising the necessity of calming parental fears for the pocket, many plans, sensible and the reverse, were put forward to bring the game within reach of the man of moderate means: none succeeded; none, so far as our knowledge goes, even were accorded practical trial. In our truly British fashion the thing was left to work out its own salvation; with the result that polo at home is become a "close borough" for the wealthy. At Home this matters less; there are other games in which the poorer among the brethren can take part all the year round; but in this country the case is different; men come out here, as we have said, largely because they expect to share in pleasures which are not within their reach at Home; and if those expectations are not too realised India will cease to attract the class of man we want.

We have no faith in any remedial measure, or measures, which attempt to control expenses by schemes of classification; one of the plans mooted at Home long ago was based upon a proposed dividing line in height; the idea was that Class A Polo should be played on ponies not exceeding 14·1 while Class B Polo should be opened only to ponies of 13·3 and under. We write from memory and do not pledge ourselves to it that these were the heights actually suggested; but that was the principle of the scheme. That it was never tried may perhaps have been due to the knowledge that no power on earth could keep ponies that were eligible for Class A out of games played in Class B. The truth is the easy-going tolerance of the polo player has made the height question one practically impossible of solution; we frankly declare our conviction that it is impossible to secure obedience to any height rule until the limit shall have been raised to 16·2! We all know how earnestly the lawgivers at Hurlingham approached this difficult subject a few years ago: they fixed the height at 14·2; appointed an official measurer and laid down regulations at once clear and drastic, in the fond hope that the ever-active height spectre would be thereby laid. Has it been laid? Not a bit of it! One of the foremost among the pioneers of the polo-pony breeding industry wrote in these terms a few months ago:—"Why may I ask, is it necessary, and what useful purpose can it serve, to ride animals in the game not exceeding 14·2 hands, when the aim and object of every player in high-class matches is to get them as much above that height, when once measured, as possible? Why not throw the height open—if 15·1 or larger horses are found to answer the purpose better, and give better sport, what can be the object of riding smaller ones? And why should not this be recognised by all concerned? If asked the height of a polo pony now the owner often replies, 'Oh! he is 14·2 polo measurement': this, being interpreted, means anything up to 15·1."

We are very much of the opinion of Mr. John Hill, the writer of the foregoing remarks. Lacking faith in loyalty to height rules we feel much inclined to suggest the total abolition of rules which nobody obeys more closely than he can help; which everyone dodges with the genial connivance of everybody else. We are inclined to think that abolition of the height rule might do something to restore the popularity of the game, which is the end we have in view. Abolish the height limit and something is left to that sense of sportsmanship which weighs far more with most men than rule and regulation. If we gained nothing we should assuredly lose nothing; we should only be legalising an almost universal practice; and we should perhaps open the door to men who would play if their existing possessions in horseflesh could be used on the polo-ground. There would seem to be some idea of a further increase in polo height at home—these periodical extensions point to ultimate abolition—in the recent decision of the Polo-pony Society's Council to raise the height of stallions eligible for their stud-book to 15 hands.

THE INDIAN POLO ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE proceedings of the annual committee meeting of the Indian Polo Association held at the Officers' Mess, 13th Hussars, Meerut, on Tuesday, the 5th March, have been recently published. We reprint them below:—

(1) The following members of the Indian Polo Association Committee attended the meeting:—

MEMBERS.

1st Division—(By Proxy) Lieutenant-Colonel Baldwin.
2nd Division—Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. B. Barnes, 10th Hussars.
3rd Division—Major H. F. Wickham, K. D. G's.
5th Division—(By Proxy) Major Neil Haig.
8th Division—Major G. M. Mort, 8th Hussars.
Calcutta—(By Proxy) Captain A. Tod.

(2) Copies of the balance sheet of the past year having been circulated the accounts were passed.

(3) It was proposed and passed unanimously that Major-General T. D. Pilcher, C. B., be asked to act as President of the Association.

General Pilcher kindly consented to act as President for the ensuing year and took the chair.

(4) The Committee for the ensuing year will be constituted as follows:—

1st Division, Peshawar—Lieutenant-Colonel F. G. H. Davies, the Q. O. Corps of Guides.
2nd Division, Rawalpindi—Lieutenant-Colonel R. W. B. Barnes, 10th Royal Hussars.
3rd Division, Lahore—Major H. F. Wickham, 1st (King's) Dragoon Guards.
4th Division, Quetta—Captain J. B. Egerton, 23rd Cavalry F. F.
5th Division, Mhow—Brigadier-General R. Wapshare, Cavalry School, Saugor.
6th Division, Poona—Captain E. L. Popham, 36th K. G. O. Light Cavalry.
7th Division, Meerut—Lieutenant-Colonel R. St. C. Lecky, R. H. A.
8th Division, Lucknow—Major G. M. Mort, 8th Hussars.
9th Division, Secunderabad—Major C. S. Stack, 33rd Q. O. Light Cavalry.
Civilian Member—Bombay—Colonel Forbes.
Civilian Member—Calcutta—Hon. Sir C. Graham.

(5) Major J. J. Richardson, 13th Hussars, was re-elected as Honorary Secretary.

(6) A Sub-Committee composed as below was authorised to distribute the I. P. A. Surplus Funds:—

Lieutenant-Colonel R. St. C. Lecky.
" " R. W. B. Barnes.
" " Baldwin.
Major Neil Haig.
" H. F. Wickham.
" G. M. Mort.
" J. J. Richardson.

(7) A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir Douglas Haig, K. C. V. O., C. B., for his valuable services to the Association during his term of office.

(8) Proposed by Major E. A. Fagan, 36th Jacob's Horse:—

That Divisional and Civilian Representative members be abolished and a return be made to the old system of the General Meeting once a year.

Not passed.

(9) Proposed by Major Neil Haig and seconded by Colonel Forbes:—

That Rule 8 of the Indian Polo Association stand as at present, and that a General Committee meeting of the Club be held at Delhi, in consideration with the Championship Tournament in the event of its being considered suitable to hold the latter Tournament at Delhi next season, or in conjunction with the Native Cavalry Tournament should it be held there.

Passed.

(10) Proposed by Captain Jackson, 27th Cavalry—

(a) That an alphabetical list of all players with their handicaps (if they have one) and the Tournaments they have played in during the past five years, be added to the Indian Polo Association Calendar.

(b) That an alphabetical list of the names of all ponies granted Indian Polo Association Certificates (season or life) during the past five years be prepared, showing in addition to the number, the year of measurement and age, when first granted a certificate.

Carried by the votes of the members and accepted in principle by the Committee, but in view of the liability of the present clerical staff of the Association to carry it out, the Committee decided to ask Captain Jackson to prepare and maintain the list of players and the tournaments in which they have played.

(11) The Committee declined to legislate on the proposal of Captain Grimshaw, Poona Horse, with regard to prohibition of Indian soldiers from playing in Polo Tournaments: the general feeling that this proposal embodied a condition, which could, if thought desirable, be provided for locally by Committees of Tournaments.

(12) The proposal to delete Rule 27 from the Polo Rules of the Indian Polo Association was not passed.

(13) Proposed by Major Neil Haig and seconded by Major Mort—

That for the season 1912-13 all Tournaments under Indian Polo Association Rules be played without "off side."

Rule 27 is accordingly deleted for one year as from 1st April 1912.

(14) Proposed by Colonel Lecky, R.H.A. and seconded by Colonel Forbes,—

That the handicap system be permanently adopted under the Indian Polo Association Rules.

Passed.

(15) The proposal to add the following to Rule 5:—

"To assist the umpire in deciding" after "whose sole duty is," was passed.

Rule 5 therefore now reads as follows:—

Each side shall nominate an umpire, unless it be mutually agreed to play with one instead of two; and his or their decisions shall be final. Also goal referees shall be appointed, whose sole duty is to assist the umpires in deciding whether the ball has passed between the goal posts, or between those posts produced. In important matches in addition to the umpires, a referee may be appointed whose decision in the event of the umpires disagreeing shall be final.

Bye-Law No. 1 accordingly is deleted from the Rules and Bye-Law No. 2 becomes the only Bye-Law.

N. B.—In accordance with this decision the final responsibility, in the event of a disagreement as to whether the ball has passed between the goal posts or not, rests with the umpires.

(16) With regard to the consideration of the appointment of an Official Measurer at Sialkot and Bangalore with I. P. A. measuring standards, it was decided that a re-arrangement of areas be made in the Punjab and Southern India.

With regard to Dacca it was decided that the number of ponies measured there in the last three years, does not justify another standard in that District.

(17) The following were elected to act as I. P. A. Members of the Hurlingham Club Committee for the ensuing year:—

Major W. A. Tilney, 17th (D. C. O.) Lancers.
Captain R. G. Hixson, 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.
Mr. W. L. Palmer, 10th Royal Hussars.

(18) The scheme by Major R. O. B. Taylor for the handicapping of ponies by price was discussed and decided to be impractical.

(19) The question of height and measurement of ponies was raised and fully discussed. The Committee while recognising

(20) Certain alterations to Rules were proposed, and these are being circulated to clubs.

THE PENALTY AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

A POINT which seems to merit discussion at the forthcoming annual meeting of the Indian Polo Association Committee is the alteration of No. 37 of the Rules of Polo, says the Pall Mall Gazette. At present it reads as follows: "In the case of a penalty being incurred towards the end of a match, and there not being time to exact the penalty before the final bell rings, one minute extra shall be allowed from the time the ball is hit, or hit at, in carrying out the penalty."

Now the primary object of this rule is, of course, to give the fouled side an opportunity of enjoying the advantages of their penalty hit even though the irregularity has occurred just on the stroke of "time"; but, as a matter of fact, says the Pioneer Mail, circumstances may easily occur in which exactly the opposite is the case.

Suppose that one side holds a lead of one goal, and suppose that the other side, within ten seconds of the final bell, commits a dangerous foul—then the whole advantage rests with the offending team. For this reason: The penalty for a dangerous foul is a free hit from fifty yards (or if preferred from where the foul occurred) at an open goal. Before the two sides have lined up, the bell has sounded, and the fouled team will probably say, "It's no use our taking this hit because we have already won the match." But to this the penalised team are entitled to reply: "No; under Rule 37 you have no option. We are bound to play on for a full minute, from the moment you hit at the ball." What is the result? If the penalty shot is successful, it is of little moment to the losers whether they are beaten by two goals or only one. But if they rush out and succeed in stopping it, or if it goes harmlessly behind—one of which contingencies happens, according to statistician, on three occasions out of every four—then about fifty-four seconds remain during which they are quite likely to make a lucky run and equalise, and it is perfectly within the bounds of possibility that they may be blessed with two such strokes of fortune, and thus actually win the match as a result of the commission of a dangerous foul.

As a matter of fact, the usual result of a "fifty-yard hit" is either that it scores, or the ball goes behind, in which case, if it occurs at the end of a match and one team is ahead both sides by common consent leave the field. But according to Rule 37, this is illegal. It says:—"an extra minute shall be allowed"—and although it may be urged, and with great justice, that any that team taking advantage of the circumstances suggested above would show distinct lack of sporting spirit, yet it is surely paradoxical to assert that a team is unsportsmanlike because it plays the game strictly according to rule.

Take another case. Two teams are equal, but one gained a big advantage early in the game, and has, through lack of condition or of ponies, been steadily losing ground ever since, until now, almost at the end of the last chukker, its opponents are strongly on the offensive, and it is experiencing the utmost difficulty in staving off defeat. At this point, one of the attacking team hooks a stick from the wrong side of the pony. The penalty for this is either a free hit from the spot where the foul took place, or a "hit out" from the offenders' goal line. Before the penalty can be exacted the final bell goes, and an extra minute must be played. In all probability this will be a distinct advantage to the fouling side.

The penalty is not a very serious one: their wearied opponents are denied a rest and a change of ponies, while the goals are widened; they themselves, perhaps, have got a good "swing" on, and wish to press home their advantage while it lasts; and in any case if the goals have to be widened, the match is more likely to terminate, more or less fluky, in favour of the side which gets the first clear run. Other cases could be cited in which this rule may operate unfairly, and although, as has been mentioned above, it is very often unobserved, yet it is unsatisfactory that an ordinance should be allowed in the Polo Calendar, the operation of which may be in direct opposition to the intention with which it was framed.

The main point on which to insist is that on no account shall the victory, or chances of victory of a team be jeopardised by the necessity of exacting a penalty, and, with this end in view, it would seem that the Rule might be satisfactorily amended by the addition of the words—"But the side fouled may decline to exact the penalty."

The argument against such an amendment is, of course, that a losing side might be induced to foul indiscriminately, regardless of consequences, in the last chukker. But it is extremely improbable that this would actually be its effect, first because intentionally foul play is happily very uncommon in polo and extraordinarily injurious to the reputation; secondly because the penalty would always be exacted, at any rate, until the last forty seconds of the game; and, thirdly, because of the danger of being warned off the ground by the umpire.

WILLIE was a smart boy and ambitious. His first job was a post in a local bank. "Well, Willie," asked his uncle one day, "how are you getting on in business? I suppose you will soon be manager?" "Yes, uncle," replied Willie; "I'm already a draught clerk." "A draft clerk! Good. And what are your duties?" "I open and shut the windows according to orders," said Willie and close the doors after people who leave 'em open."

Athletics.

DOUBLE BLUES.

For the first time since 1870, when Jack Dale rowed in the Cambridge eight and played in the Cambridge eleven, being on the winning side in both matches, a man has the proud privilege of being a Double Blue, for D. C. Collins, who rows two in this year's Cambridge eight, has played cricket for his University for the past two years.

Of late a habit has grown up of calling a man a Double Blue who has represented his University in any two different sports or contests, but of right the title belongs to those who have taken part in both the boat race and the cricket match.

And the distinction is a very rare one nowadays, as since sports have become more specialised, it is difficult for a man to devote himself to rowing sufficiently to become worthy of a seat in the boat and at the same time to give up the whole of the summer term to cricket.

In the old days athletes at the Universities were comparatively few, as those inclined to sport went in principally for riding, driving and shooting, while the reading men at Cambridge used to do the "Trumpington grind," a devotion to which was said to be as necessary for the making of a Senior Wrangler as a close study of mathematics.

THE TWOFOLD HONOURS.

Double Blues of the lesser sort have been plentiful, such, for example, as J. H. Ridley and J. F. Strachan, both of whom rowed in 1870 for Cambridge after representing the University, one in the quarter mile in 1868 and the other in the 100 yards in 1896; C. Gordon, who rowed four years in the boat and played Rugby football for Cambridge in 1878; and E. R. Balfour, who rowed for Oxford in 1896-97 and played Rugby football in 1893-95.

Then there was C. B. Fry, who represented Oxford in the high jump, long jump, and 100 yards between 1892 and 1895, played cricket and Association football for the same four years, and only just missed his Rugby blue.

The first real Double Blue was Charles Wordsworth, afterwards Bishop of St. Andrews, who was one of the fathers of the Boat Race, rowing four in 1829 and playing cricket for Oxford in 1827 and 1829, when, by the way, Cambridge had not yet begun to wear the Light Blue. In 1827 he scored 8 and took seven wickets in the unfinished first match, and in 1829 he took two wickets, caught two men, and made a couple of duck's eggs.

Cambridge supplied the next Double Blue, J. Abercrombie, who, in 1836, played in the University XI. against Oxford, but as he was absent in the first innings and was bowled for nothing in the second, he cannot be said to have made much of a mark as a cricketer. But in 1839 he rowed three in a very fine and victorious crew.

"TOM BROWN'S" BROTHER.

He was followed by W. Massey, who rowed two for Cambridge in 1840 and played cricket in 1838 and 1839, making 3 and 0 on the first occasion and 0 on the second; not a magnificent score.

Then came G. E. Hughes, the brother of "Tom Brown" Hughes, who rowed seven in the Oxford boat in 1842 and made 12 and 0 in the cricket match. In 1844 S. T. Clissold rowed three in the Cambridge boat and played cricket in 1844 and 1846, but like most oarsmen, he was not much of a bat, his highest score in three innings being 2, but in 1846 he took no fewer than eight wickets in the two innings. J. Aitken was a much better cricketer. He rowed five in the second race in 1849, but he played in 1848-49-50 for Oxford, being captain in his last year. His highest scores were 36 and 31.

J. W. Chitty, the Lord Justice, rowed for Oxford in both the 1849 races and stroked in 1852, which is known as "Chitty's year." He played for Oxford in 1848-49, but did not do much as a batsman, though he kept wicket in both years and was captain in 1849. W. A. Norris scored 12 for Cambridge in 1851, and in the following year rowed seven in the boat.

Next came J. McCormick, who was one of the four Double Blues in the elevens of 1856. He rowed six for Cambridge in 1856 and played cricket in 1854 and 1856, the second year as captain. He also played for Gentleman vs. Players.

Another Cambridge Double Blue was W. Wingfield, who steered in 1856 and played in 1855-56-57, making poor scores till his last year, when he hit up 54 in his second innings. Two Oxford Double Blues were also in the eleven—G. Bennett, who rowed seven and scored a pair of spectacles, and C. G. Lane, who rowed three in 1858-59 and played cricket in 1856-58-59-60, being captain in his last year.

He also played five years for Westminster and five years for Gentlemen vs. Players, but good cricketer as he was, his average for seven innings in the University match was only 5.

EIGHT FROM EACH UNIVERSITY.

Then in 1861 S. O. H. Bidsdale was coxswain of the Oxford boat and the next year was wicket-keeper in the eleven, but made no runs in either innings. E. S. Carter rowed seven for Oxford in 1868, but after playing cricket in 1866-67, making fair scores and taking seven wickets in the two matches.

The last and most useful of the Double Blues was J. W. Dale, the prettiest bat of his day, who rowed three behind Goldie in 1869 and 1870 and played cricket for Cambridge in 1868-69-70, a remarkably fine record. His best score was 67 in 1870, when he and William Yardley (100) stopped the rot in the Cambridge eleven and so enabled F. C. Cobden to win the most sensational match in the annals of University cricket by performing the "hat" trick and so securing a victory by 2 runs.

Since then there has not been a double Blue for rowing and cricket until D. C. Collins, the New Zealand cricketer, took up

Each University has contributed eight to the list of Double Blues. Of the Public Schools Eton has found four, Tonbridge three (which is remarkable for a school that has only recently taken up rowing), Harrow two and Winchester, Westminster, Rugby, Rossall and Durham one each, while one came from Liverpool, and the last on the list from Wellington College, New Zealand.

Of the colleges, First Trinity has contributed three, Third Trinity and Christ Church two each and Oriel, Balliol, New College, Lady Margaret, Wadham, Worcester, Exeter and Caius one apiece.

PUNJAB COMMISSION CUP TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

17TH LANCERS vs. MANCHESTER REGIMENT.—These teams met in the final match of the Punjab Commission Cup Tournament in the Lawrence Gardens, Lahore, on the 3rd, 4th and 6th instant. The Lancers won the toss and went in first, scoring 276. Of this Fowler, the old Eton captain, made 124 not out—a steady display; and Mitchell (30) and Lockett (40) were the other principal scorers. The Manchesters then went in and were all out for 225, Tillard putting together 73 by attractive cricket. Shaw (45) also batted well. Going in again the Lancers made 164 for 6 wickets when stumps were drawn for the day. Lockett scored 42, Roll 46 and Fowler 51 not out. On Saturday the innings closed for 215, Fowler being still undefeated with 77 to his credit. The Manchesters were left with 265 to make to win, but were dismissed for 193. Shaw again batted well, contributing a nicely played 83. The 17th thus won by 71 runs. Of the bowler Bostock did best for the Manchesters, taking 5 for 82, and 5 for 82, while Fowler with 5 for 72 and 3 for 67 was the most successful of the cavalry trundlers. Sir Arthur Reid made a short congratulatory speech and Lady Reid handed the cup to the winners at the close of the game. Score:—

FREAK GOLF.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS OF FAMOUS MATCHES.

THIS blindfold golf, about which there was such a to-do in England recently is, of course, in the nature of freak golf. It is only just on the edge of that description, however, and is not properly to be classed with exhibitions by light-minded golfers, in which they essay to play something as much like the game as possible while wearing frock-coats and top hats, or to drive a ball as it should be driven, while a Scotsman, real or imitation, is skirling the "Cock o' the North" at a distance of only two clubs length from the tee. The historic affair at Sandwich is a case in point, when one gentleman played a round of sorts with a champagne bottle as his only "club" against a new golfer, who was allowed the advantage of all his clubs. These are affairs in which there is no sort of sense whatever, and the publication to the world in general of the circumstances attending the performance tends to cast discredit on the game. Therefore all golfers, for the sake of their dignity and the dignity of their game, discountenance them.

The people who urge the practicability of blindfold golf try to make out some sort of a case for it and plead that there is some true moral to be deduced from their experiences along this path of investigation, wherefore their efforts, however, much they may be derided by the most excellent golf conservatives, are perhaps only to be classed as semi-freak golf.

Giving the blindfolders all the credit for good intentions that they ask for, even they would never advocate playing golf in this way instead of holding their eyesight fast on to the ball. That they can ever manage to make any sort of a stroke whatever with their sight temporarily withheld from them is a marvel and a mystery, but there is evidence constantly of the marvellous things that these golfers can do, and a few of their achievements in the way of the semi-freak game are worth a brief consideration at this moment.

GOLF BY NIGHT.

The nearest thing to blindfold golf is that which is played in the dark or in moon-light, and that has very often been done and with a fair amount of success. The pioneers in this sort of thing were Lord Kennedy and his opponent, Mr. Cruikshank, in a match, often described, that took place about the middle of last century at Langley Park. It was started at ten o'clock on a very dark night, and the only lights allowed were lanterns at each of the three holes that it was agreed should constitute the full course.

These people belonged to a very strong sporting set who were always making all kinds of extraordinary wagers about everything that it was possible to bet about, and nothing would content them on this occasion but that they should play for £500 a hole, which they did accordingly, the match being taken to the last hole. There is no record as to which of the parties was the winner, but there was a hole to pay for, and it is said that they played so well that they took no more strokes than they usually did in daylight. I prefer to think that this only proved that in daylight they generally took far more strokes than they ought to do, and that their game was so deficient in quality that it made very little difference under what conditions they played.

Great performances have been accomplished in the way of midnight golf in the high North of Scotland in the middle of summer when it never gets really dark at all, but this is not quite the same thing. There is no reason why a man should not play exactly like a champion and break the record of the course if he can see his ball properly in a very strong twilight.

MOONLIGHT MATCHES.

But moonlight is a different thing, for in this case you lose the sense, or instinct, or capacity for mentally measuring distances as between your hands and club and the ball, and some of the difficulties of blindfold golf crop up, but not all of them.

Two or three years back Fred M'Leod, the Scottish professional at the Onwentsia Club of Chicago, backed himself to do the first nine holes of his course by moonlight in less than 45 strokes, and he won by doing them in 38, and, going on, he came home in 45, so that his full round was an excellent 83. He very wisely played only with iron clubs, using a putter from the tee, to make certain of a good line, and a mid-iron through the green. But three or four years before that the professional at the Wollaston, another American club, did his course in 80 by moonlight, having backed himself to do it in less than 100. In this case he was allowed to have candles fixed at many points of the course, so that the watches would be aided in their efforts to see where the ball would drop, to prevent losses. The lights were not wanted, however, as the ball dropped nicely in the middle of the fairway every time.

No need here to notice the freak matches of the kind which often take place, in which a golfer, playing his ball in the ordinary way, is pitted against an archer who tries to get his arrow into the hole in fewer shots than his opponent does to get his golf ball there; and an allied absurdity is that in which the golfer is matched against a person who tries to throw or bowl a cricket ball into the hole. Another variety of the semi-freak golf is that in which the golfer makes an attempt to play his ball through the streets of big towns, or across miles of rough and open country in as few strokes as may be, and in this department some very extraordinary things have been done which serve to show the skill of the player and his strength of resource.

HARRY VARDON'S FEAT.

Only the other day we heard of Harry Vardon at Le Touquet, where he still is, playing from the garden in front of his hotel across the country to the sea shore, a distance of about a mile and a half, which he did in eleven strokes there and fourteen back, which was considered most excellent.

Two summers ago I was a witness of a strange effort at golf in which two golfers played their balls from a spot just outside the town of Mold, in Flintshire, to the top of the favourite local mountain, Moel Famman, which is nearly 2,000 feet high, with very rough sides covered with gorse and ferns, and about three miles distant from the starting point. A ball was "holed out" on the tower on the top of the mountain in 136 strokes, four hours after the start.

The longest cross-country hole of this kind ever played was that which Mr. Hall Blyth and Willie Campbell tackled in 1880, when they golfed from the old course at North Berwick to the High Hole at Gullane, a distance of nine miles, Mr. Hall Blyth going inland through Dirleton and Campbell trying the short route, and failing badly by it.

A Time Test.

Then there is the time test kind of freak golf. Last year a Sunningdale golfer backed himself to play round the links in an hour and hole out at every hole. This certainly meant that he would have to hurry up. He had relays of caddies and plenty of scouts to watch where his ball dropped, and he won with eleven minutes in hand, doing the last nine holes in twenty-six minutes, and the last three in five strokes each. I will give endurance golf (that kind in which a man tries to play as many rounds as he can in a day, nine having been properly accomplished) the benefit of the doubt, and not class it among freak golf of any kind.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

After Calcutta's defeat by the Customs, which match decided the League Championship, the competition was robbed of much interest; but despite the threatening evening last Tuesday, there was a large number of spectators on the Calcutta ground to witness the match against the Rangers. It is true that Calcutta lost, and lost badly, to both the Riversiders and the Rangers, but on neither occasion were the "Reds" representative. However, this was not all, for against both teams Calcutta had quite as much of the play as did their opponents during the first fifteen minutes, but after this they went all to pieces, and unless they can last better Calcutta cannot hope to make much of a show in the Beighton Competition. If the "Reds" are fortunate in the drawing, and do not meet Rangers or Customs until the semi-finals, then Calcutta may be depended on rendering a much better account of themselves against these two teams, but should they knock up either against the Rangers or Customs in the earlier rounds, it does not matter who represents Calcutta, they will never, under present conditions, beat the two leading League teams. Some of their men tire very soon, and if the records of the club are to be satisfactory, their left half back must not be included in the team when playing Rangers or Customs. He plays quite a good game for the first ten minutes, but he tires very soon, and during the second half is more in the way than a help to his side. Indeed it is the whole of the third line that let their side down during the second half, especially if during the initial one the play has been of a fast character.

The Rangers, the present holders of the Beighton Cup, will fight every inch to retain possession of the trophy, and the team that beats the Rangers will annex the prize. This year the winners will, in addition to the Beighton Cup, receive another cup which has been called the Bengal Hockey Challenge Cup. The Rangers will probably play the same team that beat Calcutta on Tuesday.

There are a few postponed matches yet to be decided, and as the Beighton commences next Monday these games will have to be played between this and Saturday. The Medicals have made improvements in their team, and in order to qualify two players have had to give up their points in recent matches. Captain Green-Armytage and Boucher have strengthened the side, but it is a pity that Craine has declined to play, and West gone up-country for his holidays. If Craine and West represent the Medicals in the knock-out tournament the wearers of the skull and cross bones will want some beating. The Medicals lost to the Rangers by 2—1 after a hard game, but beat Measurers by 5—2 and Sibpur by 1—0. However, the two latter teams get the points, as Captain Green-Armytage had already represented Calcutta in the League.

The Customs in their match against the Measurers last Saturday gave their supporters a fright, when at the interval the Riversiders were two goals to the bad. As the Customs were minus Seth, their goal-keeper, and Williamson, their centre half, most people thought the League champions would be beaten; but during the second half a great change came over the aspect of the game, and in twenty minutes the Customs put up no fewer than five goals. Just before the close Mr. Knox's team netted again, and the final score was 5—3 in favour of the Customs.

The Amateurs, who have been strengthened by H. Vanspall and Blacquiere of the Central Branch, will have out a very strong team for the Cup. Last year, it will be recollected, the Amateurs appeared in the final, and barring the Customs and Rangers the Amateurs should beat any other combination in the knock-out tournament. Jahans, P. Durham, and H. Vanspall belong to the Customs service, but as the latter club have lots of reserves to fill the vacancies in case of accidents, these men are not missed.

For the Civil and Military match up to the time of writing, the latter team was not selected, but Captain R. N. Bouquet will captain the Military, and the other members will include Captain Campbell, Captain Macpherson, and Lieutenant Campbell of the Pathans, and Shir Afzul of the same corps, Captain Green-Armytage, Repo, Doyle and Craine will represent the Medicals and the other two players will be picked from the 75th Carnatics. The Civil will be represented as follows:—Collingwood (C. F. C.), goal; Cody (Rangers), and Yakchee (St. Xavier's), backs; S. Lawton (Rangers), Studd (C. F. C.) (captain) and C. Barlow (Customs), halves; Boileau and McCready (Customs), Smart (Rangers) and Duncan and Wilks (Sibpur) forwards. The game, which comes off on Saturday, on the Calcutta ground, will be fairly interesting.

The weather has interfered with hockey again, and last Monday and Tuesday evenings Calcutta has been visited with storms. However, there was no postponement in the senior matches, but the strong wind before the rain fell caused a lot of dust to rise which was anything but pleasant to players and spectators. These storms generally break upon us precisely at 6-15, with the result that the closing stages of the game are greatly spoiled.

The match of the week was the one between Calcutta and Rangers on the former's ground last Tuesday, and while the "Reds" had to get two points, one would have suffered for the Rangers in order to give them second place on the table. Calcutta took the field minus Cole, H. Sherman and Halliday; while on the Rangers' side Skempton was still an absentee. Despite the threatening weather there was a good attendance—not nearly so large, however, as when Customs met Calcutta. Calcutta opened the scoring, Brown netting, and for the first fifteen minutes there was nothing to choose between the teams. Smart equalised, and after this the Rangers had more of the play, Lindsay eventually scoring the second goal, and at half time the Rangers led by 2—1. The play, after ends had been changed, was dreadfully one-sided and Collingwood, in goal, had a lively time. Smart and Lindsay again scored for the Rangers, who won by 4—1.

The East Indian Railway beat Dalhousie by 6 goals to 1 last Monday, and the Lillooah men may be depended upon rendering a good account of themselves in the Beighton. It is a pity, however, that a combined East Indian Railway team do not enter for the knock-out tournament. With the exception of Jamalpur and probably a mixed team from the Asansol District, the Beighton again this year will be a purely local tournament. Appended is the League table up to date:—

MOTOR MEMS.

London, Friday, 21st March 1912.

This year will be one of great importance in the annals of motor racing, for it marks the general revival of the interest of Continental makers in the road racing events. Few motorists would be found to question the statement that road racing has been of immense value in the rapid development of the motor car to its present high level of efficiency, but there are very many private motorists, and not a few manufacturers, who have been of opinion that racing had fully served its purpose. It was this general impression which led to the abandonment of the big French races a couple of years ago; not since the Grand Prix events of 1908 has there been any great enthusiasm manifested till the present time. The reasons for the newly-adopted change of front on the part of the leading French and German firms are less those of technical advantages to be gained than of the value of the races from the publicity point of view. Without their show last December, and without any big international event for a couple of years, these makers find that the English productions have reaped the benefit of the Continental apathy, and it is generally realised that active steps must be taken to win back as much as possible of the lost prestige. Hence the several big events of this season, all of which are being enthusiastically supported. The Grand Prix race at Dieppe next June has attracted some sixty entries, the biggest total ever recorded for any road event. The distance of 1,000 miles (covered in two daily stages) will prove a severe test of both men and machines, and it is hardly likely that the speed average will greatly exceed the seventy miles an hour figure. Additional interest will be afforded by the fact that there are two classes of cars running together—the unlimited capacity section for the big racing machines, and the voiturettes with engines of limited dimensions. By reason of their light weight and more rapid acceleration powers, these little cars are almost as speedy as the 200 h.p. monsters on a course like that at Dieppe, with its many corners and several hilly portions, and therefore there will be some exciting tussles between the two types. It is pleasing to observe a goodly representation of the British industry; the Arrol-Johnston, Calthorpe, Singer, Sunbeam, and Vauxhall cars may be depended upon to make an excellent showing, and, it is hoped, to bring some of the honours back across the Channel.

Replying to the toast of "The Scottish A. C.," which had been proposed by H. H. the Duke of Teck, at the annual dinner of that club at Glasgow last week, the chairman, the Right Hon. Sir J. H. A. Macdonald, said that the last time he was in London he obtained a few statistics on the Embankment. In the course of one hour in the morning he saw 1,366 fast motor vehicles and only 53 fast horse vehicles, and 1,438 slow motor vehicles to 63 slow horse vehicles. These facts were concrete facts that could not be disputed. He thought they ought to consider not what they could do to promote the increase of automobiles, but what they were to do in consequence of the fact that the motor vehicle was the dominant vehicle on the road, and, therefore, he would strongly urge on them not to devote too much attention in the future to touring, or any of the things which first formed the object of automobilism, but devote their attention to the improvement of the road. By improving the road they would do a great deal to remove all remaining opposition to the use of the motor car, and also do something greatly for their own selfish interest.

The Court of Arbitration appointed by the Board of Trade to examine into the relations between taxi-cab proprietors and their drivers has issued its award. The text of the award has been made public, but I need not here recapitulate its heads, especially in view of the fact that the only really important parts of it are that relating to the "extras," which in future are to go to the men, and the price at which petrol is to be supplied to the men. We are told that the drivers are well satisfied with the new position set up by this award, and this is scarcely astonishing, for the reason that it practically gives them more than they asked. But, on the other hand, the owners are by no means so jubilant about it and, equally, they have little reason for satisfaction. We are not speaking without knowledge of the subject when we say that if the award is to stand—and it must—and some concession is not made to the cab proprietors in the way of an increase in fares, not one of the companies are likely to continue in the business for another twelve month. Certainly all the small firms are doomed.

Now, the public will have to make up its mind that if it really wants the convenience of the taxi it will have to pay more for it. No one complained of the minimum shilling fare in the case of the horsed cab, and we imagine there would be very little complaint if the same minimum were imposed in connection with the hire of the taxi. But complaint or none the fares will undoubtedly have to be raised if the vehicles are to pay.

SINGLE (FULL-CHOKE) BARREL.

For the collector, and for killing the smaller species of furred and feathered game this gun is without an equal. It has a bolt action and is, as usual, made in the superior B.S.A. style. It is light but has practically no recoil. The chamber is 2½" deep and is adapted for the new 2½" cartridge carrying half the charge of shot of a 12-bore which is propelled from the muzzle by about 14 grains of powder at a velocity (1000 f.s.) but little less than that of the bigger bore mentioned. For the use of ladies, and for teaching the "young idea" it is the gun par excellence. The price of the gun in England is from 42/6.

A writer in the Field says:—

> The B.S.A. ·410 bore Shot Gun with 2½" chamber "will take many shots quite as well as a full size ·12 bore, whilst for garden use generally and for bolting rats the handiness of the gun may possibly make it as efficient barrel for barrel as a 12-bore."

Fully illustrated interesting rifle booklets may be had post free from the B.S.A. Co., Ltd., Birmingham.

B.S.A. High Velocity Target and Sporting Rifles, Mid-range and Miniature Rifles, Air Rifles and small bore Shot Guns, are adapted for practically every class of target and sporting work.

B.S.A. Rifles, Guns and Sights are stocked and sold by all gun dealers in India. If any difficulty is experienced in purchasing please write to—

Mr. Massac Buist makes the following interesting remarks in the Motor World:—

"The car which Mr. Everybody will use will be a machine not weighing at most more than 1501b. for every person carried. At present it certainly seems impossible to achieve that; but as there is no inventor living who is a sufficient genius to be able to devise Everybody's car to-day—if there were, we would begin making it to-morrow— the only way we can estimate the stage we have to travel is to take some stock of the practical requirements that have to be fulfilled. In the interval between aspiration to-day and achievement in the future roads will, of course, have become vastly improved all about the country, which will make for reduction of the cost and considerably simplify the suspension problem. One of the reasons why you cannot reduce the cost of cars appreciably to-day is, of course, to be found in the actual quantity of material embodied in their manufacture. The only way to overcome that difficulty is to employ wholly fresh systems of designing. We keep seeing, chiefly by local efforts here and there, evidences of the unconscious striving after the new-style car by process of blending cycle and motor engineering modes of construction. Nothing that has yet been produced in this connection, however, bids fair to prove even a temporarily satisfactory type, because before any firm can produce a motor car for Everybody it must be sure of a market, not locally, but all over the country, and probably beyond its borders, and that means a machine tested to fulfil an extraordinarily wide variety of conditions, suitable, for example, for service on the flat and in traffic, and at the other extreme to run between a cottage in the Scottish or Welsh mountains and the nearest village. That the thing is not really a wild impossibility can be seen from the case of the bicycle to-day. In fine, whatever way we look at it, the prime obstacle to the achievement of motoring for everybody right away is the matter of design. You cannot produce to-day because of the amount of materials, but the moment you cut them down, you cut down, too, the cost in time and effort of working, the quantity of material per car, and you achieve equal, or perhaps better, results for one-sixth of the effort in the matter of the power needed to propel the vehicle. Stamped metal bodies should enable us to dispense with the side members of car frames; more efficient power transmission should call for engines of much less power, and so you begin saving material, weight, and tyres all round. Precisely when we shall get motoring for Everybody nobody can tell; but this at least is certain, that if we continue dunning it into the heads of motor manufacturers that they are building far too heavy—not, of course, for present methods of construction, but for the necessities of actual use if they will only adopt other methods of construction—the nearer we shall get to our goal. I make bold to foretell that in less than five years' time the cars of to-day will begin to be regarded as excessively heavy vehicles —something, in fact, that shall stand for the same sort of symbol that to-day a traction engine does to us. How often have we all heard the non-technical man talk about motoring for the many, and rendering his argument of little worth merely because he can only take what is at present on the world's market in the way of cars, holding up the cheapest one, and assuming in all that he says that if our British manufacturers or French ones or German ones would only have the enterprise to reproduce that given vehicle, we should have arrived at the solution of car problem. I submit we should do nothing of the sort. We hear the Ford car a great deal exampled, as it deserves to be, but do people who employ arguments along the lines I have indicated imagine for a moment that the Ford car to-day represents finality in its achievement any more than Rolls-Royce does in another direction? Of course not. The Ford concern has not begun to exhaust the possibilities it has mapped out for itself, and that despite its present achievement being singular in the world of motor engineering in that particular line at the moment. If we are to do anything useful in discussing motoring over a wider field than is yet catered for in the world, far less motoring for Everybody, we must abandon any idea of taking any car of to-day as representing adequacy of achievement, far less finality. We are, to-day, scarcely on the starting line; and that is why I have touched on certain technical points.

Every week makes it more evident that the difficulties arising from the absence of coal and from the curtailment of railway services are being mitigated by the use of automobile vehicles. So far the omnibus services have continued as usual, and have, in fact, been increased where it was possible to meet the cutting off of suburban train services. As regards locomotion in the country, where branch lines are dislocated or the service of trains very much reduced, here again public service vehicles of every kind, and especially the petrol-propelled variety, have been pressed into service. Another noticeable feature is that, owing to the fact that market-garden produce has been brought into London for some time past largely by means of motor-vans and wagons, London has not suffered from a want of vegetables in the way in which it would have suffered had this strike taken place ten years ago. In fact the motor-vehicle has alleviated the strain in every direction, and it only needs a little organisation by some corporate body such as the R.A.C. or the A.A. and M. U. to make automobilism still more useful in future emergencies of this kind.

Shows.

THE GREAT PUNJAB HORSE SHOW.

The ninth annual horse show at Rawalpindi was brought to a conclusion on the 1st instant after extending over three days: the R.A.M.C., the Punjab Commission, and the Gunners and Ordnance had been at home in turn and each day the band of the 10th Hussars was a welcome attraction. The attendance was very large and to Captain Neilson's arrangements was due the success of the show. Entries were larger than they have ever been and the judging gave very general satisfaction. The judges were General Leader, Colonels Broom, Shore, Tilney and England, Majors Humfrey and Clark, and Mr. J. D. Scott and Dr. Martin. Among the exhibitors Captain Neilson scored twice with Acorn, who carried off the Cup for the best horse in the show. Mr. R. Gordon Canning had three wins—twice with Endymion and the Single Harness Driving competition. Mrs. Digby Mr. E. A. Fielden, Captain T. P. Melville, Major E. Crawley, and Mr. S. Keatinge were also prominent winners. The prizes were given away by Mrs. Cox, wife of General Cox. Appended is a list of the awards:—

Class 1.—Country-breds, 3 years old and under, and likely to make remounts. Only two were shown who received commendation prizes.

Class 2.—Country-bred Remounts.—"D" Squadron, 10th Hussars, No. 77, 1; "D" Squadron, 10th Hussars, No. 92, 2; 5th Cavalry, 3. Eight entries.

Class 3.—Brood mares in foal, or with foal at foot, and branded fillies over 3 years.—Sirdar Mahomed Nawaz Khan, 1; Nasor Din, 2; Ghulam Mahomed Khan, 3. The prize-winners showed great quality and reflect highly on the efforts of the officials who encourage the breeding of such high class stock. Four entries.

Class 4.—Branded fillies under 3 years old, the property of native owners resident in the Rawalpindi, Attock, Jhelum, Shahpur and Gujrat districts. Prizes presented by the District Board, Rawalpindi.—Sirdar Mahomed Nawaz Khan, 1; Hashmut Ali, 2; Gokal Shah, 3. A most excellent lot. The winner of the first prize is a daughter of the winner of the first prize in brood mare class and she was much coveted by would-be purchasers. Three entries.

Class 5.—English and Colonial Horses.—Capt. J. F. Neilson's br ans g Acorn, 1; Lieut. A. K. Digby's b e m Jubilation, 2; Major E. Crawley's b ans g Bon Ami, 3. A fair class. Twenty-one entries.

Class 6.—Country-bred Horses over 14·2.—Capt. the Hon. A. Annesley's ch ch g Home Grown, 1; Sowar Bal Singh's g ch g No. 120 (5th Cav.) 2; Mr. W. M. Armstrong's rn ch g Blazes, 3. A poor class. Eight entries.

Class 7.—English and Colonial Ponies.—Lieut. E. A. Fielden's b w g O. K., 1; Lieut. E. Sopper's ch n m Mesalliance, 2; Major the Hon. W. G. Cadogan's b ans g Dandy, 3. A large class of great excellence. Thirty-eight entries.

Class 8.—Country-bred Ponies, 14·2 and under.—Br.-Genl. H. P. Leader's Simplicitus, 1; Col. R. W. Fuller's bk ch g Black Arrow, 2; Capt. S. Yates's b ch g Punch, 3. A very fair class, the judges were at considerable pains to make their selections. Thirteen entries.

Class 9.—Arabs.—Mr. R. Gordon Canning's ch a g Endymion, 1; Mr. S. Robinson's g a h Najmi, 2; Captain T. P. Melville's ch a h Prince Chestnut, 3. It is seldom one can see such a fine lot of Arabs together as were shown here. Twenty-five entries.

Class 10.—Polo Ponies, English and Colonial.—Captain D. Y. Watt's Mercat, 1; Captain T. P. Melville's g e m Pearl, 2; Captain J. C. Russell's b w g Elixir, 3. A very high class all round. Thirty entries.

Class 11.—Polo Ponies, Country-bred.—Captain Yates' b ch g Punch, 1; Br.-Genl. H. P. Leader's b ch g Simplicitus, 2. It was unfortunate that with such an abundance of very fine country-bred ponies as are in these parts there was such a small entry. Six entries.

Class 12.—Polo ponies, Arabs, heavy-weight.—Mr. R. Gordon-Canning's ch a g Endymion, 1; Lieutenant H. Horsley's g a g Highborn, 2. The class was good, but not up to a high standard. Seven entries.

Class 13.—Ponies, Arabs, light-weight.—Captain T. P. Melville's ch a h Prince, 1; Mr. Lawrence's Impudence, 2; Captain R. H. Seymour's br a g Dodger, 3. This was a very fine high class all round and exercised the judges much. Twenty-four entries.

Class 14.—Ponies likely to make polo ponies.—Major R. Gordon's and Captain T. P. Melville's g a h The Nipper, 1; Lieutenant-Colonel W. A. Tilney's ch e m Lucy, 2; Major W. B. Sandy's g a h Grey Mist, 3. An exceptionally promising class all round and they fully occupied the judges in making their awards. Thirty-two entries.

Class 15.—Hacks, 14·2 and over.—Capt. J. F. Neilson's br ans g Acorn, 1; Major E. Crawley's b ans g Bon Ami, 2; Capt.

THE FUR-SEAL.

In the whole range of zoology there are few more remarkable creatures than the fur-seal, some account of which, by one who knows the animal well, may be of interest in view of the announced intention of the United States Government to send this year a warship to "tail-up" the north-going herds, in order to prevent pelagic sealing—that is, seal shooting and spearing in the open ocean.

When seal-slaying, according to regulation, takes place at the breeding islands, only the young males are killed; the female being spared to attend to the "pup" (of the preceding year's origin), which she brings forth a few days after landing, and to return next year, again in an "interesting condition." Now, in pelagic sealing at least 70 per cent. of the killed are females with unborn off-spring, hence the fact that, whilst during the '70's the Pribiloff Island "rookeries" produced 2½ million skins, the output now is barely half a million. These Pribiloff Islands lie about 300 miles north of the Aleutian Archipelago, together with which they have been United States territory since 1870, when the whole Alaskin region was sold by Russia for about £7,000,000.

During the '80's pelagic sealing wrought such destruction that the British and United States Governments, awaking to the fact that the fur-seal of the Northern Hemisphere was in danger of complete extinction, held many more or less futile conferences on the subject. Arbitration didn't mend matters much; the decision being that, as the seals were ferae naturae they might be lawfully slain anywhere upon the high seas. It is not at all unlikely, therefore, that international complications may follow the action of the United States Government in attempting forcibly to prevent sealing in waters over which it has no jurisdiction; for it is extremely unlikely that the threatened warship will confine her attention to the inside of the three-mile limit.

And now a word, zoologically, about the fur-seal itself.

The Otariidae, or eared seals (to which all the fur-seals belong), are closely related to the bears. Indeed the name of our local "sealeopard," Arctocephalus forsteri, and that of the Pribiloff seal (Callorhinus ursinus) carry direct reference to the fact. These "sea-bears," "lions," and "Leopards" are differentiated from the Phocinae, or true seals, principally by the fact that on land their hinder limbs are turned forward under the body, instead of being dragged helplessly behind. The fur-seal can therefore get about on terra firma with much greater facility than the hair-seal.

For the hair-seal itself—taking the term to include many species Phocinae—there are very extensive "fisheries" in various parts of the world, the commercial return depending upon the fat, for oil-producing purposes, and the skins, for conversion into leather. But the fur-seal-industry rests upon an entirely different basis. The seal, besides an outer coat of long, coarse yellowish hairs, possesses an inner vestment of extremely close, soft, dark fur. The roots of the outer hairs come so far beneath the skin that they can be scraped off without touching the roots of the aforesaid fur. These long hairs consequently fall out: and, when the fur, with great skill and delicacy, has been dyed black, we have the highly-valued "seal-skin" of the furrier. The best skins are those of the so-called "bachelors"—males of from the second to the fifth year. Females are not supposed to be killed at all, and the skins of the old "bulls" are too badly battle-scarred to be of any value.

A curious fact concerning C. ursinus, is that the species is quite unknown on the eastern coasts of the Americas, though an allied species, Arctocephalus australis, is fairly common in the waters south of Cape Horn, and on the south-west coast of Australia. The southern range of the northern fur-seal has never been ascertained with exactitude, but it has been seen south of the Tropic of Cancer, and its annual migration towards its far-northern breeding grounds becomes very apparent off the coast of Southern California.

At the Pribiloff Island "rookeries" the old males begin to arrive early in April, the young "bulls" not coming on the scene till the beginning of May, when they meet with such a hostile reception from their seniors that they are forced to take an unostentatious and circuitous route to what may be called the "hinterland" of the rookery, which, later on, will be swarming with females, dominated and strictly guarded by the experienced warriors aforesaid. About the middle of June the "cows" arrive, and almost immediately after landing give birth to last year's "pup." They are then gathered into the harem of one or other of the Lords of the Isles—not without many desperate battles between rival annexers.

And here we come to the curious fact that, while the sikatch, as the Aleutians call the bull, continues growing up to his 8th or 9th year, reaching a weight of 600 to 700lbs. the matka, or "cow," reaches maturity in her 4th year, and seldom weighs more than 100lbs. And when each male is established with as many wives as he can rake together—seldom fewer than 30 or 40—the spectacle is without a parallel in zoology. The immense comparative size of the head of the family makes him seem like an animal of quite a different species. With head vigilantly erect, he keeps up all the time a hideous noise, which it were flattery to describe as roaring; and, should his eye fall upon one of his wives unostentatiously seeking to join the harem of another bashaw, he scurries quickly to the spot, and drags the lady back to her allegiance with his teeth. If he is in time, that is, for if the other panjandrum—equally quick of eye—has arrived also on the spot, a most terrific encounter ensues. I have never seen any animals fight more ferociously, and, as their tusks are formidable and their jaws very powerful, they are able to rend chunks—literally chunks—out of each other, one or both often dying from sheer loss of blood.

At first the female remains most of the time on shore to suckle her pup, which is a quaint-looking little jet-black object, but gradually her absences from her infant grow longer and longer, until at last, about the end of October, she departs with her progeny for the south. The bulls generally leave the island about six weeks earlier, having—incredible though it may appear—taken literally no sustenance during about four strenuous months of love, battle, and ceaseless vigilance. If they come in like lions, they certainly go out like lambs, and very skinny and miserable-looking lambs at that.

The killing of the young bulls is a very tame affair, since at this age the animals are quite inoffensive, and allow themselves to be driven like sheep inland to the slaying grounds, where they are disposed of by a not very hard club-stroke on the head.

In 1878, when I first visited the Pribiloffs, they were under lease to the Alaska Commercial Company, and were returning to the U.S. Government a revenue of about £70,000 a year. Supervision was then becoming very strict, and our little schooner had not long come to an anchor off St. Paul when a patrol launch boarded us to inquire who we were and what we were doing there. The official in charge turned out, however, to be a "good sort," and, having satisfied himself that we had nothing to do with sealing, gave us a tip.

"Durin, the breedin' season," he told us, over a glass of whisky, "nobody's allowed to land here, 'cept the company's hands or U.S. officials. But, say—do you hear that almighty derned hullabaloo from behind that point there? There's a big rookery just t'other side, an' 'fyou want to get up on the high ground above it an' take some 'graphs, why, I guess I won't happen to be lookin' that way jus' then. So long."

As soon as this good-natured chap had steamed off we got a boat over the side, pulled to the point indicated, topped the rise, and came suddenly upon one of the most extraordinary spectacles the world has to show.

Imagine a low, flat beach, about equal in extent to that at Bondi, literally covered with thousands and thousands of seals, apparently in the proportion of about 40 or 50 females to one male, the latter being easily distinguishable by the greatly superior size already mentioned. In fact, it was not easy to resist the illusion that these were the mother-seals, surrounded by large families of young. Through our marine-glasses, however, we could make out that here and there a couple of these bulls were engaged in mortal combat. One pair in particular we watched for at least ten minutes before one collapsed, apparently killed outright. The victor was in little better case, for through the powerful glasses we could see the blood spurting from his neck—evidently coming from a lacerated carotid artery; so that, after crawling a few yards away, he, too, sank down and died. It was then a curious thing to see the members of the harems of both the defunct heroes immediately proceed to attach themselves to other "establishments." A grim satire on warlike achievement.

And the noise. It quite satisfied one's idea of pandemonium; nor until we had put the ridge between us and it could we hear each other speak. All night long the frightful din continued, and when we made sail in the morning it was still going strong. In fact one of our crew—a one time sealer—assured me that this dreadful racket never ceased, day or night, until the old bulls became, towards the time of their departure, too weak to roar. They leave, as has been said, about the middle of August, and I was at first a good deal puzzled as to why the females remained on, sometimes to the verge of winter. Three years later, however, visiting the islands under U.S. official sanction, I investigated more closely, and discovered, much to my surprise, that the "pup" will drown as readily as a baby, and that the mothers have, therefore, to delay their departure until the young ones have been actually taught to swim—another strange fact in the life-history of what I referred to at the beginning as one of the most remarkable animals known to zoology.—Sydney Mail.

FRESH-WATER FAUNA OF INDIA.

DR. ANNANDALE recently delivered a lecture before the Asiatic Society of Bengal on the fresh-water fauna of India. He observed that until a few years ago it was no exaggeration to say that except as regards fishes and shells, they knew far more about animals which lived in the Bay of Bengal at a vertical depth of two miles than they did of those of the Calcutta tanks. Since he became Superintendent of the Indian Museum, Calcutta, a little more than five years ago, it had been his ambition to make a systematic study of the fresh-water fauna of India, as his predecessor did of deep-water fauna. Five years was a very short time in which to survey an area so vast as the Indian Empire, which would take the lifetimes of many investigators. Nevertheless, although the results were not and could not be comprehensive, they would, he hoped, prove a useful starting point for what still remained to be done. Problems to which he had himself devoted special attention were—(1) The relations between the different kinds of fresh-water animals, (2) the seasonal changes in the life cycle of the lower invertebrates and (3) the direct effect of environment on plastic organisms such as fresh-water sponges. It was not as yet possible to deal in a satisfactory manner with the geographical distribution of the Indian fresh-water fauna as a whole.

The only Indian mammal that was a permanent denison of fresh-water was the Gangetic porpoise and a highly specialised form of it occurred in the Indus. As it never visited the sea, the fact that it inhabits the two rivers which now flow in opposite directions was a proof that these rivers were united at one time at a not very remote period. It was natural that fish should have attracted more attention in the past than any other aquatic group of animals. Over a hundred years ago Hamilton studied those of the Ganges in a manner unusually comprehensive at that date. The beautiful drawings that were prepared under his supervision were still in the possession of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Hamilton was followed by a number of other naturalists. Perhaps the simplest form which relations between different animals could take was that between hunters and prey. That relation was also by far the commonest to be found throughout the animal kingdom. In tropical fresh waters the struggle that went on between the two classes was a very keen one, while the number of individuals that lived in a given area of water was probably less in warm countries than in temperate ones. The number of species among which individuals were distributed was very much greater. That meant that to a very large extent the methods by which the prey was captured were much more highly specialized. Any animal which was the natural prey of another was, in very many cases, itself the hunter of a third creature, so that the relations between the different species were, even in the matter of hunting, very much more complex than they appeared at first sight. This fact had a very practical application in tropical countries, for it indicated that when they wished to destroy the aquatic larvæ of insects such as mosquitos, which worked havoc among mankind in their aerial stage as transmitters of disease, they must study not only the stages of those insects, but also all those of their enemies, of all those of animals which preyed on their enemies, and all those of their enemies' enemies and so on almost ad infinitum.

Some day the Government of India would realize that the real problems which a civilized Government must tackle were not political problems but sanitary ones. The capital of India had been changed, but the life cycle of the mosquito, its parasites, its enemies, and its food remained unaltered. Some day, perhaps, the doctors would also realize that sanitary problems were fundamentally biological and chemical and not medical at all; and that the training of first-class biologists and chemists is just as important and just as difficult and lengthy a process as the training of first-class physicians or surgeons. Biologists were aware that they had in India a large number of indigenous fishes which preyed on mosquito larvæ. He hoped shortly to issue from the Indian Museum a pamphlet giving a description of those species of Indian fishes which had been proved to be particularly useful in this respect. It must be borne in mind that the mere identification or distribution of fish of the kind was of very little use unless biologists studied them in all their aspects. "Science," said Dr. Annandale, "is a lady who must be wooed for her own sake and not for that of her money." It was very difficult to instance a single great practical scientific discovery which had been based in the first instance on researches undertaken without any ulterior motive.

Some years ago the lecturer noticed in the Museum a collection of little tortoises whose shells were almost completely covered with small black patches, arranged in a very peculiar manner. At the time, he was unable to say what those patches were, and it was only within the last few weeks that it had been possible to solve the problem. Examination of the patches showed that the tortoises bore on their shells a peculiar growth which at first sight appeared to be vegetable origin, but further and closer examination proved that the growth consisted of colonies of a very peculiar Polyzoon, closely allied in general structure to other species of the well-known genus Plumatella, but greatly modified in external form in accordance with its habitat.

INSTINCTIVE ACTIVITY.

Some interesting experiments on "Instinctive Activity in Animals" are described by Mr. John B. Watson, Director of the Psychological Laboratory of the John Hopkins' University, in the current number of Harper's Magazine:—

Our results seem to show that there are at least three great divisions or classes into which we may provisionally throw the acts of animals:—Instincts essentially perfect upon their first appearance; Instincts which must be supplemented by habit; and finally, Random activity of instinctive origin.

It must not be supposed that these three classes are bounded by hard-and-fast lines. Experiment show that young animals without previous tuition from parents or from their mates and without assistance from the human observer can, and do, perform the correct act the very first time they are in a situation which calls for such an act.

Professor Yerkes and Mr. Bloomfield made an extensive test upon cats. They worked with eight kittens belonging to two separate litters. The animals were brought up by hand, and were kept free from the influence of older cats. They tested the kittens with mice. When first tested the kittens were too young and undeveloped to notice the mice. The instinct was yet "dormant."

In succeeding tests it became perfectly clear that as soon as the kittens reached the proper age—as soon as the instinct "ripened," as Professor William James has expressed it—the congenital mode of response appeared.

The authors describe in a very clear and interesting way the behaviour of one of the kittens in one of the tests.

No. 7 was attracted by the movement of the mouse and touched it with his nose. He then left it. After twelve minutes he happened to be so placed that he could see the mouse as it began to move. For a few seconds he watched as if fascinated by the sight. Then he moved directly and quickly, in spite of the shakiness of his legs, to the mouse and seized it in his mouth by the middle of the back, at the same time biting hard and bending his head to the floor, so that one paw could be placed firmly on the body of the mouse. In a few seconds he had bitten the mouse to death. Without pause the process of eating was begun. It proved a difficult task, notwithstanding the tenderness of the mouse, but after ten minutes of difficult effort and much gagging it was completed.

Professor Breed, of Michigan, while working at Harvard laboratory, undertook to test the accuracy and perfectness of some of the fundamental acts of the chick. He chose for the work the all-important act of pecking. It appears that this act for purposes of exact study must be divided into three separate responses—striking (at small grains, for example), seizing, and swallowing. Pecking as a whole improved very rapidly for the first two days, then more slowly, until the maximum of efficiency was attained about the twenty-fifth day. Striking improved most rapidly, being almost perfect by the fifth day, while seizing improved most slowly. From Breed's work it appears that the effect of social influence—of having present older chicks which had already perfected that act—was hardly noticeable. Each chick had to learn the act by his own unaided efforts.

That social influence, in the form of imitation, rivalry, or in whatever other ways social influence may exert its effect, does play a rôle in shaping the early responses of certain other animals comes out clearly in the work of Conradi at Clark University.

This investigator reared English sparrows in the presence of canaries, keeping them from birth separate from their own kind.

The first sparrow was captured when one day old, and was reared by a canary foster-mother. During the growing period this sparrow was isolated from all other sparrows and placed in a room containing about twenty canaries. The native characteristic "chirp" first developed. As time went on this was given less and less, being gradually replaced by the "peep" which is natural to the canaries.

The sparrow improved in his vocal efforts by this kind of training; gaining the confidence finally to chime in when the canaries would burst into song.

American Sport.

SMALL GAME SHOOTING WITH A REPEATER.

Rats are not usually considered as game by sportsmen, but muskrat shooting under certain favourable conditions, with a good repeating rifle, contains an element of exciting interest that closely approaches sport, particularly in the spring, when the fur is at its best.

The writer was born and bred in Southern Massachusetts, near the banks of a river and large tracts of meadow land where the spring floods some time cover a vast area of intervale, forcing the muskrats to abandon their burrows in the river banks and seek safety elsewhere. At such times they will be found on floating cakes of ice, or pieces of wood, or perched on small trees and bushes which are partially submerged, or partly in hiding at the water's edge along the banks of the stream.

I had waited for several years to enjoy the hunt which came so unexpectedly last March. A large quantity of snow had been hurried into the stream by a heavy rainstorm, and to add to the volume of water already rushing along, a dam above had broken away and allowed the water contained in the pond to increase the volume of the torrent already pouring down the river bed. At 7 P.M. I received a telegram from my old friend Jack. It read as follows:—

"White's dam has broken. Water is nine feet deep on meadow. Rats."

It required no lengthy explanation, nor did it require an invitation to come. When the 9 o'clock express pulled out of the city for its 200-mile run it found the writer aboard with his 32 caliber Marlin and a good supply of cartridges ready for action. The rain poured and beat against the car windows as we rushed onward, but about 11-30 it cleared, the moon came out, and although it was midnight when I arrived at the station I found Jack awaiting my arrival with rubber coats, etc. The old horse made slow progress through the snow and mud, but we arrived at the house without any mishaps, and were soon making plans for the morrow.

"Better turn in and get the traditional forty winks," suggested Jack; and we did. But who could sleep when we could so plainly hear the roar of the river and could see the miles of overflowed territory from the window?

When Jack called me at daylight I will confess I had a great inclination to roll over and take another nap, but quickly rousing myself I jumped into my shooting clothes, and we were off, stopping just long enough to get a hasty lunch and a cup of coffee. The boat was in readiness, and it was the work of a very few minutes to get under-way and silently paddle down to the open meadow. The river was a boiling, seething mass of floating debris and foam, so that in some places it was none too safe; but we soon came where the meadows broadened, and we left the rapid, rushing current for the still water.

Jack sat in the stern and used the paddle, while I was detailed to have all the fun and burn the powder. The tops of a clump of alders were examined, and signs of rats were noted. Jack is an expert at paddling, and we approached the spot silently.

My Marlin had proved to be a jewel of the first water on one or two hunting trips, and I felt full confidence in it. The only fear I had was from lack of experience in shooting from a boat. Very fine work was required, for only the head must be struck in order to save the skins. A 32 caliber flat pointed bullet would smash a rat so as to make the skin valueless if struck in the body. For that reason I shot at most of the rats when they were swimming. When startled they would dive; with a slap of their tails they would go down, then come to the surface some thirty or forty yards away. If the bullet did not hit they would go down again and rise again somewhere else.

The Lyman sights showed up well against the dark river, and it was not long before we were at work in real earnest. Sometimes the rats would stop to rest between the bushes of the alders, with only the tips of their noses and their eyes out of water. They, no doubt, fancied themselves secure in such hiding, but offered easy shots, which were usually kills. "Be careful and don't overshoot" was Jack's only advice or suggestion, and then the fun commenced.

We had discovered a lot of rubbish which had lodged in a clump of bushes and small trees a short distance away, and had secured the boat fairly well in another bunch of bushes. After a few moments of waiting a motion was noticed, then a ripple in the water, and a rat swam out a little way. I made some allowance for motion and fired. "No good," said Jack; "too far ahead." Down went the rat. It came up again forty yards away and swam for another bunch of bushes. But that time it lost the top of its head, and the first blood was scored.

Shooting at a moving object from a boat is somewhat uncertain, yet if the distance is not too great one can do fairly well after a few shots. By approaching the rats silently, keeping the paddle from scraping the side of the boat and from splashing in the water, one may approach within easy shooting distance, so that the head may be easily struck by the bullet.

We shot them in all sorts of places, but most of them were swimming. After stirring them up in one locality we left it and returned later, only to find them perched in the same places as before and with no more fear of us.

When drowned out the muskrat seems to be thoroughly demoralized, so far as saving himself is concerned. He cannot succeed in evading pursuit by diving, for he cannot get anywhere in particular by so doing. He must come to the surface for breath, and there is little or no cover to hide in.

A repeating rifle and Lyman sights are the things to shoot rats with. A shotgun spoils the skins and is noisy. Quick work is required at times, when three or four rats are in range at the same time; consequently a single shot rifle is not desirable.

A first-class rat flood seldom occurs, and when it does it usually means great damage; but when such times do come one may as well get what sport he can from it, and have it leave at least one pleasant memory to offset its many unpleasant ones.

We killed forty-two rats in all, and found all except three in good condition; those were badly torn and were not worth skinning. We enjoyed the shooting, the sail, and the fine weather very much, and it seemed as if lunch never tasted so good as it did that day, Jack was thoughtful enough to take a tin pail of coffee along. That we warmed up over a small fire which we made on the leeward side of a small island.

The boys skinned the rats and almost persuaded us to say we would go again the next day. But the next morning we found the water had fallen several inches and was receding fast, so we had to abandon the idea of repeating the performance.

I have shot muskrats by moonlight with a shotgun when fairly good sport was enjoyed, but never saw anything that approached the fun we had with the rifle on that occasion.

It was an event of a lifetime; in fact I have never known but three floods in that section which were suitable for rat-hunting. One was in 1860, and I was in that. The man who did the shooting killed over forty rats in one day, using an old smoothbore musket loaded with coarse shot. His shoulder was black for a week after, and he did no work for more than that. Another flood occurred in 1872, but rats were rather scarce at that time and I got only seventeen in the day's shooting. I have an ever-standing arrangement, so that if a flood does come in the spring I may be there on time, but I think it doubtful if such sport again comes my way. I suppose one would tire of shooting rats if he had much of it, but it is the rarity that makes it enjoyable, and when they are out in such numbers as to afford a good bag for the rifle, it is a rare time indeed.

It is not supposed that every shot will count when using a rifle from a boat and at times shooting under more or less excitement. We used up one hundred cartridges that day. It is only fair to state, however, that some of them were fired away at inanimate objects for practice.

A word about rifles, and I will close. I have yet to see, or at least use, a small bore repeater that works as smooth as the .32-20 Marlin. I like the side-ejecting arrangement, and the solid top keeps dirt, etc., from dropping into the action. I have an idea of putting a telescope on the rifle and using the new Ideal .30-95 sharp-pointed bullet for gray squirrel shooting. Of course I shall use the arm as a single shot, for I do not think the sharp point bullet will work well in the magazine. A light charge of nitro powder and a sharp point bullet of 95 grains (three grooves and four lands) should make a fine one for grays.

I find a light charge of nitro powder is fine for light, short range work, but have never been able to get anything like satisfactory results from full charges. When manufacturers produce a smokeless and practically noiseless powder that will give accurate work I shall be happy, or as nearly so as the genuine rifle enthusiast can expect to be. But I am not yet looking for the millennium. When he will have everything to his ideas and liking it will bring about a queer state of affairs.

Gray squirrel shooting with the small bore rifle is one of the finest of sports and has to be indulged in to be appreciated. But I am running away from my subject, and will reserve the squirrels for another letter.

Shooting with a small bore is in order at all seasons and in nearly every place. Even in towns and cities targets are set up in back yards and basements, and every now and then some luckless English sparrow is dropped into the street, while the blue-coated guardian of the law closes his ears and eyes against the violation of the city ordance which prohibits discharging fire arms in the city limits.—Shooting and Fishing.

THE HEART OF THE LOTUS.

A good many years ago a railway bridge was being constructed over a river not far from Madras. On the south bank of this river, the Periyutti, is a considerable village which we will call Periyacurra. The Europeans there were few. John Stretton was the engineer charged with the construction of the bridge. He was a widower with a young daughter Marjorie. There was an assistant engineer, James Hardy, a nice lad just out from Home.

Next there was Owen Williams, the fervent Welsh missionary, with his red head and beard. Last of all came Frank Houston, who resided at Periyacurra in the unusual role of a landed proprietor, for his uncle had died shortly before and left young Houston a considerable estate, including some of the most fertile land about the village. Frank, who had been a planter's assistant on the Neilgherries up to the time of the legacy, knew Southern India well. He was immensely interested in his property, and displayed considerable shrewdness in his arrangements for letting it out in parcels to native farmers. He used to spend a good deal of the year in his pretty thatched bungalow, which was situated in a charming position on a knoll overlooking the river.

Majorie Stretton had been brought up by two maiden aunts in a Cornish village. The two old ladies were devoted to Mission work, and had taught the girl to regard the missionary in foreign lands as the noblest of men. What wonder then that Marjorie, on joining her father in Southern India, became forthwith an ardent admirer of Owen Williams, and was always ready to listen with adoration to the decidedly bigotted and narrow views of this enthusiastic Welshman.

The Missionary himself was ready enough to absorb any amount of admiration, and found the ill-concealed worship of this extremely pretty girl decidedly pleasant. In fact, after mature deliberation, he had decided that Miss Stretton would suit him as a wife, and intended announcing these views to her at an early date.

James Hardy does not come much into the story; he had at once with the impulsiveness of extreme youth, fallen head over ears in love with Marjorie. His devotion was, however, of the open unaffected kind, which gives nothing but pleasure and amusement to the happy recipient. Hardy loathed the sight of the Missionary, and with the insolence of youth never hesitated to let Williams know it.

Houston was a self-contained Scotsman, with such strong interests in his estate that he seemed to have little time for occupying himself with anything else.

As is not uncommon in other parts of India also, the work of coverting the Hindus of Periyacurra to Christianity was distinctly unsuccessful save among the lowest castes. Young Hardy often twitted Williams on what he called "His flock of converted sweepers."

The Missionary's work was all the more disheartening by reason of the presence of a noted sadhu in the village, the yogi Trevandernath. There was a magnificent banyan tree on the river bank, not far from Houston's bungalow, and within the boundary of his property. This tree was of immense size, with far spreading branches supported by colonnades of natural pillars. A regiment might have camped beneath its acres of foliage. The chelas had built the holy man a small hut of grass mats, and hard by had raised a wide platform of beaten earth, three feet above the surrounding soil. Over this chabootra was spread a large cloth, while a fine tiger's skin was draped over one end. On the platform were the yogi's simple belongings, a brass plate of fresh rose petals, and another one containing a single lotus flower from a neighbouring tank. On the ground near the platform were other articles—a brass imitation of a gourd, a carved water lotah, and a handsomely ornamented alms bowl. Near the small fire lay a pair of iron tongs, and a kairogun, or arm rest.

Trevandernath himself was clothed in a flowing garment of orange yellow, and his long hair was plaited with black wool and coiled round his head like a small turban. Round his neck were a string of rudraksha berries and a necklace of small glittering stones. These latter, and the golden fly, (sourma maka) in his hair, denoted that the yogi had paid a visit to the shrine of Kali, at Hingalaj in Beluchistan. An iron bangle round the arm was likewise symbolical, showing that his wanderings had carried him to the distant monasteries in the Himalayas.

Trevandernath was a small slight old man with well cut features, and a gentle yet very intelligent expression in his golden brown eyes. Houston found that the settling of this yogi on his property, which had taken place a little over a month before, seemed to smoothen his dealings with his tenants, and also add to his prestige. In fact one of the villagers informed him that he was considered especially blest in having such a holy man living on his land. Frank had of course, made the yogi's acquaintance, and had been very favourably impressed with the old man's benevolent manners and great intelligence. Of course as yet he could hardly know much about the sadhu, seeing that the ascetic's arrival at Periyacurra was so recent.

One morning, on returning to his bungalow to breakfast, Frank was astonished to find Owen Williams waiting for him in a very excited frame of mind. "Are you an earnest Christian?" was the astounding enquiry addressed to him by his agitated visitor, as he entered the verandah. "Certainly, I hope so," answered Houston quietly.

"Well, are you ready to do something at once to show your faith?"

"What is it?" asked Frank.

"That heathen priest has stolen away the greater part of my flock from me, and I want you to drive him off your property, and make him go elsewhere."

"Really Williams," answered Houston, "you are making a most unreasonable request. Our great principle in India has been religious toleration, and I am certainly not going to interfere with a very harmless and quiet old sadhu, simply because the villagers' veneration of him has had a bad effect on your missionary work. I am just going to have breakfast, come in and have some too."

Williams declined the invitation ungraciously, saying he had already had breakfast, and wanted to get back to the mission house.

Houston's curiosity having been aroused by the rivalry between missionary and sadhu, he walked down after breakfast to the banyan tree to pay a visit to the ascetic.

His arrival seemed to be expected, for he found one of the chelas setting out a rush-bottomed chair for him.

After greeting Trevandernath he sat down to talk.

The old man looked up with a faint gleam of amusement in his bright brown eyes. "So the sahib is not willing to join the Mission padre in driving forth this humble one." Houston greatly astonished asked: "Why, how did you know about the conversation which has but just now taken place?" The old man's smile broadened, and he bent forward with a pleasant little friendly gesture and touched Frank's knee with his thin hand. "Thou shalt have no cause sahib to regret thy friendliness to the old sadhu. I know something of the hearts of men. The young daughter of the Engineer sahib thinks much of the Mission padre: would that she and thou . . . . ." Houston interrupted with a hearty whole laugh. "Ah! sadhu, you go too fast: I have no thoughts for girls. My work is here," and he swept his arm round to indicate the farms. The golden brown Indian eyes looked for a moment into the steel grey Scotch ones, and the yogi said emotionally:

'Love is a flower that may blossom in a night, if watered by the dews of opportunity."

The talk then turned to other channels, and Trevandernath spoke of the endless metempsychoses in which his life had been spent.

"And now, sahib, behold me settled here for a season. That is unless it is thy pleasure to turn me out" he added with a sly look.

The yogi was a most interesting combination of simplicity and knowledge. He spoke frankly, yet with dignity, and to little show things to his sympathetic listener of the philosophy and aims of yore.

How his many pilgrimages and ascetic practices had all been undertaken for the one object, which he now believed to have been attained—the union of his own soul with the great parent spirit of God. The soul of God was, so to speak, the vast ocean, and the spirits of men but insignificant drops taken therefrom. Infinite peace was only to be attained by the reabsorbtion of the human spirit into that of God. At length Houston took his departure, but before he went, the sadhu gave him a closed lotus bud. "Put it in water sahib, and may it bring thee good fortune."

Houston then rather shamefacedly slipped a few rupees into the alms bowl as he was leaving.

Meanwhile Williams had been pouring his woes into Marjorie's sympathetic ears. "I think this fakir must be a horrid old man to have such a bad influence on your people, and I promise I will speak to Mr. Houston about him on the very first opportunity."

Marjorie was a hasty young person, so proceeded to make the opportunity by taking an evening ride in a direction which she knew was likely to bring about a meeting with Frank Houston.

The affair was well timed, and she caught him just as he was trotting out of his compound gate, likewise bent on an evening ride. Miss Stretton was direct in her methods. "How do you do Mr. Houston; do you mind coming my way, as I want to talk to you about this fakir, who is causing many of the Native Christians to drift back into heathenism."

"All right Miss Stretton," answered Houston good humouredly. "I must, however, protest against your calling my friend Trevandernath a fakir; he is a yogi, or otherwise a Hindu philosopher. Fakirs are Mahomedans." "Oh! well, call him what you like" said Marjorie impatiently. "At all events he is doing a lot of harm among Mr. Williams' converts."

Houston then, in spite of the girl's somewhat rude unwillingness to listen, patiently and clearly explained the views of the higher types of yogi. At length in spite of herself the girl became interested, for Houston possessed, probably quite unknown to himself, a dramatic and effective way of describing things. Instead of the ride being devoted to persuading Frank to get rid of the yogi, the tables were turned, and Marjorie listened with ever-increasing interest to her companion's eloquent description of how these patient ascetics strive earnestly for purification of spirit.

At length Houston seeing that the right moment had come, wound up with, "And now Miss Stretton seeing that it is quite possible for even people who are not Christian to hold very beautiful beliefs, I want you before you ask me to turn out Trevandernath, which is what you really came and met me for, to come and talk to the man yourself, and hear what he has to say."

Marjorie felt herself rather caught, but being a sound hearted girl despite her narrow upbringing, could not but admit that the request was a fair one.

"You evidently hold a brief for the yogi," she said with a very charming smile. "He is very lucky to have so eloquent an advocate. Well, I suppose I must hear what the prisoner has to say in his defence."

They therefore turned their ponies towards the big banyan, which was visible in the distance.

Houston had already realised that the sadhu was never taken by surprise. On arriving near the tree, and handing their ponies to the syces they found two rush-bottomed chairs set ready, and the yogi awaiting them with a benignant smile on his fine old face.

"It is a great satisfaction that the Miss Sahib's heart should be so just that she will not seek to send this old man forth, without first speaking with him."

Marjorie's eloquent face expressed her amazement at this thought reading. The old sadhu appeared to take no notice, but went on in his soft high bred voice to point out that he never interfered with the religious views of others. His long life had been devoted to asceticism and contemplation, for the great object of purification. Such a method of living was naturally quite incompatible with native efforts to bring back Native Christians to Hindoism.

"The people have heard of me, and unworthy as I am, some of them regard me as a saint: in any case my religion is passive. Thy enthusiasm Miss Sahib in preaching to Hindus the worship of Christ is not shared by thy father: does he not often say, Religions were manufactured by man, and God knows which is the right one. Be not astonished Miss Sahib, that it is permitted to this unworthy one to see something deeper than others into the hearts of men."

This uncanny knowledge of her father's attitude, which had always been a great trouble to her, completed Marjorie's amazement.

Smiling in his gentle fashion, Trevandernath went on to say that all were striving in their various fashions to worship the same God, though their ways of doing so were no doubt blind and imperfect. Marjorie was very silent, as she rode back home with Houston. "I should like to get something I left at the mission house," she said at last, "but it is getting rather dark, so do you mind coming with me?" They made the necessary detour to the little building which served as a church, and which was built close to a thick grove of trees. Having got off their ponies, they walked up to the building in the gathering gloom.

Suddenly a great grey wolf rushed suddenly out from among the trees, and made for Marjorie. Houston sprang in front of her, and cut at the beast with his riding switch. The wolf sprang aside, and trotted back into the darkness of the grove. As it went it looked back over its shoulder at Houston with the knowing grin of a dog that has done something clever. For one very pleasant moment Marjorie quite unnerved clung to Frank, and as his arm was pressed protectingly around her, there came a great feeling of tenderness into his heart.

"How brave and quick you were," cried the girl at last.

"It is funny," said Houston, as he was seeing her home to her bungalow, "that I have never seen, or even heard of a wolf before in these parts; we shall be seeing tigers next."

On getting back home, Frank remembered the lotus bud, which he had placed that morning in water. He found it partly open, and in the depths of the cup lay a tiny scarlet bud.

After the Strettons and young Hardy, who lived with them, had finished dinner, Williams came in, as he was often accustomed to do.

The Missionary was in a painfully agitated and perspiring condition, and related that he had been chased by an immense wolf, and only escaped by hard running. Hardy expressed his incredulity at the portly Missionary escaping from anything by superior speed, except perhaps a tortoise. Marjorie having just seen how Houston beat off what was evidently the same wolf with a riding switch, and comparing his ready coolness with Williams' lack of nerve, for the first time felt something akin to contempt for the Missionary.

Williams, who was not a tactful person, made his position worse by pressing attentions on Marjorie, mistaking in his self-conceit her new-born coldness for modesty.

During the next two days both Houston and Hardy hunted diligently for the grey wolf, but saw never a sign of him. The third day Marjorie during her morning ride paid a visit to the yogi.

She had been there but a few minutes when Williams appeared upon the scene. He had spied the girl in the distance, and had followed after. The sight of Marjorie, whom he had chosen in his mind as his future wife, sitting in amicable converse with the hated yogi, was altogether too much for his Celtic temper. He first showered abuse on the old man, and then finally did for himself by catching hold of Marjorie's arm, and trying to draw her away. The girl shook herself free angrily, with a white face and blazing eyes.

The old sadhu replied not a word to Williams' volley of bad language, though a close observer might have seen a most unsaintly spark kindle in his brown eyes.

"Kindly understand Mr. Williams," said Marjorie in an icy voice, "that you have no right whatever to dictate to me."

The Missionary turned on his heel, and as he went delivered two savage kicks, one at the alms bowl, and the other at the carved brass lota, and sent both utensils flying several yards. A sigh of horror went up from the lips of the chelas at the sacrilege.

That night, at his compound gate, Williams was badly bitten by a grey wolf, and the following day he went off post haste to the Pasteur Institute at Kasauli.

The week that followed went peacefully in Periyacorra, for Williams, the one disturbing element in the little community, had gone.

It became a habit for Marjorie and Houston to walk and ride together. Strettoo himself was content enough, for Frank was a man after his own heart. In fact, he unobtrusively encouraged the young people.

Events move quickly in a hot climate, and though nothing had actually been said, both man and girl now realised that their daily meeting had become a necessity to them.

On one of their morning rides they paid another visit to Trevandernath. Two chairs were set out, for as usual the old man knew they were coming. The yogi welcomed the pair with a very benevolent smile. While they were talking a large grey wolf came from among the bayan stems where he had been hidden, and joined the little party. He had a heavy copper bangle round his neck in lieu of a collar, and sat down close to, like a dog, in a most friendly fashion. So confidential did he look that Marjorie put her hand caressingly on his shaggy neck. The wolf turned his great head, and looked at Houston with a knowing grin.

Then it suddenly dawned on Marjorie and Frank that they had seen that wolf before. They looked at one another for a moment, and then burst into laughter, and Marjorie shook her fist at the yogi in mock anger. The old man placed his hands together in an attitude of supplication, and was almost guilty of a wink. Then quite irrelevantly, he said softly: Love is like wheat growing in the dry Punjab, that thrives on tiny drops of nightly dew. Truly it flourisheth amazingly on small encouragement, if given often."

As Houston helped Marjorie off her pony at Stretton's gate he held her for a moment in his arms, and seeing sweet surrender in her eyes, kissed the red lips so temptingly close.

Returning to his own bungalow in a very elated frame of mind, he saw an unfamiliar brass bowl on his table, and looking into it found a large open lotus flower floating on water. Almost filling the great cup of the lotus was an open red rose.

"JADO."

A CHEAP DRINK.

In there was one annual event Mr. James Port looked forward to more than any other, that particular one was the Lusham summer race meeting. It was the only holiday of all the year that James had "on his own, or, less vulgarly, without the companionship—or surveillance, as you may choose to term it—of Mrs. Port. Besides which, James was an Englishman, with an Englishman's inherent love of sport, and though the Turf notes of the papers usually possessed no more interest for him than did the column headed "Money Market," once on the course Mr. Port felt it his sacred duty to invest a few shillings with the bookies. To have omitted to do so would have been, he considered, about as bad as entering a house of refreshment without calling for a drink.

On the particular Cup Day that concerns this narrative, then, Mr. P. arrived at his destination in good time, took his usual survey of the outsides of the various shows, amused himself with a shot or two at the cocoanuts, and gazed somewhat wistfully at the swings and roundabouts.

Then he went and staked his humble shilling on his "fancy" for the first race—a rank outsider which came in as an outsider. Next time he backed a horse at shorter odds, and, to his great delight, netted the magnificent sum of three shillings.

After this coup, considering that he deserved to be treated, he refreshed the inner man to the tune of a pint of ale and a few enormous sandwiches the "missus" had put up for him.

He had just emerged from the booth where he had partaken of this, when some one slapped him on the back with such earnestness that he involuntarily took one or two steps forward. Turning round, he beheld an acquaintance of his, one Charlie Duke.

"Well, young feller," said the latter, "what are you doing here? Finding 'em eh?"

Mr. Duke was one of those men who seem to have a straw growing perpetually from their mouths. He was tall, with a loud voice, suit and jewellery to match. Our hero only knew him in a vague way as being somehow connected with the sporting fraternity, having first become acquainted with him through the fact of his occasionally dropping into the "pub" where Mr. P. himself would seek refuge when the domestic barometer indicated a storm.

It was not often the great man condescended to notice our friend, beyond a careless nod or wink, so that this sudden familiarity put poor little Port in quite a flutter.

"Come and have a drink," said Duke, jerking his head in the direction of the booth.

"Thank you all the same, Mr. Duke, but I've just had a pint, and—I'm afraid—"

"Oh! never mind that. Another one won't hurt you. Come on!"

There was no gainsaying this masterful man, and Port meekly followed his captor into the tent.

"Now," said Charlie, when they had got themselves and their beer into a comparatively quiet corner, "I can guess what you are thinking, Mr. Jimmy Port. You're just saying to yourself, 'Charlie Duke ain't so mighty friendly with me all of a sudden for nothing. He wants me to do something for him in return.' Oh! yes, you are," went on the big man, as James opened his mouth to protest. "And what's more, you're quite right. I do want you to do something for me, Jimmy."

He paused, and looked steadily at our hero, who emitted an apologetic cough, and murmured that he would only be too happy to accomplish anything lying in his power.

"Very well, then. Do you know Bob Stanton?"

"I'm afraid not. What is he?"

"A bookmaker. See here." Duke went to the opening and pointed with a fat forefinger at a spot some distance off. "See that party with the red parasol? Well, on her right is Stanton's pitch. Come in now. I don't want him to spot us talking together, for he's as smart as a ferret, is Bob. Well, look here; I want you to take this"—he drew a big handful of money from his trousers' pocket and put two sovereigns in Port's hand—"take this and put it on Miss Buttercup for the Cup.

"Is it a good thing, then?" asked James.

Mr. Duke laid his great hand impressively on our hero's shoulder.

"Good?" he whispered. "It's a dead snip! Owner's a pal of mine, and I had it straight from him less than half an hour ago. Of course, I'm getting all the money I can down on it in a quiet way, but Stanton's a safe man, and he's giving a better price about it than you can get even in the ring—he's laying 16's. The worst of it is, being only in a small way, he generally draws the line at about £2, and when he sees that I'm sweet on it he'll most likely begin to think there's something in it, and lower the odds. So you do it for two; then I'll do it for two without Mr. Bob being any the wiser.

"Just so," murmured Mr. Port, absently.

He was considering how much he could afford to put on Miss Buttercup.

"And you're quite sure you don't mind doing this little job for me?"

"Quite," replied James. "It's very kind of you, as far as that goes, to let me in the know. I shall have a bit on it myself."

"That's right; put all you can on it, Port."

"But you say Mr. Sturton won't take more than two pounds," said James, hesitatingly.

"That's true. Well," added the other, after a few moment's thought, "you shall have half of mine if you like."

"What! a pound?" echoed Mr. P., in tones of dismay. "Oh! I couldn't afford that. Five shillings is the utmost I can go to."

Duke laughed.

"Go on, man," said he; "make it ten while you're at it—even money—and you can come in with me. I'm not going to have any odd five shillings in the concern. Don't back it at all, old chap, unless you like," he went on, as James still hesitated. "Only, as you're obliging me, I thought I'd like to give you the chance of making a few quid for yourself."

Mr. Port turned the money over in his pocket and again hesitated. Half a sovereign at 16 to 1 would mean a win of £8!

"Now, you know I don't believe in plunging in the ordinary way," continued the tempter, "but between you and me if the mare goes down I stand to lose over twenty pounds."

Mr. Port carefully counted out eight shillings and four six pences into Duke's hand.

"There you are," said he, in a husky voice: "I'll chance my luck."

The big man pocketed the ten shillings with cheerful alacrity.

"Meet me here after the race is over and you've drawn the money," was all he said, and Mr. Port sped down the hill, backed his horse, and received the ticket.

It was not till his money had vanished in the peculiar's bag that a reaction set in, and James began to entertain misgivings. What would Mrs. P. say if she knew of this terrific plunge? Supposing, after all, the mare didn't win; supposing, for instance, she just lost by a neck! These dead certainties didn't always come off, he knew.

A cold sweat broke out over Mr. Port's forehead as he stood there. What a fool he had been not to split the half-sovereign for a win and a place! Anyhow, it was too late now; he had got no more money in his pocket even if he had felt inclined to invest more. He lingered by Sturton's stand in a state of uneasy excitement that increased every moment as the crowd grew thicker, and he heard his neighbours discuss the race as a foregone conclusion for the favourite.

His uneasiness would have been somewhat increased could any one have repeated to him a certain conversation that had taken place between his tipster and Sturton earlier in the morning, as they were wending their way, some little distance behind him, to the course.

"Do you know this Mr. Juggins in front?" Charlie had asked of his companion.

"Can't say I do," was the answer. "What of him?"

"Oh! nothing particular. Only I was just thinking I should like to have the pleasure of drinking his health to-day."

"Judging from a back view of the gent, I should say he don't look like a man who'll ask you," laughed Bob.

"Perhaps not: but half a dollar each will go some way to get us one, and a smoke as well, may be."

"Well, what is it?"

"See here. It is an absolute cert, that Highflier can't win to-day."

"Of course he can't. Nor, for that matter, Miss Buttercup neither."

"Better still. He is more likely to plunge on the big race. Oh! Mr. Port, you're a cautious chap, I know, but it's quite a tall drink we'll be having with you by-and-bye," and with this the speaker unfolded the details of his little plan, which seemed to amuse his friend mightily.

To repeat those details would be an insult to the intelligence of my readers, so we will return to the victim, who stands waiting in an ignorance that is yet not unalloyed bliss. Thankful enough is he when the bell rings to clear the course. His suspense will soon be over now, at all events.

"They're off!"

The hoarse murmur of the crowd develops itself into a medley of shouts and cries as the noble steeds come thundering by, and James stands on tip-toe and cranes his neck to get a glimpse, over the shoulders of the big man in front of him, of orange and green—his jockey's colours.

Alas! that one glance tells him that the favourite is leading easily, as orange and green is hopelessly kaleidoscoped with the rest of the colours that follow. He gives a gasp and closes his eyes; he cannot bear any longer to watch his half-sovereign thus flying away from him.

He is brought to himself by the big man stepping heavily backwards on his toes, and exclaiming—

"The favourite wins! Go on, Teddy! Well, I'm—"

Here the big man's feelings overcame him, the hand holding his field-glass drops limply to his side, and he groans aloud—in very bad language, too.

Poor Mr. Port's heart goes out to him in sympathy. They are fellow-sufferers.

"What's won, sir?" he asks.

"What's won? Why, yaller and blue, whoever he is," consulting his card. "Crept up from the ruck and done the favourite by a nose, sir—a mere nose! Just the length of a snout cost me fifteen bob. Who's yaller and—Wait a bit! there goes the figures up. No. 5, and a rank—

But his listener had vanished. No. 5 was Miss Buttercup. Elbowing his way through the crowd in the direction of Sturton's "pitch," Mr. Port ran against Duke.

"Hello, Charlie," he exclaimed, jubilantly; "we've won, then. How can I thank"—

"Give us your ticket," interrupted the other, curtly, "and I'll draw the spondulicks for you. It's rather a big sum, and there's plenty of the boys about."

"Doesn't seem so very happy, considering what a pile of money he must have won," was Port's mental comment, as his adviser departed. A few minutes after the latter rejoined him.

"Now, if I was you, I'd put all the lot on Highflier, for the next race," he observed, as he counted out £8 10s. into James's willing palm. "Another dead cert."

"Thanks, very much," replied Port, cheerfully, "but I'm sure I couldn't back three winners running. I've already had two."

"Tommy rot! Why, you'll make about a hundred quid on it! enough pocket-money to last you for another year or two."

But James shook his head obstinately.

"Something would happen to prevent it from winning I'm sure, if I backed it," he replied. "No; I shall get home now—I don't like carrying all this money about with me on a racecourse. I sha'n't forget your kindness, though. Won't you take a glass with me, Mr. Duke?"

But, strange to say, now that the coveted "drink" was offered him, Mr. Duke turned away.

Travel and Adventure.

CROCODILE CATCHING IN BORNEO.

It is a common sight in Borneo to see a large crocodile sunning himself on the muddy bank of a river. He takes no notice of the natives, even though they pass quite near him. So common, indeed, is the sight that the Dyaks themselves pay no heed to these dangerous reptiles; and yet it is no unusual thing in Borneo to hear of some human life being taken by a crocodile. For months, perhaps, says the Rev E. H. Gomes writing in Chambers's Journal, the crocodiles in a river live at peace with mankind, and then suddenly one of these creatures will carry off some lad bathing in the river, and even attack some one paddling along in his boat.

There seems to be no reason why the crocodile should suddenly show a maneating propensity in this way. The Dyaks account for it by curious superstitions. They say that if food is offered to a person, and he refuses it, and goes away without at least touching it, some misfortune is sure to befall him, and he will most probably be attacked by a crocodile. Also, it is said that one of the ways the gods punish crime is by sending a crocodile to attack the culprit.

The Dyaks of Borneo will not kill a crocodile except in revenge. If the animal will live at peace with him, the Dyak has no wish to start a quarrel; if, however, the crocodile breaks the truce and kills one, then he feels justified in retaliating. In these circumstances, the Dyaks set to work to find the culprit, and go on catching and killing crocodiles until they succeed in doing so. The Dyaks generally wear brass ornaments, and by cutting open a dead crocodile they can easily find out if he is the creature they wish to punish. Sometimes as many as ten crocodiles are killed before they manage to find the animal they want to be revenged on. Having succeeded in doing this, they once more live at peace with these reptiles until such time as the truce is broken again by some crocodile killing a human being. There are men whose business it is to catch crocodiles, and who earn their living by that means; and whenever a human being has fallen a victim to one of these brutes a professional crocodile-catcher is asked to help to destroy the murderer, and a large reward offered him.

The Baited Wooden Bar.

The majority of natives will not interfere with the reptiles, or take any part in their capture, probably fearing that if they do anything of the kind they themselves may some time or other suffer for it by being attacked by a crocodile. The usual way of catching crocodiles in Borneo is with a baited wooden bar and slack cable. A large piece of hard wood, about an inch in diameter and about ten inches long, is sharpened to a point at each end. A length of plaited bark of the barn-tree, about eight feet long, is tied to a shallow notch in the middle of this piece of wood, and a single cane or rattan, forty or fifty feet long, is tied to the end of the bark rope, and forms a long line.

When a crocodile has fresh meat, he carries it away and hides it in some safe place until it decomposes. The next thing is to suspend the bait from the bough of a tree overhanging the part of the river known to be the haunt of the animals. The bait is hung a few feet above the high-water level and the long rattan line is left lying on the ground, and the end of it planted in the soil.

Attracted either by the smell or sight of the bait, some animal raises himself from the water and snaps at the hanging bundle, the slack line offering no resistance until the bait has been swallowed and the brute begins to make off. Then the planted end of the cane line holds sufficiently to snap the slight thread binding the pointed stick to the bark rope. The stick thus returns to its original position at right angles to the line, and becomes jammed across the crocodile's stomach, the two sharpened points fixing themselves into the flesh. The crocodile swims away, dragging after him the long cane line attached to the bait which he has swallowed.

Remarkable Proceedings.

Sometimes the cotton holding the bar to the lines fails to snap. In that case the crocodile becomes suspicious of the long line attached to what he has swallowed, and climbing up the river-bank, disgorges the bait and unopened "hook" in the jungle, where it is sometimes found. But should the cotton snap and the bar fix itself in the animal's inside, nothing can save the brute. The formidable teeth of the crocodile are not able to bite through the rope attached to the bait, because the bark fibres of which it is loosely made get between his pointed teeth, and the rope holds, no matter how much the fibres get separated.

The trappers each morning visit the different traps to see if any of the baits have been taken, and if any are missing they search for them. They seldom fail to find the rattan or cane floating on the surface of some deep pool at no great distance from the spot where the bait was set. A firm but gentle pull soon brings the crocodile to the surface, and if he be a big one he is brought ashore; though smaller specimens are put directly into the boat and made fast there.

The rest of the proceeding is more remarkable. The animal is addressed in eulogistic language, and "beguiled," so the natives say, into offering no resistance. He is called a "rajah among animals," and is told that he has come on a friendly visit, and must behave accordingly. First the trapper ties up his jaws—not a very difficult thing to do. The next thing he does appears to be very risky. Still speaking as before in high-flown language, he tells the crocodile that he has brought rings for his fingers and he binds the hindlegs fast behind the beast's back, so taking from him his grip on the ground, and consequently his ability to use his tail.

When one remembers what a sudden swing of the muscular tail means, one cannot help admiring the courage of a man who coolly approaches a large crocodile for the purpose of tying up his hindlegs. Finally, the forelegs are tied in the same way over the animal's back. A stout pole is passed under the bound legs, and the animal is carried away. He is taken to the nearest Government station, and the reward given according to the animal killed is claimed. Though the animal is spoken to in such flattering terms before he is secured, the moment his legs are bound across his back and he is powerless for evil, the natives howl at him and deride him for his stupidity.

ACTRESS: "In this new play I am supposed to die of a broken heart. Now, how am I to know how a person with a broken heart behaves?" Manager: "I'll tell you what you do. Study the author of the play after he sees your first rehearsal."

LADY (to exhausted furniture removers): "Here's twopence for you and your friend each to get a glass of beer with." Exhausted Furniture Remover: "A glass of beer! Love us, lady, a glass of beer ain't no more to us than a snowflake on a red-hot stove!"

MR. GREEN: "Now I'm going to tell you something, Ethel. Do you know that last night, at your party, your sister promised to marry me! I hope you'll forgive me for taking her away." Little Ethel: "Forgive you, Mr. Green! Of course, I will. Why that's what the party was for!"

THE headmaster of a school recently put up a notice that on an early day he would lecture on the following subject: "Our Eyes, and How We See Through Them." Shortly afterwards he was astonished to find an alternative title written underneath: "Our Pupils, and How They See Through Us."

MRS. TESTY (looking up from the paper): "Isn't this strange! A man, after a fit of illness, was absolutely unable to remember his wife, and did not believe she was the one he married." Mr. Testy: "Well, I dunno. It's pretty hard work sometimes for a man to realise that his wife is the same woman that he once went crazy over."

HER REWARD.—The cook for a well-known Seattle family left, and no other could be obtained, so the lady of the house did the cooking herself, with such satisfactory results that, after a month, her husband gave her a beautiful set of sables as a token of his appreciation of the good dinners he had enjoyed. Of course the neighbours soon heard of this, and when the cook left in another equally well-known family the lady of that house said to her husband: "Well, the cook has gone and I'm not going to bother to get another. I'm going to do the cooking myself, deary. You heard what Mr. So-and-So gave his wife when she did the cooking?" And, putting her arms round his neck, she cooed: "What shall I get for my cooking?" "Woman," said her husband, pushing her away, "you will get a long black veil!"

BISON AND JUNGLE-FOWL.

AMERICAN bison and Indian jungle-fowl firm, it must be confessed, somewhat strange bed-fellows ; and we shall therefore not be surprised if some of our readers wonder why we have associated their names at the head of this article. The reason is, however, not far to seek, and is merely that each of these creatures has recently formed the subject of a special communication, and that it is more convenient to notice these together rather than separately.

As regards the American bison, it is extremely satisfactory that the efforts of the excellent society founded a few years ago in the United States for the purpose of ensuing the preservation of the herds of that magnificent beast in the country of which he was once the lord are bearing fruit and that, so far as human foresight can see, and barring epidemics, the preservation of the species is secured for many years to come, assuming, of course, that future generations will maintain the herds that have now been established with so much trouble and at such vast expense all over North America,—for Canada is vying with the States in the matter of the preservation of the bison.

Bison of pure blood are now maintained in no less than 26 States of the Union, although, of course, in very varying numbers. Some States, for instance, can boast of only a few head, or even merely a couple of individuals, kept in zoological gardens, or private parks ; while others possess one or more reserves on which the bison roam in a more or less near approach to complete liberty.

The largest herd is in the South Dakota country, where it is located at Fort Pierre, and comprised no less than 285 head at the last census. It ought indeed to do well, as South Dakota was part of the head-quarters of the bison in its palmy days, and it is thus natural that the animal should flourish better here than in those States to which it was a stranger in the old days. Probably, too, it is possible to keep bison in Dakota all the year round without artificial feeding, or, at all events, to do so to a great extent. That this is a very important matter is evident from what has taken place in the case of a big herd kept in New England. Here it is necessary to supply the animals with hay throughout the greater part of the winter ; and in the case of a large herd the expenses became so enormous that the owners felt compelled to sell a considerable number of the animals. This was distinctly a pity, as, provided they have a sufficiently big area—and in the case referred to they have forty square miles,—the bigger the herds the better chance have they of surviving, on account of being less liable to the ill-effects of inbreeding.

In the case of the South Dakota herd fears have already been expressed that there are more animals than the ground can properly carry. To remedy this state of affairs the Federal Government offered the owner an additional 10,000 acres of land ; but this he has not seen fit to take up, owing, it is said, to the inaccessibility of the whole region. This, again, is decidedly a pity, as no chance of bettering the condition of the animals ought to be lost.

The Bison Society, from whose report for the year 1910-11 we are quoting, are making efforts to establish another herd in one of the Dakotas—preferably South Dakota ;—and it is to be hoped that their endeavours will be crowned with success.

For the last few years the number of captive bison in the United States has been steadily increasing ; and taking the whole of North America, and including wild herds as well as tame, the total number of head in the country is nearly three thousand.

How long it will be possible to preserve bison living under artificial conditions in the United States is a curious matter for speculation. The history of the Lithuanian bison in Bielowisza is, indeed, encouraging, as the animals have lived under their present conditions for centuries. But then it has to be borne in mind that they are much more numerous than any of the American herds, and occupy a vastly bigger area. But even in their case there is much too great a preponderance of bull over cow calves ; and it is the same danger which threatens the American herds in an even greater degree. However, what effect this will ultimately have on the herds time alone can show.

An interesting incident in connection with a herd of some eighty head of bison which have reverted to an absolutely wild state in a remote part of Montana is recorded in the course of the report. A few years ago this herd was much larger, and the owner made arrangements to sell the whole lot to the Canadian Government. He, however, forgot the old proverb about first catching your hare before taking further proceedings as to the disposal of the animal ; and after capturing a certain number of the herd and dispatching them to Canada, found that it was quite impossible to secure the rest. After spending large sums of money on the attempt he had at length to confess his failure to the Canadian Government, which accordingly cancelled its bargain.

Thereupon the disappointed owner thought of another plan for recovering his lost dollars ; and he accordingly advertised a grand buffalo-hunt, at which sportsmen were offered the opportunity of shooting bison at a good round number of dollars per head. Unfortunately for the owner, the matter was brought to the notice of the Montana game-warden, who decided that the animals were real feræ naturæ, and promptly forbade their destruction. The decision seems a bit hard on the unfortunate owner of the unmanageable heard ; although from the point of view of the friends of the bison and naturalists generally it is highly satisfactory.

From bison we pass to jungle-fowl, which, however, will not occupy us long, for we have only to direct the attention of our readers to one of the greatest absurdities in connection with natural history matters that has ever come to our notice.

In the January number of the Zoologist Messrs. Frederick J. Stubbs and A. J. Rowe, who we presume pose as naturalists, although we confess to never having heard of them before, give their reasons for believing that the ordinary domesticated murghi was not tamed in India from the wild red jungle-fowl (Gallus bankiva), but that the domestication really took place in Central Asia, whence the fowl penetrated by way of Mesopotamia to Egypt, where it appears to have been known as early as 4600 B. C.

Whether this was really the case or no, does not much concern us, although we may remark in passing that the wild bird is unknown in Central Asia. What we have to notice is that these two theorists—in order to make matters fit in with their own views—have the audacity to assert that the jungle-fowl is not an indigenous Indian bird, but that it was introduced into the country by human agency, and must therefore be reckoned as what naturalists call a feral species !

And this, too, without a title of evidence ; and in spite of the remarkable coincidence between the range of this jungle-fowl and the area of the sal-forests, which was so carefully worked out by Captain Forsyth in the Highlands of Central India. We wonder what the shades of Jerdon, Blanford, and Oates think of such an absurd suggestion put forward in the guise of a scientific theory. We feel, indeed, like the costermonger who upset his cart-load of oranges down the hill ;—there are no words strong enough to meet the occasion !

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

IN addition to Major Moore of the 27th Light Cavalry who has already signified his intention of coming down to Calcutta for the Monsoons and Oakley who has a long string of horses of H. H. of Cooch Behar's and other owners, we hear that some of the Western India stables intend coming, prominent amongst them Byramjee's. To a betting stable the meetings in the west are now of very small use, for figure it as one may the totalisator does not fulfil the requirements of the betting man. If the bookmaker is an evil, he is at any rate a necessary one and the effect he has had upon the morals of India, pace H.E. Sir George Sydenham Clarke, is not so polluting as the social reformer would firmly have us believe. If statistics were obtainable to show the relative losses of speculators, another name for professional backers, in the world of commerce and finance, and losses by persons in the habit of betting on the turf, we know upon which side the scale would be down. There seems to be still a good deal of doubt as to whether the W.I.T.C. intend to hold the Poona Meeting or not, but the general opinion appears to be that it would be the better policy to abandon it especially in view of recent disclosures concerning the desires and intentions of the Government of Bombay. We refer to the announcement that it is intended, if possible, to make any licenses issued for the Poona and Bombay racecourses current for three years. H.E. the Governor of Bombay is therefore endeavouring to direct the policy of his successor, who may not entertain the peculiar views regarding the turf and the turpitude thereof, held by the present ruler of Bombay.

WE hear that F. Wootton has a commission to buy several horses for an Indian owner.

IT is said that Danny Maher may be engaged to ride for a well-known owner in Calcutta next season.

AMES, the well-known American jockey, is intending, so we hear, to open a public training stable.

GEE, who has been located in Darjeeling of recent years and has trained for "Mr. Clive" and Mr. Shillingford, is opening a public stable in that station and has already the nucleus of a very useful string. He will be represented at the Tollygunge Gymkhanas and at the Calcutta Monsoon Races, at which meetings animals trained by him have had a considerable measure of success in the past.

H.E. LORD CARMICHAEL, Governor of Bengal, is generously presenting two cups to be run for at the Darjeeling Races, one for the Spring Meeting in May and the other for the meeting that is run in the Poojah holidays. H.E. is also presenting a prize for the Darjeeling Flower Show on the 6th May.

THE Darjeeling May Meeting promises well and it is said that there will be more owners represented than usual. Last year two stables practically carved it up between them and consequently it was not particularly interesting: this year, however, there are a good many owners who are likely to be represented and consequently there is a chance of the spoils being more evenly divided. Amongst owners who are at present in or near Darjeeling and who are expected to run horses at the coming big meeting are Major "Digger" Hayes of the Middlesex, Major Eustace Crawley, Captain Liddell, Captain Power, Mr. Hennessey, Mr. Shillingford, Mr. Dalzell, Mr. Jones, Captain Large and some of the out-station stables. The Lebong course is not an ideal place for even pony racing, as it is on the turn all the way and the straight (!) run in is up the Lebong cart road and is only about half a furlong in length. However the races are a very welcome interlude to the somewhat dull round of hill station life and are as keenly canvassed and contested as meetings of far greater importance. Mr. Evers is, we hear, going up to ride for Captain Liddell and if he approaches his score of last year, when he practically won the card on each day, the stable ought to be in luck. Captain Large, Captain Liddell, Mr. Barrow, who is in Darjeeling at present, and probably Mr. McCall, who rarely misses one of these aerial gatherings, will also, we expect, be riding.

WE much regret to learn the news of a very bad riding accident at Darjeeling which happened to Mr. Kenneth McLeod, a nephew of the Hon'ble Mr. Norman McLeod and of Mr. "Tougall" McLeod, as a result of which the unfortunate victim has had to have one of his legs amputated. Mr. McLeod, who was up in Darjeeling on a holiday, was riding a blind pony and as far as can be gathered the animal broke away with him for a short distance and collided with an iron railing. Mr. McLeod's leg was fractured close up to the hip joint and he was also thrown clean over the rail and fell about 8 feet down a bank. On being removed to hospital it was found that it was a bad compound and comminuted fracture and that there was no other course open but to amputate immediately. This was accordingly done on last Monday week and since then the patient's condition has caused some considerable anxiety though the latest received bulletins are to the effect that he is doing as well as can possibly be expected under such circumstances, but naturally the shock consequent upon so serious an accident followed by an operation is very great indeed. Mr. McLeod displayed the utmost fortitude at the time and smoked a cigarette as he was being carried down to the Eden Sanitarium. The greatest sympathy is felt for him. He only arrived in Calcutta to join Messrs. McLeod and Co. last cold weather. He was like most of his family a very keen rider and was occasionally seen out paperchasing in Calcutta during the past season.

THERE have been two other riding accidents during the past week in Darjeeling, the victims in each case having been members of the Cleveland's "party" of American tourists. One of them it was at first feared was of a serious nature, but fortunately Mr. Stromeyer, the victim in question, only sustained a bad shaking and some minor small wounds. The other dissolution was harmless, but as it happened on the precipitous slopes of Senchal it might easily have been serious.

C. BARRETT, who rides for Ramshaw's stable in India, is expecting to get a good deal of riding at home this year, and we hear that it is probable that he will ride some of Mr. W. H. Schwind's horses in their engagements.

OAKLEY, who is usually a very familiar figure at Darjeeling Races, is not going up to that high level centre this year, but intends to invade Calcutta in force about the time of the Monsoon Meetings and he will probably have a good many horses for the hurdle races, which are the principal feature of those meetings. Another familiar face missing from Darjeeling this year is that of Mr. A. A. Price, who usually is well represented at the meetings at that hill station and as a rule does not go there for nothing. Mr. Price's new appointment, however, keeps him very fully occupied in Calcutta. He is much missed in Darjeeling.

NOTHING further has, we believe, been done about the scheme for a steeplechase course in Calcutta; but we understand upon good authority that so far as H.E. the Governor of Bengal is concerned that there would be no difficulty about obtaining the necessary sanction. Until Calcutta does get a steeplechase course there is very little chance of our seeing any improvement in jump racing at headquarters. Tollygunge is an annual failure and a heavy expense to the C.T.C. and there would seem to be only one remedy left if that now time-honoured fixture is to be saved from extinction, a chase course in Calcutta itself so as to make it possible for the Stewards of the C.T.C. to afford owners of jumpers more opportunities of earning something towards paying the corn bill. At present owing to there being so few jump races owners do not naturally find it a remunerative investment to keep a jumper in training.

F. WOOTTON has been telling a representative of Sporting Life that he does not turn the scale at 9st. with all his clothes on. The sea voyage home from India must have fined Wootton down amazingly if this is so, for when in Calcutta in the cold weather he found considerable difficulty in getting that weight in light racing kit. We note that our London contemporary says that Wootton looked on his Indian trip as a "holiday." It is quite true; he did, for he rode next to no work and was of no use to the owner who employed him at any weights under 8st. 12lb. Wootton told his interviewer that he would be able to ride 8st. 7lb. within a month from the date of the interview. We hope so. Wootton rides Mr. Jack Joel's horses this season, which means that White Star will have the services of this talented horseman in the Derby.

SAXONITE, the horse that is reported to have been secured by Mr. J. D. Scott for an Indian patron, has not been long in following up his successes in the Australian Cup (dead-heat with Prize Fighter) and the Autumn Stakes, also won at the recent V.R.C. Meeting at Flemington, as a telegram to the Statesman records that he has just won the Sydney Cup beating Jewelstone and Aurofodina, the latter one of their best three-year-olds. The Doncaster Handicap, one of the principal sprint races in Australia, was won by Lachano, Medalling running second and Kurnell third.

THE decision of the I.P.A. to suspend Rule 27 (the off-side rule) for yet another season is generally taken to mean that sooner or later this American innovation will be permanently adopted. At the Annual Meeting of the I.P.A. on the 5th March it was proposed that Rule 27 should be deleted, but the Committee deemed it more desirable to merely suspend the rule for another season. The "no off-side" game worked well and found favour with Indian polo players last season and the same thing was the case at home last year, so that the odds are strongly in favour of its adoption in English polo the world over. When the last English team went to America in quest of the America Cup, the fact that the English players had not had much practice at the "no off-side" game undoubtedly was somewhat of a handicap.

YOUNG FRANK WOOTTON, who was riding in India last cold weather, has been interviewed on his return to England and some of his remarks and impressions are amusing. The lad seems to have thoroughly enjoyed his visit and, of course, Anglo-Indian hospitality and sporting spirit have impressed him not a little.

The Trial Stakes at Calcutta was one of his chief victories, and King George was present at two meetings where he was riding. "The sport," he said, "was extremely interesting and well carried out in every way. Large numbers of people attend the races, which are run over practically the same distance as in England. The courses are grass, and are watered every night after the races are over. The going is satisfactory.

"The horses may be described as from just moderate to useful, and they are mostly imported from Australia. They might win a little handicap here. So far as their methods of training are concerned I had limited opportunities for judging, but, generally speaking, they were fit enough."

Going on to express his opinions concerning the flourishing condition and bright prospects of Indian racing, the little fellow was especially emphatic in his praise. "Everything is so well organised," he affirmed, "and although the stakes are not very valuable—say about £100 as an ordinary prize—the keenest interest is taken in the sport. I was received everywhere with the greatest hospitality and kindness, and I cannot be too grateful.

"I come back just about as heavy as when I left England, and the lowest weight at which I rode in India was 8st. 12lb. The climate offered no difficulties, and I was able to keep fit all the time.

"There are, as a rule, plenty of runners for races in India. Nobody is allowed to get much by walking over. You see there are special races for Arabs as well as pony races, so that abundant variety is provided for spectators. I rode the winner of a pony race. The Arabs are pretty useful in their own class, and that is about all that can be said for them. They are pleasant mounts."

Wootton stated that there are some very good jockeys in India. The starting is all by the gate, as in this country, and it is worked very satisfactorily. No trouble is experienced in that respect.

At one meeting he saw a sort of spring arrangement, which flew away before the horses in quite a remarkable manner; it seemed to have made a great impression on his mind, although he was not prepared to recommend it for general adoption. He also saw a novel kind of jockeys' weighing machine, which acted automatically, riders simply sitting on it, and the weight being duly registered with absolute precision.

"In fact," added the crack jockey decisively, "racing in India is all right and thoroughly enjoyable. I was delighted with the trip."

The Monsoon race meeting at Secunderabad will be held on the 27th, 29th and 31st July, entries closing on the 30th June, 10th and 16th July.

We much regret to record the death of Mr. J. M. Rodocanachi, which sad event took place suddenly at the Presidency General Hospital on Sunday night. Mr. Rodocanachi was 58 years of age and came to Calcutta in 1886. He was well known in business circles, a popular member of society and a keen sportsman. He was an active member of the Calcutta Turf Club and took a big interest in racing, being at one time a successful owner. His funeral on Monday evening was largely attended.

A Bangalore correspondent writes:—With the arrival of the 7th Queen's Own Hussars in the place of the 14th, who left us last November, sport that was lying dormant has bucked up wonderfully. The "First Spring Week" began on the 8th instant with polo for the Novices and Handicap Tournaments, the former drawing eight entries, two of them being from outstations—the 7th Dragoon Guards from Secunderabad and the Jamkhandi Combination from Poona. The latter tournament drew only three teams, the local Gymkhana, the 7th Hussars and Queen's Own Sappers and Miners. All the games during the first day were well contested and do not call for special report, but the finals in both the tournaments are given in detail in another column.

On the 11th, last Thursday the Bangalore Point-to-Point and National Hunt steeplechases were held at Agram under many disadvantages owing most probably to its being the first attempt of running a show of this kind in the "land of Beans." The weather was stifling at this time of the year, although the cool breeze from the Agram lake went greatly towards alleviating the stiff journey that was encountered before the spot was reached. Half the people who went out took the wrong route and the other half were not quite certain that they were on the right track till a couple of tents could be discovered in the shadow of a casuarina copse above the sky line. The attendance was indeed very poor and not more than a dozen ladies ventured out to witness the sport. Among those who were present were Major-General Mackenzie Kennedy, Sir A. A. Apcar, Colonel Poore and Lady Flora Poore, Major Sykes and Mr. H. Donne, the local Secretary of the Mysore and Bangalore Races. The course lay around the borders of the lake and a clear view of the running was visible except when the track deviated to the left for about two to three furlongs. The going was undoubtedly hard and though there were a couple of falls, horses and riders escaped with trifling damages. The starting post in each race was at the southern end of the dam and the finish was near the village of Yamlur at the northern end of the dam, where there were two tents pitched for the accommodation of the gathering and Colonel Poore and officers of the 7th Hussars were "At Home." The scene at the spot where the tents were pitched had been well closed. There were five races advertized, but the Ladies' Nomination event not filling was abandoned. So there were four down on the card and start was made with the 7th Hussars Regimental Race for chargers of officers of the regiment and out of seven two scratched—Hobomoko and Philip. The five were sent away level, Cuthbert and Bolter leading the way with a three-length lead from the others when they went out of sight. On coming in view again, the same pair were racing abreast while the others had tailed off into a procession. Cuthbert, who was going the stronger, eventually won by two lengths; ten lengths separating the second and the third. Four accepted for the National Hunt Steeplechase (open) and Rifleman was predicted to annex it with ease. Rifleman as was expected streaked away and a furlong separated him from Forrard On, Nana and Small Scotch. This was the order maintained as far as the wall jump where Rifleman blundered in taking it and unseated his rider and made for home. Forrard On fencing well completed the course a street in front of Nana, who was the only other that finished.

Forrard On scratched for the Royal Artillery Regimental steeplechase and five went to the post. This was the race of the day, for they all left more or less together and the tight struggle between Philip, Astronomy and Pussmoth to get a place was a feature of the meeting. As the flag dropped Ginger set a tremendous pace and led the field an absolute cracker but came down heavily in negotiating the first jump, nearly bringing down Pussmoth, who was almost right on the top of him. As they came under glasses again, Rufus and Philip showed the way fencing abreast with Astronomy and Pussmoth couple of lengths behind. Rufus and Philip negotiated the last fence but one together, with the result that Philip struck the fence hard and came down. This allowed Rufus to go easy and he won by six lengths, pulling up. Philip was remounted and coming again strong as ever, just managed to snatch second honours from Astronomy, who deprived Pussmoth of being placed third by half a length.

The concluding race was as teeplechase for members of the 7th Hussars Sergeants' Mess and was keenly watched by the wives of the sergeants who had gathered in strong numbers to witness this event. There were twelve on the card, but only nine braved their necks with the "nags" they had to get the course. Nipaway led the whole journey with Perhaps, Jungle Wallah and Wind Up close up, while the others were racing on their own

Our Ootacamund correspondent under date 13th April writes:—Although a little rain fell last week, it was not sufficient to soften the ground, and parts of the downs had hardly any at all. The Hobart Park racecourse looks a bit freshened up, but the track is as hard as nails and in no fit state to gallop horses on, which is a serious matter for owners who want to bring their horses to the post fit on 23rd instant.

The Ooty Gymkhana played an XI. of Madras in a two-day cricket match during the Easter holidays, the game ending in a draw. Madras sportingly agreed to play ½ hour overtime on the second day, so as to give Ooty a chance of compiling the runs required to win, which they just failed to do. Scores will be found further on.

To-day the Gymkhana Club meet Coimbatore, when the members are "At Home" to their friends, and it is expected that H. E. Sir Murray Hammick will be present for a while in the afternoon. The Government House Party arrived in Ooty last Tuesday, so the season may be said to have commenced.

The Royal Fusiliers held a Point-to-Point race meeting at Jubbulpore on the 11th instant under the management of Captains de Trafford and Hodgson and Mr. Laverton. The course was about 2½ miles long on the Mandla Road, the going was excellent and the racing was witnessed by all those at present in the station. The programme opened with a race for Native Cavalry won by Sowar Nizam Khan of the 32nd Lancers; this was followed by the Artillery Plate for British troops, which brought out a field of 18 and was won by Sergeant Smith of the 83rd Battery. Then came the White Horse Cup, an open horse race. Ten ran and the winner was Mrs. Thana's Dawn ridden by Captain Gascoine. The St. Maur Challenge Cup, open to officers of the Royal Fusiliers, was won by Captain de Trafford's Chance. The Fusiliers Cup, an open pony race for which twelve faced the starter, closed the proceedings. Mr. Todd's Discussion squandered his field and won cantering. The Regiment were "At Home" and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent.

It is announced that the annual Bombay Hunt Dinner in London is to take place at the Cafe Royal on Derby Day, and popular though this gathering always is with past and present members of the Bombay Hunt, an additional attraction this year will be the presence, in the chair, of the popular M.F.H., Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop. Mr. L. B. Ker, Oriental Club, Hanover Square, is acting as honorary secretary for the dinner, and will be happy to receive applications for tickets from anyone wishing to attend.

In a series of running matches at Auckland, New Zealand, Postle defeated Donaldson over 75 yards in 7-1/5secs.; 150 yards in 14-1/5secs.; and 200 yards in 19secs. The last two times are world's records for the respective distance.

In Badminton for March Mr. G. C. Terry gives a most interesting account of the Tarahumare Indians, the champion runners of Mexico. Some 15,000 of these Indians dwell in the Sierre Madre Range. They are the sole remaining cave-dwellers in North America. They are pagans. They live on beans and corn, and when these give out, on rats and snakes. They excel in the running of races—not the sprint of the white man, but of a kind that no white man could or would endure. As couriers probably no other runners on earth can compare with them. They are employed as couriers by the Mexican Government and by mining concerns of Chihuahua and Sonora. They average frequently 170 miles a day. One specially quick messenger covered a distance of 600 miles in five days. The runner had no luggage, but simply carried his white wool blanket and a package of ground corn, "pimole."

When short of ammunition (they use only the bow and arrows) these Indians will run down a deer, there being great numbers of these animals in the Sierras. Half-a-dozen men will take part in the chase; they head off the animal, taking up the pursuit in relays, until finally the poor beast, running in ever narrowing circles, drops from pure exhaustion. They also chase and capture the wild turkey in the same manner. The runners undergo a sort of training before the races come off; that is they eat no fat, no potatoes, eggs, or anything sweet. Neither must they touch "tesvino," their own native intoxicating drink. Their food consists of meat and pimole. A "shaman" (chief or medicine-man) has also put them through a sort of primitive rubbing-down and massage; and the night before the race all runners are "cured." The said curing consists of semi-religious ceremonies, led by the shaman, and all the men sleep within sight of their tribal tokens or gods.

The Olympic games which are to be held at Stockholm next June are already exciting great interest in the British Oversea dominions. It is expected that at the forthcoming fifth Olympiad the British Empire will be represented as never before. Canada, South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand are especially eager to compete, and will send representative athletes who are expected to give an excellent account of themselves. Russia and Japan will enter at Stockholm for the first time in the history of the Olympiad, and it will be interesting to see how the representatives of the younger Empire, who are past-masters in the art of wrestling, will comport themselves in the all-round championships.

In a large proportion of the events the maximum number of competitors will, as heretofore, be limited to twelve. The classical Pentathlon, to determine the best all-round athlete, and the modern Pentathlon, the best all-round sportsman, are the two new events which will give variety to the Stockholm proceedings. The outstanding feature of the entire Olympiad will be the celebrated Marathon race. It is not unlikely that Longboat, the famous Indian runner, may after all, be eligible, as one of the Canadians, in view of his recent long-distance success. J. J. Hayes, of the United States, and the doughty Italian "Dorando" will probably compete again at the coming Marathon. Another trophy to be competed for will be the Montgomery statuette, to the winner of the discus throwing. This is now held by another American, Mr. J. Sheridan, whose prowess was strikingly displayed at the last Olympiad.

It has been decided by the Army Council to send as the official representatives of the British Army in the United Kingdom a team of four cavalry officers, who will be selected by the Inspector of Cavalry, and will be under the charge of a senior officer, to compete in the military riding competitions of the Olympic games at Stockholm. The winning team in this competition will be awarded the challenge cup presented by the German Emperor. This is the first occasion on which the British Army has been officially represented at the Olympic games.

The games also include prize-riding and jumping competitions open to civilians. These competitions are strictly confined to gentlemen riders. For the purpose of these competitions the British Olympic Council has nominated a riding sub-committee, who will select the British representatives in those competitions. Applications for inclusion among British representatives are invited from gentlemen riders, open to anyone who has not ridden for hire or derived his livelihood from trading in horses.

The annual general meeting of the Calcutta Football League was held at the Y.M.C.A. Hall (Chowringhee) on Monday evening with Mr. T. C. Crawford in the chair. The following representatives of the various clubs were present:—T. C. Crawford (C. F. C.), W. Butcher (Dalhousie), Sergeant-Major J. W. Scott (70th R.G.A.), Rev. Father Power (St. Xavier's), F. Rossetti (Y.M.C.A.), J. Knox (Measurers), C. H. Cody (Rangers), J. Huyshe (Port Commissioners), C. Meyers (E.B.S.R.), Sergeant-Major J. Johnstone (Black Watch), and Mr. H. E. Medlycott, the Honorary Secretary.

After the accounts had been passed the following teams were selected to play in the competitions:—

First Division.—Black Watch, Calcutta, Customs, Dalhousie, Rangers, Middlesex, Y.M.C.A., 70th R.G.A., and the E.I.R. (Lillooah). The last-named have taken the place of the Measurers who, being last on the table last year, have to play now in the Second Division.

The teams who will play in the Second Division are:—Black Watch "B" team, E. B. S. R., Sibpur, Port Defence, St. Xavier's, Apprentices (Lillooah) and Port Commissioners.

The Measurers have withdrawn from the League.

At a meeting of the members of the Indian cricket team for England Committee held on Wednesday evening the 10th instant at Navsari Buildings, Bombay, the Committee, its work being completed, was finally dissolved.

General satisfaction was expressed at the result of the tour at he meeting, which was presided over by the President (Sir D. J. Tata), and when the accounts were presented, it was explained that the estimate of Rs. 55,000 for the expenses of the team in England had not been reached, the actual expenditure being only Rs. 49,000. The accounts were adopted, and the amounts returnable pro rata to the Indian guarantors were ordered to be refunded.

Before the Committee was dissolved it was unanimously decided to present a souvenir worth about Rs. 300 (probably a gold watch and chain) to Mr. J. M. Divecha, the honorary secretary, for his services in England. This amount will come out of the donation of Rs. 871 returnable to Sir D. J. Tata, as this was not a guaranteed sum, and so will the cost of the souvenirs which it was decided to make to the members of the team which visited England. These souvenirs will probably consist of medals valued at £2 to £3 each.

Messrs. S. B. Billimoria and Company were thanked for honorarily auditing the accounts and so were the joint honorary secretaries (Messrs. J. M. Framji Patel and J. M. Divecha) for their work during the last two years.

It was decided that the records of the Committee should be deposited in the Parsi Gymkhana for future reference.

British Columbia has, with the exception of antelope and musk-ox, every species of big game indigenous to the North American continent, the rarest species even being found in fair numbers. In addition to big game, British Columbia boasts her full quota of game-birds and wildfowl of many different species, both native and acclimatised, while her waters afford probably the finest trout and salmon angling to be found anywhere in the world. The Grand Trunk Railway is at present opening up the Fort George district, which, from a sportsman's point of view, is a veritable paradise. Some 70 miles up the river from Fort George lies the Grand Canon, from whence extends, as far as the Little Smoky River, the finest moose country in the Dominion. On the higher plateaux caribou are very plentiful, and in certain parts both the grizzly and the black bear are common enough. This district has never been hunted except by a few prospectors and Indians.

Mr. J. J. Meyrick, who sometime ago put forward the theory in our American contemporary, Forest and Stream, that a great change occurred suddenly in the Arctic regions creating its present condition, seems likely to have some support for his opinion from scientific authority. It appears that a great change has taken place in the climate of Alaska, and it is supposed that earthquakes in the Aleutian Islands may have caused changes in the bed of the sea resulting in diverting the Japan current, or part of it, and bringing the warm water along the coast of Alaska. The Hydrographic Office at Washington reports as follows:—"Investigations indicate the Alaskan climate is completely changed possibly for ever. We now think the warm water of the Japanese current has been diverted to Alaska, causing the unprecedented warm weather. We think it possible that the change will be permanent. A thorough investigation is being made. Reports are being received from experts in Alaska and from ocean navigators." It is said that sportsmen, both fishermen and shooters, are watching for developments with some anxiety, as they imagine that the natural history of the country is likely to be greatly affected. Mr. Meyrick in his article said: "Considering the great advances made in civil engineering during the past two hundred years, and the continually increasing help afforded by the invention of powerful explosives and new kinds of machinery, it seems quite possible that, if several nations combined in bearing the cost, means might be found in the not distant future to widen and deepen Behring Straits and thus restore the whole of the Northern Hemisphere to its former fertility." What a dream of the future this opens up! The North Pole may one day become a summer, or even winter, resort!

At the recent annual meeting of the Automobile Association of Bengal, held at the Asiatic Society's rooms, the following resolutions were adopted :—

That H. E. the Governor of Bengal be approached and requested to accept the Presidentship of the Association ; that the Committee of the Association be asked whether they cannot have a defence scheme for members, by retaining the services of a pleader with special knowledge of rules of the Motor Act and Traffic Regulations, who will defend the members in Police Court and other cases for a fixed fee ; that the Committee be also asked to consider the question of accommodation.

The following were appointed to constitute the committee for the new year :—Mr. R. A. Jenkins (Chairman), Mr. W. C. Johnson (Vice-President), Mr. F. Froome, Mr. E. J. Banner, Mr. H. H. Reynolds, Mr. Osmar Jumall, Mr. Meugens, Mr. B. Eustace, Mr. B. C. Wilson, Rai L. M. Singh, Bahadur, Mr. E. J. Oakley (Honorary Secretary), and Mr. E. V. D. Parr (Honorary Treasurer).

London Week by Week.

Friday, 29th March 1912.

The coal strike continues—conciliation and compromise have failed. Did any sane person expect otherwise? The Government intervention, with its wretched minimum wage bill, was doomed to failure from the outset, though it is law what has it effected? So far nothing. The Government up to the last moment thought the miners and the owners would agree. They have been disillusioned. Looking back on events, the obvious remark is that we should always have foreseen that the two sides would never of their own volition patch up any peace. The men demanded conditions which it was patent the owners could never concede. If you tell a man to destroy his business because it will help his next-door neighbour it is not humanly credible he will do so. This in effect is what the pressure on the owners has meant. They have been invited to submit to the men's terms—ruin themselves—in order that the country may have peace, and, of course, no one can blame them for refusing. The miners, on the other hand, have been asked to abate their demands for the same good reason—the salvation of the country—and no one can be surprised that these debased creatures have declined, seeing how consistently selfish their attitude has been.

The English of the business is that four weeks have been wasted in the delusive hope that men whose views are vitally at variance would, as by miracle, suddenly become reconciled. The most pathetic feature of all has been the undeceiving of poor Mr. Asquith. He was fondly confident to the end that the call of patriotism would prove superior to selfish considerations. If Mr. Asquith had trusted his head and not his heart he would not have made this mistake. He thought the appeal of the starving women and children, the cry of the poor, would induce the brutal miners to sacrifice a little of their unreasonableness. It would be churlish to blame Mr. Asquith for his mistaken belief in the humanity of his fellow-men. And thousands of ignorant people shared his belief: had they considered for a moment what the modern miner is—the brute beast we have made him with our School Boards, our Socialism, our syndicalism and all the other idiotic machinery for putting people in their wrong places and—they might have known that what has happened was always certain to happen. No, its no use blinking at it, what is wanted is a fight to a finish; a few thousand dead of starvation, a few thousands ruined will be sad enough, but if the nation is to continue, the price must be paid.

The supply of coal substitutes is becoming a more and more urgent question. It is a pity that the opportunity cannot be taken advantage of to utilise as fuel so many things that really want burning. How much better the world would be, for instance, if all the ugly chairs and sideboards could be made into firewood. Not the early Victorian monstrosities alone, but some of the quite modern cheap and nasty adaptations of so-called classic styles as well, the only fitting use of which is to make a cheerful hearth or to cook the eggs and bacon by. Consider, too, how useful thousands of tons of rubbishy books would be for culinary purposes. There are few better uses to which the great mass of modern fiction and theology might be put than feeding the kitchen range with it. That, indeed, is the only way in which to discover its illuminative qualities and the glowing fires of its inspiration. If one were to keep in view mainly the claims of the aesthetic and the intellectual, three-fourths of the commercial output might be made into a huge bonfire without anyone being a penny the worse. And if coal went to famine prices it might be cheaper from a pecuniary point of view as well to burn bookcases and books, pianos, pictures by the newest old masters, and possibly even jerry-built houses, than to pay the huge tax demanded. We could then start afresh, with a purer taste and more elevating ideals. Somehow, however, we always fail to take advantage of these providential opportunities.

If science and the "British Medical Journal" know what they are talking about, we are all maniacs upon one point or another, and only by very exceptional eccentricity can hope to escape being dubbed with a long, unpronounceable name which is supposed to tersely describe our idiosyncrasy.

The gentle reader—he is usually beginning to think rather frequently about a girl, and that makes him very gentle and calf-like—who has a habit of caressing an incipient moustache is a "moustachio-strepsomaniac," a title which suggests that he ought to be muzzled and strait-waistcoated before he is permitted to ride in the train or tram with other people.

The gentleman who walks along the road twirling a cane and trying to assume a military look like Major Basstock when he averred that "Joey B., sir, is old, but he's tough, sir, and devilish sly," is merely a little the worse for "strepsorhabdomania," and doubtless will do very well until his tailor sees him.

The habit of putting the little finger into the ear is "ododactylomania," and that of biting the nails unconsciously is "onychophagomania," and the practice of drumming with the fingers on window-panes is "harmonirania." The sillysawney sort of folk who suck their fingers when in doubt are "stomatodactylomaniacs," and people who fidget their feet are "trepodomaniacs."

As I write the thought occurs that if all the above jaw-breaking words were the names of horses running in the Grand National what a terrible epidemic of tetanus there would be among the bookies!

An otter hunt in Chelsea! It sounds incredible, but nevertheless a prolonged otter hunt took place early one morning this week in the front gardens of houses in Cheyne Walk.

Otters rarely find their way so near the mouth of the Thames, and it is surmised that the victim of this murder left the water near Battersea Bridge and wandered inland in search of food.

The chase began when an early morning milkboy, going his round, discovered a large dog otter scaling over thirty pounds in a front garden in Cheyne Walk. A "view halloo" by the little brat drew an enthusiastic field.

The milkboy procured a rug and endeavoured to bag the animal in this unorthodox manner, but the elusive quarry nimbly topped his shoulder and sought its "holt" in another part of the grounds.

By this time the field had increased to remarkable dimensions, and the chase grew fierce and warm.

Savage servants who joined in the hunt had left open a side door of the house, through which the unfortunate otter bolted and found a temporary refuge behind some furniture in a room on the ground floor. He could not be dislodged until the concealing furniture was removed, after which he again took to the open.

Here a workman of the temperament described in the Bagh o' Bahar as "Bloody-hearted" tried to capture him, but instead of "tailing" the otter in the orthodox fashion, the idiot caught hold of the body and was, I am happy to say, well bitten twice. The teeth of the otter met in his hand, necessitating hospital treatment.

This rather discouraged the efforts of the more cautious hunters, but the "field" succeeded in foiling the gallant but ill-fated little brute's attempts to break through and regain the river, and finally it was shot by a butler into whom I would dearly like to empty a charge of No. 4 shot.

In a four-act play at the Court Theatre Mr. Forsyth tells the life-story of Hester Cayle, who is struggling hard and vainly to keep a family, consisting of a blind mother-in-law, a mischievous son, and a husband who, after a spell in gaol, has come home to die. In the sordid Bloomsbury lodging-house where Hester lives are two boarders—Franks, a coarse-grained City man, and Tennent, a rising young dramatist, and each of them loves her, though in vastly different ways. Tennent is honourable, Franks the reverse, and when her husband dies, Hester and the house she lives in come into the latter's possession. He treats the woman brutally and forbids her to see the playwright. In one scene—the most dramatic in the piece—Tennent, about to start for a fancy dress ball, is lured into the sitting-room by Seth, the boy. Hester is putting a stitch in Tennent's belt which holds a rapier, when Franks suddenly returns. The dramatist leaves hurriedly, leaving the belt behind him. A tense scene follows; Hester is brutally attacked by Franks and the boy seizes the rapier and stabs him in the back. The old woman regains her sight through the shock and the boy is arrested.

The last act brings the only bright moments in the play. Franks, recovered from his wound, leaves Hester to shift for herself, and eventually, after much storm and stress, she attains some degree of happiness as the wife of Tennent.

The play was admirably acted. Miss Helen Haye was thoroughly convincing as Hester, not only in the great moments of the piece but all through; Mr. Leon Quartermain gave a good interpretation of the brutal Franks; while Mr. Bertram Forsyth, the author, presented a restrained and sympathetic study of the young playwright. Miss Alice Arden thoroughly realised the part of the querulous blind woman, Miss Beatrice Ainley was a typical London "slavey," and Mr. Sidney Sherwood as the boy showed considerable promise.

Mr. Cyril Maude, as Mrs. Sairey Gamp, gets the place of honour in the bill of the Palace Theatre this week, but if the applause, the admiration, or the amusement of the audience may be regarded as the tests of success the place of honour must be given to Mr. George Mozart, Mr. Albert Whelan, or Mr. Arthur Prince.

Mr. Cyril Maude has a great name, and so has Mrs. Sairey Gamp, but neither does much to extend the reputation of the other. The audience at the Palace does not seem really interested in watching a disreputable old nurse get drunk with gin from a teapot and then throw salad and fresh butter on the floor.

Somehow the virtue had gone out of the famous portrait, and even when the cultured actor-manager fell back on to the rickety bed and there was a display of elastic-sided boots and white stockings under a cascade of falling hat-boxes, the spectators were still wondering whether the show was good, bad, or indifferent.

RUINS OF DESERT CATHAY.*

In these two fat volumes, which run to something over a thousand pages M. Aurel Stein gives us the fruits of his prolonged journey through Central Asia and Westernmost China. That his journey had been productive of the most extraordinary and valuable "finds," in the shape of earliest documents, has been known ever since he returned to India crippled by frost-bite and the indispensable operation performed on his feet at Leh; how remarkable and extensive was the collection of documents he succeeded in bringing away with him from the walled-up library or cellar of the "Thousand Buddhas" at Tan-Huang is so far only to be estimated by the experts at the British Museum where M. Stein's prizes, packed in 24 cases, were safely deposited some eighteen months ago. To the unlearned majority the story of his diplomatic labours in persuading the priest in charge of the temple to "part" with these literary treasures may appeal more than the nature of the documents themselves; but the least imaginative can hardly fail to appreciate the significance of a find which embraces manuscripts dating back to the 3rd and 4th centuries, of evidence that proves this remote temple to have been a centre for learned travellers from countries so distant as Turkey and Syria; and of texts printed from wood block type in the ninth century! To China has ever been accorded the honour of first use of printing; but M. Stein's discovery antedates all that had been known on this subject.

These treasures were found in a walled-up cellar or annexe to the temple; the dates of the most recent documents point to certainty that the place was closed in the eleventh century, and the condition of the documents is wonderful proof of the preservative quantities of the climate; many of the most valuable finds from the modern point of view, were papers which had been stowed away with least care; and the extent of the author's labours may be imagined from the fact that he estimates the size of the whole collection to have been 100 cubic feet.

Equally curious and quite as interesting to the majority are M. Stein's finds in the rubbish heaps about the watch-towers whose ruins remain along the old "Border Wall" of Western China. These towers were the stations occupied by companies of soldiers whose duty in regard to the "Barbarians" beyond was very much that of the Punjab Frontier Force towards the tribes in our own day: and the rubbish heaps mentioned yielded the most curious and intimate records in the shape of inscribed slips of wood bearing on the daily life, equipment, occupations, armour, uniforms and what not of these troops, who manned the wall in the first century of the Christian era! From these slips it is made clear, for example, that dogs were regularly "borne on the strength;" confirmed by the discovery of bones: that the men were armed with crossbow, sword and shield; that the regulation supply of arrows was 150 per man, two kinds being used; which is confirmed by finds of bronze arrow heads. Uniform regulations were found, and rags to bear out the written word; all these things, we repeat dating back to the first century. It is safe to affirm that never has the past surrendered records written and material, so completely and curiously in support of one another. The wall itself is a marvel of ingenious application of the materials available in this arid and storm-swept region; built of alternate layers of clay and reed fascines it remains, in places 7 feet high, as firm and solid as the day of its erection.

We may not dwell longer upon a work whose aims perhaps do not come strictly within our purview; but if the tale of hardship and difficulty stoutly endured by an isolated traveller in pursuit of a quest by no means free from hazard be one that commend itself to our readers, this work of M. Stein, lengthy though it be, will not disappoint them. The illustrations, whether of country, building, of document or fresco are worthy of the text. Incidentally we find ourselves speculating on the fate in store for the complacent priest Wang, who yielding

NOTES ON SHOOTING IN BURMA.

One often hears sportsmen in Burma exclaim,—"This is a poor country for big game shooting,—not a patch on India." The opposite opinion is also often expressed, so that the young sportsman who has just arrived in the country full of expectations of the most gorgeous shooting is bewildered and unable to come to a definite conclusion on the subject. As a matter of fact both opinions are right and both are wrong. Those who say that Burma is not such a good shooting country as India are mainly men who have come from India, who are accustomed to the habits and language of the people of the latter country, and who know very little about either Burma or its people. For such and also for the total stranger to the East, who comes out globe trotting and who wishes to include a little big game shooting in his trip, there is no doubt that India is an infinitely better shooting ground than Burma. His knowledge of the ways and language of natives of India alone will account for this superiority in the case of the old resident in India. Two additional reasons, which in the case of the globe trotter are all important, also occur to my mind. One is that India has been in contact with the West much longer than the greater part of Burma has: and this statement applies to both portions of the province: and moreover that contact has been far closer in the case of India than in Burma. It commenced in India over a century before the time when a trip home could be compressed into three months' privilege leave. The calling of professional shikari, whose business it was to shew the sahibs game rather than to hunt it himself, originated in the old days when Englishmen came out here with the intention of staying out till they had shaken the pagoda tree sufficiently to ensure for themselves the equivalent of a pension. This calling, in common with others, in a caste ridden and conservative country like India has been handed down from father to son, so that there is never any lack of professional shikaris who know something about the habits of game; and what is more important, about the habits of sahibs and about the best way of dealing with the latter. In proof of this assertion let the shikaris of Kashmir who are probably available though Messrs. Thos. Cook and Sons, to the globe trotter, bear witness. The other reason is that though there is a great gulf fixed between the habits thought and mind of the native of India and the Englishman, that gulf is infinitesimal when compared with the gulf which exists between the same attributes of the Burman and the Englishman. There is no doubt that the Burman, and also the other indigenous peoples included in official Burma, are much further removed from the Englishman by their customs, habits, general outlook on life and modes of thinking than is the native of India. A few instances will shew my meaning. The native of India looks on cow's milk as a nourishing and pleasing diet for man. The Burman, I admit the idea is gradually dying out in the bigger towns,—regards milk as what it was naturally intended to be,—nourishment for calves, certainly not as human food. There is an unpleasant story well known in Burma founded on this dissimilarity of ideas which need not be repeated here. But this manner of regarding a very common article of diet, common among Europeans and natives of India is shared so far as I know by all members of the Indo-Chinese race. I remember offering a Haka Chin a tin of ordinary sweetened condensed milk. He was a great friend of mine and constantly accompanied me on my tours. I shall never forget his embarassment. He did not like to hurt my feelings but he refused the gift and had to say—"It is made of cow's milk, I cannot drink it," and then he added in an undertone not meant for my ear,—"Fi awk"—that is "It is disgusting." And yet roast pi dogs are luxurious feeding for the Haka Chins. Again, the Englishman in common with the native of India regards bread, or its ingredients, as the staff of life. The Burman and races cognate with him live mainly on rice and hardly know what wheat or wheat flour is. Moreover hunting in its various forms, a sport so dear to the Englishman, was never in India regarded as an amusement or means of livelihood, which entailed after this life on those who indulged in it the tortures of the nethermost pits of hell. From time immemorial it has been freely indulged in even by Kings and Emperors. Thus the sportsman in India frequently obtains great assistance fom ruling chiefs, the landed gentry and highly placed officials as witness His Majesty's late shoot in the Nepaul jungles. No such assistance can be looked for in Burma partly because there are no landed gentry and partly because the shooting of animals conflicts with the Buddhist religion and is not regarded as an amusement for a Buddhist gentleman.

That under certain circumstances Burma is not a patch on India for big game shooting is true. I remember a late official high up in the Forest Service who spent two or three years towards the end of his service in Burma expressing himself very vehemently on the subject. He had served some twenty-five years in India, knew the native and his language thoroughly, and had been a successful shikari. He told me he had never taken a rifle out of its case in Burma: had never had occasion to do so, and did not believe that animals existed in Burma. The superiority of India to Burma as a shooting ground was very real to him. He was accustomed to Indian ways and no doubt expected that in Burma the subordinate forest officials would give khubber of game as was the case in India. But he did not know a word of the language and so had no means of getting into touch with his Burman rangers and forest guards. I sympathise with him because I think Burmese is not so easy a language to pick up as Hindustani (Urdu) and the difficulty in acquiring a working knowledge of it is very much greater after a service of twenty odd years in India, when one has become accustomed to think in Hindustani, as one's second language. Moreover Burman forest guards and rangers are Buddhists and many of them share the antipathy which all good Buddhists ought to feel to the taking of life. I therefore assert that this Forest Officer was hardly qualified to express an opinion on the merits or demerits of Burma as a shooting ground,—for, of course, no one likes to publish the true cause of one's failures even if one knows them. The fact of the matter is that conditions in India and Burma are widely divergent and due regard must be paid to this fact if success is to be hoped for, not only when one is after big game but in all kinds of shooting, except perhaps the shooting of duck and snipe the existence of which is as patent a fact in Burma to all and sundry as it is in any other country.

It is futile to say that game is not plentiful in Burma. Question members of the Bombay Burma Trading Corporation or Forest Officers, whose work keeps them out in the jungle for eight months and more in a year and who at the same time are shikaris, and see what they have to say on the subject. It is notorious that within a very few miles of Rangoon town the sportsman can shoot almost any game from elephant or tiger down to snipe. The Mandalay district, one of the smallest in Burma, is as good a game holding district as any. What about the tiger which a few years ago climbed on to the roof of one of the side buildings on the platform of the Shwe-dagon pagoda in Rangoon? A squad of men was marched down to shoot it but they were forestalled by, I think, a sporting gunner subaltern. What about the panther which recently took up its abode within the walls of Fort Dufferin in Mandalay? It should here be added that the area within these walls includes the cantonment, the jail, Government house buildings, the club, polo and parade grounds, etc. Both these are duly authenticated facts and were chronicled in the Rangoon Gazette and the Pioneer newspapers. I know a village at which one often gets a shot at Tsaine (Bos sondaicus) in an evening stroll after tea. I myself have in the course of a single day picked up the tracks of two solitary Tsaine bulls, both of which led on to the bank by the same path and then separated: have followed the tracks of one, flushed the one whose tracks I was not following, carried on tracking and after a couple of hours come up with my original quarry, the sight of which I own so startled and fascinated me that I failed to get my shot in: have then eaten my breakfast by a stream, during the discussion of which I have heard elephants feeding and have within half an hour come up to a herd of sixty of them. Day after day in the course of my work I have come across herds of thamin or brow antlered deer (Cervus eldii). I remember the son of a headman of a certain village telling me that one morning getting up early he walked outside the village gate and found his homestead paddy plot within a few yards of the village site, full of what he took to be his neighbour's cattle. He shouted for his brothers to come and help him catch them with a view to sending them to the nearest pound and eventually discovered that what he thought were village cattle were really a herd of Tsaine. It is a well authenticated and well-known fact in Burma that two guns have in the course of a single day, more than once, accounted for one hundred brace of jungle fowl in a certain district. These incidents are surely sufficient to dispel the fallacy which one sometimes hears expressed that game in Burma is not plentiful.

To get good shooting in Burma certain difficulties must be first overcome, and these to the permanent resident are not insuperable. In primis a knowledge of Burmese is essential and the greater that knowledge the better the chances of getting good sport. Burma is not a country for a globe-trotter to shoot in, unless he is dry-nursed by an Englishman who knows the country. Except in the neighbourhood of British Cantonments, where contact with Tommy Atkins may have induced a stray Burman to adopt this calling, the professional shikari (native) as he exists in India, is not to be found. And even if a stranger to the country is taken out by a fellow-countryman up to the ropes he literally has to be dry-nursed, as the following incident will show. A certain Deputy Commissioner, F—, himself a great shikari, took out a globe-trotting friend, T—, on a shooting trip. After a few days F— had to return to headquarters and left T— to continue his shoot with his (F—'s) own pet hunter. The next day T— and the hunter got on to fresh tracks of elephants which they followed to the edge of a patch of kaing grass (elephant grass growing from 15 to 20 feet high). Both climbed a tree to spy out the land and T— with the aid of his field glasses discovered that the kaing grass, extended for about a mile, beyond which it appeared as if the jungle had for some distance been recently burnt. They got down and then T— attempted to convey his discovery to the hunter by striking a match and holding it as if in the act of setting fire to the undergrowth, at the same time attempting by pointing to indicate that his action referred to the jungle beyond the kaing grass. The hunter who had with his naked eye perfectly discovered the state of affairs, but thinking that T— wished to set fire to the kaing grass at the edge of which they were standing, shook his head vigorously. From this T— understood that it was useless continuing after the elephants and returned to camp. When next he met F— he cursed his luck at having to turn back when the tracks were so fresh, whereupon F— who had questioned the hunter explained that no one was so astonished as the hunter when T— turned back. The hunter from his inspection of the country from the tree was quite satisfied that their quarry would be found beyond the burnt jungle and did not want T— to burn the kaing grass which would only have frightened the elephants. So T— lost his chance of a shot at an elephant simply from his inability to understand or make himself understood by the hunter. Signs are a poor substitute for language and Burmans are not quick at grasping their significance. I doubt, however, if natives of India are any better.

Having mastered the difficulties of the language it is necessary to discover hunters, or rather villagers, who will show one game. This is easy enough if one sets the right way to work, for in almost every village in Burma near which game abounds one can find men who know its habits, who can track, who are keen on following game and who in many cases are as staunch in a tight corner as the best bhil shikari that ever stepped. In the days before the annexation in many jungle villages were to be found men who made a regular practice of hunting either for pleasure or profit or most commonly for both combined. The Burman is fond of flesh food and has no scruples in eating it, holding that the taking of life is sinful and not the mere eating of what once was life. These hunters with their racketty old muzzle-loading flint lock or cap stuff guns would think as lightly of encountering an elephant or a bison as of shooting a jungle cock. Such, if they can be found, are the ideal comparisons of one's shooting trips. But their numbers are gradually diminishing. Many of them have died, others still living are old and realise that if they wish to escape the special hells prepared for hunters and fishermen they have no time to lose in acquiring the necessary merit in this life. After the annexation of Upper Burma disarmament was rigorously enforced and few of the present generation have ever fired a gun in their lives. Nevertheless the love of sport still lingers on and little difficulty will be experienced in getting trackers.

But before one gets hold of a hunter one must fix on the localities in which game abounds. This all depends on the game one is after. In spite of the fact that the incidents I have above mentioned regarding the abundance and prevalence of game are all perfectly true, one must not expect to pick up a tiger or a tsaine in the course of an evening stroll everywhere in Burma. I have had personal experience of only 8 of the 38 or 39 districts into which Burma is divided but have served in Burma for 15 years and I confidently assert that the sportsman will, if he sets to work the right way, get good small game shooting, in the shape of jungle fowl, barking deer, etc., in all of them, and big game shooting such as tsaine, bison and elephant in most of them. In some places at which I have been stationed it has hardly been necessary to look for game at all. It intrudes itself on one. Thus I have seen jungle fowl shot within one hundred yards of the Deputy Commissioner's house in Katha and have seen barking deer within four hundred yards of the same house.

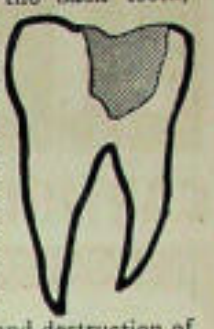
At Kalemyo in the Upper Chindwin district I have known barking deer to come into the compound of my house and have actually seen one bayed by pi dogs on the high road connecting the town with the Myittha river. Practically any strip of jungle, however meagre it may look, in the neighbourhood of paddy cultivation will hold jungle fowl and very often barking deer. Proximity to a village appears to increase its game-holding capacity. Over a large area of Burma brow—antlered deer (Burmese thamin Cervus eldii) are common and it is a mistake to think that they must be sought for in forest clad country. I know for a fact that a fair-sized herd exists at this moment at a spot not more than six miles from the station, the headquarters of a district, where I now sit writing this article. The country from here to that spot and for many miles beyond it in all directions is fully occupied for cultivation. Not a vestige of green wash,—the colour by which jungle or forest land is indicated,—will be seen on the latest Survey of India map of this locality. Yet there are a few depressions filled with swamp grass and reeds in which this herd lies up during the day. In the evenings all through the night, and in the early mornings it may be seen roaming over the paddy fields and yas (dry cultivation) feeding. I doubt if there be another sahib in the station cognisant of this fact. No doubt they see in the course of their daily rides that the country is fully occupied for cultivation and they therefore presume that it cannot possibly hold game. But most Burmans are aware of the existence of this herd.

The Englishman, however keen he may be on shooting, is, unless experienced, hopeless at discovering the whereabouts of game. Often he cannot even recognise game when he sees it. Quite recently in this district I was riding in from the headquarters of a township in company with a young fellow who had not long been in the country. Turning a bend of the road we saw several jungle fowl quietly feeding on the road. My companion did not seem to notice them. I drew his attention to the fact that there were jungle fowl on the road and he ridiculed the idea and it was not till he saw them fly off into the bordering scrub on our near approach that he realised that they were jungle fowl and not ordinary domestic cocks and hens. He should have known that there were no villages within two or three miles of the spot. Any map of the district, and I happen to know he was carrying at the time the latest and most correct maps of the country on his person, would have told him this fact. Nevertheless it was not till I drew his attention to the matter that he realised that he had seen jungle fowl. Probably if I had not been with him he never would have realised the fact and though he had seen the birds it would never have struck him that they were jungle fowl. This disability is nothing to be ashamed of, it is the price the more highly civilised peoples pay for their superior civilisation. The Englishman must draw on the Burman for his information and must learn from him. Here, of course, knowledge of the language comes in and also another factor which is all important, good temper: not only good temper displayed to the actual people whose aid one wishes to enlist but a reputation for good temper. The villagers very soon learn one's characteristics from one's servants. The Burman knows very well that game, especially big game, will not show itself to order, and he is not such a fool as to risk the chance of getting cursed and kicked by a bad tempered sahib with whom he has gone out shooting and who has had a blank day. There was once a Deputy Commissioner of my present district. He retired some years ago and is now dead. I knew him. He was the best of good fellows and liked by all his brother officers, upright, conscious that he was here for the benefit of the people over whom he was in charge and thoroughly anxious to live up to this ideal. But it must be admitted that he was subject to what looked uncommonly like outbursts of temper. I have known him when he made a bad shot at snookers curse his billiard cue and dash it to pieces on the ground. He had acquired the habit of suddenly bursting out at any little incident that vexed him. Had he been taxed with losing his temper he would have denied it, and his denial would have been honest enough. Englishmen and Burmans with whom he came into daily contact such as his clerks and servants knew that his temporary displeasure was entirely impersonal and directed only at the actual cause of his annoyance. In fact they realised that this was his way of saying—damn. But the people of the district did not realise this. He is now and always was known throughout the district as the "than ma-gyit thikin" that is the flint and steel sahib or the explosive gentleman. A Burman knew that if he ran up against him there was a good chance of sparks being emitted. Now what chance had a man like this, to those who knew him a real good fellow kindly and generous,—of getting any shooting even in his own district? If he called villagers out to beat for him or to track for him they would come, for was he not the Deputy Commissioner? But who ever went out with him was ever conscious of the possibility of the sparks and this knowledge effectively prevented any true collaboration between the sportsman and the hunters on whom he was dependant. The enquiries of the good tempered shikari must be delicately and carefully made as the following incidents will show. In 1901 F—, the Deputy Commissioner already mentioned above, and I camped at Chaungsone village of his district. We knew that tsaine were to be found in the neighbourhood and questioned the headmen and villagers who had come to welcome us and to help pitch our camp. They denied all knowledge of tsaine inhabiting the neighbouring jungle. Nay further they pointed to a low line of hills some fifteen miles to the east and told us that they had heard that tsaine were to be found in the jungle near Taw-ywa, a village in the same district to the east of the hills but had never been known to cross to the Chaungsone slopes. F— said this was very strange as the Forest Officer had a few days previously been to Taw-ywa and made enquiries about tsaine, and the Taw-ywa people had told him they were plentiful on the Chaungsone side of the hills, but had never been known to cross to the eastern slopes. The Chaungsone headman admitted it was strange and suggested that the Taw-ywa people were deceiving the Forest Officer, or that perhaps the Forest Officer had misunderstood them. He himself had not met the Forest Officer. Did he understand Burmese well, some thikins (sahibs) did not. We then proceeded with breakfast and after an hour again returned to the subject of tsaine. F— suddenly asked the headman if there were any salt licks near the village and was told that the lads and young men sometimes spoke of a salt lick where they occasionally saw barking deer and even at times sambur. F— then told the headman to send a man out to the salt lick to see if there were any fresh tracks of game there. In about an hour the young man returned with the news that he had seen fresh tracks of tsaine there, news which we corroborated by a personal visit that evening,—the salt lick was not more than a mile from the village,—and the next day we sallied forth after tsaine, our trackers being drawn from the village. F— who went east shot a fine bull, while I who went north saw a small herd, which saw me first and I did not get a shot. Now the disinclination of the Chaungsone headman and his villagers to tell us that there were tsaine in the neighbourhood was entirely due to the fact that they did not personally know either F— or myself, who had both recently come to the district. They had no knowledge that if they took us out after tsaine and we had a bank day we would not curse them and they were not going to take the risk. While we were having breakfast they had discovered from our servants and clerks that we were not unreasonable people, and as soon as they had assured themselves of this they were keen enough to go out with us. Let us substitute our explosive friend for F—. Being fairly certain that there were tsaine in the vicinity of Chaungsone the first statement of the headman that there were none would probably have elicited an explosion. Would the headman then have told us of the salt lick? Not he, and what chance would we have had of discovering it without the aid of the villagers?

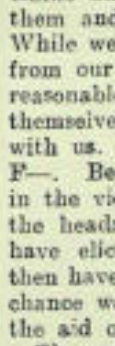
The assertion that Burma abounds in game needs no defence from me, otherwise the books on the subject written by Pollock, Thom and quite recently Evans, to name only three writers, have been written in vain. I personally think game is far more abundant than is realised by the majority of Englishmen in Burma. I have merely attempted to help and encourage the sportsman.

LON-DA-GA.

OUR TEETH



Has no one been struck by the fact that, in spite of the regular daily cleansing with tooth soaps and pastes, the teeth, and particularly the back teeth, frequently become decayed and hollow? Is not that a convincing proof that tooth-soaps and tooth-pastes are entirely inadequate for the purpose? Our teeth are not so obliging as to decay only in places where we can conveniently reach them with the tooth-brush. On the contrary, it is just in those localities which are difficult of access, such as the backs of the molar teeth, the interstices between the teeth, hollows and cracks, that the decay and destruction of the teeth appear most frequently, and are most likely to occur. In consequence, if anyone wishes to preserve his teeth intact—that is to say, to keep them healthy—this can be effected in one way only: by daily cleansing and rinsing the mouth and teeth with the antiseptic dentifrice Odol. During the process of rinsing this preparation penetrates everywhere, reaching alike the hollows in the teeth, the interstices between them, and the backs of the molars. Odol destroys the microbes and arrests all bacterial and fermentation processes which attack the teeth. It follows that everyone who uses Odol regularly every day takes the greatest care of his teeth and mouth that scientific discovery has up to the present time made possible.



Fishing.

THE HOOK AND I.

EVERY fisherman has heard his well-meaning and non-fishing friends exclaim: "Oh, I haven't the patience to fish!" as though that was all that went to make up a fisherman. Usually you smile or murmur vaguely that everything comes to him who waits, but now and then someone will come over the well-worn phrase, on whom you can pour out your phials of wrath in telling him that he also lacks skill, energy, brains, and the gift. Patience, with them means a rod, a body of water, and hours of time, and frequent repetitions of the dose. Patience, indeed! Why, some of the most successful fishers I have ever been with have made the air quite blue around them with the fervency of their remarks when flies were missed, leaders breaking, rods a-smashing! I have seen a fouled reel cause an ardent fisherman to show what patience was in his make-up.

I am afraid we are misunderstood and the noble art of angling not appreciated. One time an elderly minister of great scholarly attainments was preaching the baccar laureate sermon at the commencement of a young ladies' seminary. His subject led him to speak of the art, and he called it "the peaceful and unexciting pursuit of angling." What think you of that? You who have had the black bass jumping, "crazy for the fly."

The fisherman knows hopes, fears longings and triumphs that come not to ordinary mortals, and they are as dear and as slow to be relinquished as the dreams of an opium eater. But how different in the effect on body and mind—the difference of life and death. Fishing never kept a man down. Look for proof at the number of noted men who have been fond of fishing, and when a great man fishes at all he fishes to perfection.

Boys are fisherman ex-officio, but they do not take to it seriously. When they grow up it is only a small per cent. that go to fishing in earnest. Of all my boy friends I believe that I am the only one who cares to fish, and I often think of the very first fish I ever caught and wonder if there was any foreshadowing of my fate in the circumstance.

There were five boys whose ages ranged from five to seven, and we very carefully set our fishing poles at the root of a big cottonwood tree and went away to play. When we returned we found that a big sucker had been caught and that he had roamed around among the different lines until they were wound into one. We landed the big fish, as long as any of our arms, nor stood upon the order of landing. A man came by and a season of breathless suspense ensued while he was tracing the sucker. When the lines were untangled the sucker was found to be on my line, and I ran home with it in my arms. I am the only one of that hopeful group who casts a line in the water to-day.

May be circumstance has most to do with making a man a fisher, even as the taste of mutton makes a sheep-killing dog out of a nonentity. But not all. There may have been many a man who from want of chance has lived and died without knowing his capabilities as a fisher, or what life held for him. "Some mute, inglorious Milton" whose lot forbade.

I think all fishermen are proud of their proficiency in the craft, and look down somewhat on those who do fish as well as they. They may not brag about it, after the manner of men, but in their inmost souls they respect not the frantic efforts of a superior in most things in his endeavour to whip out a line length of his rod. I have been with gray-haired men who had made a success of a life and to whom I must have deferred in all things else, for whom I had a kind of a contempt, of which I was ashamed, when fishing with them, for the unskilful way in which they handled themselves in their futile endeavours to extract fish from the water. It probably never occurred to such a man that there was any special reason he should be expected to fish well.

I once fished with a gentleman who had never realized that there was any particular sleight in the art of angling. We were just established in a camp in the woods at the forks of an ideal trout stream. The north fork came down with that clear amber color which water gets by flowing though spruce woods, and the south fork slightly discoloured by the mud it drained from a bog. This mud is deposited in twelve or fifteen miles, and the whole stream becomes again as clear as crystal. There was a gentleman in the party, a wholesale merchant, who was paired with me for the south fork. His rod and accoutrements looked suspiciously new, but it was not until he respectfully asked me to put a worm on the hook that I knew he was new to the business. We started up the south fork, a stream about 20 feet broad, and I let him go ahead—the most pronounced act of self-denial that the trout-fisher knows. He did not care to lead the way, and telling him the proper distance to keep behind me I had the glory of casting in the stream the first line that had been cast may be in months.

About the time we separated C. stepped on a smooth stone and fell down on his back in the ice-cold water. He tried to make a few remarks on the mishap and the contractions of his throat were awful. I advised him to set his teeth together, and not try to explain how it happened for fifteen minutes or so, and his remarks would be more connected. This is the only way to hide all signs of the effect a sudden ducking has on a man.

Having saved my manners and secured the place ahead, we gradually worked our way up the stream, casting a fly in the likely places and taking a trout too frequently, for my number would soon be reached there being several other fishermen out.

At a bend in the stream, where some big boulders marked a geological change in the face of the country, when standing on a large rock, I had a rise from a big trout and tried for some minutes to get him to change his mind about rejecting the fly, but to no purpose. C. overtook me, and clambered over the boulders near me. Just then his feet slipped, and he sat down very violently on a big stone and a crash followed. Now most regulated families and camps have a small supply of some stimulant on hand in case of accident, but it is an unwritten law in our camp that no one is to carry a bottle with him after the manner of that small supply in a pocket flask vulgarly called a "tickler," and also that it is to be used in moderation. Anyone so far forgetting himself as to attempt to celebrate the first founding of the forest, or for other seemingly good reasons, has the pleasure as well as the privilege of contributing the sum of 85 and upwards, which is applied to the reduction of the sum total of the expense fund.

C. being on his first trip was excusable for not knowing this rule. His tickler was an elaborate leather-bound flask, the property of the captain of the gang, to whom it had been presented by someone he thought a lot of. He prized it very highly. Therefore, when C. put it in his hip pocket and sat down very hard it gave way, and great was the catastrophe.

Continuing up the stream, saving the adults and casting back the infants into the water to grow bigger, we worked our way up the stream. The overhanging boughs made casting difficult, and C.'s remarks when his line became entangled in a tree for the twentieth time were very edifying.

About a mile or so up I found that I had upwards of thirty-five trout in the basket all that it was given me to catch. The uninitiated might argue that trout being plenty, they could be caught and put back as they were so plentiful. I am not that kind of a fisherman. There has to be a chance of acquiring to make pleasure for me in the complex sport of fishing. I dreamed of the delights of catching a tarpon until someone told me the fish was no better than carrion when caught. Since then I have not hankered after such sport.

C. and I sat down on a flat rock in the middle of the stream and he looked at the fish. He had not been able to secure one, little or big. We sat there talking and becoming acquainted. He gave me the first idea of his powers as raconteur for as such he is unsurpassed. It was his graphic description later of my enthusiastic remarks in landing a big fish that leads me to retaliate in a slight degree. There we sat, I with my rod in my hand, with the line and leader gathered in an orderly manner. C. sat with the water washing around his feet, with his back down stream. His rod was on his shoulder and the line trailing down stream. The bait was a fat fishing worm, which the strength of the current kept on top of the water. C. was telling a rollicking Irish story when a good-sized trout took the bait and gave the rod a wrench. C. jumped up and very coolly led it in and remarked: "That was easy!"

Since then, when, after toiling with the rod and line for hours, and there seems to be nothing in the waters under the earth, a fish takes the lure in the twinkling of an eye and is taken in turn, I lose sight of all the labour of the hours which brought me nothing and think how easy it is to catch fish.

LABOUR UNREST.

An Effect of Free Trade.

Mr. P. J. Mackie presided on Wednesday at a meeting of the employees of Messrs. Mackie and Co., Distillers, Glasgow. The object of the meeting was to inaugurate an extension of the firm's premises and to make presentations to several workers who had been in the service of the firm for a long term of years. All the firm's employees with over ten years' service received a bonus of £10 a year.

In the course of an address, Mr. Mackie dealt with some of the causes which had contributed to the prevailing industrial unrest. The cost of living, he said, had gone up, but wages had not followed in proportion, notwithstanding that they had what was called Free Trade, which was maintained in order to keep prices down.

Foreign Competition.

They forgot that they were at the same time keeping wages down. They allowed to come into this country untaxed a large quantity of manufactured goods, the over-production of other countries, and these goods, being over-production, could be sold at a proportionate cheaper rate in the British market, thus keeping down the price of goods manufactured in this country, and preventing employers of labour from giving the workers greater wages than they were now receiving.

The competition of foreign manufactured goods deprived them of so much labour, and the lessened demand for their labour meant that they had to sell that labour cheaper than they would otherwise have to do. Another very important reason why wages did not rise in this country was that we were placing all our taxation on ourselves, thereby increasing the cost of production and handicapping us in competing in the foreign market, where we were met in every direction by high tariffs to keep us out. As a consequence the margin between the cost of production and the selling price was so much lessened that the capitalist was less able to pay an increase in wages. This was really the crux of the whole matter. He thought Trade Unions made a mistake in unduly limiting the output and so increasing the cost of production.

Object of Tariff Reform.

He was not a Protectionist. Protection pure and simple was bad for the country. He did not think that Tariff Reform should have been made a political question. The Lord Advocate said the other day that there was no money in Tariff Reform, but Mr. Ure took a very short-sighted view if he thought the object of Tariff Reform was simply to raise revenue. The object of Tariff Reform was much wider and far-reaching. In addition to raising revenue, its aim was to find work for the people, to give better wages, to ensure our food supply, and to consolidate the Empire. He believed it was only fair to demand that their labour should have reasonable protection and fairplay, and that foreign manufactured goods coming into this country should pay the same ratio of taxation as the home manufactured goods. A subsidiary cause for the increased prices of to-day was the increased production of gold which had arisen during the last eight or ten years, and was only now beginning to be felt. This meant that gold was losing its purchasing power, and that prices must necessarily rise. Yet another reason was short crops in certain parts of the world and the increased population abroad which required to be fed.

This to a large extent had been accentuated by our not developing our over-seas dominions as we should, and refusing them a preference, in which case they would produce a greater amount of foodstuffs and make us more independent of foreign nations, which would be specially useful in time of war. In return they would take more manufactured goods from this country, and by giving us more work enable us to pay for these foodstuffs.

What Prosperity Means.

The country that was the most prosperous was the one which could support the greatest number of people in comfort. We were, however, failing in this respect, as shown by the fact that so many of the population had to emigrate. He did not think that was a right state of affairs. There should be sufficient work in this country for all the men in it, because they could not have good trade unless they had a large spending population. He believed in the working classes having good wages. The best medium for the circulation of money was through the working classes, and there could be no money in circulation unless they were well employed and had good wages. One cure for the present state of matters which was being held out to them was Socialism, but in his opinion there never was a greater fraud in this world than Socialism, and if any man thought he could bring about the millennium by adopting it he was very much mistaken.

Mr. Mackie was cordially thanked for his address.

THE RACING BILL.

SELECT COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

THE following report of the Select Committee of the Council of His Excellency the Governor of Bombay on the Bill to provide for the licensing of race-courses in the Bombay Presidency, and the Bill as amended by the Select Committee are published in the Bombay Government Gazette. The Select Committee's report is as follows :—

We, the undersigned, members of the Select Committee to which the Bill to provide for the licensing of race-courses in the Bombay Presidency (Bill No. V. of 1912), was referred, have considered the Bill, and have now the honour to submit the following report with the Bill as amended by us annexed thereto :—

Clause 4. We have considered two proposals urged upon us by the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta to the effect that the conditions of the first license to issue under the Act should be included in a schedule appended to the Act, and secondly, that before the issue of the second and each succeeding license, the conditions of the proposed new license should be published and opportunity be given for discussing them. The proposal to incorporate the conditions of the first license in a schedule appended to the Act was negatived by six votes to one, and the proposal for previous publication of the conditions of subsequent licenses was negatived by four votes to three. A somewhat similar suggestion by the Hon'ble Mr. Manmohandas Ramji to the effect that a clause should be inserted in the Bill requiring publication, but not previous publication, of any change in the conditions of the license was negatived by six votes to one. We have accordingly made no change in this clause.

Clause 9. We are agreed that the Act should not confer any power of delegation of the powers of the Governor in Council and we have accordingly deleted clause 9.

This report and the Bill as amended by us should be translated into Marathi, Gujrati, Kanarese and Sindhi.

H. R. Greaves.
J. Jackson.
P. M. Mehta (subject to a minute).
Manmohandas Ramji (subject to a minute).

There is the following minute of dissent by the Hon'ble Mr. Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy :—

"I am of opinion that before the issue of the second and each succeeding license, the conditions of the proposed new license should be published.

Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.'

MINUTES OF DISSENT.

A minute of dissent by the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta, K.C.I.E., is also given :—

"I strongly object to the Legislative Council being asked to make itself the instrument of delegating its own proper powers and functions to the Executive Government to be used at its unqualified and unfettered discretion. So far as this particular piece of legislation is concerned, it is more than usually dangerous to do so. It is no use shutting our eyes to the fact that the highest officials of Government including even Members of Council are more or less closely connected with the Western India Turf Club, to pare whose nails this Bill is mainly designed. It is possible that, during the regime of the present head of Government, the conditions that may be prescribed for the licenses to be granted will be of a character to curtail the dimensions of the existing gambling evil, but it is quite within the bounds of probability that with people holding different views about racing matters, the conditions that may be laid down for licenses might prove to be such as to render this Bill absolutely nugatory. The number of days of meeting may be increased even to their present amount and book-keepers may triumphantly return to the enclosures from which they had been banished. It may be said that this could not be done within the period prescribed for the first license. And it is intimated that this first period will be fixed for five years. But this is a frail reed to lean upon, because it would be open to the Turf Club to surrender the license and to apply shortly after for a fresh one. I hold therefore, that the main conditions of the license should be laid down in a schedule annexed to the Act, with power to modify them within certain limits after such notification as would allow public opinion to declare itself on the proposed changes. It was argued in the Select Committee that there is no precedent in the whole sphere of Indian legislation for the course proposed by me and that the conditions of license are never incorporated in the Act. But this is a mistake. I will give just one instance at present. The Indian Electricity Act, 1903, in which the provisions to be incorporated in the license are given in a long schedule.

"My gravest objection, however, remains behind. I understand that it is intended to include the employment of the totalisator in the terms of the license. I fail to see how Government can make itself a party to such an illegal Act. It would mean that Government directly lent itself to a breach of the existing law. Government directly lent itself to a breach of the existing law. Such action on the part of the Government would not be a mere winking or evasion of the law, as, for instance, would be and is the case when the police are allowed to hold their hands in full view of what has been going on in the Turf enclosures, and refrain from prosecution. The recognition of totalisators would be a direct participation in the perpetration of an illegal Act. It must be remembered in this connection that Government are not altogether powerless to stop the gambling vice under the existing Law. If vigorous and repeated action had been ordered to be taken by Government under the Prevention Gambling Act, the growth of the mischief would have been largely throttled

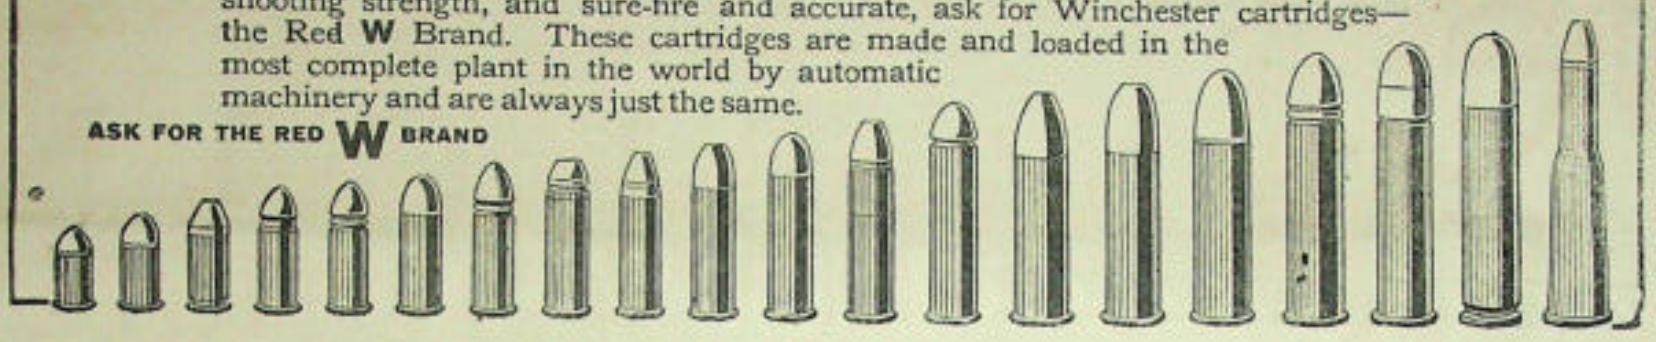
RIFLE AND PISTOL CARTRIDGES.

To do justice to your skill, you should use good ammunition no less than an accurate rifle or pistol. The arm is often blamed when the ammunition is at fault. To insure your getting cartridges that are uniform in size and shooting strength, and sure-fire and accurate, ask for Winchester cartridges—the Red W Brand. These cartridges are made and loaded in the most complete plant in the world by automatic machinery and are always just the same.

ASK FOR THE RED W BRAND



and the Turf Club would have been roused to a sense of moderation long ago. The new Legislation, instead of advancing the object of prevention of gambling, would be of a retrograde character, and give an illegal legality to what is now prohibited by the Law. I therefore think that the Bill itself should deal with the main lines on which the race-course licenses should be regulated

"I have written this minute very hurriedly. The Select Committee met on Thursday (the 28th March) I received the draft report on the 30th March with instructions to return it so that the report may be presented on the 31st.

"I should like to draw attention to the drafting of sub-section (2) of section 1.

Pherozeshah M. Mehta."

The following minute of dissent is made by the Hon'ble Mr. Manmohandas Ramji :—

"I think that in fairness to the members of the Council and the public it is essential that publicity must be given from time to time to any changes which may take place in the form of the license. It is obvious from the aims and objects of the Bill that the evil of gambling at the race-courses is increasing day by day and it has reached a point when it is found necessary to take legislative measures to check it. Now if the members of the Council are not informed of the changes that take place in the form of the license, it may be that sometimes changes may be introduced in the form of the license which may be quite opposed to the principles of the present Bill. I also support the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah Mehta in holding that previous publicity should be given to the terms and conditions of any proposed new license, but if that is not acceptable there will be no harm, I think, in publishing the altered terms and conditions of the license even after they are made in order that members of the Council and the public may know what changes are made in the terms of the license.

Manmohandas Ramji."

LINCOLN.

Under the vindictive handicap that hampers the coal supply, the railways can be congratulated, as after all there was not such a very marked falling off in the attendance for a first day at Lincoln on Monday, a strong hand being played by the motor-cars, and considering that the hoi polloi—military and civilian—who make such a brave show on the free and open Carholme, came in duty free, the master this side of the course had a more realistic appearance, as a potent factor of success. The going was a bit soft after the rains, but not holding, as the hoofs merely cut in an inch deep. The chief event resulted in a clever victory for Well Done, the property of Lord Cadogan; while another stirring finish was witnessed in the Chaplin Stakes, which fell to Mr. Musker's Sysonby by a head. Results :—

"What's the matter with Hornet's Beauty?" was the staggering question that early swept the sportman off his mental balance, if not of his feet, on Wednesday morning. All sorts of rumours were afloat, pessimists vowing that the horse would not run—nay, "from information received," that he had been scratched, and his backers mournfully thought of last year's Cambridgeshire and blighted hopes. In the midst of the discussion the horse arrived from Newmarket, accompanied by Mr. Leach, his trainer, and Mr. Clarke, his veterinary attendant and walked quietly through the streets from the station, and for the most part unnoticed; but from what could be seen of him, he looked fit, while one failed to detect any limp in his gait. Whether he had knocked his shoulders in his box or, as high bred horses will, contracted a touch of rheumatism, was a moot point; and not for the first time in history it was a matter of regret that "horses cannot talk." However, that his chance was not considered hopeless was shown by his downward career in the wagering being arrested at 7 to 1 offered on the same mark with Uncle Pat and Long Set, while Warfare strengthened to 3 to 1.

The crowded state of the aforesaid streets gave matter for reflection. We had been told first that there would be no meeting; next, that nobody would go; but as we remarked previously, the condensation of the railway services did not seem to have brought disaster. The sun shone on a very busy city indeed. Perhaps visitors came a bit earlier, but the High Street appeared to be as crowded as ever by legions of folk, who to kill time lounged four abreast on the pavements. If wonder might be aroused at the number of people who had managed to get here, it was increased when the number board for the first race showed how thoroughly the conveyance of horses had been achieved. The distant hill, nearly denuded of its wind mills, stood out with a clear outline against a pearly sky; the light was excellent, the breeze grateful, and the temperature springlike. In Tattersall's a considerable increase was noticeable. More patrician patronage was accorded the members' enclosure, and the cheaper ring was twice as full as on Monday. The public expressed their approval by a strong muster on the far side of the rails, and the going, greatly improved, was as nearly perfect as possible. Results :—

Cinderello was fractious at the post, but after a brief delay an admirable start was effected, Spiked on the extreme right making play from Cigar, Uncle Pat (also on the right). Great Surprise, Warfare (on the left) and Long Set in the centre, with Toiler well up next in front of Hornet's Beauty, Mercutio, and Sobieski. Thus they raced for half a mile, when Spiked and Toiler dropped out, and Great Surprise joined Cigar pursued by Uncle Pat, Long Set, Warfare, Mercutio, and Hornet's Beauty. Before another hundred yards had been covered Cigar was beaten, as also were Hornet's Beaty and Mercutio a quarter of a mile from home. Thereupon Long Set and Uncle Pat passed Great Surprise, Long Set quickly racing right away from Uncle Pat and winning in a canter by four lengths; three lengths separated second and third. "All's well that ends well," and congratulations can be exchanged all round on the triumph over difficulties shown at Lincoln, whose executive express themselves as well satisfied. Most thankful of all, too, at the embargo being happily taken off Liverpool must have been the double-event backers, the first half of whose wager had come off in their favour. It rained in torrents during the night and we looked like having one of the old-fashioned Lincoln days to finish with, but a brisk wind came to the rescue, and swept the rain clouds away, leaving a bright, breezy afternoon. But so many people made Lincoln a stepping-stone to Aintree on the last day this time, the attendance being thinner than usual. With only "the Brocklesby" to recall reminiscences and give veterans an opportunity of descanting on the importance of the race before the days of "gate," the card presented no particularly important feature. The supply of horses seemed inexhaustibles as fields panned out extremely well, while the going was all the better for sunshine and wind after the rain. Results:—

ASSOCIATION RULES.

DISAPPOINTING to a degree was the play in the great International contest of the year at Glasgow on Saturday. Except that a fresh breeze prevailed the conditions proved entirely favourable and the gathering of such a mighty crowd as assembled at Hampden Park should have roused the contending elevens to great deeds. So far from the football attaining to special excellence it was of moderate quality throughout until late in the struggle. A fine pace was maintained and much of the tackling called for high praise, but the higher points of attack in Association football were almost entirely lacking on both sides. The main principle seemed to be to loft the ball and dash after it, with a big

MINIATURE AND MID-RANGE

TARGET RIFLES

Rifle Clubs with many thousands of members now exist in England and the Colonies, and practically every one of them uses the special B.S.A. rifles adapted for miniature and mid-range work.

The B.S.A. Martini and the Bolt Action rifles are adapted for the ·22, ·230, ·250, ·300, ·310, ·32-20 and ·32-40 cartridges. With the cheap but popular and accurate ·22 "long rifle" cartridge B.S.A. rifles will shoot into a 2-inch circle at 100 yards, and into a 4-inch circle at 200 yards.

Of the cheap but well-made and highly accurate B.S.A. No. 2 Model Miniature Rifle (retail price in England 30/-), Mrs. Darley, a well-known Indian lady rifle shot, recently wrote as follows :—

"I am writing to tell you how very pleased I am with the ·22 bore Miniature Rifle of yours that I have been using at the S.I.R.A. Meeting held here during the last fortnight. I think it is what is called a No. 2 Model, but am not sure. It has a bolt action and costs out here Rs. 32 (£2 2s.), the peepsight being extra. I bought it over a year ago and it has done me well. I have a new much more expensive rifle by another maker, but it is with the little B.S.A. that I have made all my best scores. At this meeting alone I have won with it one first prize, one second prize, one third prize, and the Ladies' Championship (value £5), besides eight silver spoons in pool shooting —over £13 worth in all. Besides which I have won several prizes with it at other meetings."

"Mrs. Applin has also done very well with one of your rifles, which she has had for some years. She made several 'possibles' with it during the meeting, one being 19 consecutive bulls."

SPECIAL SIGHTS.

The B.S.A. No. 8 screw adjusted aperture backsight, with 6-hole eyepiece, and Nos. 19 and 20 combination target foresights, are specially adapted for these and other kinds of match rifles.

Fully illustrated interesting rifle booklets may be had post free from the B.S.A. Co., Ld., Birmingham.

B.S.A. High Velocity Target and Sporting Rifles, Mid-range and Miniature Rifles, Air Rifles, and small bore Shot Guns, are adapted for practically every class of target and sporting work.

B.S.A. Rifles, Guns and Sights are stocked and sold by all gun dealers in India. If any difficulty is experienced in purchasing please write to—swinging pass across the field in the event of the defence not securing possession. Of close, skilful passing the great assemblage of people saw little or nothing and despite some fair shots at times neither goal-keeper found himself called upon to deal with anything that really tried his skill. Moderately as they performed, Scotland should have won for they had by far the larger share of the game in the first half and more than held their own afterwards. For the home side McNair and J. Walker showed themselves a capital pair of backs and Gordon, a new cap, thoroughly justified his inclusion forward. Wilson and McLean displayed plenty of dash and none acquitted himself better than R. Walker, now a veteran. Crompton and Pennington were in great form for England and Wedlock worked admirably. Of the front rank Simpson stood out as much the most skilful, but Wall and Holley proved rather the better wing.

It was not surprising that Bradford City, after three and a half hours' cup-tie football and defeat from Barnsley during the week to tire and dishearten them, should lose yesterday at Ewood Park to Blackburn Rovers. Nor was the success of Bolton Wanderers at Owlerton exactly a surprise, for Sheffield Wednesday were without Brittleton, McLean, and Wilson, playing in the international. The results combine give the Rovers, who were also below full strength in the absence of Crompton and Simpson, a lead of three points, which may be increased by the two extra games to be played, and the prospect of the team reaching the final tie for the cup by beating West Bromwich Albion next Saturday seems quite bright. In view of this all-important match it is interesting to note that West Bromwich Albion could only draw at home with Manchester City, who keeps on struggling though possessing a poor chance of avoiding relegation to the Second Division with Bury. Visitors to White Hart Lane had the pleasure, despite the bad weather, of seeing a capital game, in which Tottenham Hotspur enjoyed the satisfaction of beating Aston Villa, thanks largely to the admirable goalkeeping of Lunn, who saved many shots in the second half. Woolwich Arsenal made a good fight at Sunderland, the home side getting the only goal.

By scoring three goals to one at Huddersfield Chelsea did something to atone for loss of points at home, and they retain their lead of four points from Derby County, who also had a margin of two goals in their favour with Stockport County as opponents. Burnley maintained their form and, although without Freeman—helping England—they put on three goals at Bristol, so that their promotion may be regarded as certain. The struggle between Chelsea and Derby County remains very close; the Midlanders have four points to make up in two extra games, and if they can do this they will secure second place by a superior goal average. Fulham accomplished a fine performance by scoring 7 goals to 2 against Leeds City, their play in the second half being quite brilliant.

While Millwall were beating Swindon at New Cross, Queen's Park Rangers were overcoming Northampton at Park Royal, and, as the outcome of these two matches in London, the Wiltshire team seem likely to be prevented from again securing the championship of the Southern League. Swindon now are four points behind with two games in hand, a heavy task being set seeing that next Saturday they engage in the Cup semi-final at Chelsea with Barnsley, who on Thursday qualified after seven hours' football, the last kick of their fourth match with Bradford City giving them the victory. The Cup has certainly affected Swindon's chance in the League; and, besides the necessity of Fleming, Bannister, and Tout having to rest owing to slight injuries, the team were without Walker, playing for Scotland, and Silto, England's reserve yesterday. Consequently, defeat from so hard working a side as Millwall could scarcely be wondered at on an afternoon when no team in the competition won away from home, and only three sides drew. Leyton suffered another reverse and it is practically impossible for them and New Brompton to avoid reduction to the second division.

SCOTLAND v. ENGLAND.

On the ground of the Queen's Park Club, at Hampden Park Glasgow, was played the 41st. annual match under Association rules between teams representing Scotland and England. In the previous games Scotland gained 17 victories, and England 12, the remaining 11 being drawn. Fortunately for everybody concerned fine weather prevailed for the contest, while the ground was in excellent condition. A fresh breeze prevailed, but with the enclosure banked to a great height on all sides there was no reason to expect that the wind would interfere with the play. Consequent upon the coal strike all excursion trains had been cancelled, but despite that the game proved such an enormous attraction that several thousand people were waiting for admission when the gates were opened at quarter-past one. Thenceforward the people poured into the ground in a steady stream until half an hour before the start there must have been 80,000 present. Everything suggested that the attendance would not fall far short of the record crowd of 120,000, which gathered at a similar fixture four years ago. Both counties having overcome Wales and Ireland the International championship depended upon the result of yesterday's encounter, the players in which, with the exception of Brittleton and Jefferies (England) and Gordon and McLean (Scotland), all had previously participated in the great International match of the season. Despite the tremendous extent of the gathering the crowd remained within the enclosures until shortly after three o'clock, when, with the ambulance corps called up to attend to a spectator who had fainted, some few scrambled over the barrier. In a few minutes this example had been followed by thousands, who took up their places right on the track and goal lines. So closely did they press upon the field of play that the game could not have been started. Substantial reserves of police were called up, however, and the crowd gradually forced back some yards, but this work of course took time and there seemed reason to fear that the kick-off must be delayed. From a perfectly peaceful scene the gathering became very restless, and numerous were the handkerchief signals for the ambulance men, who found themselves busily engaged carrying away the fainting or injured. The players entered the field at half-past three, but by that time the work of driving the people back had not been fully accomplished. Nevertheless, the game began only two minutes late. Freeman kicking off for England, who, losing the toss, played against the wind. Scotland at once pressed, but the English defence was quite sound, and the first real incident of the match was a long kick from Gordon, which Williamson easily cleared. The English forwards then got away, and Freeman tried a shot, but the ball went wide. The game was only seven minutes old, however, when Crompton, having kicked out in tackling Quinn, Wilson got possession from the ensuing throw-in, and with a hard drive scored for Scotland, the ball passing into the net between the near post and the goalkeeper. Just afterwards Wilson, swinging round smartly, went very close. Curiously enough England's equalising goal also followed a throw-in, Simpson forcing Walker to put out, and the ball then going across to Holley, who slipped through and scored at close range. In this way the score was one goal each when play had lasted thirteen minutes. Having thus lost their lead Scotland attacked strongly and forced a corner off Crompton.

This was cleared, the play being quickly transferred to the other end, where Walker had to concede a corner in clearing from Simpson. All this time the ambulance men were busy among the crowd twenty cases of injury—some of them serious—being reported. McLean next had a great chance of giving Scotland the lead, but, pressed by the English backs, he shot from close range just outside. Further attacks on the English goal followed, Williamson saving in clever style from Wilson, who had received a nice centre from Templeton. Then came another attack by the Scottish right wing, and Wilson hit the bar, the ball dropping in front of Williamson, who punched away. There were two very narrow escape for England, for whom Crompton and Pennington were playing a great game. Once more Wilson found himself in possession at close quarters, but he kicked over the bar, and then came an improvement in the play of the Englishmen. An attack on the left wing followed, Wall and Holley working cleverly for an opening, but Freeman failed to make the most of it. Just afterwards, however, Brownlie only just managed to save from Freeman at the expense of a corner kick. Nothing came of this, and the play continued to go on very level lines. The wing men on both sides were hampered through the crowd being so close to the line. Soon afterwards half-time arrived with the scores:—

When the game was resumed England at once attacked, and Simpson forced a fruitless corner. For some minutes England, although they did not combine particularly well, had much the better of the play. They sent in a number of shots, but all of them were at too long range to be likely to beat Brownlie. After about ten minutes Scotland improved and gained several corners. Just afterwards Wilson had a splendid opening made for him right in front of goal, but he shot wretchedly sending the ball well outside. England then got away, and Brownlie saved from Wall, while Wedlock shot over. Then from Wedlock's pass Wall beat McNair, but Brownlie stopped the shot very neatly. There was not much close passing, both sides swinging the ball about, and trusting chiefly to the speed of their wing men. The Scotsmen played with great dash, and soon Quinn headed in to Williamson, while Gordon put in a splendid shot, the ball striking Crompton in rather fortunate fashion. This was certainly a lucky escape for England. Then England attacked again, and with an overhead kick Simpson lifted the ball to the top of the net. The next minute the Scottish goal narrowly escaped. As the game drew to its close Scotland were frequently pulled up for offside, and in consequence the referee was fiercely hooted by the crowd. While still very keen, the quality of the play on both sides fell off a lot. Scotland however, more than held their own, Gordon sending in two splendid long shots. The home side were appreciably more dangerous, but, even so, Williamson was not seriously tested. In the last few minutes England made a final effort, and Freeman had a great chance of winning the match for them, but he was not successful, and the end came with the result:—

Scotland	...	...	... 1 goal.

RUGBY RULES.

Harlequins vs. Old Merchant Taylors. On very muddy ground at Twickenham, a strong team of the Old Merchant Taylors, reinforced by Will and Cheesman, was beaten by the Harlequins, who lacked the help of Stoop, Lambert, Brougham, and Perkins, by a placed goal to nothing. Up to the interval a tremendous struggle went rather in favour of the Harlequins, who were quicker in getting the ball away, but the Taylors proved the better in finding touch. The tackling on both sides left nothing to be desired, and it was soon apparent that scoring would be a difficult matter. The Old Boys' centres failed to provide any opportunities for their outsides, and Will was thus prevented from showing his undoubted cleverness. A clever try by Birkett (converted by R. O. C. Ward) proved to be the only score registered during the match, for, after half-time, play proceeded in very even fashion, and the defensive work was always so keen and well carried out that nothing further resulted. The full backs on both sides played in their best form, the Taylors in particular getting great assistance from Sanders's accurate kicking into touch. In the end the Harlequins won a very even game. Harlequins, 5 points; O.M.T., 0.

Old Alleynians vs. London Welsh. The ground at Potash Farm, Dulwich, was muddy in the extreme, and consequently the game assumed a scrambling character. The conditions suited the London Welsh, and after making an even fight of it during the first half they won rather easily. The Alleynians scored first, Wade sending Savel in with a try. Greenwood missing the goal kick. Before half-time John scored a try in similar circumstances for the Welsh and equalised, Leigh being unsuccessful with the place kick. At the outset of the second half the Welsh pressed strongly and A. E. Evans scored a try, Leigh kicking a goal. Davies next got going for them and handed to Williams, who ran straight ahead and passed nicely for Leigh to race over and then kick another good goal. This left the Welsh in a strong position, which they retained, although towards the finish there were anxious moments for their defence, and finally Greenwood minimised the margin of defeat by scoring a try for the Alleynians, the scores at "No side" being: London Welsh, 2 goals and a try; Old Alleynians, 2 tries. London Welsh, 15 points; Old Alleynians, 6 points.

Richmond vs. Old Leysians. By their victory over Richmond, on the Athletic ground, at Richmond, by a placed goal and two tries to nil the Old Leysians added to their fine record for the season. It was a hard and sporting game despite the wretched weather and the treacherous nature of the ground. Clearly the faster and cleverer side, the Old Boys were entitled to their win. The Richmond forwards did much good work, and the tackling of the side was generally good, but the Old Leysian's backs were always much better together, and made many smart runs. At the start Richmond attacked with much vigour, but could not get through, and when the Old Boys settled down, Holman got over for them wide out, following a forward rush, but the try was not improved. A little later they scored again, Bell obtaining a well-earned try after some passing, and a successful place kick by Mellor made them eight points up at half time. In the second half Richmond did much good work, but frequently wasted their chances by poor passing. The Leysian backs put in many nicely managed passing runs, but an unconverted try by Bell near the corner was their only additional score, Old Leysians, 11 points; Richmond, 0.

ATHLETICS

THE VARSITY SPORTS.

WRETCHED weather alone marred the Oxford and Cambridge sports on Saturday. This affected the attendance, of course, while the track and turf were rendered somewhat sodden, although the former recovered in surprising fashion. Otherwise, one of the best meetings on record resulted. The all-round performances were extraordinarily good, and the closeness of the majority of events was an outstanding feature. Despite the continuous rain, no falling-off in the attendance of Old Blues was noticeable. They were present in mighty force, some of them very Old Blues, notably, Mr. "Friday" Thornton, Mr. Charles Gordon, Mr. Montague Shearman, cum multis aliis—far too numerous too mention. The fair sex, too, refused to stay away and, like most of us, they had their reward. The 1912 meeting was a memorable one and, resulted in a tie of five events all. Cambridge, therefore, still lead in their general records with 24 wins to Oxford's 22. Now for brief comment.

Some fine performances were accomplished, the best of which was D. Macmillan's 49 2/5secs. in the quarter-mile, clipping by a fifth of a second the inter-Varsity record set up by another Cantab, W. Fitz-Herbert, in 1896. Macmillan, who ran himself clean out in this event, had previously won the sprint in even time. Another dual winner for the Light Blues was H. S. O. Ashington, who, after securing the hurdles race in moderate time, cleared 2ft. 1in. in the long jump, the best inter-Varsity leap which has been recorded in thirteen years. Other fine performances were A. N. S. Jackson's 4mins. 21 2/5secs. in the mile; E. Gawan-Taylor's 14mins. 47secs. in the three miles; and Baker's 1min. 56 3/5secs. in the half mile, which event the Cambridge president won for the third successive time. The only dual winner on the Oxford side was the American Rhodes scholar, W. A. Ziegler, whose weight-put of 40ft. 10ins. was a much better performance than his 139ft. 4ins. in throwing the hammer. Details:—

100 Yards.—D. Macmillan (Felsted and Trinity), Cambridge, 1; H. M. Macintosh (Glenalmond and Corpus), Cambridge, 2; R. L. Lange (Oklahama and St. John's), Oxford, 3; G. H. G. Shepherd (Royse's School, Abingdon, and Pembroke), Oxford, 4. Macmillan, although not so quickly into his stride as the others, got away better than he usually does, and getting the lead shortly after the half-distance won by a yard, a yard dividing the next two. Time 10secs.

Putting the weight.—W. A. Ziegler (Grinnell College, Iowa, and Wadham), Oxford, 40ft. 10ins., 1; M. J. Susskind (University College School and Pembroke), Cambridge, 37ft. 11ins., 2; E. P. Hubble (University of Chicago and Queen's), Oxford, 35ft. 9ins., 3; R. S. Woods (Dulwich and Downing), Cambridge, also put.

High Jump.—J. C. Masterman (Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, and Worcester), Oxford, 5ft. 8ins. 1; G. N. Nicklin (Birbeck and St. John's), Cambridge, 5ft. 7ins., 2; A. C. Straker (Harrow and Jesus), Cambridge, 5ft. 6ins. 3; N. T. Huxley (Eton and Balliol), Oxford, 5ft. 4ins., 4.

120 Yards Hurdles Race.—H. S. O. Ashington (Harrow and King's), Cambridge, 1; W. I. F. Macdonald (Charterhouse and New), Oxford, 2; H. F. Brown (Cheltenham and Trinity Hall), 3; J. H. E. Whitehead (Clifton and Trinity), 4. Ashington led all the way, and although caught by Macdonald at the last fight got away again and won by a yard with Brown another five yards away. Time, 17secs.

Quarter-Mile.—D. Macmillan (Felsted and Trinity), Cambridge, 1; G. R. L. Anderson (Eton and Trinity), Oxford, 2; W. C. Robertson (Bermuda and Brasenose), Oxford, 3; G. L. Fairrie (Shrewsbury and Caius), Cambridge, retired. Macmillan led all the way, with Anderson and Fairrie at his shoulder for the first half of the distance. Anderson, with a fine effort, nearly got on terms early in the home straight, but then flagged, and Macmillan won by five yards in the inter-Varsity record time of 49 2/5secs. Robertson was another fifteen yards way, and Fairrie retired at the last corner.

One Mile.—A. N. S. Jackson (Malvern and Brasenose), Oxford, 1; R. S. Clarke (Malvern and St. John's), Cambridge, 2; W. C. Moore (Felstead and Exeter), Oxford, 3; R. D. Clarke (Private and Hertford), Oxford, 0. H. B. Wane (Rugby and Clare), 0; A. J. Peters (St. Peter's, York, and Christ's), 0. R. D. Clarke took the lead at start, followed by Peters and Jackson. This order was maintained until a little more than 300yds. from home, when R. D. Clarke dropped out. Jackson took the lead 150yds. from the finish, and won by eight yards, with Moore another forty yards behind. Time, 4mins. 21 2/5secs.

Long Jump.—H. S. O. Ashington (Harrow and King's), Cambridge, 23ft. 1in., 1; M. J. Susskind (University College School and Pembroke), Cambridge, 21ft. 8½ins., 2; A. G. Jones (Llandovery and Lincoln), Oxford, 21ft. 6½ins. 3; D'A. J. J. Hartley (Eton and Merton), Oxford, 21ft. 1½in., 4.

Throwing the Hammer.—W. A. Ziegler (Grinnell College, Iowa, and Wadham), Oxford, 139ft. 4ins., 1; F. C. Stenhen (Aberdeen and Emmanuel), Cambridge, 135ft. 3ins., 2; E. P. Hubble (University of Chicago and Queen's), Oxford, and J. A. O. Muirhead (Glenalmond and Caius) Cambridge also threw, but their throws were not measured.

Three Miles.—E. Gawan-Taylor (Durham and Pembroke), Oxford, 1; C. H. Porter (St. Edmund's, Canterbury, and Brasenose), Oxford, 2; R. E. Atkinson (Sedbergh and Emmanuel), Cambridge, 3; R. F. Armitage (Gresham's School, Holt, and St. John's), Cambridge, 4; F. G. C. Dickinson (Rossall and Keble), Oxford, 0; E. N. Bock (Wellington and Caius), Cambridge, 0. Dickinson took the lead at the start and maintained it for a little more than two laps, but at the end of the first mile (time, 4mins. 42secs.) the order was Porter, Gawan Taylor, Atkinson, and Armitage, the other two having retired. The order was the same at the end of two miles (9mins. 50secs.) but the Oxonians had an eighty yards lead of Atkinson and Armitage was another fifty yards away.

Gawan-Taylor took the lead just before entering the last lap and, in a fine finish, beat Porter by a couple of yards, Atkinson being 250yds. behind Porter, and Armitage another seventy yards away. Time, 14mins. 47secs.

Half-Mile.—P. J. Baker (Bootham's School, York, and King's), Cambridge, 1; G. R. L. Anderson (Eton and Trinity) Oxford, 2; W. L. Williams (City of London and Jesus), Oxford, 3; L. F. Taylor (Oundle and Clare), Cambridge, 4. Williams led along the first three straights. At the end of the third Baker, who had been lying last, passed Taylor and the latter dropped out. At the end of the fourth straight Baker passed Anderson and twenty yards further on went .v Williams, who was also passed by Anderson. The Cambridge president drew away in the last straight and won by fully twenty yards; ten yards dividing second and third. Time, 1min 56 3/5secs.

Polo.

BANGALORE POLO TOURNAMENTS.

A VERY large gathering of spectators witnessed the Polo finals last Friday on the Palace Ground in the Novices and Handicap tournaments. Colonel Poore and the officers of the 7th Hussars were "At Home" to a large gathering of their friends and the Band under the direction of Bandmaster Richardson played a choice selection of music during intervals. The Handicap Tournament calls for little comment as in the first match, the semi-finals, the Hussars easily beat the local Gymkhana by 5 to 1 and in the finals with the Sappers and Miners after a great set-to, the Sappers beat the Hussars by a small margin of 5 to 4. In the Novices Tournament the defeat of the 20th Deccan Horse was certainly unexpected; they played a great game, but quality of cattle told in the long run, for the 7th were better mounted and ran out winners by 8 goals to 1. At the conclusion Mrs. Aubrey Jones, wife of Colonel A. A. Jones, of the 20th Deccan Horse, presented the Cups amidst vociferous cheering.

HANDICAP TOURNAMENT.

7TH HUSSARS VS. 2ND Q. O. SAPPERS AND MINERS.

First Chukker.—The Sappers immediately got to business on the throw in and took the ball into a dangerous position and a scrimmage ensued opposite the south goal out of which the Sappers drew first blood. Recommencing, the 7th attacked with vengeance and came near scoring twice in succession. The Sappers were not to be beaten and defended their goal from the hot attack and Wickham, getting hold of the ball, drove it right across the field and put the second goal through for his side.

Second Chukker.—A series of attacks and counter-attacks marked the opening phases and then the Cavalry just missed a near thing at scoring. Another minute of play in midfield and the Sappers were off with it again to the opposite end of the ground where Irvine hit the third goal. The 7th now pulled themselves together and carrying the ball, succeeded in notching their first goal. For the rest of the chukker, play was more or less up and down the fields and nothing of importance occurred.

Third Chukker.—No sooner the ball was put in motion, the Sappers took it away into their opponents' zone and Irvine with a pretty long shot put it between the posts, making it the fourth for his side. Replaying the Sappers again got hold of the ball out of a scrimmage and Pringle had a clear run to gain the fifth, but Dalgety claimed a foul against the Sappers for crossing. A penalty hit was allowed and some capital polo followed, the Hussars making vigorous attacks and after a good run notched their second goal. The Sappers got down to it again and from a brilliant assault scored their fifth.

Fourth Chukker.—Play was centred mostly in the Sapper territory and the Cavalry men were decermined to add to their score and after a series of assaults they were rewarded with their third goal and half a minute later with their fourth. With a minute more the 7th tried hard to equalize, but they could not get past the defence of the Sappers when time was sounded. Sappers and Miners, 5 goals; 7th Hussars, 4 goals. The teams were:—

THE NOVICES TOURNAMENT.

20TH DECCAN HORSE VS. 7TH HUSSARS.

First Chukker.—Play was centered in and about midfield for some time where Campbell Ross was conspicuous for some of his long arm strokes. He skilfully sent one to Dickinson, who placed it between the posts, scoring their first goal. Instantly afterwards all hands visited the 7th goal, the 20th attacking hotly, but the Hussars cleared on each occasion and initiating a return movement got away with it and equalized the score amidst plaudits from the Pavilion.

Second Chukker.—A lot of up and down play characterized this period, the Hussars attacking all the time and taking their ponies across the field time and again. The result was a pretty shot between the posts by Bates, thus giving the Hussars a lead. They added one more as the bugle sounded time.

Third Chukker.—The Hussar band was "polishing up the handle of the big front door" from "H. M. S. Pinafore" and the ponies seemed to be dancing to the strains rather than getting down to the ball, but that was just transient, for presently the ponies sprinted up and down and you could not see them for dust. Attack and defence was the order of play for several minutes, the Hussars scoring splendidly time and time again. The period closed without further addition to the score.

Fourth Chukker.—A great galloping game, with plenty of riding off the 20th having the best, until the Hussars gradually worked the ball in to the 20th ground and hit the fourth goal. The superior pace of the Hussars began to tell now and a great ovation greeted them as they notched their fifth.

Fifth Chukker.—The 20th were playing far from their standard game, [illegible] Hussars continued to play brilliantly; the 20th had off[illegible] against them from which the Hussars had a good run [illegible] added their sixth, following it up shortly afterwards [illegible] seventh from a hustle near goal and the redoubtable 20 h[illegible] dered "Dead Heat."

Sixth Chukker.—The 20th changed their tactics and defended like Trojans [illegible] to allow their adversaries to score further, but the H[illegible] not to be denied, for within a minute of time the[illegible] eighth, Harrison putting it in. A few seconds [illegible] nament concluded 7th Hussars, 8 goals; 20th Dec[illegible] goal.

CALCUTTA NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Beighton and Bengal Challenge Cups.

The eighteenth competition commenced last Monday and this year as B. H. Smith and Co. have presented a cup, the winners will receive two trophies, but both are challenge cups and don't become the absolute property of the winning team. The matches in the first first round have been favoured by fine weather, but the hockey in these eight games, did not realise expectations, and the play has been of a poor character. Before going into details of the games, I may state, that year before last the Amateurs who are members of the Y.M.C.A., Wellington Branch, amalgamated with the Y.M.C.A. Central Branch, for the Beighton Cup, although both Branches played in the League and this year the identical thing has been done. On that occasion no protest had been lodged, and the council allowed the two Branches of the Y.M.C.A. to amalgamate. This year it was known before the League started that the Amateurs (Wellington Branch) and the Y.M.C.A. Central Branch, would combine for the Beighton Cup and as the different Y.M.C.A. Branches in Calcutta are all governed by one body, there was no objection raised when the Y.M.C.A. Amateurs entered for the tournament. Blacquiere and H. Vanspall who represented the Central Branch were selected to play for the Amateurs, and according to the rules to qualify them these two played two friendlies before the cup ties started. However, prior to the starting of the match, Studd, the captain of the C. F. C. team, objected to Blacquiere and Vanspall playing and played under protest. The Amateurs, on the evening's play, were the stronger side and eventually won by a goal to nil, but I may state here at once, that it does not matter whether Calcutta's protest will be upheld or not, and whether the C. F. C or Amateurs come into the second round, I can say with certainty that neither of the teams on Tuesday's showing would have any chance against Rangers or Customs. Neither team has the stamina and they would be badly beaten by the two leading League Clubs. But now to the week's hockey. The abandoned League matches played on Thursday and Friday were of no interest, as the League Championship had already been decided and the results of these abandoned games affected none of the leading or bottom teams.

The Civil and Military match last Saturday proved very disappointing, but this was only to be expected. In order to make the teams evenly matched, the Civilians were not represented by the best men and consequently Galbraith, Williamson, Lynch, T. Durham, and A. Smith were left out. The Military team was made up of the Pathans and the Medicals, and although the latter were weak in the circle the Military were certainly unlucky in being beaten by three goals to one. The attendance in this match was very meagre and it would have been wiser if one of the tie matches between two of the strongest local teams had been made a "gate affair" instead. The meeting say between the Rangers and Customs would have drawn a big "gate" for hundreds would go far to see such a game.

The Military opened at such a pace and in such style that most people thought they would win by a comfortable margin, but although they appeared to give Collingwood cause for alarm, their final efforts were weak in the extreme. Thomas and Cartner had beautiful opportunities of scoring as Yakchee was miserably weak at left back, the St. Xavier's player being hampered by an injured foot, but Thomas twice shot wide and Cartner was equally to blame. During the first half there was no score, but on the play during this period the Military were all two goals the better side.

After ends had been changed the Civilian forwards, who appeared to be very sluggish during the initial half, showed improved form, but had Boileau not given of his best the Civilians would not have won. The first two goals netted by Smart and McCready were due to the brilliant play of Boileau who not only centred but he ran the ball down the whole length of the field, drew the opposite defence, and then nicely centred and Smart and McCready had only the goal, keeper to beat. The third goal was scored by Duncan and five minutes from the close Sher Afzal netted for the Military.

On Monday there were four games played in the Beighton Tournament, and the match of the evening was on the Calcutta ground, where the Customs and La Martiniere met. In the League the Schoolboys were only beaten by a goal and in the knock out tournament the Customs could do no better than win by the narrowest of margins; the score being 2-1. Both teams were at full strength, but the Customs' forwards, during the initial half, played much below their usual standard—A. Anderson in particular being completely off colour. Boileau put in two or three good centres, but they went abegging. Manuel played magnificently for La Martiniere, but on the amount of attacking the Customs should have at least led by 2—0 at half time.

On changing ends La Martiniere were the first to score, J. Anderson, the Customs full back, putting the ball into his own net, but this made the Customs play up and Galbraith, who, with Smart and Boileau are acknowledged to be three of the finest players in Calcutta, netted twice for the Riversiders. Had Galbraith not played so well and not shot so accurately the Customs would probably have been a beaten side.

The same evening Port Commissioners beat the Eastern Bengal State Railway by 2—0 and Teddy Templeton, who is the oldest hockey player now in Calcutta, netted one of the goals, the second being credited to Dyer. Dalhousie beat the 75th Carnatics by three goals to nil, Hoskings (2) and Webb scoring. This was the first occasion that the Trades Club had out a representative side.

The Measurers and Orientals played a draw of two all, but on the following evenning (Tuesday) the Orientals were lucky in winning by 2—1. Mr. Knox and H. Griffiths were unable to play for the Measurers.

On Tuesday the Calcutta and Amateurs match attracted a large number of spectators to the Rangers' ground, but save for the last ten minutes, the game was a very tame affair. Calcutta were without Bocquet, Cole and Halliday; but with the exception of the first named the other two will not play hockey again this season. Bocquet's place was filled by Cumberlege, and the latter, although a bit erratic, worked very hard. Calcutta, during the initial half, had hard lines in not scoring, but the Amateurs, too, were unfortunate in not finding the net once. After ends had been changed the Amateurs had decidedly the larger share of attacking, and the Calcutta goal twice had narrow escapes. With the exception of two or three of the players there was no life infused into the game by the rest, but towards the last ten minutes both teams struggled strenuously, the Amateurs in particular playing splendidly; and Jahans, a cousin of the famous Naini Tal player, wound up by scoring a most magnificent goal which enabled the Amateurs to win. Jahans, Vanspall, and P. Durham, the three best players on the winning side belong to the Customs Department and the "trio," on Tuesday's play, would improve the Customs team; and next year, it is to be hoped, that all three will be seen doing duty for the Riversiders.

The Barrackpore and East Indian Railway (Lilooah) match on the Calcutta ground, ended in a draw of one all and the teams meet again this evening. The Police beat Bagh Bazar by 3—0 and the Rovers, who had out a scratch team a gainst City, played a goal less draw.

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

Twenty teams entered this year for the Aga Khan Hockey Tournament which opened at Bombay on the 9th instant, when the 2nd Cheshire Regiment met the Byculla Education Society Old Boys. The Cheshires, who have won the Cup two years in succession, won comfortably by 2 goals to nil. The play was level in the first half and it was not till shortly before half time that Russell opened the military account. Galvin scored a second point soon after the interval and the Cheshires had the best of the remaining play though they were unable to put through again. On Wednesday, the Parsi Pioneers "A" team met the Cyclists, a fast and exciting game ending in a draw of one all, each team scoring in the first half. The game was replayed on Saturday when the Cyclists won by 6 goals to 1. The Parsis played a man short almost throughout, for Kerawalla was injured soon after the start and had to be taken to hospital: they nevertheless played up well to the end. Hyde and Templeton were the pick of the winning team, the latter scoring 4 goals, Hyde and Spilling one each. Patel registered the Pioneers' only point towards the end of the game. On Thursday, the Warwicks met the Rising Star Sporting Club. The first half was very evenly contested, but on changing ends, the Warwicks had matters all their own way and won easily by 5 goals to nil. On Friday the Grant Medical College and St. Xavier's played off their tie which resulted in a win for the Medicals by 3 goals to 1. The match between the Bombay Police and the M. A. O. College, Aligarh, took place on Monday last, a well-contested game ending in a win for Aligarh by a goal scored in the first half to nil. Tuesday's match brought together the Bombay Gymkhana and the Real Institution. The Gymkhana drew first blood, but before half time their opponents had got on terms. On resuming the Gymkhana again took the lead and kept it till the close of play. Appended is a table of results to date :—

EXHIBITS.

265 specimens of mammals from the Central Provinces collected by the Society's collector Mr. C. A Crump and a number of specimens of mammals from the S.-W. Dharwar and East Kanara Districts, collected by Mr. G. C. Shortridge were exhibited and admired. These specimens were being forwarded to the British Museum by next mail for identification and return.

THE MAMMAL SURVEY.

The Secretary announced that he had just received an intimation that the Royal Society had been good enough to sanction a grant of £25 towards the survey of the Mammalian fauna of India, Burma and Ceylon organized by the Society. The Government of Madras had also kindly promised the sum of Rs. 2,500 towards this survey. It had been found that the area to be covered was so enormous that the survey would, with only two collectors, take much longer than was at first estimated and it became necessary therefore to obtain a further Rs. 50,000 or Rs. 40,000, in order that the survey might be thoroughly carried out, and it was hoped that members and others would send in subscriptions to enable the Society to accomplish this scientific work.

THE JOURNAL.

Members were informed that the new journal (No. 2 of XXI.) was being printed off and it was hoped that it would be delivered to all members this week.

GONOSAN CAPSULES contain only the purest East Indian Sandal wood oil and Kawa. The first dose quickly relieves violent inflammatory symptoms and a permanent cure is effected in a short time. It is not a quack remedy. The formulæ, with samples, have been made known to Specialists who speak very highly of it.

SOME INDIAN VERMIN.

The vermin that infest the forests and mountains of India form a considerable factor in the causes contributing to the diminution of game in this country; and, in undertaking the preservation of game measures should be inaugurated for the destruction of such vermin as is harmful to the animals and birds included in the list for preservation.

In considering this matter it would be necessary to catalogue the various species of animals, birds, and reptiles to be placed on the black list; to review their particular attributes; to enquire into the question as to whether their misdeeds in regard to the destruction of game are counter-balanced by any benefits they may confer in other directions; and finally to decide the means that should be undertaken for their destruction.

Generally speaking, in adopting measures for the destruction of carnivorous animals, the authorities concerned have condemned only those beasts which are dangerous to human life, or which prey on domestic animals. Tigers, panthers, wolves, bears and hyænas are usually included in the list of animals for the killing of which rewards are paid, the two latter perhaps with scarcely sufficient reason, for the bear is a comparatively harmless animal, seldom threatening either human life or that of domestic creatures, whilst the hyæna is more of a scavenger than a beast of prey (although he is rather apt to display a partiality for donkeys) and the good he does in this respect most assuredly counter-balances the fact that he may occasionally be responsible for the death of a village goat. We think this unsavoury creature might be left in peace to confer a benefit on the public by keeping down the pariah dogs, whilst the rewards now paid for the production of his somewhat mangy skin might be devoted to more deserving objects.

It is, however, unnecessary to consider any of the above-mentioned animals in discussing this subject, as rewards are generally paid for their destruction throughout India, although it may be interesting to note the fact that in one Native State infested with tigers, rewards for the killing of these animals have been discontinued. This at any rate is a step in the right direction—from the sportsman's point of view.

But it seems to us that the question of predatory animals even if they are destructive to game only, should also be considered, especially in view of the fact that certain species appear to be on the increase. First on the list we would place the wild dog, regarding whose extensive depredations we are receiving constant complaints. In localities where they were seldom met with in years gone by, large packs are now constantly seen, and, being such ruthless and persistent hunters, they doubtless destroy vast numbers of deer and such like harmless denizens of the forest. In some districts, indeed, they appear to have almost exterminated the game, so that it is not improbable that before long they will turn their attention to domestic animals, which they are said not to molest as a rule, although we have many recorded instances of their attacking and destroying cattle.

Having no natural enemies, he is able to increase and multiply without molestation. The habits of this creature are favourable to the adoption of measures for its extermination. Strychnine or other suitable poison might be used on the carcasses of animals killed. By this means whole packs could be destroyed simultaneously, and it would appear to be a more certain method than any other for encompassing the destruction of this species of vermin which infests most of the jungles of India from Kahmir to Cape Comorin, killing wild sheep and antelope in Tibet, and slaying vast numbers of sambur and spotted deer throughout the Peninsula.

The misdeeds of other animals pale before those of the wicked red dog. Perhaps the next in order of demerit is the marten, found in the thick mountain forests of the Himalayas, Burma, and the Nilgiris. Although so numerous as to be very destructive to game, these animals are seldom met with unless sought for, owing to their arboreal habits. Colonel Ward, in his "Sportsman's Guide to Kashmir and Ladak," mentions having seen three of these creatures run down and kill a half-grown musk deer close to the place where he was encamped, and other observers have noticed them in pursuit of their prey, sometimes hunting in packs of five or six. Doubtless also they kill the young of many other animals—four-horned antelope, barking deer, and such-like, which inhabit the forests where they are found, and they take toll of the pheasants, chukor, and other feathered game.

Possibly we should have considered the various species of wild cats, some of which are most destructive and blood-thirsty, before the martens. Probably the most harmful of these, by reason of its abundance and extensive range, is the common jungle cat (Felis chaus), which commits depredations on the peafowl, hares, partridges, and also on occasion attacks the birds of the farm-yard. Jerdon mentions that one sprang out of a sugarcane field, and seized and made off with a peafowl he had just shot. With the exception of trapping and shooting, stimulated by the grant of rewards, no methods of destruction suggest themselves for application to the wild cats. Other game-killing animals of this genus are the fishing-cat, the rusty spotted cat and the tiger cat, whilst to these might be added the two species of lynx, the caracal and the Tibetan lynx, both of which, although blood-thirsty and harmful to game, probably do not exist in sufficient numbers to call for special attention. The caracal preys mostly on hares, gazelle, and peafowl, whilst the Tibet lynx is said to confine itself principally to blue hares, but the information regarding these animals is somewhat scanty owing to their scarcity and nocturnal habits.

The civet is a creature very destructive to birds and small mammals, so should not be spared when met with, and the palm-civet or toddy-cat has been accused of poaching, but is probably comparatively harmless. The jackal, although somewhat mischievous at times, is chiefly a scavenger, whilst the various species of foxes appear to prey principally on insects, although they will doubtless not despise birds and small mammals, especially when met with in the snows of the Himalayas. If to this list we add the egg-stealing crows, the various birds of prey—such as eagles and hawks—our list of game-destroying vermin in India will be fairly complete. But it is especially and primarily to the wild dog, and in a secondary degree to the wild cats and martens, that we would direct the attention of those interested in the preservation of game.

YET another De Dion car was committed to the deep when the Oceana sank on Saturday last, the previous occasion being the loss of two 9-H.P. cars in the S.S. Delhi. This time the car in question was a 26-H. P. eight-cylinder model, fitted with a four-seated cabriolet body. It is a curious coincidence that in both cases the cars were being shipped to the Bombay agents of the De Dion Company. When King Neptune finds these cars he will regret his inability to obtain petrol without the painful necessity of sinking a tank steamer.

THE course at Dieppe used for the classic races of 1907 and 1908 has again been selected for the Grand Prix events, which are to be held on 25th and 26th June next. This selection is useful from the point of view of the visitor from this country, for the starting and finishing points are less than five hours' journey from London. In view of the strong British representation there is likely to be a big number of motorists who will make the passage to encourage the efforts which are being made by the Arrol-Johnston, Calthorpe, Singer, Sunbeam, and Vauxhall firms. The 1,200 miles running will give the cars a very thorough testing, and, apart from the glory which will accrue to the winner, every maker who runs a car will learn some very useful lessons. The only point which calls for some passing regret is that the supply of spare tyres for replacement has not been limited; such a limitation would inevitably spur on the tyre makers to put forth their greatest endeavours, with consequent benefit to motorists in general. If the Tourists' Trophy race is revived again in this country and there are many makers strongly in favour of the proposal—this question of limiting the outfit to a spare wheel and a single extra tube or so will be worth full discussion. As the rules for the Grand Prix Race stand at present, there will be some very fast speeds recorded, and one may hazard the opinion that the average of the winner will exceed the seventy-five miles an hour mark—truly a wonderful performance for both machine and driver.

In spite of the many complaints which the system of tar-spraying the roads has had hurled against it from one quarter or another, the number of roads treated with tar is on the increase. The programmes of the country, district, and urban councils for the coming year in the large majority of cases, show that an extended use of tar-spraying will be made in the immediate future. Those in the best position to judge, i.e., the road surveyors, report a great diminution in the dust nuisance wherever tar-spraying is in use and they are practically unanimous in advocating its further extension. Every person must admit that tar-spraying is the best remedy yet discovered for the prevention of the dissemination of dust on our roads caused by fast-moving vehicles, and as their number is greatly on the increase the dust nuisance, unless tar-spraying is adopted on all the main roads in the country, would become unbearable.

An argument has for some time been proceeding as to whether steel is stronger than wood for motor car wheels. The following letter contributed to the discussion by a Mr. E. Goodycar Dudley may be of interest to Anglo-Indian readers :—

The professor may take a bar of steel and a bar of wood. He may subject them by highly sensitive instruments to transverse, tensile and compressive strains. He may calculate their relative indices to several places of decimals, but no amount of such experimental calculation can define the effect of constant stress on the road when travelling. It is common trade knowledge that the publicity given to the detachable wheel invention induced the sale of wire wheels, and further opportunities were provided by a lack of study by wood wheel makers of proper material, and of foolish mental prejudice in favour of that most unsuitable timber for motor wheels, British oak. The following testimony by Clifford, which the authorities at Kew can support, is sufficient to prove that the wood wheel, made of the right class of timber, will meet satisfactorily, conditions which the product of the wire wheel maker dare not approach. He says :—

"The wheels of our ordnance carriages made in India never failed, however arduous or lengthened the service has been on which they have been employed, and no more striking example can be furnished than the campaign in Afghanistan, about the most trying country in the world for wheels. Some of our batteries served throughout the campaign, went to Bameean and even to Hindoo Khoosh, and came back to India without a breakdown, while Royal Artillery wheels made of English oak, built of the very best material Woolwich could produce, specially made for Indian service, almost fell to pieces after a few months' exposure and service."

It has already been pointed out that two essentials must obtain in wood wheel making, correct material and correct method of construction, and given these, the wood wheel can be made to compete successfully with the wire in all the virtues claimed for it, with a total absence of the inherent defects inseparable from the wire variety.

A FOX-CHASE AT MIDNIGHT.

In my younger day I had followed the fox and hounds many a mile with the keenest enjoyment. But what with ten or more years of school life, vacations scrupulously utilized in earning a few dollars to help through the next term, and withal a busy pastorate of twenty years in town, my scent for the fox had become almost lost. If at any time I had given the old hunting days a thought, it was to recall for the moment only some adventure that had impressed itself a little more on the mind than others, without thinking that any rudiment of the fox hunter was lingering in me. In this, however, I was mistaken.

After twenty years in town, I began to long for the country again. My dreams of the green fields, the running brooks, and the deep woods, grew more and more vivid, until I decided to close my pastorate and return to them. I had no fortune, so took a small church in a northern town in Maine. Here the hills were high, the mountains steep, the brooks full of trout, the lakes of bass and pickerel, and, better than all, the woods of partridge and woodcock. Foxes were quite numerous also, a fact which, although I would not admit it to myself, must have had a kind of "back stairs influence" on my choice of this particular town.

We moved in the summer so as to get settled before cold weather came down upon us. The parsonage was a farm-house, with sixty acres of land, a good part of which had been cultivated, so that I could easily keep a cow and horse, pigs and hens if I wished, and any other creature I cared to have around. My fancy was turkeys. There was a yard bordering on the house lot and reaching back some ten rods to the wood lot, especially adapted, I thought, to the raising of fowls. Near the house were some maple trees, and between two of them a long pole had been fastened 10ft. from the ground, which my predecessor had put there for a hen roost. It was the timely suggestion. I must have a flock of turkeys occupying that roost next year at least. What a recreation it would be to take care of them. And my wife, what a good time she would have with her chickens.

Well, early in the following April, as the snow silently disappeared from the hills, I got my turkeys hatching. I used hens for incubators, which in due time brought forth, three of them a dozen or more little turkeys apiece. Turkeys are very tender in their childhood and youth, and my neighbours said I was lucky, when, on 1st September, out of a total of thirty-nine hatched, I had thirty strong, healthy birds. Some of the little ones went to feed the hawks, others the skunks, others still the way of all the earth, but none had gone to the fox. Yet I was expecting Master Reynard now most any night, for I had caught a glimpse of one or two about sunset for several days, and had stationed, in a warm kennel, under the lee of the porch, an old hound given me by a friend. It had been a good hunter and preserved its instincts wonderfully, but it had become deaf in one ear. Thus setting a guard over my turkeys which roosted 10ft. from the ground, I could go to bed and sleep.

Near the end of September the annual cattle show was held in our town, a great event, from which all the town affairs dated, and of course wife and I must go. I also entered my flock of turkeys for exhibition. I spent most of my time studying the fowls, but on the second day wandered into the great hall where the merchants were exhibiting. My wandering was somewhat aimless, absently looking at one thing after another—stoves, shovels, hoes, churns, washing-machines—until my eye fell upon a gun. Then I woke up. It was a beauty; the latest patent double-barreled shotgun. My hand was instantly caressing that polished stock, and my eye stealing along that barrel. How bright and smooth it was inside! What virile hammers! What strong locks! How it brought back the old days! I was again following the fox with my father's old muzzle-loader, speeding through the tangled thickets, leaping the fences, climbing the cliffs, cutting across lots. The old love for the chase was uppermost once more, and far away days of supreme joy, and distant lands where the fox abounded, came thronging back in that one glance along the barrel of this new gun. What a necromancer it was, this light and bright shotgun to whom even the best and busiest years of my life seemed as naught, while the old heyday of youth returned.

"Elder, you ought to have that gun to protect your turkeys with." It was the exhibitor's voice, repeating my own thought, word for word.

"I'll give you a neat little figure on it if you want to buy." Yes, I wanted to buy. It was a foregone conclusion from the instant my eye rested on it. I forgot about my turkeys, and almost went home without my wife, so elated was I with this new treasure.

My wife was not so taken with the gun as I was. She said: "Are you sure you can afford to have it? You know there are some books you planned to have this winter." And in her quiet way she smiled a whole system of economics at me. But I was glad I had made the purchase without consulting her. The turkeys must be protected, I thought, and foxes run fast.

"I expect nothing," my wife said later, to a neighbour, "but that gun will get him into some kind of a scrape."

All hints and criticisms of that nature slipped from my mind and the autumn days came down upon the hills, and the woods turned scarlet and yellow and crimson, varying each of these into a hundred shades, and the sound of the quail and partridge was heard in the land. Gunning a little days, I took particular pains at night to see my turkeys safe on their roost, that the hound was in his box, and went to bed. I had been told that turkeys did better if kept in the open air summer and winter. I did not feel quite sure of the winter business, but planned to let them stay out until Thanksgiving at least.

The night of adventure was light with a full moon, near the end of October. I had seen my turkeys safe to bed, the hound in his sentry box with his good ear open, and my gun in the corner of the kitchen, loaded. So, as usual, I went to bed and to sleep. Had I known as much about turkeys as Master Reynard, I should not have felt quite so secure; for the fox has only to go under their roost and the foolish things go wild with fright, each flying—it knows not where—its own way, some higher up into the trees, some to miss their aim and flutter to the ground and be instantly seized by the fox. Those that are so hapless as to come to the ground one after another, in wonderful quick succession, are killed, and if no one disturbs it the fox will carry them all off and hide them.

It was about midnight, I guessed, when I was awakened from a deep sleep by the flying and crying of my turkeys. As soon as I came to my senses I sprang from the bed, instinctively put on my slippers, seized my gun and rushed out. I reached the gate into my turkey yard just in time to see a big fox making off as fast as it could with one of my fowls. It was a long shot, and I could not see very well; but I fired both barrels, for the old instinct of the hunter was on me at the sight, and my hand recalled its cunning. The fox dropped the turkey and took to his heels, while the hound, aroused by the report of the gun, with a deep bay that always carries terror to the fox's heart, was instantly off. I hurried into the kitchen and reloaded my gun, and returned to note developments.

The old hound had struck the trail, I knew by its deep voice, so I hastened the faster into another field that I might take in the sweep of their circle. The old skill was back that night, and quickly computing their route, I instantly made my plans, which were to run the diameter of their circle and get another shot at the fox as it crossed the road, a half mile or more up the river. I ran across the field, scaled the stone walls, cut through the pasture, dodged hurriedly round a grove of spruces to come into the road just about a minute behind the fox. But I had the measure of its circuit now correct, and a clear road before me which I reckoned the fox would cross again somewhere near my turkey roost. I had only to get the length of this road, or within 80yds. of the house, to be within range of it again.

I am something past sixty years, but I was twenty again that night, and although it had been many years since I had done much running, especially in felt shoes, I experienced no inconvenience from them.

My pace along that road must have been astonishing. So lost was I in the chase that a team just ahead escaped notice until I was up with it, and then I turned aside as by instinct and whisked past. As I did so the horse shied and became almost unmanageable with fright, while from one of the occupants came the startled cry: "Great Scott, Tom! What was that?" Tom was too busy preventing a runaway to answer, and before I had it clear what frightened the horse, I was up with another team. This one was a three seated wagon drawn by two horses and loaded with girls. A faint dawning of the situation now stealing into my mind let me to accelerate my pace and dash on, hoping thereby to so bewilder them that the actual state of affairs might not appear. Scarcely had I passed, however, when, amid cries of alarm and astonishment, there rose a great clapping of hands and cries of "Run, grandpa, run!" "Heed your white skirts, sir!" and more I did not stop to listen to. Then it came to me like a flash of light that I was in my night shirt; without hat, and a pair of soft felt slippers on my feet. And these girls, up to the game now, were hurrying their horses into a fast trot to be in at the end.

In my self-consciousness I had lost run of the fox, and was now racing with the teams, looking only for a place of escape. Consequently I ran direct for the house, and turned the corner into my yard just as the first team came up, when, to my astonishment and the great delectation of the passers, right in the middle of the front yard stood my wife in her night apparel. We ran for the house together, but not without receiving a parting salute from those girls.

We crept back to bed in silence. My wife never said: "I told you so," but she went about her work the next morning with a very sweet and knowing smile on her face, and a sly twinkle in her eye.

Two turkeys had been killed in the attack, but the hound ran the fox down, and I found upon examination that I had wounded it at my first shot.

The Story Teller.

"A SELL!"

Two MEN more widely different in disposition never wore Her Majesty's uniform than Herbert Moncrieff and Frederick Warrington, both holding commissions in the 17th Hussars. Moncrieff was generous and open-hearted to a fault. The sort of man of whom it is so often said, "He is nobody's enemy but his own," and always to the fore when any act of daring was in vogue, it is little wonder that he was the pet of the garrison.

Captain Warrington, on the other hand, was by no means a popular man, and though nothing was actually known to his discredit, there were so many ugly rumours afloat respecting him that none cared about having more of his company than they could help.

Curiously enough there was a kind of rivalry between the two officers, which culminated in the year 187—, when the regiment happened to be quartered in Ireland. It wanted but a few weeks to the garrison steeplechases, and the Grand Military Cup as the chief prize of the fixture was somewhat ostentatiously termed, was generally admitted, bar accidents, to rest between Captain Moncrieff's Plinlimmon, by Mont Blanc—Mountain Maid, and Captain Warrington's Fugitive, by Highwayman—Terror.

Speculation ran pretty high considering the value of the stakes, and, bearing in mind Herbert Moncrieff's popularity in the regiment, it is hardly surprising that the gallant 17th backed Plinlimmon almost to a man. I, in common with the rest, had risked almost my "bottom dollar" on the horse, and as the day drew near everyone was anxious to have a bit more on.

There was never any difficulty in placing investments, however, for Captain Warrington had given out that he was willing to back his own horse against "Plin" for any sum, while a well-known Irish bookmaker from neighbouring Clonmel, by name Cleary, had an apparently endless commission to lay against Moncrieff's horse. "From information received" as the police have it, I happened to be aware that this gentleman and Warrington were pretty thick together, but how they could know anything detrimental about Plinlimmon was a puzzle, seeing that the greatest secrecy was always observed in galloping the horse, and he had never been tried since being in barracks.

About ten days before the race Moncrieff was called to London on important business, which he guessed would detain him about a week, and Plinlimmon was left in my charge—I had omitted to mention that Herbert and I were thick as the proverbial thieves—with strict injunctions when galloping the horse to see that no one came near. These instructions, with the aid of Larry Doyle, Moncrieff's groom, I was able to carry out to the letter, and the more I saw of Plinlimmon the more convinced I became that, bar accidents, he could not fail to be returned the winner.

But still the desire to lay against him continued in certain quarters, and Cleary was heard to say one night, under the cheering influence of "potheen," that he would take alight odds Plinlimmon never saw the post at all. When this was reported to me I became decidedly uneasy, but could hit upon no way by which the horse could be "got at," for Larry Doyle, who would have spilt his heart's blood in his master's service, guarded his charge night and day.

I found the clue at last, however, Herbert had asked me to open his letters whilst he was away, and one morning I found one from a none too reputable firm of solicitors, informing Captain Moncrieff that they were instructed by their client, Mr. Cleary of Clonmel, to apply for payment of a bill for £1,500 which had been presented for payment and refused. Failing receipt of the amount, they should take immediate steps to recover.

Directly I read this the whole scheme flashed across me and I immediately communicated with a solicitor in the town—a great friend of Herbert's, and a staunch supporter of Plinlimmon. His advice was that I should communicate with Moncrieff, find out how much "paper" he had out, and warn him to keep out of the way till the day of the races, while the solicitor, in the meantime, endeavoured to find out how the land lay.

Herbert's reply to my telegram was by no means reassuring.

A triumph of simplicity.

Unparalleled experience, expert knowledge and unique manufacturing facilities have enabled us to produce the simplest dynamo lighting plant extant.

Extreme simplicity is not the only remarkable feature; lightness and compactness are equally marked. Thus, in addition to attaining an abnormally high degree of efficiency and reliability the system is as perfect as it is possible for ingenuity and skill to make it.

Yet in spite of all these advantages, we can supply the dynamo complete from £7-10.

"Have about four thousand out, some older than Cleary's. Latter promised to renege. Keep the horses close."

The latter part of this message was particularly significant, and was emphasised by the fact that there was already a judgment summons out against our friend, which fact the solicitor had been able to speedily discover. Of a certainty an attempt would be made to seize the horses, and how to prevent a calamity puzzled us not a little.

"I have it!" I said a sudden inspiration striking me. "The colonel's got a second charger, as like Plinlimmon as one pea's like another. I'll get him to change stables till the race is over, and then if they show fight we can let 'em have Herbert's horses for a day or two. They'll be glad enough to let 'em go when they find out they belong to His Most Gracious Majesty!"

"Capital! Capital!" laughed the worthy lawyer, rubbing his hands; "they're sure to try and get a bit more out of him when they think he's safe under lock and key, and it'll teach 'em a lesson not to be too clever."

Cleary and his friends had laid their plans well. No attempt was made at seizure until the day before the races when a couple of seedy-looking individuals, bearing their calling unmistakeably stamped on their countenances, made their appearance with a writ, countersigned by a magistrate authorising the seizure and removal of any or all of Herbert Moncrieff's effects.

At first we refuse to allow them to take anything, and for some time the two minions of the law looked like having a warm time of it. The colonel, however, came to the rescue just in time to prevent violence.

They stated their errand civilly enough.

"We're told as 'ow there's a couple o' valuable 'orses 'ere belonging to Mr. Moncrieff," said the spokesman of the twain. "I'm to take 'em with me, and my instructions are to leave the knick-knacks till Captain Moncrieff returns."

"Very well," replied the colonel, who, of course, was in the secret, "get your business over quickly and get out of this. We've no room here for gentlemen of your profession."

And, amid much parade of grief on the part of Larry Doyle, the pseudo Plinlimmon and Herbert's charger were carefully led out of the barracks, Captain Warrington, who was standing by being scarcely able to repress a grin of satisfaction as he witnessed their exit.

A matter which puzzled us exceedingly, however, was how to get Plinlimmon on to the course without being noticed. That Cleary and his confederates had not discovered how they had been duped I gathered from the fact that "Plin" had during the evening been knocked out to 10 to 1, at which price I had invested a few more sovereigns.

It was close upon midnight ere Herbert Moncrieff, muffled up to escape observation, returned to barracks, and immediately he and I, with the colonel and Larry Doyle, held a council of war. It was the quick witted Irishman who found a solution of the difficulty.

"If ye'll allow me, gentlemen," he said, after we had wasted half an hour in useless suggestions, "it's the masther that's the difficulty, and not the horse. He's so well known that directly he shows himself he'll be spotted. P'raps if the colonel—axing his honour's pardon—was to order out a picket and let one of 'em be the masther, dressed as a trooper, and riding Plinlimmon, he might get to the weighing room 'thout bein' noticed. He could have his colours on underneath his overall, and if he was disguised a bit nobody 'ud know him."

"A capital idea, by Jove!" exclaimed the colonel, "and we'll act up to it. Just a little ruddy rouge and a black moustache, Herbert, and nobody will recognise you for that dandy officer, Captain Moncrieff, of the 17th."

The following day, about noon, a good-looking young trooper, on an equally good-looking horse, took his place among the picket, and trotted away gaily to the races. As the time for the decision of the Cup approached the picket crowded round the weighing-room until all the competitors had weighed out, when it might have been noticed that there were one short of their number.

"Anyone else for the Grand Military?" inquired the Clerk of the Scales, somewhat impatiently.

"Yes; I weigh for Plinlimmon, 11st. 7lbs."

"Then look sharp about it, unless you want to get left. The others have weighed out some time ago."

And Herbert Moncrieff, thoroughly disguised, got in and out of the scales in double-quick time, and was on his way to the post in hot haste after the others.

The flag quickly fell to a capital start, and, as may be imagined, I watched the race with considerable interest. I had taken up a position not far from Cleary, who, as the horses neared the final bend, exclaimed—

"What on earth's that in Moncrieff's colours?"

"That?" I replied, coolly. "Oh! that's Plinlimmon. Moncrieff's riding him himself, you know."

"Plinlimmon be d—d!" he exclaimed, though he turned a shade paler. "I've got him safe enough under lock and key."

"Not you! What you've got are a couple of Her Majesty's chargers, which you've no earthly right to. Why, he's won now! Plinlimmon wins for a hundred."

They were now round the turn and in the straight for home. The crowd took up the cry. "Plinlimmon wins!" "Plinlimmon walks in!" And, amid a rattling cheer from the garrison, who cheered as only soldiers can, Herbert, sitting perfectly still, cantered past the post a winner by three lengths from Fugitive, who was double that distance in front of the rest of the field.

Cleary's language, as the truth began to dawn upon him was unfit for publication, and Captain Warrington looked as if there wasn't a word in his vocabulary capable of expressing his view of the situation. However, as they must have lost close upon forty thousand pounds between them, there may have been some excuse for this ebullition of feeling. All I know is that Herbert won more than enough to clear himself of all pecuniary embarrassments, and that, in addition to the decent little pile I landed myself, I have good cause to remember the race by reason of the diamond horseshoe pin which Moncrieff gave me as a memento of the assistance I rendered him on that noteworthy occasion.

TURTLE.

SPEARING turtle on the reefs does not at first strike one as likely to be a very exciting sport, and I would not for one moment attempt to compare it to the capture of the "Silver king"; but yet it partakes largely of the "glorious uncertainty of sport:" it is not at all so easy as it sounds, and the large green turtle in his native element is by no means the tame and docile creature that we see lying on his back gasping in the window of a London restaurant. Moreover, it must always be a satisfaction to a true sportsman to know that his game when killed is not absolutely useless, and need not be thrown to the sharks as offal. The flesh of the green turtles of the Gulf of Mexico is excellent, and they are in far better condition when killed out there than they ever are when in England. The extensive coral reefs which fringe the shores of the south-eastern corner of the great Mexican Gulf are our hunting grounds: it is here that the turtle lie asleep, with one eye open, on the bottom, in about four feet of water, and they must be approached with the greatest caution, or they will be off before you can get within striking distance of them.

We never could find out where these turtle landed to lay their eggs: the reefs on which they dwelt were often without any islets attached to them; and there were no marks of them upon the shores of the mainland, where there was generally a heavy surf. If we could have found their shore walks we should probably have tried our luck at turning them at night, after the manner of the Ascension turtlers; though it would scarcely have been lively work, and certainly not such good sport as spearing them in their native element. Spearing, also, was the only effectual way of capturing them; we caught one occasionally when hauling the seine net on the beach, but not more than two or three during the whole time we were down the Gulf; whereas when spearing on the reefs we got as many as five in one day.

The great object in spearing turtle is to capture them alive and uninjured, so that they can be kept like sheep or bullocks until they are wanted for use; this sounds rather inconsistent with the term "spearing," but it is not so, as I shall explain.

GONOSAN is safe and reliable, does not affect the digestive organs. An ideal antiseptic treatment recommended by Specialists. Never fails. It is readily taken, and leaves no bad after-effects. Bottle of 40 Capsules. Procurable at all Chemists and Patent Medicine dealers. Demand Gonosan, accept nothing else.

We got our first idea of the necessary gear and method of spearing turtle from some natives on the coast of the Yucatan peninsula; but we had greatly to modify their plan before we succeeded in capturing our turtle uninjured and in a condition to keep as long as we wanted. Their spear-point was too long, it almost invariably penetrated the shell, and entering the lungs caused the turtle to bleed to death in from twenty-four to forty-eight hours.

Our object was to make a spear-point which should have sufficient hold in the back shell without complete penetration, and this we at last succeeded in doing. The point is three-cornered, and about three-quarters of an inch long; the part that fits into the haft is square, and may be any convenient length; the shoulders answer the double purpose of preventing the point from penetrating too far and also of forming a hold for the line, which consists of 120 yards of specially strong water-line, about the size of an ordinary lead pencil, spliced round the spear as tightly as possible between the shoulders. The haft is an ash staff about nine feet long, with a metal socket to take the back end of the spear, which must fit loosely so as to pull out directly the turtle is struck. We found that the best plan was to fit it so as to be quite loose in the socket, and then to tighten it sufficiently to prevent it from falling out by wrapping a scrap of wet paper round it. It is of the first importance that the long wooden haft of the spear should be drawn clear of the point the instant the turtle is struck: if this is not done, the leverage of the haft will turn the spearpoint in the hole made in the turtle's shell, and it will thus be loosened, so that it will either fall out of itself or else come out directly any strain is brought upon it. This knack of drawing back the long handle of the spear smartly is not very easy to acquire; the depth of water cannot always be accurately measured by the eye; the position of the harpooner—in the bows of a small boat bobbing about under sail—is not a very steady one, and in the excitement of the moment a mistake is easily made, with the result that the turtle is sure to be lost. The spear is not thrown after the manner of an ordinary harpoon or fishspear; it is thrust down at the turtle with the greatest amount of strength that the man using it is capable of exerting; for the shell of the turtle is hard, and the resistance of the water takes off from the force of the blow. Not infrequently the harpooneer misses his quarry, loses his balance and takes a header overboard; and this is specially liable to happen if he miscalculates the depth of the turtle, and thinks he is a little nearer than is really the case.

The fit-out for turtling on the reefs is as follows: A small boat about fifteen feet long, fairly light and handy, but with a good flat floor; rig, a small sprit-sail without a jib; the turtle spear; 120 yards of line spliced on to the spear-point, with a wooden buoy or bladder attached to the other end; a pair of sculls; a crew of three and no more. The object of the buoy is this: If the turtle after being struck, makes a very vigorous and prolonged rush, he sometimes takes out the whole of the 120 yards of line before the boat's head can be turned in the right direction and way got upon her; if the line were checked it would break, or the spear-point would be drawn out of the shell; the buoy is therefore thrown overboard, and the boat chases it till she picks it up again as the turtle is sure to stop sooner or later in his wild career.

It is essential that there should be a breeze, and that the boat should be under sail. We often tried to catch turtle in a calm, by rowing with muffled oars, and sometimes by poling with a long pole; but we were never able to get within striking distance of them. The water was very clear, and without a good ripple they could see the boat a long way off, and were too wary to be caught like that; so that latterly we never went turtling unless there was a breeze, and this there almost always was in the afternoon, even if the mornings were calm.

The depth of water on these coral reefs varies from two to about five feet; in some places it is deeper, but such places we avoided, as five feet is about the extreme depth at which one has any chance of properly spearing a turtle when he is lying on the bottom. I assume the reader is aware that turtle breathe with lungs like animals (though I believe they are classed as reptiles); consequently they must come to the surface occasionally, and by lying in the shallow waters of these coral reefs they are able to take matters very easy: about once every hour they put their heads above water, take a long breath, which sounds like a deep sigh, and go down again to lie perfectly still on the bottom.

Let us now proceed to business. Jack stands in the bow with the spear. Tom sits in the middle of the boat ready to strike mast and sail and get the oars out the moment a turtle is struck: and Harry sits in the stern and steers. I have already described the little boat and her rig, and now we are sailing along, close-hauled, with a light breeze, and making about one mile an hour through the water. The sun is shining brightly, but there is a good ripple on the sea, so it is possible to approach a turtle within striking distance before we are observed; and although cloudy weather is superior in some respects, a bright day is better for sighting your turtle, and making sure that he is a turtle and not a large piece of brain-coral; for the latter—with which the reefs are thickly strewn—is not infrequently harpooned in mistake for a turtle, to the disgust of the harpooneer, and the damage of the spear.

Now a turtle is sighted about twenty yards off on the weather bow, and Jack waves his hand to Harry, as a signal to him to luff all he knows; but the little boat will not stand close sailing, and she falls off and passes to leeward of the turtle outside striking distance, but without disturbing him. So then we try to tack; the boat, however, with her one sail and jib will not come round without the assistance of an oar, so Tom gets an oar out, but in doing so he makes a noise and splashes; this frightens the turtle, and he is off directly.

Once more we sail along, close hauled as before, and all three keeping a sharp look out. Now a turtle is sighted broad off on the lee bow; the boat is kept off for him, she gathers way quickly, and by the time we get over him she is going fast through the water, so that the shot is a very difficult one; the harpooneer strikes and strikes well home, but he fails to draw back the haft quickly enough, so the spear-point turns a little, falls out, and the turtle escapes. Failure number two, but at it again! Once more a turtle is sighted off the lee bow, and this time Harry, the helmsman, instead of keeping away straight for the turtle, keeps hard away and runs before the wind for three or four boat's-lengths, then hauls up and approaches the game close hauled, and with but little way on the boat. This time Jack the harpooneer does his duty, strikes home, draws back the haft smartly, and lays it down, attends to his line, which is coiled down clear between his feet, and off rushes the turtle like an express engine; out flies the line, burning Jack's fingers; down comes the mast and sail in a jiffy—"Out oars, Tom, and give away like a galley slave!" Now we have got the boat's head pointed in the right direction—that is to say, straight for the turtle; Tom has got good way on her with his oars, and Jack can begin to put a little strain on the line and make the turtle tow the boat—an operation which will very soon exhaust him. His first rush takes us about two hundred yards, then he eases off a bit, comes up to the top and blows, and makes off again for his second rush, which is considerably shorter and not so fast as the first one. In about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, if he is not a very big and exceptionally lusty turtle, he is utterly blown—pumped out like a fat man running uphill; he allows the boat to haul right up to him and just flaps about helplessly on the top of the water.

Now begins the second act of the drama; he has to be turned on his back and dragged into the boat. As soon as it is quite certain that he is played out, that there is no fear of another rush, and the depth of water not more than about up to a man's chin, Tom goes over-board and proceeds to "turn turtle."

This second act is not without some interest and excitement, and the man or boy (it was generally one of the midshipmen) who performs it must be tolerably amphibious; for the turtle, though played out to a certain extent, and not capable of making a prolonged rush, still retains a very strong objection to be turned over on his back, and shows fight till the last, hitting out with his flippers, and not infrequently giving his assailant a black eye or a bloody nose. However, a British midshipman is not to be beaten by a mere turtle, and sooner or later, after a good deal of splashing and floundering, the latter is turned in the opposite way from that in which nature intended him to swim, in which position he is absolutely helpless. And now begins the third act. As soon as the turtle is fairly upside down, overboard goes Harry. Now Tom and Harry get their shoulders under the turtle, Jack (in the boat) gets hold of one fore flipper and one hind flipper, and with a "One, two, three, heave!" down goes the gunwale of the little boat, in comes the turtle, and also in comes with him at least half a bowlful of water. Tom and Harry must now stay outside while Jack bales out with his hat to make room for them.

The little boat used to hold two small or medium-sized turtle, but only one big one. The weights as a general rule ran between two hundred and four hundred pounds, the average being about three hundred. We only caught two of over four hundred pounds.

The operation of turning the turtle and getting him into the boat can only be accomplished in shallow water—that is to say, not more than four and a half feet; if the turtle is finally brought to bay in deeper water than this, a running noose must be slipped over one of his flippers, and he must be towed into shoal water.

One of the most exciting features of the sport occurs when the turtle which has been speared happens to be lying near the edge of the reef. These reefs are regular submarine plateaux, the average depth being three or four feet, and they go down at the edge almost like a wall, into ten or twelve fathoms; so that the turtle, if lying near the edge, almost always has the wit to make for the deep water. A great effort is made to prevent him: the boat is rowed with might and main to try to intercept him; the tow-line is taken to the foremost rowlock on the proper side, so as to shoot the boat out diagonally between the turtle and the deep water. Occasionally these devices succeed, but more frequently they do not, and if he has once made up his mind to go for deep water, nothing will stop him, or turn him, and down he goes. Then begins a struggle that lasts two hours at least.

I have before remarked that a turtle has to come to the surface breathe. If he is taking no exercise (i. e., lying still on the bottom) he can stay down for about an hour or perhaps more: but if he is taking exercise he must come up more frequently, just as a man must breathe quicker if he is exerting himself. The great object, then, when the turtle gets into deep water, is to keep him on the move; and for this purpose as much strain is put upon the line as can judiciously be done without breaking it or drawing out the spear-head. This operation requires careful handling like playing a salmon or a big trout: the line must, of course, be kept in hand, and not made fast any part of the boat: and if a good steady strain is kept upon it, the turtle must strike out pretty hard to keep himself from being pulled up to the surface. This very soon exhausts his lungs, and he must come up and breathe or else be drowned. Up he rises with a rush: Jack gathers in the slack line hand over hand and keeps the boat right over him; Tom stands ready with the boat-hook or one of the oars, and just before the turtle's head reaches the surface, he brings his weapon down with a mighty splash just over him, sending him down to the bottom, again without his fresh air. The turtle cannot, however, hold on long; in a few minutes he comes up again, and this time he insists on taking breath, splash or no splash.

This game may go on for a couple of hours, and he then allows himself to be pulled up to the surface. A noose is slipped over one of his flippers and he is towed into shoal water and secured.

On our best day we got five turtle. We went away from the ship about noon, directly the breeze sprang up, and rowed and sailed to our favourite reef, about four miles from the ship. We were very lucky, had two good turtle on board the ship by three o'clock, and started off again for the reef. Again we were in fortune's way, and quickly caught two more turtle; so we backed our luck, and secured these two to the roots of an enormous tree which had been washed down one of the great rivers and stranded on the reef. It was now getting dusk, but we went on fishing and got one more turtle, which we took back to the ship; and next morning at daylight we sent a boat to bring on board our two captives. With the exception of this time, we never secured more than three in one day; but, as we were after them almost every day for three or four months, we caught a large number, and the difficulty was to know how to keep them in good condition until the time came for us to leave our station and go to Jamaica, where we should find plenty of friends who would be glad to get them.

First we built a pond with large lumps of brain-coral on the lee side of a small sandy islet; but one night a strong breeze sprang up, raising a considerable sea, a part of one of our walls was washed away and ten of our best turtle escaped.

So then we tried another plan. We drove strong stakes into the sand just above high-water mark (there is scarcely any tide in this part of the Gulf of Mexico), and secured the turtle to these with a good length of line and an iron shackle through the double part of the creature's shell near the tail. They throve very well like this, and were able to take suitable exercise. They used to swim away steadily for above a couple of hours every day; they evidently thought they were getting somewhere, and were perfectly happy in their minds, and then went to sleep again for the rest of the twenty-four hours.

Several of my shipmates tried their hands at harpooning turtle, but generally they did not stick to it long enough to be able to distinguish between a piece of brain-coral and a turtle, or to acquire the knack of striking hard enough and drawing back the handle quickly enough to get properly fixed into a turtle, and five times out of six they failed.

One fine day, after we had been about a fortnight catching turtle, a great conspiracy was hatched. The gunner and one of the midshipmen were the conspirators, and they announced suddenly and irreverently that spearing was "all humbug," and that they could catch a turtle just as well without spear or line or any of the rest of the paraphernalia by just simply diving down, collaring him and turning him over on his back, without any of the preliminaries which we had always hitherto considered necessary. The orthodox turtlers laughed them to scorn; but they were so confident and so eager that the boat was placed at their disposal, and the gunner taking one of his mates for coxswain, the two conspirators started on their hunt without the turtle-spear, having made several bets as to their success.

Some time after dark they returned to the ship with a turtle. It was a small one, it was a turtle, and they won their wagers.

We had great difficulty in finding out what actually did happen, as the evidence was most conflicting; but, having sifted it with due care, and cross-examined the three actors and sole witnesses of the drama, it seems to have been somewhat as follows. The two conspirators, notwithstanding that they were both splendid swimmers and divers, knew very well that they would have no chance of overcoming a big turtle; so they passed several without attacking them, until after a while they sighted one below the average in size, and, sailing quietly up to him, the gunner and the midshipman dived together, and caught hold of the turtle before he had time to make off; the depth of water was said to be about four or five feet. Up to this point the account by the three witnesses was quite clear and consistent, but after this it became somewhat confused and contradictory. For instance, the gunner's mate said that the gunner was frequently under water for a quarter of an hour at a time battling with the turtle, and that the midshipman was considerably longer—in fact, that the latter only appeared above water three times during the "hour and a half" that they took to turn their turtle; whereas the gunner was confident that he had the turtle on his back in about two minutes, and in the boat in less than five. The midshipman did not look at his watch either before or after he went over-board, and therefore could give no trustworthy information as to time, but thought it was better fun than either school or watch-keeping. Anyhow, they caught their turtle and won their bets, but the gunner sprained his thumb so badly that he had to go about with his right hand in sling for a fortnight, and the midshipman cut his knees and scraped his legs against the coral, so that he went stiff and sore for several days.

They were satisfied; they had proved their point; but they did not try it again.

I have often thought that a party of young men who did not mind salt water, and who sought for some novelty in sport, might hire a steam yacht and spend a month or two agreeably catching turtle on the reefs in the south-east corner of the Gulf of Mexico; and if they could make some arrangement with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company to take home their turtle, they ought to be able to clear a good part of their expenses, as the creatures fetch a good price in London. Vera Cruz would be the head-quarters for supplies, Mails, etc., and the best reefs are at Anton Lizardo about fifteen miles to the southward. The only strong wind is from the north, and shelter can always be found under the lee of one of the reefs.

A SENSATIONAL 'VARSITY BOATRACE.

NEVER in the history of British 'varsity rowing has anything been seen to equal the sensational happenings that occurred on March 30 last, when Oxford and Cambridge made the first of their two attempts to decide their annual boatrace over the Thames championship course. It is true that the Cantabs sank in the race fifty-three years ago, but never before had both boats foundered as they did on the occasion referred to. The light blues were the first to go under about a mile and a half from the start, and they had to swim ashore, and their example was followed by their rivals about a mile further on.

After the crews had pulled over a mile of the roughest water ever known in connection with the 'varsity race, the dark blues rowed clean away from the boys from the Cam, as easily as if the latter had been moored. The reason the Cantabs were so suddenly left behind was soon apparent. The boat appeared to be labouring heavily; the stern seemed hardly out of the water; the rudder slowly sank from sight, and the water seemed to reach the cox's seat, and finally the boat itself disappeared from view and nine forelorn "Blues" were left struggling even yet in a gallant attempt to do their best, even if waterlogged, shipwrecked, or drowned at their station.

At last all further efforts being useless and all pursuit of their vivals a more than forelorn hope, the crew being unable to take to the boats, took themselves, or what remained dry, to the water and swam ashore. The cox, be it said, to his infinite credit, like the good skipper that he is, was the last to leave the boat; in fact, he went down with it, and was only forced to relinquish the rudder lines by the waves sweeping him from his seat.

Oxford, meanwhile, had disappeared from view, and the launches following with one accord raced round the bend at Chiswick in search. When the Oxonians broke upon the gaze of those following they were still plodding on in vile water, the surf breaking over the boat, the coxswain taking his men close in shore, not from fear of sinking, but to seek a little shelter from the wind. The roughness, however, was too much for them. Bourne, the stroke, who realised by now that he had accompanied that which no other stroke had done before, was content to plod methodically along.

But that dire superstition among rowing men was destined to show that, like all other superstitions, there was something in it. Already the fruit had been plucked by the gallant Oxford stroke, the fruit was reaching his parched and hungry mouth when the cup was dushed from his lips. Oxford were sinking, and rapidly the boat filling, the crew took to the shore. All was not lost yet, but friendly assistance spoilt all chance remaining. In the full sympathy of their hearts some spectators waded into the water and assisted the bedraggled oarsmen. The boat was emptied of water, the racing shell refloated, and the crew re-embarked

But gallant through the effort was, the umpire intimated to them that the race was void. Perhaps it would have been otherwise decided if no extraneous assistance had been given, but as in the Marathon race at the last Olympic games in England, friendly help lost the prize to a splendid Italian attack, so the friendly aid robbed Bourne of the splendid distinction of stroking four Oxford crews to victory in succession.

It was not long, however, before he realized his ambition by accomplishing this remarkable performance, as two days later in the re-row his crew beat the Cantabs by six lengths. In the void race it was difficult to form much of an opinion as to which was the better "eight," owing to the Cantabs being swamped when there was little to choose between either, but at the next attempt the question was soon answered, for the Oxonians had the measure of their rivals three-quarters of a mile from the start, and thence on it was a procession. At the mile post Oxford were three-quarters of a length ahead. This advantage was increased to two lengths at Hammersmith Bridge ; three lengths at Chiswick Eyot ; five lengths at Barnes Bridge and six lengths at the finish, which was reached by the winners in 22 mins. 5 secs., very good time in view of the adverse conditions which prevailed. Though beaten Cambridge, who were badly done up on reaching the winning line, were by no means disgraced, for despite the fact that they were half a stone lighter, per man, than their rivals, they made the pluckiest of fights, and rowed themselves to a standstill.

The contest was the sixty-ninth of the series and Oxford have now proved successful thirty-eight times to Cambridge's thirty. One race, that of 1887, resulted in a deadheat.

THE LIMITATIONS OF THE AEROPLANE.

The decision of the military authorities at Home to reorganise that which has heretofore been known as the "Air Battalion" and employ the grant of £308,000 in working up a new "Flying Corps" invites attention again to the progress of aviation. The vessels—we use the word in default of one more embracing—of the new corps are to be dirigibles, great and small, and aeroplanes ; and, we gather, the large dirigibles are to be a naval department while the smaller ones and the aeroplanes are to be in charge of the military. The new scheme has not yet been developed so far as to show how many dirigible balloons are to be added to the defences of the country ; but the official mind is clearer in the matter of aeroplanes, and of these there are to be 131 ; of which 71 have already been sanctioned, and we may assume are either built or in process of building. A modified paean of thanksgiving, arising from the conviction held by many excellent people that the salvation of empires in the future depends on aeroplanes, has gone up at this decision of the Home Government ; it is undoubtedly a step forward and one which serves to keep England abreast of Continental nations ; and when we proceed to examine the part the aeroplane is likely to play in the wars of the future, we are mindful that the machine is yet in its infancy ; a robust infancy, but nevertheless in an early state of development. It must be allowed that there has been and is, a tendency to exaggerate the potentialities of the "heavier than air" machine ; it is natural this should be so, for the knowledge possessed by the large majority is of a somewhat hazy description and has not been clarified by the exertions of popular novelists whose air-vessels are familiar to a much larger public than those housed at Farnborough and elsewhere. The aeroplane is an engine which appeals to the imagination, as it is not in the nature of the dirigible to do ; hence the popular cry for these machines concerning whose practically utility the foremost aviators in Europe—the French—are not a little dubious. The thing has its limitations and those limitations are more serious than even well-informed persons believe ; it is admitted, indeed we only say the fact when we say it is a fundamental axiom in military aeroplaning that to be of practical use, the machine must be one that will carry at least one passenger in addition to its pilot : it is not in human power to handle mono—or biplane and at the same time take observations which will be of any use to an officer commanding troops in the field. For serviceable reconnaissance, say the French experts, the aeroplane should carry one or two passengers beside the pilot ; and it was in recognition of this necessity that the French military authorities last year made it a condition that aeroplanes entering for the official competitions, should carry beside the pilot a weight of 660lbs. Thirty-one machines entered and of these seven remained in the final test ; these proved themselves capable of flying 300 kilometres at a speed of 50 miles an hour or more, carrying the prescribed load. On the face of this result it would seem that the problem had been solved ; but when we come to look into details, we find that success was gained less by the suitabity of the machines than by the skill of the pilots. Of necessity these machines were of great strength ; in other words of great weight ; they require powerful motors to furnish the necessary impetus, a need which implies greatly enlarged expanse of wing at the outset ; hence we are considering a machine which was performing the functions of a bird while structurally incapable of one most essential achievement of the heaviest bird, namely, to alight without injuring itself. In the air these heavy planes accomplished marvels ; where they failed was in coming safely to earth again ; their great weight forbade the pilot to slacken speed when he sought to alight ; it was found essential to descend fast and at a very easy gradient ; and even then the machine almost invariably capsized. To reduce speed and descend at a steep gradient was productive of worse results ; the moment weight gained the upper hand of impetus—and that moment comes soon to these heavy machines—the thing came down like a stone. Thus ingenuity has arrived at this pitch of imperfection :—it can build light aeroplanes which are of no use for reconnoitring purposes ; and it can build heavy ones which will do everything but bring the crew back to earth safely with the information they have collected. It must be conceded that the science of flying has some distance to travel yet before it can be regarded as an applied science.

We seem to have travelled as fas as it is possible to go, by the light of existing knowledge, in the way of combining lightness and strength in motor which constitutes the heaviest part of the machine, and ingenuity has exhausted itself in devising weight-saving material for body and wings. As matters stand at present, therefore, the crux of the difficulty would seem to be in what we will call the legs of the bird.

Some new plan of undercarriage is wanted that will at one and the same time give the plane more stable footing when it is brought down with the necessary long rush and will break its fall when circumstances forbid that slow gradient and long rush earthward. Two motors are held desirable for these large planes to carry one or two passengers besides the pilot ; but the French trials have made it clear that until the alighting difficulty has been overcome, it is idle to seek enhanced flying power through means that involve enhanced weight. Wonderful dexterity and skill have been displayed by the airmen of all nations ; the qualities they have exhibited make their countrymen proud of them, and justly so : but we must not allow the coolheadedness and courage of the men to blind us to the defects of the machine he handles ; the very fact that high qualities are essential to successful flying is proof of the imperfection of the machine ; obviously were aeroplanes quite safe and easy to manage no skill or courage would be required, and airmen would not be popular heroes. But for practical purposes we want machines which will make the lowest possible demands upon the men who steer them. We want them to be as safe as as they can be made in themselves ; we must not regard military aeroplaning as opportunity for showing the skill and intrepidity of the pilot ; we must regard it as a means of obtaining otherwise inaccessible information ; and the more we can depend on the machine and the less we have to depend on the skill and address of the pilot the more useful aeroplanes will be to the soldier. There will always be quite enough risk to make aerial reconnaissance attractive, that goes without saying. We are moved to these reflections by the fact that in the French experiments of last year success was attributed far more to the cleverness of the pilots than to the efficiency of the machines for their purpose ; what the country now awaits is the invention of some new device which shall enable the heavy plane, which alone can be employed for reconnoitring purposes, to be brought to ground without display of exceptional skill on the part of the pilot.

THE ENGLISH FOOTBALL CUP.

London, Saturday, 20th April 1912.

Barnsley and West Bromwich Albion met in the final at the Crystal Palace this afternoon in the presence of sixty thousand people. The weather was all that could be desired and the match ended in a pointless draw. West Bromwich did most of the attacking but the Barnsley defence was impregnable.

Odol possesses
the three essential characteristics of a good dentifrice and mouthwash:

1. It is genuinely antiseptic and prevents decay of the teeth.
2. It is innocuous to the most sensitive mouth.
3. It is agreeable and very refreshing to the palate.

A liquid antiseptic is the only one which is able to penetrate all the hidden cavities of the teeth—tooth-powders or pastes never can do this—but in the case of Odol the antiseptic does its work thoroughly, the good effects lasting for hours after the mouth has been rinsed with it.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The latest Derby Betting compiled from the telegrams that have arrived in India to various betting centres and from Reuter is as follows:—

3 to 1	White Star	2 to 1 on
9 „ 2	Lomond	evens
6 „ 1	England	6 to 4 agst.
7 „ 1	Sweeper II.	6 to 4 „
8 „ 1	Aiglon	2 to 1 „
100 „ 6	Jingling Geordie	2 to 1 „

Up till the end of last week Lomond had been top of the betting and his price was returned at 5 to 2; Mr. Joel's White Star (own brother of the last Derby winner) 4 to 1, and Mr. Buchanan's colt Jingling Geordie was not mentioned. The quotations returned concerning the French horses may, we think, be accepted with some reserve, for after the experiences of last year, when we were quoted all sorts of prices about Burgoyne and other

French invaders and their fallacy was subsequently exposed, the less we say about the present quotations the better. Montrose was said to be a genuine candidate at the back end of last season and is reputed the best colt in France, but until we are able to know a bit more about how he has wintered and whether he is really to be sent over, the prudent speculator will leave him well alone. Mr. Hulton's Lomond was by general consent of the critics admitted to be the best of the three-year-olds at the end of last season, despite his defeat early in the season in the Woodcote Stakes, in which he finished third to White Star and Halberd. The Woodcote is run over the last half of the Derby course. Lomond was the winter favourite, and Mr. Hulton's speech at the Gimcrack Dinner, in which he spoke in hopeful terms of the chances of his colt at Epsom, did not tend to diminish the colt's popularity. During the last few days, however White Star has come to a short price for both the Guineas and the Derby, and for the former race, which is run on the 1st May, he is now quoted at 6 to 4 and he is also, as above noted, top of the Derby quotations. There is obviously plenty of money for him for both races, and the Joel luck has of recent times been so unfailing that there is no doubt that if the stable are known to be backing him, the public will follow. White Star, like Sunstar, is a brown and like all the best of the Sundridges has thrown to a colour other than that of his sire's family, both Amphion and Sundridge having been chestnuts. They said that White Star was lucky to win the Woodcote Stakes and that if Lomond had been ready he would have got home but that he was not quite wound up: as things were, it was only a matter of heads, as White Star, Halberd and Lomond were all in a bunch at the finish and White Star was accounted to have had all the luck of the race. They speak of him as a very nice looking, compact little horse, showing a lot of quality, but a bit on the small side according to some of his critics, and his two-year-old form was also not as consistent as it might have been. Some of his detractors cast aspersions on his honesty and his record, very brilliant at times and at others perplexingly bad, certainly lends some colour to the reports that have from time to time been published concerning him. After his success in the Woodcote Stakes he came out at Ascot in the New Stakes, in which he was not opposed by as good a field as at Epsom, and finished down the course to Lady Americus, Kempion and Tonypandy. Next time out he won the July Stakes in capital form from Melody, whom he beat a neck, and Sweeper II. was third two lengths away. He then won the Molecomb Stakes at Goodwood in a common canter, the field behind him not being of very much account. Flanders was second, Outram third, and the other runners were Honaster and Tonypandy, who beat him at Ascot last. His next exploit was in the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, when after overpowering his boy before the start and bolting he subsequently defeated Melody a neck and Mr. Buchanan's Jingling Geordie was third close up, Cataract, Farman, the speedy Jaeger and the filly Oiseau Bleu being the other component units of the field. In the Middle Park Plate, which Absurd (his stable companion) won in a canter from Sweeper II., something dropped across him at the start and he never got on terms. In the 7 furlong Dewhurst Plate at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting there was no trouble about his getting away and he was out of the gate first, made every yard of the running, and won comfortably by three-quarters of a length from Lorenzo, Cylgad who is owned by Sir Ernest Cassel, and was then considered very promising, third; Halberd fourth, Cylba and Jingling Geordie being the other runners His form, it will therefore be seen, was at times very brilliant and at others most disappointing, for it was said that he would certainly have won the Middle Park Plate if he had got away, and all the accounts of that race do not concur in saying that he was badly crossed as alleged. It is against the law of chances that two own brothers should win the Derby two years in succession. Money, however, talks, especially when it is Mr. Joel's money, and if white star wins the Two Thousand, as they seem to think he will do, we shall probably find that he will at once be again heavily supported for his Epsom engagement.

Mr. Hulton's Lomond, who is by Desmond (St. Simon—L'Abbesse de Jouarre) out of Lowland Aggie by Lowlander (Dalesman—Lufra), is spoken of as a very fine colt indeed and is a bay. He was bought by R. Wootton at the Newmarket yearling sales for 1,000 guineas for the present owner and was bred by Sir John Robinson. His three-year-old form was very good and he created a very favourable impression every time that he was out. He was unplaced the first time he ran, namely, in the Westminster Plate at Epsom, which was won by Clodius and his next adventure was the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom to which reference has already been made in reviewing the form of White Star. He was opposed to two good ones, for Mr. Leonard Brassey's Halberd is by no means slow, and he was not, so it is said, thoroughly wound up. His next appearance was at Ascot, where in the New Stakes he defeated Jingling Geordie with fair ease; Green Cloth ran third and there were nine others. When he next ran the venue was Hurst Park, and he was asked to give Mr. Neumann's speedy Jaeger 11lb. and failed to do so because, as it was said, he was not himself. Tonypandy, who beat White Star at Ascot (vide above), was third on that occasion. He won the Gimcrack Stakes at York (on a legitimate objection to Cylgad), beating Flanders and Newminster II., and his last success of the year was when he won the Autumn Breeders' Foal Stakes at Manchester without any difficulty. Fair Relative and Apprentice dead-heated for second place and there were four other runners.

England, by William the Third out of Golden Hope, is another of Sir John Robinson's breeding and was sold at the same time as Lomond, the purchaser being Mr. C. E. Howard at 1,300 guineas. He was only out twice as a two-year-old and won once, the occasion being when he won a 6 furlong Plate at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting last October, beating Juggernaut and Sangaree. He is a very nicely bred colt, as he gets Bend 'Or on the dam's side and William the Third is by St. Simon out of Grantz, out of Enigma, out of The Sphynx, out of Madame Stodare.

Sweeper II. is a chestnut colt by Broomstick out of Ravello II. and is owned by Mr. H. B. Duryea and is trained at Stockbridge by Mr. Atty Persse. As already noted in the references to the two favourites, he has met both of them and been beaten and he also ran up in the Middle Park Plate to Mr. Jack Joel's Absurd the time that White Star was said to have been crossed at the start. He, however, won a couple of races—the Triennial Stakes (5 furlongs) at Ascot, beating Jaeger half a length, and Corncob and eight others, and the Richmond Stakes (6 furlongs) at Goodwood, in which he had 9st. 4lb., and defeated Charmian a neck at the sex allowance, Melody (9st. 11lb.) third, Absurd (8st. 10lb.) fourth and two others, and this by the light of what happened afterwards in the Middle Park Plate is about his best performance up to date.

AIGLON is by Eager out of Chaffinch and is a chestnut owned by Prince Kinsky (the gallant Austrian who piloted Zoedone in a National). Aiglon ran three times last season and won twice, his successes having been the Donnington Castle Maiden Two Year-Old-Plate at Newbury, beating Dara and Marie Claire, and the Theale Maiden Two-Year-Old Plate, also at Newbury, in which he defeated John Amendall (vide Dewhurst Plate, in which he was third), Black Swan and seven others.

MONTROSE II. is owned by Madame Lemaitre de Villers and is accounted to be the best colt bred in France for some years past and destined to accomplish what Gladiateur did and what Jardy, Holocauste, etc., failed to do! Montrose II is by Maintenon out of Mario, and Maintenon was the best colt of his year, 1906, but unfortunately for the French we had in that year an exceptionally hot lot of three-year-olds and the best and speediest of our horses, Spearmint, proved equal to downing all the Frenchmen on their native heath, one of his victims in the Grand Prix having been Maintenon. Montrose II. was beaten early in his career when attempting to give Rodriquez, one of their smartest colts, 17lb. at Maisons Lafitte. He, however, won a number of their good two-year-old races later and the French critics put him out 12lb. in front of any colt they have got. He is said to be a remarkably fine stamp of colt and to be not unlike Hornet's Beauty.

MR. BUCHANAN'S Jingling Geordie is a chestnut colt by Santry out of Merangue and is trained in Sam Darling's stable. His two-year-old adventures have been in part referred to above. He was out ten times as a two-year-old and won three races, his successes having been the Caterham Plate, in which he beat Clodius and the Martha Gorman colt; the Levant Stakes at Goodwood, in which he beat Tenor and the colt by Flying Fox out of Bramble Jelly, the only two other runners; and best performance of all, the International Two-Year-Old Plate at Kempton, in which Absurd was second and Kosciusko third, and he was giving away weight to both of them.

THE full details of the Liverpool Grand National which came out by this mail disclose the fact that after one round of the course 50 per cent. of them had been put on to the broad of their backs, as only thirteen were left standing up as they jumped the water in front of the stand. Caubeen was then leading in the same way as he did last year and he carried on till he fell four fences from home (the 11th and 27th obstacle) a big open ditch, the fence beyond being 4 feet 10 inches, the rest of it to regulation measurements. There was not a single fall over the first fence, which is unusual, as something as a rule gets knocked over in the crush. It is said, however, that they were going very easy at the start and taking no chances. Rathnally led with Covert Coat, Caubeen, Ballyhackle, Axle Pin, Bloodstone closest up. The first horse down was Glenfinder who came it at the second fence and at the third one, curiously enough, both the winner and runner-up in last year's National got to grief, Rathnally taking off too soon and Glenside, whose long suit is jumping, also coming down. Rory O'Moore also came down over this fence and galloping on riderless subsequently brought Bridge IV. down two fences before the water. After Rathnally fell Ballyhackle and Bloodstone made the running, Caubeen, Jerry M., Carsey next. Jenkinstown broke down badly before Becher's the second time and that obstacle got Regent, while the Canal Turn fence—a big ditch—stopped Ballyhackle, who was then leading. Fetlar's Pride, Sans Peur and Covert Coat also were defeated by this awkward obstacle at the Canal Turn. Whiteley II. fell there and was remounted and finished the course. Jerry M. did not lead until after he had jumped the last fence, but the moment he went up alongside of Bloodstone the race was over and he scored comfortably by six lengths: Bloodstone was four lengths in front of Axle Pin; Carsey was fourth; Sir Halbert fifth; Mount Prospect's Fortune sixth; and the remounted Whiteley II. seventh, being the only other horse to finish the course. Jerry M's gallant victory was loudly cheered, for both the horse and his owner are very popular, and Eric Piggott, who rode him a great race, is likewise persona grata with an Aintree crowd. It is a curious coincidence that when Cloister won for Sir C. Assheton-Smith in 1893 he carried exactly the same weight as that carried by Jerry M. this year, and he won even more easily, as he came home forty lengths in front and was ridden by Dollery. These two horses and gallant old Manifesto may justly claim to stand out pre-eminent amongst the equine champions who have won this great race during the past forty or fifty years, for to carry a big weight like 12st. 7 lb. over such a country and to win as these horses have done makes them out paladius of staunchness. Jerry M. is also a winner of the Grand Steeplechase de Paris, which is run over the stiff course at Auteuil. He was bred by Mr. Hartigan of Limerick. The late Mr. John Widger bought him as a two-year-old and ultimately sold him to Sir Charles Assheton-Smith for £1,250.

MR. T. BARING'S Mushroom, who has been favourite all through the past week for the City and Suburban, comment upon which will have to be reserved till our next issue owing to the late arrival of our cable announcing the result, is a bay or brown horse by Common out of Quick and is therefore an extremely well-named one. As a two-year-old he won five times and last season as a three-year-old he also scored a high percentage of wins, amongst his successes being the Midsummer Stakes (1 mile) at Newmarket in which with 9st. 3lb. he beat last year's Leger winner Prince Palatine (8st. 7lb.) and Automatic (8st. 2lb.); the March Stakes (1 mile 2 furlongs) at Newmarket, beating Charles O'Malley and Dalmatian; and last year's City and Suburban (1 mile 2 furlongs), in which he had 7st. and won by two lengths from Demosthenes (7st. 3lb.) and Bronzino (8st. 9lb.), others in the field being Avernus (7st. 2lb.) Knight of Honour (6st. 11lb.) Mustapha (8st. 9lb.) Lonawand (7st. 12lb.) Dean Swift (8st. 11lb.) etc. Mushroom's weight this year is 8st. 11lb., Lonawand 8st. 6lb., Lance Chest 6st. 5lb., The Story 8st. 12lb., Ultimus 8st. 11lb., Eton Boy 7st. 11lb. (third, 7st. 10lb., in the Newbury Spring Cup to Long Set 9st. and Mercutio 9st.), Moscato 7st. 7lb. and St. Nab 8st. Mushroom was returned at 11 to 2 early in the week, but we heard that there was some time ago a good deal of money for two others, one of them being Eton Boy, who was taken out of the Lincoln, and the other Moscato. Mr. Nickall's horse was badly beaten at Newbury after this information and he has not apparently many friends outside his own immediate connections.

AN interesting experiment in horse-breeding on what is called Mendelian lines (by reason of the memoir by Abbot Mendel on heredity in both humans and animals) has been rendered possibly by a generous gift to the Home Board of Agriculture and Fisheries by Captain D. C. Park of the 21st Lancers. Major Hurst, F.L.S., a member of the Advisory Council on Horse Breeding, has been entrusted with the carrying out of the experiments, and a short note on the objects and methods sets out very clearly the lines upon which it is intended to proceed. The memorandum reads as follows:—

"Notwithstanding the remarkable differences of opinion existing in regard to horse-breeding in general, most people seem to be agreed on two points—first, that the best type of light horse for purposes of general utility is the weight-carrying hunter; second, that the best foundation stock for crossing purposes is the thoroughbred. The practical object of Captain Park's experiments, therefore, is to utilise the recently-discovered Mendelian principles of heredity in order to make, if possible, a true breeding race of speedy, staying, weight-carrying thoroughbreds possessing the necessary jumping temperament which will enable them to hold their own across country. In other words, an attempt is being made to segregate out of the present thoroughbred a distinct breed with the qualities of a weight-carrying hunter; a breed that may not only be relied upon to breed true, but which will at the same time give more uniform and definite results when used for crossing purposes.

"For the country generally this latter point is the most important of all, for the stallions of such a breed might with advantage take the place of the present Premium stallions, which, by reason of their variable nature, at present necessarily yield such mixed results, to the disappointment and loss of all concerned.

"A careful study of the parents and relatives of weight-carrying winners of long-distance steeplechases in England and Ireland during the last few years led Major Hurst to the discovery that the material for such a breed is already in existence. This discovery of the true breeding 'chaser was announced at the Portsmouth meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in August last, and also at the International Conference of Genetics held in Paris in September. A detailed account of these researches in being published in the report of the Burbage experiment station for 1911.

"Little difficulty has been found in securing the true-breeding females required for the experiment and the following animals have been purchased:—

"Ballymacarney (Royal Meath—Cinnamon).

"Frigate (Red Prince II.—Athela).

"Breemount's Pride (Kendal—Mavourneen).

"Revolving Light (Red Prince II.—Hawkeye).

"A two-year-old filly out of a Hackler mare by Creaugate.

"A yearling colt out of a Hackler mare by Creaugate.

"A yearling colt out of Breemount's Pride by Missel Thrush.

"Two of the brood mares will be with Major Hurst at the Burbage experiment station, Leicestershire; and the remainder with Captain Park at Haresfoot, Berkhamsted, Hertfordshire."

There has been some difficulty about obtaining true-breeding males because owing to the common practice of cutting the colts put to chasing there has been some difficulty in finding true-breeding stallion for this season's services. Cackler would have been an ideal stallion, but he has unfortunately died, and the best of the other jumpers such as Rathnally, Jenkinstown, etc., are all geldings. It is therefore proposed to use the two "alternative" stallions, St. Aidan and Perigord. St. Aidan is by St. Simon out of St. Helena (Hermit—Castellamare) and he has sired a lot of good horses, amongst them Aid, Killeevan (well known in India at one time and a good winner) Killaidan, Keenadan, etc.; and Perigord is by St. Simon out of Effie Deans (Strathconn—Lufra) and has sired numerous winners. A leading feature of the scheme is that all the stock bred in these experiments will be trained and raced in order that the progeny may be tested thoroughly and practically. If the results of this experiment prove successful and it is established that Mendelism is applicable for the purposes in view an opening will be provided to breed for definite results on a larger scale.

The racing critics in Australia are not given to mincing matters or hesitating to say what they think in the plainest of terms. In the comments on a recent meeting in Melbourne, a very well-known turf authority says in the course of his notes, that he saw a certain horse striding along in rear of his field like the good one he is when he is wanted by the stable! If that sort of thing were attempted in India or in any country, unless the Stewards had first of all had something to say about the horse's running, the inevitable communication from gentlemen who look after the interests of defamed "clients" would follow.

J. E. Brewer, who has recently returned to Australia after a prolonged absence at Home, where he has done well as a trainer, told an Australasian representative that he and R. Wootton had bought a station on the Lachlan and that he was returning to train in Australia. When Frank Wootton was in India, it was said, that he had bought a property in Australia and intended ultimately to retire to the land of his birth. Unless Wootton manages to melt that "too too solid flesh" riding will soon be a thing of the past so far as he is concerned, and in spite of his having told an interviewer that he would easily ride 8st. 7lb. again if he could not manage to get his weight away in India, he is not likely to find it easier at Home.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Kenneth McLeod, who recently met with a very serious riding accident in Darjeeling, is now practically out of danger and the amputated leg is doing well. Last week Mr. McLeod's condition gave cause for the gravest anxiety but about Tuesday he took a turn for the better and since then has been doing well.

The Darjeeling May Races, which take place on the 4th, 7th and 9th of that month, promise well, and they say that there will be a better all-round meeting than there was last autumn, when two stables had things all their own way and the meeting was consequently robbed of much of its interest. There are a good many ponies already in work on the little soup-plate of a course at Lebong and there are some more expected. Bloss, so we hear, is sending up a pony from Calcutta, probably Lady Ratcliffe, and Mr. P. C. Lall, who is now in Purnea, is said to be shortly going up with about five. Of ponies already in Darjeeling Captain Power has Rita, a nice looking bay mare; Flash, a chestnut; Marco, a pony that ran in Darjeeling last Poojahs; Comedy, a 13st. 3lb. by the well-known pony sire Predominant, and who like most of his stock is a very good sort; and Togo for the Bhutia class of race. Of others in work Gee has Mr. Hickley's Melody, Mr. Smith's Little Ned, and some belonging to Mr. Jones, the well-known Darjeeling stablekeeper, and "Mr. Clive" has Spec, Waterlily (who is at present much fancied for the Governor's Cup), Winning Ways, Middlesex, A-1 and Coquette. Mr. Shillingford is expected and will take up Charlotte for one and probably some more. There are a good many of the Bhutia class of pony and we shall probably see as big a swarm of these curiously-shaped things turn out for those races as ever. The course is certainly more suited to a lot of polo ponies or mountain climbers than to anything in the shape of a racing pony. All their races are run in laps and it is more like an athletic sports meeting than racing. The track itself is all sand and cinders and the ponies that happen to be behind, as also their riders, usually get considerably knocked about the eyes and nearly blinded. However, in a dull season when there is virtually nothing to do these little race-meetings furnish a pleasing interlude to the monotony of hill station life. H.E. the Governor's Cup is run on the 7th and His Excellency will be present on all these days.

The decision of the Stewards of the W.I.T.C. to hold the Poona Meeting under the particular form of licence granted by the Government of Bombay was not come to without very careful and protracted consideration, and the Club have now decided to carry on racing for all one year without bookmakers and with stakes, the nett all-round increase of which is Rs. 14,000. The W.I.T.C. naturally know their own affairs best, and they have possibly satisfied themselves that there is a sufficiently big public in Bombay to make totalisator betting a success. Calcutta, however, if this experience is of any value, has tried racing without bookmakers, but it was not an experiment that was a success. The W.I.T.C. were cornered and were given their choice between a five-year licence on the restricted racing dates and no bookmaker lines or nothing. They stuck out for a licence for one year on the lines laid down by H.E. Sir George Clarke and his Councillers and they have been granted this concession. The W.I.T.C., as we say must know their own business better than any one else, but to the unbiassed outsider it seems as though the stronger line to take would have been to cancel all meetings until after Sir George Sydenham Clarke's departure. In our opinion this would have placed the Club in a far stronger position as regards the future. As things are now it will be claimed by the Bombay Government that their reforms and the method of carrying them out were right lock stock and barrel and that the acceptance by the W.I.T.C. of the terms imposed by Government is a full acknowledgment of this fact. The true facts are, however, exactly contrary. Turning the other cheek is of course a most admirable thing in theory, but we have grave doubts as to its practical utility when the smiter is one who holds "crank" ideas.

We much regret that our para. last week stating that Major G. Moore, of the 27th Light Cavalry was coming to Calcutta for the Monsoon Meetings was incorrect. Major Moore has written us contradicting the rumour.

Of the twenty-four runners in the Grand National eighteen failed to finish the course. The mishaps occurred as follows: Glenfinder fell at the first fence; Rathnally, taking off too soon and jumping sideways, came down at the third obstacle, which is a ditch; and Glenside fell at the same time. Rory O'Moore and Great Cross came to grief at the fourth; Gold Seal at the fifth (or the fence before Becher's Brook); Fetlar's Pride, Sans Peur and Covert Coat paid the penalty at the eighth fence (a ditch at the Canal turn), as did Bridge IV., who was brought down by the loose Rory O'Moore. Foolhardy fell at the thirteenth fence, going into the country a second time; Whitelegs II. came down at the first jump, or the seventeenth from the start, but was remounted, and, after again falling at the last, completed the course; Precentor II. came down at the nineteenth fence; Regent fell at Becher's Brook (or the twenty-second fence in the race); Jenkinstown lamed himself at the succeeding fence and was pulled up; Ballyhackle fell at the twenty-fourth fence (or Canal turn ditch) Kilkeel came down at Valentine's (or the twenty-fifth fence in the race); and Cauheen at the twenty-seventh (or the fourth from the finish).

The smart contingent of German officers expected to arrive at Olympia in June next will not have the walk-over at the military display which was the lot of their predecessors at last year's International Horse Show. The directors had insufficient time last year to make the military displays an unqualified success; this year, says the Standard, it is to be one of the principal features of the show, and a considerable amount of opposition will be offered to the German contingent. It has been decided that there must be not fewer than six or more than ten riders in each team. Fifteen minutes in the ring will be allowed to each team. The points which the Judges will take into consideration are :—

The general character of the display ; the type of horses, manners, equipment, bearing of riders, etc.

The way in which the various movements are executed.

The difficulty of the performance and the relative skill shown.

No allowance is to be made for freak movements, such as the Spanish walk, galloping on three legs, galloping backwards and so on. The only paces to be recognised are the walk, trot and canter. It is hoped that the United States, France, Belgium, Russia, Austria and England will be represented in the competition. When the judges decide who are the smartest officers in the world, their judgment will prove of unusual international interest.

Policemen are not accustomed to public applause of themselves, but a rare opportunity will be given to mounted constables at this year's show. Mr. Walter Winans, who will again exhibit this year, has offered five prizes for the smartest mounted officers who appear in the ring. The prizes range in value from £20 to £5.

The prize schedule will not be completed until the beginning of April, but the directors have decided that £13,500—£10,000 in hard cash and the balance in gold and silver challenge cups—is to be distributed. Among the cups are the King George V. Gold Cup offered for the best jumping by an officer of any nation. Russia gained the cup last year through the clever exhibition given by Captain Dimitri d'Eve. The King Edward VII. Gold Cup, for the best jumping among teams of army officers of all nations—gained last year by France—has yet to be finally won.

As course jumping is always the most popular of the events at the International Show something like half the prize money is to be awarded for various phases of this exercise. Nevertheless, the general utility horse is to be encouraged as well as the officer's charger and the beautifully developed hack and harness horse. Therefore, the prize attractions for traders' turnouts, fire brigades, mounted police, costers' donkeys and ponies have been much strengthened.

As many of our readers may be in London on the 21st June 1912, they will probably be very glad to make a note that this is the date fixed for the Tenth Annual Calcutta Dinner, which is to be held at the Hotel Cecil, London. All are cordially invited to attend. Tickets can be obtained from the Honorary Treasurer, Mr. E. C. Russell, a partner in the well-known firm of Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co. Mr. Russell's address is 2, Queenthorpe Road, Sydenham, London, S. E.

GEORGES CARPENTIER, the French boxing champion, has won yet another important contest. On the 3rd instant in Paris he met George Gunther, the coloured Australian middle-weight, who has an excellent record, including a decision over Harry Lewis, and who has long been spoiling for a match with Carpentier. The match went the full twenty rounds and the Frenchman got the verdict on points. He boxed with that prudence and knowledge for which he is famous. Although he was the recipient of innumerable hard right-handers and upper-cuts, and he betrayed the marks of some of these early on, Gunther was never in real danger, and he still retains his reputation for always holding out till the end. He led off oftener and was fiercely aggressive right up to the close. But Carpentier keeping a useful length always, contrived to evade his opponent's ugly swings and rushes. He was more skilful and a fine feature of his work was his stalling with the gloves. Except during the eighth round, when Gunther made good use of a straight left and planted the right once hard on the chin, Carpentier held the winning hand from start to finish.

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, the great Belgian thinker and poet, is the latest convert to the "noble art" of boxing. After reading all that French writers have been saying of late in defence of the sport and personally witnessing Carpentier's feats in the ring, he has become an enthusiastic party to the continental movement in favour of boxing, is taking lessons from a professional, and is having a kind of ring installed in his villa for his private use. This was all the more unexpected as Maeterlinck, nearly ten years ago, published a "Eulogy of the Sword," wherein he proclaimed the vast superiority of the delicate and graceful French art of fencing over boxing, of which he said: "It only brings blind brute force into play, by means of vulgar gestures and often with repulsive effects." He now frankly acknowledges there is no more efficient and healthier muscular exercise than punching and none which requires at once more suppleness, promptness of action, and genuine pluck. He is preparing an essay on the subject which will probably under his wonderful pen, vie with the most brilliant passages of Lord Byron's memorial describing the struggles of the athletes.

THE First Chamber of the French Civil Tribunal has condemned Sam MacVea by default to pay 10,000f. damages to M. B. Breyer, the manager, with whom he signed a contract undertaking to meet Sam Langford between June and December 1911. MacVea did not keep his engagement, and left for Australia. The Tribunal annulled the contract, and further ordered Mr. McIntosh, with whom MacVea had taken a second engagement, to pay M. Breyer 5,000f. damages.

THE Finney Hockey Cup tournament at Rawalpindi was concluded on the 18th instant. Nineteen teams took part this year and in the final "A" Squadron, 10th Royal Hussars, beat "C" Company, King's Royal Rifles, by a goal to nil.

IT is stated that Patiala will enter two teams for the Beresford Polo tournament at Simla this year. The Maharajah will be in the station and will play for his team.

The International Marathon Association of Germany, recognising the popularity on the Continent of long tramps, have arranged a Marathon race for the 25th May, which will be decided on one of the racecourses close to Berlin. The champion long-distance runners will take part in what promises to be the greatest struggle ever decided and the entries have been received of Dorando, Hayes, Henri St. Yves, Siret, Thure, Johans and Gusta Inngstrom, while Tom Longboat and other prominent athletes from the States are expected to compete. Over £1,000 in prize money is offered and the race bids fair to be the attraction of the season.

Mr. E. M. Baerlein, amateur rackets champion from 1908 to 1911, was unable to defend his title in London this year; consequently the final of the challengers' competition became the championship match, the two survivors being Mr. Basil S. Foster and Mr. G. G. Kershaw. Foster won by three games to one, but Kershaw put up a good show and had not the best of luck. The scores were 12—15, 17—14, 15—8, 15—1 (59 aces to 38) in favour of Foster, who thus once again renews the association of the name of Foster with the singles championship. Harry K. Foster, it will be remembered, was champion during seven successive years, from 1894 to 1900, and once again four years later.

It is reported that Captain Hans Schomburgk, the well-known German big-game hunter, who is at present in the interior of Liberia, has captured a pigmy hippopotamus, of which only three stuffed specimens are believed to exist in the world. Captain Schomburgk has also shot a pigmy hippopotamus of the same kind. He has further discovered a dwarf elephant, which, when fully grown, is no larger than a cow.

Mr. Thompson Seton gave another lecture recently on "Animals and Human Parallels." He said that when Darwin proved that animals and human beings were related, he gave a great impetus to the study of animals. Badgers and wolves, when their appetites were satisfied, gave themselves up to amusements and various games. The former frequently indulged in a game similar to "King of the Castle." One game-keeper told Mr. Thompson Seton how badgers used to gather every night round an old tree stump, and when one mounted to the top, the others would snap at his tail or hind legs and pull him down. Then another would mount in his place, and the game would be played for a long time without any ill-feeling. In Saskatchewan the prairie grouse organised a spring-time dance, when some 20 birds would select some small mound and indulge in wild antics, accompanied by vocal exercises. Both animals and birds liked the sound of a drum, and Mr. Seton described how some birds reared by him liked to hear the sound of their pattering feet on a tin tray. Animals, he said, had simple signs and howls to express their feelings, and the grey wolf has the most expressive of all. He has a howl for mustering the pack, one when in full cry, and one when closing in on the quarry. "There goes another of our cattle," say the cowboys when they hear the last one on cold nights.

London Week by Week.

The weather prophets say we shall have a fine, bright, clear, though perhaps, cold Easter. P'raps; p'raps not. I've just eaten my first hot cross bun in a thick yellow fog—so much for a "bright and clear" beginning anyhow: as for the "cold" that's quite all right I can assure you. This Easter will, doubtless, long be remembered for the adverse influence of the coal strike on the national habit of travelling at times of public holiday. While it must be admitted that there is a considerable degree of dislocation and a proportionate amount of discomfort and annoyance, it really isn't nearly as bad as those inveterate scaremongers the ha'penny press try to make out. Except on three of the great railways running out of London there will be no cheap Bank Holiday tickets. In many cases the train service is much below the ordinary holiday standard. But although many trains have been cut out no seaside resort has been cut off, and every Londoner who has the means and the desire can answer the "call of the sea" at whatever point of the coast attracts him most. As to the Cheap Excursionist does it much matter after all whether he or she gets "Aht and abaht"? The males usually end up drunk, the females often drunk too and always tired and unamiable, and the children a burden to themselves and the victims of more parental cruelty and brutal bullying than many good folk imagine.

The 'Varsity Boat Race has provided much amusement, disappointment and discussion, though in the end the result panned out as expected, Oxford winning just as they liked and with supreme ease. Also Bourne made a record, having stroked four successive crews to victory. It is true that never before have both boats foundered in an attempt to row the race. Never before have one crew steered into the shore and, after emptying their boat, gone out once more and rowed over the course as Oxford did. But it also probably true that never before was the race rowed against such almost impossible conditions of wind and water. It ought not to have been rowed on Saturday, that's all about it; it was evens on disaster from the start. But in such circumstances, Mr. Pitman, the umpire, was, perhaps, wise to order the race to be rowed again though his decision was clearly not the only one conceivable and it has been much canvassed. But the conditions were so strange and raised so many difficult questions that the most sportsmanlike plan was to direct the two crews to meet a second time, when an issue which no one can dispute or challenge should be reached.

At first sight it might appear that Oxford could legitimately claim the race, as it is certain that Cambridge could not. After all, the Oxford crew proceeded by the river from Putney to Mortlake, and it might be contended that such an incident as their landing for some two or three minutes to clear their boat of water no more disqualified them than does the remounting of a jockey in the Grand National after a fall. Cambridge had given up the race, and were so evidently outrowed from the start that what Oxford did was of little importance to them. It is, however, suggested that the real reason for the verdict of "no race" was that the Oxford crew were assisted by the crowd on the bank in landing and emptying their boat, and that this unwelcome and uninvited intervention prevented them from scoring a win. But whatever it was, they made no mistake on Monday, and Oxford brought off the foregone conclusion easily enough and left the experts, the aquatic scribes, and the towpath critics to wrangle out the ethics of it.

Let us leave the water and consider for a moment the air and the airmen and airwomen. The first lady to achieve the distinction of a cross-Channel flight is known privately, as she will henceforth be known to fame, as Miss Trehawk Davies. Her distinction provides a ready and complete answer to Shakespeare's inquiry: "What's in a name?" If Miss Davies had been christened "Mary Ann" or "Eliza" we do not believe she would have ever accomplished a Channel flight by aeroplane—nor even by balloon. But Trehawk is a name to encourage ambition and achieve success. It is, moreover, a name to fly with, just as "Polly" is the name to associate with the domestic virtues and the comfortable idea of a cosy tea-party. Names have a big influence upon the lives of those who bear them. Does anybody, for instance, believe George Washington would have been unable to tell a lie if his name had been Hiram Harris or Silas Smith?

"Woman," in such "hours of ease" as her suffragette gang permits us to enjoy, has been a good deal in the thoughts of many lately. A well-known publicist, who is on the side of the "weaker wessel," is responsible for an article which inquires whether women are fit to live and whether they ought to be abolished. He has been tempted to write it by taking seriously the animadversions of Sir Almroth Wright, who declared that the gentler sex was both unsound and insane, forgetting, of course, that the said Sir Almroth, habitually holds peculiar views, and especially is unorthodox on the doctrine that cleanliness is next to godliness.

The question whether women ought to be abolished is one for woman to answer for herself. If she continues to cultivate the unhappy idiosyncrasies which have recently distinguished her, she will end by abolishing herself. Were it not that some of us are lucky enough to still possess dear old-fashioned mothers, we might believe the gentler sex had already accomplished self-effacement. Woman, however, has a future both as woman and as a political entity. Her influence as the latter depends upon her retention of the characteristics of the former. The harder she sticks to being a woman and "only a woman," the quicker will she gain political equality with man.

A schoolboy, sixteen years of age, is credited with having discovered a first folio edition of Shakespeare. He is the son of a baronet, which may account for his precocity and also for his carelessness. He was delving about in the library of Earl Dudley, at Witley Court, when he came across what he believed to be a first folio of the works of the immortal bard. It had been rebound, and one or two pages were missing, and it was therefore at first thought that there was nothing in the discovery. The boy,

THE much discussed "Jena" symphony, ascribed to Beethoven, was given for the first time in England at the New Symphony Orchestra's concert at Queen's Hall last Saturday afternoon. Queen Alexandra and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress were among the audience. The unearthing of a play by Shakespeare or a picture by Titian could not have created more excitement in musical circles than the announcement, some seasons ago, that an unknown symphony by Beethoven had been discovered in the library of the Academy at Jena.

A perfect hurricane of protest and doubt swept the musical world. Who dared to presume to add another symphony to the "Immortal Nine"? The man who dared was Professor Friz Stein, of the Jena University, who constructed the full score from the dusty sheets of the orchestral parts, which were, however, not in Beethoven's hand-writing. Small wonder that Mr. Landon Ronald's introduction of the work to London on Saturday drew a large crowd of music-lovers, bubbling over with expectancy, to Queen's Hall.

It must be confessed that to the Beethoven claimants, the opening phrase was a little disappointing. The unbelievers smiled triumphantly, and murmured "Haydn!" But the voice of Beethoven could not be stifled ; though it was but the still small voice of uncertain youth, the speech could not be mistaken. There are phrases in the first movement which Mozart might have written, and Haydn might have conceived, but there were others of which neither could have been the author. No one but Beethoven could have written that graceful Adagio, feeble as it is in comparison with the great slow movements of his later works, and none other could have designed that beautifully effective "chorale" in the final Allegro. The "Minuetto" is trivial and far inferior to anything Mozart has done in the same line, but even here the coming of the "Moonlight" Sonata or the "Eroica" Symphony was foreshadowed.

In spite of these indications of the great master's hand, many listeners were far from convinced of the symphony's authenticity, and arguments ran high in the vestibule during the interval. There is no doubt that the "Jena" Symphony will provide one of the greatest musical controversies of the present day, and every music-lover will make it his or her duty to go and form their own, or support somebody else's, opinion on the work.

MISS GEORGINA BOWERS (Mrs. Edwards), who was the first woman to contribute sketches to Punch, has died at King's Langley. She was by far the most important lady artist who ever worked for Punch—there have only been about half a dozen in all—and was regarded as a facile designer with great ability.

It is not usual to find a woman who is a professional humorist, but Miss Bowers was a humorist with a very clean and happy notion as to what fun should be, and how it should be transferred to a picture. All the jokes and incidents which she depicted so cleverly were mostly the result of her observations in the hunting field. She hunted regularly in Hertfordshire, and so had a great opportunity for acquiring sporting studies. In fact, her hunting sketches became quite celebrated in the seventies, and were unsurpassed at the time. Besides hunting, she devoted her skill to flirting subjects, and these, too, were exceptionally witty. She began her career in 1866. John Leach gave her a start, and Mark Lemon encouraged her. For ten years she contributed regularly to the paper, but on the death of Shirley Brooks she ceased her connection.

EDWARD TERRY, the veteran actor, died on Monday at Barnes, aged sixty-eight. Born in 1844, he was 19 years old when he made his first appearance on the stage (the "fit-up" stage, which means the stage of town halls, institutes, and so forth) at Christchurch, Hants, at a salary of 15s. a week—not paid. At Woolwich a little later he played 18 parts a week, wrote and sang four songs, and wrote songs for the pantomime—all for 18s. a week. From Woolwich he went to Douglas, Isle of Man, where, in 1865, he was in the same company as Henry Irving.

Manchester seems to have been the first to do him justice ; and after Manchester London claimed him. He joined Shepherd and Creswick at the Surrey in 1867, went thence to the Vokes Family, and in 1868 was engaged by Mrs. Swanborough for the Strand. The Strand Theatre, now demolished, was then still the house of burlesque, though its most famous cast, Miss Marie Wilton, Clarke, Rogers, Patty Oliver, and others, had left it ; and for seven years Mr. Terry took the leading parts. Thence he went to the Gaiety under John Hollingshead, the "old" Gaiety of the "old" burlesque. The mainstay of the theatre was its great quartet—Terry, Royce, Nellie Farren, and Kate Vaughan ; and here Mr. Terry stayed for six years before he practically gave up burlesque for comedy. In 1887 he opened his own new theatre in the Strand with The Churchwarden. It is long since the founder of Terry's Theatre has appeared on its stage. The place was recently turned into a cinematograph hall ; but in its time it was, thanks to its proprietor's humour, the most amusing theatre in London. Here he produced and played in The Women-Hater, Sweet Lavender, The Magistrate, and many other plays ; and it was London's loss when his absences on tour over the world or on other work at home grew more and more frequent.

His interests and activities outside the theatre were many. He was a great traveller, and had seen most of the globe ; a great Freemason, and founded the Edward Terry Lodge, and was Past Grand Treasurer of English Masons. He lectured on "Stage and Church" to the Church Congress of 1889, was a magistrate for the county of Surrey, served on the councils of several hospitals, and had been Master of the Turner's Company.

One best remembers Edward Terry through the ear. His was not a singing voice. Songs, to be sure, were delivered by him in the old Gaiety days. "She grows more like her Pa every day" in The Bohemian Gyurl, and the Showman's Song in Little Dr. Faust are imperishable memories with playgoers who were young in those days ; but they can hardly be said to have been sung. Nor was it exactly a speaking voice. Rather it was a squeaking voice, with the shrill staccato notes of a piccolo, which would suddenly run down through a whole gamut of strange sounds into the deep grunt of the bassoon. Anyhow, it was a voice that always set the playgoer laughing and that, after the old Gaiety days, filled Terry's Theatre for several years. How many nights it was heard there from Dick Phenyl in Sweet Laven- der! The part was perhaps Mr. Terry's happiest effort; but he was heard as the hero of at least two other plays by (the then) Mr. Pinero, The Times and In Chancery. These works are forgotten now, but Edward Terry's voice is not forgotten, nor his "dry" humour, his grotesque expostulations with all and sundry, his air of amiable eccentricity and whimsical extravagance. As years wore on the "animated clarinet" sounded a less frequent note. For Mr. Terry was one of those good actors who make it their business to be also good citizens. He was an active man in his parish of Barnes; active, too, and zealous in the cause of theatrical charity. A year or two ago he sang once more (in the sense already intimated) in Pinkie and the Fairies at His Majesty's; and the same theatre saw his last appearance of note, as Crabtree in The School for Scandal. He had been in his time, the late Victorian time, a valuable and lovable contributor to the public stock of harmless pleasure.

THE VAGRANT.

Shikar.

MY FIRST TIGER.

WE had finished a most enjoyable ten days' shoot in the Motipur Block of the Bahraich forests, our headquarters being the comfortable bungalow at Nishangara, a convenient centre for shooting round Murthia and within easy distance of Antapari swamp, a favourite resort of tiger in the hot weather. The long strip of jungle called Bhainsa Lot (the buffaloes' wallow) had yielded even better sport than usual, since in one beat a leopard and a bear were bagged, and in a second—worked from the opposite end of the strip—a tiger was rolled over. Curiously enough, both Spots and Stripes fell to the same gun, its owner a subaltern of the South Staffords. He offered to change machans after shooting the leopard, but—trusting to the doctrine of chances—his proposal was not accepted, and his generosity met with due reward, the tiger coming out in front of his coign of vantage, instead of along a narrow nullah, the usual route taken by those animals when a beat was in progress.

The party had returned to Bahraich, while I left them at Motipur, having to visit the scene of a dacoity which had occurred between that place and Nepalgunge. This necessitated my proceeding to Chakia, a forest bungalow about midway and from which the village where the dacoity had occurred was fourteen miles. Towards the end of April it was much too hot for tents, so I intended to halt at Chakia and go across to the said village on an elephant: two of those useful beasts being always with me on tour. On the way to Chakia, I beat the Bada Nala, a famed place for leopard. This was a quite narrow bit of jungle with a sluggish stream running down the centre and with only one tree suitable for holding a machan. From that tree no less than a dozen leopard had been shot by various sportsmen and I was lucky enough to bag the thirteenth. Elated by my success, I resolved to have a try for a tiger said to be lying up in the Man Nala, a bit of dense jungle within a mile of Chakia Bungalow. After a day spent in enquiring about the dacoity, I ordered a buffalo to be tied up in the nala, and the shikari brought word early the following morning of the "kill." As the Man Nala is a puzzling piece of country, three beats—all of short duration—were pronounced necessary by old Meerai, who knew every inch of the jungle and as a shikari for big game has not many superiors.

Going out about 7 A.M., I made my way to where the first machan was placed and watched the first beat. There were three elephants and about twenty villagers engaged in the task of rousing the tiger from his lair, but despite a steady advance in line and much shouting on the part of the beaters, this initial attempt brought nothing to view except a few peacocks and jungle fowls. A similar result came from beat number two, and I began to despair of getting even a sight of the tiger. In fact, waxed incredulous as to its presence in the nala and fancied it must have trekked off into the big forest lying half a mile distant from the scene of my operations. There is, however, luck in odd numbers, so I agreed to try the third beat, one which appeared less hopeful than the preceding "hauks," because it consisted of a tract of more open jungle and finished up at the edge of the Man Nala.

I never care for a high machan, preferring to obtain the advantage of a lower trajectory, and chance an animal "spotting" you and charging. The charpoy was fastened in a tree overhanging the dry bed of the nala, with a clear view of nearly forty yards to the front and also along the nala to the left for a short distance. It must have been eleven o'clock by this time and thoughts of a bath and breakfast were fast decreasing my interest in what I felt certain would be labour thrown away. Che sara, sara, so I got into position and sat patiently, awaiting the advent of the beaters, whose shouts one heard faintly in the distance. The heat was not excessive, but small flies, that persisted in swarming round my head, getting into my eyes, and generally behaving as did their ancestors to Pharaoh and the Egyptians, were a terrible nuisance. I usually wear a piece of green veiling when out in the forest, but had forgotten to bring it with me on this occasion.

Nearer and nearer came the sound of the beat, yet no sign of animal life—much less of a tiger—made its appearance. At last the men got quite close to the nala and

I could see some of them descending into it from the higher ground. I was on the point of unloading, and shouting for a pad elephant to be brought up, when a gentle noise—a soft patter, patter on leaves—attracted my attention and looking to the left what was my delight on beholding a fine tiger slowly trot out of the undergrowth. It paused a second or two, probably to ascertain the position of the beaters, some of whom were coming up the nala, and by so doing, gave me a splendid shot. The distance was about thirty yards and with a ·303 one could hardly miss. The bullet caught Stripes clean between the eyes and the tiger sank slowly to the ground, gave a convulsive kick of one of its hind legs, and lay motionless, dead as the proverbial door nail. Needless to relate, heat, flies, and breakfast were forgotten in the delight of having bagged my first tiger. The animal proved to be a tigress, but measured well and had a fine coat. Meerai was equally pleased and we soon had the beast "padded" and started back in triumph to Chakia.

This experience shows how large a share is played by the factor of luck in sport of this sort. The first two beats were over jungle where one might reasonably have expected to find a tiger lying up, yet were barren of results, while in the least likely beat the animal came out. I fancy the tigress must have been on the move early in the proceedings and was gradually driven towards the edge of the Man Nala, keeping hidden from the beaters all the time. I have said it was my first tiger, another instance of the Fortune prevailing in shikar, for I had then been a year in Bahraich and witnessed the death of several of those animals without having an opportunity of drawing a bead on one myself. Of course, when you have friends at a shoot, ordinary courtesy leads to their being given the best machans, so I felt all the more jubilant at having bagged the big cat all by "my lonesome." The skinning process over, I soon returned to Bahraich, happy at having at last broken my long spell of bad luck; a leopard and a tiger in three days being good enough to satisfy most sportsmen who value the excitement and working of big game shooting more than the actual number of animals slain.

Fishing.

FLIES vs. WORMS.

WOULD you rather catch trout with artificial flies or on worms?

Early in the season, tradition says, the speckled fellows rise little to the fly, for they have learned that natural flies are not hatched in freezing weather. Then the "bait plunker" has the best of the fly-tosser, and snags out the medium-sized and little trout. Later the fly-caster lures and creels larger trout and more weight than the man who fishes exclusively with worms. In this connection the narrative of an experienced angler may interest our readers.

"The local angler in the trouting regions of northern Pennsylvania, or of any other backwoods trouting region, for that matter," said a New York lover of the rod and line, is "always ready for action as soon as the law allows fishing. It wasn't so long that he used the worm invariably in his early fishing, not because he could not use the fly dexterously, but because from time out of mind he had stubbornly clung to the belief that trout would not rise for the fly so long as there was snow water in the streams or until the natural insects had appeared. I am sorry that my foolish eagerness to have some trouting one season while the conditions were all against good sport destroyed the belief in that tradition—at least in one favourite fishing district.

"The stream was in northern Pennsylvania. The time was the middle of May, but the snow was still deep in many places along the creek, and a cold north-east rainstorm was prevailing. That mountain region is liable to have winter lingering with it so late that visiting sportsmen do not often risk the discomforts of it, and so as a rule do not seek the streams before May, although the season opens in April—the first day of April at the time I speak of. For this reason the streams have been left to the local angler, with his pole and worm for weeks at a time some years, and up to this visit of mine he had never seen anything to alter his belief that trout would not jump at a fly under the conditions of water and weather mentioned.

"That year the season had been very backward, and when I asked for a guide to go with me that discouraging morning the landlord at the little backwoods tavern looked at me as if he thought I was crazy. He said that no one had been able to get a single fishworm yet. I replied that I didn't care for the worms, as I fished with a fly. That made him smile.

"'Why, don't you know that trout won't jump at a fly yit?' said he. 'Flies hain't come on to the creeks yit, it's been so uncommon late a season. You got to have worms.'

"I said I guessed I could manage with a fly if he'd got someone to go along with me to the creek. It was worth travelling all the way up there from town, even to hit such weather as I had, to see the tickled expression on that landlord's face as he chuckled over having such a greenhorn to cater to, but he got me a native to act as my guide. The native himself was staggered when he found that I was going out on such a day.

"When we got to the creek I wasn't sure, but the guide was going to have fun with me after all. The creek was in good condition as to quantity of water, but my heart sank within me when I saw the snow and ice. The most enthusiastic and misguided of anglers never yet saw much promise of an enjoyable day's sport while tying on his flies shoe-deep in snow and gazing on a stream fringed with ice, particularly if one of the coldest and most disagreeable of rains were pelting down upon him. The native was willing to forego the fun he expected to have with me, for he tried to induce me to go back to the tavern right away, but I had travelled more than one hundred and ninety-nine miles to enjoy some May trouting, and I was bound to have it.

"Much to the guide's amazement, a trout took my fly at the first cast, and trout kept on taking them until I had landed more than two dozen in a stretch of stream half a mile long. But it was like catching suckers. They took the fly with much animation, but made so little fight after being hooked that if it hadn't been for the weight of the fish on the line I wouldn't have known I had one on the hook. So I quit in disgust.

"When we got back to the tavern we found several natives there. They had evidently got word of my crazy idea of catching trout with a fly before it was time for it, according to all backwoods tradition, and were there to enjoy my discomfiture when I returned. They were taken aback when they saw my trout and never would have believed that I took them on a fly but for the corroborative testimony of their fellow woodsman, my guide.

"But ever since then I have been willing to give over all the pleasures of early trouting in such a region as that to any who may want them. I have learned, though, that the idea that trout will not jump at a fly while snow water is running no longer prevailed among the native fishermen up there and they no longer wait until the ground is so they can dig worms before they go out to fish. It is too bad that pet belief is destroyed."

The experience of this angler was unique. It is true, as he states, that some trout will rise to the fly when snow water is running in the streams, but they exhibit little game qualities at that time, and heavier creels of larger fishes are taken later, affording the flycaster much better sport under more agreeable conditions.—American Field.

THE SURVEY OF INDIAN MAMMALS.

Sir,—The following letter appears in The Field of 23rd March 1912. My attention has been called, by cable from Bombay, to a paragraph in your issue of 10th February, headed "Survey of Indian Mammals," which may seriously affect the prospects of what I venture to assert, is a very meritorious undertaking. I trust you will allow me space for a few remarks on the subject.

The primary aim of the Bombay Natural History Society, of which I am a life member and by whom I have been entrusted with the working out of the collections made, is to carry out for India on a limited scale what has been so completely done for North America by the Biological Survey of the U. S. Government Department of Agriculture.

With this object, rather more than a year ago a special Mammal Survey Fund was opened for subscriptions, and in March last a collector was engaged and commenced work in Khandesh and the Berars. The October issue of the Society's journal included a short note, based on the collector's diary, intended to give members an idea of the work being done and the financial progress of the fund. The fact that the specimens collected had been despatched to England and were still under examination was distinctly stated. This is surely a flimsy basis for the sweeping statement, "So far, therefore, as the survey has hitherto extended, it tends to show that India has been thoroughly well worked in respect of its mammalian fauna; most of this work, it should be remembered, having been accomplished by amateurs."

Such names as Hodgson in Nepal, Hutton on the N.-W. Frontier, Boys in Rajputana, Sykes in the Deccan and Jerdon in Madras testify to the fine work done by amateurs in the first half of last century; but what about more recent years?

The representation of the Indian fauna in the study collections of the Natural History Museum is markedly inferior to that of almost any other part of the world. The types of many species, established on the collections made by these early workers, are for one reason or another useless for modern requirements, and need to be replaced by better specimens. A generous donation of specimens, actual and promised, to the national collection by the Bombay Natural History Society is already to some extent removing this reproach and supplying this need.

It is obviously unfair to pronounce judgment as to the success or failure of the Society's venture on the first batch of 150 specimens, even before these have been worked out. This small collection has sufficed to upset the universally held theory that two species of hare inhabit the plains of India. Further collections, aggregating some 1,200 specimens more, which have now reached England, and have enabled me to separate the Rajputana porcupine from H. leucura, which alone was supposed to be found in the plains of India, and to describe several most interesting new species (and even one new genus) of mice, bats, etc. Surely this is not a bad record for six months' work of the mammal survey, especially in a fauna so poor in species as that of India, and hardly seems to show that the mammalian fauna has been thoroughly worked.

In conclusion, with your permission, I would plead for more subscriptions to the Mammal Survey Fund of the Bombay Natural History Society. The original amount asked for was Rs. 30,000 (£2,000), estimated to keep two collectors at work for two years. Experience has already shown that both time and money were underestimated, especially if, as it is hoped, the survey be extended to Burma, in order to link up with the Duke of Bedford's collection in Western Asia and those of the Malay States Museums under Mr. H. C. Robinson.

I am fairly often to be found during the week at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, and shall be delighted to give anyone interested all information, and to show them the collections made.

R. C. Wroughton,
Indian Forest Service (retired).

In a footnote the Editor of the Field says:—The interpretation which has been placed on the paragraph referred to was in no wise the meaning intended to be conveyed by the writer, who is quite assured that valuable information with regard to the distribution of Indian mammals will result from the systematic survey of the country now being undertaken under the auspices of the Bombay Natural History Society.

THE MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LD.

Proceedings at the Nineteenth Annual General Meeting of the shareholders of this Bank, held at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, London, E.C., on Tuesday, the 2nd day of April 1912. R. J. Black, Esq., the Chairman, presiding.

The Chairman: I will ask the General Manager to read the notice convening the meeting.

The Chief Manager (Mr. James Campbell) read the notice and also the report of the Auditors.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, I have to express the regret of my colleague, Mr. Ryrie, at being unable to be present at to-day's Meeting, owing to a short absence in India on business. With your permission, I will, as usual, take the report and accounts as read, and before putting the resolution to the meeting for the adoption of same, I have a few remarks to make. Last year, though a very prosperous one for a India as a whole, was but a normal one for banking, in so far as profits were concerned. The bank rate in India on the average was much about the same as the previous year, but there was a long period of extreme ease when the employment of money except at very bare margins, was difficult, and this naturally had its effect on all banking operations. Added to this the revolution in China, as could only be expected, very much restricted business; in fact, for some months trade was practically at a standstill. The outlook at the moment is improving, though slowly, and in time, if the newly-created Republic is allowed to peacefully carry out its reforms and a stable and reliable Government is established, cannot but have beneficial effects on the country as a whole, and on the expansion of its trade. Surveying, therefore, the situation generally from an Eastern Bank's point of view, I look upon 1911 as a moderate year. It opened with distinct promise, but in the second half of the year the incidents I have just mentioned checked the prosperity of the year as a whole. Taking everything into consideration, however, I do not think we have very much to complain of the results as shown in the accounts now before you. The net profit is £84,992 12s. 5d., which maintains its steady upward course, and, in fact, is the largest we have ever shown. As usual the Reserve Fund has received our first attention, as it must for still some little time to come; and by again adding £40,000 to it we have raised it to £365,000. After making the usual contributions to the Officers' Pension Fund and providing for a further and final dividend on the 'A" and "B" Shares of 3½ per cent. for the half-year, we carry forward to 1912 £29,139 17s. 1d. I do not think there is anything in the accounts which calls for further comment or explanation from me. They maintain their progressive characteristic which has now for a good many years been so noticeable, and I think, gratifying to us all. Should you, however, desire to ask any questions I shall be glad to give you such information as is within my power. I now propose—"That the report of the Directors, with the audited statement of accounts and balance sheet at 31st December, 1911, presented to this meeting, be and the same are hereby received, approved and adopted; and that a dividend on the 'A' and 'B' Shares of this Bank at the rate of 3½ per cent., free of income tax, for the six months ending 31st December, 1911 (making 7 per cent. for the year) as recommended in the report, be and the same is hereby confirmed." I will ask Mr. Maitland to second that proposal. (Applause.)

Mr. J. A. Maitland: I second that resolution with much pleasure.

Mr. W. H. Phillips: You said, sir, that the reserve must be the first consideration. I do not know whether you give too much consideration to the reserve and not quite enough to the Shareholders. If you lay that down as an axiom you may be quite justified in so doing, but I venture to think that sometimes Directors do not make the Shareholders their first consideration. That seems to me to be the object of all these things. The Shareholders, of course, are most interested in the Bank, and it seems to me that the Directors should first of all consider the general interests of the Shareholders. You will remember, I daresay, that the payment now mentioned only represents a very moderate return on the price that some of us have paid for our shares. Therefore, I think there should be at least a little consideration given from that point of view, and not the whole of the consideration given to the Reserve Fund. Then I notice guaranteed railway and other securities. I presume that is the investment of the Reserve Fund. Can you give us any information as to what those securities are, or as to their nature? Then there is another question which I wish to ask merely for information. Of course, usually these companies have one firm of Auditors. Why do we have two firms of Auditors to audit our accounts?

Mr. Reginald Murray: I should like to slightly disagree with the remarks of the last speaker, because I am of opinion that when the Directors add to the Reserve Fund they are considering the interest of the Shareholders and the interest of the Bank generally in the best possible way.

The Chairman: The gentleman who has just spoken has really taken the words out of my mouth. I cannot help expressing the view that in adopting the course we have the Shareholders are receiving the very best consideration we could possibly give them, and I would only draw your attention to the fact, sir, that whereas our shares were, I think I am right in saying, within the last eight years under £8, to-day they are about £19—a fact which I think is due to our having in a great measure such a substantial Reserve Fund. But your remarks will not be lost sight of. Whenever we are able to increase our dividend we shall do so, but I think we must adhere to our policy of strengthening our Reserve Fund.

Mr. Phillips: I think it is strengthened already. It is a very strong reserve.

The Chairman: It is strong, and it is getting stronger every year, but I do not think it is strong enough compared with that of kindred institutions. You must remember that we compete with other banks which have much stronger reserves than we have, and I think it is to the interest of the Shareholders to support the Directors in their present policy. (Applause.) What was the other matter you called my attention to, sir?

Mr. Phillips: The other securities. What is the nature of the other securities? I suppose they are of a very moderate amount?

The Chairman: A very moderate amount; but I would mention two to give you an idea of what they are. The Calcutta and Bombay Port Trust Bonds in India, which are a satisfactory security.

Mr. Phillips: A comparatively small amount.

The Chairman: Yes; were there any other questions?

Mr. Phillips: I asked why we have two firms of Auditors.

The Chairman: I think that is the usual custom; most if not all banks have two firms of Auditors. I know the Indian banks have two.

Mr. Reginald Murray: Might I suggest that, as the securities have been referred to, you might state that they stand at current market prices, so as to show that the value is represented?

The Chairman: The securities on 31st December stood in our books at the current rate of that day, and had been written down to that point. If there are no other questions, gentlemen, I will put my resolution to the meeting.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

The Chairman: I have now to propose—"That Mr. J. A. Maitland and Mr. H. Melvill Simons, the Directors retiring from the Board in rotation, be and they are hereby re-elected Directors of this Bank."

Sir David Yule: I have much pleasure in seconding that resolution.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

The Chairman: The next proposal comes from your side, I think.

Sir George Sheppard Murray: I beg to propose, sir—"That Messrs. Cooper Brothers and Co. and Messrs. W. A. Browne and Co. be re-appointed Auditors of the Bank, and that their remuneration be 150 guineas each for each audit."

Mr. C. S. Melchers: It gives me much pleasure to second that resolution.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. F. MacGauran: Gentlemen, I beg to propose a vote of thanks to the Chairman, Directors, Chief Manager and Officers of the Bank for their excellent conduct of the Bank during the past year. I think the document I hold in my hand is of such an eloquent nature as not to require any remarks on my part. I see that £40,000 has been added to the Reserve Fund, and I should like to identify myself with what one gentleman has said. It is very necessary and naturally desirable to build up a big Reserve Fund. That is done in connection with all companies which are at all flourishing, and more especially in connection with banks, where, as we know, there is always an uncalled liability. Therefore, so far as I am concerned I thoroughly endorse the action taken by the Bank, and I hope the Directors will continue to increase that reserve until such time as they consider it sufficiently large. The Chairman has referred to troubles in China. I have no doubt that that has been a source of great anxiety to the Directors and to the staff generally. I had a letter last week from a friend in Java, and he was telling me that they had to arm their cashiers with revolvers to protect them from such attacks as we have heard have been going on in France lately. Therefore, I feel that the staff are thoroughly entitled to a vote of thanks, more especially the Chief Manager and the staff in London, because their anxieties, whatever the local anxieties may have been, must have been intensified by the action which the executive in London must have had to take on special occasions. Gentlemen without any further remarks I beg to propose the resolution that I have mentioned.

Mr. J. Macandrew: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have much pleasure in seconding the resolution proposing a hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman, Directors and the staff of this Bank for the able manner in which they have conducted its affairs during the past year. I should like to take this opportunity of associating myself likewise with the remarks of both the gentleman on my right and the gentleman on my left with regard to the policy of building up a big reserve. I think it is absolutely necessary as well as desirable for the credit of the Bank, and I for one would feel very much distressed if I found that any extra earned profits for the year had been distributed to pay a bigger dividend to the Shareholders at the present period. No doubt that will come in due time, and I think I shall voice the opinion of the Shareholders who are with me on this occasion by saying that they, like myself, are willing to wait for that eventuality. (Applause.)

The vote was unanimously accorded.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, on behalf of myself, the Board and the staff, I thank you very much indeed for the resolution and for the appreciative way in which you have received it, and I can only repeat my thanks to the Shareholders for the way they have identified themselves with the policy the Board has pursued in building up the reserve. That ends the meeting, gentlemen.

The proceedings then terminated.

WINCHESTER

.405 CALIBER REPEATING RIFLE

THE DREADNOUGHT OF THE JUNGLE.

The .405 Winchester fears nothing alive. It is powerful enough to stop any animal, no matter how big or how dangerous. Its 300-grain, soft-point bullet has a ton and a half of energy, and when it strikes, it mushrooms and delivers the whole of this tremendous energy with terrible shocking effect. There is an immediate collapse—the animal drops as though struck by a thunderbolt. The rifle holds five of these cartridges, which can be fired in rapid succession. Its action is reliable and strong, and its shooting straight and true. As a big-game gun of exceptional power it has no peer.

THE TURF.

LIVERPOOL.

What a gorgeous Grand National day it was to be sure—gorgeous, that is, for everybody save the luckless connections and backers of Rathnally. He, poor beast, had a short and inglorious run.

Three regrets tinctured the otherwise enthusiastic proceedings, and the deepest of them undoubtedly was this astonishing and dramatic failure of Rathnally. In slovenly style he negotiated the first two jumps, going to the right each time, and at the next he took off absurdly too soon and paid the penalty. Coulthwaite, ever since the fiasco of last March, has known but one ambition, which was to wipe out that wretched business in the only way possible, and with this object he made a slave of himself in the interests of Mr. Oliver Jones and this particular horse, feeding him, watching over him by day and even getting up in the night to satisfy himself everything was right in the stable. No mother ever tended her babe with greater solicitude than the Hednesford wizard tended Rathnally. And the melancholy result of it all was to pile one fiasco on another and render Coulthwaite as inarticulate from disappointment as the Paddies were incoherent with joy over the victorious Jerry M.

How they did shout, these Irishmen, and what powerful help they received from the hated Saxons. Short of the ovation bestowed ch Ambush II. in 'The Prince's Year," nothing to equal it has ever been witnessed after the National. Results :—

Mr. McNeill's Foo hardy, 11yrs., 10st.		Owner 0
Capt. H. C. Higgins's Glenfinder, 11yrs., 10st.		J. Foran 0

Rathnally showed the way to Jerry M., Casheen, Ballyhackle, Axle Pin, Bloodstone, Fetlar's Pride, Carsey, Sir Halbert, Jenkinstown, Covertcoat, Kilkeel, Regent, Precentor II., Glenside, and Great Cross, with Glenfinder bringing up the rear to the second fence, where he fell, as did Rathnally and Glenside at the next, while Rory o' Moore, Great Cross, and Covertcoast came to grief at the fourth, Gold Seal II. toppling over at the fifth. Meanwhile Casheen had forged ahead, followed by Ballyhackle, Jerry M., Carsey, Jenkinstown, Bloodstone, Axle Pin, Sir Halbert, Regent, Kilkeel, Fetler's Pride, Precentor II., Bridge IV., Sans Peur, and Whitelegs II. At Becher's Brook Casheen was passed by Bloodstone, Jerry M. and Ballyhackle, the four being clear of Carsey, Jenkinstown, Axle Pin, Sir Halbert, Regent, Kilkeel, Bridge IV. and Precentor II., but at Valentine's Brook Casheen regained the lead and jumped the next obstacle two lengths clear of Bloodstone, with Jerry M. close up, next in front of Axle Pin, Carsey, Sir Halbert, Jenkinstown, Kilkeel, Regent, Mount Prospect's Fortune, Whitelegs II. and Foolhardy. Little change in these positions occurred until three more fences had been negotiated, when Foolhardy fell. Then came the water, over which Casheen landed ahead of Ballyhackle, Jerry M., Bloodstone, Regent, Axle Pin, Carsey, Sir Halbert, Jenkinstown, Mount Prospect's Fortune, Precentor II., and Whitelegs II. the only other left standing being Kilkeel. Whitelegs II. fell at the first fence in the country the second time round, and at the fifth, Jenkinstown lamed himself and had to be pulled up. Regent fell at Becher's Brook. At the fence before Valentine's Ballyhackle fell, and Kilkeel fell at the next obstacle, while Casheen, who had jumped like a stag up to this point, fell at the ditch which immediately followed. Bloodstone then took up the running from Jerry M, clear of Axle Pin, Sir Halbert, and Carsey. Between the last two fences Bloodstone met with interference from a loose horse and was headed by Jerry M, and though he got in front again at the final obstacle he was passed in the next hundred yards by Jerry M., who won by six lengths ; four lengths between second and third. Time—10mins. 13⅘secs. Whitelegs II. was remounted.

Betting : 4 to 1 agst. each Rathnally and Jerry M., 9 to 1 Rory o' Moore, 100 to 9 Casheen, 100 to 8 Carsey, 100 to 7 Jenkinstown, 20 to 1 each Axle Pin and Ballyhackle, 25 to 1 Bridge IV., 33 to 1 Covertcoat, 40 to 1 each Glenside, Great Cross and Bloodstone, 66 to 1 the others.

Places : 5 to 4 agst. each Rathnally and Jerry M., others in proportion.

Thursby Selling Handicap—Of 150sovs. 1 mile and 6 furlongs.

Mr. W. Forbes's Awake II., by Fortunatus—Asleep, aged, 7st. 11lb.		W. Huxley 1
Mr. J. Baylis's Wiseacre, 6yrs., 7st. 6lb.		Bowley 2
Lord Derby's Corrie Glass, 6yrs., 8st. 2lb.		Rickaby 3

Betting : 9 to 4 on Awake II., 4 to 1 agst. Corrie Glass 6 to 1 Wiseacre.

Won by four lengths ; three-quarters of a length between second and third.

Bridgeman Stakes (handicap)—Of 300sovs. 6 furlongs.

Won by a length and a half; half a length between second and third.

Signs of the end of perhaps the hardest and busiest week of the season to the thorough-going sportsman were everywhere on hand on Saturday. The majority of Friday's visitors had left after seeing the "National," and the meeting suffered in another respect by more potent attractions to the holiday crowd in the semi-final Cup tie between West Bromwich Albion and Blackburn. The character of good fields was sustained to the end of what may be called a "backers' week." Results:—

STANLEY STAKES.—Of £10 each, £3 ft. to the fund, with £200 added; two-year-olds. Old straight ¼ mile.

NOTTINGHAM.

IT is surprising how well, comparatively speaking, the racing army is getting along, despite the strike and the diminished service of trains, as the London brigade found it comparatively easy to get to Nottingham on Monday morning. The day was gusty and wet at intervals, while the temperature was harshly cold. With Monday having slight business claims with Midlanders, the local attendance was, as usual, a strong one, and a fairly good muster helped to fill Tattersall's ring. The going was good, and, as was the case all last week, the equine arrival list was exceptionally strong. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

BOTH semi-final ties for the Association Cup were drawn last Saturday without a goal being scored. Until all the records have been searched it is impossible to be certain on the point, but a parallel to these results cannot be recalled. Barnsley, in their extraordinary series of matches in the previous round with Bradford City, played three games without getting a goal, but Swindon, their opponents, had only once been limited to one goal in five engagements; West Bromwich Albion had won all their four earlier ties at the first attempt by an aggregate of 9—1, while Blackburn Rovers had not only always got goals themselves, but in every one of five matches their own defence had been overcome. The ability of all four defences to prevail came, therefore, quite as a surprise. In one way the draw is always unsatisfactory, but the clubs and the Football Association, who share the financial benefits, will not be annoyed, though the replays in mid-week just before Good Friday must occasion much annoyance unless the ordinary railway services have been resumed. The most remarkable feature in yesterday's ties was the great crowd that assembled at Stamford Bridge. The gate receipts amounted to £2,935, the spectators who paid a shilling admission being estimated at about 70,000.

PROBABLY the majority of the huge crowd went away with a feeling of disappointment, chiefly because of the fact that no goals were scored, but very largely owing to the moderate display of football. The high wind, which blew almost straight down the field, upset the teams, the lively ball being difficult to control on the hard ground. But, making every allowance for these conditions, the play was not worthy of the occasion. Swindon certainly began in a style that promised well, the early stages of the game seeing them getting in some hard and straight shots, while their passing was fairly good. During this period some of the Barnsley players were guilty of extremely foul play—Fleming, in particular, being brought down badly more than once—and Swindon never afterwards got properly into their stride again. Against the wind Barnsley perhaps did well to keep their opponents out, by vigorous and bustling methods, but they so often kicked out that the football was disjointed. With Fleming lying back Jefferson did not get many chances to show his speed, the game being nearly always with the Swindon left wing, Lamb and Down. In holding these two Glendinning rendered his side good service, and had not Downs been so reckless in his kicking the Barnsley forwards might have had more opportunities. Now and again they broke away, but Walker and Kay played well at back for Swindon, the latter kicking in fine form and nearly always sending the ball low to his forwards. Once the Swindon goal had a narrow escape when Sadler ran out and stopped a shot from Lillycrop with his legs. As might have been expected Barnsley did better after changing ends, and during the last fifteen minutes Swindon laboured under a handicap in having Fleming injured and practically useless

Lemco

The original and only genuine Liebig Company's Extract of Beef.

It has long been known that LEMCO is not only perfectly digestible in itself, but it enables one to get much more nourishment from other foods partaken of.

Its action on the digestive system is tonic; for instance, many children and dyspeptics who cannot digest milk can do so if a little Lemco be added to it. There are many valuable uses of Lemco besides the making of beef tea and the strengthening of gravies and soups.

owing to a strain. So Swindon may be congratulated on effecting a draw in a game that was never really fast and produced little good football.

On the general run of the game at Liverpool on Saturday Blackburn Rovers should certainly have qualified for participation in the final tie, for they had practically all the play in the second half. The capital work of the halves and the cleverness of Simpson, however, were wasted, Orr and Anthony of the other Blackburn forwards, rendering their colleagues poor assistance, and Chapman, although showing much dash, lacking the finish necessary to turn his chances to account. Still, although for five-sixths of the match neither goal was ever in much danger, Blackburn came desperately near snatching a victory in the last ten minutes, Chapman with Pearson out of goal, hitting the post, and Smith just before the end sending in a great drive that Pennington headed out from under the bar. These, as it happened, proved almost the only exciting incidents of a fast but disappointing struggle. Fortune certainly was unkind to West Bromwich, who, when playing against the wind in the opening half, combined in such clever fashion forward that they looked sure to win. Directly after change of ends, however, Bowser fell so lame that, finding himself practically useless, he went outside-left, and Shearman, who had been most prominent in attack, met with a bad shaking up, from which he never really recovered. Except that Cook started indifferently, the backs and halves on both sides acquitted themselves admirably. Pennington throughout his career has rarely played a greater game, and Crompton was seldom at fault. As usual in big professional matches in these days, there was far too much lifting of the ball and dependance upon pace rather than skilful combination. Only the excellence of the defence and Simpson's cleverness redeemed the game from mediocrity.

RUGBY RULES.

THE ARMY CUP—FINAL TIE.

FIRST LEICESTERSHIRE REGIMENT VS. SECOND WELCH REGIMENT.—A very close game resulted from the meeting of these teams at Twickenham, the Leicestershire Regiment eventually winning by two tries to a penalty goal. A good crowd watched the match but the lack of travelling facilities doubtless prevented a large number of military from attending. The game commenced at a great pace, and although the Leicesters had slightly the better of the first half they failed to score, whereas a fine penalty goal kicked by Davies gave the Welch Regiment a lead of three points at the interval. In the second half the game continued to be fought out in the most determined manner, but occasionally an unduly keen spirit was shown and one incident led up to a Welch player being sent off the field. The Leicesters scored an unconverted try by Walker, which left the two sides level at the end of ordinary time, and a further period was necessary. The Leicesters then scored an unconverted try through Fisher.

General French presented the cup and medals at the close. First Leicestershire, 6 points; Second Welch, 3 points.

BLACKHEATH VS. BIRKENHEAD PARK.—At the Rectory field in fine weather, and before a good company, Blackheath, in their last home match of the season, beat Birkenhead Park by six goals and two tries to two goals and one try. The visitors were without two of their county forwards. Blackheath lacked the services of Pym and Neale, but had a strong three-quarter line which combined well. In each half they crossed their opponent's line four times, while the Park scored three times altogether. A feature of the game was the excellent goal-placing by Blackheath. The first six tries, some of them at difficult angles, were improved, and the last two tries were quite wide. A. L. Stokes scored two tries for Blackheath early in the game after very smart runs, and before the interval Harrison ran in on the left, and Tinson dodged over from a scrum near the line after Coverdale and Owen had taken the ball down with a clever run. Williner got an unconverted try from an intercepted pass, and just on the interval Sykes scored a try which Pemberton improved. In the second half Harrison, Owen, Tinson, and Kitching scored tries for Blackheath, and Lindsay got over for Birkenhead, and Pemberton placed a goal. Stokes, Coverdale, and Dickson each placed two goals for Blackheath. Blackheath, 36 points; Birkenhead Park, 13 points.

CATFORD BRIDGE VS. LONDON WELSH.—The London Welsh, for whom T. P. Lloyd reappeared, gave a delightful display at Bellingham. Mackintosh improved a try, which he himself obtained for the home side. Richards dropped a fine goal for the Welsh, and Leigh followed up with a goal from a try which Maddocks gained in combination with Davies. At the outset of the second half Catford attacked and were awarded a penalty. Mackintosh kicked a goal; but following this the Welshmen gained the upper hand. Williams scored a clever try, Leigh failing with the kick, and finally Jenkins dropped a goal, leaving the scores:—London Welsh, 3 goals (2 dropped) and a try; Catford Bridge, 2 goals (one penalty). London Welsh, 15 points; Catford Bridge, 8 points.

RICHMOND VS. UNITED SERVICES.—One of the features of this match at Richmond was the great improvement of the home team on their recent form. Throughout the game they proved themselves the better team, especially in the first half, when they were aided by a strong wind. The forwards made a number of openings, of which the back division took advantage and brought off several clever passing bouts. The first try was gained by Plant, after a movement admirably initiated by Cradman, and fifteen minutes later Burton made a capital surviving run and got over. This was followed by a splendid penalty goal by Butcher, whilst, close on the interval, Oglethorpe added a try after some tricky play. Butcher converted every time, once from a very awkward angle, and at half-time Richmond were eighteen points ahead. As was expected, the Services gave a better account of themselves when playing with the wind in the second half, and the threes negotiated some good passing, but the forwards gave them but few opportunities, whilst Richmond maintained their superiority. After twenty minutes Peet just got in for the Services, Harrison, improving, and later scored from a penalty kick. Near the finish Oglethorpe scored a try for Richmond, who won by three goals one penalty goal one try to one goal one penalty goal. Richmond, 21 points; United Services, 8 points.

CROSS COUNTRY.

INTERNATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—The tenth annual race for the International Cross-Country Championship which, since its inception had been held by England, was held at Saughton, near Edinburgh, in bright, but breezy weather on the 30th March. Five countries participated and in each case the teams were as selected, except that C. G. Hill, of Newport, was absent from the Welsh team and P. Lizandier from the French. As Lizandier finished third last year, when Jean Bouin won, the former's absence was, of course, regarded as considerably weakening the French side. The course was one of 9½ miles, made up of 1¼ mile on the track, 5 miles of roads and paths, and 3¼ miles of grass land. It was after four o'clock when the race was started by Mr. Laing, the Scottish president, in the presence of about 600 spectators. Bouin, the French National champion, cut out the running over the mile of track at the start, but when the competitors left the track and went into the country the leaders were Scott (England), Bouin (France), Wallach (Scotland), Holbrook (England), and Hibbins (the English National champion). The runners returned to the track after running about four miles and at this time Bouin and Scott were together about 200 yards ahead of a group composed of Hibbins, Wallach, Murphy (Ireland), and Keyser (France), whilst a further group comprised four Englishmen, in Vose, Glover, Neaves, and Tucker. The leader's time was 19mins. 35secs. E. Davies, the substitute for Hill, was running first of the Welshmen. At six miles Bouin led Scott by a hundred yards, with Hibbins a similar distance behind the Northener, and then came Wallach, Murphy, and O'Neill (Ireland). Bouin eventually won in 51mins. 46secs.; next, in order, being Scott, Hibbins, and Wallach. England retained premier team honours with the lowest score of forty-one points.

Won by 150yds.; 70yds. dividing second and third.

Team Placings.—England: Scott 2, Hibbins 3, Glover 7, Tucker 8, Neaves 10, Vose 11 (total 41 points), 1; Scotland, 68 points, 2; Ireland, 110 points, 3; France, 123 points, 4; Wales, 146 points, 5.

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

As I wired you on the 2nd instant the race had to be rowed as both crews were swamped on Saturday owing to the very high wind and unusually rough water. Oxford soon got the lead and with an infinity of splashing and shipping of water they were some lengths to the good when Cambridge stopped rowing. This was opposite Harrods' Wharf. Their boat was gunwale under and some swam ashore, others were taken off in a boat and their craft was subsequently rescued and found to be no worse for wear. Oxford got as far as Chiswick when they had to pull inshore and jump for it. They upended their boat, got in again and finished the course paddling. But the Umpire, Mr. Pitman, declared it was "no race." And later on the crew decided to row again on Monday.

There was a stiffish breeze on Monday and rough water as well, but nothing like the unfavourable conditions of Saturday. Cambridge as challengers were the first to embark, and paddled to their stake boat at 12-22, meeting with a hearty reception. Oxford quickly followed, and amid tremendous cheering took up their favoured station on the Middlesex shore.

There was some delay in getting into position, but Mr. Pitman got them away to a good start at 12-38. Bourne was first off the mark and was timed to row 32 in the first minute against 30 by Cambridge. The boats were level at the Duke's Head, but directly afterwards the nose of the Oxford boat began to show in front and Bourne was leading by a good half a length at Beverley Brook. Swann stuck to his man and the Light Blues responded gallantly. The powerful leg-work of the Oxonians and their better pulled-out stroke, however, soon told their tale. Rowing thoroughly well within themselves, the Dark Blues slightly increased their lead at Craven Steps, and were fully three-quarters of a length to the good off Walden's. Between this and the one mile post Bourne began to come right away, and before the Crabtree was reached he was leading by three lengths, and the race looked as good as over.

At this stage of the race a heavy hailstorm swept over the river, and the Cantabs seemed to be much more bothered by it than their stronger opponents. Swann, however, stuck to his work gamely, but could make no impression on his opponent. Oxford were a comfortable three lengths ahead at Harrods. At Hammersmith Bridge, where the crew taking the Surrey shore has some advantage, Cambridge seemed to gain slightly and Swann spurting, the distance separating the boats seemed to be about two and a quarter lengths. But Bourne put the result beyond any reasonable doubt by taking his competitors' water just above the Doves, and thereafter the race, despite several game spurts on the part of the Light Blues, became a procession.

10,000 Cheap Novels, Sent for List.

A lead of between two to three lengths was maintained off Chiswick Eyot and Thornycroft's.

This became six lengths off Bull's Head, and at this point Cambridge had had enough of it. Oxford, rowing well, shot Barnes Bridge fully six lengths ahead. The judge's official decision was that the same distance separated the boats as Oxford paddled past the post at Mortlake.

The reception accorded the victors was of the most enthusiastic description, Bourne being specially singled out as the only University oarsman to stroke four consecutive winning crews.

THE BEIGHTON COMPETITION.

THE Beighton Competition has reached the third round, and to-morrow (Friday) the semi-finals will be played; should both these matches be brought to a definite issue, the final will take place on Saturday. The tournament, so far, has not been run on satisfactory lines, and there has been a lot of dissatisfaction owing to the Y. M. C. A. Amateurs having been disqualified when other clubs, who also erred similarly, were not dealt with in like manner. The refereeing too has not been all that could be desired, while the hockey has not been of the standard which one expected. Calcutta, who were very fortunate in having their protest upheld, were again lucky in getting through the second round, when they beat the Police by three goals to one, for on the evening's play the Police were at least entitled to a draw. The Police played Lowman, a player from Dacca, who only arrived two or three days prior to the match, and as this gentleman had not represented the team before, he, according to the rules, was not eligible to play. However, as the Police lost, there was no necessity of a protest. But judging by the poor form displayed by Calcutta against the Amateurs and the Police, the "Reds" were not expected to go far, and on Tuesday they were beaten by the East Indian Railway (Lillooah) by two goals to nil. The two Jamalpur teams rendered fairly satisfactory

PURGEN

A LONDON DOCTOR writes:—
"Kindly send me by return of post 200 tablets of PURGEN for Infants and 100 Adult. The more I use this drug the more I like it. It is the best purgative I have so far come across."

"THE LAXATIVE OF THE FUTURE."

PURGEN acts surely, gently and uniformly, without causing any irritation or pain, and its effect does not wear off by prolonged use. PURGEN is not absorbed by the system. It has no action on the liver or kidneys, and it does not produce flatulence, nausea, depression or other disagreeable symptoms usually associated with aperient medicines. PURGEN is an especially valuable medicine for the delicate, for invalids and for children. Made up in small tablets of agreeable flavour and sold in boxes only.

Sold in Three Strengths:—
"INFANT" (for young children); "ADULT" (for grown-ups); "STRONG" (for invalids and chronic constipation).

English Price: 1/- per Box.

accounts of themselves, but it's a pity that the Apprentices and the Y. M. C. A. Jamalpur did not combine their forces and enter a station team instead of two separate elevens. The two brothers Milchem, Porthouse, Eale and Irvine were the shining lights in the Y. M. C. A Jamalpur team, and as all had represented the Apprentices during the last two seasons, these five, with the best six belonging to the Apprentices, could form a very strong combination—one which would take a lot of beating.

The match between the 40th Pathans and the Rangers on the Calcutta ground certainly produced the best contested game so far in the tournament, and as far as stamina is concerned the Alipore team was the best trained side in the competition. The fault of the Pathans lay in their forwards, who, when once in the circle, shoot in hot-headed haste anywhere, with no thought as to where the ball has to travel, and had some of the men shot more accurately the Pathans might have won. As matters terminated, however, the cup-holders won by the odd goal in five, and as I consider the Rangers the strongest combination in the tournament, the Pathans, for their first appearance in Calcutta hockey, must be congratulated on their excellent showing.

The Jamalpur Apprentices beat the Bengal-Nagpur Railway easily by four goals to one, and with the exception of Fox, the ex-Sibpur player, and Durrell, who represented the trans-Hooghly College last year, the remainder of the railway team were not seen to much advantage. Had Jamalpur lost, they would have protested, as Fox had only five days prior to the match joined the railway, and was not eligible to play. However, next year, to save a lot of unpleasantness and ill-feeling it is to be hoped that no player having represented a certain club in the League be permitted to play for another in the Beighton competition.

The Medicals and St. Xavier's match, which the former won by three goals to two was a fast and well contested game, and as the Medical subsequently beat Sibpur, and play the East Indian Railway (Lilloah) this evening in the semi-finals, the wearers of the skull and cross bones are likely to appear in the final. Yakchee's indifferent play as left full-back was the downfall of St. Xavier's.

The Customs beat the Port Commissioners on the Rangers' ground last Thursday, but the League champions played much below their usual standard, and it is doubtful if they will survive the semi-finals. Last evening they played Dalhousie, the result of which will be found below. The game between the Port Commissioners was one in which combination was sadly lacking, and although the Port Commissioners played hard and pluckily some of their men had a poor idea of hockey. The Customs won by two goals to one.

At the second time of asking East Indian Railway (Lilloah) beat Barrackpore United by two goals to nil. Lieutenant Ward played an exceptionally fine game for Barrackpore and it is astonishing, with so many military officers and the officers of the Police, the United Services did not enter for the Cup. The United Services, it will be recollected, for two seasons went very near winning the Beighton prize, and their matches with the Hornets and St. James's would be worth going a long way to see.

The Calcutta and Police match last Friday on the Dalhousie ground was a fast and exciting affair, but the play was of the kit and run character. Both goals had several narrow escapes, but the Calcutta forwards, who displayed the better combination won the match for their side, the score being 3 to 1. Sherman netted the first two goals, Brown scoring the third; while just before the close, after ten minutes, hard pressing, Bamford netted for the Police.

The same evening City Athletic beat the Rovers on the Rangers' ground after two goalless draws by a goal to love.

The Sibpur vs. Y.M.C.A. Jamalpur match, which took place on the Calcutta ground on Saturday, was interesting and the hockey was a better display than has been witnessed in the majority of the games Sibpur won by two goals to nil and well deserved their hard-earned victory but on the attacking the Jamalpur team should also have scored. Porthouse, the Jamalpur left-winger, was very prominent throughout, but the fine centres by this player were not taken advantage of. The game was fast and the exchanges very even. Still Sibpur deserved to win, and two goals to one would have been a fairer index to the game. For the winners, Wilks played a great game. He scored the first goal after a brilliant individual run, and, from a pass by him, Bayley netted the second, both points being recorded during the second moiety. As stated had the two Jamalpur teams amalgamated they would be, indeed, hard to beat.

The same evening, Lilloah beat City Athletic on the Customs ground by two goals to nil; while the Oriental Sporting and Dalhousie played a draw of one all on the Rangers' ground, but on Monday the Trades' Club beat their opponents after a hard struggle by 1-0.

There was a record attendance on the Calcutta ground to witness the match between Rangers (holders) and Jamalpur, and although the Jamalpur Apprentices played a very hard and plucky game, in the Rangers they met a superior team, who won by two goals to nil. The Rangers played the identical side that had beaten the Pathans, Skempton being yet unable to play, but Allison has shown to much advantage in recent matches, and on this occasion gave of his best. The Apprentices have three speedy forwards in Bolleau, Alexander and Bennett, but the other two were only passengers. The Jamalpur team were often penalised for not throwing in properly, while their halves were weak in defence. Their left full-back and Gasper, their goal-keeper, however, saved many ugly rushes in the most finished style. Another fault with Jamalpur was that they paid Smart too much attention—so much so that the other opposing forwards were unmarked. Towards the closing stages of the game some of the visiting players indulged in hard hitting, while on occasions, in order to stop a rush, they hit recklessly, and Smart and Fitzpatrick were both hurt. During the initial half Smart scored, and the second goal, 10 minutes after ends had been changed, was netted by Allison. The Rangers will probably meet the Customs which match is to be another "gate" affair.

These charity matches are becoming too common and it is high time they were put a stop to. Two gate money matches at hockey, and two during the football season, are too many.

On the Dalhousie ground last Monday, the Medicals were very lucky indeed to beat Sibpur by a goal (scored early in the game) to nothing. Sibpur attacked almost throughout and sent in no less than a dozen shots, but these were all saved in marvellous fashion by Wrafter, the Medicals' new custodian.

On Tuesday there was only one match played—Calcutta vs. E. I. R., which took place on the Rangers' ground. The "Reds" it is true, had the larger share of attacking, but their forwards did not make the best use of their chances in the circle and the Lilloah men ran out lucky winners by two goals to love.

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

BOMBAY.

HAVING entered the final of the Stadium Tourney, the Hussars on Wednesday did what was most expected of them when they beat the Dorsets. The better team undoubtedly won and should have put in more than the only goal scored, which incident occurred so near time, that the whistle went as they bullied off again. There was not much pretty stick play, but the whole game was very fast and most determined. Mainly on the attack the Hussars should reasonably have put in about three times in the first half, but good saves by the goal-keep and a bustling defence kept the Dorset goal clean till much later on. Their weight and perfect fitness will always stand the Cavalry men well.

The Young Parsis from Poona met the Parsi Pioneers B team on Thursday last and beat them easily. The Poona team had matters all their own way: they scored 6 goals to one in the first half and after the interval seemed content with their lead, for they took matters easy and the Pioneers scored a goal, the Poona eleven winning by 6—2.

The Royal Warwicks met the Cyclists on Friday, the game ending in a draw. Replaying on Monday the result was another draw one all—in spite of extra time. The teams met a third time on Tuesday when another good game was witnessed. The Warwicks attacked at the start and put on two goals; the Cyclists pressed for a spell, but lost chances of scoring. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn, each team scoring once. The Warwicks thus won by 3—1.

The Cheshire Regiment and the Grant Medical College put up a fine game on Saturday. The Medicals were in splendid form and were only beaten by a single goal to nil, scored in the last few moments of the game. The cup holders, as usual, played very sound hockey, and Sergeant Price was most conspicuous in the second line of defence.

Motoring.

(BY "THROTTLE.")

THE admonition administered to the Calcutta taxi—cab drivers by Sir Frederick Halliday has certainly met with the fate which was predicted for it in this column at the time of its delivery; that is, it has been either completely ignored or at least forgotten. Only a few days ago the writer saw a taxi-cab being driven along Bentinck Street, after a shower of rain, at a speed well over twenty miles an hour. Anyone who knows what this street is like with a wet and greasy surface, in addition to heavy traffic and its narrowness, may form some idea of the danger of such driving. In such circumstances a skid would almost certainly mean the wiping up of several pedestrians and probably the wrecking of a shop or two. Must something of the kind occur before the drastic treatment called for is meted out? It certainly appears so from the present apathy after the serious accidents which have already occurred.

THE Calcutta Fire Brigade seem to be particularly unfortunate in trial trips with their motor fire engines, the latest importation having cracked all four cylinders on her first day out, owing to the failure of the water cooling system through an obstruction of some kind in the pipes. This means of course that the Brigade are deprived of this engine's services for some time at least, until repairs and replacements can be effected. This is rather more serious than the collision with a tramcar which befell a former engine when going out for the first time.

IN spite of the predictions of a few years ago the motor is slowly but surely ousting the older methods of travelling, two notable instances being reported in recent exchanges. The first is the complaint by a reliable authority that motor buses are driving tramcars from the streets, the same gentleman favours a step with the times and the general adoption of the newer in place of the older means of conveyance. The second instance is even more significant, even if not so important generally. That is the supply to Sir George Ballough of a most commodious and luxuriously fitted up van for the conveyance of hounds to a meet which might take place at a distance from the kennels. Formerly the hunting fraternity treated the motor car as though it were a blood relation of barbed wire; then from using a car themselves to arrive at the meet it is now the thing to provide 30 H. P. vans to convey hounds. How long before the hunter meets with the same treatment?

MENTION of the spread of the motor car serves to remind me of some of the recent importations to Calcutta, amongst which may be seen three Rolls-Royces, a Metallurgique and a couple of J. D. Siddeley type Deasy cars, most of these have really beautiful specimen of the carriage builders' art mounted on chassis worthy of their load. This flourishing condition of the trade in high grade cars is particularly gratifying in the face of the invasion by the "cheap and nasty" element and goes to prove that motorists are alive to the fact that a really good car cannot be had without a reasonable preliminary expenditure.

APART from the legitimate use of the motor, it has also frequently been put to others, as, for instance, recent Anarchist outrages in France, where banks were robbed and people shot promiscuously for some time by a gang of bandits who made use of a stolen motor car for their depredations. In this connection it is pleasing to read that one of the ringleaders was recently arrested. Some years ago a very clever gang of thieves made their presence felt in England by doing a round of well-known country houses which were stripped of their valuables; in this case also use was made of a high powered fast car and after a coup the custom was for the gang to incur a fine for some trivial offence in a remote part of the country with a view to having that conviction to prove an alibi if the graver charge were preferred. In spite of all precautions, however, the gang or at any rate some of them met their deserts after a raid on the country residence of a well-known and popular sporting nobleman.

I WONDER when a limit is going to be reached in the load that is packed into some of the cars which frequent the Strand and Red Roads on most evenings. Small two-cylinder cars are referred to and these are frequently seen with five-seated landaulette bodies into which passengers are packed almost to suffocation. Such treatment of a small engine is as disgusting and annoying to any motor engineer as any of the cases of overloading of bullocks and buffaloes unfortunately so painfully common on our roads. On this subject I once heard a very decided opinion delivered by a prominent Calcutta motorist and member of the R. A. C. to the effect that no manufacturer should in justice to himself and the reputation of his production place more than a two-seated body on any chassis under 12 H. P.; and on looking around the Calcutta streets and seeing the treatment of many small cars one is led to agree.

BY the way the praiseworthy energy shown by the authorities a few months ago in road repairing has come to a sad and sudden end, surely something less than a Royal visit will be sufficient to revive it. At the present time the principal roads and streets are in a very bad state, but probably the Corporation's new motor car may lead to something more than the mere re-tarring at present going on, as a run round the City at present is certainly sufficient to test the adjustments and general rigidity or lack of it, in any car.

WHILE these lines were being written considerable annoyance caused by the passing of a motor cycle at the speed of an express train and with as much noise, from an open exhaust,

WRITING of exhausts reminds one of a rather good story which went the rounds recently. A wealthy country squire recently decided to purchase a car, and did so from a well-known firm of manufacturers who also gave the former's coachman a few lessons in the art of driving and the general care of his new charge. On the occasion of various runs up to town in the new car it was always put up in a large public garage around which, as is usual, there were always a few chauffeurs. Now the only fault with this new car was that owing to inexperienced handling the engine continually smoked very badly (as many do in Calcutta). One day one of the drivers asked the ex-coachman why this was so and was frankly informed in reply that no reason could be found. Needless to say, in this answer, the chauffeurs and garage hangers-on, saw an opportunity too good to miss. Consequently strolling round the car one of them said with well simulated astonishment "Why no wonder she smokes, there is no lubricator on your exhaust box." Technicalities being beyond the novice, he swallowed the explanation, and furthermore to show his knowledge took the earliest opportunity of informing his employer of the supposed cause of trouble. The worthy squire being even more ignorant of a car than his employee at once wrote away to the firm who made and sold the car, rating them soundly for not fitting "a lubricator on the exhaust box" of his car and stating, moreover, that he considered such an oversight highly reprehensible in a firm of such standing, etc. Of course the receipt of this irate epistle at the office was the signal for an outburst of laughter; but no one could cope with difficulty of sending a confidatory reply, until a chauffeur, who had a reputation in the works as a wag, was consulted when an answer was evolved to this effect :—

"Dear Sir,—Yours of th to hand and complaint therein noted. We would respectfully point out, however, that our 1912 models, with one of which we had the honour to supply you, being fitted with a Thermo Syphon exhaust automatic lubrication to the box is obtained. We trust, etc., etc. Yours faithfully———. Result complete satisfaction of all concerned, except in the matter of the smoke, which I should think continued and even increased. So was the reputation of a manufacturing firm saved by the wit of a chauffeur. (Copy book and Sunday School morals may not be drawn from this true story.)

THE FOOD OF INDIAN BIRDS.

THE Government is to be heartily congratulated on having instituted an enquiry into the food of Indian birds, from the point of view of its bearing on agriculture and horticulture, especially in regard to the improvements and innovations now being made in those pursuits in India. As a beginning, an analysis has been made in the Agricultural Laboratory at Pusa of the contents of the stomachs of a large number of birds; while, in order to demonstrate the present state of our knowledge —or, shall we say? ignorance—of the subject, an exhaustive series of extracts has been taken from the writings of Indian ornithologists relating to the food of the birds of the country. All these have been put together in the form of a thick report published in the Entomological series of the Memoirs of the Department of Agriculture in India.

The result is to show how utterly insufficient for the purposes of the agriculturalist is the present state of our information, and what a gigantic task lies before the Pusa authorities. But Mr. Maxwell-Lefroy, the Imperial Entomologist, who is responsible for the drawing up of the report, the bulk of which was however, written by Mr. C. W. Mason, is not the man to be frightened by difficulties, and he may be trusted, if adequate means are provided and his health does not break down, to show a very different account in the course of the next few years.

In regard to what is at present known on the subject, Mr. Lefroy, after giving full credit to the work of Indian ornithologists, which has necessarily been to a great extent restricted to the description of the birds themselves and their relationships to one another, writes as follows :—

"Very little is on record with regard to the actual food of birds, and no definite work has been done in this direction. It is now a generally recognised fact that birds play a very important part in checking the ravages of insects on the farm and elsewhere. But owing to ignorance, lack of observation, and often to faulty observation a very small percentage of the good done by birds in checking undue proportion of insect life is attributed to them, and for similar reasons some birds at present considered beneficial are injurious and vice versâ, or else fall under a neutral heading, whilst others again, are both beneficial or injurious, according to locality and food-supply.

"Improvements in agriculture, such as are now going on, naturally tend (and will continue to do so) to the introduction of new varieties of crops into districts suitable for them, and in which as yet they have not been grown. Now a crop newly introduced into a district is grown experimentally at first on small areas; should these small areas be attacked by insects—and newly-introduced crops often are so—the people of that district will conclude that such crops are not worth taking up on a commercial scale, if most of them are to be grown to feed insects."

In such cases, recourse is usually had to artificial insecticides, but, as the report points out, in a country so large as India, the use of these is an expensive and in many cases a difficult matter; and it is far better to ascertain whether there are not natural agencies which will do the work, not only free of expense, but, in some cases, much more efficiently. These natural agencies consist of parasitic and predacious insects, insect-eating mammals, reptiles and frogs, but above all birds.

In regard to the food of birds much can be gleaned in a casual way by any observer who takes the trouble to use his eyes. "We can see," for instance, remarks Mr. Lefroy, "Mynas catching moths, crickets, etc., and eating maize, the hoepoe probing the ground for caterpillars [do caterpillars as a rule live underground, Mr. Lefroy?], the rose-ringed parraquet pulling wheat and mustard to pieces. . . and many other similar notes can be made about these and other species of birds. It is therefore quite an easy matter to say that the food of such and such a bird consists of, say, berries, beetles, and grubs, and it is interesting to know that this is the case. Such sweeping statements are, however, valueless to any one in a practical way, except as showing vaguely what class of food a bird may be expected to take at certain seasons, and merely show how little is known about that bird's food. Scientifically such information is practically valueless, and for all practical purposes can only be used as a doubtful basis for future work on the subject. But it must always be remembered that field-observations, if first hand and made by capable men, are invaluable as a supplement to laboratory examination and determination of the stomach contents of birds, and should be recorded whenever possible, however vague and useless they may appear."

It therefore seems there is a large field for amateur work in this branch of science, and we feel sure that there must be many among our readers who would be willing to assist, if they were put in the right way of going to work. May we therefore suggest that the Agricultural Department should follow the example set by its representative in America, and issue a leaflet on the subject, accompanied by schedules for field-observers to fill up. Mr. Lefroy seems to infer that it is only observations in the field that are required from amateurs; but it is probable that there are some among that class who would be disposed to assist in the matter of analysing the contents of stomachs of birds.

One point may be noticed, in conclusion, with regard to a class of observations which it appears is not wanted by the Department. In America, as well as in many European countries, great importance is attached to certain groups of birds, such as the finches as destroyers of the seeds of harmful weeds. Such seed-eating birds are, however, regarded by Mr. Lefroy as of no practical value in India, owing to the abundance and cheapness of coolie labour, by means of which fields can be much more efficiently cleaned.

Mark the differences between the

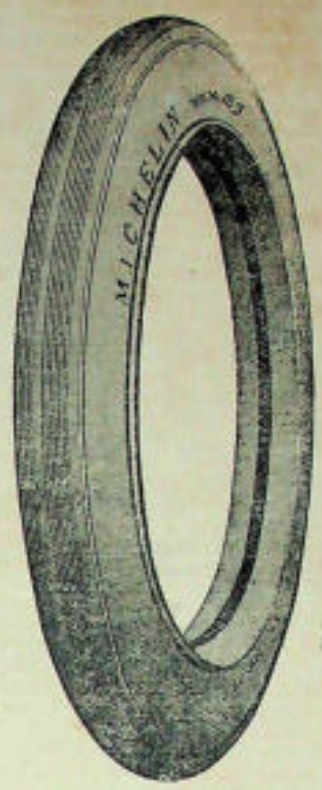
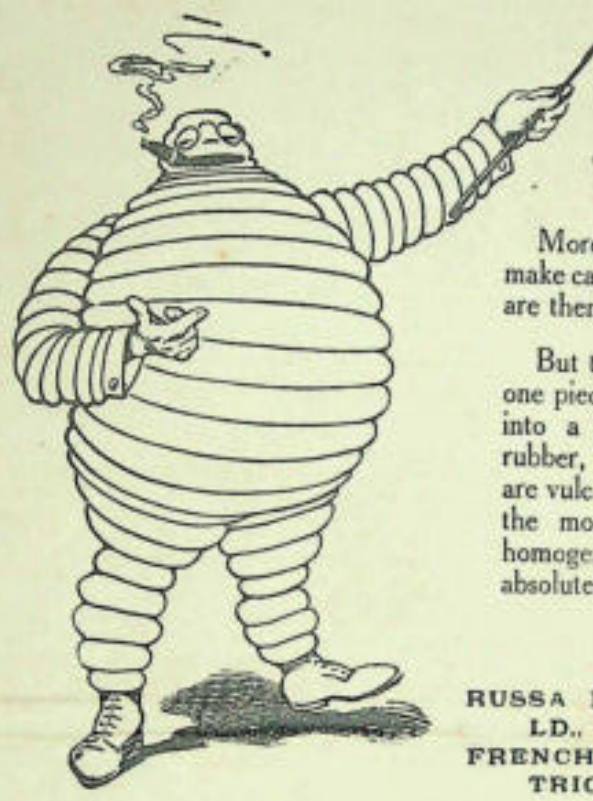
and an ordinary cover:

A tyre which is most artistically sculptured—a thing of ribs and lumps, hollows and humps—is one of the fads nowadays. Such grooves reduce the thickness of the tread and make it proportionately weaker.





The Michelin Square Tread, as you see, is a plain cover. Therefore, it is just so much the thicker and stronger.

Moreover, the common practice is to make casing and tread separately. These are then stuck together.

But the Michelin Square Tread is all one piece. In this case the cover is put into a mould, and both canvas and rubber, under great hydraulic pressure, are vulcanised together. When it leaves the mould, therefore, the cover is a homogeneous whole: every part is absolutely regular.

GREEN AND EVERGREEN.

THE last race at Sandown Park had just been run, and the usual steady stream of people poured out of the Grand Stand and members' enclosure, flowed over the asphalted pathways, and finally found its way on to the railway-station platforms. Already the carriages of the train were nearly filled: the 'early ones,' the want-to-get-back-home division, and the business men, anxious to put in an appearance at 'the office' for a few minutes before it closed for the day, were strongly in evidence. These had all filed through the barriers and taken their places; then came the rush of the main body; the compartments quickly became full except a few of the first class; doors were banged to, and the guard had already sounded his whistle, when a tall and—to put it mildly—extremely plain, middle-aged woman came running along, in, apparently, a tremendous state of flurry and excitement for fear of missing the train. She did just what ninety-nine women out of a hundred invariably do—peered into every carriage window, but made no effort to open a door and get in. At last, and just as the train was on the move, this much-perturbed female wrenched at one of the door-handles with one hand, and violently grasped the guard's coat-sleeve with the other. The good natured official, taking this assault as a hint that his services were required, smartly turned the handle of the carriage door, bundled the lady in with scant ceremony and a shove from the rear, which almost deposited her in the lap of a very mild-looking youth got up in faultless racing costume, and who was sitting in the middle seat, gazing vacuously out of the opposite window, the door was slammed to and they were off.

After the lady had subsided into a corner seat, muttering her apologies to the vacuous one, whom she had so nearly annihilated, she took a glance round at her fellow-travellers; all men of the sporting class judging by their dress. In the three seats, back to the engine, were a gentleman with a very bulldog-looking face and close-cropped hair; and his friend, something of the same type, but only rejoicing in the possession of one eye—both dressed, not in, but considerably beyond, the height of (racing) fashion. The third man was, as anyone could see at a glance, a 'soldier officer.' He had lit a cigar and settled himself to the perusal of a newspaper; but, on seeing a member of the fair sex enter the carriage, courteously asked if she objected to smoke. Receiving a reply in the negative, he puffed calmly and contentedly on, giving one the decided impression of having 'had a good day.'

Facing the engine was a nice-looking young fellow, of some two or three and twenty, with race glasses slung round him, who, from time to time, addressed remarks to the vacuous youth seated next him. The latter, industriously sucking at the end of a cigar which resolutely refused to draw, answered in nonchalant tones, the while he intently regarded his highly-polished brown boots and light check trousers.

Before a mile of the journey townwards had been compassed the gentleman of the bulldog physiognomy, as though struck by an exceedingly happy thought, suddenly produced a pack of cards from his pocket, and poking his friend in the ribs said: ''Arry, why shouldn't me an' you 'ave a game a' cards? P'raps the gentlemen opperite would like to 'ave a cut in?' this last, with an interrogative stare at the young man in the corner seat.

'I?—oh, no, I think not, thanks,' replied he.

'Oh, well, all right, sir; no 'arm I 'ope in arskin. Only it shortens the time of the journey 'ome a bit, don't it? Tejus thing, a railway journey, I always thinks. 'Ad a good day, sir?' insinuatingly.

'Yes, thanks; very fair.'

'Well, we all oughter backed the winner o' the big race, didn't we? Men and my friend 'ere backed it soon as the wites come out, didn't we, 'Arry?'

'Arry's gracious assent was expressed in the monosyllable, 'Yus.'

The first speaker was silent for at least two minutes, although the pause seemed to worry him somewhat, for he fidgetted about with his hands, drummed on the window pane, and finally began shuffling the pack of cards about again.

"'Arry,' he broke out at last; 'ever see these coves as does the three-card trick, 'ow they work it? I've tried to learn, but it's all a h'art, I can tell yer! Ain't arf so easy as it seems. I think they does it this way but I ain't very sure. So,'—throwing the three cards in a palpably awkward and unskilful manner, and in such a way that any child might have selected the 'picture' card.

'Well, I rather fancies myself at it; now I can do it as well as that. We'll 'ave a go, 'Arry. I'll bet, yer a 'arf sovereign you don't pick out the laidy, this time, now!'

Again the cards were feebly passed and thrown down. 'Arry staked his half sovereign, picked out the queen, and held it up triumphantly, glancing into the vacuous one's eyes as he did so. That youth began to take a mild interest in the trick.

'Well, so 'elp me, 'Arry, you've done me this journey. 'Ere's your 'arf coster. Now we'll try agen. I ain't goin' to mind losin' a few arf sovereigns over it, so's I learn the trick by a little practice. But you know wot I am, 'Arry, don't yer? If I 'adn't jest the little h'interest that the dab o' gold gives it, why I shouldn't never take the trouble to practice it; so 'ere goes agen. One, two, three, there yer are. Now you don't pick it out for a sovereign!'

But 'Arry again 'spotted the winner,' and lightened his friend of a whole sovereign this time. Such a want of success apparently put the bull-doggy gentleman on his mettle. He knitted his brows and seemed deep in scheming and thought, and whilst engaged in this occupation the train pulled up at a station. The cards were put away, until, with manifold whistlings and slamming of doors, the train once more moved slowly off; then the pack was again produced.

'I see 'ow it is, and where I've bin wrong all the time. Not there, as you know, I'm only a bloomin' novice an' must pay for my experience. Well 'ave another sovereign on, eh!'

'Well, a sovereign's too much for me to 'ave alone. I ain't such a rich toff as you are, Posh. I ain't got no 'orse and trap, an' no willa residence at Brixton 'ill to sell, to pay my debts o' honner, so we'll say 'arf a sovereign—unless, p'raps one o' these gents opposite would like to go 'arves in takin' a sovereign off yer!'

The vacuous one, whose cod-fish eye had been for some time past rivetted on the chances of the throw, stared stupidly back at the cautious 'Arry, and murmured, 'I don't mind if I do, just for this once.'

'Orl right, sir. That'll be 'arf a thick 'un apiece. Now, Posh, let's see yer try agen.''

Again were the cards manipulated, and once more did the Goddess Fortune smile upon 'Arry, and of course his partner, the youth opposite, also, on this occasion, participated in the 'good thing.' They each pocketed their stake, 'Arry saying to his friend, by way of consolation, 'Ah well, you know you can afford it, Posh. It won't 'urt yer, will it?'

'Will it 'urt me? Well, no, I don't suppose as it will. But that ain't it. It's the prinserple o' the thing, that's wot 'urts me. To think, now, that of all these throws, not only you, but also this young gentleman oppersite can spot the laidy every time. Perish me stiff! Why, I'd a laid a fortune agen it, I would!'

'Well, I wish you 'ad, specially last time,' rejoined 'Arry, with a knowing and confidential wink to the youth in front of him. 'But I reckon you won't go layin' no fortunes on your skill now, Posh, after the show this gent and me has made of you, eh? Why 'im and me 'ud pick out the card from anyone, let alone a novice like you: wouldn't we, sir?'

In his little squeaky voice the young gentleman addressed replied, 'It seems pretty easy to do, I think.'

'Easy! well, perish me! I should think it was. It's the easiest way of pickin' up a bit o' stuff as ever I see. And to a gentleman like you, sir as 'as been follerin' racin,' I dessay for yer'—the youth could not have been eighteen—'I s'pose it's easier still, as I aint' ever seen much of it myself.'

The vacuous gentleman was evidently flattered by the insinuation that he was an old and hardened race-course habitue. He smiled in a superior manner back at his interrogator, and squeaked, 'Oh, I've been about a bit in my time. I've seen a good deal of the three-card trick, though I've never done any betting on it. All my operations are in the Ring,' this with an attempt to look 'large,' and a desporate effort to grasp the intangible 'down' upon his upper lip and twirl it into shape.

The train was by this time within measurable distance of Waterloo Station. 'Posh' had for the time relapsed into silence, and resumed his former occupation of drumming on the window panes. His companion deliberately drew from his pocket a large-sized cigar and ignited it. Then, withdrawing it from his lips, and emitting a puff of peculiarly foul aroma, but which seemed to be regarded by the smoker as like unto the odour of Araby the blest, 'Arry, in quite a lordly tone, observed:

'Tell yer wot, Posh, my boy you ain't up to this game, not one little bit, but you still fancy you are. Well, I'll give yer jest one chance ter git yer money back, and a piece in, too. If this gentleman 'ere as went arves with me before 'll join me we'll jest make this one bet with yer. A five-pun note we name the picture card? Now, what do yer say?'

The gentleman thus appealed to signified his acquiescence, whilst Posh seemed to ruminate deeply before assenting to the proposition.

'Well 'Arry, your orfer is a fair orfer, it's true. But jest let me 'ave a little practice with the broads before we make the big trial;' and so saying the speaker once more manipulated the cards, throwing them, more or less unskilfully, three or four times, but each time so plainly that there could be no sort of doubt as to which was the queen, when the three laid, face downwards, on the newspaper out of which had been improvised a card table. Then, at last, he declared himself ready for the trial of skill.

'Now I'm going to do it. Look, gentlemen, well at the cards. One, two, three! and it's a five-pun note you don't pick out the laidy!'

Either this was a most conspicuous example of 'practice making perfect,' or else Mr. Posh could hardly have been quite so innocent of the wiles of the three card-trick as he sought to make out, for, on this occasion, he so deftly manipulated the 'paste-boards' that the vacuous young gentleman sitting vis-a-vis to him was entirely puzzled as to which was 'the pea.' After gazing helplessly at his partner,' whose affectation of doubt was beyond all praise, he finally put out his hand and turned up the wrong card!

'Well, there, so'elp me, Posh, if you ain't done the pair of us this time!' exclaimed his friend, genially. 'Not as I grudge the money, not a little bit, not me,' he went on, rather over-doing the thing in his effort to make matters pleasant. 'So, 'ere's my bit of it: one, two, and arf a sovereign is two pun ten, and this gentleman will give yer the same; or shall we jest make it into a fiver for each of us, and you give us the chance to get this little lot back? What do you say, sir?'

But before he of the vacuous eye and irreproachable brown boots could either answer or withdraw his hand from his trousers pocket, whither it had gone in quest of the two pounds ten he had just lost, a new voice chimed in with the talking: that of the tall and angular female who had scrambled into the compartment at the moment of the train's moving off.

'Don't trouble about the money, sir. Put it back into your pocket, for I don't fancy these two gentlemen will find any use for it for the next few months. I will take care they are put to no expense for lodgings or board either, to-night; they'll come with me when we get to Waterloo Station. What, Sh'ny George and Bradford Harry, don't you know your old friend Maclaren, eh?' and so saying, the 'female' coolly untied a string, let fall the ample skirt, and with the other hand swept off bonnet and wig joined together, and appeared in man's everyday costume. Drawing a soft felt hat from his pocket the detective completed his attire, and turned an unctuous grin on to his prisoners.

Perhaps two more crestfallen gentlemen were never seen than the latter. At first they blustered and swore, but finding the game was up soon relapsed into a moody silence. The detective, deliberately rolling up his disguise into a bundle and fastening it round methodically with a piece of string, addressed the young man next him:

'Take my advice, sir. Don't be induced to have anything to do with the three-card fakers, not at any price. They're a bit too hot. Why, these two here have been wanted for about half a dozen different cases for more than three months. But until to-day we've never been lucky enough to catch them actually at the game, though all of us at the 'Yard' knew they'd been playing it—ah, and making a right good living out of it for a long time past. I've travel'ed twice with them on railway journeys from race meetings within the last fortnight, but each time they spotted me. To-day it's my turn, and I've spotted them!'

At this juncture the train ran into Waterloo, and the detective, putting his head out of the window, hailed a burly constable standing on the platform, and told him to call a cab.

'Good day, young gentleman,' he said, pleasantly, to the vacuous youth, who had regarded all these businesslike proceedings with his mouth open from astonishment. 'You'll be likelier to win money by going to an honest bookmaker than thinking to light upon "a soft thing" in a race special.'

And the last thing the callow youth caught, as his quondam acquaintances were pushed into a four-wheeler, closely attended by the detective and the big constable, was the following question and answer:—

'Well, about nine calendar "with," I should say,' responded the officer amiably.

THE CLAY EATERS.

YELLOW clay as a daily food is what many of the people of Winston County, Ala., live and thrive on. The county of Winston is in the North-Western portion of the State and is sparsely settled, its population being poor and appearing to be eking out a mere existence. It is only within the past few years that the amount of taxes collected from the entire county amounted to $1,000. Until 1888 Winston was forty miles from the nearest railroad and the county court house twenty miles further. Houses of worship and those for educational purposes are few and far between. A majority of Winston's population live in small log cabins of the rudest kind and eke out a miserable existence by farming, hunting, and fishing.

Their farms, or patches, as they call them, are small clearings around their cabins, and are seldom more than a few acres in extent. Their crop (as they invariably say) consists of corn, pease and potatoes, and a few who are fortunate enough to own a horse attempt to raise a little cotton. The land is very poor and as the crops receive little work, the yield is always small. A few hogs are raised, but the majority depend on the country stores for the few strips of bacon they eat during the year. Here in this county, though, the moonshine stills flourish as the green bay tree. In almost every cave and on every little brook among the hills may be found a still whose undertaker's delight is produced by the soft light of the moon and where Uncle Sam fails to get his pull-down of 90 cents on the gallon. These people are too far from market to sell their corn for money, but they can convert it into good, straight liquor, carry it in kegs or jugs to the more thickly settled neighbourhoods a few miles away and obtain a few dollars in money, some tobacco, coffee, and snuff for the women folks. Men, women, and children are all slaves to the tobacco habit. The women chew, smoke, and dip snuff, but "dipping" is generally a Sunday luxury, as snuff is hard for them to get.

The interior of the cabin of the clay eater is rude in the extreme. It is usually built of small pine logs, from which the bark is sometimes removed. There are no windows, and sometimes only one door. In winter the cracks between the logs are filled with rags and clay or thin boards nailed over them from the outside. In summer, these cracks are opened, in order to allow plenty of fresh air to enter. There are no pictures on the walls, no ornaments of any kind, and often no furniture worthy of the name. Of these, are bedsteads, and they are of the crudest kind, made by the head of the family, with no other tools than a saw, axe and hammer. Usually, the cabin is too small for bedsteads if the family is large, and they sleep on quilts and mattresses spread on the floor, often the ground. The entire family, often ten or more persons, eat and sleep in the same room, and the cooking is done on one fireplace, the utensils consisting of a frying pan, kettle, oven, and a pot. All modern conveniences are almost unknown. Few families ever see a newspaper, and there are but few of the people who can read. Their parents before them could not, and their children are growing up equally ignorant. Strange to say they do not believe in "book learning." If the head of the family is a member of the church, probably a cheap Bible may be found in the house, but they never hear it read except when a travelling preacher comes along and stops for dinner or stays all night. When the writer was in Winston County last year, he heard a man of God read from the Great Book and when he read "Jesus Christ died to save sinners," the good old motherly woman moved the cob pipe from her mouth and in utter astonishment remarked: "Is that so? I allus told Bill we'd never know nuthin' less we tuck the paper."

The clay eaten by these people is found along the banks of the small mountain stream in inexhaustible quantities, and is of a dirty white colour usually, sometimes a pale yellow. It has a peculiar oily appearance, and the oil keeps it from sticking to the hands or mouth. When dry, it does not crumble, and a few drops of water will easily soften it until it can be rolled into any shape desired. The clay is almost without taste, but evidently possesses some nourishment, as these people declare they can subsist on it for days without any other food whatever. They place a small piece in the mouth and hold it there until it dissolves, and is swallowed in small quantities at a time. The quantity eaten at one time varies from a lump as large as a pea for a child or beginner to a lump as large as a man's fist for those who have eaten it for years. Those people eat the clay with a ravenous relish, and the only bad effect seems to be the peculiar appearance it gives the skin of those who become addicted to the habit. The skin turns pale, so pale in fact, as to give the face the pallor of death, and then later on it turns a sickly pale yellow, a colour closely resembling some of the clay eaten. Children who become addicted to clay-eating, grow old, at least in appearance, prematurely, and their faces lose for ever the bright glow of youth and health. Strange as it may appear, there is little sickness among the clay-eaters, and they live as long as the average mankind, this proving that clay eating is not fatal in its effect.

It may or may not be the result of clay eating, but these people are as superstitious as the followers of a voudoo. They have signs for everything, and almost worship the moon. Corn is planted when the moon is full, and potatoes on the dark of the moon. They will not start on a journey or begin a job unless the moon is right, and they foretell storm and disaster by the appearance of the moon. If one end of the new moon is lower than the other, it will rain before the moon changes again, and if the new moon is level, there will be no rain until another change occurs. It might be remarked that the clay eaters are often as successful in their prognostications as the average manipulator of the weather bureau. For an owl the eater has a holy dread. The hooting of an owl at any hour after 8 o'clock in the evening and until nightfall the following day, is an omen of bad luck. If heard in the quiet hours of night and answered by the howl of a sleepless canine, it is a sign that one of the family will die before many moons. As soon as the hoot of an owl is heard a chair is overturned. If the hooting ceases at once the threatened danger has been warded off for a time, but if it continues there is weeping and wailing in the home of the clay eater. The howling of a dog at night is also an omen of ill luck, but it is not a sign of approaching fatality unless it is in answer to the hoot of an owl. When a screech owl lets forth one of its horrible and bloodchilling sounds, the women folks reach their hands up the chimney and get a handful of soot. A screech owl near the house is a sure sign of death.

With the tenacity of ignorance, these people cling to their filthy habits, traditions, and superstitions; of modern inventions and customs they have never dreamed, and they would ridicule the man who told them the world is round. Perhaps in time they will disappear with the onward march of civilization and enterprise.
