THE INDIAN FIELD.

THURSDAY, 4th November, 1909.

A CESAREWITCH SURPRISE.

By winning the Cesarewitch Stakes after a sensational race at the long odds of 33 to 1 against, Mr. J. B. Joel's three-year-old gleding, Submit, maintained the long run of surprises which have marked the affair since the publication of the acceptances for the long distance handicap at Newmarket. It was a terrific finish and although the spoils went to Submit chief honours rest with the Great Ebor Handicap winner, Dibs, who was only beaten a head. Lady de Bathe, who has won the race twice in twelve years with Merman and Yentoi, was third with Raytoi, who finished three-lengths behind Dibs. The favourite Rushcutter was never in the hunt, and Maya, who came with a rush in the market at the eleventh hour, was likewise badly beaten.

Submit was the only three-year-old in the race. It is not often a horse of that age proves the winner, for a glance at the table below will show that three-year-olds have only succeeded in winning five times during the last twenty years; the other four being Ragimunde in 1891, Cypria, who dead-heated with Red Eyes, two years later, St. Bris in 1896 and Balcorroch in 1901.

The scratching of Pure Gem by Submit's owner soon after the acceptances were announced and at a time when that horse was nominally favourite caused a tirade of abuse to be levelled at his head. The race is now over, and the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Did or did not Mr. Joel do a sportsmanlike action in scratching Pure Gem? The action saved thousands of pounds being invested. Was Mr. Joel bound to go a step further and tell the public that the reason he believed Pure Gem had no chance was because he had another engaged who at the weights would beat him. If Mr. Joel had taken the public into his confidence to this extent it would almost certainly have happened that Submit [illegible]own. BOOK NO. 545

It is said that Mr. Joel's commission on Submit was confined to £300 each way at starting price. If this is so he only netted £12,000 over the race. This is a mere flea-bite to the sums that have been won over the Cesarewitch.

Mr. George Hodgman, in his "Fifty Years Of The Turf," relates that when he ran the four-year-old Heiress, who was handicapped at 6 stone for the Cesarewitch of 1860, the bets his commissioner returned him were 42,000 to 1,000 for the first £1,000, and 30,000 to 1,000 for the second, total £72,000. Over Dulcibella, who won the race Mr. Swindells and party are said to have won over £120,000. The extraordinary thing in Dulcibella's case is that the horse that started favourite was in the same stable.

Mr. Swindells was one of those astute men who made a point, as he said, of never quarrelling with the press or the police. His favourite scribe was the late Mr. H. Willes, a genial gentleman, who wrote under "Argus" for the Morning Post. It was the wont of Mr. Willes to call on Mr. Swindells every Sunday to get inspiration for his Monday article. Paying his usual visit he told Mr. Swindells that he had "gone" for Killigrew for the Cesarewitch. "Go thee back and alter it" answered the old man. "What's the use of thee talking about Killigrew when I tell thee that I have backed the other one for Bill Day to win him £40,000, and I know he [illegible] the money bad; get thee back and alter it to Dulcibella." He did so and when it came to describing the race he did it in the language of the favourite novelist, G. P. R. James, thus:—"In the soft light of a mellow October afternoon there might have been seen wending his way across the flat at Newmarket a solitary horseman. His attire was peculiar, consisting of a silk jacket with black and orange stripes, etc. That solitary horseman was Sadler, who was riding Dulcibella, who came right away from the field before the flat was reached and won by ten lengths."

The latest winner of the first of the Newmarket "back end" handicaps was bred by the late Mr. H. Waring, and afterwards belonged to the late Mr. H. Barnato, in whose name as a two-year-old he ran second to Merry Margot in the Rookery Two-Year-Old Plate at the Sandown Park, first summer meeting, was unplaced in the Princess' Plate at the Newmarket 1st July meeting, ran second to Strickland in the Thirty-third Sale Stakes at Newmarket 2nd July meeting, and was placed third to Basil and Snappy in the Jolliffe Two-Year-Old Stakes at the Liverpool July meeting.

At Newbury last December Mr. J. B. Joel, his present owner, purchased him for 165 guineas, and his first outing under his new colours was in the Earlsfield Welter at Hurst, where he ran third to Hymettus and Myram. Next time out he won his first race, the Maiden Three-Year-Old Plate at Kempton, but was unplaced in the Epsom Stewards' Handicap. Submit ran second to Lowland Lord in the Ascot High Weight Stakes, and afterwards won the Stretchworth Plate at Newmarket, finished second to Vedanta in the Alexandra Handicap at Doncaster, and won the Wick Plate at Kempton his last outing prior to the Cesarewitch.

Submit was engaged in the Cambridgeshire Stakes, for which he has incurred a 14lb. penalty, and among other liabilities he holds an engagement in the Derby Gold Cup.

THE POONA RACES—1909

In view of the coming Calcutta racing season, the one that has just come to a conclusion in Poona was interesting and instructive, except that in the case of the absolute top-notchers there has always been the talk that certain of them have not shown their true form, having had insufficient work. This is quite true in a few instances, such as Peru, Bantock and perhaps Wandin, so that one finds the task of picking the winner of the Viceroy's Cup more difficult than it might otherwise have been. Not unwisely, trainers prefer a gradual preparation rather than get a horse ready and keep him so for a long time, so that those who are lucky enough to get an idea of what is going on between this and Xmas on the track will know more than we can now. Fizz is another to be considered as being perhaps better than when he won the stakes, and, though it is given out that the stable are by no means confident, money must be coming from somewhere for him to be at the price he is quoted. There is therefore very little to go on for this particular race, but we have had a seemingly very good line for the Trials.

Amongst those that started for it last year, nothing has occurred to make us change from Tangaroa and Wise Bird. The former has not won, but has always been prominent with his heavy weights. He may not have been quite as ready as he will be a couple of months hence, but what he has done as it is means he has not deteriorated. Wise Bird, good as she was last year, has improved over a distance as well as retaining her powers as a sprinter, proved by her win in the September. Crossbred has come on so wonderfully that one cannot say how good he will be when the time comes, though but few look upon his chance as a really rosy one. Sham Fight we have not seen at all, but the way he was backed in 1908 suffices to place him among the likely ones. Turning to the new-comers, Soult Line stands out on his own, and his Poona performances so soon after his arrival suggest the race in question being a good thing for him, as at only three pounds' difference he was always too good for Tangaroa.

On the subject of improved horses, the most remarkable perhaps is Picturesque. At less than a stone and a half, she beat Tangaroa easily and then came out for another bracket giving weight to Posco and Hunting Horn over a mile, eventually finishing within half a length of Wise Bird all out receiving only three pounds. Pincher is another who has surprised even his own connections by jumping right into the front rank in sprints and middle distances, asked to give Paul Pry and Oakton weight, and backed to do so. Winning four races, he winds up a very much better horse than he has ever been in this country. Metal Maid was out again after rather a long interval and was just running into form. Her third in the Epsom Plate suggests that she will be right back into her old form again in Bombay. Killua is as good as ever, so that Byramjee has as strong a hand as he had a year ago, when he was tempted to take them to Calcutta. Castalia has begun to show form and may now go on improving, but Pelargonium has done nothing since his Byculla Club Cup win, nor has Bucolic over shorter distances, though he has been backed on his track form on the chance that he will take a start for a change. Ebullition has been a failure up to now, but the stable picked up a soft race with Vigorous and another with Metal Boy. Mr. Galstaun has had far from a good time except with Bantock, a run-away win with Sue and a jump race or two. He must have been disappointed with Tangaroa's failure to secure a bracket, but it is to be hoped that the talk about his giving Poona a wide berth in future is only the usual idle race-course gossip.

We have not had very big fields for jump races and the interest in them has not been as great as it might have been, many of them being quite green at the game. Two of the most promising new ones were Our State and Dirty Boy, and it was a bit of very bad luck that the former should have had to be shot. That old plodder Daroji is as safe as ever and quite the champion of the year, winning twice and placing on the other two occasions. Idle we did not see much off, but his style was taking, whereas old Lamrock seems to be quite done with. Umutbee and Ugly have been consistent, but the stick horses have not struck one as a particularly brilliant lot, the most promising hurdler being Dirty Boy. In the same stable as Daroji, Tete-a-Tete has been the most consistent of the ponies. Once considered only fit for closed races, she has proved safe, more than could be said of most of them, and stays well. Winning once, she only lost by a nose to Cheeky and then showed her worth by leading all the way and dead-heating with Refresher a head behind Russley Rose over a flat mile. Recovery only started once with a crushing weight and except for Little Dolly, all the others have much to learn. Wakeful and Cheeky were improving each time, but both lost many lengths en voyage to the old stagers.

As to the ponies on the flat, owners are still on the buy and there is no likelihood of any such threats as were given out a couple of years ago to do away with races especially for them. Some big fields have gone out, and they provide good racing, old champions now having to receive weight from fresh importations. Comeback and Gun Metal have been the sensations of this class, the former for the way in which he has gone off and the latter for her improvement, Cracker's being almost as noticeable. We have only to look at the Brisbane Plate following the Big Meet, Gun Metal 9-12, Comeback 8-1, would anyone have believed they could justifiably be handicapped in that way a year ago. It was justified too, as Gun Metal led to very near the post and Cracker beat Comeback giving him 12lb.! Koko remains a light weight, but ran well and though Russley Rose could do nothing over short distances she came out to win the mile Colonial Plate. Refresher showed something like his true form in that race and on the next day we had a taste of Danseuse's abilities. She is a rare flier, and when she has been in the country a little longer there is no doubt she will prove well up to her reputation. Mr. M. G. holds a particularly strong hand in this class, but if he makes the mistakes he has made they will not show a very big profit in his betting book!

The Arabs have had the lion's share as usual, and there can be no getting away from the fact that they give excellent sport. They are credited with being uncertain and dangerous to back. As to the latter accusation there are ample grounds for it, but a fairly long and very careful study of them leaves the writer with the firm conviction that the former statement is untrue. There are usually large fields out which are hard to watch during the race and it is obviously an easy matter to "run a bye." A very large majority win absolutely on form or after showing that they are running into it, and there is every reason to believe that the glaring cases that do occur of inconsistency are more the fault of the man than the animal.

The long distenca races during the latter end of the season have been particularly interesting. The big race was won by the practically unthought of Balmoral and it was unlucky that, after so suddenly jumping into form, Sialkote should have gone without a bracket. Mr. G. K. was fortunate after putting Peculiar out of work to find Parliament improved as much as he was said to have done in the earlier part. Precious is his old self, with that marvellous dash at the finish, but one was sorry to see him kept at home after his accident during a trial prior to the Governor's Cup. Mr. Ali bin Talib has not had as good a season as one might expect, but Merrily has come on as expected and Darianoor will have to be reckoned with in future, whereas Eid, who was given a complete rest for a couple of years, is just getting his legs again. Second Thoughts and Pinkie came from up-country to bring off two of the biggest upsets of the season, but Alma has been disappointing. For the first time since he won the Governor's Cup two years ago, he began to come down in the weights. Twice he ran bang up, but at the very end when something was expected of him he ran like a hack.

Over middle distances we again find Tachreet champion, after being in hospital throughout the previous Poona season. Over anything up to a mile he is a little marvel, the superior of Bay Middleton over his best distances; the latter being perhaps scarcely as good as he used to be. The same stable found Ashroff and Salanic in great form; it is remarkable how much better the latter is in Poona than anywhere else. Scimitar is another, and seems now to be quite as good over six as five, a fact which also applies to Salanic, who usually makes all his own running. Bendigo was in great fettle early in the Extras, but one was rather inclined to over-rate him as he won when others were not tuned up. Spearmint has run remarkably consistently, but there has always been just one to beat him, this one twice being Urgent. Zinfandel, Silvermine, Little Gafil, Company and Shawcutt are others doing well over a bit of a distance, and it is a great pity that the last named cannot be made to go straight. Gafil and Rajput have been great rivals throughout, placing consistently, Shanwar also over shorter journeys. Sharar and Chechan are two of the most improved sprinters amongst the new ones, as well of course as Mr. M. G.'s Hachal, Winchester and Jadir. Mr. Adil has struck a little better luck, though Colaba could never quite get there. Plassy is as nippy as ever, and Zari with Minerva have come on to very near his mark. Mountain King only went out three times but won the Lilliputs, Grey Falcon doing no good for the same rather disappointed stable. It will not be long before we see them all out again with a new batch to add to our difficulties.

Appended are the season's statistics: The usual Form at a Glance appears further on:—

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE Calcutta course opened for work on Monday this week, and though only a few trainers were down, those that turned up were all loud in their praises of the going on the track. Not a sound could be heard as the various horses galloped past and the heavy "thud, thud" to which we have become accustomed in the old day, was conspicuous by its complete absence. Captain Hughes and Mr. Lance, who were present, were congratulated on all sides on the success of their efforts, and if the course works as well as seems probable, we are not likely to have anything like the number of breakdowns of former years.

THE chief topic of conversation was the withdrawal of Killorn's license by the W.I.T.C., and rumours and reports of all sorts of "alarums and excursions" are in the air. The reason of the stewards' action is not known for certain, and though it is believed that the riding of Lady Lomond was the "casus actionis" there is probably more behind. Anyhow, the loss of Killorn's services through the cold weather at this late stage of affairs is very disconcerting to Scott's stable as he will be very difficult to replace.

ENTRIES for the Tollygunge Gymkhana are a good deal better than was anticipated; indeed, quite on the large side, and a very good afternoon's sport may be anticipated on Saturday.

THE official measurer of the C.T.C., will class, age and measure horses and ponies at the Jumping School, near the Zeerut Bridge to-morrow morning at 7 o'clock.

As will be seen from our special telegrams Prince Foote, who won the V.R.C., Derby at Melbourne last Saturday, has also carried off the Melbourne Cup. Prince Foote is a two-year-old whose only successes previous to the above were the A.J.C. Derby on the 2nd ultimo and a victory in the A.J.C., Sire's Produce Stakes 7 furlongs £1,112, at the A.J.C. meeting last April. Carrying 10lb. more he ran second to Malt King in the Champage Stakes at the same meeting.

WE learn that we are in all probability not to hear the cheery voice of Mr. Harry Goldspink at the Calcutta meetings this year—the first Viceroy's Cup that veteran bookmaker will have missed for over twenty years. But Dame Rumour was ever a lying jade and we trust that we shall see our old friend at his pitch on the course and at the Great Eastern Hotel when Cup day comes round.

The well-known firm of Champion and Company are on their way out in the Persia and will be here in good time for the first extra meeting.

THE Fifteenth Annual Horse Show of the Tollygunge Club will be held on Friday the 31st December, entries closing on the 16th idem.

THERE now seems little doubt that both Otto Madden and W. Halsey have definitely decided to relinquish race-riding at the close of the current season, and as neither Maher nor Dillon will be seen in the saddle as frequently next year as they have in the past, the ranks of the older brigade of jockeys will be thinned indeed. Halsey, who formerly acted as private trainer for Sir John Millar, has ridden for nine consecutive years for Sir Ernest Cassel, and is surely the most versatile jockey of the day, for he is just as good over a country as he is on the flat. As a trainer, too, few can teach him anything.

A REMARKABLE freak of nature (says the Wagga Advertiser) has come to light at the Wattle Vale Stud, where the Holbrook mare Hollette gave birth to a colt foal with one of the forelegs possessing an extraordinary deformity. From the knee down there is what looks uncommonly like two dog legs, a close inspection of the toe of each under the hair revealing a nail. The youngster is otherwise a remarkably strong, healthy foal. Mr. McGrath has made him a present to the veterinary surgeon, Mr. T. Lansley, who does not anticipate any trouble in rearing the colt. It is a great pity that the colt is so deformed, as being by Prudent King (imp.) from Hollette, a grand-daughter of Lochiel, he is bred on rare lines, and might easily have proved a galloper.

OUR London correspondent writes:—I wired you the result of the Cesarewitch last Wednesday. A big upset—the favourite, Rushcutter, nowhere, the winner, Submit, a 33 to 1 chance. It was an extremely exciting race, but long before the finish the admirers of Rushcutter knew their fate. For such a well-backed candidate he gave an exceedingly weak display, and he was very badly beaten. It was a great finish between Submit and Dibs, and the three-year-old just beat the Ebor Handicap winner, whose chief peculiarity at home is that he will not exert himself in his gallops. In order to get him fit his trainer has at times had him walked on the roads for a distance of fifteen miles, and then trotted home, making a thirty miles jaunt. The victory of Submit was a big surprise, as the colt was considered lucky to beat the moderate King Charming at Kempton as recently as Friday last.

The supporters of Laughing Mirror had a fright before the race, as she was reported to be lame owing to having been cast in her box. It was said that she would not run, but in view of the fact that she had been heavily supported by the public her owner eventually decided to send her to the post. There was a big eleventh hour demonstration for Maya, who is little more than a pony, and at one time she seriously threatened to depose Rushcutter as favourite.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Bombay Jackal Club was held in the Bombay Gymkhana on the 25th ultimo, Mr. J. H. Symington presiding. After the minutes of the last meeting had been taken as read and the balance sheet for the season 1908-09 had been passed Mr. Meikle proposed and Mr. Moberly seconded:—"That the following gentlemen be asked to serve on the Committee for the coming year, viz.:—Messrs. R. W. L. Dunlop, H. E. E. Procter, J. H. Symington, A. R. Burney, A. E. Lord, and R. G. Campbell." This was carried unanimously. The chairman proposed and Mr. A. Forbes seconded:—"That Mr. F. Hearson be elected Honorary Secretary for the coming year," and this was carried with acclamation. It was proposed by Mr. T. L. Roberts, and seconded by the Honorary Secretary, "That there be an entrance fee of Rs. 25" (carried unanimously). It was further proposed by Mr. H. C. Wright, and seconded by Mr. T. L. Roberts, "that the annual subscription be raised to Rs. 25." This was also carried unanimously. After a vote of thanks to the Honorary Secretary for his services in the past year the meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE General Meeting of the Lahore Hunt Committee, was held on the 29th ultimo, in the Montgomery Hall, Lahore with the Hon'ble Sir A. H. Reid, President of the Hunt in the chair. Mr. C. R. P. Winser, South Lancashire Regiment, was elected Master of the Hunt, Major Dunlop Smith, A.V.C., Deputy Master and Honorary Secretary, with the following Committee:—Mr. Leslie Jones, Captain Mitchell, 12th Lancers, Major Moemunu, R.F.A., and Major A. Smith, C.V.D.

Fifteen couple of dog hounds have arrived from Messrs. Wilton, of London, and they form a most promising pack, there being every prospect of an excellent season. The opening meet will be at the kennels on Tuesday, the 11th instant.

JAMSETJEE, who has been professional Racquets Champion of the world since 1903, has been challenged by Williams, of Princes Club London, who recently won the professional Racquets Championship of England. Under the conditions agreed upon before playing when Jamsetjee won in 1903 the matches must be played in England and therefore if Jamsetjee defends his title he must go to England for two or three months (probably next March).

Jamsetjee, before accepting the challenge, must find out if he can raise the necessary money (about Rs. 6,000) for his expenses and the stakes. Several players and others in Bombay have expressed their willingness to subscribe towards these: any other sportsmen who are desirous of assisting should forward their subscriptions to B. C. Reade, Esq., Honorary Secretary for Racquets, Bombay Gymkhana.

THE Punjab Commission Cup Cricket Tournament will open shortly, entries closing on the 10th instant to the Honorary Secretary, Mr. A. E. Danson, C.S., Registrar, Chief Court, Lahore.

MR. FRAMJEE PATEL, who is one of the organisers of the scheme for sending a representative Indian cricket eleven to England, has received the following letter on the subject from Lord Harris:—So far as I personally am concerned it goes without question that I should be glad to see a really representative eleven playing in England against the Counties, and you may be sure that I will do my best to induce support from the M. C. C. and the leading Counties. I think that it would be wise to come under the aegis of the M. C. C., and I will put your letter before the committee at an early date. My impression is that 1912 has been selected as the year in which both Australia and South Africa may come to England. If so, it would be useless your coming then and 1911 would have to be the year. Of course, I will let you know about this definitely when I write again. If I can secure the assistance of the M. C. C., I shall then approach the leading Counties, but I am sorry to say that many of our Counties are in a far from flourishing state financially, and may hesitate before pledging themselves to guarantee. Hoping that between us we may successfully engineer the visit. Toms, Harris.

THE North-West Frontier Polo Tournament will be held at Peshawar during Christmas week, and is open to any Regimental or Station Club team in the North-West Frontier Province.

NAT J. CARTMELL, who represented Pennsylvania University in the amateur athletic championships in England this year, has turned professional, and challenged A. B. Postle for three matches at various distances, from 130 to 440 yards.

Cartmell has been touring England and Scotland during the just-concluded season, and has been a star attraction (together with R. E. Walker) at many of the big meetings. It comes as no great surprise to hear that he has gone over.

AT the meeting of the Cambridge University Boat Club held on the 15th ultimo, Mr. E. G. Williams was elected president and Mr. G. E. Fairbairn honorary secretary. The Coxwainless Fours were fixed for 4th November, and the Colquboun Sculls for 18th November.

PLAYING against the Kumartolli Club on Saturday, the Howrah United Club compiled 263 for the loss of one wicket. W. Rollins was not out 104, and G. Chesney played good cricket and was undefeated 109 when the innings was declared closed. Kumatolli made 114 for 5 wickets.

THE Aga Khan Hockey Tournament held at Poona will this year, commence on the 15th November, entries closing on the 10th idem. Particulars on application to the Honorary Secretary, Captain D. G. Cowie, R.A., Poona Gymkhana Club.

A TELEGRAM from New York state that Jeffries and Johnson have agreed to box for the championship of the world before the Club offering them most, the fight to take place not later than 5th July next. In a special article to the last number of Boxing, which came to hand by last mail, "Jeff" affirmed his intention of meeting the coloured man. He was of opinion that the best purse offered would be in the States—possibly in Oklahoma, where a big syndicate have talked big money and are likely to put it down. "Big Jim" goes on to tell us how he has been training for the fight, and hints of a possible meeting between himself and Erlanger later on. He says he thinks Freddie Welsh, the fastest and cleverest boxer he had ever seen, and predicts a win for him in the Welsh—Summers contest which is to come off on the 8th instant.

An Australian exchange has the following details of the fight between Johnson and Ketchel—the bare result of which was cabled us a fortnight ago:—

The contest between 'Jack" Johnson the world's champion and Stanley Ketchel took place on the 16th October, at Colma near San Francisco. The fight was for the championship of the world, 20 rounds, and 60 per cent. of the gross receipts, 65 per cent. to go to the winner and 35 per cent. to the loser. There was a side bet of 5,000 dollars each, "Jack" Walsh acted as referee and the betting was 5 to 2 on Johnson and even money that Ketchel stayed 15 rounds. The weights were Johnson 14st. and Ketchel 12st. 8lb. Time was called at 3-10 P.M.

Round 1.—They shook hands and Johnson opened the proceedings by scoring a hard left hook on the stomach, Ketchel sparred for half a minute and then the champion scored with a long range shot on the left of the face. Ketchel responded by forcing the black against the ropes, but Johnson wriggled away and the bell ended a tame round.

Round 2.—Johnson shot two lefts to the nose, and Ketchel played for the stomach, which angered the champion who delivered a hard jaw blow. There was a lot of clinching.

Rounds 3 and 4.—Both men sparred in a perfunctory manner for 30 seconds. Ketchel landed a right but Johnston retaliated with two upper cuts in quick succession and then rushed Ketchel to the ropes. Johnson backed away and Ketchel teased the champion trying to force a lead, but the balance of the round was eventless.

Round 5.—Ketchel got home on the body with the left and the black responded with two weak face lefts. The champion then livened up and sent his opponent's head back twice with blows that landed on the nose. Ketchel showed unexpected cleverness in blocking the negro's leads. Johnson had a shade the best of the round.

Round 6.—Ketchel opened by sending lefts to the face and body and Johnson countered with a left to the stomach, and then he shot out his left again, catching Ketchel on both hands. Ketchel went to the floor, but came up smiling and began to force the pace. Johnson brought blood to his adversary's nose with two lefts. Johnson established a good lead and with superior strength bore Ketchel back in the clinches.

Round 7.—The fighters exchanged hooks to the face and body, and Ketchel missed a fearful left swing, and the pair clinched. Johnson landed several on the nose and face, and Ketchel swung a terrible left, which getting home raised a big lump on the champion's jaw. It was the cleverest and best blow in the fight, and the crowd yelled gleefully.

Round 8.—Johnson was first to score, getting in with two lefts on the face. Ketchel planted a hard uppercut on the black's jaw, and they clinched. Ketchel sent his right and left to Johnson's face as he separated from the clinch and almost immediately afterwards he again missed Johnson with a terrific right swing.

Round 9.—The referee broke two clinches soon after the gong sounded, and the champion set four stinging lefts to the face, but Ketchel did not break ground. Johnson smothered a stomach blow, and broke away from a clinch with a straight left. It was the champion's round.

Round 10.—After a clinch Johnson sent two lefts to the face and jaw, which started Ketchel spitting blood. Johnson wrestled Ketchel to the floor, and uppercut him. Johnson again sent in straight lefts to the mouth and nose starting the blood afresh. The champion followed this up with an awful stomach pounch, which made Ketchel wince.

Round 11.—After some desultory sparring Ketchel whipped his left to Johnson's kidneys but missed two hard swings for the jaw. Johnson's famous right uppercut failed to find Ketchel, who sent a terrible right to the jaw, which caused Johnson to clinch, Ketchel taking advantage of his success forced the fighting but could not penetrate the negro's defence. Ketchel went to the corner badly battered about the face.

Round 12.—Ketchel rushed Johnson, who stumbled and fell. He rose slowly in a crouching position, and sprang at his opponent as the latter reached in, raining blow after blow, while Ketchel was caught off his guard. He tottered under the assault, and a left to the body and two swift rights to the head stretched him on the floor to be counted out.

It will be of interest to hockey players in India to know the following change in the rule relating to the penalty-bully:—

Rule 16. Penalty-bully.—A penalty-bully shall be played by the offender, and by any player selected by the other team on the spot where the breach occurred. All other players shall be beyond the nearer 25 yards line in the field of play, and shall not cross such 25 yards line, or take any further part in the game until the penalty-bully is completed. If during the progress of a penalty-bully the offender sends the ball over any part of the goal line other than that between the goal posts, the penalty-bully shall be taken again; if he sends the ball over the goal line between the goal posts, a penalty goal shall be awarded to the attacking team; in all other cases as soon as the ball has passed wholly over the goal line (not between the goal posts) or outside the striking circle, the game shall be restarted by a bully on the centre of the nearer 25 yards line.

Penalties.

16. (a) Breach of any rule by the offender (except Rule 9).

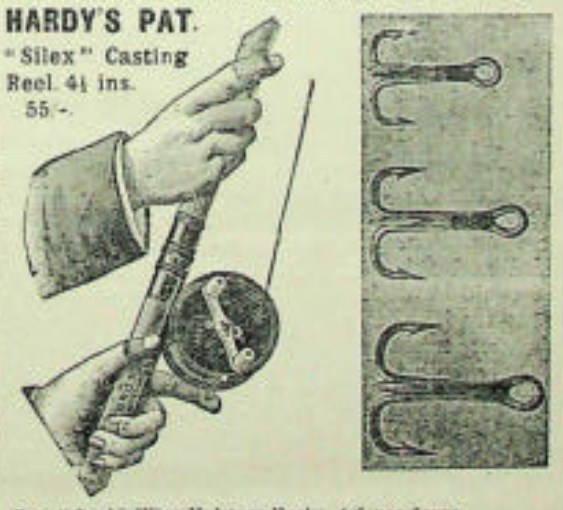
The attacking team shall be awarded a penalty goal, which shall be of the same value as an ordinary goal.

(b) Breach of any rule by the player selected by the attacking team (except Rule 9).

The defending team shall be allowed a free hit.

(c) Simultaneous breach of any rule by both players. The bully shall be taken again.

It is understood that this revised rule is to be in force in Bengal (including the Civil division of Chota Nagpur whose newly formed Hockey Association has lately been affiliated to the B. H. A.) from the hockey season of 1910.



The final of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Hockey Tournament took place at Shahjahanpur on Saturday, the O. and R. Sports Club, Lucknow, beating the Shahjahanpur Police by 3 goals to nil after a fast and interesting game. A report of the tournament appears further on.

An interesting Hockey match took place on the Mahomed Bagh Club Ground, Lucknow, on the 25th October, between the Terai Wanderers, composed largely of players from Fyzabad, Gonda and Bahraich, and a Cantonment team. The game after a close contest resulted in a draw of four goals each. Gregg and Uzielli hit the goals for Lucknow. Teams:—Terai Wanderers: Indian (goal). Moseley O'Donnel (backs); Murray, Norton Esye (half-backs); Gairns, Moran, Shireff, Moore, Burdett (forwards). Lucknow: Colonel Thompson (goal); Captain Moriarty, Captain Blackwell (backs), Lieutenants Shaw, Hodgson and Bagnall (half-backs); Captain Stack, Lieutenant Gregg, Lieutenant Uzielli, Captain Grant and Lieutenant Milne (forwards).

We regret to learn of a serious shikar accident to Mr. Hurst Ray, Engineer of the Nedeem Tea Company, and Mr. G. Krummel, of Calcutta. While out shooting near Bagrakote, on the Bengal Dooars Railway, in the dusk, they stumbled against a trap gun they had set over a kill in the jungle. The trap went off and both men were hit. Assistance was quickly at hand, and they were brought down to Calcutta and admitted to the Presidency General Hospital. Mr. Ray, who received almost the entire discharge in his right foot, has had it amputated, and it is feared that Mr. Krummel, whose foot was likewise injured, will also have to lose this member.

Few hunters have undergone such terrifying experience as that which befall Mr. Harry Williams, the African explorer. He was attacked by a wounded lion, which mauled him very severely and would have killed him but for the unexpected intervention of one of his gun-bearers. Mr. Williams has related the following account of his experience:—"Mr. Selous and I had joined Mr. McMillan, but on 8th June I was out alone, having only my two gun-bearers with me, when I observed a lion on the right nearly 300 yards away. He was prowling along, and apparently did not notice me, but I could see by the swish of his tail he was an angry beast. I fired both barrels of my 450 at him, one bullet reaching him in the flank. It was only a slight flesh wound, but it paralysed him for a moment, and he sat down on his haunches like a dog. After a few minutes he got up and went into a bit of open bush. Not knowing what state the brute might be in, I made for a big open patch on my left front, hoping to get a better sight of him. The lion, however, had been watching me from his retreat, and at 200 yards distance he sprang out of the bush and came straight for me at a terrifying pace. I waited until he was within 60 yards, and then let him have both barrels. One shot missed him, but the other lodged in the fleshy part of his shoulder. The only effect it had was to infuriate him more than ever, and I now thought myself a dead man, for there was no time to reload, and the gun-bearer was not actually in reach with the other rifle. It was a terrifying sight—the brute's jaw already open to seize me by my left shoulder and breast; but, with the courage born of despair, I raised my rifle in both hands and struck him across the side of the head. Almost simultaneously he ducked and seized me by the right leg, shaking me from side to side as though I had been a rat. My gun-bearer, the pluckiest creature, black or white, that I have ever read of, came up while the lion was actually mauling me, shoved the rifle he carried down to me, and asked me how to turn the safety catch. I had sufficient presence of mind to be able to explain in a second, and the gun-bearer fired. The lion left me and rushed into a

No one who studies the great apes can fail to be impressed by the Darwinian theory, and in reading a recent article by a Times correspondent on these wonderful creatures one observes many interesting points which support Darwin's arguments. The gorilla has only recently become known to civilized mankind. It was not until 1819 that Bowdich told with something like exactness of the existence of a creature which was doubtless the true gorilla, and not until 1847 that Dr. Savage succeeded in collecting a fairly comprehensive account of the great ape, in which some myth was intermingled, and in bringing back to America, and thence to Europe, bones enough to enable Professor Owen and others definitely to identify an animal different from the orang or chimpanzee, then officially named, and since known as, the gorilla. The lack of reference to the great apes in ancient literature is in a measure compensated for by the native legends, which have grouped themselves around the mysterous "men of the woods." Such are the Fesee, the Eastern cannibal ape which entices its victims into its trap by mimicking the laughter of girls; the Susumete, which one European, who saw one killed, is said to have declared to have been "as much a man as himself;" the Indian Mum, part-bear, part-man, part-ape; the wild hairy man of Surinam which carries a club and, the natives say, tries when dying to talk in human speech; and the Soko which was met with by Stanley. Of all the great apes the gorilla is beyond question the most formidable, a large male standing not infrequently over 5 feet 6 inches in height, and bones are known of one which apparently measure in life no less than 6 feet 2 inches. It is still uncertain whether in a wild state, except in the immediate moment of attack, it ever actually walks erect without either resting its knuckles on the ground or supporting itself by a branch overhead, but it is known to beat its fists upon its breast when enraged making a noise thus which is described as sounding "like a great bass drum" at a distance of a mile. It is said to lie in wait crouched on the lower branches of trees overhanging a path, and, when a human being passes, to drop one of its long hind limbs and, clutching the victim by the throat so suddenly and in so terrible a grip that hardly a sob is heard, to drag it—man or woman—up to its lurking place. It is credited with capturing and stealing women and carrying them off to keep them in the forests, and, armed with clubs, is said to attack and bear off elephants. Both the chimpanzee and the orang build themselves platforms or nests, the former more or less habitually for sleeping purposes, while the latter is also said to cover itself with leaves when it rains; and in these habits Darwin thought he saw "the first steps towards architecture and dress as they arose among the early progenitors of man." In structure, so alike are man and a gorilla that, though the two are easily enough distinguished, it is scientifically "by no means easy to find absolutely distinctive characters which are other than 'relative.'" So alike are they that every organ and bone and muscle and tendon in man has its counterpart in the apes; and yet, it is said, that as one looks at the latter in the London Ape House with their strange human ways, pathetically broken by purely brute irrelevances, the essential fact which impresses itself on one's mind is that they—the "half bipeds" the alali which "cannot speak and have no understanding more than beast"—the one conviction which obliterates everything else is that they an not men, but only apes.

The Annual Mounted Sports held by the Bombay Gymkhana extended over three days last week. Entries were most satisfactory—far better than they were last year—fields were very fair and competition keen. The programmes on all three days were varied and interesting, the arrangements were all that could be desired, and proceedings were carried through with despatch, there being no tedious waits between events. The attendance was small on the opening day, but on Thursday and Saturday the enclosures were well filled, and really excellent sport was witnessed on the final day. The Stewart Cup for the winner of the highest aggregate marks at the big meeting went to Mr. H. C. Richmond with 38 marks, with Mr. L. M. Grayburn second with 30 marks: and the Aggregate Cup for the highest marks obtained at the weekly meetings during the season was captured by Mr. Grayburn, with Mr. Richmond second. Mr. Edgar H. Fischer, the artist, arrives in India this month. He is coming out to make some studies of the country, and incidentally to do a commission or two. Mr. Fischer exhibited at the London Academy in 1903, 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908. He sent nothing in 1904, and was crowded out this year.

We have received from the publishers a copy of a new sporting journal, entitled the Illustrated Sporting Review, which appears weekly and deals with sport in the Bombay Presidency. We wish our new contemporary every success.

The following interesting article appears in Swadesh:—

There are many Swadeshi Concerns of long standing in the country to which attention is never drawn apparently because they do not lend themselves to making political capital.

Most of our readers have no doubt heard from time to time, of the Elgin Mills Company, Cawnpore. Perhaps, many of them have seen it or been over it or, at any rate, bought some of the numerous goods manufactured there, but few have probably ever troubled to calculate or think what an immense industry of this sort means to the country.

To begin with it employs over 2,000 natives of India, to whom it pays on an average Rs. 25,000 per mensem, as wages, equal to Rs. 3,00,000 per year. All this sum of money goes into the pockets of the native operatives, the amounts varying from Rs. 3 to a small boy of ten to Rs. 150 to a skilful mistri or supervisor. This is without calculating the amount paid to dyers, tailors, tent-makers and a number of other smaller industries.

The amount of coal required in twelve months is over 5,000 tons, all of which has been dug out of Indian mines by Indian labour. Then again the quantity of cotton required per year is equal to the yield of 100,000 acres of land. Just think what this means, and that it gives food and clothing, and the means of subsistance to the cultivators of all these thousands of acres.

The Elgin Mills are situated on the banks of the Ganges at Cawnpore, and the motive power is drawn from the Ganges water itself, being, of course, first turned into steam by Indian coal.

The outturn per day amounts to, on an average, 100,000 miles of yarn sufficient to go completely round the earth once every three hours and the daily outturn of cloth would equal a strip 3 feet wide and nearly 16 miles long.

I would ask my readers to consider these statistics and to think what a great benefit to the country a factory of this sort is. Those of my readers who are in Calcutta can see the quality of goods by calling at the office of Messrs. Samuel Fitze and Company, Limited, 5, Fancy Lane.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 15th October 1909.

In the midst of the peculiarly displeasing weather we are having, I suppose one ought to extract a grain or two of comfort from the reflection that it is an unusually healthy London we are living in just now. I see it stated in this morning's papers that the week's death roll was lower by about 250 than that for the corresponding week of the past eleven years. There were nearly a thousand more births than deaths. The death-rate of the metropolis has fallen to 11·6 per 1,000 per annum, which is far below that of Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, or Glasgow. It is also considerably below that of Paris, Berlin, or New York. London's death-rate for the past four weeks has averaged 12·1 per 1,000 per annum, which is 2·4 below the average rate in the corresponding periods of the last five years. I suppose this satisfactory condition of affairs is the direct outcome of the strenuous policy now adopted by the London County Council in respect of the public health administration of the city. On the other hand there be those who are not particularly enthusiastic over our efforts to keep a large percentage of the population alive. These good people consider that an excess of zeal in this direction amounts to ill-advised opposition to Dame Nature's efforts to get rid of the surplus and effete population. These are the people who shake their heads when they read of famine relief and other well-intentioned activities for prolonging the life of the Indian ryot, and declare that it is but flying in the face of Providence and wilfully disturbing the balance of Nature which thoughtfully provides plague, pestilence and famine as a means of relieving wickedly congested areas and incidentally assisting in the survival of the fittest. A long residence in the East, and some experience of famine and hospital organisations inclines me to lean somewhat towards this theory.

And while we grow healthier apparently we grow more moral, at all events in so far as our observance of the Seventh Commandment goes. The Michaelmas term opened yesterday, and straightway we are cheered by certain statistics which show that there is a remarkable decrease in the number of divorce cases set down for this term as compared with this time last year. The present list totals 265; that of last year contained 348 cases. The decrease is largely in undefended divorce cases, which now total 138, as against 198 in October 1908.

But reading a little further on I am not so sure that we really are being swept by a moral wave for I learn of much clearance up of arrears, so that after all the decrease may be attributable solely to the vigorous manner in which the new President of the Divorce Division has set to work—a far more likely explanation methinks.

Prominent among these cases, was that in which Mr. J. M. Barrie, the world famous author and dramatist, last Wednesday obtained a legal severance of partnership with the actress, who was known as Miss Mary Ansell and to whom he was married about five years ago. General sympathy is with the petitioner; the co-respondent was Gilbert Cannan and there was no defence.

Our leading actresses seem to be suffering from Cacoethes scribendi in a mild form. In the case of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt the malady has taken the form of a four-act play shortly to be given at an important theatre I believe. In Mrs. Langtry (Lady de Bathe), the symptoms have developed in a novel—"All at Sea"—which is more or less the condition of the hardy reader, who follows the story from its highly stimulating frontispiece depicting an osculatory passage between the hero and heroine (apparently indulged in for the special benefit of two fur-coated people in the back ground) to the time when Lord Vernham and "Mrs. Rensbaw" ring down the curtain on their tomfoolery. It is all utterly improbable, but very funny and very feminine; like the Curate's Egg, it is good in parts and what's more it is going to sell or I am much mistaken.

And Mr. Joseph R. Kipling, better known perhaps by his middle name of Rudyard, has been busy again. This time his work is entitled "Actions and Reactions" and though I subscribe to the pretty general opinion that this author practically wrote himself out years ago, I ungrudgingly confess that in these stories of beer and airships and ghosts and dogs and Anglo-American kinship a good deal of the old Kipling is manifest. Most of them have appeared before in various magazines, but they bear reproduction and to those for whom there is only one Kipling they are naturally vested with the grateful and comforting properties of Epps's cocoa.

Many people in India knew the late Major John Charles Massy Wheeler of the 84th Punjabis, and all who had that privilege will receive the news of his tragic and sudden death with unfeigned regret. He was about to undergo some minor nasal operation at King Edward VII. hospital and had been given an anaesthetic, immediately after which respiration ceased, and all efforts to revive him failed. Major H. Chichester, of the same regiment, at home on leave, attended the inquest and stated that for sixteen years he and the deceased had been friends and in service together. They had both suffered from malaria. Major Wheeler had been "smashed up" several times at steeplechasing, but he was very hard physically. In fact, he was the hardest man witness had ever met. He could go snipe and duck shooting from early morning to late at night and show no signs of fatigue. Which is only another lamentable illustration of the fact that extreme physical fitness is frequently associated with unsuspected organic weakness which may be productive of the most distressing results at what may be called trival provocation.

The Aldwych theatre is trying a new experiment; this time the programme is largely musical and for which the "American State Band of the National Guard" are responsible. The music not too bad, but the items sandwiched in between make the poorest appeal to the average person. If the audience were only asked to listen to the A.S.B.N.G. all would be well, for the energy and spirit they put into it are beyond all praise, even allowing for the sameness of noise and brass about their selections. But in order to bring the entertainment within the limits of a stage performance Mr. Philip Yorke has been constrained to weave around the band an alleged musical comedy—The Musical Martians—which really incites to derision. And then there is that terrible weariness to the flesh, a "Salome" dramatic fragment which stirs no emotion other than wonder. All the same the band really is well worth hearing—once.

* * * * * *

Mr. Lewis Waller put on "Sir Walter Raleigh" at the Lyric last Wednesday, and the piece received the usual hysterical, unrestrained welcome from the Wallerites in full force assembled. The author is Mr. William Devereux and as in "Henry of Navarre" he has given us a few grains of historical and a bushel of incidents out of his own head. And both in incident and movement the piece is strikingly wanting. In such a play unless the characters are up and doing all the time there is nothing to atone for comparative poverty of its language or the sketchy drawing of the characters themselves. "Raleigh," as here presented, is a disjointed, by no means ingenious, long winded and shadowy affair; it limps along and never seems to get there. It is pretty enough from a spectacular standpoint and Mr. Waller is at home in it as he always is in romantic melodrama. Miss Winifred Emery made much out of poor material as Queen Elizabeth—hers was an exceedingly good character study, in fact; Miss Lilian Braithwaite acted prettily as Raleigh's bride; Mr. A. E. George looked very grim as the chief conspirator, and others prominent in a long cast were Mr. C. W. Somerset, Mr. Shiel Barry, and Mr. Herbert Jarman.

The versatile Mr. Rudolf Besier, author of "The Virgin Goddess" and "Olive Latimer's Husband" is responsible for a very fine example of modern comedy called "Don" produced last Tuesday night at the Haymarket. The story is all about a young man who does a good action for his conscience's sake without understanding what "the World" will think of him. He finds a woman married to a grasping, grinding, unsympathetic husband, and he rescues her from that husband, he comforts her during a whole night—alone, together, you must understand; and because he has done what has been a really fine thing, the World turns upon him—the World, including the woman's husband—and he is in strong danger of being kicked out of the society of decent men. Everything is against him. His father thinks him a blackguard; so does his mother; so, reluctantly, does his sweetheart. But, again, he has really done a fine thing, and in the end all comes out well.

Stephen Bonington is a modern Don Quixote—hence the name of the play—and his simple faith, his ingenuous generosity, his open-hearted appreciation of mankind, provide fingers that play upon all the strings of human nature. There is wit in "Don," and subtle stagecraft, but it is its human note that mostly matters. As Stephen Bonington by name, but Don by instinct—Mr. Charles Quartermaine acted with much sympathy and feeling. As Ann Sinclair, who "seemed to understand," Miss Ellen O'Malley was very good indeed. So also were Mr. James Hearn, Mr. Dawson Milward (in a character part—a part which effectually hid his pleasant personality), Mr. Norman McKinnel (strong, but little in evidence).

Bernard Shaw again. This time in a remarkably vicious attack upon what he calls the "revolting villainy" of British officials in Egypt. We find it in the preface he has written to the second edition of the "Great Boomsters'" novel, "The White Prophet." Referring to the Denshawai affair in 1906, when a British officer was killed by villagers, of whom four were hanged, Mr. Shaw says that "the officials of the occupation in Egypt, from Lord Cromer downwards, thought the Denshawai affair rather a fine thing. Under this impression they themselves supplied the evidence that it was the most sensationally revolting villainy that has disgraced English rule in our time.

"It was not founded on the popular theory that East and West are congenitally unlike, and that the methods that succeed with one will not succeed with the other.

"On the contrary, the argument was that as the Easterns are born murderers, torturers, perjurers, tyrants, and corrupters of justice, and understand nothing else, we must show them that we are their masters in all these departments of despotic government, and can out-murder them, out-torture them, and, generally, go one worse than they on all points of political conduct."

And this is Mr. Shaw's summing up of British rule in Egypt:—

"On its own showing it is mostly snobbish, uppish, huffish, narrow, ignorant, conceited, and subject to paroxysms of panic in which it is capable of falsehood, cruelty, and injustice. But it is protected from exposure by the idolatry of officialism which has lately taken possession of England."

I cannot say to what Presidency Mr. T. Sloan (the Oxford Rugby Football Blue and Scottish International) will be posted, but footballers in India will be interested to hear that he leaves England shortly to take up an Indian Civil Service appointment.

The poor old Crystal Palace—long threatened—goes to its doom at last. The court has found the Company to be obviously insolvent, and has made an order for its compulsory winding up. Soon Ichabod will be writ above its portals and "Brock's Benefit" cease to figure among our annual fixtures.

The Vagrant.

Shikar.

SOME CHARACTERISTIC TRAITS OF THE MOOSE.

"As fine a moose country as ever lay out o' doors, that's for sure," exclaimed our grizzled New Brunswick guide in his breezy vernacular, pointing toward the country in which we were to spend a fortnight's hunting one September. And so it proved to be, for it was a country of many streams, dominated by the broad, salmon-laden Miramichi, and its seemingly innumerable branches; of many lakes, large and small, shallow and deep; of much bog and barren land, and hardwood ridges over which the yellow birch had already begun to spread its autumn cloak like a golden sash around the evergreens. It is just such regions as this that seem to be made to order for the moose, largest and hardiest member of the deer family, which Mr. Selous described as a "quaint, ungainly, old-time looking beast."

Patience is an absolutely necessary virtue in moose hunting, especially during the calling season. Hunting them may often mean long, weary hours of watching and waiting by the side of some lonely lake or barren in the early hours of a frosty morning, or in the chill of a late afternoon; nothing to do but watch and wait and listen to your guide as he occasionally gives an echoing wind or a muffled grunt upon his birchbark horn, or fight the black fly, cursing in a whisper, for your guide will not let you raise your voice lest you frighten approaching game. Sometimes the silence is so intense that it beats upon your ears and literally creates a roar. And fortunate indeed is the man who has not gone through a siege of black flies in the autumn. I have seen them in almost unbearable profusion in New Brunswick as late as October. But this is rare. Usually they have lost their vigour by that time, if they have not entirely disappeared with the first frosts. One autumn I shall not soon forget was a very late one, warm, with an unusual amount of rain. Travelling was very difficult; even the best of the portage roads became running streams. As one old guide very aptly put it, "I would almost be feared of being drowned except the black flies are always here to pull me out!"

In the first place, the moose, perhaps more than any other wild animal, depends primarily upon his sense of smell. Failure to bear this in mind has lost many a rash hunter a good pair of antlers. As an illustration: On one occasion we had just left the settlement and were making our way to camp, twenty-five miles away in the heart of the woods, when we noticed distinct, fresh tracks along the tote road. We knew they were very fresh because muddy water was still standing in the hoof marks. All of us—all but the guides—at once exclaimed, "That animal must be very near," and one especially zealous hunter set out in advance and followed those tracks with the utmost fidelity for three solid hours. According to all outward and visible signs, the moose was keeping only a little distance ahead and he would soon come into view, or at least make his position known by the snapping of a twig or the beating of his "paddles" against a tree. But he never did. When, finally, the chase was abandoned, and a guide was asked why the moose was never heard from, he simply said, "Damn it, man, don't you know that animal got our wind way back there at the settlement!" Sure enough, we took observations, and the wind was dead astern of us. Where had the moose gone? Who knows? Only he and the cow that he may have joined. Probably they both had doubled back, and at the very moment when we were making our disheartened inquiry of the guide, were winking at us through the trees from a bog only a few yards from our trail!

Another time we had hunted on a rather large lake, and in one day had seen as many as six or eight animals in or about the water. We had, however, fired no shots, nor made any other noise that could possibly have frightened the animals. Unfortunately, without the knowledge of his guide, one of our party a few mornings later set out for a little paddle on the lake just for the exercise. He got his exercise, but we got no hunting on that lake during all the rest of our trip—a period of a week or more. The wind had been blowing down the lake that morning; and perhaps a wary cow caught the scent, gave the alarm, and—well, we saw no more moose at that lake.

It is characteristic of most animals to become panic-stricken when near fire, and I believe this innate quality is very highly developed in the moose. Some guides will tell you that the smoke from forest fires will not perceptibly affect the moose, unless the fire is fairly close at hand, but I have seen one of the very best areas for moose in all New Brunswick totally deserted in forty-eight hours by the animals for no other reason, I am confident, than because they did not like the smoke and could smell the fire, although it may have been a hundred miles away in another province. Another illustration, which perhaps is most characteristic: Watch when your guide is calling up a bull. Will the animal come straight to the spot? Yes, as straight as an arrow if he is already to leeward of you and can smell nothing, although he may have been a mile or more distant when he started. But if he is to windward, until he has circled around and got to leeward of you, then, and not till then, will he come on. Most experienced callers are reluctant to use their horn when to windward of an animal when there is any sort of a breeze blowing.

Since the moose depends so much upon his nose, he puts correspondingly less faith in his ability to see and hear. In fact, it is almost incredible what can be done at close range, provided always the animal has not got a scent of you. Many a moose has stood seemingly as petrified as a spruce-hen, surprised in her own home, without turning a hair or blinking an eye-lash, while a poor marksman, not over seventy yards away, has poured lead over, under and all around him, and until struck has never showed the slightest inclination to move. Why? Because, being taken so unawares, he would not believe his own ears or eyes, but relying upon his sense of smell, waited for more definite proof that trouble was brewing.

Still, although the moose relies so little upon his eyes and ears, keen as they may be, the hunter must not be deceived into the belief that he will answer to any kind of a call during the mating season, as long as it bears a fair resemblance to the natural call of the cow. This by no means follows. A bull will not run from the noise of a rifle shot not so much because he is dazed by alarm or overpowered by curiosity, as because he knows there may be surer death in running than in standing still until he has full realization of the situation, which he believes only his acute sense of smell can give him. This belief may be foolhardy—doubtless is, in a great many instances, yet it is certainly the keynote to his safety at all times when not absolutely surprised at close range.

The bull moose answers to the birchbark call because he does believe it is a cow calling. It is the mating instinct that impels him, not curiority. It is hard to understand why anyone should doubt this who has studied and hunted the moose during the mating season, who has heard the bull come tearing through the woods, puffing and grunting in his eager desire to join his prospective companion, or seen the same moose called back several times in succession to the same spot. And yet one highly experienced hunter says that, "So great is the bull's curiosity at this season of the year that he will seek out any unusual noise. Just here I want to correct a very general impression that the bull moose can be called by the use of the birchbark horn in the belief that he is approaching a female. No bull was ever half so stupid; such a thing is entirely unreasonable. He is simply attracted by the unusual sound, and being exceedingly curious, endeavours to locate the meaning of this strange thing in his home. The pounding on a tree with a club by the Tahltan or Kaska Indians in North-west British Columbia (among the best moose hunters in America), or pounding the willows with a dry shoulder blade of the animal, by the Liard River Indians, will serve exactly the same purpose; or almost any other unusual noise would bring the bull within the sound just as readily." ["The Deer Family," American Sportsman's Library, pp. 310-311.] This statement is erroneous, certainly, to the minds of those who have done most of their hunting of the Alces americanus in Maine and eastern Canada. Mr. Selous, who takes a less extreme view than Mr. Stone, has this to say in his recent entertaining book, "Hunting Trips in North America:" "One often hears that it is only possible to call up a bull moose by imitating the cry of the cow, after a great deal of practice, and that moose calling is an art so difficult of acquirement that it has always proved to be beyond the powers of any but a very few white men. This may be the case in New Brunswick and other parts of eastern Canada, where moose have become very wary and suspicious, but in the Yukon country where they have never yet been deceived and led astray by spurious imitations of the female voice, I fancy that a bull moose, when in a condition of amorous frenzy, would probably come to investigate any noise that even remotely resembled the bellow of a cow." Then he gives instances of hunters with little experience in moose calling succeeding in overcoming the suspicions of the animals and luring them to within shooting distance.

I do not doubt that moose may be called by unskillful use of the horn, or by some methods other than the horn, such as the Indians of Mr. Stone's acquaintance use, but I do not believe they can be called as readily, and if they do respond it is not due to curiosity, but to the fact that they believe the noise is made by a cow, or they take it to be in the nature of a challenge from another bull. Experienced hunters in New Brunswick will tell you there are two methods of calling the bull: first, by imitating the cow, which is the easier and more common, and, second, by imitating the challenge call of another bull, which is much more difficult, and therefore attended with correspondingly less success, and sometimes even with danger, as the bull under such conditions is likely to resent strenuously the presence of a competitor, and to come on with considerable fury—that is, he may charge the caller. But at the same time, a moose never renews the charge or ever persists in it. When struck, his first impulse may be to come at his assailant a bit, if at very close range—an impulse deeply rooted in all animals, large as well as small. It is the natural motive of self-defence. But his strongest desire is to get away if he can, just as it is with most animals, including even the lion and the bear, but excepting the grizzly.

Another instance is recalled where lack of thoroughness resulted not only in disappointment to the hunter but in absolute, though unintentional, cruelty to the hunted. One afternoon one of our party, with his guide, had just left a small bog and was stepping out on to an old lumber road, not expecting to see game, when suddenly a big bull trotted out on to the road also, stopped, turned and looked at him. Our companion saw at once that the animal had a big, well formed pair of antlers, and a beautiful bell as well, so he decided to shoot. But he was a moment too late. The bull had started to trot off, and in doing so had placed a tree in line between himself and the hunter, thus disconcerting the latter as he endeavoured to draw a bead. So the hunter stepped to one side and raised his gun, but at the same moment the bull, with almost human intelligence and, you might say, literally with eyes in the back of his head, jumped to the other side, thus placing the tree between himself and the hunter again. The latter, as quickly as he could, endeavoured to cover the animal's shoulder with his sights by shifting his position a second time and then fired. But the bullet went low, shattering the animal's left foreleg below the knee. Immediately the hunter fired again; but his aim was wide, with the result that the bullet only grazed the animal's shoulder and he disappeared in the woods, although limping terribly, as evidenced by the trail of blood which he left, the furrows which he made in the soft moss and the scars on fallen trees as he dragged his left forefoot along, doubtless in great pain. Immediately our friend and his guide sprang into the woods and began to follow the tracks, ever strengthening with an increased flow of blood and the inevitable fatigue of the animal. But the big bull had more vitality than they had counted upon. For an hour and a half they followed those tracks, as times with considerable difficulty, but seemed to be no nearer to their victim. The shadows were beginning to lengthen, for an October afternoon is none too long, and exasperated, they halted for consultation. They knew they were quite a distance from their camp and had no equipment for spending the night where they were. What was to be done? Push on desperately, or blaze a careful trail back to the lumber road, get to camp before nightfall, and with renewed vigour take up the pursuit in the morning where they had left off? Much disheartened, they decided upon the latter course, and thereby hangs the tale. They did return and take up the trail again in the morning, but the tracks soon seemed to fade away, and there was no more blood to follow. To make a long story short, they never found him.

The next autumn, when telling the story to an old trapper and guide of a neighbouring region, we learned of the poor animal's fate. He had been seen several times in the late winter hobbling about a lumber camp, some twenty miles from the place where he had been wounded, terribly emaciated, his left foreleg all gone below the knee so he was able to move about only with the greatest difficulty. He had become so tame, his strength so sapped by continual pain and lack of food—perhaps all winter long he had been unable to reach a good "yard"—that he allowed the lumbermen to approach almost within touching distance of him. It seemed as though he almost begged to be shot and put out of his misery. But the lumbermen left him alone, either through indifference or through fear of the game warden. Word finally got to the old trapper, and he went out to see the bull. He told us he found him dead not far from the lumber camp, all skin and bones. What a terrible living death for any animal to suffer!

The moral is, shoot straight, and if you cannot always do that use the utmost discretion, and use all your woodcraft and knowledge of animals in running down a wounded one, because nine out of every ten animals wounded by a high power rifle are almost sure to die from the effects sooner or later. If our companion and his guide in this unfortunate incident had not been so hasty in their pursuit it is safe to say the bull would have been theirs, and his suffering only a matter of hours instead of months. A moose when pursued, just as other members of the deer family, will not go a great distance before wheeling a bit and stopping to see whether he is still being pursued. Had these men a really thorough knowledge of their game they would have acted differently. They would have waited at least a considerable length of time before following the animal at all, in which case they would have avoided frightening him, and he would therefore almost certainly have stopped after a very short distance and lain down, especially in view of his great injury and pain. Once having stopped, flight would have been much more difficult to resume with the same amount of speed. And so doubtless by a little skilful still-hunting later on in the afternoon, the animal could have been run down. Another course, and perhaps the most judicious in this case, although not always the easiest to carry out or the most humane, would have been to "spot" the place where the bull entered from the road, and at once make for camp as quietly as possible, thus causing the bull the minimum of fear from pursuit. The chances are more than equally good that he would also in this case have lain down soon to rest, spent the night approximately where he was, and in the morning would have been much less able and much less inclined to hasten away, so that the hunters upon returning, bright and early, could have soon found him.—W. DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

THIS is the latest form of wedding invitation:—"Come around and see me capture a mother-in-law at eight o'clock sharp."

JAMES ALBERY, coming down the steps of the Savage Club, was accosted by a man. "Please sir, is there a gentleman in the club with one eye of the name of Walker?" "Ah, let me see," said Jimmy. "What was the name of his other eye?"

A FAMILY had just sat down to table when tidings were brought of the death of an aunt. Suddenly little Emily inquired with a longing glance at the well-filled dishes: "Papa, must we cry now, or wait till we have finished dinner?"

AN eccentric looking old man was sitting in an armchair before the fire in the smoke-room of one of the leading commercial hotels. His trousers were somewhat drawn up, one leg, which was crossed over the other, exposing to view a brilliant red, white and blue-striped stocking: and noticing some of the company looking at it and smiling, he said, with apparently much satisfaction: "Nice pattern that, isn't it, gentlemen? I'll bet there is not another like it in the room." "I'll bet cigars round that there is," replied a youthful commercial. "Done," cried that old man. "Where is it?" "On your other foot," responded the latter, with a triumphant laugh, which was generally joined in. "That's just where you make a mistake," said the old man, with a knowing wink. "I generally reckon on finding one fist in a company, and so come prepared." He then pulled up the other leg of his trousers, and to the amusement of all but the loser, exposed a black stocking!

THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK.

The first day's programme suggested the most interesting afternoon's racing since Doncaster, and had power to charm a big section of the followers of the sport of kings; but the muddy state of the roads, owing to the heavy overnight's storm, kept the motor brigade at bay, and the far side of the course was comparatively bare of the usual contingent. For all that, the attendance was a good one, and except for a shower or two the weather proved propitious. The course was very heavy, and in most of the events the horses finished very tired. Results:—

From its inception the Duke of York Stakes, a popular feature at Kempton, has furnished more surprises than any event of its calibre, and Saturday's race, which signalised the utter rout and consternation of the "talent," was no exception to the rule. In view of the big autumn handicaps, the field gradually fizzled out till reduced to nine runners, two of which hailed from R. C. Dawson's stable, in the favourite, Valens, and the outsider, Buckwheat. A beautiful day brought the Londoners down in thousands, the specials being packed, while the motors were in evidence everywhere, a significant fact as to the decadence of horse vehicles, as there were but few of them in the carriage enclosure. NEWMARKET.

On Monday evening it rained in torrents, and the night was a black as pitch. Then the unexpected happened in a glorious morning—sunshine from an Italian-like sky unblurred by a wrack of cloud. The loaded state of the specials suggested a big muster, the pedestrians stretching in almost unbroken line from the modernised King Charles stable at the top of the town, to the Cesarewitch Stand, and a rapid succession of motors drawing up with military precision in the big enclosure at the back of the stables told that many of the owners of mansions about Moulton Paddocks and Bury road were in temporary residence. His Majesty was detained in town, but a strong muster of rank and fashion occupied the Birdcage, which included most of the principal patrons of the Turf. The wind blew keenly, but one could even appreciate that, as, assisted by the bright sunshine, it was rapidly bringing the chalky soil into better racing order. Backers had a rare time, as five favourites proved successful during the day. Results:—

ASSOCIATION RULES.

DESPITE the absence of both Hilsdon and Windridge, Chelsea on Saturday just managed to beat Middlesbrough at Oglesome Park, and, with eight points to show as the result of seven engagements, are temporarily at least, free from anxiety as to their position in the First League. Tottenham Hotspur, too, without showing form of a very encouraging description, pulled through against Bury. Yesterday's success following upon a win against Sheffield and a draw with Bristol, Hotspur in their last three engagements have scored five points out of a possible six, a notable improvement upon the start of the season, when four matches yielded them only one solitary point.

While two of the London clubs are thus looking up, Woolwich Arsenal go from one defeat to another, the severe reverse sustained at Nottingham on Thursday being followed on Saturday by a further loss, this time from Nottingham Forest. The Plumstead team are certainly experiencing a lot of bad luck this season, and at the moment they stand absolutely last among the First League clubs, with a record of 8 games played, 1 won, 1 drawn, and 6 lost.

The calls made upon certain clubs by the International League match well equalised the majority of First Division games, one player being taken from each competing team in four of the ten contests. While, however, Preston North End furnished no one for the League International, Bristol City had to yield Wedlock, the famous half-back, and North End—previously unable to claim a single victory—beat the West Countrymen by 3 to 0. Similarly Aston Villa were directed to surrender any of their men for the contest at Oldham, whereas Everton had to give up Freeman, their chief goal-getter, and the meeting between the clubs at Birmingham ended in a win for the Villa by 3 to 1. Consonant upon this reverse Everton lose their place at the head of the competition, that post being now filled by Sheffield United, the one club without a single defeat on record against them. The Sheffield team thoroughly deserve their position, but in view of the disasters which have befallen Woolwich Arsenal of late it is rather curious that the Plumstead team should have drawn with the present leaders. Newcastle United now stand practically level with Everton—thanks to a narrow victory over Bradford City, who were very unfortunate in having only ten men for the greater part of the game. Not only did Everton, Bradford City, and Sunderland meet with defeat yesterday, but Manchester United also sustained a reverse. Two goals to the bad at the interval, the Cup holders got on level terms afterwards, A. Turnbull scoring twice, but a goal by Stewart afterwards gave Liverpool the victory.

While they did not enjoy so much success as on the previous Saturday, visiting clubs in the Second Division of the League fared quite as well as could be expected, four of them winning their matches, while Blackpool drew with Lincoln City. This was the one game in which teams failed to arrive at a definite result. The three clubs at the head of the competition all had extremely hard matches away from home, but West Bromwich Albion were the only side to come though their engagement successfully. Thanks to a penalty kick, they defeated Leeds City on the Elland-road ground. Apart from that there was little to choose between the elevens, Leeds City having quite as much of

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious, particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It it now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

the game as the Albion. Hull City and Derby County however, suffered defeat from the two clubs who were in the First Division last season, Leicester Fosse scoring three goals to one against Hull City, while Manchester City overcame Derby County by two to one. In each case the victory was thoroughly well deserved, the Manchester City men in particular playing finely. At home to Barnsley, Fulham were easily successful, the Barnsley forwards failing to reproduce the excellent form that they have shown in some of their previous engagements. Although pronounced, Fulham's victory was not convincing, the defence being rather unsteady. Fortunately for the side they recovered from the blunders that were made, but against a smarter team they might easily have had two or three goals scored against them, the inside forwards of Barnsley failing to make the most of some promising chances. Clapton Orient, although holding their own at Bradford up to half-time, fell away afterwards, and were beaten. As a result of yesterday's games Glossop who gained a smart victory at Gainsborough, advanced to second place in the table, thus superseding Hull City, while Derby County dropped to seventh position.

Form in the Southern League remains very uncertain and some teams are only just showing any ability, while others who started well have degenerated in unexpected style. Nothing quite so astonishing has happened as the defeat of New Brompton, who, after being on the first Saturday of the season to Plymouth Argyle had not suffered a reverse until last week when Northampton scored 7 to 1 against them. Northampton, last season's champions, commenced wretchedly, and a week ago they lost to Millwall, who have now accomplished another smart performance in beating the Rangers at Park Royal. Any attempt to explain these results must fail; they can only be due to the uncertain strength of the various sides. Queen's Rangers had not previously lost a match; and now there is no unbeaten club in the competition, while Reading alone cannot claim a victory.

If coming in the ordinary course of events the victory of the English League over the Irish League at Oldham is of some importance, signifying that England has no lack of men worthy of representing the country in the matches with Scotland and Wales. With experienced half-backs and forwards the English League tried a pair of new backs and a goalkeeper. The Irishmen managed to score once, but for the most part their forwards were kept so well under control that the Englishmen had nearly all the play, and the admirable work of the home forwards gave distinction to the match. Professional forwards are not always effective, but in a runaway game they can show admirable skill and demonstrate plenty of scoring ability.

England vs. Ireland.—Almost perfect conditions favoured the first Inter-League match to be played at Oldham and there were about 10,000 people on the Boundary Park ground when the English and Irish League teams took the field Despite some recent rain the turf was in excellent condition The only change in the originally-selected sides was the substitution of Cunningham for Blair at outside right for the Irish League. In the first few minutes' play Cunningham sent in a long shot which Matthews, the English goalkeeper, caught, but was penalised for carrying the ball. Nothing, however, came of the kick and when the game had been in progress about ten minutes Lintott at close range scored the first goal for the English League. From the kick-off England again set up a strong pressure and after exciting play near the Irish goal Freeman obtained a second goal. Then England were kept on the defensive and their goal had narrow escapes when in rapid succession, Thompson headed just wide and Stewart hit one of the posts with a fine shot. The Irish forwards were now showing delightful quickness and accuracy in passing, and the English backs were kept hard at work. From a corner Matthews managed to save a well-placed shot by Cunningham. The English front line gradually reasserted itself and in their turn the Irish defenders had many anxious moments. For nearly ten minutes all the play took place near the Irish goal, but without further scoring. At the other end Cunningham got away and after beating Benson hit the side of the net. Towards the interval England again attacked with vigour but Hehir proved equal to saving all the shots at his goal. One fine effort by Wedlock went just over the bar. At half-time the score stood: England, 2; Ireland, 0.

The second half of the game opened with a strong attack by the Irishmen, and in less than a minute the English defence was beaten. Receiving a pass from Robertson, Beaumley sent in a single shot, but Matthews only half stopped the ball, which, after touching the bar, rolled into the net. England replied in vigorous manner, and quickly put on a third goal by Stewart, and then, although Reid, the Irish right back, injured his left leg and had to retire, even play followed. The Irish forwards were very good, Thompson being prominent for his good work. Reid returned to his place, but in the latter part of the game the Englishmen played in irresistible manner, the forwards, by their clever methods, completely beating the opposing defence. Freeman obtained three more goals with fine shots. Then, with Ireland penalised for hands, Benson shot through, and later on Holley put on an eighth goal.

RUGBY RULES

Guy's Hospital vs. Catford Bridge.—Catford Bridge have to thank their forwards for saving the game against Guy's Hospital at Honor Oak, for had they not "stuck to their guns" from start to finish the Hospital would have undoubtedly secured the verdict. Guy's will have to improve on their present form, perhaps also some changes may be necessary in the team, if they wish to have such a successful season as the last. Though their forwards were beaten and they were poorly served by their halves, the back division did not altogether lack opportunities for opening up the game. But their passing was very wild and erratic, and many a promising opening was lost through anxiety on the part of the "threes" to get rid of the ball. Catford were the first to score, and it was the result of a "free" for off-side just over the half-way line in the hospital territory, Hohler took the kick, and landed a magnificent goal. Before the interval the Hospital equalised from a kick awarded for a similar offence. It was a difficult angle, but Lukes sent the ball beautifully over the bar. Both teams strove very hard for victory after the interval, and Lambert narrowly missed dropping a goal for Catford. Guy's, 1 penalty goal; Catford Bridge, 1 penalty goal.

London Irish vs. United Services.—With many new men playing for them, the Irish had quite a scratch side at Catford, and they paid a heavy penalty, for, outplayed at every point, they suffered a crushing defeat at the hands of the Services by 44 points to nothing. The visitors were without Lyon, Harrison, and Warrington Morris, but they were pleasingly together, overpowering their opponents in the scrums, outpacing them as three-quarters, and tackling unerringly on the few occasions when the Irishmen looked like getting away. Just for the first few minutes the play was even, but then Bissett started the scoring from a loose rush, Blagrove following suit after showing fine pace on the wing, and Gibbs obtained a try by clever dodging and swerving. Ede placed goals from all three, and ends were changed with the Services leading by 3 goals to nil. Afterwards the home team went from bad to worse, their backs being simply powerless to tackle the strong running and passing opposed to them. Tillard twice crossed their line in the first few minutes, then Blagrove added a third try, Royle a fourth, and Tillard a fifth, while just towards the close the heavy margin was increased by Oakley and Parker. As instancing the weakness of the defence, nearly every one of the ten tries was obtained right under the posts, and all but three were improved, those of Blagrove, Royle, and Parker not being increased by the goal kicker. United Services, 7 goals 3 tries; London Irish, 0.

Richmond vs. Old Leysians.—In a hard and interesting game at Richmond the Old Leysians gave the Richmond club their first success of the season. On both sides the forwards were very good and they never spared themselves, but Richmond was stronger behind the scrum, and on the general run of the game they had so much the best of the struggle that they were quite entitled to their win. Early in the game from a long pass by Ireland, W. Wilson got over and Terry placed the goal, but a little later on, the first occasion that the Old Leysians really attacked, a fine run by Hosken enabled Beecroft to get in for them, but the try was not improved. This was all the scoring in the opening half. Despite some fine efforts by the Leysians, forwards, in the second half Richmond again did most of the pressing, and although the old boys, defence was very sound they ran in with two further tries, G. C. Wilson gaining the first, and Smith the other, and Terry improved each of them. Calvert, however, gained another try for the Old Leysians, but as Mellor's kick failed Richmond won by fifteen points to six. Richmond, 3 goals; Old Leysians, 2 tries.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital vs. Lennox.—The result of this match at Winchmore Hill was a win for the Hospital by 9 points. Generally speaking, the home team held the upper hand, but as the game proceeded Lennox showed better form. When half-time arrived Bart's were 6 points ahead Bridgman and Gilbert having each secured tries, the former as a result of some neat three-quarter work, and the latter after a forward rush. The feature of the second half was a splendid try for the visitors by Newbury, who with the aid of Coltart and Alexander, outwitted his opponents with some very tricky passing, covering nearly the whole length of the field. Newbury took the place-kick himself, and was successful. There was also some clever passing by Bart's back divisions, particularly Dive and Basher, the latter on one occasion crossing the line. Richards this time improved, and a little later Bridgman added another try. At no time did play attain a high standard, and at various stages it was of a scrambling nature, the forwards on both sides being rather weak. The back portions, however, on occasions gave quite a creditable display. Just on time Lennox were unfortunate, for Newbury made a splendid dash and got over the line, but an opponent just managed to touch the ball first. Bart's, 1 goal 3 tries; Lennox, 1 goal.

London Welsh vs. Old Whitgiftians.—At Wandsworth Common the London Welsh gained a victory over the Old Whitgiftians by two goals and a try (thirteen points) to one try (three points). The Whitgiftians played a plucky game throughout, and although the London Welsh had to do without Lloyd (who retired hurt for the greater part of the game), they were not only able to hold their own against the spirited attack of their opponents, but were able to obtain a substantial lead before the interval, which they maintained until the end. The Welsh started the ball, and immediately commenced an attack, which culminated in a try by Edwards a few minutes from the start, Evans failing to convert. The Welsh maintained the pressure, and ten minutes later H. C. Evans crossed the visitors line again, J. S. Evans being successful in obtaining the major points on this occasion. From that point until the interval the Whitgiftians maintained a stubborn defence. Hayeroft at half-back being responsible for a great deal of skilful and effective work. When half-time arrived, however, the Welsh led by a goal and a try to nothing. The visitors continued to hold their own for some time after the interval, Baker at full-back playing a sound defensive game. The superior weight of the Welsh forwards, however, gradually wore their opponents down, and half way through the second half W. A. Rees scored another try for the Welsh which was converted. Towards the end, some pretty work between Haycroft, Young, and Ellis gave the Whitgiftians an opening, which Yates cleverly utilised by obtaining their only try. Maddocks and Rowlands stood out of the Welsh team their places being filled by Bebb and A. P. Thomas. Welsh, 2 goals 1 try; Whitgiftians, 1 try.

GOLF

Record Score at Braid.—The course of the Woodbridge club, Suffolk, was the scene of some very fine golf last Saturday when J. H. Taylor, the open champion, and James Braid the ex-champion, met in two eighteen-hole contests. In the morning they played a match, and Braid, who went round in the record score of 65, won by 6 and 5. He was at the top of his game. He secured the first three holes and stood 6 up at the turn. He lost the eleventh, but after a half he finished the match by doing the thirteenth in a remarkable 3. The round was completed, and Braid finished strongly with a 3 and a 2, his total of 65 beating the previous record for the green by three strokes. Taylor took 73. The figures were as follows:—

Braid
Out: 424453424=32; home: 454343533=33. Total, 65.
Taylor.
Out: 536454534=39; home: 444443452=34. Total, 73.

A medal contest for a special prize in the afternoon resulted in favour of Taylor with 75, Braid being one stroke worse.

Vardon's Marvellous Golf.—During his long career Harry Vardon has been the hero of many remarkable performances, but even he has never done anything more extraordinary than in his match against Tom Williamson, of Hollinwell, on the new links at Radcliffe-on-Trent on Saturday the 9th instant. The match was over thirty-six holes, and Williamson, who played anything but indifferent golf was beaten by no less than 11 up and 9 to play. Vardon's approaching and putting were simply phenomenal. In the morning he went round in 65, his card comprising ten 3's, seven 4's, and one 5. At this point he stood 5 up on his opponent, whose score for the round was 69. Williamson's card was made up with one 2, five 3's, eight 4's, and four 5's. In the afternoon Vardon continued to outplay his opponent. He increased his lead to 7 up at the second hole and brought the contest to a finish at the ninth by holing out with his mashie in 2. His score up to this point was 31, including three 2's. The details of the cards in the afternoon were: Vardon 425321542=31; Williamson: 535474653 =37.

WINCHESTER

.22 CALIBER RIM FIRE CARTRIDGES

Winchester .22 Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges, loaded with either Black or Smokeless Powder are unequalled for accuracy and uniformity in shooting. The explanation of their superiority is a simple one: it is the care taken in the making. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. In loading, the bullet is seated so that its axis coincides with that of the barrel of the rifle. That means accuracy. The Winchester Greaseless Bullet, which is a feature of Winchester .22 Caliber Smokeless Powder Cartridges, makes them clean to handle and prevents the powder from losing its strength. Try them next time. Ask for Winchester Make—the Red W Brand.

USED BY THE BEST SHOTS. SOLD BY DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

"THE WORLD vs. COOCH BEHAR".—This match, which was supposed to occupy two days and was intended for two innings aside, was started at 3 P. M. on Friday, stumps being drawn at 5, and was continued at noon on Saturday and finished by 4 P.M. This procrastination quenched most of the interest that would otherwise have been evinced in the match, as on paper the sides were very strong, and everyone was looking out for a vigorous, well-contested struggle. "The World" won the toss and took first knock, but the majority performed very wide off their proper form, only Mr. F. N. Whiteley, and later on Mr. A. D. Hickley playing the bowling with any confidence. Mr. Whiteley was somewhat lucky in the earlier part of his innings, but later on he improved immensely and went for the bowling with much determination, giving a delightful display of hard hitting and crisp cutting. He was out to a lob which he stepped out to meet, missed, and was promptly stumped. The Cooch Behar Team included Mr. J. Daniell and Prince Hitty, the latter just qualified to play for Somerset next year, while the former is the county Captain. Prince Hitty gave us a very vigorous exhibition while his innings lasted, scoring no less than seven successive boundaries in one over. The fielding of "The World" was very poor, and had all the chances been held the match might have been quite a close thing. R. Roy, who made 65, and M. Bajana, who put up 42, were both missed several times, while quite a number of boundaries should have been saved. However this may be, the Cooch Behar Team were quite the best side on the day's play, both their bowling and fielding being admirable. Lewis and Robson, the Somerset County players, are on their way out to join the team for the winter, and there should be some good cricket in Calcutta, it will be a feather in the bowler's cap who first succeeds in getting Lewis out. The old St. Joseph's boy, Wilmott, bowled very well for "The World," securing 7 wickets for 37 runs. The following were the scores :—

Hockey.

THE OUDH AND ROHILKHAND TOURNAMENT.

THE above tournament, for a Cup presented by the Shahjahanpore Town Hall, opened at Shahjahanpore on the 27th October. Details :—

FIRST ROUND.

LUCKNOW ATHLETIC CLUB vs. MORADABAD SPORTS CLUB.—Play in the first half was devoid of score and was of a desultory character. Shortly after the interval O'Connor, the Moradabad centre forward, sustained a nasty cut on the head and was obliged to leave the field. Asad scored for the Athletic Club from a nice shot. Moradabad then pressed but without success, and a second goal was hit by Asad for the Athletic Club, who thus won by two goals to love.

LUCKNOW O. AND R. RAILWAY SPORTS CLUB vs. POLICE TRAINING SCHOOL.—This was a very closely contested game from start to finish. Neither side scored in the first half, despite several corners. The Police then pressed and after missing two or three openings, Powell, their centre forward, scored a goal. The Sports Club hit two goals in quick succession. The Police then replied with another goal, and just before the close Davis scored again for the Sports Club. The Sports Club defeated the Police Training School by three goals to two.

SECOND ROUND.

Four ties in the second round were played off on the 28th October.

LUCKNOW O. AND R. RAILWAY SPORTS CLUB vs. SHAHJEHANPORE HIGH SCHOOL.—This was a run-away victory for the Sports Club, who won by six goals to nil.

LUCKNOW VOLUNTEER RIFLES vs. HARDOI POLICE.—The Police attacked in the opening half and hit two goals to one by their opponents. The Volunteers settled down to work after the interval, and Jones scored for them almost immediately. Jones again broke away, enabling Graham to score off a good centre. Two more goals were scored by Graham, following on a free hit against the Police for a foul. The Volunteers defeated the Police by five goals to two.

SHAHJEHANPORE POLICE vs. BARABANKI SPORTS CLUB.—A very closely contested game. The score at half-time was one to nil in favour of the Shahjehanpore Police. Barabanki attacked in the second half, but just missed scoring. Shahjehanpore Police then secured the ball and hit another goal. The Shahjehanpore Police won by two goals to nil.

LUCKNOW ATHLETIC CLUB vs. SHAHJAHANPORE TOWN HALL.—This was the best game in the second round, and the issue was doubtful until the close. Asad, the Athletic Club centre forward, carried the ball down and centred to Sarbar, who scored. A second attack on the Town Hall goal was made but failed and at half-time the Athletic Club led by one to nil. After the interval the Athletic Club lost a chance of scoring, and the Town Hall forwards rushing the ball down scored with a fine shot. A second followed, but was cleared by the Athletic's goal-keeper. Then Hobart sent in a shot from some three yards off the goal-line. The Town Hall men, hearing the whistle of the referee in the Police match on an adjoining ground, appeared to mistake it for their own whistle, and made no effort. They lodged a protest against the goal being given, but the referee's decision was upheld. Several rapid exchanges followed, but there was no more scoring. The Lucknow Athletic Club won by two goals to nil.

SEMI-FINALS.

Two games in the semi-finals were played on 29th October.

SHAHJAHANPORE POLICE vs. LUCKNOW ATHLETIC CLUB.—The Police were twice penalised for sticks and on the second occasion the Athletic Club got in a goal. They were leading at half-time by one to love. In the second half the Police scored, and when the whistle sounded, the score was one goal apiece. In the extra ten minutes the ball travelled up and down at a great pace. The Shahjahanpore Police scored a goal from a fine run down the field. The Athletic Club tried to equalise, but without success. Shahjahanpore Police won by two goals to one.

LUCKNOW O. AND R. SPORTS CLUB vs. LUCKNOW VOLUNTEER RIFLES.—This was a most exciting game. The teams were level, and when the whistle sounded the score was love all. An extra ten minutes was played either way, and at the close the teams were one all. A further five minutes either way followed, and just towards the close Picard scored a goal for the Sports Club, who thus won by two goals to one after a most keenly contested game.

GROUSE.

The British grouse and partridge season has been an excellent one, from the sportsman's standpoint, but according to the game dealers the quality of the meat is below the average. During the early part of the season an excess of rain and cold weather predominated throughout the grouse moors, with the result that the young birds were forced to the moulting stage and feathered up much faster than is usually the case. So far as plumage is concerned, the shooter has found it difficult to distinguish between the young birds and the old.

The development of this unusual plumage on young birds, it is explained, is to slightly toughen the meat, and in a measure destroy its fine flavour when ready for the table. The grouse, however, have been very plentiful, and are exceptionally well developed, and appear much more attractive than usual.

In some parts of England a distinct scarcity has occurred. The northern moors, especially those far up in Scotland, suffered severely from the late spring and the unusually cold weather. In some places late snows and hard frosts practically exterminated the entire grouse population, so far as young birds were concerned. The Yorkshire and Lancashire moors were more fortunate. Good shooting is reported from these districts, and large quantities of grouse have arrived in the markets.

Perhaps the worst feature of the season has been the lateness of the heather everywhere. It was in full bloom on the 1st of September instead of on the 1st of August, so that there is grave doubt whether the seed will come to maturity. Certainly it will not if there are early frosts, and in any case it runs a worse chance than usual by a month, and we know that during the winter grouse almost subsist on the seed heads of the heather. Their absence in the ripe state is the most fertile source of disease as the latter is now understood since the reports of the Grouse Committee, which seems to be very sure that starvation is the cause of the grouse mortality called grouse disease, but they are not sure whether actual want of food, or excess of parasites (which live on the food eaten) is the chief trouble. In either, and in any case, as long as so much is said about disease which obviously has no bearing on the subject, there must be misunderstanding and no progress. At the present moment a section of those who talk of grouse disease think of something that neither they nor any other people ever saw in a grouse. They think of the disease Dr. Klein created but never gave to a grouse. The larger section think of parasites and starvation.

But that which is particularly misleading is a phrase which bespatters all reports of bags made this year and every year alike. It is that there is "no disease." No matter whether the reports come whence there was disease three months ago, or from where grouse hens die on their eggs, all reports are rounded off in a sort of figurative shout of triumph, in italics or capitals, that there is "no disease." One newspaper has for twenty years circularised grouse shooters and bombarded all interested with the question, "Is there disease?" The regular negatives of a quarter of a century have not suggested to it that there is no such thing as grouse disease in August, and that all the jubilation over a clean bill of health means nothing whatever, except that the question is, and always has been, meaningless.

So long as this is allowed to go on without protest and exposure the grouse disease question never can be properly understood. The point is that there never has been grouse disease in August, although occasionally a bird is seen bare of leg feathering, and those shooters who have no knowledge of grouse disease, according to their own temperaments, sometimes declare a diseased bird has been seen on no better evidence than this. But, according to circumstances that make the moulting late or early, old grouse with bare legs are to be found as parents of fine healthy coveys of young birds with quite fully feathered legs, which is a proof that whatever the state of health of the parent was in the spring, it has been quite healthy ever since. Such reports would go to show that disease is extinct, but that is far from true, and every spring sees outbreaks of it in some districts or in many. The only evidence of this remaining in the autumn are white skeletons and few live birds, but those few healthy. The shooters who make these reports (when they make any) are not in a position to speak of disease any more than they would be if they regarded a mallard in the eclipse plumage as a case of duck disease.

Whatever grouse disease may be, those which die of it do so in the spring or in the late autumn. They do not linger ill through the summer. Spring victims die; and those that recover or escape grow healthy just as the hills grow vigorous heather shoots, and add to the food the fruits of the moorland. The refrain of "no disease" then has no bearing on the past spring and none upon the future either. All that can be done towards the discovery of a healthy or unhealthy moor in August is to test by the bags made and by the prospects of a good heather seed crop well ripened before the early frosts, which latter prevent the ripening at all. This season the grouse have been very partial, and the heather is maturing at the time frost is generally due.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Tollygunge Club held a successful, if not very exciting, Fifth Gymkhana Meeting on Saturday. Although most of the victories were pretty hollow affairs people always enjoy themselves in the pretty club grounds, and the Band and the promenade are quite enough value for the money, even when the racing is not of a high order.

With a card of only five events to go through sport began at the convenient hour of 3-30 with the November Plate, a closed race for maidens. Eureka Girl was a strong favourite, and it was hard to see why she should have had so light a weight among a lot of hacks. She won very easily by six lengths, cantering, and Vanity just sneaked second place from Cigarette.

The Pony Race which came next looked a more open affair, as though Primrose was very well treated for her class, it must be remembered that she has never been considered a four-furlong pony and High Court and Loch Lily are both pretty smart over that distance. However, they neither of them managed to get even 1, 2, as Primrose, driven along the whole way most energetically by Mr. Glastaun, got to the front two furlongs from home, and the little Gipsy was the only one to make her gallop at the finish.

Shakespeare, who was looking much better than during the Monsoons, was made favourite for the Visitors' Plate, Eruption strangely neglected, though, it is said, that his owner had some nice bets about him, and Dickie second favourite to Shakespeare. The last named ran a very disappointing horse, and for the second time this year at Tollygunge, let in his connections badly, the finish being fought out between Eruption and Dickie, with nothing else in it. Eruption had the other beaten a few strides from home, and won comfortably by half a length.

Gem now divided favouritism in the Club Cup for ponies, but the black pony was looking in no sort of condition and never showed up in the race at all. Lou was lucky to beat Killarney at the finish, and the result was certainly due more to Mr. Evers' skill as a jockey than to any superior merits of his mount. Little Badcock secured third place six lengths away. The last event of the day, the Portly Stakes, was a very one-sided affair. Mr. Orr on Dick cantering in a very easy winner.

The programme for next week has again only five events in it and includes two open races (five furlongs) for ponies 14-2 and under that have never won Rs. 1,000 or over, and six furlongs for horses of the same class. Three closed races are five-furlong flat races for maiden horses, and a mile flat race for ponies 14-2, and under which have never won any sort of race value Rs. 500 or over. In addition to this there is a one mile Chargers' Race for C.L.H. Recruits, and for horses that have never won a gymkhana or been placed in any other sort of race. It seems a pity that no jump events should have been included in the programme, as it would be a great shame if these items were allowed to die out from the Tollygunge programme. The Steeplechases over that excellent little course were always good rides, and first class school for beginners, both horse and man, and if the G.R. nowadays is going to give up riding over jumps there will be no place for him at all in the scheme of racing.

The entries for the Third Extra and the Calcutta First Meeting, which we publish elsewhere, are well above the average, and include so many new animals as to excite a great deal of curiosity. Special interest attaches to the American contingent, though Coat of Arms for the Cup is their only entry at present. Dr. Basseler's string of six were down on the course for the first time on Tuesday morning, and excited very favourable comment on all sides. They are all useful looking animals, and the Cup horse is certainly on appearance something above the average. All six are looking uncommonly well, considering they are only four days landed from the train; and with the difficulty of finding out anything about their performances in America, we shall look to some surprises from this stable in the course of the season.

Rumours that have been flying about as to the suspension of other jockeys besides J. Killorn have proved to be absolutely unfounded, and, indeed, we understand that the Calcutta Turf Club received official notification that the enquiries on the other side are now closed.

We hear there has been considerable dissatisfaction with the handicapping and management of things generally in Poona this season, and two or three of our big owners on this side declare their intention to give up attending those meetings in future. If they persist in this determination it will make considerable difference to racing in Poona next year.

The Official Measurer of the C.T.C. will class, age and measure horses and ponies at the Jumping School near the Zeerut Bridge to-morrow morning at 7 o'clock.

The final entries for the Lucknow Army Cup closed on Tuesday. They are Captain Hodgson's Little Officer, Captain Cheape's Surrender, and Mr. Kennedy's Express. We publish the complete entries further on.

A good programme has been arranged for the forthcoming Army Cup week at Lucknow. There will be three days' racing—on the 18th, 20th and 23rd instant, with the big race on the second day. The Polo Tournament will be played on the 16th, 17th, 19th, and 23rd, the drawings of the first ties being as follows:—The Scots vs. 9th Hodgson's Horse; Lucknow Gymkhana vs. Royal Dragoons; Gordon Highlanders vs. 17th Lancers; Highland Light Infantry a bye.

The Boxing Tournament will be held at the Central Gymnasium on the 18th, 20th and 22nd instant. The Army Cup Ball takes place at the Chutter Munzil on the 19th and there are three other balls during the week.

The stallion St. Blaise, whose death in America was announced early last month, was owned by Mr. August Belmont. In 1883, when the joint property of the late Lord Alington and Sir Frederic Johnstone, the horse was trained by John Porter, who, in his book "Kingsclere," gave it as his opinion that the son of Hermit was a good but not a great horse. After running unplaced in the Two Thousand Guineas, the memorable Derby trial took place, for it was on that occasion that His Majesty, then Prince of Wales, first visited Kingsclere. The trial horses were Shotover, Incendiary, Geheimniss, and Energy, and St. Blaise easily beat Shotover and Geheimniss, respective winners of the Derby and Oaks of the previous year. In the actual race for the Blue Riband, St. Blaise, admirably ridden by C. Wood, the present trainer, beat Highland Chief by a neck, Galliard, the favourite, being half a length behind, third. St. Blaise was, when not at his best, beaten half a neck by Frontin in the Grand Prix de Paris. He came back to run at Ascot in the Ascot Derby Stakes, but a severe race over the Swinley Course with Mr. C. J. Lefevre's Ladislas was too much for him, and he severely sprained the muscles of his forearm, which permanently impaired his action. He was subsequently sold at auction for 20,000gs., and left for America. He was twenty-nine years of age at the time of his death.

The Shillong Races recently concluded have proved an unqualified success, and great praise is due to Mr. Kershaw, I.C.S., for the trouble to which he has gone. Magazine won the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup, but little Ivy II. was the heroine of the meeting. Fortune, who had the misfortune to travel in the big cyclone, was by no means at his best.

The Stewards of the Lower Assam Races have arranged a very sporting programme for their meeting early in December. Some very good new ponies have already been purchased with a view to the Maiden Race, and a daughter of The Gift—a well-known Calcutta performer of ten years ago—has gone into a racing stable in Shillong.

It has been found necessary to postpone the Dacca Races until 5th and 8th January 1910. There are no changes in the conditions of any of the events as printed in the original programme. The polo tournament is expected to be a great success and two military teams from Calcutta are said to be sending representatives.

The following interesting article appears in the Adelaide Observer to hand by the last Australian mail:—

Among the keen followers of the big horse sale at Kapunda are several men whose business it is to secure remounts for the Indian Army. They know full well the class of animal wanted, and as they travel through the States to the great auctions they become known to those whose duty it is to sell. In Kapunda the names of Messrs. S. Margett, R. McKenna, T. Derham, H. J. Gidney, J. Gove, V. Gregg, Poulton, and Herbert, and those of other traders not over this year, are practically household words, and an enterprising business man of the town has taken advantage of their presence on this occasion to "perpetrate" them in connection with his various lines of goods. In view of the embargo upon the horse trade from India an expression of opinion was sought from the visitors concerning the restrictions imposed by the Commonwealth Government, and Mr. McKenna, as one who is particularly interested in the dealing with thoroughbred stock for racing and the stud, was chosen as spokesman.

Mr. McKenna's chief individual client is the Hon'ble A. A. Apcar, Senior Steward of the Calcutta Racing Club, Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce and owner of a large line of ships trading between India and China, who races for the love of the sport. Mr. Apcar buys largely in Australia, and he has on several occasions sent out mares to fashionable sires in the Commonwealth, and their progeny has been returned to India. When the regulations to debar the importation of horses from his country came into force Mr. Apcar was contemplating the purchase of a breeding farm in Australia, but the project has now been abandoned, and he talks seriously of transferring the whole of his business to England. "That," said Mr. McKenna, "would be a serious loss to Australia. Up to recently, when an Australian horse had finished its racing career in India, it was returned for stud purposes, and as they generally were of stamina and could last over long distances their influence on the thoroughbred stock made for good. A petition is being prepared by the leading breeders of New South Wales and Victoria asking the Commonwealth Government to modify the restrictions."

"For years," the speaker argued, "horses have gone from Australia to India, and have been returned in batches of 60 or 40 or 30—they were the Indian Government rejects—and thoroughbred stallions and mares have also come back, all without any clean bill of health, and no disease has been ever introduced."

"Why was the embargo put on?"—"They were afraid of getting glanders or surra. Horses before leaving India for any part of the world are inoculated with maline, and they are quarantined for that purpose. Before they are released they get a clean bill of health, because maline is a preventive of glanders, and also a test if an animal has been affected by that disease. Surra has never attacked thoroughbreds in India. They are always well looked after, and in no place in the world do they get better attention."

"The Indian Princes are good sportsmen?"—"Yes, indeed. They are splendid men to deal with, but if they are not to be allowed to sell back again to Australia when the racing career is over, as is done in England and other countries, naturally they will turn their attention to those places. With a continuation of these restrictions the end will be that Australia will lose the trade altogether. Three years ago the industry was thriving splendidly, but now it is going back, and for every one thoroughbred landed in India from Australia 10 go from England."

"Is it a fact that a horse could be shipped to England from India and then to Australia, and thus avoid the regulations?"—"It could be done, but the risk and the cost would be too great. Such a proceeding would mean that the animal would be on the water for practically three months, and no one would look at that."

"Can you put in figures the number of horses that go from Australia to India in a year?"—"Including remounts, probably close up to 7,000. The majority of the army remounts for the Indian Government are secured in South Australia and Queensland, and the thoroughbred stock principally from New South Wales and Victoria. The Argentine people are watching the trade very keenly, and are anxious to get a look in. When supplies from the Commonwealth run short India goes to South America, and unless the trade is encouraged at this end we stand in danger of losing it altogether. This year the army requirements include a large proportion of artillery horses, or 'gunners,' as they are called. At the present rates the dealers have an exceedingly small margin to work upon."

Mr. McKenna has had considerable experience in thoroughbred stock in Australia, and he favours a tax on stallions in order to ensure good stock. "At present," he said, "there are too many ill-shaped and broken-winded horses in this country. With such restrictions on we cannot get back from India such animals as Fitzgrafton, Great Scot, Mallard and Peru: but there are many stallions coming from other parts of the world that should be stopped. Australia is a fine breeding country, and we want a little more substance and conformation in our thoroughbreds. It is a common thing to go on a racecourse and see nothing but weeds. I would not give £100 for the lot for shipping purposes. Longer distances in racing and a tax to guard against inferior importations would do much to bring about that condition which all true supporters of the horse industry wish to see."

The Bhopal Cup Polo Tournament recently concluded at Jubbulpore, ended in a win for the Coopers Hill team. In the first ties the 60th Rifles "A" team beat the Nuts by 10 goals to 7, and Coopers Hill beat the R.F.A. by 4 goals to 3. In the second round the 27th Light Cavalry beat the 60th "B" team by 6 goals to 4, and Coopers Hill beat 60th Rifles "A" team by 4 goals to 3. The final was played on the 29th ultimo, Coopers Hill defeating the 27th Light Cavalry by 6 goals to 1. Teams: Coopers Hill: Mr. Hyde (1), Mr. Starky (2), Mr. Todd (3), and Mr. Learoyd (back) + 1 goal. 27th Light Cavalry: Mr. Dunlop (1), Captain Balantyne (2), Major Moore (3), and Mr. Jackson (back) scratch.

Messrs. Manton and Company have kindly sent us a copy of their new catalogue. Everything in the way of guns, rifles, revolvers, and ammunition, fishing tackle, polo and athletic requisites seems to be depicted and priced therein, and it will, we feel sure, be welcomed by every sportsman. The catalogue is well turned out and among its many excellent features one might make special mention of the capital illustrations of big game, and record measurements, which are included as well as the full size illustrations of cartridges. Messrs. Manton and Company are the oldest established firm of gunmakers in Calcutta, and a glance through the price list under notice shows us that the firm continues to maintain its high reputation for quality in all matters relating to sporting requisites.

The inconsiderate destruction of wild animals is proceeding at such a pace in South Africa that their complete extinction seems likely unless stringent protective steps are taken. A suggestion has been made that a national preserve should be formed on the lines of the Yellowstone Park in the United States, but the authorities seem more disposed to adopt absolute protection of all wild animals for five years, and heavy penalties for any breach of the regulation. This scheme would be very difficult to carry out, as there is the co-operation of the landowners to be obtained and the hunting instincts of the natives to be controlled. A national park would be a far more effective plan, as the policing of a single large tract could be more effectively carried out than the enforcing of laws in remote and wild districts.

Somewhere in the heart of untrodden Dutch New Guinea is believed to be a primitive animal, unnamed by scientists, "very large, striped black and white, with a nose like a tapir and a face like the devil."

The tracks of the animal have been seen. The vivid description quoted is that of a member of a Dutch expedition which, after penetrating a distance of eighty-five miles into the unknown, retired baffled by the mountains, forests, and fevers.

On the 19th of last month a British expedition left England for Dutch New Guinea to make another attempt to cross the island. It has been organised by Mr. W. R. Ogilvie-Grant, for the British Ornithologists' Union, and is headed by Mr. Walter Goodfellow, the well-known traveller, with whom will be Mr. A. F. R. Wollaston, recently medical officer to the Rowenzori expedition, and Dr. Eric Marshall, who was with Lieutenant Shackleton in the Antarctic.

Mr. Ogilvie-Grant has received from the Dutch Minister for the Colonies a letter giving the expedition special facilities for prosecuting its search in unknown New Guinea. In January it is hoped to begin the task, which will include a search for the unnamed animal, the collection of new birds and insects, and a careful survey of the country traversed.

The latest of the series of "studies in the Zoological Gardens," appearing in the Times, treats of pythons and boas. The wonderful powers of swallowing and digesting possessed by snakes, is illustrated by recalling the tragedy of seventeen years ago at the Zoo, when one snake of some 10 feet in length swallowed another only a foot shorter than itself. The tragedy occurred at night and was apparently due to two snakes trying to eat the same pigeon; the tip of the nose of one snake was drawn into the mouth of the other in company with the pigeon, and, after it, the rest of the snake continued to go. The next morning only one of the snakes, the larger, was visible, and from its enormously extended body it was evident that it had swallowed its companion. It had no longer the power of curling itself round, but remained extended to its full length in a straight line, and appeared to be at least three times its normal circumference. It was almost painful to see the distended skin, which had separated the scales all over the middle of the body. Twenty-eight days later the snake had not only digested its companion, but had regained its appetite as well as its normal size, and it immediately swallowed a pigeon put into its den. As regards the size of these reptiles it is remarked that both the reticulated python and the anaconda (which is a semi-aquatic, semi-arboreal boa) grow to a length of 30 feet; and how much beyond that either may go is a matter of conjecture. But the ancients were not satisfied with mere elongation in snakes, so they gave them multitudinous heads, hydra-like, or crowned them as basilisks, or fitted them with wings and made them into dragons to be slain for the glorification of heroes and demi-gods. Yet surely, even as they are, the large snakes are terrible enough, with, save for the chilling hiss, their voicelessness and the secrecy of their movements ("more hid than paths of snakes"); the grim wickedness of their lipless mouths and lidless eyes; the slow, proud, balancing rhythm of their head and neck, so full of the consciousness of the awful strength that is held in suspense behind, and the deadly suddenness of the attack when that power is unloosed; the terror of their "strong curling" bulk, in grip of which no living thing but is helpless as the tightening folds close, pitiless as bands of living metal, and as cold! It is no wonder that the snake so twined itself about the imagination of early man that in almost every country we find traces of snake-worship. Its trail runs through the myth and legend of every people, and such honours have clustered round it as have, perhaps, not been lavished on all other created things combined. Nevertheless it is well stated that neither its beauty nor any tale of its generosity will ever make men like a snake. The old curse lies between our heel and its head, and it is the external antipathy of our natures that makes the Lamia myth, the legend of things half human and half snake, more horrid than any figment of mere ape woman or wolf man.

We have to thank Messrs Traill and Company, Limited, the well-known local manufacturing stationers for a packet of their "Marvel" note paper with envelopes to match. The "Marvel" is a new production for which the firm claim exceptional value, and they make no mistake. Though sold at the low price of 8 annas per packet, and 8 annas per 100 envelopes, there is nothing common or cheap in the appearance, and when compared with the flimsy and poor quality old half tola papers sold at the same and even higher prices one marvels how it is done. Note paper and envelopes of this quality and thickness have never been seen in India at such a low price, and we agree with the manufacturers that it will long help to maintain the name they have already made as the cheapest stationery house in India.

A wonderful tribe of Indian runners is said to exist in the Gulf of California. They are known as Seris, and in the open country the women and children catch hares by hand without any artificial aid whatever. The men, however, look upon this as child's play, and themselves attack and capture antelopes, deer, and wild buffalo. The swiftest horse cannot outrun these fleetfooted Indians, who perform on foot the same feats as the cowboy on his broncho. So says Mr. MacGee, an American ethnologist, who lived for some time among these Indians. One of their favourite games is a race between a horse and an Indian. A boy first drives a horse round an enclosed track, and when it has got up a good speed one of the barriers is removed, and the horse dashes into the prairie at full speed. It has not gone 120 yards before the Indian has caught up with it; another 60 yards and he has bounded on its back, seized its mane with one hand and its nostrils with the other, and thrown it to the ground.

The Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Golf Club, Limited, was held on Friday, Mr. Norman McLeod, the Captain, presiding. The annual report was adopted and the following office-bearers elected for the season:—Patron—His Excellency the Viceroy; President—His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor; Vice-President—Mr. G. B. McNair; Captain—Mr. P. McMorran; Secretary and Treasurer—Mr. A. D. Anderson; Committee—Mr. P. Drimmie, Mr. G. W. Walker, Mr. F. H. Stewart, Mr. J. A. Tassie, Mr. D. C. Seroggie, and Mr. J. G. Melrose.

Prior to their departure for home the Australian cricketers made a motor-car tour through Scotland, as the guests of Mr. Peter Dawson of Glasgow, and were regally treated all through. The Colonials much appreciated the hospitality and excellent sporting spirit displayed by Mr. Peter Dawson, whose name is well known all over the world in connection with his popular brands of whisky.

As at present arranged the Bengal Lawn Tennis Championships will begin at the C.C.C. ground on 23rd February.

The controversy between Commander Peary and Dr. Cook, seems no nearer an ending, and the world has yet to learn, who was the first man to reach the Pole. The Committee of the National Geographical Society, which has been examining Commander Peary's records, has unanimously agreed that they conclusively prove that he reached the Pole. Few people, however, have doubted that Peary reached the Pole; the more interesting question is whether Dr. Cook did: In some quarters faith in the latter has been rudely shaken by the publication of an affidavit made by his guide and only companion in the ascent of Mount McKinley in Alaska in 1906; this guide swears that Dr. Cook never reached nearer than 14 miles to the summit and that his diary was doctored to accord with his assertions. Dr. Cook in reply said that he could prove that he had reached the top of the mountain, and that the only reason he could imagine why the guide should say that he did not was because through an oversight he had not been paid in full for his services. The photographer of the expedition has also made an affidavit corroborating the guide. Both have been obtained by attorneys supposed to represent the Peary Arctic Club. It is to be hoped, that Dr. Cook's data with regard to his Polar expedition will soon be forthcoming now, as it is reported that yielding to the demand that he should suspend his lucrative lecturing tour, he has cancelled further engagements and started to work on the proofs which are intended to establish his claim that he reached the North Pole. He expects to despatch them to Copenhagen in about five weeks time, after which, it is said, he intends to lead an expedition to the summit of Mount McKinley in order to find the records of his earlier feat.

Our epitome of English sport contains details of the fight between Jack Johnson and Stanley Ketchell. It was rather a one-sided contest and had a dramatic finish. It was admitted when the match was made that Ketchell, big and strong though he is and with vigorous youth on his side, was tackling the stiffest of his life when he consented to a match with Johnson at Jimmy Coffroth's Arena, near San Francisco, and although the contest was scheduled for twenty rounds it was not expected by the wise ones to go the full distance except on sufferance. Still, there was a fairly strong Ketchell following in certain districts, and many sportsmen, knowing Ketchell's pluck and strength, accepted the long odds betted on Johnson just on the chance that the black might not be in condition to stand the fierce rushes and aggressive tactics of the white. These were, however, forgetful of the fact that the one man above all others to play into Johnson's hands is the boxer who "carries it to him," for Johnson is seen at his very best in defensive work. With all his strength and grit Ketchell is not yet a fair match for Johnson, though standing just under 5 feet 10 inches to the 6 feet ¼ inch of Johnson, and scaling 12st. 7lb. to the 14st. ring condition of the black.

"Ketch's" present weight is of only recent acquisition, for it is not long since he was boxing at the middle-weight limit, 11st. 4lb. He has been putting on muscle fast since he lost and re-won the middle-weight title from Billy Papke, and incidentally furnished one of the exceedingly rare instances of a champion losing his title and regaining it, and it was hoped that the increase of weight of the proper sort would put him in line for the highest honours of the ring. His showing with Johnson, however, proves that he has still a very great deal to learn and unlearn—which is perhaps more difficult still—before he can hold a reasonable chance of defeating Jack Johnson, or Sam Langford, or men of similar class. Johnson himself never treated the match seriously, putting in some brisk road work, skipping-rope practice, and ball punching for about a couple of weeks only prior to the contest, and perhaps this perfunctory training was mainly due to the persuasion of Sam Fitzpatrick, a careful soul, who does not believe in taking needless risks.

A man-eating tiger is terrorising the inhabitants of Kulna in the Burdwan district, and has killed two persons and fatally mauled a third, while a courageous coolie is reported to have had a great struggle with the beast, eventually beating it off, but not before he had received severe injuries. An appeal has been made to Calcutta sportsmen to go up and hunt the animal, and it is probable that the holidays this week end will find more than one local shikari on the look out for the terror at Kulna.

The fight for the Light Weight Boxing Championship of England—a twenty-round contest for a purse of £2,200, was decided at the National Sporting Club on Monday last, Freddy Welsh defeating Johnnie Summers.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 22nd October 1909.

Really it has come to a pretty pass when the execution of a Spanish political offender in Spain is made the occasion for rioting in London, led by English members of Parliament! A mob of Socialists, prominent among whom were those nuisances Victor Grayson and R. B. Cunninghame Graham, held a demonstration last Sunday in Trafalgar Square. Violent oratory and the usual virulent attacks on everything that represents decency and order preceded some serious disorder and scuffling, the police having eventually to disperse the mob, but not before some damage was done to persons and property. About 10,000 frenzied Socialists proceeded to make a hostile demonstration at the Spanish Embassy in Grosvenor Gardens, but were checked and routed by the police. Before this a body of miscreants had marched on the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Westminster and desecrated the sacred edifice by writing some obscenities and otherwise defiling its outer walls, while others mounting the steps of the main entrance sang "The Red Flag," cheered the defunct Ferrar, hooted the priests and groaned with typical socialistic ferocity. Fortunately one believes that the Spanish nation as well as their ruler will understand that these disgraceful scenes were of no political or international importance, and that the vast mass of the English people is as strongly averse from meddling in the internal affairs of other nations as it is from allowing other nations to interfere in its own

This year the annual pageant of Monsieur the Lor Maire is to be shorn of much of its often frivolous accompaniments. It is, I hear, to be a properly dignified procession. There are to be no fearful and wonderful armoured knights, or "tinned supers" as some irreverent spectators called them; no gauzily draped nymphs in pink tights; no Walter Raleighs or Richard Whittingtons, walking warily in unaccustomed garments, and unsuccessfully trying to remember whom they represent. All these claimants of our love and laughter are to make way for more serious folk. The Show will be chiefly a naval and military procession, with the "Terriers," of course, well to the fore. There will also be fire brigade turnouts and deputations from representative City institutions. London is, in short, going to stand on its dignity—and there is no reason why it should not for once in a way; though really it is hard to find an explanation for sticking to this show which is, after all, but a relic of barbarism.

I think I am right in concluding that the noble army of philatelists increases steadily in India; doubtless among your readers there are many who devote time and some of their hard-earned but depreciated dibs on the hobby—or is it a business? These will read with interest of the record sale just effected in London, where Mr. W. H. Peckitt, the well-known stamp dealer in the Strand, has paid no less than £24,500 for the collection of Sir William Avery, whose weighing machines are known all over the world. It is said to be the largest stamp collection ever sold. Compiled throughout a long life from the age of eight, it is generally considered to be the largest general collection of postage stamps next to that in the British Museum. It is rich in all the great rarities, comprises from 90,000 to 100,000 stamps, and represents almost completely the postal systems of every country in the world. Two "gems" are unused Post Office Mauritius stamps engraved by a local watchmaker in Mauritius in 1847. The Prince of Wales paid £1,450 at auction for the twopenny stamp unused. Only two copies of the penny stamp in this state are known. Recently in Paris a collection of Swiss stamps of the millionaire banker M. Paul Mirabaud was sold for approximately £8,000, but in the Avery collection there are several unique pieces lacking in the Mirabaud one. Unused copies of the double Geneva stamp, of which there are seven and a half in one block, fetch £75 each. So rare is the whole top two rows of the five centimes Eagle stamp of Geneva that its value can hardly be estimated. The Avery collection of three-cornered issues of Cape of Good Hope in many respects is superior to the Vernon Roberts collection, sold to Mr. Peckitt in 1907 for £4,000. The original stamps were engraved in London, but during a temporary shortage in the Colony a local engraver had to provide an imitation. These are excessively rare. There are a unique block of four of the penny brick-red stamp and a pair and a single of the fourpence unused and five superb used pairs. Among the stamps of Ceylon the unperforated ninepence lilac-brown stamp is valued at £125. The collection also includes a copy of the three-lire stamp of Tuscany unused, worth about £100. The pair of the twenty-seven paras Moldavian stamp are priceless, and in no other collection will there be found so large a number of the rare first stamps of Moldavia, for which Sir William Avery had a penchant. On one day he bought three complete sets, twelve stamps, for £2,000—a record deal in any single class of rarity.

"Blue-stocking" as a phrase full of meaning, will soon be forced out of use. There is a perfect craze among women just now for bright-hued hosiery and royal blue is most fashionable. There was a time when "blue-stockings" suggested much learning, chiefly because much learning is the only excuse for a woman being plain or ugly. But I notice that girls, who are so pretty and charming that their ignorance must be colossal, are nowadays the most frequent wearers of blue stockings. As a rule, this colour scheme is adopted to match their hats, and very pretty the effect is, too; so pretty, that to call a girl a "blue stocking" is not a delicate compliment, which you may test for yourself. It now only remains for the pretty girls of England to make spectacles fashionable, and there will hardly be a taunt left to apply exclusively to the poor girl who is plain. But no, the word "homely" remains. To say a girl is homely is only a polite way of saying she is ugly, and in order to destroy its double meaning the good-looking girls will have to cultivate the habit of making beds, scrubbing the kitchen, and dusting the parlour. But this may be too great a tax on beauty.

"STRAND THEATRE—cast including Miss Florence St. John." Well might old playgoers like myself rub their eyes when they read the bill of the play in Aldwych this week. True enough our sweet, old Florence of the cherished Globe days is back again in London, and I'll warrant there will be a mob of old timers who remember her triumphs in "Les Cloches," "La Mascotte," "Olivette," and dozens of other pieces more than twenty years ago. She is to play in the "Merry Peasant" at the Strand Theatre (lately the Waldorf) and, as she was considered the mascotte of the old Strand, the management of the present Strand thought she must be in it, and summoned her accordingly. They tell me she looks perhaps a score of months, instead of a score of years, older than those days when all London was at her dainty feet, and her beauty and charm are abiding. Well, if any one can command for success it should be Florence St. John—so mote it be.

YESTERDAY we celebrated the anniversary of Trafalgar in the usual way. Nelson's column was smothered in greenery, flowers and bunting, and among the wreaths were many from the Colonies. One from New Zealand was embedded in a large block of ice and among other striking devices was a 10-foot anchor composed of geraniums, white chrysanthemums and violets.

With certain other bequests, to which the ministry of his grateful country paid no heed, Nelson left us that governance of the sea which has found no challenger until our own time. What course he would have us follow under the menace of new conditions cannot be doubted. All his life he had fought against odds with a wholesome belief in the endurance and courage of the men he led. The odds against Nelson tempted Villeneuve to Trafalgar. But he had never the sentimentality of rashness. On the eve of Trafalgar he was still demanding a stronger fleet. "It is annihilation that the country wants," he wrote, "and not merely a splendid victory. Numbers only can annihilate." A Trafalgar anniversary is the day on which to commend his words to those who cry Blue Funk when Nelson's demand for annihilating force is taken up by Nelson's successors.

In the great saferoom, with its walls of steel, in which repose the most glorious of the volumes in Mr. Morgan's white marble palace, three manuscripts of works by George Meredith are to join the manuscripts of "Paradise Lost," of books by Dickens, Thackeray, Scott and scores of other famous authors. The manuscripts bought by Mr. Morgan are those of "Diana of the Crossways," "Lord Ormont and His Aminta," and "The Amazing Marriage." The price paid was £800.

SHOOTING IN SIAM.

THIS year I revisited a shooting ground of which I sent you an account in 1906. A friend, S., who was leaving Siam for good, wrote to say that he would like to do a trip with me on his way home. He was to have joined me at my headquarters in Raheng, but I was compelled by business to leave before he arrived, and I awaited him three days march further down the Mee Ping river. After his arrival—by boat—I was further delayed two days, which "Pa," as he is generally called, endured with stoical calm. Once we started, however, we lost no time on the road, as Pa's somewhat comprehensive programme demanded that he should arrive home in time to attend Henley, after a short trip in Japan, and a cursory glance at Moscow, and—if possible—St. Petersburg.

Signs of game were plentiful enough on the road, and we got a few Blyth's green-legged hill partridge and a jungle fowl or two while on the march. One day while we were sitting waiting for our lunch a sambur hind which had been lying about 20 yards from us bolted past down the creek, having been put up by my Goorkha durwan, who arrived immediately afterwards in much excitement, and explained how near he had found it lying up.

The next day but one we missed a barking deer before getting into camp, and having found a suitable place for camp, sat down to await the arrival of the elephants. While waiting we heard a scream some distance away on the opposite bank, which we put down to a small elephant which we had seen further up the creek, feeding near her mother. Pa, however, remarked doubtfully that it did not appear to come from that direction. However we thought no more of it till the next day when circumstances re-called it to us.

Next morning early when the riders brought in our elephants they told us that they had seen the drag of a kill. We went out to see the place, and, following the drag, came on the body of a young sambur lying under a fallen tree within 300 yards of camp. We were debating as to when it had been killed when one of the elephant riders said "Oh! about 12 o'clock yesterday. We heard it scream as we were arriving in camp." This was what Pa and myself had heard, no doubt. The panther must have been very hungry or very bold to kill within easy sound of the elephants and men, who were making plenty of noise as they arrived in camp. We decided not to shift camp and had a machan made, in which I installed Pa about 3-30 P.M. When we arrived there we found that the panther had already been back to the kill, and scraped off some branches with which we had covered it to prevent its becoming high as quickly as it otherwise would have. It had been agreed that we should not go to light Pa back to camp till he called; whether he fired or not; so when I heard a shot at 10 o'clock I waited. About half an hour later Pa called and I went out with a lantern and brought him in. He said that he had caught a glimpse of the panther over his right shoulder before dark; but had not been able to get a shot. We had put a Hitchcock lamp near the kill, and Pa said that the animal at which he had fired was a very small one. He compared it to "Deng," a Siamese dog which had attached itself to us on the march. The next morning on visiting the kill we found that the panther had been back and fed after Pa had had his shot, and we consequently decided to stay another night on chance of the panther returning again. This time Pa got up in the machan at 2-30 P.M. and did not get a shot till 9-30; but I had better tell the tale as he told it afterwards. He had waited from 2-30 till 6, and as the machan was an uncomfortable one, was feeling very stiff, and took a careful survey of all his surroundings before getting up to stretch himself. He looked particularly hard—so he explained—at three suspicious looking leaves, and having decided that they were only leaves, got up to stretch himself, when the leaves converted themselves into the head of a panther, and the animal got up and slunk off too quickly to allow of a shot. Pa mentally kicked himself and hastily subsided into his seat, but nothing happened till 9.30. Then an animal arrived and began eating at the kill. Pa, who saw it clearly outlined in the lamplight, took a careful shot, and heard a scraping and gurgling; though—owing to its having fallen in the shadow thrown by the sambur—he could see nothing of it. The animal, however, had appeared to be such a small one that Pa sat still and waited, and at 11 o'clock the genuine panther arrived and he fired. The panther cleared off and Pa called and returned to camp with a man who went out with a lamp, for I had gone to sleep before the second shot. On Pa's arrival he narrated the above and showed me the body of a badger like animal with a black and white ringed tail which he had shot before the panther turned up. The next morning we found that the panther had again been at the kill, and we beat for him; but without success. We then moved camp for Mah Ray—our ultimate destination. On the way we met P., who told us that the jungle was burnt off for some miles in all directions, and that the stalking was therefore easy and quiet; and that one could consequently see the game at a fair distance. He had missed a tsine bull on the way out to meet us.

The same evening I took Pa for a short stroll after tea, over a favourite piece of stalking ground near camp, and we got a glimpse of a herd of tsine; which, however, winded us before we got near. The next day, the 13th March, I took Pa for a stalk in the morning, which was not successful; we found on our return that P. had shot a boar. In the evening P. took Pa for a stalk, and when on my way home I heard several shots a few 100 yards from me, and going in their direction found that they had got a fine bear—Malayan variety. P. who was walking about 100 yards from Pa had seen it first and tried to call his attention to it, but failing, had taken the shot and bowled it over, and they had then both shot it again as it was trying to struggle to its legs. It measured 5 feet 4½ inches and scaled 13 stone, being larger than most of the bears of that variety found in these parts.

The luck in the next three days fell to me. I got two good Malayan sambur and a tsine bull with 26½ inch horns.

On the afternoon of the 15th one of our men told us he had sighted a herd of buffalo. I took Pa out at once and we tracked them for about an hour, and then found a wallow at the riverside which had only just been quitted. The tracks led into kine grass and we had scarcely gone in 5 yards when the herd bolted and we each ran to cut them off. I ran up the river followed by one of the trackers. The herd, however, did not come my way, and after waiting sometime to refresh myself with tea from my thermos flask and to wait for Pa, I set off on the tracks, which I had to quit in time to get home before dark. On my return I found that Pa was still out and, having had some experience of losing myself in the same jungle, I started firing signal shots. About 7-30 there was an answering shot; and as I was in my tub P. went out, provided with a whiskey and soda in a sparklet bottle, and found Pa and his tracker. Seeing it was pitch dark, P. wisely insisted on making his way to the river and following it down to camp. Pa was very cross, and said that my way of tracking buffalo was "a mug's game." Trackers should have been put in the grass and we should have stood where the buffalo would bolt, etc. I ventured to suggest to Pa that this would scarcely be fair on the trackers as they might be charged. Pa—very huffy at his prolonged search for camp—declared: "No; the buffalo will run away every time, and I am betting on it." I shut up; devoutly hoping that Pa would not act on this theory when first he met a buffalo bull. What happened when he did come to close quarters with one eventually caused me considerable hilarity; but of that more anon. P. subsequently gave me an account of what happened when he met Pa, which also amused me considerably. Pa had, it appeared, lost confidence in his tracker's ability to find the way back, and had taken the direction into his own hands, regardless of the protests of the tracker. When P. found him and pointed out the way, the tracker immediately raised his voice in triumph pointing out that was what he had told Pa. Pa (so P. says) turned on the tracker with such ferocity that the latter fled hastily and did not again dare to attempt to justify himself.

On the 17th Pa wounded a tsine bull, which he and I followed the next day, till we put up another. Having made sure that it was not the one which had been wounded I left Pa to follow the wounded one, and made a short cut across the circle which I expected the bull we had seen would take; but failed to pick up the tracks. On the way I saw a couple of pig, and as they were standing between me and the sun, with their bristles showing prominently on their shoulders, I shot both for boars; but found they were both sows. Pa returned late; had not got a shot; and had eventually lost the tracks. P. had been in camp seedy for two days past. The same evening in a stalk after tea I had exceptional luck, bagging a fair boar, a sambur stag, and a barking deer in quick succession.

On the 20th P. and Pa rode out to stalk over a favourite ground of the former's; and when I got back to lunch from an unsuccessful morning stalk, my boy told me that the others had bagged a buffalo bull and sent back for an elephant to fetch the head into camp. He added "It chased Nai Sheko (the native way of pronouncing Pa's patronymic) and Nai Kootah fired at it; and then it chased Nai Kootah and Nai Sheko fired at it, and Nai Sheko tripped up and dropped his hat and his rifle." From this somewhat incoherent account it appeared that Pa might have gathered some valuable experience re buffalos, and I determined to insist on full particulars. When they returned I extracted the following account from them:

They rode out some miles, and then began stalking; Pa—who was walking in front—almost immediately walked over a ridge into sight of a herd of buffalo, with the bull standing on the near side within about 15 yards and put two shots into his left side. The bull galloped off to the right and some half dozen cows stood staring at Pa, apparently not quite certain whether they should charge or not. P., who was not far behind, saw the bull passing and fired two shots into it's right side. Pa says that one of the Kamoo trackers, Quin, who was out with them was at this time shinning up a tree shouting "Qui, Qui," in a tone of horrified remonstrance; under the idea, evidently, that if he could explain to Pa and P. that they were firing at buffalo, neither of them could be so foolish as to interfere with them further. P. came up and told Pa that the wounded buffalo was down in a hollow, and they rashly followed him in to finish him; closely attended by a Burman and Quin, who had come down their respective trees, under the idea that it was practically all over; which proved to be somewhat premature. Pa and P. found the buffalo immediately, and fired one or more shots (they became rather uncertain from this point about such trifles as the number of cartridges they let off), and the buffalo promptly charged them. They both ejaculated "Good Lord he is coming" and fled. Quin and the Burman, who had been in the rear, now naturally became the advanced guard. Pa and P. started together, but it seems that—though P. is by no means a sprinter—Pa was "left standing;" and Pa, becoming rapidly aware that he was not in it—either with the men in front or the buffalo in the rear—executed a frantic dodge round a bamboo, and catching his foot in it was thrown heavily on his shoulder; his rifle being thrown in one direction and his topi in another. He had comforted himself that the buffalo could not swing quickly round the bamboo, in which he found himself mistaken. P. who says he had an anxious eye directed to the rear and also heard the fall, turned round and was horrified to see the buffalo "playing football with Pa," as he expressed it. P. immediately fired at the buffalo's shoulder, which they subsequently found was broken, and this probably preventing it's doing Pa more harm than to give him sundry buffets (the worst of which was a bang on the wrist) as the broken shoulder prevented it getting its horn down far enough to use the point. P. ejected, and on reclosing the breech of his repeater, pulled the trigger again, only to find that he had fired his last cartridge. Pa said "For God's sake shoot him P.," to which he says P. replied "I am awfully sorry old chap I have not got any more cartridges," and he ran across in front of the bull to find his man with the cartridges. This started the bull after him but he managed to dodge it, and it went on apparently dazed. Then finding himself without his topi he put his coat over his head and went back to find Pa who—also hatless—explains that he was going about looking up trees "to see which he could get up if the bull came back again." P. then insisted on tying a handkerchief round Pa's head and they found a Kamoo up a tree who politely handed them down cartridges without descending himself. They then proceeded to gather various articles lost in the chase. Pa's rifle and topi; P.'s topi and the men's head cloths were all found in close proximity, shed in the first strenuous burst of the pursuit. They then followed the bull with a caution bred of respect, and proceeded to finish him off; but fourteen shots were fired before he expired. Of course some were fired in thick stuff (not to speak of other disadvantages), but Pa and P. express some doubt as to whether a ·405 Winchester (the rifle each of them was using) is quite heavy enough for buffalo in thick jungle.

The same evening I got two "tsine" bulls from a herd, making this our most successful day.

We continued shooting with varying luck till we parted on the 26th, Pa being obliged to leave and P taking him part of the way as he had business lower down the creek. Later on P. and myself had a few days shooting while waiting for a boat to take us down to Bangkok. One day the men said they had seen the track of bison while we were on the march, and I went down to the place directly after lunch and started tracking.

We had scarcely gone 200 yards when I heard a snort from some thick bamboo on the bank of a small stream. I thought it was a pig; and motioning to the two natives with me to stop, I stepped forward to see if it were a boar, when out rushed a big dark bull which I took to be a bison. I fired three shots with the repeater (·405) and followed on the tracks. I found the animal had faced round twice in the first quarter of a mile, and a little further on made him out standing still about 120 yards away from us. He was so dark that I was not sure if it were not one of the rocks amongst which he was standing, and I pointed him out to the men. As they moved forward to get a better sight, the bull started again, and I took a shot and saw him stagger forward a few paces and come down. On getting to the place we found some difficulty in spotting him, as his colour blended with that of the burnt ground. When we did so I saw that he was an old tsine spotted about the neck and shoulders with small white spots about the size of a threepenny piece. P. shot one marked in the same way last year; though his was more or less spotted all over. He wrote a letter to the Indian Field about it which led to Mr. Lydekker writing to ask about the animal, and finally pronouncing it as probably only a "freak" and not a distinct species. Curiously enough, however, the Burmans in this forest say that there are two species much alike, which they call "tsine" and "nua" (the latter merely meaning cattle and being the term applied also to domestic cattle). However as they went on to say that there were also certainly these two species in Burma and I have never heard of any red cattle other than tsine" being found there, I came to the conclusion that they must have taken herds of cows and young for another and smaller species. However, they stuck to their point, and when I asked them why we never shot a bull of the other species—we shot six tsine bulls this trip—they said "Oh! whenever we got near a herd of nua you always said they were cows or bulls too small to shoot at." I remember that a Burman Forest Officer, at one time Conservator of Siam, once shot in this jungle, and told me that he had had some conversation with the native re a second variety of cattle. If this happens to catch his eye I should very much like to hear his opinion on the subject.

I had taken some cows and calves down with me to act as bait for tigers but only one was killed. To this the tiger did not return. Another was shot by a Karen, while it was tied up in some long grass in the creek—in mistake for a tsine of course.

One day P. who had been counting logs in a stream, told me that he had had a long shot (about 250 yards) at a tiger which he had seen walking away from the dead body of a bison bull which was lying in the middle of the stream.

One of the men with him said he saw a second tiger at the same moment that the first cleared out. We built a machan at the place, and, as P. had not seen the tigers till nearly noon, we determined not to sit up in the machan till early next morning, as we thought it improbable that they would return for nearly 24 hours. (They had had a very heavy meal.) The next morning we were somewhat later in getting to the kill than we had expected to be, so I suggested that we should stalk through the kine grass on the edge of the stream and see if the tigers had arrived. We left the men behind and started our stalk; at about 200 yards distance I saw one of them on the kill, and we stalked him to within about 70 yards. It was about 7 o'clock, and the sun, which was directly behind us, was shining in his eyes and no doubt the glare on the water also dazzled him, as he did not seen us when we stood up for the shot. P. suggested in a whisper that we should lie down and wait for the second tiger; but, being afraid that the men might meanwhile come round the corner and scare him off, I told P. to take the shot. Meanwhile I stood with my rifle over my arm, feeling sure that P. would kill the tiger with his first shot (not reckoning for buck-fever which had caused me to miss many an easier shot). P. fired, and the tiger turned and bolted without a sound. I was so grieved and astounded that I said "Oh you have missed him" before I even raised my own rifle, and I consequently only got a shot just as he reached the edge of the jungle 100 yards away. We sat up, of course, the same night, and next morning; but—equally, of course, we did not see either of the tigers again. No doubt the tiger caught sight of us when P. fired. However P. has since retrieved his failure; for he came across two tigers near a sambur which they had killed, and bagged both. Perhaps they were the same pair which escaped us, for they were shot within 20 miles of the place.

BOXING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—To decide a bet can you say if Mr. Bettinson, the well-known figurehead and referee at the National Sporting Club, ever came to the front as a boxer. I maintain he did; my friend thinks his knowledge of the game is purely academic.

BELCHER.

[Mr. A. F. Bettinson, the manager of the N. S. Club, might smile to hear himself classed as an "academic" boxer. There is probably no one in England with as wide and particular a knowledge of boxing as he possesses, and as for his record it may suffice to say that he figured prominently as an amateur for many years, and in 1882 won the amateur light-weight championship.—ED.]

FATHER LAFONT MEMORIAL FUND.

PATRONS.

H. H. Sir Edward Baker, K.C.S.I., Lieut.-Governor of Bengal.

H. H. Sir John Hewett, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Lieut.-Governor of the United Provinces.

H. H. Sir Lancelot Hare, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Lieut.-Governor of Eastern Bengal and Assam.

It has been proposed by many friends and former pupils of the late Father Lafont that a memorial should be made to cherish his name and his long honourable connection with the St. Xavier's College. The late Father Lafont was connected with the St. Xavier's College from the time that he landed in India, in December 1865, for 43 years and he secured for the institution the high reputation as an educational establishment which it at present holds. It has been suggested that a fund should be raised to commemorate his name either in the form of scholarships to be held at the College or in some other suitable way. Father Lafont in his life time received recognition of his learning and scientific ability from the Calcutta University, the Asiatic Society, and the Institute of Electrical Engineers. Her Majesty the late Queen Empress created him in 1880 a C.I.E. and he also received recognition from the Governments of Belgium and France. But now that he is gone, some memorial is required which will keep his memory green for future generations of students at the St. Xavier's. Subscriptions may be paid into the Father Lafont Memorial Fund to Mr. L. G. Dunbar, Secretary and Treasurer, Bank of Bengal, who has kindly consented to act as Honorary Treasurer to the Fund.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

This Trial Outfit Free

This generous trial outfit will be sent to any part of the world on receipt of coupon below, duly filled in, and 3d. in stamps for postage.

A GENEROUS OFFER.

To Prove that Harlene Hair Drill grows hair.

A MILLION FREE OUTFITS TO BE DISTRIBUTED

If you would like to make your hair grow in healthy and beautiful profusion, you can receive free for the mere asking the "Harlene Hair Drill" outfit illustrated here.

Let any woman conjure up the vision of how much younger and how much more attractive she would be if her hair was as it was, say, five to ten or fifteen years back.

Let any man similarly summon before his mind's eye the picture of the difference that his hair as it was five to fifteen years previous would make to him to-day.

And it is this great difference that it is possible to restore. No Woman's—or man's—hair is to-day what it might—what it CAN—be, unless it has had the natural and physiological cultivating and beautifying benefit of "Harlene Hair Drill."

After practising "Harlene Hair Drill" you will be surprised—agreeably surprised. Mind, this we promise.

Your hair will stop falling out by the end of the week.

The scalp will feel "alive" instead of dead, hot, hard, scurfy, greasy, sticky, damp, or dry.

Note.—All the accessories required will be sent you without a penny cost. It cost three pence to send you the package and it is suggested that you do Messrs. Edwards the courtesy of sending three pence for postage or carriage mentioned on the following Coupon (of which you can send a copy if you would rather not cut it from your paper.)

Further supplies of "Harlene" wherewith to continue the practice and benefits of "Harlene Hair Drill" may be obtained of all chemists and stores throughout the world at 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per bottle, or sent direct on receipt of postal order (which must include postage).

COUPON FOR FREE "HARLENE HAIR DRILL" OUTFIT.

To Messrs. EDWARDS' HARLENE CO., 95 and 96, High Holborn, London, England.

Sirs,—I wish to try "Harlene Hair Drill" for one week in accordance with your offer to readers of this paper, and shall be glad if you will send me the "Harlene Hair Drill" Outfit, with instructions, free of charge.

LONDON, Friday, 22nd October 1909.

NEWMARKET.

A HIGH wind moaned and shrieked round roofs and street corners at Newmarket last Friday, carrying showers of small rain in its train. It seemed to blow all ways at once, and the big entrance hall of the Cesarewitch stand reminded one of Hans Andersen's chamber of winds. The going, getting the only advantage to be gained, was rapidly improving. Although signs of retreat had early been given by a heavy baggage train of vehicles bearing stationwards during the forenoon, many visitors followed the example of the King and stayed till the fall of the curtain, so that the attendance was a good one in the club enclosure, and Tattersall's was of usual strength. Results:—

LINGFIELD.

Usually we find brighter weather afield in Sussex and Surrey than in town, but on Saturday London was preferable to Lingfield, which was unlucky in catching a regular condensed Southdown fret, visitors getting pretty wet in the long walk from the station, and the sooner the proposed new structure is commenced and completed the better for the hard-working executive and their patrons. The farther ring was temporarily roofed by a mushroom-like growth of umbrellas, while the members' stand was a more pleasant place than the pretty lawn, whose turf was drenched and whose acorn-laden oaks were dripping. Fields ruled big in most of the events, and though

OUR TEETH

Has no one been struck by the fact that, in spite of the regular daily cleansing with tooth soaps and pastes, the teeth, and particularly the back teeth, frequently become decayed and hollow? Is not that a convincing proof that tooth-soaps and tooth-pastes are entirely inadequate for the purpose? Our teeth are not so obliging as to decay only in places where we can conveniently reach them with the tooth-brush. On the contrary, it is just in those localities which are difficult of access, such as the backs of the molar teeth, the interstices between the teeth, hollows and cracks, that the decay and destruction of the teeth appear most frequently, and are most likely to occur. In consequence, if anyone wishes to preserve his teeth intact—that is to say, to keep them healthy—this can be effected in one way only: by daily cleansing and rinsing the mouth and teeth with the antiseptic dentifrice Odol. During the process of rinsing this preparation penetrates everywhere, reaching alike the hollows in the teeth, the interstices between them, and the backs of the molars. Odol destroys the microbes and arrests all bacterial and fermentation processes which attack the teeth. It follows that everyone who uses Odol regularly every day takes the greatest care of his teeth and mouth that scientific discovery has up to the present time made possible.

GATWICK.

After Saturday's moist and unpleasant experiences the London brigade had really deserved better luck, and they found it at Gatwick on Tuesday in a still mellow afternoon, but owing to lack of sunshine the course had not so much recuperated from the spell of wet as might have been wished. The going was a bit holding, but not so stodgy as at Lingfield, and large fields were seen out in all but the last event, and a capital afternoon's sport was enjoyed by a good muster of visitors. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

DEFEAT overtook all three London clubs in the First League competition last Saturday. In view of Blackburn Rovers' record and the fact that both Newcastle United and Aston Villa had gone down this season at Ewood Park, Chelsea in running the Blackburn team to a goal did as well as their friends could reasonably have expected. To an even greater extent a reverse for Woolwich Arsenal at Sunderland was assured. On the other hand, good reason existed to anticipate a win for Tottenham Hotspur. The North London team enjoyed the advantage of playing at home, where of three matches contested they had won two and drawn the other, and they were meeting a side that had suffered defeat on the last four Saturdays. So far from securing the success anticipated Hotspur were two goals down at half-time, and although Middlemiss reduced the margin afterwards a further goal by Middlesbrough left the London team beaten by 3 to 1. With Bloomer and Common in the forward line, Middlesbrough's attack was generally troublesome, but the best feature of the play of the Northerners was the work of the two backs and of Williamson in goal. The Tottenham front rank performed fairly well, and the side would not have lost had the defence been sound. Coquet, however, proved erratic and Burton slow, while Boreham in goal was not quite at his best.

Two victories—more important in their influence upon the First League competition than that of Middlesbrough, if not invested with quite so much interest to followers of the game in London—were those of Sheffield United and Liverpool. The one club so far unbeaten, Sheffield United, having to play Everton at Goodison Park, seemed in some danger of losing that distinction, but they pulled though by 2 to 1, and Liverpool, scoring twice directly after the start, inflicted upon Bradford City the first defeat that team have sustained at Valley Parade this season. As a result of yesterday's encounters Sheffield United strengthen their position at the head of the competition, and Blackburn Rovers and Liverpool are running a close race for second place, Everton and Newcastle United having to make way for them. In view of the positions of Sheffield United and Liverpool it may be noted that on the opening Saturday of the season Sheffield United could only draw with Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead and Liverpool went down before Chelsea at Stamford Bridge. A noteworthy performance yesterday was that of Sheffield Wednesday, who, failing to win one of their first half dozen engagements and sustained some severe defeats on the Owlerton enclosure, there defeated Newcastle United by 3 to 1.

No great changes occurred in the positions of the leading clubs of the Second Division of the League as the result of Saturday's matches, but there were one or two upsets. The surprise of the afternoon took place at Wolverhampton, where the leaders of the competition, West Bromwich Albion, suffered a severe reverse in a splendid game by 3 goals to 1. Despite that, they do not lose their place, but Hull City, who beat Barnsley during the week and could only draw yesterday with Lincoln City, are now second with an equal number of points to the Albion. Glossop, Leicester Fosse, and Fulham all won their matches, the Fulham team showing fine form against Bradford and gaining an excellent victory after they had had the first goal of the match scored against them. In losing to Leicester Fosse, Derby County were unfortunate. Their forwards repeatedly struck either the goal posts or the crossbar with their shots, and nothing went right for them in a match in which they had the best of the play all through. Visiting teams did not fare so well as on the previous two Saturdays, Leicester Fosse and Manchester City being the only ones to win, and both were extremely lucky. Birmingham, it is interesting to note, gained their first victory, scoring five times against Gainsborough Trinity.

A curious series of results were recorded in the Southern League. Coventry alone won at home, four visiting teams triumphed, and no fewer than six games were drawn. Under such circumstances few changes of position took place, but Crystal Palace, who won by 3—0 at Southampton, secure first place above West Ham United—just successful at Leyton—and New Brompton, who, only managing to draw with Queen's Park Rangers, fall below the two London sides that won away from home. The Rangers have really a better record than the Kent club, so that the metropolis has very good representation with three teams among the first four. Northampton, after apparently recovering the form that carried off the championship last season, could only draw with Exeter, and must become much more consistent if they are to take a prominent part in the struggle for chief honours. No matter how the results go Reading cannot find a way to victory and, of thirteen engagements, they have now drawn ten, being still the one club without a victory. Probably Croydon Common are not so good a side, but they have managed to obtain 5 points in eight matches.

HOTSPUR vs. MIDDLESBROUGH.—Thanks to weak play by their backs and goalkeeper Tottenham Hotspur were beaten for the first time this season on their own ground, Middlesbrough winning at Tottenham by 3 goals to 1. Whilst the Tottenham forwards were a trifle better on the whole than the Middlesbrough line, their backs and goalkeeper could not compare with their northern opponents, and Boreham, indeed, made Middlesbrough a present of one of the goals by missing a dropping ball altogether and allowing it to go over his head into the net. Watson at back was all that a back should be for the visitors, and time and again he defeated the most promising attacks of the Hotspur forwards, but all his cleverness would not have availed them without the great and wonderful display of goalkeeping by Williamson. In spite of the wet ball and heavy turf he seemed as agile as a cat, and in a game in which good shooting was a marked feature he brought off some splendid saves. With the wind against them the Tottenham forwards never seemed to settle down in the first half hour, and during that time Middlesbrough got a couple of goals. The first was scored by Groves after twenty minutes, after Boreham had fisted out a fast shot from Bloomer. The second came ten minutes later, Common heading this from a corner, which came about through Coquet miskicking. Before the interval Williamson made a couple of great saves from Middlemiss. In the first half hour of the second half Tottenham practically penned Middlesbrough in their half. Williamson saved several hard shots, but was finally beaten by Middlemiss. Towards the close the northern side took up the attack again, and Boreham, after saving well from Bloomer, allowed a long curling shot from Groves to go through his hand. Middlesbrough, 3; Tottenham Hotspur, 1.

BLACKBURN ROVERS vs. CHELSEA.—At Ewood Park, before 20,000 people. Bright and warm weather prevailed. The Rovers were fortunate in having their best in the field, but Chelsea had to play two reserve backs in Cartwright and Bettridge. The game opened with a hot attack by Blackburn and early on Latheron rather unluckily hit one of the posts with a great shot. The Chelsea forwards could not get going, and most of the play took place near the visitors' goal. Chelsea defended well, but Davies missed an easy chance for the Rovers. Before the interval, however, Davies made amends by scoring a goal. The football shown in the second half was not so good as before the interval, the game being as a result rather uninteresting. The Chelsea forwards had a good many chances, but they were all thrown away by hesitation in front of goal and indifferent shooting. Anthony, of the Blackburn Rovers, had the misfortune to hurt his shoulder and was off the field for the greater part of the second half. Blackburn Rovers, 1; Chelsea, 0.

SUNDERLAND vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—Despite the wretched weather that prevailed the visit of Woolwich Arsenal to Sunderland drew together fully 10,000 spectators. During the opening half Sunderland showed the superior form, being smarter on the ball and shooting better and more often than their opponents. Half an hour had elapsed, however, before success rewarded their efforts, Bridgett shooting through smartly. Sunderland continued to have all the better of the play and five minutes from the interval Holley put them further ahead. The play in the second half again went all in favour of Sunderland. A determined rush ended in Holley scoring with a very fast shot, and shortly afterwards the same player got through again. The result had now been placed beyond all question, but Sunderland did not relax their efforts, and further goals were put on by Mordue and Bridgett. Close on time Thompson obtained two goals for the Arsenal. Sunderland, 6; Arsenal, 2.

FULHAM vs. BRADFORD.—Although Fulham threatened to fall to pieces at one period of their match with Bradford at Craven Cottage, they made a fine recovery and in the end won comfortably by 3 goals to 1. The rain pelted down persistently and greatly affected the attendance, which numbered about 10,000. Fulham pressed heavily from the start, and Dalrymple came very near to scoring in the first five minutes. A leading feature was the fine form of Brown at inside left, this player cleverly mastering the difficulties of the ground and making many clever passes. The most dangerous shot by Bradford of the first half was sent in by Smith, and showed fine form in averting danger. Three minutes after the interval Manning dashed between the Fulham backs and scored Bradford's only goal in most unexpected fashion, and this reverse palpably upset the home team. A free kick, however, changed their luck, for this was beautifully placed by Sharp and headed into the net by Dalrymple. Fulham roused themselves to great efforts after this, but many thought Dalrymple's second goal—from Harrison's pass—to be offside. The third and last goal for Fulham was scored by Lipsham, but chief credit was due to Berry, who gave him his chance. Fulham, 3; Bradford, 1.

RUGBY RULES

BLACKHEATH vs. NEWPORT.—Although the weather was of the most wretched description, quite three thousand persons attended at Blackheath to watch this game, which proved to be a most spirited and even contest. There were several notable absentees, Coverdale and Gotley, the Club halves, being the principal of these, and their absence probably prevented Blackheath winning with a fair margin in hand. As it was, Blackheath looked like winners until, in the second half, Newport wiped out their arrears and got ahead, and even then the Heathens were threatening so often in the later stages that victory seemed possible at any moment. Blackheath in the first half had twice got over the line and failed to score, and Newport had at the other end been whistled back after crossing the line. Then, just before the interval, Beasley dribbled over and scored for the Heathens, but Stone failed to convert. This failure cost Blackheath the game, for on changing over the "Club" were twice brought back for some infringement after getting over the line, and then Newport, with a brilliant round of handling, sent Birt in with a try, which Vile converted. This proved to be all the scoring, and Newport won by 5 points to 3. Wright at three-quarters and Pillman at forward were outstanding players for Blackheath. Newport, 1 goal; Blackheath, 1 try.

LONDON WELSH vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Although unfortunately the ground at Wandsworth was very sodden and rain was falling heavily at the start, it could not be said that the game was marred to a great extent. The Services were in fine form, particularly forward, and it might be said that the Welsh never defended better. It was Lyon, however, at full back, upon whom fell the chief honours and he it was who gave the visitors the upper hand by means of his splendid length kicking. Oakley was all but through the Welsh defence once, but Maddocks brought him down within a few yards of the line, and Evans cleared. Nothing was scored in the first half, and the game looked like being a pointless draw, despite the continuous pressing of the Services, until five minutes from time, when Lyon made a fine run and found touch almost on the corner flag. From the throw-in Bissett managed to scramble over with a try. This was not improved, and the Portsmouth team won on their merits by 3 points to love. The attendance was about 600. United Services, 1 try; London Welsh, 0.

LENNOX vs. RICHMOND.—The Burntwood-lane ground at Wandsworth was in a terribly soft state and handicapped as the players were with the greasy ball the football in this match was of a scrambling character. Richmond played a man short thought owing to the absence of J. S. Williams, but after the first ten minutes, when Alexander scored a try for Lennox, which McLachlan failed to convert, the visiting forwards dominated the situation. Led by Odgers, they made repeated rushes and first A. S. Dugan and then C. H. Duggan scored tries for them, which enabled Richmond to lead at the interval by 2 tries to nothing. On changing ends Lennox men were pushed all over the ground, but the many mistakes in fielding the slippery ball prevented Richmond from adding to their advantage until nearing the end. Then Ireland dodged in and out and ran round on the wing to score under the bar. A little later Wilson repeated the performance. Terry, who took all the place kicks, only converted once, and so Richmond won by 14 points to 3. Richmond, 1 goal 3 tries; Lennox, 1 try.

HARLEQUINS vs. BEDFORD.—At Twickenham in unfavourable weather and on a soft ground. There was a small attendance. The Harlequins were weakened by the absence of A. D. Stoop, Poulton, and Maxwell-Dove, but still they were too good for Bedford, who were beaten at every point of the game. For a time the forwards fought a very even game but the superiority of the Harlequin backs soon began to tell, and before the interval the Bedford line had been crossed four times. Potter, Sibree, F. Stoop and Roberts scored tries, but none of them were improved, though one of them was scored behind the posts. In the second half the Bedford fowards went away with a rush, but the Harlequin defence was sound, and the backs were soon attacking. But it was a forward who scored. The backs took the ball almost to the line, and then Bussell got possession and scored and Roberts improved. Just after this the Bedford forwards took the ball down and the Harlequins were penalised for offside play on their twenty-five line, and Read placed a goal. From this time, however, the game went all in favour of the Harlequins, and the visitors never looked like scoring. Potter and Carey after good runs scored unconverted tries, and the Harlequins won by 23 points to 3. The game was not a good one, and both sides played below form. Read, the Bedford full back, was hurt in a collision in the second half, and was off the field for some time. Harlequins, 1 goal 5 tries; Bedford, 1 penalty goal.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—In this match at Richmond the London Scottish owed their success to their forwards, who playing their characteristic dashing game, had the Old Leysians well beaten early in the match. In the opening half they generally held the upper hand, and though the Old Boys displayed a very strong defence and some of their tackling wasvery keen, Walter, who was a tower of strength behind the Scottish scrum, succeeded in running in with a couple of tries and West converted one of them. After changing ends with a balance of eight points to nil in their favour the Scottish forwards again had so much in hand that the Old Leysians' defence was very severely tested, but though Hosken gained a try and H. Holloway improved it, and a little later H. Hosken kicked a penalty goal for the Leysians, Walter ran in with two further tries for the Scotsmen. West was successful with each place kick and thus the London Scottish won by 18 points to 8. Scottish, 3 goals 1 try; Leysians, 2 goals (1 penalty.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—Outplaying their opponents at all points, the University gained a victory at Oxford by 8 goals and 5 tries to nothing. Martin did not turn out, the team including seven Blues, and against their weak visitors the side showed to great advantage. Six tries were scored in the first half and seven in the second by Gilroy (3), Poulton (2), Cunningham (2), Lagden, Turner, Crosje, Pocock, Nicholas, and Herring. 4 goals were kicked by Turner. Oxford, 8 goals 5 tries; Marlborough Nomads, 0.

ROWING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The first week in October term is always a busy one on the river, but seldom has it presented a livelier appearance than during the last few days, due in a measure to the unprecedentedly large number of crews practising for the Coxswainless Fours. Magdalen are the holders, and they have a splendid chance of retaining possession of the challenge cup. The honour of stroking has fallen to the lot of J. Fleming, a strong and lusty oarsman, and with the president (D. Mackinnon) at 3, and another Blue in A. S. Garton at 2, they have a very powerful combination, as besides these they possess a capable cox in Millington Drake. It is very probable that they will have a second crew on, but the latter are hardly likely to repeat the performance of the second crew of three years ago and win outright. New are shaping well under the leadership of the 'Varsity stroke, R. C. Bourne, and they have a decided advantage over many crews with Dr. G. C. Bourne to coach them. C. A. Gladstone is stroking Christ Church, with Roberts, Lloyd and Bruce (bow) behind him, and they also have a second crew on, consisting of W. Akers, G. R. Codrington, G. D. Pidgeon and H. T. Dowing (stroke). Roberts, who is rowing 3 in the first boat, is a Radley freshman with a capital reputation. Trinity had two crews out yesterday, the first consisting of B. S. Harvey, G. L. Henderson, J. M. Monk and N. D. Coleridge (stroke), and the second of A. R. Rainy (bow), K. B. Shack, R. B. Munsey and R. C. Dayne, Rev. D. Leggo, as usual has them in hand. St. John's are shaping very well, and may work their way into the final. The present order is A. Hughes Jones (bow), A. E. Kitchin (who steers), G. W. Lambert and V. Hope (stroke). Balliol commenced practice with Fraser rowing at 2, but he was retired in favour of C. W. Horner, the Hon. C. Grenfell being bow, J. W. Heinemann 3 and M. B. Higgins stroke. University are rowing very well with J. L. Cunliffe (bow), J. E. Kempe, H. R. Bonsey and J. C. Davidson (stroke); and other crews in practice are: Merton, R. Scott (bow), F. E. Smith, S. Cushing and A. C. Longman (stroke); Worcester, R. Gent (bow), A. H. Dennis, F. Suttor and J. R. Wilkinson (stroke); Lincoln, L. A. Filleul (bow), M. V. MacDonald, D. L. Vaughan Stevens and A. C. Rivett (stroke); Corpus, P. D. McNeil, C. C. Willerick, L. F. Naldei, and Vaux (stroke); and Oriel, Leonard (bow), Worthington, Whitwick and Hay (stroke). Brasenose, who had several days' preliminary practice at Cookham, have decided to relinquish the contest. No trial has been out at present.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—At the boat meeting on Friday some important reforms were suggested for the Lent races, which are to be discussed at a further conference of captains. The reforms related to the first division crews rowing on sliding seats, and that all oarsmen should be eligible to participate in these races whether they have figured in the first division of the Summer races or not. From enquiries made it is believed that the suggestions will meet with approval. The Etonian Blue (Mr. E. G. Williams) is made president, while Mr. Eric Fairbairn fills the post of secretary, with coxswainless fours fixed to start on November 4. The eleven crews are now practising in earnest. Several alterations have been made in the Jesus four and H. J. Shields now sets the work vice E. G. Fairbairn. Mr. Steve Fairbairn coaches. Third Trinity have rested on account of Lloyd, the bow oarsman, having strained the muscles of his body. Trinity Hall are stroked by G. L. Thomson, while J. B. Rosher occupies the same position in First Trinity. Pembroke are represented by two crews, Messrs. Forster and Lloyd are coaching. Other crews at work are Lady Margaret, Caius, St. Catharine's, Clare and Downing.

BOXING.

JOHNSON vs. KETCHELL.—On Saturday the 16th October at Frisco, Jack Johnson knocked out Ketchell in the twelfth round.

The end came unexpectedly. In the preceding rounds both men sparred cautiously, but opening the twelfth they wrestled to Johnson's corner. The negro broke away, and Ketchell sprang to meet him. Ketchell drove his right at the head, Johnson ducked, and the blow landed behind the ear. Johnson stumbled and fell, landing heavily. Johnson rose slowly, as if dazed, then leapt across the ten feet that separated them, his right first shot to the white's jaw, his left crashed into his stomach, and his right swung again, catching Ketchell on the head.

Ketchell reeled and dropped in a heap, while Johnson, unable to stop, sprawled across his rival's legs full length. Johnson sprang up, but Ketchell was out, and his seconds carried him off. Johnson, still dazed, clinging to the ropes.

From the time he entered the ring Ketchell was game as a cock. Though out-weighted, over-reached, and in every way the physical inferior, he fought a cool, well-planned contest. His face was puffed and bleeding before three rounds, but he kept following the negro undaunted. Johnson appeared to be holding himself back all the time. Only thrice did it seem as though he went in to knock out his man, once when Ketchell landed on his jaw, raising a lump, once when a hook caught him in the side, and at the last.

Throughout Johnson's smile flashed out over Ketchell's shoulder. When wrestling, Johnson frequently picked Ketchell up. Ketchell boxed warily, keeping at long range, and avoiding many blows by clever ducking, but Johnson jabbed his left in the face time after time. Twice Ketchell was thrown down by the rush of Johnson's attack without a blow being struck.—

INTERNATIONAL CONTEST MOREAU vs. GOLDSWAIN.—A ten round glove contest, which created a good deal of interest, was decided at the National Sporting Club last Monday evening, when Marcel Moreau, the middle-weight champion of France, and Jack Goldswain, of Bermondsey, a man who at one time held the 10st championship of England, met to box the best of fifteen rounds at 10st. 10lb. for £50 a-side and the club purse.

On going to scale both men were found to be over-weight, the Frenchman going 10st. 13lb. and Goldswain 10st. 1½lb. It was nearly half-past eleven when, Seaman Hayes having beaten George Moore of Barking, in twelve rounds, the Frenchman and Goldswain took the ring for the chief event of the evening. The first-named, who was favourite at 2 to 1, went off at a furious rate, and the opening round was one long exchange of wild hitting. The second saw better boxing, but while Moreau was somewhat round in his deliveries, Goldswain hit in a fairly clean and straight manner.

Frequently he drove his left full in the visitor's face, and at the end of the fifth round the betting was even. From here the London man fought with unexpected vigor, and though Moreau battled along bravely he was outpointed by a clever boxer, and when the contest had gone the full length the award went to Goldswain. It was a stout and stubborn bout, if not noticeable for science.

GOLF.

James Braid vs. J. H. Taylor.—During the last few weeks J. H. Taylor, the open champion, has been heavily beaten at Rochester and Woodbridge by his old rival James Braid, but on yesterday's 36 holes contest at Kidderminster the champion made some amends by gaining a fine victory by 5 up and 3 to play. Although the weather in the morning was by no means favourable, there was a large gathering of spectators, and the attendance increased in the afternoon. A charge of 2s. was made for admission, and all the proceeds were given to Kidderminster Infirmary, the expenses of the match being borne by a few members of the club.

Taylor won the first two holes in 3 each. Seven halves, followed, so that the champion turned 2 up. Braid secured the next two holes, but at the end of the morning round Taylor led by 3. He lost the first hole in the afternoon but subsequently his fine putting gave his opponent no chance, and Taylor won as stated. His score for each round was 69—a record for the lengthened course, which has had a number of bunkers added. Braid took 72 in the morning, and, approximately, 77 in the afternoon.

LANG

AND

(PATENT.)

Removed and Replaced by One Operation

Without the use of a screw-driver or any kind of tool.

(B.) Fastener Raised for Removing Lock.

"FIELD,"—a very interesting model of a side lock, the special feature of which is the provision of means for detaching the locks by the uplifting of a small thumb lever sunk flush in the plate. The lifting of the lever by inserting the thumb nail unlocks the plate and allows it to be removed. The reverse operation of putting it back is effected simply by pressing it home into place. Messrs. Lang have, however, gone further than merely to make their locks detachable without the use of implements or tools; means have been provided for making it impossible to put the locks back in any but the right position, irrespectively as to whether the lock is cocked or uncocked.

NOTE—There are no projections, when the lock is replaced the thumb lever automatically returns flush with the lock plate.

IMPORTANT.

The cocking arms automatically take up their proper position; consequently the adjustment of them that is required before an ordinary side-lock can be replaced is avoided, and sportsmen need not fear damage may be caused by irresponsible persons.

"IT IS FOOL-PROOF."

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C.C. UNDER 30 vs. OVER 30.—The Calcutta C.C. opened their season with a two days' inter-club match between "Buddhas and Chokras" last week end. Under 30 batted first, Carr and D. S. Shallow opening the inning. Shallow was bowled after scoring 17, and was succeeded by Hannaford, who only made 4. Then Manders joined Carr and the pair mastered the bowling completely. Carr hit all round the wicket and put up 84 before Reid bowled him, A. W. Shallow next came in as Manders' partner and they both played well and were still together when stumps were drawn for the day with the score at 244, Manders having contributed 92 in good style and Shallow 42. Resuming on Sunday Manders was caught before he could add to his over-night score but Shallow continued to bat soundly and was not out 83 when the innings closed for 313, Sewell (21), being the only other to get into double figures. The Buddhas then went in but failed miserably, being all out for 46, to which Given-Wilson had subscribed 24. Ernsthausen took 7 wickets for 23 runs and Manders 2 for 18. Following on "over 30" made a better show and had scored 160 for the loss of two wickets when time was called. Turnbull made 55, and Curtis-Hayward 65 not out. Score:—

The Honorary Secretary then passed round for inspection—

(1) a collection of vertebrate fossils mostly from the Bugti Country which had been kindly identified for the Museum by the Director, Geological Survey of India, Calcutta.

(2) a collection of local butterflies and bugs kindly named by Colonel C. Swinhoe and Mr. Waterhouse of the British Museum.

The Meeting was then thrown open to the Members and Lieutenant Bignell reported that he had come across several Cicada during the first week of August on the top of Tsut hill, a little over 10,000 feet.

There being no futher business Major Goodwin thanked Mr. Dracott for his gift of a sample of Baluchistan marble and for the analytical report he had obtained on it. He then asked the Members to do what they could to bring in specimens of various bugs of the country many of which were new to science and reminded them that the birds were once again passing through the country on migration and affording collectors a fresh opportunity of adding to their knowledge of the avifauna of Baluchistan.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural history Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday afternoon the 30th September 1909.

PRESENT. Members.—Mr. A Anderson, Mr. C. H. Dracott, Mr. A. A. Flynn, Mr. E. G. Foley, Mr. A. D. Marker, Doctor D. Otto, Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozeshaw, Mr. W. R. S. Porter, Honorary Secretary.—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

The Meeting was opened by the Honorary Secretary intimating that he had been specially requested by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon to express regret at his inability to attend the Meeting owing to his having to leave the station that afternoon.

He also read similar expressions of regret from Messrs. Anscomb, McDonough and Smith and remarked that the Manœuvres were doubtless accountable for the absence of the Vice-Presidents and several Members.

The President and Vice-Presidents being absent, Mr. Dracott was voted to the chair.

Read list of donations made to the Museum during the month, the exhibits themselves being passed round for the inspection of Members except in the case of three very interesting live snakes: a 9 foot Python, a Cobra (in cage) and a Eryx johnii, found by Mr. Flynn at the river Habb between Sind and Baluchistan, which were placed on the table and viewed at a respectful distance by some of the Members who left their chairs for the time being. Of the other exhibits the most important were a Beech Marten from the Staff College presented by Miss Tranaka, a Common Wryneck from Quetta presented by Lieutenant A. M. Lloyd and a lot of butterflies from Ziarat collected and mounted by Mr. S. H. Ford.

Read note from the Hon'ble President expressing his delight with Mr. Ford's collection of butterflies. Resolved that the thanks of the Members be conveyed to Mr. Ford for his valuable collection of butterflies.

Read appeals published by the Bombay Natural History Society—

(1) From Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker asking for information as to the breeding of the rarer species of Grouse with eggs of all species either on loan or as gifts in exchange and for information as to the dates on which Woodcock, Snipe and Jack Snipe are first and last shot in any part of India, the relative times of arrival and departure of Fantail and Pintails and the proportion they form in bags made at different times of the year.

(2) From Professor Powell of the Northcote Hospital, Bombay, for large Earth worms, either alive in some of the earth in which found or in methylated spirits.

(3) From Mr. N. B. Kinnear, Keeper of the Museum, Bombay Natural History Society—

(a) For beetles common or rare from all over the Indian Empire and

(b) For information on the migration of birds in the following form :—

Made at_____ District_____ Province_____ altitude, the object being to ascertain—

(i) the routes by which birds from the North arrive and leave India ;

(ii) their dispersal after arrival, and

(iii) such of those as come to stay for the summer or winter as the case may be.

Resolved that Members be requested to do what they can to assist in the above directions.

Read letter, dated 13th September 1909, from Mr. James Cleghorn, C.E., Consulting Engineer, Calcutta, to Mr. C. H. Dracott, reporting on the utility of the Baluchistan Marble for general building purposes.

Read note by Mr. C. H. Dracott, recording particulars regards ing some Psychidæ larvæ he had found at Hanna and specimen of which were passed round for inspection

Read note from the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon stating that he had ascertained from the Zoological Society, London, that "Dresser's Birds of Europe," now out of print, was the best standard work on the Birds of Europe and that he was writing direct to Mr. Dresser, who has a few spare copies, asking the terms on which he would let the Quetta Museum have one.

Read letter No. 470, dated 16th September 1909, from Mr. Maxwell-Lefroy, embodying an interesting report on a specimen of the Lygæid with pupa skin and fly which was found by Mr. A. A. Flynn in Quetta last May and had been forwarded to Mr. Lefroy for favour of identification.

The following works received by the Museum during the month were next passed round for the information of members :—

By Purchase.

(a) a copy of "Lefroy's Indian Insect Life."

Presented by the Government of India, Home Department.

(b) a copy of Lepidoptera Indica, Part LXXIX by Colonel C. Swinhoe.

Presented by the Indian Museum, Calcutta.

(c) Records of the Indian Museum, Volume II, and Parts I and II of Volume III

(d) Memoirs of the Indian Museum, Volume I, No. 4, and Volume II, Nos. 1 and 2.

(e) Craniological Data from the Indian Museum.

(f) An account of the Deep-sea Asteroidea.

The election of new members being the next item of business, the name of Major H. Gough, I.A., was proposed by Mr. Cumming, seconded by Mr. Dracott and unanimously carried. In conclusion the Chairman expressed regret at the unavoidable absence of so many Members and thanked Mr. Flynn for all the trouble he had taken in securing and personally bringing all the way to Quetta the three live snakes which he had found at Habb.

SOME time ago a certain regiment had an officer with a craze for gymnastics, who taught his brother subalterns to walk round the billiard table on their hands. One evening while thus engaged, the door opened, and the colonel, a martinet, appeared. Gazing attentively at the inverted company for a few seconds, he shook his head gravely, and, to the surprise of all present, departed without uttering a word. On the following morning the gymnastic officer approached the colonel, expecting a verbal castigation. "With regard to last night—" he began. "Hush, my dear fellow!" the colonel interrupted, "I would not let anybody know for the world. The fact is, I was dining out with an old brother officer, and, 'pon my word, I had no idea the wine could have such an effect upon me, but when I glanced in to see how things were going on it seemed to me that I saw you all upside down!"

It was midnight and the front door bell rang furiously. A head, adorned with shaggy and unmanageable whiskers, was thrust out of the bedroom window, and a voice that fitted the beared inquired—"What is it?"

"Oh, is this Mr. Higgin's ?" came a shrill voice from the shade of the doorway below.

"Yes."

"Please come to No. 41, High Street, just as quick as you can, and bring your instruments."

"I ain't a doctor—I'm a carpenter. Dr. Higgins lives two doors below," and the window was coming down with a slam.

"Please, sir," said the little voice, "it's you, we want. Pa and ma is shut up in the folding bed, and we can't get 'em out."

RUDYARD KIPLING was once the guest at a literary dinner, and amongst those present was a man who tried to make up for what little he knew of literature by a good deal of pretence. Trying to hold Kipling's attention, he started a discussion concerning the spelling and pronunciation of the English language. "Have you ever noticed, Mr. Kipling," he said, "that in the entire English language there are only two words beginning with 'su' that are pronounced as though beginning with 'sh'? Those two are sumach and sugar. Having made an exhaustive study of the subject, you may take it from me that is so." Bored though he was, Kipling's politeness did not desert him. He quietly asked, "Are you sure?"

INTERNATIONAL POLO.

THE decision of the Hurlingham Polo Committee not to send a team to America in 1910, to endeavour to regain the International Cup which the Meadowbrook team won so handsomely a few months ago, will cause keen disappointment in polo circles. Nothing has transpired as to how this decision was arrived at, but there is no doubt, that the chief cause was the great expense such an undertaking would entail.

It has been estimated that to properly equip an expedition for the recovery of the trophy would mean an expenditure of between, £10,000 to £15,000. It is hardly expected that the Hurlingham Club is rich enough to find the money. It may well be supposed that the Hurlingham Committee have found this difficulty the biggest of all. Polo is a rich man's game, and most of the English players, even if they are not first-class, are well-to-do; but it must not be forgotten that the Americans succeeded, not primarily because the Polo Association sent out four fine players, but for the reason that unlimited funds were supplied. Mr. H. P. Whitney, with whom polo is a hobby, is a millionaire. He never let the question of price stop him in the collection of his ponies, and that was a matter of two or three years, not months. Then other rich men supplied ponies, and generally supported the invasion in magnificent fashion.

To this extent England as the new challengers must be at a disadvantage, and, moreover, when the time comes they will be meeting the wealthy Americans on their own ground with everything necessary to success at their command. If, therefore, the Hurlingham Committee did not see their way clear to challenging because, for one reason or another, a team would not have the best possible chance from the point of view of equipment, then their decision is to be commended as an eminently prudent one. But it is to be hoped that the decision to challenge is only postponed for a time, say, to a year hence, when Hurlingham will find itself in such a position as to be able to tell its friends on the other side that an attempt in earnest will be carried out not later than 1911. In the interval nothing would be lost by copying the example of the Americans, who took at least a couple of years to carry out their preparations. And they reaped the reward of their foresight and preparation.

A writer in the Times, who evidently does not consider the question of expense, rather severely criticises the Hurlingham Committee for its attitude. "They have," he says, "apparently banged, barred, and bolted the door upon any immediate action; and their adoption of a policy of deferred despair will kill much enthusiasm and interest which has been aroused by the loss of the cup. Out of the number of people interested in the subject, how many will be equally interested this time next year?

"If the Hurlingham Committee did not see its way to issue a challenge in the immediate future," the writer continues, "it is difficult to understand why it should have jumped to the other extreme, and lightheartedly assumed that the materials for a team would not be available at the end of next season.

"A very obvious middle course lay open. Through an accidental chain of circumstances it came about that the American challenge this year was not received until the end of April. The challenge was rightly accepted, and our cousins were accommodated with dates to suit their convenience. It is quite certain that they would return the compliment, and would welcome an intimation from the Hurlingham Committee to the effect that if at the eleventh hour at the end of next season representative teams of men and ponies could be collected a challenge would forthwith be issued. The advantages of such a course are obvious and the disadvantages remain to be discovered."

The Hurlingham Polo Committee have assumed that not only that there is not a sufficient number of test match ponies in England, but that the existing number will not have increased by the end of next season. It is difficult to see the grounds for such an assumption. Up to a certain age ponies should continue to improve; and while it might be very exceptional for a now second-season pony to have made sufficient progress by the end of his third-season to be good enough to play for England, there should be some new third-season ponies which might have sufficiently improved by that time. No reasonable person, who understands the state of affairs will underestimate the difficulties of the question of ponies, but it certainly seems no impracticable counsel of perfection to suggest that the Hurlingham Polo Committee should have taken steps to secure the call upon the best ponies in England, which are fully developed and known quantities, and upon those which obviously possess potentialities; and that, having done so, they should have issued a provisional challenge, contingent upon the possibility of producing a team of say, sixteen or twenty ponies at Meadowbrook next autumn, which would not collectively be hopelessly inferior to a similar number of the best ponies in America. The attempt to do so would even now be creditable and justifiable; and it seems scarcely too much to hope that Hurlingham may be induced to challenge the intentions with which it stands at present credited and which can only be described as "honorable but remote."

It is apparently assumed that there will be no difficulty in collecting as good a team of players the year after next, as could be found next year. There does not appear to be much warrant for this belief. The best of matured players—Mr. Cecil Nickalls, Captain H. Wilson, Mr. Freake, Captain Mathew-Lannowe, and Captain Lloyd—have all reached an age after which, while they can hardly be expected to improve, they may begin to get too slow for test match play, which is essentially a young man's game; and of the younger players only Mr. Noel Edwards, who stands out quite alone, has shown test match form. Lord Wodehouse is the only other rising player—unless there is some undiscovered talent in the Army—who appears possessed of possibilities of a test match point of view. It is more than probable that any value in goals which might be gained in the improvement of ponies by waiting would be heavily discounted by a loss of efficiency on the part of the best available personnel. The optimistic pessimist will at once say that the Americans will also be getting older, and will infer, if he does not actually maintain, that there is no new talent coming on in America. There is, however, no warrant for this assumption, which is no more than a pious hope to support his policy of helplessness and hopelessness. It is greatly to be desired that a robust expression of public opinion may induce Hurlingham to reconsider its present attitude.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Tollygunge Club hold their sixth and last Gymkhana for this year on Saturday next, when we should see racing well up to the average; the entries are big and a fair sprinkling of unknown ones are amongst them. However, if the handicapper treats them in the same impartial fashion, which he did at the last meeting, everyone will probably be satisfied. In the four races for which the entries have already closed we have an average of 10 per race, so with any sort of luck we ought to see full place betting on each event. The entries for the Charger Race do not close until the day before the race, so we shall expect to see a large field start for this event.

Nearly all of the cold weather strings have now arrived. One or two of the Bangalore contingent have not got here as yet, but one hears they have only been delayed, as they could not arrange a special train as in former years, and have had to bring their lots down a box load at a time, the railway companies not allowing more than one box on each mail train.

Wishart got here at the beginning of the week with some, and the remainder of his batch have been coming down gradually. Retort has arrived safely and is looking very well, and it is hoped that this good little mare will have better luck than last year. It is rumoured that Murdison, whom Wishart has retained for the cold weather, is very ill in Rangoon, but as we have not had this confirmed as yet, we hope it is not true.

There is unfortunately no room to doubt, however, that R. Fraser, who had been retained to ride Fizz and others for Mr. Whittingham, is laid up in Bombay, and not likely to be able to ride again this season. Altogether at the present moment there is a great dearth of good jockeys on the flat, but we hear that there are several English stars on their way out here to make up the deficiency. W. Saxby is coming out, but we cannot hear of any retainers. This good little horseman is able to go to scale between 7 and 6 stone. Heckford is on his way to ride for a Bombay stable, and we may see some more out here, including Bert Randall.

It is reported that Mr. Galstaun has sold Lefterin to Lady Jenkins as a paperchaser, and if this mare jumps mud walls as well as she does hurdles, we shall most probably see them well up in the chases this season.

We are glad to see that Lewis Sherwood, who has recently left India to start a training stable at Newmarket, has trained a couple of winners for a local sportsman—Mr. T. J. Sullivan.

Three hurdles were up for schooling on the training track on Tuesday, when there was a fair amount doing. The first to go was Foy, ridden by Mr. Evers, who went over three at about half pace, jumping faultlessly. Then Queen of Gems (Alford), Galloping Girl (R. Hoyt), Mulison (Mr. Levetus) went a very fast school over the three flights. Queen of Gems led all the way until the third hurdle, where she fell and broke her shoulder and had to be destroyed. Alford was not hurt. We were very sorry to see one of the gamest little mares that ever looked through a bridle die at the muzzle of a gun.

The next to go were two scratchy sort of beggars, Dirty Boy (T. Ferguson), Mordialloc (Mr. Gowan); these two went a half pace gallop over three flights and jumped all over the track. Sacricomar (R. Hoyt), Highland Fling (Mr. Evers), Fingal (Alford) then went over a mile at a nice working gallop. This was the former's first try with a man on his back; he would have stopped at every one with a weak horseman on him, as it was he slowed down to a slow canter to get over them. If he takes to the game he should be a good one over hurdles, and worth watching. Fingal stopped twice at the last, but got over at the third attempt. His trip up-country does not seem to have improved him a great deal.

The last school of the day was again a very fast affair, Pantry Girl (R. Hoyt), Clipper (Alford): the former, who is a recent 7-furlong winner in Poona, should show some of the ponies the way to go along if she can stay, which is doubtful. She jumps well and very quickly. Clipper we all know very well, and he jumped in his usual faultless style.

Two new ones at the game were then put in the cage, High Court, and an untried one, Grace Pallotta; the former fell in the first round, but jumped very carefully afterwards; the latter fenced well but slowly.

The usual gup in print and out is going on as in years before anent the Cup, which on previous performances should be a good thing for Peru, but the race is a long way off yet and it will be a lot wiser to stop talking about him, until we can see for ourselves how he stands the track and his work. They will have to do a lot to get him fit for a race in which they go at their top from start to finish. Neith looks more like doing a good mile than great things in the Cup, but one prefers the horses we have seen and know—Bantock, Wandin, Fizz and Retort. Bantock and Retort have both been seen at slow work, and look extremely fit and well; they ought to both run well this cold season.

The Calcutta Light Horse have returned looking fit and well after their outing at Ahmadpur, where they have been doing great work in scouting. The Second Scouting Competition was held on the last day of the camp, and was won by Sergeant Lys' section. The other members of the section were Corporal Harvey, Trooper Levetus and Trooper Bletsoe. The three last-named were in the winning section of two years ago, when the first of these competitions was held. They were started by Major Maxwell (late Adjutant, Calcutta Light Horse), who kindly gave four silver cigarette cases to the winning section, and Mrs. Maxwell gave four silver card cases to the second section.

We learn that sixteen ponies have been scratched from the Army Cup as follows:—Alishan, Colonel, Honey, Sher, Grey Plume, Inchkeith, Nettle, Little King, Rustic Jem, Marengo, Thamin, Diamond, Imtyas, Nagashi, Seamew and Sheik Fareed. Many other races at the Lucknow meeting have also suffered by wholesale withdrawals and the prospects of some of them are thereby affected. This scratching epidemic has been very prevalent of late in Northern India racing, the recent meetings at Meerut and Umballa being also sufferers.

We publish in our Turf columns to-day details of the race for the Caulfield Cup. The Sydney Referee in commenting on the race writes:—

A dead-heat for the Caulfield Cup, more especially between two such long-priced candidates as Blue Book and Aborigine, was something backers did not expect. Right up to the day before the race it was rumoured in Melbourne that Blue Book might not start, and it is stated that even his trainer was anxious to get out of some of the money he had taken about him in Sydney. It is rather surprising that this should be so, for subsequent to the Craven Plate J. A. Mayo was very hopeful concerning the chestnut's prospects at Caulfield, and was of opinion that the rather heavy state of the tracks during the fortnight prior to the commencement of the A.J.C. Spring Meeting had a deal to do with his indifferent displays in the Epsom and Metropolitan. New to left-handed going and with the reputation of being a trifle clumsy, a Caulfield Cup scarcely seemed a race in which the big son of True Blue would be seen to most advantage, and yet, well placed most of the way, he was in front at the half-distance. He was bred by Mr. A. Hooke. Notwithstanding this is his fourth season on the Turf, and he only has three and a half wins to his credit, he is now a profitable purchase at the 140gs. Mr. J. C. Williamson gave for him as a yearling. In all Blue Book has started in 21 races, winning the A.J.C. Nursery at two years, failing to get a place in five starts at three years, and winning the Rosehill Flagship Stakes and Tattersall's Spring Handicap at four years.

After seeing Aborigine die away at the end of a mile at Randwick very few anticipated he would do much good at a longer distance, and from 16 to 1 before the Epsom he receded to 25 to 1 for the Caulfield Cup immediately after, while on Saturday he was one of the 100 to 3 division. It was a case of Maltine over again. She could not finish in the Epsom, but did so in the Metropolitan, and in the Cup Aborigine came and caught Blue Book at the end. Mr. R. C. Baldock has been fortunate in his purchases for Mr. Gordondhas Khatau. Last year he secured Mooltan for him, and with the son of Positano won a Metropolitan and two weight-for-age races, and now he has won half a Caulfield Cup with Aborigine, whom New Zealanders generally regarded as particularly well sold at the 1,200gs. paid for him. And it certainly did sound a stiffish price for a gelding. Earlier Aborigine was under offer in Melbourne at 1,000gs. In New Zealand he won five races as a two-year-old, and a similar number this season, the Wanganui Guineas, Auckland R.C. Great Northern Guineas, Auckland R.C. Easter Handicap, Wellington R.C. Thompson Handicap, and Hawkes Bay Burke Memorial Stakes being credited to him. I am told that though H. Rayner was thoroughly satisfied with the black's condition, he was by no means enthusiastic as to his chance. It will be remembered that Aborigine's sire Merriwee (a Melbourne Cup winner) died a few months ago. Aborigine was ridden by W. M'Lachlan, who was unable to follow his calling at the recent A.J.C. meeting owing to one of his ankles being injured when Maltose fell with him at Rosehill. In fact, if I mistake not, his Cup mount was his first in public since that occasion.

Pendil's connections had him going for a very big stake, and, according to all accounts, they were unlucky not to have landed it. In Sydney at the commencement of last week he was backed for about £12,000, and no doubt considerably more than that was obtained about him in Melbourne. It was a good thing that came undone, and there is now no chance of backing him for the Melbourne Cup at a fair price. In Melbourne in the Autumn he was the best of the three-year-olds, and though right "off" when in Sydney he has evidently returned to his earlier form. He has 3lb. more to carry in the Melbourne Cup, but that should not seriously inconvenience him if, as supposed, only sheer bad luck lost him last Saturday's race. One thing certain is he can get two miles.

Kyeadgerie was badly placed at an early part of the race, and then, after making up his ground very rapidly, tired a bit at the finish. A Sydneyite, who was present, tells me that entering the straight Golden Slipper met with interference, and as a result accidentally went over on to Artillerie, but he does not think that in any circumstances the former could have won. Dhobi found the last furlong one too many, and though Parsee may win at a mile and a half in a weight-for-age race, that distance is always likely to bother him in a handicap. Post Town appears to have run respectably, though without ever looking a winner, and though as yet I have no great faith in Malt King as a stayer, the fact of being one of the last three to finish suggests that he must have experienced a full share of the bad luck that is bound to fall to some horses in such a race. Trelo Vouni ran prominently throughout, and is by Hymettus from Lady Carbine, who is so closely related to Carbine, being by Nordenfeldt out of Mersey. Though Aborigine and Blue Book were backed a few weeks ago, the fact of both going out of favour at the close of proceedings made the race a good one for the ring.

In our polo columns to-day we publish details of the Meerut Autumn and Hyderabad Tournaments. The former was won by the 12th Royal Lancers after a fine game with the 17th Lancers in the final, the score being 5 goals to 2, while Golconda once more proved invincible in the Hyderabad Tournament though the 13th Hussars gave them a good game in the final.

The Lucknow Autumn Polo Tournament opened on Tuesday afternoon in the presence of a large gathering of spectators. The teams engaged were the Scouts (Captains Hallowes, Pollock and Barrett and Mr. Hoare back), and 9th Hodson's Horse (Mr. Thomas, Colonel Crocker, Mr. de Burgh and Mr. Atkinson back). The Scouts had the best of the game and eventually won by 8 goals to 3. Hodson's Horse scored all their goals in the third chukker.

Tarrant, the professional cricketer who heads the batting and bowling averages for Middlesex county, has come out again, to coach the Maharajah of Patiala's cricket team during the winter months. This is his second season in Patiala, and the eleven is said to have improved a great deal since he took it in hand.

Mr. McIntosh, the Australian sportsman, has cabled to America offering a purse of £15,000 for the fight between Jeffries and Johnson, but we have not yet heard whether the offer has been accepted. This is the largest purse yet put up for a prize fight—the previous largest amount ever boxed for being £9,375 (purse £5,209, stakes £4,106) when J. J. Corbett defeated J. L. Sullivan in 21 rounds at New Orleans on 7th September 1892. Burns, we learn from the last Australian exchanges, is anxious to get at Massa Johnson again, at any rate he is reported to have sent a cable message to Jack Gleeson of San Francisco, offering to fight Johnson 45 rounds or finish.

The Tollygunge Club held another successful golf competition during the holidays last week end. Conditions—a qualifying round, followed by three rounds of 18 holes match play and a final of 36 holes. There were two classes—for those whose handicap is 10 and under, and for the long handicap players. Among the seniors the final brought together Messrs. F. H. Stewart (scratch) and B. E. G. Eddis (—6), the latter, who was 2 up on the morning round, eventually winning by 3 up and 1 to play. In the second division Mr. R. S. Highet, with a handicap of 16, defeated Mr. W. E. Crum in the final by 4 and 3.

The last few years have seen the introduction of many and varying kinds of golf clubs and there is now a need to define to some extent what clubs are permitted. In answer to a query as to whether "a club made in the form of a croquet mallet" is allowable, the Rules of Golf Committee have replied, that the time has come for the Royal and Ancient Golf Club to decide at a general meeting whether the various mallet-headed implements at present in use are to be permitted or not; they are of opinion, however, that it is not allowable to employ the vertical croquet stroke as a method of putting. It is now pretty certain that the Committee will make a recommendation to the next general meeting of the Royal and Ancient, on the subject of mallet-headed, and other clubs that differ in form and construction from the normal makes, and it is likely that their proposals will be of a drastic nature. The great difficulty in the way of dealing with objectionable innovations in golf clubs has always been that any preventive legislation would involve a definition, and as there are so many different clubs used for the different strokes, there would have to be a definition for almost each one of them. Moreover, there would be a danger, in any movement in the direction of standardisation, of stereotyping the various makes, and so of limiting the freedom which golfers have always enjoyed in their choice of clubs to suit their own tastes. It is understood that the Rules Committee are prepared to recommend legislation, which will definitely bar all mallet-headed, or centre-shafted clubs. This will be done quite simply by enacting that a golf club must have its face on one side of its shaft. Under such a regulation all the centre-shafted, mallet-headed, "crosshead" and "schenectady" types of clubs would be illegal, but there would be no curtailment whatever in the variety of shape, weight and construction now allowed in regard to the normal types.

The death has just occurred of John Conway, who managed the first Australian eleven in England. It was he who practically silenced for ever the question which was then raised as to the "bona-fide amateur" status of visiting "colonials." Being challenged to state whether the Eleven were playing the game as "gentlemen" or professionals, Conway wrote a letter to the Times stating that their habits were respectable and their favourite breakfast was chops.

Sprinters please note. A man can hold his breath for nine minutes without ill-effect!

During observations at the London Hospital on the effect of oxygen breathing in increasing the muscular work an individual can do, it was accidentally noted that the experimenters, besides being able to do more work, breathed ordinary air more slowly than usual for some minutes following inhalation of the gas.

Experiments were then made to see how long the breath could be held after the lungs had been filled with oxygen. One of the doctors "deep-breathed" oxygen out of a rubber bag for five minutes, alternately drawing in a full breath from the bag and breathing out the air from the lungs through a tube leading to the outer air. After five minutes of this "bathing of the lungs" with oxygen he was able to hold his breath for 9mins. 3secs.

"If a man can hold his breath for nine minutes when sitting still," says Dr. Leonard Hill, who has been conducting the experiments, "he ought to be able to hold his breath during the fifty seconds (more or less) needed to run a quarter of a mile, and the energy which ordinarily would be expended in filling and emptying the lungs could be devoted to faster running."

The dangers of American football have again been exemplified by the death of a student of Virginia University, who was seriously injured in a game last week. As a result of this sad occurrence the Virginia and Georgetown Universities have prohibited further playing.

A meeting of the General Committee of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association will be held at the Calcutta Cricket Club pavilion to-morrow evening at 6 P.M. to discuss plans for the coming season. Those interested might make a special effort to be present.

The Aga Khan Hockey Tournament at Poona opened on Monday. Nine teams have entered—Poona Gymkhana, All Blacks, 13th Hussars, 13th R.F.A., 3rd Sappers and Miners, Lincolns, Leicesters, Northamptons, and Indian Infantry Officers. The first match was between the Lincolns and the Gunners, the former winning by 3 goals to nil. In the second game the Northamptons beat the Indian Infantry Officers by 9 goals to nil.

Our readers will be pleased to hear that a Special Anglo-Indian Number of The Gentleman will appear in December in which the Mem sahib's requirements will be particularly considered. Besides the usual well-known features of the paper, there will be a number of articles on matters of interest to residents in India. A lady intimately connected with the Viceregal Court will write on a "Vicereine's Onerous Duties," and the subject of "Social Martyrdom in India" will be written about by an experienced Anglo-Indian resident. Among the more practical articles will be one on "Hints on the Voyage to India" and "Household Management," while an authority on the subject of Education will contribute a paper on "Home Schools for Anglo-Indians." The Indian Section will be beautifully illustrated and will contain a large number of short stories narrating the experiences of British sojourners in that land.

The Calcutta Kennel Club propose to hold their Fourth Annual Championship Show on the 28th and 29th January next, and a meeting has been called at the Royal Exchange for to-morrow evening, to discuss business connected with the show, to receive a statement of the affairs of the Club and to consider the adoption of the new rules of the Club, which have been drawn up by the Committee.

It is reported that large herds of elephants and other wild animals and big game have caused great damage to the crops without the game preserves in North-eastern Rhodesia, the neighbouring territory of Nyassaland, the East Africa Protectorate, and Uganda. The complaints that come from all the countries mentioned are similar in nature. A report from Port Jameson states that at several villages not far distant cases have occurred in which natives, whilst attempting to frighten away elephants from their gardens by shouting and beating drums, had their houses completely wrecked by the infuriated beasts, the inmates narrowly escaping with their lives. In several other places large stretches of growing crops had been demolished by herds of cow elephants, and the animals had wantonly destroyed quite as much as they had eaten. At another place a herd of cow elephants had entered the village and devoured the contents of the grain bins. The depredations caused by these marauding herds, it will thus be seen, result in serious losses to the settlers, and in the infliction of great hardship on the unfortunate natives. The average extent of ground which a native can cultivate in the districts alluded to is an acre. The crop produced is only enough to provide a couple of pounds of grain per diem for the support of himself and his family. What the feelings of the poor people must be when they find that even this scanty allowance has to be shared with herds of elephants can better be imagined than described.

Even when the shooting of elephants was unrestricted, the Administrator had to report that very serious losses were caused to the natives, whose crops were badly damaged or wholly destroyed by the herds. Now, when only two bull elephants may be shot on each license, the herds are beginning to increase enormously in numbers, and if allowed to continue will eventually prove a very serious obstacle to the economic development of the country. In the East Africa Protectorate, where the game laws have only recently undergone amendment, the larger kinds of game are still on the increase, and it is again felt that a revision of the principles relating to the shooting of game is called for, and that the time has arrived for the removal of restrictions which are incompatible with the assistance which the settlers have a right to expect from the State in securing immunity to their estates from the depredations of wild animals. The settlers are quite ready to accept the principle that the game reserves should be regarded as sanctuaries, but that outside these the preservation of game should not be allowed to interfere with the development of the country. One of the game reserves in the northern part of the Protectorate still covers an area of 13,000 square miles. In Uganda the native population is suffering severely, both in life and property, from the attacks of wild animals. Hundreds of acres of gardens and plantations are destroyed annually by buffaloes and elephants, and people are frequently killed by them. The rigid protection of these animals is beginning to exasperate the natives, who are not allowed to kill them except in self-defence. The result is that herds of elephants, numbering from four to five hundred beasts, are constantly sweeping through some of the districts, trampling down crops, trees, houses, etc., that come in their way.

Professor Watson has lately been making some interesting experiments with a view to discovering how birds carried far from their homes, find their way back again. Hitherto it has been assumed, that the birds return by means of visual landmarks, but he is inclined to believe that some other sense than vision is employed. He recognised that with the methods of training homing pigeons at present in vogue one can never be sure that the territory through which the bird directs his flight is ever wholly unknown to him. Furthermore he points out that until we have more accurate records both of the number of birds, which return and of those which do not, we can never be sure that the exceptional bird which does get home has not accomplished it, by accidentally flying into a familiar territory. He, therefore, studied the habits of some birds living on Bird Key, a small island in the Gulf of Mexico. In the fall and winter months these birds are to be found, distributed generally over the tropical waters of the Carribean Sea. On 1st May almost to the day, about twenty-five to thirty thousand of them migrate to Bird Key, and remain there for the nesting-season. Bird Key is thus the northern limit of migration. A study of their habits shows that they do not go out over the water in their search for food for distances greater than fifteen to eighteen miles, consequently any distance north of Bird Key greater than this would take the birds into an unknown territory. Professor Watson states that his experiments have not been carried very far yet, but they have already progressed far enough to give some really astonishing results. Birds taken 1,000 miles away returned, and thus upset the "visual-landmark" theory of distant orientation. It seems therefore that some "homing sense" exists in birds which has yet to be explained by the investigations of the naturalist and the scientist.

In an age when science and mechanics so greatly replace old methods, which called for skill and daring on the part of man, it is pleasing to see that in aviation—the latest mechanical triumph, although machinery and construction of a most delicate, and accurate nature are, of course, required, yet success depends greatly on the nerve and pluck of the aviator. It seems likely indeed that aviation, as a sport, will make more demands on those human qualities that are attributed to the best sportsmen than any other. M. Latham gave evidence of such qualities during the Blackpool week, when he made a flight in boisterous weather at a time when the wind was estimated to be blowing at about 40 miles an hour. He is said to have thereby established a reputation among his brother aviators, and others capable of forming an opinion, for an exhibition of pluck, skill and determination which surpasses anything previously attempted on an aeroplane. At the start the wind was so strong that the motor appeared likely to be defeated at almost any moment; he is described as moving inch by inch and yard by yard, whilst now and again his machine remained absolutely stationary, and even appeared to be forced slightly astern; then as the stronger gust abated the engine would assert itself; later he turned so that the wind was right behind him, and his position appeared very dangerous. The machine began to run at terrific speed, and also to heel somewhat, so Latham ran her head round to wind and then turned again to continue his journey. When he finally descended from an attitude of about 70 feet at which he had performed his wonderful feat, the anxious spectators thought an ugly smash inevitable as to he came to earth. But he alighted perfectly, as lightly as a bird, and with no suspicion of a tilt to either side, by skilfully turning his machine dead to wind just before he landed. He was surrounded by his fellow aviators, who nearly crushed him in their eagerness to congratulate him.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 29th October 1909.

"Winter comes and summer goes, we'll let her go!"
"Flowers fade, then hail the fog and welcome snow."

Our summer this year ended precisely on the 15th August; flowers have faded long ago and we are certainly in the mood to welcome most things, but, as a rule, we draw the line at snow in October. But whether we draw it or not it has arrived and in many parts we are enjoying a foretaste of winter. The first snow fell in Westmorland and it has been really cold up north, while in London the lowest shade temperature recorded this week has been 39 degrees. Overcoats and furs are the general wear and in a few hours the shops seem to have assumed a "winter goods" aspect. Already that indestructible nuisance the weather prophet promises us an unusually bitter winter of the ox roasted whole on the Thames at London Bridge order. We shall see, if peradventure we get it cold enough for a few days' decent skating in and around London this coming winter some of us won't be grumbling. I forget how many years it is since there was real skating in the Parks.

As if there were not enough hideous noise in London a visitor, like Oliver Twist, asks for more. As if the torture of the dismal tolling of hundreds of sabbath bells were not enough this good man wants to set the bells aringing at the Imperial Institute! "Baedeker's handbook for London," writes this man from Canada, "states that the Imperial Institute buildings contain, in their central tower, a fine peal of bells. Are these bells ever pealed; if not why not?" "Canadian" can I think rest assured that Herr Karl Baedeker is an author as unimaginative as trustworthy. If he testifies to the presence of these bells, be sure that he has climbed the tower. On that occasion a test peal must have been rung for him; otherwise he would never have qualified the bells as "fine." But, although I have passed the tower day by day for years past, I have never heard the music repeated. Nor, indeed, have I known complaints of their silence. Our national taste for bell-ringing, upon which ancient travellers never failed to remark, has suffered a change. We are proud of our bells, of their antiquity, or of the beauty of their tone. But a consensus of the opinion

The eviction of "Prince Michael" and his long haired crew from the Jezreel Tower at Chatham recalls the early days of the sect when the ex-soldier White founded a new religion and a very substantial fortune at one and the same time. There is always money in a new religion if it is properly worked and adequately advertised, as the history of American sects will prove. White had soldiered in India, and had been invalided as the result of a bad sunstroke; but however crazy he may have been in matters of religion, in matters commercial he was very much all there and made a pile that ran well into five figures. He became "Jezreel," announced that he was immortal and, of course, found plenty of people to believe in him. Even when the beggar died there were thousands ready to find excuses for him and carry on the business. It was a nasty jar, but a really staunch follower is always prepared to overlook a slight discrepancy of this kind now and then.

Next summer men from India home on leave, and whose taste for steak pudding and Welsh rarebit leads them towards the "Olde Cheshire Cheese" will find the neighbourhood rather chaotic in parts. The completion of the Fleet Street widening—long delayed—is shortly to be put in hand. It is not being undertaken before there is urgent need of it. There is a tremendous volume of traffic belonging to the street of newspapers itself and its immediate tributaries; and still more passing through it as one of the chief arteries connecting the East and West. The only pity is that the widening will involve the disappearance of one or two more of the few remaining bits of the old Fleet Street that we knew and loved so well. Fortunately, however, no historic relic of first-class importance will have to be sacrificed. The Cheshire Cheese, The Bell, The Punch Tavern, Sweetings and a few other pleasant landmarks will be left to us.

The friends of Captain Frederick Charles Boehmer, who had seen service in India, will hear of his death with regret. He shot himself in a train between Reading and Maidenhead last Saturday, and on him was found a letter to the coroner in which he said, "for four and a half years I have thought of suicide, being at my wits' end." It was some time before he could be identified, but a clue was given by his keys the tablet on which caused enquiries to be made of the key insurance registry in London.

Mr. Charles Hawtrey has started his season at Wyndham's Theatre—in conjunction with Mr. Frank Curzon—with a play that affords much amusement. "The Little Damozel" is, however, not wholly a piece to raise the laughter of an audience; there are parts of the story that appeal to sentiment, and it is in those moments that the little damozel, as played by Miss May Blayney, gets her chance. The story of Monckton Hoffe's play is a simple one. Captain Partington, a middle-aged wealthy bachelor who knocked about town and spent much time at the Cafe Angelique, suddenly got sorry that he was engaged to the lady harpist of the little orchestra . . . . he wanted to marry someone else and forget the past. The little damozel, however, wanted to make him suffer for the slight he put upon her, and refused to sell or give up his letters. Then it occurred to Partington that if Recklaw Poole, another habitue of the cafe, was well off he would easily win the girl, she having often shown a partiality for him. He offered Recklaw £10,000 to enter into his plans, and Recklaw agreed on condition that he got fifteen thousand. All that occupies the first act, which is full of fun; the second act shows Recklaw and his happy little bride. Then comes the tragedy; the girl discovers the sale, and in a scene of anger and scorn leaves her husband's house. The last act brings on the inevitable reconciliation, but when this can be done without the aid of the orchestra, and their tears, and broken English, the play will be enormously lightened and improved. As it is, it is a capital entertainment, but that orchestra in the Cafe Angelique! Oh, my! Mr. Lyle, Mr. Vane Tempest, and Mr. Arthur Playfair all shared in the honours of the evening with Mr. Hawtrey and Miss May Blayney.

The mortality of the early autumn plays has been unusually heavy. "The Great Divide" finished last Saturday night, and in addition to "Mid-Channel," "False Gods," and "Madame X." are now in their last nights. "False Gods" will finish its run at His Majesty's to-morrow, and after a brief revival of "Trilby"—Sir Herbert Tree as Svengali, Miss Viola Tree as Trilby, and Mr. Henry Ainley as Taffy—and "The Vandyck," beginning next week, we are to have, on 16th November, a new play in three acts, entitled "Beethoven," and adapted by Mr. Louis Parker from the French of M. Rene Fauchois. The piece, which is concerned with the later career of Beethoven, when the shadow of his terrible affliction was fast settling on him, makes considerable use of the master's music, and the fine orchestra of His Majesty's is to be specially enlarged for the production.

The disappearance of "The Great Divide," after a run of little over a month, reminds us once more that an American success may be an English failure. "The College Widow," for instance, fascinated people on the other side of the Atlantic for a very long season; in London her power to attract audiences lasted but a short one. Mr. Miller, the well-known actor-manager, thinks that "The Great Divide" was too essentially American. Anyway, he is now to appear in a play which is "quite English."

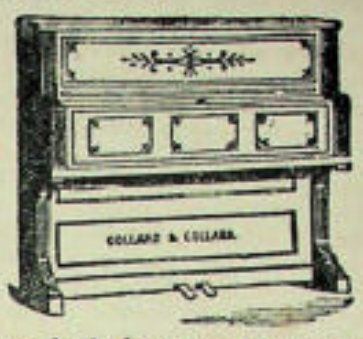
Strangely enough this very week we find the exception which proves the rule that Yankee successes are usually London failures. In "The Servant in the House" by C. R. Kennedy, put on at the Adelphi on Monday, the great reputation with which it came over has been endorsed by a welcome about which there can be no mistake. The play should have a big future in London. It is a modern morality play, moulded into strong dramatic form, treated with dignity, and told without a superfluity of talk. The theme concerns the ties of brotherhood—of universal brotherhood; the time is "now"; the place is "here"; and the lesson is preached through the medium of the household of the Reverend William Smythe. He is of humble parentage; he has been helped to success by an uncouth elder brother; he has married the sister of a bishop—a very wealthy bishop—and materialism has ousted his Christianity. This elder brother of his, nothing higher in the world than a scavenger, has always been the victim of Fortune's blows; he has become embittered and drunken, believing neither in man nor God. His motherless daughter has been adopted by her parson uncle, and kept in ignorance of the character of her father, who is practically hounded from his brother's house when he comes hoping to see her. But there has been engaged as butler a mysterious Oriental (a most impossible Hindoo by the way) and he it is who works the miracle that changes the household. Subtly he wakes the conscience of the vicar; he it is who dismisses Mrs. Smythe's brother, the Bishop of Lancashire, a monument of hypocrisy; he it is who sweeps away difficulties by his words of robust Christianity—he it is who speaks as the Son of Man come to smooth out the evils of modern life.



But in such a play as this, the actual facts of the story count for less than the treatment and "The Servant in the House" is treated with a dignity that is impressive. Yet it is scarcely a play of the idyll type; it is often the grimest realism. Its construction is almost perfect, and it could scarcely be better acted. Mr. Sydney Valentine's grave dignity was exceedingly telling in the part of the mysterious butler, Mr. Henry Miller was perfect as the scavenger, Mr. Guy Standing was admirable as the conscience-stricken vicar, Miss Edith Wynne Mathison was good as his wife, a very faithful picture of the niece was given by Miss Gladys Wynne, while Mr. J. H. Barnes gave a clever study of the bishop.

The "Strand" Theatre (lately the unlucky "Waldorf") has made a good beginning with "The Merry Peasant." It is a pretty musical play, the words by Victor Leon, the music by Leo Fall. It is beautifully mounted, distinctly rural in its atmosphere and though it is some distance after "The Merry Widow" and "The Dollar Princess" by the same author and composer, it won popularity at once by reason of its excellent music and the charm of many of its lyrics. There is, however, not much incident and very little in the way of story.

Mattheus Roiter is the merry peasant, a struggling farmer, a kindly old man, poor but mightily generous, who seems to make both ends meet by borrowing money off his equally big-hearted friend Lindoberer, But Matheus, like Brutus, is ambitious. He is determined to make his only son Stefan a gentleman, and to that end he borrows largely that Stefan may study law in Vienna. Ten years pass away before Stefan returns to his native village, and in the meantime he has grown into a very fine gentleman. He has even become engaged to the daughter of a wealthy count; but to his shame be it said, he looks down upon his humble friends, and has scarcely a kind word even for his father. Two more years elapse. It is the morning of Stefan's wedding, and a great reception is being held at the house of the bride's father. But when old Mattheus arrives on the scene the count is outraged at the thought that his daughter was to have married the son of a humble peasant, and he at once puts a stop to the match. In the nick of time, however, it is discovered that little Rosalie, whom Mattheus has brought up as kindly as though she were his own child, is really the count's long-lost grand-daughter, and out of gratitude he allows the wedding to proceed. Mr. Courtice Pounds made a very pleasant figure as Mattheus, and, of course, his singing was a big feature of the production; Mr. George Giddens and Mr. Arthur Williams got a good deal of fun out of lines by no means remarkable for wit; Miss Sybil Arundale gave a sprightly performance as Annamirl; Miss Florence St. John was very pleasing as the Widow Lizi, and Miss Dorothy Monkman was delightful as the grown-up Rosalie. But as big a success as any was scored by a child—Miss Marry Glynn, who played Rosalie in the first act.

The Theatre is dead, but from its ashes has risen The Playgoer and Society Illustrated, which makes its first appearance this month. Its chief feature is "the play of the month," the selection for the initial number being "False Gods" at His Majesty's, which is fully pictured in some twenty full-page and other photographs reproduced on special paper, while the story is told by Mr. Edward Morton ("Modred" of the Referee). There are also nutshell criticisms of other productions of the month and of amateur performances. Its interests are, however, not confined to the histrionic art only, for there is a literary section under the direction of Mr. James Douglas, and an art section edited by Mr. Wallace C. Crowdy, while the inevitable women's page is written by Mrs Humphry ("Madge" of Truth).

Review.

MR. FINN is so well known to all readers of the INDIAN FIELD as a successful writer on popular natural history, that any work from his pen, especially when illustrated so beautifully as the one now before us, is practically assured of a favourable reception at their hands. And we can assure them that a favourable reception will be thoroughly well deserved in this instance at any rate, for while the author has, if possible, exceeded his usual interesting and lucid style in the text, he is most efficiently backed up by his artists, Messrs. Sargent and Swan and Miss Austen, who have produced one hundred coloured plates of animals remarkable alike for their artistic elegance and for their fidelity to nature. It is true indeed that a few of them are a bit over-coloured, while one is lettered Marco Polo's sheep when it really represents the arguli, or ammon; but as regards the first point the printers may be as much to blame as the artists, who are clearly not responsible for the error in the legends. These coloured plates, which form the whole of the illustrations, are in the main veritable works of art, and are of themselves sufficient to sell the book.

Whether the author is quite justified in classing rats, mice and "such small deer" under the designation of "wild beasts," we have our doubts, and we also think the author might have chosen a better title. We are, moreover, not altogether satisfied with the positions and attitudes of some of the animals depicted in the plates. It is absurd, for example, to depict such a retiring and skulking creature as the American opossum standing boldly out against the moon-lit sky on the surface of the bare arm of a tree. In other cases, again, the faces and figures of the animals are made much too hard and wooden, as is exemplified by the plates of the brown bear and the reindeer or caribou. Then, again, we notice that the artist has fallen into the obvious error of showing the webs of the forefeet of the duck-billed platypus fully spread out when the creature is on land, despite the efforts made by Mr. le Souef to show that such a position is a physical impossibility. All these are, however, really but minor faults.

The hundred animals forming the subjects of the "century" of coloured plates are treated at greater length than many of the others mentioned in the text. In this respect it was, of course, a matter of no little difficulty to make an adequate and satisfactory selection; but, on the whole, Mr. Finn appears to have exercised a wise judgement.

That the volume does not form anything like a complete popular natural history of land mammals, the author would no doubt be the first to admit. But in assisting to stimulate popular interest in natural history it undoubtedly fills a gap, and should command an extensive sale, both at home and abroad. We congratulate both the author and the artists on the results of their labours and the publishers on their enterprise in putting such a handsome volume on the market at such a comparatively low price.

Shikar.

EXPERIENCES WITH SEROW.

ALTHOUGH I had shot for years in both the lower and higher ranges of the Himalayas, I had never the luck to bag a serow. Only thrice had I come across them. The first time occurred on my very first shoot in the Himalayas as a griffin. I was on two months' leave with a fledgling like myself—a fellow sub whom I shall call H. On this occasion we had taken the hill together, and then wandered off with our respective shikaries—an unsatisfactory method of big game shooting, but we were both tyros and knew no better. Shortly after we had separated I heard a shot, then another, and another, and yet another. Not knowing what to make of it I hurried to the spot, visions of H. being mauled by a panther or bear presenting themselves with startling intensity. Shot succeeded shot and I counted no less than ten before I reached the ravine, where I found my perspiring pal loading and firing his rifle at a huge serow, which, though hard hit, was clambering up the side of the khud through heavy undergrowth. A volley from both of us brought the beast toppling backwards into the ravine where a final shot settled it. It appeared that H. had suddenly come upon fresh tracks, and his shikari—a simple pahari—while ignorant of the kind of animal that had made them, was quite certain that they were not the tracks of cattle. He suggested following them, which they did, with the satisfactory result that after going a short distance, they found the beast asleep under a tree on the side of a dense ravine, such as the serow loves. H. had a rotten rifle—a M.H. Carbine with solid bullets—and in addition to being badly armed was, owing to short sight, a very indifferent shot. He opened fire on the serow at about 80 yards, apparently without effect for it started to its feet and stood as if bewildered. After being fired at again the animal walked out into the open and stood looking about him. Bang went the rifle again, and off went the serow with H. after it, pumping in lead for all he was worth. It was going strong when I saw it, and but for the combined efforts I think would probably have escaped. The appearance of the wounds were instructive. One bullet had gone through its ear, one had grazed its back, and another its foreleg. One had gone through a hind quarter drilling a neat hole and apparently making no difference to the serow. Only one solid bullet had struck the beast fair and that had gone through the ribs and out at the other side. Had this been a soft-nose it would have crumpled the brute up, as it was this wound no doubt retarded its speed, and gave us a chance of a final shot as it clambered up the hill. By the greatest good luck my bullet—a ·450 express—caught the beast on the spine, while H's last shot also told, hitting the serow through the hindquarter high up. Neither of us knew what the animal was, and it was not till some days afterwards that we found out H. had bagged a serow. Great then was our jubilation, and I know that personally I expected to meet a serow each time I went out. Needless to say I saw no signs of another that trip, nor indeed until many years after. On this second occasion I was climbing a fairly steep but absolutely open hill, at the top of which I hoped to meet with sambhur. Just before reaching the crest I was suddenly aware of an ugly-looking brute standing just above and gazing down at me. For a second I thought it was a cow, then seeing that I was face to face with a serow, I threw up my rifle and let drive, all shaky as I was from the long climb. Off dashed the serow with a foreleg dangling at the shoulder and vanished before I could get in another shot. My shikari and I tracked the beast till dark, lured on by its blood-spattered spoor, but alas! all to no purpose. The serow had gone for good only, I fear, to die a lingering death in some jungle fastness. The extraordinary thing was meeting a serow on such bare open ground as different from its usual gloomy haunts as possible.

My next interview with a serow was even of a near fleeting character. In the Aracan Hill tracts the Malayan variety is met with. Having noticed the tracks of serow in a certain steep ravine I arranged for a beat. I left a couple of men at the top of the hill to act as stops, and these proved the ruin of my hopes. I posted myself well down the ravine and the beat began, the coolies extending down the khud and beating across the face of hill towards me. No sooner had the beat commenced with the yells and cat calls beloved of the Burman, than those infernal stops (who were of course posted well in front of the advancing line) must needs join in too, and not content with the horrible din of their sweet voices, they proceeded to hurl stones down the hill right in front of the approaching beaters. The inevitable result followed. The beaters put up the serow which, not caring for a devil-dance accompanied by an avalanche of brick-bats, turned at right angles to its original course and galloped down the wrong side of the ravine like one possessed. For one second I got a glimpse of the ungainly body through the undergrowth as it dashed straight down the hill, and a hurried snapshot failed to call a halt. The next moment it was gone. It was a chance in a hundred absolutely thrown away. In the somewhat heated interview which took place between myself and the musical "stops" the melody changed with singular abruptness as I called the tune with a supple bamboo! In truth it was a great disappointment, for scarce as serow are at all times the Malayan variety is from its distant habitat even a greater prize to the head-collector than its congener of the Himalayas.

After recording their failures, spread, be it noted, over a period of eighteen years or so during which time I had shot every species of Himalayan game except a serow, let me narrate the success which attended my efforts this year. Not wishing to go far afield for various reasons, the chief of which was a lack of funds, I decided to devote a month of my leave in June to shooting gooral and kakur in Kumaon with a faint hope of meeting a serow. Accordingly I repaired to a locality which shall be nameless (since it is already a good deal shot over and I have no intention of helping it to become more so), and having picked up a local shikari we camped on a ridge on either side of which gooral were reported to be plentiful. I found this to be the case and spent a pleasant ten days stalking these game little animals. But gooral-shooting has a certain sameness about it, and after killing a few I thought I would try to get a bear, so shifted camp some ten miles to a place where there were said to be one or two. Serow were reported to be there too, but wherever one goes in Kumaon serow are invariably quoted among the different species of animals obtainable, as if they were exceedingly plentiful; whereas the truth probably is that a villager saw one a year or two ago. The fact of certain localities having been shot out never seems to enter into the calculations of the pahari at all until pressed, when he will perhaps reluctantly admit that serow were there some years ago, but that he does not know whether any remain. One fellow, who called himself a shikari but who turned out to be merely a tiffin-coolie, volubly assured me that he had seen a year ago a herd of five serow—and was quite hurt when I threw the cold water of doubt on his interesting discovery. Arrived at our new camp I hunted high and low for three days without seeing anything more exciting than an occasional kakur, which appeared to be unusually wary, at any rate they never gave me a chance. I resolved, therefore, to strike my tent and try fresh ground. Before doing so, however, I thought I might as well beat a certain nullah in which a bear was said to have his home. Ten coolies were accordingly collected and sent round to beat the nullah while I took up a position lower down. To my disgust, when I got about half way down a gowala appeared with several cows, making the echoes ring with the yodel with which the pahari invariably drives his cattle. He was some distance off, but in the direct line of the beat. Thinking it useless to stop where I was I began climbing the hill, when I was met by the shikari beckoning to me with excited gestures. When he got down to me he explained that there was a serow a short distance away. I could hardly credit it, but I saw from his excitement that he had seen something and that he expected to find it in the same place. I hurried along with him, and after a scramble of about ten minutes, we turned the corner of a hill, when the shikari suddenly squatted and pointed across a ravine. At first I could see nothing, but presently made out the white legs of some sort of beast which was standing motionless behind a thick bush about 300 yards away. The binoculars showed these to be the dirty-white legs of a serow, and through the glasses I could just make out part of the dark body. The coolies meanwhile had collected high up on the hill above the animal and were chattering away and gesticulating like so many monkeys. The shikari wanted me to let them throw stones, but my experience of stone throwing where serow were concerned had not been a happy one and I promptly vetoed the suggestion. I decided to trust to luck and try a long shot, hoping to drive the animal towards me, if I scored a miss with the first shot. I waited till I had quite got my wind, and then took a final look through the glasses. Then I put the backsight to 200 yards and drew a full bead just where the creamy white legs met the green of the bush, and holding my breath pressed the trigger. At the shot the serow came out of the bush and walked quickly along the hillside, luckily towards me, stopping behind another bush. I fired again and thought I had hit the beast. It took a few steps forward and stood now quite in the open. I fired once more—a capped bullet—and plainly saw the animal wince at the shot, but all it did was to turn round as if to retreat. Instead of doing so, however, it stood motionless evidently quite bewildered. A fourth shot with a soft-nose bullet caught it fairly in the shoulder and brought it crashing down a shaly ravine where it was stopped by a small tree. The coolies climbed down the khud, and after a long delay and much shoving and pulling it was at last brought up to where I sat. It proved to be a female with horns of 8 inches. Three bullets had struck it, one in the quarters, one—the capped—in the ribs, and the last through both shoulders. The first bullet had merely grazed a foreleg and cut a furrow in the skin. My yodling friend the gowala had done me a good turn, for it was doubtless due to his presence that the serow when fired at took the opposite direction and all unwittingly moved towards it doom. Missing the first shot was accounted for by the beast being almost entirely hidden by the thick bush. It is, I think, always very difficult to judge the position of the body of an animal partially concealed in thick cover even when close. When shooting bison in thick jungle I have frequently been unable to judge the vital spot although the beast has been within a few yards. The dark colour of the animal blends with the shade of the cover it is in and prevents anything like an accurate aim.

Next morning the tents were struck, and we camped in the dry bed of a watercourse at the foot of the ridge where I had been goral shooting a few days before. A stiff climb of 2,000 feet on the following day, took us to the top of the ridge, and camp was pitched half way down on the other side beside a very precipitous nullah down which a torrent of water flowed. The hill on both sides was clothed with dense jungle. A large serow was reported to have his domicile here, and certainly a more likely spot one could not imagine. After shooting two or three gooral here and buck kakur with full length horns (in velvet unfortunately), I had a beat for the serow, but matters went wrong, the coolies commencing to beat before I had reached my position. They said they had come upon quite fresh tracks of a huge serow which undoubtedly they had put up, but which had retreated down the nullah before I arrived there. This was annoying, but I consoled myself with the thought that if the serow was in the nullah he would be unlikely to leave it, and sooner or later I would probably come across him. Next day I moved down to the bed of the main stream and pitched my tent there, intending to beat the adjacent nullahs for bear and serow should the gods be good enough to deliver another into my hands.

The following day having collected a dozen coolies we commenced operations by beating some nullahs on the opposite hill, but only a kakur was put up, which I bagged. I intended trying the nullah in which the serow was said to be, but before doing so thought I might as well have one more beat on this side. It proved blank, however, so far as I was concerned, but one of the beaters reported having moved a huge boar, which he said had broken back and gone into a comparatively small nullah where we would probably find it. We were making our way there with a view to beating it out, when

I thought I heard my shikari's name being called from across the watercourse in the direction of our tents. Kishen Singh, the shikari, thought he heard it also, but the noise of a waterfall close by drowned the shouting, if shouting it was. After waiting a little without hearing it repeated, we fancied we were mistaken and moved on. As we did so, we heard a distinct shout, and presently a figure appeared in the watercourse hurrying towards us and frantically waving his arms. Seeing that something was in the wind, we lost no time in climbing down to meet him, and soon we could distinguish the one word "tahr, tahr," by which misnomer serow are designated in Kumaon. As may be imagined we did not worry further about the boar, but scrambled down the hill as fast as our legs could carry us. All the breathless messenger could tell us was that a serow had been seen by a boy in the nullah close by the tents. He didn't know when or where or how. Ten minutes scrambling over boulders brought us to the tents, and here we were met by the boy who had seen the serow. It was now 3 P.M. Two lads had seen a serow at 9 A.M. feeding low down in the very nullah we had driven two days ago. With unusual intelligence for paharis, one boy was left to watch the beast while the other came down the hill to the tents to give the news. My dak-coolie was in camp and knew where we were beating, but would not trouble to find us, and it was not until we were beating homewards and were on the hill almost opposite the tents, that a stray villager passing by was sent to shout the information to us. There was no time to be lost, so we set off to climb the hill where the serow was seen, our little guide leading the way at a great pace. Twenty minutes climb brought us to the spot where the other boy was patiently sitting, but the serow had long ago moved into thick jungle, and was, of course, invisible. After a brief discussion I decided to drive the beast out, as I was afraid that if we waited till the evening he might move further down the nullah away from us and so be lost to view. The spot he had been seen to enter was on the opposite side of the ravine some 200 yards distant. I told Kishen Singh to send one of the lads down for the coolies, as I intended having a silent beat to force the animal out towards us. Kishen Singh said a few words in pahari to the boys and they both went off to call the coolies, as I thought. It turned out afterwards that instead of sending for the coolies he told the boys to go round and drive the serow out, without giving them any directions as to how to set about it. Presently I heard stones being thrown down about where the serow was said to be, and I wondered how the coolies could have arrived so quickly. Suddenly there was a rush and out dashed the serow at about 100 miles an hour. He looked as huge as a young buffalo, but I only caught glimpses of him as he galloped through the dense undergrowth, and so refrained from firing. The stupidity of the shikari had spoiled my chance for the time being, but he made up for it next day. Sorrowfully we returned to the tents, but on thinking things over, I came to the conclusion that as the serow had seen no one and had only been startled by stones falling close to him, the chances were that he would be somewhere at the head of the nullah, which was a very big one. Accordingly I arranged for a thorough beat on the morrow with twenty coolies, and turned in feeling that matters weren't quite so hopeless as they appeared to be when the serow was showing us a clean pair of heels.

Next day the coolies turned up at 9 A.M., all eager for the fray, bucksheesh being promised if I got a shot at the serow. About half way up the nullah split into two, and it was decided to drive each portion in turn. I sat at the junction and the nearest portion was beaten, the coolies merely tapping with their sticks according to orders. This beat was a blank, and it was now pretty certain that unless the serow had left the nullah entirely, he would be found in its further branch. The coolies, under the charge of Kishen Singh, were directed to go quietly round to the very top of the nullah and then to form line and silently beat down, merely tapping the trees with sticks. There was to be no shouting and no throwing of stones. I took up a position far down the main nullah under the guidance of an experienced coolie, who said he knew of a spot where the serow would probably pass and from which a good view was to be obtained. I took the precaution of leaving a stop high up on the opposite hill, with orders that if the serow broke that way he was merely to clap his hands and so turn it down hill again. It was lucky I did so as it turned out. The position the coolie had selected for me was not a good one as the view was very restricted, but going a hundred yards or so further down the hill I found a very good spot, from where I could see the opposite side of the nullah for some distance. I had been waiting for nearly an hour and had made up my mind that the serow was not at home after all or had given us the slip, when suddenly—so suddenly that it brought my heart into my mouth with a jump—a huge black form appeared, moving down the opposite side of the ravine. At first I thought it was a bear, then a boar, and then, as it came nearer, I realised that it was the serow! It came down the hill at a slow amble, finally breaking into a walk, and made towards the bed of the nullah almost directly opposite me. I covered it with my rifle, intending to fire as it was crossing the nullah, but it stopped dead suddenly, as if in doubt as to which way to go. It was now about 80 yards off and presented a good target. Taking careful aim I fired, and at the shot, with one rush, the serow reached the nullah, and was lost to view behind a thick bush. Anxiously I waited for its re-appearance, but as it remained there I loaded up, and crept down to the nullah. I peered underneath the bush and could just make out the creamy forelegs of the beast, about 20 yards off. Aiming at one I fired, and out rushed the serow straight for me. Whether he meant to charge I don't know—he certainly did not lower his head. I stepped back in a mighty hurry, and as he passed gave him the left barrel in the back. He stumbled on for a few yards and then fell heavily in the watercourse. Clambering on to a rock I gave him a final bullet through the shoulder and after a kick or two he lay still, the water from the torrent bubbling over him, and flowing past in a crimson stream. He was a very old buck, and a huge beast, with horns 10½ inches in length and 5 inches in circumference. Unfortunately I did not take his measurements, a pity, as he was an exceptionally large serow. My first shot had caught him amidships, and passing through the ribs, had come out at the belly, making a fearful wound. The shot fired under the bush had broken a foreleg. The third shot, fired as he pased me, had entered the loins and also passed through him. The beat was splendidly managed, a perfect line being kept over very difficult ground. On being roused, the serow, which was at the head of the glen as we thought, made down hill, and then crossing the stream in which he eventually met his end, took up the opposite hill almost straight for where I had placed the stop. The latter said he saw a great beast coming up towards him and thought it was a boar, and in his fright clapped his hands vigorously and hurooshed as well. He succeeded at all events in turning the serow, which then came down the hill almost opposite me, intending no doubt to recross the stream and to make tracks along the side of the ravine, whence we had driven him the day before. Although immensely pleased at the successful termination of the hunt, I could not help feeling a pang of regret at having killed a scarce and harmless beast, and now that I have been lucky enough to secure so fine a specimen, I don't know that I would care to pull trigger on another. My rifle was a D.B. ·400 axite, with soft-nose bullets—the best bore for all-round shooting in my humble opinion. I returned to civilisation very pleased with my three weeks shoot; my bag consisting of 10 gooral, 4 kakur and 2 serow, nothing out of the way, but satisfactory in these days of over-shot ground and high velocity rifles. Could I have added a bear to the tally of slain it would have completed my satisfaction. A black bear, of course, is nothing in Kashmir, where they are (or were) so common, comparatively speaking, and where the attractions of nobler game put bruin (fortunately for himself) quite in the shade; but in Kumaon a bear is—well, a bear, and as such is considered quite big fry, and worthy of the sportsman's best attentions. During September bears come from long distances to feast on the ripening Indian corn, and that month is, perhaps, the best in which to hunt them.

WORM CASTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Could you oblige me by suggesting a preventative to worm casts? We have a tennis court here that must be absolutely honeycombed by the creatures. Immediately after being rolled by a one ton roller, during a game of tennis the casts will come up all over the court. Lime water has been tried with very indifferent success. The court is an old one and it is only during the past few months that the worms have been so bad. Thanking you in anticipation.

GOROONGA, 16th November 1909. H. S. K.

[Try the following:—Mix in a pail of water about a dessert spoonful of phenyle so as to make the water slightly "milky." Pour this over four or five square yards and wait a minute, and the worms will at once appear above the surface and crawl about, when they may be picked up and collected in a vessel. The operation does not injure the grass.—ED.]

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER.

Dear Sirs,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and this had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

† Dead heat.

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst. Artillerie, 9 to 1 each Golden Slipper and Dhobi, 12 to 1 each Pendil and Kyeadgerie, 14 to 1 Nobel, 16 to 1 Post Town, 20 to 1 each Parsee and Blue Book, 25 to 1 each Woorooma, Carl Dour, and Malt King, 33 to 1 each Iolaire, Aborigine, Flavel and Aberdeen, 50 to 1 each Knox, Thistlebrook, Loyal Blue, Kerlie, Mindful, Al Cauba and Trelo Vouni, 100 to 1 each Walpuna and Dunolly, 200 to 1 each Idyll, Manana and The Shifter.

At the barrier Kerlie, Kyeadgerie, Malt King, Knox, Loyal Blue, and Artillerie were on the inside; Manana, Carl Dour, Al Cauba, and Iolaire in the centre; while Trelo Vouni, Walpuna, and Blue Book were on the outside. There was a slight delay at the start caused by Post Town and Iolaire. A good start was effected, and Kerlie, Artillerie, Trelo Vouni, Mindful, Dunolly, and Aborigine were first to break the line, and Woorooma was last. Mindful at once went to the front, and led past the judge's box from Golden Slipper, Iolaire, Aborigine, Kerlie, Dhobi, and Artillerie, the last four being Aberdeen, Kyeadgerie, Malt King, and Woorooma. Racing round the turn Mindful was still in front, and had Al Cauba, Golden Slipper, Aborigine, and Kerlie as her nearest attendants. The most prominent of the other, were Artillerie, Dunolly, Dhobi, Iolaire, Thistlebrook, and Pendil. Passing the milepost Mindful and Al Cauba were still in the lead, and Aborigine had moved up into third place, just in front of Golden Slipper, Artillerie, Iolaire, Kerlie, Thistlebrook, Dunolly, Post Town, and Pendil, with Woorooma last. Along the back Mindful had drawn out two lengths clear of Al Cauba, and then followed in close order Kerlie Golden Slipper, Dunolly, Artillerie, Iolaire, and Thistlebrook, Kerlie dropped out at the turn, where Mindful was a length clear of Dunolly, Trelo Vouni, Iolaire' Nobel, and Artillerie, who was moving up fast on the inside. Mindful faded out at this point, and before reaching the railway side Trelo Vouni ran to the front, and went on with a two lengths' lead from Artillerie, Golden Slipper, Blue Book, Flavel, Kyeadgerie, Aberdeen, and Aborigine. Rounding the turn Trelo Vouni had charge from Artillerie (who was well up on the inside), Blue Book, Golden Slipper, Aborigine, and Kyeadgerie. They came into the straight in that order followed by Pendil. At the distance Trelo Vouni still had charge from Blue Book, Thistlebrook, Aborigine, Kyeadgerie, and Pendil. Trelo Vouni at once gave ground, and inside the half-distance Blue Book, Aborigine, Pendil, Trelo Vouni, and Artillerie were almost in a line. There was an exciting race to the post and the judge was unable to separate Aborigine and Blue Book for first place, while Pendil was only a short neck away third. Trelo Vouni was fourth, Carl Dour fifth, Artillerie sixth; and then came Kyeadgerie, Thistlebrook, Knox, Flavel, Parsee, Post Town, Dhobi and Nobel, in that order; while the last three to finish were Malt King, The Shifter, and Iolaire. Time—2mins. 35secs.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN.

THE Saturday under National Hunt Rules that supplements the two days accorded by the Jockey Club on the eve of the Cambridgeshire week is invariably the occasion of a strong gathering of the cross-county clans, as is a similar meeting in the spring, and with only one short of 84, we get an average of 11 horses in each race. It was indeed a heavy day, and with 30 minutes' interval only such good time could not have been kept had not the executive very wisely dispensed with the preliminary hurdle jumping business that uselessly wastes so much time. The weather was favourable, the going in excellent order, falls few and far between, and the attendance a very large one. Results:—

The Restorer of Lost Health.

Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Sir William Bull, M.P.

"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

"If I could only get well and strong again!"

How often are those words uttered by men and women who, though up and about, are, nevertheless, ill, with racked nerves, failing strength, and depleted vitality!

To them, as to those who are ill in bed, this announcement is a message of hope of the certain conquering of their physical and nervous disabilities through the medium of Sanatogen, the supreme revitaliser of body, brain, and nerves.

More than ten thousand doctors attest the truth of this statement, and have written enthusiastic letters relating the marvellous results obtained in the cases in which they have prescribed it.

Sanatogen's reputation has its foundation firmly fixed in that unshakeable bed-rock—the justified experience of the medical profession; and that after the most searching and exhaustive tests.

Sir Frederick Milner, Bart.

"Sanatogen seems both to nourish me and give me strength."

"I have derived benefit from taking Sanatogen."

The Rt. Hon. Sir Hy. Aubrey-Fletcher, Bart., C.B., M.P.

"I have used Sanatogen for some time and appreciate its qualities."

Brain, Body & Nerves Revitalised.

Mr. Shirley Tremearne

—Editor of "Capital," Calcutta:

"I had a sharp attack of fever last October which brought me to a state of great weakness. During the whole period my diet was almost entirely soda, milk, and Sanatogen.

"I cannot speak too highly of Sanatogen, which I took for some time, and which not only kept me up during the attack, but afterwards restored me once more to full vigour. In fact I was better and stronger after this course of Sanatogen than before the attack. I can strongly recommend this preparation to anyone whose system has run down. It possesses all the qualities as a nerve tonic and builder up of the bodily system that are claimed for it."

Dr. C. R. Naylor,

Bangalore, South India:

"When milk diluted to any degree cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

Among the disordered conditions in which Sanatogen is pre-eminently beneficial are nervous debility and breakdown, weakened and disordered nerves, loss of memory, disordered digestion and dyspepsia, dysentery, malaria and anaemia, with its inevitable languor, palpitation and shortness of breath, loss of vitality, and the loss of weight and strength which are the inevitable consequences of wasting diseases like Consumption.

Sanatogen's constituents are known to every doctor. They are milk proteid and glycero-phosphate of Sodium, chemically combined to form a new compound which exercises the most potent and profound influence over the Nerves, Brain, and Body. For this reason it acts like a charm in the above-named conditions, its beneficial effects being invariably felt in a very short time.

As a general tonic Sanatogen is unequalled, and it is the supreme restorative in convalescence from all acute diseases, such as enteric fever, dysentery, and malaria. It is easily digested, rapidly assimilated and absorbed, and is the greatest known builder of physical strength and re-creator of lost nervous energy.

It gives new hope to the nervous sufferer. With its use, morbid thoughts and feelings rapidly give place to healthy ideas and normal sensations.

Sanatogen may be obtained of all Chemists and Bazaars. Write to-day for free descriptive pamphlet, entitled "How to Keep Well in Tropical Climates," to the Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta.

Dr. H. H. W. Hart,

Hapur, United Provinces, India:

"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of malaria, enteric fever, dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen."

Dr. R. F. Bowers,

Bhaptiahi, N. Bhagulpore, India:

"I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrate. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

Mr. W. L. Courtney, M.A., LL.D.

—the famous Critic and Dramatist:

"I have always been assured that Sanatogen is an ideal food for brain workers, and I gladly add my own testimony to its value in this respect."

NEWMARKET.

The sun rose last Tuesday on a white country, a thick hoar frost lying like snow, to quickly disappear under a cloudy sky with a good deal of rain and a higher temperature. As on the opening day of the Cesarewitch week, the attendence was equal to such an important occasion, the specials being well filled, and the town supplying a fair quota of temporary residents. On the second day all hopes of a betterment of the going were quashed by a particularly stormy evening, the wind sending lashings of rain to make night hideous, and at daybreak the rain-clouds were not satisfied, but towards ten o'clock it was clear enough to venture abroad. Providentially a stiffish breeze wafted the rain-clouds aloft, and in contrast to Tuesday, the afternoon was actually enjoyable. The going, however, was as soft as mud—an unusual thing for this chalky upland, but this time it had little chance of recuperation under incessant rain, and backers were on the look-out for mudlarks. A bitterly cold wind from the north-east had its redeeming feature yesterday, as it kept impending rain at bay, and a dull, chilly afternoon was preferable to the unpleasant weather previously experienced. The going though improved, was still holding, fields for the most part ruled fairly large, and some capital sport was afforded, rendered all the more enjoyable by reason of the popular victory of His Majesty's colours, the gallant struggle made by Minoru, and the magnificent riding of Danny Maher.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE boisterous and rainy weather experienced last Saturday almost all over the country did not seriously affect the form in the League championship competition. The match at Preston, where Tottenham Hotspur were the visitors had to be abandoned, but all the other engagements were played to a finish and no very surprising results occurred. Sheffield United suffered their first defeat of the season—and at Bramall Lane—but earlier in the week they had done no better than draw with Notts County, and Manchester United could only be regarded as very dangerous opponents. Consequently this defeat of the leaders was not unexpected. The next four clubs on the list all won, Blackburn Rovers at Middesbrough and Nottingham Forest at Chelsea accomplishing the most noteworthy performances. These results, together with the over-throw of Everton at Plumstead, help Aston Villa into prominence. Blackburn Rovers are now at the head of affairs, Liverpool and Sheffield United being below them, because of inferior goal averages; Nottingham Forest, Manchester United, and Newcastle United are only a point behind and Aston Villa practically as well off, so that the struggle for the championship has become extremely interesting now that all the clubs have been beaten at least once.

Woolwich Arsenal have at last brought about an improvement in their play and in their fortune. After four consecutive defeats victory has rewarded them at the expense of one of the most formidable sides in the country. The Arsenal have been handicapped by the injury of several players and their full strength at half-back—McEachrane, Sands, and Ducat—made a lot of difference to the team, while an experimental centre-forward gave them the victory. At the time the Arsenal were sharing this welcome advance on any performance since they beat Chelsea, Notts Forest were winning at Stamford Bridge. It had been hoped that Hilsdon would have turned out, but he was not considered to have sufficiently recovered from the accident that has kept him out of football for seven weeks, and the home-forwards proved ineffective, a goal giving the visitors the victory. Perhaps as the game went Chelsea could consider themselves unlucky to lose, but only their failure to beat a clever goalkeeper brought about their downfall. Chelsea need greater ability in front of goal and more resource in defence before they will be free from the anxiety about avoiding reduction that bothered them so much last season.

Beaten at Gainsborough by 3 goals to 1, West Bromwich Albion not only lost their place at the head of the Second League competition, but dropped to fourth place, varying degrees of success enabling Hull City, Glossop, and Leicester Fosse to advance above them in the order named. Hull City and Glossop both had hard matches away from home, but managed to draw, while Leicester Fosse gained a narrow victory over Stockport County. At most of the grounds the weather was dreadful, players having to contend against wind and rain and being severely handicapped by the state of the ground. The conditions at Turf Moor, Burnley, were deplorable, for the rain had rendered the ground practically a sea of mud. In these circumstances the Fulham men were put to a severe trial and lost by two goals to none. So heavy was the downpour that, in the second-half, they appealed to the referee to discontinue the match, but without avail, and they floundered about unsuccessfully to the end. Of course, it is quite possible that Burnley would have won, even if the ground had been firm, but the Turf Moor enclosure has long had a bad reputation, and visiting teams are generally at a grave disadvantage there when the weather is at all wet. Fulham have now been beaten three times, but, despite that fact, no other club in the competition has had so few goals scored against them. Third from the bottom, with only a couple of victories to their credit, Clapton Orient failed to beat Hull City in a poor game at Homerton, losing a fine chance when Bond did not score from a penalty kick.

In the Southern League the measure of success attending the efforts of home clubs was quite remarkable, no fewer than ten of them winning. Brighton and Hove Albion were the only side that failed, drawing with Southampton at two goals each. Curiously enough, last week, when the teams who on Saturday played on opponents' grounds were at home Coventry City alone utilised that advantage and won. In yesterday's engagements there was a great disparity between the scoring powers of home and visiting sides, the former obtaining 28 goals between them and the latter only five. Eight teams failed to score at all. Two of the best games were those between Crystal Palace and Croydon Common at the Palace and Queen's Park Rangers and Northampton—champions the season before last and last season respectively—at Park Royal. Local rivalry invested the match at the Palace with added interest, but the Palace team, keeping up the fine form they have shown in recent fixtures, won by 2 goals—the same score as that by which the Rangers overcame Northampton. The Palace forwards are probably the best in the competition. Almost invariably they conduct their attacks on sound lines, a complete understanding between them and their half-backs making the side a very great power as an attacking force. The Swindon forwards were also seen to advantage against Millwall, whose defence quite failed before a vigorous pressure.

RUGBY RULES.

BLACKHEATH vs. DEVONPORT ALBION.—The contest between these teams at Blackheath in boisterous weather and before about three thousand spectators last Saturday was nothing like so inspiring or thrilling to the watchers as was the game between Newport and the Heathens on the preceding Saturday. There was so much whistling that both sides were put off their game, and for quite an hour of the game it was a wretched scramble amongst the forwards. Every movement was checked for some technical formality until the crowd really became restive and sarcastic. This kind of thing went on until towards the end, when the Albions succeeded in loosening play somewhat, and after Wright and Twinning had several times prevented an almost score Spiers got the ball out to Lismore, who was unmarked, and he had a clear run in. Lillicap added the extra points. One or two fine runs and exceptionally good kicking by Wright were features of the later stages of the game, during which Adcock, Vivyan, and Lismore were all but in again for Albion. There were a large number of free kicks against the latter for infringements, but nothing came of them, and an unsatisfactory but close game ended in favour of the Devonians. Devon Albion, 1 goal; Blackheath, 0.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. OLD ALLEYNIANS.—If the work of the backs was not all that could be desired though the fact that half a gale of wind was blowing must be taken into consideration, the foot work of the London Scottish forwards is greatly to be commended in their game with the Old Alleynians at Richmond. London Scottish won by two goals three tries (19 points) to nil. The Scottish forwards were heavier and faster than the Old Boys, who, but for their admirable defence, would have had even a heavier score against them. An indication of what was to come was given in the first half, for with the strong wind against them the Scottish more than held their own, and when the whistle blew to change ends were one try to the good. This was obtained by Williamson, who was set in motion by a splendid pass from Walter after a characteristically strong run. The next, the latter player registered himself after a clever exchange of passes with Williamson early after the interval. Subsequently Kennedy, Penny, and Lely got over in the order mentioned as the result of capital forward rushes in which the Scottish forwards used their feet to excellent effect. Lockhart kicked both the goals. London Scottish, 2 goals 3 tries; Old Alleynians, 0.

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. U.C.S. OLD BOYS.—A match of a full scoring took place at Honor Oak Park, for although the Hospital were without the assistance of Lacey and Lee, they were immeasurably superior to their opponents. The weather was at first threatening and windy, but afterwards a continuous drizzle prevailed. By means of tries scored by Stringer (2), Hoby, Medlock, and Stokes, and the conversion of four of these to goals by the last-named, Guy's led at the interval by 23 points to nil. In the second half, with the wind at their backs, they piled on tries in even more frequent succession. Stokes obtained four more, Stringer three more, and Moberley got over once. Stokes was consistently successful with the place-kicking, and out of these last eight he kicked six goals, making a total of 10 goals and 5 unconverted tries to nil. The Old Boys played good football, but were beaten for pace by a team which included two exceptional sprinters in Stokes and Stringer. Guy's Hospital, 10 goals 3 tries; U.C.S., Old Boys, 0.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—In this match at Cambridge the Leysians began well, and in the first quarter of an hour Beecroft and Hosker obtained tries. Then the University settled down to a sound game and before half-time had gained the lead by 11 points to 10, Coats, Campbell, and Pyman obtaining tries, of which Campbell converted one. Changing ends the University had most of the play, Pyman, Roberts, and Campbell adding tries, and they won by 20 points to 10. Cambridge, 1 goal 5 tries; Old Leysians, 2 goals.

LENNOX vs. ROYAL NAVY (CHATHAM).—Though not at full strength, Lennox gave the Navy a rare good game at Wandsworth, and only lost by the difference of a successful place kick. At the outset the visitors, thanks to the splendid loose work of their forwards and the excellent three-quarter play of Burgess Watson, continually threatened danger, but only on one occasion did they score, and that was when Hamilton ran over. Watson did not improve this. Lennox, who had been rather rushed off the ball, settled down, and shortly before halftime were twice within an ace of scoring. Seintzemeh scored, and as McLachlan failed the record was even at the change of ends. For three parts of the second half Lennox did everything but score, but ten minutes from time the Navy broke away and Palmer got over for Burgess Watson to add the goal point. Lennox made a splendid effort to get level, and when Alexander broke through with a try in an easy position they had a fine chance, but McLachlan missed the kick, and the Navy won a capital match by 8 points to 6. Royal Navy, 1 goal 1 try; Lennox, 2 tries.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—At Richmond, Oxford kicked off facing a stiff wind, and consequently the Taylors took the game at once into the Oxford half. Buchanan was forced to touch down twice, and although Barratt should have scored the 'Varsity managed to keep their defence intact. Now and then the Oxonians got into the Taylors' twenty-five, and on one such occasion a fine kick by Raphael the whole length of the field transferred the game. Poulton, however when on his own line, gained possession, and rushing through his opponents, scored the first try, which Turner easily converted. The 'Varsity led at half-time by 1 goal to nil. With the wind behind them the 'Varsity showed to better advantage, both Poulton and Buchanan made good runs, and it was only the defence of Raphael which prevented any scoring. A quarter of an hour from the finish Poulton made a fine run and passed along to Nicholas, who scored a good try in the corner. Turner converting. Similar play three minutes later resulted in Nicholas scoring his second try, which Turner again converted. The Oxonians continued to attack, and when the Taylors were penalised five yards inside the half-way line, Turner kicked a fine goal with a long kick, the 'Varsity thus winning by 18 points to nil. Oxford, 4 goals 1 (penalty); O.M.T., 0.

LONDON HOSPITAL vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—At Hale End, London Hospital without T. P. Lloyd and A. C. Palmer had a hard struggle to beat Rosslyn Park and it was not until the closing stages that superiority behind proved successful. In the opening half Rosslyn Park had a strong wind in their favour and by capital forward play they gave the Hospital plenty to do in defence. Bewsher twice and Wheeler scored tries for the Park, the former goaling on one occasion, while Macpherson and Adams got in for the Hospital, Adams goaling the former's try with a magnificent shot. The Park, who thus held a lead of three points, played a capital open game in the concluding half, and with their backs tackling well, the Hospital three-quarters, for whom Batchelor showed great speed, had few opportunities. However, just when the Park looked to have won Batchelor with a fine try drew level. This success was quickly followed by a couple more tries from Adams and Macpherson, and the Park failing to respond were beaten by 17 points to 11. The ground was in a heavy condition. London Hospital, 1 goal 4 tries; Rosslyn Park, 1 goal 2 tries.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.—It was not a very pretentious programme which Mr. Bettinson placed before the members at head-quarters last Monday night, but it served its purpose and provided some interesting boxing. The sixteen novices who had survived the first series of the middle-weight competition, decided on Thursday last, although in most instances unknown quantities, put up some good bouts, and at the end of the third series the Services still supplied a large percentage of representatives.

The chief event of the evening was a ten-round contest between Fred Wood, of Covent Garden, and Lance-Corporal Leeson, of the Connaught Rangers, who boxed at catch weights. Wood had the advantage in height, but the soldier was the heavier. In some hard exchanges during the opening round Leeson was down twice, but in the next he drove his man to the ropes several times. They slowed down at the third meeting, in which the soldier finished up slightly the better, but he came off second best in some hard work during the fourth. When half the allotted number of rounds had been contested there was very little between the men. The sixth was Leeson's round, two hard rights taking effect. Leeson continued to do most with his right in the seventh round, but Wood was not idle. Neither could claim an advantage as the result of the eighth meeting, Leeson still depending largely on his right. Things livened up somewhat in the ninth round, but in the last clinches were frequent, and in the result Leeson secured the verdict by a very narrow margin of points.

GOLF.

NEW MUNICIPAL COURSE FOR LONDON.—London is now in possession of the much-talked of municipal golf course at Chingford Forest. For the past two years much has been written about this new venture of the London County Council, and the effect of their arduous labours was presented in a mild form last Saturday afternoon. It seemed rather an unwise step to open a green, more especially a Corporation one, just on the threshold of dull, dank November, when the conditions, as a rule, are anything but fitting for the playing of the game. Doubtless those who furthered the scheme were anxious to have the course put in the hands of the public at the earliest moment; hence their reason for making a beginning on Saturday last.

As chairman of the Parks Committee, Mr. George Alexander, of theatrical fame, drove off the first ball, and the manner in which he wielded his "Dreadnought" indicated that his ability was not altogether confined to the footlights.

The services of J. H. Taylor, the open champion, had been secured, and with the local professional, Hugh Logan, an interesting match was played, the professionals being partnered by Mr. George Alexander and the Hon'ble Thomas Ochiltree, M.P., respectively. There were other interesting foursomes played, and all attracted much attention.

Speaking generally, the course strikes one as being rich in possibilities. There are some fine bits of golfing country; in fact, once the holes have been thoroughly bunkered the course will be one of the best for many miles round. It is no "parlour" golf—the golf that one unfortunately has to accustom oneself to in London—and a wide range of shots is met with on the way round. After a tame opening, the golfer, the further he goes, finds himself among some very sporting holes. Once on the fourth tee, the real golf begins, and for the remainder of the round the terrors to the moderate player are tremendous. On the slicer, the course has no mercy, but there is ample room for a pulled shot, which will invariably find a good lie.

CAMBRIDGE U. vs. ROYAL NORWICH.—Cambridge University opened their season in promising fashion yesterday, when they defeated Royal Norwich on the latter's course at Hellesdon by 11½ points to 4½. Cambridge secured the foursomes, which were decided in the morning by 5 points to ½, and the single by 6½ to 3½. The corresponding contest last year ended in favour of Royal Norwich by 1½ points.

The leading matches in the singles were close, M. Crick beating the Cambridge Captain E. S. Ulyat, by one hole, and B. K. Wilson defeating the second Cantab, J. F. Ireland, by two holes. In the foursomes Crick and Wilson were beaten by Ulyat and Ireland.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY AND THE NEW PROPOSALS.—The proposals which are now before the College Boat Club authorities are being freely discussed, and it is highly probable that the matter will be settled by the beginning of next week.

Shortly, the proposals are to allow all men, whether they have rowed in the first division of the previous "Mays" or not, to row in the Lent races and to have the first division of these races rowed on slides. The latter subject has been on the mind of Mr. Steve Fairbairn for some time, and of course the question of allowing all men to row is closely allied to the other scheme. It has been felt by a good many authorities for some time past, that the present method of putting men back on to fixed seats after they have rowed on slides is bad for their rowing, and there are others who claim that, while of course excellent during the early stages of rowing, the fixed seat is rather overdone at Cambridge. This proposal has caused very violent opposition. A great many claim that there is not sufficient fixed seat rowing at Cambridge to enable the sport to be taught properly, and at present there seems very little probability of the new rules being passed.

But it must be remembered that Mr. Steve Fairbairn and his fellow reformers have not rushed into this without thinking and their one idea has been to improve Cambridge rowing, which is sadly in need of something, as was shown at Henley this year. They claim, and perhaps we may say justly, that when a large number of third year men—men who, from a College point of view, are just in their prime—are unable to take part in any rowing (except, perhaps, a few weeks in the College Light Four), from the end of a May term to the commencement of the next May term, those men are being handicapped, whereas, if they were to be allowed to row in the "Lents" on slides they would be improving themselves; improving the standard of the Lents; improving the standard of the "Mays," and thereby improving the standard of University rowing generally. Most people will agree that this seems fairly straightforward, but then comes the opposition with the question "What about the Freshmen?" If all men are allowed to row in the "Lents" then a very large number of those at present rowing in these races will be excluded, and rowing will suffer. We feel sure it is not Mr. Steve Fairbairn's idea to stop anyone from rowing, and as an alternative a fourth division of the "Lents" could be included or, better still, some similar races for freshmen only arranged for the October term and take the place of uninteresting College Trial Eights.

Whether these reforms are passed or not, those not eligible to row in the Lent races will have something to interest them next term as Messrs. Steve Fairbairn and Forster (of Thames fame) have offered a cup for pairs to be decided at the end of the Lent Term when the University crew, and thus the leading oarsmen, are away. The new event should prove extremely popular.

OXFORD COXSWAINLESS FOURS.—The opening day Tuesday of the coxswainless fours at Oxford was wretched. Rain fell continuously, the wind was cold, and a strong stream told against good times. The entry numbered fifteen, and of those competing the best form was shown by Magdalen I., who beat New by eight lengths. Christ Church I. beat Christ Church II. by seven lengths, St. John's defeated Worcester by a length, Trinity I. beat Balliol by three lengths, Magdalen II. finished six lengths ahead of University College, and Oriel defeated Trinity II. very easily. The most exciting race was between Merton and Lincoln, the latter winning by a third of a length after being at one time all to pieces.

The river rose 6in. during Tuesday night, so that the crews had a very strong stream to contend with on Wednesday. They were also bothered by a north-westerly wind and a driving rain. The result was poor racing and slow times. Magdalen I. had to row harder than on the opening day to defeat Christ Church by three lengths; St. John's easily vanquished Corpus Christi by six lengths, and Magdalen II. had little difficulty in beating Oriel by four lengths. Trinity, however, had to go hard to finish 2½ lengths in front of Lincoln.

RACQUETS.

ETON vs. WINCHESTER.—This match, the first of the season at Eton, was played yesterday. J. C. Craigie and Hon'ble J. N. Manners represented Eton and L. C. Tollemache and S. B. Williams were the Winchester pair. The home pair gained an easy victory by four games to love. Craigie showed excellent form and Tollemache served well at times. Manners played well after the first game, keeping the ball up and serving well at times. Scores—Eton, 15, 15, 15, 15—60; Winchester, 9, 3, 6 6—24.

MEERUT AUTUMN TOURNAMENT.

31ST LANCERS vs. MEERUT GYMKHANA.—The match between these teams opens the tournament on the 8th instant, a very level and hard fought game ending in a win for the Gymkhana by 5 goals to 4.

First Chukker.—The Lancers got away and registered a goal. The Gymkhana next attacked but hit wide and the Lancers again took up the offensive though there was no further score.

Second Chukker.—The Gymkhana made several runs to the Lancers' flags and eventually Talbot equalised. They continued to press and Talbot put in another good run but shot wide.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till the Lancers got through and Saville scored. Talbot was next conspicuous but his shot failed by inches and the ball was returned to the Gymkhana end where the Resildar put it through.

Fourth Chukker.—A penalty against the Gymkhana for hitting behind but the hit was met and the ball taken to the opposite end where Talbot scored. Level play till the Gymkhana once again took up the attack and Gourand put the teams on terms with a neat shot.

Fifth Chukker.—Midfield play till Talbot got away and had a shot, the ball hit the post and returned into play, Howell putting it through. The Lancers then attacked and Saville equalised.

Sixth Chukker.—With the score 4 all the Gymkhana attacked hotly and after several unsuccessful runs they again took the lead, Howell putting them ahead. Midfield play closed the game, the Gymkhana thus winning by 5 goals to 4. Teams:—

SEMI FINALS.

12TH ROYAL LANCERS vs. MEERUT GYMKHANA.—A large crowd of spectators witnessed the two games in the semi-finals on the 10th instant. The game between the 12th Lancers and the Gymkhana ended in an easy win for the 12th by 9 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—The Lancers pressed and, after an easy opening had been missed, Badger opened the scoring. A penalty against the Gymkhana for hitting behind gave the Lancers no advantage, but they kept up a hot attack on the Gymkhana goal and scored twice in quick succession.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers attacked, but a foul against them put them back. They soon returned to the charge, but the Gymkhana diverted play. At length Freeman got possession and hit a goal.

Third Chukker.—Badger took the ball down and passed to Quin, who put it through. He added another goal shortly after and play during the rest of this period was in Gymkhana territory, though there was no further score.

Fourth Chukker.—Talbot got away and tried a long shot, but it went out wide. The ball was brought back by the Lancers and Nichols hit a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers kept up a hot attack but there was no score.

Sixth Chukker.—Quin rushed down in possession and transferred to Badger, who put through. The Gymkhana next pressed for a spell and Howell tried a long shot without success. Play then returned to their territory and after a penalty hit, which they failed to improve upon, the Lancers scored from a melee and time was called shortly after with the final score 12th Lancers, 9 goals; Meerut Gymkhana, nil. Teams:—

Umpires.—Major Hambro and Mr. Weinholr.

17TH LANCERS vs. 18TH LANCERS.—The second game between the two Lancer regiments ended in a win for the 17th, who were better mounted and displayed better combination. The 18th nevertheless played a great game and offered a stubborn resistance all through.

First Chukker.—The 17th attacked and Platt hit a goal. Continuing the pressure two attempts by the 17th were frustrated, but a melee in front of the 18th's goal ended in another goal to the 17th.

Second Chukker.—The 17th kept up the attack and Melville scored after a good run. Play continued in the 18th's territory but they defended brilliantly.

Third Chukker.—Play all over the ground—offside against the 18th—no score.

Fourth Chukker.—The 17th attacked vigorously but the 18th kept them out and this period also ended without score.

Fifth Chukker.—Melville put in a fine run and hit a difficult goal. Play continued in the 18th's territory but their defence was not again broken.

Sixth Chukker.—The 18th took the ball down but it was met and returned to their territory, where Melville put it through. Up and down play till the call of time. Final score: 17th Lancers, 5 goals; 18th Lancers, nil. Teams:—

FINAL.

12TH ROYAL LANCERS vs. 17TH D.C.O. LANCERS.—The final game between these teams was played on the 12th instant on the new ground in the civil lines. There was a big gathering, the Civilians were "At home" and the band of the 17th Lancers in attendance, while the game was one of the finest ever witnessed at Meerut. The 12th Lancers were eventually victorious and were presented with the Cup by Mrs. Eccles Nixon at the conclusion of the game.

First Chukker.—Up and down play, both goals being visited in turn and every inch of ground disputed—no score.

Second Chukker.—The 17th attacked but Badger cleared and the game was transferred to the other end, where the ball went out. Further play in the 17th's territory, a foul being given against them, but the penalty was not improved upon. The 12th kept up the pressure and Nicholas scored, Badger adding a second goal shortly after.

Third Chukker.—The 17th rushed away but Truman cleared and a shot by Badger went wide. Play continued in the 17th's territory and Badger registered a goal. The 17th then pressed and after Platt had shot wide Melville notched a point. Fast up and down play followed and the 17th were penalised for crossing.

Fourth Chukker.—Badger took the penalty hit but nothing came of it. Play ruled for a spell in the 12th's ground where there was hard hitting and fast galloping but no further score.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast up and down play all over the ground; the 17th cleared three attempts to score by the opponents and the chukker ended pointless.

Sixth Chukker.—The 12th pressed and scored from a scrimmage. Then the 17th got possession and also hit a goal. They kept up the attack to the end, but there was no further scoring, the 12th thus winning by 5 goals to 2. Teams as before.

Umpires.—Colonel Lecky and Major Hambro.

THE HYDERABAD TOURNAMENT.

GOLCONDA vs. FUTTEH MAIDAN "B."—This game was played on the 8th instant and as was expected proved a walk over for the redoubtable Golconda team. Futteh Maidan fought hard but were quite outclassed, being eventually defeated by nine goals to nil. Golconda scored one goal in the first chukker and two in the second. The third period was without score but another point was registered in the fourth, two in the fifth and three in the final chukker. Teams:—

Umpire.—Mr. Newton, 13th Hussars.

13TH HUSSARS vs. FUTTEH MAIDAN "A."—These teams also played off their tie on the 8th instant, the Hussars winning by 6 goals to 2. Play was level at the start till the 13th got away and drew first blood. They attacked in the second period and, after a good run by Green the ball was brought back and Hamilton-Grace notched the second point. In the third chukker Green got through and hit a goal for "A" team but the Hussars were all over them in the next period, Vanneck and Grace both adding to the score. Play was fast in the fifth period and after Grace had hit a brilliant goal the Hussars were penalised for a foul but nothing came of the free hit. In the last chukker a cross by "A" team gave the 13th a penalty from which they obtained no advantage, but shortly after Vanneck rushed down and scored their sixth goal. A penalty against the Hussars enabled Green to hit a second goal for Futteh Maidan just before time. Teams:—

·375 RIMLESS
MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec
Striking energy,
2,899 ft. lbs.,

With
200 grain Bullet
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.;
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It is now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Price, plain quality ... ... 20 Guineas.
Best quality and finish, neatly engraved ... ... 25 "

Bovril contains all the goodness of prime beef in highly condensed form.

FINAL.

GOLCONDA vs. 13TH HUSSARS.—The final was decided on the 11th instant in the presence of a very large gathering of spectators. The Hussars were not expected to win but they gave the Golcondas a good game and the play on Thursday last was quite the fastest and best witnessed in a final of the Hyderabad Tournament for years. Maharajah Sir Kishen Pershad Bahadur was "At home" to his many friends and Mrs. O'Dwyer gave away the handsome trophy at the conclusion of the game.

First Chukker.—Shah Mirza led off with a goal and followed this up almost immediately with a second. Thereafter the Hussars attacked but all their efforts were frustrated.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play till Grace got away and put in a shot which missed by inches. The Hussars kept up the attack but the Golconda defence was not to be beaten and the game was returned to the Cavalry end for the rest of the period. No score.

Third Chukker.—Shah Mirza rushed down and scored, and a moment later repeated the performance. Up and down play closed the chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—Both goals were visited without advantage and play was then taken to midfield where an exciting struggle took place. The Hussars ultimately rushed away and shot but Kader cleared and the chukker ended without score.

Fifth Chukker.—Shah Mirza, who played a brilliant game, was again conspicuous but his efforts were spoiled by Hinde. Golconda returned to the change and Hamid hit a goal. They kept up the pressure for the rest of the period and the Hussars goal had several narrow escapes.

Sixth Chukker.—Midfield play till Grace got away and scored the Hussars' first and only goal. Golconda returned the compliment Shah Mirza scoring once more. They continued the attack but Hinde was seen at his best and there was no further scoring. Final score: Golconda, 6 goals; 13th Hussars, 1 goal. Teams:—

ST. XAVIER'S COLLEGE, CALCUTTA.

ANNUAL ATHLETIC MEETING.

Saturday, 13th November 1909.

The St. Xavier's College held its annual athletic sports this afternoon in the presence of a large gathering of spectators. The several arrangements were, as usual, excellent, everything went off without a hitch and a great feature was the absence of any delay between events. Father Vander Schueren is indeed to be congratulated on a most successful meeting. Some good performances were put up and A. Green covered himself with glory winning all the open events save the 220 yards and throwing the cricket ball. In B Division D. Ford made a very creditable show also winning the 100, and 220 and both jumps. No fewer than nine new records were made. A. Greene establishing new figures for the 100 yards hurdles (15½secs.) and Quarter mile (56¼-ecs.) in A Division. F. Ford who won both jumps in B. Division being credited with a foot better performance than the previous best long jump and 4 inches better in the high jump—both his jumps were as good as those in A. Division. Fleming cut ½sec. off the 300 yards school record and the smaller boys made four fresh records as will be seen below. CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—This match on the C.C.C. ground on the 13th and 14th instant ended in a win for the home team by 92 runs. Batting first they made a very poor display and were all out for 94, Craik (30) being the only one to trouble the Customs' bowlers. Marsden was on the spot and took 7 wickets for 32 runs. The Customs then went in and fared even worse, being disposed of for 69. Ernsthausen took 4 wickets for 19 and Lee 4 for 32. Calcutta opened their second innings badly and lost 2 wickets for 28 when stumps were drawn for the day. Resuming on Sunday the home team did not show up very brilliantly and the innings closed for 123. Shallow who was not out overnight carried his score to 21 before he was dismissed and Lee (40) was the only other in form. Marsden and McCready shared the wickets, the former taking 5 for 43 and McCready 5 for 69. With 149 runs to win the Customs went out to bat once more but put up a miserable display and were all out for 56. Quiterio and McCready were the only players to reach double figures. Calcutta thus won by 92 runs. In the second innings Major Geoghegan took 3 wickets for 9, Ernsthausen 3 for 16, and Manders 2 for 11. Score:—

YACHT RACING.

THE British yachting season has, despite the fact that the weather has left something to be desired, been more successful than was that of 1908. Thanks to the systematic arrangement of the season's programme at a conference convened by the Yacht Racing Association in the winter, the regattas followed one another without a hitch in regular geographical sequence, and an unusually long list of fixtures was concluded a week or two earlier than has been customary in the past. From the first race sailed in the Thames Estuary in May, until the final match at Dartmouth on 28th August, the racing in the open classes was full of interest, and the splendid sport experienced throughout the season has set the seal of success to the International Rules that came into general use last year.

The twenty-three-metre class was not so strong in point of numbers as in 1908, as neither Brynhild nor Lyria was commissioned, but Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock and Mr. Myles B. Kennedy's White Heather, the best of last year's craft, again hoisted racing colours. Although White Heather was a good match for Shamrock last summer in fresh breezes, the green cutter was much the faster in soft winds, and as the majority of the matches were sailed in light weather, the latter easily secured the championship of the class. Fortunately, vessels of the type evolved under the present measurement formula lend themselves to alteration, and are consequently not readily outclassed.

The conversion of Brynhild from an apparently hopeless failure into a successful yacht is now a matter of history, but although it opened up possibilities in the alteration of outclassed racing vessels that should have a far-reaching effect upon the future of the sport. The modifications effected to White Heather were very similar to those that had proved so efficacious in the case of Brynhild, and when put afloat it was found that despite her longer mast and extra sail Mr. Kennedy's cutter was quite as stiff as, or even stiffer than, before, whilst her sailing in light weather had been wonderfully improved. She was now a perfect match for her redoubtable opponent, and blow high or blow low, there was nothing to choose between them.

The racing of the two big cutters has been the brightest feature of a particularly good season, and no better sport has been witnessed between large craft within the memory of the present generation of yachtsmen.

Both wound up with twenty winning flags in forty starts, so that they tie for the championship of the class. White Heather in addition to the class matches competed for and won the King's Cup at Cowes, but as the match was sailed under handicap conditions and Shamrock was not eligible, it is not included in the above record.

There are few more interesting classes scheduled under the International Rules than that for schooners, yawls, and ketches exceeding 23 metres rating, but consisting mainly of schooners it has not "caught on" amongst British yachtsmen. The majority of the regatta courses in Great Britain are not suited to large vessels of schooner rig, and most owners prefer the hardier cutter. During the earlier portion of the season, the only class racing schooner in commission was Mr. G. Cecil Whitaker's Fife-designed Cicely, and it was not until the arrival of the German "two-stickers" at Cowes that racing in this class was possible. Even then, but three classes were provided, the clubs preferring to put on handicaps in the hope of attracting a large entry.

The German-owned vessels that competed, were the Kaiser's new Meteor IV., Herr Krupp Von Bohlen's Germania, and Herr Huldschinsky's Susanne, which, with Cicely, sailed in class matches under the International time scale of 4 seconds per mile for each metre of rating. Meteor IV., was a new craft constructed this year, from drawings by Herr Max Oertz to succeed the Carry-Smith designed Meteor III., which has now been superannuated. Meteor IV., which is the first home-built yacht of important tonnage that has carried the Imperial colours, is a sister ship to Germania, and is commanded and manned entirely by Germans. With Germania, she suffered from lack of wind during her early English engagements, all the matches except the first, being sailed in light weather.

Under such conditions the big German schooners seemed very sluggish, and both were decisively beaten by the Fife-designed yacht Cicely and Susanne. Cicely had been considerably altered since she met Germania last year, and seemed a much improved vessel. In the early spring a quantity of lead ballast, formerly carried inside, was transferred to her keel and the yacht was given a much larger spinnaker to assist her when sailing down wind. In light weather the German vessels proved quite incapable of conceding Mr. Whitaker's boat the allotted time, and the latter was either first or second in all of her seven races three of which she won. Of the German vessels Meteor IV. and Susanne won one each and the Kaiser's yacht also obtained one third prize. The best the Germania could do was to finish second twice in six attempts.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

On Saturday the Tollygunge Club held the last of their Gymkhanas for this year, and it was quite as great a success as the five previous ones. The track, thanks to Mr. Jamieson, was in excellent racing condition. He has had the top 3 or 4 inches of earth turned over, and laid on it a covering of straw, chaff, and rice husks, added to this a liberal supply of water, and as a result the going was better than we have ever before seen it at these meetings.

The Club very kindly supplied free drinks to the riders taking part. This was much wanted, as before, unless men took their liquid refreshments out themselves, it was impossible owing to the short time between races for them, to get a thirst-quencher, the members and public bars always being too well patronized to render it possible to get anything quickly.

The first race produced a field of five starters, all old friends except a new washy chestnut of Mr. Hamilton's named Farthing Bun. This race was the start of a really fine argument between two of the contestants. Mr. Galstaun laid a complant of foul riding, which was looked into by the stewards at the end of the day. They came to the conclusion, however, that if such was the case, they were sure it was not intentional, but at the same time they suggested to the delinquent that it would be well to be more careful in future.

Gipsy jumped out in front, and led with Powerful and Piccaninny on her heels, closely followed by Solace, Farthing Bun 20 lengths behind. This order was kept until half way round the bend, where Powerful and Piccaninny running wide let Solace up, and she went on and passed Gipsy half way down the straight, winning easily by three lengths.

The next event on the card was a sporting match over the Steeplechase course, between Mr. Morris on Blue Bell II., and Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy—catchweight at 11st 7lb. The owner of Fairy, who is getting very solid in these days, found that he could not get the weight, and had to declare 5lb. We do not think it made any difference to the result, however, as she carries weight very well. The chestnut mare led all the way, until they had got safely over the last fence, when Blue Bell caught her and after that had her beaten all the way. We congratulate Mr. Morris on winning his first race over fences, may he keep it up; he did it in good style, but was a bit too anxious to get over his jumps, though he could not flurry his old grey.

The public went made to back the top weight for the third race, and quickly made him an odds on favourite, Mr. Campbell got them all off to a very good start. Comprimil and Eruption going out to the front with Sir Ulric and Andros close up. They kept this order until the distance was reached, when Comprimil took the lead and won as he liked by five lengths.

The fourth race was another good thing that came undone rather badly, through putting a light-weight on top of four stone of leads, and girthing them up so that they fell off! The first to show up was the favourite Dickie, with Devilette II., Spero and Fingall next. Half-way down the straight Dickie had the race well in hand, but his weights all got adrift, and losing the lot he was pulled up. Devilette II. then went to the front, and won as she liked by four lengths hard held; she is a very nice sort of mare, and Mr. Evers should do well with her.

A good field of eight starters set out for the fifth race, but at the first false start, the rider of Gem broke a bar in his light-saddle, and the mare did not start. Loch Lily made the pace a real cracker from the word go, with Killarney, Lou and Badcock next. At the distance, Killarney looked to have things all her own way, but Lou came very fast on the outside and beat her by two and half lengths.

The last event on the card was run in the gloom; the first two furlongs of this looked more like a bumping and boring match than a race. They galloped all over the club grounds until they found the rails at the 5-furlong post to guide them, and it would be an impossibility to describe the running. After a long wait broken only by the crack of whips and voices from afar, we saw Vanity out on the outside rail by herself, and she won as she liked in spite of carrying 2 stone more than anything else in the race! We are informed also that she went a furlong further than anything else—good luck to Mr. Forbes Skeene and his maiden win.

Mr. E. C. Ramshaw has arrived from Bangalore with his string. Shamfight is looking well, and Fizz is a picture, and a lot fitter than we have ever seen him on this side,—the trainer also is as cheery as ever. Barett rides again for him this season, but we hear that Fraser if well enough is to ride Fizz in the Cup.

A. Hoyt is not going to ride this year over fences and is only performing on the flat for Bleach's stable; his brother Ralph is back in India again, and will ride all of Bleach's jumpers. The steeplechase jockeys will be stronger in numbers this season than we have seen for a long time past, as we have at least six new ones amongst us.

Mr. R. Boyeler arrived by last mail and is looking very fit and well. He again takes up the duties of senior stipendiary Steward to the C.T.C.

The Tollygunge Steeplechase course was opened for schooling last Sunday, when Messrs. Evers and Cowper had their strings out to try the new jumps. The first to go were Foy and Highland Fling over a couple of fences. Next two new ones of Mr. Hamilton's, Farthing Bun and Ringmaiden, with Maisonette as their school mistress. They all jumped very well, and did not take any risks as people rather expected some of the old Tollygunge hands to do. The jumps we hear from the gentlemen that have been over them are just the thing.

The entries for the first meeting are very bad indeed, and it rather seems as though we shall have a poor day's racing. The Midget Pony Race has produced a field of six, Etna and Trilby II. being the only new ones. The Season's Maiden Horse Race has found three entries, all strangers, and the rest of the card very uninteresting with nothing of importance entered.

No prices are up for the Viceroy's Cup at present. The layers of odds are calling the betting 5/1 bar one so far. Bantock is favourite at 3/1 with Fizz and Wandin next in demand.

The hurdles were up on the Calcutta training track for schooling on Tuesday afternoon, the first to go were Mulison (Mr. Levetus), Sacricomar (R. Hoyt), this was a fairly fast affair of one and a half miles, both jumped well. Dirty Boy (T. Ferguson), Galloping Girl (R. Hoyt) then went over the seven flights at about half pace, they both jumped very clean and well, until the last hurdle where Dirty Boy hit it very hard and nearly fell. Parwan (Alford), Pantry Girl (R. Hoyt) went over the full course: the pony jumped very carelessly at the first three flights, nearly falling at the third hurdle. Parwan jumped well, until he made a mistake at the sixth jump and nearly came it. The last school of the day was Mount Dane (R. Hoyt), and Wildfowler (C. Hoyt) who went over the first three hurdles and were pulled up, they both hit the first very hard, but were more careful over the rest.

We are only going to see the one size of hurdle this year for both horse and pony, which we think is rather a mistake, as it will be asking ponies a bit too much to jump horse hurdles at the end of a fast two miles.

We regret to learn of an accident to Mr. H. W. Hales. His horse bolted through one of the openings on the riding track on Friday morning, and threw his rider violently against the rails. Mr. Hales sustained a fracture of the leg below the knee, and was removed to the Presidency General Hospital where, we are glad to hear, he is making rapid progress.

Sport during the Army Cup week at Lucknow has been exceptionally good. Details of the three days' racing will be found further on. The big race on the second day brought out 15 starters, not as large a field as last year, but well up to the average, of which Poniard and The Munshi divided favouritism, with Pasha and Young Lomond next in demand. The race was a fine spectacle, and the public were correct in their selection, for Poniard won a great race by three-quarters of a length from The Munshi. Surrender, who had made most of the running, finishing third, a length behind. Mr. Charrington, who came by a nasty fall in the hurdle race on the first day, rode Poniard extremely well, and his well judged rush at the finish brought him home a winner. We add our congratulations to the many he has received on his performance.

THE Kour Sahib of Patiala, the most successful owner during the three days, had a day out on the second day winning the Arab Handicap with Brigand II., the Giant Pony Handicap with Lorraine, and dividing first place in the Calcutta Plate, his representative, Lord Merv, dead-heating with Longchamps. In addition to these successes Brigand II. annexed the Desert Plate on the first day. Ames rode the winners in each of the above, and with two other winning brackets easily headed the list of winning jockeys during the meeting.

THE Lucknow Polo Tournament for the Royal Dragoons Cup was concluded on Tuesday afternoon; an uninteresting game ending in a win for the Scouts, who beat the 17th Lancers by 7 goals to 1.

THE Bombay Polo Tournament will begin at Bombay on the 17th February, entries closing on the 1st idem.

THE Half-yearly General Meeting of the Calcutta Kennel Club, was held last Friday evening, Mr. Lewis Medley presiding. The new rules framed by the Committee were adopted, the accounts passed and a good deal of business got through in connection with the show fixed for the 28th and 29th January. A Show Committee was elected to draw up the schedule and make all the necessary arrangements. It was announced, that Mr. A. A. Apcar had presented a special Challenge Cup to the club, and liberal support from other gentlemen had been promised.

The Committee considered the question of the India Kennel Association's classification of dogs and resolved to move the Association to modify the existing rule for the Limit and Novice Class to provide an opportunity for fanciers to import dogs from Home. This modification is much needed as the present regulations absolutely prevent even a dog that has won in a local class from being shown here.

THE Amateur Golf Championship of India, 1909, will be played at Tollygunge and will be decided as follows:—On Friday, 24th December, there will be a qualifying competition of 36 holes by medal play, the sixteen lowest scores in which shall complete by match play (18 holes). The first, second and third rounds will be played on Saturday and Monday, 25th and 27th December, and the final match for the Championship, to consist of 36 holes, on Tuesday, 28th December. The winner will hold for a year the Silver Challenge Cup presented by the Calcutta Golf Club in 1892 (holder D. C. Scroggie) and receive a prize valued at Rs. 150. The runner up will receive a prize valued at Rs. 100. There will also be prizes in the qualifying competition. An open handicap of 18 holes by medal play will take place at Barrackpore from Saturday, 18th to Monday, 27th December. The first prize is the "Asian" Cup, a Silver Challenge Bowl, to be held by the winner for one year and also a small silver replica of the Bowl, presented by the Calcutta Golf Club, Limited, valued at Rs. 100, to become the property of the winner. The second prize is a Cup, valued at Rs. 50 peresented by the Calcutta Golf Club, Limited.

A WIDE circle of friends and acquaintances will learn with deep regret of the death, which took place in London, of Dr. Charles Reid, the famous Rugby football player of the eighties. He has been described as the finest forward of his day, and there are old stagers who still declare that there has not been a better since. He was a man of great stature. Standing well over six feet in height, and weighing more than sixteen stones, he was a terror to his Scottish opponents in club matches and their hero in International engagements. "Charlie" Reid early came into prominence as a football player, for while still a schoolboy at the Edinburgh Academy, he was, in 1881, chosen to play for Scotland. That year he took part in the matches with Ireland and England—Wales and Scotland did not begin their rivalry till two years later—and up to the end of 1888 he never missed an International match. He had in all twenty "caps"—six against England, eight against Ireland, and six against Wales. On several occasions Mr. Reid captained the Scottish side, and a grand leader he was and for many years he was skipper of the Academical fifteen. For a forward he was a most prolific scorer. It is noteworthy that five of the nine Academical forwards of the 1886-67 team, the late Mr. C. Reid, the late Mr. M. C. M'Ewan. Mr. T. W. Irvine, Mr. A. T. Clay, and Mr. T. White, were International men.

THE All-India Hockey Tournament will probably be held at Allahabad during the week from 21st to 26th February next.

WITH regard to poisonous snakes, as other animals there are popular but erroneous ideas. One of these pointed out by a Times correspondent in an interesting article on "The Poison People" is the common belief that snakes sting with their tongues. Still less (though undoubtedly many writers have thought otherwise) does it "wound" with its tail. The venemous snake, indeed, is armed enough with nothing but its fangs, which in some species are erectable at will, as its claws are thrust out by a cat. In most species the poison is conducted down the fang by a small open channel by way of which it travels from the poison sac; but in a few this channel becomes roofed over, so as to make a closed canal emerging only at the very point of the fang; and this, ensuring that the venom will be injected into the very deepest part of the wound, Professor Gadow has justly called "a perfectly devilish contrivance." Another common theory upset is that the rattle snake is as many years old as it has buttons on its tail. It is true that it acquires a new button each time that it changes its skin, but on the rattle becoming of unwieldy length it is cast en bloc and the snake begins to build up a new one. The use of its rattle to a snake is a matter of conjecture but there is no doubt that the rattle is a boon to human beings living in a country inhabited by these creatures. The dread company of poisonous snakes include the Egyptian cerastes, the horned Viper of South Africa, the puff-adder, reputed, quite wrongly, to strike only backwards, and the dreaded Indian daboia; while even more grim are some of the elapine snakes (as opposed to the viperids), which count among their number the cobras, including the asp of the ancients, the South African ringhals, the Australasian death-adder, the small krait, which is responsible for more deaths among the natives of India than the cobra, and above all the terrible hamadryad, that "scourge of the jungle" which, deadly poisonous, grows to a length of 14 feet, lives largely in the trees but takes to water readily, and, like the fer de lance has the reputation of assuming the aggressive, even against man. Happily the hamadryad is rare and in common with other king snakes confines its diet mostly to snakes. Snakes have also been eaten by man both as food and medicine. In the handling of snakes both natives of India, in spite of all the chicanery which is mixed up with snake-charming, and, even more conspicuously, perhaps, the Moqui Indians of North America, acquire a dexterity and apparent immunity from danger, which seem unattainable by white men; and perplexing tales are told of the magical efficacy of snake-stones, as used by Indian snake-catchers, in the cure of the bites of both cobra and krait, on authority so distinguished that science with all its superciliousness cannot altogether disregard them. But as a general rule it may be laid down that for man or mongoose, the only certain safety lies in keeping outside the range of being bitten

MR. ROOSEVELT has been accused of rather wholesale slaughter of big game in his hunting expedition in East Africa and some people have been led to suppose that his expedition was rather in the nature of an execution of animals unattended with personal danger or excitement. That this was by no means so is shown in the graphic account of some of his adventures which Mr. Roosevelt has contributed to the Scribner. This is how he describes the killing of a lion which they had chased into a hollow. "Now, an elderly man with a varied past which includes rheumatism, does not vault lightly into the saddle; as his sons, for instance, can; and I had already made up my mind that in the event of the lion's charging it would be wise for me to trust to straight powder rather than to try to scramble into the saddle and get under way in time. . . I could still not see the lion when I knelt, but he was now standing up, looking first at one group of horses and then at the other, his tail lashing to and fro, his head held low, and his lips dropped over his mouth in peculiar fashion, while his harsh and savage growling rolled thunderously over the plain. Seeing Simba (his gun-bearer) and me on foot, he turned towards us, his tail lashing quicker and quicker. Resting my elbow on Simba's bent shoulder, I took steady aim and pressed the trigger; the bullet went in between the neck and shoulder, and the lion fell over on his side, one foreleg in the air. He recovered in a moment and stood up, evidently very sick, and once more faced me, growling hoarsely. I think he was on the eve of charging. I fired again at once, and this bullet broke his back just behind the shoulders; and with the next I killed him outright, after we had gathered round him.

SINCE the last mail left England the hunting season has fully begun. It is reported that for the first time for some years regular hunting is this year starting under conditions more suggestive of mid-winter than the first month of the regular season. As a matter of fact the plough in the vales, when it is not actually under water, is exceptionally holding, and lately fine weather sportsmen have pulled long faces as they watched the lashing rain and trees bending ominously to the storm. The boisterous winds, too, have been against sport. The last week of cub-hunting was one of catchy scent, and only here and there were hounds able to push their foxes along in the open. It seems that the hunting people who usually are clamouring for rain at this time of the year have all they require and more. But in spite of weather, even an uncertain factor in England, the prospects of good sport are satisfactory. The barbed-wire question seems likely to be the cause of trouble again this season. efforts made to get the obnoxious wire fencing taken down or plainly marked every season there are always many accidents at the result of its use. Obviously it is not the wire which can be plainly perceived by the rider that causes the mischief, rather is it those small strands, which are used to repair fences with. These are often forgotten and overlooked at the beginning of the season when the wire is being removed. And horses charge their fences blindly ignorant of the danger lurking within, and often with fatal results.

Modern French duels are usually suggestive of the ridiculous rather than the tragic. But of the many comic encounters with swords or pistols that have taken place between French statesmen, editors and others resulting in a slight scratch, or more often no wounds, and the happy reconciliation of the combatants, surely none was ever more funny than the affair reported by last mail, and which, from its treatment by Punch, is likely to gain French duellists the name of "Absent Minded Beggars" in future. For one of the duellists in this affair failed to fire, and actually gave as his reason that he had forgotten to do so. Another feature was the use of umbrellas. It rained so hard that the seconds found it necessary to load the pistols under umbrellas, and they walked about examining the ground with umbrellas up, and trousers tucked well above their ankles. Umbrellas too were used to measure off the distance by sticking the points into the sodden grass. When for a moment one of the combatants, M. Bernstein, author of the play "La Grippe," closed his umbrella and walked about in the rain, Professor Pozzi, the eminent surgeon, who was assisting him, was afraid his potential patient might catch cold and strongly advised him to hoist the umbrella, and not to run more risks than were necessary. Presently a distance of 30 paces having been measured out, the principals closed their umbrellas and took up positions. On the word being given, M. Chevassu fired, his shot passing over M. Bernstein's head, and Bernstein instead of firing back placed the pistol behind his back. His weapon was then taken from him by one of his seconds and discharged. On being asked why he did not fire, M. Bernstein shrugged his shoulders and replied "I forgot."

There may be a fight between Jeffries and Johnson, but one is never sure till they are in the ring nowadays. The two men met at New York on the 30th ultimo, and agreed to box for the heavy-weight championship of the world before the club offering the largest inducements. According to the terms of the agreement they will fight forty-five rounds or more. The purse will be divided, 75 per cent. going to the winner. Each man will deposit 5,000 dollars forfeit and an additional 5,000 as a side bet. The fight will take place not later than 5th July 1910, under the Marquis of Queensberry rules, with five-ounce gloves. If it eventuates in something beyond the usual newspaper wrangle it should provide a good show.

I don't think, writes our London correspondent, that the "jumping bean" figured among the Indian imports, when I lived and moved and had my beer in among you, but it may, if Mr. Cyril Maude's great discovery has the far-reaching effect it threatens to have. This versatile play-actor has invented a new game suggested to him by the possibilities of our friend the jumping bean as an instrument of gambling. He has proclaimed the fact in the following letter to a London paper:—"Winter and the Budget are close upon us—a dreary outlook; but in conjunction with some friends I have just made a discovery which may, I think, prove welcome. It consists in a new game, and, if you please, a gambling one, and so great has been our amusement that we feel our "discovery" should at once become known to "the depressed."

This game can be played by any number of players, and requires no expensive paraphernalia. Take a large warm plate, draw a series of ever-widening circles upon it with your fountain pen, deal out to each player a jumping bean previously marked with a splotch of colour or colours. Place them in the centre circle, and let the owner of the winner—i.e., the first outside the outermost ring—take the pool. There never has been a race game to compare with it."

Now in India you are usually too full of other beans in the cold weather to find time for the serious contemplation of the jumping variety. Besides the little beggars jump best in the spring when a young bean's fancy lightly turns to doing his best in the way of saltatory effort, so to speak. It would, therefore, hardly be a winter game for India, being, I should say, more suitable for that season when the long, long Indian day and a high state of the mercury in the thermometer coincide. In such case it will be hardly necessary to warm the plate, as the discoverer directs: it might then be played in the verandah with a supply of the best young Mexican jumpers and a plate, with, of course, the usual long arm chair, peg and cheeroot accessories. The only physical effort is the making of the pool, and the raking of it in by the winners, the busy beans do the rest. Why rain gambling should be a mere circumstance to it!

Messrs. Murray and Company, Limited, Lucknow, have just favoured us with a copy of their latest catalogue, which has now reached its 110th edition. This comprehensive list sets forth in attractive fashion the innumerable goods stocked by these universal providers, who have recently abolished the old system of charging alternative rates for those who wish to take credit. The system of monthly bills will be continued, and they appeal to their customers to assist them by paying cash on presentation of accounts.

The annual meeting of the Committee of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association was held on Friday last, with the President, Mr. A. A. Apcar, in the chair. The accounts were passed and the following officers elected for the coming meeting, which will probably be held on the 19th February:—Executive Committee: Messrs. W. J. Bradshaw, J. F. Greig W. C. Burke, N. A. Macleod, M. Remfrey and F. H. Reynolds, with Dr. J. H. Gray once more as Honorary Secretary.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 5th November 1909.

Most of us, I am sure, must regret the penchant that gallant sailor, Lord, Charles Beresford, has for rushing into print. Indeed his predilection for this sort of advertisement suggests at times that he should make use of the hoardings in our public thoroughfares and take his place among the theatrical posters and those that treat of domestic and other commodities.

His latest effort is certainly unedifying. In the course of several sweeping statements, couched in his well-known vigorous style, he has just told the British public that several officers have been penalised and prejudiced in various severe ways, because they had recently given evidence on the subject of our naval unpreparedness for war and the condition of the Navy generally, as criticised by him.

Mr. Asquith, questioned in the House of Commons, said, the correspondence had been published without giving him an opportunity to reply to Lord Charles Beresford's latest letter. This reply was written last Saturday, and it is now issued for publication, together with a letter from the First Lord of the Admiralty. In a subsequent rejoinder Lord Charles reiterates his accusations, and expresses himself content to submit to the "tribunal of the nation" the charges preferred against him as a naval office. The sequel to this is a further letter from the Prime Minister, enclosing a long reply from the First Lord of the Admiralty, and finally, a rejoinder from Lord Charles himself. Mr. Asquith ends by expressing his "profound regret that an officer of your experience and distinction should have allowed himself to become responsible for the publication of such a letter as that which you addressed to me on the 23rd instant—a proceeding which I find it difficult to reconcile with the best traditions of a great Service." Lord Charles, on his part, answers Mr. McKenna in detail, and is content to submit to the "tribunal of the nation" the "grave charges" against his character as a naval officer.

To all Englishmen, who love their country this correspondence provides extremely painful reading. One can only deeply regret that Lord Charles should find himself able to believe that the careers of officers were prejudiced by the mere fact of their having served under him, and still more deeply that he should have made this belief public. Really, as one paper puts it, we shall expect to hear next that the Admiralty have scrapped a battleship because it had hoisted Lord Charles's flag!

By way of helping us to bear up against this precipitate appearance of winter the cheerful statistician has lately loomed large in the daily press. In all conscience most of this pabulum is dry enough to counteract the wet outside, yet some of it is not entirely without interest. There are, for instance, some figures relating to the past year's work in the Post Office, which afford amusement and instruction. I am possibly incorrect in the belief that India has a better managed post and telegraph service than we have here; (at any rate both departments offer more conveniences to the public than is the case in the United Kingdom), and judging by the figures above alluded to the Indian public use the post and telegraph office, somewhat more intelligently than we do in England. For example, according to the Postmaster-General's annual report just issued, cash and bank-notes worth £16,065 and other securities worth £606,325 were found in letters which the Post Office was unable to deliver last year. And these figures do not include the value of remittances in letters which were returned unopened to the senders. The number of packets posted without any address and of articles found loose in the post was 427,824. Included among these were bank-notes worth £1,435 and cheques and other securities worth £24,076. Altogether there were 30,509,000 undelivered packets.

One extracts some comfort from the statement that the picture postcard craze is over. There has been a gradual decline since 1904-05. The waning of the "Limerick" craze had an effect on the issues of postal orders.

Further statistics. We dwellers south of the Tweed are very poor in heroes, at least in the class of hero who gets into the Daily Mirror, and is certificated, be-medalled and advertised. Judging by the report of the Carnegie Hero Fund for the past year, our English national pride should be lowered. Out of eighty-eight hall-marked, certificated heroes forty-two were Scotchmen, whereas England, with over eight times the population of the "stern and wild" regions, had only thirty-six. I fear it will be no use saying that Scotland is the sort of place that it takes a hero to live in, yet possibly the fact that the fund is administered from Dunfermline may have something to do with the matter. Or can it be that the English hero is so modest and retiring that you can chase him with a certificate and a cheque without ever being able to catch him up? I think, perhaps, that plaster fits the sore place better than any other!

According to my evening paper "the eyes of the world have been on Bermondsey this week." May be. I must confess my own have not been turned particularly in that direction. It appears that there has been an election down that way, and that a gentleman (with "Piccadilly weepers") named with Dumphreys, has come out on the top of the poll by a big majority. A huge Unionist victory and the death knell of the "poor man's budget" we are told. It appears that the whiskered Dumphreys is employed in Pyrke's stores—I hope an opportunity was found to get rid of their entire stock of "Election eggs" by the way—and, of course, the Suffragettes made the polling day the occasion to get a look in. Two of them—as repulsive looking as they were evil minded, if their published portraits do not libel them—managed to throw some corrosive fluid into two ballot boxes, and incidentally into the eye of one of the returning officers. They were arrested of course.

Now this sort of thing is sheer anarchy and nothing less. "Give us what we want or we will make government impossible"—that is the Suffragettes' cry, and if every politician with a grievance were to adopt it a pretty mess we should be in! I may be very dense, but when a woman endeavours to invalidate an election in order to show that she is a fit and proper person to take part in it, I cannot quite see her argument. The man who denies woman a vote because she is a woman is just about as logical as the woman who thinks she ought to be given one for making herself a public nuisance. Perhaps the new Suffrage journal edited by Mrs. T. P. O'Connor may have a quietening effect, since every woman who puts down her penny may claim to have got The Vote.

Dr. Cust, who has just died in his eighty-ninth year, was an Indian Civil Servant who in his day had been the pride of Haileybury, leaving the East India College with a fair instalment of those languages of which in later years he had mastered some sixteen. Although a man of peace, he had seen wild war in the '40's, and could count himself a veteran of Mudki, Firozshah, and Sobraon. That he survived the Mutiny was due to his filial piety.

In order to see his father once more he surrendered an early promotion to be Magistrate and Collector of Delhi. The man who stepped into his shoes was murdered on the first day of the revolt.

The Custs are a long-lived race. Dr. Cust could remember seeing George IV. dining in Windsor Park, and few living people can share that memory, for the King, in his later years, had a morbid objection to sightseers, and drove his little pony-chaise by ways from which the public was carefully shut out. Dr. Cust's grandfather, born in the year before Prince Charlie landed in Scotland, died leaving a widow who was alive when her grandson was administering an Indian province. Now a numerous and distinguished family, the Custs were founded by a Lincolnshire yeoman whose descendants made their way upward by their sound wits as much as by their extraordinary success in discovering and marrying heiresses. The many varieties of double-barrelled surnames borne by them—Brownlow-Cust, Hume-Cust, Cockayne-Cust and Egerton-Cust—all indicate some of the occasions on which they have added other estates to their paternal lands, the last notable addition being the great Bridgwater property which fell to them as the prize of a famous law-suit.

In the new number of the Fortnightly, Mr. Alan Mackinnon has a chatty article on "The O.U.D.S.—After Twenty-Five Years." The Oxford University Dramatic Society came into being in Michaelmas term, 1884, the leading spirits in its foundation being Mr. Arthur Bourchier (who had already won much notice in amateur circles by his Shylock), Mr. Mackinnon, the Hon'ble James Adderley, and Mr. W. L. Courtney. Part I. of "King Henry IV." was chosen for the initial performance, with Bourchier as such a fiery Hotspur that he nearly did for Mackinnon as Prince Hal, the Hon'ble Gilbert Coleridge as Falstaff, and E. H. Clark, Mitchell Innes, Hugh Spottiswood, H. V. Page (the cricket captain), Lady St. Leonards, and Lady Edward Churchill in the cast. Jowett gave the enterprise his countenance, and showed keen interest in the preparation. When he was told that the management had not found a Mrs. Quickly, he drily remarked that there was plenty in Oxford. The prologue was written by Mr. G. N. Curzon (now Lord Curzon of Kedleston) and spoken by the present Archbishop of York. "Twelfth Night," with Mr. E. H. Clark as Malvolio and Bourchier as the Clown, was the second venture, and then in the following year they tackled "Alcestis," partly with a view to conciliating the authorities, and partly with a view to profit. The latter expectation was realised, for the "Alcestis" drew brimming houses and made a profit of over £200. The cast included Mr. Bourchier as Death, Mr. A. E. W. Mason (now M.P.) as Hercules, and Mr. Coningsby Disraeli. Since then the society has had a prosperous course, and has been fruitful in the discovery of new talent. Mr. Mackinnon thinks that its general influence on its members has been very beneficial. "It gives him (the undergraduate) courage and confidence in facing crowds; it improves his elocution, and gives ease to his carriage and deportment. Old members of the O.U.D.S. who have become prominent in public life are all agreed upon this, and themselves strikingly illustrate its truth. Of the intellectual advantages of the great impetus the O.U.D.S. has given to the study of Shakespeare at Oxford I will say nothing. It is too manifest to need insistence."

Last Saturday afternoon one of the most extraordinary sights ever witnessed in London was to be seen in Trafalgar Square. The statue of General Gordon looked down on many hundreds of starving ex-soldiers, who were holding a demonstration in order to draw the attention of the War Office to their pitiable state.

At 12-30 Mr. Haldane received a deputation at the War Office. Ex-Sergeant-Major Edmundson said:—"This, sir, is a serious business. With 50,000 of the ordinary unemployed we should be useless, but give me one-tenth of that number of men who can drill and march and obey and we can do something. And I tell you, sir, these men shall not starve this winter. This is our bark—our next move will be to bite!"

Mr. Haldane replied that all that possibly could be done was done. That the War Office had provided work for 24,000 old soldiers last year. "We all risk unemployment," said he, "I may soon be out of work myself. But I shall try to get a good character and then, perhaps, I shall be taken on again!"

Mr. Haldane went on to say that undoubtedly there were many men of good character and good education who could not get work owing to trade depression and other causes. But the War Department did more for its servants than any other. The Post Office took many ex-soldiers and sailors and the Prisons Department took them as well. In all the establishments under War Office control old soldiers were exclusively used. He would do his best for the men.

During the interview with Mr. Haldane one significant statement was made by Ex-Sergeant-Major Edmundson, who pointed out that young men were taken into the Army at the age of eighteen, and the Government had the best years of their lives; he considered it an obligation on the part of the country to provide work for these men when they came out of the Army. "If you want an Army on the cheap, let everyone come to defend the Empire and have conscription!"

Mr. Haldane proceeded to say that "the War Office was doing its best to recognise its moral obligations."

In conclusion, Mr. Edmundson said, after a rather heated conversation: "I do not mind telling you that unless something is done I do not know what is going to happen this winter!"

In the square the answer that the War Office did its best was "booed." Great cheering followed a speaker's words when he said:—"If you let your wives and children starve you deserve to be flogged!"

As I close this letter the death of Mr. W. P. Frith, R.A., is announced. The veteran artist died yesterday at his house in St. John's Wood, aged ninety-one. The first thought which comes on hearing of the death of William Powell Frith is not regret for the painter of the "Derby Day." It is that sense of loss which touches us when we know that a familiar name is gone from among the elders of the people. So long as Frith was alive, Frith who was at an easel in old King William's days, Frith who wrote himself A.R.A. in the days when Dr. Pusey and the corn laws were popular bogeys, the middle-aged among us could count ourselves on the side of youth. De mortuis nil nisi bonum. Public taste in art has changed much since Frith first became famous and the ardent souls of the seventies said all the disparaging things that need be said of his style and methods. After all, it is too late to say that Frith painted nothing better than Friths, and the immense crowds that hustled the policemen in front of the double rails to get a glimpse of "Derby Day" so long ago, are beyond the rebuke of what we flatter ourselves is our modern superior taste.

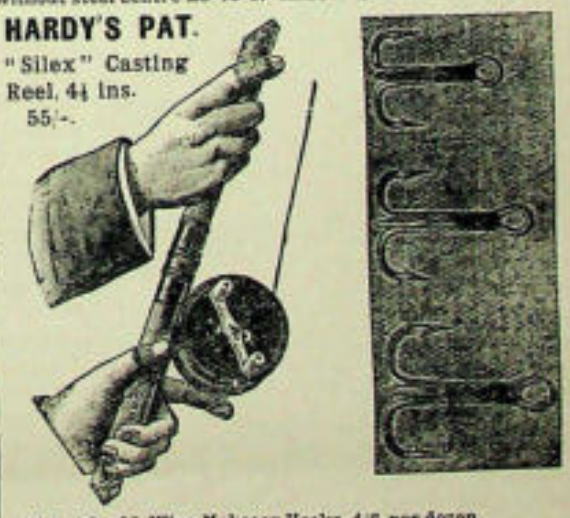
TIGER SHOOTING IN THE SUNDERBUNDS.

When I decided to spend two months leave in the Sunderbunds and try and bag a tiger, I experienced the greatest difficulty in getting any information as to the necessary bunderbust, or the character of the shooting which obtains down there. A short account of my experiences may therefore prove of interest both to those who are thinking of making the trip for themselves and to those who have heard wonderful stories of the rapacious tigers which inhabit, what appears to be, this little known hunting ground. I shall refrain from any personal narrative and confine myself to such information as I was able to glean as to the habits of the beast, the best methods of circumventing him, and the preliminary bunderbast, which has to be arranged before one can start in pursuit of him.

My shooting ground was about two days journey in country boat from Port Canning, and though I believe that my account applies equally to any other part of the Sunderbunds, it must be borne in mind that in the lower reaches of the river cultivation and villages are a good deal scarcer.



As there seems to be much misconception as to the nature of the jungle which exists in the Sunderbunds I shall commence by briefly describing it It is formed of low—lying country intersected by innumerable creeks, some as large as fair sized rivers and others but a few yards in breadth. The land is chiefly wooded either by a low straggling tree with its lower branches only just above ground level, or else by a species of thick stemmed and very close growing palm shrub. Through the former it is only with great difficulty one can make any headway whilst through the latter it is impossible to do so unless one carries an axe and cuts a path through. No grass grows on the surface of the ground, which is mud, more or less moist on account of the salt-water which periodically submerges it. Dotted about along the edges of the land at intervals of several miles are small patches of high ground, seldom bigger than three hundred yards square and generally much smaller. These are covered with high grass and usually have two or three big trees growing upon them. Twice during the 24 hours the whole country, except these high patches, is inundated by the tide.

A considerable portion of what used to be jungle has been reclaimed, that is, surrounded by high bunds to exclude the salt water, and put under rice cultivation. Such lands are called "abad" and are the property of different zemindars and trading companies. The natives who live there are chiefly Uriahs.

As to the game it is no exaggeration to say that tigers abound and also pig and cheetal deer. These latter are not worth shooting for trophies, as they carry very poor horns, but for the pot they are most excellent. Besides these mentioned I believe that there hardly exists in the jungle proper another species of furred or haired animal. The rhino are all shot out, and only one herd of buffalo are said to have survived. I did see a troop of red Bengal monkeys, but, as they were close to an "abad," I fancy that they were only making an excursion. In the "abads" there are a few leopard—called by the natives chotta sher and not cheetah, which they think refers to cheetal deer—and of course any amount of jackal.

During the months I was there, September and October, the only game birds to be obtained were red jungle fowl, which were plentiful but hard to get at, and curlew. Of the latter there were a lot of very young birds which were most palatable. Duck come in later; but as for snipe I could find none, though the cut paddy in the "abads" seemed ideal country for them.

It is impossible to make a good bag of any game without knowing something of its habits so I will relate what I was able to find out about those of the Sunder bund tiger. Unlike tiger shooting elsewhere the place where it waters affords no clue as to its vicinity or perambulations. He drinks the salt water of the river, of which indeed he must have a surfeit when the jungles are submerged at high tide; nor could I discover that he had any preference for fresh water when available. In one patch of high ground habitually frequented by a couple of tigers, of which I subsequently shot one, there was a hollow containing a small quantity of rain water. Though I daily looked for their pugs never once did I see that they had watered there, and yet there could not have been any other fresh water within several miles.

There are no well defined game paths leading to water as one finds in other jungles, and although one may constantly come across pug marks in a soft soil there is no reason why the beast should take the same direction next day nor even on any other day during the next month. Anybody unacquainted with the country may be tempted to ask, why if the soil is so soft, not follow up the pugs until the animal is tracked down? The answer is simply that the land is so interspersed with broad nullahs that even if the impenetrable nature of the jungle did not put an end to pursuit these would soon do so.

The places, however, which they constantly make for are the patches of high ground, which I have already mentioned. Here they can escape the high tide when so inclined, can sharpen their claws on the big trees, can lie down in comfort and in good cover, and also stand a very good chance of picking up some unwary deer who is feeding on the grass. Indeed twice during each month, at full moon and new moon, it must be imperative for them to seek high ground to escape from the water which would otherwise drown them. It is for this reason that any villager will tell you that at full moon some particular patch of high ground in the vicinity will be crowded with tiger. As a rule, when the time comes, one finds that there are none. The truth of the matter is I think that there are many of these elevated spots in the interior of the jungle quite unknown and inaccessible even to the natives to which the tiger resort.

Sometimes a tiger or a pair of tigers will appropriate one of these pieces of high ground as their own and make it their head-quarters. They must of course leave it for days together in search of food, as the game around will otherwise leave or become too wary to be caught, but they will return periodically and remain for three or four days at a time. To find such a place is the next thing to bagging your tiger.

Other pieces of high ground seem to be used much as a dak bungalow by any traveller who may be passing, and it depends on good luck if you strike the opportune moment.

It is usual, I understand, for people shooting in the Sunderbunds to sit up over a live goat. To confine oneself to this is, I think, a mistake; it restricts one's chances so very much. If one is fortunate enough to find such a place as I have described, which is the headquarters of a particular tiger or pair of tigers, and he or they are at home, then it is an excellent plan. If not one may sit up twenty times over a goat and not get the chance of a shot.

The best plan is to find three or four pieces of high ground within striking distance of each other, tie up an old cow on each, and then anchor one's own boat in a central spot between them. It will be found that one's time is pretty fully occupied in visiting the baits each day; any spare time can be employed in trying to find new places. If one wishes one can, of course, sit up of an evening over a goat on the offchance of a shot.

About tying up baits there seems to exist some difference of opinion amongst shikaries in India as to which of two is the best method. Either to build a machan and then tie up the bait close to it, and so securely that a tiger cannot pull it away, or else to tie it up with a cord which will be broken and the carcase dragged off, after which a machan can be erected over it. The argument for the former is that there is no chance of disturbing a tiger, which may be lying up close, by the noise incurred when building a machan, and the argument for the latter that a tiger has more confidence to return if he has deposited the remains in a place of his own choosing. Whatever may be the merits of each, there can be no doubt as to the course which must be adopted in the Sunderbunds. The machan must first be made and then the animal tied up so that a tiger is unable to pull it away. If this is not done the carcase will be pulled either into dense jungle which is impracticable for a machan, or else into very tall grass on the high grounds where it is completely hidden. A cow is best tied up by the neck and a buffalo by the legs. Whatever you tie your animals to, be careful to see that it is strong enough to resist the strain of pulling; a tiger can exercise extraordinary power in this direction.

When tying up a goat I have a piece of advice to offer which may not come amiss to shikaries in other parts of India who sit up for leopards. Goats, like human beings, are some born talkative and others the reverse. Nothing is more disheartening than sitting up over a goat which, having nibbled all the grass around in silence, lies down, and with a grunt of contentment, settles himself for a comfortable sleep. On the other hand a goat which gives tongue, so that it can be heard for a mile around, fills the soul with hope. To ensure this latter desideratum I adopt the plan of keeping the goat hungry all day, and then when tying him up also muzzling him with a loose net, made of string or muslin. If a little favourite fodder be thrown before him, he will give voice to his chagrin in no unmistakeable style.

The importance of a well made and well placed machan cannot be over-estimated in this sort of shooting. Its erection should not be casually left to coolies or native shikaries, but should be personally supervised. It should be made as roomy as possible, as a cramped position only leads to movement and, as a consequence, noise. Round each exposed side should be two rails, the top one of a correct height to form a rest for the rifle when one is in position, sitting on some raised object such as a rolled valise. All round on the outside of the rails and fastened to them should be tied leaves so as to form a screen. For this purpose the leaves of a small palm, plentiful in the Sunderbunds, is best. If the leaves of other trees are used they soon dry up and then the slightest movement will make them rustle. Whatever leaves or grass are used they should not be placed too thick, but daylight allowed to be seen through them in places, as would be natural when looking at the foliage of a tree. Do not—as native shikaries are so fond of doing—cut off or bind the leaves level with the top rail so as to form a clearly defined outline. A machan so constructed is conspicuous at the nearest glance. The screen should have an irregular outline which will be found to blend with the tree in which it is placed.

As regards the placing of a machan it may be of some guide if I relate a circumstance which has attended the return to their kill of each of the tigers I have been fortunate enough to bag, and which I believe to be the general rule, though I have not seen it stated elsewhere. As is well known a tiger does not return straight to a kill but sits down some way off, watching it and the surrounding country. I have found that it has always returned in that direction from which it could get the furtherest off view of the carcase, even at some apparent inconvenience to itself. I should therefore recommend that this approach be well commanded by the machan.

Sitting up in a machan after dusk becomes impossible unless some precaution is taken against the persecution of the mosquitos. For this I recommend the Army and Navy Stores' "Preventive Mixture" which has to be rubbed on to the skin and which I have always found efficacious, though the treatment has to be repeated every three or four hours.

We now come to the necessary bunderbast which has to be arranged before starting upon one's trip.

A houseboat will have to be engaged; this can only be obtained in Calcutta where they ply for hire, usually at the ghat near the Law Courts or at Kidderpore. The hire is about Rs. 150 per month. They are very comfortable and consist of two rooms and a bathroom. The crew consists of seven men. Besides this a big dinghy must be taken for servants and cooking, which is not allowed on the houseboat, at a cost of about Rs. 35 per month. I also most strongly recommend another boat, which should be as light as possible and take four rowers—only two need be engaged with it as men from the houseboat can help to man it—for quick transport from one place to another, with or against the tide. This is especially necessary when many animals are tied out. The cost may be calculated at about Rs. 25 per month. Provisions for the whole time one intends to be out must be taken. Fowls and eggs are sometimes available but cannot be relied upon. Water quite good enough for cooking purposes can be replenished from villages but drinking water should be taken to last throughout and stored in tank or big ghuras. Thin cord for binding machans, stout rope for tying up baits, and an axe or two should not be forgotten. A deck chair and a large umbrella to keep off the rays of the sun are especially useful.

Shikaries are not of such importance to a shooting trip in the Sunderbunds as elsewhere, but there are a few recognised ones, one of whom it is as well to engage. The Police or Forest people, at Port Canning or other starting point, can generally put one on the track of a man. All that one really wants is somebody to show you the high ground, and it is then easy to see if it is used by tiger or not. There are generally men in each village who can do this. The pay of a Shikari, I should say, is about Rs. 15 per month, with bukshish for each tiger killed.

As will be seen the trip is not an inexpensive one, but the Government reward for each tiger killed is very liberal. Cows are extremely hard to obtain locally and at fair prices, as most of the villagers are Hindus with religious scruples which are not to be overcome. The correct price of an old cow or bullock, past work, should be about Rs. 8. The best way, I think, would be to bring cows, or preferably buffaloes, from Calcutta in country boat, the boat being dismissed on arrival at destination, and the cows put out and left in the places selected for them, any surplus ones being quartered in some village. They must of course be fed and watered each morning. It is not necessary to carry more fodder than they require on the journey, as grass can be cut for them from the high places in the jungle. If it is subsequently desired to move them this may be done, one by one, in your own boats, or else in a country boat hired from one of the villages. The price of a fairly big boat locally is Rs. 5.

The success of a trip must largely depend, I think, upon having a plan of operations clearly defined before starting on one's campaign. In order to do this, a man—if possible acquainted with the Sunderbunds—should be sent down at least 15 days beforehand to engage a Shikari, settle upon a central base, and inspect all probable ground in the vicinity. Otherwise one may well sail aimlessly about for a fortnight or more before finding good ground from which to commence operations.

As to the pleasures of a shikar trip in the Sunderbunds in comparison with those of a shoot in the hills or plains of India, there can be, I think, no two opinions. In the Sunderbunds there was no variety of game, and one is denied the fascination of camp life. Even the most ardent lover of nature must find it hard to really enjoy himself when worming his way, with neat clothes, through almost impenetrable jungle, or wading over his boots deep in squelching mud. On the other hand for anybody who is intent only on bagging his tiger, or tigers, I believe there is no better hunting ground in India.

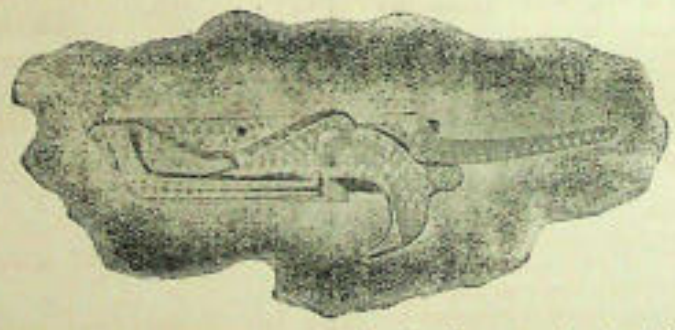
THE IMPROVED WESTLEY RICHARDS'S LOCKS.

TESTIMONY to the interest which is being aroused by detachable locks for shot-guns, is afforded by the descriptions of new devices of this kind which have recently appeared in these columns. It is to Messrs. Westley Richards and Company that the introduction some years ago of detachable locks for their Anson and Deeley hammerless guns is due. The method they adopt, of pivotting the limbs of the lock upon plates, which plates, with the mounted lock-work, are inserted into slots in the gun body and secured in position by means of a cover plate, is now well-known. An improvement of some importance has recently been made by which the cover plate is hinged in front of the trigger guard. Instead of coming off altogether, it opens like the lid of a box. There is thus no possibility of its being mislaid or dropped and replaced in a gritty or dusty state. With the aid of the illustrations details may be very briefly indicated.



The inner side of the cover plate is recessed so that it covers the front extremity of the trigger plate, the remaining portion of the plate, of full thickness, lying over the slots which contain the two locks, and the space between, where the barrel lumps fit. Externally the plate is flush, presenting an entirely unbroken surface for engraving. At the rear end the cover plate is pivotted to the trigger plate, and at the front end is secured by a snap catch. This snap catch, as in the earlier models, lies under the fore-end, entirely out of sight. There is no indication whatever, discernable to the eye, that the locks are detachable at all. To open the cover plate the fore-end is removed, and the head of the snap catch is pressed in with the fingers. Then a slight pulling pressure frees the plate, which flies open, under the influence of a spring, in the manner of a watch case lid. In closing, no manipulation of the catch is necessary, as it secures itself in the manner of a latch or snap bolt. This improvement gives the finishing touch to a mechanism of which on its first introduction the Indian Field said "the simplicity and the advantages of this invention are such that one involuntarily enquires why nobody thought of it before."

In the locks themselves, two improvements are made. One is the provision of a heel to the internal tumbler, so that the upper part of it assumes the familiar shape of an external hammer seen in profile. This enables the lock to be cocked with the thumb when it is out of the gun. If after taking it out, one presses on the sear tail and so releases the tumbler from bent, there is no difficulty whatever in re-cocking for re-inserting the locks. The user of the gun has to remember that the locks must be cocked before they are replaced. There is no difficulty about that. One readily sees that, as striker and tumbler are all in one, the striker must be drawn back by cocking the tumbler before the locks can be either taken out or put in.

A further improvement which does not, so to speak, explain itself, but which is perhaps of greater importance than either of the others, is that by which the weight of the pull off has been reduced. In the illustration of the detached lock, in the cocked position, it will be seen that the end of the compressed V shaped mainspring lies above the pivot on which the tumbler turns, while the bent (the little groove in which the sear nose fits) lies below. The spring presses in front of the pivot, and the sear gripe behind it, one pulling against the other. Now, if we imagine for a moment that the operative arm of the mainspring were lengthened until its power were applied directly over the pivot, then its force would be exerted on the pivot itself. There would be no strain on the sear nose, and if the trigger were pulled the tumbler would still remain in situ. In the new locks this principle is so applied as to insure that the pull upon the sear nose shall be comparatively light. Directly the sear is levered out of bent by the trigger the spring pressure on the hammer increases, the mainspring sliding forward as the extremity of the operative arm of the spring follows the curve of the outer radius of a circle struck from the centre of the pivot, and reaching its maximum power as the striker hits the cap and fires the cartridge.

Taking the old form of construction of the A. and D. lock, and using the same mainspring in the new one the following results have been obtained by the makers:—Weight of mainspring, weighing from tumbler nose, when tumbler is uncocked: Old system 13lbs. full; New system 10lbs full. Weight of mainspring, weighing from tumbler nose when tumbler is at cock:—Old system 9lbs. bare; New system 24lbs. full. Weight of trigger pull, on sear tail, to realise sear from bent:—Old system 4lbs; New system 2lbs.

The pull on the sear tail, which releases the tumbler, represents the weight (or pressure) needed, to overcome, first the resistance of the sear spring and second the resistance of the mainspring, such pressure being exerted by way of the long leverage secured by the sear tail. By reducing the proportion of the initial pressure of the fully cramped mainspring which is exerted on the sear, one reduces also the pressure which is needed to free the sear. Thus the locks may either be made additionally secure with a pull off of normal weight, or the present standard of security may be maintained with the pull off reduced as much as 50 per cent. below the normal.

The gun which Messrs. Westley Richards and Company have sent for report and trial is a single trigger ejector, with the detachable locks, the pull off of which is actually reduced to 1½lbs. for the right lock and the left slightly more. This gun handles delightfully, and although the pulls are lighter than there is any real need for they seem to be perfectly safe, and naturally they are very quick and pleasant. The makers state that this same gun has been subjected to severe tests in many other hands last season, with entirely satisfactory results.

This improvement is one which is certainly of very great importance in connection with double rifles. Many sportsmen in India and elsewhere have a decided preference for pulls of rifles of from 3 to 3½lbs. With a heavy weapon shooting big charges of powder this does not leave much margin for wear and safety. At the same time, to have a shot go wide, after perhaps a long stalk with almost a certainty that the chance will not recur, is a potent argument in favour of having a rifle that will answer instantaneously to the pressure of the finger. In the case of bigger game, a light pull may make all the difference between killing and wounding. With rifles there is not quite the same proportion of advantage in the reduction of weight of pulls as is secured in the case of shot-guns, but the benefit is still very material. Using the new form of construction, a pull off of 3lbs. on a double rifle would be equal to a-5lb. pull off under the old system, light pulls being thus secured with a very ample margin of security.

As Messrs Westley Richards and Company, make so many different rifles for use in India, there is an abundance of choice, either inclusive or exclusive of the double barrelled arms to which the present improvement applies. Their .318 bore accelerated Express, one of the most widely used of all modern rifles, is made with double barrels. Like the .375 and the new .425 magazine rifle, it shoots a rimless cartridge. These calibres, and other well-known bores taking rimmed cartridges, are all made with double barrels as well as single, and to all of them the lightened pulls can be applied.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Second Day, Saturday, 20th November 1909.

A MONSTER attendance to-day—not even standing room in the large grand stand. It was a bad day for bookmakers, the favourites in almost all cases coming in. Fifteen faced the starter in the Army Cup, Munshi, Pasha and Poniard being favourites, though private telegrams from Bombay advised backers to put money on Young Lomond and The Monster. These two, however, were quite out of it. Munshi was backed most, and at one time Munshi looked like winning, but Poniard admirably ridden by Mr. Charrington, who is still "shaky" after his recent spill at the hurdles, came in first. Results:—

THE ARAB HANDICAP.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A handicap for Arab ponies 14-2 and under. 1,000 yards.

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

THE last day's proceedings were chiefly remarkable for mudlarking and the consolation prize for Sir Martin. The Meeting on its concluding day resembled the man of whom it is written that nothing in his life became him so well as his manner of leaving it. Results:—

It is surprising

how many people there are, who, while taking the greatest pains to keep their bodies clean, yet neglect the most important part—their mouth and teeth. This is much to be deplored when it is considered that the teeth have such important functions to perform, the chief of which is the proper mastication of the food, on which the conduct of the digestive organs so largely depends. If, therefore, the teeth are not kept clean and free from decay, the food which should go to nourish and strengthen the body cannot be digested as it should be.

How do we set about attaining this desired end? The problem has been solved in an absolutely satisfactory manner, by rinsing the mouth with the antiseptic dentifrice Odol, which is the best dentifrice and mouth-wash that science has yet invented, and the only one recognised by the scientific world that will protect the teeth from decay, and which acts not only during the time of application but for hours after use.

NEWBURY.

The effects of a wet night were apparent at Newbury on Wednesday in the sodden holding ground, and the mist that hung on the flats, but fortunately did not carry out its threat of spoiling sport, its stealthy march halting at the junction of the courses, and thanks to an early start racing was completed before the whole of the course was obscured, the last five furlongs remaining comparatively clear. In every department the attendance was a good one, the fair sex, as usual, being prominent in the enclosure reserved for the members, who always give this meeting their staunch support. The sun did not get a chance from start to finish and a negative blessing was the fact that rain held off. The first two races saw the victories of two smart fillies, who both changed hands for foreign climes, Rose of Malta going to India, and Lobelia to the Cape, where small quick-striking horses suit the sandy soil better than those of heavier frame. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

At the end of the first quarter of the football season the London clubs taking part in the First League competition find themselves in a sorry plight. Chelsea, it is true, average nearly a point a match, but not quite, and although they can claim some narrow wins at home, they have lost four games out of five away from Stamford Bridge, their only success in an out match being a victory by 1 to 0 over Middlesbrough—one of the weakest elevens in the division. If matters are thus by no means satisfactory with Chelsea, the outlook for Woolwich Arsenal and Tottenham Hotspur is depressing in the extreme. Preston North End, just beating Middlesbrough, the Plumstead team return to the bottom of the competition, and for the other place, occupancy of which at the end of the season carries with it reduction to the Second League, there is little to choose between Tottenham Hotspur, Middlesbrough and Preston North End.

For the defeat of the Arsenal at Manchester everybody was, of course, prepared; indeed, the wonder is that Manchester United failed to score more than once. There existed, however, some hopes that Chelsea might hold their own over Sunderland at Roker Park, and seeing that, with the second portion of the game more than half way through, nothing had been scored, the Stamford Bridge team had excellent prospects of halving the points. So far, however, from a draw resulting, the Chelsea defence broke down so badly during the last twenty minutes that Sunderland scored four goals—three through the agency of Holley, who was being tried at centre-forward.

The big disappointment occurred at Tottenham, where Hotspur, opposing a side that had not gained a single victory this season away from home, went down by 3 to 1. Nothing in the attack of Notts County need have overcome reasonably sound defence, but that was not forthcoming, and so for the second time during the month Hotspur had to admit defeat on their own ground. The shortcomings of Tottenham does not end with the defenders, for the game through Hotspur must have had quite as many chances of scoring as Notts. On Saturday, however, forwards as well as backs were at fault. It would be weird indeed if two of the three London clubs were to lose their membership of the First League.

While London clubs are doing so badly in League 1., Blackburn Rovers and Liverpool go from victory to victory, the Rovers yesterday securing their fifth and Liverpool their fourth successive win. The Blackburn men enjoyed a great triumph at Nottingham, where for a few minutes the Forest defence broke down even more completely than that of Chelsea at Sunderland. Blackburn and Liverpool, the latter of whom inflicted upon Bristol City the first defeat sustained by the West County club on their own ground this season, are now clearly ahead of all their rivals. Sheffield United, beaten for the second Saturday in succession, have dropped from the first to the fifth place on the list.

Visiting teams in the competition among the Second League clubs did not fare very well on Saturday, the only side to win away from home being Blackpool. Going to Hull they defeated Hull City in a hard game by two goals to one, and so deprived that club of first place in the table. Glossop now becomes the leaders, a position that their excellent record thoroughly justifies. Beating Leicester Fosse by the narrow margin of a goal they gained their seventh victory in ten matches and with only one defeat against them they have proved themselves to be the most consistent side in the division. In a heavy scoring match at West Bromwich the Albion just managed to overcome Grimsby Town by the odd goal in seven, the Grimsby men giving a much better display than could reasonably have been expected of them. As a result of this success West Bromwich Albion are now second, Manchester City, who could only draw at Birmingham being third. At home to Leeds City Fulham played a strong game and experienced no difficulty in winning by five goals to one, while another match in which the scoring was prolific took place at Barnsley. There the Barnsley team followed up their 7—0 victory over Leeds City the previous week by beating Wolverhampton Wanderers by seven goals to one. However inconsistent the Barnsley men may be their forwards, when on their game, are wonderful good goal getters, a feature that has characterised their play in several games. Clapton Orient gave Derby County a good match at Derby, where the Orient half-backs played so well as to keep the scoring down to one goal, by which Derby County won.

Last Monday Crystal Palace and West Ham United both suffered their second defeats in the Southern League, and Queen's Park Rangers went to the front a position they kept on Saturday when they beat Exeter City. The Palace did much better in winning at Millwall, and the West Ham team had no reason to be dissatisfied with drawing at Southampton. These three London teams still occupy the first three positions and, on form, are clearly the strongest sides in the competition. No fewer than forty-four goals were scored in Saturday's matches, only one of which was drawn. Leyton and Northampton each got six goals, but more astonishing was the victoy of Norwich City by 5—2 at Southend, a place where so many strong visiting clubs fail. Another noteworthy event was the initial victory of Reading at the end of the second month of the season.

HOTSPUR vs. NOTTS COUNTY.—Never in recent years have the Tottenham Hotspur forwards given such a moderate display as they did against Notts County when beaten by 3 to 1 at Tottenham. Giving Notts every credit for taking three chances of scoring, they should still have been many goals in arrears at the end of the game, but for the absolutely ludicrous attempts of the Tottenham forwards to score. Nearly all the time the Londoners were attacking at close range, and scarcely got a close range shot in at the Notts goal. Iremonger made some brilliant saves from longer shots, but once the ball was inside the eighteen-yards line or so, the Hotspur forwards kicked it anywhere but to the right place. The backs on both sides were moderate or worse, Morley of Notts being the best of the four. Coquet and Burton, the Tottenham defenders, were both right off their game. Both sides were at full strength, and as advertised. The game had a dramatic start, as in a dash by the Notts forwards, Mr. Bamlett, the referee, so impeded Coquet that he could not get to the ball, and Campbell scored at his leisure after five minutes. Nine minutes later, the Notts left wing broke away, and Dodd hit the bar with a long shot. The ball fell at Matthew's feet, and he had no difficulty in scoring. Shortly afterwards Minter rushed the ball through from a nice centre by Middlemiss, but Notts soon regained their two goals lead, Cantrell breaking away in mid-field and running right through to beat Drabble again at very close range. In the second half, but for one or two dangerous breaks away by Cantrell Notts were penned within twenty-five yards or so of their goal, and during that time the Tottenham forwards did nearly everything they ought not to have done, including the missing of a penalty kick by R. Steel. Try as they would Tottenham could not score, and at the close Notts won deservedly, if somewhat luckily. Notts County, 3; Tottenham Hotspur, 1.

SUNDERLAND vs. CHELSEA.—At Sunderland, before 10,000 people. The first half of the game produced some good and even football. The Sunderland forwards, however, were in better shooting form, and the Chelsea goal had many narrow escapes, notably from shots by Holley and Mordue. Whitley kept goal splendidly. At half time nothing had been scored. Early in the second half the Sunderland forwards showed to excellent advantage, but for a long time they failed to get the better of some splendid defence by Chelsea. At back, Cartwright and Betteridge kicked and tackled in fearless style, and effected many great clearances. In the last twenty minutes, however, Sunderland had matters all their own way with the result that four goals were obtained. Holley, from centre-forward scored three times, and Mordue once. Sunderland, 4; Chelsea, 0.

MANCHESTER UNITED vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—Played at Manchester before 12,000 spectators. During the opening half the play was even, Manchester United though facing the wind, doing quite as much of the attacking as their opponents. Defence prevailed until a few minutes before the interval, when Wall scored with a clever high shot, and Manchester United crossed over with a lead of one goal to none. In the second half the United were the cleverer team in mid-field, but, by bad shooting, threw away a number of chances, and nothing further was scored. Manchester United, 1; Woolwich Arsenal, 0.

FULHAM vs. LEEDS CITY.—Leeds City gave a poor display against Fulham at Craven Cottage and were badly beaten by five goals to one. Fulham should have doubled their score, and this despite the frequent intervention of Bromage, who made many saves in the Leeds goal. The visitors had several changes in their team, and transferred Price from right half to outside left, but throughout were sadly deficient in pace. Fulham were always quicker on the ball, but the old fault of over-elaboration and lack of directness was nearly always in evidence. Their first goal was scored after eight minutes' play by Harrison, who pounced on the ball after Bromage had punched out a centre by Walker. The latter gave a very promising display, although he might have been better marked. Fulham's second goal quickly followed the first, and was scored by Brown after good play by Charlton. Repeated pressure led to a third goal by Harrison, who raced through whilst the Leeds defence was appealing, and then the visitors' goal had many narrow escapes. Fulham led by 3—0 at the interval, and maintained an overwhelming superiority in the second half, when their forwards should have done better things in the way of finishing. As it was, further goals were added by Harrison and Brown, the former having his opportunity cleverly made by Walker. A surprise goal by Halligan for Leeds wound up the scoring in a disappointing match. Skeoe falling in attempting to save. There were 14,000 spectators. Fulham, 5; Leeds City, 1.

RUGBY RULES.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

CHESHIRE vs. NORTHUMBERLAND.—The meeting of these teams in the northern division of the country championship attracted a large company to the Birkenhead ground. Cheshire opened well but the first score was a try for Northumberland by Roberts. Knowle, however, equalised with a try for Cheshire. Billington next converting a try by Kendall. Cheshire led by 8 points to 3, but then Northumberland played up in great style. Mather securing an unconverted try, and Heads dropping a goal. Thus at the end of an exciting first half the game stood: Northumberland, 10 points Cheshire, 8 points. On crossing over, Northumberland strengthened their position with a try by Roberts, but a little later there came a try for Cheshire by Bowman, the place kick falling in each instance. The game, with Northumberland leading by two points, went subsequently much in favour of Cheshire, but the latter failed to score again, whereas, just at the finish, a third try by Roberts—a most brilliant effort—decided the contest in favour of the visitors, Northumberland winning by a dropped goal and 4 tries to a placed goal and 2 tries. Northumberland, 16 points; Cheshire, 11.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. GLASGOW ACADEMICALS.—The result of a most exciting game at Oxford was a victory for the home team by 18 points to 10. Oxford took the lead in the first half, Turner kicking a penalty goal and Gilray obtaining a try, which was converted. Milligan got over for the visitors and a goal resulted, while after change of ends a try by Dobson, which was converted, put the Scots in front. Oxford played up strongly, but it was just on time when Poulton ran down brilliantly and scored a try, from which a goal was kicked.

Oxford, 3 goals (1 pen.); Glasgow Acas., 2 goals.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. RICHMOND.—At Cambridge the University fifteen played splendid football and beat Richmond by one goal and six tries to one try. The game always went in favour of Cambridge, the visitors having to do much strenuous work in defence. In the first half Cambridge obtained tries through Campbell, Jones and Beecroft—that by the last named being converted by Campbell. Before the interval Ireland got over for Richmond. For a quarter of an hour after the change of ends Richmond prevented any scoring, but before the end Jones got over twice and Jordan and Beecroft once for Cambridge. All the placekicks failed. Cambridge, 1 goal 6 tries; Richmond, 1 try.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. LONDON WELSH.—This was by no means a great game at Richmond, but it possessed features of interest. The Taylors relied on their forwards, but they had no chance, for the Welsh scrummagers broke up the packs at once, and relied for the rest upon their backs. In the first half there was not very much in it, for while Barrett ran in with a try for the Taylors, which was not converted, H. C. Evans made the honours equal by securing an unconverted try for the Welshmen. On the run off the game in the first half, the Welshmen had held the upper hand, and after changing ends they were clearly the better side, for they were always pressing. The Taylors never really cleared their half of the ground, but, although hard pressed for the greater part of the time, their tackling was so fine that the Welshmen could not get over. In the course of one rush by the Welsh pack, however, the ball went out to Richards, and, dropping a fine goal for them, the Welshmen won the match, in which they were clearly the better team, by seven points to three. Welsh, 1 dropped goal 1 try; O.M.T., 1 try.

BLACKHEATH vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—These teams played a one-sided game at the Rectory field. The Scottish were stronger in the pack, and their backs, who were weak, assisted their forwards to keep the game close. But when the ball got into the open the superiority of the Blackheath backs told and they were constantly attacking. Twice during the first half, when the Scots, territorially at least, had most of the play, Blackheath scored without reply. G. Stokes and A. L. Stokes got over, the latter after a smart run half the length of the ground, and Stone improved, Blackheath leading at the interval by 8 points to nothing. In the second half the game was more open, and Blackheath scored three times. G. Stokes got over twice, the second time after some excellent work on the part of Coverdale, who played a great game and was the pivot of the Blackheath attack. The half-back took the ball to within a few feet of the goal posts, and having drawn the whole of the defence passed to Stokes, who easily got over. A. L. Stokes scored the third try after a good run with Twining, and Stone improved two of the tries. Just before the close of the game Walter scored an unconverted try for the Scottish. The forwards had worked the ball down and Walter and Williamson made a good run, the former scoring from a return pass. Blackheath won by 21 points to 3. Blackheath, 3 goals 2 tries; Scottish, 1 try.

OLD LEYSIANS vs. OLD ALLEYNIANS.—At Wandsworth, in dismal weather, an exceedingly good game took place, though it was more on account of the level nature of the play than of any particular brilliancy. The home side crossed over with a lead of six points to nil made up of two tries scored by H. J. Holloway and Bell. Neither of these was converted. Resuming, they increased that lead by further tries gained by Bell and Mellor. Boyne kicked a goal from the first of these, and Mellor improved his own try. The visitors had had quite their fair share of the play, but they failed to realise opportunities until Clark got over for them and Greenwood converted. Encouraged by this success Garrett gathered well and raced over with a second try for them, and repeated his performance a few minutes afterwards. Greenwood succeeded in improving the last of these and then "No side" was called, Leysians, 2 goals 2 tries Alleynians, 2 goals 1 try.

LONDON IRISH vs. LONDON HOSPITAL.—Though the Hospital forwards did not play any too well on the soft turf at Catford, their backs did brilliant work, and it was mainly owing to their marked superiority outside the scrum that gave them a victory by 16 points to 8. At the outset the Irish did badly, and in quick succession Palmer and Macpherson crossed their line, with the result that Adams was able to improve once. Then the Irish forwards improved immensely, and should have equalised, for Barn scored for them in an easy position, only for Milligan to fail at the place, and they scrambled over in a second rush only to have a try disallowed. On crossing over the home forwards were frequently dangerous without being able to press home their advantage, while on the other hand the Hospital three-quarters were continually set in motion by Lindsay and Beale, and on two occasions tries resulted through the agency of Batchelor and McEwan. Palmer was successful with one kick only.

ATHLETICS.

CAMBRIDGE FRESHMEN'S SPORTS.—First Day. If the form displayed at the opening instalment of the Freshmen's sports at Cambridge was only moderate, much keenness was displayed and except in the quarter and high jump, every competitor turned out. Delightful surroundings prevailed, and, considering the recent heavy rains, the path was in capital condition. D. Macmillan, of Felsted, and an Australian, although not entered for the quarter, was allowed to compete, and he experienced no difficulty in winning. The hurdling was very poor, and the weight putters did not shine. The high jump was carried off by S. C. Harrell, of the Perse School, Cambridge. There was a field of thirteen for the mile, and, after some capital racing in the last quarter, W. H. Nowers, of Stamford, proved to be the winner. The open 120 yards brought out nineteen competitors.

Second day.—The two most successful athletes competing in the Light Blue Freshmen's trials were D. Macmillan and W. H. Nowers, who followed up their success on the opening day by each winning a second event. For the concluding instalment on the 3rd instant the surroundings were less favourable than on the opening afternoon, and under these circumstances some fair performances were recled off. W. T. Bragg, the Australian, was most fancied for the sprint, but could only finish third, Macmillan following up his success in the quarter, which he easily secured in 53⅘sec., by gaining the award somewhat easily. He had a slight wind against him, and 11secs., for the afternoon was not bad. On Monday Nowers had easily carried off the mile in 4mins. 47secs.; yesterday he accomplished an even better performance in the three miles. Making his own running and winning by nearly 200 yards, he landed home in 15mins. 53⅕secs. This time is the fourth best recorded for some years. In 1893

F. S. Horan put up the wonderful figures of 15mins. 37secs. Since then F. M. Edwards, 15mins. 40secs., and A. S. Welsh, 15mins. 52⅕secs., had the best returns, so that on this showing the Stamford runner should have a bright career before him. The other events contested were only moderate. The hurdlers and half-milers may, however, improve, and J. A. O. Muirhead should be capable of hurling the missile 100 feet by next term, if he trains. The strangers' sprint resulted as predicted, J. F. Wright easily getting home, while although a scratch man—H. P. Dawson—won the mile, the time was wretched, and it is highly probable that, next to Secretary F. J. Baker, Nowers is probably the most speedy at a mile.

OXFORD FRESHMAN'S SPORTS.—In face of the damp and dispiriting weather that prevailed, it was not in the least surprising to find a very limited attendance at the Freshmen's sports, which opened the athletic season at Oxford on the 2nd instant. Fortunately for the competitors, there was an almost entire absence of wind, and one or two very good performances were accomplished. The public schools champion, Shepherd, did a capital hundred, winning in 10⅘-ecs. without being extended, and later on he took the weight with a puts of 34ft. 8in., which was distinctly good. Willmer (Brasenose) shaped very well in the quarter, and should do a lot better later on, as he possesses height and stride. Only four ran for the half-mile, the smallest field for some years, and Morrison, leading all the way, stalled off a plucky effort of Grenfell, the latter, by the way being a son of the old Blue, Lord Desborough.

The conclusion of the meeting yesterday was favoured with fine weather, albeit somewhat dull, and no excuse could be advanced for mediocre performances, seeing that the competitors had absolutely no wind to contend against, a most unusual state of things at a Freshman's gathering. One good performance was accomplished, the Old Abingdon boy, Shepherd, of Pembroke, winning the 100 in easy fashion in 10⅘-ecs. He was expected to win the long jump, but could get no nearer than third to Godfrey, who, although getting up very slowly to the board, managed to clear 20ft 2in. Macdonald won the hurdles in moderate time, and in the hammer Bockett was allowed a walk-over, throwing 82ft. 6in. The mile produced the biggest field of the meeting, and an interesting race resulted, the three placed men leading alternately in the last 300 yards. In the end Porter won by a five yards margin, although Morrison, who won the half on Tuesday, finished much the fresher of the two. The time, 4mins. 41⅕secs., was quite up to the average. Both handicaps went to the limit man, Wall, of Lincoln.

BILLIARDS

H. W. STEVENSON vs. J. CHAPMAN.—At Birmingham last Saturday night the match of 9,000 up in which Stevenson conceded 3,750 start ended in favour of the scratch man by no fewer than 521 points. The afternoon breaks were 260, 190 and 109 by Stevenson. In the evening the champion's best breaks were 263 and 151, Chapman's best being 119. Final scores:—

H. W. Stevenson	9,000
J. Chapman (rec. 3,750)	8,479

M. INMAN vs. A. E. WILLIAMS.—The game of 16,000 up between these players for a stake of £50 aside at Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester Square, ended in a very easy victory for Inman by 3 455 points. The latter conceded Williams a start of 2,500, and the result was a foregone conclusion by the time the second week's play began, as Inman then led by 743. Increasing this advantage, day by day, the final stage was entered upon with no fewer than 3,481 points separating the two totals, which were 14,667 to 11,486 in Inman's favour. During yesterday the chief breaks were 112, 99, 97, 67, 115, 139, 51, and 136 (unfinished) by Inman, while the best of Williams were 102 (twice) 80, 65 (all off red), 52, 73, 63, 100, 69, 61, and 157. Final scores:—

M. Inman	16,000
A. E. Williams (rec. 2,500)	12,545

LUCKNOW TOURNAMENT
ROYAL DRAGOON'S CUP.

THE Tournament opened on the 16th instant with a game between 9th Hodson's Horse and The Scouts. There was a good attendance, including Sir John and Lady Hewett. The "Scouts" were a mixed team including two A.D.C.'s, yet their combination was a little too much for the Cavalry and they ran out victors at the close of the game. It was in the third chukker that Hodson's made a grand effort and actually went ahead of The Scouts but that effort seemed to have exhausted them, and The Scouts did pretty well what they liked towards the close.

First Chukker.—The Scouts immediately pressed and confined Hodson's Horse to their own ground. Hodson's hit behind to save, Barrett took the penalty and hit a goal. For the rest of the chukker the scouts pressed. Score: Scouts, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play for a space, then Pollok got on to the ball and scored. Twice more the Scouts just missed scoring, Atkinson saving both attempts by good play. Score: Scouts 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—This was Hodson's Horse's chukker. Playing well together, they have the better of exchanges. Three times Crocker scored, assisted by Atkinson and Hodson's were still pressing when the bugle sounded. Score: Hodson's 3; Scouts, 2.

Fourth Chukker.—Hodson's were showing signs of slackness again. Crocker could not get an opportunity for a run, and the Scouts pressed hard to equalise, two shots in succession just missed the posts, but just before call of time, Hoare sent the ball through. Score: 3 a'l.

Fifth Chukker.—The "Scouts" increased their score to five goals.

Last Chukker.—Barrett scored for the Scouts almost immediately. On change of ends, Pollock got on to the ball, and with a magnificent run down the field increased the Scouts score, and Barrett, just before the bugle sounded, added yet another goal. The Scouts won by 8 goals to 3. Teams:—

Umpires.—Colonel Forbes and Mr. Ralston.

Two games were played in the first ties on the 17th instant and the attendance was larger than on the opening day. The first game was between 1st Royal Dragoons and Lucknow Gymkhana.

It is some years now since the Gymkhana entered a team to contest this or the Civil Service Week Tournament and one hopes that their failure to-day to make a stand against the Dragoons will not discourage them from entering for the Civil Service Tournament early next year. What they lack is combination. Individually all the players are good men.

First Chukker.—The Royals became aggressive at once, and made several attacks on the Gymkhana goal, till at last Turner sent the ball through the posts. Dragoons, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—Turner immediately scored for the Dragoons, and a series of three more goals followed in quick succession. Dragoons, 5 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Royals did all the pressing and added two goals to their score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gymkhana pulled themselves together and began pressing from the onset, Crookshank sent a hot shot through the posts and on change of ends, Mansfield notched another goal. The Royal did nothing. Score: Royals 7 to 2.

Fifth Chukker.—Level play for some time, and it looked as if the Gymkhana were going to score again, but the Royals defended their goal grandly. Towards the close of the chukker, Turner got a run down the ground and scored. Royals 8 to 2.

Last Chukker.—Even play. Neither side scored. Royals won by 8 to 2.

The second game was between the 17th Lancers and the Gordon Highlanders.

First Chukker.—An excellent game. Fast and furious riding being the order of the day. The Gordons pressed and missed scoring more than once till the Lancers settled down and then Thompson put the ball between the posts.

Second Chukker.—Lancers pressed and the Gordon's hit behind to save. The penalty shot was met by the Gordons, who took the ball to midfield, but here Melville got on and coming down, with a good shot scored. Score: Lancers, 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—Gordons missed two easy chances by bad shooting. There was some good up and down play, each side attacking in turn. No goals were scored.

Fourth Chukker.—Gordons attacked, and after two shots at goal, the third went through. Scores: Lancers 2 to 1.

Fifth Chukker.—A hard galloping bout the Gordons at first had the better of it, but the Lancers eventually broke away and scored. Score: Lancers 3 to 1.

Sixth Chukker.—The best of the evening—hard galloping and furious attacks on the goals. No goals were scored. The Lancers, won by 3 to 1.

SEMI-FINALS.

Two games were played this afternoon in the semi-finals, and the first between the Royals and The Scouts was by far and away the best so far witnessed in this tournament. The weather was excellent, and among the large gathering present were Sir John, Lady and Miss Hewett and Count Macre.

First Chukker.—A blank chukker. The play was up and down the ground, both goals being attacked in succession and defended.

Second Chukker.—A splendid display of polo—hard and furious galloping, and neat passing of the ball from player to player. There was no score.

Third Chukker.—The Royals drew first blood. The Scouts twice missed sending the ball through, and then Turner of the Royals got a chance at the close of the bout, and scored. Score: Royals 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The Scouts retaliated. Play began in their ground, then Barrett with a long shot drove the ball into the Royal's territory when Pollok getting on, scored. Score:—One all.

Fifth Chukker.—The Royals saved their goal by hitting behind, the penalty that followed, did not improve matters for the Scouts, for the ball was nipped up by the Royals, and carried down the field. The Scouts now hit behind goal, and the Royals converted the penalty successfully. Royals 2 goals to 1.

Sixth Chukker.—No one expected the Scouts to win, but Barrett played the game of the evening and scored two goals for his side—the first from a magnificent shot from a difficult angle, far down the field, and the second by a good run down the field. The Scouts won by 3 goals to 2.

The next was a poor game. The Lancers had it all their own way and won easily.

First Chukker.—The Highlanders raised the hopes of their partisans by successively keeping their opponents in check, and also attacking their goal. The Lancers were all the time on the defensive. No score.

Second Chukker.—For a brief space, the Highlanders pressed and then the Lancers let themselves go, and notched two goals in succession. Score: Lancers 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers did all the attacking and increased their score by 2 goals. Score: Lancers 4 goals.

Fifth and Sixth Chukker.—A procession. The Highlanders made occasional efforts, but the Lancers piled on the score and won an uninteresting game by 7 goals to love.

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2.150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

CALCUTTA vs. COMBINED SERVICES.—This match was played in the Eden Gardens on the 20th, 21st and 22nd instant, the three days' play providing a close and interesting game, eventually ending in a win for the Services by 25 runs. They fared badly in their first innings, scoring only 81.—Lieutenant Twiss contributing 21 not out; Lee bowled well taking 6 wickets for 36. Calcutta then went in and at the close of the day's play had knocked up 87 for 1 wicket. On Sunday Calcutta ran their total to 121, Craik (31) and Guise (21 not out) being the principal scorers. Twiss took 4 wickets for 42. The Services played much better in their second innings and at the close of the day's play the board showed 6 wickets down for 239. A. W. Shallow who was out for a blob in the first innings showed his true form in the second and ran up 60 before he was dismissed. Bocquet scored 54, Hanbury 31 and McCormick 31. On the third day Coleridge who was not out 17 overnight added 30 to his score and the others not offering much resistance the innings closed for 297. With 257 to get to win Calcutta opened badly, Craik and Lee being sent back for 6 and 2 respectively, but Guise and Turnbull livened things up and between them added 96 runs. Quin, Given-Wilson, Bayley and MacLeod all batted well, but the two last men failed to play out time and the final wicket fell 7 minutes before time with Calcutta still 25 runs behind. Score:—

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, POONA.

LINCOLNS vs. 13TH BRIGADE, R.F.A.—The game between these teams opened the tournament on the 15th instant. The Lincolns had the upper hand all through and eventually won by 3 goals to nil. Up and down play at the start, the Lincolns getting away and netting a goal. They forced a corner immediately after but the gunners took the ball out of danger. Back it came to their territory, where the Lincolns worried their opponents' defence till the interval, but without scoring again. The Lincolns continued the pressure on resuming and netted a goal. A run by the gunners was unproductive and the ball returned to their circle. They got away again shortly after and obtained a corner but nothing came of it and once more the Lincolns attacked. They notched a corner which they converted and pressing for the rest of the game won as stated.

NORTHAMPTONS vs. INDIAN INFANTRY OFFICERS.—This match on the 16th instant wants little description; it was a one-sided affair, the Northamptons running rings round the combined team, who were not so strongly represented as last year and who also played almost all through the first half without a goalkeeper. Nevertheless they played doggedly to the end when the score was 9 goals to nil in favour of the Northamptons. Four goals were registered in the first period and five in the second.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. 3RD SAPPERS AND MINERS.—This was another runaway affair, the Sappers were all over the Gymkhana from start to finish, scored 4 goals in the first half and three in the second. The Gymkhana failed to obtain a point, their play being noticeable for lack of combination, though they struggled manfully all through the game.

13TH HUSSARS vs. ALL BLACKS.—An excellent game was witnessed on the 19th instant between the above teams. The All Blacks gave a very good display of hockey and ultimately defeated the Cavalry team from Secunderabad by 5 goals to 3. They pressed at the start and Miller opened the scoring: two abortive corners followed and then Miller notched a second goal. The Hussars nothing daunted next took up the attack and were soon on level terms, Doyle and Batchelor scoring. Even play followed till just before the interval the

All Blacks pressed hotly and obtained four corners in quick succession. Nothing came of them and the teams crossed over with the score 2 all. On resuming the Hussars forced a corner. The All Blacks cleared and play centred in the Hussars' territory for a spell, but the ball was brought back and the Hussars took the lead with a successful shot. There after the All Blacks had almost all the play, and scoring three goals in quick succession ran out victorious as stated.

LINCOLNS vs. LEICESTERS.—These teams met on the 21st instant, the Leicesters who had drawn a bye in the first round, beating the Lincolns by 3 goals to one. They attacked almost entirely during the first half and scored three goals besides many corners which were not improved upon. On resuming after the interval the Leicesters returned to the attack but failed to score and the Lincolns made an attempt to get through. More play in the Lincolns' end and then the ball was brought back and a corner to the Lincolns was notched but not improved. They continued to press, however, and after one shot at goal had hit the cross bar they scored their only goal, the game ending in a victory for the Leicesters by 3 to 1.

HEAVY WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF AUSTRALIA.

SQUIRES VS. LANG.

THE following details of the fight for the Heavy weight Championship of Australia appear in the Sydney Referee.

Bill Squires probably fought the battle of his life at the Melbourne Cyclorama last evening, (26th October), when he met Bill Lang before an £800 house for the championship of Australia.

Squires materially assisted by Tommy Burns as his chief second, boxed with great tact and judgment, and, all things considered was very unlucky to lose. He was easily the winner on points right up to the end of the 18th round, and believed he was going up for the 20th at the 19th; and, though utterly exhausted, just managed to scrape through.

The 20th round found Squires absolutely all out, and although he was apparently stopped by Lang, the Victorian cannot be given credit for winning with a knockout.

Both men entered the ring in splendid condition. In Lang's corner were his brother, Ed. Williams, Brillo Campbell, and Tom Boyle; while Squires had the assistance of Tommy Burns, Arthur Douglass, and his (Squires') trainer, Fred Porter.

Jim Mitchell was referee, Harry McShane timekeeper, and Jim Nichol 10 seconds check.

The betting was 2 to 1 on Lang at the beginning, but half-way through the odds were on Squires, and at the 17th round some fresh sports were prepared to lay 10 to 1 on the Sydney man.

Squires inhaled oxygen at the end of every round from the start, and though it appear to revive him, its stimulating effect evaporated after the first minute or so.

Squires had frequent opportunities to settle his man, but he always had the bad luck to fail to get there; while on two separate occasions time snatched almost certain victory from him.

In addition to having a big pull in the weights—announced as Lang 13st. Squires 12st. 5lb.—the Victorian had all the natural advantages of height, reach, strength, and youth.

The honours of the battle were, however, with the smaller man. Lang was tardy in leaving his chair. The men were not long together before Squires shot a brace of fine lefts fush on the mouth. Stung, Lang rushed Squires to the ropes. Squires ducked and clinched.

The New South Wales representative was boxing skilfully, and with good range judgment. He landed lightly several times, then stuck out the left, feinted and baulked, and tried a wicked cross with right—only just missing Lang's jaw by a hairsbreath. Squires tried the same movement frequently, but was unfortunate enough to hit a little short. He religiously followed the instructions of Tommy Burns, who gave him the office in finger language.

Late in the second round Lang scored a heavy left uppercut. Squires reeled, but, recovering quickly, shook Lang up with a great punch on the jaw. They were hard at it when a intensely exciting situation was relieved by the call of "corners."

In the third round Squires continued to show finer boxing points, and skipping about the ring with the agility of a kitten, was as cunning and elusive as a fox.

Squires has become quite clever since he was last seen in Melbourne.

In the next couple of terms Squires showed that he was strong, and he hit with great power. His friends were highly delighted with his showing, and even thus early he seemed to be so completely master of the situation that it was only a matter of him lasting twenty rounds to win. More than that, there was a great chance of him stopping his opponent.

Both were very busy in the sixth round. With a fine left Squires scored, stripping the skin from the bridge of Lang's nose. Lang's friends objected to Squires catching the Melbournite below the thighs in clinches.

The Melbourne man had cultivated several new hits since he last fought in public, but one he was most successful with was a right uppercut copied from Jack Johnson.

Squires was very foxy in the eighth round, and nearly won the fight. Lang banged the left to the chin. Squires fell away. Lang rushed. Squires ducked and planted a hard left square on the jaw. Lang, badly rattled, was saved further damage by the call of "corners."

Half way through the ninth round Lang went within an ace of outing Squires, and dazed the visitor. Squires saved himself by clinching and smothering up. Lang's friends were anything but pleased with his showing. He was certainly they said, not fighting up to his private form. Both hung on a good deal and clinched.

In the tenth round Lang had plenty of opportunities, but did not let go a decent punch. Squires outgeneralled and outfought the big fellow, who occupied most of his time trying to land heavy punches.

Squires scored all over Lang in the twelfth and thirteenth round. The Melbournite was several times rocky, but try as Squires might, he could not put him down.

Squires was as fresh as a lark in the fourteenth, and Lang slow. Squires had little difficulty in landing his punches, and appeared to have Lang's measure in the fifteenth round; and had the notorious foot punch been on hand he would no doubt have won there and then.

Lang recovered wonderfully well, thanks to the attention of Tom Boyle and Edward Williams, and drove Squires about so hard in the sixteenth round that a short jolt almost caused Squires to collapse.

Lang made frantic efforts to score a knock-out, but fell exhausted from the exertions. Near the finish Squires revived, and gave Lang lefts and rights freely to the face and body. Squires was given oxygen upon returning to his corner.

Some highly exciting work transpired in the 17th. Heavy punches were exchanged, Lang's extra weight and youth telling materially, and Squires went all to pieces. Lang again made a great effort to secure a knock-out, but failed.

More oxygen, and Squires looked an almost certain winner, bar the knock-out. Both slung punches at random in the 18th. Lang slipped to the floor, but was not hurt.

Squires came out of his chair for the 19th round under the impression that it was the 20th, and tendered both hands to his opponent for the usual shake; but Lang, not understanding the situation, promptly gave him a hard double in the face. Squires took a terrible punching before the end, but weathered a severe storm and returned to his corner under the impression that the last round had been boxed and victory was his.

Greatly dismayed upon learning that there was still another round to go, Squires was a badly used up man when he went up for the final set-to; and after floundering about for a minute, he received a heavy uppercut, and, falling forward, was counted out.

Squires is still of the opinion that he can defeat the Melbourne man, and expects to have another match with Lang at the Sydney Stadium in December. Squires thinks he would have been all the better for another week's training. The match was originally arranged for Cup Eve, but owing to a threatened prohibition of boxing, it was brought forward to Monday last.

SAID the author, "Yes, a stye
Is annoying in one's eye,
But what's really more grotesque
Is a litter on one's desk!"

As a South Jersey country physician was driving through a village, he saw a man amusing a crowd with the antics of his trick dog. The doctor pulled up and said: "My dear man, how do you manage to train your dog that way? I can't teach mine a single trick!" The man looked up, with a simple rustic look, and replied: "Well, you see it's this way: you have to know more'n the dog, or you can't learn him nothin.'"

INSECT PESTS IN MALAYA AND CEYLON.

THE Agricultural Department of the Federated Malay States has recently commenced the publication at Kuala Lumpur of a new Bulletin devoted to biological subjects connected with the economic products (other than manufactured and minerals) and more especially the ravages of insects. For some reasons it appears the proprietors of rubber plantations have been much troubled by the visitations of white ants, which have caused very serious damage; and two articles are accordingly devoted in the first half-dozen articles of the new serial to these pests, and the best means of keeping them in check. Although there are several kinds of white ants which attack rubber-trees in the Straits Settlements, nearly all the damage is inflicted by one particular species known to naturalists as Termes gestroi, although its proper designation is Termes gestri; in other words, the man by whom it was named did not know his Latin Grammar. In the first of the two articles referred to, the Government entomologist, Mr. H. C. Pratt, commences by pointing out how the "soldiers" and "workers" of this particular species may be recognised. The soldiers may, as a rule, be destinguished from those of other species by their longer and more slender jaws and likewise by the circumstance that if pinched gently between the fingers they exude a thick, milky like fluid. Queens of this species are very rarely found in this part of the country, although every effort should be made to locate them and thus stop the increase of these pests.

It is the soldiers and workers of this species which do all the mischief; and this has been fully recognised by the planters. There seems, however, to be an impression that these whits ants have attained the position of a pest owing to the country being planted with rubber-trees. But this is an altogether erroneous idea; for, as a matter of fact, Gestro's white ant flourishes in timber of all kinds, whether alive or dead. And the fact that, when clearing land for rubber-planting, it has been the general practice to leave the stumps and much of the fallen timber on the ground, has afforded the white ants an unusual and excellent opportunity of developing to an extent which would otherwise have been impossible. That this is really the case has been proved on one particular estate, where the ground was completely cleared from stumps and fallen timber, with the result that the white ant plague was at once reduced to comparatively insignificant proportions.

The author strongly emphasises the necessity of immediate action on the part of planters on whose estates there are either heavily infected areas or isolated cases of the pest. Different remedies are proposed for new and for old clearings; but as regards the former, the importance of completely removing all dead and dying timber is most strongly insisted upon. The expense, it is true, is considerable, but it is probable that even in the first year this would be the preservation of trees which would otherwise be inevitably lost.

It has indeed been suggested that it would be simpler policy to let the pest take its course and wear itself out in the fashion which always attends visitations of this nature after a certain time. It is pointed out, however, by Mr. Pratt that to let the white ants work their wicked will without molestation and eventually wear themselves out would take something like ten years, and perhaps even more. During that long period the insects would enjoy the opportunity of inflicting an amount of damage that would largely exceed the cost of making a thorough clearing of the ground in the first instance.

Another pest to which attention is directed in the Bulletin is the caterpillar of one of the burnet moths, which is doing considerable damage to cocoanut plantations in the Malay States. Hitherto the native owners of such plantations have had comparatively little of which to complain in the way of pests, their chief enemy being the cocoanut beetle, while certain scale insects, etc., do a comparatively insignificant amount of damage. Within the last three years the caterpillars of the aforesaid moth have, however, made their appearance in swarms in two separate districts, where they have inflected very considerable loss. Like other caterpillars they work by stripping the trees of their foliage, and thereby rendering them incapable of affording sufficient nourishment to the growing fruit. According to the owner of one plantation the pest is not entirely new, and is stated to have made its appearance seven years ago. If, however, it did occur previously, the period of its quiescence must almost certainly be exaggerated; and it is not improbable that it may have been misidentified with another insect, which, although likewise a defoliater, has other methods of working. It is considered most important that managers of cocoanut plantati ns should make themselves acquainted with the new pest and its methods of work. If no precautions are taken to prevent its spread, the infection lasts for about eight months, during which period the caterpillars are capable of spreading over an area of some five hundred acres, causing not only a severe trial to the trees in the plantation, but likewise a considerable pecuniary loss to their owners, various remedial measures are suggested, for which we refer those interested to the original pamphlet.

As regards recent work on Economic Zoology in Ceylon, it must suffice to refer to a note communicated by Mr. E. E. Green, the official entomologist, to Vol. XXXIII., No. 3, of the Tropical Agriculturist, in which it is stated that an attempt is to be made to check the ravages on tea plants in Ceylon of the beetle known as the "shot-hole borer" by introducing a predaceous beetle (Clerus formicarius), which is already well known as an enemy of pine-boring beetles of the family Scolytidæ. Mr. Green decided to try this beetle as an exterminator on account of the good reports of its value as a pest-ridder received from the United States. The experiment can, however, only be only of a tentative nature, as the Clerus is an inhabitant of the temperate zone, and it remains to be seen whether it will thrive in the tropics. In a second note the Government entomologist states that in the Ambawella district of Ceylon camphor plants are attacked by a scolytid beetle allied to the shot-hole borer; and that the damage promises to be serious unless prompt measures are taken for checking the progress of the visitation.

Other instances might be cited, but the foregoing are amply sufficient to demonstrate the activity being displayed by the Agricultural Departments of the Malay States and Ceylon in investigating the cause and extent of the visitation of injurious insects, and in devising practical and efficient methods for their destruction. European planters are fully aware of the value of these investigations and the suggested remedies; and it is sincerely to be hoped that native owners will follow their lead, as if pests are allowed to flourish in some districts, their destruction in others avails comparatively little.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The Calcutta racing season opened last Saturday. The day was not a great success as far as fields were concerned, as the largest number of starters we saw in any event was six for the Beginners' Plate, which fell to the outsider Bobbie. There are a lot of new arrangements again this season, but the fence put round the bookmakers is not a success at present, and the only way to make this do is to have the boards with the horses' names and the prices facing outwards; further the ring is not half large enough to hold the public on big race days. The parade ring also is too small; there was a crush with six horses in it on Saturday, so we cannot think what will happen when we see twenty, there is sure to be a big business done in the kicking line when we hear the usual "Mount please."

Solution was made a very hot favourite for the Beginners' Plate, and would have gone very near winning had his saddle not slipped, after they had gone two furlongs, Hoyt kept it in its place until within a few lengths of the winning post, where it went right round, and the jockey got what looked like a nasty fall, though he luckily came out of it with only a slight shaking. Etna was rightly considered a certainty for the Midget Pony Plate, and won as she liked by a length. The favourite was quickest away with Eileen next, Pantomime and Cocky on her heels and they kept this order throughout.

There was a lot of delay at the post for the Pony Welter Selling Race, caused by Chas and Picaninny, the latter going backwards through the gate dragged Mr. Galstaun off, but did no damage. When they were eventually got away to a fairly good start, High Court took the lead from Chas and Picaninny: they kept this order until the distance where the favourite went up, and beat High Court in the run home by a neck. The winner was not sold.

Solution was made favourite for the Beginners Plate with Convent Girl and Bobbie next in demand, Bobbie was quickest away from a very straggling start with Convent Girl and Solution next. Bobbie led throughout and won as he liked, Solution would have been a good second had his saddle not slipped.

For the Horse Welter Selling Race, Lefterin was made favourite, but Wolferton jumped out of the machine in front and leading all the way won by one and three-quarter lengths: Lefterin could not get on terms with her any part of the journey: again there was no bid for the winner.

Danseuse was made favourite for the Giant Pony Plate. Rupert was first away from the start followed by Danseuse and Guide, and the positions were unchanged until a furlong from home where Danseuse went to the front and Lorraine moved up to third and they finished in this order.

The Season's Maiden Horse Plate degenerated into a match with only two starters. Jaffa Girl, the favourite, went out to the front from the start, and led until a length from home where My Bill caught her and won by a head.

The C.T.C. has at last appointed a Medical Officer and we are pleased to see Dr. Elmes' name figure on the card—a better man could not have been got for this billet.

There was a little mild schooling done at Tollygunge last Sunday, when Foy (Mr. Evers) and Ringmaiden (Native) went over three fences on the horse course, Mr. Evers Grand National horse Foy jumped very well and seems to go a lot better over fences than over hurdles.

Everything else went over the pony course; Branga (Mr. Evers) Farthing Bun (Native) went over two fences. Marconi (Mr. Glen) and Emerald (Mr. Tanner) went once round the full course, they both jumped in excellent style, Fingal (Alford) and Electric Light (Mr. Tanner) went over four, and both jumped well. Fingal, who will not jump even small hurdles, takes the fences very well, indeed, everything that has schooled over them, has fenced carefully up to this and we expect they will continue to do so: these obstacles are likely to do away with the careless jumpers, that have had to be dealt with before at these meetings.

We are sorry to hear that Bobbie burst a blood vessel while running in the Beginners' Plate last Saturday and it will be real bad luck if this horse has to be put by again.

The entries for Saturday next are very good indeed taken all round; the Criterion Plate has produced an entry of 24 and the Club Plate also has a good entry of the same number.

The 14 hand pony race has the only poor entry, 5 only being in this, The Juvenile Plate has attracted 10, the Zeerut Plate (hurdle race) 12. However, three of these are from Bleach's stable and are not at all likely to start and as some of the others are also doubtful we do not expect to see a large field for this event. The Pony Plate has 9 so far and as Cheeky and Solace will probably go for the hurdles, this number will also probably be thinned down a good deal.

The Tollygunge Steeplechase course is to be opened two days a week, Wednesday and Sunday, all through the season, so there will be no excuse for trainers not having their jumpers properly schooled in future.

Wandin on Tuesday morning ran away with a native riding boy twice round the training track. He was eventually pulled up and went off very sore. This is bad luck as he was very fit and well before this happened.

Fizz is getting a lot of strong slow work and is doing well. Fraser is riding him and will steer him in all his engagements throughout the Calcutta season.

Bantock, Coat of Arms, Neath and Absentee are also doing slow work. We have not seen any of these horses go fast as yet.

We hear that all of the Aga Shah's horses are for sale and that he will shortly give up owning racers, as he is to be a Steward of the W.I.T.C. next season.

A LOT of schooling was done on Tuesday afternoon over hurdles; everything that went jumped very well, with the exception of Golden Morn, who fell at the fifth hurdle but did no damage, and Belle Cole who refused to jump the second and gave C. Hoyt a fall, but it did not hurt him. The hurdles look very formidable and horses take a lot of trouble with them. The first out were Ardea (Northmore) and Golden Morn (Butlin) went 1½ at about a 12 anna gallop, Golden Morn fell at the hurdle opposite the 6 furlongs post. Mercedes (Thomas) and Highland Fling (Mr. Evers) went a good gallop over seven flights; Mercedes did not perform too well, Highland Fling jumped very well and is improving with every gallop.

MYSTIC CIRCLE (Thomas) and Parwan (Alford) did a good gallop over 1½. Mystic Circle jumped the first three flights badly, but did the last four in better stylе; Parwan fenced well but a lot too big and wasted a lot of time at each hurdle. Bandy Leg (Mr. Evers) then went over one flight and was pulled up.

PICANINNY (T. Ferguson) and The Imp (Alford) 1½ mile over the seven flights at about half pace, Picaninny went very well and jumped faultlessly. The Imp did not know what hurdles were meant for at first, he jumped badly; he ought to be useful later on when he has done a few more schools; we hear he is to be kept for amateur races only.

DIRTY BOY (T. Ferguson), Mount Dane (C. Hoyt), Galloping Girl (R. Hoyt) and Mulison (Mr. Levetus). The former jumped badly and could never get on terms with the leaders, Mulison went well for a mile, but tired away over the last 4 furlongs. Solace (Mr. Bletsoe) went a nice working gallop over the full course, fencing very well.

THE Loaf (Hayhoe), Mayfowl (C. Hoyt) and Sacricomar (R. Hoyt) went a good school over 1½ miles at a good pace, Sacricomar jumped very badly over the first three flights but did better over the others, he stopped to nothing over the last two furlongs. Tete-a-Tete (Northmore), Cracker (Hayhoe), Belle Cole (C. Hoyt), Pantry Girl (R. Hoyt) and Moira (Thomas). Belle Cole jumped the first hurdle, and refused at the second, she was taken home after that, Moira was pulled up after the third flight. She is going very well just now; the others went a nice fast school over the full course; they all paced well and Cracker was going the best at the finish.

THERE has been a lot of brisk betting done this week, for both the Cup and Trials. Neath has moved up to level favourite with Bantock in the Cup list and a lot of money has been laid about Peru at price ranging between 20 and 25 to 1. Layers of the odds are still giving 20 to 1 against him. Soultline is favourite for the Trials at 1½ to 1, Tangaroa next in demand at fives.

THE Manchester meeting brought flat racing at Home to a close last week. Reuter wires out the following statistics:—Frank Wootton heads the list of winning jockeys with 165 wins to his credit. Maher has 116 and Higgs 101.

Mr. Fairie is first of winning owners with £37,719. Then follow His Majesty with £19,644, the Duke of Portland £15,064, and Mr. Jack Joel £13,993.

IN commenting on the race for the Melbourne Cup, full details of which we publish further on, the Adelaide Observer writes:—It was a magnificent race, well won, and Prince Foote must rank as one of the best three-year-olds Australia has produced. He was in trouble during the whole journey, and yet survived all difficulties. He did not get a good position in the jump-off, and McLachlan preferred to let the colt find his legs, probably, in lieu of hurrying him to get a nice berth. He was in a most critical corner at the abattoirs, and what troubled him from that point to the home turn was dodging the horses as they dropped back defeated. At the three furlongs he must have been fully a dozen lengths behind Alawa and Trafalgar; but from that point he had an uninterrupted run. He displayed wonderful stamina and courage, and he is a colt with indomitable pluck to accomplish what he did. It quite reminds one of the way his sire (Sir Foote) doubled up Wakeful in the Futurity Stakes. The manner in which he caught and beat horses of the class and staying ability of Alawa and Trafalgar was fine, and it is no wonder that Sydney race-goers were proud of him. He won in adverse circumstances, and all credit must be accorded him.

Alawa put up a creditable race, and if Lewis had not hurried him so much near the abattoirs and made up his ground in such a short distance he would have readily and easily run second; but such an effort must have taken a great deal of steam out of him. He showed himself a stayer, and his performance in carrying 3lb. over weight for age, and running second—the same position occupied by his sire—is one of the best efforts registered by a four-year-old in connection with the great race.

Aberdeen's close attendance at the end of the race came as a genuine surprise, but if Trafalgar and Alawa had not gone at it hammer and tongs from the straight entrance the probabilities are that the outsider would have had to be content with fourth place. Trafalgar plodded on all the way, and Barden displayed splendid judgment in tackling Alawa at the straight entrance. There is no doubt that the Sydney horseman knew if it came to a rush for home that Trafalgar would have poor prospects alongside a brilliant galloper like Alawa, and he was determined to worry him all the way up the straight. But for that, and also being hemmed in, Trafalgar would have been placed. Flavel was the nearest of the others at the end of the race, but he never once looked like winning, while Pendil was lost to view all the way. Kooringa knocked up completely at the end of a mile and a half, and Carl Dour failed to reproduce his Caulfield Cup form. Sir Edwin never once caught the eye. It was a satisfactory race, well run and well won.

WE cull the following details of the Cup winner from the same source:—Although raised in Australia, and we naturally claim him as our own, Prince Foote is bred quite on imported lines, being by Sir Foote, one of the most brilliant gallopers that ever came to Australia, from Petruschka. He is owned by a genuine sportsman in Mr. J. Brown, a Newcastle coal proprietor, who prefers to race as "Mr. J. Baron." He is a prominent New South Wales breeder, and is well known on the Adelaide side, being a friend of Mr. C. H. Warren. For years Mr. Brown has been trying to get hold of a champion, and his happiness is now complete, seeing that he bred the colt as well, and it is a great pity that Sir Foote came to such an untimely end a couple of seasons ago. The time—3mins. 27½secs.—equals the record for the race, held by Apologue and Blue Spec, but is still half a second behind Tartan's record for Australia.

Prince Foote has not done a great deal of racing, and has only been once out of a place, which was at his first start. At the next attempt the two-year-old ran at Rosehill, and was backed for pounds, shillings, and pence; but could only get third. Then he proved his worth by landing the Sires' Produce Stakes at Randwick in record time, and just failed in the Champagne Stakes with a penalty. The Sires' Produce was his most attractive performance, and he went into winter quarters the favourite for the Derby. He stood the winter well, unexpectedly winning the Chelmsford Stakes at Randwick at the beginning of September, and, but for his unlucky defeat in the Caulfield Guineas, has not been beaten since.

THE Western India Turf Club have just issued a set of rules for bookmakers, which embody some fresh regulations for the forthcoming Bombay meeting, including the following:—"Bookmakers will not be permitted to exhibit lists within the race course enclosure showing horses engaged at any race meeting elsewhere. Bookmakers must not leave the course till half an hour after the termination of the last race."

A DESPERATE encounter between two racehorses is recorded from Newmarket, the "contest" having taken place on the 8th ultimo on the heath during exercise hours.

An extraordinary feature of the fight was the fact that there was a considerable disparity in the ages—as horses go—of the combatants. The bout was between a yearling colt by Florizel II.—Wise Flower and the four-year-old colt by Collar—Freda.

The attack was made by the yearling, who, after getting rid of his rider, savagely attacked the Freda colt, who happened to be trotting by at the time.

For quite fifteen minutes the two animals fought savagely, and the elder horse had all the worst of the deal. The yearling caught his opponent by the neck and severely mauled him. The Freda colt was borne to the ground, and his clothing, even to the bandages on his legs, was torn off.

Finding he was no match for his more youthful opponent, the Freda colt acted on the defensive when he regained his feet. He endeavoured to knock the youngster out with his heels, but the yearling avoided the blows by keeping close to the son of Collar.

When the animals were parted the Freda colt, who was much bigger than his opponent, looked much the worse for wear, while the yearling had few marks upon him.

Both animals belong to Colonial sportsmen racing in England, the yearling colt being the property of Messrs. Clark and Robinson and the Freda colt to Mr. Spencer Gollan, who owned that famous racer, Australian Star.

hacks, hunters, polo ponies, chargers, harness classes, jumping competitions, etc. Entries close with the Honorary Secretary at the Gymkhana on the 15th January.

The Bechtler Cup Polo Tournament at Jhansi was concluded on the 19th ultimo. Entries were not so large this year owing to various causes, nevertheless some interesting sport was witnessed. The first game was between the 4th Brigade R.F.A. and the "Exiles," the Gunners winning by 7 goals to 2. They were, however, beaten by the 30th Lancers "A" team in the second tie by 10 goals to 1, and the 24th Punjabis accounted for the 30th Lancers "B" team by 11 goals to 1. The final was between the 30th Lancers "A" and the 24th Punjabis, the former winning by 5 goals to 4. The Punjabis led at the start of the sixth chukker by 4 goals to 2, but the Cavalrymen equalised before time was called, and in the extra period scored their winning goal. Teams:—30th Lancers "A" team.—Captain Walker, 1; Colonel Raymond, 2; Duffadar Natha Singh, 3; and Captain Fasken, back. 24th Punjabis.—Mr. Stuart Menteth, 1; Mr. Haig, 2; Mr. Leslie Smith, 3; and Captain Edward's, back.

There appears to be a good opportunity for a few British sportsmen in Korea at present, and very likely permits could be obtained from the Japanese Government by those possessing a little influence. It seems that, in consequence of the prohibition against the carrying of firearms by natives, and also against the importation of rifles, fowling-pieces, and ammunition for the purpose of preventing the insurgents obtaining supplies of arms and ammunition, the hunting of wild game in Korea has been entirely stopped. The result has been a rapid increase in the number of wild beasts, and tigers and wolves are being constantly met with in the fields in the interior. In Pingan Province no less than 33 persons have been attacked by these animals lately, and at one place a tiger entered the house of a farmer and killed a baby. The authorities in Korea are becoming so alarmed at the rapid increase in the number of wild animals that they have made inquiries of the zoological department in the College of Science in the Tokyo Imperial University regarding the best means for destroying the tigers and wolves.

We regret to have to record the death on the 23rd ultimo of Lieutenant M. H. Beattie of the 33rd Q. O. Light Cavalry. While out shooting in the neighbourhood of Puttencherro he went into a tank after a duck he had shot, was entangled in the weeds, and drowned. The deceased, who was only twenty-one years of age, and was a promising and popular officer, was buried at Trimulgherry with full military honours.

Not long ago we referred to the enormities of the Khulna man-eating tiger, but now we read of another terror with a far greater roll of deaths to his credit. This animal has created panic in the Ganjam villages, having, it is alleged, in the past three years killed upwards of a hundred and fifty people, carrying some of them off from amongst bands of twenty or thirty men. A reward of Rs. 250 previously offered has proved inadequate, local shikaris being afraid to approach this tiger's haunts, so the Madras Government has raised the price set on its head, and the large reward of Rs. 1,000 is now offered for its destruction.

We have to thank Messrs. Traill and Company, the well-known stationers of this city, for a copy of their 3B Diary for 1910, which has now reached its 26th year of publication, and has a larger issue than ever. The firm has been long famous for their diaries, which they stock in no fewer than 34 various kinds, from pocket to foolscap size and ranging in price from As. 6 to Rs. 6. These excellent publications are brimful of useful information and tables and the ever-increasing sales speak volumes for their popularity. A very complete series of dates comprising Bengalee, Fuslee, Samvat, Mahomedan, Tamil and Malayalum, Telugu, Canarese and Burmese is given and the Calendar shows corresponding dates at a glance, while a special feature is the Accident Insurance Coupon for Rs. 7,500 which is given away with all diaries except those priced at As. 6.

Prince Christian has lately won fame in the hunting field by following hounds at the age of seventy-eight. This feat is, however, regularly beaten by a Mr. Jackson who lives in a little village of Yorkshire, and though eighty-five years of age still rides to hounds two or three times a week. He is described as six feet in height, with clear cut, red, weather-beaten face, clean shaven but for the white whiskers of a bygone generation at the side, dressed in hunting stock, check waistcoat, and black and white check trousers, such as every sportsman used once to wear; bending at the knees a little, with the habit of one who has spent more hours in the saddle than it falls to many men to breathe, with the thin calf of a man who has had a "good leg to a boot" he is a perfect and complete presentment of the English county gentleman of the mid-nineteenth century. Old men are often inclined to think things of to-day inferior to those of former days. Mr. Jackson is no exception and does not consider hunting what it was sixty years ago. Hunting, he says, has deteriorated for the same reason as affects other things—the growth of luxury. "In the good old days" hunting cost £800 a year, when it now costs £3,000. In those days motor-cars were unknown at meets and grooms did not follow all over the country with spare horses. If one horse could not last the day, he was not considered a fit hunter. He admits that hounds are a better breed now than they used to be, but does not consider their noses better; and as for horses he says modern horses are not fit to hold a candle to those of fifty years ago. He agrees that the fields ride hard still, some of them, but not with discretion and some of the people who follow hounds nowadays don't know wheat from seeds. No doubt much of what Mr. Jackson says is very correct. Nevertheless hunting is more popular than ever, and is still the finest sport obtainable in old England.

The unfavourable weather of winter will probably cause a temporary lull in the progress of aerial navigation. The latest record effected was that of M Louis Paulhan, who, recently at Sandown Park, made the greatest feat yet accomplished in high flying. After a preliminary flight, during which he attained a height of more than 500 feet, he started off with the intention of beating the world's greatest achievement of 885 feet by M. Rougier at Antwerp on a Voisin machine. He rose from the ground after running perhaps 150 yards, and made three circuits of the race-course, steadily rising higher and higher. Then he flew off over the common at a height of 700 feet, and when he circled once more round and passed over the lower end of the course the altitude was nearly 1,000 feet. He descended quickly to about 600 feet, and then, "cutting off" his engine, he made a glide which must have carried him quite half a mile before he came near the ground. He skimmed along within 8 feet or 10 feet of the grass for about 100 yards, but, instead of landing, he re-started the motor, and began to ascend once more. He passed close over the heads of the thousands of spectators, between the five-furlong course and the enclosures, and he was cheered enthusiastically as he did so. Eventually he landed near his shed. By this time Captain Carden, R.E., had worked out his calculations, and had found that M. Paulhan's greatest altitude was 977 feet, and just under 300 metres. It is interesting to note in this connection that an Austrian engineer named Bertuch, living at Gratz, has just invented a projectile to be discharged from a rifle that will be capable of bringing down even the largest airship from a height of more than 3,000 feet. The projectile is described as a diminutive aerial torpedo. The inventor is negotiating with the Austrian and German Governments, and has been requested to lay a model and drawings before the Austro-Hungarian War Office.

It has been decided to place a bronze panel representing the head and shoulders in life size of Tom Morris on the West Gable of the Royal and Ancient Clubhouse. The balance of the memorial fund, after paying the expenses for the erection, will be used to endow a bed in St. Andrew's Cottage Hospital, to be known as the Tom Morris Bed, and upon which golf professionals and caddies are to have first claim.

Australasia retains possession of the Davis International Lawn Tennis Cup for another year. A Sydney telegram states that the representatives of the Commonwealth beat the Americans in the challenge round, winning every set both singles and doubles. Since its inception in 1900 the Cup has been won by Australasia three times—in 1907, 1908 and 1909, four times by the British Isles in 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906, and twice by America in 1900 and 1902. There was no competition in 1901.

Mr. Charles Pitman, the famous oarsman, writer on rowing and Honorary Secretary of the Leander Club, was married on the 9th November to Miss Hilda Mary Donkin, sister of Mr. A. W. F. Donkin, who has thrice coxed the Oxford University crew. Mr. "Cherry" Pitman is an ex-president of the Oxford University Boat Club, and he stroked the Oxford eight to victory in three successive years, and rowed No. 7 upon another occasion. He was nicknamed "Cherry" at Eton, and in compliment to the name the bride wore trails of cherry blossom climbing over a lattice work depicted upon her wedding gown. There was a good splash of colour at this wedding. The seven bridesmaids were attired in rainbow fashion in soft shades of shot satin. Two were in Leander pink and violet, the next pair in old rose and pale rose, a third couple in steel blue and sea green, and the seventh in corn colour.

A London correspondent, alluding to what is now styled the "Jim and Jack farce," writes:—"Jeffries and Johnson day by day makes rather amusing reading. If the flaring posters which meet us at every turn were to be believed, the negotiations for the long-looked-for match were brought to a head the other day in New York, and the vast majority of people in this country are under the delusion that the battle which is to definitely decide the relative positions of white and black in the roped arena is to be pulled off in July of next year. When one carefully analyses the articles of agreement, however, it becomes painfully obvious that we are not a yard further than the day after Johnson beat Burns in Sydney. The "agreement" which has just been arrived at amounts to absolutely nothing at all.

The statement that "both men will deposit $5,000" is the crux of the situation. As things stand at present neither man will be mulcted in a sixpence if he creeps out of the "agreement." Not a shilling has been staked, and until some money is put up in the hands of a reputable and responsible stakeholder, sportsmen will be well advised to regard all further talk as so much "hot air." The idea of waiting until the offers of purses have been received seems to us to be rather ridiculous, and to be wholly at variance with established precedent. If the two men are in earnest, why in the name of goodness do they not make a substantial deposit as a guarantee of their bona-fides, and agree to box for the best purse offered! Failing the offer of a suitable purse—a contingency almost unthinkable—the men could draw down their deposits, and go their separate ways, secure in the knowledge that they, at least, had done their best in the matter. As matters stand at present, we are not one inch further than we were ten months ago, and that the men are just as far apart as they were when Jeffries was in Carlsbad and Johnson in California. The sort of "bluff" in which Jeffries and Johnson have just indulged may appeal to the American public, but is not be received with unstinted approbation on this side of the "big drink."

Full details of the great glove contest between Freddy Welsh and Johnny Summers for £2,200 and the light-weight championship of England, are given in our review of English sport further on. Welsh won on points after going the full twenty rounds, without showing a mark. Of course, a light-weight or any other championship of England must always create a big stir, must always have sportsmen "counting the days"; but there was something of more than ordinary interest in the occasion under notice Without a doubt, it was due to the fact that, whereas both men were born within the confines of the British Isles, one of them—Welsh—was, so far as his boxing is concerned, created in America. We are glad, at any rate, that gallant little Wales gave Welsh birth.

As a lad Welsh had no more idea than the average Nonconformist minister of taking up boxing as a means of making money. As a matter of fact, he was, according to all accounts, delicate to a degree. But, wisely enough, he, after putting his feet on Yankee soil, took up physical culture in the real and proper sense, and then the frame of the Welshman began to take a mould that has since served him magnificently. Welsh has never gone back on physical culture. His ideas of training are not according to the British book; his stunts (to use an Americanism) are in many respects foreign to the home professional. But his record goes to prove that he made no mistake in sticking to his exercises, his body wriggles, his peculiar exercises for the neck, the stomach, and other parts of the frame. And what a wonderful record is his!

He has been boxing less than four years—that is, seriously—and he has met the best in the world. Very often a boxer has no desire to remember his first contest. If you asked him how he felt, he would very likely answer: "I didn't feel it at all, the other chap did it so quickly." But Welsh probably recalls his first duck under the ropes with pride. His opponent was Young Williams, whom he met in the Quaker City on 21st December, 1905. Williams was put to sleep in three rounds. There was no question then of what the Yankee critics described as a "promising mitt-man" being short of bouts, and Welsh was as busy as a bee in the following year.

No fewer than twenty-three affairs were shared—all, of course, in America—and not a contest did the youngster—for he was some way off man's estate—lose. The next year found him amongst his own people, and very naturally, he was given something to do at the National Sporting Club. He proved himself a boxer out of the ordinary straightaway. He could not very well have had a stiffer proposition than that sturdy battler, Seaman Hayes. Well, Hayes did not win; neither did Young Joseph, his following opponent. This was a fifteen rounds bit of business, and the Londoner, admittedly clever, if deficient in punching power, was also compelled to give Welsh best.

It was now a case of from victory on to victory. Young Owen, Dick Lee, Seaman Hayes again, Joe White, Gunner Hart, and Arthur Ellis were each put through the mill by the young vegetarian, five of them at Pontypridd, and the other at Merthyr. Then Welsh crossed to America again, and was soon in continued request. Philadelphia, Mailwaukee, Boston, and Los Angeles were visited in the latter part of 1907 and in 1908, and always Welsh was progressing fast. There was no fast and loose work with this more than ordinarily intelligent boxer. Welsh had his eye on the topmost rung of the ladder

It was in 1908 that he met with his only defeat. That hard nut, Packy McFarland, was given the notoriously bad decision over him at Milwaukee in a ten rounds bout. This was on 21st February. It will be observed that Welsh was right among the swells of his division now. But still he won; not even Abe Attell could stop him. The present year has brought another sheaf of successes. George Memsic, Young Erne, Ray Bronson, Young Donohue, Johnny Frayne, Phil Brock, and Jack Goodman all tried their hands on the elusive Pontypridd youth without being able to achieve a win. Jack Goodman provided Welsh's last go in America; soon afterwards Fred was in England.

He was not long without a customer. Young Joseph fancied his skill against the one who had "baffled the best" that America could put against him. He had a rude awakening. He never had a chance. Joseph is very good; yet Welsh beat him at everything in the game. After this, nobody thought for a moment that Henri Piet would worry Welsh. He did not. He lasted a round more than Joseph—twelve against eleven—but was always fighting a forlorn hope. Then Joe Fletcher. As with Joseph and Piet, so with Fletcher. Fletcher was up against a scientific boxing machine; there was something in Welsh's methods altogether outside his ken, and he merely hit the air in searching for a body that always seemed in the wrong place. And in this last contest he proved himself from start to finish as clever a boxer and as quick on his feet as ever.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 13th November 1909.

Last Tuesday London acclaimed its new Lord Mayor, Sir John Knill. The time-honoured tawdry, mostly meaningless procession was not included I am thankful to say; but it was replaced by a sufficiently picturesque and interesting sight. Instead of the emblematical figures in their ill-fitting toggery and the ricketty tableaux, the significance of which was ever a puzzle, we had two thousand assorted troops, eight bands and a martial and musical atmosphere prevailed throughout. There were heavy dragoons and bluejackets, a select band of seven Balaclava survivors in carriages, territorials, and fire brigades, boy scouts and Lord Roberts' Shooting Club boys, Naval School cadets, Doggetts' Coat and Badge winners in a setting of Police and representatives of a few of the Worshipful Companies. But if the emblems and the allegories were absent the crowd seemed to me to be at full strength, the fine day brought the populace in its tens of thousands. City clerks, hatless, and cigarsatted, pale, worried girl-typists, beautifully-dressed women and badly-dressed women, merchants, tradesmen, and hungry and tattered lougers, and drifters elbowed one another trod on each other's boots—and unanimously obeyed the Police managers of the kerbstones. The substitution of this military pageant for the conventional circus parade I think pleased the majority, however painful it may have been to the wags, one of whom remarked in a puzzled sort of way "Blimey Bill, this is a queer sorter Lord Mayor's show. Why I ain't larfed once." Lady Knill revived the custom which died out thirty years ago and joined the Lord Mayor at the Law Courts. Attired in a gown of silver and white with opalescent gleams, the Lady Mayoress was surrounded by a bevy of seventeen maids of honour in shimmering white satin. There were nearly 900 guests at the banquet which, as usual, began with turtles and ended with pastries—and, probably, indigestion.

Retiring Anglo-Indians of social status—those, at least, who bring away sufficient energy to admit of pensioned activity and insufficient pelf to make the prospect of additional income not altogether displeasing—might do worse than join the recently formed corps of "Social Guides," London. The headquarters are in Albemarle Street, and the object of the promoters is to provide Foreign, Colonial and Provincial visitors with ideal companions and cicerones. We tried the lady guide some years ago, she failed, but this new organisation seems likely to succeed. The qualifications are a certain social position and a knowledge of the localities and places in and around the Metropolis, which the cultured and more or less affluent visitor wants to see.

The young American who wants to attend a race-meeting without the risk of being plundered by betting-sharks; the Colonial from the "back-blocks," who would like a season's hunting in the shires and is anxious to avoid any breach of hunting etiquette; the Foreigner visiting London on business, who has brought over his wife and family and would like them to have a man's protection and assistance in their theatre-going, sight-seeing and shopping, will now be able to engage a "social guide." Captain Dennison Adams, the founder of the Corps, says:—"We believe that many visitors to London will appreciate the advantages of having the services of a guide and companion who is their equal in social position. Every one of our guides has an intimate knowledge of London—the best routes, hotels, shops, and theatres—and of all that savoir-faire which can turn travel and sight-seeing from a weariness into a pleasure. We have guides speaking practically every European language and able to give advice and a helping hand in all kinds of pastimes, from big-game shooting to theatre-going. We are prepared to do everything that a friend of the family of the greatest possible good-nature, capability, and tact might be called upon to do." Obviously the retired Military or Naval Officer should fill the bill completely. The India returned army man would bring with him half the outfit in any case, and to acquire the special knowledge of the ground to be covered should not take him very long methinks.

I looked in this week at the Exhibition of Cookery and Food (the twentieth of the series, by the way) held at the Royal Horticultural Hall and being a subscriber to the "feed the brute" theory I must say I was not little interested and entertained. It was really a first rate show and there was a plethora of novelties, many attractive, a few quite startling. Chefs proved their culinary skill on the table d'honneur, which marked the centre of the Exhibition. Nor had the topical interest been lost sight of, for amongst enterprising schemes there was a Farthest North supper table. Icebergs had been cleverly devised in a "Fantasy of the Kitchen." A pack of Eskimo dogs drew a Homard a la Victoria, there were bear cutlets and other delectable morsels, even to petits fours under the icicles. On another table a confectioner proved by his marvellous lightness of touch the progress made in the manipulation of sugar. Side by side were placed a sample of work from the days of Francatelli, a military trophy elaborate of its kind and complete in detail, and a sugar aeroplane in the most fragile of fretwork floating over a blue globe.

Demonstrations formed an important part of the scheme, and for this purpose three model kitchens had been specially erected. Dishes for invalids figured in the section devoted usually to the culinary displays of nurses in the large hospitals, and in these private nurses and amateurs competed. Cooking in the services once more afforded soldier and sailor cooks an opportunity of showing their powers. A coffee making competition attracted much attention and produced excellent results; the vegetarian and fruginerous human had their specialities on view. It was almost exhilarating, certainly it was appetising and filling, as a couple of hours sampling convinced your "Vagrant."

derision and anger in others. Really, of all the wretched piffle ever put into the mouths of the dead this "spirit interview" was the worst. Of course, W. T. Stead has deceived himself—he is far too cute to have been humbugged by "Julia" or any one else. It is true that the late Mr. Gladstone, who had a habit of guarding himself against possible misconstruction, had a way of introducing parentheses and re-parentheses into his speech as he went on, but he never spoke the atrocious English attributed to him in the interview, while he would have recoiled in horror from the technical slang of the spookmongers, which he is made to mouth so glibly. But what an indecent business it is this trying to drag dead people into the whirlpool of politics, and pretending to be able to give their views on the Budget. Such rubbish cannot be contradicted, but fortunately there is no need for that. The English are far too sensible a people to be caught with such very evident chaff.

I MENTIONED in my last letter the Suffragette outrage at Bermondsey, when the returning officer was nearly blinded by the flinging of some liquid corrosive chemical into a ballot-box by some wretched female. One notes in this connection with some satisfaction that the effects of the campaign of violence by the Suffragettes is clearly indicated in the results of the London Municipal Elections. Nearly all the women candidates were defeated thank goodness! and chiefly for the reason that men did not want any exhibitions of hysteria or violence on their borough councils. It may have been unfair to many of the candidates personally, but they must suffer for the misdeeds of others of their sex. The policy of exasperation which has been pursued for so many months, and which is still unfortunately appealing to scores of hysterical women, is at last beginning to have an effect, but it is not the effect which the would-be Amazons of the Suffrage movement desired. Men are absolutely "fed up" with it all and can stand very little more of it.

"LAL" BROUGH, the veteran actor, died in London on Monday, aged seventy-four. Mr. Lionel Brough's was an interesting career and as a natural consequence Brough stories have been liberally served up by the news-mongers the last few days. At eighteen he left a clerkship in the office of the Illustrated London News to take a twelve-line part at the Lyceum in one of the extravaganzas of his brother William. The death of Mme. Vestris ended his first experience of the stage, and he went back to the newspaper in time to assist in publishing the first number of the Daily Telegraph, breaking the peace of the streets by organising the first service of newspaper boys. Five years with the Morning Star, now a forgotten luminary, ended his days of journalism. He left London to flit about the country with "Pepper's Ghost" and to play small parts in Liverpool. When he saw London again in 1867 he was a finished comedian, and after he had played Tony Lumpkin in a run of two hundred nights his position was assured. Tony Lumpkin, Bob Acres, Dogberry, clown or gravedigger—he was the best of comedians, the old classical humour of the English drama came from his mouth as though he had been author as well as player. America and South Africa were in the map of his tours. Every great actor of his generation played with him, and all the theatre bills in turn had his name. His great benefit night four years ago did not mark the end of his stage activities. His last appearance was in the spring of this year, when he played "Moses" in the revival of "The School for Scandal" at His Majesty's.

On the stage and off it he was one of the most popular of men, and would say truly that in his half-century as a stage player he had made many a friend and never an enemy.

WHILE we observed the Lord Mayor's Day we also in a quiet way celebrated the King's birthday. The honours' list afforded the usual surprises and comments. It included an admiral, a motor-car maker, an explorer, a sunday school president, a financier, a worsted spinner, a tramway king, a store chemist, a boot-maker, an editor, an ordance expert and a railway director. No lack of variety I think you will agree.

"THE Great Mrs. Alloway," which was produced at the Globe Theatre last Saturday night, belongs to the mechanical type of play; but the author, Douglas Murray, is not sufficiently a skilled architect to make his plot and his people plausible, and he has so little really to tell that it is not until the third and last act that the play really begins to move. His theme is the eternal "Woman With a Past." Mrs. Hartland is to all outward appearances a wealthy and irreproachable widow, who, although coming no one knows whence, is received into good society in a Sussex country district. Her son has become engaged to the local Vicar's daughter, and the wedding is approaching, when there arrives from India, Sir Charles Hewitt-Gore, the bride's uncle. And he makes the sensational discovery that the quiet and eminently respectable Mrs. Hartland is identical with "the great Mrs. Alloway," a notorious woman who "blazed through India like a princess," selling herself for gold, and ruining men by the dozen. Sir Charles declares that the wedding must never take place; Mrs. Hartland tells the story of her life, which shows that she was basely ruined and deserted, and forthwith proceeded to make war on men to revenge herself. Sir Charles remains unmoved; he declares that the truth must be told; Mrs. Hartland prepares for suicide, and the long-suffering audience thinks that something is about to happen at last; but, instead, she repeats the story of her life to the young and innocent bride, who sheds tears of compassion, and says the secret must be kept between them. Thereupon Sir Charles, touched by the forgiveness of the young girl, comes from behind the curtains, where he had been carefully hidden by Mrs. Hartland, in anticipation of the pathetic scene, and goes out of the room, leaving the audience to presume that he will hold his tongue like the bride, and that the wedding bells will still ring out.

The final scenes have a certain theatrical strength and value, but they are led up to by a series of false scents that become a little trying. None of the characters is human, and in consequence it was impossible for the company to make much of their parts. Miss Lena Ashwell, who must be getting tired of playing the "Woman with a Past," acted cleverly at times, but she could not make Mrs. Hartland convincing. Mr. Fred Kerr, in spite of his easy manner, could get no grip upon Sir Charles, who was supposed to be a good fellow, and actually behaved like a cad. Mr. Dawson Milward, Mr. Arthur Wontner, and Miss Madge McIntosh, among others, were wasted on the merest shadows.

WINTER DUCK SHOOTING.

DUCK shooting at home is a very strenuous sport, calling for a great deal of patience and endurance, under trying weather conditions. In India on the other hand, one may enjoy magnificent duck-driving in Sind, or perfect jheel shooting on the great marshes of the Ganges valley, under pleasant picnicking conditions. I am not sure though that a few hard-won duck from a Scotch or English foreshore, are not worth more than the best of days after the same birds in the East. Duck shooting at home is the one sport which keeps its same hard primitive conditions. No artificiality can be imported into the habits of the shy wild fowl of our Northern coasts. The shooter pits his wits against the keen intelligence of the duck; he must possess the best of weapons, perfectly loaded cartridges, a thorough knowledge of the habits of his quarry, and a hardy constitution, to achieve success. It is truly a man's game.

Picture to yourself a tidal river, two miles broad, with the water steadily creeping over the wide band of frozen rime, which edges all the length of the shore. At a distance from the high water mark varying from forty to sixty yards, runs a long so-called sea wall: this is, however, only reinforced with stones at the base, and consists principally of a massive earthen bank, in some places twelve, in others only six feet high, according to the contour of the fields in rear, which it has been built to guard from the encroaching tide. The day is still, and a foggy haze hangs over the river, hiding the opposite shores from our ken, save, when at intervals the rays of a wintry, heatless sun break through.

The sea wall is the all important factor in our plan of campaign. Being as it is always within long shot of high water mark, it affords a means of approaching unseen such ducks as may swim in with the rising tide. A hard frost, such as this, freezes the lakes and tarns among the hills, and so the duck come down to the tidal waters to feed on shell fish, crustaceans, etc., such as can be gathered among the flats as the tide ebbs. The sea wall is covered with grass, and here and there along its top grow bunches of weed: these latter are most useful, enabling one to peep over the top and prospect through the stalks, without showing the head. Duck rely on their keen sight to a great extent, to protect them from danger, and the top of a cap breaking the contour of the upper edge of the wall, would be a very suspicious object when viewed from the river.

If one uses a twelve-bore magnum, or a ten-bore, chilled shot of about hundred pellets to the ounce will be found the most generally useful for shore shooting. No. 4 is very good for shots up to fifty or possibly even sixty yards, but even at sixty yards, and certainly at all ranges beyond, larger sized shot pays the best. Lightly wounded cripples are a terrible nuisance, it is much better to use pellets which deal such a crushing blow that the duck is knocked out of time, even when not struck in a vital part, so that one can gather the birds after a successful shot without difficulty.

For some little time our peeps over the wall are unrewarded, but at last a good distance away, we spy four dots on the edge of the incoming tide, which a careful examination shows to be mallard. We mark a bump in the bank, which seems to be just about opposite the birds, and then getting down into the field behind, walk quietly along under cover till we reach the point marked. Besides keen eyesight, duck are endowed with highly developed powers of hearing, and it is always necessary to move as quietly as possible. Near the place is a rank tuft of grass on the top of the wall, and creeping up the reverse slope, we peep through it at the ducks. Our calculations have not proved very exact, and it will be necessary to go on another forty yards in order to get exactly opposite the birds. On reaching the precise spot where we wish to look over, we find that there is no friendly bunch of grass or weed, but close to the right, place a large stone has been left on the crest of the embankment, which will serve the same purpose. A very cautious glance round the edge of the stone reveals the annoying fact that owing to a trend in the shore line, the advancing water is at this point still eighty yards off, and the duck quite eighty-five, much too far for a shot even with our trusty magnum. The only thing is to wait, and huddled up in our shooting cape at the foot of the wall, we sit through many slowly creeping, frozen minutes. A final peep round the stone brings gladness, the duck are now but sixty yards away, and in a few moments will be yet nearer. At last the time for the shot has come, and now the tiresome birds have separated: we must wait until two at any rate are close together, so as to make the best of the shot. At length that good luck comes to us who have deserved it for our patient waiting; three out of the four duck clump close together; the trigger is touched, and 1½ ounces of big shot tear up the water all round the trio. The fourth duck springs into the air with a frightened quack, but the second barrel cuts him over stone dead, before he is gone half a dozen yards. Two out of the three duck first fired at, lie motionless, the third is swimming out to sea. Throwing all concealment to the winds, we dash over the top of the wall and down to the water's edge, cramming in fresh cartridges as we run. The duck makes frantic efforts to get out of the danger zone, but is still within easy range, when we reach the water, and a third cartridge stretches him out. We have wading stockings with us, and boots are rapidly slipped off, and stockings on, and all the four ducks are safely gathered. A fair example of a really successful shot, where everything has gone just right. The whole stalk, and subsequent operations have consumed much time, and we find the tide getting so high, that the duck have gone off to safer quarters further away from land, to wait for the ebb. The plover, however, have on the contrary come inland to wait for the flats to uncover. In a ploughed field not far off, we see a number of dots, which are doubtless a flock of golden plover. We will go and prospect. Golden plover they are right enough, but ensconsed in a highly strategical position. They have chosen the middle of the plough, far from all hedges for their siesta. On our side matters are hopeless, the hedge is quite two hundred yards from the birds, at its nearest point. On the far side, however, things look a little better. The fence takes a bit of a bend into the field, and possibly at some point may be within distant shot of the plover. We make a wide circuit around, and get to the far side of the distant hedge. Behind this we walk screened fairly well from view, but discover that the nearest point of the bend is at least a hundred and thiry yards from the flock. We note, however, a small hummock in the field thirty yards from the fence, and towards this a shallow ditch runs diagonally from a place further along our fence: we therefore go some distance on, and find the end of this ditch where it meets the hedge. On all fours we burrow through the fence into the ditch, and in the same attitude creep along the bottom, till we are behind the desired hummock. Flattened out we wriggle up this till we can see over the crest. The flock is well bunched considering, and only ninety yards, or a little more, away. A shot with large shot should effect something. Aiming a little high, we fire the right barrel, and then springing on to our feet, the left as the birds sweep swiftly away. Two golden plover have dropped to the first shot, and a third to the second barrel. Not at all a bad result considering the distance.

The above gives a fair idea of the difficulties of home shore shooting, the hunter's wits have to be pitted against those of the birds. To my mind, and to the minds of many others, it is the very finest sport remaining to us in Britain.

TROUT ON THE NILGIRIS.

THE story of the various attempts which have been made to establish trout on the Nilgiris is a chequered one. It begins with the bringing of live fry from Germany by Mr. McIvor away back in the sixties. There were about a dozen of them, they survived the journey, and two years later Mr. McIver reported that they had spawned. His accounts of them and their progeny, however, were and in some quarters still are, received with polite but chilling incredulity; and anyhow, none of the descendants of his little band of pioneers, his "came-over-with-the-Mayflower" settlers, is now to be seen. Followed several ill-fated attempts to import ova, instead of the more delicate fry. The first lot were entrusted to some genius who was possessed of that little knowledge which is so dangerous a thing. Knowing that tropical heat was bad for trout ova he had them stowed in the refrigerating room of the steamer which brought them out where they were straightway frozen to death. The next lot were sent out so that they arrived in the middle of the hot weather, and they were roasted to death. Yet another lot were sent up from Mettapollium, in a motor-car, and the vibration thereof gave them curvature of the spine, so that they all died in very early infancy.

A dozen years ago some scores of fry were successfully hatched from imported ova in the Snowdon ponds at Ootacamund, and distributed about the streams of the plateau, but not one of them is now to be seen, and it seems certain that they never bred. Probably the dearth of fish food in some of the hill streams had a good deal to do with this melancholy ending. Trout, like other mortals, must eat to live, and yet in some of these rivulets there is an almost complete absence of the minnows, small mollusca, and so on, which form their ordinary food. The high temperature of the streams was doubtless the reason why they failed to multiply, as if ova hatch out in water at anything above 60° Fahr. the little trout are so weak that they do not survive long. This is the main reason why the new hatching ponds have now been located at Avalanche, sixteen miles or so from Ootacamund. Down from the big hill at the back of the bungalow there runs a delightfully cool stream, shaded by thick shola nearly all the way, and where this reaches the bottom of the valley the new hatchery has been built. A continual rivulet of the purest and coolest water runs through it, and at last it looks as though an end has come to the vicissitudes which for so long have hindered the introduction of trout on the Nilgiris.

Till quite lately, the only inhabitants of this carefully planned nursery were some plump but lively rainbow trout which had been netted out of the Parson's Valley stream not far from Pykara. These were the survivors of 100 yearling fry which were brought from Ceylon three years ago by Mr. Wilson, the expert. Rainbow trout stand high temperatures better than brown trout, but none the less these suffered severely on their journey up to the hills. As far as Erode, they were all flourishing and cheerful; but there the train which was bringing a further supply of ice to keep down the temperature of the water in which they were travelling was late, and before it arrived, more than two-thirds of them had succumbed to the climate of that sweltering junction. Those which eventually reached Ootacamund were put out in the Parson's Valley stream, an ideal rivulet containing plenty of food and ending in a cascade which prevents undue wandering. There they not only waxed fat but actually bred. The risk that the big ones would begin to feed upon their lesser relations led to the former being netted and removed to the Avalanche hatching ponds, where they are now as tame as chickens and come hurrying up to the surface when the man in charge calls them. They are splendid specimens and a happy augury for the sport which must follow when their numbers have increased sufficiently for fishing to begin. At present, they are being anxiously watched in order that as soon as they show signs of spawning they may be taken out and "stripped" of their ova, which will be hatched out in the hatchery. This institution is entirely up to date, and young fry which do not hatch out properly, when they have beds made of glass rods to do it on, and nice rounded pebbles to hide among when they have done it, and a Turkish towel to prevent them from getting into the overflow arrangements, and a cool current of crystal-clear water to flow over them all the while, will be ungrateful indeed.

Just lately, in fact, several hundreds (or thousands) of fry have been showing how well they appreciate the arrangements made in their new nursery, for the long-expected consignment of rainbow ova from New Zealand has arrived in excellent condition, and hatched out almost as soon as it was unpacked from the cool moss and ice in which it did the long journey from the Antipodes to the Tropics. Mr. Wilson has had the care of these, and they have neither been frozen solid nor roasted whole, nor do they suffer from curvature of their little spines, but are as perky as one could wish. When their childhood in the hatchery is over they are to enter life in some of the streams up the Avalanche end of the plateau, for here not only is the water cooler but it contains more food, and even where the latter is in defect, elaborate arrangements have been made to provide these pampered youngsters with a better table, minnows having been bred for their special benefit and a mollusca farm started where millions of little crabs are being grown and fatter to make a variety in the menu.

Trout, perhaps, care less than they should, about the picturesqueness of their surroundings, but fishermen are usually thoughtful and nature-loving folk and find that their sport derives an added pleasure from a charming setting. This latter will not be wanting. The Billetada stream, in which some of the young trout are to be put, is surely one of the most beautiful in all India, as it wanders about among the grass hills looking for a way down to the low country and the sea, and the Avalanche Valley evoked perhaps more superlatives from the early settlers on the hills (in those leisurely days people had time to put their impressions on paper, and all the best literature about the Nilgiris belongs to that period) than any other part of the plateau. Later and more hurried generations give it less attention. They have swallowed uncritically the fable that there never was any avalanche, and that the name merely means "first post" because the tappal went that way to Malabar. But at the time the first shanties were rising in Ootacamund the great scar that the avalanche had left in the side of the hill in front of which the bungalow now stands was a well-known landmark for miles around, and even from Ootacamund itself, and people still remembered how, in the words of the old chronicler, "there was a constant fall of rain for eight days with heaving, rolling thunder; during all which time the winds were so tempestuous, and the country so enveloped in darkness, that none dare stir from their homes. When at length the weather cleared up, they discovered the tremendous havoc that had been made; and that the river Pavhk, overflowing its banks in every direction, was surcharged with the wrecks and fragments of the mountain's side." In those days Ootacamund folk had leisure to go and camp in the beautiful valley, and they even proposed to turn it into a second Marienbad because of the spring of wonderful chalybeate water which issues from the foot of the Avalanche. Nowadays a proposal to go out to the Avalanche bungalow is apt to meet merely with an enquiry whether one can get a motor out there, and, this being answered in the negative, with summary rejection. Let us hope it will ever remain impossible to get a motor out to that peaceful valley; but perhaps when its streams are full of 2lb. trout even the present hurrying generation will consider it worth while to make the expedition thither, even though they cannot do it at twenty miles an hour.—Madras Mail.

THE SERVICE RIFLE OF THE FUTURE.

THEORETICALLY the modern small bore rifle has arrived at such a state of perfection in flatness of trajectory and accuracy that it is hard to see how it can be improved. The velocity now imparted to the small bore bullet is so great that it flies with practically a flat trajectory to as great a range as the eye can see distinctly so that the sportsman need not trouble himself about the adjustment of sights; anything within 300 yards at any rate is within point blank range the sight being taken slightly fuller or finer being quite enough to allow for the slight fall of the bullet at sporting ranges.

The sporting weapon not being required to be fired very often can be made to last a long time with care, the wear and tear of the high velocity charge not being in its case of much importance, but in the case of military and target rifles it becomes a very serious matter with very small calibres and high velocities.

The ·303 service rifle with its comparatively low velocity will shoot with sufficient accuracy up to 5,000 or 6,000 rounds and it might be possible perhaps to adapt it to shoot a light "Spitzer" pointed bullet with 300 or 400 feet per second increased velocity without shortening its life. It would certainly increase its value as a practical military arm by giving it a flatter trajectory than it has at present. The Germans, Americans, French and perhaps some other armies have adapted their Service rifles of calibres much the same as ours in this manner with great success, the German rifle especially having increased its initial velocity some 700 or 800 ft. secs. so that it can sweep the ground up to nearly 1,000 yards without troubling about adjusting sights, so flat is its trajectory. And this has been done I believe without seriously shortening the life of the barrel though erosion.

I have heard rumours that the projected automatic rifle which we are to have as a national arm some day—after the present Budget perhaps—is to be a small bore of between ·256 and ·280 calibre, shooting a bullet of 180 grains with high velocity. A rifle of this description has certainly done wonders at Bisley of late. It is all that is desirable in the matter of trajectory and accuracy but I have heard rumours that its life is one of very short duration as far as accuracy goes, some 300 rounds being the limit for extreme accuracy and that after 500 rounds it cannot be depended on for Bisley work. If this is the case it is evidently due to the erosion and wear and tear, the extremely high pressure charge and comparatively heavy bullet used, the ordinary weight of bullet for the ·280 calibre being 160 grains which is 20 less than the Spitzer pointed one used, the initial velocity of which besides is some 400 or 500 feet per second higher. It is be hoped that our professional rifle experts have taken all this into consideration.

COLLECTOR'S MINIATURE SHOT GUNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—There must be a considerable number of people in India who are interested in miniature shot guns, for they are so useful for collecting purposes. Moreover they are such light little weapons, and the cartridges are so diminutive, that it is no trouble to take one along, when going for a scramble or a walk. My latest experiments with small bore shot guns have been devoted to the ·360. An ingenious friend who revels in metal work, in a marvellously short space of time, converted an old air gun barrel, which I bought for a shilling, into a shot barrel, to fit the frame of a Stevens' rifle. The barrel was bored out to ·360 inch, to within three quarters of an inch of the muzzle. This last ¾ inch consists of two portions of equal length. A gentle slope from ·360 inch to ·345 inch in diameter, and then the last three-eighths of the barrel cylindrical, and ·345 inch diameter. This is practically a replica on a diminished scale, of the method used for full choking a twelve bore. That is the proportion of constriction is about the same. The barrel was then chambered for the ·360 shot gun cartridge. This is a delightful little green case, just like an ordinary shot cartridge, but in miniature. It is very well made, and takes the ordinary caps and anvils, so that it can be reloaded a number of times. A tiny felt wad, like a small edition of that used in 12 bore cartridges, goes over the powder, which is 16 or 18 grains of Black (smokeless we have not yet tried). Then comes about a fifth of an ounce of shot, with a thin card wad above. As to the best size of shot; for killing fairly large birds, I think No. 7 gives the best results. This size for some reason seems particularly well suited to small bore shot guns, and is a favourite with users of 20 and 28 bores. Similarly with my tiny ·360, I found No. 7 shot gave very regular close patterns, unmistakeably superior in this respect to No. 8, which however also shot well.

On testing No. 7 shot in the muzzle of the gun, it was found to fit into exact layers, while No. 8 did not. This, no doubt, accounts for the good shooting, and to get equally good patterns with smaller sizes, it would be necessary to try the gun carefully with Nos. 9 and 10, when probably one or other would be found to suit it just as well as 7.

The patterns obtained were typical full choke diagrams. At ten yards a six or seven inch circle contained most of the charge, only a few stray pellets being outside. Similarly at 15 yards nearly all the shot were in a twelve inch circle. The gun gives a good killing pattern at 20 to 25 yards, and with a little luck might often kill up to 30 yards

It will be seen, therefore, that the little weapon is most efficient for collecting purposes, and that it would also kill a partridge or hare if not too far off, fair sized shot being used.

The experimental gun throws its shot very evenly, over the killing circle; the pattern being however, as with larger choke bores decidedly thicker towards the centre. It was found that a still closer pattern could be obtained, by oiling the shot: this, however, seemed to cause clusters in the pattern, and it is doubtful if oiling is a practical expedient, as some of the oil would probable find its way to the powder and deteriorate it, if the cartridges were kept loaded any time.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

(Winner trained by F. McGrath.)

BETTING: 4 to 1 each agst. Prince Foote and Trafalgar, 8 to 1 Alawa, 10 to 1 each Flavel and Pendil, 12 to 1 King's Cross, 20 to 1 each Post Town and Ungarie, 25 to 1 each Blue Book and Trelo Vouni, 33 to 1 each Kooringa, Nushka and Delaware, 40 to 1 each Lord Nolan, Eric and Danilo, 50 to 1 each Artillerie, Gaby and Kyeadgerie, 66 to 1 each Footland and Knox, 100 to 1 each Carl Dour and Aberdeen, 200 to 1 each Idyll and Sir Edwin.

As they ranged up at the barrier the horses were difficult to identify owing to the dense lines of people forming a dark background. Artillerie was on the rails, then Danilo and Carl Dour, while Alawa, Trafalgar, Lord Nolan, Prince Foote and Kooringa were prominent in the centre division. On the extreme outside was Trelo Vouni, Blue Book, Delaware and Idyll. Artillerie was the first to jump away, and forged ahead of Alawa, Carl Dour, Idyll, Trafalgar and Eric. Entering the course proper Artillerie was a clear length ahead of Post Town, Eric and Idyll, and then followed Flavel, Ungarie, Aberdeen and Trelo Vouni, with Danilo bringing up the rear. Eric (on the outside) was showing the way past the stand to Idyll, Artillerie and Trelo Vouni, who were closely followed by Trafalgar, Ungarie, Kooringa, Gaby and Delaware, with Alawa a long way back and Prince Foote last. Danilo was tailed off. Idyll took charge on leaving the straight, where she was two lengths in advance of Eric, who was closely succeeded by Artillerie, Trelo Vouni, Delaware and Ungarie. Didus and Trafalgar (on the rails) came next, with Kooringa, Carl Dour and Flavel leading the others, and Prince Foote still in the ruck and Danilo last. At the bridge Eric was three lengths in advance of Artillerie and Ungarie, while Idyll had dropped back fourth. On their heels came Trafalgar, with Kyeadgerie leading the others, and Danilo still last. Going along the back Eric had drawn out four lengths. Artillerie still held second place, and then came Delaware, Trelo Vouni, Kooringa, Trafalgar, Gaby and Footpad, while Alawa was moving up, but Prince Foote was still some distance away. Racing past the abattoirs Eric was still pacing ahead of Ungarie, Trelo Vouni, King's Cross, Kooringa, Idyll, Trafalgar, Lord Nolan and Alawa, but at the sheds Trafalgar and Alawa were within a length of Eric, while Alawa was making a sharp run outside, with Trelo Vouni, Aderdeen, Lord Nolan and King's Cross leading the others, and Prince Foote emerging from the ruck. Swinging round the home turn Trafalgar slipped up on the inside of Eric, and was immediately challenged by Alawa, while Eric, Aberdeen, Trelo Vouni, Lord Nolan and Artillerie were leading the others, and Prince Foote on the pronounced outside. Entering the straight Trafalgar (on the rails) and Alawa were going stride for stride well clear of Aberdeen. Then came Eric and Lord Nolan, with Prince Foote coming fast. At the distance Alawa had just the slightest advantage over Trafalgar, while Prince Foote was within striking distance and had past Aberdeen. At the half-distance the Derby colt had the measure of the others, and coming up in magnificent style he won by three lengths. A head separated second and third, and Trafalgar was a head off fourth. Some lengths away came Flavel (fifth), Nushka (sixth), Eric (seventh), Didus (eighth), Pendil (ninth), Trelo Vouni (tenth), Danilo (eleventh) and Gaby (twelfth), while the last three to pass the judge's box were Ungarie, Post Town, and Kooringa. Time—3mins. 27¼secs.

"A London lady once went to a book shop in search of an edition of Browning for a wedding present. 'Have you a nice copy of Browning?' she asked the bookseller. 'No, madam,' he said, 'I never keep any book I can't understand, and I can't understand Browning.' 'Oh,' she exclaimed, surprised and amused; but wishing to get such a gift volume as she needed, she continued, 'Then have you Praed?' 'Yes, madam,' he answered, 'I have prayed, too, but still I don't understand!'"

THE TURF.

LINCOLN.

The autumn meeting on the Carholme marks the beginning of the end of the season, though the conditions overhead on the 8th instant had no suggestiveness about them of matters waning. In this respect, by the least stretch of imagination, one might have imagined he was assisting at the spring meeting, as the frost and fog of the early morning gave place to a delightfully mellow atmosphere, and never before at Lincoln has the light been so perfect for the picking out of colours and the watching of all the varying phases of the respective contests. A nice breeze down the course had the two-fold effect of drying the going, which had been hourly improving, and of wafting the town's smoke northwards. The card produced some excellent sport, through backers of favourities did badly, for in the two principal events there were surprises. Results:—

The second day passed off satisfactorily enough, though the weather was anything but pleasant during the latter part of the afternoon. While the steeplechase was being run rain began to fall, in sympathy, perhaps, with the eight horses who came to grief at one or other of the first dozen fences. Thereafter the conditions were decidedly disagreeable, and the last two or three events were carried through in gloom. The going was inclined to the sticky side, and after the further rain we have had it will probably be distinctly heavy to-day.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

For the third time in four successive Saturdays the three London teams engaged in the First League all suffered defeat last Saturday. A single goal decided the result in all three instances, but the narrowness of the margin will not afford much consolation to the followers of the Metropolitan teams. With their defence reconstituted, Tottenham, in running Newcastle United to a goal at St. James's Park, did quite as well as could have been expected, but Chelsea, although strengthened by the return of Hilsdon, went down at Stamford Bridge before Everton, and the Arsenal, after putting up a capital fight against Bradford for the greater part of the game, lost through a blunder just before the close by McDonald, who previously had been keeping goal in excellent style. Chelsea had some excuse for their defeat, Fairgray being disabled before the interval. They defended very stoutly well into the second half, and if never looking likely to win, might have got off with a pointless draw. Warren, however, handled near goal, and from the resultant penalty against Chelsea came the one score of the match. The season being less than three months old, there remains, of course, plenty of time for all three clubs to build up strong elevens—provided no obstacle exists—but however well the sides may train on, several weeks must elapse before Hotspur and the Arsenal can extricate themselves from the ruck. Chelsea have 10 points to show for the twelve matches in which they have engaged—twice as many as the Arsenal possess for a similar number of games. Hotspur can claim no more than 6 points for ten matches. Even with Chelsea's four victories the London clubs taken together have not averaged 1 point out of a possible 3.

From the misfortunes of the metropolitan teams it is refreshing to turn to the doings of some of the provincial elevens. In merely drawing with Sunderland Blackburn Rovers ran some risk of being passed by Liverpool, but, as it happened, the last named, although competing on their own ground, merely halved the points with Bury. Manchester United and Newcastle United winning, the competition assumes—with four clubs all possessed of 17 points—a very interesting aspect, especially as Sheffield United and Everton are within a couple of points of the four leading teams.

In the majority of instances the results of the matches among the clubs in the second division of the league were quite in accordance with expectation. Beating Lincoln City at Lincoln, Glossop strengthened their position at the head of affairs, but West Bromwich Albion dropped from second to fifth place in consequence of being defeated at Hyde-road by Manchester City in the heaviest scoring match of the competition. Since the season began the Albion have had many ups and downs, and they are obviously so inconsistant that no reliance can be placed upon them making much of it with the other clubs who are struggling for promotion. For the moment Glossop and Mancester City are the most favoured teams, and if they can maintain the form they have been showing during the last few weeks one of them at least appears most likely to go up. Leicester Fosse and Hull City, were both successful, but Fulham could only draw at Wolverhampton. They were without Berry, their outside right, but for all that they should have won, Harrison missing a fine chance in the second half when the score was one goal each. Clapton Orient won in good style, outplaying Stockport County after change of ends and thoroughly deserving a well-earned victory. Home teams generally did not meet with their customary success, only four of them winning, while four more drew. Bradford and Lincoln City went down on their own grounds.

Crystal Palace maintain their form extremely well; indeed they improve rather than otherwise, and their victory by 6 goals to 2 over New Brompton yesterday stands out as a particularly good performance. The Palace forwards have all along played finely, and their heavy scoring against a defence that kept New Brompton at the head of the Southern League for six weeks puts the side in front again. West Ham United also have a fine attack, and their substantial victory over Croydon Common was quite in accordance with form. Queen's Park Rangers could only draw at Luton, and the three London clubs come in the order named at the top of the competition. Northampton, last season's champions, gained a sensational victory at Swindon by 4 to 1, distinguishing themselves by being the only side to win away from home.

RUGBY RULES.

Last Saturdays county matches in the North and West furnished some notable and decidedly refreshing results, Durham, last season's champions, and Cornwall, the runners-up, both suffering defeat. Cornwall went down in a small scoring game before Somerset against whom they have been uniformly successful of recent years. A much bigger upset was the failure of Durham, the champions, although the first to score, losing to Yorkshire by no fewer than 5 goals (one dropped) and a try to a goal and a try. Since the great secession which resulted in the formation of the Northern Union, Yorkshire have never succeeded in building up a really fine fifteen, but their achievement of yesterday would suggest that there is some prospect of the county taking a prominent part in this season's championship. A successful season for the Yorkshiremen would be heartily welcomed all over the country, for in the early years of the championship as a recognised institution, Yorkshire carried off first honours seven times in eight seasons. Almost as noteworthy as the failure of Cornwall before Somerset was the severe defeat inflicted upon Devon by Gloucestershire, who kept their own line intact and crossed that of their opponents half a dozen times. An exciting game at Liverpool, where Cheshire, after leading by 8 points at the interval, lost to Lancashire by 9 points to 8, completed a singularly interesting set of county matches.

No club match this season had been anticipated with keener interest than that between Oxford and the Harlequins, neither team having had to admit a single defeat. The result of a great struggle was to leave the sides still unbeaten, the Dark Blues scoring a placed goal and a penalty goal and the Harlequins a placed goal and a try. The Harlequins, who opened well and finished very strongly, displayed some superiority outside the scrummage and should have established a useful lead in the early stages of the game, but Oxford put up a highly creditable fight against their clever antagonists. Cambridge also succeeded in drawing, thanks to a penalty goal, the Army, who filled the vacancy in the Light Blues' card caused by the suspension of Coventry, halving the honours at 13 points each. A further draw resulted from the meeting of Blackheath and London Welsh at Wandsworth, a penalty goal—to the Welshmen—also occuring in this encounter. Richmond, thanks to their forwards, established a lead of 10 points over the Scottish, but the latter finishing very strongly scored three tries, and one of the place-kicks being successfully undertaken Richmond had to admit defeat by a single point. The Hospitals had another great afternoon. Guy's, of course, beat Marlborough Nomands decisively, London accomplished a fine performance at the expense of United Services, Thomas's just got home against Rosslyn Park, and Bart.'s defeated the Alleynians. Old Merchant Taylors are to be congratulated upon a handsome victory over Lennox.

ATHLETICS.

OXFORD U. H. AND H. VS. HIGHGATE H.—In delightful weather and with the seven miles' course at Oxford in fairly good condition, the Oxford University Hare and Hounds on the 6th instant, for the first time in the history of cross-country running, met those Southern Counties Champions, the Highgate Harriers. After looking easy winners at the half distance the Dark Blues lost to the Highgate club by seven points. The latter also supplied, in C. H. Ruffell, the first man home. Oxford, however, were without M. G. Haigh and A. M. Brown. The placings at the finish were: C. H. Ruffell, Highgate, 39mins. 39-3/5secs., 1; J. F. Worsley, Magdalen, Oxford, 39mins. 41secs., 2; W. H. Brooks, Highgate, 39mins. 45secs., 3; A. W. Clemes, Magdalen, Oxford, 39mins. 48secs., 4; G. Still, Highgate, 39mins. 56secs., 5; J. G. Coughlin, Highgate, 46mins. 7secs., 6; A. L. Drage, Christ Church, Oxford, 40mins. 45secs., 7; E. G. Taylor, Pembroke, Oxford, 40mins. 52secs., 8; G. Pearce, Highgate, A. E. Knight, Magdalen, Oxford, 10; T. Johnston, Highgate, 11; H. Lee, Highgate, 12; J. A. Pearce, Highgate, 13; H. L. Hornby, Balliol, Oxford, 14; A. Chandler, Hertford, Oxford, 15; R. W. Dugdale, Corpus, Oxford, 16. Soon after the start Knight, who won the Novices' Race last week, led the way for Oxford, while Worsley, Drage, and Taylor were well up, and at a couple of miles they retained the advantage. After that Still and Coughlin went ahead for a time, but subsequently fell back in favour of Ruffell and Brooks, with Worsley and Clemes close handy. In a capital race home Worsley beat Brooks, but failed to catch Ruffell, who won by about five yards. The scores were: Highgate, 24; Oxford University H. and H., 31.

CAMBRIDGE U. H. AND H. VS. RANELAGH H.—On the 6th instant, at Putney Heath, the Ranelagh Harriers received a visit from the Cambridge Hare and Hounds first team, and in a match over the seven-mile course beat the Cantabs for the first time in about eight years, by 22 points—38 to 50—scoring six a-side. Ranelagh ran their full team of eight, but were without the old Cambridge Blue, A. R. Churchill, while the Cantabs put only six men into the field. F. B. Thompson ran splendidly for the winners, especially in the second half of the journey, beating his club-fellows, Lintott and Shelton, who had for some distance been showing the way. For the Cantabs Wills and Spinks ran neck and neck almost throughout, and were not many yards apart at the finish. Order and times: F. B. Thompson (Ranelagh) 40mins. 17-1/5secs., 1; J. E. Lintott (Ranelagh), 40mins. 38-1/5secs., 2; H. Shelton (Ranelagh), 41mins. 7-2/5secs., 3; D. M. Wills (Cambridge), 41mins. 28-4/5secs., 4; G. T. Spinks (Cambridge), 41mins. 32-1/5secs., 5; F. L. Whittingback (Ranelagh), 41mins. 36-3/5secs., 6; H. Phillips (Ranelagh) 42mins. 8-2/5secs., 7; R. E. Garrod (Cambridge), 42mins. 21-4/5secs., 8; C. B. C. Crean (Ranelagh), 42mins. 47-2/5secs., 9; B. N. Carver (Cambridge), 43mins. 4-4/5secs., 10; T. Cooper (Ranelagh), 0; F. Church (Ranelagh), 0; J. Winterbotham (Cambridge), 11; J. D. Morris (Cambridge), 12. Messrs. P. L. Fisher and F. W. Baker judged, and Mr. H. H. Griffin started and timed. The Cambridge team dined with the Ranelagh H. at Frascati's in the evening, Mr. P. L. Fisher being in the chair.

BILLIARDS.

E. DIGGLE VS. C. HARVERSON.—The second heat in Messrs. Burroughes and Watts' London tournament, which was between Diggle (receives 4,000) and Harverson (receives 5,000), ended at the Soho-square salon last Saturday night in an easy victory for Diggle by no fewer than 3,490 points. Throughout the game Diggle's victory was always assured, and when play began in the afternoon, he was 2,727 points in front. At the first session the chief breaks were 64, 118, 51, 190, 9, and 49 by Diggle and 71 and 55 by Harverson. At the interval the scores were: Diggle (in play), 17,418; Harverson, 14,334. In the evening, Diggle, making breaks of 42,108, 179, 96, and 124 against Harverson's 79 and 56, won easily as stated. Result:—

Diggle 18,000
Harverson 14,510

JOHN ROBERTS VS. W. COOK.—The match of 10,000 up in which Cook was in receipt of a third of the game, viz., 3,333 points, ended at Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester-square, in a win for Cook by 1,667 points. The chief breaks were 104 (full), 44, 100, 49, 62, and 125 by Cook, and 52, 0, 107, 42, and 87 by Roberts. The final scores were:—

Cook 10,000
Roberts 8,333

In the evening a game of 1,000 up was decided, Roberts conceding a start of 300 points. The best breaks were 117, 154, 56, and 40 (twice) by Cook, and 185, 105 (twice), 75 (twice), 115, and 119 unfinished by Roberts. Full scores:—

GOLF.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY VS. SUNNINGDALE.—The Dark Blues accomplished a fine performance at Sunningdale on Saturday the 6th instant, when they defeated a strong team representing the Sunningdale Club by 7 games to 4. With few exceptions, the Oxonians played capital golf. The side was led by C. V. L. Hooman, last year's captain, who opposed the on'ble Osmond Scott, the runner-up in the amateur championship in 1905. Hooman led practically all the way, and, after being 2 up at the turn, gained the victory by 3 and 2. A. J. Evans disposed of G. C. Campbell by a similar margin.

The most exciting match of the day was that between C. H. Gidney and J. S. Worthington. The former played fine golf on the outward journey. He reached the turn in 37, and led by 2 up at that point. At the twelfth the players were level, and Worthington took the lead at the thirteenth. He kept it till the last green was reached, and then, missing a four-feet putt for a halved hole and the match, he only finished the round all even. F. W. H. Roulston showed capital form against the Hon'ble Evan Charteris. Roulston led by 2 up at the turn, but, losing the next two holes, he was brought back to all square. He took the lead again at the thirteenth, and ultimately won by 2 holes.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE COXSWAINLESS FOURS.—The coxswainless fours' racing terminated on the 6th instant, in delightful weather. Nearly all the preliminary heats provided good sport, while that of First Trinity and Jesus attracted unusual interest. First Trinity were successful after a hard race and it was thought that they would easily win the remaining heats, but on Friday they were severely tested by Third Trinity and were nearly beaten by Trinity Hall. The latter crew have improved greatly, but their performance was beyond all expectations. Mr. Williams umpired. Result:—

Second Station: First Trinity—H. G. Palmer (bow, steers), A. S. Lloyd, F. E. Hillyer, J. B. Rosher (stroke), 1.

First Station: Trinity Hall—W. J. Devy (bow), C. P. Cooke, E. S. Horridge, G. L. Thomson (stroke, steers), 2.

First Trinity held a narrow advantage from the start until Ditton Corner was reached, when Trinity Hall drew away. For the remainder of the course a grand race was witnessed and the issue was in doubt until the finish. First Trinity eventually won by the narrow margin of a quarter of a length.

BOXING.

THE LIGHT-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

Memories of past historic battles were vividly revivid last Monday evening by the scenes inside and outside the National Sporting Club in Covent Garden. Not since the days when Sullivan, Slavin and Jackson were in their prime has so much interest been evinced in the doing of champions of the ring as was displayed over the contest for the light-weight championship of England between Freddy Welsh, of Pontypridd, and Johnny Summers, of Canning Town. The men, who are acknowledged to be the finest at their weight (9st. 9lb.; in this or any other country, were to do battle for stakes of £500 a side and club purses of £1,200 a gold belt presented by the president of the club (the Earl of Lonsdale), as well as the all important title of light-weight champion.

In some respects the contest was a disappointing one, for the work was not so open as could have been wished, owing largely to Welsh's penchant for getting to close quarters, and thereby depriving Summers to some extent of the use of his right. But still the Celt was much the cleverer boxer on a night, being faster and quicker on his feet. Frequently he stepped straight in and delivered three or four half-arm cuts without a return. Only in the first, sixth, and ninth rounds did Summers score the major points over the Welshman, whose victory was loudly cheered. At the finish Summers showed signs of the severe handling he had received, whilst Welsh did not show a mark. Details:—

First Round.—Welsh crouched, and from that attitude swung up his left into the face. There was plenty of hugging, marked by brief though lively exchanges at intervals. A warning from the referee to Welsh regarding his leaning tactics was applauded and this the Welshman followed up by driving the East-ender to the corner, and dashed out his right, which, however, was short. A few more words of caution to the Welshman, and the round finished in Summers's favour.

Second Round.—Welsh got in very quickly on the face, this being followed by more hugging and short arm-jabs on the body. Welsh swung up from a release, and again found the Londoner's face. Summers showed a tendency to hold, but the latter part of the round was distinctly in Welsh's favour. He got in some very powerful face and body blows at close range.

Third Round.—Close work characterised the opening of this round, and soon it came to Summers's turn to be cautioned. Welsh got in a hard left on the jaw, which drove the Canning Town man to the ropes, and it was decidedly the former's round.

Fourth Round.—Summers failed repeatedly to reach his opponent, but once got in an upward right jab, to which Welsh replied with interest. A beautiful slip by Welsh got him out of a tight corner, and just before the end of the round he got in two lefts on Summers's already damaged face.

Fifth Round.—Summers opened briskly, but Welsh was the first to score, after Summers had done some leading, though but to small advantage. Welsh was cautioned for holding his opponent, who, apparently acting on the defensive, got a smart right on his opponent's face. The round closed amid signs of disapprobation on the part of the audience as to Welsh's tactics.

Sixth Round.—Summers assumed the defensive at the outset, twice giving his opponent some killing punches on the head and body. The Londoner was now doing much more than hitherto, despite the worrying tactics of the Celt.

Eighth Round.—Welsh gave a fine exposition of his quick leg-work; but Summers got in with two good rights on the head. Nevertheless Welsh did most of the leading, and was the fresher of the two when the round ended.

Ninth Round.—Some hard work at close quarters marked the opening, and Summers scored distinctly with a hard cross right on the chin; but Welsh recovered in marvellous fashion, and was quite as strong as the Canning Town man when they went to their corners.

Tenth Round.—After some light sparring, Welsh sent in a left on the body heavily, and Summers replied with a strong right on the head. Welsh continued to force the work, and at the half-distance held a slight lead on points.

Eleventh Round.—Summers came up very fresh, and, after receiving an upper-cut on the jaw, he got in some telling body blows. After a clinch Welsh sent the right in near the heart, but both men went to their corners fairly fresh.

Twelfth Round.—Uninteresting work marked the opening, and then in a short rally Welsh got the left to the head. This, however, did not seem to affect Summers, who stuck to his opponent until ordered to break away, and some fast leading by the Celt brought the round to a close.

Thirteenth Round.—Welsh opened with some very fine footwork, but at last Summers got in a telling right. Welsh was again cautioned for using his head at close quarters. At the close of this round Welsh appeared to be well ahead on points.

Fourteenth Round.—Summers showed little sign of wear, but he had perceptibly slowed down. Some quick work at close quarters was loudly applauded. Welsh, with a series of blows, principally from the left, close in, did most of the leading in this round.

Fifteenth Round.—It was more than ever apparent that Summers was scarcely up to the same form as in his matches against Britt, whilst Welsh frequently got in with the right, and largely made the pace.

Sixteenth Round.—Summers, whose mouth was badly swollen, came in for further punishment at close quarters, and once, rushing in, narrowly escaped being knocked out.

Seventeenth Round.—Both men seemed inclined to work at close quarters, during which Welsh got in thrice on the body, and Summers once near the mark, but the Canning Town man's blows lacked string.

Eighteenth Round.—Wild swings predominated, and very little telling work was accomplished until towards the close, when Welsh swung the left heavily on the head twice in quick succession. By this time Welsh had put on such a long sequence of points that nothing but a knockout could give Summers a victory.

Nineteenth Round.—Summers was still unable to do anything with his powerful right, much as he tried, and two heavy lefts on the chin shook him up considerably.

Twentieth Round.—Welsh did not slacken in the least, but kept worrying his man in tactful style, and when the gong sounded for the last time Welsh was an easy winner on points.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

Kodambaukum Railway Station at 5-45 A.M. on Wednesday the 24th November—a dry scentless morning and an absolutely blank day—so the less said about it the better; Mambalam Covers did not hold nor did the Kotambaukum Road plantations, and after drawing on till 8 o'clock Mr. Home gave it up as a bad job and took hounds home.

Sunday the 27th November at the 9th Milestone, St. Thomas' Mount, a real good morning. Three inches of rain on the Friday and Saturday had worked wonders on scent and going and the crash with which hounds went into Sheep's Head augured well for sport. They found at once and running the length of Sheep's Head and the Black Rocks spinneys threw up at the Black Rocks where one jack had presumably gone to ground in the Rocks, though hounds could not mark him; so after making it good all round Mr. Home took them back to Sheep's Head where they soon roused out another jack which went away at the south-east corner and took us a buster over the open through some very deep going as if his point was the Pallaveram Hills; but at Moambakkam he swung sharp right for the Adyar river over Pallaveram Hags; on reaching the Pallaveram Nullah, however, he began to run short and after a few doubles in the prickly pear scrub was rolled over after a first-rate gallop of 20 minutes best pace nearly all the way.

Moving on again a jack was almost at once viewed in the open by the second whipper-in, and hounds being laid on took us a good haze back into Sheep's Head, where they dwelt a few minutes but had soon hustled their jack away at the northern end over the Artillery practice ground and into Scavenger, where he ringed a bit, being twice headed by natives when attempting to break over a good line of country. He finally took to the river, which was coming down pretty heavy and crossed into the Nantambaukem woods. A few adventurous spirits had a go at the river, but mostly came out the same side as they went in, with nothing more to their credit than a ducking while the wiser majority made off post haste for the Nantambaukum Bridge lower down. Those that were quick enough getting round were just in time to see hounds flying on to the Poonamallee Road and off again on the same side. Running the skirts of the road for about a mile, one jack eventually took off into the paddy, finally reaching his point, a string of big and impenetrable betel topes just in front of hounds after a rattling good hunt of 50 minutes. Here he had to be given up, the topes being impossible places to bring a jack to hand in and there being a good many fresh ones about.

LUCKNOW AUTUMN TOURNAMENT
ROYAL DRAGOONS' CUP.

The final for the Royal Dragoons' Cup was played off on the afternoon of the 23rd ultimo. The game, on the whole, was disappointing, the Lancers making a poor fight. It must be mentioned, however, that the Lancers were without the services of Captain Kelville.

First Chukker.—The Scouts scored almost immediately, from a throw in, Hoare taking the ball to the Lancers' end, and sending it through the posts. For a time after this play was in neutral ground, then the Lancers found an opening and drew level. Score: one all.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play for a space, then with a long shot Barrett sent the ball rolling to the Lancers' flags, where it was sent through out of a scrimmage. On the restart, play was all in the Lancers' ground, but no further score was made. Score: Scouts 2 goals to 1.

Third Chukker.—Nutting had a run to the flags, but his shot went out wide. Hoare brought the ball out, and Barrett securing it, ran it to the posts, when, for a space, there was a hot melee, when Barrett dribbled it through the posts. On restarting Hoare with a long shot notched another goal. Score: Scouts 4 goals to 1.

Fourth Chukker.—The game was confined mostly to the Lancers' end, and Pollock sent the ball through. Score: Scouts 5 goals to 1.

Fifth Chukker.—A repetition of the first, Pollock again scoring. Score: Scouts 6 goals to 1.

Sixth Chukker.—Pollock was in scoring trim. Before the close of the chukker, he added one more goal to the score. The Scouts thus won a somewhat tame game by 7 goals to 1. Lady Hewett presented the Cup to the victors. The teams were:—

POLO IN ENGLAND.

Colonel T. A. St. Quintin, formerly of the 10th Hussars and one of the best players of his day in India and England, contributes a very interesting article on polo to Blackwood's Magazine, in the course of which he says:—

"It is ancient history now, that one day in 1869, when the 10th Hussars were under canvas at Aldershot for the summer drills, Chicken Hartopp, lying back in a chair after luncheon reading The Field, exclaimed, 'By Jove! this must be a good game' and read us a description of "hockey on horseback" in India. Some five or six of us who were in the tent then and there sent for our chargers, and routed up some old heavy walking-sticks and a cricket-ball, began to try to knock the ball about—a somewhat difficult thing to do properly, as may be imagined, on a tall horse with a short stick, as, of course, we could not reach the ball. However, it appealed much to us and resulted in our improvising a sort of long-handled mallet and having some wooden balls turned about the size of a cricket-ball. We then deputed Billy Chaine to go over to Ireland and get us some ponies, impressing upon him that they must be very quiet and handy, and under 14 hands, and that we did not mind their being a bit slow, for nobody at that time had any idea that you would be able "to go the pace" at the game. He returned with about seventeen ponies, and we set to work to try to fashion out a suitable ball and sticks and to play the game.

"That started polo. The 9th Lancers were quartered at Aldershot, and we got them to come and try the game, and they promised to get ponies and play us a match later on. We returned to Hounslow, there we were quartered, and marked out a bit of ground on Hounslow Heath as a polo ground, and got a heavy roller and made it as level and as good as we could. I wonder what the polo players of the present day would say about that ground now! Anyway, we were very pleased, and sent off a challenge to the 9th Lancers, who had got together some ponies and been working at the game at Aldershot, and it was agreed that we should play a match at Hounslow. We played eight aside, without any rules—just think of it! and try to imagine what the game must have been like. We tried to put some sort of organisation into the game, which we rather based on that of a football team, placing four men in the bully, with two half-backs and a back and a goalkeeper; but, as you may imagine, in about two minutes the two sides were mingled up anyhow, all jammed together, ramming into each other, generally at a walk, with little idea as to where the ball was, like a football scrimmage, and the only two people remaining in

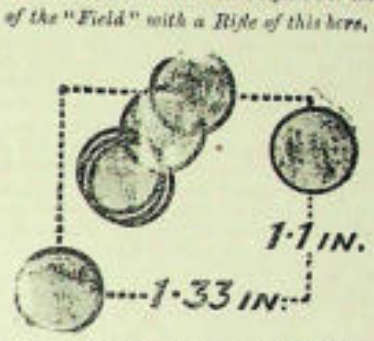
NEW ·470 BORE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore.



VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridge as originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

MADE IN A MINUTE.

their places were the two goalkeepers, sticking religiously between their respective posts. However, we had grand fun, and a very cheery, good game, though one of the papers of the day said it was more remarkable for the strength of the language used during it than the brilliancy of the play. We were, I think, rather a bigger and heavier lot of men than they were, and I suppose it was the force and weight of ourselves and ponies, or possibly the language, which succeeded in gaining us a scrambling victory.

"The grounds in England are so soft and slow and get so poached by the ponies' hoofs, that the ball cannot travel quick enough or true enough to get out of the way of the present very big galloping ponies, and the player is always on the top of or over the ball. Consequently he misses his stroke, and you seldom see a man make more than one or two consecutive hits; and the players behind are unable to back him up properly on account of this uncertainty of striking the ball. More attention is paid now to jostling and riding off than to accurate hitting or nice play. This is also aggravated by the side-boards, and many men seem to think that there are goals at the side as well at the ends of the ground. The unscientific polo player seems to have but two ideas—riding off, and hitting the ball if he gets the chance, no matter in what direction. Is it not ridiculous to see, as you often do, four different pairs of players galloping hard in different parts of the ground, each sticking to and jostling the other with the sole object of riding his adversary off the ball, which may be 60 or 70 yards away. To me it is painful and it is neither true polo nor the spirit of it.

The Height of Ponies.

"With regard to the height of the ponies, it is, as I have said, in material, as long as they are all of the same standard height, though even then you must always have a great difference in the height, strength, and speed of the pony, however strict the actual standard measurement may be. It is, therefore, wise to keep the standard as low as possible, compatible with the power of the ponies to carry the weight and the feasibility of obtaining the number required. It is a great mistake to think that it is essential for a polo pony to carry weight in proportion to what you require from a hunter. A polo pony is never ridden for a long time, and if kept fit and hard will carry with ease a far greater weight than he is generally supposed to be able to; but it is most essential that he should have quality. Without it, he is useless for polo, though this, to my mind, applies equally to the hunter. You can never hope or expect to get the ponies all the same with regard to pace or weight. You may have a small light pony high at the wither, and a big powerful pony low at the wither both measuring the exact standard height, though one is really almost a horse and double the size of the other. This cannot be avoided. There are also many ways of preparing a pony for measurement, and these are now almost as well understood by the English polo player as they always have been by the racing man, who has to get his big pony as low as possible; and though the present system of measurement is as fair as can be, and the official measurer absolutely strict and impartial, you will find to-day that very many, if not most, of the polo ponies playing in England, if taken as they stand on the ground and the measuring-stick put over them, will run up certainly to 14·3 and many close on to 15 hands. In fact it was an open admission to me years ago, by one of the prominent players, who dealt largely in ponies, that he never bought an expensive pony unless it was close on 15 hands and had passed the standard, as he could not sell it again.

"It will be a good day that the American team was playing on the same height of ponies as the English one. Granted; but they were a picked team, mounted on the very best money could buy, ponies that could race, stop, turn, handy as ladies' maids and quick as lightning, as they had set themselves by constant practice together to win this game. But above all, they and their ponies were hard, and by long training their muscles and wrists were able to command their sticks, which were lighter than ours, with cigar-shaped ends, which to my mind is far the best shape though it may occasionally lift a ball. And not only by their ponies, but by their command of their sticks also, they were able to hit the ball as and how they wished, and by their excellent drill pass it one to the other as the occasion required. No, you may say what you like, they outrode and outplayed us, and it is a lesson that I know is much taken to heart by our own polo world.

"I am told that the Americans fully realise the advantage of being near the ground with a light stick (which should have a little bit of spring in it), and that they intend in the future, as far as they are able, to reduce, and not increase, the height of their ponies in consequence. There is no reason why we should not try to do the same. I do not say that we shall have better players than we have to-day, for many are of the best, but we shall have more of them, and the best men will be able to play better.

Need for Reform.

"Unfortunately it is a very delicate question how to rectify the present condition of the game in this respect, even if it should be desired to do so, for the present game and the present height of ponies are now all so firmly and widely established, and the different interests involved are so many and powerful that it would be next door to impossible to do so, except by a general consensus of opinion, and by slow degrees. Personally, I think it is a pity this great game has come to be played on such very high ponies, and I most sincerely hope that the powers that be will not only do their utmost to prevent the height of ponies from being increased, but that the players in their own interest will also endeavour to get it down to and keep it at a real 14-2, which is not at present, and which is quite high enough, if it is not too high. In fact 14 hands, as I have advocated for many years, makes a better game, for 14 hands can carry any weight required, can gallop quite fast enough, and being closer to the grounds admits of superior play."

Athletics.

PHYSICAL CULTURE FOR THE ATHLETE.

For the athlete health is an essential qualification, and the exercise he obtains in the course of his devotion to sports and games may keep him healthy, and it is quite possible for him to "feel well," even though he be not a model of what a properly developed man ought to be. But the athlete is well acquainted with the marked difference that exists between the condition of "feeling well" and that of "fitness" possessed when, for a special object, he has put himself into training. Every athlete does not know the inexpressibly delightful feeling of health and vigour, of strength and activity which is the outcome of fitness, and thousands every year take part in athletic recreations in a condition very far short of being trained or even half-trained. They enjoy themselves, but how much more enjoyable would their recreations be, how far more effective their efforts, how lasting their exertions were they in better physical condition—the condition to which systematic, regular, painstaking, and intelligent application to a sensible course of physical culture would bring them.

No athlete requires to be or to attempt to keep himself constantly "in training" in the generally understood sense of the word, any more than it was considered necessary centuries ago for the English archer to keep his long-bow in a perpetual state of tension. Such a condition of either body or bow would be not only productive of no benefit, but positively armful and inimical to the best use of both. The athlete would become worn out and stale, the bow would lose its elasticity. Hard training is analogous to the stringing of the bow to its utmost limit of effectiveness, the keying up of the brain, nerves, and muscles to the pitch required for a special effort; but it is a condition that may not be long maintained. Now, it is claimed that physical culture in the sense in which I am discussing it shall do this; it is not the intention that it should. The object of it is to make the athlete sound and strong all over, to strengthen and develop every part of him so that at all times his body is in a condition to respond successfully to the calls upon it, ordinary and extraordinary, of every-day existence, and render his progress into the condition of hard training, should it become necessary, a matter of ease and devoid of any harm.

Training Versus Physical Culture.

At present the athlete, speaking generally, is seldom fit. He be a runner or walker, boxer, cyclist, wrestler, he is to be found in one of three states—trained, untrained, or stale. If his athleticism is confined more or less to taking part in athlete games, he speaks of himself as being fit or not fit. Footer teams, for instance, are spoken of as being "not fit" at the commencement of the football season; it is understood they will improve their play later on, not because they will have regained that keen dexterity, blunted somewhat by their few months divorce from the game, but because they will be in better physical condition. To remind the football player of the aches and pains and stiffness of muscles which follows his first game or two of the season would be superfluous, as it would be to refer to the aching arms and shoulders of the batsman, bowler, or oarsman when he recommences work. It will be pointed out to me that many cricketers, footballers, rowing men, runners, and so forth endeavour to mitigate these physical inconveniences by "doing a bit of training" beforehand, using dumb-bells, clubs, exercises, etc., to accustom their slacked and unused muscles to the new and vigorous demands to be made upon them. Quite so; a few may do so, but it is the many who count; it is not the experts to whom one seeks to offer advice, but the remainder, and it is principally for the majority that any attempt to bring about reforms or benefits is made. And quite so again; the very fact that some men do by means of physical exercises beforehand prepare their muscles for the extraordinary demands their sport or recreation makes is a confirmation of the contention that physical culture for the athlete is necessary.

But why confine that preparation to a few weeks beforehand? Why not make those exercises or others having like results a regular part of one's life, something to be taken as naturally as one takes one's food? Exercise should be this, as much as food. Eating alone does not beget health; eating without exercise of any kind is liable to have dangerous or, at least, harmful consequences; exercise ought to go hand in hand with eating (or a few hours after it, I will say, so that the humorously hypercritical may not have the opportunity to trip me), the objective being the reinvigoration of the body and the keeping of it in perfect health. Sustenance comes from food; repair and restoration of the tissues has its origin in the stomach, exercise brings about the development of tissue.

"I do not eat solely to feed any particular set of muscles, but to refresh and strengthen the body generally. Logically there is no good reason why we should not exercise with the same object in view. And this system of exercising for the benefit of the entire body, for the strengthening and developing of it in every part, visible and invisible, is physical culture. It is because I have this conception of physical culture that I so strongly reprobate the notion that the meaning of the term is simply the cultivation of muscles. The growth of muscle is merely the outward indication of the benefits of physical culture. Muscle can be built up by means that have not the most distant relationship with physical culture.

The Ideal of Athletic Development.

Were it practicable for a man to devote all his time to the cultivation of his body it would be possible, by making use of all the out-of-door sports and physical recreations that have been evolved to procure an all-round development beyond criticism; every muscle of the body and limbs could receive its due attention. But few are so situated, so few that they might be neglected altogether, and for the majority such application of this life is not possible in the short time they are able to call their own. To devote the whole even of one's leisure to athletic games would not serve the purpose, since the effort could not be made persistent. To play cricket or swim or cycle or run in the summer months and to give winter leisure over to football or lacrosse once a week, and perhaps an evening or two to boxing or wrestling, is not to provide an efficient substitute. As I said before, physical culture ought to be an integral part of daily existence; for the athlete who makes calls upon his physique by the partaking in some form or forms of sport the necessity becomes the greater if he have the desire—and I credit all with such—to win as great success (not in the shape of tangible objects proving his proficiency) as is possible, and, in consequence, to secure the maximum of enjoyment as well as benefit.

Rewards of success there must be, but the chief gratification of every prize winner lies not in the gaining possession of some particular object, but in the proving to his own and others' satisfaction his individual supremacy. To gain this supremacy is worth trouble; one does not grudge the time or labour to fitting oneself to win it, one puts one's whole heart into the effort. Always one plays to win—fairly; and he who has best fitted himself for victory, ability being equal, deserves the reward. Physical culture is the substitute for that impossible condition of existence wherein a man is able to procure for every part of him sufficient exercise to promote the best possible development. The disciple of physical culture, he who exercises methodically and regularly, does not complain of being stale or feeling unfit. The strain of a game or sport resumed after a break does not affect his body in the same way as it does that of one whose exercising of his muscles terminated a few months before and who has been slacking during the interval. The physical culturist, by the regular and careful use of his muscles, gives to them a fitness, a strength and endurance which exempt them from inconvenient consequences when an unusual demand is made upon them.

Cultivation of Strength and Stamina.

It will be granted, I assume, that the man who is strong all over is physically fitter than he whose physical powers are developed only so far as one particular set of muscles is concerned. As an example let the long-distance runner be taken. By constant practice he develops the lower limbs to an extent which permits them to withstand a far greater strain, to acquire greater endurance, than those of one who does not run at all. But he is apt to neglect the rest of his body. Why? He might reply that as it is his legs only which are called upon to do the work there is little need for the strengthening of the rest of him. The walker and the cyclist might argue likewise. But this is fallacious argument. All-round development, that is to say all-round strengthening, not mere cultivation of muscle, means an increase in the total bodily strength, and even in running it is not only the legs which bear the strain. The whole frame participates in it. Of how many runners is the comment made that the race was won by sheer strength? More than one would be willing to count in the course of an athletic season. Time and again does it happen that one strong effort carriest a man first past the post. In such a desperately close finish as this it is the man whose compound strength, not strength of leg only, who is the winner. It is the practice of physical culture which will give that required strength, the system which does not confine itself to a particular part of the body, but deals with the whole.

By the diligent practising of physical culture, there is created a stock, a reserve, of bodily strength which is ready to be drawn upon when necessity makes the demand. Something beyond the mere quality of speediness is required of the runner who would excel; there must be strength and that endurance of strength which is known as stamina, and is not solely in the particular muscles which are called into most vigorous action by any particular form of exercise. It is stamina which the diligent development of the body in its entirety creates. By the persistent, but not violent, all-round strengthening of himself, a man increases vastly his ability to endure a long-continued effort. Stamina, as it is scarcely necessary to say, is an outstanding result of what the athlete terms training: it is the outcome of fitness. Is it not then reasonable to advance as one argument in favour of physical culture the advantage of keeping within one's self, by a course of regular exercise, that valuable quality of endurance, rather than to sink into a condition of unfitness, permitting the bodily strength to diminish, between those periods when one is actively engaged in the enjoyment of one's particular form of physical recreation? I think there can be but one answer.—Sporting Life.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

Ballygunge vs. Calcutta.—The first of the two annual fixtures between these old rivals, came off at the Eden Gardens on Saturday and Sunday last, Ballygunge repeating their success of last season by winning by the substantial margin of 127 runs on the first innings. Both clubs, although perhaps not quite at full strength, were well represented, but the winners had out the younger lot, and in cricket, perhaps more than in any other game, age will tell; it did in the present instance, the Ballygunge fielding being smarter, and their batting a lot more enterprising.

Winning the toss, Calcutta took first knock, but the start was anything but promising, Turnbull, Guise, Lee and Craik all being out before 40 was on the board, and in addition, Quin, Champain and Paine with but 66 up. Then Major Geoghegan joined Given-Wilson, who had been batting well, and the pair took the score to 125 before the latter was caught; his 46 was quite the best innings on the side, and was free from all fault. The end came very shortly afterwards, the innings closing for the small total of 137, a score that does not represent the batting capabilities of the side—on paper. Geoghegan's 27 not out was the second highest score and was a most useful contribution; he survived a very general and confident appeal for a catch at the wicket early in his innings, but otherwise made no mistake. Of the bowlers tried, White with 4 for 42, and F. Gould with 3 for 20, met with most success.

On Ballygunge going in to bat when the game was resumed on Sunday morning, some fairly lively cricket was seen. Horncastle had only made 10 when he was beautifully taken at the wicket by Champain, but White and Shallow, who was batting brilliantly, and later Shallow and Bocquet soon put the result beyond doubt, the Calcutta total being passed before the third wicket fell. In addition to those named, Frost contributed 22, and Skinner a lively 33, the innings closing for 259, 127 runs ahead; no less than eight bowlers were tried, but none had a particularly flattering analysis. The wicket-keeping on both sides, was far and away above the average, in fact it is just a question as to which was the best, Frost or Champain.

A couple of hours still remained for play, when Calcutta went in a second time; they improved somewhat on their previous performance, but when stumps were drawn, they were still 15 runs behind, and had only 4 wickets in hand. Scores:—

Ballygunge "A" vs. St. Xavier's Old Boys.—With their First XI. engaged at the Eden Gardens, Ballygunge could only put a very moderate team in the field on Sunday last, when they suffered defeat at the hands of St. Xavier's Past and Present by 75 runs. The visitors' victory was almost entirely the work of three men, Purcell, who took 4 wickets for 12 runs, Greenway, who batted well for 34, and Vaughan, who captured 5 wickets for 32 runs and then proceeded leisurely to make 57. The game needs little comment, the home batting for the most part being decidedly limp, North and Sherman alone shaping well against some really decent bowling; much the same may be said of St. Xavier's, Greene, Vaughan, Greenway and "Extras" accounting for 126 out of the 170 the innings realised. REPEATING HUNTING RIFLES ARE RELIABLE

Reliability, strength and accuracy are the cardinal virtues in a hunting rifle. Success and safety often hinge upon them in big game shooting. Winchester rifles possess these virtues to the fullest extent, all models being made of high grade material and inspected with great care and exactness. They shoot accurately, are positive and certain in action, graceful in outline, easy to operate, and, considering their many good qualities, low in price. They are made in all desirable calibers, weights and styles, and for every rifle a Winchester cartridge is made. Winchester Rifles and Cartridges, the Red W Brand always gives satisfaction.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, POONA.

LEICESTERS vs. NORTHAMPTONS.—Three teams met on the 20th ultimo and a splendid game was witnessed. The Northamptons rushed away from the opening bully and netted a goal The Leicesters then invaded their opponents' territory and forced a corner, which they failed to improve upon. They kept up a strong attack and three corners were obtained in quick succession but nothing came up them. Thereafter exchanges were very level, till at length the Leicesters got through and equalised. On resuming the Northamptons pressed but the opposing backs were very safe and play returned to midfield. Both goals were then visited in turn and play was fast and exciting, till the Leicesters gained the lead with a successful shot. The Northamptons tried all they knew to get on terms, but without success, and they had to retire beaten by 2 goals to 1.

3RD SAPPERS AND MINERS vs. ALL BLACKS.—These teams met on three occasions before a definite result was arrived at. The first game ended in a pointless draw, in the second each team scored 3 goals, but in the third meeting last Friday the All Blacks were victorious by 2 goals to nil. The ball moved up and down the field during the initial stages, then the Sappers forced a corner, and though nothing came of it they kept up a hot attack. The game was then gradually taken to midfield when the interval arrived without any score. On changing ends the All Blacks rallied and a goal followed a determined attack. Level play followed for a spell and then the All Blacks took the upper hand. They notched another goal and frustrated all attempts to score by the Sappers.

FINAL.

LEICESTERS vs. ALL BLACKS.—The final game of the Tournament brought together the above teams before a large crowd of spectators on the 27th ultimo, the regiment from Belgaum eventually proving victorious by a single goal to nil. A protest was entered against the goal but was overruled. The opening stages of the game were very evenly contested and both goals were visited in turn. The All Blacks' citadel once came in for a regular bombardment, but its custodian was all there and the interval arrived without score. Play was fast and even on resuming. The All Blacks forced a corner but nothing came of it, and the ball was taken down to their end where the goal-keeper was kept busy. He saved several shots in splendid style but was eventually beaten. The All Blacks tried hard to equalise, but an abortive corner was all they could get, though they were very nearly through on several occasions. Final score: Leicesters, 1 goal; All Blacks nil. Mrs. Alderson gave away the Cup to the winners and General Alderson made a short congratulatory speech.

Boxing.

LUCKNOW OPEN TOURNAMENT.

THIS annual event opened on the 18th instant. The entries were not as numerous as in the past two years. The first night's boxing was of a mediocre character, except where Private Marks met Sergeant Gibbs in the Light Weights. Both showed considerable science. There have been only three days boxing, and the finals were fought out on Monday, 22nd, when the bouts were good almost in every instance. In the absence of Major-General Mahon and Brigadier-General Bell, Rev. Mr. Kirwin gave away the prizes. The officials were :—

Referee: Mr. Owen O'Neil.

Judges: Captain Singleton, H.L.I.; Captain Barrett, A.D.L.

Timekeeper: Lieutenant Hayder, R.A.

Bantam Weights.—Pte. Howell, 8-4, Worcestershire Regiment, vs. Pte. Fowler, 8th Hussars, 8-2. Fowler was the better fighter and in the first round did all the leading. In the second round, Howell gave as much as he received, but Fowler had the better of it in the third round and won on points.

Boys Competitions.—Boy Millings, Kings Own, 5-5, vs. Boy Nicholas (same regiment) 5-5. The two best boy fighters in the tournament turned out to be two of the King's Own, who faced one another in the final. Nicholas was the better of the two and knocked Millings out in the second round.

Feather Weights.—A walk over for Pte. Amos, East Surreys, as Lance-Corporal McDonald had scratched. Great disappointment was felt that there was no final encounter in this fight, for Amos is a clean hard hitter, a pretty boxer, and one would have liked to have seen him fight.

Middle Weights.—Sergeant Sinclair, King's Own, 11-2, vs. Gunner Perrim, R.F.A., 10-3, a well matched pair in the first round, but in the second and third Perrim did most work and got in some hard knocks. Sinclair, though looking the worse for the fight, claimed an equal number of hits as his opponents. An extra round decided in favour of Perrim.

Light Weights.—Pte Sinclair, Cameronians, 10-0, vs. Bandsman Greaves, King's Own, 9-13. Too much sparring in the first round and the referee had to call on the men to fight and not play. In the second round, Greaves got home a succession of straight lefts on Sinclair's face. In the third round Greaves again dip all the fighting and was declared the winner.

In addition to the above there were three special three-round contests of two minutes each but none of them brought out much science. Gunner Floyd, R.F.A., 10-7, defeated Pte. Titler, King's Shropshires, 10-11; Pte. Burns, East Surrey, 8-4, defeated Pte Perry, Worcestershire, 8-3, and Pte. Kingston, Worcestershire, 10-0, defeated Pte. Doray, Cameronians, 10-0.

ROYAL ARTILLERY TOURNAMENT, SECUNDERABAD.

18th, 19th, 20th, 22nd, 23rd and 24th November 1909.

THE Boxing Tournament organised by the Gunners at Secunderabad extended over six nights and was very largely attended. The boxing was of a high standard throughout, the arrangements were perfect, and Captain W. S. D. Craven is to be congratulated on the success of the tournament. General Sir James Wolfe Murray gave away the prizes at the close of the proceedings on Thursday last.

The Cup given by Mr. Frankel to the regiment obtaining the majority of points was won by the Royal Fusiliers with 43½ points. Appended are results of the final bouts :—

"He took Epsom Salts for everything. That was his remedy," said a witness at a Southwark inquest. It is refreshing in these times of change and unrest to come upon the record of anyone with such real old-fashioned views on therapeutics. Possibly Epsom Salts might be regarded in some quarters as not quite the best remedy for Asiatic cholera, but still it is a safe all-round medicine tried and tested by many generations.

APROPOS of examinations and their terrors, A. E. Palmer, Secretary of the Department of Education of New York, told at a recent dinner an odd story of a young African prince.

"This prince," said Mr. Palmer, "entered Yale or Harvard—I forget which—and amused himself with motor-cars and bulldogs till examination time drew near.

"Examination time frightened the young prince horribly. He began to study, and he cabled home to the king, his father:

"'Examinations next week. Most difficult. Implore aid of gods in my behalf.'

"A few days later this reply came back from the barbarous west-coast monarch:

"'Rites performed. Fourteen picked youths, all sons of nobles, have been sacrificed. Omens propitious.'

"Yet would you believe it?' Mr. Palmer concluded: The young prince failed."

The Naturalist.

THE SPIDER.

ARANEA, a Linnæan genus, now divided not only into many genera, but into many families, and constituting a section (aranedia) of the class Arachnida and order Pulmonaria. The species are very numerous and are found in all parts of the world, but most abundantly in tropical climates, which also produce the largest species, some of them capable of making very small birds and not merely insects their prey. The cephalothorax, formed by the combination of the head and thorax into one piece, is covered with a sort of horny buckler generally of an oval form; the abdomen is attached to it by a short stalk, and is generally soft and tumid. Each of the eight legs consists of seven joints, the last armed with two hooks, which are commonly toothed like a comb. The frontal claws, commonly called mandibles—which do not, however, correspond to the mandibles of insects and move in an entirely different direction, up and down—are terminated by a sharp movable hook, which has near its extremity a small slit for the emission of a venemous fluid secreted in the gland of the previous joint. All spiders kill the insects and other small creatures on which they prey by means of their venemous mandibles, and the bite of a house spider is quickly fatal to a housefly. The bite of the larger species is dreaded even by man, being very painful, and not only producing much inflamation and swelling, but often much fever. Death has been known to ensue. Spiders' webs have long been in high repute for staunching wounds. Threads of this material are also employed for the crosswires of astronomical telescopes. Textile fabrics have been made of it, but only as articles of curiosity.

Prowling spiders, which have nests but prowl about in their neighbourhood or in that of the threads which they spread to catch prey, are very interesting creatures indeed, and here is my experience of a day's observation of one of these creatures.

On this particular June evening, the spider had been tempted to climb the trick wall, which was warm and pleasant to the touch in the sunshine by comparison with the damp ground. Finding the window of the drawingroom opened when she had ascended a few feet and discovering a most advantageous site for a snare for flies that might be going in and out between the sill and the lighted window-frame she immediately set about the construction of a web, obviously not having yet breakfasted. Any mere human being who had to build a trap of the same size in its proportion to its own, and if as complicated a pattern would have required a force of workmen, and two or three days time, as well as all kinds of mathematical and mechanical aids. But the spider, though she would probably have been unable to name either the elements of reference by which the point of a curve is referred to a system of fixed rectilineal co-ordinate axes, or to explain the difference between an algebraic and elliptic function, had inherited from a long line of webmaking ancestors the ability to design and execute, often in less than an hour's time, and without artificial assistance, perfect geometrical figures constructed on the highest scientific principles, and was further provided with material in her own little body, whereby she could supply the thread to weave these patterns as well and utilize them to obtain her food supply. We all know that the spider's web thread is drawn out from a glutinous secretion in the spinnerets that hardens as it is exposed to the air, but naturalists were a long time trying to decide whether the spider could project the thread to the spot where she might wish to fasten an end of the web, or whether the gossamer had to be carried or was moved by air-currents to the desired spot and they are not entirely agreed upon the matter now. However, the divergence of their views did not bother this spider. She was provided with six spinnerets each one pierced with something like 100 holes, so that more than 600 separate strands went to make the one slender line she used in her business, four of the spinnerets giving out the long threads and the other two moving 200 shorter strands from side to side, weaving them all into one. Most scientists who lived a 100 years ago being gifted with the necessary patience, took the trouble to make measurements and computations whereby they reached the conclusion that it would take 4 million of the threads of a certain very small spider they were investigating to make one hair of their own beards. The spider who had never heard of these scientists began the construction of her net by sticking a bit of gum about 12 inches from the left end of the door pane which was about a foot wide and was raised above 4 feet from the sill: this she effected by touching the spot with one of her spinnerets. Then fastening the end of her thread to this gum and spining out the line as she went—holding it off with one of her hind feet, which are fitted with tiny combs for the purposes he proceeded to form within this open space a square, three corners of which were fastened respectively to the sash, frame and sill of the window, while the fourth was held in place by guy ropes attached above and below. The spider now ran back to her original starting place and dropped down on her thread to the opposite corner of the square and attached the thread there. Ascending this same line without making any measurements she now fastened one end of the thread exactly half way and carried it to the top, holding it off from the other line with the hind-most hind leg and carrying it out about an inch to the right, and fastening it to the line at the top, thus forming, with the line drawn clear across and intersected in the middle, a third spoke of what would eventually resemble a wheel within the square. With the utmost rapidity she ran down her last spoke and carried up another line as before, repeating this process again and again until she had gone clear around the square. The spider then ran to the centre of the web and began to spin a spiral line along the spokes of her wheel. The spiral having been carried to the outside of the web, she began then another and a closer web span from thread of a different kind, the first having been smooth, while the latter was covered with a sticky liquid which collected on it in drops and caused it to adhere to anything that it touched. After circling round a couple of times this spiral would have crossed the one that was spun first which was merely a scaffolding to hold the structure, while the permanent lines were placed, except that as she came to the old spiral, she tore it away, leaving only little rags, almost imperceptible, attached to the spokes. After her web was complete she came down to the centre of the net, and in hanging head down waited for her breakfast. A yellow demon swooped down upon her, and it was only her wonderful quickness in making use of her own natural resources that saved her life. The monster which appeared to move from its tail, had first with one dash swept her and her web together to the floor with the obvious intention of crushing her under itself. The spider, however, almost with incredible swiftness had glued an end of its thread to one of the thick yellow hairs of her murderous enemy, and swung out behind it on this cable, which she lengthened so rapidly during the brief fraction of a second, she was flying through the air, that she dropped lightly to the floor, about 5 inches away from her would be murderer, and fortunately for her, close to a big table directly before the window. She darted under the piece of furniture like a bolt from the blue and worked herself into a ball not bigger than a pea. For several moments she was in dire peril for it was a particularly vigorous maid who was handling the broom; the broom wielder had the advantage in size and strength and she did not relinquish her sanguinary project concerning her hereditary foe until convinced that the spider was somewhere safe out of reach, temporarilly at least. Sad experience had taught the spider that danger lurked in the vicinity, so she left the house and I saw no more of her.

A very interesting species, one of the most interesting possible inmates of an aquarium, is the common water spider (argyroneta aquatica) of Britain, not unfrequently to be found in deep ditches and ponds in some parts of England. It is of a brownish colour, densly covered with hairs, which are of great importance in its economy, entangling air, which the animal carries down with it into the water, to suppy its pulmonary sacs, for the water spiders all breathe by the same kind of organs as their terrestrial congeners. The eggs of the water spider are attached to the leaves of a plant under the surface of the water, and are protected by a domeshaped web, so close in its structure as to retain the air which is brought into it, and in which the spider itself lives, bringing down air in its furred body till the dome is filled. The entrance is from below.

In my next I will give you an account of the spider fly and spider monkey.

The Story Teller.

AYKROYD'S NOSE.

I was watching the final dismantling of the house which had been our home for years. I had seen with indifference the things in my study, once my dearest treasures, bundled into boxes, but I could not look on at the same operation in the sitting-room, where everything reminded me of my dead wife. A sudden realisation of my loss and desolation overwhelmed me, and I crept away upstairs with blinded eyes. It was just then that Aykroyd's telegram came.

"I have just reached Home and heard of your loss. I want you to come at once to me. I shall follow my wire as soon as possible. Aykroyd."

Then within two hours my old friend was gripping my hand, and looking into my face, with tears in his hard grey eyes.

"My poor old Waring, you are going to live with me; I insist on it. I will send Garrow to see all your things packed. You must just come with me at once."

The presence of Aykroyd, with his old familiar not to be denied manner, was an inexpressible comfort to me. I was in no mood to resist, but rather clung in my grief to the one creature left to me in the world. . . . . .

After a few days the complete change of scene brought me a small degree of comfort and resignation, and I began to take some notice of my surroundings.

Aykroyd's house was close to Lindfield, that most charming part of beautiful Sussex. Though the house was of moderate size, it had a considerable amount of land round about belonging to it. Principally undulating pasture and woodland. The large paddock immediately surrounding the house, was park-like, with its fine turf and stately trees. Aykroyd easily persuaded me to take up my quarters with him permanently. I was now quite alone in the world, and he and I had always been close friends. Nor had our friendship been interrupted by my happy marriage, for my wife had always liked this wiry athletic man with his clean shaven hawk face, and determined methods.

"Now that you have come to live with me, Waring, I am going to let you into some secrets. You know it has always been my belief that man's organs of sight, hearing, and scent, were once as keen as those of any wild animal, but have enormously deteriorated through ages of civilization. Also that it is quite possible by assiduous cultivation, and careful avoidance of everything that is hurtful to them, to regain all or nearly all the faculties which we have lost. Well, I early discovered that I was endued with a most unusually acute power of scent, and it has been the business of my life to cultivate and develop this particular attribute. Now I can declare, without the least exaggeration, that I have as keen a nose as any hound. I am telling you this for a double reason; I have of late years realized that this keen power of scent can be most usefully employed for the detection of crime, I want an assistant whom I can trust, and I also desire greatly to give you an occupation, which will restore to a certain extent the interest in life, which you have, my poor old fellow, nearly altogether lost."

"Do you really mean to tell me, Aykroyd." I asked incredulously that you could follow a man, by his scent, like a bloodhound?" "Button up that covert coat you have on" he answered "and I will show you" I buttoned the garment from neck to waist, completely covering up the coat and waistcoat underneath.

Aykroyd then ran his face over the breast and sides of my coat, snuffing all the while like a dog.

"You have a piece of indiarubber in your left waistcoat pocket, cigarettes in your left coat pocket, and "here he gripped my shoulder kindly with his sinewy hand "a gloire de Dijon rose in your right pocket." It was true this rose had been my wife's favourite, and I had broken off a bud, and put it in my pocket, when strolling round the garden before breakfast. Over the indiarubber I was rather incredulous, but feeling at the bottom of the waistcoat pocket, I found a small piece of the thin tubing used for bicycle valves, which had long remained there forgotten.

I was naturally convinced as to Aykroyd's phenomenal powers of scent, but still a bit unbelieving as to their practical value in the detection of crime.

"Well I quite concede your nasal perfection," I said smiling "in fact I think the way in which you have developed your smelling capabilities, is nothing short of marvellous: but after all when all is said and done, you can do no more than can be effected by any well-trained bloodhound."

"Oh there you are utterly wrong, I am a bloodhound with powers of reasoning, with capacity for deduction: above all a bloodhound that can speak." . . . . .

As though to give my friend an immediate opportunity of demonstrating his practical value as a detective, a telegram arrived shortly after our conversation.

To Vernon Aykroyd, Lindfield.
Meet me King's Cross. 8-30 this evening.
Poullett.

As my friend gave me the wire to read, he said with a short laugh, in which there was a note of pique. "Doubting Thomas is to be given a further chance of being convinced. Poullett is a Scotland Yard friend of mine, and he has evidently an interesting case on hand. You must come with me and see how it is done."

We were at King's Cross at the appointed hour, and were met by an insignificant looking little man, whose ugly and commonplace face was redeemed by a pair of startlingly brilliant blue eyes.

"Who is your companion?" he asked Aykroyd curtly.

"This is my great friend Major Waring, late of the Northumberland Fusiliers: I have taken him as my assistant, and you can say anything you like before him."

"First we will get our return tickets to Willowdale in Yorkshire," answered Poullett, "I have arranged for a compartment to ourselves, and there will be plenty of time to tell you everything on the journey up."

As soon as we had settled into our compartment, and were speeding northwards, the detective told us all he knew about the case. A Colonel Jacob, who had retired some years before from the Indian Army, had been murdered in his house, near the village of Willowdale. The Colonel had two servants, and a ward Miss Skinner, a girl of sixteen. The murder, however, had taken place on Sunday evening, when both servants were out; and Miss Skinner was not at home, being in some school abroad, of which so far the address was not known. Miss Skinner was a very dark complexioned, handsome girl, precocious for her years, and report said that her mother had been a Mahomedan women of noble family. Both father and mother had, however, been dead for several years. The house had been ransacked, and a good many valuables taken. The Colonel's death was due to a pistol shot in the chest. Poullett had arranged for the express to make a special stop at the little station of Willowdale, which happened to be on the main line. About 1 A.M. we arrived at our destination, and were met by a Police Inspector on the platform. Colonel Jacob's house being about a mile from the station, we left our bags in the waiting room, to be brought up later; but first Aykroyd dived into his Gladstone, and produced what looked like a pair of short gaiters, and these he took with him under his arm.

On arriving at the house, we knocked, and were at once admitted by one of two policemen, who were in charge.

The Colonel's body lay, covered with a sheet, on the sitting-room floor just as he had fallen. Everything in the house had been left undisturbed.

As Aykroyd lifted the sheet to look at the dead man, I was suddenly struck by his expression. Usually his face denoted merely determination, and a kind of alert calmness; now a look of intent eager ferocity had invaded and changed the whole countenance of the man. He had become the bloodhound on a red hot scent: his whole heart and mind were given up now to this engrossing sport of man hunting. After a glance at the body, and a short sniff, Aykroyd remarked. "Shot through the heart, probably with an automatic pistol; I can smell the fumes of one of the smokeless foreign powders." He then sat down in a chair, and strapped the things I had taken to be gaiters, over his knees. They were knee guards, similar to those sometimes used by fishermen to enable them to kneel down in wet grass, when casting over shy trout.

No sooner were the knee caps on, than Aykroyd dropped on all fours, and with singular agility ran all over the room and house snuffing here, there and everywhere. Afterwards asking us to follow him, he took up a trail at the back door, and scuttled across a field, still on all fours, at such a pace that we had almost to run in order to keep up with him. The night was clear and warm, and as we strode swiftly across the grass in the semi darkness, after the scuffling bear-like shape in front of us, I thought the adventure one of the strangest I had ever been engaged on. After three hundred yards or so of grass we came quite suddenly to a steep bank dropping down to a broad placid river. Aykroyd rose to his feet, and said "Light your lamp Poullett and look here." The detective switched on his electric lamp, and illuminated the scene. It was quite obvous that the place had been used lately to tie up a boat at, and come ashore. "An oil launch," said Aykroyd. "Can't mistake the smell. Come along we will go back now and I will tell you what I have arrived at."

We returned, and while Poullett was engaged in making a thorough examination of the whole house, Aykroyd and I ate some sandwiches we had brought with us

Poullett's investigations did not take long, and then we three gathered in the dining room, and having shut the door, set to discuss what we made of the case. "First tell us what you gather Poullett," said Aykroyd. "Well, my opinion is that the murderer, for some reason, was particularly interested in Miss Skinner's bedroom, and must have climbed up there first. Next he must have known that the servants would be out late on Sunday evening. Then everything points to there having been a violent scene between him and Colonel Jacob, before the latter was shot; so that it may be presumed that he did not come to the house with any intention of committing murder. The state of the river bank shows that the man came and went by boat. The systematic way in which all the Colonel's writing table drawers and bureau have been rammaged through, leads me to think that his visitor was looking for some paper which he expected to find, and that robbery was quite a second thought. This is confirmed by the fact that a number of valuables, which he might easily have taken, have not been touched. I fancy, on the whole, that Miss Skinner had a good deal to do with the whole business, in spite of the fact that she went away over a week ago." Aykroyd nodded approvingly. Upon my word you leave me very little to do Poullett; what I have to tell you will be merely supplementary to your excellent deductions. To begin with you must have both noticed, especially you Waring, who have been so long in the East that Natives have an unmistakeable smell of their own. A good deal of this is no doubt due to the things they eat and use: things which taken all together give that never-to-be-forgotten aroma to the Indian bazar. Natives who visit this country still eat and use such things as they can procure in London, which remind them of their own land, for they are most conservative and home loving. Consequently the Native never altogether loses his distinctive odour. The man who killed Colonel Jacob was a Native. Look at these two wax matches which I picked up: my nose tells me that they came out of a sandalwood box.

"On the wet bank, at the landing place, you no doubt noticed the print of a bare foot." Poullett nodded affirmatively. "Well, from the small size, general shape, and wide spacing of the toes, I had no doubt that the man to whom that naked foot belongs is another Native. I was fortunate enough to pick up this bit of cotton waste, used for cleaning the engine: in addition to the usual smell of oil, my nose detects the same unmistakeable Native smell, the aroma of the man who used the piece of waste. This so confirms our deductions regarding the footprint, that I think we may assert that the motor man on the launch is also a Native, as well as his master.

"Now we already know that Colonel Jacob sent away his ward eight days before he was killed to some unknown destination. Neither of the two servants could give the least information as to where Miss Skinner is at the present moment. Might this not have been to get her away from the attentions of the very Native, who shot the Colonel? The man then comes, possibly with the intention of running off with the girl: he finds to his surprise that she is gone: and no doubt the Colonel had taken good care that she should have no chance of communicating with her lover. The Native full of rage, walks into the sitting room, and tackles Colonel Jacob: a violent scene follows, and the Colonel is shot. The murderer's next step is to ferret out the writing table and bureau, in order to find where Miss Skinner has been sent to. His Oriental cupidity, and perhaps a notion of disguising his trail, makes him loot everything valuable he happens to come across during the search; but he is not sufficiently interested in this part of the business to make the robbery complete and comprehensive. No doubt, he is now trying to get Miss Skinner out of her hiding place, to carry her off in accordance with the original programme. I think now you have enough to go on, to find your gentleman, and the quickest way will be to find out Miss Skinner's address, and look there for him."

We did find where the Colonel's ward was hidden, by hunting, just like the Native had, through his papers. She proved to be in a French convent. Prompt however though Poullett was, the Colonel's slayer not only got clear away, but managed to take the girl with him. We never heard what artifices he used to get Miss Skinner out of the care of the nuns, but Poullett told us afterwards the history of the man himself. He was a Punjabi Mahommedan of noble family, and was very fairly well off: his name was Imander Khan, which as it is the Hindustani for Honest, seems to have been a singularly inappropriate name for such a man of wile. Miss Skinner's mother was of the same house as Imander Khan, and this no doubt led up to the tragedy. Colonel Jacob was, it turned out, afraid that Imander would run off with his ward, and had taken special pains to hide her in France, exactly as Aykroyd had surmised.

JOGGLES is the happy father of thirteen children, and he is proud of them. But being papa to such a lot has its drawbacks. While on holiday the procession invoked merriment, and sundry remarks were directed at the proud father, which only increased his pride.

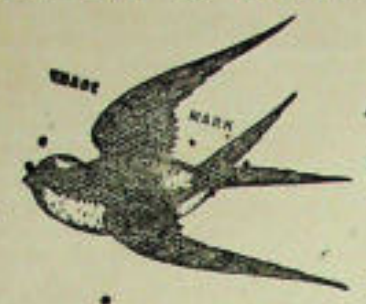
But a railway porter's ejaculation on seeing the little gathering quite upset poor Joggles' feelings although the remark was made quite innocently.

"Hullo!" he said critically. "What have you been up to?"

Poor Joggles started vacantly, and said "Nothing! Why?"

"Well," remarked the porter, "what's all the crowd follerin' yer for?"

In a small country village, where they kill about one animal a week, the butcher's boy calls around for the orders, taking the best customers first to choose the joint they would like. Calling on the vicar, he said: "We are killing a pig this week. What part would you like?"



So the vicar said: "Bring me a leg."

Well, in a few days the boy brought a leg of mutton.

"But," said the vicar, "I thought you said you were going to kill a pig?"

"Oh," said the boy, "the pig got better again.

ARMOUR IN ANIMALS.

AN article of exceptional interest, on the degeneration of armour in animals, is communicated by Dr. Felix Oswald to the July number of Science Progress, in which the author points out that when species or groups live for a long period under special and uniform conditions of environment, there appears to be a marked and progressive tendency to the development of an external panoply of bone, horn, shell, or some other hard substance for defensive purposes. This tendency may be developed to such a degree as to sacrifice plasticity of structure as well as the capacity for regaining such plasticity. So long as surrounding conditions remain the same, such heavily armoured animals appear to be masters of the situation, and more or less completely safe from attack. With the incoming of new and adverse conditions these heavily panoplied animals often, however, find themselves at a disadvantage, and from being unable to modify their bodily structure in accordance with the new surroundings, become worsted in the struggle for existence, and eventually die out.

In addition to the dying out of these heavily armoured forms, there seems, however, to be also a tendency towards the loss of lighter types of armour in various groups with the consequent assumption of much greater mobility.

In the course of his article Dr. Oswald illustrates this phenomenon in animal development by a number of instances culled from various groups of both vertebrates and invertebrates, among which we may refer to a few of the more striking.

In the vertebrates one of the most remarkable examples is presented by the group of amphibians, in which armour is conspicuously absent from the soft, naked skin of modern toads, frogs, salamanders, and newts. And yet in the coal period and immediately overlying formations we find the group of so-called labyrinthodonts in which the head and portions, or even the whole, of the body were protected by a bony cuirass. Side by side with these armoured forms there existed, however, species with more or less completely naked skins, from some of which the modern types are supposed to be descended, so that the group did not become extinct, although most of its living representatives are comparatively small creatures.

Turtles and tortoises are perhaps the most heavily armoured of all existing animals; but even some of these display a tendency to lighten the burden under special circumstances, and have thereby managed to survive under new conditions. The ordinary marine turtles, for example, have greatly lightened the lower shell, or plastron, which is quite free from the upper one; while the huge leathery turtle has gone a step further and discarded the solid upper shell of ordinary turtles in favour of one composed of a mosaic of small pieces of bone, which is doubtless in some degree flexible and elastic. The soft tortoises, or mud-tortoises, of the Indian and African rivers, form another group exhibiting a lightening of both upper and lower shells, which are completely separate from one another.

Tortoises also afford an example of the dying out of species which have attained an excessive and cumbrous development of armour, as witness the huge and bizarre extinct horned tortoises of the superficial deposits of Patagonia and Australia, in which the head was armed with numerous horn-like bony spikes while the tail was encased in a solid sheath of bone. In a less degree the same tendency is exhibited by the dying out of the gigantic extinct

ARMOUR IN ANIMALS.

An article of exceptional interest, on the degeneration of armour in animals, is communicated by Dr. Felix Oswald to the July number of Science Progress, in which the author points out that when species or groups live for a long period under special and uniform conditions of environment, there appears to be a marked and progressive tendency to the development of an external panoply of bone, horn, shell, or some other hard substance for defensive purposes. This tendency may be developed to such a degree as to sacrifice plasticity of structure as well as the capacity for regaining such plasticity. So long as surrounding conditions remain the same, such heavily armoured animals appear to be masters of the situation, and more or less completely safe from attack. With the incoming of new and adverse conditions these heavily panoplied animals often, however, find themselves at a disadvantage, and from being unable to modify their bodily structure in accordance with the new surroundings, become worsted in the struggle for existence, and eventually die out.

In addition to the dying out of these heavily armoured forms, there seems, however, to be also a tendency towards the loss of lighter types of armour in various groups with the consequent assumption of much greater mobility.

In the course of his article Dr. Oswald illustrates this phenomenon in animal development by a number of instances culled from various groups of both vertebrates and invertebrates, among which we may refer to a few of the more striking.

In the vertebrates one of the most remarkable examples is presented by the group of amphibians, in which armour is conspicuously absent from the soft, naked skin of modern toads, frogs, salamanders, and newts. And yet in the coal period and immediately overlying formations we find the group of so-called labyrinthodonts in which the head and portions, or even the whole, of the body were protected by a bony cuirass. Side by side with these armoured forms there existed, however, species with more or less completely naked skins, from some of which the modern types are supposed to be descended, so that the group did not become extinct, although most of its living representatives are comparatively small creatures.

Turtles and tortoises are perhaps the most heavily armoured of all existing animals; but even some of these display a tendency to lighten the burden under special circumstances, and have thereby managed to survive under new conditions. The ordinary marine turtles, for example, have greatly lightened the lower shell, or plastron, which is quite free from the upper one; while the huge leathery turtle has gone a step further and discarded the solid upper shell of ordinary turtles in favour of one composed of a mosaic of small pieces of bone, which is doubtless in some degree flexible and elastic. The soft tortoises, or mud-tortoises, of the Indian and African rivers, form another group exhibiting a lightening of both upper and lower shells, which are completely separate from one another.

Tortoises also afford an example of the dying out of species which have attained an excessive and cumbrous development of armour, as witness the huge and bizarre extinct horned tortoises of the superficial deposits of Patagonia and Australia, in which the head was armed with numerous horn-like bony spikes while the tail was encased in a solid sheath of bone. In a less degree the same tendency is exhibited by the dying out of the gigantic extinct tortoise of the Siwalik Hills and its relatives on other continents; the smaller giants of this group surviving only in oceanic islands where they were free from competition, and where some of them have reduced their armour to such an extent that their shells can be easily pierced by a pen-knife.

The fate of the horned tortoises is almost exactly paralleled in the case of the giant solid-shelled armadillos, or glyptodons, of South America, some of which reached 7 and others as much as 12 feet in total length, with an absolutely solid shell of bone an inch or more in thickness, and a mail-clad tail terminating in some instances in huge spines. All these have absolutely died out, whereas their smaller relatives, the modern armadillos, in which the shell has from 3 to 7 movable bands, have managed to survive. Probably the extinction of the glyptodons, and also of a gigantic representative of the movable-banded armadillos, was brought about by the union of South America (which had previously been an island-continent) with North America, and the consequent change in surrounding conditions, and more especially the incoming of great carnivora like the sabre-toothed tiger. Want of sufficient food, caused by a drier climate, or possibly the ravages of bacteria, may, however, have been the chief cause, under these changed conditions, of the extinction of these monster armadillos.

Although this is not mentioned by our author, whales seem to offer an instance of the loss of a bony armour, remnants of which are retained on the back of the common Indian porpoise. Moreover, the extinct zeuglodonts of the early Tertiary period, which were probably nearly related to, if not actually the stock from which whales have originated, seem to have been clad in armour, which may have prevented them from being damaged by the surf, as it is quite likely they were not inhabitants of the open sea. Very curious, too, is the recent discovery in the skin of the fox of what appears to be vestiges of a scale-like armour, thus suggesting descent from animals protected by a covering of scales similar to that of the Indian pangolin.

Fishes and fish-like animals present, as Dr. Oswald points out, an admirable instance of the complete extinction of the more heavily armoured types, and also of the tendency to replace comparatively heavy armour by a lighter form of protection. The earliest known fish-like creatures were, for example, encased in a more or less completely immoveable coat of solid armour. These became completely extinct before the Coal period, in and after which their place was taken by the enamel-scaled ganoids, of which the bony pikes of North America and the bichirs and their relatives of equatorial Africa are the sole survivors. For this group, in which the hard quadrangular bony scales form closely approximated oblique rows, and thus constitute a splendid, although not absolutely rigid, armour was destined to give place in its turn to the thin-scaled bony fishes of the present day, which made their appearance in force during the period of the Chalk.

Turning to molluscs, there are several independent lines in the gastropod, or whelk and snail class, along which a reduction of the shell has taken place accompanied by a greater spread of the race, with a frequent increase in the matter of bodily size, and the assumption of carnivorous habits.

Ordinary garden slugs, which are more or less closely related to snails, form a very familiar instance of this reduction and in some instances complete disappearance of the shell; many kinds of slugs retaining a rudimentary, plate-like shell, either external or internal, while others have none at all.

A similar degeneration of the shell occurs in the case of the sea-slugs, or so-called nudibranchs, many of which are to be met with in tidal pools on the coast, where they attract attention by the beauty and brightness of their colouring, and their graceful, fern-like external gills.

The author goes on to show how a reduction in armour may be traced in the beautiful stone-lilies, or crinoids as we ascend from the earliest to the more modern formations and the same is true of the sea-urchins. Indeed there is scarcely a group of animals of which the same story may not be related.

Armour, in fact, among animals presents a curious analogy to its history in the case of man himself. Armour for human warfare had just about attained its supreme development when gunpowder was invented; and indeed had become so heavy and encumbring to its wearer that a knight in full panoply if thrown from his charger—also heavily armoured—in the shock of battle was often unable to rise on account of the weight of metal he carried, and lay prone and helpless before his foes. It was impossible to modify this weighty armour to make it effective against gunpowder-driven missiles, and it was consequently abandoned altogether. In other words, it became extinct. But as in this instance the armour was not an integral part of the organism by which it was borne man was enabled to emancipate himself from the burden, and to develop his means of warfare and locomotion in other directions, till, in these last days, he has succeeded in conquering the air, and has thus become the most mobile of all animals.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE Calcutta Second Extra Meeting was run in wet and nasty weather which was probably the cause of a poor attendance on the part of the public. The racing taken all round was very good, especially the horse events. For the Criterion Plate 14 started, Juvenile Plate 9, Club Plate 12—which is not at all bad for the above meeting.

RACING started at 2-35 with the Zeerut Plate for which seven went to the post with Cracker favourite; Solace and Tete-a-Tete were well backed at 3 to 1 against. After a lot of delay caused by Picaninny going through the gate they got away to a good start. Solace jumped very badly at first but warmed up at about the mile post and had the race won from the half mile onwards; she fenced a lot better the latter part of the journey, and beat the favourite by a neck in the run home. Only three started for the Lilliputian Pony Race. First Bell was a hot favourite and won as he liked by three lengths in spite of his dickey leg.

A LARGE field of 14 runners went out for the Criterion Plate the favourite, Vigorous, getting home with his head in his chest. This sturdy chestnut has improved a lot since we last saw him, and we shall expect him to run very well again later in the season. The race was run in the good time of 1min. 2⅘secs. not bad considering the heavy going. Chobham won the Juvenile Plate in a canter with Sequent the only other in it at the finish.

THE Pony Plate was a very big upset: Danseuse was made a very hot favourite starting at 3 to 1 on and looked to have the race won at the distance, but Cheeky got through on the rails, and putting in a very fast run beat her by one and three-quarter lengths. Bleach's stable were said to have fancied Evening Herald's chances, but the little mare was unable to get nearer than third.

THE Club Plate was another upset, Five Crown and Metal Boy were the most fancied. Five Crown was the first to show up and led with Metal Boy next, who caught the former at the distance and the race looked over, but a new English mare of Mr. Norton's came out of the ruck and putting in a very fast run won with a lot in hand by one and a quarter lengths. Many of the bookmakers are said to have not written the mare's name and the ring made a very good thing out of the race, putting them well up on the day.

OWING to the rain the training track was closed on Monday morning. Horses were doing slow work on the monsoon hurdle track, where it was very good going. Neith and Fizz did slow work but we did not see any of the other cup horses doing anything, Wandin and Absentee were out but did nothing beyond walking exercise, Mumford's string went for a long walk but did not go near the race-course.

HECKFORD arrived by last mail and was riding J. D. Scott's horses in their work on Tuesday morning. The string arrived from Lucknow on Saturday and are all looking very well.

CAPTAIN HOLDEN is back in Calcutta again and we hear he will stay all through the racing season Captain Barrett and his horses are expected shortly.

THE entries for Saturday are very good, the hurdle race has a field of 13 and most of them will start as they are all short of a school or two. The small pony race again has a very thin lot—five only. The December Plate has found a very large field of 32, but it is doubtful if we shall see half of them go to the post as the big stables each have three and four entered and some of the small fry will no doubt be frightened out by the big fish.

FIRTH will ride Wandin in the Cup again this year; he has been retained by T. Scott's stable. W. Southall has been very ill with malaria, but is alright again now: he has left Calcutta and is at present in Bombay.

THE hurdles were up for schooling on Tuesday morning when the following were out:—

Ardea (Trenoweth), Pincher (Alford), Golden Morn (McNeilage) went a nice gallop 1½ miles over seven flights. Ardea jumped very well.

Captain Gourlie's Grand National candidate then went a nice school over the seven hurdles. She fenced well but pulled up very lame, and her stable are doubtful as to whether they will be able to race her for some time to come.

MYSTIC CIRCLE (Alford), Mercedes (Thomas) went 1½ miles at a nice pace. The black mare jumped away from the horse at every hurdle. She should run well on Saturday. The horse put up a very indifferent performance, and nearly fell at the sixth flight.

MOUNT DANE (R. Hoyt), Mayfowl (C. Hoyt) were the next out; they did a very fast school over 1½ miles, both jumped excellently.

Fingal (Alford), Wolferton (McGowan) then went ½ mile over seven hurdles at about half speed. Fingal jumped very well, but was tiring badly at the finish. Wolferton, who was out for the first time, did not fence too well over the first half of the journey, but did a lot better later.

WE hear with reference to the objections to Cheeky the winner of the Pony Plate last Saturday that the first for carrying wrong weight was overruled: the second for wrong declaration of ownership will be heard to-night.

At a conference of representatives of inter-State racing clubs, held in Melbourne on the 3rd November, the registration of horses and the purchase of the "Stud Book" were two matters that were finally dealt with. After announcing that the copyright of the "Stud Book" had been purchased conjointly by the V. R. C. and the A. J. C., the chairman requested all clubs that had hitherto supported it to continue their subsidies until such time as the book was self-supporting. The assistance of inter-State clubs was also solicited by way of collecting information from breeders. The "Stud Book" will in future be published in Sydney, under the auspices of the chairman of the A. J. C. and V. R. C. It was unanimously decided that all horses throughout the Commonwealth be registered, with the A. J. C. as central office.

Owners and trainers are reminded that entries for the Military Steeplechase and the Military Handicap Steeplechase at the Tollygunge Steeplechases next month will close at 7 P.M. on Monday, the 13th December.

We regret to have to record the death at Folkestone on the 24th ultimo of Sir William Macpherson, a good sportsman and one of the most popular men in Calcutta in his time. He was a former President of the Bengal Club and while a Steward of the Calcutta Turf Club he enjoyed the respect and confidence of all racing men in India, while his long connection with the Turf Club mainly contributed to raising the standard of racing to the high level which now exists in Calcutta. Sir William entered the Indian Civil Service in 1856, was appointed a Judge of the High Court in 1885 and retired in 1900, receiving his knighthood on retirement. The news of his death has been received with the deepest regret by all who knew him.

The Fifteenth Annual Horse Show held by the Tollygunge Club is fixed for Friday, the 31st instant, entries closing next Thursday, the 16th. Ponies entered for the Show will be measured by Mr. James Hutchison at the Calcutta Race Stand on Monday next at 7-15 A.M.

The annual general meeting of the Calcutta Paperchase Club was held at Golightly Hall on Tuesday evening and was well attended. Mr. G. B. Deakin presided. The accounts for the season were read and passed and the meeting proceeded to the election of a committee for the coming season, the following gentlemen being chosen :—Dr. Forsyth, Messrs. R. H. A. Gresson, G. B. Deakin, A. Birkmyre, T. G. Evers, J. G. Ballantyne and J. H. Allen. Votes of thanks were accorded to Mr. Dudley Myers for past services and to Mr. Dalgleish for managing the accounts. It was resolved to hold a paperchase each week, the day being left to the discretion of the committee to fit in as far as possible with the different interests of the racing section and the "everyday" paperchasers. A late start is anticipated this year and there is apparently no prospect of a beginning before the usual Xmas meet. The various cups will be put up for competition as in former years.

The polo tournament, which has been in progress at Indore during the past week, has been most successful. Seven teams entered and the first two matches were played off on the 27th ultimo when the 1st Central India Horse beat the Holkar Imperial Service Troops by 8 goals to 1: and Rutlam defeated the Indore Residency by 8 goals to nil. The victorious teams met on the 29th ultimo when the Central India Horse beat the Rutlam team by 6 goals to 3 after a well contested game. The semi-finals were played off on the 1st instant and two good games were witnessed. In the first the 1st Central India Horse, who were better mounted and more experienced than their opponents, beat the East Surrey Regiment by 14 goals to nil, the infantry playing a good sound game nevertheless. The second game was between the 2nd Central India Horse and the Bhopal team and it was generally voted as the best exhibition of polo seen on the Indore ground during recent years. The Central India Horse who displayed the better combination eventually won by 8 goals to 3. The final was played on the 7th instant when the 2nd C. I. Horse beat the 1st C. I. Horse by 4 goals to 2.

Messrs. Achard and Company, who are sole agents for Messrs. J. and G. Stewart's Gold Medal Scotch whisky, have sent for editorial opinion a sample of this well known brand. Messrs. J. and G. Stewart, Limited, have held a leading position in the Scotch whisky trade for the past 130 years and their Gold Medal brand, which has been specially blended for India, is considered one of the choicest offered on this market. It was prominent at St. Andrew's Dinner in Calcutta last week, where it was much appreciated and we hasten to add our small tribute of praise to the very general opinion of its excellence.

The Polo Tournament during the Sonepore week ended in a win for the Calcutta team. Six teams entered and in the first ties Calcutta (Messrs. Graham, Muir, Walker and Apostolides) beat Durbungha (Dr. Coltart, Messrs. P. Jones, J. Brown and W. Marsham) by six goals to 2. The second match was between the 7th Rajputs (Captain Meadows, Captain Agg, Captain Gover and Mr. Ayscough) and the King's Light Infantry (Captain Battye, Captain Smith Dorrien, Messrs. Leach and Holmes Harcourt) an exciting game ending in a win for the Rajputs by 4 goals to 3. On the 27th ultimo two games were played, Calcutta defeated the Rajputs in the first by 10 goals to 3 and the next, between the Optimists (Messrs. G. Danby, F Rawlins, and Barton and Major Chatterton) and Champaran (Colonel Manners-Smith, Messrs. Ross, Robertson and Warren), ended in a win for the latter by 7 goals to 1. The final game in the tournament was played on Monday, the 29th ultimo, when Calcutta defeated Champaran by 10 goals to 1—though the losers put up a good game.

The Rajputana and Central India Polo tournament was concluded at Nasirabad on the 24th ultimo, the Kishengarh team defeating the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons by 14 goals to 1 in the final.

The final game in the Cooper Allen Polo Challenge Cup Tournament was played at Cawnpore on the 4th instant when the 9th Hodson's Horse beat the Highland Light Infantry by 10 goals to nil. Details further on.

The rain in Calcutta last week end interfered with the cricket matches set down for Saturday and Sunday and the two—days matches had to be abandoned. The C.C.C. were playing a combined Indian XI and batting first on Saturday afternoon made 184 for the loss of three wickets when stumps were drawn. S. C. B. Lees scored 84, not out, and W. Jukes 43. The rain prevented the game being continued on Sunday. A similar fate met the match between Ballygunge and Cooch Behar to the great disappointment of a large number of spectators who had assembled on the Ballygunge ground. Play was limited to an hour only on Saturday, owing to the wet, and during this time Cooch Behar were at the wickets and scored 64 for three wickets. It is to be hoped that this latter game will be able to be continued some other day.

REUTER'S telegram of Friday shows that the local objections to the Australian cricketers playing as paid professionals in Colombo have attracted the attention of the Board of Control, writes the Times of Ceylon. It is to be hoped that some definite understanding will be come to for future guidance. So far as complaints are concerned the chief ones which were made were (1) against the principle of five men accepting £10 each plus the payment of expenses of an afternoon's cricket, and (2) against the unconscionably late hour at which play was commenced in the first of the two games. If the Board of Control look up the records of the many previous sporting games which have been played in Colombo by full teams of Australian and English cricketers they will, we feel sure, range themselves with European opinion in Ceylon that the recent departure was undesirable from every point of view. Ceylon will always welcome the stimulus given to the good old game in our midst by visits from English and Australian teams, but we have no inclination for obtaining this advantage at the sacrifice of the true amateur spirit which has hitherto prevailed. If we can only have matches with these distinguished visitors by hiring them to don flannels in our midst, then we shall regretfully prefer to do without them.

ANENT the Indian cricket team for England the Times of India writes :—"The proposal to send an Indian cricket eleven to England continues to meet with favourable reception, and much interest in the idea has been shown in England. The M.C.C. are prepared to guarantee £200 for a match at Lords', and to welcome the Indian team in 1911. A South African eleven is to visit England in that year, but though this fact may deter some counties from giving a guarantee it would not much interfere with the Indian programme, and a match between South Africans and Indians should be a great attraction. It has not been definitely settled that an Indian eleven will go in 1911, but for various reasons that year seems the most suitable, and a decision on the point will soon have to be made. The next question of importance is who shall captain the eleven? It is hoped that the Jam of Nawanagar will be able to do so, but this is still uncertain."

LORD HAWKE, presiding on the 19th ultimo, at Sheffield at the Annual Meeting of the Yorkshire County Cricket Club, congratulated Kent on winning the County Championship. They certainly played the most sporting cricket, he said, and they thoroughly deserved the honour.

With regard to the complaint that Yorkshire played unattractive cricket, exceptional weather conditions had something to do with that. Personally he preferred that they should lose matches by sporting cricket rather than draw them by unattractive cricket.

Cricket nowadays was becoming too much of a serious business, and this was due in a measure to Press criticism. If it had not been for attacks on the committee and players in the matches with Australia he did not think England would have lost her prestige. Men took criticism too seriously. He felt too that before long the time must come when they would see the number of first class counties reduced or the counties divided in to "A" and "B" classes.

His lordship said he did not think Yorkshire deserved a higher position than third place. They were disappointed in four of the younger players, but hoped for better results next year. He suggested that provision should be made for the coaching of young professionals. There was not, he concluded, a young amateur before the country who had not been coached.

Lord Hawke was re-elected president of the club.

THE Howrah Bowling Club will hold a Rink Bowling tournament on New Year's Day, 1910. The tournament is under the Rules of the Scottish Bowling Association and is open to all comers. ALL previous duck shooting records have recently been broken at a shoot held at Bharatpur when Major Gurdon the Political Resident and Mrs. Gurdon entertained a party of over 40 guns on the famous jheel which is always the resort of countless wild fowl and has for several years past yielded very large bags. The sportsmen included the Raoji Sahib of Bharatpur, the Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior, the Maharaja of Bikanir, the Maharaja of Dholpore, the Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior, the Hon. Mr. E. G. Colvin, General Nixon, Colonels Pinhey, Showers, Dickie, Grimston, De Lisle, and Pank, Mr. F. C. Harrison, Mr. Cobb, Mr. Wood, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Buck, Majors Drummond and Patterson, Mr. Wilkinson, and others. Shooting commenced about 10 o'clock and after an interval of about an hour and a half at midday continued till dusk and the actual number of ducks which was gathered in the evening amounted to no less than 3 352. The Maharaja of Bikanir, well known as the best shot in Rajputana, contributed no fewer than 288 birds and the Maharaja of Dholpore was a good second with 218.

THE latest additions to the Calcutta Zoological Gardens are two fine specimens of the Indian Rhinoceros (R. unicornis), which have been obtained from Nepal and are now on view in the Rhino Enclosure.

A "TIMES" correspondent in the latest of his series of studies in the Zoological Gardens writes of the "Monkey Folk." He covers a large field as there are in all something over 200 species of apes and monkeys 40 of whom are now represented in the Gardens, and they differ both in appearance and disposition, almost as much as animals can. The whole simian family is divided by naturalists into two main groups, one of which is restricted entirely to the Old World and the other exclusively inhabits the New ; and it is worth noting that only in the invigorating, invention-breeding air of the New World have monkeys thought of using their tails as an extra hand. Not all American monkeys are prehensile-tailed, any more than all human Americans invent typewriters or gramophones, but no prehensile-tailed monkeys exist elsewhere. It is only an American monkey again, one of the sakis, which has learned to use its hand as a drinking cup, to avoid dipping, it is supposed, its luxuriant beard in the water. All the Old World species continue to mess their chins and faces by thrusting their muzzles down into the stream or pool ; and a fascinating field of conjecture is opened to the believer in the influence of environment in the relation that may exist between the politer method of drinking of the American saki and the notorious preference of human Americans for taking their drinks through straws rather than put their lips to the liquid. Most notable of the American family are the spider monkey with its wonderful tail so prehensile that it is reputed to possess an eye in the tip, the squirrel monkeys and the howlers, the latter being considered the noisiest of all created things. Of those in the Old World the forbidding aspect of the mandrill is pointed out, the macaques and the Indian wanderoo with its black face peering solemnly out from a great grey mane, and many another are mentioned. In India the monkey is sacred as in Egypt and there are many legends in connection therewith, which are fairly well known. With regard to monkeys as other animals these are popular but erroneous beliefs. One of these is to the effect that he is constantly searching in his neighbour's fur for fleas. The truth is that monkeys are very free from fleas, and the object of their patient foraging is not any living thing but a scurf which is thrown off by the skin and is said to have a saltish taste which pleases the monkey palate. It is impossible to write an article on monkeys without some reference to the Darwinian theory. In speaking of the monkeys in the London Zoo it is remarked that there is no monkey which even in its wildest romps is not a victim of settled melancholy. It was an old belief that apes were merry when the moon was waxing and moody in the wane. It may be that in the grim climate of England they have settled to a belief that the moon will never wax again; or is it only that they still bewail the lost opportunity of that day, long ago, when their ancestors took the wrong turning at the parting of the ways and failed to find the road that might have made them men?

THE evils connected with football and cricket at home as shown in the huge crowds that spend so much of their time in watching these games with demoralizing effects to themselves, have frequently been pointed out in late years. It is pleasant to be able to point out some of the good influence spread by these games. It is asserted that in South Africa cricket and football are doing more than aught else to reconcile the Boer and to civilize the Kaffir. Men who were fighting us not so long ago have completely succumbed to the fascination of our two great British games, and have shown themselves as skilful on the cricket and football ground as in the field of war. They taught England this when in company with their British comrades they invaded her cricket and football fields a few seasons ago and displayed so much skill and sportsmanlike bearing. In a short time a band of cricketers from Great Britain, to be followed possibly by a football team, will be continuing the good work of Imperial fraternity by opposing South Africans on their own grounds, and Dutch players are looking forward to the fray as keenly as any. Here, then, is a secret of Britain's Imperial success in active operation. Ten years ago she was despatching army corps to South Africa. To-day she is invading the same country with cricket and football teams. Could anything be better than this, or be calculated to further the ideal of Imperial unity and good fellowship more?

A MORE bizarre outcome of British sport, however, is reported to be seen in the effect it is producing on the South African Kaffir. Neither the white man's education nor religion has been successful in reconciling him to his white masters, but his games are exercising a conciliatory and civilizing influence. The Kaffir is an enthusiast at cricket and football, and often he may be seen in immaculate flannels, with his ladies in white skirts and silk-blouses, disporting himself on a tennis court with all the airs and graces of Wimbledon. Similarly at cricket or football matches between the various Kaffir locations the toggery of the players is faultless, while the grounds are besieged by enthusiastic black crowds, who greet every piece of good play with frantic yells and weird dances. The cricket is really good. There is excellent bowling, capital drives right along the carpet, and missed catches are almost unheard of. Their football is equally scientific. This is of good augury. Away north in the heart of the Soudan the same games are carrying on their civilizing mission. General Wingate mentions in a recent report that the young Soudanese of the Gordon College have only lost one football match this year, and that to the Cold Stream Guards. It is no doubt the same in India and who can deny that to a great extent Great Britain owes her supremacy in this country to the games which her sons continually play here and in most, if not all, of which there are now Indian adepts.

IN connection with the big Exhibition to be held in London the eighth of its kind it is interesting to recall the rapid growth in the popularity of the motor car. Six years ago the motor car was hardly known in Calcutta ; now every street may be said to be redolent of their presence. At home the progress of the motor car has been yet more remarkable. It is only 13 years ago that 45 motor cars started from the Hotel Metropole in London to attempt the journey to Brighton. Of these only 13 arrived and the best time was four hours. There was much excitement. The streets of London were lined with people to watch the cars go by, and at the Metropole the crush was so great that the police had to force a clearing through the crowd before the cars could start. On the route towns were decorated with flags and banners, and everywhere the cars were cheered. At Brighton thousands of people waited in pouring rain for their arrival, and when the first car ran through the streets it was surrounded by amazed people anxious to shake the adventurous driver by the hand. At different points along the route cars broke down, and the majority could not be persuaded to start again. One went no further than the Oval, and many could not succeed in passing Croydon. In 13 years the motor car has been brought almost to perfection, and the engineer has snatched another triumph. The train is perfect, the bicycle is perfect, and when a few final touches have been added, the motor car will be perfect. Two of the features with regard to the motor car in addition to its reliability are now its comparative cheapness and the easiness with which it can be driven. There are cars to be seen in the show at Olympia for 100 or 140 guineas which will take you for thousands of miles without a stop,

Bob Fitzsimmons and Mr. Hugh D. McIntosh, the great fight promoter, arrived in Australia on the 9th ultimo and were accorded a great reception. Interviewed by the representative of an Australian sporting paper Mr. McIntosh said that during his sojourn in Australia Fitzsimmons would meet all-comers. He is already matched with Lang.

"Owing to the fact," continued Mr. McIntosh, "that Fitzsimmons' theatrical engagements in London and America extend to 1916, my task in inducing him to come out this way was an extremely difficult one; in fact the engagement is the most expensive one I have made, the guarantee being £5,000 for a 20 weeks' season, with first-class travelling expenses from England to England.

"Johnny Summers, the English light-weight champion (under contract with me) will leave England to-morrow week, and will box all-comers, meeting the wonderful Dane, 'Battling' Nelson, for the world's light-weight championship. The date of the Summers-Nelson match has not yet been definitely fixed.

"Other matches in prospect are Ketchell vs. Lang for the middle-weight championship of the world, winner to fight Fitzsimmons, and possibly I might succeed in arranging a Tommy Burns-Fitzsimmons contest for the light-heavy-weight championship.

"Just now I am endeavouring to secure the appearance in Australia of James J. Corbett, and have every hope of success."

"Is boxing in England attracting much attention just now?"

"Yes, to a surprising degree, although, unfortunately, the dearth of heavy-weights is causing English enthusiasts much concern. The present position of the boxing world in England is one of strength and solidity. Lord Lonsdale (president of the National Sporting Club) has formulated a code of rules to govern world's championships, and he further proposes forming a committee of representative boxing enthusiasts of each country—England, Africa, Australia, and France—to control the position and force the holder of the championship to box any legitimate challenger—white or coloured—within a reasonable period and without restrictive conditions. Lord Lonsdale has signified his agreement to donate £1,000 to this end, and I am also giving an equal sum to the same object.

"Regarding the much-discussed Johnson-Jeffries tourney. Well, briefly, there's an immense amount of noise and enthusiasm in the big centres caused by the public demand for a fight between these two men, but I must say that Jeffries, owing to questionable tactics, is rapidly ruining his popularity. The public of the world look askance at a champion who demands impossible terms, while loudly proclaiming his desire to box. I, myself, offered a purse of £10,000, which Johnson accepted, and Jeffries demanded £30,000, and even then refused to say finally whether he would fight. If Jeffries accepts my offer, and it is the only legitimate offer made to date, arrangements are all ready for the fight to take place in England, France, or America."

The date of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association's annual sports has been definitely fixed for the 19th February, heats to be run off the previous day.

The Southern India Lawn Tennis Tournament will be held this season on the Madras Cricket Club courts at Chepauk, commencing on the 21st February next and ending on the 5th March. Mr. H. L. Padday is again the Secretary of the Committee of Management and under his experienced guidance the Tournament is sure to be successful. The competitions number nine, and include Challenge Singles, Men's and Ladies' Handicap Singles and Doubles, Men's Open Doubles and Mixed Doubles, both open and handicap. Entries close with the Honorary Secretary at the Madras Club not later than 6 P.M. on Saturday, the 12th February.

The Hon'ble F. S. Jackson, speaking as a guest of the Authors' Club, on Monday night, said that cricket was advancing faster in India than anywhere in the Empire. Referring to the possibility of the visit of an Indian team, he said there was an awful prospect of meeting eleven Ranjis!

A political speaker was attacking the Government with more venom that reason. A man at the back of the hall at last cried out: "You're wrong, sir!" A little nettled, the orator continued, without heeding.

Presently, in answer to another strong assertion, came again: "You're wrong, sir!" The speaker looked angry, but continued on the warpath.

"You're wrong, sir!" again rang out. Angrily addressing the persistent one, the orator cried. "Look here, I could tell this man something about this Government which would make his hair stand on end!"

"You're wrong again, sir!" came exultantly from the critic, as he stood up and removed his hat. His head was as bald as an egg.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 19th November 1909.

Mr. Keir Hardie's Indian friends seem to have broken out again, as I read in my Monday morning's paper, though I rejoice to learn that the attack on Lord and Lady Minto at Ahmedabad was fortunately unattended by serious result. Since the execution of Dhingra they appear to have been somewhat discouraged, but this fresh outrage indicates that it is not yet time for relaxing precautions or in any way weakening the hands of the authorities. I see one otherwise well-informed leader writer—who exhibits a knowledge which he could have gained only in India—expresses much surprise that this bomb incident should have occurred at a place like Ahmedabad, and from this he argues that the efforts of the sedition-mongers must be more wide-reaching than is generally believed. He looks on Bengal as the centre of the movement and of course Ahmedabad is rather a far cry from Calcutta. Doubtless the Indian headquarters of native anarchy are not more than a few miles from Lord Minto's official cold-weather residence; but this writer has ignored the fact that it is in London we must seek for a tap root of it all and Ahmedabad is as close to London—closer in fact than Calcutta. We continue to harbour these miscreants, we afford them every facility for the spreading of sedition and the acquisition of that knowledge and the employment of those methods which have made Russia what it is and at each fresh diabolical outrage some of us wonder how sedition and its accessories manage to spread so! Really it would be laughable if we could for a moment forget the tragedy of it all.

The years 1908—10 will be remarkable for London's bridge building activities. Hardly has the widening of old Blackfriar's Bridge been completed ere we are reconstructing Southwark Bridge and now the scheme has been sanctioned for another brand new bridge which is to cost £1,907,000 and having for its city outlet, or approach, a spot close to St. Paul's Cathedral.

King Manuel of Portugal has been visiting us and has had a right good time. The City of London welcomed him officially and popularly on Wednesday last with the usual Guildhall functions, processions, bunting, military brass bands and crowds. It was wretched weather, but we were bent on showing the lad we liked the look of him and I think we left him well pleased, this young monarch whose accession to the throne was through a terrible family tragedy.

The crowd I think were prepared to see a haughty king, remembering he was the descendant of two of the proudest houses in Europe and were ready with respectful and haughty cheers. But the moment they set eyes on this handsome frank, open faced, jolly boy the grandeur of the Braganzas and the majesty of Saxe-Coburg Gotha at once went out of their minds. There in the carriage before them was as comely a youngster as has ever travelled in state through the City of London. And the best part of him was that he seemed to be as well pleased with his admirers as they were with him. In the gaiety of his spirits he laughed his appreciation of their applause.

So jolly and high-spirited and youthful did King Manuel look that he almost seemed out of place in his gorgeous and pompous military uniform. It was as if a beaming young 'Varsity freshman had put on field marshal's attire. His bright dark eyes responded gaily to the smiles from pavement, window, and roof. He laughed "thank yous" at everybody. So this descendant of a hundred kings and princes made his triumphal schoolboy progress to the Guildhall, winning London's hearty liking.

I should say that few people will be either impressed or even amused by "Lorimer Sabiston Dramatist," the piece by Mr. R. C. Carton, which Mr. George Alexander has just put on at the St. James's Theatre. Mr. Alexander (in a beard) does perhaps everything that is possible for it and he has produced it with all the artistic care that he brings to everything he does at his theatre. He played the name part himself, and brought an admirable company with him—Mr. C. M. Lowne, Mr. James Carew, Mr. E. Vivian Reynolds, Miss Rosalie Toller, and Miss Beryl Faber. The story lacked interest, because it was quite unconvincing. I do not think the public takes the faintest interest in the lives of dramatists and this play was all about dramatists, and a play that one of them wrote and asked another to accept and get produced as if it were his own. Mr. Carton is evidently under the impression that dramatic authors are "stars," but there he is entirely wrong. No one ever points out an author, unless it might be Pinero or Gilbert. The rest although very good, and many of them making quite a good living by playwriting, are not celebrities and, that being so, nearly all the interest that Mr. Carton tried to work up in this play fell very flat.

He asks us to believe that a lady, a clever young married woman of position, a woman of wit, would fall in love with a man because he has written a strong play on the sex question. As if any woman falls in love with a man just because he wrote a play! It is all the more absurd, too, in this case because the man she loved never wrote it, and was at bottom a common, dull fellow. Mr. Carton asks us to believe that she would turn from half-liking Lorimer to wholly liking the man mean enough to accept a play that Lorimer wrote. Lorimer gave his reason for not acknowledging the play that he would lose the following he had at the theatre for his goody-goody stuff, which is also absurd, as the public goes to see a play for what they hear of it, not because of the author's name or reputation. A great deal of this play, which leaves the misunderstood Lorimer alone at last—the woman he loved gone off with another man—is marked by lines that get laughs, but unfortunately many of the lines appeared forced attempts to cause amusement. There was another thing about Lorimer that was hard to reconcile with his objection to fathering his strong play—the lady he wanted to love him, to whom he was making love, was a married woman, and the wife of one of his friends. Curious that! Mr. Alexander was accorded a fine welcome back to his theatre, and had a good cheer given him when the play was over.

In opera the maxim is "When in doubt play the 'Bo. Gal,'" as "The Bohemian Girl" is familiarly called. In drama the maxim has been "When in doubt play 'East Lynne.'" And on Saturday Messrs. Smith and Carpenter, wanting something with which to fill in the four weeks before pantomime time, revived "East Lynne," before a huge audience, which, once or twice slightly restive early in the evening, was solid to a man for the play at the finish.

A wonderful play is this "East Lynne." Those who have most right to speak will tell you that it has made more money and has been seen by more persons than any other play, "Hamlet" and "Charley's Aunt" not excepted. Of course, these lump all the versions together, versions that, whatever their differences, have one thing in common—that not one penny made by them ever found its way to the pocket of the author of the novel, Mrs. Henry Wood.

This particular Lyceum version is by Mr. Eric Mayne and, taken all round, it is excellently put on. Mr. Mayne is a particularly hateful Levison, and the unpopularity of the character is the best of all tributes to the actor. Mr. Frederick Ross is a sound and sympathetic Carlyle. His voice, capable of great floods of pity, serves him gloriously. Mr. Hubert Willis, as a postman (not in the original book), is drily diverting, and Miss Blanche Stanley gives a very clever impersonation of the fretful and outspoken Cornelia. Miss Frances Dillon is a strenuous Lady Isabel. As viewed from the stalls, she occasionally overdoes it; but the more distant parts of the house seemed to think differently. The children are capitally played by Miss Vera Burton and Miss Olga Hope, of whom the last named expired very touchingly as Willie.

Next summer Earl's Court and the White City will have a big rival to contend against in the "Festival of Empire." The whole of the Crystal Palace and its extensive grounds of more than 200 acres are to be occupied with the various incidents and elements of a picturesque exhibition, and all those arts will be brought into play which will bring home to England herself the scenery, the life, the industries of the different countries forming in unison the British Empire. It is taken for granted that the festival will be enthusiastically supported by India and the Colonies and that the whole show "will illustrate a principle and mark an epoch." May be; but there seems to be an impression abroad that we have reached the "fed up" condition in pageants, exhibitions and such like, Imperial or less pretentious. A good deal of high falutin has been indulged in over the project by the scribes who have burst out in columns over the "grandiose display of the arts, life and characteristic productions of our self-governing communities and Crown dependencies." Asks one writer:—"How can the ordinary citizen be made to lift his eyes to the larger expanse, and understand that his daily welfare depends, in many intricate ways, on the success and health of a world-wide organisation? The proposed Festival of Empire which is to be held next year at the Crystal Palace is one solution of this difficulty, for the visitor to the exhibition will have before him tangible and ocular evidence of the different realms in which he is personally interested, quite as much as they are interested in him. We cannot imagine a more important object than that which the promoters of the Festival have set before themselves. Sure of the support of all our Dominions, it will be at once a proof and an object-lesson—proof of the reality of Empire, and object-lesson of those self-sacrificing duties and responsibilities through which alone the wonderful Imperial fabric can be sustained."

Doubtless we shall produce a good and a big show; but if my careful observation of "Indian sections" at practically every big exhibition I've attended can be taken as a guide for the rest I incline to the belief that beyond undeniable merit from a showman's view point their educational value is a negligible quantity and their appeal to our sentiment or reason little indeed.

The majority of your readers know or have heard of or have imbibed learning or amusement from the writings of the veteran Editor of The Field. Mr. William Senior (Redspinner) vacates the editorial guddee this week, after fifty odd years of journalistic work, carrying with him the good wishes of a host of friends both in and out of the profession. He is succeeded by Mr. Theodore Andrea Cook, aged forty-two, who may be relied on to bring to his new billet all the energy and goodwill that have been characteristic of his career in various directions of late. Mr. Cook is no novice in the editorial chair; but it is now some nine years ago since he directed, in succession to Mr. Hugh Chisholm, the fortunes of the old St. James's Gazette, the direct inheritor of the traditions of the Pall Mall Gazette founded by Mr. Frederick Greenwood. After a somewhat strenuous experience of evening journalism, Mr. Cook was appointed to the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph, to which, it is now an open secret that he contributed, among other things, the rowing articles signed by "An Old Blue." His earliest experience of first-class oarsmanship was when he rowed three in the Radley eight for the Ladies' Plate at the early age of fifteen, and two years afterwards he was captain of boats and head of the school. Proceeding to Oxford with an open classical scholarship at Wadham, he rowed three in the University crew of 1889, and left Oxford with a second class in the honour schools of moderations and classical greats.

He has travelled and written on French architecture, the picturesque Loire Valley, the Turf and what not. He assisted Lord Desborough on the British Olympic Council in the organisation of the Games of 1908 in London, of which he has only recently published the official record; and when a new member had to be elected to replace the late Sir Howard Vincent as one of the three British representatives on the International Olympic Committee, it was Mr. Cook who was unanimously chosen by the officials of all the great associations controlling sport in this country. A sportsman, athlete, traveller and graceful writer, what better credentials can we require of "Redspinner's" successor.

THE GAME PRESERVES OF ASSAM.

It is only within the last five years that any attention has been given to the preservation of big game in Assam. There are three sanctuaries in the Kamrup district and one each at Lukwah and Kasseanga in the Nowgong district. The remaining districts are left almost unprotected. With the exception of game in these sanctuaries, which are reserved for rhino-breeding, almost everything in the whole province is indiscriminately slaughtered. The game in Kamrup reserves is increasing, but it will take years to undo all the harm done. It is painful to think that the Viceroy's inroad into one special rhino reserve resulted in a bag of only one cow rhino, where, twenty years ago, in and around this same spot fifty could be seen.

On the south bank of the Brahmaputra there are still a few breeding places left, but these are inaccessible till about April, after the jungle has been burnt off. The Government reserve forests in these parts can hardly boast of a rhino outside the areas. Their homes and feeding grounds are between the lower ranges at the foot of the Mekir and Garo Hills, in the low-lying swamps and dollonies, covered with dense ekra and kagri, almost as thick as bamboos, growing to a height of from 15 to 20 feet, through which it is impossible to drive a hathi at the pace a rhino travels through it. There are very few shikaries who will attempt tracking them on foot through these runs, and when they do it invariably ends in disaster. The writer has known many good old cautious trackers who have had to pay the "extreme penalty" for attempting to follow up a rhino in these dead-traps. Only four months ago Major Wood had the misfortune to lose an old shikari in one of these attempts, and nearly lost his life in trying to save the man. The incident occurred in the Bisnath district, and was one of the pluckiest attempts to save a man's life that has been heard of for a long time.

The Forest Officer of Kamrup and Darrang districts, who prepared and conducted the shoot for the Viceroy, is the only man known in the whole valley who takes a keen interest and strictly enforces the Government rules and regulations on big game. The man that is doing all the damage and driving rhino and tiger from their old breeding places is the Nepali and his kutia. Government allow these kutias to be erected and allow these men to bring in their large herds of buffalo who roam about at their own sweet will over every well-known breeding spot in Assam—grazing and hacking down the best covers in the province. And for this Government taxes them Re. 1 per head of buffalo. It can be truthfully said where one is paid for fifty get off scot free. Every sportsman in Assam is aware that more harm has been done by these Nepali exterminators within these last eight years than has been done by shikar since tea was first started. Unless Government keep these outlaws within certain bounds there will not be a head of big game left in Assam in a short time. The Mungledye Sub-division of Darrang, from Borpeta to Tezpur on the north bank, provides excellent sport for almost every kind of game, big and small; and no hard-or-fast rules or restrictions are made except in three or four small reserves which rhino are known to dread. These spots are the only places that get any special attention paid them to save the game on the north bank from extinction. Due north from Mungledye to the end of North Lakhimpur, on the borders of the Aka, Duphla, and Sarogmiri Hills, there is splendid Mithan shooting up the Karan, Belsiri, Borelli, Dekorai, Borgang, Derjoo, Ranganadi, Derpai, and Subansiri rivers, the latter being the largest feeder in the valley to the Brahmaputra. The finest mahseer fishing in India can be got up the Subansiri from the end of October to the end of March. Some of the pools in this river, even in the dry season are nearly 1,000 yards across, and the fish in these pools run up to 80lbs. and over. On or near the banks of all these streams herds of Mithan are to be found where salt poongs abound, and on several chars of the Brahmaputra tiger, leopard, and bear, etc., are sure to be found. And in the oloo grass and bheels around some fine bags of duck, partridge, snipe, and florican are to be had. Perhaps the finest sport for a varied bag of both big and small game on the north bank is between the Gierborelli and the Subansiri. The grounds, as a rule, are easy to shoot over, and often the unexpected turns up and gives likelier chances to bag a fine specimen than in any other part of Assam of which we know. And the country from October to April is free to all, bar a few small forest reserves, and every facility is afforded and every help rendered to any keen outside sportsman by the hospitable planter. If a man has the time, a visit to the Daphlas over the border may result in some real good sport in the way of wild goat, sheep, gurral, etc., and he might possibly bag a hatha, while in all the places mentioned above numerous herds of wild buffalo are still to be found, and it is safe to reckon on getting a decent head. On the south bank in the Lakhimpur and Sibsagur districts, however, big game is almost extinct, and no measure of preservation is resorted to in the case of what little is left. Some hundreds of gun licenses have been granted indiscriminately to all sorts and conditions of natives, who have wantonly destroyed everything they could lay their hands upon, regardless of the most ordinary principles of sport which should appeal even to this class of native shikari. Concrete instances of this departure from the accepted amenities of sport may be cited in numerous cases of the native big game hunter killing new-born calves in breeding and closed time. We are, however, glad to learn that the Deputy Commissioners in these districts are realising these facts and are confiscating every gun and cancelling licenses whenever they get the slightest possible chance of doing so.—Statesman.

Fishing.

FISHING THE GIRI TRIBUTARIES.

Now the following few notes may be of use to those unfortunates—who like myself in April 1909—with all their plans laid and leave limited, arrive to find the Giri a hopelessly unfishable flood; a condition too, which may remain in force during the whole period of their stay on the river. For there would appear to be no doubt that the conditions of the Indian climate are changing, and not for the better from the point of view of us brothers of the angle. Read any old fishing records, the Giri, Tangrot, etc., and one cannot help noticing how of late years, March, April, May and June have become more and more unsettled as regards weather. And if one arrives at a river such as the Giri and finds it unfishable, well one's natural instinct is to hope that it'll clear in a day or two. And if it doesn't, it is not so easy with limited leave, to pack up and be off to pastures new, and besides, anyhow if one is bent on fishing, the weather being adverse is just as likely to effect other waters as much as those one is on. And if the 14 feet rod, with all its component tackle, is not to be used, there is no reason why the little trout rod should not have its outing. And sometimes men are inclined to despise an afternoon's catch, of say half a dozen mahseer, averaging nearly a pound, but why this is so it is hard to say. For India read Scotland, and would such a creel taken from the burn be despised? I hardly think so. Perhaps if taken from the salmon river, angling for fish, this might be so, and perhaps there is somewhat of this feeling in angling for mahseer; since they run big, the zest of catching small ones is thereby cloyed.

Now to take the Giri tributaries, of which there may be said to be seven that join it in its fishable reaches. Reading from Kharganu down the river to Rajghat, their names are the Peroo, Ashni, Koal, Nait, Palsr, Joger and Jalal. The first and the last from a fishing point of view may be wiped out entirely, numbers 4 and 5 being the only ones that have any real claim on our sympathies. The first three however are those of most interest to the man who just drops down for the week end to Khargaun, for they all lie within two miles of the Fishing bungalow. The Peroo joins from the left bank a short way above the village, and as I before remarked is beneath our notice. The Koal two miles below the bungalow, flows in on the right and is hardly worth the trouble of working up. Though but a trickle at its junction with the Giri, there are some fair pools a little way up, and fish of quite decent size are occasionally seen. The main feeder of this stream is used at Barogh for watering the engines, and always carries a good flow of water, as can be seen below the line. About two miles below Solan, there is one quite big and deep pool, surrounded by high rocks, in which can be seen numbers of fish from 1lb. down, mostly kalabanse though there is generally a sprinkling of mahseer among them. The Ashni or Simla stream flows directly below the bungalow, and its bed forms the track for the last four miles of the route down to Khargaun. Its main feeder takes its rise close below Chota Simla bazaar, and the road from Simla to the Giri follows the bed of the stream right down to its junction with the river. It is not a satisfactory tributary to fish though, as its bed is too broad and pools never seem to be of any depth. However in the gorge above Tikri village, and a short way below where the path from Salogra comes down, are one or two pools of better size, and fish of 2 and 3lbs. do work up as far as this in the rains. I have heard of one or two keen anglers from Solan going down here in the monsoon, and having fair sport with worms. The junction of the Ashni with the Giri is a most uncertain quantity, sometimes fishing well, though there is no doubt that of late years it has not been as good as formerly.

The first two marches down the Giri reveal no tributaries, or rather streams that can be dignified by such a name, and it is not till one approaches the third camp at Koorkna, that the Nait brook is crossed. This to my mind is the most delightful of the seven. Though not quite so big or full of fish as the Palar burn, it has one great advantage over the latter, in that it practically never dirties. It wells direct from the heart of the Chur, its waters crystal clear and black, never affected for any length of time, even by the heaviest rain. Unfortunately in the last year or two the Nait has split into several channels for its last couple of hundred yards, and falls into the Giri in a series of small trickles, instead of plunging a solid volume of water into the main river, and forming thereby a junction such as would delight the heart of any angler. And the Nait too holds fish of no mean size. I saw an eight-pounder taken out of a basket cruive some distance up stream, and also I was vouchsafed a glimpse of a fish in the waterfall pool that I estimated to be at least half that weight again. And this waterfall pool is perhaps the most fascinating spot in the river. I was told of it in vague terms when passing through Ano village, a most respectable old man assuring me that if I went to this pool, I should catch plenty fish. His use of the word catch, was the only part of his speech that betrayed senile optimism, the rest was solid fact though at the time I was inclined to doubt it. The pool lies something under a mile up stream, the fall only being a glissade over some 5 feet of shelving rock, but the water was evidently of great depth, and to my astonishment the pool was packed with fish when I arrived. At first they were most unsuspicious, but this did not last long, and with one's invariable luck in these cases, it was from the ranks of the two-pounders that my first victim came, and not from those of the six-pounders to whom my lure was really tendered. By climbing on to the rock at head of fall, and lying down, I managed to cast a fly-spoon for some time without disturbing them. And I must say their welcome was most cordial, a splash and plunge answered the fall of the bait each time, and though tugs were numerous somehow, at first I could not hook one. The landing of the two-pounder, who had to be played out down the tail of the rapid into the next pool, before he could be lifted forth, seemed to have affected their appetites, and after another fish of a pound had followed his bigger brother, not a fish was to be seen in the pool. Arriving here another day I found the water alive with big fish on the feed, the chilwas by twos and threes were dashing at the fall and making attempts to ascend, which were invariably it seemed doomed to failure. But whenever a chilwa fell back, instead of trying again, he turned tail at once and in a series of leaps fled down the centre of the pool, doing a species of obstacle race with the gaping mouths of several mahseer as his pitfalls. Having no chilwa, and seeing no chance of catching any, unless I thrust myself into undue prominence, I cast about for a substitute, and discovered among the rocks, a little weedy pool inhabited by several small frogs. Though wilers to dive and hide one was at last dragged forth, and struggling frantically was impaled on the hook by the loose skin of his back. Crawling on to my favourite rock, froggie was gently deposited below the fall, where though I could not see him, I could feel him kicking out right manfully. Very few seconds elapsed before there came a tug, and froggie dragged off by a hind leg was gulped down by a hungry mahseer. Another stern chase and a second frog was offered, to be accepted in the same cordial fashion. A third one however was refused, and the run of chilwa having stopped, the fish had apparently gone off the feed. It was then I saw the big fish chasing fry at the tail of the pool, almost the whole of his bulk showing out of water for nearly 20 seconds. Eventually a two and a half-pounder succumbed to my fly-spoon, but I had expected better sport than this and was disappointed.

About 3 miles up the Nait lies a fair sized and very deep pool, formed years ago by a small landslip. I toiled up to this, but should not advise anyone imitating my example, since the going is hard and the resultant gain, nil. I was assured that the pool held immense fish, but this I do not believe, since with the exception of a diminutive labeo, there was no sign of life in the pool, and as I watched for a long, and fished for a short time, some sign would have been vouchsafed, had mahseer been present. Nor did the Nait brook seem to hold many fish as far up as this, even though there was a certain amount of good water there seemed to be a lack of tenants for the same. The camp below Koorkna is Seum, and just below here runs in the Palar burn. It is a good bit bigger than the Nait and is by far the largest tributary the Giri receives. It also rises on the slopes of the Chur, but its waters lack that black clearness that is so characteristic of the smaller stream. It forms a most excellent junction with the Giri, and here, if the big river be dirty and the tributary clear, one is almost certain of running a fish or two. And for several miles up the Palar burn fish are to be caught. I have caught them over a pound, two and three miles up. The climbing is not so difficult or so rough, and the bed of the Palar burn is broader and the cliffs far less precipitous than those that line the Nait brook. The first really good pool, comes about a quarter mile up with a rock in the centre, though I have never moved a good fish here still it is deep and there are some nice lies, so that it should always be given a trial. The biggest fish that I actually caught in the Palar was 4lbs., but I have moved much bigger, and had one chap of over 10lbs. follow my fly-spoon right across a pool. I fancy that a little mild poaching goes on in this stream as well as in the Nait, but it is not really enough to worry about, although all the tributary streams are supposed to be in the hands of the Giri Club. However if anglers will destroy cruives whenever met with, this should suffice, as in the cold weather when no sportsmen are about, only some kalabanse are destroyed probably, since the traps are very few and far between, these tributary valleys being but sparsely inhabited, and the Giri can afford to part with any number of labeo. I fancy that these streams would give some very pretty sport using fly, though I rather doubt its proving more successful than a small fly-spoon. Six miles below the Palar burn comes the Joger tributary, a stream that unfortunately breaks up very much at the junction. I never had leisure to explore up it so cannot say whether or no it holds fish, but it carries a fair volume of water when running as one stream, and might repay investigation for a short way up.

The Jalal is a snare and a delusion. Looked at upon the map it would appear to be the most healthy tributary Giri receives, it has a fair sized catchment area and is of good length. But I fancy it is not perennial, or if so that the springs that feed it are so small and weak that the waters therefore never reach the Giri. Even after fairly heavy rain, the bed of the Jalal was stone dry at Sattibagh. Up higher there were a few pools so I was led to believe, and the trickle that is dignified up there by the name of stream, is all run off in irrigation cuts.

Opposite Sattibagh a small rivulet falls into the Giri, which has its being in the Ranka Tal. This splendid lake is full of mahseer, murral and muggers, but is held sacred by the Sirmoor Authorities, and no fishing therein is allowed. If it was open like Bhim Tal, etc., the angler on the Giri might vary his sport with some very pretty loch fishing for a day or two.

Sirmoor Tal lower down the river never held fish, being perched high up among the hills, now however it is dry and under cultivation.

Below Sattibagh to its junction with the Jumna the Giri receives no other stream that can be dignified with the name of tributary.

A CHEAP AND EFFICIENT GUN FOR WILDFOWL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In previous letters I have alluded to the various American-made repeating shot-guns, pointing out that they are efficient and reliable weapons, though a little awkward to handle until one gets used to them. A few days ago I had an opportunity of inspecting and handling a 16-bore Marlin repeating shot-gun, and formed a high opinion of its shape and balance. One felt at once when throwing up this gun to the shoulder, that it would be easy and pleasant to shoot with. It was a take-down, with 26-inch barrel; and its owner when trying it for pattern, found the shooting close and hard. About the same time I was called upon by a friend to help him decide on a suitable gun for rough shore shooting in the North of Ireland. I suggested that he should get 12 and 10 bore Winchester repeaters, shoot them both for pattern, and then take whichever gun seemed to possess the greatest number of advantages. The two guns were duly obtained from London by a local agent. When we compared them carefully, before the actual trial on the target, we both decided at once in favour of the 10-bore. The under-lever action is no doubt a little slower than the fore-end movement of the 12-bore, but this is not a matter of great importance to the shore-shooter, who when he has stalked within reach of a flock, fires the first shot while the birds are sitting, and has plenty of time to work the under-lever in time to get a second shot into them as they rise. Also the 10-bore does not take down; this too is an unimportant matter, seeing that you can clean the gun from the breech, when the action is open. It was the exceptionally fine handling and balance of the gun which at once engaged our affections. One does not expect a 10-bore with a 32-inch barrel, and weighing 8¾lb., to handle just like a game gun; but the Winchester 10-bore has the weight so well between the hands, and the stock is so nicely shaped, that one feels when throwing it up to the shoulder that there would not be the least difficulty in shooting snipe with it.

Having decided that the 10-bore was the gun, we proceeded to plate it. No shot of 104 to the ounce being obtainable, a bigger kind going 72 to the ounce was used instead. The charge was 3¾ drams of Curtiss and Harvey's No. 4 Black and 1¼ ounces of shot, containing 108 pellets in the charge. The first 10-bore tried did not reach a 70 per cent. pattern with the above charge, so a second gun was obtained. This latter on examination was found to have more constriction of the muzzle than the first. We had no micrometer to ascertain exact measurements, but as far as I could make out the second 10-bore was about 1/120 or 1/150 of an inch smaller at the muzzle than the first one.

This slight difference in amount of choke gave a considerable increase in density of pattern. The average on the 30-inch circle at 40 yards worked out to as nearly as possible 70 per cent. of the total number of pellets in the charge.

The Winchester Company never pattern their 10-bores with a larger charge than 1¼ ounces of shot, which is, of course, absurdly little for a gun of this bore. The repeating 10-bore will not take a longer case than 2, 7 and 8 inches, and 3¾ drams of powder, with 1¼ ounces of shot, inasmuch one can get into this length of case with a sufficiency of wadding. As the guns are proved after arrival in England, with 8 drams of powder and 2 ounces of shot, the action is amply strong enough to stand any charge of Black powder that can be got into the cartridges. One and a half ounces of shot is about the smallest useful charge of large sized shot for a 10-bore. If one desires to shoot less it is better to use a 12-bore.

With 1¼ ounces of No. 4 chilled shot, the gun also gave a 70 per cent., pattern, at 40 yards. Just as we had finished our trials, some homeward bound rooks began to come over, very high up. The last No. 4 cartridge was fired at one of these rooks, when it was 65 or 70 yards off, and crumpled the bird up in most satisfactory style.

The cost of a 10-bore repeater works out very low, as compared with what one would have to pay for the plainest double gun of similar power. The price in England is about £5-14, or thereabouts. The gun weighs 8¾lb. empty, so that with magazine full it would be about 9¼lb.

"FLEUR-DE-LYS."

HEALTH EXPERTS AT THE BOVRIL FACTORY.

THE Earl of Arran, K.P., Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., F.R.S., and other Directors of Bovril, Limited, received a distinguished party of Health Experts on 6th November 1909, at the Bovril Factory in London. The Company included the members of the South Eastern Section (Great Britain) Sanitary Association. The visitors were conducted in parties over the magnificent premises of the Company, and one and all commented upon the cleanliness and brightness of the factory, and the smart appearance of the factory hands. The splendidly equipped laboratories, where the raw materials are subjected to the scrutiny of experts, were then inspected, and the visitors were shown the concentrated beef materials in the form in which they arrive direct from the factories of the vast Bovril Estates.

Sir James Crichton-Browne delivered the following most interesting speech:—

"I am glad to be allowed to add a word of welcome to what Lord Arran has already said. You have come here to-day spontaneously, by your own desire, at your own suggestion, and you are particularly welcome guests to the Directors of Bovril, Limited, because they know that you are fair and intelligent and discriminating critics. You are all food specialists. The examination of food is part of your daily duty, and you are therefore peculiarly capable of understanding and appreciating the various steps and processes in the manufacture of an article that has become an important element of food to the people of this country.

A TEMPLE OF SANITATION.

"I venture to think that these works which you have seen this afternoon are a temple of sanitation. Everything that is possible is done to secure purity and cleanliness. You have witnessed the evolution of Bovril throughout all its stages of growth, and you have seen it clothed and decorated, that is to say, bottled and labelled and ready to be sent forth to all quarters of the globe.

"I am not going to expatiate upon the scientific principles that underlie all the manipulations and methods you have seen here, nor am I going to enlarge upon the physiological reasonableness of the resultant article Bovril, the quintessence of beef, the epitome of a bovine volume. You have witnessed that it is prepared with the most scrupulous care, and that everything is done to secure that it is of the very best quality. Bovril has chemists of its own in its laboratories, both here and on the cattle estates, so that it is able to send out with every invoice a certificate guaranteeing that the Bovril is up to standard and description. There is an experimental analysis of Bovril carried on in the large scale by mankind at large, to which Bovril can now appeal, an analysis carried on, not in the chemical laboratories, but in the laboratory of the human stomach and body. In the mouths of millions, the claims of Bovril are justified. Millions who have tasted and tried it to-day are satisfied that the flavour of Bovril excites the appetite; that Bovril is a powerful aid to digestion; that it stimulates the nerves without subsequent depression; that it relieves fatigue, and that it is invaluable in the sick-room and during convalescence after sickness. It is not a philanthropic preparation. It is a business preparation. If it invokes art and humour in spreading abroad a knowledge of its virtues, it makes no extravagant, no incorrect pretences; it holds out no promises that cannot be realised, but it is, as I have said, a genuine food, and rests its reputation on its merits."

The visitors were much impressed by the photographs of the fine stock of the Bovril Estates, and also by a large map, on which it was shown that the Bovril Cattle Estates (over 9,000,000 acres) would cover a quarter of the whole country, if situated in England.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

First Day, Saturday, 27th November 1909.

THE Autumn Meeting opened this afternoon under ideal weather conditions: the course was in excellent order and the general arrangements perfect. A feature of the day was the size of the fields—23, 21, 19, 17, 16 horses coming under starter's order's in the several events. The trophies were presented to the owners by Mrs. Robinson after the last race. Mr. Burjorjee scored two more wins during the afternoon The Butler and Lorette again placing fists to their credit. THE TURF.

LIVERPOOL.

LORD DERBY did not have the good fortune to bring off a double event, for, although Bridge of Earn ran extremely well in the Liverpool Cup, he found two a bit better in Santeve and Symons' Pride. The latter far-striding filly was not troubled by the turns so much as was anticipated, and she battled out a stirring finish with last year's winner. Santeve proved that there were sound reasons for the improvement claimed for her, but had Trigg made his effort a bit earlier Symons' Pride might have won. Succour proved the best of the top-weights and was placed fourth.

By the victory of Santeve the members of the theatrical profession have benefited, as they always follow "The Guv'nor," as Mr. George Edwardes is called. Results :—

·375 RIMLESS MAGAZINE RIFLE.

With 270 grain Bullet.
Velocity, 2,200 ft. sec
Striking energy, 2,899 ft. lbs.,

With 200 grain Bullet
Velocity, 2,500 ft. sec.:
Striking energy, 2,770 ft. lbs.

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It is now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

Price, plain quality ... ... 20 Guineas.
Best quality and finish, neatly engraved ... ... 25 "
Improved Model Telescope Sight (including fitting) 12 Guineas extra.

Sportsmen making Southport their headquarters for the Liverpool Meeting slept but little last Friday night, so fierce was the tempest that swept the Mersey; while rain and sleet fell plentifully. However, after the storm came a calm, and on Saturday long before the first race came on for decision the sun was in strong evidence, and the light perfect—idle weather conditions for the final stage of the fixture, which proved the brightest of the four days. The wind had improved the going, which was fairly firm, as attested by the faster times. Results:—

LEICESTER.

Visitors to Oadby yesterday would have had a fruitless journey but for the power of the sun. Up to eleven o'clock snow lay on the race track an inch or two in depth, and at one time the practicability of racing was being seriously questioned. However, with the assistance of the sun and a strong breeze the fleecy element disappeared within an amazingly short space of time, and the day's sport was conducted under a clear sky. The afternoon's sport was entertaining, for if the class of competitor did not exceed the usual Leicester standard some exciting finishes were witnessed. Results:—

CALCUTTA

PAPERCHASING RECORDS.

By "X."

The new edition of the "Calcutta Paperchasing Records." By "X," is a very comprehensive record of paper chasing in Calcutta from its earliest days, and contains some interesting details of the Old Calcutta Hunt, as also a chapter on the Hunters' Steeplechase at Tollygunge. In it is incorporated the previous one compiled by "C. C. M." and there is likewise a convenient glossary which will enable the men who rode under many fantastic titles in the old days to be identified. The book is copiously illustrated with many interesting photographs and other pictorial aids, and is handsomely bound in red and white.

"The time and trouble which the anonymous Editor has expended upon the work is manifest in every page, and that his labours have been brought to such a brilliant termination must, we think, carry with it no small reward. It is a book that has long been wanted, and is a most interesting "Who's who" of a large circle of very well-known people in India and at Home. Our paperchasing readers who have not come across this entertaining little volume will no doubt make haste to possess themselves of a copy."—Indian Planters' Gazette.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THERE came a welcome break last week end in the misfortunes which for the four previous Saturdays had, with scarcely an exception, attended the London clubs in the First League. Chelsea, robbed of the services of most of their crack forwards, went down, it is true, before Manchester United on the Clayton enclosure, but Woolwich Arsenal upset expectations by drawing at Owlerton with Sheffield Wednesday, and Tottenham Hotspur surprised as well as delighted their supporters with a victory over Liverpool at White Hart Lane. Seeing that Sheffield Wednesday in their two more recent home engagements had overcome such prominent elevens as Newcastle United and Aston Villa, the prospects of the Plumstead men escaping defeat appeared remote in the extreme, but the alterations made in the constitution of the side worked out satisfactorily, and so far from being badly beaten the Arsenal led at the interval, while the equalising goal might have been prevented had only McDonald, in stopping a shot from Ivemmon, got the ball away instead of leaving it for Wilson to rush into the net. Still, the supporters of the Plumstead club will be quite content with the performance of the team in effecting a draw away from home against such formidable opponents. Apart from one change, Hotspur in meeting Liverpool had exactly the same eleven that a week previously had run Newcastle United to a goal at Newcastle. On that form the London club looked to possess a reasonable chance of holding their own but the side had played such disappointing football at home against Middlesbrough and Notts County, that victory over a club that had not known defeat since September appeared out of the question. Tottenham yesterday, however, were generally more dangerous than Liverpool, Hardy being frequently called upon to save his charge. For their score the Londoners had to wait an hour, but they retained it to the end, despite the fact that just at the finish Liverpool were awarded a penalty kick.

Even more surprising than the failure of Liverpool at Tottenham was the severe defeat of Newcastle United, last season's champions going down before Preston North End—one of the least successful clubs of the present season—by 4 to 0. While Liverpool and Newcastle lost, Blackburn Rovers and Manchester United both won, with the result that the two latter clubs now stand first and second respectively in Division I., each having 19 points to their credit, and the Rovers having taken part in one game fewer than the Cup holders. The Blackburn men accomplished a particularly good performance in beating Everton at Goodison Park, while another creditable achievement was that of Sheffield United, who, journeying down to Bristol, there overcame Bristol City by 2 to 0. Aston Villa, at Bury, furnished the third instance of a visiting club winning by 2 to 0. For the most part, the scoring ruled very low, seven clubs failing to secure a single goal, six others securing no more than one goal apiece, and the aggregate for the ten matches amounting to no more than 22. Bolton Wanderers possess an unenviable distinction in having had ten defeats already registered against them.

There was more than one unexpected result in the matches among the leading clubs of the Second Division of the League. Glossop beat Clapton Orient easily enough—as their previous form and record had suggested they would—but Manchester City were defeated and Hull City, West Broomwich Albion and Fulham also went down, the Albion and Fulham being defeated on their own grounds. As a consequence of all this a considerable shuffling of the positions has taken place. Glossop, with only twelve games played, hold a clear lead of two points over their nearest rivals, and even a loss next week can scarcely deprive them of first place, their goal average being so good. So far they have lost only one match, Fulham having beaten them at Craven Cottage exactly two months ago. Scoring two goals to one at West Bromwich Leicester Fosse gained their eighth victory, and with Manchester City and Hull City both beaten, the Midland club now stand second. Manchester City were fully expected to beat Oodham Athletic, but they had a goal scored against them in the first half, and met with such a fine defence afterwards that they could never get on terms. The great surprise of the afternoon was the downfall of Fulham at Craven Cottage before Gainsborough Trinity. Last but one in the table the Trinity looked to possess little or no chance of escaping defeat, but the Fulham forwards played wretchedly, and in the second half Spavins managed to get through and give the visiting team the victory.

Queen's Park Rangers threw away a great chance of going to the head of the Southern League with a distinctly better record than either Crystal Palace or West Ham United. At home to Swindon they seemed sure of victory, but actually lost by 3 goals to 0; Crystal Palace suffered a less severe defeat at Northampton, whilst West Ham United drew at Millwall, the result being that the Rangers are a point behind their two rivals with a game in hand; they should have been a point in front. Their defence failed them badly, the Swindon forwards giving quite a good display. Crystal Palace had rather bad luck to lose at Northampton, but not many sides will take points when visiting the champions; and West Ham United had no reason to feel dissatisfied in holding their own at North Greenwich.

Form in the University elevens has taken a sudden change. Cambridge played badly, and lost to Surrey on Wednesday, while on Saturday they only just overcame Ealing, Oxford, at the same time scoring 6 to 0 against Old Westminsters—twice as large a margin as that by which Cambridge won the corresponding game about a month ago. After scoring 29 goals to 3 in four matches the Light Blues have become feeble in attack, and their always moderate defence has not improved. Oxford, on the other hand, maintain their strength at half and full-back, and the forwards have suddenly found the way to score. The trial of V. C. Miley in the centre proved a great success in yesterday's match at Queen's Club. For the moment, however, both sides must be described as moderate; each must beat a really good team before deserving any praise.

RUGBY RULES.

THE Harlequins have accomplished several fine performances this season, but nothing quite so brilliant as the victory they achieved over Northampton at Twickenham last Saturday. They were meeting one of the most prominent teams in the country and lost Field, their right-wing three-quarter, within five minutes of the start. Yet they crossed their opponents' line on six occasions, winning by no fewer than 5 goals (1 dropped) and a try to 1 goal and 2 tries. In the general run of the play there was nothing like the difference the score would suggest; indeed, with their forwards heeling out smartly, I am not sure that the Northampton backs did not have the ball more often than the Harlequins. Whereas, however, the Northampton three-quarters rarely succeeded in gaining much ground against the sure tackling of their opponents, the Harlequins, thanks to fertility of resource and promptness of action, were always dangerous. Cleverly as the home backs worked together, the triumph was primarily one of splendid individual effort. Poulton's two tries in the early stages of the game roused the spectators to tremendous enthusiasm but the finest score of the lot was one gained by F. M. Stoop from a beautiful opening by A. D. Stoop. Under the inspiring leadership of A. D. Stoop the Harlequins are a wonderfully live team. Most daring things which attempted by less finished exponents of the Rugby game, would certainly lead to disaster, are brought off time after time with marvellous coolness and accuracy to the complete undoing of their less resourceful antagonists. There still exists room for some improvement forward, although the marked deficiencies apparent in the first few matches of the season have to a large extent been overcome, but the work of the backs is quite the most delightful thing seen in the way of London club football for many a long day.

Both University teams were in town on the 13th instant, but whereas Oxford beat Richmond by 18 points to 8, Cambridge went down before Blackheath by 16 points to 8. At the moment there can be no question that Oxford command the services of much the stronger fifteen, the Light Blues so far having quite failed to discover three-quarters able to fill the places of Kenneth McLeod and Wright. The Cambridge pack, however, appears to be improving, to judge from their work against Newport earlier in the week, and in estimating the prospects of the Universities' match next month it must not be forgotten that the marked superiority forward which the Cantabs displayed at the Queen's Club last December fully counteracted the greater skill of the Oxford backs as a whole. This season, however, there is as yet no reason to expect that Cambridge will possess a pack of exceptional merit, and their backs are of such moderate quality that without a big pull forward the Light Blues seem doomed to defeat. Richmond made a fair fight with the Oxonians, their forwards, as on most occasions this season, rendering creditable account of themselves, but the disparity outside the scrummage was very pronounced. Gilroy looks like being the crack Oxford three-quarter. Curiously enough, Poulton, brilliantly as he plays for the Harlequins, seems quite unable to reproduce anything like the same form for his University. Cambridge never attained to much excellence at Blackheath yesterday, the game all through suggesting a distinct lack of scoring ability on the part of the Light Blues.

Outside the engagements of Blackheath and Richmond with the Universities and the meeting of the Harlequins and Northampton, the most important game in London on Saturday was that at Wandsworth between Guys and London Welsh. Beaten by Oxford in the course of the week, Guys held the upper hand outside the scrummage, but even with Maddocks disabled in the first five minutes, they got home by a dropped goal, each side scoring a try. The Scottish, who are distinctly below their average this season owing to a dearth of really good three-quarters, could not get their full side to make the journey to Portsmouth, and in these circumstances naturally proved no match for the Services. The latter showed distinctly better combination than in their previous matches, and Lyon, acquitting himself brilliantly, the Scotsmen had their line crossed on five occasions and were beaten pointless. London Irish quite failed to cope with Old Merchant Taylors at Catford, and although only two tries were converted suffered defeat by 28 points to 0. Marlborough Nomads, with whom matters have gone none too well of late years, ran up a big score at the expense of the Leysians and the Alleynians, thanks largely to the greater skill of their pack, overcame Rosslyn Park.

MOTORING.

THE OLYMPIA SHOW.—To the automobile enthusiast Olympia this week presented a spectacle to make the eye glisten and the heart glad. Nearly eight acres of floor space was occupied by 600 cars of all manner of makes and shapes, each a masterpiece of its kind, each fitted with "the latest" in everything, from tyre to hooter. And even to the "man in the street," whose experience of motoring has gone beyond the jolting, snorting bus or the more recently gliding taxi, the sight was one to make a strong appeal. There is no denying the beauty of the well-made pleasure car. There is beauty in its clean lines and in its graceful curves. It is all so suggestive of strength and speed and, above all, comfort. The well-made carriage tells of comfort and luxury, but it is nothing without the horses. The well-made car is complete in itself. Everything is there that the heart can desire to cover ground quickly and at ease.

First, as to comfort. The refined luxury of the more expensive cars is surprising. The most comfortable angle of a cushion has been studied as a science. Cunningly-shaded lamps enable the passenger to read with ease as he speeds from his home to the play. Perfectly fitted springs enable him to travel over rough roads as easily as over the smooth surface of Piccadilly. Seats are padded and upholstered as luxuriously as the arm-chairs of a drawing room. Panelling of rich wood appeals to the aesthetic senses.

But it is not for the big, costly, elegantly-fitted car that the Exhibition is remarkable. The show serves to demonstrate the extent to which the motor car has been brought within the reach of the man of moderate means. Those unwilling to spend more than £200 will find a wide selection open to them. For that price he can obtain a thoroughly reliable car, smartly built, comfortable, and durable. The automobile is no longer the preserve of the very rich. Another lesson to be learned at Olympia is that there is a greatly increased demand for moderate-power cars. Those between 10 h.p. and 20 h.p. appear to be especially popular.

The "Showman's" hand was strikingly and attractively in evidence. There was one cylinder-shaped car that might well have been forged out of silver, and highly coloured cars contrasted strikingly with those of more sober and more marketable black and blue. A great deal of interest was attracted by a huge motor caravan constructed to the order of Mr. Arthur du Cros, M.P. It is large enough to afford sleeping accommodation for six people, and contains a small kitchen. The travel-stained car in which Sir Ernest Shackleton carried stores over the ice during the earlier stages of his journey towards the South Pole was also a source of attraction.

Not the least interesting and important section of the Exhibition is provided by the accessories, which extend from hooters to ladies' veils. Signs are not wanting that the ear-offending sounds that now startle the nerves of all who come within half a mile of a motor-car will soon give way to something equally effective as a warning but at the same time less unpleasant to hear. At Olympia are "warners" that sound as many as four notes, clear and musical.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

THE Amanjikari Bridge on Wednesday, the 1st instant, attracted only a small field. There had been heavy rain during the night and it continued to threaten more all morning, but fortunately it did not come down till we were well on our way homewards.

Mr. Horne moved off at 6 sharp and going a couple of miles up the Poonamallee Road, crossed the Coum River to try the casuarina plantations bordering the northern bank. Usually a sure draw, this failed to hold a jack this morning, so we moved on to Mogappar woods which were also drawn blank. Things did not look promising, but shortly after hounds picked up a stale line on a footpath and carried it in a very tentative manner into a small casuarina spinney, where a jack jumped up just in front of them and went away in view taking us best pace back to Mogappar woods. After a ring in cover, in which he managed to put some more distance between himself and hounds, he went away again at the other end to which he entered, giving us a "buster" through a succession of casuarina woods with stretches of open in between, hounds running as if glued to him; they finally got him away out into the open and again got a view and after racing him for a mile rolled him over in the open after as good a 40 minutes as one could wish to ride. Mrs. Millar was presented with the brush, the mask going to Mr. Davies.

Immediately after performing his obsequies another jack was viewed close by, but as it was now very late in the morning hounds were not laid on.

Sunday, 5th December, Lattice Bridge. Perunkudi corner as usual provided a jack which took us to Perunandi village, back through Perunkudi corner and then for a chucker through the casuarinas between that and Sivaram, where he stirred up several confrères, no less than four being viewed over the Covelong cart track into the Temples Spinney in front of hounds. After the usual ring round the Temples hounds went away at the southern end running the canal side of the Big Woods and then turned into the woods. Here followed a long spell of desultory hunting. Scent was poor and catchy and there were far too many jacks about. It is no easy matter to keep with hounds in these extensive casuarina woodlands, if one rides up with them, at the risk of having an eye poked out or getting a cracked kneecap against a tree, one is very apt to head the jack, which run very short in this kind of country and are constantly twisting and turning, or to ride hounds off the line, whereas if one gets out of touch with them it is very difficult to pick them up again.

Hounds, however, stuck to it well and kept their original jack in front of them, though scent was never good enough to allow them really to hustle him and they were finally stopped at the edge of the Petal lake after they had been running in cover for nearly an hour and a half. The work of collecting stragglers now began and the field had nearly all started off home when word was brought that a couple of hounds had crossed the lake and killed their jack on the other side, a very creditable performance on their part; he was shortly after brought over by a coolie and his obsequies duly performed, after which as it was now late and we were a long way from the meet home was the order of the day.

COOPER ALLEN CHALLENGE CUP TOURNAMENT.

DURHAM L. I. vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—The tournament for the Cooper Allen Challenge Cup began at Cawnpore on the 29th ultimo when two games were down for decision, that between the above teams being played first. It was a fine game throughout, the Durhams, who had bad luck on more than one occasion, losing by 2 goals to 3.

First Chukker.—The Gordons were first to get away and Stewart scored. Midfield play followed and then the Durhams pressed, sending in two unsuccessful shots

Second Chukker.—The Gordons again attacked and Stewart registered another goal. Then the ball was taken to the Highlanders' end where a penalty against them gave the Durhams a chance but the shot went wide.

Third Chukker.—The Durhams pressed but play was gradually taken to midfield. Offside against the Gordons again let the Durhams in but the shot was obstructed and play returned to their end where Stewart put through once more.

Fourth Chukker.—Up and down play and an unproductive shot by the Gordons was followed by a hot attack from the Durhams, Festing eventually putting through.

Fifth Chukker.—A run to the Gordons' flags where they were forced to hit behind. The resulting penalty shot was put through by Wallace. The Durhams continued to attack and another good shot missed by inches. The chukker ended with the Gordons on the aggressive.

Sixth Chukker.—The Durhams tried hard to get on terms but the Gordons offered a stout defence and they were still a goal ahead at the finish. Score: Gordons, 3 goals; Durhams, 2 goals. Teams :—

4TH CAVALRY vs. 9TH HODSON'S HORSE "B."—This was the second game played on the opening day and resulted in a win for the 4th who had much the best of the game all through.

First Chukker.—The 9th attacked at the start but towards the end of the period the 4th got away and opened the scoring.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play, a good run by the 4th ending in a goal. The 9th then took up the attack but failed to score.

Third Chukker.—Play all over the ground, the 4th scoring with a long shot. Level play followed till the 9th invaded their opponent's territory and scored what proved to be their only goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The 4th pressed and after several unfruitful attempts obtained another goal. Level play in midfield till the close of the period.

Fifth Chukker.—The 9th attacked and missed two excellent opportunities of adding to their score. Then the 4th got possession and scored from a long shot. Fast play all over the ground terminated the chukker.

Sixth Chukker.—With a lead of five goals to one the 4th kept up the attack. A penalty against the 9th for hitting behind was not turned to account but they kept up the pressure and scored again. Up and down play followed and then the 4th ran down and hit another goal. Final score: 4th Cavalry, 7 goals; 9th Hodson's Horse, 1 goal. Teams :—

9TH HODSONS' HORSE "A." vs. THE SCOUTS.—Played on the 30th November a splendid game ending in a win for the 9th by the narrow margin of 2 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The 9th attacked throughout this period but their efforts were unproductive, three shots going out wide. No score.

Second Chukker.—This was another pointless chukker. A miss by the 9th gave Barrett possession and he ran the ball down but his shot went wide. The Scouts pressed for a spell but no advantage was gained, the ball travelling up and down the field for the rest of the period.

Third Chukker.—A foul against the Scouts, who were again penalised for hitting behind but the free hit was unproductive. Both goals were then visited in turn but neither team was able to score.

Fourth Chukker.—Play ruled all over the field and the chukker ended without score.

Fifth Chukker.—Offside against the Scouts, who had to bring the ball in from behind their line. Mansfield came away with a fine run and crowned it with a successful shot at goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play till Atkinson got away and equalised. Excitement was intense and on changing ends Crocker got through and put the ball through, the 9th continuing the pressure for the rest of the period.

Final Score.—9th Hodson's Horse "A," 2 goals; Scouts, 1 goal. Teams :—

SEMI-FINALS.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—The two Highland teams met in the first of the semi-finals on the 2nd instant a very level game ending in favour of the H.L.I. by 5 goals to 4 after extra time had been played.

First Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Second Chukker.—The H.L.I. rushed down and scored from a scrimmage. They continued the pressure on changing ends but the Gordons eventually got possession and working the ball down managed to equalise. The rest of the chukker was in the Gordons' territory, where the H.L.I. scored another goal.

Third Chukker.—The Gordons pressed throughout this period. Two penalties against the H. L. I. were not turned to account but eventually the Gordons got through and made the score two all.

Fourth Chukker.—Play all over the ground, the H.L.I. scored and took the lead, but the Gordons again equalised before the close of the period.

Fifth Chukker.—The ball travelled all over the field, the H.L.I. taking advantage of an opportunity to register their fourth goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The H.L.I. made two unsuccessful runs and then the Gordons took up the attack and after several unfruitful attempts they again got on terms. Score; 4 all.

Extra Chukker.—Play was resumed with widened goals. The H.L.I. scored once more and ran out winners by 5 goals to 4. Teams:—

Umpires.—Major Pennington and Captain Rowcroft, 9th Hodson's Horse.

4TH CAVALRY vs. 9TH HODSON'S HORSE "A."—This game was also played last Thursday, a well contested match ending in a win for Hodson's Horse by 3 goals to 1. Wilson came down in the third chukker and had to retire and the game was continued three aside, Atkinson standing down from the other side.

First Chukker.—Up and down play, both goals were visited but there was no score.

Second Chukker.—The 4th pressed and put in two shots neither of which took effect. Then the 9th attacked but were unable to score till just before the close of the period they put through from a scrimmage.

Third Chukker.—The 9th rushed down and Fraser scored. The succeeding play was all over the ground neither team gaining any advantage. Wilson collided with one of the 9th just on time and was unable to resume.

Fourth Chukker.—Atkinson stood down and the game was continued 3 aside. The free shot at goal enabled the 4th to score but their opponents had the best of the play during the remainder of the chukker: all their attempts, however, were futile.

Fifth Chukker.—The 9th pressed and added to their score. Then the 4th had a run down but gained no advantage, up and down play closing the chukker.

Sixth Chukker.—Midfield play followed by a run down by the 4th. Nothing accrued and the ball was brought back to midfield where it remained till time was called. Final Score: 9th Hodson's Horse, 3 goals; 4th Cavalry, 1 goal. Teams as before.

Umpires.—Mr. Hoare, I.C.S. and Captain Henderson, 17th Cavalry.

FINAL.

9TH HODSON'S HORSE "A." vs. HIGHLAND LIGHT INFANTRY.—The final was played on the 4th December before a huge gathering. The Cavalry early asserted themselves and in spite of a stubborn defence piled on the points, eventually winning by 10 goals to nil.

Fifth Chukker.—The 9th took the ball down and after two unsuccessful runs the first goal was notched by Fraser, Atkinson adding a second on changing ends.

Second Chukker.—Play centred in the H.L.I. territory but they got the ball away and rushed down, their final effort going wide. Then the 9th brought the ball back, scored from a scrimmage and pressed for the rest of the period.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till the 9th got on and Crocker scored. Then the Highlanders attacked but were repulsed. Hereabouts Cameron's pony came down horse and rider being unhurt. On changing ends the Highlanders once more attacked but the pressure was relieved and the ball was taken all over the field till the close.

Fourth Chukker.—The 9th attacked and scored two goals, Crocker and Atkinson being responsible for the points. Then the Highlanders rushed down, their efforts meeting with no success.

Fifth Chukker.—The H.L.I. pressed and two attempts to score went wide. Then the Cavalry took possession and running down hit another goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Level play all over the ground, till Crocker scored a goal. Thereafter the Cavalry pressed till the call of time and Atkinson and Fraser adding to the score the 9th won as stated by 10 goals to nil. Teams as before.

Umpires.—Captains Henderson and Stewart.

Mrs. Ledger gave away the challenge Cup and prizes to the winning team after the game. Colonel Peyton made a short speech and the usual cheering brought the proceeding to a close.

THE ENGLISH RACING SEASON.

One of the most important features of the English racing season, which has just closed, has been the sportsmanlike way in which the horses belonging to certain Americans have been run clean out for their engagements. The colours of Mr. H. P. Whitney, Mr. A. Belmont, Mr. J. R. Keene, Mr. W. Astor, Mr. Duryea, and Mr. Carroll have been sported alike in big events and little with varying success, and the public who followed them invariably had a good straight run for their money. Moreover, speculators who supported them through thick and thin, through good report and evil, must be pretty fair winners on the whole, inasmuch as the horses in question frequently started at the most healthy prices.

Since the "invasion" started at Lincoln, American owners have won about sixty races, of which half that number fell to the share of Mr. Whitney, whose winnings amount to nearly £10,000. Altogether American-bred horses captured ninety-four races. In the list of winning stallions, those bred in America have the following record: Americus twenty-four races, Meddler seven races, Islington six races, Ogden three races, Hastings nine races, Voter three races, King's Curier four races, Broomstick six races, Hamburg nine races, Ben Brian seven races. Total money won £20,899.

Of the English owners Mr. Fairie winds up an easy first with a record of a little over £38,000. Mr. Fairie's luck has been quite phenomenal this season. At an early stage of the campaign under Jockey Club rules, it was indeed a forbidding mien that Dame Fortune cast upon one, who subsequently became the fickle jade's favourite. In Bayardo Mr. Fairie owned a three-year-old who was considered by all good judges to be easily capable of sweeping the board of all the classic and other important events, for which the son of Bay Ronald was eligible to compete. Therein did Mr. Fairie appear in the light of an exceptionally fortunate man. But what happened? For a spell Bayardo went wrong, and in the race for the Two Thousand Guineas he cut an ignominious figure. Again, in the struggle for the greatest event of the year, the Blue Riband of the Turf, he failed to reproduce the superexcellence of his juvenile days, though on this occasion there were strong indications of returning vitality, while it is possible that, after all, he suffered as much interference as any of his rivals by the mishap to the American colt Sir Martin. Threatening indeed was Fortune's eye at this period, and Mr. Fairie must have been alive to the fact seeing he held the firm conviction that he owned the champion horse of the season, yet could not get him first past the post.

Now comes the reverse side of the medallion with a vengeance. Not only did Bayardo proceed thenceforth to carry all before him, proving himself quite invincible, but in Lemberg, half brother to this three-year-old celebrity, Mr. Fairie discovered he had in his possession a champion two-year-old, and one that with average luck would succeed in due course where Bayardo failed—namely, in winning the Derby.

Bayardo's winnings this year tot up to the handsome figure of £24,707. As a two-year-old he won £13,038, making an aggregate of £37,745 in stakes alone. This is some thousands in excess of the sum the mighty Ormonde—unquestionably the "horse of the century"—placed to the credit of the late Duke of Westminster in the course of his unbeaten career. But Ormonde's engagements included none of the so-called "Ten Thousand Pounders," one of which, the Eclipse Stakes, helped to swell Bayardo's total to the tune of £8,870. Ormonde's record was sixteen starts without a defeat. This cannot be equalled, let alone excelled, by Bayardo, seeing that he was beaten (when not himself) in the Two Tousand Guineas and Derby.

Yet, in another sense, Mr. Fairie's colt is quite likely to put up a better record than sixteen successes, for his owner has declined the unparalelled offer of £50,000 for him, and intends to race him, all going well meanwhile, both at four years old and five. Unfortunately, forfeit was paid on behalf of the son of the defunct Bay Ronald for the Eclipse and Jockey Club Stakes, two of the richest races of 1910, and, therefore, he may never quite equal the wonderful record of Isinglass, to whose credit stands the biggest sum ever won by a single horse, namely, £57,455. Only by £2,300 does this eclipse the winnings of Donovan, one of the lucky Duke's remarkable money spinners, but is considerably in excess of Flying Fox's £40,000.

Supposing Bayardo remains sound, however, he may be relied upon to go desperately close to the best figures above quoted, as some nice engagements have recently been made for him, and when the time comes for him to quit the track for the paddock, his merits as an all-round racehorse are pretty sure to provide food for much discussion among men, who delight to institute comparisons between the really great horses of different periods. By then, too, it may be found that Mr. Fairie will have another colt in the running for the big prizes of the English turf. Besides his engagements in the classics, Lemberg is in the "Ten Thousand Pounders," and with average progress from two to three years old, together with immunity from the many ills which horseflesh is heir to, it would be idle to deny that this commanding son of Cyllene stands a first-class chance of completely clearing the decks.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The third Extra Meeting provided a very good day's sport, with seven events on the card. Good fields went out for all the horse races, but the ponies were a bad failure again, three only starting in each race. The card opened with a hurdle race for horses for which The Loaf was made favourite. He was looking a lot too big and was never in the hunt. Mercedes was also fancied by her stable. Mount Dane went to the front about the 6 furlongs and was never headed after. Clear Artist ran a very good race and we should hear of this horse again before the end of the season.

Three only out of five went for the Harrison Plate. Etna and Pleibian II. not being declared to start: the favourite Matin Bell had the race well in hand any part of the journey and Cocky could not make her gallop at the finish.

A field of ten faced the starter in the December Plate Division I. Crossbred was most fancied, but he could not get nearer than fourth, Lovania just beating him for his place. Vigorous and Retort came round the last bend together when the former came away and won rather easily.

The favourite (Five Crown) again went down in the Maiden Horse Plate. He got shut in coming up the straight, otherwise the verdict would probably have been the other way. Punt was very lucky to win.

The Peel Plate produced a bad field of only three ponies and it was a very one-sided affair from start to finish. Refresher won from Solace with anything from 21lb. to 2st. in hand.

A good field of horses went out for the December Plate Division II. Soultline was favourite at 6 to 4 with Tangaroa next at 3 to 1 against. The pair went out to the front from the start and raced upsides until the distance, where Soultline drew ahead and won cantering by two lengths.

The Corinthian Plate was a farce, as they cantered until the 5 furlongs was reached and then made a sprint of it. Jack Sheppard led until 3 furlongs from home where Kaffirpan and Kipling went to the front. Morino put in a very fast run at the finish but was unable to get nearer than third.

There was a good attendance at the Tollygunge Steeplechase course on Sunday to see the schooling. The course is looking very well and is quite good going. The energetic Mr. Lance has obtained a fire engine with 500 feet of hose and is now able to water very nearly the whole course, so he hopes to have it in nice order throughout the season.

There was one accident but luckily not of a serious nature. The first out were Marconi (Mr. Glen), Scarboro (Mr. Evers), once round the pony course: the former made a mistake at the last but one, but recovered himself cleverly, otherwise both went well. Meprise (Mr. Glen) went over four fences with Farthing Bun (Native). Meprise landed short over the water and nearly fell. Branga (Mr. Evers) joined in after Meprise pulled up two fences later. Farthing Bun pecked and his rider parted company but was not hurt badly, only slightly shaken. Branga shaped well. Highland Fling (Mr. Evers), Maquani (Mr. Glen) jumped five fences on the pony course. They both went in good style. The latter, a horse of Mr. Lamb's, has been lately imported and is for sale at a reasonable figure. He can be seen any time at 9. Store Road, Ballygunge.

Spinnet (Butler) and Fingal (Alford) did a fast school once round the horse course. Spinnet jumped very fast and well; the latter fenced slowly. Maisonette (Mr. Cowper) and Ringmaiden (Mr. Evers) went once round the horse course slowly. Lord Chester (Mr. Levetus) and Mauser (Alford) jumped three fences on the pony course well and Peter (Alford) five on the pony course, he went well, but got up very high at each fence. Reha (Mr. Corbett) went over the last three fences of the pony course in excellent style. We hear some of J. D. Scott's string did schools also, but this was kept a stable secret.

The entries for Saturday next are exceptionally good, the pony hurdles have twelve in this being the smallest of the day. The pony flat race has a good field of 26, the extra race, the Canning Plate, has the largest entry of 39. This will give the handicapper a lot of trouble unless it is divided, as they are such an uneven lot that it would be impossible to do every horse justice. The Fort Plate has a very select lot of horses entered and should be a very fine race. Nearly all the ones entered for the Wellesley Plate are Viceroy's Cup horses, so this will give us a bit of a line to that race. Saturday's races should be very interesting as we shall see large fields of classical horses.

The Trials horses are being sent along in their work now. Most of the horses that are going for this event were sent nice working gallops on Tuesday morning. Pelargonium was at work on Monday, when he tried to run off the training track and fell over the rails. He is very stiff and sore and it is doubtful if he will be right again in time to race for either the Cup or Trials. This is very bad luck on Mr. G. K., as we believe he was very sweet on his chances. We hear he has improved a lot from last year. We consider that on last Saturday's race Soultline has a chance second to none for the mile race; he was looking very well last Saturday and was never extended any part of the journey. He will not run again we understand until the Trials. Tangaroa is very well also, but he does not seem to be able to get on terms with the favourite.

The Cup horses are being sent along a bit now, but it is too hard a job to say how they are going by their track work and we prefer to wait until after the Wellesley Plate on Saturday next before saying much about this race. Coat of Arms should run well in it; we fancy he is a lot better horse than most people fancy. He is very fast we know over a short distance and his stable say his game is staying.

Wandin we hear is not as he should be. He went a nice gallop a few days ago, pulled up sound, but was a bit sore the next day. Absentee is quite as good this season as he was last, so with Wandin out of the way he must have a chance. Our present fancy is Bantock, T. Scott's selected, and Coat of Arms.

Neith has gone wrong and we understand will not start in any of her engagements this season. She is to be fired and put by until next year. This is bad luck for Mr. Apcar as he fancied her chances not a little.

Misty Morn is reported to have done a good gallop for 1½ miles. He is now the shortest price of Mr. Galstaun's lot standing at 14 to 1. Bantock has gone back to 20 to 1. If this horse gets to the post sound on Cup day he will win. He is a horse that needs practically no track work, and as the public have not seen him working they have concluded that he is wrong. He has been at work every morning and is doing well. Fizz is going well and will run well in the Cup, but we do not fancy his chances for the Trials. But he will have to get a lot of luck if he wins.

Little Dolly (Morrison) and Cocoa (Alford) went 1½ miles at a nice pace. Little Dolly made a mess of the first but went better the rest of the journey. Cocoa will need a lot more schooling before she is any good at this game.

Devillette II. (Mr. Evers) was taken slowly over two flights. She wasted a lot of time at them.

Pincher (Northmore), Sentiment (Thomas) did a nice school over seven flights. Both jumped well.

Galloping Girl (R. Hoyt) went over three flights in good style.

Raffles (Alford) went ½ mile. He did not fence at all well and dropped his rider at the fourth hurdle but did no damage. He was remounted and completed the course.

Tete-a-Tete (Northmore) and Moira (Thomas) did a nice half pace gallop over seven hurdles, both fencing faultlessly. Bandy Leg (Mr. Evers) went slowly over two flights. High Court (Mr. Bletsoe) did a slow school by himself over four fences and put up a very sketchy performances. Daroji (Northmore) Dirty Boy (T. Ferguson), Parwan (Gee) and Umutbee (R. Hoyt) went 1½ miles over seven flights and the former two went very well, the others could not keep with them.

Kipling (Mr. Evers) went 1¾ miles over eight flights, and jumped badly.

Picaninny (T. Ferguson) went 1½ miles: she fenced and galloped very well.

Lady Knight (Mr. Evers) went 1½ miles, and did a very fast school. She jumped well and ought to go very close for the hurdle race on Saturday.

Bonita (Mr. Evers) also went once ro und and jumped well.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Considering the fact that most of the biggest owners and best jockeys are away in Calcutta, the racing for the start of our season was quite good and some hot finishes made up an interesting afternoon's sport. Everything looked well, and the only change noticeable was the improvement of the entrance gate and drive. When the officials and public get used to the former, the arrangements will no doubt work well. In the second enclosure things are muchly improved, better laid out, enlarged and less dusty. Nearly a score stood up booking in the first and more still in the second, so it is not surprising they found insufficient money. As is usually expected, Byramjee's and Mr. M. Goculdas' stables held the honours with two wins each. They have the advantage of the services of the two best boys. Brown is riding a very cool and well-judged race, whereas in his race on Hachal, Kaeson enhanced his reputation a good deal in the public mind. Shaw was unlucky enough to fall with Mooltan and break his collarbone, an accident which will keep him out of the saddle till close on the Big Meeting. Manley and Drew came from your side, but Southall's return is delayed by fever.

The Little Arab Plate opened the card, and on what was seen in Poona, Plassy was fancied though, on the strength of his gradual improvement, Sharar went out equally well fancied. Brown on the former was content to wait behind Sinclair and Hishan in turn as they assumed command. After none too good a start, Melsom found no opening for Plassy till at the distance, where Brown let Sharar out and staved the other off by a neck. A strong boy on Plassy and it would be odds on.

Tachreet simply stood out in the Pony Trial Plate, any other solid money being for a place. He was none too fortunate in the start, but Brown did not ask him to go very far round, passing his horses in turn as they strung out. Darby and Vedas made the pace, Shanwar and Mumbra following. At the bend Rajput passed Mumbra, who shut up earlier than his Poona running suggested he would, and the front horse indulged in a good race. Tachreet became prominent at the distance and he came so fast that the result was not in doubt. Rajput bear Shanwar on the post for second place.

Betting was more open in the Novice Plate, and after Steel had been made favourite Murmurees eventually wound up in that position at threes, Hoodaib next best fancied. Mr. O'B. Butler made the early running on Hurr, then Grey Morn led Steel for a time. Before the bend Steel was first followed by Murmurees and Thuvil. Rounding the bend Murmurees made a run and Mujeed swung him dangerously quick on to the rails. When Steel came again Thuvil was in his way, so that at the finish Murmurees beat him decisively.

Seven started for the December Plate and only rumours of a wonderful gallop by Not Yet prevented T. M. S. from being established very hot favourite. As things went, Not Yet was overrated and T. M. S. won all the way with her head in her chest. Moonlight followed them and made Shaw take the whip out to save his place.

A dozen made up a very open field for the Arab Plate, Racer being in most demand from Shawcutt, Colaba, Hadee and Devon, but, after being nearly last away, the first-named never showed up. Sun was first out from Shawcutt, Colaba and Gwalior. Shawcutt kept fairly straight for a change, but could do nothing, the same with Colaba. Gwalior was going well, and Sun all out kept his lead to the end from a fast run by Devon, Coomber showing himself quite a strong finisher since his sojourn in Ceylon.

Lastly the Auction Plate, half mile, in which Hachal was always shorter than Zari and Sheriff. The slippy little grey streaked out from Zari and had him beaten when they reached the straight, Hachal came up here and, with Kaeson getting every ounce out of him, squeezed home on the post from Sheriff, Gwalior coming through at the last moment into third place.

In connection with the jumping competition at the Tollygunge Horse Show, we would draw the attention of intending competitors to the fact that the jumps will be ready for schooling on and from Sunday the 19th instant.

The Calcutta Paperchase Club will hold their opening chase to-morrow morning, the meet being at the 6th milestone on the Gariahat Road at 7-30 A.M.

It is satisfactory to read that English-bred hackneys, all bought after the International Show at Olympia, carried everything before them in the recent National Horse Show at New York. Of the forty-three first prizes awarded, no fewer than thirty-one fell to horses of hackney breeding.

There were six championships decided and four of them went to English hackneys. In the eight harness classes every first prize fell to a hackney of British descent.

Quite recently it was announced that Mr. Fairie had refused the large sum of £50,000 for Bayardo. He has just received an even more colossal offer for the son of Bay Ronald. I am in a position, writes "Hotspur" in Sporting Life, to state that Mr. J. Marsh, the well-known starter, has, on behalf of a prominent French sportsman, made a genuine offer to Mr. Fairie of 56,000gs. for the colt. Had this been accepted, it would, I think, have been the record price for a thoroughbred. Mr. Fairie, however, remains obdurate, and he is determined that Bayardo shall not leave the country. One does not know which to admire most, the enterprise of the gentleman who has tendered such an unprecedented sum, or the sportsmanlike instinct which has prompted Mr. Fairie to refuse so tempting an offer. So many of our famous horses have, in late years, gone abroad that it is eminently gratifying to know that we shall at least retain the best horse in England for future stud purposes.

The sum paid for Flying Fox years ago by M. Blanc was considered preposterous at the time, but the triple crown winner turned out, from a commercial standpoint, one of the greatest bargains known to history. It was, I think, M. Prat, a celebrated French sportsman, who offered Sir Charles Rose £40,000 for Cyllene. Sir Charles was then influenced by the same consideration as Mr. Fairie, viz., a laudable desire to retain Cyllene for the benefit of English breeders. Needless to say, Cyllene was destined to leave the country after all.

A successful treatment has been discovered for surra, that disease which has hitherto been regarded as absolutely fatal to horses. We learn from the annual report of the Civil Veterinary Department that Captain Holmes, the Imperial Bacteriologist, has successfully adapted Laveran and Thiroux's method which has proved satisfactory in other forms of trypanosomiasis. This treatment is simple, inexpensive and of short duration. The animal rapidly gains condition and can soon be put to work after the course is completed.

The Karachi Polo Tournament this year drew but four entries and ended in a win for the Quetta Gymkhana. The first game was between the Karachi Gymkhana and the R.F.A. from Hyderabad (Sind), the Gunners winning by 3 goals to 1. In the second match the Quetta Gymkhana beat the East Lancashire Regiment by 4 goals to 3 after a very close game. The final was played on the 1st instant, the Quetta Gymkhana defeating the R.F.A. by 10 goals to 2. Mr. Muir, who was playing No. 1 for Quetta, was crossed during the first chukker and was given a heavy fall, his pony rolling on him. He was unable to continue and had to be removed to hospital. Quetta continued playing with one man short, and in spite of the handicap quite outclassed their opponents. The teams were:—R.F.A., Hyderabad: Captain Forsyth, 1; Captain Higgon, 2; Mr. Haining, 3; Colonel King, back. Quetta Gymkhana: Mr. Muir, 1; Captain Holmes, 2; Mr. Bethell, 3; Captain Harkness, back.

The I.P.A. Championship Tournament will be played in Calcutta beginning on the 22nd instant, seven teams in all have entered as follows:—Calcutta Polo Club, the Viceroy's Staff, the Rifle Brigade, the Inniskilling Dragoons, the Royal Dragoons, Cooch Behar and the Maharaja of Kishengarh's team. The Ezra Cup will be played for some time during the second or third week in January, but the actual date and terms have not yet been definitely fixed.

The following interesting letter on polo from a correspondent appears in a recent issue of the Pioneer:—Others besides myself are fully impressed with the conviction that a team from India is destined to wrest the cup from the Americans. Proposals have come out from well-known Indian players now in England urging on influential people in Polo circles out here to organise a team and canvas for the wherewithal to meet the expenses for its visit to America. The matter is being taken up in earnest both in certain circles in England and out here.

Some doubt may be felt in England as to the success of this project. All Polo players were by no means satisfied with the selection of the English teams that met the Americans in the test matches. Be this as it may, those who fully recognise that a better team could have been produced to maintain British supremacy in Polo, now turn to India to vindicate the British prestige. It is now left to the patrons of Polo and players among the princes, chiefs, and mercantile sportsmen and others who are in sympathy with the movement, to come forward with their support. It goes without saying that this movement will meet with the warm approval of the Indian nobility who have ever evinced such a keen interest in the noble game and who are either personally ardent Polo players or take a great interest in fostering the sport in their capitals. Such names as those of their Highnesses the Nizam, Holkar of Indore, the Maharajahs of Jodhpore, Alwar, Bikaner, Idar, Kishengarh, Patiala, the Begum of Bhopal and other chiefs will occur to those who follow Polo in India and England. The Maharajah Sir Pertab Singh, a past-master of the game, is sure to take up this project keenly and it is left for the Calcutta Polo Club to materialise the project out here. A gentleman in England is, in anticipation, arranging matters, in England and America.

The selection of the team has not yet been settled upon, but I think, I may say, that the following well-known prominent players are to be approached in view to ascertaining if they would represent the team from India: Captain Barrett, 15th Hussars, A.-D.-C., Thakore Dokul Sing of the Jodhpore State, Captain Shah Mirza Beg, Hyderabad Service, and Mr. Moti Lall of the Ulwar State.

There will, of course, be a fifth representative.

Now the above four mentioned constitute an ideal team and one that would meet with universal approval and do full credit to the representation.

There is no better No. 1 to be found than Mr. Moti Lall; Captain Mirza Beg would, of course, fill his usual efficient place as No. 2; Captain Barrett would be well placed as No. 3 to help his forwards as also to go to the support of his "back," which is the right place in any game for that facile princeps Thakore Dokul Singh.

There can be no doubt but that ample funds will pour in for this laudable scheme, but the concern is whether these gentlemen will consent to go to America and their respective Governments will be able to spare them. Failing any of these gentlemen there are others in India who will well uphold the character of the game in India.

Let us contemplate the most important and interesting issues that depend on the success of this very sportingly conceived project. Few, if any, of those who have seen the above quartette play in their separate teams, can entertain any doubt as to their making a splendid fight for the cup.

Most will be prepared to lay odds that the Americans will be beaten. Let us hope this may be, but this will only be a prelude to the interest that will still further be awakened over this contest. Should the Indian team wrest the cup from the Americans and bring it to India, it would be idle to suppose that the Americans will be resigned to its loss and their tarnished prestige. The very next cold season would see an American team out in India, and it is needless to say what a welcome the party would receive on all sides out here and what crowds the return contests would draw wherever the game or the series of tests would be played in India. All Polo playing India would swarm to the centre, and they would be well repayed for their trouble and the outlay on their journey.

It is said that the practice of digging foxes has become more usual in recent years in a number of hunting countries at Home. In nearly all such countries the masters are men who, realizing that they are hardly equal to the task of hunting hounds themselves, leave all practical work to the huntsman; and, as it is to the latter's interest to show at the close of the season as good a record as possible of foxes killed, he naturally has little hesitation in digging upon occasions—when the majority of the field would, were their opinion asked, vote in favour of allowing a fox that has saved his brush by getting to ground at the end of a good run to live to run another day. The question of digging is one that often gives rise to a good deal of controversy, not only because most hunting men detest to be kept waiting about while the tedious business of digging is in progress, but also because an increasing number of men and women who ride to hounds would like to see the practice altogether abandoned. But there are good reasons for occasionally digging. A mangy fox, for instance, ought to be killed by any means and under any circumstances, especially now that mange is so rampant in certain countries and that of recent years it has spread so rapidly. Then, it is an axiom that hounds must be blooded from time to time if they are to remain staunch, while if in some of our cramped countries where meadows are small and woodland is plentiful foxes were never dug, the hounds would seldom taste blood. Indeed a kill in the open in such districts, or for that matter, a kill in cover, happens comparatively seldom. Lastly and this, perhaps, is the strongest plea of all in favour of digging—the farmers, to whose friendliness so much good sport is often due, are generally only too ready to complain if foxes are not killed, especially if hen-roosts have been robbed. But otherwise there seems little excuse for the practice of digging, and it seems likely that there will be some attempt to lessen the practice in countries where the option rests with the huntsman, rather than the M. F. H.

The Bombay Gymkhana have wired accepting the challenge issued to Jamsetjee for the World's Racquets Championship by Charles Williams, the Racquets marker at Harrow School. Jamsetjee will leave India at the end of February, and the match will probably take place at the end of May. Of the sum required, Rs. 4,000 has already been promised and another Rs. 1,000 is still required to cover the expenses.

That sporting regiment, the Royal Fusiliers, continue to add to their honours in the field of sport. They have just won the Ministers' Cricket Cup at Secunderabad—their third victory in the tournament out of the four years it has been in existence. Details of the match will be found in our cricket columns. Added to this during the last six weeks the regiment has carried off the Cup for the Best Man-at-Arms at the Assault-at-Arms, the Kincaid Smith Cricket Cup, and the Royal Artillery Boxing Tournament Cup for the Regiment scoring the most points in the various competitions. A fine record indeed.

The projected visit of an Indian Cricket Eleven to England continues to attract no little attention at home. At a recent meeting of the County Cricket Secretaries Mr. Lacey, Secretary of the M. C. C., announced that he had received enquiries as to whether an All India team would be welcome in 1911 or 1912. The latter year, he said, was impossible, while the visit of the South Africans would possibly militate against success in 1911. It was important that they should receive guarantees and the M. C. C. was prepared to guarantee £200 and would circularise the counties, which he was confident would do all possible to make the tour a success.

At a meeting of the General Committee in Bombay on Monday it was announced that Rs. 26,650 had already been guaranteed and they hoped to raise the fund to Rs. 50,000. H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar had promised Rs. 5,000, and in addition to the M.C.C. contribution the following had expressed their willingness to subscribe:—

H. E. the Governor, Rs. 150; Mr. Ratan J. Tata, Rs. 10,000; H. H. the Gaekwar, Rs. 5,000; H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, Rs. 5,000; Mr. Corrimbhoy Ebrahim, Rs. 1,000; Mr. Shapurji B. Broocha, Rs. 1,000; H. H. the Jam Saheb, Rs. 1,000; Miss Hamabai Petit, Rs. 500.

A number of additional gentlemen were elected to the General Committee and it was resolved to send the best available team to England in 1911.

Resolutions were then presented, asking the Secretaries to write to about forty cricketers, enquiring if they could conveniently join the Indian Team in 1911, and authorising them to take all necessary steps to raise funds for the project. The consideration of the question of including Ceylonese players in the team was deferred.

As will be seen from our special telegram Oxford beat Cambridge in the Inter-'Varsity Rugby match by 35 points to 3. Cambridge had quite failed to discover three-quarters able to fill the places of Kenneth McLeod and Wright and throughout the season the Dark Blues have had the stronger fifteen, and to the superior play of their three-quarters last Saturday is attributed this their sixteenth victory in the annual match. Of the 35 previous games Cambridge have won 12 and 8 have been drawn.

Since the prohibition of football in schools in New York attempts are being made to introduce the English rules into America. A Canadian team played an exhibition game last Saturday before 30,000 spectators.

It is proposed to bring the Murray Football Tournament to a conclusion about the end of February or early in March next. The semi-finals will, therefore, probably be played off about that time in Lucknow. The competition is for a Silver Challenge Cup, value Rs. 2,000, which has to be won three times consecutively before it becomes the permanent property of the winners. There is no entrance fee. To each member of the winning team Messrs. Murray and Company present a Silver Medal, while each of the "runners up" receiving a Bronze Medal. The present holders of the Cup are the 1st Royal Dragoons. The details of the tournament will be undertaken as heretofore by a Committee to be appointed by the General Officer Commanding the 8th (Lucknow) Division. The Rev. R. M. Kirwan, Garrison Chaplain, Lucknow, has kindly consented to act as Honorary Secretary.

The Gordon Highlanders, holders of the I.F.A. Seield and League Cup, who leave Calcutta tomorrow, were anxious ere their departure to try conclusions with the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles team, which made such a brilliant show in the Durand Football Tournament at Simla last September. A match was arranged and brought off on the Calcutta F. C. ground on Monday, the soldiers winning by a goal to nil. The football was not particularly high class, but the game was strenuously contested from start to finish. The C.V.R. team had not the best of luck. They had the most of the play during the first half during which they should have scored on at least three occasions had their shooting been accurate while in the second moiety Smart had an opportunity of scoring but was fouled when on the point of shooting. Galetley scored the only goal of the match. Teams:—

Gordons.—Reich, goal; Kirkwood and Walker, backs; Finlay, Harper and Thomas, halves; McDougal, McKennon, Galetley, Foreman and Gilchrist, forwards.

C. V. R.—Hendrie, goal; Anderson and McCready, backs; Montgomery, L. A. Smith and Fischer, halves; H. Sherman, Smart, Galtreith, L. H. Smith and Hurlston, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Curley.

Donando Pietri, the speedy little pastry cook, was back again in London when the last mail left. He had done his honeymooning and was strictly on business, looking for matches, blowing his own trumpet somewhat—as every athlete of his class simply has to do nowadays—and especially desirous of fixing up Marathon races with C. W. Gardiner, Fred Appleby and other leading professional cracks in one or other of the big halls in London. D. Pietri goes to America next to fulfil certain running "contracts" in which big bags of dollars are to be picked up.

All old Etonians will be glad to hear that the King has been pleased to approve the appointment of the Rev. Edmond Warre, D.D., C.B., M.V.O., to be Provost of Eton, in the place of the late Rev. James John Hornby, D.D., C.V.O.

Dr. Warre succeeded the late Provost in the headmastership at Eton in 1884, and he had at that date been nearly a quarter of a century—since 1860—assistant master at the college. When he retired in 1905 he had spent forty-five years of an active life at Eton.

CALCUTTA.

A man still of splendid physique, his retirement caused surprise as well as regret, but the headmaster said to an interviewer:—"Really, I have been ill, and I am an old man; and I have had forty-five years of work and strain. It has been a huge responsibility, and I think I have earned a rest." Dr. Warre, who is a native of London, completed his seventy-second year on 12th February last.

Dr. Warre rowed in the University eight against Cambridge in 1857-58, and made a popular president of the Oxford University Boat Club in 1859. It has been said that he probably turned out more good oars than any other coach alive, and under his tuition Eton provided an increased proportion of first-rate University oarsmen. In this connection, says the Telegraph, Dr. Warre will perhaps be best remembered for his design of a racing craft 56 feet in length, considerably shorter than is now customary. This boat had a bull-dog nose and flat bottom, after Matt. Taylor's model, and its construction aroused much controversy. However, the boat justified her design by a win for Oxford in a storm of wind and rain. His return as Provost will be hailed by all Etonians with the utmost satisfaction.

By our London sporting exchanges we see that to Lady Edith Trotter belongs the distinction of having captured the biggest salmon of the season, on the Sprouston water of the Tweed. It turned the scale at 48½lb., and was landed in seventeen minutes. The fish was 50 inches in length and 27 inches in girth.

"No larger fish this season or for many seasons has been recorded as caught with rod and line in British waters," said Mr. Marston, editor of the Fishing Gazette. "The largest recorded British salmon caught with rod and line was taken by the late Earl of Home in the Tweed and weighed 69lb. Salmon run to a very good size in the Tweed. Last week General Paton caught one of 35lb. and Mr. Cayley one of 38lb. in the same waters.

"To take so large a fish is certainly a great achievement for a lady. The time in which it was taken is also remarkable. The rough-and-ready rule for large fish is a pound a minute. A 48lb. fish might have taken another half-hour to land."

Latest of the recruits to the field of African big game shooting is the Duke of Connaught, who is leaving England on 22nd January for a long shooting expedition in British East Africa. He is to be accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught, Princess Patricia, and Prince Arthur, and all arrangements for the trip have already been made.

British East Africa is no new land to the Duke. When he was out there before he expressed himself as fascinated by the country, and did a certain amount of shooting from an engine as it passed through the famous game lands.

Probably the expedition will follow closely on the lines of that of President Roosevelt's and it is quite possible that the same native servants and carriers may be used.

The Premier of New Zealand made an application last spring to the Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan asking him if he would give him an opportunity to experiment with some of the big game of the Canadian North-West. Instructions were accordingly given by the Lieutenant-Governor to a trapper and hunter of the Beaver Hills to try and secure about 20 young animals, with the result that 17 baby moose have been already delivered.

Recent investigations in the Zoological Garden at Buenos Ayres point to the fact that spots and stripes on animals are dependent in number and position on the vertebrae of the animal. In this connection the Revue Scientifique says:—

"Among different mammals, such, for example, as the tiger, zebra, giraffe, and certain deer, the coat has spots or spotted bands arranged with a certain regularity and at even distances. Clementi Onelli has been inquiring whether the number of these spots and bands is related at all with other parts of the organism, in particular with the vertebrae. According to this author, the number of bands and spots should correspond theoretically to that of the vertebrae. Practically this fact is not always evident, on account of the fusion of once distinct spots or bands, or of the second duplication of certain of them. It follows that the number of bands or spots on the skin may appear sometimes less and sometimes greater than that of the vertebrae. In the cervical and dorsal regions the spots and bands are generally related in number to the vertebrae; but in the lumbar and sacral regions the comparison becomes more difficult, for there the bands and spots have preserved much less of their original character.

"Clementi Onelli has reached these conclusions by studying particularly the tiger, the jaguar, the puma, the African lion, the axis deer, the zebra, the giraffe, and the South American tapir. In some cases, it is more advantageous to observe young animals than adults, for they preserve more clearly the fundamental characteristics relating to primitive independence of certain bands or spots, which become fused in the adult animals."

Shikaris might find it worth their while to visit the Sunderbunds during the Xmas holidays. A tiger is reported to have recently carried off a lascar from a gang of men who were engaged in attending to navigation marks in the Cattalee River. The European in charge was breakfasting on a barge moored close to the bank when the animal came boldly out of the jungle, seized one of the lascars and dragged the unfortunate man into the undergrowth, making off before the officer could get his gun.

As time goes on evidence accumulates that appears to make Dr. Cook's story that he reached the North Pole more and more dubious. Last week the New York Times published affidavits of a retired navigator, Captain Loose, and an insurance agent, Dunkle, that they recently supplied Dr. Cook with fabricated nautical and astronomical observations, such as he would have taken on a polar journey. They say that Dr. Cook disappeared because he did not pay the sum stipulated. This and other reports regarding his alleged ascent of Mount McKinley cannot fail to fill the public mind with distrust of Dr. Cook, unless some very sound evidence in support of his statements be quickly forthcoming. A short time ago Professor Turner, the Savilian Professor of Astronomy, lectured at Oxford upon "Possible Evidence of having reached the North Pole." He began by describing the simple character of the observations to be made, and pointed out that they are not magnetic, the magnetic pole being 1,000 miles away. The pole is in oscillation, but the range of movement is less than 50 feet, and can be neglected for the present purpose. Polar expeditions are always made in summer, when the sun is permanently above the horizon and no stars or moon available. Dealing next with observations for latitude, Professor Turner said that if they observed the height of sun at noon, a subtraction sum would give the latitude. Hence it is very easy to satisfy oneself that the latitude is 90 degrees and the Pole has been reached. But the observations and calculations could be written down anywhere, and are no necessary proof of success. The best instrument for making them is not the sextant but the theodolite, as used by Scott and Shackleton. Proceeding to criticise the records of Peary and Cook in their "first reports," the lecturer said that Peary's records in his "first report" exhibit the natural simplicity of which he spoke. Cook's records, on the other hand, are marred by mistakes, by superfluous and probably unattainable accuracy in the records of longitude, and suggest lack of acquaintance with the phenomena at the Pole—e. g., he says "the sun indicated local noon" and that the barometer and thermometer remained constant.

Sir Thomas Lipton is once more attempting to bring the America Cup to England. He has recently returned from America and has stated that, although he had no absolute guarantee from the New York Yacht Club that a challenge would be accepted, he was quite convinced that it would. He will accordingly challenge in March through the Royal Ulster Yacht Club, and will build two boats, one as a trial ship for the other. He will challenge for a race under the universal rules, and his boat will be 90 feet on the water line, with as large a sail area as the last Shamrock had. The widespread feeling of Americans, as expressed to Sir Thomas Lipton during his visit, is that the New York Yacht Club should not in any circumstances refuse to accept the challenge, and that, if they did, the cup should be placed in some museum as a historic relic of the past. Sir Thomas stated that his principal designer would be Mr. William Fife. He has told the people of America that it is impossible for any designer in Europe ever to design a boat capable of competing against the "freak" type admissible under the international rules; and that for any boat built under those rules to cross the Atlantic and then compete with a boat built on the other side was on the face of it absurd. The difference between the two boats would be almost as great as that between the Lusitania and a tug. What he asked, would Americans think if the cup were in possession of Englishmen and if Englishmen refused to accept a challenge under rules which govern yacht racing universally? Wherever he went in America yachtsmen encouraged him to challenge again, and assured him that when his challenge came it would be practically certain of a favourable reception. He wishes he said to race under American rules, and he understands that, if he produces the largest type of boat admissible under the universal rules, there will certainly be another contest for the America Cup.

A new invention which a soldier can affix to his gun, enabling him to take aim in the dark, is described in a German publication. It consists of a telescopic search-light containing a small electric lamp, and this is fixed to the barrel of the gun. It is said that the light can be directed on an object at a considerable distance. It all sounds very improbable, but we live in an age of wonders. Another marvel of which we had never previously heard was described during police court proceedings under the Gun Licensing Act at home recently. This is a pistol described as firing cartridges containing a little gunpowder, burned cayenne pepper, and lycopodium, which last is a moss dust. This cartridge, when fired at any person, is said to make him lose consciousness for a time. If this is true, we are within measurable distance of bloodless war. All that is needed is to bombard or "prepare" an enemy's position with cayenne and lycopodium artillery and musketry, and then follow this up with an advance of pantechnicons to collect the supefied bodies of the opposing forces.

The much-boomed Boxing Carnival organised by Jack McAuliffe has, like so many other shows in the annals of boxing in Calcutta, proved a fiasco. The tournament was advertised to extend over five nights, but when the public assembled at the Volunteer Headquarters on the opening night they were told that the show had been postponed owing to the illness of McAuliffe. Bad luck seems to dodge the veteran in his contests, for we remember some years ago an unfortunate spill off a bicycle caused the cancelling of his projected fight with Jasper Lamphier. We were next apprised that all the contests advertised would be run through on Saturday, the 11th, but again the public were doomed to disappointment, for those who went were informed that the Commissioner of Police had stopped the fights. McAuliffe has offered no explanations, in fact he has disappeared and the doors of the "National Sporting Club" are closed. The soldiers who had been induced to come up to Calcutta to take part in the tournament would have been stranded had it not been for the sporting officers of the 2nd Battalion, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, who have decided to hold an entertainment for the sole benefit of these men. The following strong committee have been appointed to run the entertainment:—Colonel J. Binning, Major F. M. Leslie, Captain A. E. Martelli, Captain James Knox, Captain J. H. Bullen (organiser); Captain W. W. MacGregor, Adjutant; Sergeant-Major S. N. Simpson; Referee, Mr. J. H. Allen; Judges, Captain J. N. Bullen, and Mr. R. J. Watson. As the men are fighting for the various India and Burma Championships, the public may be assured that they will see a really genuine entertainment with plenty of hard boxing. The contest will take place on Thursday and Saturday next at the Volunteer Headquarters at 9-30 P.M., and the prices will be Rs. 10, Rs. 5, Rs. 3, and Rs. 2. Box plan at Messrs. Harold and Co.

John Roberts, the veteran professional cueist, is in Bombay and a series of interesting matches have been arranged for him with well-known local amateurs. On Monday night at the Bombay Club Roberts met Mr. H. H. Hessling, giving him 600 points in 1,000 and beat him by 199. Roberts made a good start, scoring 300 in half an hour, and at the interval was 600 to Hessling's 722. The scores were level at 756 and thereafter the professional took the lead. His best breaks were 241, 108, 105, 78, 70 and 59. A return match was to be played at the Bombay Gymkhana on Wednesday and on Tuesday Roberts met Mr. T. J. Hallam of Lanowri conceding him 600 in 1,000. The results of these matches are not yet to hand. Roberts will also play matches at the Commercial Gymkhana to night, at the Yacht Club on Fridaynight, and at the Century Club on Saturday night.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 26th November 1909.

Winter has quite decided to settle down. We have had several frosty mornings since last I wrote and I pen these opening lines at 3 P.M. under the electric light with a perfect horror of a yellow fog outside. Of course, we have long ago been told, by those clever people who know all about it, that we are in for a terribly severe winter, and when I read of this I draw my chair a little nearer to the fire and try to comfort myself by reflecting that I never knew the winter that wasn't; but the thing that is "going to be" doesn't always get there. I hope for everybody's sake that this winter won't play up to the prophets of evil. It may be all very well for the gentleman who earns a precarious living as a skate fastener and who has been out of collar since last February, but a hard and continued frost spells tragedy in many homes. There are so many people who never have enough firing or enough bedclothes and whose lives in such weather are a continual misery. Do we ever spare them a thought when we go skating?

I was among those bidden to the banquet held at the Hotel Cecil last Friday, to celebrate the coming of age of the pneumatic tyre and incidentally to present Mr. Harvey Du Cros with a testimonial and a magnificent casket. There were five hundred people of many nationalities and chiefly commercial and the majority of what was described as "just an inflated rubber band" was recognised by gastronomy, oratory and music according to our ancient custom. The rubber band aforesaid has encircled the globe. The capital sunk in the industries it has brought into being is now estimated at many millions of pounds. And the people employed in connection with it—the men in the steel, cycle, and motor trades, and the natives who go out into dark forests to obtain raw rubber—may be counted in millions also. All owe their livelihood to the idea which flashed through an inventor's brain. I did not assist at this symposium because it seemed to me we were asked to honour the wrong man. It is true the inventor—Mr. J. B. Dunlop—was on hand, a grey-bearded man of seventy, but he came in only as an accessory, the Dunlop tyre was the topic, so local colour, so to speak, was added by the presence of the man who invented it, and gave the world an idea that has influenced it in every quarter. But the casket and the honours went to Mr Harvey Du Cros, the man whose commercial acumen recognised the immense possibilities of the invention and whose business "push" and fortune-making instincts chiefly directed the application of the invention to the making of money. Mr. Du Cros is a smart man—you will recollect the case Frank Harris of Vanity Fair brought against him for sums alleged to be due for writing his parliamentary speeches—and he deserves credit for his enterprise and energy, but it seemed to me that when we were asked to jubilate in respect of the Dunlop Tyre in the way indicated above we were giving the casket, the compliments and the honours to the wrong man. Hence I missed a good dinner and had to content myself with reading about it next day.

The subject of dinners brings me to the announcement of the opening last Sunday of a new restaurant which I opine will be the Kibla towards which many a man home on leave next year will turn with pleasant expectation. London has now its "Maxim's," it will be found in Wardour Street, and in general arrangement this new place has some resemblance to its world-famed prototype in Paris, though, I understand, it has no official connection with it in any way. Mr. Maxime Lurion, who made his reputation in this country at the Austrian Exhibition at Earl's Court, found London so much to his liking, that he has since occupied himself in planning a restaurant for this capital which will offer something in the nature of an international rendezvous. He has been ably supported by his architect, Mr. Hider, and the result of their combined efforts is certainly something novel in the West End. Central in location, dainty in design, original in every department, and planned in detail from roof to ceiling to afford perfect service, the Restaurant Maxim should command success.

Pretty wit and pointed humour have not so far been deemed vital to the success of a musical comedy; but when "The Merry Peasant" was produced at the Strand Theatre it was obvious that the book was too thin and the dialogue too tame for the piece to win a long run if it were left in its original form. There was much delightful music, pretty mounting, taking lyrics, and a strong cast, but so soon as the music was silent the piece became tedious.

Most of the previous faults disappeared last Saturday night, when a new version prepared by Mr. Cosmo Hamilton was produced. All that was most pleasing in the original version has been preserved; but Mr. Hamilton has not only brightened the dialogue, he has completely reconstructed the plot. Instead of being only about to begin his studies at college when the first act concludes, Stefan is now a rich and famous man when the play opens, and this change makes it possible for Little Rosalie to remain Little Rosalie in the second act. This is important, because it means that Miss Mary Glynn no longer has to disappear at the end of the first act, and Miss Mary Glynn's unaffected acting, simple, natural singing, and, above all, perfectly charming dancing, which is so charmingly suggestive of childish happiness and innocence and unconscious grace, are among the strongest assets of the piece. Saturday night's audience could not have enough of her.

The introduction of General Count Von Grumow and his family into the first act, instead of keeping them in the background till the third, has added considerably to the interest of the story and to the brightness of the action. The cast has been shortened, but those who remain have more to do, and they have all fitted themselves better to their parts. It is still Mr. Courtice Pounds's unkind fate to be the mouthpiece of much dry explanation as the Merry Peasant—so called because he is generally unhappy—but he makes the best of it, and means much to the piece for his singing alone. Mr. George Giddens and Mr. Arthur Williams now having something to say, are responsible for most of the fun of the play; Mr. Stuart Alexander has been given the part of Stefan, and is much more in accordance with the English idea of what the hero of musical comedy should be than his predecessor; and Miss Sybil Arundale, Mr. Leslie Styles, and Miss Florence St. John, among others, have all benefited by Mr. Hamilton's alterations and additions. The piece was very warmly received and should now be on the way to a considerable success.

The scheme advocated by the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre Committee, which requires £500,000 to build, equip, and endow a national theatre, is not unlikely, unless something practical is done within a short time, to lose the support of the great majority of the influential members of the dramatic profession.

Apart from the £70,000 promised by an anonymous friend of the project several months ago the subscriptions from the members of the committee and the public do not amount to £5,000, and now the actors on the committee are talking of resigning in a body and thereby enormously weakening the chance of carrying out such an ambitious and extravagant proposal.

We are given to understand that unless a change of policy is adopted by the committee shortly a letter signed by some of our most prominent actors will be addressed to the secretaries informing them that they will no longer associate themselves with the memorial scheme.

Opening my morning paper last Thursday an illustration attracted my attention. I thought it was a picture of some society belle or at least a Gaiety chorus girl, who had "married"—married mark you—an Indian Prince. Quite wrong. The juvenile features innocent of wrinkle, the unsilvered hair were those of Mdme. Patti, the possessor of the secret of perpetual youth it would appear, and who the day before had been celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of her first appearance as an Opera singer. She was then seventeen; so this makes her sixty-seven. Her operatic debut was made on 24th November 1859 at the New York Academy of Music, when she appeared as Lucia.

It is interesting to compare the salaries Patti received in the fifties with those paid to the great prime donne to-day. In the year of the operatic debut Strakosch paid her £20 a week; at her first London appearance in 1861 she received from Frederick Lye £150 a month—and gave her first three performances for nothing. Previous to her marriage in 1869 her earnings never exceeded £120 a night, but later, when Nilsson was engaged for £200, Patti had £210.

To-day there are many impresarios who would be glad to offer £1,000 and more for her services, for the beautiful liquid notes, the perfect phrasing, and the wonderful magnetic charm of her voice have outlasted her sixty-seven years—years which sit so lightly upon her that she still retains the slight, girlish figure and the vivacious manner of the seventeen-year-old Amina, who took London by storm half a century ago. Altogether it has been estimated that her voice has earned her something like £800,000.

A GHASTLY ENCOUNTER WITH A PANTHER.

It was about 7 at night, some ten months ago in the Punjab; we were just sitting to dinner when there arrived quite out of breath a "Goojur" belonging to a village about five miles away. He told me that at sunset a panther had come and carried away a young calf in the presence of the cowherd, and that he had seen it enter a ravine, where he was sure it was still concealed with its quarry. I was all too eager to meet this formidable beast, to hesitate an instant; dinner was left untouched and a rush was made at once to my shooting irons, which were my trusty ·303 and Bull-dog 5 shooter, notwithstanding the representations of several who wished to detain me, by offering a hundred and one obstacles regarding the darkness of the night, bad weather, etc., etc.; but knowing, as I did, that the moon rose at 10 p.m. and that I ought to be alongside of Master Spots before that hour, I started. I saddled my noble charger "Nero" and mounting, hailed the "Goojur," who in his endeavour to take a "Bee-line," went along narrow tracks, and often through the bush. My hunting-knife knocked against my legs and stuck in the branches; so to avoid collisions I secured it out of harm's way. On reaching the spot indicated by my guide, I found the villagers waiting for me. For a "draw" they had got ready a sheep and a huge peg to attach it to. They led me a short distance round, to the outside of a large nullah, where they pulled up and pointed to where the beast lay. They placed me at the coign of vantage, promising to go round and tether the lure. The ground where I was fixed up was on a falling gradient, which descended by a somewhat steep slope to the nullah, or ravine, on the edge of which I took my stand to conquer or to die. The good old "Goojur" drove in the stake in the higher ground, about 15 or 20 yards from me and there tethered the sheep, as a goat was not very handy, and I thought that a sheep being a timid creature would bleet the more. I had rested myself in the thicket and had not drawn my hunting knife from its sheath nor my revolver from its holster, to lay them on the ground, so as to have them handy, when separating the slender twigs which might impede its movements, quicker than lightning the marauder fell upon the bait. I held my breath, and hesitated firing, hoping the moon would afford me a gleam of light; a delay of some seconds thus ensued, for its rays only occasionally shewed through the dark flitting clouds. But what was my astonishment to see the panther passing by me, carrying off the sheep with the ease of a terrier carrying off a rat! It was about 10 yards from me, and moving directly across, I could neither distinguish head nor tail, only a blurred mass. The remembrance of my 29 unsuccessful nights flashed across my mind: impatience carried me completely away, and, forgetting all prudent resolutions, I opened fire. My ·303 was loaded with 35 grs. of powder and 20 slugs. The object of my aim fell, uttering ghastly moans, at the same time dropping the sheep. I had broken the panther's two hind legs; yet it had not seen from whence the shot came; and for aught I know, might have thought that the goat had exploded in its jaws. The slightest movement on my part would be certain to attract attention, common-sense demanded that the most complete immobility should be observed; but, fearing a surprise, I determined to stand up in my hiding-place to see over it, and be the better prepared for results. In rising, a branch caught the top of my coat and shook it a bit. This was another of the providential chances to which I owe my life. The wily brute now alarmed, did not utter a cry, or a sound, but fixed its attention on the thicket and listened. A few moments passed, and I, hearing and seeing nothing, thought the monster dead. Crouching and using every precaution I issued from my shelter, carrying my piece with the barrels lowered and my finger on the second trigger. As soon as I was seen, the panther made a spring of quite 10 feet towards me. I aimed at its head; but the rapidity of its spring was so great, and the darkness so intense, that I missed, my ball (enter ing the ground, and the fire from my piece singeing the hair in its neck. The terrible beast now threw itself upon me, and bore me to mother earth in an instant, I dropped underneath on my back, with my shoulders caught up in the bush, that had served as a place of concealment. First the dreadful creature attempted to strangle me, and fixing upon my neck, tore at it in indescribable rage. This was luckily protected by the collar and thick hood of my coat. With both my hands I convulsively grasped my assailant by the neck. It then seized me across the face, and driving its formidable teeth into the flesh, almost smashed my jaw, which it certainly would have done, had I not at the onset smashed both his fore paws. The noise thus caused sounded so painfully, that I thought my brains were being squeezed out. My face was in its mouth, from whence issued a burning, fetid breath that stifled me. Still I clung to the foe by the neck, which was as large and hard as the trunk of a tree, and at length, with the strength of despair, I was enabled to thrust away its terrible head from mine. It then seized me by the left arm, and bit me through the elbow; without the large amount of clothing with which it was covered, it must have been crushed like a piece of glass. The panther tried a second time to take me by the face, I resisted, but my strength was all but exhausted. Making a movement to better my condition, it clutched my head. Gathering all the strength and determination that yet remained for a final effort, I disengaged myself, leaving my wadded cloth case in its jaws. I had thrown the brute from me so vigorously that it slipped over the steep slope; the two front paws being broken, it could not check itself but went crashing headlong, roaring into the "nallah." At last released, I relieved myself by spitting out four of my teeth and a mass of blood that filled my mouth. Just then the villagers came up and seeing my tattered face, and gory condition carried me home, where my friends who had seen me start in the pink of condition were not a little surprised at my mangled state. My left cheek was torn and lay in my mouth and my face was a mass of blood. At my desire a doctor friend of mine was sent for in whom I had entire confidence. Those who surrounded me were very sad, and less composed than myself. I read in their faces that they thought me a dead man, but I tried to reassure them, by telling them that the heart was still sound and cheerful. Previous to this I had often said that the happiest day of my life would be that on which armed only with my hunting knife, I should encounter a panther or leopard, so much did I reckon on the vigour of my arm. Notwithstanding the providential chance that placed me on the slippery side of the ravine, and notwithstanding the other favourable circumstances that protected me, if my late foe had not been deprived of the use of his fore feet, I must have been lost.

The panther was subsequently killed, and under the careful management and care of my doctor friend I recovered in about four months, though I still carry the scars of that never-to-be-forgotten struggle.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

Light Railway between Arrah (E. I. Railway) and Sasaram (E. I. Railway Grand Chord Line).

This Company has been formed for the purpose of constructing and working a Light Railway between Arrah and Sasaram as shown on the plan hereto annexed.

The Railway, as sanctioned by order of the Bengal Government in the Calcutta Gazette of 13th October 1909, is of 2'6" gauge and about 60 miles in length. The line will connect up the above-mentioned trunk systems. It will supply a long-required means of communication between the intermediate places which have, at the present time, no facilities of transit except by the District Road, along one side of which the new line will run. The country traversed is a rich agricultural district and is irrigated by the Sone Canal. The average density of population is 562 per square mile.

Concessions—

The District Board have, with the sanction of Government, granted to the Company the free use of as much of the District Road as is necessary for the proposed line.

The payment of interest during construction, under agreement with the Contractors, will be at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the capital paid up from the date of each payment until the date of the actual opening of the line for traffic.

In the event of the District Board exercising, under Section 41 of the Bengal Tramways Act, the right to purchase the Railway, the price will be based on 25 years' purchase of the average annual profits for the preceding three years, subject to a minimum of the actual capital expenditure and to a maximum of 120.

The Company has the option of working its own line whereby the fullest control will be retained in dealing with all traffic. This system has been proved to be efficient and satisfactory alike to the public and the shareholders, in the case of the Howrah-Amta, Howrah-Sheakhala, Bukhtiarpur-Behar, Baraset-Basirhat and Shahdara (Delhi)-Saharanpur Lines which have been inaugurated and worked by Messrs. Martin & Co.

Four per cent. interest on Capital Guaranteed—

By an agreement, dated 26th July 1907, the District Board of Shahabad have undertaken, should the necessity arise, to supplement the Net Earnings of the Company by such annual subsidy as will be sufficient, after allowing for all working expenses and management, depreciation and other out-goings, to make up the sum of Rupees eighty-eight thousand per annum (to which sum as a maximum the Board's liability is limited). This guaranteed total is equivalent to 4 per cent. per annum on the Company's capital, which is fixed at Rs. 22,00,000. Any surplus earned by the Company after paying a dividend of 4 per cent. on its capital will be equally divided between the District Board and the Company.

Financial Prospects—

From estimates of the traffic which is likely to pass over the line, there is every indication of a satisfactory return upon capital, as, apart from the guarantee before referred to, the estimated Net Earnings, as shown in the following figures, give promise of substantially better results.

The existing traffic along the District Road is of considerable volume, and experience in similar cases shows that such Railways not only acquire all the original Road traffic, but so encourage local trade as to greatly expand the existing sources of revenue. Taking only the present Road traffic, as statistically recorded by the District Board itself, a safe estimate of earnings is arrived at.

Mr. Harry Edwards, C.E., District Engineer of Shahabad in a note dated 5th May 1907, reports:—

Statistics of traffic up and down the District Road between Arrah and Sasaram were collected under my direction during three periods, viz.:—

April	...	...	...	1903	to	October	...	...	...	1903
October	...	...	...	1904	to	April	...	...	...	1905
April	...	...	...	1906	to	March	...	...	...	1907

During the 12 months ending March 1907 the total quantity of through goods amounted to 2,443,456 maunds and the total number of passengers amounted to 1,309,109; registered at five stations. The average traffic per diem passing any one station will therefore stand at:—

Goods: $\frac{2,443,456}{5} \div 365 = 1,338$ maunds. Passengers: $\frac{1,309,109}{5} \div 365 = 744$ passengers.

Having obtained these results, the problem to ascertain the probable traffic earnings is a simple one.

On the Bukhtiarpur-Behar Light Railway although the maxima for goods rates published in the Government order vary from 8 annas to 16 annas per hundred maunds, the actual minimum charge amounts to 4·16 annas per hundred maunds.

For passengers the rate charged on that line is 3 pies per mile.

Taking the goods tariff at 4 annas per hundred maunds per mile as the average rate, and the passenger rate at 3 pies per mile—with a mean lead of one-fifth of the total length, the resulting Grand Total is Rs. 3,29,700, which is the estimated Gross Revenue arrived at by actual observation and statistics.

Taking all these factors into consideration, I am of opinion that it will not be safe to place the cost per mile lower than Rs. 36,000.

With an estimated gross revenue of Rs. 3,30,000 (Rs. 102 per mile per week) and assuming working expenses to be Rs. 1,65,000 (50 per cent of gross earnings or Rs. 51 per mile per week) the margin for dividend purposes amounts to Rs. 1,65,000, which on an estimated capital of Rs. 22,00,000 works out to 7½ per cent.

It would therefore appear that the undertaking has a very promising future before it, and the Directors see no reason why the Company should not become at an early date, one of the most desirable investments of its class.

Construction and Cost of the Line—

The Line is to be constructed and equipped by Messrs. Martin & Co., of Calcutta, who have undertaken to complete the same ready for opening for public traffic within 2 years from the date hereof within the Estimates approved by the Government, and in accordance with plans and sections approved by the Government; also to make good any defects whatsoever which may come to light within 12 months from the opening of the Railway for public traffic. The total estimated cost of the line including preliminary expenses amounts to Rs. 35,397 per mile. The fact that the line must be passed by the Government Engineer and Inspectors of Railways before it can be opened is a guarantee that it will be substantially constructed and suitably equipped.

Agreements—

The following Agreements to which reference need here be made in terms of Section 88 of the Indian Companies' Act of 1882 have been entered into by and on behalf of the Company:

(1) The Agreement above referred to, dated 15th October 1909 and made between the District Board of Shahabad and Messrs. Martin & Co.
(2) An Agreement dated 19th October 1909 and made between the District Board of Shahabad of the one part, Messrs. Martin & Co. of the second part, and the Arrah-Sasaram Light Railway Co. Ld., of the third part, adopting the provisions of the Agreement above mentioned.
(3) An Agreement dated 19th October 1909 and made between the firm of Messrs. Martin & Co. of the one part and the Company of the other part, relating to the construction and equipment of the line.
(4) An Agreement dated 11th October 1909 and made between the Company of the one part and Messrs. Martin & Co. of the other part relative to the management of the Company.

Application for Shares—

Applications for shares should be made upon the accompany form and forwarded to the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, or to any branch of such Bank, together with the amount payable on application (Rs 10 per share).

If no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full, and where the number of shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the amount payable on allotment or calls.

Prospectuses and Forms of application for shares may be obtained from the Company's Managing Agents, Bankers and Solicitors and Messrs. Place, Siddons and Gough, Calcutta.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company and of the Agreements abovementioned may be inspected at the office of the Company's Solicitors or Managing Agents during the usual business hours.

BANGALORE GYMKHANA RACES.

Saturday, 11th December 1909.

CAPTAIN CAMPBELL Ross (Honorary Secretary) and the Stewards, among whom I notice some new names, most prominent among them being Major Stephen of the 14th (King's) Hussars who has just returned from Home, are to be congratulated on the excellent sport they provided this afternoon. The weather was fine and cloudy at times, the attendance better than usual, including General Cookson and an unusually large number of ladies, many of whom were drawn to the Hart, Crown and Anchor table but left it with regrets. Major Stephen and officers of the sporting 14th were "At Home" to their friends under canvas, on the lawn, and the fine band of their regiment provided excellent music. After a long time a totalisator was run by a couple of non-coms of the Hussars and naturally they were well patronised. There was one book-maker and as the favourites did not get home very often, I should say he made a very good book. There were six races on the card and an extra tacked on for the Mounted Section of the Volunteers. Most of the races provided close finishes. Following are details:—

THE MYSORE PLATE.—Rs. 45 to the first and Rs. 10 to the second. For Country-Breds W. A. and C. raised 1st. 7lb. Penalties—Winners of a race value Rs. 150 and over once 7lb., twice 10lb., oftener 1st. Allowance—Maidens 7lb., mares and geldings 3lb. Owners are responsible for their correct weights. 4 furlongs.

New Life for Nervous Sufferers!

"My nerves are in an awful state!"

That is the daily despondent cry of millions of people whose life is made a misery by nervous conditions, which, if unchecked, may lead to the gravest consequences.

To such sufferers there is the possibility of a "new life" with the restoration of all the old feeling of physical strength and mental exhilaration which made life worth living.

This "new life" is offered by Sanatogen whose merits more than ten thousand physicians have proclaimed in enthusiastic letters, describing the marvellous results they have obtained by what is, admittedly, the world's supreme revitaliser of nerves, brain and body.

Sanatogen is, therefore, pre-eminently beneficial in nervous debility and breakdown, weakened and disordered nerves, loss of memory, disordered digestion and dyspepsia, dysentery, malaria, anæmia, loss of vitality, and the loss of weight and strength which are the inevitable consequences of wasting diseases like Consumption.

Sanatogen's action is due to its constituents—milk proteid and glycero-phosphate of sodium, chemically combined to form a new compound which is at once a food and a tonic, profoundly powerful in its result, yet so bland and mild in itself that doctors constantly prescribe it for young children.

Sanatogen is admittedly the supreme restorative in convalescence from all acute diseases, such as enteric fever, dysentery and malaria, for it is easily digested, rapidly assimilated, and perfectly absorbed.

Hundreds of thousands of people, among whom are many well-known men and women, have voluntarily testified that Sanatogen has restored them to perfect health. A selection from their letters appears on this page.

Sanatogen may be obtained of all chemists and bazaars. Descriptive pamphlet entitled, "How to Keep Well in Tropical Climates," sent free on application to the Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta.

Send a post-card, to-day, mentioning this paper.

The Rt. Hon. Sir Hy. Aubrey-Fletcher, Bart., C.B., M.P.:

Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.:

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Sir Frederick Milner, Bart.:

"I have been taking Sanatogen for some time, and it seems both to nourish me and give me strength."

Sir William Bull, M.P.:

"I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

Mr. Shirley Tremearne (Editor of "Capital"), Calcutta:

"I cannot speak too highly of Sanatogen, which I took for some time, during a sharp attack of fever. It restored me once more to full vigour. In fact, I was better, and stronger, after this course of Sanatogen than before the attack. I can strongly recommend this preparation to anyone whose system has run-down."

The Lord Bishop of Norwich:

"Mrs. Sheepshanks is taking Sanatogen regularly and deriving great benefit from it."

Lord Edward Churchill:

"I have derived benefit from taking Sanatogen."

Sir Charles A. Cameron, C.B., M.D.:

"Sanatogen is an excellent nerve food."

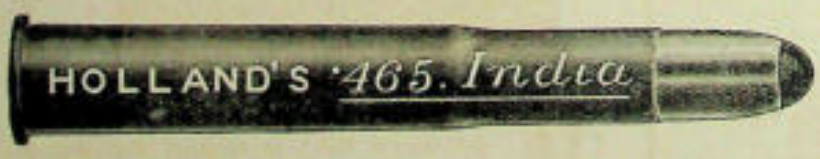
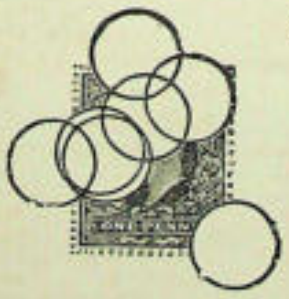
NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM (PATENT.)



EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.



Messrs. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

7 CONSECUTIVE SHOTS at 100 Yards.

ALL WOULD HAVE STRUCK A POSTAGE STAMP.

AFTER BEING FIRED.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

PRICES*:—DOUBLE BARRELLED RIFLE, best quality and finish, Royal Hammerless. 70 Guineas. B. Grade, 55 Guineas.

DERBY

THE surroundings on the second day were too bright to last, and the sunshine was marred by a November sky. Several showers fell during the afternoon, but not of sufficient volume to at all affect the going, which though soft enough to be cut into by the flying hoofs was pretty fair ; in fact, it would have been perfect for cross-country running. The attendance outside was not strong, though in the club enclosure there was little appreciable difference, as the meeting again brought a goodly assemblage of country notabilities who were entertaining parties from the neighbouring states which so numerously dot the countryside. Results:—

On Cup day there was genuine November weather—fog, drizzle and cold ; but there was quite a good attendance. The county stand and paddock were filled by a goodly representative company and the popularity of the meeting was well attested, while the ring and further enclosures were crowded, and the holiday folk helped to bring the muster above the average. The course gradually improving gave the best going of the week, and as usual here big fields kept up the charter of the meeting, and backers had a smoother time. Results:—

FOOTBALL
ASSOCIATION RULES.

For the fourth time in the course of the last six weeks no actual success on Saturday attended the efforts of the London clubs in the First League. The afternoon's record, indeed, came very near being one of complete failure, but Woolwich Arsenal in their match with Bristol City at Plumstead, managed to equalise just on time, and so escaped with a draw, after being two goals down a quarter of an hour from the start. Tottenham Hotspur, although beaten by Aston Villa, made a creditable fight at Birmingham, but Chelsea—again poorly represented forward—cut a wretched figure against Bradford City at Stamford Bridge, and fully merited their defeat by 3—0. Altogether the three metropolitan teams, since the beginning of September have between them engaged in thirty-nine matches, giving possibilities of no fewer than 78 points, but of this number they have secured no more than 25—Chelsea 10 out of 28, Hotspur 8 out of 24, and the Arsenal 7 out of 28. Happily for the clubs in question, Preston North End and Bolton Wanderers have fared as badly as their London rivals, and Bury and Bristol City are not much better off, so the outlook for the metropolitan clubs, although somewhat desperate, is not exactly hopeless.

Robbed of the services of Neave and McKellar, the Arsenal did about as well as could have been expected in drawing with Bristol City, for although the latter had been beaten in their four preceding engagements these reverses had all been sustained from leading clubs in the competition. Buckenham, a fresh introduction to the team, was tried in the important position of centre-forward, and scored one of the Arsenal's goals very cleverly. Hotspur enjoyed the satisfaction of scoring the first goal of the match at Birmingham, but in the course of the second half found themselves 2 goals to the bad. They struggled on gamely, however, and in the end only lost by the odd goal in five. Not even the satisfaction of having given a creditable display could be claimed by Chelsea, whose forwards proved deplorably weak. Bradford were lucky to have the first goal allowed, but on change of ends they overran the Stamford Bridge men, who on the general course of the game might easily have lost by more than 3 to 0.

Opposing Manchester United, their most formidable rivals, at Ewood Park, Blackburn Rovers pulled through by 3 to 2, and now possess a clear advantage over every other club in the First League. Liverpool, thanks to a victory over Preston North End, regain second place with Sheffield United and Machester United next in order, but Newcastle United, last season's champions, who met with their sixth defeat yesterday, occupy a comparatively humble position in the competition. Everton, runners-up to Newcastle, are also doing badly, the reverse they sustained yesterday being the sixth met with in the course of their last eight matches.

Fog caused the Manchester City and Barnsley match at Manchester to be given up early in the second half, when the score was one goal each, but all the other games in the Second Division of the League were finished, and, as expected, no very surprising results occured. Glossop, however, failed to beat Blackpool at Blackpool, and Hull City could not, on their own ground, overcome Stockport County. Consequently there was something of a levelling up among the more prominent teams, and now only four points separate the first from the sixth club on the list. Glossop still possess a clear lead of one point over Leicester Fosse, their nearest rivals, these two standing out by themselves well clear of the others. Both the London clubs won, Clapton Orient scoring three goals against Birmingham at Homerton, and showing excellent form. After their dreadful display last week against Gainsborough Trinity the Fulham forwards were altered, McLoughlin being centre and Walker outside left, and so well did the team play that they had no difficulty in beating Grimsby Town at Grimsby. They have started the season so badly, however, that no great hopes can be entertained of their making much of a bid for promotion. They should, however, do well in their forthcoming engagements, and so retrieve their position to some extent.

The Crystal Palace team have just recently gone through some very unpleasant experiences, and yesterday they suffered their third consecutive reverse, the effect of which is that their conquerors of the day—Queen's Park Rangers—go to the head of the Southern League. They certainly deserved a better fate in a disappointing game. Both they and the Rangers played below form in a rather poor match, but the victors managed to do the all-important thing—score a goal. West Ham United probably felt satisfied in dividing the points with the Argyle at Plymouth, and they also go above the Palace, and the Brighton Albion team, who come fourth, also have a superior record, while Swindon may at any time further reduce the Sydenham club.

England came nearer losing an amateur international match at Leeds on Saturday than ever before. Though scoring in the first minute, her representatives were generally fighting an uphill battle and, if the better side towards the finish, the Englishmen could feel satisfied at having escaped defeat from the Irishmen. The keen, close fight made by the visitors came as a surprise, because last season the corresponding match at Dublin ended in an easy win for the Englishmen by 5 goals to 1. On Saturday England's defence lacked certainty, and the forwards had to score four times to save their side from defeat. Since the Football Association have arranged amateur internationals heavy scoring has marked most of the games, and the last fixture provided no change in this respect. Once before, in the final of the Olympic Games, England had nothing to spare, Denmark making a most determined struggle at the Stadium. This most recent result will increase the interest in engagements of the kind; the spread of the game is bringing about an improvement in many of England's opponents, who used to fall ready victims.

ARSENAL VS. BRISTOL CITY.—The meeting of Bristol City and Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead attracted but 8,000 spectators, and they saw a game that never reached a very high standard, although there were many exciting episodes. With a goal in the last minute of the game, Woolwich Arsenal just managed to draw, and therefore, in a sense, they were lucky to escape defeat. But though Bristol City held the lead for the greater part of the game they never had a great advantage in play. Woolwich were without their new centre-forward, McKellar, injured on the previous Saturday at Sheffield, and Buckenham, of the Reserves, led the line. Owing to the death of his wife Neave was absent, and Heppinstall, who took his place, was not much of a success. Bristol made several team changes, Rippon and Gilligan coming back to the forward line after an absence of several weeks. Although Woolwich opened the game strongly, Bristol City, after a quarter of an hour, scored two goals in succession. Both were scored by Rippon, and both came from right wing centres, and in each case the Woolwich defence seemed at fault. In the first instance the backs left Rippon with an open goal, and in the second McDonald misjudged a long shot from Hardy, which hit the far post and rebounded to the foot of Rippon. It was near the interval before a fine movement started by Sands enabled the Arsenal to score a splendid goal through Buckenham. The second half was very evenly contested. Once Gilligan, with an open goal, hit the post, and McDonald and Clay were very active in their respective goals. Just on time Sands, from a throw-in, lifted a high centre to Greenaway, who headed the equalising goal. Woolwich Arsenal, 2; Bristol City, 2.

CHELSEA VS. BRADFORD CITY.—Chelsea were again defeated at Stamford Bridge yesterday, and there can be no two opinions about the vast superiority of their conquerors, Bradford City. From beginning to end the Yorkshiremen were a long way in advance of the home lot, whose play was devoid of combination, and the work of the forwards was positively poor. There would be about 25,000 people present, and the conditions were not altogether favourable for a haze hung over the ground, and in the last ten minutes the play could only be followed with difficulty. Humphreys put in the first good shot of the match, but it was wide of the mark, and then Bradford gradually took complete command of the game to such an extent that the surprising thing is that they did not score half a dozen goals. After twenty minutes' play O'Rourke gave Spiers a pass, but his shot struck the crossbar and rebounded to Bond, who easily scored. Whitley cleverly saved shots from Whittingham and Bond, but shortly after the interval he failed to hold a long dropping ball by Campbell, and O'Rourke rushed up and netted. The City continued to monopolise the game, and once Whitley just scraped away a shot from Whittingham, who seemed particularly anxious to score, for he was very selfish in his play. He was rewarded just before the end by scoring the third and last goal with a shot which went off one of his colleagues into the net. The home side were without Partridge, Hilsdon, Fairgray and Brawn. Bradford City, 3; Chelsea, 0.

ASTON VILLA vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—At Aston before 15,000 people. In the first minute Boreham, the Hotspur goalkeeper, had to save from Hampton and then following even play Minter gave Tottenham the lead after twenty minutes. Before this Cartlidge had saved a good shot by Curtis. Both sides were seen to considerable advantage and the play was full of incident. Ten minutes from the change of ends the Aston Villa forwards made a combined attack with the result that Gerrish equalised. Then Boreham saved well at full length on the ground. Early in the second half the Villa attacked vigorously and Bache beat Boreham with a fast shot. A little later Hampton with a characteristic effort again beat the Tottenham defence and gave the home side a lead of three goals to one. After these reverses Tottenham Hotspur played up with the utmost spirit and were soon rewarded with a goal, Robert Steel scoring with an excellent shot. For the remainder of the game Tottenham tried hard to equalise, but could not again beat the Aston Villa defence. Aston Villa, 3; Tottenham Hotspur, 2.

AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL.

ENGLAND vs. IRELAND.—The second amateur international game of the season was played at Leeds on the 20th instant, when, on the Elland road ground, teams representing England and Ireland met before about 6,000 people. With fine weather prevailing the attendance was rather disappointing, but there had been some grumbling owing to the fact of members of the Leeds City Club having to pay. Ireland had had to make two changes from their originally selected side and England for various reasons were without E. J. D. Wright, K. R. G. Hunt, and A. C. L. Clarke, who were among the first choices. The ground proved in excellent condition. W. C. Jordan started the game for England, and early on, with hands given against Woodward, Ireland set up a vigorous attack. The pressure on the English goal was, however, soon relieved and, following splendid combination among the English forwards, Owen beat Ireland's goalkeeper before the game was many minutes old with an excellent shot. The Irishmen replied with another attack and, securing the ball at close quarters, Robertson, succeeded in equalising, and then a little later McDonnell, receiving a pass from Wright, gave Ireland the lead with a grand shot. In an attack by England Woodward missed a fine centre by Williams, and then the Irish forwards rushed down on the home goal and, with the England backs quite beaten, Hooper put on a third goal for Ireland. Berry, an English forward, was injured, but soon resumed. Quick on the ball and very determined, the Irish forwards gave the rather uncertain English defence great anxiety. Wright, on the wing, and Robertson and McDonnell were particularly prominent among the Irish front rank for their clever work. Robertson, too, frequently fell back from centre-forward and helped the backs when England were getting dangerous. Before half-time Woodward, securing a pass by Owen, reduced Ireland's lead to one goal. Interval scores: Ireland, 3 goals; England, 2.

The second half opened with two fine runs by Berry, but on each occasion he finished with a wretched shot. The first went well over the bar and the second wide of the Irish goal. A fine shot at the English goal by Wright, the Irish forward, was stopped by Brebner. Even and interesting play followed, and then England gained an equalising goal in very lucky fashion, for McCann, in endeavouring to clear the ball in a scramble in the Irish goal mouth, had the misfortune to kick into his own goal. However, Ireland took the lead again through Robertson, who skilfully trapped a pass by Thompson. Near the end the Englishmen gained the upper hand and played excellent football, with the result that Jordan equalised, and the match ended in a draw of four goals each. This is the first time England has failed to win an amateur international game against any other country.

RUGBY RULES

COUNTY MATCHES.—As a result of Saturday's games at Weston-super-Mare and Devonport, the championship of the south-west appears practically assured to Gloucestershire who, after defeating Devon by 22 points to 0 a fortnight ago, beat Somerset by 21 to 14, Somerset doing all their scoring after Gloucestershire had obtained three goals and two tries. Gloucestershire have now to meet Cornwall. The latter county going down before Somerset at Bath, found themselves yesterday a point behind at the interval, but in the end proved victorious over Devon by 16 points to 11. The match between Gloucestershire and Cornwall takes place a fortnight hence at Camborne. In the event of Cornwall winning on that occasion and Somerset beating Devon there will again be a tie between three, with a necessary consequence of a supplementary competition. Gloucestershire, however, have only to hold their own at Camborne to be sure of first honours. Form in the north is somewhat mixed, with Northumberland at present holding the strongest position. Although beaten by the Northumbrians the other day, Yorkshire yesterday followed up their win against Durham with a victory over Lancashire. Cumberland, who has drawn with Northumberland, lost to Cheshire—previously defeated by Lancashire.

LONDON CLUBS.—Acquitting themselves creditably in most games this season, Blackheath on the 20th instant, sustained a surprisingly severe defeat from Richmond, to whose forwards a victory by five goals—placed by Gimpson—to a try, was mainly due. Pillman, a forward of great energy and cleverness, gained the only point for Blackheath, his exertions at Bedford on Thursday notwithstanding. Cambridge, showing a marked improvement outside the scrummage, beat the Scottish in fine style, White-Schofield and Jones (twice) scoring before Lockhart ran in for the Scotsmen. Victorious over the Loysians on the previous Saturday, Marlborough Nomads came a sad cropper before Old Merchant Taylors, the latter for whom O'Callaghan scored seven times and Leppingwell thrice, winning by no fewer than 53 points to 0. An even bigger total was that the Harlequins put together against Rosslyn Park. Like the Taylors, the Harlequins gained thirteen tries—Lambert five, F. M. Stoop three, and Beckett two—but while the Taylors had to rest content with seven goals, Lambert was successful with nine place kicks for the Harlequins. It is to be noted with pleasure that Beckett was able to resume his place in the field. Defeat was once again the portion of the London Irish, Guy's obtaining 32 points to 3 and Bradford went down before London by 24 to 0. London Welsh accomplished a capital performance in winning at Northampton. Oxford, although still without Cunningham, their captain, placed in the field against the Army the same set of three-quarters as last season, and pulled through by six goals to two goals and a try.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. THE ARMY.—Although without Cunningham the University gained a handsome victory at Oxford by 5 goals to 2 goals 1 try. They had the same three-quarters as last season and the whole side played a fine dashing game in a keen struggle. During the first half Gilray and Honey obtained converted tries and early in the second Wade-Gery ran in for the Army. Then play went all in favour of Oxford, for whom Gilray obtained two tries and Honey and Vassall one each. All the place-kicks were successful. The Army finished strongly, Wade-Gery and Wilson adding tries. Oxford, 6 goals; The Army, 2 goals 1 try.

BLACKHEATH vs. RICHMOND.—There was a crowd of nearly 3,000 to witness this match at Blackheath, despite the depressing dulness of the atmospheric conditions, but the game was not a good one to watch. From the outset it was a contest between the rival packs, and Richmond so early displayed a decided superority that a verdict for Blackheath was doubtful from the outset. This possibility evaporated altogether soon after the interval, as by that time Blackheath were a spent side, and Richmond had the game well in hand. So well did the Richmond forwards play, and so fierce and certain was their tackling that Blackheath could never get going. The only score of the first half was a goal kicked by Gimpson from a try cleverly secured by Ireland after a short dodgy run. Almost as soon as the game was restarted, Ireland again ran round the Blackheath backs, and shortly afterwards, receiving from the scrum, scored a third try. There was an interval of Blackheath attacking during which Richmond twice touched down, and Pillman scored an unconverted try, and then Richmond returned Duggan scoring under the bar, and Wilson adding a fifth try in the last minute. All the place kicks at a variety of angles were successfully taken by Gimpson, Blackheath retired a badly beaten side, Richmond, 5 goals; Blackheath, 1 try.

HARLEQUINS vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—Rosslyn Park were quite outclassed in their game with the Harlequins at the new ground at Twickenham, and had to acknowledge defeat by 9 goals 4 tries (57 points) to nil. Harlequins were expected to win, but hardly to outplay their opponents in the manner indicated by the score. Both teams were well represented, and though one-sided the interest was maintained throughout by the brilliant display of the home backs. Birkett again took his place, and with the two Stoops, Paulton, and Lambert as his other associates behind the scrum, the visiting defence had much more to do than they could cope with. In the first quarter of an hour the 'Quins established a lead of 18 points, which they increased at the interval to 31. Rarely were the Park dangerous, though their forward once or twice by good footwork got the ball to their opponents' line. Lambert (5), F. M. Stoop (3), Birkett (2), and Potter, Walker, and A. Stoop (1 each) scored the tries for Harlequins. Lambert kicked the goals. Harlequins, 9 goals 4 tries; Rosslyn Park, 0.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Although Cambridge deserved their win in this match at Richmond, the Scotsmen gave them a hard and keen game, and were not by any means beaten as decisively as the scores suggest. The Cantabs, however, showed much better form than in their recent games. Their forwards did much excellent work, and Boyd and Ashcroft played so well behind them that the 'Varsity three-quarter line had plenty of chances, and in many of their passing runs were seen to considerable advantage. The Scottish forwards were on the whole good, but their backs were anything but well together, and though on the general run of the game they were pressing as often as their rivals, they were unable to finish off their attacking movements successfully. In the opening half the Scotsmen were several times nearly in, and the passing of their three-quarters let them down on each occasion, but Schofield opened the scoring for the 'Varsity with a well-earned try, and a few minutes later White got in again for them after following up a long kick, and on each occasion Reynolds kicked the goal. In the second half, as in the first, the Scotsmen could not profit by the chances that came to them, but though their tackling was on the whole excellent, Jones ran in with two further tries for the Cantabs, and Reynolds converted one of them. The Scotsmen's solitary success was gained near the end of the game when Lockhart scored wide out, but his kick at goal failed, and so Cambridge won by 18 points to three. Cambridge, 3 goals 1 try; Scottish, 1 try.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—The Taylors had a day out at Old Deer Park, Richmond, winning by 7 goals and 6 tries to nil. The Nomads put a fairly representative side into the field, but were outclassed. Only once in the second half did they look like scoring, when Stanford was brought down almost on the line by Raphael. O'Callaghan was the most brilliant of the Taylors' three-quarters. He showed fine speed and judgment, and registered no fewer than seven tries. R. A. Leppingwell, another three-quarter crossed over three times, the halves (Ryan and Barrett) each crossed once, and the other try was obtained by Strong. Raphael's first three attempts to convert failed, but his fourth was successful. Leppingwell also converted once in four attempts. H. J. Thompson's goal-kicking was a feature of the game. He was given five opportunities to convert and did not make a single mistake. O.M.T., 7 goals 6 tries; Nomads, 0.

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. DERBY AND COUNTY.—The programme of the Dark Blues has been made more interesting this term by the inclusion of two new matches, the second of which was decided on Saturday, when they were at home to Derby and County A. C. The latter were fortunate in getting such delightful conditions for their visit, and which in some measure made amends for their defeat by the narrow majority of one point. The course was in better condition than on any previous occasion this term, and owing to one or two detours was lengthened to the extent of nearly half a mile. The result of the placing was a victory for the Oxonians by one point, 27—28.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. BRIGHTON AND COUNTY H.—The Light Blue cross country team have only had three matches this term, and will not encounter another side until they are opposed to Oxford on 4th December. They had not done over well, and were considered to have a very slender chance against Brighton and County on Saturday. They, however, were seen to great advantage, proving successful by 5 points. The day was favourable and the going fairly good, although inclined to be a trifle sticky. Pullinger soon led, and retaining it, won easily by over 100 yards.

ROWING.

THE COLQUHOUN SCULLS.—Presented to the Lady Margaret Boat Club by Mr. J. Colquhoun in 1835, the silver challenge sculls have been open to competition by the whole University since 1851, and have come to be regarded as emblematic of the amateur championship of the Cam. There were fifteen entrants this year and some very good contests were witnessed in the preliminary heats and again in the final last Saturday a great struggle was seen between Pinks and Thompson. The conditions were favourable, and a very large company of students assembled on the towing path. Thomson started favourite, but there was nothing much to choose from the times set up in the previous rounds. Result:—

E. D. P. Pinks (Clare) 1
G. L. Thomson (Trinity Hall) 2

It was a very exciting race. Thomson held a slight lead early on, but in Long Reach Pinks drew away, and although Thomson made a determined effort to get on terms, he was eventually beaten by about three yards in 8mins. 10secs. Mr. Bushe Fox acted as judge.

THE UNIVERSITIES TRIALS.

OXFORD.—The Trial Eights concluded their practice on the home water yesterday afternoon, when the work was of a comparatively light character, as the boats had to be packed in readiness to be despatched to Moulsford in the morning. Pleasant conditions prevailed, but both crews were content with an outing each. The work was practically identical, they paddled to Iffley, turned and came up to Rough's and making a formal start at the bridges they rowed through to Randall's Bridge at a stroke ranging between 36 and 32, number 1, perhaps, showing rather better form. The president coached, and he was accompanied by Major Bourne. There was no alteration in either crew. They will take a spin over the Moulsford course this afternoon, the first crew going out at 2.30. Names and weights:—

WINCHESTER

.351 Caliber, High-Power Self-Loading Rifle

THERE is nothing to take your mind off the game if you shoot a Winchester Self-Loading Rifle. The recoil does the reloading for you, which places the complete control of the gun under the trigger finger. You can shoot six shots as fast as you can pull the trigger and without taking your eye off the sights. As this rifle is made with a detachable magazine, you can replace an exhausted one with a loaded one in a jiffy and continue shooting. No recoil-operated rifle but the Winchester offers this advantage. The .351 Caliber, High-Power Cartridge has great killing power, making it heavy enough for the largest game.

CYCLING.

The Stanley Show.—The annual show of cycles, motor cycles, accessories, etc., promoted by the Stanley Cycling Club has been on this week at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. Nowadays one does not expect anything in the nature of revolutionary changes in cycle construction, but, year after year, the manufacturers succeed in introducing improvements in details. Most of these are trifling in themselves, but, in combination, they tend to make cycling more comfortable, and, consequently, to increase the popularity of the pastime. This year's show is chiefly remarkable for the excellent display of motor-bicycles, fine example were shown by several leading firms. The Triumph Company, for instance, have achieved remarkable success in this particular branch of manufacture, and their exhibit was one of the most interesting in the show. Humber also showed a range of their 3½ h.p. models on the same lines as last year's, but with some minor improvements. Other firms making a feature of mechanically-driven cycles were Components (Limited), who make the Oriel, Bradbury and Company, Bat Motor Company, James Company, Brown Brothers, Singer and Company, Bayliss Thomas Company, Alldays and Onions, and the Quadrant Motor Company. Considerable interest was shown in the Wall Motor-assisted bicycle. This contrivance is designed to enable the cyclist to call on mechanical aid whenever he thinks it desirable to do so. Without some practical test one hesitates to express an opinion about it, but the fact that it adds appreciably to the cost of cycling may be noted.

In regard to ordinary safety bicycles, there is scarcely a firm of repute in the trade that were not found in the show. Many of the those mentioned as showing motor-cycles also exhibited safeties, such as Triumph, Humber, James, Singer, Components, Alldays and Onions; while, in addition, were found such well-known makes as the Raleigh, Elswick, Lea and Francis, Centaur, Rover, Sunbeam, New Hudson, Premier, Referee Star, Enfield, and many others. In no case startling innovations were introduced. All Humber models are now treated with a special anti-rust process. In Raleighs the method of adjusting the rear brake has been altered, while the oil bath and other gear cases have been made much lighter and neater. Several firms are making a speciality of "all-weather" cycles, intended primarily to enable the rider to enjoy winter cycling.

The show was particularly strong in accessories components, etc. Variable gears were again a feature, and it is safe to say that, as usual, considerable interest was taken in the Sturmey-Archer stand. Rear lights will be in evidence, and the ingenious "Reflex," made and shown by Components (Limited), made many new friends. It is neat and effective, and is moreover, a beautiful piece of workmanship. Millers, Parkers, and Lucas had their usual display of handsome lamps, while the B.S.A. Company as always, had one of the most attractive exhibits in the hall.

The tyre section was an important feature, in which the famous Michelin Company were conspicuous. The Continental Company, Palmers, and other well-known makers were showing; and if the Dunlop Company were not officially exhibiting, their tyres were found on many of the cycle stands in the show. In this department the Rich inner tube, and Marshall's duplex inner tubes were not overlooked.

Motor-cars and aeroplanes were also found in the hall. The band of the Grenadier Guards played each day, and, as a further attraction, one of the minor-halls was utilised as a skating rink.

GOLF.

Oxford University vs. A. N. Lee's Team.—Although the Dark Blues were without two of their best players—C. V. L. Hooman and C. H. Gidney—for their annual match against A. N. Lee's team on the Nottingham Club's course at Hollinwell, on the 20th instant, the University gained the victory by 6 games to 4. The Oxford team was led by A. J. Evans, who defeated Captain Taylor by 3 and 1. The Dark Blue captain, the Hon'ble Denys Finch Hatton, lost rather heavily to R. E. Myddelton by 6 and 4, and J. F. Macdonell, a Freshman, lost to H. B. McCarthy by 5 and 4. The other successful players on the losing side were Lord St. Vincent, who beat the Hon'ble R. Legh by 2 holes, and the organiser of the scratch team, A. N. Lee, who easily defeated A. H. Cook by 7 and 6.

In the State of Maine, U.S.A., no intoxicating liquor is allowed to be sold unless a man or woman has been bitten by a snake, or unless severe illness requires the administration of drink as medicine. In one of the small towns a seedy-looking man went into a liquor store and asked for some whisky. "I can't give you any," said the bar keeper, "unless you are very ill or have been bitten by a snake." Where, in Heaven's name, is there a snake? shouted the infuriated man. "Why," said the bar keeper, "there's one down 64th Street, on left-hand side, 642 is, I think, the number." Out rushed the customer, only to return in about fifteen minutes in a most despairing and disconsolate manner. "It's no use, boss, said he, plaintively, "the snake is engaged twelve deep; no chance before to-morrow morning. I guess I'll have to drink water."

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

Wednesday, 8th December.—Quite a busy morning from Saidapet Level Crossing, and although hounds did not kill we had a lot of bustling about and a couple of quite good gallops.

Mr. Horne did not cross the Adyar River to the Guava Jellies as usual, but turning to the right at the Dhobies' ford threw hounds into the Korakapillays on the northern bank. Here they found a jack almost at once which ran a ring back across Lavender Lane right up to the confines of Saidapet Village and then breaking sharp back went away up the northern bank of the river giving us a good 20 minutes' gallops up to the elbow of the river where it takes a bank towards Nantambaukum. Here hounds who had rather distanced, horses were found to be at fault. They had just made their forward fling when the Master got to them and though a back cast hit off the line again it was by that time too stale to do anything more with. The guava gardens close by, however, almost immediately provided us with another jack who after being rooted round to a lot of music took us away over the open in the Nantambaukum direction across the brook and over the Nantambaukum-Poonamallee Road into the scrubby covers bordering the Adyar over against Scavenger. An impossible place to bring a jack to hand in, here began the usual game of hide and seek, hounds were close on him at times but he always managed to slip them and after half an hour's tow-rowing up and down the strong thorny string of coure he had to be given up.

Amongst those out were Mrs. Horne, Mrs. Porteous Miss Romilly, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller. Captains Heseltine, Morton Jackson and Ross, Messrs. Marshall Vernon, Work, Smith Jardine, Littlehailes, the Minor Zemindars of Sivagiri Jamda and Parlakimidi and several others.

Cooch Behar vs. Gordon Highlanders.—These teams met at Woodlands on the 8th and 9th instant, the match ending in a draw. The Highlanders batted first and made 127, Colonel Staunton and Fowke being the chief scorers. The home team compiled 367 for the loss of 6 wickets and declared their innings closed. To this total Robson subscribed 121, Prince Hitendra 70 and Lewis 49, while Prince Victor and S. Roy also made useful scores. With two hours and a half to bat and 240 runs behind the Gordons went in again, Fowke and Dick-Cunningham opening the innings. Play was exciting throughout, for it looked as if Cooch Behar would score an innings victory, but the spectators reckoned without Fowke, who was in his best form and carried out his bat for a well played 141. Time was called with the Gordons score 241 and one wicket still to fall. Score:—

Ballygunge vs. The Town Club.—Played at Ballygunge on Saturday last, this match ended in an even draw, the visitors, when stumps were pulled up, being 18 behind with 2 wickets to all. As seems inevitable with a Saturday afternoon match, a rather late start was made, it being twenty minutes to three before North and Best opened the Ballygunge innings to the bowling of Mukerji and Banerji. North had only made 4 when he was taken in the slips, but with Coulthard and Best in, a bit of a stand was made, the latter letting out at everything: he was rather lucky but his 26 proved to be the highest score on the side.

With the total at 105, and with just over an hour left for play, White applied the closure, and for a time all went well for the home side; just at the critical time, however, Allison, by some brilliant hitting, put quite a different complexion on the game, and a win for the visitors seemed not only possible but probable. In one over, 22 runs were made (18 by Allison and 4 byes) and off the first ball of the next another 4, but then Allison's lively innings came to a close; Banerji was caught immediately afterwards, and with his departure the game was abandoned, time being up. The home team offered to finish the match, but the visiting skipper declined with many protestations of thanks; he was probably right, as the light was certainly very indifferent towards the end.

Frost kept wicket splendidly, both his two catches, and the stumping of Bose, being extremely smart pieces of work. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. UNITED SERVICES.—For this match at Ballygunge on Sunday, the Services had got together a strong team, and it was unfortunate that the home club was not fully represented, both the Shallows and Manders being absentees. As the result of the match Ballygunge suffered their first defeat of the season, and a severe one it was, the Services winning by not less than 151 runs and having one wicket still in hand at the close of play; the win was almost entirely the work of one man, G. H. S. Fowke, who not only took 6 wickets at a cost of 39 runs, but followed this up by playing a grand innings of 148 not out, made without the semblance of a chance until he was near his century and the match had been lost and won.

Winning the toss, Ballygunge started most disastrously, losing White and Keighley with the total at 11: with the exception of Frost, who was in over an hour for 20, Horncastle, Skinner, and Low, no one got into double figures, and the innings closed for the wretched total of 109.

The Services made none too good a beginning, but when Lynch and Fowke got together, they soon put the issue beyond all doubt, the score, when stumps were drawn, being 260 for 9 wickets, Fowke's share of this being no less than 148. Lynch and Taylor also weighed in with useful contributions of 25 and 28 respectively. Scores:—

COOCH BEHAR vs. COMBINED MILITARY TEAM.—This match at Woodlands on the 13th and 14th instant resulted in a draw. The Military took first knock and put up 164, Twiss (47), Bocquet 36 and McCormick 30 being the chief contributors. The home team replied with 191, Prince Victor's century being the only notable batting performance of the innings. On the second day the Military batted well and were not disposed of till they had run up 241. Bocquet 59, Major Champain 45, and Captain Tandy 39 were in good form and the others batted consistently. Cooch Behar were left with 215 to make and an hour and a half to do it in. When time was called they had registered 127 for 6 wickets and the match was drawn as stated. Among the bowlers Warden met with most success for Cooch Behar, taking six wickets for 57 runs in the first innings and 8 for 71 in the second. For the Military Fowke did best in the first innings with an analysis of 4 for 56 and Captain Keighley had the best average in the second—4 for 44. Appended are scores:—

CRICKET AT BARRACKPORE.

BALLYGUNGE "A" vs. BARRACKPORE.—With the "First XI." playing the United Services at Ballygunge, and a number of other regular members unable get away, Ballygunge had out only a very scratch team for this game at Barrackpore on Sunday last, but for all that they managed to wins low scoring match by 35 runs, a distinctly unexpected result.

Ballygunge had first knock, but started badly, Coulthard being bowled by the first ball sent down, and 6 wickets falling for 45 runs; then, however, Badham and Turle put a much better complexion on the game, the latter hitting out with great freedom, and taking the total to 80 without further loss. At this point, Badham was caught for an invaluable 19, but on Hemingway joining Turle, another short stand was made and a further 22 added to the score; the innings closed soon after for 113, Turle's share being 35, a most useful innings.

Barrackpore, in the quarter of an hour remaining before tiffin, put up 26 without loss, but with the substitution, after lunch, of Woodhams for Barrett, a change came over the game, and although 40 was on the board with only 2 wickets down, the whole team was out for 78, the result of some really good bowling by Badham, (6 for 43) and Woodhams (3 for 15). Captain McCormick with 10, and Greenwood, with 21, were the only double figures recorded.

An hour and a half still remaining for play, Ballygunge went in a second time, the score when stumps were drawn being 88 for 6 wickets; of this, Phelan's share was not out 37, a very good innings, and Barrett's, 21, also a lively knock.

PATIALA vs. MEERUT.—The Meerut Station played a friendly game on the 3rd and 4th December. Winning the toss they went in and made 110 runs. Boyd and Denning played good cricket but the wicket was too fast for most of the team. Jai Singh and Tarachand shared the bowling honours, taking 5 for 22 and 4 for 5 respectively.

For Patiala Tarrant scored another century. The Maharaja was playing excellently until he pulled a wide ball into his wicket. The tail wagged to a great extent, carrying the total to 257. Sadan Singh compiled 50 brilliantly. Gokal Chand and Jai Singh contributed 20 each. In the second innings Sergeant Roll was the only player to master the bowling, scoring 41 out of 79. The rest fell to Tara Chand and Jati Ram, who bowled very well. Score:—

CRICKET AT SECUNDERABAD.

ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. 13TH HUSSARS.—These teams met in the final game of the Minister's Cup tournament at Trimulgherry last week, the Fusiliers winning by 200 runs. Both teams were all out for small totals in the first innings, but the Fusiliers compiled 284 in their second venture and the Hussars could only respond with 102. Pte Sabine of the Fusiliers reached this total himself, playing attractive cricket and scoring no less than 14 boundaries and 2 sixes run out. Score:—

THE SUPPLY OF MENAGERIE ANIMALS.

THE issue of an English edition, in a somewhat abridged form, of Carl Hagenbeck's "Beasts and Men," will enable the British public as a whole to obtain a much better idea of the enormous extent of the trade in living wild animals, and the methods by which it is conducted, than was possible when only the original German edition was in the market. For Hagenbeck is the only man in the world who could communicate the vast store of information contained in this most interesting volume.

The Egyptian Sudan is one of the most prolific sources of big animals in the world, and it is from this area that a very considerable proportion of Mr. Hagenbeck's experiences are derived. Mr. Hagenbeck appears to have had a wonderfully good time with his exports of animals from the Sudan from about 1866 to 1876, the largest consignment of African animals he ever handled being brought to Trieste, where they attracted great attention from the populace in 1870. Hagenbeck, who went to Suez to take over this consignment, states that he was quite unprepared for the sight that met his eyes on entering the courtyard of the Suez Hotel.

"Elephants, giraffes, antelopes and buffaloes were tethered to the palms, sixteen great ostriches were strolling about loose, and in addition to these were no fewer than sixty large cages containing a rhinoceros, lions, panthers, chitas, hyenas, jackals, civets, caracals, monkeys, and many kinds of birds."

It will be a surprise to many to learn that in the year 1876 Hagenbeck received no less than thirty-five Sudani giraffes, while another firm exported six-and-twenty in the same year. Naturally this large trade, which had been going on for a decade, resulted in a "slump" in giraffes, and in 1877 Hagenbeck sold his last three specimens to an Englishman for the absurd price of £150. Ten years later he would have been glad to buy them back for £500 or £600 apiece as during the Mahdi war the export of animals from the Sudan completely ceased.

Even a man with the enormous experience of Mr. Hagenbeck has on several occasions found himself altogether wrong in regard to the prices for which he has bought or sold animals. On one occasion, for instance, he paid £800 for a Sumatran rhinoceros in India, for which he received only £1,000 on arrival in Europe—and this not in hard cash—so that there was very little to be made out of the transaction, to say nothing of the risk incurred. On another occasion he sold three young African elephants to an acute American dealer for £1,000, who sold them on the other side of the Atlantic for £4,800!

Wherever the natives are in the habit of hunting the wild animals of the country, Mr. Hagenbeck has always made a point of enlisting their services. In the Sudan the Hamran Arabs and certain other tribes have long been in the habit of giving chase, at the proper time of year, to the herds of large ruminants, which are pursued till the calves are brought to a standstill.

"Among giraffes and antelopes this procedure is attended with but little danger, and even among buffaloes, which have no qualms about deserting their young, the work is comparatively safe. But in the case of rhinoceros and elephants, for which the demand is much greater, the capture is not so simple. These great creatures turn vigorously to defend their young, and the latter cannot as a rule be secured without killing the old ones. The capture of young giraffes by the expedient of chasing the herds until the young ones can no longer keep up was first practised in Kordofan during the thirties of the last century. I need hardly mention that the utmost care has to be taken of the captured animals. A herd of goats accompanies the hunting-party in order to afford a constant supply of fresh milk; but even with this precaution a large number of the captives die soon after they have been made prisoners, and scarcely half of them arrive safely in Europe."

Mr. Hagenbeck's party taught the nomad tribes of the Gobi desert to hunt wild horses in this manner, with the result that the Mongols took very kindly to the new sport and captured a much greater number of foals than the leader of the expedition had been instructed to bring home. This involved a thousand-mile journey to the nearest telegraph station in order to wire home for instructions. In the case of these wild ponies little difficulty was experienced in rearing the colts, which were put to tame mares.

It is interesting to note that when young animals are ridden to a standstill they require great care and attention in order to prevent them from taking cold and suffering from the after effects of complete physical exhaustion. They have to be carefully swathed in blankets, while in South Africa the Boers are in the habit of drugging them, it is believed with morphia, a practice which has most excellent results.

The Harates, or water-hunters, of the Sudan are such excellent swimmers that they do not hesitate to attack the crocodile and the hippopotamus in their native element, wounding and holding them in the first place by means of harpoons and finishing them off with lances. When the animals are required to be taken alive, the young alone are selected for attack, and the harpoon so blunted that it will make only a slight wound which will readily heal. Formerly about three-quarters of the live hippopotamuses sent to Europe were captured in this manner.

Baboons, like some of the carnivora, are taken when fully adult. In the Sudan the plan adopted is to block up all the drinking-pools except one with bushes and to put food by the one left open. After this has been practised for a few days, a large cage of wickerwork, constructed somewhat in the form of a native hut, is placed in the neighbourhood of the pool, with the door propped open by means of a pole. When the baboons have become thoroughly accustomed to this trap, which they have freely entered in order to devour the food placed for the purpose of attracting them within, a long cord is attached to the pole by night and extended along the sand, in which it is loosely buried, to a point some distance off.

"A blazing noonday sun drives the thirsty baboons chattering down to their drinking-hole. Some of the biggest males, who have already secured a monopoly of the doura (grain), enter the trap and commence their feast. The hunter awaits his opportunity; it soon comes, a tug on the cord, the trap closes with a bang, and three great baboons are fairly caught.

"Then follows a scene, both comical and painful, which baffles description. For a moment the astounded prisoners sit benumbed with terror and unable to move; then they anxiously begin to seek an exit. The herd outside no less surprised, flees at the first alarm, but its members soon return and congregate round the trap, urging the captives, with ear-splitting cries and grunts, to find their way out. . . . .

"The hunters are provided with long stakes, forked at the end, which they push through the branches forming the cage wall. With the forked ends they catch the baboon's neck and pin him to the ground. When all the baboons have been thus secured, the upper part of the cage is removed and the creatures are firmly bound. First their jaws are muzzled with strong cord made of palm-strips; then hands and feet are tied; and lastly the animal's whole body is wrapped up in cloth, so that the animal has the appearance of a great smoked sausage."

The package is then slung to a pole and carried by a couple of natives to camp, where after a few days' quiet, the baboons become more or less amenable.

Sometimes these baboon-hunts are not unattended with danger, and on one occasion a party of some 3,000 of the Arabian species came to the rescue of captives and beat off Hagenbeck's party.

Many other interesting accounts of the way in which animals are caught will be found in Mr. Hagenbeck's volume.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A Merry Xmas to all our readers.

The Fourth Extra Meeting was a very great success, large fields and fairly good finishes. The Pony Hurdle Race for which seven started opened the card. From what was seen of these ponies before Tete-a-Tete and Moira were most fancied and it was a cake walk for the latter from start to finish: the week previous she could not stay one and three-quarters miles and was never in the hunt and she must have come on at least 21lb.

The Canning Plate, Division I., was considered to be a good thing for Chobham, who started at 6 to 4, with Forfeit and Paul Pry next in demand. The latter went to the front as soon as the gate went up and led throughout: Forfeit and Chobham challenged in the straight but could make no impression on the leader. Forfeit beat the favourite by a short head for second place.

The Canning Plate, Division II., was the great upset of the day, Prince Moorefield delayed the start by not facing the barrier. Speedometer was the first away followed by Elpis, Cockatoo, Squire Alfred and Light Metal. Elpis took the lead at the three furlong and ran home an easy winner by two lengths. We were very pleased to see our local sportsman, Mr. Dass, have another win after such a spell of bad luck; this mare ought to win another race for him before the season is out.

A field of sixteen starters went for the Charnock Plate. It was rumoured in the paddock that Lorraine could not be beaten, but the public went baldheaded to get on Danseuse at 2 to 1: the former went out to the front from the jump, and was never headed. Mandeville and Danseuse had a great fight for second place the former getting the verdict.

Tangaroa was made an even money favourite for the Fort Plate, Huka was backed on hearsay; he is reported to have done a gallop of 1min. 1sec. over the five furlongs. Tangaroa won easily. Lord Carlyon ran a good race and we shall expect him to win a race shortly, as he was not quite as ready as he might have been.

The Wellesley Plate was considered good goods for Retort and so it turned out. Bantock, Retort and Emma Eames caused some delay, finally they were got off to a fairly good start. Five Crown went to the front with Retort, Master Delavel, Crossbred, and Gallileo handy. They kept this order until the home turn where Retort took the lead and running on won easily from Master Delavel.

The last race, The Cornwallis Plate, was the most exciting race of the day, they all got away to a very good start, Flaneur and Mafoota were the first to show up with Vancouver and Clear Artist next. They kept in this order until the half mile were Clear Artist and Vancouver went to the front. They raced the rest of the journey upsides and at the finish the judge was unable to separate them. Too Late put in a very fast run up the straight and finished one and a half lengths behind the dead-heaters.

A little schooling was done over the steeplechase course at Tollygunge on Sunday. The following were out;—Rigmaiden (Butlin) went two and a half miles and Peter (Alford) joined in at the plain fence beyond the stands: he made a mistake at the first but jumped well later: the former did not jump too well and tired to nothing at the finish. Farthing Bun (Butler) Fingal (Alford) did a fast school over the pony course, both fenced well. Golden Morn (McNeilage), Look Out (Alford) went a nice working school over the horse fences. Golden Morn made a mess of the open ditch by hitting the guard rail and shooting her rider over her head, she was remounted and finished the round. Look Out jumped well, but could not pace it with Golden Morn. Three hunters from Scott's stable then went two and a half miles over the horse fences, none of them shaped too well.

The hurdles were up for schooling on Tuesday afternoon when the following were out. Idle (Mr. Miles), and Squire Alfred (Mr. Charrington) went a nice working school over 1½ miles, both jumping excellently: Mayfowl (C. Hoyt), Mount Dane (R. Hoyt), Wolferton (McGowan) did a fast school over four flights: they all fenced well; Kipling (Captain Barrett) went 1¾ miles at about an eight anna gallop, he went a lot better than his previous school of a week ago. Bonita (Captain Barrett), 1½ miles at about half pace, performed well. Galloping Girl (R. Hoyt), Mercedes (Thomas) did a good working school, both jumped well; Galloping Girl was pulled up after jumping the seventh hurdle. Pincher (Northmore), Umutbee (Trenoweth) 1½ miles at a good solid pace. High Court (Mr. Bletsoe) went a fair working gallop over seven flights; he jumped too big but otherwise went well.

Wire Hawk has been scratched for the Viceroy's Cup; we hear he has gone wrong, but have not had it confirmed yet; this is bad luck for Mr. Gutschke as the horse was sure to have won a race this season. Wise Bird has been scratched from the Trials, and will probably be taken out of all engagements later: had she been alright she must have run well in the Trials. Galileo struck for Viceroy's Cup, Bantock and Black Wolf all engagements, Neith all engagements. So with this lot out of the way the race may be won by anything that is sound on the day. The following are the probable starters with their jockeys for the Trials:—

H. H. Mah. Jam Sahib's	Ebullition	Firth
Mr. G. K.'s	Huka	Evans
Mr. M. Goculdas'	Soultline	A. Hoyt.
Mr. J. K.'s	Lovania	A. Ferguson
Mr. A. A. Apcar's	Five Crown	Hill.
Mr. A. A. Apcar's	Auber	C. Hoyt.
Lala Radha Mohan's	Cross-bred	Charters.
Mr. Galstaun's	Tangaroa	Robinson.
Mr. E. J. Marshall's	Saloon	Melsom.
Mr. A. A. Apcar's	Sequent	Kuhn.
Mr. E. J. Marshall's	Longchamps	Mumford.

The best horse at the weights in this race is most undoubtedly Soultline, with Tangaroa next and Huka or Pelargonium for the remaining places. We understand that Mr. G. K. will only start one of his for this race, and we suppose Pelargonium will be reserved for the Cup. Saloon has lost all his penalties and gets in with 6 stone odd. He may upset calculations, but we should be surprised to see him do it. Longchamps is also from Scott's stable and Heckford rides him. It is hard to say where he will finish, he is a lot better horse than most people think, but hardly the class of the two favourites. Huka has been backed by his stable to win a lot of money this week. To-day's prices are.

Our final selection for the trials is.—Soultline to win, Tangaroa and Huka places, with Crossbred and possibly Lovania, if she will gallop, to follow them home.

For the Viceroy's Cup Retort is still favourite with Fizz and Master Delaval next in demand and Pelargonium and Wandin still being nibbled at to a small extent. This year's Cup is one of the most open races we have seen for many seasons, but the class is not quite so good as previous years, although it has a more level lot of horses. Misty Morn is said to be a far better horse this year than he has been since he left Australia, and is being backed on some marvellous gallops he has done. He always does good trials but never seems to run up to them. When all is said we shall expect to see

Our final selection for the race is—Retort to win, Fizz and Crossbred places, but if Wandin is sound on the day he is worth backing against this lot and Pelargonium should run well up.

Melsom has arrived from up-country, where he has been riding lately with a great deal of success. He will ride second string to Heckford for Scott's stable this season and will be up on all their light-weights. Southall is still in Calcutta, but very weak after his illness and will not ride just at present ; he will probably go to Bombay after the big meeting here.

"Captain" J. C. Smith has had a stroke of bad luck with his jumper Mordialloc. He was on his way home after work last Friday when a motor car ran into him and injured him. The owner was offered £500 for this horse before he left Melbourne and refused it. Mordialloc will not race again this season, and it will be a long job getting him right again.

The Loaf will probably be put by, too, as his stable are very disappointed with him. They want to give him a spell and get him ready for Bombay.

There will be an auction sale at Messrs. Cook and Co. in Dharamtala on the 4th January when one should be able to pick up some useful horses cheap. Mr. Holmes, one hears, will sell off his string during the season as he is going home shortly. He has a very useful mare, Highland Maid, for sale ; she is well worth having a look at.

Kipling is well in the Burdwan Cup and should run well as he has lost nearly all his penalties. A good treble for Friday would be Kipling, Burdwan Cup ; Soultline, Trials ; Refresher, International Pony Plate.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—Another crushing day for the Books on Saturday, when no rank outsider came to their assistance and five out of six absolute favourites romped home. It is the last day's racing we are to have till New Year, and many of the jockeys and bookmakers are losing as little time as possible in scurrying off to Calcutta to fill in the gap. Brown and Kaeson swept the board with four and two winners, respectively, and there is no getting away from the fact that they stand out amongst a bunch, the majority of whom are jocularly termed Xmas jockeys—it being stated that they win about as often as that festive event comes round.

A poor sort of a race was the first, a third-rate field of seven squibs, the best of the bunch on any known form being Orby. He was a decided favourite, fives bar one on offer. Tamim and Annis led him to the turn, where he drew up to the former. Hammond failed to catch the pair in the straight and Orby brought home the goods.

Only three went out for the Little Arab Trial Plate, and for a time there was a doubt between Plassy and Scimitar, but eventually the latter shortened to twos on. Though even better treated than when he won in Poona, Plassy was at a disadvantage now in jockeyship and it had to be remembered that then his rival had already won a race on the same day. Anyhow, Scimitar was given out as good and he proved it. Plassy made the running till the bend where he went wide and Brown ripping in on the rails had quite a bit in hand at the finish. Sir Jamal never had a hope.

The Maiden Plate had a field of fifteen and several were thought to have a chance, Babil, Shawcutt, King Emperor—an unknown quantity whose track form is hot—Desert King and Thuvil. Babil showed a bit of form behind Parliament in Poona, and that he has come on was pretty evident by the confidence with which he was backed and the style in which he won. Desert King, who must be very unreliable, led him for a time, but from the half mile Babil led Shawcutt and from then onwards there was nothing to upset them and Desert King stayed out an unexpected run by Bend Or.

On her previous running it was natural that T.M.S. should open up at threes on and go a point shorter before the start of the Winter Plate in a field of four, good place money coming for Milner II. They were away well together, Chevalier, Milner, Lady Honour, T.M.S. the order till at the half mile the favourite had come up on the rails into the lead and Chevalier went back last. It was no race, T. M. S. holding Milner very safe.

With fourteen runners, the Arab Trial Plate was a great race, Devon on his last run being always at a short price from Gwalior, Urgent, Jadir and Lapwing. Jadir was first off the mark closely attended by Dhafer, Urgent, Devon and Lapwing in order, and after a couple of furlongs Urgent led till at the three Dhafer was clear in front of Gwalior and Colaba. It looked all over for Dhafer, as Gwalior was done and he had Colaba in hand, when Devon was seen coming on the extreme outside He made up ground very fast and in a great finish just pipped Dhafer.

Finally the Christmas Plate in which three out of the nine seemed to hold the race between them, Shanwar, Vedas and Hishan, fancied in that order with about a point in the odds between each. A break by Sinclair soon gave way to Vedas assuming his usual lead closely attended by Shanwar, Hishan and Minerva. At the turn it was apparent that Vedas was beaten and Shanwar looked good when Hishan was seen coming. Very gradually he began to draw on the grey, and in a desperate finish squeezed home. The three backed ones thus filled the places and, though the winner was only third favourite, a layer would have to be lucky to win on any single race during the day.

There was a very good turn out for the first of the Calcutta paperchases on Friday last and large fields went for each chase. The horse chase was won by Mr. Evers on Highland Fling, but he was disqualified for jumping the wing of a fence. The course was well laid, but was rather heavy going in places, and considering it was the first time out for unschooled horses there were very few falls. Messrs. Deakin and Allen carried the paper as usual : the finishing order was :—

(1) Mr. Morris on Blue Bell
(2) Captain Gibbs on Trilby
(3) Lord Francis Scott on Funny
(4) Mr. Steele Perkins on Dalgai
(5) Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
(6) Mrs. Walker on John followed by Captain Gourlie on Merman, Mr. Scaramanga on Mauser, Mr. Muir on Moleen, at an interval came Messrs. Murray, Medlicott, Ballantyne, Hamilton, Dudley, Myers, Corbett, Pearse, Bletsoe and Pearson.

The pony chase also found a number of starters, it was won by :—

(1) Lord Francis Scott on Just in Time
(2) Captain Gibbs on Pathfinder
(3) Mr. Evers on Lockaby
(4) Mr. Glen on Marconi
(5) Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un
(6) Mr. Muir on Lily II.

followed by Mr. Hutchins on Guardian, Messrs. Marshall on Lochmabin, Teggart on Thiela, Pauntley on Loch Lilly, Radmore on Bess, Ballantyne on Meprise, Rasch on Badcock.

Captain O. E. Vesey, A.-D.-C. to H. E. the Viceroy came by a heavy fall while playing polo at Madras last week. He was picked up unconscious and conveyed to the General Hospital where we are glad to learn he has made a speedy recovery.

the passages quoted by the prosecution was almost a verbatim extract from the Proverbs. The police might as well object to the works of Fielding, Richardson, Smollett, and Sterne. It was unfair for the police to ask the magistrate to lay down a standard of decency which had never been applied in a court of law to this kind of literature.

The magistrate said he had read the book through, and although there were some portions of it to which no exception could be taken there could be no doubt that some of the passages must have a detrimental effect on the minds of young persons who read them. He imposed a fine of £10 with £5 5s. costs.

Mr. Smith gave notice of appeal.

One hears and reads about many queer matches but surely none more extraordinary than the following described thus in the Sporting Magazine for August, in 1809:—"On Monday, the 24th instant, a bet of 150 guineas was run for between two galloways, which were to be set out from Wood's Gate, about four miles beyond Tunbridge, and run to Kent street end, in the Borough and back again, which is near fourscore miles, without baiting; and that which arrived first, dead or alive, was to be the winning horse. One of the horses, when he had about fifteen miles to run, dropped down dead; the other could only make a walk. The abetters of the dead horse procured a fish cart, from some distance, mounted the dead horse upon the cart, set the rider upon his back, and with four horses galloping away at the rate of ten miles an hour, passed the living horse, arrived first, and were judged the winners—the first instance of a dead horse winning a match from a living one. Those who betted in favour of the living horse, when they discovered the intent of their opponents, endeavoured to avail themselves of the same artifice, but no other fish cart was to be got, otherwise the wager would have been determined by a race between two fish carts."

Penetrating the wilds of British East Africa with a camera and a cinematograph Mr. Cherry Kearton, the skilled "nature photographer," has taken back to London some amazing pictures of strange beasts. These were shown at the Alhambra Theatre last month. There were moving pictures of giraffes and crocodiles and hippopotami—all in their natural surroundings. There were wild birds at their nests and queer small creatures of the ground.

But more fascinating even than seeing the forest thus pictured on a screen was Mr. Kearton's story of how he hunted wild beasts, from day to day, not eager to shoot them, but to record their images upon his plates and films.

Mr. Kearton had one great disappointment. The lion eluded him so far as the cinematograph was concerned. For a week on end, night and day, the photographer fixed his apparatus in a tree and waited for a lion. But he found the lions extraordinarily wary. The nearest he ever got to one with the cinematograph camera in daylight was a hundred and fifty yards. Then the lion, not the photographer, bolted. At this distance the lion appeared so small upon the photographic films that the picture was useless.

But Mr. Kearton had his revenge. He left a camera shielded in a leather case near the lion's drinking pool. Above it, in a tree, was a flashlight apparatus. From this a thread passed across the path the lion was known to tread. In the middle of the night down came the lion to drink. He broke the thread, ignited the magnesium, and took an instantaneous photograph of himself before the brilliant flash sent him crashing away in alarm through the forest.

For days Mr. Kearton lurked hidden in rushes by the banks of the Tana River, watching the clumsy gambolling of hippopotami and the sluggish movements of the crocodiles. A wonderful patience was his chief asset. A brief film, for instance, showing zebras, hartebeest, and wildebeeste galloping about on a great game reserve cost him nearly two months of patient waiting. A deep hole in the ground, dug in order to screen the photographer and his camera, was left for six weeks without anyone going near it, so that the animals passing it should become quite accustomed to its presence.

In continuing his "Studies in the Zoological Gardens" a Times correspondent has obtained a favourable impression of Eagles. Its sovereignty among the birds, he says, is more indisputable than that of the lion among beasts. Almost every nation has used it either as the Royal crest or as its military standard. No great man but has been an eagle to his eulogists. More than one sculptor of the head of a Roman Emperor, and more than one painter of imaginary portraits of Napoleon, have borrowed from the eagle the straight line of the eye brow, just cutting the full, round, unlidded eye, which gives the bird even in captivity its wild majesty of appearance. Every emotion, every attribute or tragic circumstance of life raised to its highest power is compared in verse or by the essayists to the royal bird; so fame, ambition, science, reason, danger, pride, hatred are "eagle-eyed" or "eagle talonel." No mountain is so high as those which are "eagle baffling." Even the skies are "eagle skies." Greatness itself becomes "eagle greatness," success is "eagle-gripped" and the true victory has eagle's wings. There can be no doubt, however, that the eagle always stands in awe of man and though it is possible that small children have been carried off by them it is probable that the only adult who was ever killed by an eagle was Æschylus, on whose bald head under the impression that it was a stone, an eagle, we are told dropped a tortoise; the bird was probably, however, a vulture which has been known to carry aloft the hind leg of a mule and drop it from a height of some 1,500 feet to a terrace of limestone rock in order that the bone might be splintered and so make the marrow obtainable. The line between eagles and vultures is indistinctly drawn, naturalists being still divided as to whether the lämmergier is more of the one or the other. In India, indeed, the lämmergier is commonly called the golden eagle. In the Alps eagles are often spoken of as lämmergier. It is difficult to say which is the most imperial-looking bird, the golden eagle, the Chilian sea-eagle or the martial hawk eagle. All are splendid and with their majestic carriage, their immense spread of wings and huge talons, it is hard to realize that no one of them weighs much above 10lb. A golden eagle with a span of wing of something over 6 feet weighs less than many a hare that it kills.

The mountaineering season of 1909 in the Alps appears to be chiefly memorable for the unfavourable weather. Neither fine nor bad weather had any endurance. Hence, for the beginner and the guide the summer provided a continuous succession of disappointments. Nevertheless two expeditions stand out to mark the year. On 12th August Herr Pfann, of Munich and Herr F. Gassner, guidless, ascended the Grandes Jorasses by the great south face of the mountain. The other great feat accomplished was the ascent by Mr. O. H. Jones of the Aiguille Blanche from the depths of the Fresnay glacier, and in spite of the bad weather there were many other feats of less note performed. The year's accidents make as usual a long and gloomy tale. In connection with the death of Herr R. Güdel who died from the effects of exposure on the Matterhorn consequent upon a fall which broke his ankle, a correspondent of the Times whilst not criticising the conduct of the other members if his party who left him, considers that there is much to be said on the general subject of such accidents. It is said that there is growing up in certain classes of mountaineers, especially those who frequent the great centres, an inclination to take risks which one cannot but attribute to a belief that some one else will somehow get them out of any consequential misfortunes. This is felt strongly by the guides, especially the less deserving, and it engenders a spirit, equally evil, and, when manifested openly, most repulsive and callous, which refuses help in times of stress and destroys that great spirit of comradeship which is the most pleasant feature of Alpine sport. An example of this spirit was shown a few years ago on the Italian side of the Matterhorn, when Heinrich Burgener alone redeemed the good name of the twin valleys of the Visp from the reproach of churlish refusal of help to the stranger. Guides, however, are peasants. It is for the traveller to inculcate and preserve, if necessary even to the pitch of personal sacrifice, those virtues which alone make this or any other games worth the playing.

Few people are probably aware how the crack marksmanship apparently possessed by performers with the rifle at circuses and other entertainments, is obtained. Their tricks are, however, very simple. A marksman of this kind not long ago, made nine bull's-eyes in four seconds from a distance of thirty feet, and caused the spectators the greatest wonder. But anyone who can use a repeating rifle with ordinary accuracy could do the same. The preparations for the feat are neither costly nor complicated. To begin with, one requires a black background and a supply of small balloons such as street vendors sell to children. These are coloured black and blown up to about five inches in diameter. They are then affixed to the black background and small white spots an inch in diameter are painted on them. From a short distance it is impossible to see the outlines of the balloons, and all that is apparent is the white bull's-eyes. One has therefore a neat little invisible target of something like eighteen square inches to fire at. A shot anywhere within this radius would puncture the balloon, and with its instantaneous collapse the white target would of necessity disappear. The extinguishing of lighted candles with a rifle is another illusion. The candles are placed in compartments or open boxes on a background. Behind the candles are loosely hung steel plates about six inches square which when struck anywhere by a bullet cause a concussion of air that immediately blows out the candle. The old familiar trick of shooting glass balls thrown in the air is generally believed to be done with a rifle. It is usually, but the rifle invariably carries no solid ball, but a special cartridge filled with a good charge of bird shot which scatter wonderfully when released from the gun. On the stage one frequently sees lumps of sugar shot from the head of an accomplice. Here it is again that the small balloons come into play, but in this instance they have a white square painted upon them to represent the sugar loaf.

The professional Billiard Championship of India will be played at Lucknow at the end of next month. The tournament will be under the control of the Billiard Association of India and a gold medal is to be awarded, the game being not less than 4,500 up. Mike Elias, the holder, and Ramphal Shaw have signified their intention of competing, and it is probable that Alec Taylor and Gunner Smith of Meerut will also compete.

John Roberts continues his victorious tour at Bombay. On the 14th instant he met and defeated Mr. Hallam conceding him 600 points in 1,000. The amateur did not make a brilliant show and only scored 168 outside his handicap. Roberts' best breaks were 168 and 197 in play. On Wednesday Roberts again met Mr. Hessling, his first opponent, and beat him once more, though Mr. Hessling played a very consistent game throughout. Mr. J. Avery was the next of Roberts' adversaries to whom he conceded the usual handicap. The amateur was not in his usual form and was eventually beaten by 216. Roberts' best breaks were 109 and 105. A large crowd assembled on Friday to watch the game between Alec Taylor, champion of the North of England, and Roberts. The veteran was giving Taylor 333 start in 1000 and eventually beat him, the final scores reading 1,000—717. Roberts was in splendid form and scored heavily from nursery cannons, his best breaks being 168, 150 and 134 while his average for the whole game worked out at 63 for each visit to the table. Taylor's best efforts were 67, 58, 50 and 40—the 58 including 22 nursery cannons. Saturday found Roberts opposed to Mr. Maughan, the match resulting in the defeat of the amateur—833 to 1,000. Roberts' best breaks were 139, 131 and 125. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Roberts was engaged in a match of 3,000 up with Mr. Dasteed, details of which are not yet to hand.

The well-known backer, Ted Richards, has bid 101,000 dollars and 66⅔ per cent. of the receipts from the cinematograph rights, for a fight between Johnson and Jeffries, to take place under his management. Johnson and Jeffries have accepted the offer, and it is understood that the fight will take place either at Utah, Nevada, or in California.

Mr. McIntosh has engaged three well-known boxers for a tour in Australia. These are Freddy Welsh, the light weight champion of England, Johnny Summers, his recent opponent in the fight for the title, and Al Leibman, a young American heavy weight from whom great things are expected.

There have been many ridiculous "freak" athletic performances during the past few years, but the latest to arrive in London certainly savours of originality. Two blacksmiths of Venice—Zanardi Attiluso and Vianello Eugene by name—invented a huge barrel in which it is possible for a person to sit inside and yet remain seated whilst the barrel is being revolved over ordinary country roads. They communicated their idea and invention to their employer who mentioned this to some friends of his. The result, it is said, was that a sum of £2,000 has been placed in the Bank of Venice on the condition that the men roll round the world, the time to be taken not to exceed twelve years. One-half of the inside of the barrel is fitted as a kitchen, whilst the other is "doubled" as a seating place, and the whole makes a bed-chamber for two. The method used is that one member of the pair rolls the barrel for about an hour whilst the other sits inside. The journey was started from Venice on 20th June and the "athletes" arrived at Dover on 23rd November. Thence the blacksmiths journeyed to London, speaking no English, poor French, but certainly excellent Italian. It was a condition of the contest that they had to leave Venice without a coin of any description and had to subsist on whatever they could procure from the proceeds of the sale of picture postcards and the exhibition of their unique barrel. Same old story.

In the course of an address to the members of the Society of Association Referees, at the George Hotel, London, on 26th November Mr. G. Wagstaffe Simmons, a member of the F. A. Council and of the International Selection Committee, remarked that there had been a marvellous development of Association football in recent years. In the course of three or four decades it had carved a way into the affections of the people until it numbered more adherents than any game this country had ever seen. The Football Association claimed to have between 12,000 and 13,000 clubs under its jurisdiction. They put their paying members at something like 80,000, and calculating the numerical strength of the F. A. players on the same basis, over a million players owned allegiance to the organisation. All told there were something like 500,000 players who turned out more or less regularly, and many thousands of games were played every week, watched in the aggregate by hundreds of thousands of spectators.

Another significant development was to be found on the Continent. It seemed only recently that the game was taken up on the other side of the Dover Straits, yet it was rapidly becoming a great national pastime in Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Hungary, and Belgium, and in a lesser degree in France. English clubs used to run over to the Continent and score as many goals as they pleased: but those days were past, and when this country met, for instance, Holland or Denmark, it was compelled to put its strongest side into the field. In proof of the tremendous advances made by football on the Continent, he mentioned the great crowd that assembled to watch the amateur international match at Amsterdam on Easter Monday between Holland and England, when £850 was taken at the gate; and the huge crowds at Buda-Pest, Basle, Prague, and other big centres, when representative English teams played there.

Eton has just made a record. A great thing happened on the 30th November when in the famous wall game the first goal was scored for twenty-five years and the third in a series of sixty-eight annual games! The game was between Collegers and Oppidans. R. L. Creasy scored a goal for the Collegers. This was the only goal scored since 1885, when the Collegers also scored it.

There was a scene of tremendous enthusiasm over the event, and the day will be a red letter one in the history of the game. The weather was more like May than November, and thousands of spectators assembled on "Sixpenny," conspicuous figures being Lord Kinnaird, Headmaster Canon Lyttleton and Mr. Paravicini.

It wanted two minutes to half-time when the goal was obtained. Finlay secured the ball, and throwing it out to Creasy, the latter threw the ball to his right, and landed it within the white lines on the elm tree, which is the goal.

At the end of the game there were scenes of great enthusiasm, G. C. T. Giles (captain) and Finlay of the Collegers, being carried shoulder high into the college amid great cheering.

A team of Ceylon cricketers will tour Southern India during the Christmas holidays. They left Colombo on Wednesday, and will open the tour at Bangalore with a match against a Mofussil team on Christmas Day. Two matches will be played in Madras: The first against the M.C.C. on the 28th and 29th instant and the other against the Madras Presidency on the 31st December and 1st January. The team will be composed as follows.—Messrs. W. E. M. Paterson (Captain), C. H. Kilmister, Dr. G. Thornton, Messrs. C. A. Wicks, T. Leese, E. O. Mackwood and L. C. Davies (representatives of the Colombo Cricket Club), while Up-country provides Messrs. M. H. Grant Peterkin, A. L. Gibson, J. D. Forbes, the Hon'ble L. Bingham, Messrs. R. F. Goodmon and W. T. Greswell. Ceylon will also send a soccer team to Madras early next year.

The fourth annual Show of the Calcutta Kennel Club is fixed for the 28th and 29th January and under the able direction of Messrs. Atkinson and Medley promises to be a huge success. The schedule which has just been published caters for no less than 150 classes embracing practically every known variety of canine. H.E. the Viceroy, H.H. the Lieutenant-Governor and H.H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar have extended their patronage to the Show, while the committee have been particularly fortunate in securing the services of four well-known judges. Two of these, Messrs. Longhurst and Horace Johnstone, have judged for the English Kennel Club, while Colonel O. Willan Dawson, Honorary Secretary of the I.K.A., and Colonel J. G. Rennie, R.A.M.C., have big reputations in India. The Show will be located in tents on the maidan, the same excellent benching arrangements as last year will obtain, several local firms will exhibit doggy Specialities, handsome prizes have been promised, including a special prize for the best exhibit in the Show presented by H.E. Lady Minto, and a Silver Cup for the best dog bred in India presented by Sir Edward Baker, record entries are expected and it only remains for the public to accord the fixture their warm support to make the Show a complete success.

With the Calcutta Kennel Club Show near at end intending exhibitors are of course anxious that their dogs should appear to the best of advantage in the Ring. A course of Benbow's mixture will be found most efficacious for dogs for exhibition. By its use perfect condition can be assured together with a sleekness of coat so essential for success on the Show bench. Over thirty winners of the Waterloo Cup and numerous exhibitors can testify to the excellence of the Mixture, which is not only a reliable tonic but has been acknowledged to be one of the best medicines for the cure of distemper, jaundice, prevention of worms, etc. It is stocked by all chemists.

On the subject of the care of the dog's coat a writer contributes the following to an American contemporary:—

I have seen it stated many times that a dog must be bathed weekly if he is to be kept in trim. This is a trifle overdrawn, as I have proven, to my satisfaction, at least. Bathing is good for the dog's coat but daily brushing will do more toward keeping it in sleek condition than the bath. Bathing does more good to the skin than it does to the coat.

Select a stiff bristled brush for the coat, one that is of fiber and has sharpness enough to it to get right down into the animal's fur. A smooth bristled brush such as is commonly seen about stables is not harsh enough to get into the woolly hair. Note that I said into, not on the hair. A dog will get dusty in his play or kennel or about the house, and to get the dust out of his coat you must get into it. Brushing will bring out the natural oil of the coat and impart a glossiness to it that makes the desired sleekness.

For smooth-coated dogs, such as fox-terriers and pointers and bulldogs, the brush should not be as keen in its bristles as for the heavier coated animals. Brushing that would be a pleasure for a setter to go through would be misery for a pointer, and one must use some judgment about the brush and the manner and vigour with which it is applied. I might say that the dog should be consulted somewhat. Daily brushing will remove the dirt from the coat, clean out the falling hair and stimulate the circulation at its roots. The latter will help the coat to become firmer, I have seen dogs that were hide-bound because the daily brushing that they needed was neglected. If a dog is more or less a part of the family it will be well to see that his coat is cared for daily, and he will thus give less trouble around the house.

The setter, or other long-haired hunting dog that is kept in the kennel, will more easily keep his coat clean if he is brushed often. Leaving the coat to become filled with small snarls, even those that are too small to be seen with the eye, greatly hinders the dog in freeing himself from the little burrs and other trash that get into his coat as he works in the brush or field.

In bathing a dog there should be some sort of kennel soap used that will wash out the excretions of the skin and the secretions of the oil on the hair. The ordinary laundry soap is too rough on the skin and cracks it, but tar soap of any reliable brand is good. A bit of zenoleum in the water will add to the freshness of the coat and cure any little scratches or abrasions that may be on the skin. Zenoleum will also kill any insects that may harbour in his coat. In the winter I use nothing more than a good insect powder sprinkled through the coat and later brushed out. Use plenty of it and rub it in well. Plain, old-fashioned elbow-grease will remove it.

A regular time for brushing will soon get the dog into the habit, and he will like it. Place him on a box at least three feet long and two wide. Wipe the face with a coarse cloth and then begin with the brush at his muzzle and ears and go ahead vigorously until you have finished at his flag. If the coat be heavy it will be well to run through it once a week with a comb made for the purpose.

Most children have an objection to their teeth being cleaned, and it is with great reluctance that they submit to the operation.

This is not altogether to be wondered at, for many of the preparations which an adult may be able to use with impunity are either hurtful to the delicate mouth of the child or disagreeable to the taste. The Odol dentifrice has, however, entirely changed the attitude of children towards this most essential act of cleanliness. Its taste is so mild and delicious, and its effect so refreshing that the little ones hail with delight the sight of the Odol flask, morning and evening, and thoroughly enjoy the pleasure its use affords. It is a pity that the necessity of commencing early in life the preservation of the teeth is not more universally recognised. There is nothing so important for the health of the child as that the first teeth should be kept scrupulously clean and retained as long as possible, in order that the permanent teeth may have time to grow and develop to the best advantage.

Odol will do all that is necessary in this direction, and in the most efficient manner, and it is a duty incumbent upon all who have at heart the happiness and welfare of their children to see that constant attention is paid to the mouths of the little ones with this marvellous preparation, and when they are men and women the strength and beauty of their teeth will testify to the advantages of the early use of Odol. There are two flavours of Odol—"Sweet Rose" (mild) and "Standard" (strong). The former is to be recommended for the more delicate mouths, but the average school-boy will rejoice in using the "Standard," which, with its more pronounced flavour, is in a higher degree refreshing and invigorating. Odol may be had of any Chemist.

We have received from Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co. an entertaining collection of the sketches from the pen of that clever artist Mr. Frank Leah, which have apppeared from time to time in the advertisement columns of some of our contemporaries, proclaiming the virtues of I.C.S. whiskey, that now famous brand which the eminent firm have placed on the Indian market. Full of vigorous humour the cartoons form a interesting and diverting collection while the designs are most original. More power to the artist and the whiskey which inspires him to such excellent work!

London Week by Week.

Friday, 3rd December 1909.

While our railway fares continue by their magnitude to astound those who, like your readers, are accustomed to the merciful rates charged on Indian lines, there is a distinct tendency on the part of our tramway and omnibus companies to lower the prices of their tickets. These are cheap enough in all conscience. But the introduction of the ha'penny ticket is about to be followed by an experiment in the direction of farthing stages. Thus a new era of still greater popularity for trams is opened up.

In the New Year all the tramway systems controlled by the British Electrical Federation are to give a fair distance for a fair fare to every passenger, no matter where he enters the car. For the minimum halfpenny or penny fare he will get always the same distance value, and if he exceeds it he is not compelled, as at present, to pay another halfpenny or even a penny for a few yards. He will be allowed to have farthing's worth of travel. This may seem a rather astonishing proposal, but to all those who appreciate the common use of farthings in the poorer districts the value of the concession will be readily apparent, while there are many regular middle-class travellers who will not dispute the daily saving.

The method of indicating the sections is simple enough, and the public should quickly become accustomed to the change. Alternate farthing sections of the route will have their poles painted black or white, and there will be a conspicuous number on the poles of each section. The passenger's ticket, when punched, will show him which numbered section he is entitled to travel to and a glance through the window will complete the process.

Often, when in India, I used to note the fiendish cruelty of the fat Bengalee fishwoman in their handling of living crustacea and the leisurely chopping up of fish long before they were dead. I used to comfort myself with the reflection that such practices were unknown in my moolook. Alas! for brutality many of our lower orders could give three stone and a beating to your native cartmen or butchers I should say. We have been told for ages that "eels get used to skinning" and now I see that the problem of whether an eel really likes being skinned alive or having its internal economy removed before it has been decapitated is shortly to be raised in a London police court. Unfortunately, the only witness really qualified to give evidence—namely, the eel itself—will not be called by either side. The problem of how to treat an eel so as to prepare it for the table without cruelty is an extremely difficult one. Suppose you begin by cutting off its head. The body goes on wriggling but it is admitted that it can feel no pain. But then the head moves too, and is even capable of biting pretty sharply. Now, does the eel feel pain in his head after it is cut off? Chloroform in generous quantities seems to be the only way out of the difficulty, but that would make stewed eels impossible to most of their present patrons and also to all conscientious teetotallers.

Diminished in numbers but not in fervour, the Pentecostal Dancers are again in London—this time under the alias of the "Pillars of Fire." They have invaded Camberwell, where five years ago their "Holy Dancers" were hooted off the stage. Mr. Obadiah—the Rev. Obadiah Kent White is his full name—is in charge of the party, which includes his wife, two young men, and one young woman. A feature of the Pentecostal Dancers' services is a curious jumping cake-walk. The chief missioners, men and women, prance about in the most remarkable manner, jumping, skipping, galloping, and whirling with a peculiar movement under an excess of fervour, at the same time shrieking out calls and catchwords. Hysterical cries are raised in response from among the audience. The "Pillars of Fire" find it difficult to get a hall of suitable size for their antics, as landlords are not enthusiastic about such tenants. They recall only too well the riotous scenes that attended the high-kicking crusade five years ago. The "Pillars of Fire" should not feel lonely in London. The "two and seventy jarring sects" of Omar Khayyam would be a moderate estimate of the number of religions in the metropolis. It is said on good authority that there are 300 in the United Kingdom. As to the adherents of "freak faiths" they each and all claim to be the Chosen People. Some are fanatics, some frauds. All can find dupes. Some of these strange sects have equally strange names. Here is a list that is necessarily incomplete, for a freak religion changes its name with the facility of a chameleon altering his colour:

Golden Rulers, Flying Rollers, The Rifle Sect, Vedantists, Faithists, Sun Worshippers, Pillars of Fire, Holy Ghost sect, Bahdists, Revived Pantheists, Band of Mary and Benjamin, Millenial Dawnists. Feet-Washers, Ahmedans, Designated Saints, Hennerites, Adamsand Eves, Holy Jumpers, Brothers of Light, Cokeites, Higher Thought Brigade, Go-preachers, Cooseyites, Devil-chasers, No-Secters, Jezreelites.

About this time of the year I believe the ramparts of Fort William fire salutes from morn to night announcing the descent on your city of plain and coloured potentates, civil and military "big pots," and those whose entries and exits are heralded by deafening noise and much wicked waste of the munitions of war. But, perhaps, there is hope of relief. Yet another noiseless gun has been invented, which ought to be useful for saluting purposes. When it has been incorporated with the principle of the harmless pistol it ought to get splendid testimonials from Mr. Andrew Carnegie and the Hague Conference and, incidentally, from all those dwellers in The Ditch who are apt to regard the demonstrations inseparable from the Simla and Darjeeling returning ones as somewhat of a nuisance.

A very fine thing has been done by Sir Herbert Tree in producing "Beethoven" at His Majesty's Theatre. A very beautiful, sincere, and dignified idea has by him been put upon the stage in a manner worthy of that idea and worthy of the great reputation of his theatre. Sir Herbert Tree's policy of doing a thing because it is worth doing and because it is beautiful apart altogether from any thought as to whether or not it will pay its way, proves his fitness for the position he has won as head of his profession, and stamps him as a true artist. In "Beethoven" he has not a great play; it is hardly a play at all, so little is there of incident in it, but all the same it holds the attention and impresses one by its beauty. It is the story of "Beethoven," told in three acts—the composer, a young man of genius, in Vienna, his relations with his friends, the Court, his disappointment in love, his determination to think only of his art. Three years later we find him conscious of his growing deafness—a calamity for him; and yet fifteen years further on we witness the approaching end of his life.

As drama "Beethoven" has little to offer. It is far from being an important addition to contemporary drama. But it is important as a medium for the display of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's talent as an actor of strange characters and for the display of his genius as a producer. Beethoven's music has been introduced so skilfully that it is not only heard in the entr'actes, it is also heard frequently during the performance, and is used to suggest the action. As Beethoven wrestles with his compositions the audience is made to hear the wonderful music that is coming to him from his fine brain.

Almost solely the play is a frame, and a frame only, for Sir Herbert's acting. To begin with, his make-up is nothing short of wonderful. A very tall man, he has actually contrived to so pad his body as to be given the appearance of being short and squat. Then the head has been carefully modelled in accordance with the features of Beethoven, and so skilfully is this done that the identity of the actor was completely lost. The author has not put enough fine lines in the character for it to be capable of making a very deep appeal, but the actor puts something of the soul of the man into the part. There is real power in it, and at the end real pathos. The other characters are the merest shadows, and such clever people as Mr. Henry Ainley and Miss Evelyn D'Alroy have little opportunity to show their worth.

"The House Opposite"—a significant title surely. A title suggesting something mysterious and terrible, something hidden—horrible to approach. A title suggesting a character part of the sinister order that Mr. H. B. Irving has lately proved himself so well able to play. And up to a point, the new play by Mr. Percival Landon, which was produced at the Queen's Theatre last Tuesday night, lived up to the sombre suggestiveness of its title. It is true that the first act was far from being true to nature. It rang false all the time. The scene was Mrs. Rivers's boudoir and the time was early in the morning. Mr. Rivers (an ex-Home Secretary, by the way) was absent, but Mrs. Rivers was decidedly present with a newly acquired lover in the person of Richard Cardyne. They kiss and cuddle very warmly on a sofa, and when a chance word gives Richard away as a philanderer with many mistresses, he appears to "give the game up" without an effort. Instead of trying to talk the lady into a kindlier mood, as one may suppose an ordinary philanderer would do, he prefers to open the window, for no very apparent reason, and in consequence witnesses something sensational happening in the house over the way. "Odd," remarks Richard, and that is the end of the first act.

Well up till then nothing much has happened, but one settled down in one's seat expecting sensational developments in the acts to come, especially as there had been a suggestion of political complications. The foundation was laid, one waited confidently for the thrilling development. But the thrilling development never came. It all turned on this, an old man, miserly, and living alone with his housekeeper, was murdered on the night that Richard was alone with Mrs. Rivers. Suspicion turned upon the old man's housekeeper. Evidence made her apparently guilty and she was condemned to death. But Richard had seen from Mrs. River's bedroom a man enter the old man's bedroom with a knife—hence his not very intelligent remark of "Odd" in the first act. By telling what he had seen he could secure the acquittal of the wrongfully-sentenced housekeeper. But that would mean the unveiling of his intrigue with Mrs. Rivers, and the undoing of her honour. But Richard swore that he would put a woman's neck before a woman's honour, and in the end Mrs Rivers made justice possible by a confession to her husband.

Mr. H. B. Irving as Richard has little to do but to talk nicely and easily, which he accomplished quite well, Miss. Eva Moore sobbed and wailed convincingly and the rest of the cast were the merest puppets.

All our great libraries are to be purged of the "Improper Books," the sex problem garbage (chiefly from the pens of silly if not wicked women) and all the other trash which for years has offended the taste and feelings of many and pandered to the vicious appetites of more. Mudies, W. H. Smith & Sons, The Times Book Club, Boots, Days, Cawthorn and Hull and others have been driven to the necessity for forming themselves into an association for the purpose of trying to stem the torrent of filth, scandal, libel, disagreeable subject and personal attack. They may lose custom at first I think but their interest will not suffer in the end, while they will certainly please all who find no pleasure in burrowing among such literary midden heaps as "Anna Lombard" for example.

These great firms have just issued a circular letter to all publishers, and after setting forth the raison d'être of their Association, they say :—

"We have decided to request that in future you will submit to us copies of all novels, and any books about the character of which there can possibly be any question, at least one clear week before the date of publication. Unless time is given to us to read the books before they are published, it is impossible for us to avoid that annoyance to our subscribers for which we, and not the publishers, are generally held responsible. We trust that you will not consider that the action we are taking in this matter is in any sense an attempt on our part to become censors, and we hope that you will co-operate with us by informing us that you consent to our request."

The Association has agreed to classify all books as satisfactory, doubtful and objectionable and the libraries concerned will bind themselves by the following rules :—

(1) They will not circulate any novel until it has been submitted for reading at least one week.
(2) They will at once advise the other members of any doubtful or objectionable book.
(3) They will not circulate or sell any book considered objectionable by any three members of the Association.
(4) They will do their best to make the distribution of any book considered doubtful by three members of the Association as small as possible.

This ought to help divert the present day tide of poisonous literature into its proper channel—the drains or the dust bins. I hope your readers will not for a moment suspect that your "Vagrant" has joined the Social Purity League. He has not ; he is only a bit old-fashioned. He is a believer in everything in its proper place and he does not consider Mudies the place in which to find the sort of stuff that can be obtained in Port Said or Leicester Square by any one whose taste lies in this direction. He likes to see his sisters and his cousins and his aunts walking on a clear crossing on a dirty, muddy day and he likes to think of them in their reading as journeying down the happy flowery paths of literature rather than floundering ankle deep in its puddles or wallowing in its cesspools.

Just as I close this letter I observe the announcement of the date for the next Varsity Boat Race—Wednesday, March 23rd—which is a later date than was expected. It is the only day that could be agreed upon and unfortunately falls in Holy Week, but the University authorities have agreed to the race being rowed on that day on the distinct understanding that the customary Boat Race dinner is either postponed till after Easter or abandoned, and that the president does not accept any invitations to a music hall!

GOOSE-SHOOTING IN THE WEST.

I had been told that the days of stirring adventure were past in the West, or, at least, in that part of the West where I then was located, and so was content with the prospect of a goose-hunt in company with three other young fellows of my acquaintance. I changed my mind about the reported docility of the West before another day was done.

We started out in a buckboard the night before, with the necessary equipment for a successful shoot, consisting of four 10-bore guns, which we managed to procure in the village, enough ammunition to stock a first-class battleship for a week, and provisions calculated to last the day. We had also about a dozen good decoys, and sufficient white cotton cloth to make more if we required them. I was informed that a piece of stick with some white cloth wrapped around it and stuck in the ground was quite sufficient in the early grey of the morning to fool the wariest goose into approaching within gun-range, and I found that it really was. Thus equipped, we then set out in the evening for a disused stable on one of the old Hudson Bay sections, about a mile from the place where we intended to commence operations in the morning. It was a glorious moonlight night, with just the suspicion of frost in the air, and not a breath of wind was blowing. Houses were scarce in the district in which we were driving owing to the fact that the country was largely hay-flat, stretching away to the lake, and of little use for farming of any kind. The stable, when we reached it, proved to be little better than a shelter from the sun, being built of rough lumber which had shrunk and left large chinks between the boards; the roof was of straw spread on poles about a foot apart, and the windows and doors were gone. Altogether good ventilation was its only merit as a dwelling for the night. Our horse we blanketed and tied outside, feeding it with some hay which we found at the edge of a slough near by. Then we spread some of the hay on the floor of the building for beds and composed ourselves for a few hours' sleep.

I had been unfortunate enough to choose a place directly beneath the window, and the chilly breeze kept playing over my uncovered body. I burrowed into the hay and found myself on the hard ground, feeling cramped and cold. The others must have been affected in the same manner, for one of the party rose in the early hours of the morning, and, clearing away a bare spot in the centre of the floor, lit a fire from the scattered hay and twigs around the building. It smoked a good deal at first, but soon flared up into a cheerful blaze, and we were all enjoying the heat which was thrown out when it was discovered that the sparks were flying upwards and lodging in the straw roof, which commenced to crackle and burn where the straw was dry. There was a wild rush for the door, and everybody frantically searched around for some means to quench the fire. An old battered pail was at length found among a pile of rubbish at the end of the shed, and, while one of our party mounted the now burning roof, the others kept running to and from the near-by slough, carrying water until the incipient conflagration was put out. The exercise warmed us somewhat but our nerves were not in a condition to allow of sleep for some time. When we did finally drop off, it was only to be awakened in a somewhat rude manner.

I can hardly explain the effect which was produced by the sound which shattered our slumbers, for it resembled nothing in the world which I had ever heard. It was as if all the demons of the infernal regions had broken loose in one horrible, inharmonious, fiendish chorus. It ran into all the keys of about five octaves, and was composed of all the discords possible between the first and the fifth. It froze the blood, it set the teeth on edge, it sent a cold shiver down the spine, and it made you wish for home. And while I was shivering and holding my breath in fear lest my very breathing might discover my whereabouts to the singers of the infernal chorus, a figure reared itself between me and the moon in the narrow window aperture—a figure which framed itself, huge, and shaggy, and grim, against the white light of the full moon, and looked within at us lying there. I was too much paralysed to so much as call out ; but when I did sufficiently gain control of my faculties I uttered such a yell as made the chorus without cease for very shame that they could not equal it. The intruder, more frightened than I, leapt down from its point of observation, and we could hear its soft pad, pad, as it scurried away a short distance and then sat down to consider matters. We all made for the door, and could perceive numerous figures flitting about in the moonlight among the scattered scrub, looking preternaturally large and weird in the moonlight, for when we had fully wakened up and recovered from the first shock of fear we realised that these noisy breakers of our peace were merely the cowardly, harmless prairie prowlers known as coyotes. They had been accustomed to use the place as a general rendezvous for their evening concerts, and were probably more surprised and frightened at our appearance than we were at theirs—though I doubt that very much. We had a couple of shots at them as they slunk away, but our aim was uncertain in the moonlight, and our shooting only served to accelerate their departure. Their fitful howls could be heard all night, but they never approached near enough to be really disagreeable again.

After all the hairbreadth escapes and hair-raising adventures of the night, our tempers were in no state to endure quietly the next misfortune which met us. Our horse, which we had tied securely outside, had broken loose, terrified, no doubt, by the howling of our midnight visitors, and when we came to the place where we had left him we found nothing but the broken halter, still securely tied to the poles outside the shed. Our hearts were too full for words, but the few which we did utter made the very moon hide her face behind a cloud for shame. There was nothing for it but to set out on a systematic hunt, which we did, going out in all directions from the building. We were on the point of giving up the search till daylight, when one of the searchers to the north called out to us that he had sighted the animal. We had no difficulty in capturing him, as he was feeding quietly at a hay-coil on the other side of the slough. We led him back triumphantly by the forelock, and that ended our adventures for the night.

By this time the moon was sinking in the west, and everything indicated that it would not be long till dawn. We therefore concluded that it was not worth while going back to sleep. The prospect of goose-shooting, after the adventures of the night, seemed tame in comparison, and our enthusiasm and sporting zeal were dampened by lack of sleep, and by the chilliness of the "hour before the dawn." We were tired and irritable and cold and hungry, and we spoke to each other in monosyllables, for we felt offended in an unreasoning sort of way for the loss of our night's sleep. Nevertheless, we hitched up, bundled into the buggy, and set out for our destination, which was stubble field at some distance to windward of the lake. Thither we expected the geese to fly on their way to their feeding grounds from their night-quarters on the lake. We unshipped our equipment, and, while one of the party proceeded with the horse some distance, and tied him to the buggy, the others set to work to fix the decoys and to scoop out holes in the ground some distance apart, where we might lie concealed as the morning flight came over. These holes we lined with straw and stubble, on which we lay, covering ourselves over with like material. The ground was fairly warm, and we were more comfortable in our lairs than we had been in the shed, and there we lay watching, too sleepy and tired to be optimistic.

The moon was very low in the west, and the sky in the east had the leaden-grey colour which presages the dawn. The decoys scattered round us looked singularly ghostlike in the uncertain light, and altogether everything seemed about us as dead and discouraging as it well could. I commenced to doze, and awakened with a start as a great white owl flapped low above our hiding-places, attracted, no doubt, by the appearance of the white decoys, and then passed noiselessly away on its early morning quest.

The minutes passed on leaden wings, the sky in the east took on a reddish tinge, and a strange whistling little breeze began to play in the stubble—the first intimation of life in that dead stillness.

How long we lay there, alternately dozing and watching dreamily those ghostly decoys, I don't know, but it seemed hours. We were stiff and cramped on account of the close quarters in which we lay, and too lethargic to think of changing our positions. And then suddenly all our senses became alert, every vestige of sleepiness left us, and we were in a moment wideawake, eager sportsmen, with guns tight-gripped and nervous finger on the trigger-guard. For suddenly, from over the lake to westward, there came to our listening ears the faintest sound imaginable, one solitary, querulous little cry, as of a child just half-awake. It was repeated at different points, till the whole lake seemed alive with it, and finally it became merged into one volume of sound, which ever increased in loudness till it became a clanging, cackling, discord of calls and cries and screams. The day was awake! Then, when the screaming was at its loudest, the air boomed with the roar of rushing pinions, and our game was on the wing. These roars were repeated at intervals as detached and late-sleeping flocks awoke and took flight.

For a few moments we waited, tense with excitement, with our eyes strained over the grey reaches of the lake for any sight of the oncoming flock. The noise had somewhat subsided by this time, and was more orderly in character. Suddenly, out of the grey of the sky, a tremulous wave of misty forms became visible, advancing straight towards us.

On they came, a long V-shapped line, with a great grey goose at the apex, and his followers in regular order behind, the ends of the line tremulous, and seeming to sway with the breeze. The first shaft of the rising sun shot up behind us, turning the stubble to gold, and as the great wavy line came on their snowy pinions flashed silver in its rays. Nearer they came, cleaving the air with the apex of the V as the prow of a ship might cleave the water. In my admiration of the sight I almost forgot that we were there for the express purpose of breaking up that line and spoiling its symmetry—ambushed enemies lying in wait for that well-marshalled host, to deal havoc among its ranks and disorganise its formation.

The great grey leader caught sight of the decoys before the flock was within range, and swung aside to contemplate them giving vent to friendly questioning cries. The entire flocks deviated after the leader, and began circling in ever-converging arcs, as if in the attitude to alight. Nearer and nearer, lower and lower they came, still we could see their eyes and mark the great strength of pinion and mighty width of breast. Their line was broken, and they were dissolved into a disorderly, screaming flock. Then it was that we let loose and pumped all the eight barrels of our 10-bore artillery into their disorganised ranks, reloading quickly before the surprised and scattered flock could get out of range, and letting them have four more barrels. With a mighty roar of wings they flung themselves back, the great grey leader screaming commands, seeming himself impervious to the rain of B B shot which rained around him, and strewed the stubble with the white bodies of his comrades. Then they were out of range, forming ranks again with angry, surprised screams at the treachery which had been perpetrated upon them. And then we came out of our lairs and counted the dead. There were twelve in all, and four badly wounded, which we pursued and quickly put out of misery—not bad for three minutes' shooting. No more flocks, however, came our way for the rest of the morning.

We sat back, lit our pipes, and surveyed the scene. The sun was fully up, shining gold across the stubble, which crackled in the heat. The chilliness had gone out of the atmosphere, and the warmth was very grateful to our cramped and numbed limbs. We were contented with the supreme content of successful sportsmen after a good bag; and we silently voted that life was worth living and that we had had a good morning's sport.—H. E. M. Chisholm, in Rod and Gun in Canada.

DAMAGE CAUSED BY BIG GAME.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I have read in the Indian Field of 18th November an account of the damage and loss of life caused by big game in North-Eastern Rhodesia, Nyassaland, British East Africa and Uganda. What is there said is interesting in view of what has recently been written in such books as "In Wildest Africa" by Schillings and "Big Game Shooting on the Equator" by Captain Dickinson.

Neither of these writers makes any mention of such widespread damage as is now reported to have taken place, though both have wide experience of the subject and have made a careful study of the habits of big game. On the other hand both affirm in the strongest possible manner that, unless the game laws are stringently enforced in these countries, it is probable that in a comparatively short space of time many species of big game will become practically extinct.

Three years ago I spent three months shooting in the Nile Province of Uganda, where elephants are now probably more numerous than in any other part of the world. I do not deny that in that district a certain amount of damage is caused by elephants to standing crops, chiefly by wandering herds at night. The natives, however, looked on this as a matter of course, which is only natural, considering that the same conditions have existed since long before the introduction of firearms and European big game hunters. In the days before big game hunting became either a form of sport or a profession followed by Europeans, elephants, and indeed all kinds of big game, were far more numerous than at the present day; consequently the natives suffer no more hardships on that account than they and their ancestors for centuries before them have undergone.

The description of cow elephants entering a village and eating the grain out of the corn bins seems almost incredible. The staple food of elephants is the leaves of trees and I have never heard of wild elephants eating grain of any sort.

With regard to hundreds of acres of gardens and plantations being destroyed annually by buffaloes and elephants in Uganda;—when I was in Uganda buffaloes were so scarce that only one bull was allowed to be shot on a license, and during the time that I was there, I never saw a buffalo and only once saw their tracks. How is it possible that they should have increased to such an extent as to do the damage mentioned above?

There are doubtless settlers in all these countries who, possibly not finding farming so lucrative as they expected, are only too ready to bring to notice, and exaggerate, every instance of damage caused by game, however slight, in the hope that, if sufficient agitation is raised, the restrictions on shooting big game will be removed. To permit such people to shoot big game indiscriminately would be equivalent to the extermination of the elephants, which would, I have no doubt, be remorselessly hunted for the value of their ivory. On the other hand there are settlers who are true sportsmen, who have, and do largely interest themselves in the question of game preservation.

The example of South Africa should not be forgotten. Less than a hundred years ago the country was literally teeming with countless thousands of elephants and buffaloes. Now both of these are extinct and many other kinds of big game have almost ceased to exist. When we remember that these animals were exterminated before the introduction of even breech-loading rifles, it is not difficult to imagine what would be the effect of unrestricted shooting with magazine and high-velocity rifles in these days of increased facility of transport.

Once exterminated the game can never be replaced, so it is surely the interest of all sportsmen and lovers of nature to do all in their power to lessen the possibility of the extermination of the big game of Africa in their natural state.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of all Indian Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

Dear Sirs,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.
