Radiol

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Ernoom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

THE sunshine on Thursday afternoon encouraged hopes that were restored last Friday the morning breaking damp but clear, and to general satisfaction the fog had been well beaten before noon, its last stronghold being the hill-girdled flat at Castle Irwell. The course had been covered with hay again to insure against any attack of Jack Frost, but he also had been routed, and in a more genial atmosphere the going was as good as could be hoped for. The first day's stop had whetted the appetite, and to make amends the public came down in great force, while the reserved enclosures were well filled by a representative company, the attendance being worthy of the occasion. Fields were of sufficient strength to keep the game alive, and some exciting finishes were witnessed, but the talent had a bad day. Results:—

Won by three-parts of a length; a length and a half between second and third.

The close of the season came with the discussion of last Saturday's programme at this meeting and, incidentally, it was a disastrous day for backers. Fortunately, the weather was propitious, and though the mist hung round the end of the valley, sun and wind furnished a bright day for Manchester. The importance of the occasion was early evinced by the crowded state of the specials from all parts of the sport-loving centres of the North and District, and the loaded trams that brought the horny-handed sons of toil to the scene, while motors abounded, attesting to the popularity of the occasion. Many of the principal patrons of the national sport were present in the club stand, and the big enclosures that reach up the course were crammed to repletion by an eager crowd, which almost to a man had a sportsmanlike interest in the last big handicap of the year. The going under the disadvantages with which the executive had to contend was on the soft side. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

By far the remarkable results in the First League this season were those which occured last Saturday. Of the five clubs possessing the best records everyone suffered defeat. The next four teams on the list all gained victories, thus investing the struggle for the leadership with additional interest, and of the four clubs occupying positions at the bottom of the competition no fewer than three secured very welcome successes. The big event was the reverse sustained by Blackburn Rovers at Bradford. Not since the last Saturday in September had the Blackburn men been beaten, winning meanwhile seven games out of eight and drawing the other. They were at some disadvantage yesterday in being compelled to take the field without either Robert Crompton or Bradshaw, and after change of ends lost the services of Davies, while late in the game Chapman, their centre-forward, was sent off the field. Still, Bradford had secured the lead before either of these players retird from the match. Less unexpected was the defeat of Liverpool by Notts County, seeing that the latter had not been beaten at home this season. Liverpool scoring first, the game stood at one goal all until just before the finish, when Notts added two more points.

Perhaps the most startling result of all was that reached at Manchester, where Manchester United held their own well into the second half and yet had to admit defeat—the first they have sustained on their own ground this season—by 6 to 2, West and Morris scoring three goals apiece. The Cup holders later in the contest lost the services of both Stacey and Hayes. Aston Villa, too, were unfortunate at Preston in having both Logan and Hampton injured. The latter was able to resume, but at one time the Villa had only nine men on the field. Despite their lowly position Preston North End have accomplished some fine performances at home during the past two months.

Despite the assistance of V. J. Woodward, whose decision to assist Chelsea excited so much surprise during the past week, the Stamford Bridge team failed to break the run of disaster which has overtaken the club. In opposing Sheffield Wednesday at Owlerton they were, of course, engaged on a formidable task, but as Woolwich Arsenal had held their own on the same enclosure a fortnight earlier, there existed no strong reason why Chelsea should not have escaped with a draw. So far from halving the points, Chelsea lost by 4 to 1, their only goal resulting from a penalty kick. They have now lost seven games out of the last eight in which they have taken part.

If defeat was once again the portion of Chelsea, better fortune attended the efforts of the other two London clubs. Tottenham Hotspur, although hard pressed towards the close, gained a victory over Sheffield United—a team against whom only two defeats had been registered since the opening of the season—and Woolwich Arsenal in their fifteenth match succeeded for the first time in winning away from home. Not until within five minutes of the finish did the Arsenal secure the lead, and the victory was gained at the expense of no more prominent a side than Bury, but, still, it was a memorable achievement for a side in the parlous position of the Plumstead club.

Glossop defeated Hull City in the Second Division of the League on Saturday, but Leicester Fosse, who with an equal number of matches played, were only a point behind, went down before Barnsley at Barnsley and consequently Glossop now stand out with a clear lead of three points. Although not very imposing on paper this advantage is a strong one, as the prominent teams in the competition are on very much of an equality, and Glossop can therefore be expected to hold their position for some time to come. Among the others changes may, and probably will, occur every week for the eighth club on the list is only two points below Leicester Fosse. Derby County, who could only draw at Stockport, missed a good chance of equalling the record of the Fosse and going above them on goal average. Fulham making further changes in their team, drew with Manchester City at Craven Cottage. On both sides the defences were too good for any heavy scoring to take place, and while the result was a fair reflection of the run of the game, Fulham may regard themselves as fortunate in escaping defeat, Jones of Manchester City missing a splendid opportunity of scoring. Clapton Orient went to West Bromwich, but, though they held their own in the first half, they were outplayed later on and easily beaten by a cleverer side.

Saturday's Southern League matches were remarkable for the fact that all but one of the eleven had a decisive issue. The exception was at Millwall, where Bristol Rovers held their own. Only one visiting team proved successful, Crystal Palace winning at Luton—a very welcome triumph after three consecutive defeats from powerful opponents. The Palace team may be regarded as second only to Queen's Park Rangers, who have found their way to the head of the competition and maintained their position by consistently good play. By beating the Brighton Albion team the Rangers removed a dangerous rival from the struggle for the championship, and Northampton did them a good turn by overcoming West Ham United; but Swindon have advanced, and are only 3 points behind the leaders. The Wiltshire team have an exceptional goal average, thanks to the splendid scoring ability of their forwards.

On following Saturdays the University Association elevens have met the Old Malvernians. Oxford lost a week ago by the only goal scored; on the 27th ultimo Cambridge gained a notable triumph by 3 to 0. Attracting special attention by their remarkably effective forwards, Cambridge suffered a sudden loss of form, difficult to account for. Losing to the Corinthians by only a goal and now vanquishing the best old boy team, they have evidently regained their early ability. They had to play hard in these two matches, and the improvement in defence arouses a confident feeling that next term V. G. Thew will have a capital side under his command. Oxford have good material, but their chief strength is in defence, and until after Christmas an estimate of their ability is impossible.

RUGBY RULES.

Whatever the issue of the county championship, it may now be confidently assumed that Durham will not secure that honour this season. A few weeks ago that team went down before Yorkshire, and yesterday they were well beaten by Lancashire, who crossed the Durham line on half a dozen occasions. In these circumstances it is practically certain that not only will Durham have to yield the championship to some other team, but that for the first time in eleven years they must fail to secure first place among the six northern counties. So far Northumberland alone in the Northern Division remain unbeaten, but both Yorkshire and Lancashire are well in the running for first honours.

Oxford on Saturday met with their second defeat during the week, going down before Blackheath by 14 points to 11. The difference in the scoring was represented by a penalty goal, but seeing how badly Blackheath had been beaten by Richmond on the previous Saturday, the result must be disquieting to those who had anticipated a great season for the Dark Blues. It is only fair to Oxford to note that they lacked the services of thier two crack halves—Cunningham and Gotley. Moreover, if the Oxonians met with a reverse, so did Cambridge, who—also lacking the assistance of their regular halves—were defeated by a goal to nothing by Old Merchant Taylors. A very interesting game was the Scottish International Final at Richmond between London Scottish and South of Scotland, the latter gaining a narrow but well deserved victory by 8 points to 6.

LONDON WELSH vs. LONDON IRISH.—At Wandsworth a good crowd gathered to watch this match in fine weather. Maddocks soon broke through, but failed to pass and was taken near the line. This was to be regretted, as the Irish soon assumed the upper hand by means of some excellent rushing and tackling and managed to hold it right through the first half and well into the second. Leading at the interval by a try they looked to have a winning chance, but ten minutes from the close Jenkins cross-kicked and let Maddocks in, and then tries came in quick succession for the Welsh from Thomas, 2 goals and 2 tries to 1 try. Too much cannot be said of the above and enabled the London Welsh to win comfortably by 2 goals and 2 tries to 1 try. Too much cannot be said of the fine game played by the Irish, which, until late in the second half, completely demoralised the Welsh tactics, though the former fell to pieces stupidly when the tables were reversed. J. F. Dobbs scored the visitors' try. Welsh 2 goals 2 tries; Irish, 1 try.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. BLACKHEATH.—At Oxford, Blackheath gave further proof of their strength this season by beating the University by 2 goals (1 penalty) and 2 tries to 1 goal and 2 tries. As the score indicates, the sides were very evenly matched, and only a penalty kick gave the club the victory. Without their two regular halves Cunningham and Gotley, Oxford were at a serious disadvantage, but they had the best of the early play, Tair scoring a couple of tries, and it was just on half time before Blackheath scored through Maritz, but a successful place kick left Oxford only a point in front. Afterwards Stoke kicked a penalty goal and Coverdale and Pillman gained tries, one of which was converted for Blackheath, while Vassall added a try for Oxford a goal resulting. The spirited game aroused great interest. Blackheath, 14 points; Oxford, 11 points.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—The University lacked the services of Jones, Ashcroft, and Boyd, and they were beaten at Cambridge by a goal to nothing. It was a hard keen game, with the sides always very nearly balanced, and on the run of the play Cambridge were unfortunate to suffer defeat. The goal that decided the result was obtained seven minutes after change of ends, when O'Callaghan scored a try, which Lepingwell converted. Following this the University played up very strongly, and repeatedly attacked, but they could not score, the visitors defence, though severely tested, proving equal to all emergencies. Old Merchant Taylors, 1 goal; Cambridge 0.

INTERNATIONAL TRIAL.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. SOUTH OF SCOTLAND.—After a fairly good game at Richmond the South of Scotland beat the London Scottish by the narrow margin of 2 points, and on the run of the game they were entitled to their win. It was a keen and hard struggle between fairly balanced sides. On both sides the forwards were good, and for the most part there was not much between them, but the South's backs were the faster and the better together, and to this fact they owed their success, in the opening half the visitors generally had the best of the struggle, but for all that the London Scottish opened the scoring, for a fine run by Macpherson made an opening for Walter, and he ran in with a good try, but it was not improved. After several good passing runs by the South's backs, which died out before their opponents resolute tackling, Southerland made an admirable run, and though he was tackled Bogie got the ball raced in with a try for the visitors but Cockburn's kick at goal failed and at half time the honours were easy. Early in the second half the London Scottish took the lead, for the South being penalised for offside Campbell kicked a fine penalty goal for them, but they were not able to retain their lead long, for after several bright individual efforts for the South by Sutherland, Neil and Watson, which came to nothing, one particularly good run by Sutherland was taken up by Ogilvie, who ran in with a well-earned try, and Sutherland placed the goal. From that point to the end the game was played out with much keenness, but neither side could score again, and so the match ended in favour of the South of Scotland by 8 points to 6.

ROWING.

THE OXFORD TRIAL EIGHTS.—As usual the Oxford trial eight race was rowed over the two mile course from the Moulsford Railway Bridge to Cleeve Lock, and judging by the attendance it excited more interest than usual. After promising to be fine, the weather turned to rain and a stiffish wind sprang up after luncheon, so that the race was rowed under somewhat unfavourable conditions. With five of last year's crew done, those rowing yesterday had a rather better chance of gaining the much coveted blue than for many years past. Those again available were the president, D. Mackinnon, Magdalen, the secretary, R. C. Bourne, New College, and A. S. Garton, Magdalen. A. E. Kitchen, St. John's who rowed in 1908, is in residence, but as he was not filling a place in either trial it is not very probable that recourse will be again had to his services. C. A. Gladstone, Christ, was the most notable absence from this year's crews, but his form is well known. Last year he missed his blue through indisposition, and it will not be in the least surprising to find him handling the bow oar next spring. Field, Brasenose a lusty oarsman, going well on to fourteen stone, would have been rowing but for the attractions of football, but it is very possible that he will get another opportunity before the eight is finally decided on next Term. With fifteen crews taking part in the fours, it seemed highly probable that two eights of more than average merit would be turned out, but as a matter of fact the crews that took part in yesterday's race were hardly up to the standard of recent years. Only two members of last year's trials again did duty, viz., P. Fleming, Magdalen who rowed seven in the losing crew, and G. S. Johnston, New College, both of whom had places in No. 1 crew. There was quite a large gathering of Old Blues at the Miller of Mansfield, where the crew had luncheon, amongst those present being G. Nickalls, Magdalen; H. Gold, Magdalen; R. C. Brocklebank, Trinity; W. B. Woodgate, Brasenose; G. S. Maclagan, New; Dr. Bourne, New College; C. M. Pitman, New College; A. E. Donkin, Magdalen; W. F. C. Holland, Brasenose; the Oxford coach, G. C. Drinkwater, Wadham; Rev. D. Legge, Trinity; J. A. Kirby, Magdalen; A. S. Garton, Magdalen; F. C. Warre, Balliol; the Rev. W. E. Sherwood, Magdalen; the treasurer of the Boat Club, etc. The crews were very late in putting in an appearance at Cleeve Lock, where Mr. Strickland's launch, the Maritana, was in waiting, and it was past half-past two before they got afloat in a couple of new racing ships, built by Fred. Rough. Matters were taken leisurely up stream to Moulsford Bridge, where they swung round, and after a few words of advice, the president sent them on their journey. They took the water together, and after the first dozen strokes Pope's crew could claim a slight advantage. It was of brief duration, however, Hay drawing level in the next hundred yards, and by the time they reached the first bend he was half the length of his canvas in front, whilst at the Betel and Wedge they were a quarter of a length in front. Both crews were rowing thirty-two, having dropped from thirty-five at which they started. Hay further increased his advantage along the Willows, and Villar having to take a wide course at the last corner it appeared that Hay's crew held the trump card more especially as although Pope quickened up considerably he failed for a while to appreciably reduce his opponents' lead. When fairly in the line for home, however, No. 1. had the full benefit of the stream, and with Hay in comparatively slack water the latter slowly lost ground, until midway between the Leather Bottle and the winning post, No. 1. for the first time forced their bows in front. The advantage was never more than a foot or two, and Hay, sparting again, crept up inch by inch, and eventually in the last stroke brought his boat level, the judges verdict being a dead heat. The time was 11mins. 32secs.

STOKE POGES vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—This match at Stoke Poges on Saturday resulted in an easy win for the University by 6 games to 3. The Stoke Poges team, it should be stated, was not so strong as that which defeated the Dark Blues a few weeks ago. Results:—

WOKING vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The annual match between Oxford University and Woking was played at Woking on Saturday, under good weather conditions. The result was a narrow win for the home club by 5 games to 4. This is only the second defeat the Dark Blues have sustained this term. They lost their opening engagement against Stoke Poges. Saturday's match provided a very close contest, as with the last match to come in, the sides were level at 4 games all. Results:—

CROSS COUNTRY.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY H. AND H. vs. OXFORD HOUSE H.—The Oxford University Hare and Hounds had their last match prior to the inter-Varsity contest, when they were opposed by the Oxford House Harriers at Oxford. Unfortunately a heavy downpour of rain just before the start made the going very heavy. For the first half-mile the runners kept close company, but after leaving the golf links E. G. Taylor Pembroke, R. E. Knight Pembroke, and F. A. Riches, Oxford House, forged ahead, closely followed by A. G. Knight, Magdalalen, A. Chandler, Hertford, H. Hornby, Balliol, and G. W. Evans, Oxford House. This order was maintained, with little variation until after crossing Shotover, when Riches secured a slight lead of Knight and Taylor. Along the road Knight and Taylor passed the harrier, and a splendid race home resulted in favour of the latter by a bare second, Riches being 50 yards behind. The team placings gave the Dark Blues the victory by 18 points to 37. Details: E. G. Taylor, Pembroke, time—41mins., 1; R. E. Knight, Pembroke, 41mins. 1sec., 2; F. A. BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.—Last Monday night, at headquarters, a special programme was put forward by Mr. Bettinson to wind up the month, the chief items being a couple of fifteen-rounds contests. In the first and best of these, for £85, Johnny Condon, the erstwhile amateur bantam-weight champion of England, who was making his first appearance in the professional arena, opposed Bill Ladbury, of Greenwich. Although Condon, who scaled 8st. 3½lb., was only a few ounces the heavier, he had a considerable advantage in height and reach, and from the outset he took a decided lead. Indeed, it appeared as if the contest would be brought to a summary termination, for, although the Greenwich lad boxed gamely, he was nearly counted out in the third round, and again in the seventh he was down for seven seconds. Condon's footwork, however, was not particularly good, and he failed to follow up his advantage. Boxing in the gamest possible fashion, Ladbury stuck to his task, and although palpably outpointed, he stayed the full distance, when Condon received the verdict on points, the loser being loudly applauded for his plucky display.

Earlier in the evening three bouts of six rounds were decided all of which, singularly enough, ended at the third meeting. In that between Alf Jacobs, of Marylebone, and C. Baker, of Deptford, the former was winning easily when he was sent down with a blow on the body which proved sufficient to end the contest. Charles Dixon, of Southwark, had Tom Smithers, of Northampton, beaten at a similar stage; whilst D. Wood, of Camberwell accounted for Sergeant Rust late of the Northampton Regiment.

Following the interval, the chief event of the evening, a fifteen-rounds contest between Charlie Knock, of Forest-gate, and Jim Sullivan, of Bermondsey, at catch-weights, for £160, took place. The men had met several times previously with varying success, so that they are no strangers to each other's styles, which are very similar. They mixed it considerably from the start, and in some hard exchanges in the second round both meted out some severe punishment, first one and then the other scoring. At the third meeting Sullivan repeatedly rushed in, landing some hard half-arm jabs on the head and body. Knock, however, retaliated, and they were so hard at it at the finish of the round that they failed to hear the gong.

The men mixed it well in the succeeding rounds, and at the end of the eighth there was very little to choose between them. At the next meeting, however, Sullivan forced the work to excellent purpose, and just before the end of the round Knock was sent to the boards and counted out.

COMPETITIONS AT CAMBRIDGE.—There was a crowded attendance at the Cambridge Corn Exchange last Tuesday night, when for the first time the Light Blues were opposed to the London Hospital, who were rather unexpectedly defeated by 8 events to 2, Cambridge winning everything except the two wrestling events. On the whole the form displayed was distinctly promising, such Light Blue boxers as Starrs, Jennings, and Whitehead showing considerable improvement upon previous displays.

The best set-to of the evening was in the "heavies," Portway retaining his unbeaten record by defeating Clouston after three hard rounds. Another especially good bout was between Williams and James in the "bantams," and the prospects against Oxford are most excellent. Results:—

BOXING.

Bantam-Weights.—N. D. Williams (Trinity, C.) beat J. James (L.H.)—The visitor had the advantge of weight, but Williams made up for this by a longer reach, of which he took full advantage. Early on he did remarkably well with his left, and scored fast with both hands towards the end of the first round. For the remainder of the time the Light Blue always had his man well in hand, and did plenty of damage with his left and occasionally with his right. James took his punishment bravely, but would have done better had he looked where he was hitting. The last round was slightly more even, but Williams continued to score with his left, and won on points.

Feather-Weights.—G. A Taylor (Corpus, C.) beat J. F. Richardson (L.H.)—Taylor, who held a slight advantage in reach, started off very strongly, and looked like knocking his man out. He scored very fast with both hands, doing considerable damage with a right upper-cut. Time after time in the first round Richardson was forced on to the ropes and severely punished, but he boxed most gamely, and occasionally got home a blow. He was outclassed, however, and after two minutes the referee put a stop to the bout.

Light-Weights.—R. W. Jennings (Jesus, C.) beat H. T. Retallack Maloney (L.H.).—The pair were well matched, though Jennings possessed the more science, but the bout was spoilt by too much clinching. Jennings had a useful left, with which he occasionally did some damage, and he was just leading at the end of the first round. Early in the second the Light Blue got home a nice right at the breakaway, and from then to the end scored fast with his left on the face. In the second round he forced his man on the ropes and did well with both hands.

Middle-Weights.—P. N. Whitehead (Clare, C.) beat W. A. Stewart (L.H.)—This bout did not open very promisingly, but both men hit hard, although occasionally wild. Early on Whitehead forced his left home, and then landed a hard right uppercut which sent Stewart to the boards to be counted out.

Heavy-Weights.—(Under 12 st.) D. Portway (Downing, C.) beat E. C. T. Clouston (L.H.).—The pair were evenly matched, and a hard contest resulted. The Light Blue got two good blows home on the chin in the first round, and gained several points in the second with his left and by being just the quicker of the pair. They were nearly always at close quarters, and both showed good defence, but once Portway got home a good one. At the last meeting there was plenty of infighting, but both were very careful, and after a very good contest Portway just won on points, his victory being well earned.

Welter-Weights—C. E. Storrs (Pembroke, C.) beat W. H. Parr (L.H.).—They started at great pace. Storrs did well with his leads, and occasionally got home some hard blows. Boxing very determinedly, he early in the second round caught his antagonist with a swinging right which floored him for the count.

FENCING—FOILS.

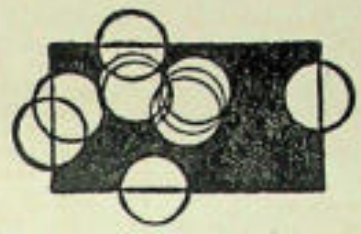
E. D. Adrian (Trinity, C.) beat Gibson (L.H.) by three hits to a doubtful one.

SABRES

Baron H. A. Gutmann (Trinity, C.) beat H. G. Winter (L.H.) by eight hits to four.

WRESTLING.

Light-Weights.—J. R. Marrack (London Hospital) beat F. M. Moseley (St. John's Cambridge).—Early on Marrack showed his superiority, but Mosely gained the first fall with a half-nelson and press down in 5½mins. rather luckily. Just before the second five minutes were up Mosely was defeated, and at the last meeting he was almost always on the defensive, and although he managed to get clear of some dangerous situations, he was beaten on points.



Heavy-Weights.—A. C. Palmer (L. H.) beat J. A. C. Croft (Trinity, C.).—The international Rugby footballer gave a much better display and did most of the forcing, and although Croft was strong he was beaten the first time by the half-nelson in 4mins. 57secs. Palmer was attacking all the time at the second meeting, and although Croft held on well he was defeated by a further nelson and press down in 4mins. 10secs.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

AFTER the depressingly heavy atmosphere of the few previous days it was a pleasant surprise to find it so cool on Thursday when the Meet was at Santa Cruz. A big field collected on the flats, and a first move was made to a covert along the water main near Sahar. Finding soon, hounds led the way through the familiar walled enclosure in which some found the usual difficulty and one of the field came to grief. Turning left-handed, they cross the stony nullah and reached the market gardens at the Backwater, where they were momentarily at fault before the quarry broke into the open in the direction of Andheri road. Completing a circle, he returned to the original covert and covering Sahar Hill made a line for the Railway. Hounds were hot after him and succeeded in turning the Jack to Parla and thence again to Chuckla, over part of Pereira Hill past the dry tank and into Bomanwadi Valley. He crossed Andheri road at last into new country through the grange bunds, in which is to be found the dread barbed wire complained of last season. Sticking finely to the line, the pack were led to the Mango Tope and then after a slight check into fine grassy country over Sunday Hill and on to the Marole range. The hill of canes was chosen, and with much difficulty the hunt was continued down into the valley, but here scent failed.

It had been a wonderful hunt over every variety of country. The work done by hounds during the hour and a half was excellent, and it must have been a stiff-necked one indeed to have made good his escape.

FLAT RACING IN ENGLAND.

II.

GOODWOOD TO MANCHESTER.

WITH the close of the first half of the season at Goodwood, Racing Society turns its attention to pastimes of a lighter nature, and Cowes Regatta, the Moors and the Seaside all help to render the racing of August the least important of the whole year. Brighton catered for the holiday folk, where Buckwheat starting at 20 to 1 defeated Lord Rosebery's Dandyprat by a head in the Brighton Cup, now a race confined to three-year-olds ; and that the result was no fluke—as it was generally considered at the time—was proved by Buckwheat's autumn running.

Serious racing commenced again during the last days of August at York, where special interest is taken in the Great Ebor Handicap and the Gimcrack Stakes for two-year-olds. After the failure of York's principal handicap last year, when Ronsay defeated three opponents, the executive tried the plan of doing away with the minor forfeit, with the result that a very fair field, both as regards quantity and class, went to the post. Two honest horses in Dibs and Royal Realm were first and second favourites, and they fought out a most interesting finish, in which Dibs belonging to Mr. Morrison, who by the bye seldom sees his horses run for he finds it too exciting, got the better of Colonel Hall Walker's representative, Royal Realm, by a head, with Lagos third. The following day the Colonel received ample compensation for his head defeat in the Great Ebor, when Sir Bold, a good class three-year-old and at one time spoken of as having an outside chance for the Derby, put the valuable Yorkshire Stakes to his credit. The Gimcrack Stakes which followed always excites special interest, for apart from its being the first of the autumn juvenile races of any importance, the owner of the winner is called upon to publicly air his views on racing at the annual Gimcrack Club dinner. This pleasant task was expected to fall to the lot of Lord Villiers whose Greenback was a warm favourite, but he failed to give 17lbs. to some useful youngsters among whom was Colonel Walker's Lily Rose, who gained her owner his third success in this race by a narrow victory over Salamanca and War Lord. Derby September meeting trod closely on York's heels, and there we saw the first of the nursery handicaps, those puzzles to those who take a financial interest in the sport of kings.

There is an old saying as regards these juvenile races, "When in doubt back the topweight," and that many made this axiom their sheet anchor is proved by the fact that Sunshine with 9 stone was backed into favouritism and justified it by a very easy six lengths victory over a smart and numerous field, a fine performance, and there is little doubt that the sonof Sundridge and Sweet Notes will next year hold his own with handicappers of the best class. Derby's second tit-bit is the mile Peveril of the Peak Plate which was taken by Christmas Daisy, an Irish horse that had finished third in the Royal Hunt Cup won by Dark Ronald. He was lightly weighted with 7 stone and proved too good for the three-year-old l'Anson and Hanover Square. In this race ran the ever disappointing Mountain Apple who was said to be back in his best form, and hailing from Darling's stable, where commissions are not small, he started favourite at 11 to 4 but ran a perfect wretch. This was not the first time he had been trusted this year, and it is plain that he is now a bad horse and unreliable ; and yet at one time he was one of the Derby favourites last year, but he went to the bad after his brilliant juvenile career through contracting an evil stable habit and has never won a race since his two-year-old days. How are the mighty fallen ! Meantime the interest in the Doncaster St. Leger was waxing hot, and the partizans of both Bayardo and Minoru were equally sanguine, while Louviers found some supporters in spite of his somewhat tarnished reputation. In what ante-post betting took place Mr. Fairie's colt was always favourite at about 11 to 8 with the King's horse at twos or a shade under, and before the all-important day arrived the race was looked upon as a match between these two, for Louviers lost all his action and was scratched and all other possible danger was removed when William IV. met with an accident and was also withdrawn. Both the cracks were in the pink of condition and looked trained to the hour, the King's trainer, Marsh, averring that Minoru was never so good before, while Bayardo's form and appearance spoke for itself. The field was a small one of seven, made up of Lord Carnarvon's Valens, with Mirador from Kingsclere, The Story, Carrousel and The Irishman, Bachelor's Double to oppose the favourites. Bayardo stood at 11 to 10 on, with Minoru at 7 to 4, while those who hunted about for a likely outsider generally picked on Valens at 100 to 8. When the tapes flew up Valens dwelt a little but otherwise they got off in line. Nearing home Frank Wootton dashed Lord Carnarvon's colt to the front, and for a moment he looked as though he had the measure of his field ; but only for a moment, and then Maher called on Bayardo who strode out gamely and soon passed Valens to win by a length and a half, with Mirador beaten half a length for second place, a position he occupied entirely through his superior stamina, while Minoru after never appearing to hold a winning chance finished up a moderate fourth. There was of course no little sympathy felt for the King, who was present to see the poor show of his colt and yet the victory was extremely popular, all feeling that Mr. Fairie deserved this sweetener after his disappointments in the Spring. Bayardo is a great horse, one of the old stamp for he has been run out for all his engagements subsequent to the St Leger and has won them all so that his total up to the end of this season is 18 wins with a value of only a trifle under £18,000. When the time comes for him to take his place in the list of sires, he will, I think, far eclipse his own dead sire, Bay Ronald, who was merely a good class handicapper and was never expected to get a colt of Bayardo's calibre, but there must ever be an element of chance in breeding. In the late autumn two colossal offers, one of £40,000 from the Austrian Government, were made for Galicia's son, which however Mr. Fairie in fine sportsmanlike action refused, a decision for which he is entitled to the gratitude of the whole English Turf, for already too many of our best stallions are expatriated. His gallant colt will certainly be trained for his races next year including the Ascot Gold Cup in which he should put the seal on his fame. He may not even close his racing career till the end of his fifth year, but whenever he does go to the stud there will be a rush to get subscriptions to him, judging by the applications which I hear have even now been made. While on the subject of breeding it will interest many Indian readers to hear the story of Friar Tuck's birth, a horse formerly trained by Porter at Kingsclere and afterwards shipped to India where he was often raced. One day at the Blankmer Stud a filly foal was born without eyes, a prodigy which in most cases would be destroyed forthwith. But this one was reared and at the age of three was covered by Friar's Balsam, the result being a perfect colt, eyes and all ; whom his mother nurtured with every care and never harmed in any way in spite of her blindness. This colt, Friar Tuck, was her only living produce as the mare died when foaling the following year.

Bon reseaux à ses moutons. Next to the St. Leger in importance came the Doncaster Cup, the last of the genuine weight for age races, for which the field was small but of good class including Dark Ronald, Dean Swift, Lagos and Foresight, while the Frenchmen ran their grey Roi Herode and Kingsclere Lord Falmouth's three-year-old Amadis. Dark Ronald was favourite while Amadis and The Dean were well backed at about 3 to 1. A fine race between Roi Herode and Amadis resulted in a half length victory of Lord Falmouth's son of Love Wisely and Galeta with Dean Swift third. The result emphasized the conviction that not for many years have we seen so many good staying three year olds ; the Ascot Cup having fallen to Bomba, the Goodwood Cup to Carrousel, while Amadis accounted for the Ascot Gold Vase as well as the Doncaster Cup ; to these can be added Bridge of Earn, winner of the two miles Newbury Cup, and Submit, the hero of the Cesarewitch. The last of the so-called ten thousand pounders, the Jockey Club Stakes, was run at Newmarket First Autumn meeting, the only class horses being the Duke of Portland's Phaleron and Premier, and it is satisfactory to chronicle that Phaleron proved victorious, though only by a head, over the four-year-old Carlowitz to whom he was giving 3lb. and a year. What are our mammoth stakes coming to when we see a selling plater within an ace of being successful ? Kempton's big Autumn handicap, the Duke of York Stakes, attracted but a poor field of nine out of a very good entry, many of the best horses, including Sir Martin, being in reserve for the Cambridgeshire, but Valens lent distinction to the field and as in the case of White Eagle last year his St. Leger form justified his favouritism. The stable, however, ran two, each on their merits, being in different ownerships, and it is in their second string, that is, second according to the market, that they found the pen. For Valens started slowly and was never in the race, but Buckwheat again at 20 to 1 maintained the record of successful outsiders in this race by a clever victory over Hayden and last year's hero Simonson.

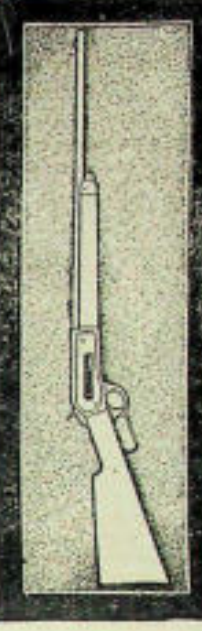
Of all the year's handicaps none aroused more universal interest than the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire, both of which obtained excellent entries both as regards quantity and quality. In the former race a chapter of accidents or illness removed all the horses with any pretensions to class except Rushcutter and Dibs who were top weights with 8st. 5lb., while the remainder of the field were but poor performers, such as we see taking part in minor handicaps every day, or even platers such as Peach. The race was looked upon as a sort of benefit for Rushcutter who had been tried a certainty by his unlucky trainer, Brewer, and was in the very best fettle even though he looked a trifle overdone. Money poured on him till he started at 3 to 1 while the only other backed with any spirit was Maya at fours, and that too in a field seventeen strong. The favourite went as badly in the race as he did well in the market and at no time did he threaten danger in spite of having the assistance of Wootton in the saddle and his connections were dumbfounded at his running ; no doubt he is a horse of moods, one of the kidney that win when it suits them and this is proved by the fact that a few days later he was put in a trial for speed with several other Newmarket horses and so slammed the lot, giving them all weight, as to call forth the remark from an eminent trainer "It ought to have been odds on your horse, Brewer, instead of odds against." Looking at his victory in the Ascot Stakes no one could doubt his stamina, still the fact remains he cut a despicable figure in the race and caused general disappointment to his host of backers. There was, however, plenty of excitement without him for, the going being heavy, the light weights set a rare pace. At the historic Bushes Submit was leading from Raytoi, but soon after Dibs put in some fine work and rushing through his horses once headed Submit, but the latter admirably ridden by Plant was not to be denied and with rare pluck came again to win a fine race by a head from Dibs, with the featherweight Raytoi third. The winner, a fine colt, by Sir Geoffrey out of Sub Rosa is the property of Mr. J. B. Joel who ran second in the race last year with the favourite Pure Gem, on which he is said to have lost a very large sum and his latest success hardly compensated for the blow of that defeat, for he only had a modest investment each way, which hardly calls for surprise seeing that his colt started at 33 to 1 and only a few days before had just raced home by a mere head in a mile and a half plate at Kempton from very poor horses. The Cambridgeshire, on the other hand, was voted the handicap of the year and the hardest puzzle to solve that had faced Turfites for some time.

Still, as so often happens on the Turf, the very reverse of what is expected actually takes place—In the Cesarewitch we expected a tame race and found plenty of excitement, while in the principal handicap of the Houghton meeting we expected a stirring struggle but viewed a procession, for Christmas Daisy romped the race from Flagfall. Party feeling ran high between the supporters of Mustapha, 7st. 8lb., whose previous form had been excellent and whose trial made him the equal of Valens, Sir Martin who was at last to show that he would have won the Derby but for his fall, and Whatever considered by the astute S. Darling to have 10lb. in hand, while Arranmore and Symon's Pride were considered hard nuts to crack, not to mention such horses as Ballot and Priscillian. Throughout the meeting the going was a quagmire in which two-year-olds floundered helplessly, and no doubt this played into the hands of Christmas Daisy, a veritable mudlark owned by the partners Messrs. Wigan, Cunliffe and Purefoy, who are colloquially known as the Netherayen Syndicate. On the principle of Dimidium facti, qui cœpit, habet the Daisy jumped off at lighting speed, and before they had gone a quarter of a mile he led by at least nine lengths, followed at a respectful distance by The Tower, Mustapha and Sir Martin. After going half way the last two tried to overhaul the leader but the Daisy had got too far ahead and was maintaining his place as he skimmed through the mud, so that in the end he proved the easiest winner of the Cambridgeshire ever seen, being five lengths in front of Mustapha who beat Sir Martin by a length ; this too in spite of a 10lb. penalty gained by his victory in the Peveril of the Peak Plate which, however only brought his weight up to 7st. 2lb. How far would he have won by at his original impost of 6st. 6lb. ? So it is not always that something comes to the rescue of the Handicappers when they make a blunder. It is strange that the colt's clever stable did not fancy their charge more and did not repeat their coups with Hackler's Pride, but it must be remembered that the Daisy had discounted his good form at Derby by knocking under to Succour in the Prince Edward Handicap, and no doubt none knew of his love for mud, so that though many small betters made him a winner, he yet started at 100 to 7. Lewis's stable seems Lord Carnarvon's bête noire in this race for he played second fiddle to them again just as he did with Veil to Hackler's Pride in 1904. This year it is certain the victory of his lordship's scarlet jacket would have been a far more popular result.

Further important events of Newmarket's last autumn meeting were the successes of the staying Amatis in the Jockey Club Cup who frightened away all opponents save one, and of Minoru who added yet further glories to the Royal colours by taking the Free Handicap. The King was present and I witnessed an exciting race and a marvellous piece of jockeyship on the part of Maher who bore the Royal jacket to victory for the first time in his career, and was now riding vice Jones, who had met with an accident the previous day. Minoru was beaten a hundred yards from the post, but by an extraordinary effort on Maher's part coupled with the horse's gameness landed him a winner by a neck ; form that again bears out the contention in my last notes that Minoru's Derby victory was very lucky. Such was His Majesty's admiration of Maher's riding that after weighing in he personally complimented him and a day or two later presented him with a handsome scarfpin.

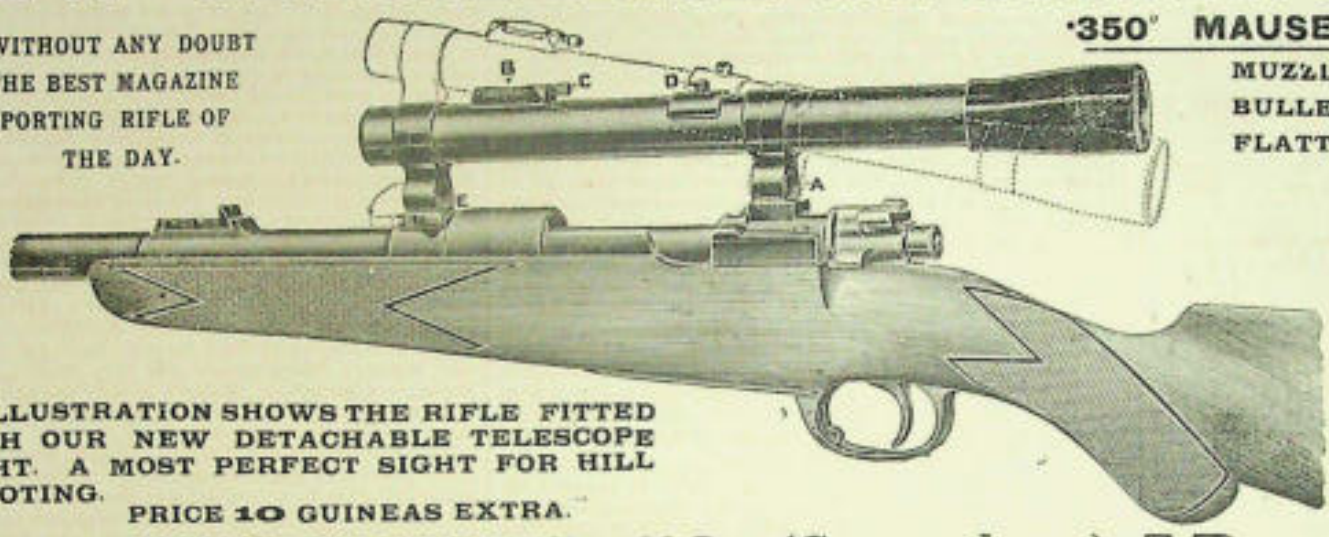
The two-year-olds mentioned in my last notes, with particulars of their breeding, have, as I expected, maintained their place at the top of the tree, Lemberg and Neil Gow being indisputably the best ; but as to which is the better, opinions differ. In the estimation of the official handicapper who frames the Free Handicap, Lord Rosebery's Neil Gow is reckoned 2lb. superior to Mr. Fairie's son of Cyllene and Galicia, this amount of poundage being allowed for the former's defeat of Lemberg in the important Doncaster Champagne Stakes, but valid excuses exist for the latter's display, as he was then recovering from a coughing attack and was not nearly at his best. This contention is borne out by later running, for in the race above mentioned Admiral Hawke finished second to Lemberg's third, but in the Middle Park Plate at Newmarket Lemberg took his revenge by beating Whiskbroom a neck with the Admiral only third a further length away at level weights, and it looked at the time as though Lemberg might have won by more had his jockey, Maher, so wished. Neil Gow has at present a rooted aversion to the gate, a bad trait in his character which was exemplified in the rich Imperial Produce Stakes at Kempton October meeting, where he was left some five or six lengths. Both Admiral Hawke and Lemberg were in the paddock that day but neither sported silk owing to the heavy ground, thereby, as things turned out, throwing away a valuable stake, for Lord Rosebery's colt could never have caught them as he did those of poorer metal. Maher rode another wonderful race here and eventually won by a head to the delight and surprise of those who had laid the substantial odds. The last of what may be called the classic juvenile races was the Dewhurst Plate, but it cracked up into a match between Lemberg and Whiskbroom in which the Manton colt gained further laurels. Other youngsters which have shown good form this fall are Tressady, by Persimmon out of Simplity, and Sunbright, a son of Sundridge and Ella Cordery and the best of all the stock of that champion sprinter. The form of his representatives is as brilliant as it is consistent, for right up to the last week of the year do we find them in the winning form, Sanspot having taken the most difficult Nursery to win during the whole year, the Chesterfield at Derby. Sundridge's fee will no longer be the ridiculously low one of nine guineas. Among the colts reference must be made to Rochester, a bay colt by the Derby winner Rock Sand out of Caparison, who enjoys some sort of a reputation but has only run once. This one effort, however, proves him to be possessed of no ordinary ability, for backward and unfancied as he was (a fact borne out by his starting price of 20 to 1) he ran Lemberg to a neck at 7lb., so that it is quite on the cards that given time to develop he will prove a dangerous outsider in next year's Derby. Among the fillies Yellow Slave has lost her place of first and must now be rated as second to Maid of Corinth, a second produce of the mating of Cyllene and Sceptre and a stable companion of Lemberg at Manton. Bred as she is, she ought to be good and she has won several races, yet she can safely be put down as 10lb. to 12lb. below the best of the colts. Giving therefore Lemberg the vote over Neil Gow owing to the latter's invariable poor starting and considering the fact that Galicia's son has only once known defeat when not at his best, while Neil Gow commenced the season with two reverses, we may, if two-year-old form works out correct, an anticipation which can never be relied on in the case of fillies, expect to see Lemberg and Maid of Corinth asserting their superiority in the Classics of 1910.

An interesting piece of Turf news comes from America in the death of St. Blaise, who won the Derby of 1883 for his joint owners, Sir Frederick Johnstone and Lord Alington. A son of Hermit, and, like most of Newminster stock, long lived, if often a trifle delicate, he did not succumb till he reached the ripe age of 29. Except his Derby victory over Highland Chief by a short head, and there are many who think the latter won, St. Blaise accomplished no great feat owing chiefly to a severe sprain in one of his forelegs, after which he never recovered his form and was sold to America for 10,000 guineas. At the time of his death he was the property of Mr. August Belmont who owns Norman III., winner of last year's Two Thousand, and Priscilian among other horses racing here. Minting too, is now no more, having been lately destroyed by his owner Mr. Vyner to save him from the burden of further years. He had the misfortune to be foaled in the same year as the mighty Ormonde, 1883, and did not tackle the Kingsclere crack in the Derby, yet what deeds he accomplished, winning the Grand Prix and the Jubilee with 10st. in the saddle! He was not a success at the stud but his daughters have proved very valuable, one of which, Maid of the Mint, gave us Spearmint. Childwick too, the sire of the notorious French mare La Camargo, has also just died.



WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.



Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

THACKER, SPINK & CO.,
P.O. Box 54, CALCUTTA.

The last weeks of autumn are important only for the three big handicaps, the first of which, the Liverpool Cup, fell again to last year's heroine, Santeve, who carrying 8lbs. less than her impost twelve months ago beat the Cambridgeshire disappointment Symon's Pride a head, with Bridge of Earn third. The American crack Ballot ran in this race and right well did he perform under the burden of 9st. 4lb. and showed that he was beginning to his best form, but he has now been shipped back to America after having won only one minor race here. The 1½ mile Derby Cup was run the week following Liverpool, and in this race the three-year-old Highness, a staying filly by Cyllene out of Galileotis, accounted for a good field, of which Rathlea with a 10lb. penalty gained at Newbury, was a close second and Specifical third. In winning this race Highness incidentally placed her sire Cyllene at the head of the list of winning stallions with a total £35,550, that is £1,189 in excess of Bay Ronald's aggregate. It is remarkable that of the first five sires in the winning list Marco, who comes fourth, is the only one standing in England, Cyllene being expatriated to the Argentine, Bay Ronald and Persimmon who are second and fifth respectively are both dead, and the third Gallinule is in Ireland. This last, a son of Isonomy and Moorhen, is now feeling the weight of years and in future is to have his services greatly reduced.

Warwick and Manchester finished up the year's racing and each suffered from climatic conditions, Warwick losing two days through frost while racing on the first day at Manchester was impossible through fog. The fields ruled large at the last and yet no more than sixteen turned out to contest the Manchester November Handicap in which Rathlea and Symon's Pride were very firm in a market sense on the strength of their previous short defeats. But the mare was asked too much in carrying 8st. 6lb. as a three year-old over twelve furlongs, and the favourite, Rathlea, had to knock under to one of Taylor's representatives, the grey Dutchman, Admiral Togo, who won by a length and a half with the unlucky Rockbourne next. The winner started at 100 to 7 but was by no means unfancied with Frank Wootton in the saddle and completed a nice double for the Manton stable in the last two important handicaps. This stable had a most successful year, Taylor heading the list of winning trainers just as his patron, Mr. Faire, topped that of the winning owners. With Bayardo still in training, and Lemberg and Maid of Corinth to support him, the probability is that these records will be eclipsed next year.

Just one further glance into the future. It is with many regrets that we shall now say goodbye to some of our best jockeys who are retiring from the saddle. Danny Maher finds it an ever-increasing difficulty to keep his weight down and has decided to give up regular riding and only occasionally to accept a mount, when he can do so without wasting. His place as first jockey to Lambton's stable will be filled by Frank Wootton, who this year has come out champion jockey with 165 wins in 774 mounts, showing the excellent percentage of 21·31. Halsey, Dillon, and Madden will not be seen again in the pigskin, the last of whom will copy the example of Sam Loates and take up training. These vacant chairs will make room for the rising generation of which we may expect to see Foy, who has accepted a retainer to ride for Mr. Steddall, and little Stanley Wootton coming to the front. Trigg, whose name is already made, will ride first jockey to the stable presided over by Captain Dewhurst and Higgs and Saxby will be to the fore—still the services of four eminent jockeys are being lost; they can ill be spared, and it will be extremely difficult to replace them.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. COOCH BEHAR.—This match played on the 18th and 19th instant attracted a large number of spectators. Cooch Behar won the toss and batted first, Lewis and Purakh opening the ball. They ran the score to 36 when Purakh was bowled by Lee, who trundled with splendid success. The visitors could make nothing of his bowling and 7 wickets were down for 67 runs when Bajana came in and made a great stand. He batted vigorously and saved the side from a collapse, contributing 41 before he was caught. The others did little and the innings closed for 115. Lee took 9 wickets for 62 runs. With twenty minutes before them Calcutta went in and lost one wicket for 20 runs. Continuing the next day Calcutta to the general surprise made a very feeble display and were all out for 83, Craik and Given Wilson being the principal scorers. Warden took 5 wickets for 34 and Lewis 4 for 31. Cooch Behar made a better show in their second innings and declared their innings closed when they had scored 185 for 8 wickets. Robson was top scorer with 61, Bajana again batted well and Prince Victor also compiled a useful score. With a little over an hour at their disposal the home team went in again and scored 78 for 5 wickets. Cooch Behar thus won on the first innings by 32 runs. Score :—

BALLYGUNGE C. C. vs. NATTORE'S XI.—That the fortunes of war in this match, begun at Ballygunge on Saturday afternoon, fluctuated considerably, will be understood when it is remarked that whereas at one time Nattore had 6 wickets down for 94, but were not all disposed of until they had put together 213, Ballygunge at lunch time on Sunday had made 96 for 3 wickets, but were all out for 125.

As on the previous Sunday, when the home team suffered defeat at the hands of the United Services, the victory of the visitors was mainly due to the work of one man; this time it was Baloo, who, going in to bat when things were going all wrong for his side, put together an invaluable 34, and followed this up by taking 7 wickets for 65 runs, one wicket falling in each of his last five overs, and, curiously enough, to the fifth ball of each over.

The Maharajah won the toss, and sent in Purshottam and Mehta to face White and Gould; both of them, however, were treated with scant courtesy, and runs came at a great pace, especially off the former—with the total at 52, made in about 10 minutes, Purshottam mistimed one from White and the ball ran up his bat towards mid-on, where he was easily caught by the wicket-keeper. Roy and Mehta had not been long together before the latter was nicely taken at short slip (he had just been missed in the same place at the other end) and Sanker, who followed, was beautifully caught at extra slip by Gould, off his first ball. Of those who followed, none could do much with the bowling, until R. L. Roy and Baloo became associated, and they put on no less than 86 during their partnership, the seventh wicket falling with the total at 190, Baloo's share being 34; Razak did not do much, Seshachari succumbed to his first ball and Roy was out immediately afterwards, the innings closing for 213.

The Ballygunge fielding was on the whole fairly good, the catch by Whiteley which got rid of Baloo being a brilliant effort. Of the bowlers tried White was easily the most successful, his 7 wickets costing 96 runs.

Ballygunge started fairly well, as although Frost, D. S. Shallow and Bocquet did not do much, A. W. Shallow and White made a very decent stand, taking the score to 97 before being separated; after their departure, however, a regular rot set in, and the whole side were out for 125. The innings needs no comment, White and A. W. Shallow alone showing anything like form; the rest were out trying to hit Baloo, a fatal mistake when he is on the spot as he was last week.

Nattore had a second knock, but fared none too well, losing 7 wickets for 64 runs, Sherman, Bocquet and Shallow each claiming 2 wickets for 8, 2 and 4 runs respectively. Scores :—

A SCHOOL teacher was endeavouring to convey the idea of pity to the members of his class. "Now, supposing," he said, "a man working on the river bank suddenly fell in. He could could not swim, and would be in danger of drowning. Picture the scene, boys and girls. The man's sudden fall, the cry for help. His wife, knowing his peril and hearing his screams, rushes immediately to the bank. Why does she rush to the bank?" After a pause, a small voice piped forth, "Please, sir, to draw his insurance money."

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday afternoon, the 28th October 1909.

Present—President:—The Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Vice-Presidents:—Colonel T. C. O'Donnell, R.A.M.C., Major T. H. Goodwin, R.A.M.C.

Members:—Mr. A. Anderson, Colonel C. Archer, C.I.E., Major H. Gough, Captain T. Keyes, K.S., Ardeshir D. Marker, Captain F. A. McCammon, R.A.M.C., Lalla Mulraj, Mr. N. B. Muncherjee, Doctor D. S. Otto, Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozeshaw, Mr. W. R. S. Foster, Mr. H. R. Smith.

Visitors:—Mrs. J. H. Drake, Lieutenant H. C. Finnis.

Honorary Secretary:—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

Read letter from Major A.M. Anscomb, V.D., expressing regret at his inability to be present.

Read list of donations made to the Museum during the month, the specimens themselves being passed round for inspection. Of these the most important were:—

A fine Mahseer from the Beji river near Babarkach presented by Major A. L. Jacob.

A Beech Marten, from the Brewery, Quetta, presented by Mr. F. W. Stramack.

A Stone Curlew, from Saranan, presented by Mr. G. L. J. Davis.

A Himalayan Solitary Snipe, from Kowas Tangi near Ziarat, presented by Lieutenant Leared.

Two Rock Thrushes from Quetta presented by Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

A Leopard skin, from Mangi, presented by Mulla Alif.

In connection with the leopard skin the Honorary Secretary expressed regret that it was unmountable. He had received news that one of the levies at Mangi had wounded and secured a leopard and took the precaution to send the Museum taxidermist by the first train to take it over for the Museum; but unfortunately the animal died and was skinned by the levies before his arrival.

In addition to the donations received during the month the Python (Python molurus), Cobra (Naia tripudians), and Double Headed Snake (Eryx Johnii), exhibited alive by Mr. Flynn at the last Meeting and which had since been killed and mounted by Mr. Flynn were also passed round for the inspection of such of the Members who were absent on that occasion; while Mrs. Drake exhibited a curious pair of Markhor horns found on the Murdar Range in which one of the horns was of the close spiral form after the Suleiman type and the other had open curls like that of the Astor type.

Read letter No. 633, dated 9th October 1909, from Mr. Maxwell-Lefroy stating it was impossible to identify the Psychidae larvæ presented by Mr. Dracott, but that he would do so later if any of them developed into moths.

Read alphabetical list of Members of the Baluchistan Natural History Society in connection with which the Honorary Secretary raised the question as to whether the names of Members who had left Baluchistan and whose address was not known should be retained on the list.

Resolved that the names of Members who had left without expressing their wish to continue as such should be struck off the list.

The election of new members was the next item of business, and it was proposed by the Hon'ble President and seconded by the Honorary Secretary that Mrs. Drake be admitted. This was unanimously carried.

The Hon'ble President then concluded the Meeting with a few remarks. He suggested that the Sambhar Head and other exhibits not of local origin which had been placed in the Museum be kept apart. He desired that the thanks of the Meeting be conveyed to Mulla Alif for the leopard skin he had sent in and expressed a hope that it would not be long before another would be secured. He further referred to the appeals read at the last Meeting and expressed the hope that Members would respond by sending in their observations on the arrival and departure, etc., of Woodcock and Snipe and the migration of birds in general and expressly asked that advantage be taken of the present shooting season to secure and send in specimens of snipe, grouse, duck, hare, etc.

In conclusion he mentioned that when passing through Bombay on return from leave the Honorary Secretary, Bombay Natural History Society, desired him to thank the Members of the Baluchistan Natural History Society for their help to the Bombay Natural History Society.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

The Story Teller.

THE RIFLED SAFE.

We had had a peaceful fortnight during which the services of Aykroyd's nose had never once been called into requisition.

I myself had found a peace and contentment in my friend's pretty Sussex home, such as I had never dared hope for. That bit of homely philosophy "One cannot eat one's cake and have it," had been tactfully yet persistently impressed upon me by Aykroyd, until at length I had come to believe that my case against Providence was weak. I had all those happy years to look back on. To repine now that they were over, was mere useless ingratitude to God.

At last one morning our calm was broken by a wire from Poullett. "Curious burglary case in Surrey Square, Brighton. Can you meet me there at once?"

Aykroyd's little motor soon took us to the scene of the robbery, an ugly Georgian house on the east side of the square.

Poullett met us on the steps, and took us straight to the library on the ground floor. As we entered the door, our nostrils were assailed by the most appalling odour I have ever known. I had to cover mouth and nose with my handkerchief, while as for poor Aykroyd, with his highly strung smelling nerves, he turned white and staggered back to the fresh air of the hall, in an almost fainting condition. "For God's sake, Poullett," he gasped "open the windows and doors, and blow that appalling stench away."

A short time later we faced the library again, and this time managed to enter and examine the room.

A safe lay on its back on the floor, with a large hole burnt through its door. The edges of the metal showed signs of fusing, and it was evident that the lock had been burnt out and destroyed by the use of that cunning admixture of oxide of iron, aluminium and magnesium, which when burnt, creates such a terrific heat as to melt the toughest steel. Under the safe were two rubber faced rollers, which had evidently been used to move the safe into a convenient position near the centre of the room. Turning from the safe we glanced round, and on the wall, scrawled in chalk, was a Hindustani sentence. I knew Urdu, and so did Aykroyd. Both of us grasped the meaning of the words at about the same moment. For my part, I burst into a shout of unseemly mirth, and then as soon as I could, glanced apologetically at my friend. Aykroyd's face was livid with combined wrath and suffering, and the venomous rage with which he regarded the writing on the wall, cut my merriment immediately short.

Freely translated, the words read. "Send for Aykroyd, he loves smells."

The cheek of it! The cause of the smell itself was sufficiently evident. A large bottle lay on the floor, close to the safe, with a dark stain all round it caused by the liquid which had run out on to the carpet. A string from the neck of the bottle to the head of the stairs leading to the basement showed both the way the escaping thieves had taken, and the method by which they had upset the evil-smelling liquid after leaving the library.

Later on when he was calmer, Aykroyd told me that asafoetida, sulphuretted hydrogen, warm oil and aniseed, were some of the ingredients which went to make up that awful compound.

A stay of a very few minutes proved as much as my friend could stand, so we went and sat at the open window of a room at the other side of the house. Here we interviewed Mr. Argent, the owner of safe and house.

I took a dislike to this man, at first sight. He was a dirty looking mean old fellow, with cunning eyes looking out from under shaggy eyebrows. As I watched him while he was being questioned by Aykroyd and Poullett, I came to the conclusion that he was concealing something as regards the contents of the safe.

Mr. Argent it appeared was a widower, and well off. He lived alone except for the servants, of which there were five indoor ones, four women and a page boy. The safe contained valuable jewelry (a list of which old Argent supplied) and some family documents. It was when asked to say what these were, that it became obvious that the old man was lying.

After a short interview, Aykroyd said he thought he need not occupy Mr. Argent's time any longer, and that he and Poullett would now go outside and look at the place where the thief or thieves had broken in. Argent parted from us with evident relief, and we went outside. The method of ingress was patent enough; a grating had been forced up ..n the house entered by the basement. Exit had been made by the same way.

A close examination of the dust under the grating, combined with certain marks noticed previously on the floor of the library, led to the decided conclusion that one burglar alone had done the job. A footstep clearly indicated in the dust, showed that the thief must have had small feet, and that he had worn very neat rubber soled shoes. That only one man was concerned, and that an individual of no great strength, was proved by the fact that there were the marks where a lever had been used to tip over the safe on to the rollers, so as to move it out into the middle of the room, with the door upwards, in a convenient place for burning out the lock.

We went back to the library, and there Poullett showed us that small though he was, he could manage to upend and lower a safe single-handed, without any mechanical assistance to aid him.

Both Aykroyd and I had come to the same conclusion as regards the Urdu sentence. The writing was too laboured, especially as regards the careful insertion of the vowels, to have been the work of one of the small army of Natives of British India temporarily resident in England. The writing was probably rather the work of an Englishman, who had learnt Urdu from a munshi.

But for the smell, which had for the time paralyzed his olfactory nerves, my friend could have easily ascertained the truth or otherwise of the above supposition.

"Of course" said Aykroyd turning to Poullett "old Argent was lying about the documents in the safe, when he said they were of little importance. I suppose you will not have much difficulty in finding out all about his next-of-kin, and anything regarding him which may throw light on the nature of the documents which have gone. Judging from what I have seen of the old man, I am not sorry he was burgled, though the thief need not have been so gratuitously unpleasant to me."

And here at length the ludicrousness of the Hindustani message, and the bottle of abomination, suddenly struck my friend, and he broke into hearty laughter, in which Poullett and I joined. "My nasal powers are quite hors-de-combat for the next few days, owing to our burglar's device." went on Aykroyd. "So I better go home and leave you to tackle the case single-handed, Poullett." Then we got into the car and motored back to Lindfield. The grin evoked by the burglar's practical joke on the great Aykroyd was still on Poullett's face, as we left Surrey Square.

Some days later Poullett came down and gave us the result of his investigations.

Thomas Argent had had an only son Walter, who having quarrelled with his father some twenty-eight years before had gone to India. What the quarrel was exactly about was not clear, but apparently it had something to do with a woman.

Twenty-two years ago, Walter Argent returned, alone to his father's house, in a very weak state of health and there he had shortly afterwards died.

Soon after Walter Argent's death, a lady who gave her name as Madame Laurier, had called and interviewed old Thomas Argent.

There had been a stormy scene and she had left, nor was there any evidence to show that she had ever paid the old man a second visit. An enquiry into the family's financial affairs disclosed that a large sum of money had been willed to Walter Argent, by an aunt, and that in case of his death without issue the legacy went to his nearest surviving relative, which in this case happened to be his father, Thomas Argent.

Further enquiries had evoked the fact, that just before his return to his father's house in Brighton, Walter Argent had left a little girl of four or five years old, in charge of Madame Laurier at Rheims. This child had been brought up by the French lady as her own, and on her death she had left the girl, whose name was Maya Argent, her small fortune of about £300 a year.

Madame Laurier's death occured five years ago, when Maya was about twenty-two.

Poullett had quite failed to arrive at any records of Maya Argent's life, after she was left free and independent by Madame Laurier's death. It seemed from local enquiries that the girl was slight and small, and decidedly good looking. The people who had known her were agreed that she was possessed of indomitable determination, and extraordinary intelligence.

A further significant fact had come to light. A girl of five or six and twenty, named Ethel Sadler, had entered Mr. Argent's service as parlour-maid, about a year before, but had left two months previous to the robbery. No information as to this parlour-maid's present whereabouts could be obtained, nor had she gone to the lady to whom Mr. Argent had recommended her, when she was leaving his services. Poullett had obtained a photograph of Maya Argent, taken just before Madame Laurier's death, and this he had shown to Mr. Argent and his servants. They were not at all agreed as to whether or not it might be the same person. Mr. Argent appeared violently agitated when Maya's name was mentioned, and vehemently denied all possibility of his son having been possibly married without his knowledge.

Nothing more was elucidated, and in a few months the robbery was forgotten. Aykroyd said little about the matter, but by now I had come to know my friend's moods thoroughly, and it seemed to me that he was content that this particular crime should remain undiscovered, and had no intention of making any effort to bring the thief to justice. Nearly a year after the robbery, Maya Argent herself made the next move. She had secured the services of an eminent lawyer, and suddenly swooped down on Mr. Argent with full proofs both of her identity as Walter Argent's daughter and of her father's marriage to a Miss Alice Verity nearly twenty-nine years before, in India. A most circumstantial story was also put forward of the discovery of the documents in the secret drawer of an old bureau, brought home by her father, and left at Madame Laurier's.

After a case of considerable interest, old Thomas Argent was stripped of half his wealth, by his grand-daughter, who at once became somewhat of a celebrity, both on account of her striking personality and her wealth.

Aykroyd made no effort to conceal his keen interest in Maya Argent, and in a very short time owing to his efforts, we found ourselves on friendly terms with that remarkable young lady.

Some time after, when Aykroyd had become on obviously intimate terms with Miss Argent, we were having tea with her. No one else was present. We were discussing an act of singular bravery by a young officer, which had gained the hero of it the V. C. "I think it was the most daring act I have ever heard of" said Maya Argent enthusiastically. "I know one just as daring" declared Aykroyd. "Look here." and he took a slip of paper out of his pocket book and handed it over to her. While he was passing over the slip I caught a glimpse of the well remembered Urdu message "Send for Aykroyd. He loves smells."

Miss Argent looked at Aykroyd, and as she looked the gay sweet tempered mask which she kept for the world at large, melted away, and the determined reckless soul of the woman showed naked for an instant. Her everyday smile almost immediately came back, to be followed by a look still sweeter, which I had never seen displayed before. She suddenly bent forwards, and laid her hand lightly on Aykroyd's. "Ah, I went to India, and learnt Hindustani there, and lots of other things, such as that if oxide of iron, aluminium, and magnesium are burnt together, they will develop a temperature of 5,400 ° Fahrenheit. After all I was only taking what was my own down to the jewelry even."

She turned to look at me too, and the inextinguishable gaiety had returned to her charming face. The special smile had been only for Aykroyd. Evidently I was de trop.

I found some excuse to leave, nor did Aykroyd offer to accompany me. While making my way homewards, a vivid impression remained with me of the joyous sparkling eyes, and slight delicate figure, a type of almost fragile beauty; and then the contrast of the brilliant cleverness and stern relentless spirit behind that childishly gay exterior. The idea of it was startling. If Maya married Aykroyd, and they united their talents and devoted them to the hunting out of crime then wrongdoers were likely to have an anxious time.

A country admirer sent the following letter to Lord Charles Beresford:—

My house has been blessed with twins (a boy and girl) this morning. My wife would like to name the girl after the Princess of Wales and I want to name the boy after you. May we do this? And can you obtain the Princess's permission for us to use her names?

The Admiral thought that the applicant desired to use the christian names only and in due course sent the Princess's permission, together with his own. He then forgot all about the matter until, one fine morning, he was considerably astonished at receiving another letter from the same man to this effect:—

My Lord,—I thought you would like to know that Lord Charles Beresford Brown is thriving, and has cut his first tooth. Princess of Wales Brown had convulsions last week, but is now very much better.

THE UNIVERSITY RUGBY MATCH.

The annual inter-university rugger match between Oxford and Cambridge, which was recently played at Queen's Club, proved the most one-sided game ever contested between the representatives of the sister universities. The Dark Blues won, and in doing so by four goals and five tries to a try, they made history.

In no one of the previous thirty-six encounters have either university sustained such a severe reverse. One has to go back to 1883 to discover the previous record score, and on that occasion Oxford won by three goals and four tries to a goal.

A win for the Oxonians on this occasion was generally expected, but no one, not even themselves, could have been prepared for such a memorable triumph. There was a lingering hope that, as has so often happened, the form of the trials might go by the board and that the Cantabs might just pull through. One reason, and from their point of view the chief, they did not do so was that the Cambridge forwards did very badly. They were lacking in cohesion and, worse than all, they had not settled ideas. Their only chance of doing any good for their side was to make the most of their weight, break up the scrummage and, by their footwork and hard tackling, cramp the Oxford backs. As a matter of fact, they did nothing of the kind, and it is no matter for surprise that the side sustained a heavy reverse.

Looking back on the game, three features stand out prominently. Firstly, the marvellous speed of Poulton, the Oxford left wing three-quarter; secondly, the surprising adaptability of the team as a whole in face of untoward circumstances in the way of injuries, and, thirdly, the remarkable breakdown of the Cambridge forwards. It must have been sadly disappointing to the friends of the light blues who anticipated that the Cambridge pack would prove superior to that of their rivals and, very possibly, by their excellence, more than compensate for the undoubted weakness behind. No such thing happened.

The Oxford eight quite outshone their rivals in most of the scrums, wheeling and breaking up with the utmost smartness, and giving their clever halves, Gotley and Cunningham, innumerable opportunities, while, except for three or four brief interludes, the Cambridge work in the loose was far from convincing. The fact of the matter was that the Cantabs had been training too severely, while the absolute rest which it had been deemed advisable to give their opponents had invigorated and braced them for what was at all times, despite the result, a typically gruelling and strenuous contest.

The failure of the Cambridge eight to come up to expectations was strikingly illustrated by the fact that for a considerable portion of the game Oxford were only scrumming six forwards. Play had not been in progress more than a quarter of an hour, and Oxford, through two magnificent runs by Coulton after passing emanating from Cunningham, which was perfect in its machine like accuracy and speed, were eight points up, when F. N. Tarr, their crack right centre, put his shoulder out. It is an old trouble with him, and he was obliged to leave the field.

This necessitated F. G. Buchanan, the back, taking his place, and Honey, the Rhodes scholar from Rondesbosch, South Africa, being pulled out of the scrum to act as the last defender. Shortly after this Turner left the pack through an injury, and for the rest of the half, the novel spectacle was seen of six Oxford scrummagers doing quite respectably against a full complement. Again and again the Cambridge forwards tried to rush the scrum, but Lagden, Hering and Hands put in every ounce at its base, and helped by Cunningham's eye for touch and safety, successfully withstood all assaults, until at last Purves, the Cambridge captain, fell over in the right hand corner, with three men upon him, just too late.

Prior to this, however, Martin had got in for Oxford on the extreme right, after a characteristic dash, and Poulton subsequently put them still further ahead by accepting beautifully from Gilray, the New Zealander, and beating the defence hollow with a wide swerving run. Turner returned shortly after the interval, Carr took no further part in the game, so that the Dark Blues were never a complete team after his disappearance. This notwithstanding, their display in the second half quite eclipsed anything they have ever done against the sister establishment. The Cambridge eight were visibly done, and the Oxford three-quarters practically worked their will. Gotley and Cunningham were in their element, and developed movements to either wing with monotonous regularity.

The Oxford backs went in five more times, but the scoring was all done by Poulton and Martin, left and right respectively. Poulton's speed was simply phenomenal. The Balliol man made the Cambridge defence look the most trivial thing imaginable, whilst Martin was hardly less fast. Poulton scored twice in this portion and Martin three times. One of Martin's tries exemplified the virtue of following up speedily from a possible high cross, for he was just at hand when Poulton took into his head to use this method of advance when in danger of being bottled up on the wing. Lagden majorised two of the tries and Cunningham the other, besides the first of the game.

The Cambridge halves battled heroically against their adverse fortunes; but there was no great ingenuity in their defence, while Atkinson at back, through on occasions fielding and kicking irreproachably allowed himself to be caught in possession some times. Still, he had almost a superhuman task, and the opposing backs were down on him like a hurricane. The Cambridge three-quarter line, when, on the rare occasions, it did get to work, rather badly mulled its passes, and the movements were for the most part easily anticipated. The introduction into it of B. H. Holloway, the Leys scholar, now in residence, because of Pyman's injury, did not lend to homogenity, and Lewis and Scholfield on the left were left pretty much to their own devices.

Of the total number of games played since their institution, in 1873, Oxford have, with their latest victory, 16 wins to their credit against Cambridge's 12, whilst the other nine matches were drawn.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The third day of the Calcutta First Meeting was a great success in spite of its being an ordinary work day. H. E. the Viceroy was quite well again after his attack of fever and arrived in time to see the big race of the day, the Cooch Behar Cup. This Fizz won rather easily, which goes a long way to prove that we were right in stating that had he a stronger jockey up in the Viceroy's Cup he would have won. Tommy Melsom got a nasty fall from Morsel in the Christmas Selling Race and was rather badly knocked about. It is supposed some horse crossed him and brought him down: he was very lucky to get off so lightly.

Gallileo was favourite for the Mistletoe Plate and his stable made no mistake about him as he had his field well beaten a furlong from home. Pincher and Gallileo went to the front from the start followed by Sweet Lavender, Forfeit and Too Late: at the home turn Gallileo took the lead with Forfeit and Pincher next: the former ran on and beat Forfeit easily by one and three-quarter lengths. The owner of Forfeit laid an objection against the winner for crossing which was overruled.

A large field of moderate horses went for the Christmas Selling Handicap. Morsel and Rustile were quickest away followed by Mandeville, Singleton and Bobbie, with Haloya next. There was practically no change in this order until the home turn were Singleton went to the front, Mandeville and Rustile next, with Morsel, Haloya and Rustile in a bunch. Mandeville went on at the distance and had Singleton beaten, Rustile third half a length away. Morsel fell half way up the straight.

The Lawn Plate was another good thing for Mumford's stable, with the favourite Chobham. The Rooster made all the running closely followed by Speedometer, Windy and Chobham lying next. At the home bend Chobham forged ahead with Speedometer and Windy next. The Rooster fell back beaten here, and his stable companion ran home an easy winner by one and a quarter lengths.

Lumination's win in the Sandown Park Plate did the hat trick for Mumford who trained and Whalley who rode the three winners in succession. Lumination jumped out in front of Tangaroa and Lord Carlyon, Huka close up next. Tangaroa went up to the leader at the home bend but she went away again and won as she liked by two and a half lengths from Tangaroa with Huka a short head in front of Castalia.

The favourite for the Cooch Behar Cup again came from Mumford's string in Bull Dog, but he was never in the hunt. Mr. Bates got the field away in line: the first to show up was Refresher followed by Ebullition and Crossbred. Ebullition went ahead at the mile but he was very soon done with; Fizz moved up in to a good position between the 6 furlongs and half mile and coming into the straight he held a lead of two lengths, Retort and Refresher next. Retort could never get on terms with little Fizz.

The Gunny Meah Cup was won in very hollow fashion by the favourite, Cheeky. Ruling Passion led for the first mile then fell back beaten at 6 furlongs. Wild Boy, Cheeky and Miss Clare were together in front; the surprise of the race was Encourage who beat Solace by half a length out of third place. Cheeky had Wild Boy cold all the way.

The light,-weight jockey Melsom who got a very nasty shaking, when Morsel fell with him on Wednesday last is all right again now and has been riding for J. D. Scott's stable since Monday; he was very lucky to get off as lightly as he did with half of a big field galloping over him.

The Steeplechases at Tollygunge last Saturday were a great success, the only drawback to the whole day being the poor fields that went out for most of the events. Mr. Evers had bad luck to start with, as Envious fell with him in the Pony Steeplechase, but he was not hurt, and rode two winners later in the day. Captain Barrett rode old Kipling again in the Grand National and this year won easily; he was unlucky not to have done so last year.

The Pony Hunter Steeplechase was the first race on the card. Marconi went to the front and made all the pace. Pathfinder refused at the open ditch the first time round and nearly brought both Eventide and Just in Time down. Marconi continued to lead until the penultimate fence, where Scarboro caught him and had him easily beaten from there. Mr. Evers rode a beautiful race.

The first Pony Steeplechase was supposed to be a good thing for Tete-a-Tete, but she was never in it when it came to racing. Result II. made all the running the first time round with Tete-a-Tete, Ruling Passion and Bandy Leg next. Ruling Passion hit the fence before the water very hard and was lucky not to have fallen. Tete-a-Tete and Bandy Leg were in front at the open ditch the second time round: Envious began to move up after this but fell two fences later on; his rider, Mr. Evers, was not hurt. Bandy Leg took the lead going at the last fence and had the race well in hand after this, Tete-a-Tete second four lengths away.

There was an interval of 1½ hours between this and the next race to enable spectators to have tiffin. Three went for the Military Chase. Cyril refused at the second fence and took no further interest in the race. Golden Oriel led throughout and won as he liked by 15 lengths.

Idle was reported to be good goods for the National but would have been a marvellous horse to have won after making all the running as he did. Idle and Fingal went to the front from the start and led the first time round with the rest of the field in a bunch behind. Going round the second time the order was Idle, Mount Dane, Maisonette and Fingal next, just ahead of Mystic Circle, Daroji last. At the half mile bend Mount Dane dropped out beaten and Kipling began to move up. Coming into the straight Idle was a little ahead of Kipling with Maisonette next. Kipling passed Idle at the stands and after a fine race beaten him by three-quarters of a length.

Highland Fling and Tommy Daw were the only two to go for the Hunter Chase. Tommy Daw led the first time round and was jumping very well, the other fencing badly, it looked as if he would have won. Highland Fling took the lead 5 furlongs from home and won cantering.

The lot went for the Avenue Plate, Wise Hawk was made favourite but he was never in it at all. Coming into the straight Pussy was in front, with Devil's Limit and The Missus just behind. The latter took the lead coming past the stands and beat Pussy easily by 2½ lengths.

The Pony Handicap Plate was a big upset for Scott's stable, who had three in the race. Not So Dusty and Winnie R. were the only two backed and it looked like being a race between the two, but Pat C. came with a great run at the finish and beat his stable companion Not So Dusty by a neck; Winnie R. a length away.

Tom Scott who has trained for H. H. the Kour of Patiala for many years has retired and handed over the horses to R. Bence. We wish Bence as much success as Scott has had before him. Scott, we hear, is going to Australia were he proposes to settle: he will not have any connection with racing.

The Australian jockeys did not get a look in last Saturday at Tollygunge as every race was won by Englishmen. Hayhoe, who has been riding Mr. Garda's jumpers this season, scored his first win on this side of India on Bandy Leg, he rode a nice quiet race on him; Charters also rode his first winner here on The Missus one of Penton's training.

Mr. Apcar has decided to give Five Crown a run or two over hurdles to see if it will cure him of his roguish ways. C. Hoyt put him over two flights the other morning and he fenced very well and has the making of a very good hurdler: with him in their jumping string the stable should be very formidable.

Bleach leaves with his string for Bombay on Thursday, he has decided that he has won enough for one season in Calcutta.

A little schooling was done on Tuesday afternoon on the training track. Five Crown (C. Hoyt) went by himself over five flights very slowly and did not jump at all well: he tried very hard to stop at every one. Pincher (Northmore) went a nice working school 1½ miles. He galloped well but ran down each hurdle very badly. Cocoa (C. Hoyt) went a mile over four, and did them in very good style.

The weekly paperchase was held on Wednesday morning about one mile beyond Jodepore station. The course was a very long one, it is said to have been about five miles, and the going very good all the way, except for one small piece of ponky ground. The paper was laid by Messrs. Allen and Deakin as usual. Mr. Evers had things all his own way in the horse chase, but the pony chase was a very good fight between the first five Horses.—Final order was:—(1) Mr. Evers on Devilette II., (2) Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy, (3) Captain Gibbs on Trilby, (4) Mr. Atkinson, junior, on Victor, (5) Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester, (6) Mr. Morris on Blue Bell, followed by Mr. Barrett on Speculation, Mr. Allanson on a bay,

W. Mumford is leaving for England shortly to buy horses for himself and on commission. The horses he has imported up to this have met with a deal of success. Any sportsmen wanting new horses would do well to give him the order.

We hear Hayhoe will take over charge of Mumford's string when he leaves for Home next month. Whalley will ride for this stable again next season.

Oakley has left with all the Maharaja of Cooch Behar's string of ponies for Lucknow, and we hear will not race in Calcutta again this season.

The I.P.A. Championship Tournament was concluded on Thursday last, when the Calcutta Polo Club, the holders, beat the Kishengarh Durbar team by 6 goals to 4 after a splendid game. Details further on.

A writer to a London Journal endeavours to show how it is that there are invariably men in a hunting field who seem to be especially unfortunate in getting thrown out of the hunt time after time. Such a man is, it is said, typical of many who ride to hounds. He will tell you that he is always unlucky and his friends will very likely say the same, but it has probably never occurred to him or to them, to look into the matter, consider it carefully and endeavour to ascertain whether the alleged ill-luck is ill-luck, or whether the series of misfortunes is not directly or indirectly due to faults of his own that might quite well be avoided. Whilst hounds are drawing such a man will most likely be engaged in earnest conversation with a friend or perhaps be the centre of a cheery group telling anecdotes, bandying jests, and chatting lightly about a dozen matters. There is a whimper in cover. The "unlucky" man pays no attention to it. Several hounds speak, and only then he begins to pull himself together. But a minute or more has elapsed since the first hound spoke. The man who is "lucky" who somehow always gets a good start, began to move on the instant he heard that first whimper. He was with the group of talkers, perhaps, but he detached himself at once, trotted fifty or so yards up beside the cover, popped through a gap or a bridle gate that half a minute later would, as he knew, be congested by forty or fifty horsemen all hustling and panting to get through, cantered quietly up a deserted ride to within sight of a spot where on some previous occasion—it may have been last season or two season before—a fox broke away on just a day as this, under very similar conditions, and where the wind was in almost the same direction. As he expected the fox breaks within fifty yards of the place where he is waiting, precisely as the fox did on that former occasion. He sees the whole pack come streaming out of cover and settle down to the line on a burning scent. A minute later he and the other "lucky" men are sailing away in their wake, while the confoundedly "unlucky" people on the other side of the wood are only beginning to realize that hounds are out of cover and are running hard.

The 10th Hussars and the 12th Lancers met in the final game of the Lahore Tournament on New Year's Day, the Hussars quite outplaying their opponents and eventually winning by 10 goals to 2.

According to all accounts, the 143rd anniversary dinner of the "brethren of ye Anciente Fraternitie of York Gimcracks" proved as successful as any of its forerunners, and if nothing of a sensational nature was dropped in the after-dinner speeches, it was yet gratifying to learn that the authorities consider the present state of the Turf satisfactory.

As usual, Colonel Hall Walker had something to say on several racing topics, and his remarks on the stallion allowances will be interesting to breeders, as well as owners. Everyone will agree with Minoru's breeder that "the value of His Majesty's patronage to the Turf continuing must be apparent to all, and it was essential that if he was to continue that patronage he should at least enjoy some occasional successes." Most people know how thoroughly His Majesty enjoyed the whole-hearted enthusiasm which greeted his triumph in the Derby last June, and can quite understand Mr. Hall Walker's natural feeling of pride at his share in that success, apart from the fact that he had bred the winner himself. In the course of his speech Mr. Hall Walker remarked on the curious fact that the majority of the winners of the Gimcrack Stakes were unlucky afterwards, and there certainly does seem some ground for the remarks of the owner of Lily Rose, whom he hoped would change the luck, though probably Mr. Hall Walker was thinking more of his own experience with his three previous winners. If there have been no great classic winners enrolled on the scroll of Gimcrack victors, some winners in quite recent years have distinguished themselves in various ways, if only in after life at the stud. Thus Bentworth and Garb Or, two comparatively recent Gimcrack winners, are perpetuating their fame as sires, while Amphora, who subsequently won the Goodwood Stewards' Cup, may yet achieve as much fame in stud life as her own brother, Sundridge, for she may throw something better than Perrier. The 1897 Gimcrack Stakes winner, Mauchline, is in a fair way to earn distinction as a dam of useful winning horses, and the same remark might apply to Queen Fairy, who won in 1898.

As an accomplished horseman himself, Colonel Hall Walker has a leaning towards National Hunt racing, and it was significant that he should say "the best sport for young men was racing under National Hunt Rules, and riding themselves." In referring to the attempts being made to encourage amateurs to participate in National Hunt racing the Colonel remarked that he had suggested how to do it three years ago, which makes one think that his suggestion "to go back to the old rules of hunters' races at hunt meetings" is one regarded by the authorities as hardly being practical, or likely to be of much use. Still, it is rather startling to hear that "If the National Hunt did not move in this matter soon he would not be surprised if the Masters of Hounds were to start these meetings by forming a new Hunt Club, especially for gentlemen riders." One wonders whether the inclusion of what might be called a Red Coats' Steeplechase in the majority of the National Hunt programmes—such races to be confined to qualified hunters—would meet the case, if there is really such a desire on the part of hunting folk to have races for their hunters.

Of course, Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, speaking on behalf of the Jockey Club, had something to say concerning the state of the Turf, and he remarked that they could "congratulate themselves upon the great improvement during the last quarter of a century," and everyone will agree that this happy state of affairs is "due to the vigilance and devotion of the Stewards of the Jockey Club." One welcomes also Mr. Leopold de Rothschild's acknowledgment of the assistance rendered by the Press, as well as his pronouncement that it was "the duty of the Press to call the attention of the public to any irregularities which might take place, or any infringement of the laws." But he has certainly put us into a state of expectation by stating that "presently a correspondence would be published which would be read with very great interest," especially as he went on to remark that "it would be found that the Stewards of the Jockey Club, and the Club as a body, whilst not standing aloof from public opinion, were jealous of the good reputation of the Turf, and would not be influenced in the proper exercise of their functions by rumours circulated without evidence." This, it may be said, exactly expresses the feeling of confidence which all connected with the Turf have in the Jockey Club.

The winter favourite for the English Derby is Neil Gow, his chances are thought a good deal of in certain quarters. His pedigree, however, does not suggest stamina; and it would not, therefore, be surprising if Admiral Hawke by Gallinule, Rochester by Rock Sand, or San Antonio by Persimmon beat him over a distance of ground. All are in the Two Thousand. For some reason or other, winners of the Derby beget Derby winners year after year, and if one sticks as far as possible to the offspring of a Derby winner or a Derby winner producer, like Cyllene, he invariably comes out right.

The ruthless, Yankee big game butcher has been at it again. We read that Mr. Kermit Roosevelt has shot two specimens of the bongo—an antelope so rare that few have ever fallen to a white man's gun. One supposes that British hunters were not equal to the task of exterminating this rare beast, and we ought to be grateful to the enterprising American gunners who are helping us all they can to write the word "extinct" after as many species as possible.

Perhaps when Mr. Taft is disengaged he will consent to visit British East Africa and polish off the rest of the big game—if Mr. Roosevelt leaves any. England ought, however, to stipulate for a percentage of the skins.

Combed through and through by explorers and sportsmen, Africa, it seems, is still hiding one mystery of the animal creation in a lake-swamp between the rivers Lunga and Kafoe. According to one account, this terror of the swamps is "half-elephant, half-dragon," a simple arrangement compared with that of the account which describes him as a mingling of crocodile, python, rhinoceros, and hippopotamus.

No name, we observe, has been given to the beast, but one would feel inclined to class as a dinosaur such a combination of monsters in one hide. Certes he is not a griffon—half-eagle and half-lion, nor a bagwyn—half-horse and half-antelope, nor a cockatrice, nor a manticore. Can he be our friend the Showman's Urpti-Urpti? Hardly, we should say; for though of quaint habit this creature is not remarkable for size. And we are not encouraged to adhere to our first inclination to class him offhand as probably the ancestor of the Great Booloo-Booloo when we reflect that the latter unique beast was not pachydermatous and of colossal proportions, his chief claim to human interest being his ability to make particularly good use of certain rare opportunities offered him. But whatever the poor beast may be like or unlike, it would be more than tactless of him to show himself until Mr. Roosevelt and his party are well out of the country.

Many an inventor of some device which has later come into world wide use has been forgotten, until in time his name is quite unknown to many of those who daily reap great benefit from his invention. Such a man is the Rev. Alexander John Forsyth, LL.D., who invented the percussion lock. It was in 1805 that Forsyth made his first percussion gun. He had great difficulty in getting his invention recognised, and though when recognised it soon became used throughout the world, it has remained to his grand-nephew, Major-General Sir Alexander Reid, to write a biography of his ancestor. At the time the invention was so momentous that Napoleon offered the Scotch Minister £20,000 for it, but he declined. Instead he took it to the British Government, which gave him a room in the Tower where he could carry on his experiments. After twelve months of hard work he was requested by the Ministry (which had changed) to remove himself and his rubbish from the Tower. He had the utmost difficulty in getting his actual expenses repaid; he had to wait twenty-seven years before his invention was tested at Woolwich, thirty-two before a regiment was armed with it, and thirty-four before it was used in war. The percussion lock was first used in the field of battle during the first Chinese War by the 2nd Battalion Border Regiment at the capture of Amoy in 1841. General Sir Alexander Reid points out that it is not too much to say that, if Dr. Forsyth had been allowed to complete the few things he was engaged on at the Tower in 1807, instead of being told "to remove his rubbish," Wellington might have found the Peninsula and Waterloo easier than he did, "or, to put it in another way, if Forsyth had not patriotically refused the £20,000 offered him by the French for his invention, Napoleon might not have died a prisoner at St. Helena."

The most remarkable match ever played under the Rugby code, between Oxford and Cambridge, ended at Queen's Club on the 11th December, in a win for Oxford by 35 points to 3.

Oxford's score of 4 goals and 5 tries not only constitutes a record for the match, but the two players who scored for the Dark Blues, Poulton (5 tries) and Martin (4 tries), each set up records for number of tries scored by one player in a 'Varsity game. It was hard luck for Martin, who might well have thought his record of 4 tries would stand for some time, to find it immediately surpassed by Poulton.

Oxford's remarkable win assumes even more meritorious proportions when it is remembered that they played only seven forwards throughout the game against the powerful Cambridge eight. This was due to the fact that Tarr broke his collar-bone in the first fifteen minutes, and that a forward was consequently required for the back line. At one period of the game Oxford had two players off the field, and still contrived to hold more than their own.

Another hero of the match was Cunningham, the Oxford skipper, who was badly laid out twice in the first half, and evidently suffered considerably from the shock of his falls. It was apparent to the spectators that he was playing mechanically; indeed, he seemed to work in a dream. But he automatically passed and ran, and throughout the second half controlled his side with excellent judgment. At the conclusion of the game he received medical attention, and was still suffering from the effects of his falls when he left the ground.

The game was one of the most extraordinary ever played on Queen's Club Ground, every member of the Oxford side playing a little above the top of his form. It was not that Cambridge played badly, but that the Oxford men had the day of their lives. A report of the match will be found in "Sport in England" further on.

We see it stated that His Majesty King Edward VII. has under consideration the presentation of a handsome gold cup to be raced for annually at one of the Newmarket meetings.

This would commemorate for all time his intimate connection with the Turf, for the condition of the gift would be that the cup should never be won outright, a small replica being presented to the winner.

No details concerning the race or the conditions of entry have yet been determined upon, and, indeed, His Majesty has yet to bring it under the official notice of the Jockey Club.

The Southern India Hockey tournament was brought to a conclusion at Secunderabad on the 29th ultimo. In the semi-finals the 61st Pioneers had defeated the 95th Russell's Infantry by 3 goals to nil and the 96th Berar Infantry had beaten the 97th Deccan Infantry by a similar margin. The 61st and the 96th met in the final on the 27th ultimo but the game ended in a pointless draw, extra time failing to produce any definite result. The tie was replayed on the 29th ultimo before a large attendance, an excellent game ending in a win for the 61st Pioneers by a goal, scored in the first half, to nil.

Sam McVea and Joe Jeannette, the two coloured heavy weight boxers, met for the third time in Paris on the 11th December. In their first contest about a year ago they fought out the scheduled 20 (3mins.) rounds and McVea got the verdict, but Jeannette made a host of partisans by the good show he put up and a second contest was arranged. This went 49 rounds and was won by Jeannette. Forty-nine rounds took a deal of digesting, but that wonderful curer Time worked its usual wonders and a final struggle for supremacy was fixed up between the two dusky warriors. This was to be a 30-round contest and a huge gathering of French and English sportsmen was present. McVea fought worse on this occasion than his previous form would have led one to expect and a well known authority asserts that the 49-round battle took it all out of him and he has never really recovered from its effects. On this night he appeared somewhat nervous. His famous left hook to chin had lost some of its old sting, his judging of distance was faulty, and he used his right only about a dozen times. A dangerous right uppercut, too, once possessed by him was conspicuous by its absence: in short Sam fought badly. On the other hand, Jeannette's boxing was most attractive. His frequent lefts to face, followed by right to kidneys, were meritorious. But his best efforts were when getting out of the way of those left hooks that he has had occasion to dread. He ducked most of these beautifully: time out of number that particular blow sailed through space, whirling McVea off his feet. The match has left the French public still in doubt as to which of the two is really the better man. Will it lead to a fourth match in Paris? Not once during the 30 rounds was either man down as the result of a blow, although McVea slipped several times. Up till the 20th round Sam appeared to hold a slight advantage on points and neither man had been in distress. But from that moment, Jeannette's extraordinary stamina began to assert itself and his opponent's gradually fell off. When the 30th round had arrived it was evident that Sam was not sorry. He had weakened, whereas Jeannette was cutting out a rare pace. A few more rounds only might have placed victory in his hands. When the gong sounded a general pandemonium reigned and when something like order was regained the referee declared the match a draw. McVea's limit is 20 rounds while the full extent of Jeannette's endurance is yet to be seen. In the 49-round affair he finished up fresher than at the 6th. It is probable that Jeannette would never beat McVea except on points at the latter's distance, whereas every round after that becomes an odds on chance for Joe. Both men know this and it is probably safe to predict that the two have seen the last of their ring rivalry—at least for some time.

Now it is certain that Jeffries and Johnson will meet increased interest has been aroused in the doings of the two men. We learn that James J. Corbett, the ex-champion, is going into training with big Jem. Both will get absolutely fit and then they will indulge in a few serious encounters. The scene of operations is to be quite private, the only spectators being five in number—a couple of seconds for each man and a time-keeper. The bouts will go to a finish, or at all events for 30 or 40 rounds if necessary. Both Jeffries and Corbett will go all out for each other just as though they were fighting their championship battles over again. There will be three or four trial fights of this description with several days interval between them. Corbett is quite convinced that Jefferies will beat Johnson though the latter will probably score many points in the early part of the fight because he is so much better as a boxer, but he does not care for punishment and it is the opinion of J. J. C. that the coon is going to get a lot of punishment whether he wins or loses.

Mr. T. H. Drimmie and Captain Munro, who had tied for first place in the Asian Cup Golf Competition, played at Barrackpore during Christmas week with a score of 75 strokes for the 18 holes, met to decide the tie on Sunday and once again finished up level with a score of 77 each made up as follows:—

Drimmie	4, 5, 4, 5, 3, 4, 5, 3, 5=38 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 4, 5=39	Total 77
Capt. Munro	4, 5, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4=37 4, 3, 5, 4, 5, 6, 5, 3, 4=40	Total 77

They meet again next week. The score of 75 put up in the competition is a record for 18 holes at Barrackpore. It was composed as follows:—

Drimmie	4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 3, 4=37 3, 3, 5, 4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 5=38	Total 75
Capt. Munro	5, 4, 4, 5, 3, 4, 4, 4, 5=36 4, 4, 5, 5, 5, 4, 4, 4, 4=39	Total 75

No fewer than six individual centuries were scored in local cricket matches during the New Year holidays. The match between Cooch Behar and Ballygunge provided two, Robson making 116, and Prince Hitendra 106. Two were also compiled in the match between St. Xavier's College and the Bhukylesh Sporting Club, A Klemis scoring 109 not out and L. Ford 109 for St. Xavier's. Banda retired after making 137 for Nattore against the Berhampore College, and J. C. McLeod put up 109 for Calcutta in the second innings of their match with Ballygunge. Earlier in the week the Cooch Behar team supplied two more scores of over 100, Robson making 135, and Lewis 204 not out against Eastern Bengal and Assam. Lewis' score is the second highest compiled at Woodlands. Prince Hitendra's 226 not out against the Pilot Service two season's ago being the highest.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—After a lapse the Third Extra came up for consultation on Saturday and what with eight events, occasioned by the splitting up of two races, and a big attendance, sport was good. Two of them did the pencil brigade well, but the other half dozen more than made up for these, and they again had a bad time. The newly landed ponies made their first appearance and the public managed to get on the winners of both divisions. As a whole, the new ponies promise to be above the average, a large number are in training and the general run of them are good.

Brown, the jockey, again had a great day out with four winning mounts, and his riding is such that the public have great confidence in him. Evans arrived rather unexpectedly and rode the winners of the first two events. He proposes returning to Calcutta and again coming here in time for next Saturday.

To turn to the racing, the first of the new divided races saw Khandala and Padsha in most demand, though money at a nice price came for Prince Rudolph. This last pony was out in front from the start, and his supporters never had much doubt as to his beating Padsha. Evans, however, rode a patient race on Khandala and, putting in much the strongest finish of any of the three, won a most exciting race.

He again had the mount on the favourite in the next, Zaeed, but again all his careful nursing was necessary to pull it off. Getting the best of the start, he led Temptation, Golden Measure and Crown. Temptation ran wide at the turn, but Crown, passing Golden Measure, put in a great run and only his swerving enabled Zaeed to win without Evans resorting to extreme measures.

In the first of the Desert Plates there was never a decided favourite, Maimoon and Nishan being in prime demand at threes from Yacoob and Zari.

Afreed ran rather an erratic course, after which he did well to place. Nishan cut out the running from Yacoob and Maimoon, both of whom were well set when it came to racing. Zari was the dangerous one, and Nishan was fortunate in that the former had to be pulled about quite a bit in order to get through at all. Even then the margin was a very narrow one.

A BETTER lot were seen out in the second though the three topweights scratched. In their absence two of the same stable found most money, Creditor and Shanwar, the former an odds on chance. As usual, Vedas cut out the running with Chechan and Shanwar his nearest attendants. Creditor put in an appearance on rounding the bend, and he and Shanwar began to draw away from the others. Though there was nothing in it till just on the post one felt Brown on Creditor had a bit the better of it all the way. This pony, on the strength of a leg, has been kept very quiet since changing hands, but there was no mistake now when the stable elected to get him up to the mark. Rajput for once failed to place, Chechan staying on.

AFTER twice providing absolute "moral" T.M.S. was again thought certain to win the New Year Plate; Not Yet and Alruna next in demand. The favourite led his field all the way to well past the distance, and so well had he appeared to be going that her shutting up came as a great surprise. Not Yet was first to deprive her of the lead and was all over a winner till Milner came with a wet sail on the outside and pipped her on the post.

BEARING his last performance in mind, when he was made rather too much use of, Dhafer was confidently plunked for in the mile Moderate Plate, Colaba, Hadee and Lapwing next in demand. When the barrier went up Dhafer took the lead, but was given a steadier when Spearmint and Shawcutt went to the front. As they came down the stretch towards the bend, Thaboor assumed third place, and he came up to lead in the straight. Dhafer had not here been going too strongly, and when he made his effort he had but little left in him. Colaba and Lapwing, who had been absolute last for half the journey, tackled Thaboor down the straight but the bay managed to stay on. On this running, Lapwing went over to Mr. A. S. Oomer for Rs. 3,000 and a pony thrown in.

ON paper the Selling Plate looked very open, but on it being stated that Zamorin had returned to his last year's Bombay form he was made warm favourite. He was always well up in the running with Waziristan and Well Done and was able to stay out Hoodaib's run in a very pretty finish. Zamorin's win may be attributed more to the way in which Brown saved him than to anything.

THIS youngster was thought to be on another good thing in Sabaktakin for the Little Maiden Plate, but things looked very black for a time. Lieutenant was left standing and the favourite was seen in the ruck of those that got away. Young Achilles and Royal Realm made the pace, the latter wearing the other down in the straight. Injabukh put in a run passed both of them, but from the bend Sabaktakin had begun to pass his horses and it was only a matter of whether they had far enough to go for him to catch the leaders. He came so fast, however, that he soon put his supporters out of their anxiety, and by winning put up a wonderfully fine performance.

THE English cricketers in South Africa began their first Test match at Johannesburg on Saturday. The South Africans batted first and were all out in the first innings for 208. England made 147 without the loss of a wicket and completed their first innings on Monday for 310, Hobbs contributing 89 and Rhodes 66. At the close of the second day's play South Africa had made 124 for three wickets and on Tuesday were all out for 345, Faulkner scoring 123. England had made 144 for seven wickets when stumps were drawn.

JOHN ROBERTS, the billiard champion, is now at Karachi meeting several local amateurs. His first match on Monday evening at the Karachi Club was with Mr. Brachie, of Messrs. Finlay Muir, to whom he conceded 663 points in 1,000, winning by 191 points. The champion's best breaks were 108, 78, 69, and there were many in the fifties.

MR. SIGISMUND GOETZE, the painter, once painted his own portrait. "I designed it as a birthday surprise for my mother," he says, but one day left it exposed in the studio, instead of, as usual, covered up. Of course, my mother chose that very afternoon to call, and equally, of course, she 'spotted' the portrait. 'Who is that?' she said. 'Oh, a man I've been painting,' I replied, instantly feeling several sizes smaller; a shrinkage which continued almost to vanishing point when my mother after another look at the picture, said, severely, 'Why do you waste your time on such uninteresting people?'

London Week by Week.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Friday, 17th December 1909.

IT looks, at the time of writing, as if the weather prophets were going to be right and that the genuine old "white" Christmas they promised us is about to eventuate. A cold blast, which started from Russia two days ago, has got as far as Germany and is expected to reach us to-morrow. Very keen easterly winds and some snow have been our lot since Thursday morning and practically the whole of the South of England is now under snow. The rigours of the English winter have already killed two polar bears and a walrus at the London zoo. Yet we survive. Doubtless we are a great people!

RUGBY football has arrived at the honour of having a Saturday "Rugger night" in London, and the event was duly celebrated with great enthusiasm last Saturday. A year ago the celebration in London of the honours due to Rugby football, silently organised by the young University men who came to town to see the annual match between Oxford and Cambridge, and carried out to the accompaniment of record noise, established the festival.

Suitably to prepare for the occasion on Saturday the Empire Theatre, which is the hub of the festival, enlisted twenty-five extra guardians of great height. They removed all chairs and settees from the lounge and opened the doors, determined to do their best to carry out the programme. The programme was carried out, but the audience never heard the band. The cheers killed music and conversation, and did honour to all who are responsible for the health of the young men.

There was no bad temper about the proceedings. There were a few wild rushes and occasionally a too demonstrative undergraduate was put out—a hero to the crowd in the street. The management of the Empire Theatre, knowing the difficulty of getting such an audience out, rang down the final curtain twenty minutes before the usual time. At this hour the other theatres in the neighbourhood were also emptying, and the streets were alive with vehicles of every sort and thousands of people on foot.

To assist the police in directing this traffic became at once the object of some of the leading lights of the "Rugger" celebration. Tall young men in evening dress stopped cabs and motor-cars, keeping them standing or ordering the drivers to proceed—whichever was most confusing—and in five minutes did more to upset traffic regulations in Leicester-square than anything short of an earthquake would have done.

Before 11-30 the restaurants about Leicester-square, Coventry-street, and Piccadilly-circus were full to excess, and some had to close their doors against the crowds of enthusiastic young men. By one o'clock there was silence again in the streets.

LORD ROBERTS made a stirring appeal the other night when he spoke of our unpreparedness not only in flying machines and war balloons but in practically all matters of imperial defence. He spoke of the "valour of ignorance," but unfortunately his words seem only to be appreciated by the few who know. The valiant ignoramuses are in the majority and they are ignorant because they do not want to learn.

It's so easy to say that "Bobs" is a crank. He was good enough to pull us out of the South African muddle and restore our rather battered self-respect, but when he tells us that we are in grave danger unless we wake up and look to our arms nobody seems to listen to him. Yet, if trouble were to come suddenly, we should all cry aloud for "Bobs" to come along and help us.

The semi-official answer to Lord Robert's warning is characteristic—our go-ahead authorities see no reason to believe that we are falling behind. Are not we at last building a dirigible that is something more than a toy? Let us forget that Germany has already built three or four, and is building more. Has not the British Army the use of one whole aeroplane, very kindly lent by Mr. Rolls? What more can we possibly require? As to the others, let them understand that the appearance of any Power with an aerial fleet in being will be regarded as an impertinence.

LAST week Mr. Lloyd George broke down and wept when he promised not to desert Carnarvon for Cardiff at the General Election. The pretty incident conjures up the picture of a brave sailor standing on the beach during a storm and vowing in a voice broken by sobs, that he will never, never leave his native land—at all events till the weather moderates.

A PLAY called "The King's Cup," was produced yesterday afternoon at the Adelphi Theatre by Mr. Dennis Bradley and Mr. E. Phillips Oppenheim. It cannot be said to be very original in idea; in fact, it is obviously based upon "The Prisoner of Zenda," and deals with British-imaginary Balkan States in the imaginary way of the original.

The hero is a captain who becomes king, the heroine an American heiress who becomes his queen. Mr. Brand, the traditional stage newspaper correspondent, is Sherlock Holmes, Pressman, political agent, and successful lover of the only other lady in the case, and the Russian Ambassador is the villain, and love's true course—in a purely British false-romantic fashion—is the point of the piece, which, none the less, has some snap and go, and seemed to please mildly.

Mr. Bryant made a fine figure as King; Mr. Nye Chart put up the "duds" as a Duke; Mr. Paul Arthur as newspaper correspondent; while Miss Nina Sevening and Miss Norma Whalley shaped decoratively in their respective rôles, and wore some pleasing dresses.

THERE is often some reason to complain that a play professing to be written for children contains much that is above the heads of children; but no such fault can be found with the new piece produced at the Garrick Theatre on Saturday night. "Where Children Rule," by Sydney Blow and Douglas Hoare, with music by Edward Jones, contains, as far as we could discover, no under-lying meanings. It tells a simple story so simply that the youngest child cannot fail to follow it. It has no pretentions to be considered as anything more than a light, bright entertainment for the youngsters.

The play opens in the home of the Pennyfathers—a decidedly slack household. Mrs. Pennyfather is so slack that the servants won't stop; Mr. Pennyfather forgets to pay the taxes and to have a broken bell repaired; and the unfortunate habit of the pair of putting off till the morrow the things they should do at once so displeases their children, David and Elizabeth, that they set out for the Land where Children Rule—a place discovered by David who is a boy scout.

Outside the land they find a number of children chained to desks and made to do lessons by a schoolmaster who had captured them; but David is able to signal to the Land for a rescue party, which arrives with a drum and fife band and sets the captives free at once. Inside the land is a remarkable state of topsyturveydum, for there is a spell over it all that causes the grown-ups to obey the children. At the sound of a bell middle-aged people scamper to a puss-in-the-corner class; and those who offended, like Mr. Jorrocks the huntsman, who was cruel to animals, are made to stand in the corner or sent to bed.

Trouble is threatened by the schoolmaster who comes into the Land disguised as a boy, and plots with a youth whose voice is beginning to break, and who therefore expects shortly to be a grown-up himself, to break the spell; but this villiany is discovered by the boy scout, and the children go on ruling.

Sufficient has been said to indicate the nature of "Where Children Rule," but it should be added that there is introduced a great deal of irrelevant matter which makes for prettiness and interest. Unlike so many plays of the kind, "Where Children Rule" does not suffer from an over-abundance of songs and choruses—indeed, it would be the better for a little more music.

MISS MAUD ALLAN, whose slightly adorned beauty was the subject of so much discussion in this country, is now touring in Russia, where she appears to be quite the rage. The mere fact of a lady braving the Russian winter in such inconspicuous attire has doubtless filled her audiences with admiration. Personally I should do in Russia as the Russian does, and sport a fur coat in preference to the most cosy string of beads.

IN a recent address on "Some Theatre Matters," at Hampstead Mr. Grenville Barker said the rent of a London theatre ranged from £8,000 to £12,000 a year, and the weekly running cost was about £1,000. That meant that unless 30,000 people at an average of 4*s.* a head went to see a play in six weeks the manager would call it a dire failure. Therefore, they could not get a play produced in London unless the manager thought 30,000 people wanted to see it—and probably he would not produce it unless he anticipated that 100,000 people wanted to see it. The present organisation of the theatre was wrong, and to remedy it they required a national theatre in London, municipal theatres in the big cities, and a "circuit" system in the smaller towns. As to the Censorship, he would like to have it exercised through licenses by the local authorities, for he would rather see the theatre ended than have it more or less ignored as it was to-day by Imperial and local authorities.

THE unfortunate Mr. Adolph Beck, who died on Thursday, may be regarded as a martyr whose blood has proved the seed of the great Church of Justice. The tragical story will be fresh in our readers' minds. The unhappy man was convicted and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude for frauds on women of a particularly mean and cruel character, and by what was a mere technicality Mr. Beck was deprived of the opportunity of disproving his identity with a man named Smith, who in 1877 was convicted of similar frauds. It was only by the occurrence of a third series of frauds by the original Smith that Mr. Beck, after a period of imprisonment, was enabled to establish his innocence. He was released and received £5,000 compensation. Then the committee, consisting of the present Lord Collins, Sir John Edge, and Sir Spencer Walpole, was appointed, and reported. The public mind was disquieted, and the result has been the establishment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, the value of which has been amply recognised by several of the judges. If such a tribunal had existed the misfortunes of Mr. Beck would have been impossible. The story constitutes an interesting chapter in the history of English law.

I TOLD you in a recent letter of the charge of assult brought by Mr. H. D. Colles, the musical critic of The Times, against the husband of Madame Clara Butt, one Kennerley Rumford. It ended in smoke. When the case came on for hearing Mr. Rumford apologised and this having been accepted by the injured critic the big crowd who thronged the court keen on scandal or fun left disappointed. Ah, well, the advertisement was not a bad one perhaps.

IF Sir A. Conan Doyle weren't so busy preparing to provide us with Christmas amusement he might have refereed the big fight between Jeffries and Johnson. This week he received a cabled invitation from the committee which has charge of the arrangements in America for the forthcoming fight between Jeffries and Johnson to cross the Atlantic and act as referee at this battle for the heavy-weight championship of the world. Sir Arthur, although greatly pleased by the offer, has had to send a cable regretting that he is unable to accept it. Just now he is busy with the rehearsals of his "drama of the prize-ring," called "The House of Temperley," which is to be produced at the Adelphi Theatre on Monday evening, 27th December.

HERE is an item from the criminal reports which may startle some of your readers; I extract it from an evening paper:—"On a charge of criminal breach of trust as a public servant in India, Ian L. W. Dalrymple-Clark, an elderly man, of Conduit-street, W., was remanded at Bow-street to-day.

When arrested he denied the charge, and said the proceedings had been taken by the Government out of spite.

Mr. Eddis, his solicitor (formerly of Calcutta), explained that he left Burmah three years ago, and that the charge related to a period between 1904 and 1908.

The magistrate, who said he was told the amount involved was something like a lakh of rupees (about £6,600), granted bail on hearing the India Office made no objection.

Review.

BRITAIN FOR THE BRITON.*

BRITAIN FOR THE BRITON is an ambitious work. It is a ponderous treatise on the great agricultural problem of Great Britain and an appeal for land, industrial, economic and other vital reforms. The writer's intention in producing this volume is succinctly given in the introductory chapter. Like the true imperialist that he is—the imperialist of the right sort we mean, not the man who constantly clangs out his false tocsin—Sir William sounds a warning to his country. It would be idle even for a Cabinet Minister to dub this note of awakening "harsh gibberish," and the most captious critic cannot fail to be impressed with the mass of truth that is held up to view. Hitherto, it seemed that this "hoary enigma" required only a Sphinx to solve, but it has fallen to the lot of the author to succeed where others have only partly succeeded; and no one has solved the riddle so clearly and so convincingly as himself. The book, which may be properly styled the case for the prosecution, is one of the most damning indictments of the people's long inertness. He attributes all the existing misery, all the poverty, all the evils to the indifference to the development of trades and manufactures concurrently with the agricultural resources of the country,—which is as true a saying as that India cannot continue to remain prosperous if the rulers are unfit to rule. An admirable insight is afforded in an early part of the book into the condition of countries like France, Germany and Hungary and the all-important part played by them in the question of national economy. The writer compares Great Britain with them and sums up judgment in one brief sentence, namely, every country in the world wisely conserves and jealously guards the greatest asset in the national life, and this fact is universally known and recognised—save in Great Britain. There is a chapter on how British agriculture was developed and how it might have been saved. Here and during the rest of the book doctrinarianism is loudy condemned as tending to stultify the progress of agriculture.

The author strikes a very melancholy note in his reference to emigration wherein millions of England's sons and daughters are goaded on to the leaving the country which gave them birth in order to avoid starvation. Nowadays it is sad to think when the flat is Japan for the Japanese, Germany for the German, that the Britisher cannot with any show of reason utter the same cry. Rather the contrary. Instead of the thousands of hardy, strong, vigorous men and women remaining a permanent asset to the country, they go to feed overseas colonies when the mother country should most need them; and, what is worse, swarms of undesirable aliens, to wit, nihilists, rogues and criminals of the very worst type are afforded a peaceful asylum instead. Truly a pitiable thing for even Imperial England! It is enough to make angels weep. There is a good deal said on the head of unemployment, which is equally sad reading, and several successive chapters on land tenure, wherein much argument is expended in exposing the fallacies of economic science in respect to agriculture, and the lengthy dissertation on Free-trade principles is one sweeping denunciation of the Cobdenite theory. The writer naïvely asks, "If Cobden's policy for the last fifty years and more fallen in with the good of the rest of the community, should we be required to collect annually from over-burdened ratepayers the stupendous sum of £35,000,000 in Poor Rates and spend half of it in providing relief for the more aggressive form of pauperism our over crowded pauper establishments?" In short, the author's effort is to show up the fallacies of economic science in regard to agriculture. He bemoans the fact that Britain should be dependent upon foreign countries for her food supply and recounts the great disadvantages we should suffer in the event of a war with Germany, for instance. "Britain for the Briton" is one long jeremiad from beginning to end. Withal there is a note of optimism running throughout, and if the fatalists against whom such a tornado of argument, ridicule and sarcasm is directed, could see themselves in true perspective, even through Sir William's spectacles, we have little room for doubt that the author will break into glad psalmody, but we fear that will be a long time yet—not in the present generation at any rate. The book is doubly fortunate in that it is launched at a time when one of the most notable Budgets of modern times is agitating the pulse of England.

A THREE-CORNERED FIGHT.

THE gaunt grey timber wolves (so destructive to calves, yearlings, and colts, and even to full-grown cattle on our Western ranges in winter) always attack their victims from behind. If a wolf gets a yearling's hamstrings cut its death is certain. Even the largest steers thus disabled are at the mercy of the big wolves. And the same instinct which leads a wolf to attack these animals from behind moves it to guard its own hind-legs in a fight with dogs, and there are few dogs that can kill a veteran grey wolf if it will but fight. It is said that wolves are cowardly creatures, but this depends algether upon the mood of the wolf when attacked. If you get a wolf scared and on the run, with dogs behind it running in a pack, the chances are that they will kill it when they catch it if they stick together, because the wolf is winded and because they attack it from behind, nipping its legs which seems to take all the grit out of it. But this does not mean that a wolf will not put up a mighty stiff fight against big odds when it is in the mood for fighting. It often happens, where dogs of different endurance are following an experienced old wolf, that it will suddenly turn on the foremost dog, far in advance of the others, sit upon its haunches, and cut the dog to pieces when it comes up, then the next and the next as they arrive; then buckle down to running again before the bunch of dogs and the hunters arrive. If several of the foremost dogs run in a bunch, however, and begin to nip the wolf's legs making it turn upon them, when they all throw themselves upon it, there is little or no show for it—one or two hounds getting it by the hind-legs and the others by the throat and pulling it to pieces.

One of the exciting features of wolf-chasing with a mixed pack is to note the methods of different breeds in overhauling a grey wolf. If there are greyhounds in the pack they will generally be in the lead, with the Russian wolfhounds a close second. After these will come the pure-bred fox or deer hounds, and behind them the hounds of mixed breed, with those part blood-hound among the foremost of the mixed pack and those containing a strain of bulldog or fox-terrier last of all. The scrappiest hounds will be the ones furthest behind, while those nearest the wolf will be the ones remarkable more for fleetness than fighting ability.

The better trained a hound is, the less likely is he to attack a big wolf single-handed. He will nip the wolf's hind-legs, causing it to turn on its pursuer, when the hound will spring to one side and continue to spring out of the way if the wolf continues its rushes. If the wolf stands still, the hound stands still too and watches it until the approaching dogs force the wolf to take to its heels again, when the hound follows it again, nipping its legs and thus worrying it until the slower dogs arrive and throw themselves upon it, when the hound attacks with as much fury as the others; so it cannot be said that it is cowardice on the part of a well-trained greyhound in not attacking a wolf single-handed, but rather that its good sense teaches it not to do so.

The same may generally be said of a Russian wolfhound or any other fleet hound of good breed trained on wolves; but if there happens to be no greyhounds or wolfhounds in the pack, and a fleet deerhound with a strain of bulldog overhauls the wolf first, and it turns upon him, this hound will not exhibit the same good sense, but will throw himself single-handed alone upon the wolf, and perhaps gets badly whipped before the slower dogs arrive. Another evidence of the good sense of greyhounds is that, if chasing two or more wolves strung out across the prairie same distance apart, and they overhaul the hindmost wolf, they will worry it until the slower hounds arrive to tackle it, when these fleet hounds wheel and continue after the other wolves ahead, taking no part in killing the first one. This from their own instinct, too, and not because they are urged on by the hunters, who have not yet arrived on the scene. As fast as they overhaul the remaining wolves they stop them by snapping at their hind-legs, retarding their speed until the other dogs arrive. No timber wolf will continue to run with a hound close enough to be snapping at its legs; rather, it will turn and try to kill or disable this foremost hound.

That a wolf will sometimes fight with sublime nonchalance was proven to me by a scrap I once witnessed between a big grey wolf and my two dogs, which I (then a small boy) thought no animal in the world could whip. I was about ten years old at the time, with a young brother about eight. As we were both too small to be of much use in the field, we stayed at home most of the time. We had two large dogs, about the size of full-grown setters but built more like bulldogs. I do not know what breed they were, but they were scrappy, spunky dogs, good fighters and not afraid to tackle any dog that came along. Our farm lay on the edge of a prairie, with a deep canon and some timber to the east of the field, with a wide stretch of open prairie to the west. One morning a gaunt, shaggy, grey dog (as we thought) ran through the field some distance below the house, coming from the west. When it got to the canon it stopped and sat upon its haunches and looked back at the house. As our dogs had not seen it, my brother and I took them down into the field and put them on its track, while it still sat upon its haunches and watched us. Even when the dogs began to bark and run towards it, it showed no inclination to run, and, as it was against the sky-line, it looked twice as large to my wondering eyes as it really was. As I got closer I could not help thinking, young as I was, that it was a peculiar-looking dog. Pretty soon the dogs made a break for it barking and growling savagely, as though they would tear it to pieces before you could count ten. But that old wolf simply sat there and waited. We were following at top speed, anxious to see the fight. When they reached the wolf we were some forty yards away.

Well, that old wolf simply sat there, cocked up on its haunches and fore-feet, and whipped those two dogs as easily as if they had been puppies. It would wheel around on its haunches quick as lightning and snap at one of the dogs every time he came within reach, and cut a hole in him. Not once did it get upon all four feet to follow the dog and thus expose its hind-legs. In five minutes it had both dogs whipped—lying out on the grass, crying and whining—while my brother and I tried to sic them on again. But no! We had no gun, so could only stand and look on while that wolf still sat on its haunches and watched the dogs and us, as if perfectly willing to continue the fight whenever it suited the dogs to renew it. But finally, as if satisfied that they had had enough, it got up, and scarcely deigning to notice us, loped off down the canon, while I coaxed the dogs home, and it was three weeks before they were fit for hunting again. Young as I was, the incident made a deep impression, and is as clear to-day as if it had happened last week.

We had had one of these dogs a long time, and the other only a few months. They did not get along very well together at first, but had frequent fights and chewed each other up considerably, though later they dwelt together in comparative peace. They were never what you would call chummy, and in attacking the wolf they apparently did not try to support each other. They never tackled at the same time. One would sail in and get whipped; then the other took a whirl. Had they tackled the wolf at the same time, and got it up off its haunches and nipped its hind-legs a few times, the fight might have ended differently, though I am rather inclined to doubt it.—Isaac Motxs in Sports Afield.

Shooting.

GUN ACCIDENTS.

Gun accidents may be classed under two headings, unavoidable and avoidable. Obviously, of the former class it is useless to say much, for when a shooter is satisfied as to the reliability of his gun and cartridges, has made himself well acquainted with the flight of shot and its occasional eccentric behaviour, and, when shooting, takes every care for the safety of others as well as himself, nothing more can be done. But, unfortunately, many accidents that are said to have been unavoidable cannot rightly be called so for they frequently happen from ignorance of the gun's condition. The use of dangerous over-charges, the spread of shot, the distance at which it will inflict injury, and other conditions are all matters of which a man should have some knowledge before he begins to shoot, at least in company.

All such accidents must be considered avoidable, for no man has a right to amuse himself to the danger of others without first taking every precaution to diminish that danger as much as possible. It is his duty to know all there is to know about the powers of the gun and charge he uses, and when an accident occurs through him he should by no means be able to offer the excuse, "I didn't know," for, if he can truthfully do so, the accident could have been, and should have been, prevented

I know many men who have been shooting for years, some of them very good shots indeed, who know nothing about the flight of shot, beyond the fact that from their guns it kills up to a certain distance and occasionally beyond, and to this lack of knowledge not a few men owe the loss of an eye, or worse.

Experiments have been made by firing at a very large area covered with paper, and it has been found that although in most cases the whole charge at 30 yards was distributed within a circle of a few feet, yet in a certain percentage (I think seven) three or four pellets (generally close together) would be found at a distance of from fifteen to twenty feet from the centre of the main charge, having thus flown at an angle of about 40 degrees. Two accidents from this eccentric flight of shot have come under my notice—a man standing eight or ten yards out of the line of fire was hit in the knee with three pellets, and on another occasion, in a similar way, a man was hit by two pellets in the eye.

This angular flight is often caused by the pellets having been crushed out of shape as they travel up the barrel, and is the more likely to happen when soft shot is used and a choke bore gun. These pellets that go off at a tangent, fortunately have not the velocity of the main charge, but, nevertheless are capable of doing serious injury. When grouse driving, and the birds have kept low between our butts, I have had No. 3 from my neighbour's gun much too near my head to be pleasant; and even at 80 yards this size shot will do very serious damage. It is no uncommon thing to see a man shoot at a pheasant 30 feet above a beater's head, and I have known shot to glance from a branch and come down through a man's hat. A very risky shot is one at ground game when the ground is frozen hard, with any one at all near the line of fire; and yet hundreds of men take the shot and sometimes regret it. Many shooters when walking turnips or other root crops carry their guns with the barrels resting in the left hand, while the grip is in their right hand and the muzzles pointing to the left. Many a time have I seen them pointed towards the lefthand neighbour. It is far safer to have the rib resting on the right shoulder, from whence the barrels may easily be brought down into the left hand when birds rise. A friend of mine who had shot a great deal in India told me that he frequently had for a companion a young Lieutenant, and when they walked in single file this young man in front carried his rifle over his shoulder with the muzzle pointing at my friend's head. The latter persuaded him to change his method and carry it gripped by the right hand round the breech with the muzzle pointing ahead, and even then the Lieutenant frequently turned round to speak, at the same time pointing his rifle at my friend's waist belt. So the latter gave up the lecturing and walked in front of him instead of behind.

Guns are frequently closed after loading by snapping up the barrels a foolish practice, for it strains the gun, and a dangerous one as well, for when the gun is open the muzzles may be pointing to the ground; but on being raised to close the breech they are pointing at the head of the man in front. The correct way to close a gun is by raising the stock, not the barrels.

Many so-called fatal accidents should certainly be brought in as manslaughter, for they happen through rank carelessness. This is especially so amongst farmers. I have on many an occasion watched a farmer pointing and carrying his gun with the trigger-guard resting in the hollow of his left arm and the left hand gripping the heel-plate. As he ran to pick up a ferret the muzzles, being about on a level with his elbow, covered everyone behind him at intervals.

Moreover, they never have their guns attended to until it is absolutely necessary, and many of them have a "pull-off" of the very lightest description. Most of them use guns of the commonest make, and frequently so loose at the breech that one could easily insert a threepenny bit. For loads they will use powerful nitro powders which occasionally they mix with black; they take the most risky shots, shooting on the top of the fence or within 4 feet of a friend, and the wonder is not that there are so many accidents, but that there are not a great many more. The majority of them come from lack of knowledge and sheer carelessness.—Ejector, in the Field.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

At this time of year with Christmas close at hand, the holiday people seem to be too otherwise busily employed on Saturdays, and the day did not so materially increase the attendance as is generally the case. The weather, too, dull and inclining to drizzling showers, was not of a very tempting character; but under the circumstances the attendance may be taken as satisfactory in every department. Results:—

NOTTINGHAM.

The attendance at Colwick Park on Monday was, therefore, a trifle below the average. The River Trent had overflowed its banks to such an extent that much of the country within the environment of the Nottingham racecourse was under water; but happily the track itself was not reached by the floods, and the going, though heavy, did not in the least affect form, which worked out very much in accordance with the betting that preceded the majority of the events, not a single outsider coming to the assistance of the books. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE London clubs belonging to the First Division of the League cannot secure positions that leave them free from anxiety. Woolwich Arsenal showed some improvement in winning at Deepdale, but Preston North End, their victims, are among the lowliest teams, and at Tottenham the Hotspurs could do no better than draw with Bolton Wanderers—absolutely last in the list—while Chelsea lost at Bury to a side holding a slightly inferior record. With V. J. Woodward, their latest acquisition, scoring half a dozen goals for England against Holland at Stamford Bridge, Chelsea may consider themselves unfortunate. Their record now is superior only to that of Bolton Wanderers, and they are in a very bad way. Woolwich Arsenal have risen a little, but the metropolitan teams are among seven, any of which may find themselves falling to the level of Bolton Wanderers. By beating Notts County at Trent Bridge Sheffield United put themselves on terms with Blackburn Rovers, who could only divide the points at Bristol. The Lancashire club, however, retain the lead, having a better goal average and a match in hand. Liverpool missed a great opportunity of going up to the leaders by failing to beat so moderate a side as Middlesbrough. Unpleasant weather marred the enjoyment of most of the matches, and Manchester United's ground was in such a bad state that the match between the cup-holders and Everton was not commenced.

Maintaining their inconsistency, the Fulham team missed a splendid opportunity of improving their position in the competition among the clubs of the Second Division of the League. Meeting Lincoln City at Craven Cottage they appeared to be certain of victory, especially after the excellent form they had shown when beating Leicester Fosse a week previously and Tottenham Hotspur on Monday. They allowed themselves to be put off their game, however, by the bustling methods of the Lincoln men, and the match was drawn. Thus Fulham remained where they were in the League table, Leicester Fosse dropping below and Hull City going above them. Both Glossop and Derby County won their matches—the latter away from home—and are still first and second on the list, while Manchester City, beating Leeds City strengthened their position. Although Glossop hold a good lead at the head of affairs, the struggle at Leeds, is still a very open one with only five points separating the first from the seventh club on the list. Clapton Orient suffered another reverse at Barnsley, where Reason, one of their backs, who has been out of the team for some time, was sent off the field for rough play.

With Queen's Park Rangers suffering an unexpected defeat at home, Crystal Palace found their way to the head of the Southern League again. In Portsmouth the Rangers had formidable opponents, and a remarkable game at Park Royal produced 8 goals, of which the visitors were credited with 5. At Sydenham the Crystal Place team played up to their best form, and a victory by 3—0 gives them the remarkable goal average of 43—14 and 29 points in 21 games. Queen's Park Rangers, a point behind, have two games in hand, but their third reverse is a serious matter. They and Crystal Palace may often change places in the long struggle for supremacy, but at present they are beyond the reach of any other competitors. West Ham United have dropped to sixth on the list, Swindon, New Brompton, and Southampton, who each hold 25 points, being above them. Scoring all round was exceptionally high on Saturday, the ten games—play was impossible at Plymouth owing to the state of the ground—producing 46 goals.

As usual in amateur internationals England had an easy task in meeting Holland at Stamford Bridge on Saturday. Perhaps the score of 9 to 1 conveys a false idea of the victor's ability. The play was not so uneven, but the disparity between the sides was very marked in the matter of skill. Like all foreign sides the Dutchmen lacked finishing powers. Fast and determined they often attacked, but did not get in many shots, and their comparative failure in attack was the more noticeable, as England had only one back during the greater part of the game. England won so handsomely because of the superlative excellence of the forwards. Our amateur forwards have always been more brilliant than their professional brethren, and the five chosen by the Football Association for this occasion gave a remarkably good display. They were faced by fast, strong, resolute opponents who never tired, but by their clever footwork in dribbling and passing they forced home their attacks in irresistible style. A. Berry and V. J. Woodward were in great form on the right wing, and the old Tottenham amateur, now associated with Chelsea, on whose ground the game took place, scored no fewer than six goals. E. W. Williams, the outside-left, who is also ready to assist Chelsea when called upon, did well.

SPURS vs. BOLTON WANDERERS.—After a poor match, in which neither side showed any great amount of skill, the Hotspurs and Wanderers drew at Tottenham with the score at 1 goal each. The Clubs were promoted from the Second Division at the close of last season, and now find themselves in the last two places of the First Division, positions which they about merit on the run of the play this season. Yesterday Bolton were very lucky to escape defeat. The game throughout was in favour of the Hotspurs, but their old weakness, bad shooting, was again very apparent, and although Edmondson kept a fine goal for Bolton, many of the misses by the Tottenham front line were inexcusable. Bolton's goal came in the first half. Harris one of the Tottenham backs, fisted the ball when lying on the ground, and Baverstock scored from the resulting penalty kick. The second half was almost half way there before Tottenham got their equalising goal from a corner kick, Minter scoring. Right up to the last Tottenham pressed, but they could not get a winning point. In spite of the dismal damp weather there were fully 25,000 people present. Tottenham had then two new players, Elkin, a back from Stockport County, and Humphreys, a centreforward from Chelsea. Elkin did remarkably well, but Humphreys will have to undergo a course of training before he will be fit for First League football. Bolton were without their regular half-back line, Whiteside, Owen, and Marsh filling the places of Harder, Greenhalgh, and Wilkinson, and this line was their weak point. Hunter and McEwan, their wingers, played a capital game forward. Tottenham Hotspur, 1; Bolton Wanderers, 1.

PRESTON NORTH END vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—At Preston, before rather a poor gate, Preston North End met Woolwich Arsenal in miserable weather. Preston had Smith back, but the Arsenal lacked Sands, Stevens, and Hoare. Play in the first half was in favour of the home team, and after McDonald had saved several times and Bannister had struck the cross-bar Mountenay headed through. McLean soon after added a second point with a brilliant shot. Arsenal then rallied finely, and Buckenham and Neave scored, the half-time score being Preston, 2; Arsenal 2. The Arsenal inspired by their recovery, opened the second half in splendid style, Buckenham heading through after seven minutes, and Neave soon after registering their fourth goal in a remarkable fashion. Preston in the latter stages went all to pieces, but McLean scored a good goal for them. Arsenal 4; Preston North End, 3

BURY vs. CHELSEA.—Despite the miserable weather that prevailed, the visit of Chelsea to Bury attracted some 5,000 spectators. From a free kick Lindsay got through for Bury after seven minutes, but ten minutes later Mair equalised. Bradshaw then put Chelsea ahead, but Currie placed Bury on level terms before the interval Hibbert gave his side the lead. At half-time Bury were leading by 3 goals to 2. On resuming Bury opened in strong style and forced several corners, not one of which, however, led to a score. Chelsea then took up the attack, but the Bury defence held out. The game was strenuously contested, first one side and then the other pressing. Bury had, if anything, the better of the exchanges, but it was not until just on time that they strengthened their advantage, Kay scoring. Bury, 4: Chelsea. 2

Newcastle United, 1; Aston Villa, 0.
Sheffield Wednesday, 4; Notts Forest, 3.
Bradford City, 3; Sunderland, 1.
Bristol City 2; Blackburn Rovers, 2.
Liverpool, 0; Middlesbrough, 0.
Sheffield United, 2; Notts County, 1.
Manchester United vs. Everton postponed.

FULHAM vs. LINCOLN CITY.—After their recent run of successes Fulham were generally expected to beat Lincoln City at Fulham, but Fulham have previously been guilty of failing to give of their best before lowly-placed teams, and their form in this match was an instance of it. True, on their much-improved play in the second half they just deserved to win, but as they failed, the commendation must go to their opponents on doing so well.

By their play in the first half Lincoln City unquestionably sprung a big surprise. Time after time by speedy dashes, which were good to watch, their forwards brought the ball down, and on such occasions the home defence had to be exceedingly smart to keep in check a very determined line of forwards. After 20 minutes' play Hunter scored for Lincoln, and by this score Lincoln led at the interval.

Fulham restarted with a terrific dash in the second half, and within five minutes Brown equalised the scores. From that point, Fulham kept up a persistent attack, but in this they were handicapped by an injury to Harrison, who, in consequence vacated his position at centre forward to Dalrymple. Twenty minutes from the end, Fulham were awarded a penalty kick, but Charlton, usually a sure scorer, shot straight at Fern, and the ball was kicked away. Fulham were attacking strongly when the final whistle was blown. Fulham, 1: Lincoln City, 1.

AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL MATCH.

ENGLAND vs. HOLLAND.—The Amateur International match on the Chelsea F.C. ground at Stamford Bridge, resulted in an easy victory for England by 9 to 1, after only a moderate game. There were no more than 4,000 or so present, owing to the attraction at Queen's Club but the spectators included Lord Kinnaird, Lady Inverclyde, and several members of the Olympic Council, together with Herr C. A. W. Hischmann, vice-president of the Dutch F.A. There were no changes in the teams from those advertised. England took the lead from the start, and at no time during the game did the visitors look like getting on anything like equal terms. H. S. Stapley opened the scoring five minutes after the start, after a scrummage in front of Holland's goal, and Vivian Woodward headed through the second a few minutes later. The English forwards were much too good for the visitors' halves, and although the Holland backs, especially C. Van Nieuwenhuisen, worked very hard, they were unable to stay the rushes, and S. Brouwkes in goal was kept very busy, acquitting himself well. England scored six of their goals in the first half, Woolward obtaining the third, fourth, and fifth, and A. S. Owen the sixth. Holland's only point arrived about ten minutes before the interval, and was scored by the centre-forward. H. A. J. Kessler, after S. G. Brebner, in goal had already saved from Welcker. Just previously W. S. Corbett had retired with an injured thigh, and he remained off for the rest of the game, except for about fifteen minutes immediately after the interval. There was little excitement during the second half, but Holland's goalkeeper was warmly applauded for several fine saves, once fisting out three or four times in rapid succession. Holland's forwards showed plenty of pace, but they received little support from their halves. England's three further goals were scored by Woolward (twice) and E. W. Williams. During the latter twenty five minutes of the game it was difficult to follow the play owing to the failing light, and the last two goals were scored in semi-darkness. There was not much combination in the play of the visitors, who were always intent on keeping the ball out of their quarters. Their most conspicuous player was the goalkeeper, who brought off some grand saves. The backs, too, played a very hard game, but the halves were generally not distinguishable, devoting all their attention to defensive play, and leaving the forwards to look after themselves. Holland's outside wings displayed plenty of pace, but the English halves easily kept them in check. The most promising of them was J. H. Welcker on the right, who was occasionally left behind when his colleagues sprinted ahead, but it was his defeating Knight for possession of the ball that led up to Holland's only goal.

RUGBY RULES.

THE 'VARSITY MATCH.

THERE were quite 12,000 spectators at Queen's Club, West Kensington to witness the annual match between Oxford and Cambridge, and so far as these contests are concerned Cambridge were defeated by the record score of four goals and five tries (35 points) to one try (3 points). With the exception of Pyman who had not recovered from his recent injury, and whose place was taken by B. H. Holloway, the teams turned out as advertised. The Oxford side included seven Old Blues, and five Internationals, while Cambridge had nine Old Blues and one International. The ground had been well looked after and, notwithstanding the recent rain, was in fairly good condition. Anyhow, a slippery turf was supposed to be an advantage to Cambridge, who relied largely upon their forwards but the extent to which they benefited is somewhat problematical, judging by the score. As it turned out the Cambridge pack never got properly together and the only time they held anything like an advantage was during the absence of Turner, who was away thirteen minutes owing to a injury. Tarr was also off the field at the same time, but he having, as it afterwards transpired, broken his collar-bone, took no further part in the match. This occurred fifteen minutes after the start. Cambridge were beaten in every department of the game, except, perhaps, at back, in which position Atkinson made some fine saves. At the same time Honey, who took Buchanan's place—he being moved into the three-quarter line on Tarr's retirement—was not by any means a failure. In the matter of pace, resourcefulness, and combination, the Light Blues were hopelessly outclassed, but what, perhaps, was the most striking feature of the game was the way in which the Oxford forwards got the ball from the scrum. They heeled splendidly, and broke up with such alacrity as to quite disconcert their slower opponents. Individually, Poulton, who was only selected to play at almost the last moment, was the best man on the field. He scored five tries, and it was through a judicious kick of his across the field that resulted in Martin touching down. Gotley also played a conspicuous part in the Oxford victory, while for Cambridge Purves and Kennedy in the front rank, and Ashcroft, as stand-off half, did well. The Light Blue threes hardly brought off a single round of passing, and in comparison with the opposing centre line, cut a very poor figure. Before the interval Poulton scored three tries, the first of which Cunningham converted, and Martin one, for Oxford, while Purves got over for Cambridge. The first incident of the second half was a glorious dribble by Kennedy and Purves, which all the opposition of Oxford could not stop, and a score for Cambridge looked certain. Heroic measures by Honey prevented this, but Cambridge persisted time after time.

Oxford raised the siege, but again and again Cambridge returned, and the Dark Blues' defence was sorely beset in their early minutes of the second half. There was no penetrating power behind the Cambridge forwards, however, and Oxford were quick to seize the opportunity of turning defence into attack. Bouts of passing that must have thrilled the Oxonians present ensued, and ten minutes from the restart Poulton again defied the opposition and scored behind the posts. This time Cunningham was successful. Oxford were on the point of scoring again, with Atkinson fumbling and tackled over the line, but the Cambridge scrummagers got the ball away. It was only for a moment, however, and Gotley again set the line in motion towards the right, and the movement ended in Martin scoring at the corner. No goal resulted. Cambridge were by now mostly a demoralised side, and half-a-dozen Oxonians following up a wild kick by the defenders, which rebounded under the Cambridge bar, Martin was first to reach the ball and scored. Lagden added the extra points. Play seemed more equal for a time, but again a sudden movement set the Oxford threes going, and once again it was Poulton who proved unapproachable and scored, and Lagden was again successful. The Cambridge forwards at this point demonstrated that they were not done with, and they pressed the Oxford defence hotly. Grim struggles ensued on the line for many minutes but play was suddenly transferred. A dashing, dodgy run by Gotley, a quick pass to Buchanan and then to Martin, and the latter was over with the last try of the match and, Lagden failing with the kick, brought Oxford's total up to 35 points. It was in a way a triumph for Poulton, who in addition to scoring five tries, was the most conspicuous player on the ground: and this player, who is right centre for the Harlequins, played on the left wing for Oxford as though he had never played in any other position.

of the three Harlequin three-quarters originally selected was able to play. In the places of Birkett F. M. Stoop, and Poulton, A. C. Palmer, Hayward, and Spoors completed the three-quarter line, and Stranach displaced Wilson among the England forwards. The solitary alteration in the North team was Huck of Cumberland for McIlvaine in the front line. The weather was dull and threatening and the recent rains, which continued during the early morning, left the field at Birkenhead soft and slippery. As a consequence only about 2,000 spectators assembled. Punctually at half-past two a start was made and it was speedily seen that the ball would prove difficult to field and hold. At the outset there were some strong forward rushes on each side without result, though the North were speedily in danger, being penalised for offside about thirty yards in front of their goal. Thomas, however, missed his chance. Next Heads had a kick charged down and the North were again pressed, but Coverdale, with some short punts into touch averted the danger. Coverdale, indeed, played a superb game in defence. At the end of a quarter of an hour, the North for the first time threatened real danger. Pillman intervened, but Coverdale ran through and when collared, passed to Latham, who was tackled offside. From the penalty given for this Elliott placed a goal and the North led by three points to love. England, however, speedily gained the lead, for directly the game was resumed Sibree passed in midfield to Spoors and the latter ran in for a capital try, which Thomas converted. Then came a lot of football which, considering the wretched conditions, was excellent. Mobbs made one fine run only to be tackled and Coverdale was at times brilliant in defence and attack alike. The North had rather the better of the play towards the interval, Coverdale combining capitally with Chapman and Dodds, and the last named was within an ace of scoring. A little later, Elliott just failed in an attempt to kick a penalty goal and ends changed with England leading by 5 points to 3.

On starting the second portion England pressed and once got the ball over the line, only for Coverdale to reach it first, and promptly kick it dead. Seymour got away for the North, only to be overtaken by Wilson. Next Adrian Stoop "cross-kicked," and Spoors, catching the ball cleverly, ran in for England's second try. Thomas failed at the place, and then Spoors spoiled another chance by driving his wing man—Palmer—into touch. Williams in quick succession, got in a couple of splendid kicks, one from a penalty which hit the posts and rebounded into play. Then Pillman fielded the ball and gained a rather soft try, which Williams could not improve. Afterwards England had much the better of the play, and the North's chances were utterly ruined when Coverdale was injured and led off the field. Just before that happened Hayward scored from a pass of Stoop's—Palmer missing the extra points—and directly afterwards, Spoors let in Palmer while Woodhouse's charging down a kick of Seymour's, secured a sixth try. Palmer's try was made between the posts, but the London Hospital man missed his opportunity, and as the place kick in the case of the score by Woodhouse was also unsuccessful, England won by the handsome margin of 20 points to 3.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.—Promise of a long and interesting evening's boxing caused members to muster in large numbers at headquarters last Monday night, and they had no cause to be disappointed with the evening's entertainment, for some stirring contests were provided. Early on a punishing bout was witnessed between Ted Lee, of Canning Town, and Arthur Everenden, of Deptford, who were scheduled to contest ten rounds. There was very little to choose between them in the matter of weight, height, or reach; but Lee, during the earlier stages, showed himself to be the cleverer man. He had Everenden down and nearly out twice in the first round, and continued to increase his lead at the succeeding meetings, frequently getting in a hard right on the face. He had not sufficient power, however, to finish, and Everenden, recovering, nearly had his man beaten in the sixth round, when time came to Lee's rescue. There was very little to choose between them in the next three rounds, in which the exchanges were very heavy, and when they came together for the last time both had had quite enough of it. Towards the finish of the round Everenden sent his man to the boards with a hard left on the head, but Lee was soon up, and lasting to the finish the Canning Town man was given the verdict in a very close contest, Everenden receiving well-merited applause for his plucky display.

A fifteen-round contest, for £110 between George Gunther, of Australia, and Seaman Broadbent, of Portsmouth, was to have been the chief item in the evenings programme, but this proved of very short duration. Broadbent, who has made several appearances at headquarters, has always shaped well, despite the fact that he invariably appears to carry a lot of superfluous weight. The men met at catch-weights, and whilst the sailor was much the heavier, Gunther, who made a most promising début, and is a man of colour, was much the quicker, and had the advantage in height and reach. From the start they mixed it well, and the exchanges were heavy and fairly even. At the second meeting Broadbent forced the work to such an extent that when they went to their corners both seemed very tired. The Australian, however, recovered wonderfully, and getting in with both hands repeatedly, he had his man down several times in the third round, and well beaten.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

POONA, Quetta and the Navy were all represented at Sahar Hill last Bye Day and it was fortunate that our hounds were able to show the visitors something of the sport enjoyed in this country. A quarry was soon unearthed on the north side of the hill, who took us past the church and through the famous nullah before reaching the Backwater. He lost no time in crossing the stream and the Andheri Road and the old enclosure, near which is the well in which hounds have fallen more than once, and on this occasion one of them had to be lifted out by means of a bucket and rope. From the Andheri Road hounds are let over a good line of sporting country towards Horse Shoe Valley. On the edge of it, however, the quarry climbs a steep part of the range of hills and on hounds splitting up they were withdrawn.

With time in hand, a second is picked up at the water main and once more the field are off in the Backwater direction. Running along it for a time, he crosses and climbs a hill the other side, leaving it on his way to Powai. Being turned, he climbs a small hill of such a stony description that the field elect not to continue. Eventually the Jack saves his brush in the Powai Hills.

THE Extra Meet at Irla was not very well attended last Tuesday and the dryness of the weather did not give much promise. At Chuckla hounds met with no luck nor did they along the Andheri Road coverts and in the Mango Tope. They are consequently taken along to Sunday Hill, and here must have surprised a jack under their very noses as they were close on him as he burst into the open. It was a very enjoyable run for about a mile on the grass-covered hills but the top of Marole Hill is too rocky for scent and they could not get no farther.

On approaching the Andheri Road again, hounds come upon another who takes them at a nice pace along it over good going. At Chuckla he takes to the woods, but being too closely followed has to come out again. Scent seems very catchy as they near Parla and we began to fear it would give out altogether. The jack, however, was apparently also in difficulties as he made for a small hut and, to the accompaniment of a general upsetting of the goods and chattels, was put an end to.

INSTEAD of two of moderate length, there was one long run on Thursday in a fresh direction, the meet being in the flats in front of the Jackal Club.

It was a very fair sized field that moved off as hounds were put to work and were soon in full swing. The quarry took them over the Melon ground at a lively pace and through country none too safe past the quarries and into the gardens. Turned out of them, he made along the full tank across cuttings and through the woods leading to the barracks. Nearing the church, hounds are close on him in the adjoining compound and he has to go his best to keep in front on the way to the creek. Before reaching it he turns back round the tank towards the village and at the churchyard is again almost caught as he sets his mask for the barracks again. He crosses the parade ground with the regiment at drill, cuts in and out of the bungalows and tents and then makes for the creek. Scent had been steadily weakening and, after following him for some time, hounds had to be brought back without achieving their object.

I. P. A. CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

CALCUTTA POLO CLUB vs. MAHARAJAH OF KISHENGARH'S TEAM.—These teams contested the final on Thursday last when, despite the fact that it was mail day, a very large attendance graced the game. H. E. The Viceroy and Lady Minto were present, Her Excellency giving away the cups at the close of the game. Play was fast and the match the best of the tournament. The visitors ran away at the start but Calcutta were not long in getting on terms and after a spell of level play they scored two goals in the final period and won by 6 goals to 4. Though beaten in speed the winners played a splendid game, Barrett and Graham were at the top of their form, while Atkinson at back gave a great display. For Kishengarh Thakor Rewat Singhji was most prominent and was well backed up by the Maharajah and Kanwar Ratan Singhji. Details:—

First Chukker.—The visitors had the best of this opening period and scored two goals, the Maharajah being credited with both points. Kishengarh 2 goals.

Second Chukker.—Calcutta did better this chukker but did not score, though an opportunity was given them from a free hit for a cross.

Third Chukker.—Campbell got on and hit a goal. A foul against Calcutta followed but the shot went wide. Fast and level play closed the chukker. Kishengarh, 2 goals; Calcutta, 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—A penalty against the visitors let Calcutta up and they equalised. Then the Maharajah got possession and put his side ahead with a long shot but they did not hold the lead long, for Calcutta managed to draw level again before the close of the period. Kishengarh, 3 goals; Calcutta, 3 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Kishengarh made great efforts to get ahead and a foul against Calcutta gave them a chance but Atkinson brought off a fine save. Kishengarh, 3 goals; Calcutta, 3 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play. Atkinson hit a goal for Calcutta, Kishengarh drawing level shortly after. Kishengarh 4 goals; Calcutta, 4 goals.

Seventh Chukker.—A very level and hotly contested period. The ball travelled all over the ground and the score remained unchanged.

8th Chukker.—A foul against Kishengarh almost resulted in Atkinson scoring but the Maharajah saved in great style. Atkinson was again prominent for a good run, his final effort going wide. Then Barrett got through and put Calcutta ahead and Campbell scoring another goal put the issue beyond doubt. Final Score: Calcutta, 6 goals; Kishengarh 4 goals. Teams:—

LAHORE TOURNAMENT.

10TH ROYAL HUSSARS vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—This game was played on the 28th ultimo ending in a win for the Hussars by 9 goals to 4. A tough struggle was anticipated but the King's Dragoon Guards did not play up to expectations, and the 10th displaying wonderful combination won as stated. The game was rather sticky at first but after each team had scored a goal, play improved; the 10th always had the upperhand and at half-time led by five goals to one. The fourth chukker was well contested, the Hussars adding three and the Dragoons two goals to their respective scores. Play continued very fast and neither team scored in the next period, but in the final chukker they registered a goal each. Teams:—

10TH ROYAL HUSSARS.		K. D. GUARDS.
Capt. Hon'ble E. Meade ...	1	Mr. Hatfield ...	1
Mr. Palmes	2	Mr. Weinholt ...	2
Col. Vaughan	3	Mr. L. Chempe ...	3
Maj. Sir J. Milbanke (back).		Capt. Wickham ...	(back).

12TH ROYAL LANCERS "B" vs. 10TH LANCERS.—These teams put up a capital game on the 28th ultimo, evenly contested and exciting throughout. The 12th drew first blood and still led by a goal at the end of the second period. But in the third the 10th equalised and each team scored again. The fourth period was devoid of score and in the fifth the 10th Lancers took the lead. Foster putting through. The last chukker found the 10th attacking once more but they were kept out for some time. At length Chambers put through and all the efforts of the 12th being unavailing the 10th won by 4 goals to 2. Teams:—

12TH ROYAL LANCERS "A" vs. PATIALA "A."—This game on the 28th ultimo was rather a one-sided affair: Patiala were without Colonel Chunder Singh, who had been hurt in a practice game, and the side lacked combination. The 12th pressed at the start and Bryant hit a goal: They had several chances of adding to their score thereafter but the second period was blank and it was not till after Patiala had equalised in the third chukker that the 12th scored again, Reynolds being responsible for the goal. After half-time the Lancers had the upperhand: Reynolds scores in the fourth period, Truman in the fifth, and two further goals being added in the last, they won by 6 goals to one. Teams:—

12TH ROYAL LANCERS.		PATIALA.
Mr. Bryant ...	1	Genl. Pretam Singh	1

36TH JACOB'S HORSE vs. 6TH CAVALRY.—These teams made their first appearance in the tournament on the 28th ultimo a poor game ending in favour of the 36th. Play was slow and sticky and the 36th outplayed their opponents winning by 6 goals to one. They opened the scoring in the first period, scored three goals in the second and led by 4 to nil at half-time. The fourth chukker brought their only goal to the 6th, the fifth was pointless and Jacob's Horse scoring twice in the last period won as stated. Teams:—

SEMI-FINALS.

10TH HUSSARS vs. 10TH LANCERS.—Played on the 30th ultimo the Hussars displaying their usual fine combination ran out victorious by 8 goals to 1. The Lancers played pluckily but were beaten for speed and tactics.

First Chukker.—The Hussars got away and Vaughan opened the scoring. He added a second goal shortly after and before the close of the period a third was registered.

Second Chukker.—A spell of midfield play was followed by a run by Beresford but this was stopped and the Hussars got away, Meade scoring, another run by the Lancers was held up and play returning to their territory Palmes scored.

Third Chukker.—Play was mostly at the Lancers' end but there was no score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers pressed but Vaughan saved and taking the ball on enabled Palmes to score. The Lancers showed up for a spell Chambers just failing to score. Then the Hussars rushed away and hit another goal.

Fifth Chukker.—A well contested period. Both goals were visited. A free hit to the Hussars was cleared and play ruled all over the ground till Goldie put in a fine run and scored a goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Lancers pressed but their attempts to score were foiled and play being transferred to their territory the Hussars scored again, the final score reading 10th Hussars, 8 goals; 10th Lancers, 1 goal. Teams as before.

12TH LANCERS "A" vs. 36TH JACOB'S HORSE.—The second of the semi-finals was also played on the 30th ultimo and resulted in a win for the 12th by 8 goals to 2. They were better mounted and quicker on the ball than the 36th, who played hard from start to finish.

First Chukker.—Up and down play, good runs by both teams but no score.

Second Chukker.—The 12th pressed throughout, Badger scoring twice. Reynolds and Badger also put in some good runs, their final efforts failing.

Third Chukker.—The 12th got away and Reynolds scored. Badger followed this up with another goal. A run by the 36th was next stopped by Reynolds and Bryant getting possession scored for the 12th. Fast play followed and once more the 36th got away, Allardice hitting their first goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Badger rushed down and hit a goal. Play was then in favour of the 36th who nearly scored on more than one occasion. The 12th eventually cleared their lines and Bryant getting away hit a goal.

Fifth Chukker.—The 36th continued to show improved form and Fagan put through. Play ruled all over the ground till Badger got possession and scored for the 12th.

Sixth Chukker.—No score the game ending in a win for the 12th by 8 goals to 2. Teams as before.

FINAL.

10TH HUSSARS vs. 12TH LANCERS "A."—These teams met in the final on New Year's Day in splendid weather and in the presence of a large gathering which included Sir Louis and Lady Dane. The game was a disappointing one, the Lancers did not play up to their usual form and were quite outclassed by the Hussars, whose combination was excellent. The final score was 10 goals to 2 in favour of the 10th. The Cup was presented to the winners at the close of the game by Lady Dane.

First Chukker.—The Hussars pressed and Vaughan opened the scoring. Midfield play followed till Palmes got possession and running down scored another goal. The 12th attacked at the close.

Second Chukker.—The 12th forced their opponents to hit behind but the free hit was not improved upon. The game was then transferred to the other end where after one unsuccessful shot Vaughan scored.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till Vaughan got away and hit a goal. Milbanke added another shortly after. Just before time Badger put in a good run but the ball went out behind.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars attacked but were kept out and Truman giving Bryant possession the latter got away and scored. Vaughan replied with a goal for the 10th and was again conspicuous for a fine run before the end of the period.

Fifth Chukker.—Vaughan hit a goal: a foul against the 12th followed but the free hit was cleared. The Hussars continued to attack and after one abortive attempt Palmes put through in a melee. From the throw in the 12th got away and Reynolds scored.

Sixth Chukker.—A well contested period. The 10th pressed and scored. Then the 12th had a spell of attacking but they could not get through and two more goals scored by the Hussars gave them a victory by 10 goals to 2. Teams as before.

THE NEXT VARSITY BOAT RACE.

INASMUCH as the Trial Eights provide the recruiting ground, as it were, for the vacancies to be filled up in the 'Varsity crews which will commence practice with the coming of the New Year, it should be instructive at the present time to make a critical analysis of the form of the several oarsmen with a view to discovering what sort of material is available, and whether it is likely to make for the strength or the weakness of the rival combinations, writes the special correspondent of Sporting Life.

Such an analysis, such a comparison of the material at the command of the presidents should at the same time serve to indicate the prospective standard of oarsmanship to which the rival combinations are likely to attain.

Now, in such an analysis it is the general form of individual oarsmen that will alone concern us. The form of the two sets of crews has little bearing on the subject, except in so far as uniformity in a crew suggests a more or less ready capacity and ability on the part of the several units to harmonise together, whilst raggedness in a crew would indicate the converse. But as in these Trial Eights the attention of the coaches is directed principally to the improvement of the individual, to the exclusion in large measure of advice as to the part each plays in attaining the cohesion of the whole, the comparison of crews need not long detain us. There was very little in it either way. For whilst the Oxford crews were above the somewhat poor standard of the past few years, the Cambridge eights were below average. Possibly a trifling advantage may be conceded to the Oxonians, special features about whose rowing were the obvious honesty of the work of all the oarsmen, a good point which cannot be equally granted to the Cambridge combinations; a fair beginning and finish to the stroke, which cannot with truth be admitted of the Cambridge eights; time as perfect as one can expect it in Trial Eights, and quite adequate rhythm. In blade work there was possibly little distinction to be drawn between them; but in leg work the Cambridge crews, as in the last nine years, appeared to possess a slight superiority.

INDIVIDUAL FORM.

When we come to a consideration of individual form we are on different ground. The individualistic aspect is, of course, of the supremest importance. And this, too, whether there are few or many thwarts to be filled in the 'Varsity crews for the future has to be considered, though naturally this is of somewhat less moment than the present. In this respect, then, let it be said at once Oxford stands in the more favourable position. Her Trials brought into prominence three or four very promising oarsmen, and one at least of considerable ability in J. F. Fleming the Old Etonian, who a year ago so sadly belied his great school reputation, possibly because his heart was not set on his work. This year, however, Fleming is rowing in greatly improved form. Following up his excellent work as stroke of the victorious Magdalen four in the four-oared races he did brilliantly at 7 in Hay's crew. He stood out head and shoulders above every man in either eight. He rowed a particularly hard blade, getting his legs to work quickly and driving the stroke home to a capital finish. How well he finishes is reflected in the instantaneous coming away of his hands from the chest, which may be likened to the rebound of a billiard ball from the cushion. His time is good, and in respect of rhythm he leaves little to be desired. Fleming's body work is a pattern for all: he is a splendid stylist. No other recruit at either University comes within measurable distance of Fleming. Millington Drake, a fellow Etonian and ex-captain of the boats, has unaccountably lost practically all the form he ever possessed: his hands are heavy and he is far too laboured.

One would pick out P. G. Pope perhaps as being the next best oar to Fleming. He has largely cured himself of a bad bucket forward, his swing and his length are quite long, and his rhythm quite good. He was rather over placed at stroke, however, being too slow into the water for that position. He does not quite get his work on at once but when he does it is undeniable. At No. 2, where he is certain to receive trial, he should do well in the 'Varsity crew.

A HARD-WORKING OARSMAN.

R. H. Owen, who rowed in the Wadham Thames-Cup-winning crew last Henley, comes easily into third place. He is rough but a real hard worker who spares himself not at all. In the race no one showed a greater swirl on his blade than Owen did. He has, however, a curious way of hunching his shoulders, and screws about far too much. Cured of those habits he should make a valuable addition to the 'Varsity crew, for which it is evident he will be wanted, most probably at 4. Pidgeon and Lloyd were both disappointing, and much had been expected of them. The former spoilt his work by pulling with his arms, whilst he frequently rushed his slide badly, the result of not getting his hands away smartly enough at the finish of the stroke.

Lloyd, of last year's Eton Henley eight, deteriorated sadly towards the end of practice, and in the race itself failed altogether to show his true form. He worked hard enough, it is true, but like Pidgeon did far too much with his arms and the upper portion of his body. He is quite a powerful oarsman, and if only he could lengthen his swing and get his legs to work quicker would be distinctly useful. He is certainly an oarsman worth persevering with. Fison, the New College Freshman, rowed a neater blade than any man bar Fleming, but he needs another year's growth before he can be really useful in a 'Varsity crew; at present he could not possibly undergo the strict training essential for the inter-'Varsity Boat Race. Nevertheless, Oxford are fortunate in being able to look to him for filling the responsible position of bow oarsman in the near future.

Nothing need be said regarding the other members of the crews; they were some distance removed from 'Varsity standard. Having now picked out the best of the talent, we may pertinently ask ourselves how this is all going to fit in to complete the 'Varsity crew. Three of last year's crew are again available in the president, Duncan Mackinnon, the secretary, R. C. Bourne and A. S. Garton, whilst A. B. Kitchen, who rowed in 1908, is also in residence, but it is scarcely likely that he will be called upon. This, then, will leave five seats vacant. Starting from the stern, a probable crew would be made up as follows:—J. A. Gladstone (bow), F. G. Pope, R. H. Owen, E. E. F. Loyd, D. Mackinnon, A. S. Garton, J. F. Fleming, and R. C. Bourne (stroke). C. A. Gladstone, of course, rowed in last year's crew for some little period, and would have occupied the bow thwart against Cambridge had not illness laid him aside.

AN OBVIOUS DIFFICULTY.

With the majority of the best Trial Eights men rowing on the stroke side there must be experienced an obvious difficulty in fitting at least one of them into the crew. Thus in the crew above Owen is given the third thwart, though he is a stroke side oarsman. But then so is Loyd, and neither Bickmore nor Lambert, the respective "3's" in the Trials, are up to 'Varsity form. It is quite conceivable that in the crew given above the oarsmen at 3, 4, and 6 may be variously changed about. For instance, Garton might take his old place at 4, and either Loyd or Owen go to 6, and it would not be surprising to find Loyd tried in that position; but he will need to work hard at eradicating the faults indicated if he is permanently installed there.

On one point one can be very clear and precise, namely, that the new talent referred to is better in itself than any Trial Eights have for some years produced. And what is more with the sole exception of No. 3 thwart, they can all be seated in positions where they can do their powers full justice. Taken altogether, the omens seem to indicate that a really first-rate Oxford crew will be forthcoming by March next.

Turning to Cambridge, the outlook can scarcely be said to be as hopeful. What measure of hope there is springs not from any talent discovered in the Trial Eights last Saturday, but from the fact that only two seats are likely to need filling in the 'Varsity crew. Of the oarsmen who rowed a year ago, there are still in residence E. G. Williams (president), G. Eric Fairbairn (Honorary Secretary), J. B. Rosher, G. L. Thomson, E. S. Horndige, H. E. Swanston and R. W. M. Arbuthnot. The latter, it may be remembered, came in as spare man at the bow thwart almost at the eleventh hour last March when Fairbairn developed influenza, which scourge had smitten Swanston before the day of the race, though this is not generally known. It is not unlikely, however, that Arbuthnot will fail to find a place in this year's crew.

The stroke thwart will most probably be occupied by Fairbairn; at bow Arbuthnot was not a success, having too light a blade to row behind a powerful oar like Swanston, who pulled him round time and again. Thus, bow and 4 may be the only vacancies, and for the former both Colin Stuart, younger brother of "D. C. R.," and H. J. Shields—the rival Trial strokes—are candidates. Shields, perhaps, showed the better form on Saturday. Keeping it longer than Stuart, who was frequently guilty of rushing his men, he was livelier too, has a longer swing, and certainly finishes the stroke out better than the "Hall" man. An exponent of the Jesus style, Shields would harmonise with Swanston, who also affects the self-same methods. Shields is also a possible stroke of the crew.

A LIKELY CANDIDATE.

C. P. Cooke is the most likely candidate for the fourth thwart. He rowed a particularly strong blade, and backed Shields up splendidly. He is a trifle stiff and awkward, however, his principal fault lying in his hurried sliding, which naturally affects his beginning. Of other candidates there are E. D. P. Pinks, the Colquhoons winner, a very powerful oar, showing a good swirl on his blade, but a trifle slow with his legs, and A. S. Lloyd, who, if he could only take it through in one piece, instead of stopping his swing going back, would probably be better than either of his rivals. What would undoubtedly make an effective Cambridge crew would be composed as follows, therefore:—H. J. Shield, H. E. Swanston, G. L. Thomson, C. P. Cooke or A. S. Lloyd, E. G. Williams, J. B. Rosher, E. S. Horndige and G. E. Fairbairn.

Now, it is beyond question that this new talent at Cambridge is not of the same high quality as that which we have singled out at the sister University. The only question to be considered is whether this Oxford material is quite such good class as that—consisting of Old Blues—in equivalent positions in the Cambridge crew. Between Pope and Swanston there would probably be little to choose; Thomson, however, would be given the vote as against Owen; Loyd and Lloyd could not well be discriminated between, but on present form, at any rate, many would have Fleming in preference to Horndige.

Individually compared in this way, a balance of advantage would seem to rest with the Oxonians; but in the case of the 'Varsity crews almost the converse of the Trial Eights dictum obtains, for here it is the collective form that matters most; the uniformity, the homogeneity secured, that counts more than individual excellence. As in Rugby football eight good individual forwards do not necessarily make a homogeneous pack, so eight fine oarsmen are not synonymous with a first-rate crew. Everything depends upon how the men settle down together. And at this we must be content to leave the matter for the present.

COOCH BEHAR VS. EASTERN BENGAL AND ASSAM.—This match, which was in progress when we went to press last week, ended in an easy win for Cooch Behar by an innings and 299 runs. The visitors batted first and were all out for 66. Cooch Behar made 434 for 4 wickets on the first day and after adding 10 runs to this total declared their innings closed. The Eastern Bengal and Assam second venture produced 79 runs, Wilmott taking 6 wickets for 33 runs. Score:—

CALCUTTA VS. EASTERN BENGAL AND ASSAM.—The return match was played on the 31st ultimo and resulted in another win for Calcutta, this time by 103 runs. The home team batted first and scored 208: F. H. Stewart (53) made his first appearance this season and was in excellent form. Craik (34) and Turnbull (30) also batted well. Hodgkins took 8 wickets for 59 runs. The Visitors began fairly well and scored 75 for the loss of 4 wickets, but the others did little and only 32 runs were added. Tweedie carried out his bat for a well played 36, Hodgkins 21 and Allen 19 being the only others to reach double figures. Lee took 4 wickets for 17, Quin 3 for 39. Following on, Eastern Bengal and Assam put up 52 for the loss of 3 wickets before time was called. Score:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. COOCH BEHAR.—The return match between these two elevens took place at "Woodlands" on Saturday and Sunday last, Ballygunge suffering the most severe rerverse they have ever sustained, the margin against them being no less than an innings and 242 runs, and this in spite of Cooch Behar declaring with only 7 wickets down.

The visitors had out about their best team with the exception of Bocquet, but they were hopelessly outplayed at all points of the game; with the exception of B. A. White and A. W. Shallow, none of the batsmen made any sort of a show at all: in the first innings 9 of them contributing 16 runs, and in the second, 7 of them, 14 runs between them. The game needs little description, and the scores appended speak for themselves; for the winners, Robson took a desperately hard hit 116, and Prince Hitendra, a stylish 106, though the latter survived more than one confident appeal for "leg before"; whilst for the losers, both White and A. W. Shallow batted very well indeed for their runs and were unfortunate in not being better supported.

At one stage in the first innings, Ballygunge had 80 up with 3 wickets down, and in the second, 125 up, also for 3, but they were all out for 85 and 145, respectively, figures that speak for themselves for the miserable defence put up. Scores :—

BALLYGUNGE vs. RANGERS.—For this match at Ballygunge on Friday last, neither club was at full strength, the home team being the worst sufferers in this respect, Yeoman, Skinner, A. Gould, Manders and Bocquet all being absentees for one reason or another, and the result, a win for the Rangers by 40 runs was not altogether unlooked for, or unexpected.

Winning the toss, the visitors sent in Cody and Tripp, and they were not parted until they had put on 84 for the first wicket; at this point, Cody was thrown out from cover point in attempting a rather short run and then several wickets fell in rapid succession. Hodges was bowled second ball, and Peake first ball, by White, Tripp well taken at short slip, Nugent and Wakeford in the long field, and Evans, nicely at mid off by D. S. Shallow, indeed had Alexander been caught in the long field off a tremendous "ballon," as he might have been had not Coulthard misjudged the catch, the whole side would have been out for less than 120 but as it was, 154 was on the board when the last wicket fell. White bowled extremely well, and had not the best of luck, Cody and Tripp being missed in the slips off successive balls before they had put up 50 between them; in spite of this, he had 6 for 56.

Ballygunge opened with a series of disasters, losing White and Horncastle before lunch, for 9 runs; A. W. Shallow and H. V. Low did nothing, and things were about as bad as they could be when Frost joined D. S. Shallow, who was batting very well. These two improved matters somewhat, but after Frost had been taken in the slips, and Shallow bowled, it was all over bar the shouting. F. Gould made a useful 16, and Whiteley the same number, but Peake proved too good for both of them, and with the last man out, the innings closed for 113. Peake certainly bowled grandly, his 7 wickets costing only 36 runs, but Ballygunge should have done better than they did, the attack at the other end not being so very deadly. The Rangers had a second knock, and put together 93 for 3, in the three-quarters of an hour remaining for play, Tripp being top scorer with another 42. Scores :—

BALLYGUNGE "A" vs. CALCUTTA "A".—The first elevens of these Clubs being engaged elsewhere, "the Rest" met at Ballygunge on Saturday and Sunday last, and a most enjoyable game resulted in a win for the C.C.C. on the call of time, by 69 runs, in fact the last wicket only fell to the fifth ball of the last over.

Winning the toss, Calcutta sent in Pope and McLeod, to face Barrett and Woodhams, but the start was not particularly auspicious, McLeod being bowled with his score at 8. Low then joined Pope, and between them they carried the score to 84, before the latter was bowled for a useful 33; Greenwell did nothing, being bowled second ball, but Curwen and Wilson made another useful stand, and between them made things look rather more cheerful for the visitors. After they left, Sewell knocked up 17 in quick time, but the rest did nothing much, and the innings closed for 174, Pope's 43, quite a good effort, being the top score for the side.

Ballygunge opened with McIntyre and Garth, but they did not stop long, and Best, who followed in first wicket was helped first by Coulthard, and then by Woodhams, to materially increase the total, Best being eventually bowled by Pope for an excellent 58. At the fall of the ninth wicket, there was nothing in it between the totals of the two teams, but Barrett and Eastgate upset all calculations, and between them added 45 for the last wicket, the total reading 224 when the former put one up to Pope with his individual score at 40, a really stylish innings.

Calcutta opened their second attempt with Pope and Low, and once again the former got going, though the latter did not stay long, being caught at the wicket when his score was 18; Sewell again hit up a brisk 24, and Pope another good innings of 32, but it was not until McLeod started hitting, that the fielding side's troubles began. Greenwell joined him when the score was 120, and it was not until after lunch when the total was 246, that McLeod was bowled for 109, an innings, which although perhaps somewhat unorthodox, was not marred by a single chance and though most of his runs were made on the leg side he occasionally got in a real good straight drive, or a nice shot past extra cover.

Greenwell was last out for a careful 43, leg-before-wicket to Barrett; he had several times been appealed against for obstruction, but the umpire on each occasion thought differently.

Ballygunge were set with 225 to win, one more than they made at the first attempt, and with about two hours to get the runs in, or to get out, but the first quarter of an hour practically settled the matter and after that it was a question of whether or not they could play out time. Barrett's, McIntyre's Mytton's and Eastgate's wickets all fell at the same total—14, and then Best, Peddie and Coulthard alone saved the side from absolute disaster, Peddie playing the game of his life. Five o'clock came (it had been arranged to go on until a quarter past "if there was anything in it") and there were still three wickets to fall, but just as there seemed to be a chance of saving the game, Hemmingway was bowled by Pope. Martin followed, and played an unusually cautious game for him, and with two minutes to go, Low started on the last over of the match; his first ball, a long bop outside the off stumps, Peddie had a go for and landed it safely in G. H. Treadaway's hands at point. Five balls remained when Woodhams, the last man, went in, but the light was very bad indeed, and the batsman could see nothing; he missed the first three balls altogether, and was bowled by the fifth of the over, as close a finish as could be wished for.

For the winners, Pope and Low bowled very well, their record being respectively 3 for 41 and 3 for 45 in the first innings, and 5 for 51 and 3 for 28 in the second; for Ballygunge, Coulthard alone could do anything, his record being 5 for 37 and 7 for 76, all the others being very expensive. V. Cooper being unable to play on the second day for Ballygunge, Low very courteously allowed Mytton to take his place. Scores:—

CRICKET IN MADRAS.

CEYLON vs. MADRAS C.C.—The second match of the Ceylon cricketers tour was played on the 29th and 30th ultimo and resulted in a win for the visitors by an innings and 87 runs. Madras batted first and by lunch time on the first day were all out for 113, Partridge contributing 61 runs. Ceylon then went in and when stumps were drawn for the day had lost five wickets for 229. Continuing on Thursday they carried their total to 300 for the loss of eight wickets and declared. Thornton and Goodman were the chief scorers, the former being bowled when only two short of the century Goodman making 79, while Wicks 46 also batted well. The Madras second innings was another poor display. At lunch time they had 3 wickets down for 43 and were eventually all out for 100, Ceylon winning as stated. Scores:—

CEYLON vs. MADRAS PRESIDENCY.—Played on the 31st December and 1st instant. Ceylon batted first and by lunch time on the opening day had registered 205: they continued to pile on the runs in the afternoon and were eventually all out for 308. To this total Goodman contributed 101, Forbes 48 not out and Thornton 31, while Mr. Extras was responsible for 43. Madras then went in and when stumps were drawn for the day had lost 9 wickets for 121 runs. Six were added the next morning when Tweedie was caught and the innings closed. Being 181 behind Madras followed on and did much better. Lunch time arrived with the score 135 for 6 wickets and they had raised this to 216 before the remaining wickets fell. With 36 to make Ceylon went in again but lost 6 wickets before the required runs were hit off, thus winning their third match by 4 wickets. Score:—

HE was somewhat eaten up with a mistaken consciousness of his own importance, and when he was making his great speech in the Muddlecombe Mock Parliament he noted that one of the local Pressmen appeared to be sketching him. When the "house" adjourned he button-holed the artist. "I believe—aw—you were—aw—sketching me. Isn't that so—aw?" he inquired. "That is so," replied the artist. "Well—aw—would you—aw—tell me what noospaper you—aw—represent—aw?" "I don't represent any newspaper," said the artist. "I design comic postcards."

Shows.

THE THIRTEENTH LAHORE DOG SHOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

THE 1909 Show of this annual institution was held on the 29th and 30th December last, and it is usual to hold the Show in Christmas week, a time when Lahore is full of visitors. The season has, however, its disadvantages, the programme for the week is so full of events that a two-day show occupies an inconvenient amount of time and the station is so crowded that it is often impossible for exhibitors to obtain accommodation for themselves and their exhibits. The management would help exhibitors considerably if they ran a camp and mess for their visitors and such an arrangement would no doubt add to the entries. At present owing to the accommodation difficulty and to the show being managed by a committee at a distance, Lahore is no longer the premier show of India. The inducements offered by the Dholpur Challenge Cups generally leads to the entry of a high class quality of dogs for competition in these events, but the show as a whole is now smaller than those at Calcutta and Simla, and apart from the Challenge Cups the prizes are of insignificant value. On this occasion the total number of dogs was 145, or exactly the same number as at the show of 22nd December 1908, but on that occasion the date, prior to Christmas, prevented many exhibitors from obtaining leave, and there would appear to be no reason for the small entry on this occasion beyond the reasons already mentioned.

But though the number of entries were comparatively few, the average quality was high, and in the case of some exhibits very high. In fact so keen and close was the competition for the Specials and some of the classes that the Committee were lucky to have secured experienced judges in Major Smith for bull-dogs and bull-terriers, Miss Moule for fox-terriers, wire and smooth, Irish terriers, and Airedales, Mr Lionel Jacob for the other classes, and Major Williamson for all specials. In a two-day show, there is ample time for judging, and the judges took advantage of the fact to consider their awards with the utmost deliberation and care. Nothing could exceed the extraordinary patience and trouble exercised by Major Williamson in judging the specials. So determined was he that all breeds should have fair play that he judged each class winner individually by points and placed them in order of merit by the marks they received.

The Dholpur Grand Challenge Cup was awarded to Mr. Lionel Jacob's little wire-haired fox-terrier Champion Jo Hukum, whose career has been so extraordinarily successful. He not only won the Best in Show Cup, but the Challenge Cup for the best dog bred by exhibitor in India, a trophy coveted by all breeders, the Cup presented by the Calcutta Kennel Club, and with the same owner's Jus Gladii, the Cup offered by Messrs. Max Minck & Co., for the best brace in the Show, any breed. Mr. Jacob's Billie Burke also won in open bitches for the third time and will therefore be a champion, but for the brace contest her owner preferred to couple a very smart puppy Jus Gladii with Jo Hukum. Jus is an extraordinarily good youngster, shown for the first time, he won firsts in all his classes with ease. He is a trifle soft in coat at present, but has a lovely head and expression, beautiful feet and legs, and showed himself in great style He is a worthy son of Champion To.

His Highness the Maharajah of Jind's kennel was strongly represented and two imported cockers, Rivington Quiver and Trumpinton Boss, won handsomely. The former, a bitch, was considered by Major Williamson the better of the two, she was placed Reserve to Jo Hukum for the Grand Challenge, and won the Challenge for the best dog, terriers excluded. The two cockers were also placed second to the two wire-terriers for the best brace, and two better cockers have never been seen in India. The Maharajah also won in greyhounds with Pretty Molly, a former Grand Challenge winner, and with his fine St. Bernard Pie, who won the best in show at Calcutta on one occasion.

A very noticeable exhibit at the Show was a smooth Fox-terrier dog, Disparager, recently imported by Mr. Muir from Mr. Crosthwaite's kennels in England. Disparager was placed third for the best in Show and is a particularly showy, shapely terrier, quality all over. He only lost to Jo Hukum in head, coat, and loin. He was exhibited in an amusing way, and was carried about in the arms unless wanted for inspection as if he were too valuable to be trusted in the ring. He won the fourth Challenge Cup for the best terrier, the winner of the Grand Challenge being debarred, and will always be a formidable antagonist in smooth fox-terrier classes.

The smooth fox-terriers were all round a hot lot and filled more classes than any other breed at the Show. Mr. Arden Close did not bring Cruiser after his Simla defeat, but exhibited a quality little bitch in Chrys, who won in Novice bitches. Mr. Lionel Jacob won in Limit dogs with Inspector who was second to Disparager in the open. Colonel Montresor, Captain Paterson, Mr. White and the Maharajah were well represented with some good terriers, and Mr. Muir had other good ones than his crack.

Scottish, Irish, Airedales and bull-terriers all filled four classes each and called for some separating. In Irish Captain Martin, well known for his excellent Paddie and Scotties, exhibited a warm one in Martian Moonah, quite a good terrier in every way and only out classed by the high quality for the highest specials in Airedales, Captain Ritchie won in the Puppy, Novice, and Limit classes with some nice youngsters of good type though small. The bull-terriers were only fair. Major Williamson considered Major Douglas' Sapho, a very shapely bitch, daughter of Champion Haughty Lady-love, the best, closely followed by the Maharajah's Manchester Peggy, a showy terrier of good type but with a tail defect. The Scotties were a strong lot, Captain Martin's Martian being fore-eminent as a strain, though in open dogs Captain Hesketh won with a good terrier in Lairdan Laird.

White West Highland terriers were shown in two classes in the catalogue, probably for the first time in India, and some disappointment was caused by their failure to put in an appearance. The breed is being taken up by several fanciers in the country and promises to be popular. There were only two average Lhassa terriers classes. Two classes for Pekinese contained some fair specimens.

In bull-dogs, Mr. Callaghan won again with his Bruiser Stone, who remains undefeated in bull-dogs in upper India. In retrievers, Captain Forster showed a handsome dog in Tyne, but he appears to be almost incontrollable in the ring and unless he mends his ways Show committees are likely to demand his absence. The dachshunds were few, but contained two noticeably good ones in Gretchen of Appin and Honey of Appin both bred by Miss Hildesley.

Local Executive Committee.—E. C. Apostolides, Esq.; R. G. Bates, Esq.; d. Collingridge, Esq., G. B. Deakin, Esq.; Captain J. Gourlie, R. H. A. Gresson, Esq.; J. Hutchison, Esq.; and Harry Stokes, Esq.

Secretary:—Geo. Jamieson, Esq.

Friday, 31st December 1909.

The fifteenth Annual Horse Show at Tollygunge was held on the last day of the old year and attracted a large and fashionable gathering to the Club grounds. The judging commenced at 10 A.M. and three classes were taken at a time, a necessary proceeding, the show being only a one-day fixture, but rather disappointing to the spectator who was interested in two or more classes which happened to be in the rings at the same time. The arrangements were excellent, the entries large, and the quality of a high standard. The judging was done by H. E. Abbott, Esq., Colonel P. K. L. Beaver, Colonel R. C. Broome, General Sir Dougls Haig, K.C.V.O., C.B., Major Neil Haig, Rowland Hudson, Esq., Captain V. A. S. Keighley, L. A. Lamb, Esq., Major T. G. Peacocke, Aga S. Shah, Esq., Major F. C. Stratton, and Major C. F. Templer.

Though there were some cases in which the judge's opinion did not coincide with that of the spectators the awards were generally considered very fair.

In the Harness Classes Major H. B. Peacocke's Rainbow and Electric carried all before them, taking four first prizes between them, H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Ewing King won in the classes over 15 hands and Mr. J. M Rodocanachi's gr e m Lady Grey took the Pony Classes. The hunters brought out some excellent quality. Mr. P. A. Scaramanga's Mauser was rightly judged the pick of the light weights and among the heavy brigade the Commander-in-Chief's Mary was placed first, though there are many who considered Mr. Tosh's Starbeck should have secured the red ribbon. The Hacks Classes were well patronised and the judging must have been a difficult matter. Mr. Butler's Red Sea won in the heavy weights and Mr. Gresson's Nevermore among the light-weights. Mr. Bates' Mermaid gained the award in the under 15 hand Class and Major Smith's Bandy Leg among the ponies. Mrs. D B. Myers secured the prize for the Ladies' Hacks with Napier, riding him herself in the ring. The Polo ponies were a nice lot, Mr. Miles' ch aus g Red Shot winning in the English and Waler Class, and the Maharajah of Jodhpore's gr a h Marmion taking first in the class for Arabs and C.-B.'s. The jumping was very fair. Musette winning among the horses and Eventide in the Pony Class. H. E. Lady Minto arrived in time to witness the jumping and gave away the prizes at the close of the Show. THE inspector was examining Standard I., and all the class had been specially told beforehand by their master, "Don't answer unless you are almost certain your answer is correct." History was the subject. "Now, tell me," said the inspector, "who was the mother of our great Scottish hero, Robert Bruce" There was no answer. Then at last the heart of the teacher of that class leapt with joy. The boy who was standing at the very foot had held up his hand. "Well, my boy," said the inspector, encouragingly, "who was she?" "Please, sir, Mrs Bruce."

GIMCRACK SPEECHES.

For once in a way the post-prandial speeches at the York Gimcrack Club dinner, were unmarked by any of those pyrotechnic displays which have before now set the entire turf world ablaze—such, for instance, as Lord Durham's memorable indictment of twenty-two years ago, which led to a prominent horseman going into enforced retirement for a lengthy spell. Other anniversaries have been notorious for remarkable utterances on the part of members of the Jockey Club and also by prominent sport-men outside the pale of that august body, and more or less agreeable innovations have been the outcome.

Judging, however, by the tone of remarks let fall by influential speakers at the recent Gimcrack banquet, the British Turf is just now considered to be in a satisfactory state sufficiently satisfactory, at any rate, to call for no fresh legislation of a restrictive nature. Colonel Hall Walker, one of the principal speakers, had no new theories to propound, though he expressed himself as by no means completely satisfied with the present method of stallion fees and their effect by virtue of allowances, on the valuable breeders' races

That he was "getting at" a prominent owner, whose name was not mentioned, everybody knows who can read between the lines. The owner of the Gimcrack Stakes winner also had something to say in favour of encouraging the growth of bona fide hunt races and the fostering of amateur jockeyship.

Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, who responded to the toast of "The Jockey Club," touched upon two controversial subjects without at the same time treading very heavily upon anybody's corns. Mr. Leo favours the idea of getting back to the minimum weight (in certain handicaps only) of 5st. 7lb, believing that by so doing we should encourage rising talent amongst light weight jockeys.

On this point he will find many experienced men to disagree with him. One has only to turn to last season for ample evidence of how very few of the 6st. boys were at all fit to be trusted to the handling of a strong horse. More than one well-backed animal would have won well instead of being flukily beaten, had he been ridden by a 7lb. stronger boy. And as for all-round inability to keep their horses in a straight line, there never were a worse lot of feather weight lads. But, however, all this may be, Mr. L. de Rothschild was no doubt expressing his own opinions; he was not the mouthpiece of the Jockey Club.

Mr. Rothschild's suggestion that heavy-weight jockeys might be catered for by the promotion of welter races appears to be unnecessary. For the reason that England has no heavy weight jockeys, a fact which he would appear to have overlooked. With Mr. Rothschilds' remarks on "Committee of of three" system of handicapping the majority will agree. The idea that two heads are better than one does not always apply in matters pertaining to the turf, particularly that side of it having reference to the apportioning of weights. Each of the three Jockey Club handicappers are frequently throughout the season responsible individually for the handicaps at certain meetings, and we have little hesitation in stating that these individual efforts invariably provide better results than when as at Newmarket, Messrs Dawkins, Keyser, and Lee worked in conjunction.

Several august members of the ruling body of the turf are entirely adverse to Press criticism in any shape or form and would, had they but their own way, confine the writings on turf topics to descriptions of races and more or less bare reports of actual happenings. Mr. Rothschild has much broader views on the subject evidently, for he considers it the duty of the Press, and has always been to call the attention of the public to any irregularities which may have taken place or any infringements of the law.

As a matter of fact the members of the Sporting Press would be still more outspoken than they actually are, but there is such a thing as the law of libel, and it is not always possible, or at any rate, expedient to submit to print one's ideas. It is a mistaken idea to imagine that the difficulties which beset the stewards in the discharge of their duties are not fully recognised and appreciated, neither is it a fact that the Press is not perfectly fair to owners and jockeys. But on very rare occasions does a recognised sporting scribe question the riding of a jockey or impute improper motives to an owner or trainer. It should be assumed that in calling attention to discrepancies of running a policy of dishonesty is always suggested. It is certainly not the duty of newspaper representatives to furnish the stewards with proof of wrongdoings. They are not the guardians of the turf, while to a very considerable extent the stewards are; but even so, while not on actual duty most racing critics having made charges in print would be inclined to furnish the authorities with what information they had at their disposal.

The suggestion that the National Hunt Comittee might, with advantage, declare a close time covering the last two weeks in December and the first two weeks in January, is no new one. The idea is, however, gaining strongly in favour. Of course, exception would be made in favour of a couple of days for the Boxing Day and New Year holidays. That such a break would go a long way towards the dissipation of the present poverty, which is so marked a feature of the sport just at this particular period of the season, admits of no doubt. Such a respite would prove much more acceptable than the suggested curtailment of racing to four days a week. That something will have to be done on the lines suggested is generally recognised.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The last day of the first meeting was even a greater success than the three previous days: the stewards carpetted several ponies, but the result of the enquiries have as yet not been published.

The first race on the card was the Pony Handicap. Fireaway got away with the lead, The Point, Circus Girl, and Kil Kite next. Fireaway fell back beaten after the home bend was reached, where the favourite Hopscotch went ahead, followed by Kil Kite. The latter ran up to Hopscotch half way up the straight and had him done with.

The Innovation Handicap was full of incident. Lorraine lead at the start from Danseuse, Hughie and Wild Boy, Mandeville next. At the home turn Danseuse went ahead, Wild Boy and Mandeville next with Hughie just behind; they finished in this order after an exciting race for the places. The stewards enquired into the running of Hughie and Solace after the last race.

Castalia and Punt were most fancied in the Holly Plate; they jumped away together with Singleton and Souvenir just behind. Coming round the home turn Punt went ahead, followed by Castalia with Singleton next. Five Crown beat Singleton for third money on the post.

The Chowringhee Plate was a very open race, and we congratulate Mr. Griffiths on turning out a very fine handicap. Sequent and Annamulloch were first away with Resemblance on their heels. Annamulloch went to the front at the 3 furlongs, followed by Resemblance and Master Theo, and had her field beaten coming into the straight. Bull Dog came very fast at the end and was beaten by half a length for second place.

A good field of poor class turned out for the Second Selling Plate. Jack Sheppard, Windy and Sweet Lavender being most fancied. Pressy took the lead from the start, followed by Flotsam, Lady Leslie, and Oldham. Pressy was done with at the home bend, where Lady Leslie took up the running and ran home an easy winner from Flotsam, Sir Ulric next.

The Macpherson Cup, the big race of the day, was a great disappointment, as four starters only turned out. Misty Morn was a good thing; he made all his own running, followed by Emma Eames. Retort made a gallant effort up the straight but could make no impression on the leader.

In the New Year's Plate the favourite again got home. Morino led at the start from Ashanti Gold, Ardea and Vancouver, Best China and Kipling next. At the mile Carnival and Best China ran up to the leader. At the half mile Carnival led with Vancouver and Ashanti Gold next. Coming into the straight Kipling and Lord Barrymore moved up and Carnival dropped out beaten. Vancouver went out and won by one and a quarter lengths from Ashanti Gold, Kipling next.

A number of falls marred the second day's chasing at Tollygunge; there were seven in all, but luckily none of the riders were hurt. Racing started with the Military Handicap. Jasper and Lord Harry went away together, with Daroji some lengths behind; they continued in this order until the water was reached, where the last named refused, and his rider could not get him to face it again. Lord Harry passed Jasper at the second last fence and had him beaten from this point.

Meprise was considered a good thing for the Second Pony Steeplechase. Marconi took the lead at the start from Eventide and Meprise; they raced in this order until after the open ditch the second time. Scarboro went ahead half a mile from home and had Marconi cold any part of the journey after this. Captain Holden rode with great judgment. Eventide slipped up round the last bend.

The Suburban Plate was a very open race and every starter was fancied. They all raced together until the fence after the open ditch where Mount Dane getting too close hit it hard and fell, C. Hoyt luckily got clear. Golden Morn took up the running here and won pulling double. Bonita came at the end with a very fast run but could not get on terms with the leader.

The Tollygunge Plate was a very open race and a pretty race to watch. Idle was most fancied. Highland Fling took the lead at the start from Idle, closely followed by Maisonette and Golden Oriel. The pace was very slow and the order was not changed until three fences from home where Maisonette went ahead, and Mystic Circle and Golden Oriel moved up to the leader. At the next fence Maisonette fell and Highland Fling ran off: the three remaining horses raced at the last fence together, but Golden Oriel fell; he was remounted and finished third. Mystic Circle was leading coming into the straight. Idle ran up to him opposite the first stand and won easily. Hayhoe rode an excellent race throughout.

The Hunters' Chase dwindled down to a field of three starters. Trilby and Tommy Daw went off together with Fermoy just behind. They kept this order until the fence after the water jump where Tommy Daw fell on landing and gave Mr. Evers a nasty shaking. Trilby went on and cantered home an easy winner.

Five out of the seven left in went for the Pony Chase. Ruling Passion and Bandy Leg led, followed by Envious and Tete-a-Tete; this order was kept until the ditch the second time round where Ruling Passion fell and knocked Trenoweth about rather badly. Wal went ahead at the next, followed by Envious and Bandy Leg. Envious made a mistake at the next and was only picked up by good horsemanship; he fell right out of the race after this. Wal fell at the last, and Tete-a-Tete went ahead, followed by Bandy Leg. Envious came with a great run down the straight and beat Bandy Leg for second place.

The last race of the day was a mystery to everyone except Penton, who had eightjin the race, but only started three. The public eventually went for Martin Mere, after nibbling at Lady Spring. Pressy went to the front and led from Lady Spring, Jacchus and Sir Ulric, Martin Mere lying just behind, but Charters riding a quiet race came through his field in good style and beat Pressy easily. Baritone just scraped into third place.

Mr. Evers, who had a nasty fall off Tommy Daw on Saturday, was, we are glad to say, hurt less than was at first expected and was out riding work on Monday morning, but he is still very stiff and sore and his left shoulder is giving a lot of trouble.

The falls on Saturday in our opinion were in no way due to the course, but to the peculiar way in which the races were run; in most cases they were very slow until the last few furlongs and then they blossomed out into sprints.

We are very sorry to hear that Scott Waring has been having bad luck the last few days. Kaffirpan broke down while schooling at Tollygunge last week, and it is reported that Hughie and Kipling both broke down after their races last Wednesday.

Kil Kite, the winner of the Pony Handicap last Wednesday, is a country-bred by Courage out of Kite High, a mare once owned by Mr. A. L. Butler, who had a lot of success with her at the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings years ago. His sire is standing at the Mysore stud; he is one of the nicest cut of a country-bred we have ever seen. We wish Mr. Hannyngton luck with him.

The course has been closed for two days this week owing to the rain. Mr. Lance hopes to be able to open the training track for slow work to-morrow (Wednesday) and most of the trainers have their horses working on the monsoon hurdle track which is in splendid order all the way.

We hear most of the stables that have been in the habit of leaving here for Bombay and summering in Poona have decided to stay here throughout the extras and then they are off to Bangalore.

Owing to the wet weather in Calcutta the Ezra Pole tournament, which was to have begun on Monday, and the weekly paperchase have been postponed.

To be some nine minutes completing a steeplechase over three miles is so extraordinary as to merit its description as a mere parody of competition. There have been cases where three horses messing and muddling and blundering, but still trying were recalled and the race declared void through lapse of time.

Fetlar's Pride and Flaxen gave an amusing exhibition in the Stewards' Handicap Steeplechase at Lingfield Park on Saturday, the 18th December. Odds were laid on the first-named, but he refused time and again at the water. The other's rider lost an iron, and felt all at sea, so pulled up like a very sensible amateur to regain it. The horses subsequently moved all right, and to the surprise of the layers of odds, Flaxen won rather readily owing to superior speed.

A London correspondent writes:—"Although the late King of the Belgians never evinced any very keen personal interest in sport, and was in no sense an active sportsman, he was always ready to give his patronage to the sporting institutions of his country. He supported the rowing, football, and athletic clubs in Belgium, and latterly he gave permission for the principal golf club to assume a "Royal" designation. He visited the racecourses of the Belgian Jockey Club at Boitsfort and Groenendael at irregular intervals, but generally put in an appearance on the day of the Prix du Roi.

King Leopold at one time attended the Ostend Races frequently during the summer, but taking offence at some remark made by the Chevalier de Stuers, when president of the Race Committee, he withdrew his patronage for several years. It is said that the King criticised the architecture of the stands, and the Chevalier replied that their ugliness was in keeping with that of the Royal Chalet on the sea-front close by. The King did not visit the Ostend racecourse again till after the Chevalier's death. A fine life-size equestrian statue in bronze has been erected to the memory of the late president in the paddock, and the King, on being taken round to inspect recent improvements, stopped to look at this work of art. On seeing the name of the Chevalier de Stuers upon the pedestal, he turned away, and cynically remarked that such a statue was out of place, and the proper place for a horse was the stable.

His adviser on all matters pertaining to the Turf and, indeed, on most sporting subjects, was M. Edmond Dragman, a member of the Jockey Club and a well-known breeder. Yachting was at one time a favourite diversion of the King's, and his magnificent steam yacht was one of the familiar sights of Ostend Harbour. He always engaged an English captain and an English crew, declaring that they were much more discreet than his Belgian subjects, who were prone to be too inquisitive and too communicative on the subject of His Majesty's personal movements, and from all that has appeared in print since this most unpopular monarch ceased to live, there was never wanting spicy scandal to circulate.

THERE seems every prospect of the English polo season this year being one of special activity and interest. The managers of Hurlingham, Ranelagh, and Roehampton, have just completed their preliminary fixture lists. Hurlingham, of course, is prominent with its Champion Cup, still the most important tournament of civilian polo. This will be played in the week ending 20th June, and it is quite possible that the winning team will be that which, two months later, will meet the pick of American polo in New York for the International championship.

These, of course, are early days for prophecy, but the England team are almost certain to play in the Champion Cup, and they will need to win that trophy handsomely if they are to accomplish their subsequent task across the Atlantic.

An event of interest will be the International match between England and Ireland, at Hurlingham, on Ascot Saturday, 18th June. Ireland, as a rule, has been second best in these annual contests, but her teams have put up some glorious fights, and the memory of the magnificent struggle at Hurlingham in 1908, when England got home by a very narrow margin, should inspire the visitors to even greater efforts.

The Inter-Regimental tournament, which never fails to produce attractive and exciting polo, is to be fought out on the usual lines under the auspices of the influential Army Polo Committee, who have vetoed much of the heavy expenditure which formerly attached to the competition. Now the tournament is practically financed by the Hurlingham Club, at whose ground the final will be played on 9th July.

At Ranelagh the Open Cup, which went last season to America for the first time in its history, will be played in the week ending 11th June and on that day it is proposed to bring off the Territorial Force Day, an annual event successfully inaugurated last season. Aldershot Day, another highly popular fixture at this club, is fixed for 18th June, and the usual tournaments will be played, the Army Cup starting on 16th May, the Novices' Cup on 20th June, the Hunt Tournament and Subalterns' Cup on 4th July, and the newly-instituted County Polo Week on 11th July. The Points Cup Tournament will also be played during the season.

A compliment to American polo is the introduction of a new tournament, to be played without offside and on an individual goal handicap. This is styled the Hurlingham and Roehampton Open Tournament, and the ties will be played at those clubs from 13 to 18th June. A competition on American principles will be a distinct novelty in London polo, and should arouse much interest, in view of the probable International matches, in September in the United States. At Roehampton the Junior Championship has been arranged to start on 6th June, the Public Schools' Cup 2nd July, the Roehampton Cup on 4th July, and the Ladies' Nomination Tournament on 11th July.

THE defeat of England at Polo last year was a great blow to the old country, Polo being a game at which she had reason to suppose herself supreme. For some time it seemed likely, too, that England would not attempt to obtain her revenge this year. It is satisfactory to learn, however, that there is now a likelihood of a challenge being sent for a match this year. At a recent meeting of the Hurlingham Club Polo Committee it was unanimously decided to send a provisional challenge to the Polo Association of America, informing them that the formal challenge would be sent to them after the decision of the Champion Cup Tournament on 25th June next, to compete for the International Polo Cup in September 1910, if a suitable team of players and ponies could be got together for that purpose. This arrangement involves rather short notice to the American team, but in this connection it is pointed out that the notice given will be just as long as the Americans gave last season. It was only in April that Hurlingham received the challenge from America, and the matches were played little more than two months later. Probably the short notice if it causes inconvenience at all will do so to the English team rather than the American. If it is decided upon the result of the Champion Cup Tournament whether a challenge be sent or not, the same period in which to get ready will be available for both countries, but the task for England as visitors will, of course, be far heavier than for the home team. It is to be noted that England does not bind herself to challenge, but is careful to imply that she will only do so with a reasonable prospect of success.

THE Indian Army Infantry Polo Tournament was concluded at Lahore on the 7th instant. On the first day the 53rd Sikhs F. F. beat the 35th Sikhs by 6 goals to nil, and the 2-2nd Gurkhas beat the 26th Punjabis by a similar margin. In the semi-finals on the 5th instant the 2-2nd Gurkhas defeated the 53rd Sikhs by 6 goals to 2, the second game between the Guides Infantry and the 2-5th Gurkhas F. F. providing a close match, ending in a win for the Gurkhas by 6 goals to 5. With the score at 5-1 against them at the beginning of the last chukker the 2-5th hit 5 goals and won the game. The final brought together the two Gurkha teams and an interesting game ended in a win for the 2nd Gurkhas by 2 goals to 1.

WE publish in our Polo columns the proposals which will be brought before the general meeting of the Indian Polo Association this year.

THE Connell Cup Polo Tournament began at Allahabad at the beginning of the week. In the first round the Gordon Highlanders defeated the 12th Cavalry by 2 goals to nil, and the Allahabad Gymkhana beat the Faugh-a-Ballaghs (Mr. Justice Richard's team) by 3 goals to 2. Full details of the tournament in our next issue.

THE Dacca Polo tournament was concluded on the 6th instant the Peaches (Messrs. Hennessy, Dening, Veitch and Casey) defeating the Plums (Messrs. Robertson, DeDomball, Ramsbotham and Lowman) by 4 goals to one in the final.

AN interesting Gymkhana was held on the Dacca Polo Ground on 3rd instant. A large gathering assembled to witness the events. Sir Lancelot Hare with a party from Government House were present. Mrs. Donald was "At Home" on the ground, while the afternoon was enlivened by the strains of the D. M. P. band. Results :—

(1) The Potato Scurry.—Men on horseback will drop potatoes into buckets. Two runs. Points for pace and accuracy. Won by Captain Dening.

(2) Tilting at the Ring.—Three runs. Points for pace and accuracy. Prize presented by Messrs. Hamilton and Co. Won by Miss Tucker.

The Halloween Muddle.—Men on horseback will ride 150 yards to buckets full of water containing four potatoes. These they will take out with their mouths, their hands not being used in any way. The four potatoes then being kept in the right hand, the rider will return to the starting post with as much celerity as possible. A prize will be given to the lady who nominates the winner. Won by Mr. M. Casey nominated by Miss Matheison.

IT was only at the last meeting of the Nilgiri Game Association that the welcome news was imparted that trout had begun to show in Nilgiri waters, says the Ootacamund correspondent of a contemporary. For this highly satisfactory communication the members are indebted to the efforts of the Government Fish Conservator, Mr. Wilson, and to him too for the variety of trout that his experience enabled him to select for introduction to the district. It was the last but one consignment that has attained a rapid growth and the fertility that promises so well. Amateur efforts for the past twenty or twenty-five years have proved abortive, and, although many fine specimens of trout were captured, nobody was able to affirm that any were in spawn, and had seen fry in any of the streams into which the fish had been turned. SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

Grant, V.C., who had charge of the experiments for many years and was a most enthusiastic angler himself, as well as a keen observer, failed to find signs of fertility in the importations, all from well-known fisheries at Home, and was unable to encourage further expenditure being provided. Indeed, there was friction at more than one meeting over the question of an allotment for further outlay on the importation of ova. Many were for abandoning trout importation altogether, as it was out of the purpose of the Game Association to introduce a few fish only for the delectation of the sporting angler. It would be instructive to know why apparently strong healthy fish attaining considerable dimensions in Nilgiri waters yet failed to be fertile and reproduce their species; whether conditions locally were against the phenomenon or whether the variety obtained was to blame. Even the live trout brought out by the late Mr. W. G. McIver, in 1869, were not different in this respect and their total disappearance from every stream into which he introduced them lends force to the contention that they perished after attaining maturity. Should Mr. H. P. Hodgson's statement about Mr. Wilson's previous experiment with ova prove to be true it will once more establish the old adage that professional training and experience count for something.

Quite the most extraordinary recent Budget development was reported last month from Huntingdon. Mr. Douglas Crossman, Master of the Cambridgeshire Hounds, received a letter from a Liberal farmer warning the hounds off his land owing to the Lords' rejection of the Budget, and adding that he would only withdraw the notice if the Liberal Party were returned to power at the general election.

There seems to be a tendency now-a-days to expose many of the old familiar tales and characteristics of wild animals. This is no doubt partly due to the fact that the deadly nature of modern weapons has made all savage animals far less terrible to mankind than they used to be. One of the animals whose reputation has thus suffered is the famous grizzly bear. Mr. W. Wright, the well-known American hunter who has just written a book about the grizzly, says that he has not found him justifying his reputation for ferocity. He will fight, if he must, and then he will fight like a demon, using tremendous strength, but as a matter of fact he does not seek encounters with man. Mr. Wright's experience serves to explode once for all the legend of the grizzly as an unspeakable portent and he expresses the opinion that if some of the old hunters had possessed our modern weapons, and had known just where to land their bullets, they never would have dreamed of regarding this animal as desperately hard to kill. He gives a happier picture of the bear engaged in the peaceful pursuit of salmon fishing. He says the grizzly usually sits on the bank of the stream and watches the ripples over which the salmon try to force their way. He will wait quietly enough until the salmon is about half way up the ripple and struggling in its efforts to make the ascent. Then he will make a quick dash, and, with one sweep of his huge paw, will send a shower of water ten feet into the air, in the midst of which will be seen a salmon sailing towards the creek bank and landing, many times, ten or twenty feet beyond. Then the bear hurriedly makes for the shore and, if hungry, eats the fish. If he has already had his fill he will kill it, lay it down, and, returning, wait for another. Mr. Wright has seen one bear catch seventeen salmon in this manner before stopping, which he then carefully piled together and buried for future use. The book contains many other interesting details of the habits and characteristics of this curious and one time truly terrible creature.

The following regimental teams have already entered for the Murray Football Tournament :—1st Royal Scots, 18th Royal Irish, 2nd Leinster Regiment, 2nd Black Watch, 2nd Shropshire L.I., 1st King's Own Regiment, 1st Highland L.I., 8th Hussars, 17th Lancers, 2nd East Yorkshire Regiment, 1st Dragoon Guards, 2nd Gordon Highlanders and 1st Seaforth Highlanders. It may be remembered that this popular and well-known tournament is for a Silver "Challenge Cup," value Rs. 2,000 which has to be won three times consecutively, before it becomes the permanent property of the winners. Each member of the winning team is presented with a silver medal, each of the "Runners up" receiving a bronze medal. It is proposed to bring this tournament to a conclusion this season during the second week in March next. Any regimental team desirous of entering for this competition may send their entries to Messrs. Murray and Co., Ld., Lucknow, as entries will close on the 20th instant.

As will be seen from an advertisement appearing further on the Lahore Trades Football Challenge Cup will be played for in March. The tournament is open to regimental teams, bonâ fide clubs, colleges and schools throughout India and Burma and some valuable prizes are offered. The cup is the largest of its kind in India and is nick-named the Giant of the Punjab. The present holders are the North Staffordshire Regiment. In addition to the Challenge Cup the winners will get a miniature Silver Cup each, and the runners-up a Silver Medal. A Silver Cup, value Rs. 100, has been kindly presented by Messrs. Max Minck and Co., Lahore, for the captain of the winning team. A Silver Cup has also been kindly presented by Mr. H. Steeden, Turf Accountant, Lahore, value Rs. 75, for the captain of the runners-up. We have to thank the Honorary Secretary for a copy of a neat booklet setting forth the rules and bye-laws which govern the tournament.

Dorando (Pietri) the plucky little Italian Marathon runner of world renown, took on too big a contract when he met Gardiner of Lewisham at the Albert Hall, London, on the 19th ultimo. He was beaten, not by yards or laps, but by three miles and the winner beat the world's record.

From the first it was apparent that Gardiner thought he had his man in hand. He passed and repassed him time and again. Dorando at one point—after fifteen miles—went out to change his shoes, and Gardiner then took the lead, which he never lost. This he maintained to the end.

The race was exciting by reason of the passing and repassing of the men. This appealed to the patriotism of the crowd, and when the Italian (who encountered foot trouble) stopped suddenly, a beaten man, there was a waving of Union Jacks from the balcony. Dorando plodded on, but the race was won.

At the beginning of the race there was one hero—Gardiner. At the finish there were two. Though through the race the audience had sung "Rule Britannia" and "The Boys of the Bulldog Breed," Dorando's pluck touched the emotion of the audience. Once again had the hero of the great 1908 Marathon proved his pluck. Once again the big-hearted little Italian had struggled against odds—this time to be beaten, but not disgraced.

Again and again he dropped only to take the track limping but determined. Once, indeed, he made a gallant effort and pulled back a part of the distance he had lost. But Gardiner, the machine with his splendid style, was not to be beaten.

As at last Gardiner completed the final lap the crowd surged into the arena with cheer on cheer. And they were not all for the victor. Dorando, the defeated, was not forgotten, and with the hurrahs of the English mingled the bravos and vivas of the Italians. A gallant race, gallantly won and gallantly lost. Full details of this fine struggle are given in our epitome of Home sport this week.

The Bengal Presidency Athletic Association will hold their annual sports on the Calcutta C.C. ground in the Eden Gardens on Saturday, the 19th February, entries closing on the 9th idem. The programme to hand shows a few changes. We note that the amateur 220 yards and half mile have now been made championship events and that the shot putting no longer figures on the list. The Native Army and School races remain the same, but in addition to the usual events for the British Army there is to be a relay race for all regiments competing at the sports. The race is to be over a mile (4 laps) and four men will represent each regiment—each to run a lap. Marks to count towards the championship shield. This should be an interesting innovation. In previous years some misconception seems to have arisen as to the number of entries which can be sent in for the Army events. Entries are not limited in any event but only three from each regiment may start.

The Yankee has not yet reached the limit in respect of fresh enterprise! One reads that a new sport, barbarously known as "Marathon piano-playing," now excites feverish enthusiasm in America.

Its champion is a young Kentucky medical student named Harding, who sat down a few days ago to beat all previous records of endurance in playing the piano. The longest performance up till then had lasted 35hrs. 32mins. This lunatic seating himself in an armchair, with cushions at his back, started with a "ragtime tune." This he followed with excerpts from "Il Trovatore," and then more "ragtime." Without a pause he played vigorously for 36hrs. 36mins.

When the poor creature had finished the tips of his fingers were black and blue, and his arms were swollen to twice their natural size. Towards the close of this miserable feat—which tried the patience of his hearers even more than himself—the pianist had to be kept awake by fumes of ammonia and hot and cold bandages on his head and back. After a couple of days' rest he was none the worse and, apparently, he is still at large!

The first annual general meeting of the Bengal Hockey Association was held on the 10th instant at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Mr. T. H. Richardson of the C. E. College presiding, and there were present Messrs. E. K. Twiss, H. L. Riley, F. H. Reynolds, J. R. Coulthard, D. Sen, T. Jellico, A. R. Bennett, A McCready, A. P. Candler, A. B. Rosser, S. Roberts, M. Burman, S. N. Bose, T. Durham, Captain Hanbury and Father Power S.J.

The annual report was read and passed and the transfer of the Ballygunge C.C. duly confirmed by the representatives of the Class I. clubs. The following office-bearers were then duly elected for the ensuing season :—

President :—Mr. T. H. Richardson. Vice-Presidents :—Mr. M. Remfry and Reverend Edward H. Whitley. Members :—Class I.—Messrs. (1) E. K. Twiss, (2) J. R. Coulthard, (3) P. C. Margrett, (4) R. N. Calcutta Referees' Association :—Vacant. Honorary Secretary :—Mr. N. R. Bhattacharji. Honorary Treasurer :—Mr. A. B. Rosser. Auditors :—Messrs. A. R. C. Miller and H. McGee.

With the usual vote of thanks to the chair, the meeting separated.

THIRTEEN thousand head of game is not bad for four and a-half days' shooting. This wonderful bag was made recently by Count Festitics and party on the Berzencze and Keszthely estates, Austro-Hungary. No fewer than 4,700 pheasants were accounted for in one day.

No man who possesses a dog will need to be reminded that the sagacious animal is a capital hand at getting his owner into trouble in a variety of ways; but the peccadilloes of the ordinary dog, kept as a pet and for no particular object, are usually of a less serious character than those of an animal employed for purposes of sport with the gun. A shooting dog must of necessity be of good behaviour under all circumstances, and, since his temptations are many, so also are the chances that he will not always bear himself with proper decorum. The art of dog-breaking is certainly one of the most difficult to acquire—indeed, the breaking of dogs for shooting purposes should only be attempted by those who have a natural gift for it. The hasty tempered or impatient man will never succeed in turning out good animals, nor will he who lacks the very necessary qualities of will power and perseverance. A dog is very much like a child. It must be treated with kindness and firmness if one is to get it to do its best, and to succeed in training it in the path that it is meant to follow. Again, as suggested above, a dog, like a child, is naturally ready to follow the wrong path instead of the right one, and as to which of these will be chosen depends a great deal upon the skill of the preceptor. It is almost impossible to take a dog in hand too young—indeed, so soon as the puppy is weaned the first of its lessons should be entered upon. Obedience comes first in the list of canine virtues, and until some marked success in instilling that admirable quality is achieved it is useless to persevere in any other direction. But the puppy should never be reduced to a state of terror of its teacher, or the work will be doubly hard later. If it be very wilful, teach it the difference between good and bad by rewarding it when it does right, and presently it will learn which pays it best—right or wrong. A very young puppy, like a very young child, should never be severely reprimanded, and even at a later stage the doctrine of "spare the rod and spoil the child" need seldom be followed. It is half the battle in dog-breaking to gain the confidence and respect of one's pupil.

THE date of the fight for the Heavy Weight Boxing Championship of the World, between Jem Jefferies and Jack Johnson has been fixed for the 4th July 1910.

GUNNER MOIR, who is wrestling with Hackenschmidt in South Africa, is looking forward to visiting Australia again and to meeting Lang and Squires there. But above every thing else he wants to have another go at Tommy Burns, who will no doubt be only too pleased to accommodate him. Moir is not the only rival who is out after Burns' scalp. Stanley Ketchell has signed a contract with Mr. H. D. McIntosh and will arrive in Australia shortly. It is said that three fights have been arranged for him, namely, with Bell Lang, Bob Fitzsimmons and Tommy Burns. We should imagine that Fitzsimmons will retire altogether from the ring since his defeat by Lang, but one never knows. The Ketchell-Burns battle should, however, be a great affair, one which will enthuse all Australia and the result of which will be eagerly looked forward to all over the world.

THE first Test match against the South Africans which was concluded at Johannesburg on Wednesday last ended in the defeat of England by 19 runs.

WE learn that a cricket team is shortly to visit Calcutta from Ghazipore. They will arrive early next month after playing a match with the Behar Planters at Mozufferpore, and will play four matches in Calcutta, their opponents being the Cooch Behar XI., Maharajah of Nattore's XI., Calcutta C. C. and Town Club. Any other team desiring to fix up a match with the visitors should apply before the 20th instant.

THE Madras Boat Club will hold their Annual Regatta on Saturday, the 19th March. The dates for Henley Royal Regatta have this year been fixed for the 5th, 6th and 7th June.

A LAWN Tennis tournament is to begin at Allahabad on the 7th February. Provided there are sufficient entries there will be three events open to members of any gymkhana team in India—gentlemen's singles and doubles and ladies' singles—valuable prizes being offered in each event.

THE Inter-Regimental Polo Tournament will take place at Meerut commencing on Monday, 28th February next.

THE Eastern Command Native Army Hockey Tournament was concluded on the 8th instant at Allahabad when the 33rd Punjabis beat the 1st Brahmans by 3 goals to nil.

MR. DRIMMIE and Captain Munro, who had tied twice for the first place in the "Asian" Cup Golf competition, met for the third time at Barrackpore on the 9th instant. The heavy rain at the week end rendered the course adverse to good scoring. Mr. Drimmie went round in 86 and Captain Munro in 87, the former thus securing the trophy.

FOLLOWING up his victory over Mr. L. Brachi at the Karachi Club on the 3rd instant, John Roberts, the professional cueist, played three other matches against prominent amateurs ere leaving Karachi. On the 4th instant at the Sind Club conceding Mr. E. L. Price 450 in 950 up he beat him 750-617, and the same evening defeated Mr. E. Coumber, to whom he gave 600 in 1,000 up. The final scores read: Roberts, 1,000; Coumber, 877. The veteran's best breaks were 146, 118, and 117. On the 5th Lieutenant Smith, with a handicap of 700 in 1,000, took on the champion but only reached 911 when Roberts ran out. Roberts' best efforts on this occasion were 117, 88 and 87.

MIKE ELIAS, Billiard Champion of India, put up a good performance at Lahore during Christmas week, winning four out of five matches in which he took part. He first met Lieutenant-Colonel Parsons, C.I.E. (Commissioner), conceding his distinguished opponent 300 in 500 up and managed to win by only a few points. The next match was against Mr. Lee French (Inspector-General of Police) who was given 300 points in 500, but Elias lost the match by the narrow margin of 23 points. The third match was played at the Volunteer Club, Elias giving the club marker 500 in a 1,000 up, and after a good fight managed to win by over 100 points. The fourth game took place at the Telegraph Club against Mr. Pickering, Elias conceding his opponent 950 in 1,500 up, and after an exciting finish Elias ran out, winning by 79 points, making an unfinished break of 80. The fifth match was played at Braganza's Hotel against a local amateur, who was conceded 650 in 1,000 up for a purse of Rs. 300. Elias was seen in brilliant form, making breaks at each turn at the table of 160, 120, 104, 98, 59, 67, 63, 79, 80, 81, and many smaller breaks. After 45 minutes' play the game stood: Elias, 763 against 756; and at the close the score was: Elias, 1,000 against 800.

TELEGRAPHIC information from the Head Office, Edinburgh, advises that the Standard Life Assurance Company has issued policies for two million pounds sterling during the past year, a result that will be considered satisfactory.

IT is once more our pleasant duty to acknowledge receipt of numerous almanacs and catlogues from our business friends. To the Elgins Mills, Cawnpore, we are indebted for a handsome wall calendar. Messrs. W. Leslie & Co.'s greeting this year takes the form of a stamped metal calendar, which is one of the most striking of its kind we have seen; the firm also send us a copy of part I of their new catalogue, containing illustrations and prices of their new stock of silver and electro-silver plate ware and cutlery. Their catalogue has grown so bulky owing to their large and varied stock that it has been decided to issue the list in sections. Messrs. Newman & Co., the South British Fire and Marine Insurance Co. the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Co. have all sent us useful wall calendars; the agents of the Harrison line have not forgotten us in their neatly printed desk calendar, while the Standard Life have presented us with one of their useful memorandum block calendars.

fact, a change has undoubtedly come over Christmas. Its outward manifestations are at any rate different.

The man who attempts to recapture the "atmosphere" of the old-fashioned Christmas is simply tempting—in London, at any rate—disappointment and disillusion, and the reason is that our habits are changing fundamentally. The mid-winter festival of my youth used to extend over days, and sometimes ran into a couple of weeks. Life then moved at a leisurely pace and men found time for such protracted diversions. The fast rate at which we live to-day has proved fatal to the existence of the type of Christmas which Dickens loved and did so much to popularise.

The swift speeds which came in with the twentieth century have done much towards robbing Christmas of the old attractions which used to appeal. Among other things, they have certainly helped to kill the time-honoured practice of street carolling.

For the last twenty years, and perhaps longer, the existence of the house-to house carol-singer has been threatened. It was formerly his habit to start operations early in December and continue them nightly until Christmas Eve. Now-a-days it is rare to hear him at all before the beginning of Christmas week, and then his efforts are spasmodic and half-hearted.

He is perishing for lack of support, which finds its justification in the general indifference of his performance, and the fact that people do not want to be reminded of the coming of a festival weeks before they are prepared for it.

In addition to this, the difficulty of singing in the London streets has been rendered almost insuperable owing to the noise of motor and electric traction. The continual passing of trams, the noise of the motor 'buses, and the strident hooting of taxi-cabs, scarcely form an ideal accompaniment to the al fresco rendering of the old Christmas melodies. And, like the carol-singer, his nocturnal brothers-in-arms, the waits, are also rapidly disappearing. The devastating motor is killing him too, as it literally kills hundreds every year. Comfort, quiet, dignity, health, peace of mind and body—all are being killed by the motor. Passez moi le mot, kind reader, my vocabulary is not equal to it.

The nation, it seems, is richer by the collection of pictures and works of art of the late Mr. George Salting—a collection the value of which runs into millions. Yet how many ever heard of the man who has bequeathed his treasures to the nation? Probably few of them even noticed his name on the cases of priceless Oriental porcelain which he lent to South Kensington Museum.

Everyone knows Mr. Pierpont Morgan as a collector. The great dealers knew Mr. Salting equally as well, but the general public, no. This quiet man, who lived in a couple of rooms in the Thatched House in St. James's, went to and fro without attracting any attention. His interest in life was in his collection, and he grudged to spend a penny on anything else. In fact, he did not advertise, and to the great mass of his fellow-countrymen his bequest comes all the more as a surprise since they didn't even know that the collector existed! Everyone must advertise in these days it seems, and an Art Collector apparently, should be as keen on seeing himself in print as any C. I. E. hunting petty rajah.

The girl scout idea doesn't seem to be catching on with the head mistresses of girls' schools, and one is not surprised that it should be so. The teaching to girls of cooking, nursing and attendance upon the wounded is doubtless all very well, but the notion of allowing them to roam over the country side either by themselves or in company with boy scouts won't do at all. Oh no, not by no manner of means.

There is no place for women in the firing line, and we have men enough if they will only realise their responsibilities. On the other hand, if we could have a body of young women with, at any rate, some notion both of discipline and first aid we should be able to call on them and thus avoid the "rotters" who constituted that "plague of women" in South Africa during the war.

Reverting for a moment to the season's trials I add my voice to the universal wail of the circular-harassed householders whose letter boxes this month have been receptacles into which every sort of advertising garbage has been shot. The insurance fiend has been more than usually troublesome of late. Daily I have found beside my plate at the breakfast table his familiar command to take out a life-policy, a pension policy for my children, a policy for my bike, a policy against burglary, twins, fire, sickness or the loss of my bunch of keys. Not even a Fruit Salt in its gravest moments could match those solemn warnings of the uncertainty of life which are posted in such plenty from the insurance office. But the old methods are losing their power to prick the conscience. The unassured man learns to know by touch the envelope which contains that dismal calculation of the probabilities of life and of the handsome funeral which he might afford himself at the cost, let us say, of abandoning his cigar.

New methods are at hand. A Parisian branch of a London company has called in a brutally humorous artist, who points, in bright greens, blacks, and reds, the morals which our dulled consciences neglected. "Insurance, overcoming all fear of the future, prolongs life." It prolongs it until we see the oldest clients of the company mingling gaily in society at 104 years and tossing dumbbells at 112. The dangers of daily life, the orange-peel on the pavement, the runaway cab-horse, the microbes, the poisoned cake, and the bicycle which heads over a precipice, leave the insured ones all unmoved.

"Vive la France," cries the head of the red-trousered hero who has been blown in pieces by a shell, "a hundred thousand francs for the little ones at home." Under the wheels of the motor car, the assured citizen can find time to remark, "What luck, I have just taken out my policy." But the man behind the car, cut neatly in half by the wheel, is suffering all the remorse of the uninsured.

Exit Dr. Cook. Now all the world knows him for a stupid and impudent liar. We Britishers are crowing over the discomfiture of Denmark and America, though I haven't the slightest doubt that had this sordid impostor landed on these shores first we should have been let in just as badly. But our luck was good and, were it not for my well-known and highly appreciated forbearance, I might say "I told you so." His north pole claims have been rejected, and New York and Copenhagen are now excited and angry. The situation teems with quiet humour. Americans accept the verdict of the Danish scientists as final, and Cook is now acclaimed as the prince of mystificators. The New York Board of Aldermen, which conferred the freedom of the city upon Cook, finds itself covered with ridicule. The Pearyites are naturally triumphant, and are saying, "We told you-so." "The collapse of Cook's case," says the Evening Post, "completely puts an end to his claim to the discovery, and with equal completeness establishes his standing as one of the monumental impostors of history."

It is deplored, however, that Cook's claim has dimmed the lustre of the real discoverer's achievement, because, to quote another journal, "the joy of the acclaim that should have greeted Peary at the triumphant close of his twenty-three years' quest can never be his."

The question naturally arises "What did he do it for?" The answer is close at hand—"to make his fortune." And he has made quite a decent little pile out of, and skipped, no one yet knows where. Receiving £5,000 from one newspaper alone, and £18,000 for his lectures, the venture netted him, after expenses were paid, something over £20,000. He would have been richer but for the fact that as the falsity of his story became established the public ceased to attend his lectures, and the receipts fell to vanishing point.

John Bradley, the New York sporting man who backed Dr. Cook's expedition and defended him to the last, now admits that he has been fooled, "but," he adds gaily, "the best of us get fooled once in a while. Cook looked me up to finance this expedition. He usually looked up some angel when he was about to go on an expedition anywhere, and this time it happened to be me." Which seems to show that John Bradley is the sort of a good sportsman who can "take his medicine."

The success of the revivals of Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera had proved conclusively that there was still a public to appreciate something more in a musical play than a variety entertainment. And, the necessary appreciation being there, a new comic opera with Sir W. S. Gilbert's name to the book was sufficient to create a widespread anticipation as to the fare that was to be contained in "Fallen Fairies," which was produced at the Savoy Theatre last night. Here was a return to the old traditions at the house that had echoed so often to the laughter at the house that had echoed so often to the laughter that arises from Gilbertian jests. Small wonder that arises from Gilbertian jests. Small wonder that "the faithful" and the curious assembled in force.

"Fallen Faries" is as good as could be wished for. It is not of his best, but Sir W. S. Gilbert gives us an opera bright, tuneful, clever and, of course, genuinely comic. The scene is laid "on the upper side of a cloud." And a very jolly "upper side" it is. There are present the blossoms of spring, as well as the golden tints of autumn. And, stretching away between banks of changing green, is a stream of blue such as might cause the Bay of Naples to sigh with envy. A very fairy land—and, sure enough, here fairies abound. These fairy inhabitants, indeed, know not man, but so soon as he does appear the fairy queen immediately falls in love with him. Idly has she sung: "To miserable men! Why, one alone will bring enough pollution in his wake to taint our happy land from end to end." For presently she loves one of them well. The other fairies, jealous of a manly form's attention, turn against their queen, but very earthly love prevails even on "the other side of a cloud."

It is all a pretty story, quite seasonable in its "Christmassy" flavour. And if it has less of the sprightly Gilbertian wit than other pieces from the same pen that have gone before, there is still the same delightful flavour lingering in the lines that made Gilbertian opera so popular and so delightful in the past. The jingling rhymes, the pretty play of adjectives—these are present again to tickle the ear and to make for laughter. And Mr. German has played up well to the book. He has not been too dignified to follow faithfully in the footsteps of Sullivan, and therein he has been wise. There is but little talk—mostly the action of the piece is carried forward by singing; and all the time the music, lilting, light, and graceful, is suggesting and helping on the lines.

Those who love Mr. C. H. Workman for his meaning eye, his meaning gestures, his meaning movements of a hand or of a foot, for his whole artistic range of comedy acting, could wish him more often on the stage than he is as Lutin, a "serving fairy," who helps to work some wonders on that cloud. But when he is there, he is truly all there, funny with a glance, laughable with a gesture, always a light humorist of the best. It is pleasing to find Mr. Claude Flemming among the knights from earth—the knight, indeed, who wins the fairy queen's heart For he is a bold, gallant, full-throated, fine singing hero, if ever there was a hero of stage romance. On the whole, however, the ladies have the plums. For instance, the chorus is wholly feminine—and a very fine chorus, too. Of the principals Miss Nancy McIntosh, as the fairy queen, and Miss Jessie Rose and Miss Maidie Hope sing as charmingly as they smile. No greater compliment could be conveyed.

The new ballet produced this week at the Alhambra should strike straight at the heart of every Briton. In its action it tells a pretty and fanciful history of the coming of the British flag, and variations of "Rule Britannia" and "Hearts of Oak" occur again and again. The first scene is "Ancient Britain," a charming old-world setting, with its background of blue sea and its Saxon castle. By a series of beautiful stage pictures is shown the presentation to England of St. George's Banner, the offer from Scotland of the Banner of St. Andrew, and finally the coming of Ireland with the Banner of St. Patrick, the union of the three forming the Union Jack. The scene changes to modern times, and the Empire is shown widening to the Colonies. In more beautiful stage pictures, freely intermixed with dances and patriotic airs, is seen England's welcome to the Colonies and Dependencies—all of them, from South Africa to Hongkong—the defence of the Flag, and the presentation of a Dreadnought.

The mounting is as beautiful as we have learned to expect at the Alhambra. A picture of sheer delight, a stage crowded with gay and airily-moving figures, with charming colour schemes and beautiful lighting effects, is ever before the eye; and since Mr. G. W. Byng has added much graceful music to the patriotic airs he uses so often and so skilfully, the spectacle is worthily accompanied. There are many novel dances, the principal of which Mlle. Britta, first as Ireland and next as the Spirit of the Flag, gives with charming effect, while as Canada Miss Elise Clerc also has a big hand in the complete success of a most attractive production.

At Bath, yesterday, after a long illness, the death occurred of Major-General Bernard Cracroft, aged 72. General Cracroft saw much active service in Central India and the Afghan War of 1879-80. He accompanied Lord Roberts on his march from Kabul to Kandahar, and was present as squadron commander of the 3rd Bengal Cavalry at the Battle of Kandahar, subsequently receiving the medal with clasp and the bronze star. He also possessed the medal with clasp for the Central Indian campaign, in which during the action of Punwarre he was wounded. He was twice married, and leaves a son and five daughters.

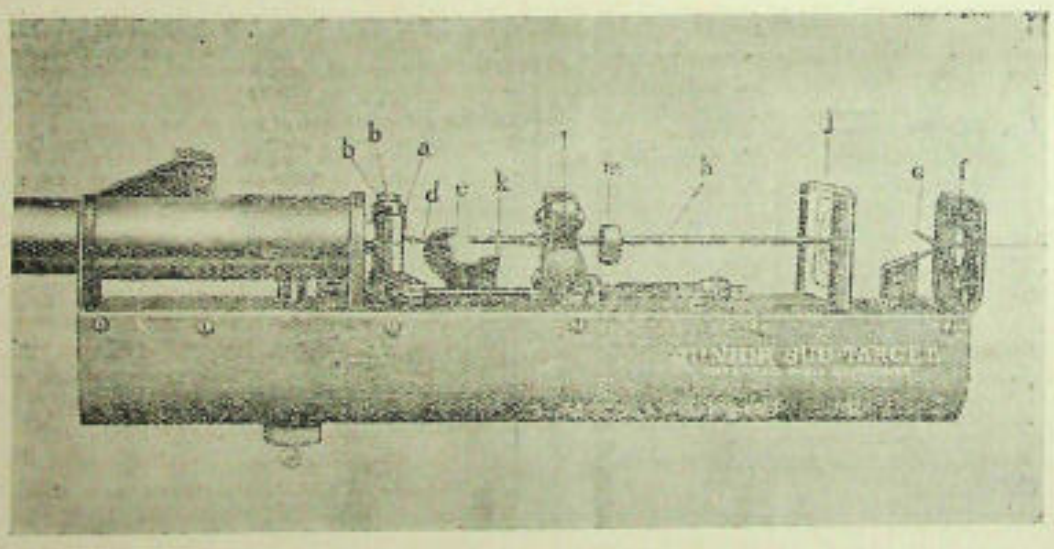
Shooting.

THE JUNIOR SUB-TARGET.

The makers of this instrument, viz., the Sub-Target Company, Limited, of 29A, Charing Cross-road, have requested that the same shall be examined and reported upon in these columns. The principle of sub-targets has now become very well known. At first sight it might appear that the simplest method of registering the aim taken in shooting is to pull the trigger, and see where the bullet strikes on the target. Experience seems, however, to have shown that substantial advantages follow from reducing the early stages of tuition to the abstract level of shooting without burning any powder. Not only is this true about the teaching of beginners, but proficient shots find in the behaviour of the sub-target instrument evidences of jumpiness which they had never previously had the opportunity of detecting. The question is not, however, as simple as it appears at the first outset. For instance, it is a constant experience that the gun or rifle gives a terrific jerk when, by accident, the trigger is pulled on an empty chamber. Normally the cartridge conceals by its recoil the convulsive movement of the muscles which accompany the act of pulling the trigger. That the jump actually takes place after the shot has departed on a true line of flight is at all times probable by the consistency of the shooting which can be done.



A further illustration of the same idea is constantly met with in rifle shooting when the marksman declares he has badly pulled a shot, only to find that it occupies a particularly central position on the target. The firing of high power express rifles so severely punishes the shooter that the closeness of the diagram he is making on the hundred yards target seems out of all proportion to the sense of terror with which his system shirks the ordeal of letting off the shot. This is hardly a suitable occasion to pursue further the psychological aspect of rifle shooting. The point under discussion may therefore be briefly summarised by stating that the practised shot has learnt to postpone the jerk, if any, which he unconsciously makes, until its power to spoil the shot has gone by, whereas, on the other hand, with the young shot there is practically no limit to the eccentricities of result which a state of "funk" can produce. Like the soldier who complained that it was not he himself who was afraid, but his legs, so the shooter may know in his own consciousness that the recoil will not hurt him, but even so he cannot drill his body to adopt the log-like state of quietude which is necessary to achieve success. The battle with the alter ego continues throughout a man's shooting career; and there is no doubt that the inward quakings of the cowardly body are stilled by a course of shooting with miniature ammunition, and likewise with practice apparatus on the sub-target system.

The ordinary sub-target apparatus consists of a wonderfully poised pair of arms which hold a rifle with such extraordinary freedom that the shooter may point it where he likes in the direction of the target without encountering the slightest resistance to the processes of aiming and shooting. The motion of the rifle is registered within the instrument itself, and the aim taken is reproduced on a minute target very little larger than a postage stamp by means of the swayings and oscillations of a fine needle. When the shooter pulls the trigger the needle makes its mark on the sub-target (hence the name), thus achieving the idea already referred to of shooting without burning powder. The junior sub-target is a relatively inexpensive reproduction of the larger machine. The principle of its working is, indeed extremely simple, as is shown by the following technical description supplied by the firm: "The underlying principle of the Junior Sub-Target Rifle Machine is a distant objective and fixed line of aim there—to mounted in definite relationship with a sub-objective, whereby the relative position of the sights to the distant objective is constantly indicated on the sub-objective, while at the same time the rifle is quite free."

The means by which the above elementary requirements are fulfilled may be best described by assuming that the shooter desires to make a simple experiment of his own. He may take any ordinary service rifle and unscrew the bolt head, so as to allow him to pass a fine piece of twine through the central hole, which commonly contains the firing pin. This piece of twine may then be carried through the barrel, and its further end be attached to the target at which aim is to be taken. It naturally follows that if the shooter aligns at the six o'clock edge of the bull the barrel will at short range be pointing an inch or so lower down, viz., the height of the foresight above the axis of the barrel. Assuming the back and front sights to be set parallel with the bore, the tightly stretched twine will be correctly centred with the muzzle of the weapon when a true aim is taken. This, in fact, is what happens in the apparatus under notice. Special mechanism is introduced for the purpose of indicating and registering the aim on the secondary or sub-target. The construction of the instrument provides for interrupting the line of twine near the muzzle by looping it to the two ends of a double crank-shaped arrangement. In just the same way that an inch of metal could be cut away from one side of a link in a chain without complete severance occuring so a taut line can be interrupted by a C-shaped link which leaves a blank central space for the accommodation of special mechanism.

The two hooked ends of this C-shaped interruption are lettered in the accompanying illustration e and e respectively. H is the floating needle which reproduces the oscillations of the rifle, and j is the little sub-target. L is the pivot on which the needle floats, and it is provided with a thumbscrew for lateral adjustment. M is a counter-weight which controls elevation, and k is the connection between the taut line and the needle. The relative distances from k to l and l to j respectively represent the degree of enlargement which exaggerates the actual oscillations of the rifle, so that they may be reproduced on the sub-target in correct relation with the other target at which aim is taken; b b and a denote an attachment to a tube which projects from the muzzle, the same being connected by a link and rod to the sub-target j. When the trigger is pulled the striker blow is thus transmitted to the muzzle and thence to the target j, which jumps back upon the point of the needle, and so registers the shooter's aim at the moment of pulling the trigger. The apparatus has been carefully tried, and so far as can be judged it fulfils the claims of its maker. It should certainly prove an extremely valuable medium for the instruction of beginners, also for enabling older shots to keep their hand and eye in training by home practice.

It does not, of course, follow that the needle registers absolutely the direction which a bullet would take when fired with the same aim. Obviously a time delay occurs in mechanically transmitting the motion of the firing-pin from the breech-end of the barrel through various connections until ultimately the sub-target drives on to the needle point. The time delay between the impact of the firing-pin on the cap of an ordinary cartridge and the arrival of the shot at the muzzle is, roughly speaking, ·002 of a second, and it is hardly conceivable that the motion under consideration could be completed in less time than, say, ·1 of a second. The rapid escape of the bullet in actual shooting might enable a man to postpone his convulsive jerk until after the bullet had left the muzzle, but the sub-target might faithfully record it. From the point of view of the recruit, and even the advanced shot, the margin introduced by the sub-target instrument is on the right side. If the jump takes place on the ranges a little too soon the direction of the shot will be affected Consequently if a man can pass the test which the sub-target system imposes there is a large margin between the jump which we may suppose he still makes and the psychological moment when its capacity to spoil the shot has ceased.—The Field.

Fishing.

FISHING IN THE EAST.

I should think everybody knows the voracious capabilities of the cormorant, and yet these are the birds that the natives of China and some parts of India train to help them in their fishing operations and train them without much trouble or time spent on the proceeding. The birds are especially kept and bred for the purpose, and of course must be taken in hand when quite young and before they understand their own appetites, and fishing, maybe. The Chinaman soon puts a stop to the bird swallowing anything it captures by placing a collar round its neck—a collar in the shape of a metal ring that fits so closely that it prevents all possibility of anything but the very smallest of objects being swallowed and these very tiny fish are not of any account to the fisherman and but an inducement to the bird for further efforts. These collars are removable of course, for otherwise the birds could never be properly or sufficiently fed. After a little time they get to understand that all that they capture they must take back to the master's boat. For themselves, they perhaps realize that, for some reason or another, they are only able to swallow, easily and in comfort, what he gives them with his own hand (the ring being removed then) and get so accustomed to the idea that they quite live up to it.

A fisherman may have several of these birds—in fact if he employs them at all he does generally have a goodly number. Perhaps half a dozen are near enough to the general thing, and he will take them all out with him, and once they are let go, to begin their own capturing operations, he troubles about them no more, but devotes himself to his nets and lines, knowing full well that the birds are safe, for as servants they are good and true (so long as they are collared!) and as fishermen—even if it is an Irishism!—they are unequalled.

Their methods when they catch a bigger fish than they can easily carry back—or lead back—to the boat, which may be a good distance away, are clever indeed. If other birds are near and see one of their companions in trouble with an unmanageable catch of this kind, they will unhesitatingly go to its assistance. So that a fish that would have been too much for a bird—or, even, may be two of them—finds itself powerless among a larger number and the beaks of the company, and then is carefully escorted back in the direction he ought to go, without any chance of escape, until he is within reach of the fisherman's landing net.

But should the one bird have got beyond the reach of help from the others and find himself compelled to face such a struggle alone, they say he begins his task by picking out the eyes of the fish, and then cautiously and carefully tries to lead him where he wants, and that is of course towards his owner's boat, and he generally succeeds, even if it takes time.

The Indian methods are much the same, though maybe they are not as common in India as in China. The native of India depends more on himself and his own efforts and patience, whereas the Chinaman makes the most of everything within his reach. This, I suppose, is the quality that earns him the reputation of being as economical as a Scotchman! They say of all the world of men, a Scotchman and a Chinaman will not only find a living, but will save money, under any circumstances and any where! In the same way John Chinaman makes use of the otter as a help to fishing. And the otters are even more easily trained than the cormorants. Perhaps it is that their appetites are not naturally as large and so they have less trouble with self control. Sometimes opportunity and sometimes accident puts the otter cubs in the hands of the fishermen. They may come upon them in dredge of dragnet when looking for quite different occupants. The otter too has a metal ring collar, and like the cormorant, it too is before long convinced that it can only swallow what providence, in the shape of its owner gives it, and gives up even trying to swallow anything else. So while the fisherman arranges his own paraphernalia, the otters go off on their own share of the afternoon's work, and use their teeth and claws with great affect and advantage, honestly bringing the result of their efforts to enrich the master's store.

Another rather peculiar method of catching fish is employed in Japan and China. The fish is an edible one known there as the Dorado, a dolphin I believe. They lay bushes, and snags, and rafts made of bamboos and twigs under the water as decoy, and the fish gather about these shelters in very large numbers, and are then hooked in the ordinary way, after being got to the one spot. Or the decoys are surrounded by nets, placed round at a little distance from themselves. Then by beating the water the fish are frightened and driven out of the scrub in which they hide into the nets. The Japanese consider this fish a great dainty.

A law in Japan, some years ago, required all fish to be sold alive. So naturally netting was the method most employed, and then the fish were brought to the market in metal tanks, or ponds, arranged on wheels, and sold direct from the water! I dont know whether Japan continues this custom now. It was rather a sensible plan to my thinking and better both for the vendors and the customers, for the one never had stale fish with which to inveigle the other.

Shrimps are another much loved dainty in China and netted in very large quantities, just in the ordinary way. The Chinese have a quaint way of eating them though. They pop the creatures into a vessel, that is previously filled nearly full of wine, living of course, and let them remain there covered over lightly, long enough to get deliciously tipsy. Then the dish is uncovered and the shrimps jump (would it be called jumping I wonder?) out and about in their exuberance of spirit and afford opportunity for a display of excellence in the use of chop-sticks in catching them adroitly, and conveying them to the mouth delicious and "alive alive O!"

The Dolphin, mentioned here also as a Dorado, which is apparently the Japanese name for it, yields an "oil" that is considered to be a cure for pulmonary complaints. This is used largely round about Cornwall they say and found most beneficial by those who take it. The Japanese prepare it for the table and like it both fresh and salted. The bait they use for it is generally a small species of cuttlefish.

On the Ganges and other rivers of India they very frequently use the small net, arranged on bamboos, in a triangular fashion. Two rather long bamboos being tied firmly together at one end are kept apart at the other by a shorter stick tied across—a stick perhaps three or four feet long, with one end of it tied to each of the other bamboos, at a distance of about four or four and a half feet from the point where the first two ends of the bamboos meet.

On this short stick and the pieces below it there is arranged the net. Three sides of it are secured firmly to these three bamboos, and the fourth side, where there must be a little net to spare, has a pouch formed there of this extra piece for the reception of the captured fish; though all through the net is rather loosely arranged, so that the fisherman may scoop up and strain the water through it as he goes. His captures in this net are never very big for having to wade while he manipulates this arrangement, he keeps to the parts that are not over-deep. He holds the tied point in one hand and with the other hand he holds one of the other bamboos, so as to steady and guide the whole concern, and holding it below the surface of the water, pushes it along in front of him as he goes. The fishes that are in this way netted and secured, he every now and again puts away in his pouch by raising the whole structure and shaking it, (point and pouch downwards) while having the mouth of the pouch, which was also held in the left hand, open. The fish slip into it and he again gathers up the mouth and goes on.

Then they use another net in some parts of India—a far more difficult and uncommon thing to work. The net is a perfect circle, having being worked circular and quite flat. It is, maybe twelve feet or thereabouts in diameter. This circle then has leaden weights attached at certain distances along its edges, also a string running right round for the drawing in of the whole when needed. The throwing of this net successfuly must take no end of practice and time to acquire. They have to learn to catch it up (beginning very probably with the central point) and get it up and about the right arm and shoulder, in one particular way. So that the one jerk of the arm and body properly given sends the whole thing, not only right off the fisherman, but spinning and spreading wide and flat while still in the air. So widespread it drops on the water—when he first picked it up by the centre, it looked like a closed umbrella, and the weights at the edges draw it down, shaping it he while like a bun, or half globe. The resistance of the water and the lightness of the net keep the centre floating high while the edges sink weighted down. Now the cord that was said to run round the edges, for the drawing in, must be a long one, so that both of its ends are either in the grasp of the fisherman, or at least quite within his reach. He is thus enabled to draw them both in and in this way close his net globularly, and draw it back to himself with whatever his catch may be.

This net, as well as the one described before it, is made with a very fine close mesh and of very fine twisted cotton so that even the smallest fry are secured which would so easily slip through and escape in the coarser make of nets.

In the North of India I have known them to attach a great fish hook to a strong cord—almost a rope it really is—and fasten the other end to a tree or any secure hold that offers itself obligingly on the bank. This they will do of an evening, and leave it all night coming back in the morning very often to find that the bait has been taken and that there is a good big fish only waiting to be hauled in and that all the time and patience needed to "play" the capture have been saved the possessor of the hook.

The large "drag" nets they of course understand everywhere, but these can't always be used. There must be a fair amount of water, and a certain number to work such a net and a boat to carry it round wide enough. Whereas the smaller ones are easily managed without help.

BOXING CARNIVAL HELD AT THE VOLUNTEER HEAD-QUARTERS IN DECEMBER LAST.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Would you be good enough to publish the enclosed balance sheet which my committee think may be of interest to many.

My committee would further like to thank the following gentlemen for their generous support, which has added materially to the success of the Carnival. The Committee of the Sports Club for the use of the Hall, the managers of the Englishman, Daily News and Empire newspapers, for the reduction in their rates; the proprietors of the Statesman for their donation of Rs. 96: Mr. F. B. Siddons for the three shields for the winners of the Championship Contests; the Hon'ble Mr. C. W. Graham for his donation of Rs 50, and the gentleman who presented a special prize of Rs. 50 anonymously.

From the profit Rs. 937-8 the out of pocket expenses of the men, brought down to take part in Mc Auliffe's Tournament, were first met; the balance was then divided among the competitors.

I remain, dear Sir
Yours faithfully
J. H. BULLEN.

WIRE WINDING FOR STRENGTHENING LIGHT BARRELS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In the case of heavy ordnance, steel wire has been used for a long time, in order to increase circumferential strength. The heavy guns for the armament of ships and land defences, have their inner tubes wound with steel ribbon: this is put on at varying degrees of tension, carefully calculated out beforehand according to the radial distance from the bore of the gun.

Wire winding is unnecessary in the case of small arms, as with their smaller tubes there is no difficulty in getting the necessary strength. Ample thickness too of metal can be had, without making the rifle or shot gun of excessive weight.

The amateur gunmaker, however, who constructs his barrels out of any sort of tubing that he may be able to buy from the nearest ironmonger, will find that sometimes it is no bad plan to fall back on wire, as an easy means of getting extra strength for weak light tubes.

For example a friend of the writer's having constructed experimental ·360 and ·410 shot barrels, on a foot lathe, out of gas tubing, these were considered to be somewhat weak for perfect safety. The gas tube used, was of wrought-iron, butt welded: that is to say a flat strip of iron is bent round into tubular form, so that the edges butt against each other, when they are welded together. The weld shows as a straight line the whole length of the tube. A welded tube of this sort is naturally liable to tear open along the weld, under severe internal pressure. The expedient of winding it with iron wire was therefore resorted to. First of all the tube was turned smooth outside and burnished, and then thoroughly well tinned by heating the tube and smearing it with soldering liquid, just before running solder over the surface. The tinning having been completed the tube was then put into a lathe, and tinned iron wire wound close round it under a strong strain, like string round the handle of a cricket bat. The wire was fastened off so as to keep the strain, with a little solder, and then soldering fluid was spread plentifully all over the wire, and solder run on to it under heat, so that the wire strands were firmly soldered together and to the tinned surface of the barrel.

The effect of the above process is to convert a weak tube into an extremely strong one. It would probably be quite impossible to burst a wire wound barrel with any ordinary charge, and certainly if a tube thus strengthened did get overstrained through the use of an excessive charge, it would not fail explosively, nor be likely to damage the user. The writer and his friend are now applying the wire construction principle to a home made walking-stick gun, of ·360 calibre. The tube was first temporarily fixed in the frame of a Stevens rifle, in order to test the shooting. It is full choked and of considerable length, and being rather large in guage (the main portion of the bore is little more than the ·360 inch it is supposed to be), the gun is found to shoot its best with a somewhat heavy charge of powder. It was this largeness of the powder charge, which seemed to make strengthening of the barrel so advisable. Now with its wired barrel, and an extra jacket of wrought-iron over the chamber, the gun would no doubt stand anything that can possibly be got into the cartridge.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Departmen for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of all India Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

"VELOPEX" BULLET

AFTER BEING FIRED

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

Do you realise the immense importance of the unique superiority of Odol? While all other preparations for cleansing the mouth and teeth are effective only during the few moments of application, the antiseptic and refreshing power of Odol continues gently but persistently for hours afterwards. Odol penetrates the interstices of the teeth and the mucous membrane of the mouth, to a certain extent impregnating them, and thus securing a safeguard and preservative for the teeth such as no other dentifrice can provide not even approximately.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as spained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

THE TURF.

LINGFIELD.

THE foggy and depressing weather conditions of the opening day of this fixture gave place on Saturday to bright sunny skies and a crisp air that was delightfully invigorating. Nevertheless, there was not a corresponding improvement in either the attendance or the tone of the sport, for fields were again restricted to very meagre proportions and the small number of horses that contested the various events were old and poor in point of class. Results :—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE first meeting of Chelsea and Tottenham Hotspur in a League match naturally attracted a huge crowd to Stamford Bridge last Saturday, but it cannot be said that the game was in any way worthy of the attendance, the players on both sides appearing far too anxious to do themselves real justice. Chelsea did not enjoy the assistance of Woodward, the famous amateur, naturally enough, not caring to turn out against the club with which he had for so many years been closely identified, but another amateur, who has secured International honours—not in any of the great contests of the year it should be added—took the field for Chelsea in E. W. Williams, an outside left from Portsmouth. Without showing in any way remarkable form, the Stamford Bridge team had no great difficulty in winning, Windridge and Bradshaw each getting through before Miner secured the only goal for Hotspur. Two valuable points thus rewarded Chelsea, but the result of the encounter left the Tottenham club in a very anxious position. Previous to yesterday, Hotspur stood last but one on the list and now they find themselves only a single point ahead of Bolton. Not once since their admission to the First League have Tottenham gained a victory away from home.

As the supporters of Woolwich Arsenal had occasion to fear, Notts County proved too strong for the Plumstead team. The Arsenal, as the play went, should have placed themselves safe from defeat before the interval, but they only scored once, and determined efforts on resuming, and just at the finish, met with no reward, whereas Jones and Cantrell got through for Notts. The Nottingham team have won seven, and lost only one of their last ten engagements, so to fail against the side carried with it no disgrace. At the same time, the reverse sustained by the Arsenal, followed upon a series of excellent performances on the part of the Barnstead club, who, prior to yesterday, had since the early part of November played five matches, drawing two and winning three. If Hotspur and the Arsenal both lost, better fortune attended a club in a worse plight than either of those London sides, Bolton Wanderers gaining the first victory which had rewarded that team since the month of October. The Wanderers's success, however, was only achieved at the expense of Preston North End, who appear quite unable to win away from home.

Until Saturday, when they overcame Middlesbrough at Ayresome Park, Manchester United had not won a game for more than a month. Blackburn Rovers—as yet unbeaten at home—strengthened their position at the head of League 1 with a victory over Bury but they are closely pressed by Sheffield United, who overcame Newcastle United by 4 to 0. Newcastle, last season's champions, have already been beaten eight times. Of the other prominent clubs, Bradford only effected a draw at Goodison Park, but Liverpool, like most other clubs, found the task of holding their own with Aston Villa at Birmingham beyond their powers.

Four out of the first half-dozen clubs in the Second Division of the League won their matches but Glossop and Fulham who were both playing away from home, could only draw. As a result, the competition has, for the time being, assumed a most level character—so far as the leading teams are concerned—than at any previous period since the opening weeks of the season. Glossop, Derby County, and Manchester City, who head the list in the order named, have all played the same number of games, but Glossop do not now possess any considerable advantage, as they only lead Derby County by one point, the latter club being in turn one point above Manchester City. After a period of non-success, following their splendid start, Hull City appear to have run into form again, and are now level with Manchester City, but they have fulfilled two more engagements, while Leicester Fosse, with 22 points, take precedence over Fulham by reason of having a game in hand over the London club. The match at Homerton yesterday, which brought Clapton Orient and Fulham together for the first time this season, did not produce a great display of football, for on neither side were the forwards clever enough to prevail against a strong and resolute defence.

Owing to the bad state of the grounds at Bristol and Norwich two of the most important matches in yesterday's Southern League programme had to be postponed. Consequently Crystal Palace and Southampton, who both won away from home, improved their records. Crystal Palace, whose success at Brighton was most creditable, have, indeed, increased their lead from Queen's Park Rangers to three points, and Southampton, who come next, are a point further behind with two fixtures in hand. Next Saturday, Christmas Day, when Crystal Palace will be resting, the Rangers should seize the opportunity to close up; but heavy holiday work may prove prejudical to the Rangers, and at present the prospects of Crystal Palace keeping in front seem distinctly bright. Only able to draw at home with Swindon, West Ham United have lost more ground. Since the end of October the West Ham Club have not gained a victory, three drawn games giving them all their points—a very different experience to that of Crystal Palace, who have won four games and divided the honours in the other three matches they have played during the same period.

CHELSEA VS. 'SPURS.—Tottenham supplied Chelsea with two valuable points when they were beaten at Stamford Bridge by 2 goals to 1. The home side were nearly always the cleverer lot and deserved their success. They played the Ryde amateur, E. W. Williams, at outside left, and he gave a fine display. V. J. Woodward was an absentee and so was Jimmy Humphreys for the 'Spurs side. Bradshaw played for Woodward and Curtis for Humphreys, whilst the indisposed Warren's place was taken by Birnie. The changes did not affect Chelsea so much as the 'Spurs, for Curtis was only a moderate leader, and he changed places with Wood. run in the second half. Early in the game, which was witnessed by about 50,000 people, Curtis, profiting by the temporary absence of Ocmiston, nearly beat Whitley. Windridge had a chance, but shot over the bar. Later Williams forced a corner, and the ball was handled past Joyce, but the goal was disallowed, as Joyce had been impeded. After thirty-nine minutes' play Bradshaw did some smart work, and from a pass by Brawn, Windridge headed the opening goal. In the second half there was a lot of very poor football. Williams nearly scored, and then Windridge hit the bar. Jones got a goal which did not count, because play had been stopped owing to an injury to Elkin, and then Williams put in a great shot which Bradshaw deflected past Joyce. This was after half an hour, and with only a minute to go Minter headed through a centre by Middlemiss. Chelsea, 2: Tottenham Hotspur, 1.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL VS. NOTTS COUNTY.—Before 10,000 spectators at Plumstead Woolwich Arsenal suffered a quite undeserved defeat in their game with Notts County, and thus experienced their first check for a period of six weeks. Notts won by the odd goal in three, but for an hour of the game they were quite outplayed, and in this period Woolwich should have scored at least three goals. They had the ball in the net twice, and also claimed another point, but only one point counted. It was shortly after the start when Ironmonger, the Notts goalkeeper, as he was saving from Neave, turned right round with the ball in his hands to avoid a charge, and it was claimed that he had taken the ball through his goal. The claim was rejected, but twenty minutes after play commenced Lewis finished a clever dribble by scoring a fine goal for Woolwich. Buckenham was robbed when he should have scored, and when later he did send through he was given off-side. Half-an-hour from the end Notts, who were lucky to be only a goal behind, played a vastly improved game. Dean and Cantrell on the right led many dangerous attacks, and Cantrell centred for Jones to score a very simple equalising goal. Ten minutes later Cantrell ran clean through down the centre of the field and shot Notts' second goal. On several occasions Notts looked like increasing their lead, but in the last few minutes there was a desperate rally by the home side. Despite several corners and a chance which Neave failed to turn to advantage, the Arsenal could not draw level. Sands was missed at centre-half for Woolwich, who had the same team that won at Preston the previous week. Notts County, 2; Woolwich Arsenal, 1.

Sheffield United, 4; Newcastle United, 0.
Blackburn Rovers, 5; Bury, 1.
Sunderland, 2; Sheffield Wednesday, 0.
Bolton Wanderers, 3; Preston North End 1
Notts Forest, 0; Bristol City, 0.

CLAPTON ORIENT VS. FULHAM.—Fulham generally play better away from home than they do on their own ground, but they were unable to win at Clapton and were perhaps a little lucky to get one point. The game did not contain much good football, but was always contested in a most strenuous manner and exciting incidents were frequent. Both sides were strong in defence, although Charlton did not play so well at right back as he usually does. Both sets of forwards were fair in midfield, but they rarely got in shots that were both fast and straight. The Fulham line were cleverer than that of the Orient, but the home forwards, finely led all through the game by L. A. Leach, who again took up the centre-forward position, put much more dash into their play, and they nearly pulled off a victory in the last ten minutes by some fine football. McLaughlin, who took Hawkes's place at centre-forward in the Fulham team, was not a success, but Walker again played well, although he threw away the chance of the afternoon by shooting weakly with only Bower to beat. Ten thousand people witnessed the match. Clapton Orient, 0; Fulham, 0.

RUGBY RULES.

ENGLAND VS. THE SOUTH.—A combination of bad weather and long distance had the effect of keeping the attendance at this match in the new ground at Twickenham at about two thousand. The ground was heavy and holding and the ball naturally greasy, but the players on each side rose to the occasion in great style and gave an exhibition that was frequently thrilling in its brilliance and some of the movements at times bordered on the sensational. Those who anticipated that the absence of the Harlequin brigade from the England side would rob the game of a lot of its interest had their anticipations falsified. The game was a great contest and although the England side won easily in the matter of score, that on paper hardly does the losing side full justice. There was not a poor player on either side, and not one who suffered in reputation by reason of his performance in this game. There were those who enhanced reputations they have already achieved and in one case at least—that of Johnson at full back—it will be surprising if he does not secure highest honours in the first season of his trial in the big matches. A little superior excellence on the part of the English threes and more general rescuers and finish among the side generally—this was the principal difference between the teams in this game. The England side were together almost from the first and it was no surprise that, after a series of dribbling rushes by the forwards, that Chambers scored eight minutes from the start. Following on a good run by Lawry for the South, Solomon, on the other side, made a dash through almost all opposition, but his final pass went wrong. The England side continued their pressure, and after Hulme had set the line in motion the ball travelled rapidly amongst the threes and Hudson went in easily. No goal followed. England were again almost over immediately, but were kept out for a short time only. In loose play near the centre Hulme slipped swiftly away. A fierce pass out, as he was tackled, was taken in wonderful fashion by Solomon, who was going at top speed, and, clearing almost all his opponents, he threw wide out to Chapman, who scored a third try. Again the England threes gave another brave show, Solomon showing up in towering form, and then Hulme, Poulton, and Chapman completed the bewilderment of the defence, and the latter scored a fourth try, which like the others remained unconverted. Meanwhile although they had been doing all the scoring, the England side had not been having matters all their own way. The South forwards had shown themselves to be capable dribblers, and the halves, Gotley and Heale, keen, sharp, and swift, to make or to seize opportunities. These had come to nought, however. As the interval approached the side got better together and forced play steadily back on the England line, and Hulme was forced to save, and was lucky to do so. Then, penalised from the drop-out, England were forced back to defending again, but they raised the siege. Hudson intercepted a pass, and was only stopped at the last by Johnson, and then Poulton and Chapman again almost brought about the downfall of the South line. Gotley and Heale initiated another attack on the England goal line, and, although checked several times passing between Lawrie, Hayward, and Heale ended in the line being crossed and Gotley scored after Lawrie had lost the ball. Lagden failed at the ...k, and at half-time the score stood. England, 4 tries: The South, 1 try.

Some changes of position among the English threes after the interval created confusion, and the South attacked hotly. Passing and dribbling, which raised great enthusiasm, followed, and the game was taken from end to end rapidly. It was the South team that was doing all the attacking, however, and they deserved to score as the result of more than one clever exposition. Then the England forwards took the game in hand again, and eventually Poulton got away on the left. Confronted by the back he kicked across the ground and Roberts, catching the ball unmarked it was a race between him and the back, and Robests, in possession, won and scored behind the posts. Williams goaled. Restarting, the South forwards were again in evidence and a great

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400-·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

MADE IN A MINUTE.

dribble by Hands and Lagden, Johns, and Thomas placed the England defence in jeopardy, but the venue was quickly changed, and Johnston put in some great work in defence. Many of the players were by this time showing signs of wear, and Lawrie had for a time to go off with a damaged wrist. The game proceeded on a more even basis for a time and then there was a brilliant bout by the South backs. Gedley started it near his own line, Heale and Hayward, each with dashing runs carried it on, and Lawrie, the last to receive, punted ahead and raced the backed for the ball, and completed a thrilling round of passing by scoring the South second try. Lagden again failed with the kick. After this the English side resumed their original formation and the effect was immediate. Chapman and Poulton were all but in, a slightly forward pass at the finish spoiling a certain try. It was only a momentary respite, however, for after Poulton had cleverly dodged and evaded all but the back he gave Roberts an easy run in behind the goal. Williams again converted. There was another smart run by Poulton soon after and the Oxonian was all but in. From the scrum which followed, however, Hudson got hold and racing through to the opposite wing gave Chapman a pass which enabled him to score at the corner. No goal was kicked this time, but England were again pressing as soon as the game was going. The forwards dribbled cleverly to near goal and then Poulton secured. He dodged around in front of the posts until almost all the defence was upon him and then, throwing wide out to Hudson, who was unmarked the latter had a clear walk in with England's eighth try. No goal was kicked, and so the England side won by 28 points to 6.

EDINBURGH ACADEMICALS vs. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—In a keen fast game at Edinburgh, Cambridge scored a penalty goal and 3 tries to a penalty goal and 2 tries, and won by 12 points to 9. The Academicals gained some advantage in the first half, Allan kicking a penalty goal and scoring a try, and Campbell adding a try for them, while Jones ran in for Cambridge, and R. C. Campbell kicked a penalty goal. After change of ends Cambridge asserted themselves, Purvis and Lewis obtaining tries which enabled them to win. Cambridge U., 12 points; Edinburgh Acas., 9 points.

BLACKHEATH vs. NORTHAMPTON.—After a capital game at Blackheath the home team were defeated by 3 goals and 2 tries (21 points) to a placed goal, a penalty goal, and 2 tries (14 points). There were many notable absentees on either side, and during the first half the visitors' half-backs and backs showed to much better advantage than their opponents, but after change of ends with Northampton a man short in the pack—Dr. Layt having been injured midway during the first half—the home team played up in fine style, the last quarter of an hour's play being of a very exciting character, during which Blackheath added 8 points to their score. Northampton led at the interval by 16 points to 3, and after Beasley had scored a grand try under the posts, Stone started the Blackheath score with a very fine penalty kick. After this, Blackheath had a good deal the better of matters to the end, but they failed to draw level. Nicholas, R. E. White, and Nicholls scored tries for Blackheath, and Stone goaled once; while for Northampton Cook (two), E. White, and Beasley, the latter for the second time got in, Walsh (twice) and Brown being the goal scorers. Northampton 3 goals 2 tries; Blackheath, 2 goals (1 penalty) 2 tries.

MARLBOROUGH NOMADS vs. LENNOX.—At Thames Ditton, on a very heavy ground. Despite the conditions, a fast and good game was played, and the Lennox backs combined splendidly. The Nomads pressed at first, and Jenkins scored an unconverted try for them, but after this Lennox took complete command of the game and scored three times in the first half and five times in the second. The backs made constant attacks, and Santaewich got over twice and Orange once, but none of them were improved. In the second half the Nomads were scarcely ever dangerous, and the Lennox back division played up to Orange, who was in great form and kept the defence busy, and four times he crossed the line in the second half, twice after some excellent passing amongst the backs, but two of them were individual efforts, in which he dodged and outpaced his opponents. Vandervell also scored a try by prompt following up, for the ball was dropped after it had been carried over the line. There was a fair attendance. Lennox won by 30 points to 3. Lennox, 5 goals 5 tries; Nomads, 1 try.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—In this game, at Richmond, Rosslyn Park were outplayed in all departments and at no time had they any chance of making a fight of it. The Taylors' forwards held the upper hand and their backs got only had plenty of chances, but they employed them to much advantage and much of the passing by their three-quarters was very good indeed, O'Callaghan, more particularly, playing a great game for them. Directly after the game started he ran in and then when Lepingwell and Sanders had scored further tries he got over again after a really fine run. Although only one of the tries was improved, the Taylors led by fourteen points to nil at half-time. After changing ends the Taylors' superiority was even more apparent, for O'Callaghan gained three further tries Sanders ran in twice while Lepingwell and Barrett also scored and three of the tries were converted, while Lepingwell also dropped a goal for them, but just before the end Pailthorpe got over for Rosslyn Park, and as Dixon placed the goal the Old Merchant Taylors won the match by 45 points to 5. O.M.T., 5 goals (1 dr.) 7 tries; Rosslyn Park, 1 goal.

LONDON IRISH vs. HARLEQUINS.—Though they were with us the brothers Stoop, Sibree, Birkett and Poulton, and were playing eight or nine second team men, the Harlequins yet proved sufficiently strong at Catford to beat the London Irish by 29 points to 5. There was some keen forward play on both sides, but whenever the ball went out to the backs the visitors showed immense superority. In the first half the Irish line was crossed on five occasions, three tries by Kenneth Powell being sandwiched with one each to the brothers Lambert, and D. Lambert was successful with three of the place kicks. After changing ends the Irishmen settled down to a much better exhibition, and aided by some smart kicking by O'Grady their forwards had quite a good share of the game. Steele added a sixth try for the Harlequins. Just before the finish D. Lambert went in again and improved his score, but in between Magee scored a try and Dobbs placed a magnificent goal from the touch line for the Irish. Harlequins, 4 goals 3 tries; London Irish, 1 goal.

HOCKEY.

INTERNATIONAL TRIAL MATCH.—After their victory over the East a fortnight previously, the West had great hopes of gaining their first success over the North at Brooklands, near Manchester, on Saturday the 18th instant. The Westerners put up a good fight, but after being two goals to the bad at the interval they were beaten by 2 to 1. Two alterations had to be made in the visitors' team at the last moment. Basil Hatch had to take the place of C. C. Mountford at full back, and Rutherford played instead of Lieutenant Manners. The North attacked at the start, but it was not long before the visitors assumed the aggressive, and the North were twice compelled to concede a corner. Neither penalty was converted into a goal.

Subsequently North again got the upper hand, and Hatch was called on to relieve the pressure on the West goal. Powell then saved a dangerous shot, and Hatch was again prominent in some good defensive work. At length, however, E. B. Nicholson got through and scored the North's first point. Almost immediately afterwards the same player again netted the ball, but the point was disallowed. Before the interval, however, the North scored once again, this time through the instrumentality of C. P. Lesse. The first fifteen minutes of the second half were generally in favour of the North, but the magnificent defence of the West prevented their scoring again. In the later stages of the game the West got the upper hand,. The North defence, however, proved equal to the test, except once, when S. H. A. Saunders notched the visitors' first and only goal. Last season the North won by 8 to 2.

PEDESTRIANISM.

DORANDO vs. GARDINER.—The first indoor running race over the Marathon distance (26 miles 385 yards) to be held in this country was fixed to take place at the Royal Albert Hall last Saturday evening. The principals were Dorando Pietri and Charles W. Gardiner, and the purse was one of £150, of which the winner's share was £100 and the loser's £50. Pietri, better known as Dorando, was the Italian runner who finished first in the Olympic Games Marathon Race last year, from Windsor to the Stadium at Shepherd's Bush, but had to be disqualified on account of the assistance which he received in the last few hundred yards. That race was awarded to John Hayes, one of the American contingent, but Dorando received a gold cup from Queen Alexandra, in token of his plucky efforts. Both Dorando and Hayes subsequently turned professional and the former beat the latter in a race over the Marathon distance at Madison Square Garden, New York, in 2hrs. 44mins. 20⅘secs. Dorando accomplished that performance on 25th November 1908, and the time constituted a record for an indoor track.

C. W. Gardiner began his athletic career as a professional and although meeting with considerable success at the numerous Kentish meetings had little opportunity of accomplishing any performance of outstanding merit until he won the professional Marathon last May. Since then he has been very successful in long distance road races in Scotland. Gardiner's time over the Windsor-London Marathon course was 2hrs. 58mins. 23½-secs. and Dorando's 2hrs 54mins. 46⅘secs. There is a difference of two years in the competitors' ages, the Italian being 24 and the Londoner 26. A return match will take place in the spring on an outdoor track.

The track was necessarily narrow and of small circumference. It measured twenty laps to the mile and the full distance comprised 524 laps and a bit. The surface was of coconut matting. The track was oval in shape and at the sharp turns slopes were placed to form banks and also to keep the runners from colliding with the staircase rail at one end and projecting platform at the other; but Gardiner objected to the slopes and they were removed and replaced by ropes.

There were about 2,000 spectators present when, at twenty minutes past eight, the runners made their appearance. Each was loudly cheered and national flags were waved. When the signal to start was given Gardiner went to the front, but both set off at a good swinging pace. In the fifteenth lap Dorando went to the front and at the end of the first mile his time was 4mins. 89⅘secs. Gardiner's being a fifth of a second slower. Gardiner regained the lead in the twenty fourth lap and, after being temporarily passed by Dorando, again led at the end of two miles in 9mins. 38secs. Dorando being a fifth of a second behind. At 3 miles Gardiner, whose time was 14mins. 42⅕secs. still led by a fifth of a second. At 4 miles the times were Gardiner 19mins 52secs. Dorando 19mins. 52⅘secs.; and at 5 miles Gardiner 25mins 2secs. Dorando, 25mins. 2⅘-ecs.

In the sixth mile Dorando had a sponge. He closed up on Gardiner and at the end of the mile was again only a fifth of a second behind. Gardiner's time was 30mins. 12secs. Dorando's shorter stride gave him an advantage on the sharp turns each end of the track where he was able to run close up to the inside rope, whilst Gardiner, in trying to do the same, twice kicked the flags. The pace now began to drop and Gardiner's times for 7, 8, 9, and 10 miles were respectively 35mins. 22secs, 40mins. 33⅘secs, 45mins. 54⅘secs, and 51mins 58secs. Dorando's time was, in each instance a fifth of a second slower. The assistance had, by by this time, increased to 3,000.

Dorando went to the front in the twelfth mile but after a few laps Gardiner shot away and obtained a lead of a dozen yards. Dorando drew up to his opponent again, but in the next mile Gardiner again got away to the extent of half a dozen yards. Dorando regained a little of the distance, but in the fourteenth mile Gardiner put on a spurt to which Dorando could not respond and the Englishman lapped and passed his opponent. The Englishman gained another lap in the next mile, and then Dorando, whose feet had blistered badly, stopped to change his shoes for low boots. Gardiner, in the meantime, increased his advantage to nearly six laps. After resetting Dorando only went a lap, then stopped to change back to shoes, and Gardiner, who covered 15 miles in 1hr 1-min. 35⅘secs., increased his lead to 17 laps. When the Italian restarted he limped badly, whilst Gardiner seemed to be running as freshly as ever. At 18 miles Gardiner, whose time was 1hr. 37min. 38⅘secs., had a lead of 14 laps, and a little later he increased his advantage to a mile.

Gardiner maintained his lead, his time for 19 miles being 1hr. 44min. 15secs.; for 20 miles, 1hr. 51min 5sec; and for 22 miles 2hrs. 5mins. 8secs. Dorando was then still a mile behind.

At about 21 miles Dorando increased his pace, and picked up a lap. The two runners thereupon kept together, and then Dorando commenced to force the pace again.

At the twenty-third mile Dorando's feet began to trouble him, and he had to rest for a short time, while Gardiner put on another lap.

The result was a win for Gardiner, who covered the full distance in 2hrs. 37min. 1⅘secs. Gardiner covered twenty-three miles in 2hrs. 12mins. 2⅘secs. twenty-four miles in 2hrs. 19mins. 35⅘secs. twenty-five miles in 2hrs. 27mins. 33secs, twenty-six miles in 2hrs. 35min. 37⅘secs. After Gardiner had covered twenty-three miles Dorando made a series of attempts to continue, but his feet were so badly blistered that he was unable to go on. Meanwhile Gardiner maintained a steady pace and finished comparatively fresh.

The crowd cheered vociferously and the winner was carried shoulder high. He was also received with enthusiasm outside the hall. Dorando was in excellent condition when he left off only for his feet.

BILLIARDS.

M. INMAN vs. A. WILLIAMSON.—The last two of the series of short games between these players, at the Grand Salon, Soho Square, which filled in the remainder of the time left vacant by the inability of Diggle to continue with the fifth tournament, produced the best play and closest finishes. Prior to Saturday, Inman had only met with one failure in his attempt to concede Williamson a start of 250 points in games of 700 up, but he was stretched to his full capacity in the concluding trials.

During the afternoon game a good beginning by Williamson—runs of 12, 26, 32, 43, and 39 being scored by him in his first half-dozen innings—paved the way for his success. Following these up by a well-played 32, he was winning quite easily until Inman came along with 72, 184, 48, and 145, and all but got on level terms, and it needed a 56 and 37 (unfinished) with his two final essays for Williamson to win by 91 points. Scores:—

Williamson (rec. 250)	...	...	...	700
Inman	...	...	...	696

An even more closely-contested game was won in the evening, when Inman won by a bare 1 point. Again the start-receiver quickly settled down to his task, and scored the faster with moves of 38, 68, a clever 109, and a few 20's. Then Inman pegged him back by means of 46, 158 (the last 101 off the red ball), 33 88, 51, and successive breaks of 170 and 102. The game was called 638—612 against Williamson, who now made a 63. He drew to within 1 point of the game total, but he could get no further, as Inman, playing up most determinedly, ran out with 59 (unfinished). Scores:—

Williamson (rec. 250)	...	...	...	699

C. HARVERSON vs. T. REECE.—This match of 15,000 points up, on level terms, between the above well-known professionals, ended in a victory for Harverson by 4,060 points, at the Grand Hall, Leicester Square, on Saturday evening. Taking the lead almost from the very start, the winner outpointed his opponent at nearly every instalment of the play. The result was quite a foregone conclusion, as Harverson resumed with a lead of well over 3,000 points. Once again he was the heavier scorer, with 176 (from 143 unfinished), 108, 171, 42, 57, and 32 (unfinished), in a total of 625 points, as against Reece's total of 515, his chief breaks realising 206, 71, 48, and 42. Interval scores:—

Harverson (in play)		...	...	14,375
Reece	...	...	...	10,884

Finishing up in fine style, with breaks of 125 (from the unfinished 37), 137, 60, 157, 48, and 117 (unfinished) the leader secured his necessary 615 points at an average of 56¼ per innings, and finally ran out the winner by 4,060 points. Reece did not unduly exert himself, and only scored 58 points in all. Final scores:

Harverson	...	...	...	15,000
Reece	...	...	...	10,940

R. W. STEVENSON vs. T. AIKEN.—Aiken, who received 2,500 start in 9,000, beat Stevenson at Edinburgh on Saturday by considerably more than his allowance—namely, 3,140 points. Aiken on the last day made breaks of 181 (full) 105, 100, 69, 114, 126, and 55 (unfinished), whilst Stevenson's best were 65, 55, 70, 63, 155, 80, 78, and 108. Final scores:

Aiken (rec. 2,500)	...	...	...	9,000

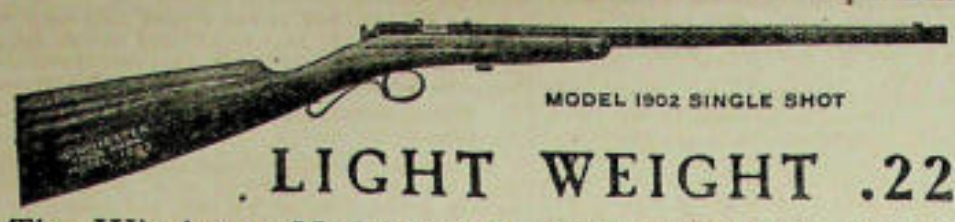
FENCING.

INTERNATIONAL CONTEST.—In the long salle d'armes of the Sword Club on Saturday the 18th instant a team of five French fencers defeated five English swordsmen by eighteen hits to ten in a series of contests with the 6.6s, the French duelling sword. This weapon is like a foil, but longer and stouter, with a triangular blade and a steel cup guard, and épée-play is possibly more interesting to the uninitiated than foils, since hits made with it count on any part of the body and not on the chest alone.

The grace of the art of swordsmanship showed itself in the active advance and retreat and the quivering poise of the bodies of the white-clad fencers, whose ringing blades shimmered with dazzling brilliance in the strong electric light.

"The 6.6s had a revival of popularity some years ago, and is still holding its own," said the secretary of the club. "Its use requires much less skill than the foil. In six months, with two or three lessons a week, a man of ordinary activity could become a passable 6.6s-player. It is an excellent physical exercise, that can be taken up even by an elderly man."

BOXING.



MIDDLE-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.—Once a year the popular manager of the National Sporting Club, Mr. A. F. Bettinson, is accorded a well-deserved benefit, and this usually marks the termination of the first half of the season's programme. This annual gathering took place last Tuesday night, when, as usual, a capital programme was provided, and the esteem in which the beneficiare is held by members of the club was emphasised by the large attendance.

Of the most important business of the evening, chief interest centred in the twenty-round contest for the middle-weight championship of England, between Tom Thomas, of Wales, and Charles Wilson, of Notting-hill. The stakes at issue and the club purse amounted in all to £800, whilst the winner also holds the championship belt presented by Lord Lonsdale, president of the club. The men had gone through a very careful preparation, the Welshman at Whetstone, and Wilson at Shenfield, Essex, and when they entered the ring they appeared trained to the minute, and there was every prospect of a keen struggle, although, possibly bearing in mind the recent performance of his compatriot, Freddy Welsh, Thomas was a slight favourite.

At this annual gathering not the least interesting portion of the programme is the meeting (by consent of the Amateur Boxing Association) of leading amateurs with those who have adopted boxing as a profession, and many most interesting bouts were witnessed between them. Thus, there was J. H. W. T. Douglas, the amateur middle-weight champion of 1905, and winner at the same weight in the Olympic Games last year, opposed to Ian Hague, the champion of England, who, despite his extra poundage, had to go all the way; R. C. Warner, four times amateur middle-weight champion, to Freddy Welsh, the recent victor over Johny Summers, and holder of the light-weight championship; F. Grace, the amateur light-weight champion, and winner at the Olympic Games, to Jim Driscoll, the feather-weight champion of the world; H. Holmes, amateur ex-feather and light-weight champion, to Seaman A. Hayes, of Horton; C. Morris, amateur ex-feather-weight champion, to Digger Stanley; R. J. Bamberger, ex-public schools and inter-University champion, to George Moore; E. Adams, amateur ex-bantam-weight champion, to George Pierce, bantam-weight champion of America. In addition, there were exhibition bouts between Joe Bowker, ex-bantam-weight champion of the world, and Young Lappo, feather-weight champion of the West of England; Young Josephs, welter-weight champion of England, and Fred Wood; John Condon, ex-amateur bantam-weight champion of England, and Bill Ladbury; and Yankee Swartz, of America, and Johnny Hughes.

Swartz, of America, and Johnny Hughes.

At the weighing-in during the afternoon both men were under the stipulated weight of 11st 6lb, Thomas scaling 11st. 5lbs. and Wilson 11st. 5½lbs. It was a quarter past eleven before the contest was ordered to commence, Mr. E. Corri officiating as referee and Mr. E. Zerega as timekeeper. In the opening round Wilson was the first to score with two straight lefts; but Thomas responded in similar fashion, and the round ended even. Directly they came together a second time Thomas forced the work and got home a stinging left on the ear, which shook Wilson up considerably. He had barely recovered himself when the Welshman drove two more hard lefts on to Wilson's head, and then, crossing his man with a right, swung on the point, and the Londoner went down. Although he made a great effort, Wilson failed to rise within the stipulated ten seconds, and was counted out, Thomas scoring a very easy victory. Thus both the light and middle-weight champions of England hail from Wales.

I P A. GENERAL MEETING.

The following proposals will be brought before the general meeting of Indian Polo Association 1910:—

Proposals by Major Becher, 8th Cavalry.

That the General Meeting be abolished.

That in the event of the general meeting being abolished Rule No. 10 (Rules of the Club) be cancelled and the following substituted.

"Any proposed alteration in the Rules or Constitution of the I. P. A. to be submitted to the Honorary Secretary through Divisional or Civilian Members of the Committee before 31st December in each year. Proposals received by this date, will be circulated to all Subscribing Clubs who will send their votes to their Divisional Member, who will inform the Honorary Secretary before the end of February, whether his Division is in favour of the proposal or not. The final result of the voting will be published as soon as possible after 1st March:—

No votes received after the last day of February can be counted.

Each subscribing club to have one vote.

Vide Rule 6 (Rules and Regulations.)

That Rule 23 be included among those mentioned in case of infringement of which the Umpire stops the game.

That the following be added to Rule XI (Rules and Regulations):—

When a Bugle is used in place of a bell the "Halt" is sounded at the end of the last period, except in the case of a Tie when one "G" will be sounded, the Halt in this case only being sounded when the winning goal is obtained.

That the following be added to Rule IX (Rules of the Club):—

For the purpose of distributing funds to Polo Clubs the Committee shall be divided into two Sections—a Northern and Southern.

The latter to consist of the members representing the 5th, 6th and 9th Divisions and the Civilian Member for Bombay, and the Northern to consist of the remaining members.

The proportion in which the funds will be distributed to the two sections to be decided by the Committee and the final distribution to Clubs to be made by a selected Committee in each Section.

This proposal to hold good for one year only on trial.

Proposals by Lieutenant-Colonel Edwards 33rd Light Cavalry.

That no I. P. A. measurer be permitted to measure any pony belonging to a dealer for an I. P. A. certificate.

That Rule 10 (Rules for Height and Measurement) be expunged.

Proposals by Major A. G. Brenner, R.E.,

That the I. P. A. Committee, as at present composed, be empowered to transact all I. P. A. business, which at present can only be done by the Annual General Meeting under Rule 10 (Rules of the Club.) The procedure shall be similar to that set forth in the I. P. A. Notice dated Ambala 8th September 1909 with reference to proposals. Each Member of the I. P. A. Committee will take the votes of the I. P. A. Members in the Division which he represents on matters of business, which are now transacted at the Annual General Meeting. He will then notify the result to the Honorary Secretary I. P. A. The I. P. A. affairs are thus placed in the hands of the I. P. A. Members, the Committee being the machinery through which the work is done.

That after "shall be appointed" in line five, Rule 5 (Rules and Regulations) the following be added "whose sole duty is to decide whether the ball has passed between the goal posts or between those posts produced."

That at the beginning of Rule 20 (Rules and Regulations) the following be inserted:—

"A player shall be considered to ride off fairly, when, having placed himself abreast of an adversary (after following a line of direction is nearly as possible parallel to that in which his adversary is moving) he gradually forces him from, or prevents his continuing in, the direction in which he is riding. Riding into an adversary in any other way constitutes dangerous riding."

To Rule 10 (rules for height and measurement) add:—

After (date to be fixed) an I. P. A. certificate granted to a Pony, is cancelled, if at any time, that pony is declared to be over 14-1 by an official measurer of the Calcutta or Western India Turf Club.

Proposal by Colonel F. Watson 35th Scinde Horse.

That subsidiary goals be reintroduced.

That an addition be made to rule 19:—

"In the event of the umpire inadvertently allowing the team to line up the wrong way, no goal, if made shall be allowed to count to either side, and the game be restarted again from mid-field directly the mistake is discovered."

A rider to be added:—

"If a whole chukkur has been played, it should stand, goals scored to count."

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

Cooch Behar vs. Lord Francis Scott's XI—Played at Woodlands on the 6th and 7th instant. Cooch Behar went in first and compiled 328. Prince Victor contributing 123, his third century this season, a fine innings with but a single chance. Bajana 74 and R. L. Roy 52 also batted well. The visitors then went in but were dismissed for the miserable total of 69. Fellowes' 15 being top scorer. Lewis took 7 wickets for 24 runs a performance which also included the hat trick. Following on Lord Francis Scott's team lost two wickets for 14 before the close of play but continuing on Friday they did better, Capt Wood, who was not out 4 over night, ran his total to 102 before he was disposed of: Major Champain 38, Captain Keighley and Lord Francis Scott also batted soundly and the innings closed for 222. Cooch Behar thus won by an innings and 37 runs. Score:—

Cooch Behar vs. St. Xaviers Past and Present.—Played at Woodlands on the 8th and 9th instant. Cooch Behar who had not their best team out won by an innings and 118 runs. The home team batted on Saturday and made 238 for 9 wickets when the innings was declared closed. M. Bajana hit vigorously and was not out 106. The rain delayed the start on Sunday but when St. Xaviers did go in they could do nothing. Warden took 7 wickets for 2 runs and the innings closed for 13. Going in again they made 107, Prince Hitendra, who played for the visitors in the absence of L. Boscolo contributing 44. Mackenzie took 4 wickets for 28 runs, and Parakh 4 for 29. Score:—

THE LADIES' AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP

The Fifth Ladies' Amateur Golf Championship of India began at Tollygunge on Monday when the qualifying round of 18 holes was played. Only ten entries had been received, the names of both the holder and runner-up last year, Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt and Mrs. Windsor, being absent from the list. Of these ten eight competed but only six scores were handed in. Miss Carver heading the list with 93, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Martelli and Mrs Bruce were the others to qualify for the semi finals. Scores:—

Miss Carver	93
Mrs. Lamond Walker	104
Mrs. Martelli	108
Mrs. Bruce	111
Mrs. Elton	113
Mrs. Swan	113

Mrs. Roe and Miss Arthur (no return).

The semi-finals were played at Tollygunge on Tuesday and proved easy victories in each case. Mrs. Lamond Walker played very steadily and beat Mrs. Martelli by 5 up and 4 to play and Miss Carver easily defeated Mrs. Bruce by 8 up and 6 to play. The final between Miss Carver and Mrs. Lamond Walker was played on Wednesday and resulted in a win for Miss Carver by 6 up and 5 to play.

EASTERN COMMAND NATIVE ARMY TOURNAMENT.

10TH JATS vs. 7TH RAJPUTS.—Played at Dinapore on the 3rd instant, ending in a win for the Jats by 3 goals to nil. The first half was very evenly contested and half time arrived without score, but on resuming the Jats did most of the attacking and Shib Lal and Macpherson scored a goal each, within a few minutes of restarting, Macpherson adding another point shortly after. The Rajputs kept their opponents out for the rest of the game.

33RD PUNJABIS vs. 48TH PIONEERS.—Played at Allahabad on the 4th instant, won by the 33rd Punjabis by 2 goals to nil. Up and down play at the start. The 33rd then gained several abortive corners and at length put the ball through. The 48th worked hard to equalise and gave their opponents a busy time for the rest of the period, save for one break away by the 33rd when their shot at goal struck the cross bar and rebounded into play, the 33rd managing to hit it between the posts. With two goals up against them the 48th played hard, but the 33rd continued to hold the upper hand, though they failed to add to their score.

1ST BRAHMANS vs. 62ND PUNJABIS.—These teams met at Allahabad on the 5th instant, the Brahmans winning by 3 goals to nil. They pressed at the start and Captain Whitehead opened the scoring, another goal following a little later and a third being added soon after. An injury to Captain Whitehead reduced the Brahmans' front rank and thereafter the game was of a very scrambling order. The 62nd worked hard but lacked combination and failed to score, the match ending as stated.

10TH JATS vs. 5TH L. I.—This match at Allahabad on the 5th instant ended in a win for the 5th. The first half was fairly even; both sides attacked in turn, but the 5th managed to score twice without response. On resuming after the interval the Jats were outplayed and the 5th scoring three more goals ran out victorious by 5 goals to nil.

SEMI-FINALS.

1ST BRAHMANS vs. 5TH L. I.—Played on the 6th instant The Brahmans were without Captain Whitehead and the 5th lacked the services of Lieutenant Ball, both injured in previous games. Play was very even and both sides attacked in turn throughout the first half, the interval arriving without score. On changing ends the Brahmans obtained a corner, which they converted and keeping up a vigorous attack added three further goals to their score. The 5th struggled hard to the end, but were unable to get through, being thus defeated by 4 goals to nil.

11TH RAJPUTS vs. 33RD PUNJABIS.—This game on the 6th instant was a run-away affair for the Punjabis who scored 6 goals in each period. The 11th made occasional runs and once found the net but they were kept on the defensive for the greater part of the game.

FINAL.

1ST BRAHMANS vs. 33RD PUNJABIS.—Played in the Alfred Park, Allahabad, on the 7th instant before a large crowd of spectators, including the Lieutenant-Governor and other notabilities. The Brahmans were handicapped by the loss of Captain Willoughby, who was injured in their match against the 5th L. I. and Captain Whitehead, who once more took his place in the team, had not sufficiently recovered from his injury to play a conspicuous part in a fast game. The Brahmans pressed at the start and missed a good chance. Then the 33rd attacked and Amar Singh scored, the Punjabis following this up with a second point before half time. The second half was mostly in favour of the Brahmans who scored another goal and ran out winners by 3 goals to nil. The Brahmans never relaxed their efforts to the very end and had hard luck in not scoring on more than one occasion.

General Keir made a short congratulatory speech at the close of the game and Mrs. Keir gave away the cup to the winners.

The Horse.

ATTENTION TO HORSES' TEETH.

A VETERINARIAN is needed to make a skilful veterinary dentist; it requires a man who thoroughly understands the anatomy of the mouth, and has the necessary instruments and skill to correct whatever is wrong. Few farmers have either and the so-called "veterinary dentist" who is not a veterinarian is usually an unscrupulous person who neither understands the proper arrangement and conditions of the teeth nor the proper manner of correcting faults—a man who lives by deceiving the horse owner. Hence, we think that it is better for the owner to get a qualified man to attend to his horse's mouth. There are few horses that have reached the age of six years or over (and often those of younger age) that would not be better if their teeth were dressed once every year. The reputable veterinarian does not tell all his patrons this and look in the horse's mouth and say that his teeth require attention. This looks too much like looking for a job, and horse owners are very apt to take it that way; and the veterinarian who has much respect, either for himself or his profession, is above it. He rightly thinks that if his services are worth having, they are worth asking for. All the same, the average horse will thrive better on the same food if his teeth are regularly dressed. There are many cases in which attention is not required, and the professional man who, for the sake of the fee, will dress a mouth that does not require it, is, we trust, rarely found.

The first trouble likely to result from the teeth appears in many cases between the ages of two and four years. At from two years and three months to three years of age, the first and second molar teeth in each row (which are temporary teeth) are shed and replaced by permanent ones. At from three years and three months to four years, the third molar in each row (also a temporary one) is shed and replaced by a permanent one, and the sixth molar in each row appears. It is not at all uncommon to observe a colt between two and a half and three or between three and a half and four years old to become unthrifty and have apparent difficulty in masticating. He does not appear sick, but becomes dull and listless and does not eat well. During the growth of the permanent molars, which are to occupy the space previously occupied by the temporary ones, the fangs or roots of the latter gradually disappear by absorption as the new teeth grow. In normal cases by the time the new tooth has reached the level of the gums the fangs of the temporary ones have become so absorbed that the crown drops off, but in many cases, on account of incomplete absorption, this does not occur and the new tooth, continuing to grow, forces the temporary one above the level of its fellows, and, as a consequence, mastication becomes very difficult or practically impossible, and unless the animal be fed on food that requires little mastication he will fail in flesh and energy. When unthriftiness, without apparent cause, is noticed in colts of these ages, the molar should be carefully examined, and if any of the crowns are not shed, they should be removed with a forceps.

In older horses the trouble is usually the presence of sharp points on the outer edge of the upper molars, and the inner edge of the lower ones. The lower jaw of the horse is narrower than the upper jaw, hence the rows of molars are closer together, and as the motion during mastication is lateral it can readily be seen that the molars in the upper rows will be worn from without inwards and upwards, leaving the outside of the teeth longer, and the lower molars will be worn from within outwards and downwards, leaving the inner side of the teeth longer. The teeth are irregular in outline in each side, thence, on account of the manner in which they are worn, there are numerous little sharp points existing on the side of the teeth mentioned. These, in many cases, irritate the cheeks and tongue, and the degree of inconvenience or inability to masticate properly will depend upon the size and direction of these points, but in most cases they interfere to some extent. Treatment, of course, consists in removing with a rasp these points. In the performance of this operation, a mouth speculum to keep the mouth open and rasps of different shapes are required, and care must be taken not to remove too much tooth. Special care should be observed not to rasp the bearing surfaces of the teeth. These surfaces are normally rough or serrated in order to grind the food, and if made smooth by the rasp, the horse will be in a worse condition than before.

In other cases, from various causes, one or more of the molars become longer than their fellows, the opposing tooth or teeth being abnormally soft and wearing more quickly or their roots decaying, and allowing the tooth to be forced further into the socket; the long tooth or teeth after a while attain such length that they come in contact with the opposite gums and render mastication impossible. In such cases the long teeth must be shorn and rasped down to a level with their fellows. A horse whose molars are in this condition will, of course, never again have a good mouth, but after the teeth are shorn he will be able to masticate fairly well.

Decaying teeth are not uncommon in horses. This condition is usually indicated by a fetid discharge from the nostril or a fetid breath. In some cases difficulty is experienced in locating the diseased tooth, but when the disease has advanced to that stage in which it can be located it must be extracted.

Wolf teeth (those small, supernumerary teeth which appear in front of the first molars in the upper rows) are generally supposed to have an injurious effect upon the eyes. This is a mistaken idea. They seldom do any harm unless they are large and in such a position that they interfere with mastication; but being supernumerary and having no function they should be extracted. The somewhat common habit of knocking the crowns off should not be followed. They should be drawn with a pair of forceps. We repeat that sufficient attention is not given to horses' teeth, and that a dollar spent for having them dressed is usually a good investment, while a bungling job does more harm than good.—Rider and Driver.

The Naturalist.

HABITS OF THE TARANTULA.

The great tarantula of the south-western part of the United States, like many other poisonous creatures as well as some that are quite harmless, is much maligned. It is not aggressive upon man, nor is it often intrusive, although many an old miner or prospector has shaken them out of his blankets or boots in the morning. Strange to say, tarantulas thus disloged are usually "the size of a saucer."

It is often stated that the spider frisks about in the sunshine on the hot sands of the desert, but in reality it avoids sunshine when it is hot, and remains well down in his burrow in the ground. About sundown it comes up to the opening and lies in wait just below the surface. It assumes this position whether it desires food or wishes only to get a bit of fresh air. It does not travel about in quest of food, even when hungry, but remains quietly in the attitude described, often for hours at a time. At the near approach of a caterpillar, grasshopper, beetle, or almost any creature of like size, other than his enemy the wasp, it rushes out and seizes it; but rarely goes farther than a few inches from the opening. Should the prey, when first arrested, simulate death, which often is the case, since usually it is not at once wounded, the spider, unless it is very hungry, remains quiet until the insect moves, when the needle-pointed fangs are thrust into it. By passing, it learns the nature of the object seized. The spider then retreats with it into its burrow, to feast, where the prey is ground up by the powerful mandibles, and the liquid portion, upon which the spider subsists, is sucked out. One fair-sized insect a week is sufficient to satisfy its hunger, because of its inactive existence, while it can live several months without food, even when most active, provided it has water. The spider will fight and destroy its own kind, but when equally matched the combatants spar for an advantage and rarely clinch unless one relinquishes its vigilance, when the other buries its fangs in it. It does not then relinquish its hold until the helpless captive dies of paralysis, induced by the poison injected. Death results in ten or twenty minutes. There are approximately seven or eight females to each male. The adult males are highly energetic and, unlike their phlegmatic mates, cannot be kept long in confinement. They wear themselves out in ceaseless endeavour to escape. This striking degree of activity is an essential attribute, since the females live often remote from one another and take no initiative in the courtship.

The tarantula does not dig its own tunnel. It takes possession of some deserted burrow, usually that of a pocket gopher, which to the adult spider seems highly satisfactory. These burrows run for the most part, horizontally, but the spider enters through a short vertical shaft. The burrows are two or three inches in diameter, but the spider at once restricts the entrance nearly to the diameter of his own body. It does this in a singular and interesting manner, affording a striking example illustrating the wide resourcefulness of lowly creatures. The spinnerets are two flexible and movable processes upon the under side of which are long rows of pores from which the silk is drawn out of a multiplicity of frail threads. With these organs, free particles are covered with a frail gauze which is then wadded together, along with much of the loose earth, which adheres to it. The wad is then carried up and pressed against the vertical wall, where it adheres, when it is further secured in place with more silk. The wads may be a half inch in diameter, and often many are required to finish the task.

In autumn, the spider closes the entrance completely in this manner, frequently using a large quantity of material. It is then ready to pass the winter in a semi-lethargic state, partaking of no food. In the spring it digs its way out. If the burrow is still in good condition it is cleaned out, the refuse being placed in a circle about the opening, where it renders the abode conspicuous. If the burrow proves untenantable another one is sought at once. There is evidence tending to show that the spider does not seek another habitation as long as the old one is suited to its needs; and quite often a number have been found that have lived at least three years in on place, judging by the number of discarded skins of suggestive size found in the burrow. During the growth of the tarantula, which requires about twenty years, it sheds its entire skin once each year—in mid-summer. The event is an important one to the spider, and as it is then quite helpless, the entrance is previously closed a sheet of silk drawn across it sufficing.

In June two or three hundred eggs are produced in a mass which is at once covered with silk. The tunnel, unlike that of the trap door spider, is not lined with silk, therefore to guard the eggs against contamination, while they are uncovered, the spider first incloses itself in a silk bag, sufficiently large to allow it to turn around freely. This discovery was made by hatching spiders in captivity, numerous brief inspections having been made at suitable intervals. The subject's aversion to light and to being disturbed at his period is quite apparent, and any prolonged or too frequent inspection causes it to abandon the task, so the entire operation cannot be learned from a single spider. Unless it is captured within a few days of the time that the cocoon is to be made, the spider makes no effort whatever to preserve the eggs. The large envelope inclosing the spider is quite frail, but its distension is assured by attachments to the wall of the burrow; and while it is very thin it is so closely woven that the finest dust is excluded. The floor of this silken cell is raised a little above the floor of the burrow. Soon after the egg mass is properly inclosed in its covering, the fabric inclosing the spider is torn away. The finished cocoon is over an inch in diameter and shaped like a depressed globe. The young emerge from he cocoon in mid-summer and, after shedding their skins, are found to be the size of a house fly divested of its wings. They remain during the summer in the maternal domicile seemingly a happy family; but in autumn they leave, one by one, each seeking some hole, suited to its size, which it proceeds to clean out and barricade in conventional manner. Nature will favour two, perhaps, out of as many hundreds, and protect them until they die of old age, at the end of twenty-five or thirty years.

The Story Teller.

A STORY OF THE WILDS.

Randall H. Kemp, frontiersman, journalist and big game hunter, who knows the Spokane country and the Pacific Northwest as he does his guns and dogs, was in a reminiscent mood the other night, when the controversy between President Roosevelt and Dr. William J. Long, nature writer, was the chief topic of discussion. Men who have prospected and hunted in the hills in northeastern Washington and northern Idaho and along the boundary and studied wild animals in their native haunts sustained the position of the chief executive of the nation, leaving the impression that the reverend "nature" student was making desperate efforts to "drag a herring across the scent" rather than confine himself to clearing his name of the charges preferred by the president in branding Mr. Long and his ilk as "fakers." These men spoke of wild things from long years of observation.

"Speaking about bears," Kemp broke in, after packing his short black pipe full of ping tobacco and getting it under way, "I have a story that doesn't require an Indian's affidavit to make it stand up, and yet a young buck, one of the braves of the Calispel tribe, some of which still make their habitat along the banks of the Pend d'Oreille river in the extreme north-western part of Washington, took an important part in the tale. This happened in the fall of 1889, when, accompanied by a friend, I went into the Metaline country, north of Spokane, where we fell in with the redskin, named Kusote, who attached himself to our commissary when he learned we had packed in an assortment of choice canned vegetables and fruits. He was with us day and night; in fact, we could not shake or lose him from the time we landed in the hills until we shouted 'klahowya,' when we pulled up at the mouth of the Calispel.

"I have little hope of ever again meeting the young Siwash, so you can imagine my surprise when, the following spring, I I received a call at my lodging in Spokane from the Indian. How he located me I have not yet ascertained, but it shows the Siwashes can trace any one, especially if you speak their tongue. The Indian did not lose any time in preliminaries, but drew from his blanket a buckskin pouch and emptied the contents on the table. It was a peculiar form of natural cement, and on crumbling it with my fingers I noticed that it was well filled with native gold, some pieces as large as a pea, but the bulk was much finer. We took the stuff to Charles Fassett's assay office, where the mass was ground, panned and melted. The assayer turned over to us a brick which weighed two ounces, and Warren Hussey, then a banker and gold buyer of Spokane, counted out four $10 gold pieces for it, which the Indian stowed away in his buckskin poke.

"Kusote then told me the story of how he came to secure the gold. A few weeks before he had been out hunting near where his tribe were camped when he ran on to a cinnamon bear, which had apparently come out of its winter quarters sooner than usual. He had taken a shot at the animal and wounded it in the side. The beast remained stunned for a few moments and then ran snorting up a gulch. Going to the place where the bear stood when hit, he found that the bullet had chipped the substance carrying the gold from the side of the bear. Trailing the animal up the gulch he located its lair, as it had disappeared in a hole in a pile of rock.

"The Indian's sincereness impressed me and I concluded to go with him and ferret out the mystery. If bears were roaming around the country packing heavy loads of native gold I was determined to have a share of it. The Indian agreed to pilot a companion and me to the spot for a share of the profits, and I immediately set to work to find a suitable person with whom to divide the spoil and also the possible dividends of the enterprise. I found the man. He was one of the powderless colonels who had heard of the civil war, but not sufficiently to enable him to draw a pension. We were not long in arranging details, and in two days more were on the way with a wagon and a complete camping and prospecting outfit.

"Leaving Spokane early one morning we travelled leisurely and camped that night on the Calispel river, where it widens out into the broad valley. At noon of the following day we were on the bank of the Pend d'Orielle river opposite the old Hudson's Bay company's blockhouse, several miles above the point where the Calispel empties into the Pend d'Orielle.

"When we reached that point the Kusote told us we would have to leave our travelling outfit and cross the river on a raft. After ferrying all our provisions, blankets and other supplies across the swift stream we placed our team and wagon in the care of a rancher. We made camp at the mouth of a gulch near the blockhouse and while the sun peeped over the Cabinet range of mountains the next morning we were astir. Armed with rifles and supplied with prospecting implements, we proceeded up the gulch, keeping a sharp lookout for wild things.

"As the colonel and I stopped to rest at the mouth of a small side gulch, which the Indian said was the one up which his wounded bear had escaped, we were aroused by a shout from the Siwash. Looking up we saw a large cinnamon 200 feet from us up the gulley. Bruin appeared to be in a hurry to get somewhere and was going in an opposite direction from which we came. We fired simultaneously, but only had the satisfaction of seeing the animal stop for a second and then move on. We decided, however, that one of our bullets had struck. We followed the bear up the steep gulch and saw it enter a hole in a ledge of loose rocks. Kusote said this was the place he lost track of the one he had wounded earlier. Here we found a considerable quantity of cement that contained gold such as the Indian had shown me in Spokane. It was heavily impregnated with yellow metal.

"Among our supplies was ten pounds of dynamite, caps and fuse. We placed the explosive in the opening properly primed, then piled rocks on top of the charge so that none of the force of the dynamite would be wasted, lighted the fuse and retreated, going up the hill. There was a deafening report and the gulley was soon filled with rock and dust. Then followed a rumbling noise. It did not require much time to discover that the jar of the explosion had loosened the large quantity of boulders, the mass sliding down the hill.

"When we thought all was safe we scrambled down. A huge cinnamon appeared on the down hill side of the rock pile. It was but a moment until we have pumped the brute so full of lead that his mission in life was ended. The colonel and I were estimating the quantity of gold that was clinging to his shaggy sides when we were aroused by a cry from the Indian. We saw the Siwash on top of the rock slide, gesticulating wildly and on reaching the point where he stood was the remains of another bear, torn by the action of the sliding rocks. This gave us additional information as to the importance of our new source of wealth. The stomach and intestines of the animal were filled with the cement, and this, to use a miner's phrase, was lousy with gold.

"By the sword of Bunker Hill," remarked my military titled companion, 'I have heard bear stories, but when we get back to civilization and tell this one, no person can be found who will believe us, even when we show them the gold that will be cleaned up from this remarkable discovery.

"When we returned to camp that night the colonel and I pondered the problem and reasoned out a solution as to how these bears were going around loaded with wealth. They made their lair in a natural cement bed, this material being soft, it clung to their shaggy coats. The intestines of the animals being filled with the substance was also easily accounted for. Bears, while hibernating, are inclined to swallow anything soft within reach, and as these had not yet left their dens or consumed food, the accumulations of the winter remained.

"We worked like sailers the following day, and it was difficult to collect the gold-laden cement from the rock. We did it while Kusote skinned and cut up our bear, and when this was done we placed our stuff in gunny sacks and went to camp, where, by diligent work, all of the metal was panned and stowed in a buckskin poke. We had no scales, but the colonel said as he lifted the sack: 'I lost everything I had in the Spokane fire except my military title and my war record, and I'll bet both against a peanut that these bears will assay $1,500 each.'

"The colonel took the metal to the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., and our net returns were a little more than $3,000, which we divided. We never visited the scene again, but we are now arranging to pass our summer vacation there, when we may slaughter a few more loaded bears and exploit the lead of the gold impregnated cement. Should President Roosevelt or any naturalist desire to join our party, he has my permission, and I believe that I can vouch for the colonel, as he is very much alive and heavily charged with good nature"—Breeder and Sportsman.

THE COLOURS OF HORSES

In the old days naturalists attached little or no importance to the colours of animals, believing this to be a trivial feature unworthy of the attention of the scientific mind. Of late years, however, opinion has changed in this and many other matters, and it is now generally recognised that colour is a deep-seated feature in animals, which in all cases has a meaning, and may be of the highest importance as a clue to their mutual relationships, in the case of both wild and domesticated species.

Some years ago Dr. Bonavia, Surgeon in the Indian Medical Department, in a very remarkable book entitled "Studies in the Evolution of Animals," directed attention to the frequent occurrence of dappling in horses of all colours, and suggested that it must be a very deep-seated and ancient character of the group. He even went so far as to suggest that the dappling of the horse represents the rosettes on the leopard's skin, and that the stripes are derived from the pattern on the bony plates of the armour of the extinct giant armadillos or glyptodonts, of South America.

Now although this theory is certainly a bit wild, it has the merit of recognising that dappling is a feature deeply implanted in the equine nature; and the merit of such recognition belongs entirely to Dr. Bonavia.

Giving full credit to the discoverer of this fact, Mr. R. I. Pocock, the Superintendent of the Zoological Society's London Menagerie, who has previously done so much to illustrate the inward meaning of animal colouration, has recently directed his attention to the colouring of domesticated horses, and arrived at many interesting conclusions as the result of his investigations.

In this gentleman's opinion, the colour met with among domesticated horses may be classed under three main types. The first of these types comprises bays, blacks, chestnuts, roans, piebalds, and skewbalds; the second includes duns alone; while the third is represented by greys and the majority of whites. From the fact that in all wild members of the horse family the mane and tail are darker in colour than the body, it is inferred that bay is the original phase of the first type. On this phase three modifications have been working, namely, blackness, or melanism, to give rise to browns and blacks; redness, or erythrism, to produce chestnuts; and whiteness, or albinism, to develop (in conjunction with melanism and erythrism) piebalds and skewbalds, and in another direction greys, and finally whites.

That this is not a mere fanciful suggestion is made evident by the fact that melanism, erythrism, and albinism are recognised features in the colour-development of wild animals.

It has been suggested by Professor Ridgeway, in his well-known work "On the Origin of the Thoroughbred Horse" that the white fore-head star and white stockings so often observed in chestnut thoroughbreds are hereditary features derived from the ancestor of that breed; but this theory is unhesitatingly rejected by Mr. Pocock, who shows conclusively that such markings must be regarded as first steps in the direction of albinism, and are not ancestral at all.

Dappling may occur in horses of all colours; but is most common in bays and greys and rarest of all in duns; the importance of the latter negative feature being alluded to in the sequel. This general prevalence of dappling supports Dr. Bonavia's view that it is an extremely ancient feature in equine organisation, and leads Mr. Pocock to conclude that it is even older than striping. Fuller development of this idea also leads to the conclusion, in Mr. Pocock's mind, that the ancestral forms of the horse family were dark-coloured animals marked with white or yellowish flecks or spots arranged in much the same manner as are those on the coats of young tapirs. And some support to this theory is afforded by the circumstance that it tends to bring two families of the odd-toed section of the hoofed mammals into line with one another in the matter of colouring.

These white markings of the ancestral horses are presumed to have taken in the first instance the form of simple round spots, which tended to arrange themselves in lines and then to coalesce into longitudinal streaks but subsequently underwent a rearrangement, so as to produce light transverse bars or stripes on the greater portion of the head and body. On this view, we have to regard zebras as black or brown animals with white or buff stripes, and not, after the ordinary fashion, as white ones with dark stripes; this idea having been suggested some years ago by that acute observer Sir Henry Johnston. Similarly, it may be incidentally mentioned, there appear to be good grounds for considering that giraffes were originally brown or red animals with vertical white stripes arranged like those of elands and their cousin the Congo antelope of the forests of equatorial Africa.

There is, however, one point which Mr. Pocock appears to have missed. He states, indeed, that it is only in domesticated horses that dappling occurs, and that such dappling is very rare in duns; but he does not apparently lay stress on the fact that it seems to be absent in the wild Mongolian horses, which may safely be regarded as the ancestors of the European dun breed. Hence it seems a legitimate inference that when dappling occurs in domesticated duns, it is due to crossing with another breed. If this be admitted, it seems to follow that—unless it be a case of reversion peculiar to domesticated breeds, which is highly unlikely—dappling occurred only in the ancestor of the Arab, or thoroughbred, which, in our opinion, was a species perfectly distinct from the one now represented by the wild horse of Mongolia. This ancestor, it has been suggested, may have been the extinct Indian Equus sivalensis; and it is highly significant in this connection that it is this species and Arabs which exhibit remnants of the gland-pit on the face which was functional in the three-toed Hipparion. For if dappling be the ancestral type of horse colouring, what is more likely than that it should be preserved in the one species retaining vestiges of the ancient face-gland?

Of course there are difficulties in regard to this suggestion, one of them being that we do not know when Arab or Arab blood was first introduced into Europe, and a second that we are equally ignorant whether dappling always occurred in European horses, or whether it is an introduced character.

It does seem, however, very strange that if dappling is really the ancient type of horse-colouring, and antecedent to striping, it should have completely disappeared from every wild species to reappear in domesticated breeds. And the only way out of the difficulty seems to be the aforesaid suggestion that Equus sivalensis, or such other species as may have been the ancestor of the Arab and thoroughbred, was a dappled or spotted bay horse.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

The first day of the Calcutta Second Meeting on Saturday last opened with the Tally-Ho Plate, a field of seven being despatched to a poor start. Squire Alfred went to the front immediately and led for the first few flights, Golden Morn and Umutbee in close attendance. Mystic Circle tailed off last, jumping badly, as were all the field. Squire Alfred was still ahead at the home turn but only on sufferance, as Golden Morn had him settled whenever she wished. Squire Alfred got too close to them all and beat himself through bad jumping.

The Scurry Handicap was a bit of an upset for Mr. Galstaun's stable. They backed Hopscotch down to odds on and the favourite and Fireaway jumped out together with The Point a few lengths behind. Kil Kite came out of the ruck on entering the straight and had Hopscotch beaten all the way home. Had the latter been saved for the run home he would most probably have won.

Mr. Galstaun was to the fore with his handsome pony Naughty Boy in the New Plate and had a good win with him. Lorraine and Danseuse were first away with Naughty Boy and Mandeville close behind them; they raced in this order until the distance, where Naughty Boy got clear, followed by Mandeville, who was beaten easily at the finish.

The January Plate was a very pretty race to watch, and although the favourite won rather easily at the finish there was a great fight for places. Foudrette jumped away with the lead and kept in front all the way, followed by Gallileo, Royal Colours and Elpis. Royal Colours challenged in the straight but could make no impression on Foudrette. The winner is a newly-imported French mare for which Mr. T. S. Smith paid a stiff price. She is a very nice cut of a mare and just the right stamp for India. Dr. Bassler's Ott rode her and she gave him his maiden win in India.

The Metropolitan was a very open race and each stable fancied its own chance. Lumination led throughout from Huka and Master Theo with Annamulloch and Longchamps in close attendance. Master Theo tried to come up on the inside coming into the straight but got a very rough passage and was eventually beaten by Huka for second place.

The starting prices were:

5 to 2	Lumination	7 to 4 on a place
7 „ 2	Shamfight	evens
5 „ 1	Annamulloch	evens
10 „ 1	Huka	2 to 1
12 „ 1	Master Theo	2 „ 1
20 „ 1	and greater	odds the rest.

The King's Plate was a turn up for the Books who needed it badly. Fizz in spite of his big weight was made a hot favourite. Ashanti Gold gave a lot of trouble at the gate and delayed the start, and when they were sent away Craigendorrie took command, followed by Sue, Crossbred, Misty Morn and Coat of Arms. At the mile bend Sue held a good lead with Coat of Arms a few lengths in front of Craigendorrie, Ashanti Gold, Pelargonium II and Misty Morn. Going to the half mile Coat of Arms went ahead and Fizz and Retort began to move up to the leaders. At the 3 furlongs Coat of Arms ran to the outside rail and could not be kept straight spoiling any chance he might have had, which looked to be a big one at the time he ran out. Coming into the straight Pelargonium II held a slight advantage of Fizz, Retort and Craigendorrie, which he kept to the end. Fizz made a great effort but could get no nearer than 1¼ lengths of the winner.

The Prinsep Plate dwindled down to a field of five and poor class at that, except Lord Barrymore, who seems to have struck his old form. Carnival made all the running from Best China and Flaneur. Coming round the home turn Lord Barrymore went ahead and won easily from Carnival.

Mumford made no mistake about the Metropolitan, as he considered his candidates were the best two in the race at the weights, as most undoubtedly they were. Had Master Theo not been knocked about in the race he would probably have finished second to Lumination.

That handsome country-bred pony Kil Kite won again last Saturday, very well ridden by little Whalley. This pony appears as the only final entry for the Civil Service Cup, complete entries for which race will be found further on.

We have not heard anything from the C. T. C. as yet with reference to the recent enquiries into the running of several animals.

The Bookmakers are very bitter in their complaints about the three-rupee entrance fee to the betting ring, as they say it has driven all the small punters away. This money apparently goes to the tote now if we are to judge from the fact that the ten-rupees machine's takings last Saturday amounted to the magnificent sum of Rs. 1,04,290.

There was on Tuesday last only a very poor attendance at the races, but those fortunate enough to be able to get away from office witnessed a very fine day's sport. Whalley was in great form again, winning four races out of the six in which he rode, three for Mumford's stable and one for our local sportsman Mr. "Lauder;" he is riding in very good style this year and is thus far top of the list with fourteen winners.

Racing began with the Third Pony Hurdle Handicap for which Cocoa started a slightly better favourite than Tete-a-Tete. Cocoa and Envious led over the first two with Bandy Leg and Ruling Passion next, Solace just behind. At the mile Cocoa was still ahead and Envious and Ruling Passion dropped out of it. Solace went up to Bandy Leg at the half mile, passed him 3 furlongs from home, and closed with Cocoa in the straight. They raced together at the last, but the old mare made a mistake and nearly fell and could only just beat Tete-a-Tete for second money at the finish by a short head, Cocoa winning comfortably.

Three only went out for the Clyde Plate, Mandeville led throughout and beat the favourite, Wild Boy, easily by two and a quarter lengths.

The Howrah Plate was another cake walk for Mumford's stable. Chobham was first away, followed by Royal Colours and The Cockatoo, Haloya and Bonny Boy close on their heels; they ran in this order all the way, Chobham won easily by three and a half lengths.

Golden Morn was backed down to odds on for the Sealdah Plate, but could never go with them, the race being won by her stable connection Mr. Dass' Carnival. Umutbee led from Coel and Sir Ulric until 3 furlongs from home, when Carnival went ahead, followed by Coel and Umutbee, Sir Ulric just behind. Carnival beat Coel easily by four lengths cantering.

Apropos of this race, Steinhager's handicapping was again the cause of amusement. This horse, as we have mentioned before, has been consistently placed at the top of the handicaps and on this occasion had even gone up in weight for running last the previous time out. There can of course, be only one interpretation to the handicapper's action, and if he is correct we cannot but admire the patience of the horse's connections, as Steinhager has been nearly four years in the country and during that time has never won a race.

The Prince of Wales' Plate, the big race of the day, was won by Master Theo, who made all his own running and after a great fight beat the top weight Fizz by a short head: the latter ran a very game horse.

The St. George's Plate was supposed to be a good thing for Scott's stable and they were unlucky to have been beaten. Bundah was first away, followed by Bobbie, Pressy and Little Meg, Speedometer just behind, Pussy came away from the home turn with Speedometer on her heels, and after a dingdong finish up the straight Pressy won by a neck.

In the Kidderpore Plate, Morino delayed the start a long time and eventually got away in front, followed by Mayfowl and Mafoota. Mayfowl led after a couple of furlongs with Mafoota and Craigendorrie next, Morino and Lady Violet close behind. Coming into the straight Craigendorrie ran up to Mayfowl and after a hard fight all the way home got the verdict by a short head. Mafoota beat Winkfield's Melody for third place also by a short head.

We are sorry to hear Mr. Marshall has had the bad luck to lose Solar System from tetanus; he was probably the best horse he had in his lot this year had he struck form. Not-so-Dusty is reported to have broken down but this has not been confirmed as yet.

Mumford's string leaves this side of India for Bombay on Monday in charge of Hayhoe. Whalley will first go to Lucknow and will ride for Scott's stable in the Civil Service Cup and from there he goes to Bombay, and then to England, but will most probably be out for Poona in September and will again ride for Mumford.

Dr. Bassler's string left on Tuesday for Bombay. We wish him better luck than he had here; he has some good horses, but none of them seem to have struck form as yet.

The track will be practically deserted after Saturday. Scott's string goes to Lucknow as does Mr. Galstaun's with Ferguson, but a lot of his will stay here. Young Tom Ferguson will have charge of them.

Ramshaw is taking Lord Barrymore, Shamfight and Fizz to Bombay and Tommy Thompson will take the rest of the horses back to Bangalore, where they will summer.

There was no paperchase last week owing to the going being too soft after the recent rain. Mr. Allen informs us that it is in good order again and there will be a chase on Friday next at the sixth mile stone.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—We were once more served up with a card of eight events on Saturday, the Mahim Plate being divided and the new pony race split up into three. Punters continue to have rather the better of exchanges though three fairly bad upsets occurred. An uncomfortable cold wind, half a gale, sprung up covering people with a sandy dust and blotting out horses from the five furlongs upwards.

From the betting, there only appeared to be two in the first of the Hopeful Plates, Padsha a strong favourite from Golden Measure. The former was taken out to wait in front, but the latter with Zaeed caught him down the straight and a good finish resulted in Golden Measure getting there.

There was only one seemingly in the second, The Brat late Brother, starting at odds on from Daulat who ran far from his track gallop. The Brat and Nasibdar, backed at along price, had the race to themselves, and down the last stretch the positions were comfortably reversed as the favourite is no stayer. Rocksand was third putting in a promising run.

Though in the second no time was taken, it is tolerably certain that the third was the fastest. Something very tangible was known about Valens, who had had only a fourth place to his credit, he warming to favouritism from Reaper and Prince Rudolph, neither of the latter running up to true form. The last named led for a time then William Tell, Lama and Rukhban passed him. Lama looked well on entering the straight but here Valens came through on the rails, and staying on strong, wore the other down.

In the first of the divided Mahim Plate, punters were willing to follow Creditor's stable lead at a short price in preference to Salanic, with Hachal fancied for a place. Salanic, Ashroft and Hargon were out in a line together and at the bend Creditor took advantage of Salanic swerving out. Hachal came with a rattle and Ashroff hung on, unfortunately swerving, but Creditor, nicely handled by Brown, his third win, held them safe.

An equally hot and good thing came in Plassy in the other division, though Nishan had a strong following. Hishan, however, was the only one to cause any doubt about the winner who held him also very safe all the way. Farick seems to have run into form, as he came with a big burst into a place.

We were rather out of it in the Consolation Plate, when it was thought good enough to lay odds on Sharar in a field of ten. He and Prime Minister cut out the running, and at the bend the latter was seen to be going the stronger. When, however, Minerva put in a run on the outside all was over and he won easing up. A much better performance than his recent ones.

Of the half dozen in the Lingfield Plate, Oakton was a very hot favourite with Chivalry next at fours. It was no race at all, as Chivalry as usual cut away lengths in front and, well in hand, showed no signs of stopping. Confederation, late Admiral Crichton, followed him all the way and just stayed the favourite out for second place. The timing was very smart, and the winner must be at his best.

Ten went for the mile Prongs Plate, and Lapwing was backed with great confidence, Hadee, Devon, Babil and Mehraj coming in for some support also. Well Done and Sun ran well for the first six furlongs, when Mehraj came into the lead and Lapwing was seen outside. Once in the straight Hadee found an opening and catching Mehraj beat him in a good race. Devon came well to pass the stopping Lapwing.

Mr. Ebrahim Mana, Omerkhan and C. B. Mahomed thus trained two winners each, a good start for the last named in his new interest.

D. Maher, the famous American jockey, is to ride the Earl of Rosebery's Neil Gow in next year's race for the Derby. Neil Gow, as our readers know, is the winter favourite for this event.

In connection with the Lahore Trades Cup Football Tournament, the cup presented by Messrs. Max Mineh is valued at Rs. 150 and that presented by Mr. Steeden at Rs. 100; not, as reported last week, Rs. 100 and Rs. 75 respectively.

A sporting writer in a London paper asks:—"Do you want a thoroughly genuine and profitable method of speculation with a guarantee against loss"? This question, in printed form, was lately submitted to a correspondent—one of many probably to be so favoured. He replied in the affirmative, lost his money, and then, when it was too late, forwarded the precious "prospectus" to me. Needless to explain, he was a tyro at the game. Endless almost are the ways of backing horses. I am acquainted with a good many, but the "Mutual Book" system is fresh to me, though the operators of it in this case claim to have been established a good many years. Their prospectus is a fine mixture of philanthropy, philosophy, and phiddle-dedee. Every year (we are told) thousands of pounds are thrown away by the public over horses that

(1) Are not intended to run.
(2) Have no chance of success.
(3) Are not meant to win.

(This is shocking. Where are the stewards?) But the "Mutual Book" operators offer themselves as guides, philosophers, and friends in these perplexing circumstances. They know—or say they know, which perhaps is a distinction without a difference—

(1) When a horse will run.
(2) What chance it has of winning.
(3) Whether the stable want it to win.

This is, indeed, information to go into Tattersall's with! Armed in this way, enlightened on these vital points, a little syndicate of backers could easily break the ring while making Monte Cristos of themselves. But, alas! a prospectus is not everything it looks and says when put into practice. Of course, capital was necessary to work even a philanthropic scheme like this, and its operators got over this difficulty by subscribing half the amount themselves (so they said) and offering the other half to the public in £1 shares. Operations were to be on the chief races, and previous "books" were alleged to have shown an average profit of 250 per cent. A commission of 10 per cent. was charged on profits, which were "paid by cheque on the following Monday."

Stripped of its bombast the scheme is merely one for backing horses with other people's money. My correspondent was duly notified that by putting 10*s*. on Bayardo to win at 6 to 4, 5*s*. on Valens for a place at 9 to 2, and the remaining dollar on The Story for a place (which he failed to get) a profit of nearly 200 per cent. had been made. That was an auspicious start, and he continued the game; but later some misunderstanding arose over the Great Yarmouth meeting, and he demanded his money back. Ultimately he agreed to "transfer the shares" (two) to the Duke of York Stakes. For this the "Mutual Book" plunged on the favourite Valens, who went down, and shortly afterwards the operators informed their clients and partners that the "book" had suffered a complete loss; "the race was a regular turn-up; it was impossible for anyone not to lose money over it." Mere ordinary people could be excused for not thinking of Buckwheat, the long-priced stable companion of Valens, but it should have been different with these magicians. Did they not know—or say they knew—what chance a horse had and what were the stable intentions? Why should they founder over a horse simply because he happened to be an outsider?

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

Some such ideas as these, perhaps, influenced my correspondent in demanding back his £2. He cited the promised guarantee against loss. In reply he was reminded that the guarantee applied only to purchasers of shares in the "books" throughout the remainder of the 1909 series, and that he had refused to go on after the Kempton loss; consequently his claim was bad. The prospectus did actually say this. One is constrained to ask: Who guaranteed the guarantee? You can insure against most things nowadays, from twins down to the toothache, but even Lloyd's would probably draw the line at a guarantee against loss over a betting system.

The following are the entries received up to date for the Lucknow Spring Polo Tournament:—1st King's Dragoon Guards, 8th King's Royal Irish Hussars, 12th Lancers, 17th Lancers, the Tigers, and Cooch Behar.

Manœuvres and other military arrangements this year prevented several teams from entering for the Connell Cup Polo Tournament held at Allahabad last week. Six teams eventually competed and the final brought together the Gordon Highlanders and the second Lancers, the Highlanders winning by 3 goals to 2. The usual polo pony parade in connection with the tournament was held on the 9th instant and prizes were presented by Mr. Justice Richards and General Keir for the best Arab in the show and the best pony in all other classes. The prize for the best Arab went to Peter Pan, owned by Captain Ward, of the 2nd Lancers, while the winner in the other class was Captain Pollok's brown Waler Sir John, the best of three very good-looking ponies put in by that officer. The Arab class was particularly well represented and the Judges must have had some difficulty in arriving at their decision.

Details of the Connel Cup Tournament appear further on.

Hurlingham has just issued its annual compilation, the Recent Form List, often called the Black List. Some players look upon the inclusion of their names in the list as a doubtful honour, as it debars them from taking part in many restricted tournaments; at the same time they would consider it an injustice if they were left out. In brief, the Recent Form List is the Order of Merit of polo. It is the cordon bleu which marks the player's progress in the game. The list is compiled by the Hurlingham Club at the request of the County Polo Association and others, and consists of players who, they consider, on recent form should be barred under the conditions of certain restricted competitions.

As a matter of course the names of the brilliant American players, Messrs. L. and M. Waterbury, Harry Payne Whitney, Devereux Milburn and Louis Stoddard (the fifth man of last season's team) are included in the list for 1910. Mr. H. Rich and Mr. N. Edwards were added last season, and now the Hurlingham Committee have included Colonel Chunder Singh, who did very well for the Tigers last year; and Mr. Isaac Bell, the Master of the Kilkenny Hounds and a member of the famous Old Cantabs' team. The names of Major Neil Haig, Mr. C. K. O'Hara, Major A. M. Rotheram and Mr. A. Rawlinson are no longer found in the list. The following is the compilation for 1910:—

Mr. Isaac Bell.	Mr. G. A. Miller.
Capt. G. Bellville.	Mr. C. D. Miller.
Mr. W. S. Buckmaster.	Mr. P. W. Nickalls.

As will be seen by our special telegram England beat Wales at rugby football by 11 points to six, the first victory of the Rose over the Leek since 1899: The match in 1904 resulted in a draw.

The competition for the Captain's Prize, in connection with the Calcutta Golf Club is now in progress. It is played by holes under handicap. Seventy entries have been received, and as all the byes are in the first round, fifty-eight competitors enter the second without the necessity of playing a shot. Some interesting matches are always the outcome of this competition and this year should be no exception to the general rule. The last days for playing the various rounds are as follows:—First round, 22nd January; second, 5th February; third, 15th February; fourth 19th February; fifth, 26th February; sixth (semi-final), 5th March. The final is to be played by 12th March.

There are points of resemblance in the condition under which golf is played during the hard frosts that have prevailed at home lately and in the torrid heat of the hot weather in Calcutta. A writer describing golf at Christmas in England remarks that provided that sufficient sand can be scraped up to make a tee, or, if the sand be of too adamantine a hardness, that an indiarubber or paper tee is to be had, there is no reason why driving should not be perfectly normal and enjoyable. The results will, of course, be abnormal in the matter of length, and there is a certain pleasure in driving far past those landmarks which are recognised as the limits of a long hit, even though the player knows that his achievements cannot be referred to his own skill. There is a difficulty in bearing that fact constantly in mind; the golfer becomes intoxicated with the exuberance of his own driving, and cannot repress a sneaking belief that those prodigious shots are only partly due to the frozen ground and that he has happened on some device which will make him a slightly longer hitter ever afterwards. Even so does the Calcutta golfer sometimes delude himself when he first drives upon the hard baked ground of the maidan. Again if the ground be really hard with frost just as where it is baked by a tropical sun, approaching is apt to degenerate into a farce—that is the chief defect of the game—but putting is not always so difficult or so lucky as it appears. The really long puts are sometimes terribly difficult, for the ball appears to gather pace as it goes in a very disconcerting manner. For some mysterious reason, however, the greens do not seem to be nearly so fast for the short puts, and in holing out the ball can be struck with infinitely greater boldness; in fact, it is not unusual in a frost or on unbaked ground to see the puts of eight and ten feet going down in a way which would be considered almost uncanny in the most favourable conditions.

The Y. M. C. A. Sports which rank in importance second only to the Bengal Presidency Athletic Meeting, will take place on the 29th instant. There will be the usual open events and entries close on Saturday, the 22nd instant. Lady O'Moore Creagh has kindly consented to present the prizes. For full particulars apply to the Joint Honorary Secretaries, Mr. P. Van Spall, 4, Fancy Lane and Mr. H. G. Pooler, 50, Park Street.

Buttan Singh, the clever native pulwan, who is now an established favourite in England, beat Irslinger, the wrestler, at New York on the 23rd ultimo after a four hours' tussle in which no fall was scored. It was for a £100 purse and £25 a side. Both men were in the best of condition, Singh turning the scale at 11st. ¾lb. and Irslinger at 11st. 4½lb. Irslinger is more massive than the Indian, who is, however, lithe of body and very muscular. The contest was in the catch-as-catch-can style, and the conditions were the best of three falls, with an interval between each of ten minutes, to wrestle to a finish. Both at once got to grips and at the end of five minutes were on the mat, but the Indian was very lithe, and both were soon on their feet again. They appeared to be evenly matched, and were on their feet most of the time endeavouring to secure neck holds. After fifty minutes Irslinger succeeded in bringing Singh down, but the Indian was up again before his opponent could secure a hold. At the end of an hour Irslinger caught Singh by the leg and both came down. They were up again in a second, and the struggle went on as before, without a break, for a little over four hours at the end of which Irslinger gave in and the native was declared the winner.

John Roberts has recently played a number of interesting billiard matches against Mr. Mike Elias, Champion of India. Playing at Nedou's Hotel, Lahore, Mr. Roberts conceded 500 in 1,000, and was beaten by over 200 points. On Monday and Tuesday last week the same players met at the Jullunder Club. On the first occasion Mr. Roberts conceded 400 in 1,000 and won with a couple of hundred to spare, and on Tuesday, conceding 500, he was beaten by about the same margin. On Wednesday evening, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Elias met again at the Roberts Institute, Lahore, before a good company of spectators. Mr. Roberts conceded 500 in a match of 1,200 up, and eventually won by little over 200 points. His chief breaks were 98, 116, 124, 138, and 260. Elias' chief breaks were 61 and 57.

Two curious and probably unique incidents occurred in the world of billiards on the 30th ultimo, one in Glasgow, in the match which Aiken and Duncan were contesting for the championship and a stake of £50, and the other in the tournament game at Messrs. Burroughes and Watt's Salon in Soho-square between Tom Reece and Cecil Harverson.

In the first instance, Duncan apparently took exception to the striking of matches and the shuffling of feet, said to be the work of a Pressman who was there on business. The journalist—a non-smoker, by the way—denied the allegation, and as a protest the Pressmen left the hall in a body.

In the case of the tournament incident, it seems Reece, after making a loser in the middle pocket, took out his ball and laid it on the table near by while he surveyed the position from the top of the board. On retracing his steps Reece, instead of picking up his ball and playing from the "D," proceeded to play from the position in which he left it after removing it from the pocket. Harverson at once claimed, and was, of course, granted a foul, and promptly helped himself to a sufficient number of points to ensure him the lead.

Alligators and caymans are confined to America, with the exception of a Chinese alligator. Crocodiles, on the other hand, have a very wide distribution, and are found nearly all over the tropics. The Nile crocodile is the best known, and was regarded by the ancient Egyptians as sacred. The fiercest and most dangerous species is the Estuarine, which, as its name implies, is partial to estuaries and even the open sea. Sometimes it attains a length of over 30 feet. It ranges from India eastward, and is found in North Australia and some of the South Sea islands. There are some crocodiles, chiefly called "garials," which possess long and slender snouts, specially adapted for catching fish in much the same manner as our fish-eating birds, the heron and the darter, have long bills adapted for the same purpose. All the creatures belonging to the crocodilian order are oviparous. The Nile crocodile constructs its nest by digging a deep hole in the sand, and lays from twenty to thirty eggs therein in two layers, with sand between. The cavity is than filled in, and the female crocodile sleeps near by. When the young hatch out, the mother hears them, and proceeds to dig them out from the nest and leads them down to the water's edge. The American alligator constructs a mound of dead leaves and twigs for its nest, but the general habits of the group are very similar. Besides making nests, they construct for themselves lairs by excavating burrows, like aquatic animals, with an entrance under water and air-holes in the roof, and here they are supposed to retire to devour.

We publish in our Shikar columns to-day an article on the method of hunting by the great carnivora, written by our valued contributor "Nomad." This should give rise to some interesting correspondence and we will welcome the opinions of other shikaries and naturalists on the subject.

To the many strange uses that chloroform may be put a Dr. Francis Ward, of Ipswich, has added yet another. He chloroforms fish—not for surgical purposes, but in order that he may obtain lifelike photographs of them in their natural environment. "The greatest difficulty I had to contend with in this fascinating hobby of photographing fish in their natural environment in tanks was the rapid and unexpected movements of the subjects," Dr. Ward explained. "The idea occurred to me that I could make the fish more tractable by means of chloroform. But how to administer the anæsthetic?

Eventually I decided upon the process of drawing the water slowly away from the tank while at the same time administering the chloroform through another tube. The experiment was profoundly interesting. At first the fish became extremely excited, darting madly from one side of the tank to the other. It appeared as though my effort was to be in vain, but before long lassitude evercame them and they rested lazily near the bottom of the tank. Thus I was able to make a protracted photographic exposure with excellent results. Continuing my experiments, I found that just before anæsthesia is complete it is possible to take a photograph of fish in an aggressive attitude. Anæsthetics are particularly useful in the photo-microscopy of fish larvæ. Once they are removed from the chloroformed water the subjects rapidly recover."

Dr. Richard Bowdler Sharpe, the well-known compiler of ornithological catalogues for the South Kensington Museum died on Christmas Day.

Born in London on 22nd November 1847, Dr. Sharpe commenced life with Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son, in 1863, latter being with Mr. Bernard Quaritch, in 1865-66.

His scientific career began in 1867 when, at the age of only 20, he became the first holder of the post of librarian to the Zoological Society of London.

This he held for five years, and his work led to an invitation to join the staff of the British Museum, which he did in 1872, as senior assistant in the department of zoology.

Dr. Sharpe had seen great changes in the South Kensington building. When he entered it, the collection contained only 35,000 birds, whereas now the numbers have swollen to 400,000.

His greatest feat was the Catalogue of Birds, began in 1874 and finished in 1888. This monumental piece of work comprises twenty-seven volumes, and of these no fewer than thirteen were written by Dr. Sharpe himself.

The ostrich, according to a Times correspondent who is making some interesting studies in the London Zoological Gardens, is the victim of much injustice. Perhaps the best known story about this bird is that it hides its head beneath the sand and thinks that thereby its body is hidden. But this is declared to be a pure myth. Old birds on the nest and young birds when seeking to evade notice squat close to the ground or stretch their necks out flat upon the sand. In the case of the young, which harmonise as perfectly with their sandy surroundings as young ringed plover do with the stones upon a beach, the ruse is said to render them almost invisible, and on the wide expanses of the desert it is evident that the upright neck of a sitting bird would render it unnecessarily conspicuous to a marauding enemy. But there is no ground for accusing the ostrich of self-illusion. Again, the bird is often said to be exceptionally foolish, but as a matter of fact it is one of the wariest of birds and most difficult of approach. The ostrich is, of course, famous for its feathers. In this connection it is pointed out that the beauty of an ostrich feather is largely owing to the fact that in the eye of science it is what is known as degenerate. In the feathers of ordinary birds which are used for flight the barbs (the individual plumes or filaments on either side of the quill) are furnished with minute hooks by means of which one barb fastens itself to the edge of the next, so forming a continuous web in which it takes some appreciable force to make a fissure. In the ostrich the feathers, having become idle, have lost the hooks, so that each barb falls loose and unsupported by its neighbours. Having ceased to overlap so as to form an air-resisting surface for purposes of flight, moreover, the barbs on both sides of the ostrich feather have grown to equal length, whereby not only is its beauty enhanced, but it has furnished man with an emblem of the justice which leans not to one side or the other. The speed of the ostrich is tremendous; travelling at full speed it covers 24 feet at each prodigious stride, and does 25 or 26 miles an hour with comfort; so that the only chance of running it down is by hunting it with relays of fresh horsemen who take up the chase as the bird begins to tire. Its weapon is its heavy foot which is furnished with only two toes, one of which is barely one-half the length of the other, the longer one being armed with a nail almost worthy to be called a hoof. With its length of limb and great thigh muscles the bird can strike a blow with that cruel claw which has been known to open a horse's side, and he is a rash man who goes, defenceless and alone, to take the eggs from the nest of ostriches breeding in captivity when the male bird stands guard.

We publish to-day full details of the fight for the Heavy Weight Championship of Australia between Bob Fitzsimmons and Bill Lang in which the ex-champion was beaten in the 12th round by the Swiss, whose real name is Langfanchi. After having the best of the encounter for eleven rounds Fitzsimmons was unable to stay and was knocked out. The week previous to the big fight with Lang the Stadium, Rushcutters' Bay was crowded to witness a four-round bout between Tommy Burns and Fitzsimmons, and the spectators saw much to interest and excite them. Throughout the pace was fast and some of the blows landed were much more forceful than many of those brought into action in a contest for "keeps." There were several vimful rallies, and excitement reached a high pitch when Burns got close in and Fitzsimmons stood his ground. Both traded punches as if they enjoyed them. "Tommy" danced round like a marionette, while Fitz was content to wait. During one of the rallies Burns' head and Fitzsimmons' eye came into contact and Robert's optic was cut. The mishap, however, only troubled him for a day. The world's ex-champions were accorded great ovations on entering and leaving the ring.

The effect of the training Tommy Burns has been doing for several weeks past and still sticks so religiously to, is shown by the fact that he has made up his mind to have a few more matches before giving up the game altogether, and Johnson, Langford, and Ketchell are named in the connection. Burns is delighted with himself, and says he never felt better. It has dawned upon him that he should not weigh less than 13st. for any future fights. Tommy recently cabled Mr. W. W. Naughton, of the Frisco Examiner to the effect that if a match could be arranged with Johnson any time before July he (Burns) would be glad to meet the black again—winner take all.

Johnny Summers has arrived safely in Australia and will meet Rudolph Unholz, the German light weight at the Stadium, Sydney, on the 26th instant Summers has hopes of fixing up another battle with Freddy Welsh after the champion light weight of England has brought off his much-talked of fight with Battling Nelson for the world's light weight championship

We would remind our readers that entries for the Calcutta Kennel Club Show close to-day. Entries have been most satisfactory and there is every probability of last year's total being exceeded. Several classes have been added since the schedule was printed, notably classes for Australian terriers to which, we are informed, Mr. J. C. Galstaun is giving a valuable cup in addition to the usual club prize money. Mr. Horace Johnstone, an English Kennel Club Judge, will judge the bulk of the classes, his specialities being Airedales and Great Danes. Mr. Longhurst will take bulldogs, and fox-terriers; Colonel Rennie, spaniels, grey hounds and sporting dogs; while Dr. J. H. B. Martin, who has kindly promised to act as Honorary Veterinary Surgeon for the Show, will take Kangaroo hounds, Australian terriers and other varieties.

An excellent innovation in connection with the Show this year will be the ability to procure luncheons and afternoon teas on the ground. And the fact that the catering is in the hands of Messrs. G. F. Kellner and Co. is sufficient guarantee that things will be done in tip top style.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 31st December 1909.

The weather prophets who so confidently predicted a "white Christmas" lied in their beards. Christmas came and went, as far as London was concerned, with neer a snowflake. The mud I noted in my letter, written on Christmas Eve, was ever present, the dirt and depression constant save for a few brief hours during which the sun was distinctly visible to the naked eye. Still there was not lacking amusement, and, in a word, everything was patronised to overflowing and King Pantomime reigned supreme in town and suburb. Some were worthy of the best Harris traditions, others were a long way behind, but all attracted crowded houses nightly. After all in these days when the school board, the legislature and what not have reduced the average Londoner to a condition of settled gloomy ferocity, it is refreshing to find that for a few days he can relinquish snarling and yelping and grumbling and turn to "Cinderella" or "Alladin" or "Ali Baba" with apparent relish. And after all it would, perhaps, be easy to argue that the man whose sense of humour finds itself well fed by the antics of Ali Baba's pantomime donkey is the healthy and the normal type, the man who is precious to the nation. In the matter of humour, as in the matter of dinner, the unspoiled palate may be trusted to choose the most wholesome dish. A diner who would rather eat foie-gras than beef is a pervert. The playgoer who laughs when the clown pelts the policeman with turnips may be a worthier citizen than he who would rather hear a little group of people in evening dress pelting each other with epigrams. So that if we take a line from the manner in which the Cockney abandoned himself to pantomime and mirth this Noeltide we may, perhaps, still cherish some hopes of him.

In this connection it is sad indeed to realize that in the modern panto. the clown and his friends are slowly but surely being edged out of the bill. It is an ill-sign to see them disappearing from the boards. Although Italian-born, Harlequin, Columbine and Pantaloon have been naturalised among us for some two hundred years. But surely the clown was born to the troupe after they had crossed the Channel? An Italian knows little of slides and nothing of the best fresh butter. How, then, could an Italian artist have conceived the buttered slide? Break with Harlequin, and you break with an honoured guest. But break with the clown and you throw a countryman out of work.

Everyone this Christmas is talking about "The House of Temperley" at the Adelphi. In this piece Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has prepared for the stage a really good exhibition of a prize-fight. Knowing full well that the fight could not be expected to last the whole evening—and that few members of the audience would understand it if it did—he has decorated the fight with most of the villainies and the follies with which the prize-ring of the early part of last century was decorated. There are "Corinthians," there are past and present masters of the noble art, there are insane bets, there is nobbling, and, above all, there is a crowd. The author has good reason to be grateful to the gentleman who managed the crowd. It was excellent. It cheered and hooted and rushed hither and thither not only with accuracy but with spirit.

The great scene of the play, the scene to which all the story leads and for which all hearts yearn, is the scene of the great fight on Crowley Downs. The hero and the villain have, each of them, a fancy. Sir John Hawker (a blackleg) backs "Gloster Dick"—and on public form, as shown in the early acts, he is right. Sir Charles Temperley, a modified hero looking, as played by Mr. Ben Webster, exactly like Canning, backs "Ginger Stubbs." Temperley's man is, however, carried off by Hawker's minions, and it looks for a long and anxious time as if the fight would not come off. However, Temperley's brother, a young soldier, jumps into the breach, and after a long fight, only a small part of which the audience sees, wins, and all is well. All this would be more exciting, at any rate on the stage, if there were more dramatic reason for the fight. But as the real point is that two men have put up two other men to fight for money, the play must depend for its interest either on the quality of the boxing, which was not very high, or merely on the outcome of a wager. And people are not really very much thrilled about the result of other people's bets. There is, of course, something else hanging to the money. The Temperley estates are involved, and from time to time when big scenes are being prepared, there is a love story. But it doesn't come to very much, and the fighting is the thing, "the claret" and those who tap it. The whole play is so well stage—managed that the audience was kept on the tensest strain of excitement, and Sir Arthur had a great reception when he came to make his bow.

All who are interested in the affairs of the theatre must have heard with the greatest regret of the death of Mr. Ernest Carpenter, joint manager, with Mr. H. R. Smith, of the Lyceum Theatre. The sad event took place in dramatic circumstances last Thursday night, Mr. Carpenter breathing his last just about the time that the curtain was descending at the Lyceum on the first performance of his successful pantomime, "Aladdin." Death followed an unsuccessful operation for an internal complaint. Mr. Carpenter had been associated with the stage practically all his life. His first appearance as an actor was at the age of sixteen, and since then his life has been crowded with interesting and varied experiences. After a spell of provincial management he joined forces with Mr. H. R. Smith in March 1907 to run the Lyceum at popular prices. Success attended all their productions, irrespective of their type, which ranged between melodrama, pantomime and classics like "Hamlet" and "Romeo and Juliet." Besides his interest in the Lyceum, Mr. Carpenter was concerned in the Theatre Royal, Bristol, where his Christmas pantomime "Robinson Crusoe" is now being produced. The close of so energetic a career and the removal of so genial a personality from theatre-land, at the early age of forty-two, are infinitely pathetic.

Last Wednesday was the hundreth anniversary of the birth of W. E. Gladstone. It is just thirteen years since he died, yet the attempt to rally his old party by the calling aloud of his name does but show how that name has lost its value on a rallying banner. His stately figure is a receding memory; the charm of his sonorous voice does not carry over thirteen silent years. True, his statue in the Strand was hung with floral tributes and there was a similar manifestation at his grave; but the majority of the decorations came from afar, from Bulgaria, from "grateful Armenians," from the Balkans, Finland and other small European powers.

Mr. George A. Kessler, the Yankee millionaire freak host, has just come into further notoriety through his North Pole dinner given in the winter garden of the Savoy Hotel last week. The cost of the banquet was stated to be over £2,000, or nearly £60 a head. When this eccentric person gave his gondola banquet the winter garden was turned into a lagoon, and his guests sat in a rose-embowered gondola. Last Saturday night the winter garden became the home of snow and ice.

In the centre was the Pole itself, all white and glistening and surrounded by icebergs of silver tissue and fields of plaster snows. Peary and Cook were there, striving to reach the Pole from opposite sides. Covers for the thirty-four guests were laid on a table of imitation snow which girdled the Pole. Plaster snow carpeted the floor and beautiful snow-white chrysanthemums in a trellis work of greenery covered every inch of the walls. A couple of thousand blooms were required. Little snow men held the name cards, white chairs were placed for the guests, and the menu, with the "Big Nail" through it, floated over the Pole. Several of the dishes bore Polar names.

Kessler had brought from Paris between 300 and 400 Christmas presents, two hundred of which he distributed to his guests, among them being articles of jewellery costing £100 apiece, while the remainder, arrayed on four large Christmas trees, hung with silver icicles, were to be sent to the Home for Crippled Children.

Looking at the list of guests one cannot help wondering why a few of them at any rate hadn't sense enough to decline the invitation to participate in such senseless and in some respects wicked entertainment.

Poor Mrs. Flora Annie Steel (some time Punjab school inspectress and afterwards writer of Indian novels of rather unequal merit and varied interest) has come forward with a proposal to license drapers and tax women's frocks. Our recollection of this lady is of one addicted to tweeds and tailor-made attire of the severest cut and sombre if not repellant hue. Her outcry against chiffons and frills reminds one somehow of the fable of the fox minus his caudal appendage. She has just written as follows to the Times:—

The following quotation from a daily paper is responsible for this letter:—

"As the important period of the general election is quickly approaching, our women, anxious to help and work for their friends, for their country, are busy ordering costumes for the campaign. Velvet is the prevailing note in these charming creations, which seem ideal gowns for the occasion."

Velvet! and we women ask for votes. Velvet! when for Liberal and Conservative alike the fate of Britain quivers in the balance.

It seems to me, sir, that it is time for men to put some check upon that canker of womanhood, the passion for dress, which has already eaten out the heart of our council school girls and sapped the sanity of our society women.

Yes? it is time to make dress pay its toll. If not the vice, it is at any rate the luxury of the female community, as tobacco and alcohol are the vices or the luxuries of the male. It stands eye to eye with them; why should it go scot free? Both Conservatives and Liberals will need money, and it would be better to license drapers' shops and take toll of their earnings, as we take toll of the liquor shops, than to finger the capital of the nation or tax food.

One half of the dress of the present day among rich and poor alike is pure luxury; neither imitation Valenciennes nor real Mechlin, cheap tinsel, nor gold embroidery are necessaries of life.

Abstract justice may hesitate before directly taxing those who are counted among children and idiots; but I believe that every woman who, as I do, wants a vote would welcome an attack on what is in truth the greatest obstacle to our obtaining it, since who, reading the quotation I have given, would say that those for whom it was written were fit for the franchise? They form, it is true, the status quo of womanhood, in which lies the strength of the anti-Suffragist; but no thoughtful man can surely desire to be helped by—"velvet"!! Mrs. Flora Annie Steel has evidently yet to learn the power of a "little bit of muslin" or a "a wee bit of fluff" where male electors are concerned. She wots not of the fine feathers which mark the "real lady" in hundreds of thousands of electors' homes where the wives have somewhat to say in directing the votes of their men folk after the stylishly dressed dame has flattered the women, noticed the kiddies and generally done the agreeable.

The Vagrant.

NEW GUINEA.*

This interesting and beautifully illustrated volume makes its appearance at an opportune time. Under the auspices of the Natural History Branch of the British Museum an expedition has been despatched to New Guinea to collect zoological and botanical specimens from the ranges of the interior lying within or adjacent to British territory; and if this mission prove a success, as it is to be hoped it will, we shall all want to know something more about this great island. For such information as is available, readers may turn to the volume before us, although, as the author himself would be the first to acknowledge, even that does scarcely more than touch the fringe of this comparatively little known country.

To the zoologist New Guinea is, indeed, one of the few unknown happy hunting grounds still remaining in the world; and it is almost certain that some wonderful new forms of mammals and birds await discovery in the mountains of the interior. Indeed, according to rumour, there is already evidence, from its footprints, of the existence of a large mammal at present unknown to science. Since, however, the author of "Across Papua" is evidently not a naturalist, we must dismiss zoological subjects, and glance at what he has to tell us regarding the country, its people, and its products.

All except Little Englanders will agree with the Colonel in deploring that New Guinea is not wholly a British possession, as it should and ought to have been. For, as he tells us, the island was annexed some two centuries ago by the old East India Company whose action was, however, disallowed by the Home Government. Once again we had a chance, and once again we lost it. Thus in the early eighties Sir Thomas Mollwraith, when Premier of Queensland, foreseeing how dangerous it would be to Australia to have a European naval power within a week's steam, annexed New Guinea to the Colony under his rule. There again this spirited action was disallowed by the British Government, with the result that a large portion of Papua is now, and will doubtless remain permanently, under German Government.

Of the value of the country from a commercial point of view Colonel Mackay speaks very highly. Rubber grows naturally; and trees imported from other countries grow strongly and rapidly. A plantation of about seventy acres at Rigo contains 12,000 trees of the indigenous Ficus rigo and fifty of the Indian F. elastica, all of which were thriving when the Commissioners made their report. Having seen the plantation, the Commissioners were convinced that New Guinea has a great future as a rubber-growing country, although they were of opinion that the ground had been planted too thickly.

The Fly River district, when opened up, will, it is thought, prove exceptionally rich, Manilla hemp, sago, tobacco and cotton growing wild, while the natives cultivate sugarcane and enormous quantities of bananas.

As regards climate, the Resident Magistrate stated that apart from ordinary malaria, Europeans can live in the Fly River district without contracting much disease, although they appear to run down rapidly and have to go away frequently for change. This statement refers, however, to the low-lying coast country, and when the mangrove zone has been passed, the climate of the interior of the great island appears to be much less enervating.

In the future it will probably be found practicable to establish sanatoria in the hills, where Europeans could enjoy a comparatively healthy climate; but it must be a long time before anything in this way can be attempted; and, indeed, anything like a full development of Papua is a task which must remain for future generations.

Travelling in the plains is difficult enough, but in the hills is a matter of great labour, entailing excessive exhaustion and fatigue; and the author gives a graphic account of the trials endured by himself and companions in ascending and crossing one of the great ranges of the interior.

In parts the roads are comparatively good; and portions of the interior present great variety in scenery, and show tracts of land which may some day serve as grazing ground for cattle.

In one place, for instance, the author writes that "after riding for some miles through easy country, we ran into gumridges that suggested alike Australia and good stock-land ..For a while Australia and Papua alternated in stretches of open forest and tropical belts, then from the vantage ground of a village we saw a vision splendid. In one part a great chasm, the river boiling in its depths. To the right a wall of rock-faced cliffs. On our left rich volcanic hills grassed to their tree-crowned summit and embossed with huge boulders of conglomerate. In the middle distance Mount Lawes rising barren and alone, and stretching to the shadowy outlines of the coast hills a fertile campagna; a streak of deep foliage marking the course of the Lalelle as it flowed down its centre to the Coral Sea"

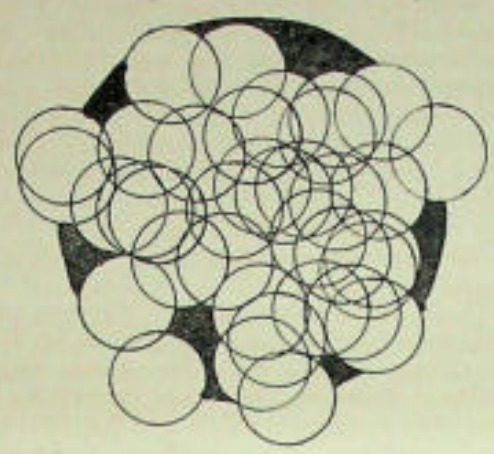
Before concluding it should be mentioned that an enterprising British settler, Mr. Greene, has established a coffee plantation on which is grown coffee of the right sort. Mr. Greene, originally a bank clerk in Mauritius, came to New Guinea of all places, in search of health, and apparently found it. What he accomplished when out of health, young men in good health and abundant energy and determination ought to be able to equal or surpass; and the author refers to a plateau at a height of some 1,800 feet above sea level, where coffee-planting ought to be not only a profitable but likewise a healthy occupation.

The author has not only provided the public with an exceedingly interesting book of travel and adventure, but has likewise done good service by directing attention to a comparatively little known and in some degree neglected field for British enterprise and expansion.

* Across Papua: being an account of a voyage round and a march across the Territory of Papua with the Royal Commission. By Colonel Kenneth Mackay. London, Witherby and Co. 1909 (XVI and 332 illustrated.

It was like this. Winnie, the unwed, went down to spend Christmas at Datchet with her dearest chum, Sylvia the spliced. On Boxing night Winnie returned late from a run over to Windsor. In the darkness of the hall, at the foot of the stairs, a tall figure in a billycock and a racing coat rose out of the gloom and clasped her in a scarcely platonic embrace.

Let go, you infernal fool!" responded Winnie, wrenching herself free; "what inopportune times and places you choose for your idiotic love-making; one of these times Daisy will drop on you!" And Daisy did drop—off the big hassock that gave her height. And as she doffed the hat and coat she blubbered out, "I only meant it for a Joke, but oh, you, Win, you—!" Then she festooned herself over the banisters, and wept bitterly.



Shooting.

PHENOMENAL REVOLVER-SHOOTING.

Revolver-shooting, although it is the most popular of all forms of pistol-practice, is also the most difficult to excel in. When the revolver was first introduced in a practicable form, by Colonel Colt, close-shooting was not included amongst the claims advanced on its behalf. The weapon was intended for use in warfare, at ranges generally so short that it might be more difficult to miss than to hit. The break between cylinder and barrel, while necessary to provide facilities for rapid fire, was not conducive to regularity of shooting. The limited distance between the fore and backsights, although essential in a pocket or holster arm, made it necessary to hold with very great steadiness if close groups were to be obtained. At the same time, the powerful cartridges used, firing a comparatively heavy bullet from a comparatively light weapon, inevitably produced great recoil and disturbance. With the military revolvers, these considerations, disadvantageous though many of them must be, from the point of view of target-practice, are outweighed in comparison with the efficiency of the arm for war purposes, and the celerity with which it can be discharged.

The modern target revolvers, shooting the same powerful cartridges as the military models, have usually longer barrels, grips better fashioned for steady holding, and sights as perfectly adapted for fine shooting as the conditions of competition at the great rifle meetings will permit. The same qualities as are possessed by the strictly military patterns are thus retained, with the advantage of improved accuracy of fire. A good target revolver can be relied on for a close group, provided always that the shooter has attained that mastery of an admittedly difficult weapon which will enable him to hold it straight. The old tag about "straight powder" has lost practically all its meaning in relation to sporting guns and sporting rifles, but with revolvers much depends upon the ammunition. Absolute regularity in the cartridges is a necessary accompaniment of very steady alignment, on a short sight base, in the making of highest possibles. For the best results in revolver-shooting one needs that the revolver and the cartridges shall be capable of the finest and most regular work. The shooter, even at his fittest, is far from infallible. There are too many unavoidable difficulties to contend with for avoidable ones to be suffered gladly, or for that matter to be suffered at all.

The shown on this page diagram is very remarkable as an indication not only of the perfection to which target-revolvers and their ammunition have attained but also of the possibilities of human skill in the way of accurate shooting. On 4th September last, on the Bisley 20 yards revolver range, Warrant Officer A. J. Raven, R.N., shooting with Colt Revolver and Eley "Target" cartridges, made a series of seven 6-shot groups. The targets were the usual Bisley cards, with 2 inch bull, and inner ring 3 inches in diameter, the area extending to the outer (fifth) ring which is 12 inches in diameter. Six of these diagrams were highest possibles, while the remaining one had 5 shots on the bull and one in the 3 inch ring. Thus one point only was dropped from the "highest possible" in 42 shots. If this shooting had been made on one card, the centre of the bull would have been shot away entirely and only the barest trace of its edges left. The ·455 bullets, used in the shooting, make, of course, a somewhat large hole, and by superimposing one diagram over another it is easily seen that there would have been nothing left to aim at long before 42 shots could have been fired. Actually, therefore, Warrant Officer Raven on that day held, for the whole series, the closest groups the size of the bullets permitted. On one of the targets little more than a hair's breadth prevented the making of a black possible (one shot just creeping over the edge) and each target considered separately represents remarkably fine shooting. Any single one of the diagrams would be regarded with interest at Bisley or any other rifle meeting. Taking the series of seven, there is not any doubt that the use of that often misapplied adjective "phenomenal" is thoroughly justified. So far as is known no such shooting has ever before been done. It is a record that will be difficult to equal.

The weapon used was a ·455 Colt's New Service Target, 1909 Bisley Model Revolver. This revolver is made for ·450 and ·455 Eley ammunition and .455 Government cordite cartridges.

The length of barrel conforms with the N.R.A. regulations allowing a maximum of 7½ inches. The revolver has a solid frame and a grip which gives a perfect hold, while the trigger-pull is very smooth and equable, enabling the shot to be got off with a minimum disturbance of aim. The makers always claimed for their Colt Bisley Model Target Revolver that it was capable of the highest accuracy, and the successes of its users abundantly justified the claim, even before the present remarkable example had so strikingly confirmed it.

Colt's ·455 New Service Bisley Model Target Revolver, with W. O. A. J. Raven R. N. made his wonderful shoot.

The Eley "Target" cartridges, which since their introduction have become so widely known by reason of the successes of their users, have a bullet only slightly conet at the front, which in shape is more like a plug than a projectile. This form of construction allows of a maximum bearing being taken on the rifling so that in the comparatively short travel up the barrel a perfectly steady rotation on the long axis is obtained and maintained throughout the flight. A flat-headed, or only slightly coned bullet is not well adapted for overcoming air-resistance, but the revolver is not a long range arm so that this is a consideration of little moment. With the Eley "Target" bullet the advantages obtained within the barrel obviously outweigh immeasurably any possible disadvantage that might arise beyond the muzzle were the revolver designed for use at ranges more appropriate for a carbine. The ·450 "Target" bullet weighs 220 grains and the ·455 bullet with which Mr. Raven's diagrams were made, is of the same weight and similar shape. Smokeless powder is used in the Eley "Target" cartridges, which are now as well known in India as they are in England. At the meetings of the Rifle Associations of India at Quetta, Bangalore, Meerut, Poona and elsewhere, they have attained that popularity which successful use justifies. Colonel Tickell, D.S.O., a well known revolver-shot, and a member of the Committee of the Bangalore Rifle Association, has made excellent shooting with his Colt's Revolvers and these cartridges, as have many other shooters at the meetings in India.

METHOD OF HUNTING BY THE GREAT CARNIVORA.

In his most interesting book African Nature Notes Mr. Selous tells us that "nothing is more certain than that all carnivorous animals hunt almost entirely by scent;" and it need scarcely be said that this opinion of such an expert observer, based on the widest experience, must be taken to be correct with regard to the carnivorous animals of Africa; the same great authority, writing with regard to protective colouration, says that well-known naturalists appear to assume "that both carnivorous and herbivorous animals trust entirely to their sense of sight, the former to find their prey and the latter to avoid the approach of their enemies." Other writers on African natural history, quoted in Lydekker's Game Animals of Africa, do not refer to this subject of the method of hunting of the great carnivora. In another place Mr. Selous confirms his opinion on this point when he writes of lions: "They seek their prey by scent, either smelling the animals directly or following their tracks." According to Gordon Cumming, lions are most active on dark and stormy nights, when, presumably, neither the organs of sight nor hearing can be very effective. It is remarkable that of some half dozen works on sport and natural history on my bookshelf, not one deals with the question under consideration. The only reference to it that has come within my notice is that above quoted from Mr. Selous' book.

My own experience in India points to the fact that the great carnivora of the cat-tribe in this country do not hunt by scent, that their olfactory nerves are not very highly developed. Tigers and leopards appear to hunt principally by sight, aided by sound. A lowing buffalo or a bleating goat will at once attract the prowling tiger or panther, but should the prey remain motionless and silent it will frequently escape notice even when the great cats pass close by. This seems to point to the powers of sight and smell being both not highly developed. Although quick to detect movement, the tiger will gaze with unseeing eyes at, for instance, a man sitting in a tree a few yards off. As regards the sense of smell of the panther, it is rather difficult to determine the extent of its developement. These animals are accustomed to the close proximity of human beings; they follow herds of goats and pick up stragglers, and they wander round villages at night, carry off stray dogs, sometimes entering the confines of the hamlets and even the huts. It is, then, quite possible that they may scent human beings close at hand, and betray no fear of them. On one occasion I tied up a goat near a pool of water which one of these animals was in the habit of visiting, and sat in an ambush on the ground, made against the trunk of a tree a few yards off. It was a bright moonlight night; at midnight the panther suddenly appeared, and crouched facing the goat and me, not more than fifteen feet from me; it evidently had no suspicion of my presence, and I fired in time to save the goat being killed. A few years later a panther killed a half-grown buffalo on a hill side a mile from my camp, my attention being first drawn to the spot by the sight of vultures circling over it. That evening I had a screen of branches made against the side of the hill about ten feet from the carcase and took up my position before dusk. It was a dark night, the moon not appearing until after 9 o'clock, and I went to sleep with my gun across my knees. At a quarter to ten I awoke with that indefinable feeling, so frequently experienced, of the proximity of a beast of prey, and was alert in an instant. I saw the carcase moving, evidently being tugged at, and then the round head of the panther showed above it, apparently gazing straight at me; a moment later it resumed its feed, then again the head appeared, with a paw each side of it on the buffalo's back; this time it received a charge of buckshot in the face, and disppeared, but I saw that it was in extremis, for the tail was visible at intervals, beating the ground convulsively. It is impossible to say whether this animal's sense of smell enabled it to detect my presence or not; the effluvium from the carcase may have drowned that from the human being, and the beast would scarcely have knowingly proceeded to devour its prey in such close proximity to man. On another occasion I was beating for peafowl when a herdsman brought the information that he had seen a panther lying in the jungle a mile off. Fortunately I had a cartridge loaded with S.S.G. I crouch behind a bush, having sent the dozen or so men who were with me to drive the beast in my direction. In a few minutes it came walking unconcernedly past at a distance of nineteen paces, which were subsequently measured, and evidently unaware of my presence until I dropped it with a charge of shot behind the shoulder. In these three instances at any rate I am of opinion that the presence of man was not betrayed to the panther's nose.

As regards tigers, the evidence that they do not hunt by scent appears to be even more convincing. It is not satisfactory to trust to memory in these matters, so I will turn to my diary. For the reason that these animals hunt by sight and sound and not by scent, one always ties up the bait, a young buffalo, or in the case of panthers, a goat, in an open space where it is not concealed by jungle. The ideal spot is near a pool of water, where the shade-loving tiger can find a cool retreat in the adjoining cover. For panthers the proximity of water is not so necessary, and an open glade or the meeting of two or more jungle paths is a good place. All animals like to keep on beaten tracks. For the same reason also one does not tie up a lethargic animal; a goat that will bleat loudly is chosen as bait for the panther; a buffalo that will keep moving about chewing the cud and not lie down and sleep is the best attraction for the tiger. If the bait is silent and lies still, it is often passed unnoticed by the prowler of the night, even at a few yards' distance. On one occasion I tied up two buffaloes near pools of water which it was evident from tracks were frequented by a tigress. That night the tigress visited both pools; the first buffalo broke loose and returned to camp; the other one was killed. The tigress had drunk at the pool close to the first buffalo, and before the latter broke loose, as could be seen from the tracks over the footprints of the beast of prey. But the buffalo had presumably lain still and escaped observation, for it had not been chased. A month later, at another place a large tiger drank at a pool of water where one of my buffaloes was tied up. It was a wild and stormy night, and the tiger had stood in the soft mud on the margin of the pool facing the buffalo, which was tied up in the shadow of a tree. Presumably the bait lay still and the beast of prey neither saw, heard, nor scented it, and passed on up the valley. This tiger afterwards killed six buffaloes within ten days before I shot it.

A few weeks later it is recorded that a party of three tigers passed close to two buffaloes during the night, but without killing them, and "probably without seeing them, as they were lying down." I find similar experiences recorded each year in my diaries, both with regard to tigers and panthers. The bait is passed by, obviously unnoticed, and not because the animal does not want to kill; for one is frequently passed by and another killed a few hundred yards further on. Such occurences are frequent, and must have been experienced by every sportsman, and they point to the supposition that the tiger and panther do not hunt by scent. The instances of this nature are so numerous that it may be assumed that the wind cannot have been adverse on every occasion. In fact, on these nights in the hot weather as a general rule there is not sufficient breeze even to cause the rustling of leaves in the forest. My own impression is, as I have said, that the great cats in India hunt by sight and sound; that their sight is not long or very clear, although they are quick to detect the slightest movement; for if one remains quite motionless, they will gaze at one with unseeing eyes; perhaps they have better powers of vision during the hours of darkness. Their sense of hearing appears to be very acute, and the snapping of a stick in the jungle will turn the driven tiger, even when pursued by the noise of the beaters with tom-tom and drum.

Of the habits of the hunting leopard in this respect I have no experience, but it is said to have as its favourite haunts "low, isolated, rocky hills, whence it can obtain an unrestricted view of the surrounding plains, and mature its plans for stalking the black buck, gazelles, deer, and other animals which form its prey;" the accounts of hunting by this species kept in captivity for sporting purpose show that they hunt by sight. I have had no opportunity of observing the ounce or snow leopard seeking its prey, although I saw the tracks of these animals daily in the snow in the Kishenganga valley twenty years ago. The lynx is too rare an animal to offer chances of observation. One seldom sees the great felidae on the prowl in India, but I cannot conceive of them following nose to the ground in the tracks of their prey.

Bears in India can scarcely be termed carnivorous beasts, although they will sometimes devour the carcases of animals found dead, and will even attack and kill their own prey occasionaly. In Kashmir I have known a bear commit extensive depredations on the sheep folds. These animals, and especially the brown bear of Kashmir, have wonderfully developed olfactory nerves, and will scent a human being at several hundred yards' distance. So where they are addicated to carnivorius habits it is quite conceivable that they hunt by scent.

THE FUTURE SERVICE RIFLE.

To the Editor of the Indian Field.

Sir,—Since writing my last note to you on this subject, I have seen it mentioned in the papers that inventors and others have been called upon to submit designs for weapons of the automatic type to the War Office by May next.

One of the conditions is that the trajectory must not exceed 5½ feet in height for a range of 800 yards which means that the muzzle velocity must be very high—compared with that of the ·303 rifle—somewhere in the neighbourhood of 3,000 feet seconds. The calibre is to be not less than ·270 or more than ·280 with a pointed bullet of 150 to 180 grains weight. A rifle of this description will be quite up to date and will give all the advantages possessed by the German Mauser and other larger bored weapons shooting light pointed bullets at high velocities, but with greater accuracy at the longer ranges on account of the comparatively greater weight of the bullet. The rifle, which must be as light and handy as possible and be capable of being used either as an automatic or ordinary magazine arm, will certainly be a great improvement on the present service arm, which is very inferior to the German rifle since the latter has been adapted to the light high velocity bullet.

B.

STARTING DECLARATIONS.

To the Editor of "The Indian Field."

Sir,—I would like to bring to your notice a custom which holds good in India, and whose abolition would, I think, be to the advantage of both owners and trainers.

I refer to the practice which exists of placing written starting declarations for each horse which runs in a race, into a box set aside for that purpose some hours before the race takes place.

In big meetings, such as Lucknow, a separate box is provided for each race; in small meetings often one box is provided for all starting declarations, which is opened by the secretary and causes a lot of needless work in sorting.

The system is bad. I am sure that most of your readers have heard of cases of owners and trainers having forgotten to put in their starting declarations and horses that have been entered and possibly backed being unable to run in consequence.

I myself remember two such cases, one being in the Army Cup and the other in the Civil Service Cup.

Admitted that it is careleseness and stupidity on the part of the owners themselves, but why not make such mistakes impossible.

It is often inconvenient to drive two or three miles in order to put in such starting declarations and if sent by post they may be lost or mislaid.

Only a short time ago I placed the starting declaration for my pony in the box, and on bringing the pony to the course and weighing out, found his number was not up. I immediately went to the secretary and asked why. He replied that the starting declaration had not been found on opening the box and that the pony could not run. Having put the starting declaration in the box with my own hands in presence of a witness, I was astounded. I appealed to the stewards of the meeting with my witness who corroborated my statement, but was told that the declaration could not have been made, as it had not been found in the box, and that I should be more careful. As there appeared to be nothing further to be done, I started to unsaddle the pony before sending him home. While doing this the secretary rushed up full of apologies and said that the starting declaration had somehow stuck to the back of the box and had been overlooked, and only that minute discovered.

Although mistakes are usually due to the carelessness of owners and trainers, the above instance shows that the authorities are also liable to err.

Another case occurred at the same meeting of an owner going to put in his starting declaration and finding the boxes unlocked, as he remarked "Had I felt so disposed, I could have taken out other starting declarations which had been put in, with the greatest ease and no one could have been any the wiser."

I merely give the above instances to show what has occurred, and what is always liable to happen under the present rule.

The only reason that can be given in favour of the present system is that written starting declarations are necessary where lotteries are held the evening before the races but this only applies to the small upcountry meetings and not to the big racing centres. My suggestion, which would at once save a lot of trouble to all concerned, is to follow the English racing rule in this matter, viz., that the fact of the jockey presenting himself to the clerk of the scales to ride a certain horse constitutes a declaration to start.

The jockey presents himself to the clerk of the scales half an hour before the race takes place; the numbers are hoisted fifteen minutes before the race.

If fifteen minutes is not considered sufficient for betting purposes the time could be extended.

I was talking to an Indian racing man the other day who said that the English rule did not fix the responsibility of running the horse on the owner in the case of an enquiry.

This is absurd. No jockey would ride unless engaged by the owner or trainer, nor would it appear possible for the horse to be brought to the course without their permission. Under the present system how is it possible for the secretary to tell that the signature on a starting declaration is not a forgery?

I trust that this matter will attract the attention of the racing authorities in India and that I may live to see the written starting declaration abolished.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy. Feather Pictures of all India Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

The Conquest of Malaria

One million deaths above the average!

That was last year's appalling record of Malaria in India, according to the evidence given at the recent Malarial Congress at Simla.

Happily for the sufferers from this terribly enervating disease there is new hope. More. There is the certainty of cure by means of Sanatogen, the world-renowned food-tonic, and the greatest revitalizing agent known to science.

Admirably as quinine answers in the acute stage of Malaria, it is, admittedly, of little use in that wasted condition of the system which doctors call Cachexia.

It is in Cachexia that Sanatogen stands supreme. As knowledge of its power spreads, the mortality from Malaria must decrease.

Blood, Brain, Nerves, Revitalized

Here is striking evidence. A well-known physician, writing to physicians, says: "In the Cachexia of this disease, Sanatogen has been found incomparably superior to any drug treatment. Its success in nervous exhaustion, typhoid fever, dysentery, diarrhœa, anæmia and numerous other conditions consequent upon acute or exhausting illnesses, has been the subject of comment in all the leading Medical Journals."

Sanatogen has a profound influence in making red blood corpuscles, which increase at the rate of about half-a-million in every cubic centimetre of blood per fortnight, as innumerable doctors have proved.

The invigorating and revitalizing property of Sanatogen has been attested by nine physicians to nine Kings, Queens and Emperors, and has also been

Endorsed by 12,000 Physicians

The King's Physician

—Dr. R. Ott, writes: "I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years, with excellent results, notably in cases of convalescence when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

The Czar of Russia's Physician

—Dr. Ferchmin, writes:—"My daughter, who is very nervous and anæmic, has greatly benefited by Sanatogen. Her appetite improved, her weight increased, and the colour of her skin became healthier."

The Emperor of Austria's Physician

—Dr. Kerzl, says:—"I have been using Sanatogen for years with splendid results, and recommend it continually and everywhere, because I am thoroughly convinced that it is an excellent tonic-food."

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet, "Malaria, Its Causes and Effects," has been written by a physician with a wide experience of this terrible complaint. The Sanatogen Co. will distribute, free of charge, a limited number of copies to those who will send a postcard mentioning this paper addressed to The Sanatogen Co. of London, Care of G.P.O., Box 226, Bombay.

Sanatogen may be obtained direct from all Chemists and Bazaars.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 16th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Eroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

THE hotel proprietor stopped the tourist who was leaving, and said:

"Well sir, I hope everything has been to your satisfaction while you've been with us."

"Oh, yes," said the other; "only you know that when we came and found no cupboard in our room you promised you'd put us up some hooks, but you didn't."

"Oh, yes; I forgot——"

"And you told us you would give us a table in the dinner-room to ourselves, but you didn't, you know."

"Well, but look here——"

"And you said your motor bus met the boat, but it didn't."

"Yes, but I explained——"

"You said that the place was orderly, and that the table was good; yet we haven't been able to sleep at all, and whenever we wanted a decent meal we had to go out for it."

"Why, my dear sir——"

"Yes, with these few exceptions, everything has been perfectly satisfactory, and we shall have great pleasure in telling our friends so."

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 31st December 1909.

KEMPTON PARK.

REFRESHED by a week's rest, sportsmen had evidently attuned themselves to the Kempton pitch, as rarely have the specials at Waterloo been so crowded, standing room being the rule in the latter trains. Monday morning opening bright and mild helped to swell a capital Boxing Day attendance, but the afternoon did not keep its promise, as a drizzling rain set in soon after proceedings commenced, and the paddock was soon a quagmire; while the course, despite the gravelly soil, was sticky in the extreme. A big crowd mustered on the far side of the rails, making frequent excursions to the neighbouring big fences, and the enclosures were crammed. Results:—

NEWBURY.

In wintertime sportsmen generally find London weather no criterion, and in pluckily plunging further afield into Sussex, Surrey, or Berkshire run into a summer climate that would not disgrace the Riviera. Such was the case on Wednesday, a slightly nipping and eager air keeping the sky bright and sunny. The attendance was a capital one, the members' enclosure was well filled for the time of year, and, as usual, Tattersall's Ring was busy. Results:—

You Try

The Great Restorative

WINCARNIS

Poor blood and nervous ailments go together. Why? Because if the blood is impure, the stomach becomes disordered and unable to do its duty, the food you eat does not digest and the system becomes clogged with poisonous germs that feed and thrive on unhealthy blood, destroying nerve tissue and with it nerve power. Wincarnis will build up and create pure healthy blood (which in itself possesses germ-killing powers), its invigorating effects are almost immediate, the wasted nerve tissue is replaced, the stomach is made strong, the digestion of food is accomplished, and health of mind and body restored.

Recommended by over 8,000 Doctors.

Can be obtained at all first-class Druggists, Stores, Bazaars, etc., throughout India.

Manufacturers: COLEMAN & CO., LTD., Wincarnis Works, Norwich, ENGLAND.

The fog that enveloped London yesterday extended far away into the West-country. Now and again the sun showed that he was still in evidence, but bright intervals were few and far between, and it was a hazy Newbury at which we arrived. Fortunately rain fell early on in the afternoon, laying the mist, and when the fourth race came on for decision the surroundings were cheerful and bright enough for a City and Suburban day. The attendance was again a good one, and though racing was not up to first class form some capital sport was witnessed. Results:—

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

AT holiday times form often proves utterly unreliable, and this Christmastide has already brought with it some vagaries that at once affect the records and positions of the leading clubs in the struggle for the Football League Championship. Blackburn Rovers, at home to Preston North End, seemed to have a simple task last Saturday; yet 30,000 people at Ewood Park saw the leaders hard pressed and only able to divide the points with rivals occupying one of the humblest positions in the table of results. This was a more satisfactory performance than that achieved by Sheffield United with opponents of higher calibre in Aston Villa, lost on their own ground, at Bramall Lane, before a similarly large crowd, by the only goal scored. These results became insignificant when compared to the accomplishment by the closest rivals to the two leading clubs. Bradford City had to go to Middlesbrough, and if the fact that they had not suffered defeat in their last eight engagements suggested their ability to hold their own, there was no reason to expect that the home defence would utterly fail. This is what happened, however, and after O'Rourke had given them a lead of a couple of goals Bradford City almost always had the game in hand, and won a heavy-scoring match in brilliant fashion. Bloomer tried hard to turn the fortune of the game, scoring twice for Middlesbrough. As the outcome of this match the Bradford Club takes second place, a point behind the Rovers.

While Woolwich Arsenal and Tottenham Hotspur could only gain a point between them in home engagements, Chelsea had to visit Nottingham and lost by the odd goal in three. So the holiday season has brought no alteration in the luck or improvement in the form of London's First Division League clubs. Defeat from Liverpool leaves Bolton Wanderers at the bottom of the table; but Tottenham Hotspur have no other side below them, and Chelsea and Woolwich remain among their colleagues who are very badly off. As some consolation to the Tottenham club a crowd of people assembled yesterday, and the spectators found a little consolation after many disappointments, although it was hard not to see the home side win, after Humphreys, the latest acquisition from Chelsea, had scored two goals—a clear lead that was held until a considerable period had elapsed in the second half. Woolwich Arsenal were hopelessly outclassed by Newcastle United during the first half, and subsequently the visitors maintained a commanding lead, despite the loss of Rutherford, who was injured. Chelsea battled desperately against odds, but could not make up the ground lost during the first half, when two goals were scored by Notts County, who kept the lead in a hard finish.

In the Second Division of the League Fulham, with a splendid victory by three goals to one over Hull City, improved their position among the more prominent clubs in the competition, but as Glossop, Derby County, and Leicester Fosse all won, the only advance the London team made was to go above Hull City. Manchester City, however, lost their game at Bradford. In consequence of these results Glossop and Derby County are still well ahead of the others, the former leading Derby by one point, while the next four clubs have all obtained twenty-four points, games completed and goal average determining their relative positions. Derby County are not playing on Boxing Day, so Glossop have a good chance of getting a stronger lead, while Leicester Fosse and Manchester City are likely to draw closer up to the first two clubs on the list.

As Crystal Palace did not play on Saturday and have no engagement until New Year's Day, Queen's Park Rangers possess an excellent opportunity of going to the head of the Southern League again. They successfully achieved the lighter part of the task set them during the holiday season by beating Norwich City yesterday, and they will be expected to gain at Coventry on Tuesday the two other points necessary to give them the lead. By the aid of their last win the Rangers now hold the best record in the competition. Southampton, who accomplished the most creditable performance in the tournament yesterday by winning at Leyton, have become prominent in the struggle, and Swindon and New Brompton are also close up. Northampton, who last season carried off chief honours, have lost their form, and yesterday went down before Brentford at Griffin Park. West Ham United and Brighton and Hove Albion each dropped a point, a keen game between them at Upton Park being drawn, and neither can now expect to again seriously challenge the foremost clubs. Indeed, before half the season is over the fight for the championship seems sure to be won by one of the five teams at present at the head of affairs.

SPURS VS. NOTTS FOREST.—There was a big holiday crowd at Tottenham yesterday morning to see Notts Forest play the Hotspurs in the League. The Tottenham men were at full strength, but Nottingham were without Grenville Morris, their famous International inside left, Palmer taking his place. They were also without Dudley, Marsden playing in his position at right full back. Play was fast and exciting at the start, both goalkeepers being called upon to save stinging shots in the first minute of the game. Then for a time Tottenham had the better of matters. From a nice opening Middlemiss shot just wide. The Forest were inclined to play roughly, the half-backs being frequent offenders, and many free kicks were given against them, but none proved effective. At length, after twenty minutes, Humphreys sent in a fast low shot, which enabled Tottenham to open the scoring. In some fast work subsequently Notts came very near to scoring on several occasions, but the Tottenham defence held out, and towards half-time Hotspurs were attacking hotly again, but they could not add to their score. Play was rather scrambling at the start of the second half, the sun having rendered the turf very heavy and sticky. Both goals had narrow escapes, but after eighteen minutes Humphreys literally fought his way through the Forest defence and scored a second goal for Tottenham. Coquet made a great clearance for Tottenham and then Palmer scored a good goal for the Forest from a pass by Horrocks. A blunder between Skin and Joyce enabled West to score an equalising point. Both sides made desperate efforts to score a winning goal, but neither succeeded, and the game ended in a draw. Tottenham Hotspur, 3; Nottingham Forest, 2.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL VS. NEWCASTLE UNITED.—Woolwich Arsenal started the holiday programme rather badly by losing at home to Newcastle United. The score in favour of the visitors was three to nil, and this in no way gives a false impression of the superiority of the North countrymen. With the exception of the opening moments they were a much cleverer, better-balanced, and altogether more forceful side than the Arsenal. They had to take the field without McWilliam, for whom Howie played, and Higgins came in at inside right. The Arsenal were at full strength. There would be fully 15,000 people present, and the ground was in a tremendously heavy condition. Quite early in the game the Arsenal were very persistent, and Buckenham, after shooting over the bar caused Lawrence to give a corner in clearing shots from the left. Then at the end of ten minutes Shepherd ran half the length of the field and scored a great goal. From that point Newcastle were always the superior side. Buckenham, however, once hit the bar, but with the game twenty minutes old Shepherd got a second point with a magnificent shot. Three minutes later Rutherford burst through on the right and added a third goal. From that point the game lost its interest. Newcastle always shaped like a winning side, and though there were times when the Arsenal got into the vicinity of the Newcastle goal, they always found Lawrence in brilliant form. Just before the finish Rutherford was injured by McEachrane and carried off. Newcastle United, 3; Woolwich Arsenal, 0.

NOTTS COUNTY VS. CHELSEA.—With the weather beautifully fine, the visit of Chelsea to Nottingham drew together fully 14,000 spectators. Notts County made no change in their team, but Chelsea were without Whitley, Ormiston Woodward, and Williamson, the first two being kept away by injuries. Saunders took Whitley's place in goal and the other vacancies were filled by Taylor, Bradshaw, and Birnie. After some fairly even play, two goals were scored by Notts, Jones and Cantrell getting through. Chelsea, who had shown excellent form, failed to respond before the interval and Notts County crossed over with a lead of two goals to one. Despite the heavy state of the ground, the game continued to be contested at a fine pace after change of ends, and though they now had the wind against them Chelsea were seen to more advantage than in the first half. Iremonger, the Notts goalkeeper, was more than once in difficulties, and at length Jones finished a fine forward movement by beating him. After this Notts took up the attack and Dodd and Cantrell almost scored. Notts County, 2; Chelsea, 1.

FULHAM VS. HULL CITY.—It was stated there were 25,000 or more spectators on the Fulham ground to witness this match and certainly every available space seemed well filled with an enthusiastic holiday crowd. The weather was delightful for spectators, but the ground was in a wretched state and the ball became very lumpy in a very short time. Fulham seemed more at home in the mud than their opponents; at any rate, they swarmed around the Hull goal in the early minutes of the game in a manner that promised well, as far as they were concerned with the result. The Hull keeper was very busy and effected many fine saves, but he was well beaten by Walker ten minutes from the start, that player heading fairly and squarely into the corner of the net, after Harrison had failed in the same way to convert a fine centre from the right corner flag. It was smart play and admirable judgment by Smith that made this possible. Harrison was next robbed right in front of goal and then Hull had a turn, some of their forwards' play being very fine, while once Browell just headed over from a well-placed corner. Then Fulham came along again and a movement almost similar to that which was successful before was carried through with equally happy results for Fulham. This time Dalrymple sent out to Smith, who raced along to the corner flag and then dropped the ball nicely down in front of the goal. Harrison got his head to it and the Hull keeper his hand and then the ball dropping at the feet of Walker, the latter scored with a swift ground shot. Hull had a bit of the following play, the home halves and backs being kept tremendously busy for a long time, during which Skene saved some nasty shots. Once the ball was headed against the bar and again just on the top of the net, while Hull were unable to do anything with corners that accrued. At half-time Fulham led by 2 to 0 and almost added to their score: as soon as the game was restarted. For a time play was largely in Fulham's favour and they seemed about to get goals, notably when Harrison had none to beat but the keeper and shot straight at him when a touch to either corner of the goal would have sent the ball through. Midway through, Harrison did add to the score, a swift shot on the ground sending the ball between the hands and legs of the Hull custodian. Dalrymple and Smith were particularly busy, but the Hull backs played splendidly and the efforts of the front rankers were more effective from now onward. Skene was injured and henceforward the downfall of his charge always seemed probable. It came just before the end, J. Smith scoring for Hull from short range and Fulham won a game which in the circumstances was a very good one. Fulham, 3; Hull City, 1.

RUGBY RULES.

County Championship. Despite the poor start they made in this season's competition, when losing to Somerset at Bath by 10 tries to 1, there seems good reason to anticipate that Cornwall will once again come out at the head of the south-western group of counties. Since their initial failure they have beaten both Devon and Gloucestershire, and in the supplementary series of games rendered necessary through Somerset, Gloucestershire and Cornwall all finishing with two wins and one loss, Cornwall are at home to Gloucestershire, the latter being visited by Somerset and Cornwall again journeying to meet Somerset. This last-mentioned encounter is expected to be decided next Saturday, but at Taunton instead of at Bath. Cornwall may be regarded as fairly certain to beat Gloucestershire in Cornwall, and their recent form points to the probability of the previous defeat from Somerset being avenged. In that event Kent, the winners in the south-eastern group, play Cornwall for the championship, the side emerging successful from that encounter meeting the representatives of the northern counties. Who the northern champions will be still remains an open question, but the probabilities are in favour of either Northumberland or Yorkshire heading that division. For the moment Northumberland, with two wins and a draw, possess a slight advantage, Yorkshire having gained two victories and suffered one defeat. Northumberland, however, have the more formidable fixtures to fulfil their remaining engagements being with Durham and Lancashire—distinctly stronger sides than Cumberland and Cheshire, whom Yorkshire have yet to oppose.

SCOTTISH TRIAL MATCH PROVINCES vs. ANGLO-SCOTS.—The value of this trial match at Edinburgh was spoiled by the unrepresentative character of the Anglo-Scots team. The Provinces had all the best of the game and won by 2 goals and 4 tries to 1 try. The tries for the winners were obtained by Sutherland (2), Huggan (2), Gunn and Ogilvy, and Gowland, who played a strong forward game, scored near the finish for the Anglo-Scots. Provinces, 2 goals 4 tries; Anglo-Scots, 1 try.

NEWPORT vs WATSONIANS.—The conditions for this match at Newport on Boxing Day could not have been more unfavourable, for heavy rain fell throughout, and the ground was a sea of mud. Newport are more used to such conditions than the Watsonians, but the narrow win by a try to nothing was due to a fluky score, and the general impression left by the play was that the Watsonians would have won under normal conditions by the marked superiority, collective and individual, of their backs, who showed vast improvement on their display at Swansea, thanks to the reappearance of Milroy, and to the fact that Pearson and Sanson both found their game. Except for Newport's advantage in weight, there was little to choose between two fine packs, both of whom lasted well. There was the largest gate of the season, over 20,000 being present. The Watsonians were the first to advance, and after some close play Pearson ran right through Newport, but after beating everyone slipped in mud before he could ground the ball over the line. Newport improved after this, and good kicking by the backs and fine footwork got to the other end. Here, after some fast forward play between the Watsonians' line and the centre, a long following kick went over the line to the left, and Stuart and Angus slipping, Martin just managed to beat Morrison, in the race for the touch, Burt failing. The Watsonians had rather the better of the rest of the half, and on three occasions just failed to score, while once Milroy got over, but for some obscure reason the full yard scrum was ordered. At half-time Newport led by a try to nothing.

In the second half Newport had rather the better of the game territorially, but they were never dangerous, except from forward rushes, for the Watsonian backs were too fast and clever foef the Newport backs. On one occasion Sanson dribbled clear and kicked over the line. He was obstructed, however, else a try must have followed. A little later Sanson ran through Newport, but with Pearson and Angus at each side of him elected not to pass, and was held by Williams. The rest of the play was chiefly confined to the forwards. Both packs made several fine length of the field, being the best thing of the kind in the match; but just as a score seemed likely off-side ended the advance near the line. Newport forwards were always dangerous, but they failed to pierce the defence, and a fast and most interesting match, in which the quality of the play was remarkably good for such conditions, ended in a win for Newport by three points.

MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. GLOUCESTER.—At Gloucester on the 27th instant, this time-honoured holiday fixture attracted the usual large attendance. After the kick-off a scrum was formed, and the visitors' half-back passed out to his backs, the ball eventually reaching O'Callaghan, who, after being tackled by Hudson, cleared himself of all opposition and opened the scoring for the Taylors with a very fine try. This was not converted. From the drop-out the home team went away to the visitors' line, where Egerton tried vainly to land a penalty goal, but in the next few minutes Holland obtained and put his side level. Egerton failed to add the extra points. Gloucester were now pressing, and after one or two attempts Vears was enabled to put Holland, in once more, Egerton again failing to goal. Continuing, Berry was all but over for Gloucester, and before the interval the Centurians scored another through Vance, the kick again failing. Before the interval Pearce scored Gloucesters' fourth try, Egerton goaling, and the half-time score was:—Gloucester, 1 goal and 3 tries; Old Merchant Taylors, 1 try.

Resuming, play became more even in character. The visitors at last pressed, and O'Callaghan looked like scoring, but failed; then Gloucester attacked, and Hudson was prominent. In the ensuing play the visitors had to touch down, but towards the finish they pressed, and scored unconverted tries through Lepenwell and O'Callaghan. Result:—Gloucester, 1 goal and 3 tries (14 points); Old Merchant Taylors, 3 tries (9 points).

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

THURSDAY morning the 13th instant found a good sized field collected at the 7th milestone on the Poonamallee Road, Mr. Horne trotted hounds straight off to Mogapper across the Coum River. From Mogapper for miles to the westward stretch a series of big casuarina woods in various stages of growth with stretches of excellent going in between. Not altogether pleasant things to ride through these casuarinas; planted in lines, the grown woods present a vista of tree trunks through which, on a pulling horse, one runs a very good chance of a broken knee cap; while on a dewy morning the younger plantation with their low growing feathery branches saturated with dew, wet one to the skin quicker and more effectually than the proverbial horsepond and it is difficult to see where one is going. However if one wishes to remain with hounds its a case of going through or going home, as once one loses touch of them it is no easy matter to hit them off again.

The first two woods behind Mogapper failed to produce a jack, but in the third, "Scandalous," hit off a very stale line, the rest not being able to own to it till she had worked away at it for 10 minutes. They soon after, however, worked up on to more intimate terms with their jack, running him from wood to wood and giving us a series of good gallops in between over excellent going. It is probable that they changed, but at the end of 70 minutes a very beaten jack managed to reach Mogapper wood, after a big ring, only 20 yards in front of them; here they certainly did change at once and slipped away at the far end before most of the field could get through and with a favoured few in attendance raced away for the Coum covers two miles distance all in the open. Here the fresh jack, as was only to be expected, beat them, for they had now been running for close on an hour and a half and being close to their run they were carted and taken home.

Sunday the 16th January at the 9th milestone St. Thomas' Mount. A dry dewless and very scentless morning with the country, never on the soft side, getting like iron after the long continued drought and terribly sore on hounds feet. It was now almost too late to hope for rain and with the going in its present condition it is to be feared that one day a week is all that hounds' feet will stand.

A feather on a stale drag outside Sheep's Head and a quick find followed almost at once by the first whipper-in's hollos at the far end, looked as if we had started a traveller; but scent was wretched and the jack not a straightnecked one after all; for before reaching the Black Rocks he broke back in the scrub and threading Sheep's Head again went away across the maidan with only about three couple in attendance and these were unable to carry the line far on the dry gravelly soil. Another try in Sheep's Head, however, soon produced another jack who departed via the Black Rocks for Martin's Thorns across the Adyar River. Scent now began to improve a little and after a ringing two in Thorns' hounds pushed him out at the Southern end, up the Kaval Bazar Brook finally crossing it to the discomfiture of some of the field who as usual got bogged, and throwing up on the bank of Adyar not far from Kaval Bazar Village. Their jack had been viewed close in front of them but scent had by this time petered out again and nothing more could be made of it. An unsuccessful draw along the southern bank of the Adyar finally brought us back to the Mount, where Colonel Eick and the officers of the 83rd Wallajabad Light Infantry most hospitably entertained at breakfast a thirsty field.

BINJIMIN.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THE Bye-day field was a very large one and they had to do their best nearly all the way to keep in touch with hounds. A number of them lost the latter end of a most invigorating run owing to being some way behind when the line took a turn near Roberts's Corner, this batch going straight on and away from the others.

Sahar Hill was the rendezvous and on the far side of it the jack was found. He left the undergrowth at once and after a dash across melon ground entered Romanwadi valley. Here we had to ride hard right away down till the woods fringing the Andheri Road. After slight hesitation, hounds crossed into the Grange bunds over country full of dangerous pits, where two riders came down with their mounts, fortunately with no more serious consequences than bruises, this gave way to more acceptable going with some nice jumping thrown in as the mango plantation was neared. The quarry took us on to Stacey's Tank and here the check mentioned, where some of the field went the wrong way, occurred. He turned almost straight back, across the nullah and past the Mango Tope. Scent was very strong and they sank Sunday Hill at a great pace through the woods in a line for Marole Hills. The quarry climbed one of the caves and was hunting along the summit for some time before descending into the Palm Woods on the way to Vehar Lake. Cutting through one range of hills, he reached the one beyond and gained the woods on the slopes, but thick as these were, he was given no rest and was run into. Some of the leaders of the field were up almost at the death and the others followed after a run of over forty minutes.

LANG

NEW ·470 BORE.

VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridge as originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

THE BEST DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

7 Shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle.

BOVRIL

No matter what we may say about Bovril, nothing can speak so strongly to you as an actual trial of Bovril itself.

Bovril contains all the goodness of prime beef in highly condensed form.

THE Extra Day Meet, Tuesday, was at Chuckla Hill with only a medium sized field out, but the run was a good and very long one. A jack was put up at the first covert tried, and his favourite lair must have been somewhere in the woods covering the hill as he circled it more than once before deciding to break away over Andheri Road. He set an erratic line and entering Bomanwadi Valley was turned into some good jumping country Completing a semi-circle he let us towards the Mango Tope Here he was able to make his task a bit easier, as four couple of hounds went off at an angle after another specimen. This newcomer was soon done for at Roberts's Corner, and these hounds were able to rejoin the main body owing to their breaking out of the Tope towards Stacey's Tank.

Hounds seemed likely to effect a kill as they were running strong on good terms with the pack in the flats leading to the Marole Hills. These were climbed, but on reaching the valley again the other side all trace of scent suddenly vanished. This was rather disappointing after a run of an hour and a half.

For pace, Thursday's run would be hard to beat, the field having to ride hard almost all the way for over an hour. There were a large number out, including ladies, and one was glad to see Miss Reet the recipient of the trophy after the run.

A start was made at the Parla coverts, and to the east we came upon a rare specimen. Passing the White House over paddy fields he led hounds right over Sahar Hill and cleared off at a tremendous pace over varied country with plenty of cactus in Coorla direction. Round about the Creek, the ground is rather tricky, but hounds seemed to be gradually coming up to their quarry. The latter in taking the water gained a bit of a lead and the field on reaching the other side had to extend their mounts to be in it at all. We were making back towards Sahar, crossing the Andheri Road and Tulsi main, and over the bunds work was as fast as though hounds were only beginning.

From here the jack took the usual line, through the woods of the Mango Tope and thence in the valley towards Marole Hills. Reaching these, he carried on right over them and into the valley, but on gaining the Vehar Hills he had had enough, and was rolled over in full view.

CONNELL CUP TOURNAMENT.

GORDON HIGHLANDERS vs. 12TH CAVALRY.—The Tournament opened at Allahabad on Monday the 10th instant, this being the first of the two games played on that day. The ground was in good condition, but play was slow and sticky, the Gordons eventually winning by 2 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—Up and down play: both goals were visited, but neither team could score.

Second Chukker.—Another uninteresting period of sticky play No score.

Third Chukker.—The Gordons got going and scored and keeping up the pressure very nearly put on a second goal, the ball just going outside the posts.

Fourth Chukker.—The 12th attacked and had two unsuccessful shots at goal. Then the Gordons took up the offensive and put the ball through.

Fifth Chukker.—A foul against the Gordons, the free hit going wide. The Gordons pressed for the rest of the period, except for one rush by the 12th, when they managed to save by hitting behind.

Sixth Chukker.—The hit was not turned to account and up and down play closed the game the Gordons winning by two goals to nil. Teams.—

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA vs. FAUGH A BALLAGHS.—This game was fast and well contested throughout, the Gymkhana doing most of the attacking and eventually winning by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Faugh a Ballaghs rushed away and scored two goals. Play ruling fast all through Second Chukker.—A run by the Faugh a Ballaghs proved abortive, and then the Gymkhana took up the attack and hit a goal.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play till the Gymkhana got the ball and equalised. They put through once more but were judged offside

Fourth Chukker.—More up and down play. The Gymkhana hit behind but the penalty hit was not improved upon.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gymkhana pressed and after one unsuccessful effort succeeded in hitting a goal

Sixth Chukker.—The Faugh a Ballaghs were kept on the defensive, but there was no further scoring, the Gymkhana winning as stated by 3 goals to 2. Teams :—

SEMI-FINALS.

GORDON HIGHLANDERS vs. ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA.—These teams put up a fast and interesting game on the 12th instant, the Gordons, who had the advantage of better mounts winning by 7 goals to 2

First Chukker.—The Gymkhana pressed and a foul against the Gordons sent them back to hit out from behind their own goal. No score.

Second Chukker.—The Gymkhana kept up the attack and Pollock scored with a long shot, Murray following this up with another goal. The Gordons then had a spell of attacking, Stewart opened their score and Fowke just missed equalising

Third Chukker.—Stewart got away and put the teams on terms, the Gordons pressing just missed scoring on two other occasions, the chukker closing with offside against them.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gordons hit out from behind and the ball was met by Fleming who got away but failed to get a shot. The Gymkhana then attacked, but were kept out and the Gordons getting possession once more scored two goals in quick succession.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play, Pollock playing conspicuously for the Gymkhana. Fleming's pony fell, but neither horse nor rider was hurt. No score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Gordons did all the attacking in the final period and after Comine had put through, Fowke added two more goals, and the Gordons won as stated. Teams :—

HIGHLANDERS L. I vs. 2ND LANCERS.—Though a sticky game and not up to the standard of the previous match, the meeting of these teams provided a close contest, extra time having to be played to arrive at a decision.

First Chukker.—The Lancers pressed all through the opening period and had many chances but failed to score.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers pressed but the H. L. I. kept them out and taking up the attack had two unsuccessful shots at goal. A foul against the Lancers enabled Walker to score from the penalty hit.

Fourth Chukker.—The 2nd got possession and rushing down equalised. They continued to hold the upper hand and had three shots at goal, all of which went wide.

Fifth Chukker.—The 2nd continued on the offensive but their final efforts were weak and it was not till the end of the period that they managed to score again and took the lead.

Sixth Chukker.—Up and down play both goals were visited in turn and chances missed by both sides At length the H.L.I. got away and Campbell scored, time being called with the score. 2 all

Extra Chukker.—The game was resumed with widened goals. The Lancers got the ball and rushing down Sangster put through. final score :—2nd Lancers 3 goals, H. L. I. 2 goals. Teams :—

Final.

GORDON HIGHLANDERS vs. 2ND LANCERS.—These teams met in the game last Friday, a closely contested game ending in a victory for the Gordons by 3 goals to 2. There was a large gathering of spectators, the Middlesex Regiment were "at home," Lady Hewett gave away the cup and pony parade prizes and Mr. Justice Richards made a short speech.

First Chukker.—The Lancers attacked at the start but the Gordons cleared and rushing down had three shots at goal all of which were abortive; a run by Sangster followed but his shot went wide. No score.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers kept up the attack and forced their opponents to hit behind. No advantage accrued and the Gordons coming away drew first blood.

Third Chukker.—The Gordons pressed but could not score. Then the Lancers took up the attack and Knowles equalised.

Fourth Chukker.—Both goals were visited in turn, a shot by the Gordons hitting the post and going outside. They kept up a vigorous attack during the latter part of the chukker but there was no score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gordons pressed: one shot went wide, another hit the post but the third went between the flags. Nothing dounted the Lancers made special efforts and shortly after managed to equalise

Sixth Chukker.—The Gordons took the lead again with a successful shot and pressing for the rest of the periot ran out victorious by 3 goals to 2. Teams.—

THE EZRA CUP TOURNAMENT.

AFTER two postponements owing to bad weather the tournament opened on the Ellenborough ground, Calcutta, on the 12th instant. Eight teams had entered and two matches were played off on the opening day. In the first the Viceroy's Staff A team (Captains Holden, Jelf, Gibbs and Atkinson, back) were beaten by the Rifle Brigade B team (Captain Harrison, the Hon. Mr. Wingfield, Mr. Scott and Captain Wood, back). It was a fast and level game throughout, the Riflemen winning by 5 goals to 4.

The second game was between the Viceroy's Staff Z team (Captain Carrington, Col. Brook, Captains Lord Francis Scott and Keighley, back) and the 72nd Punjabis (Jem. Moola Singh, Mr. Pughe Captain Dayrell and Mr. Burnett, back). This ended in favour of the Staff by 7 goals to love. The 72nd were not so well mounted as their opponents and had hard luck in not scoring on several occasions. Mr. Burnett was most conspicuous of the losers, while the Staff all played well.

Two games were played on the 14th instant. In the first the Calcutta B. team. (Mr. Muir, the Hon. Mr. W. Graham, Major Cassells, and Mr. J. D. Scott, back) beat the Mogulserpore Polo Club. Mr Robertson, Colonel Manner Smith, Mr. Percy Jones, and Mr. W. Marsham, back) by ten goals to nil. The Behar men were outclassed but played pluckily throughout against big odds Calcutta displayed excellent combination and Graham was at the top of his form.

The second game was between the Calcutta A. Team, (Prince Hitendra of Cooch Behar, Mr. Sheepshank, Mr. Walker, and Capt. Barrett back) and the Rifle Brigade. A. Team. (Mr. Drummond and Capt. Ralston, Mr. Riley, and Capt. Todd back).

This was another uneven game the Rifle Brigade, playing splendidly together were superior all through, despite the efforts of Captain Barrett who did yeoman service for his side. The final score was 6 goals to 1 in favour of the Riflemen.

The semi-finals were played on Monday last on the Calcutta race course ground before a large attendance including many notabilities. The first match was between the Viceroys' Staff Z and the Rifle Brigade B team, both represented as previously. The game was well contested throughout, the Riflemen eventually winning by 5 goals to 4. The Staff led at the commencement of the 6th chukker by 4 goals to 3 but the Brigade were not long in equalising and from a melee in front of goal Wingfield scored the winning point just before time was called. The second game was between the Calcutta Z team and the Rifle Brigade A team—no changes being made in their representatives. This was another well contested game the Rifle Brigade eventually winning by a goal. When they came out for the final period the Riflemen had 5 goals to their opponents' 3. Captain Todd gave them a sixth point, but thereafter Calcutta did all the attacking and registered two more goals, the final score reading: Rifle Brigade 6 goals, Calcutta 5 goals. The two Rifle Brigade teams were thus left in for the final.

"THEY were discussing the increase of wire at the covert side, and the argument was becoming somewhat heated. The thruster was complaining of the many falls he had through wire, while his friend, whose notoriety for never jumping a fence of any sort was proverbial, insisted that the increase of wire was grossly exaggerated. The pair was joined by a mutual friend, who, hearing the course the discussion was taking, brought the argument to an abrupt conclusion by exclaiming: "(Well, S—" you never jumped a fence of any sort in your life, so of course you have never taken a toss through wire. The only wire fence you could ever jump were if a storm was to blow down the telegraph wires across the road of a sudden, and your horse jumped in spite of you."

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. NATTORE.—The return match between these teams was played on the 15th and 16th instant, and resulted in a win for Nattore. Batting first they made 228: Jones hit vigorously and contributed 103, his innings including three 6's and eleven 4's. Another fine innings being the display of Prince Hitendra who put up 58 and had hard luck in being run out. Calcutta went in on Sunday but were all out for 105, Given-Wilson, Lee and Craik subscribing 85 of this total. In the follow on Calcutta did much better, putting together 188 for nine wickets when time was called, Guise's not out 50 being a very creditable performance. Score :—

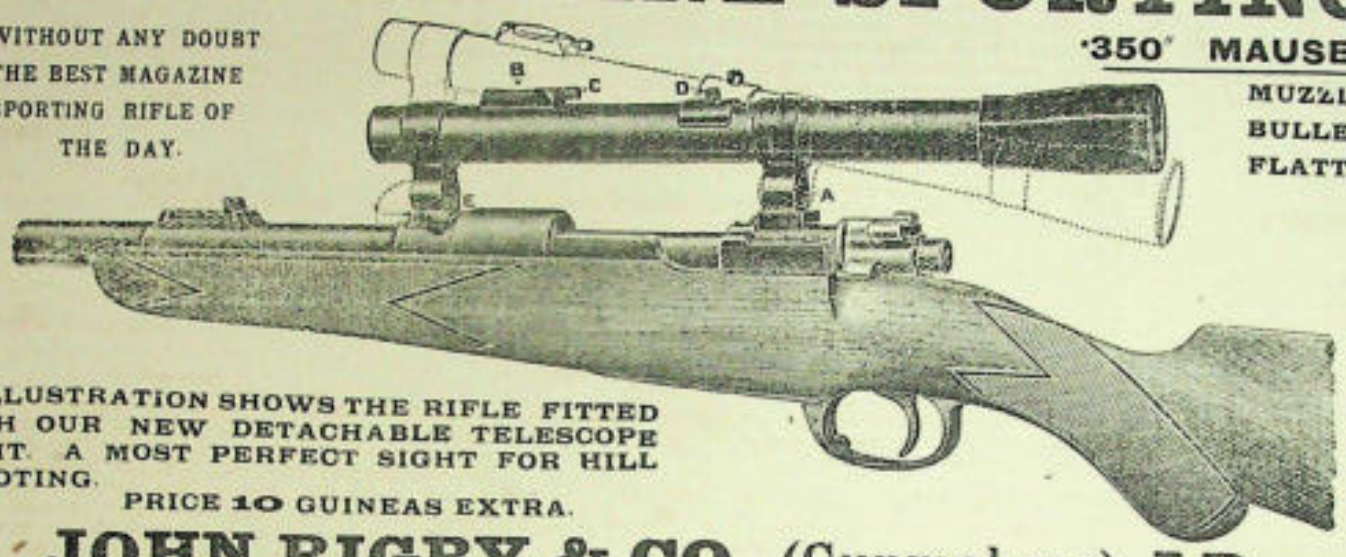
WINCHESTER



.50-110 CALIBER MODEL 1886 RIFLES.

Big game hunters who cling to the old reliable .50-110 Express cartridge will find that the Winchester Model 1886 Rifles made for this cartridge will suit them in every way. They are lighter and handier than other rifles handling this cartridge, and, like all Winchester rifles, shoot strong and accurately and work and wear well. They are made in both solid frame and Take-Down styles and are handsomely finished, and bored to shoot either black or smokeless powder cartridges.

AMERICAN "FOOTBALL": WHY IT IS PLAYED.

THE following description of an American intercollege football match was written by an English 'Varsity footballer who went and saw a game during a recent visit to the States:—

An American professor admitted once that football in his country was encouraged for the benefit of the university medical schools; for no other reason. Of course, it gives the medical students excellent practice. There is nothing that cannot happen to you in American football.

Nowadays, it is said, the medical schools are getting critical. They won't worry about simple and complex fractures of the limbs or spine. Such cases they turn over to the ordinary hospital, or leave them on the field. But when you get something really complicated that involves bone-grafting or the complete removal and replacement of a vital organ, then the medical professor says, with fervent gratitude, that football is a really fine, manly game. Tells you that it makes men of America's youth. Of course, it doesn't; it only makes corpses or cases.

Still, there is this manner or custom known as football. It is a dull proceeding for any but doctors or undertakers. Twenty-odd men in one solid mass stamping and jumping upon one another for five or ten minutes on end gets rather boring after a while. And even the knowledge that they are doing it in the interests of humanity doesn't liven things up much. It only makes you want to say, "Poor fellows, and so young, too!" about six times, and go home.

A REASON FOR THE SPECTATOR.

Perhaps this was how it affected the Americans once; the few people who were not doctors nor undertakers who came to look on must have felt sorry for the bright young men in the middle of the field. If you do admire a martyr to science, you don't always want to see him in the act. So they invented the spectator, and the football game became quite amusing.

Now the spectator is a curious being. It consists of (1) other college boys and (2) the elite of the neighbourhood in both sexes. In case the vulgar herd should ever want to see a football game, it is usual to charge a prohibitive price of about 12s. to go in. This is a thoughtful precaution, for all the world knows how blood and strife will inflame a mob.

The spectator is proud of being a spectator, and to proclaim himself or herself as such wave large flags, not only at the game, but in the streets before and after the game.

If you belong to Class 1 you go with others of your class and monoplise the whole of one side of the ground. You go out of sheer patriotism, not because you understand the game. Other college boys don't know enough about the game to know when to cheer, and it hurts the martyrs' feelings if you shout at the wrong moment. So in case they should do the wrong thing the other college boys elect two or three of their number to stand on the field and watch the strife carefully. These are called cheer-leaders, and it is a great honour to be a cheer-leader, because it shows you can understand football.

Each cheer-leader has a large megaphone, and when he thinks the right moment has come to cheer he says so through the megaphone. Also he says what the cheer should be, because if he didn't the other college boys, in their eagerness to do the right thing, might sing a hymn in chorus, instead of saying "Rah! Rah! Rah!" six times quickly, like a motor-car backfiring.

MUST NOT MAKE A MISTAKE.

What would happen if the cheer-leader said the wrong thing nobody knows. Everyone agrees that it would be very painful for the cheer-leader. Anyhow, the cheer-leader watches the game carefully. His is a risky job.

When the cries of the wounded grow too loud he flings himself into an attitude of a contortionist, bowls through the megaphone some wild sounds that he invents in his spare moments, and has printed so that the other college boys may learn them. Then he flings his megaphone to the ground, as if he didn't like it, and begins to wave his arms about with a slow rhythmic motion like the beginning of a Salome dance. The other college boys in unison shout what he told them to, taking their time from the movements of the leader's arms. This goes on for a long time, until he gets tired and stops them.

Then he makes friends with his megaphone again, and dances up and down until he thinks they ought to cheer again. To be just to him, he doesn't always make his flock shout wild, jumbled syllables. Sometimes he makes them sing songs or hymns, with special words written.

But it gets rather annoying when one cheer-leader has his flock singing something to the tune of Haydn's "Hymn to the Emperor," and another one starts a hundred or so healthy lungs on to an imitation of a pompom in action. If the hymn-singers win you get a sort of battle effect; otherwise they seem to be in pain.

In the meantime the twenty-two players, clad in an armour of quilted sackcloth, are pushing and pulling and jumping on each other in the middle of a field marked out in broad white lines from side to side at five-yard intervals. Somewhere in the middle of the mush there is a ball. You do see it once or twice, if you look. The idea is to get it over a touch line. Generally you have to push the other side with it, though a bright young player has been known to get it out of the mob and run with it.

GENERALLY A CASE.

When this happens, both sides generally get so angry with him that they fall on him, and he becomes a case. It is said that some of the best cases happen this way. The medical professors love to see a man running with the ball: there's no knowing what might happen to him.

Class 2 of the spectators is the flag-waving class. They wave flags all the time, and keep one eye on the college boys and the other on the struggle. They know more about the game, because they cheer and sing songs without being told. They wear their best clothes and wrap themselves up in rugs to keep warm.

The trainer is the most important being on the field. He teaches the players how to get stamped upon without being much hurt, and the best way to break an opponent's arm. He is always an Irishman, and is named Pat or Mike. He is paid a fabulous salary, and wears sporty clothes. The trainer runs up and down the field and looks important, while everybody is deferential to him in case he should go to a rival university for more pay.

A good trainer can save quite a lot of lives in a season. This makes him popular with the players' friends. After a while the players come off the field, and the game is finished. Then it is usual for the spectators who favoured the winning side to form a procession and walk round the neighbourhood, singing gibing choruses about the losers.

AUSTRALIAN HEAVY WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

FITZSIMMONS VS. LANG.

YOUTH will be served: Bob Fitzsimmons and Bill Lang met at the Stadium, Rushcutter's Bay on Boxing Day and the veteran was knocked out in the 12th round by Lang. The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. Fitzsimmons can't stay, his age is against it. The fact was proved when he met Philadelphia Jack O'Brien four years ago when having outpointed his opponent in 12 rounds he collapsed in the 13th. It was a similar case on Boxing day for Fitz had the best of the exchanges for eleven rounds but was getting weaken and slower, and in the 12th he was forced on to the ropes and could not get away quick enough to avoid the fatal blow. Lang was very nervous at the start and began feebly but he gradually recovered himself and got stronger, faster and fresher with every round. Australians may decry Lang and may compare him unfavourably with heroes of the past but the fact remains that he is a stayer, a well plucked if nervous man, with a heavy punch and an unlimited capacity for taking punishment. The following account of the fight appears in Boxing.—

Round 1.—At the stroke of the gong they faced each other. Fitz looked confident and aggressive, but Lang was painfully nervous and pawed the air in spasmodic fashion. Bob led and Lang got back nervously. Another left came out from Fitz and Lang again broke ground. Following up Bob landed twice lightly and Lang rushed into a clinch and hung on desperately. Breaking clear Fitz again hit out, but Lang's only attempts at retaliation were wild lunges at the body and persistent clinching. Not much damage was done during this round, Bob scoring the majority of the points.

Round 2.—Lang went straight into a clinch, though he took a smack in the face as he did so, and hung on with all his strength. The top of his head came into contact with Bob's face as he came in and the crowd hooted. The veteran was clearly trying all he knew to make a clean fight of it but Lang evidently preferred a wrestle, and leaning all his weight on Bob tried to rough him down. He pressed on his arms in a mechanical fashion, and used his head in a suspicious manner, but did not seem quite certain as to what he was doing, while the hoots and yells of the crowd did not improve —a confidence.

Round 3.—Fitz led off with a sharp left to the face and right to the body and Lang rushed. Bob side stepped him smartly and sent the left to his cheek as he went past. This shook Bill up and he retreated and sparred for a time, making good use of the ring. Bob followed him and got home twice but Lang rushed into another clinch, and again rested his weight on Fitz's shoulders. Practically all Fitzsimmons, as though Lang got home heavily two or three times, his deliveries were clumsy ones in comparison with those which he received.

Round 4.—A left to the face, a right drive in the ribs and another left in the face appeared to wake Lang up. He hit out more cleanly than before and reached his opponent more than once, but he still adhered to his old clinching methods, though it cannot be said that he had any the best of the exchanges at close quarters. Bob's footwork was smarter and cleverer and his blows were clean and forcible, but with Lang carrying the fight to him more, he had to break ground at times and put in some defensive work.

Round 5.—Lang's improvement continued and now for the first times he began to force matters. Straight from the gong he rushed at his opponent, who broke ground cleverly and sent his left straight to the face. Checked for a moment Lang rushed again and got home a heavy right to the ribs, Fitz clinching as though he felt it. Breaking clear, Lang rushed repeatedly but got the worst of the bargain, Bob landing two blows for his one and being clearly the best, both at out and in fighting. Lang was growing steadier on his feet and was showing more confidence, and one was always anticipating that he would get right home with one of those rushes of his and sweep the veteran clean off his feet.

Round 6.—Lang's nervousness had by this time mostly disappeared, and he was taking the battle seriously. He still rushed and was still cleverly side stepped, but was getting home far more blows, quite as many this round in fact as were scored by Bob, though the latter's were far cleaner and much better directed. In spite of this, however, it was obvious that Fitzsimmons no longer held a sleeping draught in every blow. He could get them home, and would occasionally shake Lang with them, but he rarely looked like finishing the battle at any moment with one single terrific wallop.

Round 7.—Lang's rushes were as vigorous as ever and Fitz had to call out all his ring craft and his best footwork to avoid them. The old man's speed was slackening down a trifle. Hardly perceptibly out still slackening, and Lang's rushes were growing better timed and directed into the bargain, while, in addition, some of those heavy body hooks and swings of his were also beginning to tell a tale. On more than one occasion he made Bob wince with a hard swing or hook to the body and also shook him at times with a heavy, but not too-well directed hook to the head. Bob, however took these philosophically and returned them with straight clean blows to the face and body. More than once he shifted his feet too, but could not get home on the mark, although he clearly tried to do so more than once.

Round 8.—The battle had opened in the tamest possible fashion, but was now getting quite interesting. Fitz was still keeping his end up and doing his best to keep the fight an open one, but he was finding it more and more difficult to keep Lang at a distance. Lang had recourse to his favourite upper cut, the one Jack Johnson taught him and which he employed so successfully, if in somewhat belated fashion on Bill Squires; but though he tried every feint he possessed to get Bobs guard out of the way, the old man was always prepared and blocked his every attempt. True that he was forced into a clinch at times for safety though he had to carry Lang's weight whenever he did so, and also to put up with some of that very suspicious head work of which Lang was so fond, and to which he had recourse so persistently during the present contest.

Round 9.—Fitz opened this meeting well with a left and right to the face, but was jabbed heavily in return both to head and body. There was more than one brisk rally, with both landing fairly freely, though Bob's blows were much cleaner and delivered with far better direction than timing. Lang was still clinching a good deal as he had done throughout whenever he got to close quarters, and was also still using his head in a suspicious fashion, though not so frequently as he had done in the earlier rounds. Fitz's lead was not so marked by this time, but whenever there was an appreciable margin in a round it was usually in his favour. Still Lang was so clearly beginning to size up the situation that the battle was getting quite exciting. If Fitz could only keep his man at a distance the fight would be his but Lang had only to keep on fighting or rushing his way in, and sooner or later his blows would be bound to tell.

Round 10.—Fitz was obviously getting slower, and although Lang was faster in comparison, it looked as though the veteran's blows, so much more frequently delivered, were having their effect. More than once Lang gasped for breath and from the convulsive way he worked his bellows the effect of Bob's hitting could be plainly observed. Fitz was less distressed as far as breathing went, but, he was plainly tiring steadily and his arms were also less active. Ample evidence of the strain they were suffering from the persistent supporting of Lang's weight in the clinches, when Bill would rest the whole of his upper body on the biceps and press down for all he was worth. With both arm weariness and leg weariness displaying themselves Bob's chances were no longer so roseate as they had been, and those of Lang's backers who had been busy hooting their man, forgot their sentimental excitement and commenced to count their winnings.

Round 11.—Lang came from his corner with a wild rush, which Fitz stopped with a beautiful left full in the face. Lang swung twice for the head, missed with the right and landed high up with the left. Bob planted a right to the ribs and they went in to clinch again. Breaking away there was a brisk rally, and then Bob sent his right hard and straight, bang against Lang's left eye. The Swiss reeled back from the shock, and the blood was seen to be flowing freely from a gash which had been opened. He came back however and mixed matters freely till the gong. But Fitz still had along lead on points. This had been quite the most exciting round of the battle so far. Bob's chances had looked to be ebbing fast and Lang seemed so certainly to be wearing him down that when the big Swiss went reeling back from that right drive in the eye the whole stadium rose and roared its encouragement to the veteran. One more punch like that and the fight might be won, or at all events well on the road to victory. Fitz tried hard to plant another, but Lang kept clear until he recovered and then went in dead set on finishing matters.

Round 12 and last.—Lang rushed again and Fitz broke ground. Lang continued to force matters and gradually drove the old man on to the ropes, where in a mix up he landed a sharp right hook to the jaw. Bob dropped heavily and Bill stood back. Nine seconds were counted off and then the old war horse rose to his feet. He was staggering and unsteady, however, and quite unable to put up an effective guard. Lang feinted with his left and then swung a vicious right upper cut. It caught Bob full on the point, and the grand old man dropped again for the full count this time. The great battle was over and another of Bob's attempts to retire in triumph from the ring had failed. The old man was beaten but certainly not disgraced.

MR. EUGENE CORRI ON "THE GAME."

MR. EUGENE CORRI, the famous boxing referee, who has had charge of many of the most important contests at the National Sporting Club, and is generally recognised as one of the very best type of sportsman, has contributed to Fry's Magazine for January a most interesting article, in which he gives his impressions of the boxers he has met. He says.—

"Ever since I was a mere youngster I have always taken the keenest interest in boxing, and although, I regret to say, at no period in my career was I within two stone of championship form with the gloves, yet all the same I have always been as keen as mustard about boxing, and, indeed, have devoted practically the whole of my life to the fistic art.

"I have now been refereeing for, roughly speaking, about twenty-five years. If I remember rightly, the first fight I ever refereed was at the Old Adelphi Club, Maiden Lane. How many fights have I refereed since then? Goodness only knows, but I may say that I have never missed a chance of seeing a good contest, for I have always 'gone anywhere,' and as long as old Father Time permits me I think I may say that I always shall go anywhere, to see what promises to be a good contest.

"To a certain extent it is not easy to say exactly why it should be so, but all the same I cannot help thinking that boxers, both amateur and professional, were distinctly better twenty years ago than they are to-day. For example, Tom Hill, Peggy Bettinson, Bob Hare, John Douglas, Aubrey Diamond, B. J. Angle, and the Dearsleys, to take a few names which occur to one at once, were a class better than the majority of the best-known exponents of the fistic art to-day.

"There are, however, exceptions, of course, for the present amateur champion, J. W. H. T. Douglas, is quite one of the cleverest amateur boxers I have ever seen, while John Hopley is assuredly one of the finest heavy-weights that ever put a glove on. But still, one cannot help thinking that the average young man of the present day is not quite so tough as he used to be, though, as far as boxing is concerned, this may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that the amateur and the professional are much closer together these days than they were a couple of decades ago.

THE REFEREE'S POSITION.

"From remarks I have often heard made there would seem to be a pretty prevalent impression among the majority of people not actually connected with boxing that refereeing is sometimes a pastime in which the referee's position is occasionally far from an enviable one. Generally speaking, however, I have not found that this is the case at all, and though, at one time and another, I have officiated in the presence of some pretty 'warm' crowds, and in not a few queer places, I have never had a single unfortunate experience in this respect.

"I remember, however, refereeing a contest some years ago between George Crisp, of Newcastle, and Ben Taylor, of Woolwich. This took place at Gateshead, and, judging from the enthusiasm which arose whenever he scored a point, Crisp was a strong favourite with the crowd. Indeed, in the second round, doubtless with the idea of emphasising their intentions, several of the boys shouted out, 'Now, then, George kill the blooming referee.' This amiable project, I may say, never looked like coming off, as Crisp won, which some people may think was, perhaps, a lucky thing for me.

JEFFRIES VS. JOHNSON.

"Whether Jeffries and Johnson will ever meet remains to be seen, but as the air at the present time is full of rumours, I may say that if they do, and Jeffries can get back into anything like his old form, I shall expect to see the white man win. Australia is a longish journey off, and on that account I could not get away to see the Burns-Johnson contest, but I refereed the match between Moir and Burns for the heavy-weight championship of the world at the National Sporting Club; and, remembering that Burns was giving a lot away in both height and weight, I cannot help thinking that Johnson must lack a real 'sleeping-draught punch' otherwise he ought certainly to have been able to put Burns to sleep within fifteen rounds. Still, there is no doubt that Johnson is a very clever boxer, and in addition he is, I think, the best defensive fighter I have ever seen, but I should say that he has nothing like the punishing powers of Jeffries.

"Speaking of 'coloured gentlemen' naturally reminds one of the late Peter Jackson, who was, I should say, the best coloured fighter who ever entered the ring. Peter Jackson, too, was invariably as fair as could be, and never needlessly punished an opponent. As long as I live I shall never forget the great match between Peter Jackson and Frank Slavin, who was a magnificent fighter, possessed an indomitable pluck, a punch like a sledge-hammer, and the ability to take as much punishment as any man could give him.

"Towards the end of this match—I forget for the moment how many rounds it went—Jackson had Slavin so weak that he could scarcely put his hand up. Indeed, it was obvious to all that Jackson could finish his game opponent at any moment he wished. Realising, however, that poor Slavin was, to all intents and purposes, 'whacked to the world,' rather than deal out unnecessary punishment he turned to Mr. B. J. Angle, who was refereeing, and asked 'Have I won?' The reply came, 'Fight on.' 'Then, Frank, I'm sorry,' said Peter Jackson—and he looked genuinely sorry, too—as he finished him off.

GREATEST COLOURED FIGHTER.

"Yes, past a doubt, Jackson was the greatest coloured fighter of all time, and his scrupulously fair tactics in the ring, and his excellent behaviour at all times out of it, did not a little to uphold the good name of boxing.

"While talking of coloured men, I am reminded of Sam Langford, whose contest with Ian Hague at the National Sporting Club I recently refereed. Sam Langford, in my opinion, possesses a great chance of gaining championship honours. Wonderfully clever, with beautifully clean footwork, Langford is as game as a pebble, and in all the fights I have refereed I have never come across a fairer man; and I understand that ever since he has been boxing no referee has ever had occasion to caution Langford. Would that there were more like him in this respect!

"To be defeated by so clever an opponent was assuredly no disgrace to Hague, who, with more practice, may yet train on into 'something really good.' Just now there seems to be a dearth of heavy-weights over here, and, try as one may, it seems impossible to unearth any heavy-weight boxer out of the common. However, as a matter of fact, I suppose there should be nothing greatly surprising in this, for the inducements to boxers over here are nothing like so great as they are in America, where boxers also have infinitely more opportunity for gaining experience, as it is nothing unusual for them to fight three or four matches a month. On the other hand, our heavy-weight generally only take part in the same number of contests in a year, so that naturally they fail to gain that experience which, after all, is to a great extent the real secret of success in the ring.

AMONGST THE SMALL MEN.

"Personally, I have always been very partial to seeing small men fight, and can recall numbers of contests in the light-weight and feather-weight class in which the science and cleverness shown have been of a very high order. Indeed, I never want to see a better match than that between Billy Plimmer and Pedlar Palmer, the latter of whom, at his best, was one of the greatest boxers that ever put a glove on. His headwork and footwork were simply superb, and in the ring he always behaved himself in the fairest possible manner, never attempting to infringe the rules on trying to take the slightest advantage. I should like to say, too, that in all the contests in which he took part when I was referee, I never had occasion to admonish Palmer at all.

"It is obviously impossible here for me to mention many of the excellent contests between small men that I have refereed and seen, but I still retain pleasant recollections of the bout between Pedlar Palmer and George Dixon, while the recent international contest at the N.S.C., between Jimmy Britt and Johnny Summers was also quite a good one, although the fighting was not quite as clean as it might have been.

"By the way, you may not have heard that not long ago a new rule was added to the N.S.C. Rules to the effect that if a boxer does not defend his title within six months he loses it. This, I feel sure, will be an influence for good, as, besides being likely to make a boxer take part in more contests than might otherwise be the case, it will also prevent a boxer from backing out of his engagements on the score that he has entered into music-hall contracts which he cannot get out of. I do not suggest for a moment that boxers are in the habit of doing this, but continual easy work in music halls cannot improve a man at all and in one way and another it has always seemed to me that in the best interests of the sport it would be better if some boxers—especially those who meet with considerable success early in their careers, but at the same time actually lack that versatility which experience alone can give—fought more often and 'music-hall-boxed' less. Exhibition spars are all very well in their own way, but as 'boxing improvers' they are of absolutely no value at all."

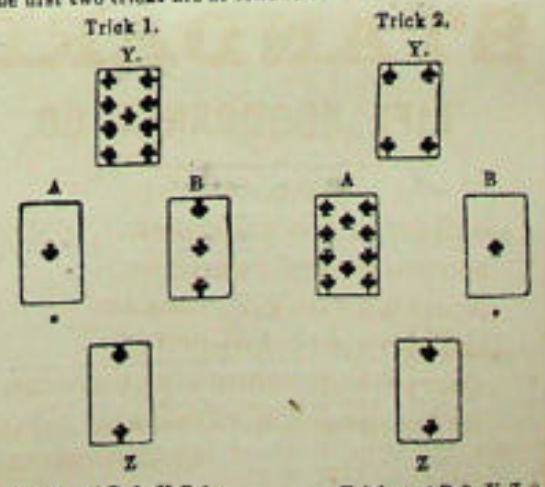
BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 81.

Z must lose one trick in clubs and two in spades, but with a favourable distribution of the adverse trumps, will win the game if he can get rid of dummy's losing diamond on the king of clubs. With this object in view he should play out to rounds of trumps, winning the second in Y's hand with the queen and then lead the 7 of clubs. If B has the ace he will put it on, and if a diamond is returned Y will win with the ace, and can put Z in to lead the king of clubs by playing a third round of trumps. The two rounds of trumps at tricks 2 and 3 diminish the risk of being ruffed in spades, but Z must be left with a card of entry. So it would be wrong to play three.



Problem No. 82.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals and declares diamonds. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—Hearts, Q, 10, 8, 2; diamonds, K. Q. 10; clubs, K Q J 6; spades, 7 4.

Z's Hand (Dealer).—Hearts, A, 6, 5; diamonds, A, 8, 7, 5, 3; clubs, 2; spades, K, 6. 5, 2.

The first two tricks are as follows:—

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0. At trick 3 B leads the 4 of hearts.

Tricks: A B 2, Y Z 0. How ought Z to play, and why?

A NEW CRICKET POWER.

By their splendid victory over the M. C. C. team in the first of the five tests which the Englishmen will play against the South Africans, during their present tour, it is very evident that the latter have come to stay as a cricket power, and Englishmen should no longer advance the matting wicket as an adequate excuse for continual reverses. If their cricketers fail because they cannot adapt themselves to what is, after all, a perfectly fair playing surface it will be because of their inferior ability. Under the captaincy of P. F. Warner, a weak English team went out to South Africa four years ago and lost four of the five Test matches as a consequence. The present M. C. C. Team is much stronger, if not fully representative of the old country, but it has already been manifested that she cannot hope to win in South Africa without making a supreme effort.

Though England suffered defeat, the cabled account of the match has succeeded in creating interest in South African cricket for the first time. It is an unaccountable fact that hitherto home enthusiasts of the game have shown little concern as to the fortunes of their representative players whilst touring the Cape, whereas news of the matches in Australia has invariably been awaited with the utmost keenness. Possibly the knowledge that the large majority of South African matches are played upon matting wickets has been responsible for past apathy. Englishmen have been so easily forgetful of the bold bid made for victory by the South African team which visited Great Britain two years ago that until the last two days of the match under notice which ended in England's defeat, the published details of the tour had completely failed to arouse any interest. The glorious game that was played has brought about a revolution in this respect, and the four remaining Test matches will be looked forward to with lively anticipation.

The soreness of England's defeat will speedily be eradicated by admiration for opponents by whom it is an honour to be beaten. Whether England's best would have lost—there is no best without Hirst, Hayward, Tyldesley, G. L. Jessop, and others—is a matter outside the fact that South Africa bids fair not only to equal the old country at the games that used to be their own, but to excel them. Theirs is hearty and co-operative sport, with playing to win the chief incentive and prop, and as yet uncontaminated of playing for oneself alone and playing "not to lose."

Their cricket tours in England have left an indelible impression of good-will behind, their Rugby footballers were splendid, their Olympic athletes the same, and their country rejoiced to receive an All England lawn tennis team, headed by R. F. Doherty, avowedly with the intention of learning from the mother country. But it was found in lawn tennis, as in other sports, that a great natural ability was there, and also the ability and the zeal. The tour of the English players brought out latent talent and led to a resolve on the part of the South Africans to send a lawn tennis team to England next summer. When the pupil threatens to master the teacher, it is no bad thing for the teacher, who must see that he does not rust.

Seven of the South African cricketers who brought about Englands's defeat were members of the team which last toured the old country, and made their ability so well known that their achievements in the first of the Test matches of the present M.C.C. trip will cause no surprise. Prior to this the home players gave the visitors a trial game and in this and the first Test match G. A. Faulkner scored 395 runs in four innings (once not out), thus averaging 131·66, and has taken 17 wickets at a cost of fourteen runs each. As Faulkner's brilliance in the field is notorious, there can be no hesitation in numbering him with the world's greatest all-round cricketers. In three matches Vogler has captured 27 wickets at a cost of, roughly, 13 runs each, an effectiveness that has rarely been exceeded in Test matches. In his only five innings against the English team thus far S. J. Snooke has aggregated 254 and therefore claims an average of 52·80, with a high score of only 72. If Vogler and Faulkner had practically monopolised the bowling honours, up to now, the reserve attack is probably merely awaiting its opportunity. As to the batting, there is evidence of ample reserve force to test the M.C.C. throughout the series.

Regarding the form of the Englishmen, there is little cause for complaint and in any case they should not be judged upon their first serious match. The effort by the four tailend batsmen to pull the first Test match out of the fire, whilst being a magnificent reply to the South African rally on the second day was worthy of England's best cricket traditions. Hobbs is displaying brilliance, and Rhodes a wonderful consistency with the bat, the bowling of Buckenham, Thompson, G. H. Simpson-Hayward, and Blythe has all along been convincing, Strudwick's wicket-keeping has been superb, and, now that the players have become familiar with the pace of the ground, the bad fielding of the early days of the tour has been effectually arrested. Altogether there is every prospect of a great struggle for supremacy in the Test matches.

EMPIRE GAME PRESERVATION.

A FUND of information with regard to what is being done in protecting the big game of the Empire, but more especially that of Africa, will be found in the recently issued fifth volume of the Journal of the Society for the Protection of the Wild Fauna of the Empire. The volume is especially valuable on account of containing a full report of the interview between a deputation of the Society, under the leadership of Mr. E. N. Buxton, and the Earl of Crewe. Secretary of State for the Colonies, which took place in February of last year.

The first point to which the leader directed the attention of the Colonial Secretary was the alleged backwardness of Rhodesia in the matter of adequate game protection, and the destruction of a whole herd of elephants which recently took place in that province. It was admitted that the herd had done a considerable amount of damage to the crops of the natives in the district, and the destruction of some of the older bulls and cows was imperative. But to make a clean sweep of the entire herd, seemed a very ruthless and unnecessary proceeding; for, it was urged, if the ringleaders had been killed off, the rest of the herd might probably have been driven away to a wilder district.

This point raised the wider question as to whether the Chartered Company ought to be allowed an entirely free hand with regard to the disposal of the game within their territory; and it was urged that in the matter of general principles reference ought to be made to the Home Government.

Another point to which attention was directed in the opening speech related to the minimum weight of tusks permitted to be exported from British territory. A minimum of from 25lb. to 30lb. as the weight of individual tusks had been agreed to in certain provinces; and it was urged that this limitation should be extended to the whole of British Africa.

The sale to tourists at Aden of the spolia of African game animals was another matter which, it was urged, called for special legislation. Some time ago it was agreed that this traffic was of an undesirable nature, and orders were accordingly issued to the effect that only a certain number of natives to whom licences were to be issued by the local authority on the Somali coast should be permitted to offer objects of the above nature for sale. It appears, however, that these licences have been issued with such a free hand, that the number of horns and skins offered for sale is at least as great as at any previous time.

A much more serious question than any of the foregoing was raised by a second speaker, who referred to an agitation now going on among the settlers in British East Africa, who claim to enjoy perfect freedom not only in the matter of killing off the game from their own farms and adjacent districts, but likewise in making a profit out of the hides and horns. That settlers have a right to kill off the game on their farms, appears to be generally admitted; but it has hitherto been the practice in East Africa to forbid the sale of the spoils of all kinds of antelopes, with, it is said, a great advantage to the game generally. It appears that the new settlers referred to are Boers, who have arrived in the country in parties of considerable size, and who have claimed and been granted privileges not accorded to other residents in the country.

"The Boers," remarked Sir Clement Hill at the interview, "have got a different view of game to what this Association has, at all events, and they shoot with very great freedom very large quantities of game which they do not require, but simply for the sake of practising at them. I think care should be taken that no special facilities are given to the Boers which are not allowed to others."

With this sentiment we may state at once that we heartily agree, as we do with the view of another speaker who objected to the practice of giving leave to certain privileged persons to shoot in game reserves. "However prominent the persons may be, I think," remarked the speaker, "that no one ought to be given the liberty to shoot in reserves unless it is necessary to kill off carnivorous animals, and then it could be left to the game-wardens. Again, the more prominent the person's position is the more people hear of it throughout the world, and the greater the damage done by allowing these people to enter the reserves."

To our thinking, the matter does not admit of argument, and we cannot help wondering at the frame of mind of personages who avail themselves of such privileges.

In his reply Lord Crewe observed that he would see what could be done with regard to the power of the British South Africa Company to treat the game in their territory in any way that seemed to them best, mentioning, however, that the position of the Company was a somewhat strong one. In respect to the slaughter of the Rhodesian herd of elephants, his Lordship considered that the destruction of the bigger animals and the driving away of the rest would have sufficed.

In touching on the question of the indescriminate slaughter of antelopes by the Boers in East Africa and the sale of the horns and hides, the noble Earl had recourse to the usual official platitudes, stating that his office would make enquiries, and do all that was possible to prevent such indescriminate destruction. As regards undersized ivory it was pointed out that no regulations made in British territory would be of much avail in checking the trade unless they were supported by similar restrictions on the part of the other European Powers holding territory in Africa, as small tusks could readily be smuggled across the frontier and exported from foreign territory. In the case of the sale of horns at Aden, it was promised that the matter should be represented to the Commissioner of Somaliland, with a view to his restricting the number of licences issued. Perhaps some of our readers who have recently returned from home may be able to say whether there is any diminution in the number of specimens now offered for sale.

It may be added that in reply to a question on the part of the deputation as to whether steps could not be taken to protect the sea elephants in the Falkland Islands, which are being so ruthlessly and so rapidly killed off for the sake of their oil, his lordship simulated judicial ignorance and simplicity by asking why the sealers killed them? On this being explained, he promised to institute an enquiry as quickly as possible.

Finally, in regard to Lord Avebury's plumage-bill, on which an opinion has already been expressed in this journal, the Colonial Secretary stated that his government cordially approved the principle, but that he did not pledge himself to accept all the details.

Although the deputation expressed themselves satisfied with Lord Crewe's replies, it seems to us, reading between the lines, that the Government takes but a very half-hearted interest in the whole business, and is not likely to set on foot those active measures which will alone be likely to check the great destruction of game now in progress in many parts of Africa. Perhaps, however, there may shortly be a new government in power, which may be disposed to take more prompt and energetic action. Personally we cannot help feeling that, whatever is done, the game must go in the end, as civilization and cultivation gradually spread their nets over the country.

We may conclude this article by a brief reference to condition of the game in the Sudan, where the officer of the Khartoum Garrison are permitted, under certain restrictions, to shoot in the "Reserve" but not apparently in the "Sanctuary." So far as Europeans are concerned, the protected species are stated to have been little molested. Three rhinoceroses, presumably of the white species, were, however, reported to have been killed in self-defence in the Bahr-el-ghazal province. On the other hand, in Kordofan Arabs are reported to be shooting down the white oryx by the score; while enormous numbers of addax—according to native account something like 2,000—were found lying dead in the Wadi-el-Hormak district. That they were not shot, seems to be demonstrated by the circumstance that the horn and skins were intact. Whether they suffered from an epidemic, or whether the locality is a "dying place" for old and worn-out addax, is left undecided in the report; but if the number are anything like those mentioned, it is quite certain that the latter explanation cannot be the true one. What with Arabs in the case of the white oryx and the mysterious cause of death in that of the addax, it does not look as though many of these beautiful antelopes will be left for the next generation to shoot.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE last day of the Calcutta big meeting was quite as great a success as the previous ones; the Books again are said to have had a bad time. Abet and Mayfowl were the only two to do them any good throughout the day. The card opened with the Hastings' Plate and Five Crown was tipped to be unbeatable, but he jumped so badly that at the finish Golden Morn cantered away from him. Umutbee, Bonita and Cyril raced together until the half mile post, where Golden Morn went ahead, followed by Five Crown, the former winning as she pleased. Cyril broke down two hurdles from home and had to be destroyed.

MERRYWORTH was first away in the Third Selling Handicap Division (I) with Harene, Singleton, and Abet next. Abet came through her field a furlong from home and won easily. The Second Division of the Third Selling Handicap was won by another jade, Souvenir: although she was backed for a lot of money her connections were in no way confident about her chances; she jumped out with the lead, was ahead all the way, and had no trouble in beating White Heather by one and a half lengths.

IN the Belvedere Pony Plate the favourite again got home an easy winner and was again turned out by Wishart. Hackler's Bloom was quickest away, closely followed by Ruling Passion, Encourage and Mandeville. Coming into the straight Wild Boy came through the field, followed by Mandeville, but could make no impression on Hackler's Bloom.

LUMINATION was backed down to odds on for the Hooghly Plate. Sequent was quickest away with Lumination and Annamulloch close behind. The favourite went ahead in the straight, followed by Annamulloch and Sequent and they kept this order all the way home.

PUNT in spite of having 10st. 7lb. up was backed to win a lot of money in the Bhowanipore Plate and made no mistake. Saloon was first away with Springlock, Gallileo, Best China and Punt next. Punt got ahead near the winning post and beat Gallileo by a length with Best China next.

After all Rs. 32 per doz "WHITE HORSE" WHISKY IS THE BEST.

The Merchants' Plate was a very open race. Retort was most fancied. Mayfowl, Crossbred and Bull Dog led all the way and after a ding dong finish, Mayfowl just got ahead and beat Bull Dog by a neck ; a quarter of a length between second and third.

Two of the four starters for the City Plate came from Scott's stable and Craigendorrie was supposed to have the best chance but Carnival went ahead from the start and had Craigendorrie cold all the way.

There is no more racing here for another fortnight and it is probably as well. Most of the runners last Saturday were on the light side and this rest will do them good. We hear the closed races this year will be, as in the Monsoons, open to members of Calcutta Clubs and not closed for hunters only ; this will do away with a lot of bungling over qualifications as in previous years.

We hear there are to be a lot of improvements in the course during the hot weather. Mr. Lance is going to live over the public stands and will be able to save a lot of time and at the same time be able to keep a keener eye on his subordinates.

Mumford left with the greater part of his string for Bombay on Monday ; Hayhoe and Colin Barrett left with the rest on Tuesday. Barrett will ride for Ramshaw over on the other side, and is sure to get a lot of outside riding besides; he will leave for England about the end of February and is to be married to Miss Hayhoe in June.

Ramshaw's string left with Tommy Thompson in charge on Tuesday, and after Bombay he will take them to Bangalore, where they will summer.

Penton has taken Kil Kite with his lot to Lucknow and we hear his jockey Charters will ride him in the Civil Service Cup if he starts.

Bit O'Fashion was heavily backed for the Civil Service here on Monday morning, but this was done on very unreliable information as he was scratched later in the day. Echo, Lorette and Black Prince have also been struck out.

The following are probable starters and jockeys for the Civil Service Cup :—

Bonita 10-7 (Murdison), Etna 9-7 (Taylor), First Bell 9-5 (R. Fraser), Hopscotch 8-11 (Robinson), Circus Girl 8-10 (Ferguson), Kil Kite 8-9 (Charters), The Point 8-7 (Trenoweth), Matin Bell 8-5 (Osborne), Devon 8-0 (Firth), Cocky 7-12 (Butters), Son-of-a-Gun 7-12 (native), Eileen 6-12, and Fabiana 6-12 (Thoburn).

Our selections for the race are :—

Devon to win, Hopscotch and Matin Bell places. The Point or Cocky in case of scratchings.

The Bookmakers are again crying out, as they have good cause to, about the Rs. 3 entrance fee to the betting ring ; the railing, we understood at first, was only put up as a trial, and now that the C.T.C. know it to be a failure it will probably be done away with—that is if they are wise.

Calcutta hard riding sportsmen were again busy on Friday after a fortnight's rest, owing to the going being too soft after the recent rain ; Mr. Allen laid an excellent course about four miles long with lots of jumping and there were many loose horses wandering around before the finish of the horse chase. Mrs. Wanklyn was the first to get aground at the first hurdle which her horse hit hard and the earth even harder ; luckily his rider was not hurt ; she remounted and completed the course. Mr. Pilcher came down when nearing home which unfortunately cost him a broken collar bone ; he hopes to be all right again shortly. Mr. Lance got a nasty shaking off Nettie II., who, in picking herself up got the reins tangled round Dr. Forsyth's leg and dragged him off about 100 yards past the fence; he was very lucky not to have hurt himself. The doctor was mounted on old Corydon, who, in spite of his years, was going strong and was jumping carefully. The only lady to finish the chase well up with the leaders was Miss Forsyth, mounted on that beautiful chaser Karyoli ; this pair went very straight throughout the chase and finished eighth. Captain Allanson got knocked about at the last mud wall, but was soon all right again ; Victor fell half way through the chase with Mr. Atkinson. The pony chase was very open, the whole field raced all the way together and there were only two falls : Pathfinder downed Captain Gibbs, who was going well at the time about one mile from home. Mr. Otto Rasch came to grief at the last through being too keen ; he was lying fourth.

The following was the final order :—

(1) Mr. Evers on Highland Fling
(2) Captain Gibbs on Trilby
(3) Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy
(4) Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
(5) Mr. Morris on Blue Bell
(6) Mr. Glen on Ballycar
(7) Mr. Perkins on Dalgai
(8) Miss Forsyth on Karyoli

followed by Lieutenant-Colonel Brooke on Benalbi, Captain Jelf on Mutiny, Mr. Cowper on Maisonette, Mr. Pauntley on St. Odille, Mr. Tanner on Fingal, Mr. Muir on Trilby, Mr. Bletsoe on Dick, Mr. Scaramanga on Mauser, the rest a long way behind. The Pony Chase final order was :—

(1) Mr. Glen on Marconi
(2) Lord Francis Scott on Just in Time
(3) Mr. Evers on Lochabie
(4) Mr. Marshall on Lochmaben
(5) Mr. Muir on Ungava
(6) Mr. R. H. Muir on Meprise followed by Mr. Mellis on Treacle, Mr. Tegart on Shield, Mr. Tanner on Legacy, Mr. Hutchison on Guardian, Mr. Anderson on Tot.

There was a very poor attendance at the paper-chase on Tuesday morning and fields were on the small side. A start was made at 7-30 at the brick fields and the chase ran in the opposite direction to that usually taken. It turned to the right after jumping the first hurdle and then over another through a clump of jungle, over three walls and away to the monsoon ride; after crossing the ride again we made for the open country and bearing to the left over half a dozen walls and three hurdles to the finish near the starting point. There were a few falls in the horse chase and a couple in the pony. Corydon came down with Dr. Forsyth at a very big wall soon after the start, luckily neither rider nor horse were hurt. Mr. Morgan Milton came a nasty purler a little later off a newly-landed chestnut horse, and was knocked about rather badly. Mr. Glen also fell when near home ; he got off very lightly. In the pony chase Captain Long's mount fell at the Christmas tree jump half way home and winded himself but did no serious damage. Mr. Edie Boyant was following the chase on his new purchase Sir Simon Portland and also got a nasty crumpler. The course was about five miles long and the fences were on the big side and the native brigade of spectators were very busy readying one or two for ponies, but they were all jumping excellently and the chokras were disappointed at not seeing any fall.

The final order was :—

(1) Mr. Evers on Devilette II.
(2) Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy
(3) Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
(4) Mr. Tanner on Fingal
(5) Mr. Morris on Blue Bell
(6) Captain Gibbs on Trilby,

followed by Miss Forsyth on Karyoli, Mr. Scaramanga on Mauser, Mr. Lambert on Battle, Mr. Muir on Trilby, Mr. Lance on Fairy, Mr. McNaughton on a bay, Mr Glen on Ballycar, Mr. Bletsoe on Skylark, Mr. Murray on a bay, Miss Binning on Black Douglas, Mrs. Lamond Walker on Master John, Mr. Lamond Walker on Tommy Daw, the rest of the field straggling in at long intervals. The pony chase was a good race all the way and the whole field covered half the journey in a bunch until coming home when the top-notchers came away.

The final verdict was :—

(1) Lord Francis Scott on Just in Time
(2) Mr. Evers or Lockabie
(3) Mr. Glen on Marconi
(4) Capt. Gibbs on Pathfinder
(5) Mr. Muir on Ungava
(6) Mr. Marshall on Lochmaben

followed by Mr. Tanner on Legacy, Mr. Mellis on Treacle, Mr. Hutchison on Guardian, Mr. Bletsoe on Blazes, Mr. Anderson on Tot, Mr. Hilliard on Giska, followed by several others at a long interval.

There will be a chase on Friday morning and it will probably be held over the salt lake country as the going on the other side of Garriah Hat Road is still under water and it is doubtful if it will be sound enough to gallop over for at least another fortnight.

Miss Forsyth was the only lady on Tuesday to finish at all well up with the chase. She was mounted again on Karyoli. The couple have been going very well throughout the season and if all goes well, they will make a big bid for the Ladies' Cup this year. The Doctor has been going round on old Corydon in the last two chases, but unfortunately has come to grief both trips.

The half-yearly meeting of members of the Western India Turf Club will be held at Mahaluxmi on Saturday, the 19th proximo. Agenda :— (i) to elect Stewards for season 1910-11 ; (ii)

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

proposed alteration in Rules of the Club as per revised draft circulated to members; (iii) to discuss any other business brought forward.

Mr. R. Nihill Talbot has been appointed a handicapper to the W.I.T.C.

The Stewards of the W.I.T.C. have concluded their enquiry into the running of Corrector in the Desert Plate (divided) at the Bombay Third Extra Meeting on the 1st January. The result is that jockey F. Drew has been cautioned as to his riding in the future.

Mr. Goculdas, the prominent turfite, has been recently robbed of a silver cup, valued at £100 won by one of his horses at the last Bangalore races. The cup was sent from Poona to Bleach, the trainer, in Bombay, but on arrival the box contained the cup stand alone and no cup. The Railway Police were immediately informed and are enquiring into the matter.

The Cawnpore race meeting fixed for the 3rd and 5th proximo has been cancelled. It is proposed to hold a gymkhana meeting in March and a big meeting next autumn by which time it is hoped that both the flat course and steeplechase course will be thoroughly taken in hand and relaid—new jumps being put up and the going got in good condition.

The keynote of modern conditions of sport may perhaps be summed up in the single word "Pace." Everything now gives place to this. It is embodied in the feverish haste and love of constant change which now characterises the nation in matters sporting as well as everything else. It is even shown by its amusements. By the rise of the popular taste for the Palace of Varieties, to wit, and the decline of solid worth typified by the opera and classical music. When Puck undertook "to girdle the earth in forty minutes," Oberon should undoubtedly have booked such a sporting offer. But, nowadays, we who back Electra vote forty minutes "dead slow"—no pace at all. In our sports the tendency for pace is shown by the anxiety to break records. An athlete may be right in the front rank, but he is nothing—in the estimation of some—unless he is also a record-breaker. And this mania for record-breaking has brought in its train a spirit which, if it does not actually threaten the purity of our national sport, requires careful watching. I refer to the strenuous endeavours of well-meaning amateurs and others to improve the paraphernalia rather than the quality of sport. Up-to-date results of their enthusiasm are scientifically interesting, may be, but from the sportsman's point of view rather deplorable. No one wishes, of course, to put obstacles in the way of modern improvements, yet it is often the case that we can purchase these improvements at too high a price. A contest under equal conditions is the ideal. If, therefore, our sport is to remain truly national no technical advantage should be sought by its votaries. Or perhaps one ought to qualify this assertion by saying that the paraphernalia of sport should not be so over-developed as to go beyond the means of moderate incomes. Otherwise sport in the future may also be subjected to the degrading power of the purse. Put another way, any innovation implying partial adoption only is unfair.

To shoot game as it can be found on simply preserved ground is far too slow for sportsmen in England to-day. They must have it herded in immense masses. To fish an ordinary stream nowadays is quite below the notice of modern disciples of "rare old Izaak." They must go far afield, if need be, to secure the best specimens of the finny tribe. Nor are they satisfied unless they catch numerous fish as noble in their degree as the turbot, on whose destinies Domitian consulted the Conscript Fathers of Rome. Men grumble so loudly in the hunting field if they are not always galloping, that the huntsmen of to-day are learning the trick of carrying their hounds from covert to covert as fast as they can ride with them, following a pseudo-fox. Or take the amateur mountaineer. An Alpine climber must have risked his neck on the Matterhorn before he can either satisfy himself or his friends. He is nothing if he has not narrowly escaped death on divers occasions. For the rest look at cricket, football, and kindred games. Cricket has become such a business that Lord Hawke had occasion just lately to warn its devotees of the evil in no unmeasured terms. Our Australian friends pose as amateurs, moreover, and then depart from these shores with some £500—£600 clear profit per man! Even county fray seems to pall with very many players. They are for ever touring in America, Australia, South Africa, etc. Football has become so loaded with the arrogance and extravagance of the professionals that a doubt has arisen in the minds of amateurs whether they can continue the sport at all. Some, of course, have already burned their boats and openly defied the Football Association. One might go on giving instances, but to what good? The evil is too glaring to need undue emphasis. And history is only repeating itself. It is the old business of panem et circenses.

A week or two ago, writes our London correspondent, I alluded to the mysterious animal rumoured to exist in Rhodesia. I gather from some remarks on the subject, contributed by a correspondent to the Bulawayo Chronicle, that he spent some eighteen months in the Kafue Valley, and it was the statement of Mr. Chubb, of the Rhodesian Museum, repudiating Herr Carl Hagenbeck's published remarks as to native rumours, that led him to take the matter up, though, personally, he confesses himself a sceptic.

"Anyone who has spent much time in the Kafue Valley," he says, "and has been at all observant of native customs, or interested in their folk-lore, will bear me out when I say that all their legends and superstitions teem with reference to such a reptile, and that, especially from the Lunga and Kafue junction upwards, they firmly believe there is such a creature. Whilst there I constantly heard about it. Most accounts, I must say, were legendary, or of the 'told by our fathers' order, but I came across two natives who said they had actually seen it, though unknown to one another, and some hundreds of miles apart. Out of several imaginary sketches I drew, they both picked the same one without hesitation, and both commented on the fact that I had omitted to put in the paddles or flappers it used to propel itself with. The general description was: The head of a crocodile, with rhino horns, a neck like a python, body of a hippo, and a crocodile's tail, all of tremendous size. I could get no information as to its legs.

"Between the Lunga and Kafue rivers, seventy odd miles from the Silver King mine is a small lake two or three miles in circumference. This lake is held sacred by the natives round about as a dwelling place of the spirits of their dead, and there are many superstitions concerning it. Among others is one that it has no bottom, and another that fish caught in it will not die, not even if roasted on the hottest fire. They say that at times the water becomes violently agitated, and that, shortly after the reptile above described makes an appearance. It suns itself, and swims about now and again, rolling over and over, screaming and snorting at a terrible rate, and lashing the water with tremendous fury. Then suddenly it disappears, and is not seen again for many moons. Among others who told me this was an old man living at a kraal a few miles away, who swore he had seen it with his own eyes. Another self-styled eye-witness told me that he had seen one on the Kafue River, near the Lumkanga, at flood time. He, with others, was in a canoe spearing fish, when he heard a tremendous crashing among the reeds and grass, which at that time grew 18 feet and over above the water. They looked up and saw, not far away, the fearful form. They watched it until it reached the open channel in the middle of the river. Overcome with terror, they watched it raising and lowering its head, which reached higher than the nearest trees, until they recovered presence of mind enough to push their dug-out to land, when they cleared for all they were worth."

The Berlin sporting exhibition of antlers and other trophies of the chase will be held in the Great Hall of the Berlin Zoological Gardens between 27th instant and 16th proximo. The German Emperor will present two handsome silver cups for the best heads of stags killed on German territory, in open country or within an enclosed area of not less than 5,000 acres. The conditions of entry are as follow:—To qualify for exhibition, all trophies must have been obtained during the year 1909 by German sportsmen at home or abroad, or by foreign sportsmen on German soil, while trophies may be exhibited only by owners of property upon which the same were obtained, or by persons responsible for the taking of them. No exhibitor will be allowed to take more than one cup or one shield in any class. The prize list consists of silver cups, shields, and bronze and silver medals.

Under the presidency of Professor Ludwig von Graff, the eighth International Zoological Congress will be held at Graz, Austria, from 15th August to 20th August 1910. Visitors to the Congress may attend as members or participants. The former pay a subscription of one guinea, and will be presented with a copy of the report of the proceedings; the latter pay 10s., and may attend the meetings, but are not entitled to either vote or take part in the discussions, nor will they receive the report. Ladies are invited by the committee to become participants or members.

We referred a few weeks ago to a writer who gave several reasons to account for the apparent "bad luck" of certain horsemen in the hunting field. In almost every case he considered such "bad luck" due to absence of knowledge or failure to use the head. And in this connection it is interesting to recall a fact which all who have hunted must have noticed, namely, that on a day when almost the whole field gets thrown out, the huntsman is always "there or thereabouts." It may be argued that this is due to the huntsman's knowing the lie of the country probably better than any member of the field knows it. Set him down in a strange country, however, and with a strange pack, and almost always he will still be there or thereabouts when the rest of the field is "nowhere." The reason for this is simple enough, the man uses his senses and his intelligence. If, for instance, he sees sheep in a field a mile away suddenly stampede for no apparent reason, he concludes that the fox has passed that way and frightened them, and generally his inference is the right one. Or, on another occasion, hounds seem to have vanished off the earth. Suddenly our huntsman notices wood-pigeons repeatedly flying out of a dense cover down in a valley a long way off, and settling again. Instantly he conjectures that hounds may be in that cover, and more often than not he is right. There are many people who consider it only necessary to ride to hunt successfully, but the truth is that there is considerably more to learn. Riding is the first accomplishment necessary, but the rider who wishes to live with the hounds must never fail to use his head and his eyes. And it is just that which raises hunting above steeplechasing and makes it one of the finest sports obtainable in the world.

A sport which is said to have made some progress of late years in England is fencing. More people fence and the general standard of skill is far higher than it was. Nevertheless fencers are comparatively few, and it is asserted that their numbers ought to be greater amongst Britishers. It is claimed for fencing that in these days when increasing attention is paid to all forms of physical culture, it is as good a means of exercise as any man or woman could find or wish to find. It is suited to all ages and physiques, and is gentle or vigorous at discretion; it is infinitely varied and of absorbing interest, and keeps the highest mental faculties alert; it may be indulged in as conveniently one day as another day, and it takes up but little time; moreover, it is inexpensive, perhaps, indeed the cheapest form of sport to be had. It enjoys a distinction which raises it above all other sports and pastimes—that of making as much use of the brains as of the muscles. It is a thoroughly amateur sport as well. If it is not "spectacular" as some say—this "defect" has the merit of saving it from undue exploitation in the Press and from the temptation to play to the "gate" or the "gallery." But truly amateur as the sport of fencing is, there is not another where the professional is so indispensable, or more intimately the guide and friend of his pupils. Nobody can hope to fence by the light of nature; and constant practice in the "lesson" at the hands of a competent master is needful for the novice and the champion alike. But no one should be discouraged from taking up the sport by the idea that it is difficult. Difficult it is certainly, in the sense that one does not become proficient at it before years of steady practice. Yet the difficulties are not so great that a beginner will not get considerable pleasure and amusement out of it after the first few months of lessons, or indeed long before that if he takes kindly to the pastime. Putting the advantages of fencing in the least attractive light it is a sport which on merely utilitarian grounds can be of real benefit to a large class of persons to-day who want some form of interesting exercise, which can be taken conveniently. In Calcutta during the dog days of the rains fencing might become very popular.

FOOTBALL is in full swing at home now and the huge crowds of spectators which congregate at every match of any importance, seem to be even bigger than last year. It is estimated that close upon 1,000,000 spectators paid their money to witness the various League matches which took place during the Christmas holidays. There can be no doubt that the tendency of so many able-bodied men to spend so much of their time watching football and cricket, must have a degenerating influence on their physical powers. It has been argued that it is better for the British workingman to pay his sixpence and enjoy his afternoon's excitement in the open air than to waste his time in beer houses and similar resorts. That may be true enough, but why can he not play himself? There are thousands of youths working all the week in City offices who devote their every Saturday afternoon to watching some match, standing wrapped in overcoats, breathing in the stale air around them, their chief concern the issue of the game which will gain or lose them some stake of more or less value. In their school days these youths have learnt the well-known British games and, may be, become fairly efficient in playing them, but released from school discipline they prefer the poor excitement of the spectator who merely gambles on the result, to the healthy relish of the player whose brain and muscles are devoted to the game itself. It is much to be regretted that this mania for watching football in particular seems to be steadily increasing in the big towns of England and Scotland. It is pointed out that on grounds where ten years ago the spectators numbered 10,000 they now amount to 50,000. At Stamford Bridge, one of the largest London grounds, 60,000 people paid for admission a short time ago and several thousands who wished to enter had to be turned away.

THE tie for first place in the Lansdowne gold medal competition, played on the 14th and 15th instant in connection with the Calcutta Golf Club, resulted in a win for Mr. A. Bray with 93-14-79. His opponent Mr. Jas. Lennox made 92-12-80.

SIX events will be competed for at the Lawn Tennis Tournament to be held by the Allahabad Gymkhana Club next month, viz.:—Gentlemen's open singles and doubles, gentlemen's handicap singles and doubles, ladies' open singles and mixed handicap doubles. The challenge cups will be retained by winners for one year. The tournament opens on the 7th proximo, entries closing on the 4th idem.

WE understand that George Hennington, of the 6th Dragoons, Mhow, ex-middle weight champion of the British Army in England, is willing to wrestle any man in India in the catch-as-catch can or Græco-Roman style, for any money from Rs. 50 to Rs. 200 a side and the best purse obtainable, for the middle weight championship of India, strangle holds and toe holds barred; weight to be 11st. 4lb.

THE opinions of most of the followers of the noble art as voiced by the papers to hand by the last Australian mail proclaim Fitzsimmons to have put up a wonderful show in his fight with Bill Lang on Boxing day. The ex-champion was pronounced to have had the best of the encounter and was only beaten by anno domini and a consequent failure to stay. Asked for his own opinion of the fight Bob said the contest had been conducted in a gentlemanly way, and he had nothing to complain of. It was his last fight, the last of 370 battles. He recognised now that youth must triumph, and for himself that age had told its tale. He was aware of it when he was training for this contest, but said nothing. This was only the second occasion on which he had said that he had been fairly beaten. The other time was his second fight with Jeffries.

THE annual Racquets Tournament held by the Bombay Gymkhana will this year take place during the big race meeting at Bombay in February, commencing on the 8th. It is open to all India and all officers of any of the services, civil and military, and members of any recognised club or gymkhana are eligible. There are to be Open Singles and Doubles, Handicap Singles and Doubles, Public Schools Doubles and Markers' Singles. Entries close on the 4th February. Further particulars in the advertisement which appears in our Sporting columns to-day.

THE Ezra Cup Polo Tournament was concluded on the Calcutta race course ground on the 19th instant, the Rifle Brigade "B" team defeating the Rifle Brigade "A" team by 4 goals to 2 in the final, details of which appear further on.

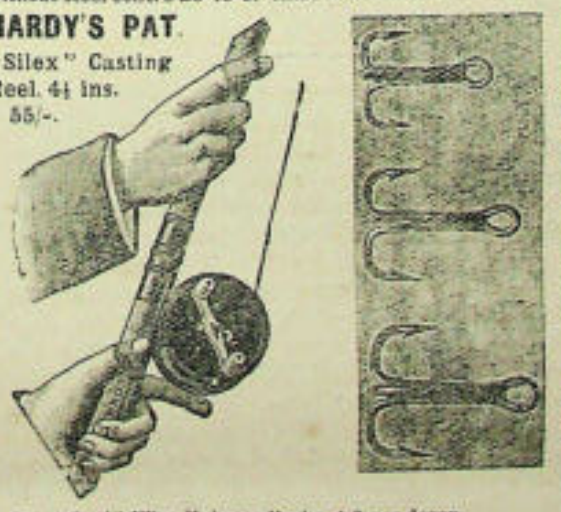
THE race for the sculling championship of the world between the holder, Richard Arnst, and Ernest Barry, the English champion will take place this year on the Zambesi river about two miles above the Victoria Falls, over a course of three and a half miles. The first regatta on the Zambesi with British Colonial crews as competitors took place in 1905 and another was held last year.

WE have to thank Messrs. Swallow and Ariell, Ld., the well-known biscuit and cake manufacturers of Melbourne, Australia, for an attractive wall calendar for 1910 sent us through their agents, Messrs. G. Knowles and Co. of this city.

ANOTHER charming almanac for the current year has been sent us by the well-known manufacturers of canine specialities, Spratt's Patent, Limited. The publication comprises 12 excellent coloured illustrations of dogs and birds and at the back of each picture are practical notes on the breed depicted. We might further add that any of our readers desiring a copy gratis can obtain one by addressing a post card to Spratt's Almanac Department, 24, Fenchurch Street, London, E. C., mentioning this paper.

AUSTRALIAN papers state that while the P. and O. liner Mantua was travelling from Fremantle to Adelaide, her passengers played a game of chess by wireless telegraphy with those on the R.M.S. Morea, going west. The game was in progress for six hours, and the Mantua's passengers won in 21 moves.

THE Committee of the Indian Cricket XI for England is slowly working out the programme of the proposed tour. It is helped by the fact that the decision of the Australians to join in the Triangular matches means that the South African XI will visit England in 1912, and not in 1911, thus keeping the field clear for the "All-India XI." The Committee is hopeful that the Jam Sahib of Nawanagar will be persuaded to captain the eleven, and although it is yet early to discuss the composition of the team it will probably include the Maharajah of Patiala. Lord Hawke, who is keenly interested in the proposed tour, has written to Mr. Framjee Patel saying that he will be very pleased to do what he can to help the scheme. In regard to county guarantees, Lord Hawke doubts if counties can guarantee much: Yorkshire, Lancashire, Surrey and Kent might guarantee £100 each and the others might help to a smaller extent. Lord Hawke has kindly undertaken to try and find a good professional to come to India to coach the XI.



AMERICA has answered England's provisional challenge for the International Cup. This is the telegram received by Major F. Egerton Green, manager of the Hurlingham Cup from the American Polo Association at New York:—

Polo Association accepts your provisional challenge provided a formal challenge is received not later than 1st June, the game to be played in August or September as may be mutually agreed. Letter follows.—Hazard, Secretary:—

It will be remembered that Hurlingham's decision at the committee's recent meeting was to send a formal challenge after the Champion Cup on 25th June next if "a suitable team of players and ponies could be got together for that purpose." The answer from America will cause a change of plans. The authorities at New York evidently are anxious to receive longer notice of a definite challenge than the Hurlingham Polo Committee had intended to give.

The effect of the telegram will be to hurry things along on this side of the Atlantic. The Hurlingham Committee will have to make up their mind whether to challenge or not during the month of May, which sees the opening of the season in London. Unfortunately none of the big tournaments are to be played during that month.

The question, however, will be one of ponies as much as of men, and it may be assumed that no challenge will be sent to America unless the Hurlingham Committee can see their way clear to equipping their selected team with an adequate stud of ponies. Whether they can acquire an adequate stud for the visit to New York will depend largely upon the generosity and patriotism of English and Irish polo players.

The Bengal Presidency Athletic Association conducts the largest sports meeting held in India, the Amateur, the British Army, the Native Army and Schools of Christian Denomination Championships being competed for annually.

The meeting were founded in 1893 and has always maintained the highest standard of sport. At present the General and the Executive Committees are composed of prominent and leading sportsmen in Calcutta and Bengal. The Sports have developed in the amateur events such men as N. G. Pritchard, W. A. Knyvett who made such a splendid showing at the Olympic Games in London, B. A. Hollow, F. B. Prike, R. T. Ross.

Amateur Championship Challenge Shields or Cups are awarded in the 100 yds, 220 yds, 440 yds, and ½ mile races, all of which are Championship Scratch events. For those who wish to try out events the Handicaps, the 150 yds, 300 yds, and 120 yds. Hurdles, give ample opportunity. It is proposed this year to offer a Club Challenge Shield to Amateur Clubs sending competitors to these Sports. The club winning the largest number of points in the above events together with the High Jump, hold the Championship Challenge Shield for the ensuing year.

In the British Army events the competition is extremely keen; representatives from the leading regiments are sure to appear and the events are always well filled. In the last season's meeting the British Army one mile record was broken by Private Chandler of the Wiltshire Regiment, his time being 4mins. 35⅕secs.

The Native Army events also give the spectator a splendid opportunity to see the best of competition. Last season two records were broken. The 100 yards event was lowered by Sepoy Sher Jang of the 33rd Punjabis to 10⅖secs. Bugle Major Jamal Din of the 91st. Punjabis lowered the time of the ½ mile race to 2mins. 4⅕secs.

The School events always receive tremendous applause from hundreds of the boys who come to see their school mates win. St. Xavier's College who won the Challenge Shield last season are again sending a very strong team and more records are sure to go.

The Meeting this year is to be held as usual on the Calcutta Cricket Club Ground, Eden Gardens, Calcutta, on 19th February 1910. Preliminary Heats will be run off on Friday, the 18th February while the entries must be in on closing day, 9th February. The Honorary Secretary Dr. J. H. Gray of the Y.M.C.A., together with his able Executive Committee composed of the Hon'ble A. A. Apear, C.S.I. Mr. W. J. Bradshaw, Mr. W. C. Burke Mr. J. F. Grieg. Mr. N. A. Macleod, Mr. M. Remfry, and Mr. F.H. Reynolds, is working hard to make the meeting a pronounced success. They are always pleased to receive subscriptions which can be sent to the Honorary Secretary as 25, Chowringhee.

The Lucknow spring Polo Tournament will commence this afternoon when the Gordons will meet the Viceroy's Staff in the first round, the other teams having drawn byes. The second round will be played on Friday, 28th, commencing at 2-15 P.M. and Saturday, 29th, at 9-30 A.M. The semi-finals take place at 2-15 P. M. on Tuesday, 1st February, and the finals at 3-30 P.M. on Thursday, 3rd February.

The M. C. C. beat Natal by 9 wickets at Pietermaritzburg. The second test match was opened at Durban on the 21st instant. South Africa going in first were disposed of for 199 runs and England were all out for the same total. In their second innings the South Africans made 171 for four wickets and completed the venture for 347, White scoring 118 in brilliant style. England going in again had made 15 without loss when stumps were drawn on Tuesday.

An Eastern potentate had a Court jester, who said that an excuse might sometimes be worse than an offence, whilst his royal master declared that such a thing was impossible. That evening in the twilight the potentate was walking in one of the corridors of the palace, when someone rushed up and kissed him. Instantly there was a hue-and-cry, and the offender, the jester, was caught on the spot, and ordered for the outrage to be executed without delay. Before, however, the sentence was carried into effect, the jester was asked what explanation he had to offer. "Your Majesty," he said, with evident regret, "I thought it was your wife!"

London Week by Week

Friday, 7th January 1910.

London saw the New Year in a few hours after I posted you my last letter in the time-honoured way. There was much dining at the big restaurants and hotels and nearly all the celebrations were elaborate and gay, as why should they not be when many thousands of good citizens are met together with the sole object of making merry. The usual manifestations took place on the last stroke of twelve—unlimited "Auld lang syne-ing" and hand gripping and toasting indoors and steam whistling, fog horning and bell ringing without. Round St. Paul's Cathedral there was the usual whisky-swilling seance and the usual rough crowd. It is popularly supposed that on New Year's nicht thousands of braw lads from beyond the Tweed foregather round the sacred edifice and indulge in an infinity of "wha hae-ing" and much resort to wee drappies and all the other accessories to the hogmanny. This may have been the case in bygone years; I have reason to believe that Scotchmen form but a small part of the huge crowd nowadays: the mob is recruited chiefly from the East End, and why it is suffered to collect here and make night hideous one cannot understand.

*** *** ***

But our welcome to 1910 is quite a thing of the past as I pen these lines. We turn now to weightier matters and we try to convince ourselves that these are great days and that the near Future is big with possibilities, but the funny part of it is that though there is a general election in progress to all intents and purposes, there is very little sign of it as far as the man in the street is concerned. Here and there you may see a stray bill asking you to vote for somebody or other, but as a whole London appears to be quite unmoved by the tremendous events which are just about to happen. Probably we shall be fully committed to it next week and be praying for the end which will not be till January is practically out.

*** *** ***

By the way, one of the problems of the general election that no man can solve is what the weather will be like. Experts are agreed that if we get a really severe spell it is exceedingly likely to come about the middle of January, and in that case many people are likely to be disfranchised, especially in country districts. Fancy a blizzard like that of mid-January 1881 coming at the height of the contest! Even all the warmth of political oratory could not avail to melt such a snowfall as we saw in that awful year.

More priceless free gifts! Particulars of another magnificent bequest to the nation have just been made public.

A great part of the late Dr. Ludwig Mond's collection of Italian pictures has been bequeathed to us, and the executors are now taking steps to carry out the directions contained in Dr. Mond's will.

The bequest was made subject to certain conditions, and a statement is being prepared setting forth the testator's wishes.

The pictures include the following:—

Christ on the Cross	...	Raphael.
Holy Family	...	Mantegna.
Virgin and Child	...	Titian.
Virgin Enthroned	...	Bellini.
Flora ...	...	Palma Vecchio.
Two Madonnas	...	Bellini.
Pieta with Two Angels		Bellini.
The Calling of St. Zenobius		Botticelli.
Miracles of St. Zenobius		Botticelli.

The Raphael alone fetched £11,130 at the Earl of Dudley's sale in 1892.

This new spirit among testators makes collectors of us all. In the crowd at Christie's, where the fate of old canvases and ivories is in debate among the millionaires, I move uneasily, a loiterer on false pretences. But I and the great public come to our own at Bloomsbury, at South Kensington, and at Hertford House. These Saltings, Wallaces, and Monds shame us out of the petty extravagance of haunting the back-street dealer in antique.

As one of the public, I have but lately added to my collection Mr. Salting's millionsworths of porcelain jars and plates, the desire of which keeps mandarin connoisseurs from their sleep in Peking. How, then, shall I brig myself, as a private man, to waste three guineas over a cracked saucer? Shall I, who own the armour in the Tower, the Waddesdon illuminations, the Harleian manuscripts, and all the tapestries in that tall Kensington room which smells so pleasantly of old worsteds and silks, squander hardly-earned sovereigns upon tempting trumpery in Wardour Street or the Brompton Road?

The death of the old year synchronised with the retirement of that really great, and perhaps good, lawyer Sir George Lewis. He is considered by most people to have been the most distinguished solicitor of his generation. Seeing he is in his seventy-seventh year it will hardly be alleged that he hasn't fully earned his right to retire. He had a long innings. He set up all sorts of records, only to break them himself. One can imagine the pang of regret which accompanied Sir George's farewell to Ely Place, to the firm with which he had been connected all his long and busy life; the firm he had raised to an eminence of reputation which is the envy of confidential solicitors all over the country.

His practice was unique, and all the credit of it is due to himself. He did not inherit his clientèle. He made it. Society soon began to recognise the adviser who could arrange all sorts of difficulties with a ripe prudence and wisdom. Society went to him in all its embarrassments, and society soon acknowledged him not only as a professional adviser but also as a confident and long-headed friend.

Nobody, it is safe to say, will ever know how many sensational suits he kept out of court; how many blackmailing charges, levelled against persons of the highest consideration, he settled; how many awkward tangles he unravelled; how much unnecessary and venomous scandal he was able to suppress. If Sir George Lewis were to write his reminiscences—which he never will—it would be the book of the century.

I have lately attended a couple of really excellent performances by amateur actors in the North of London, and therein I found food for reflection—quite apart from the enjoyment I had in the pieces themselves. At this time of the year, when the element of goodwill is uppermost in our thoughts and actions, it is particularly encouraging to look back on the position of the amateur now and what it was but a few years ago. There is unquestionably a very great advance in the right direction. The average individual ability is greater, the standard of the performances is higher, and the combination of these two essential factors has brought about a much larger and wider interest on the part of the public, a practical compliment to efficiency which is offered at nearly all the performances of recognised clubs or societies by the large audiences. But a still more seasonable reflection occurs when one sees at so many of the shows the goodwill of the mutual support of rival clubs, the exchange of such practical congratulations as only friendship between the clubs can bring. This is, indeed, a great point gained. At one time each club had its own public and a limited one at that, but now by the friendly intercourse and sympathy for the common advantage of raising the status of the work, a large general public has been secured of an acutely discriminating nature, ready to support amateur shows, instead of sneering at them as was their wont. Another pleasant feature is the readiness of amateurs to be criticised, and the attention that is given to sincere opinions, whether they be favourable or not. At one time critics were not welcome guests at performances by amateurs, for reasons which need not be detailed too closely now; but all that is changed to a large extent by a more intimate appreciation of the proportionate value of the critic and the criticised to each other.

A warmer welcome than that given to Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry on their reappearance last Monday night at the New Theatre no one could desire. No novelty had been prepared for the occasion, and evidently none was wanted. "Henry of Navarre" had served all necessary purposes during the first six months of last year, and it almost looks as if its run might be continued over a similar period in the present one. Mr. William Devereux's "Romantic play" has taken firm hold of the public, and bids fair to retain that hold for many days to come. It is admittedly modelled on popular lines; it aims at interesting and stimulating the spectator rather than at educating him. Good, sound, stirring drama it is, nevertheless, agreeably charged with those elements of love, hatred, passion, intrigue, adventure, and heroism that have rarely been known to fail in the race for popular success. The glimpses the author gives of the wooing of fair Margot by the gallant Henry of Navarre, of the pitiless cruelty deployed by Catharine de Medici, of the terrible massacre of St. Bartholomew, of the subterfuges and the machinations practised at the Court of the feeble-minded and superstitious monarch, Charles IX., may err somewhat on the side of historical inaccuracy, but they are, at any rate, singularly moving and dramatically effective. The acting, too, is excellent throughout. Mr. Fred Terry's Navarre is a brilliant study of a chivalrous, brave, and valiant soldier, touched with a pleasant sense of humour, gay, debonnaire and lovable. As the beautiful and fascinating Marguerite de Valois, Miss Julia Neilson is seen at her best; whether her mood be imperious, womanly, coquettish, or sincere, there is no resisting the charm of her manner. Even her somewhat bizarre way of punctuating her lines with trills, quavers, and rippling cadences has become so much part and parcel of her style as no longer to create any feeling of astonishment or resentment. Nor is there ought but praise for Mr. Malcolm Cherry's superbly finished portrait of Charles IX., for the De Guise of Mr. Philip Merivale, the Ruggieri of Mr. Horace Hodges, the Catharine, highly-coloured though it be, of Miss Tita Brand, or the sprightly Marie Bellepret of Miss Phillida Terson, a recent and welcome addition to the cast.

One of the most notable events that have occurred for some time in connection with the production of musical plays has been the return of Sir W. S. Gilbert to the field which he so long adorned; and his quaint fancy and fluent lyrics, coupled with Mr. Edward German's delightful music, have served to make "Fallen Fairies" a big success at the Savoy. Last night an important change was made in the cast, Miss Amy Evans succeeding Miss Nancy McIntosh as Selene, the Fairy Queen. The newcomer is fair and pretty as a fairy should be, and a very youthful-looking Queen to boot. At present her singing is far in front of her acting, but perhaps first-night nervousness was responsible for her apparent self-consciousness, and in any case her vocal abilities are sufficient to make her adorn the part. Her purity of tone and the range of her voice won her immediate popularity. Her dainty presence was in appropriate contrast to the manly vigorous personality of Mr. Claude Flemming, whose gallant bearing makes him the beau ideal of the hero of romance. It is much to be regretted that Mr. C. H. Workman has not more to do, and Miss Jessie Rose has a part that is regrettably small; but whenever either of this pair is on the stage the audience, always happy, is made happier still.

TAKING OLD FRIENDS OUT OF STORE.

It is the lot of many of us to have no permanent abiding place for some years: and so we have to store away our heavier impediments with some one or other of the numerous agents, who make a business of taking care of the goods and chattels of homeless people. So it comes to pass that a collection of Indian heads have lain packed away for several years pending such time as I should be settled into some place with sufficient permanence to have them out. It has been the pleasant task of the past few days, unpacking old trophies, the very look of which had been well nigh forgotten. A pair of horns however is an extraordinary prompter to the memory: vanished scenes return . . . . the faded pictures of our recollection in an instant regain all the vividness of their first colouring. The sight of this chinkara head, with horns well over twelve inches in length, calls up a wide sandy plain, with its surface on one side broken by an irregular fringe of bushes, which mark the edge of a ravine. There with his grey brown coat almost matching the background, the buck who owned the horns paused for one fatal instant before diving into the ravine, and safety. That irrepressible desire to look back has brought death to many a chink, no less surely, though in other fashion, than it did to Lot's wife.

So fleeting was the chance, and so quickly was it all over, that I never realised, until I was bending over the fallen buck, what a fine trophy a quick lucky shot had given me.

The next dip into the packing case brings out a pair of long black buck horns. They are neatly rolled up in paper and reek of naphthaline. A ticket with the number 63 is attached for identification purposes, but a view of the curiously worn bases of the horns at once brings back their history. The buck was found on a grassy plain dotted closely with babool trees. These afforded so much assistance in approaching within shot unseen, that the stalk was a very easy affair. Also the buck was all by himself, so there were no watchful does to evade. The hollow bullet from my 28-30 struck the antelope just behind the shoulder and killed him instantly. The length of the horns had of course been noticeable enough long before the actual shot which made them mine, and it was when anxiously applying the tape, that I also noted other characteristics. The horns were 23¾ inches in length, and close to the base where they met the head were worn into annular grooves; in fact, the horn substance there was frayed so thin that a piece of one of the horns has since broken out. For a short distance above these grooves the corrugations of both horns are much rubbed down and smoothed. Probably this buck was a very aged animal and may have rubbed down his horns in this peculiar manner during years of constant fighting.

The Indian antelope is a decidedly easy animal to bring to bag when one has once thoroughly learnt its habits. This is however not due to want of sagacity, but rather to its curiosity and familiarity with the native agriculturist. Consequently, if covert for proper stalking is absent, one has only to imitate something, or someones, with which the antelope is daily familiar. These be mean tricks, but necessary in open bare plains, where keeping out of sight is out of the question. That the black buck does not lack sagacity, everyone who has hunted these animals will have had ample evidence. An instance which struck me very much happened near Delhi. Near a small native village I saw a wild buck trotting very slowly in front of a tiny native boy. The little fellow held a bit of stick in his hand with which he was threatening the buck. The latter was only five or six yards in front of the child, and kept looking over his shoulder evidently enjoying the game and not the least afraid. On catching sight of me the buck darted off like an arrow towards a band of antelope some half a mile away, out on the plain.

A tame black buck, belonging to a British Regiment at Agra, was in the habit of frequenting the rifle range so much, that he had lost all fear of the report of a rifle. I have seen this animal standing almost over men shooting in the prone position and taking not the smallest notice of a Lee Metford cracking just under his nose.

To return to the packing cases, an hour's work has filled a room with heads of all kinds, and then comes a busy time finding the skulls which belong to each pair of horns by the register numbers on each.

Here is a fine shapoo head, which I never deserved to win. The 300 yard sight of my Mannlicher had got pushed up accidentally and I never noticed it. The ram I fired at was about 200 yards away and it was only the flatness of the rifle's trajectory which prevented my missing it altogether. As it was I hit the animal high up, and a Balti villager found it two days later.

Then there is an ibex with curiously upright, thick horns. Their exact length I have never known, for the tips are both broken off by a terrific fall over a precipice. Probably, however, the head is only about thirty-four inches round the curve, but its massiveness makes it a nice trophy. The spoiling of this head was due to a mismanaged stalk. I allowed my shikari to get in front of me, and he managed to let a doe see him; so instead of an easy sitting shot at the buck at close range, I got a long one while he was on the run. The ibex was obviously hit somewhere, but I did not recover him at the time and looked upon him as lost. There was a local rajah, however, with whom I had established friendly relations, and one of his men found my ibex a few days later at the foot of a precipice.

I had left the nullah when the head was brought to me, but recognized the peculiar thick straight horns at once, and was very glad to recover the trophy, albeit in an unsatisfactory manner. The horns of a spotted deer recall Ceylon days. The stag they belonged to was shot near Kantalai Lake. I remember the occasion well, the shoulder-high dewy grass in the early morning: grass which clothed the plain around the shores of the lake, a prairie made by the shrinkage of the water in the dry weather. Keeping close to the jungle, so as to obtain the advantage given by the irregularities of its edge, we stole through the long wet grass. Turning a corner I came on the stag, who stood like a statue in the open staring at me. Only his head and neck were visible, and I shot him in the throat with my ·303, dropping him instantly.

But these memories, fascinating though they be to me, must be getting boring to readers of the Indian Field so I will put a period to them.

TAMPICO THE TOWN FOR TARPON.

While at the approach of cold weather the tarpon angler of the U.S. coasts must perforce lay aside his tackle, the sport at Tampico may be said to have just begun. Tampico is situated on the eastern coast of Mexico, upon the banks of the Panuco river, about six miles from the gulf. The river at this point is of about the same volume as the Mississippi at New Orleans, being nearly three-quarters of a mile in width, and from thirty-five to sixty feet deep even during the dry season, and navigable for vessels of the largest class for upward of a hundred miles from its mouth. Owing to the influence of the gulf and the incoming tide, the river is quite salty for a considerable distance upstream, and remains so until refreshed by the June rainfall, at which time the tarpon seek the waters of the gulf.

Those visiting Tampico should bring enough of their own tackle to last throughout their visit, for while hotels which cater to this class of trade furnish tackle which is strong and serviceable, together with boats, guides, etc., yet experienced fishermen, and especially those who pin their faith to light tackle, will always be best served by procuring their outfit at home. Enough additional equipment should be provided to cover all contingencies, for in addition to an abundance of tarpon, the waters are infested with sharks, jew-fish and yellow-tail, which fight with bull-dog tenacity when hooked, are always a source of great annoyance, and are especially careless in their treatment of one's tackle.

Good sport may be had anywhere from the first of November until the following June, with the possible exception of February, the coldest month of the year, at which time it is likely to be stormy and disagreeable. Everything considered, March is probably the best time for making the trip. The tourist, however, will do well to make preparations for leaving there not later than the middle of May, on account of the liability of contracting fever of one sort or another, with the ever present danger of being held up by quarantine at the border. Although such restrictions are not always in effect, they are likely to be slapped on without any notice whatever against travellers from Tampico, Vera Cruz and other coast towns in the fever zone, and are liable to go into effect just at the very time when one can ill-afford to take any chances on detention.

There are a number of fair hotels at Tampico, as hotels go in Mexico, which, by the way, are not all bad. Those preferring private accommodations with American families will find several good boarding houses. The rates charged by the hotels (European plan) run from $1·50 silver to the same amount in gold, according to room and service. Meals at the cafes are from 50 cents silver to as high as one cares to go, ordering from a bill of fare restricted by the limitations of the local market. The food as a rule is well cooked and wholesome, while the very best of imported wines are always to be obtained by those who care for them.

Guides cost $2·00 per day, and gasoline launches, having a carrying capacity of four to six persons, may be hired for $12·50 per day, these amounts being in gold. Launches are quite essential, as the best fishing is distant twenty or twenty-five miles up the river, which fact also renders it necessary to start as early as 4 A.M. in order to get in a good day's sport. Tourists entering the republic are strongly advised to procure at either of the ticket offices before or after crossing the Rio Grande river, a sufficient amount of Mexican money to cover all expenses of the trip. Any reasonable sum of United States currency may be exchanged at the flat rate of two for one, and upon returning home whatever Mexican money is still on hand may be exchanged at the rate of 50 cents upon the dollar, and although—in exceptional cases—a small premium may be asked, it is only nominal, ½ to ¼ per cent., as a rule. Those who depend upon interior banks or money lenders for their requirements from time to time, are often charged as much as 5 or 10 per cent. for the accommodation.

There are two water routes by which the traveller may reach Tampico. One of these is an all-water trip from New York, while the other is by rail to New Orleans and then by boat to Tampico. Those who prefer an all-rail route should go via Laredo, thence over the lines of the Mexican National road. This is the best rail route for those leaving from the central states. Those from the Pacific coast will naturally enter the republic at El Paso, leaving the main line of the Mexican Central road at Aguas Calientes. Passengers via Laredo, however, will have the choice of two routes almost immediately after crossing the border. The first of these is to change at Monterey and after remaining there over night, to take the Mexican Central's train at 6-45 A.M., which lands the traveller at Tampico at 9-15 the same evening. The trip, however, is a long, dusty and tiresome ride through a country which for the greater part is only slightly above tidewater level, and at times uncomfortably warm. The alternative is to continue southward on the main line until San Luis Potosi is reached at 7-05 the following morning, and then take the Aguas Calientes-Tampico branch of the Mexican Central, which will bring the traveller to Tampico only half an hour later than via the first-named route. This latter course traverses a plateau of an average elevation of 5,000 feet, remarkably free from dust, and at a very agreeable temperature. While passing through the Tamasopo cañon it affords an opportunity of viewing at the same time as bold a piece of civil engineering as the world has ever seen, and a panorama of rugged scenic grandeur of almost indescribable beauty.

Leaving Cardenas at noon, the train enters a narrow defile in the mountains, and within a distance of twenty-five miles makes a descent of 3,500 feet, hugging the sides the while of a precipitous cañon which has a sheer drop of half a mile, and which winds in and out like a great spiral spring, now upon retaining walls of solid masonry, and now through a succession of tunnels, reminding one of so many great stitches taken in the mountainside as though to prevent the track from slipping off into what appears a bottomless chasm. At several points five different stretches of the same road may be seen at once, the rails glistening in the sun far below like parallel threads of silver. At one of the curves—and the entire road is practically built of curves—the upturned body of a passenger locomotive may be seen lodged against a tree which blocked its descent.

A few miles farther on the falls of the Micos are reached. Here the water dashes down the mountainside in a succession of cataracts several hundred yards long, then disappears, as if by magic, only to reappear at El Abra, twenty miles to the east, the river emerging from a cave far beneath the track upon the opposite side of the road, and almost immediately afterward lost to sight in a maze of palms and tropical vegetation.

The difference in cost between these two routes is only slight—probably nothing on through transportation. In scenic effect it is the difference between desert and paradise, and while landscape and fishing are not closely associated subjects, who is there who will not always choose the picturesque, everything else being equal.

The tourist from a distance who wishes to embrace the opportunity of visiting Mexico City will find it to his advantage to purchase either a round-trip ticket to Mexico City and return, and then take side line trips to the gulf; or to get a round-trip passage to San Antonio, from which point round-trip tickets to Mexico City and return, good for 90 days, are on sale at almost any time of the year for $26·10 gold.

Any of the above tickets are good for stop-over after crossing the border, regardless of the printed conditions upon the coupon at the starting point.

During the season of 1908, according to the register at the Southern Hotel, the number of tarpon landed measuring four feet and over was 1,535, and for the present season up to 1st, May the run was close to 1,600, but as there were still a number of anglers on hand at the time these statistics were compiled, it is quite likely that the total catch for the season will exceed 1,700 tarpon.

The largest individual record ever made in these waters was that of H. Tunstall-Moore of London, one of the most successful tarpon fishers in the world, he having landed 112 tarpon of the permissible size during a stay of eight weeks.

C. M. Powers, the well-known amateur shot of Decatur, Illinois, landed 50 tarpon in 18 days, this being his first experience at this sort of sport.

The largest tarpon ever captured at Tampico, of which any official record was kept, was that of H. W. Wilson, British consul at Tampico, and measured 7 feet 2½ inches and weighed 262 pounds. This specimen is now on exhibition in the museum in London.

The largest tarpon caught during the present season was by Arthur H. Einstein of Mexico City. This measured 6 feet 10 inches, and weighed 174 pounds.

During the season of 1908, the Countess of Wilton, who with a party of friends crossed the Atlantic in a private yacht, landed a tarpon, which was said to have measured 7 feet 4 inches.

One feature of the fishing at Tampico which will always have considerable weight with a certain class of anglers, is its adaptability to the use of the light tackle, conditions being ideal for that kind of sport. At Aransas Pass, Texas, on the other hand, a tarpon hooked with light tackle is captured or lost according to the whims of the fish itself in turning upstream or heading out into the gulf; but at Tampico no such idiosyncrasy upon the part of the tarpon need ever be taken into account. If at Aransas Pass a tarpon at the other end of featherweight tackle chooses to go out into the gulf, it may be stated as a positive certainty that it will go there, as with the strong out-going tide in its favour, there is nothing in the shape of a six-ounce tip and No. 9 line to prevent it, and the question, therefore, is not so much as to whether the fish will be landed or lost, as it is in choosing between the only two methods of getting rid of it with the least loss of tackle. One of these is to allow the fish to tow the boat out into the mouth of the jetties where the former will be bitten in two by some shark before it has gone 100 yards into the gulf; the other is to instruct your guide to turn about and row upstream, but this means that your line will part. In either event, however, the fish is lost.

At Tampico there is nothing of this sort to contend with. There are sharks, of course, but their numbers are few as compared with resorts where the fishing is closer to the gulf waters. The current of the river is sluggish enough to admit of still fishing instead of trolling, although this is a lazy sort of a game, until the fish is hooked. The river is deep enough and of sufficient width to allow the greatest freedom in the playing of the fish, and there in never any danger of being caught by a sudden squall.

All in all there is much to be said in favour of the fishing grounds of the country of the Aztecs.—H. M. Dyer in Recreation.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I was much interested in "Skene Dhu's" letter on fishing in the tributaries of the Giri, which appeared in your issue of 9th December last. On two or three days, when upstream showers had made the Giri itself like pea-soup, I fished one or other of the two upper tributaries near Khargaun. The stream above the village, though I saw no mahseer in it big enough to catch, was yet useful on account of the little barils which took a tiny fly, and were most useful as dead bait. On the days when the Giri was too thick even for paste, I used to catch half a dozen barils in this brook, and then repair to the pool where it joined the river. The run of clear water from the brook was sufficient to dilute the dirtiness of the main water at the junction, and one could therefore usually get a few runs on dead bait worked very slowly round in the eddy there.

The brook which joins the Giri from the right, two miles below the village, certainly at times holds mahseer of a couple of pounds. I got several half pounders with fly spoon, in this stream, and a few better fish up to 1¾ lb. on paste.

As I pointed out in a former letter, paste bait if presented on fine and suitably arranged tackle, is most deadly for mahseer. The equipment is a fine gut cast about three yards long with a single small hook. Twelve or fourteen inches from the hook is a single B.B. shot, and above that again, a diminutive cork float the size of a marble, which can be fixed at any desired point by means of a tapered bit of quill, which fits the hole through the cork. The line of course goes through this hole also. The float is set so that the hook and some of the gut will touch bottom. The killing way, is, after throwing in two or three paste pellets into an eddy, to drop in the baited hook, and allow it to circle quietly round with the current. It is a really sporting method of fishing, and is simply a modification of the usual way of bottom-fishing for grayling; mahseer will take paste offered in this way, when the water is clouded and unfit for spoon. Paste is however no use in mud-red water. I also believe much in the dead bait, worked very slowly round eddies and well at the bottom when the water is too clouded for spinning.

I used for this fishing a very long shanked hook with lead wire wound round it to give the necessary weight. The gut was passed with the help of a baiting needle, in at the vent of a small baril, and out at the mouth, and the hook drawn carefully in, until the point only remained outside the vent. It was necessary to give a mahseer plenty of time after he had taken the dead bait before striking. I was decidedly successful under adverse conditions, using the paste and dead bait tackles described alternately, the water at the time being hopelessly thick for either spoon or spun dead bait.

AFTER BEING FIRED.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

PRICES*:—DOUBLE BARRELLED RIFLE, best quality and finish, Royal Hammerless. 70 Guineas. B. Grade, 55 Guineas

BOMBAY SIXTH EXTRA MEETING.

(By Telegram.)

Monday, 24th January 1910.

THE postponed Sixth Extra Meeting was held this afternoon and considering it was a full working day, there was quite a good attendance. The betting was mostly open and the books offered good prices. Southall scored four wins for Mr. Ali bin Talib, and Brown also had two very fine wins on Rosewater and Shanwar. The latter and Ashroff gave us a pretty race in the Churchgate Plate, running together clear in front all the way. In the Nursery Plate Division I. Tajilmulook reversed the order of his last race with Asfundier. The former has improved and is a really classy pony. Valens was shut in. In the second division Salsit, who was nowhere last time, started a very hot favourite. Two absolute outsiders came home in Mahan in the Charni Road Plate and Karrar in the Little Nursery Plate II. The latter is a good new pony. Siriska who won the 1st Division of the Little Nursery, is the champion 13-3 and his previously reported sore shins must be incorrect. The new ponies made good all round timings. Results:—

An indescribably delightful sensation is procured by those who accustom themselves immediately before retiring to rest, to take a mouth douche of Odol. This preparation penetrates the cavities of the teeth and the whole mucous membrane of the mouth, and its refreshing and antiseptic properties are felt at every breath that is drawn—a most useful and agreeable antidote to a stale mouth in the morning.

LONDON, Friday, 7th January 1910.

MANCHESTER.

THE weather conditions at Castle Irwell on Friday last were quite agreeable for Manchester at the time of year, there being a total absence of the mist that has before now been such a spoil-sport at this particular venue. Moreover, taking into consideration the opposition fields were stronger numerically than they at one time promised to be. Results:—

BIRMINGHAM.

The good old-fashioned custom of holiday-making at this festive season obtains still more religiously in the North and Midlands than down South, and on the 3rd instant, with all Birmingham cutting the shop and voting for sport, the local element was strongly represented at Bromford Bridge. Monday racing is not popular with the Metropolitan division, and thus a mere handful made the journey from London. The going, despite plenty of rain of late, was, as it generally is, in capital order. The morning was unseasonably warm, and dull, but the afternoon proved cheerfully bright. Results:—

GATWICK.

As a rule we find sunny skies in the weald of Sussex, but the fog on Wednesday was universal, and not a glimpse of sunshine redeemed that landscape at Gatwick, the prevalent mist dominating the situation. The course, too, though well looked after, was heavy, but a welcome fillip to what but in a few instances has proved tame sport this winter was given by an improvement in the strength of the fields. FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

CHRISTMAS DAY, and therefore New Year's Day, falling on a Saturday the holiday programme of League matches has not thrown upon players anything like the additional strain entailed when those festivals occur upon any other day of the week. As a consequence, no doubt, the First League competition does not present any very different appearance from its aspect a fortnight ago. Variations in form there have been, of course, the great development of the struggle consisting in the achievement of the Bradford City who, a year ago last but one on the list, succeeded last Monday in dispossessing Blackburn Rovers of the lead. This proud place the Bradford team appeared certain to maintain on Saturday, as they were playing at home against Manchester United—a side beaten both on Christmas Day and on Boxing Day by Sheffield Wednesday. Bradford pressed a lot in the opening half but did not score, whereas the cupholders afterwards got through on two occasions. This defeat, coupled with Blackburn Rovers' victory over Tottenham Hotspur, places the Blackburn club once more at the head of affairs, while Bradford drop below Sheffield United and Notts County as well. The Sheffield team did badly at Christmas, losing to Aston Villa at both Bramhall-lane and Aston Park, but they regained some ground by beating Liverpool last Tuesday and brought their aggregate up to twenty-nine points yesterday with a victory over Middlesbrough. The result of the holiday programme is thus to leave Blackburn Rovers, Sheffield United, Notts County, and Bradford in almost similar positions to those they occupied on the eve of Christmas. Indeed the only marked change is the advance of Aston Villa, who with their two wins against Sheffield United and another at Nottingham yesterday have now nearly as good a record as Bradford.

Except for the performance of Tottenham Hotspur in twice drawing at 2 goals all with Nottingham Forest and the victory of Chelsea over Newcastle United in the presence of a tremendous gathering at Stamford Bridge, the London clubs accomplished nothing of great note at Christmas and on the 1st instant, playing away from home, all three were defeated. Tottenham Hotspur at Blackburn had a goal registered against them in each half, and failed to make any effective response, despite the fact that on the same ground a week earlier Preston North End—notoriously a poor side in out matches—had held their own. The Rovers not having sustained defeat at Ewood Park this season, it was, however, too much to expect that the honour of robbing the Blackburn club of their record would fall to Tottenham, who have yet to gain their first victory away from home. The Arsenal engaging at Liverpool in the return contest to that which on Boxing Day resulted in a draw of 1 goal each, made a creditable fight up to the interval, but in the end lost by 5 to 1. By far the best achievement was that of Chelsea, who, though hard pressed for nearly the whole of the opening half at Newcastle, put forth such a stubborn defence that only six minutes of the game remained when Shepherd, of Newcastle, scored the one goal the match produced. The Chelsea backs came through a trying ordeal with flying colours, but the work of the forward line proved very disappointing. Happily for the Arsenal and Tottenham, both of whom are dangerously near the bottom of the list, Middlesbrough, as well as Bolton, had to admit a reverse.

Idle during the holiday season, Crystal Palace kept their lead in the Southern League until last Saturday when Queen's Park Rangers, who had previously missed an excellent opportunity by losing to Coventry City, went to the front. Crystal Palace also did a good performance in drawing at Bristol with the Rovers, but Southampton, who were on terms with the leaders, lost at Exeter, and Swindon, by defeating Coventry City, join the Rangers and the Palace at the head of the competition. All three teams have thirty-two points, and the order of merit is decided by the number of games played. Swindon accomplished a particularly fine performance in beating the Coventry team, who had gained six consecutive victories. Swindon have the most brilliant set of forwards in the League, and their goal average is only inferior to that of Crystal Palace, who all through the season have been greatly indebted to their defence. Of the four leading clubs, each playing away from home yesterday, Southampton alone lost. They have done very well recently, and, with Brighton and Hove Albion, are near enough to cause serious trouble to the leaders at any time. Croydon Common steadily improve, and have left Reading in a hopeless position at the bottom of the contest.

The lead that Glossop had obtained during Christmas time in the Second Division of the League was seriously spoilt when at Oldham, in the return match with Oldham Athletic, they suffered their third defeat of the season. While that was happening Derby County, Manchester City, and Hull City all won their matches, and so crept up nearer to the first club in the competition. Leicester Fosse had not a match, and remained the same. The struggle now is between Glossop, Derby County, and Manchester City, each of whom have fulfilled twenty engagements, while only a point separates each club from the other in the order named. Hull City equal Manchester City on points, but have taken part in two more games, and their position is nothing like so strong as that of the first three teams. Fulham, lacking the services of Skene, their goalkeeper suffered defeat at Derby, and while fairly well up in the table they are, for the time being, out of the running for one of the first two places.

NEWCASTLE UNITED vs. CHELSEA.—This match at Newcastle was set apart for the benefit of McCracken, and with the weather fine there were fully 30,000 people present at the start. Newcastle United played fine spirited football at the start, and for a long time kept Chelsea penned in their own half. Chelsea were weak in attack, and with the half backs unable to hold the opposing front line in check a heavy responsibility was thrown upon the backs. Happily for the side they proved equal to the demands made upon them in the opening half. Any number of good shots were sent in by the United's forwards, but not one of them took effect, and at the interval nothing had been scored. After change of ends Chelsea improved, and the Newcastle attacks were not so dangerous as before. On one occasion Rutherford shot through, but the point was disallowed for offside. Newcastle were very weak in front of goal, and Shepherd missed a splendid chance. Six minutes from the finish, however, Shepherd scored, and as Chelsea were unable to respond Newcastle United won by one goal to none. Newcastle United, 1; Chelsea, 0.

BLACKBURN ROVERS vs. TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR.—For this match at Ewood Park with Tottenham Hotspur the Blackburn Rovers were still without their captain and full-back, Robert Crompton, but otherwise they were at full strength, Cameron resuming his place at centre-forward. Tottenham Hotspur also had a representative side in the field. When the game began there were about 15,000 people present. From the outset both sides played with plenty of dash, and there were many exciting attacks on each goal. Both defences, however, did well, the shooting on both sides being rather erratic, nothing was scored until ten minutes from the interval, when Cameron got through for the Rovers. Before this R. Steel, of Tottenham, left the field injured. After the change of ends R. Steel was able to resume his place in the Tottenham side. As in the first half, the game was carried on at a fast pace, and the feature of the play was the fine work of the goalkeepers. With a shot that gave Joyce no chance Aitkenhead scored a second goal for the Rovers. Later on Joyce was hurt in stopping a shot by Cameron. Blackburn Rovers, 2; Tottenham Hotspur, 0.

LIVERPOOL vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—In meeting Woolwich Arsenal at Anfield, Liverpool again had the help of Hardy, their famous goalkeeper, but they lacked the services of Orr and Goddard. Dull weather prevailed, but when play began there were about 20,000 people present. Some very fast and interesting play was seen in the early stages and each side quickly obtained a goal—Liverpool through Parkinson and Woolwich Arsenal through Neave. Even play followed, but then Parkinson again gave Liverpool the lead. However, the Arsenal forwards showed for a time fine form, and Hardy in goal was frequently severely tested. Rogers, of Liverpool, had to retire owing to an injury, but at the interval the home side still led by 2 goals to 1. After the restart Rogers and Robinson, who had also retired, returned. Liverpool enjoyed the bulk of the play, and Bowyer scored their third goal. A little later the same player added a fourth, while Parkinson from a penalty put on a fifth, thus enabling Liverpool, to win by 5 goals to 1. The game finished in a thick fog. Liverpool, 5; Woolwich Arsenal, 1.

DERBY COUNTY vs. FULHAM.—The match at Derby between these clubs was played under unfavourable conditions, the ground being so heavy as to render accurate football a matter of considerable difficulty. Eight thousand people saw the game. In a scrambling first half Derby County scored the only goal, Barnes putting the ball through with a long shot. Afterwards the game went more in favour of Derby County, and Bauchop and Bentley added goals. Near the close Brown scored for Fulham, the ball glancing in off one of the uprights. Thus Derby County won by 3 goals to 1. Derby County, 3; Fulham, 1.

BURNLEY vs. CLAPTON ORIENT.—Miserable conditions prevailed at Burnley for this match, rain falling during the time the game was in progress, while the ground was terribly soft and slippery. There were five thousand people present. In the first half the game was stubbornly contested, and at times roughness was introduced into the play. Morley scored for Burnley early in the game, and at half-time the home side led by 1 goal to nil. Subsequently Clapton Orient pressed hard, but they could not score. Green added another goal for Burnley, a claim for "hands" being disallowed. Burnley thus won by 2 goals to 0. Burnley, 2; Clapton Orient, 0.

RUGBY RULES

WALES vs. FRANCE.—Despite the decisive nature of the victories achieved by the Welshmen on the two previous occasions of Wales meeting France at the Rugby game, the Principality placed their full strength in the field at Swansea on the 1st instant. About 2,000 people gathered to witness the contest. Despite a drizzling rain the ground was in fair condition. No change took place in the Welsh fifteen but the French team underwent several alterations. The Welshmen scored in the first minute, going off with a big rush, which resulted in a try by Gibbs, Bancroft converting. Quick to respond, the Frenchmen went away and Laffitte gained a try, the place-kick failing. Ivor Morgan next ran in for Wales, but the point was not improved. Following upon this eventful opening, the home side, taking matters rather easily, the Frenchmen held their own until a fine kick by Trew carried the play to the visitors' quarters. Gradually the visitors worked their way down, and Wales being penalised for legs up. Meurath dropped a goal for France. Roused by this reverse the Welshmen went to work more steadily, and Gibbs, taking a pass from Owen, beat all opposition and scored a try, which Bancroft converted. After some pressure by France, Wales got back to midfield, where a series of scrummages took place. Again the home team assumed the upper hand, several well-directed kicks by Bancroft gaining ground. Getting the ball from a scrummage, Owen made an opening for Trew, the latter passing to Gibbs, who, however, was forced into touch. Again the Frenchmen attacked, but were penalised for offside, Bancroft kicking a goal. Meurath later on relieved his side, and once more the visitors pressed. Jones, however, intercepting, ran down, only to pass forward when almost on the line. Hard pressed the Frenchmen at length broke away for Meurath to score—Meurath converting. This point, however, was speedily neutralised by Bancroft placing a goal from Maddocks' try. Half-time score:—

Wales ...	...4 goals (1 penalty) 1 try
France ...	... 3 goals (2 penalties) 1 try

On resuming play ruled fairly even until capital work by Burgin and Lane took the game almost on to the Welsh line. Trew, however, relieved the pressure and Wales were awarded a free kick, from which Bancroft gained little ground. Ivor Morgan crossed the French line after a forward rush, but the point was disallowed and a little later Bancroft failed in an attempt to drop a goal. For a time the visitors defended really well, but at length Gibbs ran in, Bancroft placing a goal. Later on the Welsh combination told very strongly. Maddocks added a try, which was not improved, but breaking away from a scrummage Ivor Morgan scored, Bancroft converting. Then, in quick succession, Trew, J. P. Jones, and Gronow crossed the visitors' line and Bancroft successfully undertaking all three place-kicks, the game ended in a victory for Wales by 49 points to 14.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

SOMERSET vs. CORNWALL.—Somerset, Cornwall, and Gloucestershire having tied for first place, it was necessary for the three counties to reply. The first of the series took place at Taunton, and though rain was falling the match attracted about four thousand spectators. Several changes were made in each side. The first half went all in favour of Somerset; within five minutes Coates scored for them, later Hancock also crossed the Cornwall line, and before half time Coates went over again, Somerset leading at half time by three tries to nothing. After changing ends Somerset held the upper hand, though not to the extent as in the first half. Afterwards Cornwall attacked and Solomon dropped a goal. In the end Somerset won by 9 points to 4. Somerset, 3 tries; Cornwall, 1 dropped goal.

STREATHAM vs. LONDON WELSH.—Such a narrow victory as 8 points to 3 no doubt surprised the London Welsh, who were, however, not at their best strength, for Maddocks and G. L. Evans were absent. Streatham, indeed, played splendidly, and in defence were the better side, but two tries scored by P. L. Lloyd and T. P. Lloyd, the latter being converted, was a score which they could not beat. The Welshmen led by these points at half-time, after having had more of the play, but so well did the whole Streatham team play, and principally owing to great efforts by Smith and Pallister, that the visitors were kept out altogether in the second part. Smith and Pallister brought off a combined run, which led eventually to Rowe getting over with Streatham's only try. This could not be improved, and the Welsh thus won by a goal and a try to a try, which score about represented the run of the play. Though Lloyd did well for the visitors, Smith's play at half-back for the home team was the outstanding feature of the match. Welsh, 1 goal 1 try; Streatham, 1 try.

CATFORD BRIDGE vs. GUY'S HOSPITAL.—With the advantage of playing at home on their new ground at Bellingham, Catford Bridge gave Guy's Hospital, who were not quite at full strength, an unexpectedly good game. Indeed, but for the weak kicking of the home backs, which in the second part had the effect of running their forwards off their legs, they might have won. As it was, on the heavy turf their forwards showed to fine advantage in footwork, and fairly outplayed the Hospital forwards during the first half, with the result that they gained a lead of 6 points to nil through a try by Brown and a penalty goal by F. Hilder. After the change of ends, when Catford's forwards though playing pluckily were palpably tiring, the Guy's backs asserted themselves. First Stringer dropped a magnificent goal and then Roeham secured a try. Stokes converted, and thus the visitors having scored a placed goal and a dropped goal to a penalty goal and a try won by 9 points to 6. Guy's 2 goals (1 dropped); Catford, 1 penalty goal 1 try.

BECKENHAM vs. LONDON IRISH.—At Beckenham the home team won by two goals to one penalty goal and two tries. The Irish played thirteen men throughout, and Beckenham also had a man short. Very little good play was seen during the opening half, play for the most part being with the forwards. Pearce opened the scoring for the home side, and Christopher added the points; whilst Moran scored for the Irish after the Beckenham full-back had failed to get rid of the ball. At the interval Beckenham held a lead of one point, but the Irish quickly took the lead on resuming, Macintosh being successful with a capital penalty kick. The game improved after this, and with the Irish playing without a full-back Cree had an easy run through from Hardinge to goal. O'Grady, after a fine forward rush, got in for the Irish near the posts, but from a very easy position Macintosh failed to convert. Beckenham, 2 goals; Irish, 1 penalty goal 2 tries.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—Although the Scotsmen had many of their well-known players away they beat the Nomads, at Richmond, very easily. On both sides the forwards played well, but the Scottish were much the stronger behind the scrum, Bruce Lockhart at half and MacPhearson at three-quarter playing particularly well for them. In the opening half of the game, which was always largely in favour of the Scotsmen, MacPhearson, Harrison, and Kinross gained tries for them, but Lockhart failed with each of the place kicks. The Nomads were rarely dangerous but from one passing run by their backs Hibbert got in and Haslam kicked the goal. Directly after changing ends Barkley scored again for the visitors, and again Haslam placed the goal, but from this point they were always well beaten. MacPhearson ran in with three further tries against them and Manilaws gained another, and although all the place kicks failed the London Scottish won the match by 21 points to 10. Scottish, 7 tries; Nomads, 2 goals.

GOLF

AMERICAN PROFESSIONALS VISITING ENGLAND.—The visit to England of the British professionals who are attached to American clubs is certain to stimulate interest at a dull period of the golfing year. Gilbert Nicholls (Wilmington) has reached this country, and is residing with relatives in Kent; Isaac Mackie (Foxhills) will visit his brother at Barnehurst, and then proceed to Elie, Fifeshire; Alec Smith (Wykagyl), the American champion of 1906, who last visited this country in 1907 and played in the open championship at Hoylake, is due on 16th January and, after a brief stay in England, will proceed to Carnoustie, Forfarshire; while H. H. Barker (Garden City), Irish open champion 1906 and Yorkshire amateur champion 1904 and 1906, who is acting as organising secretary, David Hunter (Essex County), and James Mardin (Cavan) are all expected to reach this country within the next few weeks. Hunter will visit his old haunts at Prestwich and make specifications of the holes with a view to reproducing them at Essex County, while Smith is on a similar mission. The match against the leading English professionals has been fixed to take place on 16th February on one of the London suburban courses.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

HOUNDS proved fair gluttons for work last Bye day when the Meet was at the Cross Roads on the melon ground. It was a cool morning following the blizzard of the day before which, however, did not suffice to dry the ground to spoil scent. A field of over seventy moved off with the first streaks of daylight to the Sahar Hill coverts, and on arrival were at once away on rather a twisting line into Bomanwadi Valley. As the Tulsi main was reached there was some rough going through the nullah and towards Coorla Creek. Turning in Calrena direction we meet better country and some smart work follows, ending in the disposal of the jack in the open plains.

There was a doubt about scent holding when a second was found in the woods off Sahar village, but on reaching the Backwater hounds were more confident. A sharp burst along the grass lands forced the quarry to take to the water. As he does so, he has very little to spare, but gains a bit of a lead the other

This Rifle is designed to meet the requirements of those Sportsmen who require a useful all-round weapon; handy and flat enough for Hill Shooting, yet with sufficient power for all ordinary jungle work.

As Officers, both Civil and Military, are constantly being transferred from one part of India to another the advantage of a rifle equally useful in both hills and plains is very obvious particularly so to the sportsman of moderate means.

It is now admitted that the Rimless Cartridge with improved form of clip loading is more suitable for magazine rifles than the original cartridge with rim, because, permitting of perfect loading and extraction the risk of jamming is eliminated.

The Cartridges, moreover, occupy less space, thus enabling the magazine to lie flush. Can be used as a single loader if desired.

The Rifle is handy and well balanced, and as the weight is approximately but 8lbs., no undue fatigue need be experienced should it be necessary to carry it for any length of time.

All Rifles are stocked with pistol hand, are sighted up to 300 yards, and guaranteed accurate.

Cartridges can be obtained from any of the leading Indian Gun Makers.

side, making for the hills. He reaches Hog's Back Hill but is not allowed to rest, and sinking into the plains makes for Horse Shoe Valley. Here he climbs one of the hills but is routed out of the undergrowth and killed in an open space as he descends the hill.

It was just as well we had a slack day on Tuesday after the hard time horses and hounds have had of late. We met at the Chuckla woods, the morning being piercingly cold. No luck here, a move was made to the Mango Tope from which a jack was ousted, making over a wooded hill past Stacey's Bank. From here scent was very catchy and progress slow as we were led into the Marble Valley, up the hill and back much the same way. On reaching the Tope again, however, scent was lost once and for all.

This uneventful morning was amply made up for on Thursday, a rather dark morning but cool and damp. Scent proved very strong and a field of quite fifty enjoyed two fast runs. Meeting at the Club, we made a move across to the Paria coverts and were on almost at once over rather dangerous ground, it being still dark, in a line for Caleona Passing Sahar the jack makes for the Backwater and turns right handed for Coorla Creek. As he crosses the intervening road he is in full view making for the broken country near the quarries. Bustled out of here, however, he is run into before reaching the Creek Harking back to Sahar, hounds are again put to work and we have not long to wait as they burst away to where the Andheri road and water main run together. Passing a well, they cross the road and enter Marole Valley taking shortly to the hills. Turning sharp to the right, we head for Vehar Lake over safe going at a great pace. The woods being reached are entered and a good run follows along the hills. It is on this hill-side that hounds eventually run up to hime and roll him over after more than half an hour's run. The brush went to Mrs. Kirby, the first time out since her recent accident.

OLD CLIFF.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

SUNDAY the 23rd instant saw hounds at the 7th milestone Poonamallee Road. No rain having fallen it has been found impossible on account of hounds feet to do more than one day a week. As usual at this fixture it was some little time before we found, but when we did in a casuarina wood near Reddipalaiyam it was, as is also usual, a good jack who though he ringed a bit, disdained to hang in cover. Going away at the northern end of Reddipalaiyam Wood he ran a big ring back to the same cover and going straight through it went away again in an easterly direction for Mogapper, travelling several woods en route, hounds running through them without a hover. Reaching the big Mogapper wood they were for a few moments at fault, but a holloa on the far side from the first whip, who had slipped round just in time to see him make his departure again, soon put them right and away we went best pace over the open pointing for the covers at the 6th mile on the Poonamallee Road. Changing his mind before he reached them our jack turned sharp back and hounds getting a view as he made his turn raced up to within 20 yards of him before he again gained the shelter of Mogapper wood. He was quickly away again at the northern end of the wood, having gained a good bit on hounds and here, getting on to the dry cut paddy fields, hounds threw up after carrying the line a few hundred yards from cover. A long circular cast finally hit it off again, but by this time it was very cold, and after carrying it slowly for another mile they had finally to give it up. A real good hunting run of 50 minutes going all the time and part of it quite fast. A draw towards home resulted in nothing more being done.

FINAL.

RIFLE BRIGADE "A" TEAM vs. "B" TEAM.—A small gathering of spectators witnessed the final game in the tournament on the 19th inst. The weather was perfect, the ground in excellent conditon and the game a fast and hard hitting one. It was well fought from start to finish, Captains Todd and Harrison and Mr. Scott being most conspicuous for their respective sides. At the conclusion of the game the trophy was presented to the winners with four small cups by Mrs. Sinclair.

First Chukker.—Up and down play, both goals being visited in turn till "B" team got the ball and Scott and Harrison taking it down, the latter drew first blood. Level play closed the chukker.

Second Chukker.—"B" team kept up the attack till Todd cleared and play was taken to midfield, where a foul was given against "B." The penalty hit was not improved upon and play again settled down in midfield. No score.

Third Chukker.—"A" team assumed the offensive and several shots were taken at "a's" goal. Two of these hit the goal post and returned into play. Nothing was scored.

Fourth Chukker.—"B" team rushed down and scored a goal through Scott. Up and down play followed and then a run was made by "A" team and Drummond put the ball through. Score: "B" 2 goals, "A" 1 goal.

Fifth Chukker.—"B" pressed and a shot by Harrison missed by inches. "A" team then rushed it down but their final effort also went wide and play subsequently ruled all over the ground till "B" team again got possession and Scott scored another goal. "A" attacked for the rest of the period but could not add to their score.

Sixth Chukker.—"B" team took the ball to their opponents' territory but Todd cleared and carrying it on passed to Railston, who scored neatly. "B" were next conspicuous and Harrison getting possession hit a goal. Mid field play followed and then "A" rushed down again, but their shot went wide and time was called with the score: "B" team 4 goals, "A" team 2 goals. Teams:—

A YOUNG couple were spending their holidays in North Wales, and found themselves one day in a well-known town. They climbed the High-street to the top of the hill, and approached the country. Eager for information as to their whereabouts, the lady accosted a grave, spectacled schoolboy. "What road is this?" she asked. "It is not a road. It is Lovelane," the boy replied. "Where does it lead to?" she inquired. To her utter confusion and that of her companion, he answered, seriously. "To the asylum."

Racing.

THE CHAMPION SIRE.

ST. SIMON'S WORLD-WIDE INFLUENCE.

IT is an incontrovertible fact that there is not a country in the world in which the all-prevailing blood of the "prince of stallions"—St. Simon—has not exerted a great influence, and in the history of racing everywhere no name occupies so prominent a place as that of St. Simon. Most people are aware that it is frequently stated that the stock of the Duke of Portland's immortal son of Galopin and St. Angela, by King Tom, have "won over half a million of money in stakes." Verification of this bold assertion is only to be obtained at the cost of much labour and the expenditure of a lot of time, to say nothing of the possession of almost unlimited patience. As a matter of absolute fact, however, this sweeping statement underestimates the actual figures, for the total of half-a-million was exceeded four years ago, and up to the conclusion of the last racing season in November the sons and daughters of St. Simon had won the record sum of £550,144, an amount no other stallion has ever approached.

Of course, the two year olds by St. Simon, now in training, so far as we are aware, are his last produce, and although some of them, in particular the colt out of Acunha, are well entered, we are afraid that it will not be possible for St. Simon in the future to be regarded as the sire of the winners of £600,000 in stakes. What he has already attained, and will still continue to accomplish, in the second generation, it is impossible to calculate. Nevertheless, so far as has been possible, we have endeavoured to compile careful details of the winning produce of the sons of St. Simon, not only in Great Britain and Europe, but in all parts of the world, and so far as can be gathered, as will be seen from the following, the stock of St. Simon stallions in 1909 practically won £400,000.

ENGLAND FRANCE, AND GERMANY.

In England last season was the second occasion only during the last twenty years in which St. Simon, or one of his sons, failed to finish in the first three positions in the winning stallions list. The best in 1909 were Persimmon, fifth; St. Frusquin, seventh; and Desmond, ninth. Nevertheless, 34 sons of St. Simon sired the winners of 355 flat races, of an aggregate value of £121,277, and to get some adequate idea of what these figures represent it is only necessary to state that this enormous sum is more than one fourth of the total amount won in stakes during last season. The winnings of the produce of the sire St. Simon horses mentioned above ran into upwards of £10,000, whilst four others got the winner of more than half that amount.

We believe we are correct in stating that in France the actual leader in the stallions list last season was a son of St. Simon, viz., Rabelais, the Goodwood Cup winner of 1903, and whose purchase price was 8,000gs. In 1909, when his oldest produce were only three years of age, he sired the winners of no fewer than 35 races, inclusive of the Grand Prix de Paris Stakes, worth £35,100. In close attendance to Rabelais is Childwick, whose stock captured £27,000. The record of St. Simon stallions in France, in flat races only, might be summarised thus: Races won 205; stakes won, £104,200. Moreover, it is noteworthy that in the statistics just published of the jumping sires in France, 1909, three of the first five stallions are sons of St. Simon, namely, the leader, St. Damien, with £15,440; St. Brie, £10,350; and Lauzun, £9,393. Also occupying high positions are Childwick, with £4,620, and St. Frusquin, with 77,875 francs, or roughly, £3,115.

In Germany we find 30 St. Simon horses had winning stock in 1909, and altogether the earnings of their progeny, in all races, amounted to £47,432, Florizel II. finishing fifth, and Manners seventh in the sires' list, which was headed by Ard Patrick, a grandson of St. Simon. Pekin and Petros, who have perhaps fallen a little out of mind in this country, have both good records, their figures being £4,320 and £3,776 respectively. Curiously enough, the own brothers, Persimmon, Florizel II. (referred to above), and Diamond Jubilee, all figure in the German sires' list, as they also do in the French list, which tends to show the demand that exists on the Continent for their stock.

AUSTRALASIA AND SOUTH AFRICA.

During the last fifteen years a large number of St. Simon horses have been exported to Australasia, and, indeed Bill of Portland proved so successful that he was actually brought back to this country at a cost of something like 5,000gs. In the statistics of the last Australian season of the first eight horses in the winning stallions list no fewer than three are sons of St. Simon. In addition there were two grandsons (both by Bill of Portland), whilst the leader is Grafton, son of Galopin. Positano (out of Ponza, half-sister to Laveno, Orvieto, etc.,) occupied third position with £12,266. Simmer (out of the St. Leger winner, Dutch Oven) is fifth with £8,329, the proceeds of 78 races. Soult actually heads the sires' list in New Zealand with £5,604. Hast Brion got the winners of 54 races and £3,710. Other St. Simon horses who have not scored quite so many successes as those quoted are Phoebus Apollo, San Francisco (brother to St. Frusquin), and Diplomat (brother to Manners), Simile, and Louis XIII. Casting the figures we find that the progeny of St. Simon sires in Australasia won 243 races and £35,665 in stakes.

Turning to the last available statistics of South African racing we discover that St. Simon was well to the fore, for 21 of his sons had winning stock who collectively took 105 races worth £14,884. The best son of St. Simon apparently was imported, Leisure Hour, who finished a very good third in the sires' list.

STATISTICS FROM OTHER COUNTRIES.

Austria-Hungary.—Reference cannot be made to the complete figures for these countries, but in the statistics of the fourteen leading stallions, which appeared in the Sporting Life a week or so ago, were the names of four sons of St. Simon—viz., Danure, £8,328; Raeburn, £7,158; Matchbox, £4,831; and St. Mackon, £3,240, which gives a total of £25,057. There must, however, have been others, and no mistake could be made if the round figure of £25,000 is reckoned as the amount won in Austria-Hungary last season by the stock of St. Simon sires.

In Belgium, fourth and fifth horses in the few details of the leading sires that have been issued, were Boniface, £6,136, and Master of the Horse, £4,677—total £10,813, to say nothing of other "St. Simons" represented by only one or two winners. There has just appeared a note to the effect that Sardar (by St. Simon) has a winner in Russia of £2,500, but in all probability he does not stand alone, for Brisme and St. Ignatius are at the stud in the Czar's dominion. The same son of St. Simon, by the way, it is stated heads the winning stallions list in the little-known country of Roumania, where the progeny of St. Simon horses won nearly 100,000fr. (£4,000), chiefly through Collar and Persimmon.

It is not at all easy to properly obtain the figures for the United States and Canada, to which countries many St. Simon horses have been exported, and although there has not yet been a really great one amongst them for some obscure reason, they have not enjoyed that conspicuous success they have had in practically every other country in the world—South America, perhaps, excepted. In regard to the last named, however, previous to the last few years the sons of St. Simon in the Argentine could have been counted upon the fingers of one hand. This country will, no doubt, be brought into line with the rest of the world during the course of the next year or two, when the high-priced produce of Diamond Jubilee and Pietermaritzburg are old enough to race, for there are so many valuable stakes to be won at Buenos Ayres and elsewhere. Amongst the leaders of the sires in South America, however, are to be found a couple of St. Simon horses in Simonside and Pietermaritzburg, whose winnings together amount to 152,530 pesos, or about £15,300.

In regard to the last mentioned defunct stallion, it should be stated that he has an excellent winning representative out of a mare imported a year or so prior to the son of St. Simon and Sea Air. The "Thoroughbred Record," Kentucky, publishes a list of the chief winning stallions in the United States, but as this is only carried down to the twentieth place it is not of much value for our present purpose. The name of St. Simon is found in it, for the stock of Planudes (from the Oaks winner, Lonely) have captured 25,165 dollars in 1909. Several scions of "the prince of stallions" are also included amongst the series of two-year-old winners in 1909, giving a total of close upon £1,000. It should, therefore, be well within the mark in estimating that St. Simon horses in U.S.A. sired the winners of at least £10,000 in 1909.

To gain some idea of what the foregoing figures really represent, it may be worth while summarising them thus:—

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

ENGLISH vs. INDIAN SCHOOLS.—The annual match was played in the Eden Gardens on the 22nd and 23rd instant, the English Schools winning by 18 runs. S. A. White and H. L. Riley were unable to play for the English Schools, their places being taken by G. Turnbull and T. C. Stafford, while Prince Hitendra played for the Indian Schools in place of E. Templeton, who was unable to get away from his work. The English schools won the toss and elected to bat, Turnbull and Given-Wilson going in first. The latter was bowled with the score at 26, Stafford and Fellowes could only make 2 each and Turnbull left with the total at 48. Craik then came in and with Shallow carried the score to 105. Shallow made 16 when he was bowled; Lee followed him with 15 to his credit and Bocquet was Craik's next partner. With the score at 179 Craik was caught by Prince Hitendra after playing a sound innings of 59. Stumps were then drawn for the day. Continuing their innings on Sunday, the English Schools carried their total to 192 before they were all out. Bocquet added 10 to his over-night score, Frost and Quin failed to score, Burnett made 4; and there were 32 Extras. Wilmott bowled with signal success taking nine wickets for 33 runs.

Prince Hitendra and McCready opened the Indian Schools innings: the former was bowled for 4, Cody came in next but was sent back after contributing 6. Quiterio and McCready were next in partnership and both playing soundly carried the score from 58 to 101 when McCready was caught. 5 runs later Quiterio was stumped by Frost. Wilmott and Rosser made 18 and 19 respectively, Bajana only contributed 4 and Prince Victor was out for 10, the others making 15 between them. The innings closed for 174 the English Schools winning as stated. Burnett took 6 wickets for 46 and Bocquet 2 for 29. Score:—

WINCHESTER

REPEATING HUNTING RIFLES ARE RELIABLE

Reliability, strength and accuracy are the cardinal virtues in a hunting rifle. Success and safety often hinge upon them in big game shooting. Winchester rifles possess these virtues to the fullest extent, all models being made of high grade material and inspected with great care and exactness. They shoot accurately, are positive and certain in action, graceful in outline, easy to operate, and, considering their many good qualities, low in price. They are made in all desirable calibers, weights and styles, and for every rifle a Winchester cartridge is made. Winchester Rifles and Cartridges, the Red W Brand always gives satisfaction.

CALCUTTA vs. NATTORE.—The third match between these teams was played at Ballygunge on Sunday, Nattore winning once again this time by over 200 runs. Batting first they compiled 276 for 6 wickets and declared their innings closed. Ogad Sanker was not out 107, compiled without a chance, while Date's 77 was also nicely put together. Calcutta were all at sea with the bowling of Umrigar and Date. The former took six wickets for 33 runs and Date four for 24, the innings closing for 71. Woodhouse 22 not out was top scorer, and Ernthausen 12 the only other to reach double figures. Score:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. RANGERS.—For the second time this season, Ballygunge suffered defeat at the hands of the Rangers, the return match, played on the ground of the latter on Saturday last, resulting in a win for the home team by 43 runs and 5 wickets. Neither side was at anything like full strength, the "Schools" match in the Eden Gardens depriving both teams of several regular members, but Ballygunge should have done better than they did, both their batting and bowling being distinctly weak; they had not the best of luck, but were fairly and squarely beaten by a better team.

The Rangers won the toss and sent their visitors in, but the usual Ballygunge bad start was made, and from it, they never recovered. Horncastle and Whiteley were both out with the score at 7, and of the rest, Cowdrey with 27, Coulthard with 19, and Sayres with 17, alone made anything of a show; G. Hodges certainly bowled well, but the batting was bad.

On going in, the Rangers early lost A. Hodges and Shuldham, but G. Hodges and Chandler soon put the issue beyond doubt, the latter hitting cleanly and well; he should have been caught at slip off Sayres' second ball, but the fieldsman was caught napping, and after that he gave no further chance, before he was well taken at short slip by Badham for a hard hit 53. Neither Lawton nor Nugent did much, but they stopped while G. Hodges scored, the latter being still undefeated, when time was called, with a stylish 57 to his credit. It was quite his day out, as in addition to his excellent innings, he took six of the Ballygunge wickets for 53 runs. The visitors bowling lacked sting, the ground being too small for more than one of those tried. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. HOWRAH UNITED.—Played at Ballygunge on Sunday last, the home team winning easily by 131 runs.

For Ballygunge Skinner was top scorer with a terrific 99, in which were 17 fours, five of them off one over of Knight's; Manders contributed a really good 37, and Hemingway and G. H. Tredaway 21 and 19 not out, respectively, the two latter putting on 57 runs for the last wicket. Howrah could not do much against the Ballygunge attack, the whole side being out for 143, Smith and Rollins being top scorers with 38 and 21. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE "A" vs. BARRACKPORE.—Ballygunge "A" had out anything but a strong team for their match at Barrackpore on Sunday last, but they just managed to pull it off after the game appeared to be lost, a result for which they have mainly to thank Whiteley who, at a most critical time, knocked up a most valuable 66; he was certainly lucky, being missed before he had scored, and again later on, before the match was lost and won, but chances are inseparable from such a hard hit innings as his.

Barrackpore won the toss, and decided to go in, but they made a bad start, Durham being bowled by the second ball of the match; However, E. G. Howlett, who followed, promptly began to lay about him in splendid style, and was not got rid of until he had made 41. His innings was a really brilliant one, and apart from a difficult chance, high up in the slips, was without fault, quite the best of the day. Of the others, Hippolette, Stowell and Whitworth did best, but the innings only realised 117, Low getting 5 wickets for 50 and Barrett 4 for 37.

When Ballygunge went in, a shocking exhibition of batting was seen, Low being the only one to play with any confidence at all until Whiteley joined him, and these two certainly made things look more cheerful. Low was the first to leave, well caught at point by Stephen, and again the visitors' troubles commenced; Wright and Smith did nothing. MacDowell was given "run out"—a very doubtful decision—and Bletsoe who stopped in for some time, though he failed to score, was bowled by E. G. Howlett, when 13 were still wanted to win. J. G. A. Stephen, however, was equal to the occasion and kept his end up while Whiteley hit off the necessary runs, the home total being passed with 2 wickets in hand.

E. G. Howlett followed up his brilliant batting by some effective bowling his 4 wickets being obtained very cheaply. Scores:—

When only a junior lieutenant, Lord Charles Beresford served under a first lieutenant who was a bit of a martinet. The latter had ordered that no grog or coffee must be made after eight o'clock in the evening. One cold night young Charlie B." wanted a cup of coffee, and asked the quartermaster for hot water for this purpose. But in vain. So Beresford calmly went up on the bridge, and saluting the commander on duty said: "It's cold up here, sir. May I bring you a cup of coffee?" The commander readily consented, and, secure in his permission, the astute junior lieutenant made the coffee and had a cup himself.

CALCUTTA LADIES' GOLF CLUB.

ALLIED PAIRS.—This competition for two prizes presented by Mrs. T. P. Stewart, 18 holes over the Ladies' course by medal play, was concluded on the 24th instant. Ladies received half their handicaps and their partners played from scratch. Eighteen couples returned cards in the qualifying round, Mr. and Mrs. Drimmie coming out on top with 66 net and three couples sending in 67. These three played off the tie, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew qualifying to meet Mr. and Mrs. Drimmie in the final by match play. This was decided on Monday and won by Mr. and Mrs. Drimmie. Scores:—

AN INLAND LINKS.

GOLF is now so all popular, that every town throughout the length and breadth of Britain must have its links. We cannot all of us live by the seaside, and so thousands of ardent golfers must be content with such courses as can be devised on grass and moorland far from the ocean. The ancient city of York began its golf on the Knavesmire, that grassy plain so long dedicated by a horse loving county to its races.

Room for a nine hole course was found in a corner of the great "stray," just below Dringhouses. The links had of course to be tucked unobtrusively away where they would not interfere with the Knavesmire's historic and principal purpose. As the ardour for golf grew, its devotees were no longer content with so makeshift a course. New links were laid out at Strensall, some miles from York, where there was more room, and the ground better suited to the game.

The Knavesmire links still exist, but in a neglected and decayed condition, the eighteen hole course at Strensall having quite superseded them. Playing over the former now one can still see possibilities, marred however by the dual purpose. The grass is of good quality, such as would, with a little care, afford excellent bunkie lies. But to York golfers Knavesmire is dead, and Strensall reigns in its stead.

The great fault of York is its muggy relaxing climate. The old city stands in a wide low lying plain, through which a big river, the Ouse, winds its way. In the winter moist fogs lie across the level land; in the summer the hot air seems to stagnate about the ancient town, wrapping its inhabitants in sleepy languor. Strensall is but some fifty feet higher than York, but the open dry moorland, away from the mist drawing river, has a different air. The fresh breeze sweeps across the whins and rustles in the birches, and puts a zest into the blood that we never feel, when beneath the walls of the town. Yet for all that we can, in a motor, be at the Strensall club house, eighteen minutes after leaving the market square of York.

Strensall is devoted also to a far more important purpose than golf. There are here fine rifle ranges, and much rough ground suitable for training infantry. Scouting infantry and golfers however, seem not to interfere greatly with each other; Knavesmire would no doubt remain popular, if the hoof of a galloping horse made no more mark on the grass than an ammunition boot.

From a golfer's point of view, the objection to the Strensall links is their flat sameness. It is a level moorland, singularly devoid of natural hazards. Such being the case, there has been much buildings of artificial bunkers. Several long holes are painfully alike, with great turf parapets standing up athwart the fairway, and somewhat beyond the reach of a long drive. Some of these banks have sand bunkers at their foot, while other bunkers are excavated at either side, to trap the sliced or pulled drive.

At the 1st tee, a big turf bank with a sand bunker dug out in front of it, faces us. It is safely out of range of all but phenomenal drivers, so has only to be taken into account when we are taking our second shot. A moderate drive puts one within easy clearing distance with either iron or brassie, and the second shot should be within approaching distance of the green, for the length of the hole is 425 yards, and the bogey is 5.

The 2nd hole has character, something that several of the Strensall holes lack. It is a full iron shot over a hedge, from the tee to the green. 145 yards

The 3rd hole is the giant of the links, 545 yards in length, with a bogey of 6. Rough uncut grass is left in front of the tee as a hazard, while beyond there is a similar grassy tangle on either side of the fairway. The easiest of moderately straight drives will however, ensure a perfect beansie lie for the second shot. The "pretty" at Strensall is very well kept indeed, and though of course the grass has not that peculiar quality demanded for first rate links, it is yet short and smooth, and excellent lies are the rule.

After making our drive from the third tee, we see that a deep narrow drain runs right across our line of fire. If a drive has been short, a long second will be necessary to clear this ditch safely. The green is guarded on each side by a small bunker, so the final approach must be made with precision.

The 4th is rather a curious hole: the drive has to be made over a deep narrow drain, but at an acute angle. The green is only a little the other side of the ditch, so the acuter the angle at which the drive clears this obstacle, the straighter it is going for the hole. On the other hand the acuter the angle, the longer the drive has to be to reach the smooth on the far side of the drain. It is 295 yards, and the bogey 4. The 5th and 6th holes call for no special description; they are 345 and 415 yards long respectively, each a bogey 5. Both are straightforward enough, the first with a bunker, and the second a ditch. Seven is a three stroke hole of 123 yards, and has a pretty individuality of its own. Along the edge of the green is a pond, which has to be cleared by the tee shot. The green is guarded on all sides by bunkers, so the iron shot has to be straight and of correct strength, for the hole to be done in three. The 8th is a 450 yard hole, and the pond in front of the 7th green has now to be taken lengthways with the drive. Afterwards comes one of the usual turf walls, with a bunker at foot.

The 9th hole is 285 yards with a bogey 4. You shoot a turf bank with your drive, and are then an iron shot from the green. The 10th a 400 yard hole with bogey of 5, has no special interest. The 11th is a charming little 115 yard, 3 stroke hole. The tee is in a wood, and it is a full mashie shot out, over a high hedge, on to the green. The 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th holes shall be passed over in contemptuous silence: they differ only as to yards of length, and the condition of their greens. The imagination of the man who laid out the links, had evidently become exhausted by the time he reached the eleventh. Turf walls, like infantry parapets taken out of some antique drill book, are repeated again and again, with maddening monotony. Sometimes they have little ditches scooped below them and filled with sand, sometimes not.

The 17th hole is 190 yards long, and uphill: so a long drive is wanted to reach the green. On the right there is a tree and a sand bunker, on the left another bunker and long grass. It is a pretty hole, and it is good golf to do it in three.

The 18th hole is a bogey 4, and 375 yards in length. Beyond some rough grass on the left, which penalises a short, pulled drive, there are no obstacles. The green lies in a little hollow, offering a very nice target for a long second, with iron or bassie.

Some of my remarks on these Strensall links sound a bit ill-natured but those who have played there, will no doubt feel the same dissatisfaction at the monotonous sameness of those five holes. Some attempt should be made to endow each hole on a course with such individuality of its own, that even after playing on a links only once, the golfer can remember its features throughout. When, as at Strensall, Nature has declined to assist, human imagination should be sufficient to rise to the occasion: to devise and invent. Even a punch-bowl green alone, making as it does such an ideal target for a long approach, is sufficient to stamp a hole with individuality.

I remember such a hole on the Needle links in the Isle of Wight: and old quarry lined with natural velvet turf, had been turned into a green. The tee was out of sight of the green, and an iron shot away, if the stroke from the tee was made with the right strength, and straightness, you would find your ball either close to or in the hole. For the latter was cunningly set at the deepest point in the punch-bowl.

There is plenty of gorse at Strensall, everywhere except on the links themselves it would be easy to plant whins so as to guard some of the holes, and so vary the monotony of those eternal turf parapets.

MADRAS HORSE SHOW.

20th 21st and 22nd January 1910.

THE Annual Horse Show of the Madras Gymkhana was held on the Island on the above dates. It was another big success; arrangements were all that could be desired, the class and number of entries were good, while the judging was carried out to the satisfaction of all. Mr. Steele the Honorary Secretary is to be congratulated on the results of his efforts. Mrs. Miller gave away the prizes. Appended is a list of awards:—

CLASS I.—HUNTERS—Hunters, heavy weight up to 14 stone and over, to be shown under saddle.

Mr. H. N. C. Campbell's b aus g Right Angle	...	1
Hon. Mr. Justice L. C. Miller's br w g The Monk	...	2

Six competed.

Judges.—Colonel E. R. C. Butler and Captain G. H. Badcock.

Remarks.—A very poor class.

CLASS II.—HACKS—Horses (over 14 hands 2 inches) to be shown under saddle.

Capt. W. G. Thompson's bk w m Moonbeam	...	1
Hon'ble Mr. W. O. Horne's br aus m Merry Vale	...	2
Mrs. Marjoribanks' br aus g Honesty	...	3

Twenty-five competed.

Judges.—Lieutenant-Colonel E. R. C. Butler and Captain Badcock.

Remarks.—A strong class.

CLASS IV.—PONY HUNTERS—Pony hunters, English and Australians, 14 hands 2 inches and under, to be shown under saddle.

Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's br aus m Pumpernickel	...	1
Miss. Anderson's bk w g Swivel	...	2
Major T. H. Symon's b w g Sam Slick ...	...	3

Fifteen competed.

Judges.—Captain H. Meynell and Lieutenant-Colonel E. R. C. Butler.

Remarks.—A fair class. First and second very good ponies.

CLASS V.—SINGLE HARNESS PONIES.—(14 hands 2 inches or under) to be driven in harness.

Mr. D. D. Mackinnon's bk w g Bodgeree ...	...	1
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's br aus m Pumpernickel	...	2
Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell's b aus g Sirdar ...	...	3

Fourteen competed.

Judges.—Captain G. H. Badcock and Captain E. S. Gillett.

Remarks.—A very good lot of harness ponies, the winner being a true type of his class.

CLASS VI.—HUNTERS.—Middle Weight. To be capable of carrying from 11st. 7lb. up to 13st. To be shown under saddle.

H. E. the Governor's Selaby	...	1
Capt. W. G. Thompson's Forrard On ...	...	2
Mr. N. E. Marjoribank's Weybridge ...	...	3

Sixteen competed.

Judges.—Captain H. Meynell and Captain E. S. Gillett.

Remarks.—This was one of the best classes shown. Six very useful horses were left in at the end.

CLASS VII—HACKS.—(14 hands 2 inches or under) to be shown under saddle.

Miss Anderson's bk w g Swivel ...	...	1
Miss Romilly's b w g Tommy	...	2
Major. T. H. Symons' b w g Sam Slick ...	...	3

Twenty competed.

Judges.—Lieutenant-Colonel E. R. C. Butler and Captain H. Meynell.

Remarks.—A moderate class.

CLASS VIII—HUNTERS—Light-weight. To be capable of carrying from 10st. to 11st. 7lb. To be shown under saddle.

Capt. W. G. Thompson's bk w m Moonbeam	...	1
Hon'ble Mr. W. O. Horne's br aus g Chicane	...	2
Miss C. Lawley's br aus m Corona ...	...	3

Seventeen competed.

Judges.—Captain H. Meynell and Captain E. S. Gillett.

Remarks.—A very good class indeed. The first six or seven ponies all looked most suitable hunters.

CLASS IX—SINGLE HARNESS.—Horses (over 14 hands 2 inches) to be driven in harness.

Capt. W. G. Thompson's bk w m Moonbeam	...	1
Mr. N. E. Marjoribank's br aus g Honesty ...	...	2
Mr. D. Marshall's ch aus g Nameless ...	...	3

Eleven competed.

Judges.—Captain G. H. Badcock and Captain E. S. Gillett.

Remarks.—Not so good a class as the ponies, but the winner stood out above the rest.

Remarks.—A very useful class and difficult to judge.

The Naturalist.

THE PERFECT "ZOO."

MR. W. BEACH THOMAS has found the ideal home for wild animals in captivity. Writing from New York last month to the Daily Mail he says:—

Beyond all comparison the "Zoo" at Bronx Park, just outside New York, is the finest in the world, and coming from a day spent in its precincts in company with its director, I feel as if I had seen the wildest of wild animals in their native haunts.

Is it quite impossible for Regent's Park to rival the Bronx? Our English "Zoo" is the most envied in the world. Our Empire touches every part of the world where animals live. Within the Empire all are able to do, and are doing, what no people has ever been able to do. In Africa we protect animals through the whole course of long migration. Gifts of animals are showered on our "Zoo" by men who hunt and observe with the native English zest in all parts of the world, but especially Africa, whence always comes, in natural history as in politics, the "aliquid novi"—the something new, which Pliny noted centuries ago, now taking the form of an okapi or antelope. But the "Zoo," so thoroughly envied even by the Americans, is very far from equalling the Bronx, and is not nearly so popular. Though placed ten miles nearer the middle of the City than the Bronx, it is not visited by more than half the number of people. You come away from the Bronx as you might come away from Woburn Park, happy for having seen a multitude of happy, if captive, animals. In the "Zoo" the restless patrol, the almost insane chase to and fro, the unkempt appearance of the wilder animals, often leaves a mental picture that is far from pleasant to dwell on and keeps many aloof.

THE BEAUTY OF THE BRONX.

No spot in England is quite so well fitted as the Bronx for an animal sanctuary. You walk about a spacious domain of native woodland, growing a variety of beautiful trees. Where the trees cease the natural rock, a schist glimmering with crystals, rises in abrupt mounds and ridges; and against these rocky defences the cages, if the word is allowable, are built. One ridge is inhabited wholly by bears, which run down from the natural heights or emerge from almost natural caves at the back of the keeper. All along the ridges the bears, the great grizzly or the little black bear, have a mien, a pose, an attitude that suggests anything but captivity Their coats—which in all animals proclaim the degree of health—have a silky, satiny gleam suggestive of a well-groomed horse. They live there a quite happy life. Even Wordsworth might have said of these, as of the wild flowers, "I must believe that there was pleasure there." The pleasure was general

Among big things and small, walking down from the bears' hill we came to the beavers' pond. Lying across it are a number of trees which the beavers have themselves cut through on the spot. You could watch and test the wild habits of the animal as well in the Bronx as in its haunts. A precise instance of the value of the Bronx as an observation ground was laid out before us.

In an admirable and most accurate book recently published it is written that the beavers never plaster their house with mud. From the water of the beavers' pond at the Bronx rose a house which, in spite of the book, the beavers had completely plastered with mud. Is there any other "Zoo" in the world where, in regard to such a habit of wild life, the field observer could be so corrected?

THE ANIMALS AT WOBURN.

Nowhere in the world are animals so well seen as at the Duke of Bedford's park at Woburn. Herds of wapiti gallop down towards you with the impetus of a charge over many acres; great buffalo appear and disappear over the brow or come down to the rail to lick the lumps of rock salt. Yaks and ostrich and deer of many sorts career, as on Tibetan hills or African plains, across your path. From above you watch ponds, which are almost lakes, encircled by a baffling variety of duke and geese. Such a sight no "Zoo" can rival; not even the happy hunting grounds of East Africa have its like. Nevertheless, the appearance of the bison in their reserve as you enter the gates of the Bronx Park at once recalls Woburn, and the animals, though the space is not large in acreage, have the air of enjoying a real freedom.

This freedom is the expression of the men who make and manage the Bronx. They are men especially skilled in what we call field observation; they have learned the love and knowledge of animals in forest and by river. They have travelled far. The manager of the birds is now setting off to China and Japan to study the life of pheasants in the cradle of their race. Professor Hornaday himself is the protagonist of bird and beast protection throughout the world, and a hunter hardly less than a keeper. In short, you have at the Bronx the ideal of every "Zoo," the association of the field observer and the scientific naturalist, who together have created a "Zoo" where animals live a life that is far removed from the caged or stuffed life of the animals kept in other capitals, in Berlin or Paris, or to some degree in London.

IMPROVEMENTS AT REGENT'S PARK.

Our English "Zoo" has improved out of recognition in recent years. The delicate tribe of monkeys, in the past decimated by consumption, flourish in roomier quarters and under the advice of a famous West End physician, who finds that what is sauce for the man is also sauce for the monkey. Some of the haunts compare favourably with New York. The seals' home, for example, in Regent's Park is not only healthy and spacious, but represents a model of landscape gardening art. The parrots and parrakeets can practise their special beauty, which is the art of flight The cranes and herons stalk by a plausible reach of water. But the Bronx suggests ideals which might be more nearly approached.

A milion and more people visit the Bronx because they are admitted free; and a national "Zoo" should be as free as a national gallery. The Bronx is supreme because of its space and contour. We cannot rival these qualities in Regent's Park, but we could make room by getting rid of the worst sufferers. The keeper of the birds at the Bronx desires to exclude altogether the tribe of eagles and vultures even from the spacious Bronx. If we were boldly to dispense with these unhappy and (caged as they are) unkempt creatures we could give the space on which their health depends to many a wild beast whose caged patrol is at present almost as painful to the observer as to the animal itself.

A FEW Sundays ago saw the strict enforcement of the new ordinance forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors within the boundaries of Atlantic City (New Jersey), on Sunday. At the present moment there are probably 200,00 visitors crowding its huge hotels and innumerable boarding-houses. Over the front door of a saloon on Illinois Avenue, one mute and inglorious Mr. Dooley has hung the sign, "No liquor sold on Sunday—d—d little on Monday." Another proprietor had knotted about the knob of his locked bar-room door a beer bottle, draped with black crepe, and beneath were the words, "Smell, and pass right on."

A NOOSE made entirely of steel has just been placed on the market. The lover who goes to "ask papa" in the future will have to be armoured like a Dreadnought. It is at least to be hoped that pointed toes will go out of fashion.

THURSDAY, 3rd February, 1910.

ASIATIC NATURAL HISTORY IN 1909.

As the dark places of the world became opened up more and more rapidly, the field for new discoveries, so far at least as the larger animals are concerned, becomes gradually restricted, so that new species and races become rarer and rarer. Still, however, the number of new forms continues to increase by driblets; and during the past year a few interesting discoveries and observations have been recorded with regard to the mammals and reptiles of India.

It has long been a foregone conclusion that a country which yielded, in the sixties, to the energetic researches of the Abbé David such a strange creature as the giant panda, or parti-coloured bear (Æluropus melanoleucus) must be the home of other peculiar types of mammalian life especially among the smaller and lower forms. As a foretaste, it may be hoped, of others to come, the skin and skull of an entirely new type of insectivorous mammal have recently been received at the Paris Museum of Natural History from the Roman Catholic Mission at Ta-tsien-lu, a station in Sze-chuen, North-Western China, situated at an elevation of about 8,000 feet above sea-level.

In total length the skin measures about 6¾ inches, of which nearly 2¼ inches are taken up by the tail. The ears are very large and rounded and the general colour of the coat is deep reddish yellow, with a certain mixture of long black hairs, above, and greyish white below. At first sight the animal might well be taken for a more or less ordinary shrew-mouse, but examination of the teeth at once showed it to be a member of the group of rat-shrews, or Gymnuras, which form a section of the hedgehog family, characterised, among other features, by the absence of spines mingled with the fur. That the rat-shrews are a very ancient group, is indicated by what was previously known of their geographical distribution; the typical long-tailed Gymnura and the short-tailed Hylomys inhabiting Tenasserim, the Malay Peninsulas, and Borneo, while the more shrew-like Podogymnura (at present known only by a jungle specimen) is a native of Mount Abu, in the Philippines. The occurrence of an outlying species in Sze-chuen still further emphasies the antiquity of the group. But this is not all, for the Sze-chuen rat-shrew, which is the smallest living member of the group and belongs to a generic type of its own, appear to be related to a small fossil hedgehog like insectivore from the middle Tertiary deposits of France described many years ago under the name of Tetracus. To mark this resemblance, the Sze-chuen species has been named Neotetracus sinensis.

The interest of the discovery does not, however, by any means end here. Hitherto the hedgehogs have been distinguished from the rat-shrews by the presence of unossified spaces in the bony palate of the skull and the character of the teeth; the latter being 36 in number, against 44 in Gymnura. The Sze-chuen species has, however, vacuities in the palate, and a dentition like that of a hedgehog although the number of teeth is 40. Except for certain differences in the pelvis, which cannot at present be verified in the new species, the distinction between hedgehogs and rat-shrews is now practically reduced to the presence of spines among the fur in the one group and their absence in the other.

Sze-chuen and Eastern Tibet have also yielded a much larger, although far less interesting, novelty in the shape of a very pale-coloured race of the Hangul or Kashmir barasingha, for which

Mr. Lydekker has proposed the name of Cervus cashmirianus macneilli, in honour of Major Malcolm McNeill, by whom the type specimen was shot and brought home. Unfortunately this, as well as a second example killed by the same officer, is a hind, so that we are still in the dark as to whether the antlers show any difference from those of the typical Kashmir Hangul. So pale-coloured is the Sze-chuen race, that it is known to the Chinese and the few European sportsmen by whom it has been seen as the white deer. In reality its colour is creamy, whitish grey.

Major McNeill also obtained in Eastern Tibet the black Himalayan bear (Ursus torquatus), of which he brought home the skull and skin; while a skull of the same species from Sze-chuen has been for some years in the British Museum collection. When writing the "Fauna of British India," the late Dr. W. T. Blanford could not find any evidence of the occurrence of the Himalayan black bear in Tibet, and he accordingly rejected the name U. tibetanus in favour of U. torquatus. It might be thought that the time has now come for reversing this view; but, apart from the inconvenience of constantly changing names, this would involve the absurdity of the typical race of U. tibetanus not being a Tibetan animal. Mr. Lydekker has therefore acted wisely in naming the Sze-chuen race U. torquatus macneilli. It is not a little remarkable that representatives of both the Himalayan black bear and the Malay bear should be found in Sze-chuen and Eastern Tibet.

The fact that the first living specimen of the takin ever brought to Europe arrived at the London Zoological Gardens in the spring of 1909 demands brief mention, as one of the noteworthy natural history events of the year. This specimen, which was quite young when it arrived, belongs to the Bhutan race of the typical Mishmi takin, and was sent home by Mr. Claude White, late British Commissioner in Sikhim. The animal has greatly increased in size during its residence in the Regent's Park, and at the date when this article was penned appeared to be in excellent health.

Till the other day all the members of the viper-tribe were believed to produce their young alive; that is to say, the eggs are hatched within the body of the female parent, so that, strictly speaking, these reptiles should be described as ovo-viviparous instead of viviparous. In the English Field of January the 1st there appeared, however, a letter, seemingly written in India, from W. C. Leigh, stating that the Himalayan pit-viper (Lachesis, or Trimeresurus monticola) is oviparous, as is proved by the discovery of a clutch of eggs in a tea-garden, as well as by other examples. This viper is an ugly snake, remarkable for the great thickness of the body, as compared with the length; for while it usually attains a length of about 2½ feet, it has a girth sufficient for an average 5-foot snake. In colour the back is ashy grey marked with more or less regular dark blotches, and with a sprinkling of black and traces of yellow. Below, the general colour is likewise ashy, but in this instance with dark red mottling. In some examples the dark colours of the back are so pronounced, that the reptile is scarcely distinguishable from the freshly turned back soil of the Kurseong tea gardens in which it is so frequently found. It was while working in one of these gardens during the summer of 1909 that a coolie came across a cluster of snakes' eggs. On reaching out his hoe to investigate and pushing the grass aside, a viper of this species made an angry snap at him, but was eventually secured and preserved. Other specimens proved that the oviparous habit is a constant character of the species.

Brief reference may here be made to an account of the deep-sea fishes captured during the last nine years by the Royal Indian Marine steamship "Investigator." This account, which has been drawn up by Dr. R. E. Lloyd, is published in the third part of the second volume of the Memoirs of the Indian Museum. The descriptions are, of course, of a highly technical nature, and therefore chiefly interesting to specialists. Still they are worthy of mention in this journal, if only to show that the scientific harvest of the sea is by no means yet exhausted. Some of the new types have been previously named, but the memoir includes descriptions of five new genera and species. Of the new genera, four are nearly related to previously known forms, but the fifth, Liparoides, represented by a small Tadpole-like fish belonging to the family of lump-suckers (Cyclopteridæ) differs from all its kindred by the circumstance that the small pelvic fins are not fused into a median ventral sucker, and likewise by the form of the tail.

The memoir concludes with a notice of supposed evidence of mutation in a small pediculate fish of the genus Malthopsis from the Andamans. These fishes were taken from four separate but not very distant stations in the Andamanese Sea, where they appear to form distinct communities; they include five types differing from one another in the relative breadth of the disc and the form and arrangement of the dermal ossicles. These differences can scarcely, however, be regarded as of specific value, while as two or more types occur at each station they obviously do not indicate local races.

The last item to which we can refer is a note in the third part of vol. III. of the Records of the Indian Museum in which Dr. N. Annandale describes the colour-changes in the Indian lizard, Charasia blanfordiana, a relative of the well-known Calotes versicolor. The lizards of this genus appear to take the place in India occupied in the Himalaya, and Asia and Europe generally, as well as in Africa, by Agama. The colour-changes do not seem always for the purpose of concealment, as the author has seen a specimen temporarily pale in colour basking on a red mud-wall, and a second in full sunshine on a black rock. Other specimens in similar situations were, however, more in harmony with their surroundings in the matter of colouring.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

We are very pleased to see Willie Southall is quite well again and had the good luck to get the ride on Son of a Gun in the Civil Service Cup, winning after a very fine race by half a head; this is the third time Southall has been first past the post in this race.

The entries for the Calcutta Fifth Extra Meeting on Saturday next are very good indeed and good racing is expected throughout the card. The smallest entry on the programme is the Ochterlony Plate with a list of thirteen.

The programmes are out for the Sixth and Seventh Extra Meetings and there will be a horse hurdle handicap on the sixth day and a pony hurdle on the seventh. The stakes of the latter are Rs. 500 to the winner. It is hoped that it will attract the paperchasing owners, but there is no restriction as to ownership. This race being a success we shall probably see jumpers' flat races in the future programmes, a thing which should be straight into the hands of the small owners.

Steinhager has again changed hands; he has been purchased from Mr. Vincent Clifford (who bought him at the last meeting) by Mr. H. L. Fell. This is the first horse to run in his colours and we wish him better success than the horse has had up to the present. Piper is training him and will also have Jack Sheppard.

Tangaroa is leaving India on the 11th instant and we hear is going to France to race for Mr. Galstaun. Hayhoe will have charge of him on the voyage but will be back again almost at once to take charge of Mumford's horses. Tangaroa will be trained by Mumford in France and England.

The seventh Calcutta Paperchase was held on Monday morning over the Salt Lake country. There was a lot of grief throughout the morning. The first to get adrift was Mr. M. W. Muir, who fell about half way through the chase; he was very badly knocked about and will probably be in bed for the next week. He was riding Singleton a horse of Mr. Tegart's. H E. Lady Minto and Lady Eileen Elliot accompanied by Mr. Deakin went round during the chase: Her Excellency unfortunately got a fall at the seventh fence, but luckily was not hurt beyond a slightly sprained wrist. Miss Binning also got a spill off Black Douglas and Mrs. Wanklyn came to grief near home. Captain Gibbs is now leading by a few points for the Average Cup and Lord Francis Scott is next, with Messrs. Morris and Levetus a few points behind them. The season is young yet and we most probably will see a change before the end. Mrs. Lamond Walker led the chase for the first mile, and was going very well until her mount, Master John, refused a hurdle out in the open in the new country. After this Mr. Evers on Devilette went ahead and was never again caught. This mare was pulling very hard and jumping badly; she left her mark on every fence and was lucky to get through without a fall. The ponies were jumping a lot better than the horses did and there was not a single fall throughout the chase. Marconi led for the first mile and then refused, but was taken at it again and went on some hundred yards or so behind the leaders. He ran up to his field about a mile from home and had them all beaten: it was a great performance.

The course was very well made with fourteen made jumps in all and about five miles long or a little more and very good going all the way. The start was at the Chota Maidan and took a turn to the right round the new country and again crossing the maidan went straight away almost to the brick fields, and then bearing round again came across the open country to the finish near the starting point. The following was the finishing order:—Horses.—

1. Mr. Evers on Devilette
2. Mr. Morris on Blue Bell
3. Captain Gibbs on Trilby
4. Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
5. Mr. Perkins on Dalgai
6. Captain Jelf on Mutiny, followed by Captain Holden on Charlton, Mr. Scaramanga on Mauser, Mr. Tanner on Fingal, Mr. Lance on Nettie R., Mr. Whish on Kildare. Mr. Glen on Maquaire, Mrs. Wanklyn on Cheeky, Mr. Cropper on a bay, Mr. R. Muir on Mollis, on Mr. Walker on Tommy Daw, Mr. Couper on Maisonette, Miss Binning on Black Douglas. Ponies:—

1. Mr. Glen on Marconi.
2. Mr. Evers on Lockerbie.
3. Mr. Marshall on Lockmaben.
4. Captain Gibbs on Pathfinder.
5. Mr. Hutchison on Guardian.
6. Captain Holden on Eventide.
7. Mr. Buckland on Blazes.
8. Mr. Anderson on Tot.

The Ladies' Paperchase Cup will probably be held on the 14th instant and it ought to be a very fine race, as we shall have a lot of starters for it, and well mounted to. It will be a very open event.

The hurdles were up yesterday for schooling on the training track. A horse of Mr. A. L. Butler's Red Sea (Alford) and Mulison (Gee) were the first out; they went a mile over four flights. Red Sea put up a very poor exhibition and wasted seconds at every one. Mulison did a good gallop and fenced well.

The only other school to go was Solace (Mr. Levetus), Badcock (Mr. Rasch), High Court (Mr. Bletsoe); they all went a nice working school over one and a half miles and seven flights. High Court did not fence too well.

"Sir Ulric" is for sale owing to his owner leaving for England shortly. He ought to be a very useful horse up-country as he is a good performer: and they are letting him go cheap: he is in Mr. Bletsoe's charge at 1, Theatre Road and his form can be seen in the Calendar.

The Madras Race Club will hold a meeting on the Island on the 9th and 11th March, the programme consisting of six races each day, including races for all classes of horses and ponies. There are two races of the value of Rs. 300 to the winner, one for horses and the other for ponies, whilst in all the other races Rs. 150 will go to the winner.

Owners are informed that the first entries of the Ambala Spring Meeting, 1910, having been reopened the entries will now close on the undernoted dates:—First entries by 7th February, second 21st February, third 1st March.

The N.B.M.R. Regimental Races will be held at Jalpaiguri on the 23rd and 25th instant during the annual Camp-of-Exercise.

Elsewhere will be found the entries for the English Spring Handicaps. The first impression which one gathers from a glance down the list is that class is better represented than has been the case for years past. Not for a long time, so far as memory serves, has the Derby winner of the previous year been nominated for the City and Suburban and Great "Jubilee" Stakes, and if Minoru happened to follow up his previous success at Epsom he would be copying the example of Bend Or, who, when carrying 9st. to victory in 1881, accomplished what in the light of subsequent events was the stupendous feat of conceding 33lb. to the three-year-old Foxhall. In the "Jubilee" the handicapper will have some especially promising material to work upon, for in addition to Minoru, His Majesty has nominated Princesse de Galles, the Duke of Portland is responsible for Primer and Phaleron, and the "classics" are likewise represented by Llangwm, Valens, Sir Martin, and Electra. Add to these such smart representatives of handicap form as Dean Swift, Christmas Daisy, Mustapha, Buckwheat, Cargill, Arranmore, Hayden, Succour, Submit, Ebor, The Nut, and Symons' Pride, with the three-year-olds Sunbright and Tressady, and it will be seen there is all the material for a very interesting race in the Vale of Sunbury on the first Saturday in May. If more successful than its rivals in point of numbers, the Lincolnshire Handicap has scarcely done so well in the matter of class, though with Sir Martin, Valens, Dean Swift, Christmas Daisy, Mustapha, Norman III., Arranmore, and The Tower engaged there is small room for complaint on this score. Curiously enough, the only three-year-olds which have been nominated are Irish bred, and if the names of Sweet Hackness and Sunday's Well—a quaint cognomen this—are practically unknown to English racegoers, both have shown smart form on the other side of St. George's Channel.

The Tradesmen's Cup Polo Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Lahore on the 26th ultimo. Six teams had entered for the competition and in the preliminary rounds the Penguins beat the 5th Fusiliers by 12 goals to nil, the Royal Artillery beat the Gardeners by 7 goals to 2. In the semi-finals the subalterns of the 10th Hussars beat the Penguins by 5 goals to 4 and the "A" team 10th Hussars beat the Royal Artillery by 11 goals to 2. The final match brought together the two combinations from the 10th Hussars, "A" team winning by 3 goals to 2 after extra time had been played.

The Polo Tournament during the recent Sialkot Week ended in a win for "C" Squadron, 12th Royal Lancers (Mr. Eden 1, Mr. Bryant 2, Mr. Wyndham Quin 3, and Captain Truman, back) who beat "A" Squadron (Mr. Davidson 1, Captain Murray 2 Mr. Nicholas 3, and Mr. Wood, back) by 6 goals to 2.

The 12th Royal Lancers have presented a challenge cup to be played for at Sialkot under the conditions of the present Tournament, which were designed with the idea of encouraging young players and giving them an opportunity of playing under tournament conditions. Everyone was glad that the 12th Lancers should have won the cup themselves the first year, as to the regret of the station, they are leaving for South Africa next trooping season.

The idea of sending an Indian polo team to England with aspirations for international honours has been commented upon by the English press and in most instances with favour. It has been left for the Daily Telegraph to express doubt as to the seriousness of the proposal, and Major Egerton Green, the Hurlingham Club's manager, to be "considerably amused." This gentleman, we believe, saw something of Indian polo at some remote period perhaps, and he asks "How would an Indian team overcome the difficulty as to ponies for the tats (sic) used in India, whether waler, Arab or country-bred, would not be the slightest used in international polo." According to the Major a crack Indian team would not be good enough to win an open tournament in London. The Daily Telegraph man sums up his remarks thus:—

"If a suggestion may be offered to the players and supporters of polo in India, it is that before imagining vain things in regard to international honours, they should send the best possible native team to England with a view to winning the Champion Cup and the Ranelagh Open Cup. A visit of a representative native team, properly mounted and financed by such enthusiasts as the Maharajahs of Jodhpore, Ulwar, Patiala, Bikanir, Kapurthala, Idar, Rutlam, Cooch Behar, Kishengarh, His Highness the Nizam, and the Begum of Nepal, would vastly add to the interest of the usual London season."

The Daily Telegraph man's acquaintance with Indian polo is probably of the "bowing" order, and if it is on a par with his knowledge of India's native rulers the carrying of it will not tire him. The "Begum of Nepal" is distinctly good.

Reuter's Agency has received further details of the journey just concluded by Mr. Fred Shelford, the well-known engineer, in connection with the projected railway to be constructed from the Uganda Railway to Lake Magadi. This wonderful lake, which is only reached after a long and difficult journey over uninhabited and waterless country, is described as follows by Mr. Shelford:—

Lake Magadi is picturesquely situated amid weird surroundings at the bottom of a valley 3,000ft. deep. On one side are mountains 6,000ft. above sea-level, and on another a range having an altitude of 8,000ft. There is no sign of human life, but on and about the lake are immense numbers of flamingos. From the surrounding mountains the lake, which is ten miles long by two to three miles in breadth, looks like an ordinary sheet of water of somewhat reddish hue. On reaching the shores, however, we found that the water was only a few inches deep, and covered a hard surface looking exactly like pink marble. This is an immense deposit of soda, which was bored and found to extend to a considerable depth, thus indicating an area of at least twenty square miles of solid soda. The heat upon the soda lake was very great.

The object of the expedition was to visit the lake, Mr. Shelford's special business being to survey for the railway which is to be built in view of the fact that the Imperial Government has granted Messrs. M. Samuel and Company a concession for ninety-nine years to work the soda deposits. Mr. Shelford has left four engineers to make a detailed survey of the route he has discovered for the new railway. This branch is to be constructed and worked by the Government, and will be of the same construction as the Uganda Railway, of which it will form a branch. It is expected that work will commence shortly. Mr. Shelford said:

The expedition, which comprised eight Europeans, including mechanical and chemical experts and engineers, left the Uganda Railway at the station of Kiu, 265 miles in the interior, and struck westward. The country to be traversed was entirely uninhabited, unknown, and waterless. It proved to be extremely difficult, the route being continually crossed by escarpments eight to ten miles long and 300ft. to 400ft. high. Being part of the southern game reserve, it teemed with lions, giraffes, rhinos, and antelopes. The problem to be solved was how to conduct such a large party, with all their baggage, apparatus, and stores from the railway to the lake. The transport included four ox-wagons, twenty oxen, fifteen ponies, and about sixty carriers, gun-bearers, etc. A large base camp having been formed at Kiu, great difficulty was experienced at the very outset in finding the beginning of a road to the lake. Eventually a gorge in the escarpment was discovered, and a chain of camps—finally reduced to five—was formed. Several of the men employed in cutting tracks were lost.

Each camp was supplied with tanks of water, brought all the way from Nairobi, and protected by thorn zarebas, a very necessary precaution against wild animals. Lions were constantly seen and heard, and as protection against them, in addition to the zarebas and fires, numbers of lanterns swinging on strings were placed round the camps. One night fifteen lions, of which two were shot, came round the tents. Two of the Askaris were on another occasion set upon by five lions, while at one camp a rhino deliberately charged the tank containing the only supply of water, but was fortunately shot by a Boer teamster before he did any damage. Even in the neighbourhood of the railway the lions have a very bad reputation, and are known at Kiu station as "bad" lions. It is not an uncommon thing for the trains to be stopped because the Indian stationmaster, the only official at Kiu, cannot leave his house to set the signals until the lions had cleared off. The last section of the journey was extremely arduous, and the wagon transport, as well as horses, had to be abandoned. The precipitous cliffs were impossible for animals, and we decided that the only way to get through was to make a bee-line on foot over the mountains. During this stage two of the Europeans got lost among the rocks, and passed an anxious night, sleep being out of the question, with the lions threatening them all the time. At length, after a march of fourteen hours, they were found by a search party from camp.

The last march to the lake entailed eleven hours' continuous travelling, under a tropical sun, without food, water, or halt. The expedition eventually camped by the lake in the evening, and remained for two weeks.

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

During the expedition Mr. Shelford discovered and ascended a new mountain peak near Lake Magadi, which is unmarked on any map. It rose 2,500ft. above the plain, and was very difficult of ascent owing to the loose rocks. From the top, where Mr. Shelford left records in a bottle, he obtained a magnificent view, extending right into German East Africa and the Rift Valley.

Though there is a difference of opinion as to which kind of shot that the gunner meets with is the most difficult, there must be many who will agree that the "quartering," or "oblique," bird is one of the hardest, if not quite the most difficult, to deal with. This bird—either a high driven partridge or a tall pheasant—is neither an approaching nor a crossing bird, but it is flying at an angle which involves a sort of double calculation in the mind before one can decide where to fire. The exact angle, as near as one can judge it, is that formed by straight lines drawn from the bird's starting point to the spot where it actually is when fired at, and also from the starting point to the position of the gunner when he fires. Roughly speaking, this may be taken as half a right angle, and the shot, if taken before the bird passes the gunner, reaches the bird at something more than a right angle. There is a most curious tendency on the part of many men to shoot below this bird, whether it passes to the left or right of the gun, and the reason seems to be in the fact that one is apt to let the gun cant over to left or right in the act of firing, with the result that the shot passes below the bird. Nothing but a determined endeavour on the part of the shooter to keep his gun absolutely level and to try to get "on top" of his bird will remedy this tendency, and plenty of practice is essential. In a case like this the clay bird comes in most useful, for the "real article" can be closely imitated from the tower now found at all shooting schools.

It is satisfactory to know that the next South Pole expedition is not likely to be hampered at all by financial considerations. Captain Scott originally asked for £40,000 to finance the expedition and of this sum £31,000 has already been promised, including a Government grant of £20,000. The amount raised is sufficient to equip the ship, which will leave London on its adventurous voyage in July next. Captain R. F. Scott first discussed the project with Sir Ernest Shackleton, but the latter, having many engagements and the important scientific results of his own expedition to work up, could not for the moment do more than give his hearty co-operation and the valuable benefit of his experience with the expedition of 1907-09 to the preparations for the new venture. Captain Scott resigned his position at the Admiralty to supervise these preparations. The steamship Terra Nova, the largest and strongest of the old Scottish whalers, was purchased in September last, and the expedition will therefore sail in a vessel which is both British built and British owned, since the Terra Nova was built in 1884, and was bought from Messrs. Bowring Brothers, of St. Johns, Newfoundland, who had employed her on seal hunting duties in the Northern waters. Besides Captain Scott, other members of the expedition will be Lieutenant E. R. G. Evans, R.N., who will be second-in-command, a position which he also held in the relief expedition in the Morning; Dr. Wilson, who, besides acting as chief of the scientific staff, will also be the zoologist and artist; Mr. Mackintosh Bell, Director of the geological survey of New Zealand, has also volunteered his services as one of the three geologists who it is anticipated, will accompany the expedition; Mr. R. Simpson, of the Indian Survey Department, will be the physicist. As stated above the Terra Nova will leave London in July. After calling at Cardiff for coal she will proceed south vid the Cape and Australia and New Zealand, and will leave the last-named country early in December.

Some interesting remarks occur in a Home contemporary about the king-crow—a bird which is not uncommon in Bengal. It is said that the introduction of the telegraph wire has provided this "feathered policeman" of the East with seats of administration, wherefrom he may overlook and adjudicate the affairs of the bird world. Probably every traveller by train in India has noticed the bird seated on the telegraph wires that run alongside the line. He is black as coal in colour, and sports a forked tail of the most exaggerated and flashy type—in fact, everybody knows him as "that black bird with the fish-tail that sits on telegraph wires." When there is not a wire to sit on he occupies a dead bough or a post, or a cow's back, but the latter seat has its disadvantages from the fact that the bird's claws tickle the quadruped, so that he is continually being obliged to spring into the air to avoid the swish of the remonstrating tail, a state of things most disconcerting to a zealous police officer. Hence telegraph wires offer him just the official position he requires, and the criminal classes suffer accordingly. The king-crow gets his living by catching insects, but he tackles larger game. His qualification for the post of policeman are unbounded pluck, a native dexterity in flight kept up by constant insect catching, and a beak and claws which can make themselves felt to some purpose. Therefore all crows and kites and other birds bigger than himself feel his vigorous onslaughts, and experience the difficulty of retaliating on an opponent which they can no more catch than an elephant can a fox-terrier. Neither do ground vermin, like the mongoose, escape his supervision; if he cannot actually fight them, he can overlook and report their movements and betray their deep-laid schemes, and wicked monkeys, who have a human joy in raiding birds' nests, think twice before they assault the police-bird's little home. It is said that his official work sometimes interferes with his private business in the insect line so that he is obliged to now and then exact payment from the public he serves, and does not always catch his insects for himself; he may even, like other shrikes, eat up a very little bird bodily now and then.

Mention is made in a book by Sir William Crookes which has recently been issued of a curious game said to be the national game of Africa. It is known generally as "Mancala," but appears under different names and with various modifications in many parts of Africa and the East. It appears to be characteristic of "Mancala" that while it is played with ease and absorbing interest by the natives, it remains a sealed book to all but a handful of Europeans by reason of their inability to master its rules. This, it is said, is probably due less to the intricacies of the game itself than to the difficulty of getting an intelligible description of the game from the natives by means of an interpreter. Mr. Colin in writing of the game says that it is remarkable for its peculiar distribution, which seems to mark the limit of Arabian culture, and which has just penetrated Europe after having served for ages to divert the inhabitants of nearly half the inhabited area of the globe. The implements are a board, with two rows of cup-shaped depressions and a handful or so of pebbles or shells, which they transfer from one hole to another with much rapidity. Two persons always engage, and ninety-eight cowrie shells or pebbles are used. It appears that the Mancala board is usually boot shaped, though in many cases it is merely a flat piece of wood containing a number of cup-shaped depressions. In Ceylon Mancala is played with an elaborate contrivance made of carved ivory. Several of the Mancala boards are beautifully inlaid, and one in the British Museum is in the shape of a fish, which opens in two halves. The game is played all down the East Coast of Africa, in Egypt and Nigeria, along the Gold Coast, and in Angola. Wherever the Arab have gone, indeed, Mancala has been introduced.

An interesting addition to the monkey-house of the London Zoological Society, in the shape of a young female black-handed monkey, has been made by Mr. G. H. Birchall. This species of monkey is indigenous to Central America, north of the Isthmus of Darien, and is exceedingly interesting from the fact that its tail reaches the highest form of development as a prehensile organ. Unfortunately, the black-handed monkey is very delicate, and does not, as a rule, live long in captivity.

The musk-ox, "thanks" to Arctic exploration, is believed to be approaching extinction. This interesting animal is, in its way, as peculiar as the prong-horn antelope or the giraffe, being, as it is, a link between the cattle and the sheep. The chief economic value of the musk-ox is as food to travellers in high latitudes, but, owing to its rarity, it has of late years been much sought after by big game hunters. A member of Commander Peary's recent expedition to the Far North, when writing from Northern Greenland, declared that during a two weeks' sojourn in the district in question no fewer than 47 musk-oxen were killed in four hunts with men and dogs. While engaged in another journey he wrote: "We killed four musk-oxen one hundred miles away from camp, and brought back a calf on the sledge alive to the boat, but only to have it die the next day." It is, of course, easy to condemn such wholesale slaughter of a rare animal. On the other hand, however, it is possible that fresh meat was sadly needed by the expedition, in which case, of course, the killing of those 52 head of musk-oxen was quite justifiable. The few musk-oxen which to-day inhabit a restricted area in North America are the survivors of a species that once had a circumpolar distribution as far south as Germany in the Old World and the Ohio Valley in the New.

German doctors have discovered that Walter Ruett, the winner of the recent six days' cycle race in Berlin, and also winner of a similar test of endurance just previously in New York, is unfit for military service. He is suffering from serious enlargement of the heart, besides being deaf. The doctors say their discovery reveals the fact that even the finest athletic form is compatible with grave organic defects.

It is a mere platitude to say that the greatest charm of golf is its infinite variety. Most followers of the game have made the remark at some time or other, prompted, as a rule, by the reflection that scarcely any two courses in the world are alike; that a new shot, or, at any rate, a fresh piece of scenery (which, after all, is not bad for the mind) is being constantly presented to the player. Perhaps, however, an equally important constituent of this wealth of variety in golf is found in the number of totally different forms of the pastime that exist. In this respect, golf has a property peculiarly its own.

Single-wicket cricket is possible as a change from ordinary cricket, but it is nothing more than a makeshift, and is comparable to the process of going out alone on the links to compete against bogey. Nobody would choose it when the properly constituted game was obtainable. There is only one form of football under each code; only one form of hockey. There are two kinds of lawn tennis, singles and doubles, but there are at least three games of golf, so different in their nature that a man can be very good at one and yet moderate at the other two. They are stroke play, match play, and foursome play.

It is the fact that a match is so totally different from a medal round that makes almost impossible of contrivance a satisfactory system of standardising handicaps. As for the foursome, it is the most mysterious of all the forms of the game. Some good golfers simply cannot play it; others of average skill play it astonishingly well. And here the question of having the right partner is a matter of the greatest importance. The foursome partner is born, and it has been aptly said that the ideal foursome combination, like the marriage that deserves similar adjectival description, is made in heaven.

Old London Rowing Club men in India will regret to hear of the death of Mr. Walter William Hewitt, the famous oarsman and International Rugby football player.

Mr. Hewitt and his brothers Cameron and Malcolm were members of the historic Queen's House Rugby Football Club. Mr. Hewitt as a member of this club played for England against Scotland, Ireland, and Wales (the first international match in the Principality) in 1881 and against Ireland in 1882. He subsequently became a member of the Blackheath Club.

Mr. Hewitt was perhaps better known as an oarsman than as a Rugby football player. He was a member of the London Rowing Club, and was in the winning crew for the Grand Challenge Cup at Henley on three occasions, on two of which he stroked the boat. He was stroke in 1883. He is said to have won 168 trophies for rowing, in addition to prizes in running and wrestling. He was well known as an amateur wrestler, and was a middle-weight champion.

Always deeply interested in national defence, he was one of the early naval volunteers, and was in recent years a captain in the late Fife Royal Garrison Artillery (Militia). He married in 1890 Constance Helen, fourth daughter of the late James Lodge de Montmorency of the Greenwich Hospital, who (with one son, a cadet in the Royal Navy) survives him.

"140 not out in twenty minutes." So runs the message. This item, says the Australasian, comes from Singleton, New South Wales, and W. Cameron is the batsman who performed this astonishing feat. The visiting team was a combination from the Waverley and Paddington clubs. Cameron hit the ball out of bounds 17 times in 19 balls, this sensational smiting giving him 140 not out in twenty minutes. Even if the ground was of a "handkerchief allotment" order, the feat is great.

PLAYING for the United Service Club against the Telegraph Association in the semi-final round of the Rowe Cricket Shield competition at Rangoon Mr. C. C. Cameron put up 232 runs in three hours, which constitutes a record for Burma. We publish in our Cricket columns to-day a list of scores of over 200 compiled in India up to date, which may be of interest to our readers.

THE South Africans won the second test match which concluded at Durban on the 26th ultimo. When we went to press last week England had made 15 runs without loss in their second venture. They were all out for 252, South Africa thus winning by 95 runs. It will be remembered that both teams registered 199 runs in their first innings and that on going in again South Africa compiled 347.

M. A. NOBLE, one of the most famous cricketers who have donned flannels for Australia has announced his retirement from first class cricket. The Adelaide Observer publishes the following interesting review of his remarkable career as a player.

It was as a batsman that Noble first came under the notice of the public by scoring in 1894 152 not out for the Sydney Junior against Stoddart's English Eleven. This was a match that also introduced Victor Trumper. On the strength of his big score against the Englishmen, Noble was given a trial against Victoria, but he made only 5 and 7, and the wise selectors of his State did not consider him in the following season worthy of a place in interstate matches. In 1896-7, however, they tried him again, and a magnificent 153 not out in the last innings of the year against Victoria made his place in first-class cricket secure. Since then he has never looked back, and has ever been a bulwark of Australian cricket.

NOTWITHSTANDING his early big scoring he did comparatively little with the bat against Stoddart's English Eleven in 1897-8, but he had the best bowling analyses, and Jones, the lightning bowler was the only Australian to secure more wickets against the Englishmen in that season. Some of Noble's performances on the fast wickets which ruled that series of matches were remarkable, and he easily had the best bowling average of either side. It followed as a matter of course that he was taken to England in 1899, and he finished third in the batting averages to Darling and Clem Hill and fourth in the bowling. During this tour he played the two memorable innings in the test match at Manchester, when he batted altogether about eight hours for 60 not out and 89; batted until the crowd—baulked of the spectacle of seeing Australia beaten—whistled the "Dead march in Saul." That innings indicated the character of the man, who is now generally recognised as the best all-round cricketer in Australia. There is no need to pursue in detail his performances since on both sides of the equator. It is sufficient to say that he has taken a leading part in almost every match Australia has played. He attained the summit of his ambition when he was chosen captain of the Australian Eleven which toured England during the year just closing. He was probably the proudest man in the world when Australia so brilliantly clinched the rubber. His own performances during the past season were rather disappointing, more particularly as during the season prior to going to England he played two grand innings—one against each of the rival States—of 213. Perhaps, however, the responsibilities of captaincy affected his cricket, although it did not do so when he led the Australians to victory against the M.C.C. team in Australia two years ago.

PERHAPS the most striking feature about Noble's cricket has been its grim determination. His tenacity of purpose reminded one of nothing else so much as a bulldog, who once having got his teeth into an object never lets go until he has crushed it. His dauntless courage was shown most markedly in his batting. At times he would hit with sparkling brilliance, but if the circumstances warranted it, as demonstrated not only at Manchester, but in many another tight corner, he would bat with dogged stubbornness which bowlers found difficult to conquer. Whether forcing the pace or stone-walling, he was always graceful and interesting to watch. As a bowler, in his younger days his deadly swerve upset the calculations of many a batsman, and in a test match in Melbourne he secured the remarkable analysis—even though it was a sticky wicket—of 7 wickets for 17 runs; but many of his performances when the turf was as true as a billiard table were more meritorious than that. He combined with his swerve a remarkably good length, and used his head all the time. As a captain, Noble is credited by authorities in England as well as Australia with being the finest the Commonwealth has produced, and to his leadership English players and writers ascribe much of the success achieved by the 1909 Australian Eleven. Not only was his own play an inspiration to his comrades, but he had a brain which was always working, always ingenious. His manipulation of his bowling earned for him unstinted admiration, and it has been said of him that no other captain has ever placed his field so cleverly to stop the pet hits of batsmen. Noble was also one of the most brilliant points the world has seen. To sum him up, it may fairly be said, considering his achievements as a batsman, bowler, fieldsman, and leader, that he almost challenges comparison with George Giffen, who is still generally admitted to be the best all-round cricketer Australia has produced. It may appear for the moment to be unfortunate for Australian cricket that Noble got into conflict with the authorities in Sydney, but throughout he has had the sympathy of South Australians, who have admired his singleness of purpose and his high ideals as much as they have enjoyed many a time his magnificent cricket. The following figures give a complete summary of his batting and bowling in first class matches :—

The Executive Committee of the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association are pleased to announce that through the courtesy of His Excellency the Viceroy and the generosity of Mr. G. L. Mukherjee they will offer a Challenge Shield entitled "The Minto Challenge Shield,' open to all recognised amateur clubs in India and Burma, for competition at the annual sports meeting of the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association. The meeting this year is to be held in the Eden Gardens, Calcutta, on the 19th February 1910. Lady Creagh has kindly consented to distribute the prizes.

The events in the Minto Shield competition are the 100 yards, 220 yards, 440 yards, ½ mile flat races and High jump. The points will be awarded to 1st, 2nd and 3rd men in each event on the basis of 12, 7 and 4. The Club winning the greatest number of points to hold the Shield for the ensuing year.

The Committee hopes that with the addition of this distinguished trophy the Amateur Sports from the club standpoint will be considerably increased. A review of Athletic Sports for the past few years shows clearly that something of this character is needed. To further stimulate the Amateur Sports the Executive Committee has added two Challenge Cups this year. Mr. N. A. Macleod, has kindly offered a cup in the 220 yards Championship scratch event and Messrs. Hamilton and Co. have kindly offered another in the ½ mile Championship scratch event. The prizes for amateurs therefore at present stand.—The "Minto Challenge Shield" for Amateur Clubs, individual Challenge Shield or Cups in the 4 flat races and Gold, Silver, and Bronze medals in the 5 Championship events mentioned above. In the Handicap events handsome silver prizes purchased from the leading silversmiths in Calcutta will be awarded to winners.

The Honorary Secretary will be pleased to forward entry forms or supply all additional information. Letters addressed to 25, Chowringhee receive prompt attention.

Latest advices from Australia inform us that Mr H. D. McIntosh is anxious to secure, if possible, another match between Jack Johnson and Tommy Burns, to take place in Australia.

Burns was approached first and asked if he would agree to meet the big black-fellow two months after his (Johnson's) disturbance with Jeffries, winner take all, and Burns readily assented; indeed, he right off signed a provisional agreement embodying the suggestion.

Johnson was at once communicated with.

Mr. McIntosh undertakes to pay the whole of the colored man's expenses, should he agree to come, and is now awaiting a reply from that much-talked-about individual.

Tommy Burns is so satisfied regarding his ability to reverse what happened on Boxing Day 1908 that he would take any monetary risk in reason to be given another chance against the huge son of Ham.

The Punjab Native Army Hockey Tournament will begin at Jhelum on Wednesday, 2nd March, entries closing on the 15th instant.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Seventh Extra Meeting on Saturday was well attended and included some very open and exciting racing. Arab fields were big and with betting fairly well distributed the pencil brigade held the upper hand. Ames, Whalley and Barrett swelled the jockeys' ranks, the second having two wins, but otherwise the European lads shared brackets. Barrett came down with Lord Mayor, a new pony, but luckily got off cheap when he might have been ridden over.

It was pleasant to see the pony race fill, though only three went out, and on Lady Nannie being scratched, Koko was heavily backed in receipt of a couple of stone from Cheeky. May Morn was only in it for a couple of furlongs, when the favourite took up the running and had no difficulty in staying Cheeky out.

Next, two division of the New Maiden Plate, Lama in the first looking a good thing, though good money came for Shabash and an unknown one in Grand Duke. Independent was first out, but then Mujeed got to work on Lama as though riding a finish. He went wide at the bend, and then failing to keep straight, was beaten in the run home by Grand Duke.

In the second another of the same stable, Guinea Gold, was the rage from Rocksand, who has shown form. This time it was the tried one who got away in front but, nicely steadied by Whalley, stayed the other out all the way.

Seven went out for the Selling Plate, Not Yet on her last performance and on recent work being backed to odds on, with a late run on Lady Lomond. There was never much doubt about the former, but the latter could do nothing when asked. Familiar was first away from Not Yet and Lady Lomond. At the bend the favourite came up and went away easily. Rosewater put in a late run, beating Familiar for second place. He seems to be improving a good deal.

There was open betting in the ten furlongs for Arabs, Sialkote carrying stable money in preference to Famous, Eed, Dilerjung and Lapwing next in demand. Famous and Young Salanic were first away, then the former fell back and Hazza went to the front, Mehraj third. Kanson rode a nice waiting race on Hazza all the way and had a bit in hand to go away with down the straight. Sialkote had to come outside, and the way he came suggested his being very dangerous had Brown's effort been earlier.

In the long distance big horse race Master Delaval naturally stood out, Oakton next best fancied. It was The Rooster, however, who made things hot for the favourite. The former took over from Oakton at the six and was going well with the favourite when they reached the last bend. Down the straight they ran neck and neck till Master Delaval wore him down with his great stride. The Rooster pulled up lame, and Whalley dismounted for him to be led in. Some way back the other two, Oakton and Ashanti Gold, dead heated.

Winchester, Chechan and Ashroff had nothing much to choose between them in the Dadar Plate in betting. Antica was left, Real Blood cutting out the pace for a time till Ashroff went to the front from the other two and Mumbra. Winchester failed when it came to racing and Chechan could do nothing with Ashroff, on whom Whalley had not to move. Mumbra held on till near the post M.V.O., came with a rattle to snatch third place from him.

Finally the third division of the New Maiden Plate, some quite new ones in Sir Hugo and Yasameen being the pick. Both were too badly left to do any good, but are very useful for another time. Shweman got out first and, leading all the way, Ames just managed to stay out Padsha, who followed him all the way and was closing up in the straight. Sir Hugo came late, but Dilaver kept third place, Yasameen falling back after making up ground very fast within a couple of furlongs before the bend.

A number of chikor partridges from Baluchistan have been imported into the Nilgiris by Messrs. Cox and Hodgson and Major Parr on behalf of the Nilgiri Game Association. The birds, which arrived in very good condition, considering their long journey from Quetta, have been turned out on the eastern slopes of the Dodabetta range. It is to be hoped that the experiment to introduce this hardy bird to these hills will be more successful than a former attempt made some years ago, and that they will thrive and rear several broods in the coming spring.

The Fourth Championship Dog Show held by the Calcutta Kennel Club last week was a huge success all along the line. The arrangements were all that could be desired, the class of exhibits exceptional, while the judging, conducted by those experts, Colonel S. J. Rennie, R.A.M.C., Dr. J. H. B. Martin, Mr. A. H. Longhurst and Mr. Horace Johnston, met with universal satisfaction. A detailed report appears further on.

News reaches us of the death under peculiar circumstances of Mr. Laidlaw, a Burma Railway volunteer at Mandalay. At the recent sports meeting held there he was the end man in the tug-of-war competition and was imprudent enough to encircle his neck and body with the rope. The strain caused strangulation.

We have received from Messrs. Ashootosh Daw and Co. a copy of their latest catalogue, wherein is listed a large variety of guns and rifles, revolvers, ammunition, and shooting requisites of every description. Their stock is up to date and at prices to suit all purses.

The Professional Billiard Championship of India under the control of the Billiard Association of India was played at the Residency Club, Lucknow, on the 27th, 28th, 29th and 31st ultimo, the match being 4,500 up. Only two entered—Mike Elias and Ramphal Shaw. The first night's score was:—Elias 802, Ramphal Shaw 556, Elias' highest break was 139 and Ramphal Shaw's 68. The match was continued on Friday night and was honoured by the presence of Mr. John Roberts. This play was rapid from the commencement. Elias at once went ahead with breaks of 20, 25, 26, 30, 33, 34, 36, 38, 39 and 68. Ramphal Shaw's best efforts were 13, 29, 23 and 42. Elias now put on 64 and 67, following this up with a well played 104. The score now stood: Elias 1,364 and Ramphal 912. From this period of the game Elias had the matter all his own way, and brought his score up to 1,552 with an unfinished break of 155. On Saturday Ramphal Shaw began well but the balls ran unkindly and several times when well set for a break he lost his opponent's ball. The scores at the close of play on Saturday were: Elias 2,553, Shaw 1,737.

London Week by Week

London, Friday, 15th January 1910.

The snow we were to have in such abundance seems an even more contingency than when I last wrote—Oh! these weather prophets. As a matter of fact we have been vouchsafed what the good people around me call a "heat wave," and it is also a fact that suburban London has evenced a decided inclination to burst into bloom. With the thermometer wandering between 50 and 54 degrees, which is something like 20 degrees above the ordinary winter readings in town, it is not difficult for trees and flowers to imagine that spring is here. Roses were gathered at Tulse Hill the other day, and at Norwood and Mitcham primroses were to be seen. Even the modest violet has awakened to the warmth, and has boldly thrust its petals out under the hedgerows.

But while the vegetable kingdom is smiling and gay, human nature I observed is just the reverse. The habitual gloomy ferocity of the middle and lower class Londoner has culminated in general rowdyism and disorderly conduct, the streets are no place for the decent citizen, placards of amazing vulgarity and incredible mendacity offend the eye at every turn, missles are flying about, gross language and ill-feeling are rampant. In a word we are in the midst of the general election. Throughout the week scenes of violence (the most fertile and silliest of political "arguments") have been painfully manifest: the Mountebank tactics of parliamentary candidates and their agents suggest that their originators have either lost their mental balance or are suffering from acute attacks of D.Ts. Sir John Bull ('Ammersmiff) last Thursday descended from his motor and indulged in a pot-house brawl with a heckler till the police appeared and separated the pair. All over the country speakers have been interrupted by singing, hooting and the dissent which takes the concrete form of bad eggs, decayed vegetables and defunct cats. Windows, doors and furniture have been smashed, a stampede of the free and independent electors at Stepney on Saturday carried away the railings guarding the area in front of the Town Hall, and sent a dozen of the howling mob headlong into it—one killed, ten injured, two in hospital with their lives "despaired of." Why? Women canvassers meddling in the dirty business have been stoned and pelted with mud and filth: free fights of large extent have marked the proceedings at Tottenham, Wimbledon, Wolverton and other usually peaceful spots: the jocund crowd at Salisbury whiled away an interval between the speeches by ducking a Non conformist preacher in a horsetrough. And so on and so forth; and the misguided illustrated press seems to think it is supplying a demand by filling acres of pages with pictures of the wretched business. In times like these how we old Qui Hais long to be back in India. Without doubt the present day product of the board school system, in spite of his colossal conceit—or because of it—stands confessed the most ignorant and stupid creature in existence and he bids fair, ere long, to be the most brutal.

Readers of the Pink 'Un have to deplore the loss of "Nathaniel Gubbins" who in his time turned out some of the most humorous writing on sport and other matters. He died last week aged sixty-five. His real name was E. Spencer Mott, and he came of a good Staffordshire family, his father being a J. P. and deputy-lieutenant for the country. He was by nature a Bohemian, he made himself an authority on cookery, and he wrote for the Sporting Times from the period of Shirley Brooke down to the day—a few years ago—when affliction turned him almost into a recluse at his place near Epsom.

He was a real wit, a Bohemian of the first water and few men had more friends in a greater variety of circles. When he was at his best his "Brandy and Soda" was read and appreciated almost the whole world over. It abounded in whimsicalities and sparkled as brightly as its title. As a gourmet and author of menus he was regarded as a great authority, while his expertness in the invention of new dishes and uncommon concoctions in the shape of beverages was so far acknowledged as to justify his publishing books devoted to those subjects.

Mr. Spencer-Mott was educated at Eton and the Royal Military College, and on receiving his commission in the 19th Regiment (the Princess of Wales' Own), served in India and Burma. Before becoming a journalist and author he was a strolling actor.

A sum of £20,000 has been granted by the British Government in aid of the South Pole Expedition, to be led by Captain Scott, who will leave England in July. Till then he will be busy making preparations for a great-dash southwards, by which it is hoped he will reach the South Pole. If he does not succeed the first time, he will try again and again, for it is Captain Scott's intention to stay in Antarctic regions until he succeeds.

"Starting in the present summer," the explorer said in the course of an interview, "we propose in January and February 1911 to establish two bases on the ice barrier, one at MacMurdo Bay, the other at King Edward's Land, some 450 miles apart, to be, if possible, connected by wireless telegraphy. Each of these bases will be about 850 statute miles from the South Pole, and by means of them both ends of the barrier will be explored. Our task will be to cover from one or other of those points the 850 miles to the Pole.

"Our means of transport will be motor-sledges and sledges drawn by ponies and dogs. The more we can use the motors the more we can relieve the animals. I calculate that we shall have from 120 to 150 days in which to accomplish the journey to and from our base."

I had the honour of sitting near him at the Cycle Campers' dinner a few days ago. He is President of that devoted little band of simple life livers and in his after-dinner speech he undertook to carry their pennant on the expedition, and if ever it were his luck to unfurl the Union Jack at the South Pole he promised that the little pennant of the Cycle Campers' Club should flutter below it.

"Captain Kidd," produced at Wyndham's Theatre last night, has been adapted by Mr. Seymour Hicks from Mr. Richard Harding Davis's play, "The Dictator," an ingenuous and amusing farce which was played at the Comedy some four years ago with success, and which served to introduce to England that clever American comedian, Mr. William Collier. In its new form there is not much of "The Dictator" left. Little change has been made in the construction of the plot; all the original cross-currents remain intact, but they have been compressed almost to vanishing point. Mr. Hicks, too, has laid violent hands upon the original dialogue—much of which was very funny dialogue—and there is now a great deal more Hicksian gag about the lines than Davisian humour. Captain Kidd is an English peer endeavouring to hide his identity because he believes a blow from him killed an insolent New York cabman. Accompanied by his valet he has shipped for Porto Banos, the capital of a South American Republic chiefly noted for the frequency of its revolutions. On the same ship is the United States Consul on his way to take up his appointment at Porto Banos, but before he leaves the boat he finds that the latest President has sworn to shoot him; he also finds that a hot-blooded Spanish beauty whom he had jilted has promised to knife him. The Consul induces Kidd, who is only too ready to risk anything to escape arrest, to pass himself off as the new Consul, and the masquerading nobleman contrives to get out of a very warm corner by paying the murderous President's army ten cents a day per man more than his rival to fight for him. A side plot concerns Kidd's love for a young missionary who is betrothed to a man she has never seen, a reverend gentleman who is arrested in mistake for Kidd, and who is paired off with the revengeful Spanish lady. That is the story which peeps out at intervals from a stage generally crowded with a picturesquely-attired chorus. There is enough of the original left for the piece often to become very merry farce, but Mr. Seymour Hicks in the name part takes care that nothing in the play shall carry with it the slightest illusion. He refuses to allow the audience to forget for a moment that he is Seymour Hicks play-acting, and his admirers will assuredly agree once more that he is the heart and soul of the production. Miss Ellaline Terriss has little opportunity to show her gifts as an actress, and her voice is not well suited by the music, but as always she is winning and pretty. Few of the other members of the cast have much opportunity, but, among others, Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm, Mr. Fred Lewis, Mr. Hugh E. Wright, Miss Hilda Guiver, and Miss Ivy St. Helier get all that is possible out of their parts.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt has apparently got a little mixed in respect of her knowledge of London's places of amusement. It has been confidently announced in some quarters that the world-famous actress has accepted a music-hall engagement and will positively appear among the "turns" on the programme at the Coliseum next September. This is flatly denied in other well-informed circles and madame herself, interviewed on the subject, indignantly denies the impeachment and says that unlike Messrs. Seymour Hicks, Hawtrey, Mesdames Neilson, Tempest and Company, she would never —"jamais, nevarre"—dream of seeing herself billed among "acrobats, mimics, character dancers and performing animals." And somehow one can not quite contemplate the Divine Sarah rendering the death scene from "La dame aux Camellias" in a ten-minite item sandwiched between say something by Wilkie Bard and Professor Zero and his learned pigs. Still you never know, souvent femmes varie. She says she understood that there would be a series of performances of exceptional brilliance, in which she would be associated with the leading French and English dramatic artists, Miss Ellen Terry and Miss Marie Tempest being mentioned amongst the latter. She did not know what the Coliseum was. She was told it was one of the leading London theatres, and was astounded to hear that it was called a "music-hall." "I have never had any idea," she said, "and never shall have, of appearing before a music-hall audience in London or elsewhere. I have not the slightest desire to experience this sensation." As I say rumours for and against this appearance are equally strong. The terms are stated to be £1,000 a week or roughly £8-4-0 a minute for two ten-minute turns per day. —Nous verrons.

London has lost one of its most eccentric characters by the death of the "Prophet" Baxter. He was in deacon's orders of the Church of England, and in 1860-61 was a curate in Ontario. After his return to England he organised a philanthropic mission in Shoreditch, and interested himself in the distribution of gospels in Continental cities.

Poor old Baxter was a follower of those prophets who were busy in England during the Napoleonic age, the seers who, with the Apocalypse before them, would calculate to a month the date for the Fall of the Pope and the Chaining of the Old Serpent. He lived long enough to see many of his prophecies unfulfilled, but such miscalculations never abashed him, he published revised editions of them!

The last of his prophetic works gave 1929 or 1931—experience had at last taught Mr. Baxter caution—as the year when the Beast, a leader of Democrats, would seal his host while a hundred and forty-four thousand ruffled Baxterites would fly on eagles' wings to the desert of Sinai. There is no doubt that his tale of wonders to come never wanted hearers undispirited by the refusal of the Man of Sin to appear at the gates assigned to him. By all accounts he was an amiable prophet, without an enemy in the world but the Great Dragon.

"IN AN INDIAN JUNGLE."*

This is the title of an attractive work by the well known sporting writer "Skene Dhu," who is also a valued contributor to our columns. It is an excellent volume, printed in the best possible type and gives a deal of interesting information on Indian jungle lore. The book consists of six pleasant chapters, most of which are nicely illustrated, all relating in a racy, chatty style to the denizens of the wilds. For instance, the opening chapter gives you an insight into the life of the wild buffalo in the grand old bull called Boda. In the same vein is depicted the life of the wild dog Son-Kutta, Anay the great tusker of the Mysore forests, Bhaloo the bear and Dakur the Deccanee bear and Mahseer the carp. Then we have the story of Sher the tiger and Sambur the deer. All these are themselves made to describe their joys, their pleasures, vicissitudes and the ups and downs of life in much the same way as the heroine of a novel. The writer's love of the beautiful in nature is by no means the least delightful feature of the book. Take, for example, his description of Tor the monster fish. "In rice fields, glorious with their bladed carpet of emerald-green Tor lived and throve . . . Ambition had it that should swim down, down to mighty Mother Ganga, to see the great river that flowed towards the distant ocean . . . and further, to float down past the sacred cities, their bathing-ghauts bright with the gay-coloured sarees of the women, in contrast to the dull grey temples, or domed mosques with snow white minerets standing out against the intense blue of the Indian sky. But desire drew him upstream, for the waters, as they murmured their tireless way downward, whispered to him of many things—of pine-clad hills and foaming waterfalls, of the fragrant deodars and scarlet pomegranates, the gay rhododendrons, and far away, beyond even the sources of his river home, the great snow-clad mountains that raise their summits, clad in a garment of eternal whiteness, into the misty heavens."

"In an Indian Jungle" is by no means a pretentious work nor is it in any way encyclopædic; but it affords an admirable insight into animal life. It is a portrayal of the free spirit of the jungle by a reminiscent junglewalla, and as such, is bound to be interesting.

SHOOTING IN UPPER BURMA.

Bison and Tsine.

In these parts I have spent many Christmas and other holidays away in the wild woods in a solitary camp in the heart of some rugged mountain range, surrounded by herds of wild elephants, bison, tsine, tiger, bear, sambur, wild dog et hoc genus omne. If by a magic mirror you could see some of these pictures as they now rise before me; by Zancig's telepathic power these mental photos could be transmitted, you would think them the phantasms of the brain of a Rider Haggard rather than realities.

The pathless Chhin Hills; the home of wild beasts and wilder men,—these saw our début as a bison, tsine and elephant hunter. Here we first tasted the ecstacy of big game shooting, always alone, always on foot, except for the priceless companionship of some renowned hunter, whom Pathfinder or Leatherstocking could never surpass, to whom the forest and all its inhabitants was an open book, and no turns or twists or miles could ever baulk. The animal may have passed days ago, he might be a score of miles away; we might sleep days on the spoor, but, unfailingly, the quarry was run down, outmanœuvred.

Was it chance that the final scene was laid in some spot, more wild, more savage, than usual, or had the game thus chosen its most favoured spot for its final act. How many such spots are enshrined in one's mind by the unalloyed happiness we tasted there.

Here was the roaring L—t torrent, on whose banks we camped for about six months, and revelled in its silvery mahseer. From there I started on my first bison hunt and bagged my first bison, a good bull.

Twenty miles south is Nagalin-Koo (mahseer's leap), a ridge separating two valleys, two torrents, so narrow that a mahseer could cross from one stream to the other! (The ridge is some 200 feet high.)

Shall we ever forget that day, dark, dismal, rainy, and misty, when, after three days of tracking and many failures, at sunset we arranged to camp on a small torrent, thoroughly beat, and despairing of ever shooting a tsine. But after the camp arrangements had begun, still tired, chilled and very hungry, we determined to breast one hill more. There were the ever-fresh yet ever-retreating tracks, the will o' the wisp that had led us a bewildering dance over hills, dales, precipices, gorges, torrents, till our dazed brains were a living bioscope.

Like drowned rats we dragged ourselves up the unending hill, the double ·577 seeming for once a useless burden, whilst the sloppy lop-sided old Buffalo-Bill we at that time sported, gave us the appearance of an out-at-elbows ranchero escaped from the Lynchers At last we reach a plateau of some 20 acres, beyond. are hills, pathless, and only ending in the Bay of Bengal, 209 miles beyond. The forest is above and around, rain still drips, the sun has set, and the prospect is gloomy and forbidding. Even Thayan's iron limbs refuse to go further; his usually flashing eyes gaze listlessly around.

Dense greenery all round, dashs of yellow of the drying Chhin leaf (a leaf big enough to conceal a man), and blotches of red anthills, alone meet the eye. But—! suddenly Thayan stiffens to a statue. his eagle eyes are rivetted on an anthill? Pooh! there is nothing living within a mile. Ha! a sapling waves violently, the anthill is moving! I rub my eyes: Thayan is dragging me behind our anthill, crouching like a panther. My eyes are fixed on the moving anthill, as I step sideways I trip against the anthill and roll over in the mud. Next moment the ·577 is following the direction of his quivering forefinger, and, as a huge head with amber-green horns appears, the crash of seven drams of powder rings out and startles the long sleeping echoes. How sweet sounds the familiar voice to me who have been dying to hear it all these days.

A mighty rush follows the thunder of mighty hoofs: we strain our ears for the climax: crack, crack, crack, down! We rush forward like bloodhounds: a cavernous bellow fills the air and guides us to the spot; and, there lies my first tsine.

What a change comes with success: gone is fatigue, gone are the blue-devils. Thayan rushes off to call up the camp, for there is a lovely little stream near by, the desolate wilderness is a beautiful glade where the Naiads and Dryads might disport, and the king of the fairies might hold his court. I am now alone, but how different are my thoughts.

And what of the bison of the L—t, my first bison. A description of that hunt is interesting as showing the difference between the two pursuits.

In Burma, the bison and the tsine may be found in the same forests, and, if you have seven-league boots, you may encounter, and if the gods permit, even bag a bull of each kind, as I did once, once in twenty years of almost continuous shooting in the wildest districts of Burma, from the Chinese border to the haunts of the "Sapi" and the "Sladang;" from the the Chhin to the Shan Hills.

The tsine is a lowlander, the bison a highlander: the bison loves coolth and moisture, the tsine likes dryness and beat; the bison is fearless when roused, and can be a very devil. I knew of one very old lame solitaire, who haunted the fabled Waybula Hill, and whose terror for many years kept his vast preserve a very Bluebeard's den. Seventeen of the bravest hunter's ghosts rode on his head. For many years he was not hunted: "Ae" was the hunter. A whiff of the hunter's wind, a wreath of smoke miles away, where the men sat round the humble meal; a glimmering of the distant campfire, round which lay the tired trackers, on the ground; careless of the prowling tiger, the blundering bear, the herds of elephants: forgetful also of the Lame One, the Wehr bison! Silent and ghostlike Nemesis draws near in the shape of a black 22-hand monster with blazing eyes. A roar and a mighty leap; and the hunters have gone to the happy valley!

The circumstances attending the slaying of this murderous fiend are unsuited to a sober recital, and will be reserved for the time when we begin to emulate Rider Haggard, or start on a second series of Gulliver.

But to return to the bison. On leaving camp on the L—t, my hunter Shwe-Gyi, a born mountaineer, but who had never been on these hills, instinctively turned up one of the longest spurs leading northwards, and with a deep dark gorge on our right called the Woon-hmosy (bear mauled). After a continuous climb of over three hours on slopes as steep as a roof-slope (we were all in hard condition fortunately), we got on to a narrow neck or ridge which led us amongst grand scenery to just below the high peak, over 4,000 feet at least. Here we turned east and got on to another long neck or ridge which leads for many miles and almost abuts on the M—a river the old boundary between Burma and the Chin Hills. Up to this we had seen kakur, sambur, tiger, and bear tracks only, and might have bagged some of the deer tribe. I was beginning to think we were too high up for bison, and the cover was not dense enough. But, what is it that Shwe Gyi and the other tracker are examining so intently? They were the deep fresh tracks of a couple of bull bison, Nee Naung, elder and younger, brothers. Both taine and bison frequently go in pairs like this, of two bulls, and the hunters give several curious reasons for this; the most sensible being that the solitary old bulls on leaving the herd and finding their senses dulled by age take a sharp young bull with them as scout. The big one doing the fighting when a tiger gets aggressive.

It was now about 9-30, and we had not much chance of coming on them before they retired for their siesta. With taine our chances would have been very small. The tracking now began, that most interesting and necessary preliminary to big game shooting; which sometimes becomes tedious, and always requires patience, skill and dogged perseverance. Here is where the value of a first-class tracker comes in. If his skill is equal to his keenness, and his hardihood and endurance back up his pluck, you have a real big game hunter. You may fall back some 20 or 30 yards with an easy mind and follow, knowing that if mortal can bring you up to your game, that man is in front of you. Till the crucial moment comes when you are called upon to do your part, that on which the fate of the whole hunt depends, on which victory or defeat, success or failure, perhaps even life and death, hang; you can do no good, you may even ruin everything. The trackers must often wish they could keep the apprentice European sportsman in their pocket, or in a cage, till they want him to shoot. How many bungle things even if they manage to draw within easy range. We have been told some most comical yarns round the camp fire, of the excruciating antics of "Thekins" on being brought up to elephant, bison or tsine, most alarming to the trackers themselves, and surprising to the animal concerned. Some people are too nervous or excitable and impatient ever to reach the top-notch of the shikar platform: coolness and patience are more necessary than dash or pluck. The latter are more likely to lead to failure and disaster.

The tracks led east along the big ridge for a mile or so, then turned north down a long spur leading north, and down into a deep dark gorge covered with dense grass, bamboo and scrub, with some immense trees interspersed. We went so low as to hear the rush of water below, but here the tracker made a cast to the other side of the spur, and met their ascending tracks. They had only come down for a drink perhaps, and were going up to the breezy and cool heights for their siesta. They kept along the steepest side slopes, as if preferring these to more even going. At last we could see the junction of the spur with the main ridge. A small plateau below a rocky scarp, strewn with huge black boulders, and shaded with wild plantains and other big leaved plants; indicating moisture and coolth. There was a spring here from which a rocky nala began. It was an ideal place for bison, bear, boar, tiger and sambur. We were only about 30 yards off, walking in the tracks made by the huge pair, when I heard some startling snorts followed by a rush and crash, and thought an avalanche was taking place, carrying large trees with it. It was only when I saw the anguished look of disappointment on the tracker's face, as he stood with bulging eyes, patting his breast, that I knew the game was over, and we had lost. Could it be possible. A herd of 20-hand monsters gone, from 30 yards!

After the first crash, a dead silence. We strained our eyes into the gloomy gorge shaded by giant trees into which no rays penetrated. The hunter's keen experienced eyes catch sight of the big bull, and he points eagerly towards it. I also see another one, his shoulders covered by a tree but his head and flanks visible. The distance is about 70 yards, so I fire at his flank just clear of the tree. Another rush follows, and we tear down the steep slope also. I find myself in the steep nala gliding down in a sitting position towards a precipice goodness knows how deep. Next moment the tracker and I stand on the spot where my bison stood.

There are the deeply indented tracks whence he sprang and nothing more. The tracker follows to the brink of the deep nala which all had cleared in huge leaps, looks longingly in that direction, and returns slowly. His looks spell the knell of hope, and our spirits begin to sink towards Zero. But I cannot believe that I could have missed such a mark for the old S. B. ·450 was like my right arm in those days.

Just then we heard the whistles of the other men who were some 30 or 40 yards behind us when I fired, and were still in the same place. Down they came straight, and by their gesticulations we knew they had some good news.

They said one of the bulls was badly hit, and had lagged behind unable to run after the first rush. Even now he was close by. This was good news indeed: gone was all weakness and fatigue. I was ready to follow all day now.

Just across the nala: blood had gushed on to a bush, it was still dripping from the leaves; big drops lead us along the tracks. A couple of hundred yards further the tracks again became double: the same pair we had followed all day. They were side by side; they had walked slowly. Fancy animals showing such constancy and pluck. In one place the wounded one came down on his knees, and could not get up; here his friend deserted him.

We followed another couple of miles along the shoulder of the hill, in sparse jungle. Then there was some dense scrub beyond a shallow dry watercourse. The tracker descended the dip, I was a yard or two behind, about to do so. I gave a casual look into the dense tangle in front: rough moss-covered trunks, interlacing branches; green of every shade, dappled with brown, russet, drab; whitey lime-stone, red-brown clays, no signs of life. I was going to step down, but, the instinct of danger, telepathy: the surrounding other must have been quivering with energy, the energy of vengeful hate.

What directed my glance to a certain spot? A black trunk overgrown with lichen and moss, suddenly resolved into a bison's head with its russet brown forehead; the interlaced branches covered with moss, into green-black horns; from a piece of ordinary scenery, Nemesis glared, ready to launch forth as soon as we crossed. To bend down and tug the tracker's shock head was the work of a moment. The instant I pointed the man's accustomed eye saw the picture at once and the change in the man's behaviour indicated the intent of the danger, and the narrow shave we had had. I now had a repeating ·500 rifle in hand, and at once fired two shots at the beast. All was still, a third shot rang out, not a move! Then a crash and a mighty roll down hill. I ran down and met the rolling animal as it brought up in the same nala, and struggled to rise. A shot in the head and all is over.

What a terrible walk back, in pouring rain and slippery boots, some 3 or 4 miles up and 7 miles down. At last we jump down on to the mule-track, a half mile more, and camp.

RELATIVE VALUES OF ·410 AND ·360 GUNS FOR COLLECTING PURPOSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Careful comparative trials of ·410 and ·360 full choked guns show conclusively that the former is very decidedly superior for all practical purposes. Indeed the relative weights of the shot charges are by no means a true gauge of the respective killing powers of the two guns. Though their charges are roughly as 10 to 7, the ·410 has quite double the killing power of the ·360. The reason for this is that with the ·410 we have the smallest bore that will handle a killing charge of reasonably sized shot, i.e., No. 7 or No. 8. With these sizes the ·360 does not give sufficient density of pattern at 20 yards or thereabouts, to make certain killing. A full choked 410 will do very good work with a charge of 100 pellets of No. 7 shot, driven by 9 to 9½ grains of Schultz. This or a corresponding charge of No. 8 shot seems to be an excellent standard load. When it is desired to use one of these little guns on rabbits, the size of shot should naturally be increased. Where the object is as large as a rabbit, even No. 5 or 6 shot will give enough hits, at a reasonable range, to make sure of killing.

It must not be assumed from the above remarks that the writer considers the ·360 useless. In the case of small birds, on which one can use No. 9 or 10 shots, the ·360 is to all intents and purposes just as effective as the ·410. It is only when larger shot has to be used, and it is difficult to get as near the object as one could wish, that the greatly superior power of the ·410 is thoroughly appreciated.

It has been found that the killing circles of these small bore choked guns are so narrow, that sights similar to those on a rook rifle are absolutely necessary, in order to ensure the object being in the centre of the pattern. The little guns bunch their pellets well into the middle, and it is this dense part of the pattern that one wants to get into the object in order to make a clean kill.

It is scarcely necessary to point out that it is most difficult to hit a flying bird with a full choked ·410 or ·360. But the collector, in search of specimens, takes most of his shots sitting, and therefore the greater range and power of the full choke will doubtless appeal to him. It is as a collecting gun that the ·410 (or ·360) finds its true metier.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of all India Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

TESTIMONIAL:—

I had an interesting experience with one of your "Lethal" bullets the other day when out shooting with Mr.——. We came up to a crocodile about 14 feet and my friend fired at it with his .500 Express but missed. I put one of your "Lethal" bullet cartridges into my shot gun and fired at a distance of 80 yards. The bullet penetrated and completely severed his spine and a quarter was actually found in his jaw.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

First Day, Saturday, 29th January.

AN unusually large gathering was present for the opening day of the races, including Sir John Hewett and the Government House party and leading civilians from all parts of the province. The card was an ideal one for a first day, though honours were about equally divided, only three favourites flattering their supporters. Koregaon won a very pretty race in the great Oudh Handicap, in which a field of sixteen faced the starter, and Etna literally made hacks of her field in the January Plate. Much regret was felt at the accident in the steeplechase to General Mahon's Golden Oriel, which looked like giving a good account of himself, but fortunately both horse and rider were little the worse.

Hospitality was dispensed on the occasion by the R.A.M.C. and the Staff and Departments, and the 74th Punjabis' band was in attendance. Results.—

THE OPEN POSY CHASE.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap steeplechase for ponies 14·2 and under. R. C. About 2 miles.

(Winner trained by Major Tudor.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Envious, 2 to 1 Sunbeam, 3 to 1 Tete-a-Tete, 6 to 1 Salome.

Salome went to the front, taking the water jump first. Tete-a-Tete and Sunbeam then cut out the running until half way round, when Sunbeam assumed the lead and taking the last jump ahead of Salome was never headed. Won easily by two and a half lengths; one and a half lengths between second and third. No time taken.

THE CALCUTTA TURF CLUB STEEPLECHASE.—Rs. 3,000 to the winner, Rs. 800 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. Rs. 50 to every other horse completing the course. Rs. 2,000 presented by the Calcutta Turf Club, the remainder from the fund. A high weight handicap steeplechase for horses. About 2½ miles.

(Winner trained privately.)

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Cravat, 3 to 1 each Baron Athel and Golden Oriel, 4 to 1 each Idle and Lord Ridelte, 6 to 1 Fame, and 10 to 1 Lord D.

They got over the water without mishap, but Lord D. ran out at the first jump thereafter. Baron Athel assumed the lead, with Cravat, bringing up the rear. Golden Oriel then came up to the leader, but fell at the last fence in the straight. Cravat had meanwhile drawn up, and running well won comfortably by three lengths; two lengths divided second and third. Time—5mins. 41secs.

THE JAHANGIRABAD PLATE.—Rs. 500 presented by Raja Sir Mohamed Tasaduq Rasul Khan, K.C.S.I., of Jahangirabad, and Rs. 500 from the fund. The winner will receive Rs. 700, the second Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. Second Day, Monday, 31st January 1910.

The Cup Day Carnival was attended by about as large and brilliant a throng as has ever foregathered for the occasion. Sir John Hewett and the Government House party were again present, and among the visitors were Lady Jenkins, the Maharaja of Cooch Behar, the Maharaja of Kapurthala and his Highness the Agha Khan, who has just arrived from Delhi. During the Club race the new grand stand proved quite incapable of accommodating the large gathering, and numbers of people lined the rails.

Though smaller than is customary on Cup Day's the card provided capital sport. The only event in which the favourite may be said to have won was the Welter Horse Plate, but the success was only temporary, for the Cup race provided about as appalling an upset as has ever occurred in this connection. The race generally has the reputation of springing surprises on the unwary, and with a field of sixteen—only equalled in 1886, Blitz's year—the unexpected was bound to happen. Devon, Kilkite, Etna, First Bell and Hopscotch were backed for good amounts. On advices from Calcutta a few fortunate people backed Son of a Gun until his price fell from 25 to 1 to eights. It was rumoured that one Bengali had won Rs. 80,000 over the event, but from a personal interview it was learnt that the figure was actually Rs. 8,000. He was literally frantic with joy. Another Bengali netted Rs. 2,000.

Son of a Gun is the property of Mr. C. Fitch, of the firm of Messrs. Fitch and Co., of Mussoorie. He is a very handsome pony—a beautiful bay with black points, and is related to the great Carbine. Imported three years ago for the Cup, in 1908 he secured fifth place and he has since been laid up with splints. The winner was trained at Dehra during the summer and in Calcutta during the last few months by Mr. J. D. Scott, who has trained previous winners in Mite, Negus and Not Yet. Southall has ridden previous winners in Housemaid and Fabius, and will be remembered as having won the Viceroy's Cup in 1900 with the Maharaja of Jodhpore's Up Guards.

THE PONY HURDLE—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap hurdle race for ponies 14-2 and under. About 2 miles over 8 flights.

(Winner trained privately.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Wal, evens Tete-a-Tete, 6 to 1 Dainty Lady.

Dainty Lady cut out the running for the mile, with Wal and Tete-a-Tete in attendance. Here the latter closed on the leader and at the six furlongs Tete-a-Tete was level. Dainty Lady fell back in the straight, and Tete-a-Tete taking the last flight ahead of Wal, won comfortably by three lengths; eight lengths separated second and third.

THE LUCKNOW MILITARY HANDICAP CHASE.—Rs. 1,500 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. A high-weight handicap steeplechase for horses, which are bona fide the property of Officers in H. M.'s Army on full pay. To be ridden by Officers in the army on full pay. About 2¼ miles.

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Etna, 3 to 1 Kilkite, 4 to 1 Devon, 6 to 1 First Bell, 10 to 15 the others.

They cantered to the post after the usual parade. The start was delayed for a few minutes by Cocky, but eventually they were sent off to a splendid start, and ran in an almost unbroken line to the four furlongs. Here Etna showed in front with The Point, Cocky and Hopscotch lying next, and Son of a Gun about sixth. This position was maintained till about half a furlong from home, where Circus Girl came up to the leading division followed by Son of a Gun. A tremendous race followed, Son of a Gun succeeding in securing the lead in front of the stand and managing to keep slightly in advance of Circus Girl, who won on the post by half a head, half a length separated second and third; one and a half lengths between third and fourth. Time—1min. 19secs.

The Restorer of Lost Health.

Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Sir William Bull, M.P.

"I have much pleasure in stating that I consider your preparation, Sanatogen, is of decided value. It performs that which it promises to do, and I have recommended it to several friends."

"If I could only get well and strong again!"

How often are those words uttered by men and women who, though up and about, are, nevertheless, ill, with racked nerves, failing strength, and depleted vitality!

To them, as to those who are ill in bed, this announcement is a message of hope of the certain conquering of their physical and nervous disabilities through the medium of Sanatogen, the supreme revitaliser of body, brain, and nerves.

More than ten thousand doctors attest the truth of this statement, and have written enthusiastic letters relating the marvellous results obtained in the cases in which they have prescribed it.

Sanatogen's reputation has its foundation firmly fixed in that unshakeable bed-rock—the justified experience of the medical profession; and that after the most searching and exhaustive tests.

Sir Frederick Milner, Bart.

"Sanatogen seems both to nourish me and give me strength."

Lord Edward Spencer Churchill.

"I have derived benefit from taking Sanatogen."

The Rt. Hon. Sir Hy. Aubrey-Fletcher, Bart., C.B., M.P.

"I have used Sanatogen for some time and appreciate its qualities."

Brain, Body & Nerves Revitalised.

Mr. Shirley Tremearne
—Editor of "Capital," Calcutta:

"I had a sharp attack of fever last October which brought me to a state of great weakness. During the whole period my diet was almost entirely soda, milk, and Sanatogen.

"I cannot speak too highly of Sanatogen, which I took for some time, and which not only kept me up during the attack, but afterwards restored me once more to full vigour. In fact I was better and stronger after this course of Sanatogen than before the attack. I can strongly recommend this preparation to anyone whose system has run down. It possesses all the qualities as a nerve tonic and builder up of the bodily system that are claimed for it."

Dr. C. R. Naylor,
Bangalore, South India:

"When milk diluted to any degree cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

Among the disordered conditions in which Sanatogen is pre-eminently beneficial are nervous debility and breakdown, weakened and disordered nerves, loss of memory, disordered digestion and dyspepsia, dysentery, malaria and anaemia, with its inevitable languor, palpitation and shortness of breath, loss of vitality, and the loss of weight and strength which are the inevitable consequences of wasting diseases like Consumption.

Sanatogen's constituents are known to every doctor. They are milk proteid and glycero-phosphate of Sodium, chemically combined to form a new compound which exercises the most potent and profound influence over the Nerves, Brain, and Body. For this reason it acts like a charm in the above-named conditions, its beneficial effects being invariably felt in a very short time.

As a general tonic Sanatogen is unequalled, and it is the supreme restorative in convalescence from all acute diseases, such as enteric fever, dysentery, and malaria. It is easily digested, rapidly assimilated and absorbed, and is the greatest known builder of physical strength and re-creator of lost nervous energy.

It gives new hope to the nervous sufferer. With its use, morbid thoughts and feelings rapidly give place to healthy ideas and normal sensations.

Sanatogen may be obtained of all Chemists and Bazaars. Write to-day for free descriptive pamphlet, entitled "How to Keep Well in Tropical Climates," to the Wholesale Agents, Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta.

Dr. H. H. W. Hart,
Hapur, United Provinces, India:

"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of malaria, enteric fever, dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen."

Dr. R. F. Bowers,
Bhaptiahi, N. Bhagulpore, India:

"I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrate. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

Mr. W. L. Courtney, M.A., LL.D.
—the famous Critic and Dramatist:

"I have always been assured that Sanatogen is an ideal food for brain workers, and I gladly add my own testimony to its value in this respect."

THE SPRING HANDICAPS.

IT is pleasing to record that, taken altogether, the nominations compare fairly well with those of recent years, and if one or two events in the handicap department disclose a slight shortage numerically, the falling off is amply atoned for by the good quality of the competitors entered.

The surprise of the Calendar is the great increase in the entries for the Ascot Gold Cup, these numbering sixty, against thirty-nine last year. The Liverpool Cup did not fill, and is re-opened under altered conditions, to close on 1st February.

The Lincolnshire Handicap and City and Suburban have received fifty-five and forty-one entries respectively, as against fifty-six and forty-eight last season. The Kempton Park Jubilee has received forty-three nominations, compared with fifty-two twelve months ago. The forty-nine subscribers to the Great Metropolitan Stakes is exactly the same number as last year.

Radiol.

RADIOL TREATMENT prolongs the life of a Horse's Legs. Completely removes by radiation all soft swellings that disfigure and lame a Horse as sprained Tendons, Windgalls, Bog Spavins, Capped Elbow, Big Leg, Enlarged Glands, etc.

No Blister; No Laying up; No Hair Removed.

RADIOL TREATMENT fines down a worn Horse's Legs and is a certain cure for Puffy Joints and Sprains, Prevents Filled Legs.

An intelligent use of the "RADIOL LEG WASH" counteracts that daily wear and tear of the legs unavoidable with the Horse in constant work, whether training, racing, or on the road.

One flask of "RADIOL" will make a GALLON of valuable Leg Wash.

"The Field," June 18th, 1906:—

"We have been able to test some trial bottles of "RADIOL" in cases of Wind-galls, Splints and Puffy swellings and have found "RADIOL" to be very beneficial, and we have also found it useful as a leg wash for polo ponies after a day's play."

To be obtained from Kroom & Co., Calcutta; Treacher & Co., Bombay; W. E. Smith & Co., Mount Road, Madras; Heath & Son, Sharia Maghraky, Cairo; Jamnadas Bros., The Market, Bombay; The Mombassa Pharmacy, Mombassa.

THE TURF.

PLUMPTON.

THOUGH the wind had gone round with the sun to south-west, it was again cold at Plumpton on Saturday last while the rampart of down stood dark and grim against a solid grey sky than admitted little sunshine. The popularity of the meeting again asserted itself, as the attendance from all parts was an exceptionally good one, the road division putting in a strong show, and the special trains from London and the coast being wonderfully well patronised; while the going, as usual here, was first rate. A very great improvement, too, was shown in the fields, which panned out well, and some exciting sport was afforded. Results :—

SELLING HURDLE (7).—Mr. J. F. Hatchett's Santa Claus (Piggott), 1; Sight, 2; Haxell, 3. S.L. prices: 2½ to 1 Santa Claus, 3 to 1 Mauve Woman, 7 to 2 Noudlus, 5 to 1 Haxell. 6 to 1 Eastern Glory, 10 to 1 Sight, 20 to 1 Garter Knight. Five lengths; six between second and third. Winner not sold.

HAYDOCK PARK.

A greater contrast in the weather, as compared with Friday's mirk and mist, it would be a difficult matter to imagine, the concluding day of this fixture being associated with brilliant sunshine; in fact, the genial conditions would have done justice to a summer's afternoon. Moreover, backers must have been in their element with four first favourities scoring. Except in the two principal hurdle races, fields were very small, and one of the half-dozen events resulted in a walk over. Results:—

KARLSTOWN HURDLE (3).—Mr. B. Riley's Isograph (T. Bissill), 1; Independence 2; Fortiter, 3. S. L. prices: 9 to 4 Isograph 4 to 1 Sweet Nelly, 5 to 1 Fortiter, 11 to 5 Glengonna, 10 to 1 others. Ten lengths.

WHITE LODGE STEEPLECHASE (3).—Lord Gerard's Ireland's Eye II. (Owner), 1; Honours, 2. S. L. price; 15 to 8 on Irelands Eye II. 3 to 1 agst. Honours, 5 to 1 Etocles. Half a length. Winner bought in for 105 guineas.

STATON HURDLE.—Mr. J. Baylis' Achaicus (w.o.). No bid for winner.

JANUARY STEEPLECHASE.—(5).—Mr. E. Hopkin's Moynalty (Chadwick), 1; Flutterer, 2; Moorside II., 3. S. L. prices; 11 to 8 Moynalty, 5 to 1 each Periward and Flutterer, 11 to 2 Moorside II., 6 to 1 Frampton, 10 to 1 Red Cloud. Twelve lengths.

ST. HELEN'S STEEPLECHASE (1).—Mr. H. Whitworth's Shylock II. (W. Bissill), 1; Varlet, 2. S.L. prices; 11 to 8 Stone Wall, 2 to 1 Varlet, 6 to 1 the others. Five lengths.

MAIDEN HURDLE (13).—Mr. J. Baylis's Bordon Camp (Burford), 1; Gallivant 2; Milton Earnest, 3. S.L., prices; 100 to 30 Bordon Camp, 7 to 2 Piff, 6 to 1 Waveland 7 to 1 Gallivant, 8 to 1 Pertinent. Oyster Shell and Galamart 10 to 1 the others. Short head; three lengths between second and third.

WOLVERHAMPTON.

It was somewhat singular that the Black Country should have set an example in bright weather, but on Monday the surroundings at Dunstall Park were the brightest experienced since the first day of Newbury. The wind was very keen, making a great coat a necessity, but it helped to put the course in splendid order. A surprisingly good attendance included many popular Midland sportsmen, who did justice to a capital card, and the executive may rest well satisfied, for the enclosures were crowded by the holiday makers. Results :—

It wanted something warm and cheerful on Tuesday morning to make the outlook bearable, as the wind, though not down to freezing point, was bitterly searching, and snow falling about noon suggested the approach of a tardy winter. On the course it almost rose to a gale, making caps the convenient headwear; but at the same time the going was all the better, while now and again sunshine cheered the wintry scene. Fields again panned out well, but the "talent," by the success of three favourites had not much the worst of the deal.

WINDSOR.

Although a bitterly cold wind was in evidence at Windsor last Wednesday, the sun had plenty of power for January, but it had to pale its ineffectual fires before the razor-edged blast. In the early morning the town streets were wet and muddy, but the wind dropped, leaving the river surface as smooth as oil, and at the finish a touch of frost had made the going for mortals and horses more sound, particularly on the course, which, improving each hour, got into capital condition. Though fields did not reach high figures sport was brisk. Results :—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

QUITE the best performance achieved by Tottenham Hotspur since the admission of that club to the First League was that of last Saturday, when opposed by Everton, the London club avenged a defeat sustained at Goodison Park on the opening Saturday of the season, with a victory by 3 goals to 0. On the general run of the play, Hotspur were rather lucky to lead by a goal at the interval, but they developed an excellent attack on change of ends, and thoroughly deserved their success—the first which has attended the team since the end of November. No win away from home yet stands to the credit of the Tottenham team, and, yesterday's victory notwithstanding, the club have still a poor record. Still there must be considerable possibilities about a side that have beaten such prominent elevens as Sheffield United, Liverpool, and Everton.

Followers of the London clubs had to rest content with the success of Hotspur, for at Liverpool Chelsea went down quite as badly as Woolwich Arsenal had done on the same ground a week earlier, and the Plumstead men, after holding their own at Bramall Lane for half the time suffered defeat from Sheffield United by 2 to 0. Although enjoying the assistance of both Woodward and Hilsdon, Chelsea found themselves three goals—all scored by Stewart—to the bad at the interval, and although Woodward managed to reduce the margin against the Stamford Bridge team, Parkinson followed with two more goals for Liverpool. It is only fair to mention that for some period Chelsea were handicapped by the absence of Bradshaw. Still some larger share of success should have attended their attack. The Arsenal played poor football at Bramall Lane, and it was due to the shortcomings of their opponents rather than to their own skill that the side managed to keep their goal intact until after change of ends.

Consequent upon their victory over the Arsenal, Sheffield United step into first place in Division I., for as it happened Blackburn Rovers, who stood at the head of the competition, suffered defeat at Newcastle. The result of this match was not altogether unexpected, the Rovers of late having fallen off from their early excellence, but few people were prepared for the reverse sustained by Bradford City at Bristol. Yesterday's games, indeed, wrought a marked change in the aspect of the struggle, for not only do Sheffield United supersede Blackburn Rovers as leaders, but the latter drop below both Notts County and Aston Villa, Notts proving too strong for the Forest and the Villa, of course, securing two points at the expense of Bolton Wanderers. Quite the surprise of the afternoon was the contest at Middlesbrough, where Sheffield Wednesday, who have been making such big strides of late, went down before Middlesbrough by 4 to 0, this being the second occasion upon which Wednesday have been badly beaten by Middlesbrough this season.

At Barnsley Glossop suffered their second consecutive defeat in the second division of the League and their fourth in all since the beginning of the season, and lost the position at the head of the competition which they attained on 30th October, and have easily held until the present time. Derby County, who gained a fine victory at Burnley, superseded them, and Manchester City also advanced over Glossop by reason of a superior goal average. With all three clubs having fulfilled an equal number of engagements their records are singularly alike, and Derby County will have to struggle very hard to retain the lead of a single point which they secured by their win at Turf Moor yesterday. Hull City, who are fourth, a point below Manchester City and Glossop, could only draw with Leeds City, but Fulham improved their prospects by beating Stockport County. A. Berry and Lipsham came into the forward line once more and Prout played at inside-right for Dalrymple, but except that Berry made several dashing runs and good centres the changes did not effect much general improvement in the Fulham attack. That has been the weakness of the team all through the season, the halves and backs having nothing to reproach themselves with.

All the leading teams in the Southern League had very hard matches on Saturday, and of the first half-dozen only Brighton and Hove Albion won; Queen's Park Rangers, Swindon and Southampton, and New Brompton each drew and Crystal Palace suffered defeat. These results are the more remarkable, as Southampton alone were away from home. The defeat of Crystal Palace appears the most surprising event of the afternoon, but Coventry City, their visitors, have done very well recently, and, for once, Crystal Palace were below form. By holding Southampton, Millwall helped the other London clubs, and the positions of the five sides at the top of the competition are so close that changes may occur whenever any of the clubs have an engagement. Really only the Rangers can claim any superiority over the next four clubs; Crystal Palace have been passed by Swindon and Brighton and Hove Albion, the latter of whom have a very slightly superior goal average. West Ham United and Leyton have suddenly returned to their best form, the London team scoring 5—0 against Norwich City and Northampton winning a close struggle at Leyton.

SPURS vs. EVERTON.—Playing splendid football from start to finish, Tottenham Hotspur defeated Everton at Tottenham on Saturday by 3 goals to 0, and in some measure made amends for several poor displays in previous games. The position of the club was so desperate that it was expected that a great effort would be made by the players, but few people thought that the Everton side would be so completely outplayed as they were in the latter stages of the game. Both sides were at full strength, and a big crowd, fully 30,000 strong, watched the play. At the start Everton were the better side, and the Hotspur goal had many narrow escapes. Now and again the Tottenham forwards made spirited attacks, but the Everton defence was always adequate to all demands. White nearly scored for Everton, Joyce fisting out his shot at full length, and Sharp and Freeman missed good chances of scoring for the visitors. Then R. Steel snapped up a pass from Middlemiss, and scored for Tottenham with a fast first-time shot. Right up to half time the Tottenham defence was hard pressed, and Joyce had several difficult shots to stop. Everton could not break through, however, and Tottenham crossed over with a lead of a goal. There was quite a different game in the second half. With a slight wind behind them Tottenham pressed almost throughout. Scott saved shot after shot in brilliant style, but was beaten ten minutes from the end by Middlemiss, who got another goal in the last few minutes of the game. Tottenham Hotspur, 3; Everton, 0.

SHEFFIELD UNITED vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—Beautifully fine weather favoured the match at Sheffield between these teams and there were 10,000 people present. From the kick-off Sheffield set up a strong attack, keeping the Arsenal players continually on the defensive. Several attempts were made to get through, but the Woolwich defence was strong. On the whole, the football did not rise to a very high level. Once McDonald fisted away from Walton and later on he saved from Hardinge. At length the Arsenal broke away, and from a free kick McEachrane shot straight at Lieesley. At half-time neither side had scored. On resuming, the United's forwards went down in a body, and Kitchen sent in a splendid shot which hit the post. Walton, running up, secured the ball and sent it into the net. Keeping up the pressure, the United quickly obtained a second goal. A centre by Walton led to a scrimmage in the Arsenal goal, and Hardinge shooting in easily beat Macdonald. Sheffield, United 2; Woolwich Arsenal, 0.

LIVERPOOL vs. CHELSEA.—The visit of Chelsea to Anfield-Road proved a great attraction, for when the game began there were fully 25,000 people on the ground. Liverpool still lacked the help of Orr and Bradley, but Goddard returned to the side Hilsdon and V. J. Woodward played in the Chelsea forward line. Fine weather prevailed. For sometime the game took even line, both sets of forwards being ineffective against vigorous defence. Then the Liverpool attackers settled down to a brilliant game and quite outplayed Chelsea. After Bowyer had narrowly missed scoring—Liverpool unsuccessfully claiming a goal when the ball hit the post—Stewart scored three goals, all with splendid shots, and Liverpool led by 3—0 at half-time. Bradshaw, of Chelsea, had been rather badly shaken up in the first half and had to leave the field, but he resumed in the second half when the visitors set up a vigorous attack. After Woodward had scored from a scramble in front of the home goal, however, Liverpool got going and always looked like winning with ease. Before the end Parkinson scored two more goals for them. FULHAM vs. STOCKPORT.—Without attaining great heights of football excellence, Fulham beat Stockport County at Craven Cottage, before 9,000 people, by 2 goals to 0. Three changes were made in their attack, Smith Dalrymple, and Walker giving way to A. Berry, Prout, and Lipsham, but it can scarcely be said that the needed improvement was manifest. Berry was industrious, and at times clever, although prone to lift the ball too much. Prout was good only at long intervals and lacked polish, whilst Lipsham was very weak on the extreme left. A further source of weakness was the continued inability of Harrison to be an effective connective link at centre forward. He scored the first goal from an opening made by Berry, but apart from this did little of note. As much to the weakness of the opposition as to any super-excellence on their own part did Fulham owe their victory, for their half-backs were frequently beaten by a weak forward line that was by no means good enough to circumvent the stalwart and clever defence of Sharp and Charlton. Stockport had a resolute defence, in which Galloway, who came in for Burden at right half, Getins, Kennedy and Melville were conspicuous, but they indulged in kicking out to their own disadvantage. After a tame first half Fulham scored their two goals in the second. Harrison first headed down a pretty cross by Berry prior to shooting into the net and shortly before the close Brown, by the best play of the match, added the second goal brilliantly. He dribbled his way towards the centre and then shot high into the corner with a fine shot. Fulham, 2; Stockport County, 0.

INTERNATIONAL TRIAL.

ENGLAND vs. THE REST.—If the English Rugby Union Selection Committee had made up their minds that the team picked to represent England in the Trial match against The Rest at Twickenham would, with perhaps one or two alterations, be the fifteen to do duty against Wales to-morrow, the match must have come as somewhat of a shock. There was a large crowd present to watch the game, and the only eleventh-hour alteration was that D. R. Gent, of Gloucester, took the place of Godley, of Oxford University, as scrum half. The most striking feature of the game was the failure of the Harlequin back division—A. D. Stoop, H. J. H. Sibree, F. M. Stoop, R. W. Poulton, and J. Birkett—to play up to their reputation; in fact, with the exception of, perhaps, F. M. Stoop, none of them reproduced even their most ordinary club form. As to the game itself. England can almost be said to have been playing second fiddle in every department of the game, while the score certainly does not adequately indicate the true superiority shown by The Rest. They always held the upper hand in the scrums, getting the ball nine times out of ten, while in the loose they showed to even more advantage. This, of course, is some excuse for the disappointment of the Harlequins backs. Of the "threes," B. Solomon, of Redruth, was the bright particular star, and there should be little doubt of his gaining his cap. His companions, Bennetts, Spoors, and Chapman, also did well, while Gent was so conspicuous during the first half that he changed places with Sibree, after the interval. Johnston and Williams, the backs, also exchanged positions for the second half. Sibree certainly played better behind the winning pack, but A. D. Stoop did not appear to do any the better with Gent than he did with his clubmate. The Rest started in the most promising manner, and after some footwork by the forwards they opened the scoring. Solomon getting in well out, after Bennetts had made the opening. Some more hard forward work followed, in which Pillman was prominent for The Rest. The ball was kept in the England half and over anxiety on the part of Hudson led to a further score. A free kick was given for offside, and Chapman placed a magnificent goal. The England forwards were being badly beaten for possession of the ball, and try, as he would A. D. Stoop found few opportunities for setting his backs going. Once F. M. Stoop and Poulton gained a lot of ground by a capital combined run. The Harlequin backs, however, were not showing their club form, and the passing was not carried out with that accuracy and judgment one was led to expect. A. D. Stoop was not by any means faultless in this respect, and a wild throw to Hudson gave Chapman an opening which led to Gent trying to drop a goal, and though he failed, Johnston had to hurry himself to touch down to save from Pillman. A few minutes later Pillman led The Rest forwards again over the line, and a timely touch down only saved the situation. It was really sad to see the display being made by the England forwards. A cheer was raised for F. M. Stoop for coming across and in the most brilliant manner getting the ball at the feet of Johns and a crowd of forwards and bringing relief. The play got more even as the interval approached, but England never really became dangerous. Half-time:

The Rest ... ... 1 penalty goal 1 try
England 0

With the changes in the teams already referred to, England got over The Rest goal-line for the first time, A. D. Stoop picked up and set Roberts going. He, however, was not fast enough and was pulled down close to the line, and Chapman touched down. England kept up the pressure and were rewarded by Hudson scoring. The credit really belonged to A. D. Stoop, who as he came out of the scrum, kicked across for Hudson to run in. Lagden kicked the goal. Following this The Rest practically took charge of the game and kept England penned in their own territory in the most distressing manner. The next try, Spoors for The Rest, was about the best of the afternoon. Solomon made the opening after cleverly eluding Poulton and left Spoors to beat Hudson and Williams, which he did in the most masterly fashion. Chapman failed at the kick. The next try obtained by The Rest was from a movement initiated by Sibree. He threw wide out out to spoors, who, although tackled by Birkett, managed to transfer to Coverdale, who had little difficulty in running round and placing the ball behind the uprights, Solomon converted. Following this, England got down through F. M. Stoop, and Berry spoilt what looked like a certain try by knocking-on when just on the line. However, a try was not long delayed, for A. D. Stoop, getting the ball from the scrum, sent to Poulton, who, in turn, gave to Birkett, who got in underneath the bar. Lagden easily converted. The Rest obtained their last try just before the call of time. Sibree was collared when nearly over, but, dropping the ball, Chapman picked up, and, like a flash, bounded over the line. Solomon again converted. The final scores were:

The Rest ... ... 3 goals (1 penalty) 2 tries
England ... ... 2 goals

The teams were:

England. W. R. Johnston (Bristol), back; F. M. S. Stoop (Harlequins), R. W. Poulton (Oxford), J. G. G. Birkett (Harlequins), and A. E. Hudson (Gloucester), three-quarters; A. D. Stoop (Harlequins) and H. J. H. Sibree (Harlequins), half-backs; D. F. Smith (Richmond), W. J. Romans (Bridgwater), R. O. Lagden (Oxford), H. Berry (Gloucester), Lieut. N. A. Wodehouse (R. N.), G. C. Wilson (Richmond), F. L. Chambers (Bedford), and C. S. L. Roberts (Guy's Hospital), forwards.

The Rest: C. S. Williams (Manchester), back; F. E. Chapman (Weston), J. A. Spoors (Bristol), B. Solomon (Redruth), and B. B. Bennetts (Penzance), three-quarters; D. R. Gent (Gloucester), and H. Coverdale (Durham), half-backs; W. Johns (Gloucester), L. Haigh (Manchester), R. H. M. Hands (Oxford), J. V. Fiddian (Cambridge), J. A. S. Ritson (Northern), C. H. Pillman (Blackheath), E. L. E. Barrington Ward (Edinburgh University), and H. J. S. Morton (Blackheath), forwards. Referee, Mr. F. C. Potter-Irwin.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

Durham vs. Cumberland.—Favourable weather for the game prevailed at Hartlepool, and there were 2,000 people to see a keen struggle. The wind helped Cumberland in the first half, but the Durham forwards played finely, and there was little to choose between the sides. Towards half-time Ogle thorpe made a splendid effort, and Moore was enabled to score for Cumberland. Oglethorpe took the kick successfully, and at half-time Cumberland led by 5 points to 0. For some twenty minutes the play again went evenly, but Durham at length asserted themselves and had all the play. Thompson, Sivewright, and Duthie gained tries, and from one of them Young kicked a remarkable goal. Play was always very keen, but rarely open. Oglethorpe and Thompson showed particularly good form. The final score in Durham's favour was 11 points to 5. Durham, 1 goal 2 tries; Cumberland, 1 goal.

Old Merchant Taylors vs. London Scottish.—At Richmond. This was a one-sided game, for the Scottish were poorly represented, and from start to finish were outplayed and well beaten. In all departments the Taylors were the stronger side, and again O'Callaghan proved to be their great scoring force. He was splendidly served by his comrades behind the Taylors' pack, and he played a really great game for them, and had the satisfaction of scoring the whole of their half-dozen tries. Though always hard pressed during the first half, the Scotsmen generally tackled well, but for all that O'Callaghan ran in with four tries against them, and three of them Cheesman converted. After changing ends the Scotsmen made a much better show. Their forwards put in any amount of good work, but they received but poor support from their backs. The Taylors' defence, however, was in keeping with the rest of their play, and the Scotsmen could not get over, but a couple of nice passing runs by the Taylors' three-quarters landed O'Callaghan two further tries for them, and as Cheesman was successful with each place kick the Old Merchant Taylors won by 28 points to nil. O.M.T., 5 goals 1 try; Scottish 0.

Old Alleynians vs. Marlborough Nomads.—The Alleynians well deserved their victory by 24 points to nil at Dulwich for they played a smart game, specially in the loose, and considering that the ground was soft the pace was fast. Their back divisions combined well and their splendid passing produced fruitful results. When half-time arrived they were leading by 11 points, Firth Lowe, and Wade having each run over, and Keddie having converted once. In the second half play was practically confined to the Nomads' territory, and after repeated attacks, Wade, Kempson, and Clark each gained a try, and Keddie was twice successful with the place kick. The Nomads, on the other hand, rarely got away, and were prevented from securing a point. In the latter stages the home team played one man short, Jordan retiring hurt. Old Alleynians, 3 goals 3 tries; Nomads, 0.

London Welsh vs. Leicester.—A crowd of about two thousand spectators at Wandsworth saw the home team give a disappointing display in the first half, at the end of which time Leicester had a lead of 16 points to 0. Watson ran in with the first try as a result of a forward rush and Lawrie failed to convert, but he made no mistake soon afterwards when G. Wood got over, nor again when Dickens added a third try. The fourth was gained by Hargrave, but although the kick was taken in the easiest of positions it failed. After the interval the Welsh considerably improved and from thence to the finish were quite able to hold their own. Profiting by an infringement by an opposing half T. P. Lloyd landed a penalty goal for the Welsh and Edwards was responsible for a fine cross-kick which led to a further score. Maddocks gathered well and scored a try which, however, Lloyd could not convert, and as the Midlanders did not score at all in the second half the result was a victory for them by 16 points to 6. Leicester 2 goals 2 tries; Welsh, 1 penalty goal 1 try.

Old Leysians vs. Old Millhillians.—The conditions were favourable for a good match between these clubs at Wandsworth but the game, on the whole, was a poor one. Within five minutes of the start the Millhillians' forwards rushed the ball over the line and Figg scored, but the major points were not added. The visitors continued to press, but Pinkham, the Leysian back, relieved with several good kicks, and Hosken getting possession near the half-way line finished up a fine strong run by scoring behind the posts and himself placed a goal. There was no further scoring before the interval when the Leysians had a lead of 2 points. In the second half the visitors had all the better of the game and several times compelled the Leysians to touch down. From a scrum near the Leysians' line Dore slipped over near the corner, and Denny, from a difficult position, placed a goal. The visitors continued to press, but could not score again, and the game ended in a victory for the Old Millhillians by 8 points to 5. Millhillians, 1 goal 1 try; Leysians, 1 goal.

Rosslyn Park vs. Guy's Hospital.—At Richmond. Despite the fact that Guy's Hospital turned out anything but their best side for this match at Richmond, they were able to beat Rosslyn Park, and beat them well. It was a fast and keen game, and the superiority of the Hospital backs pulled them through. For the greater part of the first half Rosslyn Park did most of the pressing, though they never looked like being able to get though, but on one occasion, when they were struggling close to the Hospital goal line and they were given a free-kick for off-side, Bewsher kicked a goal for them. This was the only score in the first half, but after changing ends the students played a much stronger game, and the rest of the struggle was all in their favour. They were nearly always pressing, and though fine tackling by the Park men kept them out time after times still Mealock and Kennady gained tries for them. One of them Stockes converted, and so Guy's Hospital won by 8 points to 3. Guy's, 1 goal 1 try; Rosslyn Park, 1 penalty goal.

St. Thomas's Hospital vs. London Irish.—This match at Chiswick ended in a win for the London Irish by 3 tries to try. The Irish showed much improvement on some of their recent performances, the forwards playing with plenty of dash. The Hospital were much stronger behind, and during the first half had more of the game than their opponents. The Irish played a man short in the pack throughout, while just before change of ends Frendlander was injured and took no further part in the game. This evened matters considerably, and during the second half the Irish halves got the ball as often as their opponents, but the three-quarters did very little, although Moran and Macintosh did well individually. The Hospital try observed by Marsden after a brilliant run by Jeppe, and St. Thomas's led at the interval by three points. Macintosh and Moran got in for the Irish in the second half. Neither were improved, and London Irish obtained their second victory of the season. Irish, 2 tries; St. Thomas's, 1 try.

ROWING.

The University Boat Race.—The Dark Blues commenced practice on the 11th instant. Dr. G. C. Bourne directed operations, and he was assisted by the President in the limited amount of tubbing that was got through. The crew was pretty representatives, three Blues being included, and R. C. Bourne occupied the stroke thwart. Boisterous weather prevailed, but as a set-off to this it was beautifully fine and bright. Owen and Millington Drake, and Fleming and Bourne was first taken out in the gig pair, after at intervals two journeys were made to the Lasher and back. Nothing beyond paddling was indulged in, the stroke for the most part being restricted to 24 per minute on each occasion. The order was as follows:—

C. A. Gladstone (Christ Church). (bow).
C. M. Pope (Brasenose).
R. H. Owen (Wadham).
G. J. Millington Drake (Magdalen).
D. Mackinnon (Magdalen).
A. S. Garton (Magdalen).
P. Fleming (Magdalen).
R. C. Bourne (New College) (stroke).
A. W. Donkin (Magdalen) (cox).

For the opening day's practice of the Light Blues delightful weather prevailed but there was no preliminary exercise. As soon as the men assembled, they embarked, and travelled to Baitsbite and back in easy stages. There was only one Blue—Mr. Fairbairn—rowing and the coaching was undertaken by Mr. E. Swanston. This gentleman will be unable to assist against Oxford, as had been expected, as he leaves for America at the end of the week. The President, Mr. E. G. Williams, will not come up until Monday, when he will take charge of the crew. The order of rowing was as follows:—

H. G. Palmer (First Trinity) (bow)	...	11	5

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

A fair sized field met the Master on the 30th January at the 7-milestone, Poonamallee road, the only fixture from which, after the long drought we have had, reasonably soft going can be got. A sprinkle of rain overnight had laid the dust and made some puddles on the road out, but it had apparently been very local and at the meeting place there had been none at all.

Crossing the Coum river Mr. Horne proceeded to draw westwards along the bank and hounds soon hit off a stale drag which they carried back across the river into a guava garden where they could make nothing more of it. We then went back across the river and away to the Allipata Casuarina woods when it was some time before we found again. Scent was very bad and our jack an enterprisless brute that ringed and ringed and would not be cajoled into facing the open. He kept us busy for about forty minutes dodging backwards and forwards between woods till scent failed altogether and he had to be given up.

Amongst those out were: Mrs. Marjoribanks, Miss Romilly, The Hon'ble Mr Justice and Mrs. Miller, Captain and Mrs. Middleton, Captains Ross, Heffernan, Torrie, Ommaney, O'Keefe, Annesley and Morton, Messrs. Irwin, Vernon, Cowie, Jarvis, David Works, Davies, Ball, Tenron, Bell, Mellers-Smith, Rashleigh, Hector, Littlehailes, White, Varadapha Naidu, Ramsawmy Naidu, the minor zemindar of Jatada and several others.

THE 15TH HUSSARS' CUP TOURNAMENT.

The above tournament attracted nine teams this year, which is four more than on the last occasion. Owing to unforeseen causes, the 15th Hussars (holders of the cup) are absent this year, as also the Rifle Brigade and the Duke of Wellington's Regiment.

The first game opened on the Mahomed Bagh Club ground, Lucknow, on Thursday the 27th January, before a fair gathering of spectators, which included Sir John Hewett. It ended in a runaway victory for the Viceroy's Staff, who defeated the Gordon Highlanders by 12 goals to 4. Results:—

The Viceroy's Staff vs. Gordon Highlanders.

First Chukker.—The Gordons opened by attacking, but shortly after General Pretam Singh obtained possession, and with a fine run scored the first goal for the Staff. Even play followed. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—The Staff pressed from the onset, and Mr. Todd hit a second goal. They were then called upon to save, which they did effectively, and thereafter confined the play to the Gordons' territory. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Staff kept up the attack, scoring a third goal early in the bout. Thereafter the Gordons had one or two shots at goal, which, however, proved erratic. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 3 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—Two more goals were signalled for the Staff and the Gordons opened their score with a long shot by Captain Stewart. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 5 goals; Gordons, 1 goal.

Fifth Chukker.—Three goals were registered for the Staff, one being from a backhand shot by Pretam Singh. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 8 goals; Gordons, 1 goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Staff controlled the play and hit two goals. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 10 goals; Gordons, 1 goal.

Seventh Chukker.—The Gordons at length found an opening and made two goals in rapid succession. The Staff then got on and scored. Score: Viceroy's Staff, 11 goals; Gordons, 3 goals.

Eighth Chukker.—The Staff attacked and Pretam Singh gave them another goal. The Gordons assumed the offensive and scored. Final score: Viceroy's Staff, 12 goals; Gordons, 4 goals. Teams:—

8th Hussars vs. 12th Lancers.—These teams met on the 28th January, the game resulting in a victory for the 12th Lancers by 10 goals to 4. Details:—

First Chukker.—Major Mort drew first blood for the Hussars. The Lancers were pressing at the close. Score: Hussars, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers attacked almost throughout and eventually hit a goal. Score: Hussars, 1 goal; Lancers, 1 goal.

Third Chukker.—Level play, both sides attacking, but without success.

Fourth Chukker.—After some up and down play, the Lancers hit a goal, followed by a second. The Hussars then attacked, Houston scoring after a splendid run. Score: Hussars, 2 goals; Lancers, 3 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Three goals were signalled for the Lancers, who controlled the play throughout. Score: Hussars 2 goals; Lancers, 6 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hussars played well together, and were rewarded by two goals. Score: Hussars, 4 goals; Lancers, 6 goals.

Seventh Chukker.—The Lancers did most of the pressing and hit two goals. Score: Hussars, 4 goals; Lancers, 8 goals.

Eight Chukker.—The Hussars attacked, but without avail. The Lancers hit two goals before the call of time. Final score: Hussars, 4 goals; Lancers, 10 goals.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

Calcutta C.C. vs. Olympians.—Played on the 29th and 30th ultimo the home team winning easily. They batted first and when play closed on Saturday had compiled 257 for 7 wickets. Craik 65, Turnbull 48, Quin 61 not out all batting well. The next day Quin carried his score to 70 before he was caught and Les made 41 in good style, the innings closing for 335. The Olympians then went in but were all disposed of for 147 Ferguson 51 and Gould 30 being the chief contributors. They followed on and lost 4 wickets for 100 when play closed. Score:—

Ballygunge vs. Nattore's XI.—The return match between these teams was begun on Saturday last, on the latter's ground, Ballygunge once again suffering defeat, this time by 121 runs on the first innings.

Both clubs had out fairly strong teams, the most conspicuous absentees being Baloo from the Maharajah's side, and A. Gould and A. W. Shallow from the Ballygunge ranks, the places of the two latter being filled by F. N. Whiteley and E. H. Sayres, both of whom justified their inclusion in the team.

The first day's play resulted in the home team putting together 260 runs to the loss of only 3 wickets, the contributors towards this total being Date 73, Umrigar 121 and Prince Victor 45; all three played really fine cricket, but at the same time had their share of luck, Umrigar being missed no fewer than four times before being brilliantly caught by Whiteley, who had let him off before. Resuming on Saturday morning, three more wickets fell for an addition of 110 runs to the score, the innings being declared closed when the total stood at 370 for 6 wickets, "Jones" contributing a characteristic 52 before being caught in the long field off one of Hornecastle's slows. Of the numerous bowlers tried, Sayres met with the most success, his three wickets being obtained fairly cheaply. Faced with the big task of getting 371 to win, Ballygunge opened with White and Skinner, but the start was none too good; Skinner only made 15, D. S. Shallow failed to score and Stafford got his leg in front of a straight one when he had collected 7, but with Bocquet in things began to look much better. The latter was playing with absolute confidence, and it was not until he had put together a perfect 110, made without the vestige of a mistake, that he was caught off Prince Victor. White's 47 was also a good effort, but he was rather eclipsed by Bocquet; of the others, Yeoman with 19, and Whiteley, with 22 not out, met with most success, the innings closing for 249, and 121 runs behind. As some time still remained for play, Nattore went in a second time, and scored 141 for the loss of 2 wickets, but the cricket was not serious, the bowling being entrusted to those members of the visitors' team who do not usually figure in that capacity!

Ballygunge "A" vs. The Pilots.—A level game was the outcome of the meeting of these teams at Ballygunge on Sunday last, the Pilots just winning by 20 runs, a result that might have been different had some of the numerous catches that were dropped been held; both sides were great offenders, in fact it is difficult to say which was the worst.

Cowdrey and Coulthard gave the home team an excellent start by putting up 81 for the first wicket, the latter being the first to leave, well caught at point for 39; Cowdrey was distinctly lucky in getting 57, but Peddie's 51 not out was quite a good innings, useful assistance being given him by V. Sherman and N. L. MacDowell. Going in to get 200 to win the chances seemed all in favour of Ballygunge, but some hard hitting by Ansell and H. A. Cooper, when things were going none too well for their side, improved matters considerably, and they eventually managed to pass the home team's total with 2 wickets in hand.

Ansell was top scorer with a hard hit, if lucky, 62, but V. Cooper's 39 was the best innings on the side; the Ballygunge bowling, except at the start, was by no means good, Davenport and Sherman being the steadiest of those tried.

The home team had a second knock, and in the time remaining put up 119 for 8 wickets, Hemingway being top scorer with a quite good 53. Scores:—

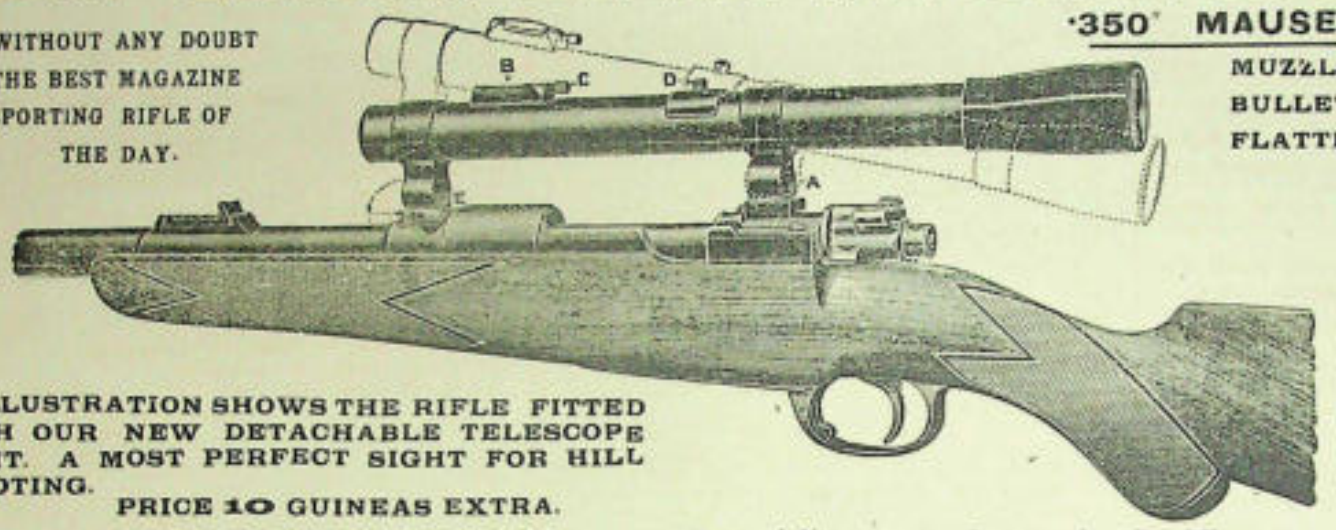
WINCHESTER

RIFLE AND PISTOL CARTRIDGES



DURING our 35 years of gun making, we have discovered many things about ammunition that no one could learn in any other way. Our discoveries in this line, together with years of experience manufacturing ammunition, enable us to embody many fine points in Winchester Metallic Cartridges for rifles and revolvers which make them superior in many ways to all other brands upon the market Winchester cartridges in all calibers from .22 to .50 are accurate, sure-fire and exact in size. They shoot when you want them to and where you want them to; being made and loaded in a modern manner by exact machinery under the supervision of skilled experts. Remember this, and insist upon having Winchester Cartridges, and you will get the best.

A MIDDLE AGED FOOZLERS REMARKS ON GOLF. II. DRIVING.

THE sort of average golfer such as most of us are, is generally speaking uncertain as regards his drives. He will often completely fail to get off three or four, out of his eighteen tee shots. The reason for this is undoubtedly alteration of distance. The great thing is to discover exactly how it suits one best to stand on the tee, when addressing the ball; and having ascertained this, not to deviate a hair's breadth from the chosen position. All this is simply a matter of taking trouble, and paying strict attention to minute details.

Every golfer knows how one sometimes, almost unconsciously, falls into a distance which somehow feels exactly right; and how, when this satisfactory sensation comes, the ball always goes away straight and clean. It behoves one to observe on such an occasion exactly where the feet are placed with regard to the ball, and then making a careful mental note thereof, to endeavour to repeat the performance at the next tee.

I read Braid's little book on golf at one time, and following his advice to beginners, started my driving with a square distance. I thus pegged away for a long time, making no progress, and invariably slicing my drive, when it did come off.

At last getting tired of this, I had a try at the open distance, in which the left foot is drawn well back, and the right toe turned in towards the ball. I at once began, not only to get my drives to go away with a certain degree of certainty, but to fly more or less straight. Since then I have kept strictly to the open distance with satisfactory results. When a tendency to slice makes its appearance, I turn in my right toe a little more, and this usually puts matters right. Many men no doubt, who are using the square distance with unsatisfactory results, might greatly improve their driving by taking to the open position.

Any stiffness in the general attitude, will at once exact its penalty. I had had lumbago, which for some little time left a stiffness in the left leg. Suddenly I discovered that my drives had developed slice, and lost about twenty yards in distance. I could not make it out, as I was most careful to stick to the position which I knew suited me best. At last one day it occured to me that I had got into the way of standing more stiffly than before the lumbago came. I then took great pains to keep quite free and easy in my attitude when addressing the ball on the tee, and the slice disappeared, and the drives again reached their usual distance.

It is a great temptation to strive after distance, when driving: I believe this to be one of the greatest snares in golf.

Long driving does not pay in the least, unless it is both certain and straight. Length straightness and certainty together are qualities only given to the elect. Any ordinary man can however, by taking trouble, succeed in learning to drive with certainty and straightness, for 150 or 160 yards. Then when he has acquired confidence on the tee, there will come days on which he feels he can lash out: and when this happy mood is on, he will send his ball 200 yards and more, and that without any special effort.

The length of shaft, weight of head, and set of face, are all important factors in one's drives. Having found a pattern which just suits one, it is a great mistake to alter, and try clubs of different shape. Rather having found a driver which suits, should one have it carefully duplicated, so as to be all right if an accident happens to the old one. I have one of the new "Dreadnought" brassies, a pattern of wooden club which has had a considerable vogue lately.

The feature of the "Dreadnought" is simply getting weight for the head by increasing its size. There is so much wood, that the amount of lead necessary is quite small. I do not frankly think that there are any points about the Dreadnought at all. That it drives further can only be a superstition, why should it? As a matter of fact excessive weight in the club head tends to shorten, not lengthen the drive. Then as brassies the new clubs have the disadvantage of needing a particularly good lie, for with the big head you cannot get into the ground, and pick out the ball, as you can with a small headed brassie.

The only merit I have discovered in the "Dreadnought" is that it is an easy club to keep straight with.

Shows.

CALCUTTA KENNEL CLUB. FOURTH CHAMPIONSHIP SHOW.

Friday and Saturday, 28th and 29th January, 1910.

THE fourth Show of the Calcutta Championship series, held on the 28th and 29th January last, was a distinct advance not only on previous Calcutta exhibitions, but on all Shows held elsewhere. The ground arrangements and business management were excellent in all respects, the number of entries was a record, the general high quality of the exhibits clearly indicated a step forward, and the judges were well-chosen experts. In this respect the Committee was fortunate to be able to secure the services of Mr. Horace Johnstone, whose knowledge of so many breeds is undeniable and who was a tower of strength, particularly in the difficult task of judging the many special competitions. The very pronounced success of the Show indicates that it would be as well if the various kennel clubs of the country were merged into one head quarter governing body at the metropolis. It is common knowledge that the Indian Kennel Association is now not doing well. With its scattered committee and the difficulties in the way of personal discussions its management can hardly continue long in its present form, and it would undoubtedly be to the interests of the general kennel weal if the head quarters of Government were transferred to Calcutta.

The feature of the Show was the large number of fox-terriers, particularly the smooth variety. This is in itself nothing unusual, but never on any previous occasion, anywhere in India have fox-terriers foregathered in such numerical strength and quality, and Mr. Longhurst must have been troubled to select his winners from the large classes he had to face. There were fifty-five smooth fox-terriers in the Show, many of them recent importations, and though the prizes were fairly distributed among a number of exhibitors,—Mr. James Reid, Colonel Gentrosser, and Mr. Geo. Jamieson were the most conspicuous winners—quite a number of excellent exhibits, good enough to be open class winners at most Indian shows, were crowded out by the severity of the competition; and if the up-country kennels such as those of H. H. the Maharajah of Jind, Messrs. Blair and Patterson, Colonel Impey, and Mr. N. White had been represented, the classes for this breed would have been still more remarkable.

The wires were not so numerous, but were nevertheless a feature of the Show from the extraordinary success achieved by the Hon'ble Mr Lionel Jacob with his small team of three. Champion Jo Hukum, Champion Billie Burke, and Jus Gladii, after winning firsts in all their classes won between them nearly a dozen specials. Jo Hukum was reserve for the best in Show and must have run the winner very close. Billie Burke won the cup for the best bitch in the Show. Jus Gladii won the Limit Special and would have won the Puppy if his Limit win had not deberred him from it. Between them they carried off both the brace and team cups and other important specials. Jo Hukum, though still a young dog, has now won his fifth Championship and has fairly earned the title to be considered the best of his breed in India at the present day. At the past cold weather shows of Simla, Mussoorie, Lahore and Calcutta he has swept the board against all rivals.

In Airedales, Mrs. Miller was a conspicuous winner with Imperialist and Miller's Imperialist, the latter beating his sire for the championship of the class. The Irish terriers have never been so numerous at any other Show in India, and Mr. Kelly's Mushak was the most conspicuous; other first prize wins fell to Miss Morcam, Mr. D. Scott, and Mr. Percy Collins. Mr. Rayner, who has frequently won on other occasions, failed to reach former honours on this occasion. The bull-terriers also formed good classes, and Mr. J. Mollison's strong kennel, which has won so frequently before was unsuccessful this time. Mr. F. H. Goodwin won handsomely with a good bitch Sher Bohemian Girl and with his dog Cobby Lavender. Mr. Baxter also won two firsts with a youngster, Gay Slate. In Setties, Mr. Reid and Mr. Thos. Nicoll were the principal winners.

The greyhounds were not remarkable; but the bull-dogs filled a number of classes and the up-country winner Mr. Callaghan's Bruiser Stone received a significant defeat and failed to reach the money. Mr. David Ezra scored well with Mayor of Margate and Lee Bank Lassie. Colonel Dawson exhibited some nice Cockers, but the competition in these classes was very poor. In dachshunds, Mr. E. E. Meegens' Nonpic continued his victorious career; but Gretchen of Aspen, who had recently won so strongly at Simla and Lucknow, disappointed her backers. Mr. Lionel Edwardes and Mr. V. L. Lees annexed most of the firsts for this breed. Mr. H. Graham King and Mrs. A. Mollard exhibited nice Japanese, and the Australian terriers furnished a very interesting class of ten, scientifically judged by that expert Dr. J. H. B. Martin.

The Story Teller.

WHEN WEST MET EAST.

It was the time of cherry blossom when I first saw Yo San.

Under wide burnished skies of sapphire blue, the sea-girt islands of Japan veiled themselves in billowy robes of snowy white, and quivered in the sweet spring air, and pulsed softly through the warm, throbbing nights, like a girl garbed and veiled for her wedding.

I was up country—far enough inland to only catch the slightest hint of the grey gauze that hangs above the stately, white brows of Fuji. A ruined temple set on a tiny patch of land in the heart of a blue lake was my home. Away among the orchards that bordered the lake were the quaint outlines of a house, the country home of a great Shogan, whose duties of state kept him much about the person of the Emperor.

Sometimes I strolled across the new springing grass under the trees that were so rapidly losing their sharp winter outlines in a blur of swelling buds and baby leaves, to where the house, close shuttered and guarded by two fierce dogs, lay silent and deserted. Every time I stood beneath the verandahs, where already the white and purple clematis was giving fair promise of bloom, I wondered what manner of man was the master of the place, and whether in the summer to come, children's voices would ring over the shallow lake to me, or sparkling black eyes peep at me from behind the clear, greased paper of the lattices.

But, at last, there came a wonderful night—a night when the earth sighed with love beneath the argent rays of a glowing moon, when the creatures of the woods wooed each other with strange cries; when every tree and plant throbbed with a new life; when Spring and Love came hand in hand to the world and made all things lovely. At dawn I rose and wandered out into a world that had suddenly become white. The last blossom had broken its green sheath. Winter and Death were vanquished, and down the valley that crept between the swelling hills came the sounds of joy and life.

From where I stood I watched a busy army of blue-clad servants stirring under the blossom laden trees. I saw the jealous lattices drawn aside, and fine mats flung on the verandah floor, while lengths of silk fluttered in tender rose-pink and full golden-yellow from the low bamboo railing. Girls with shuffling steps brought out the smoking boxes of black lacquer, and set them on the lawns, under the trees, while here and there, like a huge scarlet flower among the green, glowed the low tea-tables of rare red lacquer work. Great lanterns of stretched and painted silk swung like flaunting tropical flowers among the perfumed delicate whiteness of the trees.

By the time the sun was fully up and the air was fragrant with the scent of the new blown flowers, the sound of music was wafted to me by the fitful breeze. Now low, now loud, it rose and fell, a strain of barbaric joy.

A tiny bridge of painted bamboo, built into a sharp arch, connected my temple with the orchards, and I took my stand there to do kow-tow to the great lord who was coming. What a procession they made, these little yellow people, who yet are so great. Their joy was beautiful, their exclamations of rapture at the loveliness of the scene were so unaffected, their tender fashion of touching here and there a bloom laden branch, their solicitude for the aged and the young among the throng, wiped out for ever from my mind the strange and awful tales of mediæval savagery, that travellers hear as they wander through the Land of the Rising Sun.

Amid his friends and his servitors the Shogun rode, a black-browed, stern-faced man, with grey streaks in his thick coarse hair, and deep furrows crossing his orange skin. At his stirrup was a litter, a gorgeous thing of lacquer and inlay, fenced from prying eyes by tiny blinds of finest reed matting. I guessed the child wife—or perhaps a gaudily painted geisha, lay within, but I had no curiousity on the subject, for the little yellow women with their beady eyes, sleek black hair, and thick lips, had no charms for me; and by the time the Noble had bidden me welcome and waved me sit by his side and smoke and drink saki with him, I had forgotten the existence of women in the delicious picturesqueness of the scene.

Our pipes lay ready to be filled, and a group of girls with the tiny saki cups stood by. The Shogun looked round impatiently, and I guessed that beneath his embroideries and the array of gold and jewelled weapons that circled his body there beat the wild, untamed heart of the old time Japanese warrior.

Suddenly his angry brows relaxed, and he waved his hand towards me as though commanding I should be served first. From among the girls I saw a vision float across the grass. She was young, a mere child in my eyes, and, oh! so fair of skin, so slender of form, so delicate of feature, that she seemed a being of quite another world. On bended knee she served me, filling my pipe with wee waxen fingers, white as driven snow. As she gave me the saki cup our hands met, and the long lashes that vested her eyes from me quivered above the rose and lily of her cheeks.

She was so young a thing, and the fine crepe kimino outlined so clearly her tender curves and outlines that I guessed she was the Noble's daughter, though how so swarthy a man could have fathered so fair a child I could not guess. But as the day wore on and the feast ran through its many courses, I heard enough to make me realise that this white girl, delicate and perfumed as the cherry blossom itself, was wife to my host, and as the wonder grew to certainty in my heart, I hated him for owning so lovely a thing.

Once, when she would have gone to play with the girls and he caught her by the arm and drew her sharply to his side, I knew that she hated him, too, for she flashed one look into my eyes that meant a volume of degradation and loathing.

But the feast went on; and the sun, in an orgy of crimson and gold, was swinging to the west, when out of the shadowy valleys there rang a clamour of trumpets and metal drums. The Shogun sprang to his feet and every man, young and old, followed his example.

I only remember out of the tangle of the flying moments, the lovely white girl, white with the creamy tint of ivory and without the false red in her cheeks, bringing her lord the great sword he had laid aside. The scabbard was over-run with yellow dragons, and the guard was of gold and silver beaten into the polished iron. There was the clatter of horses hoofs, the low wail of a woman—and then silence. The white orchards were empty and still; the lanterns swung all unlit; though the paper lattices of the house a dun light shone; and before me, in the starlight, stood Yo San.

Her face was pale with excitement, her mouth quivered with fear as does the mouth of a child, but deep down in her eyes, strange golden brown eyes, was a slight—and a promise.

And then the time passed, and I saw her not again except at a distance moving among the gardens; and then came the news of his death.

The time passed again and I saw her not at all; till at last I spied her fishing in the little streams that like silver snakes slid down the hill—and then we met.

The cherry blossom turned from white to brown, and then to fruit that set, and in season turned from green to gold, and then to scarlet. And all the summer through I lived in the ruined temple in the shallow lake, and Yo San dwelt in the quaint house among the fruiting trees. Only the dogs and a couple of old women lived with her, and they grew to look for my coming and not to care when I left. Sometimes I spent days and evening there among the clematis and the silken hangings. Sometimes she would come to me, looking like a wraith among the ruins—for she wore white to please me. Yes! within a month of the time the Shogun's death was reported, Yo San lived for the day when the time of mourning should be passed and we should be wed. She would sit at my feet, with her lovely flower face raised to mine. She would curl into the hollow of my arms like a supple kitten, nestling her dear head against my throat. She tried to learn English for my sake, and used to say in sweetest broken, shy tones, "I love you."

Beneath the tender coyness of her childest ways there was a depth of passion that thrilled me to the soul. Once, as autumn fingers crept about the woods and touched the hill top with soft snows I asked her if it was not true that his relations might claim her.

As I spoke she shivered, and murmured, "But I am yours. If you cannot keep me, then"—she sighed, and turning away her head wept till I kissed her, and promised I would always guard her.

All the winter through, when the snows against the blue ice made my home like a Hiroshiki picture, we were happy. The look of the frightened girlhood left her face. Love had transformed her into a woman, and made her brave. When the cherries bloomed again we decided to go away,—far away where the Shogun's relations could never find us, and we could be happy man and wife. But the almond blossoms came before the cherry, and on the very day that the clouds of pink and white broke out against the clear pale sky a messenger came to Yo San and told her that the war was over and that her lord lived, and proposed to rest at his country house for some weeks.

She told me the news herself, when I came upon her directing her servants to prepare for the return of the master. She said little, but looked whiter than ever, and the lashes of her golden eyes cast black shadows across the soft roundness of her cheeks. I told her I would go away so that she might the easier be happy again, but she caught my hand up and laid it on her bosom and begged me to stay for one day after the Shogun's return. "I shall have something which I have not now to give you in remembrance," she whispered, with her sweet lips so close to my ear that they brushed me and made me tremble, as her touch always did.

When the hour came, her maids decked her in white and gold, and put great bunches of almond blossom among the masses of her hair. When she was dressed, she came on to the verandah with me. "You kissed me here when the cherries bloomed. Kiss me again." For one passionate moment her whole being clung to mine. I could feel every fibre of her dear body thrill at my embrace. Then, through the evening, the sharp gallop of iron hoofs rang, and while her soul cried "stay!" her little hands thrust me from her, and down the steps into the shadows of the orchard.

As I crossed the bamboo bridge, I caught the sound of voices and the rattle of arms. The Shogun had returned. I lay awake till dawn flushed the sky, and till Fuji looked up white and grey in the distance. Then, for a while I slept, but so lightly that I knew when a dark-faced faithful woman crept to my besides and laid something in my open hand.

I started up, and saw the guard of the sword that Yo San had fastened about her lord when he started for the war in cherry blossom time nearly a year ago. I recognised the dull iron plate into which the gold and silver had been beaten. I looked at it and then at the messenger. She was weeping. "Yo San," she said, "had given herself and her honour to you. With the most honourable sword of him who would take her from you, she has committed most honourable Hari Kari. She has sent you this in remembrance of her death, which she bade me tell you was made lovely by thoughts of you." London Opinion.

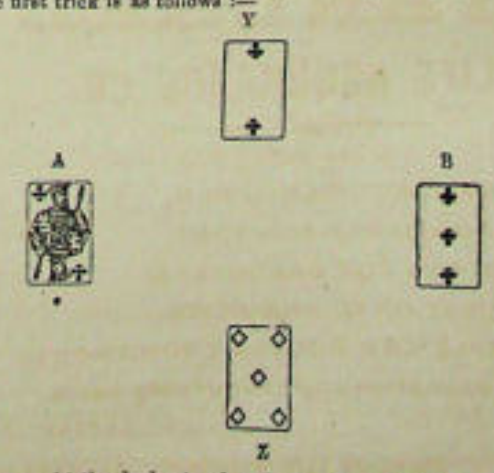
Solution to Problem No. 82.

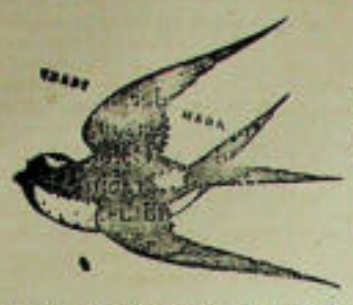
It is so unlikely that B has led from the king of hearts up to the queen, 10, etc., on the table, that Z would be very ill-advised to pass the trick. His best chance of winning.



Problem No 83.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0. Z deals, and declares diamonds. Y's and Z's hands are as follow:—

Y's Hand (Dummy): Hearts, ace, 10, 5, 2; diamonds, ace, 4, 3; clubs, queen, 10, 8, 6, 2; spades, 4.



Z's Hand (Dealer).. Hearts, king, knave, 3; diamonds, king, knave, 10, 9, 8, 5; clubs,, none; spades, ace, knave, 5, 2.

The first trick is as follows:—

How ought the dealer to play the hand, and why?

FOOTBALL IN ENGLAND.

JANUARY 15TH was a great day on the English football field, for not only did it bring forth the first defeat of the Welsh Rugby team by England in twelve years but the day was also a red letter one for followers of the Association code; it being associated with the first round of English Association Cup competiton. Coming at a time when the League competition is beginning to pall slightly, this "knock out" tourney brings new life to the game and sets enthusiasm on the upward march. But 'tis not alone the fact that the cup games constitute a break in the sameness of League football that makes the charm of the cup so great; it is the different style of the play adopted, and the consequent surprising that tickle the popular fancy.

There may have been people who expected Coventry City to beat Preston North End. Similarly, someone may have anticipated Bolton's defeat at Stockport, or the overthrow of the cup holders at Burnley. That anyone looked for all these particular happenings is not to be thought of. Sometimes in the "first round" there have been "sensations" but there is hardly anything of the sort this time. Stoke very nearly created one in their match against Newcastle United, and Preston people consider the happenings at Deepdale sensational enough, but nothing has happened as yet to thrill the nation's footballers. There is, however, material for a shock in the ten games which are to be replayed.

Already six of the clubs comprising the elite of the game, members of the First Division of the League, have retired from the struggle, and it is indeed remarkable that the two leaders in the League competition were defeated at the first time of asking. Of course, Sheffield United and Notts County had possibly the hardest tasks of any of the League clubs, and the fact that they have been got rid of so quickly will enable them to devote all their attention towards winning the League championship. Then Liverpool, who were beaten at Bristol, have also distinct championship chances, so here again the Cup defeat may be a blessing in disguise. For Manchester United the outlook is gloomy. The club is under a cloud in many ways. Since the season began they have had very poor "gates," and they have got a bill to meet for their new ground that will be very heavy indeed. They have been looking to the Cup as a means of financial aid, but they have been leaning on a broken reed. Preston North End and Bolton Wanderers both have salvation to seek in the League and they can now go about it without any distraction.

There was naturally great jubilation in the English Rugby camp over the defeat of Wales. It was not a chance win either, for the England side deserved success, though the margin of points was not very great, the difference being a goal, a penalty goal, and a try, against two tries (11 points to 6). It is to be hoped this success is a good augury for England to pull off the honors this season.

If "The Roses" had had the combination of "The Leeks" they would have won by a larger margin. England had a really first-class individual team, and man for man Wales were inferior except at full back, where both Bancroft and Johnston were alike capital. But throughout the game it was a case of fifteen right good Englishmen going for all they were worth against a Welsh "team." England's tries were principally due to individual play, the first by Stoop, who went through the Welsh forwards and halves and made a certain opening for his right wing, and the second by Soloman, who, fed from a scrum, went through on and won. The less said about the cause of the English penalty goal the better. Unfortunately this appeared to be by no means the only occasion on which a fair and firm referee was required to keep the Welsh team within the spirit and rules of Rugby Union football. Mr. Dallas has a very watchful eye, and England had need of it.

The English forwards were the better in the open, but were not quite so good in the pack, where in the second-half Wales, playing four men up and the "loose head," seemed to get the ball much too often. Almost from the start England took scrums when it was their ball. It was in the line out that Wales were undoubtedly the better team forward. Where England really did shine was at scrum half. The English centres, while splendid on attack and in tackling, were a little bit shaky before forward rushes. England played a fixed formation forward, Haigh, Johns, and Ward being the front rank. There was not a failure in this department; one and all were good, and for a really genuine forward Johns was about the pick. But every man played for all he was worth and lasted through the game.

The Welsh forwards did not let their side down except in the matter of free kicks. The scrum were a little slow in heeling, and this may account in some measure for the breakdown of the Welsh half back line. In the second-half Wales had loads of chances to get their three-quarters moving, but either Owen was smothered by Gent or Pillman had Jones in a heap before he could get rid of the ball. It is doubtful if ever two halves have been better "bottled." On the few occasions when they were not caught in possession they generally gave England a free kick through picking out. With this state of things in front of them the Welsh three-quarters did not have a lot of opportunities, but with the exception of J. P. Jones they made the most of them, Gibbs being about the best and always a bit better than Poulton. At back Bancroft was perfect, but his place-kicking was poor.

England's victory was due to Gent, Pillman, Johns, and Johnston, backed up by a team which had no "passengers to carry," and kept going all the time. It would be a grave mistake to alter one man, though it would be a good thing if they could be given another practice together before meeting Ireland.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

RACING at the Calcutta Fifth Extra Meeting was of an exciting nature throughout the card and good finishes were the general order. Black Duke was the surprise of the day, his stable, we understand did not greatly fancy him and let him run for the stakes. The Punt also showed he is a bit better horse than most of us supposed, as he gave Annamulloch 4lbs. and beat her easily. The Punt's stable had a great disappointment with Foudrette, they thought it was picking up money backing her at odds on, but she was never in the race when it came to fighting. Mr. Galstaun was also hit through Wild Boy getting left at the post. Firth steered three winners during the afternoon.

THE card opened with the Fourth Selling Handicap for which Morino and Lasso started equal favourites: the light-weighted Comprimil was the first to show up followed by Morino, Silphoe, Lasso and Bonita, Comprimil was passed by Morino and Lasso coming into the straight and Morino ran on from this an easy winner, followed by Lasso and Comprimil. Morino was put up for auction but was bought in at Rs. 1,600.

HACKLER'S BLOOM was most fancied for the Turf Club Plate—(in spite of all her weight 9st. 12lbs.) and Wild Boy next. The Guide was first to show up from the rise of the barrier and Wild Boy was badly left. Hackler's Bloom, Pat C and Runaway Girl got away together, they caught The Guide at the home bend, and came on in this order. Runaway Girl beat, Pat C. for second place.

FOUDRETTE was backed down to 2 to 1 on for the Kedleston Plate. She and Morette were the first out of the gate followed by Harene, Elpis and Black Duke. Foudrette dropped back beaten a furlong from home, Morette, Elpis and Foy came on together, Morette looking all over a winner, but Black Duke came with a wet sail and just got home on the post.

A SMALL field of six went out for the Minto Plate, Annamulloch having the most friends. Mayfowl and Ardea made all the running until near home where The Punt, and Annamulloch went ahead followed by Mayfowl. There was a good race all the way home, The Punt winning by half a length and Mayfowl a neck behind Annamulloch.

SALOON and Frank were first to shew up in the Ganges Plate with Devil's Limit and Plain Mister next at the home bend. The order was Devil's Limit, Saloon, Little Meg and Five Crown, who just got up and beat Saloon a head, Devil's Limit fell back and finished fourth.

IN the Ochterlony Plate, Manjess was quickest away, followed by Scotch Girl and Steinhager to the mile post. Solace and then Carnival moved up to Manjess, who shortly after fell back beaten, as did Solace. Craigendorrie then moved up to Steinhager two furlongs from home, and they raced home neck and neck, and finally made a dead heat of it as did Carnival and Scotch Girl for second place.

MR. APCAR has had a little luck at last with Five Crown,. He managed to beat a field of hacks through good riding. Now he has won a race, we hope he will continue to do so, but we don't think he will ever reach the form they thought he would when he left Australia. We understand he will be gelded at the end of the season, this will probably do him a lot of good.

A FEATURE of last Saturday's races was the top-weight running in each event, probably the first time this has ever happened on the Calcutta track.

STEINHAGER ran quite a decent race for a change in the Ochterlony Plate on Saturday, Batters had the ride and the American seat seemed to suit him a lot better. This is the first time Mr. Fell's colours have been out, they were certainly seen to advantage and we hope will continue to the fore.

CAIRNSMORE, the winner of last year's Indian Grand National, has been nominated for the Lancashire Handicap Steeplechase. It looks as if his stable are flying rather too high, for he has not shown any sort of form as yet since his return home.

TANGAROA leaves Bombay to-day for Marseilles with Hayhoe in charge, we wish both Mr. Galstaun and Mumford success with him over yonder.

A PONY Hurdle Handicap has been put in the programme for the Seventh Extra Meeting, the stakes are Rs. 500 to the winner, Rs. 300 to the second, and Rs. 200 to the third. This we understand has been done with a view of getting the paper-chase class to enter, as ponies that have won a hurdle race of Rs. 1,000 or over are barred: personally we think it should have a very large entry.

WE hear Mr. R. L. Kindersley will retire at the end of the current raping season, and the appointment has been offered to Colonel P. K. Beaver; with his wide experience of racing, he should be a very great help to Mr. Griffiths.

MR. DEAKIN and Mr. Garth left for England by last mail and their places amongst the Stewards of the C.T.C., have been taken by Sir Allan Arthur and Mr. Dudley Myers. Two better sportsmen could not have been found and we would like to see them made permanent at the next meeting. Sir Allan Arthur has been a Steward before, many years ago, and both he and Mr. Myers have had a very wide experience of the Indian Turf.

THE Calcutta Light Horse go under canvas on Monday for a fortnight for their annual camp. Over fifty men have put their names down thus far and it is hoped a lot more will do so before Monday next.

THE eighth Calcutta paperchase was held at the brickfields. The course was very long and a number of jumps had to be negotiated; it was probably six miles from start to finish with about sixteen made fences. It took us straight as possible to the Monsoon ride and from there to the Chota Maidan, beyond into the new country, and home through the open lake country back to the starting point. There were plenty of falls, even enough to please the native spectators. Miss Binning's horse, Black Douglas, refused badly at the first fence and being cannoned into, both came down. The lady could not get clear and was hung up by her skirt, but was soon got out of this awkward position by some of the lookers on. Mrs. Whish also came to grief, some thrusting sportsman riding her into an overhanging tree at a nasty bend. Luckily very little damage was done. Lord Francis Scott came to the ground at a corner but was quickly on his legs and mounted, and eventually finished well up. Mr. Glen came it two walls from home but was unhurt, as was his horse Ballycar. Mr. Lance got a very nasty fall from Nettie R. about a mile from home and was rather badly knocked about: he is nearly all right again now, but his right arm is still giving a lot of trouble. Nettie R. brought down Mr. Perkins and Dalgai at the same time; the latter pair got off lightly though: Mr. Tanner also fell, Fingal hitting the last wall very hard.

THREE falls occurred in the Pony Chase, which is a very unusual thing, as these little fellows as a rule are very careful, but the pace was a bit too hot. Mr. Sherman on a grey cut out the pace at the start with Lochmaben, Blazes and Just in Time next. Meprise made a mistake at the first wall and nearly came it. Mr. Sherman's pony fell at Rudigore's wall and Just in Time took the lead. Mr. Tegart's pony Shiela fell at the wall before the Chota Maidan, but was re-mounted and completed the course. Mr. Evers got a nasty purler off Lockeabie two walls from home, though he made a splendid effort to keep the pony on his legs; he was badly, cut about the face but was well enough to ride at the races on Saturday.

The final order was:—

Horses.

1. Mr. Evers on Highland Fling
2. Captain Gibbs on Pathfinder
3. Miss Forsyth on Karyoli
4. Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
5. Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy (fell)
6. Mr. Morris on Blue Bell

Followed by Mr. Dawson on Govindpore II. Mr. Murray on a bay, Mr. Glen on Ballycar (fell), Miss Kent on St. Odille, Mrs. Wanklyn on Cheeky, Mr. Cropper on a bay, Mrs. Walker on Master John, Mrs. Myers on Napier, Mr. Ross Craik on Pardon, Mr. Bletsoe on a bay, Mr. C. F. Payne on Bayleaf, Mr. Lovett on a bay.

Followed by Mr. R. H. A. Gresson on Meprise, Mr. Glen on Blue Girl, Mr. Tegart on Sheila (fell), Captain Holden on Eventide.

The ninth chase will be held on Friday at 7-30 A.M. at the Chota Maidan, and the Ladies' Cup is fixed for Monday the 14th at about 7 A.M. seems to be a good thing for Miss Forsyth and Karoli, Miss Kent a place if she rides St. Odille again. The only other ladies that we have heard are starters are Mrs. Lamond Walker on Master John, Mrs. Wanklyn on Cheeky, Mrs. Whish on Kildare, Miss Binning on Black Douglas, Miss B. Binning on her chestnut horse and Mrs. Myers on Napier—a fiel of eight—and it should make a very good race, as one cannot put Mrs. Walker or Mrs. Wanklyn out of it, and if Master John behaves decently, his sporting owner should go near to winning.

We are sorry to say Mr. Hutchison, our energetic Secretary of the C.T.C., is still unable to get about owing to a sprained foot which he came by in the seventh chase. We hope to see him about again shortly.

Mr. Willie Muir is still laid up from his fall given him by Mr. Tegart's horse Singlela. He will probably be out again soon.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—There was something smacking of the forthcoming big meeting about the Eighth Extra, but punters will be none too well pleased if things go no better than they did on Saturday. Racing was of quite a high order, class being out in the two open races, but only two really good things came off. Ramshaw signalled his arrival with two wins, one a dead-heat, and Mujeed and Evans shared jockeys' honours, with three and two wins respectively.

The Divided Dealers' Selling Plate opened the card, and, on his defeat of Padsha in a gallop, Dignum awaited us as a good thing from Bombay, though at the finish the former's price expanded unpromisingly. As things turned out, he was hopelessly left, and we were unable to judge of what I believe his real worth to be. Bombay showed out at the start, and Bandy Dick and Kanoon could make no impression on him.

In the second, however, Kafoor was as good as he looked after a good fourth previously. He was backed to evens and won readily enough all the last three furlongs. Serjeant ran well, but Dohan put in a late run and, though swerving outwards badly, secured second place. On timing, Bombay appears to be better than Kafoor.

Another win for Mr. Newton followed in the Andheri Plate, when he was able to get Sheriff at a nice price. Hishan, Zari and Sharar were better fancied as the question was the former's staying powers. He made no mistake, however, as he jumped away to the front and led Zari to the post, where Defence and Sir Jamal were close up.

There was a great deal of interest in the mile February Plate, for which Refresher was backed to beat Master Theo and Oakton. Master Theo cut out the running from the raising of the barrier immidiately followed by Oakton, who soon gave way to Refresher. The front two ran neck and neck all the way to the quarter mile, where Oakton with Sham Fight outside began to make an impression. Master Theo, though seemingly going well, made no sort of a fight and the two mentioned had the favourite beaten. They indulged in a most exciting finish and the judge failed to separate them, though the majority would have selected the outsider. 1-44 was smart time, and it was scarcely surprising to see the pony beaten, though well up with them.

Quite the good thing of the day turned up in Shawcutt, who at the finish was decidedly the better backed of the stable, Sandid being the other. One of the new ponies, Yasameen, cut out the running for about half the journey when Shawcutt passed him. Evans had so much to spare that he could afford to take a substantial lead. Previously out of it, Swalior put in a run on the extreme outside at the bend, but could make no impression at all on the favourite, Well Done coming late past Sandid, who was made a good deal of use of.

On his performance of a couple of weeks ago, Chivalry was backed down to twos on for the Newmarket Plate, a smattering of money for Posco and Lord Carlyon, which the former quite failed to justify if it was serious. As expected, the favourite was first to get away from Lord Carlyon and Posco. The last named gradually fell out of the running and the other was very apparently well in hand. On entering the straight Fizz was seen to be the dangerous one and, putting in a remarkably fast run, he passed Chivalry at the stand and smothered him home. The winner is consequently more of a sprinter than we have ever known him, starting, as did Sham Fight, at tens.

There was an open betting race to wind up with. Steel warming to favouritism from his stable companion, the new pony Regiment, Waterloo, Injabukh and Hoodaib. Regiment was well in the running for the first part, but then Goldman dispossessed Muslim and went away from Dilaver. The last named came up to him at the turn, and led down the straight like a winner, only for Hoodaib to get through, come between the pair, and win a good race. For a new one, Dilaver ran a remarkable race.

The annual volume of the English "Racing Calendar," just published by Messrs. Weatherby, contains the usual interesting tables relative to the past flat racing season, which, from a financial point of view, compares very favourably with the returns of previous years. In 1909 one day of the Warwick November Meeting was abandoned in consequence of frost, and one day of the Manchester November suffered through the prevalence of fog, whilst in the previous year three races on Thursday and all races on Friday at the Newmarket Craven Meeting were abandoned in consequence of snow.

The total number of horses of different ages that ran in 1909 is given as 3,850 as against 3,735 in the preceding year, and of these 1,420 were two-year-olds, 1,002 three-year-olds, 631 four-year-olds and 797 five years and upwards, whilst the number of races of different distances in which they competed was 2,084 against 2,070 in 1908.

The total value of the stakes secured by winners during 1909 in England was £497,333, in Ireland £36,141 and Scotland £12,488, this showing an increase over the previous year in England and Scotland, but a slight decrease in Ireland, the figures then being :—England £491,784, Ireland £39,353 and Scotland £11,203. In England and Scotland during the past season the amount won in handicaps was £200,486, in selling races other than handicaps £42,506, and in weight-for-age races £266,829.

Seven teams entered for the Punjab Frontier Force Polo Tournament this year, but of these four scratched—21st Cavalry, 25th Cavalry, 59th Scinde Rifles and Guides Infantry, leaving in the 23rd Cavalry, 22nd Cavalry and Guides Cavalry. The first match was played at Peshawar on the 27th ultimo, the 23rd Cavalry defeating the 22nd by 6 goals to 4. They then met the Guides Cavalry in the final on the 29th ultimo and beat them after a splendid game by 3 goals to 2. It was well contested throughout and when they entered on the final chukker the Guides lead by 2 to 1, but the 23rd secured two goals during this period and won as stated. The team were :—Guides Cavalry : Captain G. G. E. Wylly, Major F. G. Davies, Mr. C. P. Browne and Captain C. W. Carey. 23rd Cavalry : Mr. C. A. M. Paske, Captain C. B. D. Strettell, Captain J. B. Egerton and Mr. J. C. R. Gannon.

The Native Cavalry Polo Tournament begins at Umballa on the 12th instant and the Infantry Polo Tournament at Lucknow on the 21st instant.

The Bombay Junior Polo Tournament which was to have begun on the 7th instant was postponed till Tuesday afternoon, owing to the death of Mr. J. H. Symington, a popular member of Bombay Society and a well known sportsman. Mr. Symington had for many years been closely associated with the Bombay Hunt and Jackal Club, had been Master of the Hunt as well as Secretary, and had seldom missed a meet, He died from dysentery on the 6th instant, aged 45, sincerely regretted by all who knew him.

Six teams have entered for the Junior Polo Tournament—Bombay Gymkhana : Government House, General Alderson's team, 33rd Q. O. Cavalry, 13th Hussars and Bhavnagar. On Tuesday games were played on the Gymkhana maidan. In the first General Alderson's team beat the Bombay Gymkhana by 10 goals to nil, and the second match ended in a win for the 33rd Q. O. Cavalry who beat Government House by 5 goals to one. Full details in our next issue.

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 30lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

The recent polo tournament at Jullunder ended in a win for the 5th Cavalry Right Wing who beat the King's Dragoon Guards by 3 goals to nil.

The Bombay Horse and Dog Show is fixed for the 22nd and 24th instant and promises to be as successful as ever. This year there are nine classes in the Dog Show, namely, smooth-coated fox terriers, wire-haired fox terriers, pug, lap and toy dogs, bull terriers, greyhounds, bulldogs, dachshounds, fox terrier pups (smooth or wire) under six months, and Australian terriers. Three classes which were included twelve months ago have been omitted this year, the principal one being the jumble class. All entries should be sent to the Honorary Secretaries, Captain G. Lucas, Staff Quarters, Malabar Hill, for the Horse Show and for the Dog Show to Mr. Douglas Bennett, Arthur Crawford Market. The first entry for the Dog Show closes on Thursday, 10th February, and the second and final entry on the 15th instant.

How to make the most of a horse in the hunting field is a problem that ought to be carefully considered by all who ride to hounds. The man who has solved this problem sets out in good time for the meet, with loose girths and jogs quietly along the roadsides, where the going is least hard. On his arrival at the meet he dismounts and so eases his horse for perhaps ten minutes or more. While hounds are running he keeps his eyes well about him, and though he may never hesitate to jump a big fence if he considers it advisable or finds it necessary to jump it—if, for instance, he sees that by jumping it he will save precious time by avoiding a crowded gap or gateway—he never jumps a big place when there is a smaller one quite near it, or for the sake of showing off, unless, of course, he is riding to sell. Then he rides standing in his stirrups as often as he can, especially uphill—theoretically this is the wrong way to ride in the hunting field, but theories can be set aside when direct advantage is gained by disregarding them; and none can deny that the man who rides almost all day standing in his stirrups spares his horse enormously. When hounds suddenly check after running hard, and there appears to be a likelihood that they will not hit the line again for some minutes, he dismounts. Again, if hounds are running in a deep valley and he is perched upon a hill-top, he will hesitate before descending a steep slope that some minutes later he may be compelled to scramble up again. Nor will he go down the hill under such circumstances until he sees that hounds have finally settled to their line and are going right away from him and that consequently he will get left unless he follows them quickly. When the hunt is over, instead of waiting about, or letting his horse crawl along the road, he starts for home by the most direct way, trotting briskly for a mile or two while his horse is still warm. In addition to loosening his girths, he pulls his stirrup leathers up a couple of holes in order further to ease his horse, by shifting his weight on to a different part of the animal's back. He stops for a few minutes at an inn to gruel his animal and at the top of a long, steep hill he dismounts and walks all the way down, leading his tired horse. The next morning he finds his mount is none the worse for the long, hard day.

It seems likely that this year will introduce a new era in international yachting in Europe. Since the formation of the International Yacht Racing Union three years ago, considerable progress has been made, and this year the first international regatta is to be held at Cowes. There have, of course, been races before at Cowes in which different nations took part, but it is now decided to have international regattas arranged and organised as such, and to hold them in rotation in different countries. In 1911 Havre will be the scene of the regatta, and the year following it will be held in Germany. This arrangement is made possible by the rules adopted on the formation of the International Yacht Racing Union, under which designers in all European countries produce craft in accordance with a uniform rule of measurement. When yachts of different nationalities meet in competition there will now be no need of careful adjustment of time allowance in respect of variations of measurment. This has opened wide possibilities of international sport. Formerly, when owners of different nationalities competed for some particular trophy, it was usual for one or both to build vessels specially for the purpose. Now the yachts built for ordinary racing in the different countries can compete upon even terms. It is also hoped that this system will prevent the clashing of important regattas in the various countries, whilst the drawing together each year of the best yachts of each country will undoubtedly do much to promote the sport.

The Lancet recently published some illuminating statistics regarding casualties in American football, which appear to fully warrant the cessation of this dangerous game. It is stated that 30 deaths and 216 cases of serious injury occurred before the end of the season. In 1901 statistics were first gathered in the United States, and the above figures are the largest yet obtained, and most probably the largest ever known. Of the 30 killed 8 were college students, 20 were pupils of high schools, and 2 were members of athletic clubs. When the fact is taken into consideration that the length of the football season in the United States is not two months and that the game is only played by the universities, colleges, and some of the schools, the figures denoting the accidents during the past season take on an even more serious aspect. The general public is aroused, and demands have come from all over the country requesting that the game as now played be either abolished or reformed. A few universities have given up the game, and the Board of Education of New York has prohibited it in the schools under its control. It appears that it is very difficult to make changes which, while preserving the salient features of the game, will rob it of its most dangerous points. Hence it seems that abolition is necessary in order to stop these fatalities. A proposition has been advanced that a rule be adopted to enable the referee to order from the field any man whom he deems to be physically incompetent, but it is doubtful if this would have much beneficial effect. It is stated that the American game of football is so different from the games played in Great Britain, that there are scarcely any points of comparison, and therefore it is very difficult for English readers to comprehend the numerous obstacles in the way of a radical and an effective reform. While American football is strenuous and even brutal, it is more seriously strategic than British football. Football in Great Britain is a game, and nothing more, leaving out the wage question; football in America is a game to a certain extent, but it more closely resembles a stern fight, in which both sides leave no stone unturned to win.

In his very interesting article in "Wisden's Almanac for 1910," Lord Harris devotes himself to carrying on his crusade against the deplorable tendency shown by so many modern batsmen to step in front of the wicket to almost every ball bowled down to them. The writer says:—"Let me make quite clear what I, at any rate, am railing against. It is not getting in front of the wicket when the ball requires that action; but getting in front of the wicket unnecessarily, to the detriment of the batsman's freedom of action, and not infrequently whatever the ball be—off, straight, leg, short, or pitched up; in, fact, being predisposed to get in front, and all batsmen know how dominant is predisposition. And it is not merely the unnecessary getting in front of the wicket, but it is the getting in front and facing the bowler which is playing havoc with some of our young batsmen whose eyes are evidently all right. For I put it to the greatest admirers of this modern style, and I put it with confidence that the answer must be 'No.' Can you possibly cut or drive as well when you are facing the bowler as when you have the left shoulder up?'" Lord Harris concludes:—"The new style is an exaggeration and distortion of an attitude occasionally adopted by the best batsmen of recent years; it leads to a cross bat, and less than the full face; it is insidiously dangerously attractive when used successfully; but it is in the opinion of us who protest, reducing materially the capacity of some of our brilliant younger cricketers to play successfully all sorts of bowling on all sorts of wickets, and we hope that our agitation against it will have such effect on the cricket tutors of the present day that they will rigorously discourage it."

Lord Rosebery, the other day, speaking at the annual dinner of the Edinburgh Burgess Golfing Society, declared that he was prepared to go to the stake in defence of the Burgess claim to be the oldest golf club in Scotland. The Spanish Armada found Sir Francis Drake playing bowls. He thought the next Armada might find Mr. Haldane playing golf, which, if it had done nothing else, had provided them with many beautiful open spaces. He gave his ignorant tribute to golf, which promoted good-fellowship, good-feeling, and healthy physical conditions among the nation.

The Board of Control of Australian cricket has adopted the Imperial Conference Test Match Rules and also the Triangular scheme, details of which we publish below. The Board has decided to ask South Africa to send a team to Australia in December next instead of in January.

Rules for Test Matches.

1. Test Matches are those played between representative elevens of England, and of Australia, and of South Africa, also between elevens of Australia and South Africa.

2. A cricketer who has played in a Test Match for a country cannot play for any other country without the consent of each of the contracting parties.

3. Qualification by Birth.—A cricketer, unless debarred by Rule 2, is always eligible to play for the country of his birth.

4. Qualification by Residence.—A cricketer, unless debarred by Rule 2, may elect to play for any country in which he is residing and has resided for not less than four years immediately preceding, and thereafter shall always be eligible to play for that country.

Suggested Programme of International Games.

Main Principles.—1. No team from any country shall pay visits in two successive seasons.

2. Each such team shall pay a visit to and receive a visit from each other country in every cycle of four years.

Table showing Practical Working of the Scheme:—

Cycle 1909-13. Year.	Months.	Country meeting.	Cycle 1913-17. Next round.
1909 ...	May to August ..	Australia in England ...	1913
1909-10 ...	Nov. to March ...	England in South Africa ...	1913-14
1909-10 ...	May to August ...	——	1914
1910-11 ...	Jan. to March ...	South Africa in Australia ...	1914-15
1911 ...	May to August ...	South Africa in England ...	1915
1911-12 ...	Nov. to March ...	England in Australia ...	1915-16
1912 ...	May to August ...	Triangular contest	1916
1912-13 ...	March to April ...	Australia in South Africa ...	1916-17

In view of the triangular contest in 1912, South Africa defers its visit in 1911 until 1912, and Australia's visit in 1913 is advanced one year to 1912.

Scheme for the Contest.

1. England, Australia and South Africa shall play each six Test Matches in England, each playing three matches against the other.

2. Each country shall take one-half of the gross gate taken at the Test Matches in which it takes part; the net proceeds of stand money to be pooled for the benefit of the ground on which the match is played and the counties.

3. Each visiting team shall, in addition to Test Matches, play, if possible, at least one match with each first-class county and with the M.C.C.

4. The Board of Control shall fix the dates of the Test Matches before 31st July 1911, to enable the county secretaries to make their programmes without undue inconvenience.

5 (a) For the purpose of providing for the complimentary and other stand tickets each contesting party shall receive 100 free stand tickets, and shall have the option of purchasing 500 additional stand tickets for each Test Match at the current rates, and that no other provision shall be made in this respect. Such option to be exercised at least 14 days before the match for which the tickets are required.

(b) For the convenience of accurately ascertaining the amount of gate money to be divided the sale of stand tickets shall in no case include the entrance fee to the ground.

The M.C.C. team in South Africa won their match against Queenstown on the 4th, 5th and 7th instant by an innings and 63 runs.

It has been decided to inaugurate a new athletic club in Calcutta for native gentlemen, and to call it the Bengal Gymkhana. H.H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar has accepted the office of President, H.H. the Maharajah of Burdwan, the Maharaj Kumar of Cooch Behar and the Maharajah of Nattore are Vice-Presidents, and a strong committee of prominent Indian sportsmen are at the head of affairs. It is hoped to open the Gymkhana during the coming hockey season.

Under the patronage of Brigadier-General Cowans, M.V.O., and the officers of the two Regiments, the Royal West Kent Regt. and the 2nd Rifle Brigade will hold an interesting inter-regimental boxing competition at the Grand Opera House, Calcutta, on Wednesday next. The most important items of the programme will be the light weight championship between Goodman of the Rifle Brigade and Shepherd of the Royal West Kent Regt. and the middle-weight championship between Hill of the Royal West Kent Regt. and Bingham of the Rifles Brigade.

The Punjab Boxing Tournament will begin at Lahore to-morrow night. The Tournament promises to be the largest ever held in India. There are record entries, practically all the principal boxing men of India are competing and the Tournament promises to afford some very interesting fighting. It will last from the 11th to the 19th and in consequence of the large number of entries it will be necessary for some of the preliminary rounds to be fought off in the mornings.

Gunner Moir, ex-heavy weight Boxing Champion of England, who is touring Australia with Hackenschmidt, has challenged Tommy Burns to another fight for £100 aside, the contest to take place in Sydney or Melbourne. Moir states that Tommy only beat him in London after a very severe battle, which ended in the tenth round. As his travelling has improved his health considerably, he (Moir) is confident Burns cannot repeat the performance.

The Madras Football Tournament opened on the 7th instant, when the Sherwood Foresters beat the Government House Sports Club in the first game by six goals to nil. The second game was played on Tuesday when the Border Regiment beat the Madras Gymkhana by 2 goals to nil.

The Lucknow Spring Polo Tournament was brought to a conclusion on Saturday last when the 12th Lancers beat the Pilgrims A team by 9 goals to 3 in the final and thus won the XV Hussars Cup. Details further on.

The Calcutta Referees' Association held their annual general meeting at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Monday evening, Mr. Richardson, of the Sibpur College, presiding. The following representatives of affiliated clubs were present:—Messrs. S. A. Roberts (C.F.C.), E. M. Slane (B.N.R.), F. H. Reynolds (Y.M.C.A.), R. P. Claridge (Wanderers), A. B. Rosser (Hornets), Palmer (Measurers), M. Remfry (Y.M.C.A.), T. Jellico (Y.M.C.A.) (Am.), A. R. C. Miller (unattached), N. R. Bhattacharjee (Rovers), W. Nind (Customs) and C. Marsden (Customs). The report for 1909 and accounts were passed and the following elected to the committee for the present year:—

Football.—Messrs. W. Macdonald-Smith, W. Nind, M. Remfry, A. B. Rosser, P. C. Margrett, S. N. Bose, P. Wilder, A. R. C. Miller and a Military representative.

Hockey.—Messrs. T. H. Richardson, M. Remfry, A. B. Rosser, R. N. Bocquet, H. L. Riley, E. M. Slane, W. Nind and A. R. C. Miller.

General Secretary and Treasurer.—Mr. N. R. Bhattacharjee.

On the motion of Messrs. Miller and Remfry it was unanimously resolved that the Hockey Committee be authorised to re-draft the rules of the Association to be put before the general meeting at a later date and that the Committee be directed not to elect on the Board of Examiners any person who has not himself passed the examination.

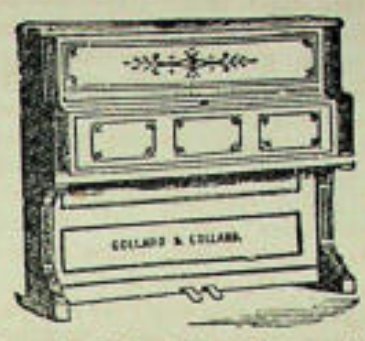
The meeting closed with the usual vote of thanks to the chair.

The Billiard Championship match between Mike Elias and Ramphal Shaw was concluded at Lucknow on the 31st ultimo before a large assembly. The score at the start of the final stage was Elias 3,552, Ramphal Shaw 2,504. Elias with breaks of 88, 84, 78, 75, 68, 65, 61, 59 and 53 won the championship and gold medal by 1,216 points.

The Poona division cross country races took place on the 2nd instant, the course being about five miles over very hilly country. Major-General Alderson had presented two cups for competition, one for British and one for Native troops. Five British and twelve Native teams competed, viz., British: Leicesters, Lincolns, Gloucesters, Royal North Lancs and Northamptons. Native: 107th Pioneers, 66th Punjabis, 103rd Mahrattas, 114th Mahrattas, 80th Carnatics, 116th Mahrattas, 3rd Sappers and Miners, 64th Punjabis and four others.

The Leicesters won the cup for British troops, furnishing the first seven men to complete the course; the Lincolns were runners up. The cup for Native units was won by the 66th Punjabis, the 103rd Mahrattas being runners up. At the conclusion of the run General Alderson congratulated the teams and Mrs. Alderson presented the cups to the winners.

The Government of New Zealand, encouraged by the success attendant upon the introduction of red deer to those islands, have determind to introduce the moose in the wide and densely wooded mountains. The Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan instructed the Banff Commission of Dominion Parks to secure twenty young moose in that district. Of this number seventeen have already been captured and will shortly be shipped to their new habitat. If the moose thrive as well in New Zealand as the red deer, a few years of careful protection should prove sufficient to stock certain parts of the islands, so that a limited amount of sport may be obtained amongst them.



Last month someone started in one of the London papers a correspondence on "Do ants reason?" Several close observers have hastened to reply to the question in the affirmative, from among their letters we quote the following:—Mr. Llewellyn Bullock of Rugby states that in a colony he had under observation the queen ant was ill. "She was never left alone, and seemed to be under a treatment of constant 'massage.' The next point I noticed was the cutting of a new and shorter passage to that corner of the nest, which was the appointed abode of the two 'cows' (aphides). Whether 'milk' was actually brought to the queen by the new approach I could not ascertain for certain, nor do I know whether such a thing is possible; but certainly there was for some time a constant service of messengers between the 'cowshed' and the queen's attendants.

"The next step was the removal of the 'cows' (first one, and then, after a few days' interval, the second) to the immediate neighbourhood of the queen. From this time till her death they were both kept in the actual presence-chamber, and thus a constant diet of 'milk' was assured to her ailing majesty. That this procedure argues a high degree of intelligence nobody, I suppose, will deny. Whether or no it reaches the higher plane of reason is another question."

Mr. J. Hargreaves, writing from Brooklane, Ormskirk, says:—"Last summer I was sitting one day on a rockery in my garden and my attention was arrested by an ant which had come across the dead body of a huge blue-bottle. The way in which that ant and one or two others whom he evidently called to his aid manœuvred the dead body over what looked like insuperable difficulties amazed me.

"They had drawn the fly with great perseverance close to the entrance of what was evidently a tunnel, and just in front of it they found a piece of wood about the thickness of a lead pencil and about an inch long, over which it was impossible for them to drag the fly. We thought they would have to give up their task after all, but in a moment or two we saw two or three dragging another piece of wood about as thick as a knitting-needle to the spot. This they proceeded to use as a lever placing one end under the obstruction, and by sheer strength and numbers they dislodged the piece of wood."

Mr. Hibthorpe of Exeter gives the following evidence :—"I was walking in the verandah of my house at Ahmedabad when I noticed a particularly busy colony of ants passing rapidly through a hole in the mud floor close to the wall of the house. In the corner of the verandah was a bottle of Stockholm tar, which I kept for my horses' hoofs. I took it and made a thick wall of the tar from the wall round across the line of ants and back to the wall on the other side of the hole, thus completely cutting off all communication. There was evident consternation at first, but in about a minute they settled what was to be done. Both those outside and those within commenced to throw up the dust from the floor, and in a very short time the difficulty was overcome and a dry path once more opened. What experience could they have had of such a catastrophe? And what but reason could have overcome it?"

In his annual report on the province of Angola (Portuguese East Africa), Mr. Consul Mackie gives some useful information for big-game hunters. Angola, the home of the elephant, he says, has hitherto been the hunting field of professional hunters, to whom it afforded special facilities that were denied them in other African colonies, where stringent game laws rendered the pursuit of such a calling unremunerative. Gun licences, however, no longer convey the right to shoot game, and huntsmen must now provide themselves with special licences for killing the elephant, hippopotamus, buffalo or wild ox, rhinoceros, zebra, giraffe, roan antelope, gemsbok or oryx, eland and ostrich. For animals not enumerated above an ordinary game licence will suffice, and no licence is necessary for shooting ferocious animals and reptiles such as lions, leopards, panthers, lynxes, hyenas, jackals, wild boars, crocodiles, snakes, etc. A special licence costs £7, and is available for one month unless taken out for several months, in which case an additional tax at the rate of £4 for every subsequent month is payable. The number of animals killed must be entered on the licence. Ivory pays an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. An ordinary licence for one year or a fraction thereof, and renewable annually on 31st December, can be obtained from a District Governor, Commissioner, or Resident on payment of £3, while premiums are awarded for destroying ferocious animals and injurious reptiles, ranging from 5s. for a crocodile to £4 and even £10 for a lion. No shooting is allowed during the close season from 1st November to 30th April. In some parts of Angola game is fast becoming extinct, while in others the herds are so large that they are reported to do serious damage to the crops.

We reproduce here an interesting article by A. R. Mathews anent the supposed discovery of mahseer in Africa, which appeared in the last number of The Angler's News to hand by the English mail :—A very interesting letter concerning the angling in the vicinity of Lake Victoria Nyanza has reached me from Captain F. T. Allen, District Superintendent of Police, at Jinja, Uganda. An ardent and skilful angler, the captain has been enjoying some splendid sport at times with a very game species of fish, the name of which appears to be unknown out there. From the photographs to hand of the fish, they strike me as strongly resembling mahseer, the well-known sporting fish of India, but I was not previously aware that they also inhabited African waters. If they do, Captain Allen appears to be the first angler to record their presence at Lake Victoria Nyanza—a most interesting fish discovery.

Mahseer haunt the rocky rivers of India, and particularly delight in such waters as those which are described by Captain Allen when referring to the Falls below the great African lake. The general average weight of mahseer in India is 10lb. to 15lb., and Captain Allen has landed several from 15½lb. to over 18lb., and the five fish depicted in one of the photographs scaled 52lb. It would be interesting to know if the captain has seen any exceptionally large fish on the move at the Falls, as the mahseer sometimes attains a great size in India. Mr. H. S. Thomas, in his book, "The Rod in India," records one of 150lb., but this was taken on a night-line. In September last a huge mahseer of 103lb. was captured by Mr. C. E. Murray-Aynsley in the River Cauverie, North Coorg, India. The fish took over two hours to land, and was caught with a big spoon. The same angler, two or three years before, caught a mahseer of 104lb., so if Captain Allen gets hold of one of these "grandfathers" he can rely on a rather exciting time.

There are many kinds of carp distributed in various parts of the world, and the fish captured by Captain Allen are doubtless members of that great family, to which, I think, the mahseer belongs. Closely examined, the fish appear very closely allied to the mahseer, and I shall not be at all surprised to hear that the British Museum authorities have identified the fish which is being sent them from Uganda as Barbus mosal. By means of a magnifying glass I can distinguish barbules or wattles on the mouths of the Uganda fish—an appendage which, it will be noted, is also possessed by the mahseer.

Captain Allen's letter is as follows :—"The fishing here is really tip-top—the five fish in the photo scaled in the aggregate 52lb.; but you require the strongest line and steel traces procurable, because, to my mind, the fish are much stronger than any at home; and again, you cannot let them go too far, as the river is very broad, and the fish unless you keep a good strain on them, very often get between or under some rock, and when they do you may as well give up hope of ever getting either your bait or the fish out. When you first hook your fish he always makes a grand rush out, down, or in the stream. Then the fish tries hard, if it be a large one (16lb. or 81lb.) to get under, or between some rock, which it is the angler's business to prevent, providing the line is strong enough? They tire sooner than salmon or trout. They will not look at the fly, the spoon being the best bait, and the larger the better.

"The fish appear only to take well just below the Ripon Falls, being the only large outlet from Lake Victoria Nyanza. A tremendous volume of water goes over these Falls, and forms what is, I believe, the Blue Nile. The river simply teems with fish.

"No one here appears to know the correct name of these fish. It may be in Latin Bagrus docendi but a Dr. Bayon here is sending one to the British Museum, when the name will be determined."

The R.A.M.C. cricket team at Rawalpindi appears to be a very strong combination and has been responsible for some high scoring in recent matches. In their meeting with the Black Watch in the Punjab Commission Cup Tournament last week they scored 194 and 294 respectively and got the Highlanders out for 86 and 115. They followed this up by giving the S. and T. Corps a sound beating in the first round of the Jamasjee Cup Competition. They put up the remarkable figures of 505 for their first innings, the S. and T. Corps replying with 217 and retiring. Of the R.A.M.C. total Lieutenant A. H. Jacob compiled 241 and Lieutenant H. Hislop 96. This is Jacob's second innings of over 200: playing for the R.A.M.C. against the West Yorks in the same competition two months ago he made 204, the R.A.M.C. innings totalling 458, which gave them the victory by an innings and 46. Asst. Surgeon Toussaint also batted remarkably well in this match, contributing 121 not out.

Following up their great success in the World's Championships and their stupendous record of covering over 60 miles an hour, Continental Cycle Tyres have scored a new and most important success in the "Six Days' Race at Berlin." Messrs. Rutt-Clark gained the 1st prize after a continuous battle of six days and six nights. It is evident that their Continental Tyres which they used throughout were to a great extent responsible for their victory, as only a thoroughly reliable, fast and resilient Tyre could stand the enormous strain of such a race. It is indeed an excellent testimonial that all other competitors had chosen Continental Tyres as the most likely to lead them to victory, and it may be remembered that in the previous year the American Six Days' Race was also won on the same make of tyres by Messrs. MacFarland-Moran.

The Agents of the Continental Tyre Co., Messrs. Schröder Smidt and Co., Bombay and Calcutta, have just issued a new booklet, "Continental Cycle Tyres and what Cyclists in India think of them," which may be obtained free on application.

London Week by Week

London, Friday, 21st January 1910.

What can I write about this week? There is positively no news. The election has coloured and covered all: thank goodness the wretched business is nearing its end. Soon the street brawling and the blatant lying, the vituperation of the journals, the painful exhibitions of little children dragged into the affair with the parrot cry of "vote for daddy" and the poor placarded dogs dragged around and all the rest of the mummery will be over. I most strongly object to this dragging in of the children. Let Jack and Tommy and little golden-haired Gertrude run about wearing pretty rosettes if they like. It pleases them and doesn't hurt anybody; but to see them going about in motor-cars and making speeches of the "Vote for my dear dada!" order—faugh! It's sickening! It's an insult to the intelligence of the elector, in the first place. He is asked to decide a question on which the welfare of the country—nay, the future of the Empire—must very largely depend; and some of these people put up their babes—from whose mouths no wisdom comes—to prattle at him! The man who allowed his vote to be won by such means must be a poor sort of worm!

Phil May once drew for us the embarrassment of the man to whom, as he sits peacefully beside a marble-topped table, there comes a truculent stranger who says, "I've just had to smack a man's head for talking rot about Buller." What do you think about Buller? Substitute "Balfour" or "Lloyd George" for "Buller" and you have the impossible position to-day of the citizen whose vanity or detachment prompts him to sit holding no form of political creed "but contemplating all."

Even the newspapers are not catering for this impossible person. They can spare little of their space for a man uninterested in Birmingham or Manchester results. The round world refuses him other news. He must gnaw the dry bone of the perennial crisis in Hungary or sit in his corner pulling out the plums from a Chinese scheme for re-organising Celestial finance. But for such exotics he must hunt through thickets of home politics. Being one of the impossible persons above alluded to I offer my readers apologies for my inability to serve up anything of much interest this week.

Some plain-spoken Australian visitor has raised the angry passions of "Pater" and "Mater familiss" and "Schoolmaster" and other good Londoners who cannot abide seeing themselves as others see them. "Cornstalk" wrote to a daily paper remarking on what struck him as "Effeminate Young England" and cited instances of the attraction of dolls for great overgrown pink cheeked boys and he generalised briefly on the softness of our youth and the unmistakeable traces of coddling discernable in the lads he noticed in this country. He must smile at the hornet's nest he has roused. Some, while admitting that coddling is bad, would rather see it than witness the upcearing of a nation of brutes, this because "Cornstalk" advocated a study of the noble art rather than that of confectionery and mechanical toys. A Malvern pedagogue writes :—

"We often have Colonial youths at our English schools, and I observe in most of them when they arrive just the spirit of brag that I observe in 'Cornstalk's' article. But they quickly leave that spirit behind them." "If 'Cornstalk' wants to study brutal little boys who fight strangers at sight he has only to go down into the slums of any of our cities, and he will discover regiments of them," writes "Mater." And much more to the same effect is contributed in defence of the rising generation. I fancy the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes Boys, as a whole, are not pampered and spoilt to the extent our candid Australian critic infers; neither are they the truculent young rascals others describe them to be; but that the average modern English boy has not the pluck and go his progenitors had when they were kiddies is alas! I fear, too true.

With London the artistically impossible city it is and with its incongruities daily spreading there are yet to be found delightful people who dream of improvements that shall be largely beautiful, among them modern architects! Mr. Barclay Niven, writing in the Architectural Review, shows us a plan of London upon which his compass has struck a broad ring-road or boulevard circling the capital at ten miles from Charing Cross. He sees, in the future, the fast motor traffic spinning round this circle rather than venture through the clotted centre.

Taking his ten-mile limit as the nearest point at which we should allow this boulevard to approach us, the scheme may be allowed to pass its first reading. On our travels we see and envy these broad tree-shaded ways loosening, as it were, the collar round the neck of a foreign capital. But when it comes to bold changes in our own London our heart fails us.

Aldwich, our bravest experiment, will never in our time be a popular venture. We do not need Mr. Niven's reminder that rapid progress, even in the fleetest taxi-cab, is impossible in inner London. But you might as well order a cottage gardener to make straight the way that strays between his hollyhocks as ask us Londoners to Haussmannize our crooked streets with old and beloved names at their corners. Tubes, if you will, in all directions underground, but the "topside" of London must remain unreformed as our spelling.

The "horse census" has been taken and the results of the Government enquiry are rather disquieting in that a very heavy deficiency is reported. Within the last month farmers and others have rendered an account to the Government not only of the quality and age of their horses but the nature of each of their vehicles. There is already in the hands of the Government a list of almost every horse, wagon, and cart to be found on the farms.

No actual figures have as yet been published, and it may be some time before the statistics are arranged and tabulated; but it is quite clear that the deficiency of horses will be most alarming. Foreign buyers have been very busy, and owing to various causes innumerable firms have given up the usual purchase of horses from abroad.

Brewers have been afraid to make the usual purchases, the omnibus companies and cab proprietors have steadily reduced their quantities, and it is a commonplace among farmers that the only horse it pays to breed is the carthorse, or, in exceptional cases, the show hackney. The British Government will give only £40 for a good four-year-old for which the French, for example, may give £60 or so. The result of this is an appalling shortage.

Probably the census list will contain the 113,000 horses additional to the 43,000 on the Army register, it being reckoned that 156,000 is the minimum required for Army purposes, but the number of horses existing in the country has been alarmingly reduced, and no allowance has been made for reserve. Without an enormous increase in the stock of British horses no Army organisation can be effective.

Let me see, I think I hinted in my last letter that, despite the Divine Sarah's determination jamais de la vie to appear on the boards of a London music hall, the £1,000 a week offered might perhaps induce her to reconsider the position. It has. It is now definitely announced (and without contradiction) that she is to appear at the Coliseum next September with a small company and will play scenes from some of the best pieces in her repertoire. It is stated that she has stipulated that the other items on the programme shall be subject to her approval. Nous verrons I say again.

Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson—traveller, horsewoman, polo player, athlete—in short of many parts—made her first public appearance as a dancer in the classic mode in England at the Palace Theatre last Monday night. In New York Lady Constance created a sensation, largely because of her distinguished name, by dancing a la Maude Allan in scanty costume in public. But while it is to be expected that much of her popularity in England will be occasioned on account of her title, she is none the less well worth seeing for her abilities alone. Were her name merely Sarah Smith or Kitty Jones, she would still create attention. But under any other name she would not create a sensation—she would not bring the picture-postcard photographers about her heels.

The debutante has a beautiful figure, very striking in its repose and graceful in movement; her arms and feet are finely modelled, and her dress—both Greek and scanty—seemed to suit admirably the classic spirit of her impersonations. As a dancer of the classical school she seems deficient in idea and initiative, and some of her poses and gestures hardly conveyed any definite idea to the spectator. She was rather nervous and her dancing may improve as she gains confidence, at present she is very far from being even a fair second to Isadora Duncan or Maude Allan. Whether this class of entertainment isn't rather over done, or whether, indeed, it is wanted is a moot point and as to whether it promotes art or elevates the public, one prefers to offer no opinion at the moment. Its rather a delicate subject.

THE WILD BULLS OF LANDSDOWNE.

In 1901 I was stationed at a place close to the small sanatorium of Landsdowne. The house I lived in was scarcely visible from the railway station, but a 100 yards away and in the thick woods which fringed a swamp of some extent, not far from my domicile and in the adjoining jungle which was overrun with huge tiger grass,quite 12 or 15 feet high, there lived a considerable number of wild cattle, nomad beasts, turned loose at an early age from some Hindu temple to roam about at will and do as much damage as they pleased, for they had been dedicated to the gods. Some of the bulls were of immense size, and all were practically wild and very savage. There were two other young fellows living with me, belonging to the Railway. During the summer we observed that some of these bulls invariably came out of their forest retreat morning and evening and took up a position under a clump of trees adjoining a house. Promptly we conceived the idea of endeavouring to capture them. How to do it, however, was the difficulty, until at last one our trio suggested that we should noose them. "Nothing easier" said he. "You get some ropes, climb into a tree, wait till the bulls come standing about underneath, and then noose them." This sounded plausible, and we determined to try it. Accordingly early next morning three of us, each armed with two ropes, climbed separate trees and awaited our quarry. We fastened one end of each rope to the stoutest branch available, contrived an easy-running noose on the other end, and waited. Soon, from different parts of the adjacent jungle, there emerged one after another six splendid bulls. With careless stateliness they converged on the clump of mango trees in the dense foliage of which we sat hidden, and as they neared each other they tossed their heads, pawed the ground, grunted, and in other ways showed temper. They had doubtless, however, often measured their respective powers, and each knew the capabilities of the others for mischief, so did not actually commit themselves to open hostilities. Each seemed to take his own line and to avoid a collision. As they approached us I must confess to a wild throbbing of my heart in anticipation of a new experience.

C—and D—had taken up positions in trees not more than 20 yards apart, while I had selected a tree a little further away which appeared to be the special favourite of the monarch of the herd, a huge blue black bull, with an immense head, heavy dewlap and short thick, sharp pointed, cruel looking horns. It soon became evident, however, that he was not going to favour me that morning, for, espying in the far distance a herd of grazing cattle he gave a few hoarse grunts and started off with a flourish, at a floundering three-cornered canter to join "the ladies." I therefore had to content myself with watching the operations of my fellows in sport which promised to be exciting.

Close under C.'s perch a black bull, perhaps about 17 hands high, stood pensively flapping his ears backwards and forwards, wishing may be for some break in the monotony of his existence, while against D.'s tree a white bull, a much smaller animal, was rubbing himself. I was not long in getting to work. He had to crawl out on the branch to which his ropes were attached before he could get exactly over his animal; then I saw him cautiously lower his noose towards the bull and apparently strike him on the ear, for the beast shook his head violently and C. pulled up his rope in a hurry. At the next attempt however, he succeeded admirably. He dropped his noose adroitly over both horns and then sharply jerked the rope: it gripped firmly, and the fish was hooked.

For one brief moment the bull did not seem to realise what had happened. He shook his head, lowered it, shook it again, then lifted it high, and in doing so brought the slack of the rope against his eyes. What happened next it was impossible to say. I saw the bull move, bound forward like a flash, and roll in a confused heap on the ground. Next instant I heard a yell from C and observed him hanging to the rope two feet below the branch, making frantic efforts to regain his position on it. Then followed a thrilling spectacle for D and myself. The bull, hurled to the ground in the first mad rush by the sudden tightening of the rope, was bounding about and plunging in all directions at once, bellowing loudly, while his movements conveyed a galvanic shock to poor C and danced him up and down like a toy monkey. How he succeeded in retaining his hold of the rope when jerked off the tree by the bull, and how he at last managed to get back to his perch were mysteries which D and I took no trouble to solve! We were simply crying with laughter and it took us all we knew to stay where we were ourselves. While all this was going on the four remaining bulls were making short rushes here and there—stamping, snorting—and watching with the utmost amazement the extraordinary antics of their captive brother, whose frantic struggles had by this time nearly exhausted him—nearly but not quite; for the little white bull, who had been completing his toilet under D's tree, overcome by curiosity, marched solemnly up towards our prisoner to investigate, whereupon the captured one regarding him as the fons et origo of his troubles, lowered his head and charged him furiously! Before the small one knew what was coming he was struck with terrific force. Down he went with an awful crash. For some seconds it was impossible to tell which was which. The rope got entangled in them both and out of the heavy cloud of dust which arose about them, legs, tails, and horns showed up promiscuously, while their roars were quite appalling. When they did extricate themselves, the little bull, with all the breath knocked out of him, walked coweringly away, while our prisoner stood, with legs wide apart, heaving flanks, quivering tail, and protruding tongue—the picture of distress. C hauled in the rope, and the bull came unresistingly close under the tree, when some natives who had been watching from from a distance come boldly up, firmly secured him, and led him off. Mr. Y—a commissariat man at Landsdowne, took over our prize, and worked him, with another one, in a commissariat cart.

That white bull and C—between them afforded us excellent sport but we had centred our desire on the capture of the blue black bull who had so unceremoniously deserted us, and day after day we climbed our trees and marked time on him. We even dragged the top of a camp table up in the friendly shelter of a giant peepal tree, and there consumed many whiskies and sodas and much tobacco; but all to no purpose. Neither the blue black nor any of his companions came to reward our patience. More than a week had passed. C—and D—, tired of inaction, preferred long chairs and a punkah to sitting astride on a tree top and being eaten by red ants; and I, keen as I was, had well nigh decided to give up the quest as hopeless, when one morning galloping up to our diggings after an early spin in the country, I was accosted by a group of dishevelled, ragged looking natives who prostrated themselves on the stone flags and began whining at me all together. For a time I could make nothing of their chatter, and I was about to leave them and go to breakfast when a peon, whom I had directed to turn out the intruders, told me that the men were cattle grazers who had come to complain about the depredations of a "wild bull." My interest was roused at once, and with the aid of the peon I quickly gathered that the bull referred to was none other than our noble friend. He had for some time past, it appeared, insisted on attaching itself to their herds when taken to pasture, and when the natives attempted to drive him off he chased them, so that they were in fear of their lives. He was a mighty cur, too, this bull, for should the cows, resenting his attentions, prod him as a gentle hint to keep his distance, he would charge them, and had already seriously injured one or two of the most valuable animals. Only that morning he had knocked over and nearly killed a cowboy, and the whole village had to run out with sticks and stones to drive him away. They were "poor men" they said, and for fear of the bull they dare not trust their herds to their children to graze as was customary, and so were compelled to follow their cattle in force themselves, being unable, in consequence, to attend to more important work. "Save us, cherisher of the poor" they said; "catch the faithless one; kill him even if you like!" This last was a tall order from Hindu herdsmen, and showed to what degree of exasperation they had been brought, for by their religion this bull was sacred.

They told me the bull was even now with their cattle in some hollow ground three miles distant, and that there was an excellent grove of trees close by, where their animals rested during the noonday heat. I directed them to leave one of their number as a guide and promised to ride out to the place later on. At breakfast I found C—and D—and while I was telling my tale another friend dropped in. It was, fortunately, a cloudy day, shortly before the commencement of the rains, and a cool breeze was blowing, so that nothing prevented us from getting our ponies and setting off immediately after breakfast which we accordingly did, our syces laden with ropes and our guide preceding us with a basket of ample proportions containing our luncheon. As we rode away, a fourth friend shouted after us that he was "coming on later to see the fun." "I will bring a shot gun," he added, "for I should not wonder if one of you youngsters come to grief somehow."

It did not take us long to reach our destination, and standing on the summit of a hillock, we looked down into the hollow, where about a hundred cattle were grazing. There, too, was "that devil of a bull" as the natives called him, up to his girth in some long reeds at the edge of the pond and looking very big and black. Between him and the grazing cattle was a cordon of more than a score of natives, armed with thick, long staves, who every now and then raised earsplitting yells and clashed their sticks together,very much exaggerating, as it seemed to us the dangers of their position, for the bull seemed supremely indifferent to his surroundings. We had dismounted from our ponies, and as our guide had in the meantime been joined by two or three other men we explained our plan of action to them. "The bull seems quieter just now," I said; "one of you pick up the tiffin basket, and you two fellows over there take hold of these ropes. The syce and ponies can go off to village and stay there till wanted; we will go round behind the men on guard, pass through the grazing cattle, and so reach the trees beyond."

It was arranged that, as soon as we had disposed ourselves in the branches of the trees most suitable for our purpose, the herdsmen were to drive the cattle into the grove and then retire to a distance. All went well till we got into the herd of grazing kine, but then my huge mushroom sola topee and the white umbrella that C—was carrying inspired the village cows with the utmost consternation; they formed themselves into groups and stared at us, and then, without warning, a sudden panic ensued. Away went the entire herd scattering in all directions, deaf to the shouts of their native attendants, some heading straight for the village, others breaking back to the blue bull, who advanced at a sharp trot to meet them, bellowing loudly, while others made rapid tracks for the grove of trees which was our own destination. We followed as fast as we could, and selecting a huge banyan tree which covered some 30 yards of ground in its ample spread, climbed up into different parts of it, fixed our tiffin basket in a bifurcation of the trunk, adjusted our "fishing lines" of stout ropes, lit our pipes and discussed the situation. The few natives who had accompanied us stood about under the trees in our vicinity, while the rest of the villagers had gone off in quest of their wandering cattle, or were engaged in driving away to the village such animals as had scattered ahead of us. Only a few cows were left behind (those that had barked back in the direction of the bull), and these were now evidently undecided as to whether they should follow the majority or stay where they were.

"Ah—ooh! Ah—ooh!" from the herdsmen in the grove clinched the matter, however, and the cows commenced to walk leisurely towards us, followed by the bull, who seemed this morning to be strangely subdued. Some of the cows came right under our tree, and the bull was in a short time equally accommodating. C—was in luck's way again, for the bull after a time, not only went directly under him, but actually lay down and apparently went to sleep. D—and I were determined not to be out of the fun on this occasion, and so we unfastened our ropes from our own sides of the tree and struggled round to C's branch, a very substantial limb same two feet in diameter, and prepared to noose our bete noir together. D—was only about six feet above the prostrate bull and he arranged his noose to extend from his hand right down to the animal's head. Fastening an empty soda-water bottle to the knot to act as a weight, he lowered the long loop he had formed well over the horns of the bull and then let go the bottle, which struck the animal fairly in the forehead, and roused his anger to an extent we had never contemplated. Before D dropped his noose C—had firmly tied his own ropes to it, so that the bull was really fast to two of us, only (as we subsequently had cause to regret) the ropes were of different lengths.

I have heard many noises and seen many stirring sights from the mad rush of a ghazi to a tigress charging home to save her cubs, but I have never seen anything so stirring, so magnificent, so appalling, as that black bull's first fury that summer afternoon. With lowered head, red nostrils opened wide, lashing tail, and reckless speed, he flashed from point to point, hurling himself to earth at every charge, ploughing up the ground with horns and hoofs, sending forth deep growls like distant thunder, while his struggles made the stout branch on which we were sitting quiver like a reed. Anon, with heaving flank and bathed in foam of sweat, he stood panting, till on a sudden away he would rush again, only to be thrown to the ground with terrific force as he reached the limit of the rope. So engrossed were we with our noble prisoner that we had not observed our fourth friend, who had walked out to take care of us as he had promised and who, attended by a tall peon carrying a gun, was standing in a clear space at the far end of the grove some 30 or 40 yards from us, watching with an air of protective superiority the splendid struggles of our captive.

"Hollos!" shouted he; "that bull appears almost done, poor beggar; he has had a rough time of it. Why don't you make those skulking natives climb down off their trees and secure him?" "All very well," I replied "but there is a lot of fight in him yet. Mind what you are about." I added as Captain White (as we will call our fourth friend) began to saunter casually towards us. "Look out!" The bull has been staring fixedly at White, and his companion during our conversation, and as they advanced he suddenly fell back, then stopped, lowered his head, and bounded forward like a thunderclap. White, like the true sportsman he was, stood firm without turning his head. He reached back for his gun but there was no response; the long peon, gun and all was making good time across the open plain as long as his long legs would carry him and White himself, realizing that discretion was the better part of valour, under the circumstances turned round and fled. There was a shock which nearly sent the three of us to the ground; the ropes, weakened by the repeated rushes of the monster, snapped one after the other like pack thread, and the beast was free! Away went White, and away tore the bull after him with about 15 feet of rope around his horns and trailing on the ground behind. The nearest tree was about 60 yards away. White was fat and the ground uneven. One false step, or had the bull been fresh instead of well nigh spent, and there would have been promotion in the Traffic Department of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. As it was, the bull was rapidly gaining on him. To add to the extraordinary features of the situation, White kept shouting in the distance to his faithless peon to bring the gun, meanwhile abusing him and all his family for generations! Ludicrous as the whole thing seemed afterwards, we did not feel the slightest inclination to laugh at the time, and when White having reached the tree he was making for, slipped and fell in circling round the trunk we felt very bad indeed. The bull was then only about 20 feet behind, but to our intense relief instead of pulling up to demolish White, he swerved aside and dashed away towards the village. Right in his path stood our ponies and syces, while from every hut came men, women, and children; the utmost confusion prevailed, and the uproar was deafening. The ponies broke from their attendants, and galloped off towards the house, with the syces after them, while the bull shot round the village huts and we lost sight of him. Curiously enough, we never saw or heard of him again, he probably cleared out of the district altogether. Climbing down from the banyan tree we joined White in time to hear his peon tremblingly explaining how it was he "lost his head and forgot that he was carrying a gun." To this day, however, I am of opinion that the man being a devout Hindu, bolted with the gun that he prevent White from shooting the bull. White declared he had lost 8lbs. in weight and that his time for those 80 feet formed a record. We never tried to fish for bulls again.

METHOD OF HUNTING BY THE GREAT CARNIVORA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In your issue of 20th January 1910. the question of the manner in which the felidæ hunt their prey was raised by your valued contributor "Nomad." Some time back in a series of articles entitled "Reminiscences of some Leopard Hunts," which appeared in the columns of the INDIAN FIELD, I alluded to this interesting problem of Natural History, and urged on sportsmen the great benefit they would be conferring on field naturalists in general by expressing their opinions on paper, substantiated by facts which have come within their own personal cognizance. This call, I regret to say, produced no response. The elucidation of such topics does not seem to appeal to the present generation of sportsmen to such a degree as was the custom a decade and more back—more's the pity. Perhaps a strenuous life may be cited as an excuse. In any event it would be preferable to let the matter rest at that point.

In discussing this theme, I will treat each description of leopard under a separate heading. As regards felis tigris there are many more hunters in a better position to write on the habits of the King of the cats when on the war-path than is the present writer. This portion will, therefore, be handed over to more competent exponents.

FELIS NEBULOSA.

The following was written in your issue of 6th August 1908 in connection with the habits of the clouded leopard:—

"This cat is by no means ubiquitous. Starting from Bhutan and Sikkim in the Eastern Himalayas, it can be traced through Assam, Burma, to the Malay Peninsula, and on to the islands of Borneo, Sumatra and Java. Concerning the habits of this beast practically nothing is known. Any information that has been gleaned has emanated from native sources, and is in consequence not reliable. One fact, however, has been fully established, namely, that this feline is fully gifted with arboreal propensities, preying on birds and the smaller mammals in his leafy retreats, and even sleeping on the branches of trees * * * *"

Now it is perfectly evident that the clouded leopard could not hunt his prey, birds and the smaller mammals, by scent. He would give himself away at once, if he set to and "nosed" round, and all that his intended victim would require to do would be to fly or skip away to safety. A jabbering troop of apes might reasonably be supposed to attract a clouded leopard by sound, but until, owing to the density of the foliage in the ever-green forests, he had arrived within a very short distance of his prospective meal he also would not be in a position to see his menu. It may be perfectly rationally demanded how felis nebulosa does hunt if sight, sound, and scent have been eliminated from the controversy. The plea I put forward is, if an Irishism may be excused, that this cat hunts by remaining as motionless as a statue.

In the issue mentioned above, the following statement was likewise produced:—

"The chequered light thrown by the sun's rays through a mass of foliage would entirely blend with the markings on the fur of one of these creatures as it lay as if paralysed along some gnarled branch. Lydekker says.—'The ground-colour of the fur varies from greyish to yellowish-brown passing into whitish beneath; the markings on the body taking the form of narrow vertical stripes and blotches of black, which form large irregularly arranged patches.' A better care of harmony with natural surroundings could hardly be produced * * * *"

A clouded leopard thus spread out, would to all intents and purposes be absolutely indistinguishable and the furred or feathered denizens of these leafy arbours might, quite unconscious of danger, fall right into that motionless trap.

FELIS UNCIA.

The following lines were penned in the same issue of the INDIAN FIELD to which reference has already been made twice.

"There can be no doubt that felis uncia is possessed of a cunning, one might almost say, intelligence, that equals, even if it does not exceed, that of its tawny-skinned cousins, for if this trait were not fully developed, its very existence would be jeopardized. It may be accepted without demur that the ounce invariably takes up a position above its intended victim from which coign of vantage it can watch its prey without fear of creating an alarm.

"The mountain sheep that roam these uplands as a general rule suspect danger from below, in consequence so keen a look-out is not kept on the slopes above. There can be little doubt that the snow leopard has inherited this knowledge and applies the lesson instinctively. Yet the task of circumventing its prey is no light one, and patience must be the leading factor in this feline's character. Felis pardus, when on the war-path, can creep within a few feet of its quarry screened from sight by every bush and tuft of grass. Not so the ounce. An open slope may intervene between the marauder and its prey, unadorned by the smallest vestige of cover. Attack to be crowned with success must be sudden and unexpected at comparatively close quarters, for given a fair start, the burbel would soon shake off its spotted pursuer. One false move would sound the first note of alarm in place of the anticipated death-knell. Frequently the snow lopard must have to wait patiently for hours, just beyond striking distance, for the crucial moment to arrive.

"It may be taken for granted that the sense of sight is far more fully developed in the ounce than that of smell or hearing. On the Tibetan plateau, where the atmosphere is so rarified, and where the vision is unobstructed by foliage, a moving object can be detected with the naked eye at distances well over a mile. Sight, therefore, must play an important part in the existence of the snow leopard * * * *"

FELIS PARDUS.

In the issue of 29th April 1909 of the INDIAN FIELD in the last of my series of 'Reminiscences' the following paragraph was included:—

'The question whether felis pardus has the sense of sight well-developed is one that forms, and has in the past proved, a lever for considerable controversy. An exceedingly interesting note written by Mr. C. H. Donald, F.Z.S., in the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society published on 13th April 1908, quotes many instances in which the sight of birds and beasts, more especially in relation to the carnivora, has appeared to be quite normal. Major (now Lieutenant-Colonel) Burton on the other hand doubts whether the tiger has keen sight. A problem of this description cannot possibly be determined with any degree of finality on the facts of a few isolated cases. There would seem to be no reason to disbelieve the assumption that short-sightedness and deafness are prevalent in the carnivora as well as in the human race, but perhaps neither to the same extent nor degree.

"It is a general belief that the carnivora are enabled to see better at night than during the daylight hours. A tiger or leopard looking up into a brazen sky and perhaps into the very depth of a blinding sun could not be expected to distinguish objects with any degree of accuracy; but if felis tigris or felis pardus, were unable to apprehend danger at the distance of a few feet at night as a general rule, it might then be reasonably assumed that the visual and olfactory powers of the greater carnivora were not by any means highly developed * * * *"

At the time of writing the above extract, several instances were quoted which tended to prove that a panther did not smell a human being, or if he did so totally ignored his presence which is an unlikely assumption, at absurdly close quarters. If he cannot scent danger at, let us say, six feet distance, is it likely that the same beast will hunt his prey by means of the same sense? The tiger and panther should be divided into two classes—omitting of course the maneater, as the latter propensity is an abnormal vice,

(1) The cattle-lifter.
(2) The game-slayer.

When the cattle-lifting feline is hungry, he is perfectly well aware where a meal is to be had for the mere slaying of it. He proceeds thither and lies in ambush till a favourable opportunity offers. The hunting in this case cannot be performed by scent, it is probably aided by sound and sight, and is based on acquired knowledge as to the exact locality a herd of cattle or goats is likely to be in at a certain time of the day, such as going to water in the evening. Lastly we turn to the game-slayer, by this term I mean to imply the tiger or panther that inhabits some of the densest and remotest of our vast and often impenetrable jungles that is, impenetrable to man, and has probably never seen a bullock or a goat in its life-time or for the matter of that, a human being. How does this feline manage to keep, metaphorically speaking, the wolf from the door. In my estimation this description of giant cat hunts in identically the same manner as does the two-legged Nimrod, namely, "still-hunting." Game in these uninhabited regions has its turnpikes leading from one centre to another just as the civilized world has its motor roads. The sportsman treading along a well-frequented game-track, let us say, in one of those vast expanses of teak forest in Burma will see the spoor of wild elephant, bison, perhaps seine, tiger, panther, bear, sambur, barking-deer and pig. Sometimes the slot of the sambur will cover that of the tiger; on other occasions the pug of the leopard will be visible over the impress of the bison. Does "stripes" or "spots" patrol this thoroughfare with his nose to the ground? The likelihood of such a procedure is remote. He must be aware that Nature has given his quarry infinitely greater olfactory powers as a means of defence, therefore he must play cunning, otherwise starvation will stare him rudely in the face Under such conditions sight and hearing must be the senses employed to locate the object of pursuit, after chance has brought the butcher and his innocent victim together.

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy. Feather Pictures of all India Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

Clerk of the Scales:—MR. E. S. DEANE.
Starter:—MR. E. S. DEANE.
Secretary and Clerk of the Course:—MR. E. S. DEANE.

Third Day, Wednesday, 2nd February.

The racing season was brought to a close to-day, and the Stewards and the various officials are to be congratulated on the highly successful character of the meeting. Mr. E. S. Deane has worked particularly hard in his three-fold capacity of Secretary and Clerk of the Course, Clerk of the Scales and starter. It was a better day for backers, as three favourities won in Brigand II., Naughty Boy and Baron Athel. The Kour Sahib of Patiala's candidates, one was glad to note, won in two events.

The Lieutenant-Governor and party again patronised the racing, and among the Indian nobility were the Hon'ble Raja of Mahmudabad and the Hon'ble Raja of Jehangirabad. The I.C.S. and the King's Own were "At home" and the fine band of the latter played.

THE DESERT HANDICAP.—Rs. 700 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap for Arab ponies 14-2 and under. 5 furlongs.

What especially distinguishes

Odol from all other mouth-cleansing preparations is its unique antiseptic properties. After the mouth has been rinsed with Odol an all-pervading influence spreads itself inperceptibly over the whole of the interior of the mouth, exerting its power for hours after the rinsing.

It is this lasting effect (which no other preparation possesses) that gives to daily users of Odol the absolute assurance that their mouths are permanently protected against the processes of fermentation and decomposition, which, if not guarded against, inevitably destroy the teeth.

Elections and football matches evidently curtailed the attendance at Hurst Park on Saturday, when the muster was not so greatly in excess of that on Friday, and the week wound up in quiet fashion. Hardly a breath of wind was stirring to shift the mist which darkened a sky devoid of sunshine, but the temperature was wonderfully mild for the time of year, the light on the course fairly good to begin with, and the going, with its long grass carpet, not too much on the soft side. Results:—

RICHMOND CHASE (4).—Mr. J. Colman's Sugar Baby (M. Walsh) 1; Alice Delvin, 2. S. L. prices: 11 to 10 Valentine Vox (fell), 7 to 2 Night Wind (fell), 4 to 1 Sugar Baby, 5 to 1 Alice Delvin. A length.

MANCHESTER.

Even allowing for the dismal weather outlook on Monday morning, and the fact that attention in the Cottonopolis has been centred of late more in political matters than racing, the attendance at Castle Irwell was unusually small. Nor did the sport reach a very high plane the fields falling a lot short of what might have been expected judging by the capital entries the majority of the events closed with. It was fine to start with but rain descended later to render the going fearfully heavy, horses and jockeys returning besmirched with mud from head to foot. Results:—

BROUGHTON MAIDEN HURDLE RACE.—Of 70sovs. 2 miles.
Mr. C. Kingswell's Lone Maiden, by Minstead, dam by Kendal—Lonely, 4yrs, 10st. 5lb. ... ... J. Kelly 1

Twenty-one runners for the half a dozen events at Castle Irwell on Tuesday was a very poor aggregate, the entries having numbered well over eighty. The smallness of the fields would not have mattered so much had there been a livelier market, for not more than two or at most three horses were backed seriously in any one of the events that went to make up the day's card. Bluntly it was a very disappointing day's sport, apathetic to a degree. The attendance in Tattersall's was small. The weather was dull and cheerless, with slight showers falling at intervals. Results:—

NEWBURY.

The course at Newbury on Wednesday was as green as grass should be but on the heavy side, as shown by the all-out style in which the horses finished over this searching track; but the usual staunch support was accorded the meeting, and fields panned out exceptionally well, the only blur on the card being the three unfortunate accidents which proved fatal to the horses concerned, though fortunately the riders got off lightly. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ALTHOUGH ten of the thirty-two ties in the Association Cup terminated in draws last Saturday, and will consequently have to be replayed, the opening stage of the thirty-ninth annual struggle for that famous trophy brought about the dismissal of quite a number of prominent clubs. It is no new thing for the holders to be knocked out in the first round. That was the experience of Sheffield Wednesday two years ago, of Wolverhampton Wanderers last season, and on Saturday Manchester United, who met with what, in other circumstances, would have been a surprising defeat from the Burnley club. Companions in misfortune with Manchester United were Sheffield United, who stand at the head of the First League, and Notts County, who occupy second place in that prominent competition, while among the other First League teams knocked out are to be mentioned Liverpool, Bolton Wanderers, and Preston North End. Sheffield United lost by the odd goal in five to Nottingham Forest at Nottingham, while Notts County, who for a big pecuniary consideration, had forgone the advantage of deciding their tie at Trent Bridge, went down before Bradford City. In facing Bristol City at Bristol, Liverpool, of course, found themselves engaged in a formidable task, and their defeat cannot be regarded as surprising, while Bolton Wanderers are playing so badly this season that their failure at Stockport might, perhaps, have been anticipated, but no one was prepared to see Preston North End—generally a very hard side to beat on their own ground—beat to Coventry City on the Deepdale enclosure.

So far nine First League teams have qualified for participation in the second round, but that number may—and probably will—be increased by the addition of Everton, Tottenham Hotspur, Newcastle United and Sheffield Wednesday. Everton on recent form did very well to hold their own with Middlesbrough at Ayresome Park, Hotspur were probably content to effect a draw with Plymouth Argyle at Plymouth, and Sheffield Wednesday had no light task before them in opposing Northampton on the ground of the latter club, but the failure of Newcastle United to win at Stoke must be included among the list of unexpected results. Second League clubs that have safely passed through the opening round number eight, the list including such well-known organisations as West Bromwich Albion, Wolverhampton Wanderers, Manchester City—all previous winners of the Cup—Derby County, who have figured in the Final Tie three times, and Leicester Fosse. On the other hand, seven, among whom are Glossop and Hull City, have lost their places, while either Blackpool or Barnsley, Fulham, and Gainsborough Trinity may yet earn distinction in this year's competition.

Ten London clubs figured among the competitors, and of these only Chelsea and Woolwich Arsenal have as yet gained the right to participate in the next stage of the contest. Clapton Orient, engaged on the formidable task of playing West Bromwich Albion at West Bromwich, and Millwall, called upon to meet Derby County at Derby, are both knocked out, as well as Crystal Palace, whose defeat on their own ground by Swindon constituted one of the big surprises. Of the other five Tottenham, now having to oppose Plymouth Argyle at White Hart Lane, should certainly pull through, and at Craven Cottage, Fulham ought to qualify at the expense of Chesterfield, while Queen's Park Rangers, having held their own at Norwich, may be expected to win the re-play with Norwich City at Park Royal. No great confidence, however, can be felt in the ability of Leyton to win at New Brompton, and West Ham United may find a victory over Carlisle United at Carlisle beyond their power. For the London Clubs the results must be described as somewhat disappointing.

Southern Leaguers, too, have comparatively little of which to boast, for though Coventry City certainly upset expectations in winning at Preston, and Bristol Rovers accomplished a fine performance in defeating Grimsby Town at Grimsby Southampton and Swindon although also gaining victories away from home, achieved the successes at the expense of other Southern Leaguers in Brighton and Crystal Palace. Five Southern League teams are already knocked out, but New Brompton, Southend United, Northampton, Plymouth Argyle West Ham United, and either Norwich City or Queen's Park Rangers may yet figure among the thirty-two clubs taking part in the second round.

Appended are details of some of the more important games which were decided in the contest for the Cup:—

OLDHAM VS. ASTON VILLA.—At Oldham, before fifteen thousand people. At half-time neither side had scored, but the second half was commenced in rather sensational style, as within two minutes of the kick off Bache, with a long shot, scored a goal for Aston Villa. Then Cook, the Oldham right back, was sent off the field for kicking Hunter, the Villa left half-back. Having taken the lead the Villa played up strongly, and Hall after running three-parts the length of the field added another point for them. Near the close Toward headed through for Oldham. Aston Villa, 2; Oldham Athletic, 1.

ARSENAL VS. WATFORD.—After a game which for a Cup tie was of a most lifeless description, Woolwich justified the superiority of First League over Southern League form and beat Watford comfortably three goals to nil. The play also was not of a very high standard, but the Arsenal always had a good lead, and though mistakes by the Watford defence were responsible for two of the goals, Woolwich deserved to win by the final margin. Buckenham, the Arsenal centre-forward, was not eligible for the Cup Competition, so McKellar led the forward line; but Sands was still absent from the half-back line. After fifteen minutes' play Betts, the Watford back, miskicked, when Dean placed a free kick into goal, and McKellar, who was continually harassing the Watford backs, promptly rushed the first goal. The visiting forwards did well in the outfield, and McLaine and Kyle directed two fine shots at McDonald, whose goalkeeping was one of the best features of the game. After half an hour's play the Watford defence again failed badly. Lawrence got clean through, and though his shot was a poor one, Biggar muddled the ball and allowed it to go to Lewis, who easily scored the second goal. The Arsenal forwards played better together after the interval, but when Lewis went through he was given offside. Then Betts, the Watford back, retired injured, but the Arsenal played well against the one-back game. Lewis got another offside point, but just at the close he scored a legitimate goal. Kyle and McLaine had changed places in the Watford side, and the latter, who went centre, once nearly beat McDonald at close quarters. There were 8,000 spectators, and the treacherous ground excused many slips by the players. Arsenal 3; Watford, 0.

BURNLEY vs. MANCHESTER UNITED.—Wet weather had an adverse effect on the attendance at Burnley for only about 12,000 people watched the game at Turf Moor between the home team and Manchester United. The ground was in a very sodden condition and from the start the players were always struggling to maintain a foothold and control the heavy ball. Burnley won the toss, and playing against the incline of the ground began in most promising manner, for in less than five minutes Abbott put them ahead with a fine goal. This success aroused great enthusiasm, and Burnley continued to attack their forwards on several occasions only just shooting wide. Meredith made some fine runs for Manchester, but his centres were safely cleared. In spite of the wretched condition of the ground—in places it was almost unplayable and there were several puddles—a fast pace was maintained. In the last quarter of an hour in the first half the game went decidedly in favour of Manchester United and many shots were directed at the home goal. Despite untiring efforts by the Burnley backs, the Manchester forwards could not be forced back. However, the visitors could not score, and Burnley led at half time by 1 goal to none. On resuming play the weather got worse, rain driving across the field, and Turnbull, who was suffering from neuralgia, did not appear for some little time. Fifteen minutes from the close some hot work developed in front of the Burnley goal, but Smethems scored Burnley's second goal amid a scene of great excitement. Burnley, 2; Manchester United, 0.

CHELSEA vs. HULL CITY.—Chelsea gained a somewhat lucky victory over Hull City at Stamford Bridge on Saturday by 2 goals to 1. There were about 25,000 people present, and the conditions were rendered unpleasant by a drizzling rain which fell throughout the match. The home lot were at full strength, but Hull were without Stephenson, for whom Nevin played. The first twenty-minutes of the game went all in favour of Hull, and Whitley had to save from Walter Smith. A few nice centres came from Stanley Smith, but the Chelsea defence evaded defeat. When Chelsea improved Windridge failed to shoot. Woodward and Hilsdon both narrowly missed, and then Williamson—thirty-three minutes after the start—placed a corner kick so well that Roughley only touched the ball and it went into the net. It was a lucky goal. In the first minute of the second half of the game Brawn swept up the ball on the run and scored a second goal, and in three minutes Browell shot, but Temple stopped the ball and then fired it into the net. Later on J. Smith missed two chances. Once he headed over and then shot a little too high. A quarter of an hour from the close Wally Smith collided with Whitley and received a blow which rendered him unconscious. He was carried off the field. The closing stages were only poor. Chelsea, 2; Hull City, 1.

BRISTOL CITY vs. LIVERPOOL.—Bristol City met Liverpool at Bristol before a crowd of 12,000 spectators. After twenty-six minutes' play Bristol City scored through Burton, who cleverly beat Chorlton and Hardy at short range. Bristol for some little time after this were a long way the better side but Liverpool rallied, and Parkinson hit the cross-bar. Bristol replied by forcing three corners, but Rippon missed an open goal. At the interval, Bristol City still led by 1 goal to nil. When the second half was only three minutes' old, clever passing between Rippon and Shearman led to the former scoring a good goal. After that there was seldom any doubt as to the home side being the superior team. Their forwards played a vastly superior game compared with recent displays, whilst Liverpool not only lacked combination but shot at rare intervals, and then tamely. Bristol City, 2; Liverpool, 0.

BRADFORD CITY vs. NOTTS COUNTY.—Notts County having foregone for a monetary consideration the right given them by the draw to meet Bradford City at Nottingham, this tie took place at Valley Parade Bradford. There were fifteen thousand people present. Bradford were the first to show prominently in attack, and after eight minutes' play Bond dashed through, and sent in a fine shot. Ironmonger only half cleared and O'Rourke, dashing up, scored. Five minutes later however, Jones equalised for Notts County. Towards the interval the football became of a rather scrambling order After change of ends, the play was desperately keen, and the referee ordered Cantrell, the Notts County centre-forward, off the field, for kicking Chaplin. Notts County went to pieces after this and Bradford City scored twice in three minutes by Bond and O'Rourke. Six minutes from the close Jones reduced the home side's lead, shooting through from a centre by Dean, but before the finish Spiers put on another goal for Bradford City. Bradford City, 4; Notts County, 2.

NOTTS FOREST vs. SHEFFIELD UNITED.—With Notts County having accepted Bradford's offer to give up their right to play their tie at Nottingham, the game between Notts Forest and Sheffield United attracted a fine crowd of over 20,000 people. The game opened in sensational manner, for at the end of five minutes West gave Notts Forest the lead. This early success obviously encouraged the home team, and for some time the Sheffield backs—among whom Brooks and Benson were prominent—were kept hard at work. The home goalkeeper had to save a fine shot by Evans, but the Forest soon returned to the attack, and after West had sent in a shot, Armstrong scored a second goal against the United. Then Dudley fouled Kitchen in the penalty area, and Benson, who took the kick scored for Sheffield United. The Forest had some narrow escapes, but at half time they led by two goals to one. Play resumed in heavy downpour of rain, and the condition of the ground soon became completely against accurate play. Palmer early missed a chance of increasing Notts Forest's lead, and then even play followed. Twenty minutes from the resumption Walton equalised for the United, and the Notts goalkeeper soon afterwards saved well from Hardinge. Late in the game West scored from a centre by Palmer, and Notts won a great game. Notts Forest, 3; Sheffield United, 2.

RUGBY RULES.

AFTER waiting for twelve weary years, England can at length rejoice in a victory over Wales, last Saturday's game at Twickenham having resulted in the defeat of the Principality—the first the Welshmen have suffered since they went down before the South Africans in December 1907—by a placed goal, a penalty goal, and a try to two tries. On the general run of the play the winners perhaps showed no marked superiority, but the success, as everybody who witnessed the contest must readily admit, was thoroughly well-earned. The home side, thanks to A. D. Stoop, got off the mark in most encouraging fashion, gaining a try in the first half-minute, and when this score was followed a quarter of a hour later by a penalty goal, the enthusiasm of the crowd knew no bounds. A scrambling try by Wales put an end to any idea of a runaway victory, Solomon's try, which Chapman converted, set the Welshmen a task which proved beyond their powers. The visitors never relaxed their efforts, and when within five minutes of the resumption there came the second try for Wales, the issue turned quite open again. For a while afterwards England were sorely pressed, but they defended grandly, and later on had again quite as much of the play as their opponents. Still, even in the last few minutes the Welshmen came very near scoring again, and although at the close England were pressing the call of "no side" came as a great relief to the large majority of those present.

ENGLAND vs. WALES.—Just before game started a drizzling rain began, and the ground was soft and greasy. Wales kicked off at 2·44. England were first to attack.

After a poor kick by one of the Welsh forwards Birkett (Harlequins) sent the ball to Chapman (Weston), and the Durham three-quarter, running in, scored a try. This happened within half a minute of the start. The angle was difficult, and Chapman's attempt to add the major points failed.

Cheered enthusiastically by the crowd, the Englishmen continued to tax the Welsh defence, Solomon (Rhbuth) and Stoop (Harlequins) showing to advantage. In two scrimmages the Englishmen pushed and wheeled cleverly. The Welshmen were relieved by a free kick, but after another scrimmage Stoop picked up, and gave to Poulton (Oxford), who was only pulled up by Bancroft just in time. Jones (Newport) cleared.

A pretty bout of passing brought the visitors into English territory, but Johnston (Bristol) came out and forced Hopkins over the line. After a line out Trew took possession, and threw to Jones and quick as a flash the ball went to Hopkins, who looked like running in, when the English full-back again intervened.

Forcing the game finely, Wales continued to be more dangerous. Bancroft made a brilliant attempt at goal from a free kick.

This was the visitors' last chance for some time. A surprising recovery by the English forwards was followed up by Chapman, who added a penalty goal to the English score. The northern player was heartily cheered on his double success.

Wales replied strongly, and Owen, passing to Evans, the Swansea man crossed the English line. Bancroft's kick failed.

Play was at times of a scrambling character, but it was relieved by brilliant individual dashes. One of these led to another English try. Birkett picked up the ball as the result of some rather loose work near the line, and registered a try, which Chapman converted.

Notwithstanding these reverses, the Welsh three-quarter line was giving an attractive exposition, Gibbs, of Cardiff, being perhaps the best. Near the close of the first half he was almost in when Johnston secured the ball, and found the touch line in the Welsh half. Solomon made a fine run after some passing between Chapman and Birkett, but Bancroft saved.

Half-time:—England 11pts., Wales 3pts.

From the way in which the Welsh forwards began the second portion, it was apparent that the Englishmen would be hard pressed to keep their advantage. Johnston rushed across, picked up and cleared when a try looked certain.

Again the full-back cleared, fielding the ball faultlessly, with half a dozen Welshmen in close proximity to him. But after a scrimmage near the half-way line Trew received from Jones, and sent Gibbs off to score an easy try.

Taking the kick the Cardiff man rather marred his work. He sent the ball along the ground, and away from the goal-posts.

Wales were having all the better of the play now. Their combination was admirable, while Gibbs and Hopkins did delightful work. Fortunately Johnstone was cool. Time after time he staved off danger, and with three-quarters of the time gone England still led by eleven points to six.

The spectators—who numbered at least 30,000—were kept in high tension, as Wales continued to attack.

Gibbs was stopped by Johnston, and then Bancroft made his mark and failed.

After a flying run Jones, of Swansea, was pulled down by Johnston close to the goal.

Play was suspended owing to an injury to Birkett, but he continued playing. The Englishmen's attacks were fitful in the later stages, the Welsh defence easily breaking up their attempts at combination.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

CHESHIRE vs. YORKSHIRE.—Wretched conditions prevailed at Birkenhead, rain falling in torrents and the ground being in a very bad state. About a thousand people saw a very keen game. Yorkshire had the best of the early play and after some strong attacks King obtained a try. Pickering missed the place kick. Play became of a scrambling description, accurate handling being almost impossible, and, though Yorkshire continued to do nearly all the attacking, there was no further scoring before half-time. Leading by three points, Yorkshire started the second half in great form. Trevisan soon scored for them. After this Pickering dropped a goal and placed a penalty goal. Yorkshire then had the game well in hand, and they maintained their commanding advantage until near the end, when Billington scored a penalty goal for Cheshire, the ball hitting the post and dropping over the bar. Yorkshire therefore won by 2 goals (one dropped, one penalty) and 2 tries to a penalty goal. Yorkshire, 13 points, Cheshire, 3 points.

UNITED HOSPITALS 28 POINTS; ROYAL NAVY, 4 POINTS.—The severe defeat which the Royal Navy suffered at the Queen's Club West Kensington, yesterday, came as a great surprise to Rugby Unionists. The United Hospitals, who beat them, put into the field a very powerful fifteen, but the best naval players this season have been so successful that the spectators were prepared for a close game if not for the defeat of the civilians. The losers were, it is true, a man short until half-time, but the fact remains that they did no better in the second half of the game, when they had fifteen men, than they had done in the first half of it.

Early play certainly suggested the probability of a victory for the sailors. They went away with a rush, and were attacking strongly when the match was only three minutes old. At this stage of the proceedings a weak kick by one of the Hospital backs failed to put the ball into touch, and Coopper, who, as usual played on the left of the three-quarter line, gathered it neatly. Coopper is to be commended for his quickness in realising the possibilities of a situation, and for his neatness in taking advantage of them. He ran towards the centre of the ground, and there dropped a clever goal.

In spite of this good start, the sailors never scored again, and there had been less than a quarter of an hour's play when it was made quite obvious that the United Hospitals were in all respects the better side. At half-time the score was 15 points to 4, and in the end the Navy were beaten by 4 goals (one dropped) and 3 tries to a dropped goal. It was the Hospital forwards who laid the foundations of the victory that was won, though the extremely clever play of the men in rear of them was essentially the feature of a game which was always bright and generally very fast.

BILLIARDS.

M. INMAN vs. W. COOK.—The match of 16,000 up in which Inman conceded a start of 4,000 points for £25 aside ended at Messrs. Thurston's Grand Hall, Leicester-square, last Saturday night, in a fine victory for Inman by 213 points. During the afternoon both professionals were seen to advantage. The chief breaks worthy of mention were 152, 54, 47, 137, and 91 unfinished by Cook, while the Billiard Association champion was credited with 56, 72, 120 and 235. The interval scores were:—

Inman	...	15,323

In the evening Inman made breaks of 74, 60, 54, 50, 60, 70 and 56 (unfinished), against 125 (full), 73, 52, and 62 by Cook.

Final score:—

Inman	...	16,000
Cook	...	15,787

CROSS-COUNTY RUNNING.

At Roehampton, E. P. Turner, with 10secs. start, won the Thames Hare and Hounds 4½ miles handicap in 28mins. 18-2/5 secs. H. D. Hodkinson (50secs. start) was second, and L. H. C. Nord (25secs.) third.

At Croydon, the South London Harriers beat the Ranelagh Harriers (scoring twenty-two men on each side) over a seven miles course by 159 points. F. A. Knott (South London Harriers) finished first, E. F. Judson (South London Harriers) second, and F. J. Lintott (Ranelagh Harriers) third.

Hunting.

THE MADRAS HOUNDS.

HOUNDS were again in the Poonamalee Road country on the 6th instant. Starting from the 6th Milestone the covers along the northern bank of the Coum were first tried and found wanting. Mograpper Wood was also tenantless but in the Ayanambaukam casuarina belt we had the fortune to light on our friend of a fortnight ago, who gave us a good 45 minutes, almost yard for yard the same line as he took on the previous occasion and still lives to fight another day

Running the casuarina belt for a mile up to the Cross Wood which terminates it, he took us a big ring and back into the Cross Wood, retracing his steps through the casuarina belt and away on to Mograpper Wood. He was away again on the other side at once pointing for Perambore but did not persevere long in the open and broke back for Mograpper Wood. Through it he went and away at the northern end, hounds close on his brush and took us a hustler over the open, in view all the way, for a mile up to the big woods lying north-west of Mograpper village. Hounds brought him well through this and came away at the other end still on good terms with him.

Swinging left handed he now bore away for the Mud Wall Woods, here scent began to fail and hounds to tire and he finally had to be given up. The wonder is that hounds ran hunt at all. We have had no rain now for six months and the country is absolutely dried up.

Amongst those out I noticed Mrs. Horne, Mrs Walshe, Miss Romilly, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice and Mrs. Millar, Mr. and Mrs. Porteous, Mr. and Mrs. Branson, Major Gifford, Captains Campbell-Ross, Morton, Middleton, Torrie, Snowdown, and Ross, Messrs. Gibson, Strouts, Cowie, Fenton, Bell, Jenkin, Jarvis, Dixon, White, Hector, Davies, Oliver, Littlehailes, David, Ramaswamy and Varadapha Naidu.

The Hunt Point-to-Point races are advertised for the 26th February which heralds the near approach of the end of the season.

SEMI-FINAL.

The semi-finals took place on Thursday, the 3rd instant before a good attendance. Both games were of a close and exciting nature, the 12th Lancers defeating the King's Dragoon Guards by 6 goals to 5, and The Pilgrims gaining a victory over the 17th Lancers by the same margin.

12TH LANCERS vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.

First Chukker.—The King's got early on the ball and scored. The Lancers then pressed and placed their side level. Score: 12th Lancers, 1 goal; the King's, 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—Level, fast play. No score.

Third Chukker.—The ball was mostly in midfield. Another maiden Chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers held the advantage almost throughout, and put up two goals. Score: 12th Lancers, 2 goals; the King's, 1 goal.

Fifth Chukker.—Even play. Towards the close Mr. Wienholt scored for the King's. Score: 12th Lancers, 2 goals; the King's, 2 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—The King's brought the score level, with a long shot by Mr. Cheape. After two unsuccessful runs, the King's scored again, from a difficult angle. Score: 12th Lancers, 2 goals; the King's, 4 goals.

Seventh Chukker.—The Lancers got possession and scored. They continued to attack, and hit two further goals, with the aid of Wood and Reynolds. Score: 12th Lancers, 6 goals; the King's, 4 goals.

Eighth Chukker.—The King's held the advantage. They put up a good and made two further efforts to score, but the ball went outside on each occasion. Final score: 12th Lancers, 6 goals; the King's Dragoon Guards, 5 goals. Teams:—

THE PILGRIMS "A" TEAM vs. 17TH LANCERS.

First Chukker.—Rattan Singh scored for the Pilgrims. The Lancers then attacked, but Captain Mirza Beg secured the ball and scored after a splendid run up the field. Score: The Pilgrims 2 goals.

Second Chukker.—The Pilgrims put up two goals, scored by the players just named. Score: the Pilgrims 4 goals.

Third Chukker.—Captain Lockett made a splendid run for the Lancers, but Chander Singh intercepted him near goal. Ralston hit a goal for the Pilgrims. Score: the Pilgrims 5 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—Play was confined to the Pilgrims' ground throughout, but the Lancers were unable to put the ball through. No score.

Fifth Chukker.—The Lancers scored their first goal after fast play. Score: The Pilgrims, 5 goals; 17th Lancers, 1 goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Pilgrims early got on the ball and Mirza Beg hit a goal. The Lancers had a shot at goal, but the ball struck a pony. They returned to the attack, and notched a goal. Score: The Pilgrims, 6 goals; 17 Lancers, 2 goals.

Seventh Chukker.—The Lancers revealed themselves in their real form for the first time, and controlled the play throughout. Major Tilney had a clear run and scored, and continuing to press the Lancers put in two more shots, which just missed the posts. They again returned to the attack, and Captain Melville obtaining possession, scored. Score: The Pilgrims, 6 goals; 17th Lancers, 4 goals.

Eighth Chukker.—The Lancers held the play in the Pilgrims' end, and scored. They were still attacking, when the game ended. Final score: The Pilgrims "A" team, 6 goals; 17th Lancers 5 goals. Teams:—

Final.

The final game in the above tournament, between the 12th Lancers and The Pilgrims "A" team, took place on the 5th instant, before a large gallery. The Pilgrims were warm favourites, but the team lost the services in the second chukker of Kumar Rattan Singh, through an unfortunate accident. The game ended in favour of the 12th Lancers by 9 goals to 8. The cup was presented by Lady Hewett.

The attendance throughout the tournament has been so satisfactory that it will enable the committee not only to pay off an outstanding debt, but also to utilise the surplus in bringing the second ground up to Tournament level. Captain R. C. W. Alston, the Honorary Secretary, deserves great credit for the success of the Tournament, which owing to the number of entries, entailed much heavy work. Details:—

THE 12TH LANCERS vs. THE PILGRIMS "A" TEAM.

First Chukker.—The Lancers got possession and would have scored but for a miss in front of goal. A fine run by the Pilgrims ended successfully, Rattan Singh hitting the ball between the posts. Score: Pilgrims 1 goal.

Second Chukker.—The ball visited either end, and eventually the Lancers scored from a shot by Reynolds. While play was in midfield Rattan Singh's pony fell heavily, the rider sustaining a broken collar bone. His place was taken by Prince Hitendra. Score: Lancers, 1 goal; Pilgrims, 1 goal.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers showed excellent combination, and obtained two goals, Bryant scoring the second. Prince Hitendra then scored for the Pilgrims. Score: Lancers, 3 goals; Pilgrims, 2 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—Fast play mostly in favour of the Lancers, who notched a goal. Score: 12th Lancers, 4 goals; Pilgrims, 2 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The Pilgrims attacked almost throughout, but just before the close the Lancers obtained possession and made a goal. Score: Lancers, 5 goals; Pilgrims, 2 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—After a miss by the Pilgrims, the Lancers got a goal. Hitendra then scored for the Pilgrims, and Reynolds working the ball on, hit a goal for the Lancers. Score: Lancers, 7 goals; Pilgrims, 3 goals.

Seventh Chukker.—Fast and level play throughout. Ere the chukker closed, the Lancers improved their position still further, and scored. Score: Lancers, 8 goals; Pilgrims, 3 goals.

Eighth Chukker.—The Lancers held the advantage, and added another goal. Final Score: 12th Lancers, 9 goals; the Pilgrims "A" team, 3 goals. Teams:

DALHOUSIE vs. BALLYGUNGE.—Played on the ground of the latter on Saturday last, the match ending in an draw. The home team had first use of the wicket, and had knocked up 156 for 8 wickets, thanks mainly to a freely hit 50 by A. J. Hill, when they declared; the total was larger than at one time seemed probable, the seventh wicket falling at 101. Sayree bowled very well, and took 6 wickets for 50 runs; he also performed the "hat trick," getting Fox, Elliott and Logan with successive balls.

In the hour or so remaining for play Ballygunge put up 70 for the loss of 4 wickets, Whiteley with 22, and Bocquet with 17 not out, being top scorers. Scores:—

BALLYGUNGE vs. OLYMPIANS.—Some very tall scoring was witnessed at Ballygunge on Sunday last in the return match between these two teams, no less than 585 runs being made for the loss of only 6 wickets.

It may be remembered that on the last occasion, Ballygunge put up a score of well over 500 for the loss (as on Sunday last) of only 3 wickets, the chief contributors then being D. S. and A. W. Shallow, each of whom made over 100; last week end, however, their record was easily eclipsed by B. A. White and H. F. Yeoman, who put on no less than 316 for the first wicket, the former being the first to leave with a brilliant 207, made in an hour and three quarters, to his credit. His innings was not altogether faultless, but very nearly so, his hitting all round the wicket being perfect. Yeoman did not long survive him, being out with his individual score at 104, a very good innings, but naturally somewhat overshadowed by his partner's effort; with the total at 361 for 3, the closure was applied, Turnbull being not out 30.

The Olympians started with Ferguson and Craik, but the former had only made 11 when he was bowled by White; Kennedy and Craik, however, made a long stand, both men batting with absolute confidence. The former was the first to leave for a patient 44, but Craik continued on, and was undefeated, when time was called, with a very sound 103 to his credit; he survived two very confident appeals for stumping, but these were the only defects in an otherwise splendid innings.

The wicket was perfect from a batsman's point of view, the bowlers being unable to do anything.

BALLYGUNGE "A." vs. ST. XAVIERS PAST AND PRESENT.—Played at the ground of the latter on Sunday last, the home team winning easily by 17 runs.

For Ballygunge, the only one to do any good at all was E. Horncastle, his 70 out of 129 from the bat being a really fine innings, unspoiled by any chance; he was unfortunate in being bowled off his pads, when seemingly well set for his hundred.

To the home team, R. E. Fischer, 30, J. Yakchee, 31, F. Ford, 45, and J. Cameron, 29, all did well most of the visitor's bowling being treated rather mercilessly, Coulthard with 4 for 35 and Horncastle with 3 for 18 coming best out of the ordeal. For St. Xaviers Vaughan bowled well, his 5 wickets costing only 34 runs.

WINCHESTER

.351 Caliber, High-Power Self-Loading Rifle

THERE is nothing to take your mind off the game if you shoot a Winchester Self-Loading Rifle. The recoil does the reloading for you, which places the complete control of the gun under the trigger finger. You can shoot six shots as fast as you can pull the trigger and without taking your eye off the sights. As this rifle is made with a detachable magazine, you can replace an exhausted one with a loaded one in a jiffy and continue shooting. No recoil-operated rifle but the Winchester offers this advantage. The .351 Caliber, High-Power Cartridge has great killing power, making it heavy enough for the largest game.

AN Aberdonian stood by the beside of his dying wife, and tearfully asked if there was anything he could do for her. "Aye, Sandy," she replied, "I'm hopin' ye'll bury me in Blairgowrie." "Ma conscience, Maggie, that wad be an awfu' expense, whateffer; wud ye no be comfortable enough in Aberdeen?" "Sandy," said the wife. "I'll gie ye nae peace till I'm laid in ma ain parish kirk-yard." "Vera weel, Maggie," the afflicted husband sighed, "I'll tell ye what. I'll gie ye three months in Aberdeen, jist to see hoo ye'll get on!"

Boxing.

LUCKNOW BOXING TOURNAMENT.

THE Lucknow Boxing Tournament opened at the Central Gymnasium on the 23th January and owing to there being 150 competitors the contests were spread over six nights, the finals taking place on the 5th instant. The fighting was of a fairly high standard throughout, and the arrangements were perfect, thanks to the great interest taken in the Tournament by Captain Ley, Superintendent of the Gymnasium. He was assisted by Sergeant-Major Jones and a capable staff. The Judges were Captain Cowans and Lieutenant Wigley, Major Hobbs was Referee and Lieutenant Hogan, Timekeeper.

One of the principal fights in the semi-final round was the heavy weight contest between Bombardier Wells, of No. 6 Mountain Battery, and Private Clohessy, of the Munsters. This lasted for three rounds only, Wells being the superior man. Not much damage was done in the first round, Wells stopping the rushes made by Clohessy. Wells did most of the leading in the next round, when there was a good deal of clinching. In the third round, Wells had matters all his own way. He got in two severe blows on Clohessy's head, and the latter gave in.

A very large attendance witnessed the finals, including Major-General Mahon, Brigadier-General Bell and several prominent civilians. There were some very fine contests, and at the close General Mahon distributed the prizes. The Locke Elliot Championship Belts were won by Corporal Chivers, Private Casey and Private Blake, and the Cups went to Bombardier Wells and Private Dwyer. Details :—

Finals.

BOYS' COMPETITION, 8ST. AND UNDER.

Boy Ford, Durhams, 7-5, vs. Boy Everett, Leinsters, 8-0.—Everett, though the bigger of the two, was sent to the boards several times, and was finally counted out in the second round.

BOYS' COMPETITION, OVER 8ST. 4LB.

Boy Grimes, Leinsters, 9-5, vs. Boy Millings, Kings's Own, 8-12.—Grimes forced the pace, and knocked Millings out early in the first round.

BOYS' COMPETITION, 10ST. AND OVER.

Boy Capstick, King's Own, 10-3, vs. Boy Williams, 8th Hussars 11-3:—Capstick did most of the leading, and was declared the winner.

BANTAM WEIGHTS.

Private Salmon, Middlesex, 8-3, vs. Private Dwyer, Liverpools, 8-1.—A very game fight. Dwyer won on points.

FEATHER WEIGHTS.

Private Blake, Middlesex, 8-12, vs. Private Amos, East Surreys, 9-0.—Amos was sent to the boards once in the first round, and twice in the second. He rose, but the referee stopped the fight.

LIGHT WEIGHTS.

Private Casey, Munsters, 10-0, vs. Private Marks, Middlesex, 10-0.—Marks had the better of the exchanges in the first two rounds. Casey held a decided advantage in the third and fourth rounds and got in some telling blows. Casey obtained the verdict.

MIDDLE WEIGHTS.

Corporal Chivers, Essex Regiment, 11-0, vs. Sergeant Delaney, Leinsters, 11-4.—Both men put in some hard fighting through the four rounds. Chivers countered Delaney's attacks, and got home repeatedly. He was given the verdict on points.

HEAVY WEIGHTS.

Bombardier Wells, No. 6 Mountain Battery, R. G. A., 12-11, vs. Drummer Ness, Seaforths, 11—12.—Directly they came together Wells knocked his man out with a terrific punch over the head.

SPECIAL THREE ROUND CONTESTS.

Gunner Howell, 13th Battery, R. F. A., vs. Gunner Primer, 14th Battery, R. F. A.—The fight had hardly opened when Primer was knocked out.

Harley, South Wales Borderers, 9-3, vs. Radd, Highland Light Infantry, 9-2.—Harley was declared the winner on points.

FOX TERRIERS AT THE CALCUTTA SHOW.

REMARKABLE as was the last Calcutta dog show in many ways, in the excellence of all its arrangements and in its record entries, no special feature of the show was more noticeable than the extraordinay numerical strength and high quality of the fox terriers. The breed is so popular in India that it is no unusual occurrence for the fox terriers to predominate over all other breeds represented, but never on any previous occasion have eighty fox terriers faced the judge, and it is proposed to devote a few special remarks to them.

Mr. Longhurst took his classes from Puppy upwards instead of from Open downwards as some judges prefer, and the ball opened with the smooth dog puppies, a class of seven, of which Mr. Jamieson's imported Blue Duke secured the red riband. Second fell to Mr. Kennedy's Avon Mickie, a little dog we personally prefer to the other. In style and carriage, in short back and general build, this little dog excels. His coat is also very hard though for a smooth it savours too much of the wire character. On the whole, Avon Mickie was unfortunate in the total competition, and if his owner is a plucky exhibitor he will give him another trial. One of Mr. Ross' Sabine Roller puppies, a nice one, was third, and it is imagined that Northop Nipper was not far off.

The Novice dog produced a class of twenty, and it will be understood that in the remarks to follow we speak open to correction. Mr. Longhurst is an excellent judge of a terrier; the classes before him were very large and extraordinarily level in quality; that being the case, unless the judge is going to take an unlimited time over his awards, a trifling difference in the way a terrier is shown at any particular moment makes all the difference in the world, and that particular moment is the moment the judge is taking him in. Colonel Montresor was first and second with Viking and Vexer and is to be congratulated in winning with two home-bred ones against such strong imported company. Both are nice in type, but fail in quality of outline, and it is doubtful whether in such company they would ever hold that place again. Third was also a trifle of surprise. Up Jenkins is a dog with a great head and much merit, but is a little on the large side and his feet might be improved. Reserve went to the Raja of Pithapuram's Avon Mainstay, an imported dog, shown rather fat and not quite pleasing in head. Mr. Alexander's Ajax received the only commendation.

In the limit, Viking or Vexer again won, and as far as they were concerned rightly in that order. The imported Lisna Reckoner, third, would probably on another day beat both. In the open, the Pithapuram dog Resident separated Viking and Vexer. Lisna Reckoner retreated to Reserve, with Ajax and Durbar Splinter commended. Ajax was not in good company, for the old winner Splinter was never looking in better form and might easily have taken any judge's fancy. The open class was a large one of eighteen, the quality was good but there was nothing in the class of transcendent merit, and equal as was the class, the terriers in it were of all sorts of types and sizes. The moral of it was that, although the judge was an expert, the circumstances were such that no exhibitor need fear to try his luck again.

In the bitch Puppies, the class was one of ten and Mr. Longhurst soon selected the best in Mr. James Reid's Northop Novel. This is a sweet bitch in style and quality and is always likely to be there or thereabout, she fully deserved her win, and subsequently galloped through all her classes up to the open. She was the most attractive of the season's importations. Second, third, and reserve were sisters, all nice puppies, from Mr. Ross' strong kennel, by Sabine Roller out of Rani, a strikingly good litter. For some reason they were only entered in the Puppies, and in the Novices Northop Novel was followed by Lyons Lady (bred by the Maharajah of Jind), Rock Nancy, and Northop Dainty in that order. Again quite a good class of twelve, and Northop Novel apart no two judges would place them in the same way.

In the Limit, Mrs. Treloawy was second with an excellent type of bitch in Hardwicke Black Eyed Susan, who afterwards rightly won the Local Special, Lyons Lady third. The same order obtained in the open with Mr. Ross' last year's winner Rani Reserve. Rani is a good bitch, though she falls somewhat in the true contour of a fox terrier, suggesting some remote bull-cross. The class as a whole, one of nineteen, was a very good one, containing ten imported bitches. Resident won the Special for the best Smooth fox terrier the property of a member of the C. K. C. and Northop Novel the Special for the opposite sex.

The wire classes were not so numerous, but were conspicuous from the fact that Mr. Lionel Jacob's trio were subsequently so successful in the Specials competition, carrying off some ten of the more important Special prizes against all breeds. In dog puppies Jus Gladii, a son of Jo Hukm, romped in an easy first. He is a puppy with great quality at the same time excelling in bone, and is quite likely to give his noted sire trouble next cold weather. He has a beautful head and the best of feet. He did not appear in the Novices, in which Minora Vanguard won. Mr. Atkinson's Kepler's Result is a good terrier with a very hard coat, spoilt by its curl.

In the Limit, Jus Gladii again won, beating Admiral Vanguard, the latter a nice little dog, a bit out at elbow. In the Open Champion Jo Hukm swamped the class with his quality, Admiral Vanguard again second.

In Puppy bitches, Mr. Law won with Miss Vanguard, who continued in the same place in Novices and Limit. Mr. Lewis Watson was second in Novices with Lady Nancy, shown in bad condition, or she might easily have beaten the winner. Similarly, in the Limit Dil Pasand was shown too fat or she might have won. In the Open, Champion Billie Burke was rightly first, a little bitch of great quality who knows how to make the most of herself; but she was not quite at her best on this occasion as she was apparently showing in whelp. She was, however, class enough to win the Special for the best bitch in the show in competition with all breeds.

Mr. Lionel Jacob's Champion Jo Hukm, a great terrier of the huntsman's type but withal brimful of quality, won the Specials for the best wire terrier, the best fox terrier smooth or wire, the I. K. A. best terrier, the Veteran's Cup, the President's Challenge Bowl, and H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup. At every show this cold weather, at Mussoorie, Simla, Lahore, and Calcutta, under different judges on each occasion, he has been equally successful, and is no doubt the terrier in India of the day. With his son, Jus Gladii, he won the Brace Cup for all breeds, and with Champion Billie Burke in addition the trio carried off the Team Cup for all breeds. Singly, or in braces, or teams, the three carried all before them.

STRAY NOTES.

SOME people attribute great cunning and cleverness to the bear, and yet again others believe him to be a heavy, dull witted creature. I incline to the latter belief myself, though, perhaps, it is not quite fair to judge even Bruin from outward appearances alone! But an account I have heard of his really stupid behaviour, when in Russia, the peasants set about tricking him, goes to prove the most stupid part of him, for in these instances he used actually to be his own destroyer. I'm writing of a good many years ago—twenty-five or thirty may be—when firearms were very much more scarce than they are now. Although I dare say these are not even now plentiful or common among that class of poor people, and it's probable that they still make their captures sometimes in the same old-fashioned way, which I am sure will interest some of the numerous readers of the Indian Field.

It may not be generally known that old Bruin is especially partial to honey, and it is this weakness of his that the Russian peasant took advantage of. A bear will go for miles to find a hollow tree where the bees have hidden their treasure, and he is perfectly secure from anything like retaliation on their part, for try as they will, they cannot hurt him. Their stings he does not feel in the least, and so he has it entirely his own way.

Well, then, the peasants decide on a forest where bears are known to be found and there set about discovering a hollow tree where the wild bees have hidden their store. They must have a fairly stout, strong branch, in line, above the opening into the hollow trunk, and if there be no such branch in the right place, a good, strong wooden peg driven in, at the proper height, answers their purpose equally well. To this they then attach a thin rope and to the other end of the rope a carefully selected weight or stone—heavy and otherwise warranted to assert itself! Preferably, the hole in the tree would be rather low down, and the branch, or peg, to which the string and weight are fixed, some two and a half, or three feet above it. Then the stone would be tied on so as to hang a few inches—eight or ten probably—from the ground. Having made these arrangements the men make themselves scarce, finding hiding places where they can and from where they can watch the proceedings, and pounce on their victim at the proper time. Where there is honey, the bear is quite sure to find his way, sooner or later—sooner in all probability—and when he comes to the selected spot, he finds the freely swinging obstruction not a little in his way. Every time he pushes it aside, expecting thus to shift it permanently out of his way, back it comes with a bang on his skull. An ill-tempered brute too, is Bruin, so before he and the stone have exchanged many knocks he is rampant, and pushes the weight off each time, more roughly and impatiently, getting the harder knocks of course for his share of the bargain! The pendulum certainly will not be the first to tire at such a game, so on it goes, bumping and banging, harder and ever harder, infuriating the creature, more and more, till the honey is clean forgotten, and the bear has but one aim in life—to rid himself of this obstruction that has given him such a sore head; and to this end he labours away till quite exhausted. He is maddened by the untiring swing of something he fails to understand, so he hugs it, scratches it, and hits it, even bites it—but finding he can make no impression whatsoever, he eventually drops helpless, without strength for another push or jerk, and then the peasants pounce on him and finish him off, while he is still overcome and helplessly exhausted.

The Laps and the Finns have an idea, that the animals they kill have the power of returning from the "somewhere" to which they go as ghosts, to haunt those that slaughtered them! This especially applies to the bear. Imagine! believing in the ghost of a bear! Why it is far more promising in its chances of entertainment than a story that was told me in all good faith, the other day, by a real live man (not quite the genuine article I should say!) of a haunted house he had been obliged to leave, because of a ghost that came round every night and opened all the doors he had himself secured and barricaded! and opened them with a good deal of clatter too. However, I'm wandering far from my point. The Laps and Finns then believed that Bruin's "ghost came back," and would certainly "call" upon the one that had taken his life. So after they had killed him they set up a great show of mourning and distress; they howled and cried and expressed regret and loathing for the shameful deed that had deprived this beautiful creature of its life. Then—(and here comes the belief in the stupidity of the animal again—) one would ask, "Who did this mean and cruel thing!" And another of the group would say, for the enlightenment of the bear's ghost and to help it on its journey of revenge, "It was the Englishman across the stream on the south," or "The Swiss," or "Swede, from the hut on yonder mountain." Anybody but themselves of course, and thus having, as they fondly imagined, scared the bear's attendance from another world, on somebody else, they, themselves were safe from the ghost, and were at liberty to give their thoughts to the delight of a meal off him.

Writing of tricking bears reminds me of an extraordinary method I have read of as being adopted sometimes in Siam for frightening monkeys. The Siamese ape is,—if such a thing be possible!—more partial to fruit than any of his brethren found anywhere else on the face of the earth! So for time untold he has robbed and plundered the orchards for miles around his particular haunts, and there seemed absolutely no way of circumventing him, till at last some clever individual hit upon the plan of playing on the monkey's terror of the wild, or tiger cat. Monkeys everywhere I think, have a particular dread of the tiger cat, its resemblance to the tiger no doubt accounting for it. So the wily gardener, with fruit just in prime condition for robbing, prepares his trap for the apes, and catches just one. Their curiosity is unbounded, for they make a good second to the cat (and that curiosity killed!) and they will examine an unfamiliar object very minutely (unless they are made suspicious before hand) and generally wind up by leaving one of their number behind for the gardener's benefit. Having got his specimen, the gardener proceeds to restrain the monkey's activities with cord, and then, despite a few scratches and bites, sets about clothing him in the skins of tiger cats, previously got and prepared. Into these he is carefully sewn; well covered, but his limbs not in any way hampered, and then he is let go. Off he goes—or tries to!—into the bosom of his family, with quite remarkable experiences to relate, but they will have none of him and his stripes! Nor will they listen to his chatter. For, in his new unfamiliar suit, he is a greater terror than any cat they have yet encountered. He goes just where they go, and is every bit as active and energetic as they—besides being so very anxious to be among them! And so he scares them, shrieking, screaming and chattering, further and further afield—for, who can say, how long? Perhaps until his clothes drop off! or more likely are picked off, by fingers always restless and actively mischievous, and he returns to his own monkey dress suit! The scare has always been a lasting one, they say, and not only will that particular gathering of monkeys keep away from that orchard themselves, but the warning is handed down "unto the third and fourth generation!" Where monkeys abound, and gardeners suffer, it is a plan worth trying surely.

Before I conclude I will give another "tip" to those whom it may interest! A useful, ingenious, old-fashioned tip, yet simple withall. In Ireland where young lambs were often killed by foxes, the people found, that by putting something very brightly scarlet, around the necks of the lambs, they saved them from Reynard—who is evidently not partial to red. Now, suppose people whose poultry suffer from Master Reynard were to try putting nice bright neckties on their birds? They would need to be conspicuous—not too small, and of a loudly glaring colour. If young lambs can be safeguarded in this way, why should not poultry be so too? I am not partial to poultry myself, or I would certainly try the effect of decorating them in this way to see if I could prevent Mr. Fox's depredations.

Wall, I.M.S., C.M.Z.S., Mr. John Wallace, C.E; and Mr. N. B. Kinnear, Honorary Librarian: Mr. B. D. Richards Honorary Treasurer: Mr. L. H. Savile (ex-officio). Honorary Secretary: Mr. W. S. Millard (ex-officio).

THE ACCOUNTS FOR 1909.

The Honorary Treasurer, Mr. L. H. Savile, presented the statement of accounts for 1909, which he remarked showed a satisfactory result. The subscriptions for the year were Rs. 16,831-8-4 showing an increase of Rs. 2,374-8-7 over the previous year. The entrance fees were Rs. 2770 compared with Rs. 1,480 for 1908, and 294 new members had been elected during 1909, against 160 in 1908.

The accounts were duly passed subject to the usual audit.

The Secretary mentioned that the Society still had some 30 sets of the Plates which were published in Indian Ducks and their Allies and members could obtain these at Rs. 15 per set (Rs. 25 to non-members).

Mr. C. D. Mahaluxmivala exhibited a specimen of a bamboo (Bambusa arundinacea) which was now flowering in the Victoria Gardens, Bombay. One clump flowered last year it was considered abnormal but the same clump had flowered again this year and also another clump in a different place. Unfortunately there was no trace as to when these bamboos were planted or from whence they came. Some of the seed was exhibited and a young plant raised from the seed last year.

Mr. Mahaluxmivala also exhibited some seeds of the Talipot palm (Corypha umbraculifera) one of which flowered last year in the Victoria Gardens and another in the Elphinstone Circle Gardens.

Mr. John Wallace, C.E., and Lieutenant-Colonel K. R. Kirtikar, I.M.S. (Retired) read a paper on "The Giant Creeper" (Calycopteris floribunda), exhibiting specimens of the plant and sections of the trunk.

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the authors of the paper.

The Story Teller.

MR. DOWN'S NIGHT OUT.

THE big square envelope, insistent and aggressive, forced itself on his attention from the heap on the other desk.

It was marked "Private." Embossed on the back in red was a tumbler and a pipe.

Mr. Down started violently, and into his subdued eyes a retrospective gleam flickered.

"The old club," he said softly and reminiscently.

He opened it carefully and extracted a gilt-edged card, announcing that the twenty-first anniversary dinner of the "Bats" would be held at the Sompson Restaurant on the 19th of the month.

Written on the back of the card was a message from Peter Dodd, the bland and genial permanent president and chairman of the Bats.

"Dear Brother Bat," he wrote. "At this coming-of-age celebration a full circle is expected. As a founder and vice-president your presence is particularly desired. It is twelve years since we had a visit from you. Do you remember the night? Come along, do. Every one of the old boys is coming. Paddy Flynn is crossing from Ulster; Harry Bates is taking a night off from the theatre; Tubby Ward is coming up from Devon; Billy Fish, Snubby, old Mustard, and Bob Craig—in fact, every one of the old crowd will be there."

Mr. Down leaned back in his chair and sighed lightly.

"Paddy Flynn!" he murmured. "Snubby and Billy Fish—and old Tubby Ward. Dear me, I'd like to meet them all again, the friends of my youth! I'd go across to America or New Zealand to meet them all—but my wife!"

He sighed.

Ah, well," he said, "I've much to be thankful for! A good wife is the gem of one's existence, and Henrietta is a good wife—so she tells me often enough. A trifle exacting, perhaps."

At twelve-thirty precisely Mr. Down went out to lunch. He was a creature of habit—he phrased it "man of method"—and invariably found himself at twelve-thirty-two in one particular corner seat at Thomas's facing his business acquaintance, Mr. Mobbs.

Behold Mr. Mobbs!—stout, short, and florid, with close-cropped hair and a stubbly beard cut down nearly to the skin; a man who prided himself on his quick decisions and never honestly admitted a mistake; a widower who claimed deeper knowledge of women than married men could claim, because he had buried a wife; cloudy reasoning, yet never disputed.

"Down my friend," said he. "You look hipped, strained, worried. You want a change, a tonic, or a bust-up. Do you all the good in the world to have a night out and assault a policeman. Look at you now. You haven't the slightest idea whether you want beef or mutton. Bring beef, George——"

Mr. Down took beef.

"Ah!" he sighed. "often envy you your definite mind, Mobbs. You seem never to be in doubt as to anything; always know exactly what you're doing."

"My boy," said Mr. Mobbs solemnly, "I always find out what I want; that's the secret of it. If I want a thing I consider the easiest way to get it, and then decide—do I still want it? If, to quote a phrase our simian ancestors might have used, if I think the nuts are worth the climb, I have a go for them. If not, I examine another want."

"Yes," said Mr. Down, "but that's where I fail in deciding whether the—the—er—the nuts are worth the climb."

"Well, my boy, even if you find they're not, climbing's good exercise. But we don't want to discuss philosophy. You do as I suggest; have a tonic or a fight, or a night out."

The gilt-edge of the card inside Mr. Down's breast-pocket seemed to burn through to his heart. Acting on a sudden impulse, he took the card out and passed it to his friend.

"I really am half inclined to attend that," he said with an uncertain assumption of nonchalance. "I should like to meet the old boys again."

Mr. Mobbs adjusted his pince-nez and stared at the card.

"Down, my boy," said he, "this is absolutely providential. The hand of Fate is pulling the strings that control your destiny so to speak. It's just what you want. If you don't take advantage of this you ought to be shot! What d'ye mean by being only half inclined to go to it?"

Mr. Down became very confidential.

"Well," he said, "you see, the fact is my wife is a very strong-minded woman and she has the idea that a married man's place is by his own fireside. Mind you, I don't say she's wrong; quite the contrary; but there's reason in all things, isn't there? And one can have a little too much even of a good thing."

Mr. Mobbs gazed at him in amused indignation.

"You mean to say," he expostulated, "that, to put it vulgarly, you're hunpecked?"

"No, no!" said Mr. Down hurriedly. "No, you're quite wrong—only Mrs. Down is a very strong-willed woman, you see, and—I find it saves a lot of time and argument to let her have her own way in the beginning."

"Exactly!" said Mr. Mobbs. "As I say, you're henpecked."

Mr. Down remained mute; the unwilling silence of assent.

"I'd like to see any woman try to henpeck me!" said Mr. Mobbs fiercely.

A similar but genuine wish stirred Mr. Down's heart, and in fancy he beheld Mr. Mobbs towering before Mrs. Down's adamantine aspect, a picture that faded away like a happy dream. He said nothing.

"My boy," said Mr. Mobbs, confidentially and confidently, "let me tell you something. The less you give in to a woman the more respect she has for you; the more she has her own way, the more she wants it. My boy, if you broke out and went to that dinner your wife would kick up a row, of course, but she'd think a good deal more of you."

Mr. Down wagged his head sadly.

"If I went to that dinner," he said, "d'you know what she'd do? She'd follow me and show me up before all my old chums."

"Get along with you!" exclaimed Mr. Mobbs, incredulous and derisive.

"It's truth," said Mr. Down solemnly. "I once went to a lodge dinner and that's what happened."

"Well, I'd go, if it were me," said Mr. Mobbs. "As I said before, the nuts are worth the climb—and as for her following you—pooh!—why lightning itself never strikes in the same place twice."

"Lightning," said Mr. Down succinctly, "doesn't need to."

Mr. Mobbs shook his head disapprovingly.

"I'm surprised at you," he said.

Mr. Down perked up a little.

"Pon my word, I'd go," he said. "I'd go if it wasn't for the difficulty of getting dressed and out without a lot of trouble and scenes. If she was only out of the way for a night I'd go and have the time of my life."

Mr. Mobbs started.

"A telegram," he suggested, "from a dying uncle, sister, brother, aunt, cousin—anybody."

"I'd thought of that," said Mr. Down, "but it's no go. She hasn't a relation in the world that I know of except a half-brother—and he's in Australia. Besides that was how I worked it when I went to that other dinner."

The light of inspiration radiated suddenly from the eyes of Mr. Mobbs and made every little wrinkle on his face express intelligence.

"My boy," said Mr. Mobbs, "you remember my point of view: Are the nuts worth the climb? That's the idea. In other words, would you risk the row afterwards if you could get away to this dinner?"

Mr. Down hesitated a moment.

"Yes," he said firmly, "I would."

Mr. Mobbs bent towards his luxurious friend and sunk his voice to a whisper. "Drug her," he said—"drug her!"

Mr. Down gave a nervous start.

"My boy," said Mr. Mobbs, "in my pocket at the present moment is exactly what you want. I suffer from insomnia, as you know, and I've got a preparation—perfectly harmless, quite tasteless—which always sends me off to sleep in a couple of minutes. It's a snip, it's a tip, it's the only way. Will you have it?"

Mr. Down remained speechless.

"Slip it in her tea, or beer, or whiskey, or whatever she drinks at your evening meal, my bonny laddie, and inside ten minutes you can be dressed and on your way—with your wife comfortably snoozing on the sofa—and she'll sleep till you wake her, my boy. Will you have it? Just a little white pill."

Mr. Down's face set in a stern caste.

"Give it here," he said determinedly.

* * * * *

In the brain of Mr. Down a confusion of thoughts and impulses zipped and whizzed like unto a firework set piece of the Battle of the Nile gone wrong. Back from the archives of memory floated the picture of a dining table, set with unblushing wine-bottles and cigar-boxes, surrounded by the Lodge friends of Mr. Down, with Mr. Down sitting near the chairman gazing with an expression indicating the supreme horror of an agonised soul at the stern majestic figure of his wife who had forced her way to the door.

Automatically his face reproduced the expression, and two small children playing with hoops ran indoors crying.

On the threshold of his home he paused and considered rapidly whether, after all, it would not be best to announce determinedly that he was going out to a dinner and defy the consequences, but his courage oozed into infinity ere he had wiped his boots on the mat.

Behold him, a little later standing over the prostrate form of his victim, placed comfortably on the sofa, and experiencing thrills of emotion Lucretia Borgia never attained to. See him alighting from his taxi-cab and paying a lordly half-crown to the chauffeur. Observe him gaily bounding up the steps from the cloakroom into the hall of the restaurant, and eagerly reading the indicator.

"All the old boys," he said. "Twelve years since we met."

"The nuts are worth the climb."

Notice an expression of uncertainty flitting across his face. Imagine an obsequious attendant!

"Room 24, sir! The Bat's dinner, sir! That was last night, sir!"—London Opinion.

THEY were all miners who lodged at Mrs. Jenkins' house, and a new one had just arrived. The morning after his advent a terrible clatter was heard on the stairs at five o'clock. It was the new lodger who had stumbled over a bath, and both had gone to the bottom, causing a terrible din. As he picked himself up in the hall he heard a voice above call out, "Right O!" At supper that evening he made a complaint about the carelessness of people leaving such an article as a bath at a top of the stairs. One of the others explained. "It's Jem," he said. "He is such a heavy sleeper that only a noise like a lodger falling downstairs will wake him. He calls it his alarm wake."

"MY husband has gone motor-car mad. We were driving yesterday. He hadn't spoken to me for three hours although I was sitting by his side. We came to a bit of the road where two cross roads met, and a flock of sheep was coming out of one of them. My husband stretched out his hand and pinched me so cruelly that I screamed aloud. "Thanks," he said, without even looking at me. "I didn't want to hurt you, but my hooter is out of order."

WHILST walking in Dublin one day a correspondent's attention was attracted by a very lengthy funeral procession, and on looking again he saw there were no less than three hearses in it. Everyone seemed much impressed by the solemnity and respectability of the function, and he asked a man standing at the street corner the meaning of the occasion. His answer was amusing. "Why, sir," said he, "it is the funeral of Mr. O'Flanagan, of Westmoreland Street, but two other gentlemen have taken the opportunity of being buried with him." Mr. O'Flanagan was the landlord of a large public-house in the city.

A HUNTER'S PARADISE.

That great East African traveller, Colonel Patterson who gave us "The Man-eaters of Tsavo," has followed up that exciting book of travel with "In the grip of the Nyika." The new work, which is practically a continuation of the story of his adventures in British East Africa, is, if anything, even more exciting than its predecessor and is sure of a very favourable reception. It may be said at once that no one who takes it up is the least likely to be disappointed, for he must be the most insatiable reader in the world if he demands more in the way of adventure than Colonel Patterson is ready to give him. The Nyika is not, as might be supposed, some savage tribe into whose clutches the author fell, but is the East African equivalent for what an Australian would call the Bush. It is a vast wilderness with but little water, and covered with a short scrub which makes it the finest harbour for big game which exists anywhere outside the Indian Terai.

The Nyika, as it exists at present, is unquestionably one of the most wonderful and interesting districts in the world. The traveller by rail from Mombassa by Nairobi no sooner enters the great Athi Plain than he gets an idea of what is before him. From the windows of his compartment he can see every sort of beast he has ever heard of, and a good many more that he has not, going about in their stupendous, natural zoo. He will no longer, we regret to say, enjoy the unique sensation of colliding with an infuriated rhino, for civilisation has affected even the greater pachyderms, and the rhinoceros has at last been convinced, after many experiments, that the buffer of an engine is harder than his head, and the charge of a train more forcible than his own.

But other excitements are by no means lacking to the jaded tourist. If he remains in the train all night with his window down he is quite likely to find not only his ticket but himself collected by some enterprising lion. In the ordinary way, when the traveller is told that the signals are against the train and the polite guard explains that "we shall be going on directly, and are only waiting for the 10-40 to go through," he mildly anathematises the railway company and thinks of writing to the papers. In this land it is more than likely that the reason why the signals remain up is because the signal man cannot get at them to put them down, a lion with every appearance of being particularly sharpset having chased him up a telegraph pole and sat down at the bottom to wait for his descent.

Lions and railways seem so entirely incompatible that we feel a sense almost of unreality when Colonel Patterson tells us of the great brutes wandering about station platforms and hiding behind luggage-trucks. But it is all real enough, and as true as it is strange. Of course, tales or, if he is lucky, sights like these are to the explorer of the Nyika the mere adumbration of what is to come when he has fitted out his safari at Nairobi and has got away into the real wilderness. Presumably the human inhabitants ought to claim our attention first, though we are not quite sure that they deserve it. Among these Colonel Patterson make some specially interesting observations. He dismisses the native tale of the tribe of Pigmies and thinks that those who reported it had really mistaken a family of baboons for human beings. But in one race that he came across he found a large number of individuals with blues eyes, a thing almost unheard of among African natives, and it is a pity that he does not venture upon enthnological speculation as to the origin of this singular people. In the course of his wanderings he found a young girl with a face and figure of Cleopatra who was brought by four Somalis from the Boran country with the idea of negotiating a profitable marriage in the South. The strange thing is that not only was this girl of a type so utterly different from all the rest of the natives, but that she wore the ancient Egyptian dress—is there some remnant of the lost civilisation of the Pharoahs still lingering in the depths of the dark continent?

From the human beings who mostly file their teeth into points, carry keepsakes in the hideously enlarged lobes of their ears, and otherwise defile God's image, we pass to the real joy of the Nyika, the animals. Nothing strikes us so much as the astounding abundance of life in this wonderful country. The lions are flushed in coveys like partridges, and the rhinos come not single spies but in battalions. At one waterhole Colonel Patterson found sixteen of these gigantic beasts assembled for convivial purposes and snorting at one another like Irish members of Parliament. To drop into a family of lions seems to be one of the most ordinary incidents of a morning's stroll, and one has to keep a sharp look-out when riding away from one rhinoceros not to blunder into another. The rhino, by the way, seems to be a most unpleasant character and to have a confirmed habit of charging every living thing that meets his eye, whether it has molested him or not. The natives do not wait for him. The moment the vicious, snorting brute appears, they drop everything and remain perched in the nearest trees until something else has attracted the rhino's attention and diverted his abominable temper from themselves.

In British East Africa the hunter is, apparently, quite as often the hunted, and Colonel Patterson and his friends had some extraordinarily narrow squeaks. Perhaps the narrowest was when a huge "rogue" elephant undertook to exterminate the party, and did, in fact, succeed in killing the author's horse. But perhaps the most thrilling escape recorded in the whole book is that of one of the Game Rangers, who was knocked off his horse by one lion, while another, leaving the first to chase the horse, seized the unfortunate man by the shoulder and carried him off. Happily he could still use his left arm, and recollecting that an old hunting knife hung at his belt, managed to draw it and stab the lion to the heart. No sooner had he disposed of his assailant than the other lion returned, having failed to capture the horse. The wounded man had just enough time and strength to climb into a tree and enough wit to fasten himself to his perch before he fainted. When he came to himself the second lion was still waiting for him, and he was kept for hours in the tree until some natives fortunately delivered him. Of the extraordinary ferocity of some of the beasts we get a graphic idea from Colonel Patterson's description of the hyena which began to eat a wounded gazelle without troubling to kill it, and continued its gruesome meal even after a shot through the back had paralysed its hind quarters.

Colonel Patterson has much to say on the need of a new draft animal for East African travel, and he complains that serious attempts have not yet been made to domesticate the eland or the zebra.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

There was a good day's racing in Calcutta on Saturday last, big fields turning out for every event. The programme started with the Magdala Plate, hurdle race for horses. Golden Morn, in spite of all her weight, was made favourite and disposed of a moderate field easily. Mount Dane was very sore and jumped badly.

C. Hoyt was in luck in the Lansdowne Plate with Mayfowl, who was fancied by his stable connection. The whole field raced together until the straight where Mayfowl and Carnival came away together, the former winning by half a length.

The Outram Plate was a fine race from the word go. Coming to the home bend Little Meg held a slight lead from Flotsam. They were both passed by Devil's Limit a few strides from home, the verdict going to the latter by a short head.

The New Course Plate was rather a one-sided affair. The stable came for Morette at the opening of the books and continued to back her up to the close, even at 6 to 4. She led all the way followed by True Love and Scotch Girl, the latter being beaten by a head on the post for third place.

The Bengal Plate was the surprise of the day. Longchamps held a good position throughout the race and won as he liked from Hackler's Bloom.

Mr. Galstaun had a win at last in the Cone Plate with a newly imported filly by Black Sand—Albina, named Village Girl. She cut out all the running and won easily from Not So Dusty.

We much regret to record the death of Teddy Charters from injuries received in a fall in the Bombay Derby last Saturday. He was a very promising lad and would have done well in this country. He came out from Ireland at the beginning of this season to ride for Penton and had won a few races.

H.H. the Kour Sahib of Patiala has purchased Longchamps and Not So Dusty from Mr. E. J. Marshall and we hear he will probably be buying a new Cup horse this year in place of old Wandin. We would draw the attention of our readers to Mr. Marshall's advertisement appearing further on putting some his race horses up for sale. Of these Melbourne would make an ideal stallion for either Government or native Stud. Kaffirpan will probably make a Grand National horse next year, and is very cheap at Rs. 2,000. Craigendorrie is also a good performer. The owner is only selling to make room for a new lot.

The hurdles were up for schooling on Tuesday afternoon. High Court (Mr. Bletsoe) went a mile and a half in nice style; Amazon (Alford) and Badcock (Mr. Rasch) also went once round, both faring well.

The Calcutta Light Horse went into camp on the Maidan on Sunday, and have been doing useful work out in Ballygunge and Tollygunge districts during the two days' holiday: the rest of the week will be spent on the Calcutta Maidan.

The Ladies' Paperchase Cup was run on Monday morning at the Chota Maidan, the start and finish being close together out in the open. Only six starters faced Mr. Allen—the smallest field we have ever seen for this sporting event. The course was about three miles long and was rather tricky. Miss Kent led at the start from Mrs. Lamond Walker and Miss Forsyth, with the Misses Binning and Mrs. Frerichs close behind. Miss Binning's horse, Black Douglas, refused the first wall and was never in the hunt again. There was little change in the order when they came to view again. Shortly after crossing the maidan again, Miss B. Binning and Eileen came to grief and Miss Kent got brushed off against a tree and was rather shaken. Coming to the run home Mrs. Walker led, but was soon passed by Miss Forsyth, who ran home an easy winner, everyone being delighted to see this good sportswoman come in first.

1. Miss Forsyth on Karolyi
2. Mrs. Walker on Master John
3. Mrs. Frerichs on Havelock
4. Miss Binning on Black Douglas

Miss Kent on St. Odille (fell)
Miss B. Binning on Eileen (fell)

On Friday the 9th paperchase was held over the Salt Lake country, before a very small gallery.

The final order was:—

Horses.

1. Mr. Morris on Blue Bell
2. Mr. Evers on Highland Fling
3. Captain Gibbs on Trilby
4. Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy
5. Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester
6. Mr. Dawson on Govindpore II.
7. Mr. Steele Perkins on Dalgai.

Ponies.

1. Lord Francis Scott on Just in Time
2. Captain Gibbs on Pathfinder
3. Mr. Marshall on Lochmaben
4. Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un
5. Mr. Evers on Lochabie
6. Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—We opened the Big Meeting on Wednesday with a very fair day's racing and good finishes, which did not quite go as much in punters' favour as the fact that the handicapper had no finger in the pie might suggest. The couple of stables mentioned before are missing, but a good deal of useful stuff is at hand and on the running during this first day the handicapper should be able to produce some interesting puzzles during the Meet.

The New Plate was the first item down, and on his running close up to Siriska with a further improvement, as he was got ready rather later than most, Majesty was made favourite. He and Siriska cut out the running together, but from the distance Majesty began to go away and won easily. Toronto finished next with Siriska stopping, perhaps through his troublesome shins.

In the Fort Plate, Scimitar was confidently expected to pull off the first leg of a prospective "double," Shanwar also being muchly in demand on this season's form, Minerva next at tens—which gives a fair idea of the betting. To begin with, Scimitar gave a deal of trouble at the gate, and being put back by the starter could not get a run till luckily squeezing in on the rails at the bend, where Shanwar and Zinfandel were done. Here Hishan and Minerva were in the lead, and just as Scimitar was coming on Minerva went away without much trouble.

Not long after the betting opened in the third race with Castalia, Pincher and Danseuse in demand, the first mentioned shortened to a decided favourite. Pincher got away behind a crowd and could never get going, Castalia leading out slightly from Danseuse and T. M. S. Down the straight Danseuse challenged and Boomey put in a run, but Castalia when asked went away from them to win decisively in smart time for the class—1-1⅘.

Next came the all-important City Plate with the Calcutta heroes on the list. Satisfied about his staying, the six-furlong win of Saturday induced the public to make Fizz an odds on favourite from Master Delaval, with a strong call coming for the former's stable companion, Sham Fight. Crossbred's chance we had no opportunity of judging, as he was clean out of it when left many lengths at the barrier. Master Delaval was at once taken to the front from Fizz, Stirabout, Sham Fight and Pelargonium in a bunch. A couple of furlongs saw the last named up with the leader clear in front of Stirabout, next Fizz and Sham Fight. After the half mile Fizz and Sham Fight made a move in front of Stirabout. The two together came after the leaders down the straight, but Master Delaval continued striding out in front and leaving Pelargonium to lose place money in a great dash for second and third from Fizz and Sham Fight. It was quite a good race, but people were surprised and disappointed to see the little chestnut fail to put in his usual dash.

It seems impossible to convince people any further as to Precious's greatness, but if any were wanted it came in the Dealers' Plate. With 10-3 up, he was always at about evens, with Peculiar fives and Merrily sixes, and the public were not far out. Dhafer made all the running, and was going so well that he looked a winner before suddenly stopping on entering the straight. Merrily had come up to Peculiar and led into the straight, but all was by no means over. In his usual remarkable manner, Precious came like a flash outside and, staying out Company's late run, had everything else settled.

Scimitar and Shanwar came out for a second time in the Paddock Plate, the former again favourite from Mountain King, who had not run for some time but only flattered to the bend. He and Sheriff were together in front till Rajput and Plassey passed him on turning, and Scimitar came inside after a better run than last time. He was doomed to be beaten again however, as just when his backers were hopeful Evans showed he had something in hand, and went away comfortably on Rajput, who won his connections quite a pile.

The second day came off on Saturday and a packed enclosure had plenty to interest with some very exciting finishes. Some of the top notchers in all classes were seen out and the plum of them resulted in rather a bad upset. There was an unfortunate accident in the big Arab race, Charters coming down with Urgent and being so seriously hurt that he died from his injuries in hospital early next morning. In that particular race both Peculiar's stirrup tapes gave way, and Evans was lucky to get off with a bruised ankle against the rails. Southall, I am glad to see, is riding again with success after his recent strain, but Heeroo is down with a bad knee from a fall off a new waler.

As to the racing, the 14-2 Stewards' Purse brought out only six, and Danseuse after her last run was expected to carry 9-10 in front of Evening Herald. Things turned out as anticipated in the ring, Danseuse coming into the lead from Gun Metal before the bend and staying on comfortably from the other one of the former's stable.

The new ponies' worth may be estimated from the fact that they cut out the Melton Plate in good old pony time. Valens was said to have come on and was backed to beat Asfundier, but was never in the front bunch. Majesty, who has come on a good deal, made all the running from Nasibdar, Asfundier and Lama. At the bend Nasibdar could not answer and once Asfundier caught the leader he held him very safe.

Even the brilliant form shown by Lumination over your way was insufficient to shake public confidence in Soultline. He is back to his top form and there was never any doubt about him in the Malabar Hill Plate. Chivalry kept with him for a time, but neither he nor Lumination could extend the favourite. Huka just lost third place to a fast run by Killua.

On Precious being scratched for the Bombay Derby, Sialkote rapidly warmed to even money from Hazza, Thaboor, Merrily and others. Urgent, Famous, Antica and Mehraj, alternately took up the running, Darianoor coming up about the half mile, where the accidents mentioned occurred. Mehraj and Merrily were the likely ones just before the turn, where Hazza and the favourite were handy. Mehraj came into the straight full enough of running to hold Hazza, but Sialkote was too much for him and scored very readily. Hazza saved place money from another late run by Company, who will be unlucky not to win soon.

The Grand Western turned out to be an open betting race, Fizz again carrying the bulk of money with Master Theo and Stirabout, some for Pelargonium, Sporran and Refresher. This last named pony with 6-11 up was taken to the front by Melsom, and first Master Delaval, then Crossbred kept him close company, Fizz and Sporran thereabouts. Soon after the half mile Crossbred died away and Refresher went clean away to the front to stay out Master Theo and Master Delaval very easily. Fizz gave some promise rounding the bend but swerved wide and could not even get his number put up, Sporran also beating him with a run which shows him something approaching form at last.

There was a bad bit in store for those who plunked for Tachreet and Gafal in the Tom Le Mesurier Plate. Salanic cut out all the running from Lookman and Winchester, Gafal coming up very promisingly approaching the bend, but on turning was badly pocketed and interfered with. Tachreet came with a run which gave backers hope, but Southall kept Lookman going and stayed him out. This is ample proof that the winner is well back to his form of a year ago, when he was quite a champion.

Nine started for the Importers' Handicap, Forfeit always holding pride of place in the betting with strong calls on Pincher and Paul Pry. It was a splendid race, Posco and Paul Pry leading Forfeit into the straight. When Pincher made his run on the outside, Forfeit came under the whip and was given a half head verdict, which does not seem to have been popular with a great number.

The following facts about horses may be of interest.—

A horse not receiving any work or regular exercise, should be watered at least three times a day. The more work the more frequent he should be allowed to drink.

Avoid the feeding of sour bran of any kind, as it causes a disorder of the stomach and intestines and may result seriously.

Ground grain feed goes farther and gives better results than fed whole, as there is less waste and the food is more easily digested.

Quite a few horses are subject to bolting their food or eating ravenously and this grave fault can be greatly remedied by mixing their grain rations with cut hay or fodder.

Never change the food of a horse suddenly as it has a tendency to sicken him, although in many instances his condition is not noticed by the casual observer. The change should be made gradually.

In purchasing a horse be particular in selecting one possessed of a deep, broad chest, as it invariably is a signification of the fact that the most vital organs of the body, the lungs and heart, are well developed, and consequently is a sign that he has a strong constitution.

Carrots fed in limited quantities are quite beneficial as they improve the appetite, regulate the action of both the kidneys and bowels, in addition to making the skin healthy and the hair smooth and glossy.

Interference, is in the majority of cases, due to faulty conformation, horses with narrow chests or hips, or those with fetlock joints close together, causing them to toe out, are as a general thing, subject to it. It is also often caused by defective shoeing, allowing the feet to grow too long or as a result of weakness, due to exhaustion or sickness.

The normal pulse of a healthy horse, varies according to sex. In that of a stallion, it averages from 28 to 32 beats to a minute, in a gelding, 33 to 38, and in a mare, 34 to 40; the younger they are, the more rapid the beats, foals about a month old will run about 80 to 90 in a minute.

So many first class stallions have been exported from England of late years that it is welcome news that one at least has been retrieved and will reach his native land shortly. This is Flotsam, a son of St. Frusquin and Float, who has made a very great success at the stud of Senor Carlos Reyles in Uruguay. Some of his yearlings have been sold in Buenos Ayres for as much as 4,000 guineas, and practically, all his first runners are winners.

Since, however, the Buenos Ayres Jockey Club have limited a large number of their races to stock bred in the Argentine, Senor Carlos Reyles has decided to disperse his stud in Uruguay, as he cannot compete with the Argentine breeders under the circumstances, and as a result Flotsam has been secured for the Cobham stud.

Flotsam's merit as a racehorse is well remembered. He beat his stable companion Rock Sand for the Middle Park Plate and never finished unplaced in any race. His victories as a three-year-old included the Newmarket Stakes and the Sandringham Foal Stakes, for which race he carried 10st. and conceded 21lb. to Exchequer.

The Barton Cup Polo Tournament at Jubbulpore begins on the 12th proximo. All particulars may be had from the Polo Secretary, R. A. Mess, Jubbulpore.

The following regiments are entering teams for the Inter-Regimental Polo Tournament which opens at Meerut on the 20th February:—The King's Dragoon Guards, the Royal Dragoons, 16th Inniskilling Dragoons, 8th Royal Irish Hussars, 10th Royal Hussars, 12th Royal Lancers, 17th D.C.O. Lancers, and perhaps a combination of the two regiments of the Central India Horse.

The Bombay Polo Tournament which begins to day has drawn four entries only—the Poona Horse, 13th Hussars, Bhavnagar and Palanpur.

The Bombay Junior Polo Tournament was concluded on the 15th instant, the 33rd Q. O. Cavalry defeating General Alderson's team by 2 goals to 1 in the final. Details further on.

At the monthly general meeting of the Zoological Society of London, held at the offices in Hanover Square, recently, 25 new Fellows were elected, including 5 ladies, while 27 candidates for Fellowship were proposed. The number of Fellows elected during 1909 was 288, an increase of 50, compared with the total number elected during the previous year. The number of visitors to the Society's Gardens in December last was 21,396, an increase of 7,303 as compared with the corresponding month of last year. The total number of visitors during the year 1909 was 797,058, showing a decrease of 64,528. The number of Fellows elected in 1909 was 288, an increase of 50. During December, 90 additions were made to the Society's menagerie—namely, 61 presented, 9 purchased, 11 deposited, one received in exchange, and 8 born in the Gardens. Amongst the most important and interesting additions may be mentioned a long-eared fox from the Transvaal, a warthog from Nigeria, a green viper (new to the collection) from the Gold Coast, and 8 chestnut-breasted ducks, the latter hatched in the menagerie. The latest addition to the London Zoological Gardens nursery is a young impophoo, a member of the eland family,

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

and born in the antelope house. The new arrival brings the herd of eland in the Gardens up to seven. Amongst other "babies" at present in the Zoo nursery may be mentioned a Congo marsh buck, a Malayan bear, and twin gazelles.

THE M.C.C. team in South Africa played the thirteenth match of their tour against the Eastern Province at Port Elizabeth last week and won easily by an innings and 139 runs.

THE Madras Football Tournament ended on the 14th instant in a win for the Dorset Regiment, who beat the Leicesters in the final by a goal to love.

THE first round of the Murray Football Tournament has been completed with the following results:—The East Yorks beat the Shropshires, 7th Worcesters beat the Seaforth Highlanders, the Gordons beat the 8th Hussars, and the Highland Light Infantry beat the King's Own. The second round is now in progress, and will conclude by the 19th instant.

A BOXING tournament will be held at Meerut during the Inter-Regimental Polo week. There are feather and light weight competitions open to all India, and middle and catch weight contests open to the 7th Meerut Division only. Good prizes are offered and a successful tournament is expected.

WE learn that C. A. Dias, who claims to be the middle weight boxing champion of Burma and Southern India, has challenged Jack McAuliffe, the well known local prize fighter, to a 10 or 20 round bout under Queensbury Rules for the Middle Championship of India. We scarcely think that this contest is likely to take place in Calcutta, in the light of recent happenings in the boxing world in this city.

WE publish further on an account of the third encounter for the heavy weight championship of Australia between Bill Squires and Bill Lang, the latter being once more successful.

THE fight for the Feather-weight Championship of England and a purse of £1,000 was brought off at the National Sporting Club on Monday night. Jim Driscoll of Cardiff beat Seaman Hayes, the referee stopping the fight after six rounds. Driscoll is one of the best men we have ever had and has a fine record. Of 34 battles he has won 23, drawn 3, and only lost 1, while 7 have been no decision contests, in the last 4 of which Driscoll was easily best. Seaman Hayes has fought 51 contests, won 27, drawn 4 and lost the rest.

THE annual regatta of the Madras Boat Club will be held on the 19th March when the following programme will be discussed:—Service Fours, Four Oar Race, Senior and Junior Sculls, Senior and Junior Pairs and a Tub Race. A Madras crew will appear at the coming regatta at Poona. They have put in some good work on the home waters and left for Poona on the 15th instant, with Mr. F. H. Thornton as their coach. The crew is made up as follows: H. Simons, bow; Scott Mackenzie, 2; A. K. D. George, 3; C. G. Barber, stroke; and M. E. S. Thompson, cox.

THE Chess Championship of the world still remains with the celebrated Lasker. His meeting with Schlechter at Berlin last week ended in a draw at five all.

MR. G. W. RAYNER writes that although none of the Irish terriers exhibited by him at the recent Calcutta Dog Show won prizes, all the winners among the Paddies were bred by him and sold or given to the successful exhibitors.

BARRY, the day before the last received mail left London, signed articles to scull Arnst for the World's Championship on the Zambesi, probably next August.

It is some thirty-five years since the sculling championship of the world departed from the Thames. Since then victory has rested with Canadians, with Australians, and with New Zealanders, but the Old Country has never been able to regain her lost supremacy. Now, after all these years, her chances are looking extremely rosy, if. . . . . In these matters there is always an if, but in this particular instance the difficulty is easily got over. The "if" is a financial "if," and not a very formidable one at that . . . . . if Englishmen will find the money necessary for the training and expenses of their champion, Barry, who defeated the Australian, Towns, in record time at Putney not long ago, and who is to meet Arnst, the New Zealander, and champion of the world, on the Zambesi, in August next.

Time was when a good sculling match would draw as big a crowd to the banks of the Thames or Tyne as does still the annual struggle between the Universities at Putney, which has become a part of our national life. In those days sculling was the great sport of the working classes, but the men who supported it have died out and no others have taken their places. The training of men for big events naturally cost money, and when this was not forthcoming the big events did not come off and the public lost interest.

Now there is a great difference between the old style of supporter of sculling and the new. The champion of the old days was looked after by men who had a financial interest in the result of the match. Barry, on the other hand, has not only the sympathy but the practical advice and assistance of men like Mr. Guy Nickalls—probably the finest oarsman we have ever seen—Mr. Blackstaffe, Mr. Kennedy, and others.

These English gentlemen are not afraid of taking an interest in a professional. They know Barry's worth as a sculler, and while they want him to win they also believe that, with proper training, he can do it. They want to see the Old Country in her proper place again, and so surely do all English sportsmen who are worthy of the name.

That Barry's training and practice will be of the best we need not doubt, but the money still remains to be found, and it is the part of the British public to find it.

It should be forthcoming for two reasons—firstly, that our national supremacy in sport is threatened from so many quarters that we cannot for very pride lose the chance of recapturing any important event; secondly, because sculling as a sport deserves to be encouraged, as one of the most health-giving of all forms of exercise.

THE Bangalore Gymkhana Hockey Tournament for the challenge cup now held by the Cheshire Regiment opened on Monday last when one of the two games down for decision was played off. The other ended in a walk over for the Bangalore Gymkhana, the 2nd Dorsets, who had been drawn to play them, being unable to leave Madras. The 14th Hussars beat the Royal Engineers after a very level game by a goal to nil. On Tuesday the Sherwood Foresters beat the 2nd Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders by 4 goals to nil. The game between "O" Battery R. H. A. and the Cheshire Regiment was not played, the holders having scratched owing to their inability to get away.

JOHN ROBERTS, the veteran billiard champion, is on his second visit to Calcutta and is at present playing a match against Mike Elias, the champion of India, under the ægis of Bandmann. The match, which is one of 7,000 up, Roberts conceding 2,800, commenced on Monday night when Elias scored 408 and the veteran cueist 918. On Tuesday there were two sessions. In the evening Roberts increased his score from 918 to 1,602, and Elias added 351 to his score. Continuing after dinner Roberts carried his score to 2,500, his best break being 177, and Elias' score at the close of the play was 3,954. The match was continued on Wednesday and is still in progress.

WE regret to hear that Mr. T. L. Roberts, manager of Messrs. Wilkinson, Heywood and Clarke, Limited, and well known on the Turf as Mr. Vincent Clifford, came by an ugly fall while out with the Bombay Hounds last Thursday. It appears that while attempting to jump over a bund his horse, a young animal, jibbed at it, and the rider fell receiving two wounds on the right side of the head and sustaining a compound fractured dislocation of the right arm. Mrs. Beattie, who was riding with him at the time, called for assistance, and Mr. Roberts, who was unconscious for about ten minutes, was removed by his friends to the Jackal Club, where medical assistance was rendered to him by Colonel Bull, I.M.S., and the medical officer in charge of the Native Infantry at Santa Cruz. In the evening he was brought to Bombay in a motor and conveyed to St. George's Hospital, where his condition is causing grave anxiety.

A HOME correspondent writes:—"The spring salmon angling season in Scotland has already been associated with some remarkably good sport, and as regards the Tay, what is believed to be a record catch has been made for the time of year. Out on the Upper Stanley waters of this river Mr. Thomas landed, it is reported, salmon of the following weights: 16lb., 16lb., 17lb., 17lb., 17lb., 18lb., 19lb., 20lb., 20lb., 20lb., 21lb. and 26lb., a bag which, in the aggregate, scaled 227lb. On another occasion Mr. S. Fotheringham had a fine day's sport in the Grandtully waters, where he landed six fish of the following weights: 14lb., 15lb., 16lb., 18lb., 18lb. and 25lb. Excellent sport continues on Loch Tay, where another large salmon of 31lb. has been captured. Mr. McRorie has been very successful on the Loch. Nice salmon have also been captured in the Lyon, Tummel, and Loch Lubnaig. All these waters and the Tay are holding a fine head of fish. The president of the London Anglers' Association (Mr. P. Green) has captured salmon of 14½lb., 15lb. and 21lb. in the River Lyon at Fortingall."

WHILST it must be admitted that those who constantly bewail the inferiority of British weapons and armaments as compared with those of other powers, are often guilty of gross exaggeration, yet there is no denying the need for action with regard to the "S" bullet. Experts have declared that at the present time one of the greatest dangers for our army lies in the inferiority of the Lee-Enfield bullet as compared with the "S" adopted by the French in 1904 and by the Germans in 1905. Not only is the trajectory of the "S" bullet much flatter than that of any other, thus extending the point blank range of the rifle but it has also "stopping" powers as great if not greater than those of the Dum Dum which on the score of humanity Great Britain has undertaken not to use against civilized enemies. The "S" bullet while revolving in the usual way on its axis, and maintaining the proper direction of its flight, nevertheless wriggles as it flies so that its pointed nose keeps turning slightly to the right and left, and upwards and downwards, with the result that on striking its mark it tilts over and penetrates flatwise instead of point foremost. There are several officers and men now living who have been shot through the lungs, with Martini or other bullets of comparatively large calibre, and a great many who recovered from such wounds inflicted by Mausers. But that could not occur in the case of a man shot by an "S" bullet. It does not demand much knowledge or even imagination to realize the obvious effects of a bullet which strikes longitudinally in place of point-foremost. Not only must the size of the wound be greatly increased, but the course of the bullet internally must be erratic instead of penetrating straight through. It is plain therefore that Great Britain ought either to have the "S" bullet added to the number of death-dealing instruments forbidden by the Geneva Convention, or else adopt the same bullet herself in order to be able to retaliate in kind against her adversaries.

GOLF is generally supposed to have originated in Scotland, but there are, according to the Globe, people who believe that the game came first from Holland. All the literary and pictorial records of Dutch golf represent it as a winter pastime and played on the ice, and there is literally no evidence that the Dutch ever played on dry land. There is a miniature in a Book of Hours in the British Museum which shows some children playing golf at a hole in the ground, but it is Flemish and not Dutch. The Dutch game, indeed, has little resemblance to our golf, except that the weapons are similar. The Dutchmen played at an upright mark, a post, or stone, or door, instead of a hole. Golf as we know it is more akin to the ancient French game of jeu de mail, which is still played in the south of France in the neighbourhood of Montpellier, and it seems probable, if golf is not a purely Scottish creation, that it is a modification of the old French game. There was much intercourse between France and Scotland all through the Stuart period, and the French influence on Scottish manners and customs and even on the language, was very great. On the other hand, although Holland had much trade with Scotland at the same period, there is practically no trace of Dutch influence on anything Scottish. It is not impossible, however, that the Scottish form of golf-club was taken from the Dutch. So far as can be judged from the old pictures the Dutch clubs were identical in form and construction with the old makes of Scottish clubs. Of course it is equally possible that the Dutch copied the clubs from the Scotch, and as a matter of fact there is an old Dutch poem in which a Scottish club is mentioned. But, however that may be, the old Dutch clubs would pass the rules of golf committee to-day as legitimate weapons whereas, it is to be feared, that the weapons used in the French jeu de mail would be condemned as croquet mallets. Whether the Dutch or the French are our golf ancestors is doubtful, but it is certain that at the present day they are our golfing children ; for the golf now played in Holland and France is the true Scottish variety directly imported.

The Bengal Presidency Athletic Sports will be held at the Eden Gardens on Saturday, the preliminary heats being run off to-morrow afternoon. The entries are equally as large as last year, there being no fewer than 207 competitors, several of these having entered for three and four events. In the Amateur events the following are the number of entries :—

100 yards Championship, sixteen.
120 yards hurdles (handicap), six.
150 yards (handicap), twenty-two.
220 yards Championship, thirteen.
300 yards (handicap), eleven.
Quarter mile Championship, sixteen.
Half mile Championship, nineteen.
High Jump, four.

For the Sir George White Challenge Shield, which is open to non-commissioned officers and men of British Regiments, there are eighteen entries, viz., Royal Irish Rifles (Maymyo), the Rifle Brigade (Fort William), Warwicks (Peshawar), Staffords (Peshawar), Manchesters (Kamptee), Oxford and Buckinghamshire (Thayetmyo, Burma), West Kents (now on the maidan), Seaforth Highlanders (Shahjahanpur), Middlesex (Allahabad), King's Regiment (Umballa), Royal Scots (Bareilly), Shropshires (Dum Dum), R. F. A. (Barrackpore), King's Own Royal Lancaster (Lucknow), Leicesters (Belgaum), 79th Battery (Dinapore), Black Watch (Sialkot) and the 18th Royal Irish (Agra). For the Tug-of-War the 8th Mountain Battery, who won the trophy presented by the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, are coming to defend it from Rawal Pindi. The Wiltshires, who are the present holders of the Sir George White Challenge Shield, are now in Africa. In the Native Army events there are the following twelve teams : 91st Punjabis (holders), 27th Light Cavalry, 45th Sikhs, 1st Brahmins, 33rd Punjabis, 93rd Burma Light Infantry, 27th, 67th, 25th and 24th Punjabis, the 12th Cavalry and the Native Infantry from the Fort. Some of these come from Burma, Central Provinces, United Provinces and the Punjab. In the Amateur events R. T. Ross, the holder of the 100 yards, and Lieutenant N. I. Whitely, of the West Kents who won the quarter will defend their titles. J. P. Deefholts, who won the 100 yards Shield, as far back as 1902, is also running in the sprint events, but F. Rosetti and W. A. Knyvett, who greatly distinguished themselves at these sports last year, will be conspicuous by their absence.

London Week by Week

London, Friday, 28th January 1910.

Nature is sometimes considerate enough to suit her conditions to the occasion. She conspicuously failed to do so at Christmas, when the seasonable accompaniments of frost and snow were wanting. The Election, however, was, in its earlier stages, luckier, and to furnish an appropriate background for the figurative mud-throwing that has been one of its features, Nature generously produced two or three days of drizzle that turned the streets and pavements into—I cannot better the journalese description—"seas of liquid mud." Dirt has been defined as matter in the wrong place; certainly the mud-splashes scattered about so freely on Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday were not in their right place on a man's new overcoat or a lady's three-guinea hat. The heavy hoof of the 'bus-horse is less common than it was, and some day, it may be hoped, motor vehicles will be less liberal with their shower-baths of churned-up ooze and sludge. In the meantime the state of the streets in dirty weather is a disgrace to twentieth-century science, however suitable it may be as a setting for political scurrility.

The Election still drags its noisy way along, we shall not be completely relieved of the nuisance till the end of the month. What a record of ups and downs it has been! The results have proved the wisdom of the old axiom "you should never prophesy unless you know." Prophesy after the event excites mirth, but its safe, any way. In a sense, this election promised up to Thursday morning to be the most satisfactory on record. Everybody professed to be pleased. Newspapers of opposing views vied with each other in the expression of their delight at the results. "Tories still losing" appeared alongside of "Radicals smitten hip and thigh," and "Radical hope abandoned" next door to "Utter rout of the food-taxers." It reminded one of the tag to the old farce: "He's pleased, she's pleased, I'm pleased, you're pleased, everybody's pleased." A more accommodating state of things could not be imagined; as long as it lasted it encouraged the hope that the new Parliament would be opened with the unwonted spectacle of the lion and the lamb lying down together in a complacent amity begotten of intense self-satisfaction. Since Thursday morning, however, the note of jubilation has been more one-sided. The Radicals seem more chastened in spirit and a shade less mendacious. And well they may be. Their list of slain is too long for comment. Some brave fighters and good men have been carried feet first from the battle and with them the corpses—if the expression may be permitted—of the worthless and wicked. Anglo-Indians will rejoice to learn of the defeat for a Nottingham constituency of "the white baboo" Sir H. J. S. Cotton. But then Keir Hardie has again crept in for Merthyr Tydvill. Sir Henry Norman, of Budget League fame, Victor Grayson, the blatant, fiery Socialist, Professor Lupton the ridiculous anti-vaccinationist and a few other harmful and harmless freaks have been vanquished and their disappearance from the House of Commons will cause few regrets in that assembly.

There has been a small leaven of "comic relief" in these strenuous doings. The comic elector is always a godsend to the newspapers, which at a time of stress and storm are always eager for anything in the nature of "relief." I like the old fisherman who would not cry "Down with the piers" because in that case he would have nowhere to land his fish, and I was tickled by a man whom I encountered who believed that taxing the foreigner meant charging a shilling a head to all foreigners visiting this country, just as if it were the Shepherd's Bush or Earl's Court exhibition! But the pick of the bunch is the Radical who voted for the Tory because his (the Radical's) little boy had been run over by a motor-car and he heard that the Radical candidate was not in favour of "Traffic Reform!"

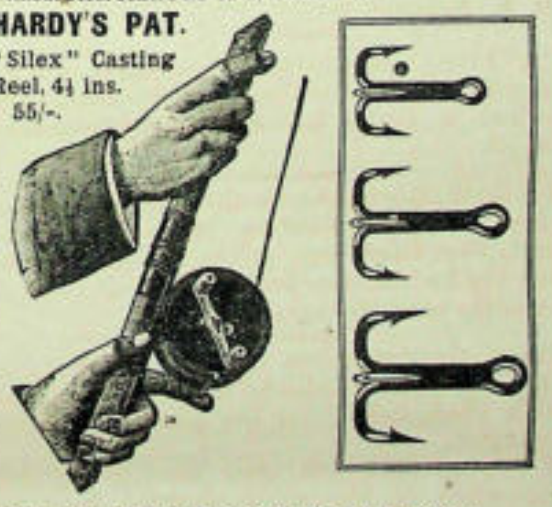
It has been publicly stated that General Baden Powell is about to give up his commission in the Army. What for? you naturally enquire. Why, in order to devote himself wholly and solely to the Boy Scouts movement, is the reply. No doubt. "B. P. of Mafeking" is fifty-three and unmarried: he may be now considered too old to regard skirt-dancing, or feats of ambidexterity and what not as worthy of the serious attention of a British officer, so he turns to real work. And finds it in the Boy Scout! Great Scott!! and to hear him talk you would really be quite impressed with his earnestness and singleness of purpose—that is if you didn't know your "B. P." Last week at Wimbledon, while exhorting some weedy, overhatted scraptions who had been reduced to somnolence by a heavy tea, the "Prince of Scouts" urged them to "behave like men," for that was what scouts were doing all over the world. "I say that, meaning it," this incorrigible practical joker continued, "because there are scouts not only in England but in every corner of the world. The last place I heard of where a force has been formed is Smyrna, in Asia Minor. I had a letter only yesterday from the Czar of Russia, stating that one of his staff officers had started the movement in Russia.



"Yesterday I also had a letter from the Governor-General of Canada, stating that the scouts were so numerous that he did not know what to do with them all. You all belong to a big brotherhood, and if you go to the Colonies, as some of you probably will, you will find your brother scouts ready for you and ready to give you the right hand of friendship." And the newspapers print it all and comment on it and take it all seriously! Isn't it marvellous?

London is the poorer by the sudden death last Saturday of that clever vaudeville entertainer Mr. Vere Smith, the leader of that brilliant band of fun-makers "The Grotesques" who have been playing recently at the Coliseum. He succumbed to heart failure immediately he reached home after the performance.

Certain halfpenny papers see in his sudden demise the fulfilment of a sinister omen. In his dressing-room, while he was upon the stage for the last time, a friend noticed that ink had been upset over a postcard on the table. "In Spain," said the observer "spilt ink is regarded as a very fateful omen. If he spilt that, he will die." Observe that the omen is a death sentence, nothing less. There is no appeal, no cheery advice to avoid unnecessary tears, as in the parallel English case of spilt milk. And I am left wondering why this dreadful knowledge should come to us by way of Spain! It must be that Spain has still, in spite of its nine universities, a holy horror of the inkpot and all that belongs to it.

Somewhere upon my shelves I have a Book of Omens. It is arranged in dictionary fashion from A to Z, so that a person troubled in his mind by the sinister appearance of an Abbot on Friday morning or by observing nine Zebras over his left shoulder can learn, with a turn of the page, the worst that fate has in store for him. I have never consulted it. "Seek not to proticipate" is my motto, as it was Mrs. Gamp's. When the motor-bus rolls over me my last moments will be spared the bitterness of remembering that this is what comes of crossing the gravy spoons. Between A to Z there are omens enough in that book of fate to embitter every waking hour.

Mr. Jas. Welch has returned to town and opened his season at the Criterion on Monday night with a revival of "When Knights Were Bold." One knows not whether to congratulate him or to commiserate him on the phenomenal success of "Charles Marlowe's" farce. It has, of course, been a little gold mine to him, but three years' continuous playing of the same part is not a stimulating experience to a man in earnest about his art. It would be idle to deny that Mr. Welch's Sir Guy has not suffered from this "damnable iteration." It was always a little exaggerated on the low comedy side, but it had also its moments of genuine burlesque, which make for thoughtful laughter. Nowadays Mr. Welch frankly goes for the roar of the general, and the whole act is sheer farce without real value in relation to the other acts. It has lost its spontaneity, too, and is as mechanically funny as a pantomime at the end of its run. To be sure, its reception from Monday night's audience was cordial enough, but, with the thought of the much better work of which Mr. Welch is capable, we all wish him an early deliverance from his present obsession.

On the site where Hengler's Circus used to stand in Argyll Street, Oxford Street a variety theatre is now in course of erection which when ready for opening in September next, will be the largest music-hall in Great Britain. It is being built to seat about 5,000 people and when finished will, including the price paid for the site, have cost £200,000. Luxury and comfort are to be the objects aimed at in the fitting of the interior, and the keynote of the colour scheme, which will necessitate the employment of quantities of carved white marble, will be white.

"Everything will be on a vast scale in this new theatre," says Mr. Walter Gibbons the builder. "I have not yet decided whether I shall call it the Palladium or the Arena. Before we could start building I had to purchase nearly a third more ground than Hengler's Circus stood on, and now we shall have a theatre less than half a minute from either Oxford Circus or Regent Street which will have doors opening on four thoroughfares.

"The exit capacity will not be surpassed by any theatre in Europe, for we calculate that we shall be able to get the whole of a packed house into the street within one minute of the fall of the curtain.

"We shall have a magnificent orchestra, and a stage where spectacle and ballet can, if necessary, be shown in great display. Scenic grandeur, lightness, gaiety, and movement are to be the features of the entertainments to be given every afternoon and evening. Although a constant change of programme is to be our policy, we shall employ a little army of auxiliaries—pretty girls who can sing and dance—to form part of the regular entertainment."

A great deal of space has been provided in the plans for luncheon, dinner, and tea rooms, no fewer than five of these being arranged for. On the ground floor there will be one grill and tea room, with tables for the accommodation of a thousand people. Off the main vestibule there will be a hairdresser's shop for ladies and another for gentlemen; there will also be a reading-room and a free library, with tape machines unfolding the news that comes to hand. It all reads well doesn't it?

Hundreds of fervid Scotchmen in London had a "nicht wi' Burns" (not John, of Battersea, but Bobbie ye ken) last Tuesday. It was the celebration of the 151st anniversary of the ploughman-poet's birth and to mark their sense of the occasion and, incidentally, to indulge in that foregathering habit of which you in India about the 30th November have fair examples, brither Scots did their best (and with complete success) to honour the bard and make themselves happy. There was, among other manifestations, the usual mammoth concert at the Albert Hall, with tunes on the "box o' wheestles" by Mr. Kenneth Glencairn Burns, a great-grand-nephew of Robert Burns.

The nicht was celebrated by the London Scottish Regiment by a meal of many novel dishes.

Bear steaks cut from an animal shot by one of the regiment near the shores of Lake Huron, Canada, was one of the items on the menu. It had taken two hours to haul the beast one and a half miles over the frozen shores of Huron and twice as long to haul the carcase over four miles of the frozen Canadian waters. Railway transport to New York brought it to cool storage, and after that a cargo steamer placed it in the hands of the regimental chef.

Porcupine enriched by the flavour of "a wee drappie o' th' auld kirk," was the next dish, and haggis was the sole go-between from "anither wee drappie;" aiple tairt, jeelie, kebbuck, an' green things concluded the repast and the evening closed with what our old friend Mr. Jabberjee styled "much wha-haeing."

The Royal Geographical Society (who would not have the imposter Cook at any price, even from the very first) have after due deliberation, decided that Commander Peary did reach the North Pole and have awarded him a special gold medal "for having been the first man to lead a party of explorers to one of the poles of the earth, and for having undertaken such scientific investigations as his opportunities permitted." A silver replica of the medal is to be awarded to Captain Bartlett for attaining 88deg. north latitude.

The present demand for getting almost everything "while you wait," as the result of pressing a button or dropping a coin into a slot, has developed the Automatic Booking Clerk, capable of printing three thousand sorts of tickets. The Great Western Railway are introducing this new wonder box some time next month. One hears that the machine is to take the place of the usual magazine of pigeon-holes and pasteboard, and the staff of clerks who are always treading on one another's toes and staying to deny it. The usurper consists of a box rather smaller than an average revolving book case, and seems to be endowed with every human gift but sarcasm, and for this disability alone every railway passenger will be grateful. When occasion arises for the exercise of repartee, the operator will "take it out of" the machine, and if the machine feels vicious it will doubtless bestow on the departing ticket an extra blob of ink. Beyond that it cherishes no grievances; all the record it makes is a memorandum of the ticket and its price on a continuous strip, and this serves to total up the proceeds of the day. Evidently its faults have yet to be discovered, but at present it seems curiously modest for a thing so gifted.

THE SUNDERBUNDS.

I have read with interest your contributor Simba's article on "Tiger Shooting in the Sunderbunds," in your issue of the 25th November.

As all the shooting ground alluded to by S. is not far out from Port Canning, I am not surprised that the game he mentions as having seen or heard about was very limited.

Tigers are perhaps as plentiful now, as they were half a century ago. A few tigers are annually killed by native Shikarees for the sake of the reward, and fewer still fall to the gun of the sportsman of the West. The impenetrableness of the cover, and the difficulty of the ground makes the pursuit of these big felines a very difficult and hazardous matter. Owing to the innumerable number of creeks and water-ways, and the treacherous nature of the ground, elephants cannot possibly be used in the Sunderbunds in the pursuit of tigers. Most of these are to be found nowadays, not in what I should call the middle Sunderbunds, with its mangroves and forests of Soonder trees, and to go where the ground is generally low, under water during the flood-tides. A fair number of tigers may also be found towards the more northern parts of the Sunderbunds, bordering on such parts that have been reclaimed and brought under cultivation, and it is here also that most of the man-eaters are to be found. Almost all Sunderbund tigers are confirmed fearless man-eaters, and those that some cause or other have brought once into contact with men are specially so. The southern parts of the Sunderbunds face the sea, and consist mostly of sand-dunes, overgrown in parts with tamarisk and hurtall palms, with an undergrowth of a fine kind of grass, on which large herds of spotted-deer may be seen feeding of an early morning or towards evening. Numbers of pigs may also be seen here rooting for crabs and roots, as the kind of grass that grows among the sand-dunes has a sort of small bulb to which pigs are very partial. It is in such parts too, that tigers delight in making their homes, for the large number of deer and pigs, that are to be found about here, supplies them with abundant fare. It is in such parts too and between the rivers Jabuna, Raimongal and Haringhatta, that buffaloes and rhinos are still to be found: the former wander about a good deal, and often find their way towards the more northern parts where they do a good deal of damages to the rice crops. A few of these unwieldly beasts sometimes fall victims to the native Shikaree's gun. Owing to the fearless and aggressive nature of these treacherous beasts, sportsmen both European and Native generally give them a wide berth.

Rhinos, though to be found towards the more southern parts of the Sunderbunds, are not partial to sand-dunes, but prefer the more secluded spots inland and among the lagoons and water-holes, where they spend most of the day half-submerged in the mud. Buffaloes prefer more open ground, as the nature of their horns does not allow them to move freely about among trees. Buffaloes are mostly to be found among the hogla-reeds, which in places grow to a height of fourteen to sixteen feet. Most of these reeds grow in places that are partly submerged, and it is in such spots that buffaloes delight to spend their day coming forth at night to feed on a kind of dubh grass which grow abundantly above high water mark. If there be any cultivation near at hand these buffaloes are sure to find their way to it and sad is the havoc they commit, not so much from the amount they eat, but what they trample and damage.

Deer, both Spotted and Marsh are to be found plentifully in the Sunderbunds in suitable parts, especially towards such as face the sea and where the very open nature of the ground allows of their being able to keep a good look-out for their dreaded enemy. As may be expected, deer are seldom met with towards the more marshy parts, which are apt to go under water during the flood-tides. Large herds of deer often also find their way towards the more cultivated parts, travelling long distances at night, especially if any dainty morsels, such as wheat or peas are to be had. A fairly large number of these deer are killed by native Shikarees, who find a ready market for their meat among the better class of Hindus and Mahomedans. A fair amount of this venison also find its way to Calcutta, and it may often be seen for sale during the cold weather at the more central markets, especially those frequented by Hindus, as no matter how orthodox they may be, they have no objection to eating deer meat. In the old days a good number of Hog-deer could be found, round about Morelgunge on the churs of the Brahmaputra, but they have now disappeared. Pigs though common to the Sunderbunds, are only to be found in certain parts, and may be said to frequent such localities where deer are also to be found. But pigs being by nature less timid than deer, and more adventurous, are often to be found towards the more cultivated parts where crops are grown.

Though strange it may seem, no leopards are come across in what may be called Sunderbunds proper, the damp and moist nature of the cover does not suit these felines, who, not unlike our domestic pussies, dislike to get wet.

Crocodiles are common to the Sunderbunds, and attain a great size, some of them measuring sometimes 20 feet or even more in length, their bulk being in proportion to their size; some among the largest of these monsters look, when seen from a distance, not unlike an up-turned dingee or country boat. Besides crocodiles, Gharials (Gavialis Gangeticus) are frequently come across, but are only found among the higher reaches and where the water is mostly fresh, or nearly so, these fish-eating reptiles being averse to brackish or salt water. The Gharials grow to a great length, and with their long snout, sometimes even exceed the size attained by crocodiles. Like tigers most of the larger Sunderbund crocodiles are confirmed man-eaters, and a heavy toll is levied by them on the fisherman class, and though every precaution is taken against their depredations, fairly large numbers of men and women annually fall victims to these monsters. During the heat of the day, these reptiles may be seen basking in the sun, but apparently always on the alert, and at the least sign of danger, slip back to their favourite element.

Tigers are common to the Sunderbunds and are fairly plentiful in suitable localities, but as I have already stated elephants cannot possibly be made use of among those marshy forests of the Gangetic Delta to hunt tigers from. The most suitable and likely mode to get a shot at Stripes, is by tying live baits in suitable places, to which tigers are known to resort, and to have these baits carefully watched from country boats anchored in mid-stream. If the ordinary country boat be made use of for the purpose of watching, tigers will not be suspicious and will usually make their appearance in broad daylight. Tigers may sometimes be seen in the more remote and unfrequented parts of the Sunderbunds, to swim across some of the streams or creeks that intersect the place in every direction, and on such occasions an easy shot can be obtained. Towards the more northern parts of the Sunderbunds and such as have been brought under cultivation, tigers may be shot in the usual way from machans or platforms put up on trees, when the bait is tied conveniently near.

On the Sunday morning Pullman train to Brighton, a well-known actor rushed in from the carriage behind, apparently in great agitation, and said: "Has anybody in the car any whiskey; A woman in the car behind has fainted." Instantly flasks were produced. The man who had asked for it picked out the largest one, drew the cork, and put the bottle to his lips. With a long, satisfied sigh, he handed it back, and remarked: "That did me a lot of good. I needed it, for it always makes me feel queer to see a woman faint."

With hisses and groans the audience greeted the principal scene of the new drama. All hope, then, was at an end. "It's hard to tell just what the public wants!" murmured the heart-broken playwright. "It's easy enough to tell in this case," said the manager grimly. "It wants its money back!"

A UNIVERSAL SHOT SCALE.

To the Editor of "The Indian Field."

Sir,—There has always been considerable trouble with regard to shot, owing to the different manufacturers using different designations for the same sizes. Thus Walker Parker's No. 1 is 80 pellets to the ounce. The old Newcastle, and the Abbey Mills' No. 1 is 104 to the ounce. Now Messrs. Eley have made confusion worse confounded, by bringing out a new scale, the No. 1 of which, is 100 pellets to the ounce. The need for uniform nomenclature is a very pressing one, and I append a scale, which if manufacturers could be persuaded to adopt it, would at all events put an end to the confusion at present existing.

No. 6 of 270 pellets to the ounce is a recognised standard, but it is unfortunately impossible to devise any system of nomenclature, which would keep the name of No. 6 for this shot. The number of pellets to the ounce, 270, being too awkward a one to adapt itself to any reasonable system of nomenclature, unless the designation is changed.

I have given alternative names for the intermediate numbers, viz., the fraction and the decimal. The latter is by far the best, indicating as it does the exact number of pellets to the ounce. The fractional name would however be no doubt useful to people who do not readily grasp the meaning of decimals.

Possibly if British manufacturers adopted a uniform system, the American Factories might follow suit. At present bad as shot scales are with us, they are infinitely worse in the States. For instance reading an American Shot Gun Catalogue, and seeing that a 12-bore with 1¼ ounces of such and such shot, makes a certain pattern the ordinary Englishman gathers no information as to the weapon's powers whatever. It is simply impossible to know which Factory of the dozen or so in America, the shot comes from. No. 8 may mean 426, 399, 375, 420, 434, or 365 pellets to the ounce: there is no means of telling, for the Gun Catalogues do not give the name of the manufacturer whose shot they use for targetting their shot guns. I have suggested that larger sizes of shot than those given in the scale should be designated by the preface "Buck," followed by the number of pellets which go to the ounce.

"Fleur-de-Lys."

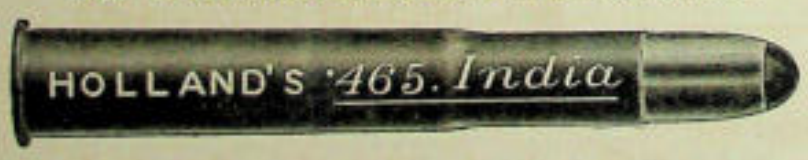
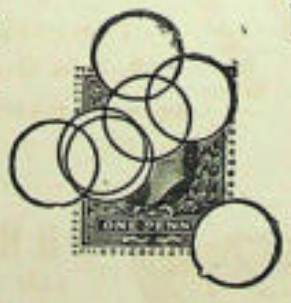
NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM (PATENT.)



EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.



Messrs. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 Bore the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

"VELOPEX" BULLET

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centre of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.) and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed."

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

BUREAU OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENTIFIC TAXIDERMY,

DEHRA DUN,
United Provinces.

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of all India Game Birds made by W. M. Hutton.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.
